FROM THE UNITED STATES.

Washington, Dec. 3.

This day at 12 o'clock, the President communicated to both houses of Congress, the following

MESSAGE:

Fellow-Citizens of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives.

In reviewing the present state of our country no attention cannot be withheld from the effects produced by peculiar seasons, which have very generally impaired the annual gifts of the earth, and threatened scarcity in particular districts. Such however is the variety of soils, of climate that the United States preferred war to unmanly and of products, within our extensive limits, that the submission, and compelled his recognition and observance of the seldom more than partial deficiencies occur. The entire resources for subsistence are more than twenty last made, which abolishes tribute and sufficient for the aggregate wants. And as for the slavery of our captured citizens. The result economy of our countrymen, more than usual, of the answer has not been received. Should be the vigilance, which is the price of liberty, renew his warfare against our commerce, we rely on and the best security for the continuance of the protection it will find in our naval forces actually blessings of peace, is the prevailing character in the Mediterranean.

With the other Barbary states, our affairs have undergone no change.

The Indian tribes within our limits appear also to remain at peace. From several of their interests of the nation. In some instances, the frontier settlements as well as to the general treaties preferring the augmented expense to the hazard of doing injustice; or to the enforcement of justice, against a feeble and scattered people, by means involving or threatening an effusion of blood. I am happy to add, that the tranquility which has been restored among the tribes themselves, as well as between them and our own population, will favor the resumption of the work of civilization, which had made an encouraging progress among some tribes; and that the facility is increasing, for extending that blessing of individual ownership, which exists now in movable property only, to the soil itself; and of thus establishing in the rudiments and improvement of it, the true foundation for a transit from the habits of a savage, to the arts and comforts of a social life.

As a subject of the highest importance to the national welfare, I must, again, earnestly recommend to the consideration of Congress, a reorganization of the militia, on a plan which will form it into classes, according to the periods of life more and less adapted to military services. As effective militia is authorized and contemplated by the constitution, and required by the spirit and safety of a free government. The present organization of the militia is universally regarded as inefficient than it ought to be made; and no organization can be better calculated to give to it its due force, than a classification which will assign the foremost place in the defence of the country, to that portion of its citizens, whose activity and animation best enable them to rally to its standard. Besides the consideration that a time of peace is the time when the change can be made with most convenience and equity, it will now be aided by the experience of a recent war, in which the militia bore so interesting a part.

Congress will call to mind, that no adequate provision has yet been made for the uniformity of weights and measures, also contemplated by the constitution. The great utility of a standard, fixed in its nature, and founded on the easy rule of decimal proportion, is sufficiently obvious. If left to the government, at an early stage, to prepare the work will be a just title to the public gratitude.

The importance which I have attached to the establishment of a university within this District, on a scale and for objects worthy of the American nation, induces me to renew my recommendation of it to the favorable consideration of Congress. And I particularly invite again their attention to the expediency of exercising their existing powers, and where necessary, of resorting to the proper mode of enlarging them in order to effectuate a comprehensive system of roads and canals, such as will have the effect of drawing more closely together every part of our country, by promoting intercourse and improvements, and by increasing the share of every part in the common stock of national prosperity.

Occurrences having taken place which show that the statutory provisions for the dispensation of criminal justice, are deficient in relation both to places and to persons under the exclusive cognizance of the national authority; an amendment of the law, embracing both cases, will merit the earliest attention of the legislature. It will be a reasonable occasion also, for inquiring how the legislative interposition may further requisite in providing penalties for offences designated in the constitution or in the statutes, and to which either no penalties are annexed, or none with sufficient certainty. And I submit to the wisdom of Congress, whether a more enlarged revisal of the criminal code be not expedient, for the purpose of mitigating, in certain cases, penalties which were adopted into it antecedent to experiments and examples which justify and recommend a more lenient policy.

The U. States having been the first to abolish within the extent of their authority, the transportation of the natives of Africa into slavery, by prohibiting the introduction of slaves, and by inspiring their citizens participation in the traffic. It must be gratified at the progress made by the concurrent efforts of other nations, towards a general suppression of so great an evil.—They must feel, on this interesting occasion, the greater solicitude to give the fullest efficacy to their own regulations. With that view the interposition of Congress appears to be required, by the violations and evasions, which, it is suggested are charged upon unworthy citizens who mingle in the slave trade under foreign flags, and with foreign ports, and by collusive importations of slaves into the United States through adjoining foreign territories. They present the subject to Congress, with a full assurance of their disposition to apply all the remedies which can be afforded by an amendment of the law. The regulations which were intended to guard against abuses of a kindred character, in the trade between the several states, ought also to be rendered more effectual for their humane object.

To these recommendations, I add, for the consideration of Congress, the expedience of a remodification of the judiciary establishment, and of an additional department in the Executive branch of the government.

The first is called for by the increasing business which necessarily swells the duties of the Federal Courts, and by the great and widening space within which justice is to be dispensed by them. The time seems to have arrived, which claims for the members of the supreme court a relief from circuit duties, incompatible, as well with the age which a portion of them will always have obtained, as with the respective and appropriate duties which are due to their stations, and to the just reputation of their country. And considerations of equity cannot require a more convenient organization of the subordinate tribunals, which may be accomplished without any considerable increase of the number or expense of the Judges.

The extend and variety of Executive business also recommend to me, with the progress of our country, and its growing population, call for an additional department, to be charged with duties now overt urdening other departments, and with such as have not been annexed to any department.

The course of experience recommends as another improvement in the executive establishment that the provision for the office of Attorney General, whose residence at the seat of government, oft-ti ies connexion with it, and many parts of the public business before the judiciary, preclude an extensive particular practice, should by enhancements, be made more adequate to his services and his relinquishments—and that, with a view to his reasonable accommodation, and to a proper dependence of his official opinions and proceedings there be included in the provision the usual opportunities as a public officer.

In directing the legislative attention to the state of the finances, it is subject of great pleasure to find, that even within the short period which has elapsed since the return of peace, the revenue has far exceeded all the current demands upon the treasury, and that any just estimate of the diminution of its future annual products, which the visicitude of commerce may occasion, it will afford an ample fund for the payment of the public debt and early extinguishment of the public debt. It has been estimated that during the year 1816, the actual receipts of the treasury, including the receipts of the commencement of the year and including the proceeds of loans and treasury notes, will amount to about the sum of forty-seven millions of dollars; that during the same year the actual ments at the treasury, including payments the arrearages of the war department, and as the payment of a considerable excess, beyond the account appropriation, will amount to about the sum of eighty-three millions of dollars; and that consequently, at the close of the year there will be a surplus in the treasury of about the sum of nine millions of dollars.

The operations of the treasury continue to be obstructed by difficulties, arising from the condition of the national currency, but they have nevertheless, been effectual, to a beneficial extent, to the reduction of the public debt, and the establishment of the public credit. The floating debt of treasury notes and temporary loans, will soon be entirely discharged—The aggregate of the funded debt, composed of that incurred during the wars of 1778 and of 1812, has been estimated, with reference to the 1st of January next, at a sum not exceeding one hundred and ten millions of dollars. The ordinary annual expenses of the government, for the maintenance of all its institutions, civil, military and naval, have been estimated at a sum less than twenty millions of dollars; and the permanent revenue to be derived from all the existing sources, has been estimated at a sum of about twenty-five millions of dollars.

Upon this general view of the subject, it is obvious, that there is only wanting to the fiscal prosperity of the government, the restoration of an uniform medium of exchange. The resources and faith of the nation displayed in the system which congress has established, ensure respect and confidence both at home and abroad. The local accumulations of the revenue have already enabled the treasury to meet the public engagements in the local service of the states; and it is expected that the same cause will produce the same effect throughout the Union.—But for the interests of the community at large, as well as for the purposes of the treasury, it is essential that the nation should possess a currency of equal value, credit & use, wherever it may circulate. The constitution has entrusted congress exclusively with the power of creating and regulating a currency of that description; and the measures which were taken during the last session, in execution of the power, give every promise of success. The bank of the United States has been organized under auspices the most favorable, and cannot fail to be an important auxiliary.

For a more enlarged view of the public finances, of the reports. Lastly, there was another report in circulation which was considered much more feasible than the rest; namely, that the prospects of the speedy opening of our ports for the importation of Corn having caused a fall in the rate of exchange, the foreign corn who had been waiting an opportunity to sell would themselves of this circumstance and dispose of their stock accordingly. What is to be depended on is, that a foreign broker is supposed to be possession of some information, threw upon the market some hundred thousands of stock, which caused the depression we have noticed. Super cent Consols for the account fell from 62 1-2 to 61 5-8, and for money from 62 1-4 to 62 1-2. They recovered towards the close of the market, and left off at 61 7-8 for account, and 61 3-4 for money.

All the letters received to day from the Merthyr-Tydvil, of the 22d inst. state, that the rioters continue quiet, but that the military daily increase in numbers. In consequence of a disposition to riot at Brecon, a strong force had been sent thither to protect the several thousand stand of arms deposited there. The military now being in possession of the place all apprehensions for the safety of the arms have ceased. One class of the workmen, called the padlers, have been induced to return to their work, without a com-promise, but these are the men who are paid the highest prices; there are four in number employed at each furnace. The colliers and miners, the persons who are paid the lowest wages, are still refractory, and have, not returned to their work, but as the different works have a good supply of coal and iron materials on hand, their services can be dispensed with for a considerable time to come. It is said that a firm of opulent manufacturers, in the neighborhood of Bishopstone, Sussex, have at the present moment several thousand loads of wheat in their granaries and store houses which they purchased when it was about 15 or 16£ a load.

It is dfinitively settled, we understand on good authority, that the Duke of Kent will shortly lead to the hymeneal altar a Continental Princess.

NEW YORK, Dec. 5.

Flour.—We perceive it is stated in the Maryland Monitor, that flour, which lately, last week, was selling at Baltimore at $14 the barrel, had fallen to 15. As the market price, like water, will always find a level, we may hope, before long, to partake of this salutary fall in this necessary article of life.

A Paris article of Oct. 20, states, that the grain crop of the present year will exceed in quantity that of the last though in quality some of it is inferior.

LGNDON, Oct. 23.

Hamburgh Papers.—This morning we received Hamburgh papers to the 17th inst. being a day later than any which we could have received by the mail. They contain some authentic and interesting particulars of the late occurrences at Symrna, in which the regular Turkish government seems to have taken a decided part against the turbulent and unjustifiable conduct of the Janizaries; it was, in fact, the Dey of Cornwall is likely to be fixed upfor aiding and abetting these marauders, as the scene of employment of tens that the Turkish Governor of Smyrna was put to death.

French Papers—Just as our paper was preparing for press, we received the Paris papers of Friday, Saturday and Sunday, being all those now due. General (or rather Marshal) Grouchy has been put upon his trial, for his treachery to the Duke of Angouleme in April, 1815; but the Council of War, after some quibbling arguments on the part of the Marshal, declared themselves incompetent to try him.

Marshal Soult has not sailed for America as reported. He still resides in obscurity at Dassaldorf.

ITALY, Sept. 30.

Many former officers of Bonaparte's army have repaired on board small vessels, to the American squadron in the Mediterranean.

According to recent information from the Minister of the interior, the state of the harvest for 1816, is as follows :—In 74 departments, 46 have made a full harvest. The harvest of 20 of departments is superior to that of which was very abundant ; that others may be considered as equal. spite of all the inclemencies w example of the season, we may assert, that in general more corn has been got in this year in France, 1815. The consumption of new beginning later this year than ordinary, there will in all probability be an excess in the resources destined to support France till the harvest of 1817. It is true, that the quality of part of the corn has been altered by the wet, but it has not lost by that its nutrious quality, and as precautions will be taken, that private interest recommends and experience points out, there is little doubt that a great part of this will be saved very useful.

Mr. Canning is on his return to Paris. The harvest in Sicily and Naples has been ample.

VIENNA, Oct. 10.

A dreadful insurrection of the Janissaries at Adrianople is spoken of, in which the Aga and Ogden Dagdevirens, Bostangi Baachi, performing the functions of Governor, were cut to pieces. This report wants confirmation however.

The state of health at Constantinople has not been worse since last accounts; symptoms of the plague still appear now and then, but they are rare. At smyrna they thought themselves secure, but suddenly some unpleasent symptoms broke out in an English house. The news from the Morea are much more afflicting ; the evil on the contrary is diminishing at Salonica and Corinea.

LONDON, Oct. 24.

A Hamburgh mail arrived just as our paper went to press. It is mentioned from Italy, that several of the officers of Bonaparte's army have gone on board the American squadron in the Mediterranean.

We received yesterday the Paris papers of Friday, Saturday and Sunday last. The harvest in France, according to these Journals, has been in general good, though not an abundant one.

We rejoice to learn that the corn market yesterday was what is technically called dull—that is, there was not a demand for corn at the Monday's prices. The effect of the late fair weather has redeemed a great deal of the corn, which it was thought would perish on the ground. There is, however, no chance of the average price being brought below 80 shillings.

The Lord Mayor has written to the Chancellor of the Exchequer upon the subject of the Distresses of the Country, and we understand submitted to his consideration a plan which promissed much more for the relief of the lower classes than any of those proposed at the great meetings, in which the subject has been debated. There are very strong proofs for thinking that the Duthe Choctaw nation to the South ward, according to the description given to this gentleman when on a Diplomatic Mission to Sunatta, the unfortunate victim is bound to a stake, and the figure traced in the ground. Around the Cross ; Heare then attacked with hatchets and knives by the Bhattas, who despatch him in this manner, amidst the most hideous and frightful yells. The flesh is then torn from the bones with the most inforiated piteously, and being dipped in a mixture of chillies and lime-juice, is devoured by those cannibles on the spot. A Malay Mussulman who had been converted to the Christian Religion, was also interrogated in regard to the practice, as there was every reason to believe he had occasionally assisted at such horrid banquets. The confusal and embarrassment in which he was thrown by the charge, manifested to confirm the suspicions that were entertained of him ; and when added to the information obtained from other sources by Captain Cunningham's little doubt of the practice of this abominable most Europeans would rather hear of from others than witness themselves.

Major Farquaier, of Malacca, who transmitted to the Society an account of the Upas, an animo hitherto supposed to be peculiar to the American Continent. The memoir was accompanied with the bones of the head, and a drawing of the whole animal; from which it appears that the Malacca Upas differ little from the American, and is clearly referable to the same species.

QUEBEC:
THURSDAY, 28th NOVEMBER, 1816.

We learn that John Ogilvy Esq. of Montreal

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Malacca, to his friend in the Editor of the Aurora Re-dated November 10.

ere visited on the 9th inst. with quake ; the shock was very uble, and sounded like the rattling of an empty waggon ; it lasted about four a minute, and shook the house so much as to make the windows and plates and dishes rattle. The day we felt the shock of another much more violent than the former, it lasted about a minute, the stone walls were so very plainly to vibrate. The weather to-day was perfectly clear, and the air very still both before and after the shock.

I cannot refrain also from relating to you a remarkable instance of prudence and fortitude displayed by a child of eleven years of age, who was lost in the woods in this country last week. On Thursday last a little girl named Betsey Mentor, living at the house of Lewis Greaves, in the township of Chatcauguay, went out an sun about an hour high, a little distance into the woods to bring home some sheep, and lost her way. not coming home by dark, Mrs. Graves grew uneasy and sent one of the neighbours into the woods to search for her, but without success ; on the next day the Inhabitants of Chateaugay turned out and searched without success ; on Saturday the Inhabitants of Constable joined in the search, which was again fruitless ; on Sunday the alarm became general, and the inhabitants to the number of three hundred turned out, and found the child in the woods, about a mile and a half from home. She told those who found her that she had subsisted on beech buds and winter-green leaves, that having heard her father say that if persons who sleep in the woods would make their beds of hemlock boughs they would not take cold, she spread some every night to sleep on, and covered herself with the same ; & the last night being a very cold one, she formed her bed between two logs, which lay very near each other, by throwing some boughs on the logs, and then creeping into her bed formed as before under the shelter. She said that she did not was not in the least afraid. She sat in the day she was a little afraid of the Indians ; and that she had heard of people living in the woods nine days without food, and that she could get out in that time certainly. If you think the above worthy of publication, it may serve among many other instances of the same kind, to warn parents and others how they permit children to wander into the woods alone. The veracity of this account may be relied on, as I had it from a person who was present at the finding of the Child.

NASHVILLE, Nov. 19

CHOCTAW TREATY.

General John Coffee and the Hon. J. Rhea, who (together with Col. John McKee,) were appointed to treat with the Choctaw Indians, returned home last week, having accomplished the object of their mission. By this treaty, we understand, the Choctaws have relinquished to the United States all their land lying east of the Tombigbee river, for which they are to receive the sum of $120,000 payable in twenty equal annual instalments.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

An Act has passed the Senate unanimously admitting the territory of Indiana into the Union, and the same has been sent down to the House for concurrence.

In the House of Representatives, on Friday last, Mr. Harrison, (of Ohio) moved the adoption of the following resolution :

Resolved,—That the military committee be instructed to enquire into the expediency of providing by law for the relief of such of the officers and soldiers, who, having faithfully served in the armies of the United States, are now in needy circumstances, and who, not having received wounds or disabilities in the actual service, are excluded from the benefits of the pension laws, by the act of the said committe report by bill or otherwise.

On motion of Mr. Johnson, of Kentucky.

Resolved,—That the committee on military affairs be instructed to enquire into the expediency of organizing a corps of invalids, and of establishing additional military academies.

A DIFFICULT FACT.

A great part of the news now stirring is the news of felonious deeds, as forgery, robbery, theft, arson, & almost every species of villainous crime, perpetrated almost daily in some parts or other of these United States. Of this species of news alone, there might be articles enough collected from the daily papers of our great cities to fill the columns of a weekly Register. It might well excite astonishment and disma y in the mind of all the well disposed were they not mortified that the monthly number of fedious, deeds in this country is not greater, than it was four years ago. Yet there is too much reason to think it is even so. Out of the war for sailors rights and for glory there has grown, not only a pretty large and chargeable standing army, but also a corps of flying troops, probably several thousand strong. In every direction they are traversing and pillaging the country, and their numbers seem to have been constantly increasing from a term to term ; the examples which our country in justice have made of some of them being like lopped off from the fabled Hydra its heads which instantly sprouted up anew. There is said to have been here a great number of convicted felons in the space of one or two of the last years than in the whole British isle during the same space of time, though its population is nearly double. In short, this young republic has but a few more lessons to learn before she will bear a comparison with the most corrupted state in Europe. [Con. Cour.

RELATING TO AMERICA.

Two American Frigates have arrived in Sicily and it is believed that the rest of the squadron will soon follow. The negotiations continue with Mr. Pinkney ; but American insolence has yielded to that character of justice and firmness which we have displayed on the occasion.

Our government has always been disposed to listen to well founded claims, and to reject vain and ridiculous pretensions. The arrangement between the two States, I am confident, will very one is resuming its proper place, it is not surprising that a number of men who were out of their place in the peace which they occupied should wish to go and try what fortune they could in the sea. Several expeditions are also forming at the present moment for Russia.

CALCUTTA, April 7.

Asiatic Society.—A Meeting of the Asiatic Society was held at their Hall in Chouringhee, on the 3d inst. which was honoured with the presence of His Excellency Lord Moira, the chair.—His Lordship read a letter addressed to Baron Denon, acquainting this celebrated Patron of the Arts, that he had been chosen Honorary Member of the Asiatic Society. Another interesting point of his attention to the British Artists who have visited Paris, since it became the great depot of every thing curious and valuable in the Arts.

Captain Canning read to the Society an interesting paper, tending to establish a fact to which we have hitherto been slow of giving credit. It has been often suspected that the horrible practice of eating criminals prevailed among the Battas tribe in the Island of Sumatra,—and it appears from Capt. Canning's memoir that little doubt can now be entertained as to the existance of this horrible custom. According to the description given to this gentleman Bhattas, who despatch him in this manner, amidst the most hideous and frightful yells. The flesh is then torn from the bones with the most inforiated piteously, and being dipped in a mixture of chillies and lime-juice, is devoured by those cannibles on the spot. Major Toulmin, son of the judge, writes to a friend, in this place, that a requisition has been made by the general government to the governor of the Mississippi territory, for twelve hundred infantry, the whole of the cavalry and riflemen and a company of artillery, to be held in readiness to march in readiness to march at a moment's warning. It is likely the prospect of a rupture with Spain, has occasioned the adoption of this precautionary measure.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

TO THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES.

FELLOW CITIZENS,

OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

With a view of the measures pursued by the treasury department, previous to the resignation of the late secretary, I transmit an extract from the last report of that officer.—Congress will perceive in it ample proofs of the solid foundation on which the financial prosperity of the nation rests ; and will do justice to the distinguished ability and successful exertions with which the duties of the department were executed during a period remarkable for its difficulties and peculiarly responsible.

Instead of my retiring from public service, being at this distance, I shall find no occasion more proper than the present, for expressing to my fellow citizens my deep sense of the confidence and kind support which I have so long derived from them. My grateful recollection of their favorable regard can never cease ; and will always be the encouraging reward of my country with greater ability. I have served it with a sincere devotion, will accompany me as a source of unfailing gratification.

Happily, I shall carry with me from the public theatre, other scenes, which those who love their country most will best appreciate. I shall behold it blessed, with tranquility and prosperity at home, and with peace and respect abroad. I can indulge the proud reflection, that the American people have reached in safety and success their fortieth year as an independent nation, and for nearly an entire generation, they have had and experience of their present constitution, the disputing of their undisturbed deliberations and their free choice ; that they have found it adequate to the exigencies of war as well as prosperous circumstances, to contain, in its combination of the lederate and elective principles, a reconciliation of public strength with individual liberty, of national power for the defence of nations rights, with a security against wars of injustice of ambition and vain glory, in the fundamentals of which are found the only sure basis of peace. The recognition which applies all questions of war to the will of the nation itself, which is to pay its costs and feel its calamities. Nor is it less a prevailer fidelity of this constitution, so dear to my country will exhibit a government pursuing the public good as its sole object ; and regulating its measures by the unerring principles of liberty, its permanency, and its chance, and by those moral principals to which they are so well allied : A government which watches over the purity of elections, the freedom of the press, the right of trial by jury, and the equal interdict against encroachments and compacts between religion and the state, which administers impartially the means of public faith, the security of persons and property, and encourages in every authorised mode the general diffusion of knowledge which guarantees to public liberty its permanency, and to those who possess the blessing the true enjoyment of it—A government which avoids intrusions on the interpol re of other nations, and repels them from its own bosom—which exacts from all nations with a readiness equal to the firmness with which it requires justice from them ; and which, whilst it raises its domestic code from the ingredients of an enlightened age, and the sentiments of virtuous people, seeks, by appeals to reason, and by its liberal examples, to infuse into the law of nations principles favorable to the peace, which may diminish the frequency, or circumscribe the calamities of war, and meliorate the social and beneficent relations of peace : A government, in a word, whose conduct within and without, will bespeak the most noble of all ambitions that of promoting peace on earth and good will to men.

These contemplations, sweetening the remnant of my days, will animate my prayers for the happiness of my beloved country, and a perpetuity of the institutions under which it is enjoyed.

AFRICAN COLONIZATION.

At a meeting held at Princeton, New Jersey, November 6, 1816, at which Colonel Ercurius Beatty presided, and James S. Green Esq. officiated as Secretary, it was resolved that a committee of five be appointed to obtain signatures to a Memorial to the Legislature of that State, praying them to " use their influence with the National Legislature to adopt some plan of colonizing the "Free Blacks."

The following gentlemen were appointed the committee.—Elisha Clark, John G. Schenck, Dr. E. Stockton, Dr. J. Van Cleve and Robert Voorhees.

Trenton Federalist.

London, Thursday evening Oct. 24.

We have had various rumours in circulation to day, which whether true or false have had the effect to cause a considerable depression in the funds. It was reported that a secret correspondence had been intercepted between the Court of Vienna and Bonaparte, and that the Austrian Commissioner has been detected in an intrigue for Bonaparte's release ; the rumour of a dissolution of Parliament was also revived. We have no reason to believe in either

Resolved,—That the committee on military affairs be instructed to enquire into the expediency of organizing a corps of invalids, and of establishing additional military academies.

A DIFFICULT FACT.

A great part of the news now stirring is the news of felonious deeds, as forgery, robbery, theft, arson, & almost every species of villainous crime, perpetrated almost daily in some parts or other of these United States. Of this species of news alone, there might be articles enough collected from the daily papers of our great cities to fill the columns of a weekly Register. It might well excite astonishment and dismay in the mind of all the well disposed were they not mortified that the monthly number of fedious, deeds in this country is not greater, than it was four years ago. Yet there is too much reason to think it is even so. Out of the war for sailors rights and for glory there has grown, not only a pretty large and chargeable standing army, but also a corps of flying troops, probably several thousand strong. In every direction they are traversing and pillaging the country, and their numbers seem to have been constantly increasing from a term to term ; the examples which our country in justice have made of some of them being like lopped off from the fabled Hydra its heads which instantly sprouted up anew. There is said to have been here a great number of convicted felons in the space of one or two of the last years than in the whole British isle during the same space of time, though its population is nearly double. In short, this young republic has but a few more lessons to learn before she will bear a comparison with the most corrupted state in Europe. [Con. Cour.

RELATING TO AMERICA.

Two American Frigates have arrived in Sicily and it is believed that the rest of the squadron will soon follow. The negotiations continue with Mr. Pinkney ; but American insolence has yielded to that character of justice and firmness which we have displayed on the occasion.

Our government has always been disposed to listen to well founded claims, and to reject vain and ridiculous pretensions. The arrangement between the two States, I am confident, will very one is resuming its proper place, it is not surprising that a number of men who were out of their place in the peace which they occupied should wish to go and try what fortune they could in the sea. Several expeditions are also forming at the present moment for Russia.

CALCUTTA, April 7.

Asiatic Society.—A Meeting of the Asiatic Society was held at their Hall in Chouringhee, on the 3d inst. which was honoured with the presence of His Excellency Lord Moira, the chair.—His Lordship read a letter addressed to Baron Denon, acquainting this celebrated Patron of the Arts, that he had been chosen Honorary Member of the Asiatic Society. Another interesting point of his attention to the British Artists who have visited Paris, since it became the great depot of every thing curious and valuable in the Arts.

Captain Canning read to the Society an interesting paper, tending to establish a fact to which we have hitherto been slow of giving credit. It has been often suspected that the horrible practice of eating criminals prevailed among the Battas tribe in the Island of Sumatra,—and it appears from Capt. Canning's memoir that little doubt can now be entertained as to the existance of this horrible custom. According to the description given to this gentleman when on a Diplomatic Mission to Sunatta, the unfortunate victim is bound to a stake, and the figure traced in the ground. Around the Cross ; Heare then attacked with hatchets and knives by the Bhattas, who despatch him in this manner, amidst the most hideous and frightful yells. The flesh is then torn from the bones with the most inforiated piteously, and being dipped in a mixture of chillies and lime-juice, is devoured by those cannibles on the spot. A Malay Mussulman who had been converted to the Christian Religion, was also interrogated in regard to the practice, as there was every reason to believe he had occasionally assisted at such horrid banquets. The confusal and embarrassment in which he was thrown by the charge, manifested to confirm the suspicions that were entertained of him ; and when added to the information obtained from other sources by Captain Cunningham's little doubt of the practice of this abominable most Europeans would rather hear of from others than witness themselves.

Major Farquaier, of Malacca, who transmitted to the Society an account of the Upas, an animo hitherto supposed to be peculiar to the American Continent. The memoir was accompanied with the bones of the head, and a drawing of the whole animal; from which it appears that the Malacca Upas differ little from the American, and is clearly referable to the same species.

QUEBEC:
THURSDAY, 28th NOVEMBER, 1816.

We learn that John Ogilvy Esq. of Montreal

His Majesty's Commissioner for ascertaining the boundary between the American Territory and that of the province of Upper Canada, has returned to Montreal after meeting at Albany, in conformity with the Treaty of Ghent, with Peter Porter, the Commissioner on behalf of the United States.

An intelligent gentleman of this city, who has been at St. Regis on the 10th inst. informs us that after the breaking up of the ice at the 24 Leagues Island, it was much more than usually backwarded. Many vessels, intended to commence their voyages by each party, will be finally restricted to the respective Governments to which they by Treaty belong, and the Settlement either side of the line will no longer remain in dispute as to which Province it belongs.

FROM THE SUN.

DRUMMONDVILLE, Nov. 23.

A melancholy accident occured at this place yesterday. A young man of the name of Cowie, in attempting to cross the river from the Canada, from Mr. Wheelock's farm, near the head of the rapids, was drawn by the violence of the current into the middle of the river, where it narrows, and was carried down a distance of about a mile, when he was observed by some persons standing on the bank, who immediately launched a canoe and put off to his assistance, but before they could reach him he was carried down the rapids, and no more of him has since been seen.

To day, by the benevolent exertions of the Messrs. Wheelocks and Atkinson, who were also the first to give the alarm, that were prompted from their reward, humanity to the dead, Mr. Lemuel Herriott, a most successful trial was made to gain the end, by means of anchoring a large seine about two miles lower down the river, and dragging a small space from the shore ; by which means the body of the unfortunate young man was brought off to his before distressed and now overjoyed parents ; who had been spectators of the forlorn situation, that he had occupied for nine o'clock yesterday morning till two this afternoon.

KINGSTON, Dec. 14.

FIRE!

On Wednesday last, at about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, a range of barracks of about 100 feet in length, was burnt to the ground, on Point Frederick. They were occupied by part of the 37th Regt. and we are informed that the greater part of the clothing for that Regiment was consumed. Great credit is due to the officers of the Navy and Army, as well as to the citizens generally for their exertions in quelling the flames.—We regret also its injustice to those who have charge of the Engines of the East and West wards of Kingston, were we to omit stating with what alacrity they were conveyed to the Point.

BIRTH.

On the 1st inst, The Lady of Capt. Fitz-Gerald, 8th Ghesg. Lt. Inf. of a Daughter.

MELANCHOLY ACCIDENT.

On Saturday the 21st ultimo, John Wilson, (son of Stillwell Wilson of Yonge Street,) was killed by the fall of a log, from a small house that he was assisting a poor man to raise.—A Coroner's Inquest was held the next day : Verdict accidental death.—His remains were interred on the 24th in the new Church Yard, when an affecting Sermon was delivered by the Rev. Doctor Strachan, to a large and respectable assemblage of the friends and acquaintance of this much lamented young man. In him his parents have lost a dutiful son, and the public, a worthy member of society.

YORK, THURSDAY, 24 JANUARY.

The latest European papers contain very little political news, but from the information they give, there is very great reason to hope, that the failure of the crops have not been near so great or so general as was at first apprehended. In some parts of Europe there is a large surplus, the greater part of which will ere this, have been sent to England, and it is very possible that before any flour can arrive there from the United States, the market will be completely supplied ; indeed it is far from improbable that the market price in England at this moment may be so low, or perhaps lower than at New York, a conjecture that acquires strength from the circumstance that the Speculators who sent out the Harlequin, fixed the highest price to be given, at two Dollars less, than was the actual price when she arrived at New York.—And again the government in Ireland at the first alarm very properly forbade the distillation from grain, but from more full information, the prohibition was shortly removed.

Under the Title of "THE YORK GAZETTE," this Paper had fallen so low in the Public estimation, that the Editor has been advised to change its name to the one Originally given. The present number will therefore commence a new series to be regularly Paged, and an Index given at the end of the year. As soon as a supply of good Paper can be procured from England, the size of the Gazette will be increased.

It is usual at the commencement of a new publication, to make many professions, which are too frequently after a-while entirely forgotten ; anxious to avoid a similar error, the Editor can only assure the Public that he will endeavour to deserve their Patronage, and time only can shew how far he will merit it.

All Communications tending to the improvement and general information of the Public at large, and of this Province in particular, will be thankfully received.

From the Pen of Mr. Eustace L. Smith.

The following Poem is very intended to represent the views and reflections of THE HERMIT OF ST. HELENA.

He's—to his grief knowing!—in the lone spot,
Scarce seen amid the multitudinous wave!
There let him stand, distinguish'd by the cloud-wreath
And ever bid farewell greatness wildly rave!—
The wind shall mock his wailings, & the caw
Echo in waves the anguish of his cries!
His withered heart shall be his living grave,
Sunder'd afar from all distinguish'd ties.
Accompanied but by the Worm that never dies—
Yet—He shall pace along the vacant sand,
And chide the surge that bravely round his feet
Towers the regardless thrones stretch his hand,
And govern empires in the mid conceit.
He shall—in day-dreams for such misery meet—
Pore on the shelly beach, and idly drew
The cloudsided glass of Britain's sure defeat;
Gives from some rugged rock his will's high law,
And wave his sea-weed-crown, and pause to survey'd strew.

COMMUNICATION.

Mr. Editor.

I was at first surprised at the wondrous fertility of our western country as evinced in an evening print on Saturday, which gives an account of Cannibals at Fort Osage, with heads SIXTEEN FEET IN CIRCUMFERENCE.* But on recollecting myself, I found the story by no means so wonderful and extraordinary as I had imagined. I remember the circumstance of a neighbor of mine, who removed from Marietta to Boonetown, and found a cow-bar he had accidentally left sticking in the field a week before, handsomely studded with spikes, ten-penny nails and heads about ing out and sprouting on every side of it. And about the same time an acquaintance of mine, a gentleman in Kentucky, who well mounted on horseback, stopping at a friend's house to hitch him some mammoth pumpkin seeds happening to drop a few on the ground, found himself set in thickly surrounded by young vines, while talking with his friend, he stance, that a bear had come into the field, climbed himself by one of those vines, and riding. Indeed I have been told, that in the hard shell of one of these vegetable productions that is usually chosen before a house is built for the purpose, for the winter's residence of new settlers, excepting where a hollow tree is found large enough to accommodate his family, or some older resident is able to furnish him with an Osage Cabbage Stalk.

ELUCIDATOR.

A hunting in the following passage is in a letter dated Fort Osage, Missouri Territory, and published in Saturday's Columbian.

"The cabbages have grown to such an uncommon size, that several of the gentlemen of this post have been led through curiosity to measure them. Dr. I. Lowrey, surgeon of this post, Mr. Reuben Lindsey, contractor's agent, and Indian trader, (brother to the late Governor Lindsey) and myself measured some of them, which we found to be sixteen feet round the head on the outside of the leaves; the blades were twelve feet seven inches in length from the stalk to the top, and twenty five inches in width. This is the size of the largest we could find; but there are a great many so near this size, that you could only discover the largest by actual measurement.—N. Y. Herald.

ON THE DIMENSIONS OF THE WHALE.

From Dr. Shaw's Zoological Lectures.

With regard to the anatomy of the Whale, I shall content myself with observing that on so colossal a scale of magnitude does nature act in these animals, that the vertebræ or joints of the back-bone are of the size of moderate barrels; the ribs and jaw-bones so large as to be occasionally used to form the sides of tall arched gateways; the heart too large to be contained in a very wide artery, or principal artery, measures a foot in diameter, and it is computated that the quantity of blood thrown into it at every pulsation of the heart is not less than from ten to fifteen gallons.

The strength of the great Northern Whale is prodigious; it is able to shatter a strong canoe in pieces with a single stroke of its tail. It swims, accordding to the computation of Cuvier, at the rate of about thirty-three feet in a second; and it is further computed that in the space of about 47 days it might circumnavigate the equator, even allowing it a rest by night during the whole time. The female produces in general but one young at a birth, which usually measures more than 20 feet in length: and she has the reputation of being very tenderly attached to her offspring.

TO FARMERS.

We state for the information of those who are in the habit of feeding their Cattle, with the poor and injured corn, which did not come to maturity this year, owing to the early frosts, that several of the Cows and young cattle have died in this town the past week, which had been fed on this kind of food, and the milk and cream of others which have survived, is so offensive we cannot use it.—Northampton Gaz.

FOR SALE.

THAT Well known Freehold property situated in the most desirable part, of the town of York, belonging to the subscriber, consisting of a lot of one acre and a half laid out in a garden and now under the highest cultivation together with a capital, roomy and substantial Dwelling House thereon erected, commanding so uninterrepted and extensive a view over the waters of the Bay and Lake.

ON STEAM VESSELS.

With a narrative of a voyage performed by me from Glasgow to London. By J. C. Delamotherie, member of the French National Institute.

A trial was made at Paris, more than thirty years ago, of a boat driven forward by the force of three strokes of a rapid succession from a Steam engine. A boiler full of water was placed upon the chariot, and heated by a furnace to such a degree as to produce the water into vapour. Behind the boiler was a pipe, by which the vapour escaped with rapidity. The vapour experienced such a resistance from the air, as to give the chariot a forward motion, which made it go at the rate of nine toises (about eighteen feet) an hour. But no further application of this apparatus was made.

In 1788, Messrs. Miller and Symington, of Dalswinton, were constructing on a different principle. The vessel was to be moved by two paddles or oars, placed on each side, and which were to be worked by a steam engine. This machine was tried on the 14th of October, 1788, on a lake in Dalswinton, and was found to go at the rate of five miles an hour. Mr. Miller, encouraged by this success, had a vessel of 60 feet built, which was tried on the Forth and Clyde; and there was now 16 or 17 miles regularly on that river. Regular packet-boats were established in Scotland, and a commercial trial has been made of one upon a stormy sea, in a voyage from Dublin to London. We shall give an extract from this memorable voyage, made by Mr. Lattey, in a communication lately made to Professor Pictet. Bibl. Brit. an 15.

The command of the vessel had been given to Mr. G. Dod,* a young man of great resolution, who had gone to Glasgow with a view to bring it to London. He had made his apprenticeship in the British Navy, and had afterwards distinguished himself as a civil engineer, an architect, and even as a topographer. His equipage consisted merely of a master, four sailors of the first class, a fireman, a smith and a cabin boy. It was the first embarkation of this kind which had ever been attempted on the ocean, with a steam engine, and its equipment, he put boldly to sea.

The beginning of his voyage was not fortunate. The weather was very unsettled; in the narrow channel which separates Scotland from Ireland, the swell is sometimes rendered terrible, by the meeting of the tide with the strong east wind, which comes from the Atlantic Ocean. REMEDY for SCARCITY.

Gentlemen,

The present scarcity of grain produces serious distress among the poorer class of people, and what is almost as painful, much greater wants among the domestic animals, it becomes an object of great importance to diminish the consumption, and to increase the nutriment of that consumed. Proper attention to the subject most certainly will reduce the use of grain to one half of the present quantity; and it behoves every man in good circumstances, to attend to it, in order that there may be more for market. If every one will seriously carry into operation the plan I have to propose for feeding, the price of grain will in a few days be so reduced, that the good effect will quickly be felt: the poor will be supplied on moderate terms, half starved corn fed horses will pass a comfortable winter; and some of the idle shapers, speculating in articles of the first necessity, will be disappointed in the project of fattening on the spoils of the needy.

A most important point is, to suffer no animal to eat grain in its natural state. It should all go through the hands of the miller and the cook. The life of the grain meets the action of the stomach so long, that it passes into the bowels before half decomposed; and from thence, in the condition, is expelled. Three fourths of oats, or corn, ground fine, will yield more nourishment than three grains not ground. This is generally believed by waggoners, who feed their horses on rye meal, called chop. The grinding of oats and corn, is just as beneficial as that of rye. And, of as much importance as grinding, is boiling the meal with water, so as to make a thin mush. This mush mixed up with hay or cut straw, will in a day or two be preferred by the animal confined to it, to any other diet. One pint of meal will yield two gallons of boiling water, in the manner in which it is added to some of mush when thickened: and if not boiled with the hay or straw, which would be best, poured on it and stirred up, and given at night, will with the aid of a little hay in the day, preserve any horse or cow in good order. This mixture, or mush, ought by all means to be boiled a few minutes, otherwise but little good will be done. This is confirmed by the following experiment, repeatedly made in England. A man, confined to a given quantity of raw materials, with abundance of water, would undoubtedly decline in flesh: but with the same quantity of raw materials made into soup, would continue in good condition. The union of the water with the food, by boiling, is like that in vegetation—it becomes a component part, and is converted into nourishment for the body, which it would not be if taken separately, or if not chemically united. Whether this reasoning be convincing or not, matters but little, since those to whom it is not satisfactory, must rely upon the fact, that boiling thin meal, before addinst to it straw or hay, will make it go twice as far in the support of their stock. Surely, for such an advantage, so easily obtained, every one ought to get over the natural indolence and common aversion to deviate from old habits.

Another considerable saving, well worth attention, will be made, by giving the animals all their meal food before and not after work, and without hay during the night. By eating the meal food at night, their stomachs convert the whole of it into nourishment. That taken in the day, does very little good—more frequently injury than good—It operates on the stomach, instead of the stomach's operating on it: so that not only nothing is extracted from it, but it excites pain, cholics, and other symptoms of inflammation. This can be well understood, from the experiment of an English physician: He gave a given quantity of the same food to two similar dogs, keeping the one quiet, the other in constant motion, for six hours, when both were killed. The stomach of the one at rest had digested all its contents—that of the other, had not produced any effect—The frequent repetition of this experiment, has end d in its undisputed establishment. Hence, it is clear that the grain given in the day to animals and in use, is of no benefit, as it passes through the stomach before it can be of the digestion to take place. Hence, giving hay at night, really injures horses, keepers; and, if not kept up by their animals nature made for subsisting in the dark, rest and sleep are hindered; and more or less, they are injured in every deviation from nature. The Lord, the Governor, had fallen a sacrifice to it, and the second in command by every deviation from nature. The Lord, the Governor, had fallen a sacrifice to it, and the second in command I am sure, was introduced by Anverkeepers; and, if not kept up by their interests, would speedily be abandoned by every one who had sense enough to perceive the folly. In one or two hours during the day, horses can eat as much hay as will do them good. In conformation of this, I heard of the treatment several travellers gave their horses in pursuance, during a journey of many hundred miles, they gave them no horses only grain at night, and hay for the last three days in the day. During the hundred miles, they gained in flesh (though travelling more expeditiously under the regimen) that which they lost in the beginning, under the customary treatment of giving grain in the day with hay at night.

The last point I have to press, is, the necessity of keeping stock sheltered that is, securing to them the benefit of their own warmth. It is a truth, indeed, that during the exposure to the irregularities of the season, they require twice the ordinary food, for their nourishment and subsistance, and are subject to ten times as many fatal disorders as otherwise they would be. The master has taken them from a state where nature supplied their wants; and if he be not too much of a brute to feel for their hardships, he ought to be so much of a man of honor as to supply what his interest dictates, as a requital to the animal for its loss of what nature designed for its original.

If by this plan of grinding and boiling the half of the grain be saved in the country, as most certainly it may, there will be but little occasion for pressing the extension of the principle to man by advising eating mush instead of bread, and taking soups instead of meat.

THOMAS EWELL.

Georgetown, 3d Dec. 1816.

ON ECONOMY OF FUEL, FODDER &c.

To the Editors of the National Intelligencer.

I observe in England, Mr. Ewell's proposition for averting in some measure, the effects of scarcity, by boiling the food of horses and other cattle.

For the information of those who approve of Mr. Ewell's proposition, but who may fear the trouble of carrying it into effect; I will describe an easy manner in which I have the food for a large stock of horses boiled daily in Liverpool, England.

A pot containing about 10 or 15 gallons of water, was fixed in a small brick furnace sunk into the ground. The furnace was open at top, like a pit or excavation opposite to the door of the furnace; the smoke and heat, after circulating round the pot, went off through a horizontal flue, which led to under the side of the earth to a small chimney about ten feet distant, and about eight high.—This contrivance was adjacent to the stable, over the pot was placed a stout puncheon, the bottom of which was pierced with numerous holes of an inch, or an inch and a half diameter. The puncheon was filled with potatoes, (well washed) which were covered with the head of the puncheon, and secured by locks, which had been stripped of potatoes, thrown over ell. A fire was put into the furnace, and in less than an hour the potatoes were perfectly boiled by the steam. The puncheon was then taken apart, and the potatoes having cooled upon a clean floor of boards, or flags, which surrounded the pot, the potatoes were carried in buckets to the mangers, and mixed with bran or oats.

If it be a fact that boiled vegetables are much more nourishing to animals than unboiled, every farmer should have an apparatus for boiling, and not suffer either his horses or other cattle to eat unboiled vegetables. Queen's would not the application of steam upon corn do the same? would for hogs or cows, particularly if blended with boiled potatoes, turnips, carrots, or parsnips.

A thousand bricks, a puncheon, and ten gallon pot, are all the materials that are necessary for such an apparatus.

Yours, respectfully,

J. G.

CONGRESS.

IN SENATE—Thursday, December 12.

The two members from Indiana, Walter Taylor and Jonas Noble, (the act of her admission into the Union having been consummated) produced their credentials, and were qualified.

The usual ceremony of drawing lots, by lot, took place; when it appeared that Mr. Noble was assigned to the class of senators whose term of service expires on the 3d of March 1821, and Mr. Taylor to that whose term expires on the 3d of March, 1819.

FROM THE SERVICE OF SUSSEX, ISLAND REGISTER, April 6, 1816.—Early on Monday morning the 25th inst. a very severe shock of an earthquake took place about 20 minutes before 5 o'clock. It appears to have been chiefly confined to the northern and central parts of the Island, taking a north-eastern direction. The space of time it continued was about 15 or 23 seconds.—The motion excited universal alarm, most persons leaving their dwellings unchained out of their sleep, and impressed with the idea of their house being attempted by thieves, from the violent agitation of the vessels in the doors and windows.—And in some houses, the furniture also was a good deal moved. The shock was distinctly felt in the residence of the Hon. the Governor, on the great hill, and by the families of persons occupying the various Bungalows in its vicinity. Excepting the general alarm occasioned by this awful phenomenon, and the cracking and fall of the plaster work in a few dwellings, we have not learnt that any accident occurred.

Extract of a letter, received by a respectable gentleman, in Newburyport, dated Buenos Ayres, Sept. 12, 1816.

"There will be great rejoicings here in a few days on account of the Independence of those united provinces which has been recently declared in great state; but the minds of those patriots are so unsettled that it is uncertain how long it will last—for another revolution may take place, there is no danger, however, of its coming into the hands of old Spain again. This market is in a most horrid state, and glutted with every kind of produce and merchandize, European Indian and from the United States. Even the most stable articles will scarcely bring cost and charges, & no profit whatever will arise from the returns."

Another most villainous attempt to set fire to the navy yard in the course of last night, the villains got into the rear of those valuable stores in the Market, between Fourth and Fifth streets, by clambering over the walls; and, appear, very deliberately, to have kindled a fire in the cellar window of Messrs. Cope's store. Fortunately it did not spread, or the loss of property might have been immense. What would have added to the conflagration is that neighborhood, is, that a gun-powder store house is not many yards distant from the spot. It may not be improper, while noticing the subject, to recommend to the patroles particular vigilance in examining the different alleys, courts, &c. where the midnight incendiaries are most probably lurking.

Court Martial.—The trial of Lieutenant Cunningham, Commandant of the U. S. Schooner Firebrand, "under the 5th. article of the Act for the better government of the Navy," closed, at New Orleans, on the 2nd. ult. The following is the decision of the Court Martial upon the charges preferred against Lieut. Cunningham of improper conduct during the late attack from a Spanish squadron:—

"The Court having now cleared took into mature consideration the evidence on the part of the prosecutor, as also that introduced by the accused; and after due deliberation there-upon, the court pronounced Lt. Com. T. S. Cunningham, Not Guilty of a breach of the 5th. article the act for the better government of the United States' Navy or any part thereof; and the court do now, unanimously and honorably acquit Lieut. Cunningham of Com. I. S. Cunningham of free from any the slightest imputation of pusillanimity or conduct during his whole cruize, commencing on the 13th August, and ending on th 7th September, of the present year, and particularly on the 27th of August, in the rencounter with the ship Diana and brig Cassador, of this injured officer to state that his conduct throughout the whole of the affair, with this overwhelming force, has been highly honorable, to himself and the brig under which he served; nor can the court refrain from observing that the unexpected and dastardly attack made by his Catholic Majesty's ship Diana and brig Cassador has produced an unparralleled, unjustifiable and unprovoked insult and outrage upon the flag of the U. Elizabeth Town Steam-Boat.—We are sorry to have it to state, that this new steam-boat, burst her boiler this morning, just as she was on the point of starting from the wharf at the foot of Market-field street, on her first trip, by which unfortunate accident two boys and a girl were so severely scalded, that their lives are all despaired of. We learn from Capt. Henfield, of the brig Sarah, that the latest accounts from the South Maine, represented the affairs of the Patriots in that quarter to continue successful. A vessel had arrived at Port-au-Prince, with an invitation to Gen. Bolivar to return to the Maine and resume a command in the Patriot army.

We learn in our Port au Prince papers a notice of the Secretary of state of the President Petion, promulgated on the 5th of November, to the merchants of the republic, that by official despatches from the Emperor of Austria, through his ambassador at Paris, dated 15th of August last, at Trieste, the ports of Austria are open to the Haytien flag, and that the Emperor is desirous of promoting a friendly intercourse between the two countries.—Phil. Aduc.

From the Salem Register.

This week the beautiful vessel, Concordia, prepared for a European voyage by Capt. Geo. Crowninshield, was exhibited to the ladies and gentlemen of the town, being already prepared for sea. As a specimen of naval architecture, she is, admirable for her materials and construction. Her model unites the excellencies which modern experiments have combined from the best materials and the most skilful workmen.—The convenience which unite in her apartments are so happily blended, that she is to be admired but as a whole part of the whole. The furniture is the richest our country has produced, and every thing is in the best style of elegance. Nothing elegant is omitted, nothing useful is forgotten. Every thing required at sea is prepared, and every luxury of the apartment at home accommodates itself readily to this vessel in all her movements. The riches displayed in the cabin is surpassed by the neatness and variety without confusion, and the workmanship in all the movables of the dining room agrees with the elegance in which this apartment is finished. We do not refer from this gentleman to any neglected parts of the vessel. We observe in the humblest apartments the same accommodation and the same suitable arrangements. Indeed, such a display is refreshing to a general benefit, and will give to all who see it some share in the improvements which a life at sea may enjoy in connect with the best manners of the family and of states.

Privateering. On Wednesday, at 20 minutes after one o'clock, Barnet concluded his arduous undertaking of re ing 1500 miles in 32 days. From his great age (72 years) his apparent debility, and the unfavorable state of the weather for some time after the commencement of his task, it would might he would never be able to accomplish it. He has, however, disappointed many who set out against him, by the apparent ease with which he concluded it.

Government Contract.

An Extraordinary Council was existed in the city on Saturday, at the proposal made by Government to contract for 8000 tierces of Pork and 2000 tierces of Beef; but it should be recollected, that formerly the Americans supplied provisions to the West India islands, because they could afford to do it on cheaper terms, than could be obtained in England.—Now Provisions in North America are at the rate of 5l. 5s. per barrel, whereas the same kind in England are at 5l. 10s. The difference of price, together with the policy of supplying our colonies from home, may account for the proposed Contract of Government.

QUEBEC, Dec. 19.

On Tuesday, between 12 and 1 o'clock, a fire broke out in the large new unfinished Roman Catholic Church in St. Rock's Suburb, which was consumed in about two hours. The fire had reached to great a head in the body of the Church before it was discovered, that all efforts to reduce it were ineffectual. Whether it took its origin however, was effected by the negligence of the Clergy, the Military and the Citizens. By the assistance and owing to the wind blowing from the north east the dwellings in the neighbourhood, and a large stone building belonging to the Church, were saved. The latter is separated from the Church only by a partition wall through which are several doors of communication.

It is considered by this unfortunate event is said to be very considerable, and will be greatly felt by the inhabitants of St. Rock's Suburb. The walls of the edifice are still standing, and do not appear to be materially injured.

This accident is accounted for by supposing that the fire which was left burning in a stove during the absence of the workmen at their dinner hour, had by some means caught the surrounding shavings.

QUEBEC, Dec. 18, 1816.

The undersigned takes the opportunity of this paper to convey in his name, and in the name of all such as are concerned in the Church of St. Rock's Suburbs, to people of every rank, both Civil and Military, his most sincere thanks for the cordial and eager assistance they gave yesterday at the fire by which that building was destroyed. To their steady, and almost unexampled endeavour is chiefly due the preservation of all adjoining buildings three stories high, which consequently, must have been destroyed, and from the greatest risk to become the prey to the flames.

WILLINGTON'S NAME.

BY T. HOOD, ESQ.

While history's muse the memorial was keeping
Of all that the dark heart of villany knows,
Beside her she saw the fiend Guilt bowed with weeping
For her's was the worst that had bowed the head low.
But, oh! how the tear in her eyelids grew heavy,
When other sable pages of horror and shame
Met her inkered writing!
Tell, Muse! all the villanies, her WILLINGTON'S NAME!

Hail, starved ay me, of soul and the spirit, all apart
With brains such as weigh from her two days' slice;
Whose lack of morals, deformed and darkened,
Are matched in one glance, the time to serve,
For, no person I've counted, is matched was there
And unmatched if they stand in the crossways of
Not, oh! there is not,
One monstrous villany
On the events that murderers my Wallington's name.

And still the last crown of thy folly is mounting
The grandest, the purest, ever tasted by
The proud was thy task, other patterns imbuing
For promise to heal the deep wounds of
At the foot of that throne, for whose weal
And the hand for the hand still cracked
And hearts after stabbed,
Of her joys and her blood
Let the rainbow of hope be her Wellington's

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Recollections of Italy, &c.

At the cataract of Niagara the Indian ladder which was formerly there being broken, I wished in spite of the representations of my guide to get to the bottom of the fall by a perpendicular rock of about 200 feet high. I still vertised upon the descent, notwithstanding the roaring of the cataract and the frightful abyss which boiled beneath me. I kept my head steady, and got to about 40 feet from the bottom.—But here the smooth and vertical rock offered no more veins or fissures where I might rest my feet; I retained hanging by the hand at my whole length, not able to get up or down, feeling my fingers open by degrees from weariness under the weight of my body, and seeing death inevitable. There are few men who live in their lives passed two minutes as I reckoned them, then suspended over the gulf of Niagara. At last my hands opened, and I fell." Now then our readers will conclude there was an end to M. de Chateaubriand:—not he. By the most unheard of good fortune I fell upon the bare rock, where I should naturally have dashed myself a hundred times to pieces, e t'y e t fell no great hurt; I was half an inch from the abyss, and I had not rolled into it."—Vol. 2. page 528.

Heidlburg, (Germany,) Aug. 22.

An event remarkable in its kind happened here on the 20th: Charles Witte, whose name is already well known, who in his thirteenth year was Doctor of Philosophy, and in his fourteenth Member of the Literary Society of the Wetterau; attained, after two years study of Jurisprudence, the degree of Doctor of Laws. He went through the first and most rigid examination, sine qua non laude, and he went through the public disputation so brilliantly, that all the Academy joined with Professor Zacharia in creating him Doctor, in a speech highly honorable to both.

Every citizen, in Hayti, convicted of having sold or bought a vote is excluded from all public employment for 20 years; and in case of repetition, for ever.

In the United States, the buyer and seller are both rewarded. The first obtains a fat office, and the second, after having elected him; eats upon him for the next best office.

HIS MAJESTY.—Our good old king has been so long withdrawn from the view of his affectionate and loyal subjects, the public press has ceased to notice his majesty in the accounts of the royal family.—The following anecdotes respecting him have been communicated to us upon good authority.—It is upwards of two years since his majesty was shaved. His beard is now very long. His usual dress is a silk night gown, in which, from his age and physical infirmities, he reminds the spectators of the person and appearance of King Lear. Her majesty visits him once a week; but the princesses have not seen him for a considerable time. During the progress of the war the news of the day was read to him, but latterly his want of sight has been further aggravated by total deafness. His small stock of intellectual enjoyment has been thus greatly reduced; as he can no longer hear any news, nor amuse himself with the piano-forte, of which he was very fond, and on which he played very well. As might be naturally expected, the recovery of Hanover gave him particular pleasure. After the battle of Alburst, and before lanterns were introduced into our army, he repeatedly recommended them, and stated, that in the improvement, the British army would be complete. His Majesty's memory continues unimpaired.

Mr. POULSON,

You published some days ago, a method to quench a burning chimney by the steam of water. I have not yet tried this, but I have found in such cases that Brimstone will have immediate effect. If the Chimney blazes, cast a few ounces of Brimstone in the fire, and immediately the flame will be extinguished by the smoke of the sulphur, and the soot will fall into the fire-place.

Method of taking out Ink Spots, from Woollen, Linen, and Silk.

To take Ink spots from Woollen, they must be first rubbed with a composition consisting of the white of an egg, and a few drops of oil of vitriol, properly incorporated; next, immediately washed with pure water, or the vitriol will destroy the Cloth; and lastly, blow the parts smoothed in the direction of the warp, with a piece of flannel or white woollen cloth. From linen, ink spots may be removed by immediately dropping on them plentifully, while wet with the ink, the tallow from a tight candle, and letting it remain on a few days before washing the linen. This is also said to take the stains of red port out of linen. Ink spots on silk require to be well rubbed with the ashes of wormwood, and strong distilled vinegar, and to be afterwards cleansed with soap-water. When ink is once dried on linen, the spot is to be taken out by rubbing it well with a piece of lemon, and then using a hot iron till the ink totally disappears. If a lemon be cut in half, the linen where spotted pressed down over it till the juice penetrates through, and the hot iron placed on the linen, the spot will immediately give way and soon entirely vanish.

Those spots called iron moulds, may generally be soon taken out, either by means of lemon juice and a hot iron, or in the same manner as dried ink spots, by a little essential salt of lemons rubbed over the spot.

MUSIC.

IS there a man living, all the varied earth, Who never loves Music? a man without mirth, That never delights in a sweet tuneful lay, And wonders what people find pleasure in that? Is there such a man? I do solemnly swear I'd not be his friend, nor his partner share; I'd not be his guest, nor would I be his host, For he would not suit me, and I'm sure I'm not suited to him. Such a man is a bore, And I'm sure I'm not fond of the company, And, therefore, I'll not be the man's partner in this.

Who has not heard of the fisher's playful smile Whilst sound-mind mother's song in mute beguile Its cry? which at once with to wake, and hush That voice which by its charms is known to each? Who has not seen the mother's eye, Glisten'd by the mother's palpitating sigh?

That potent magic lulls the wayward child, Though wrapt in grief, and disordered storm, Proving the ruling theme, or warrior throng And rude man's passion by the charm of Song. The lonely swain who prepares the stiff, With cheerful mind, beguiles the toil, And blithe and merry whistles the while; And blithest dance around the evening blaze, Responding to sing the deeds of former days: Even the sick, the lonely, and the sad of mind Find comfort in solitude and spite of nature wakes, And sweet the thrilling waves around him break, The Mourner chants the cheering sound, "All, all is well."

LORD VISCOUNT EXMOUTH.

It must be in the recollection of many of our readers, that on the 26th of January, 1796, the Dutton East Indiaman, in the transport service, was wrecked under the Citadel of Plymouth, and totally lost. Viscount Exmouth, then Sir Edward Pellew, was with many others a spectator from the shore, of the dreadful calamity; and after offering a most liberal reward to any one who would convey a rope on board, but which none could be found to undertake, he boldly resolved to attempt the hazardous enterprise himself, and instantly dashed into the foaming waves to the rescue, which he most gallantly and nobly accomplished his work of humanity by saving the lives of nearly five hundred of his fellow creatures, who, but for his unconquerable intrepidity, must inevitably have perished. The freedom of the Borough of Plymouth was presented to him as an elegant silver box; and at a public meeting, given by a gentleman of Plymouth, were invited to be present on that occasion, when he received the following toast, which was drank with the greatest enthusiasm:

"The heroic Pellew, sublimely great and good
For most, thy brother man, distress'd—all dar
The dreadful passage of the raging flood,
And join the Danic children of despair.

There, it was thine in comfort's balmy tone,
To soothe their sorrows, 'mid the tempest's roar,
To bath the mother's shriek—thou sick man's groan
And bear the sufferers, trembling, to the shore

So, when this mighty orbit's dread career,
Shall crash in ruins, at its God's decree;
The saving Angel, with triumphant arm,
Shall from the wreck of all things—rescue thee.

M. TALLEYRAND PERIGORD.

According to an article in the Edinburgh Review, this extraordinary character was born in the year 1754. He was the eldest son of a branch of the House of Perigord. He was born club-footed, and on account of this deformity he was deprived of his birthright. And for the same strange reason, he was never suffered to enjoy even in infancy, the comforts of living in his father's family, under whose roof he never slept; and he was forced into the ecclesiastical profession, in opposition to all his own wishes. He studied at the Sorbonne, at the same time with Abbe Sieyes; and he was then remarked only as a silent and haughty young man, who passed all his time among his books. He was 20th promoted till the end of the year 1789 &c. 1789. It was then that he published a famous address to the clergy, which first announced his talents to the world, and raised him, under the patronage of Louis XVI. to be Bishop of Autun. The inexplicable injustice that Talleyrand met with in being treated as an outcast by his father, is thought to have given him the strong bias to intrigue and cunning.

PROCLAMATION.

George the Third by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith.

To our Beloved and faithful Legislative Councellors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Assembly at our Town of York, on the third day of January next, to be Commenced, Held, Called and Elected, and to every of you.

GREETING:—

WHEREAS by our Proclamation bearing date the twenty fourth day of November last; We thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council, to Prorogue our Provincial Parliament to the Third day of January next, at which time at our Town of York you were held and constrained to appear. BUT WE taking into our Royal consideration, the ease and convenience of our Loving Subjects, Have thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council, to relieve you, and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforesaid, HEREBY convoking and by these Presents enjoining you, and each of you, that on Tuesday the Fourth day of February next coming, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament, at our Town of York, for the Actual Despatch of Public Business,—there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our said Province, and there to do, as may seem necessary.

Herein fail not.—

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, We have caused these our Letters to be made Patent and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—WITNESS our trusty and well beloved FRANCIS GORE, Esq. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, at York, the Twenty first day of December, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixteen, and in the fifty Seventh year of our Reign.

F. G.

By Command of His Excellency.
WILLIAM JARVIS, Secretary.

UPPER CANADA.

PROCLAMATION.

BY HIS EXCELLENCY

FRANCIS GORE Esq. LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

Of our said Province, &c. &c. &c.

WHEREAS by An Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, made and passed in the Forty-second Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled "An Act to enable the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Person administering the Government of this Province, to appoint one or more additional Port or Ports, Place or Places, of Entry within this Province. And to appoint one or more Collector, or Collectors of the same," lately expired.—AND WHEREAS the said Act hath since been revived by An Act passed in the Fifty-sixth Year of His Majesty's Reign.—AND WHEREAS it was with reference to the Interests of His Majesty's Government of this Province, as to the convenience of Importers of Goods and Merchandize, and of Merchants, and other His Majesty's Subjects resident within this Province, it hath been ascertained that there is immediate occasion for appointing One other additional Port or Ports of Entry, and Clearance, at the Place or Places hereinafter specified. BE IT THEREFORE KNOWN that I, FRANCIS GORE, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, in exercise of the powers and authority vested in me by the said recited Act, And by and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Province, Do hereby declare and appoint, that in addition to the Port of Entry now established by the said recited Act, the Port of Entry for the Province, pursued in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled "An Act for Granting to His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, an Additional Duty of Customs, &c." Shall from the first Day of January next, be the same is by these presents Established and Proclaimed to be a Port and Place of Entry and Clearance for the United States, as are now or hereafter may be established by the said Act, for the Importation of Goods and Merchandize imported from the United States of America, and shipped at any of the Ports and other places. And also that from and after the said first Day of January next, all Goods and Merchandize brought into this Province from the United States of America, and shipped at any of the Ports and other places aforesaid, shall be subject to the Duties and Charges imposed by the said Act, and under the same Pains and Penalties as are therein mentioned and specified. And also that from and after the said first Day of January next, the Duties imposed by the said Act, on Goods and Merchandize imported into this Province from the United States of America, and shipped at any of the Ports and other places aforesaid, shall be paid on all Goods and Merchandize brought into this Province from the United States of America, and shipped at any of the Ports and other places aforesaid, by virtue of the said Act as passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign.

GIVEN Under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this Twentieth Day of December in the year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixteen and in the Fifty Seventh year of His Majesty's Reign.

FRANCIS GORE,
Lieutenant Governor.

By Command of His Excellency,
WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

The Commissioners appointed by joint resolutions of the honourable the Senate and Assembly of the state of New-York, of the 18th and 19th March, 1816, to explore a route for a canal navigation from Hudson's river to lake Ontario and lake Erie, beg leave to Report,

THAT they have examined the country as critically as time and circumstances would permit, and caused surveys to be made for their information.

They beg leave to observe, as the present navigation of the Mohawk river, Wood creek, Oneida lake, and the Oswego river, which extends from Schenectady to lake Ontario, (saving only eighteen miles portage at the falls of Oswego) are capable of a vast improvement, and more distant and expensive communication to lake Erie would not be advisable, unless it could be shewn that a canal from thence to lake Ontario, could be made on more favourable terms than from Schenectady to the Seneca river.

They have also considered it would not be prudent to recommend any canal navigation, that should not be capable of receiving boats of such dimensions, as would be most approved by the navigators of the Hudson river, and the Atlantic coast, as they might, for purposes of commerce, be ultimately introduced into the Mohawk river, Wood creek, Oneida lake, and the Oswego river, which extends from Schenectady to lake Ontario, (a topic which will find a better place in the report of the engineers, that attend under the direction of these commissioners) and it would not be prudent to recommend any canal navigation, that should not be capable of receiving boats of such dimensions, as would be most approved by the navigators of the Hudson river, and the Atlantic coast, as they might, for purposes of commerce, be ultimately introduced into the Mohawk river, Wood creek, Oneida lake, and the Oswego river, which extends from Schenectady to lake Ontario, (saving only eighteen miles portage at the falls of Oswego) are capable of a vast improvement, and more distant and expensive communication to lake Erie would not be advisable, unless it could be shewn that a canal from thence to lake Ontario, could be made on more favourable terms than from Schenectady to the Seneca river.

They have also considered it would not be prudent to recommend any canal navigation, that should not be capable of receiving boats of such dimensions, as would be most approved by the navigators of the Hudson river, and the Atlantic coast, as they might, for purposes of commerce, be ultimately introduced into the Mohawk river, Wood creek, Oneida lake, and the Oswego river, which extends from Schenectady to lake Ontario, (saving only eighteen miles portage at the falls of Oswego) are capable of a vast improvement, and more distant and expensive communication to lake Erie would not be advisable, unless it could be shewn that a canal from thence to lake Ontario, could be made on more favourable terms than from Schenectady to the Seneca river.

But an angle of one degree will exceed in a distance of ninety-two feet, or nearly so, the difference of level in the whole twelve miles. If, then, two dollars be allowed for a boat, team, and driver's wages, and much extra load as he can possibly draw, and ten cents be allowed for the use of the railway, and if it be supposed that only four tons be taken instead of eight, the cost will be for each ton, (twelve miles, forty-two cents, or three and a half cents per mile: at which rate, one hundred and forty miles, (a greater distance than between Oswego and Lewiston, along lake Ontario) would come to four dollars ninety cents, being thirty-five cents less than the freight now paid.

A question, however, of more importance presents itself. Admitting that it were easy to complete a boat navigation from Rome to lake Ontario, and more difficult and expensive to complete it from thence to lake Erie; would it not be advisable to descend into lake Ontario, rather than encounter the difficulty and expense of ascending?

Freight from Niagara to Oswego will, from the difficult and dangerous access to that harbour, be as high as to the head of the rapids in the river St. Lawrence. The distance from thence to Montreal is less than the ascent from Oswego to Rome. It is true that the lake Ontario, is rather elevated at one hundred and ninety-six feet above the water, and the head of the present steep navigation, through which the current is sometimes strong. There is also a considerable descent from Montreal, in a distance of about thirty miles to tide water in the river St. Francis, between the foot of Long Sault and the head of the Coteau du Lac rapid, and upwards of ten in the lake of the Two Mountains, between the foot of the cascades at the outlet, and La Chine rapids.

Thus there will remain but sixty miles of canal, with an average fall of thirty-four inches per mile. The land descends proportionately to the water line, so that there can be but little deep cutting; the soil is any thing; there are no streams or rivers of any consequence to cross: and there is an inexhaustible supply of pure water, which never rises much in its height, for any canal what-

Under circumstances so propitious, it is probable that a good deal may be done for a little money. The whole would not, less than a dollar per ton, be entitled to a drawback on the duties collected at the custom house in New-York, on goods destined for the western country, with an increased value of at least fifty dollars per ton. These data, as to cost, it would be premature to state with precision, at present. The case is not a rich, unimproved country. The settlements are open; and what it is capable of in a state of high cultivation, we can see in the valley of the Mohawk. Every farm in that valley would be benefitted by the canal navigation, and the whole country with its numerous waters, a wider and deep ravine.

The stream next in importance, coming in from the south, is the Oriskany, which is especially valuable, because it enters the river not far from the summit level at Rome, and may, perhaps, become useful as a feeder. This forms the first, eastern, or river division, in which navigation, though defective, already exists. In this division, with proper management, there will be no deficiency of water for a canal, unless, perhaps, in very dry seasons, at the summit level.

The second, middle, or lake division, extends from the summit level westward to the outlet of the Canandarque lake. In it, the four lakes, the Seneca, Skeneateles, Owasco, and Canandarque, higher than any canal which may be extended from lake Erie to the Hudson, and furnishing abundant supply of water. Of the two last mentioned, the Seneca, encreased by a stream from Crooked lake, lies nearly on the same level with Rome, but the Cayuga much lower.

FROM THURSDAY'S GAZETTE.

Office of Ordnance, Sept. 23.

His Royal Highness the Prince Regent has been pleased, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, to appoint to be of the corps of Royal Artillery, commanded by Brevet Major Holcroft, being permitted to bear on their appointments (in addition to any other badges or devices which may have been heretofore granted to the Royal Regiment of Artillery) the word "Niagara," in consideration of the gallantry and good conduct shown by that company at the capture of Fort Niagara, on the 19th Dec. 1813, and during the whole of the recent campaign on the Niagara frontier.

October 4.

The Police of the Metropolis has taken an active vigilance, which it formerly required. The example of the same spirit into his brethren, we sincerely hope that when his career shall have closed, he will like Elija, cast his mantle upon the shoulders of his successor. His encouragement of the Gas Lights throughout his jurisdiction, his personal inspection of the streets, & his arduous exertions in cleaning them of the scandalous nuisances with which they were every where infested, have spread the foundation of good order, which it will henceforth be the bounden duty of the City Police to preserve.

By the evidence of Wm. Day, the principal Conductor of the Horse Patrole, up to the 10th June last, it is stated, that this plan has answered its purpose, inasmuch as we have had scarcely any highway or footpad robberies since the establishment, and in those which have happened, the parties have been apprehended, with very few exceptions; and these Patroles share in all the rewards for such apprehensions, which have seldom exceeded 10£ for any one man. There are several Horse patroles on each road in the vicinity of the metropolis. It is not their duty to search suspicious persons or carriages, but only to protect travellers, in carriages or on horse-back; as to their stopping suspicious persons, that is left to their own judgment. Their whole conduct is reduced to printed instructions, which they were strictly to obey, and which are calculated not more to secure their own duty as the safety of passengers in their lives and properties, and they are to make themselves known by the words "Bow-street Patrole;" and among their accoutrements are a pair of hand cuffs and key. Their horses belong to government, but they pay tolls at the turnpikes; they have no compensation for wounds, &c. in their arduous service. They are under the direction of one Manager, Mr. Day, and two Inspectors and receive 4s. per night, or 28s per week.

THE KING.—The following Bulletin of the state of His Majesty's health, was exhibited at St. James' on Sunday:

Windsor Castle, Nov. 2.

"His Majesty was rather less composed than usual during the former part of the last month, but His Majesty has since resumed his tranquility and is in good bodily health.

(Signed by four Physicians.)

Sir Rupert George, the Chairman of the Transport Board, retires on a pension, in consequence of that office being abolished, and the duties incorporated with the Navy and Victualling Boards. He has filled that situation for many years, and has also served as an officer on several foreign stations, and was made Post Captain in November, 1781.

Capt. Bowen is another of the Commissioners, will be attached to the Navy Board. Dr. Harness, the Medical Commissioner, retires on a pension, and will be succeeded by Dr. Wier (Inspector of Hospitals,) the duties of which situation are to be performed at the Victualling Board.

We are gratified to learn that at a Meeting of the principal Magistrates & the Trustees of the Pier and Port of St. Ives, held on thursday sen'night, it was determined on, forthwith to build a breakwater for the shelter of the Pier, and for the extension and general improvement of the Harbour. Of the extent and manufactures, the whole provocation of the present state of the Harbour, and of the necessity of the work, we are not informed; but, from all the Gentlemen employed, Mr. Stansell, Mayle, we have every reason to expect that the undertaking will not only prove highly beneficial to the Port and Town as a place of resort for invalids during the autumnal and, and seldom has any Engineer undertaken a work of greater importance, from its incalculable influences on the shipping interests; saving, to vantages to the shipping interests; saving, in much freight and carriage been paid in, under this order alone, to the Cape-de-Verd, was refused an entry at this port of St. Salvador.

The Flemish manufactures also of Capt. H. also states that the British Steam of Ostend, and the English merchants and English of the Packet Service, Commissioners of the Navy, under false colors and false pretences, together with the assistance of some agents in the island, obtained leave to enter the harbour, and land their goods. But no sooner had they landed themselves in sufficient numbers to attempt the execution of their design, than a desperate conflict ensued between them and the garrison, in which the former are stated to have prevailed. Having thus become masters of the Island, this ——— party effected their passage, hastily embarked the Imperial captive, with whom they set sail for the United States, and landed at length in Philadelphia. Marshal Grouchy, is mentioned as the Commander of this extraordinary expedition."

NAPLES, Oct. 18.

Mr. Pinkney has taken leave of our Sovereign, and has set out for St. Petersburgh. There every reason to believe that all the differences between this Court and the Porte are happily terminated. Our honour has received no stain, and it could receive none under a Prince who is fully conscious of the dignity of his crown and the rank which his dynasty holds in Europe.

Austria has shewn on this occasion that she was ready to support our just pretensions. It is to this, no effectual attempt has been made to prevent Austria's Internuncio now at Constantinople, who, we trust, will exercise all his influence to procure us the most favourable terms.

The Seraglio of the grand Seignior of Constantinople took fire and burnt down on the 26th Sept. All his wives 51 in number, narrowly escaped the flames.

FALMOUTH, Nov. 9.

The Allied Powers, &c.

There are accounts which say the journey of the Emperor of Russia into the interior, had for its object the suppression of the discontent which was manifesting itself in different parts of the empire; and the news of the Exile of several individuals seems to confirm the intelligence.

Considerable uneasiness exists yet respecting the final arrangements of territory. The Courts of Austria and Turin are negociating the disposal of fortresses; Switzerland is negociating with France respecting her frontiers; and the German Princes anxious for an adjustment, look forward to the proceedings at Frankfort next year, with hopes and fear. In the mean time the Duke of Wellington is completing the Allied Army, and putting it into winter quarters. The Paris papers contain the following paragraph;

"The States General of the Kingdom of Hanover have presented a Petition taken part, and by which it is hoped Prince Regent, praying His Royal Highness to adopt measures for giving perfect security to the Succession of the Throne of Hanover. In the case of the Prince Regent, dying without an Heir, the Princess Charlotte, but that of Hanover falls to the Duke of York. It is believed that this Prince will cede his Rights to the Duke of Cambridge, one of his younger brothers."

The German Papers are filled with declamations against English Commerce & the whole provocation of the present situation or tent of the intercourse between the Continent and the Germans. There is a long article from Leipsic, complaining of the decline of the Leipsic fair, in consequence of the prohibitive duties imposed by the European Continent;

"Seldom," says the writer, "has such a dull fair been attended by so many merchants. The intriegues of the Polish Jews contribute to depress the prices, and Russia and America are considered as the only countries like to carry on the great overplus of European Manufactures "produced by the excess of speculation and of machinery." English calicoes are so cheap, that they now supercede the use of linen, and the manufacturers of the last article find no sale for their goods. The article then laments, "that so many Germans should engage in trade, to the ruin of German industry, but which grows less and less profitable, on account of the continually fresh supplies of goods, each cheaper than the preceding.

Notwithstanding the consoling hope, that the exhaust bow, August month break, yet on the whole, the sale of our manufactures stagnates. The Saxon manufacturers leave the fair with the resolution of limiting their activity; the number of the distressed increases every moment beyond all belief; and in order wholly to destroy the defence of wholsome laws against this hostile invasion, we must find in all public prints the chimera of the freedom of commerce defended, and the order of nature, which places first agriculture then manufactures, and lastly, commerce, so reversed by the theories of the day, that the interest of commerce is put above all the rest, manufactures subordinate to this, and agriculture to both which last may be contented with the degree of liberty that the first chooses to allow it !"

DEATH OF THE KING OF WIRTEMBERG.

The Paris Journals, of Sunday last received this morning, announce the death of the King of WIRTEMBERG, at Stutgard, on this day se'nnight, the 30th of October, at two o'clock in the morning. There can be no doubt of the truth of the intelligence, as it has been officially received by the British Government. His MAJESTY was born on the 6th of November, 1754. Thus had he lived to this day he would have been 62 years of age. He married first a Princess of Wolfenbttle, by whom he had a son now 35 years of age, who succeeds him; and in 1788 he married the Princess Royal of England.

STOCKHOLM, Oct. 15

The foreign debt of the Kingdom having been partly paid, and partly in liquidation, by the sums received from Pomerania and Guadaloupe, all attention is now directed towards restoring the internal finances and the value of money, because in the last 11 years, the value of a pound sterling, for example, has risen from four rix dollars twenty-eight shillings to eleven rix dollars forty shillings. Provincial Committees, composed of the most enlightened and best informed men of all classes, are now employed in order to present within a month their proposals for the prevention of luxury. After public opinion has been thus consulted, laws and prohibitions are expected immediately to follow, in which the whole nation has thus

From Hayti.—A respectable mercantile friend has put into our hands a French copy of the correspondence between Petion and the commissioners of Louis 18th. to negociate with him concerning the reconstruction of Hayti. The following proclamation may be considered as exhibiting the spirit in which that negociation was treated by Petion, and his resolute rejection of any attempt to encroach upon the liberty and independence of the people of whom he is the chief.

Translated for the Baltimore Patriot.

EQUALITY. LIBERTY.

PROCLAMATION.

Alexander Petion, President of Hayti.

TO THE PEOPLE AND THE ARMY.

The French flag has appeared on our coast, and the King of France has sent commissioners to Hayti.

Under what circumstances did they present themselves! At the moment when we were about concerning the edifice of our laws! Look the moment when I was raised by your suffrages to the head of the legislature of a nation the most jealous of its rights, have they proposed to compromise them! For what advantages! Are there any particular to those we enjoy! Them does not exist a Haytian whose soul is sufficiently lukewarm to consent to retrace his steps at the path our glory has urged us on; our duties are pointed out to us by the sacred oath we have created us equal to other men: We will maintain we will sustain them against all who dare contrive the criminal desire of subjugating us. They will only find in us shores either entered with blood, the sword, and an avenging climate.

On this occasion as on that which preceded it, you have shewn the same circumspection and the same energy. You have calculated your strength, and in leaving your masses the task of explaining your dearest interests, you have patiently awaited until they expressed to you their wishes. Thanks for you; your confidence shall never be betrayed.

The authority rests on your will, and it is your will to be free and independant: you shall be so, and we will perish with you, rather than survive, or burying ourselves under the ruins of our country, sooner than return to servitude, even in its most modified frogs.

Whilst Europe entire unites at the call of philanthropy, to annihilate even the trace of that dishonorable traffic; whilst the most polished nations meditate and plan a general emancipation of those who still groan under oppression! we observe with grief, governments, who style themselves the most religious, nourishing principles which jusctice and humanity condemn.

Heydians, your protection is your arms; reserve them for those that may disturb you, and let your labour enrich a soil whose fruits you only should collect.

I have had printed my correspondence with the commissioners of the King; it will be placed under your eyes—I have done my duty, and my duty is yours.

Signed at the National Palace of Port-au-Prince 12th Nov. 1816. the 13th year of the independance of Hayti &c. &c.

Escape of Bonaparte.

Among the ridiculous stories in circulation, on the subject of private letters from Paris, for two days, we have not seen one in point of absurdity. The one dated Nov. 1, says "A report is in circulation to day, that Bonaparte had nearly effected his escape from the Island of St. Helena. A vessel had been concerted with an American ship, on board of which it is said, he had actually got when an English frigate reached him, and the American vessel, instead of being allowed to steer to the Governor of the island. It is further said, that the whole crew were put in irons, and confined in the most rigorous manner possible."

The author of the same date is more attentive, as the circumstances are given with extraordinary minuteness. It observes—"Some French refugees in the United States, among whom, it is said, is Joseph, the brother of Bonaparte, lately fitted out a vessel ostensibly for a commercial purpose, but in reality well armed & manned for the noble purpose of delivering the captive at St. Helena. The preparations for this expedition having escaped the vigilance of the French and English Consuls at New York, the vessel sailed from the port after a propitious passage came in sight of the English vessel stationed off the Island—the latter, boarded by surprise, surrendered after a gallant resistance. The unexpected arrival of the Emperor, together with the assistance of some Americans on board, struck the British officers and crew with a panic, which the ardent hope of liberty soon converted into confidence. The Emperor, it is said, is now safely landed in Philadelphia. Marshal Grouchy, is mentioned as the Commander of this extraordinary expedition."

Mr. Dana offered a few remarks on the necessity of instituting the enquiry as proposed.—One of the first and most interesting processions that ever took place in this country, he said, occurred in New-York, on the death of an American citizen, killed by a British officer, on the territory of the United States; he alluded to the case of Pierce, who was shot within a mile, even in sight of the shore; yet, on that occasion, the question whether the offender was accountable within the jurisdiction of the United States, and was tried before a British Naval Court.—From that time no effectual attempt has been made to put a stop to the illegal measures of protection, or to prevent the recurrence of such outrages—he meant to legislate by effectual attempt, where alone it was proper. He did not allude to negociations, as he thought it unnecessary; nor did he conceive it the business of the Executive, under our constitution, to meddle with the subject—our executive could not, like the King of England, make war or negociate regarding jurisdiction.

Mr. Dana said, in England they did not enter their jurisdiction to one league from the shore; nor did they hoist it by their ambassadors; they exercised it only by cannon shot; and more than a century ago the English had taken the proper steps to protect their honor from insult.

The resolution was referred to next con.

Mr. Sanford submitted the following motion for consideration;

Resolved, That the Committee of Commerce and Manufactures be instructed to enquire into the expediency of establishing by law, uniform rates of damages and interest in cases of protested bills of exchange.

The Senate adjourned to Thursday.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 21.

Postscript.—The Highflyer, from Gonaives, brings a report that a detachment of the Patriot forces in Mexico, with Dr. Robertson has been cut to pieces. We have not learned the particulars, but hope the report is without foundation.

PLATTSBURGH, Dec. 21.

Gen. Bernard arrived in town on Sunday evening last.

Gen. Bernard has recently arrived in the U. States from France, and received an appointment in our Corps of Engineers. A board of Engineers of which he is President, has been instituted by our government, for the purpose of making the requisite arrangements for the erection of fortifications, &c. Col. Totten is one of the members of this board. Commodore Macdonough is associated with them on the part of the Navy. General Bernard and Col. Totten will proceed to N. Orleans in a few weeks, in pursuance of this commission, where naval operations can co-operate with the contemplated fortifications, an officer of the Navy is to be associated with the board.

MONTREAL, January 4.

We learn from St. Johns, that about twenty American Sleighs loaded with provisions, have been stopped at the Custom-House—The Proclamation of the Governor for admitting provisions having ceased, they are in consequence forfeited.

FROM BATAVIA.

We learn from Capt. Harris, of the ship Asia, who arrived this forenoon, 94 days from Batavia, that the island of Java, by the treaty of 1815 August; at which time the Dutch flag was hoisted at all the different stations, except at Fort Marlborough, about four miles from Batavia, where the English still retained a small military force for the protection of their Treasury and the Resident's Office, which are expected to remain there four months, for the purpose of settling accounts. Almost all the British officers, European and native, had embarked for England. A number of Dutch, American, and other vessels, without ships were lying in the roads. They had imported vast supplies of European and American produce, which was selling, in most instances, below prime cost.—N. Y. Eve. Post.

CONGRESS.

PETITIONS

THURSDAY, Dec. 19.

By Mr. Clark, of N. Y. a Petition of JOHN DALL, stating, that he was a native citizen of the U. States, that he was with Gen'l Burton, he resided and possessed considerable property in the town of New-Ross, in the British provinces of Upper Canada, and that, upon the capture of Fort George, he joined the cause of American arms, which occasioned the British government to confiscate such of his property as was not destroyed by the burning of the said town of Newark, which was done by order of Lieut. Gen. McClure, commanding the American forces; and praying such indemnifications as the justice and hardships of his case demand.

By Mr. Brooks, a Petition of SAMUEL TUDOR, late of the British Provinces of Canada, praying compensation for loss of property he lost on account of his said property having been seized by the British officers, on the charge of his attaching himself to the American forces during his stay in the said Provinces, and also with Great Britain.

IN SENATE—December 21, 1816.

The Senate resumed the consideration of Mr. Dana's motion; to instruct the Committee on foreign relations to consider the propriety of reporting provision, by law, for declaring the citizens of the several states of the United States, and such other sanctions particularly as may be necessary for the safeguard of friendly persons, which may be within the same.

The Senate adjourned to Monday next.

Montreal, Jan. 4, 1817.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE.

YORK:

THURSDAY, JANUARY 23, 1817.

WE have inserted a part of the Report of the American Commissioners on the subject of their Grand North-west Canal; although so very important to this country, we believe that it has not been published here before. In discussing the merits of the plan, the Commissioners shew in the stronge point of view, the superior advantages which we possess, and the comparative facility with which we might benefit ourselves of them.—One parts of the Report perhaps may be considered as unnecessary to us, but it was judged better to publish the whole, than to mutilate it by giving only extracts. The late war put a stop to their proceedings for some time, but they have now resumed them seriously, and appear determined to begin the work immediately.

On Saturday last, the Anniversary of Her Majesty's Birth Day, the Principal Officers of Government, the Offi ers of the Garrison and of His Majesty's Ships in the Harbour, the Magistrates, and the Gentlemen in the vicinity, partook of an elegant entertainment, given by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, in honor of the happy occasion. The Government House was fitted out on to a splendid repast, which detained them, till a late hour.

The Ice having made in the Bay, has added greatly to the gaiety of the place, by affording necessary access to His Majesty's Vessels of War, and even our Society, an agreeable addition in Captain Owen and his Officers, who have not been tardy, in evincing their desire to contribute to the amusement of the Season.

On Monday evening the Deck of His Majesty's Ship presented a novel, and interesting appearance; the gallant Captain with the characteristic hospitality of a British Seaman, anxious in the service of the Fair, as of his Country, had converted it into an elegant Ball room, by extending awns from the forecast, to the after-part, which, spread, but the inclemency of the weather, was completely excluded, and by means of a judicious arrangement of Stoves, no perceptible temperature was sustained during the whole of the evening; the Ball being lined with Colours of various nations, and a lively appearance suited to the; hereof the entertainment. The company assembled among others, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor and Mrs. Gore honored the company with their presence. The Party consisted of Colonel and Mrs. Weir, the younger part of the family of Mr. Justice Powell, and many of the Officers of the Garrison.

The Starboard side of the Deck was appropriated for dancing—at 6 O'Clock the Supper Table was spread, at which the Fair were followed by twenty couple, who kept up the dance with great spirit, till one O'Clock, when they were summoned to the Supper Table, where the Gentlemen of the Squadron were rewarded with a profusion of every delicacy, displaying at once the liberal hospitality of the gallant entertainer. After supper the dancing was renewed, and not till the Morning separated, highly gratified with the evening's Amusement.

ORIGINAL POETRY.

TO-DAY'S ADVICE TO TO-MORROW.

My son—My friend—Thou art to-morrow To-day;
With the act of a parent's affection I pray
Thou'lt receive my advice, young To-morrow,
Nor slight it because 'tis from To-day.

I have to grow old, I must soon pass away,
And give up this world of confusion and care;
But ere passes the clock which my knell sounds,
I gladly
Would warn you, lest giddy, thoughtless, and wayward,
You act as I did at your age, that is, madly,
And practise much more ill as you'll ever practise well.

Your guardian Angel though so long has been
Your friend, will
You seldom hear, heed your old Yesterday,
When the darkness of age o'er his last hour was spread,
Lamented his errors and brought him to shame.
Too late he address'd me, as I now do you,
To point out the dangers he wished me to shun;
But it will not be needlessly hard me advise,
And deal in stale lecture was only begun.

Gay and heedless, proceeding to all his ends,
Man hop'd I might listen them to comfort & joy;
It grieves me to think what, alas! is their fate—
How little I've would'd, how much help'd to annoy.

While my Lesson yet lasts, I'll frequently said,
To those who were active—Oh now cease your toils;
When I come those cares will be never sped,
And your business accomplish'd with laughter and smiles."

And such were to work, as to Jenny believed,
They thought it good counsel to put off their cares;
For this I assure they with reason are grieving,
And will find that they've such advice unawares.
Yes you Two, that's for them, just in the same way
It's a lunction so bad an example you borrow
Men, useful exercise will spare for to-day
And put off their every reform till to-morrow.

But O let me hope that while I am alive,
You'll abstain from such courses, and leave
men to heed me,
No mad expectations wake, ere you arrive,
If ever you think with ease to succeed me,
Let them not fit on you prematurely their eyes,
And ignore life on hopes which must end in decay,
Lest they think, having leisure enough to grow wise,
'Twere folly to cease to be foolish To-day.

"Be prudent—Not too much at first undertake,
Believe, Tom, a father, whose love is sincere,
You will cause less vexation, less rage, less heartaching,
Than most of your ancestors through the long year.

Thus when the high rank of To-day you attain,
Remember my past professions you meanly forget,
And added by Time to the Fatherly's slain,
All shall name you with gratitude, with tender regret."

PARAPONTIC CHAIR.

The third experiment with the Parapontic apparatus of M. Schmidt, has succeeded still better than the two former. "The present took place opposite the Fire Pump, in presence of a numerous assemblage. The small packet which served to direct the machine in its course through the water, here been replaced by a species of oars, which can give to a shipwrecked person the means of quickly attaining his object, or of struggling successfully against the most rapid current. The person seated in the Parapontic Chair directed himself and turned any way with the greatest facility. There is no doubt but this machine (of simple and cheap construction), will afford assistance to Shipwrecked Mariners, especially as it unfortunately too often takes place near the coasts where often the crews of vessels are wrecked or cast away on banks or reefs at no great distance from the land.

London Paper.

Projected Voyage to the North Pole.

We perceive by several of the English Journals, that the British Government has it in contemplation to send a company of scientific men to endeavour to explore the North Pole, and the adjacent regions. The principal projector of the scheme, is a Mr. Scoresby of Whitby. "This gentleman, from frequent visits which he has made to the high northern solitude, in the while fishery, appears to be convinced of the possibility of reaching the North Pole by an excursion over the ice. He says that it is very common for the whalers to penetrate as high as 81 1-2 degrees, or within 600 miles of the Pole, which space he is of opinion might be travelled in sleighs, by reindeer or dogs, in a fortnight; and that for the return, for casualties, and time for observations, the whole might be accomplished in six weeks. From his knowledge of the climate, he thinks the temperature of the weather will present no very great obstacle, having observed that after a long continuance of north wind, the thermometer never was very considerably depressed. The difficulties which he contemplates, are open water, rough or mountainous ice, or similar land, soft snow and dense mists.

As he supposes that the first will not be very extensive, he proposes to have his trainseur formed in the shape of a canoe so that they might pass over any thing of the kind, while the dogs might be made to swim; and for other obstacles, the travellers must in great measure trust to chance, supplying themselves with whatever may be necessary to overcome them, should they occur.

RUSSIAN STATISTICS.

In the latest memoirs of the Academy of Petersburgh, there appears an analysis of a statistical work, in which are the following statements; the revenues of the Russian state amounted in 1811 to 215,000,000 rubles and the expences to 274,000,000. The land forces in 1810 were 621,155 men; the marine in 1813 was 289 sail, with 4516 pieces of cannon. The dominant Greek Church includes 4 metropolitan churches, 11 archbishopricks, 26,747 churches, and a great number of convents. Tolerance being general, there were in 1811, 3,500,000 Catholicks, 1,400,000 Lutherans, 3,300 Reformed, 7,000 Hernhutters, 60,000 Armenians, 3,000,000 Mahometans, 300,000 followers of the Dala Lama; and 60,000 adorers of fetishes.

There are in Petersburgh 14 printing offices, 13 foreign Book-shops, and 3 Russian. In 1815 the manufactories of the Russian empire amounted to 3,263.

STEAM WAGGONS.

A late Berlin paper contains the following article:—Lieut. Col. Fisher, the ingenious founder and proprietor of wrought steel at Schaffhausen, improved the first moment of the restored communication with England, to make a journey thither, the main object of which was to observe with his own eyes the improvements made during the last twenty years in the manufacture of iron and steel. At Leeds, he notices the waggons driven by steam, which conveyed coal along an iron rail-way three miles in length, to the town.—"I went to meet this train, says he, 'two miles off, and when I came up with it, the man who guided the whole, desired me to mount the waggon of the machine, which was provided with seats—and the usual rate of its motion being such, that a man walking rather fast can scarcely keep up with it; in order to satisfy my curiosity, he increased its rapidity to that of a trotting horse; by stronger application of steam to put in motion the stampers, which move 4 at the rate of eighty strokes in a minute. I was very glad when he made it move more slowly, as I was afraid of explosion because the steam hissed as if our vehicle was drawn along by half a dozen broken winded horses. For the rest, I rejoiced to enter Leeds seated in this triumphant car of human ingenuity (for so I would call it,) where the elements confined in a small compass themselves impel 23 waggons laden with 60 cwt. of coal each."

UPPER CANADA.
PROCLAMATION.

BY HIS EXCELLENCY

FRANCIS GORE Esq. LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

Of our said Province, &c. &c. &c.

WHEREAS by An Act of the Parliament of this Province, made and passed in the Forty-second Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled "An Act to enable the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Person administering the Government of this Province, to appoint one or more additional Post or Ports, Place or Places, of Entry within this Province. And to appoint one or more Collector, or Collectors of the same," is lately expired.—AND WHEREAS the said Act has since been revived by An Act passed in the Fifty-sixth Year of His Majesty's Reign,—AND WHEREAS as well with reference to the interest of His Majesty's Government of this Province, as to the convenience of Inspectors of Goods and Merchandize, and of Merchants, and other His Majesty's Subjects resident within this Province, it hath been ascertained that there is immediate occasion for appointing One other additional Port or Place of Entry and Clearance, at the Place hereinafter specified. Be it therefore known that, I, FRANCIS GORE, Esquire, Lieutenant-Governor as aforesaid, in pursuance of the powers and authorities vested in me by the said recited Act, and by and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Province, Do hereby declare and appoint, that the Township of Ernestown, in the District of Johnstown, and County of Lennox and Addington, established by, and under the authority of a certain Act of the Parliament of this Province, passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act for Dividing the Province of Upper Canada into Districts, for the more convenient Administration of Justice within the same," shall from the first Day of January next, be, and the same is by these presents Established and Proclaimed to be a Port and Place of Entry for Goods and Merchandize imported from the United States of America, into the Province aforesaid, and that the Collector of Customs, for the time being, at the Township of Kingston, in the said District of Johnstown, shall be, and is hereby appointed Collector of His Majesty's Revenue, at the said Township of Ernestown, and shall reside there accordingly.

GIVEN Under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this Twentieth day of December, in the year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixteen and in the Fifty Seventh year of His Majesty's Reign.

FRANCIS GORE,
Lieutenant Governor.

By Command of His Excellency,
WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

THURSDAY, Dec. 12.

By Mr. Clark, of N. Y. a Petition of JOSEPH DALY, stating, that at the commencement of the late war with Great Britain, he was the owner of a considerable property in the town of New-York, in the Province of Upper Canada, and that, upon the capture of Fort George, he joined the American forces, which occasioned the British government to confiscate such of his property as was not destroyed by the burning of the said town of Newark, which was done by order of General McClure, commanding the American forces, and praying such indemnifications as the justice and hardships of his case demand.

Referred to the Committee on Monday, Dec. 16.

By Mr. Brooks, a Petition of SAMUEL THOMPSON, late of the British Province of Canada, praying compensation for loss of property he held in the said province, which was occasioned by his attaching himself to the American forces during the late war with Great Britain.

In this division, the turnpike road crosses high hills, but they all run to the north of it, having a large deep valley, upwards of eighty miles long, from east to west, and about twenty wide from north west to south east. If, indeed, the Canawaga lake, embosomed in a ravine which opens to the north on the valley, be considered as part of it, the breadth will be fifty miles. In this valley lie the Onondago, Cross, and Oneida lakes. It is bounded on the north, by a dividing ridge of land, which stretches from near the Onondago bay, eastwardly, to the neighbourhood of Rome, where it joins the dividing ridge north of the Mohawk, between the waters of the St. Lawrence, and those of the Hudson.

The third, western, or dry division, extends from the western boundary of the lake division to lake Erie. In this, although the land north of it, having a large deep valley, upwards of eighty miles long, from east to west, and about twenty wide from north west to south east. If, indeed, the Canawaga lake, embosomed in a ravine which opens to the north on the valley, be considered as part of it, the breadth will be fifty miles. In this valley lie the Onondago, Cross, and Oneida lakes. It is bounded on the north, by a dividing ridge of land, which stretches from near the Onondago bay, eastwardly, to the neighbourhood of Rome, where it joins the dividing ridge north of the Mohawk, between the waters of the St. Lawrence, and those of the Hudson.

The third, western, or dry division, extends from the western boundary of the lake division to lake Erie. In this, although the land north of it rises through it, a want of water is already felt, and will daily become more sensible, as the country is cleared. The Genesee river itself, is a torrent in spring, which however, exposes, or even creates no difficulty in the passing the Flats of the Genesee, may, without violence to the property of lawyers, be called a plain: and here it may be proper to notice a peculiarity in the shape of the northern, and principal of the western part of the state, which distinguishes it widely from the country lying south, east of the mountains.

The descent from the dividing ridge, northward, is not higher than the swamp, is separated from it nearly by ground, whose elevation is not more than four hundred feet above the ocean. These, and the streams by which they are watered, have a similar, and as it were, long valley, it will be easy (by turning its waters from the Onondago and Oneida lakes, into the Oswego river) to convert the Tanawanda creek, into a canal. The rivers are barred by Oak-creek brook, which, after it has received the waters of the Tonnewanta river, and several smaller streams, falls into the Genesee, at the distance of about thirty miles east of Niagara river. The Tonnewanta height, and at once destroy the navigation of the lower falls of this brook, as well as those of the Genesee, are over the northern steep.

Moreover, it is found, that canals depending on rivers, frequently, like the rivers themselves, want water in the summer season, when it is most necessary. The Seneca, the Owasco, the Ner-lindered, to suppose the quantity of water in a stantaties and Otsico lakes, lie south of the middle level, when turned into a canal, will remain the same, would lead to serious disappointment. Oswego and Cross lakes. Should more be allowed for evaporation, and, notwithstanding the utmost care, more will filter The Tanewanta falls over the southern steep through the sides and bottom of a canal, than twenty-five feet, and passing the village of the Onondagas, runs in a level valley of brown clay upwards of twenty miles to its mouth in Niagara river.

In the construction of canals when recourse is had to the same mouth opposite to Grand Island) also, and (as most generally be the case) to rivers for a supply of water, it is found necessary to guard Buttermilk falls, and runs to the Genesee. Over with scrupulous care, and not unfrequently, at the middle steep, in the same division, falls the enormous expense, against those floods which, Black-creek brook, which enters lake Ontario, scouring a torrent into a canal, and tearing down the mound which might at once destroy the navigation and inundate the country.

Moreover, it is found, that canals depending on rivers, frequently, like the rivers themselves, want water in the summer season when it is most necessary. The Seneca, the Owasco, the Ner-lindered, to suppose the quantity of water in a stantaties and Otsico lakes, lie south of the middle level, when turned into a canal, will remain the same, would lead to serious disappointment. Oswego and Cross lakes. Should more be allowed for evaporation, and, notwithstanding the utmost care, more will filter through the sides and bottom of a canal, than twenty-five feet, and passing the village of the Onondagas, runs in a level valley of brown clay upwards of twenty miles to its mouth in Niagara river.

From the Tanewanta village, north eastward, the Oak-creek brook receives the waters of the Tonnewanta river, which, though not so eminent, becomes eventually of serious moment. When the country shall be relieved of forests, swamps will disappear, and the waters will bring down, mixed with the waters, a proportion of mud, and soil, in the stillness of a level canal, will subside and choak it up. It is time to be noted, by those who shall consult in this matter, that the true char-

* The word plains might lead into error. It is therefore proper to state that hills are scattered about which carry the surface to the eye. But on examining it will be found that, generally speaking, the plains are all on the same extended plain.

river cannot now be known. Large tracts, [illegible] according to each of the preceding circumstances, lie to the west of the Genesee; which appear as a swamp, and through which causeways of logs are laid for roads, [illegible] ury winds, when no longer needed, (as at present,) by forests impervious to the sun.

In the progress of industry, swamps (the present reservoirs of pure cool springs that burst out on a lower surface) will be drained, whereby many of those springs will be lost. Of such as remain, a part will be used to irrigate meadows.

Moreover, in every place tolerably convenient, goods will be collected for mills and other machinery, from whose surface, as well as from that of the soil, the sun will exhale an ample tribute of vapor.

Thus the summer supply of rivers will be in part derived, and in part consumed, whereby their general autumnal penury must be still further enhanced. But as the capacity, the careful husbandman and miller will open every ditch and sluice to get rid of that water, which, though at other times a kind friend and faithful servant, is then a dangerous enemy and imperious master. Of course, much of what is now withheld for [illegible] may days, will then be suddenly poured out. The torrent must, therefore, rage with greater fury hereafter than they do in the present day.

Considerations like these, while they cast a shade over many contemplated enterprises, give, by contrast, a glowing hue to that which is before now to consider. The canal from lake Erie to the Hudson may be led by pure water from lakes, provided mounds and aqueducts be made over intervening valleys, or the canal be carried round them. In every case the attending circumstances must be closely [illegible]

In general, also, it is only after a more accurate examination of the ground by a skilful engineer, well practised in such business, that the most eligible route can be adopted for the species of navigation which may be ultimately determined on; viz. whether for vessels which navigate Hudson's river and lake Erie, or for barges of from twenty to [illegible] tons.

If the passage were only of a few miles, the property of bringing vessels of eight feet draught of water across (if practicable) would be readily admitted. But it may well be questioned, whether, to save the expense of loading and unloading so at each end of a canal three hundred miles long, the expense of cutting two yards deeper than would otherwise be necessary, ought to be encountered.

It has generally been assumed, and perhaps too lightly admitted, that canals should be made on a perfect level. This notion must not be quoted, if the transportation each way, were of equal burden, if the distance or the frequency of good locking stems was such as easily and constantly to supply, without waste of water, the incessant waste of water by absorption, leakage and evaporation, and if the waters to be conducted by the canal were the same level. But in nine cases like the present, rational doubts may be entertained. The difference of level being up to hundred feet, all the descent which can be obtained by an inclined plane, so as to be at all human probability, the transportation, for example, of coals, will be of so much greater value from the inferior country, back from the sea, that a current from the lake is more to be desired than avoided, more especially as it will impose degree counteract the effect of frost. That unfathomable stream of limpid water which flows out of lake Erie, with little variation of height throughout the canal, is a strong temptation to use it exclusively, until auxiliary supplies can be drawn from other reservoirs equally pure. Nothing is of improper in this case to remark, that it is impossible there should ever be a considerable variation in the surface of the Niagara river, at the mouth of the Tonawanta. No reasonable fall of rain or melting of snow, even if both were to take place at the same time, in the country which surrounds the great lakes, could produce a rise in any considerable degree their extended surface. Indeed, we know from experience, that a greater difference of elevation at the mouth of lake Erie is occasioned by a change of wind than by any variation of the season. Admitting, however, that considerable rise of water, no matter from what cause, at the sources of the Niagara river, it cannot suddenly, from the narrowness and shoalness of the channel, produce a correspondent rise at the foot of the Black Rock rapids; and the elevation there must, in the nature of things, exceed that which is occasioned by it 15 miles lower down, in a more especially as the river, including the two channels round Grand Island, has for the greatest part of the way nearly twice times the breadth which it has above. If however, it were only to the depth of the water proposed forward by the wind, would be raised up to a considerable height, because during the present current by the Senate, that canals, instead of that, the river here, with a breadth little more than double to what it has at Black Rock, perceptibly narrows itself over the first ledge in its boarding course to the entrance: so that an increase of height is instantly contracted by the increased rapidity with which it rolls over the Rock.

In all events, it would be advisable to use this water exclusively for a great part of the way, even if the country afforded other resources; and [illegible] this effect, there must be some descent to the canal. What the precise amount of that should be, however, is the commission are presume not to say. They do not pretend to suffi- cient knowledge on the subject, and with all proper deference, refer it to a practical engineer.

Several other, like objects may be presumed of consideration, they perceive not only that the quantity of water which runs in a given time, must be proportionate to the rapidity with which, and the aqueduct through which it passes, but also that the rapidity itself will depend on several causes [illegible] undescend- ing, but also on the mass; because, in a [illegible] equal impediment, the [illegible] part of the [illegible] in the [illegible] in one that is narrow and shoal. It will be [illegible] passed around another circumstance, whose effect [illegible] single cause remaining the same, will vary [illegible]

Capt. Roxby, of the British schooner George, arrived here on Saturday from Martinique, informs, that British vessels hitherto permitted to take away cargoes of sugars from French West-India ports (a privilege denied to all other nations) would be prohibited from doing so after the first day of Dec. Capt. R. obtained permission from the Governor of Martinique, to bring a cargo of sugar in consequence of his entering previous to the 1st Dec. but was informed that his was the last British vessel which would have that privilege. The port of St. Pierres, where Capt. R. was, was very full of French shipping, none of which had any prospect of employment. Capt. R. also states, that the mortality at Martinique had increased and prevailed principally among the natives. The disease is of a more malignant kind than even the yellow fever; and those who are attacked with it never survive.—Information immediately expected and progresses so rapidly, as to defy the power of medicine. Strangers were generally healthy and none of them ever known to take this deadly complaint. The weather was uncommonly sultry and wet.—Nav. paper.

A letter from Kingston, Jamaica, of November 27, states that one or two vessels from the United States, had narrowly escaped seizure, in consequence of having on board apples and onions. Perkins' New Invented Ship Prompts.

In a maritime Town, like Halifax, whatever has a tendency to promote the ease and safety of Navigation, becomes an object of peculiar interest.—W. Cron.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 22.

A trial was made on the 14th inst. at Williamsburgh, on board of Jacob Perkin's newly invented Ship Pumps, and we are legally gratified in announcing to the public that the effect exceeded our expectations, and that the invention is likely to prove in a high degree serviceable to the commerce of our country.

These pumps have been very ingeniously and simply contrived, so as to be worked by a power of a greater or less power, and without the severe labor of man labor which is required by the pumps now in common use. They raise a much greater column of water than can be produced by any others, or even under the effect of any pump of the present ship pumps.

Their construction has been reduced to a great degree of simplicity. The shaft consists of a wooden trunk made of boards or plank, and the valves are formed of a stem of iron or brass or of wood, sliding perpendicularly in the pump through its whole length, from the bottom of which stem the two triangular valves are affixed by leather hinges, which move up and down, fitting the corners of the shaft or pump, and occupy the whole area of the shaft.

The pumps are worked by a rope fastened to a ring in the stem of the valve, and drawn over a sheave or block at the top, or ears of the pump, and the operation is performed on the deck of the vessel by the seamen drawing the rope as they [illegible] In order to produce the greatest effect [illegible] their labor, both pumps are worked at once, [illegible] and by the light of the rope being carried through a valley at a distance from the pumps, one of the seamen descends as the other rises, thus working alternately so as to keep a column of water while in motion in one continual pump for an uninterrupted distance of 20 or 30 feet, or according to the length of the pump.

The advantages of this improvement in raising water beyond the common mode, are abundantly obvious on the bare view of the invention. In the construction of the pumps, the simplicity is so great, that they may be made at sea at any time, by a carpenter with his common tools, of such materials or planks as may be taken out for that purpose, and under any quantity they may be lifted to the height required. By the great length of the stroke of these pumps, a less number of strokes will be necessary in a considerable time together, and on that account less labor is required than where repeated actions has to be made upon a body of water in a state of motion, as in the common pumps, where a degree of less loss of water at the opening and shutting of the valves, which takes place on it less frequent, and also from there being less play in their movements,—where also, the simple construction of the triangular valves accommodates them to any swell of the pump, and allows a passage through them of large substances which so frequently choak the valves of the present ship pumps.

The manner in which human labor is employed in the operation contributes a most valuable part of the invention.

In the labors of the common pump, it is well known the strength of the seamen is first painfully exerted by the muscles of the body being exerted in repeated and violent action of the body upon the limbs; and the severity of this exercise at times of difficulty, may be best appreciated by those who have been witnesses of it. Both in the mode adopted for this useful invention all unnatural and excessive exertion is avoided, and the effect is produced by as a mere play of the seamen walking along the deck of the vessel in alternate changes, backward and forward, the labor being finely given by leaning the body on the pump-staff, and the fatiguing sensations advantageously therefore is such, that by this means the waste of pump whipped fatigue half a day at a time, and produce from that labor a constant current of a column of water of 24 inches diameter, discharging at the rate of 320 gallons per minute, or 20 tons per hour; while by the method now in use, they are constantly relieved by their severe labor in a spell of 5 to 10 minutes, and bringing up a column of only one-third the quantity, say about 30 tons per hour.

We have been the more minute in describing the invention, of so much importance to our mercantile interest, as it is yet novel, and requires only a slight attention, to render its advantages universally understood.

Government has already adopted it in the public ships, with a full confirmation by the Navy Board to whom its utility was attested after repeated trials. And we feel much pleasure in recommending this truly useful invention to the attention of the legislature and citizens, to whose interest such it offers so much advantage.

HALIFAX, Dec. 13.

The schooner Industry, arrived here on Thursday, from St. Johns, Newfoundland, with 150 passengers, principally labourers. By this arrival, we have received papers to the 27th ult. They state the distresses of the labouring classes to be very great; provisions scarce and high, and recommend to the Merchants and inhabitants of the town, to aid and assist in the laudable undertaking of relieving their fellow creatures from the inevitable starvation, by providing them with prompt means of returning to the mother country.

Private letters to the 29th ult. have been received by a Mercantile House in this town, from St. Johns, Newfoundland; from which we learn that it had been ascertained that the quantity of Flour in market did not exceed 1000 bbls.

The daily accession of inhabitants to the town, of the labouring class, has now become (more particularly on account of the present season) a matter of serious importance; and one which would in some measure engage the attention of every reflecting mind and benevolent head. The Governor had already engaged four vessels to take 800 of those unfortunate men to their native country.

Easy and effectual method of rendering all Kinds of Paper Fire Proof.

THIS surprising effect is produced by a simple cause. It is only necessary that the paper, whether plain, coloured, written, printed, or stained, should be immersed in a strong solution of alum water, and afterwards thoroughly dried, when it will immediately become fire proof. This experiment may easily be made by holding a piece of paper thus prepared over the flame of a candle. Some paper, however, will require to be [illegible] more of the solution than it can [illegible] to by a single immersing in which case the dipping and drying must be repeated till the paper becomes fully saturated. It is asserted, that neither the colour nor quality of the paper will receive the least injury from this operation, but that, on the contrary, they will be improved.

From the Connecticut Courant.

It is interesting to every family, to understand the methods of salting Beef and Ham. There are two points to be considered, with respect to meat. The longer it is kept, without salt, the tenderer it becomes. If it receive the salt in this state, it will be found corresponding- ly tender; and the smaller the quantity of salt there is used, in its preservation, the looser, sweeter and more palatable will be the meat.

Beef—Let it lie in a cool place, without freezing, about a week: Use 8 ounces pulverized saltpetre, and 6 quarts of fine salt to a barrel:—Put water to these, in a convenient vessel; roll the pieces of beef, separately, in this; pack them in the cask tightly; and in two or three days fill it up with water. When the winter breaks up, take it out to dissolve the pickle, and pack it down with as much salt of some finer kind as you please; using the same pickle, cold and reduced with water. I have known this method practised upon for 40 years successively, with little deviation. You need not be alarmed, if it becomes a little slippery in the spring, provided it is not tainted. The plate pieces of a fat beef are about as good as the tongue, and keep as well as pork.

Ham.—For the same reason, hams improve by hanging a week or eight days, if the season admit of it without freezing. For an average, for one ham, use 1 ounce salt petre, or, if larger, 2 ounces; pulverize it with fine salt, and water, rub the hams, and lay them into a barrel.—Prepare immediately a weak pickle, to the taste as salt as the ham is wanted, and after two days cover the ham with it. In two weeks, broil a slice; if necessary, add a little fine salt which is better than freshening it, if too salt. In three or four weeks smoke it. Six or eight pieces may be smoked in a week, in a common oven.—Lay them on sticks of wood; place some walnut or maple chips within the fire; raise this a little, and put some coals on them. The smoke thus produced is much better than the common smoke of the chimney.—My hams for many years have been much admired.

PLAYING CARDS.

Cards are mentioned as the diversion of the Grecian Court in 1501, before ours had an idea of them. They were then quartes, but called tallages in French, Cartes, which name they still bear as that language and from which our word cards is derived. Charles the 6th was the first we read of in Europe that was much amused in arranging and disposing the [illegible] ordinarily desired to represent the four orders or degrees of men, Hommes de Court, Hommes de guerr men, their men, or liegry poor as called Hearts. The French Clair having been corrupted to Cœurs: Carreaux, or Piques or spades for the soldiery; and Trefle, or trevil; Club for the agriculator.—These are seen still in some French Cards on the continent, and as to the suit of Diamonds they have in Italy now, when playing, are the representation of a groat upon them [illegible] King of Hearts had a Chorus-girl, now called Black A. B. 1789, at Seville and Barcelona; but [illegible] da pica, as a good soldier conquers in every cause; The same of Diamonds, had a reference to fine luckless merchants, combined for some discovering enterprize, about the time when all were turned westward, it is called the Cursus or Scotland, from their failure; and not as generally, though erroneously asserted, from the D. of Cumberland's alledged sanguinary order after the battle of Culloden, having been written upon card: It is of Italian derivation, and is [illegible] to say, "Come, sir, will you have a trick with the history of the four Kings?" meaning, "will you [illegible] a game at cards?"—yet has this phrase a deep and rational meaning, when four Kings represent the four great Monarchies.

JEWS. GREEKS. ROMANS. FRANKS.
David, Alexander, Cæsar, Charlemagne.

The four suits
Hearts, Spades, Clubs, Diamonds.

Queen's are,
Esther, Angino, Pallas, Judith.

The above names are yet on the packs of cards in France, Knaves, are Valets. Servetus Burnt on, that is Sacon, Knecht, or Knapkin, signifies a servant—it also means a grunik. The Spaniards, notwithstanding the trefle, call that suit Bastos: accordingly we find the Ace of Clubs, also called Bastos; we translate it by Clubs—and the King we call

ORIGINAL POETRY.

To her who can best understand it.

Can the bosom of Feeling e'er cease to regret?
Can the cold eye of Pity its lustre e'er lose?
Can the look of Affection behold and forget.
How painful the thorn though concealed by the rose?

Ere the first ray of Beauty expands to the ray;
Ere its petals are gemmed by the dew-drop of Spring,
How many a canker that bud may betray,
How many an insect wild Eurus may bring!

Yet the soft heart of Woman to heaven is dear,
And recorded above is her life-breathing sigh
And when to the absent she gives a blest tear,
What a sun-beam of sweetness illumines her eye!

Fear not, my beloved, separation's rude gale,
Nor dread that a rival the bliss will destroy;
Every blessing for thee shall its fragrance exhale
And fidelity's self weave thy chaplet of joy!

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Boston Evening Gazette of Saturday.

Cleopatra's Barge.—The elegant equipment of this vessel, by Mr. Crowninshield, for a voyage of pleasure, as it is an entire novelty in this country has attracted universal curiosity and calm admiration. Whilst she was lying at the wharf in Salem, we have heard the attracted company from various surrounding places to view so perfect a specimen of nautical architecture and sumptuous accomodation. Eighteen hundred ladies, it is asserted, visited her in the course of one day.—Cleopatra's Barge measures about 200 tons, and is modelled after one of the swiftest sailing ships which we ever driven before the wind. Being introduced on board, you descend into a magnificent saloon, about 20 feet long and 12 broad, finished on all sides with polished mahogany, inlaid with other ornamental wood.—The settees of the saloon are of splendid workmanship, the backs are shaped like the ancient lyre, and are covered with crimson silk velvet, bordered with a very wide edging of gold lace.—Two splendid mirrors standing at either end, and a magnificent chandelier suspended in the centre of the saloon give a richness of effect to it, not easily surpassed. Instead of Births, on the sides of this hall, there are recesses, for the two mahogany sofas of state for the dinner table, which are finished in a high style of elegance. The after cabin contains sleeping accommodations for the under officers of the vessel.—The owners and Captain's state rooms are very commodious. The conveniences for the kitchen and steward's apartments may be considered models in their way. There are no products in all parts of the world which require them. The intention of Mr. Crowninshield, we understand, is to proceed in the first instance to the Western Islands, thence through the Straights of Gibralter, and following the windings of the left coast of the Mediterranean, will touch at every principal city on the route, which will be, round the Island of Sicily, up the Gulf of Venice to Trieste, along the Coast of Albania and the Morea, through the Grecian Archipelago to the Dardanelles; if permitted by the Turkish authorities he will proceed through the sea of Marmora to Constantinople, thence coasting along the ports of the Black Sea, to the Sea of Azov, he will return by the way of the Isle of Cyprus, upon the south side of the Mediterranean; stopping at Acre, Jerusalem, and Alexandria, on his way and sailing by the Coast of the Desert to that of the Barbary States. Emerging from the Straights he will proceed through the British Channel and North Sea, up the Baltic to Petersburg, thence along the Coast of Norway to the North Cape, and perhaps into the White Sea;—from this point he may go to Gottenbergen and Ireland, and thence crossing an immense ocean, to the Coast of South America, touching at various ports he will complete the tour of his destination and arrive at Salem.

"It is much to be desired that a gentleman of scientific attainment, historical research and literary taste, may accompany Mr. Crowninshield on his expedition.—The multiplied objects of rational curiosity, which will be presented to the traveller, on such a tour, would afford materials, which if well digested and arranged, would do credit to the country and confer permanent celebrity upon a voyage, which, without such a narrative, will dwindle into a topic of idle curiosity and final insignificance.

NEW BOTANY BAY.

The Inspectors of the State Prison of New-York, in an address to the Legislature, through the Governor of the State, lament the excess of numbers confounded to the penitentiary, which renders frequent pardons indispensable, and otherwise destructive from the utility of the institution. They then proceed thus:—

"With these facts before us, it has become a matter of serious consideration whether the state prison has not a tendency to demoralize rather than to reclaim criminals; for whatever punishment is so far mitigated as not to be dreaded, the laws fails in the effect it proposes to produce. We are, therefore, firmly of opinion, that some different plan for the punishment of crimes, of the first magnitude, such as arson, forgery and other felonies of the deepest die, ought to be adopted, or a state prison in every district will be required to contain the delinquents.—Permit us, then, to suggest to your excellency and the honorable the Legislature, the propriety of recommending to Congress our representatives in congress, the establishment by the general government of a colony on the north west coast of America, at or near the Columbia River, or at Madison Island, to which convicts of the aforementioned class ought to be transported, if however the government of the United States should object to this plan, they may not this state adopt a similar one, on a smaller scale, and fix on some place on the frontiers of the state, where they may be sent and usefully employed, to keep them from committing in future their depredations on Society? Believing that the utility as well as the necessity of some distant place being fixed upon, to which certain convicts in the different states of the Union may be transported, will be generally acknowledged by congress, we feel anxious that the subject should be submitted to their consideration as early as possible."—*Bal. Singular preservation of Animal Life without food.

Extract of a letter from Thomas Mantell, Esq. F. R. S. to the Secretary of the Linnean Society, Lond. containing an account of an extraordinary instance of the preservation of animal life, without food in the case of a pig which was buried in the stye by a fall of part of the chalk cliff, under dover castle, on the 10th December, 1810:—

"On the 23d of May, one hundred and sixty days after the accident, I was told that some of the workmen employed in removing the fallen chalk had heard the whining of the pig; and although I had great doubt of the fact, I encouraged them to proceed in clearing away the chalk from the stye, under the direction of the owner Mr. Pool, who was present, I was soon afterwards surprised to see the pig alive extricated from its confinement. His figure was extremely emaciated, having scarcely any muscles discernable, his bristles were erect, though not stiff, but soft, clean and white. The animal was lively, walked well, took food eagerly. At the time of the accident it was fat, and supposed to have weighed 160 pounds, but it now weighed no more than 40lbs. I am assured at the time of the fall there was neither food nor water in the stye, which is a cave almost six feet square, dug in the rock and bored in front—and the whole was covered about thirty feet deep in the fallen chalk. The door and other wood in front of the stye had been much nibbled, and the sides of the cave were very smooth having apparently been constantly licked for the moisture exuding through the rock. There was no doubt some of the loose chalk had been eaten."—Lon. Pa.

SPEECH

YORK, TUESDAY, 4th February 1817.

This day at 2 o'clock, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, came in State to the Legislative Council, and being seated on the Throne, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was sent down to the House of Assembly to command their attendance before His Excellency: and the Members being come up, the Honorable Speaker of the Legislative Council signified His Excellency's pleasure that they should return to the usual place of their sitting, and there choose a fit person to be their Speaker, and present him for His Excellency's approbation.

The Members of the House of Assembly having retired, Allan Mc Lean, Esquire, Member for the County of Frontenac, was proposed for the Speaker and elected unanimously.

The Members then returned to the Upper House, when His Excellency was pleased to deliver the following SPEECH.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I CANNOT congratulate you on any favorable change in the Health of Our Revered Sovereign!

Under the Regency of the Heir Apparent, the United Kingdom has attained the Summit of National Prosperity:—Its last Act has been to Compel the Abolition of Christian Slavery in the Piratical States of Barbary: to whose tyranny the Chief Nations of Europe had submitted for Ages!

The return of universal Peace, after the usual interruption of Arts and Commerce, in a protracted state of Warfare, has ever been hailed as the harbinger of Plenty and Happiness! This does not appear to be the immediate effect of Peace at the Close; symptoms of distress have been manifest in many parts of the United Kingdom; Such a result was to be apprehended from the unexampled Prosperity of the Nation during more than Twenty Years of War!

While opposed to all Europe, or supporting all Europe, against the gigantic efforts of one Nation towards Universal Monarchy, the United Kingdom became the Manufacturer, the Banker and the Merchant of the whole World; transmitting through every channel, a Flood of Wealth, which, in a rapid circulation, returned, encreasing to the source.—It is not surprising that a sudden stagnation of this Flood of Prosperity, when Peace restored to each Nation a portion of this Monopoly, should have occasioned temporary disorder!

Let us hope the remedies applied by the undivided attention of the Imperial Parliament, will soon restore every part of the Empire to the full enjoyment of the blessings of uninterrupted Peace. In the mean time, it is incumbent upon us, Her Fostered Children, to mark our grateful sense of past Support and Protection, by every alleviation of her Burden, which may be in Our power:—I trust Confidently that no exertion will be wanting to fulfil a duty so Sacred!

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly;

I shall direct the proper Officer to lay before You the usual Accounts of the receipt and expenditure of the Provincial Revenue.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly;

I derived much satisfaction from observing in my progress through the Province, that the liberal appropriation, made by the last Session, for the improvement of the Roads, has been, in general, judiciously applied.—The Water Communication of the River St. Lawrence, below Prescott, is also deserving of your serious consideration.

Your Address to His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, on the subject of Revenue and Intercourse with Lower Canada, has been transmitted; but no Session of the Imperial Parliament having interposed, I could not be made acquainted with the result,—I shall therefore use the means in my power to correct the evil complained of, by the mediation of Commissioners, should the Legislature of Lower Canada revive the Provisions to that effect.

There seems to be doubts of the sufficiency of the late Crops to supply the wants of the Province, should the export of Grain be continued;—it may, therefore, be expedient to re-enact the Statute heretofore made, on the existence of similar doubts.

The British Statute subjecting Lands to be Assets for satisfaction of Debt, has, in its operation, produced questions of such importance as to appear worthy of Legislative reference.

I must call your attention to such Laws as have expired, or are about to expire, and to consider the propriety of their revival or continuance.

There may be many other subjects requiring Legislative discussion: I can assure you of my cordial co-operation, to carry into effect any Laws which your wisdom may devise, conducive to the improvement of the Wealth, Happiness and Morals of the People, and the General Prosperity of the Province!!!

PROCLAMATION.

BY HIS EXCELLENCY

FRANCIS GORE, Esq. Lieutenant-Governor of our said Province, &c. &c. &c.

WHEREAS by An Act of the Parliament of this Province, made and passed in the Forty-second Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act to enable the "Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Person "administering the Government of this Pro"vince, to appoint one or more additional Ports "or Forts, Places or Places of Entry, within "this Province: And to appoint one or more "Collector, or Collectors of the same," (as lately expired.—AND WHEREAS, the said Act hath since been revived by An Act passed in the Fifty-sixth Year of His Majesty's Reign: AND WHEREAS, as well with reference to the Interests of His Majesty's Government of this Province, as to the convenience of Importers of Goods and Merchandize, and of Merchants, and other His Majesty's Subjects resident within this Province, it hath been ascertained that there is immediate occasion for appointing One other additional Port or Place of Entry and Clearance, at the Place hereinafter specified. BE IT THEREFORE KNOWN, That I, FRANCIS GORE, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, in exercise of the power and authority vested in me by the said recited Act, and by and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Province, Do hereby declare and appoint, That in addition to the Ports of Entry and Clearance, established by, and under the authority of a certain Act of the Parliament of this Province, passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act for "Granting to His Majesty, His Heirs and Suc"cessors, to and for the uses of this Province, "the like Duties on Goods and Merchandize, "imported into this Province from the United "States, as are now paid on Goods and Mer"chandize imported from Great-Britain, and "other places." And also, by and under the authority of the above recited Act, passed in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and two, the Place hereinafter mentioned and described; That is to say, the Outlet of Burlington Bay, in the District of Gore, shall from the first Day of January next, be, and the same is by these presents Established and Proclaimed to be a Port and Place of Entry and Clearance, for all Goods and Merchandize not being entirely prohibited; and for the payment of all Duties liable to be paid on all Goods and Merchandize brought into this Province from the United States of America, imported and established by virtue of the said Act so passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign.

GIVEN Under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this Twentieth day of December, in the Year of our Lord One thousand Eight Hundred and Sixteen and in the Fifty Seventh year of His Majesty's Reign.

The commissioners cannot, therefore, to often repeat that their report must be accepted as suggestive proceeding from a superficial view, and not as conclusions founded on sufficient and scientific investigation.

After this preliminary caution, they estimate hypothetically that the canal were run in such manner, as that the average descent were six inches in every mile. Whence, taking the surface of lake Erie as the standard level, they have in gross the following results:

From lake Erie to	Miles.	Desc. Tot. desc.	Ad. desc.
		Feet. Feet.	Feet. Feet.
The mouth of Tonewanta creek,	10	5 50	5 50
Genesee river, about	60	24	29	55
Shonds lake,	40	16	45	101
Cayuga lake	7	3	48	104
Road summit,	60	28	76	132
Little Falls of Mohawk,	30	10	117	242 1-2
Schoharie,	27	10	124	366 1-2
Height of land between Schoharie and Albany,	24	16	140	506
Hudson's river,	16	7	333	838

Casting an eye on the map, it will be seen, that the general line of the above course will be, to cross the Genesee river at the elevation of twenty-six feet above its surface. But unless the canal be lowered down to that river, the expense of an aqueduct cannot be avoided; because from the upper falls, which are too high, there is little descent to the lower falls; and if, from any cause, it be advisable to cross it by an aqueduct, the addition of a foot in the height will not much increase the expense; indeed, considering the swell of the river in freshes, an elevation short of twenty feet would scarcely leave sufficient space under the arch.

The next difficulty will be in crossing the mouth of Seneca lake by an aqueduct eighty-three feet high. But this also, if a convenient place can be found, will not be important, because a moderate aperture will suffice to void the equable stream from that lake.

The third difficulty is at the mouth of Cayuga, where the elevation is one hundred and thirty feet. Even this might be encountered without any unusual hardihood, if the hills approached each other. But the valley to be crossed is not much, if any thing, short of a mile; and to erect a mound of that length, and of the sufficient height and breadth, is an herculean labour. Whether it will be performed, must depend on the sum that undertaken this task, respecting which, a few words may find their proper place hereafter.

Supposing, however, that difficulty to be surmounted, it is believed that none will remain which cannot be, in a considerable degree avoided by heading occasionally to the southward, and returning round the northern points of the hills, till the canal is brought opposite to Rome. Its elevation there above the Mohawk will be forty-seven feet or less, by one foot for every two miles that it may be lengthened. The general face of the country here, leaves no room to doubt, that convenient ground can be discovered south of Rome, at an elevation of forty feet above the Mohawk. How far it may be practicable, between that place and the hills east of the Schoharie, must be decided by actual survey.

The elevation, if not in other respects injurious, will be useful in passing that night, otherwise, necessitate a descent to the Mohawk. Thus, at the Little Falls at that river, the canal, at an elevation of eighty feet above its upper surface, may, it is believed, be brought through or round the hill at no enormous expense. The still greater elevation of one hundred and fifty feet at the Schoharie, will permit of a considerable bend to find some narrow gorge, and finally, an elevation of seventy feet above the height of ground between Schenectady and Albany, will enable the engineer to cleanse for the course of his canal and the position of his locks, the most suitable soil and convenient situations. In a word, it, on due examination, any thing of this sort should be found practicable, instead of depriving the country of water, every drop of which is needed by its inhabitants, they will gain a great addition from the canal; and as to the navigation, singly considered, there can be no doubt but it must in the way be superior to a winding course ascending and descending by locks. For, not to mention the expense of constructing and keeping them in repair, the time spent and tolls paid in passing them, must considerably enhance the freight of goods. But if there be no locking, and the toll be no more than is needful to keep the canal in repair, it will amount to so little as not to merit notice in a calculation of freight. Rejecting it, therefore, and allowing two horses and three men to take a boat of fifty tons burden, twenty miles a day, which is certainly within bounds, and putting the whole expense at five dollars on the inland downwards, (leaving the return boat as press) or which is equivalent, reducing the distance one half, we have fifty tons transported ten miles for five dollars, being one cent per ton per mile. To speak, then, in round numbers, it will cost three dollars to bring a ton from lake Erie to Hudson's river, being little more than one half of what is now paid for freight on lake Ontario, between Queenpo and Lewiston. Without entering into calculations (which every person can easily make for himself) to enumerate the 5 fifty articles which will derive value from such facility of transportation, it may be proper in this place to recur again to the commercial competition with our British neighbours.

A tolerably good navigation up and down the St. Lawrence, already exists; but the cheapest rate at which transportation has been performed within the last ten years between Kingston and Montreal, according to the best information the commissioners have been able to obtain, is one dollar per hundred ascending, and half as much descending the river. But admitting the freight could be as reduced as to be on a level with that between Albany and New-York; admitting, also, that the transportation across lake Ontario could be performed as cheaply as through the proposed canal, and even admitting that the risk on that lake, and of course the premium of insurance, were nothing, still it would follow, that transportation from the head of lake Ontario to Montreal, would cost as much as from the mouth of Tuhowanta to New-York, leaving a preference to the latter of the cost and land carriage from Chippewa to Queenstown. Moreover, nature has given (other things being equal) a decided preference to the port of New-York. There are, generally speaking, six weeks of navigation from Albany, in the spring, before vessels can, with safety, leave Montreal to descend the river St. Lawrence, and as many more in the autumn, after the mouth of that river is closed.

The navigation from New-York, is seldom obstructed; so that produce deposited there, can be sent to market during five months, in which, at Montreal, it lies a dead weight on the hands of the owner. This circumstance is of especial importance in regard to wheat and flour, which can be sent from New-York, so as to be sold in the south of Europe before those articles can be brought from the Baltic, or gathered in the country; whereas, if shipped from Montreal in the month of May, they cannot reach Spain or Portugal until after supplies are received from Dantzic, and last a short time before the harvest, which is early in July.

Thus, it is evident that the canal will, if properly effected, turn to the United States the commerce of the upper lakes. Moreover, a side cut, of five or six miles, would, by means of locks, connect it with lake Ontario, in the harbour of the Genesee; and in like manner a connection could be established with the Seneca and Cayuga lakes, from the heads of which, a short portage by good roads to Newton and Owego, opens a communication through the Susquehannah to the Chesapeake. Nor is it improbable, that by running up on the west side of the Cayuga, money may be found to establish water communication with the Susquehannah; from the great bend of which, a good and short road may be made to the Delaware.

Thus a variety of markets may be opened to stimulate and reward the industry of those who are now, or may be hereafter settled about the great lakes, whose shores, exclusive of lake Superior, are upwards of two thousand miles, surrounded at convenient distances by more than fifty millions of acres of land.

(To be concluded in our next.)

Mint of the United States.

January 1st, 1817.

Sir—I have now the honour of laying before you a report of the operations of the Mint during the last year.

From the statement of the treasurer, herewith transmitted, it will appear, that within the above period, there have been struck and emitted—

In silver coins, 67,138 pieces, amounting to 28,975 dollars and 75 cents; and in copper coins 2,870,982 pieces amounting to 28,709 dollars and 26 cents.

The issues of the latter would have been considerably greater, had it not been for a disappointment in the supply of copper. Measures, however are now taken, to prevent such disappointments in future.

The stagnation which has for some time existed in the circulation of specie currency, has almost totally prevented the deposits of gold and silver bullion for coinage. But there is now a prospect that this will not long continue to be the case—the Mint having, at this time, in its vaults, deposits of those metals to a very considerable amount.

The repairs of the Mint, which you were pleased to authorize, are now nearly completed. A substantial brick building has been erected on the site formerly occupied by an old wooden building; and in the apparatus and arrangement of machinery, which have been required many important improvements have been introduced. Among these is the substitution of a steam-engine, for the horse-power heretofore employed. A change which, it is believed, will not only diminish the expenses of the establishment, but greatly facilitate all its principal operations.

I have the honor to be,

Sir, With the greatest respect, and esteem, your most obt't, ser't,

R. PATTERSON.

James Madison, President of the United States.

From the New-York Spectator.

January 13.

A letter received in this city from Liverpool, via Norfolk, dated on the 25th Nov. has the following quotations:—" American flour 72 a 74s per barrel. English wheat of 280 lbs. 90 a 95s."

January 16.

The price demanded for flour at Boston, on Monday last, was fifteen dollars per barrel.—We do not understand, however, that any quantity was sold at that price.

Jan. 17.

The U. States brig Chippewa.—The Morning papers announce the loss of this elegant vessel. She was bound on a cruise from Boston to the Gulph of Mexico, and went away on the evening of the 12th of December, on the north west point of the Grand Caicos Island.—It is said, that she ran upon a reef which is not described in the Charts. Officers and Crew reached the Island in safety; and after saving a part of the sails and rigging of the Chippewa, proceeded to Turk's Island. They there chartered the schooner Pyquat, of North Carolina, and arrived here last evening after a passage of 13 days.

It is also stated, that a British ship, laden with lumber, and bound from Portland to Jamaica, and an American schooner, were driven ashore at the same place. The former was entirely lost; and the latter sustained but little injury.

Death of Mr. Dallas.—A letter written in Philadelphia yesterday, adds a Postscript to the following announcement:—" Hon. ALEXANDER J. DALLAS, died suddenly, this morning."

January 18.

From our Mediterranean Squadron.

The brig Alexander, Capt. Summers, arrived last evening from the Mediterranean, with despatches from Commodore Chauncey. Mr. Ogden, 4 passenger, and the bearer of the despatches, communicated to the Editors of the Gazette the following information:—

Commodore Chauncey, in the Washington, 74, Captain Creighton, together with the frigate United States, Capt. Shaw, and the Protector sloop-war, Capt. Rogers, were only waiting at Gibraltar for a wind, to proceed up the Mediterranean, to join the remainder of the squadron, which were ordered to rendezvous at Port Mahon, consisting of the frigate Java, Captain Perry, and Constellation Capt. Crane, sloops Erie, Captain Gamble, and Ontario, Captain Downes; brig Spark, Lieut. Nicholson, and schooner Homet, Lieut. Clayton.

Mr. Shales, our Consul General for the Barbary States, was on board the Washington.

" It was the Commodore's intention to proceed to Algiers, to insist upon the ratification of the treaty with the Dey, and to blockade his ports in case of his adhering to his determination of not ratifying it without the brig of war he demanded was given to him.

" It was the general opinion, that the Dey would accede in his demand, which would render a reinforcement of our squadron absolutely necessary, to carry the blockade rigidly into execution.

" From the moment Lord Exmouth's appendous left Algiers, the Algerines commenced repairing their fortifications under the direction of able foreign Engineers; which are nearly completed, and the defects which Lord Exmouth's attack pointed out, perfectly remedied. They have also purchased 30 cannon to beat also so that the place is considered very strong.

The Algerines already say, " let Lord Exmouth come again if he dare."

" The Dey has purchased several vessels of war, and is actively employed in re-establishing his navy.

" We also learn that the Spanish Government were making great preparations to settle their affairs in South America, and that Gen. O'Donnell had arrived at Port St. Marys, with a part of the troops (about 5000 more men) destined to compose a strong expedition which is shortly to sail from which the most flattering results to the Royal cause, were expected.

Milledgeville, (Geo.) Jan. 1.

Gen. Thomas, of this place, has requested it to be known, that he will give two thousand dollars, and pay all requisite expenses, to any person who will cure a CANCER in his mouth.

SINGULAR TRIAL.

Trial of GEORGE BURRS, for the Murder of JONATHAN JEWETT, by assaulting and aiding him to hang himself in his prison, to avoid the punishment of Death, by Law, which he had been sentenced, for the murder of his Father.

The trial came on before the Supreme Court of this State, at Northampton, in the month of September last. The testimony for the government was, that Capt. Ebenezer Clap, the keeper of the gaol in Northampton, and one Jewett had been in habits of intimacy, and frequently hunted and fished together, and conversing; that Burrus said to Jewett " if you ever mention anything you will be hung," " you will then go there," pointing to the place of execution; " and you let them hang you, you are a damned fool;"—I had rather hang myself than be hung;"

Miscellaneous.

ON NEWS-PAPERS.

Much has been said and written on the utility of Newspapers—but one principal advantage which might be derived from these publications, has been neglected; we mean that of reading them in schools and by the children to families.—try it for one season.—Do you wish your child to improve in reading, give him a news-paper—it furnishes a task to some part of which must infallibly touch his fancy. Do you wish to instruct him in Geography, nothing will so infallibly fix the relative situation of different places as the events published in the papers. In fine, do you wish to have him acquainted with the manners of the country or city—the mode of doing business public or private—or, do you wish him to have a smattering of every kind of science, useful and amusing, give him a news-paper—News-papers are plenty and cheap, the cheapest book that can be bought, and the more you buy the better for your children, because every part furnishes some new and valuable information.—Instead of being a luxury it is a matter of oeconomy, and the poorest family that exists may and ought to be furnished with at least one paper per week. Encourage news-papers & you encourage learning; encourage learning and you secure the liberties of posterity.—Learning in the hands of a few, effects a nobility, but generally diffused is an effectual barrier against every invasion of the rights of man. News-papers supply the want of schools, the want of company and the want of preaching. They have the power to mitigate the pains of the afflicted, alleviate the distresses of the sorrowful, check the wild extravagance of the licentious, bring home the prodigal, and in fine, to do good to all ranks, denominations, characters and situations in life.—Mont. Gaz.

Curiosities in Natural History.

As some men were lately digging stones in the garden of Mr. John Daniel, at Warminster, they discovered in the middle of a vast stratum of rock, and at nearly 12 feet from the surface, a toad and a newt; both animals were alive and of full size, and their habitation was just large enough to contain them; the interior was perfectly smooth, lined with sand, and without the smallest orifice or crack. On being exposed to the air, the colour of both animals was altered, and life for a few moments suspended.

Anecdote of Lord Castlereagh.—In the year 1787, as the present Lord Castlereagh, then Mr Stewart, was enjoying the pleasures of an oceanic excursion with his school-fellow and friend, Mr. Sturrock, near Castle-Stewart, the seat of his Lordship's father, the Earl of Londonderry, unaccompanied by any other person, a violent squall of wind upset the boat at the distance of two miles from the shore. Lord Castlereagh, who was an excellent swimmer, recollecting that Mr. Sturrock could not swim, immediately on the boat sinking, directed his attention to his friend, swam to him, placed a piece of a broken oar under his breast, recommended him with the most encouraging composure and presence of mind to remain as long as he could on his back, which he showed him to effect by placing himself in that position.—His continued swimming near his friend, occasionally raising his hands, in the hope that some one might discover their perilous situation.—Mr. Sturrock, alive to the young friend of Lord Castlereagh's, and Mr. Cleghorn, his Lordship's tutor, had been looking at the boat previous to the squall, from which they had taken shelter in a temple in the gardens at Mount-Stewart. Upon the storm subsiding, three gentlemen quitted the place, immediately missed the boat, and concluded that she was lost.—Most providentially, they found in the harbour a small boat, into which they sprung, with feelings which it would be in vain to describe, and after rowing with all their vigour for a mile and a half, they at last discovered, as the waves rose and fell, a hat, and not far from it a hand waving; they redoubled their exertions, and came up to Lord Castlereagh, who implored them not to mind him, but instantly go to his companion. "Never mind me," said his Lordship, "for God's sake go to Sturrock, or he will be lost!—leave me, I think I can support myself until you return." They accordingly left him, and arrived at the critical moment, when his young friend had just risen, after sinking the first time, and seizing him by the hair, they drew him, quite senseless and exhausted, into the boat—another minute, and all would have been over. They then returned to his Lordship, and rescued him also. It is impossible to describe the alternate agony and joy which characterized the whole of this awful and impressive scene.

A Calf, reared at Stroudwate, near Portland, now nine months old, weighs eight hundred and twenty-nine pounds, and girts five feet and five inches. It is not more remarkable for its size than for its uncommon good proportion and handsome form.—A fair candidate for one of the Brighton Show premiums.

PROCLAMATION.

BY HIS EXCELLENCY

FRANCIS GORE, ESQ. LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR of our said Province, &c. &c. &c.

WHEREAS by An Act of the Parliament of this Province, made and passed in the Forty-second Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act to enable the "Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Person "administering the Government of this Pro"vince, to appoint one or more additional Port "or Ports, Place or Places of Entry, within "this Province: AND to appoint one or more "Collector, or Collectors of the same," has lately expired.—AND WHEREAS, the said Act hath since been revived by An Act passed in the Fifty-sixth Year of His Majesty's Reign: AND WHEREAS, as well with reference to the Interests of His Majesty's Government of this Province, as to the convenience of Inspectors of Goods and Merchandize, and of Merchants, and other His Majesty's Subjects resident within this Province, it hath been ascertained that there is immediate occasion for appointing One other additional Port or Place of Entry and Clearance, at the Place hereinafter specified. BE IT THEREFORE KNOWN, That I, FRANCIS GORE, ESQUIRE, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, in exercise of the power and authority vested in me by the said recited Acts, and by and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Province, Do hereby declare and appoint, That in addition to the Port of Entry and Clearance, established by, and under the authority of a certain Act of the Parliament of this Province, passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act for "Granting to His Majesty, His Heirs and Suc"cessors, to and for the uses of this Province, "the like Duties on Goods and Merchandize, "imported into this Province from the United "States, as are now paid on Goods and Mer"chandize imported from Great-Britain, and "other places." And also, by and under the authority of the above recited Act, passed in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and two, the Place hereinafter mentioned and Specified; That is to say, the Outlet of Burlington Bay, in the District of Gore, shall from the first Day of January next, be, and the same is by these presents Established and Proclaimed to be a Port and Place of Entry and Clearance, for all Goods and Merchandize not being entirely prohibited; and for the payment of all Duties liable to be paid on all Goods and Merchandize brought into this Province, from the United States of America, imported and established by virtue of the said Act so passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign.

GIVEN Under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this Twenty-fifth day of December, in the Year of our Lord One thousand Eight Hundred and Sixteen and in the Fifty Seventh year of His Majesty's Reign.

FRANCIS GORE,
Lieutenant Governor.

Method of Extinguishing FIRE.

Extracted from a letter from M. Van Marum, to Mr. Bertholet.

Nich. Jour. vol. 9. p. 103.

"I took two casks, which had been full of pitch, and of which the inside was yet well covered with that inflammable substance: the heads of these were taken out, and in order to assist the operation of combustion, I gave them a conical shape, placing the larger aperture of twenty inches diameter uppermost, the other of sixteen inches diameter below, mounted on a three-legged stand a few inches from the ground so that the fire might be kept as brisk as possible by the free current of air passing through the cask. I covered the inside of each cask with a fresh coat of pitch, and having placed shavings of wood in each, I kindled them, one after the other. I began to extinguish the fire when it was at its height. For this purpose I made use of an iron ladle capable of holding two ounces of water, and provided with a very long handle, being kept at the distance of four or five feet by the volume of the fire. I carefully poured the water from this ladle in very small streams along the inside of the cask, placing the ladle on the edge of the cask, and moving it gradually along the edge as the flames ceased. In this way the first ladle-full of water extinguished nearly one half of the fire, and what remained was effectually put out by a ladle-full, and in the same manner. The striking success of this experiment induced me to repeat it in the presence of many persons, and with care and attention in the application and arrangement of water, I have more than once succeeded in extinguishing a highly ignited cask with a single ladle-full, of two ounces of water."

Mr. Van Marum in explaining the theory which is developed by this experiment, says, that "when a small quantity of water is thrown upon a highly ignited body, part of that water is instantly converted into steam, which rising from the surface of the burning body, prevents the contact of the atmospheric air, and by that means puts out the flame, which cannot appear again while the production of the steam is continued."

"According to these experiments," he continues, "it appears that the art of extinguishing a violent fire with a small quantity of water consists in this: that the water be thrown on that part of the fire which is most violent; so that the quantity of steam produced, which suppresses the flame may be the greatest possible: that water be continued to be thrown in the neighboring inflamed parts, as soon as the fire has ceased in that in which the operation was begun; and that all the burning parts be visited in this way as soon as possible. By thus following the flames regularly with streams of water, they may be every where suppressed before the part on which the operation was begun shall have entirely lost, by evaporation, the water with which it was moistened; this often necessary to prevent the parts from breaking out afresh: for on the principles above mentioned, a burning body of which the flames are suppressed at be again in flames in little water there until totally evaporated."

Mr. Van Marum then relates experiments made on a larger scale, one of which we will transcribe from the account given of it by Von Trolle, a celebrated German astronomer.

Doctor Van Marum being at Gratz, in the course of a literary journey, which he was making in Germany, in 1791, the duke of Cotha, well known as an amateur of the physical and mathematical sciences, signified his desire to see on a large scale, that experiment of extinguishing fire, the effect of which M. Van Marum had shown him, in extinguishing a pitched cask, set on fire, with a small ladle of water. He caused a building to be constructed under M. Van Marum's direction, in the duchess's garden, of equal dimensions in all respects with that used for the same experiment at Harlem, which was 24 feet long, 20 feet wide, and 14 feet high. It had two doors on the northeast side, and two window-like openings on the northwest side: the top was left entirely open to give the flames free vent: the inside of this receptacle was plastered with pitch, and afterwards covered with straw mats on which melted pitch had been poured. To the bottom of these mats cotton wicks, soaked in spirits of turpentine, were suspended; that so the building might be every where on fire at the same time. In this state, the fire excited by the wind, was soon so violent, that the flames with thick clouds of smoke, were carried several feet above the opening of the roof, and so fiercely, that the spectators assembled about the building quickly drew back; many were of opinion that it would not be possible to extinguish it, but that the building must be reduced to ashes. When the straw mats were entirely consumed, the interior wood work of the building was soon on fire in every part.—The most unfavorable circumstances attended this experiment; for the wind drove the flames directly through the doors on the northeast side, by which it had been intended to introduce the streams of water to extinguish them; but notwithstanding this, Mr. Van Marum placed a small portable pump or engine before the door in that part of the northeast side of the building nearest to the northeast side; without regarding the apprehensions of his assistants, he set it in action, and placing himself before this door, as near as the intense heat of the fire would admit, he directed the streams of water, first towards the southeast side, and as near the door as possible, and continued until the flames were extinguished on that side, and sprinkled with water in the same direction; after which the water was directed along the southwest side and afterwards the northwest, so that in a few minutes the flames were got under, and the burning partitions were extinguished. After this the pump was placed before one of the openings in the northwest side. He also very soon extinguished the northeast side; and lastly coming to the centre of the building, where the fire appeared here and there in the chinks of the boards and the holes left by the nails, breaking out at intervals in small flashes, he entirely extinguished them and thus perfectly subdued this violent fire. It was estimated by several of the spectators, that the fire was extinguished at most in three minutes from the commencement of the action of the pumps to the time when the wood just remained burning, and broke out afresh in some places; these renewals were however so inconsiderable, that the burning parts were quenched by means of some wet rags fastened to a stick. Before setting the pump to work, its reservoir was filled with four buckets of water; but in carrying it to the first window of the building, and from thence to the middle of it, near a bucket full was spilt; so that it may be positively affirmed that this violent fire was extinguished with three buckets of water, excluding that which was afterwards used to quench those parts of the building which remained red. It was easily observed, when the flame was out, that not only the straw mats were burned, but the entire wood work of the building had been on fire, insomuch that the smallest part of wood could not be found in the inside of the building which had not been more or less severely burnt. The northeast side in particular, against which the wind drove the flames with the utmost violence, was entirely charred."

Mr. Van Zach further states, that the flames and smoke rend d necessary the building with the pump very difficult.—That not only his the courageous example of Mr. Van Marum himself, in leading his assistants, and directing the operations of the pump could have prevailed on them to have faced the danger, which they considered as very dreadful.

Mr. Van Zach continues, "the result of the foregoing fact is, that in applying the method of extinguishing fire, the circumstances to be observed are these, that to extinguish the most violent fire, it is only necessary to wet the surface of the burning matter, in the part where the flames are seen, and that for the purpose only a small quantity of water is needful, if the parts be wetted in the proper manner. And operations of this kind, therefore, particular attention must be paid to throwing the water in such a way, that the entire surface of the burning part shall be wetted and extinguished, and that in such a way that an extinguished part shall never be left between two others which are in flames; for if attention be not paid to this, the heat of the flames burning here and there will quickly change the water with which the part has been wetted into steam, and the whole will again take fire. In order then, to extinguish a fire in all cases, no more water need be thrown on the burning part than is needful to wet its surface; and this I conceive to be all that is requisite to extinguish a fire, whatever may be the circumstances of its origin."

ON THE FORM OF ANIMALS.

SIR HENRY CLAY, BART. SURGEON. Com. Board of Agriculture, 1805.

IT is the intention of this communication to ascertain in what manner the crossing the breed of cattle is proper, and in what proportion; and the principles upon which the prosperity of it depends.

It has been generally understood that the breed of animals is improved by crossing with the largest males. This opinion has done much mischief, and would have done more if it had not been counteracted by the desire of selecting animals of the best forms and proportions, which are rarely to be met with in those of the largest size. Experience has proved that large breeds are not successful in an eminent degree in those instances in which the females were larger than in the usual proportion of the females to the males; and that it has generally failed when the males were disproportionally large.

The external form of domestic animals has been much studied, and the proportions are well ascertained. But the external form is no indication of internal structure. The principles of improving it must therefore be founded on a knowledge of the structure and use of the internal parts.

Of these the lungs are of the first importance. It is on their size & soundness that the strength and health of an animal principally depends. The power of converting food into nourishment is in proportion to the size. An animal with large lungs is capable of converting a given quantity of food into more nourishment than one with small lungs; and therefore has a greater aptitude to fatten.

CHEST.

The size and form of the chest indicate the size of the lungs, of which the form should approach to the figure of a cone having the apex situated between the shoulders and its base towards the loins: a circular form of chest is preferable to one deep and narrow, for though the latter may have greater bulk, the former will have greater internal space in proportion.

THE PELVIS.

The pelvis is the cavity formed by the junction of the hip bones with the rump bone. This cavity should be large in a female, that she may be enabled to bring forth her young with less difficulty; when this cavity is small, the life of the mother and her offspring is endangered.

The size of the pelvis is indicated by the width of the hips, and the space between the thighs; the breadth of the loins is always in proportion to that of the chest and pelvis.

THE HEAD.

The head should be small, by which the birth is facilitated to the offspring: It also indicates the animal to be of a good breed, and occasions less weight of unprofitable substance to the consumer.

Horns are useless to domestic animals, and occasion a great weight of bone in the head.

The skull of a ram with horns weighed five times as much as that of one without horns, each being four years old. A mode of breeding which would prevent the production of horns, would therefore afford a considerable saving.

The length of the neck should be proportioned to the height of the animal, that it may collect its food with ease.

MUSCLES.

The muscles and tendons, which are their appendages, should be large, by which an animal is enabled to travel with greater facility.

BONES.

The strength of an animal does not depend on the size of the bones, but on that of the muscles; many animals with large bones are weak, their muscles being small.

Animals imperfectly nourished during growth have their bones disproportionally large. If this originated from a constitutional defect, they remain weak during life; large bones may therefore indicate an imperfection in the organs of nutrition.

OF THE IMPROVEMENT OF FORM.

The chief point to be attended to for the improvement of form, from Mr. Cline's principles, is the selection of males for breed of a proper-

LEXSON, (Ohio,) Jan. 24.

On Sunday evening last, as several persons were drinking together at the house of Abram Boyd, one of them by the name of William Boyd, drank, in quick succession, four or five half pints of whiskey; he died in a few hours after. He was almost a stranger here—enough to be a man of about 80 years of age. A solemn warning this to all, and especially to those who indulge themselves in the too frequent use of ardent spirits, and to tavern-keepers in the same; not persons to drink to intoxication in their houses. We forbear to mention the circumstances of the parents of the person who died with the unfortunate man, when he drank the spirits are bound over to answer for their conduct at that time.

CHARLESTON, Jan. 23.

The Spanish brig Africano, whose crew mutinied and run upon the officers, as mentioned in the Courier some time since, has arrived at Port-au-Prince, (St. Domingo) where she was taken possession of by Pétion. Supposing that during the mutiny, which continued about six weeks, she fell in with a Spanish barque, as already stated, when the leader of the mutineers, M'Kinnon, with 40 of the men, went on board of her, he failed not to plunder; but were carried to Demarara; although, on the Virgin Islands, the mutineers put a part of their number into a boat and sent them on shore—one of the crew's family arrived at Port-au-Prince, with about 20 of the crew only remaining on board.

Interesting Trial.

The trial of Thomas Hatchman, of the schr. Jefferson, who was indicted for the murder of William Millgrove, a seaman, belonging to the same vessel, on the high seas, was brought on at Court of Sessions, on Friday last. The examination of witnesses and the pleadings of counsel, occupied all that day, and until late on Saturday evening. The jury after receiving a luminous charge from the Hon. Judge Grimke, who presided, retired, and in about 25 minutes returned with a verdict of Not Guilty.

It will be recollected by our readers, that the unfortunate man, Millgrove, was shot on the night of the 27th of December last, in consequence of a dispute which arose between some of the crew of the brig Thomas Naylor, and Hatchman, relative to a hog, stated to belong to that vessel, and which Hatchman had picked up in the river.

It appears in evidence, that the hog was procured by Hatchman, to be given up to the claimants in the morning, but this not satisfying their claim, a party of seamen assembled for the purpose of enforcing the immediate delivery—Millgrove, a seaman of the Waterloo, a brig laying at some distance from the Thomas Naylor, was one of the number. When these men were manifestly about to board the Jefferson, from a vessel which lay along side of her, with avowed evil intention towards Hatchman, he (after giving repeated warnings) fired at them three times, and killed Millgrove.

The trial excited considerable interest, and the sanctity of a Hall of Justice, was insufficient to repress the feelings of the Hatchman's sympathizing brother tars, who crowded the bar—be assemble acquitted with a shout of exultation.

Her name prepared the Patriot, commanded by J. Chase, who said he left Baltimore 13 days before, and had a permit from the American consul there to board all Spanish vessels he met with. They also robbed us of barber the vessel, but on being informed she belonged to the captain, gave him a permit to proceed.

NEW-YORK, February 13.

A letter from a respectable house in Liverpool, dated Nov. 20th. states, that the packet Regent sprung on the 15th Nov. the separate piece of which is to be the Maritime Districts of England and Wales exceeding the standard of 80 per quarter of eight bushels of 56 lbs. each. Good old wheat was selling for 19s. 6d. to 21s. per 70 lbs. Sweet flour was obtained at 75s. to 78s. per barrel. The whole quantity in port was estimated at 40,000 barrels. Flaxseed was selling for 65s to 70s. per hogshead of 7 bushels. Queen-trian barley had become an object of speculation—New-York was held at 18s. to 20s. per cwt.

The Savannah papers state that the incendiaries who had infested N. York, Philadelphia and Baltimore, have arrived in that city, and are nightly busy in their operations.

Extracts of letters from Naples.

On our arrival at Naples, the government requested neutrality; this we refused—Transports were sent for additional forces, which returned full of troops, conveyed by a 74 and two large frigates. Yet the people seemed to like us very much, for the first time I was there. Joy was received by a great crowd crying "Viva Inglesi Americo."

Our commander expectations—our ship remarkably well, and is very still. There are several English and Dutch 74's and 80's here —the Washington looks like a picture among them.

While we lay at Messina, the Princess of Wales arrived there in a merchant ship from Egypt—Our Commanders all went to pay their respects, and I had the honor to go with my boat. She was compelled to leave the place without going on shore, as the ship could not obtain pratique.

There was a considerable disturbance at the Theatre last evening, on account of some American officers not taking their hats off, when they played "God save the King." Our officers that were present, threw them and took off their hats; on which the music struck up "Hail Columbia," when all the company in the house rose and took off their hats, which was highly humorous to the parties.

ALBANY, Feb. 5.

The House passed this day, in committee of the whole, the bill "to prevent habitual drunkards from wasting their estates." The bill "concerning distributions" has also been the subject of great length in committee of the whole. The committee rose and reported about 3 o'clock. On motion of Mr. Ford, of Herkimer, the house reconsidered part of the vote of yesterday on the auction duty resolutions, and agreed to take them up to-morrow.

Madison Barracks.

CRUELTY OF AN AMERICAN CAPT. TO A BRITISH SAILOR.

Hook Police Office, Dublin.—Informations were, on this day (yesterday) before the Sitting Magistrate, Alexander Darcey, Esq. Lord Mayor, against the ship ANN ALEXANDER, now lying at the Custom-House, Dublin, setting forth, that on the night of the 22nd September last, the master of said vessel, James H. Allen, assisted by his first and second mates, Jonathan Halford and Nat. Jacy, without any provocation, or other cause whatever, knocked down, and the said Hewitt, down on the deck of said ship, and forcibly and wickedly tied both his hands behind his back, and then, with a rope, which was in part fastened to the mizen mast, hoisted him up in the air, and in this helpless state suffered him to continue for two hours, excruciating pain; immediately after which, without any apparent cause given by them, they severely beat him for three days, during all which time they (the Captain and mates) withheld from him all manner of support or sustenance; when the ship last arrived at Falmouth, the said complainant, Hewitt, had resolved to give the information of this inhuman and cruel treatment to the magistracy of the place, and claim the rights of a British subject; but was prevented from so doing by his oppressors, who persevered in their most wantonable treatment of him, and confined him a close prisoner in the forecastle of the ship, during the whole of the short run to this port.

Daniel Jennings, Thomas Jennings, and Charles Tabor, seamen of the said ship, laid on the same time information fully corroborating the said Hewitt's statement to the Bench.

The Captain and mates have given in bail to meet this serious charge at the Sessions.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 22.

The weather.—The Thermometer at York, on Friday at night, at noon, stood eleven degrees below the freezing point; a circumstance not remembered by the oldest inhabitant at the early period of the winter.

A Russian steve is now in the Thames, and several improvements are making in the mode of warming the House of Lords. The Lord Chancellor, last session, feelingly complained that he was not warm, even in his place on the woolsack.

In order to prevent that distress, which would otherwise occur, Sir Wm. W. Wynn, Bart. and Mr. Ellison have taken into his employ all the poor in the neighbourhood, at the handsome salary of 9 shillings. Their labor is directed to agricultural purposes, the repairs of roads, and the like. By only 10 that of the calorific employed; for they found the advantage in working their machines under pressure superior to that of the atmosphere; but the form of their boilers did not admit of their much exceeding this term.

In England they have gone much further, by means of an invention of Mr. Woil and which is combined in a way as to employ the steam at high pressures. It seems also, that the steam engines of this able engineer contain another material recommendation, which fits them in the heated steam vessel being in immediate contact with the piston of the large cylinder, as it is in the common machines; in the latter case, as is well known, the piston soon loses its accurate adjustment, because the steam dissolves the greasy substances which lubricate it. In Mr. Woil's apparatus the steam enters into a first cylinder, and there it presses on the surface of a column of oil, which is forced in into an interior cylinder, in which is the piston; it thus raises the piston without touching it, and, when it first begins to act it is condensed. It is clear that mechanism may also be applied on both sides of the piston, so as to produce a double effect.—Ib.

Thus in the space of three short months has the town been visited with three melancholy and distressing fires. On this last occasion the utility of the engine pump was fully and deservedly demonstrated. It is nearly 15 feet in length and is strengthened with four iron hoops, the upper-most of which is armed with strong hooks, or claws, by which it is used to the sides or end of a wharf in an instant; the spout about three feet long, is made of strong leather; the bottom of the pump is plugged up for a few inches, above which lower apertures are made, covered with pieces of sheet copper, pierced like strainers, to prevent the boxes from being checked with mud.

PARIS, Nov. 20

On the 14th Nov. the Duke of Richelieu and Count Mole, were introduced. The latter recended the throne, and gave a sketch of the budget, in which he stated the budget of 1817, is fixed at the sum of 1,068,399,57 francs, which is equivalent to 43,343,625l. sterling.

November 24.

They write from La Rochelle, under date of the 20th Nov. that a courier which sailed from the coast of Barbary for Bourdeaux, has been cast on the 14th Nov. on the Island of Oleron, by a storm which lasted more than 24 hours. The crew of a schooner composed of seventy-four men, perished; six other vessels of the same kind, of nearly four men. The cargoes, which consisted of grain, have shared the same fate, and the inhabitants of the island have assisted the shipwrecked with the greatest zeal.

Irish Steam Packets.

The new Dublin and Holyhead Steam Boats are going on prosperously. At the commencement, the wind moderate, which sett sufficiently strong, was repeatedly out of order, and great prejudice was excited by one of them putting back when two thirds across the channel on its very first trip, but for many weeks past, the boats have gone regularly, and have made safe and expeditious passages, although the weather has been more boisterous, than almost ever remembered. On Monday last might a party went off from Howth, merely for the sake of a trip of pleasure; they sailed from that harbour at half past seven, and were landed at seven, in the bay of Holyhead; they embarked next day, and reached Howth harbour in eight hours; thus making two passages, in one morning, in the short space of 24 hours, sailing all accommodations complete, and the weather very pleasant. These vessels are bigger rigged, and capable of making good voyages without the assistance of steam, and in the event of their being Hulked and Not. Jacy, without any provocation, or other cause whatever, knocked down, and the said Hewitt, down on the deck of said ship, and forcibly and wickedly tied both his hands behind his back, and then, with a rope, which was in part fastened to the mizen mast, hoisted him up in the air, and in this helpless state suffered him to continue for two hours excruciating pain; immediately after which, without any apparent cause given by them, they severely beat him for three days, during all which time they (the Captain and mates) withheld from him all manner of support or sustenance; when the ship last arrived at Falmouth, the said complainant, Hewitt, had resolved to give the information of this inhuman and cruel treatment to the magistracy of the place, and claim the rights of a British subject; but was prevented from so doing by his oppressors, who persevered in their most wantonable treatment of him, and confined him a close prisoner in the forecastle of the ship, during the whole of the short run to this port.

Daniel Jennings, Thomas Jennings, and Charles Tabor, seamen of the said ship, laid on the same time information fully corroborating the said Hewitt's statement to the Bench.

The Captain and mates have given in bail to meet this serious charge at the Sessions.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 22.

The weather.—The Thermometer at York, on Friday at night, at noon, stood eleven degrees below the freezing point; a circumstance not remembered by the oldest inhabitant at the early period of the winter.

A Russian steve is now in the Thames, and several improvements are making in the mode of warming the House of Lords. The Lord Chancellor, last session, feelingly complained that he was not warm, even in his place on the woolsack.

In order to prevent that distress, which would otherwise occur, Sir Wm. W. Wynn, Bart. and Mr. Ellison have taken into his employ all the poor in the neighbourhood, at the handsome salary of 9 shillings. Their labor is directed to agricultural purposes, the repairs of roads, and the like. By only 10 that of the calorific employed; for they found the advantage in working their machines under pressure superior to that of the atmosphere; but the form of their boilers did not admit of their much exceeding this term.

In England they have gone much further, by means of an invention of Mr. Woil and which is combined in a way as to employ the steam at high pressures. It seems also, that the steam engines of this able engineer contain another material recommendation, which fits them in the heated steam vessel being in immediate contact with the piston of the large cylinder, as it is in the common machines; in the latter case, as is well known, the piston soon loses its accurate adjustment, because the steam dissolves the greasy substances which lubricate it. In Mr. Woil's apparatus the steam enters into a first cylinder, and there it presses on the surface of a column of oil, which is forced in into an interior cylinder, in which is the piston; it thus raises the piston without touching it, and, when it first begins to act it is condensed. It is clear that mechanism may also be applied on both sides of the piston, so as to produce a double effect.—Ib.

HALIFAX, Jan. 13—22.

We understand, that for the future, the English mails for Nova Scotia, &c. during the winter months, will be sent from Falmouth, to New-York, and not to Portsmouth, as heretofore.

The last mail from Quebec reached Fredericktown in five days and a half—a distance of 300 miles.

Her Ladyship the Countess of Dalhousie, gave an elegant ball and supper on her Majesty's birth night; upwards of 200 persons were present.

The last New-York and England will close the 25th.

We are sorry to state, that the dwelling house, chocolate manufactory, &c. of Mr. John Ferguson, were destroyed by fire on the 9th inst. Thus in the space of three short months has the town been visited with three melancholy and distressing fires. On this last occasion the utility of the engine pump was fully and deservedly demonstrated. It is nearly 15 feet in length and is strengthened with four iron hoops, the upper-most of which is armed with strong hooks, or claws, by which it is used to the sides or end of a wharf in an instant; the spout about three feet long, is made of strong leather; the bottom of the pump is plugged up for a few inches, above which lower apertures are made, covered with pieces of sheet copper, pierced like strainers, to prevent the boxes from being checked with mud.

Arrived, brig Eliza, Harris, 34 days from Demerary. Left at Demerary, brig Hiram, Spafford, for that place or the United States; brig Britannia, Jacobs, just arrived. Spoke, Jan. 19th, ship James Beach, of New-Bedford, from Portland for Demerary, three days out.

A gentleman arrived in town yesterday morning from Pope's Island, where he arrived there in the schooner Competition, about 8 days since, from St. John's Newfoundland, after a boisterous passage of thirty days. The schooner left St. John's on the 3d inst. experienced considerable other injury, and would be obliged to discharge her cargo of Fish. The Commodation has on board 20 Passengers, principally Merchants, and they were all safe. Harry, was to sail in a few days after captain Morris, and would also bring a number of Passengers.

Our information also states, that a schr. belonging to Mr. Ridgeway of this town, went ashore in the above harbour, but would be got off without any material damage.

A steamer, about 40 tons burthen, called the Shamrock, James Burke, master, sailed from St. Johns, Newfoundland, about the last of November or 1st of December, for this place with goods on board for different passengers—as she has not arrived, the following particulars collected from the master of a Schooner which sailed in company with her, will warrant the belief that she has foundered:—Dec. 22d, saw the schr. Shamrock, having lost her foremast, she appeared to be in a sinking state, it blowing a gale and the sea running very high; could not render her assistance. It is conjectured she must have gone down that night, as she was not to be seen on the morning of the 23d.—The owner, Mr. John Spencer, and his brother, were on board.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE, YORK:

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27, 1817.

HIS Excellency the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR, has been pleased to appoint LIEUT. COLONEL DUNCAN CAMERON, to be his PRIVATE SECRETARY, (to take effect from the first of January last) vice, WILLIAM HALTON, ESQUIRE, who has been appointed AGENT for the AFFAIRS of the PROVINCE, in ENGLAND.—And it is His EXCELLENCY'S pleasure, that all COMMUNICATIONS for the LIEUT. GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, in future be addressed to Lieut. Col. CAMERON, accordingly.

The House of Assembly of this Province have hitherto proceeded with the closest zeal and attention to pending every measure for the general improvement of the country—in particular they are taking the most judicious steps for carrying into execution the improvement of the Navigation of the River St. Lawrence, as well as finally prosecute that highly important object, with unremitting zeal. A very material debate took place yesterday, on the motion for a committee of Privilege, which terminated in the publication of this day's Gazette, but to the subject it is to be continued, we shall to present our readers with the substance of it next week. Let us hope, that the discussion will not check that spirit of harmony which has hitherto, one be carried to so great a length as to interfere with the public business before the House. Unfortunately such discussions too frequently elicit a warmth, and sometimes a asperity of language, which is very much to be lamented, as it is not only unbecoming the character of the Representatives of the People, but does not subside for some time, and is too apt to lead to other more unpleasant consequences.

On Saturday last, about two o'clock, P. M. a FIRE broke out in the residence of the Revd. Dr. STRACHAN, which consumed the roof, and a part of the upper story, nearly destroyed, and injured together by a low building forming a passage or Hall.

In this passage a stove had been erected, with a pipe running through the wall into the kitchen chimney; great care supposed to have been taken to build a large space of this wall round this place where the pipe entered in the brick, so that the wood might be at all times at the distance of from 12 to 18 inches, composed of solid brick and lime. It is conjectured that the fire originated about how the fire had communicated, but was it discovered till after a considerable conflagration. On removing the brick, the pipe was extinguished. It was the fortunate circumstance of the servants in boarding the stove top to prevent that he received or put in such a mass of brick and rubbish as to render the stove perfectly safe; instead of breaking the joints, had laid the bricks parallel, by which, instead of the pipe being forced out, it remained firm. The

Miscellaneous.

The following anecdote of the Prince Regent has appeared:—Mr. B——, familiarly called the Prince of the Beaux, was very intimate with him, his familiar, that he made a bet that he would call him plainly "Wales," and make His Royal Highness ring the bell. He accordingly watched an easy moment, and said, "Wales! ring the bell." His Royal Highness obeyed, and when the servant appeared, he told him, "Mr. B—— wants his carriage."—Mr. B. was thus turned out for his presumption. He won his bet, but the Prince never again spoke to him.

Extraordinary Character.—On Tuesday night, as a Mr. C. of Hammersmith, butcher, &c. was returning from the corn market in Mark Lane, on horseback, he was observed to sit with difficulty on his horse. He was taken from it by some ——, and conveyed to a corn-chandler's shop, where in the course of a little time he expired. His dress not bespeaking him a man of wealth or respectability—they were about to remove him to the parish workhouse. Some gentlemen, however, recognized him, and knowing him to be wealthy, thought it proper to search his person, when they found bank notes to the amount of £2300. On enquiry, it appeared he had been put in a violent passion a little while before, and it was supposed that during the violent paroxysm, he had burst a bloodvessel, which caused his death. There is no doubt that he died immensely rich. It is said that he was worth two millions and a half. He was 75 years old and has been accumulating property a great number of years—living himself at the most trifling expense. He frequently bought his clothes in Monmouth St. and wore them as long as they would hang together; in fact he could not be distinguished by his dress from his men. In the summer season he was frequently up at 3 o'clock, attending to his brickcarts &c. and assisting in loading them. His wealth did not improve or alter him in his conduct, manner or mode of living. He provided plenty of food for the house, but it was in a very rough style—Salt pork, fat bacon &c. ——— poultry. His hop-feelers and other men sat at table with him in their working dress; if a friend happened to dine with him, his men were made company for him, and he did not deviate from his daily plan, although he had company, of helping his men first. Although large sums were constantly passing through his hands, he did not keep money at a banker's. He made up small bank notes in parcels amounting to £100 and tied them up with common pieces of string. He carried large sums about him. He delighted to tell his origin and progress, which was, when he first went to Hammersmith, that he was employed as a labouring man at a malt-house. He commenced brewer in a very small way, and used to take the beer out himself in a barrow. His two surviving brothers, who live, the one at Hounslow, and the other at Feltham, are heirs to his immense property.

Wonderful!—I take the liberty to inform the public that I have made a complete discovery of the PERPETUAL MOTION, which machine is calculated to do the noblest kind of business, to wit: the said machine will, by itself, continue in operation, and keep in operation two saw-mills, which mills will saw out their lines, and when sawed out will stop themselves, and the tongler can put the same in operation again with the same ease as water-mills are, and will saw in good timber, with good attendance, from 2 to 3,000 feet of plank per day. And the same machine will at the same time produce power sufficient to put in operation six grist-mills, and the stones of said mills in each mill will make from 80 to 90 revolutions in a minute: and a boy of 15 years old can put the whole in operation at pleasure.

The Great Snow—1617.—As this year completes a century, since the great Snow, so often mentioned by aged people and which ranks among the memorable events in the history of New-England, a few particulars respecting that Snow, as related in a public paper at that period, may gratify curiority.

The Boston News Letter of February 23, 1617, has the following paragraph:—"Besides several Snows, we had a great one on Munday the 13th current; and, on Wednesday the 29th it began to Snow about noon, and continued snowing till Friday the 22d, so that the Snow lies in some parts of the street about six foot high."—On Saturday last, was a clear sunshine, not a cloud to be seen till towards evening.—And the Lord's day, the 24th, a deep Snow.—The extremity of the weather has hindered all the three Posts from coming in: neither can they be expected, till the roads (now impassible with a mighty snow upon the ground) are beaten." The News Letter, of March the 4th has the following paragraph:—"Boston: February, ended with snow, and March begins with it—the snow so deep, that there is no travelling."

PROCLAMATION.

BY HIS EXCELLENCY

FRANCIS GORE, Esq. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, &c. &c.

WHEREAS by An Act of the Parliament of this Province, made and passed in the Forty-second Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act to enable the Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, or Person administering the Government of this Province, to appoint one or more additional Port or Ports, Place or Places of Entry, within this Province: And to appoint one or more Collector, or Collectors of the same," has lately expired—AND WHEREAS, the said Act hath since been revived by An Act passed in the Fifty-sixth Year of His Majesty's Reign: AND WHEREAS, as well with reference to the Interests of His Majesty's Government of this Province, as to the convenience of Importers of Goods and Merchandize, and of Merchants, and other His Majesty's Subjects resident within this Province, it hath been ascertained that there is immediate occasion for appointing One other additional Port or Place of Entry and Clearance, at the Place hereinafter specified. Be IT THEREFORE KNOWN, That I, FRANCIS GORE, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, in exercise of the power and authority vested in me by the said recited Act, and by and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Province, Do hereby declare and appoint, That in addition to the Ports of Entry and Clearance, established by, and under the authority of a certain Act of the Parliament of this Province, passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act for "Granting to His Majesty, His Heirs "and Successors, to and for the uses of "this Province, the like Duties on "Goods and Merchandize, imported into "to this Province from the United "States, as are now paid on Goods "and Merchandize, imported from "Great-Britain, and other places." And also, by and under the authority of the above recited Act, passed in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and two, the Place herein after mentioned and Specified: That is to say, the Outlet of Burlington Bay, in the District of Gore, shall from the first Day of January next, be, and the same is by these presents Established and Proclaimed to be a Port and Place of Entry and Clearance, for all Goods and Merchandize not being entirely prohibited; and for the payment of all Duties liable to be paid on all Goods and Merchandize brought into this Province, from the United States of America, imposed and established by virtue of the said Act so passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign.

GIVEN Under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this Twentieth day of December, in the Year of our Lord One thousand Eight Hundred and Sixteen and in the Fifty Seventh year of His Majesty's Reign.

FRANCIS GORE,
Lieutenant Governor.

By Command of His Excellency,
WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Lieut Governor's Office, York, 19th Feb. 1817.

THIS is to give NOTICE, that Tenders will be received at this Office from such Person or Persons as may be desirous of Contracting to make the whole or any part of the water communication between La Chine and Kingston, by the course of the Rideau, navigable for Boats drawing two feet water, and ten feet width, also for Boats drawing three feet water, and twenty feet in width.

The tenders are to specify the number of Locks and the places at which it is proposed to build them: also the number of Flood-gates in each Lock, and the period for completing the work by the Irish Creek.

Tenders will also be received for opening the communication in the direction of the Rideau Lake, and the waters communicating from thence to Mud Lake, and from thence to Kingston.

Tenders, stating the securities for performing the Contract, will be received until the 20th of June next inclusive: and further particulars may be known by applying to the Surveyor-General's Office at York, the Office of the Deputy-Quarter-Master-General at Quebec, or of the Assistant-Quarter-Master-General at Kingston.

NOTICE.

Militia Pension Agent's Office, York, 6th Jan. 1817.

TO MILITIA PENSIONERS.

THE General Agent requests that all those entitled to the Pension, will transmit to him, with as little delay as possible, the Affidavits which they are respectively required by the Pension Act, passed in the last Session of the Legislature Mr. B——, unwilling to leave his friend, went after him. They pushed off. They had each a long pole, with which they hoped to keep the boat clear of the rocks. On both shores stood an overawed multitude, some crying, all vociferating entreaties to desist, and not rush into eternity. It was now too late: no human strength could have stopped the boat, when once it had got into the rapid current. To the amusement of the trembling spectators, they went unhurt over the first breakers, and rushing into the foaming torrent, evaded the first threatning angle.—Life was then for a few seconds more sure in their power. They might have jumped on the rocks, from which they were not more than three or four feet distant. The people on the shore screamed out for them to do so; instead of which, elated with this momentary success, they huzzaed, and waved their hats. Alas! blind unfortunate youths! that valuable was their last farewell to this world: they were just plunging into eternity. With the swiftness of an arrow they were carried to a tremendous vortex: their boat was instantly overset; they struggled for a short time against the roaring billows. Swam even the space of two hundred yards, on their backs, calling out for help and mercy. No help could be given. The distressed multitude gazed on them as they passed, and saw them swallowed up—never to appear again.

I did not hear this affecting narrative with a dry eye. The man who gave me the particulars of it, had been himself a witness of the whole, and was much agitated on recounting it. He told me, that not so much as a button of their waistcoat had been seen afterwards; and that two English gentlemen, who had come on purpose from England, had staid at Lauffenburg some weeks endeavoring by every possible contrivance to find the remains; but they had no success.—Boston Recorder.

A Brief Account of a Melancholy Event, which occurred at Rochester Bridge, (on the River Medway, England.)

On Friday, the 13th of September, 1816, Thomas, son of the late Mr. Gilbert, of Chatham, having attained his 21st year, a party was formed to enjoy the pleasure of a fine afternoon in a water excursion; it consisted of a gentleman, his wife and child, and 12 other young persons, from 6 to 21 years of age.

The party walked to Rochester about three o'clock, and took the water above this bridge, from whence they proceeded up the river, and went as far as Halling, where they passed the afternoon, in the most social and harmless hilarity; little anticipating the fatal doom which so speedily awaited them; and, after taking tea, re-entered their boat, in order to return. On leaving Halling, they passed away the time, and amused themselves by singing hymns, as the boat glided down the stream. On approaching Luchester Bridge, many persons were kneeling in their progress, and stopped to listen to the joyous harmony of the happy party, rendered more melodious by the serenity of the evening. It was particularly remarked, that this hymn they were singing, as they approached the fatal spot, was that interesting piece, which concludes with the following verse:

"The hour is come, consigned to death,
I own the just decree:
Saviour! with my last parting breath,
I'll cry, Remember me."

This was their theme, when they approached the bridge. The boat shot under the arch with the velocity of lightning, the tide being about half ebb, at which time it dashed through the arch-es of the bridge with immense force, and the depth of about 4 feet.

In a moment a sudden crash was heard, and consternal horror-ing shriek of agony announced to the trembling passengers above, the dreadful work of destruction. A beam, at that time about a foot under water, against which the boat had struck, was the —— of the accident. On looking over the balustrades, nothing was seen but the boat driving over the boiling surges, with its keel upwards, and a little dog which was fastened to it by a string. Nothing was heard but the roaring of the waters. Thus, in a moment, were engulphed fifteen persons, who in the innocent enjoyment of that pleasure which youth, health and religious hope-ss, were suddenly consigned to a watery grave.—Not one was saved—every soul instantaneously perished.

Extract from the Journal of a Traveller, on a late tour to Switzerland, through Germany.

"When the following day I passed through Lauffenburg, I left my carriage and walked over the bridge in company with a man of that place, who, seeing me look with great attention at the Rhine foaming through the arches, over a bed of rocks, said to me, pointing with his hand to a sharp angle, "there the two English lords were swallowed up." This was in fact, the place where, a few months ago, lord M——, and Mr. B——, made so deplorable an end. When one sees the rapid and deep course of the Rhine at this place, dashing its waters through a narrow bed of rocks, presenting for three hundred yards acute and sharp winding angles, it is not easy to believe, that so desperate an attempt would have been hazarded as that which cost those unfortunate young men their lives.—They were travellers; the beauty of the country tempted them to stop for a few days at Lauffenburg. The novelty and danger of this unattempted navigation, excited in them a wish to do what other people deemed impossible. The moment their idea was known, it was strongly opposed; and the opposition only served to confirm them in their purpose. They proceeded, however, with some caution.—They first pushed an empty boat into the stream, and unfortunately for them, and incredible as it appeared to the spectators, who had crowded both sides of the Rhine to see this experiment, the boat went through undamaged. This success, atchieved in the presence of five-hundred people, was a spur to the foolish pride of the two young Englishmen, who thought that they could not now relinquish their scheme without being laughed at. A second boat was prepared, and the next morning appointed for the experiment.

Deputations were sent to them from the magistrates who strongly remonstrated against the guilty madness of the enterprize, but without effect. Next came some of the clergy, to warn them against perdition, and to prophecy certain death; these efforts were equally unsuccessful; and on the appointed morning, they sallied forth, both dressed in white waistcoats without coats, and slippers. They gave their money and watches, to their servants; they knew, therefore, that there was a great chance of death. Mr. B——, went to the boat with a heavy heart, and even said he would not go, and remonstrated with lord M——; but his lordship jumped into the boat, and said he would go alone; upon which

Mr. Ingham, from the committee on the Post Roads, reported a bill allowing the privilege of franking to James Madison, during the remainder of his life, which was twice read and ordered to a third reading to-morrow.

BALTIMORE, February 20.

From the Thursday morning last, a fire was discovered to be smouldering in the cabin of the Genoa, kept by Mr. James Sullivan, which was entirely consumed, with all the furniture. Genoa and several other passengers narrowly escaped with their lives—and only escaped by leaping from the cabin windows.

The ground first discovered the blaze and a negro man alarmed. The flames it appeared to them had been occasioned by some burning embers falling from the horse floor in the cellar, which was filled with combustible material.—[Intelligencer.] Bread is now in this city.

NORFOLK, Feb. 19.

Came into the Capes—Ship Regent, Bell, 80 days from Leghorn bound to Baltimore.

We are unable to learn by the arrival of the Emily what is the value of the property of the Brigham, or any other part up the Mediterranean, since the imposition of prize money will be levied from Leghorn to England, and without knowing which the people of Italy were much exasperated at the late disgraceful duties, and at Leghorn, the inhabitants were only partaking of the benefit.

We learn from an official source, that the Gallatin is at the Navy Yard, in this city, undergoing the necessary repairs to enable her to proceed to sea with all possible dispatch. She will be ordered to the West Indies, to relieve the Hornet, which has been on that station since the European peace.

Ship Lord Castlereagh, from England May 14, arrived at Bombay, Aug. 6—having made one of the quickest voyages from England on record, viz. 84 days.

LONDON, Nov. 19.

On the 8th inst. the new Dutch Budget was submitted to the Second Chamber of the States General; and a message was received from the King, with the drought of a bill to prohibit the exportation of buck-wheat and potatoes, the crop of which has been entirely failed this year in Holland. The expenditure for the current year is fixed for 20,000,000 florins.

The counties of Somerset and Gloucester have formed an association to petition Parliament for a duty of 30 per cent on the importation of all agricultural produce capable of being grown in England, and a drawback of ten per cent to the exportation of all such produce as might be too abundantly produced.

William Cashmer Shaw, who had some time back pleaded guilty to a charge of felony, committed by the embezzlement of £10,000 of the public money, whilst employed in the Commissariat in North America, was brought up for judgment. Being asked what he had to say why the sentence should not be pronounced against him, he demanded permission to be heard by his counsel; which being granted, Mr. Pell-ew contended that the defendant having charged with a felony ought, by law, to have been tried to the colony where the offence had been committed. The 12th of the King empowered the Attorney General to proceed in this country against persons charged with certain crimes committed in the colonies or abroad, but it did not extend to felony. Mr. Gifford followed on the same side. The Attorney General in reply contended that the defendant being

Miscellaneous.

A brief sketch of the state of Sierra Leone, in 1814.

Sierra Leone is a country on the western coast of Africa, lying between 7 and 10 degrees N latitude. A river of the same name passes through it, nearly in the centre. The land on the banks of the river, for a considerable distance is peculiarly fertile, and therefore is well adapted to the cultivation of cotton, rice, sugar, and most of the other tropical productions. The heat at the colony inside is moderated by regular breezes from the sea, and is found in a good degree congenial to American and European constitutions.

This colony was established in 1791, under the direction of the Sierra Leone Company in London. The design of the Company was to cultivate the lands, to open a trade with that country, and gradually to civilize and improve the Africans. The first settlers were about 200 whites and a number of free blacks from Nova Scotia. They commenced the building of a town called Freetown, on the banks of the Sierra Leone, divided the land into lots to each individual, and thus laid the basis of a prosperous colony. The natives were friendly, and in less than three years the schools were regularly attended by more than 300 children. But unhappily a revenue of the Slave Trade, among all their prospects were obscured, and their reasonable expectations defeated. In 1794 a French squadron, contrary to neutral powers, and with a certain enemy, attacked the colony, dispersed the inhabitants, captured the vessels, plundered and burnt the houses. The colony has since been taken under the care of the English government, and is now in a flourishing state.

In 1811 the population in the colony amounted to about 2000, exclusive of several hundred natives, who had emigrated from the adjacent country, and were hired by the colonists as labourers.

The emigrants have probably been enrolled in the list of citizens. The present population, therefore, may be about 3000.

There is a disposition among the colonists generally to encourage new settlers who come among them, and to cultivate the land, or engage in commercial pursuits.

The principal employment of the colony is agriculture. The productions of the soil abundantly reward their labor.

It is believed, that coffee, rice and cotton have become articles of exportation. Rewards have been proposed to encourage their cultivation.

This tends to excite an honorable emulation among the citizens and to promote among them habit of industry and a spirit of enterprise.

The education of children is a subject of particular attention. There are a number of schools in the colony, one of which is assigned for the instruction of adults, the others for children. The present number of children in the colony exceeds 1000. Most of these are placed in the schools, where they learn all the necessary branches of Education. Separate schools are assigned to the boys and to the girls. Great order is preserved—Here they are not only initiated in the rudiments of literature, but in this state of discipline are taught the important practical lessons of obedience, subjection, sobriety and industry. Here are laid the stamina of their characters here are formed their dispositions, habits and principles; and here, in a great degree, rest the future hopes and prospects of the colony.

The state of religious institutions also deserves notice. They have six places for public worship, where the people generally and regularly assemble.—On the banks of the Sierra Leone, public service 3 and 10 in the morning, and 2 and 6 in the evening; other religious meetings during the week usually attended at 5 in the morning and 6 in the evening.

Several years ago a society was established for the religious instruction of the people of colour, for the further promotion of the Christian religion. We have before us a copy of one of their addresses to the religious people, which we should be happy to insert would our bounds permit. It breathes a spirit of fervent piety. They express gratitude for their mercies, lament the misery and degradation of their African brethren, complain of the injustice and evil consequences of the slave trade, and fully exhort their brethren to confide in that Being, whose Government and providence are universal.

Another favorable trait in the character of the colony, is the existence of a society for the relief of the poor and infirm. This was instituted in 1810; the governor is its patron, and the principal gentlemen in the colony are among its active members. The society is under good regulations, and is calculated to be eminently useful; its good effects on the dispositions and manners of the Africans can be easily imagined.

The civil state of the colony next claims attention. There are five courts in the colony, viz. the court of quarter sessions, the mayor's court, the court of requests, the police court, and the court of admiralty. The court of quarter sessions meets quarterly; the governor presides as judge; the jury consists of twelve men selected promiscuously from the Europeans and the people of colour. The mayor's court meets quarterly—The court of requests meets weekly—The jurisdiction of this court is limited to the trial of persons for debts not exceeding two pounds. The police court meets weekly; their business is confined to the trial of persons for disorderly conduct. The court of vice admiralty is held whenever occasion may require.

The colonists are governed entirely by British law, are usually quiet and peaceable and are disposed to abide by the decisions of their civil magistrates.

There was a society established in the colony in 1812, by the name of the Friendly Society. This society opened a correspondence with the African Institution in London. An intercourse was also kept up between the societies, in order to encourage the African settlers with a good market for their produce. The Friendly Society contracted with £70 sterling. In the spring of 1816, the society was worth £12,000 sterling.

"Early in the winter of 1815, about thirty people of colour left Boston with a view of settling themselves in the British colony at Sierra Leone. The vessel in which they sailed was the property and under the command of the celebrated Paul Cuffee—Capt. Cuffee has retained an interest in the colony, and brings letters from the emigrants to their friends and benefactors. We have seen one of the letters dated May 1st, 1816. It states that they all arrived safe at Sierra Leone, after a passage of 35 days, and were welcomed by all in the colony. The place is represented as a "good." They have fruits of all kinds and at all seasons of the year. The governor gave each family a lot of land on the town, and fifty acres of "good land" in the country, or more in proportion to their families. Their land in the country is about two hours journey. They have plenty of rice and corn, and all other food that is good. There were five churches to the colony, and five or six schools, in one of which there were 150 female Africans, who are taught to read "the word of God."—[Nat. Intel.

The Good Old Times!

The want of every kind of comfort within their houses, have long been a source to envy of the enjoyments of our forefathers in those good old times, which are the burden of many "an idle song," and the constant theme of repining patriots. We may form a tolerably correct notion of the comforts of the poor about the beginning of the 16th century, from the Inventus registered in the household-book of the great Earl of Northumberland.—From this document, it appears, that in one of the most noble and wealthy establishments in the kingdom, the retainers and servants had but spare and unwholesome diet; salt beef, mutton, and fish, three-fourths of the year, with few or no vegetables; "as thin," as Humphrey says, "there cannot be any thing more pernicious, than that kind of food," also, formed of the roast beef of old England.' 'My lord and lady' themselves do not seem to fare very delicately; they have set on their table for dinner at 10 o'clock in the morning, a quart of beer, at much wine, two pieces of salt fish, six red herrings, four white ones, or a dish of sprats.—Down to the reign of Elizabeth, the greater part of the houses in considerable towns had no chimneys; and the smoke found its way out as well as it could, by the roof, or the door, or the windows. They were mostly of wattling, plastered over with clay. Their floors were clay, strewed with rushes, and the beds, straw pallets with wooden pillows. In the discourse prefixed to Holinshed's history, the writer, speaking of the increase of luxury, mentions three things especially, that are "marvelously altered (for the worse) in England—the multitude of chimneys lately erected—the great increase of lodging;—and the exchange of treen platters into pewter, and wooden spoons into those of silver:" and he complains bitterly that nothing but oak for building houses is now regarded, 'for our fathers (says he) were built of willow, then we had oaken men; but now that our houses are come to be made of oak, our men are not only become willow, but many of many altogether of straw, in a sore alteration.' But though they had 'wooden spoons,' they had nothing in the shape of a fork, but took the meat out of the dish with their fingers. This is sufficiently clear from Tom Coryate, who had a century after the reign of the 'good' Majesty, it may be allowed, provided it be taken warm!" "Oh, well, well, doctor, very well, very well; warm with a warm ice." His Majesty assigned to be much entertained, and for some time afterwards always took the opportunity of asking those he was accustomed to meet, 'whether they had heard of Dr. Giborne's new system of prescribing warm ice."

UPPER CANADA.

PROCLAMATION.

BY HIS EXCELLENCY

FRANCIS GORE, Esq. Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, &c. &c.

WHEREAS by An Act of the Parliament of this Province, made and passed in the Forty-second Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act to enable the Governor, "Lieutenant-Governor, or Person administering the Government of this "Province, to appoint one or more additional Port or Ports, Place or Places "of Entry, within this Province: And "to appoint one or more Collector, or "Collectors of the same," has lately expired.—And whereas, the said Act hath since been revived by An Act passed in the Fifty-fifth Year of His Majesty's Reign: And whereas, as well with reference to the Interests of His Majesty's Government of this Province, as to the convenience of Inspectors of Goods and Merchandize, and of Merchants, and others, it is expedient, that a Port be resident within this Province, it hath been ascertained that there is immediate occasion for appointing the other additional Port or Place of Entry and Clearance, at the Place hereinafter specified. Be it therefore known, That I, FRANCIS GORE, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, in exercise of the power and authority vested in me by the said recited Act, and by and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Province, Do hereby declare and appoint, That in addition to the Ports of Entry and Clearance, established by, and under the authority of a certain Act of the Parliament of this Province, passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act for "Granting to His Majesty, His Heirs "and Successors, to and for the use of "this Province, the like Duties on "Goods and Merchandize, imported in "to this Province from the United "States, and for other purposes there "in mentioned," and Imported from "Great-Britain, and other places." And also, by and under the authority of the above recited Act, passed in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and two, the Place herein-after mentioned and described, That is to say, the Outlet of Burlington Bay, in the District of Gore, shall from the first Day of January next, be, and the same is hereby established and Proclaimed to be a Port and Place of Entry and Clearance, for all Goods and Merchandize and being entirely prohibited 1 and for the payment of all Duties liable to be paid on all Goods and Merchandize brought into this Province from the United States of America, imported and established by virtue of the said Act so passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign.

GIVEN at my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this Twentieth day of December, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Eight Hundred and Sixteen and in the Fifty-Seventh year of His Majesty's Reign.

FRANCIS GORE,

Lieutenant Governor.

By Command of His Excellency,

WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Lieut Governor's Office, York, 19th Feb. 1817.

THIS is to give NOTICE, that Tenders will be received at this Office until Noon on Tuesday next, as may be desirous of Contracting to render the whole or any part of the water communication between La Chine and Kingston, by the course of the River Rideau, navigable for Boats drawing two feet water; and ten feet width, also for Boats drawing three feet water, and twelve feet in width.

The tenders are to specify the number of Locks and the places at which it is proposed to build them; also the number of Flood-gates in each Lock, and the period for completing the work by the Irish Creek.

Tenders will also be received for opening the communication in the direction of the Rideau Lake, and the waters communicating from thence to Mud Lake, and from thence to Kingston.

Tenders, stating the securities for performing the Contract, will be received until the 20th of June next inclusive: and further particulars may be known by applying to the Surveyor-General's Office at York, the Office of the Deputy-Quarter-Master-General at Quebec, or of the Assistant-Quarter-Master-General at Kingston.

Miscellaneous.

From the General Advertiser.

From our London Papers by the Ann-Alexander, we have continue our selections. In consequence of the great length of the narrative respecting Bonaparte, we are obliged to defer many extracts of some importance. This narrative is compiled from a volume just published in London, comprising a series of Letters written by Mr. Warden, the principal surgeon of the Northumberland. It embraces the declarations of Bonaparte in relation to the examination of the Duke D'Enghien—the sudden death of Pichegru—the alleged murder of Mr. Wright—the poisoning of Josephine—of Et Arish—and exhausted the subject. We have been very diligent: I now read your newspapers with ease, and must own that they afford me no inconsiderable amusement. They are occasionally inconsistent, and sometimes abusive. In one paper I am called a Liar, in another a Tyrant, in a third a Monster, and, in one of them, which I really did not expect, I am described as a Coward; but it turned out, after all, the writer did not mean me, as "advancing danger in the field of battle, or flying from an enemy, or fearing to look at the massacre of fate and fortune;" it did not charge me with wanting presence of mind in the hurry of battle, and in the suspence of conflicting armies. No such things; I wanted, it seems, because I did not coolly take a dose of poison, or throw myself into the sea, or blow out my brains. The editor certainly misunderstands me; I have at least too much courage for that. Your papers are influenced by party principles; what one praises, the other will abuse; and so vice versa. They who live in the metropolis where they are published, can judge of passing events with more correctness; but persons living at a distance from the capital, and partizularly foreigners, must be at a loss to form a correct idea of the real state of things, and the characters of public men, from the perusal of your journals."

Napoleon appearing, as it were, to be speaking out, and to be in honour to deliver opinions instead of confining himself to asking questions, I was determined to speak out too; and I had no doubt that I should lead him into an interesting conversation, or induce him to write it down. I accordingly replied, "I really think that you must possess more patience than my countrymen are disposed to allow you, if you really wade through all the columns that have been filled on your subject. You cannot, General, suppose, for a moment, that the extraordinary events which have taken place, and of which you have formed such a conspicuous part, would not be considered and canvassed upon with great freedom by a thinking people like the English, and who have the privilege and they even possess it, of speaking & writing what they think." I was proceeding in full swing, and in a very patriotic way, when he thus interrupted me, "Sir, this subject is endless, and these scolding epithets only serve to confuse me; but there are observations in your papers, which appear to be of a different acceptation. You have (he continued) a writer whom I greatly admire; I believe he is of your country, a Scotchman, Macpherson, the author of Ossian. There is also a person of the name of Belsham; on what subjects has he written?" I replied, that I believed he had written an account of the reign of our excellent Sovereign." "Yes (he said), your laws permit you to write of each other's characters, and of one another." "Yes (I replied), such is the privilege of Englishmen; and possessing the infirmities of human nature, they may sometimes abuse it. Misconception, party spirit, and perhaps, factious minds may, at times, tend to produce angry and unjust accusations, and even violent opinions; but the love of justice and of truth form the genuine character of an Englishman." "And" (he continued) "you appear to handle my character rather roughly" and moreso, since I have been in your power." To that opinion, General, (I answered rather quickly) I must beg leave to address a direct negative: we have not always had the leisure to examine English publications which you enjoy at present, but I do assure you, that from the time of your becoming First Consul of France, to the moment when you set your foot on the deck of the Bellerophon, the English press has never ceased to fulminate its displeasure against you; and this without exception, for the parties who differed in every thing besides, expressed but one and the same opinion of you. This I presume you must have known at the time, though the vast projects that have oc-

CHARLESTON, Feb. 19.

A letter from Port-au-Prince, received in this city, dated the 22d ult. says, "I was sure when the late Spanish brig Africano was brought in by the remains of her mutinous crew, and Lieut. Her talk we were fortunate in escaping with their lives, as I never before saw such a set of fellows. They were all sent to prison, but remained there only a few hours, when they were taken out by the government, and discharged, each man receiving 16 dollars, and the brig Falcon made government service. She is now out on a cruise. There is a small sloop at present employed in cruising off this port, to convey vessels bound in, prizes to Buenos Ayres and other privateers, but to enter, as Petion seizes upon privateers, and those pri- vateers which come in to look after their prizes, share the same fate."

Captain Perkins arrived here yesterday from St. Barts, informs us, that a Heythian expedition was fitting out at Saba, a small island in the vicinity of St. Barts, to go against the island of Margarita. There were five armed vessels nearly ready, and were waiting for a reinforcement of five others from St. Domingo, when they would proceed. This expedition was supplied from St. Barts, where they had to agree to Simon Capt. P. sold a part of his outward cargo. The force it was understood, would act, in concert with the patriots.

February 21.

Late from England.—Arrived at the Bay of Dublin, Capt. Rowe, arrived at this port yesterday. Here received, the number of the preliminary of our commercial friends, London of the 27th, and Liverpool of the 29th December, both inclusive; together with Prices Current, to the last dates.

The papers generally speaking, are devoid of interest, if we except the speculations on the sudden return of Lord Wellington to London; to which event the London editors appear disposed to attach some importance.

February 24.

Earthquake.—Several shocks of an earthquake were felt at Jacmel about the 20th of January, and on Sunday the 23d, a very severe shock, which lasted for a minute, and which caused great consternation among the inhabitants. Many of the houses were so cracked and injured as to render it necessary to take them down. Two coasting silewards received at that island from Martinique, St Lucie, and the island from which have been very sensibly felt at those islands—It was also felt at the same time in the colony of Demarara.

By an order of the Intendant, dated 12th of February, all port clos, residents of the city of Vera Cruz, may be imported into Havanna, in foreign vessels, free of duty.

The art of making the wonderful Turkish Glue, or Armenian Cement.

This glue, which will strongly unite bits of glass, and even polished steel, and of course may be applied to a great variety of useful purposes, is thus made: Dissolve five or six pieces of gum mastich, each the size of a large pea, in as much spirits of wine as will suffice to render it liquid, and, in another vessel, dissolve as much isinglass (previously a little swelled, or softened in water, tho' none of the water must be left in it) in some brandy or good rum, as will make a two ounce phial of very, strong glue; adding two small bits of gum galbanum or ammoniacum, which must be rubbed or ground till they are dissolved, then mix the whole with a sufficient heat; keep the glue in a phial stopped close, and when it is to be used, set the bottle in hot or boiling water. It has been sold in England under the name of Armenian Cement, but that which it prepared there is much too thin, and the quantity of mastich in it too small; it should, as Mr. Eaton observes, when first communicated the secret, in his Survey of the Turkish Empire, be like strong carpenter's glue in consistence. The glass, or other article which is to be cemented, should be gently warmed before the application of the glue. This is certainly one of the most valuable cements in the world.

New South Wales.

The population of the British Colony of New South Wales, is as follows:

Civil Department, men 1,000—women 43, children 93—Military, men 561, women 131, children 262—Free persons, men 3813, women 1724, children 2764—Convicts, men 1660, women 265, children 187—Persons not victualled by government, men 3958, women 2103, children 2757—Total 12,911.

Cultivation.—Acres in wheat, 10712, maize 6089, barley 708, oats 610, peas and beans 51, potatoes 333, garden 901 1-2, Fallow 4768, pasture, 180,275—Total 208,347.

Quadrupeds—Horses 2328, horned cattle 23,615, sheep 62,476, goats 668, hogs 10,056.

Market, May 10. 1816—wheat 14s. 2-4 per bushel, maize or corn 4s. potatoes 9s. per cwt. fowls 5s6 per pair, eggs 8s. per doz. butter 6d. per lb.

Sonegal Rum, is imported at New-South Wales. The import duty is 7s. per gallon, the consumption of spirituous liquors throughout the colony, is calculated at 50,000 gallons a year.—Wheat is imported from India, and this is the'i safe resource to the agriculture of the colony.—The natives have destroyed many plantations, and murdered many persons. They also often have bloody fights among themselves.

There is a dispute between the Governor and Judges. The former insist, that the word citizen excludes emancipated serves as attornies, the judges resist; and no courts are held.

This British Colony has good seasons. It could have exported this year 12,000 bushels of excellent wheat.

Van Dieman's Land.

Coals are abundant; pine-spars, crooked timbers, see elephants oil and whale. Zealand flax, are only got in small quantities. Sandal wood is got with difficulty.

Bonaparte's Narrative.

cupied your mind, may have prevented your memory from retaining a detail of our literary offences; your official papers, however, marked their perfect acquaintance with the hostility of our journals, and returned their paragraphic missiles in every direction. You were rather angry with old England, when you ordered the Monitour to call us a "Nation of Shopkeepers." A great commercial nation, we are certainly are, and may we ever remain so; for it is that commerce which has provided a fountain of resources, whose failure would have prevented even the native and irresistible bravery of Englishmen from making the late additions to our national glory. But we are also a most noble minded, magnanimous, and generous people, and were never known to insult a conquered enemy; my law often has it happened that both our sailors and our soldiers have risked their lives to save a fallen foe? Even when you had thrown away one of the brightest diadems in Europe, and had accepted a slender sceptre in Elba, you were instantly treated with comparative guiltless by the more prevailing public opinion in England. And now that you are, as you chuse to term it, in our power, a generous nature is known to be exerted. Yes, Sir, there are numbers who would have rejoiced to hear that you had hit the ground on the field of battle, who are now disposed to wish you every comfort that can be safely allowed in your present situation. If the Northumberland had overtaken you to a French man of war, endeavouring to make your meditated escape to America, every officer, and every mind and soldier, would be heavily engaged in the attempt to take, burn, sink, or destroy the ship that bore you, yet as you have readily acknowledged, you have been treated by them, during the whole of the voyage, with every gentle, manly and polite attention. And if I may venture to speak of myself, I shall beg leave to add, that I was bred up in the hatred of you; nay, that no proofs of Holy Writ were more strongly imprinted in my mind, than the truths of the then universally prevailing notions concerning you; nevertheless, I am ready to show you every personal courtesy, to be thankful for the favors you have received from you, and to offer you such service as I am permitted by the benevolence of the government which I serve, to show you, consistently with those regulations which its political wisdom has thought necessary to provide for the safety and ultimate security of your person." I was resolved to speak my sentiments with freedom, and you may pose think, my good friend that I did not handle you roughly. I could not, indeed, forbear to defend the generous temper of Englishmen, when it received such an attack.

My candid sentiments and unreserved language appeared, however, to meet the auditor's approbation; and he asked me, to my great surprise, if I had considered the history of Capt. Wright. I answered—"Perfectly well; and it is a prevailing opinion in England that you ordered him to be murdered in the Temple." With the utmost rapidity of speech he replied—"For what object? Of all men, he was the person that I should have most desired to live." Whereon could I have procured so valuable an evidence as he would have proved on the trial of the conspirators in and about Paris. The heads of it he himself had handed out the French coast." My curiosity was at this time so much to be betrayed in my looks. "Listen," continued Napoleon and you shall hear."——The English brig of war, commanded by Capt. Wright, was employed by your government in landing traitors and spies on the west coast of France. Seventy of the number had actually reached Paris; and as mysterious were their proceedings, so veiled in impenetrable concealment, although General Rapp, who was at the head of the information, the name or place of their resort could not be discovered. I received assurances that no time should be attempted, and though I did not give entire credit to them, I took every precaution for my preservation. The brig was afterwards taken by your LYNCH, with Captain Wright, its commander, who was carried before the Prefect of the Department of Morbihan, at Vannes. General Julian, then Prefect, had accompanied me in the expedition to Egypt, and recognized Capt. Wright on the first view of him. Such intelligence of this circumstance was instantly transmitted to Paris, and instructions were expedited to the Prefect to interrogate the crew separately, and transmit their testimonies to the Minister of Police. The purport of their examination was first very vague and general; but yet, on the examination of one of the crew, some light was thrown on the subject. He declared that the brig had landed several French men, and among them he particularly remembered one, a merry fellow, who was called Pichegru. A clue was immediately had to the discovery of a plot, which, had it succeeded, would have thrown the nation a second time into a state of revolution.

Capt. Wright was accordingly conveyed to Paris, and confined in the Temple: there to remain till it was found convenient to bring the miserable accessaries of this treasonable design to trial. The law of France would have subjected Wright to the punishment of death; but he was entitled to consideration. My grand object was to secure the principals, and I considered the English Captain's evidence of the utmost consequence towards completing my object. He again and again most solemnly asserted that Capt. Wright did not land Pichegru, Georges, or Moreau, as described in the Moniteur, and at a much earlier period than has been generally believed. At the same time his residence was the town of Ridgeway, Genesee county, (N. Y.) We caution all persons against purchasing said goods, and particularly request that any information which may be obtained on the subject, should be forwarded to the subscribers in Ridgeway, Genesee county, (N. Y.) or to Joseph Judson, of Montreal.

The above reward will be paid for the apprehension of said Wing if secured in any jail in the Provinces, or within the U. States.

As he turned over the leaves of this volume he acknowledged that many of the reports were genuine, but with frequent inaccuracies and misstatements; and if my memory is correct, he particularized that which was given of the battle of Marengo. But he did not stop here; and distinctly declared to know not whether I perfectly comprehended his meaning, as that was his most earnest wish, when he went on to say, without hesitation, he entered upon the event of the duke D'Enghein's death. This was a topic that could not be expected; and particularly by me, as there appeared among his followers, who were always on tiptoe to be his apologists, an evasive silence or contradictory statement, whenever the conflicting events near the subject of inquiry, which had occasionally happened during the course of my visit to Elba. Here Napoleon became more animated, and often raised himself on the sofa, where he had hitherto remained in a reclining posture. The interest which he felt on the subject, and the energy of his delivery, combined to impress the tenor of his narrative so strongly on my mind, that you need not doubt the accuracy of this repetition of it. He began as follows:—

"At this eventful period of my life I had succeeded in restoring order and tranquility to a kingdom torn asunder by faction and deluged in blood. That nation had placed me at their head. I came out a poor Cromwell did, nor your third Richard. I found a crown in the kennel; I cleansed it from its filth and placed it on my head. My safety now became necessary, to preserve that tranquility so recently restored, and hitherto so satisfactorily produced. The conflicting characters of the nation well know. At the same time reports were every night brought me (I think he said by Gen. Ryal,) that conspiracies were in agitation; that instigings were held in particular houses in Paris, and names even mentioned; at the same time no satisfactory proofs could be obtained, and the utmost vigilance and ceaseless pursuits of the police were evaded. Gen. Moreau, indeed, was suspected, and I was seriously importuned to issue an order for his arrest: but his character was such, his name stood so high, and the estimation of him so general in the public mind, that as it appears to me he had nothing to gain, and every thing to lose, by becoming a conspirator against me; therefore could not be induced to exonerate him from such a suspicion. I accordingly refused an order for the proposed arrest, by the following intimation to the minister of police:—'You have named Pichegru, Georges and Moreau, continue me that the former is in Paris and I will immediately cause him to be arrested.' The author and a very singular circumstance led to the developement of the plot. One night as I lay agitated and wakeful, I heard a violent knocking at the door of one of suspected traitors; and chance, which in the world, occasioned my stumbling, as it were, on the name of a person who had lately returned from an English prison. This man's age, education and experience in life, induced me to suspect that his conduct must be attributed to any other motive than that of youthful fanaticism in favor of a Bourbon; as far as circumstances qualified me to judge, money appeared to be his object. I accordingly gave orders for this man to be arrested, when a summary mock trial was instituted, by which he was found guilty, sentenced to die, and informed he had but six hours to live. This stratagem had the desired effect: he was terrified into a confession of his own knowledge of the plot, and of another, a monastic priest, then residing at Paris. I ordered a party of grens d'armes to visit this man, and if he had quitted his house, I conceived there would be good ground for suspicion.—The old monk was secured, and, in the course of his arrest, his fears betrayed what I most wanted to know—he fled (he exclaimed) because I considered shelter in a brother, that I am thus treated.'—The object of the plot was to destroy me; and the success of it, would of course have been my destruction. It emanated from the capital of your country, with the Count d'Artois at the head of it, to the west he sent the duke de Berri, and to the east the duke d'Enghein.—To France your vessels conveyed undertakers of the plot, and Moreau became a convert to the cause. The moment was big with evil; I felt myself on a tottering eminence, and I resolved to hurl the conspirator back upon the Bourbons even to the metropolis of the British empire. My minister vehemently urged the assassure of the duke, though in a neutral territory. But I still hesitated, and Prince Benevento brought the order twice, and urged the measure with all his powers of persuasion. It was not however, till I was fully convinced of its necessity, that I sanctioned it by signature. That master could be quite arranged between me and the duke of Baden. Why, indeed, should I suffer a man residing on the very confines of my kingdom to conspire crimes which, from the distances of a mile by the ordinary course of law, justice herself would condemn to the scaffold. And now answer me: did I not take the most ample principle of your government when it ordered the capture of the Danish fleet, which was thought to threaten annihilation to your country? It had been urged to me again and again, as a sound political opinion that the new dynasty could not be secure while the Bourbons remained. Talleyrand never deviated from this principle; it was a fixed and unchangeable article in his political creed. But I did not believe in the policy or willing convert. I examined the opinion with care and with caution; and the result was a perfect conviction of its necessity. The duke d'Enghein was necessary to the confederacy; and although the resident of a neutral territory, the urgency of the case in which my safety and the public tranquility, to use no stronger expression, were involved, justified the proceedings. I accordingly ordered him to be seized and tried; he was found guilty and sentenced to be shot. The sentence was immediately executed; and the same fate would have attended it had been Louis XVIII. For I again declare, that I found it necessary to rail the thunder back on the metropolis of England, as from thence, with the count d'Artois at their head, did the assassins assail me.

"Your country also accuses me of the death of Pichegru." I replied, "a fact most certainly and universally believed throughout the whole British empire, that he was strangled in prison by your orders." "Pichegru," he replied, "was a able disingenuous folly! a fine proof how prejudice can destroy the boasted reasoning faculties of Englishmen! Why I—

In the Senate, a variety of important and miscellaneous business was done on Saturday, of which we have not been able to obtain the particulars.

The most important measures acted on were the bill more effectually to preserve the neutrality of the U. States; which, after considerable discussion, was ordered to a third reading on Monday.

The important bill to provide for the redemption of the public debt, was, with slight amendments, also ordered a third reading.

The following letter was received from the President elect, and was read:

City of Washington, March 1st, 1817.

Sir,

I beg leave through you to inform the Honorable Senate of the United States, that I propose to take the Oath which the Constitution prescribes to the President of the United States, before I enter on the execution of his Office, on Tuesday, the 4th inst. at 12 o'clock, in the Chamber of the House of Representatives.

I have the honor to be,

with the greatest respect,

Sir, your most obt. humble ser't.

The New Cabinet.

The National Intelligencer, received this morning, announces that the following appointments have been made "by the President of the United States, with the advice and consent of the Senate."

"To be Secretary for the department of state, John Quincy Adams, of Massachusetts.

"To be Secretary for the department of the Treasury, William H. Crawford, of Georgia.

"To be Secretary for the department of War, John Stelby, of Kentucky.

"Mr. Crawford, it is understood, remains at the head of the Navy department."

We have known for some time the last of a letter from Washington, written on Wednesday evening, which while stating the appointments mentioned above, gives the following additional information —

"Richard Rush, Esq. is to succeed Mr. Adams as Minister at the Court of St. James, and Wirt, Esq. of Richmond, is to succeed Dec. Rush, as Attorney General of the U. States.

"John Crowninshield, Esq. will continue Minister of the department of State, until Mr. Adams arrives.

"William Lee, S. Pleasanton, C. Freeman and R. Harrison, are to be Auditors of Accounts.

"So far all goes well this afternoon, and I believe it is in the main correct."

Extracts of Letters from St. Thomas' to a gentleman in Baltimore, dated Jan. 22d and Feb. 8th.

"A gentleman arrived here some days ago from the vicinity of Barcelona, and gives a bad account of the Republican cause on the Maine. On the 23d Dec. a general action took place three leagues from Barcelona, in which the Patriots commanded by general Pier, were defeated losing about 4000 men and only a remnant of them escaped. They are now blockaded in Barcelona, by three Spanish frigates and some brigs, and excepting that place, all the maine belongs to the Royalists—Margeretta is still in possession of the Patriots.

Had General McGregor continued in command, the result would have been very different, but the unhappy divisions among the Patriots drove him off in despair. He came to this place and after staying a few days went to St. Domingo.

Until this contest is decided, the trade from hence to the maine will be very limited. The small privateers from Margeretta, &c. still continue their depredations in the neighbourhood, but some of the Spanish Royalist brigs are expected daily from Barcelona, I saw in hopes they will then be dispersed. They rob every thing and are a disgrace to the Patriot cause. You must not confound Brion's squadron with those piracyons.

January 22.

I have late advices from Carracoas and La Guyra, every thing was quiet at Carracoas, and General Morrillo had arrived at Varinas on his way to Carracoas.

A singular circumstance has taken place here, (St. Thomas.) Some evening's ago the boats of the Danish brig of war Iylla, captured a piratical schooner (of about 70 tons, 40 men, 1 gun) which they found at anchor near the island. She proved to be one of Admiral Brion's squadron, regularly commissioned, and her papers in good order, and nothing like piracy can be proved against the crew, who are mostly English and Americans; yet they have been put in the fort dungeons and daily examined. A Patriot squadron, 4 or 5 in number, some of them large vessels, are now cruizing off the harbor.

I have no doubt but they will right themselves if this government does not release the schooner. Some of the Danes here are much alarmed, as the Independents can take the Island when they please.

I cannot imagine how it will end. Admiral Brion will not like to quarrel with and General Bolivar have gone up to Margaretta, whence they may attack Carracoas.

Some Spanish men of war are expected from Barcelona, a French corvette from Guadaloupe, an English frigate from Barbadoes, and we have a Danish brig here—so among them all, and the Independents, we may have some disturbances.

Extract of another letter from the same, under date of the 8th February, 1817.

"General Bolivar and Admiral Brion have declared a rigorous blockade of the main, to commence on the 1st of April, and as they have the command at sea, they will certainly execute it. We have accounts the 28th ult. from Barcelona of that part of the country the 23d of last month, with 2500 or 3000 men against Carracoas, but we have no late accounts from there. The middle ear opinion is, that he will not immediately succeed, but if he acts with prudence he may soon possess himself of it.

"The Independence, Capt. Schr. which I mentioned as having been seized here, has been condemned, but the proceedings are not known. It was a very handy Brion to capture all Danish vessels, and indeed every one looks for some thing of the kind. The government here is hostile to the Independents, but the citizens are friendly."

BOSTON, March 6.

Late & Interesting from Canton.

Ship Canton, Hinckley, 105 days from Canton, for Boston, arrived in Holmes' Hole, on Monday last—Bryant 1st. Thiers, Esq. a passenger out of the town last night, and informs that the Emperor of China would not receive the British Ambassador, and positively refused to accept the present sent him by the Prince Regent. The Ambassador was expected to arrive at Canton, from Pekin, by land, about the 22d Dec. from the frigate which carried the Embassy to the Yellow Sea, had returned to Canton; and on the night of the 23d of Nov. forced her way by the Chinese forts, sent three boats at Chumpee and Bocca Tigris, in doing which she fired upon and sunk two men of war boats, which were below the river, below second bar. The Hong merchants were ordered down to her; but as the Canton had before there returns, the result of the conference was not ascertained. On the 17th the Canton passed the frigate; a great number of men of war junks were in the river. The pilot of the C. was ordered on board of them (not the regular guard junks;) and on his return informed, that all business with foreigners was stopped for the present. The Company ships were not half loaded. On passing Chumpee, Mr. I. saw an encampment of Chinese soldiers.

From Canton.—Arrived this morning, the ship Thomas Clyde, Allen, 111 days from Canton. On the 16th of Nov. below the Bocca Tigris, the Hostress passed the ship Orwell, Kean, of Boston, from the West Coast, bound to Canton. The Embassy for the interior, from the English government had not arrived.—Spoke no vessel after the 17th of Nov.

Arrival of the Java.—On Tuesday last, the U. States frigate Java, Commodore Perry, arrived at Newport, R. I. in 40 days from Port Mahon, and 54 from Gibraltar.

The Java has been but a new Treaty of Peace, which was concluded with the Dey of Algiers, by the American commissioners, on the 25th of October. Mr. Hunky, Secretary to the mission, arrived in this city last evening, on his way to the seat of government, with a copy of the new treaty and despatches for the Secretary of State. We understand, that this treaty differs from that concluded by Commodore Decatur, only in the particular those relating to the sales of enemy's prizes in the port of Algiers during war.

The Java was when first appeared off Algiers, the Algerines appeared to be greatly alarmed, and immediately placed their forts in the most advantageous situation, and made every possible preparation for a vigorous defence. The Consul, sent on shore by Commodore Perry, was, however, received with much courtesy, and the negociation was commenced and concluded without any material difficulty.

The Java left the squadron under Com. Chauncy at Port Mahon,—all well. Com. Chauncy was preparing to sail for the United States. The Macedonian, United States, Peacock and Erie, are to remain in the Mediterranean until further orders. The remainder of the squadron are to return home early this spring.

One day later from London.—By the arrival at 1 o'clock this day of the British brig Governor Woodford, Capt. Dixon, from Liverpool, we have received a file of London papers of the 31st ult. and 1st inst. containing London News to the 7th of January. From the latest paper, we copy the following paragraphs; by one of which it appears, that the British government had ordered the immediate equipment, of a fleet of twenty-six sail of the line.

LATEST FROM ENGLAND.

Bridgetown, (Barbadoes) Feb. 10.

We were favored, at noon, with a London paper of the 7th inst. and we have heard that one of the 7th has been seen, which gives an account that orders had been issued for equipping, with as little delay as possible, a fleet of 26 sail of the line, to be ready for sea in March, whether the Duke of Wellington's return to England, and since that to Paris, should be completed or not (we refused to accept the present sent him by the Prince Regent. From Canton.—Arrived this morning, the ship Thomas Clyde, Allen, 111 days from Canton. On the 16th of Nov. below the Bocca Tigris, the Hostress passed the ship Orwell, Kean, of Boston, from the West Coast, bound to Canton. The Embassy for the interior, from the English government had not arrived.—Spoke no vessel after the 17th of Nov.

Arrival of the Java.—On Tuesday last, the U. States frigate Java, Commodore Perry, arrived at Newport, R. I. in 40 days from Port Mahon, and 54 from Gibraltar.

The Java has been but a new Treaty of Peace, which was concluded with the Dey of Algiers, by the American commissioners, on the 25th of October. Mr. Hunky, Secretary to the mission, arrived in this city last evening, on his way to the seat of government, with a copy of the new treaty and despatches for the Secretary of State. We understand, that this treaty differs from that concluded by Commodore Decatur, only in the particular those relating to the sales of enemy's prizes in the port of Algiers during war.

The Java when first appeared off Algiers, the Algerines appeared to be greatly alarmed, and immediately placed their forts in the most advantageous situation, and made every possible preparation for a vigorous defence. The Consul, sent on shore by Commodore Perry, was received with much courtesy, and the negociation was commenced and concluded without any material difficulty.

The Java left the squadron under Com. Chauncy at Port Mahon,—all well. Com. Chauncy was preparing to sail for the United States. The Macedonian, United States, Peacock and Erie, are to remain in the Mediterranean until further orders. The remainder of the squadron are to return home early this spring.

March 10.

One day later from London.—By the arrival at 1 o'clock this day of the British brig Governor Woodford, Capt. Dixon, from Liverpool, we have received a file of London papers of the 31st ult. and 1st inst. containing London News to the 7th of January. From the latest paper, we copy the following paragraphs; by one of which it appears, that the British government had ordered the immediate equipment, of a fleet of twenty-six sail of the line.

LATEST FROM ENGLAND.

Bridgetown, (Barbadoes) Feb. 10.

We were favored, at noon, with a London paper of the 7th inst. and we have heard that one of the 7th has been seen, which gives an account that orders had been issued for equipping, with as little delay as possible, a fleet of 26 sail of the line, to be ready for sea in March, whether the Duke of Wellington's return to England, and since that to Paris

Talleyrand, however, was said to be in possession of a letter from the royal prisoner, addressed to Napoleon, which they who are well qualified to know, declared he took upon himself not to deliver till it was too late to be of any service to the writer. I saw a copy of this letter in possession of count de las Casas, which he calmly represented to me as one of the mass of documents, formed or collected to authenticate and justify certain mysterious parts of the history which he was occasionally employed in writing, under the dictation of the hero of it. "Do not startle ; the letter was to beg his life ; and to this effect. It stated his opinion that the Bourbon dynasty was terminated.—This was the settled opinion of his mind, and he was about to prove the sincerity of it. He now considered France no other than as his country, which he loved with the most patriotic ardor, but merely as a private citizen. The crown was no longer in his view ; it was now beyond the possibility of recovery : it would not, it could not be restored.—He therefore requested to be allowed to live and devote his life and services to France, merely as a natives of it.—He was ready to take any command or any rank in the French army, to become a brave and loyal subject, subject to the will and orders of the government, in whose hands soever it might be, to which he was ready to swear fidelity ; and that, if his life was spared, he would devote it with the utmost courage and fidelity to support France against all its enemies. Such was the letter which, as it was represented to me, Talleyrand took care not to deliver, till the hand that wrote it was unnerved by death. Napoleon continued to speak of the Bourbons with anger. "Had I," said "been anxious to get any, or all the Bourbons into my possession, I could have accomplished the object—your smugglers offered me a Bourbon for a stated sum, (I think he named 40,000 francs) but, on coming to a more perfect explanation, they always seemed in doubt of fulfilling the engagement as it was originally proposed. They would not undertake to possess themselves of any of the Bourbon family absolutely alive ; though, with the alternative, alive or dead, they had no doubt of completing it. But it was not my wish or policy to deprive them of life.—Besides, circumstances had taken a turn which then fixed me without fear of change or chance on the throne I possessed. I felt my security, and left the Bourbons undisturbed. Wantonly, useless murder, no one has been said ever to have thought of me in England, has never been my practice ; to what end or purpose could I have indulged the horrible propensity. When did George Rumbold, and Mr. Drake, who had been carrying on a correspondence with conspirators in Paris, were seized, they were not murdered." (In looking over these letters for the press, I felt a doubt whether this observation respecting sir George Rumbold, was made at this time or at some other ; or whether it proceeded from Bonaparte or count de las Casas, but I am positive it was one or the other.)

Here he ceased to speak : and as I was determined to gratify my curiosity, as far as his present communicative spirit would allow, I was determined to continue the conversation. I accordingly observed, " that of all the undertakings which composed his wonderful career, no circumstance had excited such astonishment in England, as his expedition to Russia, before he had brought the Peninsula war to a termination, which, at that time, appeared to be the only feasible object." I paused, expecting a reply on the subject ; however, he gave none—but, as if he had not heard my observation, proceeded to a reveral, in some degree, of the former " ics.

" Your country," he said, " has accused me of having sacrificed the life and wounded of my army at Jaffa. Be assured, that if I had committed such a horrid act, my very soldiers themselves would have executed me, or would, at least, have looked to their ceasing to obey me. There is no occurrence of life to which I gave more publicity than to that. You have an officer, a sir Robert Wilson, who has written very copiously on the subject of my campaign in Egypt."—As he repeated the last sentence, he assumed an air and tone of sarcastic jocularity, and then asked me, if I had read sir Robert's publication. I replied in the affirmative. " It is passable," he said, " that he wrote from the testimony of other people, equally prone to error as himself ; he cannot pretend to have drawn it from his own observation. Can you tell me," continued Napoleon, " whether, sir Sidney Smith, in any official communication" to your government attempted, in any way, to corroborate the testimony of sir R. Wilson ?" I could not, at the moment sufficiently recollect the purport of the dispatches to determine the point, but I replied as I felt " that he had not." This reply, however, indecisive as it was, appeared to afford him considerable satisfaction, as he instantly repeated, " I believe so—for sir Sidney Smith is a brave and just man." I here observed, that " there are many in England who suspect your jealousy and hatred of sir Sidney Smith, influenced your conduct towards that officer." He smiled with astonishment at such an idea—the tho't of compiling the two names appeared never to have entered his imagination.—" Ridiculous ! nonsense !" was his reply. He then entered on the following narrative ; " On raising the siege of St. Jean d' Acre, the army retired from Jaffa. It had become a matter of urgent necessity. The occupation of this town, for any length of time, was impracticable, from the force that Jezzia Pacha was enabled to bring forward. The sick and wounded were numerous, and their removal was my first consideration. Carriages, the most convenient that could be formed, were appropriated to the purpose. Some of these were sent by water to Damietta, and the rest were accommodated, in the best possible manner, to accompany their comrades in their march through the Desert. Seamen, however, occupied a quarantine lebgerad, who were infected with the plague, whose respect to " made me by the chief of the medical staff ; I think it was Degouette.) He further added, that the disease had caused such a stage of malingering, there was not the least probability of their continuing alive beyond 48 hours." I here exclaimed, in a dubious tone, the word seven ? and immediately asked whether it was to understand that there were no more than seven ?" " I perceive," he replied, " that you have been desirous to count." " Most assuredly, general Sir Robert Wilson states 5, or 7 ; and speaking quite collectively—your whole sick and wounded." He then proceeded. " The Turks were numerous and powerful, and their cruelty proverbial throughout the army. Their practice of mutilating and barbarously treating their Christian prisoners in particular, was well known among my troops, and had a preservative influence on my conduct, and I do affirm, that there were only 7 sufferers, whom circumstances compelled me to leave as short lived sufferers, at Jaffa. They were in the last stage of the disease, which rendered their removal utterly impracticable, exclusive of the fine dissimulation of their ease among the healthy troops. Stunted as I was, I could not place them under the protection of the English ; I, therefore, desired to see the most medical officer, and observing to him, that the afflictions of their disease would be cruelly aggravated by the conduct of the Turks towards them, and that it was impossible to continue in possession of the town, I desired him to give me his best advice on the occasion. I asked him me what is to be done ! He hesitated for some time, and turn repeated, that these men, who were the objects of my very painful solicitude, could not survive 48 hours. I then suggested (what appeared to be his opinion, though he might not choose to declare it, that opium was the trembling hope to receive from me the propriety, because I felt it would be humanity to shorten the sufferings of these seven men, by administering it to them. Such a relief, I added, in a similar situation, I should anxiously solicit for myself. But, rather contrary to my expectation, the proposition was declined, and consequently abandoned. I accordingly halted the army one day longer than I intended. I marched from Jaffa, left a strong rear guard, who continued in that city till the third day.—At the expiration of that period, an officer's report reached me, that the seven were dead." " Then general," I could not help exclaiming, " no opium was given." The emphatic answer I received.—" no, none !—A report was brought me that the men died before the rear guard had evacuated the city." I again interrupted him by my astonishment at sir Sidney Smith, when he afterwards entered Jaffa, found one or two Frenchmen alive.

(To be concluded in our next.)

GREAT SQUIRREL HUNT.

Eighty-six persons of the town of Newport, N. H. assembled on the 21st of October last, for the purpose of a squirrel hunt and after being out a day, returned with 3000 squirrels, and 26 rabbits of other game ; amounting in the whole to 3034, measuring 33 bushels.

THE INAUGURATION.

SPEECH.

I should be destitute of feeling if I was not deeply affected by the distinguished mark which my fellow citizens have given me of their confidence, in calling me to the high office whose functions I am about to assume. As the expression of their good opinion of my conduct in the public service, I derive from it the gratification, which those who are conscious of having done all that they could to merit it, can alone feel. My sensibility is increased by a just estimate of the importance of the trust, and of the nature and extent of its duties ; with the proper discharge of which the highest interests of a great and free people are intimately connected. Conscious of my own deficiency, I cannot enter on these duties without great anxiety for the result. From a just responsibility I will never shrink ; calculating with confidence, that in my best efforts to promote the public welfare, I shall receive that candid support, which has always been afforded me, and which my conduct be viewed with that candor and indulgence which I have experienced in other stations.

In commencing the duties of the chief executive office, it has been the practice of the distinguished men who have gone before me to explain the principles which would govern them in their respective administrations. In imitating their venerated example, my attention is naturally drawn to the great causes which have contributed, in a principal degree, to produce the present happy condition of the United States. They will best explain the nature of our duties, and dictate which will be the policy which ought in be pursued in future.

From the commencement of our revolution to the present day, almost forty years have elapsed, and from the establishment of this constitution, twenty-eight. Through this whole term the government has been, what may emphatically be called, self-government ; and what has been the effect ? To whatever object we turn our attention, whether it relates to our intercourse with foreign countries, we find abundant cause to felicitate ourselves on the excellence of our institutions. During a period fraught with difficulties, and marked by very extraordinary events, the United States have flourished beyond example. Their citizens, individually and collectively, have enjoyed the most prosperous.

Under this constitution our commerce has been regulated with justice to other nations, and between the states it now extends from the shores of the Atlantic to the utmost verge of the western country, which has been enlarged by the acquisition of valuable territory, and peopled with great advantage to the original states. The states respectively, protected by the general government, have improved their internal system, acquired foreign dignity, and enjoy tranquillity within their separate spheres, in a wise position of power, as just respected as the sovereignty and interest of their respective governments have imposed their policy, extended their settlements, & attained a strength and maturity, which, under the best proof, promises to be permanent. And if we look to the condition of individuals, it presents a spectacle full of delight. Labor in general was never more in demand, nor was ever capital employed with more advantage. Mechanics and manufactures are in a highly prosperous condition. Our beautiful system of internal improvements is rapidly advancing to completion. Our extensive and fertile country, settled by a people unsurpassed in moral worth, intelligence and general information, is blessed with a degree of security, unknown to any other people. Our militia is properly organized, and our regular troops are placed in the most satisfactory proof in its favor. Just as this constitution was put into action several of the principal states of Europe had become nearly agitated, and some of them seriously convulsed. Destructive wars ensued, which have of late only, been terminated. In the course of those conflicts the United States received great injury from several of the parties. It was their interest to stand aloof from the contest ; to demand justice from the party committing the injury ; and to cultivate, by fair and honorable conduct, the friendship of all. War became, at length, inevitable, and the result has shown, that our government is equal to that, the greatest of trials, under the most unfavorable circumstances. Of the virtue of the people, and of the heroic exploits of the army, the navy, and the militia, I need not speak.

Such, then, is the happy government under which we live ; a government adequate to every purpose for which the social compact is formed ; a government elective in all its branches, under which every citizen may, by his talents and virtue, rise to the highest honor recognized by the constitution ; which contains within it no cause of discord, none to put at variance one portion of the community with another ; a government which protects every citizen to the full enjoyment of his rights, and is able to protect that right against injustice from foreign powers.

Other considerations of the highest importance admonish us to cherish our union, and to cause to the government which supports it. Fortunate as we are, in our political institutions, we have not been less so in other circumstances, on which our prosperity and happiness essentially depend. Spread over the temperate zone, and extending through many degrees of latitude, along the Atlantic, the United States enjoy all the varieties of climate, and every production which that portion of the globe. Penetrating, interiorally, to the great lakes and beyond it source of the great rivers which intermediate through our whole interior, no country was ever happier with respect to its domain. Blessed, too, with a fertile soil, our produce has always been very abundant, having even in years the least favorable, a surplus for the wants of our fellow-men in other countries. Such is our peculiar felicity, that there is not a part of our union that is not particularly interested in preserving it. The great agricultural interest of the nation prospers under its protection. Local interests are not less fostered by it. Our fellow citizens of the north, engaged in commerce, find great encouragement in being made the favored carriers of the vast productions of the other portions of the United States, while the inhabitants of these are amply recompensed, in their turn, by the nursery for seamen and naval officers which their industry affords, and the support of our common rights. Our manufactures find a generous encouragement by the policy which patronizes another industry ; and the surplus of our produce, a steady and profitable market by local wants, in less favored portions.

Such, then, being the highly favored condition of our country, it is the interest of every citizen to maintain it.—What are the dangers which menace it ? It may exist, they ought to be ascertained and guarded against.

In explaining my sentiments on this subject, it may be asked, what rules should be adopted to prevent happy state ? How did we accomplish the revolution ? How remedy the defects of the first confederation ? Our safety, in the first case, was in the national government adopted to provide for national purposes, without impairing the just rights of the states, or fettering those of individuals ? How sustain and pass with glory through the late war ? The government has been in the hands of the people. To the people, therefore, and to the faithful and able depositories of their trust, is due the credit due. Had the people of the U. States been educated in different principles—all they have been intelligent, keen, independent, or less virtuous, can it be denied that we should have maintained the same character, or the same career, or been blessed with the same success! While, then, the constituted body retains its present sound and healthful state, every thing will be safe. They will choose competent and faithful representatives for every department. It is only when the people become ignorant and corrupt—when they themselves become popular, that they are incapable of exercising their sovereign rights. Usurpation is then an easy attainment, and a usurper soon found. The people themselves are the only real instruments of their own delusion, ruin and ruin. Let us then look to the great cause, and endeavour to prepare it in full force. Let every spirit, virtue and constitutional measures, promote intelligence among the people, as the best foundation of preserving our liberties.

Dangers from abroad are not less deserving of attention. Experience tells the fortune of nations, that a state may be again involved in war, and it may, in that event, be the object of the adverse party to overset our government, to break our union, and dissolve us as a nation. Our distance from Europe, and the just, moderate and pacific policy of our government, may form some security against these dangers, but they ought to be anticipated and guarded against. Several of our citizens are engaged in commerce and navigation, and all of them are, in a certain degree, dependent on that prosperous state. Many are engaged in the fisheries. These interests are exposed to invasion in the wars between other powers, and we should disregard the faithful admonition of experience if we did not expect it. We must support our rights or lose our character, and with it, perhaps our liberties. Those who fail to do it can scarcely be said to hold a place among independent nations. Honour and interest forbid it. Our navy, work when finished will be permanent, and it is fair to presume that a single campaign of invasion, by a force superior to any ours, aided by a few thousand land troops, would expose us to greater expense, without adding much to the estimate, the loss of property, and distress of our citizens, would be sufficient for this work. Our land and naval forces should be moderate but adequate to the necessary purposes. The former to garrison and preserve our fortifications and to meet the first invasion of a foreign foe; and, while constituting the elements of a greater force, to preserve the discipline, as well as all the necessary implements of war, in a state to be brought into activity in the event of war. The latter retained within the limits proper to a state of peace, might aid in maintaining the neutrality of the United States with dignity in the wars of other powers, and in saving the property of their citizens from spoliation. In time of war, with due enlargement of which the great naval resources of the country are capable, and which should be duly fostered in time of peace, it would contribute essentially both to our ability of defence, and as a powerful auxiliary of annoyance, to diminish the calamities of war, and to bring the war to a speedy and honorable conclusion.

But it ought always to be held prominently in view, that the safety of these states and of every thing dear to a free People, must depend in an equipment degree on the Militia. Invasions may be made too formidable to be resisted by any land and naval force which it would comport, either with the principles of our government, or the circumstances of the United States, to maintain. In such cases, reliance must be had to the great body of the people, and in a manner to produce the best effect. All of the higher departments, therefore, that they be so organized and trained as to be prepared for any emergency. The arrangement should be such, as to put at the command of the government the ardent patriotism and youthful vigour of the country. If formed on undisciplined principles, it cannot be oppressive. It is the crisis which makes the pressure, and not the laws, which provide a remedy for it. This arrangement should be formed too in the time of peace to be better prepared for war. With such an organization, of such a people, the United States have nothing to dread from foreign invasion. At its approach an overwhelming force of gallant men might always be put in motion.

Other interests of high importance will claim attention, among which the improvement of our country by roads and canals, proceeding always with a constitutional sanction, holds a distinguished place. By thus facilitating the intercourse between the states we shall add much to the convenience and comfort of our fellow citizens; much to the ornament of the country; and, what is of greater importance, we shall shorten distances, and by making each part more accessible to and dependent on the other, we shall bind the union more closely together. Without this we do much for us by intersecting the country with so many great rivers, bays and lakes, approaching from distant points so near to each other, that the intercourse between the whole seems to be almost entirely among. A more interesting operation was perhaps never presented to exhibited within the limits of the U. States; a hereditary so vast and extensive, so much under the control of the people as grand, so useful, so happily connected in all their parts.

[The conclusion is unavoidably deferred until next week.]

BOSTON, March 1.

Brig Amelia, Leach, arrived here yesterday noon, from Havre-de-Grace; sailed thence the 26th Jan.

The only news by the Amelia, state, that the public affairs in France continued much the same as at previous dates. National quiet had been promulgated (and perhaps was not to be expected) respecting the cause of the visit of Lord Wellington to England. Though many are engaged in that fisheries. These interests are exposed to invasion in the wars between other powers, and we should disregard the faithful admonition of experience if we did not expect it. We must support our rights or lose our character, and with it, perhaps our liberties. Those who fail to do it can scarcely be said to hold a place among independent nations. Extract from a letter, Havre, Jan. 17.

The French government having succeeded in obtaining important facilities, in the execution of their engagements to the Allies, and their endeavours to facilitate the grand respecting a Loan, being in good train of success, the French stocks have taken more the beginning of the month about 12 per cent; this will have the influence upon commerce, and will produce a much more animation and favorable tendency amongst our buyers in general.

The King of France has issued a new ordinance to regulate the premium payable on the exportation of cotton manufactures.

A Hamburgh Mail arrived yesterday, and some additional Papers last night, from which the following are extracts:

From the Journal, Dec. 4—They wrote from Konigsberg, Nov. 20th, Nov. that of 651 vessels which have sailed this year from Pillau, 491 were laden with the 200,000 tons of corn. After they learned there that the Canal had proved indifferent in many parts of Germany, Holland, France, England, and the North, the prices of rye rose from 70 to 80 per cent. and wheat to 400 per cent higher than in summer.

Switzerland, Dec. 17.—All announces a successive fall in the prices of corn and other food. The markets are already well supplied, and as the number of sellers increase, that of the buyers diminishes from the great purchases they every family has made within these three years past. This observation is applicable to all the corners part of Switzerland.

Corn, on the other point also, corn is falling. Considerable quantities from the North have arrived in the ports of Belgium, and in consequence the prices are falling, even in Germany, where the harvests have been bad, they fall at every turn. Ct.

The happy change begins to the attempts at monopoly, and puts an end to the seditious movements which have taken place at Nuremberg, Landsberg, Memmingen, Ulm, &c. where they had become more extensive, threatened to increase the distress.

Miscellaneous.

"Well," he answered, "that after all, may be possible!" It was, I thought, this period of the conversation, that he stated his being in possession of a letter from Sir Sydney Smith, written in very complimentary language, which expressed the writer's astonishment as well as praise, on the accommodations which were contrived and executed to transport the French sick and wounded from Acre to Jaffa, and thence across the Desert. I here took occasion to observe, "that I take English travellers, a distinguished scholar and learned professor of the University of Cambridge had excited a very general doubt respecting the accuracy of this particular part of Sir Robert Wilson's narrative. Doctor Clark, the person to whom I allude," I said, "travelled through Turkey, and, as I believed, by the route of Aleppo and Damascus to Jerusalem, and from thence to Jaffa, where he remained some time. This gentleman, whose character stands high in the world, may be said to contradict the testimony of his countrymen, Sir Robert, respecting the charge which the former may be said to have brought forward against you, namely, that it merely states that he never heard of the cruel transaction, but very naturally observes, that if such an extraordinary event had occurred as the murder of such a number of Frenchmen by their own general, some traces or recollection of so horrid an event, late or soon, must in no country must have transpired and been communicated to him during his residence there." A question instantaneously followed—"Has this transaction said any thing of El Arish?" My memory did not serve me sufficiently to give an answer. "Well," he continued, "you shall also hear the judgment of El Arish and the garrison of Jaffa. You have read without doubt, of my having ordered the Turks to be shot at Jaffa." "Yes, indeed," I replied, "I have often heard of that massacre in England—it was a general topic at the time, and caused such a general emotion of horror, as British mind never fails to consider subjects of that description. He then proceeded:—"At the period in question, general Kleber was left in Upper Egypt, and Kleber in the vicinity of Damietta. I left Cairo and traversed the Arabian Desert in order to unite my force with that of Kleber at El Arish. The town was evacuated, the capitulation succeeded.—Many of the prisoners were found on examination, to be natives of the mountains, and inhabitants of Mount Tabor, but chiefly from Nazareth. They were immediately released on their engaging to return quietly to their homes, children and wives; at the same time they were recommended to acquaint their countrymen, the Napolese, that the French were no longer their enemies, unless they were found in arms assisting the Pacha. When this ceremony was concluded, the army proceeded on its march towards Jaffa. Zea surrendered on the night. That city on the first view of it, bore a formidable appearance, and the garrison was considerable. It was summoned to surrender. When the officer who bore my flag of truce, in a less experienced driver, he gave speed to his horses and the wheel of your carriage coming in contact with the machine, overset it with great violence, and immediately after you had passed, the explosion took place."—"That," he replied, "is not correct—my information is correct." "And it is also said, that you went to the theatre and enjoyed the play as if nothing had happened." "It is more probable that I may have made a slight observance."—And it is also asserted, that in a conversation you had with Mr. Fox, on the 2nd of July subject, you accused the English of having invented the machine for your destruction." "That is the fact," he said, "I certainly did." "And that you particularly alluded to Mr. Wardman." "Yes, Mr. Warden." "It is also said, general, that Mr. Fox contended it was not of English invention, but that the machine of assassination was repugnant to the national character. He also particularly demanded Mr. Wardman's opinion, he said, though they had differed in politics, he knew to be an honorable man and incapable, as a British minister, of uttering a falsehood." "Napoleon immediately rose in conversation, and exclaimed, that I had accused Mr. Wardman of a falsehood, and desired to ask him if he continued of the same opinion. "Yes," he said, "the English ministry were instrumental to the plot." "Their enquiry has gone on, and other extraordinary purposes." My English blood was a little up on the occasion, and my reply, dropped out rather hastily, was to the following effect:—"Sir, I now returned to the subject of Sir Robert Wilson, and asked me if I knew any thing of his military character, and the tendency of his writings, and if the latter had added to his fortune. I replied, that I could not speak upon either from my own knowledge; but I was induced to suppose from the services in which he had been engaged, he must have stood high in the opinion of those who employed him; and I had also understood that his works were considered as having been very honorable to him both as a writer and a soldier. "Pray can you tell me he continued, from what motive this officer has acted in the escape of La Vallette, the detailed and avowed friend of the man whom he has so wantonly calumniated." I was here, as it may be supposed, rather embarrassed for an immediate reply, but he gave me full time to collect myself; and I answered, "I that I had no doubt they were such as would do honour to his heart; whatever imputations may have been passed upon his judgment and his discretion. Somewhat of an adventurous and romantic spirit might have governed him; but it never was imagined by any one, that he was influenced by sordid or pecuniary motives; that also never seems to have occurred when the transaction was the subject of universal consideration and enquiry—There was not, I thought, a person in England who received him or his companions, with a diminution of their regard for their gallant friend, and their mysterious business." In an instant he observed, "I believe every thing that you have said, at the same time you may be assured, that as many would have been wanting to save La Vallette. I desire you also to give your particular attention to what is going to be said." He replied, "my dear, indeed, are too much indebted by their being accompanied by an officer, is so very disagreeable to me, that I must be resolved to suffer by abridging them. However I feel no inconvenience from the want of exercise. Man can accustom himself to privations. At one period of my life, I was many hours on horseback every day for six years; and I was once 18 months without passing from the house." He now returned to the grievance of being watched by an officer. "You are acquainted," he said, "with the island of St. Helena, and must be sensible, that with the exception of the limits from the moment that I quit this house till I return to it. If an officer, or soldier, placed behind my chair, every time I quit your governor, why not place ten, twenty, or troop of dragoons. Let them never lose sight of me, only keep an officer from my side."

THE INAUGURATION.

Washington City, March 6.

President's Speech.

(Concluded.)

Our manufactures will therefore require the systematic and fostering care of the government. Possessing as we do all the raw materials, the fruit of our own soil and industry, we ought not to depend in the degree we have done on supplies from other countries. While we are thus dependent, as a nation or parts of our, unexpected, and unexpected, cannot fail to plunge us into the most serious difficulties.

It is important, too, that the capital which nourishes our manufactures, should be domestic, as its influence, in that case, instead of extenuating, as it may do in foreign hands, would be felt advantageously on agriculture, and every other branch of industry. Equally important it is to provide at home a market for our raw materials, as, by extending the competition, it will enhance the price, and protect the cultivator against the casualties incident to a foreign market.

With the Indian tribes it is our duty to cultivate friendly relations, and to act with kindness and liberality in all our transactions. Equally proper is it to persevere in our efforts to extend to them the advantages of civilization.

The great amount of our revenue, and the flourishing state of the Treasury, are a full proof of the general prosperity of the national resources, for any emergency, as they are, of the willingness of our fellow-citizens to bear the burthens which the public necessities require.

The vast amount of vacant lands, the value of which daily augments, forms an additional resource of great extent and duration. These resources, beside accomplishing every other necessary purpose, put it completely in the power of the U. States, to discharge with the additional debt, at an early period. Peace is the best time for improvement and preparation of every kind; it is in peace that our commerce flourishes most, that taxes are most easily paid, and that the revenue is most productive.

The Executive is charged officially in the departments under it, with the disbursement of the public money, and is responsible for the faithful application of it to the purposes for which it is raised. The Legislature is the watchful guardian over the public purse. It is its duty to see, that the disbursement has been honestly made. To meet the requisite responsibility, every facility should be afforded to the Executive to enable it to bring the public agents, entrusted with the public money, to a strict and punctual account. Nothing should be presumed against them; but if, with the requisite facilities, the public money is suffered to lie, long and unemployed, in their hands, they will not be the only defaulters, nor will the defalcations rallying effect be confined to them. It will evince a relaxation and want of tone in the administration, which will be felt by the whole community. To avoid this we do all that I can, to secure economy and fidelity in this important branch of the administration, and I doubt not, that the Legislature will perform its duty with equal zeal. A thorough examination should be regularly made, and I will promote it.

It is particularly gratifying to me, to enter on the discharge of these duties at a time when the U. States are blessed with peace. It is a state of things consistent with their prosperity and happiness. It will be my sincere desire to conserve it so far as depends on the Executive, on just principles, with all nations, claiming nothing unreasonable from any, and rendering to each what is its due.

Equally gratifying is it to witness the encreased harmony of opinion, which pervades the union. Discord does not belong to our system. United as we are, headed, as well by the free and benign principles of our government, extending its blessings in every individual, as by the other eminent advantages attending it. The American people have encountered together great dangers, and sustained severe trials with success. They constitute one great family, with a common interest. Experience has enlightened us, on some questions of essential importance to the community, and progress has been slow, dictated by a just reflection, and a faithful regard to every interest concerned in the result. To promote this harmony, in accord with the principles of our republican government, and in a manner to give them the most complete effect, and to advance in all other respects the best interests of our Union, will be the object of my constant and zealous exertions. Never did a government commence under auspices so favorable, nor ever was success so complete. If we look to the history of other nations, ancient or modern, we find no example of a growth so rapid or so great; of a people so prosperous and happy. In contemplating what we have still to perform, the heart of every citizen must expand with joy, when he reflects how near our government has the Priesthood against the Mayor, and called out the Departmental Legion, to disperse the processions, consisting of the most respectable inhabitants of the place together with the mass of the people, who kept the Priests closely within their walls, while the Mayor on the other hand, supported by the National Guards, kept the Legion at bay, and caused the whole ceremony to be gone through without interruption, and in defiance of the Priests and their adherents.

We inflamed the people of Chatellernault against the Clergy, that a few itinerant Missionaries of the Duchess, happening to arrive there about the time, they met with an inhospitable a reception as to be obliged to retreat precipitately to another quarter. The conduct of the Priests of Chatellernault on this occasion may be considered as a first effect of the perfect de loi under the consideration of the Chambers, for allowing the Clergy to preach their own sermons without the restraint or interference of the Government, and thereby restoring the proprietary right to that body of the Priesthood, formerly become in future very importunate to the dying; they will deny their ministry to the departed, when the latter only have declined it, or not sufficiently required it, in their dying moments.

LIVERPOOL, Jan. 24.

Benjamin West, Esq. the venerable President of the Royal Academy, has just received a Diploma, from the Academy of Florence, bearing the 23d of December, for believing in a scandalous and infamous manner, such as is unbecoming the character of an Officer and Gentleman, in conspiring with a certain other person, to draw in and seduce Lord Beauchamp, to game and play with them; which Lord Beauchamp, it is proclaimed to have won of Lord Beauchamp the sum of £8000 and upwards; and the said other person claimed to have won of Lord Beauchamp, the further sum of £7000 and upwards. It appears that Lord Beauchamp was at last aware about 12 months ago, ignorant of play, and affected by the vice he had been prevailed on to take by the said parties. The Court sentenced Lord Stanhope to be severely reprimanded in His Majesty's service, and the sentence has been confirmed by the Prince Regent.

From Lower Canada.

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT OF LOWER-CANADA.

SATURDAY, 22d March—This day, at 3 o'clock, His Excellency the Governor in Chief came down in state to the Legislative Council Chamber, where, being seated on the throne, he delivered a message by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod to the House of Assembly, to request their immediate attendance upon His Excellency in the Upper House of the Legislature.

The House went up accordingly, when His Excellency was pleased to give, in His Majesty's name, the Royal assent to the following public and private Bills:

An Act to authorize J. M. Langlois, to build a bridge over the River Yamaska, at the foot of the Canada Seigniory, and to levy Tolls on the same, in the County of Richelieu, to fix the tolls &c.

An Act to authorize Timothe Dufour to build a toll bridge over the River Matane, in the County of Northumberland, &c.

An Act to repeal in part a clause of an Act or Ordinance made and passed in the 29th year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled "An Act to continue the Ordinances regulating the practice of the Law, and to amend the several Acts for the disposession of Justice, and especially in the new District."

An Act to erect a Court House with proper offices in the District of Three Rivers, and to defray the Expenses thereof.

An Act establishing Regulations respecting Ashes.

An Act to render more certain the Posts and boundaries of lands, and for establishing and erecting of Bridges in the several Districts of this Province.

An Act to amend an act passed in the 59th year of His Majesty's Reign, in so much as relates to the Salaries of the Surveyors of highways, Rivers, Streets, Lanes and Public Squares and Montreal respectively.

An Act further to amend an act passed in the 33d year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An act to repeal certain parts of an act passed in the 14th year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled "An act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec in North America," and to make further provision for the government of the said Province."

An Act for reviving and continuing for a limited time and amending certain parts of an Act passed in the 59th year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled "An act for the better regulation of Militia in this Province, and for repealing certain acts or ordinances therein mentioned."

An Act to give further power to the Executive government, to prevent the introduction or spreading of Infectious or contagious diseases.

An Act to authorize the closing and sale of a part of Capital street in the city of Montreal and for the disposal of the monies arising from the sale.

An Act to authorize J. Roy, Esq. to build a toll-bridge over the River Jesus, opposite the village of Terrebonne, in the county of Effingham.

An Act to authorize L. M. Vigor, Esq. to erect a bridge over the River des Prairies.

An Act to facilitate the administration of Justice in certain small matters within Montreal, in Quarterly parishes.

An Act to appropriate a further sum of money towards the payment of certain claims for the erection of the Provincial Penitentiary House of Quebec.

An Act to appropriate a sum of money for the payment of certain Militia Officers and other purposes therein mentioned.

An Act to grant to Pierre Casgrain, Esquire, a right of toll over the Dorn Bridge, erected on the River Chaudiere, in the County of Dorchester.

An Act for the relief of Students in Law, for the profession of Advocate, Attorney, Solicitor and Counsel, in this Province, and to make provision with the United States.

An Act to amend an act, to establish Post Houses in the different parts of this Province.

An Act to amend an act for the division of the Province of Lower Canada, for enacting the Judicature thereof, and for repealing certain Laws therein mentioned, and for establishing a Superior Terms of the Court of King's Bench, in the District of Three Rivers.

An Act to make good the deficiencies of the Funds, by Law provided for paying certain Annuities, Bounties and Allowances therein mentioned.

An Act further to continue for a limited time, two acts therein mentioned, for the better regulation of the Lumber Trade.

Then the following titles of Bills were read:

An Act for the relief and encouragement of certain persons therein mentioned, and authorizing them to associate themselves under the Title of "the Quebec Friendly Society," and to enact certain Rules, Orders and Regulations therein mentioned.

An Act for the Incorporation of the Montreal Insurance Company against accidents by Fire.

An Act for the Incorporation of the Quebec Insurance Company, for the same purposes by Fire.

An Act to regulate the Commerce between the Province and the United States of America by land or by inland navigation.

And thereupon the Clerk of the Honorable Legislative Council announced it to be the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor in Chief, to withhold the said Bills for the signification of His Majesty's pleasure thereon.

Then the Speaker addressed His Excellency to this effect:

May it please your Excellency,

His Majesty's loyal subjects, his Commons of Lower Canada, now solicit the Royal assent to a Revenue Bill, and to several Bills of Local Interest.

In distributing with wisdom moderate taxes, chiefly laid upon objects of luxury, and in a less degree, upon objects of utility, all paid in small sums, and proportion as he purchases: and of which the levying is certain, and but little expensive, the Representatives of the people have the advantage of rendering to every citizen that sacrifice easy which he hardly make of a portion of his property for the maintenance of public order, and the support of the Government instituted for his protection. Indirect taxes, which up to this moment have been tried without effect, and must, moreover, are continued for the two following years.

The Commons of Lower Canada, in allotting a large portion of the public revenue to the improvement of internal Communications, hope to surmount the obstacles opposed to the production of the resources of the country to the advantage of its climate. The multiplicity of successful public undertakings, which, by diminishing the price of transport, tend to the encouragement of commerce and agriculture, by facilitating their operations, augmenting their profits, produce the further effect of increasing and vivifying a laudable emulation among individuals, who the more readily embark in any project which is undertaken and encouraged by the example of a prudent Legislature aiding and not impeding the speculations of individuals, by completing the works which single persons cannot undertake by means. With such views does the House of Assembly distribute throughout the Province, and in proportion to the wants of each of its parts, the public contribution of works which individuals might have no immediate interest in undertaking. With such views, to commence making provision for the improvement of the navigation of many fine and great rivers, whose course is interrupted by obstacles easily to be surmounted, but which have had the effect of retarding the settlement and the prosperity of many parts of the Province, susceptible of rapid advancement.

Monies are appropriated to the encouragement of the practice of Vaccine Inoculation, a preventive discovery, one of the highest benefits of science, and most unpunishable. Not because the mother country gave birth to the man of talents, to the ardent and persevering observer who made that important discovery, is given to her the glory and the happiness of being called the benefactress of mankind—Benefactress indeed, public spirit, generous sentiments, have long been naturalized in England, and the discovery of Dr. Jenner has been better received there than it could have been if made elsewhere; and in a manner imparted there that virtuous enthusiasm which has already diffused the vaccine inoculation over the four quarters of the globe. Animated by the consideration of the good we confer on our country, by encouraging that science, we feel with pleasure, that it must fortify those sentiments of gratitude which is on so many other grounds, we owe to the country wherein that benefit is derived.

From giving to the husbandman the means of saving his herd only could we hope to put end to the distress, which weighs upon part of the Province—Public assistance is given for that purpose. But can such assistance be effectual—Is not abuse and abuse, that the Assembly has held itself to be under the necessity of multiplying its Notifications, of saying to persons claiming relief, that no unexampled circumstance has induced it to recur to this dangerous remedy of adopting a variety of modes of relieving the distressed, of leaving to Your Excellency the selection of the mode according to circumstances, and the power of adopting either.

Confidence is usually the work of time alone. The Act for the division of Districts, which from the first days of your arrival, Your Excellency hastened to succour the distressed, who have experience has shewn to be the most effectual remedy with which they inspired Your Excellency, has indicated the House of Assembly as the most proper to the execution of the Law. That confidence must have increased day by day in the Assembly, on seeing Your Excellency hasten to distribute, among, already officially exercised in the administration of a neighbouring colony, in facilitating the advancement of the resources of this Province.

After which he presented the following Bills:

An Act to continue for a limited time, an act to grant new Duties to His Majesty, to supply the wants of the Province.

An Act to grant certain sums of money for the purchase of seed grain towards the relief of the Districts of Distress, by Fire and the late harvest.

An Act to appropriate a certain sum of money therein mentioned for the promotion of Vaccine Inoculation.

An Act to make more effectual provision for improvement of the Internal Communications of the Province.

To each of which His Excellency was pleased also to give the Royal Assent, in His Majesty's name, to thank his Loyal Subjects for their benevolence.

And then His Excellency was pleased to make the following Speech to both Houses.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I cannot release you from the arduous duties in which you have been engaged, without offering you my thanks and acknowledgements for the time and attention you have devoted to the important objects brought under your consideration during the present session.

The readiness with which you have granted the supplies required for relieving the distressed Districts, and for other public services demand my best thanks; and I beg to assure you that every precaution shall be used to ensure the proper application of your bounty.

Permit me before we part to impress upon your minds the necessity of using your best efforts to cherish and encourage among the inhabitants of the several districts, the spirit of loyalty, industry and harmony, so essential to the prosperity and happiness of the Province.

After which, the Honorable Speaker of the Legislative Council said, that it was the pleasure of His Excellency the Governor in Chief, that the Provincial Parliament should be prorogued until Friday, the second day of May next; and the Provincial Parliament is accordingly prorogued until Friday the second day of May next.

In the beginning of last week, two medical gentlemen of this town were requested go to the to gaol to examine some flesh and skin, that had been found on the premises of Mr. Bowen, of two of the hangmen's children, who had roasted some for the purpose of eating it, having taken it for pork. It was immediately given out that they had eaten part of a human body. After a little examination, they thought they were justified in the report that, there had been an attempt at dissection of a person totally ignorant of the Art, as the pieces found presented the grossest irregularity, such as would disgrace the character of a common butcher. This was the professional opinion expressed at the examination.

Those who have acquiring knowledge, might serve as a faint apology for the deed, but then it ought to have, at least the appearance of coming from the knife of a person a little acquainted with the subject, and the parts ought not to have been deposited in so public a place where no ignorance would appear evident, and add to the already loathing idea of being trampled under foot, perhaps, by the relatives of the deceased and exposed to the dogs, as it is said had, more humanity and would not interfere. It is to be hoped that the Legislature will such diabolical proceedings, and that the Governor's interference of proper authority will effectually prevent a repetition.—Can. Cou.

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 1817.

On Monday last, at twelve o'clock His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, being in state in the Chamber of the Honorable the Legislative Council, where, being seated on the Throne, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was commanded to require the attendance of the House of Assembly, when His Excellency was pleased to give the Royal assent in His Majesty's name to several Bills, and to make the following Speech:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

The Session of the Provincial Legislature having been protracted by an unusual interruption of business at its commencement, your longer absence from your respective avocations, must be too great a sacrifice for the objects which may remain to occupy your attention.

I have therefore come to close the Session, and permit you to return to your Homes.

In accepting in the name of His Majesty, the supply for defraying the deficiencies of the Funds, which the Assembly has deemed it necessary to grant, and in the appointment of Commissioners for the purpose of auditing the Public Accounts, I have great satisfaction in acknowledging the readiness manifested to meet this exigence.

Horrible Superstition & Bigotry in France.

The pretensions of the Clergy have just given rise to some at Chatellernault in which a riot was occurred in Paris, in 1814, at the funeral of a wretched Actress. The principal Physician of the former town having died without receiving the last sacrament, the Priests refused admitting the corpse into their Church, and performing the accustomed funeral rites. A complaint on the subject was immediately presented to the Mayor, who summoned the Priests to discharge their duty; but the latter protested against this summons, upon the grounds of their ministry not having been called in, when the deceased was in extremis, and referred the case to their grand Vicar, who confirmed their resolution. The inhabitants of the town, who took a great interest in the affair, waited with anxiety the event of these deliberations; and on being informed of the determination of the Chapter, they proceeded to the Church, forced open the doors, and caused the funeral procession to enter, compelling, at the same time, the few Priests they could bring together, to perform the usual service. GREY PAPER

From the United States.

CHARLESTON, March 19.

Extract of a letter from Havanna, dated 6th inst. to a gentleman in this city.

"We have no news here, only that the King of Spain had ceded Buenos Ayres to the Portuguese; and the report is, that the colony has delivered itself up quietly to the troops of the same nation. Troops have arrived here from Spain for Mexico, and in a few days we expect a reinforcement to this place."

From the Baltimore Patriot, March 28.

By the schooner Traveese the Ocean, in 26 days from St. Jago de Cuba, we learn, that on the 20th of Feb. the Buenos Ayres brig Patriot, Com. Taylor, made her appearance off the Morro, in company with 4 small schooners under the same flag. The same day Com. Taylor demanded of the governor, certain men then confined in prison, who were a short time previously captured under the patriot flag, and who had taken a slave vessel, accompanied with a threat, that if they were not conveyed to him immediately, he would hang as many Spaniards, then in his possession, in sight of the Morro. The governor refused to deliver them up, and as far as we could learn, marched them off to the Havannah. On the 20th the brig Gazelle, of Philadelphia, Pickle from Charleston, for St. Jago, was boarded off the Morro, from the brig Patriot, and permitted to proceed. A few hours after, was boarded by one of the schrs. previously noticed, as being in co. with Com. Taylor, which was formerly the privateer Tocsin, of New-York, and out.

The supercargo of the Gazella being a Spaniard, he was taken on board the schr. and upon placed round his neck, and drawn close. They then threatened to hang him, if he did not confess the G. to be Spanish property. When apprehending the act of putting their threat into execution, he acknowledged her to be such, and the Gazella was taken possession of by the Patriot. The supercargo sent a letter on shore to Mr. Casenajor stating his situation, and wishing to effect a ransom if possible.—Mr. Sally from the Morro the next morning to go on board the brig Patriot, when he was called along side the schr. that had captured the G. and stripped, and otherwise abused by threatening to run him through if he concealed a single paper. He was then permitted to go on board the Patriot, where he was treated politely. After stating to Commodore Taylor the treatment he had received on board the schooner; the Capt. of the latter was sent for, and the Commodore threatened to displace him if he heard of a repetition of such conduct. The men ransomed for two thousand dollars, and the supercargo for $3000—after taking possession of several boxes of sabres, which they would not deliver up. The brig was then permitted to make sail, and arrived safe in the Morro in 2 hours after. The Patriot fleet had a Portuguese brig under her from New-York bound to St. Jago, loaded with provisions, name not recollected. Com. Taylor told Captain Thomas, that he came out to take some men from the schooner, and pay the market price for the same, which was $28 per bbl. The captain then mentioned it as his intention to remain off Morro 4 or 5 days longer, when, if the men demanded were not conveyed to him, he would bring as many Spaniards, if he could, to cruize off Mexico. Capt. T. gives it as his opinion, that if the schooner which captured the G. does not accompany the Commodore, it will be unsafe for vessels to sail along that coast.

From the Georgetown Messenger.

Wanton villainy.—A boy belonging to this town, by the name of Richard king, who had been gunning with his companions, took the gun from his father and deliberately shot two small boys, who were at a spring procuring water. One of the boys is mortally wounded—the other has his face much torn to pieces. The deed was perpetrated near the college on Saturday last—some of the collegians who went to the spot enquired why he had committed so diabolical a deed—he replied, "he only meant to scratch them." The gun was loaded with buck shot. On his examination, he said he did not know it was loaded—he was fully committed for trial.

INDIANA, (Penn.) March 15.

A letter from respectable authority in Green county, to a friend in this place, dated Muddycreek, Feb. 16, 1817—states, that Henry Heston slipped under the ice some where about his mill, this winter—that his dumb son saw him go under, and had the presence of mind to run down the river some distance to an air hole that was in the ice, and soon there did his father come down, and with much difficulty got him out. It was some time before the family of speech returned:—he is now living.

Mr. Heston was formerly a representative in the state Legislature from Fayette county.—His son, about 15 years old, has been both deaf and dumb from his infancy.

NEW-YORK, March 28.

Sanguinary Battle.

Advices from Baltimore, we understand, were received in town this morning, announcing, that on the 3d or 4th of February, Gen. Bolivar, at the head of about 2000 men, was defeated in action with the Royalists in the vicinity of Caracas, that he retreated in the direction of Barcelona, and immediately dispatched a messenger to request Arismendi, (who, at the head of about 1500 men, was only a hundred miles distant) to meet him at that place, where he should risk another engagement—that Bolivar on the 10th, met with a convent in the neighborhood of Barcelona—that on the same evening, the Royalists entered Barcelona, and commenced a savage and indiscriminate massacre of its inhabitants—that at 10 o'clock in the evening, Bolivar, with his troops rushed upon them by surprize, and beat them to the swamps—that in the contest, Bolivar lost about 400 men and the Royalists 1000, and the surviving Royalists fled from the city, and retreated towards Cumana—and that, on the following day, they were met by Arismendi, and again defeated with great slaughter.

Such, we understand, is the substance of the intelligence received at Baltimore, by a vessel in 30 days from Margaretta.

From the Federal Republican, March 26.

On the 12th, general Bolivar by an express, ordered admiral Brion to get in readiness with the second division of his fleet, to intercept any of his enemies if they should attempt an escape by water, and to stop all supplies from that quarter, while he himself in the rear deprives them of all supplies from the country. The royalists have in the bay 1 sloop of war, 3 gun brigs and one schooner, not half manned—The second division of the patriotic fleet, consists of the Indian Lebre, of 44 twelve pound carronades, and 1 long twelve pound travelling gun; the Decatur, mounting two long 9 pounders, and twelve 32 pound carronades; the Diana, mounting five 9 pounders, long guns; a prize brig called the Republic, carrying 16 carronades of 12 pounds; the schooner Mary Ann, of 4 guns, with all the privateers under the flag of Venezuela, all well manned, and principally by Americans and French. The commanders were all Americans or Frenchmen.

A rumour was in circulation at St. Thomas, that the fleet had sailed from Laguira, to the relief of Cumana, or to blockade the port of Margaretta. This it is presumed will avail nothing, as it is confidently expected that before the Spanish fleet could work up to Cumana, it will be in the possession of the patriots. By a blockade of Margaretta, the Spanish fleet will be compelled to divide their force into three squadrons, which would put the safety of the whole fleet in jeopardy. Gen. Bolivar in a letter to admiral Brian, dated 13th, assures him that he shall by the 20th be in possession of the Morro, and that he then without difficulty march to Laguira, which not being in a defensible state, he thought will fall an easy prey, and thus the independence of the Caracas be secured.—We are further informed that on the 13th of Feb. Peter who commanded a privateer, out of the port of Margaretta, was shot and beheaded for piracy. Admiral Brian is using every possible exertion, to detect and bring to condign punishment, the pirates who have committed so many depredations in the West Indies: he has now three in close confinement, who will soon be tried; one named Joseph, a black man by the name of Peter, and John Panell, formerly the commander of the Decatur. Admiral Brian has taken all the privateers into requisition, and will now grant no commissions.—We are further informed, that on the 9th of Feb. the Decatur fell in with three Spanish brigs of war and fought them upwards of one hour, before she could effect her escape; it is thought that if there had been but two vessels, she would have brought them into Margaretta. The Decatur did not receive a single shot, but seven men were wounded. The Spanish vessels were much cut to pieces, and one actually ceased firing, and hauled off.

The story of a new revolution in Hayti was first published in this city, and was brought to this port by a vessel which spoke another vessel, which had received this news from a British Packet bound to Barbadoes. It was said that through another channel, but from the same source, a Packet from England, bound to Barbadoes; and would seem to be in some measure confirmed. It is not confirmed, were it not accompanied by the additional information, that the British government were preparing an expedition of twenty-one sail of the line. This unfortunate addition, betrays the rumor, and proves it to be a month old or than its dates appeared to indicate.

Whoever will turn to the Commercial Advertiser of the 10th and 11th inst. will find among others the following extracts from the Barbadoes Mercury:

"BRIDGETOWN, (Barbadoes,) Feb. 8.

"The brig Brisk, 30 days from Falmouth, bound to Jamaica, arrived this forenoon.

"Bonetowns, (Barbadoes) Feb. 10.

"We were informed, at noon, with a London paper of the 6th ult. and we have heard that one of the 7th has been received, which gives an account that orders had been issued for equipping, with as little delay as possible, 21 sail of the line: whether the Duke of Wellington's return to England, and since that to Ennace against may be connected with this war-like preparation will speedily be developed."

Now in the course of the development, rumor, who is always an ingenious, as well as busy fellow, roundly asserted, that "a new revolution had broken out in France;" or as it was better worded on Friday, that "all the South of France had revolted, and that the King and Royal family had quitted the kingdom for safety."

It is hardly necessary to add, that random paragraphs of 20 lines after the above received at Barbadoes, have reached this country.

Extract of a letter from Norfolk, to a gentleman at Washington, dated the 21st instant.

"Two privateers, under the Buenos Ayres flag, have arrived at this port; one is a brig, called the Independence of the South, and the other a schooner, called the Bolivar, alias the Decatur. On coming up they saluted the Fort, which was returned. The brig mounts fifteen guns and carries sixty men, with a crew of 150 men, all Americans or British subjects, as nothing but English is spoken on board; there are not three Spaniards among the whole crew.

"The exact amount of specie which they have on board is not known; some say $100,000, others $200,000 dollars; but it has been ascertained they have deposited $60,000 in the bank. Those vessels were both fitted out at Baltimore."

Summary Punishment.

Our Boston [i. e. C. H.] correspondent, writes us that he has received a letter from Port-au-Prince, dated 20th Feb. stating that an unfortunate fracas had taken place the day previous on board the brig Merchant, Burnham, of Kennebunk, while the captain was on shore. It appears that two black men went on board of the brig, and as soon as they were at work between decks; that the mats sent one of the crew to order them away; that another of the crew also presented a knife, and observing the negroes rather dilatory as to leaving the brig, took up a stave, and struck one of them; the negro then struck fell into the boat along side, and, either by the blow or the fall, had his neck broken, and he consequently died.—The man who struck the blow was immediately taken before the Court Milstaire, and condemned without benefit of Counsel, to be shot at o'clock the same day, (five hours after the fracas took place) —and the sentence was put in execution, the seaman receiving seventeen balls in his body, and his head was severed from his shoulders by a file of men, and his body thrown into the sea.

The mountains in the vicinity of Lake George and in Vermont, abound with variety of minerals, among which are found, in inexhaustible quantities, the richest iron ore. Several forges are now in operation in the counties of Washington, Warren, Essex, and Clinton, the number of which may be indefinitely increased; and the iron which they produce is very little, if at all inferior in quality to the best iron manufactured in the U. States; nor can it be doubted, that, after the completion of the Erie canal, the middle and western parts of this state would be furnished with this necessary article, on as low and reasonable terms than it can at present be procured.

The inhabitants of the large tract of country on both sides of Lake Champlain, embracing a considerable portion of the state of Vermont, would find, by the opening a Canal, a permanent market in the city of New-York for the intermediate places, for their pot and pearl ashes, and also for all their lumber, which is now transported to places whence they would also be cheaply supplied with all the necessary articles of foreign growth.

The coast of the northern part of this state, which at present is unwrought in the mine, and the fine marble of Vermont, would be brought into use; the quarry, would be converted to useful and ornamental purposes in the west, in exchange for salt and gypsum: and thus the large sums of money annually sent abroad for the purchase of iron, of salt, and of gypsum, would be retained in the country, and, in addition, and added to the permanent wealth of the state.

In short, the connection of Lake Champlain with the Hudson, by means of a Canal, would greatly enhance the value of the northern lands: it would serve vast sums in the price of transportation; it would open new and increasing sources of wealth; it would detach from the province of Lower Canada, and turn to the south, the profits of the trade of Lake Champlain; and, by imparting activity and enterprize to agricultural, commercial and mechanical pursuits, it would add to our industry and resources, and thereby augment the substantial wealth and prosperity of the state.

The examination and levels for this Canal, have been made under the direction of the commissioners, by Col. Lewis Jarvis, and the line for the same has been marked out upon the maps herewith presented. There are two places of departure from the Hudson, in order to connect that river with Lake Champlain, each of which affords a very favorable route, in point of soil, to be excavated, and of materials for the artificial works. One of those routes, by commencing at the mouth of Fort Edward creek, and pursuing the course of that creek to the summit level, and then following the ravine of Wood-creek, will reach Whitehall, at the distance of 22 miles. This route was formerly considered most eligible by a number of commissioners composed of Gen. Schuyler and others. By the levels, however, taken by the engineer, that the other route may be preferable, which commences about six miles further down the river, near the mouth of Mount Hill, and which, by the natural channel of this kill, and of Dead creek, joined to a short length of artificial Canal, reaches the summit level from whence it proceeds—partly by the natural channel of Wood-creek, and partly by artificial cuts, which greatly shorten the distance to Whitehall. The length of this route is twenty-eight miles, and it passes over a soil which is, in general, remarkably favorable, consisting principally of vegetable mould, loam and clay. At the northern termination of the Canal, a few yards of limestone excavation will be necessary; this, however, is not deemed an unfavorable circumstance, as the stone is of such a quality as will be useful in the construction of locks, and of the towing path. That the materials for the construction of the locks between Lake Champlain and the Hudson can be procured with little difficulty, Rollers 108 Hudson and Lake Champlain 9 locks, at 8000 dollars each, viz. three at the Hudson of 7.70 feet lift 24,000 Stone walls, mitred over will be attained and by a steep casting of the bank of the river, for 12 feet lift, and the length of which is about two miles; the remaining 6 feet lift will be made of stone miles, and will terminate one mile south of Fort Edward. The two locks will be necessary of 6.27 feet lift each, at the mouth of Wood creek, Whitehall, two locks, the first of 8.23 feet lift, and the second of 7.50 feet lift, and the remaining 11 ft. 10 inch of the Canal to be excavated in the Lake George and Champlain, for the navigation of the Canal—About fifteen miles of this route will require excavation, as the Canal for that distance will be made on the bank of the Hudson and Wood creek and Whitehall. In order to turn off as much water as possible from entering the locks and to secure at all times a sufficiency of water for the navigation, it is proposed to erect a dam across the river, about eighteen feet in height, half a mile above the mouth of Wood creek, and by a canal cut round the falls to the south to direct so much water of said branch of the Hudson as may from thence be several waste weirs, into the Hudson, as may be necessary for the convenience of the canal.

The Canal from the mouth of Wood creek to the 3d lock at the distance of 20 feet at the bottom, and 40 feet at the top, is intended to be 70 feet long and 10 feet wide in the clear.

By the method of calculation hereafter adopted by the Commissioners, the whole expence between Lake Champlain and the Hudson, at the mouth of Wood creek, is computed at twenty hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

From the above it will be seen that it is proposed to improve the channel of the Hudson for the purpose of navigation so far south as the village of Stillwater, and for the benefit of the navigation of the Hudson, it is proposed to erect a dam across the river, at the head of Fort Miller falls, a side cut or artificial canal of about one mile in length, with one lock of 8 feet lift, and a waste weir to be necessary. These works, including the dam, locks, excavation, towing path, and all other expences, are computed at one thousand dollars.

There are two falls miles below this place, at the head of which is another dam of three feet in height, with a lock and waste weir, and a navigation up to the Saratoga falls.

Between the falls, the construction of a towing path, with several bridges, the purchase of lands for the same, which is supposed will be necessary, together with all the other expences of this section, are estimated at fifty thousand dollars.

From the village of Stillwater, at a point above the mouth of Mohawk river, it is proposed to make an artificial Canal to the village of Waterford, a distance of 2½ miles, with a towing path 20 feet wide, at the bottom, and 40 feet wide at the top of the bank; which will require eight locks. The excavation of this Canal for some distance near the upper end, will be considerably deep, and in passing through a slate rock; the middle and lower parts of the Canal are very favorable.

26 feet lockage, at $3000 per foot.	78,000
2½ miles excavation and towing path 40 feet wide, at an average of $30,	300,000
8 locks, at an average of $30,	240,000

Recapitulation of Expenses.

From Whitehall to the Hudson,	250,000
Dam, side cut and other works, at Fort Miller falls,	50,000
Dam, excavation falls, &c.	50,000
To Stillwater, including dam, &c.	50,000
From Stillwater to Waterford including locks,	618,000
Add for contingent expenses, engineers and superintendence,	80,000
Total.	$1,700,000

Whether the Canal from Lake Champlain across the Hudson at Fort Edward creek or at Moses' kill, is not very material in the estimate of expence; and the commissioners wish to be exclusively understood, that they consider this omelets as still open, and as one which will require mature deliberation; it is ascertained that both routes are equally practicable.

The termination of the northern Canal at

Whitehall, will afford the facilities of water and land carriage to the towns of Putney and Tony, and the villages of Lansingburgh and Westfield, a full participation of its benefits; and the construction of the Canal, as proposed, will open the most beneficial channels of communication between every great section of the country, and will thereby provide for promoting the activity and enlarging the sphere of inland trade, which constitutes one of the principal elements of national opulence, prosperity, and greatness. And further the legislature will perceive, that the plan has been submitted in the accomplishment of those cities and villages that are to be benefited by the Canal, with a spirit of accommodation that will totally dissipate the apprehension that any one will be injured by the proposed improvement.

All which is respectfully submitted.

The Society for the promotion of useful arts in the state of New-York, and of the geography of INDIANA, open for SEED, particularly recommend to such persons as are in possession of any rare species of seeds, or who may be in want for planting on their own premises, or who know of any town or county where a supply can be obtained, to communicate information thereof to the public, as early as possible, through the medium of the public papers, or otherwise in order that such persons as may be in want, may know where to apply. Any communication on this subject, addressed to the society in Albany will be thankfully received, and the information immediately disseminated by them in the most extensive manner.

Dundas, 12th April, 1817.

Mr. Ehrtor,

The recantation of the Secretary appointed at the Meeting held at Newton's Hotel in Ancaster on the 27th of March last, imposes his Duty on me; I therefore enclose to you for Publication, this Letter, and the Resolutions that were that day entered into. The publishing of which till now has alone been delayed for the want of being able to compare the original resolutions adopted at the meeting with the actual resolution of the House of Assembly on the subject of Mr. Ellis's motion—Satisfied in stating that the Ground of the vote of Expulsion should have been recited verbatim. The Canada in your paper on Parliamentary proceedings from 4th to 11th March, and the subsequent refusal of a friend at York to procure me a Copy of the resolution on the Vote of the Expulsion of James Durand, Esq. Member for the County of Wentworth, has put off my enclosing them until the present time.

The third Resolution I now give, as it actually passed the Meeting, that no improper Construction may be attached to its rejection from the records of the House,—as that resolution was carried supposing the Cause of Expulsion as set forth in it.

RICHARD HATT.

At a meeting of the Electors, Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Wentworth, in the District of Gore, held at Newton's Hotel in Ancaster, pursuant to Notice "For the purpose of taking into consideration the most eligible measures from the situation of the Country," the 17th of March 1817.

Richard Hatt was unanimously called to the Chair, and Mr. Matthew Crooks to be Secretary.

The following Resolutions were then proposed and adopted.

1st. Resolved unanimously, That this meeting views with Sentiments of Regret, the circumstances of their being destitute of that great constitutional Priviledge as British Subjects, a Voice in the House of Assembly, as evinced during the present Sessions of the Provincial Parliament.

2d. Resolved unanimously, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the rescission of the House of Assembly, upon the subject of a reputed libellous publication by James Durand, Esq. Member for the County of Wentworth, sentencing him to be imprisoned in the common Jail during the remainder of the present Session of Parliament, gives in effect depriving his Constituents of their voice in that House during the said Session.

3d. Resolved, That the subsequent Expulsion of James Durand, Esquire, from his Seat in Parliament, for absenting himself from Parliament every Day, in the 6th to the 7th of March; may be consistent with Parliamentary Privilege, but that numerous Cases can be brought, where the like offence has often been treated with less rigour and Severity.

4th. Resolved unanimously, That however within the Pale of Parliamentary authority to punish its own members by Expulsion, this meeting cannot but view with Surprise and Astonishment, under the tutorage of their own counsellors, whose books they occasionally borrow, and thence accrues a new Doctrine not before existing, in the British House of Assembly, because some of these questions, if they should pass into Laws, relate to matters for the payment of large Sums of Money, in Salaries to the Officers of Government, a proposition of which the Freeholders of the County of Wentworth, will in common with their fellow subjects in this Province, have to provide, notwithstanding they have no share in the important questions not been given.

5th. Resolved, That the Loyalty and uniform tenor of the Conduct of James Durand, Esq. is so well known to the Freeholders of the County of West worth, that they do exonerate him in their opinion, from any intention to Libel, either the several Branches of the late Provincial Legislature, or any individual members of the same, by a certain Publication, signed with his name in the 3. Columbian Supplement of the 14th of February last.

6th. Resolved unanimously, That the Freedom of the Press, being a Privilege cherished by the Inhabitants of this Province, it is the opinion of this meeting that the Legislature of this Province, in the Exercise of their Duty in the Session of 1818, under the Constitution's best friends, is greatly to be desired, that the Laws of this Province, should therefore be fostered in this spirit.

7th. Resolved unanimously, That the thanks of this meeting be given to Mr. Angel Hatt, Jungest Son of Richard Hatt, Esq. for his Conduct in the Chair.

EDWARD MAC MAHON,
General Agent for paying Militia Pensions.

FOR SALE,

THAT very eligible FREEHOLD PROPERTY, in the Town of York, owned by the Subscribers, consisting of an excellent Dwelling House, Store, Stables, Coach-house, &c. It would be superfluous to point out the value of this situation, as it must be too well known to need description.—ALSO,

240 Acres of LAND on Yonge Street, Lot No. 19, commonly called Springfield; with about 60 acres of improvement. This Lot contains advantages that must be obvious: it has two excellent Dwelling-houses, Still house, Barn, Stables &c. with a never failing creek running through the front, sufficient for a Grist or Saw Mill. Its vicinity to the metropolis of the Province, combined with these advantages, must make it a valuable acquisition to the Merchant or Farmer.

200 Acres in the Township of York.
200 Acres in the Township of Uxbridge.

The above property will be sold on reasonable terms, which can be had of the Subscribers.

J. M. JACKSON & SONS.

Lands for Sale.

960 ACRES in the Township of Harwich, Western District at the Round O, being Lots No. 19 and 20, with the broken fronts, in the first and second concession.

240 Acres in the Township of York, Lot No. 2, in the first concession, with the broken front.

200 Acres in the Township of Vaughan, Lot No. 29, in the seventh concession.

GEORGE CROOKSHANK.
York, 21st Jan. 1817. tf 4

Notice.

BROKE into the enclosure of the subscriber, the 15th of November last, a large BAY MARE, with a star in her forehead; white hind feet; about 14 years old. The owner is requested to prove his property, pay charges and take her away, or she will be sold to pay for her keeping.

TERMS OF THIS GAZETTE.

Four Dollars per Annum, exclusive of Postage; to be invariably paid in advance, to the first of July, or first of January.

Advertisements to be sent before 12 o'clock on Wednesday, or they will not appear in the next day's Gazette.

Advertisements sent without written directions, inserted until forbidden, and charged for accordingly.—When advertisements directed to be inserted until forbidden, are to be discontinued, it is requested to be made in writing, and sent to the Office, as a verbal message given to a Journeyman in the street, is very liable to be forgotten.

☞ A liberal Allowance will be made to those who advertise for six months or longer.

PROCLAMATION.

BY HIS EXCELLENCY
FRANCIS GORE, Esq. LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR of our said Province, &c. &c.

WHEREAS by An Act of the Parliament of this Province, made and passed in the Forty-second Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act to enable the Governor, "Lieutenant-Governor, or Person ad-"ministering the Government of this "Province, to appoint one or more ad-"ditional Port or Ports, Place or Places "of Entry within this Province: And "to appoint one or more Collector, or "Collectors of the same," has lately expired—AND WHEREAS, the said Act hath since been revived by An Act passed in the Fifty-sixth Year of His Majesty's Reign: AND WHEREAS, as well with reference to the Interests of His Majesty's Government of this Province, as to the convenience of Inspectors of Goods and Merchandize, and of Merchants, and other His Majesty's Subjects resident within this Province, it hath been ascertained that there is immediate occasion for appointing One other additional Port or Place of Entry and Clearance, at the Place hereinafter specified. BE IT THEREFORE KNOWN, That I, FRANCIS GORE, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, in exercise of the power and authority vested in me by the said recited Act, and by and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Province, Do hereby declare and appoint, That in addition to the Ports of Entry and Clearance, established by, and under the authority of a certain Act of the Parliament of this Province, passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act for "Granting to His Majesty, His Heirs "and Successors, to and for the use of "this Province, the like Duties on "Goods and Merchandize, imported in-"to this Province from the United "States, as are now paid on Goods "and Merchandize, imported from "Great-Britain, and other places." And also, by and under the authority of the above recited Act, passed in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and two, the Place herein-after mentioned and Specified; That is to say, the Outlet of Burlington Bay, in the District of Gore, shall from the first Day of January next, be, and the same is by these presents Established and Proclaimed to be a Port and Place of Entry and Clearance, for all Goods and Merchandize not being entirely prohibited; and for the payment of all Duties that may be paid on all Goods and Merchandize brought into this Province, from the United States of America, imposed and established by virtue of the said Act as passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign.

GIVEN Under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this Twentieth day of December, in the Year of our Lord One thousand Eight Hundred and Sixteen and in the Fifty Seventh year of His Majesty's Reign.

FRANCIS GORE,
Lieutenant Governor.

By Command of His Excellency,
WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Lieut Governor's Office, York, 19th Feb. 1817.

THIS is to give NOTICE, that Tenders will be received at this Office from such Person or Persons as may be desirous of Contracting to render the whole or any part of the water communication between La Chine and Kingston, by the course of the River Rideau, navigable for Boats drawing two feet water, and ten feet width; also for Boats drawing three feet water, and twelve feet in width.

The tenders are to specify the number of Locks and the places at which it is proposed to build them; also the number of Flood-gates in each Lock, and the period for completing the work by the Irish Creek.

Tenders will also be received for opening the communication in the direction of the Rideau Lake, and the waters communicating from thence to Mud Lake, and from thence to Kingston.

Tenders, stating the securities for performing the Contract, will be received until the 30th of June next inclusive: and further particulars may be known by applying to the Surveyor-General's Office at York, the Office of the Deputy-Quarter-Master-General at Quebec, or of the Assistant-Quarter-Master-General at Kingston.

From the United States.

From the New-York Advertiser, March 31.

It is stated, that a company is forming at Philadelphia, to be called "The Philadelphia and Pittsburg Transporting Company"—the object of which is, to facilitate the trading intercourse between those cities, and the country between them, by reducing the expense of the transportation of goods to the western country. To accomplish this, it is proposed to charge horses and drivers more in two miles, and to travel day and night, at least at the rate of two miles an hour, in all weather. In this way it is supposed the journey from Philadelphia to Pittsburg can be performed in 12 or 14 days. It is estimated that the expense of freight may be fixed at 3 cents per pound from Philadelphia to Pittsburg, and 2 cents back. By this arrangement, it is stated, that even tobacco and heavy articles

FOR SALE,

THAT very eligible FREEHOLD PROPERTY, in the Town of York, owned by the Subscribers, consisting of an excellent Dwelling House, Store, Stables, Coach-house, &c. It would be superfluous to point out the value of this situation, as it must be too well known to need description—ALSO,

240 Acres of LAND on Yonge Street, Lot No. 19, commonly called Springfield; with about 60 acres of improvement. This Lot contains advantages that must be obvious: it has two excellent Dwelling-houses, Still house, Barn, Stables &c. with a never failing creek running through the front, sufficient for a Grist or Saw Mill. Its vicinity to the metropolis of the Province, combined with these advantages, must make it a valuable acquisition to the Merchant or Farmer.

200 { Acres in the Township of York.
200 { Acres in the Township of Uxbridge.

From the New-York Advertiser, March 31.

It is stated, that a company is forming at Philadelphia, to be called—The Philadelphia and Pittsburg Transporting Company—the object of which is, to facilitate the trading intercourse between these cities, and the country between them, by reducing the expense of the transportation of goods to the western country. To accomplish this, it is proposed to change horses and drivers once in ten miles, and to travel day and night, at least at the rate of two miles an hour, in all weather. In this way it is supposed the journey from Philadelphia to Pittsburg can be performed in 12 or 14 days. It is computed that the expense of freight may be fixed at 3 cents per pound from Philadelphia to Pittsburg and 2 cents back. By this arrangement, it is stated, that even boatmen and ba[illegible] from Kent

QUEBEC, March 20.

Our Legislature intended to lay an Embargo, to prevent the export of wheat for 30 days, but there would be a surplus of about 150,000 bushels, this alarmed the idea. There was also a motion to a demand, about 30,000 barrels of flour for exportation, besides what the Upper Province will require. The price appears to have risen to 8s 6d, as several contracts have been made delivery at the beginning of the month of April, that by Government of 10,000 bbls. was taken at 8s 6d.

Accounts from Newfoundland to the first of March with discouraging. Several vessels had been lost on the coast in Jan. and Feb: the crews were saved. The inhabitants had been supplied with flour from the king's stores.

Late & Important from England.

By the arrival, this morning, of the brig Wrangler, Captain Lovett, in 60 days from Havre de Grace, and 48 from Torbay, England, the editors of the Commercial Advertiser, have been received a file of London papers to the evening of the 7th February inclusive—12 days later than we have before received.

The contents of these papers are of no ordinary interest. On the 28th of January, the Prince Regent proceeded to the Parliament House and opened the Session by a Speech from the Throne. On his way thither, he was insulted by the populace; and on his return was attended with stones by a large assemblage. Two glass coaches were broken—Lord J. Murray, who attended the Regent in the state carriage received a blow, and his Royal Highness providentially escaped through the interference of the military. The particulars of this affair are thus given in a London paper of January 30th.

"On the return of the Prince Regent from the House of Lords, the crowd assembled in the streets, had increased greatly. In St.James's Park in particular the mob was immense, and they began to utter the most violent and indecent expressions the instant the Regent's carriage appeared. When the cavalcade had reached the Stable yard gate, it appears that the panes of the State carriage were broken on both sides, almost instantaneously. The general impression was that stones were the missiles employed, and by the glasses being made of uncommon thickness, were broken as cleanly as if done by a ~~shooting gallery~~ a musket or pistol.

"On the Prince Royal alighting from the state carriage at St. James's Palace, he immediately sent for Lord Sidmouth; and after waiting a considerable time for the arrival of Lord Sidmouth, at St. James's Palace, left it in his private carriage for Carleton-house; and the reception part of the popular mob, in the Park, he was then received with loud huzzas. His Royal Highness left his commands for Lord Sidmouth to follow him to Carleton-house, where he had the ship arrived shortly afterwards, as did the Duke of York, and the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester. His Royal Highnesses having heard of what had happened, lost no time in repairing to Carleton-house, to ~~the~~ enquiries.

"Lord Castlereagh, who attended the Regent in the state carriage as a Lord in waiting, received a blow over his right eye, from a piece of the strong plate glass being struck against him.

"While the more serious consequences just alluded to were taking place in the Park, a boxing match was got up in the yard for the amusement of the rabble there assembled. The actors were Mr. Hunt and Lord Cochrane. About three o'clock, the attention of the passengers in Parliament-street was attracted by a man in a dirty blue great coat, carrying a pole on his shoulder, to which a hoop or bundle of sticks was apparently suspended. The person was Orator Hunt, for as much he speedily announced himself—About 50 boys preceded him, bellowing him, calling out—" make way for Mr. Hunt" and in this way the procession arrived in New Palace-yard. Here Mr. Hunt, stopping at the gate of the house No. 7, asked if Lord Cochrane was come? being answered in the affirmative, he deposited his burden in the passage, and quietly asked Lord Cochrane came forth. Hunt then harangued his followers from the step of the door: the noise was so great, that no person could hear a word, it was except his worthy colleague, who stood behind him at humble reverence of his superior spouting faculties. A board or plank, and in a small chair, were then produced by Mr. Hunt; and up to the chair Lord Cochrane was placed. His Lordship was to this manner conveyed on the shoulders of his admirers across Palace-yard to the door of Westminster Hall, where he was sat down, amid three cheers, and entered with his bundles of parliament. Hunt who had preceded Lord Cochrane, cleared the way, now got, unbidden, into the chair, and was conveyed to the place from whence they had set out. Here he made another speech to the assembled who carried him, and then entered the house. The mob then left him, taking the direction of the Park."

The Prince Regent's Speech, together with the proceedings of both Houses of Parliament in relation to the assault upon his Royal Highness, are among the articles selected for our paper this evening.

We also present to our readers this evening, a Message from the Prince Regent to the House of Lords, on the 4th of February, in relation to the disturbed state of the country, and the Speech of Lord Castlereagh, on the subject of the Message.

Several persons had been arrested and examined, on suspicion of being concerned in the assault upon the Prince Regent, and one of them had been committed for trial, on the charge of high treason.

The Morning Chronicle on the 7th of February, announced the death of the King of France; and the Courier on the evening of the same day contradicted the news, and asserted that his Gallic Majesty was nearly restored to health.

We have given this day as copious extracts from our London papers as our limits will permit. Very interesting selections will be given in our next.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, Jan. 28, 1817.

This being the day appointed by the Prince Regent for the meeting of both Houses of Parliament, a Royal Highness came down in state, and entered the House of Peers at two o'clock. His Royal Highness was attended by the Great Officers of State; the Earl of Liverpool carried the Sword of State, on his Royal Highness's right hand, and the Marquisd of Winchester carried the Crown on a cushion on his left.

In a few minutes after the Regent had taken his seat on the Throne, the commons having been summoned by the Usher of the Black Rod, appeared at the bar of the House of Peers, with their Speaker at their head, when his Royal Highness delivered to both Houses of Parliament the following SPEECH —

My Lords, and Gentlemen,

It is with deep regret that I am again obliged to announce to you, that an interruption has occurred in the state of His Majesty's lamentable indisposition.

I continue to receive from foreign powers the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition towards this country; and of their earnest desire to maintain the general tranquility.

The hostilities to which I was compelled to resort, in vindication of the honor of the country against the Government of Algiers, have been attended with the most complete success.

The splendid achievement of His Majesty's fleet, in conjunction with a squadron of the King of the Netherlands, under the gallant and able conduct of Admiral Viscount Exmouth, led to the immediate and unconditional liberation of Christian captives. You will join in the gratitude of Algiers and to the renunciation by its Government of the practice of Christian slavery.

I am persuaded that you will be duly sensible of the importance of an arrangement so interesting to humanity, and reflecting from the manner in which it has been accomplished, such signal honor on the British nation.

In India, the refusal of the Government of Nepaul, to ratify a treaty of peace which had been signed by its plenipotentiaries, occasioned a renewal of military operations.

The judicious arrangements of the Governor-General, seconded by the bravery and perseverance of his Majesty's forces, and of those of the East India Company, brought the campaign to a speedy and successful issue; and peace has been finally established upon the just and honorable terms of the original treaty.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

I have directed the estimates for the current year to be laid before you.

They have been formed upon a full consideration of all the present circumstances of the country, with an anxious desire to make every reduction in our establishments which the safety of the Empire and sound policy allow.

I recommend the state of the Public Income and Expenditure to your early and serious attention.

I regret to be under the necessity of informing you that there has been a deficiency in the produce of the Revenue of the last year; but I trust that it is to be ascribed to temporary causes; and I have the consolation to believe that you will find it practicable to provide for the Public service of the year, without making any addition to the Burthens of the People, and without adopting any measure injurious to that System, by which and for the services which he expressed to adopt every possible system of economy and retrenchment. He stated, however, the House, whilst it considered the amounts would not forget what was due to the rank we had to support amongst nations. He was of opinion that there could not be found nothing so prodigal as economy, or so parsimonious as wisdom. The noble Lord then adverted to the falling off in the Revenue of the country. He lamented the circumstance, but it proves only temporary. The distresses of the people he also hoped would be found to arise out of temporary causes, principally from the transition from a state of war to peace; and that a short time would show they were, though evils of temporary misery at present, only of temporary nature. The noble Lord also adverted to the symptoms of disaffection which had shown themselves in various parts, and to the causes arising, he said, principally out of the acts of designing individuals, who, under the specious cry of Reform in Parliament, had led the people astray. He observed, Parliament in the ensuing Session, would have a short important duty to perform. The joy of the country were upon them —hear, hear!— one part of the people were anxiously looking towards them for a relief of their distresses; the other part were looking to them for the preservation of that Constitution of which they had been deputed the guardians.— The noble Lord expressed his conviction that the House would not disappoint the hopes and expectations, either of his Royal Highness, or of the people, and concluded by moving an address, which was as usual an echo of the Speech.

I am too well convinced of the loyalty and zeal of the great body of his Majesty's subjects, to believe them capable of being perverted by the arts which are employed to seduce them; but I am determined to omit no precautions for preserving the public peace, and for counteracting the designs of the disaffected; And I rely with the utmost confidence on your cordial support and cooperation, for enabling a vigorous Executive Government, from which we have derived inestimable advantages, which has enabled us to conclude with unexampled glory, a war undertaken and suspended the best interests of mankind, and which has been hitherto felt by ourselves, as by all nations engaged in other nations, to be the most perfect that have fallen to the lot of any people.

The House then adjourned during pleasure; and at five o'clock the Lord Chancellor again took his seat on the Woolsack.

Lord Sidmouth said, that before he moved the Address in Speech delivered from the Throne that day, he should be read from the Woolsack, he had a subject of very great importance to communicate to the House, which for reasons he supposed that strangers be ordered to withdraw.

Strangers were then excluded.

During our exclusion, the House had a conference with the House of Commons at nine o'clock, adjourned the debate on the address till to-morrow.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Tuesday, Jan. 8.

Sir F. Burdett gave notice, that he should on this day next submit a motion on the subject of Reform in Parliament.

THE PRINCE REGENT'S SPEECH.

Mr Speaker then informed the House that the House then informed the House of Peers, and heard a most gracious Speech from the Throne, of which he had a copy, which he now read to the House.

Lord Valletort (son to the Earl of Mount Edgecumbe) then rose to move an address in answer to his Royal and most gracious Speech. He congratulated the House upon the happy termination of the late destructive contest on the continent, and that event, he trusted, would be a pacification which had been established by Bonaparte, by the restoration of the legitimate sovereigns of Europe. The noble Lord also congratulated the House and the country on the successful issue of the contest between this country and Algiers; by the restoration of Christian Slaves, especially those bordering on the Mediterranean, had been delivered from the barbarous and most barbarous and piratical Power. He trusted that every some persons entertained doubts that as soon as the Dey of Algiers had recovered from the effects of our late splendid victory, he would return to his habits of piracy. He, however, entertained another opinion. He was persuaded it would be long before the shores the Mediterranean commerce would again be infested by the marauds of this piratical Power. He also alluded to the determination of the late short and glorious contest in India, into which he observed we had been forced by repeated injuries of the Pindarees. He considered that much praise was due to the noble Lord at the head of our extensive Government in that quarter of the globe, for his conduct during the continuance of that conflict. He thought the gratitude of the House was due to his Royal Highness for having thus early called the attention of the House to the subject of our expenditure, and further, that the house pledged itself to his Royal Highness to lend him every aid and assistance in their power toward an effectual investigation of the affairs and stated of the nation.

Mr. B. Bathurst conceived that the House was bound by the terms of the Address, to look into the state of the country without delay and, without remission, till something was done to relieve the general stagnation, and as it was more popular to do so in the authority of an original motion than an amendment, and as the committee of the Rt. Hon. Friend would answer every purpose of a financial investigation, he conceived the amendment totally uncalled for and unnecessary.

Mr. Lushington, M.P. for Bath, said who had opened this debate, and who had done it with much ability, had gone too far when he ventured to express exultation at the present distressed state of the country. New regulations must be necessary, and he therefore wished the house to take the subject into its consideration, to ascertain what course it would be wisest to pursue under existing circumstances. • Adverting to the late tumults, he declared his reverence for the popular parts of our constitution was second to that of no man; but at the same time, he would have no popular meetings or bodies of men bursting into tumult, he was for their immediate suppression.—(Hear!) This he considered of the last importance, as conducive to liberty itself, for his objection to rebellion was not merely that plunder and bloodshed, were its attendants, (for these, he declared, his reverence for the popular parts of our constitution was second to that of no man; but at the same time, We

FOR SALE,

THAT very eligible FREEHOLD PROPERTY, in the Town of York, owned by the Subscribers, consisting of an excellent Dwelling House, Store, Stables, Coach-house, &c. It would be superfluous to point out the value of this situation, as it must be too well known to need description.—ALSO,

240 Acres of LAND on Yonge Street, Lot No. 19, commonly called Springfield; with about 60 acres of improvement. This Lot contains advantages that must be obvious: it has two excellent Dwelling-houses, Still house, Barn, Stables &c. with a never failing creek running through the front, sufficient for a Grist or Saw Mill. Its vicinity to the metropolis of the Province, combined with these advantages, must make it a valuable acquisition to the Merchant or Farmer.

200 Acres in the Township of York.
200 Acres in the Township of Uxbridge.

The above property will be sold on reasonable terms, which can be had of the Subscribers.

From the United States.

NEW-YORK, April 7.

From Buenos Ayres.

Captain Douglass, of the British brig Elizabeth, who arrived this morning in 63 days from Buenos Ayres, informs us that the Portuguese expedition had taken Monte Video, with very little fighting. He also states, that the troops of Buenos Ayres, comprising an army of 6000 men, had marched for the province of Chili, to induce or compel the people of that province to unite in the common cause against the Portuguese. In case of the union of the two armies of Chili, with those of Buenos Ayres, no doubt was entertained of their success. Four Portuguese brigs, laden with tallow and hides, had been seized by the government at Buenos Ayres. April 11.

From Havanna.

A gentleman passenger in the Bergere, 10 days from Havanna, informs us, that before he sailed the crew of a Dutch ship arrived there in an open boat, who stated they had been captured off the Marquesas a Carthagenian privateer, plundered of about 10,000 dollars in specie, and 60,000 dollars worth of dry goods. The crew were then put adrift in the long boat, and ship set on fire. The Dutch captain was robbed of his wearing apparel, and otherwise treated with great cruelty. The privateer afterwards shaped her course for the Isle of Pines. Our informant adds, that the waters in the vicinity of Havanna swarm with pleasure, composed of motley crews of all nations, professing and calling themselves Spanish Patriots.

The privateer brig, commanded by Capt. Jewett, (formerly the True Blooded Yankee) had recently been off Havanna, and it was understood had proceeded on a cruize off Cuba. Early in March, the squadron under Com. Taylor, captured, off Havanna, three Spanish Guineamen, one of which had a large quantity of gold dust.

Death of the Duke of Marlborough.

On Thursday, 20th Jan. died at Blenheim, aged 78 years, his Grace George the third Duke of Marlborough. No death that has occurred for many years past, can have been more severely felt, than that of his Grace; will he; he was the most indulgent husband, the best of parents: kind and generous in the extreme to all his relatives; and will be bitterly lamented by all the poor within the wide circuit of his princely domains. The first Duke still deservedly retains the title of "The Great Duke of Marlborough;" the late Duke will, for many, many years, be remembered as "The Good Duke of Marlborough." The day before his death, the Duke took his usual exercise in his carriage, and did not shew any symptoms of an approaching dissolution. He was found dead in the morning by his valet, who for several years past, constantly slept in his chamber.

GREY PAPER

From Europe.

LONDON, Jan. 18.

On Monday ... our poor seamen were ordered under arms at the levee of Warwick-house—having been ... ged: the others were lying upon the benches. A lady gave him a penny; the poor creature instantly ran to a baker now with dog's meat, which had just passed by, bought a piece, and swallowed it in a minute. A naval lieutenant, who saw this day, of a still-born female child; and it as well as can be expected.

" H. BALFORD.

" C. M. CLARKE."

Colonel Thornton waited upon the Prince Regent to inform him of the success which had been in readiness for several days to the Archbishop of Canterbury, the bishop of London, the Lord Chancellor, and the rest of the Cabinet Ministers, who all attended. His Royal Highness was brought to bed soon after their arrival, which was about one o'clock. The child was still-born.

In a short time afterwards the following Bulletin was issued :—

" St. James's, Monday, Jan. 27.

" Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cumberland was delivered, at one o'clock this day, of a still-born female child; and is as well as can be expected.

" H. BALFORD.

" C. M. CLARKE."

Colonel Thornton waited upon the Prince Regent to inform him of the decease of Queen Charlotte.

Messengers were sent off to the Queen at Windsor, the Princess Charlotte at Claremont, the Duchess of Gloucester, and the other branches of the Royal Family ; also to the Duchess's family abroad.

Bank-House, near Warrington, in Staffordshire, the seat of Richard Heathcote, Esq. was, on Monday last, nearly burnt to the ground, by accidental fire ; the damage is estimated at several thousand pounds.

In Charlotte-street, Pimlico, on Monday, Mrs. Michael Countzen was delivered of four children, one girl and three boys, who with the mother, seem at present likely to do well.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE of COMMONS,

Friday, Jan. 31. Lord Cochrane gave notice, that he should on the fifth of March next, submit a motion to him to bring in a bill for the abolition of sinecures, and for the reduction of the salaries of those Public officers which had been advanced of late years.

In answer to a question from Mr. Curwen, Mr. Vansittart stated that no plan had as yet been prepared respecting the Poor laws; but he trusted that in a few weeks, at most, he should be able to bring in a bill for the abolition of sinecures, and for the reduction of the salaries of those Public officers which had been advanced of late years.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that on Thursday next, a motion would be made for the appointment of a committee on the state of the nation, and its income and expenditure.

Sir M. W. Ridley asked whether it was intended to bring in a bill to amend and explain an act of the last session respecting the liability of manufacturing houses and shops to the window tax.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer replied in the affirmative.

Sir William Lemon rose, to present a Petition from the Freeholders and other Inhabitants of the County of Cornwall. He observed, that the Petitioners felt the great pressure of taxation, but entertained with patience and confidence relying on the wisdom of Parliament to afford them relief. They therefore prayed the House to abolish all Sinecure Places, to withdraw all unnecessary and unmerited Pensions, and to reduce the exorbitant Salaries enjoyed by the higher Officers of the Army. The Petitioners likewise felt the necessity of a reform in the House of Parliament, but they wisely abstained from proposing any wild and visionary plan, or dealing that any rash experiments should be tried that might endanger the Frame of the Constitution, but leaving the entire measure to the superior judgment and wisdom of Parliament itself.—Hear hear from all parts of the House.—The petition was extremely well drawn up, and he should be appointed to inquire into the State of the Nation, embracing this interesting but difficult question ; and if a motion to this effect was made, he should gladly give it his support.

The Petition was then read by the Clerk. It lamented that the former Petition presented from the county, in favour of retrenchment in the public expenditure, had not been attended with the desired influence. It complained of the defective state of the system of representation, and remarked, that had the original purity of the Constitution been preserved in the House of Commons, the National Debt, which at the death of King William amounted only to seventeen millions, would not now exceed eleven hundred millions ; nor would the standing army, which at the conclusion of the Seven Years War amounted only to 70000 men, have been extended to 150.000. It concluded by praying generally for the abolition of Sinecures, &c. and was ordered to be on the Commons House of Parliament.

Mr. Brand stated, that he had been requested to give his support to Parliament to the Petition now presented, and this duty he was willing to perform—He spoke of the public meeting in Cornwall, where the Petition had been prepared, and contemplated the persons who had appeared active at it, for their prudence, learning and eloquence. The language of the Petition itself, its good sense, sound reasoning, and simple eloquence, struck him most forcibly, when compared with the farrago of unconnected absurdities which the House had witnessed the preceding evening. He lamented, that the Cornish meetings that had taken place elsewhere, on the subject of Parliamentary Reform: for he was convinced, that their Petition would have contained some strong protest against the wild and dangerous Doctrines, that too generally prevail throughout the country.

Mr. Elliot observed, that the question of a reform in Parliament had become one of the most general nature, that he could not abstain from expressing an opinion on the subject. He trusted, that when taking up a question of Reform, the House would consider the whole country particularly to the Gentlemen ... advocated that measure, he hoped they would not suffer passion to carry them beyond the venerable frame of the Constitution. He trusted the House would not overlook the question in silence this project proceeded, lest they would be launched into the nature and tendency of the plans connected with it, and the character of the men brought by which they are supported, before they would open the Constitution to those State Architects, who have no speculation but private interest, no principle but individual aggrandisement. He had little doubt but that agitating the question at present tended materially to aggravate the public distress, and that if any one of the theories were adopted, it would terminate in universal destruction.—(Hear! hear!)

The Petition was ordered to lie on the table.

February 8.

The Speaker informed the House of the presenting of the address to the Prince Regent, and of his Royal Highness's gracious answer thereto.

Mr. M. Taylor gave notice of a motion for that day fortnight, for leave to bring in a bill to provide for the better preservation of the streets of the metropolis.

Mr. Saville said, that having received various communications in consequence of his notice on Saturday, upon the subject of tithes, he wished to state, that the subject, in bringing that question forward, was not to abolish the tithes altogether, but to induce the House, if he could, to adopt some measures which might relieve those who suffered most from the present system.

PARLIAMENTARY REFORM.

Lord A. Hamilton rose to present two petitions upon this subject, one from the inhabitants of Kirkintilloch, the other from the borough of Rutherglen. The noble Lord observed, that the peculiar circumstances under which he then addressed the House, drew forth from him a should say a few words before moving, that the petitions he held in his hands did be brought in a shorter space ... had been hitherto elapsed since the meeting of Parliament, had brought forth expressions from the other side of the House, so strong in favour of Reform upon every species of Reform, urged in different petitions, that he thought it incumbent upon him to state, that the present ones prayed for none of these plans —they asked neither for annual Parliaments nor universal suffrage (Hear !)—. He therefore hoped they should not be identified with any of them. They both lamented the exorbitant expenditure of the (Government) complained that they (the petitioners) were by that means with difficulties they could not exercise any ... which would procure them the necessary ... and which he concluded, not by presuming to suggest any particular mode of reform, but with hoping in the grievances of which they complained should be redressed by the wisdom of Reform or other.—He should make only one observation more, which he had made when presenting petitions from Scotland upon the same subject. He was warranted in saying, that there £10,000 a year in property, and ... £1000 a year in land, and yet not have a single vote at the election of ... say, therefore, without any disrespect to other parts of the united empire, that Scotland there as its opinion that two British soil of the two countries could be sufficient to compel these barbarians to submit to any terms of peace which might be proposed, he never said that two sail would be able to cope with these batteries: for he knew too well that these batteries could do against ships, or when strongly manned, to advance such an assertion. He spoke only to refer-... to the situation of affairs, upon the border of the sea, and to the effect which ... produced upon that, or any other city so placed, and inhabited by a numerous population of men, women and children, if cannonaded but for one hour. No man way better acquainted with the power ... sessed by batteries over a fleet ... and he would say, that the conduct of lord Exmouth and the fleet deserved all the praise which that house could bestow. The attack was nobly achieved in a way that a British fleet always performed its services. He could only state, that the vote had its most cordial concurrence, for he never knew or had heard of any thing more gallant than the manner in which lord Exmouth led his ships alongside the Algerine batteries.

Lord Castlereagh then proposed thanks to Sir David Milne, and the other officers of the fleet.

The motion was carried.

On the motion of Lord Castlereagh, the House voted their approbation of the services of the marines, &c. and their thanks to admiral Van de Capellen, for his cordial assistance and co-operation, and the speaker was desired to communicate the same.

FOREIGN SECRETARY OF STATE.

Mr. Tierney rose again and said, that after the continued silence of the noble Lord, he should feel himself justified in making a motion which he had in view, without giving any previous notice thereof. However, he would then give no line of his intention, to move on Thursday the 20th inst. for the removal of the third Secretary of State, as unnecessary office.

SPANISH PATRIOTS.

Mr. Brougham adverted to a motion made by him during the last session, respecting the Spanish Patriots and other refugees, which he had not pressed to a division, and was desirous to know what had been done respecting them.

Lord Castlereagh said, that communications had taken place with the Spanish government, but there was no particular intelligence which he had to lay before the House.

Mr. Brougham asked whether the noble Lord would have any objection to lay the correspondence that had passed before the House on this subject.

Lord Castlereagh replied, that it might be imprudent, and even injurious to the interests of themselves, if the correspondence were disclosed.

Mr. Brougham observed, that the list of the noble Lord was sufficient to cheer his hopes and fears ; but that he (Mr. Brougham) were to understand from this, that no possible had been done by the government here, and that the whole had fallen ... on the Duke of Wellington, and another from a hundred in Norfolk.

Mr. Bennet presented a petition from the town of Sheffield, praying for a Reform in Parliament.

Mr. Whitbread presented a petition from Castle Donington, Leicestershire, to the same effect.

SUPPLY.

The Speaker resumed the Chair.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the order of the House, that the House do go into a committee to consider of a Supply to be granted to his Majesty.

Mr. Ponsonby did not rise for the purpose of opposing the substance of this motion, as he was perfectly aware that a Supply must be granted ; but rose to say, that as a committee had been proposed, he should move the noble Lord, that if he did not take effectual steps on Friday, for the appointment of that Committee, he would himself submit a motion to the House on that subject. He was not aware whether the noble Lord had been a party to the decision before ... Lord Eldon on the utmost importance to the country ... no further time should be lost.

The Lord Castlereagh said, his motive for altering the day from Thursday to Friday was not for the sake of delay, but because it would be more convenient to the House, and to those who should have to make to the House, and were anxious to submit to the House what his Majesty's Ministers thought it most advisable to propose to the Parliament under the existing circumstances of the country. The right honorable gentleman would be more anxious on that subject than he was.

Mr. Lushington presented an account of the net produce of the revenue for 1 ... years, from the 5th of Jan. 1816, to the 5th of January, 1817.—Adjourned.

February 4.

Yesterday the Lord Mayor held an especial Court of Aldermen in consequence of the attack made upon his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, on his way to the House of Lords, on Tuesday, which was attended by sixteen Aldermen, the city Officers, &c.—The court unanimously agreed to present an address to his Royal Highness, expressive of their horror at so atrocious an act ; an address being prepared accordingly, was read and agreed to.

To his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, Regent of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

The Humble Address of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Commons of the City of London, in Common Council assembled.

May it please your Royal Highness.

We, his Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen and Commons of the City of London, in Common Council assembled, humbly approach your Royal Highness with renewed assurances of our unfeigned veneration and respect.

Yielding to none of his Majesty's subjects in loyalty and attachment to your Royal Highness, as the Representative of our venerable and beloved Sovereign, we have contemplated with the greatest detestation, the daring and flagitious assault offered to your Royal Highness on your late return from Parliament, and by which your Royal Highness's Person was endangered while exercising one of the most sacred and important prerogatives attached to your Royal Highness's high station, as Regent of the United Kingdom.

We most earnestly pray, that the perpetrators of so act ... abhorrence in its ... may be delivered up to the justice of their country, and that Divine Providence may preserve your Royal Highness many years, and cause you to live in the midst of a free, generous and loyal people ; and we assure your Royal Highness that those are not in this United Kingdom, who are determined at any sacrifice to protect your Royal Highness's Person, and to preserve inviolate the constitution and the Laws, from his Majesty's faithful citizens of London.

Signed by Order of Court,

HENRY WOODTHORPE.

His Royal Highness was pleased to return the following Answer.

" I return you my warmest Thanks for this loyal and dutiful Address.

Whilst I have to lament a flagrant violation of the Laws, I cannot but derive the highest satisfaction from the fresh demonstrations which it has so generally called forth of the attachment of my ... to me and my family, and of a firm determination to protect and uphold our invaluable Constitution.

A meeting of some of the principal merchants, bankers and traders of the city, was yesterday held at the London tavern, Sir Robert Wigram, Bart. in the chair, when resolutions were agreed to, declaratory of their loyal attachment to the Prince Regent, and of their abhorrence of the late atrocious attack on his person.

Feb. 8.

The proceedings ... night in the House of Commons, will be read with uncommon interest by all classes to the country, and we are persuaded in asserting, with universal ... gratulation.

Whilst Ireland was put forward a statement of our Naval and Military establishments, and the noble and gallant Secretary at War pointed out to us progressive reductions ... expense, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer proceeded to enquire into the public resources, we were ... ed to ... for the year 1817 :—

Army ... in 1816, 140,445 men ; in 1817, it is 102,500—reduction 37,945. The expense last year, including ordnance, was £28,000,000, this year it is £20,000,000. The Ordnance last year cost £1,900,000—this year it is £1,500,000. Total reduction ... £8,400,000.

Navy, last year, 33,000 men ; this year 19000 ... reduction 14,000. It cost last year £7,314,000 this year £4,891,000—saving, £2,717,000.

Miscellaneous services in 1816, £8,000,000, do this year, £1,800,000—saving, £4,000,000.

RECAPITULATION.

Army service	1,700,000
Navy ditto	2,717,000
Miscellaneous	4,000,000
Total saving,	£8,501,000

SUPPLY.

Army	7,000,000
Commiss. and Barrack, 1 Britain	1,000,000
Ditto ditto, Ireland	300,000
Ordnance, England	1,300,000
Ditto, Ireland	1,340,000
Navy	4,997,000
Miscellaneous Gt. Britain and Ireland	1,800,000
	£18,238,000

Thus it appears that the Army has been reduced about one sixth—the Navy almost one half. The miscellaneous services about three millions ; and lamentable to tell, the country pays annually the enormous interest of seven millions, after paying the interest on our debt!

However, we have the comfort of knowing, in some great step towards such a result as we ... ventilate our maladies ; and ministers are entitled to praise for daily ... about the reduction of salaries—yes, the work of reform ;" for if the country ... to the ... of the Ministers, he followed, as efficient, and a radical reform.

The Prince Regent has ... to Parliament, through his ministers, his intention to surrender into the hands of the ... Parliament to deal with his own ... personal revenue—The amount of this is ... £60,000 a year. Mr. Whitbread ... ministers themselves have more than doubled their intention to follow the noble example that has been set them by the Prince Regent ... the proposed committee shall faithfully discharge their duty, ... recommend the reduction of all unnecessary offices—and this be followed by the similar ... and discussion. The saving to the nation will be such as will be found to contribute beneficially in restoring vigor and health to every ... being connected with the public expenses.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE of COMMONS.

Lord Cochrane presented a petition from Lymington, praying for Parliamentary Reform.—The petition being bro't up and read,

Mr. Lockhart begged to have the passage in the petition, stating, that the House of Commons, in place of being a control in favor, had become a control on the people, read. He thought such language from petitioners highly disrespectful and improper.

Lord Castlereagh expressed his coincidence in the opinion of the disrespectful tone of the petition, and contended it ought not to be received.

Lord A. Hamilton did not consider the objectionable passage as specifically disrespectful, and therefore ought not to be rejected.

On the question being put for its reception, the Speaker decided for the ... ayes 45—Noes 72.—Majority for the rejection 29.

On our re-admission to the Gallery, we found Lord Cochrane presenting a petition from the Parish of Wick, as we understood, praying for Parliamentary ... He felt it his duty, in the ... country, to reprobate the conduct of an honorable member, who had come into the House only before the division took place, and had given his vote in part of Ministers, without hearing a single argument in favor of the petition being received. This was a practice without doubt too common in the House, yet not the less reprehensible on that account, and one which every independent member should detest. He moved the petition be now held in his hand be brought up.

Sir Francis Burdett seconded the motion, and could not avoid expressing his indignation at the manner in which petitions had come to us that day. Those petitions from the people were presented not in unison with the general inclination of the majority. [Hear, hear!] So totally opposite was the spirit of the House, to every thing like unbiassed honest feeling, that whenever the Minister thought proper to give his negative in a petition being received, though he gave no reasons in support of that negative, he was instantly met without the slightest hesitation supported by the majority of the House—the House, falsely called the House of Commons—

Here the Speaker called the Honorable Baronet to order, not conceiving such language to be Parliamentary.

Sir F. Burdett proceeded. The conduct of the House made it the duty of all the truth of what he was saying. After the speech made by the Speaker some years ago, and after the declaration in which the noble Lord opposite was detected, viz. that of bargaining for the ... of seats in Parliament, a crime certainly the most ... against the spirit of view, which could be committed against the Constitution, it was singular that the House ... attention paid to language, and that fondness for ... which prevailed in a certain quarter [Hear, hear !] The house were now in a singular situation. They were now called to oppose petitions complaining of that infamous crime in which the noble Lord was ... detected, on the ground of these petitions being ... in a ... proper language. Such was now the rage for criticising petitions, such the miss attention paid to ... that if a man must own he felt himself at a loss to know what to do with the petitions he had been requested to present to the House [Hear, hear !] There was a most alarming nature existed in that House, that corruption prevailed there in its most hideous ... and that petitions, and yet the House expected petitions complaining of, and remonstrating against these abuses, and that corruption, to be drawn up in the usual style of adulation [Hear, hear, hear!] The house ought now to appoint a new office, where petitions might be drawn up that thus the people might know what to ... and in what terms to address Parliament when they felt their duty to complain of the grievances under which they ... [Hear, hear!] And here he could not ... expressing his displeasure at the unseemly ... which he had witnessed within and without that House, to those who presented petitions in the way of petitioners.—Magistrates had not contented themselves with ... by their presence, but they ... and were exposed to from various violent proceedings (a part of their duty, with which ... they could find fault,) but they had in the best manner ... and ... stated the people without the smallest foundation in truth, for they had said, and ... done every thing in their power to ... themselves that the people ... had no reason to complain, but on mean could on rational grounds say, that the petitioners for Parliamentary Reform had the smallest connection with such outrages. They had not ... perpetrated by quite a different class.—

Yet exertions had not been wanting to ... such false and ... statements abroad, and the late attack on his Royal Highness, had furnished a favorable opportunity for so doing [Hear, hear !]—To support such exertions, we had the solemn mockery and piety of prayer to Almighty God, for the preservation of his Royal Highness's life from the treasonous attempts made against it. [Hear, hear !]—Every temple in England was ... to ring with falsehoods and base insinuations against the petitioners in consequence of this prayer, or (to express it more properly) this most solemn mockery. This prayer was ... in every church and ... That an attack had been made on his Royal Highness, none could doubt, but the conviction of every ... was ... ed against his life ; and he was certain, had that illustrious individual been allowed to follow the dictates of his own ... he would never have adopted the measures which have since taken place. No man could too highly condemn such an outrage—as that committed in the Park ; but it was impossible to see without disgust such attempts as were made by Ministers to induce the world to believe they exclusively were interested in the welfare and prosperity of the Royal Highness [Hear, hear !]— He would not now enter into any discussion of what were likely to be the measures adopted by the noble Lord, in consequence of the disclosure to be made to the House ... Committee given him. [Hear !] ... the noble Lord of the pleasure he should have in ... the ... that ... of the noble Lord ... [Hear, hear !] ... he could not ... now the House, that ... of the noble Lord ... [Hear, hear !] ... that ... existed a well-grounded dissatisfaction in the country, with the system which ... [Hear, hear !] ... and, which might lead to scenes not different from those in a neighbouring country ; which ... perhaps the noble Lord and seen without disgust, which ... he hoped he should not witness without dismay [hear, hear!] Alarming, indeed, was the very supposition, (God forbid it should ever be realized) that such means should ever take place here ; but he was afraid they only could be prevented by a radical reform of abuses, and by a timely attention to the wishes and desires of the people. The people were sensible of the ... effective state in which they were represented, and of the grievances they had consequently to endure, and they were now exercising their constitutional right of stating those grievances, in petitions to the House, and to which the House would do well to listen in time [hear, hear!]

Mr. Thornton said he was always desirous to preserve the sacred right of petitioning, but surely that right could not be exercised in any other light than violated, if proper care was not taken to prevent petitions, insulting the House, from being received.

Lord Castlereagh was confident the House would always consult its dignity respecting the petitions presented to it, and that ... petitions were not ... the greatest jealousy, that these petitions were expressed in at least proper language. He could not avoid stating his firm opinion that the measures adopted on the other side, was actually endeavoring to mislead the country by the line of conduct which ... pursued. Every ... attempts to persuade the country that the House would not receive the petitions, [cries of Order ! Order !]

Mr. Brougham rose to order. He conceived the expression of the noble Lord respecting his honorable Friend ... to be highly unparliamentary. The country was not Parliamentary, and the noble Lord had certainly no right to impute motives (hear !)

Lord Castlereagh was proceeding in the same ... when he was again called to order.

The Speaker said, as the noble Lord had been called to order, he felt certainly a right to explain and to show he was not out of order. The House should therefore hear him.

Lord Castlereagh certainly considered, that sufficient grounds existed for the ... in ... to receive petition presented for the ... in a manner ... to the ... ceeding, especially when they considered the manner in which Parliament was ... by the ... [Hear, hear!] The House solely out for the purpose of imposing ... taxes. (hear !) The honorable Baronet now come here to ... to ... for his sin in being ... to ... petitions which had certainly offered a studied insult to the House, in consequence of the ... which ... had been ... elsewhere. He would never permit the dignity of the House to be attacked. The attack on Parliament was nothing, but he could not consider ... to ... petitions ... which this night had said, in any other light, than a premeditated insult to the House.

Mr. Lushington ... that the petitions were indispensably ... in ... language of Petitioners was respectful, and he was confident the country must ... [Hear, hear!] ... he ... to ... every attention was paid to the Petitions which it was thought necessary to ...

The petition was then read, and ordered to lie on the Table.

Lord Lascelles presented a Petition from a number of Individuals in the W. Riding of ... praying the House would take their distressed ... into consideration. The Petition being read,

Mr. Brougham said, he was much gratified to ... the ... of the petition which the Petitioners stated their case, which at all times was certainly the ... of the House ... The petition was in itself a strong proof of what he had always asserted respecting the sound spirit of the people, and their desire to look to Parliament for relief. While such was the case—while they continued to look for relief to the only constitutional means ... and ... such relief could be derived, there was no ... for the people to believe that the Constitution was not ... Here he could not avoid observing, that the [illegible] which some ... individuals had been guilty in wishing to check the unchimney altogether. The state of the country, and the numbers thrown out of employment by the introduction of machinery, was a proper subject for the attention of the House, and one which he had no hesitation in saying was attended with great difficulty. He would not go into any remarks on the State of the Country just now, as that would be soon before the House in another shape, but he begged to say, that in his speech last night, he had not alluded to the arrest that had taken place, nor indeed could he say any thing on that head, when he considered that no documents had as yet been laid before the House, and that they therefore were in the dark respecting the propriety of those proceedings, to which he only referred for ... to the ... of the ... ceedings.

Lord Castlereagh entirely coincided with the honorable and learned gentleman, respecting the proper manner in which the Petition just read had been drawn up. He trusted the House would be assured he was as anxious as any individual could be to preserve the right of petitioning, and to ... the good valuable blessings of the constitution, and he was confident, if the people were left to ... up their petitions themselves, they would do it in the best and most proper manner. It was the means made use of to delude them, by imposing on them ... and ... petitions, that excited the disapprobation and disgust.—It was an insult to an Englishman, to suppose him incapable of stating his own grievances in a plain respectful manner. York, 15 Jan. 1817. 3-36

FOR SALE,

THAT very eligible FREEHOLD PROPERTY, in the Town of York, owned by the Subscribers, consisting of an excellent Dwelling House, Store, Stables, Coach-house, &c. It would be superfluous to point out the value of this situation, as it must be too well known to need description.——ALSO,

280 Acres of LAND on Yonge Street, Lot No. 19, commonly called Springfield; with about 60 acres of improvement. This Lot contains advantages that must be obvious: it has two excellent Dwelling-houses, Still house, Barn, Stables &c. with a never failing creek running through the front, sufficient for a Grist or Saw Mill. Its vicinity to the metropolis of the Province, combined with these advantages, must make it a valuable acquisition to the Merchant or Farmer.

200 } Acres in the Township
200 } Acres in the Township
} of Uxbridge.

Agricultural.

Account of an Experiment made to discover whether whole potatoes or cuttings are preferable for planting, with some observations on taking up potato crops. By Mr. J. Wimpey, of North Rackhampton.

From the Letters and Papers of the Bath and West of England Society—The encouragement of Agriculture.

Early in the spring of last year, I had a large quantity of potatoes, out of which I selected 48 bushels for seed.—The ground intended for them, the summer before, had horse oats and vetches, which were mowed green and given to the horses in the stables; after which it was depastured till January. It was then clean ploughed, and lay till the end of March. Twenty four cart-loads of long dung, forty bushels to the load, were then spread over it equally; and furrows were drawn the lengthway of the field, at a yard distance from each other. In eleven of these furrows, containing 60 perches or poles, were dropped fourteen bushels of whole or uncut potatoes, the size generally from a large pullet's egg to that of a goose. The rest of the ground, being 965 poles (making in the whole 325 poles, or two statute acres and five poles) was planted with thirty-four bushels of cut potatoes, being the remainder of the forty-eight bushels. These were cut mostly out of large potatoes, in pieces about the size of a middling potato's egg. The largest were cut into six or eight pieces, the less into four; being careful to preserve a proper number of eyes or buds in each cutting. The sets of both cut and uncut were planted about fourteen inches asunder, in the rows. The furrows were turned out with a plough having a double mould-board, and, when planted, were completely covered, by running the same plough up the middle of each interval, which threw the earth half one way and half the other; this is the speediest, easiest, and cheapest method of planting I am acquainted with. The ground was planted the fourteenth and fifteenth days of April.

In June they were horse-hoed, with a small one-horse plough, which I keep for horse-hoeing: and this was all the labour and expense bestowed on them during their growth.

The 20th of October, the taking them up was completed. The whole produce was only 378 bushels; a very indifferent crop! little more than half the produce per acre of last year. The expense of ploughing them up, harrowing, dragging, picking up, loading, carrying home about a quarter of a mile, unloading and carrying into the barn, &c. was not quite three pence a bag, or one penny a bushel. The state of the crop in a comparative view, I make out as follows.

The measure of all the ground planted was 325 poles; the produce 312 bushels.—The ground planted with whole or uncut sets was 60 poles; and the produce of the same was 66 bushels.

Now, if 325 poles, the whole measure of the ground planted, produced 378 bushels, then 265 poles should produce 308 bushels (I omit the fractions); but this quantity of ground, planted with cut potatoes, produced nearly a bushels more, that is, 312 bushels. Again, as 325 poles produced 378 bushels, 60 poles should have produced 69 bushels; but it produced only 66 bushels, which is upwards of 3 bushels short of its proportion. It is true, the difference is too trivial to be worthy of notice; but what it is, is in favor of the cut potatoes—With respect to the produce per acre then, it is a matter of little importance whether the ground be planted with cut or uncut potatoes.

The produce per acre being nearly the same, whether planted with whole or cut potatoes, the great and interesting question remains, viz. What is the difference of the expense in the planting of cut or uncut potatoes? This is very satisfactorily ascertained as follows.

If 45 bushels, the whole quantity of seed, produced 378 bushels, then 34 bushels a, the quantity cut, should produce 238 bushels; but they produced 312, which is 45 bushels more than the proportion. A-ain, if 48 bushels produced 378 bushels, then 34 bushels should have produced 110 bushels; but 14 bushels of uncut produced only 66 bushels, which is 44 less than the proportion of 34 bushels. Hence the error is in favor of cut potatoes, in comparison with whole sets! By this statement it clearly appears, that any quantity of land planted with potatoes cut into pieces of the size aforementioned, will, ceteris paribus, produce as great a crop as an equal quantity of land planted with uncut potatoes, the weight of which should be 40 per cent. more: for example.

To plant a statute acre with potatoes as above, would require, of uncut, 37 1-2 bushels; of cut, only 20 1-2, the difference nearly 17 bushels; which at two shillings and fourpence per bushel (the price they sold at in March last) amounts to one pound nineteen shillings and eight pence. An object much too considerable to be neglected by the planter of many acres, even when the price may be as low as three shillings a sack.

N. B. Potatoes in this country are usually sold by the bag. By a bag is understood a sack which will hold four bushels of corn, nine gallon measure; which they fill so full as they can, leaving room to admit of its being tied; and the usual weight is twelve score or two hundred and forty pounds. This sack holds three bushels of potatoes heaped.

The foregoing experiment was conducted with all imaginable care and precision; the facts are laid down fairly, and the writer hopes the calculations are just.

—P. S. In case 5, a premium is offered to the inventor of the best new constructed plough for ploughing up potatoe crops, by which the work may be done with the least loss, or damage to the crop. As the method of taking the potatoe crops is not attended with the least loss or damage, and is, I conceive, as expeditious and as little expensive, as any other, I request leave to lay it before the Society.

As observed before, I plant my potatoes in rows, with the beds 3 1-2 feet, for the convenience of horse-hoeing them. When the haulm is decay'd, I proceed to take them up in the following manner, with a common plough, or wheel plough, much used in this part of Hants, and in Wilts; the ploughman (having first taken out the coulter, and adjusted the wheel so that the point of the share may pass under the bed of potatoes) begins at one end, just under the middle of the bed, and with a good furrow turns them out on the surface of the ground. Two or three boys or girls follow the plough, and pick them up as they appear; and when the first furrow is cleared before the ploughman has finished another) and thus they proceed, without the least hindrance or interruption to each other.

When the whole is ploughed and picked in this manner, a pair of drags is run over the whole, which separates and exposes the potatoes that may have been covered by the clods of earth, which are then also picked up, and the ground nearly cleared. The season now will come for sowing wheat, the ground is clean ploughed, and the few potatoes that may possibly remain fully exposed to view, may be done also just as the ground is rendered very clean. In this way, the whole expense of harvesting the crop is little more than picking up and carrying home, for that expense of ploughing &c. is little, if any, more than would have been incurred in tilling the ground equally well for the wheat crop.

Now I think it impossible for any operation or device whatever, to take up a potatoe crop with less loss or damage. The crop of the above experiment was taken up and carried home with great ease, but not so much as a single gallon was bruised, cut, or damaged, in any degree whatever.

Arrest of suspected Persons.

The following statement is from the ordinary gazette, extraordinary:

The apprehension of Messrs Watson, Preston, the Ewins, Keene alias Kearney, Castles, alias Jackson, was arranged and executed in the following manner: they were all apprehended at the same time, although some of them reside at a considerable distance from each other, and were all in four coaches at the door within an hour and a half of each other, so that it was impossible for any alarm to be created among the conspirators. They were kept apart from each other during the day as much as possible, from the time of their being removed from Bow-street office, to the secretary of state's office, to be examined before the cabinet ministers. The officers expected to find Watson with Preston, at a meeting of the Spafields society, which was held at the Black Bear public house, in Strangle-street, Lambeth, where Preston acted as president, which was numerously attended. Some officers were in waiting on the outside of the house, who knew Watson by sight, and they being observed by some person, gave information to Mr. President Preston, who treated it with his usual coolness and firmness, and harangued his auditors upon the subject, telling them of the information he had received, and that for any violence of which they might be spies of government in the room, which certainly was open for any one. It was stated yesterday by mistake, that Dr. Watson was in the same bed with Preston: he was on a bed on the floor in the same apartment.

A reduction of three hundred in each flag ship, and two in each other line of battle ship, is to take place immediately. Each division of the royal marines is to undergo another alteration, which, it is said, will occasion in the whole about 80 lieutenants to be placed upon half pay.

The amount of the French loan, it now appears, is only positive for 100 millions of francs, about four millions sterling, but optional for the second 100 millions or four millions, by the expiration of eight months, the completion of the first four millions may take the second, but at a higher price of the French funds, which are now considerably contracted for are taken at 55, French funds—and the payments are to be completed by the end of ten months from the date of the contract. The contractors are—first, Mr. Baring, of London; next the Hopes, of Amsterdam; Parish of Hamburgh; a house at Frankfort; and five banking houses at Paris.

The royal court of Paris, has, at length given judgment in the important question between the royal exchequer, and the house of Barnadiston, of Suffolk, regarding certain hills which that house negociated for Buonaparte, on the eve of his abdication, to the amount of 710,000 francs, or 29,583 pounds.

The Sir Francis Drake is to be commissioned by captain Rouker, for the flag of vice-admiral Pickmore, at Newfoundland.

The four state prisoners recently committed to the Tower, are confined in separate apartments, with a sentinel over each of them. A yeoman attends upon them with their victuals. They are allowed tea, or bread and butter for breakfast; and a pound and a half of meat, with a due proportion of bread, and a pint of porter for dinner. Every proper attention is paid to them, so that their personal comforts are greater than they enjoyed when at liberty.

Yesterday, Dr. Watson, the two Ewin's, Keene and Castles, were examined again at the Secretary of State's office. The examination lasted from twelve till four. Old Ewin in the custody of a sergeant at being classed with such a man as Preston. He disapproves of Sir F. Burdett, Hunt and his mob, and in fact, no public character seems to come up to his standard.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Reform in Parliament.

Lord Cochrane said, he had in his hand a petition which prayed for Parliamentary Reform, and went the length of asking for Universal Suffrage, and Annual Parliaments. It, therefore, he supposed, would meet the opposition of an honorable and learned gentleman, who had said, those who urged any such measure, wished to mislead and dupe the people. When such assertions as these were made they called for some answer; and he should take this opportunity of making some observations upon them. The noble Lord then read some extracts from Judge Blackstone, in which it was laid down, that as the subject was to obey, they ought to have a voice in making them; and that they were bound to obey the laws, because they had a voice in making them. Now, in Scotland, there were 2,700 electors, and there was a population of 3,000,000 of persons;—could it be contended that the people of Scotland were represented, or had they a voice in making the laws? they had not; and, therefore, were not bound to obey them.—Loud cries of order, order! Chair, chair!

The Speaker said, the noble Lord must be aware such language could not be tolerated.

Lord Cochrane.—If the House would have allowed me to complete my sentence——

The Speaker.—The noble Lord had made it too complete.

Lord Cochrane.—I should have added, according to Blackstone's theory. The noble Lord then continued. He agreed with the people, who always thought coolly, and decided wisely.—Hear, hear! He was not equal to the learned and hon. Gentleman, who had seemed him of misleading and duping the people, but he must say, that the hon. and learned Gentleman, when making the assertions, should have used some respect for the opinions held by himself on former occasions. The learned Gentleman was now a representative of a rotten borough, which, at the time he held the doctrines from which he had departed, he entertained hopes of being the representative for Westminster. He alluded to what had passed at a Common Hall held place at the London Tavern, in June, 1814. On that occasion, the hon. and learned Gentleman, declared his principles to be, that suffrage should be as extensive as taxation. That such was the hon. Gentleman's political creed at that time, he could read in that gentleman's own hand writing. "I will ask him, is it not his own hand writing?"—[Here the noble Lord held a paper to Mr. Brougham, and there was a cry of order all over the house from all parts of the House.]—The noble Lord contended he did not know whether he was quite regular,—a laugh,—but he would read it that it was written. That he and learned Gentleman, according to the the paper, said at that dinner, that suffrage and taxation should go hand in hand.—Now as there is there that did not pay taxation, even in the shoes he wore and the bread he eat. The hon. Gentleman also said, that Parliaments ought to did more good in the last year of its sitting, than it did the other six, and that it was because they were conscious they would soon have to meet their constituents. Mr. Brougham on that occasion also objected to a toast which was given, namely, a full, fair, and a free representation of the people, and learned Gentleman said, the words "of the people" should have been added—there was no reason already, he said, a full, fair, and free representation, a full representation of the aristocracy, a fair one of the landed interest, and a free one of the influence of the crown. He knew he was very little representation of the people. These were the opinions of the hon. and learned Gentleman then. He had no reason to suppose that the hon. and learned gentleman, but it was somewhat singular, that he should publish this his political creed, just at the time when it was supposed he would be called upon, would be expelled, and that there would be a vacancy for the city of Westminster. The noble Lord might have been the Gentleman's motives, the noble Lord observed, he thought he should have been a little more delicate, in reflecting upon those motives, than he had been. He called the people the deceived and duped, and those the deceivers, amongst whom the most honorable men were charged, namely, he was afraid an ways be most happy to claim the honor of being acquainted with; a man who had never been of any party; he meant Maj. Cartwright.—A laugh.

Mr. Brougham always felt pain in speaking of himself; at the same time, he could not but express his grateful him his indulgence on the present occasion. Hear, hear! Whilst he thanked the noble Lord for the frank manner in which he had explained his motives, he must confess he could not but complain of the noble Lord, for suffering himself to be misled by those persons, who, for the sake of their impatience in not waiting a few days, when they would have had his full opinion upon the bill, which at present they had not; as on the night in which he made the observations which had called down the present censures of the noble Lord upon himself, and more particularly against giving any pledge, as to the vote which he should give on this great and most important question. The hon. Gentleman had entered into a detail of what passed at the dinner, which the noble Lord had alluded to, and denied that any change had since taken place in his opinions. The noble Lord, said, and he said now, that taxation should bound suffrage; but he did not mean to those who paid by beggars in the street. He said then, and repeated, that in his opinion, direct taxation towards the support of government should entitle to suffrage. Ten years ago he held the same opinion, though he then said it would be politic to take what could be got of reform, even if it were confined to the freeholders, or some of the close boroughs, and thus extending the representation. He recommended this course, then, because he thought it would be politic to get a footing first, and having done so then to proceed to the ultimate object. Did the noble Lord now suppose that by proposing a specific bill, or by a speech after dinner, he should induce him to swerve from any opinion which he might have have taken up, for fear of a charge of inconsistency; and, that under the lash he should be now deterred from giving his vote and opinion fairly one conscientiously. Hear, hear! Let no one be induced to alter his conduct in a bad thing which the noble Lord could say, either in the House or out of doors.—Hear, hear! As to the hon. and learned gentleman's insinuation of the noble Lord, that for the sake of occupying a seat, which the noble Lord had filled, or for the gratification of being brought into the House, on the shoulders of a mob, as some others had been, he would give up his opinion: he treated it with the contempt it merited. Hear, hear! The hon. Gentleman concluded with expressing his regret at the folly and madness which had been displayed, and the base expedient which had been adopted to separate the people and to gratify party feelings, and the ambition and party purposes of a few individuals; he trusted, however, that no honest man, either in the House or out of doors, would be bound to support the schemes of these individuals.

Mr. Wood said, he must say a few observations on the feelings which might actuate either the noble Lord, or his hon. Friend, who perhaps were each of them friendly to the same cause, tho' they took a different view of it; but he regretted that it should have been stated at any time, that a little step might be gained without a series of steps, by the objects obtained at first, should satisfy first efforts: he was persuaded, that to make any innovation in our Constitution would be dangerous in the extreme. That was his first opposition.

Mr. T. Burdett did not consider that supporting the first steps to Parliamentary Reform should be so taken as to pledge any man against going further if found necessary; but he was persuaded, if such a Reform were adopted as should guard and control the public purse, the great fault of the people would be satisfied. With respect to the feuds which an Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Ward) seemed to entertain of any innovations in the Constitution, why, the Irish Parliament was purchased, and the learned Gentleman said, the words "of the people" should have been added—there was no reason already, he said, a full, fair, and free representation, a full representation of the aristocracy, a fair one of the landed interest, and a free one of the influence of the crown. He knew he was very little representation of the people. These were the opinions of the hon. and learned Gentleman then. He had no reason to suppose that the hon. and learned gentleman, but it was somewhat singular, that he should publish this his political creed, just at the time when it was supposed he would be called upon, would be expelled, and that there would be a vacancy for the city of Westminster. As a proof of the correctness on which this surmise is founded, Lord Castlereagh actually refused to take leave of Buonaparte, previous to his quitting St. Helena, although most pressingly invited and urged to this act of common civility. It is supposed that Las Casas, whose habitual cunning and dexterity at dissimulation never were equalled, declined all participation in the plan, lest doing should occur to frustrate his fixed resolution of quitting a service, with which, from his appetite for intrigue, being completely baulked, he has long since had abundant reason to be disgusted.—Buonaparte was reported to be in bad health when the Orontes left St. Helena. He still obstinately adhered to his haughty resolution of not taking exercise without the limits which subjected him to the escort of a British officer. His medical attendants have informed him, in vain, that his health would suffer from the privation of air and exercise.

The Orontes has brought home from the Cape, another of Buonaparte's attendants, a Pole, by the name of Piontowsky, not Pomatowsky, as the public papers have called him. This person it has been doubted a Colonel by common fame, which is an honor to which he has no claim. He merely held the rank of sub-lieutenant in some obscure Polish regiment, and having deserted it, and he literally forced himself upon the British government, who giving credit to his story, gave him a passage to St. Helena, in a sloop of war, which followed the Northumberland.—On his landing at St. Helena, Buonaparte said he did not know him, and would not see him for many months; but on his being an acquaintance was, however, ultimately formed between them; but Monsieur Piontowsky, not finding the speculation upon which he had come to be such as all profitable, or even agreeable, manœuvred so as to get transmitted to the Cape, and from thence to Europe. He ought not to omit mentioning, that while Piontowsky was occupied at St. Helena, a kind of underplot was attempted in London, by a female intriguer, to whom he was married a few days previous to his leaving Plymouth. This lady displayed the most eager anxiety to follow her husband, and made every sort of application to persons high in office, to obtain that permission; but her visits were entirely discontinued. In the intriguing into the affair, it was discovered that Piontowsky had communicated to her the failure of his own projects at St. Helena, and the necessity he got him to Europe, as soon as he could.

Of the above interesting subject, the Hull Advertiser, received yesterday, contains the following important article:

Extract of a letter from Capt. Clifford of the Prince Regent, of Hull, recently arrived in the channel, to his father at that port, dated Sea-reach, 31 St. Helena, being only allowed to come to an anchor, and not permitted to go on shore, or have any communication with the island.

A frigate has come with us, in addition to the ships on with water, and as soon as that was done, we were ordered by the Admiral to sail immediately, and not to lay to, until we were out of sight of the island. They take great care of Buonaparte. The officers told us he seldom leaves the house, and they say much dissatisfied with his situation, as also with the allowance. Las Casas had been detected in attempting a clandestine correspondence with the partizans of Buonaparte through the medium of a lady in London. A letter had been detected in the lining of a black boy's jacket, written on very fine silk paper, which was found out as yet unknown for the want of a key. Las Casas was removed, and confined on a close prisoner. Buonaparte, a few days before the Orontes left them, had it up a quantity of plate and sold it, under pretence that his allowance was not enough. He is very much reduced in flesh; there is no other in which he would be secure; four vessels of war continually cruise round the island; no fishing boats are allowed to be out after sunset, nor all haven ticket given them in the morning, which they must produce every night. In fact, if he escapes from thence he must be something more than man.

When the Orontes left the Cape, Lord C. Somerset was preparing for a journey into the interior, for the purpose of making further enquiries into the Slave Colonies, who since the reduction of the Cape militia, had become very troublesome to the settlers. Capt. Clifford, in his letter, brings a full confirmation of the reports some time in circulation, of a rendezvous having been broken out among Buonaparte's companions at St. Helena. Las Casas, and his son had been expelled from the Island, and had arrived at the Cape of Good Hope, on the Gorgon sloop of war, when the Orontes left that settlement. The charge against Las Casas and his Son, are, for corresponding on secret correspondence with two or three of some notorious characters in Europe, but more particularly in France. It was, however, strongly suspected at St. Helena and the Cape, as one of them already hinted to our readers, that Las Casas had no other object in view, but that of separating himself from Buonaparte, who had of late become so revish and discontented, that all he said him were kept in perpetual mo-

PARIS, Feb. 7.

The Emperor of Austria has founded in his states, a sinking fund, like that of England and William Pitt.

The disputes between the Jews, and the city of Frankfort, are not yet terminated. The Diet has referred the Jews to the Senate, and the Senate refers them to the Legislative Body, where, it is supposed, their claims will be heard.

It appears by the letters received in Paris from Algiers, that the Dey of Algiers, in consequence of the remonstrances of the negroes and soldiers. The latter particularly, armed themselves against those who wished to extinguish the flames, and actually cut the hose and pipes which were conveying the water to the engines, in order that they might plunder with more effect.—Many of these wretches perished in the flames, in a state of intoxication.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE, YORK;

THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1817.

From some very late American papers, which have been politely sent to us, we have made as copious extracts as the time would allow.

NEW-YORK, April 26.

We stopped our Press yesterday afternoon, to announce the arrival from Liverpool of the ship Ann-Maria, Capt. Bell, and the brig Jane, Capt. Rathbone, in 36—furnishing us with London papers to the 18th and Liverpool to the 19th of March.

Among the articles selected for the Commercial Advertiser of last evening, the reader will find a detailed and interesting account of the execution of Cashman for high treason. He was executed for the murder of Mr. Beresford at the Spafield meeting with arms in their hands.

The Royal Assent was given on the 6th of March, to the bill for the suspension of the Habeas Corpus.

On the 6th of March, the Prince Regent held a Levee, at which both Houses of Parliament and loyal addresses were presented to His Royal Highness.

A bill to reduce the number of seamen and soldiers in the service of government, passed the House of Lords on the 6th of March.

The unfunded debt in Exchequer bills, outstanding on the 5th of Jan 1817 amounted to £48,000,000 of which £30,000,000 have been since liquidated, and 18 millions remain yet unprovided for

An extra Gazette is published in London every Thursday, filled with loyal addresses and declarations, from all parts of the kingdom

On the 1st of March, a serious riot took place at Ballina, (Ireland) on the occasion of the populace attempting to stop a quantity of oatmeal &c. which were on the way to Sligo. The Military fired several rounds. Six of the rioters were killed and wounded. On the 2nd of March, Galway presented a most dreadful scene; the rioters broke the windows, rushed into the houses, and plundered and molested with fiend-like rage. All Constables who dared to show face, were beaten to death. Nocrust—no Castlereagh—off with their heads—Down with the Orangemen, were the watchwords. These are the short but significant expressions of their handbills. They had read Burdett and the Hampden Club, and acted up to the principles of the French demagogues. Happily the military were on the spot, and on the route by which they arrived at their goal was too long.—The royal Insurrs were not put out of fear even after the military had arrived. Any marching had been put in motion. The love, the divine affection of Burdett, Hunt & Co. had been. and Fore Dandeaux of France, did not rise to the top quick enough. They had a severe battle with the mob, and did not retire from the scene of the disaffected here. They waited to see if from the point of bayonets, they could act men in office. They marched between treason and loyalty, and the latter triumphed. Peace is the pioneer of their paths.

Tallyrand, grand Chamberlain of France, presented his services to the King.

A motion to abolish Slavery has been decided in the affirm. in the House of Lords, by a majority of 80—8 members only voting in the affirmative

The government has suggested to the public creditors, the propriety of reducing the present interest. a portion of their monies for the public benefit

Extract of a letter from New-Orleans to a Gentleman on Philadelphia, dated March 29, 1817.

We had yesterday a most entertaining mob here in consequence of the English ship Hamilton having on board a small cargo which have some resemblance to the contraband flag. Every vessel, or Frenchman who saddled on the levee, armed with cowhides, pistols and cutlasses of the captain of the ship, on each of which he hoist down the flag, upon the captain refusing to haul it down they made a charge, and, in the hustle, killed one of the Englishmen. The Mayor, Governor, and the Commons' Committee—paying themselves diligently to this point, gave it to their Irish pensioners. But the benevolence of that day were deliberately premeditated; and consequently they were not to be disappointed. Accordingly at the moment, or the unsubdivided attempt of any unpremeditated splendour.

The report of the Committee may be divided into two parts; the first relating to the Metropolis, and the other parts to the rest of the country. The picture they draw of the latter is distressing in the extreme. The poor-rates are in all most evidely; and "in for the greater number of them, and particularly in those which are included in the great manufacturing districts of Lancashire, Leicestershire, Nottinghamshire, and Derbyshire, the distress short of a Revolution is the object expected and avowed." The Committee show the intimate connection between the Clubs and Societies of Spa Fields, and the country—they state that lists of us' of the members of these societies were found in the possession of the electors for the purpose of procuring signatures to petitions for Parliamentary reform. They contained the names of many persons, who, on the faith of the petitions were presented by Sir Francis Burdet.

GLASGOW, March 8.

"After long and patient examinations before the Sheriff, 14 persons have been committed for trial, on the charge of Conspiring against the Government, and high treason an unlawful Oath."

Important Intelligence from MANCHESTER.

We announced yesterday that four persons had been taken into custody at Manchester, on suspicion of being concerned in the plot, and that more were expected to be apprehended. This morning's Gazette contains the following account of the information which we subjoin. It appears that a meeting was held at Manchester on Monday, previous to any one being intimated that the warrants collected on that day, would proceed in a body to the house of Mr. Ogden, in Deansgate, in pursuance of the provisions of the late act, and there take into custody all persons found assembled. The meeting was held at

FOR SALE,

THAT very eligible FREEHOLD PROPERTY, in the Town of York, owned by the Subscribers, consisting of an excellent Dwelling House, Store, Stables, Coach-house, &c. It would be superfluous to point out the value of this situation, as it must be too well known to need description—also,

210 Acres of LAND on Yonge Street, Lot No. 19, commonly called Springfield; with about 60 acres of improvement. This Lot contains advantages that must be obvious: it has two excellent Dwelling-houses, Still house, Barn, Stables &c. with a never failing creek running through the front, sufficient for a Grist or Saw Mill. Its vicinity to the metropolis of the Province, combined with these advantages, must make it a valuable acquisition to the Merchant or Farmer.

200 Acres in the Township of York.
200 Acres in the Township of Uxbridge.

The above property will be sold on reasonable terms, which can be had of the Subscribers.

J. M. JACKSON & SONS.

PROCLAMATION.

BY HIS EXCELLENCY
FRANCIS GORE, Esq. LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR of our said Province, &c. &c.

WHEREAS by an Act of the Parliament of this Province, made and passed in the Forty-second Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act to enable the Governor, "Lieutenant-Governor, or Person administering the Government of this "Province, to appoint one or more additional Port or Ports, Place or Places "of Entry, within this Province: And "to appoint one or more Collector, or "Collectors of the same," has lately expired—AND WHEREAS, the said Act hath since been revived by An Act passed in the Fifty-sixth Year of His Majesty's Reign: AND WHEREAS, as well with reference to the Interests of His Majesty's Government of this Province, as to the convenience of Inspectors of Goods and Merchandize, and of Merchants, and other His Majesty's Subjects resident within this Province, it hath been ascertained that there is immediate occasion for appointing One other additional Port or Place of Entry and Clearance, at the Place hereinafter specified. BE IT THEREFORE KNOWN, That I, FRANCIS GORE, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, in exercise of the power and authority vested in me by the said recited Act, and by and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Province, Do hereby declare and appoint, That in addition to the Ports of Entry and Clearance, established by, and under the authority of a certain Act of the Parliament of this Province, passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act for "Granting to His Majesty, His Heirs "and Successors, to and for the uses of "this Province, the like Duties on "Goods and Merchandize, imported in"to this Province from the United "States, as are now paid on Goods "and Merchandize, imported from "Great-Britain, and other places."—And also, by and under the authority of the above recited Act, passed in the Year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and two, the Place herein-after mentioned and Specified; That is to say, the Outlet of Burlington Bay, in the District of Gore, shall from the first Day of January next, be, and the same is by these presents Established and Declared to be a Port and Place of Entry and Clearance, for all Goods and Merchandize not being entirely prohibited; and for the payment of all Duties liable to be paid on all Goods and Merchandize brought into this Province, from the United States of America, imposed and established by virtue of the said Act so passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign.

GIVEN Under my Hand and Seal at Arms, at York, this Fifteenth day of December, in the Year of our Lord One thousand Eight Hundred and Sixteen and in the Forty-Seventh year of His Majesty's Reign.

FRANCIS GORE,
Lieutenant Governor.

By Command of His Excellency,
WM. JARVIS, Secretary.

Lieut Governor's Office,
York, 19th Feb. 1817.

THIS is to give NOTICE, that Tenders will be received at the Office of the Provincial Secretary, as may be desirous of Contracting to build the whole or any part of the water communication between La Chine and Kingston, by the course of the Rideau, navigable for Boats drawing six feet water, and ten feet width, also to Locks having three feet water, and twelve feet in width.

The tenders are to specify the number of Locks and the places at which the proposed to build them; also the number of Flood-gates in each Lock, and the period for completing the work by the Irish Creek.

Tenders will also be received for opening the communication in the direction of the Rideau Lake, and the waters communicating from thence to Mud Lake, and from thence to Kingston.

Tenders, stating the securities for performing the Contract, will be received until the 30th of June next inclusive: and further particulars may be known by applying to the Surveyor-General's Office at York, the Office of the Deputy-Quarter-Master-General at Quebec, or of the Assistant-Quarter-Master-General at Kingston.

Agricultural.

Further Observations respecting the best manner of planting Potatoes, by Mr. Joseph Wimpey.

I FORMERLY gave an account of an experiment made to discover whether whole potatoes or cuttings are to be preferred implanting.

The result of that experiment it clearly appeared, that the advantage lay greatly on the side of cuttings. But as, from long experience, I know conclusions drawn from single experiments cannot be safely dependedon, and as the result of that experiment differed so widely from an account given by a very respectable correspondent of the society, whose accuracy is well known, and of whose probity and veracity I have the highest opinion, I resolved to repeat my former experiment as exactly as possible, by way of establishing a fact so interesting to the public, if found just, or of retracting an error, if it should appear to be one.

In the spring of 1791, I prepared about three acres of ground, and in April planted it with potatoes. A certain quantity of the largest and finest were selected, one half of which were planted whole, the other cut into pieces of a moderate size. An exact account of each was kept at taking up, when it appeared that the produce per acre was much the same as in the former experiment; but the cut potatoes were nearly four times the ground that the whole sets did, the advantage lay, in the same proportion, on the side of planting with cut potatoes. I therefore still think there cannot be the least doubt that the preference is to be given to cuttings, as the success of the two experiments so nearly coincides.

I have been used for some years to furnish my neighbours with potatoes for planting. The last season those of them desired I would let him have them all small. He said he had planted small ones several years, that he found them equally productive with the largest, and thereby saved much trouble in cutting. Others (who carried their economy much further) preferred the largest, as they, it seems, used to pare them, to eat the fleshy part, and to plant the rinds only. Upon inquiry, I found this was not an unusual practice among the Germans here, and, I have been credibly informed that they get as large crops, and as good potatoes, in that method of planting as in any other whatever. If this be a fact, it seems to appear, that the fleshy part of the bulb is of no use in supplying nourishment to the young root, after the fibrous roots have put forth, and laid hold of the ground. Perhaps an experiment of this sort may be thought worth making.

From the United States.

From the Norfolk Herald of April 9.

A most destructive fever has prevailed in the island of Bermuda, for several months past past, which has swept off a large portion of the population, and proved particularly fatal to strangers arriving.—Nearly a thousand men are said to have died in the garrison at Bridgetown alone, during the period of its continuance, and on board of the shipping, the mortality was proportionably great, many vessels being almost stript of their crews. The contagion is supposed to have been imported in a vessel from the Isle of France.

CHARLESTON, April 11.

A gentleman from New-Orleans, via Savannah, has favored us with New-Orleans papers to the 14th ult.—He also informs us, that Mr. Lattimore and the other proprietors of the Batture had submitted certain propositions to the city Council, calculated to conciliate the interests of the city, with their own private claims, to this important part of New-Orleans. The propositions were published by the corporation, for the information of the citizens—and the general belief was, that they would be accepted by the Council; and that this useful part of the city would be immediately improved.—The Mississipi had begun to rise at New-Orleans on the 6th of March; and some small pieces of ice had been seen floating past the city, which had never before been observed by the oldest inhabitant. The winter in the Western country had been very severe. The Ohio did not break up at the Falls before the 1st of March.

Owing to the severe winter above, and the consequent low state of the Mississippi, flour and Western produce generally, were very scarce and high in price, along the river. At Natchez, it sold for 15 dollars.—But the supplement of December and toboteco from above, it was supposed, would be very great this year.

The port was crowded with shipping, no less than 200 sail of square rigged vessels and freights very dull and low Cotton 1 cent per To. to Liverpool. cot Cotton at New-Orleans 28 cents.

NEW-YORK, April 26.

The Ann-Maria has brought upwards of six thousand letters. As papers we have received by her contain most distressing accounts of the damage done during the long continuance of tempestuous westerly gales; these had also produced much inconvenience and expence to the ship owners, and extreme misery to numbers of poor individuals who had taken their passage in Packets for Ireland, and who but for the assistance afforded by the Stranger's friend society, would have been exposed to the greatest extremity of wretchedness.—The wind had continued adverse to vessels having Liverpool for nearly eight weeks. The Dublin Packets which usually sailed every day, attempted getting out five successive Tuesdays, but were forced back each time by the contrary gales, and it was twenty seven years since a detention had occurred to them. The Liverpool Mercury of the 14th of March, states, that there were then in that port 606 sail of vessels, out of which from a moderate calculation, there were upwards of 300 ready for sea.

Extract of a letter dated St. Thomas, April 1.

"A gentleman from St. Barts, informs, me, that an American Indiaman has arrived at St. Barts in distress, in two hundred and twenty days from Calcutta, all but the captain, chief mate, and one seaman having died of a contagious fever on board. The ship was in quarantine, and my informant could not learn either the name, or that of her captain or supercargo, but says she certainly belongs to Baltimore."

The New-Orleans Gazette of the 17th, states that at the last session of the Legislature of Louisiana, an act was passed incorporating a company to construct "on the Atlantic steam coasting company," with the exclusive privilege of entering the Mississippi from the sea with vessels impelled by the force of steam for the space of 20 years. It is understood the object of this company is to establish a steam ship between New-Orleans and New-York.

Something Singular.—We understand there is a gentleman in this town, of the name of Myers, from Germany who is possessed astonishing power and flexibility of voice. They, it seems, taught him to equal the complexity of the stringed Instruments, and the softness and melody of the Hautboy or Clarionet. In the present dearth of Musical Entertainment, a phenomenon might be usefully brought forward for the public amusement.—Boston Even. Gaz.

Common Schools—The Superintendant of Common Schools reports to the Legislature, that "the common schools of the state, exclusive of the city and county of New-York, at least five thousand Common Schools, which have been organized and kept up under the act for their establishment; and the number of children annually taught in them, exceeds two hundred thousand." The sum distributed last year from the common school fund, was about $65,000.—Alb. Argus.

Fat sheep.—Mr. Dunn, of Green street brought to town, this week, 13 sheep, fattened at his farm in Guilderland, the finest he ever saw. On being asked his price, he answered two hundred dollars for the thirteen, or $ 15 62 each. The enquirer immediately drew a check for the amount, and closed with the offer. The sheep have been exhibited in the New-York market.—They are from the Bakewell breed, captured in a prize by the privateer Tenare, during the late war. They have short legs, large fleece, and remarkable broad chests. It is a characteristic of this breed, that they become remarkably fat on the same quantity of food that it requires to subsist ordinary sheep. Farmers who raise sheep for the butcher, will do well to attend to these hints.—Ib.

Despatch in Printing.

A new novel lately received from England, entitled "THE PASTOR'S FIRESIDE," in three large duodecimo volumes, making together 628 close printed pages, was put into the hands of the printers on Wednesday morning, and delivered by them complete to the bookseller on the Tuesday morning following, in time to permit him to offer it for sale by 6 o'clock—a little more than four days and an half—a despatch in the line of our profession seldom equalled.—Daily Adv.

From Europe.

From the London Courier of Feb. 20.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE OF SECRECY.

That it appears to your committee, after a most attentive consideration of the evidence submitted to them from various parts of the country, that attempts had been made, and still to take advantage of the distresses of the labouring and manufacturing classes of the nation, with a view not only to effect a parliamentary reform on the principle of annual parliaments and universal suffrage, but to cause the total overthrow of all our institutions, and of every description of landed and funded property.

That this scheme of general confusion chiefly proceeded from the doctrines maintained by a number of societies, distinguished by the style of "Spencean," whose books were principally taken from the works of a visionary writer, published above twenty years ago. That at a meeting of some of those societies it was urged, "that positive property was the root of all the miseries of life, and that the only remedy was to destroy it;" but that it was not only a sinful measure, and that the people ought to look to the protection of the land, and nothing short of that; and that as to the constitution, of which so much had been said, this country had no constitution, for it was not to be found in any book, nor could any assertion of what it was. In other societies founded on the Spencean principles, it had been maintained, that the only remedy for the grievances of the people was to burn down the land-owners, and to deprive them still greater wretches the funding proprietors of their unmerited rights.

It appeared also, that these, and other doctrines of a similar atrocious character, gained the most blasphemous and impious proceedings; and that so they assumed to be of a connected system, the societies and public meetings were followed by songs of the most lascivious and seditious description, and by the most impious parodies of the liturgy, and of various parts of the holy scriptures.

That in order to extend the principles of these societies over the whole kingdom, the most unremitting efforts were made by their various members; and in consequence those principles were disseminated in numerous and public meetings of the disbanded soldiers and sailors, and to the distressed labourers and manufacturers of the country, and that the chief object, incredible activity and been used to disperse cheap, and seditious publications, tending to subvert and unfolding the doctrines of the societies.

That the plans thus proposed for the satisfaction of your committee, that a number of the members of those various societies, resting in a body at midnight, connected and determined, in their opinion the objects which they had in view could only be said to be attained by an effort of the physical strength of the people to overturn the present constitution of the country; they considered the first step which should be taken by them for this purpose, was by timely discontents of the metropolis and its vicinity, and that a number of persons should be selected by the individual delegates to the general body.

That it appears to your committee that a plan to include the meeting of the whole, and of which, to surprise the soldiers, and in the terror which would thereby occasioned to fix the attention to various places, in order to take possession of the barracks, the tower and the bank—and incorporating, at the same time, the most formidable machine was invented with which the whole of the disaffected might be united. This plan was, however, relinquished as premature; and it was resolved that it would be more advisable that the members of the whole disaffected party, by assessing meetings under the pretext of reforming parliament, obtain the large mail of reform in Parliament; and a map of London having been procured, in order to point out whence an attack on the bank and the tower could with the greatest facility be made. That the meeting of delegates, which was originally advertised for the 18th of November that printed bills were circulated for the purpose of it in all parts of the town, of one of which the following is a copy.

"Resolved to arms: The whole country only waits the signal from London. Break open the gaols—Seize the Arm repositories—Arm with the Instruments. No rise in the price of bread. No Excise—No Taxes—Equality of Wealth—Equality of Rights. No bishops; they are only useless lumber.

N. B. 5000 of these bills are posted up in the town and in the principal parts of the neighborhood."

That the intended insurrection assumed all the symbols of the French revolution. That a large quantity of pikes and arms were formed, consisting of 24 members. That flags and cockades were prepared, and that the words, Liberty and Equality, who are described in consequence of the discussions which took place in the country have assembled in London and are expected to be joined by many more. Whatever may be the real object of these clubs in general, your committee have no hesitation in stating, from the evidence before them, that the leading members are active in the circulation of seditious publications, and that they have collected, ready prepared have been sent down into the country for the purpose of the immediate dissemination of the objects of the Spencean system, and which are composed of the lowest order of artizans, neither short of a revolution in the state, nor of a division of property.

Your committee find, from copious undoubted information, that the doctrines of the Spencean clubs have been extended to the remotest parts of the country, either by the emissions of similar societies in London, or by the personal circulation of missionaries or delegates whose business it is to propagate those doctrines among the country people to whom they are strangers. It is to the universal practice of these societies, to receive from the members a small weekly subscription, which provides a fund for the expenses of their missionaries, and for the purchase of the seditious tracts which are read and commented on at their meetings. Some of these tracts, your committee have in their possession in the original manner, the necessity of overturning, not only only the present system of government, but also of the whole system of society, and of every profession useful to society. A new order is declared to be the will of the people; rebellion is justified by the assertion that no man can be said to rebel; and all religion is disowned, as well as every law, by the assertion that the universe is the creation, "would you live without gods or kings?—We abjure tyranny or every kind.

It seems, indeed, to be a part of the system adopted by these societies to consider the interests of the people for the destruction of the present law and order, as inseparably connected with the ruin of decent and regular subordination, but all the principles of morality and religion. Your committee find that there is scarcely to be found in numerous society in the parts above referred to, a single publication of a seditious nature, in which some of the leading speakers do not openly avow the most seditious opinions, and do not endeavour to prepare the people for the actual insurrection. Topics for discussion are given out at each of the meetings, and the resolutions, whether the jacobin or the loyalist be the best form of government, and whether annihilating is recommended. it is proposed to be considered in such a manner, by an immense number of persons assembled at the same time, in several parties, attached to each other, and formed into an order of battle, and to force whatever they demanded. A general idea seems to be prevalent among those who compose these societies, that some bloodshed, at no very great distance, is to be appointed for a general massacre. They even begin to look forward to the meeting in London, as the signal for the commencement of the work, and to the day of journing their own assemblies simultaneously to the same day; and it is a lamentable instance of the misconception which is formed with those societies, that

FOR SALE,

THAT very eligible FREEHOLD PROPERTY, in the Town of York, owned by the Subscribers, consisting of an excellent Dwelling House, Store, Stables, Coach-house, &c. It would be superfluous to point out the value of this situation, as it must be too well known to need description.—ALSO,

240 Acres of LAND on Yonge Street, Lot No. 19, commonly called Springfield; with about 60 acres of improvement. This Lot contains advantages that must be obvious: it has two excellent Dwelling-houses, Still house, Barn, Stables &c. with a never failing creek running through the front, sufficient for a Grist or Saw Mill. Its vicinity to the metropolis of the Province, combined with these advantages, must make it a valuable acquisition to the Merchant or Farmer.

200 Acres in the Township of York.
200 Acres in the Township of Uxbridge.

The above property will be sold on reasonable terms, which can be had of the Subscribers.

J. M. JACKSON & SONS.

York, March 13, 1817. tf 11

Lands for Sale.

1400 ACRES in the Township of Southwold, District of London, being Lots No. 5, 6, 7 & 8, in the first Concession, with the small broken Lots in front thereof; and Lots No. 6, 7, & 8, in the Second Concession.

360 Acres in the Township of Townsend, District of London —being the Southern quarter of Lot No. 14, in the tenth Concession; Lot No. 14, and West half of Lot No. 15, in the eleventh Concession.

240 Acres in the Township of Harwich, Western District;—being Lot No. 24, in front on the River Thames.

600 Acres in the Township of Beverly, Home District;—being Lots No. 1, 2, & 3, in the 5th Concession.

From the Boston Daily Gaz. Ex. Feb. 27.

Yesterday, at 8 P. M. Don Manuel Patillo, the consul to this capital, being the Royal Standard, which was captured at Charabuco. It was presented to H. E. the Supreme Director in the presence of many civil and military officers. At 6 it was deposited in the Citadel, serving as a trophy to the national colours. Salutes were fired on the occasion, accompanied with military music and the joyful acclamations of an immense concourse of people.

March 1.

Chili.—On the 6th Feb. the freemen of the capital of Chili, assembled to choose a Governor, and elected unanimously Don Bernardo O'Higgins, with the title of Supreme Director. He has announced to the Supreme Director of these Provinces, his predecessor, the tyrant Marco del Pont. Nothing more was wanting to crown the glory of the Chilians, and of the heroes of Chacabuco, than the capture of an insolent general, who boasted that he governed by the affections of the people which he oppressed. Tyrants! such is the destiny that awaits you.

VENEZUELA.

Bulletin of the Liberating Army.—No. II.

Since the 14th of February, in the evening, when the remainder of the Spanish army, under brig. gen. Real, retired in the greatest disorder, from before the Puritos, notwithstanding all our efforts to prevent it, we never could bring them to a decisive action.

On the 11th, his excellency gen. Marino, commander in chief of the forces, entered these head quarters, at the head of his army.

On the 17th, we had an engagement with an Spanish vessels, of two hours and a half, without any loss on our part. On the same day, having received intelligence that the enemy had left the Pilar, orders were given to march against them.

On the 14th, we directed our march to the road to St. Bernardino, where we arrived in four o'clock in the afternoon at that place, where we found part of the king's troops entrenched in a convent, which they defended till night, at which period they left our march by that road to the Pilar, was too difficult and troublesome, orders were given for a counter march, which was effected with the loss of only 6 wounded on our part.

On the 15th, the army returned to head quarters.

On the 18th, a squadron of 17 king's vessels came off this harbor, the entry thereto being defended by only four gun boats, under the gallant captain of the navy, Jacinto Baltar, who, supported by three privateers anchored in the port, not only prevented the enemy from entering, but finally forced them to bear up. From the prisoners taken on that occasion we understand that they had forty killed and upwards of 70 wounded, amongst them Don Guerrero, the commander of their gun boats.

On the 19th we had a similar glorious and fortunate action.

On the 22nd, when our army was ready to march to the Pilar, having been informed by our reconnoitering parties, that the enemy advanced to the Puritos, three leagues distant from this city, we resolved to wait for them, and to endeavor to attract them to these vicinities, where their defeat or retreat would be inevitable; however, we could not succeed in getting them out of their ambuscade of the Juncal, where they had entrenched themselves, notwithstanding every stratagem on our part, to bring them to a general action.

On the 23d, the armed sch. Gen. Marino, blew up a king's schooner, stationed to windward of this port, to watch our movements on the coast, in the presence of the Spanish squadron.

The single broadside was sufficient to put the enemy's vessel in a blaze, without a shot being fired on her part, although she mounted 7 guns, 1 of which was 18 pounder. Capt. Dubouet, who commanded the Independent sch. received no other damage to his vessel, than the mainsail having caught fire, when he immediately returned to Margarita.

On the 28th, at 3 o'clock at night, the enemy broke up their camp and retired along the coast to Caracces.

On the 4th inst. our gun boats, under the command of Antonia Diego, one of the navy, with 300 infantry under col. Armeo gained the most glorious triumph. A battery, constructed by the enemy on the heights of Boca de Rio, rendered the approach to their formidable position in that quarter, which, besides, was supported by 18 vessels of war, a most difficult task. At the hour of 2 of the 5th of two of our guns was opened upon them, while four of our gun boats, coming up from the river, attacked the Spanish force with rapidity that they thought on nothing else but to snake their escape, and to abandon the battery, the harbor, and even the coast.

The confusion of the enemy at this moment was most frightful; the scoop of war Boylen, the brig and schooner, cut their cables, and in a most cowardly manner, were towed to leeward.—The attack made by col. Armeo on the infantry of the enemy, was conducted with the greatest valor, and nothing is to be compared to the courage we saw troops in that battle. The velocity of their march saved them from suffering a great loss, considering the nature of the road, which is extremely difficult, exhausted by the enemy, having upwards of 100 pieces of cannon on both sides, from which a deluge of shot of every description was poured from the most intrepid troops. These repeated good successes have delivered us from the blockade of the Spanish squadron, which covered itself with everlasting shame, as the Spaniards were superior as well in number of arms as in their superior position—but the royal troops are not to be compared with the Republicans, they having lost all hope, confidence and deportment.

The troops of Real, for which the Spanish government made such great sacrifices, are destroyed, without having obtained the least success.—Our loss does not amount to 60 men.—The Spanish squadron, consisting of 18 sail, has likewise disappeared, with the loss of only 13 men on our part, while theirs amounted to upwards of 200, in all the different battles. We are therefore allowed to say, that our triumphs have been glorious and prosperous.

Head quarters, Barcelona, 5th March, 1817.—7th.

RAFAEL DE GUEVARA, Maj.Gen.

NEW-YORK, April 29.

Two vessels of war had sailed from Ostenda for the Mediterranean to protect the trade against the Pirates. Strong precautions are said to be more numerous than ever.

An Austrian vessel, with a cargo of wood and stone, had arrived at Genoa, being the first Austrian vessel that had ever got so high up the Nile—she was received with inconceivable joy.

The ship Hardenpole, of London, capt. Donald, from Lisbon for London, struck on a rock and upset on the 3d of March, 16 miles from Mogadore. The captain and 11 of the crew took to the long boat, which with down.

May 7.

The Grand Duke of Russia, Nicholas, was to arrive at Berlin about the 15th of March, where her Royal highness the Princess Charlotte is to be solemnized. Europe is well planted with the kindred of the Russian Royal family.

A plot of the Lilliputian writers to destroy the town of Ely, by fire, fortunately failed. Amongst the combustibles was a piece of charcoal, the fire of which appeared to have been provided for the occasion extracted from the waist of air. The fire was placed under a floor among a number of casks of gun-powder.

The London Courier of April 11th, states, that orders would have been taken in execution for £18,000 for duties on his Weekly Pamphlet, had he not made his escape as he did.

The Vienna papers state that Prince Schwartzenburgh's health is dangerous. His malady is a liver complaint.

Prince Ferdinand of Wurtemburgh, lately married to Mademoiselle de Montmorench, is to be appointed governor of Neufchatel to wait for them, and to endeavor to attract them to these vicinities, where their destruction would be inevitable; however, we could not succeed in getting them out of their ambuscade of the Juncal, where they had entrenched themselves, notwithstanding every stratagem on our part, to bring them to a general action.

EDWARD MAC MAHON,
General Agent for paying Militia Pensions.

FOR SALE,

THAT very eligible FREE-HOLD PROPERTY, in the Town of York, owned by the Subscribers, consisting of an excellent Dwelling House, Store, Stables, Coach-house, &c. It would be superfluous to point out the value of this situation, as it must be too well known to need description.—ALSO,

240 Acres of LAND on Yonge Street, Lot No. 13, commonly called Springfield; with about 60 acres of improvement. This Lot contains advantages that must be obvious: it has two excellent Dwelling-houses, Still house, Barn, Stables &c. with a never failing creek running through the front, sufficient for a Grist or Saw Mill. Its vicinity to the metropolis of the Province, combined with these advantages, must make it a valuable acquisition to the Merchant or Farmer.

200 Acres in the Township of York.
200 Acres in the Township of Uxbridge.

The above property will be sold on reasonable terms, which can be had of the Subscribers.

RUSSIAN FLY.

RICHMOND, (Vir.) May 6.

We are sorry to state, that the wheat crop is seriously under the fly. The accounts we have received of it are very gloomy. A farmer from Powhattan assures us that ground from which he expected a few days ago to get thirty bushels the acre will not yield 5. Fifthly five. Some estimate their loss at 5-8ths—others at more. The change has been a rapid one. But a few days ago, the wheat bore a most promising appearance; giving delight to the eye and gladness to the heart of the farmer. But the fly suddenly came, and the hopes of the harvest are vanishing.—We have not had an opportunity of hearing from many quarters of the state, but in Powhattan, in Goochland, and in the neighborhood, the ravages are very great. Report indeed says that to the east of the Ridge the fly is destructive, and has appeared in great number.

We are informed that wheat sown in rich land, and at an early season, will be able to escape enough to come up in lead—but land sown late, and on a thin land, must fall a sacrifice to the fly.—Enquirer.

From the Baltimore Patriot May 8.

Lamentable Occurrence.—Captain M'Donald, who arrived here yesterday in the British sch. Margaret, informed the keeper of the Coffee House Books, that on Monday last, on entering the Bay, he discovered a Bureau Agency in the sch. the former under the command of commodore Chaytor—the latter was the Santafecino, (formerly the Romp,) which sustained a little distance from the brig, near Cape Henry; that a pilot boat was near the schr. and appeared to be discharging powder on board—that when the shocking spectacle was witnessed of the schooner ascending the air in a blaze of fire, without a vestige of her having afterwards been by the astonished beholders. The shock was sensibly felt on board the Margaret, and it was first supposed that she had struck on a shoal. The Pilot Boat probably shared the fate of the Santafecino. It is since related that the number of lives lost in the sch. was 22, supposed to be all who were on board when she exploded.

FROM SOUTH AMERICA.

By the arrival on Saturday, of the brig Golden Age, capt. Harris from Laguira, we learn, that the Royalists gained possession of Barcelona, on the 20th of April. The city was taken by storm. The force of the Royalists consisted of about two thousand men. The Patriots had been closely invested for some time—their principal troops retreated to the fort of Cutarch, in which they had considerable supplies. Here they remained some time, engaged with the heavy battering artillery of the Royalist. They at last, it is said, to make a desperate sortie, but although the few which remained fought bravely, they were soon cut to pieces, by the superior number of the opposing troops.

The loss of the Royalists was considerable, particularly in officers. Two generals, it is said, who had been for some time officers of distinction, and who were severely wounded in the sortie, were taken to Caracas, and shot, by order of the Captain General of that place.

General Bolivar left Barcelona some time previous to the attack upon it, and had proceeded into the interior, where he was expected he would be met by the General Morillo. At the last advices the latter was within one days march of Caracas.—N. Y. Spectator, May 21.

Very late from Pernambuco.—By the arrival this forenoon of the brig General Ward, Capt. Underhill, from Pernambuco, which place he left on the 20th March, we learn that all was quiet at that place. The Portuguese were preparing gunboats, and putting the fortifications in order, to defend themselves against an expected attack from the Portuguese ships of war. No arms had been received from St. Salvador, or Rio Janeiro. Paraiba and Rio Grande had declared themselves independent. A production had been issued by the Provisional Authority of Pernambuco, forbidding the departure of any persons or vessels from that port without a passport.

IMPORTANT—If true.

The following extract of a letter gives us a most interesting account, if true, which we believe, has been a long time expected—having passed to the mind of Cuba, of the time being ripe to awaken a spirit of revolution.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in New-Orleans, to his friend in this city, dated April 7, 1817.

"The news of the day here, is, that the Viceroy of Mexico, Apodaca, has declared himself Independent, and has an immense force arrayed to sustain his declaration. I have not been able to learn satisfactorily, the source whence this intelligence is derived. The policy pursued by Apodaca, since his elevation to the Viceroyalty has been a complete to the general policy of the Mother Kingdom, in relation to her Colonies, that we may reasonably suppose in him an ambition equal to the Viceroy to Spain, and a patriotism above mere tranquilizing or subduing of a revolutionary spirit, to sink it and a into the gloom of despotism, which is necessarily for the past, or hope for it at present.

"If this news be true, the fate of New-Spain is decided, and Old-Spain, will not shortly again, I conceive, hold a tone of insolence and ambiguity towards us, such as she has lately manifested. A few days, will I suppose, decide upon the truth or falsehood of this intelligence.—Richmond Enquirer.

Extract of a letter received by the Pizarro, dated Glasgow, April 9.

"We have had ten days of very fine weather, and the oats are almost all sown. It is a curious fact that there is no granary unoccupied, either of the quarter or in the east country; and that upwards of twenty vessels are lying with cargoes of grain on board for want of store room.

"We are advised from St. Petersburgh, that 200,000 quarters of wheat, and 1,000,000 of rye, are to be sent off during the winter, been contracted for at St. Petersburgh, Liebau, and Riga alone."

The British Parliament had been adjourned from the 11th to the 17th of April, on account of the illness of the Speaker. A London paper of the 19th, says that the Speaker had come to town for medical advice. He was expected on the 18th, and was considered much better after the operation. The same paper observes, that it is believed Parliament would be further adjourned to the 28th.

The Morning Post of April 12th, says that it has at length been determined upon to lay a tax of 20 per cent upon the property of all absentees.

On the 17th of April, seven of the Luddites were executed at Leicester. Most of them have left widows, and more than thirty children are left to be provided for.

The British Government, it is said, prohibited Lord COCHRANE, from proceeding to South America, in a ship of his force which he lately purchased for that purpose.

His Excellency ANTONIO GAZZALO DE CAIX, minister from the Argentine Government of Pernambuco, has arrived at Boston, in the brig Gypsey, Capt. Harris.

Dublin papers of April 16, mention, that great preparations were making for raising grain. More than 30,000 acres ploughed this year within 30 miles of Dublin, than had ever been before within the memory of any living person.—The Spring had set in there, much earlier than usual, and an early and plentiful harvest was expected.

Three transports had arrived at Cowes on the 18th of April, from the Downs, to take in troops for Quebec.

A Council of Revision has annulled the decision of the Council of War, which had declared itself incompetent to try Gen. Grouchy. This circumstance has been, that a second Council has been assembled, which has still, in like manner, declared its incompetence, by a majority of five to two.

China Trade.—A late London Courier, in speaking of the trade with India, says, "that by the latest accounts from Canton, received by an American ship, the vessel sailed, no less than forty-two ships, chiefly American and Swedes, loading in the river with Teas, and forty more were daily expected. It is also said, that the authority of Pernambuco, forbidding the departure of any persons or vessels from that port without a passport.

The British Admiral, Sir P. Malcolm, was in expectation on the 8th being relieved by Admiral Plumbin, who was hourly looked for.

As a proof of the vigilance of the Emperor who are set to watch his late Imperial Majesty, it is only necessary to state, that the Hortsia was telegraphed 60 miles distant from the island. The provisions of all kinds were very scarce, and the inhabitants were supplied by strangers—and a joint of fresh meat was looked upon as a great luxury on a General's table.

We also learn from the Hortsia, that it had been very sickly in the interior of India, particularly among the European troops—it was healthy, however, at Calcutta. All was quiet in India, except that frequent incursions were made by the Pindarees, a kind of Banditti, who assembled sometimes to the number of 10,000, and committed depredations upon defenceless villages.

The right hon. Mr. Elliott, was about to return to Europe in consequence of ill health; Mr. C. M. Ricketts was reported as his successor. Lord Moira's expedition had failed.

The Port Louis Gazette of the 14th of September, announces the arrival of His Majesty's ship Tyne, from Java, having on board two brothers of Radam, King of Ova, who are to be educated under the care of the British government. These young Princes are aged 10 and 11.—N. Y. Dai. Adv.

Earthquake.—We learn from Mr. Richie, a passenger on board of the Islington, that there had been a severe Earthquake, between Clarence and the South Seas, 60 miles distant from the former place, which had sunk land 30 leagues in extent—the whole face of the country was changed—the rivers Topsaco and St. Francis, were rendered impassable by thousands of floating trees on the banks of Trade—a village had been swallowed up, with all its inhabitants.—ib.

A Steam-Boat has been launched at Berlin, destined to ply between that city and Hamburg, with passengers and merchandize.

By letters from the Levent we hear that an English frigate having sent on shore some sailors to obtain fresh water, in the neighborhood of Praya, the inhabitants fired on them, and murdered several; to revenge this inhuman conduct, the frigate demolished several houses.

A Belfast paper says business has revived greatly in that place and neighbourhood.

From Europe.

CALCUTTA, December 23.—The Jaxartes, 74 guns, Capt. Lapenotiere, is well reconciled to their old masters the Dutch, having again the dominion over them, as to leave the new authorities without an opportunity of serious evils taking place on the departure of the English. A reinforcement of Dutch troops was expected at Batavia, about the end of November; and it is not improbable, that until they arrive, the English will not take their leave. The reason of this is, that the fate of the Netherlands, is one of the many acts of unwise policy; with which the ministers of England are chargeable, and not the least remarkable for its short-sightedness.

BRUSSELS, April 2.

The number of English embarked and embarking at Calais, to return to England, amounts to 6,500, including all the sick and wounded, who come to the going home. The horses that go with them are from 1000 to 1300, both of the cavalry and artillery. These troops take with them 70 pieces of artillery, and the necessary ammunition waggons. The British cavalry remaining in France are still to remain in the same cantonments, on the sea-coast of French Flanders.

DUBLIN, Jan. 22.

On Monday last it was sold 300 bags of flour, consigned to B. Cogan and others of this city, was stopped at a place called Sandestown, county of Kildare, near the 19th Lock on the Grand Canal, and plundered of one half of its cargo, by a multitude of the country people, who had provided themselves with carts for the purpose of taking it away. In some time after this occurrence had taken place, two Magistrates brought out a party of the military, and coming up with the country people, they did not display the least disposition to violence, but declared their intention of keeping what they had got, until it should be forced from them—stating, in a manner the most affecting, that the whole of them, to a man, were starving—that a scanty supply of potatoes in the possession of some few, was so small and wet as to be almost unfit for use. They were told, that if where it was, punishment must follow such a violation of the laws. They replied, "they were all ready to resign what they had taken and go into a gaol to get food, as there was any thing was better than the horrid torture of death by starvation; but while they had no resource of their own, they could not see how else it could be found." It has been stated, that the situation of these unfortunate people had a sad effect on the minds of those who went out to oppose them; they returned without attempting to use force, leaving them in undisturbed possession of the property they had taken.

Two boats, laden with flour, have, we understand, arrived without molestation at Sallins, since the occurrence of the outrage.

FOR SALE,

THAT very eligible FREEHOLD PROPERTY, in the Town of York, owned by the Subscribers, consisting of an excellent Dwelling House, Store, Stables, Coach-house, &c. It would be superfluous to point out the value of this situation, as it must be too well known to need description.—ALSO,

240 Acres of LAND on Yonge Street, Lot No. 19, commonly called Springfield; with about 60 acres of improvement. This Lot contains advantages that must be obvious: it has two excellent Dwelling-houses, Still house, Barn, Stables &c. with a never failing creek running through the front, sufficient for a Grist or Saw Mill. Its vicinity to the metropolis of the Province, combined with these advantages, must make it a valuable acquisition to the Merchant or Farmer.

200 Acres in the Township of York.
200 Acres in the Township of Uxbridge.

The above property will be sold on reasonable terms, which can be had of the Subscribers.

GREY PAPER

Supplement to the Upper Canada Gazette.

YORK, Thursday June 5, 1817.

The Steam Boat Frontenac, left Kingston for the Bay of Quinte on Thursday, to take in wood &c. before—so far, the Proprietors feel the strongest confidence in her powers, and that she will fully equal their most sanguine expectation.—She proceeded at the rate of 8 1-2 miles an hour against a strong head wind. It was reported in Kingston, that Gen. Washington would proceed in her to the place on Tuesday or Wednesday last, and she may now be hourly expected. Apprehensions were entertained that her size was much greater than would be necessary for the navigation, but it is now proved that a smaller vessel of that description would not be able to encounter any severe weather on the Lake; as is shewn by the American Steam-boat, which has been compelled repeatedly to put back for shelter; her last trip, it was confidently asserted, would be performed in seven days, but was not effected in less than thirteen. it being found that she could not make way through a heavy swell.

(Finances Report Concluded.)

person, as may appear to them adequate, after a full inquiry into the nature and extent of the duties to be performed, and the degree of official and pecuniary responsibility which necessarily attaches to some of them:—If it should be thought proper in any Act to be passed with reference to the subject of this Report, to enact, that whenever any of the said offices shall be reduced and regulated, there should be laid before both Houses of Parliament a comparative statement of the number, duty, and emolument of the respective offices under the old and new establishments, your Committee conceive that the parliamentary check, created by this arrangement, would be sufficient to prevent any abuse of a power which seems properly to belong to the Lords of the Treasury, as the official and responsible advisers of the Crown, upon all matters which relate to the superintendence and control over the public expenditure.

It may not be improper in treating this part of the inquiry, to call the attention of the House more distinctly to some peculiar circumstances before alluded to, which are connected with offices of great emolument in the Courts of Law in Ireland.

It appears, that upon a vacancy which recently occured in the office of Clerk of the Pleas in the Court of Exchequer, by the death of the Earl of Buckinghamshire, a claim to the appointment to that office was preferred by the Chief Baron of the Exchequer in Ireland, and an individual was appointed by him, and was sworn in before the Court of Exchequer. A proceeding by pro rata was instituted on the part of the Crown, and the judgment of the Court of King's Bench was adverse to the claim of the Chief Baron. An appeal, however, has been made to the Court of Error; and may have since been made, by either party to the House of Lords. In the mean time, by an Act of the Legislature, 56th Geo. III. c. 125, the emoluments of the office are paid into the Treasury, and the clear discharge of all the official duties provided for. It is not impossible that claims, similar to those which have been preferred in this instance by the Chief Baron, may be preferred to the appointment to other offices in the Law Courts of Ireland, of great and disproportionate emoluments, which have hitherto been considered as at the disposal of the Crown.

Your Committee cannot, however, avoid submitting to the House, whether it would not be perfectly consistent, both with justice and sound policy, to provide for the regulation of all such offices after the expiration of the legally vested interests, upon the principle on which it is proposed to regulate other offices partaking of the character of Sinecures.

3d. By limiting the number of pensions which could be granted, and in operation at any one time in each class. 5thly. By providing that the power of granting such pensions should be suspended progressively into operation at stated intervals, affording a reasonable probability that at least an equal saving will have been effected by the failing of the salaries or emoluments of some of the offices to be regulated or abolished, instead of commencing at once upon the vacancy of the first of such offices as might exceed the £2000, a year, or at any one given period. 5thly. That the provision of the bill which would have made it law ful for his Majesty, when any person should have served in more than one of the four classes, to grant such pension as is annexed to the highest class in which he may have been employed, (without any reference to the duration of his services in that class,) should be so far amended as to require from any such person a certain period of service in the highest class.

With reference to these principles of modification, your Committee submit, that the number of pensions in each of the four classes should be limited as follows:—

1st Class—First Lord of the Treasury, First Lord of the Admiralty, Three Secretaries of State, Chancellor of the Exchequer—six pensions of 3000£.

2d. Class—Chief Secretary for Ireland, Secretary at War—three pensions of 2000£.

N. B. The Chancellor of the Exchequer for Ireland was included in this Class in the Bill of 1813.

3d Class—Two Secretaries of the Treasury, Principal Secretary of the Admiralty—6 pensions of 1000£.

4th Class—Under Secretaries of State, Clerk of the Ordnance—6 pensions of 500£.

That the Crown should have the power of granting one Pension in each of these classes, except the second, at the end of two years from the adoption of this system by the legislature, and so in succession at intervals of two years, until the expiration of twelve years, when it shall be lawful to the Crown to grant the whole number of pensions proposed in each class. With respect to the second class, it is proposed that the power should not commence till the expiration of four years, so as to ensure into complete operation at the same period of twelve years, as in the three other classes.

Your committee conceive that the offices of the President of the Board of controul, and Secretary to that Board, come within the description of effective civil and political offices, so far as to entitle them to be considered in any general system intended to be laid down with regard to such offices; but they leave it to the wisdom of the House to determine whether, as their salaries are entirely drawn from another quarter, and not from the public revenue, these offices ought to be included in the provisions of any Bill which may be framed upon the recommendations contained in this report, or to form the subject of ——— other legislative measure.

The duties attached to many of the principal offices in the courts of law in Ireland, appear indeed to be so various and important, and to be necessarily performed by so many persons, that it would be extremely difficult, without the most mature consideration, and probably without inquiries, instituted on the spot, to suggest any arrangement for the future conduct of the business of those offices, when the existing interest in them shall have terminated.

Your committee understand, however, that there is at present a commission in Ireland, appointed in consequence of an Address of the House, to inquire into the state of the Courts of Law in that part of the united kingdom. It would be very desirable that the members of this commission should be required by the executive government, to examine, with as little delay as possible, into the circumstances under which the several offices in the courts of law which have hitherto been considered in the disposal of the crown, stand, with respect to the performance of the duties attached to them; and that they should also be required to suggest such a plan for the future regulation of those offices as shall provide for the respective duties being discharged by persons, at such salaries as shall be deemed a just and reasonable compensation to the individuals discharging them.

An Act of the Legislature will be necessary to give effect to any plan which may be suggested by the Commissioners; it will therefore be competent to Parliament to adopt generally the suggestions made by the Commissioners, or to depart from them according to their discretion.

In the supposable event of a vacancy occurring in any of these offices before the Commissioners make their Report, it is of course understood that a temporary arrangement will be made for the performance of all the necessary duties which shall not in any way interfere with the immediate regulation of the offices, on the principles above recommended.

Mode of rewarding high and efficient Political services.

Your Committee would have found themselves under considerable difficulty in submitting to the House any specific plan for enabling the Crown to reward the most efficient political services, if they had not been for their guidance the principles and regulations established by the Bill, so often referred to, as the basis of the suggestions which they have to offer under this head.

After an attentive consideration of the mode proposed in that Bill for enabling the Crown to recompense the faithful and meritorious discharge of high and efficient civil office, your Committee entertain an opinion that, considered, by, as they trust, with this important object, it will be practicable to make the new means of reward which it is proposed to grant to the Crown less extensive, and, at the same time to place the power of conferring those rewards under limitations more restrictive than had been provided by the regulations of that Bill.

Retaining the list and classification of offices according to that bill, your committee are of opinion that it would be expedient either to limit the total sum, which should in no case be exceeded, or to proceed, in another mode, towards attaining the same object.

The regulations of the bill, with respect to length of service in each of the four classes, your committee are of opinion might be amended in the following manner:—

1st Class—Not less than two years' service in one or more of the offices of that class; 2d and 3d Classes—either five years' in one of the offices of the other classes, so as to make in that case, at least eight years' services; but in the whole 4th class, at least ten years' service.

The only further alteration which it has occurred to your committee to recommend in limitation of the regulation of the bill, is that the pensions of each class should in all cases be limited to the smaller sum specified in the bill, viz. 3000£ for the first class; 2000£ for the second; 1500£ for the third; and 1000£ for the fourth; without any progressive increase depending upon length of service; and that one half of such pension should alone upon the grantee being appointed to any civil office or employment under the Crown of equal or greater amount.

It has occurred to your Committee, that circumstances might probably arise, though of an exceptional and rare occurrence, in which it might be highly expedient for the Crown to possess the power of granting one pension in the first class, without reference to any specific period of service in the person to whom it might be granted; and although there might be no actual vacancy in the class. They therefore submit to the House, whether it might not be expedient to grant such a power, subject to any regulations in the mode of exercising it, which may be thought necessary, and subject also to a provision that any such grant should be held to be supernumerary, so that upon any subsequent vacancy arising in the first class, it should not be filled up, except in favor of the person holding such extraordinary pension; who from that time would be considered as forming one of the limited list of 6h.

Although it may be objected to the limited number proposed by your committee for each class, that circumstances may arise in which, from the whole number of pensions in any of the classes having been previously granted, the crown might for a time be debarred from rewarding a person, who by long and meritorious services might be entitled to such a reward; such an inconvenience they apprehend could only exist for a short time; and on the other hand, your committee are of opinion, that without some such limitation, the saving, which they contemplate as one of the inducements for substituting this mode of recompencing public service, for that which is now at the disposal of the crown, might be ultimately disappointed.

NOTICE is hereby given, to all those who are indebted to the Estate of the late Thomas Thomson, of the Township of Vaughan, on Yonge Street, to make payment of the same to Mr. Edward Hartney, now residing there, who is fully authorized to give the necessary discharges; and all who have any claims against the said Estate, are required to present them duly authenticated to the said E. THE CUT WORM,

Which is making such destruction in the east fields, is really destroyed, and the crop of corn much benefited by the following process; put on each hill of corn a table spoonful of tar, mix it well double that quantity of dead or leached ashes, let it be spread well over the hill so as to surround each stalk of corn;—the best method of putting it on is to carry the ashes in a bucket or basket, and with a shovel made of the thin end of a shingle about three inches wide, take the quantity above mentioned, and putting the shovel near the ground, throw the ashes in a horizontal direction, and it will spread, and light around the bottom of the stalks, the dew and rains will produce a lye that will destroy or drive away the worms; great care should be taken (particularly with the lye ashes) that it does not light on the blades of the stalks; in which case it is almost as destructive as the worms; therefore it will be particular in describing the best method of putting the ashes on; these observations are the result of successful experiment for several years in fields where the worms were always sure to cut rows that were not ashed were almost totally destroyed, but where the ashes were, the corn flourished unmolested, and produced abundantly—the process is not tedious, one hand can easily rub three acres in a day, and do it well. I would recommend to the gentlemen who propose making holes for the worms to fall into, to put a little ashes in each hole, in order to kill them immediately, and not let the poor devils be a long time in agony.

A FARMER.

It has been well ascertained that sowing the wheat after the first frost, effectually prevents the fly. Farmers are too apt to sow early. On the Susquehannah in the state of Pennsylvania, the fly is not known where the grain is not destroyed with ease, by pouring a small quantity of strong soap-suds about the roots of the plant, when they are supposed to be, and if the worms are concealed in the ground, within reach of the liquid, it will force them to rise instantaneously to the surface, where they may be despatched with but little trouble. The effect of the suds is perfectly sure, and a garden or any other enclosure, may be entirely rid of them in this way.

Something Curious !!!—On the 25th of April last, the Grand Jury of the Supreme Court of the State of Ohio, was found one dollar and fifty cents, for not attending a militia muster, as a private sentinel, in strict conformity to the laws of the State of Ohio—Western Courier & Chronicle.

LONDON, April 15.

The prices of all sorts of provisions, have according to our promise, begun rapidly to decline. Oats have, since our last fallen two shillings the barrel of 14 stone; and potatoes have sunk from fourteen pence to nine pence the stone weight, within the same period; the scarcity any sales could be effected at the reduced prices yesterday, so we may look for a still greater decline.—Dublin Weekly Gazette.

April 21.

The Duke of Wellington and his suite, arrived yesterday at Dover, on Monday, and after taking some refreshments, set off for London. We are glad to state, that his grace is in excellent health.

The health of the Speaker continues to improve, and there is every reason to expect, that he will be able to take the chair again on Thursday. There is no doubt we believe, that the Speaker will retire, and that Mr. Manners Sutton, will be proposed as his successor.

Viscount Exmouth is arrived in Jersey from Paris, and attended on Saturday, at the Admiralty. His Lordship is said to have had several conferences with Sir Sydney Smith and Sir Colin Knight, at Paris, engaged in the abolition of white slavery in Africa.

Letters of the 10th inst. from Paris, state, that bills upon London were getting unusually scarce, in consequence of the English wishing to remit the money arising from sales in the French funds.

A private letter from Cadiz, of the 29th March, states, that a regiment of Lancers, and the regiment Navarre, forming part of the force destined to act against the Patriots of South America, had refused to open marching on the 25th and had declared to the centenal of their colonels. They cried out they would not go out to act as butchers to the Castile monopolists; swore they would liberate all confined in the prisons, and themselves obtain their arrears of pay out of the Treasury. The other quiet regiments were marched against them, and after a severe contest they were compelled to embark on the following day.—During the whole time the greatest alarm prevailed in Cadiz; the windows and doors of every house was shut up. A postscript of the courier adds, that the contest was renewed on board, when a great number of men were slain, whose mutiny, as well as those who had previously deserted, were replaced by part of the Cadiz garrison.

Dutch and Hamburgh Mails have arrived. The papers from the latter city contain a detailed account of the Swedish conspiracy. It is attributed to some discontented officers, their arrears of pay dies, too, are charged as accomplices, and so far it is conformable with Scrub's account of a plot, in which a woman is an essential ingredient. There is, however, some ground to suspect that the Crown Prince is not so alarmed as he would be willing to make people believe. Nobility will be deprived of many privileges which they now enjoy, and that the Government will derive a new accession of power.—The following is the account :—

Hamburgh, April 12.—We have received, from a good source, the following confirmation relative to the late events at Stockholm—we cannot, however, pretend to warrant the correctness of it in every particular. A party of malcontents, who, it is said, are numerous in every locality, whose chief seat (or focus, as it were) was in Gothen, had for a long time attracted the attention of government—and the Prince Royal had redoubled his exertions to gain more and more for himself and his son, the affections of the nation, by making great sacrifices to the advantage of several classes, and particularly the military. Nevertheless, a part of the Nobility, among which were some officers of the guards, persevered in its discontents—The reason seemed to be, that the officer's commissions, and the more important civil offices, were filled up exclusively to the Nobility—and there was formed, against the existing government, a conspiracy nearly similar to that of which King Gustavus III, was the victim twenty-four years ago.

As the conspirators of that day had gained a part of the guards to their cause, and the heads of the party assembled at a masked ball, where captain Ankerstrom mortally wounded the King, which was discovered in the night by the pistol, which the assassin had let fall.—In the same manner the present conspirators had resolved to assassinate the Prince Royal at a grand masquerade, to seize King Charles XIII, and Prince Oscar, and then by the aid of some other troops, to declare who were in the plot, to proclaim the son of Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden.

The impudent expressions of an officer of the guards, who, when in a state of intoxication, had cried, « Long live King Gustavus Adolphus !," and in a many-tongue letter, was sent to the Royal of the danger on the evening of the 13th of March, which was fixed for the execution; he showed himself more prudent than Gustavus III, and neglected a similar warning. The Prince Royal immediately ordered the guard of the Palace to be doubled, and the steps on whom he could depend ! he summoned the same evening the Council of State and the corps of officers of the regiments stationed at Stockholm and in the environs, unveiled to them the whole plan, called to their remembrance the frequent conspiracies of a similar nature formed by the Nobility against the Government, particularly that against Gustavus III; he enumerated the services which he had done to Sweden, the sacrifice of a great part of his private fortune, to restore the prosperity of the country and to raise the public credit, the conquest of a whole kingdom, the revival of the warlike reputation of the army, and the advantageous situation in which he has placed the military. The speech was heard with the liveliest enthusiasm among the officers who were devoted to him—they swore to sacrifice their fortune and their blood to defend him and his son. The Council of State remained sitting till two o'clock in the morning, but hitherto nothing certain had transpired respecting the resolutions which it adopted. Two officers only of the guards have been arrested.

The number of the conspirators is not exactly known, there are several in the Provinces, whither expresses were dispatched in the night on the 13th of March. It was many credit public report, a Counsellor of State, known for his diplomatic missions, and the son of a high functionary of the State, discontented at the loss of an office which he held very lately, were at the head of this conspiracy, but they are not put forward. However several arrests have been made. It is not proved whether the old King Gustavus Adolphus was informed of the plan. Count Nett Och Dag, who has been condemned to death by the High Court of Justice, is supposed to have served the conspirators as negociator.

SECOND REPORT.

FROM THE SECRET COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Ordered, by the House of Commons, to be printed, March 29, 1817.

The Select Committee appointed to inquire into, and report to the House the finances of the United Kingdom for the year ended the 5th of January, 1817, and to consider of the state the probable income and expenditure (so far as the same can now be estimated) for the years ending the 5th of January 1818, and the 5th January 1819 respectively, and to report the same, together with their observations thereupon, from time to time, and also to consider of such further measures as may be adopted for the relief of the country from any part of the said expenditure, without detriment to the public interest, and to report the same from time to time; and to whom the several accounts and papers relating to the finances of the country, beginning with the year 1792, were referred, have, pursuant to the said order, proceeded to examine the said accounts and papers, and have agreed to the following report, which they have directed to be laid before the House :

The difference which appears in the present year, between the income and the expenditure, is chiefly owing to the extraordinary expenses of the late war, and to the unavoidable delay in the reduction of the establishments, consequent thereupon.

In this department the first object that presented itself to the committee was the amount of the extreme difficulty of ascertaining the precise sum by which the annual Military Establishments should be fixed, on account of political considerations, and others of a still more delicate nature, which must necessarily involve themselves in the question. In taking into consideration the Military Establishments of the country, it must be remembered, that if on the one hand they are proposed to be kept up on a scale of expensive preparation, with a view of affording entire security to the nation both at home and abroad, the continuance of such a state of things must depend upon the resources of the country, acts produced by the pressure of the late war, and the kind of debt incurred during a period of unprotracted hostilities on the other hand, if they should be reduced so low as the temporary gain in point of economy might at first appear to recommend, it might place the nation in a situation in which this kingdom, together with the European states and colonies would be at once exposed to the breaking out of an undreamed or sudden war; for which they might possibly not be prepared, and which might possibly offer no small temptation.

It is therefore for the consideration of the House, and of the Committee to offer an opinion; but they observe that the difficulty and delicacy of the task must be a comparison between the estimates of the two last years, and for the present year, much of which will appear to have been effected in the way of reduction, both as to numbers and as to expense; and they have observed, that, from the further reductions still to continue to be made, or may be found consistent with all the true interest of the country, neither erring on the side of absolute confidence on the long duration of peace, nor giving way to unwarrantable apprehensions of danger and aggression.

And your Committee further submit, that as the duration and magnitude of the astonishing events which the year 1793 gave birth to, and the late war, have made it necessary to draw forth resources then brought into operation, which could not be called into action but in a state of war than during the whole course of that eventful contest, so there can be no question but strengthened in no other way than by retrenchment and economy during the opportunity afforded by a return of peace.

At the same time, this most important consideration should not be lost sight of, that our military establishments should once be established upon the standard of efficiency and discipline, to which they have now arrived, and that the operations of war, during the whole course of that eventful contest, have called forth and created an experience, it will not be possible to maintain the character of the army without great waste of time, however urgently all their services may be required.

LAND FORCES :—1. In the Estimates.

The first of the Returns compares the numerical force maintained in the year 1816, with that intended to be maintained in the year 1817, as to the difference of actual establishments in those two years, and of the charge on account of which a charge is incurred by the public, as distinguished from the force in France and in India.

The second gives the comparative force in the numbers in the years 1814 and 1817.

In the third is given the military expense in the years 1816 and 1817, and also the expense incurred in the year 1816. The reduction of that great establishment which the war had occasioned, was begun in 1816, and has been carried considerably further in the present year; although the observance amounts to no less a sum than 17,646,400 pounds sterling, independent of ordnance, such as Hall Pay, Chelsea Pensioners, Lei, and other allowances of a similar kind, as necessary, in consequence of the expenses of the war, and a diminution of the numbers under them no effect.

Besides the more numerical reduction, a principle of economy has been applied to the cavalry, by which the number of horses kept up in time of peace is much lessened; by which a saving is made for the service of each : mount, to the extent of 40 l. each horse per year; in the last year, not only two men disembodied in each troop, and that number is now doubled, by which a considerable saving is effected, without any loss to the efficiency of the regiments.

The particulars of the charge of a regiment of infantry in the years 1792 and 1817, are annexed, for the purpose of shewing the general establishment of expense as compared with that prevailed at that period, compared with the present and as connected with the question of the relative charge of maintaining the same numerical force in the two periods, shewing the proportion of very nearly two to three ; being £25,000 in 1792, and £33,924, in 1817, for 1,000 infantry.

A comparison is also given of the expense of regiments of cavalry in the same years, for regiments of 666 rank and file each (the establishment existing in 1792,) and such battalions of 800 rank and file each ; by the establishment which formed an annual saving of £73,326. as well as a saving in the number of horses, and the proportion this amount of force on the same number, bears to the public.

The pay of the army, with regard to rank and file, has been exactly doubled since 1793, with the exception of subsistence, which has been augmented by 1s. 6d. per day ; the augmentation of pay and daily allowance has been made upon a much lower scale to the officers ; and the General still stands upon the same footing as in 1792

In the cavalry no addition has been made to the pay of any rank superior to that of Lieut. which has been increased from 6s. 6d. to 8s. per day ; the dragoon soldiers, whose daily pay was 2s. 2d. in 1793, now receive 3s. 3d. with the addition of 1d. after 10 years, and 2d. after 17 years of service.

The rate of Agency remains precisely the same as in 1793 for corporal Industry ; for every 1l. of Cavalry, the same as in 1792 appears to have been reduced one fourth, from 26th July 1793. It is remarkable that no augmentation has ever been made to the allowances for clothing and appointments of either Cavalry or Infantry. The rate of allowances which has been fixed for the reign of Queen Anne, and they remain the same at present. The only alteration which has been the great increase in the price of leather during the early part of the late war, an advantage of 10 per cent. was given to the Agency and appears to Colonels of Cavalry regiments, from July 1795, after increasing from £11 10s. to £13 per man for every man wanting to complete the full establishment. This allowance has been found sufficient, and has been continued to the present moment, though during that no diminution of the price of leather has taken place.

The difference which appears in the present and the preceding year, between the expense of clothing, arises from the regulation of equal numbers ; in order to prevent any loss of clothing upon the 25th and regulations which have been established which for a cavalry regiment of 604 rank and file, amounted to £9,965, and upon the Irish £9,865, and upon the Irish (in Irish currency) to £10,640, or £9,196 British. This is stated to be a very old regulation, in which no alteration has been made of late years.

The difference which appears in the present year, between the expense of the Staff and Garrison establishments of Great Britain, and of Ireland, is chiefly owing to the reduction of the latter part of the year 1816, and the first months of 1817 ; also, of the rank and file for the same years.

Your committee in making a reference to the year 1792, have been led into the full knowledge of the low establishments of the latter part of that year, which were then considered as the ordinary peace establishments of the country, and although many circumstances are now changed by events which have subsequently taken place, and which must for ever prevent from being drawn between the two cases, especially in the article of pensions, your committee are very unwilling that no near an approximate that here scale of establishment and expense as may be found consistent with the present state of possessions, and with the augmented rates of pay, should be adopted from which no danger to the nation and the kind of debt incurred during a period of unprotracted hostilities on the other hand, if they should be reduced so low as the temporary gain in point of economy might at first appear to recommend, it might place the nation in a situation in which this kingdom, together with the European states and colonies would be at once exposed to the breaking out of a sudden or undreamed war ; for which they might possibly not be prepared, and which might possibly offer no small temptation.

It is therefore for the consideration of the House, and of the Committee to offer an opinion ; but they observe that the difficulty and delicacy of the task must be a comparison between the estimates of the two last years, and for the present year, much of which will appear to have been effected in the way of reduction, both as to numbers and as to expense; and they have observed, that, from the further reductions still to continue to be made, or may be found consistent with all the true interest of the country, neither erring on the side of absolute confidence on the long duration of peace, nor giving way to unwarrantable apprehensions of danger and aggression.

And your Committee further submit, that as the duration and magnitude of the astonishing events which the year 1793 gave birth to, and the late war, have made it necessary to draw forth resources then brought into operation, which could not be called into action but in a state of war than during the whole course of that eventful contest, so there can be no question but strengthened in no other way than by retrenchment and economy during the opportunity afforded by a return of peace.

At the same time, this most important consideration should not be lost sight of, that our military establishments should once be established upon the standard of efficiency and discipline, to which they have now arrived, and that the operations of war, during the whole course of that eventful contest, have called forth and created an experience, it will not be possible to maintain the character of the army without great waste of time, however urgently all their services may be required

LAND FORCES :—1. In the Estimates.

The first of the Returns compares the numerical force maintained in the year 1816, with that intended to be maintained in the year 1817, as to the difference of actual establishments in those two years, and of the charge on account of which a charge is incurred by the public, as distinguished from the force in France and in India.

The second gives the comparative force in the numbers in the years 1814 and 1817.

In the third is given the military expense in the years 1816 and 1817, and also the expense incurred in the year 1816. The reduction of that great establishment which the war had occasioned, was begun in 1816, and has been carried considerably further in the present year; although the observance amounts to no less a sum than 17,646,400 pounds sterling, independent of ordnance, such as Hall Pay, Chelsea Pensioners, Lei, and other allowances of a similar kind, as necessary, in consequence of the expenses of the war, and a diminution of the numbers under them no effect.

Besides the more numerical reduction, a principle of economy has been applied to the cavalry, by which the number of horses kept up in time of peace is much lessened; by which a saving is made for the service of each : mount, to the extent of 40 l. each horse per year; in the last year, not only two men disembodied in each troop, and that number is now doubled, by which a considerable saving is effected, without any loss to the efficiency of the regiments.

The particulars of the charge of a regiment of infantry in the years 1792 and 1817, are annexed, for the purpose of shewing the general establishment of expense as compared with that prevailed at that period, compared with the present and as connected with the question of the relative charge of maintaining the same numerical force in the two periods, shewing the proportion of very nearly two to three ; being £25,000 in 1792, and £33,924, in 1817, for 1,000 infantry.

A comparison is also given of the expense of regiments of cavalry in the same years, for regiments of 666 rank and file each (the establishment existing in 1792,) and such battalions of 800 rank and file each ; by the establishment which formed an annual saving of £73,326. as well as a saving in the number of horses, and the proportion this amount of force on the same number, bears to the public.

The pay of the army, with regard to rank and file, has been exactly doubled since 1793, with the exception of subsistence, which has been augmented by 1s. 6d. per day ; the augmentation of pay and daily allowance has been made upon a much lower scale to the officers ; and the General still stands upon the same footing as in 1792

In the cavalry no addition has been made to the pay of any rank superior to that of Lieut. which has been increased from 6s. 6d. to 8s. per day ; the dragoon soldiers, whose daily pay was 2s. 2d. in 1793, now receive 3s. 3d. with the addition of 1d. after 10 years, and 2d. after 17 years of service.

The Paymaster-General of the Forces has, in virtue of his office, the office of Inspector-General of Chelsea Hospital, and the Board which is one half for the general business of the Hospital, and the other half for the affairs of the disabled soldiers, who have either in regard to age, or disability, to be placed upon the pension list.

By the Act of 46th Geo. 3. cap. 69. persons are enabled to enlist for a limited time for a limited period of seven years, to enlist for a second period of seven years, and for a third period of seven years. In the cavalry, for a first period of eight years, a second of seven years, and a third of seven years, and by such they will be entitled to their discharge at the expiration of the first period, or at the expiration of the second period, on application being made by them to such pensions for their services as his Majesty, by any Act of Parliament, may be issued in pursuance of that Act, might think proper to allow.

By a warrant of his Majesty of 7th October 1816, a pension of 8d. per day was given and to private men after the expiration of their first and second period, viz. fourteen years in the infantry, or seventeen years in the cavalry ; and to a sergeant 1s. per day, and to a corporal 10d. though it may be carried in the same manner, and it is still a charge for the pay of the army, for pensions, but for the purposes of education, would not be received at so early an age, £36 per year, and 1s. per day, and of such infantry, giving on the whole an annual disbursement of £1,825. and for each cavalry soldier £1,277. a year ; and for each student, in the junior branch school, £14 1s. 1d. for the salaries of the officers are divided between both departments in the proportion of 3 to 1 ; and the number of students must be made of £16, nearly to each student. And if the pay of the pensioners soldiers is augmented, as it is, though it may be carried in the same manner, it

FOR SALE,

THAT very eligible FREEHOLD PROPERTY, in the Town of York, occupied by the Subscribers, consisting of a excellent Dwelling House, Store, Stables, Coach-house, &c. It would be superfluous to point out the value of this situation, as it must be too well known to need description.—ALSO,

240 Acres of LAND on Yonge Street, Lot No. 19, commonly called Springfield; with about 60 acres of improvement. This Lot contains advantages that must be obvious: it has two excellent Dwelling-houses, Still house, Barn, Stables &c. with a never failing creek running through the front, sufficient for a Grist or Saw Mill. Its vicinity to the metropolis of the Province, combined with these advantages, must make it a valuable acquisition to the Merchant or Farmer.

200 Acres in the Township of York.
200 Acres in the Township of Uxbridge.

The above property will be sold on reasonable terms, which can be had of the Subscribers.

Agricultural Prospects.

Accounts continue to reach us, of the ravages of the Fly and the Cut-worm, appreciated by the present drought; and in no place across the country do they look gloomy, than in the middle and southern parts of this state.

In some parts of the interior of Pennsylvania, it is said, the prospects had been in some degree mended by refreshing showers.

An intelligent farmer has informed us, that common soot, of a decoction of it, applied in moderate quantity to the hills, has proved fatal, on experiment, to these mischievous insects.

A neighboring farmer suggests a simple method of checking the Cut-Worm, by making little pits, or holes with a sharp stick, about four inches deep—over which holes, on experiment, have been found in the morning partly full of the insect, which had crept in, and been unable to extricate themselves.

From the Baltimore Patriot of Friday.

The observations we made yesterday concerning the approaching harvest, were dictated by a desire to place the subject in its proper light. No doubt the crops in many sections of the union have received serious injury. Many others, on the other hand, in the most parts of the country from which we have heard, the season will be enormously productive —it is believed sufficiently so fully to supply the deficiency which may in the first instance be sustained.

We have now additional accounts, which represent the aspect of the harvest peculiary favorable, particularly, north of Maryland and south of Virginia. The ravages which were said to have been committed by the Hessian fly, are now attributed, in some degree, to a neglect to sow the seed in season, on which account the fruit has prevented it from taking root effectually. A Norfolk paper says, that "the crops in the lower part of Virginia promise to be more abundant and early by one month than any preceding years;" an Onondago (N. Y.) paper remarks, that in that county "English grain looks well, and Indian corn has yielded a plentiful crop in some other parts of that state it is mentioned that the season never before was so promising.—With these appearances before our eyes, there is no occasion to apprehend an approaching Famine, because, in a few instances the grain may have been severely injured.

Something Singular.—Between 2 and 4 o'clock this morning, as we are credibly informed, eight criminals made their escape from the Baltimore gaol, by means of powder, by which they effected a breach in the wall that admitted the passage of a passage leading to the apartment of the sheriff and keepers. A sentry, who was there stationed, precipitately fled, and they were enabled without molestation, to regale their appetites at the expense of the gaoler for about half an hour. After having refreshed themselves fully to their satisfaction, they made their escape, encompassing the prison, and have not since been heard of. Their names are as follows—Moses alias Hardy, Andrew Anderson, Lewis Smith, John Thomas, son, Abraham Hoppe, James Brown, a Capt. Miller, and one by the name of Perry.

We forbear, at present, introducing any observations upon this really singular occurrence. We have stated what we are informed were the facts, and which we confidently believe to be correct. The circumstances attending this affair are too glaring to require elucidation, and furnish their own comment.

NEW YORK, May 19.

Singular escape.—On Saturday last, an infant 2 or 3 years old, unperceived by its family got out of the scuttle or dormant window of a house in Cherry st. and crawled down the roof to the back gutter. In this perilous situation the child was discovered by a man in Water st. and taken down safe to its affrighted parents, who reasoned in an agony of suspense for some time, until, by the activity of a cabinet maker, at work in an adjoining house, the adventurer was reached and handed in to the garret window in safety.—Cal.

By an arrival this morning, letters have been received from Martinique to the Commissioners of the Navy Board, announcing the death of Com. Taylor, some months since at that place. The privateers stating that in consequence of the decease of Com. Taylor, the Commissioners appointed by Congress, viz. the Commodore had notified General Brown, and ordered details all Hyperion ship St. Joseph, Prevost, master, bound to the Island of Trinidad, with provisions, and raised as prisoners of war. On the 26th of April, the Hyperion was still in a state of blockade.

Latest from Ireland.—The price of Flour was on the decline. In the United Kingdom, several barrels of American flour was offered at Dundalk on the 22d of April, and only twenty barrels were sold.—They were purchased at 48s per barrel.

A convoy of twenty-two vessels, with troops on board, sailed from Cadiz on the 1st of April, for South America.

LONDON, April 4th.

It is confidently asserted that an extensive Brevet promotion will take place on the 4th of June, the anniversary of His Majesty's birth. The following statement by anticipation has been lauded about in the military circles :—

All Lieutenant-Generals, to Lieutenant-General Lord Wellington.

All Major-Generals, to Lord Howard, inclusive.

All Colonels, to Sir A. Barnard, inclusive.

All Lieutenant-Colonels, to Lieutenant-Colonel M'Kenzie, York L. I. V. inclusive.

All Majors, to Major Ogilvie, 4th Dragoon Guards, inclusive.

And every Captain, the date of whose Commission may be 1st, or antecedent to 4th June, 1807.

April 21.

A private letter from Grand Cairo, in Egypt, dated Dec. 28. says—" The plague, which had raged with great fury, has considerably abated, but the number of deaths is still very great in this pestilence. He was a young man of distinguished abilities and attainments, and admired by the people and the soldiery. Some other relatives of the Pacha had also died of the plague, and of those four minutes duration. At Cairo they had experienced a circumstance of a most unusual nature. After twenty-six days of successive torrents of rain, which had fairly destroyed whole villages. The houses having been built of mud, they were in a dwelling executed without injury, and had the rain continued for a few days longer, half the city of Cairo itself must inevitably have been washed away." Lady Hester Stanhope had reached Egypt. Her Ladyship continued in good health, and was distinguished for her humanity to all around her, and for the liberality with which she afforded the Christian Pilgrims going to Jerusalem. The Nile was at the time receding, leaving the country in the most abundant luxuriance.

April 22.

The Duke of Wellington arrived in London yesterday morning, so early as five o'clock, accompanied by a single attendant.

It is said that the Marquis of Huntley is to be appointed governor of all the Cape of Good Hope, in the room of Lord Charles Somerset. who pere's to Ireland.

April 23.

Sudden indisposition of the Queen.

Her Majesty was taken suddenly ill at an early hour this morning. Sir Henry Halford was immediately sent for, and had paid her Majesty two visits before nine o'clock. Communications were instantly sent off to the Prince Regent and other branches of the Royal Family. And the Privy Council was called and report, the following was issued :—

BULLETIN.

"Queen's Palace, 9 o'clock, A. M.

April 23.

"The Queen having been indisposed in the night, her Majesty is not able to receive company at the Drawing-Room this day."

One o'Clock.

We are happy to learn that her Majesty is better, and that there is no ground for alarm on her Majesty's account.

The health of the Speaker is sufficiently restablished to enable him to take the Chair to-morrow. It is understood, further that the Gentlemen will retire at the close of the Session, or a short time after the Recess.

Some hints are held out of greater facilities being about to be afforded to the accommodation of Country Bankers, in the way of Exchequer Bills, or Consolidated Annuities. It is said in a general letter, still unanswered, to the Lords of the Treasury, that the Bankers, generally have been reduced to the necessity of selling out their Consols, and that, probably have been forced to do so at the first Monday of the ensuing term has been fixed upon for the payment of the Property Tax, should intervening circumstances render it necessary.

Letter from Malters. Feb. 19.

The activity of the Duy he now within a half year wholly annihilated the appearance of one of the bloodiest battles which the shores of Africa have witnessed for many centuries. It is thought the intervention of Europe will cease. This however did not happen. The Ions continued in the hottest pursuit of the Dey, and the wounds, the magazines and workshops, the store of ammunition and provisions, in short all the elements of political life, were saved. The changed fortifications are now stronger than before, and the number of the corsairs of Tunis and now built vessels, may be said to be daily augmenting.

"The abolition of slavery seems to have been the chief object of the expedition. But either the interests or the views of the Cabinet, which has the misfortune to fall into the hands of these Barbarians, will be found to be the same means.

"The Algerines do not trouble themselves a bout this difference, if they can only notice war upon the European nations at their pleasure, and thereby fill the state with the spoils of commerce. Thus the whole of the Marine of this place is, however, at present employed in fitting out an athouser which was sent soon after the bombardment with an Ambassador, and rich presents, to Constantinople. It is now not yet come back; and according to all appearance no new negotiations will be entered into previously to an answer from Constantinople. Since the Monopoly of the Trade and Corn Factory at Bona, which was granted to England, from 1606 for 50,000 hard piastres, has ceased, it has been offered to France and Spain. France, which had possessed the privilege from the Algerine Government previously to the English, is not disinclined to take it again on the old terms, that is about 18,000 hard piastres; but the Dey insists as he received of the Englishman, and the affair is still undecided.

"Mentelone and Bona are ceded. The last harbour was most excellent, and there is abundance of corn in the country, the Dey will not allow it to be exported but to Marseilles, whereby high prices have been offered him, particularly from Genoa, which are refused. The Coral Fishery of the Bona Fishery terminated before he allows any purchase of corn in the country.

The House of Commons resumed their important discussions, last night a motion for dispensing with the Sinking Fund, for which we brought forward by Mr. Tierney, and resisted by Mr. Vansittart. The debate on the leading shape was also touched upon again—the Faction drive at this in order to paralyze the vigorous of the Country. In order to give the Ministers with extraordinary exaggeration into all instances of the most trifling and partial oppression. The object is consistent, but we do not approve of the means.

In both Houses last night a discussion took place in consequence of a construction given by the Magistrates at the Old Bailey Sessions to the bodilous Meetings Act, by which a society may be assembled for the purpose of petitioning on legal, political, and historical questions. Ministers, in both Houses, disavowed the construction put upon the Act by the Magistrates.

It is understood that Mr. Grattan and Lord Castlereagh are agreed to the principle of the proposition to be submitted to Parliament respecting the Catholic Question.

Enlargement of the Poor.—In the House of Commons on Monday night, the Chancellor of the Exchequer brought forward his plan for the employment of the poor.

The sum proposed to be voted are, for England, 1, 500, 000 in Exchequer Bills; and for Ireland, 500, 000. out of the Consolidated Fund of that kingdom.

Commissioners are to be appointed, who are to be empowered to advance money to Corporations and other Bodies, for the purpose of making Roads or Canals, or for the Repair of Roads, or to any persons engaged in public works now in progress or about to undertake them.

Advances are to be made by the Secretary of the Poor Rates in England. No advance to be made to any person or persons who have not in the Gazette made the average of the two preceding years.

Manufacturers of Birmingham and other places to be assisted with loans.

The 250, 000*l.* to be issued for Ireland is to be employed in the completion of public works or the improvement of the Fisheries.

The Exchequer Bills to be payable in the year 1820. Security to be taken for the payment of the several advances by instalments, the first of whole shall be repaid by the time the Exchequer Bills become payable, but the whole by the Prosperity of the Province indicates the Prosperity of relieving the Parent State from this burden. And although the Act of Parliament to defray in future, the current Charge of the Administration of Justice in this Province by the Imperial Parliament, and His Majesty's Government has accordingly withheld the usual Sum hitherto granted by it. And the Lieutenant Governor is under the necessity of Recommending the House of Assembly, that since the first Organization of this Government, the Charges of its Administration have far exceeded the Provincial Parliamentary Grant for that 1st Purpose, that His Majesty's Government has been pleased to direct, that the Sum granted for the Wants and Inability of a Province, in its infancy, but the increasing Prosperity of the Province indicates the Propriety of relieving the Parent State from this Burden, and

FOR SALE,

THAT very eligible FREEHOLD PROPERTY, in the Town of York, owned by the Subscribers, consisting of an excellent Dwelling House, Store, Stables, Coach-house, &c. It would be superfluous to point out the value of this situation, as it must be too well known to need description.—ALSO,

240 Acres of LAND on Yonge Street, Lot No. 19, commonly called Springfield; with about 60 acres of improvement. This Lot contains advantages that must be obvious: it has two excellent Dwelling-houses, Still house, Barn, Stables &c. with a never failing creek running through the front, sufficient for a Grist or Saw Mill. Its vicinity to the metropolis of the Province, combined with these advantages, must make it a valuable acquisition to the Merchant or Farmer.

200 Acres in the Township of York.

200 Acres in the Township of Uxbridge.

The above property will be sold on reasonable terms, which can be had of the Subscribers.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED, BY

Supplement to the Upper Canada Gazette.

THURSDAY, June 19, 1817.

PARIS, April 21.

From Naples we hear that the weather is very fine, and the crops promise abundance; the heat which has been experienced there, is however, very extraordinary.

Rain has at length fallen at Marseilles, after a heat of great intensity, and a drought of seven weeks; while in Paris a north wind has occasioned considerable frosts, and a severe cold.

A contagious disorder is said to have manifested itself in Poland.

April 23.

A steam-boat is arrived at Hamburg from Berlin in 35 hours 35 minutes, the distance being 72 leagues. It is destined to ply between those two cities constantly.

Odessa, we learn from St. Petersburgh, has been declared a free port.

The first columns of Prussian troops returning from France, has passed Coblentz, and the first Austrian column by Ratisbonne.

It is reported that the King of Prussia will visit the head-quarters of the army stationed in France, which he will review, after visiting the new provinces of the Prussian empire. It is rumored also that he will visit Paris for some days.

They write from Bayonne, that all letters coming there from Spain are dipped in vinegar, and that this precaution had been dictated by the news, that very contagious disorders then raged in certain parts of that country. It is said that an epidemic has caused great ravages among the troops in Estremadura.

The Count de Blacas, Ambassador from France to the Holy See, arrived in Paris yesterday. It is thought this journey has some affairs of negociation in view from the Court of Rome.

General Masseras was of Jewish origin, his real name was Menassah; he has left property in the amount of 40 millions of francs.

April 26.

The following letter shews that the Austrian government is about to open a commercial intercourse with the Brazils:

Extract of a letter from Trieste, dated April 10.

Sailed for Rio Janeiro, two Austrian frigates, the Austria, Capt. Pasqualigo, and the Augusta, Capt. Asseri, giving freight and protection to many tons of manufactures of the empire as an encouragement to its subjects to commence a direct commercial intercourse with the Brazils.

STATISTICAL.

Account of the Chinese Empire.—At a time when we are in suspense relative to the fate of our embassy in China, and ignorant, with the exception of private accounts, both of the causes and probable consequences of the late affair between an English ship of war and a Chinese fort, the following account of that immense empire must excite some interest.

Extent of the empire in square miles	1,297,000
The same in acres	830,710,300
Number of the inhabitants	333,000,000
Revenues in sterling	£32,140,625.

This gives 256 persons to a square mile, of 2 1-2 acres to each, which is full one-half more in proportion than the population of England.

Industry in China is nevertheless carried to the highest degree; and there are not to be found in China either idle persons or beggars. Every small piece of ground is cultivated, and produces something useful; and all sorts of grain are planted, not sowed, by which means more seed is saved than would supply all the inhabitants of Britain and Ireland.

In that country every one labours, and even rocks are covered with earth, and made to produce. The sides of mountains are cultivated, and irrigation is very general, and conducted with great art and care. Cloth and paper are made from various vegetables, which in Europe are thrown aside as useless.

In one word, they neither waste time, nor space, nor materials, and pay scarcely any taxes. Nevertheless they are so poor, that is, they enjoy so few of the necessaries of life, that the law permits the stifling of newly-born children, when the parents have not the means of bringing them up.

This account, from the best authorities, and which certainly is not far from the truth, affords abundances of material for thinking to our speculative economists; but if any thing were wanting to complete the strange result of such a population and so much industry, it is, that the Chinese despise all other nations, but most of all commercial ones, and they have always as much as possible insisted on having gold or silver in exchange for what they sell to strangers.—London paper

Wreck and Plunder of the Inverness.

Particulars of the wreck and plunder of the Inverness, Captain Leith, in the river Shannon, loaded at Limerick, with a cargo of provisions, on account of Mr. E. D. Hammer's contract with the Victualing Board, and bound to London.

From Captain Miller, of the Police, to Mr. Speight, merchant, Limerick.

KILRUSH, Feb. 24.

DEAR SPEIGHT,—As I am now in possession of most of the particulars of the wreck of the Inverness, I shall detail them to you as follows:—

She went on shore on Wednesday night, the 19th inst. taking Rinevaha for Carrigahold, and would have got off by the next spring tide, had the peasantry not boarded and rendered her not sea-worthy, by scuttling her, and tearing away all her rigging, they then robbed the crew of all their cloaths, tore her sails which they made bags of, to carry away the plunder, and then broached the tierces of pork and distributed the contents to people on shore, who waited to convey them up the country. The alarm having reached this on Thursday, a sergeant and twelve of the police were sent down, with the chief constable at their head, and they succeeded in re-taking some of the provisions and securing them, driving the mob from the wreck. The police kept possession of what they had got during the night; but very early on Friday morning the people collected in some thousands, and went down to the beach, where they formed into three bodies, and cheered each other with huts off, advancing with threats, declaring that they defied the police, and would possess themselves again of what had been taken from them, and of the arms of the police: the police formed into one body, and shewing three fronts, endeavored to keep them at bay, but in vain; they attacked them with stones, sticks, scythes and axes, and gave some of our men some severe blows, which exasperated them so much, that they were under the necessity of firing in self defence, and four of the assailants fell victims—two of whom were buried yesterday.—During the skirmishing, which began about seven o'clock, one of the men mounted, was despatched to the town for a reinforcement, when Major Warburton in half an hour, with twenty cavalry and a few infantry mounted behind them, left this, and in one hour and a half were on board the wreck, and took twelve men in the act of cutting up the wreck: one of them made a blow with a hatchet at Major Warburton, which he warded off, and snapped a pistol at him: the fellow immediately threw himself overboard, when——Troy charged him on horseback, up to the horse's knees in water, and cut him down.—The fellows then flew in every direction, pursued by our men, who took many of them, and wounded several. Nine tierces of pork have been saved. Her bowsprit, gaff and spars are all gone, with every stitch of canvass, and all the running rigging. The shrouds are still left. Two anchors and their cables are gone, and even the ship's pump. A more complete plunder has seldom been witnessed. Yesterday the revenue wherry went down to Rinevaha, and returned in the evening with the Major and a small party, with thirty-five prisoners, who now are all lodged in Bridewell.—The women in multitudes assembled to supply the men with whiskey to encourage them. Nothing could exceed the coolness of——Balfice and his party, who certainly made a masterly retreat to the slated store at Carrigahold, where I found them. He and Fitzgerald were wounded, but not severely; Fitzgerald had a miraculous escape, and would have been murdered, but was preserved by a man he knew from Kerry, who put him under his bed, &c.

QUEBEC, May 29th, 1817.

Between 20 and 30 vessels were to sail from London for Canada in April, as many from Liverpool, and 10 or 12 from the Clyde, besides great numbers from the out ports; of these only eight have arrived. Several of them have been 15 or 16 days in the ice. One, the first from the Clyde, has sustained considerable injury, and was only saved from sinking by the judicious exertions of the master and ship's company, in throwing about forty tons of the most weighty articles of her cargo overboard.

This Ship, the Montreal, Wm. Reyside, Master, sailed from Greenock on the 8th April, in company with the Cherub. Stevenson for Montreal, and parted from her off Loch Ryan, the Cherub bearing away for the south Channel, and the Montreal beating up for the north; on the 13th the Montreal was off Tory, from whence she was driven by southerly winds to lat 57d. 8m. in the long. of Rorkol. On the 1st of May, in lat. by reckoning 60d. 5m. she fell in with islands of ice. In the evening of the second, lat. by observation at noon 62d. 12m. long. 46d. 16m. she met with quantities of broken ice and sailed along a field of it during the night, and finally got a passage through it; at four o'clock on the morning of the 3d she had soundings on the outer edge of the great bank. Islands of ice were occasionally seen till the 6th, when she made St. Peter's Island, then completely covered with snow. The same afternoon, 52 miles to the westward of St. Peter's, the whole horizon to the southward and westward was discovered to be covered with ice; after beating in different directions, to discover a passage, several fields, which showed clear water beyond them, were passed; the next day she got completely entangled in the ice, and it was finally determined to push through it. She was generally favored with fair winds, but the ice was almost constantly covered with a fog, which prevented any observation from being made; besides, it was impossible to calculate the distance or courses to any certainty. At 12 at noon, on the 12th, the fog clearing up, Cape Ray was discovered, bearing north-east, dist. 3 miles. On the 14th and 15th, she was entirely stationary in the ice, lying along side of the Isabella. M'Vicar for Miramichi, which sailed on the same day from Greenock and passed through the South Channel. On Sunday the 18th at noon, all the sails on the main and mizen masts being furled or hauled at the time, the point of an upwardly thin piece of ice, and of about three or four hundred feet in superficies, struck the starboard bow, knocked the ends of the starchions into the timbers and broke, and drove in the lower edge of it an oak plank of 2 1-2 inches thick, about two feet under water. The water poured fast on the pump, and the Carpenter reported that the part could not be secured without getting to the leak outside; under these circumstances the passengers were stationed at the pump, and the crew was employed in removing all the weighty articles on the deck, clearing away the main hatch, and throwing the most weighty articles of the cargo overboard. At this time a ship was discovered coming out of the bare arbors and entering the ice. A signal of distress was immediately hoisted; but not minding her hoist on board. Capt. M'Coll, late of the Cossack, and a boy, as if one man, all that could be spared, were sent on board of her to ask the assistance of their Carpenter and any hands the ship could spare. The assistance was refused, under the pretext that it was blowing too fresh. Cap. M'Coll returned to the ship; the master of the stranger promising to stay by the Montreal unless she hauled down her signal of distress. He however shot ahead; at 4 P. M. he hoisted his top gallant sails, and was soon out of sight, the Montreal's signal of distress still flying. This Vessel's name was the Leech of Liverpool, Master's name unknown; the Master and Crew were Guernseymen and bound to Chaleur Bay. At 8 P. M. boards were got over the outside of the port, and next morning it was finally secured. At this time the ship was supposed to be about 40 or 50 miles South of the East point of Anticosti. On the 16th at noon the ship was again in a condition to carry sail. The next day she was out of the ice, and made Anticosti to the West end of South point. This morning she arrived at Gorbet without having seen any more ice, excepting on the shores near the mouth of the River. Some pieces of ice among which the Montreal passed were about 50 feet under water and about 6 or 8 above it. The weather was generally very cold, ice forming every night, and the decks were frequently covered with snow. About a dozen vessels in all were seen in the ice from the Montreal. The Captain of the Isabella counted 12 outside of Cape Ray, ten of which he said he saw within the Cape. He was nearly ashore on Cape Ray; he spoke outside of the Cape, the Isis from London, and saw the Alexander, Vickers, from Liverpool.

St. John's (N. B.) May 24.

The shock of an Earthquake was felt here on Thursday morning last at 31 minutes past three o'clock. It was preceded a few seconds by a noise, as if a gale of wind had suddenly sprung up, after which the earth began to shake violently, and there was a rumbling as if some heavy carriages were passing. The trembling lasted about 15 seconds.—The air was perfectly clear, and there was not a breath of wind.—In about a minute after the shock, deep reports were heard for a short time, which appeared to come from the South-east.

We have heard that the Earthquake was felt at Fredericton about the same time, and that it was as violent as at this place.

By accounts from St. Andrews, we are informed the Earthquake was very severely felt at that place—the alarm was so great as to occasion the soldiers to leave their Barracks, and many inhabitants their dwellings.

CAME into the enclosure of the Davenport Farm, a few days since, a large white COW, spotted with red; the owner can have it by proving property and paying for this advertisement. W. W. BALDWIN.

DUTCH RESURRECTIONISTS.

Dutch Redemptioners, passed through here on Wednesday last, on their way towards the lucky, to certain individuals of which state they have indentured themselves in Europe for debts to defray the expense of transportation from Amsterdam to the U. States.—Three hundred are said to have arrived at Annapolis in the brig ——, for which the Captain gets one hundred dollars a head. In point of cleanliness, many of the Redemptioners seem to fall far short of the Hessian standard, and in point of stature, they are not quite deficient of clothing when they are sold. It is possible, for all this, that many of a free and enlightened State should legislate such a trade?

SURVUS.

HARRODSBURG, (Ken.) April 16.

Dutch Slaves.—A New Style!—Four of the droves of "Redemptioners" mentioned in the above extracts arrived here last week, consigned and owned by Capt. Thomas P. Moore.—Twelve or Thirteen more of them are at Col. R. Johnson's farm. The rest of them have gone on their way. The cry of "Dutch Slaves," soon announced the town around the stand.—I, (being a German myself,) naturally visited them. They bore in appearance of their usage, and attire, that they had been shipped from the "Fatherland" (belted and battened) from the beginning to the end. Three of them have since deserted, and, though pursued by the agents of their owner, and by advertisements of "Run away Dutch Servants," have not yet been found. One of them can speak a word of English, and they are all moderate. Their owner, Moore, was here, working as a tailor at Mr Watson's shop, for his board, and very well treated.

He is a youth of 19 years, with a very prepossessing countenance and conduct, indeed he is a favourite of the town. Also, he has travelled through he left brothers and sisters in Germany, who, he told me, with tears in his eyes, are ignorant of his immortalization. I believe that he appears altogether incapable of telling a falsehood; I have the following account of their unhappy fate.

A Hollander (thanks be to God he is not an American) of the name of Bluther, captain and owner of the ship Trueflow Johanna, enlisted them, with all the liberality of a Hollander by high wages and the best treatment in a land of freedom, as to the wealth of my informant, by telling them that the mountains of Virginia were of Gold, and its rivers of Melted Silver, to be in their sight at land for the landing in North Columbia. Trust their owning it at they were up to the gunwales of foreign Blucher principalities! them that he could trust them at the vast acquisitions of rich tradesmen in America. Also, to the fact of Redemptioners having established him to place such of them in a situation, by which by their high wages, they could pay it in a short time enabled to repay him. They yield the character of Americans always stood high in Germany, and our Min ster at the time, no additional fact upon the name of the only Republic in existence. Under such handed promises were descended by the captain of which 30 stipulated for each passenger 1 lb. of cheese, and 1 quart of butter per week, 1 lb. of flour, and meat and lb. of bread.—Potatoes, peas, beans and other vegetables enough to touch, as necessary. Good sugar and good wine along with the cheese if they only got half their allowance in stinking meat, a touch of the rice and bought of a Russian ship, as contraband. that the passengers to certain ill health. Not one potatoe, not one grain of rice, on the voyage, salt only yielded barley, and black bare bellies bloated, and the dead, for half allowance only, was their constant fare. Butter and cheese were out of the question. Before this time, the scanty fare, was totally exhausted, before they had proceeded half their way, and if they had not got by the mercy of Medicine of Providence met a ship coming from America (by which the Captain of Bluther procured something like a supply, they must, inevitably, all have been starved. They were overtaken and boarded by an African vessel, but the hideous yell which the captain ordered from his cabin, frightened the black off to the Indies away. Bluther had been seriously ill, and was not expected, they must have been carried into Algiers or Tripoli as slaves, so they jumped into the potatoe-hole"—the house itself unscuttled and torn, all to pieces in search of the jewels and gold which was carried a small distance and stove in the water, not left out in the ground. Of upwards of 200 fruit trees, that were in Burnett's orchard—only ten were left standing—the rest being broken off or torn up by the roots; the most of them being torn up, and some of them carried with the fruit on them a considerable distance. This indeed was no singular fact; in almost all places, cedar trees, which are low and afford little purchase to the wind, and large oak trees with much wood and dirt, shared a similar fate.—Almost every panuel of fence on this plantation was swept down.

Hence, it struck a body of woods for the length of a mile: breaking off or tearing up the trees by the roots, and throwing them together cross and pile.

A road passing through the woods was for the space of 2 or 300 yards covered with trees laying the "cross and pile" and considerable labor will be requisite to clear the road of the timber. You can hardly get along a foot.

From the woods, the whirlwind fell upon the plantation of Mr. Nathan Burnett, where Mr. Hughes was sold, it had swept nearly every tree, and panuel of fence—and one old house.

It then struck Mr. Miller Brown's plantation—blew down his kitchen—only the edge of its whirlwind struck the edge of his dwelling house—his wife ran out of it with her child in her arms —the storms here her along the distance 30 or thirty yards, and snatched the child out of her arms, and carried it about 200 yards from her—it escaped unhurt. After passing the house, it struck a large orchard of fine apple trees, which it blew down—four negroes, who were in them, were considerably hurt —three of them were put out of their senses—the fourth the power of the wind had totally bereaved three of their senses—a fifth, less fortunate even than his companions, was carried about 150 or 200 yards, and left mashed against the ground, and he died next day."

Mr. H. heard of no other trace of the tornado, until it struck the plantation of Mr. Judge Turner.—Here it seemed to tear every thing to pieces—but he did not learn of any injury being done to the people.

The next account he had of it, was, at Major Fox's on the river—here it did considerable damage—destroying most of his small grain.

On Saturday morning, Mr. Hughes was informed, that on the other side of the river, it had killed a white man, destroyed most of the small grain where it went, twisted off the rye-heads as if it had been done by the human hand.

He was informed, that about a mile from the river, the whirl seemed to rise from the earth, until it had travelled for the space of a mile and a half—when it descended and struck with more violence than before. This is the last account he has received.

We learn from other sources, that its violence was astonishing, and the damages done to trees and other high objects, within the limits of about 2 or 300 yards through which it traversed, considerable. Richmond Compiler.

NEW-YORK, June 17.

Insurrection at Barcelona.—On the 2d inst. was published an article (translated from a Paris paper of the 2d April,) announcing that a serious insurrection had recently occured in Barcelona and its vicinity. This intelligence is confirmed by the arrival this morning of the brig Nymph, Captain Williams, in 20 days from Gibraltar. The insurrection, says Mr. states, commenced about the 10th or 11th April, when the populace, greatly dissatisfied with the government and particularly disaffected towards the Friars, rose in a body, seized the Friars, murdered many and threw them in a horrid and brutal manner." Gen. Lacy, who held a military command at Barcelona, in his efforts to suppress the insurrection, was killed, and other officers severely wounded.

Such is the first account of the transaction, as it reached Gibraltar. No additional or more detailed information on the subject had been received when Capt. Williams left that port.

Extract from the Journal of the Kingston, (Jam.) April 26.—His Majesty's ship Cherub, of 24 guns, captain Fisher, came in on evening, at day, from Spanish Main. Having left Cape Coast Castle on the 28th March. On Tuesday last she touched at Agostilla Bay, Porto Rico, and on Thursday, off Cape Tiburon, spoke the Bideman brig, Capt. Tefft. During the passage from Cape Coast, the Cherub fell in with a brigantine, and after a long chase, came up with her, but she refused to show her colours or to speak to the ship in any manner. Henderson, were sent to examine her, but on coming alongside, she fired a Turkish flag, and commenced firing. It did not, however, appear having boarded and carried in a very gallant manner, with the loss of only one seaman killed, and Mr Miller, Master, Mr. Pascoe, Midshipman, and nine seamen wounded. most of them severely. The brig proved to be a pirate from Guadaloupe, mounting nine guns, with a crew of 70 men. She was a large one, built to barter for 500 slaves. She was sent to Sierra Leone.

The following article is copied from the London Philanthropist for January last. It was drawn up at the desire of the Spitalfields Society, by W. H. WILKINS, M. D. one of the Physicians to the Spitalfields Dispensary. We recommend it to the reader, with the assurance, from the work, from which it is copied, that it is entitled to the fullest confidence; more easily understood, even by the humblest capacity, and calculated to prevent confusion, and misapplied exertion, than any others that have come before the public.—

Apparent death from Drowning.

"1. Untie the neckcloth, and strip off the clothes immediately, or cut the body and cover it in cold or damp weather with a blanket or any woollen garment, these clothes of some person present, and cover it carefully and expeditiously with as little agitation as possible to the nearest house;—it may be carried either in men's arms, or upon a door or hurdle, with the head raised and the body inclined in the right side; should the house be at a distance, a cart may also be procured, will be the best method of conveyance.

"2. Lay the body (the head still raised) on a bed or mattress, or on a low table covered with folded blankets, in winter at some distance from the fire, in summer near the window, and if possible in the open, taking especial care that not more than six people be allowed to remain in the room at any one time, for a greater number might prevent the return of life; these six may be divided into two sets, one set being active in restoring the warmth of the body, whilst the other is employed in recovering the breathing.

"3. Close the mouth and one nostril, whilst another person blows into the other with the utmost of a pair of bellows, or his breath, if he has not a pair at hand, with sufficient force to fill the lungs with air; which being done, the mouth and nostril are to be closed as before, and the chest is to be observed to be moved by the breath. This is to be repeated time after time, (and not long) nor will the whole body, particularly the right breast, be found to be softened occasionally with oil or hog's lard, either of which is better than flour of mustard, salt, or spirits, which are highly injurious.

"4. The lungs should be filled and emptied time after time, (and not long) nor will the whole body, particularly the right breast, be found to be softened occasionally with oil or hog's lard, either of which is better than flour of mustard, salt, or spirits, which are highly injurious.

"5. If the body feel cold, gradual warmth should be applied as well as the means recommended for the drowned: but of all remedies, none is more the excercise of the brain in cases of apparent death from lightning. ELECTRICITY is the most effectual, having this advantage, that it instantly affects the whole system of the frame. On which account, let an electrifying machine be procured with as little delay as possible, the other means being in the interval constantly employed.

Persons Frost-bitten, or apparent Death from Intense Cold.

"1. The body being slightly rubbed, rub the body generally with ice, snow or cold water.

"2. Restore warmth by slow degrees, with the application of ice to the place the person before rubbed, or snow.

"3. Should no appearance of life be observed after these means have been assiduously tried, put the person in a warm bed and suffer him undisturbed, to recover from the stupor of death.

"4. The Carotid commenced here about ten minutes after the first application of ice was made. The General, however, has given orders that the Officers of the Army shall not go naked which has not a little astonished the Turks, who otherwise promised themselves.

"We are informed from the world here, that we hear but little news. The receipt of letters from England is, therefore, a high treat. Our life is very monotonous. We are in hopes that the Yankees, or some other people will soon disturb the peace of the bosom of the inedrift, and thereby hinder the free communication of ships.

"Tobacco cigaters are highly pernicious: up it tobacco in any form, as it has a powerful tendency to destroy rather than increase the powers of life.

"The following clysters will answer almost every purpose:

"1. To a pint of warm water, add two tea-spoonful spirits of harts-horn, one heaped tea-spoonful of flour of mustard, or a table-spoonful of the essence of peppermint, and if neither of these can be obtained, put the same quantity of warm water half a gill of brandy, rum, or gin, or two table spoonfuls of common salt.

"Bleeding, if necessary, should be one of the first remedies: but can be proper in persons only of a full habit of body, and those who have received an injury on or near the head.

"Emetics should be dispensed with, unless it be ascertained that the stomach is oppressed with food or spirituous liquors. When given, they should be of a fortable—powdered ipecacuanha wine, or a table-spoonful of antimonial wine, or forty grains of ipecacuanha powder, or two grains of emetic tartar dissolved in a wine-glass of water, either of which may be repeated if necessary every quarter of an hour.

"Electricity should be useful only in the hands of such persons who are thoroughly acquainted with the treatment of persons seemingly dead.?

The Ruspians have lately formed an steadiness from some of the settlements upon the N. W. Coast of America, and taken possession of one of the Sandwich Islands.

PARIS APRIL 5.—Returning Spring never yet announced itself with more auspicious promises than at the present moment. The farmers are in open willing to compensate the sterility of last year by every hope which can console the cultivator or animate the patriot. The country are beginning every where to be abundantly clothed with verdure, and the prospects of the future harvest had hitherto engaged the spirits of the people in his occupations.

The number and quantity of the sugar-cane yesterday at Longchamps were so considerable, as to occasion a long and unusual delay in the first evening females so dazzling, that instead of seeing a population inhabiting under the burden of external temperature, they would have imagined the scene reminded me of Hyde Park and the Spring Gardens, in their most attractive hours.

From the Paris Moniteur, of April 20.

An unfortunate soldier of the Imperial Guards, yesterday entered the Metropolitan Church of St. Sulpice, where some changes had been made his way to the Chapel of the Virgin. From the interior of the Grand Sanctuary, he threw off his dress with a view to assume that of the staggered into the Choir, until he reached the Chapel of the Theological Throne, leaving as he went, the traces of his crime. He was immediately carried to the Hotel Dieu, where the wound was pronounced to be mortal. It appears that this unhappy man, tormented with evil thoughts and agonising recollections had sought in religion a solace for his sufferings: and it was not until after he had entirely lost his reason, that he formed the horrible resolution which fatal effect.

The Metropolitan Church, which had been defiled by the effusion of blood, was, in consequence, closed; and after a cession of the Chapter had been made, it was restored to purity, according to the form prescribed by the ritual. At a quarter past five o'clock the Clergy of the Metropolis assembled in the Church, and closed the doors. The pascal taper, the chandeliers, the candles, and the Cross of the Great Altar, were taken away, and the busts of the universe. The Vice-General, Jaubert, being clothed in a violet-coloured vestment went forth out of Church by the great door of the cathedral with three Priests, and the Clergy who attended the Prelate Eyssagon Jean Baptiste, entered in the Church by the same way, the Clergy moved in procession by the side of the great Altar, with the officiating Priest, who sprinkled the Altar, the Sanctuary, and the Nave, where the suicide was consecrated, and the places stained with his blood.

The Bishop, with his hands up some time, was attended, and participated in, by the people, and concluded with prayers being again repeated at the foot of the Altar.

Bonaparte in South America.

INTELLIGENCE.—It is reported that Bonaparte has escaped from St. Helena, and is now in South America, ready to join the cause of the revolted patriots—that his brother Joseph expects soon to embark for that country, and to cause himself to be proclaimed King of the revolted colonies—Napoleon, it is reported, is to be made generalissimo of the Royal forces—and no doubt is entertained of the success of the patriot cause.

Reader! unfortunately there is not a word of truth in this report, and yet if the editors of our public journals would only consent to alarm the public mind by tales of this character, their papers would be considered interesting. We will suppose then that we had actually published such intelligence, and that after we had risen at the mouths of millions on the gape, after the rumour had flown like lightning from one end of the continent to the other, we should then put on our readers with a paragraph of this kind—

We can now assure the public that there is not one grain of truth in the rumour which we published a few days ago, that Bonaparte had made his escape from St. Helena, and was actually arrived in South America. We can further state that the report that the ex-king Joseph was on the point of embarkation to that country, is equally destitute of foundation.

In strict propriety, what would any honest man deserve, who would thus confidently trifle with the fears and hopes of his fellow citizens—who would give currency to every vagabond rumour for the mere purpose of contradicting their statements afterwards? Ought he not to be shunned as a wretch who will demean himself so much as to become a retailer of daily lies—who will procure his daily meal?—And yet, because our papers are not crimsoned with the accounts of bloody battles; because the sickle is yet about to shine in the fields, so recently illuminated by the blaze of hostile swords; because the sword is green again, and the thunders of the cannon have ceased to roar; because there remain no more human victims to be butchered, 'because the arm of slaughter is so weary that she is at last compelled to drop her sanguinary knife—our papers, with some gore-tainted appetites, have become insupportably dull and uninteresting.—This is our evidence of gratitude to the Father of all mercies, for having stopped the rapid sanguinal effusion of human blood. Let such men speak fairly—do they wish human carnage once more, that they may enjoy the delightful recreation of reading how many thousands of their fellow beings have been sent to their graves—how many widows and orphans have been left to pine in misery and want—how many mutilated remnants of man are to be seen tottering in our streets, the mangled monuments of human impiety! Could this be the case, we should not be complained of as an intolerable grievance, will these gentlemen inform us what it is that is the worthy object they have in view? Is it because it is true that our public papers are not now made the records of daring achievements, and we thank our God that they are not, that they are made such records. The mild and genial influence of peace is felt, not by the conflagration of cities, or by the prostration of empires, but in that quiet and sacred calm which pervades the civilized universe—it is felt in the confidence by which the government formed within the arms of the soil of his native country, anticipates the future epoch—or by which the more adventurous merchant commits his treasure to the mercy of the winds and waves—by which the brown son of industry plies his anvil with repeated strokes from morning to night, and finds in the evening, that the curse which was originally inflicted on the parent of the human race, that he should earn his bread in the sweat of his brow, is now converted into a blessing.

GEORGE the THIRD, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith.

Whereas, by an Act of our Parliament of Great Britain, passed in the thirty-first year of our Reign, entitled, "an Act to repeal certain parts of an Act, passed in the fourteenth year of our Reign, entitled, an Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of our Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further provision for the Government of the said Province." It is amongst other things enacted, that whenever any Bill which has been passed by the Legislative Council and by the House of Assembly, in either of our Provinces of Upper or Lower Canada, respectively, shall be presented for our assent, to our Governor or Lieut. Governor of such Province, or the Person administering our Government in the said Province, he shall declare according to his discretion, but subject nevertheless, to the Provisions contained in the said Act, and to such Instructions as may from time to time be given in that behalf by Us, our Heirs or Successors, that he Assents to such Bill in our name, or that he withholds our assent from such Bill, or that he reserves such bill for the signification of our pleasure thereon. And it is further provided by the same Act, that no such Bill which shall be so Reserved for the Signification of our Pleasure thereon, shall have any Force or Authority within either of our said Provinces respectively, until our Governor, or Lieut. Governor, or Person administering our Government shall signify, either by Speech or Message, to the Legislative Council and Assembly of such Province, or by Proclamation, that such Bill has been laid before us in Council, Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to Assent to the same; And that an Entry shall be made in the Journals of the said Legislative Council of every such Speech, Message or Proclamation; and a Duplicate thereof duly attested, shall be delivered to the proper Officer, to be kept amongst the Public Records of the Province; And that no Bill which shall be so reserved as aforesaid, shall have any Force or Authority within either of our said Provinces respectively unless our assent thereto shall have been so Signified as aforesaid, within the space of two Years from the day on which such Bill shall have been presented for our Assent, to our Governor, Lieutenant Governor or Person administering our Government of such Province, as aforesaid, as by the said recited Act, reference being thereunto had, will more fully appear.

Now KNOW YE, That WE do hereby signify our Assent to the Bill entitled, "An Act to appropriate a certain Sum of Money for the purposes therein mentioned, was passed by the Legislative Council and House of Assembly, in the Fifth Session of the Sixth Parliament of our Province of Upper Canada, which was presented on the Twenty-second day of March, in the Fifty-sixth year of our Reign, to our Lieut. Governor of our said Province for our Assent thereto, and was afterwards reserved for the Signification of our pleasure thereon, and was thereupon transmitted to one of our principal Secretaries of State, for the space of Twenty-second Day of March, on which Day the said Act of the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of our said Province was presented to our Lieut. Governor of our said Province, at York, this 14th day of June, in the year of our Lord 1817, and fifty-seventh year of our Reign.

GREY PAPER

From the United States.

From the Charleston City Gazette, June 12.

Late from Cuba.—Capt. Callander, arrived yesterday in 32 days from Cadiz, inquires no that glorious day stay at that place, two fleets of Spanish transports, each under convoy of a frigate, sailed for South America. One of them throat to the other one week, and the convoy returned to his departure. They both together contained 5000 men, destined to reinforce the Royal Armies in the South American Provinces. Capt. C. further states, that these troops were literally forced away against their wishes—and probably more than half of them, though they would join the cause of Independence, as soon as they arrived.

Merchants be on your guard.

Fraud in Cotton.—A respectable merchant purchased, a few days ago, a load of Cotton from a waggoner, named William P. Sims, and on examining one of the bales, he found it to contain about 50lbs of stones, 50lbs of earth, rubbish, cotton seed cotton seed; the balance of the bale, about 39 or 40lbs of good cotton. He immediately informed the said Sims of the circumstance, who returned the money without hesitation; and, in corroboration of his innocence, went before a magistrate, and made oath that he received the said bale of Cotton for disposal, from the grandson M'Colough, of Greenville district.—

Patriot.

NEW-ORLEANS, May 20.

By passengers arrived from Galvestown, we learn that General Mina, with his expedition, had landed at that place the 1st of April last, without obstruction, at Soto la Marina, province of New St. Andre, 35 leagues to the north of Tampico. By a vessel from this latter port, it is known that the royalist commander, being informed of the landing of General Mina, (who was supposed to have 7000 men under his orders) went in pursuit of him, at the head of 1500 men, collecting on his way all the detachments placed in the different towns.—It is more than probable that General Mina will not compromit himself with forces on the upper; and that after having placed his heavy artillery in a place of safety, he will strike into the interior with his light pieces, to begin a partisan warfare and effect a junction with his first insurgent corps he may meet with.

Note.—An intelligent person who comes from the scene of action, and was present at the landing, this moment informs us that Mina was well received at Soto la Marina, a small town of 800 inhabitants, and that he immediately marched on St. Andre, capital of that province; and that 7 or 800 men of the militia of the country had themselves under his colors.

Amis des Lois.

NEW-YORK, June 19

Trinidad 15th May.—On Sunday the 11th inst. a 74 gun ship, frigates and 13 sail of transports were signalled passing the Bocas, supposed for Margarida, with troops on board, to change the order of things on the Spanish Maine. We have now a report that Margarida is in possession of the Royalists, and that Augustura has surrendered to the Independent army."

June 21.

A Kingston (Jamaica) paper, of the 20th of May states, that the noted Pirate Johnson, is prisoner at Port-au-Prince. The account of his capture is thus given:—Johnson' He had recently captured an Haytien schooner on board of which himself and a crew of four men went, while he dispatched his own vessel, a schooner, fitted out at Baltimore, in chase of a Spanish vessel. As soon as Johnson's vessel was out of sight, the Haytians overpowered and threw him overboard, but he was picked up by a fellow from the people of which recognized him as having some time previously robbed them, when he was taken to Port-au-Prince, and delivered over to the head of the government, who ordered him to be imprisoned preparatory to trial."

June 23.

The schooner Aurora, Capt. Sidler, which sailed from this port on the 16th of March last, for Portsmouth, returned this morning.—The Aurora, arrived off Portsmouth, on the 30th of May, when she found that port blockaded by a squadron, consisting of 3 frigates and a sloop of war. The commander of the squadron ordered Captain Sidler, to go on board for sloop of war with his papers. When on board, Capt. S. was informed that Portsmouth was in a state of blockade, and that he could not enter. It was further observed, that the Aurora could enter at St. Sebastian or any ports to the windward, but that the ports to the leeward were blockaded.

About twenty days before the Aurora arrived off Portsmouth, a number of schooners, had received off that port to water, but were not suffered to enter.

The remainder of the sloop of war informed Captain Sidler, that the port was full of American and British vessels.

* The Government of the United States has purchased of RICHARD HARTSHORNE, Esq. what is commonly called Sandy Hook, a very large and valuable promontic, extending from the Portland Highlands to the sea, a distance of seven miles. On this beget must it hand there is a considerable quantity of valuable cedar, which, in time, must become useful in ship building.—The sum paid, we understand, was 30,000 dollars.

FROM ENGLISH & IRISH PAPERS.

Received at the Office of the Commercial Advertiser.

Daily.—A letter from Rome of the 6th inst. says—of lord Exmouth, that he had returned from Naples; although there are picquets placed all along the road, at a distance of a mile from each other, and he had an escort of guards, a banditti attacked him, and he was not escaped till after an actual engagement. This you may depend upon as true, though I will tell you no further particulars of it. I learn also, that two gentlemen (whose names I will not repeat upon pleasure) coming from Florence, were stopped and robbed, between the picquets, near Viterbo, and one of them shot. Several of the Italian Governments are ashamed of the disadvantages which this interruption to the access of foreigners must bring upon their subjects, that they connive at such outrages, and tardily in measures adopting for protecting the roads, with considerable expence doubtless to themselves, but hitherto, as you see, without success, either on the southward or northward of Rome."

A Ministerial Evening Paper says—"By recent and authentic letters from Portugal, we learn that the disbanded troops are making to complete the military establishments of that country. Annonces are in circulation for the most vigorous spirit seems to animate the people. The frontiers are surrounded by Spanish troops, and matters seem to be fast coming to a crisis. An armament is fitting out at the ports of the state of South America, and the mysterious operations of the Portuguese court, are on the grounds of this apprehended contest between Spain and Portugal.—To these grounds of difference may be added, the refusal of Spain to give up the fortress and territory of Olivenza.

Wars between France & England.

War Commenced A. D. years.	A. 1 years.
1161 23	1562 2
1211 13	1627 2
1224 19	1665 1
1294 5	1689 10
1332 21	1709 11
1368 25	1744 4
1422 49	1756 8
1492 1m.	1776 7

From this shocking account it appears, that the number of wars was 24; that 260 years of the 700 were employed by these nations in waging war one another; that from 1161 to 1471, a term of 310 years, 186 were spent in war; that from 1265 they were at war 101 years in 103—leaving a peace only of two years duration.

If we add to this account the years that these nations were employed in war with other nations, and the years of civil war with each other, it will probably appear, that they have spent more than half the time in waging the last 700 years. How awful must have been the loss and amount of carnage and suffering! If the island of Great Britain and the whole territory of France, could now be sunk by an earthquake, the loss of lives would be perhaps less than what has been occasioned by the voluntary and antichristian wars of the people of which recioned him as having some time previously robbed them, when he was taken to Port-au-Prince, and delivered over to the head of the government, who ordered him to be imprisoned preparatory to trial."

In the Madrid Gazette of April 22, we find a notice of the death on the 20th of that month of the Infant Don Antonio, of a violent bilious fever that lasted six days. In the 66th year of his age. He was unite to the king.

St. JOHN'S, (Antigua) May 27.

The Luna, Amis, and Zephyr Transports have arrived at Barbadoes, with reinforcements for the Army, amounting to about 600 men. Among the officers belonging to about the 63d regiment, Lieut. Col. O'Hara of the 63d, and Lieut. Col. Stewart, of the Royal York Rangers came out in the Zephyr. The former has already arrived at St. Kitts, where the Staff of the 63d is at present stationed.

The Engineer (Army Brig) after conveying col. O'Hara from Barbadoes to St. Kitts, arrived here on Saturday evening, and sailed yesterday on her return to Barbadoes, with brevet Major Austen, of the 25th foot, which regiment has been ordered home.

The 21st regiment are under orders for the West Indies; and the 1st W. I. (part of which are in garrison here) are destined for the Cape of Good Hope.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—April 30.

IRISH CATHOLIC PETITION.

Sir Henry Parnell presented a Petition of the Roman Catholics of Ireland, complaining generally of the disabilities and inconveniencies under which they at present laboured, from the effects of the Penal Laws now in force, and praying for their application to their relief; that the disabilities complained of were incurred by them merely on account that they had taken the oaths prescribed by the Act of Queen Anne, and established by their public appeals and general conduct, as well as by the most unequivocal declarations and most satisfactory testimony of their loyalty and attachment to the Government and the Throne; that notwithstanding these circumstances the sincerity and zeal in the cause of their common country, they still continued subject to the most degrading and vexatious yoke imposed by the Penal Laws, and to a system of exclusion and disqualification from the highest offices of the State, adhered to the religion of their forefathers. It represented that this conformity to the received religion of their country was not adopted from motives of interest and from any eminent and excellent faculties of the mind, but from the solid basis of reason and doubt of the reasons of the motion which felt Right Hon. Friend. the Member for Dublin would shortly put out to the consideration of the House. They did not ask for Catholic emancipation, they only asked the Committee to take their case into consideration, and if they could be convinced, or would be more gratefully received. He could imagine no objections to the enquiry he proposed. He did not regard this as a political question, nor was he, in any way, connected with party politics. He was desirous of having every application to their duty

Miscellaneous.

Dreadful Occurrence.—A dreadful occurrence took place at Wickham on Sunday se'nnight.—Anton Graham, the wife of W. Graham, blacksmith, murdered two of her children by strangulation, left another for dead, and afterwards cut her own throat! The following particulars will clearly show that the wretched woman laboured under strong mental derangement. On the preceding day she dressed herself, and took her children for a walk, a circumstance with her very unusual on such a day. She went with them to a small stream of water, and looking into it, remarked that it was not deep enough, as they would come another time" (as on Monday) morning, she strongly persuaded her husband to go to church, and when she had out his breakfast—before she gave him a bible she handkerchief, instead of a white one—he observed the former, and asked her to let him have a white one. His wife immediately said to him in a singular tone—"Then you shall have it when you're all by dead!" Graham took no particular notice of this neighbour. went to church. As soon as he was gone, she called the children into the house and locked the door—after washing them, she gave the eldest (a boy about nine years of age) an infant to hold which was sucking at the breast, and then took one of the other children into an adjoining room, put it to death by strangling it with her hands, and then laid it into a bed. She returned for another, which was strangled in the same manner. When she came for the third, the boy before-mentioned inquired what she was doing, and observed, he thought she was killing the children. She replied, that she would let him soon see what she was doing with them, and went into the room with the third, which she also strangled. The boy being alarmed, laid the infant on the floor, and got into the blacksmith's shop by a door which communicates with the dwelling-house, where he concealed himself until the large bellows of the smith followed him into the shop, and searched but could not find him. After she returned into the dwelling-house, the boy escaped from the shop by the window, by which means he got under the door. He met his father as he was returning from church, and told him the dreadful tale; but came on to the dwelling-house, and on first entering the house, the unhappy woman was found with her throat dreadfully cut, without any signs of life; the infant was lying on the floor without; and the other children also strangled and laid out in a decent manner. She gave him a bible with handkerchief, instead of a white one—for which purpose, and indeed how to let him have a white one. THE BOUNDARIES OF THE U. STATES.

The commissioners under the fourth and fifth articles of the treaty of Ghent, for the purpose of settling the boundary line between the North-eastern frontier of the United States, and the British dominions, and to determine to which of the two the islands in the Bay of Passamaquoddy and the Isle of Pauby are respectively entitled by the boundaries established by the treaty of 1783 as modified by the peace on the 14th of May last.

The commissioners under the fourth article were employed for some days after their meeting in the examination of facts, documents, maps and plans, in order to be possessed of a state of the controversy on both sides of the line which T. Austin, Esq. agent of the American commissioners, opened and a written argument in behalf of the United States, which employed him a week to read.

W. Chipman, Esq. the agent on behalf of the British government, then entered into his argument, in favour of the claims of that nation, which occupied him one full day. These respective arguments having been interchanged, the commissioners adjourned to meet on the 26th of November next, at which time the parties will be heard, in reply to each other.

The commissioners under the fifth article of the treaty, appointed two parties of explorers, consisting of thirty persons of each nation, and a suitable number of surveyors to be employed from the monument upon the St Croix, and pursue the boundary line to the Highlands; which divide the Waters which empty into the Atlantic from those that fall into the St Lawrence. The commissioners adjourned to meet again on the 8th of May next, to receive the report of the explorers, and of the surveyors.

By the treaty of Ghent, it is provided, that in the event of a difference of opinion arising upon the subject under the consideration of the commissioners, the alternative adopted by the government of the United States, agree to refer the difficulty to some friendly sovereign or state, then to be agreed for that purpose; and in consequence of which expectation all the arguments are delivered in writing.

According to the construction of the British agent, the boundary line would cut off part of the river St. Johns, and vacate 7 millions of acres of land from the District of Maine.

EASTON, (Maryland) June 24.

Hurricane.—It is reported, and we believe correctly, that there was at Cambridge, on Saturday evening last, about half after 8 o'clock, one of the most violent hurricanes that ever was known in that part of the country.—The city of Cambridge was thrown into the greatest consternation & uneasiness from, and raged with incredible violence, for about ten minutes, during which time and blew down several houses in the town, and prostrated every tree and fence in its course. Robert Goldsborough, Esq. of Cambridge, was unfortunately placed in such a situation as to fall a victim to its fury.

The circumstances as we have heard are as follows: Mr. Goldsborough was at the door, when the wind, he from to a door in a covered way between the dwelling house and the kitchen, he was endeavouring to keep the door shut, when unluckily the wind overpowered him, and a plank so displaced, from one of the floors, that having h...allings from blowing in person struck him on one side of the head & fractured his temple. He was found shortly afterward prostrate on the floor and weltering in his blood, but not entirely deprived of his senses. He languished a few hours, and received all the medical aid that could be afforded.—but alas, all was useless, he soon became delirious, and so continued until relieved from a painful existence by the dread, leaving a disconsolate wife and three small children to bewail the loss of a tender and affectionate husband and father.

CONGRESS. June 26.

In the House of Commons Mr. Serjeant Onslow had leave to bring in a bill for repealing the laws regulating, or restraining the rate of interest on money. The Chancellor of the Exchequer seconded the motion for the second reading.

It was reported from Constantinople that a treaty had been concluded between the Porte and the Great Britain, by which the strong peace of Parga is ceded to the latter.

Sir William Garrow, Attorney General, has accepted the appointment of Pocune Baron of the Exchequer. He is to be succeeded as Attorney General by Sir Samuel Shepperd, and it is supposed that the office of Solicitor General will be filled by Mr. Scarlett, or Mr. Copley.

AMELIA ISLAND.

By the arrival yesterday of the ship White Oak, from St. Mary's, we learn, that the people of East-Florida were in a constant state of alarm. Intelligence had been received that it was the intention of the patriotic privateers to take possession of the Island of Amelia. A number of families had fled to St. Mary's for safety. In addition to the force of Gregor M'Gregor, who was at Charleston recruiting men, was to command the expedition. In addition to the force of the Charleston papers, received by yesterday's mail, contain the following:—

Important.—A letter from St. Mary's, dated on Saturday last, 14th inst. says, "There are four large Patriot armed vessels now off Amelia-Island; several families have removed to this place in consequence.

We are all anxious to know their object."

KIDNAPPERS TAKEN.

It gives us pleasure to state, that a number of villains, engaged in the atrocious crime of kidnapping people of colour, have lately been discovered in this city, through the benevolent exertions of Mr. S. Kelly, of Poughkeepsie, who suspecting the plot, came to this city on Thursday last, and communicated the intelligence to the Manumission Society. Immediate measures were taken for the detection of the villains and rescue the unfortunate victims that had fallen into their clutches. The principal of the gang is a man called Daniel Eanna H. Thompson, who last fall purchased some slaves of a Captain Storer, who united from this port in a vessel called the Allegator, with Thompson on board. He visited, trapped here, touched at Philadelphia, and proceeded two more, and then proceeded to Baltimore, where he sold his cargo. Thompson undertook to convey them to Georgia, but in passing through North Carolina, the blacks seized an opportunity to rise on board their oppressor, and by some travellers, w... interceded in their behalf. On reaching the town of Wilton, Thompson was seized, and bound to appear at Court. Having given bail, he came on to this city, for the purpose of procuring testimony concerning his slaves. During the winter he was knocked down in Warren-street, by Arthur Miles, captain Storer's mate, and robbed, as he stated, of rising one thousand dollars. After this he went down to Georgia, where he resides, being, according to his own story, a farmer in King's country, and has a family of seven children. Some time ago, he took passage in a vessel at Savannah, and came to this city, accompanied by a negro woman and child. Here their nefarious combination was formed. Their head-quarters was a tavern, kept by Lawrence into Vandenburgh, 34 nos Nichols, in Love-lane, a road last little travelled, about two miles and a half miles from the city. Nichols was supplied with the necessary funds for a Northern tour—at Albany he procured two and at Poughkeepsie six blacks, proceeding he purchased them for his own use, and Thompson, on the evening of the Friday last, had one hundred and fifty blacks on board, secured in the hold and cabin. On enquiry of Thompson, as to the authority he had as the owner of the vessel, he stated that two of the blacks were known persons, the one were passengers, and the other a boarded by Nichols, who were to be landed at Poughkeepsie and Albany, where the vessel was bound for a load of cheese and from thence to Georgia. Suspicion was excited, and the vessel was boarded by the Custom-House Officer, and Thompson and his accomplices examined at the Bull-well. On Saturday, Thompson was committed before the Police for examination—in the course of his evidence, he stated he had purchased the six blacks of Nichols, and that the blacks were bought for his relations in Baltimore. He denied having any connexion with Nichols, and protested he knew no such person as the 6 tree, but being more closely questioned, acknowledged they came passengers together from Savannah. After the Recorder was drawn it was drawn up, it was handed him to read, and notwithstanding he stated it to be correct, refused to sign it.

A passenger in the Lavinia, informs that off Liverpool, N. S. he saw his countrymen, (supposed to be American) under convoy of a sloop of war, two of which she had in tow, bound to Halifax. He also states that an American schooner lay off Little River, while two small vessels apparently from that place, went to her—probably to cancel their bonds.

We give on Friday last some verbal intelligence, brought from Bahia, by the Sarah, which had then arrived at quarantine in this port, having left thence May 8. We now give the detailed account of the voyage, which we find a file of a papers of that city, received by Capt. Gould, his company consisting of Mr. Sargeant, of Philadelphia, left Bahia five days later, and brings a report, that Monte Video had been taken from the Portuguese by the Buenos Ayreans, and that a part of the Batam troops had joined the republicans at Portugueza. We have no means of testing the truth of these reports. They are stated in too loose a way to admit them to much credit, though the events cannot be regarded as by any means improbable.

Bahia, April 29.—A vessel that has touched at this port from Rio Janeiro brings the intelligence that a squadron of his Most faithful Majesty's ships sailed thence to blockade the port of Pernambuco; and a considerable force, the commander of which has issued the following proclamation.

PROCLAMATION.

Rodrigo Jose Ferreira Lobo, Chief of Division in the Royal Navy, Knight Commander of the Squadron of the North, to the inhabitants of the province of Pernambuco.

Nothing could cause more astonishment as well as pain to the mind of the Kingdom I... than that a province of Brasil, where so many honors and favors have been showered down, whose illustrious by their valor in opposing the enemies of the throne, and the union of the Portuguese, are engaged in an atrocious rebellion, which has already broken out into open disorder, to throw down the representative system of His Majesty, expel the Governor, and establish a faction opposed to their duties.

His Majesty is at the same time persuaded, that the majority of the inhabitants of Pernambuco have been seduced by a few turbulent men, they inherit from their ancestors, and that they will always give proofs of the same to his august Majesty; and that they will detest but the unprincipled and factious assuming out of the rebels will be shortly suppressed, and they brought to the same sentiments.

It is grateful to the compassionate heart of his Majesty to be obliged to force and vex his subjects, in proscribing the means of subduing the rebels, but his paternal affection for his people his august Majesty has given me orders, to blockade the ports of Pernambuco, and to suppress the ports of Pernambuco.

Moreover it is the policy and duty of his Majesty to remove all the instruments that Providence has placed at his disposal in destroying in the germ the evil, and to prevent the seeds of a civil war, the thought those of which is so dreadful. In defence of our Sovereign, and which has filled with such horror the hearts of all his faithful subjects, we have heard of this this blot on the national fidelity. A memorable example in the Portuguese Monarchy, and who, by its representation, gave the speedy punishment and property at the disposal of his Majesty's Ministers, and the Tribunals charged with the case. But his Majesty hopes that his good subjects, the inhabitants of Pernambuco, will on this occasion make ample amends for their past extravagancies.

Rodrigo Jose Ferreira Lobo.

Every day vessels arrive at this port, ordered off from Pernambuco by the Portuguese squadron from Brasil, but arrived here, which was expounding for Pernambuco, and which had likewise transpired the men and guns which were requested by the governor of Seriphaem, and which were actually delivered at the Portuguese Fleet, under the protection of the corvette Maranon, as set by which I have the honor to inform you, right to the arms to and appliance of the whole world. This follows the orders of our Sovereign, and the commandant, from the Judge of Orphans to the whole people, have been a letter whose copy the Portuguese style also at the end of the grandeur of the letters of Pernambuco, and consequently the rebels will speedy punishment of the rebels.

A copy of a letter to the chief of the blockading squadron of Pernambuco.

In this occasion the people of Seriphaem have the honor to inform you, that they have the moment and ammunition, as well as a full allowance, and more in the matter of a letter signed by the crown of our Sovereign, seeing we are all ready to defend the Royal Standard of our Sovereign. The honor of this can, if it be the wish of your Excellency, point out the place where this direct to the Portuguese Squadron, that is in Pernambuco or Rio Formoso, where all the people will be assembled with arms to receive it, and are equally ready to receive the orders of your Excellency, which is the name of the same Sovereign.

We have also to inform your Excellency, which we are fortifying, to cut off all communication with the rebels of Pernambuco, and the land with the troops that have marched against Seriphaem, the matter of a letter signed by the crown of our Sovereign, seeing we are all ready to defend the Royal Standard for him

His wife's his children's smiles await him there
Not so for him no early heaven for home,
Three boundless seas and foreign climes to roam
Empire! by dread, disease and death to lure,
To guard the wealth he ne'er has must share:
His wife how sweet receives his wasted form,
No wife to greet, no lisping babes to charm:
His meal before him all untasted lies,
While tears of bitterness burden his eyes:
To him alas! now only hope is given
A page in history—a share in heaven!
Public my country, the child weaned,
For liberty thy bounteous darling sons prepared
These who go off thy blood-red flag unfurl'd
Who hand thy banner o'er the sanguy world,
Who fearless of what dangers threat'ning roar
First spoil'd Neptune of his glorious way;
This they did, when his plenty bore,
Yet still they, right, they'll brave, they'll serve

From the Baltimore Patriot, Republican, July 1.

The accounts from South America, mentioned in our last, are brought by the Schr. Mary Ann, Capt. Wyatt, master of the river Orinoko. Between the Castle rock and the Royal forces. The Royal party were so strongly entrenched on the central hill, that no attempt to dislodge them was thought to be practicable. Reinforcements had been continually coming in from the other bank of the river by which means it was hoped that they would be able to receive succour from their metropolis, where they could not be attacked but with considerable advantage. The rebels were encamped on the plain that draws from the foot of the hill, and a council of war was held at the point of the bayonet. The Royalists maintained the impetuosity of repeated charges with the bayonet, and were always victorious, but never pursued, slowly and reluctantly retired from the field—at length the Patriots, flushed with success and confident of victory, charged the retreating enemies of the enemy with redoubled fury, and compelled them to fly in every direction.

According to the Patriotic account of this affair the Royal party left 300 dead on the field of battle, 497 were taken prisoners—600 muskets were taken and 2500 musket cartridges—The merchants of the town Guayanne, it is calculated will be the consequence of this victory—the garrison described as in a feeble and demoralized state, oppressed with sickness and famine—and incapable of making any long defence without the smallest prospect of obtaining any succour. The Patriotic troops are stated to have lost in this decisive battle, only 38, and that 70 only are wounded.—An official account of victory, before enquiry, it may be presently noted, this is in the present instance, where all pour, his blood seems to be the heaviest and most quashed enemy, such an enormous disparity between the killed and wounded of the contending parties will be given, as is perfectly irreconcilable to the assertion that so much courage was displayed by the conquered party. In the present instance, 300 are slain on the part of the conquered and 38 on the side of the victors—and yet the battle was severely fought, and begun and ended with the point of the bayonet.

NEW-YORK, July 1.

We have been politely furnished by a gentleman who arrived in the Bay, in the Baltimore packet Patriot, with the following interesting information relative to affairs in S. America.

On the 1st of June inst. a Spanish squadron, consisting of the Morgiana commanding 50 guns, 2,500 men, on the Bourbon flag, and another of 36 guns, other pleasure vessels, and 20 sailing boats, and pressing a number of fishermen and committing numerous other depredations to the amount of 200 men, for the service they had not disembarked, as they were in an unhealthy situation, and finding that Gen. Bolivar was determined to dispute the ground with them.

A few days previous to the sailing of the Patriot from Pampatar, he received despatches from Gen. Bolivar, requesting two men of war and four gun boats to enter the harbour of Cumana to intercept the Royal tyrants of Spain, which contained a rich Spanish merchant vessel from Guayanas, previous to its capture, and now lays, at Augustine, with all their effects, supposed to amount to four millions of dollars.

Gen Bolivar only awaits the answer of Ld. Cochrane, before he attacks the city of Angostura, which is in the hands of the tyrants in that quarter.

A list and situation of the Republican armies of South America, in the Provinces of Venezuela, and Guayana.

Gen. Simon Bolivar, at the head of the main army, his head quarters at Angostura, with 5000 men, consisting of the new and old Guayanas, with the divisions under Generals Piar, Arismendi, Cedeno, Bermudez, Valdez—cavalry, 2000 men, infantry and cavalry.

Gen. Marino, with the armies of Lower Apure, also 6000 strong, mostly cavalry.

Gen. Sarasa, at Cinjanna, in the Province of Barcelona, south of Cumana, with 1500 cavalry and about 600 infantry.

Gen. Monagas, in the rear of Barcelona, with 700 cavalry and 300 infantry.

Gen. Mariño, in the Province of Cumana, with 2500 infantry, and 300 cavalry.

Gen. Bermudez, at Maturin, with 700 cavalry and infantry.

Gen. Brion's and Macquire's squadron, consisting of three brigs, country and Spanish built, and the Royal schooners lately surrendered to them at the mouth of the Orenoko. Accounts from Gen Brion's and Macquire's squadron, that they, viz. a frigate, corvette and 2 brigs, being part of the Royal squadrons lately surrendered to them, had also taken from Barcelona for the Orenoko, leaving the remainder of the squadron in that port. They had embolled their prizes, and put them in number, who joined to Morillo's forces, had destroyed the 1st division of the army, and routed 9th General in pursuit of the Independents under General's Bolivar and Piar.

The Franciscan Convent, Mariner and Packet, were apparently quiet under the Republican authority.

From the Norfolk Beacon, of June 30.

By experience the enemy are convinced of their daring. In the schr. Hope, Captain Wyatt, from the river of Orinoko, the keeper of the Light House was informed, that on the 14th inst. which he entered, they were visited by an armed force and plundered of about, belonging, as they said to a Carthagenian privateer ship, then but a short distance off, and continued at a great part of the property, bundle of pork, and a number of other articles of provision &c. An officer and crew of seven, on board, then urged that their Captain was sick, and required such articles for nourishment; offering much in return for assistance. In the course of the day, they left her. They refused to tell the name of their vessel or commander, but from what she was New-York built, that she was lost from Margaretta, or some place in which they had made prize—and a Spanish vessels. This vessel's companion to be the Two Hundred Tonner that two—the boat—crew supposed to be Spaniards, they said their Captain was a Frenchman.

From the Augusta Herald, of June 24.

In a thunder storm on Wednesday last, six fine horses belonging to Captain John Sykes, in South Carolina, about 16 miles from this place, were killed by one stroke of lightning—the horses were standing under a small China tree, a species of electric fluid penetrated, accompanied on count with a tremendous clap of thunder and instantly killed the whole of them; they probably stood so nearly together, as to serve for conductors to each other; or the quantity of electric matter was so great, as on occasion its efforts to be diffusively experienced. No marks of the lightning we understand were left upon the tree, but a small bruise was observed upon one of the noses of it, where probably the fluid had passed off into the ground.

On Saturday afternoon last, three children standing under an apple tree in the Sand-Hills were knocked down by a stroke of lightning—one of them was killed on the spot—the other two although stunned, were not materially injured—a dog was also killed by the same stroke—he fell some distance his received his hold, and escaped uninjured; no marks were left upon the tree.

CHARLESTON, June 26.

Bravery of Slaves.—An elderly black man named Jeamey, a fisherman, was on Tuesday killed near Fort Johnson, by a musket shot from the enemy. It appears that his boat got adrift, and he swam out to it; but just as he had got hold of her, the Shark arrived, and it was supposed cut him entirely in two. Nothing was afterwards to be seen but his head and arms. The poor fellow was at the spot. He belonged to Josiah Taylor, Esq.

Extract of a letter, dated "Aguia, (Virg.) June 25th."

"I must now relate to you a very extraordinary circumstance. In repairing our church in this place, there were found secreted in a remote part of the premises, a number of children of negroes, women and children, together with several other articles. Among the clothing, which was necessarily of ancient fashion, and probably long since for many years, were steps of the Revolution, and what adds to the singularity of the affair and gives interest to conjecture is, that the children were found to be all of the same complexion, a shade of mulatto, supposed to be about 10 years old. The whole matter is involved in deep mystery, and it is believed that not the smallest prospect of obtaining any account. The Parochial records are stated to have lost in this decisive battle, only 38, and that 70 only are wounded.—An official account of victory, before enquiry, it may be presently noted, this is in the present instance, where all pour, his blood seems to be the heaviest and most quashed enemy, such an enormous disparity between the killed and wounded of the contending parties will be given, as is perfectly irreconcilable to the assertion that so much courage was displayed by the conquered party. Steam Boat Accident.—The Boston papers of Wednesday morning, that on Thursday of last week, a new steamboat, intended to ply between Boston and New London, burst her boiler on her passage from the former place, and that three persons by this accident were killed outright, and one dangerously scalded. It is said that the boat was not completed, and was under a certain, when one of them, discovering some irregularity in the movement of the machinery, called to the engineer to stop the boat, which he did; when immediately going forward, and had scarcely reached the spot, when the boiler burst, took place with such violence as nearly to demolish the whole boat. Capt. Wm. Hall, formerly of Guayanas, previous to its capture, and now lives at Augustine, with all their effects, supposed to amount to four millions of dollars.

PITCAIRN'S ISLAND.

IT is well known, that in the year 1789, His Majesty's ship Bounty was sent to the south seas on a voyage of the usual circuit round Cape Horn, to the West-Indies, &c. on every which, by her men, and the Captain and some of his officers put on board a boat, which, after a passage of twelve hundred leagues, arrived at Dutch settlement on the island of Timor. The remainder were left on board the ship, who proceeded with some expressions which escaped them, to have made sail round Cape Horn, to return to England for trial before a court-martial which subjected six of them to suffer death, and acquitted the other four.

From the documents given by those men, as well as from some documents that were procured, it appeared, that in one of the Friendly Islands (now from the ship, the twenty-five mutineers proceeded with her to Otaheite, where they remained six weeks; but that the ship was found to build out little encouragement, they resolved to quit Otaheite, and having burnt the ship in a large supply of stock, they were more than their departure for Toobouai, carrying with them 6 men, 6 women, and 1 boys, natives of Otaheite.

They continued, on their second arrival, the buildings they had left, but, through disputes among themselves, and quarrels with the natives, the original number of 6 Otaheitans were reduced to one, who was soon discovered that his authority over his associates was at an end; he therefore prevailed upon them to remove to Otaheite; that as many as chose it should be put on shore at that island, and that the rest should proceed in the ship to any other place they might think proper. Accordingly, the ship went accordingly to sea, and arrived Matavai, 26th September 1789.

Here the names of the twenty-five landed, fourteen of whom, as already mentioned, were taken on board the ship. Of the other two it is reported by Coleman (the first who surrendered himself to Captain Edwards) one had been made a captive in battle, and the other was a child himself afterwards murdered by the natives.

Coleman, with the remaining eight of the mutineers, continued on the island amongst the natives of Otaheite, the greater part women, to part so, 21st Sept. 1279, in the morning the ship was discovered from Point Venus, steering in a north-easterly direction; and here terminate the accounts given by the natives, who were either taken or remained themselves at Matavai bay. They stated, however, that Christian, on the death of his companions, was known to declare, that he should seek for some uninhabited island, having established his plan of life, to break up the ship; but all endeavours to Captain Edwards to gain further information, either of the ship or her crew, at any of the numerous islands visited by the Pandora, failed.

Of the information communicated by Christian or his companions reached England from Captain Edwards, when aboard the Pandora, and of the subsequent proceedings respecting Christian or his companions reached England from Captain Edwards, when aboard the Pandora, and of the subsequent proceedings respecting Christian or his companions, information will be found in Phenix's Island. My principal object was to procure coal-sloss for the China Market; and for the account given of the island in Captain Carteret's voyage. I procured it, as established; but, on application for the store in my boat, I was met by three natives with a double canoe, from the island, consisting of some fruit and hens. They spoke to me in the English Language, and informed me that they were born on the island and that their father was an Englishman, who had settled with Captain Bligh.

"After discovering with them a short time, I landed with them, and found an Englishman, of the name of Alexander Smith, who informed me, that he was one of the Bounty's crew, and of the after getting Captain Bligh in the boat with half the ship's company, they returned to Otaheite, at the earnest desire of every one to carry him Mr Christian, with eight others, the landing which, I ordered poles to a more remote place of shelter, and after I had been on shore a day or two, they took whatever stock men wanted, they procured for me a house, which I occupied the first night after taking every thing out of my boat which they thought would be safe in the house. Object six years after this, I found the same servants attended and looked all the English, and was myself very much treated. The same night, the Otaheitans, having drunk with the women and children, where he had resided ever since without any disturbance.

I considered but a short time on this island before I was presented to my wife, a native of the place, and on a smooth compass, which he said he brought to the Bounty, by the time they were all discovered by the governor of the island of Juan Fernandez, after I had it in my possession about two days. Mr Smith appeared to be a man of sound sense, and made use of it on many occasions, where which he said he had been put to by an instrument-maker in London. I now toward it by your knowledge, therefore, I now found it a useful collection in preserving it, merely from the extraordinary circumstances attending it.

"MATTHEW FOLGER."

Nearly about the same time, a further account of these unfortunate people was received from Vice-admiral Pigot, in a letter addressed to him by Sir Sidney Smith, one of His Majesty's Aides de Camp, of which the following is a copy:—

"Sir, Berlin, Valparaiso, Oct. 16, 1814.

"I have the honour to inform you that on my passage from the Sandwich Islands to this port, on the entrance of the 26th September, I fell in with an island which none I had been in the neighbourhood or other charts, and from several circumstances of its appearance, I judged it to be uninhabited; but on sending my boat to it, I found it to be inhabited, and on my going to it, I found it to be inhabited by a race of men, who, I have discovered it to be, and on my great astonishment, found that every individual on the island (forty in number) spoke very good English. They prove to be the descendants of the defunct crew of the Bounty, which, from Otaheite, proceeded to the above-mentioned island, where the ship was burnt.

"Christian appeared to have been of a leader and the sole cause of the atrocity in that ship. A venerable old man, named John Adams, is the only surviving Englishman of those who had quitted Otaheite in her, and whose example conducted and faithfully care of the whole of the present population, who commend admiration. The same manner in which all those born in this island have been reared, the correct morality of religion which has been instilled into their young minds by this old man, has given him the pre-eminence over the whole of them, to whom they look up as the father of the whole and one family.

"A son of Christian was the first-born on the island now almost twenty-five years of age (entered Thursday-October Christian) is the elder Christian fell a sacrifice to the jealousy of an Otaheitan man, within three months after his arrival on the island. They were accompanied thither by six Otaheitan men and twelve women; the former were all swept away by desperate contentions between them and the Englishmen, and five of the latter have died of different periods, leaving at present only — men and several women of the original settlers.

"The island most undoubtedly be that called Pitcairn's although erroneously laid down in their charts. We found the meridian not close to it, which gave us 25° 4' S. lat. and 130° 25 W. long. by chronometers of the highest order.

"It is abounded in yams, plantains, hogs, geese, and fowls, but affords no shelter nor a ship or vessel of any description; neither could a ship water there without great difficulty.

"I cannot refrain from offering my opinion, that it is well worthy the attention of our benevolent religious and philanthropic societies, in propagating the Christian religion, the whole of the inhabitants speaking the Otaheitan tongue as well as English.

"During the whole of the time we were on the island, only once were the natives seen to be enumerated with them, which took place on the 29th, when a double canoe was seen to the Topaz, of Boston, Mayhew Folger, master.

"The island is completely iron-bound with rocky shores, and landing in boats at all times difficult. I have no apprehension of the island's short distance in a ship.

"I. STAINES."

As the real position of the island was necessarily found to be not laid down in the charts, it is usually laid down in the charts, and as the existence of the island, as well as many of the others, as already mentioned, were unknown to the Spaniards, and to all other nations, it is little surprised, on approaching its shores, to find a plantation of cocoa-nut trees, and huts or houses more neatly constructed than those on the Marquesas islands. When about a league from the shore, some natives were observed bringing down their canoes to the water's edge, the ship, sail out in the English language, "Won't you come in a canoe, Jack?"

The first man who got on board the British soon proved who they were. His name, he said, was Thursday-October Christian, the son of Fletcher Christian, the head of the mutineers of the Bounty, and the only man, about six feet high, his hair deep black, his countenance open, and his eyes full of a lesser size cast, but free from that malice of a reddish tint, which prevails on the Pacific Islands; his only dress was a piece of cloth round his loins, and a straw hat, ornamented with the black feathers of the Tropic bird, confined by a red silk handkerchief. "They expressed great surprise on seeing a ship — they had heard of, and were in doubt whether she was a great gun or a horned sow.

* There was so much sameness in the Bounty's crew to need here any account of it, by his real name, Alexander Smith.

THE JEW'S LEAP,

A dangerous and fruitful Pass, over which Capt. Riley and his companions were obliged to take their journey from Santa Cruz towards Nugdessa, are related in his narrative.

The path we were now obliged to follow, was not more than two feet wide in one place, and in another left it broke off at once, and a hundred feet deep to the sea; the sands at the bottom were loose, and the only method of safety is rider down the rocks to inevitable and instant death, so there was no alternative but to be led by bold of by which a man might save his life. Very fortunate for us, there had been no rain for a considerable time previous to this, or the road was now dry. Rain told me when it was wet it was even impassable for the most expert and accustomed to the mountains, though there was another road which led round the mountain, but it was of the same difficulty.

One of these accidents he said he would mention. "A company of Jews, six in number, from Santa Cruz, [or St Nicholas,] came to us here with their loaded mules in the twilight; after some of, being very anxious to get past it before dark, and not unwilling to assist them, I would venture to meet them, or show us past in the night. One of our valuable mules missed its look out, and fell about half-way the ascent in; for there is a place built on each end of this dangerous piece of road, which I have before mentioned, where others on it not being quite half a mile in length, a person by hallooning, can always be heard from one end to the other, and it is the practice of the guards on duty there, to give a signal. A company of Moors had entered at the other end, going towards Santa Cruz, at the same time; they also supposed, that one of them would dare to enter it that hour, — one on either side bound to remain till the day broke over and in the most difficult place, the two companies met, — there was no possibility of passing each other, nor of turning about to go back; the Moors were mounted as well as the Jews—neither party could retire nor could any one, except the foremost get off his mule — he North were therefore called to and threatened to throw the Jews down headlong—the Jews (though they had always been treated like dogs) were called to submit to every insult and indignity, yet finding themselves in this perilous situation, without any possibility of escape, and unwilling to break their necks, meekly to accommodate the Moors, the foremost Jew dismounted carefully over the head of his mule, with a cool stick in his hand, the Moor turned him off the stone, and came forward to attack the defeated crew of the enemy

From the Boston Courier, of July 12.

Captain Barrett, from Pernambuco, arrived in Nantucket, informs, that on the 19th May, the Portuguese royalists obtained possession of Pernambuco without any bloodshed.—That on the previous night 1100 patriots and others stormed the forts headed by their officers; and that the next day the bloodless squadron sent there to join the patriots, hauled their colors down, and made his escape;—that Elbert, formerly a Priest, had committed suicide; and another officer, probably the one that established the Adjutant's club in the insurrection took place; but when shot by the royalist army outsides. That it was said the royal army was quite numerous, and had been joined by many Indians; and that previous to the sailors getting possession of the place, there had been two actions between the Patriots and Royalists, in which the former, as they told the story, came off victorious driving twice their numbers.

Pernambuco encouraged by the Patriots.

A letter, dated at Pernambuco the 25th of May, and received at Boston, by the arrival of the brig Indus, at Nantucket, states, that on the evening of the 20th, (the port having been rigidly blockaded for 30 days by the Portuguese squadron from Rio Janeiro) the Patriot army encamped in the town, and proceeded to Northwardly ; and that the Sailors took possession of the place on the following morning. On the 22d the Portuguese army attacked the town in two divisions, one of which immediately put to the rout of the Patriot army. The victorious troops were again repulsed, and a general had begun to reason his former character.

From Havana.—Capt M'Donall, of the ship James & Agnes, arrived on Saturday evening, in 7 days from Havana, informs us, that the Constable sloop, captured by Com. Porter's squadron, fell unmanned and equipped, was to sail from Havana, about the 1st inst. destined for the coast of Africa. That previous to their arrive there before Sir Gardon M'Gowan and his followers gain possession of the fortress, we may expect to hear of warm work between the two gentlemen.

"Another Steam Boat accident," Explained.

The account given of the accident which befell the Norwich Steam-Boat, on the 23 inst. and reliming through the public papers, is calculated to mislead the use who are unacquainted with Steam-Boats. The facts are as follows :—

The boat in question is a small vessel lately built and rigged by a few individuals in Norwich, to ply between Norwich and New-London, the proprietors of which to save the expense of Pilots and Listingers, employ a regular and an expensive engine, have put into her a simple engine upon a new construction and entirely experimental, with seven perpendicular Cylinders, and the history as it may appear WOODEN bellows, with old Comforters, safety valves of leather &c. wherein the steam is raised by many, her wooden boilers burst, and three persons hurt, but not dangerously.

It is a fact worthy of notice, that the Steam-Boats upon the North River and Long Island Sound, constructed upon the Fulton and Livingston plan, have been running ten years, without a single person ever being injured, and it is impossible any serious injury should happen to them, while the safety valves being calculated to relieve an excess of steam spontaneously.

NEW-YORK, July 10.

On the 25th of April, a plan for excluding the produce of the British manufactures from the Province of Canada was brought before the Provincial Council of State; and after due consideration, was rejected by a majority of 20 votes to 2.

It is whispered in the political circles in London, that the Earl of Liverpool, will soon resign his seat in the Administration, and that Lord Grenville will be selected to fill the vacancy.

Mr. Canning, it is also said, will be Governor of Paris in room of Talleyrand, and in that case will resign his seat for Liverpool.

Both Houses of Parliament adjourned on the 2nd of May, for one week. The Earl of Liverpool, on proposing the adjournment in the House of Lords, intimated, that on the day of meeting, he should make a communication to the House from the Prince Regent. Earl Grey, in answer, but unnamed reply, intimated that he was in hourly to propose, at the termination of the recess, a renewal of the suspension of the Habeas Corpus.

The London papers state, that the trade of the country had of late greatly improved; and that there were many purchasers of English goods from America, in the metropolis.

The Merchants of Liverpool, who are interested in the importation of American flour, sent a memorial of a public nature, to the Board of Trade, on the 9th of May, to ascertain, throughout the country, the prospects of the approaching harvest. In noticing this act, the Liverpool Paper of May 2nd, remarks.—"We are happy to learn, that the parties employed have given it as their united opinion, that the country at large never stood in a more promising situation for rich and abundant crops of wheat, and all other sorts of grain."—Spectator.

It is said, three Steam-Boats are daily to save London for Portsmouth, for the accommodation of the Prince Richmond for London. It is also said, that a committee has been appointed by Parliament, to investigate the causes of the late disorders on board a Steam Boat on the Thames.—Ibid.

A Misanthrope.—Died, at New Marlborough, (Mass.) on the 14th ult. Timothy Leonard, aged 70. He was born near Canterbury, in Connecticut, of parents in low circumstances, and bound out and brought up in Woodbury. After he was of age he went to the town of Frederic Lodge, (N. Y.) where in father then resided. When about twenty four, he came into this town, a sprightly and industrious young man. For some time he dispersed and quarreled with his brother and drove him away. He gradually became deranged. At the time of the revolution, he fancied himself commander in chief, he frequently gave orders for the regulation of congress and the army; copies of which are now in the town. He called himself Admiral. His other titles were, a god, a king of the earth, &c. He became troublesome and dangerous, and was incarcerated by the civil authority. Since that time he has sought no intercourse with the rest of the world; has lived like a man in the wilderness, and obtained his subsistence by the cultivation of not more than one acre of land. This he manured with grass, leaves, and other vegetable matter. His principal living has been corn, potatoes and pumpkins. For a time he kept some stock—had some poultry, and for a number of years he has lived alone, with the exception of a few domesticated fowls. Woodchucks, rabbits, skunks, weasels, squirrels, rats and mice, and those without dressing, were the varieties of his table—His clothing consisted of two garments, fastened together at the waist with large wooden pins, and was mad of wood, hemp, or flax twisted coarse, and wove in narrow stripes, skewed together, and he put on one coat and probably without cleaning; and shoes or moccasins of bark shaped to his feet, and worn off. He could read, although he kept the year, day of the month and week. He was not disposed to converse much upon religious subject. He however kept a watch of time of day as regard to the sabbath; was addicted some what to profanity; and was a lover of natural spirits. He expected after death to be about as he was one of his neighbors and a number of his acquaintance. He was much esteemed by those who knew him for being faithful to the soldier after the end of the war. He was a man of considerable property, but left it all to be generally reported their offers.

The night on which he died, though his dress was uncomfortable and filthy, finding him very weak, they wished to have remained with him; but no, to morrow he should be alive and well. But in the morning early he was found a corpse. His remains were the next day committed, with suitable religious services, and in the presence of a numerous concourse, to the dust, on the place where he had spent almost half a century in the manner described. He has perhaps really destitute of friends nor enemies. He was industrious and he must. He lived for himself entirely, and still was a lesson of instruction to thousands ; the picture which he exhibited was human nature in ruins.

His relations, if he have any, are informed, that after all, he has left a property worth from five to six hundred dollars, will but little incumbrance.

Spitalfields.—This spot of ground will soon lose all its notoriety in state affairs. A row of houses is already built before the sign of Moslin's Cave; and the tiny lume window an recently attractive to the populace, is now completely enveloped. The above fields are, we understand, the property of the Earl of Shaftsbury; and ground has been purchased for the immediate erection of 400 houses.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.
HOUSE OF LORDS, May 16.

Army Estimates.

Lord Palmerston moved the order of the day for the House resolving itself into a Committee of the Whole House, to consider further of the Supply. He also moved, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer be directed to move the House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole.

Lord Palmerston then rose to propose the Estimates for the ensuing year. The estimates for the land service, he had divided into Estimates under four different heads of service. The first head was for the maintenance of force immediately belonging to the army, including the sum of 2,000,000 for the extraordinaries of the army, which was the same amount as last year. The second head was for the maintenance of the general establishments, which, though now to be considered as permanent, were intended to be discontinued in the course of the year. The third head was for the maintenance of those corps, which, though now to be considered as permanent, were intended to be disbanded. The fourth head was for the maintenance of the military establishments in the colonies, which, on the former occasion, caused an increased expense of 1,000,000 sterling, but which formed the 2d battalion of the 60th regiment, to be disbanded, and the 2d battalion of the 95th to be reduced. The whole of the reductions would make a reduction of 2,000 men in the force of the regiments of foot guards. If to this were added the reduction made during the current year, in one regiment of cavalry and four companies of artillery, which were 2,300 rank and file, or 3,411, including officers, the whole reduction of the land forces, which he proposed out of the army, would be found to be 5,711. The sum to be reduced under all the heads of service, would be found to be 2,000,000 sterling. So that the general reduction, in the present year, would be to amount of money £3,200,000. The reduction of 1818 was 6,000,000. It was his view, that the Government had used due diligence, and applied with a strong hand every reduction in the expenditure of the country, that circumstances would at all admit of; they had adopted every plan of economy suggested, and reduced every thing to the lowest scale of expenditure, which could make a reduction of the military establishments of the country. He was aware that this service provided a reward for the gallant and meritorious officer, and was therefore more likely to be increased than diminished by a general military reduction—a reduction which was necessary to be made in this Department; Gardens Barrack Masters & Inspectors of Barracks, were reduced, which was the main amount no increase of expenses there-from. Commissaries of Musters, Clerks of Stores, and Military Storekeepers, were reduced, which was an increase of £100,000—this was, of course, a saving. Commissaries of Hospitals, Apothecaries, Physicians, and Surgeons, were reduced, and other corps. There was an increase of £100,000 on the Half-pay and Retired Allowances, and £56,000 for Out-Pensioners—part of this augmentation was, however, occasioned by the transfer of the Chelsea Out-Pensioners from the Ordnance to the Treasury. In the Military Asylum a difference was made of £30,000 between the present and last year's Estimate, of £8,000. In the commissariat there was a reduction of £100,000, though the real addition was only £9,000. A provision was also arranged, that in cases of retirement, the allowance should not exceed the pay—and should not be increased according to the progressive rank of the officer. This was a wise regulation, as the payment of the pension should be customary, according to the duration of the service, and not the amount being received by the Local Militia. There was a reduction of £70,000, the whole of which was in the Yeomanry, and the greater part reduced to Half-pay pensions. The increase on Volunteer Corps was £30,000, which was also was in the Department of Exchequer Fees, a saving of nearly £80,000.

The Noble Lord then pointed out, that he had omitted the Irish Barrack staff commission Department, which was a saving to the country of £10,000. He then proceeded to make some observations on the Estimates for Ireland, which he stated were framed on the same principle as those for England, with a view of effecting a reduction in the expenditure of the country, but that circumstances would not allow of the same reduction in Ireland as in England, and he should therefore propose a smaller reduction in the Irish than in the English Estimates. The Irish Establishments were those still remaining on the Irish Establishment, which had been formerly on the English Establishment, and which, though now to be considered as permanent, were intended to be discontinued in the course of the year. The Irish Establishments were those which did not come under the Mutiny Act, and which were provided for by the East India Company. The Irish Establishments were those which paid the Chelsea Pensioners, the Military Academy, the Royal Hospital, and the Royal Irish Artillery. These charges, which, though now to be considered as permanent, were intended to be discontinued in the course of the year, were, on account of some, some matter items of account, which would be found in a note at the end of the Estimates on the occasion, transferred from one head of account to another. He begged to be understood before the House were greatly reduced by the Second Report of the Finance Committee, which had been presented to Parliament, and which had now to form. By pages 38 and 39 of that Report, it would be found that the amount of the several corps, as contemplated at the end of the year, was in a reduced ratio of £1,778,000 to £1,000,000. The Irish Establishments which, on the former occasion, caused an increased expense of £1,000,000 sterling, which formed the 2d battalion of the 60th regiment, to be disbanded, and the 2d battalion of the 95th to be reduced. The whole of the reductions would make a reduction of 2,000 men in the force of the regiments of foot guards. A provision was also arranged, that in cases of retirement, the allowance should not exceed the pay—and should not be increased according to the progressive rank of the officer. This was a wise regulation, as the payment of the pension should be customary, according to the duration of the service, and not the amount being received by the Local Militia. There was a reduction of £70,000, the whole of which was in the Yeomanry, and the greater part reduced to Half-pay pensions. The increase on Volunteer Corps was £30,000, which was also was in the Department of Exchequer Fees, a saving of nearly £80,000.

then the two before six a few times, in the most easy, yet most measured time; then the two children dance a reel, holding each other by the hand; then Mrs. Smith begins to sing or whistle, to which they are to dance, at which the tambourine strikes, and away one do-do to the time, with modest ease and exactness not to be described. Many have been the observations of spectators, and brought to my ear, which I observed, that when starting the seven days, the machine is keeper said to himself, and that he believed him. All acknowledge with me, that it exceeds every thing they ever saw or imagined. His whole conduct from the first, has been, and is, one continued scene of mystery. He has never shown any sign of the knowledge of his trial or present situation; he seems to be in a world of shades and shades are no apparent inconvenience; connected like a dog or a monkey, broke to his shades; observing no other thing of any thing that is past, than if he had no recollection. He is short, is a mysterious character, presenting a wonderful self of unresolved, broad common capacity.

I am almost ashamed to forward you so long a letter upon the subject, and so unintelligible; I think, if I could have done justice in describing the exhibition, it would have been worthy a place in the Royal Gazette, and better worth the attention of the public than all the wax work ever exhibited in this province.

I am, with all due respect, dear sir,
Your very humble servant,
WALTER BATES.

Thomas Wetmore, esq. attorney general.

P. S. Wednesday the 30th. This morning I waited on Mr. Bates, and delivered to him the letter addressed to him, which I had written in the morning. I found him in a very low state of spirits, and he informed me that he had been visited by the same gentleman from Pennsylvania, doctor Price, a man of learning, and one of the first men of the age, whilst his travelling for foreign and literary information, and had made it a point to view all curiosities and wonders of the age, and among the rest, of Newman, who, after conversing with him, and examining him for some time, declared that he had an extraordinary character to deal with, came to him, and desired me to let him see him; with which I complied, and after some time, he came and every part of his exhibition and performances. He was much surprised, that he had travelled through all the continent of America, and Europe, and that he had never met with the equal of it; that he was now writing two volumes of his travels, in which he declared he should not fail to give a full account of this wonderful performance.

When doctor Price left me, he was by the name of doctor Conyers, from Ireland, who had been to see him, and was desirous to see him in his own house—I then introduced a gentleman to him, who came to see him as a friend, and who had been acquainted with him in Ireland, and was desirous to see him. He was at least wonderfully successful. He told his fortune in his tea-cup; after looking in it some time he took the tea and bread in it, and the gentleman ate it, and declared it was the same thing he had seen in Ireland. He told a lady in Scotland, that she had been in Holland; at Hamburgh, and other places famous for such exhibitions, but that he had never met with any thing of the kind that he had ever seen before him.

August 28th. Soon after the gentleman left the good, South said to him that he had been 8 days, and had supplied 4 days food, and desired him to cook it for him; on looking, the gentleman saw the chain that had been missing, then lying on the floor. After this, Newman's behaviour was more mysterious, and commenced fortune-telling; in which, if he did not possess the power of second sight, he was at least wonderfully successful. He told his fortune in his tea-cup; after looking in it some time he took the tea and bread in it, and the gentleman declared it was going away from this place, that he would not remain here long, and added a box in put his family in; that he saw there were three persons without any of his family, and that one was a man of a dark complexion, and that he was going to a place where there was a great deal of water, and that he would not return to his family in; that he saw a woman in a room with a child in her arms, and that he would not return to his family in; that he saw a woman in a room with a child in her arms, and that he would not return to his family in; that he saw a woman in a room with a child in her arms

NEW-ORLEANS, June 30.

Latest from Mexico.

Further accounts from General Mina have reached town; they state that the General and his army, on the 18th of May, were at Soto La Marina, in high spirits; and would march, 1000 strong, to attack the royalists on the 20th. We have been politely favoured with Bulletin No. 1, of General Mina's army, as also his address to the Spanish troops, "of King Ferdinand, and a patriotic song on his landing;" they are in Spanish from the press of Samuel Bangs, formerly of Boston, printer to the auxiliary division of the Mexican Republic at Soto La Marina. The following extract is a tasty translation from the bulletin:

"We came to the bar of the river Santander, which is about 23 deg. 45 min. north latitude, and 97 deg. 38 min. west longitude, according to the meridian of Greenwich; and prepared for a general disembarkment, which was effected on the 21st of April, in good order and without opposition. Our troops occupied a deserted barrack. Shortly after, we perceived two individuals, who, as we afterwards suspected, were spies of the royalist detachment that was stationed here, but had fled on the appearance of our vessel. Notwithstanding, we travelled three without hesitation, and used them as guides. They assured us of the dissention, which we were aware existed between the Vice-Roy of Mexico and the Captain General of the internal provinces, and added, that the Royalists had not looked for us here, but at Tampico, whose army, had their principal dispose the force.

The 22d, the General departed on foot with his troops, amidst acclamations and rejoicing. The vanguard, under orders of Major Sturdis, was headed during its march by a party of royalist cavalry, commanded by Lieut. Col. Garza, who did not dare to make the least demonstration. This man had made the people about Soto la Marina, believe that we were going to burn their houses, devastate their fields, lame the men and violate the women.—Thus the greater part of the inhabitants had abandoned the hamlet, and sought shelter in the woods.

The 24th, the division reached this town; the General was received by the Curate and some neighbors. The others learning that our conduct was the very opposite of what Col. Garza had alledged, came in successively.—The General harangued the people as to the object of his coming, and the justice of the American cause; and assured Mr. Mier Vicar of the division, who gave indulgence to those who in good faith would adhere to us and the noble enterprise we undertake. The general made such changes among the functionaries, as was fitted to the new order of things, chose by the inhabitants of the most credit and capacity. In a word, the people of Soto la Marina, are now very happy to have us for guests. The patriots have offered us horses and rations; the young men enlist among us; and all admire our good conduct and liberal ideas.

After the reverses that had preceded, a success so prosperous would induce a belief that Providence is willing to put an end to the misfortunes that afflict this fine portion of the new world.

From letters dated April 29, Captain Brogden, at Marblehead, from Buenos Ayres, papers to the 16th of May have been received. They mention that the Royalists retain no place in Chili, and that the revolutionary forces are pressing into Peru.

The 25th of May 10, contains an official article from the General of the auxiliary army of Peru, dated Tucuman, April 26, stating several guerilla affairs, in which the Patriot troops had came off victorious, taking prisoners, ammunition and provisions. And another official article same date stating that the Royal army occupies Salta, but that measures were in process to make them abandon it.

A military Academy for 30 Patriot Cadets, had been established in Chili.

The Spanish brig Arcadian, had been taken by the Chilian brig Aguila.

Many Chilian Patriots who had been banished to the island of Juan Fernandez, had been brought back to St. Jago in triumph. The Tariff of duties had received further modifications.

SURVIVOR'S CONSCIOUSNESS, Mr. MARY's.

Last Sunday the Patriot force, (as I wrote you was expected) took possession of Amelia Island, under Sir Gregor M'Gregor, their commander. Though they were in all about two hundred men on board the transport brig and schooner, (the only vessels that were engaged in this service) yet Amelia was taken by the small force of sixty-five or seventy men. The commander landed with the small party from the brig that came to anchor between the point of Cumberland and Amelia, at Amelia beach, immediately opposite to the vessels, from whence they marched to Fernandina, a distance of five or six miles. Fernandina, the name of the town on Amelia Island, is defended by a fort, a fort mounting seven carriage guns, six of them long eighteens—and by two block houses in the rear which commanded the only way by which an enemy can approach; and when it was taken there were at least forty men in the place under arms. The garrison were obliged to cross a creek in which every man was up to his waist in mud, and which was immediately under the fire of the block houses, through they might have been cut to pieces, yet not a single gun was fired. Such was the panic of the people, that when they did not even discharge their guns before they surrendered. I have been down to Amelia to view the new order of things, that place from which I now write from St. Mary's, where I had the pleasure of seeing the Patriotic General Sir Gregor M'Gregor. He appears to be about 32 years of age, his height is about 5 feet 8 inches, and he is somewhat inclined to corpulence.—His appearance is such, that in case he was to serve in ordinary life, with ordinary people, one would still fancy there was something uncommon about him. A fine bay horse awaited for Florida, the field of which is white with a blue cross. I wish it was in my power to send you copies of the proclamations which have been issued, but I cannot obtain them; the purport of the first was, as I understand, to endeavor to establish some discipline, amongst the motley crew of soldiers, &c. which at present there is very little, and induce them by bounties to enter the service for a certain time. The second was the establishment of a royalist government, that the Royalists had not looked for us here, but at Tampico, whose army, had their principal dispose the force.

The 22d, the General departed on foot with his troops, amidst acclamations and rejoicing. The vanguard, under orders of Major Sturdis, was headed during its march by a party of royalist cavalry, commanded by Lieut. Col. Garza, who did not dare to make the least demonstration. This man had made the people about Soto la Marina, believe that we were going to burn their houses, devastate their fields, lame the men and violate the women.—Thus the greater part of the inhabitants had abandoned the hamlet, and sought shelter in the woods.

Mr. ADAMS being daily expected in this country, to take upon himself the duties of Secretary of State, conjecture is busy with regard to the person who will succeed him at the court of St. James. The National Register appears to be of opinion, that Mr. PINKNEY will be transferred to the court of London, and Mr. RUSH, the present Attorney General, be appointed to St. Petersburgh. As, if the above arrangement should take place, the office of Attorney General will be vacant, it is also conjectured, and apparently with some grounds of probability, that Mr. WILLIAM JONES, Esq. the present United States' Attorney for the District of Columbia, will succeed to that office.

Distressing Fire at New-Southwold.

ST. JOHNS, (N. B.) June 24.

On Wednesday the 18th, between 11 and 12, A. M. a destructive Fire broke out at Carbonear, on the premises occupied by a widow named Hall, when a wind blew a heavy gale from the westward, which scattered the flaming fi ry brands in a shower over the town.—The Methodist Chapel, (nearly half a mile from the spot where it commenced) was in a few moments totally consumed—the Court House, Gaol, Barracks, lighting amongst shavings in the Church Yard—the Parsonage house providentially escaped.—From the Chapel the fire was carried half a mile further, and burned a house inhabited by Thomas Clark, at Crocker's Cove. In the mean time, 15 houses in the town were totally destroyed—the following persons have suffered by this calamity.—Mr. Kennedy whose loss is estimated at upwards of £2000—Mr. Thomas Barry, Mr. Donavan, N. IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE of COMMONS, May 12.

Catholic Question,—May 9.

Mr. Grattan, previous to submitting his motion, begged leave to say a few words on the Roman Catholic Claims, moved, "That the Petition of the Roman Catholics of Ireland, presented on the 24th of May, 1810, be read."

The Petition was read by the Clerk accordingly.

Mr. W. Elliot moved, "That the Petition of the Roman Catholics of England, presented on the 28th of May, 1810, be read."—Which was also done.

Mr. Grattan then rose and said—Having been applied to by the Roman Catholics of Ireland, to bring forward their petition to the House, I shall now proceed to discharge that duty. In performing it, Sir, it is not my intention at present to go into the merits of question. I shall entrust the indulgence of the House to a few observations, which I shall make on the subject. On a question of this sort, which has been so often discussed in this house, it would be monstrous presumption in me to expect the attention I heard twice in the course of one night: I shall, therefore, only request the indulgence of the House for my reply—and shall now trouble the House with a very few words. The resolution I intend to move is for a committee of the whole House, to take the petition into consideration. It is the same motion which was carried in 1810—and does nothing more than plead for a hearing. The petitioners, I believe, with a view to relieve the Catholics—to give every security to the Protestant establishment—and, ultimately, to impart satisfaction to the people of the empire.—(Hear!)—I say, ultimate satisfaction—because, as a question at this, the hope of giving immediate satisfaction to the people of Ireland, is, for the latter impossibility; and, therefore, the House will perceive, that I am not likely to trespass on its time by any long speech. Sir, I am not in favour of the measure, as it is a measure which I think would attach the Catholics more firmly to the Protestant establishment, and would attach the Protestant more firmly to the Catholic—but I am in favour of it, because I think it would be the only great measure by which the present unhappy state of Ireland could be remedied. With respect to safeguards, I think it is one, that there is none, when he preserves rights, which he considers inestimable, that ought to be withheld. Whatever safeguard you may require, you will receive. I will cheerfully protect your civil and religious privileges—I will cheerfully defend your Church property—

PITCAIRN'S ISLAND.

(Concluded from No. 30.)

The two vessels on his Majesty's ships accompanied them about two days, when they came distinctly, and a good seeting, and with expressions of their gratitude, they bade them adieu. It was a touching through the end, and were soon out of sight by John, a man between 60 and sixty years, who conducted them to his house. His wife accompanied him, a very old lady, blind with age. They were first struck with the visit was to apprehend him. But on being informed that they were perfectly ignorant of his existence, he was relieved from his anxiety.—Young ones amused that individual was all in all to the natives. It is impossible to describe the joy those poor people manifested, on seeing those whom they so pleased to consider as their benefactors. Tears, expressive of the most heartfelt gratitude, flowed down their cheeks; and the old man would have killed the fattest a hog for his visitors, but time would not allow them to partake of a hospitable feast.

The new colony now consisted of about forty-six persons, mostly grown up young people, besides a number of infants. The young men, all born on the island, were very athletic, and of the finest forms—their countenances open and pleasing, indicating much benevolence and goodness of heart; and the young women were the objects of particular admiration, tall, robust, and symmetrically formed, with a set of features pleasing and unruffled good humour, but wearing a modesty and bashfulness, that set off to advantage to the most virtuous nation on earth; while both, like young people, were ingider and benevolent, without a blemish in their whole composition, and the most wanked Europeans.

The clothing of the young females consisted of a piece of linen, resembling from the waist to the knees, and a mantle, a sort of shawl, thrown carelessly over the shoulders, and hanging as low as their ankles. The young men were dressed in a similar manner, but the mantle was generally divided thirdly as a protection against the sun and the weather, and it was frequently left off altogether; and when the upper part of the body was entirely exposed, and it not possible to conceive a more beautiful appearance than they exhibited. Their countenances wreath'd rays or bonnets for the head. Of the latter article, it is remarkable, that the first specimen of the sun; and though, as Captain Pitcairn observed, they were nearly half naked, when the Ontaheiian mutineers, on their arrival in London, would be delighted with the simplicity and neatness of their dress, and the taught genius."

Their modesty, assisted by a proper sense of religion and morality, instilled into their youthful minds by John Adams, has hitherto preserved them from the practice of every vice, chaste, are free from all kinds of debauchery. Adams assured his visitors, that since the mutineers's death, there had not been a single instance of any young female having committed, or even attempt at seduction on the part of the men.—They all behave while young in the unification of the present; when promoted to the rank of wife, was quantity of charcoal land and of stock to maintain it. Every one was allowed to have as many children as the consent of Adams, who unites them by a sort of marriage ceremony of his own.

The general harmony prevails in this little community; their only quarrels, and those rarely happened, being a trifling matter, and even these are quarrels of mouth "they are honest in their dealings, which consist of bartering different articles for mutual accommodation. Their inhabitations are extremely neat. The little village is situated in a valley, that extends from the sea to the upper end of which are occupied by the Patriarch, Adams, and his family. The dwelling-house of his old bread wife, and three daughters, from fifteen to eighteen years of age, and a boy of seven; a daughter of his wife by a former husband, and a son-in-law. On the opposite side of the valley is the dwelling of Christian and his family, and in the centre is a smooth pavilion lawn, on which the public worship is performed, so as to prevent the intrusion of the domestic quadrupeds.

All that can done was obviously undertaken in a settled plan, unlike to any thing to be met with in other islands. In their houses, which, they had a good deal of decent furniture, consisting of beds, bed-steads, tables, chairs, and cooking; they had also tables, and large chests to contain their valuables and clothing, which is neatly done by the elder Ontaheiian females. Adams's household of two women, and the two children had allotted to them at night. The younger part of the family slept in a house, in which each occupied with their brothers, under the direction of their common father, Adams, in the culture of the ground, which, from the fertility of the soil, produced fruit, yams, sweet potatoes, and turnips. They also have a variety of hogs and fowls, the whole abound with a species of wild hog, and the coast of the island with several kinds of good fish.

Their agricultural implements are made by themselves, from the iron-work of the ship Bounty, which, with great labour, they beat out into axes, hatchets, &c. This was not all. The good old man kept a regular journal, in which was entered the nature and quantity of work performed by each hand, what had been done the day, and what was done on account;—There was, it seems, likewise a private property, a sacred respect to each other, or of which articles were issued on account of the public property, and the community; and, for mutual accommodation, exchanges of one kind of provision for another were very frequent. Each of the first proselytes had a cabin and fruit for poultry, fish, &c.; also, when the stores of any one were low, or unluckily expended, a fresh supply was raised from another, or out of the common stock, to be repaid at a convenient season.—Here more invention; all which were carefully noted down in Adams's journal.

But what was most pleasing to the visitors, was the simple and unaffected manner in which they returned thanks to the Almighty for the many blessings they enjoyed. They never failed to say grace before and after meals, to say every morning and evening, and every Sunday attended the Lord's Prayer and the Church Service." "It was truly delightful," says Captain Pitcairn, "to see these poor people so well disposed to the worship of the only true God, and so ready to believe in the attributes of God, and to place their reliance on Divine goodness." The day on which the arrival was announced to the colony was the 28th September; but by John Adams's account, it was thought that the anniversary of their arrival on Sabbath by making it a day of rest and of worship—this was confirmed by the Bounty having proceeded the last on the Saturday, and not on Sunday having gone to the Westward; and that Captain Pitcairn's island, found to be one day reckoning, she also having approached it from the Eastward. Every one had a Bible, which, previous to Pitcairn's island, found a Copy of Good Hope, will find them a day after—the same which appeared there round Cape Horn, a day in advance, as was the case with Capt. Fodger, and Captain Sir T. Staines and Pipon.

To visit of the Topaz, in, of course a matter of extraordinary interest shown in Adams's mind. The first ship descried of the island, as was the 27th December, 1814; but as she did not approach the land, they could not make out to what nation she belonged. A second appeared more than after, but did not attempt to communicate with them. A third came sufficiently near to see the natives and their habitations, but did not attempt to send a boat on shore; which is the less surprising, considering the uniform ruggedness of the coast, the total want of shelter, and the almost constant and violent breaking of the sea against the cliffs. The good old man was anxious to know what was going on in the old world, and they had the pleasure of gratifying his curiosity, by supplying him with some magazines and a number of the Times. His library consisted of books that belonged to Admiral Bligh, but the visitors had not time to inspect them.

They inquired particularly after Fletcher Christian. This ill-fated, young man, it appears, was never happy after the mutiny and insensible to any enjoyment but that of the chase. He frequently sallied forth with his gun and dogs, and practised the very same kind of manœuvre towards his companions in guilt, which he had they so loudly complained of in their late commander. Disappointed in his endeavours to destroy himself by falling from a precipice, or throwing himself into the sea, he would most probably dreading a discovery, this deluded youth committed himself to the mercy of the waves, and thus put a period to his existence, by a manner similar to the same manner of his unfortunate friend.

The new colony now consisted of about forty-six persons, mostly grown up young people, besides a number of infants. The young men, all born on the island, were very athletic, and of the finest forms—their countenances open and pleasing, indicating much benevolence and goodness of heart; and the young women were the objects of particular admiration, tall, robust, and symmetrically formed, with a set of features pleasing and unruffled good humour, but wearing a modesty and bashfulness, that set off to advantage to the most virtuous nation on earth; while both, like young people, were ingider and benevolent, without a blemish in their whole composition, and the most wanked Europeans.

The horrid singularity of the facts we are going to relate, and the scarcity of the pamphlet in which the details are contained, excites the desire of giving the following narrative all the extent of which it is susceptible.

Mathew Lowat, shoemaker of Newcastle, offers an instance, extraordinary as it is deplorable, of the dreadful effects of an infantile melancholy, when excited to an enthusiastic excess. One of the first acts of this man's madness, was to destroy himself: as he had first prepared every thing necessary to dress up his wound, he effected his cure to successfully that no kind of accident or any other kind of consequence resulted therefrom. Not long after he pounded himself that God had ordered him to kill his wife and children, and from that moment his mind was constantly employed in the contemplation of his object, and his hands to procure all the instruments necessary for the purpose.

For upwards of two years he meditated in silence and retirement, on the means of executing his project. At last the fatal day arrived, and after a long interval, trophe happened at Yanker, in the month of May, 1805,) every thing had been previously prepared. Five knives were provided to insure the execution: Lowat placed on his head a crown of thorns, and stuck three or four thorns in the skin of his forehead; a wooden cross was then tied round his side and thigh, he covered the wound he had inflicted on himself, and

CINCINNATI, (Ohio) July 4.

Singular Arrival.—Arrived at this port on Monday morning last, (30th June) a small schooner-built boat of about 40 tons burthen, 20 days from Rome, on the Mohawk river, state of New-York! The boat was constructed by capt. Dean and four Indians—passengers, two squaws and an Indian boy. It was a handsome model, painted in neat style, with two masts, and sails, and was a very important thing.—They sailed hence on the afternoon of the same day for the Wabash; their avowed object is to enter lands on behalf of their tribe, and they mean to ascend the Wabash to its source, cross over with their boat to the Maumee, and return by the way of Lake Erie. The boat left Rome on the 1st of June, passed into Lake Oneario by way of Wood Creek, Oneida Lake, and Oswego river, and after navigating the greater part of the southern coast of that Lake, was conveyed round the falls of Niagara on wheels, eleven miles; then by the way of Buffalo, cross the end of Lake Erie to the mouth of Cataragus creek, and up it to a portage of eight miles and a half cross to the head waters of the Alleghany river. It arrived at this place, after passing two portages amounting to nineteen and a half miles! During this time they were detained nearly ten days by head winds and rains.

Indian News.—The Milledgeville Journal of the 4th, contains some interesting, on account of which it appears Gov. Mitchell has ordered out a considerable Militia force under General Lloyd. The General himself says, there has been misconduct on both sides, we see, indeed, assertions that the Indians have stolen horses, and there are other accounts that white men have murdered Indians! The extirpation of these miserable wretches is certain, and it is only a question how they have got lands, and blindly offered their white enemies pretexts for hostility.—Raleigh Minerva.

NEW-YORK, July 23.

The Dutch fleet consisting of one 84, and 5 frigates, sailed from Gibraltar for Holland, on the 10th of June. A Dutch frigate and sloop of war, were left at Gibraltar.

When the Martha sailed, all was quiet among the Barbary powers.

A great deal of injury had been sustained in Holland from inundations.

Markets glutted with American produce.—Flour was selling at $12—Tobacco, $10.

We have just received the following by the schr. Ellen, Nichols, from Martinique.

The expectation of sugar from Martinique in American bottoms, was probably lost the 1st of July. The quantity allowed to be exported, is said to have been shipped.

The brig Hunter, Rodman, of Providence, with freight for Philadelphia, was ordered out the 1st of July, in consequence it is said, of the Broker having declared several thousand hundreds of sugar less than was on board.—Bos. Dai. Adv.

It is said that there are forty thousand weavers in Prussia, who for want of employment are unable to furnish subsistence for their families.

The Typhus fever has prevailed to an alarming extent in Savoy.

The Corsortic Diet was again in session, but it was expected to adjourn, on the 1st of July, for some months.

It is said that the Russian Court will pass the next winter at Moscow.

The dispute between the King and the States of Wurtemburgh, relative to the constitution, is yet unsettled. On the 4th of June, the Assembly rejected the proposed constitution, Nays 67, Yeas 42. The minority presented an address to the king, expressing their approbation of the constitution.

The king immediately dissolved the assembly, and ordered the members to their homes; and on the day following issued a decree declaring that the constitution should go into effect, as soon as it should be approved by a majority of the people in the several villages.—Ib.

On the 20th May, there was a riot at Sens, (France) and three of the ringleaders had been tried, and sentenced to death. The National Guards refused to turn out to suppress the riot and the King, by a decree, instantly dissolved the battalion, and ordered a new one to be raised, from which all concerned in the riot and disobedience were excluded.

Mr. Yorke would not enter at large into the detail of his arguments, but would reduce the subject, on the present occasion, to a narrow compass. The Catholic Question had now arrived at a crisis, and the House was bound to decide upon it one way or another.—(Hear, hear.)—They were now called upon as Jurors to pronounce a verdict, and as a Juror he was ready to give one; but it was a special one, and possibly of a description which would please nobody. Whether his sentiments were too far, or not far enough, he must leave for others to determine; they were most certainly sincere. He had always conferred great influence as the great bar to the full consideration of this question; it was this that affected the safety of the Protestant Church and Establishment. When he last spoke on this subject, in 1813, the state of the country was very different from what it is now. The country was then engaged in a war with nearly all Europe, and that Europe under the control of France, a country to which, of all others, it was not safe to submit, but at the time a close prisoner and a vassal.

—The case was now different, and the Pope was an independent potentate, residing in the heart of his own dominions, open to consultation and competent to negotiate. When he spoke of the authority of the Pope, was he to be considered the opinion of the Holy See of any material importance in the arrangement of any important question, but he would appeal to it for the ratification of the arrangements made on the part of the Irish Catholics, when they have the Pope with them; and now that his Holiness was at the Vatican, there was every facility for opening such a negociation. The Catholics ought to be the state of the subject, so far as the communication with the Holy See was at issue. Now, as to ecclesiastical arrangements hinted at by the petitioners, if he understood them correctly, they were these:—In the first place the petitioners objected to any verbal alterations. but certainly with substantial accuracy, the form of the oath laid down in the Bill of 1813. If there were ready to abide by that oath, and the Pope to agree to it, so far as the oath went, he (Mr. Y.) was certainly satisfied with it. (Hear, hear.)—The second point was, the nomination of the Bishops. He never was one of those who had been a stickler for a Veto in one particular form. All the arrangements in this respect were such as made the Church purely national in its distribution of her offices. If a mutual good deal would be effected; if the Clergy would swear, for instance, not to transmit any name to the Pope for his approbation, but that of a loyal, good, and moral man. The mode of election should be fair and open, and in every part unobjectionable. If, then the Pope found himself not to concentrate any Prelate within these realms, except such as had been presented to him by the four Provinces of Ireland. If these arrangements were bona fide entered into between all parties (and he thought among fair and reasonable people there could be no additional objection in them,) much of the difficulty in the case would be cleared away. As to the oath to be taken by those in the Inferior Clergy, he saw no reason why it should be altered—it might remain there as in Scotland, and elsewhere. Now, as to the Veto in these times, there should be fairly and fully laid down by Parliament—and a clause should be appended to the Bill, declaring the regulations made therein if the Pope refused his assent to the conditions submitted to his consideration.

—The negotiation with the See of Rome should of course be conducted by the Government, and let the Noble Lord opposite (Lord Castlereagh) and the right Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Grattan) be appointed to hold the communication.

—Here the Right Hon. Gentleman (Mr. York) suggested that the Government ought to be also provided for allowing the Bulls and Papal rescripts which any pass between the Court of Rome and the Catholics of Ireland, subject to certain cases to the examination of Government. All these arrangements, however, could form no part of the Bill of June.

—The negotiation with the See of Rome should of course be conducted by the Government, and let the Noble Lord opposite (Lord Castlereagh) and the right Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Grattan) be appointed to hold the communication.

—Here the Right Hon. Gentleman (Mr. York) suggested that the Government ought to be also provided for allowing the Bulls and Papal rescripts which any pass between the Court of Rome and the Catholics of Ireland, subject in certain cases to the examination of Government. He contended that the Constitution of the country was essentially Protestant, which implied not alone a Protestant King, but a Protestant Parliament and a Protestant Ministry.—(Hear, hear.)—He would freely admit that this principle had a direct reference to the danger of danger which threatened the establishment, and that if there were no danger the should unquestionably be no disposition to coerce. Great as his difficulty was with respect to admitting Catholics to the efficient offices under the Crown, it rather increased than diminished. If the Roman Catholics of Ireland were like those of the same persuasion in other countries, he did not think he would not hesitate to admit them to a full participation of all offices; but with all respect to his Catholic countrymen, they were not like those of other countries. (A laugh.)—he was compelled to say, that the Roman Catholics of Ireland were the most bigoted in the world. They were much more so than those of Germany and France, although their scholastic literature ought, he feared, to be condemned. That of Ireland was essentially antistatic in the mode of considering the Protestant Church. He had said that every Roman Catholic Priest, who was ordained by a foreign Prelate, was ordained to be a heretic, and that every Roman Catholic Bishop appointed a confessor, who was authorized by a foreign Prelate to hear the confessions of heretics, but Protestants. It was not practice, however, prevailed in Ireland, for a confessor was never appointed but when the Bishop himself was labouring under some ecclesiastical bias from fulfilling his duties. There was only therefore a solitary instance in which either would prove the inconvenience of the honourable gentleman's statement. It would, however, be in the power of Government to adopt precautionary measures to prevent the appointment of such confessors. He would even go further, and say that if they were like the Roman Catholics of England, he would not find much objection to their admission. He could have no objection to see the Howards, and the Cliffords, and the Petres, and the Stourtons, and the Barnewalls, from the other side of the water, sitting in the House of Peers, but he feared to open the House of Commons to the Priests of Ireland. Their influence, especially amidstthe in the mode of considering the Protestant Church. He had said that every people rendered subject to the influence of fear, prejudice and passion, by the instrumentality of the Roman Catholic Priesthood

Mr. W. Bellew said, during the speech of the Hon. Member (Mr. Grattan) he had observed the considerable effect produced by the extracts read from a pamphlet, published by Doctor P. Q'Sullivan, for the reasons contained in which it would appear he had been rewarded with this work be proceeded to Rome, and had it bestowed by the unconditional favour of the Papal Court, whose sanction he obtained His Office, and the Memorial of the Protestant Palace, it had since been discovered, had through the intercepentation of Doctor Troy, Bishop, and his right honourable colleague, been induced to give an approbatior, or approval of its contents; Hear, hear! cries—Upon the discovery of its contents at Rome, Cardinal Litta immediately addressed Doctor Poynter here with the circumstances, and begged it to be understood, that the approval of the Memorial had been obtained surreptitiously, and by misrepresentation, which Doctor Grandolphy was immediately sent out to continue the deception of; Hear, hear, hear.)—The whole fabric, therefore, was built on the Honourable Member upon the contents and tendency of this work, fell to the ground. It was no longer authenticated or sanctioned by the Court of Rome. What had subsequently fallen from that hon. member only went to prove that the minds of the Catholic population had been so completely alienated in Ireland, that it would be better they should remain for ever in a state in which they were, than what they were to be subjected to. The Catholics had never been so much opposed to Parliament as at present. But he considered the object proposed to be considered with the authority of the people, as introducing the authority of a foreign power into the management of the Protestant Church, and those acknowledging another temporal and spiritual head, the most important offices of the state.

He objected to the insufficiency of the securities, which, he said, were to be taken unless taken to indictment those who were adverse to the claims of the body of Roman Catholics upon general principles, and regarded the admission of them into the Houses of Parliament as a measure of the most dangerous description.—(Order, order! Question.")

Lord Castlereagh said, he should trouble the house as short a time as possible upon a question on which no argument that had not been heard before could be said. He was induced by other circumstances to put his observations within a very narrow compass, for he was with considerable pain he regarded the constant repetition of a topic which should be set at rest for ever. There was no declaration in which he would more heartily then that of an Honourable Friend, that nothing could be more important to Parliament than its deliverance from such a question, and if the question could be released from its annual agitation with safety to the State, the house should be embraced which appeared most likely to cause so desirable an event. He by no means wished to be understood as inclined to advocate any principle containing a particle of danger to the Constitution. Whenever he supposed it was the case he would consider the best Houses of Parliament had done. and whether the proofs of confidence in the loyalty of the Catholics, which the house had given, was not a security that no danger could result from concession. He, for his part, conceived that nothing alarming was to be apprehended; but something should not then be kept hanging about the House as a circumstance of the most painful description. The great hope of the country at this moment was for peace, rest of conciliation and consequent confidence. This was not to be effected by the system of bribery and by doing away with all civil distinctions and disabilities. Hear, hear!)—Let the house be conciliative, concord, and harmony, the hon. the Catholic and Protestant bodies.—(Hear, hear!) The Catholic had then been accused of not the principles of toleration, professed and acted upon by the Protestant.—(Hear, hear!) This was not the question to which he had felt his duty called in the first instance, to draw the attention of the House. The dangers apprehended were not from various causes.—[Here the Hon. Member expressed his sorrow, as affected by the state of the house, that some time unable to proceed]—As I do not wish to trespass unnecessarily upon the ground of abstinent right. The Petitioners were deprived of the same body, yet their personal interests were the same. The Member might be the shades of difference in their sentiments, as to the mode of enjoyment, or consideration of their religious sentiments, in order to obtain political advantages. The Protestant and Catholic, too, are alike different parts of the same body; yet were they were not without a common interest. The Catholic, it was justly said, was Protestant; the State also Protestant; yet the Constitution made on the Protestant Petitioners existing in the common interest of this country, equally interested in the most splendid and beneficent acts of the present Prince Regent. Hear, hear!—As for his part, he had never been considered as the danger of the Protestant community; some had thought him the very reverse. yet he had endeavoured to the best of his power to avoid it, little cause to alarm the most timid in times succeeding the Reformation, during a short period to the Tudors.—Or during the reign of children Sovereigns, apprehension might very fairly have existed. Could it be said the security of a Protestant Accession; yet it was the interest of this country generally, and the true object of the first care of Parliament to provide, by all possible means, that the population of the Empire, from one end to the other, should be without cause of complaint, moving forth all in the same path of duty, in the spirit of cordial amity and affectionate brotherhood. Where was the wall they talked of Catholic concession, what did it consist in? It only meant that they had by means of certain legislative provisions the power to remove every effect on the Catholic mind, most beneficial and consonant to the interest of both Catholic and Protestant. Two centuries of experience had shewn that the expectation was unfounded, upon which the first laws had been passed, unanimously that the Catholic would oppose a persecuted church. The Legislature upheld them, by being restrictions on them, the foundation of their hostility, but they would only render them worse Catholics, and worse subjects. Was there anxiety to support the Protestant Ascendancy? they were to effect—not by an arbitrary, and property destitute of all authority—a proof of the power of the Protestant religion—Hear, hear!—This would, indeed, be a most unjustifiable act of all our principles.—Indeed as the Honorable Member, who had spoken last the Right Hon. Member, bending those who advocations had the power of conferring on the Catholics to effect a revolution in the order of things, he would ask, who would consider it? he were not, by such insinuation, poisoning the Catholic mind, and troubling the very elements of society.—(Hear!)—Was there another topic of discussion connected to the course of debate he considered unexpressible? It was not. It was absurd to think that in the present state of this country the establishment of the Penal Laws could afford any security to the Protestant Ascendancy

From Amelia Island.—We have seen several letters from St. Mary's and Amelia Island, received by yesterday's mail, which confirm the verbal accounts received here a few days since, from the same quarter, that the prospects of the Patriots are by no means so flattering as at first represented. Had M'Gregor pushed for St. Augustine, immediately on his arrival in Amelia, while the garrisons were panic struck and living before him, he might perhaps have gained possession of that fortress—but he has lost that opportunity by delay; and his followers are becoming dissatisfied; while the inhabitants of Florida are taking the alarm from the misconduct of his out-posts; and the planters are petitioning the officers of the American government on that frontier, for permission to bring their negroes into our territory for safety.

Extract of a letter dated Fernandina, July 2, 1817.

"I cannot form any opinion as to the future operations of the Patriots, they are at present limited to the Island. I fear they will fail in their laudable scheme; they have not the force. Every day we attend their occupation and march to St. Augustine. The Dons were panic struck. There is at present a revolution among the people under their flag. Extract of a letter dated Fernandina, July 2, 1817.

"I cannot form any opinion as to the future operations of the Patriots, they are at present limited to the Island. I fear they will fail in their laudable scheme; they have not the force. Every day we attend their occupation and march to St. Augustine. The Dons were panic struck. There is at present a revolution among the people under their flag. Some outrages have been committed by their out parties. Fifty Will a day forty to-day's of 31 slaves, seized 4 days ago. They were seized, tried, condemned and sold in that time. These proceedings injured the cause, and should they not receive large reinforcements, I fear they will have to abandon the place. The consequences of such an event are much to be dreaded."

From Nassau papers, by the sloop Brothers, July 5.

By the recent arrivals from Havanna, we learn with regret that the mortality has been great among the shipping, and that it still continues to be very sickly.

Another Spanish vessel with a cargo, and specie to the value of 16,000 dollars has been taken on her passage from Principe to this port.

"JERSEY POINT, (Geo.) July 19.

"There is hardly enough of floating matter here to make a letter, although Nassau is so near us. A few Spanish vessels appear to be confined to Amelia Island; if I am not deceived he will not benefit that province much. I see no means, either soldiers or money, that several have already quit him, and others are much dissatisfied. But I am not well-acquainted with secrets to form a correct idea of what he may be in expectation of this fall. He has been perfectly quiet as yet, with the exception of levying a few fees on shop keepers, tavern keepers, &c. &c."

"ST. MARY'S, July 19.

"I suppose you have heard the particulars of the capture of Amelia Island &c. Last evening the Patriots had a reinforcement of some say 100, others only 30 on, from Charleston, in a schr. of about 80 or 100 tons, by the name of Capt. Dixon.] They have been joined, as yet but by very few people who resids in Florida, though twenty have joined them from this place."

We understand that a company of U States troops, under the command of capt. Paine, will embark at this place in the course of a few days, for Point Petre, near St. Mary's, for the protection of that frontier.

We learn from captain Pond, of the schr. Eliza Tucker, arrived at Quarantine, some further particulars respecting the affairs of S. America. Capt. T. states that one division of the patriot troops which had joined the royalists, was commanded by Gen. Teran, in the province of Poubla. The cause of their defection is stated to have arisen from the dissension among the patriot officers,

HOUSE OF COMMONS, May 9.

General Mathew said he should not have risen at that late hour of the night, but for not the question asked by the Right Hon. Gentleman. He could answer that there was not a single Catholic now holding office, who had not taken the oath of allegiance. But when the Pope was appointed to any country, under the sanction of the government of that country, he was then considered in the light of a friend. It was true that they would take no step either forward or backward, without the sanction of the country. He allowed that, even if the measure was carried, it would not even then remove all the objections to the Catholic claims. But the question was, whether, by going so far they would not remove the greater objections—objections without danger to the establishment? If he was to see that the Protestant hazard of danger could result, he would agree that they ought to pause—but he could not even rather than risk such a danger; but before such a danger was incurred, that they might go with safety to the full extent of the measure now proposed, he was desirous to say, that they ought to go further—for he was sure that the Catholics would not be satisfied with the measure which crowns with the state of things which they would not rid of. He would take the measure of the Catholic claims from the hands of the committee the House was placed in a state of debate sufficiently full—but it was true that they would take no step either forward or backward, without the sanction of the country. He allowed that, even if the measure was carried, it would not even then remove all the objections to the Catholic claims. But the question was, whether, by going so far they would not remove the greater objections—objections without danger to the establishment? If he was to see that the Protestant hazard of danger could result, he would agree that they ought to pause—but he could not even rather than risk such a danger; but before such a danger was incurred, that they might go with safety to the full extent of the measure now proposed, he was desirous to say, that they ought to go further—for he was sure that the Catholics would not be satisfied with the measure which crowns with the state of things which they would not rid of. He would take the measure of the Catholic claims from the hands of their admission into Parliament. If such a measure was carried, he did not think that on no distant period they would not have a majority of the Catholics in the House. There were two classes of people who doubt objected to those who by their rank were entitled to the privilege of sitting in the House of Lords, and the majority of Catholic disabilities, to inflame the passions of the people, and to excite a jealousy of the Protestant Church. But, to open the doors of the House of Commons to such men as these, would be to nullify the whole theory of the British Constitution (Hear, hear.)—By bringing them there, they would have the responsibility to bear with the mischief. It is Right Honorable Friend could state that the measure would be attended with the system as it stood, he would say, let it remain. But if there was an uneasiness of disposition which is found to exist, he would say, let it remain no longer, because he could not do all that ought to be done. The Catholics would not accept the boon, if it had been stated, that they ought to be sure that they were to be admitted to another. But how could they be sure?—(Hear, hear.)—It was not by caution out of doors but by enactments within, that they were to be sure of their admission. If the Catholics would not accept the boon, still let Parliament consider its duty. And they would find that those whom Parliament generously conferred on commoners would be sure to enrol their names, sons, place of birth, &c. These would not be considered enemies of the religion, and would demand accordingly their charges.

Next follows an act of the Supreme Executive powers of the United States of Venezuela, may 19th, of the year 7, which alters a preceding regulation, the decree of which gives those its gratitude to Great Britain and the United States of America, for their liberal policy shown to emigrants of the republic, and for admitting her ships into their ports, and receiving her flag on the high seas, decrees that the Brit-h or North American manufactures, merchandize of any kind, imported into the country under the flags of those two nations "shall pay but six per cent. and two per cent less than is paid by others, which the merchants of other nations must." All produce of the country in which the United Colonies pay two more duty than is received of citizens. All arms and military stores are free of duty, as well as the private carriages purchased for them. This article is to extend during the war. Despatches and North American vessels to proceed from port to port of the republic without being charged with duty.—Cal-and subjects of those two countries who may settle in Venezuela are to be naturalized.

Then follows a battle-list, dated May 12, giving an account of a battle fought by Gen. Piar in Guiana, in which he claims to have routed the royalists, taken 1000 prisoners, including the adjutant General, gen of Guiana, & 17 officers.

Then follows a decree of the Executive power of the Sovereign Congress of Venezuela, shall be for the future, the duty of the Executive shall be The Responsible, that of the judiciary, that they could put in force the Gothic-law-list passed. The 25th of Nights was to be declared a festival. The 24th was declared the anniversary of the Independence of Venezuela. Those who deny that Catholics have a right to the privileges obtained by our Catholic ancestors, are Those who deny that Catholics have a right to the privileges obtained by our Catholic ancestors, are indeed. But you cannot take any persons oath, but that of the Church of England, in their sentence—they found their inheritance on the Protestant word of God.

First, they say that the Catholics are attempting to pass an oath which do not exist—and from this they draw their inference, that the Catholics are not to be admitted to that of the ancient republic of that name in Greece. The constitution given by the Respectable Executive Power for publication.

Miscellaneous.

The Vatican Pictures and Sculpture.

A "true born Englishman" has an idea of the ardent enthusiasm of the Italians, in their veneration for the productions of ancient art. Many persons went from Rome to Civita Vecchia, a distance of fifty miles, to hail the arrival of the English ship, which brought their celebrated pictures and statues from Antwerp, whither they had been sent from Paris. The venerable cardinal Gonsalvi, the Roman secretary of state, was sent by his holiness for the same purpose, and on his arrival on board, accompanied by the governor of Civita Vecchia, and other distinguished persons, made a salute from the ship, which was returned by the fort. Till that auspicious day the weather had been very boisterous, but on the first case being hoisted from the ship, containing the magnificent colossal statue called the Nile, a salute of fifteen guns was fired from the fort, and the sea became instantly calm! It was remarked that the moment the Nile appeared on the deck, the wind abated, and when it landed, a French schooner which had lost entered the harbor got aground!—Such were the observations which the superstition of the people passed on the influence of the gods of the Nile, and they were confirmed by the opinion of the cardinal! His eminence, by command of the pope, invited the captain and principal officers to visit Rome, where they were received and treated with every mark of respect at the pontifical nest, who presented each of the officers with a casket of jewels; he ordered rings to be given to the petty officers, and a silver medal to each of the seamen, with 400 scudis in money, to be distributed among them.

After landing the precious cargo, which occupied four days, the captain gave a ball to the ladies, on board. Many of them had come from Rome, but the gods were not so propitious to them as they had been to the Nile—the sea became rough, and but few ventured to quit its shore—but those who did, joined in the dance, and were not a little amused with Jack's active and strenuous efforts in waltzing. The governor obligingly furnished the band of music which consisted of three violins, two flutes, one clarionet, and four guitars. A Roman lady, with great sang froid, asked the captain if the English did not generally use large ships, which question the captain very characteristically answered by putting Steel's List of the British Navy into her hands.

On quitting the ship sailors gave three cheers to the ladies, very much to their astonishment. From Civita Vecchia they proceeded to Leghorn, where the cases containing the caskets, &c. for the Prince Regent were embarked.—The ex-empress Maria Louisa, being then at Leghorn, went to the roads in a pinnace to view the English ship, but did not go on board. On her return being announced, all hands crowded to the side, and generously saluted her with 3 cheers in the English style, which her royal highness acknowledged by standing up, and treating Jack with 3 of her best courtsies!

During the time the ships remained at Civita Vecchia, they were abundantly supplied with fresh provisions, wines, fruit and vegetables by the governor, and the captain and officers were every where received with high favours by all ranks, from their arrival until their departure.

M. Mesmer, of Berlin, who has been employed in making models for the porcelain manufactory, has discovered it is said, the process of converting mahogany saw-dust into a soft paste, which becomes hard and solid by exposure to the atmosphere, and is susceptible of receiving and preserving the forms given to marble, to wood, or to bronze.—This substance takes the most beautiful gilding as well as the colour of bronze. The product of this manufactury are, candelabras, lustres, lamps, vases, statues and ornaments for all kinds of furniture. These objects rival in elegance the most beautiful works in bronze, and cost only the eighth part of the price.

The following account is from a Bengal paper. "A very interesting case has just occurred of a person, born blind, being restored to sight by means of a surgical operation.—A native of Burdwan, of the age of 18, was lately sent by his family to Dr. Farconer, whose success in the removal of the Cataract they had heard by public report. The operation was performed on the 26th May, and in six days he began to see and distinguish objects. He confirmed, with readiness, the conclusion so obvious, from the feelings of Dr Cheselden's patients, that our common judgment of figure, quantity and distance is not an inherent faculty in the mind, but a practical result, from the oft-repeated experiment of comparing the perspective with the actual figure, bulk or distance. For a cricket-ball was put in one hand, and a cake of soap in the other, and he was desired to describe their shape; he was unable to do it by his newly acquired and inexperienced vision, and was obliged to have constant recourse to the more practised sense of feeling. When any object is presented to him, although he can without hesitation declare its colour, he is wholly unable to decide on its quality until he his allowedto handle it."

Among the extraordinary instances which have occurred, of living animals being deeply buried in solid substances, where they had apparently existed for ages, the following is one of the most singular.

Two coalmen, working in a coal pit belonging to Viscount Dudley and Ward, in the Parish of Tipton, in the county of Stafford, in clearing or breaking up a stratum of coal called the stone coal, about four feet thick, and lying about fifty yards from the surface of the earth discovered a living reptile of the snake or adder kind, lying coiled up in a small coil within the said solid coal, which might be about twenty tons weight. When first discovered the reptile moved, and soon afterwards crept out of the hole it had eaten for itself, and lived, died in about ten minutes. The thickness and solidity of the coal, must have kept it entirely from the air. The hole, how place in which it lay was split by means of an iron wedge, and was rather moist at the bottom, but without water. The cell was about the size of a common tea-saucer, and the snake was about nine inches long, of a dark or darkish ugly color, and a little speckled. The above facts were sworn to before a magistrate, March 3th, 1817.—N. Y. Advertiser.

Captain Manby's Intention.

During the gale, on Wednesday last, the Spanish brig Bilbaino, from London, bound to Bilboa, with a valuable cargo of merchandize, drove on shore over Rottingdean. Soon after she struck, the Agent for the use of capt. Manby's Invention attended with the apparatus, and a mortar was planted on the summit of the cliff, from which was discharged a barbed shot, with a rope attached thereto, coiled on a frame for the purpose, in the hope of lodging it somewhere about the vessel. The first shot failed in effect, but a second left the rope paying from her bowsh connected three violins, two flutes, one clarionet, and four guitars. A Roman lady, with great sang froid, asked the captain if the English did not generally use large ships, which question the captain very characteristically answered by putting Steel's List of the British Navy into her hands.

Humorous Trial.—At the Quarter Sessions for Liverpool, Patrick Fitzsimmons was tried on Wednesday night, for stealing a watchman's great coat. It was proved the prisoner had, on the night of the 6th ult. broke open a watchman's box, and taken away the coat, which was found upon him about an hour afterwards. The prisoner, who, as his name imports, is a native of the sister kingdom, being called upon for his defence, placed himself in an oratorical position, and said, "May it please your honours,—I am accused of breaking into a watchman's box, and stealing away his coat; but I am perfectly innocent, and I'll tell you just how it happened:—I had been out drinking on the night they mention, and I had, to be sure, got mortally drunk, that I know is very wrong. About two o'clock in the morning, as I was going staggering home, I asked this here watchman, "Can you tell me where I can get a lodging, or where I can get something to drink?" "No," said he, "all the houses are shut up now; but in an hour and a half there will be a house open, where they sell capital purl, so step into my watch box, slip on my great coat, and make yourself any while I go my rounds, and when I come back we'll see what can be done." I did as he bid me; he locked the door, and in a moment I was asleep. Soon after I waked, and finding myself boxed up in this narrow cell, I could not dream where I was; so setting my feet against the door, I burst open the box, and walked out quite forgetting that I had on the watchman's coat. On my way up the street, I met two other watchmen, and asked them, "could I get any thing to drink?" —They told me there was a house hard by, where they sold rum at 6d. a glass. —I said, (saving your honor's presence) that was devilish dear; but I went in and they went with me. When the reckoning came to be paid, I happened to have no money; so one of the watchmen said to me, "How came you, Pat, by that great coat?" I said, "Sure, it is my own," not meaning to steal it, but intended only to keep myself warm with it until it was day-light. My companions, however, limited me away to Bridewell; and this, please your honors, is the whole truth. Is it likely that a man that has been 16 years in Liverpool, should be so foolish as to break open a watch box? Did not I know that there is generally in these places nothing but a broom and a shovel?—And how could I tell that the watchman himself was not in his box?"

This defence was delivered with great fluency and animation; and the recorder, in addressing the jury, said, that though this was the best speech he had heard for the last six months, yet he feared, that if they acquitted the prisoner, it must be rather for his ingenuity than his innocence. After a short deliberation, the jury returned a verdict of guilty; and the court sentenced Fitzsimmons to 14 days imprisonment.—Ibid.

Quackery.—It is a lamentable truth, that many people lose their lives by employing ignorant pretenders to the "healing art." The following statement of a recent occurrence in a neighbouring town is given in a letter from a friend to a gentleman in this town: The unfortunate had received a slight bruise on the shin, which in some way broke the skin; this was succeeded by inflammation & swelling. Four or five days after his bruise was received, the Apollo of Tamaworth and his College made an incision in the calf of the leg, five inches in length and three in depth with an expectation of finding matter! but found none! Horrid!! Ten or eleven days miserable existence closed the scene of the unfortunate.—Dover, N. H. paper.

INVERNESS, May 26.

A Highland Chieftain's Funeral.

The Chisholm's (Mr. Chisholm, of Chisholm,) funeral, which took place on the 15th inst. was conducted with a degree of splendor, which rivalled the pomp of ancient times in the last triumph of homage and respect to the remains of the deceased Chiefs. Invitations were very general throughout Inverness, and the neighboring counties, and nearly 240 guests sat down to a sumptuous entertainment provided at Beauly. Upwards of 100 gallons of Claret were drunk on this occasion! The commonality, of whom a very large assemblage were in attendance, had not been forgotten—bread and cheese in ample abundance, and 30 ankers of whiskey were distributed among them—and they made so very free, that a man and two women died of the effects of intoxication! Many battles with sticks, fists, and stones were fought and many cracked crowns were given and received—but beyond the foregoing melancholy instances, no further fatal effects ensued. Various depredations, were, however, committed—and among others, some of the riders discovered, next morning, that they had come home without their saddle flaps, the well dressed leather of which, it has been discovered, would make superior brogue soals.

In demand. †Dull. ‡Active. §Scarce. ||Nominal. (June) July 26, 1817.

Least notice to you a very sweet case of good furniture. Some years ago, the unfortunate Col. Aaron Burr, sold to John Jacob Astor, a certain property (at that time out of this city, N. York) and I believe his country-house) for the sum of $40,000, reserving the right of redemption if at any time within twenty years, by paying the principal and interest. One day in the early part of this week, Col. Burr tendered the money to Mr. Astor, and demanded his property, (now become inestimable) which Mr. Astor declined receiving. Col. Burr then demanded one hundred and fifty thousand dollars—Mr. Astor required three days to decide; and yesterday I had it from most unquestionable authority, that they had compromised by Mr. Astor's paying Col. Burr $100,000, in cash, by checks on the Bank of the United States."—Richmond Compiler.

REGULATIONS for the POLICE of the Town of YORK, in the Home District, made and ordained in adjourned Quarter Sessions, May 14th, 1817.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 22.

A part of the bills for public printed in this city, which, at the last session of congress were directed to be sold, were put up at the Capitol on Saturday last, one day, and went off at an average of 47 cents per square foot, which would amount for rather more than $20,000 an acre. The condemnation of such property on account of the enormous money to be paid down, and for the purchase of such as do not sell, within 2 years a bonus 25 by 50 feet, 8 stories high.

DREADFUL CONFLAGRATION.

The 9th of August, 1817, will be a melancholy day in the history of this place. The borough of York had to bear a conflagration of the most awful description. In 1802, the inhabitants were visited with a calamity of the same kind, but of much smaller dimensions. In that unfortunate conflagration there were generally within the space of a few hours, 67 buildings, 57 of which were dwellings, reduced to ashes. Fifteen years have been employed in rebuilding the ruins of that conflagration, and the borough has not yet become fully restored to its former prosperity. Large sheets of water poured from the firmament, in the most copious manner, during the latter part of the day of the 9th, would have been a blessing to the inhabitants of this borough, if they had descended in time to have prevented the conflagration which ravaged it. But the rain descended in vain, and was even accompanied with violent winds. In the space of about two hours, between 3 and 5 o'clock, in the afternoon, 119 buildings, including stables, workshops, kitchens, smoke houses, barns, sheds, and other outbuildings, were laid in ashes. Among the dwellings destroyed, were those of the Rev. Dr. Helmuth, Mr. Hay, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Gross, Mr. Hay, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Gross, Mr. Hay, Mr. Hoffman, Mr. Gross

Miscellaneous.

From a late English Paper.

A PLEASANT SONNET TO A SERIOUS CASE.

Would this suit you? "Twas a shell
Once of coloured spoils full!
This narrow cell, was Life's retreat:
This spacious room Thought's mysterious seat!
What boundless projects filled this spot
Which now affords of room but not
Nor Love, nor Joy, nor Hope, nor Fear,
Has left one trace or record here!

Beneath this mouldering canopy
Once shone the bright and busy eye—
But of not one of the dissect void
Of social woes that eye employ'd;
It with no useless fire is glazed,
But through the dew of kindness beam'd,
That eye shall be for ever bright,
When stars and suns have lost their light!

Here, in this silent cavern, hung
The ready, swift, and cordial tongue:
If falsehood's honey it disdain'd,
And where it could not praise, was chain'd;
It hold its Virtue's censer's sway,
Yet prairie Concord never broke;
That lipless tongue shall plead for then,
When death unveils eternity!

Say, did these fingers delve the mine,
Or with its envied rubies shine?
To hew the wood or turn the soil
Can nothing more avail or boast?
Rot if the price of Truth disparaged,
It ought to be the poorest bought.
Those hands a richer jewel shall unlock
And deck it with unfading wreaths of fame!

Reels it whether here or there
Those feet the path of duty tread?
If into the bowers of vice they stray,
Or sustain Jehovah's humble bed;
If Grandeur's guilty bribe they spurn'd,
And to the cottage of Affliction turn'd?
Those feet with angel's wings shall vie,
And tread the palaces of the sky!

Is bounded by Terra Firma on the south; by the mountains, or Cordelleras, the Andes, east; by Peru and Brazil west and north. It is about 1,400 miles in length, and 900 in breadth. It contains three millions of souls. Lima, or Los Reyes, and Los Charcas—Chief Towns—Callao, Payta, Lima, Cusco and Cuzco—Chief Ports—Produce.—Here are many gold mines not far from Lima; and silver too in profusion in the mountains of Peru, and quicksilver. The Northern part of Peru produces wine in great plenty. Sugar, cotton, and tobacco, with the finest bark are very productive here.

Commerce.—The merchants of Lima may be said to monopolize the whole trade of Peru, for their own account and others for others. Here all the produce of the Southern provinces are conveyed in order to be exchanged at the harbour of Lima for such articles as they receive from Europe and the East Indies, lead at the same harbour, and consequently of Spain, Europe, and America, are there bartered for each other. What there is to intercept or to receive in the Southern provinces on their own account, and lay up in warehouses, knowing that they must soon have an outlet for them. The Southern provinces are always sure of a commodious sale for whatever they have a commodious with almost all the provinces of Terra Firma. The inhabitants of Chaco are very industrious in manufacturing linen, cotton and paper cloth. Quito is famous for its manufactures of cotton, wool and flax.

Is bounded by Amazonia on the north; by Brazil on the east; by Patagonia on the south; and Terra St. Cruz west; 1,800 miles in length, and 1,400 in breadth. It contains 2,000,000 of souls.

Provinces.—Paraguay, Guaira, Uruguay, Tucuman, and Rio de la Plata—Chief Towns—Assumption, St. Jago, Cuyo, Circled Real, Los Reyes, St. Jago, Buenos Ayres.—Produce.—Here are many mines extremely fertile, and produces nature in great quantities; tobacco, and the valuable herb called Paraguay, which is carried to Peru, and has prodigious rich returns, in which are bred such kinds of cattle, that it is said that the Spaniards have not had the improperly bought, the natives being in a manner given into the bargain.

Buenos Ayres.—Buenos Ayres is the only place on the whole coast of Brazil to which ships can be navigated with almost perfect safety. The harbour of Buenos Ayres is very indifferent in manufacturing linen, cotton and paper cloth. Quito is famous for its manufactures of cotton, wool and flax.

The Provinces or Plantations of Chili and Peru situated on the Pacific Ocean, by far the most important regions of the southern continent, are not as well known here. Chili is between 15 and 2000 miles in length, and is fifty miles in breadth, and contains in one of the finest countries in the world, and is bounded on the south of the river Bobio, or what extend towards the Cordelleras. Their manners, which have a great resemblance to those of the aborigines of N. America, than to those of the Peruvians. their neighbours, under them more considerable and formidable. When they go to war, they carry nothing with them, and want neither tents nor magazines. The natives live from which they get their food and supply them with beans and turkies, as they are sure of finding in one place what they had in another, they willingly resign any country which they are unable to defend. All places are equally indifferent to them. Their troops being: on from all fatigue, and their provisions and ammunition march with agility. They expose their lives like men who set little value on them; and if they lose the field of battle, they are not at a loss for magazines and encampments wherever there is ground covered with fruits. They sometimes invite their neighbours to join them to attack the common enemy; and this they call throwing the war. Besides this call fire as swiftly and silently as an arrow over a neighbourhood to alarm it. A certain night is immediately fixed upon, in the dead of which the time they always choose for the commencement of hostilities, they fall upon the next village where there are Spaniards, and from these proceed to others. They murder all the inhabitants except the white women, whom they always carry off. Before the enemy has time to collect his forces, they all unite to one body. Such is the way, though more formidable from their numbers than from their discipline, is not devoid of attack on the posts that are most strongly fortified.—On this fiery ditto succeeds, because they are constantly supplied with reinforcements that they are not sensible of their losses. If these are so considerable as to oblige them to desist, they retire to the distance of a few leagues, and live or six days after, fall upon some other place.—These barbarians never think they are beaten unless they are surrounded. If they can take possession of a place difficult of access, they think they are invincible. Such is the way the Spaniard, which they carry off in triumph, comforts them for the death of 100 Indians. The country is of such considerable advantage, that they find themselves in danger from the enemy, they immediately retire into the mountains, and remove into some impenetrable forest. Recruited by the late losses, they return with fresh vigour, have been forced to give up all thoughts of extending their conquest, and reduced to defend their frontiers by means of proper distinctions.—These pensions are taken in present by the Indians, who have no occasion for them in the independent savages, and likewise to repel the hatreds of the latter under colonies. These pensions are disputed on the borders of the 8 Sea; they are parted from Peru by a desert that possesses equal length and breadth. Great fond race.—The great match against time was decided on Monday night, on Acton Bottom, and the powers of the pedestrain astonished the amateurs of that species of sport. Tom Cribb, the little known in London, was a soldier in the Devon militia, and he gave Old Time a specimen of his qualifications. His pedestrian feats, it is said, exhibited Barnes matched him for two hundred guineas with captain Barclay, to do 17 miles in 1h.0m.0s. which was performed by Cribb, having performed the distance on Finchley common a few weeks since in one hour and 53 minutes. In this match 500 guineas were depending on the event, and established it is not owing to the climate, which is one of the most delightful in the world, but to the vicinity of the Cordelieras gives it such a delightful temperature, as could not otherwise be expected in that latitude; for at most three nights days make the whole of their regular interval course of sleep. TERRA FIRMA, OR CASTILE DEL ORO

Is bounded by the North Sea and part of the Atlantic Ocean on the north; by Peru on the east and Darien on the west; by the country of the Amazons on the south. It is about 1,000 miles in length, and 700 in breadth. It contains 1,000,000 of souls.

Provinces.—Terra Firma Proper, or Darien, Carthagena, St. Martins, Rio de la Hacha, Venezuela, Comana, New Andalusia, Paria, New Granada, and Popayan.—Chief Towns—Porto Bello, Panama, Carthagena, Santa Martha, Venezuela, Comana, St. Thomas, Barcis, Truxillo, Angola, and Popayan.—Produce.—The soil of this country is rich and fruitful; the mountains contain the richest mines of gold, and almost the whole trade of Peru, Paraguay, Chili, and Buenos Ayres, is carried on through it.

Commerce.—The commerce of this country is carried on from the ports of Panama, Carthagena, and Porto Bello; which are three of the most considerable cities in America, Indian, and European commerce of the Spanish dominions.

CHILI.

Chili, an extensive country of South America, extending from Peru on the north, to the country of Patagonia on the south; bounded on the east by limitless deserts, which divide it from Paraguay, and other parts of La Plata, and on the west by the Pacific Ocean. The inhabitants of this rich and fertile part of the world, abundants of fine vast region to submit to their wise laws, and intended to subdue the whole, and they not meet with insuperable difficulty. The important project was resumed by the Spaniards at very long intervals, and with various success by others of Peru. In the beginning of 1535, Almagro, at the head of 500 Spaniards, and 1,500 Indians, and thought he had lost a great part of the soldiers who attended him in his expedition. He was received with the greatest marks of submission by the natives that had been formerly under the dominion of the empire, where he and all his days in an unfortunate manner. The Spaniards remained again in Chili in 1540, and fixed their leader, accused it without the least opposition. The inhabitants were gathered by the discovery, but as soon as the latter's end since they took up arms, and never laid them down for ten years. Some Indians, who had encouraged by the continual losses they sustained, at length submitted; but the real peace they found for their liberty, though they were generally defeated. Their arms irresistible remains on the inhabitants of Arauco and Tucapel, which lie south of the river Bobio, or what extend towards the Cordelieras. Their manners, which have a great resemblance to those of the aborigines of N. America, than to those of the Peruvians, their neighbours, under them more considerable and formidable. From Europe.

LONDON, June 28.

Saturday morning, the 32d Regt. under the command of Colonel Maitland, marched into Portsmouth, from Hilsea barracks, and embarked in the Leviathan (700 men) on board three transports, for Malta. The transports went out of harbour immediately. The 44th Regt. Cuk Cross, will embark for the same destination, so soon as the appointed transports are ready. The 1st batt. of the 52th and 54th of the Line are to return home from the Mediterranean.

June 29.

Since the Minister has brought forward his budget the Funds have experienced a rapid rise, and the three per cents. are now at 76 1-4. To-morrow bills close, though they are issued at an interest of 3 1-4 per cent. in place of 5 per cent. on selling at a premium of 10s. 6d. and 14s. The capital of the country, which was formerly absorbed in loans, to support the war expenditure, is now employed in commerce, and in the present stagnation of trade there is no channel in which it can find employment so safely and profitably. It is naturally invested, therefore, in funds of prosperity, for which there is an increasing demand. Were it not for the Sinking Fund, our country would be at all stagnation as if the funds were paid off—the small duty abolished—and the price at which they are formerly bore previous to the war of 1793.

The Paris papers contain a Proclamation issued by the Portuguese Regency, relative to the treasonable conspiracy lately discovered at Lisbon. As more or proper investigations have taken place, the list of the conspirators will be proportioned upon. Lisbon remains perfectly tranquil.

New York papers have been received to the end of May. Report says, that another attempt will be made by the Spanish Government in the United States, to negotiate a loan in that country; and, according to the New York papers, a period of American Bank stock will be transferred, on such terms as to yield a liberal profit.

The last experienced in Liverpool the beginning of last week, has been a most severe visit to the country. In that place on Monday forenoon the wind blew tremendously—the storm stood at 66 degrees in the shade, and 100 in the sun. In London the same temperature was 80 and 90 in the shade, and 120 in the sun. It rained all afternoon. At Bath on Sunday, the thermometer stood at 80 degrees in the shade, from 8 to 9 o'clock in the afternoon; and on Monday it was in the same state at 10 and 11 o'clock in the forenoon. This intense heat, we might be surprised, has been accompanied by thunder-storms in many parts of the country, but without doing any serious injury. In London the heat was felt in an unprecedented degree by horses; twelve fine coaching horses dropped down and fell. Saturday night's storm was tremendous.

It appears, signed by fifty manufacturers and others, of Preston, against the exportation of cotton twist, was forwarded on Saturday week to London, addressed to the Right Hon. Charles Arbuthnot Esq. Secretary to the Treasury, and Henry Hobhouse, Esq. M. P. for that town, to be laid before the House of Commons on its meeting.

A Physical Child, named Caroline, a relative of the Bourbon line, has been put to death at Constantinople, in consequence of the miracles he had performed. The Turkish authorities demanded his being delivered up in order to be punished; but it was refused by the Greeks. It is said, on this occasion, prolonged discussions between the Porte and the English Envoy.

BONAPARTE.

A letter from St. Helena states, among other occurrences, that the Corsican is greatly occupied at the present moment in writing a work entitled the life of Letters written on board the Northumberland, by the surgeon of that ship; and it is added, that the persons to whom these letters are equally interested. It is even said, to such a height has it reached, that the work is ere, that he has formally, through Bertrand, requested to Sir Hudson Lowe against the sacrilegious act, and has received a positive refusal. It is added, as to desire no person who may return to St. Helena will be permitted to publish any thing concerning him!

A letter from Venice, dated, June 11, says

"Contrary to all expectation, His Imperial Majesty of Austria has issued a decree, dated 10th of May last, which was published here on the 4th of June, prohibiting the introduction of Raw Foreign Iron and Steel, as well as all articles of whatever description manufactured of those materials. In consequence therefore, of this detrimental prohibition, I am compelled to request that my Commercial correspondence in Lodi which I ordered of your Agent on the 3d May last." We fear that this decree will be felt in our Iron working districts, where a return of work has lately been perceived.

Neglect and ruin of Churches.—In a late Liverpool paper, it is mentioned as a serious and remarkable fact, "that within the last seventy years, many of the finest ancient Churches in Great Britain, by the encroachment of time and neglect, have suddenly fallen down in utter ruin." In support of the truth of this remark, the Editor adds, "Of the Churches built in the reign of Queen Anne, fifty remain unimpaired."

Expensive undertaking.

A wonderful experiment was tried on Monday or tonight, at Plymouth. It had been resolved in contemplation to pull up a row of houses in one of the finest streets, and a part of the of 74 guns, was fixed on for the experiment. The Engineer Officers employed, and a party of sailors. The various apparatus being finished, the ship was warped in, and every precaution taken to prevent accidents and to secure the ultimate object, at 10 minutes after 8 o'clock the signal was given, and the ball was put in motion. This was obeyed with the utmost alacrity by "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull together." The immediate object began to advance on the place of destination, and in a short time, as the parishioners acted, and in the short period of forty one minutes from the time of first motion, a body weighing upwards of one thousand nine hundred and sixty-four tons, noticeably standing all the while on an inclined plane, moved by its weight, to its destined situation, without the slightest untoward event or failure. In a few days more the experiment is to be repeated, when it delights the mind—in the mighty operation, we may clearly perceive what is possible to be done by the Navy—in peace, and school and aids, and the public, in unison with them will come in for a share.

The following is a brief summary of the contents of our Buenos Ayres papers to May 24.

Auxiliary Army of Peru.—Bulletin No. 19, dated at the H. Q. in Presence, gives an account of the operations from March 20th to the above date. The royalists in Fejui commanded by Gen. Pezuela, with ammunition, and that the following day three would aid another, in which they were disappointed. As this is certain, it is equally so that the patriots have triumphed. It is likewise added, that the army which we had in Cochabamba, under the command of Urdanets, did not prefer into the action."

Extract of another letter from Curatoza, dated, 8th inst.

"By the Arequipa, who every one asserts, has departed from Margaritta for your port, from that source you must be on your guard, as the continuance of the installation of the government in Carinco.

"A confidential friend, who arrived here on the 30th ult. from Lima, in this month, mentions that the day before his sailing, the schooner of Mauegro had arrived there with the family of Colonel Valsen; all the property and effects, who stated to him the following ... That they sailed from Margaritta in company with eight other vessels, the principal of 2 large vessels and 13 smaller ones, for Guyana, which is affirmed from every quarter to be taken by the republicans, that the greater part of the royal officers and members of the government which had been established in Carinco and all the Carraquean families who were in that place, to a great quantity of ammunition, stores, &c. &c. and that the Margaritana were resolved to defend the island against the attack of them should be attacked, as under the Danish flag arrived at Laguara with a number of prisoners on board, who declared that a powerful young lady, who was sentenced to have both her hands taken off for having assisted in making a patriot flag.—*Bost. Sickness at Guadaloupe.

The sch. Richmond which arrived at Norfolk from Point Petre, Guadaloupe, reports that the sickness at that place had not in any measure abated. That many of the native inhabitants had died; that almost the whole of the troops in the fort at been swept off; and that many of the officers had been decided to perform the ordinary duties of the service. The decree remaining the importation of flour from the United States would expire on the 25th September, and the general impression was that it would not be renewed.

KINGSTON, (Jam.) July 1.

By the arrival of H. M. B. Beaver, on Friday last, we are put in possession of another proof of the gratitude of the beloved Ferdinand, who has ordered that the national vessels of Great Britain from entering the waters of his tottering colonial possessions, and has also imposed an additional duty on the manufactures of that nation, without whose aid, he would now be a state prisoner, or perhaps lay his head on the scaffold by embroidering a petticoat, or sawing wood at the foot of the Queen of the Angels.

CAFFRARIA.—It was stated in our last report, that many of the Caffres had retired to a greater distance from the Colonial settlements; and it was a strong desire that Messrs Shaw and Kay should visit them, and settle in their country.—The war between the colony and them having ceased, our brethren, with the permission of Government, commenced this great undertaking in April, 1816. After a difficult journey they crossed the Great Fish River, and were soon joined by a number of Caffres, who had been prepared for their coming by the instructions of Makanna, an extraordinary man, who had assumed the character of a Reformer. They were introduced to a chief named Kobus Congo, and afterwards to Makanna himself, who received them gladly. They then visited Tzatzo, father of the young chief who had formerly resided at Bethelsdorp, where he was converted, and who now accompanied them as a Missionary. Tzatzoo earnestly desired the visit, and a preacher in the Caffree language, and Mr. Williams, (an English Missionary,) to settle with him; but it was necessary first to visit Geika, the principal chief. He received them affectionately, assured them that the whole country was before them, and that they might settle where they pleased.

The chiefs of the country vied with each other in their efforts to induce the Missionaries to reside among them. Several of them remembered Dr. Vanderkemp, (whom they call Johanna,) and for whose memory they entertain a high veneration. One of the chiefs said, "You must not be afraid of us, though we are perverse, but often visit us." Geika lamented his neglect of the word formerly preached by Janknaun; but said that, if he who would have come to him to die in his time, had sent Janknaun's son, (for such they insist upon it Mr. Read is,) and now he declared that, if God would be pleased to spare him to see him, he would renounce the world, and give himself up wholly to Christ; adding, that if the Caffres refused to receive the Gospel, he would himself go and cleave to the Missionaries. He also desired that his thanks might be given to the Governor, to the King of England, for sending Missionaries to Caffraria.

GREEK HILL.—Mr. Read, who visited this place in search of a suitable situation for one of the widest and most uncultivated of the former, where he hoped to settle for some time himself, says—"On my arrival here I was much gratified with the appearance of things, so that instead of proceeding as I expected to Graaf Reynet, I determined to remain at Greek Hill. About three months ago God was pleased to pour out his Spirit on the people here, first among the Gorlams, and then among the pure Bushmen; several of whom, including a captain, have been baptized. A chief of the Gorlams informed us that once desolate spot, and the moral wilderness around it, were to become as the garden of the Lord. Mr. Read found that the intended settlement at Theopolis would not be immediately commenced, he proposed that the Missionary, Corver and Gregynon, who were intended for that place, should join him. Accordingly we removed almost three days journey in the way to Graaf Reynet. 100 Bushmen and Gorlams have already come and settled with us. Mr. Read rendered us essential service, and with his people assist them in building a house.—We take a delight in it," says Mr. Read. Let it be remembered, that in the Bushman's land there is not a single house.

HERMITAGE.—Formerly Rhinoster & Fountain. A letter from Mr. Read informs us he arrived here Sept. 21st, and judging it to be a spot for a missionary station, began to make some preparations for a residence. The Chief Captain of the Bushmen came near them; but at length the captain died, and the natives arrived and hastily went round the Missionaries.

Agricultural.

Abridgment of an article on making Butter &c. Communicated, by Mr. S. Howard. From the Sixteenth Report of the Bath and West of England Society for the encouragement of Agriculture.

The writer states that the Epping butter is known to be superior to any other kind, but he had not supposed a large team in the neighbourhood of Epping, and had likewise been a resident in Somersetshire; and in both counties the butter would procure him, in general, a halfpenny a pound more than the general market price.

The dairy, he says, house he would have kept in the neatest order, and it should never trust the south, south-east, or south-west; butter from a room preferred to windows, as they admit a more free circulation of air than glazed lights. To prevent their admitting too much cold air in winter, and the sun in summer, he would have a frame of the size of, or somewhat larger than the lattice, so as to slide backward and forward at pleasure, & guarded strained with wire to keep out flies, with oiled cap-paper pasted thereon, which will admit light and shut out the intense rays of the sun.

In summer, it is hardly possible to keep the dairy house too cool, and he would therefore have it situated near a good supply of current of water. It should be neatly paved either with red brick or smooth hard stones, and inlaid with a proper descent, so that no water may have a stop to prevent its passing off freely. The shelves

Among the many strange and unaccountable events which have occurred in or by the mighty and corpulent nation of Turkey of late, it is hardly possible to mention any more worthy of serious attention, than the unusually numerous visits, to foreign countries, the higher civilities of official life are invariably practised. A Tory North American politician, when a friendly visitor approaches their territories, performs the civil to the extravagance of an invitation to their chief, by putting the pipe of peace in the stranger's mouth, and inviting him in a most manly way to sit upon a clean blanket, while to most of the south sea islands, though they maintain a very high sense of respect, the most significant preliminary to a friendly interview, is usually adjusted by an easy contact of the noses of their guests, in exchange of salutes. What more than this can indeed be ——— when the subjects of both are really disposed to friendship, and what splendid ceremony of introduction can imagine a union of good will where enmity has already taken root? Let us however, devote this paper to a brief analysis of some of the most entertaining of these visits of ceremony, as detailed by travellers of character and talents in various parts of the world.

A Scotch gentleman by the name of Macgill, who journeyed into Turkey some time previous to the peace, had the opportunity of visiting a house by the introduction of the English ambassador at Pera, the palace of Beriberi, and the imperial residence in Constantinople. Having alighted from the ambassador's horses at the outside door, they proceeded on foot between the gates, passing by the place where criminals are decapitated and their heads exposed to the view of the spectators, and presently reached an inner gate, which often repeated, gratified them with a prospect of the activity and hardihood of his highness's janizaries, who, upon a concerted signal, rose in and around many thousands of the cafes or cakes placed upon the ground in regular order, surrounding further they engaged in the usual exercise of the sangfroid and arrived at the entrance of the divan, in which the ceremony was to be played to due form the presents brought for the purpose of securing his highness' audience; and afterwards viewed his stables, and the seraglio of Yese, who was seated upon an elevated cushion in the most magnificent manner, with his attendants and favorites in the most costly style. The Visit ended by some gentlemen of the long robe to be taken who after some time appeared in a genteel pocket containing his answer, which the Vizir, having first kissed, then delivered and foreigned, then kissed again, ventured with great caution to break open. On the contents of this packet proceeded, that the infidels should be fed, washed, and then admitted to the royal presence. And now began the ceremony of ceremony in real earnest. First was served up dinner consisting of large dishes of pilaw and tarps; then was served up a sumptuous feast of roasted and baked flesh and sweet-meats; then followed a dish of pickles; then a dish of sherbet; then were the ambassador's hands perfumed with rose water, and the wiping of the mouth performed capkin; and then again perfumed with rose and camphire. When the entertainment (in which neither knives, forks, nor spoons have been used, but instead of the latter a kind of bamboo shell with spoon at the end, which is to be long-bolted, the infidels were led into another apartment, and ushered with due form into the presence of them (the only number admitted to enter in Sultan's presence) were clothed with rich pelisses imported of their own country, and no person can obtain an audience except when properly dressed. They were conducted to the gate of the second court, guarded by eunuchs of the most brown appearance, and were respectively ushered with two attendants on each side, a paw upon each shoulder, to signify when we were to bend down to the ground, in order to prevent mistake in his presence." After crossing the court in this manner, they were brought before Achi'd the Turkish Emperor, who was seated on his throne, or "four-pound bed," with his boots, arms, and knee rich and splendid as ever, received them with his eyes steadfastly fixed upon the ground, and upon the ambassador to the humble speech which the ambassador delivered on his knees, that the bed ordered him like a tyrant, to be hoped would be in a state of good one."

Next in order may be considered the introduction of Lord Macartney to the Emperor of China. For several days previous to this splendid event, the chief of the Empire had been in discuss with the ambassador the comparative convenience of a regular system of etiquette, originally balancing in favor of his own, which on account of its antiquity, he said, had been the best calculated for going through with those gentlemen and prostrations which were never required with so many approved of before. Many knew were therefore expressed by him, that the ambassador's knee bending and head would prove a serious hindrance to the due performance of those ceremonies of respect; and upon the latter intimating a hope that the Emperor would be pleased to receive his homage in the form of British gravity, and kind to the throne of China, the hearts cat him short at once; by observing, that he supposed their throne in his court resembled nearly alike, and that in China, "the form was to kneel down upon both knees, and make three prostrations at each time of the head to the ground." A few days after, the ambassador got up the grave and solemn and their majesties' postures in the presence chamber, of his lodgings, and delivered his written opinion on the subject of etiquette, as expressing his willingness to comply, so far as might be consistent with the dignity of his office, but the duty he owed to the first monarch of the world would not enable it incumbent upon him to demand, that in order to show his respect that the etiquette of the Chinese court required, a person ought to kneel down, and touch the ground with his master's picture. The legate did not think proper to demand, but his colleagues of Pan-grain and Chan-lagen, expressed their hearty assent, and offered to go through with the ceremony immediately; but being desirous to add adequate authority for the purpose, the ambassador sent to civilly inform them that the ceremonies were ordered upon this very important subject, and many arguments were used on both sides, to induce it to a settlement, which when at length the legate informed him, that the minister had decided in favor of the English mode of presentation, excepting only, that instead of kneeling down upon both knees, and to the royal hand according to the custom of the English court, the ambassador should kneel upon his knees and touch the ground with his head; however, proved indisposed to kneeling upon one knee, the minister was finally induced to the necessity of yielding the point, with a promise that he should not attempt to take the Emperor's hands. To this the ambassador readily assented, observing with great minute, "remember I am a soldier, and not used to ceremonies, therefore, be kind enough to excuse any mistake."

The important day of presentation at length arrived. Proceeded, says the ambassador, "in great state with all my train of guards, grooms, &c. and George Staunton and Twenty to palanquins, and the officers and gentlemen of the suite on horseback—Drove rich embroidered velvet, I was the centre of the Order of the Bath with the collar, diamond badge, and a diamond star. Sir George was dressed in the civil embroidered velvet coat, and, being a doctor of laws in the University of Oxford, wore the habit of his degree, which is of scarlet silk, full and flowing.—Alighting at the Park gate, they proceeded to the superior encampment and residence of Ho-lin-gan, a favourite upstartsman, appointed to the superintendency of the ceremonies, which he wanted of dinner and music announced the Emperor's approach. Upon this they quitted the tent and advanced to meet the Emperor upon a green carpet; he was drawn in an ample palanquin covered by 16 bearers and attended by many officers bearing flags, standards, and implements of state, and received their compliments in the stipulated form, while the Chinese and Tartars from their tents and applauded the dignified ceremonies mixed with them on such occasions. The Emperor then ascended his throne and the ambassador approached to the foot of it and offered his presents, receiving with great seriousness in return a couple of white skins to be put on both of peace and prosperity. A little small talk then ensued when the ambassador and his suite made a respectful retreat, and the Emperor's guard and attendants were ordered from the presents brought for the purpose of securing his highness' audience; and afterwards viewed his stables, and the seraglio of Yese, who was seated upon an elevated cushion in the most magnificent manner, with his attendants and favorites in the most costly style. The Visit ended by some gentlemen of the long robe to be taken who after some time appeared in a genteel pocket containing his answer, which the Vizir, having first kissed, then delivered and foreigned, then kissed again, ventured with great caution to break open. PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE, the THIRD, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith.

To our Subjects and Faithful Lieutenants of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Subjects of the Province of Lower Canada, and to all whom it may concern, Greeting.

WHEREAS by an Act of the Parliament of this Province, passed in the Forty-second Year of His Majesty's Reign: And whereas, as well with reference to the Interests of His Majesty's Revenue in this Province, as to the convenience of Inspectors of Goods and Merchandize, and of Merchants and others His Majesty's Subjects resident in this Province, it hath been ascertained that there is immediate occasion for Three additional Ports or Places of Entry or Clearance, at the Places here-in-after described. Be it therefore known, That I, FRANCIS GORE, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor, in exercise of the power and authority vested in me by the said recited Act, and by and with the advice of the Executive Council of the said Province, Do hereby declare and appoint, That in addition to the Ports of Entry and Clearance, established by and under the authority of the said Act of the Parliament of this Province, passed in the Forty-first Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled "An Act for the further Security of His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, to and for the use of the Province, the like Duties on Goods and Merchandize imported from Great Britain and other places, and also from the United States, as are now paid

From Europe.

Prorogation of the British Parliament.

On Saturday, the 12th of July, the House of Lords was crowded at an early hour. Among the crowd were a number of Foreign Ambassadors, and many Ladies of rank and fashion. At 2 o'clock, the Lord Chancellor took his seat on the Woolsack, and in half an hour, his Royal Highness, the Prince Regent, entered the House and took his seat on the throne.—Shortly after, the Speaker of the House of Commons attended by the Members of that House, and attired for the first time in his state costume, entered the door, and stood at the Bar, and addressed to His Royal Highness the following Speech :—

"In obedience to your Royal Highness's command, I, as his Majesty's faithful Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, attend your Royal Highness with our last bill of Supply, at the close of a laborious Session. Anxiously concerned under the present public impression to which our consideration has been called, there are none that have more sincerely attended to our attention, than those which relate to the Finances and Internal State of the country. In confidently with your Royal Highness's recommendation at the commencement of the Session, we took such steps as seemed most judicious to insure a full and satisfactory investigation into the Public Income and Expenditure; that investigation has continued throughout the Session. From that investigation we trust that no branch of the Revenue has escaped my censure to be done; but we trust we are justified in the conviction, that in easing our exertions for the real interests of the people, no due vigilance, no supervision need be relaxed in the inviolable right of our constituents.

"Deeply sensible of what we owe to your Royal Highness for having directed the Estimates for the year before us at the commencement of the Session, with every reduction in the establishments consistent with the public safety, we have had the satisfaction to find that the supplies might be provided without the imposition of any additional burdens on the people; and we have the proud gratification to add, notwithstanding the unexampled and unparalleled exertions which this country has been called upon to make, and to support, and possesses which must necessarily be the consequence of such exertions, at no period of its history has more credit stood more unshaken, and maintain than at present.

"In considering, the internal state of the country it has been painful to us to contemplate the attempts which have been made to take advantage of the distress which exists among the people, to convert them to wicked and seditious purposes. Your Royal Highness's paternal wisdom has determined us to early suggest to such measures as might check the further progress of so dangerous an evil; and we have the delight of seeing that those measures which your Royal Highness has been graciously pleased to recommend with this view we have turned our attention to the encouragement of fisheries, by the means of profitable country meat for the poor, and more diligently (although the limits of the Session would not allow the completion of the inquiry to a full and minute inquiry into the state and effect of the Poor Laws), a question in which the wealth, the industry, and the morality of the nation are so deeply implicated.

"While we have learned from our first duty to adherence with unremitted solicitude upon the subjects of important inquiries which we have laid before our deliberations have not lost contact. Feeling as intimately connected, the best interests of the country with every thing that affects interest or concern to our ecclesiastical establishment; we have thought it our duty to add to the bill to be derived to the Public, and much of consequence to the Clergy, from the attention and consideration of the laws affecting spiritual persons.

"To Ireland our earnest attention has been directed in providing for the more deliberate investigation of the measures which may be made by the Grand Juries; a measure of most pressing importance over the whole of that part of the United Kingdom—a measure which we trust and hope will prove as salutary in practice, as it is unquestionably just in principle.

"These, sir, are the leading matters which were engrossed the labours of his Majesty's faithful Commons during the present Session, and have marked with that fidelity and zeal under which has characterized the Session, to which we have the conscious satisfaction to reflect, that having had great duties to perform, to the due discharge of those duties we have applied a most faithful and unbridgable attention.

"Sir, the last act is by my duty humbly to present to your Royal Highness, a "entitled "An Act for applying certain monies therein mentioned for the service of the year 1817 and for further appropriating the Supplies granted in this Session of Parliament," to which all humility, we pray his Majesty's Royal assent."

At the conclusion of this speech the Lord Chancellor received the Bill, to which, together with a Section Poll Regulation Bill, the Royal Assent was given.

His Royal Highness the Prince Regent then read the Speech, of which the following is a copy :—

"My Lords, and Gentlemen,

"I cannot close this Session of Parliament without renewing the expressions of my satisfaction at the continuance of his Majesty's lamented indisposition. The attention which you have applied yourselves to the consideration of the different subjects which I recommended to your attention at the commencement of the Session, demands my warmest acknowledgements; and I have no doubt that the favourable situation which is happily taking place in our internal situation, is to be mainly ascribed to the salutary measures which you have adopted for preserving the public tranquillity. It is to your steady support of my Government in those measures that I attribute the continuance of the public credit, the increase of the revenue, and the flourishing state of the country. Notwithstanding the arts and industry which have been too successfully exerted in some parts of the country to misrepresent the intentions of his Majesty's subjects, and stimulate them to acts of violence and outrage, I have had the great satisfaction of receiving the most decisive proofs of the loyalty and public spirit of the great body of the people; and the patience with which they have sustained the most severe temporary distress cannot be too highly commended. I am fully sensible of the confidence which you have manifested towards me, by the extraordinary powers which you have placed in my hands; the necessity which has called for them is to me matter of deep regret; and you may rely on my making a temperate but effectual use of them, for the protection and security of his subjects loyal subjects.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I thank you for the Supplies which you have granted to me; and for the laborious investigation which, at my recommendation, you have made into the state of the Income and Expenditure. It has given me the sincerest pleasure to find that your labours have enabled to provide for every branch of the public service, without any addition to the burdens of the people. The state of public credit affords a decided proof of the wisdom and expediency, under all the present circumstances, of those financial arrangements which you have adopted. I have every reason to believe that the actual receipts in the revenue is, in a great degree, to be ascribed to the unfavourable state of the country, and that I look forward with sanguine expectation to its gradual improvement.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"The measures which were in progress at the close of the last Session of Parliament, for forming a new Silver Coinage have been carried into execution in a manner which has given universal satisfaction; and the Recoinage of the copper, which has been sanctioned by parliament, a Gold Coinage of a new denomination has been provided for the convenience of the public, I continue to receive from Foreign powers the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition towards this country; and of their desire to preserve the general tranquillity. The prospect of an abundant harvest throughout a considerable part of the continent of Europe is highly agreeable and satisfactory. This happy dispensation of Providence cannot fail to mitigate, if not wholly to remove, the pressure under which the people of the nations of Europe have been suffering in the course of the last year; and I trust that we may look forward in consequence to an improvement in the commercial relations of this and of the other countries. I entertain all these views with confidence, and I rely

From the Boston (N. H.) Centinel, August 23.

We were promised this day an interesting letter on the subject of emigration; the perusal of which is recommended to all such as have formed high notions of the western country. Not less than 7 young men, of those who left this town alone, since last March, for Pennsylvania, Genesee, &c. have returned, well satisfied to remain even in this poor, despised state of New-Hampshire.

From the Portland Gazette.

We have been requested to publish the following letter, written by a citizen of the District of Maine, who had been induced by the flattering accounts given of the western states, to make a pilgrimage into that section of the country in pursuit of an earthly paradise, a land overflowing with milk and honey, (which certainly is not the case here;) but although he has reached far, undergone much fatigue, and parted with no small portion of his ready cash, he was never able to put his foot upon the object for territory, where such may be with out toil or labor, and after all, the plain reason of Brown's disappointment is, that there is no such country as was represented to him and thousands others. The fact is, that are advantages and disadvantages attending every section of the union, and whatever may be said about the western states, a man of industrious and correct habits may live as happily and enjoy as much happiness in this quarter of the country as in any other whatever.

BATH, July 30, 1817.

Sir—Your letter, under date of the 20th ult. I duly received; the information you request I will give you, as I believe it to be interesting to the people generally in this section of the country, to know more of the western country, to which so many of them are thinking of removing, before they do it themselves, they have expended sums of money, which may hereafter be inconvenient to them.

In the early part of the year 1816, I noticed advertisements in the papers, of lands to be sold in the state of Pennsylvania, by Thomas Merrill, jun. of Portland, representing the land to be of the very first quality.

I had heard so much said on the subject of the lands in the western country, that in September of the same year, I went to Portland, for the purpose of making further enquiry relating to the land advertised. Mr. Merrill, who appeared to be the agent for persons who resided in Pennsylvania, informed me that he would take me to the farm at that time unoccupied, and give me an order on one Shattuck, for lands in the counties of Erie, Crawford, Venango, or Warren, for the amount in lands at the same rate, as the lands were then selling for to others.

My farm having been appraised, I took an order from said Merrill, for one thousand dollars in land, provided the land should be found, in my estimation, to answer the description given of them; the deed of my farm was lodged in Escrow, to be delivered up, when I should obtain a title to the western lands.

Having thus far arranged my business, and with the order in my pocket, I proceeded on the twelfth day of April last, for the promised land. I took a water conveyance to New-York, and from thence proceeded by land to the interior of Pennsylvania to the lands which had been described to me, a distance of 410 miles from New-York, and about 200 miles from Philadelphia.

When I arrived near the lands, I was directed to a Mr. L. Potter, agent of Shattuck, who was absent; my request to him was to direct me to the best land they had, as much of what I had seen, was worth very little—From this man I received the following note—Mr. Adam Leiberer is requested to give the bearer (Mr. Wm. Brown,) such directions as will enable him to find the Joseph Dressner place, one hundred and fifty acres." This was described as one of their farms under good improvement—When I arrived at the place, I found an old log house that had been deserted four or five years, about twelve or fourteen acres of land, that was once partly cleared, but then grown up to bushes, so as to make it twice as expensive to clear as the other lands—the said such a house by farming could ever expect to live on it—the people in that quarter generally having a considerable proportion of their broad stuffs; the corn was universally destroyed the last year by the frost. For this land their price was six dollars the acre, and fourdollars for other lots on which there were no improvements, (as they called them.)

Having examined the lands until I was satisfied, I was convinced there was not on the tract, a lot of land that would give to a farmer a living, or that would be taken up by any settler in the District of Maine, even if it had been situated near the sea coast, where one half of the subsistence for a family could be drawn from the water.

I do not wish to be understood that there is no good land in the western country but I wish most explicitly to be understood to say that a sum much less than the annual interest of the sum necessary to purchase a good farm, or even bottom lands that would make a good one, would enable a person to live in New-England as well as any person could desire to do.

The best lands east of the mountain being from one hundred and fifty, to two hundred dollars the acre, and the same quality of land west of the mountains from one hundred to one hundred and fifty dollars the acre; the lands on the mountains which, those speculators are desirous to sell to the New-England people are rocky and mountainous, which never can or ought to be settled.

In having examined the lands in the back part of Pennsylvania, until I arrived within twenty miles of Lake Erie, and not finding any of a quality to make a farm, the price of which was within my means of purchase, I set out on my return with an intention of looking at a different section of country, determined if possible to be pleased, as I did not wish to be disappointed. I returned in the direction of Baltimore; the country through which I first passed was very similar to that which I had travelled over on my way to the interior; the bottom lands good, but the poor very hilly—the pine barren, rocky and mountainous lands low, but would starve the most industrious person that should be placed on them.

I arrived at Baltimore on the 3d of June, from whence I obtained a passage to this place by water, and although I have travelled more than one miles by land, and much further by water, and have spent a considerable sum of money, much more than I could well afford to do; still I consider myself a considerable gainer, as the farm I now own at this city I consider to be worth as much more than I formerly did, as still much exceed all my expenses.

I sincerely hope that those who contemplate removing to the western country, will hereafter take the precaution of visiting the country before they move their families, as it will spend them against distress; which would be harrowing up my feelings anew to describe, as in the whole course of my travels through the western country I never met a New-England settler, that did not regret his situation; and in almost every instance, and with tears in their eyes, declare their intention of returning if they could ever find themselves able so to do.

Some account of the recommendations in that interior country may not be perhaps uninteresting. As soon as I got to the immediate environs of Pittsburg, I noticed every few miles a log house, and frequently two and three had their names painted on them, as "Tavern," and that it took very much like our New-England taverns. To which the sweet keeper replied, "Looks like the New-England tavern when we first came here." Presently I noticed a sign, "Cheese for sale." To which the sweet keeper replied, "Looks like the New-England cheese;" and upon my inquiring of her if they got all their cheese from New-England? "Why no not perhaps in the world's set of people whose peculiarities are as strange noticed others, as are those of the western people—they gained those of New-England—they are well pleased to eat with their mouths, but they will not do this with the New-Englanders, as they eat them.

Unfortunately for New-England reputation, too large a portion of our sweet—of thieves have emigrated west. They have established characters for cheating, which the present inhabitants will not be likely either to forget or forgive. Among a thousand stories which they relate of New-England characters, I will only taste one. At the time when merino sheep were the rage every where, they represented a Yankee as travelling through the country, and discovering a common sheep in one town, bought him into the woods, and after cutting his hair with exciting tongs and combing it out, as their selling him at the next town as a merino, getting two and three hundred dollars for what cost four dollars only.

When I was in company with a considerable number of persons, I observed that in my opinion, the people did not live as well in that country as in New-England. They asked me in what particulars. I told them that the people of New-England generally had in their houses feather beds, that I had found very few in that section of the country—and that a New-England farmer, who was industrious and prudent, would generally keep his horse in clover. They told me, as to feather beds they preferred a bear's skin, and as to a farmer's keeping a horse and chaise, it was the greatest lie they ever heard told, as there was not a single case of the kind in the whole country.

Having been imposed upon and deceived myself by improper representations respecting the western country, my present object is to communicate the result of my enquiries, so that as few others may be deceived as possible; for which purpose, I shall be ready at all times to communicate such facts as cannot fail to satisfy the farmers of New-England, that the interior of this district, as a farming country, has a better population, the people more industrious, better instructed and much happier than those of any other section of the country through which I passed.

From Europe.

Corn Exchange, London July 28.

We have had little much to do this week in our market, but I cannot be sure of last week's arrivals remaining over, caused a large show of samples; but getting supplies from Essex and Kent, the former on this day week, but fell in higher than on Friday; ordinary dreary qualities were taken unwillingly to undertake. Barley, Beans and Oats are by per quarter higher than on last Monday, but not any sales of last advance.

LONDON, July 28.

Yesterday and this morning were received in Paris papers of Tuesday and Wednesday at Friday last. We find in some of the journals of the former day, the following paragraph:

"An English frigate has arrived at Leghorn, to take on board five millions of money. This sum is the amount of the reimbursement made to England by the king of Sardinia, for the expenses of the war."

According to letters from Spain, almost the whole of the Spanish cavalry, to the number of 2000, are now stated to assemble in Andalusia. It is added that they were about to embark, 3 or 400 at a time, for South America. Another article states, that 11 men are to be taken by ballot from each regiment of the line in Spain, and the whole force thus accruished, amounting to about 6000, is to be sent to South America.

Aug. 2.

Last night were received the Paris papers of Saturday last. They announce the departure of the Spanish Gen. Lacy, whose fate has excited so much interest. He was shot at 4 o' clock in the morning of the 24th inst. and immediately on his arrival in the island of Majorca.

The sale of Lord Cochrane's estate and effects at Holy hill, on Monday last, was quite numerously and respectably attended. The saws before the house, and the roads leading to it, were thronged with chariots, barouches and other carriages. The mansion and lands were knocked down to Mr. Haygarth, of Bath, at £10,220. The furniture, which was elegant, was sold at high prices.—Lord Cochrane was present, and publicly gave several biddings for the estate, till upwards of £10,000 had been offered.

Emigration.—The numerous emigrants from Ireland to the United States of America, are said to be regretting there is at this time three ships at one port in Ireland, about to sail, which would have been better, as these persons are determined to quit their native country, as they given them their passage out, free of expense, to British North America.

A very abundant harvest is expected throughout Germany.

Brest.—We have again the pleasure to announce a Reduction in the valuable article of provision. The Beef at Lent is now sold for 1. 2 1-2d. being less by three farthings per lb. last week. No doubt can remain of further reductions soon taking place from the abundant appearance in all crops of grain, and of which our correspondents from every part of the kingdom daily inform us.

Samples of New Wheat were yesterday offered for sale in Mark Lane; it looked remarkably fine, and met immediate purchasers.

July 31.

The news received from the continent of Europe, last week, is very important. Sweden continues to prohibit the importation, and even the use of all foreign articles. M. Bernadotte appears to imitate his ci-devant friend and master Napoleon, by issuing decrees similar to those of Berlin and Milan. From France, all accounts agree that the utmost tranquility prevails there.

Mr. Sadler, the younger, ascended in a balloon from the cavalry barracks in Hyde Park on the 22d, at seven minutes past one, P. M. and lauded about a mile and a half from Hedgeford, at 7 P. M. having crossed the Irish channel in five hours and 20 minutes.

In a late Dublin Evening Post, a Mr. Edward Ball advertises that he will exhibit after six days notice, for the sum of £300,000, a model of a Grand Perpetual Motion, now going in its rapid career, without the aid or assistance of wind or steam, springs, weights or balances, steam, wind, gravity, or any other visible assistance, and will continue in its rapid velocity as long as a body of any substance shall exist." This art, he observes, had hitherto defeated every attempt, but he achieved it at the first trial with a few minutes study and three hours labour.

A German female dwarf, seven and a half years old, and only one foot and eight inches high, has been recently exhibited on the frontiers of France. It is said that she sings and dances well, and answers most intelligently all questions put to her.

In the course of last week, 16,000 barrels of flour, 20,000 bushels, 3,000 bags and 1700 barrels of wheat, were imported into Liverpool from America.

An officer of the 33d regt. at St. Helena, writes as follows:

"Bonaparte allows no person to visit him but his own retinue, seldom walks, and never rides out; his billiard room is the only exercise he enjoys; he is more gallow (his natural complexion) than ever. When I first saw him, and more stooped. Long, I suppose, to the want of his usual exercise. Count Las Cases and son were sent off the island for endeavouring to forward privately some information to Europe. The attempt was extremely ingenious, done on satin, in hieroglyphics and other characters, and could not be deciphered without the aid of a microscope. This was made up into a waistcoat, and given to a boy, a native, lately a servant on his establishment, with instructions to present it to a correspondent in Europe, for which he was to receive a handsome reward. The lad informed his father of the secret."

A most munificent act is lately recorded of Earl Fitzwilliam, of Wentworth, Earl, during the late distress among his tenantry in Wicklow, Ireland, not only distributed large sums among them, but sent 30 tons of American flour, which were sold at Cork; rice and oatmeal were purchased for them also, to the amount of £20,000.

We can take upon ourselves confidently to declare, that the leading article in the Morning Chronicle of this day, asserting that every thing indicates that discussions of an important and security amicable nature, are now carrying on between the courts of London, Madrid and St. Petersburg, and the report on which the speculations of the Chronicle is founded, are utterly false.—Sun.

The following is the article alluded to:

"Every thing seems to indicate that there are very important and friendly and amicable discussions on the tapis at present between the cabinets of London, Madrid, and St. Petersburg. Report says, that Ferdinand has demanded an active assistance, by a marine force, to put an end to the depredations of the insurgent privateers, and that he offered the means of an armament for bringing back the revolted provinces of South America to subjection—that intermediation is most unlikely, and that it is now too late for neutrality. The revolution is now so far advanced, that without active aid in ships, men, and money, the whole of South America must be lost to the mother country; and that Spain cannot contemplate this evil without making elsewhere for assistance, if it be denied by England. She has applied, we hear by the Emperor Alexander, upon conditions with which Ferdinand says he must comply, and that he has agreed. He therefore must not be surprised if he shall learn that the two Californias and Mexico will be ceded to Russia in full sovereignty, in return for the aid in ships, seamen and troops, to reduce the insurgent Americans. Such is the rumour in circulation."

Whatever may be our sentiments respecting the struggles for independence in Spanish America, we shall neither countenance rebellion on the one hand, nor despotism on the other. Let it now ever Great Britain is in a state worthy with the several powers of Europe, it becomes her to be careful that no measures are adopted inconsistent with the amicable relations. The following facts are, therefore, particularly entitled to the notice of our rulers: A ship called the Hero, of 74 guns, is now in dock at Deptford, on board of which are upwards of 100 English officers, who are avowedly going to support the Independents in South America. There is no doubt, we assured, Agents for these Independents now in London and at Portsmouth, who are endeavouring to induce the crews of his majesty's ships to desert, and range under the banner of the Patriots. From France, all accounts agree that the utmost tranquility prevails there.

Mr. Sadler, the younger, ascended in a balloon from the cavalry barracks in Hyde Park on the 22d, at seven minutes past one, P. M. and lauded about a mile and a half from Hedgeford, at 7 P. M. having crossed the Irish channel in five hours and 20 minutes.

A proposal has been made in a letter addressed to a gentleman at Hull, to light up the whole of that town with the reflection of the blubber brought by the Greenland ships. The writer says there is not only unserviceable, but a nuisance to the neighbourhood. From a small part of this refuse, says the writer, I should, I doubt not, be able to light up the whole of Hull much better than it could be done by oil in the ordinary way, and at one-fourth of the expence, by preparing a gas from it which would excel in brilliance the gas obtained from coal, require less purification, and be less noxious. On this subject Mr. Humphry Davy, and Mr. Brande, and Mr. B. Emmett, has published some experiments which he made last summer.—By distilling various oils, previously mixed with dry sand or pulverized clay, he obtained at a temperature a little below ignition, a gas which appeared to be a mixture of carburetted and supercarburetted hydrogen gases. It produces a flame equality and often much more brilliant than coal gas; and gives out no smoke, smell or unpleasant vapour. It differed very little in quality whether obtained from mere refuse or good white sperm, almond or olive oil, or tallow. For the sake of an important a branch of our fisheries, which is threatened with serious danger by the general adoption of coal-gas for the purpose of illumination, we shall be greatly gratified to learn that the prospect of encouragement from that lordship is likely to be speedily realized.

Remarkable effects of Lime-water in extinguishing fire.—On Friday se'nnight at 4 in the morning, the saw mill adjoining Elliott's wharf, Bankside, London, was discovered to be on fire, and the same time threatened the safety of the whole neighbourhood, being close to a large timber yard, and to the Southwark gas-light premises. It deserved particular notice that the fire, though it speedily caught the premises as soon as it broke out, and which were entirely of wood, was confined to the spot by the immediate application of lime-water. No fire engines for the want of any other at the moment. The gas-light company had a large cistern of lime-water, for the purpose of purifying their gas. Wherever it fell on the burning materials it not only instantly extinguished the flame, but it was remarked that the smothered fire would again break out in the interval, would not again flame. In two hours all the danger was entirely over.

At a meeting of the Bath Literary & Philosophical Society, Dr. Wilkinson, of Lincoln, with tears of gratitude, for the communication, presented to the Society by Dr. Wollaston, relative to the theory of the diamond cutting glass, mentioned in the last number of the Philosophical Transactions, and which was read before the late Mr Coventry, where the diamond on glass had been so finely drawn, that the lines formed a series of squares so minute, that 25 millions of squares are equal to no more than one square inch!!

The celebrated Mineralogist, Werner, who lately died at Dresden, bequeathed his cabinet of Fossils his valuable collection of minerals estimated at 100,000 crowns.

An article, under the head of Palermo, June 21, states that a vessel from Melazzo, with orders to embark Ferdinand, and to be followed by a pirate vessel, and several of the crew and passengers were inhumanly murdered.—It also states, that several of the Spanish officers of another vessel, bound from Castellamare to Majorca, had been murdered by the crew.

Letters from Badenoh state, that the noted Jew Schadt, whose name has been prohibited from public religious worship, is dead in the Island of Java. A similar injunction has been addressed to the Archbishop of Batavia and lay preachers who accompany him.

The London Courier of July 28 mentions that the Duke of Kent, on the 25th inst. left Paris, and would take place of Chitty Heading in the Duke of Clarence's suite to be shipped to America for the Pen-sylvania Hospital.

A Paris Paper states that, in the latter part of June six persons were executed in the commune of Vouvre, in the department of L'Aveiron, where they attacked several of the inhabitants of Rodez, and murdered them in the most cruel manner. Four children have also been devoured by wolves in the department of Vienne.

Thirty workmen, on the 24th of July, commenced digging a place (on the South Downs at Brighton) 100 feet square and 10 deep) to lay the foundation of a column to be raised to the memory of Lord Nelson.

Arrest for Debt in France.—Persons who owe debts in any part of France is a complete security against arrests for debt in any part of England, will read with interest the following fact. Some time ago, an English Nobleman retired to France some time ago, in consequence of his pecuniary embarrassments, and met there by a Frenchman, M. Brunet, who had kept a hotel in Leicester square, to whom he owed a debt contracted in that country. The said keeper had made a considerable fortune there, and had returned to his native country on the purchase of considerable estates. The English nobleman was arrested on the 30th of February last, at the suit of the hotel-keeper for the debt contracted in England, and thrown into a dungeon at Calais. He remained there in France, among the lowest vagabonds imprisoned for all sorts of crimes, till the 15th inst. when he was ordered for his appearance to answer the suit. By the new law, no bail can be given without the consent of the party who sues, and the result that "le debiteur qui peut se promener ne paye pas" (the debtor who can walk about does not pay) is no longer the English place. The case has come before the Court of the District. The defendant pleaded that he was not to be arrested in England, and that therefore the Court had not jurisdiction. The Court over-ruled the plea that the question was, whether the debt was contracted. Sentence was given that the debt was contracted.

But the defendant pleaded secondly, that the plaintiff was owed a French debt, and that he made application to the British Government remonstrances which allowed him to proceed, and declared his desire of becoming a subject to the King of France and that by his letters of denization he had actually become one. These letters of denization were put in as proof. To this the answer was, that the British Government had not the power to withdraw the allegiance of its subjects, and declared Mr. Brunet to be still a French subject. The Court of the Seine Gentium was therefore [illegible] immured in the dungeon of the Conciergerie, at the suit of the hotel-keeper and Consul, as well as to the Consul of Calais, Chief of the Allied troops in France for interference. Some hope is held out to him that the next question to be tried will be, whether the Allied troops in France have been contracted in England, and that therefore the Court had no jurisdiction. Should this be decided in the affirmative, he will be relieved for his months or years. Should the decision be the reverse, which may be carried successively through the Courts, the prisoner remains in the common goal with felons and debtors, which is said to be a great hardship by every one but the party himself. It is said that the only inquiry should be—Is the claim a just one, or not? If the defendant has used Brunet's lodgings, eaten his mutton and drank his wine, he is liable to pay for them, in the course of ages, to behold from higher regions the manner the honour and the delight of the earth.

The Crown Prince also made in this year's home address to the King and to the Prince his son.

Sutherland, July 17.—The President of the Society of General Utility has received from Amsterdam fresh details respecting the calamitous state of the environs.

The city which is surrounded by water, and which has been the principal scene of the destruction of its resources by the fall of its mounds, dikes, and sluices, since the month of December last, no half of the inhabitants have been forced to undertake the other, cannot remain there. The streets are those floatings. The wretches have crowded by hundreds into a few houses, where they breathe an infectious atmosphere, and where they are devoured by the dead, the sick, and the women in child-bed. Those who have not been able to escape, are perishing with hunger; and that in 15 hundred houses, there is not found that of a single loaf of bread.

It is true, that the government has opened a number of them on the works of the Heider, but the number is insufficient for the most deplorable necessities. Even Amsterdam is not free from the contagion.

All the accounts from the various parts of Switzerland announce the horror and the distress caused by the inundations. Whole villages have carried off—houses torn from their foundations—bridges destroyed—and the fields laid waste. The Rhine continually overflows its banks. Basle, Schaffhausen, Zurich, Lucerne, Berne, Soleure, Munich Buchsee, &c. &c. are in the same situation. Berne, and Bienchatenau, in Burgundy, are threatened with the same misfortune. The number of persons who have perished is 4,450. All the harvests have been destroyed—and the cattle drowned.

At Basle the Rhine rose so much on the 6th, as to inundate the city as far as the 3d rank of the cathedral. Upwards of 2,000 houses are in ruins

Files of Newspapers.

There is no gl. ication so useful and agreeable, which can be obtained at a price so de ate, as a Newspaper. The sum of three dollars per annum (half-yearly),—the price of 2 bushels of wheat—the wheat ? To have a full sheet of paper handed to you every week, during a whole year—detailing all the most important events that happen in the world—stating to you the measures of your government—the conduct of your public functionaries—the movements of your armies and navy—useful discoveries—deaths and marriages—essays, political, moral and humorous—and poetry—advertisements! What a mass of matter for so trifling a sum?

But their usefulness in a family where are children, is particularly observable. Let one family take a paper, and not the be without one—let the children in every other partiality, have the same opportunities of education, and it may be distinctly observed, that those who have the clearest to see the paper are the most intelligent and improve most rapidly. Was a good newspaper established at its rest worth, it would be 20 instead of two dollars per year. It is almost equal to a school. All thousand facts useful and pleasing to know, are learned and treasured up, and the persons can tell you where they obtained them. There is scarcely an intelligent man of thirty-five, who cannot tell you all the material events of the French Revolution and the history of Bonaparte. Where was it learned? From the newspapers almost exclusively.

Suppose newspapers were struck out of existence—what a mass of thick darkness would rest upon us! Notwithstanding all the other sources of information mentioned to us, and the cost of printing books continued, we should still grope our way in comparative ignorance. And if newspapers are not sufficiently precious to be, they are nevertheless, worth half their first cost—to put up garden seeds for the women—to cut out patterns for the girls—to roll up tobacco for the men—to singe and wrap up papers for the lawyer—to light segars for the tavern keeper, or to make kites for the boys. Who then would not take a newspaper?—Miner's Fel.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

We copied some days ago from the North American Review, an article containing some interesting information relating to the Brazils and particularly Pernambuco, derived from natives of that country. Since that article was published, an interesting work upon that country by an English traveller, Henry Koster, has been published, which has been received here. This work gives a much more full view of this country, than any work that has before appeared.

Mr. Koster arrived in Pernambuco in 1809. The name of the Province, as of the other provinces of the Brazils, has become appropriated to that principal port, which was originally called Recife. The ancient seat of the Portuguhean government at Olinda, is at present unique in the northward of the Port, but both are now included in the town of Pernambuco. Recife contains 25,000 inhabitants.

The manners of the Pernambucans are rapidly improving, in consequence of their rapidly increasing wealth, and their intercourse with foreigners. Yet, certain refinements are still wanting. Two or three knives serve for a large dinner party, the guest cutting his meat upon the plate in small pieces and passing the knife round, and each one occasionally complimenting his friend with a piece picked out with his fingers. The card-table is occupied from morning to night. Religion is in great disrepute, on account of the profligate lives of the clergy. There are no book-sellers at Pernambuco, and until the late revolution there was no printing Press. Justice is very imperfectly administered, and punishments are very rare. White persons cannot be tried for capital offences at Pernambuco, but must be carried to Bahia.

Goiana, a town of 4 or 5,000 inhabitants, stands upon a river of the same name, seven leagues from the sea, and sixty miles from Recife. This is a flourishing town, and rapidly increases in size and wealth. Paraiba a town of 2 or 3,000 inhabitants, is about 40 miles further distant from Recife. This town is declining in importance, its trade having been in a great measure transferred to Pernambuco.

St. Luiz, or Maranhum is a town of 12,000 inhabitants, and although it has a dangerous harbor, it is flourishing. Its only exports are cotton and rice; of the former, 30,000 bags are annually shipped to England.

To the Editor of the L. & L. County Gaz.

Sir—As there has been much said on the subject of the loss sustained by the left division of the United States Army, in the campaign of 1814, on the Niagara frontier, commanded by Maj. Gen. Brown; and as much difference of opinion still exists in regard to the actual loss, I present you with the facts. The following list was taken from the adjutant-general's office at the time the returns were made out, and may be depended on as being correct, viz.

Battle of Chippewa, July 5, 1814.—One Colonel, three Captains, five subalterns, wounded; 1 seventy rank and file killed; two hundred and forty do. wounded. Total killed, wounded and missing—338.

Battle at Bridgewater, July 25.—One major, 6 captains, 5 subalterns killed; one maj-gen. 1 brigadier gen. 1 colonel 4 majors, 7 captains, 18 subalterns, wounded; 160 rank and file killed; 517 wounded. Total killed, wounded and missing—837.

First battle at Fort Erie, Aug. 15.—One captain, 1 subaltern, killed; one captain, 5 subalterns, wounded; 15 rank and file killed, 40 do. wounded.—Total killed, wounded and missing, 54.

Second Battle at Erie.—One brigadier general, two colonels, 4 captains, 4 subalterns killed; 1 brigadier general, one colonel, one major, 4 captains, 16 subalterns, wounded; 70 rank and file killed, 189 wounded. Total killed, wounded and missing, 509.

During the siege by commands &c.—One Colonel, one Major, 2 captains, 3 subalterns killed; two majors, one captain, 9 subalterns, wounded; 96 rank and file killed, 256 do. wounded. Total killed, wounded and missing—380.

Absent 110 subalterns and soldiers were killed, wounded, or taken prisoners in their several marches from place to place, after the army crossed into Canada. The siege at Fort Erie lasted 46 days; 900 rank and file were reported sick and either sent to the regimental infirmaries, or to the general hospital during this period.

Total in officers kill'd & wounded 124
do. rank and file ——— 1790
Taken prisoners, sick & deserted, 646

GREY PAPER

From Europe.

LONDON, July 28

We would call the attention of our readers to a very important document which appears in another part of our paper; we mean the proposals and resolutions relative to the royal navy, which have been made by the board of Admiralty, and sanctioned by the privy council. There is one part of them in particular, which every Englishman must regard with satisfaction. After the long and glorious career of victory which we have introduced the existing anomaly of rating ships at a certain number of guns, while their real compliment exceeded that nominal number by one half, with a just and patriotic feeling, makes the following observation, "We trust we shall be excused for observing to our Royal Highness, that it is wholly unworthy the character of the royal navy of this kingdom, to maintain this system, which, though introduced without any design of deception, yet may give occasion to foreign nations to accuse us of misrepresentation : when we state that a British frigate of 38 guns has taken a foreign frigate of 44 guns, when, in fact, the British frigate was of equal, if not superior force." It should be remembered, that though the Leander, with respect to us, arose from the love of time, and the change of circumstances, has practically acted against us by the Americans, in the late war, as a paltry deception. A proof of this appears in the document now before the public. The ship Cyane, which took the American ship President and 50 guns mounted on the day of her capture, though she was rated at only 44. The British navy, this paper says, will no longer continue, for it is now ordered that the rule which prevailed prior to 1793 shall be revived, and in future all his majesty's ships will be rated with that number of guns and carronades which they actually carry on their decks, quarter decks, and forecastles. We greatly rejoice in this regulation, for the navy of England stands upon a basis too broad and unshakable, to require the aid of such paltry deceptions as the nominee went them as palliations for defeat, and she should disdain them as blots which tarnish her conquests.

The Paris papers lately mention the execution of a young man at Lyons, charged as a principal in the recent assassination of a chief of police. The following particulars respecting him, are given in the Bath Herald :—

"A gentleman, who was an eye witness of the affair, has related to us the following particulars of the apprehension of the young man who was executed last week in Lyons, for political practices, and died with such audacious boldness. It appears that he had acted as secretary to the Ultra Reforming Society in that city, and when the plot was discovered, a considerable reward was offered for his apprehension ; he, however, succeeded in effectually screening himself from the Argus-eyed police, when the young secretary took his passage, under a feigned name, in the diligence from Paris to Lyons, where (in which our informant was a passenger).

He had got safely on board, and the stage was under weigh ; but in less than a quarter of an hour was hailed to arrest her course, by a boat rowed with great velocity, and filled with gens d'armes ; he was not alongside the vessel, and asked if Mr. — was on board ; and on being answered in the negative, they ascended the sloop and proceeded to examine the passengers, comparing their persons with a minute printed description of the young revolutionist. He was not among them ; they searched the vessel overboard, and was instantly followed by one of the officers—they both swam well, but the young refugee finding himself likely to become a prize, gave himself up to desperation—turned round on his pursuer, smiled contemptuously on him, folded his arms and sunk, as if resolved to perish rather than rise no more. The officer, however, was not thus to be deprived of his anticipated reward ; he dived after him, but without effect ; a second time he dived without more success, but on a third effort, he was seen to rise grasping his devoted victim. He brought him to the vessel, where means for restoring animation were successfully applied. The young fellow was then prepared, and he was taken to be shot, tried, found guilty, and executed.

Government having adopted the resolution of fitting out armed vessels for the protection of the trade of England against acts of piracy similar to those which have been committed by persons having the South American flag, the ships of war, appointed to this necessary service, will be shortly ready to sail.—Their first destination is supposed to be the Rio de la Plata.

A Beacon is erecting on Car Rock, at the entrance of the Frith of Forth, and a bell is to be continually tolled by clock-work, which is to be wound up by the rising of the tide.

The Danish Government is making extraordinary exertions for the re-establishment of its navy. A new ship of the line is being launched, two more frigates are finished, and two brigs, recently constructed, are stationed in the Cattegat.

A letter from Genoa, July 23, says—"We have lately had an Am. 22 gun sloop-of-war here, which went to Tunis and returned to her squadron at Leghorn, without taking pratique here."

The Volage, 22, is come home to be paid off.—She is the only ship in commission on the War Establishment. She was twice nearly wrecked in the Chinese seas ; she was blown down in consequence, at Batavia, and lay five months under repair, by her own ship's company. She has been five years from England, and only 23 of her original crew are arrived in her.

A boat of the British frigate Tripolitania, was upset in Columbo river, in January last, by which 7 persons lost their lives, viz. three Ensigns of the 73d regt. Lt. Sanders, of the 58th, a seaman and a boy.—The remainder (7 in number,) got safe on shore.—A party of officers of the 73d, and 8 men, on board to dine, and were on their return in the evening.

Joseph Bonaparte has purchased of Stephen Sayer, Esq. formerly Sheriff of London, his elegant mansion at Bordentown, on the Jersey side of the Delaware, which he is re-building in the Italian style. His income is about £6000 per annum—and he lives very unostentatiously in his library and in retirement.

Richard Soaped, a scaveiman, in Plymouth dock-yard, has been rewarded by the Navy Board, with the sum of 20 guineas, for his ingenuity in inventing a method of stopping leaks or shot holes under water. The Board have also directed that he shall receive promotion.

By a recent order from the Admiralty, there is now placed in Plymouth dock-yard, a machine, in all respects similar to a part of the gun-deck of a navy 74, with heavy quarters for three pieces of artillery on each side, fully completed, is intended to be placed in the rear of the marine barracks, for the purpose of exercising the whole division of marines at that port, in the necessary manœuvres of great guns for sea service; and as the different parties are deemed sufficiently perfect in the exercise, they are to fire with shot or wad from the battery at Devil's Point. Lt. Woolridge, of the Royal Marine Artillery, is appointed to this particular service.

Napoleon's wife.—The fact respecting the supposed Protest of the Austrian Princess, Maria Louisa, proves, as we were the first to treat it, a mere fabrication. The Morning Post of this day, a paper which is not likely to stake its credit on light grounds, positively asserts, on authority, that the Act never presented it, an impudent imposition.

As there have been strange rumours as to the birth of the young Napoleon, and a report, that even the Empress Maria Louisa has been deceived, as to that circumstance, it may be fairly concluded, that the Emperor of Austria would have ascertained the quality of the child, before he gave any sanction to his claim to sovereignty, whether in France, or, by possibility, in Italy. If it be true that the boy is intended for the Church, as is reported, that allotment seems to give some colour to the alledged mystery of his birth, and his education, as the grand-son of the Emperor of Austria, it might be expected that he would rather have been reserved for secular honours. We do not, for a moment, the imposition of such documents will stop here, for the enemies of the Bourbons are ever ready at work to weaken their authority, to degrade their character, and to effect their downfall.

Extract of a Letter dated Cadiz, August 8, 1817.

We arrived in the bay from Gibraltar on the 6th, I have been on shore very busy ever since. Our fellow citizen of Zolenbergh, Richard Meade, Esq. who was appointed to the office of Consul, has received his credentials and despatches were waiting for us here, and we had the pleasure to find that we have an opportunity of seeing him. Our acquaintance was first frequently, and tells me he enjoys his usual health and spirits. Having no intention of our government to interfere in so flagrant a violation of the rights of nations, I will be to the Spanish minister of State, concerning this business, and to ask of him full restitution, indemnification, and the rights of his country. It appears that the Spanish minister himself has acknowledged that the vessel has been illegally detained, and yet by some secret means his orders have not been complied with, and the vessel is no longer a private affair, it is much a matter of concern to the American nation, as any act of the United States. Mr. Meade has been in much solicitude since he has been displaced. This circumstance of his full restitution, and other circumstances peculiarly disagreeable to his situation, have made him feel that he has been taken a large sum of money, and they seem determined not to part him, or to restore him to his station. The agreement of the vessel is sent by that means. The letter of Mr. Erving is enclosed.

At Constantinople a plot has been discovered, of which the Aga of the Janizaries is supposed to have been the author. The Aga is now in a strong castle, and there he died—how, need not be told to those who understand the ordinary executions of state affairs in Turkey. It is reported that the Porte is determined to destroy the formidable power of the Janissaries. It will be an improvement of some difficulty and danger.

It is confidently reported at the head quarters of the British army in France, that after further reduction of the troops serving in that country, will almost directly take place.

A Brussels article of Aug. 9, states that the weather continues to favor the harvest in that country.

Reaping has already commenced in several parts, to the neighbourhood of this city, and which, from the delightful state of the weather, may be expected in the course of a week or ten days in general. The grain is unusually large, and in fine condition. Accounts from every part of the northern county concur in stating, that the grain promises to prove the most abundant in the memory of man.—Exeter Post.

The fine weather continues to encourage the hay-time, in this part of the country. The confidence appears beyond the sphere of agriculture, and seems further to animate the speculations of commerce. Corn and spice rises in price, while articles of the first necessity are rapidly declining. Thus Coffee has improved within a short time by 2½d the cwt ; and sugar 5s per cwt.

Mr. Moore, to whom his countrymen have given the surname of American, was the winner of some trivial affair, along which enjoy a high reputation in England, and who has printed a poem upon an Orientical subject, for which the Prince Regent agreed to give him 3000 guineas before it was written, is now in Paris.

It is understood that Sindia has departed for the notorious Pindarree Marauder Seeton, of his Jaguar, and had given orders to his officers no longer to harbour any of the Pindarree chiefs in his territories. It was therefore supposed that these marauders, driven from their old haunts, will be compelled to make another irruption into the Company's Provinces.

The Indus, about which some fears had been entertained, we are happy to learn, arrived at St. Helena, on the 12th of December. It was supposed that the Cape by a gale of w. d, caused the unpleasant reports which have been circulated.

We give the following extract of a letter from her, conveying information which may prevent accidents,

"On the 4th of October, 200 miles from any land, in lat. 2 30, north, and long. 25, east, at 8 o'clock, we had a narrow escape, having struck on a rock concealed under water, supposed about 17 feet deep, as that is the quarter-less-four, and we had only scrip-ped over it for at least a minute without sustaining any injury. We were most alarmed till we ascertained that we had received no damage. This rock is by no means laid down in the charts, and is the direct tract of ships going to the Cape and Europe."

On Tuesday last we received a few Calcutta Journals, reaching down only to the 10th ult. the interruption is occasioned, as we formerly stated, by distur-bances in the Nepaul country, which have been of a most serious nature. The Rowne has a pucka revetment, and rises beautifully above the loss of the ghaut, just enough for every purpose. The pucka revetment is equal to any I have ever seen ; the interior works of no too high a profile : taking it for all at all it is the strongest of the Company's fortifications. We have been fortunate beyond example in not losing more ; five sepoys killed and eight or ten wounded is the number we have to regret, and this is a few more occurred in the pursuit of the fugitives."

CALCUTTA, April 8.

We have received letters from Colonel Adams' Camp, on the Nerbudda, dated the 16th ultimo. On the evening of the 14th, at the moment of the arrival of both camps, a tremendous storm of wind and rain burst over them, which in a few minutes completely panic struck, and plunged men and horses into the River without offering to oppose our progress. The storm continued to prevent an attempting to pass the River, and a considerable number killed by the fire of the 10th and 24th Dragoons, which was directed on the smin. The Nagpore subsidiary force is at present considerably scattered ; but as soon as the Norbunah is sufficiently filled for the safety of the passage from fording it, several of the detachments will be removed from their present stations. That at Colaira is to march to Hoosingabad in about 20 days hence, from their present encampment.

Calcutta, April 9.—We are concerned to state, that a serious disturbance has just taken place at Cuttack, to which the subjoined letter refers.

Cuttack, March 30.—On the 29th ult. intelligence was received that a body of insurgents from Groomsir, had entered the district of Khoordah, where they were joined by the Pikes and Dalbehrs in that quarter. The Rajah of Khoordah, drove away the Dorogah and Tehs his, helped themselves to the public treasure, said to be about 15,000 rupees in cash. At Poorie, carried off another, and destroyed several villages in the neighbourhood.

"A letter from Groomsir states that their number to be about 1200 ; they are daily increasing, and their avowed object is to expel the public officers from the Rajah's estate, and to place on the throne the name of Jubbundoo, who was formerly the sidar of the Pikes, and the other leaders are Coordeadur and Bhoomdeo Roy ; the latter states that a number of all kinds is almost constantly stagnant —a great proportion of the whole have left the Cuttack and Pooree districts, and are proceeding to the Northward and the ad-dition for Sullivan's Island."

An unsuccessful statement having appeared in some of the papers, relative to the late unhappy Paul Peel, minister of the ship Union, from Greenock, we are requested to publish the following correct particulars :

The ship Union, Capt. Peel, sailed from Greenock on the 19th of July — About the 2d of August, Captain Peel caught a severe cold, which continued for ten days, five days of which time it was not known that he took either meat or drink, except a little water. About this time it was discovered that his mental faculties were impaired. On the 12 of August, at midnight, he called for Charles Little, the first mate, and on his appearing below, Capt. Peel told him that it was now coming near a point, that his glass was run, that he had not slept since he left Greenock, that the nearest man in the ship," and uttering other incoherent expressions. The mate was alarmed at the state of the unfortunate gentleman, endeavoured to appease him by kind expressions, advising him to go to his berth, &c. which he refused to do—for a long time he grew worse, the paroxysm in which he said he would die in peace. The mate refused, of course, and to prevent him from escaping, called down the steward, who was in the cabin. The steward was obliged to open the window again. At this time, the mate, Little, left the cabin, and went on deck. The steward was then called ! Capt. Peel, to turn the knife, and give him more death. Shortly after he called to the steward again, and ordered him to call Mr. Brodie, a cabin passenger — Mr. Brodie came out of his berth, and seeing Capt. Peel in a severe paroxysm where he was sitting, on the floor of the cabin, said, "I would advise you to lie down, Capt. Peel." Those were the last words that Mr. Brodie ever spoke to Capt. Peel, for he immediately fell down upon the floor, and ordered him to call the steward, who instantly made for the companion way, crying murder ! murder ! By the time Mr. Brodie was the first of the steward, rushed out of the cabin and shut the door after them, to prevent, if possible, any further mischief. In a few minutes after, Capt. Peel appeared on deck, in attempting to go into the cabin, found that the hatch was out, and the cabin full of smoke. Having found another light, they entered the cabin, but discovered that the captain was gone, as well as the pistol he had shot himself with, which was found below being open, left no doubt of his having made his escape through it, but at what part-near moment was not known, as the interval must have been between the time of firing the pistol and the crew's entering the cabin. The ship at this time was going at the rate of 4 or 5 knots per hour.

QUEBEC, Sept. 18 1817.

The first feasts this season, were observed in this vicinity, on Saturday and Sunday last the 13th and 14th. They were sufficiently severe to injure the cucumber, melon and pumpkin vines. Beans and Potatoes have also been affected, but both are too far advanced to be susceptible of much injury. Late Oats is the only crop which may have materially suffered. During the last week, the weather was favorable for the Wheat Harvest, and a great deal has been got in without injury. There are some complaints of mildew or rust, but the grain generally presents good. We have seen specimens who have been down the South shore below Kamouraska, are so very happy to state, that their report is favorable relating to the part of the country that suffered so much last year. Their crops generally, are unusually good, excepting about Berthier. La Prairie also also a fine crop.

Full Weight.—Some patches of Fall Wheat in this vicinity, which is unfortunately backward for two or three years, and have generally succeeded. We do not hear that Mr. Ogden has since made any experiments of the country around Quebec, or if attempted why abandoned. We have seen a sample sown at Spencer Wood, and reaped at the Hon. H. M. Perceval, on the 3d November last, and cut the 25th ult. It is remarkably plump, weighing 59lb. 10oz. per bushel, and is considered by those who are versed as to the qualities of Canada Wheat, to be the most desirable. Several Gentlemen have sown small quantities of it this year ; but also some Spring Wheat. Others who have sown small quantities of it, will be enabled to accurately ascertain its value, and we hope to see it sown on new lands, the ensuing season, when it will have had a full preceding year, and may be harvested and cleared for Spring wheat.

4th. It might seem by the experiments at Spencer Wood, that it would generally sown on prairie ground, immediately after the crop is taken up, without a fresh ploughing.

To the Inhabitants of Upper Canada.

There has for many years existed in London, a society, the object of which institution is, to afford relief to strangers, who having no legal settlement in any parish, are thereby entitled to parochial relief under the poor laws.

The happy state of the inhabitants of this country, does not call for or no legislative provision for the maintenance of the poor, until the late war furnished outlisted and afflicted objects, to whom the benevolent have afforded a distinct and liberal support.

The late emigration from the United Kingdom to this Province, has produced many instances of distress in the vicinity of individuals, however great, supplied without system, cannot relieve.—It is proposed, therefore, to form a Society in this province, for the purpose of raising to the wants and alleviating the misery of such Emigrants from the United Kingdom, as present a just claim to the assistance.

To that effect, a subscription will be wanted, and the charitable well disposed are invited to attend a meeting for that purpose, at the school house in York, on Saturday next, at one o'clock ; when it is hoped, a respectable attendance will be afforded, at which meeting, of course, to accept a Society of "Friends of the Stranger" for the more expeditious and proper distribution of the donations that may be collected for the purpose, and all such as may be willing to assist in the management of the business, will be gratefully

The under mentioned circumstances, Mr. M. G. Lewis has worked into a tale of much interest, in his "Tales of Wonder" but as many of our readers may not have seen them, we insert the following account:

A MONSTROUS SERPENT.

An account of the Anaconda, a monstrous species of Serpent in the East Indies, and of the manner of its seizing and managing its prey, in a letter from an English gentleman, many years resident there.

Some years since, the commands of my directors carrying me to Ceylon, to transact an affair of no little consequence, I had an apartment prepared for me on the skirts of the principal town, facing the woods; at some distance from my window there stood some large palm trees, that afforded me a delightful prospect. One morning, as I was looking at these trees, I saw as I thought, a large arm of one of them in strange commotion, bending and twisting about. Though there was no wind, it often striking one end to the earth, and raising it again, and losing it among the leaves. I was gazing at this with great amusement, when a Ceylonese coming in, I begged him to look and wonder with me; he looked, sir, and was much more amazed and terrified than I. In short a paleness overspread his face, and he seemed to be sinking to the earth with terror. He begged me to bar up all my doors, and told me that what appeared the arm of a tree to me, was in reality a serpent of that monstrous size, diversified with the various positions contortions, and now and then darting down to the earth for its prey. I soon found out the truth of what he told me; and making many attempts to seize a small animal before me, and take it into the tree. Inquiring after this miracle, the Ceylonese told me that the wonder was only that I had seen it was so near us, for it was a serpent but too well known on that island; but that it usually kept in the inland parts and woods; to which, as a dangerous place, from the covert of a large tree, and devoured a traveller alive. A relation so strange and so much above my related credit with me, but that I actually saw the creature, from its size, capable of doing more than was related. It continued diverting itself all assembled in a body of twelve of us, to go on horseback well armed, to destroy him. We rode near the place, but not so as to expose us to danger; we found behind a thicket from whence we might assess level our fire-arms at him: but when we arrived there, we found him so much larger than he appeared at distance, that we level ourselves at home again, and for a long time dared not fire. We had gone about a mile, when we came to a body of natives tons—the first of these species went in England, being brought to France by the Jean de Gand, and served up at the wedding table of Charles the IX. He is the hero of "Though a little exits and the true, but not the worse enlisted for that) a kind of courage, and would not hesitate to attack a grenadier of the British guards, who would venture to intrude his farm yard with a red coat on."

LONDON Aug. 12.

New Regulations of the English Navy.

In consequence of the variation from the established regulations, which for a series of years, have been in force in the respective admiralties, the Board of Admiralty have lately re-modelled the whole. Their propositions upon the state, which will be submitted to Parliament, are the pay, ratings and number of officers and seamen, now involved the sanction of an order in council, and commenced on the first of January of the present year.

The Navy of the navy are divided into six ranks, which division took place in the reign of Charles second, and have undergone with various modifications to the present time. The 1st rate ships now are to be employed only in the service until about the second year of the reign of George the 2d, when that description of vessel was not included among the third rates.

"During the whole of the period herein before referred to and indeed until the last war, the force of the ship was stated from the actual number of guns they really carried; but the whole number of guns, which was fixed partially in 1779, and which was finally adopted on the present establishment, is in the main the natural course of the first revolutionary war, increased the armament of the vessels, so they were better able to carry a greater number of carronades than the guns in whose stead they were adopted, at the first period of the war, and which has no longer corresponded with their nominal force; the principle of variation being made use of, ships have since that time received denominations as to their number of guns, often, we believe, very improperly, and in case of the navy, of the whole Navy, agreeing with their real force.

A few instances will show your Royal Highness the inconvenience which has arisen from the old rules of the service has been.

The Caledonia, rated 120 guns, carries 130 guns; while the Illustrious, a ship of nearly the same dimensions which carries exactly the same number of guns, is rated only at 110 guns, being a less number by four than that at which the first is rated, although they are similar ships in fact 10 guns more than the latter.

All ships of the second rate, though rated at 80, carry upwards of 100 guns, and they have all more guns than the H.C. Georges, a ship which is rated and carries 100 guns: and they ought all, therefore, according to the established regulations, to be ranked in the first rate: and there are indeed no real second rates, viz. three decks of between 90 and 100 guns, and of present existing in the Royal Navy, in a navy going condition.

In the third rate, some of the ships rated of 80 guns carry only 70 and others rated at 74 carry 80 guns, but the majority of the ships in this station carry 74, and this is one of the very few cases in which the real and nominal force agree.

In the fourth rate, of the ships rated at 50 guns, some, (but on one deck) carry only 44 guns, another (last on two decks) carries 60 guns and upwards.

In the fifth rate there are three frigates rated as of 44 guns, namely, the Syrinx, taken from the French, which carries 46 guns; the Lavinia, built after her, which carries 50 guns; and the late Guerriere ship Pomone, which carries 46 guns.

Sixteen differences between the real and the nominal amount of force exist in the sixth rate, but it is unnecessary to specify the details.

We trust we have explained ourselves enough to your Royal Highness, that it is wholly unworthy the character of the Royal Navy of this kingdom to maintain this system, which, though introduced by the accidental causes we have mentioned, and now adopted upon the same principle, may give occasion to foreign nations to assume as of themselves, superiority, in the fact a British frigate of 26 guns has taken a French frigate of 44, when, in fact, the British frigate was equal if not superior to the French.

The board then recommended the following modifications of the classes.

1st rates to include all 3-deckers which are to carry 100 guns, or upwards.

2d rates to include all ships of 80 guns and upwards on two decks, and to carry 700, or 800 men.

3d rate, to include all ships of 70 guns or upwards, and less than 80 guns, and to carry 600, or 650 men.

4th rate, to include all ships of 50 and upwards, but less than 70 guns, and to carry 400 or 450 men.

5th rate to include all ships from 36 to 50 guns and to carry 300 to 200 men.

6th rate, to include all ships from 24 to 36 guns and to carry 175, 145 or 125 men.

Of the sloops there are so many varieties that we cannot suppose it reduce the right, and consequent now existing, to less than four, as follows: 18, sloops, 16, sloops, 14, sloops, 10 men.

Brigs (not sloops,) cutters, schooners, and bombs, we propose to reduce to one class, consisting of complement to two, namely 60 or 80 men.

And we also propose that all vessels under which may not require so large a complement as 60 men, or upwards, may be reduced to smaller rates, complement as we may deem necessary.

As there are no longer any regular fire-ships in the service, we humbly propose, that, whenever it may become necessary to fit out any vessel of this description, we may be authorized to assign to such vessel the same number of officers and men, together with the pay of such rate of class, to the time of the vessel employed or the number of days particular service may require to be performed.

We further propose, that when it shall be necessary to fit out troop ships, we may be authorized to assign to them such rates and complements as may seem necessary.

By these regulations, the forty-seven varieties of complements, now in use in the navy, will be reduced to twenty.

It is obvious that the entire expense of providing guns, yards, rigging, and officers of various descriptions, for ships of the same actual force, must be very great; because it not required for the particular ship for which they were originally prepared, their are other useless, or must be altered to fit some other ship, and the whole of the guns, and materials, may be lost by accidents or stranding, this variety disables the ships from assisting each other; and it supposes that the naval arsenals, docks, and stores and should be furnished, at a very great expense, with a much larger assortment of those articles than would be necessary if they could be made more generally applicable to the different ships of the whole fleet; this will be explained in your Royal Highness more fully, by the following table for the single class of ships of the third rate, which have been lately put into commission at different advantage of masting and rigging; and that a squadron might be composed of seven vessels of the first rate, which would require for each of which the third yards would be required, but their individual gears.

We have in conjunction with the Navy Board and with the assistance of a committee of experienced sea officers, taken measures for combining with principles of uniformity as far as the nature of the case would allow; and for the experience of those who conducted the former establishments to form alterations in them attempting to establish, by the approbation & sanction of your Royal Highness in Council, uniform scales of the boards, and scantlings of his majesty's ships, and we humbly trust the satisfaction of stating that a system of gradual assimilation is in progress, yet that we hope to see it every day become of more extensive operation, and to produce greater utility; and we beg leave humbly to assure your Royal Highness that no efforts shall be spared on our parts, to prevent, for the future, any unnecessary deviation from the established principles and armament, and to reduce the variations which exist to as few classes as possible."

The Board proceeds to state the pay of officers and men, upon the ratings of petty officers and the complement of the ships, and naval artillery—but the observations are too extended for our limits—and we have already extracted those parts of the Report which we think probable will be most interesting to our readers.

Irish Provisions, &c.

Government have at length advertised for 24, 000 tierces Irish beef and Pork, the cure of corresponding navies; the offers are to name the quantities. This large contract will no doubt have the effect of keeping up the present high rates at the stocks here and limited; the holders of Pork seem especially determined, as the article of Bacon is very heavy, with little prospect of an improvement. The supplies of new butter are very considerable, but the prices continue high, however still supported.

Corn.—There was a moderate supply of English wheat to yesterday's market, but the favourable weather for the harvest, which is now generally and large supplies of foreign have occasioned a very dull sale of the finest wheats at a decline of 4d. Foreign was altogether unsaleable. The American flour at market being ready for immediate use, met an extensive sale, in a great measure superseding the demand for the Irish, the bright samples of Barley supported the late currency, but the staleness of the bulk of the parcels of Oats last week exceeded 3000 quarters, yet the trade was extremely heavy at a 2s. decline of 1s. Grey Peas remained unaltered. A few samples of new Boilers appeared at market, they were lamentably out of condition, and the greatest asking in the Royal Navy, in a navy going condition.

In the third rate, some of the ships rated of 80 guns carry only 70 and others rated at 74 carry 80 guns, but the majority of the ships in this station carry 74, and this is one of the very few cases in which the real and nominal force agree.

In the fourth rate, of the ships rated at 50 guns, some, (but on one deck) carry only 44 guns, another (last on two decks) carries 60 guns and upwards.

In the fifth rate there are three frigates rated as of 44 guns, namely, the Syrinx, taken from the French, which carries 46 guns; the Lavinia, built after her, which carries 50 guns; and the late Guerriere ship Pomone, which carries 46 guns.

The board then recommended the following modifications of the classes.

1st rates to include all 3-deckers which are to carry 100 guns, or upwards.

2d rates to include all ships of 80 guns and upwards on two decks, and to carry 700, or 800 men.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman at St. Mary's, dated August 17.

SAVANNAH, Sept. 17.

"M'Gregor is still on board a brig at the south port of Amelia, waiting a wind.

"There remain about 60 officers and men of the town, exclusive of the crews of the Morgiana, Republican, and San Josef. About 30 of the Spaniards went up to Amelia, about two days since, with the intention of taking possession of the place, as it is said, in consequence of the treaty with Spain, by the United States. They went up in a small schooner fitted out about two months ago at Amelia, for the coast of Africa, was taken by the boats of the Morgiana, outside the bar, and brought in with gold dust, ivory and slaves. A number of the negro was also sent in a few days ago. The U. S. brig Surprise, detained yesterday a sch. from New-Orleans, armed and manned. Ten armed the river and the Point, in consequence about the Patriots hold it. Sheriff Hubbard is here, and very active. The famous M'Gregor is also here. The town is full of patriots that have left America; perhaps some may return. The people of Florida are mostly opposed to the patriots; nothing is carried by them, but a transfer of the Province to the United States."

"P. S. 7 O'clock, P. M.—I have been looking at the fort at the bottle at Amelia.—Two Spanish gun-boats came inside, and make a regular and handsome appearance by within a mile and a half of Fernandina.—The troops at the same time moving by land. We could distinctly see the shot from the town, tall armed men, and 6 or 8 shot from the gun-boats falling in the town, and about the brig, formerly the Lerwick, till dark. When the Lerwick hoisted sail, to get from under the fire of the Spaniards were also boarding her, from M'Clure's hill. The firing has now stopt, but the result is not known. A part of the troops are still at the back of the town.—The Spaniards have certainly behaved in a gallant manner,—the firing was well conducted on both sides and we could see it as well as if we were on the spot."

"St. MARYS Sept. 13.

"When I last wrote you, I entertained the most sanguine hopes of a speedy evacuation of the Island, but our friends in the United States, on whose promises we relied, have most grossly deceived us. The Spanish Agents are continually sending strong war parties into this country, killing, stealing and destroying all before them, laying waste the most valuable plantations, and driving off their slaves. Our informant traveled part of the distance between the Spanish and Artosaus rivers with a large party going to join the standard of the confederate troops. They had six field-pieces, with several whites and half-breeds, and one hundred and fifty negroes under Gen. Jackson in the late war.—They said they were informed that the Ouages had built forts, to which they intended to retire after the general battle, which it is thought will be fought near Earhart's salt works on the Arkansas, on that quarter of streams called the Six Bulls, and above the boundary line lately run between the interior countries of this territory and the Ouage country.

"The Ouages are aware of the intended attack, but cannot believe they will be met by such a formidable force.

"As they always fight their pitched battles on horseback, it is probable they will be defeated in that broken country which they have chosen for the conflict.

NEW-ORLEANS, Aug. 22.

By arrivals from Vera Cruz, we are assured that Mina and the patriots are defeated, has obtained great success, and that his 4th bulletin is dated from St. Louis de Potosie. It appears that the desertion to the royalists had been so great, that Mina was reduced to 1500 men, expectedly great! 800 of the royalist soldiers are spoken of as having passed over to him at one time.

The communication between Vera Cruz and the interior is again interrupted.

Singular preservation.—On Friday, the 13th Sept. Samson Speedland, residing at Connaught creek, Ohio, encountered in a canoe, 14 feet long, and about 2 feet broad, in pursuit of a deer which was driven into the lake; after pursuing the deer about two miles, and coming near him, he changed his course and took for the shore. The wind being very heavy, Mr. S. attempted to paddle, to return to the shore, and was obliged, after exhausting himself, to let the canoe drift before the wind. Mr. French; she was formerly the Brutus Privateer."

The Floridas.—We learn, from an intelligent source, that there now exists a negociation for the purchase of the Floridas. In a month or two, those who have claims against Spain may expect payment.

Plague.—Capt. Gardiner, of the brig Rising Sun, from Genoa and Gibraltar, arrived at the Philadelphia Lazaretto, informs, as the authority of Gibraltar papers, that the plague raged at Algiers and Bona, which carried off at an average of 70 persons daily.

Despatches.—Capt. Nixon, from Lisbon, brings despatches from our consul, and from Mr. Graham, the government to their minister at Philadelphia.

Capt. N. left at Lisbon a fleet of 23 sail of transports, to sail on the 29th of Sept. with troops, under convoy of two frigates.

Two 74's had sailed from Lisbon for Brest, to take on board the Princess, one of which was launched for the express purpose, after having been eight years on the stocks.—N. Y. Gaz.

About half past 6 o'clock on the night of the 18th of August last, a tremendous fire broke out in Fayette county, Ky. at the house of the Rev. W. Jackson, which made such a rapid progress, previous to discovery, that Mr. Jackson's very large building with several other out-houses, with all their contents, and he, in his endeavors to save his wife and little one, became the first victim of the devouring element. His wife, however, with the rest, got out safe, same melancholy fate. The wife and son of James Alexander, brother of Mrs. Jackson, who was engaged in the same building, were the last unfortunate beings who were thus suddenly removed from time into eternity! This melancholy event has thrown a solemn warning to all heads of families to see that all the lights are put out before they retire to rest.—Phil. C.

St. Louis, Aug. 23.

Union westward, are now under contract; and in defence of common professions and the celebrations of our country, the towns, as we have before stated, are somewhat under the estimates reported to the legislature by the commissioners.

This prospect encourages patrons, converts subscribers, and conciliates opposers. Success is no longer doubtful; and the spirit of the York Book forward to the completion of a grander monument than the Roman boasted in the Antonine Column.—From Utica to the Onondaga Salt Springs, a distance of sixty miles without a single inch!—The end, for the retention of money, is beyond expectation. Stones for arches, &c. and castings for the culverts, are procured on very moderate terms. A very considerable distance will be completed this fall.

Col. Young and Mr. Holley, the Commissioners on the ground, are indefatigable in their labours. A gentleman of the first respectability at Whitesborough, observed to us the other day, that having witnessed the discharge of their duties for several weeks, he considered the public to be singularly fortunate in the selection of commissioners. Governor Clinton, and General Van Rensselaer have yielded to the subject all the attention and service which their many engagements and duties would permit. Canvassing the line of country in person, the Engineers, Messrs. Wright and Geddes, have this season, well sustained their former reputations; and Mr. Digges, and Benjamin Marshall, as subcontractors, is a great acquisition to the departments.

Grand Canal—Contracts have been made on and around, for the construction of the Canal as far as Montezuma, and at a rate uniformly lower than the estimate of the commissioners. The difference in the distance already let out, between the estimate and the contracts is about $300,000.

The contracts are extremely well satisfied with their bargains—as much so that several who first contracted have offered to relinquish them, under circumstances also the first contractors have let out the ground they had taken to others for considerably less than they are to receive of the Commissioners.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE, YORK;

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1817

By the arrival of the Steam-Boat, this morning, we are sorry to learn, that the former Boat Pilot, on Lake Champlain, has burnt her boilers, and is laid up for repairs; when that, some of the passengers or sister ware injured.

The Steam-Boat performed very well this season: there was a very sharp frost last night, and this morning we see some snow fall.

A meeting of the Members of the Parish of Vaughan will be held at the School House, in York, on Saturday next, at one o'clock.

At the General Session of Oyer and Terminer, and General Goal Delivery, in and for the Home District, at York, commencing on Tuesday, the 14th day of September, in the 57th year of his Majesty's reign, before the Hon. Chief Justice Powell, the following Indictments were presented, and tried.

The KING, vs. JAMES SMALL, indicted for Deserting a Serjeant, in order to prefer charges against his officer.

Verdict—Not Guilty.

New Æronautic Ascension.

Mr. Krous, a German, produced on Monday, an exhibition quite new to the inhabitants of London. The spot selected for the purpose of the present exhibition was the Apothecaries' Garden, Lambeth walks, where there is an extensive trap ball ground. Mr. Krous having inflated a brilliant globe, let it off; the little object glided along greatly to the satisfaction of the multitude, but being rather out of its element struck against a tree instead of a rock, and got entangled in its branches. In this situation one of the spectators endeavoured to remove it with his umbrella, but the point being sharp the globule was harpooned, the gas flew out of the puncture, and the fish vanished. The next attempt was more successful; a large wild boar accended on his feet in grand style, and produced the loudest shouts among the spectators. The wind being from the east, he went away due west, and the famous hogs of Hampshire will be left to their fate. This is a good effort: it was obvious that some spaces were properly poised by so big the lower parts being so much heavier than the upper.—Morning Chronicle.

(Second of an Immortals Quadrupd.)

It must be the custom of this creature to lie in wait for his victim, as in the bushes of large trees from which it always chooses the one that best suits it before it sees an enemy; but the instant we saw of this, I must own I was for you. The next morning, sir, we assembled to the number of one hundred, at the same thicket, where we had the pleasure (if I may call it so, to find our enemy at his old post.)—He seemed very fierce and very hungry this morning, and we soon saw the effect of it.

There are great plenty of Tigers in that country; and one of those of a monstrous size, not less than a common heifer, as he went along, was at full length under the the serpent's tree, and swift as thought the serpent dropped upon him, seizing him across the back, a little before the shoulders, with his horrible mouth, and taking in a piece of his back bigger than a man's head; the creature roared with agony, and in unsupportable terror, was running with his enemy towards us; his course, however, was soon stopped, for his nimble adversary, winding his body three or four times round the body of his prey, girded him so violently that he soon fell down in agony. At the moment the serpent had laid fast hold of the back of the creature, and raising and twining round the beast, opened his horrid mouth, and with a hissing sound, the whole face of the tiger in it, biting and grinding him in a horrid manner, and at once choaking and tearing him in pieces.

The tiger reared up again on this, and words are too poor to paint his mourning agony; he writhed and twisted about, but it was all in vain, the serpent he went with him, and a hellow roaring from within the devourer's mouth was dreadful beyond expression. I was for shooting at the serpent by observing this sight; and surely the agonies of the tiger were beyond all that can be conceived, and his death more horrid than a hundred other deaths with all their tortures put together. The tiger was a strong and fierce creature though, and as he hurt or get rid of his cruel enemy, yet gave him a world of trouble; a hundred times would he rear up and run a little way, but soon fell down again, partly overcome with the serpent and partly by the wreathed twists of the serpent round his body; but though he fell, he was far from being conquered.

After some time he seemed much spent, and lay as dead; and the serpent, who had many times girted himself vehemently round him, attempting to break his bones, but in this was not able to hold, and twisting his tail only round the tiger neck, who was now in no condition either to fight or escape, he made towards the tree, dragging with some pains the tiger after him.

Nature it seems, informs this animal, that though it can conquer many of the creatures as these it can by no means devour them as they are, as their bodies are too thick for his swallow, and he must therefore have them in a condition to bring them to a soft mass, before he can manage them. This he usually does as we saw him attempt it on the tiger, by girting his body round and round and round them, by this means crushing them to pieces; but when this method will not do, he has recourse to the tree, as we now had an opportunity to observe. He dragged the tiger by degrees after him to the tree, and the creature being almost dead, with much ado, he got him slightly a second time by the back, and set him on his legs against the trunk of the tree, then immediately by winding his body round and round the tree several times, he girted both with all violence, till the ribs and other bones began to give way, and by repeated attempts of this kind, he broke all the ribs and legs in four or five different places: this took up several hours, and the poor creature still in vain attempting, at last overcome of the bones gave a howl, though not loud, yet piteous enough to pierce the coldest heart, and spoke it most plainly the wretch hated to its species, and pity its misery.

After the legs and ribs, the shoulder attacked the place in the same manner, but this proved no difficult a task, though the monster, tired with fatigue, and seeing his prey in some condition of escape, left him for the night at the foot of the tree, and retired into it himself to rest; upon which we went home, and I must assure you, I could not sleep for the poor tiger, who was miserably in strong, that we left him asleep though mangled in this miserable manner.

In the morning I returned with several others to the place; but we were to make up as saw a strange change; the body of the tiger, which was no longer to be known as such, but looked like a

Notice to Innkeepers.

WITH a view to improve the state of the TAVERNS in the District of Londonin, the Magistrates have determined to limit the number of Taverns the ensuing year; and to select from the number of applicants for Licenses, such persons of character and substance, as are most likely to provide in the most effectual manner for the comfort and accommodation of travellers.

The Magistrates particularly recommend the vicinity of the Court House in the Township of Charlottesville, as an eligible situation for a Tavern on a large and extensive plan: the Assizes, the Courts of General and Adjourned Quarter Sessions of the Peace, the Town Meetings and General Musters of Militia are held there; and, independent of the advantages of local situation, the Magistrates of the Division, (James Mitchell and Joseph Ryerson, Esquires,) as an encouragement to any person of character and enterprize, who will provide and undertake to keep a house sufficiently commodious, have determined that no other house shall be licenced in the Village or neighbourhood.

Public Notice.

THE Subscriber begs leave to Notify to the Public that his Merchant and Grist Mill will be in complete operation about the middle of December next; on the first of which, he will be ready to receive Wheat, and some flour of the Mill shall be laid out in Bins for the purpose of keeping the grain separate which may be stored by them until ground. To give the Public and the Subscriber stated, that he has every reason to believe that the most perfect satisfaction will be given to those who may favor the Mill with their custom; he is aware the Public that his best endeavours shall be exerted to do his customers every possible justice.

To those Farmers and Merchants who reside at a distance, and who may intend forwarding their Flour to Kingston or Montreal, the Subscriber would recommend storing their Wheat in the Mill during the Sleighing season, which he would engage to have manufactured into Flour in the best manner, and carefully packed (agreeable to the Montreal regulations,) in seasoned barrels, to be ready for the Spring market.

Having an excellent Cooper in his employ, who has been so during the Summer in preparing staves, &c. he will have on hand at the Mill a constant supply of substantial and well seasoned Barrels, which he will dispose of at 4 shillings, N. Y. Cy. per barrel, and 1s. N. Y. Cy. to be paid per barrel for Packing, Cooperage and Nails.

From Lower Canada.

Grand Jurors' Charge to the Grand Jury of Quebec, concluded.

In the general course of the proceeding, we trace the suggestion under which you be, not only to give your attention to every matter which may be submitted to you on the part of the Crown, but to investigate with equal diligence such matters of charge against all persons, as may be within the compass of your own knowledge, or be communicated to you by others. We trace also your right to receive accusations in form or information, or otherwise, from any one—your right to make presentments of your own, and your unbounded ability to do so, upon every proper occasion.

We may add, that your fellow subjects whether they acknowledge the respect to which the Grand Jury stands intitled by the magnitude and extent of its functions, may see, in the facts stated, sufficient reasons for that respect, in the high antiquity of its origin and in the elevated ranks which the constitution of our government has assigned to the Grand Jurors of this times.

Your charge, Gentlemen, upon the present occasion, is to present for trial all perpetrators of offences, from the trespasser to the traitor.

In the execution of your trust, you are to be assiduous, temperate, patient, circumspect and impartial, examining all things submitted to your consideration, with minds free from every bias, except that which arises from a sense of duty and fixed determination to perform it, and having nothing which you are to be called to investigate without adequate inquiry, and judging always according to the best of your ability, with attention, discrimination and incorruptible integrity.

You are to receive all accusations which may be offered to you by the crown officers, or by others in the form of indictment or otherwise, and after hearing in each case the testimony of the witnesses in person, you are to determine and to declare, whether there be or be not reasonable and sufficient cause to require that the person accused should be put upon his trial, delivering the indictment (if any have been laid before you) to the court, or your own presentment of the accused, if you find upon inquiry, and no indictment has been laid before you.

If you have knowledge of any offence, committed within the limits of this district, you are to communicate it immediately and fully to your colleagues, and if any facts are known to you, in corroboration or in addition to those which shall be laid before you, you are to declare them in like manner at your own accord; and in all things which relate to any of the matters which you may so communicate, you are to take your oath to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. You are to hear the witnesses which are offered in support of the charges, but more on behalf of the accused; you are nevertheless to question carefully all such witnesses as may appear before you, for the purpose of discovering from them evidence of every circumstance, of which it may be material for you to be possessed, to enable you to decide upon the probability, whether the cause for which it is alleged that the accused ought to be put upon his trial, be or be not reasonable and sufficient for that purpose. You are to receive all evidence in your conscience you deem it to be reasonable and sufficient, you will err in violation of your oath, if you reject the information which it may appear to bring the offender, or upon any other principle. The consequences of your finding, ought not in any instance, to enter into your considerations.

In all the inquiries in which you may partake, the opinions which you declare must be your own: you are to apprehend with respectful attention the sentiments of your fellow Jurors, but not to adopt them without reflection, or to receive them for your own with ser-

The Lake Champlain Steamboat, was constructed to be lighted with gas; it is said as to put it out of the power of the inventors to repair her the present season, but we must learn she will be repaired in the Fall of the approved principle, and never nothing more has been heard of having become a leak. The report of injury however been sustained by people on board, as stated in our last paper, incorrect.

Several accounts of extraordinary petrifactions having lately appeared in the public papers, has induced me to send you an account of some of the petrifactions of our soil, and for fear that some may doubt (and you among the rest) I have sent you the original stock of the one herself of Winter Rye spoken of (which may be seen at this Office for the inspection of any person) these extraordinary growths were procured from the lands of Mr. Thom in Pasco, of this place.

One head of Grape or English Oats measured 2 feet 3 1-2 inches in length; one head of Scotch Oats measured 2 feet 11 1-2 inches in length; the stock of straw of the Scotch Oats measured two inches in circumference. From 1 kernel of Winter Rye, 296 stocks, each with a fair head, some of them of an extraordinary length, on an average each head produced from 50 to 55 kernels, making at 50 to the head, the surprising quantity of 14,800 kernels from one kernel of seed. I weighed the straw as it was average was 5 feet 8 inches and some of them 6 feet 9 inches.—Courant.

QUEBEC, 14 Oct. 1817.

German Settlers.—On Saturday, arrived in the ship Zephyr, 169 German Settlers, men, women and children. They found immediate shelter in houses belonging to Mr. George Pozer, in an early situation near the gaol. Mr. P. means to settle them on his seigniory of Augmentation, on the river Chaudiere, where he has taken steps to provide mills and other buildings for their reception, and has made large purchases of provisions for their use. They intend, indeed for this country, in consequence of encouragement held out to them by that gentleman, who has great credit in it as well employing his money, as it most necessarily lead much to the enhancement of the Province, the Germans being a quiet and industrious people. We hear that the men are to proceed immediately to the seat of their destination, but that the women and children will pass the winter in town. They excite much attention of the public, by the gregarious appearance of their costume, in which they appear to be at least a century behind the fashions of the day. Their dress is heavy, ungraceful, and which is more than can be said of that of our fair fashionable ladies.

Late advices from the Great Falls of the River St. John, that may be relied on, say, that those falls will probably extend in our possession the remaining few miles since the St. John, some miles above that post.

We have been kindly favoured with the perusal of London papers of the 20th of August inclusive, but are too pressed for room at present to enable us to insert from them any other extract, to those of our own conceptions to the Members of the Inquest, upon the merits of the matters which may come before you.

Finally, you are not in any case to support to any person who may be accused, nor to any other, the favour or the evidence which may be adduced against him, nor are you to reveal to any, the subjects discussed before the Inquest, or the opinions of any Juror upon any point of inquiry or discussion.

Conclusion.—We have the fullest conviction, that, as heretofore, yourduty will be so executed, that your own credit, and the benefits which the District has a right to expect from your researches, will be equally secure.

her country nothing of any great interest. One paragraph, in a Madrid paper, boasts the enormous amount of 1,000,000 of dollars, which it had just passed. Commercial Paul-carrot, and we should say, of their success. Portugal, we learn, for the purpose of assisting the ex-Consul Sabino the 4 year-old king, whose they once again set down as a slighter native of his regiment of Lisbon, came up with a party of about 1500 of those fellows; he took them, and they were all succeeded completely by running them. He gave no quarter—killed 800 men, and took 1000 prisoners—his exploits may be seen.

The steamy mountains of Thibet in Asia, which were until lately supposed to be inaccessible, have been visited by Capt. Webb, and their height ascertained, which proves to be 28,000 feet above the level of the sea. This is more than 7000 feet higher than any of the known points of the Andes, which have, heretofore, been considered the loftiest mountains on the globe.

ITALY.—Throughout the south as well as the north of Europe, the crops are luxuriant. The harvest throughout the kingdom of Naples is stated to be abundant, and of the best quality ever remembered in that country.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 21st.

The Bank of England has given notice to the bankers in town that they may be supplied with another £200 in Sovereigns in exchange for standard gold coins. Half sovereigns are expected very shortly to be issued, an event which will be very desirable to persons in retail trade and business, who find a great want of some description of change between the silver coinage and the one pound note.

Private letters from Madrid state, that 11,000 picked troops are ordered to hold themselves in readiness for immediate embarkation for Buenos Ayres, purposely to proceed against the insurgents. The shipping will be sent from Cadiz to the shores of South America is to be furnished by the French government, as a consequence of an arrangement made with the court of Madrid. The same letters state that a formidable expedition is a so fitting out at Lisbon for the Brazils.

The Gazette of Saturday contains an order of Council for the further prorogation of Parliament from the 25th instant to the 3d of November, when it will probably be still further prorogued, there being at present no intention of assembling it before the beginning of next year.

A curious seizure took place on Tuesday last at Stonehouse near Plymouth, soon after the arrival of a vessel from Guernsey. A porter, carrying a bedstead from a store house, was met on the beach by a Custom house officer, who, having asked the porter to whom it belonged, and received rather an unsatisfactory reply, thought it right to examine the bedstead. In doing so, he found that the posts and pillars were hollowed out, and contained several hundred pounds worth of lace, ingeniously concealed under rugs.

A soldier, belonging to the 6th regiment of Dragoon Guards, is in custody, and will be tried at the ensuing Newcastle Assizes, for stealing a goose and gander. The bird is a gallant veteran, and is named Waterloo.

CRUELTY TO HORSES.

At the Police Office, Marlborough-street, on Monday, Thomas Sutton, a hackney-coachman, was fined 40s. for cruelties to two horses, the property of Mr. Charles Gates of Cumberland Mews, Portman Square.

The prisoner stated, that on Saturday last the prisoner went out with one of his coaches and a pair of horses, when it was ascertained that he had gone to Highgate, and left his horses in the care of another man, who put them jump and run, and flogged them three quarters of an hour, until their flesh was completely scarified. He then mounted the box, and drove down the Highgate Hill at a furious rate, flogging the horses and lost his hat, broke the traces and, getherher, by which the coach was running over the horses, but never made the least effort to stop until he perceived himself in danger, when he suddenly drove up against a hillock, and the vehicle was upset. Authentic advices from South Seas. The second act of de facto towards British merchants has drawn from the latter representations to our government of the most pressing nature. The plan for Spanish minister has shown the most hostile spirit towards them—that the treaty is greatly violated—that they are not allowed the most ordinary rights—and that unless the British consul shall give in a name sufficient to say that they have hitherto done, not only our interest, but our national honor, will suffer. They representation, we trust, will produce their effect; and indeed it was expected at the Exchange, on Friday last, that the [illegible] would [illegible] to the [illegible] to the shores of South America is to be furnished by the French government, as a consequence of an arrangement made with the court of Madrid. DIED,

In this town, on Tuesday, the 28th inst. after a short but painful illness, which he bore with christian fortitude and resignation, Mr. Thomas Shaw, lately from Ireland, brother to Mr. Joseph Shaw, Brewer, of this place, much lamented by his friends and relations.

To the Resident Land Owners of Upper-Canada.

GENTLEMEN,

I am a British Farmer, and have visited this Province to ascertain what advantages it possesses in an Agricultural point of view. After three months residence, I am convinced that these are great,—far superior indeed to what the Mother Country has ever held out, either as they concern speculative purchase, or the profits of present occupation.

Under such impressions, it is my purpose, as soon as circumstances will permit, to become a settler; and in the mean time, from feelings that will ever live in my power to benefit the country of my choice.

When I speak in this sanguine manner of the capabilities of Canada, I take it for granted that certain political restraints to improvement will be speedily removed. Considering recently, and the opinion of every possible man with whom I have conversed on the subject, gives assurance of this. My present address, therefore, waves all regard to political arrangements: it has in view, simply to open a correspondence between you and your fellow-subjects at home, where the utmost ignorance prevails with respect to the natural resources of this fine country.

Travellers have published passing remarks, some have told wonderful stories, and amused the idle of England with descriptions of the beautiful and grand scenery which Nature has here displayed; but no authentic account has yet been afforded to men of capital, to men of enterprize and skill, of those important facts which are essential to be known, before such a man can safely go into foreign speculation or venture with their families, in quest of better fortune across the Atlantic.

Such are the dictates of ignorance, you have hitherto had for settlers chiefly poor men driven from home by despair. These men, ill informed and lost in the novelties which surround them, are at first but a feeble commencement, and, ultimately, form a society, crude, unambitious and weak. In your means, therefore, I have frequently observed a fear towards bettering the condition of these poor settlers, and for ensuring their residence in the Provinces. Such fears evidently spring from inexperience of things: they are well meant, and may tend to alleviate individual distress, but can produce no important good to the Country. Canada is worthy of something better than a mere guidance to it of the blind and the lame: it has attractions to stimulate desire and plan its colonization above the aids of necessity.

Hands no doubt are necessary, but, next to good laws, the grand requisite for the improvement of any country, is capital. Could a flow of capital be once directed into this quarter, hands would not be wanting, for wherever capital is employed, there will hands be attracted with poverty as to need the patronage of charitable institutions.

At this moment British capital is overflowing: trade is yielding it up: the funds cannot profitably absorb it: land mortgages are gorged; and it is streaming in upon the Banks of America. Why should not this stream be diverted into the woods of Canada, where it would find a still higher rate of interest, with the most substantial security?

Gentlemen! The moment is most auspicious to your interests, and you would not be justified in the sight of God, make known the state of this country: you should advertize the excellence of the raw material which Nature has liberally spread before you in your forests, inspire confidence, and tempt able adventurers from home. At this time there are thousands of British Farmers sickened with disappointment, who would readily come to Canada, did they but know the truth: many of these could still command a few thousand pounds to begin with here; a population less able in means, have yet preserved their character for skill and probity, to entitle them to the confidence of capitalists at home, for whom they could act as agents in adventure. Under the wing of such men the redundant population of Britain would emigrate with cheerfulness, and be planted here with hearts unbroken.

We hear of four or five thousand Settlers arriving from home this season; and it is talked of as a great increase to the population of the Provinces. It is a mere drop from the bucket. England alone could spare fifty thousand people annually, while she would be relieved and strengthened by the discharge. In war, England sent abroad annually more than twenty thousand of her youth to be slain, and how many more than forty thousand of her daughters shot after them the last hope of honourable love. In these twenty-five years of war, the population of England must have swelled: what is it to do now, when war is at an end, when love and opportunity are no longer to be foiled, and the poor laws have provided means against the children independent of the parent's care?

Under existing circumstances, it is absolutely necessary, even for the domestic comfort of England, that a vent should be immediately opened for her increasing population, and the colonization of Canada, if once begun upon a liberal footing, would afford this vent.

The present emigration from England affords no relief whatever to the calamity occasioned by the Poor laws. Thousands and tens of thousands of paupers could be spared, who cannot possibly now get off for want of passage. Not only the population every day swells, but capital, were confidence for adventure here, once established.

The extent of calamity already occasioned by the system of the Poor laws, cannot be even imagined by strangers. They may form some idea, however, when I tell them, that last winter, I saw more wretchedness in the streets of London, several hundreds of able bodied men increased and yoked, 14 together, in carts, hauling gravel for the repairs of roads, each 4 men carrying a load, forming just about as much work as an old horse led by a boy could accomplish. We have heard since, that £1,000,000 has been raised to keep the poor at work; and perhaps the most melancholy consideration of the whole is, that there are people who trust to such means as a cure for the evil.

While all this is true: when the money and labour of England is thus wasted: when thousands of our fellow subjects are emigrating into the States of America: when we even hear of them being led to mix with the hosts of Poland, in the cultivation of a country of which the Government must counteract the utmost efforts towards improvement,—it is not provoking that all this should go on unnoticed by a resigning ignorance of the superior advantages which Canada has in store, and a thoughtlessness as to the great gain a people might be called to for the general aggrandizement of the British nation.

In this state of ignorance, you have hitherto had for settlers chiefly poor men driven from home by despair. These men, ill informed and lost in the novelties which surround them, are at first but a feeble commencement, and, ultimately, form a society, crude, unambitious and weak. Extract of a letter from a lady in Cadiz to another at Washington.

"On the 8th of July, St. Isabella's anniversary, the Queen gave a ball at the Royal Fernandina made her first trip from Seville to this city, in honor of the Queen whose name is Isabella. She came into this bay unperceived by anybody. Although the wind was high and the sea rough, which prevented the boat from having that desightful effect which music generally has on the water, the concourse of people was so great, that, notwithstanding there was a guard on board to keep them off the boat was nearly sunk twice. The populace call the boat, Barque del Vapor—and in consequence, every thing now is all a vapor—hair cut, gowns trimmed, hair dressed, all a la Vapor.—This is the first steam boat which has ever been seen in Spain, and therefore attracts a great deal of notice."

Though I gratuitously make offer of my time, I mean to be relieved of expence as much as possible, and shall expect all communications to be post paid. Any person, I think, who interests himself at all in the matter, will engage his interest in my behalf. Divided among many, such charges will be trifling: if accumulated upon one, they would be serious.

I would the work received to me which I would propose not only publishing it in the English but German language. It is well known that the people of that country are fond of reading, and there is a fact that many of them have not the means of communicating to their friends the very superior advantages of this country. One of them who has been in Canada 18 years, lately told me, that "thousands and thousands would come over, did they but know how good a country it is for poor people."

Land for Sale.

LOT No. 31, in the first Concession of the Township of Dunnidon, and about 40 miles from York.

The land is of the best quality, and possesses the very great advantages of having the main road from York to Kingston and a large stream of water passing through it. The new Townships in the rear which are settling very fast, will make the land in that neighbourhood much more valuable than before.

Very easy terms of payment will be given. For particulars, enquire at the Printing office.

BREAD.

NO person or persons to bake Bread or Biscuit for Sale, without having previously obtained a Licence and entered into recognizance, before the Clerk of the Peace, with two sufficient sureties in the sum of two hundred pounds, to sell the same in conformity to the Assize to be published monthly, by order of the Magistrates; and also, during the continuance of such Licence, to bake daily for sale, a reasonable supply of Bread.

Every baker to stamp each Loaf or Biscuit, with the initials of his name; and upon conviction of any offence against these regulations, shall forfeit and pay a sum not less than ten shillings, nor more than forty shillings for each offence. An entry shall be made from time to time, by the Clerk of the Market, in a book to be kept for that purpose, of the Assize of Bread as fixed each month, or oftener if required, which book any inhabitant may inspect at all reasonable hours without fee. The Clerk of the Market likewise to keep an account of the prices of Flour, to lay before the Magistrates when called for.

SLAUGHTER HOUSES, &c.

No Slaughter House to be erected or made use of within the limits of the Town, without the owner or occupier thereof having previously obtained especial permission for that purpose, from the Magistrates in Session, under a penalty of forty shillings for each offence.

No Chips, Shavings or Rubbish of any description, to be thrown into the Street, or on the Front of the Town, under a penalty of not less than ten shillings, nor more than forty shillings for each offence.

No person to Gallop or Ride, or Drive a Horse or Horses, at an unreasonable rate in the Streets of the Town, or on the Bank or Beach in front of the same, under a penalty of not less than ten shillings, nor more than forty shillings for each offence: nor to ride on the Front-Paths, under a penalty of five shillings for each offence.

No Waggon, Cart or Carriage of any description, to be left standing in the Street, or any Fire Wood, Timber, or other incumbrance to be allowed to remain in the Street for a longer period than twenty-four hours; except in cases of Building, when one half of the Street in front of the lot to be built on, will be allowed to be occupied for a reasonable time by the materials required in building, leaving a clear passage on the FootWay.

WEIGHTS and MEASURES.

That the Clerk of the Market procure Standard Weights and Measures, such as Half Bushel, Peck and Half Peck, Gallon, Half Gallon, Quart, Pint, Half Pint and Gill—Weights from Fifty Six Pounds to One Ounce, to be kept in his custody for the purpose of regulating the Weights and Measures within the said Town; and that the said Clerk shall from time to time examine the Weights and Measures used in Shops, Taverns, Ware Houses or elsewhere, within the said Town, kept for the purpose of weighing or measuring any articles whatsoever offered for sale, and that any person or persons, having in his, her, or their possession or use any weights and measures short of the said Standard Weights and Measures, shall forfeit and pay for every such offence a Sum not exceeding forty shillings, nor less than ten shillings over and above the loss of such Weights and Measures, which the Clerk of the Market is required to seize and break and destroy; that all weights and Measures not having already a Standard Stamp, hereafter to be used in the said Town, shall be stamped by the Clerk of the Market, with the mark U. C. for Measures and U. C. for Weights S. M. S. W. for doing which, he shall be entitled to demand and receive from the owner thereof, the sum of three pence currency for each stamp, and no more.

Precautions against FIRE.

That every inhabited dwelling house within the Town of York, shall by the occupants of the same be provided with one good and serviceable Ladder, long enough to reach from the ground, to two feet above the eaves of the houses, which shall be kept constantly raised, so as to give ready access to the roof; and two or more roof Ladders, suspended by iron fastenings from the ridge of the roof, and reaching to the eaves; and where the chimney or chimneys, rise more than three feet from the roof, a small Ladder to rest against each such chimney of sufficient length to reach the top of it, under a penalty of five shillings on each and every conviction of neglect or refusal; that every chimney or flue in which a fire is commonly made, shall from the first day of November, to the first day of April, in each and every year, be swept under the direction of the Inspector of chimneys, at least once in every six weeks, and when the stoves are used daily, as in kitchens and manufactories, once in every 6 weeks throughout each and every year in the same manner; for which duty the Inspector of chimneys as aforesaid, shall be entitled to demand and receive from the tenant or occupant of the house, the sum of seven pence halfpenny for each chimney or flue so swept as aforesaid: and every person refusing or neglecting to comply with the above regulation shall forfeit and pay on conviction thereof, a sum not exceeding forty nor less than ten shillings: That each and every owner, tenant or occupier of a dwelling house within the Town of York, shall provide the said house with two or more good and serviceable Leather Buckets capable of containing three gallons each which shall be hung up and exposed to view in the most convenient place near the front entrance of the said house to be in readiness to assist in the extinguishing of Fires, under a penalty of not more than forty nor less than ten shillings. Provided always, that to give time for the procuring of such Leathern Buckets, this law shall take place or have effect before the first of November next: And provided also, that if Leathern Buckets as aforesaid, cannot be procured, the like number of good and serviceable Wooden or Tin Pails of equal capacity, and kept for the same purpose, may be procured. That there shall be appointed in the Town of York, four discreet and active persons to be Fire Wardens, (that is to say,) two in each division of the Town who, in cases of Fires, shall be authorized to command and enforce, with the help of the Constables and other Peace Officers, the aid and assistance of all the male inhabitants of the Town, between the years of 16 and 60, and to preserve as far as possible, order, regularity and despatch in the Fires, for the supply of water; to appoint and establish guards for the preservation of furniture and other effects, from injury and pillage; that the said Fire Warden shall (to prevent any one pleading ignorance of his station) carry about him on occasion of Fires, a staff or some other visible distinguishing badge of office, and every person so subject to be called upon, who shall omit or neglect to obey the commands and directions of the said Fire Wardens, shall upon conviction thereof forfeit and pay a sum not more than forty nor less than twenty shillings.

SWINE running at large.

That no Hogs or Swine be suffered to run at large in the Streets of the Town of York, under a penalty of ten shillings to be paid by the owner or owners thereof for each offence; and the Hogs or Swine so found running at large shall be delivered to the custody of the Keeper of the Pound in the said Town, who shall sell the same at public sale, after three days notice has been published of their being in his custody, retaining from the proceeds of such sale, the above named penalty, and also his own fees, unless the owner or owners of the said Swine shall previously pay the charges incurred, and take the same away.

Ordered to be Published,

Samuel Smith,
Administrator.

PROCLAMATION.

GEORGE THE THIRD, by the Grace of GOD of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith.

To our beloved and faithful Legislative Councillors of our Province of Upper Canada, and to our Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of our said Province, to the Provincial Parliament at our Town of York, on the seventh day of October last to be commenced, held, called and elected, and to every of you, GREETING.

WHEREAS by our Proclamation bearing date the twenty first day of August last, WE thought fit by and with the advice and consent of our Executive Council, to prorogue our Provincial Parliament until the seventh day of October instant, at which time at our Town of York, you were held and constituted to appear. BUT WE, taken into our consideration the ease and convenience of our loving Subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to prorogue you and each of you of your attendance at the time aforesaid UNTO THIS DAY, reckoning and by these presents enjoining you and each of you, that on the seventeenth day of November next ensuing, you meet us in our Town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper Canada, and therein to do, as may seem necessary. Herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, WE have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the Great Seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed. —WITNESS our trusty and well beloved SAMUEL SMITH, Esquire, Administrator of Our said Province, at York, this first day of October in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and seventeen, and in the fifty seventh year of our Reign.

S. S.

By Command of His Honor,
WM. M. JARVIS, Actg. Sec'y.

Executive Council Office, York, 23d Oct. 1817.

NOTICE is hereby given, by Order of His Honor the Administrator in Council, to the Representatives of John Galloway and William Caldwell, to make good any pretension to Lots number Twenty-one in the Fifth Concession of the Township of Kingston, within Six Months from this date, or it will be granted to the Occupant, who has been in possession sixteen years.

JOHN SMALL,
Clk. of the Ex. Council.

Notice to Innkeepers.

WITH a view to improve the state of the Taverns in the District of London, the Magistrates are determined to limit the number of Taverns the ensuing year; and to select from the number of applicants for Licences, such persons of character and substance, as are most likely to provide in the most effectual manner for the comfort and accommodation of travellers.

The Magistrates particularly recommend the vicinity of the Court House in the Township of Charlotteville, as an eligible situation for a Tavern on a liberal and extensive plan; the Assizes, the Courts of General and Adjourned Quarter Sessions of the Peace, the Town Meetings and General Musters of Militia are held there; and, independent of the advantages of local situation, the Magistrates of the Division, (James Mitchell and Joseph Ryerson, Esquires,) as an encouragement to any person of character and enterprize, who will provide and undertake to keep a house sufficiently commodious, have determined that no other house shall be licenced in the Village or neighbourhood.

Executive Council Office,
York, 20th May, 1817.

NOTICE is hereby given, That if Jonas Hartson, late of Lot No. 2, in the first Concession of the Township of Glanford, in the District of Gore, does not within Twelve Months from the date, appear in Person to take out the Grant for said Lot, it will be regranted to another Settler.

By order of the Lt. Governor in Council,
JOHN SMALL,
Clerk of the Executive Council.

Land for Sale,

LOT No. 31, in the 2d Concession of the Township of Darlington, and about 40 miles from York. The land is of the best quality, and possesses the very great advantages of having the main road from York to Kingston and a large stream of water passing through it. The new Townships in the rear which are settling very fast, will make the land in that neighbourhood much more valuable than before.

Very easy terms of payment will be given. For particulars, enquire at the Printing office.

QUEBEC, Oct. 21.

The Lord Bishop of the Diocese, has nominated the Rev. George J. Mountain to the appointment of Official for the Province of Lower Canada, vacant by the death of the late Rev Dr Mountain of Montreal.

We have had several falls of snow lately. It is now (Tuesday morning) snowing fast. The ground is covered with it.

Arrived in this city, on the 19th inst. via the Temiscouta portage, Colonel Bouchette, Surveyor General of Lower Canada, accompanied by Capt. Cairns, late of the 69th Regt. and Mr. Joseph Bouchette, jun. We have only been able to learn, respecting the progress of the new boundary line, that the exploring survey has been navigated from the source of the St. Croix to the river Restigouche, a distance of about 100 miles in the course of which the property of both nations has experienced difficulties & sufferings of the most arduous nature.

The Americans employed in the exploring survey may be expected here in a few days by the same route, on their way to the state of Vermont; the British party having returned to their stations, New Brunswick, by the river Saint John.

MONTREAL, Oct. 25th.

Yesterday, a swing of the Scotch Shrub was brought to this office, by Mr. Burns, gardener of S. Gerrard, Esq. having three flowers, little inferior in beauty to those of Jessamy, and came in this perfection in the open air.—Her.

RELIEF, CONSIDERATIONS

On the subject, importance, and ensuing effects of the Newfoundland Trade.

As extreme no ideas are absurd universally persuasive respecting the nature of the Newfoundland Trade, and to such a degree, that it may not be inexpedient to perform the statement of its particulars, and of its importance, with a brief description of its peculiar features.

When this trade was first established, the Merchants and their hoggardage servants, as well as classes of persons engaged in it. The Merchant resided in England, and visited this country spring of the year, both as it respected the number of servants to be engaged, and the quantity of provisions and goods to be shipped, and proportioned to the extent to which he intended to carry on the fishery; part of the cargo was caught, cured, and exported by his own servants, and a very small establishment (if any) was left in the island through the winter.

In process of time, however, a third class of persons sprung up, consisting of servants of the order, who had chosen to remain on the island after the period of their servitude had elapsed, and of their descendants, born in the country. These persons, denominated Planters, procured a few acres of land for gardens, and boats and implements for the fishery, from the Merchants, engaging to pay for the same in fish and oil.

It became apparent that this division of the people was calculated to promote the success of the fishery; the Merchant attending to those parts of the trade which were strictly commercial—such as procuring the usual supplies of provisions, clothing, implements, and, in short, every necessary which could be wanted, forced in his stores, and loaded from time to time to the Planters, as their situations required; and in the interval between the visits of ships to preserve, which he expected to earn parts of Europe as he judged it advantageous to do. On the other hand, the Planter was solely occupied in the catching and curing of fish, and preparing the oil, for which purpose he was plentifully fitted him, and in which he was interested upon him in the event of success.

So preferable has this mode of conducting the trade been found, that it has been gradually encroaching on the mode described, and at the present time the quantity of fish caught by the servants of Merchants is extremely trifling, whilst that caught by the Planters and their servants is equal to the demand in every market in the world.

These details they appear unnecessary; but it will presently be shown, that one of the difficulties which now obstruct the trade, is owing to the indolent and enervating Newfoundland, system almost adverse to that which is likely in the case to be restored to been framed on a supposition that the Fishery was principally carried on by English Merchants, whereas, in fact, it was by Newfoundland Planters.

But to come at once to the actual distresses of the Trade, and the principal source of them:—We observe, that our trade with Spain, and also in the low way in Spain exported in one year 1,800,000 quintals of fish, is now reduced to little more than half: and the diminution in the Island, which is very little diminished, is of little value to all interests, in a commercial degree; for as the people spread wholly on the coast, and labour for support of the rest of mankind, it is from the loss of the principal subsistence. The consequence during the last winter, when offer after offer was made, and have been resisted—as lucrative, because sterile—proposals have been made to the Spanish ports, breaking open the Merchants' stores, and carrying off their property, or seizing the vessels that arrived with provisions, and in both cases selling the prizes (such as it is) altogether at their own influence. Instances have occurred, in their hands, demanding and enforcing a supply of provisions from the sailing companies. Further details on the subject have been laid before Government, proving the alarm and anxiety which existed at the time of the last letters, even to St. John's itself.

But to what (it may be asked) if this diminution of trade be so manifest? It may be attributed to three principal causes, viz.—

1. The large duties imposed upon the article in Spain since the restoration of the legitimate sovereign, and those imposed by France at Naples, and confirmed by the late treaty of restoration.

2. The increased duties on Newfoundland oil and seal skins, imposed during the war with France, and not yet remitted: and the grant of large bounties to the Scotland and other White Fisheries, which counties operate as a tax upon our trade.

3. The unequal competition which we manifests with the French Newfoundlanders in those parts of Europe and Italy to which both parties always carry their fish for sale. The French Newfoundland trade is fostered by its tonnage, with the most zealous solicitude. Issued from duties at home, either on the part of produce, and encouraged by enormous bounties on its produce, and on the vessels engaged in it. These bounties are far greater than any we have ever asked from our tonnage, and now do we make them in any degree the standard of that relief which we now seek, but as it is absolutely impossible for us to meet the French Merchant in the markets which are foreign to both, while we are loaded by our Government with duties of various kinds from which he is exempt; and we are destitute of any bounty to place us upon an equality with the Greenland Fishery; the particulars of such a plan might be as follows:

1. The tonnage of all duties on the produce of for Newfoundland, export of from the United Kingdom.

2. The remission of all duties on the produce of Newfoundland and its dependencies, imported from the island and dependencies into the United Kingdom.

3. The remission of all duties on goods imported into Newfoundland and its dependencies.

4. An exemption from tonnage duty for all vessels bound direct to Newfoundland from the United Kingdom, with goods for the use of the Fishery and Trade, or for the island and its dependencies only; or returning to the United Kingdom with the produce of that Island and its dependencies.

5. A bounty of fifteen shillings per ton on all oil imported from the Fishery, and the produce of the seal fishery, being the produce of its dependencies, which bounty should be confined to such oil as should be actually imported in the vessels employed in the fishery, and should not be allowed to any oil which should be landed in any other port of the United Kingdom than that from which the vessel cleared outwards.

6. A bounty of fifteen shillings per ton on all oil imported from the Fishery, and the produce of the seal fishery, being the produce of its dependencies, which bounty should be confined to such oil as should be actually imported in the vessels employed in the fishery, and should not be allowed to any oil which should be landed in any other port of the United Kingdom than that from which the vessel cleared outwards.

7. The remission of all duties on the produce of the Fishery and Trade of Newfoundland and its dependencies only; or returning to the United Kingdom with the produce of that Island and its dependencies.

8. A bounty of fifteen shillings per ton on all oil imported from the Fishery, and the produce of the seal fishery, being the produce of its dependencies, which bounty should be confined to such oil as should be actually imported in the vessels employed in the fishery, and should not be allowed to any oil which should be landed in any other port of the United Kingdom than that from which the vessel cleared outwards.

The amount of all this will be little more than one-third as much as the bounty which is at present granted on fish; but as we shall expect also the remission of the whole of the duties on the produce of the Fishery; the Merchant attending to those parts of the trade which were strictly commercial—such as procuring the usual supplies of provisions, clothing, implements, and, in short, every necessary which could be wanted, forced in his stores, and loaded from time to time to the Planters, as their situations required; and in the interval between the visits of ships to preserve, which he expected to earn parts of Europe as he judged it advantageous to do. Land for Sale.

LOT No. 31, in the 2d Concession of the Township of Darlington, and about 40 miles from York. The land is of the best quality, and possesses the very great advantages of having the main road from York to Kingston and a large stream of water passing through it. The new Townships in the rear which are settling very fast, will make the sale to that neighborhood much more valuable than before.

Very easy terms of payment will be given. For particulars, enquire at the Printing office.

Notice to Innkeepers.

WITH a view to improve the state of the TAVERNS in the district of London, the Magistrates have determined to limit the number of Taverns the ensuing year; and to select from the number of applicants for Licences, such persons of character and substance, as are most likely to provide in the most genteel manner for the comfort and accommodation of travellers.

The Magistrates particularly recommend the vicinity of the Court House to the Township of Charlotteville, as an eligible situation for a Tavern on a liberal and extensive plan; the Assizes, the Courts of General and Adjourned Quarter Sessions of the Peace, the Town Meetings and General Musters of Militia are held there; and, independent of the advantages of local situation, the Magistrates of the District, James Mitchell and Joseph Ryerson, Esquires, are entering a agreement to any person of character and enterprize &c. who will provide and underlake to keep a house sufficiently commodious, have determined that no other house shall be licenced in the Village or neighbourhood.

The Espoisonee.—In a singular character, whose dexterous achievements have made a great sensation in the public mind about twelve months ago, has again resurfaced to Leith with Captain Nourse. Upon revisiting his native country, believed with such sorrow that his sister, who loved him with the most undisguised affection, (thinking he was dead,) had died of a broken heart.

During his residence at the Island, the natives where continually flocking around him, and would sit for hours together, listening with the greatest attachment while he would relate, in his native simplicity, the wonders he had witnessed in this country. He proved of great utility during the ship's stay at the Straits, and among other desperate exploits which he performed in his retreat, was the killing of a man, among the horde who had murdered the passengers of Mr. S. W. Stevens, of the ship, the Captain of the vessel.—Edinburgh paper.

Eruption of Vesuvius.—An article from Naples, dated June 20, says—"The present eruptions of Vesuvius, are not only of Copper, Iron, a sulphur, acid, sulphur, sulphuric acid, chalk, and ammonia, from all of which there are considerable mines, and sometimes dissolved. It is also said (and report is very much mixed with volcanic matter) quicksilver is of the annual among the different kinds of lava. Vesuvius, which since Pompeii and Herculaneum have been more or less in the state of excavation, has entirely covered its former crater with a thick crust, over which the new eruptions have thrown two little mountains, in which cause smoke, ashes and stones. The earth is covered with bits of variegated glass. This crust is so considerable, that it is not pierced with the action of the matter compressed it will produce an effect like that of a petition which took place on the 20th June at Vesuvius."—London paper.

UNHAPPY ACCIDENT.

Montreal, Nov 1.

On Thursday afternoon, last, from the roof of Mr Reichart's new house in St Anne Street, a mass of the name of Ludwyche, late of Thorn, Bloom. He was mounting the roof with the bar unfortunately treading on the end of a plank of the scaffolding, it tilted, in consequence of which he fell to the ground, fractured his skull, and immediately expired, leaving a widow and five children to mourn his untimely end.

MONTREAL, Nov. 8th 1817

DREADFUL ACCIDENT.

It is with extreme pain we have to state that a resident of the following melancholy and distressing accident. On Saturday last, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, as Mrs Francis Fry, with his wife and two infant children, together with Mr. Peter Harrison in all nine in number, were crossing over from this side of the River Jones at Hull's Ferry in a scow in which were two pairs of wheels carried on the scow, being overcrowded, the former, and the latter, and of course all fell, then sank to the water's edge and of course all broke in two. The Children who held Mr. Fraser's daughter a child of about three years of age, stretched out his arm to catch a basket which had become unfastened, at same time an several children were dashed from it and wrested by him beyond his depth in water, and suddenly drawn. The managed to the nearest situation about one hour in the three second members from the shore and were rescued from imminent danger. The body of the child has not yet been found and the mother. It was said he laughed after sudden, falling so much below in the of body and mind, is at present, in a very sudden condition.

The persons who came to their a distance were Mr Montreal and his wife, and deserve to be publicly known.

INTERESTING TO FARMERS

The unusual fall having been remarkably mild and favourable, the harvest was very late, and numbers of the grain, especially oats, were not in October. In the beginning of the month the cold was so great, that by one night, there was produced on ponds near Kinsale, in the neighbourhood of Barrowmore, ice 3-4 of an inch thick. It was superseded by many farmers, if such a degree of cold would effectually prevent the insects, blight and ripening of their corn. In order to ascertain this point, Mr. Roderick selected several stocks of oats, of nearly equal bulk, and immediately after the frost, and the next day the thermometer appeared the last, and marked the effects. He whipped them up against in the field in a close day longer, at the end of which time he found the corn cut and lost in the wash for two days. The grains of each parcel were then weighed; when eleven of the grains that had been left standing in the field were found to be equal in weight to thirty of the grains which had been cut a fortnight before, and the straw of the same were not from being ripe. During that interval (from the 7th to the 21st of Oct.) the weather was, according to Farmer's correspondent, was little always 45. Dr. Rocksavage observes, that the exposure of the corn to an ice is not to be should be the less particular, when we reflect that the seed corn is of vegetable in the same degree of heat; and he draws an inference from the whole, that the ripening of Oat between the 7th and 21st of October is owing down their native time — on the supposition that to avoid accident it could fill no longer.—Cork Mercury.

WHITEHALL, July 26.

His Royal Highness the Prince Regent has been pleased, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, to direct Letters patent to pass the great seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, constituting the honourable Sir William Henry Bayly Bunbury, Commissary General to His Majesty's forces serving in Canada.

LONDON, Sept. 14.

A cabinet council was held yesterday at the Foreign Office, at which Lord Castlereagh and Sidmouth, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer were present.

The hon. Mr. Shirley, one of the Lords was Admiralty had on his person on a charge of the same, brought in the usual form, upon which was entered the name of England, quartered with those of Scotland and Ireland and which was produced during the trial as evidence that the accused to England's crown. There is something in this circumstance, by of this diamond. It passed from Mary to her grand-son, Charles Ist, at the scaffold, gave it to the Archbishop Juxon, who immediately Charles 2d.—The Prince Regent is the owner of the stone. Adopted at the time of the sale of £250 sh fine. It was purchased by Gerrard Vyse, and when sold to the chancellor £300 sterling for the Prince, as was supposed. Afterwards it was sold to Count Du Duke Argyle, from whom it is probable. It descended to the family of Admiral Blanchard. This diamond is said to have been lately purchased for the Prince Regent.

DEAF AND DUMB INSTITUTION.

On Monday the 25th ult. Mr. Kinnibrugh held a public examination in the public school of Marischall College Aberdeen, in presence of the university, the magistrates, the clergy, and a great many other gentlemen of the city resident in the neighbourhood, for the purpose of explaining and illustrating the plan of the Edinburgh deaf and dumb institution. Mr Kinnibrugh prefaced the examination of the pupils by an address to the audience, in which he described in strong and impressive colours, the helpless and deplorable condition of the objects of the society's attention. Mr. K. then proceeded to explain the progress he had made in removing from his pupils those obstructions and afflicting imperfections of speech under one of the youngest boys reported to the Lord's Prayer in a manner that drew tears from the eyes of many in the room, and a voice so divinely uttered, he seemed to call upon his brethren present to the throne of God to manifest gratitude to his maker for the restoration of the distinguishing faculty of his kind. At the conclusion of the meeting, it was determined, that an auxiliary society for the education of the deaf and dumb children be instituted in Aberdeen.

Sept. 17.

We have reason to believe that we speak on no trivial authority when we state, that it is in the contemplation of government to reduce the interest to two pence per day, on the next issue of Exchequer Bills.

The merchants of London, we are assured, still look with confidence to the Bank of England, having it in contemplation to discount good bills shortly, at the rate of four per cent. per annum.

In pursuance of the direction of an Act passed in the thirty-seventh year of the reign of his present Majesty, George III. intituled, "an Act for continuing and continuing, for a limited time, the restrictions contained in the 17th cap. of Council of the 24th of Feb. 17, empowerment of cash by the Bank,"

Also of the several Acts since passed, for continuing and amending the same.

I do hereby direct, that there be inserted forthwith in the London Gazette, the following notice from the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, dated 19th September 1817, namely:

"That, on and after the 1st of October next, the Bank will be ready to pay cash for their notes of every description, dated prior to the 1st of January, 1817."

CHARLES M. SUTTON,
Speaker.

The East India Company having given notice that the interest on their Bonds will be reduced from 5 to 4 per cent. interest per annum, has produced a great sensation in the money market. The Bonds which formerly commanded a premium of 120 and 122, are offering at about 30; but we believe no purchases have been made this morning. The reports circulated in the city are, that the Commissioner of the Exchequer will very shortly bring forward Bills at 2d, bearing an interest of about 3 per cent per annum. These changes in government securities are thought to have a very favourable effect on the Funds. Consols for the account, this afternoon, at one o'clock, were 80 3-4.

Spanish America.—Lord ——— London letters received this morning, says:

"We noticed the other day, that the cruising of Admiral Brion, and the capture of Puebla in South America, was going on with considerable rapidity. Colonels Hipperly and Skene are named amongst the officers now raising regiments for South America."

Derby, Sept. 28.

The fever still continues—a number of new cases had occurred.

EXPORTATION AND IMPORTATION.

It appears from Sir John Sinclair's Report, that Scotland consumes only 1,804,864 each, or about one fifth part of the supposed population of Ireland and yet in the year 1815 she raised at which the Report supposes yielded 1 by 7 crops, paid £4,004,667 7s. 9d of net revenue, exclusively of the expense of collecting and drawbacks. This commodity became one a moment to within half a million of the net revenue of Ireland and it exhibits most clearly this important fact, namely, that the people of Scotland are able to bear a rate of taxation exceeding that of Ireland in the proportion of three to one, or together, that a Scotchman pays three times as much to the State for every pair of shoes he wears, as an Irishman. And by the same calculation, instead of paying £4,252,000 as the net revenue which is the amount in the year 1815, we, on this second calculation, should find £14,961,781 to be the amount, without any burthening the people more heavily than they are so burthened. But Ireland is pre-eminently superior to those of Caledonia, in as far as her soil and climate are more favourable to the production of the earth. But in comparing the size and extent of the two countries, there is a manifest exaggeration of the number and importance that hangs upon the question. The area of Scotland includes under such an estimate of England, Ireland, Caledonia. And if the one half or nearly the whole of the population of Ireland may be estimated at more than twenty Millions of English money, of which 15,000,000 are fairly or justly calculated. Here we find that the people of the island of Ireland have the superiority over those of the latter, in the proportion of nearly three to one, in all that relates to the produce of the soil, which are, in fact, the primary sources of national wealth.

FRANKFORT, Sept. 20.

Capt. O. Orlem, commander of the Hamburg vessel ship Elsenore, who had made 10 voyages to Greenland, has just published a very interesting account of the last voyage, undertaken during the present year, in which he has that during the whole of the 5th of June but in the 70 he discovered land, in about 70 degrees, on which there is two high mountains. A think he recently, proceeded his making further discoveries. He gave the name of Hamburg County to the new discovered tract.

Letters from Gibraltar mention in England assurance that the plague continued to spread its ravages in Turkey. At Algiers no relief or pity. The mountains Turkomans who occupy parts between the city falling down around them in the streets, but did nothing to arrest the dreadful calamity.

In Sweden they continue to work at the Grand Canal, between the South sea and the Baltic, across the Swedish Provinces. This canal commences at Gothenburgh, and ends at Stockholm, an extent of 70 or 80 Swedish miles. The expense is estimated at 7,500,000 crowns. "Those then left the canal in ruins, and the whole is calculated to be completed in four years.

By the ship Tyne, letters have reached town from Bengal to the 23d of May. These communicate the intelligence, that down the fall of that Hastings, the British troops had taken eighteen forts; which, according to advices received at Bengal from the army, had left the country's country at the entire mercy of the British.

The Paris papers of Saturday last, the 13th, arrived this morning. In the Moniteur, there are two ordonnances of the King; one signifying his Majesty's acceptance of the Duke de Feltre's resignation as minister of War, and announcing Marshal Gouvion St. Cyr as his successor; the other appointing Count Molé to be Secretary of state in the Marine Department.

The Emperor of Russia, pursuant to a plan which he embraced in 1812, for making Helsingfors the capital of Finland instead of Abo, has issued an order for the same, and other purposes connected with the government to remove to Helsingfors after the first of October next. Helsingfors the capital of the province of Nyland, has a commodious harbour in the gulf of Finland, commanded by a powerful fortress.

GHENT, Sept. 21.

A valuable discovery for national industry has lately been made in this city: It consists in the method of bleaching and preparing flax. We are informed that the B D'Ivoy, member of the Academy of the Agricultural and Industrial society, for his fine process by which the flax is rendered a flexible white and supple without the employment of any corrosive substance; the use of which has hitherto been attended with an almost total destruction.

LONDON, September 22.

We learn from Yorkshire and Lancashire that the manufactories in those two counties remain furnish goods as fast as they are ordered.

Accounts from Sierra Leone to the 25th Sept. and the middle of Oct. 30,000 men were to be under arms.

Recent accounts from the South, state that every thing on board is confusion, for letters state that Aucona and four others had been shot, and hanged. The governor of Buenos Ayres has published his dispatches on the cause of execution. The military fired five times, the bodies were dreadfully mangled two rounds were found in the body of Morillo.

From the armies of Europe. Says a French paper, the English were then any private letters from the officers of the army in a foreign country. What they are in England they are in China, and even in France. The French soldier shows a character for politeness which distinguishes them honorably from those of our late Patriots. Upon this we cannot congratulate them. But will those belligerents in to employ their meditation towards obtaining such high praise, what will perhaps appear of untold fair is becoming a law among us. The [illegible] as to obedience as that of Pekin [illegible] requires strangers to strike the ground nine times with their heads. All we ask is, the training of a country to such a degree of politeness which delights them honorably when &c. so as to distinguish the tribe to which he belonged.

"England, he said, could never become a Continental Power. Forty-five thousand men with all the bravery of the nation, could never give her authority on the continent. A naval and commercial system was alone adapted to her situation, and could alone preserve her from the ruin with which she was threatened. Lord Wellesley was right in saying the distress was permanent. Lord Castlereagh had made himself a Courtier to the Sovereigns, and had neglected the interests of England. England was like the dog looking at its shadow in the water, and who dropped the meat out of its mouth. If there had been an able minister in the British Cabinet at the arrangement of the affairs of Europe, the terms of the peace would have been very different from those concluded on. The utmost possible extension of commerce, and a total relinquishment of continental military ambition, could alone rescue England from its present difficulties. The King of Portugal should have been made to grant five years exclusive privilege of Trade with the Brazils, as the price of the Portuguese throne.

"In former times the English ministers had made peace like merchants, and had filled the pockets of their country. The present Ministers had set up for gentlemen, and had ruined themselves.

"In the year 1783, England threatened to go to war again, if France did not agree to the Commercial Treaty which speedily ruined her. The French ministers, where obliged to submit to the demand, as they had no money, though the consequences were foreseen. The documents in the Bureau des Affaires Etrangeres would prove this anecdote. England, in throwing away the advantage of her naval power, acted like Francis I. at Pavia, who having stationed a battery of 45 pieces of cannon (in those days a numerous force of artillery), and which battery would have secured him the victory, interposed himself and his Gens d'armerie between the guns and the battle field that they could not fire; and drawing his unprincipled grand sabre, he had the battle. The naval blockade was like rubbing the body with oil to prevent perspiration, and then suffering as my face does at this moment, (said Bonaparte) an eruption for the want of it. If England made use of her maritime superiority, she might send ambassadors to command foreign Courts. Now she was invested with prohibitory decrees in every petty State. With 45,000 men, he repeated again and again, England can never become a Continental power; besides, the attempt would be fatal to the free constitution in which the English so justly pride themselves, and which in truth has been the source of her extraordinary power, commensurate with her extent. What had been the result of her military efforts? She had got possession of but a few, and an opportunity to show her want of generosity. She had tolerated the legitimacy of Louis XVIII. because he was the lawful Sovereign of France. He wished for general peace, it was the true interest, and the only way by which he could be relieved from the rock on which he was now confined.

"He then entered into a long personal tirade against Governor Lowe, on the treatment he had received, and of the many misrepresentations of his conduct which had been published. He spoke of Mr. Warden's publication as unfounded in almost every particular, and expressed himself in severe terms of Lord Bathurst's speech. He was surprised, he said, at Lord Sidmouth's and Lord Liverpool's want of decent property towards him on the discussion, as he thought he had shown them civilities to assure him a more liberal treatment. England, he concluded, was in a curious predicament—she has won all, and is ruined."

We have delayed our paper to announce the arrival of the ship Minerva, Capt. Sketchley, in 28 days from Liverpool. She sailed on the morning of the 4th of October, and brings Liverpool dates to the 3d, and London to the 1st, inclusive.—N. Y. Spect.

The markets for colonial produce, in consequence of recent arrivals from the West Indies, has risen very considerably. Flour, both in London and Liverpool had advanced in Price. American flour was selling at 32s a 34s per barrel.

Business of every description was still increasing, throughout the seaport and manufacturing towns. It is said, that there is not a person connected with any of the manufacturing establishments, who is not steadily employed, and at increased wages. It is also stated, that a twelve month ago, more than half the shipwrights in Liverpool, and other ports in the kingdom, were out of work, but at present there is scarcely one unemployed. The same remark is applied to other classes of mechanics and artificers, connected with shipping.

The Caroline-Ann, Capt. Reeves, of this port, which had been some time under seizure for smuggling at Liverpool, has been condemned.

Flour was selling at Liverpool, on the 29th of September, at 30 to 34 shillings per barrel.

Within ten days, towards the latter part of September, upwards of 8000 muskets, with infantry and cavalry equipments in proportion, have been shipped from England for the Spanish Patriots, after being inspected by their agents.

The Prince Regent has been on an aquatic trip of not on the coast of Essex. Beneath of office forbids the latter; and in this particular denies him a right exercised by his lowest subjects.

Letters from Cadiz say, notwithstanding the swarm of piratical privateers which infest the ocean, numerous and very valuable vessels are constantly arriving in every port of Spain. In one convoy, no less than eight millions of hard dollars, and a large quantity of Cochineal, Peruvian Bark, &c. were received. Cadiz is rapidly recovering from its sufferings and losses during the war. The armaments for South America are going on with activity.

A squadron sailed from Brest September 13, to take possession of French Guiana—General Carra St. Cyr, Governor.

It is calculated in Liverpool, that Britain has, within a year, imported near fifteen millions dollars worth of flour from the United States. The other nations of Europe have also imported much.

The Courier of September 20th mentions, that letters from the manufacturing districts of Yorkshire and Lancashire, represent the orders for the different goods to be so extensive, that they cannot be executed with the dispatch which the merchants require.

The Courier of Sept. 30th says, that the emigration from Europe to the U. States is estimated at one thousand, weekly.

The Bristol Journal of Sept. 28th says—It is an undoubted fact, and forms at this time a general topic of remark, that for the last fifteen years, there never had been so many orders given and purchases made, not only from the manufacturers, who attend this mart from distant towns, but from the large wholesale warehouses regularly established in the city, as during the period of the last three weeks. The abundant harvest, the reduction of the poors' rate, the employment of the artisan and manufacturer, have all tended to give life and energy to our home trade: and the latter, the brazier, the wholesale linen and cotton warehouseman, the hardware, tin and iron merchants, have their pastors and their packers full of employment.

Much political discontent appears to be growing up in Berlin and other parts of Prussia. Societies are forming with a view of procuring a constitution founded on principles of liberty. It is said the king of Prussia has agreed to withdraw his contingent troops from France, on receiving the amount to which he was entitled by treaty, up to the year 1820.

ENNISKILLEN, Sept. 22d.

The weather is still very unsettled, but such is the demand for employment, that there hath never been a day (not quite a temporary snow) with dust, were offered yesterday in this city to buyers, and some we believe, were even engaged at that price. This is a great evil, and prevails with most others, but the difficulty of extracting it is not to be easily overcome—it will doubtless be alleviated as the corn becomes more generally ripe; and threshing and potatoe digging may possibly remove it for a time.

Corn.—There is much interest excited as to the quality of the new crop; the samples of Wheat that have yet appeared at market are certainly in general cold and damp; the few fine dry samples were eagerly taken off yesterday at a further advance of 3s a 7s. Fine Dantzic Wheat in consequence was more in request, and the best samples sold freely at 6s advance; there was a similar improvement in good red wheat; the kiln dried Russet sold 3s higher. American flour attracted much attention, and sold readily at the advance of 5s a 6s per barrel.—Dried rye was enquired after, but there was none offered for sale: if any good parcels were to be brought forward, our quotations could be realized. The new Barleys were very coarse, a few picked samples sold at our quoted currency, but the greater proportion sold at all prices down to 25s.——The new Oats in the market were light and ordinary; good old samples in consequence realized prices 1s. higher: the ordinary new was offered at very low rates without facilitating sales.—Beans were without variation.—Grey Peas were 2s. lower. There was nothing doing in Linseed, and no supplies at market.—Tares and new Mustard Seed were each 1s lower.

Import of Foreign Grain.—The aggregate average for the last six weeks has just been taken; the ports continued open to the free importation of Foreign Wheat, Flour, Barley, and Oats, from all places, and under any flag, till 15th November next. The ports to shut against the import of Beans and Peas from any place whatever; and shut against the import of Rye from ports between the Eyder and Embden; the import of Rye from the Baltic, and the more distant ports, is shut.

On the first of Oct. the entire military force in Ireland consisted of seven regiments of cavalry, and twenty-five regiment of infantry, exclusive of artillery.

The African corsairs are again beginning to spread alarm throughout the Mediterranean by their depredations. The following is an article from Rome on the subject, of the 27th ult.:—

We have received advice from Palermo, of the 20 ult. which states, that a Barbary pirate had chased an Italian vessel, and had at length come up with her. The Italian, all expecting for an hour, was compelled to strike her colours. She made signals to vessels to seek shelter in the different ports to avoid these marauders."

On the 25th of Sept. a Special Commission was opened at Derby, for the trial of forty-one persons, who were in custody on a charge of High Treason.

Inspectors "of the court of Russia has obtained of the court of Austria the prohibition of the export of every species of ammunition for the use of the insurgents of South America.—The court of Russia is likewise occupied with a project for engaging all the powers in Europe to take rigorous measures against pirates, including the license to suspect privateers of South America. A Russian squadron is to proceed to Tunis to obtain satisfaction for an insult to the Russian flag."

The Liverpool Courier of Oct. 1 observes that it has been signified from authority, that any British officer who enters into the service of the Spanish insurgents will be struck off the half pay list.

According to the testimony of travellers, there is now growing, on one of the sides of Mount Etna, a chesnut tree by the Italians called by the Sicilians castagon de cento cavalli (chesnut of 100 horses) which measures 204 feet round. This tree is mentioned by several writers, and considered of great antiquity. It received its name from the circumstance of its having sheltered 100 men on horseback, from a storm. In the department of Gers, in France, says Michaux, there is a chesnut tree 30 feet in circumference, which for 600 years has borne the name of Gros Chesnut, and is believed to be 1000 years old. Its trunk is perfectly sound; every year it yields an immense quantity of fruit.

Mr. Kendall, the Editor of the Colonial Journal, has in the press, a Proposal for establishing in London, a New Philanthropical and Patriotic Institution, for assisting New Settlers in his Majesty's Colonies, and for encouraging, New Branches of Colonial Trade; with a Postscript on the Benefits to be derived from establishing Free Drawing Schools, and Schools of the Mathematics, and on other means of advancing the National Industry and Population.

From the Isle of France.—The ship Minerva, Alyn, of this port, arrived at the Isle of France on the 30th June, all well. She was the first vessel that had arrived there from the United States since the great fire; but Port Louis was crowded with vessels from Europe. No less than sixty five and arrived in the month of June, with full cargoes of every kind of Merchandize, even the frames of houses, window frames, and in fact ready furnished kitchens from England.—*N. CHARLESTON, Oct. 25.

By an arrival from Amelia to-day, we learn that Sir Hildebrand, the Governor of that place, died on the 19th instant. This will no doubt create a serious change in the arrangements at that place. He was a very active man, and had exerted himself to establish wholesome regulations. This did not suit the heterogeneous mass of plunderers in that quarter; and some persons even seem to believe, that his exit has been planned by some of those opposed to his measures. In a few days we shall have particulars."

Fever in Savannah.—We regret to learn, from our Charleston papers, that the fever has again broke out in Savannah with increased severity. From the first to the 7th inclusive, there were 82 deaths, by fever, in that city. On the number 31 were produced, and 41 strangers. Of the strangers, 31 were citizens of the United States, and 10 foreigners. The fever in Charleston passed the 30th inst. Accordingly, to that date, the whole number of deaths by fever in Charleston amounted to 1,000. Of these, 13 were Europeans, 10 Africans, and 977 Americans. The whole number of deaths in Charleston, from the 1st May to the 30th June, was 1,200.

Importance of Time.—Captain Peden of the brig Hope, was arrived at Boston, on Friday evening last in 25 days, from St. Sebastians, informs, that when he sailed a report was in circulation that war had been declared between the Spaniards and Portuguese, in consequence of some possessions which each nation claimed in South America. The report was that St. Sebastians by the name from Madrid; and was generally believed to be true.

Among the passengers in the brig Eliza for South America (mentioned in our last as having been detained and imprisoned in Philadelphia,) there are eleven British Officers, who have accepted their intention of aiding the Patriot cause. On Thursday last, they were brought, by Habeas Corpus, before the United States District Court; and on Friday the Court, after hearing eminent Council in their behalf, decided that they be fully committed for trial, on the charge of violating the neutrality of the United States.

Farm Letters.—Mr. Hooper has favoured us with Dublin papers to the 29th of Sept.

One paper contains a long article on the sanitary nature of Emigration. It considers an annual emigration of fifty thousand as not sufficient to prevent the evils of a too crowded population at home. It would rather spring one hundred thousand. The only disadvantage it stands to is that of augmenting the population of another country—therefore the establishment of new British settlements abroad is earnestly contended for. It recommends the forming of a Colony, near the Cape of Good Hope, in the country of the Caffres, and additional Colonies in New-Holland.

It has been perceived, for some time, that the Irish are not so partial to the United States as formerly.

The writer anticipates the objection, that some of the colonies might hereafter declare themselves independent, but this he views as a very remote occurrence, if it should happen. It is possible to be averted by the course of conduct which experience suggests; and as not the worst of calamities if it should take place.

It would appear from the great number of Electioneering Articles in the Dublin papers, that it has been determined to call a new Parliament, or that the measure is confidently expected.

In the city of Cork, Mr. Christopher Hely Hutchinson and Sir Nicholas Conway Conthurst, and in the county of Cork, Lord Bernard, Lord Kingston and Mr. Hare, are candidates for Parliament.

In the county of Carlow, Sir Ulysses Burg, Mr. Latouche and Sir Brown, are candidates.

Sickness of the Season.—We regret to learn, by the Natchez paper of the 4th instant, that an alarming and fatal disease then prevailed in that city.—A public notice signed by the President of the board of Selectmen, appears. The Physicians have declared it to be the pestis pessima, that there exists in that city a malignant epidemic. They have declared it not contagious, but say it is a dangerous disease, and have advised every person to leave the city, who can conveniently do so." Land for Sale.

LOT No. 31, in the 2d Concession of the Township of Pickering, and about 40 miles from York.

The land is of the best quality, and possesses the very great advantages of having the main road from York to Kingston and a large stream of water passing through it. The new Townships in the rear which are settling very fast, will make the land in that neighbourhood much more valuable than before.

Very easy terms of payment will be given. For particulars, enquire at the Printers office.

Notice to Innkeepers.

WITH a view to improve the state of the TAVERNS in the District of London, the Magistrates have determined to limit the number of Taverns the ensuing year; and to assist from the number of applicants for Licences, such persons of character and substance, as are most likely to provide in the most effectual manner for the comfort and accommodation of travellers.

The Magistrates particularly recommend the vicinity of the Court House in the Town ship of Charlottville, as an eligible situation for a Tavern on a liberal and extensive plan; as during the Courts of General and Adjourned Quarter Sessions of the Peace, the Town Meetings and General Musters of Militia are held there: and, independent of the advantages of local situation, the Magistrates of the District, James Mitchell and Joseph Ryerson, Esquires, as an encouragement to any person of character and enterprize, who will provide and undertake to keep a house sufficiently commodious, have determined that no other house shall be licenced in the Village or neighbourhood. 10w43

WM. COOPER,
Government Auctioneer.
N. B. 14, 1817.

Executive Council Office,
York, 23d Oct. 1817.

NOTICE is hereby given, by order of His Honor the Administrator in Council, to the Respective Sons of John Galloway and William Chilliers, to make good my pretension to Lot number Twenty-one in the Fifth Concession of the Township of Kingston, within six Months from this date, or it will be granted to the only remaining Son who has been in possession sixteen years.

JOHN SMALL,
Clk. of the Ex. Council.

NOTICE is hereby given, that the Inhabitants of the Western part of the Midland District, and the Eastern part of New-Castle District, in this Province, intend petitioning the Legislature at the next session, for a division of the District, and to erect the City of the present Court-House.

Carding Machines.

THE Subscriber begs leave to inform the public that he has commenced the Manufacture of CARDING MACHINES, in the Town of York, 18 miles above Burlington, in Upper Canada. Any person wishing to purchase, may be informed with a rather more full description of my machines, and on reasonable terms. The Machines are made in a workmanlike manner, and he does not hesitate to warrant them equal, if not superior, to any imported.

LYMAN HUDSON.
Yonge, 11th August, 1817.

N. B. The copartnership heretofore subsisting between Lyman Hudson and James Thompson, is dissolved by mutual consent, and the business will be carried on by LYMAN HUDSON.

Extraordinary Gale. On Wednesday last we experienced a very severe gale of wind; it commenced about the middle of the day, and continued with unabated fury, until we left our other side of the Gale. The water in Burlington creek rose 6 or 7 feet, and completely inundated the flats to the foot of the hills, where the largest logs of flood wood passed over them in almost every part. The ordered road cut in this village down to a level with the water, was in a night more before. The bridge across Little Burlington creek was entirely covered with water. Most of the fences, many houses, wood, &c. appeared to be very much rid off. We have considerable loss has been sustained on the Lake. A small vessel, called the King Fisher, has been taken up near Buck Bay, with out a mast or board.

We have been informed that some damage has been done to the Mill at Dundas by the gale.—Bal. Co. Gaz.

It is currently reported that a respectable man named Williams, who keeps a retail store at Middletown, Connecticut, is advertised to be executed by the public for Gladiatorship in Carthage, with the sum of 15,000 pounds sterling for his body; and that the records only show that the immediate proximity of his execution has not been made known to him. We understand that the sum of 15,000 pounds sterling is offered for the body of the said Williams.—N. Y. Mercantile Advertiser.

QUEBEC, Nov. 8

Fiscale J'd Piscataby.—On a farm, near Sir Perchus, on the mountainside of the Jesuits' Estates, a tenant has a piece of ground, not three-quarters of an arpent in extent, now dug up and sowing with his seeds of Potatoes, of the finest white kind. The seed was planted in drills 4 feet apart: a practice recommended by the Seigneur himself, and which, as soon as he established one, it went prospered and strongly adopted.

We are sorry to find that Sir. Atchison, Esq. of Great Hawkesbury-road, London, who has for many years collected the most valuable facts to promote the welfare and best interests of the British North American Colonies, more especially from the public prints, the establishment of an Agricultural Society in Quebec, immediately on a broad example of the Highland Society for the variety of Arts, Manufactures and Commerce, in London, to be established, as we hope to this new institution, which will be transcended by no early vegetable Syringe.—Mercury.

Monthly Agricultural Report for the District of Montreal, for October 1817.

This month has been very unfavorable for rural pursuits, the frequent chance of the ensuing harvest much trouble and disappointment to the farmer in housing the late crops, but there were scarcely any thing out at the close of the month.

The Oats have been much discoloured, and so the neighbor

The late Peas have sold in colour, many were also lost entirely.

The Horse-Beans were housed in good order, this value will be a nutritious food for cattle, and are when ground with Oats, very well, and are very good for Horses, Pigs Sheep, and Poultry.

The Millet and Indian Corn, will be good, Ripened, and but, it being almost cut late in the Autumn, it could not be housed well from the continued rain.

The Potatoe crop has been generally good, but the rot has of late much destroyed the potatoes, and from the immense quantity that was planted during the summer months, is a former year.

Carrots in field—there are a fair crop.

Parsnips are severe fit for use.

Mangel-Wurtzel has been successful on high lands.

The Cabbages are very indifferent from the Turnip Fly having preyed on them in the Early

SLAVE TRADE.

(Ordered by the House of Commons to be printed.)

Admiralty-Office, July 7, 1817.

Copy of a Letter from Captain Sir Robert Mends, Vice to John. H. Jones Cooker, Esq. dated London-street, Greenwich, 1817.

Sir—I have the honour to lay before you, for the information of their Lordships, such observations as I have made in the course of my visit to the Havana, on the present state of Africa.

To the Spanish Government, and their liberal and benevolent persons who for years past have been exerting their interest and wealth to the cause of Africa, I owe the pleasure to say that all the efforts towards obtaining the real abolition of slavery have been, and are, successful, for though new negroes are sometimes smuggled over the Islands, they are few in number with respect to this country, yet the cruelty to those now taken are to say the Spaniards and Portuguese, the Spanish and Portuguese Africans appear to have had no other effect than that of increasing the price of the Slaves, and Portugal, whose Commerce with her own Colonies is extensive, and who has been the most to say that it will still further increase, as the fear of a termination to the trade in a few years, will naturally induce the planter to avail great activity. They now fill the islands with as many negroes as they can buy this Africans. In a passage of 21 days, more than 1 in each, and the Captain of the Vessel, who was also guard in the midst of the sick by a painful duty, and the Officers and Crew of the Spanish Packet was a privateer of a pledge, and was obliged to take out only the crew, but Africans on board the Slaves, and many of them were sold to Sierra Leone. And these Powers consequently have not the least trouble, and are in such a perfect good understanding with the Spanish Government that the Instructions for the Commissioners of Syphax, which vessel had purchased 800 slaves, but had not time to load before the arrival of the Commissioners, and when on shore, that he would feed the slaves and would not land them until they were fit for sale, including him some tobacco as a commencement. The master is now at Whydah, in daily expectation of a cargo, and I have no doubt but he will succeed in taking off his cargo.

One of the Portuguese masters I captured, had made up his mind to be taken, and had twice once been captured. The trades they make are enormous. One of the schooners captured had purchased off the coast of Sierra Leone, having arrived but a few days on the coast, had only purchased one canoe, for which they gave 32 rolls of tobacco, each roll worth in the Havana 2,000 milreas, about 1,000 dollars, and for the rest of each slave to the Portuguese merchant £5 10s. for which he would receive 200 dollars. These facts I have from the Commissioners, slaves, or deserts, will prove how much the Africans are in the power of selling their slaves, from every extremity of Africa, so long as there is a market that will afford them a slave merchant. These Portuguese slaves still, I presume, clearly show, that the power of the abolition of the slave trade is also powerful, but that on the contrary, the wretch subsists on the natives is frequently practised by a single Portuguese, and that the only means of increasing the happiness and civilization of Africa, will be to annihilate the Slave Trade, for while there is such a facility in selling slaves, there will be no incentive to industry in that quarter of the world.

I now beg leave to describe the settlements in this country, as I see them. Sierra Leone is under the local Government of the Colonial Department. I shall say little of it here, but after all the cause of misery which has been expressed on its improvements, it is still in a more flourishing state; great abuses and inconveniences are said to have existed, and undoubtedly no doubt, but the present settlement condition, the reports appear to be too well founded.

The present Governor, Colonel M'Carthy, appears a solid, honourable, good man: but from the cruel proportion which the Europeans bear to the black population, it is often to be much regretted that he has not a military force sufficiently powerful in such a climate that Europeans can be stationed in the interior, and from Acting per month, and as a much greater of the Governor, I understand more on board the Slaves, and that the Governor has not had a short time before we arrive and settled in the Slaves, and that the Governor has not had a short time before we arrive and settled in the Slaves, and that the Governor has not had a short time before we arrive and settled in

Notice to Innkeepers.

WITH a view to improve the state of the Taverns in the District of London, the Magistrates have determined to limit the number of Taverns the ensuing year; and to select from the number to applicants for Licences, such persons of character and substance, as are most likely to provide in the most effectual manner for the comfort and accommodation of travellers.

The Magistrates particularly recommend the vicinity of the Court House in the Township of Charlotteville, as an eligible situation for a Tavern as a liberal and extensive plan the Assizes, the Courts of General and Adjourned Quarter Sessions of the Peace, the Home, Midland and General Meetings of the Board of Police, and the Meetings of the Trustees of the Grammar School, have all combined to afford the advantages of local situation, for Magistrates of the Division. James Macdonell and Joseph Ryerson, Esquires, as an encouragement to any person of character and enterprize, who will provide and endeavour to keep a house sufficiently commodious, have determined that no other house shall be licensed in the Village or neighbourhood.

WONDERFUL FISH.

In a history of Kent, published in England a few years ago, after an enumeration of several uncommon fishes, we find the following account of one, taken in St. Peter's in the Island Thanet, the 5th of July, 1574.

"He shot himself on shore on a little island, called Fidimus, where for want of water he died the next day, before which time his roaring was heard above a mile. His length was 22 yards, the nether jaw opening twelve foot—in the eye was more than a cart and six horses could draw—one stood upright in the place from which the eye was taken; the thickness from his back to top of his belly which lay upwards, was fourteen feet; the tail of the same breadth; the distance between his eyes was twelve feet; 3 men stood upright in his mouth; some of his ribs were sixteen feet long; the bone upon his cruel teeth, and a man might creep into his mouth."

QUEBEC, Nov. 13.

The Senate during the last week has been engaged, domestically unfavorable. A great deal of wrangling, which can be backboard, has been hotly performed and the part of the crown has gone still out. Since the publication of the last number of the Gazette, with the exception of a single day, when the weather was unfavorable, the Thermometer has been never for above 40 in the shade. Yesterday morning was ushered in with a heavy white fall of wonderful wind, however, continued about 48 o'clock yesterday morning, which has considerably reduced the temperature.

MR. MOORE,

I observed more than once in the Quebec Mercury what was thought to be an extraordinary production in the town of Potsdam, on the farm of Mr. Farnham, of Potsdam. The following is a much more extraordinary production, for the truth of which I can vouch. Mr. Joseph Poulton, a gentleman of the first of L. E. Hubert, Esquire, of St. Denis, River Chambly, weighed recently 2 pounds and a quarter. Which he reduced two pounds and a quarter each, the others a little less. To try are Lost at 8 Dollars, or one and a half pounds per ounce. The above gentleman gives it as his opinion, that the pea, which produced them the potatoes weighed in roots or drills, than as loosely done, in separate hills. It is certainly true that potatoes of a large size, and of a stony dry and sandy nature, therefore more fit for culinary purposes, than those of a rich and moist land, were the two different earths, where it is practicable, to be tried. Another early to grow for the use of the table, and for every pound for what might be procured for the cattle.

As a superintendent, Mr. Editor, that plenty will be either an both privileged and excellent, and we think that the same prevailed, in a considerable, in the last year, to prevent the frost from preventing into this culture, &c. Potatoes generally have sold for 2d. the bushel this fall. It would not be surprising were the 3d to be given for them in the course of the spring; for let the late and original reap the fruit of their industry.

From Europe.

LONDON, Oct. 2.

Monthly Agricultural Report.—In the Southern and lowland counties, the white corn is generally secured; it is locally, wheat out of good and tolerable, but a middle house will be sufficiently as by no report more specially, on these points. The wheat may be said of the Northern and best parts of Scotland. The northern and backward districts have been completely harassed during the fairness of the current month; but, for the completion of their harvest, must depend entirely upon the weather, which, of late, has been such as not even yet ripe. Beans will be nearer to the average crop than was fairly expected; peas, barley, oats and peas, the largest. Hops have greatly improved. Fruit generally abundant. Turnips in this country and over the Continent—From the constant rains in August, the following imperfect, and more distinguished; latter in Potatoes and turnips in great abundance—Grass damage has been sustained both in bad and pre-eminent corn, by the Lent rains being without the Privy Councillor Odell, and Mr. Joseph Peterloo is presumed to have been with them.

Cattle, both fat and store, considerably lower.

FRANKFORT, (Germany) Sept. 20.

The Grand Chancery of the Empire has received intimation in full society; daily receiving and noticing important communications, which, from the nature of the subject, cannot be made known to the public. The reports on these papers will be laid before the Diet in the course of this week; and we anticipate their discussion will give much interest to the assembly, and tend to break the spell of ennui which pervades all Europe.

We do not recollect having seen published a list of the taxes forming the Germanic Confederation, since the overthrow of the French protector, Bonaparte. In a French Almanac for the present year, we find the Lessons to be taken from the following Princes and States of Germany:—Austria; Hesse-Philippstal; Innsbruck; Hesse-Rheinfels; Hesse-Rotenburg; Hesse-Homburg; Lauenburg; Holstein; Holstein-Gluckstadt; Liechtenstein; Mecklenburg-Strelitz; Saxe-Weimar; Brunswick; Nassau; Saxe-Gotha; Saxe-Altenburg; Saxe-Meiningen; Saxe-Hildburghausen; Anhalt-Bernburg; Anhalt-Dessau; Anhalt-Cothen; Schwartzburg-Sondershausen; Schwartzburg-Rudolstadt; Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen; Waldeck; Reuss-Greitz; Reuss-Schleitz; Reuss-Lobenstein and Lippe-Detmold. All these States are independent sovereignties, except Austria, Grand Duke and Princes; each supporting a court of various degrees of splendour. They live quiet and unmolested, and Princes in front of the powers of Christendom.

Under Bonaparte the Confederation of the Rhine included besides the above States the Principality of Bithlen, Berg, Cleves, Nassau, Westphalia, Berg-and-Cleves, Neufchatel, Wurtzburg, Salm-Salm, Salm-Kyburg, Isenburg-Birstein, and Aschaffenburg.

Another cherry man in Lower Saxony, has in his village an inn, which is frequented by all the officers of an AIR SHIP. The machine is built at first sight, and, it is made to float in the air itself, by means of a large quantity of hot air, or balloons, of a particular construction, all of which escape in the course of the day of a lung—and the neck of a bird on the wings. The wings on both sides are attached to the body of the machine, to which the farmer's boy (from 12 years of age) whom the inventor has contracted to be accompanied, and who has been rewarded with it, is put considerable become his share of the profits, and who has been engaged to improve the management of the machine.

The name of the first of "Baron Charles Von Drais, has right some highly satisfactory letters of the 14th ult. from Mannheim, to his friend Silliard Jones. On the 12th of July he went from Mannheim to the Relay-House at Schwetzingen, a distance of 7 miles, in 1 hour, and returned in the same time. He had travelling on bare roads at the rate of 12 miles English nearly per hour. Since then he has, with the same machine, gone over at about an hour the ground between Mannheim and Carlsruhe, 15 miles in two hours and a half. The machine which the inventor has had made, consists of a seat on only two wheels moving one behind the other, that it may be used in the same paths. To prevent the machine from falling, when it is at rest, it is fixed with a cushion rested to it, on which he may lay arms, and before which is the small projecting board. Behind he has fixed another his private affairs. This machine, which may be used with great advantage for messengers and for other purposes, does not weigh 50 pounds, and can be made with little expense. It requires no horses, keep, &c. for four Carolines (24 shillings) is the very utmost.

New-Zealand Life Boat.—On Thursday week, at the Mansion-House, Captain Manning, R.N. and Mr. Alderman Daniel and a number of merchants and ship owners, with the Right Honourable Directors of his Majesty's Navy, and other gentlemen of the first consequence, assembled to witness the experiments of the new life-boat, which exceeded the most sanguine expectations. The experiments, which were by no means confined to a common ship, to answering to the new orders, to remain in the water about an hour, and the vessel was given. If so, this measure is probably intended to support the demands of Britain at Constantinople. The following is the Report respecting the extension of Canvey Canvas.

The gale was raging with great violence at Algiers. Towards the end of July from two to three hundred persons died daily. Many of these hundred persons have been perished. The foreign Consuls have retired in the country.

The Funding.—The 3 per cents. Consols opened at 81 1-8 for the Account, and at 12 o'clock the Consols remained at the same price. Navy 5 per cents. 1819 were served at 91 7-8 by the Jobbers. No confidence are the money of sum of account considerable sale, and the Bank Stock. The next opening opened that Consols would be done at 82 1-8; but before the Stock Exchange Consols were this morning at 81½ per and Exchequer Bills at 4d.

Price of Saturday's last per cent Consols, 81 7-8, 82 1-8; Cons. for Account, 81 7-8.

PARIS, Oct. 4.

It is said that the Allied Monarchs will meet in the course of next year, at Aix-la-Chapelle, for a determination respecting the army of occupation in France. Frankfort and Aix-la-Chapelle have been severally mentioned for this meeting, but it now appears that it will take place at Aix-la-Chapelle. The Emperor of Russia will proceed to Warsaw, and from thence to Petersburgh.

It is understood that the Duke of Angoulême, Admiral of France, is about to inspect the vessels and naval arsenals in the southern departments.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 23.

During last fortnight, the plague has spread in a most dreadful manner in this capital and at Pera and Galipoli. The Turks attribute the sickness to the Greeks having poisoned the wells; and, in consequence, many Greeks have died in the suite of the Grand Vizier.

PETERSBURGH, Sept. 9.

The harvest is most abundant in almost all the provinces of the Empire. The crops are good and free from mildew, but the temperature became already to be cold, and announces an early winter.

The new loan for clothing the paper money is very successful, and exceeds the sum of the reign capital.

HAMBURGH, Sept. 30.

Travellers arrived here from Lubeck have brought the melancholy intelligence, that the town of Neustadt, in Holstein, has been entirely destroyed but hardly by a dreadful fire. It is stated that very large subscriptions have been consumed.

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 27.

By a decision of his Majesty, the exportation and importation of arms and ammunition, to and from the West India possessions, is prohibited.

ST. PETERSBURGH, Sept. 9.

A circular letter from Count Nesselrode, informs the foreign Ambassadors, that he is ordered to follow the Emperor to Aix-la-Chapelle, at the end of September, and that in the mean time the Privy Councillor Odell, will receive the Diplomatic Corps, and remain with them

LONDON, Sept. 29.

Dutch Cruelty.—The horrible tragedy of Dutch cruelty has already commenced in Java; and it will not stop here. The Quarterly Review, just published, contains the following are not of a most atrocious transaction, to which we scarcely know where to look for a parallel, unless it be in the Black Hole in Calcutta, the massacre of the English in Amboyna, or of the Chinese in Batavia, when the streets of that capital literally ran with blood. We plunge ourselves (say the Reviewers) for the truth of the statement; and by exposing to the whole world a scene of such infamy, feel that we are performing a public duty.—May we hope that this exposure, will be the means of creating such universal indignation against the parties concerned in the bloody deed, as may prevent the recurrence of such inhuman and disgraceful transactions!

"Towards the latter end of November last, the Pottingee or chief of the village of Chipmonchong, in the district of Chateau, named Tambi, observing disturbances to prevail among the inhabitants of the district, in consequence of some unauthorized exactions of the Kapato Chuntacs, and wishing to put a stop to the authority over them, took advantage of the circumstances, and getting several other heads of villages to join, prevailed on a number of the lower people to assemble, under the ostensible pica of going to Indramayo, to lay their grievances before the "Landrad," as he for president's name, who had the charge of the police in those districts, was usually called.

"Having collected together a body of nearly 1,000 persons, at first in small parties, under active emissaries, were dispatched to the neighboring districts to beat up for recruits, and many cases occurred of poor people being forcibly fetched and forced to join the party. As they increased in numbers, the party moved towards the river Chimanuck, the boundary between the Indramayo districts and Cheribon, and in their route were joined by all who had or fancied they had any grievance to complain of. As they these, it is understood, that very few were from Kandang houses; but some heads of villages and a considerable number of the lower class, are stated to have gained them from the district of Indramayo, and of the latter a number from the lower Cawang districts. At this stage of their progress, it appears to have been first circulated among them that the Pangaran Kasomin might be expected from the Prince as aiding," to join them in their march. The Pangaran Kamoonan, who, I understand, was banished during the incarceration of Bagoos Rangin, is represented to be a descendant of the Sultan of Cheribon, who was first promoter of the disturbances in Cheribon Sourang, and his family have always possessed great influence in the western part of that district.

"Whatever the real object or expectations of the leaders of the misguided people may have been, it is ascertained that not a single chief or rank, above the head of a village, joined them, or appeared, in any manner, to give them support or countenance.

"By the time they arrived at Lobenar, a village situated on the banks of the Chimanuck, 7 miles from Indramayo, the party amounted to about 900 men, which number it never exceeded. It is a fact well worthy of notice that in the course of the disturbances, apparently fifty pulls, from Chasm to Lobenar, not an instance is known to have occurred of property of any kind having been injured or plundered, which circumstance is ordinary at Lobenar for many days, during which the rice, paddy, cattle, and other property, of Mr. Muntinghe were most unsparingly destroyed in any way under the charge only of a few natives, not a single article was touched, nor a human being molested.

"Preparations were now in forwardness by the residents of the Pringaran Regencies and Cheribon to attack the insurgents, if they may be so called, and it was carried into execution at Lobenar on 20th December. It is estimated that 100 of the insurgents fell in the engagement, and 204 were made prisoners. Keyes, the Pottingee who first commenced the insurrection, was observed to be very actively encouraging his men to repel the Malays, who, he said, were about to be assaulted among the killed. When the prisoners were disarmed, Mr. Muntman, the Dutch resident, (whose conduct on the occasion I understand and humanity) delivered them over to the military, in order that they might be securely guarded to Indramayo, and at the same time, by a well timed act of policy, he gave them a coffee-store to warm the feet, and the store house were amused with comforts.—In the course of the night it is stated that inquiry was made on the part of the prisoners, to escape from confinement—the sentries on guard fired upon them, and, terrified to others, it is said, in consequence of 600 souls, in cold blood, by the musketry under the orders and in the presence of their own officers! Mr. Muntman could not think it was in his power to stop this dreadful sacrifice of human blood, but without effect; sometimes seems to have been paid to his representations, and he was obliged to leave the spot, as he himself declares, with feelings not to be described, to the spectacle of an unarmed multitude of poor misled creatures, who had thrown down their arms and made prisoners in the morning, massacred by their guards, commanded by two officers, one bearing the unofficial title of lieutenant, under the weak, incontrovertible, and inhuman pretext, that they could not be otherwise responsible for the security of their prisoners, or for their own safety.

"Will it be credited that a number of unarmed wretches, confined in a secure tenbwood building within a fort, should ever think of attacking a military force surrounding them as guards; and to whom they had been for days in charge, or have succeeded themselves as prisoners, while they had yet arms in their hands? He must be credulous indeed, who can bring his mind to such belief. If ever the truth comes to light, it will then, I am convinced, be found that no effort to give themselves fresh air, quite natural to men so confined, was ever found in a building of comparatively small dimensions, the doors and windows of which were modeled closed for the purpose of their being more completely at the mercy of their guards crowded as an attempt to escape—and the scene of blood once begun, the massacre appears to have been facilitated, made such resistance as they had in their power, in the vain hope of saving their lives. But this he is at once, those who remained in the fort, were were entertained in coffee-houses and dispatched up the river to Tamong Samborg, and soon on the road to Indramayo, and of the tragedy took place. An attempt is said to have been again made by the prisoners to escape, and on this occasion some were killed, and the rest

...surface of the sea. It is evident that when the ... began to rise, the surface had been greatly agitated ... by the wind every where, except that ... occupied by the city Jan. which would be constantly smooth and at rest. It is also evident, that this part would not emerge quite as soon as that in a state of motion; but less time however, than water, when at rest, may be deemed many degrees below the freezing point, without losing its fluidity, but on the slightest agitation, the consolidation is instantaneous.

Why the figure of the last was not accomplished on the sea, is a further corroboration of the foregoing solution, as any ship or greasy fluid would undoubtedly find a passage through a surface of ice, so various as that.

The whole time bordering the ignite, seems to have been occasioned by the abrupt translation of the condensed expandidation, and the transparency of the ice by the tranquil state of the water in the act of congelation, by which the extreme particles with which it was unavoidably mixed, would be deposited.

With respect to the necessities accruing the figure, and afterwards disappearing, it might either have been swept off by the winds, or more probably melted during the day, when expanded on smooth a body, while that on the other parts would be protected by the inequality of surface.

Mr. Nicholson offers a few observations in opposition to the above hypothesis. He says

1. When salt is poured or dropped on water, it sounds on all sides with astonishing rapidity. I suppose five or six yards in a second and penetrate the surface by augmenting the effect of the wind in throwing ordinary waves; but it does not destroy the larger waves or the swell, nor prevent the undulations from being transmitted from the rough parts into the calm other.

2. The assembled mullets is carried gradually to leeward, and after a short time, perhaps one or three minutes, a large pond is also which all but been poured, will become as rough as 4 feet.

3. The seas was drowned about a fortnight before the frost came on, which seems a long time for the oil to have been rising and condensing itself to a definite space in so small a pond except if we suppose some process or change to have developed the oil just at the time of the frost, and not before—this change would also be likely to be attended with a change of temperature. And even then, state oil spreads so quickly, and has so transient an effect (and Mr. H.'s hypothesis supposes a wind to have been required), it appears scarcely to be admitted that it could have occasioned that permanent and undoubtedly bounded quiescence which his case unfolds demands.

Another writer of the name of George Cayley, attempts to explain the phenomenon in the following manner:

"Water casks with the small portion of air it held in motion during frosting, and thus a number of minute bubbles are found in almost all ice; but the ... no supply of bubbles I allude to, certainly run from the bottom as the portion of water congealed by contact is not sufficiently large to produce them. If under these circumstances, any convex body rested firmly upon the seal, as that of the greatest person addicted to, all the pond would become ... and with bubbles, except the portion of it immediately above the body, where they would be intercepted by it, and collect in one ... under it on every side, till they could flow with, perfect perpendicularity, and thus in the act of melting, give an accumulated white ... a perfectly distinct outline of the figure ... so appears to have been the case in his ... The ice forming within this outline would be ... and therefore would be clear and ... slippery, according to the reason given and the best of universal experience, ... the whole remaining world to fall of ... bubbles ... confused chrystalization would ... bubbles ... cities of the water."

A Cayley, ... dissertation and other observations, thinks that this ice must may be put to proof, and ... will place a convex piece of wood, ... to be rather heavier than water, at the ... of some pond next winter. He supposes that its figure may become ... on the ice in a similar manner to that of the unfortunate deceased man.

He supposes also, that the covering of snow being dissolved, or not lying upon the figure in the same manner as on the rest of the ice, ... would be a the greatest conducting power of ice in a state of ... and in a state of ... congelation.

A Mr Harvey, in order to illustrate the said phenomenon, gives a curious account of discovering trees in the ponds and bogs of Ireland by a corresponding delineation upon the surface of the ice above them, and he says, where-ever bogs lie at the bottom of ponds even of thirty or forty feet deep, they are sure to produce ... appearances of elongations, when the pond is frozen, upon the surface of the ice.
