Mr Nicholson offers the following remarks on the above letter:

"Though the indistinct outline of a large object not deeply immersed in a small stagnant pool may seem to be well explained; yet the same principles do not appear adequate to shew why the ramifications of a tree buried 30 feet in the bog, should be neatly figured upon the ice of water lying on its surface. None of the generally operative powers with which we are acquainted, present a solution of this effect. Heat, electricity, gravitation—and those the latter only known to act in the ... under this ... ground for the ... of ... would be desirable to know, whether the ice of the latter were different in nature from that.

In addition to the above, we shall add a phenomenon which we ourselves have frequently observed, as less remarkable, although probably produced in the same one or more similar to it. The phenomenon is to which we allude is this. If a tree be cut close by the root, particularly one of those trees which are cut in such a season during a severe frost; there will be seen, for some days after the tree is cut down, a black ... oozing from the trunk, forming as it were a quarter to the original tree.

We remember a most beautiful appearance of this sort which displayed itself in the vine several cut roots on new Pentonville, in Woodford county, Kentucky. In viewing the observation of an acquaintance, upon a December morning, we found more a pair clusts at least forty or fifty large trees had been cut down. Near about every tree remaining a little after sun rise, when the thermometer was at 26 degrees, and the day perfectly clear, there seemed to be presented to our view a black appearance of trees rising from the trunks of those cut down, and which, in every respect the form and appearances of real trees.

The Mobile Gazette of the 6th October. (the last received) states, that information had reached that place, that the Seminole Indians to the number of 3,000, were in arms.

There is no doubt of the hostile feelings of the Tribe of Indians; but much later accounts from the Georgia frontier do not corroborate the Mobile story. Any movement of the Seminoles here is reason to hope that the movement of Gen. Gaines into the Indian country will have the effect of preventing a war with those deladed beings; but if not, the force will soon be here to ... them to submission.

From Cayenne—Captain Johnson of the brig Jessica, who arrived at Marblehead on the 24th inst. in 42 days from Cayenne states that there had been more sickness at that place since the season than had ever been known there before. Mission to South America.—There are now no correct opinions or knowledge of this Mission, that any correct opinion can be formed with its real object. The following article on the subject is from the Baltimore Federal Gazette of Friday last viz.

"It appears that Judge Bland and the other commissioners were to have departed from this city yesterday, in the steam-boat, bound in the first place for Norfolk, where it is said the Congress Frigate is prepared to take them on board, and to proceed to Buenos Ayres—but some one not still haste-ends answer.

"It has been by some suspected, ever since the first creation of this Mission, that there was an intention on the part of the Executive to send out Commissioners to the revolted Provinces of a power with which our country has peace, but that the appointment and the mission were designeded to avoid to unnecessarily to offend Spain. Our fact which is now ascertained, tends to prove, that the mission above set out all consisted of the certainty that they are actually to proceed on the mission—Mr Bland has not resigned his office of Judge, nor has declared that he does not intend to resign."

Prize to the Surveur—A thousand pound of the 20th inst. announces the arrival at that port of the Revenue Cutter Dallas. Captain Smith bringing in the Spanish schooner Tantelle, with 102 slaves. The Tantelle was bound for Havannah, and was captured by the Cutter off the privateer Boston, and ordered into America. The Boston on discovering the Tantelle sent her boat with an officer to board—but the prize master of the sole would not offer the boarding officer to come on board, and lord into the boat a volley of musketry, he did on demand. The Spaniard on seeing this, immediately opened a broad-side on the star cut away her boats, and dashed her mark. The after however made her escape and put into Augusta. Captain Elliott demanded the Tantelle, which was refused—certain E. then blockaded the port of Augusta, suffering nothing to go in, which induced Lacy to give the schooner after taking 12 slaves and plundering her of ... valuable articles—Van Savage the ... ordered the Tantelle, to Savannah for adjudication. under convoy of the Cutter Dallas.

MURDER AND PIRACY.

Capt. Dow, arrived on Wednesday from Canton, has politely favored us with the following information from his private journal:—

"On or about the 16th or May, the ship Wabash, Capt Gantt of Baltimore, arrived in Macao Roads. In company with the above United States and Elizabeth, all from Batavia. On the 20th, Capt G. came up to Canton. In the E. in order to ascertain the market for opium, having a large quantity of that article on board leaving the vessel in charge of the two mates, boatswain and twelve men and boys.

"On the 24th at 8 P. M the ship was boarded by a Lorchoo boat, under pretence of having a pilot to put on board, and a letter from the Captain. They amused the Officers with these pretences, until it was dark and about half past 9 they made the attack with long knives—three being from 25 to 30 on deck. The chief mate (Mr Hall) was the first person killed—the second mate at the same moment. Sadly wounded (died since by)—three seamen were killed, and two badly wounded—two men jumped overboard, one of them swam to one of the Lorchoo Islands and was brought on board next day by a Chinese fisherman—reported after having been in the water three or seven hours, and the other had not (so late as June 5) been heard of.

"After the Lorchoos had gained full possession of the ship, and the surviving crew had confined in the forecastle, one of the Lorchoos opened the forecastle, and requested them to come up, and tell where the money was, telling them they had nothing to fear—that if they refused the Lorchoos said they would burn the ship. One of the crew ventured to come on deck, after some time, when they commenced plundering the vessel—They first secured all the specie, amounting to over $40,000 also about 35 chests of opium, worth from 27 to 30,000 dollars, and many more articles of value.

"The United States was at the distance of only one mile at the time but knew nothing of the affair until next morning—they, however, saw some suspicious boats during the night, and had arrived sled at them.

"Exertions were making by John F. Cushing, Esq. and the other American residents at Canton, for restitution of the property from the Chinese Government—I think it doubtful if any thing can be obtained as the place where the act was committed, is not as presently within the jurisdiction of the Government as if it had been whose Chamber. From the Boston Daily Advertiser

There has lately appeared in the ancient Intelligencer, a translation of an exposition by Pueyrredon, supreme director of the United Provinces of La Plata and Chili, of the course of measures since the counter-revolution of the 8th of October. It is a paper addressed to the people of that country and not susceptible of being very fully understood by persons not thereby acquainted with the general course of events. We shall therefore endeavor to collect from it such facts as are distinctly stated in it, and as will serve to enlighten us upon the present condition of that country.

The evils which had threatened the country, from the want of an efficient government, had increased from the year 1810, to the end of 1816—when they seemed to have come to a crisis. The army had ceased to be on the point of dissolution—the troops assembled for the purpose of settling the Chili, were not seen to ... commencement. We have it from authority not to be questioned, that all the paragraphs in the English papers respecting the correspondence between Lord Amherst and Bonaparte, are wholly unfounded; and that his Lordship was not charged with any letters from the ci-devant ruler of France. CULTURE OF POTATOES.

As much attention has of late years been paid to the culture of this most valuable vegetable; and as the late season has given extraordinary instances of productive crops, many communications have been sent to our newspapers, of favouring, unexampled in the annals of Agriculture in North America. As another instance we give the the following, which may be implicitly relied on for correctness. On the Reverend John Bethune's farm, in Augusta, Upper Canada, he had HALF-an-acre of ground, planted with English seed, manured as usual, which yielded 314 bushels. This surpasses any crop reported in the United States, or in Canada last season, except on Clarke's farm at La-Prairie; but his ground has yet to be accurately measured, before his superiority can be ascertained.—Montreal Herald.

Agricultural Report for the District of Montreal for November, 1817.

The beginning of this month was very unfavorable for Ploughing from the fall of snow which lay on the ground until the 7th, when that labour was resumed until the 18th. The frost set in at that date, and prevented any further operations. The weather continuing open through the latter part of the month, the cattle got the chief of their subsistance in the fields.

On reviewing the land that has been rather preparation for spring sowing, we find that this Fall has been worked with difficulty from the wetness of the season, and are not in so good a state as could be wished. The lay lands under break have much the advantage in appearance; and perhaps seldom worked better than in the present Autumn.

From the advanced state of the year, the farmers had an opportunity to ascertain what may be the probable return of the crops: from the great moisture in the summer, the Wheat has not generally filled well, consequently is light—the other grain crops are in a similar state.

A new, or rather old species of Wheat has been introduced into the northern parts of Britain from the Continent, called Spelt, or Rye; it is said to be approved of beneficially. There is a species of Wheat similar to it, recommended to the curious of this country: it would be a great advantage to know whether the bread made of it is good although the Flour may be white, the bread may be dark and bad.—E.

Cartwright, Chairman of the Committee appointed for drawing up Laws and Regulations for the government of the "KINGSTON COMPASSIONATE SOCIETY."

[illegible]

Your Committee are fully aware that under common circumstances, systematic Charity is not unfrequently productive of very mischievous consequences —but, as the situation of the persons, whom it is now proposed to relieve, is widely different from that of those, who are usually the objects of charitable institutions, and as the kind of relief to be afforded, will, by consequence, vary also from that generally afforded, your Committee cannot but hope that very different will also be the result.

To their want of local information, may chiefly be attributed the distresses of Emigrants. It frequently happens, that whilst they are remaining inactive and starving in the town, where they first arrived, the Farmer and country resident, are complaining of their inability to procure hands for the common purposes of husbandry. Hence, were it merely proposed to afford to both parties, an opportunity of becoming acquainted with each other's wants, it would surely not only very materially contribute to diminish distress but would set the active hand to promote the prosperity of the community at large.

It is a lamentable fact that during the late summer, many awful cases of distress had arrived at Kingston, were adopted over to the United States by the greater facilities afforded for obtaining employment; and of those who did remain, many were reduced to the most wretched state of poverty and want. These, though serious, are unnecessary evils. It is a century as expensive, as it is unnecessary for employment for labour, should be greatly glutted—nor indeed, is it so; it only requires, that the new Colonists be directed to those points, where their services are most wanted, and with moderate industry, they will in a few years, be able to obtain that competency, in return of which they left their native homes.

To furnish information therefore to the Emigrant, on his first arrival, and to assist him in procuring employment, your Committee consider to be the primary, and leading object of this Institution; and with this view have drawn up such regulations, as will contribute, with the co-operation of the community, to accomplish these desirable ends.

With respect to the administering temporary relief, your Committee have not thought it necessary, to confine the duties or temporary power, of the officers of the Society, by any limited or specific regulations; it is however strongly recommended, that such means be, at all times adopted, as may screen the Society, as much as possible from imposition.

In a more advanced stage many other long-extent consideration will necessarily arise; for the present, however, the suggestions which have been already offered may be deemed sufficient.

Your Committee have therefore only to express their fervent hope, that all will be eager to come forward in the support of an institution, which has for its motive, the bettering our fellow creatures, and for its object, their comfort and advantage.

The late intelligence, that the Dey of Algiers has lost his head, is a proof of the continuance of those inhuman and monstrous customs among Mussulmen, which ascribe to the ruler all the misfortunes of the government. The Dey of Algiers, lately strangled, was one of the most able and efficient officers ever at the head of those desperadoes. He was originally a janissary, and advanced himself to the highest offices. At the attack on Algiers by Lord Exmouth, an attack let what will be said about it, which was highly honourable to those engaged in it, the Dey displayed an unconquerable intrepidity. In the very height of the battle, and surrounded by showers of ball, he was seen in a little skiff going from battery to battery, and animating his troops; and, after the fortifications were demolished, the promptness and facility with which he repaired his losses, was a strong proof of activity and enterprize. But, on the whole, his reign was unfortunate. Then [illegible] mine [illegible] buts? and, succeeded to these preceding events, as they were considered, the plague broke out; and all these misfortunes were attributed to the Dey, and his valour and activity could not destroy the superstition of those people, and he was sacrificed. There is, however, no cause to lament this circumstance; every Dey who is chosen knows full well that if he does not die a natural death, and his administration is not very prosperous, he must lose his head whenever the caprice of the janissaries shall decide on that point. In the decapitation of a Dey, much unanimity generally prevails, though a choice of a successor is sometimes difficult. It is related, that on an occasion of this kind, a compromise took place between the parties, having assembled in the square, and after being able to fix on a suitable candidate, agreed that they should leave the place they were assembled at, and the first man they met at a certain place should be the Dey. This turned out to be a grave digger, who, indeed, represented that he was incapable of filling the throne, that his pursuits were tranquil and unambitious, and he begged hard to be released from the difficulties by which he would be surrounded. It was, however, unavailing, they decorated him with a caftan and turban, and placed him in the seat of power; and the grave digger actually decided justly in all cases, and did the best for the people [illegible] the extent of his capacity; but as his administration was marked by no peculiar traits—as he was not wholly tyrannical, nor the government satisfactorily organised, he was told by a revolutionary party that his power was at an end. He was perfectly content, and acknowledged that his capacity and qualifications were inadequate to the duties, and that he was prepared to resign and return to his old peaceable employment of digging graves. This could not be permitted, and he was informed that the honor of the office would be grievously affected by such a determination, and that he must consent to lose his head; and, contrary to his serious remonstrances, they seized the trembling unfortunate, and strangled him without delay. From a people thus influenced, nothing enlightened nor correct can be anticipated.

From the Commercial Advertiser.

Louis XVII.—We lately published an account of a young man now confined in France, who claims to be the Son of Louis the 16th. The [illegible] additional information respecting his claims, will at least be read with interest. We copy it from the Chester and Delaware County Intelligencer.

IMPORTANT NEWS FROM FRANCE.

We are indebted to the kindness of a friend for the following extract of a letter, written by a young man residing in Chester county, and now pursuing his studies at Paris.

Paris, [illegible] 1817.

My Dear [illegible]

There is a [illegible] here, and what [illegible] caused the attachment [illegible] Louis XVII. Many is very generous, that, a person giving himself out for royalty, is confined at Rouen—and it is said is treated with considerable distinction. His case and his cause will be brought before the House of Peers at their next session.

The account he gives of himself is, that he was saved from the Temple in 1795 by the Gendarmerie, in a bundle of dirty clothes, being their dreary employment at [illegible] for some time in England under the protection of the government, and [illegible] ancles refusing to acknowledge him and even making several attempts to take him off by poison, he was obliged to withdraw to [illegible] for himself. Thus turned upon the world, and afraid of the machinations of his uncles, particularly the Count D'Artois, he sought an asylum in [illegible] native country, and in Corsica, where there still remained a great number of the ancient nobility, he met a tragical kind of life, receiving hospitality, a money, liberality from the [illegible] under the name of Louis XVII. At last attracted the attention of [illegible] poison, who had him arrested—tried and condemned to two years imprisonment as a swindler. After the expiration of this time, he was discharged, but pursuing the same course of life, without, however, [illegible] to be any other object than to procure [illegible] and a subsistence—he was again arrested by order of Napoleon, and confined in the castle of Vincennes, where he remained [illegible] after the restoration of the present [illegible] restoration—where he was arrested and confined at Rouen.

Although this no doubt will appear strange, as it did to me at first—that a pretender—there are a great [illegible] circumstances which render it [illegible] probable. In the first place, [illegible] death of the young prince was [illegible] as [illegible] fact. That four persons who were [illegible] in to attend on the young prince Dauphin Dreaux was [illegible] around only [illegible] that a child of [illegible] age was dead. [illegible] they were all out [illegible] less than six months after [illegible] two. It is also [illegible] that at the return of the family, although [illegible] have been satisfying [illegible] the disturbed family home from the Capet down, nothing has been [illegible] about those of Louis XVII. many [illegible] this if he had never existed. Besides being thus rendered at least apparent, let us, prostituting his escape, [illegible] how it was effected, and why he was afterwards refused [illegible] to be [illegible].

It was well known that [illegible] that time there was a negociation [illegible] between the royal [illegible] and convention, for his release. The latter demanded as an equivalent, the evacuation of France by the royal and allied troops. During this negociation, a plan for effecting his escape was laid. $0,000 francs were paid to an English cabinet maker named ——, residing in Paris, for his son, to substitute him for the prince. A large dose of opium was given to the child, to procure the unconscious acquiescence—and in a state, he was transported by two gendarmes, in his basket, and left [illegible] of the prince; he being removed as [illegible] have mentioned. Of the deception [illegible] it is said the boy died. The [illegible] the Directory perceiving they were duped, to save themselves from [illegible] and to destroy the influence which [illegible] opinion of his existence might have, in France, immediately declared him [illegible] den death. When this report reached the Vendean army, the royal [illegible] either imposed upon by it, or seeing it motives to gratify their ambition—declared Louis 19th King. He was [illegible] ed as such by the army, and acknowledged by the allied powers—as the on the arrival of the prince, they [illegible] ed him as an imposter. They [illegible] readily conceive the extensive and powerful motives they all must have had, [illegible] this policy: as it opposed to [illegible]

Mrs. White, a widow lady, who with her family, occupied a cottage at Hampstead, during the last fortnight has been much alarmed by unusual noises in various parts of her premises, at the dead hour of the night. At first she was inclined to believe these sounds proceeded from thieves, but having entered on nothing to confirm her suspicions, this idea was abandoned, and one of a more supernatural description found place in her breast; namely, that the disturbance arose from some supernatural agency, a belief which was confirmed by both her servant maids, who affirmed in the positively that they had seen things which had the appearance of a human figure enveloped in a sheet, flitting about the garden after night fell. The terror arising from the continuance of these supposed visitations from the other world which were kept a secret from the neighbourhood, at length induced Mrs. White to apply to her nephew, who at once suspected the cause, and by agreement was secretly admitted on the premises, in company with a friend, without the knowledge of the servants, on Thursday night; when, taking their station behind some trees in the shrubbery, they patiently waited the midnight hour, being provided with a dark lantern in the event of artificial light being necessary to unravel the mystery. Soon after one o'clock, a figure, enveloped in white entered the garden from a [illegible] or cooking into an adjoining field, and appeared to dimly to the former, and rattled several of the shutters and doors. This turned out to be the signal of its arrival, and in a few seconds a female came from the house and joined the aerial visitant, who without much ceremony, embraced her, not in his shadowy but sinewy arms. While in this state of bliss, the friends approached with as much silence as possible, but not with sufficient precaution to prevent alarm, and before they could secure the latter, it had vanished, not into the air, nor into an adjoining pig-sty, which happened to be untenanted, and was filled with dry straw. The female remained with as much celerity into the house, and shut the door, writing in a state more easily conceived than described, the issue of the above-named interrupted visit. The friends having approached the house, rebutted the usual rebuff to cows, forth, with every article of which they were masters, in vain, till at length one of them deliberately set fire to the straw, the light and smoke of which produced desired effect, and to their infinite surprise and amusement out sprang [illegible] gentlemen, whose parents reside in the vicinity, and who had adopted this mode of carrying on an intrigue in the house maid. It is needless to add that the shame of his exposure as the dupper he had incurred as well as the [illegible] repetition of similar idle and [illegible] pastimes, by which, [illegible] many, the lives of [illegible] have been ended.

The Prince of Orange has left Brussels for Paris to join the Duke of Wellington. He had a parole to stay on the night of Thursday last, and has been ever since considered on. Since, however, he has suffered more or less but still no hopes are entertained. His physicians have had at no time the slightest without any appearance of recognition. In two instances only there appeared to be a momentary consciousness of his return. We shall not further impressing to get loose he has been confined to his bed, and has not yet left it. He passed out with his finger a part of his left hand, which is entirely dead. He has also had the same fit of the right side of his face, and the forehead paralytic attack which he has had on the left side in the present year. Latterly he was, however, extremely disappointed, and has since frequently regularly wearing away.

From the Edinburgh Review, No. LVI.

Article I. Travels in Caucasus and Georgia. "Prayer is one of the principal duties enjoined by Mahomet; and the Calmucks have hanged this duty to them in various manners, and with very different views.

"It is well known that a Russian must say his breviary five times a day. Among other shorter which are told of Jemtzen count, it is said that the sons of St. Ignatius invented a new method of complying with the injunctions of the church.—At the canonical hour, the Jesuit repeats the alphabet from A to Z, to which he adds a short collect, in which he begs that the Christian race may be taken as an equivalent for all the prayers which can be made out of the combination and repetition of the letters. The Calmucks have displayed still greater ingenuity.—We Europeans pride ourselves upon the superiority which we have attained, by substituting machinery for human labour. We think we have accomplished wonders, by employing the "strength of unconquered steam" in turning the spindle, or in setting the whole mill in motion. The followers of the Grand Lama have done more—they have invented praying-mills, which do the business in perfection. It is a doctrine amongst them, and it is an article of faith to which all true believers must subscribe, that each time a prayer is written down, whether free-thinker or devotee, he ever ventured to call it in question.) that an ora[illegible] on the paper, or utter a sentence upon which a prayer is written to be set in motion, this movement of the written prayer is as meritorious as its oral repetition. The Kanoth, or praying machine, is therefore constructed upon this principle:—It consists of two [illegible] drums, fixed within side, with rolls of paper covered with prayers and sacred texts, written in the Tibetan character and language. The drums are hung in a cast frame, and are kept on the whirl with a string and crank; and every turn of the cylinder is perfectly equivalent to the repetition of all the prayers contained in it. The turning the Kanoth is an agreeable practice in the long evenings of winter; but Tartar ingenuity has discovered a method of dispensing even with the slight [illegible] exertion which this occupation necessitates requires. We [illegible] with tobacco" must our meat—they enjoy the smoke pick to any other purpose for them; and the Kanoth is placed over the fire in the midst of the tent, to relieve all its devotional merit to the owner. The Mogols are yet more wisely economical of individual responsibility and labour. Amongst the other [illegible] of a district country is a [illegible] of their joint expence, which is placed on a mill house by the side of a running stream; and this substitution Kanoth is made so large, that it [illegible] prayers enough to serve for all the [illegible] and, consequently, except in a case of [illegible] drought, when the water is too low to turn the mill which grinds prayers for the parishioners, they are promptly reinvented from the inhabitants of heaven, and their time in the Church or temple. The Kanoth is another man's substitute for devotion, of the same nature. It is a flag, upon which the ear bears, or kinsman is pasted, together with an appropriate selection from the Calmuck ritual. So [illegible] were the conveyed prayers seen by Dr Clarke. As long as the kine [illegible] there is the wind, the inhabitants of [illegible] may [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

ROBBERIES

Between Saturday evening and Monday morning last, the store of Mr Adolphe Fortin, in St. Paul street, near the new market place, was entered by forcing open the iron door next the yard, the lid of the iron chest was broken in the shop where it stood, from which £65 were taken, another iron chest in the same room, which contained no cash, was not touched. Two cases of merchandize were also carried off, valued at about £150; but the exact quantity of Goods missing cannot be well ascertained—Robberies are now so frequent in this city, that they begin to be accounted as only common occurrences. Can no means be devised either to discover or put a stop to these abounding atrocities? Yesterday, about mid-day, the apartments of the reverend Mr. Leach, in St. Jacques street, opposite the English church, were forced open, though some of the family were up stairs at the time. The thief carried off a portmonteau or leather trunk, containing, besides several valuable articles, a Bank Check of one hundred pounds. Notice of the theft was immediately given at the Bank to prevent payment.—Herald.

MANSION-HOUSE.—The Ship Isabella. Yesterday a number of the persons who had taken their passage on board the Isabella, for New-York, appeared at the Justice-room to prefer their charges against Mr. Guyard, who attended upon the same.

The Lord Mayor observed, that it was unnecessary to state the complaints, the nature of them being pretty widely circulated.

Mr. Guyard said, he should account for his conduct, and he hoped to convince every one that he had acted without any dishonourable view in this unfortunate case. He had been acquainted with Mr. Reynolds's bankers, but a short time; and observing with him one day that a great deal of money was gained by the Mary-Ann, with 250 passengers on board, for New-York, there being reason to suppose the profit was £1000, he came to enter into an agreement to a similar speculation. Mr. Reynolds produced the Isabella for their agreement, but before being in readiness to intimate the power given by the Act of Parliament relative to passengers bound for the United States, and a total stranger to the manœuvres played by the Mary-Ann, which then lay in the river, under the pretext of sailing for New-York, Mr. Guyard argued the charter-party on terms unfavourable to himself, but being in readiness to proceed, but articles of dress, &c.

A female came forward and stated, that she had paid the purser of the ship the sum of £20, for her own and her husband's passage, provisions, &c. Another came forward and stated, that she had paid the purser of the ship the sum of £20, for her own and her husband's passage, provisions, &c. A female

From the New-York Advertiser.

The work which has lately appeared in England, under the title of Sketch of the Military and Political Power of Russia, in 1817—which is ascribed to Sir Robert Wilson, is calculated to excite considerable attention among all classes of readers. Sir Robert Wilson has been long known as the author of a book under French Campaigns in Egypt, and more recently as one of the three persons who effected the escape of Lavalette from prison, after he had received a sentence of death. In this former work, he first brought before the world the charges against Bonaparte, of having purposed the sick soldiers at Jaffa, and having ordered, whilst in Egypt, the massacre of several hundred Turkish prisoners. If he is partial to the British power or Russia, his sentiments have apparently experienced a material change with regard to the general character of the former object of his severe reproaches. This book discloses more to be rather the panegyrist, than the ass dant, of Bonaparte.

In a rapid review of the military and political affairs of Europe, from the invasion of Russia in 1812, to the second dethronement of the French Emperor, and the restorational Louis the 18th in 1815, he makes many interesting particulars concerning the various powers of Europe, and their schemes of policy. He took, on this point, would have been more valuable, had he given his opinion on many things which he has assumed, but which now stand exclusively on his own credit.

In advertising to the present state and future prospects of Russia, he has become still more entertaining. The disposition of the present Emperor of that mighty empire, to improve the public military, literary, moral, and religious condition of his subjects, is well known and acknowledged. Perhaps no sovereign in the history of Modern Europe, has ever exposed so strong opposition, or so favourable an ingenuity, for doing such extensive good to his country, as Alexander. Nor did he ever in the age of severity and execution on gigantic plans for the amelioration of Russia, his power must, of necessity, become immense, and progressively increasing.

The following extract from the book under consideration, will furnish our readers with a sample of the work, and enable them to form some important information concerning certain portions of the Russian Empire.

To what extent Alexander has accomplished all his undertakings, without forgetting the interests he was bound to protect, may be difficult to prove, more than is his direct merit to attribute the occasion of his projects by the discussions on a free press; but as far as the prevalence of tranquility in every province under his sway—as far as sensible improvements, in all military economy, and general order in all branches of the administration can contribute [illegible] fifths used to perish in the journey, or winter with no more than common nutriment, and so far from the spirit of the people being worn down by [illegible] servitude and factious of towns, patriotism has acquired devotional ardour, and the state is not found it necessary to impose any conditional burthens upon its inhabitants.

[illegible] of experts, of which there

The ground on which the town of Odessa now stands did not contain, in the year 1794 one house or inhabitant—now there are one thousand houses of stone, and above forty thousand residents. Eight hundred ships annually sail from this port! and such quantities of corn are exported, that this part of the world, as to the time of the Greeks and Romans, promises to be the chief granary of the Mediterranean.

Tcherkas, near the mouth of the Don, in the sea of Azof, is no less prosperous.

Astrakan, at the mouth of the Volga, by the last treaty with Persia (which gives the exclusive navigation of the Caspian Sea to the Russian flag) has obtained many advantages.

The Internal Navigation from the White and Baltic to the Caspian and Black Seas have been improved by various great works, and others are in progress.

The city of Petersburgh has been embellished at the expence of five millions of roubles annually; so that three fourths of the houses are now palaces of stone, and the city itself has become the most magnificent in the world, for its buildings, its quays, its canals, and "the political waters" of the Majestic Neva.

The impulse has not been confined to the European provinces; but to Asia, to which such terrible images have been attached, from the supposed unalterable rigour of its climate, and its associating ideas of misery and unjust sufferance, is becoming fortified and prosperous. Siberia, inhabited by wandering pastoral tribes among them many foreigners; and not only the city of Tobolsk, enriched by every species of European and Asiatic luxury, is growing into a very considerable capital, distributing civilization throughout her vast sphere, at the distance of three thousand seven hundred and seventy four miles from Moscow, and not four leagues from the frontiers of China, has become the seat of considerable and flourishing government.

Communications are open in all directions, even to Kamtschatka and the port of St. Peter and St. Paul, at the distance, by Obotsk, in the Pacific, of eight thousand seven hundred and forty miles from Moscow.

Reports are regularly received from every government, and arrive generally at the prescribed day, and from most of them at the same hour.

In no country in the world is travelling so cheap, or so secure against robbers; and within the last half dozen years, large sums have been expended by the orders of the Emperor, at all the principal European posts where Manufactories of all descriptions have been established, and particularly from which is worked with a degree of [illegible] that reveals the artists of any country.

Cloth manufactories are receiving great encouragement from the government, and the last events on the continent have added largely to the Manufactories and Mechanic population.

The ports of Cronstadt, of Riga, and Revel, large and only, been opened again to the trade with all Europe, of America is becoming a competitor of such importance as to render Russia no longer dependent on the English market; and thus the preference promised the English merchants by Peter the Great, when he intervened Wilmot the III in Holland, in the year 1697, and the privileges subsequently granted, have been cancelled, or rather not renewed, upon alledged principle of general justice."

Lord Selkirk, a peer of the British realm, was yesterday in the gallery of the House of Representatives. We understand that no honorable member will this day move for his admission on the floor of the House. The member who will bring this notion has had abundant [illegible] trade, roads and canals, either as an original measure, or as an amendment thereto, no doubt would remain of the right of applying our revenues to those purposes. If indeed the power was denied to the general government of incorporating roads and canals themselves, a power which might still exist, whether it had not power to appropriate part of the revenue "to aid in the construction of roads and canals by the states.

There is perhaps no part of the constitution more misunderstood than that which relates to the power of the general government to borrow money. It is limited under its authority. The power is given to lay and collect taxes, to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States" and "to borrow money on the credit thereof. As this clause is only intended to designate the objects for which revenue is to be raised, it cannot be construed to extend the specified powers of Congress, yet it would be difficult to reconcile either the practicability of the regulation of the course of administration under it, with the idea that Congress has not a discretionary power over its appropriations. Hence only by different application " to the constitutional and general welfare."

A few of the very great number of instances, in which the government of the United States have been applied to objects not falling within the specified powers of Congress, or those which may be regarded as incidental to them, will lend illustration to this.

Thus, it can scarcely be conceived, that, if construed with rigour, the administration has constitutional authority to purchase a library, either for the purpose of "encouragement" to literature or specifically as an "incident" to the powers given. But one, perhaps, can the pleas satisfactorily of a chaplain, or the purchase of experimental philosophical apparatus, or the building of a ship, or various other expenditures of similar character, fall under the " necessary" incidents to the power of making laws. Yet, in these and in other objects, have the funds of the United States been freely applied, at every succeeding session of Congress, without a question as to the constitutionality of the application.

It could be yet more difficult to reconcile many of the appropriations of the present of Congress, the liberal donations to the wretched sufferers in Venezuela, or the employment of our revenues in the useful and interesting enterprises to the Pole.

The principles allowed for the encouragement of fisheries form another expenditure, that does not fall under any of the powers granted by the constitution. Nor could it fairly be reconciled to an interpretation of those powers, upon the strict principles acceptance contended for. The same observations would apply to actual taxation and to the indirect encouragement derived to the fisheries from the duty imposed upon the foreign article, and which operates as a bounty to our class of the community. And so also upon the drawback. These and a variety of other appropriations can only be justified upon the principle, that the government has a discretion in the regulation of its revenues. This principle, if conceded to Congress, a discretionary power to use for the general " welfare" the funds which they are authorized to raise.

Not to have any danger that such a power will be abused, while the vigor of representative responsibility, remains unobserved, it is to this subject that the attention of the constitutional mistry relied for the protection of the public purse. It was a subject of this nature, the framers that there was no other subject on which representative responsibility would be so powerful. On the other hand, while this principle was calculated to prevent abuses in the appropriations of public money, it was equally necessary to give an extensive discretion to the legislature body in the disposition of the revenue. Were more no license foresight could divers, nor human industry enumerate, the various objects of purposes, to which the public money might advantageously be applied. The attempt would have been to legislate, not to frame a constitution; to have given rules, prescribed the wants of future generations, and put in force a code of conduct for the Legislative Body. Hence proceeds the use of the general phrase in relation to the purposes to which the appropriations may be applied; while the clauses of the instrument, in the clause which confers the enumeration of powers, are to be construed and the use of the word "necessary" and proper" as might be both " necessary and proper" in the exercise of the specified powers.

Nor is it conceived that this construction of the constitution is calculated to give that unlimited extent to the power of the federal government, which by some writers have been apprehended. There is a distinction between the power to appropriate money for a purpose, and the power to make a law for which it is appropriated. If so, the authority to appropriate money for the general welfare," does not by this construction extend the specified or incidental powers of government, so far, in the case under consideration; if the power to make a law, for the purpose, exist, the power of appropriating money cannot render it, however generally it may be appropriated. If there were no other limitation, than the rights of the respective states, over both the and territory, would operate as a restriction.

Whilst this appears to be a safe as well as fair construction of the constitution, it is also that which has been particularly given in it since the adoption of the present. Of this the instances already mentioned, furnish some evidence. Others of a character equally strong, and of the principles of construction asserted both in regard to the enumeration of powers and the responsibility of the government to the will of the people, might be adduced, will be found in the annual communications and messages of the executive from the first session after its adoption, to the present day.

It would indeed be to turn over the statute book and declamatory exercises, upon those principles, the law giving bounties to fishermen, encouraging manufactures, establishing trading houses with the Indians, erecting light houses, beacons, piers, and light houses, purchasing or erecting buildings for the accommodation of the officers of the Congress, giving charity to suffering foreigners, constructing roads through the public forest tracts, and establishing banks, can be justified upon the principles of the constitution. It has been remarked by high authority, that the constitutional question can be precluded by repeated acquiescence under varied circumstances, of the validity" of the exercise of a power by Congress," in acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the government, and by individuals. Whether in deliberate, positive, and unanimous of the present will of the nation, manifested in the various acts of the government, will be sufficient to establish the power, is not for the author of these remarks to say. But he cannot but consider the power exercised by the bank of the United States should be appropriated. They believe to give greater length to this report by enlarging upon these national improvements. They also that of any evil intention towards the states, which was many justly say, they reprobated. Let us not on the part of their power to be exercised unconstitutionally. But whether an enormous use be authorized by actual design, or has been exercised by accident, or committed by a shameful negligence on the part of the officers, to whom power committed by the people, it is the duty of those who can do look to the redress.

We suppose Canada exports about 24,000 barrels of Ashes annually, at 12 cwt each, gives 84,000 cwt. The pearl ashes made the bread in as good request as ever, and gives a correspondent demand for labor, which in the first place the country pockets; but when the commodity reaches an European market it sells for per cwt. is now than could be believed, which bring him in a less of £21,000 sterling, (besides the ordinary hazards in the speculation) than he bought the market in which the commodity was originally purchased. If our inspectors be not intent on raising the character of one of our chief staples, they will surely be more circumspect in future. They will empty every barrel and see the contents carefully repacked, &c. excluding crust and other refuse, observing that the barrel be of well seasoned wood, and that the hoops be well secured and the expense of the same, &c. which will make him careful of bringing good casks for sale in future. The size of each barrel should be taken, and the weight branded on its head. If these precautions be not adopted, there is a doubt of Canadian ashes retaining their present character in every market. During the 11 years, the late Mr. John Forsyth was inspector, the Montreal brand was 2½ higher than that of New-York, and is above Boston for 1½ per cwt. Pearl Ashes always ranked highest. Indeed for six years after Mr. Forsyth, Montreal Pearls sold higher than those of New-York, and for the same reason why they should not be made to do so at this time.—Mr. Wiseman often told the writer of this article that if it were not the interest of the inspectors to do justice to more than 7,500 barrels in a season. In 1801 when the quantity of Pearl Ashes manufactured himself greatly embarrassed, by deciding whether he had done strict justice to the country. In 1802 he was obliged to call in two inspectors each of 20,000 in a season during Jefferson's Embargo? Even at this time, when the quantity may be estimated at 20 to 24,000 barrels, we think a third inspector is much wanted; for 22,000 a year, in one inspection, would be a severe exercise for three inspectors of Pot and Pearl Ashes. But the subject calls for Legislative interference.—Herald.

On Sunday evening, the 21st inst. as eight men were crossing in a batteau from this Island to Isle Heron, in the Lachine Rapids, they got entangled in the ice, and were thrown into the water. Seven of the crew were drowned, and the eighth only escaped by swimming to the shore. With much exertion they effected a landing the next day at the afternoon a good way below the Island, very much exhausted by the cold. One of them, in consequence of what he had suffered, a Mr. James Herron, died yesterday, and a notice of his interment is given. Scotland, died on Monday last, another is dispaired of, the rest will recover.

From the Quebec Mercury.

The Committee for enquiring into the distresses of the Settlers, have brought their labors to a close, and completed their visits to the Applicants, and afforded such temporary relief to those whom they considered entitled to it, as the funds at their disposal would allow. The Sums already raised for that purpose, will not amount to sixteen thousand pounds, but as the Committee have not yet received the whole of the subscriptions, during the Winter, they have reason to hope that a much larger sum will be collected in the Spring.

In laying before the Public the subscribers statement of their expenditure, they beg to state that the 8th November to 20th December, they must observe, that though they have much pleasure in stating the liberality which has been shown strangers to be far short of what was at first apprehended, it is, nevertheless gratifying, as proof that if some assistance was not afforded to them during the winter, they fear that many would fall victims to the severity of the climate, and want of ordinary nourishment.

One of the Settlers, who is under peculiar circumstances, has been appointed to act as Overseer to the establishment at St. Roch's; he is furnished with a set of approved Rules for their government, and is framed for the purpose of maintaining order and cleanliness; he has the charge of issuing their provisions daily, consisting of a moderate allowance of Biscuit, Potatoes, Fish, Butter, and every Sunday, fresh meat; and has directions to furnish any one applying with such a number of Labourers as he may require, at the rate of 2s. per day for each; he also keeps a list of both out and in-door pensioners, with their occupations for the inspection of any one interested in their welfare.

Independent of his superintendance, one of the Committee has established a daily visit to the establishment, and settle any complaint or difference that may have occurred.

The Committee take this method of returning their thanks to the Gentlemen, Theatrical Amateurs, who have already paid into the hands of their Treasurer, the sum of £40, being the net proceeds of two performances; and who have kindly promised to have other occasional performances during the Winter, for the same benevolent purposes. A subscription paper is now going round, which on its being completed, will be published.

LONDON, Nov. 18.

The body of the Princess, when embalmed was enclosed in a transparent case of wax without any coffin, and deposited for the night among the Kings. The case was then covered with another of thick lead, and that with a strong oaken coffin. These wrappers again were filled with spices, and the body of the Royal Infant was disclosed and sealed in precisely the same manner.

We mentioned yesterday that the feelings of his Serene Highness Prince Leopold were deeply shocked by the ceremony of embalming the body of his Consort, it being nearly more than he could endure. Sensitive to the highest degree, as all his native country, Belgium, and the whole civilized world of his love, his hitherto only object of interest, his every thought and meaning, had centred those people which time and accident had never completely tore. His nights are sleepless—and I sleep should for one moment surprise exhausted nature, he awakens in the next instant to the recollection of his bereavement. He is all the actors of his affected state. His Serene Highness still refuses all consolation: he refuses no one to approach him. His Highness confines no one to solitude in his thought and is pleased to see those who have been accustomed to every thing except such objects as relate to his misery his departed Consort.—The mind of his Highness, is keenly alive to the loss of his native country, and more than all, to the irreparable loss of his beloved Princess. He ordered to him by express conveyance, a number of recollections. Hence her honour and the oath she wore in her last pedestrian excursion with him, are kept constantly before his eyes. In this way her hands upon a sereene in any room sitting parlour, and there his heart remains—and I sleep should for one moment surprise exhausted nature, he awakens in the next instant to the recollection of his affected state. TO SCHOOLMASTERS, MECHANICS, &c.

THE Township of Wes[illegible] ster, about 1[illegible] miles from York, is fast becoming one of the most populous in Upper Canada, which is to be wondered at, considering the great richness of the soil, the goodness and abundance of the water, and the variety and multitude of the situations. These things so essential to health and longevity, have induced numbers of respectable men to become settlers there, and the land in this Township is constantly taken up. It is now about five years since its commencement, and scarcely a single instance of sickness has been known by its numerous inhabitants. Two School Houses have been by them built, and the rising district are very desirous of giving every encouragement to the erection of a church as permanent Teachers to their rising generation. To Blacksmiths, Brickmakers, Bricklayers, Carpenters, &c. of steady sober habits, it presents great inducements. J. WHATTER.

DEBATES IN THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

QUEBEC, Jan. 28, 1818.

In a committee of the whole House on the Representative Body of this and a bill pro[illegible] on Merchandize imported into this Province, &c.

Mr. Davidson, in moving to resolve, that it was expedient to continue the Law now in force to that effect, observed, that until the public accounts have been before the House, it was difficult to say what was the exact state of the Provincial finances. He could barely say from memory, that the expenditure amounted to about £60,000 and that the revenue might probably exceed £50,000 it was moderate. The register of the Provincial Revenue remaining at the disposal of the Legislature had usually been appropriated to such purposes of public utility as were from time to time judged expedient for the improvement of the Province. He thought the present mode of taxation a fair one, and as such he would always be disposed to give it his support.

Mr. Taschereau observed, that to know of any other mode more easy to the payment, nor so efficient to enable the Government and the Legislature to provide for the necessary public expenditure and for the improvement of the Province. The duties in question had indeed been first imposed in time of war—a season of necessity, and he conceived that the daily wants of the Province at the present period, were such as to render their continuance indispensably necessary. At a moment when the Mother Country called upon the Colony to bear the expence of its Civil List, it was, he thought, incumbent upon the Legislature to provide liberal means of defraying the charge which was in every respect just and just, as the price of the happy constitution we enjoyed from the generosity of the Mother Country, whose expences in defence of the Province must heretofore have been considerable. In assenting the charge to which he alluded, he could it must be agreeable to the Legislature and to the People of this Province to reflect, that it secured to them the full exercise and enjoyment of their Constitutions, from which must reach the happiest effects to our Sovereign's subjects in this Province, and the conservation of Canada to the British Empire. The tax proposed was the best that could be devised for this Province. It is neither difficult nor expensive in the collection—it weighs lightly. It has undergone the test of experience—its advantage which no new mode of taxation can afford, and if any slight inconveniences exist, they can be easily removed. He knew of no other mode of raising a supply. To tax agriculture in its present infant state would be highly impolitic: the agriculture of the Province stood rather in need of fostering assistance at present. Although it would at first sight appear that the tax in question was a check upon trade, yet when the facilities it afforded the Merchant, were considered, it would be thought otherwise. It would be seen that it was not the Merchant but the consumer who in reality paid the tax. The question whether agriculture or trade should properly be the object of taxation in this Province, had upon a former occasion been amply discussed in that House, as might be seen by adverting to their address to His Majesty, relative to that subject. Members, he hoped were grounded of the impolicy of taxing the soil, which, however, they must ultimately recur to, in order to provide for the public expenditure.

Mr. Speaker rose to say, that no subject of deliberation can more deeply interest the representative of a People—or that to which more importance ought to be put in question. The necessity of obtaining the concurrence of the commons in levying and appropriating monies, is the first source of that weight and authority in the direction of the public concerns of their country. From other acts of Legislation have an intimate and so signal an influence upon the prosperity and declension of nations. Probably upon no subject can imposts to collect them with facility and economy: to distribute them judiciously, is the most difficult within the reach of the Legislature, at once to excite and reward industry; to fall in any of those Purposes, is to convert the imposition of duties into the most pernicious means of retaining mankind in poverty, ignorance and servitude. In those respects our situation is happy—we in fact pay fewer imposts than any other civilized people. Upon those articles which may be considered as objects of luxury, such as Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Spirituous Liquors, &c. we pay at most from 12½ to 15 per cent, and upon all articles of manufactures, but two and a half per cent. This latter duty was the present subject of consideration. To reduce the proposition to its simple shape, it is merely this: Shall we, in order to pay the necessary public expenditure, declare as we are disposed to purchase any article of Importation, pay for the same one hundred and two pence half penny, instead of one hundred pence; or shall we resort to some new mode of taxation? The public opinion has long since been pronounced upon the subject. It is some years since the misconceived interests of trade brought into contact with the general interest of the whole classes of the population, occasioned discussions which have ever since fixed the public opinion on this point. The Merchants were for the establishment of direct taxes. There are perhaps some Circumstances under which direct mode of taxation might be best, but it certainly was erroneous to prefer such a mode to the present, by which nine tenths of the revenue were collected in a single part of entry; to substitute for the small number of Custom House Officers which we employ, that of excisemen, to prefer, to the Duties, paid insensibly by the consumer and in a way entirely at his own option, a forced Revenue upon every article of soil payable at a fixed period, which necessarily must operate with unequal weight upon the rich proprietor of fertile lands, and the poor proprietor o

COMMUNICATION.

Mr. Gleig,

On Monday the 9th January, 1818. Mr. Buchanan, for the first time for the last two years, addressed his Grace Peter, as Lieutenant-Governor of Upper-Canada, in the Senate Room, with several others of the village of St. Regis, and a few more collected in the street, on the occasion of the presentation, by Lieut. Colonel Fraser, to the Governor, in Council, of the Address answered in the House, wanting to make a few remarks for publication in the Montreal Herald, which, I suppose, is the only paper in the Province of Lower-Canada, that has not been purchased by the Government, or its adherents. I was present at the meeting, and heard every word that was said on the occasion, and can safely say, that there was not much in the speech worth the trouble of copying, and that even what there was, was not worth the paper it was written upon. Mr. Buchanan, however, has not been accustomed to the public eye, for many years, and therefore, I suppose, he thought it necessary to make a display of his talents, in order to show the people of Lower-Canada, that he was not entirely unworthy of the confidence which they had reposed in him, when they elected him their representative

POETRY.

FEW HAPPY MARRIAGES.

Boy, sighs for Love, and touch my song,
To chaunt the sweetest joys belong,
And celebrate the happy pairs;
Whose faithful hearts and joining hands,
Find love engraved with their hands,
To endless ages their cares.

Not the soft band of arms he and sealing
That thoughtless fly into the chains,
As eagles leads the way
Joseph Hymen's ensure device,
Intended only to prove and bring,
And by as false as they.

Nor fearful souls of earthly wealth,
Who dress by kindred charms of stealth,
To dull embraces come;
So base that appreciation of Pleas,
Most rush to wealthy marriage ties,
And make a world of love.

Not the mad tribe that hell inspires
With wanton flames, the raging fires
That parted Man destroy;
On Lust's top jet furies send,
And curses of lightning find the bed,
That opens the tempting joy.

Not the dull pairs whose mobile forms,
None of the melting emotions move,
The single hearts and hands,
Link of genius ground that quench the souls,
Are married just like their souls,
With scarce for their bands.

Not minds of melancholy strain,
Both silent, and that will sometimes,
Cast the dear bondage down;
Sullen as they have ever remained seeing,
From each cold tones with an or a sting,
Or none—besides the bonds.

Nor can the well enchantment hold
Two jarring coils of angry mould,
That tugged out the knot;
Two strong lions made in night as well,
In bands of cheerful world-ck dwell,
Will themselves not loosen.

Nor let the cruel fetters bind,
A genius to a savage mind,
Lest the former spring to the right
Loose the former from the door,
For native impulses last,
Hour and fated as light.

Two kindred souls alone can meet,
The friendship unites the bondage vowed,
And fondest of mutual loves,
Bright Venus on her rolling throne,
Is drawn by gentles kind, always,
And Cupids yoke the doves

ATROCIOUS REVENGE.

The Examination at Union-Hall, London, of David Owen, for attempting to Murder John Jones, his Brother-in-Law; Mary Barry Jones, his Sister; and Mary Barry, their Servant.

Friday, at one o'clock, Mr. Jones and Mary Barry arrived in a hackney-coach from St. Thomas' Hospital, under the care of a surgeon and two nurses: they were so weak as scarcely to be able to stand. As two the prisoner was brought into the room, and confronted with Jones and the servant; the latter fainted as soon as she saw him, and it was difficulty that Mr. Jones was roused to sensibility. When he recovered, he exclaimed, "O God! I thought I saw him with a knife in his hand." The Magistrates ordered the prisoner to be taken out of the room, and he was then again acquitted for the prosecutor. About two Mrs. Jones arrived in a hackney-coach, also extremely ill, and was obliged to be supported to hear evidence.

Mary Barry, the servant, stated, "On 23d or 24th of September last, a little after one o'clock in the afternoon, I was at home with my master and mistress, and heard a knock at the door. I opened it, and heard the prisoner without saying a word he forced himself in: my master was in the back room; I called out, Mr. Owen is here! My master and him came out of the back room into the passage, where he met the prisoner. The prisoner immediately took from his pocket a large pointed carving knife, and without speaking made a blow at my master's head: his hand I do defend himself, and prisoner cut and struck him dreadfully on the hand. My mistress then came out, and she and I stood at the door, my master, and take away the knife. I got hold of it, and he drew it through my hand, and cut me very much, and he began cutting and slashing away at random, and then as all three; he cut me on the arm, stabbed me under the ear, and stabbed me in the forehead. I then ran out and called for assistance, and came back again, and found my master lying on the floor in the back room, bleeding very much, and the prisoner lying over him, with a knife under my master's clothes, and apparently sticking in his side; when I returned to the house, a young man returned with me, and he pursued, and we held Owen's arm and took the knife from him. I was then taken by some persons to the hospital. Mr. Jones deposed to the same effect, and added, that the cut he received across the hand in the passage disabled him from making a defence: and that he soon became insensible; when he recovered he found himself dreadfully cut in the neck, and part of his left ear off. He formerly had a law-suit with prisoner, but had not spoken to him since August 1816.

Mrs. Jones stated, that during the struggle between them all in the passage, she heard prisoner say, "You wretches, I'll kill you all." She previously several cuts about the head and face and a stab in the side: saw the prisoner attempt to stab her husband in the side; then became senseless, having bled excessively.

Charles Hopkins, the young man alluded to in Mary Barry's evidence, stated, that he saw Barry run out of Jones' house, covered with blood, and calling for assistance; he went into the house with her, and saw Mr. Jones on the floor bleeding very much, and prisoner lying over him, with the knife apparently in Jones's side, and him under Mrs. Jones and Barry down; Mrs. Jones called out to take away the knife from him: the servant and he, by their united efforts, succeeded in getting the knife from him: he gave the knife to Holmes, the constable, and then went to the hospital with Mr. Jones and the servant.

Holmes, the constable, stated, that on hearing the alarm, he immediately went to the spot, and saw Owen standing on the defensive at Jones's house, with a knife in each hand; with great difficulty he secured him, and found in his pocket two other knives and a razor case.

On the prisoner being asked if he had any thing to say, his solicitor advised him to reserve himself for his trial.

The respective parties were bound over to prosecute; and he was committed for trial to Kingston Assizes.

The prisoner is a man of dark complexion, full face, and large black whiskers, about 5 feet 9 inches in height, and very stout: he seemed unmoved at the recital of the horrid deeds of which he had been the perpetrator, and appeared to eye the object of his vengeance with indignity that it is difficult to describe. The fatal instrument was produced by Holmes, rusted with bloody it was a carving knife 14 inches long, and the blade about an inch and a half wide. The Magistrate said it was a transaction as horrible as ever disgraced a civilized country. The prisoner was ordered to goal in a coach, amidst the execrations of about 5000 spectators.

We learn that there is every probability of the unfortunate victims of the cruel revenge of Owen surviving and recovering the effects of his sanguinary attack. They are all much better, and free from fever. The public examination of the villain, it is hoped, will be delayed until the end of the week, when it is hoped some of the wounded parties will be sufficiently recovered to attend.

Further particulars and final Examination of Owen.

On Monday, David Owen was fully committed for trial at the next Kingston assizes, upon a charge of attempting to murder Mr. Jones, Mrs. Jones, and Mary Barry, his brother-in-law, his sister, and servant respectively.

Two knives were produced which were loosely contained in the carving-knife, found by Jones to have been acquired for the purpose. The other was a table-knife which Mr. Jones identified as his own property by an engraved cipher, and declared it from the dinner table after the carving-knife was taken from him.

Thomas Kopper, a worker of the telegraph at Weedmere, deposed—That on the telegraph on the day of the 26th of September, about one o'clock, he heard the prisoner without saying a word he forced himself in; my master He looked towards Jones's house, and saw Sarah Barry or Mrs. Jones standing at Mr. Owen's door, and the latter retreating from her face. He ran with all possible speed to the house, and found a sad scene of bloodshed in the house. He climbed up to the window of the first floor, and saw Owen in the passage, with two knives in his hands, sharpening one against the other, and apparently in a state of wrath him in a frightful attitude, and he leaped from the window on the ground floor, and ran to Jones's door, and up to the window, which was open. He called to Owen, and said, "You had better murder, for I am here, and you presently." He replied, "No you will not," and drew one of the knives across his throat. He (the witness) called out, "He is going to cut his throat," but found that he had not made any incision. A other ran up the ladder with an iron bar, but retreated from the window of the room when he saw Owen with the knives, brandishing them about, according as any one else came to take him. Some persons got into the back-room and fastened the door, which prevented Owen from the room. Shortly after Owen went out of the front-room, upon the head of the staircase a Mr. Sandbach, a butcher, rushed into the front-room, and prevented him from coming in again by fastening the door. A young man got a pistol, and threatened to shoot Owen if he did not give himself up to them—He refused, and the young man was going to shoot him, but was prevented by a gentleman present. He, the sailor, and Mr. Sandbach, opened the door, when the prisoner was off his guard, and he seized him by the chest and right arm. The sailor seized him by the other arm, and several others came up on the instant, and endeavoured to hold him. Owen struggled very much: the rolling of the staircase was broken down, and they fell down stairs; he kept hold of the prisoner, and the knife being taken from him, he was delivered into the custody of Holmes.

Mr. Peter Dixon, surgeon, of Newington, sworn.—On the afternoon of Friday the 26th of September he was called upon to attend a wounded man, whom he since understands to be Mrs. Jones. She was then at her house in Gibraltar-row. He examined the wounds. As far as he could judge, he believed they were inflicted with a knife. He did not consider any of the wounds dangerous at the time. He still had under his care, and the wounds are all healed up, except the one on the side of her chest.

John Carter, surgeon and dresser to Mr. Chandler, senior, surgeon at St. Thomas's hospital, sworn.—On Friday the 26th of September last, two wounded persons were brought to the hospital: one was Mr. Jones, the other his servant, Mary Barry. He examined and dressed the wounds; they appeared to be inflicted with a knife, and had every appearance of being done with a sharp instrument, and might have been done by a knife like the one produced. Here Mr. Chandler, senior, left the Lord Mayor's room took seat next to Jones's house.—Both Mr. Jones and Mary Barry are still under his care.

The office was crowded during the examination. The prisoner was silent as addressed by his solicitor during the whole of the time he paid no attention during the time the witnesses were giving their evidences, but during the time Mr. Jones was under examination he cried it. At the close he bowed, looked at the witnesses very steadily, and left the office. He was conveyed from the passenger-line goal in a coach, amidst the hootings of hundreds.

Shocking circumstance.—On Saturday se'nnight, a most shocking circumstance occurred in the village of Southfield, in Somersetshire. A young man, the son of a farmer, whose name we forbear to mention, had professed an ardent affection for a young female, and a neighbour, while circumstance were too low to gain the sanction of the youth's parents to their union. The girl was upon the eve of espousal of a greater share of discretion than her lover, and refused to consent to a private marriage, as proposed by him, would only be a source of unhappiness ultimately to both. It was in vain that her unwearied persuasion by his passion could deviate, she remained resolute, and he came to the horrid determination of putting an end to the existence of the girl and himself. He accordingly set to work. He possessed himself of a double barrelled pistol, and after some little preparation went to the house of his former lover at dusty, he hastily took from his pocket the pistol and fired, but from what cause we do not know, missed, and dreadfully wounded the girl, as well as shattering his right hand, so that to appearance, not quite so fatal, but probably lifeless; he then took from his pocket a knife, which he constantly wore, and with it severed the arteries of his wrist, and dreadfully wounded the girl, as well as shattering his right hand, so that to appearance, not quite so fatal, but probably lifeless; he then took from his pocket a knife, which he constantly wore, and with it severed the arteries of his wrist, and stabbed himself in many parts of his body, so that when the bodies were found very shortly after the horrible catastrophe, but neither was dead. The girl is expected to recover, but no hopes are cherished of his recovery.

An imitation of Leonardo de Vinci's celebrated picture, called La Cene, is now exhibiting at Vienna, for the use of the Emperor of Austria. It will cost 7500 guineas, and when completed is to be placed in the Imperial Forum. It is thirty feet long and fifteen broad.

Melancholy Occurrence and Sudden Death.

A subterraneous cavity to the extent of Margate was lately discovered for several children, was using with some of her companions, when suddenly she was missed by a stranger of her own sex, who was sitting beside her, which (found to relate) so affected the child, that she fell down dead. Inquiry was made and indeed and seven unfortunate children were found dead in the cavity. It is supposed that some unknown have had chosen the cavity as a place to store their stolen wares, and had suspected the one of this poor woman to discover their secret, and that she had time to escape from the cavity, and that she had time to return her call, leaving the innocent babe in possession of them, who was taken up on suspicion of the robbery, and that on the fact of the children's death the family were not in possession of our thing.

York, Nov. 17, 1817.

TO SCHOOLMASTERS, MECHANICS, &c.

THE Township of Westminster, about 1700 miles from York, is fast becoming one of the most populous and best cultivated, and will not be wondered at, considering the great richness of the soil, the goodness and wholesomeness of the water, and the salubrity and mildness of the air.—These things so essential to health and longevity, have induced numbers of reflecting men to become actual settlers, and the land in the Township is already nearly taken up. It is now about two years since its commencement, and scarcely a single instance of sickness has been known by its inhabitants. The School Houses have already been built, and the resident families are very desirous of giving every encouragement to one of good character as permanent Teachers to their rising generation. To Blacksmiths, Brickmakers, Bricklayers, Carpenters, &c. of steady good habits, it presents great inducements. J. WEBSTER.

MARRIED,

On the 10th instant, at Perth on Tay, by the Rev. Mr. Lamonte, Angus MacDonell, Esquire, Lieutenant of the late Glengarry Light Infantry, to Mrs. Theodora, Daughter of John Watson, Esq. of that village.

DIED,

At Quebec—on the 8th Feb. Mrs. Montgomery, Wife of G. Montgomery, Esq. M. D. Apothecary to the Forces.

On the evening of Saturday, the 7th instant, at his House on Navy Point, Captain Sir ROBERT HALL, Knight Companion of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, Knight Commander of the Royal Sicilian Order of St. Ferdinand and of Merit, Commissioner of His Majesty's Navy in the Canadas, &c. &c. &c.

Eminent alike for Literary attainments and Professional talents, and at an age that promised his country a long continuance of his useful services, this distinguished Officer is prematurely torn from us, after a short but severe illness, in the Thirty-ninth year of his age, leaving behind him a memory, which will be long cherished with the grateful tears of those indebted to his patronage, with the fond regret of his Officers, whom his affability, more easily understood to him, and with the love and respect of the many friends, who shared his munificent hospitality.—Kingston Gaz.

New Brunswick, Dec. 20.

Agreeable to notice given, a number of respectable citizens met on Saturday last at the Coffee House, for the benevolent purpose of taking into consideration the most measures of relieving the necessities of the most destitute of the sufferers of St. John's, Newfoundland. The amount of the Subscriptions were £360 12 8.

December 27.

In our last paper we gave the Message of the President of the United States to Congress, in which our readers will observe, that he announces the decision of the Commissioners under the 4th article of the Treaty of Ghent, "to whom" he says, "it was referred to decide to which party the several Islands in the Bay of Passamaquoddy belonged under the treaty of one thousand seven hundred and eighty three." In this statement of the President there is a singular confusion. For by the 4th Article of the Treaty, the claims of both nations are expressly asserted to the Island of Grand Menan in the Bay of Fundy," as well as to "the several Islands in the Bay of Passamaquoddy, which is part of the Bay of Fundy," and both of these claims were therein referred to the Commissioners for their decision. It is also a matter of notoriety, that the Island of Grand Menan was made a primary object of claim on the part of the United States throughout the discussions before the Commissioners; and it is now equally well known that by the decision of the Commissioners executed at New-York on the 24th November last, Moose, Dudley, and Frederick Islands, in the Bay of Passamaquoddy, are declared to belong to the United States, and all the other Islands in the Bay of Passamaquoddy, and the Island of Grand Menan in the Bay of Fundy, are declared to belong to Great Britain, in conformity with the true intent of the treaty of 1783. It is therefore not a little singular that the President of the United States should have altogether omitted to take notice either of the Island of Grand Menan or of the Bay of Fundy in his official communications to Congress. Whether this omission is to be recommended for by any regrets in his mind at the relinquishment by this nation, the decision of the Commissioners, of all claim on the part of the United States to this most valuable and important Island, which had been so strenuously contended for by Mr. Monroe, as one of the Ministers of the United States in London in the year 1806, in the negociation respecting boundaries which then took place, we will not pretend to determine; but we think it a matter of real congratulation to His Majesty's subjects in these Provinces, that the British right is now irrevocably established to this Province, which besides its importance as a station for the fisheries and in many other points of view, is undoubtedly the Key to the Navigation of the Bay of Fundy, and on that account alone, a national object of great moment.—New Brunswick Courier.

LONDON, Dec. 7 to 8.

The Court of King James, as established the throne of England, which is put into action, and I posited a decision of the Scots College in Paris, was removed at the Restoration. It was lately restored to the chief situation in the college of the Scots College.

Union Hall—Cornish Tin.—On Saturday James Brown was charged before the Magistrate, with recovering a quantity of spirituous liquors into the King's Bench prison, contrary to the Act of Parliament, on Friday night. It appeared by the evidence of Mr Morris, one of the turnkeys, that the prisoner had not one pound ten; his other leg being made of wood, was constructed in such a manner that between the stump of the thigh and the upper part of the wooden leg, a cavity was formed, in which articles of considerable size could be deposited. The liquor in question was put in a bladder, and the bladder was concealed in the cavity; but the contrivance did not escape the argus eye of Mr. Morris, to whom the prisoner was secured and searched. The prisoner said, that he was not aware of the illegality of the attempt; he had a friend confined for debt in the Bench, who was very ill, and that it was for him the liquor was intended. The prisoner was convicted and adjudged to pay £10, which not being able to pay, he was committed to prison for 14 days.

It will be recollected, that some time since, a proposal was made by the Court of Vienna, to supply this country with a large quantity of timber from the forests of Croatia and Dalmatia for the use of the Navy; and that the value of it was to be set off against part of the debt due from Austria to England. Persons were then, or soon afterwards, employed to examine the timber, and decide whether it would be worth the expense of transportation for the Austrian Government did not [illegible] to convey it thither. It was found to be some of the finest [illegible] timber in the world. A contract [illegible] accordingly been made with two merchants of Hull for the conveyance of it to England from Trieste and the Italian ports. The contract is for 200,000 loads of timber, and one of the Contractors is already on his way to superintend the performance of it.

TO SCHOOLMASTERS, MECHANICS, &c.

THE Township of Westminster, about 120 miles from York, is at present among one of the most populous and flourishing parts of it, not to be wondered at, considering its great richness of the soil, the goodness of the roads, and the general spirit of industry and enterprize which prevails throughout the whole of the surrounding Townships. These things so essential to health and comfort, have induced a number of settlers to flock into it, before actual settlers, and the land in that Township is already nearly taken up. It is now about five years since the commencement, and scarcely a single instance of sickness has been known by its numerous inhabitants. Two Saw Mills and two Grist Mills have already been built, and the resident families are very desirous of getting every encouragement to men of good character as permanent Teachers to their rising generation. To Blacksmiths, Brickmakers, Bricklayers, Carpenters, &c. of steady good habits, it presents great inducements. J. WEBSTER.

Upon the whole, there was something like an undertaking which gave us a particular interest in the event, and while we were calculated to render much benefit to the country, this session appeared to us to be regarded as not succeeded to the utmost, as propositions were just making, for the construction of the Canal, when the mail of last night arrived.

The favorable condition of the whole revenue of the State, is a striking demonstration of the increasing prosperity of useful industry, and a powerful incentive to liberal dispensation of public patronage. Under the accustomed vigilance and enlightened economy, our affairs are constantly increasing in stability and usefulness; and the intimate connexion between the commercial interests of the whole, have also diffused the blessings of education. Funds to the amount of 150,000 dollars were invested to the three colleges, and about 150,000 dollars to district schools, and about 50,000 dollars to academies and unincorporated academies. While this liberality of patronage reflects honor on the State, it cannot be too forcibly inculcated, nor too generally understood, that in promoting the great interests of moral and intellectual cultivation, there is no prodigality to the application of the public treasure.

The colleges of physicians and surgeons are eminently deserving of public consideration.— The increase of such institutions in New-York is the cause of its students, in the simplicity of its accommodations, and in the moderation of its emoluments, has kept pace with the science and celebrity of its professors. And the recent addition of distinguished teachers to the establishment at Fairfield, pleasantly situated, central in the south part of the State, promises to be highly beneficial to the community.—

And no measure can be more conducive to the permanency of public institutions, than the respectability of the professions, and to the preservation of the public health, than a law providing an examination upon lectures in the university, as indispensable passport to medical degrees.

The principal societies devoted to literature, sciences and the arts in the city of New-York, have by the liberal patronage of the municipal authorities, been established in a spacious and surrounding edifice, under the denomination of the New-York general institute. These societies are form a extensive and invaluable collection of books from the first arts; of our animal, vegetable and mineral productions; and models and implements illustrating our mechanical and manufactured industry, our geography, antiquities and statistics. They are also peculiarly adapted to exciting the attractive spirit of natural science, in introducing the principles of intellectual philosophy, and in rendering the literature of our country. Whatever such institutions originate, they are entitled to the encouragement of government, for there is still near an infinitely immeasurable alliance between their advancement and the glory and prosperity of the state.

The state of our finances demands your mature consideration. It appears that the whole of the state amount to about $4,500,000

And that the debts of the state are funded to 3,750,000 50

Viz.

Stock, bearing 7 per cent. interest, 1,108,207 93

Stock, bearing 6 per cent. interest, 777,000 00

Debt to the Bank of New-York, bearing an interest of 6 per cent. 920,000 00

3,750,000 50

It further appears that the annual expenditure for fortifications, armaments, magazines, settlements, roads, improvements and other wartime stores; for the pay of officers, artificers and volunteers, is 846,350 83

For the annual interest of divers issues of the national government, assumed and paid by this state, 1,119,108 28

Making in the whole $1,965,477.08 of debt incurred by the state in consequence of its patriotic assistance for the public defence, and on the expenses of which it has of late made a reduction of the dollar less than one cent.

It will be observed that we pay a war interest of seven per cent. for a considerable part of this debt — and it is unbearable, it will be easy to pay it off by a zero from at six per cent. — It will be effected by a deposit of the three per cent stock, and the apply the avails to the extinction of the debt. Taxes proceeds together with 200,000 dollars of the revenue of the last year and a new issue of 1,200,000 dollars at six per cent will extinguish the whole of the present stock in May or June next, and leave about 150,000 dollars applicable to extraordinary purposes. The stock is not included in the 3d. resolve, because the payment of this work are to be kept distinct from the ordinary revenue of the state.

If this plan should be adopted, our debt would be reduced to 1,600,000 dollars.

I feel reasonably confident that the reduction of the tax to half its present amount. The annual revenue will still be about 800,000 dollars; and the our permanent expenses, including the interest of the public debt will not exceed 600,000 dollars, there will remain a surplus of about 200,000 dollars to upwards of 800,000 by financial improvements. The funds of the state will be augmented by the payment of the debt due from the United States, which has not yet been adjusted; and part of such useful accessions may be made in other useful accessions may be made in other useful accessions. The revenue of another dollars to loss at those at the United States by whatsoever will present a surplus under trader, afford some relief to our immediate duties and enlarge the fund for internal improvement. The revenue from reclaims properly collected would be considerable, and a much greater sum may be raised annually by the system already authorised by law. And it may be proper to observe that our financial situation is peculiarly favorable to the accomplishment of an object for the transfer of stock in the city of New York, which can be done without any sacrifice.

This view of your finance is certainly encouraging. It shows that our debt may be easily refunded, that our taxes may be diminished one half, that all our contingent expenditures may be provided, and that a good fund will still remain for all the beneficial objects of a wise government.

The public lands have not been comprehended with this exposition of our resources, because they are not yet sufficiently sold, by the labors and our rights of the Indians, together with the discharge of small large trusts, I consider them fully equivalent to what is the whole debt against the state. The instances fund appropriated to schools and academies, has also been kept out of view, because I deem it a sacred provision for the education of the present and all future generations, which might never to be disturbed, diverted or impaired.

With respect to the debt which will be incurred in the prosecution of the Erie canal, I think there can be no doubt but that light tolls on our extensive canals, and lighter tolls on those foreign productions with in a few years not only accomplish a fund for its reimbursement, but be a profitable source of revenue for the general purposes of government. And this subject may be other suggested from the facility acquired and enlightened in our system of political economy. It may be rendered a powerful instrument of commerce, and our commissioners, and for maintaining the principles and of foreign nations.

The last system of finance are however subordinate and literary without the promotion of science. — Previously to the establishment of colleges, and of academies for the education of professors, but all governments are too prone to give intermittent encouragement to the cultivation of public money should be exclusively made, and its expenditures carefully regulated. The accountability of public agents should be enforced, and the ordinary forms of legislation ought never to be waved unless in extraordinary cases. It is the observance of these salutary principles, with the application of a well regulated economy, and the selection of proper and judicious intermediate agents, that I should persuade that the flourishing condition of our finances may be completely realized; that all the improvements may be successfully executed, and that this state rich in her resources, public and private, may be a liberal benefactor, and determined in her purposes, may attain unprecedented prosperity.

Although the cultivation of the blessings of peace is a most important object, with the wise of our government, the precepts of religion, and the maxims of sound policy, put into the hands of self and controversy are planted too deeply in the constitution of human nature to be eradicated by an express [illegible] the ambitious fate of nations, and the experience of the human character, both before and since the Christian era, have been engaged in the [illegible] of the Babylonian of Africa, we have been engaged in hostilities with Europe and the Indians. We are in the neighbourhood of British and Spanish provinces, divided from our territory by unsurveyed lines, and connected with being in contact with the warring and inveterate enemies of peace.

The West India islands, owned by different nations, open, in the course of time, to a lucrative source of controversy; and our extensive commerce will often render it necessary to protect our unoffending citizens in the legitimate exercise of the belligerent powers in Europe. If, therefore, we would avoid the calamities of war, the glory of the people of Spanish America for emancipation from the tyranny of unprincipled superiority, and the stimulus of colonial adjection, we must unprepared ourselves for the state of war, and every way be the cause, the time most active when it will be most necessary to appeal to the sword, and this appeal ought never to be made without feeling to be a state of supple preparation.

Permit me then to recommend to your attention the revision and amendment of the militia system.

The system relative to the militia were not settled in 1812 and it is now necessary to consolidate into one law the various acts which have been passed at different periods, and to regard such amendments as experience may point out to be proper. It is believed that essential improvements may be made in the organization, force and discipline of the militia, in the system of inspection, and disposition of fines; in the promotion of military discipline, and in the encouragement of meritorious service or distinguished skill. In connexion with the interior state of the militia, the interior number of our enrolled militia cannot be ascertained, but it may be safely estimated at 120,000 men. This immense force will not only be organized, armed, and disciplined, but may duly the objects of an enemy. But it ought not to be considered that a state of war will require a large and equipped; and that too in a very large fort number. The state does not now arm more than twenty thousand stand of arms. The act of Congress, of 1808, for arming and equipping the whole body of the militia, however well intended, is found to be inadequate to the object. Our militia increase more rapidly than the supply, and even if our proportion were completed, it would take near half a century before supply provisions could be derived from that source.

The consideration of the state militia for the militia at all times as well in peace as in war, and the establishment of a corps of artillery, and a force for service, and that a proper augmentation of the expenses of which to be solely borne by the United States, shall be ever at the expense of the state, based by the act of the Legislature, judiciously administered, and combined, in every county, with the militia of the state, would be a measure of wise and economical precaution, which would in a short time save a century before taxpayers

POETRY.

The following lines were requested to be inserted by a Friend of the Author.

Take, O take the mortal Love,
Boldly under the low-roof'd vine;
Shake it's notes melodiously out,
Under regions in the mind:
Take it to the secret cell,
Where the sorrow of the heart,
Did it's every life-throed start,
And with sighing fell:
Lead it to the silent cell.

To that, by the leaves blest,
Where the sorrowful breast
Labors in your bosom close,
Where your notes, high-soaring, flow;
Thus that mind a joyous bard,
Sighing soon shall be,
Lonely Love, to thy regard,
Lonely Love, to thy regard,
Thou shalt add by hearts done,
Lonely Love, to thy regard,
Lonely Love, to thy regard,
Lonely Love, to thy regard

green fat cattle on which the Merchants, Proprietors of Quays, new Mills, Lumber Yards, &c. in which millions of money are vested, were not very great —would they not have much cause to complain of Ministers, who in imposing Duties upon foreign timber, indirectly and virtually subject their capitals in the colonial timber trade. Such sudden and unexpected changes, so capricious in principle, cannot but be considered as political crimes. But that which was to us most alarming, is the indirect attempt of ministers to tax us. To deprive us of the means of trade ourselves by destroying our trade.—The Imperial Parliament has indeed the right to regulate the general trade of the Empire—but to regulate trade was one thing; and to ruin it another. To day we are prevented from exporting our timber, in order to gratify the Inhabitants of the North of Europe—to-morrow we may be prohibited from exporting our flour and potash, to gratify the people of the United States—the next day we shall perhaps be forbid to export our salt provisions to favour the Irish trade. So narrow a policy cannot fail to ruin the Province, and subvert in a short degree, as to render it no easy conquest, whenever a new war may take place with America. Is it to be taken for granted that Great Britain is to prefer the Baltic timber, because it can be procured at a cheaper rate than that of the North American? As well might it be urged, that she ought not to have encouraged the linen manufacturies of Ireland, because they could be procured at a cheaper rate in Flanders. As well might it be said, that she ought to be tributary to French industry, and not seek to rival her manufactures of silk. We cannot enter into competition with the people of the North of Europe, in point of proximity to British affords them the advantages of five or six voyages in the course of a season, while our dependance on Europe, and the dangers of our navigation, afford us but a single voyage, or at the utmost two voyages in the year. The price of freight and of merchandize brought us are necessarily raised, and the value of our exports are proportionably diminished, so as to bring ruin upon such as engage in our trade, unless the mother country should protect it. The timber of Russia is not, like us, the hands of freemen, but by those of slaves, the property of the crown and the wretchedness of whose state, exchanged as regard possessions only with the animals that till the ground, upon which they span out a miserable existence. No such abominable abuses prevail here. Our lumber yards are filled with a free though laborious race of men, who know and obtain the value of their labour.

The policy of Great Britain has hitherto been more enlarged, and has led to her advantage. The circulation of her capital throughout Europe, at once enriches herself, and strengthens those nations, which, from day to day, may become her enemies. Why should she not adopt the same policy towards her colonies, and disperse the four quarters of the globe, and rich in all the productions of nature. Let Great Britain attach them by a liberal and enlightened policy. Let her encourage the development of their resources, the increase of their population, and their progress in wealth, and her own prosperity will thrive with theirs, who must, necessarily, consume her manufactures, and be tributary to her industry. From North America colonies are peculiarly susceptible of a degree of improvement, which, in every point of view, renders them one of the noblest appendages of the Empire. Let her learn to acquire into their true interests, and she will find that ere long, her most formidable adversary will be the American confederation. Let her know that the same energy of character, the same spirit of enterprize and trade, the same national pride, and the same enthusiastic attachment to the political institutions of their country, which have constituted the might and grandeur of the British nation, characterize the American people. They believe themselves destined by Providence for a great and a powerful people, and, though in their infancy, their commercial navy may be considered as the second among nations. Those ambitious republicans are greedy of power and conquest, not to be watched with attention by England. From what better point can she observe, and more effectually repress them than this quarter, which, in war, can maintain her army, and in peace, become the channel of the introduction of her manufactures into America. She can, and she ought, in gaining friends in the U. States, by intimate connexion upon those projects of aggrandisement. To new division among them, would be base and ruinous. To say that they would again be made British subjects, is extravagant; but England may so conduct herself, as to make it the interest of the greater part of the nation to be at peace with her. The State of New York, already the most powerful of their union, by its position, its extent, the fertility of its soil, is susceptible of a greater increase than any of the States east of the mountains. That of Vermont, and a part of New-England, may, in time, become the natural Allies of Great Britain. Let her encourage the Canadian trade, and allow our exports to be freely sent to the most profitable markets. Let duties be imposed upon such as do not immediately issue from our own colonies. The Rivers Saint Lawrence and Champlain, the Chaudiere and Saint Francois, connected with the Kennebec and Connecticut, will soon be rendered navigable. Canals will speed to Quebec sufficient passages to load hundreds of British ships, which, without this policy, will turn to the advantage of the Americans trade. To improve on all the means of ruling ourselves by destroying our trade.—The Imperial Parliament has indeed the right to regulate the general trade of the Empire—but to regulate trade was one thing; and to ruin it another. To day we are prevented from exporting our timber, in order to gratify the Inhabitants of the North of Europe—to-morrow we may be prohibited from exporting our flour and potash, to gratify the people of the United States—the next day we shall perhaps be forbid to export our salt provisions to favour the Irish trade. To say that they would again be made British subjects, is extravagant; but England may so conduct herself, as to make it the interest of the greater part of the nation to be at peace with her. The State of New York, already the most powerful of their union, by its position, its extent, the fertility of its soil, is susceptible of a greater increase than any of the States east of the mountains. pelled our trade, the home-hold out by the 18th of the King was magnificent and illusive. If we are obliged to take our produce to the British markets only, and then to pay a heavy duty upon that produce, what is it but doing a prize upon it, at which, probably, we cannot afford to sell it, or to which we put a certain prospect of ruin to the merchant who risks his capital in so precarious a trade. Our trade with another country is a trade of barter, and whether taxes be imposed by the mother or our exports are regulated, a measure equally to the same thing. The principle of taxing our trade, he thought, highly impolitic, and pointed out, as the thought it contrary to the spirit of the Act in which he alluded, and, he felt persuaded, that his Majesty's Ministers, upon a proper representation of the subject, would be induced to relinquish their intention of adopting a mode of taxation which must, at once be injurious to the mother country, and ruinous to the Trade of this Province.

Mr. Ruthermen made a distinction —As to the right of taxing her own trade, he conceived the mother country unquestionably possessed it. Eng land, very legitimately, might tax the colonial produce: but it ought to be recollected, that this Province at the present moment, enjoys the same, and the same right upon British manufactures imported into and consumed in this Province, that it enjoys upon those conveyed. Was it merely because America was so rash in 1774, that the Parliament assumed the right of taxing? Or was not this resistance rather the triumph of that constitutional action, which establishes, that the people shall not be taxed otherwise than by their Representatives freely elected? This right of being taxed by only ourselves, is necessary to keep us a Constitutional Act, but is this respected by Ministers, if, from ignorance of our wants, they impose taxes upon us? He would certainly admit, that, for the common advantages of the Empire, the Imperial Parliament had a right to regulate, even by taxes, the commodities interchanged between Country and Country, Province and Province, and with Foreigners; but if this right were abused, it might be asserted that by a jus de nolo, by no worthy authority, it had the hands of freemen, but by those of slaves, the property of the crown and the wretchedness whose state, exchanged as regard possessions only with the animals that till the ground, upon which they span out a miserable existence. No such abominable abuses prevail here. Our lumber yards are filled with a free though laborious race of men, who know and obtain the value of their labour.

The policy of Great Britain has hitherto been more enlarged, and has led to her advantage. The circulation of her capital throughout Europe, at once enriches herself, and strengthens those nations, which, from day to day, may become her enemies. Why should she not adopt the same policy towards her colonies, and disperse the four quarters of the globe, and rich in all the productions of nature. Let Great Britain attach them by a liberal and enlightened policy. Let her encourage the development of their resources, the increase of their population, and their progress in wealth, and her own prosperity will thrive with theirs, who must, necessarily, consume her manufactures, and be tributary to her industry. From North America colonies are peculiarly susceptible of a degree of improvement, which, in every point of view, renders them one of the noblest appendages of the Empire. Let her learn to acquire into their true interests, and she will find that ere long, her most formidable adversary will be the American confederation. Let her know that the same energy of character, the same spirit of enterprize and trade, the same national pride, and the same enthusiastic attachment to the political institutions of their country, which have constituted the might and grandeur of the British nation, characterize the American people. They believe themselves destined by Providence for a great and a powerful people, and, though in their infancy, their commercial navy may be considered as the second among nations. Those ambitious republicans are greedy of power and conquest, not to be watched with attention by England. From what better point can she observe, and more effectually repress them than this quarter, which, in war, can maintain her army, and in peace, become the channel of the introduction of her manufactures into America. She can, and she ought, in gaining friends in the U. States, by intimate connexion upon those projects of aggrandisement. To new division among them, would be base and ruinous. To say that they would again be made British subjects, is extravagant; but England may so conduct herself, as to make it the interest of the greater part of the nation to be at peace with her. DEBATES IN THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

MONDAY, 16th February, 1818.

In committee of the whole House on the Report of the Select Standing Committee of Grievances.

Mr. Cochrane moved to resolve on the motion of the Committee, that a Legislative Act that Commissioners be authorized to investigate the claims of inhabitants and others, to Lands in the inferior District of Gaspe.

Mr. Taschereau feared, that the subject submitted to the consideration of the House was of such a nature as must deter any one from entering into it, who reflected for one moment on the multiplicity of claims, which would be created in this District of Gaspe, if the Commissioners were empowered to act, as proposed, and the delay which must ensue, before the claims could be investigated, and decided upon. He was of opinion, that the Petitioners had better seek relief in the Courts of Law, than to have recourse to the Commissioners, as proposed. The Inferior District of Gaspe as a District of the utmost importance to the Province, and he thought, that by the appointment of Commissioners, as proposed by the Committee of Grievances, the Legislature would be establishing a precedent, which would be productive of much inconvenience in future. He was of opinion, that the Petitioners had a right to expect, previous to the appointment of Commissioners, that the Petitions in question—the now had leave for the purpose of further enquiry into the claims of the inhabitants of Gaspe were withheld from the Petitioners, and that they were left to seek relief only in the Courts of the Mother Country, and he was of opinion, that it would be sufficient to refer the Petitions to the Commissioners of every description in that District, and that the Petitioners would be satisfied with that only measure to all human industry. The greater facility of carrying on the Fisheries, on our own account.

If there were no other motive for taking the Petitions into consideration, than the hope of finding employment for the industrious poor of the British North American Provinces, he thought it was sufficient to induce the House to pay the most serious attention to the subject. He had been informed, that the Petitioners had been to the Mother Country, and had been told, that they must apply to this House for relief, as the Petitions must originate here. He was of opinion, that the Petitioners had been misled, and that they had been sent on a fruitless errand. He was of opinion, that the Petitioners had been misled, and that they had been sent on a fruitless errand.

Mr. Cochrane said, that the Petitioners had been misled, and that they had been sent on a fruitless errand.

Post Office.—The decrease in the revenue of the Post Office, is at least a proof that the Commercial Correspondence of the country is greatly diminished. It amounted last year, as appeared by the accounts presented to the House of Commons, to be upwards of £100,000, (nearly £2000 a-week,) and from the last statement it is considerably less than the corresponding quarter of 1816.

MADRID, Dec. 18.

A Project for Recruiting the Army by means of a conscription is on the point of being carried into effect in Spain. A Royal Ordonnance prescribing this new mode of recruiting is in the press. Every year 17,000 men, from the age of 18 to 30, of all classes without exception, are to be enrolled to serve in the army;—those not attending to pay 2000 francs.

The officers implicated in the affair of Perlier, at Corunna, are to be brought to trial without delay.

At a late Meeting of the Catholic Board in Dublin, Mr. O'Connor moved that a Committee should be appointed to prepare a denunciation of the Rhenish Notes to the Bible, which notes, he said, were in principle the same as the people of England against the Catholic Emancipation. He declared that although he was a Catholic from principle, he would not remain one an hour longer, if he thought it of that faith to believe that it was lawful to murder heretics, or that faith should be kept inconsistent with heretics. However, at the suggestion of several Gentlemen, Mr. O'Connor consented to withdraw his motion, and it was agreed that a general exposition of the religious and political principles of the Irish Catholics should be drawn up in the form of an Address or Appeal to to the Protestants of Great Britain.

DEALER IN THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 19th Feb.

Mr. Cockburn, (for Grasse,) said, he had formerly had an opportunity of acquainting himself with the locality of the country he had the honor to represent, and he could confidently state to the committee, that the district and county of Grasse, contained a great quantity of excellent land, and that the agricultural capacity of the District, was not inferior to any part of Lower Canada. The great disadvantages under which the inhabitants were placed had, however, the effect of retarding the present improvement of the District, which unless some remedy were speedily adopted, would in the course of a few years dwindle to nothing. He hoped and trusted it was certainty, that some benefits had recently accrued to the District, from the discouraging circumstances under which it was placed; he had been induced to bring forward the present measure, from a thorough conviction of its expediency, and he was glad to find that Members had taken so general a view of the situation and wants of his constituents.

The motion was accordingly adopted, and the committee having reported, Doctor Cockburn moved for leave to introduce a Bill "for appointing Commissioners to investigate the claims of persons to lands in the Interior District of Gaspe, and to secure the inhabitants there in the possession and property of the same, and for other purposes," which was granted.

The Bill was accordingly introduced and read for the first time.

Second reading ordered for the 25th instant.

Mr. Taschereau then moved, that the committee be instructed to report on the expediency of appending the Jurisdiction Act, so far as regarded the Interior District of Gaspe.

Mr. A. Stuart intently concurred with the Member for the County of Dorchester, in the opinion of there being much property in this district every fifty or sixty years, which if a regular court were not effectually to examine the claims of persons to lands within that District of Gaspe, which had been long deserted, and at this circumstance, as believed, but certainly much retarded the progress of that District, which was, he might say extent, the largest in the Province, and possessed of many natural advantages, both of a maritime and agricultural nature. The claims in question, from the lapse of time since giving out the certificates, which was now after the termination of the American war, 1783, had become complicated, inasmuch as many transfers of original lots granted by certificate had taken place, and many of the present claimants, are either descendants from the nominees or persons mentioned in the original Report, or connected with them through a chain of intermediate purchasers. In the legal investigation of this subject, however strictly taken, not one of these persons can be regarded but as an occupant, although large sums appear in the Crown Books, but

DEBATE IN THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Monday, 19th Feb.

Mr. Cockburn, (for Gaspe,) said, he had formerly had an opportunity of acquainting himself with the locality of the country he had the honor to represent, and he could confidently state to the committee, that the district and county of Gaspe, contained a great quantity of excellent land, and that the agricultural capacity of the District, was not inferior to any part of Lower Canada. The great disadvantages under which the inhabitants were placed had, however, the effect of retarding the great improvement of the District, which unless some remedy were speedily adopted, would in the course of a few years devolve to nothing. He himself knew to a certainty, that some families had reluctantly abandoned the District, from the discouraging circumstances under which it was placed; he had been induced to bring forward the present measure, from a thorough conviction of its expediency, and he was glad to find that Members had taken so lively a part in the situation and waste of his constituents.

The motion was accordingly adopted, and the committee having reported, Doctor Cadwallader moved for leave to introduce a Bill "for appointing Commissioners to investigate the claims of Grants of Land in the District of Gaspe, and to secure the inhabitants thereof in the possession and enjoyment of the same, and for other purposes," which was granted.

The Bill was accordingly introduced and read for the first time.

The second reading ordered for the 25th instant.

Mr. Cockburn then moved, that the Committee be instructed to report on the expediency of amending the Judicature Act, so far as regarded the Inferior District of Gaspe.

Mr. A. Stuart heartily concurred with the learned member for the County of Northumberland, in the opinion, that there being much property in that district every fortnight, the parties were put to the expense of sending to Quebec, or to some other place, for the purpose of procuring evidence, which would be attended with great inconvenience, and frequently with much delay and loss of time, besides giving out the certificates, which was soon after the termination of the American war, 1783, had become considerably extended; inasmuch as many transfers of the original Grants vested by certificate had taken place, and many of the present claimants, now either Americans from the countries or persons natural born Subjects, were purchasers of the original Grants from the nominees or persons named in the aforesaid Grants, or connected with them through the medium of subsequent purchases. In the legal interpretation of Title, however strictly taking what may be termed a chain of title regarded legal as an occupant, although in every instance of an equitable nature, the occupant stood in no manner attach the idea of property to it. The examination of the present member of such districts relative to localities Gaspe, can only be obtained efficiently through the medium of Commissioners and he should, therefore give that plan his cordial support. The object would be a salutary one, and would powerfully contribute to relieve the materially impoverished, state of that District, from the best plan, that it was both remote and neglected.

On the expediency of granting further supplies for the completing and finishing the Gaol and Court-Hall, at New-Carlisle, he would not occupy the time of the House by entering at length, for he believed that matter would more properly become the enquiry of a Special Committee, which he no doubt, would receive every satisfactory information as to the state. He was led, he said, to introduce the subject from numerous complaints of by Petitioners residing in the District of Gaspe, for want of sufficient jurisdiction of the Provincial Court; the cognizance of which was restricted to the sum of Twenty pounds sterling. He had no doubt in his mind but that the enquiry would be productive of inconvenience and well founded. The Petitioners were of the most respectable description in that District, being actually in the Magistracy, so that their representation deserved credibility, at least that enquiry, let it be true, or they were, in point of interest, deeply concerned in the event of the proposed alteration of the Judicature Act. As far as regarded the district of Gaspe, the words Magistrate and Merchant were, he apprehended, synonymous or interchangeable terms in that district, and in the latter capacity, they had no doubt, fully experienced the evil for which they prayed a legislative remedy. If we should attend for a moment to the boundary of wast at law, instituted by a Patriot resident in the district of Gaspe, in the Court of King's Bench at Quebec, it will be plainly seen that the great situation of those, in respect to such offence, must render the most equal remedy afforded at the Inferior Courts, and most inevitably operate as a great discouragement to the offender seeking their just demands. For the time he had attended at the Bar of Quebec, he had witnessed but few instances of Litigation there originating from the district of Gaspe, and was led to impute the circumstance to the great cause to the petitioners being unable, and not to the want of business there. The absence of Litigation, he was aware, might be also imputed to the influence of unsettled habits, as well as to the existence of trade and population, for to his knowledge, some parts of the Province in that vicinity as to time, were, nevertheless, widely different in respect to the production of law suits. Litigation, however, as he knew it was of public prosperity, and might be regarded as one of the evils naturally concomitant to an increasing commerce and population, and rising just in the same proportion, or, perhaps, a greater one. The death of a Suit at Law in the Court of King's Bench at Quebec, he stated parties resident in the District of Gaspe, will eventually be more much the greatest proceedings, which must take place, must be injuriously delived, by the great distance of the district from Quebec. In the first Gaol-delivery in the district of Gaspe, and desirous of using another inhabitant there, in the Court of King's Bench in the District of Quebec there for that purpose or send up instructions to a Counsel or Attorney, to one not and transmit to the Sheriff of Gaspe, for service, a summons, which by the Judicature Act, can only be required in the terms of June or October. The summons served in such a manner the parties must come to join issue, and a commission is sued out directed to the Provincial Judge of Gaspe, to take the deposition of the witnesses living there, and this is transmitted, executed and returned. Then takes place the general Execution, to be sued out and transmitted to the Sheriff of Gaspe, who issues his precept to the Coroner of that district, to summon a Jury at Quebec. Here are, therefore, no less than six different proceedings, each of said subject to the delay of a passage between Quebec and the District of Gaspe, and when the distance the most direct may be from 450 to 700 miles, the non-regularity of a suit is not only extend to several thousand miles, without specifying of the six miles each of which may be attended with the most fatal failure of a conveyance, by shipwreck. How many evidences there at Quebec by the period of time since giving out the certificates, which was soon after the termination of the American war, 1783, had become considerably extended; inasmuch as many transfers of the original Grants vested by certificate had taken place, and many of the present claimants, now either Americans from the countries or persons natural born Subjects, were purchasers of the original Grants from the nominees or persons named in the aforesaid Grants, or connected with them through the medium of subsequent purchases. In the legal interpretation of Title, however strictly taking what may be termed a chain of title regarded legal as an occupant, although in every instance of an equitable nature, the occupant stood in no manner attach the idea of property to it. The examination of the present member of such districts relative to localities Gaspe, can only be obtained efficiently through the medium of Commissioners and he should, therefore give that plan his cordial support. The object would be a salutary one, and would powerfully contribute to relieve the materially impoverished, state of that District, from the best plan, that it was both remote and neglected.

On the expediency of granting further supplies for the completing and finishing the Gaol and Court-Hall, at New-Carlisle, he would not occupy the time of the House by entering at length, for he believed that matter would more properly become the enquiry of a Special Committee, which he no doubt, would receive every satisfactory information as to the state. He was led, he said, to introduce the subject from numerous complaints of by Petitioners residing in the District of Gaspe, for want of sufficient jurisdiction of the Provincial Court; the cognizance of which was restricted to the sum of Twenty pounds sterling. He had no doubt in his mind but that the enquiry would be productive of inconvenience and well founded. The Petitioners were of the most respectable description in that District, being actually in the Magistracy, so that their representation deserved credibility, at least that enquiry, let it be true, or they were, in point of interest, deeply concerned in the event of the proposed alteration of the Judicature Act. As far as regarded the district of Gaspe, the words Magistrate and Merchant were, he apprehended, synonymous or interchangeable terms in that district, and in the latter capacity, they had no doubt, fully experienced the evil for which they prayed a legislative remedy. If we should attend for a moment to the boundary of wast at law, instituted by a Patriot resident in the district of Gaspe, in the Court of King's Bench at Quebec, it will be plainly seen that the great situation of those, in respect to such offence, must render the most equal remedy afforded at the Inferior Courts, and most inevitably operate as a great discouragement to the offender seeking their just demands. For the time he had attended at the Bar of Quebec, he had witnessed but few instances of Litigation there originating from the district of Gaspe, and was led to impute the circumstance to the great cause to the petitioners being unable, and not to want of business there. The absence of Litigation, he was aware, might be also imputed to the influence of unsettled habits, as well as to the existence of trade and population, for to his knowledge, some parts of the Province in that vicinity as to time were, nevertheless, widely different in respect to the production of law suits. Litigation, however, as he knew it was of public prosperity, and might be regarded as one of the evils naturally concomitant to an increasing commerce and population, and rising just in the same proportion, or, perhaps, a greater one. The death of a Suit at Law in the Court of King's Bench at Quebec, he stated parties resident in the District of Gaspe, will eventually be more much the greatest proceedings, which must take place, must be injuriously delived, by the great distance of the district from Quebec. A Statistical View of the District of Gaspe, in its Fisheries, Agriculture, Population, the Revenue and Expences standing it.

FISHERIES.

Are Sedentary or not Sedentary; the greatest part of the Cod Fishery belonging to the District is of the former description, carried on in open boats measuring 18 feet from length of keel; and this part of the said Fishery is principally carried on by Schooners which proceed to a distant fishing station, such as the Orpheus Bank, &c. There are besides the number of inconsiderable schooners that employed for the space of two months in the Gaol.

The number of vessels employed in a fishing voyage by each of the above schooners, is usually eight or nine persons—and in the sedentary fishery each boat is manned by two fishermen, so that the employment given by this branch of the fishery to the inhabitants being not fewer than four hundred heads of the above description actually fitted for said employment in the course of every year, and by the whole period of the fishery, which begins in May, and ends in October. The fishery was conducted, almost entirely on the Coast of Gaspe, into the Summer and Fall Fishery, the first of these being the most considerable, and affording employment to a number of transient persons from the lower parts of this Province, and it is supposed, the extent of the last description of persons acquiring their livelihood in the Gaspe Fisheries, may have varied in different years, but the number for three to five hundred, being drawn from the parishes about Quebec, and on the River St. Lawrence between that and Green Island.

The Sedentary Cod Fishery, besides the Fishermen employed on the Coast is to be considered as the principal employment source to a great number of persons at both ports, in the Gaspe Salting and Drying Establishments, Packing or preparing codliver oil, Barrelling or preparing codliver oil, and for the fish being shipped, or taken the Cod Fish for being shipped, or sent to market, according to the expectations may be in barrels or bulk.

It may be fairly considered, that the total number of persons employed by Cod Fishery, cannot be less than 1700, at least the produce of their labour exported from the district, rises to the extent of from 40 to 50,000 quintals of dried and dried Cod Fish. In the course of the employment of the above part of the Population of Gaspe, there is an additional produce acquired by these Seining Herrings, and from 2 to 4000 barrels every year, a part of which is exported from the District smoked or pickled.

The Salmon Fishery is partly on the Sea Coast, but chiefly followed in the Rivers—The principal fishery of this kind is that of the River Ristigouche, the North Side of which is in the District of Gaspe, and the South side of it in the District of New Brunswick. The produce of this River, on the Gaspe side alone, it is considered moderately, been as much as 2000 barrels, averaging each 200 lbs. net. A number of boats are annually employed by the Salmon Fishery contributes nothing to the Cod Fishery, in fact this circumstance gives an actual addition to the number of productives share stated.

The Whale Fishery is carried on from the Bay of Gaspe, and employs generally 6 or 7 stout schooners, manned by 8 or 10 men each; and with the people employed ashore in boiling the blubber, making barrels, &c. forms an employment of about 90 persons of both sexes, and the same regularly for home consumption, and the surplus exported by the above two ports of the District.

Almost 1000 gallons of Whale Oil are shipped from Gaspe Harbour to Quebec, as the produce of this Fishery.

These Fisheries give employment yearly to seven of eight square fogged vessels, carrying the produce arising from thence to different markets in the south of Europe, besides from 60 to 80 schooners belonging to the Outports employed in the coasting from thence to Quebec or Halifax, for the carriage to those markets of the remaining part of the above produce not out of the District.

POPULATION.

The Population of the District of Gaspe as the present date, is not supposed to exceed 8000 souls, having every the number of transient fishermen repairing to the District in the Spring and leaving it towards the Fall.

SOIL AND CLIMATE.

The North Side of the Bay of Chaleurs, which is within the District of Gaspe, is prepossessed as to soil, and the Climate more genial than the rest of the district that is situated on the Gulf of River St. Lawrence. There are considerable Tracts of Land fit for the purposes of Agriculture lately the Bay of Chaleurs, in the first Line of Settlement, which have not yet concluded. The tract of land between the Black Cape in New Richmond and Little Bonaventure, a distance of eighteen miles in length, is of this description, and also the tract between East Nouvelle and Port Daniel, about twenty miles in length. The extensive and rich vacant tracts to the Children of Settlers in the District, promise of great fertility to the District, as well as a grateful relief to many loyal families reared on a piece of land too small to admit of participating or being dealt in future with the public, the necessity arising of the increasing separate Agricultural Establishments, or colonization in the remaining District.

REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE.

The Revenue is collected within the District of Gaspe by the Deputy Collector of the Customs established there by the Collector at Quebec, and there are two Deputy Collectors, the one considered as Chief Collector for Chaleurs Bay, and the other at Gaspe Harbour for the other parts of the District. The Revenue thus arising is accounted with the Receiver General of Quebec, and from the considerable quantity of dutiable commodities that it may here be observed, that an expenditure of produce is made to Quebec and Montreal, and for which it is returned in goods in dry and wet goods; a large portion of these are dutiable articles which have been entered at Quebec on importation, and on the consumption takes place in the District of Gaspe, the revenue may be properly viewed as a running thereon, and must be added to the account which appears to be collected directly in the district by the Deputy Collector there.

OUTS. HARBOUR COLLECTIONS.

" Do. 1813 do. 1814, 277 5 0
" Do. 1815 do. 1816, 427 12 8

The above were collected at the Custom-House books of the Gaspe Harbour.

Collected in 1814 and settled forth 1815, an insolvency in the Commission from Quebec sitting, before the Lieutenant Governor, but it is supposed that will not exceed Twenty pounds sterling, was, therefore, in his opinion, of no importance to the Province, which, while it would have the advantage of throwing all the difficulties at present incurred in necessary legislation, would not, in fact, prevent the Province from the powers of the Provincial Judge, for cases of equal or greater importance, for it can be reasonably expected that the witnesses in a cause reside in the District of Gaspe, they are not required by the Provincial Act, to be brought to the Bar of Quebec, but they are examined in the District where resident by the Provincial Judge, and the Clerk of the Commission registers, and upon whose reception of evidence in the cause, the Court of King's Bench pronounce Judgment.

No doubt, from the adoption of such measures for the welfare of the District of Gaspe as proposed by the two first cases of the Gaol and Court Hall, and the appointment of Commissioners to investigate all claims to Lands so be reserved by the House, there would require pecuniary demands, but he was happy to state, that from the information he had been enabled to derive upon the District of Gaspe, on the matter of its revenue, it might fairly be considered that the latter would prove commensurate to the former, and upon fact the expence of these improvements and advantages would be defrayed by the district itself.

The revenue arising from the District is collected in two different ways, which may be said to be direct and indirect. In the first made is through the Agency of the Deputy Collectors of the Customs established in the said District, at Gaspe Harbour and New Carlisle; and by the latter made the Custom House Duties are collected at Quebec, but the articles on which those are collected are enumerated in the District of Gaspe.

As it was even the consumption of the dutiable articles takes place in the District of Gaspe, it is evident that in one or other of the above ways, it is that District which furnishes or yields the revenue

The iron ore from which the iron is chiefly smelted in this neighbourhood, is the clay iron ore; the geographic situation of it is as follows:

Europe.—It occurs in vast quantities in different parts of Scotland and England, as in the coalfields of the Forth and Cruley in those of Shropshire, Staffordshire, Yorkshire and North and South Wales, in the Faroe Islands, it occurs in beds in flatz-trap rocks; Westphalia, in flatz-rocks, in a newer flatz-formation; Silesia, in flatz-limestone; Bohemia, Franconia; Upper Lusatia; Saxony; Bithmore and Russia.

Asia.—In Siberia.

America.—Extensive beds near Baltimore, in the United States.

This iron ore yields from 30 to 40 per cent. of good iron.

In Dr. De Bruce's Journal we are informed, that the value of all the iron annually made in the United States, is from twelve to fifteen millions of dollars. The annual importation, including bar iron, and every description of manufactures of iron and steel, are estimated at four millions of dollars.

From the New York Spectator.

Latest from England.—By the arrival, on Saturday evening, of the Packet Ship Courier, Capt. Howes, we have received from our attentive correspondents at London & Liverpool, papers of the former place to the 1st of January, and of the latter to the 31. Lloyds List of the 29th and 30th of December. New Price Current of December 30th. Liverpool Trade List of the same date, and the London Shipping List of the 1st January. Extracts will be found below.

The London Statement of January 1st contains the proceedings of a Meeting of Professorals of all denominations, held at the City of London Tavern on the 31st of December, to celebrate the third centenary of the Reformation.—The Duke of Sussex presided. The speeches delivered on this occasion occupy five columns of the paper.

The vessels for exploring the northern regions have begun to be equipped. Two are to endeavour to penetrate through Davis's Straits, and two to reach the North Pole, if possible; by which means it is expected to ascertain whether Greenland is an island, or part of the continent of Asia or America.

Rotary Patent Steam Engine.—The inhabitants of Geneve, at a general meeting held on the 30th ult. resolved to close with the proposals of Judge Wooden, mentioned in one of our former papers, for erecting a Steam Flour Mill, an Oil Mill and a Fulling and Carding Mill, in that village. The machinery is to be constructed on the principles of the rotary wheel. The Flouring Mill is to be built with stone, 70 feet by 27, three stories high, and to be set in the Lake so far out as to admit any boat or vessel navigating the Lake, to come to the outside of the Mills; and it is also to be accessible to teams, waggons and sleighs from the shore. The other two Mills are to be built with stone; and each to be 30 by 24 feet, and two stories high. Two wooden dwelling houses, sufficient to accommodate four families, are also to be erected for the use of the workmen. The whole establishment is to be furnished and the Mills in operation, by the first of January next; and the whole to be completed for the sum of twenty thousand dollars, including $6000, which is the price of the Engine, and $5000 for the patent right.

PORTSMOUTH, (N. H.) Feb. 14.

Singular Circumstance.—Miss Sally Jenkins, who set out on a visit from her brother's house, in Northward about 12 o'clock on Thursday, Feb. 5th, to see her sister Batchelder, distant about two miles, missing her way passed by the road that led to her sisters, nearly one mile up the turnpike; she stopped at the House of Mrs. Wiggin, and inquired the way. Mrs. Wiggin told her to ensure on the turnpike as far as Mr. Chase's wind mill, and take the first right hand road; she ministered into the house, but before she got out of place directed, the snow had drifted over the fence and directed her course, as she thought, to her sister's, but again lost her way. Night coming on, and she having got into a wood, gave up all hopes of reaching the house she set out at first. She had now no alternative but to traverse the forest and call for assistance for the first night that her calls were in vain though she was heard by a number of persons. The family of her brother, whether she departed, never heard but she had arrived at her sister's, until the Sunday following. A party of the neighbors immediately commenced a search at the place where her clothes were found; they scoured the forest in every direction for eight. They had nearly given up the search, when a small number of the party, being at a greater distance than the rest, said, "we will search that one small place of low land, if we cannot find her there we will give up for the night." But here, to their astonishment, they found her surviving, and able to speak, after being 72 hours in this inclement season without any sustenance. They removed her to her sister's, (it being nearly one mile) where she is likely to do well, having only one of her feet frozen.

Remarks on the extraordinary cold in the month of February, 1818, by Samuel De Witt, Esq.

The extraordinary coldness of the morning of the 11th of the month, (Feb. 1818,) which will probably long live after be alluded to as the cold Wednesday, has occasioned various accounts of its intensity. Strangers of the thermometrical observations which have been published, are, no doubt, in a great measure owing to the position of the thermometers: but there is one circumstance in such observations, and which I believe is not sufficiently regarded, to which I wish to draw the attention of gentlemen who undertake to make and report them. It is the accuracy of the instrument used. Every thermometer is not for safe, is by the generality of buyers, presumed to be correct. We certain that many are not so. No person ought therefore to rely upon one without carefully examining it.

A thermometer to be true, must possess two properties. The bore of the tube must be of uniform diameter, as the graduation is always of equal degrees, whether it be inter-fed to be. It must be a perfect cylinder as it regards size, and be hermetically sealed, and the freezing and boiling points must be correctly marked.

In order then to be sure of having a true thermometer on Farenheit's scale, these directions are to be observed. Obtain one which is graduated upwards, some degrees above 212o, the temperature of boiling water; and downwards below the freezing point; water; for our climate also below 0 should be chosen. Turn the instrument upside down, and if the mercury breaks off at the bulb and does freely to the end of the tube & unites again with that in the bulb, the instrument is true: if so air in it. Make a thick mixture of snow and water, or if snow is not to be had, of pounded ice and water; immerse in it the ball and tube, at least as far as they contain the mercury, which must then stand precisely at the degree marked 32. Again, gradually heat the thermometer at a fire, as a precautionary measure, and then immerse it in rain or river water while in the act of boiling. The most convenient vessel for this purpose will be a quart, half gallon, or gallon measure set on a chafing dish. If the thermometer be true the mercury will then stand exactly at the degree marked 212.—Thermometers not graduated so high should not be adopted in this test, for, not containing room for the expansion of the mercury, they must in that case necessarily burst. The other requisites, the uniformity of the bore of the tube, and the equality of the degrees, are seldom sensibly erroneous. Base inspection, by an accurate eye, may detect errors of consequence in them.

The thermometer I use, has, in this manner, been proved to be without a perceptible defect. On the night of the 10th inst. I had it placed on the outside of the back-coop, or rear portion of my house, a wooden inclosure, exposed to the west, in an open yard, sheltered only by a wood house, distant from it, about 20 feet, on the west adjoining front. In this position, the mercury on the morning of the 11th inst. at eight o'clock, stood at 26. On the 12th at 20, and on the 13th at 14o below 0.

About forty years ago, a thermometer kept in State-street, showed 22o below 0; since, the weather has not been observed to be so cold till this winter. It is very probable that earlier in the morning, any thermometer might have shown a degree or two lower, which thus would have nearly agreed with Mr. Bost's, which at 7 o'clock stood at 27 1-2. He has since informed me that he has examined it by the prescribed tests, and found it correct.

Thermometers should be kept at some distance from many walls, especially such as are constructed of stone or brick for on sudden changes of weather, they will retain the external temperature, which, instead of that of the air, will alone or less be indicated by thermometers near to, or in contact with them. Thermometers should be kept where there is no reflection or radiation of heat from neighbouring bodies, and where there is no obstacle to a free circulation of air. Observations are unfavourable to such observations, as the artificial heat kept in them is small, and the absorption and consequent radiation of heat by the structures in them, must, to a considerable degree, in moments, affect the surrounding atmosphere. Hence it will be found that the forward parts of a city will show a higher temperature than those in the windward extremities. Observations made in places detached from cities and villages, are therefore most to be relied on. I therefore think that the observation of the weather on the morning of the 11th inst. by Mr. Bryan, at the mansion of the late General Schuyler, is most to be relied on as a true statement of the weather. It was 32o below 0.—I have since seen the thermometer which appears to be of the best construction, and placed in a proper situation. It is said Mr. Ames' stood at 34; his was also in the outskirts of the city. It is desirable that the accuracy of the two last mentioned instruments should be examined in the manner before mentioned.

This communication is made with the view of having this uncommon state of the weather recorded among the transactions of the society, as well as to incite the necessity of having thermometers from which public reports are intended to be made, critically examined, before they are used—and of selecting proper places for their situations.

☞ Since the above communication was made Mr. Bryan's Thermoter has been proved to be true.

British Plaister Law Repealed.

By a gentleman from Moose Island, we learn, that the Legislature of New Brunswick, on or about the 8th ult. repealed the act prohibiting the exportation of Plaister to any port or place else of Boston, by an unanimous vote. This measure, it was supposed, was adopted in concert with the legislature of Nova Scotia.—Boston Paper.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

OFFICIAL REPORT.

Navy Commissioners Office, Jan. 20, 18.

Sir.—The Board of Navy Commissioners have been honored with your communication of the 9th inst. enclosing a copy of a resolution of the Hon. the Senate, and requiring of them all the information within their knowledge in relation to the objects of that resolution.

In obedience to this call, they make the following report, and accompany it with a detailed statement marked A. which they trust will be found to meet fully your views of the information required.

Of the proceedings which have been had under the act for the gradual increase of the navy, the exhibit will show:

That contracts have been entered into for the live oak frames, cut to moulds of eight line of battle ships, and eight frigates; that the frame of one line of battle ship and one frigate, is now existing from Black Island Island, under the direction of the board, from timber belonging to the United States; that one line of battle ship is now building from promiscuous timber, collected at this navy yard, and that there is also promiscuous live oak for framing a frigate, collected and collecting at this yard, which makes the frames of two line of battle ships and two frigates.

Of the contracts, however, it has been ascertained that one which embraced the quantity of live oak required for the frames of one line of battle ship and two frigates, will not be executed; and doubts are entertained whether another of the contracts, which is for the frames of two ships of the line and two frigates, will be executed. Hence the compass american only alone, with any degree of certainty, that provision has been made for the frames of seven ships of the line and six frigates.

Of the copper and lead required in the construction of the ships authorized, when the quantity contracted for shall be delivered, (and nearly all has been delivered,) we shall have a sufficiency for all the ships of the line authorized, and for ten frigates.

Of white oak and Pine, it will be perceived that no lease contracted for, and otherwise provided as follows:

A sufficient quantity of oak plank for seven ships of the line and four frigates, and nearly all the pine plank required for seven ships of the line and four frigates.

Become the first keels of the line and four frigates.

Lodged, four ship-lings, and ranging timber for seven ships of the line and two first frigates.

Assure for six ships of the line and three frigates.

Most cut for three ships of the line and two frigates; and we have also engaged, and have now delivered, the live oak knees, knees for five ships of the line and one frigate.

Of cannon, carronades, round and grape shot, we have contracted for the quantity required for two ships of the line.

Of iron, we have engaged, and have now on hand nearly all that is required for the four ships of the line and one frigate.

Upon the subject of the steam-batteries, authorized by the law for the "gradual increase of the navy," the commissioners have engaged one steam engine of one hundred horse power.

The commissioners have also established another shop at this navy yard, and, where all the anchors required will be made. They are also making at this yard, iron cables.

One ship of the line is ordered to be laid down at each of the following navy yards, viz.

Portsmouth,	Boston,
New-York,	Philadelphia,
Washington,	Norfolk.

Preparations are also making in each of these yards, and materials to a considerable extent, have been collected.

Of the ships ordered to be laid down, those at New-York, Norfolk and Washington, have been put on the stocks, and are progressing; those at the other points named, will be laid down as soon as circumstances will admit.

The ships now building under the act for the "gradual increase of the navy," are regular two-deck ships, and accommodations to be mounted on their gangways, which is not usual, they will mount the same number of guns with our present seventy-fours. Hitherto no ship having but two decks, has been rated higher than an eighty; and we beg leave to observe, that the ships now building are of inferior capacity to some ships of other nations, having but two decks.

The payment of moneys not coming within the province of the board, they can offer no definite information on that subject. Upon this branch of the inquiry, they can only aff ord information as to the probable amount of the contracts made by them. As to the payments made upon these contracts, and upon the purchases of the respective navy agents, as also the payments to the superintendents of timber, moulding, the carpenters, labourers employed in procuring timber, in the construction of the ships, and in the preparatory arrangements in the different navy yards, and for the transportation of timber, it is presumed that the auditor of navy accounts can afford precise information.

On the subject of advances upon contracts, the board beg leave to observe, that in two instances only, namely, those for cannon, carronades and shot, have they stipulated to make advances. In these cases they agreed to depart from their general rule upon the subject, with a view to the improvement of the ordnance of the navy, which having been found extremely defective, rendered it necessary to make a series of experiments, which subjected the contractors to considerable expence.

The navy commissioners would here respectfully observe, that their attention has been engaged, since the act of the 29th of April, 1816, in procuring within the shortest period possible, the live oak timber necessary in the construction of the ships authorized by that act. They found, in the outset, much difficulty in forming contracts for this article; the live oak growing only in places remote from our navy yards, and where it can be got only in certain months in the year, interposed insurmountable difficulties to its being immediately procured; no contractor would engage to deliver the frame even of a frigate, in less than two seasons. One waiting season only having elapsed since the passage of the act of the 29th April, 1816, will show why a greater quantity of this timber has not been delivered.

The commissioners now entertain no doubt of being able to procure all the live oak required for the ships authorized, as well as every other material necessary in their construction; and, if it should be the wish of the executive to launch them within the period contemplated by the law, and for the sum appropriated.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

JOHN RODGERS,
President of the Navy Board.

The Hon. Benj. W. Crowninshield,
Secretary of the Navy.

The volume entitled, "Letters from the Cape of Good Hope," professing to contain extracts from the historical work of Napoleon, appears to us to be a fiction, contrived for the purpose of vending by the public curiosity to religion.—London Paper.

Important Improvement.—The newly erected steam saw Mill, late erected by Jonathan Lucas, jun. Esq. and embracing many valuable improvements, has been put into operation within a few weeks past—and we understand that one day this week seventy-three logs of Rock, from the county, were completely cleared, manufactured & conveyed, in the short space of 22 1-2 hours.—Carolina.

From English papers received at the Office of the New-York Daily Advertiser.

An English Captain, returning from the Indies having touched on the coast of Guinea, took on board an age that appeared to be enfeebled by the extraordinary mildness and inteligence. The attendance during the voyage, perfectly answered the captain's expectations; he assisted in the cookery, and in his business always reared himself on his hams, leading a stick in one hand, and appeared particularly attentive in extinguishing the sparks that in any way caused a danger of fire. The captain, an interesting fine young man, died on the voyage, a victim to the ill success of the second in command. The ape committed to the chastisement with the most affecting resignation, during which he held up his hands in a supplicating attitude, as if imploring the exertion of his challenger. From that moment he obstinately refused every kind of nourishment, and died after an illness of 6 days.

An ingenious instrument has lately been examined by a number of scientific men in Glasgow. We insert the following certificate of its excellence:

Mr. Hunter, of Edinburgh, has invented an instrument which is of great importance to the navigation. From two altitudes of the sun, and the interval of time between the observations, he can determine within five minutes after the second observation, the latitude of the place, the hour from noon and the variation of the compass. According to the common form of calculation from double altitudes, the latitude by account is supposed to be known, which in the use of this instrument is not necessary.—It has been tried in several examples, and always found the results very near the truth. If a vessel is driven from her course by storms or by currents, if the reckoning is altogether lost, and the mariner could not get a meridian observation, sun chronometer and a chronometer, he could in a few minutes after the second observation, ascertain his position on the ocean with accuracy. An invention of so much utility in navigation is worthy of encouragement from those entrusted in the commerce of the country."

Mr. Robert Dingwell, of Middletown, Haddam, (Con.) killed about the 1st of January, a Goose, which weighed, after being dressed, 16 lbs.

TO SCHOOLMASTERS, MECHANICS, &c.

THE Township of Westminster, about 120 miles from York, is that becoming one of the most populous in Upper Canada, which is not to be wondered at, considering the great richness of the soil, the goodness and abundance of the water, and the salubrity and mildness of the air.—These things as essential to health and longevity, have induced numbers of respectable men to become actual settlers, and the land in this Township is already nearly taken up. It is now about five years since its commencement, and scarcely a single instance of sickness has been known by its numerous inhabitants. Two School Houses have lately been built, and the resident Minister are very desirous of giving every encouragement to men of good character as permanent Teachers to their rising generation. To Blacksmiths, Bricklayers, Carpenters, &c. of steady good habits, it presents great inducements.

TREMENDOUS FLOOD.

In consequence of the thaw which commenced on Friday, followed by a heavy rain on the Sunday night and the whole of Monday, the Hudson River rose to an uncommon height on Monday evening, and at 9 o'clock the ice began to move in the river opposite this city. Two or three small buildings on the dock near the upper part of the city were swept away. The ice, however, stopped moving in about twenty minutes.

At about two o'clock in the afternoon, during which time the water has been continually and rapidly rising, the ice again started and immediately drove down on us with tremendous force and rapidity. At four o'clock, the water has risen in the lower parts of the Town to an alarming height. The lower parts of the Town are inundated. Steamers, Sloops, Wharves, Handkerchief and Ladies streets, and Market Lane are submerged for several rods. Quay and Thurman-streets are impassable, even with boats. In some of the streets the water was several feet deep, and in several places the current was very rapid.

A late Liverpool Mercury, contains an account of the following horrible transaction.—The Brig Clyde, belonging to Messrs. J. and E. Fisher, of this town, lying at anchor, on the 14th April, 1817, off the island of Corsica, to complete with a Portuguese schooner belonging to Prince's Island, (a Portuguese settlement on the coast of Africa,) were driven by stress of weather to the island of Madeira, where they were detained by the Governor, on the pretence that the captain of the schooner had murdered Matthews, the captain of the Clyde, by poison. He afterwards received permission to land, and was followed by the crew, as a signal to the boats (who were on board the brig, 13 in number) to renounce the crew. Mr John Fiddes, the cook, and the only one at the time on deck, seeing matters surrounded, and the three large knives seen glancing, odds his body; in that state he rushed down the cabin, followed by the Malays, who immediately killed him. The second mate and steward, and the rest of the crew, were murdered, with the exception of two boys, who were put on board under the brig's stern. A black trader's wife & child jumped through the cabin windows, and were picked up by a European vessel which got astern shore. Soon the captain of the Portuguese schooner, had determined to be revenged on the first British vessel he could meet with, because a short time before, a British ship of war had taken two of their schooners which they were engaged in the slave trade.

Extract of a letter from Gen. D. B. Mitchell, agent for Indian affairs, to the executive of Georgia, dated Mount Nelson, 19th Feb. 1818.

"When I last addressed you, I had but barely time to communicate the fact, that I had concluded a treaty with the Creeks, for a cession of land to the U. States for the benefit of Georgia. I have now the honor of enclosing a copy of that treaty. It was my intention to make the Ocmulgee instead of the Ulcofauhatchie, the boundary of the upper tract, and my best endeavors were used for that purpose; but I could not succeed. Indeed it required my utmost exertion to effect what has been done. They have but an unwilling party to the late war, that they listen to proposition for additional cessions with some reluctance. When the great cause of those treaty, that of peace is settled, settlements with those who will be made on that, acquired by the treaty of Fort Jackson, will be rapidly made, and which will advance our frontier to the line of East Florida; and the other from the present best fortified, I trust the terms will be thought not unjust and hard.

"It also affords me much pleasure to have it in my power to assure you, that the great body of the Creek nation are friendly; and evidently desire the expulsion or annihilation of all those downthe Seminoles in East Florida. When I informed the warriors who were lately assembled at the Agency, (at least three fifths of the whole nation) that it was their duty to assist in the punishment of those who had murdered Mr. Crowell

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY,
Friday, 27th Feb. 1818.

DEBATES IN THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Mr. Cuvillier moved, that a call of the House be made on Saturday the 14th of March next.

Mr. C. observed, that as the public accounts had this day come down, he thought it no more than due to duty constituents to assemble the Representatives of the Province in order that their sense might be taken on an important a subject, as that of a permanent civil list of some thousands of pounds. It was notorious to the public, that the House could scarcely get on with the ordinary public business from day to day, for want of a quorum of members to be expected, that the Members present could assume so weighty a responsibility to that of the payment of the said civil list, in the absence of more two-thirds of the Representatives.

Mr. Vigor observed, that a measure of this importance ought to have been preceded by notice, as he conceived it to be one of rigour, and might occasion very great inconvenience to several Members who were absent from unavoidable causes. They had been told of a deficit of £20,000, which it was requisite to provide for in the estimate of the civil list; this, he believed, was not correct. The provincial finances were far from being in a state of embarrassment—if he had been rightly informed, they were in a state of prosperity; it was therefore his opinion, that the Members were not to be best construed for refusing to pay the civil list. The only thing necessary was to fix the sum of appropriation, as there was already a sufficient balance in the chest for the expenditure of the current year. It might, indeed, be found expedient to order a call of the House, but it was at least fair to give a short time to enquire whether it was necessary to do so. The proceedings preliminary to the adoption of such a positive measure, ought to have been observed. The House ought first to have resolved that it was their wish and client to grant an aid without naming the sum. The estimates might then have been taken up in order to ascertain what were the difficulties which presented themselves. This would most probably have afforded ample motives for a call of the House, and have manifested them in resorting to a measure for which, at this moment, he did not see any urgent necessity, and which certainly would put the Members at a distance to very great inconvenience.

Mr. Stuart observed,—that he had considered the question as proposed on the first instance, merely to apply to the authority or expediency of a call of the House for the first day named, but that out of that had arisen some debates or rather conversation on the estimates and accounts which had been laid before the House. In the question as proposed, he was of opinion that the measure was unnecessary. There was no new matter proposed. It was only what was usually done, he had been authorised to expect since the commencement of the Session, and to put off the consideration of the estimates until after the 14th, which must follow if the measure is carried, would, unnecessarily, to prolong the Session. The estimates were prepared with very much care, and he thought might expect from what had been just said. The House was not called upon to make a list, but to take one, and that in compliance with the request of the Assembly in the Upper Province. He had read, he believes, that in taking the list it was understood, that no person was to be placed in a worse situation than he now stood, that the Acts of the Crown were to be confirmed; but as respected the sums asked for the contingent expences of Government, they would properly come under discussion when the expenditure should be accounted for—He, however, wished to be understood, that if on a fair examination of the items composing the estimates, any thing should appear useless or extravagant, he knew nothing to prevent the House to proceed in what he conceived to be a constitutional manner, by addressing the Crown, in the usual way, and apply to the non-residents on which the items stood necessarily be taken. He did not himself consider upon to speak on a subject by no means complicated with the question, and what he had said on the subject had been prompted by the reflection of the moment only.

Mr. Ogden expressed his surprise, that at a moment, when a document of such moment as the civil list was submitted to the House, that Members could question the expediency of a call of the House. Perhaps, Members averse to the motion, might have had the advantage of discussing the list before it had come to the House, and afterwards canvassing the subject, had already made up their minds upon it. He, (Mr. O.) had not had that advantage. It was not to be supposed, that the House would be influenced by those to whom it belonged. He, for one, would not be led, and he could wish Members would insist upon a call of the House, as the only fair means of taking up the subject in a proper light. That Member had termed it a measure of violence, and that at the distance of 24 hours notice of the measure, 50 out of fifty, there were but twenty-two present—Upon the score of personal inconvenience, he, (Mr. O.) had a good cause to complain as any Member of the House, but personal inconvenience he considered to be no excuse for absence, particularly upon the present occasion. Gentlemen who form the charge of attending the Legislative duties assume, that they are to be the only Members who were present ought, in justice to the Province, to feel it a duty to call the absent Members, whose talents and information were considered essentially necessary than upon the present occasion.

Mr. Cuvillier observed, that he was not of opinion that the House was simply called upon to take the list, and not to make it. The civil list was their belonged to the Province, and could not be withdrawn; he could not agree with Members that it was to be taken as given, without examination. The items which must, he presumed, have been fairly understood by Government, as they had come in the account rendering the salaries of the several officers employed throughout the Province. This was a subject which he supposed to scrutinize with the utmost strictness, as it strike off all those pensions and sinecures which were the fruits of corruption of the Mother Country, and which, if the colony be considered a most scandalous abuse. It was motives of economy (he was not simple as to attribute it to a sense of justice) that induced the Mother Country to confer upon the Province the civil list, and he thought the Province could not pursue a more laudable policy than that which the Mother Country was on the eve of adopting, namely, retrenchment. He had no idea of feeling a flock of idle placemen, who drank about our streets, and insulted us on the sentiment than contempt for the people whom they came from starving. It was high time to bring down to a true sense of their intrinsic importance, and he thought it would not, for the present, enter into the details of the list, as he should at a future day, take up the opportunity of fully discussing it. He intended to begin with the top of the list; and from the Governor's salary down to the last officer, he would strictly investigate every item of expenditure. (Here some one said—go on—go on.) Yes, he said, he would go on, and see how far the Province was to be extensively saddled with the salaries of the Governor General of British North America, that the Province should pay its civil Governor, and he would admit—but that the office of civil Governor and Commander in Chief should be dissolved, and the province, in undertaking to answer for its own civil list, were intended to pay any thing like a military establishment, nor could he see why the succession of the sister Provinces, by our Governor General, should be paid by Lower Canada. He might still go further, but he would reserve himself for the subject when it would come regularly before the House. He thought the question sufficiently important to require a full House. It was requisite to have a full knowledge of the whole of the Province, and to ascertain what no be annually stood by the trustee permanent and gratuitous expenditure of the civil government. These items were somewhat novel, and they ought to be well and thoroughly understood. He was told of the right of the measure with respect to absent members. He thought the absentees entitled to no indulgence, particularly those who had recently absented themselves without leave, who by their negligence ought to be put into the custody of the Serjeant at Arms, as a lesson for their future guidance. Upon the whole, he thought it highly expedient, that a call of the House should take place previous to any vote upon a measure which would establish a permanent and growing evil upon the Province.

Mr. Vaughan was decidedly of opinion, that a call of the House was the point so important to the Province as the civil list, ought to take place previous to the adoption of any definitive measures on the subject. With respect to his own opinion on the civil list, he had but few observations to make. He was disposed to investigate as little as possible, but there certainly were items in that list, which he thought it the duty of that House to scrutinize with the utmost strictly. The contingencies of the Governor's office, the travelling expences of Mr. Y. instructed the items allowed to the Judges for travelling expences, which, he said, had been so enormously a matter of speculation to those Judges interest, as absolutely to lower them in the public estimation. This he would not say was generally the case, but it was a subject which must ever be subject to animadversion. If, by any accident, they might be called upon to decide upon such cases. The expenses of his predecessor upon the score of personal inconvenience, he thought another great abuse. It was his opinion that one of the law officers of the crown should be paid for business done at Quebec, but to pay an attorney general and a solicitor general, both resident at Quebec, was, he thought, contrary to all former precedent in this Province. The solicitor general, however, resided at Montreal for the convenience of that officer in Quebec, necessarily gave occasion to employ and pay other law officers in the former place. This circumstance contributed not a little to increase the contingent expences of the Province, which it was his opinion ought the House to keep within moderate bounds.

Mr. Bourgeau was not for the present, disposed to enter largely upon the discussion of the civil list, which, he thought, at the present stage, would be premature. He would reserve his observations, until a call of the House should be made, which he thought, was a measure highly necessary, as the right of the civil list, which properly belonged to the Province, but that it was a right which the Province was entitled to assert. It was the property of the Province, and as such, ought to be paid and rightfully attended to.

Mr. Taschereau observed, that a motion for a call of the House was, as he conceived, unimportant, otherwise than as it tended to prolong the discussion, for which he saw no necessity. He thought the measure was fraught with much inconvenience to Members, without any apparent necessity for resorting to it. With regard to the question to be agitated—namely, that of the civil list, he thought a matter of much importance, touching the civil fund, which he could not but oppose the Hon. Member for Huntingdon, on the grounds he had taken with respect to it. The Honorable Member proposed that the pension, for instance, of £20,000, &c. &c. should be paid out of the civil list to be extraordinary. He had manifested his incompetence

SYMPATHY.

Ah! after we have borne the sad to bear
Or the oppressed to assert redress!
Or after we have wept the dead to their Immortal and victorious rest!

Must the human of sympathy always
Most virtue and the heart be sad?
Must the tired soul intrender or long,
Where its precious pure and divine?

Yes! Pity must often befriend,
And the true mind be chastened and grieve,
While the hand is forbid to unbend,
And the smile is o'er all we can give.

But the heart that but wishes to bless,
Reflecting what pleasure that's given;
And the tear that one felt at distress,
Is less alive to's accepted in heaven.

Forbear, sweet girl, your airborne flight,
And let our wishes prosper not;
That you would mount I well can know,
But greatly fear—you'll not descend!

When angels see a mortal rise,
On beautiful, divine, and fair;
They'll not relieve us from the skies,
But keep their wives angel theirs!

Abstract of the National Debt in 1817.

The following very curious document has been handed to us, as containing a body of Financial information, derived from authentic sources to the month of October. This paper will be read with real lucidity interesting light upon the national debt of great Britain, inasmuch as it not only exhibits the sum total of the debt, and ascertains the separate amount of each description of stock by which it is constituted, but forms a species of enumeration, not often, if ever, submitted at one view to the public, corresponding to the various classes of sovereigns that exist, to each of whom it assigns whatever proportion of the several funds standing in their name at the Bank of England. Although the great body of the account in question bears the appearance of error in and authenticity, we shall feel obliged to any of our correspondents who will enable us to rectify such errors of detail as may by possibility have crept into it.

LONDON, Jan. 28.

Judge Bonfils.—Lieutenant Colonel Berrey and Captain Gordon, Royal Navy, were attached as their counsel. Maguire between Devereux and Figgis by a "combat" on the evening of the 12th December. The first act of the villains was to fire upon their prostitute, without question, a surgeon. His left, mortally wounded. They then proceeded to the two travellers, and robbed them of their watches, money, &c. The beautiful work divided into two parties, one of which was immediately active in the attack and robbery, while the other remained in reserve at a short distance; and their number was no considerable, that Lieutenant Col. Herries and his companion must be considered as owing their lives to their being unprepared to offer any resistance. They suffered little personal violence, and were allowed, when the plunder was finished, to proceed on their journey—their servant taking the place of the guard who was conveyed to London in the carriage. Lieutenant Colonel Herries was the son-in-law to Sir Benjamin Hobhouse, Bart. Lieutenant Colonel Herries was also a brother to Sir Robert Herries, who has served in the Mediterranean, as Deputy-Quarter-Master-General.—Morning Post.

Liverpool Commerce.—The whole import of Cotton into Great Britain in 1817, is estimated at 479,291 packages of various weights, including by computation 191,084,200 lbs. which at an average of 1s. 6d. per pound, would amount to nearly two millions sterling; a most magnificent sum for the raw material of a single manufacture! The greater part of this immense importation has been consumed in this port. The increase by exceeds the imports of 1815 and 1816, severally by 140,000 bags, weighing about 40,000,000 lbs. and upwards of 5 millions sterling. The greater part of this increase has arisen from the opening of the East India trade, which is extending more and more, and thought will soon rival the trade to the West Indies, as far as respects Liverpool.

Feb. 3d.—The Spanish Constitution and the country were disgraced by another of those meetings where men of desperate principles assemble to disgorge their foul and infernal doctrines.—Sir Francis Burdett was in the chair, supported by a mob of real patriots, namely, Lord Cochrane, Wolfe, Jo Gale Jones, and an assortment of public characters from most of the gaols in England.

The object of this meeting was said to be for raising a subscription to relieve the persecuted patriots who had fallen into the hands of the government of the civil dissensions of the last year.—Adverting to the abuses which are permitted at these meetings; and one [illegible] in the [illegible] for our own grave! Must we perish by the abuse of that, which, used with wholesome moderation, would be a blessing, we have little to learn, a great, a prosperous nation! Let us not be intimidated by the boldness of our adversaries—by it is the increase of crime to cause an air of swaggering defiance, that it may outface virtue. Every renegade step we make, will reconcile the order and the purity of our persons. If we are to fall, let us fall at the out works of the Constitution, and not from the breach in its last rivets. We shall thus escape the greater calamity, of beholding the sanctuary polluted by its destroyers. We address this language earnestly, and solemnly, to our countrymen. There are symptoms in the present times, which must alarm all but the unthinking or the lukewarm. The stream of public opinion is hour by hour, and day by day, contaminated with the most malignant indecency; the hallowed and sacred bonds of [illegible] are unceasingly inculcated, the disposition to anarchy is carefully nurtured, and while the fierce current of human [illegible] such events may be anticipated, some crisis shall arrive, demanding the exertion of a steady, loyal fortitude, to carry us through an impending peril, the modest matter now floating through the general mass, will be quickened into life, and with its cancerous venom, destroy the foundation of our present political fabric.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

Saturday, 1st April.

The House at ... assably met pursuant to adjournment at the Castle of St. Louis, and a Message was received, requiring its presence in the Legislative Council Chamber, then also assembled at the Castle. The House having gone up, His Excellency the Governor in Chief was pleased to give the Royal Assent to 24 Bills.

The Session was then closed with the following Speech:

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

The manner with which you have applied yourselves to the public business brought before you, puts it now in my power to close this protracted Session, and to enable you to return to your families at home.

I should feel myself, however, wanting in duty, were I to dismiss you without assuring you of the satisfaction with which I have viewed the harmony of your late proceedings, and the laborious diligence with which they have been conducted; and for these eminent proofs of your zeal and patriotism, I have to offer you my warmest acknowledgments.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

To you my thanks are particularly due, for the ready liberality with which you have granted the supplies for the current years; and I trust that you will not doubt that in the application of the ... sums you have placed at my disposal, I will be guided by a due regard to economy.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

The measures you have adopted during the Session, are valuable evidences of the care of your hearts for the welfare of the Province, and of your attachment to the Government under which you live; and in taking my leave of you at present, I entertain hope, that in your respective districts, you will yourselves continue to be animated by the same principles which have thus influenced your public conduct, and that your best exertions will not be wanting, in instilling equally into all around you the same.

A letter from Basle, dated January 27, says, "We have received from Cairo, the unfortunate news that Mr. Charles Burkhard, the youngest son of Colonel Gideon Burkhard, had died of a dysentery, under the attacks of which he had suffered for some time. Mr. Louis Burkhard, who was ordered to Cairo, to bring, and assisted with the utmost attention by Lord Lexington, in forwarding knowledge to England, and all his services to the English Asiatic Institution for making discoveries in the Interior of Africa.

After having made the necessary preparations, and acquired knowledge necessary for a journey of this kind, he set off some years ago, and proceeded to Cairo to join the Caravan, which comes every year from Tombuctoo, and to penetrate into the interior country, which has hitherto been inaccessible to the European. He was to have left Cairo for Fezzan, but some troubles which broke out in that part of the world, hindered the arrival of the caravan from Tombuctoo. Added by his Mussulman costume, and his perfect knowledge of the Arabic and Turkish languages, Mr Burkhard had made a collection of very valuable and important observations, which the English Association will publish. The loss of this young man, which had been so long and impatiently expected, afflicted us; but when he could depart with it, Mr Burkhard knew under the disorder, and his death has destroyed the most flattering hopes. Feb. 4.

The letter from the Emperor of Russia to the Duke Wellington, requesting him to exert his influence with the King of France against the payments due to the Allies and their subjects, of which we lately fell a copy before our readers, was accompanied by a memorial, which was communicated, at the same time, to all the allied courts, and of course to the court of the United States. It is mentioned in all the political circles in Paris, but it has not been published. This memorial, after a short description of the [illegible] has made on France, by which it would appear that the payment of these to him would reduce that nation to a bankruptcy, concluded by a paragraph, entitled, Mots de l'Empereur—

"In this view or opinion, the Emperor says, that if no interests were concerned but those of his own subjects, (Polish or Russian,) he would not, in this instance, so much as think of [illegible] but that those claims being just in themselves, and such as no one can have an interest to controul or disparage, subject, however, to an investigation as to any inability the French government to so discharge them, it is incumbent upon it, as a matter of honour, to pay them. The Emperor, therefore, that the genie du mal, meaning probably thereby the spirit of Jacobinism, is ever watching the opportunity of starting up from its slumber, and destroying the work which their happy union has accomplished; and he is particularly desirous that it be treated with all the menagement due to her situation; but that she must submit to the same obligations which apply, as far as to her lies, all just dealings, and hold that the least resistance on her part would meet with the most merited and severe punishment."

In this document it is recommended that the Ministers of the Allied Powers in Paris meet on the subject of their claims, and they take into their consideration the statements of M. de Richelieu; that they subject the claims to a new investigation, in order to put aside all such as are not strictly of a private nature; this being gone thro', and M. de Richelieu's representation being admitted, the whole of the claims to undergo a general reduction, to be borne in a due proportion by all the claimants.

To those who argue from this document that a perfect understanding exists between the Russian and British Governments, it is replied, that this application to the Duke of Wellington is a mere ruse on the part of Russia, by which she takes to herself the merit of a liberal suggestion, whether it be adopted or rejected.

Timber Trade.—The ship-owners of London, and within the port of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, have presented memorials to the board of trade, praying that an alteration may be made in the present duties on Foreign Timber, and we are informed that memorials to the same effect have been presented from all the other principal out-ports, to the same effect. The continuance of these duties is essential to the relief and existence of the Shipping Interest, as well as the British Colonists in North America; and as far as we have been able to ascertain the true state of the case, we have reason to believe, that the British Colonists are in no way deeply interested in encouraging or extending the trade with the American Continent than the Baltic. We are informed, that one of the great features of the time of trade with the King's Colonies, is the regular and annual employ ut of eleven or twelve hundred and of British ships, calling for their cargoes of timber, and that this employ ment would be destroyed, if the trade to the Baltic is carried on by at least one half. We have also been informed, that the timber imported from foreign belonging to that country and Sweden. We are convinced that the Government will take every step for the British Colonists, and the shipowners every protection and encouragement they require.

As to the exports to British America from this country, we have long been convinced that we are in the infancy of that trade, which, from the increasing the immense amount of our exports there, in the last preceding year. The increased population of the province of that continent, and to which we wish particularly to direct the attention of the Manufacturing Interests, will create exclusive of the increased population of our own provinces, such a growing demand as great Britain for manufactures and articles of use and ornament, and such extended employment to our own shipping, that we have no hesitation to express the opinion, that if a proper system of duties on Foreign Timber is adhered to and encouragement is continued to be given to the trade to the King's Colonies, there will at least from fourteen to fifteen hundred ships will be annually employed in it, exclusive of the vessels which will be employed in the those Colonies to the British West Indies. It should also be recollected, that this trade is, in every branch of it, entirely British, and that the profitable results of it are all deposited in this country, and constitute part of the national wealth.—Sun.

EDINBURGH, Feb. 4.

SIR.—We request you will have the goodness to insert in your Paper the annexed letter; from Captain Smithett, of the Beloreophon, to us, relative to certain misstatement ministerpeats which appeared in the Edinburgh Annual Register for 1813, on the subject of Napoleon Bonaparte, while on board the Bellerophon vessel. The subject is of considerable interest; and there appears to us no better mode of complying with Captain Maitland's wishes, previously to the publication of the next volume of the Register, than the circulation of a letter through the medium of your extensively-read Journal.

We are Sir,

Your most obedient servts,

JAMES BALLANTYNE, & Co.

To Messrs. James Ballantyne & Co.

GENTLEMEN.—I am induced to address you in order to point out some of the misstatements that have appeared in the 20th chapter of the Edinburgh Annual Register, for the year 1813, just published in your printing office.

The false, or exaggerated accounts which appeared in the daily papers during the period that Napoleon Bonaparte was immediately under my care, I do not consider worth contradiction; but, as it is known I took a full share in them, and that every a-night nearly have been laid to me, laid the writer of the article in question fairly open to censure for the want of authentic information, the public may conclude that I have given my sanction to that part of the 20th chapter which regards myself, (Captain Maitland and myself.) I therefore feel myself called upon, in justice to that person and my own character, to point out the most remarkable paragraphs. The first begins at the 3d line of the first column of the 335th page, and ends at the 12th line of the 2d column on the same page. The second is contained between the 9th and 43d lines of the second column of the 339th page.

In objection to the first, I must state, that Bonaparte never conducted himself with arrogance whilst he was on board the ship I commanded; he knew he would not do well, and he was aware that he could not have adopted a demeanor more likely to defeat his wish he might have entertained of being considered as a crowned head; but in fact, he never once attempted to assume it to me, and as for him its being known to him, he had not even the honors due to a general officer paid on him coming on board the Bellerophon; any honors that could be construed into to those due to the former rank he had held, did not originate with me, and certainly were not demanded by him.

Where the other paragraph could originate, I am at a loss to conceive, as I can assert most solemnly, that at no period in my presence, (and as I was the only person in the ship who had direct communication with him, his own people excepted,) did he ever threaten to commit suicide. It is true, some of his attendants hinted that he would be guilty of that crime—whether with his concurrence or not, I cannot pretend to say—but when the question was put to me, if he had ever said he would put himself to death, they answered in the negative, and that expression was never mentioned to me. Indeed, was that the case, I am determined not to go to St. Helena; and if I may be allowed to judge from the opinions expressed on the subject, it was an act he never had in contemplation.

I shall refer these circumstances, which I am ready to prove, to the depositions of the different witnesses being considered as [illegible] with me, as I shall feel myself bound to contradict them in a manner equally public with the Edinburgh Register.

I am, gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

FREDERICK MAITLAND,

Captain in His Majesty's Navy.

APPEAL OF MURDER AND WAGER OF BATTEL.

Ingleton v. Thornton.

Mr. Chitty addressed the court in behalf of the appellant, on his demurrer to the defendant's replication. He read over the different proceedings that had previously taken place, and pointed out the defendant's wager of battel, and that the defendant had no right to maintain the plea of wager of battle pend'd, Hunt it was not competent for him. In support of that plea, he stated circumstances in his replication to the counterplea, tending to exculpate him from the charge of murder, or to give to his innocence and 20th, That the circumstances stated were not sufficient to warrant the defendant in maintaining the plea of wager of battle pend'd, That

From Lower Canada.

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT OF LOWER CANADA.

Debates on the Civil List continued from our last.

Mr. Cuvillier expressed his surprise at the courtesy offered by the Hon. Member who spoke last, in behalf of the Officers of His Majesty's Customs. He had as yet seen by what authority the Executive Council could suspend the operation of Acts of the Provincial Legislature. The excuse offered by the Hon. Member went to involve the Executive Council in a very serious imputation, that of suspending the Laws of the Land, or at least of assisting individuals to evade them by a shift, so palpable that it could not for a moment be intended by with intention. He thought the subject worthy of further enquiry.

Mr. Speaker went largely into the discussion of the Civil List.—He thought the objections to the amount of the Governors' Salary by no means unfounded, as it was only from the independence with which the Chief Magistrate in the Colony could live that Persons of rank and character from England and easily shove the little local Intrigues and jealousies common to colonies could be induced to accept of so arduous a charge as the chief command in these Provinces.—He cited instances in which from the want of a suitable provision for former Governors, they had involved themselves in speculations degrading to themselves and degrading to the dignity of the Post—Our Governors ought to be entire strangers to every party or local Interest and Intrigue, and to enable them to be so, it was requisite to make a liberal provision for the personage occupying the important Post of Governor in Chief of British North America—The situation of the Civil Secretary to the Governor was also a post of no small importance, & must necessarily require the undivided attention of a person of more than ordinary talents and knowledge. That Office ought to be filled by a person of knowledge, of respectability and of talents, and with what was connected with the Colony and its interests, and studious of promoting its welfare; if these requirem nts were essential necessary in the individual, who might be charged with the duties of that office, it was no more than common justice to give a salary compliant to induce persons of the character and description he had mentioned to devote themselves to an honest and upright discharge of its functions. He thought the salary ought to be equivalent to that of the Clerks of the Council and Assembly.—He had no material objections to the salary of the Lieut. Governor, provided he should reside in the Province, and be the head of the Executive Council, in order that instead of that vacillating policy which we find constantly agitating the Province, a steady, honest and uniform system might be introduced and acted upon—The situation of Lieut. Governor of Gaspe was useless to the Province, it was a sinecure, and he therefore wished to see it upon the Pension List, as that it might die with the individual who held it.—The place of Surveyor of woods was in the like manner a sinecure and, as such, ought to belong to the Pension List. The Secretary of the Province ought to be compelled to reside in the Province or he immediately struck from the List altogether as a flagrant imposition—It was indeed unfair and unjust to expect that the Province should pay the enormous sum of £450 Sterling annually to a person totally a stranger to it and in which probably he had never set his foot —The Auditor of Patents he considered in the same light—He saw no necessity for a Clerk to the Inspector General of Accounts—It was a new and unnecessary charge to the Province and as such he was disposed to retrench it altogether—As for the Agent of this Province, he would not suppress his surprise at seeing such a situation on the Civil List, and he had much to suspect that the person in question had certain connections in this Province not so friendly to its interests as could be wished, and which were sufficient to deter the Commons from having any communication with him. Could even the Commons from the unconstitutional manner in which they supposed he must hold his agency from the Assembly of Lower Canada correspond with him—The private instructions which from time to time he may receive from persons residing in or connected with the Province, it is such to be apprehended will be rather calculated to promote the personal advantage of a few individuals than the public good. Whatever his desire or intentions may be, however well disposed in be useful to this Province, he will often be hoodwinked and deceived. The situation of French Translator was notoriously a sinecure, it formerly might have been useful, but at present the utmost that was required from that Officer was occasionally to translate a Proclamation. He thought this sinecure might very properly abolished, and the sum of £300 or thereabouts granted by way of contingencies to any person who might be employed to translate Proclamations as occasion might require. He was finally of opinion that the retrenchments which might be made upon the Civil List would be sufficient to enable the House to augment the Salaries of certain Officers who were really entitled to an increase, without adding to the gross amount of the Sum required for the current year. Mr. Taschereau here handed forward Mr. Taschereau, and asked whether it was not his intention to make these retrenchments as a measure preliminary to an increase of salaries &c. other officers. Some explanation followed which we could not hear. But we observed that Mr. Taschereau shook his head, as if answering in the negative.

Mr. Borgia was of opinion, that the very ample discussion which Members seemed disposed to enter upon, would prove fruitless, and that after all had been said they would revert to the same point from whence they had started.—The Civil List which was now to be detailed upon the Province, was not indeed the Civil List which the Province had asked for in 1810—it had much accommodated to bulk, but such as it was, Members should secure it, for it was certain that a delay of a few more years might again bring it back more weighty than at present, the House should profit by past experience, and to prevent an increase of the Civil List, it should not cavil upon trifles, when possession of such an important object was to be gained. He had always been of opinion that the Civil List was the property of the Commons of Lower-Canada, and that the money they had obtained possession of it the more it would tend to the interest of the Province.—He thought it a mere waste of time and talk to discuss the subject in detail with such apparent unwillingness, he felt assured that they would terminate the discussion of the Civil List by swallowing it en gros in lump.

Mr. Stuart rose to say, that on a subject so important, he thought Members ought not to be precipitate in forming opinions either one way or another—as for himself, he would frankly admit, that as yet he had not had sufficient time to examine the Civil List with the attention which he could have wished to bestow upon the subject.—It was a measure of too much importance to hurry through the House, at a very advanced period of the Session, the Government must only wait with patience until Members could fully acquaint themselves with the subject. In the event of their committing an error on a subject of such vital consequence to their constituents, as a permanent Civil List of several thousands of pounds it would be no excuse to tell them that the House was short of time, that it was compelled to hurry on business. This would be no excuse at all. It would rather be an affront to them. The House must find time to do the public business. He could not help observing that upon the estimate there appeared an appointment which must excite the amusement of the House. He meant the Agent for the Province residing in London; by whom or when did this appointment take place? This appointment had surely never taken place with the advice or concurrence of the Commons of Lower-Canada, who for not long ago been told by very high authority that they were not to have an Agent, how then were they to account for this extraordinary appointment which appears to have existed somewhere to provide an Agent for the Commons of this Province without consulting them. It was, to him a marvellous & unaccountable occurrence, that after several years, unsuccessful endeavours to obtain the privilege of having an Agent in England, they were at a moment when they least expected it, blest with the consummation of their wishes without any other trouble than that of paying him. He would not for the present enter into the Civil List as minutely as he could wish, but it appeared to him to contain some unnecessary objectionable. Among them he remarked the Audit of Accounts composed of Members of the Executive Council, which he said was entirely a new thing, and to him appeared quite unnecessary, as there is already an Inspector General of Accounts. He had never understood that the Gentlemen to whom he alluded had been remiss in inspecting the Accounts of the Province; on the contrary, he had heard many reflections upon the rigid punctiliousness with which he scrutinised the Accounts that came before him, if however it were necessary to investigate the public accounts with greater exactness than heretofore, it was the duty of the Executive Council or at least of those Members who were already paid for the purpose to do the duty in question, or if they could not spare time, let them transfer the sum of £900 which they annually received to pay the Gentlemen composing the Audit of Accounts. He observed on casting his eye over the Civil List, that as much was as yet unprovided for the payment of the Audit of Accounts. The sum remained as yet blank, and if the merit of the Audit were to be the measure of their recompence, it would, he feared, for ever remain blank. He did not see any plausible pretext for the creation of a board of Audit—in fact the House of Assembly was in future to be the Audit of all Public Accounts, without which the substance of the Inspector General of Accounts, would be quite superseded and the burdens with the maintenance of the Council. He observed two new charges on the list, one of £1000 for the Clerk to the Inspector General of Accounts, and another of Assistant Clerk to the Executive Council of £182 10s. sterling. The first of these charges he thought in any no worse of it was quite unnecessary; but with respect to the latter, he had no hesitation in pronouncing it to be a downright imposition upon the House, as it must have been upon his Excellency the Governor in Chief, who had been induced to consider it of such importance as to put it into the Estimate. He hoped Members would take a day or two to think of the subject. There were, in his opinion, two modes of proceeding in the present instance; one, to appoint a Special Committee to examine the Civil List and report upon it. This would enable Members to form a correct idea of the propriety of either granting the full amount of the estimate before the House, or of retrenching from it, if the estimate should be found overcharged. If however the advanced period of the Session was such as to prevent the adoption of this method, he would be of opinion to vote a certain Sum for the payment of the expences for the present year, appointing at the same time a Committee to look into the appropriations, and report at an early period in the ensuing Session, the result of their enquiries. In order that abuses if any such should be found to exist, might be thoroughly corrected, and the Civil List be settled by an Act of the Legislature.

Mr. Taschereau observed, that Members had wandered from the point at present before the House. They had not been content with confining themselves to the subject in question, but had entered largely into the discussion of items, which from the course he adopted, must necessarily come in their turn for discussion at a subsequent stage of his proceeding. That the Honorable Member who spoke last expressed some dissatisfaction at two new pieces as mentioned in the Civil List, viz.—Clerk to the Inspector of Accounts and Assistant Clerk to the Executive. As to the first however, it would in some sense appear from the arguments of the Hon. Member, that he partly approved of it in admitting that the person entrusted with the inspection of the public accounts punctiliously performed his duty. He (Mr. T.) even from the statement of the Hon. Member, considered the duties of his office as arduous, as in justice to entitle him to an increase, so as to enable him to associate with the minutest attention, the public accounts, by what considerable sums might ultimately be saved to the Province—as to the place of assistant clerk to the Executive Council, he intended to be so mentioned in its turn, that it was in fact a new office, but that it had been put upon the estimate, he was not disposed to retrench it without making some previous enquiry on the nature and responsibility of this office. Members had spoken largely on the charges contained in the first head of the Civil List, but he would venture an observation on the objection made to the Agent. He had always considered an Agent in England as an appointment which might be of material service to the Province. It was indifferent who that Agent might be, provided he was useful to the Province. Let us try, (he observed,) the person who is said to be our Agent at present, and if he serves us well, it will be fair to continue him, and legally constitute him the Agent of Lower Canada. For us to-morrow appoint a Committee of Correspondence with him, as practised in other Colonies. The Province had, at the present moment, a very fair opportunity of trying his diligence—two Bills of the highest importance to its welfare are now pending for the Royal Sanction. The Bills for the Fire Assurance Companies of Quebec and Montreal. The Agent has in forwarding these Bills for the Royal Sanction, a very favourable opportunity of essentially serving the Province, by opposing the whole of its general interests & against the private interests of a few avaricious individuals, as well in Canada as in England, who by intrigue endeavour to prevent these Bills from passing into Laws. His diligence in this business will show whether he be an earnest well wisher of this Province, and devoted to its best interests, or whether he be a tool of a few intriguing and designing men here and in England.—There are now before the Legislature two other Bills—those for the Incorporation of Banks at Quebec & Montreal, which must probably would be sent to England for the Royal Sanction.—What he had said with respect to the Fire Assurance Bills, might, as far as the Agent was concerned, be said also of these Bills. He repeated, that the honesty and faithfulness of the Agent in question, and whose credit with the Commons of this Province must depend upon the punctuality with which he should dispatch their business, would be amply ascertained, by the attention he should bestow on these Bills, which it would be his duty to attend to. For these reasons he was not disposed for the present, to retrench it or cancel the appointment. Objections had been made with respect to certain sums already paid by the Province, for which he did not intend to make an answer, for he indeed felt apprehensive that he could find no apology which in his own mind would be satisfactory. As they were paid by the Province, it had unquestionably a right to their services, or at least their residence in the colony. He hoped, however, that no cause for dissatisfaction on this score would subsist at the ensuing session, or at least that if the grievance of which Members complained should then remain, he would willingly acquiesce with the House in any constitutional measure tending to remove the evil. Complaints had been made against Simcoes, and Members were inclined to place them on the Pension List, in order that they might die with the persons who held them. This he acknowledged might be desirable, but he begged of Members to consider, that there were certain evils inherent in all Governments, which cannot be removed but with time. He conceived the complaints were not groundless, and that they might properly be made the subject of a representation to Government, but it was indispensibly necessary to afford time for the Government of the Colony to communicate with Ministers on the subject, and, in the mean time, he thought it comported most with the liberality of the House to vote a sufficient sum to cover the expences of the present year.

The House adjourned the question at a very late hour until the next day.

QUEBEC, Monday, 6th April, 1818.

There was an error in Mr. Cuvillier's Speech, inserted in our last Gazette, on the subject of the Civil List, which we are desired to rectify. The Hon. Member asserts, that it was not Sir James H. Craig who first obtained the increase of the Salary of the Governor in Chief to £4,000. The Public Accounts printed in the Journals of the House of Assembly prove that it was Sir Robert Shore Milnes that first received the augmentation alluded to. Sir James may have had hints, but into modes is necessary or that ought never to be imputed to him. His character was directly the reverse. He was generous, he had high notions of power, and was not sufficiently acquainted with the Country and the character and circumstances of its inhabitants.

The trial of Charles De Reinhart and Archibald M'Lellan for the murder of Oliver Arscenaux, a servant of the Hudson's Bay Company, at the River Winipic, in year 1816, came on before the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Perrault on Monday last (the 30th of March.) Mr. Stuart had previously arrived from Montreal for the purpose of assisting in the conduct of the prosecution, but upon ascertaining the determination of the Crown Officers to submit of no interference further than suggestions during the Trial, that Gentleman declined any participation in the suit, and returned to Montreal before the trial took place. Mark's Cat'ain, Boucherie and Gale were examined as to the locality of the territory in which the murder is alledged to have been perpetrated, from a principal doubt as to its being within the jurisdiction of the Court of King's Bench for Quebec.—The examinations of Hewett Laine occupied the remainder of the day until the adjournment of the Court which took place at about 8 o'clock in the evening, when the Jury were put into the charge of the Constables sworn as usual on such occasions.—The Court met the next morning at a quarter past nine, when, previous to entering upon the trial, sentence was pronounced upon the Criminals convicted in the Term. John Bte. Lespasse was then sworn and examined as a Witness on the part of the Crown. His cross examination by two of the Prisoners Counsel occupied several hours, and was urged with some ability and address, apparently with a view of trying the consistency of the witness. At four o'clock the Court adjourned in order to take refreshment, and at about six o'clock the Court again met. Capt. D'Orsonnens was called upon as the next witness for the prosecution, but shortly after the commencement of his testimony, the Attorney General, still having many witnesses to examine, and finding it utterly impossible to get through the evidence on the part of the Crown before midnight, (with which the term expired, and with it the jurisdiction of the Court,) moved by the consent of the Prisoners, for leave to withdraw a Juror, after which the Jury was discharged without giving a verdict, leaving the situation of the Prisoners, after sitting of thirty-six hours the same as before the Jury were sworn.—The trial created a great deal of interest at the Fishery, to which we should give the Monstreal the Lesser as taken down, were it not that such a measure might tend to affect the impartial Administration of Justice, in creating a public feeling in which a future Jury might participate. The postponement of the Trial appears to have been the inevitable result of the absence of the principal witness on the part of the Crown, it was brought to our notice, and it is much regretted that the Civil Officers did not take due measures which might have been within their reach, of interrogating the Witness, whose language, or rather patois, is frequently so unintelligible to the Civil Officers, as the interpretation of the latter were to the former, to the disadvantage of a trial by Jury, in which the evidence may be imparted with information, so that no party may have time to prepare a story; any suppression of the Evidence and Prevention of more (Extra an opportunity of subornation, and finally to evade the pursuit of Justice.

From Europe.

LONDON, Feb. 17.

We present this day to our readers the speech of the President to both houses of congress. It betrays, under the mask of moderation, the same ambition and thirst for the extension of the territories of the U. States. As articles, however, is generally marked by some inconsistency, the message says, adverting to what it stiles "injurious" arrest of the proceedings of the Seminole Island, while in possession of the independents, that "Spain would be responsible, if it was not manifest, that although committed in the latter vicinage through her territory, she was entirely unable to prevent them," yet in the very same paragraph there is the following passage:

"To a country over which she, (Spain) is unable to maintain her authority, and which she permits to be connected to the annoyance of her neighbours, jurisdiction for the time necessarily ceases to exist. The territory of Spain will, nevertheless be respected, so far as it may be in her power to protect it, and the just interests and rights of the United States."

Now, how can Spain be said to permit what she is evidently unable to prevent? But more is it was that they meets the ear, in this specious but insidious passage. Does the government of the United States erect itself into a judge, and almost pass sentence against Spain by anticipation? But the deep ambitious designs of the American government are to be found in the conclusion of the same extract "the territory of Spain will be respected, so far as it may be done consistently with the essential interests and safety of the U. States," and who is to judge and determine on this point but the American government, which is to be judge and jury on the occasion? This is exactly of a piece with the doctrine laid down in the opening speech of the president, which imported, that when the weaker state require the possession of an other, it is lawful to seize them. Indeed America has begun to practice this doctrine in seizing Amelia Island without due pretensions.

Sunderland, March 8. The mail arrived yesterday evening with papers to the 4th inst.—They bring a confirmation of the death of Charles XIII. of Sweden; and of the undisturbed accession of the Crown Prince. The late Sovereign expired on the morning of the 5th. The Council of State was immediately assembled, and the Crown Prince having signed the declaration given, cited by the Constitution, the members of the Council with the civil and military authorities took the oath of allegiance to their new sovereign, Charles John, on the 6th he was proclaimed King in the usual form. Next day a plenary meeting of the Diet was held, at which the King and Prince Oscar, with the great Officers of State, repaired in solemn procession. Being seated on the throne, he received the oaths of allegiance of the four estates of the realm; the ceremony commencing with Prince Oscar, who thereupon, with the Lord Marshal, archbishop, & the two other speakers kissed hands. His Majesty then returned to his apartments in procession, amid the cries of "long live the king" On the following day the court mourning commenced for 30 days and his accession.—The following is the proclamation issued by the new King:—

"We, Charles John, by the Grace of God, King of Sweden and Norway, &c. to all our faithful subjects living, and dwelling in Sweden, greeting: As we, in consequence of the proposal of our late beloved father, and august King and Sovereign, Charles XIII. to the estates of the Kingdom of Sweden, were unanimously chosen on the 21st of Aug. 1810, his successor on the Swedish throne, and at the same time invited by the unanimous voice of the King and the people, accepted this honorable call, though attended with great responsibility. We have a particular impulse therein, in the serious whole foreign to us, which decided your choice, and which, without our having had any share in them solely directed your free act. 25 years have passed since we were thereby called from that repose which had been our only aim, and immediately on our arrival in this country, we found ourselves at war with Russia, which, connected with Great Britain, menaced the independence and freedom of both nations. Peace was concluded in 1812, and we had a more holy zeal, which could but increase our obligations and the duty of watching over the welfare of the people. Three years that have elapsed since that event has interesting to our hearts, we have ever endeavoured to fulfil the duties of peace-to be forgotten and ever-beloved Prince, all the duties of a faithful subject and an affectionate son, and have daily received in his paternal mansion changing tenderness, the noblest recompence of our endeavour. IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

February 11.

SLAVE TRADE, AND TRADE TO SPAIN.

On the motion of Lord Castlereagh the house resolved itself into a committee of Supply, and the Speaker then left the chair.

In the committee Lord Castlereagh observed, that after the full and length ened discussion which the question had undergone on a previous night, he was not disposed to trespass on the time further than by simply stating the line of conduct he was about to propose to the committee. He, in common with all the country, felt anxiously desirous to see the Slave Trade put an end to, and the treaty had not with such readiness and unanimous approbation from the House. He therefore moved—

That the sum of £100,000, be granted to his majesty, in order to put into effect the articles of a treaty concluded between his Britannic Majesty and the King of Spain, relative to the abolition of the Slave Trade, on the 23d September, 1817.

Mr. L. rather rose to assure the House it was by no means his intention to disturb in any manner the unanimity with which, the harmony and unanimity which had on a preceding night characterized the conduct of the House on the object of that Treaty; but, on the present occasion, he felt himself called upon to guard the interests of the merchants trading with Spain. In the arrangement of our commercial relations with that country we become a matter of considerable mercantile importance. It was pretty generally known, there existed on the part of Spain no great cordiality to the country, and he had been induced to say, that British merchants trading to Spain were somehow to greater hardships than ever they had been subjected to.—It was well to see cotton goods had been for a long time prohibited by Spain—however this might affect our manufacture, it was not what he complained of—he had aware. Woollens and linens were also intended to be prohibited; and in fact the only articles to which a free admission had been imposed upon these articles, amounting to £400. per cent. This duty was, when taken in conjunction with other parts of the treaty, a sufficient indication on the part of Spain, of her indisposition to friendly commercial relations with this country. Enough it might be said, to assuage, that a commercial grievance was not a just ground or cause of precaution of war; yet it might be indeed ought to constitute a strong reason for a diplomatic remonstrance. It had been further represented to him, that the Spanish Government entertained that Spain would not only submit to extraordinary, but even to unwarrantable exactions, merely on account of the equitable consideration. In cases of increase of duties on goods imported, it had been, he apprehended, a general rule to give six months notice of such intention, to spare its foreign traders [illegible] the instance of Spanish additions of duties, no such notice had been had given, and the duties had been so suddenly laid on, that the British shipper, acting on the faith of the Spanish law of custom, could not be informed by possibility be apprised in time, and his shipment was productive of nothing but loss to him instead of profit. The new ton from upon importation was equally severe and heavy, and the additional duties imposed had been imposed with the same levity and haste. It was the wish of the Spanish Government to prohibit altogether, or simply to tax exorbitantly the produce of our manufactures, let it be done; but, in God's name, let them fairly give time by notice, so as to prevent the British consignment arriving under such changed circumstances that they must return to the port of shipment, or be sold at an enormous loss. He begged then to intend the Noble Lord to inform him, whether there was now any thing to be done, or to be hoped for, in the way of remonstrance, either to Cortes or a friendly Government, on this subject, or a remonstrance upon the part of our Government, relative to the commercial relations of this country?

Lord Castlereagh hoped the Honourable Gentleman would not see objections he might have to make on other points of unfavourable consequence, to be mixed up with the consideration of a question of such eminent and importance as that before the Committee—(hear, hear)—he felt it impossible for the United Foreign States had last an imperfect and prejudiced view of the great principles of commercial intercourse between nations. While this country lamented the existence of those principles, we should look upon them with some indulgence, when it was recollected that we had, for a long time, suffered ourselves to be deluded by similar absurd ideas as to exclusive monopolies and restrictions in trade—(hear, hear.)—He lamented the existence of those (in us) antiquated prejudices, as well on Spain's account as our own, as he was, that if the object of a more equitable kind on mutual, it would be ultimately beneficial to himself, and extend her general commerce. At present, the result of these absurd restrictions was, that the principal part of this commerce was carried on clandestinely, although declared contraband. The British government were attentive to the interests of the mercantile body, but were willing two propositions to the court of Spain, in expectation of being able to induce her to establish a more liberal system of trade and duties, to relieve the produce of this country.—hear—which, however, he was sorry to say was rejected. Of no benefit or advantage for an government had endeavoured in vain with Spain to a sense of its just and true interests in this respect. As for the restrictions against the importation of cotton in any shape, he was not aware of any grievance experienced by our merchants for if any reference had been latterly made in this respect, it had been owing to the unsettled state of the government of that country previous to the return of the King of Spain to his dominions for as far back as the year 1792, all cotton wrought or unwrought was free as of such prohibition now was only a return to the ancient system of Spain as to mercantile restrictions. But he had every reason to believe that superior to such inequitable regulations in commerce, Government could not, were a good grace, be induced to relax in favour of a country where now such ground of complaint in cases necessary for consideration, to make an humble remonstrance, and to solicit an alteration, more especially wherever such cases appeared to involve a general principle. Nothing could be more desirable than to see different foreign governments (as was still subsisted) to systems proved to be practically prejudicial in trade, should endeavour to meet each other in commercial principles. It were to be wished most sincerely they were aware, as we at last began to be aware, of the true interests of all great nations was to open, as widely as possible, the intercourse between each other, thus producing a reciprocity of benefit to their respective countries, which alone constituted the materials of which true friendship was formed. In this point of view the system of trading which we had so long pursued with Spain, and which he could not but look upon as illiberal, was entitled to the serious consideration of the House, and he was sure, from his own knowledge, that the Government of his honourable friend at the head of the Board of Trade, were in unison with those at the Noble Lord, and both would each readily, and without delay be acted on, and produce some striking effects on the commerce of this country. His intention, he assured, was to press his objects on to the Spanish Government, as it affected, by suddenly increased rates of duties, the subject of imports.

Mr. Robinson observed, that the prohibition of cotton was not absolute, but only a quantity of purchase was required by the Philippine Company. Although other articles had been prohibited, that was merely a pass one from were an attempt to introduce them clandestinely, subject to extraordinary high duties, which might have nearly the effect of a prohibition.

Mr. Lyttleton explained.

Doctor Phillimore—By a late treaty, eminently, upon a sentence of restitution to our courts, were to recover a certain sum for each vessel condemned upon ships brought in for adjudication to the admiralty courts. Now, it would be desirable to know whether the claimant, in such a case, should be entitled to make the demand on the Spanish or British Government.

Lord Castlereagh thought that there could be no misapprehension in equity as the two governments, that a contract with them in consideration of a sentence of restitution in a Prize Court.

Lord Althorp regretted the country so far distinguished itself in Spain money to an act of humanity. He also, for one, charitable intention would most likely be counteracted by other conditions, which would naturally suppose be proposed to ourselves some advantage from the arrangement which had cost this country so heavy a sum.

Mr. Wilberforce—[rising out after gather the question or humanity, the more sure proposed was most efficacious for all the purposes of the Treaty, as well as the surest and cheapest way of ensuring to this country the supplying of the native African with those productions of Europe for which they had already imbibed so strong a relish, and satisfied, as he was, that if the object of a more equitable kind on mutual, it would be ultimately beneficial to himself, and extend her general commerce. At present, the result of these absurd restrictions was, that the principal part of this commerce was carried on clandestinely, although declared contraband. The British government were attentive to the interests of the mercantile body, but were willing two propositions to the court of Spain, in expectation of being able to induce her to establish a more liberal system of trade and duties, to relieve the produce of this country.—hear—which, however, he was sorry to say was rejected. IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, March 16.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved that the house do resolve itself into a committee to take into consideration so much of the Prince Regent's speech as related to the building of new churches. He said this was a subject which was not likely to be overlooked at this time of the house; and the speaker having left the chair, the right honourable gentleman said, that no communication had ever been made to him from the throne which was more entitled to the gratitude of the public, than the present. More than a century had passed away since parliament had afforded any accommodation to the public, by the erection of new churches. It was, however, no less imperfect, because no more than eleven churches were then built; and since then there had been no additional accommodation for public worship. Nothing could have so long delayed the accomplishment of so necessary a work, than the great increase of population which the country had been placed. The increase of our population since the period in question, had reached to such an amount as to be a matter of exposition, that it became the duty of parliament to remedy this great and growing inconvenience. This want of accommodation arose now from the great increase of people in places, which were formerly laid out into very large parishes. The population had been doubled since the last increase of churches took place. The average number of inhabitants was 11,000 to each benefice in the diocese of London; while in that of Oxford, the number was only 2092. There were therefore four times as many in one diocese than in another. The disproportions were still greater in individual parishes. St Martin's in the Fields, there were 26,000 inhabitants, while in another parish there were 94,000, and in Mary-le-bone there were 76,000. In many parishes only a small proportion could be accommodated. There were three parishes, in which were 210,000 people who could not be accommodated; there were eight in which the deficiency was from 80 to 40,000 people, and in twelve more, the deficiency was from 20 to 30,000. If a church could contain one third of the inhabitants at one time, that would be sufficient accommodation. In a work published by a Mr. Yates, it appeared that the population of London was 1,129,000; and there were churches only for the accommodation of 151,000, leaving 978,000 without any accommodation. The towns of Roman origin were dis- into smaller districts, and were better provided than the towns with churches. In the north of Cheshire, and Chester, the disproportion of the number of churches to the population, was less than in that of London. In the diocese of York there were 96 churches which afforded accommodation for 189,000 inhabitants. The population consisted of 1,100,000 souls, which consequently left 719,000 souls unprovided with church room.—In the diocese of Chester there were 127 parishes; the population was 1,280,000 souls, and of these one million were unprovided with room,—Many of the populations of Surrey and Wales also without the accommodation of a church. It was not, however, to the accommodation which would be afforded by churches, that the benefit of the present measure was limited. It would go to increase the number of spiritual ministers and afford a chance of a greater share of that pastoral instruction and attendance, of which they stood in need. It would lighten the duties upon such individuals, and lead at present a great deal too much to do. In one parish it was stated as the ordinary duty of the curate, that he had to officiate attended the church at 9 o'clock in the morning, gave an early service, another at 11 o'clock, and another in the afternoon. He then baptized from 17 to 20 children, and read the burial service at five fees to eight funerals. In another parish, the curate had generally fifty christenings on a Sunday. Upon this great festivals he had had at the least 113. He had always to celebrate 140 banns of marriage on a Monday—they seldom were so low as 100, and on one occasion they amounted to 126. Where the duties were distributed so much, it was morally impossible that they could be performed with all that attention and kindness which they required. Impositions might pass unnoticed, and thus the civil rights of individuals might be most materially affected.—(hear, hear.) The outline of the plan was—he should propose the vote of one million sterling, to be paid ultimately out of the surplus in aid. This sum, though voted at once, was not to be all issued at one time, but as the occasion required. It would be the duty of the commissioners who would be vested with the same powers and directions as the commissioners who were appointed last year for the advancement of public works. He thought this preferable to voting an annual sum. He should not at present for the issue of exchequer bills to that amount, which would be chargeable on the extents made of a [illegible] year. The commissioners would consider their inquiries as to the necessity of building churches to the accommodation alone, they would select such spots where it was clear to them there was a want of accommodation existed, and it might be more satisfactory to the house to know that a sum of this kind would be applied in any particular way. With its forbearance only of every fair exertion on the part of the parish itself. (Hear, hear.) He would be glad to see any way of encouragement and assistance, rather than as a complete exoneration, and every one must be sensible, when the grants made of sites of churches, and the raise funds of itself. In all cases the property of the incumbents and patrons would be left inviolate. Power would be given to the commissioners to receive an old parish in a district where a new church would be built, and to place the parishioners under the charge of a new spiritual minister; and where parochial chapels would be built, a curate for it would be provided by the commissioners, who would be responsible only by the bishop of the diocese. He would not trouble the house with any further details at present. He would only move the resolution which had been read by the chancellor of the exchequer.

Mr. Bennet said, he was glad to hear the statement which had been made by the chancellor of the exchequer, and he was sure that there were many of the dissenters who would attend the church. (Hear, hear.)—The particulars which would come forward and liberally would receive from the commissioners the most liberal aid; and he anticipated a large fund for the same purpose for building churches, which had already produced much good. The parishioners would therefore have the power of choosing their own Parish Priest, and every party would have his proportionable share of it. This was a measure wholly separate from politics. It came home to every friend of the church, such as were those whom he saw around him. He hoped therefore, that moving a motion for the issue of Exchequer Bills, to the amount of one million sterling, for the building of new churches.

Mr. Bennet's conversation the motion was agreed to without a dissenting voice.

March 22.

The Bourbons have followed the example of other countries in recognizing the accession of the present King of Sweden. He is now acknowledged by every civilized power. This is an era, and a very important one, in the history of the monarchs of Europe. It stands forth as a precedent of the most ample, that the absurd notions, hitherto imputed to kings and cabinets, of the indefeasibility of legal rights, have happily passed away, and that the good of the people is acknowledged to be of equal importance with the rights of despots. As this principle is a new one to popular liberty, and on the other hand does not encourage any source of anarchy, we must again express our satisfaction with his recognition.

LONDON, March 26.

We understand that one of the expedients fallen upon by the Spanish government to enable it to fit out the Russian squadron, to allow the merchants permission to ship on board ships of war, and tons of merchandize, at low duties, the receipts of which, it was expected, would afford a considerable aid. The exact destination is not known to the merchants, but they are given to understand, that the force will be so overwhelming, that to whatever point of the ultramarine dominions it is bound, resistance on the part of the Patriots must be in vain. The scheme, however, does not meet with approbation. The fate of Morillo's expedition, much larger than any Spain can now send out, is not forgotten. The Spanish nation will murmur a good deal. They think that the benedictions of heaven on the Hieronymo-Russian enterprise cannot be secured, unless the Heretical character is taken from the ships, by a solemn baptism, which ceremony, it is thought, will take place previous to their putting to sea.

LIVERPOOL, March 27.

Prince Regent's letter to the Duke of Wellington.

A private letter from Paris, dated March 11, gives the following as a copy of the letter which the Prince Regent wrote to the Duke of Wellington, on the occasion of the late attack on his person.

"CARLTON-HOUSE, Feb. 14.

"My dear friend—I cannot deny myself the pleasure of writing you a few lines, for the purpose of expressing to you both the happiness which I feel at the news, which has just reached me, of your escape (thanks to Divine Providence) from a base attempt formed against you; and the sentiments of horror and indignation with which I was filled, at the infamy and baseness of such an atrocious attack. I can only offer up devout thanksgiving for the superior goodness of Divine Providence, for having protected a life so important to my happiness, and to the welfare of my people, and for the preservation of the general tranquility of Europe. That you may long continue the blessing a life so precious to all, is the earnest and fervent wish of your sincere and affectionate friend.

"GEORGE, P. R."

The London Courier states, that the person who attempted to take the life of the Duke of Wellington, was arrested. Castillon is his name. He has been in the army, and it is supposed was chosen by the authors of the plan on account of his daring character and of his attachment to those principles by which Europe has been made the scene of such butchery and bloodshed.

Attempt at assassination.—A shocking circumstance occurred on Sunday morning at the Spanish chapel, in Manchester-buildings. A French naval officer entered it with a drawn broad-sword, made his way through the congregation, who were on their knees in the act of prayer, ascended the steps of the railing before the altar, and made several cuts across the heads and arms of Mr. Matthieu, (the officiating Priest,) who fortunately warded off the blows, and escaped with a few slight wounds. The assassin, still followed by the assassin. The alarm immediately brought the congregation to the priest's assistance, and the assassin, (supposed to be insane,) was secured and lodged in Mary-le-bone watch-house. He was on Monday brought to Marlborough-street office charged with the assault. In his defence, the prisoner (whose name it appears is Le Gros de Cornet) stated that he went to the chapel for the purpose of killing the Priest, & that he was prevented from doing so only in consequence of the Priest having ceased him to be turned out of the chapel, & refusing him the sacrament on the grounds of insanity. He therefore could not receive the sacrament in any other chapel, and he was resolved to kill the clergyman. The prisoner was remanded.

Polytechnician.—Barnet, who is now 74 years of age, has undertaken an unparalleled task, considering his time of life, to walk 22 miles a day for 21 successive days; he started yesterday from the 12th mile-stone, at Romford to the Stone end. White-chapel.—Barnet is 6 to 4 against his accomplishing the undertaking.

Revolt of the Peishwa of Poonah.

Rumours of the British forces at Poonah having been attacked by the Peishwa's troops, and of their having for several days, created an anxiety in the settlements, which even the confidence reposed in the valour of the troops was not sufficient to suppress, as it was apprehended that what was wanting in numbers, the enemy might have been overwhelmingly supplied by number.

Of the causes of this rupture and of the ultimate views which His Highness the Peishwa may have in view in coming from it, we are entirely ignorant. But when we consider the whole tenor of the events, and the general tranquility of the Mahratta, our surprize at his present conduct may be diminished. It is well known that the greatest part of the troops, were disbanded on a service which, as it was connected with the welfare of all Governments, should have commanded the support of every civilized state in India, and His Highness's government in particular.—Instead, however, of aiding in the great work, he has by his line of conduct, we could reach: who seeing our line advanced, moved forward from their position, and at the very moment, were preparing unlimbering for action, commenced a brisk cannonade from their centre, while the masses of cavalry on both their flanks endeavored to turn ours, and succeeded in getting in our rear. The action now became very interesting. The head of Gochla's regular infantry made an attack in solid column on the 1st battalion 7th regiment N. I. which was on the left of the line, and which received and sustained it with great steadiness, and after suffering a severe loss, repulsed it with the bayonet. The enemy then attempted to form in front of our position. Our force, which averaged on a comparison with the enemy's whole force as two to ten, advanced to meet the enemy, with some sharp shooters in front, whose fire did some execution on their cavalry which were galloping between them and the main body; at the same time that an ill directed fire from some guns, and showers of rockets, opened upon us. Our left having advanced to attack their guns, the enemy drew them off, and at the same time a body of about 10,000 of their best horse charged our left, formed of the 2d and 6th, and first of the 7th native infantry regiments, and compelled it to fall back. The corps having nearly expended all their ammunition.

While, as may be well imagined, was a most critical moment, for the cavalry had out-flanked us on the left and got into our rear, but the intrepid conduct and steadiness of the Bombay European Regiment in reserving its fire, supported by a well served field piece and a detachment of Major Ford's brigade which was on the right towards the left, afforded it the most timely and effectual support. At that moment also a body of the enemy's regular cavalry had out-flanked us on the right and got into the rear in that quarter also: so that we were completely surrounded. The 2d battalion 6th regiment, which had at first preceded the line, were sent to the rear to form en échelon a large body of horse who had been watching Major Ford's movement to our support, and who now came down in rear of our right flank—but the enemy finding our withdrew the greater part of its force to a distance, retiring and drawing off from examples of the great superiority of our horse troops over the armies of the native, whatever numbers, but will, no doubt, ultimately lead in close the British authority in India on a firmer footing, and peace on a more permanent basis. We hasten, however, to the present occasion but allow us briefly to give our gallant officers.

On the 26th of November at sunset, the Rajah opened a tremendous cannonading from several pieces of artillery, (one account says 30) upon the British forces stationed at Nagpore, in their position in the rear of the residency—a pound of the brigade of Madras infantry and one of the troops of Bengal cavalry, in about 1800 men, under the command of Col. B. Scott, who kept up a destructive fire until 11 o'clock the next day. In the course of the morning a large body of Arabs charged a small eminence in front of the position of the 1st battalion of the whole of the Rajah's army, consisting of 20,000 men, advanced in the form of a crescent force. The three troops of cavalry charged with a most spirited and gallant manner, an enormous body of the enemy's horse, drove them back, and took from them their guns. In the meantime our line charged the centre of the enemy's infantry, and completely broke it, and the whole of the Rajah drove off his troops, leaving all the nine to the ceiling. Bianchi redeemed himself by completely defeating, that His Highness has sent to the Resident, stating that the attack was made upon him by surprise, and requesting a cessation of hostilities. Another account states he seemed disposed to adopt to any terms he might offer him. Our loss is severe. 300 killed and wounded.

Since the attack the small heroic band has been joined by a Bengal battalion, and the remainder of the 8th cavalry, as well as with two battalions and 1500 horse, under Major Pinner, of the Nizam Service. The light division are also marching to Nagpore, at the rate of 18 or 20 miles per day, and expected to arrive there on the 16th of December.

Extract of a letter to a gentleman in Boston, dated

RIO JANEIRO, Feb. 8.

"On the 6th inst. I witnessed the splendid ceremony of the coronation of the King of Portugal and the Brazils. It took place in presence of all the grandees and 13,000 troops, under the title of John VI. An Austrian frigate has arrived from Trieste, as an ambassador extraordinary. The Congress frigate is now here, after a passage of 35 days from Norfolk. The sloop of war Ontario left here about the 1st of Nov. for Valparaiso.

By the Ann-Maria, Patten, arrived at this port, last from Guadaloupe, we learn that by a short arrival from the Spanish Main to March 20, and that the Royalists had been defeated in several engagements near Valencia.—The date is about a month later than the intelligence recently received from Laguira of the total defeat of the Patriots.—Bost. Daily Adv.

From the New-York Gazette.

We are informed by captain Dominick, that the affairs on the Main were in a very unsettled state, the Royalists being still in alarm at the expected return of General Bolivar, reports say that Bolivar is stated to be wounded, as is also Gen. Morillo, at the sanguinary battle of Cabrara, near Caracoa. The Royal journals admit that a regiment of blacks called Morillo's guides, supposed to be his best troops, about 450 strong were entirely destroyed, fighting to the last man. They state the loss of the Patriots to be from 6 to 700 men. The conduct of the Negroes, is a fact that they brought into Caracoa 14 female Patriots, with the captured horses, who were taken fighting in the ranks. Bolivar is however still in possession of San Ferdinando, the key to the province of Caracoa, and will no doubt annoy them much before that station.

Gen. Morillo has retired in person to Valencia, in consequence of a lance wound in the breast, and the command of the troops devolved on General Morales.

On the 1st of March a squadron of Royal ships left La Guayra for the purpose of blockading the Oronoke, consisting of one frigate, two brigs and five schooners, with two tenders and two boats. The Jacquemel Packet was embargoed at Laguyra 20 days, for the purpose of carrying the troops to Porto Cabello in the event of Bolivar being successful; there were 30 sail in the roads at the time of different flags, which would have all been seized for the like purpose.

Result of the Rajah of Berar.—We hasten to lay before our readers the following particulars which have just reached us, of the late bloody attack made by the Rajah of Berar on the British force at Nagpore, on the night of the 26th ult. which terminated in the complete dispersion of the enemy, and covering our small but intrepid band of heroes with glory. However much we lament the melancholy loss of so many brave men in any State in profound obligation to the British authority, we have been shown by the conduct of Powney and his troops, on the present occasion but allow us briefly to give our gallant officers.

Interesting Letter.—We know not the writer of the following letter, but it bears the St. Louis post mark, and has other of authenticity. It will be viewed as of great interest to naturalists, and

CARLOTTA, Dec. 11.

By the kindness of a friend, we have had the communication of a letter from the Isle of Pinares.

"In my last letter, I spoke to you of Spanish Independent privateers. We had then intelligence only of ships of that nature, but now we have positive accounts on the coast of Madagascar.—Here are now the authentic particulars we have received from that quarter.

"The ship which caused the alarm is of American construction, and was fitted out at Buenos Ayres. She has the dimensions of a frigate, a crew of 180 men, 40 guns, and 2 furnaces for red hot iron balls. The crew are for the most part Englishmen or North Americans, 5 or 6 Spaniards, and as many Frenchmen. The captain, of the name of Broussard, is a Frenchman and a native of Marseilles. There have been many revolts on board, which he has put down by the assistance of 20 cousins of Buenos Ayres, who serve as his body guard; but they have cost him already the loss of more than 30 of his men.

"In the beginning of this month (October) the ship anchored in the Bay of Tamatave. There was then an English Corvette, the Conway, next to proceed to the Isle of Bourbon. They describe it as being far superior in size to the Bellona, or any frigate that now abounds on the Mississippi, or its waters. On seeing this animal the Indians were disposed to attack her, but terrified at the sight of her, they abstained.

"The Conway, next day, sent down the boats of the Rowe and river, which empties into to River St. Peters. The latest accounts of it, is given by the author of the Island, (as they are termed) a wandering band of the Sioux nation. They describe it as being far superior in size to the Bellona, or any frigate that now abounds on the Mississippi, or its waters.

SHERIFF'S COURT.—SATURDAY.

LIBEL.—Gilchrist v. Molloy and others.

This was an action for a libel inserted in the Hampshire Telegraph.—The libel was "among the convicts transported to New South Wales by the Larkins, are two, distinguished from the rest by their station having once filled;" Gilchrist, formerly an Ensign in the 101st regiment of foot, and who was tried at our Assizes with others about four years since, for the foul murder of Lieut. B——, in a duel at Newport, and George Sapsney, formerly an Assistant Commissary in the Storekeeper's department. They have both passed through a scenes of great moral turpitude, and are at length banished from their country for the crime of forgery. Gilchrist, it will be remembered, above alluded to, was second to Macguire who committed the actual murder."

The defence was, that there were two prisoners on board the Larkins, who had given out their names as Gilchrist and Sepsey, and that upon discovering their mistake, the defendants had circulated an extensive apology in their paper.

The Jury found a verdict for the Plaintiff, damages £500.

AGRICULTURE.

We present our Agricultural readers, this week, with an additional extract from the useful publication noticed in our last.—Ed.

A method of feeding straw beasts fat in winter.

"On the great success I experienced in the feeding of my pigs, I extended the boiling system to the feeding of my beasts, which was attended with equal and even better success.

"For this purpose I thought of adding, in order to stay the body of the more digesting animals (beans), sweet oat, wheat, pea, bean, or barley straw, cut up into chaff. After having the same in water, for about half an hour, previous to rubbing them somewhat, fact I found it yielded a kind of sugar, making the liquor of a sweet taste and very strong and deep-colour, similar to new wort. With boiling, the straw imbibed much of the water, and became as if creeded. I then mixed well oatmeal (bean flour, linseed or linseed cake, equally answer the same purpose), in some cold water, and poured the same into that boiling, giving it a stir to prevent its burning to the bottom; when boiled again for two minutes, it became all one thick gluttinous and stout body, producing food of a remarkable strong and forcing nature, by far superior to grains, hay, or turnips, for forcing the growth and feeding beasts, to which they were also very partial.

"The straw should be steeped in the water, some hours previous to the boiling of it; when it should be covered down, in order to keep the steam from evaporating. The beasts should, previous to the first time of feeding of it, be placed some time, it being a fresh kind of food, and which possibly some may refuse at first, but I have not known a single instance of them not being partial to it afterwards; and which should be given to them milk warm.

"The beasts, before fed upon dry straw in the yard, and which, as it were, only kept them alive, now (being tied by under cover and kept clean and warm,) began to make a rapid progress and I was enabled to feed them fat in the winter.

"Adspring, having cleft them off, I bought more grapes in to feed upon the straw that was saved for summer, when prepared in like manner; and which saved the pasture, intended for them, for other cattle or to be sown with corn.

"The beast, so long fed in this manner to thrive well; and coal being somewhat expensive, I had some grass land paved thin, and the soils well dried, which, when mingled with some fuel answered the purpose of coals to burn and boil the food, at a trifling expence; and the ashes afterwards were very good for the top dressing of wheat; and of which any farmer can provide plenty, sufficient to prepare food to feed 100 beasts annually. Twigs also, when well dryed, will assist the soils very much as fuel.

"At soon as ready, I had some clover or vetches mown, and cut like chaff and boiled with the straw; which fed them still more rapidly, and made them, in a few months, ready for market, at little expence in comparison with those fed upon corn, hay, turnips, linseed cake, &c. when we consider the small quantity of corn required, and the water and straw being of little value.

"The manner to render, with all their veins being browned, as they will be of double the strength of that usually made before in my yard by the beast living only upon straw and cold water to drink; it producing me good crops where I only had on half the usual quantity of manure, and consequently saved me also expence in filling and leading the other half to the said land.

"The winter season approaching, I bought twice the number of grape beast as to what I kept before in the yard, to eat part of the straw and to make the remainder into manure, which I fed in like manner, double boats to be had, I boiled with the straw a small quantity of malt cobse, which the beasts were fond of, and added to smell well.

"To prepare the food, I had large tubs made for the purpose and a large metal pan, and stations two thick, set under cover with a flat mouth beneath, instead of a grate, to burn the soils, &c. on, near the pump that the water might be conveyed by a spout into the tubs or pan, with little labour, a great deal being required.

"By the process of boiling and mixing the bodies and obtain the whole strength of the corn, clover, straw, &c. which takes up much water, serves the cattle to chew, stays the body, and at the same time the liquor quenches their thirst; which must be allowed to have a far better effect as to the health of the animal, than to give the corn, hay and straw to them in a dry state, has no stuck to engage, and then raw cold water to drink afterwards. This food gives its immediate support to the whole frame, and keeps the body regular and open.

"This system of feeding beasts or oxen will cause an immense increase of meat, fat, and hides, and demands the attention of every farmer to encourage the breeding and rearing of these useful and valuable animals: for if property rested when young, I will prove that the farmer may till his land with ease, in less time than he does now with the horses, and at little expense, particularly a small farm; for, if kept well and worked easy, they will be in a growing and thriving condition, making a return in meat for the keep required, and after being drawn for a few years, and tied up to feed, would soon come fat; thus rendering them of still far more value.

From the Connecticut Courant.

The following extract from the Quarterly Review is calculated to give a striking idea of the vast quantity of business done daily in London, and of the facility with which it is done by means of bank paper. The reviewer, in noticing the work of Colquhoun on Wealth, Power, &c. remarks:—"The next subject which engages the attention of Mr. Colquhoun in his endeavours to trace the wealth of the nation through all its ramifications, is the business of the banker, through the intervention of whom a certain quantity of circulating medium is made to perform the functions of ten, fifty, or a hundred times its value; and the use of what is of far more importance in mercantile transactions, time, are greatly economized. Millions of money may be paid and received with a degree of facility and security which specie could never perform. Mr. Colquhoun states, that the money paid and received daily, in the metropolis, amounts, on an average, to fifty millions sterling, or one thousand five hundred and fifty millions in a year, through the medium of bankers only. To count five millions of guineas, at the rate of a guinea every second, is to work twelve hours a day, would employ one person nearly four months, or 120 persons a whole day, or twenty two clerks in every banking-house in London. But all the specie in the world would not suffice in the present state of the commerce of the country, to carry it on without a large circulation of bank notes, aided by the drafts or checks of private bankers.—By discounting bills of exchange, which otherwise would not be convertible to mercantile purposes, for weeks or months, enables them to accommodate the trader, & accelerate business. And such is the facility with which the immense circulation of the checks or drafts given by the bankers, and the notes that pass thro' their hands, is settled among themselves, that by the clerk from each banking house meeting at a particular spot, which they call the 'Clearing House,' at a fixed hour millions are paid and received in the course of an hour by an exchange of checks, and the balances are finally settled by a general assemblage of the collecting clerks of the respective bankers."

YOUNG TURKIES.

It is well known that young Turkies are very tender animals, and that exposure to cold and wet, is almost certain death to them.—An experienced friend assures us, that a certain way to avoid this, is to take from the nest all the first eggs: the consequence will be that the young brood will come forward intermin the season, when the weather is milder, and better suited to their tender constitutions, and thus nearly all of them may grow up to maturity. The person who communicates this hint, has for several successive seasons put it in practice, and always found it completely successful.—Id.

Important Discovery.—New way to feed Geese.

A correspondent offers the following as a cheap and easy way to feed Geese —take turnips, and cut them in pieces similar to dice, but smaller; put them into a trough of water; six geese were lately put to feed at Ordsbury, near Ludlow, each weighing 9 lbs. neat; and in the course of three weeks feeding as above, they weighed 20 lbs. each: one being dressed produced nine of oil.—*Bath. REPORT OF THE SECRET COMMITTEE.

At the assize which took place at Derby in the following month of July, the grand Jury of that county found bills of indictment for high treason against 46 of the individuals charged with having been engaged in the before mentioned insurrection; and several of the persons so indicted being taken, were arraigned before a special commission issued for the purpose of trying them, which sat at Derby in the month of October. Four of the chief offenders were tried and convicted there were executed; and the capital punishment of the fourth was remitted, on condition of transportation being substituted. The conviction of the above mentioned four individuals induced 19 of the others to plead guilty, in the hope of their avoiding a capital punishment; and the sentence of death on these persons was afterwards remitted on various conditions. Against the other persons indicted, who remained in custody, the law officers of the crown declined prosecuting evidence; and they were, of course acquitted. The others included in the indictments fled from justice, and have not yet been taken. The fact of this insurrection, proved to the satisfaction of a most respectable grand jury of the county of Derby, and afterwards passed to the satisfaction of the different juries sworn on the several trials of the four men found guilty, proved also by the acknowledgment of guilt by those who withdrew their plea of not guilty, and pleaded guilty, and submitted to the mercy of the crown, appear to the committee to have established, beyond a doubt, the credit due to the information referred to in the last report made to their Lordships respecting the plans of a more extended insurrection, which had previously been concerted, and respecting the postponement thereof to the 9th or 10th of June. But the Derbyshire insurrection was not the only case which demonstrated the correctness of the information on which the former committee came to the conclusion, that a general rising had been intended and was postponed; and that Nottingham was to be the head-quarters, and that the insurgents expected to be joined from various quarters. On the same night on which the Derbyshire insurgents began their operations, Nottingham was in a state of agitation; and it appeared in evidence on the Derby trials, that one of the Derby men, who was afterwards convicted of high treason, had been sent forward, on horseback, to Nottingham, to procure intelligence, and on his return reported the state of Nottingham as favourable to their designs. The same fruits now the actual state of Nottingham on that occasion. In the night of the 9th, about 100 persons assembled on the Nottingham race course, where the Derby insurgents were expected early on the morning of the 10th, and expected to be joined by such a party. The party which was seen about 12 o'clock at night, was drawn up in line, and armed with pikes or poles. They remained on the race ground till past two, then they dispersed. The magistrates at Nottingham, were induced by some symptoms of disturbance on the night of the 9th, to send for the military, who restored order and returned to the barracks, but were the next morning called upon to assist in dispersing the Derbyshire insurgents, who were on their march. Connected with these disturbances, and similar to them, was the conduct manifested in the West Riding of Yorkshire. A meeting of delegates was held at Thornhill Lees, near Huddersfield, on the 6th of June, and it was there understood that a time of a general rising would be announced. This meeting was surprised by the military, and some persons were arrested. The arrest deranged their plans, and the part of Yorkshire in which an insurrection had been expected remained quiet. But near Huddersfield, on the 8th of June, a large body, furnished with fire arms and weapons, committed various outrages; they plundered various houses for arms, and fired on the head constable, and on several of the yeomanry cavalry. Indictments were preferred, both for the felonies and the burglaries, at the York assizes in July; the grand jury found bills, but sufficient evidence could not be produced on the trial to procure conviction against the individuals. It appeared, on the trials at Derby, that the insurgents there expected reinforcements from Yorkshire, on the supposition of a general rising at the appointed time; and in all the disturbed districts, it is evident that great and uniform reliance existed of powerful support and co-operation from London, however erroneous such an expectation may have been with respect to its supposed extent. The committee, with great satisfaction, give it as their decided opinion, that not merely in the country generally, but in the disturbed districts themselves, the great body of the people remained unmoved even during the time of the greatest difficulty and distress. The arrests and trials, the discovery of the schemes of the disaffected leaders, and the continued activity and vigilance of the magistrates, and the government, must, in the opinion of the committee, have checked the progress of disaffection; while the improved state of the country, and the consequent employment of the labouring classes, have rendered even those who were most open to seduction, less inclined to those desperate measures which urgent distress might have driven them to. It is the opinion of the committee, that some of the disaffected, particularly in London, are still active, and determined to persevere, though with diminished numbers; and that, therefore, continued vigilance will be necessary, both on the part of the magistrates in the most disturbed districts, and of the government. The committee did not think it necessary to enter into any particular statement concerning those persons against whom bills of indictment had been found, or who had been tried, or had fled from justice. Warrants were issued against ten, who have never been taken. Forty-four were arrested on suspicion of high treason, who have not been brought to trial; of these, seven were only charged after examination, without any subsequent warrant of detention; thirty-seven were detained; but one who was finally committed, was soon afterwards discharged; another was soon discharged on account of illness; and a third died in prison. The committee, after severally examining the grounds of these warrants, think that the arrest and detentions were fully justified; and they find, that in no case was any warrant of detention issued, except in consequence of information upon oath. The committee also found, that all the persons so arrested and detained, and who were not tried, were discharged, from time to time, as the state of the country, & the circumstances of the different cases were thought to permit. The committee understood, likewise, that, up to a certain time, esp-citations were formed of bringing a large portion of the prisoners to trial, but that these expectations were unavoidably relinquished.

In conclusion, the committee were of opinion, that the Government had exercised the powers vested in it, by the two acts of last session, with due discretion and moderation; and also, that the magistrates, in the several disturbed districts, by their activity and vigilance, materially contributed to preserve the public peace.

The Chancellor of the exchequer has proposed to place in the hands of commissioners one million sterling, for the construction of new churches and chapels. London is stated to contain a population of 1,120,000 souls, and churches sufficient to accommodate only 151,000.

Daring robbery.—On Thursday night the building attached to the Cuy-House and occupied as a lodging house, was entered through one of the windows by some villains, who passed into no less than six of the rooms where there were gentlemen-lodgers in bed, asleep, carefully gathered up all the wearing apparel they could by their hands on, and made their retreat undiscovered, as far as the piazza. Here they halted, and after rifling the pockets of all their contents such as pocket-books, gold watches and small change, they took to their heels, leaving the coats and pantaloons behind. The booty they obtained am unted to between 3 & 4 hundred dollars, besides six gold watches. But the loss of money was trifling, compared to the awkward situation in which they left the owners of the coats and pantaloons.—N. Y. Ev. Post.

Mexican Provinces.—By the Brig White-Oak, we have received New-Orleans papers of the 1st inst. besides the foreign articles which we have copied from them in this day's paper, the Louisiana Gazette gives a curious rumor as to designs being on foot against the Spanish provinces beyond the Sabine. It is said the French exiles in the U. States have formed a plan to take the province of Texas; that a subscription had been raised to defray the incidental expenses; that Stephen Girard had subscribed 50,300 dollars; Joseph Bonaparte, Muraiat Grouchy, &c. had contributed largely.—The real object is supposed to be, to raise a throne for Joseph Bonaparte.—*N. From the Washington Recorder.

To Tipplers.—Some time past, a merchant in an adjoining county, went down to Queen-Anne, and at an inn bought a puncheon of rum, took it home and sold it to his neighbours, the greater part without having any leak found with it; but as the cask stood, the rum stirred so materially for the worse that those who at first drank it with avidity were compelled to desist, in consequence of its very offensive smell and putrid appearance.—The merchant was requested to have the cask examined—he did so—when to his horror was found, a small grey headed old MAN.

There was nothing about him whereby it was possible for him to be known, either as to name, character or country.

RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

A GENTLEMAN of this Country, who for some years past, has been anxiously endeavouring to completed a set of the OLD ANNUAL REGISTER, first published by Dodsley, which is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable works ever given to the world, and a complete Library in itself; being still in want of a few Volumes, earnestly entreats a friend to procure them in England last fall: owing to some mistake, the London Bookseller to whom the order was sent, after much needless labour and cost, for the entire work is now rare and very difficult to be procured, got together a whole set, uniformly and very elegantly bound, and sent them out to this country. The consequence is, that the duplicates must either be returned or disposed of, but rather than return them immediately, the present holder wishes to offer them at prime cost to the public, and any Gentleman desirous of forming a Library, will find this an opportunity that very seldom occurs.—The entire set consists of 57 Volumes, which cost in England £57 7s. Sterling. The broken set wanting only 6 or 7 Volumes, which may be readily procured, cost £45. The Purchaser may have his choice. The work is still, and will be annually continued. VALUABLE LANDS
For Sale.

THE following singularly desirable, and truly valuable Lands may be had, and immediate possession given, with indisputable titles, at rates far below their real value; and it is but seldom, even in a country so extensive as Canada, where uncultivated Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, in good neighbourhoods, can be secured.

Lot 1, Comprising 70 Acres of the very richest Beech, Maple, Elm and Oak Land, to the 4th Concession of Hore, lying upon Smith's Creek, with 15 acres cleared and fenced, new log-house, well built and dove-tailed, fruit trees, &c. with a mill-seat, between 4 and 5 miles from the flourishing little Town of Toronto, on Lake Ontario, where there is an excellent market either for buying or selling. The Land is of the very first quality, and in a good populous neighbourhood, forming altogether a most desirable residence, within a short mile of the great road between York and Kingston.

2d. 200 Acres, being Lot No. 1, in the 5th Concession of Hore, alongside the great road between Hope and Hamilton, leading to the new and flourishing settlements of Cavan & Monaghan, on the Rice Lake, in which more than 500 families and persons have actually located, and scarcely five miles from the Town of Toronto, where there is a good market; it is in an old settlement, and the neighbourhood is populous and excellent. There are about 30 acres cleared and fenced, with a fine stream of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

3d. 190 Acres, or copying nearly the entire side of the Gannanoque Lake, in the Township of South Crosby, District of Johnstown, consisting wholly of broken fronts, the back parts extending to the road from the Rideau Settlement to Kingston, from which latter place it is scarcely 20 miles distant. The Land is good and well timbered, and the situation singularly beautiful and romantic, with wooded islands in front.

The above Lands are particularly deserving of notice. The situations were chosen by a remonstrant judge, and they will be sold remarkably cheap, the proprietor wishing to concentrate his forces in another quarter.

For further particulars, apply to the Editors, York; C. FOTHERGILL, Esq. Toronto; Wm. HAMILTON, Esq. Kingston, or Prescott; or to SHAW ARBUCKLE, Esq. Montreal.

LONDON, April 8.

Arctic Expedition.—Wonderful Escape.

In consequence of its having been understood, that the four vessels, destined for these important expeditions, were to sail on Wednesday from Deptford, a great number of people assembled at an early hour, to witness an engagement that has excited so much interest in the minds of persons of every description. The weather, however, became disagreeable; a heavy wind, from the eastward, blew directly up the river, and the commander-in-chief deemed it not desirable for any large vessel to drop down the river, during a neap tide, and the sailing of the squadron was, therefore postponed to another time.

The Esquimaux, who has already been so much celebrated for the noble exploits he has performed, and the wonders he has seen, is a native of Davis's Straits, from which place he was brought by Captain Sabine, in the ship Dundee, from the South Sea Whaler, having been found in his canoe so far out at sea, that he had scarcely a hope of being able to regain the shores of Scotland: he was instructed in the English language, afterwards in the principles of Christianity, and was baptized by the name of John Sackhouse. He can converse with perfect ease, and write his name very legibly. He is of a mild disposition, a good looking man, with an intelligent countenance, about 5 feet 6 inches high, stout made, and possesses great activity and agility. His canoe, which is his chief appendage on board the Isabella, is the same in which he was found at sea; it is 18 feet long, is entirely composed of skins, and is completely waterproof. It is also fitted pointed at both ends, like one of the small boats on the Thames, with a central hollow, but the upper part is covered like the deck of a small sailing boat. There is but room sufficient for him to sit in it, and he introduces more than half the lower part of his body; he then fastens the skins next to the opening round the body, by means of a string, which he ties in many trails, while the upper part of his body is so well covered with a jacket of skins, that not the least drop of water can get to it wet. Then, with a paddle in his hand, he can move his canoe either backward or forward, with a velocity far exceeding that of any fixed sailing cutter. But the most astonishing part of his performance is, that by which he can give this vehicle all the properties of a lifeboat, and preserve himself, like a sea fowl, amidst the most tempestuous weather. He throws himself down on one side, immediately immersed in the water, while the canoe, moving in the same direction with him, is turned bottom upwards, and he comes up again on the other side, and completely rights himself. What makes this movement still more extraordinary is, that all this time he never loses hold of his paddle. He has already exhibited himself in this manner three different times on the river, before multitudes of spectators. The third exhibition was on Saturday last, in the presence of Lord Melville and others, on the river, about Monday. It is sufficient to the account we then gave it is worthy of remark, that he never misses any object at which he throws his dart. First of all he rows a long space in a considerable distance; this remains buoyant in the water, with a part of the handle above the surface; he then throws a dart at this handle, and small as the object is, he always hits it.

Monday last was fixed upon for this extraordinary creature to give another specimen of his surprising performance. On this occasion, Lord Castlereagh, Lord Yarmouth, the Right Hon. Wilmot Horton, the Bishop of Oxford, Mr. Crocker, and several other persons of distinction, came down to Deptford, by particular appointment. They were received on the dock-yard, accompanied by the Commissioners, and went on board the Isabella, where they waited for a long time in anxious expectation of seeing this native of the Arctic regions commence his operations; but, owing to a circumstance, which we are not able to mention, they experienced a sad disappointment. The Esquimaux having gone on shore, that morning, was prevented by a man from London (some say he was a Jew,) who, after representing to him the dangers of the expedition he was about to undertake, and the liberty he possessed of disposing of his person, in whatever manner he chose, told him, that if he would sell him any curiosity) a promise of several thousand pounds if he would quit the ship, and exhibit himself at the Aquatic Theatre, Sadler's Wells. His pride & his prospects having experienced this momentary elevation, while his brain was nearly intoxicated by copious draughts of grog, he came on board the ship, swaggered about the deck, boasted of his importance and his promised wealth, and obstinately refused to exhibit himself in his humble canoe. The officers, anxious to gratify the distinguished visitors, spoke to him of fair promises, and even threats; but all to no purpose. Lord Castlereagh and others offered him a handsome sum, on condition that he should commence his operations, but the offer was rejected.

"As Noble Visitors were, therefore, obliged to return to town, without having their curiosity satisfied. About ten thousand spectators who crowded the decks of the surrounding vessels, expressed a similar disappointment.

The officers of the expedition how begin to entertain serious apprehensions they should lose a person, from whom they expected to derive many advantages, from the peculiar character of his exertions in the frozen seas and the inhabitants of the Arctic regions. The Esquimaux is a man of the most prominent ardour, and the most impatient of restraint, but left him to the exercise of his own judgment, after proper remonstrance, and, we hope, with proper precautions, he will be found. On Wednesday last, yesterday morning Mr. John Sackhouse submitted quietly to all the regulations that had been previously prescribed to him, expressed great sorrow for his temporary and disobliging conduct, as well as his determination to continue with the expedition, in the character and honourable voyage; and as now on board the Isabella, where, in consequence of an admiralty order, no strangers are permitted to land hardly be possible to convey to those who have not seen them a just notion of the admirable manner in which these ships are fitted up. The furniture of the cabins is new, beautiful and commodious; each of them is supplied with a little library, besides the best charts, compasses, instruments for observation and drawing, &c. There are two newly invented machines, which particularly attracted our notice—one is a box of a considerable size, about 2 or 3 feet high, and one foot in diameter. At the base there is a lamp so contrived, that it is impossible to be extinguished or to burn the top in a compass, to which the light of the lamp is communicated by reflection. The other machine is a sort of bed, attached to a timber work, from which weight, when it strikes the bottom of the sea, causes a valve to open so that the water flows in at the one end, when the lead is raised the valve closes, and prevents the water from coming out. The object of this is, to ascertain the difference between the surface of the water at the bottom and at the surface of the arctic seas. It is the invention of Mr Humphrey Davy.

The officers of the ships are in the highest spirits, and it would be an injustice to them not to notice the public attention which to the highest attention, they have always to the numerous persons, whose curiosity induced them to go on board.

We feel it proper to record a great change which is pending in one of the most important articles of human diffusion, and economy of Heat. Within the last two or three years, SWAN has been supplying this purpose to the manufactories in London and in the provinces. This system has so far succeeded, and has been so variously improved, that there are at this moment in London seven coal candidates who address different means of generating and diffusing it to public preference. The first, in point of creating heat, for all domestic purposes, is beginning to be much adopted. It is found, that all the rooms of a moderate sized house may be kept at a temperate or a higher degree of heat, night and day, by the consumption of a quarter of a ton of coke, or 40 gallons, worked by one bushel of refuse coals. We have seen some manufactories in which the steam is carried through iron pipes around a portion of the room, and the purposes of heating very well effected. Others convey the steam into the bottom of a flat of copper cylinder within the apartment, which cylinder can have any ornamental form given to it. The heat, in this case, is communicated by the contraction of the cold air through the centre of the hollow sided cylinder, and in the time the air ascends behind at displacing the cold air of the apartment. There is, on either plan, neither smell nor effluvia; and no possible danger exists, because the boiler may be placed in any out-building at a low pressure, regulated by a valve; and because the heat in this case, is not fixed to the place at its generation to its ultimate destination. Mr. PANTREX, the copper-smith, of Shoreditch, has constructed an apparatus for the heating, at £40 or 50 cost! but the most magnificent application that we have seen of this principle, is in Whitbread's Brewery. The public-spirited proprietors of that great establishment, under the direction of Mr. BRUNTON as engineer, have erected five great boilers, and by the means of steam conveyed in pipes through the liquids, the warm of a cellar, every boil five or six hogsheads, or each of wort, or liquor, in half the usual time; and it is the business of the house, save two children of tools per day.

Dr. A. Brown, professor of Rhetoric, in the University of Edinburgh, who was some time ago in a state of insanity, has recovered his reason, and is now engaged in delivering his lectures to his pupils.

The Lord Provost of Edinburgh, who has been for many years, the chief magistrate of a great work shop to the improvement of political society in America, which is understood, is nearly ready for the press.

A summary view is in preparation, by Captain M'Knoechie, R. N. of the Politics and Commerce of the countries of the principal coasts of the Pacific Ocean; with a chart of the most prominent additions to the world, which have been made with the establishment of a central colony within its limits.

Mr. Thomson, editor of the Annals of Philosophy, having been appointed to the chemical chair of the University of Glasgow; and, being in consequence called to him, expressed great sorrow for the inclemency and disadvantage, as well as his determination to continue with the publication, but the author and honourable voyage; and as now on board the Isabella, which, in consequence of an admiralty order, no strangers are permitted to land hardly be possible to convey to those who have not seen them a just notion of the admirable manner in which these ships are fitted up. It is found, that all the rooms of a moderate sized house may be kept at a temperate or a higher degree of heat, night and day, by the consumption of a quarter of a ton of coke, or 40 gallons, worked by one bushel of refuse coals. We have seen some manufactories in which the steam is carried through iron pipes around a portion of the room, and the purposes of heating very well effected. Others convey the steam into the bottom of a flat of copper cylinder within the apartment, which cylinder can have any ornamental form given to it. The heat, in this case, is communicated by the contraction of the cold air through the centre of the hollow sided cylinder, and in the time the ascends behind at displacing the cold air of the apartment. There is, on either plan, neither smell nor effluvia; and no possible danger exists, because the boiler may be placed in any out-building at a low pressure, regulated by a valve; and because the heat in this case, is not fixed to the place at its generation to its ultimate destination. Mr. PANTREX, the copper-smith, of Shoreditch, has constructed an apparatus for the heating, at £40 or 50 cost! but the most magnificent application that we have seen of this principle, is in Whitbread's Brewery. The public-spirited proprietors of that great establishment, under the direction of Mr. BRUNTON as engineer, have erected five great boilers, and by the means of steam conveyed in pipes through the liquids, the warm of a cellar, every boil five or six hogsheads, or each of wort, or liquor, in half the usual time; and it is the business of the house, save two children of tools per day.

remove the old mounting, and have its place supplied with one of copper.—The experiment has fully answered every expectation. It is now suspended in a handsome frame in his ware room, supporting the astonishing weight of 100 pounds, and its power daily increasing.—This history of Mahomet's coffin being suspended by a loadstone (hitherto considered fabulous) is no wise inconsistent with the power of this singular and important production of nature.

Dublin, Saturday, April 11.—The unsettledness of the weather for the last week is remarkable. The wind has been in every quarter, and almost every day, it continued raining at five in the afternoon, and continued, with little intermission, till Tuesday; when we had glimpses of snow and sleet. On Wednesday and Thursday it was so warm out of doors, as if we had got into a temperate climate, and above zone. Yesterday was again cold, with heavy rain and strong gusts of wind. The winds during the same time have been equally variable, and have blown almost from every point in the compass. On Tuesday morning the wind was north-east, in the evening east by north. Wednesday, east and south-east; and yesterday it came round again to north east, and the snow has returned. It has been raining violently during the whole of last night, and had it not been for heavy rain at intervals, we presume the snow would have been deep. The last deep snow we remember to have seen,

Voyage to the North Pole.

The Arctic Expedition sailed yesterday from Deptford. A great concourse of spectators were assembled on the occasion. The men appeared in good health and spirits.

England, and various have been prepared by Mr Humphry Davy and other scientific gentlemen, for the officers and men on the expedition. They are extremely copious, and drawn up in the plainest and most intelligible manner. the following are extracts.

Use of the Electrical Apparatus.

"The history of the Aurora Borealis and Australis is a practical light, strongly impressive on the mind the probability of these phenomena being electrical; and it becomes an interesting question, whether the earth may not possess electrical as well as magnetic poles. An electrical apparatus is furnished for each expedition, in order to determine if there is any thing connected with the electricity of the atmosphere in the polar regions. The use of this apparatus must be obvious, from its simple construction; it consists of a chain of copper, attached by a glass to a rope, by which it is to be elevated so as to be out of the reach of conductors, and as far as possible above the influence of the vessel and the water; the electrometers to which the cable is to be attached, are likewise insulated. The sphere of action of the strength in connection with the brass ball when the instrument is to be used; the degree of repulsion will indicate the degree of electricity of the atmosphere.

"When the ball is observed to be repelled, a stick of sealing wax is to be pushed up to the cable, and the electricity communicated to the brass ball; if the repulsion of the sphere of the balances ceases, or is diminished, the electricity is positive; if it be increased, the electricity is negative. The observation should be registered in the journal, and the experiments made every day the Court Circular is published in the twenty-four hours; and the state of the weather, temperature of the barometer, &c. at the time, noted.

"When the balance does not indicate electricity, the gold leaf electroscope may be used. If the repulsion of the leaves is increased by approaching a burning wax, the electricity is negative; if the contrary, the electricity is positive."

Use of the apparatus for taking up sea water from a great depth.

"The possibility of reaching the pole by the expedition must depend upon this circumstance, whether there is at the pole an open sea, or land, that the heat stored up in it during the six months of summer, is sufficient to prevent the formation of ice upon it in winter. If there be such an ocean, the waters of it must greatly expand during summer, and the increased velocity of the current would tend to pour them through the narrow seas or channels separating Asia from America, and Spitzbergen from Greenland. To observe the effects of this consequently be of great importance to ascertain if the west body of it be composed of fresh water. For this and other purposes, deeper parts of it should be examined, for the snow or ice water may float at the surface, and salt water lie below.

"The apparatus not with the expedition, consists of a copper vessel formed of two truncated cones, which is closed by a piston moving in compression of the compression of air when the instrument is sunk to the sea. The piston may be set so as to collect water at any four five to eighteen fathoms. As the volume of elastic fluids are inversely as their compressing weights, and as the compression of about 32 feet of water diminishes the volume of air to one half the pressure will been not out the use of the instrument. It is needless to say, that the temperature of the water, as well as all other circumstances, should be registered.

"If the current be ice cold, and comparatively fresh, there can be little hope of reaching the deep sea in that direction."

Of the state of the atmosphere in high northern regions.

"As there can be little or no change from vegetable or animal life, or decomposition in the polar atmosphere, it will be interesting to ascertain the relative proportions of oxygene, nitrogene, and carbonic acid in the air, as well as the nature of the air expelled from sea water. An apparatus for the analysis of air is sent with the expedition. The use of it is so simple, that a description of it is unnecessary."

A variety of tables of calculation of every description that can possibly be required, form a part of the instructions.

NORTHERN EXPEDITION.

"If an open navigation should be discovered across the polar basin, the passage over the pole, or close to it will be one of the most interesting events to science that ever occurred. It will be the first time that the problem was practically solved, with which the learned of Geography are some times puzzled—that of going the shortest way between two places lying to east and west of each other, by taking a direction north and south. The passage of the pole will require the undivided attention of the navigation. On approaching this point from which the north coasts of Europe, Asia and America, and every part of them will bear south of him, nothing can possibly assist him in ascertaining his course, and bearing on the first mention of its desired place, but a correct knowledge of the time, and to ensure of ascertaining that time, he will be afforded him. The only time he can have, with any degree of certainty, as long as he remains on or near the pole, must be that of Greenwich, and this he can know only from good chronometers —for from the general heavy state of the atmosphere, and particularly about the horizon, and the acuteness in the altitude of the sun, at every hour in the four and twenty, he must not expect to obtain an approximation even of the apparent time, by observation, and he will have no stars to assist him. All his ideas respecting the heavens, and the reckoning of his time, will be reversed and the change not gradual, but instantaneous. The magnetic needle will point to its unknown magnetic pole or fly round from the point of the how from which it is suspended, and that which indicated north will now be south; the east will become west, and the hour of noon will be that of midnight.—Q. Review.

From Lower Canada.

Over a tedious trial of eight days, Charles Du Rocher was on Friday unanimously found guilty on the fourth and eighth counts of the indictments, of aiding and abetting in the murder of Owen Keveney in the London territory, & one count was immediately made, in arrest of judgment, by Rinhart's counsel; when the Court adjourned to the next morning. On Saturday it was agreed by the Counsel, on both sides to postpone the arguments on the motion until Wednesday; to which day the Court then adjourned.

We understand that there are several grounds on which the motion is founded.—Quebec Mercury.

Montreal, April 3.

THE SEASON.—About the first of the last month, the weather was almost clear of snow, but the weather set in rainy with constant north-east winds; about the middle of the month it was quite dry, the winds still continuing easterly, till the week before last, when it came to the westward, at which point it continued till yesterday, with a degree of warmth unusual at this season. There has been no frost since the disappearance of the snow, and the deep snow in the middle of the month has been favorable to putting in the seed. Some rather light rains and showers, and the warmth of the weather, have been extremely favorable to vegetation, which is now in greater forwardness than at the same period for several seasons past. Some meadows and fields for pasture where the water had been permitted to lodge, have suffered from the frost during the winter; but that is a small appearance is uncommonly good. The young crops never looked better, and, as far as the ground within the city can be depended upon, promise an abundant harvest.

The Spring rains have been favorable to the floating down of Lumber on the rapid rivers to the St. Lawrence; but the arrival at market has been retarded by the easterly winds, so that it is now beginning to arrive, and we are informed that the quantity will be sufficient for the shipping already arrived and expected.

Our prospects are therefore favorable in so far the great staples of the country for export—the produce of Agriculture and Lumber, are concerned, and it is on their prosperity that chiefly depends the whole trade and industry of the Province.—Gaz.

We are sorry to find that much injury has been done in this district by fires in the woods. At Mr. Fraser's German Settlement on the Chaudiere, seven Log Houses have been burnt and four others employed in saving effects across the River in a canoe, were drowned by its upsetting. At the new Settlement in the Seigniory of St. Gabriel, back of Indian Lorette, a quantity of Grain lately sown was burnt, and other damage done to the amount of several hundred Pounds. It was with the utmost difficulty that the Settlers, were able to save themselves and their dwellings.

Montreal, April 7.

Massawaga Settlement.—By a singular fact, and perhaps not generally known, that there is within our territory a settlement larger than many of our incorporated towns, that is not subject to our laws. The River Credit Mississauga Settlement, situate in the St. John's river nearly a hundred miles above Fredericktown. The following inspect account of this settlement was communicated to the writer by a person who lived there during a considerable part of the last winter.

The settlement consists of about two hundred families, French and Indians. They are generally poor, and live in houses of logs about square. There are however some men of property among them. Their language is French with a mixture of Indian. They have no settled Minister, but a Priest visits them occasionally. They have also a school, and employ private instructors for their family. In the principal village is a good church, at which is erected a pulpit for the Catholic Priest to officiate. They are governed by British laws, and are averse to enacting other ones. They have no grade of public officers, and consequently have no taxes to pay. They place their houses without any regard to symmetry or public convenience.

Should this settlement not attract the attention of the Legislature? Ought it not to be incorporated into a town, and send a representative to General Court? And ought not measures to be taken to initiate the inhabitants into our policy and carry our laws and institutions among them?—Boston Gazette.

From the Kingston Gazette.

A SKETCH OF THE BAY OF QUINTE,

In a letter from a Passenger on board the Bay and River Steam-Boat.

DEAR SIR,

I have taken a trip, in the Steam Boat, from Kingston to the Carrying Place; and, I assure you, it has roused my opinion of the value of the Bay of Quinte to the commercial and agricultural interests of the Country. It is the finest sheet of inland water I ever saw; and is surrounded by Townships of fertile land, already settled and productive, which are daily being rendered much more so by additional cultivation.

This route of the Steam-Boat is 88 miles, containing the following intermediate points of distance, as estimated, but not actually measured:

	Miles, do.
Ernest Town,	16—16
Adolphustown,	14—30
Van Alstine's Mill & Ferry,	3—33
Hallowell,	3—36
Barker's & Wheeler's Ferry,	3—39
Through the Long Reach	7—32
Davenport's Ferry,	7—39
Bloomer's Store,	6—50
Belleville	15—65
Ferry,	12—84
Carrying Place.	4—88

I find no means of ascertaining with mathematical precision, the points or compass of the different parts of the Bay; but from such observations as I was able to make, without the assistance of any instrument, I believe them to be nearly as follows:

From Kingston to the entrance into the Bay of Quinte, S. W. by W.; thence to Van Alstine's, W. by S.; thence to Hallowell, S. W. by S.; thence to Cougher's Mill, N. E.; thence to Belleville, nearly W.; thence to the River Trent, one or two points S. of W.; thence to the Carrying Place, E. & S. W. This sketch, although not very correct, may give you a general idea of the course of our Steam Boat route.

At Kingston, Ernest Town is spoken of, as being "up the Bay of Quinte"; but the phrase is improper. Ti water between Ernest Town and Amherst Island is not a part of the Bay of Quinte, nor can it with propriety be styled a River. It comes within the geographical definition of a Sound, which is a channel with the lake by an outlet at each end of the island, called the Lower and Upper Gap. Amherst Island is about twelve miles long, the sound is of the same length, and ought to be named Amherst Island Sound.

The Island stretching thus in front of Ernest Town, breaks the winds and swells of the lake, and shelters the harbour of Ernest Town, and of those parts tolerably smooth; but the lake winds come in through the Gaps, and sometimes make the water at those parts quite rough, particularly against the lower Gap. The distance however, is short; and this is the only place in the whole route of the Bay and River Steam Boat, where it is exposed to any roughness of water.

Through the Gaps, the wind blows down the lake as much at least as 3-4ths of the season; and the two gaps raise daily winds regularly, from eight or nine o'clock in the morning, against the middle of the afternoon. Hallowell way in the evening, as the daily winds die away in the course of the ocean, with this difference, that the lake breeze does not shift, at night, as the land breeze does, but ceases.

Nearly opposite to the upper gap, is the entrance into the Bay of Quinte, between Frederickburg and Marlborough point. The general width of the Bay varies from one to two miles.—Between Ox point in Thurlow and Mississauga point in Ameliasburg, and also between Mayhew's point in Sophiasburg and an opposite point in the Indian land, the Bay is less than a mile wide. In front of Hollowell there is a triangular opening, called Hollowell Bay, of the extent of three or four miles. East of Belville, the bay expands to the breadth of five miles.—This expansion is regularly termed the Bay Bay, the head of which is perhaps four and its foot two miles from Belleville. Through the middle of the Bay Bay, the water is shallow, with a channel of sufficient depth on each side.

In southern harbor there is a marshy island, named Muskrats Bay, said to be the first between Kingston and Belleville. On the East side of the Long Reach is the entrance of Hay Bay, which sets up, in an Easterly direction, through the township of Adolphustown and nearly borings Fredericksburg. It derived its name from the adjoining meadows, which produce as luxuriant a crop of hay. It appears too shallow to be navigated, except by small boats. At the head of the Long Reach, on the Mohawk bay, on second from its adjacency to the Mohawk Indian village. It is the mouth of the Napanee River, coming in from the N. E. Carrying Place's mills, reputed to be the best in the Province, are five miles up the river, where there is a bridge and a small village around it. The road from Kingston to York passes here.—The water in the river rises and falls, from 9 to 11 inches, several times a day, with such a degree of regularity, that the boat-men calculate upon the tides to facilitate their passage to and from the Mills. I state this fact, not from my own observation, but upon the authority of several respectable persons who have observed it. The Appadeo tides, indeed, have been a subject of considerable speculation; but their cause has not yet been satisfactorily explained.

Near the head of the Bay of Quinte, the River Trent, falling in from the N. intrusions the waters of the Rice Lake. It is navigable for a number of reasonable miles; and large quantities of lumber are brought down every year to market. At the mouth of the river there is a ferry of about half a mile, on the route from Kingston to York, by way of Appanee and Ireville. The road to York, by way of Hallowell passes by the Carrying Place and unites with the other in Cramoisie. There ought to be a bridge constructed on the Carrying Place or River Trent to York.

Myers's creek empties into the Bay near the western limit of Thurlow. There are some settlements eight or nine miles up the Creek, principally on the east side. At the mouth of it is the Town of Belleville, a port of entry, and a place of considerable business. Its site is unfortunately too low to appear to advantage, and I should apprehend some danger of inundation from the creek in the Spring floods.

Jones's Creek is three miles west of Belleville, without the limits of Survey.

There are a number of Islands in the Bay. In front of the Carrying Place there is one, called Mississaga island, formerly occupied by the Indians of that tribe, but now overgrown with bushes. Crugger's island, two miles east of the River Trent, contains several acres of level ground, about twenty feet above the water. It is a smooth handsome green. Near the southern limit of Big Bay, there is a small island, known by the name of Ship Island, with a single tree on it, a tall elm, which serves as a guide to those passing up and down in the Bay. The largest island in the whole bay, is John's island, by the north-eastern point of Sophiasburg, at the head of the Long Reach, and nearly opposite to the house of Capt. John, one of the proprietors of the Indian Village, from circumstance, I left his name attached to it. When the water is high, boats pass between the island and the Mainland, but at low water, only above two or three miles. I observed several other islands, but did not note their names.

The Islands, along which the Steam Boat passes, in its route, were originally designated by numbers, beginning at the eastern extremity. The numerical designation began with the township of Kingston; which was called first Town, and proceeded through the townships on the lake shore, up to Amelisburg, which was Seventh Town, then turned and proceeded through the first range of townships on the north side of the bay, from Sidney on the river Trent, to Richmond on the Appanee, and therefore further up that river. Hallowell being after wards called Town of Marysburg and Sophiasburg, received a name at the time of its formation, and were never distinguished by a number. The Indian land, between Thurlow and Richmond, has neither number nor name, never being considered a township. The King-ston water with three of the Princes, turned names for a part of the numbered townships, with which were then more fashionable than the French termination ville. The force of habit, however, is verified by the fact, that the inhabitants still continue to speak of those townships by their respective numbers, in preference to their proper names; an improvement common, which ought to be discontinued, especially as there is a series of the same names applied to townships in the District of Johnstown.

The tract of land, opposite Sophiasburg, fronting ten miles on the Bay, and extending back twelve miles, was granted to a section of the Mohawk Indians, who separated from the main body of their tribe, now settled on the Grand River. This grant, as well as that on the Grand River, was made, in consideration of the lands they lost in the state of N. York, in the revolutionary war. A part of the front of this tract is cleared, and is called the Indian village. It has an Episcopal church, and five several houses. The cleared land appears to be a common pasture for horses and cattle. Most of the Indians habitations are further back.

The isthmus between the head of the Bay of Quinte and the lake is about a mile and a quarter in breadth. It is the limit between the townships of Murray and Amelisburg, between the counties of Hastings and Prince Edward, and between the Midland District and the District of New-Castle. It has no other name than the Carrying Place.

On the north side of it there is a tract of land, which was reserved for the purpose of forming a canal from the Bay to the Lake, and was called the canal Reserve; but since the late war, it has been surveyed and granted to original settlers. It is in the township of Murray, and is denominated the Canal Reserve settlement. The patents commence at number 1, and proceed Northwest and Maryston, which finishes the township consume the county of Prince Edward. In circle of those townships, as well as those on the north side of the Bay, I observed many good farms, in different stages of cultivation; and it is represented that the best forest and settlements are found in the front on the Bay, being situated in the best concessions. The ... in general, is excellent, and there are a number of reasonable mills; and large quantities of lumber are brought down every year to market. At the mouth of the river there is a ferry of about half a mile, on the route from Kingston to York, by way of Appanee and Ireville. The road to York, by way of Hallowell passes by the Carrying Place and unites with the other in Cramoisie. There ought to be a bridge constructed on the Carrying Place or River Trent to York.

RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

A GENTLEMAN of this Country, long for some years past, has been anxiously endeavouring to complete a set of the OLD ANGLO-SAXON POETS, published by Mr. Dodsley, which is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable works ever given to the world, and a complete Library in itself; being still in want of a few Volumes, communicated a friend to procure them in England last fall: owing to some mistake, the London Bookseller to whom the order was sent, after much needless labour and cost, for the entire work in boards, found it very difficult to be procured, got together a whole set, uniformly and very elegantly bound, and sent them out to this country. The consequence is, that the duplicates must either be returned or disposed of, but rather than return them immediately, the present holder wishes to offer them at prime cost to the public, and any Gentleman desirous of forming a Library, will find this an opportunity they were seldom occurs.—The entire set consists of 57 Volumes, which cost in England £27 7s. Sterling. The broken set wanting only 6 or 7 Volumes, which may be readily procured, cost £43. The Purchaser may leave his choice. The work is neat, and will be annually continued. VALUABLE LANDS
For Sale.

THE following exquisitely situated, valuable, and truly valuable Lands may be had, and immediate possession given, with undeniable titles, at rates far below their real value; and it is but seldom, even in a country so favorable as Canada, where unlimited Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, to good neighbourhoods, can be secured.

Lot 2, Comprising 70 Acres of the very richest Beech, Maple, Elm and Oak Lands, in the 4th concession of Hora, lying upon Smith's Creek, with 15 acres cleared and fenced, new log houses, well built and dove-tailed, first brass, &c. with a mill-seat, between 2 and 3 miles from the flourishing little town of Thornhe, on Lake Ontario, where there is an excellent market either for buying or selling. "The Land is of the very first quality, and in a good peaceable neighbourhood, forming altogether a most desirable residence, within a short mile of the great road between York and Kingston.

2d. 200 Acres, being Lot No. 1, in the 5th Concession of Hora, lying on the great road between Hope and Hamilton, leading to the new and flourishing settlement of Cramahe & Murray, on the Rice Lake, in which more than 500 families and persons have actually located, and scarcely five miles from the Town of Trenton, where there is a good market; it is in an old settlement, and the neighbourhood is populous and excellent. There are about 20 acres cleared and fenced, with a fine stream of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

3d. 190 Acres, occupying nearly one entire side of the Gananoque Lake, in the Township of South Crosby, District of Johnstown, consisting of a mix of broken fronts, the back parts extending to the road from the Rideau settlement to Kingston, where a settler place it is scarcely 30 miles distant. The Land is good and well timbered, and the situation secondary to none for health and romantic, with wooded islands in front.

The above Lands are particularly deserving of notice. The situations would suit for a competent Judge, and they will be sold remarkably cheap, the proprietor wishing to concentrate his property in another quarter.

QUEBEC, 9th June, 1818.

On Tuesday, judgment in both was pronounced by the Court of the Court Justice, in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, on CHARLES DU ROCHEIR, for the murder of OWEN KEENEY, in the Indian Countries. It is however understood that the execution will be delayed till the decision of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, in Council, is had, on a question connected with the jurisdiction of the Court.

Curious fact.—During the late warm weather, the St. Lawrence, at Cape Chat, was nearly closed up with ice, and the mountains had ingleside in that quarter, on both sides of the River, were covered with snow. Indians came in from a hunting excursion, only about 40 miles to the northward of Quebec, report, that on the 1st inst. the winter's gown was still lying in the woods, and not a bud had appeared on the trees, which in the neighbourhood were in leaf on the 20th May.

Halifax, May 30.

The Halifax Papers, to the 30th ult. mention that a Copy of the Bill passed in the House of Commons, establishing the Ports of Halifax, and Saint John, New Brunswick, as free ports, had been received there; that it was a measure of the Government of Canada, as well as the Colonists, and would certainly become a law.

The following Letter on the subject, and the original Charter of the Bill, are from a Halifax paper:

Extract of a letter from Messrs. Baltimore, Brown, London, dated March 31.

"It is just ascertained to be the intention of Government to make Halifax and St. Johns Free Ports; and a bill has been brought into Parliament, of which a copy we believe, will be transmitted by the present Mail. The conveyance, and which we presume will be passed in the present Session. Our J. B. withdrawal other of the Committee, who drawn the report of which this bill should have been taken previous to its passing, but Government would not give way.

"We find that the Bill authorising the entry of foreign goods into certain ports to be appointed by His Majesty, passed the House of Commons on the 26th ult.—This event appears to have created general satisfaction in this town; indeed in the present situation of trade any change will be for the better; and it must be admitted the experiment, if it is merely an experiment His Majesty's Ministers are about to try, can do us no material injury. We do not however consider this measure as such, but rather as the result of state policy; a measure must have been well aware that the Americans would pass an interdictory law, and were determined to have our ready friend to meet it. As far as relates to a departure from the colonial system, we do not think the act in question is the commencement.

The measure in contemplation will doubtless be beneficial to this town—and if the present system of exclusion as far as relates to the West Indies be preserved in, and we think the most of the natural advantages which this Province possesses, it must be productive of great and lasting benefit.

"In order that the Trading interests may understand the nature of this Bill, the fourth and most material Section of it is given verbatim, and it is as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful to any British ship or vessel belonging to the subjects of any Sovereign or State in amity with his majesty, to export from the said Ports as to be appointed for that purpose, to any country belonging to any Sovereign or State in amity with his Majesty, any Organic, Grindstones, or other produce or manufacture of the United Kingdom, or of his Majesty's Colonies or Plantations in the West Indies or any goods whatever which shall have been legally imported into the said Provinces; any thing in any law to the contrary notwithstanding."

NORTH-WEST PASSAGE.

We have already mentioned that the information received from Green land and Captains have induced the Royal Society to apply to Ministers to renew the attempts of exploring a North-West Passage, as well as to give encouragement to fishing vessels, to try the North-west they can reach, by the return homeward they can reach, by the return of the Dorothea and the return discovery into portions, as a reward for every degree beyond the 54th, that they shall penetrate. For this same reason, we think it would be advisable for the merchants engaged in the Greenland whale fishery, not to postpone the setting of the ships to the usual season, but expedite them at once, so as to take advantage of the temporary state of things.—The Public are, no doubt, aware, that what is called the North-West, as well as the North-East Passage, has been often, hitherto always unsuccessfully, attempted. Its objects is to discover a way by the Arctic Ocean to the East Indies, China, &c. As the subject is interesting, both politically and geographically we subjoin an account, extracted from an excellent work on North Greenland, by Capt. Scoresby, of all the attempts to discover either a North East or a North West Passage. Our readers will see from it that no attempt was made so early as the time of the illustrious Alfred.

A. D. 880.—North-West is supposed to be the first who sent to discover the utmost extent of the Arctic regions, and the possibility of a passage on that side to the North-East; but the history, some writers say, was undertaken by Other, a native of Heligoland, who was directed by Alfred to survey the coasts of Norway and Lapland.—On his return, he gave a clear description of those countries, and their inhabitants, which are considered as the first authentic account of those countries.

1553. (Edward VI.)—Sir Hugh Willoughby, with three ships were fitted out to prosecute a voyage of discovery, and attempt a N. East Passage, under the command of Sir Hugh Willoughby, who proceeded to latitude 72 deg. North, but was separated in winter in Russian Poland, he and all his crew miserably perished. "The gallant Sir Hugh (says Hodgson in his Chronological Exercises, p. 172) took his departure May 20, 1553, from Radcliff, on his fatal voyage for discovering the North East passage to China. He sailed with great pomp by Greenwich, where the Court then resided. Mutual honours to the paid on both sides. The council and courtiers appeared at the windows. The young King (Edward VI.) stood on the balcony and waved sight, for he then lay on his death bed; and that the principal object of the ceremony was disappointed. The melancholy event of Sir Hugh Willoughby's untimely fate is thus described in Thomson's winter :—

And to the stony deep his idle ship
Immovable, in Arctic wilds, is caught,
Immediate seiz'd, he with his hapless crew
Each full exerted at his several task
Frozen into statues; to the cordage glued
The sailor and the pilot to his helm.

One of the ships, engaged in this unhappy expedition, was more fortunate, under the command of Capt. Chancellor, she having passed the North Cape to the Eastward, got into the Bay of St. Nicholas, on the White Sea coast, and was the first European ship that had ever visited those parts. This voyage was the means of introducing the use of the Muscovy, and of the discovery of Greenland.—It is mentioned that on this enterprise the largest ship, of 160 tons, was abandoned with land, which proves, that in early ages the idea must have occurred of investing some expensive against the worst.

1580.—Stephen Burrough made a fruitless attempt to discover a North-East Passage.

1580.—The Russian Company again fitted out two ships to discover a North East Passage, which proved unsuccessful: and accordingly, one was lost and all on board perished.

1608.—The Danes made an attempt this year to discover a North-East Passage by sailing through Weygate's Straights, to the South of Nova-Zemble island, the obstacles they met with from the ice, hindered their progress, and they were obliged to return as unsuccessful as former adventurers.

1608.—Henry Hudson was employed by the English Company, (afterwards James II.) and Lord Berkly, fitted out a ship, and gave the command to Captain Wood, who was sent in company with a King's ship, to discover a North-East passage to India —they sailed as far as the 76th degree of North latitude, where the ice stopped their further progress. The King's ship struck on a rock and was lost.—Upon Captain Wood's return home, that no attempt was made so early as the time of the illustrious Alfred.

1609.—Hudson was hired a second time by the East India Company, to make a discovery by the North-East, but he was obliged to return to the port of Bristol. Cabot sailed in the spring; his object seems to have been to discover a North West Passage to the East Indies On the 24th of June, he discovered land, and gave it the name of Prima Vista or First Sight; it has since been called Newfoundland. Having sailed down the Coast of Florida he returned to England, bringing with him three of the natives of Labrador. Cabot, from this may justly be considered as the first of the first discoverer of the continent of America. Columbus did not see that continent till the year 1498.

1521. (Henry VIII.)—Jacques Cartier sailed from France to discover a North-West passage to the East Indies —he met with no further than the Bay of St. Lawrence, and returned home unsuccessful the same year.

1605. (James I.)—Mr. Robert Thorne, a merchant of Bristol, proposed and undertook by the King's (Henry VIII.) permission to discover a passage to the North-West; but returned home the same year unsuccessful; he however vouched at Cape Breton and Newfoundland, which was the first encouragement to promote that very beneficial fishery, which the British now enjoy on a broader, which serves as her great nursery for seamen.

1555. (Edward VI.)—This year three ships were fitted out to prosecute a voyage of discovery, and attempt a N. East Passage, under the command of Sir Hugh Willoughby, who proceeded to latitude 72 deg. 1607 (Henry VII.)—John Cabot, a Venetian, who resided at Bristol, encouraged by the success of Columbus, made a proposal to the King (Henry VII.) to undertake a voyage of discovery, which was granted by letters patent, provided that the ships fitted out should be obliged to return to the port of Bristol. Cabot sailed in the spring; his object seems to have been to discover a North West Passage to the East Indies On the 24th of June, he discovered land, and gave it the name of Prima Vista or First Sight; it has since been called Newfoundland. 1773. (George III.)—A voyage was undertaken this year, at the request of the Royal Society, to try how the navigation was practicable towards the N. Pole, and whether there was a possibility of discovering a passage to the East Indies by those frozen regions. Capt Racehorse and Carcass bomb, commanded by the Hon. Captain Phipps, (the late Lord Mulgrave,) and Captain (afterwards Admiral) Lutwidge, were the vessels equipped for this enterprise. On the 24 of June they reached Fair the Nore, and proceeded on their course to the North without meeting any quantity of ice to obstruct their passage. On the 81st of May they reached the 80 deg. 21 min. N. when both the ships on a sudden became enclosed in a body of ice and were carried by it, driven by a strong current into a bay, the entrance of which was instantly closed up by the ice; they were labored with indefatigable zeal and perseverance for four or five days to force a passage through the ice, but all their exertions were ineffectual. Their commander observed to the end of August, came to the resolution of hoisting the boats out to endeavor to find a way through the ice; every man was sent to promote that very beneficial fishery, which the British now enjoy on a broader, which serves as her great nursery for seamen.

POETRY.

A LOVE SONG,

Adapted to the mercenary manners of the age.

Burst not to me in those climes that grace
The finest form or fairest face;
Shape, bloom, and feature, I despise,
Wealth, Wealth, is beauty to the wise!

Come then my Cœnis, fill my arms
With all thy various store of charms,
Charms that of time defy the rage
And laugh at wrinkles and old age.

Come then, oh! come, and with them bring
The thousand joys from wealth that spring,
Oh! bring the Deeds of thy Estate,
The quit-rents, mortgages and plate.

Still keep women, those auburn locks,
And yield thy treasures in the stocks,
Oh! hide that ant that snowy breast,
And give instead thy iron chest.

Thy guiness shame the blushing rose
Which in those cheeks unheeded blows,
Tho sweet for me that ruby lip,
Give me thy India Bonds and Scrip.

Can aught with those bright eyes compare?
They diamonds symph, still brighter are.
Can aught those pearly teeth excell?
Thy pearls themselves please me as well.

Say dost thou boast thy handsome arm?
Its bracelets most richer charms,
Those fingers too, are lovely things,
But lovelier far their brilliant rings.

My passion Nymph, brooks no delay
For charms which never feel decay,
Charms which will mock thy fleeting breath,
And yield their raptures after death.

AGRICULTURAL.

Method of making Clover Hay, by the Rev. Mr. Klapmeier, of Worms, in Germany.

FROM THE TRANSACTIONS OF THE SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF ARTS, &c.

In this method of making hay, not only a greater number of loads are saved, but the hay is better and more nourishing.—The hay is prepared by self fermentation. Long whereby it retains its nutritious juices, and only loses its watery particles; it is dried more expeditiously by dissipation of its humidity, and consequently the sap remains, and thus its nutritious juices are concentrated.—This process is conducted in the following manner:—That the sap therein may be expended by the circulation of the liquid juices by heat, and the superfluous humidity is exhaled; not cooling, but on the contrary, and thus retains its festive fermentation is prevented, and the nutritious quality preserved.

Upon this principle the clover intended for hay, after having been mown, reaking till 4 o'clock in the afternoon—at the following day, is turned, to dry; if it must then be raked together in small cocks, and afterwards made into large cocks in the form of a sugar loaf, and such as would require 6 or 8 men to remove. To prevent the air from penetrating these cocks, and to procure a sufficient fermentation, long moist, while forming, be trodden down by one or two men. If it be a still close warm night, the fermentation will commence in four hours, and manifest itself by a strong honey-like smell: when a proper fermentation is begun, the cocks will, on being opened, emit a great warmth, and may then be spread abroad. If in the morning the sun is warm, and a little wind arises, the clover hay will quickly dry; it may then, towards noon, be turned with the rake or pitchfork, and about four in the afternoon it will be sufficiently dried, so that it may be immediately carted into the barn, without any danger of a second fermentation.

By this method of managing hay, the clover will require only three days, from the time of mowing, to its being housed, and very little work is wanted in the common way, even if good weather, it requires six or eight days; in the old method it frequently becomes of a black colour; but in this new method it is only brown, has an agreeable smell, and remains good and unchangeable in the barn. The farmer has also another advantage, that if he has not corn enough to carry it into the barn, he can leave this setting to dry it again into large well trodden cocks and thatch them with straw, in which state they will remain till winter without the least danger or loss. This clover hay is not only greedily eaten by sheep and lambs, but also by calves, even by young horses.

The cows in particular prefer it to the best meadow hay; it produces a great quantity of rich milk; and the butter made from it is almost as yellow as summer butter.

As this new mode of making hay depends principally upon two circumstances, first, that the mown clover when brought together into large heaps may ferment equally and expeditiously; secondly, that if the day succeeding its mowing be dry, sunny, and windy; on this account, it may be proper to point out what should be done when circumstances are unfavorable.

Let us suppose, therefore, that the slight after the clover grass has been placed in large cocks, be cold, damp, or rainy, the fermentation will yet take place, although it may require a term of twelve, sixteen, or twenty-four hours to effect it. If it be a second or third crop, at which season the grass is more coarse, it may even require from thirty-six to forty-eight hours before the fermentation ensues: it will however ensue, and be ascertained from this circumstance, that you can scarcely bear your hand in the interior of the cock.

Even if the night be dry, yet if a strong cold wind blow, the cock may not ferment equally, but only in the middle and on the side opposite to the wind; the other parts may still remain green. In such a case, the following rules must be attended to:

First, if the cock has only fermented in the middle, and on the side where the cold wind did not act upon it, the whole heap must nevertheless be opened the following morning. That which is already fermented, must be separated and spread to dry; it must be turned towards noon, and may be carried into the barn in the evening; but but part of the cock which has not fermented, must be again put together into large cocks, and fermented in the same manner as the preceding days, after which it may be spread to dry, and brought into the barn.

Secondly, in such cases where a small portion of the cocks has fermented thoroughly, but not the greater part, the heap must be spread abroad in the morning, but must be again put into a close cock in the evening, in such a manner, that the part which has fermented be placed on the inner part of the cock, and that which has not fermented be inclosed within it; then on the ensuing morning, or, if the weather be cold and rainy, on the morning afterwards, the clover heap may be again spread abroad, and the clover treated as in the first case.

Thirdly, if, in spreading the heap abroad, it be found that nearly the whole of the clover has fermented, it will not be necessary to delay the housing of the whole, on account of some small portion; but the clover may be dried and carried into the barn. In the course of the day it will remain tolerably moist, and if rains on the morning, they ought to be spread abroad, for the clover may then be dried and spread, even if it rains violently since if it were suffered to remain long or in the heap, it would take fire, or its juices would be lost by the acid state of fermentation; the leaves and stalks would become black, and the clover both lose its taste in the form of a sugar loaf, and such as would require 6 or 8 men to remove. To prevent the air from penetrating these cocks, and to procure a sufficient fermentation, long moist, while forming, be trodden down by one or two men. If it be a still close warm night, the fermentation will commence in four hours, and manifest itself by a strong honey-like smell: when a proper fermentation is begun, the cocks will, on being opened, emit a great warmth, and may then be spread abroad. If in the morning the sun is warm, and a little wind arises, the clover hay will quickly dry; it may then, towards noon, be turned with the rake or pitchfork, and about four in the afternoon it will be sufficiently dried, so that it may be immediately carted into the barn, without any danger of a second fermentation.

By this method of managing hay, the clover will require only three days, from the time of mowing, to its being housed, and very little work is wanted in the common way, even if good weather, it requires six or eight days; in the old method it frequently becomes of a black colour; but in this new method it is only brown, has an agreeable smell, and remains good and unchangeable in the barn. Golden Rule in Agriculture.

A practical husbandman of the highest authority assures, that the golden rule of agriculturists is not to manure more ere will make heavy land lighter, and light land heavier, and bind faster, and feed land exhausted sooner be lost sight of. He also knows and follows this rule, and he only, is a farmer.

For the Reflections of Farmers.

"An experiment has been made (says Mr. Livingston) to ascertain the difference between dew-water and rain-water for fattening an equal quantity of cattle of different breeds, and setting them in the sun 13 dry away. The result was that the ordinary, or rain-water of the watering, were in a greater quantity, blacker and richer, than that of the rain-water."

"The Nabob had his tents pitched on the plains near the city of Lucknow; among the number were two remarkably large, made of strong cotton cloth, lined with the finest English broad cloth, and wrought in stripes of different colours, with cords of silk and cotton. These two tents cost five lacks of rupees, or above £250,000 sterling: they were each 120 feet long, 60 broad, and the poles about 60 feet high: the walls of the tents were 10 feet high; part of them cut into lofty arches for the windows of the Nabob's seraglio, and those of the principal nobility, to see through. His highness had covered with jewels, to the amount at least of two millions sterling. From thence we removed to the chunam-ka, which was illuminated by two hundred thousand lamps from Europe, many of them glass shades with wax candles, and several hundred flambeaux; the glare of which was beyond any thing effected by the sun. Water and under this extensive canopy, above a hundred dancing girls richly dressed, went through their various dances and motions, and sung some soft airs of the country, chiefly Persian and Hindoo Persian.

"About 7 o'clock, the bridegroom, Vizier Ally (the young Nabob, made his appearance, as absurdly loaded with jewels, that he could scarcely stagger under the precious weight.—The bridegroom was about 15 years of age, the bride 11; they were both of a dark color, with the circumstance of his long imprisonment, may not prove uninteresting to the reader, we shall here subjoin it.

Vizier Ally was the adopted son of Asaf-ud-Dowlah, late Nabob of Oude, and first cousin to the late wife of a Furrukh, (a mutual servant of low description, employed in India in keeping the menials in the interior of a house clean.) He married father Asaf-ud-Dowlah, was a wealthy and eccentric prince. Having succeeded to the musnud (throne) of Oude by the assistance of the East India Company, he professed great partiality to the English. UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE.

YORK, THURSDAY, JULY 2.

To the Inhabitants of York (U. Canada,) and the subscribers to the relief of the sufferers by the late fire in St. Johns, Newfoundland.

GENTLEMEN,

AT a Public Meeting of the Inhabitants of this Town, held in pursuance of public advertisement, it was resolved:—That the cordial thanks of this Meeting are due to the Inhabitants of York, in Upper Canada, for their liberal contributions in the late generous effort for the relief of their distressed fellow subjects in this Province.

We assure you, Gentlemen, that this resolution is not a mere common place acknowledgement of your kindness, but the offspring of genuine gratitude. You have laid us under lasting obligations, and that in a way, which, however grateful it may be to our feelings, is equally honorable to yourselves.—Our sufferings by fire could have been great; but it is no trifling satisfaction to us to see, that they have been made the occasion of awakening in the minds of our distant friends the kindest sympathies and of affording them an opportunity, which they have not been negligent in improving, of displaying the benevolent principle.

Assuring you of our grateful remembrance,

We remain, Gentlemen,
Your obliged humble Servants,
Signed in the name and on behalf of the committee,
JOHN DUNCOMBE, Chairman.
St. John, Newfoundland, May 15, 1818.

To the Inhabitants of the District of Newcastle.

GENTLEMEN,

I feel it incumbent on me to take the earliest opportunity, of thus publicly declaring my regret for the sentiments expressed by me at the Township Meeting on the 8th June inst.—sentiments which I could never have entertained, until I possessed the fullest information, which I have since received; but included as we were from that information, we only heard the industriously circulated assertions of interested persons, which we readily, unfortunately adopted. I never had confidence in the Provincial Secretary nor Receiver General, nor the present ministerial tendency of Mr. Gourlay's writings, and of late his whole Press has evidently unhinged.

Confident that all my returns to Heaviliss, I can fully, and to your entire satisfaction, support my resolutions of the opinions given by me, at the aforementioned meeting.

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,
Your obedient Servant,
ROBERT J. KERR.

York, 30th June, 1818.

N. B.—I by no objection to attend at the general meeting, on the 8th July, there publicly to avow my sentiments.

Several of the Parisian journals have announced that the delivery of the remains of Napoleon, at Sabloux, to prince Jablonowsky, has been refused by the Governor of Longwood on the 16th last. announces that these remains were to have departed thence on the 20th March, accompanied by the prince and M. Vignale, the instigator himself of the departure. "The Emperor of Russia," continues the journal, "has caused the body of Napoleon to be opened, and has declared; and that this monarch himself has made a proposition to the Polish Government for the erection of a monument to the memory of Napoleon."

The Paris papers of the 26th inst. which arrived here this morning, are of great importance. They announce the entire and unconditional evacuation of the French territory by the allied army, of the financial operation provided for carrying it into effect, and of the speedy meeting of the allied sovereigns, for the purpose of fixing the positive time, and other preparatory circumstances. The sum required for the final payment of the claims of the Foreign Powers is reduced from sixteen hundred millions of francs (about 66,666,666 sterling); the amount of the deduction amounts to three hundred and twenty millions eight hundred and forty francs.

Louis by the Grace of God, King of France and Navarre.

To all present greeting.

We have ordained and do ordain, that the Project of the law, the tenor of which follows, shall be presented to the chamber of deputies, by our Minister Secretary of State for the department of foreign affairs and finance, and by the latter's Secretary of State for the department of Comptroller of State, whom we charge to explain the motives, and support the debate.

Article 1. For the purpose of providing for the full and entire execution of the dispositions of the treaty of the 20th May, 1815, and the Conventions of the treaty of the 20th November, 1815, as to the amount of the capital of the debts contracted by France anterior to that treaty, beyond her ancient limits, there shall be created and inscribed upon the great book of the public debt, with interest from the 22d March, 1818, a perpetual rent of 27,000,000 francs, to meet a capital of 540,000,000 francs.

Art II. There is opened in the Ministry of Finance a special, non-cyclical addition of rentes. In consequence the government is authorized to create and inscribe on the great book of the public debt, in conformity with this rate, rentes which may be employed only to extinguish the payment of the same due to the Allied Powers conformably with the 4th Article of the Treaty of the twentieth November, 1815.

Art III. An account shall be given in the Session of what shall have been done in virtue of the above second article.

Given at our Castle of the Thuileries, the 25th of April, of the year of our Grace, 1818, and the 23d of our Reign.

A London paper of the 28th of April is speaking of the French soldiers converts to that the recital of the murderers of M. Fualdès, has kept pace with the Budget, and the two are so inseparably in our minds, that we do not imagine we shall enjoy hour of one without remembering the other. This murder is the most atrocious, we have ever record of. The deliberate assassination of the living body of Fualdès upon a table; the bidding him with his last farewewords, and his threatheres, come past; a the cutting his throat, and receiving the blood in a vessel, that the floor might not be stained; the carrying out the body to throw it into the river, & the searching of the out room as reflecting fixing the knife, are circumstances of horror, of which the annals of no civilized state can produce a parallel. The murderers are the murderers of all mankind, and the murderers of revolutionary France. One of the murderers of Fualdès was a member of the Convention, and voted for the death of Louis XVI. Another was a member of the Council of Five Hundred, and voted for the banishment of the Bourbons. Another was a member of the Council of Ancients, and voted for the establishment of the Consulate. Another was a member of the Legislative Body, and voted for the establishment of the Empire. Another was a member of the Chamber of Representatives, and voted for the abdication of Napoleon. Another was a member of the Chamber of Deputies, and voted for the expulsion of the Bourbons. Another was a member of the Chamber of Deputies, and voted for the restoration of the Bourbons. Another was a member of the Chamber of Deputies, and voted for the abdication of Napoleon

The interest and prejudices of those who were benefitted by the monopoly and exclusive system of England, were opposed to any treaty in this country, on the principle of reciprocal advantage.—The politicians of that day, too, under the influence of these partial views, or not sufficiently appreciating the true theory of commerce, contended that it would be folly to enter into engagements by which England might not wish to be bound in future; and such engagements would be gratuitous; and according to their interpretation, congress possessed no power, under the constitution, to enforce any stipulation into which they might enter; that no treaty which could be made would suit all the states; if any were necessary, they should be made with the states separately; but that none was necessary; and those who talked of liberality and reciprocity in commercial affairs, were either without argument or knowledge; that the object of England was, not reciprocity and liberality, but to raise as many sailors and as much shipping as possible.*

The present footing of our foreign commerce, and the language made use of by England at this juncture, served still more to increase the public discontent; especially as it was plainly avowed that England sought to render the trade with us as exclusively advantageous to herself, as her power would enable her to do. Congress having no power, under the consideration, to impose countervailing and other corrective regulations on trade, the states universally attempted to establish regulations upon this subject. But, as a part only of the states joined in this measure and as the laws that were passed for this purpose differed from each other, the experiment completely failed.

In this condition of our navigation and trade, subject to foreign restrictions and exclusions, without a power at home to counteract and check the same, congress resolved to make another effort to conclude a commercial treaty with England. For this purpose, Mr. Adams, since president of the U. States, was appointed, and went to England. Mr. Adams resided in England for several years, he found and left the government unchanged, and equally as before disinclined to make with us a treaty of commerce.

This further disappointment, with the deprecating condition of our navigation and trade, joined to the embarrassment of the public finances, produced what no inferior pressure could have done; it produced the general convention of 1787, that formed the Constitution of the U. States.

Had England entered into a liberal treaty of commerce with the U. States, this convention would not have been assembled. Without an intending it, the adherence of look mind to her original and exclusive system of trade and navigation, gave to this country a constitution; and the commercial and equalizing bill now before the senate, arising from the same cause, may assist us in establishing and extending those great branches of national wealth and power, which we have such constant and urgent motives to encourage.

The establishment of the constitution of the United States was coeval with the commencement of the French revolution. The expiration of the general convention at Philadelphia, and of the assembly of Notables at Paris, were held in the same year.

Laws were passed by the first congress assembled under the new constitution; partially to counteract the inequality of our navigation and trade with foreign nations; and a small discrimination in favour of import and of tonnage was made for this purpose.

Afterwards, in the year 1794, a number of resolutions on the subject of navigation and trade, were moved in the house of representatives, by a distinguished member of that body. These resolutions had a special reference to the refusal of England to enter into an equal commercial treaty with us, and aimed at countervailing her exclusive system. Other and more direct resolutions, bearing on England, were also proposed by other members, and referred to the immediate of the treaty of peace, and to the recent captures of American vessels by English cruisers, in the American seas.

The policy of these resolutions was doubted; they were therefore strenuously opposed, and the extraordinary mission of Mr. Jay, to England, suspended their further discussion.

The British question had by this time become the object of universal attention. War had broken out between France and England: The latter power policy of our government to avoid war, and to adhere to a system of neutrality, was much questioned; and for a time it was matter of great uncertainty whether the country would support the neutrality recommended by the president.

The universal dissatisfaction, on account of the commercial system of England, the insolence of the aristocracy of peace, the numerous captures by order of the English government, of our vessels employed in a trade strictly neutral, combined with our friendship, recollections of the services of France, and our good wishes in favor of the effort she professed to be making to establish a free constitution, constituted a crisis most difficult and important.

It was in these circumstances, that president Washington nominated Mr. Jay ambassador to England. The nomination was confirmed, the resolutions and the immediate effect was, the suspension of the further discussion of the commercial resolutions before the house of Representatives.

The English seems to have duly appreciated the true character and importance of this extraordinary mission.—France well understood and resented it. Mr. Jay was received with civility, and concluded a treaty with England on all the points of his instructions. When published it met with great opposition: The article respecting the West India trade, had been excluded from the treaty by the senate, by reason of the unfavourable condition or proviso that was coupled with it—with this exception, it was finally ratified by the president.

Although the treaty did not come up to the expectation of all, in addition to satisfactory arrangements, concerning English debts, the unlawful capture and condemnation of our vessels, and the delivery of the posts, points of very great importance, it contained articles regulating the trade, navigation, and maritime rights of the two countries. No treaty that could have been made with England would, in the highly excited temper of the country, have satisfied it. But, to those whose object it was to prevent the country from taking part in the war between France and England, and to prevail upon it to adhere to a system of impartial neutrality! who, moreover, believed, that the safety and even liberties of the country were concerned in the adoption of this course, that treaty proved a welcome auxiliary.

It suspended the further agitation of difficult and angry topics of controversy with England; it enabled the government to persist in, and to maintain, the system of neutrality which had been recommended by the father of his country—a policy, the correctness and benefits of which, whatever may have been the disagreement of opinion among the public men of those times, that will now scarcely be doubted by any one.

During the continuance of this treaty, further, though ineffectual attempts were made to establish a satisfactory intercourse with the English colonies in the West Indies, and, likewise, to place the subject of impressment on a mutually safe and equitable footing.

The commercial articles of this treaty expired in 1803, no proposal having been made to renew them. A subsequent negociation took place, but nothing was definitively concluded. The peace of Amiens was of short duration. Another warlook place between France and England; no maritime treaty existed between the United State and England; and the manner in which England exercised her power on the ocean —the great interruption of the navigation and trade of neutral nations—the numerous captures of their ships and cargoes, under the retaliatory decrees of France and England, with other vexatious occurrences, revived the first angry feelings towards England, and greatly contributed to the late war with that nation.

This war was closed not long after the conclusion of the general peace in Europe; and the treaty of Ghent was followed by a meagre commercial convention, made at London, and limited, in its duration, to a few years only.

Neither the spirit of the negociation, nor the scope of the articles, affords any evidence that England is inclined to treat with this country on the only principle on which a commercial treaty with her can be desirable. Her decision on this point seems to be beyond question, as our latest communications inform us, that her ancient system will not be changed; and, in case we are dissatisfied with its operation, that England has no objection to, our taking any such measure concerning the same, as we may deem expedient—an intimation that puts an end to further overtures on our part. Such is the explanation why the measure now proposed, has been so long deferred.

During the confederation, Congress were without power to adopt it.

The treaty concluded by Jay, in 1794, the relaxation of the navigation and colonial laws, during the war between France and England, and the advantages derived from our neutral trade while this war continued, rendered the measure inexpedient during this period.

And the expectation since entertained, that a more enlarged and equal treaty of commerce and navigation, applicable, in its provisions, to peace as well as war, might be substituted in place of the present commercial convention, has hitherto suspended the interference of Congress.

This expectation must be given up; England has exprimed in of her decision to adhere to her ancient and exclusive system of trade and navigation, and the only alternative before us, is, to submit to the regulation of our own navigation by England, or to interpose the authority of our constitution to counteract the same. There can be no hesitation in the choice.

The bill before the Senate, is in nothing exclusively towards England—it is simply a countervailing regulation, to which we are even invited; a measure strictly of self-defence, and intended to protect the legislative powers of our own country from being any longer shackled or, if not so they should be, to counteract, with firmness and strength, on the resources and power of a foreign nation.

The time is propitious; causes that formerly prevented the union of opinion in favor of this measure no longer exist; the old world is at peace; and each nation is busily employed in repairing the waste of war, by cultivating the arts, and extending the blessings of peace. England has come out of the most portentous war that Europe has ever suffered, not only unbroken, but with increased power.

Her agriculture, manufactures, and commerce were cherished; were without interruption, and increased, while those of neighboring nations were suspended, interrupted or destroyed.

Her colonies and dependent territories, have been greatly enlarged, at the expense of her enemies; and regions, with which we and others once had trade and intercourse, having fallen under the dominion of England, are now closed against us.

We have no other questions depending with England, except those concerning impressment* and the fisheries; their settlement can, in no manner, be affected by the passing of this act.

England is a great and illustrious nation having attained to this preeminence by generous and successful efforts, in breaking down the civil and religious bondage of former ages. Her patriots, her soldiers, and her statesmen, have adorned her history, and offer models for the imitation of others.

We are the powerful descendants of England, desiring perpetual friendship, and the uninterrupted interchange of kind offices, and reciprocal benefits with her. We have demonstrated, in circumstances the most critical, constant and persevering evidence of this disposition. We still desire the impartial adjustment of our mutual intercourse, and the establishment of some equitable regulations, by which our personal and maritime rights may be secure from arbitrary violation. A settlement that, instead of endless collision and dispute, may be productive of concord, good humor, and friendship; and, it depends on England, whether such is to be the relation subsisting between us.

If this bill became a law, it must be followed up by other provisions, if requisite, to give to it complete effect.

Either the intercourse or the reciprocally beneficial, or it must not be suffered to exist.

*With the English laws of allegiance and impressment, we have no other concern, than to exempt our citizens from their application: we do not desire the service of English seamen, but England should by the last to seize our citizens and force them into her service. She disclaims this purpose, but perhaps in a practice, to discover and capture her own seamen, that unavoidably subjects them to her violence.—Whatever her rights may be, they should be so used, as not to hurt ours. This is a precept of universal justice—its application may be devised, that if not perfect in every case, would be so generally correct, that considering the difficulty of the subject, it ought to be satisfactory.

I do regard the fisheries (none of the ocean not within the territorial limits of separation, are free to all men—none have not established their rights; those on the coasts and bays of the dominions, conquered in America, from France, were acquired by the conquest record, and adopted island of American and English men—Members of the same empire, we, with them, had a common right to these fisheries; and, in the division of the empire, England confirmed our title, without expulsion of limitation—a title equally irrevocable with those of our boundary—and of our independence itself.

From the Quebec Gazette of June 11.

Fall Wheat.—An experiment of sowing Fall Wheat was made last fall at the New: on the banks of the River Jacques Cartier, in the Parish of Jeune Lorette, about 16 miles from Quebec. It was sown about the 10th of September on a point of land close to the margin of the river; the whole extent of the woods cut down at that place is about ten superficial arpents, which including the width of the river, about three arpents, makes a clear superficies of 6 arpents to the midst of the woods. The snow therefore could not be drifted off during the winter. The experiment has so far, completely succeeded. The quantity sown was a bushel & a half, and a more promising field of wheat of the season, is probably not to be met with any where. On the 7th inst. a gentleman who was out there, brought in a stalk of it which was just shooting out in ear. It was about 3-4 of a yard in length and proportionably strong.

From the Quebec Mercury.

On or about 24th May, Capt. James Armstrong, of the Schooner Experiment, in her passage from Montreal, descended as the river just above William Henry, saw afterwards black Bear. He immediately gave out a boat with four men, to try in pursuit of him. The only means of conveyance capable of being furnished them was a boat hook and an axe, the Schooner having on five arms or other weapons on board. The men, though so inadequately prepared, with singular intrepidity made for the bear and a very severe contest ensued, in which they were frequently exposed to the danger of his upsetting the boat. At one period of the conflict their attention was extremely perilous, having made a blow at him with the boat hook, the enraged animal seized it, and by a tremendous effort of strength, instantly wrenched it from the Staff. The people with a courage equalled only by their dexterity, still kept their assailant at bay, till by repeated blows aimed at his head they eventually (with nerve-ly the staff of the boat hook), succeeded in killing him and got their prize in safety to the schooner. He appeared to be in nearly a famishing state, and doubtless had left some of the islands opposite, to seek food on the shores of Wm. Henry. The visit of such a stranger is worthy of notice, as he was of a most enormous size, his skin being nearly square and upwards of five feet. Had he been in condition, he must have been a tremendous specimen of the species. The Captain and crew who manned the boat deserve great praise in thus protecting the vicinity from this predatory intruder, as few persons would perhaps be found sufficiently energetic to encounter such (to use a poetical phrase) an ugly customer.

Mr. Eaton,

In the National Advocate of 23 June, printed at New-York, it appears that the renowned hero General Jackson, the Suwarrow of the Republican Army, at the capture of the Spanish port of St. Marks, took a young man of the name of Ambrister, a Lieutenant in the British Army, whom he caused to be tried by a Court Martial and sentenced to be shot; which sentence was carried into execution three days after.

This apparently amiable young man, was convicted solely on the evidence of one witness; the charges against him, were, 1st, for assisting the Indians, 2d, for being a spy.

Humanity must shudder at the recital of this atrocious trial and result. Had this young man been captured fighting in the ranks of the Indian army, he would have been entitled, at least, to the benefit of a prisoner of war.—with respect to the second charge, it is too ludicrous to require an answer, can a spy be captured in a friendly territory?

The American Government have long pursued a spirit of sanguine hostility towards the weak, defenceless, aborigines of the soil; and if it were true that this young man was aiding them, he was acting in a noble purpose, but which was marked by his stern executioner at the place of execution.

The Indians have no newspapers to sound out their woes; they have no friend to advocate their injuries. We only hear the cries of one party, and that for vengeance.

It is not long since, if I recollect right, that this same exterminating General, took an Indian prophet, prisoner of war, and immediately caused him to be hung, tho', no doubt, was a prompt mode of putting a period to his prophecies; but I prophesy, that the time will arrive when Mr. Jackson, will have to atone for these cruelties, for the sacred Law of nature will not justify such conduct.

CAPE BRETON.

From the last letters from Halifax, it appears that the Earl of Dalhousie, with his usual paternal attention to every thing concerning the interest and welfare of British North America, and the navigation of the mother country, in consequence of the documents laid before him, of the loss of several ships and vessels, with their crews, upon the N. East point of Cape Breton, during 1816, had made the necessary representations to the Governor-General, and that His Excellency had recommended to His Majesty's Ministers the necessity of erecting a light-house on the Island of St. Paul. Since then, another ship has been wrecked there during the last fall and it is supposed that every soul perished. Under these melancholy circumstances, we have not the least doubt but the Lords of the Admiralty will, with their accustomed promptitude, give orders for the erection, in the ensuing summer, of a light-house on the Island above-mentioned.

London paper.

A Lamp without flame.—Sir H. Davy has discovered that a fine platina wire heated red hot and held in the vapour of ether, will continue ignited a considerable time. It has since been discovered, that if a cylindrical coil of these platina wires be placed, part of it round the cotton of a spirit lamp, and part above the wick, and the lamp to be lighted so as to heat the wire to redness, on the flame being blown out, the alcohol will keep the upper part of the wire red hot for any length of time, accompanied by a supply of alcohol, and without any considerable expenditure thereof, so as to be insufficient to flame. Common Fergus, or paper prepared with nitre, and by this means to light a sulphur match at pleasure. The proper ratio of the platina wire is 1-100 of an inch, a larger size will give but a dull light, a smaller is difficult to use, about 12 turns of the wire will be sufficient, coiled round any cylindrical body, united to the axis of the wick of the lamp.

Extract from the journal of a voyage in the ship Enterprise, lately arrived in Philadelphia—communicated for the Baltimore Patriot Gazette.

"From Bruter's island we proceeded near the Snares; (a small cluster of islands in south latitude 48, W longitude 166.) here we found three men who had been on an island seven years. A schooner in which they were, being short of provisions, they chose to land their chance on shore. They took with them from the vessel a quantity of rice, an iron pot, and half a barrel of pitch. The potatoes they planted, and when we were there, the whole side of the island seemed to be covered with vines. They had built five houses and had 1200 dried skins. We took them and their skins on board, and brought them away from the island."

Extract of a letter from Virginia.

"Last Sabbath I heard Mr. Gorsuch, from the Missionary Society, on his way to the Indians; he spoke well on the value of an immortal soul. I know not when my feelings were so harassed, as on my way home from the meeting-house, two wretches were driving about 30 men, women and children, the men were all chained, with wretched irons and despair in their looks."

This can be proved by persons now in Philadelphia, and is a true specimen of the land of Liberty.

RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

A GENTLEMAN of this Country, who for many years past, has been anxiously endeavouring to complete a set of the OLD ANNUAL REGISTER, first published by Dodsley, which is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable works ever given to the world, and a compleat Library in itself; being still in want of a few Volumes, commissioned a friend to procure them in England but failing owing to some mistake, the London Bookseller to whom the order was sent, after much needless labour and cost, for the entire work is now rare and very difficult to be procured, got together a whole set, uniformly and very elegantly bound, and sent them out to this country. The consequence is, that the duplicates must now be returned or disposed of, but rather than return them immediately, the present holder wishes to offer them at prime cost to the public, and any Gentleman desirous of forming a Library, will find this an opportunity that very seldom occurs.—The entire set consists of 77 Volumes, which cost in England £77 7s. Sterling. The broken set wanting only 5 or 7 Volumes, which may be readily procured, cost £45. The Purchaser will have his choice. The work is to be annually continued. Apply at the Express Office.

VALUABLE LANDS
For Sale.

THE following singularly desirable, and truly valuable Lands may be had, and immediate possession given, with undeniable titles, at rates far below their real value; and it is but seldom, even in a country so extensive as Canada, where uncultivated Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, in good neighbourhoods, can be procured.

Lot 1. Comprising 70 Acres of the very richest Beech, Maple, Elm and Oak Land, in the 4th Concession of Iflora, lying upon Smith's Creek, with 15 acres cleared and fenced, new log-house, well built and cloth-tailed, fruit trees, &c. with a mill-seat, between 4 and 5 miles from the flourishing little Town of Toronto, on Lake Ontario, where there is an excellent market either for buying or selling. There are about 30 acres cleared and fenced, with a fine stream of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

26. 190 Acres, occupying nearly one entire side of the Cinnamonque Lake, in the Township of South Crosby, District of Johnstown, consisting wholly of broken fronts, the back parts extending to the road from the Rideau Settlement to Kingston, from which latter place it is scarcely 20 miles distant. The Land is good and well timbered, and the situation singularly beautiful and romantic, with wooded islands in front.

The above Lands are particularly due Notice. The situations were chosen by a competent judge, and they will be sold remarkably cheap, the proprietor wishing to concentrate his forces in another quarter.

The following is an extract of a private letter received from an officer in India. It is dated,

"Night Encamp. of the Jumna, in Camp, Oct. 27, 1817.

"We are now on our march—supposed, in the first instance, to be directed against the fortress of Gwalior, belonging to Scindia. The ostensible object of the campaign, however, is the entire annihilation of the Pindarees, a race of plunderers, who seconded to have been annoying us for many years.

"The whole of the army now in the field consists of 10 divisions, each subdivided into corps. We are advancing from the three presidencies towards the same point with the finest army ever paraded in defence of India. The Governor-General is with our division, which is about 15,000 strong, with 60 pieces of cannon. The camp followers on this occasion alone amount to 67,000. The carriage of the baggage of our regiment, we have 40 elephants and 400 camels; every elephant has two keepers, and every two camels one. Of us there are 37 Officers present, among whom, there are 810 servants; every horse in the regiment has two attendants, one as a groom, the other to provide grass, these alone, amount to 1400, besides those for the mess, which fill the bazaar to supply the provisions; in all, for our regiment alone, about 3,500 followers, besides their wives, children, &c.

"The Marquis of Hastings travels in a most princely style; he has 150 elephants and 400 camels, besides a state elephants splendidly accoutred, having superb and silver howders or cradles on their backs. There are now actually 26 Rajahs and independent Sovereigns of various ranks, on their way to pay their respects to the Marquis. Some of these rajahs are already in camp with the Governor-General, in fact, is now as great a man as ever the Great Mogul was.

The following is an extract of a letter of the 17th ult from Stockholm :

"It will be recollected that in October last the directors of the Discount Bank at Malmoe were arrested, in consequence of their fraudulent management of its affairs. The examination of the accounts has been brought to a close, and it appears that the National Bank is a loser to the amount of 750,000 rix dollars. The fiscal of the high court of justice has demanded that the commercial counsellors, Nordlander and Bjoksmon, shall be adjudged infamous, and sentenced to stand two hours in the pillory, and afterwards to be sent to hard labor upon the fortifications, for a certain number of years. The punishment of the merchant Fallmen will be mitigated, as he seems to have been actuated not so much from design as from a criminal negligence and concealment; but he will be ordered to make good the deficit with their property, so far as it goes. With respect to the discounters, Sahl and Kock, the fiscal has also moved that they be sentenced to loss of honor, imprisonment, and confiscation of their property, for the purpose of indemnification. The marine establishment of Norway has been fixed at one admiral, one commodore, three captain commandants, 13 captain lieutenants, and 24 first and 24 second lieutenants."

Saturday morning the funeral of the late rear admiral sir George Hope took place from the admiralty, and was attended by the lord president and general sir A. Hope, as chief mourners. Sir G. Hope had his 52d year.

We can now state from authentic information, that the marriage of the Duke of Gloucester with the Princess Royal of Meiningen is decided upon. The consent of his royal highness in council, and of her serene highness, has undergone no change by the proceedings in the house of commons. The princess is to have the ceremony of marriage by a proxy before she embarks for England. The British minister at Stuttgard, is to be his royal highness' proxy.

Notice was given on Saturday at the Stock Exchange, that all notes under £1 dated in May, 1817, will be paid off after the 5th of June, on which day the notes cease to be a legal crease. The usual option will be given to the bankers, of taking new bills in whole or part payment.

A letter from St. Helena, of the 1st of March, says, "On Monday, the 23d of February, M. Cipriani, (Bonaparte's Major d'Hotel), was taken ill with an inflammation in the bowels, of which complaint he died the Thursday following."

Marine.—A letter from Chatham, dated Friday, May 8, says, "This day a detachment of the Royal marine corps from Woolwich, under orders for embarkation at the place, to join his majesty's ship Tonnant, the Prince Regent, on his intended naval tour, refused to go beyond the wapping stairs with them, until they received their arrears of pay. The marines who were not under orders for embarkation, were called out to suppress the mutiny, and received each ten round of ball cartridge. The arms were taken from the mutinous detachment, and every man's pouch search, after which the men were sent on board as prisoners. The Chatham division, intended to relieve the above service, left here yesterday."

A Dear Kiss.—Wm. Andrews was last week fined 20s. by T. B. Cooper and W. Hankey, esquires, the magistrates of Pershore, in Scotland, for robbing, in the street, a servant-maid, in the execution of the duty.

Pedestrianism.—Crisp, the celebrated pedestrian, arrived at the Queen's Head, Knightsbridge, 20 minutes past 11 o'clock on Friday night from Oxford, having then completed his 16th day's task of walking 17 successive days, to and from London to Oxford, being a distance of 64 miles a day, and having begun at 4 o'clock on Saturday morning on his return to Oxford, where he arrived at his usual hour; thus completing, in the 17 days, 1037 miles, being the greatest pedestrian task ever performed.

PENRICAN, May 6.

Remarkable approach of an island of ice to our shores.—We have been favored with an extract of a letter from Thurso, dated April 29th, which asserts that an iceberg or island of ice, has actually been stranded upon the island of the Fowls, most western of the Shetland islands.—This iceberg is said to extend full six miles in length, and of course, an object of terror to the natives. Pease, or Fula, in the Shetland group, 2. 16, is supposed to be the Ultima Thule of the ancients: it is about 9 miles in length, and one and a half in breadth, situated nearly 20 miles distance from Ivay, and to the westward of the clusters of islands called Shetland, to which last it is politically annexed. It affords excellent and extensive pasturage for sheep, and is inhabited by 26 or 27 families.

There have been great floods and violent hail storms in many parts of England.

LONDON, May 13.

The Minerva Smith, Captain Allen, has arrived in 26 days from New-York, and will go into the London docks to-morrow morning. Capt. Allen passed in lat. 41, 20. long. 50. several islands of ice of immense size and height; some of them were one hundred feet above the water.

LONDON, May 15.

There have been very extensive sales of stocks yesterday and this forenoon, as the settlers have succeeded in creating a certain degree of alarm, the consequence of which was a great fall respecting the late American news.—The act prohibiting the intercourse between the United and the British West Indies, caused in no small degree the panic.

It is merely for the purpose of giving the American navigation a share of the profit of carrying the produce to Halifax, and Bermuda, where British vessels will meet the cargoes for their ultimate conveyance to the islands; or more probably, it will throw this very lucrative trade entirely into the hands of the settlers in British America.

Where the official communication at Ghent were published in America, if we recollect rightly, the British government would not allow American vessels to trade with our West India Colonies. The American Minister made repeated applications, but the point would, on no account be given up.

It was stated, however, in the official reply, than any measures resorted to by America, in consequence of this refusal, would not be looked upon by Great Britain in a hostile point of view. Under these circumstances, therefore, the present measure is not to be considered merely as trading in favour in some measure the navigation of the United States, which has been greatly depressed lately.

From Hamburgh it is stated that the Danish frigate Nimph, of 44 guns, had sailed for the Mediterranean to protect the commerce of Denmark, and to convey presents to the Bey of Tunis.

Dr. Jeannyer, professor of chemistry in Vienna, has made the discovery of a means to extract iodine from coals, and to unknown acids, a resin, a resinous gum, and other elements, which he has discovered with surprising success, to the purpose of dying silk, wool, cotton and linen, and has produced from them red, black, yellow, and various shades of brown and green. The emperor Francis, president of the aulic chamber, and many other enlightened judges of the arts and sciences, were present at these experiments, and testified their entire approbation of this useful discovery.

In the house of commons, on Friday the 13th inst. it was stated by Mr. Newman, that one half of the bank of England notes circulating in the northern districts are forgeries!

It is said in accounts from Venice of the 5th of April, that the duchess of Parma, her imperial highness Marie Louisa, is expected in that capital before the end of June, about the time that their majesties the emperor and empress shall have returned from Dalmatia. "On the 24th of April, M. le Comte Forbin, Director General of the Royal Museum, landed at the lazaretto of Marseilles. He came last from Alexandria, and his passage was very short. Forbin brings the plans of that important work, as well as many interesting drawings of the labors of M. The Museum of Paris is going to be enriched with some of the Egyptian Antiquities which M. Forbin has collected in Egypt. France.—We learn from an authentic source, says the Philadelphia Democratic Press, that a council of Ministers was held in Paris, March 2d, 1818, at which Louis XVIII. presided. The subject under consideration was the propriety of permitting the return of certain Frenchmen proscribed for an attachment to Napoleon Bonaparte, or a supposed hostility to the present king of France. We have particular satisfaction in stating that it was determined by an unanimous vote, to recal the first and second lists of the proscrits; the Many persons will read the account of the death of the Princess Charlotte, and on looking back in preference to any other part of the paper, will find that the Prince is about to publish, in four vols. 4to, the relation of his travels, accompanied by a great many maps, views and figures. This relation will throw a great light on the interior of Brazil, which the Prince has traversed with many interesting persons employed by all travellers. This country, for ten years the residence of the royal family of Portugal, is yet but little known. The Prince of Neuwied has received from his particular attention, and the results of his exertions have been of the greatest importance, particularly during the history of Amelia and Pozzuolo; but we have a few to the number of persons who example the Chesapeake.

The transaction of the last ten years must afford the Prince a handsome dividend together; he was not permitted to return to Brazil, but for sets of one quarter of the 1st of January of these which have taken place within his years.

The following article is extracted from a Falmouth, (Jam.) paper, of the 2d of April :

Famine as it always is to censure the conduct of public characters, it is particularly unpleasant to speak unfavorably of those who are in the high road of pleasure. Courtesy of manners is less suited to the present dark theme to the drawing-room; and the usual complaints of the times are unheeded in the bravery, deserves and obtain a premier commendation. To this prince sir John Regis, and 200 Infantry, and Lieut. Turner, were directed to join the camp in view. As soon as this detachment was observed by the enemy, they burned their guns on it, but by the time though well directed, was very distant. This N. W. camp of the Blow's was very strongly situated, and almost entirely surrounded by ravines, rendering impassable to cavalry. Captain Ridge, therefore, resolved to reconnoitre; this he successfully performed by Lieut. Franklin, assistant quarter master general, who accompanied the detachment. After much search, under a constant fire from the enemy's guns, which, however, did no mischief, a place was discovered, at which the cavalry might cross the ravine. Accordingly, the passage admitted of only two horses abreast. Capt. Ridge determined to attempt this passage. Under the cover of a rising ground, on the opposite side of the ravine, which luckily the enemy had omitted to occupy, the cavalry gradually formed for the charge; the enemy's guns played continually, but unsuccessfully, though within 200 yards, for these most struck the rising ground behind our troops, and bounded over them. In 5 minutes, all were ready, the cavalry moved forward; on the crest of the rising ground, they received the last volley, the charge was ordered, and in 2 minutes, they had possession of all the guns and camp of the enemy, whose gunlaader, as usual, behaved with utmost steadiness, & were cut down at their guns, others who were beaten from the guns, fled to the ravines, and still kept up a fire with musketoons. Few, however, comparatively, were destroyed. The cavalry, and the prisoners were put on. Our loss was small, about 20 casualties. The

I the Church Catechisim,

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

From the New-York Evening Post.

To Farmers and Gardeners.—When I published, some time ago, my accounts of the crops of Ruta Baga, or Russia or Swedish turnip, I was by no means aware, that I was exposing myself to any species of criticism; much less that I imagine, that I was in the way to incur the charge of being a pretender to any merit at all, and, still less of a monk, to which I had no claim. The gentlemen, Mr. Lewis and another who signs himself Q. have, however, given, written and published proof, that they look upon me as having put forward a claim to the introduction of this valuable root, though I had so fully spoken of the use to which I meant it put in summer, and though I had expressly said, that it was cultivated here under the name of Russia Turnip!

No: it was not the root that I expressed my hope to introduce; it was the cultivation of it upon a large scale and as cattle-food; and, in this way the root has not yet been introduced. Mr. Q says, that the Ruta Baga seed was brought into Pennsylvania by Mr. Reed, by 25 years ago, and distributed by him. very likely. He was a public-spirited man. This I know, however, that, last winter, I could find no Potatoes in this farmer, that knew it even by name, though two of the many that I talked to, and a few miserable roots of it in the gardens. I have gone another way to work. I have raised about a hundred Long Island suggon loads of this root, and have sent about 50 more loads to New-York market, and have sold the whole at an average of half a dollar a bushel, rather dearer, indeed, than the Potatoes are in the air. And this has been the produce of seven acres of land, the poorest in this neighborhood! I change from hundreds and a half of bushels for a bushel of apples in May. I truck turnips for corn in the ears at par. How soon I should, at this rate, turn into my pocket the produce of the orchards and the corn-fields! Can there be any better proof than this, that the culture of the root has not yet been understood? If I were a greedy man, and could have my wish, I should need, in order to make me an enormous fortune, only to put to labour the culture of this root to remain, its five years, no more extensive than it was in 1817. If I had been a cunning man, I should have kept my own counsel, and not cried "roast meat!" I might have had nearly a monopoly for another year. That is not now to be; but, I am not sorry for it. Seeing, as experiment has, how the root flourished, I sent home (to my home England is, and always will be,) for some seed for myself, and for some also to sell, in order that others might share with me in the advantages attending this culture. This seed I sold: I and I sell it, in the market, at the common price, though I understand, that a man, whom I first sent to market with my turnips, sold for thirteen pence, a bushel full of seed, which he said, was of the same sort as that which produced my roots. This is what I am informed, sold one of my large turnips, which has served a New-York store-keeper as a sign for the sale of his Russia turnip seed! This gentleman's seed may be as good as mine, but, at any rate, those facts prove, that there was something extraordinary in my crop, and that the culture had not been fairly introduced into this country.

Mr. Q. begs, that, when I go home, at the use of which word he appears displeased I will not in the account of my "travels," spoil in any claim to this word of introduction. Mr. Q. may be assured, that I shall enter my self in America that which I am not ready to say to her face; and, indeed, that I will not publish any thing about this country (if a sudden departure does not make previous publication here impossible,) that I do not publish here before my friends in the country. Indeed, a part of these "Travels," to use his own word, is now in the press at New-York, and will be published in a very few days. Inquiring an account of my mode of culture, it struck me, that I ought to begin with a statement of the climate and soil. This led me to look into my daily notes. This looking led me to suppose, that the daily account of a year's residence here might be very useful in England. Out of these thoughts a little book was easily engendered; and, therefore, if Mr. Q. has a mind to know what I shall say about America after I get home, he may be gratified before-hand at a very trifling expence.

Mr. Q. speaks of the value of the Ruta Baga, compared with that of the Potatoe, and reminds the public of my having written in disparagement of the latter, while I was in England. I then spoke of it as compared with wheat, as food for man; and, though I have been much abused for my opinions, I have never been answered. If Mr. Q. recollect what I wrote, let him answer it; if he do not, he will do well to let that matter rest. But, as food for cattle, what is the state of the case? Few men can raise three hundred bushels of potatoes upon an acre; Mr. Lewis says that he raised, last year, eight hundred of Ruta Baga upon three quarters of an acre. The Potatoe requires rich land, must be a much longer in the ground, than the Ruta Baga, costs ten times as much for seed, requires four times the expence in harrowing and ploughing, and is exposed to many risks which the Ruta Baga is not. But, the value; this is quality; the comparative quantities and quality; what are these? We men have our prejudices and our politics. We are apt to suffer our opinions on our subjects, to run and ask themselves with our opinions on other subjects. Let us, therefore, appeal to the ox and the hog, who besides being endowed with the best faculties for judging, have no interest in deciding contrary to truth. Let, then, any man take a good Russia Turnip, give it a chop with a spade, and toss it down along with a gallon of Potatoes before an ox, a hog, or a sheep, (it must be clean for a sheep,) and if the animal touches a Potatoe until he has eaten every morsel of the Russia Turnip, I will allow that the Potatoe is the best; but it will be what I have never seen, and what, I am convinced, no man living ever saw. I know that the same oxen are fatted in England wholly upon Russia Turnip; and, I have seen them starve upon Potatoes. A neighbour of mine attempted to fat upon Potatoes. He was obliged to desist. His cured lost flesh daily; and he resorted to the Russia Turnip. I take Duke of Richmond, (the best of good farmers;) made the trial with all possible care. His cured became poor, their legs swelled, and he was obliged to give up the attempt. In short, an ox cannot be fatted upon Potatoes, while it is nourished upon Russia Turnips; thousands are ready to swear to this. I can swear to it myself. I have fatted many a bullock upon Ruta Baga, without any hay, or corn, or grain, of any sort. Hogs will, rather than die with hunger, eat Potatoes; but, did any man ever see them thrive on that root, in its raw state? Cooked, hogs will thrive upon Potatoes; but, not upon Ruta Baga, which, if steamed, will make a good hog really fat and solid.

Mr. Q. talks as if I had demanded, that Ruta Baga was equal to Corn, bushel for bushel! What nonsense! No: I know well, that there is nothing equal to Corn, for cattle food, bushel for bushel; but, surely, I may believe, that a crop of Russia Turnips is better than a crop of Potatoes, bushel for bushel; but, surely, I may believe, that a crop of Russia Turnips is better than a crop of Potatoes, bushel for bushel; but, did any man ever see them thrive on that root, in its raw state? Cooked, hogs will thrive upon Potatoes; but, not upon Russia Turnips, which, if steamed, will make a good hog really fat and solid.

Government Office, Downing Street, Secretary of State.—Extract of a letter from Lisbon, dated 20th of March last.

"I have the honour to send you the news of the arrival of the Portuguese fleet from Rio Janeiro, we have received the extraordinary news (and quite official) that the Emperor of China, and the great part of his people, have become converts to christianity; which religion is henceforth to be considered as the established one in China, to the exclusion of all others! The vessel has on board two Portuguese missionaries, one a priest and the other a friar of the third order of St. Francis, who are bearers of rich presents, and also a letter written by his Chinese majesty to the pope, acknowledging his supremacy!

Nothing could exceed the rejoicings which took place at Rio Janeiro on this occasion. The city was illuminated three nights in succession, and their most faithful majesties, with every branch of the royal family, paid their respects to Monsignor Caleppi, the Archbishop of Demetria, Nuncio Apostolic to the Brazilian court.—The city of Pekin is described to be a Patriarchate of the Patriarch in a mitre, from Macao, of the order of St. Francis. Pekin has also its Bishop, and a Vicar Apostolic by direction of some Portuguese inquisition from Goa. The education of all classes is intended to be conducted by the Jesuits, as well as the high offices of state—The confidence of the emperor is a Portuguese jesuit, and is declared by law the most powerful in the empire! In the city of Pekin is erected a fine

Kingdom of Hayti.—The attempts at opening a correspondence with the King of Hayti have attracted some little attention towards that quarter, and some enquiry into the physical and political condition of a country which has, within five and twenty years, experienced such extraordinary vicissitudes. We have taken some trouble to inform ourselves on this head, by conversations with those who have had personal knowledge on the subject; and, presuming our readers generally may feel some disposition to acquire like information, we present in a condensed view, what we have been able to collect of the present state of the kingdom of Hayti, as prepareing itself to strangers.

On casting the eye over the map of St. Domingo, it will be perceived, that the Spaniards are still in possession of two thirds of the island which is represented by those who have travelled over it, as comprising the best and, being less mountainous, more interested with streams of fresh water, and, consequently, more susceptible of general cultivation, than the remaining portion, which is now divided, and forms two separate distinct governments, under the title and denomination of the republic of Hayti, and the kingdom of Hayti. Christophe, the king of Hayti, under the title of Henry the first, of whom we made a recent notice to speak, resides eight miles from Cape Henry—(formerly Cape Francois,) at the palace de Sans Souci; here he has a small, regular established; and here he holds his court; it is extremely difficult of access, and shy of foreigners. The village to which the palace de Sans Souci gives the name, is immediately under the guns of Fort Henry, commonly called Fort Picrriot, which, it has been stated by some, there are three hundred, and by others eight hundred, cannon mounted, with barracks for twenty thousand men, and seven years provision for that number always on hand. All this may or may not be true. But little of it, perhaps, ought to be credited, as a matter of fact in certain, that no white man has ever been permitted to visit his fortress; save only the engineer, a German, who superintended the building of it, and whose errand is to live and die there. Fort Henry has, nevertheless, a very bold appearance for one on the harbor, situated on a very high mountain, and overlooking, at that distance, to the defiance to the world.

As to Cape Henry, it presents to the spectator one heap of ruins; every third house may be occupied, but not more. The church which, during the time of the French, was the most splendid in the West-Indies, presents to view nothing but naked and uncovered walls, except that part over the altar which has been covered in. On each side of the altar is a tent of thin muslin and silk, occupied solely by the royal family during divine service. Near this church, the king has a palace, fronting on four streets, through neither of which the stranger is permitted to pass.

The building is very low, and has nothing in its exterior appearance different from ordinary houses.

Some two or three years ago, the king thought of changing the religion of his country; and communicated his wishes on that subject to his friends and correspondents in England, Clarkson, Wilberforce, and Stephens. This suggestion was not attended to on that side; but they sent him out Prince Saunders, a black man, an American, born in Connecticut, a Baptist preacher, and who went to England, soon after the war, for his health. He had the good luck to fall in with Wilberforce, Stevens, &c. immediately on his arrival in London, who, finding that he could both read and write, brought him forward at public meetings, and got a degree for him, and, when tired of this kind of exhibition, shipped him off to King Henry, giving him the title of chargé d'affaires. For a while, and until lately, Mr. Saunders remained a great favorite in his new situation; but his Majesty, finding that his talents had been overrated, as it is said, dismissed him, and Saunders has returned to his native haunts (Connecticut.)

But, to return to the Cape. The population it is impossible to ascertain, no census having been taken since the establishment of the present government. The citizens are respectful and attentive to strangers; but remain mostly in their houses, except when they are patently necessary. There is little or no stir in commerce, shewing better the general condition of the whole. He is, in fact, the great proprietor of all he claims every thing, and, heathen-like, and their productions; man and beast, their faith and services, all to him.

Christophe certainly deserves much credit for the perfection to which he has brought his monarchy; and it was no little disappointment to our informant, with fever had been a crowned head, to come away without seeing his subject. He had, however, the honor of seeing some of his ministers, decorated with certain marks of royal favor, particularly the order of St. Henry, and his supreme, they seemed to be fond of and looked as well, and as becoming, under those trappings of royalty, as any of the foreign ministers, whom he has created since the peace of that place, introduction, on a public day.

There is at the Cape, a Lancasterian School, containing one hundred and seventy-three scholars, admirably well conducted by Mr. Gulliver, from England. There is likewise an higher school, conducted by the Rev. Mr. Mosse, from England. In this school, the French and English Grammar are taught; and the branches of education as the higher branches of mathematics, are likewise intended to be taught there if it should be found, upon an experiment, that the mind of the Haytien assess epthine of so high a polish. There is no school for females. The hospital for the sick is spacious in an extensive building, and superintended by Doctor Steward from England, who is the hospital surgeon.

The king excites the desolate appearance of the Cape, by saying, that until he is acknowledged by France, he is liable to an attack from there, and that he could not prevent the capture of the Cape, and therefore he keeps his property and his money in the interior. He is said to be very rich. Among the number of anecdotes told at the Cape, respecting his majesty, is it following: Hearing that a colonel in a regiment stationed at the Cape, was endeavoring to excite a revolt, he came in from his palace in a gig, was found out, arrested, went up to the regiment, (which had been purposely ordered on parade) where he conversed with it for a short time, almost killed him, and dismissed the regiment.—He then mounted his horse which h immediately received from the Hanover. The latter flung out violently, springing from one side of the street to the other,—at which his majesty, with a grin or a sneer, put spurs to, and with his sword deliberately cut off all four of the heads of this famous charger; and then prohibited, under pain of death, that any one should attend him out of misery. This anecdote may be exaggerated by reverberation, but is not without foundation.

It is proper to observe, that strangers are never permitted to go to court, unless particularly invited, nor any others in the evening, except on the levee day, seat called in Hors du Cap, five miles from the Cape, which is graciously appropriated for the use of the harbor, situated on a very high mountain, and sweeping, at that distance, to the defiance to the world.

There are the most prominent particulars which have been collected of the kingdom of Hayti, and its principal town. At another time we shall furnish our readers such information as we have received, respecting the Republic of Hayti, more circumstantial and satisfactory than we have now given touching the Kingdom of Hayti.

Sleep Walking.—We learn from a gentleman who is conversant with the facts he relates, that there is a probability of the sleep-walk, projected at Sandwich, setting off within a few months. All the assets are taken, the equipment is making for her voyage to Liver; sir, and she will sail from Cowes in the month of October next. We understand that she is a new vessel; that her wheels will be on the water's edge; that, in the matter of air of captivating form, they are to be taken in, in the course of the entertainment; that her vessels and sails will be of the best quality; that in fact, every thing which can be suggested, will be adopted, for giving her the impulse of steam or wind, as may be required in the course of her voyage. Whether sailing as they may be found to be in danger, or in the way. The fine steam-boat which plies between Kingston, on Lake Ontario, and Lake Ontario, furnishes a case somewhat in point. It is well known, that in that inland sea, as it were, the navigation is dangerous, as was sufficiently proved by the frequent disasters which befel the vessels of the best construction; that they may be put up, or struck, by means of windlasses, in a very short time; and, in fact, that every thing which can be suggested, will be adopted, for giving her the impulse of steam or wind, as may be required in the course of her voyage. It was mentioned in a former paper, that a boy had been recovered of a fit of epilepsy, by applying, at the suggestion of a sailor, the inside of his shoe to his nostrils. A correspondent communicates, that on Monday evening a man was lying on the Barrow field road somewhere, with his eyes closed and his extremities cold, to all appearance dead, nor was animation, on observing the application of the shoe, which he had read a few days before, resumed the same experiment to be tried in this case, and with the most complete success.

Some little carriages are said to be getting into use in Germany, which run without horses. If the passengers in these carriages be supposed to move progressively, the invention is not a new one; it was exhibited in England 40 years since; but it must have been much improved, if what the Paris papers say be true, that one of these vehicles has gone from Dresden to Berlin, a distance of four leagues, in an hour and a quarter. They are called Draisiennes, from a Baron Dreise, of Charlsruhe, who claims the invention.

TOMB OF ROBERT BRUCE.

During the preparations that have been going on in the Parish church-yard of Dunfermline, towards the building of a new church, a tomb supposed to be that of the celebrated King, Robert Bruce, was the other day discovered.

There is yet no absolute certainty of the tomb being his, as inscription to that effect is not found. But every thing is much more circumstantial evidence to prove the supposition. The situation corresponding nearly with that of King Robert's sepulchre, pointed out by the two earliest Scottish historians, Barbour and Fordun, while the vast weight of the grave indicates it to have been one of a personage of no small distinction. There is a large trough, built of polished stone. In this trough, lies a large body, six feet two inches in length, cased in lead. The lead is pretty entire, except on the breast, where it is much consumed, exhibiting part of the skeleton of the body in a state of considerable preservation. The body itself had been wrapped in a damask cloth, extremely fine, and interwoven with gold, some fragments of which remain. Something like a crown has been observed upon the head, but from the hasty inspection that was made of it, this has not been accurately ascertained. A wooden coffin appears to have surrounded the body, of which some vestiges still exist. The mouldered dust seems covered to be oak, lies strewed on the bottom of the tomb, and one or two nails have been picked up. They are square. The grave is now close and secured from any violent depredations by three rows of flag stones, fastened to each other by iron bars, in which state it is to continue by the intention of the Barons of the Exchequer, as to further inquiries are learned.

Several fragments of marble, carved and gilt, were dug from the ruins, in the immediate neighborhood of the monument that had been erected over it. This tomb, along with the other royal monuments are all to be within the area of the new church, which will impart to this edifice a consequence and fame of which no similar building in Scotland can boast.

THE COLONIAL SYSTEM.

To the Editor of the Greenock Advertiser.

"There (the Romish) idolatry was superstition obliterated, and they inevitably enslaved into one great nation, united by language, manners, and civil institutions, and equal to the weight of a powerful empire. The Republic glorified in her greatness (Colonial) policy, and was frequently rewarded by the merit and service of her adopted sons"—Gregory, vol. 1, p. 56.

When we reflect upon the causes of the American war—how puerile and absurd they were, and how completely fallacious was the idea, that the interest of the colonies and mother country were not the same; and for an instant remember the years of 1764 and 1774, did that if early circumstances were now to occur, not one drop of human blood would be spilled, or a penny expended—but they become beholden of the truth of past records; it is singularly fortunate, that we look forward to a connexion of the interests of both, and derive hope, joy, and satisfaction, from a contemplation of what is.

In his Majesty's North American dominions, there is now rising a spirit of pecuniary independence, whose shall spring a population of the most productive kind, well calculated to prevent for ever the intensely write the swellings, and promote the efforts of both countries.

Some time since, a voluntary offer was made by the Canadian Legislature to pay the expences of the government. Lord Bathurst has the credit of declining instructions his Majesty's representative would under this head accept, with the effect formerly made. An assent has been given to the measure, and it shall not be denied in such a manner as to irritate the highest honor on the inhabitants. It is certainly possible, that even the expences of the Legislature, but has determined to defray an annual sum of £20,000 to the formation of roads, and public works.

Boastful as are the Americans, and proud as they are of their democratic republic, of their system, of their Congress, of their governments, of their Canada have advanced further in one year, in the career of public improvement, than have the supreme government of the United States, for fifteen consecutive legislatures, since the year 1776. They have expended little short of one million sterling on canals and a canal, and, unlimiting that resources could give consequence,

"Is Fog, what was Gosecreek once,
Is Thoroughfare now."

They have forgotten, that however splendid their public buildings, their splendour stand either not be visible, or in it must visibly diminished, by their pecuniary to open a road, or throw an arch, by which a traveller could repose in them in safety. There we only discover

"Gaping wounds, unsightly clothes in rags."

Indeed, such is the spirit of public aggrandizement of which all these legislatures are possessed, that they never had the good sense to pay for a necessary survey of the country; and, last year, it was with great difficulty that the legislature of Virginia could be persuaded to vote 30,000 dollars for a map of the state. The ratio of actual wealth is, perhaps, thirty to one in the U. States and the Canadas.

But, although there is a decided difference as to actual wealth, the inhabitants of Canada are great. Some of them may be learned by a perusal of the following extract from the National Intelligencer. It was written during the late war; and its object was to induce the people of the United States to persevere in the war until they obtained possession of both shores of the St. Lawrence.

"From natural causes, perhaps no single position in the known world so effectually guards the only entrance into the sea to a country of equal extent, as does Quebec the whole country drained by the St. Lawrence.—Whilst from similar causes there is probably no one point in any country at which the resources of all its parts may be so easily and speedily concentrated. And when the distances to the various quarters whence they may be so collected are considered, there is nothing of the kind in any country to bear a comparison. We are informed by a correspondent, whose means of information are abundant, and intelligence sound, recently acquainted, that some few improvements of trifling magnitude and no difficulty in French Creek, and the entrance of Presque, the Bay, are almost necessary to the transportation of almost any quantity (say a thousand tons) from the river Ohio at Pittsburgh, to any point on the St. Lawrence, in twenty-five days, at one dollar or less per hundred weight. At Pittsburgh, supplies are abundant and various, at the lowest rates; flour, for instance, at three to four dollars per barrel, and generally settled to the perfect of his purpose, he ordered a peluse of the same workmanship and materials. The superb ornament started like the web of Arachne from the fingers of the plaintiff's journeymen, and on the Monday week following, the apprentice issued from the Horseshoe Barracks, the envy and admiration of his booted brethren. His collar was of noble fur. 'Get me a suit of sables,' cried he, mimicking the manner of the duke of Denmark; but when he would have added, "the Devil wears black," the Demon of Darkness stuck in his throat. My Lords, you are (and long may you continue to be) clad in the robes of office, and you know what fur is. When you reflect that the purest lase was of extra-superfine French brown; that beads of braids were buttoned on the bosom, with a fork or dirk behind; that the side seams were finely and fully figured; that the tassels were tambowed; and that frogs, pendiculous as those of Pantoon, overlooped the defendant from chitterlin to chine, you will not, I am sure, elevate your eye-brows with extra astonishment, when you learn that the price demanded was £17,14s. 6d. The plaintiff was persuasive—the defendant was flustered; but cash not being forthcoming, the plaintiff drew a bill of exchange for the amount, which the latter accepted, payable at Messrs Child and company's, Temple-bar. The bill was presented when due, and was noted for non-payment. God forbid that I should inquire any blame to Messrs. Child and Company.

Their answer was "No effects;" and after assidious inquiry I find, that when a man has no money in a banker's hands, such banker is not bound to pay his drafts. This, my Lords, the defendant must have known. His acceptance, therefore, was a mockery of the laces merchant; it was nothing but the baron of horseless; it was thrusting the red-hot poker of pertness into the already blazing conflagration of my client's private woes. Even now the plaintiff had thrown away the scabbard, and the plaintiff drew the sword. He sued out a writ, in the name of George the Third, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. A declaration was filed, containing the enclosing counts for goods sold and delivered, and for work and labour, with a notice to plead in eight days.—Even now the plaintiff did more than by legal courtesy he was bound to perform.—He demanded a plea—how primitive the process! otherwise judgement—how awful the alternative!

"This was contemptuously contemned; it was treated as Brutus Fulanus, the plaintiff, my lord, was no mimic Jove, bantering and blustering from a bulging of brass; Scipio, and not Balmoneus, was the antagonist whom the defendant was to cope with. The bolt was hurled, and interlocutory judgment was signed for want of a plea. At this stage of the proceedings, the plaintiff's Attorney put into my inexperienced hands an affidavit of the cause of action. The motion he wished me to submit to your Lordships, was novel and ardeous. Seasonable silk, and Pansies in Prunella, would have shrunk from its experiment. But, full of my client's wrongs, and re-lining his the Sybil with my subject, even so humble an instrument now ventures to move your Lordships—that it may be referred to the Master to compute principle and interest on the Bill of Exchange upon which this action is brought!!!

Interesting to Bank Institutions.

Among the novel and ingenious means suggested for suppressing the difficulties of forgery in the case of Bank of England Notes, is an invention which has been recently submitted to the consideration of the Bank Directors. The method is, to introduce by a chemical process, into the substance of the notes, and during the manufacture of the paper, a small portion of a peculiar liquid gold, which shall have the appearance of what is termed artist's dead mat gold; and which may be made to represent a variety of small numerical figures corresponding with the respective value of the several notes in which may be inserted. The figures it is maintained, cannot be imitated, except by those who are possessed of the inventor's secret mode of chemical preparation, and of the various mechanical apparatus by which his processes are effected on, and the disposition it appears, is so large, required to be worked by a steam engine, that counterfeits of such a fabric could not be produced, or under the ground system in concealment or a corner, when the exigence of the proposition is so small, though the most precious metals employed in it, that, it is asserted, not to add more than two pence to the cost of the manufactory of a note, if the note be marked only with a single figure. Were such a plan adopted and to correspond with its pretentions, it would enable the public to form their judgement of a note, not as now, by poring over water marks, and puzzling graphic lines, but by a single glance at a conspicuous and striking character, which the most illiterate might quickly learn to read and understand.

The art of Printing in Gold, which has been practiced at different periods and with various degrees of success, has lately been revived in a more perfect & beautiful manner than any other which has already appeared. It is scarcely possible to convey to those who have not witnessed its effect, the splendid character which this invention displays. M. Didot, of Paris, and Mr. Whittaker, of London, have produced some of the specimens of this art. Some specimens of golden printing, in a work consisting of coloured plates of Pheasants, was lately published in France, where the name of each species, & the yellow tints on the feathers, were printed from the copper plate in gold ink.—London Paper.

MANGANESE.

This useful mineral, has recently been discovered on Big Sandy river, in the vicinity of Greensburgh, Ky. where it is said to exist in great abundance, and judging from the external character, of a quality no way inferior to that of foreign production.

Manganese is a heavy, black, metallic substance, resembling in the more perfect specimens pot metal, and soiling the fingers like soot. It is employed in the arts by the bleacher, potter, and glassmaker, and for the purpose of experiment in the laboratory of the chemist. By the bleacher it is used in the preparation of the oxymuriatic acid, according to the method of bleaching now universally pursued. By the Potter it is employed in communicating a black glazing to the common ware. By the glassmaker for depriving vitreous mixtures of the green hue given by iron, and occasionally as an meagre colour togetherness; and by the chemist for procuring oxygen gas, which substance it yields in great abundance. Its importance as an item in the catalogue of useful minerals afforded by the United States is therefore considerable; and it may be regarded as an advantageous discovery in a country which has hitherto been supplied with this article, exclusively by Great Britain, imported either directly from the Island of Britain or from her depredecies in Nova Scotia.

CHEAP TRAVELLING.

In the principal towns upon the sea coast and rivers in British, we understand there are many Steam Boats always kept for the purpose of freighting or hiring out. These Steam-Boats are vessels of one hundred tons: & are freighted for £30 sterling per week, or £5 per day. When it is considered that these boats easily accommodate 100 Passengers, it will appear that a person may travelled a hundred miles per day, for the trifle of one shilling.

APPARITION.

"Some time since, a voluntary offer was made by the Canadian Legislature to pay the expences of the government. Lord Bathurst has the credit of declining instructions his Majesty's representative would under this head accept, with the effect formerly made. An assent has been given to the measure, and it shall not be denied in such a manner as to irritate the highest honor on the inhabitants. It is certainly possible, that even the expences of the Legislature, but has determined to defray an annual sum of £20,000 to the formation of roads, and public works.

Boastful as are the Americans, and proud as they are of their democratic republic, of their system, of their Congress, of their governments, of their Canada have advanced further in one year, in the career of public improvement, than have the supreme government of the United States, for fifteen consecutive legislatures, since the year 1776. They have expended little short of one million sterling on canals and a canal, and, unlimiting that resources could give consequence,

"Is Fog, what was Gosecreek once,
Is Thoroughfare now."

They have forgotten, that however splendid their public buildings, their splendour stand either not be visible, or in it must visibly diminished, by their pecuniary to open a road, or throw an arch, by which a traveller could repose in them in safety. There we only discover

"Gaping wounds, unsightly clothes in rags."

Indeed, such is the spirit of public

COUNSELLOR O'GARNISH.

We take shame to ourselves for not having sooner noticed the very able Address to the Court of King's Bench during the last Term of a Barrister from the sister kingdom, in the cause Sharp against Sabretach. The following is, we believe, a pretty correct report of it:—

"When I look around me, and above and below, and diadly pander over the tide of time, which, rolling through the elevated edifice, sweeps the mighty and the mean to one common bourne, whence as the poet of nature informs us, no traveller returns—when I reflect that the Court which I now address, may perhaps the very segment of the next new occupy, was heretofore enlightened by that Aurora Borealis of legal effulgence, which formed a halo on the brows of a Dunning and a Mansfield, I feel rooted with terror to the ground, and paralyzed in my lower extremities like the marble-thighed Monarch in the Arabian Tales. Would to heaven that the red-haired Founder of this venerable Hall had smuggled Tyrtle's dart from his own bosom, and plunged it into mine, ere I had essayed this office! But the different species of our existance clinch the nail:—My Lords, my client, the plaintiff, is of the useful class of beings (some of whom were horror-struck supposed to constitute a man) who grew broad cloth to the back—serge to the shoulder-blades to the body—thickset to the thigh! His manners are as modest—his conduct is creditable—his shop is skewy—and his residence is Ratcliffe. The defendant is an Officer of Dragoons, recently drawn from the purlieus of pall-mall and quartered at Hounslow. Luckily for him the days of drawing and quartering are over, or wrongs like my client's might justify corporeal partition. If might be serviceable, it might be design, which caused Captain Sabretach on a visit at the Wapping Docks, to honour over Ratcliffe Highway. Attracted by these words, "Serge, Tailor and Habit maker," he halts at the plaintiff's door. An elegant prelate, with arms extended, hung swinging on the door post—he entered the shop, and with a bloodlament with other articles in proportion, and in almost inexhaustible quantities—From the extensive and populous countries on both shores of Lake Ontario, we are informed a similar quantity may be transported in ten days at a third of a dollar per cwt.—but the first cost, though moderate, something higher than at Pittsburgh. From the North river, where may be collected more than one third of the produce of the United States, transportation to the St Lawrence may be had for 50 cents per cwt. and the route performed in from five to ten days.

Much information may also be obtained in a letter from General Washington, which will be found in the fifth volume of his life, by Marshall.

In Mr. Birkbeck's recently published notes, we shall find that it is probable a connexion will be formed between Europe where he has settled, and Lake Erie, by means of the Wabash.—This, in addition to the new impetus, was said to be necessary in the above account, will be a very valuable channel for commerce. Further, it has been said, that the survey upon which Capt. Owen is now employed, will prove the mouth of the Assertion; that with the expenditure of no very large sum of money, a sloop communication may be effected by means of the waters at the head of the Bay of Quinte, between the Lakes Ontario and Huron; thus, rendering the merchant to avoid the expence of unloading his ship, in order to pass it by the celebrated falls of Niagara.

When we reflect on all these circumstances, it is impossible not to be thankful for the spirit of colonial independence, and at the same moment, that of moral and political dependence on the mother country, now rising in North America. It opens the finest prospectives, and all we would say to our Canadian fellow subjects, is "Go on and prosper;" concluding in the words of Talleyrand,

"It is from a previous knowledge of reciprocal interest, strengthened by the powerful ties of a common origin; that the establishment (of colonies) ought to be formed, and, on the strength of such interest that we must reckon for the advantages to be derived. At a great distance every other principle must become illusory; or, it is more expensive than productive. Hence, there should be no domination, no monopoly—always the force which protects—never that which oppresses—justice, kind offices; these are the true calculations for States as well as individuals; these are the true sources of reciprocal prosperity.

"In short, experience and reason unite in the rejection of those pernicious doctrines, which suppose a less advanced there has been made a gain.

"The true principles of commerce are directly opposed to these prejudices.

"2. They produce to all people mutual advantages, and they incite them naturally to enrich themselves by the exchange of their productions, by liberal and agreeable communications and by the useful arts of peace."

VALUABLE LANDS
FOR SALE.

THE following Lands, singularly desirable, and truly valuable Lands may be had, and immediate possession given, with undeniable titles, at rates far below their real value; and it is but seldom, even in a country so extensive as Canada, where uncultivated Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, in good neighbourhoods, can be secured.

Comprising 70 Acres of the very richest Beech, Maple, Elm and Oak Land, in the 4th Concession of Home, lying upon Smith's Creek, with 15 acres cleared and fenced, new log house, well built and dove-tailed, frame barn, &c. with a well-never failing, and 2 miles from the flourishing little Town of Bronte, on Lake Ontario, where there is an excellent market either for buying or selling. There are about 50 acres cleared and fenced, with a fine stream of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

The Land is good and well timbered, and the situation singularly beautiful and romantic, with wooded islands in front.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—May 26.

LOTTERIES.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved the third reading of the Lottery Bill.

Mr. Littleton said, that undeterred by the result of former discussions, he should not allow that last opportunity to pass without renewing his opposition to a bill that went to continue this great national nuisance. The bill had been but printed that day, & though some improvement was made in its provisions, his opinion on its being immoral, & impolitic in its principle, remained unchanged. It was a most shabby & dishonorable plan for cheating the people out of their money. The more he considered the subject, the more irreconcilable he felt it to account for the determination of the Right Honorable the Chancellor of the Exchequer, to persevere in a system public in crime, at the very moment that he professed himself the earnest friend to the dissemination of knowledge—the diffusion of the Scriptures—the building of Churches—& the extension of Saving Banks—(Hear, Hear!) He (Mr. Littleton) would persevere to oppose such an immoral source of revenue as long as he had a seat in Parliament.——(Hear, hear!) He therefore felt it his duty to move an amendment, that the bill be read a third time that day three months.

Mr. Parnell said, that nothing gave him greater pain than his observing, since the short time he sat in that House, how frequently great questions of justice & morality were decided in opposition. But the present sacrifice was of a more degraded character, as it surpassed, he said, every thing that he had seen in profit—a paltry profit of £230,000. He felt himself justly at a loss to understand the motives of the right honorable the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in persevering in a measure on which the whole of the country was opposed unanimously deserted him. He could not help thinking, though he hoped there was little probability of the country being deprived by death of his services, that it would be an appropriate epitaph to record on his tomb—

"Here
The Right Honorable Nicholas Vansittart,
Once Chancellor of the Exchequer;
The Patron of Bible Societies;
The Father of Saving Banks;
And a Friend to the Education of the Poor;
An Encourager of Saving Banks;
And a Supporter of Lotteries!!"

(Loud laughter.)

Mr. Moreland called upon ministers to recollect when they deprecated any interference with the resources of revenue, but they were tampering with the moral principles of the people.

Mr. Lockhart asked the house to reconcile, if it could, the enactment of capital punishment, at the same time that it invited, by legislative sanction, the lower orders of the people to those punishments that led directly to the commission of crime.——(Hear, hear!)

Mr. Alderman Wood spoke against the illegal practices of persons who took insurance on the 1s. ticket, which could not exist, if every was not established by law. did obtain upon the impracticable ground Lottery Office Keepers. He had himself once served an office of the first description, kept in New-gate-street, by a person leading to ride of the Long-Room of the Custom, who, if it was manifest, from their books, that the insurers, were Clerks in Banking-houses, & in the Custom-house. Such a fact as this, he trusted, would have its influence in getting rid of the source of the evil.

M. Lyttleton said, he should not allow the panegyric of the worthy alderman in point which has also existed in the opinions of the Licensed Lottery Office Keepers. Next to the right honorable gentleman, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, he considered himself the chief sufferers of crimes, but with this difference, that they had the pretext of a miserable temptation, & a general feeling, he feared in the degree next to hungmen & informers. (Hear, hear!)—They were a magnificent body indeed, & classed with one of the degree next to hungmen & informers. (Hear, hear!)—They were a magnificent body indeed, & classed with Custom-house officers. On a calculation that, with some industry, & bad made, his conclusion was, that the odds against the insurance of a adventurer were, on the small prizes as 4 1-2 to 1, on the highest prizes as 2000 to 1.

The House then divided.

Dissenting Clergy in Ireland.

Mr. Forbes, after expatiating at considerable length on the inconveniences suffered by the Clergy in Ireland, out of the Established Church, & more especially the Catholic Clergy, for want of sufficient residences, & representing the great & activity with which, notwithstanding all obstacles, they persevered in the discharge of their sacred duties, moved for leave to bring in a bill to enable Protestants in Ireland, to provide residences for Dissenting Clergymen.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer thought the measure so full of difficulties that it could not be eventually adopted.

After a short discussion, in which Sir J. Newport, Mr. Webber, Mr. Lockhart, &c. participated; Mr. Parnell, at the suggestion of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, substituted a motion for leave to bring in a bill to enable persons in Ireland dissenting from the Established Church, to provide residences for their respective Ministers, by voluntary subscription, which was agreed to.——Leave was also given to bring in the bill, which was read a first time.

May 28.—SLAVE TRADE.

On the third reading of the Portugal Slave Trade Treaty, Dr. Phillimore argued that there was no necessity for any such enactment as that which the bill contained, to enable the ships of the King's Navy to seize Portuguese ships engaged in the Slave Trade under certain circumstances. The King being the representative of the sovereign power of the nation in all transactions with foreign states, it was perfectly competent for him to give orders for the capture of these ships of foreign nations which should be found engaged, & should be forfeited. He instanced the case of an embargo, which might not happen in the end of war, in which he contended that an Act of Parliament was necessary to indemnify the captors against the consequences of being sued in an action for being superfluous, was therefore mischievous in a constitutional point of view, as it interfered with the executive, & might be drawn into precedent. He should, therefore, after the third reading, move that it be omitted. There was another circumstance that he observing, since the short time he sat in that House, how frequently great questions of justice & morality were decided in opposition. But the present sacrifice was of a more degraded character, as it surpassed, he said, every thing that he had seen in profit—a paltry profit of £230,000. He felt himself justly at a loss to understand the motives of the right honorable the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in persevering in a measure on which the whole of the country deserted administration deserted him. He could not help thinking, though he hoped there was little probability of the country being deprived by death of his services, that it would be an appropriate epitaph to record on his tomb——

Mr. Moreland called upon ministers to recollect when they deprecated any interference with the resources of revenue, but they were tampering with the moral principles of the people.

Mr. Lockhart asked the house to reconcile, if it could, the enactment of capital punishment, at the same time that it invited, by legislative sanction, the lower orders of the people to those punishments that led directly to the commission of crime.——(Hear, hear!)

Mr. Alderman Wood spoke against the illegal practices of persons who took insurance on the 1s. ticket, which could not exist, if every was not established by law. did obtain upon the impracticable ground Lottery Office Keepers. He had himself once served an office of the first description, kept in New-gate-street, by a person leading to ride of the Long-Room of the Customs, who, if it was manifest, from their books, that the insurers, were Clerks in Banking-houses, & in the Custom-house. Such a fact as this, he trusted, would have its influence in getting rid of the source of the evil.

M. Lyttleton said, he should not allow the panegyric of the worthy alderman in point which has also existed in the opinions of the Licensed Lottery Office Keepers. Next to the right honorable gentleman, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, he considered himself the chief sufferers of crimes, but with this difference, that they had the pretext of a miserable temptation, & a general feeling, he feared in the degree next to hungmen & informers. (Hear, hear!)—They were a magnificent body indeed, & classed with Custom-house officers. On a calculation that, with some industry, & bad made, his conclusion was, that the odds against the insurance of a adventurer were, on the small prizes as 4 1-2 to 1, on the highest prizes as 2000 to 1.

The House then divided.

Dissenting Clergy in Ireland.

Mr. Forbes, after expatiating at considerable length on the inconveniences suffered by the Clergy in Ireland, out of the Established Church, & more especially the Catholic Clergy, for want of sufficient residences, & representing the great & activity with which, notwithstanding all obstacles, they persevered in the discharge of their sacred duties, moved for leave to bring in a bill to enable Protestants in Ireland, to provide residences for Dissenting Clergymen.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer thought the measure so full of difficulties that it could not be eventually adopted.

It therefore occurred to Mr. S. that the waters of the surface must have been of the saline particles than the waters of the bottom. He accordingly went over from the surface to the anchorage off Fort William, & found it to be 1008-2 at the depth of 9 fathoms, 1025-3 at the depth of 30 fathoms, & the general parts of the Loch, it was 1027-2 indicating the greater specific gravity, & consequently more of the saline parts, as the depth of the water is increased.

PARIS June 1.

We cannot let the opportunity pass without observing how wonderfully the credit of France has augmented, and how completely it is supported by the present government.

The loan subscribed for the loan of 16 millions, amounts to more than two times the sum wanted!!! They amount to above 2 milliards in capital, & 160 millions of rents.

Industry of every sort will immediately feel the effects of this confidence, and we may fairly anticipate a flourishing state for France.

The Duke of Wellington is not arrived at Paris, as was stated, but is expected in a few days.

All over Francethe prospects of plenty are greater than they have been for many years.

A terrible fire has almost entirely consumed the city of Crestsbourg, in eastern Prussia.

The late fire at Copenhagen, of which we gave an account at the time, lay laid several days amongst the ashes, and was not extinguished but by great exertions, animated by the king in person, all damage was prevented.

We have from Vienna of the 16th of May, that 1 loan of 50 millions of florins is just contracted for by the Austrian government. Messrs. Baring, Hope, & Co. Amsterdam, Messrs. Bethman, Parish and Geymuller, are the contractors; 5 per cent at 70 the term. The paper money risen in public credit.

Several wine merchants in Paris have been fined by the Tribune of Justice of that city, for adulterating wine, and materials for adultveration.—Besides the fine, the wines have been ordered to be spilt in the street.

CHARLESTON, July 10.

We continue to receive the most distressing accounts of the great drought which prevades, throughout this and the adjoining states. The Rice plantations are nearly one half destroyed, & great part of every description perishing for the want of rain. The Cotton crops are in our low country are entirely ruined, and it is with great difficulty that a sufficient quantity is procured upon the most extensive plantations, to relieve the cattle which wander in searchof it.

In all the upper sections of the state of Georgia, out of drop of rain has fallen from the heavens for 30 days, and the dews were so light and moderate as to afford no relief to the parched herbage or to the plants.

The high price of cotton during the last year, notwanpplied us to increase the cultivation of so lucrative a crop—and farmers were enticed that even with the best of seasons the grain harvest would have fallen far short of the demand for home use & consumption. It is painful to contemplate the distresses to which our unfortunate neighbors in the upper country, reduce many poor but industrious families, who, with but scanty resources, will be compelled to pay the most exorbitant prices for the simplest & most indispensable necessaries of life.

New-York Canal.——The following letter contains the most accurate and satisfactory account of the present state of this stupendous work; that we have lately seen published.

"CANADAGUA, 24th June, 1818.

"Dear Sir—I have just come home from the canal line, on which, before I left it, contracts were executed for the construction of the Canal, so far as relates to grubbing and clearing, excavation and embankment, to within a mile & a half of Oswego outlet.

"There now remains, of the 40 miles, but about seven miles of which, between Utica and the Seneca river; & there is more than 83 miles under contract.

"The disposition to engage in the undertaking seems to become more lively as the work advances. Many contracts of the eastern line have taken place, of other ones, of various description, within about a fortnight, the last week of which there were 8 contracts, upon terms, as for the state, as can be desired.

"With the exception of a few embankments, where a good work of stone must be made before they can be completed, a great many contracts remain to be fully performed by the 10th of December. West of the last contract, the Canal line is now under examination by the Engineers, & we may expect to receive sectional maps and profiles of the route to the Seneca river, within about a fortnight, the whole of which I do not in the mean time let out part of it, there is not the least doubt but that it will be all immediately taken up.

"Though my last passage along the Canal line was rainy and unpleasant, I was much gratified to observe the hands by the contractors, from miles to miles that I took, & appears the aggregate number of men employed to be upwards of a thousand, and of cattle and horses not far from five hundred. The weather is now fine, and the number of hands will without doubt, been increased, independently of those who are working at the jobs last taken."

From the Ontario Repository, of June 30.

At a quarter of seven o'clock yesterday, held in and for the county of Ontario commencing on the 10th inst and ending on the fifth inst. in which his hon. chief justice Thompson presided.

Philetus Eggleston was convicted of passing counterfeit bank notes, and sentenced to imprisonment in the state prison for 4 years.

The case of Eggleston was, we presume novel in our courts. A brief statement of the facts as they appeared in evidence on the trial, may be perhaps to the public. From our recollection of the testimony, the prominent features of it were these: Eggleston was in the possession of a number of the bank of Niagara, which had been altered from 1 dollar to 10; these while in his possession he had exhibited it, and was informed that it had been so altered; that Eggleston with this advice that the note was not genuine, passed it as a genuine, 10 dollar note. And although he, stated in evidence, on the part of the prisoner, that at the time of passing the note, he informed the person to whom he passed it that its genuineness had been disputed and that if it should prove to be bad he would take it back; yet the hon. the chief justice charged the jury, that if they were of opinion that Eggleston had sufficient information that the note was counterfeit to put him upon his guard against passing it as genuine, and that he did pass it as genuine having good reason to believe it was bad, he was warranted in presuming a felonious intent. The jury upon this testimony, under the charge of the court, after about twenty minutes absence, returned a verdict of guilty.

We have been induced to give the public this short history of Eggleston's case, from a conviction that his conduct in passing the note, for which a jury of his country have found him guilty, is parallel to that of too many in the community, who finding themselves in the possession of counterfeit money, for which they have paid full and honorable consideration, take the first opportunity to pass it off, and that without so much as asking the receiver that suspicion have lit up it. This playing "Robin's as-liver" with bad money, is often and dangerously practised by those who would ridicule all the idea of being engaged in putting into circulation spurious paper, without reflecting that by continuing the circulation of such paper they become a nuisance to community equally great.—The duty of every man, who finds himself to the possession of money which he has reason to suspect counterfeit, is obviously to suppress its circulation at once, and this fate of Eggleston will shew the danger to such as do otherwise.

It is said, that if a hole is dug round the root of peach and plum trees, which are threatened by the insects, and common wood ashes deposited therein, and the hole covered with earth, that it will prevent the destruction of the trees.—

The Utica Gazette in speaking of the grand canal says, "It is calculated that this excavation (of this section from Utica to Seneca river, 85 miles) will be completed, and much will be done towards the construction of the necessary embankments, culverts, locks, &c. by the 10th December next.

At Lisbon, Ohio on the 28th of May, Mr. Robert Coash, who had been travelling in the field with two horses, perceived a thunder storm rising, and unhitched his horses, mounted one and drove the other intending to find a place for shelter—had not proceeded far when an old tree fell and instantly killed the horse, and, grasped and rolled him under it. The other horse proceeded home alone; this alarmed Mrs. Coasha, who went back to look for her husband and found him in extreme misery with the tree lying on his back. She could not relieve him, and had to get aid about 3 miles for assistance. After he was taken from under the tree he lived but two hours.

The Washington 74 is the first line of battle ship, belonging to the United States, that has entered our port. From some cause, a prejudice has created against this port, in relation to its advantages for the first rate ships, which this circumstance must do away. It has been computed, that sufficient depth of water did not exist for a 74; and this belief arose from the grounding of the frigate President. It is proper therefore, to state that the Washington came up at half tide, when there were 27 1-2 feet water, and was brought in by one of the youngest pilots of the port.—Nat. Adv.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, June 9.

At half past one o'clock the Speaker took the Chair.

A Message from the Lords [illegible]

Mr. Goulburn presented Copies of Colonial Correspondence, which were ordered to lie on the Table, and to be printed.

SLAVE TRADE.

Mr. Wilberforce stated, that he had received information from sources on which he could rely, that the Slave Trade was greatly carried on, to a great extent, in the French colonies, on the North-west coast of Africa, and more especially on the greatest nation were committed. Murders were perpetrated by wholesale, and he hoped that this House would resort to us in the necessity of adopting measures for the prevention of a revival of this abominable trade. One great point was to ascertain, as far as possible upon the mere statements on the case. He therefore moved, that an Address be presented to His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, praying, that he would be graciously pleased to order that Copies of any communications received by the Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, relating to the carrying on the Slave Trade on the North West Coast of Africa, be laid before the House.

Lord Castlereagh was not surprised at the vigilance of the hon. member on this interesting subject; but felt pleasure in assuring him, that the French government manifested every disposition to put an end, on its part, to this great practice. He was, however, aware that there were difficulties which must necessarily intervene to prevent the immediate execution of a trade of that species, since we had been obliged, even in this country, to encounter many obstacles which were opposed to the abolition of the trade; so much property was involved.—The difficulty was greater on the part of the French government as the colony had not long been in their possession. In the French colonies, however, the last session, a law for this purpose was passed by the unanimous suffrage of the legislature, by a majority of two-thirds of the members. He was apprehensive of some practical difficulties occurring in the execution of the law; but he thought it was not so great as rendered it void. He, therefore, trusted that the hon. party would prove of no utility during the remaining part of the present session, that the withdrawing of the motion would be productive of the same beneficial results.

Mr. Wilberforce assented; but wished to assent to another power, which, although every means were used to suppress it, continued to increase, and continued as yet to follow it—He meant Portugal. He trusted that the government of this country would persevere in their efforts in order to the abolition of the slave trade and he hoped that difficulty would be overcome with success.

Lord Castlereagh stated, that there was another circumstance, connected with the abolition of this trade, by the French government, to which he requested the attention of the hon. Member. A governor of one of the colonies had been appointed, to answer the purpose of carrying into execution the measure for the slave trade, and another was appointed by his consent. With regard to Portugal, he concurred with his hon. friend, in hoping, that this practice was the only one in the world, which continued this traffic would be inclined to abandon it if there by reason to suppose that the attention was threatened on its character. The motion was then withdrawn.

Soon after two o'clock, the Usher of the Black Rod resigned the attendance of the House to the House of Peers. The Speaker, and about 60 members, accordingly attended.

On their return, they assembled round the table, and a conversation took place between the Speaker and Thomas Tyrwhitt, Esq. the former having been to read the Speech delivered by his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, to which he had not any objected, observing that it was proper in this ceremonial to hear it, and as he that as Parliament has been dissolved, it might not be heard.

To this observation Mr. Manners Sutton expressed his assent, and the gentlemen immediately withdrew.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Wednesday, June 10.

PROROGATION & DISSOLUTION OF PARLIAMENT.

This being the day on which it was expected the Prince Regent would in person prorogue the Parliament, a great concourse of persons assembled together to behold the procession without, and admission to the gallery of the House within. The space, crowded the streets from Charing-cross to the Palace of Parliament, and the avenues to which, before one o'clock, were rendered entirely impassable, while the seats appropriated to the members of both Houses were filled with persons of the highest rank.

At one o'clock the Prince Regent left Carlton House, attended by the Great Officers and Ministers of State; the foreign Ambassadors and various other persons of distinction of the Court, entered the House, and took his seat on the Throne. The Usher of the Black Rod, was then sent to the Commons, requiring the attendance of that House forthwith at the Bar.

Soon after the Gentleman, with the Speaker at their head, presented themselves at the entrance of the House, when the Speaker addressed his Royal Highness in the words following:

May it please Your Royal Highness—We the Majesty's faithful Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, attend your Royal Highness with our last Bill of Supply.

In obedience to your Royal Highness's recommendation, we have not failed to carry our estimates and estimated amounted to the state of the public, lastly and expended expenditure, so as unquestionably the weight and pressure will remain on our finances, as much as the satisfaction to observe, that the revenue is to such important branches is gradually and progressively improving.

Among the various duties Sir, in which we have been engaged, since the close of the last session, we could have devoted upon us, more interesting to itself or more important to the country, than the arrangement and safeguard securities of all classes of his Majesty's subjects, than the duty of adopting the necessary measures for the future disposal of those engagements, which your Royal Highness was graciously pleased to communicate to us, as having been concluded with the courts of Spain and Portugal, on the subject of the Slave Trade.

Nor, Sir, have we been less attentive to another subject of great public importance, earnestly recommended by your Royal Highness to our early and particular consideration—the distillery which has so long existed in the number of objects of Public Worship belonging to the Established Church. To the remedy of this defect, we have most readily afforded large and liberal assistance, well convinced that the first and dearest interests of this country, its truest happiness, its soundest prosperity, its surest independence, its proudest and most enduring national glory are all involved and blended in the purity and inseparably in the religious and moral habits of its people.

The Bill, Sir, which it is our duty humbly to present to your Royal Highness is entitled, "An Act for applying certain monies therein mentioned for the service of the year one thousand eight hundred and eighteen," to which we humbly request your Royal Highness's Royal Assent.

To the above of the speech, the Speaker presented the Appropriation Bill, as having passed the Commons, and he ordered to be receiving the Royal Assent.

The Prince Regent then gave the Royal Assent to the Appropriation Bill, and to the Supplementary Aliens, the Slave Trade Abolition Act amendment, the Irish Tithes Act, the Prize Act, and several private Bills, and then addressed the Commons in the following Speech:—

My Lords and Gentlemen.

It is with the deepest regret that I am again under the necessity of announcing to you, that no alteration has occurred in the state of his Majesty's lamented indisposition.

I continue to receive from foreign Powers the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition towards this country, and of their desire to maintain the general tranquility.

I am fully sensible of the exertion which you have paid to the many important objects which have been brought before you.

I derive peculiar satisfaction from the measure which you have adopted, in pursuance to my recommendation, for augmenting the number of places of public worship belonging to the Established Church; and I trust that the effect of this measure will be productive of the most beneficial effects, in the religious and moral habits of the people.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons.

I thank you for the supplies which you have granted to me for the service of the present year; and I highly approve of the steps you have taken with a view to the reduction of the Unfunded Debt.

I am happy to be able to inform you that the Revenue is in a state of continued improvement.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

On closing this Session, I think it proper to inform you that it is my intention forthwith to dissolve this present Parliament, and to call a new Parliament. In making this communication, I am induced to be influenced by the important changes which has occurred in the circumstances of the country, since I first met you in this place.

At that period, the dominion of the southern country had been so widely extended under the Continent, that resistance to his power was by many considered to be hopeless; and the principles of justice of Europe alone was such resistance effectual.

By the unexampled exertions which you so nobly and so long and of countries justly contending for independence, that system fell which was kindled in so many nations, the continent of Europe has been restored to the long exiled and oppressive tyranny under which it has so long laboured, and has been followed by the blessing of Divine Providence, to terminate, in conjunction with his Majesty's Allies, the most essential and sanguinary war in which this country has ever been engaged.

The prosecution of such a contest for so long a period, and the successful issue of its efforts which marked the close of it, have lived behind it within our own country, as well as throughout the rest of Europe, by considerable difficulties and distress. But deeply as I feel for the privations which have been felt by my people, I nevertheless looked forward without disquiet, to the period always the true criterion of the stability of the resources of the British Empire, the state of which enables it to support with unexampled exertions, and from the pressure of a continuance of peace, and from the pressure of public spirit, and energy of the nation.

These expectations have not been disappointed.

It is the will and pleasure of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, acting in the name and on the behalf of his Majesty, that this Parliament be now dissolved and this Parliament is dissolved accordingly.

The Commons then withdrew, and the Lords adjourned.

Among the illustrious strangers who witnessed the ceremony, where the Dutchess of Cambridge, and the expected highness the Grand Duke Michael of Russia.

The Paris papers of Sunday & Monday have not reached us. Those of the former day state the arrival at Paris on the 1st. of Wellington, but the report is contradicted in the papers of Monday. The Monday papers contain a speech from the King of Sweden to the Diet, which is as follows:

I regret that it is not able to admit foreign ale—others. The loan is taken at 76 f. 60c. and the price of 5 per cents, on Saturday was 68f. 3c. The maximum of the contribution is fixed to 40 per cent. The Revenue is gradually and progressively improving.

The Royal Edward, of Liverpool, & by Jesse, of Ayr, bound for North America, sailed a short time ago from Belfast with 697 emigrant passengers on board. Both vessels were a few hours afterwards detained, and sent into the Lower port by his Majesty's ship Maidon. The detention of these ships was in consequence of their having a greater number of passengers on board than allowed by Act of Parliament, and not having twelve weeks provision on board for each passenger. which renders the master & owners liable to penalties amounting to £3000.

The public accounts are in a most promising state and there is likely to be a large quantity of all other fruits, except pluns.—Exeter Gaz.

LONDON, June 6.

The Paris papers of Wednesday received to-day contain little worthy of notice. The constitutional charter of Bavaria has been communicated officially to the Chambers, by the King. Impressed with the high obligations of his rank, he declares that it was always a part of his duties to regulate his government by institutions which should assure the well-being of his subjects. That in order to give stability to three views, he began at the end of 1808 to draw up a constitution for his country, which he now imparts as the result of long consultations with the council of state, and the offspring of his unfettered will. Liberty of conscience and opinions, and the impartial administration of justice, are declared to be its elements. The old and new provinces of the kingdom of Bavaria are thereafter to compose one municipal state, of which the king is supreme head. Under him, an assembly of the states-general are to represent the kingdom, divided into two chambers. The crown is declared to be hereditary in the male line, according to the order of primogeniture, and is extended to the collateral branches of the royal house. Contemplating the possibility of the crown's passing to another family, the king declares in the present line, it is provided that in the event of such distant Prince relating to reside in the capital of the state, that the kingly title is to devolve on the second branch of the new royal house, and the succession remain with it, secondly, if that branch should not crown so devolving to a foreign married Princess, she becomes queen, and must live in the capital and residence in Bavaria. The Princes & Princesses are declared to be of age when eighteen years old. Regencies are provided in cases of incapacity, and the majority of the public during the consent of the states-general.—Where no collateral male branch exists for the crown, the queen dowager is invested with the functions of regent, and the education of the royal minor is confided to her.

To-day, at 12 o'clock, the Prince Regent proceeded in state from Carlton house to the house of peers, whither the commons being summoned, his royal highness gave the royal assent to several public and one private bill, & delivered a speech from the throne, in which he intimated his design of forthwith dissolving the present parliament, and calling another. When his royal highness had concluded, the Lord Chancellor declared this parliament dissolved.

Miscellaneous.

POWER OF CONSCIOUS GUILT.

The following article was communicated by a gentleman of this city, to whom the circumstances were detailed a few days since by the magistrate in whose presence the horrid crime was committed.

Three justices of the peace had met at Mayo's Ick, in Mason county, Kentucky, for the purpose of taking depositions, and to try about [illegible] civil causes which were set for trial at that time & place. On a short consultation it was agreed that two of the magistrates, to wit, Joseph Dedds & John Tougo, should retired to one corner of a large room, to which they had not, as it appeared to take the depositions, whilst Jonathan Stout, the other magistrate, should try the causes. A cause came on to be heard, wherein the sum in dispute was seventy-five cents; neither party having any testimony to introduce, Mr. Stout, for the purpose of obtaining some knowledge of the situation of the claim, permitted them to go into a free conversation on the subject of their dealings—in the course of the conversation, it appeared that as a day nothing previous to the day of trial, the defendant had called upon the plaintiff to settle with him relative to the expence of taking up an estray; and now in the presence of Mr. Stout, the defendant was asked by the plaintiff if he did not recollect telling him about the sum of fifty cents to pay the expense of taking up the estray, at the time above specified to, when he called to settle it; the defendant said, he did—upon which the following dialogue ensued—Plaintiff. Had you any more money with you that day, than you gave me, towards paying the expence of taking up the estray? Defendant. No. Plaintiff. Did you borrow any money of any one that day? Defendant. No. I did not. Plaintiff. After you left my house that day, did you see any person or persons (naming them) on your way home? Defendant. I did. Plaintiff. Did you return with them to my house? Defendant. I did. Plaintiff. Did you treat with them to any liquor? Defendant. I did. Plaintiff. Did you afterwards pitch quoits with them for whiskey in my yard; Defendant. I did. Plaintiff. Did you lose your last pitch of whiskey? Defendant. I did. Plaintiff. Were they called in by you at my barn? (the plaintiff was a tavern keeper) Defendant. They were. Plaintiff. Did you pay me for them? Defendant. I think I did.—After considerable affirmation on each side, & denial on the other, the plaintiff told the defendant, if he would swear he had paid for two half pints, he would strike them out of his account; defendant said he would, and asked Mr. Stout to administer the oath, but he being conscious from the peculiar circumstances of the defendant, that it was impossible it could be so—said to him, I fear a delicacy is dangit, and you had better pay it: its a trifling sum, I will not take the trouble to swear for it. Something at that moment called the attention of Mr. Stout from the subject, and before he again had fixed his eyes on the defendant, he had slept to Mr. Young, one of the magistrates in the other room—and the result was, he had sworn in the most solemn manner to the payment of the money, of which he knew he had unjustly obtained Mr. Stout's consent.

Until this awful period, the defendant had retained his usual appearance of health & vigour—but at that time he had he turned about to inform Mr. Stout of his successful attempt to convict the horrid crime of perjury, when a fearful[illegible] was visible in his countenance—the people in the room simultaneously remarked, with astonishment, the change so instantaneously effected in his appearance—Mr. Stout, himself, remarked, when reciting the circumstance to the writer, that he had the appearance of a man buried in two days dead. Judgment was entered for 50 cents, and he returned from the scene of guilt, a self-tortured & miserable mortal! he could not return from Conscious Hell. He took neither refreshment nor sleep that night—and appeared restless, & would attitude with (illegible) and rolled on his bed from side to side, like one bereft of every earthly enjoyment.—Nursing & medicine will subsequently no relief to his perturbed bosom. Still taking nothing, he went after breakfast to the field, where a number of negroes had met to cut his grain—he gave them some incoherent directions relative to the harvest, and returned to his house, where a whole day was spent in thoughtful musing, and apparent agony of mind; and another night was spent like the preceding—In the morning, it short time after he had left his bed, he was seen running upon all fours through the door-yard, and exclaiming—"I'm a damning, damning man" (the name of the constable who attended the trial) and the Devil are after me"—He was picked up by some men who were at the house, and set down on the step of the door. In a few minutes he suddenly started from his seat, and again commenced running upon his hands and feet as before; and exclaiming most awfully, "John Johnston and the Devil are after me"—In this manner he made his way into a small field of corn which stood open to the door-yard—and as he ran between the rows of corn, he tore up a number of hills by the roots—and, whilst thus engaged, said before he could be reached by his pursuers, in the act of tearing up a corn hill, he suddenly and instantaneously expired !—*Cincinn. EDUCATION IN FRANCE.

From the Washington city Gazette.

Education is making rapid progress in France. A new Lancasterian school has been opened at Grenoble. The name of his majesty Louis 18th, protector of the system of mutual instruction, is inscribed on the principle wood part of this school, and of a great number of others.

The analysis of the report made to the society for elementary instruction, by Baron de Gajuado, the secretary general, from April 16, 1817, to February 1818, occupies six columns of a Paris paper, by which it appears that at no period of the history of France, were so many associations set on foot only by individuals, at their own expense, for the promotion of the public welfare, as at the present moment.

France, gentlemen, says the reporter, offers at this moment a spectacle worthy of great attention, a spectacle without example, as to the present day.—The whole kingdom is animated with the enlightened design of promoting the means of education, the happiness of the rising generation"—and in another part he says, "it is a beautiful and worthy reply to the calumnies of the French nation, when she descended so low as to attack her character in the midst of those misfortunes which she supported with so much dignity & firmness.

The 16th of April, 1817, the number of schools under the care of the society was about 1097. Defendant No. every was about 1097. Defendant No. every was increased to 360, having been nearly quadrupled in 9 months. Only nine departments are without these schools—and of the 1097 societies which they have been established, that of the Seine possesses 61. In one store in Paris, 12,000 children have been taught by the schools of that city 37 innumerable mention is made of several officers, who have introduced it into full activity.

"The Normal school, instituted by the prefect of the Seine, has already produced a result which has been seen since

INCOME AND EXPENDITURE.

The Select Committee on Finance, have made an additional Report to the House of Commons, embracing the subject of the Income and Expenditure of the country.

From their examinations, it appears, that in the three years, the total payments and receipts for the year 1817, fall short of the estimate by £1,864,846 which being more than counterbalanced by a receipt of £2,284,051 of arrears of Property Tax, and of £50,000 of the Surplus profits of the Bank of England, together £2,330,551, there was upon the whole an excess beyond the estimate, of £465,705. While in Ireland there was a deficit of £503,000 from which the above excess being deducted, the difference of the expenditure and the actual produce of the revenue in the United Kingdom is calculated by the Committee at only £259,264 upon a sum of nineteen millions.

It is also apparent, that in the year ended the 5th of April, 1818, a considerable increase took place in the receipts, as compared with the former year, the receipts and the estimate in Great Britain is in that period reduced to £1,565,000.

In Ireland, a separate Income Tax was imposed since improvement. In this period—the Income being only £630,134 below the estimate.

The present increase of the revenue, however, appears more particularly shown by a comparative statement within the last quarter of the year 1817, between the income of the quarter which closed on the 5th April, 1818, with the corresponding quarter, 1817. In stating this contrast, the Committee very properly exclude the Property Tax and that of the Duties, in order to show the real improvement of the revenue, of which arises from the permanent revenue. The result of this comparison is a balance in favor of the current quarter of 5th April, 1818, for Great Britain, of £700,000 and for Ireland, of £56,700, making upon the whole an increase of £756,700 which would have been considerably greater if the produce of the Stamps had been duly credited to the proportion in the present as in the last year between the two quarters ending the 5th April, 1817 and 5th of April. In consequence of these, a correct rise in the average price of Sugar in that point at which it becomes chargeable with the additional duty of 5s. per cwt. a great quantity has been taken out of bond, and the unusually remarkable transactions before the close of the quarter ending 5th of January last, from which period the additional duty, as had been foreseen by the merchants, became payable. By this calculation and payment of the duties, the receipts of the January quarter was greatly swelled, and consequently that of the April diminished by the produce of the succeeding quarter.

The Committee observes, that they would not be disposed to attach much credence upon the authentication of the Revenue in a single quarter, or to build upon it any opposition of a permanent nature, but manifestly the consequence is the more positive and important change in the general condition of the country.

In consideration of this view, the Committee enter into a variety of observations on the taxes imposed previous to 1816, and laid before Parliament particularly the Custom and Excise—the inner of which affords some satisfactory evidence of a growing improvement than is to be found even in their total amounts.

From the Income of the Country, the Committee next proceed to the head of Expenditure.

The total disbursements of the year 1817, amounted to £58,098,106 of which there was voted—1 to the redemption of debt, the sum of £18,-340,339 leaving an expenditure of £39,766,806 which being accumulated with the interest and annuitizing, with the produce of the Old Stores sent the balance to £2,302,210, so that there would have been a difference between the expenditure and the receipts within the year, of £2,064,-996.

In the statement of the current year, we observe an excess of £1,000,000 in the estimate beyond the estimate formed by the committee last year which amounting to £57,802,610 will not exceed the sum of £58,306,467 which stands appropriated to the reduction of the National Debt; it does appear that the real expenditure, estimated at £57,807,014 will agree very nearly with the sum which is stated in the estimate of £57,-803,864.

The Committee agreeably to the instructions of the house, have added a general view of the probable expenditure of the year 1819.

Although it cannot be observed, that any improvement of the revenue on the one hand, and a very slight increase of expenditure on the other, in future years on the other, will have the effect of giving a surplus sufficiently large to admit to the diminution of the Public Debt, an object in which, the Committee observe, the hopes of the Parliament, and the exertions of Parliament, cannot be too steadily directed.

The Committee concludes by repeating an anticipation which they remarked in 1817, that the reduction of the Interest on the Four and Five per Cents must, under a continuance of the favorable progress of the country, and the growing abundance of capital in the country, contribute at no distant period in a very considerable degree to the reduction of that kind of debt, but for which the resources of the country could be more than equal to all the charges upon it.

LONDON, June 10.

The arrival of Major Moodie, on Saturday, with despatches for Lord Bathurst, from Sir Hudson Lowe, at St. Helena, has excited some special ition in the city, coincident as it is with the assumed of the death of a sailor of that island. The sailor had been one of the crew of the Northumberland, when that ship carried Napoleon Bonaparte from Europe to St Helena, and in that situation had formed a connexion with Bonaparte's servants. This sailor after his return became one of the crew of an East-Indiaman, which touched at St. Helena, and was in the night, contrived to swim from the vessel, climbed up the rocks, and got into the island, regularly among Bonaparte's domestics. This he did two several nights without being discovered or noticed; but in the second night of his remaining on the island, he learned of his adventures, and told confidentially to his communicator what he had done. Knowledge of the transaction was fatal; he was arrested, and examined, and conducted home to England, in confinement; but it has not appeared that he had any sinister intention, or more to view than an unregular frolic. It is not believed Bonaparte knew of his being removed his servants. However, the occurrence is supposed to have demonstrated the possibility of his escape, and has induced the British Government to caution the Captain of which might be inclined for a bribe, or other wise, to convey him to Europe or America. Indeed it is reported in several such occurrences have taken place at St. Helena, as have induced Sir Hudson Lowe to direct in the Government at home, that if such rats be allowed to come in that island as at present, he cannot answer for the safety of his prisoner. It is reported in the city that Major Moodie is come home in charge of communications on this subject, and it is supposed another plan of confinement will be adopted for the better security.

A BANKING-HOUSE AT BOTANY-BAY.

By the last advices received from New South Wales, we learn that some of the principal settlers have entered into a banking company, and have established a banking house on account of themselves as joint stockholders, and appointed Macquarie, a clerker of incorporation with the accustomed rights, privileges, and powers, the process of the manufactures. The institution is composed of twenty four partners, the first subscribed in the ratio of about 1 lb. of coffee to the 100 lb. of tobacco. Sugars are substituted with sand; persons with feathers are supplied with cheap, painted seeds; tobacco with rotten cabbage leaves; Bohea tea with sloe leaves, frequently mixed with drugs of the most pernicious quality. Port wine, which is rather scarce, especially the sold at very low prices, as it is made from the wholesome juice of the vine (instead of the black thorn) juice. British Brandy, and imported. Gin, however, is very dear, the juniper berry being scarce in the country. Whisky is very strong, it is said to be adulterated with a considerable quantity of tobacco juice, vitriol, and spice fruits, a deadly poison. Bread, from pulverized bones, is found to have been made of a mixture of flour, ground bones, and the most pulverized bones. Milk to have been adulterated with washballs and water. Cheese and butter are seasoned with the seeds of water hemlock, (cicuta maculata, Linn.) Its quality is reported, and it is scarcely an article of ordinary consumption that is not found to be more destructive by these infamous and fraudulent practices.

As soon of the institution has described in the foregoing trial, and the Bank of England as a monetica, we think it proper to state the manner in which it operates. Lay the tea weed paper, and rub it; it will easily discharge the colouring matter, and rub it; it will easily discharge the colouring matter, and rub it; it will easily discharge the colouring matter

Miscellaneous.

Somewhat curious given before a Committee of the House of Commons, on Education :—

Mr. W. Freeman Lloyd.

Are you acquainted with the state of the children of the poor in the metropolis ?—Yes ; chiefly from my acquaintance with Sunday Schools, and with those who conduct them, and from having visited the poor at their own habitations.

Are you able to form an opinion of the number of children educated in Sunday schools in the metropolis ?—I have drawn out a statement as nearly as I can.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

	Scholars.
East London District -	9,291
Ditto - Adults -	580
West London District -	8,708
Southwark ditto -	7,861
North and Central ditto -	9,320
	35,460

I think there are several Sunday schools either not known or not reported in the above ; I think the number of Sunday scholars in the metropolis is about 40,000.

How many teachers are employed in those schools ?—About 4000.

What difference is there between a Sunday school and a day school ?—Sunday schools instruct those poor children whose time is fully employed in labour during the week days, and to them this is the only opportunity of gaining instruction ; the children also learn their lessons during the week, to repeat to their teachers on Sunday ; and teachers visit their children at their own habitations, and procure the co-operation of their parents, and watch over their conduct as much as they can.

If children were not clothed in parochial schools, but that expense saved, might not a much greater number of children be educated than are now, in the respective parishes of London ?—Certainly, the expense of clothing one child would educate several ; a great many more might have instruction ; I suppose nearly the whole uneducated poor of the metropolis.

Do you think it is better to give education to a great number, than instruction and clothing to a few ?—Certainly, much better.

Would not occasional clothing, by way of reward, have a better effect than regular clothing of certain periods ?—I conceive so, because it would be unexpectedly and conditional.

Would children be more likely to meet with employment, in your opinion, if they were better educated ?—It is one of the first enquiries we make, when we want servants in trade, how they have been educated ; and they are very frequently incapacitated from filling many situations, because they have not been taught when young.

Do you know whether shopkeepers and wholesale houses, in the city, prefer youths from the country, to those born and educated in London ?—Very frequently so.

Do they prefer youths in the various capacities of porters, warehousemen, & clerks, and, in short, in all the departments of trade ?—In most cases they certainly do prefer lads from the country.

Are they also preferred as domestic servants ?—In general, so far as my experience extends.

For what reason are they preferred ?—Because their character is better known, their morals more frequently uncontaminated ; and I think the education of those who are sent off to town has been much better attended to than those persons borsin London.

Have you any idea how many young men come up to London annually to seek for situations, both domestic and in trade ?—It is impossible to speak with any accuracy ; but I have heard many intelligent men, who have had long experience in the subject, calculate that nearly 10,000 come up annually.

Including footmen, grooms, and clerks ?—All descriptions of servants.

Are you acquainted with any of the principals of the trading and commercial houses of the city of London ?—Yes, many of them.

Do you know whether they originally came from the country, or were born in London ?—I should think the majority came from the country.

Is it not a remarkable fact, and well known, that a large proportion of the housekeepers in the city of London came from the country ?—Yes, I conceive so.

And generally without property ?—Most of them, I think.

They have generally risen by their own merit ?—Yes, from clerks, or even many of them from inferior situations ; they have risen from their attention to business, and good education. Several of our lord mayors have risen from clerks' situations.

Have they chiefly risen by their own merit, and having had the advantages of a useful education ?—Yes, I conceive so, and a steadiness and perseverance in their conduct.

Is there much difference between the moral character of the "Scotch and Irish" —No one, who has been accustomed to visit them at their own habitations, can have failed to observe a marked and decided distinction.

Whence does this distinction arise ? —The Scotch are constantly taught, when young, to read their Bibles, and are enjoined to moral and religious instruction.

From your knowledge of the trading world, and of the children of the poor, do you think a more extensive plan of education would be a public benefit ?—I think it would be one of the greatest public benefits.

Would it, in your opinion, lessen public crimes ?—I have no doubt of it ; for the most guilty criminal characters are commonly the most ignorant ; in fact we cannot get them to stay in our schools ; we have sometimes gathered them from the highways, and brought them into our schools, but we could never keep them long together.

From your knowledge of the benefits of education, is it your opinion that a more extended plan would greatly promote the public benefit ?—I think it would exceedingly so ; in Wales, owing to the general establishment of Sunday schools there, in one or two of the counties the prison-doors have been thrown open, and I attribute it to education, because nearly every individual throughout those counties attended the schools.

The Rev. Wm. Johnson.

You are master, chaplain, and accountant, of the Central National school, situated in Baldwin's-gardens ? —I am.

How many children are educated there ?—About 860 boys and girls.

How many boys and how many girls? —Five hundred and sixty boys, and three hundred girls.

Do you receive the children of persons not members of the Church of England ?—Yes, we do ; there is no question ever put to any parent respecting their religion.

What sort of religious instruction do you give the children ?—The course of religious instruction is, we begin with the Lord's Prayer, a short grace before and after meat, the two first collects in morning and evening service, taken from the Liturgy, a short grace before and after meat, the two first collects in morning and evening service, taken from the Liturgy, and then the same broken into short sentences ; and the highest class of children, or classes, use Crossman's Introduction to the Christian Religion.

Do you take those children to church ? —The school-room is licensed, not having any consecration in the church ; the majority of them attend divine service there, according to the form of the Church of England ; but, on an average, one hundred go to the parish church.

Have you in fact, according to the best of your knowledge, many children of Dissenters in that establishment ?—Many are Dissenters, and Dissenters of every description.

As nearly as you can estimate, how many may there be ?—I cannot tell them exactly.

Are there twenty ?—More than that ; I might say one third, or not one-half, are Dissenters ; and at this time we have seven Jews.

Do you include in your class of Dissenters the children of people called Methodists ?—Certainly ; and also those whose parents go to Spafields chapel.

What is the yearly expense of the Baldwin's-garden school ?—The yearly expense is nearly £180 a year. I act both as accompanist and chaplain, and in the capacity of the under-masters are paid a national schools generally, as well as schoolmaster.

What is your salary altogether ?—One hundred and fifty pounds a-year.

How much of that as schoolmaster ? —I should think about 80l. or a 100l. ; but it is not separate.

What is the yearly expence of abstract books, &c. as nearly as you can tell ?—The books, as far as I can judge, are about 20l. This calculation I take to be considerably over the mark ; for a complete set of our elementary books cost only six pence, and the same set of books on an average, will serve three children in succession, before the books are worn out. Each slate costs three half pence ; the pencils, two-pence ; pens and ink, two-pence ; and one half penny ; making eight-pence for each child. We do not use paper more than once a week, at present.

CURIOUS MARRIAGE.—An article from Brussels, of the 12th inst. says :—" An instrument of Consonance, M. Butin, died there on the 6th of this month, aged 84. This man was twice married, and what is very remarkable, his second wife was born on the very day that his first wife died, and he then declared he would never have any other wife than this infant. In fact, he waited till she was twenty years old, when he married her. He was then 64 years of age ; he had a daughter by her the first year of his marriage, and a second twenty years afterwards, in the month of January last ; he leaves several children, the eldest of whom is sixty years of age and the youngest scarcely two months. This man lived twenty years with his first wife, remained twenty years a widower and his second marriage lasted also twenty years."—London Paper.

Cockroaches.—By placing a bowl of molasses & water in the places frequented by these troublesome insects, they will be effectually exterminated. The experiment has been tried by the writer of this, whose house was much infested by them, and in the course of a fortnight they have been nearly all destroyed by the above simple remedy.

From the Liverpool Courier.

The following pleasing proof of animal sagacity has been sent to us by a correspondent :

" A few days ago, a person was attending a vessel discharging oak bark at the king's dock, when unfortunately a particle of this substance got into his eye which could not be extracted, either by himself or several others who tried all their skill. He continued, for three successive days and nights, in the most excruciating pain.—on the fourth evening, while still suffering the severest torture, his faithful little dog, of the pug breed, appeared to view him with an unusual degree of attention, and after fawning with seemingly extravagant flattery, crept on his master's knee, (which liberty he had never attempted before,) placed his paws on each side of his head, and began to lick, first about the chin, then the ear, then, by degrees, to the afflicted eye, when his attention was chiefly directed ; he approached it, and with his pug nose, endeavoured to remove the shade which had been placed over it, and which, with his master's assistance, was soon removed, the dog was then suffered to proceed in his operations ; he immediately cleaned the eye, with a care and judgment that would have done credit to a respectable practitioner, and, in less than a minute, his master was relieved from a misery, of which only they who have suffered under similar circumstances are able to judge."

LA TOUR D'AUVERGNE.

This hero, called, by way of proud distinction, " the first grenadier of France," was covered with wounds, but never would go into an hospital, ' which (he said) should only receive those who had lost a limb.' His company frequently lost half, and sometimes three fourth, of its number in one engagement, but the next day it was sure to be completed to its full complement ; for such was the reputation that it had acquired, that for every vacancy after an engagement at least ten soldiers volunteered to fill it, and several who were refused admittance shot themselves from disappointment. In consequence of which he was allowed to be 180 strong ; & during the time La Tour D'Auvergne commanded it, it lost 2,480 killed in battle.

Dr. Rocke has published a simple method of rendering rape oil equal to sperm-acti oil, for the purposes of illuminating. He began by washing the oil with spring water ; which is effected by agitating the oil violently with a sixth part of the water. This separates the particles of oil & commixes those of the water intimately with them. After this operation, it looks like pale yellow eggs beat up.—In less than 48 hours they separate completely, the oil swimming at top, the water and other impurities and extraneous particles subsiding at the bottom. He improved much on this, by substituting sea-water in the place of fresh water. He tried whether fresh water, impregnated with salt, may not do as well as sea water ; but found the light not so bright, and of a reddish cast. The oil which he has washed is rape-oil, for which he is charged 4s. 2d. a gallon ; it gives no bad smell, and, when burning, does not the spermaceti oil, is not to be distinguished from it."

A Mr. Isaac Williams, who lived near Pendleton District, (S. C.) while out a deer hunting on the 4th of July, in company with another gentleman, received a bite by a rattle-snake, and died before medical assistance could be procured.

Insanity.—A young Frenchman who was tried in London lately for an attempt on a Roman Catholic clergyman in church, with a drawn sword, was acquitted as being insane. The lady where the prisoner lodged for the last 13 months proved the following extraordinary conduct in his mode of living ; For some weeks he confined himself to bread (without yeast) & water ; then he would live for weeks on fowl, eating twenty in one week ; then for a time on sausages ; oil cakes ; then on boiled flour & water ; then on the juice of pounded grass ; then on the juice of pounded herbs ; then on a boiled pea ; then on boiled ones, eating each day three pecks of shelled ones, and one of them with shells ; sometimes changing his diet to mutton, of which he would eat six pounds per day. He had also a variety of iron armour made, weighing 214 pounds each, which he used to try on at the brazier's, and say, that he would walk in them 20 leagues a day. He lived an iron crowne, & a highly polished double edge sword, about 4 feet in length He avowed his intention of leading forty millions of men to extirpate the Barbary States. The iron suits of armour for himself and a horse were produced in court.

Potatoes.—A French agriculturist, for the potatoes that he intends to keep for the spring consumption, adopts this method.—He immerses them once or twice in boiling water, to destroy the vegetable life, dries them in cool oven, conducts them in sacks, lik keeps without difficulty and loss this precious root until new potatoes come in. M. Pollard of St. Genevieve aux Bois, in France, plants in sandy soils his potatoes in the autumn, from which has found the crops much more abundant than spring planting ; he has made the experiment for several years, and on the last year on a grand scale ; the potatoes are much larger, more numerous, and of a better quality than from spring sowing.

Rusget for White Paint.—Take plaster of paris, very finely ground, put it into a common pot or kettle, and bang it with a moderate fire to boil or dry it ; stir it continually, to prevent it from burning, until it boils like hasty pudding. When it is boiled or dried enough, mix it like other paint ; for the first coat, about half plaster and half whiting ; for the second coat plaster with a small quantity of white lead ; and for the third, which will be light, about half plaster and half lead. This makes an excellent paint, far preferable to that made of white lead for duration. A less quantity of lead would answer, but the paint would not be so smooth and nice.

It is but little known, but it is nevertheless a fact, that a little tar rubbed on the necks of young lambs, or geese, will prevent the depredations of Foxes upon them, those animals having an unconquerable aversion to the smell of tar.—So says the Greenock Advertiser.

A material for roofing is used in England which is cheap and durable. It is formed by sopping sheets of coarse paper (such as button makers use) in boiling tar, and nailing them on boards or laths, exactly in the manner of slates. The whole is afterwards coated over with a mixture of pitch and powdered coal, chalk or brick dust.—Roofs covered in this way are said to have lasted 30 years without repairs.

Our city has been much alarmed a few days past, in consequence of the appearance of mad dogs. We understand that a young man has been bitten by one of these animals, but having applied the usual cure, we hope it will prove as efficacious in this as it has in former cases. A cow expired suddenly a few days since, exhibiting every symptom of the hydrophobia, occasioned it is supposed by the licking of the blood of a dog, killed a few days previous for that disease. The common council of the city have passed an ordinance, imposing a fine upon the owners of such dogs as may be found running at large for the period of two months.

Thus it is believed, a 100 feet lower than the level of the tide waters of the Hudson, at Albany, and about 300 feet lower than the greatest known depth of lake Erie. The freedom of election not admitting the presence of the military, they are obliged to evacuate the various county and borough towns, and their immediate vicinity, which constitute their present quarters. The troops thus removed will occupy points at a proper distance, until the election being over they can constitutionally resume their former residence.—Gravesend is thus filled with soldiers from other parts of Kent. Saturday morning a troop of the 15th dragoons left Hounslow, and took up their quarters at Hampstead.

"It is believed," says a private letter from Paris, "that the trial of Marshal Ney & Cantillon will be carried before the Court of Assize in the ensuing month. The last interrogatory of Marshal Ney is much in the odious plot of which the Duke of Wellington was to have been the victim. It appears certain that a true Minister of Bonaparte's has resided for some time in one of the ports of the Adriatic, was privy to this infernal plot, as well as a certain great personage who now resides in the United States. There are, it is said, such grave circumstances in the last disclosures of Marbois, that it would be imprudent to commit them to a private letter. Every thing announces that this plot was as vast as it is possible to imagine; for, in order to accomplish the assassination of one man, conspirators appear to have communicated with each other between the two hemispheres.

A British paper contains what follows: about the middle of August all that belongs to the new congress will meet at Aix La Chappelle, and the deliberations will begin in the first days of September. To the project of delivering France from the burden of maintaining the army of occupation, are joined some other plans to secure tranquility and peace through all Europe.

The views in France were reported to be flourishing, and promise abundance.

From the Mexina, June 9.

The purpose of the approaching congress of the sovereigns at Aix La Chapelle, seems to be pretty well understood. The Austrian Observer was certainly right in saying, that the Monarchs would meet finally to decide the question on the evacuation of France by their troops.—But with this measure many others are connected that respect the further security of peace and order in Europe. For as it is suggested in what may be the consequence of withdrawing the foreign troops from France, considering the irritability of people's minds, and the measures of party spirit, which is far from being quelled: and considering that France is the country from which all revolutionary opinions have issued and spread over Europe, the Cabinets are unable how necessary it is to keep a watchful eye over that kingdom, that shd, one of the present Members, arrived in the borough, and the canvass of both parties has proceeded with great briskness. On Monday last both parties gave public dinners to their friends.

The head-quarters of the parties were at the King's arms (at Robert's Inn,) and the Castle (Lord Townsends,) which Inns are elaborately decorated on them. After dinner, in the course of the evening, the rival candidates paraded the town in processions, with appropriate flags, &c. The procession meeting (as the matter is stated to us,) the power of one of the Peel flags waved it alontingly over the heads of the rival party; the flag was instantly torn to atoms; the procession passed on—but the "thumb had been bitten, & could not pease nye.—Arrived at the Inns, Mr. Peel, esq. appeared at the window, and, we believe, addressed the freemen below. He had a walking stick in his hand, which the Townsend boys say was shaken, as in menace; (a thing perhaps not very likely, but the thing was enough.) Instantly to it the rival boys went; and stones were in a moment rolling: the pavement was torn up, and the siege began on both of the garrisons; windows, shutters, frames, &c. all disappeared as by the wand of an Harlequin, till nowere a stick or pane was visible. The job was completed of both houses in a few minutes. A vast load of large paving stones were collected from the rooms of each inn, many of which came rolling down the stair cases like thunder." On the part of the Townsend boys, the war was instantly carried to the house of Edmund Peel, esq. across the road which passes the corner of the street at right angles. This residence instantly shared the fate of the inns, and the family were obliged to fly. The damage done must be very considerable; but we have heard of no estimate that can be relied on. The town has been quiet ever since. We are sorry to hear that one man has been so severely hurt, that his life is despaired of; another had his leg broken: and various others are seriously injured.

Mr. Hooper has kindly favoured us with London papers to 16th June.

The united kingdom was in the agitation of a general election. Business was suspended for a time, and the military, who are not allowed to remain in the vicinity of the polls during the voting, were continually passing from post to pollar. Many members had been returned, and numerous old ones declined being candidates. From all appearances the ministerial majority will not be diminished. Mr. Wooler, the printer of the Black Dwarf, was a candidate for Coventry. The other candidate is a bookseller. (One of the candidates for Westminster, is the gallant Capt. (COPY.)

Downing-street, 26th Feb. 1818.

"Sir—I have had the honor of receiving your despatch of the 31 December, and of submitting to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, the humble petitions and address of the House of Assembly of the Bahamas, which it enclosed.

I have received his Royal Highness's commands to instruct you to inform the House of Assembly that the arrest, and commitment of Mr. Wylly, under all the circumstances of the case, appears to his Royal Highness to have been highly unprecedented, and that his Royal Highness entirely approves of the conduct of the General Court upon Mr. Wylly's being brought before them on a writ of Habeas Corpus, duly issued; in so much as his proceedings in that court would have implied, that in the opinion of the court, the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Wylly had been warranted by law. You are further aware the Assembly, that his Royal Highness will ever be ready to afford them protection and support in the due exercise of their privileges, but that his Royal Highness considered that it would be inconsistent with the due administration of justice, and with the personal liberty of the inhabitants of the Bahamas, if the Assembly were allowed to proceed on an unprecedented right of arresting and committing a person any of his Majesty's subjects, under the plea of an alledged breach of privilege; and to claim on their part to a power of this nature exsally lead to a repetition of those contentions and those unhappily normal collisions in the Legislative Assembly and the General Court, tending to degrade their respective authorities in public estimation, and to create a serious if not a fatal interruption of all public proceedings.

"In this respect to that part of the Memorial which relates to the rejection by the Council of certain Bills sent up to them by the Assembly—His Royal Highness considers the Council to have been in conformity with the Assembly, a full and undoubted right to decide how far the several legislative measures brought before them for consideration are fit to become Laws of the Colony; and that in whatever light the House of Assembly may consider the conduct of the Council set in particular instances, they cannot but feel that any interference with the privileges of the Council in this respect, might lead to consequences still more subversive of the constitution of the Bahamas than that of the pretended privileges of the House of Assembly itself.

Yesterday was the appointed day; but at 11 o'clock, after the Legislative Council had assembled, and the House had met, his Honour the President came down from the Government House to the Council Chamber, where he commanded the immediate attendance of the House, and was pleased to close the Session with the following Speech:—

Gentlemen of the Council, Mr. Speaker, and Gentleman of the House of Assembly,

At the commencement of the present session, I told before you the copy of a despatch from the Earl Bathurst, one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of state, to His Excellency Governor Cameron, bearing date Downing Street the 26th February last, stating that Lord Liverpool had received the governor's despatch of the 31 December last, and submitted to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, the humble Address and Petition of the House of Assembly of the Bahamas, which it enclosed; that his lordship had received his Royal Highness's commands to instruct the governor to inform the House of Assembly, that the arrest and commitment of Mr. Wylly, under all the circumstances of the case, appeared to his Royal Highness to have been highly unprecedented; that his Royal Highness entirely approved of the conduct of the general Court upon Mr. Wylly's being brought before them, on a writ of habeas corpus duly issued: inasmuch as his proceedings in that court would have implied, that in the opinion of the Court, the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Wylly had been warranted by law. And that his Royal Highness considered that it would be inconsistent with the due administration of Justice, and with the personal liberty of the inhabitants of the Bahamas, if the House of Assembly were allowed to possess an unprecedented right of arresting and committing to Prison any of his Majesty's Subjects, under the plea of an alledged breach of privilege; and to claim on their part to a power of this nature could only lead to a repetition of those contentions and those unhappily normal collisions in the Legislative Assembly and the General Court, tending to degrade their respective authorities in public estimation, and to create a serious if not a fatal interruption of all public proceedings.

Miscellaneous.

A DAY IN VIENNA.

During the sitting of Congress.
From Bright's travels in Lower Hungary.

It was Sunday; the shops were all closed, and in addition to the mass, which is daily and almost hourly celebrated in all the churches, services were performed in the vulgar Language. It was a day of much ordinary festivity among all ranks; the theatres are open in the evening; and I was strongly recommended to visit a place of public amusement called the redoubt, where, in all probability, I should see many of the distinguished persons then collected at the congress.

Not having yet delivered my letters, I accompanied a gentleman of Vienna, with whom I had made an accidental acquaintance. We entered the room a hour after o'clock in the evening. It is a magnificent saloon, finely lighted, surrounded by a gallery, and forming a part of the large pile of buildings called the Bourg or Imperial Palace. Never was an assembly less ceremonious; every one wore his hat; many, till the room became heated, their great coats; and no one pretended to appear in an evening dress, except a few Englishmen, who, from the habits of their country, and some little vanity, generally attempt to distinguish themselves by an attention to outward appearance. Around the whole circumference of the room were four or five rows of benches, occupied, for the most part, by well dressed females, while the other parts presented a moving multitude, many of whom were in masks and dominos, and were busily engaged in talking and laughing, or dancing to the music of a powerful orchestra. My companion squeezed my arm as we passed a thin figure with hollow shrunken features, of mild expression with a neck stiff, bending a little forwards, and walking badly. —That is our emperor, he said, and bowed and smiled. He was alone, and dressed like the rest. 'Pray allow me to doubt a little, till I have some further proof.'— Then, do you see that little man, with white hair, pale face, and aquiline nose? He was almost pushed down as he passed the corner of a box by the king of Denmark.—Again I shook my head in disbelief. 'Here the Emperor of Russia approaches.' I looked up and found the information correct.

His fine manly form, his round and smiling countenance, and his neat morning dress, were not to be mistaken; they were the same which some months before, I had seen enter the church at Haarlem, to the thundering peals of the grand organ. I soon recognised the tall form, the solemn and grave features of the King of Prussia; and afterwards seeing these two in familiar conversation with the two monarchs whose pretensions I had disputed, was satisfied their claims were just. 'That short, thick old gentleman, in the uniform of Saxe Weimar. That young man near him the crown prince of Wirtemberg. Here, turn your eyes to that seat.—The large elderly man, with a full face:—he looks like an Englishman—he is the King of Bavaria.—'Pardon,' I exclaimed, stepping quickly aside. 'That was the grand duke of Baden,' said my monitor, 'whose toe you trod upon? he was talking to Prince Wilson of Prussia. Here's a black a little—let these gentlemen pass, they seem very anxious to go on. One, two, three, four, five; these are all archdukes of Austria. Seem a little grave towards the end of the room. See, three women in masks have beset the King of Prussia. He is not out a little pleased at their failure to do with them. Now a party of waiters draws the attention of the crowd, and the King is left to dispose of his fair acquaintances as he thinks fit.

'Do you see that stout, tall man, who looks at the dance?—he is the duke of Saxe Coburg; and by his side, not quite as stout as himself, is his brother, Prince Leopold.'—Was is a young man, next to us, marked with the small pox, who is speaking broken English?—'It is the crown prince of Bavaria; he is said to be very fond of your nation. And here's a group of another hearty square set of fellows:—is an English colonel.' He then went to read a remarkable list of cricket jests—two ladies in dominos sitting upon his arm. The last, unique of its kind, rather excited a smile in my companion.

After a little more pushing, for the room had now become very full, we encountered a fine, dark, military looking man, not in uniform of course, but with a mustache. 'This was Beauharnois, viceroy of Italy.' In this way, for two or three hours, did we continue meeting and pushing amongst hundreds of men, each of whom, had he made his appearance singly, at a fashionable route, in London, would have furnished a paragraph to our new papers, prints to our shops, titles to our barouts, dissinctive appellations to every article of our dress, and theories if not ideas to our poets.

LIVERPOOL, June 10.

Hydrophobia.—The present warm weather, as it increases the plangers from it has powerfully drawn the public attention towards the discovery of a preventative or a remedy for this direful malady. But, of all the specifics which have been hitherto discovered, none can be implicitly replied on as a certain preventative of or cure for canine madness. Great praise, we think, is due to one of our contemporaries for the zeal with which he has repeatedly introduced to the notice of the public the discovery, made by a Russian peasant of Sunbirsk, of a plant which is reported to be a never failing cure for the bite of a mad dog. This specific is the bulbous part of the plant called by botanists, Alisma Plantago, or the Great Water Plantain. By a gracious ordination of Providence, the antidote never lies far from the poison; and to add to the value of the discovery, this plant grows in every part of Europe. It vegetates in water marshes, lakes, and stagnant pools, and, we believe, is to be found in such situations in almost every district in England. A specimen of this plant was gathered, a few days ago, in a pit in the lane leading to West Derby. In England the season of flowering is in the month of July, August and September. It may be gathered at any time, but it is best when it is flowered.

An article from St. Petersburg, dated May 8, mentions an instance that occurred in the territory of Cherson, where a mad dog bit four individuals and several animals. The authorities administered, as an antidote, the Alisma Plantago; several of the animals died, but none of the persons who were bitten have exhibited the lightest symptoms of madness. This, we think, is a decisive and satisfactory proof of the efficacy of the plant preventive of the effect of the malitia.

There has been published in France, according to the Bibliographie de la France, during the year 1817, four thousand two hundred and thirty-seven works—eleven hundred and seventy one engravings—and four hundred and seventy pieces of music. The three first weeks of the present year have produced two hundred and eighty publications, sixty-three engraving, and twenty six new tunes.

Canal.—One hundred thousand dollars were subscribed at Louisville, in one day, by the wealthy inhabitants of that city, to effect a canal at the falls of the Ohio.

As strange as it may appear, nevertheless it is a fact, that large quantities of wheat and flour have lately been shipped from New-York to Baltimore for a market. A writer in the Federal Gazette, in speaking of this reversal of trade, says, "Baltimore is now the highest market on the continent for flour. A considerable quantity of wheat is on its way here from New-York. Upwards of 3000 bushels have arrived from the district of Maine, and 4000 bushels are afloat at our wharves from New-York."

The following account is translated from the Vrai Liberal of May 8. It is sufficiently evident upon a very slight observation, that in the common way in which wood is consumed upon our hearths many of its component parts escape in the form of vapour and gases, and thus are wasted, which might doubtless be applied to useful purposes. We are not informed of the particular mode in which these products are preserved and separated from each other in the invention here referred to, but no ingenious chemist can be much at a loss for means of doing it, to a considerable extent at least.

Application of chemistry to arts.—The city of Brussels, has for a year, contained an establishment which ought to fix the attention of all who are interested in the progress of the useful arts, and one which shows how much the sciences are capable of assisting them. By means of a process, the first discovery of which was the result of the studies of the most able chemists, Messrs. Basgrand and Desparts, the principals of the establishment, have the secret of converting wood into charcoal, and at the same time, by a very simple operation, of extracting pitch, and pyro-ligneous acid—the heat for the purpose, is produced by hydrogen gas, which is furnished by the operation, and they have succeeded by very ingenious means to manage and direct it at pleasure. The charcoal is of perfect purity. The pyro-ligneic acid, subsequently of the uses to which it is applicable in the arts, gives, when rectified, an excellent vinegar, which both for the table and domestic purposes, surpasses in quality the best wine vinegar, and which by its moderate price, will give a considerable saving to the consumers. The pitch, cheaper also than that which is imported from abroad, can on other accounts be made to enter into competition with it. In fine, the hydrogen gas not only serves to heat the furnaces in which these different products are elaborated, but by its superabundance contributes to illuminate the work shops.

This pyro-ligneic acid is particularly valuable to the dyers. Mixed with iron filings, it gives a black dye very much superior to that in common use; and with the addition of dyer's wood it produces shades as brilliant as they are durable, varying according to the mixture and extent of the additions. Those factors and manufactures of printed calicoes who have used it, have found that it communicates to the furs and cloths the property of resisting the action of the air for a long time. This property seems to be owing to the peculiar nature of the pyro-ligneic acid, and to an oily substance which it contains, when it has not been rectified, to be converted into vinegar. We do not presumptuously warrant the correctness of these last effects, but the artizans, who practice the different branches of dyeing, are so much interested in proving them, by new experiments, that we have no doubt of their eagerness to ascertain them with certainity.

Those ignorant pretenders, and discontented people, who are always dissatisfied with the age in which they live, ought now, at least, to render justice to the progress modern chemistry has given to the useful arts. How is it that not one among them should suspect that any of those valuable products can be obtained from a billet of wood, if chemistry had not revealed the secret to them. It is not however to these refractory lucubrators, who cannot be subjected to the action of the crucible, that we should recommend to visit the establishment of Messrs. Basgnier & Desparts. It is to those laborious men, those useful and brilliant men, who exert themselves continually for the happiness of their country, who give assistance to its inhabitants, who occupy themselves without cessation in producing the means of sustaining the national industry under the discouragement which foreigners would impose upon it, who struggle against difficulties, of which they are not even admitted to complain and who, notwithstanding the want of reciprocal advantages, which foreign industry obtains amongst us, seek to increase the general mass of riches, by creating new objects of expectation.—Those alone can appreciate the benefits of the establishment which we point to their notice; and which the government has encouraged by a patent.

FROM THE SALEM STAR.

Receipt for making Cider, and preserving it sound for years.

Three months ago, I was at the house of Nicholas Nail, Esq. who lives near Deep river, at the upper extremity of Moore county, where I drank cider of a very superior quality; and as the habitual use of cider is eminently conducive to health, ensures sobriety, imparts the agreeable sensation of strength and vigor, and is a pleasant beverage that can be afforded at a small expense, I took care to be exactly informed of his manner of making, refining and preserving it; in the hope that advantage might accrue by publication of it. Mr. Nail had in his cellar, as well as I now remember, about 5 or 10 hogsheads and 50 or 60 barrels of cider of different ages—the oldest was four, nor did he think any fit to drink until it was at least a year old. That which I drank was three years old. It was excellent. His oldest cider I did not taste, as he intended it as a treat for his executors. He complained that his stock was too small to enable him to drink it of the age he wished; but intended to fill another cellar. I here copy Mr. Nail's recipe, as he gave it to me in writing, in April last.

"All apples fit to be eaten will make good cider. The grand secret is in cleansing it from the filth and dregs as early as possible. Each sort of apples are to be beaten and pressed by themselves. Two kinds of juice, both good, would if mixed, often make bad cider. —Throw out all imperfect, sorry, or sun burnt apples, as well as dust and trash—beat your apples before much mellowed, as they lose their strength, soundness, and spirit if too mellow—Let them stand half a day after being beaten before put into the press; then press them slowly; let continue it as long as the juice discharged appears to grow thin and watery. The advantage of a slow pressure is in making the liquor run pure. Let your casks, previously well cleansed, be filled quite full to permit the froth and pummice to discharge itself at the bung. When the fermentation abates, cover the bung closely with something that may be lifted by the fixed air that escapes during the future fermentation—In a week rack off the cider carefully, ceasing the moment you observe it to run muddy. Now stop the cask more firmly. In ten days rack it off a second time, and in fifteen days the third time. In every instance the casks are to be clean and perfectly filled, and when filled for the last time to be bunged close; placed in a deep dry cellar, never to be moved until drawn for use. Late cider need not be racked until March, and then one racking, or at most two, will be sufficient. Be very careful that no water, not even the very little that will adhere after rinsing a cask, is mixed with the cider. The smallest quantity of raw water will cause cider unfit to keep. The addition of any quantity of distilled spirits is not only useless but injurious.

Mr. Nail's plan is the result of long experience, and its success justifies me in recommending it to the public. I hope it will be tried.

CALVIN JONES.

Raleigh, July 23, 1818.

N. B. I ought to have mentioned that Mr. Nail told me he had for many years filled various plans of clarifying cider to prevent its souring, by means of milk, isinglass, scalding and so smoaking, filtering through sand, &c. &c. and found all useful, but is satisfied that frequent racking or drawing is far preferable to any other method he has attempted.

From the Hartford (Con.) Mirror, of Aug. 10.

Alisma Plantago.—As frequent inquiries have been made, whether the alisma plantago is to be found in this part of our country; we answer these inquiries, by informing the public, that some of the above named plant has been gathered and sett with us at this office, by Dr. Comstock of this city, and may be seen and examined by all who have any doubts of its being the genuine plant. It perfectly agrees with the following description, copied from an English paper. It is said to be abundant throughout our country. It frequents a wet soil, and is most luxuriant in low standing water flowing about here, in the months of July and August. It will be seen also, that the following description of the alisma plantago, agrees with the one published in our paper of the 6th ult.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

Hydrophobia.—At the present season of the year, and with scenes of this most dreadful of all maladies around us, it may be useful again to call the attention of our readers to a discovery made by a Russian peasant of Sunbirsk, as announced in this paper of the 23 of Feb. last. The specific which is said to be never-failing, is the bulbous part of the plant, called by botanists alisma plantago, or the great water plantain; and to add to the value of the discovery, this simple is to be found in all the countries of Europe. In Germany as well as in Russia, the extraordinary properties of the alisma in the cure of hydrophobia is said to have been established by the physical world, and we hope the physicians of our own country will, without delay ascertain its qualities, and give to it, if found efficacious, the sanction of their authority. The Russian counsellor of state, Lewshein, has lately published a report upon the subject, in which he bears ample testimony in its efficacy, and prescribes the method of administering it. The root which, when divested of the tuft of fibres, resembles an onion, may be reduced to a powder, which powder may be strewed on a slice of bread and butter, and given to the patient to eat.

The plant in question grows in water marshes, lakes, and stagnant pools, and we believe is to be found in such situations in almost every part of England. A specimen of this plant, gathered in a pit in the lane leading to West Derby, is now before us, and we find it to answer strictly to the description of the alisma plantago, given in "Curtis's Flora Londinensis," vol. 4, article 28, folio edition.

Root perennial, white, somewhat bulbous, coated, and furnished with a tuft of numerous fibres.

Leaves all springing from the root, standing on long footstalks, ovate, pointed, smooth, ribbed, perfectly entire, upright, slightly waved, the footstalks semi-cylindrical, at bottom sheathing and purplish.

Stalk obtusely three cornered, naked, smooth, from one to three feet in height.

Branches producing the flowers disposed in whirls round the stalk and the lesser branches in a similar manner round them, varying greatly in number, and naked.

Stipula at the base of each whirl, membranous, withered, and sheathing.

Calyx: a perianthium of three leaves, the leaves ovate, a little pointed, concave, marked with lines, spreading, membranous on the edge.*

Corolla, three petals, roundish, purple, grained on the edge, flat, spreading, somewhat remote from each other, claws yellow.

Stamina, six filaments, fine and tapering, slightly bending inwards. Anthers greenish.

Pistillum: germina numerous, to 12 or more placed in a circle. Styles as numerous as the germina, filiform, upright. Stigmata simple. The pistillum magnified.

*The season of flowering in England is in the months of July, August and September; the specimens we have before us, and which may be seen at our office, are of course not at present in flower, but the identity is indisputable. It may be gathered at any time, but it is best when it has flowered. The roots should be well washed and cleaned, and dried in the shade; when dry it is pulverised and administered as above. Two or three doses, it is said, have always been found sufficient to effect a cure, even after the hydrophobia is declared in the patient, whether it be man or animal.

The New-Orleans Chronicle of July 14, says: "The slave market appears to be very brisk—constant demands and high prices"—then names the vessels in which 476 slaves had lately arrived there from the African coast—says the 400 taken by Gen. Jackson at Mobile, are also intended for that market—and that they are greatly indebted to the enterprising and successful exertions of a Mr. Charles Morgan, for the "copiousness of the present supply."

"Jersey negroes," the Chronicle added "appear to be peculiarly adapted it this market—especially those who bear the "mark of judge Vanwickle," as it is understood that they afford the best opportunity for speculations. "We have a right to calculate on large importations in future, from the success which has hitherto attended the trade."

Who this Judge Vanwickle is we know not—but we shall be cruelly disappointed if we do not soon learn that our Jersey friends have put some conspicuous mark upon the man whose negro mark is to such high repute at New-Orleans.

The mercantile interest may be assured, the "measure respecting the Royal Spanish Decree, relative to the ports of entrepot for South America, has been received in this country of a posterior date to the following official document upon that highly interesting subject.

The rumoured a revocation of the Royal Decree, which has been circulated through some of the papers of this metropolis, is totally unfounded—

NOTICE TO THE MERCHANTS &c.

" Conformably to your Lordship's Decree of the 15th April last, 5th Majority has been pleased to order, that, until the Ports of Americas establishes its tariffs, 10 per cent. shall be levied on foreign manufactures and fisheries, which may be exported from the ports of depositfor America ; as provisions, 10 per cent ; on animals, tools, and machines, 5 per cent ; giving credit to the persons interested for the collected of the 4 per cent on national produce, which, according to the Royal Decree of 30th September, and 31st December, 1817, is to be exempt and guaranteed it to be granted one year during the existing circumstances.

" I communicate this to you for its execution.

Extract of a letter dated Madrid, June 10.

Capt. Sierra & Mr. Alvarez, both implicated in the affair of Gen. Porlier, &c. and long their confined in the public prison of Corunna, by a sentence, confirmed by the king, have been condemned to be hung. Several bodies of troops are in motion towards Catalonia, the force of which quarter are on a war footing. The troops which were in Valladolid, with the Burgos, have been ordered marching for Santander & Bilboa, with a corresponding train of artillery. The troops stationed in Andalusia received only a quarter of their pay, a few days in the week the soldiers have no money.

The colonel of the regiment of Soria, in Seville, acting with the soldiers had nothing to eat, ordered them to be assembled, and at their head moved forward to the house of the Governor, to whom he exhibited the situation of his officers and men. The result was, that the Governor ordered the money that was in the treasury to be delivered out to him.

The Bishop of Orense, died on the 20th May, & bequeathed the considerable sum of money, to be divided into three parts. The first for the Apostolic See ! The second for the private purse of Ferdinand VII ; & the third to the inquisitors who had been persecuted or injured under the administration of the Cortes.

Extract of a letter from Frankfort, June 10 :

The King of Prussia is expending the money he raised by loan in England, in repairing old, & erecting new fortifications, to preserve the towns ceded to him on the Banks of the Rhine. On the forts at Cologne, and its opposite neighbour, Deutz, are employed some thousand laborers, and Coblentz will be rendered impregnable by repairing the celebrated Ehrenbreitstein, which sustained so memorable a seige before the Peace of Ruadadt, and raising three other forts—one at the index of the Moselle with the Rhine, another beyond the Palace at Coblentz, & a third above Ehrenbreitstein, opposite the Palace on the right bank of the Rhine.

Mayence, considered the key of Germany, although in the province of the Duke of Darmstadt, is garrisoned by Austrian & Prussian troops. The fortifications around that city are likewise repairing by the King of Prussia, at an expence of nearly half a million sterling. It is that peace on the continent is preserved only by keeping down and forbearing to suppress what are denominated popular movements amongst the people—Should the spirit of the inhabitants in this part of Germany, prefer what they denominate the liberal principles of Napoleon, to submit to the system by which they are at present regulated.—In point of commerce, the Rhine is of little benefit to Prussia, as the Maine, appear to be directed, and were it not for English travellers, little would take place upon their banks. The Rhine would indeed speedily fall into the hands of the sovereign.

A great quantity of fine fruit, consisting of cherries, strawberries and currants, were landed at Portsmouth from the course of last week, from France, and sold at very low prices—the market was also well supplied with considerable quantities of new potatoes, which were sold at forty for a shilling.

Patriotism.—Crisp, the miller, is snatched to walk from London to York, and from York to London, in five days being at the rate of 80 miles each day. Time of starting not yet settled.

From the 22d year of the reign of Edward 3d. (A. D. 1348) and uniformly the five succeeding years, to the 1413) the Sheriff of Lancashire returned to the writs of summons to Parliament.

" That there were not any cities or boroughs in the county of Lancaster of which there were any inhabitant burgesses who were accustomed or ought to come to the said Parliament, neither could they by reason of their debility and poverty."

A letter from Dover, dated July 2, 9 P. M. says the Royal Yatch, having the Archduke of Messingen on board, was met off Calais, and the yatch was ordered to lay to, when the Archduke went on board the yatch, and remained with her highness about an hour. The yatch then proceeded on her voyage to Ostend. We have received no further account in town ; however, it is expected the Archduke will be here to-morrow, or to-day. The Prince Regent went to Kew to attend her Majesty, yesterday about 4 o'clock.

Letters from Russia assert that Great Britain has invited the Russian Government to form a treaty of alliance with the African regencies, for the purpose of securing that right for the protection of the Calpicot of St. Petersburg will be invited to conclude a treaty with the British Government similar to that which has been already signed by Great Britain & the Netherlands respectively, for the defence of their several flags against the corsairs.

On Thursday se'nnight a respectable grocer and tea dealer, at Bank Top, near Bolton, was fined at the new Bailey Court House, in a mitigated penalty of £35, for having in his possession seven pounds of imitation tea ; and a second for £10, for having in his possession three pounds four ounces of a similar article, which, with other miscellaneous articles submitted, on the same day, to the seizure of various quantities of foreign spirits for being found under the strength required by the Excise Law.

The last accounts from France indicate a state of perfect tranquility. The army of occupation is to be withdrawn at the ensuing October. It is affirmed the French ministerial party will acquire great additional support at the ensuing meeting of the Legislative Chambers.

We are informed from Rome, that fresh robberies had been committed in the neighbourhood of Terracina, by the bishops, who were proceeding from Naples to Rome, to receive institution, were plundered.

From the Dublin Evening Post.

This day (June 30) the election for the city of Dublin came on at the session house in Green-street. Mr. Shaw proposed by Mr. Latouche, and seconded by Mr. Guinness. Mr. Shaw was proposed by Mr. Bell, and seconded by Mr. Bell, the Banker. There was no opposition, and scarcely forty electors presented themselves to receive speeches, and were very ill received by their audience.

Change in Mr. Grattan, 2 o'Clock.

We regret exceedingly to state, that the populace broke out into acts of open outrage against their Representatives. A chair of considerable size, finely decorated, was prepared for the Representatives, but the moment they appeared they were pounced on in the crowd by ruffians. They had not proceeded twenty paces up Henry-street, when a violent assault commenced. The flagstones, were landed at Portsmouth, with the course of last week, from France, and sold at very low prices—the market was also well supplied with considerable quantities of new potatoes, which were sold at forty for a shilling.

immediately placed in his possession, upon his consenting to assume her name, by act of course, and submitted to the proposition, the necessary preliminaries were arranged, & in a few days the Banker's Clerk from the metropolis mustered a sum of £60,000.—Miss H.—reserved a sufficient sum to maintain herself in affluence for the remainder of her life, and, should he survive, him at her death, become possessed of a considerable addition to his already handsome fortune.

Anecdote of Mr. Kean.—On evening, as that unrivalled actor, Mr. Kean, was performing in a Concert-room at —, he was addressed by a poor negro, who was almost naked. The miserable condition of the supplicant excited Mr. Kean's compassion, and as he wished to oblige his host, but had not any money about him, with almost unexampled charity he took off his great coat, and put it on the beggar, who was no doubt, greatly surprised at such an act of benevolence.

Vicissitude of Fortune.—There are now living in Hampstead two individuals, in whose situation, three & the crosses and changes which are occasionally taking place in this life, have produced a singular reverse. The one is a gentleman who, not long since, was possessed of a splendid fortune, which he had formerly filled the humble situation of a porter, and the other is a man who had been the object of groom in the service of this very gentleman, who had been his own porter. Such are the contrasts produced by wild extravagance and prudent frugality.

Dreadful Conflict.—Extract of a letter from Lima, dated Valparaiso, Chili Bengal Native Infantry, to his brother in London, dated Lucknow, December 15, 1817.

" Since I last wrote to you, a dreadful circumstance has happened to me, which has very nearly cost me my life. I am happy to say, I am now capable of respect to his Excellency, the Newash Vizier of Oude, at his Palace at Lucknow, which is within one mile (some say distant about four miles,) when, on my return from dining with the Newash, I was attacked by a neighbour of half a mile from the barracks, by a body of strange Mahometans, called Mahrattis, of whom there were some in number, armed with swords and spears. I was riding quietly in my palace at the time, on a barren portion of land intersected with ravines, when the first notice I had of my danger was by a wound from a dagger aimed at my left breast, but which fortunately only reached my shoulder. On one side of my palanquin, and the door of the same, through which were presented the wounds close to my body ; on the other side there was a large wound presented. Perceiving that this was the weakest side, I grappled my sabre, and with my left hand exerted an equal force, treating myself from the palkee ; but the sabre unfortunately becoming entangled with the curtains, I was compelled to quit it to avoid being cut down by a man, " who stood prepared for that purpose. Supposing the bandit would make another attempt, for the preservation of my property, I attempted to make my escape by running towards my cantonments ; but I had not proceeded further than the rest, followed me up so closely, that after proceeding about 200 yards, to prevent being wounded behind, I turned round to them, and stood upon the defensive. At this period, a dreadful, but unequal conflict took place, during which I was more than once very near overcoming my antagonist. My whole attention was directed to him, for which purpose, on the first onset, I received his sword on my left arm, and struck him a violent blow on the front with my right hand ; he appeared much confounded at this, and went three steps back, as if about to retreat ; however, perceiving that I was unarmed, he again advanced upon me, when I instantly closed, intending to wrest his sword from his hand, but unfortunately my hand slipping off his, passed completely down the blade of his sword, wounding my hand very severely. I then made a similar attempt with my left hand, which met with the same fate. We then struggled together a considerable time, during which I received several sword & dagger wounds. At length he succeeded in cutting me down the face, over the eye, down to the mouth ; carrying away one of my teeth : the severity of this blow brought me to the ground, and before I could recover my legs, he inflicted another desperate wound on my back, which completely disabled me ; when fortunately at this moment was heard a party of sabres coming from cantonments, on which the whole body retreated with precipitation. They robbed me of about 600 rupees, & on my arrival at cantonments I found that I had received in all thirteen wounds, seven of them very severe, one expected to be fatal, & it was thought at first that my left hand must be amputated.—Two dagger wounds, aimed at my breast, were received in my shoulder, which they pierced to the bone. The engagement lasted between 15 & 20 minutes, and nothing but the greatest activity & strength of arm could possibly have saved my life. The ruin that I have suffered has been immense, but my escape from death, & my recovery, which is complete, are considered by every one wonderful. I am indebted, through the whole affair, the kind of Providence appears to have been evidently extended to me for my preservation."

As Mr. Nassighan, of Pimlico, was crossing Hyde-park, about 10 o'clock on Tuesday night, he heard a groan and a Throw a person in distress ; he followed the sound of the voice for some distance, and at last, to his great relief, reached the spot from whence it proceeded, he was attacked by a single ruffian, who, perceiving his friend's approach, left his victim, & fled. The unfortunate gentleman was however, unable to return him his thanks, as he was so much exhausted by the loss of blood, that he was not so to attend her Majesty, yesterday about 4 o'clock.

four minutes, the villages of Burgos and St. Brancheres totally destroyed, the bridge of Martigny and the upper part of the town laid under water. The Loglebourn also entirely swept away, and had just time to alight with their goods from their mules, and to climb up the sides of the mountains above the reach of which they were descending from St. Bernards to Martigny ; the mules, with their loads, were all drowned before their eyes. They themselves finding it impossible to proceed, returned to lift mules to Geneva, by the way of St. Maurice, the bridge of which was broken by the violence of the water. They relate that the catastrophe was accompanied with a dreadful noise ; that the torrent brought down wooden houses, palisadoes, and ruins of every description. An article in the Lausanne Gazette, confirming the above, says, it is difficult to obtain certain details ; all the lower villas are occupied with this new fortune ; the communications are almost impassable, and the extent of the damage cannot be calculated, except by the immense mass of ruins brought down by the Rhone ; but this gives reason to suppose great and irreparable damage."

On Saturday last, a party of the inhabitants of this District, went in steamboat to the head from the mouth of the Genesee river, to Chippewa River, in order to ascertain the practicability of sailing to Canada, by that route. They found it safe, and thereby connecting the waters of the Upper Lake with Ontario ; and the benefit is now established, that this grand object may be effected at a moderate expense.

On Thursday next, the 24 Sept. an accurate level of the same will be taken, at which time all gentlemen of science & information, who have the prosperity of the country at heart, are requested to give their attendance.

The Steam Boat — This elegant vessel entered this harbor on Saturday, and notwithstanding the newness of her machinery, proceeded against a head wind with uncommon velocity. In less than two hours she was, in our phrase, " hull to" from the shore, a distance by nautical estimate of fifteen miles.

The engine is said by the machinist to be equal to any in the United States, and it is confidently expected that the effects of this powerful machinery for speed, &c. will soon be seen.

A gentleman from the Falls of Niagara, on the British side, informs us, that the projection of Table Rock had fallen in. A considerable part of this projection fell in the month of May last, in the spring, and was supposed to have been effected by the operation of frost ; but the fact has since occurred during the extreme drought.

The piece which has dropped off, has been ascertained to be 160 feet in length, certain cavities which have been discovered by the tracture, a great number of crystalline substances have been found which have excited the attention of the geologist.—Ibid.

Miscellaneous.

From the Calcutta Government Gazette.

Asiatic Society.—A meeting of the Asiatic society was held at the Town Hall on the 14th. A communication was received from Dr. N. Wallich, superintendent of the Botanical Gardens, with specimens of paper made of the bark of the paper shrub, a species of Daphne and probably the same that is described by Father Laurieri, in his Flora of Cochin-China. The paper manufactured from this substance is extremely tough and durable. It is said to be particularly calculated for cartridges, being strong, tough, not liable to crack or break, however much heat or folded, proof against being much eaten, and not in the least subject to dampness from any change in the weather. If kept in water for any considerable time it will not rot, and is invariably used all over Kemaoon, and in great request in many parts of the plains, for the purposes of writing geographical records, &c. The method of preparing the paper is extremely simple. The external surface of the bark being scraped off, that which remains is boiled in clean water, with a small quantity of the ashes of the ash which burns the material. It is then washed, beat to a pulp, and after being mixed up with the finest water, is spread on moulds or frames made of the common bamboo mats. Besides these, Dr. Wallich presented to the museum a specimen of the Sapindus, of the natives, being the bark of the fruit of a new species of birch. It is much used in the mountainous countries to the north for writing upon, particularly by the religious. On one of the pieces was a letter written by the Rawal, head priest of Kiddernath, a temple on one of the mountains of the Himalayah, and a great place of Hindoo pilgrimage. For those specimens, Dr. Wallich was indebted to the liberality and kindness of Hodgson, Esq. Garden, resident at Catmandoo, who has already enriched the Botanical Gardens with many valuable vegetable productions of Nepaul.

The drill of the Horse Artillery is thus described, and in the battle of Waterloo was practised with success:—"The Horse Artillery learn to dismount their guns, take off a wheel, or lift the trail, and leave and scatter them about, so as to render them useless to an enemy, the men retiring each with an effected portable article, essential to their safety. On a given signal by bugle each man instantly rushes to his assigned post and gun, and the gun is remounted and fired, in less time than it has required to write, or perhaps to read this note. On the occasioning, in anticipation of an abandonment of position, the gun itself is moved off by the men without the carriage, the latter being supposed to be disabled, or any other part of the gun, such part is replaced at the drill, from the spare stores in reserve, with a rapidity and facility easily imagined by those who have not witnessed it.—Thus all the contingent casualties of actual service, are anticipated at drill and when called to occur, scarcely interrupt the executive operation of the gun."—*Land. From the Albany Gazette.

The following address has been handed us by an obliging correspondent, with a request that we would give it a place in the Albany Gazette. It is on a subject in which the community have of late interested; and we have no doubt will be read with a corresponding feeling. It must be highly gratifying to every virtuous and enlightened mind, to witness the exertions making in all parts of our country, to repress and discourage intemperance and immorality, and to promote and encourage the cause of temperance, sobriety and good morals.

TO THE FRIENDS OF HUMANITY.

The address of the society, recently organized in the town of Hector, county of Schuyler, for promoting temperance, and of, which CALEB SMITH, Esq. is President, and Dr. ALEXANDER MCCOMBER, Secretary.

Friends and fellow Citizens,

The Society for the purpose of preventing the improper use of distilled spirits, beg leave to address you on a subject which they conceive to be of vital importance. The vast ravages which are daily made by ardent spirits upon the health, estate, morals, and even lives of many of our (otherwise) respectable fellow citizens, cannot have escaped your observation. To oppose this rapidly increasing evil, is the object of our association; and we wish you to aid us in our arduous undertaking. We are sensible that we shall be opposed not only by the abandoned devotees of intemperance, but also by many well meaning men, whom prejudice or interest will not permit to reason fairly on the subject. But we are also conscious, that we cannot discharge our duty to ourselves, our neighbour, the rising generation, or our God, without pursuing, at every hazard, the course which we have adopted. If the means of successfully opposing the immoderate habit of intemperance be placed (as we believe they are) within our reach, and we neglect to employ them, are we not answerable for the consequences? If we chance to see the midnight plunderer stealing into our neighbor's house to deprive him of his goods, and do not give the alarm, we are justly considered as accessary to the crime. Then from a severity of reasoning, how can we be counted guiltless, if we behold with indifference, while our fellow creatures in a state of moral stupidity, are suffering that enemy of all good, that scourge of human nature, intemperate drinking, to steal away not only their property, but also their morals, their happiness, their health, their lives, and even their immortal souls. "For no drunkard shall enter the kingdom of heaven." To ensure success to our undertaking, we must cordially unite and "lay the axe at the root of the tree." To admonish the habitual drunkard or his danger, by telling him what he already knows (but does not realize) that ruin is before him, and sorrow behind, will avail but little. We should endeavour to abolish all the habits which lead to intemperate drinking, and make every practicable exertion to prevent the importing or manufacturing of distilled spirits within our territory. Many are the sources from which the stream of intemperance, which inundates our country, flows. But these fountains, which afford it the most permanent and sure supplies, are those that are most commonly exerted to. The practice which many sober minded people follow of selling by the gill, to drink whenever they have occasion to enter a tavern, merely in compliance with a foolish and arbitrary custom, is fraught with pernicious consequences; even from this small beginning many have contracted a love for spirits which has led to their ruin.

The fashionable custom of greeting our friends and neighbors, when they visit us, with a bot we are in the tavern a social glass, has contributed a large proportion towards swelling this stream of intemperance. This custom indeed drinking fashionable, but we may justly ascribe their ruin to this illegalized liberality of their friends. If we desire to assist in the reformation of a neighbours when they visit us, let us treat them as friends. Let us administer to their comfort; but not to their misery. If they are thirsty, let us not tempt them to be otherwise. If they are not, why should we supply, with fuel, that fire which must consume before long them? The practice, which merchants and distillers frequently follow, of selling distilled spirits by the small quantity to be drank in their stores or distilleries, and that which many farmers follow, of making bees to get their work done, of inviting their neighbors to come to drink who attend them, are both fountains of intemperance. There are many other smaller practices, which daily observation presents to the view of every serious reflecting mind. But the most fatal source of this injurious evil all is the custom of furnishing the day laborer and mechanic with spirits. This may be emphatically styled the prime fountain of intemperance. From it flow rites, into which we have fallen, have also stain their bosoms, this has shin its sons of virtue and honor. Here the industrious youth, by imperceptible degrees, contracts a habit of drinking whiskey; & the person of riper years confirms the same habit taught him by his master, & both together pursue the channel of intemperance until they are lost for ever. How is it possible for men to be employed in detecting intemperate habits, who are furnished with from one to three pints of whiskey per day, and we have no doubt will be paid with a corresponding feeling. It must be highly gratifying to every virtuous and enlightened mind, to witness the exertions making in all parts of our country, to repress and discourage intemperance and immorality, and to promote and encourage the cause of temperance, sobriety and good morals.

TO THE FRIENDS OF HUMANITY.

The address of the society, recently organized in the town of Hector, county of Schuyler, for promoting temperance, and of, which CALEB SMITH, Esq. is President, and Dr. ALEXANDER MCCOMBER, Secretary.

Friends and fellow Citizens,

The Society for the purpose of preventing the improper use of distilled spirits, beg leave to address you on a subject which they conceive to be of vital importance. The vast ravages which are daily made by ardent spirits upon the health, estate, morals, and even lives of many of our (otherwise) respectable fellow citizens, cannot have escaped your observation. To oppose this rapidly increasing evil, is the object of our association; and we wish you to aid us in our arduous undertaking. We are sensible that we shall be opposed not only by the abandoned devotees of intemperance, but also by many well meaning men, whom prejudice or interest will not permit to reason fairly on the subject. But we are also conscious, that we cannot discharge our duty to ourselves, our neighbour, the rising generation, or our God, without pursuing, at every hazard, the course which we have adopted. If the means of successfully opposing the immoderate habit of intemperance be placed (as we believe they are) within our reach, and we neglect to employ them, are we not answerable for the consequences? If we chance to see the midnight plunderer stealing into our neighbor's house to deprive him of his goods, and do not give the alarm, we are justly considered as accessary to the crime. Then from a severity of reasoning, how can we be counted guiltless, if we behold with indifference, while our fellow creatures in a state of moral stupidity, are suffering that enemy of all good, that scourge of human nature, intemperate drinking, to steal away not only their property, but also their morals, their happiness, their health, their lives, and even their immortal souls. "For no drunkard shall enter the kingdom of heaven." To ensure success to our undertaking, we must cordially unite and "lay the axe at the root of the tree." To admonish the habitual drunkard or his danger, by telling him what he already knows (but does not realize) that ruin is before him, and sorrow behind, will avail but little. We should endeavour to abolish all the habits which lead to intemperate drinking, and make every practicable exertion to prevent the importing or manufacturing of distilled spirits within our territory. This custom indeed drinking fashionable, but we may justly ascribe their ruin to this illegalized liberality of their friends. If we desire to assist in the reformation of a neighbours when they visit us, let us treat them as friends. Let us administer to their comfort; but not to their misery. If they are thirsty, let us not tempt them to be otherwise. If they are not, why should we supply, with fuel, that fire which must consume before long them? But the most fatal source of this injurious evil all is the custom of furnishing the day laborer and mechanic with spirits. This may be emphatically styled the prime fountain of intemperance. From it flow rites, into which we have fallen, have also stain their bosoms, this has shin its sons of virtue and honor. Here the industrious youth, by imperceptible degrees, contracts a habit of drinking whiskey; & the person of riper years confirms the same habit taught him by his master, & both together pursue the channel of intemperance until they are lost for ever. perform the labours of the day, and return at night to their families in peace and quietness. Let us not only not be guilty of holding the cup to our neighbour's mouth, but let us endeavour, as much as possible, to prevent it being put there, by making it the interest and exertion to prevent the selling or manufacturing of distilled spirits. This cannot be done without; but may be done by degrees, and as soon as possible to bring the sober part of mankind to unite firmly and understandingly on the subject, it might be done at once.

But it is no excuse for us to continue in the practice of evil because our neighbour does. Much may be done by the united exertions of a few. Let us then unite our exertions, and until other measures may be adopted with safety, let us appropriate our coarse grain to the feeding our cattle, instead of destroying our health and, by refusing to purchase imported liquor, discourage its being brought into our country.—We cannot reasonably hope to reform the drunkard, or the person who is in the habit of drinking daily at stated hours, until the inebriating cup be placed entirely out of his reach. But the rising generation may be kept from contracting the destructive habit, and hereby their usefulness may be preserved, and then the evil by degrees, may be obviated. If we effect this object, we shall do great good; and the happiness which will result therefrom, will be unbounded.

To expose the fallacy of the many plausible excuses, that are invented & in common use for drinking ardent spirits, would be a labour of more than ordinary length. We must content ourselves by barely observing, that notwithstanding all can say he said in favor, it is the most incontrovertibly, both by reason and experience that the drinking of ardent spirits on any occasion (expect as a medicine) is not only entirely useless, but that it is highly detrimental to the constitution. The time has been, when this evil did not exist, and when we were less healthy or happy, than they are now, and time will again come, when it will be known as it ought to be, that it is an evil. And how will this so desirable end be accomplished? Will God, by a miracle of mercy, turn all the ardent spirits in the world to water, or by like miracle, dispose all men, at once, to abhor the practice of drinking it? We desire to assist in no such way either. God works by means. He accomplishes his purposes through the instrumentality of human exertions. And we have no reason to say that nothing can be done. For who knows but what God is now working in the minds of men, to feel, think and act together in these societies, of this description, have already been formed 7 others are forming, and we have every reason to believe that we are faithful in discharging our duty, we shall receive the divine approbation and blessing. Then let us no longer say, "there is no use in it," but let us act like men, like rational, immortal creatures, who are amenable to the great Author of their being for the use we make of our time and talents here below.—Let us erect the standard of TEMPERANCE and SOBRIETY in our neighborhood, and let us flee to it as for our lives, as to an ark of safety, and exert all our influence to present this fell destroyer making inroads in the midst of us. Our cause is all awake in the great cause of benevolence. In this, all, all sects may unite and contribute their share in the good work. Then let us be up and doing, for our duty, and leave the event with God. And if, after all our exertions, we find the good can not be done, we will then be at liberty to say that nothing can be done, and to be contented to wallow in the filth and mire of intemperance.

On the 11th June, we received a Communication from Mr. John Wm. Green, dated Niagara, County of Lincoln, 21st March, 1818, which was inserted in the Herald, June 13th. Mr. Green puts sundry Queries to men of experience in this country, respecting the mode of preparing land for crops, to which we refer our readers.—The best answers we have been able to procure follow the Questions, and we must confess we think no better could have been produced. Our readers must therefore content himself for the present; but as the country is becoming more and more enlightened, improvements will doubtless increase with time. Mr. Greve's Communication has been with much politeness inserted in all the French papers, and in the Courant in English.

Question 1.—"Is there any known agent, by which stumps of trees can be suddenly destroyed on lands, which are in the commonly accepted expressions, called clear Lands?"

Answer—By fire only.

Q. No. 2.—"Is there attention practised in fencing Lands?"

A. The Farms being generally in small freeholds, there is only an immediate obligation on an adjoining neighbour. The second and third persons, &c. give much trouble in particular cases. Where the water crosses the farms where there is a ditch between two lands, called a line ditch, there is an immediate remedy by suit or arbitration; but draining being a privative object, it is generally attended to.—These observations apply to Seigniral property, not to townships; the reserves in them, and the many absent proprietors are a great impediment to settlement, nor can improvements be carried on to advantage, while large proprietors are suffered to withold their property in making roads and draining. The Legislature could not do a better Act, than to lay a tax on wild land unoccupied in the hands of absentees.

Q. 3.—Is there a system pursued of making clean Summer Fallows?"

A.—By most of the Europeans, and particularly by the Canadians. Some are asked, others hoe crops; the latter is most advantageous to the farmer.

Q. 4.—"Is it a part of the Practice of Husbandry, to renovate the exhaustion of land, by applying any and what substances?"

A.—Depending on the soil; if light, loam, stable dung, gypsum, marle, and wood ashes: if very strong, gravel, coarse river sand, and stable dung. Compost is also used, formed of compliment parts. Green plants are plowed in on light soils. Dung for manure; lime is found too expensive to use as manure, from the high price of labor.

Q. 5.—"Are there frequent and generally in all towns and places of resort, rous resort of people, Fairs, held for the accommodation of all those who desire to buy and sell in the same, in the most incontrovertibly, both by reason and experience that the drinking of ardent spirits on any occasion (expect as a medicine) is not only entirely useless, but that it is highly detrimental to the constitution. Birth-place of the potato—The following article is just published in the Wilmington, Del. Watchman.

"Interesting discovery—Dr. Baldwin, late surgeon of the frigate Congress, has decided the controversy respecting the habitat of the potatoe, Solanum Tuberosum. He found this vegetable growing abundantly on the south side of the Rio de Plata, in the wild, uncultivated situations, unknown to the inhabitants, who do not even cultivate this valuable plant, now so extensively cultivated in most parts of the civilized world.

"It is found growing among the rocks on Monte Video, and in the vicinity of Maldonado, in the sand hills on the river shore, as well as in low, moist situations near streams of water. The largest potatoes are not more than a half an inch in diameter."

A similar discovery has been made from another quarter, as appears from the subsequent paragraph in the London Monthly Magazine of June last:

"Don José Peyon, author of the Flora Peruviana, who came to Europe with South America, says: "The Solanum Tuberosum (potato) grows wild in the mountains of Chili, and I have also found it wild in the kingdom of Chili." The Indians cultivate it in great abundance in Peru and Chili, and call it papas. It is said also to have been found in the forests near Santa Fe de Bagota.—Richmond Compiler.

In digging a cellar in Tennessee, near the remains of an ancient fortification, a human skeleton was found. It appears to have been made A. D. 150. The inscription on one side is Britannicus Aug. Pius. p. p. Trp. Con. rn. On the other side, Aurelius Cæsar Aug. p. in Cos.

LONDON, July 6.

Reported Conspiracy against Napoleon.

We received a letter this day from Paris, dated the 29th ult. A dreadful Plot has been discovered at Paris, and it has been hinted, but we cannot give any credit to that part of the statement, that every room of the Palace of Fontainbleau had been burnt and organized it.—The plot as appears from the letter was to induce the King to go to Font- ainbleau, and there be made a Sacrifice at the Throne. The Count d'Artois was then to be placed on the vacant seat. All the Ministers were to be imprisoned in the Castle of Vincennes, except the Minister of Police who was to be hanged immediately.—A new Ministry was nominated, and as another letter says, "you may judge of its composition from the coward Dou- bleday having been named as the Minister at War." Our readers will recollect in our Paris letter, inserted on Saturday, they will see that D. had been sent to Dijon for the purpose of inspecting two Regiments, but more probably of corrupting them.—This Horrible Plot was discovered 05 M. Decaze, Minister of Police, the intended victim. We consider as a most fortunate circumstance that this plot was developed at the present critical period, when the Allied Sovereigns are about to decide on the expediency of withdrawing their troops from France.

The letters from the manufacturing districts state, that trade has lately been so unprecedently brisk, that it is hardly possible for the goods to be sufficiently manufactured to supply the orders for higher wages.

Death of the Queen Dowager of Swe- den.—A mail from Hamburgh has brought an account of the death of the Queen Dowager of Sweden.

As every thing relative to the recent Congress at Paris, as it must appear to all Europe, transmits as it shews the tactious state of France, covered at present by a thick veil of mystery, we transcribe the subject.—The Paris papers, as we stated yesterday in a Second Edition, are still most cautiously silent on the subject, and with good policy, for the French Government is still employed in a full development of the Plot, as there are many yet to be discovered in it, who must have been urged by an excess of ambition approaching towards insanity, but whose names we do not think it proper to mention. Though it is understood to have been the intention of the Conspirators, after the compulsory abdication of the Bourbons, to place monsieur on the Throne, yet it does not appear, that the latter was concerned in the Plot.—He was only to be a stop-gap till another branch of the Blood Royal should take his place, who, to turn, would soon have been removed, and from which the general confusion, a war of factions would have arisen, and most probably have terminated in the triumph of the Jacobins.

The account so long expected from Las Casas, of Bonaparte's treatment at St Helena, is shortly to appear in a periodical publication printed at Leipsic, with the following title:—"The Life & Adventures of Count Las Casas; Narrative of his voyage with Napoleon to St Helena; their residence there, and the treatment they experienced. This work is wholly original, drawn up from the most credible manuscript communications, and contains nothing but facts, the authenticity of which is warranted."

As an additional proof of the increase of our Foreign Commerce, the Dock Duties at Liverpool, which were in 1817, 475,099. 16s. 6d. have this year risen to 672,288. 8s. 3d. being an increase of 22,688 11s. 11d.

The Polar Expedition.—We have the pleasure of announcing that a whaler, which has just returned from the Greenland seas, that it fell in with this interesting expedition in the first week in June, opposite to Magdalena Bay, in Spitzbergen, in lat. 76. 54. all well.

Extract of a letter from Manchester, July 11.

"Work-people of all descriptions are turning out for additional wages; there are only three factories at work in Manchester and the neighbourhood, at present, and the men belonging to them are raising a fund to turn out on Monday. We are sadly afraid that we shall have a rough week." We were quite glad to call out the military last night; but all is quiet to day, and we hope it will continue so."

The Dutchess are bringing again into fashion English full-bodied side-skirts and pelerry capes; and some of the "dear delightful creatures" can be seen out without stays, pinching the waist so tightly, that the unhappy wearer resembles an hour-glass, in shape. Great coats, with a waist an inch and a half long, are all the go; and the Ladies' attire is now long enough to go twice round their throat. If short, indeed, can be too stiff a preposition; and every Lad that goes into the world must have his neck tied up almost as tight as some Lads tied up feet of it.

It will be satisfactory to a respectable body of British merchants to learn, that the sufferers by certain confiscations of English merchandize at Bordeaux in the year 1814, are to be indemnified. The sum allotted is 450,000*l.* in virtue of an agreement signed between the two Governments.

The following is an extract of a letter from a respectable house at Madrid, dated the 29th of June last, to an eminent firm in London:—

"I have to address you, through the medium of our mutual friend Mr.—— merchant of Cadiz, informing you, that the introduction into Spain of every species of Cotton Goods is now conceded to the English Government for Ten Years, and I was anxious to make it known to you this important event by the first post, in order that you might make your shipments accordingly."

A letter from Greenwood, dated the 10th inst. says "This evening Mrs. Cobbett, with two daughters and son, arrived from New York in the ship Cumbrian, and were landed at this place. Their first inquiry was as to the result of the Westminister election."

Curious Election.—A serious affair lately occurred at a small church in Wales. The Pastor having a tame cat, which, during the sermon, crept up and sat under the pulpit, the animal was so struck with the nodding of a drowsy Cambrian, who sat opposite to the pulpit, taking frequent inclinations of his head for a challenge to combat, he made a butt at his supposed antagonist, who, not choosing to fight, returned the blow preceded, struck the person who sat next to him, and laid him flat upon the church floor.

According to the accounts of travellers from Leghorn, arrived at Marseilles, three American ships of the line and two frigates were at the port of Tunis, and the Tuscan Government had under its consideration a request made by the American commodore, to be allowed to cast anchor in Porto Ferraio.

The Russian brig Rurick, under the command of Lieut. Kotzebue, whose arrival at Portsmouth we announced about three weeks ago, had been out on a voyage of discovery two years and eleven months. The crew had continued remarkably healthy, but the vessel was obliged to put into Portsmouth for supplies of provisions. During his voyage which at first was directed to the North, Lieut. Kotze- ue reached a very high latitude, but we are not yet able to state it with accuracy. He fell in with a most singular iceberg, of great magnitude, which not only had a portion of its surface covered with earth and mould, and bearing trees of various stable productions, but a portion of its under-line covered with a shore formed by the deposit of earthy matter ,washed down from the higher parts of the earth covered ice-berg. On this shore a landing was made, and considerable quantities of earth, with small trees, were found in such a state of putrefaction as to produce a most insupportable stench. The Rurick brought with her a number of casks and other parts of these immense animals, which had probably been preserved in a frozen state for many years. Specimens of ice which enclosed them, put in motion by some unknown cause, reached a more temperate latitude.

New Sea Wales.—A discovery has been made in New South Wales, which must universally effect the future advancement of that rising Colony in the first magnitude" has been found in the interior, running through a most beautiful country, rich in soil, limestone, slate, and good timber. A name of romantic allotted like this, has long been anxiously searched for without success, & may begin to indulge a hope that ere many years that the progress of colonization in New Holland would be confined to its coasts.

We regret to observe, by the Manchester papers which have arrived this morning, that the refractory workmen have not yet returned to their labours.

It seems certain that the Spanish government has various measures relative to a commerce with Buenos Ayres in contemplation, although it does not appear that any step is as yet decidedly fixed upon.

In the meanwhile rumour is of some busy character, particularly as mentioned in late letters from Madrid is one, that the port of Cadiz is to be exempt from duties, and that foreign goods are to be allowed to enter on paying 15 per cent & valorem.

July 21.

Most important document.—We are happy to hear that the audacity of the pirates, who have during the last year so much interrupted the trade of this country, under the pretence of the hostilities between Spain & her colonies, has at last attracted the attention of our government; and that orders have been issued to bring these offenders to justice. We annex a copy of what we understand to be a circular order to our officials on foreign stations, on this important subject, & we have little doubt that they will not be slow in carrying those instructions into effect, as they are drawn, and contributed to form, colour, and soften with the tones found on the banks of the Ouse.

His majesty the King of Wirtemberg has just issued an ordinance relative to the interment of the remains. Every child born since the 1st of December, 1816, shall be vaccinated before the 1st of December of the year in which it is to be already had the small pox. If the operation does not succeed the first time, it is to be repeated once or twice, if necessary, after an interval of three months at most. Should a child, however, in the opinion of a physician, be declared that it is not advisable to subject it to the vaccine disease, it is to be vaccinated with the matter taken from a child vaccinated, who is still in the progress of the disease, after the 9th day of it, the possibly to increase its favourable quality. No person, born since December 1st, 1816, shall be admitted in any orphan-house, seminary, school, boarding-house, &c. &c. without a certificate that he has undergone the small pox, or submit to be vaccinated. Every one who neglects this ordinance shall be fined twelve florins for every child not vaccinated.

At present it is not known in our paper, on what terms the Duke of Kent has been induced by one of his majesty's most generous friends to give up his claim, after the many individuals has continued his useful career through the mighty pathway of glory and honour, and to which he has added the splendid example of domestic virtue, which has justly rendered his name dear to every heart. The yearly sum of 24,000 sterling, and the payment of 60,000 sterling, which was the sum of his debts, are stated in some of the London papers, which is almost in every one forms the circumference of the Duke's yearly income, as compared in English miles.

At the date of the last advices the plague raged with great violence at Tangier and Oran. The following letter, dated Gibraltar, June 13th, relative to the plague at Oran, has been translated from the Council Office to the Commissioners of Quarantine, and by them to their Collectors:—

"My Lords—I have the honor to acquaint your Lordships, that by a letter I have just received from Mr. Scostervoich our Vice Consul at Oran, dated the 27th ult. I am informed that the ravages of the plague in that city were at that time so severe as already to have swept off one half the population. On the day on which he writes, 150 persons had died.

Mr. Scostervoich also informs me, that the whole province of Oran was infected, and that the mortality was considerable in the country, as well as in the capital, where the population of between 20 and 30,000 souls and that the disease has already begun to show itself in Fez, and the Emperor of Morocco dominions, and a city, from its numerous population, and the commercial spirit of its inhabitants having the most extensive relations of any in the empire.

My last advices from Mr. M'Donnell, at Algiers, are dated the 2nd May. The deaths during the preceding week, had not exceeded fifty per diem, while previously to that, they had risen to two hundred and ten. The plague, however, that this decreased mortality is either to be attributed to the reduced population than any other cause.

Mr. M'Donnell states, that the crew of the frigate presented by the Emperor of Morocco to the Dey, had all died, after remaining a month on shore, embarked almost three months previously on board a hired vessel, to be landed at some port on the Algerine coast.—We have not yet received any intelligence of its arrival. It is needless to observe that this event would have the effect of preventing the Dey from sending to Fromein, and about 47 cottages more into devastating course. The farmon column now quartered in the neighbouring villages, and which at one time swelled to 300 feet, discharged itself through a narrow straight into the city of Bergen. Lourine was the first village that suffered—sixty habitations were swept away. The next was Champeer. Here two old women were overtaken by the raging flood, and 38 houses, with a great number of cattle, were destroyed. The village of Lapey next had five houses and seven barns. The bridge of Bagnes, was now destroyed in an instant, and though the whole village was threatened with submersion, only seven were lost, and only three houses destroyed. At Saint Branchier five persons perished, and only eight houses destroyed. The torrent then precipitously turned by a jutting rock, which drove the torrent on the opposite side. The current now became more narrow, and consequently more overwhelming, on its approach to Martigny. Here it divided into three columns, the one following the base of the mountain on the side of Sion, the second through the village, and the third along the mountain on the side of Bolze. By the division of the torrent, its force was greatly reduced, as it entered the Rhone at several points.

The Duke of Wellington returned yesterday to his head-quarters at Saint Aldo-de-Camps. It is still uncertain whether he will go to England before he goes to Aix-la-Chapelle. It is however said that a treaty has been concluded between the Courts of Madrid & Rio Janeiro has been accomplished.

The following anecdote, lately discovered at Paris has much surprised the French Ministry, not from any apprehension of its affecting the tranquility of the State, but as it is trivial, in itself of no consequence, should have no unfavourable effect on the decision of the Allied Sovereigns, respecting the evacuation. The Duke de Richelieu, who is much esteemed by those Sovereigns, is said to have drawn up a very circumstantial Note on the subject.

Letters from Gex, (Upper Alps) inform us that the Rhone has overflowed its banks, and has fallen from the summit of the mountains upon its contiguous plains. The Commissary of Police, and several of the animal a great part, have swept away with it nearly all the vegetable earth; crops, vineyards, and meadows are totally destroyed; the inhabitants, in danger of their lives, had scarcely time to quit their houses, and to save a few articles of goods still continued that to the village of Lelex, in the neighbourhood of Gex, and contiguous communes, they expect daily to experience the same fate.

An article from Brussels contradicts the report, that the British troops will be stationed on the frontiers of Belgium, in the event of a war between Russia and the Congress, and France.

A report prevailed at the head quarters of the army of occupation, that, in the event of its being decided at the congress, that the troops should be withdrawn by the Germany, the services of Austria and Russia, and the king of Prussia, would remain in the country.

Accounts from St. Petersburgh mention the arrival there of the emperor of Russia on the 27th ult. In a late Irish paper it is stated that there has recently been discovered in the parish of Aghyaran, near the side of Wight, the bones of a gigantic animal supposed to be the same of Ireland. Several of the vertebræ are quite a the back bone, measure 36 inches in circumference, and contracted in form, colour, and still remained; and the elections have exhibited all the wild uproar, madness, and fury incident to democratic frenzy.

The various proceedings, however, which have taken place, have not probably extended into the country. Such tumults are generally confined to populous towns; and hence we imagine that London, Westminster, Liverpool, and Manchester, &c. have been the principal theatres of unfavorable political scenes. At Westminster, in particular, where the spirit of faction and libertinism first broke out, the election was characterized by scenes and conduct the most shocking that disgrace the human character. But the mob, the unhappy instruments, are not half so deserving of censure as those apostles of sedition, Burdett, Hunt, & others, who and taken every possible method to instigate them, both by their harangues & hand-bills. On the eventful day of the election, (which continued eight or ten days,) Sir M. Maxwell, a ministerial candidate for Westminster, was attacked & nearly killed on returning from the poll. The following is the account of this horrible affair, as given in the London Courier of the 24th June.

"On the return of Sir M. Maxwell, from the hustings, after submitting with the most laudable and noble composure to the insults & vile abuse of the miserable deluded wretches who disgrace the front of the hustings, he and his friends were assailed with the most infamous epithets & denunciations, and amidst a volley of threats and imprecations, had proceeded nearly half way to the gallant Captain's Committee-room at Richardson's, when some miscreant assulted him with a large heavy stone, which struck him a violent blow on the chest. Having nearly obtained the house, another ruffian in the mob aimed a blow at his head, which unfortunately gave him a severe contusion, near the brain, on the left side of the head. With difficulty & with the strongest exertions of his friends, he reached his house, but these base attacks, added to the strong & violent hunting of the mob, had completely exhausted him.

"He instantly went to bed on his reaching the hotel, and two eminent gentlemen attended him. On the afternoon of the 25th, the symptoms of his disorder were considered so alarming, that Sir Gilbert Blane was immediately sent for, and lost his able assistance, and by the immediate administration of the proper remedies, Sir Murray became more composed, but was far from being out of danger.

"The following spirited remarks follow the above statement in the Courier.

"After this cowardly outrage we call upon every man who has a British heart in his breast, & who will not be supposed to hold this principle of freedom of election, that a man who will not make himself a party to the base passions of the mob, ought to be murdered by the mob,—we call upon every man to join his liberty, both for the present, party, for each & all are in danger, under this system of assassination—we call upon every man who does not desire to be held forth as a mark for the shot & the poignard of the assassin,—upon all who are of a just value upon the achievements of our army & navy, to do their utmost to check this infamous project of bringing the lives of our brave defenders into imminent risk & peril—to stop resolute ruffians & ruffy round the cause of Sir Murray Maxwell—of whom it cannot yet be said with certainty whether he will recover from the outrage which has been offered upon his life last night. Let not the inhabitants of Westminster have this night one wink upon them, that they have not suffered a gallant son man to be assassinated in the midst of them, because he aspired to the honour of being their Representative, and desired to be found himself as useful to his country in peace as he had been in war.

"What an odious and horrible picture of brutal licentiousness is exhibited by these friends of the popular Candidates. How pure & honourable that cause must be, which is supported by such principles! While we read these, we ask ourselves, are we in England? We are filled, too, with astonishment & disgust when we can describe, to observe the tranquility of some of our contemporaries, who relate these infamous outrages, without one expression of indignation falling from their pens. No. They are afraid to offend their readers; they and the vile rabble are patron-friends. Although the former should murder a Government Candidate, the latter could only lament that a favorite Candidate should have been put forward."

Sir M. Maxwell was so seriously injured as not to be able again to attend the hustings.

The contest, two days after the affair, appeared in the Courier of the 29th:—

"The brutal assault upon Capt. Sir Murray Maxwell has had much more serious effects than were, at first apprehended. So great a contusion on that side of the head, which was struck, that the surgeons are unable to ascertain whether the skull be injured or not. It is certain, that the wretch who gave the blow had either a brick, or a very large stone in his hand; a more fat of a stronger texture never produced so an effect by one blow. The bulwas, last night, we regret to say, was less favorable than that of the morning."

The remarks of the Courier of this day upon the conduct of the popular candidates, Hunt, Burdett, Romilly, & their instruments, are very severe.

The Courier declares, they were pursuing "precisely the path trodden by the degenerate nobility of revolutionary France. They voluntarily dashed the chapeau of aristocratic pride, & distinction, to make room for the republican mantle of fellowship. They first abused the Government, & then the Constitution, they then vilified the persons for whom they did so. The servile adulation, when it had done its momentary work, was to be put on against the frantic projects of their friends. They still has the taint of nobility in their veins, and for that disease, the use of the guillotine was the only cure. But they led astonished; for they had hastily betrayed the interests of the order to which they no longer belonged, and when at last they perished, ignominiously perished, the voice of reason rattled the dooms of justice, which had been at once vulgar and selfish. May it be long before this country imitates those examples."

The Courier of this day observes, that it has been informed of the defeat of Sir M. Maxwell, and of the success of Burdett and Romilly.

"We are not time, now," we need would it be possible for us to find room, to give a complete history of the election, even of this day, which has been so long & therefore only mention such particulars, & quote such paragraphs, as will give our readers a faint idea of "Manner in which the election proceeded.

Mr. Orange Hunt, familiarly called Tandem Hunt, was quite a distinguished personage in the course of the election. Having offered himself as a candidate for Westminster, on the eighth day, after the speakers for all the candidates had addressed the people, he came forward to address the populace. The following is a description of his effort, which is given in the words of a gentleman from Augustine in seven days, by which three accounts come—gen. Bolivar, in the city of Angustine, & the capital of one of two other general officers, are at Angustura. Gen. Piar is called to the supreme command of the army of the republic military administration, and all operations will henceforth be in his hands; he unites the confidence of all the republicans of persons, and has already gained more against the generals and armies of Spain, than any other officer. In the action of the 2d of May, in which the royalists mostly merit—es were made to the cause of liberty and the country, after the whole of the Venezuela infantry were routed by Piar, with a corps of cavalry lancers, which he led in person destroyed the whole of the royal cavalry, and took them to the charge with lances, broke the Spanish phalanx, killed fourteen of spears & sabres in Spanish gen. Torres. He remained master of the field; and after he had rested his corps two days on the field of battle, & collected all his troops, he marched, for Columbo, carrying with him the arms, military stores, and trophies taken on the field.

"I read you a sketch of the distribution of the generals now engaged in reorganizing the army. Gen. Marino is appointed second in command to Piar. In Fernando; the volunteers from Europe who have joined the patriot army, are with Piar, and he possesses more confidence than any other officer of the last campaign were heavy in every respect; in noble spirits and self-devotion to liberty, and in arms would be destroyed by the desultory nature of the war, and the want of artificers for small repairs; as the loss of a cock or a flint would render a musket useless in a feather spring, renders firelocks useless; the whole attention of the government of Venezuela is directed to the interior districts; and the supplies of arms lately received from Europe, are so abundant, that the campaign will be with much ease, and plentifully supplied with every privation.—To promote the industry of the inhabitants, transform the wilderness into fruitful fields, to call forth the resources of the Canadas and put in system their various natural advantages, many of which still be dormant, to extend the blessings of peace, and to plant & place the education of youth on a firm foundation, are objects of the most noble ambition and which will yield to their accomplishment a satisfaction that can never fade away.

Persuaded that these objects will occupy the attention and encourage your Grace and your distinguished Relative, who more immediately directs the Government of this Province, and whose ardent desire to promote the public good, begins already to be felt, we look forward to the future with the most sanguine expectations.

Elopement of Capt. Wright.—Capt. Wright of noted memory, has broke his pieces of house, & absconded. On the 26th ult. (the day previous to his disappearing) he addressed the following note to the Governor now:—

"Sir—On the 27th of May last, I was arrested by order of your Excellency.—Since that time I have waited in expectation of a Court Martial would be ordered [illegible] No a longer has yet made his appearance against me. I therefore pray that your Excellency will withdraw the arrest. It you should think proper not to do so, order me to call and see you, as I have business of importance of.

(Signed) OBED WRIGHT."

To this communication, no answer was returned. His fears, we understand, were considerably excited by the premature statement in the Savannah Republican, of the determination of the United States to have him tried before the Federal Court for murder. Dreading a long and loathsome imprisonment in a jail, and many apprehendings, from the "hue and cry" which had been raised against him, that his conduct would not be impartially investigated, he took the fatal resolution to flee from justice.

A reward of $300, has been offered by the Executive for his apprehension.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE.

YORK, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 17.

Arrived on Thursday last, in the Steam Boat from Kingston, His Grace the Duke of Richmond, Lord Frederick Lennox, Lord George Lennox, Lieut. Col. Reade, Lieuts. Lind, Cockburne, Major Bowles, Major Loring, and Capt. Montmorr, R.N.

His Grace, with the same gentlemen (except Major Loring) accompanied by His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland and Lady Sarah Maitland, and Miss Maitland, proceeded to the Falls, and returned by the Steam boat on Tuesday. It is said that His Grace will leave the Province To-morrow.

On Saturday the Magistrates and principal inhabitants of this town waited on His Grace the Governor in Chief with the following address.

TO the Most Noble Charles Lennox Duke of Richmond, Earl of March and Dunfigny in France, Duke of Lennox and Earl of Darnley, Knight of the most Noble Order of the Garter, Governor in Chief and Captain General and Commander of the Forces in British North America, &c. &c. &c.

WE His Majesty's dutiful and Loyal Subjects the Magistrates and Inhabitants of York, beg leave to approach your Grace with our most sincere congratulations on your arrival in this Province, and embrace with great satisfaction the opportunity it affords us of testifying that tribute of respect which is so justly due to your illustrious House.

The great anxiety which marked your present journey to decide from actual observation upon the wants of the Provinces committed to your charge, and to supply the proper remedies, cannot fail to be a convincing pledge of the benefits which we anticipate from your Grace's administration.

Though forcibly sensible of the great sacrifice made by your Grace in leaving England for so distant a portion of the British Empire, we assure ourselves that the vast field of extensive usefulness which it opens, will appear to your Grace an ample compensation for every privation.—To promote the industry of the inhabitants, transform the wilderness into fruitful fields, to call forth the resources of the Canadas and put in system their various natural advantages, many of which still be dormant, to extend the blessings of peace, and to plant & place the education of youth on a firm foundation, are objects of the most noble ambition and which will yield to their accomplishment a satisfaction that can never fade away.

Miscellaneous.

From a London Paper.

DISCOVERIES IN AFRICA.

The temper & dispositions of the bey of Tripoli, the encouraging frankness with which he enters upon the subject of discoveries in the interior of Africa, and the sincerity of his intentions to fall in with the views of the English, are strongly evi - I on a conversation with captain Smith and our consul, recently held with him and some of his officers, which in so curious as well important, that our readers, we think, will not be displeased with having it laid before them from the original manuscript.

"His royal highness the prince regent, by a magnanimous perseverance in the cause of humanity and justice, having bestowed peace on Europe, is now solicitous to extend his benevolent views to the natives of those regions lying to the southward of the dominions of your highness, and the several kings, your allies; will your highness, therefore, assist so laudable an object by affording your powerful protection ? And will you be happy to render every assistance to such an undertaking; I have already shewn that two Englishmen who came here some years ago.

How is he happiness certain they were Englishmen ?—They said they were, and that they came from Egypt by way of Fezzan.

Does your highness or any person in the divan, recollect any of their names ? No answer was given to this question for some time; on which I asked if the name of one of them might not be Hornemann ; Mourad Reis said he recollected it was.

How long is it since they were at Tripoli ? About fifteen or sixteen years.

What became of them after they left Tripoli ; and where were they bound to :—They returned to Fezzan, with intent to penetrate southward to the city Nibe (Niger) and thence by the river to Tombuctoo ; but one of them had been ill of a fever, occasioned by drinking bad water, after fatigue, died at Ancalias.

Was that the same person mentioned to me last evening by the bey of Derna ? The same ; the bey had charge to conduct them to Bournou.

Does your highness know what became of the other ? He continued his journey, but fell ill at Houssor, in the dwelling of a Tripoline merchant established there, and remaining his travels before he was recovered, relapsed, and died at Tombuctoo.

Does your highness know whether either of them left any papers books, or effects?—No; but I will direct an enquiry. Moors never destroy papers.

Does your highness imagine it difficult for a party to reach the Nile (Niger) through the dominions of your friend the king of Bournou ? Not in the least ; the road to Bournou is as beaten as that to Benguzi.

Will your highness grant protection to a party wishing to proceed to Bournou ? Any person wishing to go in that direction, I will send an embassy to Bournou to escort him thither, and from thence the king will permit him to the Nile.—But I must first clothe him as a Turk.

Will he be subject to much trouble some annoyance on that head ? No ; for he must not say he is a christian. People in the interior are very ignorant ; I will clothe him in a particular way.

But will your highness guarantee the perfect safety to such a person against all accidents, expect sickness or unavoidable casualties ? —I do guarantee it.

Will your highness undertake to produce in the event of disaster, the papers and the effects of the deceased, with a particular note written by himself, commencing on the day he might be taken ill, stating his name, &c. of the cause and continued daily, until he shall be rendered incapable of writing ? This question is not to be considered by your highness as a doubt of such conduct, but it is absolutely necessary for the consolation of the friends of the defunct. I do undertake it; produce all such papers ; but there ought not to be less than four persons, in case of misfortune by sickness.

Will your highness give directions that the party shall not be obliged to proceed at the will of the escort, nor to travel in the heat of the sun, nor in the summer unless they like ? The strangers shall be masters. From September to May is the time I recommended for an Englishman, but travellers have a fault of generally hurrying a caravan.

Will you also answer for the assistance and guarantee of the king of Bournou ? Most certainly.

Can your highness afford protection to a party going to the south-westward ? Nearly the same as through Bournou.

Are there many boats passing and repassing that part of the Nile (Niger) south of Bournou, and what is their object ? They are numerous, and carry effects and passengers to the several towns on the banks of the river.

What are the names of towns in that direction, your highness has the greatest commerce with ? Wangara, Cathcorn , Cashna, Sangara, Coobe, Bonburra, Hesano, and Tombuctoo ; there are also some Tripoline merchants.

Next to Bournou, what place has your highness most direct communication with ? Soust, which is the principal station for caravans, that proceed to Tombuctoo, by way of Gadam.

What is the form of government at Soust ? Republican, with a sort of head chief or prince, the same as at Houssa or Tombuctoo.

In what manner do the subjects of your highness obtain leave to pass those countries at a great distance from your frontier ? The travelling merchants insure themselves by giving presents, trifling ones, to the head of the country they arrive at, who affords them safe conduct to the next.

How is the usual trade between Tripoli and Tombuctoo conducted ? It is mostly carried on by Fezzan and Gadam merchants.

What number of camels does the Tombuctoo caravan usually consist of ? Not so many as formerly ; not above a hundred and fifty. The caravan to Morocco is the largest, as they have not so far to go ; it is generally composed of three or four thousand camels.

When does the Fezzan caravan proceed to Tombuctoo ? The direct road is rather by Gadam, as the nearest and best. They set off commonly in March, travel greatly by night, and returned towards November, when there is very great relative fair held at Gadam, resorted to by immense numbers.

What are the principal articles of traffic ? Slaves, gold, gum, hides, dates, barracans, nitre, cotton cloth, and great quantities of a fruit resembling coffee.

What is the greatest length of time the caravan is without the means of replenishing their water ? Eight days.

"Such," captain Smith says, "is the substance of the principal questions I asked of the heathens, whose patience and good nature, during the long audience, were eminently conspicuous, particularly as the discussion of several of them required time and reference.

I trust such conduct will be duly appreciated, when it is considered that this prince, by the communications him made, and the treaty we have with several towns, already given to us, has fully proved himself above the mean interested that actuates the generality of Turks ; and more especially as in acting thus in defiance of the memorable prophecy, stating that all these countries are to be restored to the christians, and which is so universally believed, that the gates of the several towns and fortresses are closed every Friday from 11 A. M. till 2 P. M. at which time it is predicted for the event ; to this, in a great measure, may be ascribed the jealous anxiety with which the Turks watch our desire of exploring these countries.

REMARKABLE PRESERVATION OF THE BRIG GOVERNOR CARVER.

Extract of a letter from Capt. S. Dotten, of the Brig Governor Carver of Plymouth, to the Owner, dated Havre, June, 23d. 1818.

On the 29th May, in lat. 42, 20, long. 50, near the easterly end of the Grand Bank, at 3, P. M. we observed some small islands of ice. It being very foggy, with the wind S. W. and going at the rate of 3 1-2 knots, we immediately took in our royal and steering sails, intending to keep more to the south, being often obliged to luff and bear away from the islands of ice which lay about us. While in the act of handing the sails, I discovered a object twice as high as our mast heads, appearing like a Water Spout, but did not think it possible that an island of ice should be so high——I immediately ordered the helm a weather, hoping to get the vessel before the wind, and clear of the danger whatever it might be ; but before this could be done, we found ourselves completely surrounded, and covered by this immense mountain of Ice, which projected over our heads, so that the water, which ran from it in streams and rivulets, fell upon the vessel on the opposite side, and although our steering sail booms were rigged out, on the side next the ice, making a distance of 27 feet from the centre of the brig, they did not touch it.

It fortunately we succeeded in getting clear, and in less than five minutes after while so near that the rebounding of the water reached the vessel, this immense body of ice fell over directly towards us, with a crashing noise resembling the heaviest thunder, and continued for the space of a minute and an half.

We shall always attribute the saving of the brig to the steady firmness and active exertions of the men and crew, who have merited my sincere gratitude."

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

The Sea Serpent.—The following letter give the particulars of an unsuccessful attempt upon the Sea Serpent, on Thursday, near Squam River. The first is from Captain Rich who is at the head of the expedition ; the second from Mr. Dexter, whose brother commands one of the boats :

Squam River, (Gloucester) }
Thursday, Aug. 20 12 o'clock. }

" After several unsuccessful attempts we have at length succeeded in getting a harpoon into the strange thing called the Sea Serpent. We struck him fairly, but the harpoon soon drew out, and he has not been seen since ; and fear that the wound he has received will make him more cautious how he approaches the shore. Since my letter to you yesterday, we have been constantly employed in the bay—but a few hours since I thought we were sure of him, for I threw the harpoon into him as fairly as ever one was thrown into a whale. We took from us about 70 fathoms of warp, before we could wind the boat, with as much swiftness as a whale could. We had but a short run, when we were all let loose from him, to our sore disappointment. I suppose you would like to know my opinion of him. Be assured it is what is called a serpent—in that opinion all my Cape Ann men agree. It is the same that was in Cape Ann harbor—Be assured that all has been done, and we shall continue to do all in our power—but he is a difficult thing to strike with harpoon, as he can keep out so far to get it ; it is quick, and seldom shews himself, except in a calm."

GLOUCESTER, Aug. 20.

On Monday last, Capt. Rich, sailed hence with a large boat and two whale boats well manned ; my brother (Mr. Dexter) was master of one of the boats, and Capt. Rich of the other. Before they met the Serpent off Squam and chased him about seven hours, when they closed with him, and he passed directly under the boat of Capt. Rich's boat—he immediately threw the harpoon into him about two feet—he run the boat a considerable distance, and went with such velocity, that he broke the part of the boat through which the harpoon passed, and drew the harpoon out immediately. The harpoon they had was another chance before they give up the chase—he has no scales on him, and no bunches on his back, but his skin is smooth, and looks similar to an eel—in the attack Capt. Rich had one of his fingers wounded severely by the rope. The above particulars I have just received from my brother."

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

It should appear by the following article from Thomson's annals for January last, that the improvements in the manufacture of paper which we announced some time since, were not original inventions in this country, or at least that similar improvements had been before made in England.

"Under the head of patents, we have to announce to our readers that Mr. Lege Dodet has just completed the specification of his patent for improvements upon the machines already in use, for making paper in a long unbroken web, in continued lengths or separate sheets ; and we do it the more readily as from the great length of the specification, and the numerous drawings necessary to explicate it, there seems little probability of its being made public in any other way. In the improvements upon the ordinary paper moulds can be carried forward in an endless succession, and paper made upon them in sheets without the seams or ends meeting, just the same as by hand, or it may be made of any required length, and without the marks, lines or seams which the moulds leave upon the paper, and which are always visible upon an endless revolving wire web, as in a former patent machine of the same artist."

Mr. Brewster (the inventor of the Kaleidoscope) has lately constructed an instrument for distinguishing the precipitation of colors from each other, and from artificial imitations of them, even when they are set in such a manner that no light can be transmitted through any of their surfaces. The same instrument may be employed to distinguish all materials that have a small portion of their surfaces polished, either naturally or artificially. The application of this instrument is so simple, that any person, however ignorant, is capable of using it.—Thomson's An.

MESSRS. WEBSTER & SKINNER.

I trust I shall not be guilty in some what benefitted by the insertion of the following in your useful paper.

Died, on Monday evening last, in Schenectady, Mrs. Low-ise, first wife of Mrs. I. Brown, aged 3 years. The particulars of this boy's death are truly distressing and fatal for some years been subject to a disease which had produced a contraction of the legs, and a stiffness of the knee joints. His disease was by all regular practitioners considered incurable. A few weeks ago, the fame of William Wood, an unlicensed practitioner of medicine, who resided at the upper part of the city, reached him, and as He was applied to and pronounced the cure practicable. The child was accordingly taken to Wood's house, and on Monday morning he commenced his operations by endeavouring to straighten the legs, which on account of the contraction of the muscles, he could only accomplish by using great force. During the operation the child was in great agony and much exhausted. Notwithstanding this, he in a short time proceeded in the same manner, and with the same effects. He repeated the operation a third and a fourth time ; about four hours after which the child expired. Wood was immediately apprehended & committed to gaol. An inquest was held over the body of the deceased, and their verdict was, that its death was occasioned by the unwarrantable treatment of William Wood, an unlicensed practitioner of physic. It appeared from the testimony, that Wood was much intoxicated during the 2d and 3d, of the operations, and that he is a most scarcely ever seen sober.

What his punishment will be we cannot say ; it can hardly be greater than he deserves. There is not a more dangerous person in community than he who thus imposes himself upon the credulity of the ignorant. All we have to remark on the present case is, that the community should be more cautious in the employment of these pretenders. It is time that ignorance and presumption were to prevent quackery, if the people will still countenance them, I may even say enforce them and their nostrums, as antidotes to disease and death. Were this the only instance in which they had done mischief, little need have been said ; but there are few cities in the union in every part of our state, whose only licence to practise, is their ignorance & impudence, and whose only claim to miraculous cures are seen at every corner ; their nostrums infest our streets, & like the poison of the Upas, are taken up before them and their contents

LONDON, July 5.

Africa.—Another enterprize to explore the Interior of the Niger is undertaken, and we in all former cases, with sanguine hopes of success. Capt. Gray, of the Royal African corps, is intrusted with the immediate charge of the expedition. He is represented as every way qualified for solving this geographical enigma! he has been seven years in Africa, and is well acquainted with the Jaloff language.—The route is to be that of the Gambia river, which he had already entered. Many letters which have been received from this officer, it appears that his arrangements were nearly completed, and, what was of much consequence, his people all well, and in high spirits, notwithstanding the failure of former attempts. A transport had been dispatched to the Cape de Verd Islands, to purchase horses and mules, the return of which was soon expected, when Capt. Gray would directly commence his journey into the interior. The rainy season had terminated, and the weather was considered as favourable. Mr. Ritchie, late private Secretary to Sir Charles Stuart, at Paris, and Capt. Murrayt, of the Royal Navy, are to attempt a journey towards Timbuctoo. The former gentleman is appointed Vice-Consul at Mourzouk, in the interior, the capital of Fezzan, a dependancy of Tripoli, whose Governor is one of the first of that kingdom. These gentlemen are also sanguine of success, as the protection of his highness the Bey is guaranteed to them, and the journey not so perilous from that cause as by other routes, although they have the great Zaharrah to pass, and will be eight days without meeting with water. As usual, the French have been before us, and a Spaniard, who resided in Egypt for Bonaparte, has got the assumed name of Ali Bey, but actually set off. It is already known that Mr. Bowdich, and some other gentlemen from the Cape Coast Castle, have penetrated into the Ashantee country, and been well received, after some opposition from Bonsdul Intendant of Bonaparte's servile tools, but now the representative of the king of the Netherlands. Some curious information has been received by this means, which we thought, gives more probability to the death of Mungo Parke than any that has hitherto appeared. Mr. Bowdich met with some Moorish merchants who had been at Haussa, who stated, that while they were at that place, a white man was seen in a dog drawn car, with a large canoe, in which all the other persons were black-s. This was reported to the king, who immediately sent some of his people to advise him to return, & to tell him that if he proceeded much further he would be destroyed by the cataracts. The white man, mistaking the good intentions of the king, persisted in his voyage. The king sent a large party to escort him to the town of Haousso, which, after some opposition, they effected. Here he was detained by the King for two years, at the end of which time he died of a fever and dord. The merchants who visited this tale declared that they had seen a white man at Haussa, whom after this persons was Mungo Park or his companion, Lieut. Martyn, the last known survivor of the party besides himself, no mention exist of any returning, although there is strong reason for supposing that no other white persons could have been in the interior of Africa in the situation described.

The Spanish fleet which sailed from Cadiz, had put into Tenerife for supplies. One of the frigates had been condemned as unseaworthy. The Governor of Tenerife had supplied the contribution on the inhabitants of 120,000 dollars to supply the fleet, which it appears from the opening of the sealed budget, was destined to Lima.

SLAVE TRADE.

The King of France has issued a proclamation, in which he states that "wishing to secure by every means in his power the abolition of the Slave trade in every part of our dominions, we have ordained as follows:"

Art 1. There shall be constantly maintained on the coasts of our African establishments a cruising squadron of nine, marine, for the purpose of visiting all French vessels which shall appear within the limits of our possessions on the said coasts and of preventing every violation of our laws and ordinances.

Saint Cloud, June 24.

The second convention of the King of Sweden, exhibited a full display of the pomp and splendour of royalty.

The coronation took place on the 11th May. The king proceeded to church followed by an immense concourse of people shouting with joy.—After divine service the King ascended the throne, and took the oath in Swedish. The archbishop performed the act of anointing, and placed the crown on the king's head, which being proclaimed by the herald of the kingdom, the air rung with "long live Charles XIV." The young crown prince then took the oath to the king, placing his hands in those of his father received the crown of crown prince. The great officers and councellors of state took the oath, at the same time, when the king returned to his royal palace, amidst the rejoicing, shouting and hurrazing of the people. The king remained at his palace a short time, when he mounted a fine horse and proceeded to the royal garden, to review the troops, followed again by an immense concourse, who filled the air with their incessant acclamations of joy; in going to the garden, three shows of silver and gold were dropped, as is customary, and after his return to his palace the coronation money was thrown about, with the inscription—"The love of the people my reward." Thus ended the first day.

On the 12th, the king received the troops, and was again followed by the people's exhibiting the usual congratulations.

On the 14th May, homage was paid to His Majesty in the place called Lonyobacken. The throne was placed on an eminence under a canopy in a kind of temple. On the facade was read the motto of the kingdom—"The love of the people my reward," and on the top the arms of Sweden, surrounded by trophies. On each side of the throne were built galleries in form of an amphitheatre, for the Court, foreign Ambassadors, &c. The king being seated on his throne, he delivered his speech to the Crown Prince, who read it aloud. It made a deep and general impression. The states of the kingdom took, and on the oath, after which they singly ascended the throne and kissed the king's hand amid the roaring of cannon, and when the king entered in his carriage the air rung with shouts from the throng of "LONG LIVE CHARLES JOHN." In the evening they lighted up, and were crowded, and national songs sung and encored. On Saturday following the Crown Prince gave a brilliant ball which the king honored with his presence. His majesty went on foot among his soldiers and invited them to be gay and some thousands of persons covered by loud acclamations of joy, & were joined by the crowd who kept up one incessant cry of "long live Charles John," with huzzas and rejoicing until he had retired.

The following paper taken from a volume of the Repertory of Arts, may throw some light on a subject concerning which the public has expressed uneasiness; and which indeed is peculiarly interesting from its connection with the completion of the Grand Canal.

Its republication cannot fail, I think, of being useful.

Memoir on Mortars, Lime, Beton, and Pozzolana. By citizen Guyton.

From the Annales De Chimie.

We mean, in various memoirs, to describe descriptions of processes for preparing mortars & cements. I enquiries concerning the nature and composition of the ingredients, in the construction of such of their edifices as have escaped the ravages of time; tests for determining their degrees of solidity in different circumstances: observations on the nature of the substances adapted for each destination; and especially the means & principles by which they may be recognized. It appeared to me, that by collecting the leading facts and opinions, one might obtain within a small compass a number of truths, which admit no longer of controversy, and which cannot be rendered doubtful by any specially hostile object of the present memoir, in which I shall communicate several facts that have not hitherto been published.

Mortar of Lafaye.

In the year 1775, the late M. Loriot pointed out a mixture of one quarter of quick lime pulverized, with one half mortar, made in the ordinary manner with slaked lime and sand, as an essential ingredient in the stuccoing structures equal in solidity to the most ancient and durable works in mason-ry, in the Journal de Physique, tom III. page 231.)

Having observed the description of the lime to be a troublesome operation, and even a dangerous one for the workmen, in spite of every precaution they can use, are subject to the loss of the nose; I proposed to let the lime be covered, & when spontaneously reduced to powder to be re-slaked in a small kile, and to use it quite hot.

This process is described in all its details, in a printed memoir (Journal de Physique, tom. IV, page 413.) It has several times been practised on a large scale, and always with complete success, while it will be no matter of surprise, when it is considered that therein the two principal objects are obtained; namely a very fine powder, & fresh lime.

The description of the kiln, with plans, sections, & profiles, is to be found in an instruction, printed by order of the government in the year 1775, and in the journal de Physique of the same year, (tom. IV, page 311.) The dimensions have been given, so as to enable several workmen to carry on their labours without interruption; as also the proportions that have been judged best, for the composition of the mortar. These are in two parts;

Fine siliceous sand	3
Well burnt bricks pounded	3
Slaked lime	2
Lime killed in the air & re-calcined	1

Mortar of Lafaye.

In the year 1777, Lafaye published an experiment proving the manner in which the Romans prepared their lime & composed their mortars; the practical part of which has been extracted in a very detailed manner, in the Journal de Physique, for the month of June of that year, (tom. IX, part 1st, page 437.)

The principal article is the manner of killing lime without liquifying it, so as to reduce it to powder, and still leave it sufficiently caustic to yield a very strong mortar, and one which will grow harder in proportion as it grows older.

For this purpose, we are to take pieces of lime made of hard lime stone, which is to be broken in a mortar into pieces of about the size of an egg; these pieces are to be put in a sufficient basket, which is to be plunged into water, and kept there till the surface of the water ceases to bub; the basket is then drawn out & suffered to drain; the lime is then taken out & spread in a very detailed manner, in the Journal de Physique, for the month of June of that year, (tom. IX, part 1st, page 437.)

The principal article is the manner of killing lime without liquifying it, so as to reduce it to powder, and still leave it sufficiently caustic to yield a very strong mortar, and one which will grow harder in proportion as it grows older.

For this purpose, we are to take pieces the transport ship [illegible] in which most of the party took passage.

The party consisted of Capt. J. K. Tuckey, Lieut. Hawkey, under officers, seamen, and marines, Professor Smith, Botanist, Mr. Cranch, Collector of Objects of Natural History, Mr. Tudor, Comparative Anatomist, and Mr. Galway, a volunteer, making in all 38 persons. Capt. Tuckey had distinguished himself in the Navy previous to the year 1805, when he was taken prisoner, and held in captivity in France nearly nine years. All his efforts to obtain a release or exchange were unsuccessful, & he was only set at liberty by the peace in 1814. To 1806 he married a fellow prisoner, Miss Margaret Stuart: but in 1810 he was deprived of her society, by her return to England, to transact some important business, and the refusal of the French government to permit her to rejoin her husband. He employed himself during his captivity in compiling an elaborate and valuable work, under the title of "Maritime Geography and Statistics," which was published in England soon after his return, in four octavo volumes. In 1813 he was selected for the important service of superintending this expedition, for which he seems to have been in a remarkable degree qualified by his education and character.

Lieut. Hawkey had also suffered an imprisonment of eleven years in France, and was selected by Capt. Tuckey as particularly qualified for the duties which might devolve upon him as the second in command in this expedition. Professor Smith was born in Norway, & was educated at the School of Kongesberg and the University of Copenhagen. Under Professor Horneman he acquired a taste for botany, and accompanied that botanist in a botanical tour in the mountains of Norway. From 1807 to the moment of his enlisting in this expedition, he was employed in a great number of important scientific researches in the mountains of Norway and Sweden, in Scotland, and in the Island of Madeira, and in the Canaries. His collections in the last of these excursions he had not had leisure to prepare for publication, when he was invited to join the expedition to the Congo.

Mr. Cranch had been employed in making collections of objects of Natural History for the British Museum, and in this employment had become particularly qualified for an important office in this expedition. Mr. Tudor was a young Surgeon, and was recommended as well qualified to act in the capacity of comparative anatomist. Mr. Galway was the son of a Banker of that name, and, from love of science and of adventure, offered his services as a volunteer. He resisted the remonstrances of his family and the persuasions of his friends, who represented to him the dangers of the undertaking, and his services were accepted by the Admiralty, at the request of Capt. Tuckey.

The Congo and Dorothy on the 9th of April, anchored at Porto Praya, the capital of the Cape Verd Islands, at which place the journal of Capt. Tuckey furnishes a good account. After a stay of three days they proceeded on their voyage, and after slowly coasting along the South Western Shore of Africa till the 5th of July, when after regular soundings of from 18 to 22 fathoms the next cast found no ground with 120 fathoms of line. This indicated the channel of the Congo, and after sweeping in about an hour's sail, they so suddenly struck soundings on the other side, at 30 fathoms.—Not withstanding the great depth of channel, the current did not exceed two miles an hour.

The task of ascending the Congo proved to be difficult, from the mouth, to the highest point to which the party advanced. Although the volume of water was much less, and the current not so rapid as had been expected; yet the channel was so deep, and the banks so steep as to render it difficult to come to anchor in the evening, and to use to sail and precarious, as hardly to enable the vessel to stem the current. July 18, the steam-yacht, conducted by a party of people from the transport to the Congo, & the double and the other boats, which had been prepared for navigating the river, were gotten out. The navigation of the river was found so bad, in consequence of the great number of islands, shoals, and currents, and the lightness of the breezes, that the captain, with the naturalists, soon left the party, and proceeded late in the boats to Embomma.—She afterwards navigated a little distance above Embomma, about 100 miles from the mouth of the river, where she remained under charge of the pinner & 15 men, until the return of the party.

From the first approach of the vessel to the coast, they were constantly visited by great numbers of the inhabitants. They were a slothful, dirty, ignorant, & superstitious race of negroes, whose only object in visiting the vessel was to beg. Almost the only trade carried on by these people is in slaves, and several Portuguese vessels were at this time in the neighborhood, engaged in this traffic.

From Embomma the party proceeded, Aug. 7, in double boats, long boat and two gigs, up the river, which they found to run between two ridges of high barren, rocky hills, and of very difficult navigation. Capt. Tuckey suffered most of the Chemos or kings of settlements which they passed, for the purpose of obtaining provisions, and information, and the scientific gentlemen made frequent excursions on the banks.

Aug. 12, after a difficult voyage of about 50 miles, from Embomma, they reached Nouanta Cove, 12 or 13 miles below the great falls of Yellala. Here, after spending eight days in necessary trading the country, and proceeding 20 or 30 miles up the river, it was found necessary to leave the boats, and to make preparations for proceeding by land.

From this place the party penetrated principally by land along the northern bank of the river, but a part of the way by canoes hired about 120 miles. In the course of the journey they were constantly opposed by almost insuperable difficulties, in the roughness of the country, the scarcity of provisions, and the rapacity of the inhabitants. The following extract gives an account of an excursion made by the Captain from Inga, which is about 100 miles distant from the point where the expedition terminated.

"Lieutenant Hawkey having returned with a part of the presents for the chiefs, and provisions for the journey, I this morning (28th) determined to set out for Mavoonda, to bargain for some canoes; and was just on the point of departure, when the Macayo paid me a visit, and informed me, that if I purchased any canoes, I would be cheated and taken in, for that at a day's journey above Mavoonda the river was again obstructed by a fall named Sangalla, over which I should be obliged to carry my canoes—this information at once threw me again into a great uncertainty as to what I determined, instead of attempting to purchase canoes, to visit this Sangalla without delay. It was however sometime before I could procure a guide, and the good Captain being absolutely impracticable for a man with any luggage; and it was four o'clock before we reached Kinsaya.—Here I found the greatest difficulty in procuring a guide to Sangalla

DORSETSHIRE, July 25.

Before Mr. Justice Park and a special Jury.

CONSPIRACY AND ABDUCTION.

The King, on the prosecution of George Lowman Tuckett, Esq. v. James Bowditch, Jane Bowditch, William Bowditch, Susannah Bowditch, Elizabeth Ellen Gibbons, (wife of William Gibbons) Susanna Mulraine, Thomas Pond, and Catherine his wife, Jane Clark, and Elizabeth Stuff.

This was one of the most important causes that ever occurred in the history of criminal jurisprudence, and although the learned Judge did not think it necessary to trouble his Lordship to sum up the evidence, the trial occupied the attention of the most crowded Court we ever beheld, for the space of fourteen hours. It was an action instituted at the instance of Mr. Tuckett, of Taunton, against all the defendants as having wilfully and wickedly conspired to carry off Miss Maria Glenn, the daughter of Mrs. Ann Fenton Glenn, of Cleve, of St. Visecrit, who is only 47 years of age the 18th of August next. The indictment contained several counts, in order to meet all the exigencies of the case; it charged the defendants with having conspired and carried away the young lady in the night, from the entrance of her guardian Mr. Tuckett; with having falsely imprisoned her, in order to procure a marriage between her and James Bowditch, a labourer.

Mr. Williams stated the indictment.

Mr. Serjeant Peil addressed the Jury, in doing which he observed, that it should do it with much sincerity of feeling, that a case so replete with wicked-ness, fraud, and cruelty, he had never heard of in a Court of Justice. From the circumstances should be made out in evidence, which he had no earthly doubt they would, he should be entitled to a verdict saying that it was an unexampled combination of treachery and guilt resorted to for the purpose of overthrowing innocence & happiness. He (the learned Serjeant) was not anxious to fatigue the attention of the Jury previous to the investigation of the whole of the facts, he should therefore merely confine himself to a reference of the situation of the parties. The Learned Sergeant then proceeded in a minute and clear statement of the parties, and to detail the whole circumstances of the case, which may be collected most accurately from the following evidence:

George Lowman Tuckett, Esq. a barrister, resident at Taunton, was the first witness; he married the aunt of Miss Glenn; the young lady was intrusted to his care by her mother, who resided at St. Vincent's. In July, 1817, Miss Glenn, who had been ill with the hooping cough, was sent for change of air to Halway Farm, occupied by Mrs. Bowditch, attended by Mary Whitby, the nurse maid, & Mr. Tuckett's two infant children, not knowing at the time that Mrs. B. had any son residing with her. He was in the daily practice of visiting his niece, the place being within an easy distance from Taunton. He never observed any thing that could excite his alarm, but occasionally saw James Bowditch, a young man of about 25, at work as a common labourer among the corpses. Miss Glenn had repeated expectations; her mother had property, and her grandfather possessed two large sugar estates in the West Indies. The latter was an only child; she returned to Taunton on the 26 Sept. Her mind & disposition were the gentlest he had ever seen.

Maria Glenn, an interesting looking girl, was then put into the box, and was accommodated with a chair. She went through a very long examination. She related the circumstances of her going to Mrs. Bowditch's, and of her being instructed by some time that Mrs. B. had a son living with her. She had seen the person whom she afterwards knew to be him, but considered him as a common labourer; he sometimes put his head to his hat as she passed, but she did not know that he was part of the family. A daughter of Mrs. B's was married while the witness continued at Holway. On the Saturday before the 2d of Sept., the day of her return to Taunton, Mrs. B. and Mrs. Mulraine, a relation of Holway, came to the witness, and asked if she really meant to go home; she, wishing to be left between a room which Mrs. Bowditch said her son was out, and she knew not what was to become of him. She was repeatedly once or twice, and when the witness asked where was her son, Mrs. Mulraine observed, that she could not be ignorant, nor have been so long in the house without knowing it. Mrs. Bowditch's attachment. Witness expressed much astonishment, and asked what her uncle and aunt would say if they were told this, begging them to say nothing more of this sort, as it greatly distressed her.—She took her little cousin by the hand, and walked away. The following day Mrs. Mulraine came and requested her to speak to James Bowditch, who was like one distracted at the thought of her going away. Nothing that his family could not correct with him, but that if witness would speak to him, he would be convinced and made sensible of the difficulties of their situations. She felt that it was wrong to go, but pitied at length, and expressed her surprise at his conduct to his sister having shortly before assured her that what his mother said was in joke. James made no reply—but Mrs. Mulraine said it was no wonder if, when so very nice a young lady was in the house, a young man should become attached to her. Mrs. Bowditch, as well as herself, would say something particular to say. She applied to her aunt, who refused her leave. She then said, "I must come with me directly," and led her into the kitchen, & forced her to drink a cup of something black & bitter like medicine. Witness and Mr. Bowditch afterwards led her through a field and placed her in a chair. Before they set out, witness was obliged to drink another cup of the same liquid, which she was sure was not tea, but which caused her to fall into a stupor. She could recollect nothing further, till she heard James Bowditch in the middle of the night asking what effect it was. They got on safely after-ward at Thorsford, at the house of Mr. Paul, one of the defendants, who was married to sister of the Bowditches.—Paul had been at Taunton on the day of the visiting manner. "We shall now hear all the bells in the parish ringing." Mrs. Paul asked if they had got a child. Witness answered, "No." James Bowditch said, "yes I could hardly keep her in the night: she was one minute laughing, & another crying." Laughing he had done business for them; he defended them now. He cannot say how long it would take to walk from Taunton to William Bowditch's, though it is in the same street. Perhaps a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes to go there and back: a person might walk it in half, if they had any business to transact.

Mr. Serjeant Peil inquired for the letters, which had been shewn to Miss Glenn but Mr. Cabert said he should not offer them in evidence.

"Late from England."—The ship Magnet, capt. Ogden, arrived here last evening, in 25 days from Liverpool, being the shortest passage that made this season. This combination of the labourers appears to be quite extensive: it is said that large pecuniary contributions to these deluded people have been made from the mechanics of London. Agricultural Report for July.—The continuance of the dry weather, through the earlier part of the last month, has brought the wheat crop to an early maturity, the harvest in the southern counties, being generally begun. The wheat collects heavy in hand, of the finest quality, and will average a good crop, in the south counties, will scarcely produce the seed grain: but, in others a full crop. Oats very short in the straw, but of great yield, and very fine quality. Beans, peas, and all the leguminous class coated well, but have no burden of straw. The turnips are in a fine crop almost all sorts that are called turnip lands, but the other species of vegetable look sickly for the want of rain. Summer fallows were never in finer or more husbandlike state. Apples a very great crop, and the hop land blooming well.

Duke of Wellington.—The court of cassation at Brussels, in an extraordinary sitting on the 5th of August, has rejected the appeal of Lord Wellington against the sentence passed by the tribunal at Ghent in favor of the editor of the "Journal Général de la Belgique" for libel. After a discussion of 4 hours, the court annulled the decision of the tribunal of Ghent, and declared that the editor had incurred against his paper the character of calumny. The court condemned M. de Busscher, the editor, to one month's imprisonment, and before the definitive of his civil rights for five years, to a fine of 55 florins, and to the costs of the two trials, instead of damages. The translation of the sentence may also be printed at the expense of M. de Busscher, in whatever part of the Kingdom the duke of Wellington shall please.

THE POLAR EXPEDITION, &c.

For the following interesting observations on the state of the ice in the arctic circles, and the probability of our northern expedition accomplishing the object we are indebted to the intelligent captain of one of our Greenland ships, recently arrived here:—

"The quantity of ice this year, which have sailed to the north, attaining one or more of the eats sought, is a subject on which much argument has been urged. The existence of open water, popular and prevailing opinion of the day. Others are of opinion that the ice is not broken or separated by any natural causes, but has been carried by the current, and accumulated in the bays. Whatever may be the cause, it is certain that there is more than usually of open water, and that the ice is more broken and separated than usual at this time, be ensured of reaching or even coming near the pole.

"For other objects of the expedition, I have no doubt, will be fully realized, viz. the ascertaining whether Spitzbergen be an island, or joins some other land; and the investigating the situations of the bays, inlets, &c. The ice, this season, separated very early from the land, which circumstance was certainly favorable to the miner, if not particularly so to the major objects of the undertaking. In giving my opinion decidedly against the probability of the great end be which we anxiously look, being attained, it is but right to say, that I have witnessed no circumstance which has given me any reason to hope for a successful issue. I have, however, been and remain ready to engage to tranship the present with some of the former appointments are fair for a more promising year. I shall therefore sail, in the year 1818, I reached the latitude of 83, 19 N. and could see no obstacles but what might easily have surmounted, had the party been provided to proceed further. This season, as I have before observed, from the ice not appearing so in the season I have stated, to the country for the north, but continuing close and unbroken."

Naval Enterprise.—A man arrived in Liverpool last week with his family, from Saybrook, Conn. bound to Ohio, via New York and Philadelphia. The singular plan of conducting such a journey, in preference to taking the usual route, is worth recording on account of its novelty. He left Saybrook in a two horse sail boat, on the Connecticut river, with his family and furniture, came through the sound and up the Hudson to this place, where he took his boat on board a waggon and transported by land to Schenectady. At that place he removed his water conveyance, with intention to proceed with his family in the boat to the falls of Niagara; thence, after a portage of 16 miles, to land in the Niagara river, proceed down the Lake to Erie to Dunkirk, and by a portage of 5 miles to Chautauque lake, proceed down the Chautauque creek and the Alleghany river to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania thence to Ohio, Illinois, or Missouri, as former may invite. Should he succeed in the enterprise, and we see no reason why he will, when he reaches Pittsburgh, have travelled nearly 1000 miles through the interior of the country, by water, at the small expense of about 30 miles portage, in the boat with which he left the sea board, and which, from the cheapness of land carriage here, are he reaches the ocean of 2000 miles more.—Alb. Argus.

In the Philadelphia Aurora of Saturday last the editor says—"It is notorious as the monday sun, that the late election has been carried by bribery. The Jury of Chester county have presented the whole business in the most glaring colors. Bribery, corruption, and perjury, have been practised to an extent unheard of in any country, and unparalleled in the annals of the world. Every thing that is dear to a free people, every thing that is valuable to a free country, has been sacrificed on the altar of party rage. Our elections are now carried by the most profligate and abandoned characters, who, for a few dollars, will swear to any thing, and who, for a few more, will swear to the contrary

Miscellaneous.

The New England states are divided into townships, containing from 4 to 6 square miles; and by the laws of those states, each town is obliged to furnish a free school when it contains a certain number of inhabitants, and to increase the schools as the inhabitants increase. Every Township in New England has also a little village, where is commonly established the church, academy and town or free school, &c; the master is maintained like manner as the schools, who in every town a member of one of the universities, and reading law, medicine or divinity.—These schools are erected & supported by agreement, which having so widely spread, is not burthensome or oppressive; and the penalty for neglecting to erect schools is so great, that a violation of the laws respecting them, is seldom enforced, has ever occured. The master or teacher is respected and beloved by all classes of society throughout the N. England states.—In this manner we can easily account for the industry and activity of mind which so remarkably characterise that enterprising and indefatigable people; they all have the rudiments of a good education, and by this means when they commence in active life, they are prudent, careful and calculating. Most of the great and eminent men of New England were educated in, or have been the teachers of these schools.—Amos and Franklin were thus educated, and Amos was a teacher of one early in life. In the town of Boston the child of a beggar may go to a free school, learn reading, writing, arithmetic and grammar, and may then go to the Greek and Latin free school and qualify himself for the University of Cambridge, I as from all expense—for on there get through the University as a liberty scholar, and then in time, if qualified, become a president of the U. States. And all these god-like institutions, I may be allowed the expression, are supported in such a way, as not to be a burthen to the people.—Federal Gazette.

From a London Paper, June 25.

His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, always ready to foster and encourage every thing tending to promote commerce for the public benefit, has been graciously pleased to patronize the discovery of the mineral called rebalt, formerly imported in this country in large quantities from the continent, but which has now been discovered to exist, in very excellent quality and abundance, in a mine in the county of Cornwall, which is worked by a company of proprietors, under the firm of the British Cobalt Smelting Company, of No. 26, Great Winchester street, London.

The cobalt miners, after an important chemical preparation to free it from all extraneous substances, produces the beautiful royal blue ground, so much admired on Canes, and in order to render it effect, the prince regent has directed a service of Worcester porcelain to be manufactured at the works of Messrs. Flight, Barr and Barr, of Coventry street, the ground colour of which is expressly desired by his royal highness to be made solely from British cobalt.

Mr. Watson Taylor's superb service, just finished at the above works, which has been so much the subject of admiration, is decorated with the royal blue ground, produced from the same beautiful mineral, and enriched with the pointing of flowers and shells, surrounded with an embossed Grecian border. The tout ensemble of this service is rich and highly finished set, does equal credit to the enlightened taste and liberal feeling uniformly displayed by this gentleman.

New Discoveries in Egypt.

To the end of time, Egypt must continue to be the ultima thule of the search of travellers. Additional discoveries of ancient works have recently been made. We are led to expect shortly from Mr. Salt, the consul general to that country, a more correct translation of the inscription of the column of Dendera, (commonly called that of Pompey) than it is hitherto appeared, and we understand that the same indefatigable traveller, being by a former river of the name of Cleopatra, has discovered and brought to transporting from Thebes very interesting fragments of Egyptian sculpture, but has also discovered a passage cut in the solid rock four hundred feet in length, under the great pyramid, with chambers at the lower extremity, and communicating with the mysterious well which has hitherto puzzled all our antiquaries and travellers. Excavations have also been effected among the sepulchral structures in the neighbourhood upon the desert; and, among other curiosities, a small ——— and fine granite tablet, have been discovered between the lion's paws of the sphynx.—Asiatic Journal.

The art of inscribing Letter.—The most beautiful and the most useful monuments, says the Journale des Debats, which erudition raised to France, in the eighteenth century, was, without contradiction the art of inscribing duties.—The most exact research, the most rare sagacity, and the soundest criticism presides in the work; which was first published, in 1776, in one octavo volume, by D. Clement, a religious servant of the congregation of St. Maur. This laborious writer afterwards enlarged his great work, and published it again in three folio volumes, during the years 1784—5, and 7. Though dragged from his bell few years after, nothing could detach him from his labours; and, during the most violent storms of the revolution, he continued his peaceful and useful researches, until his death in 1793. The manuscripts which he had prepared, & which are necessary to complete his work, have been preserved, and are now in the hand of Mr. de St. Albin, who intended to include them in the new edition of the Art, which is now in a course of publication. Two volumes have already appeared. It is in octavo; and will make four volumes. It is assuredly one of the most useful enterprises, which could engage the remarkable activity of our printers and editors.

Journal de Deb. 30 Mai, 1818.

From the Glasgow Chronicle.

DOMESTIC SEAL.—A gentleman in the neighbourhood of Burnt Island has completely succeeded in taming one of these animals. Its singularities daily continue to attract the curiosity of strangers. It appears to possess all the sagacity of the dog, lives in its master's house, and eats from his hand. He usually takes it away with him in his fishing excursions, upon which occasions it affords no small entertainment. When once into the water, it will follow for miles the trace of the boat, and although thrust back by the oars, it never relinquishes its purpose; indeed, it struggled so hard to regain its seat, that one would imagine its fondness for its master had entirely overcome the natural predilection for its native element.

From the Philadelphia Freeman's Journal.

White Crockery Ware.—We have in our possession several pieces of earthen ware made at the factory of Mr. David G. Seixas, near this city. If we had not obtained proof of its domestic origin, we should not have hesitated to believe it from its general appearance, to be of transatlantic production. In fact we should have been chiefly guided by the knowledge that many attempts have proved unsuccessful to imitate the Liverpool white crockery. We should have been biased by the popular opinion, that the United States could not furnish suitable materials. Or if the materials could be had, that we were ignorant of the art of compounding them. But the result of the research and exertions of Mr. S. the proprietor of the pottery alluded to, at once sets aside the erroneous prejudices of these opinions.

We are informed from an authentic source, and it gives us satisfaction to promulgate it, that every material which he makes use of, is derived from our own soil, and exists in such abundance, that they may be said to be inexhaustible—further more, that no foreigner has ever had any concern or superintendence, or employ, in his manufactory.

This is the only white ware pottery in the U. States.

The principal of the materials are clay and flint. The former is a grayish blue colour, and contains pyrites, or sulphur and iron chemically combined, the presence of which impairs the colour of the ware. They are separated by an economical and expeditious process, an art not practised or known in the European potteries. The clay is copiously diffused in water, and passed through fine lawn sieves, to detach the larger particles of sand, &c.

The flint is of a grayish black colour, it is exposed to a strong heat, and is suddenly plunged into cold water. By frequent repetition of calcination and pringeration, whiteness & triability ensue. It is then ground to powder finer than superfine flour.

Thunder.—The following rules for the precautions to be observed during thunder storms, appeared in the London Literary Gazette. They are founded on the general notions concerning substances and bodies capable of serving as conductors to the electric fluid, and the circumstances most likely to occasion its attraction:—

1st. In walking in the open air, it is recommended to stop on perceiving the lightning, and not to resume the motion until the thunder is heard.

2d. The shorter all forces, particularly very high ones, is to be avoided.

If within doors, the windows and doors should be closed to prevent any current of air.

The persons in the room should avoid the fire-place, windows, doors, and all things ornamented with metallic substances, and place themselves in the middle of the room.

Flame and smoke being conductors, the fire should be extinguished. For greater security persons may seat themselves in one chair and their feet in another, and thus remain insulated from all conductors. Dr. Franklin advises the sitting on feather beds or mattresses in the middle of the room.

The most certain way, however, would be to have a hammock or bed suspended by silk cords, at unequal distances from the four walls, the ceiling & floor; for, as these objects are not such powerful conductors as the wall, the lightning would not prefer an interposed course across the air of the room and beds, whilst it might continue to run along the walls, which are the best conductors.

In this manner, the dangerous fluid may be avoided, if it is possible to avoid it, this situation being the most secure that can be taken in case of lightning, in a house unprovided with protecting conductors externally.

Musk-Melons.—The cultivation of this fragrant fruit has long been a disgrace to the New-York market.—Although every care has been repeatedly taken to distribute seeds of the best species, such repeated exertions have always attended every effort to improve the breed, that we had almost abandoned every hope that our market would rival Philadelphia in the production of this exquisite fruit. We are indebted, however, to Mr. Aaron R. Jones, from that quarter, for having supplied us, most abundantly, this season, with Musk-Melons of the first quality, and of the most delicious flavour, and at very reasonable prices. He has, by experiment, convinced our horticulturists that good Melons are as easily cultivated as bad. This is the season when the sample is most valuable, rewarded this enterprising person. Last year he commenced his experiment at Hoboken—but the present season he removed to Guanos, Long Island, a kindlier earlier soil. The following calculations, founded on enquiry & pretty accurate estimates, will show the reward he is likely to reap from his enterprize.

Mr. Jones has cultivated eight acres of land with Musk-Melons solely. He planted 16,000 hills, which will certainly yield for market three Melons per hill, 48,000 Melons.

These 48,000 Melons will probably average 10 cents per Melon, is $4,800 which gives a product of $600 per acre.

Allowing one half for the expenses of manure, culture, and bringing to market, will leave a net profit of $2,400 equal the $300 per acre.

This instance of successful enterprize is held up as an incentive to gardeners & farmers in the vicinity of the city, to follow this profitable example. Instead of the toil and trouble attending the cultivation and bringing to market boat loads of unsaleable fruit, how much more productive will it be to cultivate from the choicest seeds, unmingled with any other inferior qualities, and thus secure a certain profit.—*N.Y. FORMATION OF CORAL REEF.

FROM CAPT. HALL'S VOYAGE TO LOO-CHOO.

The examination of a coral reef during the different stages of one tide, seems, as capt. Hall remarks, to be particularly interesting. When the tide rises, and when the waves begin to wash over it, the coral worms protrude themselves from holes which were invisible. These animals are of great variety of shapes and sizes; and in such number, that in a short time the whole surface of the rock appears to be alive & in motion. The most common worm is in the form of a star, with arms from 4 to 6 inches long, which are moved about with a rapid motion in all directions, probably to catch food. Others are so sluggish that they may be mistaken for pieces of the rock; they are generally of a dark colour, and from 4 to 5 inches long, and 2 or 3 round.—When the coral is broken about water mark, it is a solid hard stone; but if any part of it be detached at a spot which tide reaches every day, it is found to be full of worms, of different lengths and colours; some being as fine as a thread, and several feet long; others resembling shells, and not above 2 inches long.

The growth of coral appears to cease when the worm is no longer exposed to the washing of the sea. Accordingly, a reef rises in the form of a small bank, till its top has gained the level of the highest tides, above which the worm has no power to advance, & the reef, of course, no longer extends itself upwards. The other parts, in succession, reach the surface, and there stop; forming, in time, a level field, with steep sides all round. The reef, as it can now reach no higher, extends itself laterally in all directions. But this growth being as rapid at the upper edge as it is lower down, the steepness of the sides is still preserved. There are the two circumstances which render coral reefs dangerous in navigation; for, in the first place, they are seldom seen above the water; and, in the next, their sides are so steep, that a ship's bows may strike against the rock before any charge of soundings has given warning of the danger."

It is not a little curious to observe the laws thus employing the feblest, contemptible, and most imperfect of all the animal tribes she has formed, in the construction of the most gigantic and durable edifices of which we can venture to trace the origin; and by the agency of worms, hardly entitled to stand in the lowest place of the animal kingdom, building up rocks and mountains, that reach from the bottom to the surface of the ocean; or laying the foundation of islands and of continents which are, in future ages, to be the habitation of men—are to witness their views and their virtues—to be cultivated by the arts of peace, dentisted by the arts of war—and to figure in that strange mixture of good and evil which has so long constituted, and will perhaps forever constitute, the history of the world. Edinburgh review.

From Lower Canada.

QUEBEC, Sept. 10.

The whole number of Emigrants arrived in this Port since the opening of the Navigation, is at present 8150, and we are informed that many more were still about embark. But a small proportion of these Emigrants remained in this Province; having chiefly been brought up to farming, they are prevented from settling in the Lower Province, by their being unacquainted with the French Language which prevails among the Farmers here, and from a dread of the Climate, occasioned by the unfounded and silly accounts of Travellers.—It is to Upper Canada and the United States, that they chiefly proceed; and although they must, from their want of means and their erroneous notions of the country, undergo many hardships, those who are and continue peaceable, sober, industrious and persevering, will undoubtedly succeed in forming for themselves and families an independent and comfortable subsistence, which they could hardly ever have attained in Europe. Go where they will, their object is a virtuous one, and they ought to be cheered, and assisted by every individual who may have it in his power.

SOMETHING NEW.—There passed this day through this city six families, in Carts, from New Brunswick, about 70 miles above St. Johns on their way by land, to the Bay of Quinte in Upper Canada, intending to settle in that Province. They brought horses with them but bought their carts on this side the Portage, across which they dragged their baggage in sleds. They are all in good Health, and we are told, are in easy circumstances, one of the name of Duncomb, rich. When they will have completed their journey, they will have travelled by land upwards of 800 miles. Their object is to obtain lands of a better quality than those which they occupied in New Brunswick.

QUEBEC. Sept. 14.

We have been favored with London Journals to the 7th ultimo, received by the late arrivals. They, however, add but little to our stock of intelligence.

The political horizon in Europe, continued. The Sovereigns were preparing to proceed to the Congress at Aix La Chapelle, where the question of the immediate evacuation of France was to boot to be decided. In the mean time, the Duke of Wellington, who had been in London, and had frequent conferences with the Prince Regent, was to return to the Continent, to review the Army of occupation, preparatory to its embarkation, if it should be so determined. The Sea of the 6th August states, that on the return of the Army from France, a reduction of one Major and two Companies would take place in every Regiment not on Foreign Service, and that the number of Regiments would be so limited, as that the 93rd Highlanders would be the Junior Regiment.—Gaz.

The effect of the abundance of the Harvest in Europe, was sensibly felt in the depression of the markets, as will be observed by the following extract.

CORN EXCHANGE, Aug. 6.

The arrivals of Wheat and Oats from abroad this week have been very considerable, which, in addition to the immense quantity previously on hand, has greatly glutted the market and having scarce any demand this morning, sales of both the above articles were exceedingly heavy, and purchases might have been made on lower terms than on Monday.

The disturbances among the workmen at Manchester continued, but effectual measures had been taken to repress them.

A shock of an Earthquake was felt along the base of the mountains to the northward of this city, on Friday night last, about eleven o'clock. It is represented as having been sufficiently powerful to cause a tremulous motion of the windows of the house, & of the furniture.

MONTREAL, Sept. 9.

DIED.

We are sorry to have to perform the melancholy duty of announcing to our readers the death of Mr. Moses Kay, Editor of the Montreal Herald.—He departed this life on Saturday, last, at the age of forty-three years, regretted by all his acquaintances. His funeral was attended by a numerous concourse of the most respectable citizens.—Mr. KAY had long been a respectable merchant in this city—It is now nearly seven years since he became the Editor of the Herald. To him in a great degree, that paper owes its birth; and it is but doing justice to his memory to say, that his talents & indefatigable industry have made it at least one of the most entertaining Journals in the two provinces. His judicious selections, his unwearied research, and his efforts to obtain the earliest intelligence, have more than justified his choice of the motto—"Audaces Natinata Tuuba."

The public have the greater reason to regret his loss, that his assiduous attention to the duties of the Editorial chair, seem to be considered as having contributed to the lingering illness which has caused his dissolution.—Exposed by his situation, frequently to take a share in local and other dissensions, it has of course been impossible to please all; it is enough if he has gained general satisfaction. Let him be judged impartially and if discussion should ever have excited a hostile feeling, let it be buried in the charity of the grave.—[COMMUNICATED.]—Montreal Gazette.

On Wednesday afternoon, the 9th inst. GEORGE PLATT, Esq. a most worthy and public spirited merchant of this city. The disease which terminated his earthly career was a complaint in the liver, it occasioned him to suffer excruciating pains, and at the premature age of 44 years, has deprived his affectionate widow of an affectionate husband, his seven children of a tender father, his friends and dependents of a zealous adherent, and the public of an individual, whose extensive concerns, gave him an opportunity of employing (in those improvements of his property which his active mind continually suggested,) many among the poorer classes of the society, who have in him lost an invaluable and generous patron.

Tour of the arch-duke John and Lewis, of Austria.

The third series of the remarks of these illustrious travellers having been received, we reason our extracts.

The manufactory in which casks are made by machinery, which we saw at Glasgow, is very remarkable. The possessor of it gets the birch wood from the Scotch mountains, and the oak from North America. All the wood is cut by circular saws, which are put in motion by a steam engine. By the first cut the wood receives the proper length for the pipe staves. We saw wood eight inches thick cut in a moment. The workman lays the piece across two iron bars, and pushing it against a second saw, which cuts the blocks lengthwise into as many staves as its thickness allows. In the space of one minute from 12 to 14 staves were cut in our presence, from two and a half to five feet in length: the sides of the staves were also fashioned by saws. Thus prepared they put them into the machine by which they are to be bent. Every size of cranks has a machine of its own. A table bears a double bar of iron circularly bent, according to the curve which the stave is to receive; on this table is a contrivance, like the cutting blade of the saw mills, upon which the stave is laid; it is brought to the saw by a handle, a second presses it together; the saw is moved, and the stave, pressed in the direction of the arc of a circle, receives the necessary curvature. This stave also receives from the saw such a bending, that by means of the connection between the two iron bars and the cutting blade, it takes the second form.

The staves of birch wood are then made up into handles for sale. Those of oak wood they make into casks in the manufactory itself. For this purpose the pieces of wood which are to form the head are first put together, and the nine are put into the cutting machine, by which it is sawed and quickly turned round in a circle, in the middle of which is the machine. By means of a cutting iron this is cut circularly, two other shafting pieces of iron placed in the ring. The workmen can at pleasure draw these irons farther away or nearer to him, and the bottom of the cask is thus finished in a few moments.—They have holes in these bottoms, that they may be fastened together with wooden nails. As these casks are designed for rum, the seams are trimmed by a particular process. When the staves are placed in order, they put the cask into an iron cylinder of the same form and size.—The cask rests on a moveable cross over an axis, the cylinder stands perpendicular, the saw projects a little over its edge, and an instrument consisting of three cutting knives, is now put on this rim; one of the iron hoops is put on, and when the head is to be fastened, the second cuts off the top rim, and the third pushes it into its place. The hoops and bottoms are put round, and the cask is finished. The casks form a principal export article to the American Islands.

The same sawing and bending are made in the same manufactory; the former of stout bands, from Stockholt, which they cut by the hoops are made, and are best without thread of fire. The cart and the chips are distilled in a great retort, from which they obtain vinegar as well as tar.

We also viewed the great Clyde canal, the navigation of which is of the utmost importance to the trade of Glasgow, Liverpool, Dublin, Belfast, Londonderry; and also to Leeds, Newcastle & Hull. It may be said to unite the coasts of Great Britain & Ireland, in their trade with Russia, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, and all the north part of Germany, derive essential benefit from it, as it shortens the distance about 800 to 1000 miles. This canal is particularly of great importance in winter, during the season when ships cannot sail round Scotland.—In that season these ships are navigated in the canal in breaking up the ice.

The construction of this great work was begun in the year 1768, and finished in the year 1790; it rescues from the river Clyde near Bowlinghay, and both sea-ships have a communication. The company also took the navigation of it by consent of Parliament, is called the society for the navigation of the Forth and Clyde. The expenses incurred in the year 1799 to 4421.5s.8 sterling. This sum was by an act of Parliament recognized as the company's capital. The number of three-hundred and fifty-six sent one hundred and twenty-eight. The income amounted in the 1815 to 4700.000 sterling.—The author crossed the land which belongs to another company, is united with the Clyde Canal.

The city of Glasgow becomes more extensive & beautiful every day; almost in every street old houses are seen to vanish to make room for beautiful buildings; only last year about 400 new houses were built. The manufactories, the navigation on the Clyde and for the canal, the neighborhood to coal & iron, all these circumstances contribute to enliven the city and its environs. But the poverty of the people, seems, however, to be greater than of other British cities.

Life Preserving Experiment.

On Thursday forenoon, Mr. Trengrouse exhibited experiments at the receiving house of the Royal Humane Society, on the Serpentine River, with an apparatus which he has constructed, for the purpose of rescuing a commander between ships and the above accidents of shipwreck, in order to save the lives of the passengers and crew. Mr. Trengrouse's mode of effecting this desirable object is by firing from the end of a musket a rocket, to which is attached a small line, and having after a few trials, thrown the rocket across the river, a line was drawn over by the line.—From the bowsing, which was fastened on each side of the river to a tree, a seat, called by Mr. Trengrouse a chess rocket, was suspended. The seat is rendered moveable by rollers, to which the suspending ropes are attached, acting on the bowsing, and an infirm person might be placed in it, and drawn from the ship to the shore. On this occasion a man, properly fixed in it, was drawn [illegible] across the Serpentine. Mr. Trengrouse also made a successful trial of a life-preserving spencer, formed of several pieces of cork, covered with linen, and so constructed as to give perfect facility to the motion of the arms. These experiments were made in the presence of the Duke of Sussex, and several persons of distinction.

Lord Ellenborough, we are sorry to state, is seriously ill at his house in St. James's square.

The following account of the commemoration of the Reformation in a German Capital, and of the Union of the two branches of the German Protestant Church, the Lutheran and the Reformed, is extracted from the entertaining volume we noticed the other day, called, "An Autumn near the Rhine, or sketches of courts, society, & scenery, in the north of Germany and States bordering on the Rhine."

"I happened to be at Darmstadt on the 31st of October, the third century of the commencement of the Reformation. The Grand Duke of Hesse and his family being Lutherans, the Director of Home Affairs (called the Reformed religion,) the day was celebrated with much ceremony and respect. It was for more attractive, and thus a double festival; for, in addition to the closing of the shops, and the suspension of all business, the Protestant consistorial liability, and towns-people made a more conscientious point of attending church in their best equipage and costume. The main street was kept clear, guarded by a full chorus of solemn hymns sung from the top of the tower of the Lutheran church, and by the band stationed in at day-break by a repetition of the same impressive but curious ceremony. The hymns were of a simple and striking melody, and performed with great skill & effect. At ten o'clock the whole Court with their attendants, in grand parade, proceeded to the great church; the Grand Duchess and her ladies (being a party Catholic dame de compagnie) remained at home in her ber lips and with Luther on double in the grand state couch, with eight cream-colored palfreys, nothing in blue velvet trapping and a dusty picture of the reformer was removed for the occasion from the Hotel de Ville, and suspended in the church, adorned with wreaths of flowers. The church was thrown open to access; and the Court and gens comme il faut received the guidance. "A Te Deum, and some fine-pieces of music concluding with the grand hymn called, par excellence, "Luther's Hymn," were performed by the choir-loads in the body of the Court Chapel, accompanied by the swelling voices of the congregation. The effect was most striking.

"An additional interest was given to the day by its being made, in many states, the first public recognition of the union of the two branches of the church, the Lutheran and the Reformed—which the Grand Duke of Nassau, (in order to prevent schism) took the opportunity, by consent of Parliament, is called the society for the navigation of the Forth and Clyde. The ceremony used in the year 1799 to 4421.5s.8 sterling. This sum was by an act of Parliament recognized as the company's capital. Weather in France.—On the 27th of last month (July) the lightning fell upon a house in St. Maurice, near Dijon, and totally destroyed it.

On the same day, near the commune of Tanay, also in the arrondissement of Dijon, six persons, who imprudently sought refuge under a tree, were more or less grievously wounded by lightning. While the thunder was thus executing its tremendous mission in one quarter, hail-stones were committing ravages no less dreadful on the other side, against the harvests of Auxerre, whose every thing belonging to the harvest not already saved, as well in grain as every other production, was utterly destroyed.

On the 25th of July, about six in the evening, a tremendous storm burst upon Lephalme, near Agen. The commune of Sainte-Colombe suffered dreadfully. The vineyards and corn-fields of every kind were totally destroyed by a dry hail-storm, which lasted an hour, discharging hail-stones as large as nuts, and of such solidity, that they filled the trenches in some instances, a foot the next day.

The hail-storm was followed by torrents of rain, which overran the meadows and pathways, and greatly damaged them. The Mayor of Sainte-Colombe has, under these disastrous circumstances, appealed to the humane in favour of the unhappy sufferers from this calamity.—French Paper.

Whimsical Advertisement.—The following appeared lately in an Irish newspaper:—

"A Captain in a militia regiment, who at length being relieved from the hardships of war, is now willing to offer his services to Land or Home Steward in a family, where he is desirous of being Nobleman or Gentleman of fortune. The Capt. having had the advantage of being quartered in most of the principal towns in England & Scotland, remembering through England, is perfectly conversant in all the improved modes of agriculture practised in that delightful country. The Capt. could be found a thorough economist, having for many years (and no blame to him) supported a numerous family upon his pay alone. The Capt. has been long accustomed to command & obey; he will therefore be found peremptory & authoritative to those under him, but will at the same time subscribe not objections to his employers. The Capt. flatters himself he will be very much considered in a family, carves neatly, makes punch, and for drawing would not give the lead to any man in Ireland.

N. B. He will occasionally undertake the management of the cellar. For particulars, apply to A. B. Gosson's Office, No. 3, Crescent, Dublin; if by letter, post paid."

Extraordinary Conflagration.—On Tuesday last some people in a field, between Arundel & Ditchling, belonging to Mr. Hobbs, having lighted a fire for the purpose of making tea, the flames communicated to the dry grass, and being with a rapidity which defied every effort, caught a field of corn consisting of seventeen acres, the whole of which it completely consumed. The alarming element then pursued its course to a field of furze adjoining, whose after also consuming the whole, it ended.

MR. LANCASTER.—On further improvements in education.

To the Editor.

Respected Friend,

Allow me to request, by the medium of thy pages, to communicate to the public, in as authenticated a shape, an outline of some results from my recent labors in the cause of education, a cause for the sake of which I have professed devotion and labor to have my soul enshrined—to which I have been devoted with an unbounded zeal during twenty years; for which I have lived, and in advancing which, I have been willing to live or to die.

I have reckoned, during the last three years, in travelling above 6000 miles, to avail myself of the opportunities which intervals from visiting schools afforded, to visit all manufactories which might be open to me, and gather instruction, by the bee gentle honey from every flower. In Great Britain, especially, a vast field of instruction has thus been opened before me; my object in this pursuit has been, first, to see if I could find mechanical inventions which might be of beneficial application from these I saw, might extend the progress, by foreseeing the materials need for a machine; nor has my intention failed of its effect. My second object was, to attain a perfect knowledge, by inspection of machinery, and conversation with commercial men, in matters relative to the objects of commercial education, and which I could only gather from such an authentic source.

I have also endeavored, not merely to travel as a teacher, but as a learner; and, while aiding the public in the progress to the Lancastrian system of education, I have been endeavoring by continual attention to the subject, particularly to apply its principles, and perfect its power, in such a manner as will prove it possess greater facilities than had ever been imagined by its most zealous friends.

The results of which I now write will be submitted by ALL to be of high importance to the cause of education, IF THEY BE REAL: they are stated in a manner particularized, for the sake of striking the mind more impressively with their importance. But I anticipate that, when fully known, the surprise will be, that these have not been found out before, and that such simple easy matters should have so long possessed powers of such extent, and not been rendered actively useful to mankind.

When I first commenced making known my system of education to the public, I stated that our master could govern a school, however large; that a simple principle of order would enable him to govern hundreds of pupils, and this prepare for their instruction; that one book would serve to teach a whole school to spell, one book for reading, and one book for arithmetic; that 500 pupils might write and spell at the same time, and altogether; and that a boy who knew nothing about mechanics might on this system, teach it as well as the master himself. Now these statements all appear very paradoxical; and the question with the reflecting mind naturally is, how they can be true.—Yet that question has for a considerable time been almost out of date, and the encominms now passed on the system are for its facility and simplicity—the days of wonder are passed away; and yet, marked as the first statements made by me were, no man has ever charged me with making a mystery of the system; I gave it to the public freely, as soon as ever a publication was ready for press by subscription; which enabled me to print 2500 copies of my first book, for which I received above £1300 and applied the profits of advance the public cause in which I was, and am still engaged.

At present I have a subscription open for another book, of which several hundred copies are engaged for, but the respectable printer, when the number comes to 2000 copies the work will instantly go to press. It will, in an appendix, contain an account of the new improvements, the notices of which are as follows:

1. Lessons of every kind may be furnished for schools cheaper than formerly, and better adapted to the end of instruction, the first particular by the new and simplifying the material; the second is the result of an arrangement, arising from more mature experience.

2. The copious variety of lessons to be afforded by these inventions, is beyond precedent or calculation—the expansion surprising the same, but the variety of lessons almost endless.

3. Language does not bound their powers—the inventions will answer for one language as well as another. The lessons will answer for spelling, reading and arithmetic—in one language as well as another, and with nearly equal facility in every written language. The increase of the powers of these materials of instruction will apply to classic as well as to any other authors.

4. It seems, from the facility with which any new school destitute of lessons may be provided, that it is possible that the schools of a large empire may be supplied with lessons, to vast variety, at an expense of a most moderate nature, and nearly with as much ease as the schools of a large metropolis.

5. To all lovers of their bible, to all who are anxious for the spreading of the sacred writings over the habitable earth, it will be a pleasure to learn, that these inventions will afford an almost indescribable facility to spread copious extracts of the sacred writings, and to enable any missionary schoolmaster to supply his school or schools with extracts from the best of books, in any written language, or any clime of the world; the variety only limited by the boundaries of the books used.

6. These inventions being especially calculated to fix the attention of children, simple in their use, and cheap in their cost, will be adapted to private tuition in all the family, and also will enable mothers in teaching very young children before they are of age to attend school, or have a teacher.

7. With some little variety in the application, these lessons will not only apply to every written language in the world, living or dead, but they will be equally answer for the blind, and be of essential service to the deaf and dumb.

8. As to lessons on music, the ease of application and benefit may be obtained as in reading, arithmetic, or other instance. The reader will see that, if these results are correct, a new lever is found wherewith to move the mental energies of man, and promote the civilization of the world.

Incredible as these things may appear—three or four words would imply a knowledge of their powers, and a few pages place them, from description, beyond a doubt; and I am happy to inform the reader they will be found as simple and cheap as words can make.

Nor do I wish to conceal them one hour after the public shall enable me to publish them; it only remains for the friends of education and their bibles, to aid the publication; and, with the aid, their proceedings of it will be some pecuniary recompense for my time, labor, and loss sustained in carrying these inventions to perfection—I shall be happy to prove to any country in which more I may have been rewarded for past exertions, the happiness of serving its youth, and extending similar blessings to every nation, kindred, tongue and people, will be a reward beyond that which man can give or take away.

I remain, in the cause of education, the public's most devoted servant.

JOS. LANCASTER.

Southampton, 4th month, (April,) 1817.

HOLKHAM, July 6.

This magnificent place is now the scene of festivity. Mr. Coke, who, by his own efforts, has converted a poor and almost barren waste into a luxuriant garden, has, also, by his example and patronage, spread his improvements all over the neighborhood, and instead of the necessity of importing from other countries the articles grain for the use of this part of the island, has enriched them by exporting to other places their superfluous produce. This day several hundred zealous and enlightened agriculturalists examined the progress he has made since the last year, and the further improvements in the farms and stock—They set out after breakfast on horseback, and in open carriages, in single a column of upwards of miles, inspecting new and improved implements of husbandry, viewing of sheep-shearing at Langhdons farm, and going over the farms of Quarles, Egerton and Brentfull. In this tour, the most expert agriculturists was gratified, by seeing the success of the drill system, and manuring with rape-oil cake. The flourishing state of the crops in a season of unexampled drought, where the crop of barley is scarcely elsewhere to be seen, displayed the efficacy of the care which is here bestowed. They saw also a proof of successful invention, in the art by which one grass seed may be remedied by having part of another grafted on it. The hay machine was also seen at work, and satisfied every practical farmer of the prodigious advantage derived from it, in the merely from the saving of labor, but also from its power of scattering the hay more effectually and more lightly, the crop was rendered more safe and more valuable. A new view of turnip sowing and hoeing was at once curious and most satisfactory. In one field was seen the improved Norfolk umberland machine hoe three drills at once, with a speed and accuracy the most perfect, the machine going in a line so direct as never to touch the turnip, and yet to stir the earth up to the stem. In another was seen the manure deliverinto the drills, and, by a double breast plough, the earth covered over it from both the lateral sides, and immediately after sowed and rolled, so as to give the seed the immediate stimulus of the moist dung, and thereby facilitate vegetation in the driest weather.—Also were seen the rape cake and oyster shells crushed, by the common oil cake crusher. The novelty of crushing oyster shells attracted much observation; and Mr. Coke stated, that it was found to be a most productive manure, either joined with or without the pulverized rape cake. This drew from lord Erskine (adhering to it dinner) the joke, that it could no longer be made a reproach to lawyers, that they eat the oyster, & gave the shells to their clients, since now it appeared that the shells was the best part of the fish. It is manifest, that both this article, and rape cake crushed, may be used most advantageously by farmers who are at a distance from manure, since one load of it would have the carriage of many loads of common dung. Mr. Coke also shewed the value of the pie for the preservation of manure, by covering the compost so as to prevent evaporation, the efficacy of which was so evident, as to recommend the practice to all expert farmers. The company, after this tour, sat down to a sumptuous dinner, Mr. Coke was in the head of one table, the earl of Albemarle at another. The duke of Norfolk, lord Erskine, lord Lynedoch, the earl of Darley, lord William Bentinck, lord Bury, and a number of other distinguished persons were present. In the evening the company viewed the North Devon breed of oxen and cows—the prize sheep and boars—the ewes, who received prizes judges were appointed, and there was a ball at Southdown theaves, for the improvement of the stock of his neighbours. Some dealers also had a number of fine North Devon steers for sale. The weather was favorable, and the sheep-fete was animated and more gratifying scene was never witnessed.

Second day, July 7—About 600 noblemen, gentlemen and persons assembled this morning in the lawn, in front of, and seated in their agricultural survey of Mr. Coke's sheep and cattle. The Southdown sheep for the wool and carcase, the Devon oxen for the work, as well as for the table, exceeded every former example, and showed what might be effected in a few years by the judicious selecting of every domestic animal for the use of man.

So far from its being true, that the use of machinery is unfavorable to manual labor, it is proved that as Holkham had increased in produce, it had increased in population, and that as corn or a child was to be found unemployed.

Third day, July 8—This morning the company viewed a ploughing match in the park; the ploughs had each two oxen, driven by the ploughmen on the improved plan, and the work was executed well with remarkable speed, truth and accuracy. They viewed the carcasses of the prize wethers, and afterwards rode over the Holkham farms of some of Mr. Coke's tenants, particularly those of Warham and Wighton. In the one Mr. Broomfield, the inventor of the curious art of transplanting turf so as to make an old pasturage in one year, has bred his cattle from Devon stock, and they are unquestionably beautiful, so as now to have the name of Norfolk Devons. In the other, Mr. Reeve has bred from Norfolk stock, with probably a cross from the Suffolk, and they are also very fine.

The dinner this day was further enlivened by the distribution of the prizes offered by Mr. Coke, for the encouragement of the farming art in all its branches. Those prizes are not confined to tenants of Coke, or to the county of Norfolk, but are open to all agriculturists and artists, who may be inclined to stand for competition.

Mr. Coke stated, that this annual meeting had now existed forty two years. That it began this institution, the land of Holkham was unimproved and unproductive, that much of it was not worth 5s. an acre. He began with a trial of sheep, but by the advice of Mr. Ellman, he was induced to adopt the Southdown breed, and that admirable stock he attributed the progress Norfolk had made in cultivation. The extention of farms where 8ochs were to be employed, was now available. But if capital and skill were to be employed to such farms and the flocks were made the means of increasing the fertility of manure, so far from being injurious as a speculation of pure litical reasons, experience had proved it to be highly advantageous, since he could state, from actual remembrance, that three times the number of inhabitants were maintained on the same piece of ground as before, and the population of Holkham had increased from two hundred to six hundred within a few years. Under cultivation, by the union of capital and skill, had been advanced. In all his parish, there was not one person of any age, that did not find full employment—and they even wanted hands. He had been applied to, some time ago, by the principal inhabitants of the three parishes of Holkham, Warham and Wighton, to say that their poor house was no longer wanted. That their poor was so much diminished by their employment, that they had to tell them to consider itself what they were about, and look forward to times when the poor might increase, they were convinced that, by the spirit of independence which their comfort inspired, and the certainty of labor, they had no dread of a reverse—so the workhouse was pulled down—and the aged and infirm were a very small weight on the three parishes. The introduction of bad husbandry, which he could now proud experience recommend, has justified all hopes he had ever entertained of it. It was of more profitable course than a farmer could pursue, and with the turnip crops completed the Norfolk system of husbandry.

CALCUTTA, April 29.

We take the following curious account from a Bengalee paper:

"Capt. Powell, of the Queen Charlotte, informs us of the interesting circumstance of his having recovered, from a rock, 21 miles N. W. of Noocleerah, (one of the Macquenas) a man that had been its solitary inhabitant for nearly three years. His account stated, that early in 1814, he proceeded thither from Noocleerah, with four others, all of whom had left as American ship there, for the purpose of procuring feathers, that were in high estimation among the natives of N.; but losing their boat on the rock, three of his companions in a short time perished, through famine & principally from thirst, as there was no water but what was supplied by rains. His fourth companion continued with him but a few weeks, when he formed the resolution of attempting to swim, with the skull of a splintered fragment that remained of their boat, to an Island, in which effort he must have inevitably perished. He had once himself attempted to quit the barren mansions, by constructing a catamaran, but failed, and lost all means of any future attempt. This he originally taken fire with them from Noocleerah, which he had always taken care to continue, except on one occasion, when it became extinguished, and never could have been restored, but by a careful preservation of three or four grains of gun powder, and the lock of a musket which he had broken up for the construction of his catamaran. The flesh and blood of wild beasts were his sole sustenance with the Latter he quenched his thirst in seasons of long droughts, and the skulls of his departed companions were his only drinking vessels. The discovery was made by the crew of Charlotte was purely accidental—the rock was known to be desolate and barren, and the appearance of a human or a child was to be found unemployed.

Third day, July 8—This morning the company viewed a ploughing match in the park; the ploughs had each two oxen, driven by the ploughmen on the improved plan, and the work was executed well with remarkable speed, truth and accuracy. They viewed the carcasses of the prize wethers, and afterwards rode over the Holkham farms of some of Mr. Coke's tenants, particularly those of Warham and Wighton. In the one Mr. Broomfield, the inventor of the curious art of transplanting turf so as to make an old pasturage in one year, has bred his cattle from Devon stock, and they are unquestionably beautiful, so as now to have the name of Norfolk Devons. In the other, Mr. Reeve has bred from Norfolk stock, with probably a cross from the Suffolk, and they are also very fine.

The dinner this day was further enlivened by the distribution of the prizes offered by Mr. Coke, for the encouragement of the farming art in all its branches. Those prizes are not confined to tenants of Coke, or to the county of Norfolk, but are open to all agriculturists and artists, who may be inclined to stand for competition.

Mr. Coke stated, that this annual meeting had now existed forty two years. That it began this institution, the land of Holkham was unimproved and unproductive, that much of it was not worth 5s. an acre. He began with a trial of sheep, but by the advice of Mr. Ellman, he was induced to adopt the Southdown breed, and that admirable stock he attributed the progress Norfolk had made in cultivation. The extention of farms where 8ochs were to be employed, was now available. But if capital and skill were to be employed to such farms and the flocks were made the means of increasing the fertility of manure, so far from being injurious as a speculation of pure litical reasons, experience had proved it to be highly advantageous, since he could state, from actual remembrance, that three times the number of inhabitants were maintained on the same piece of ground as before, and the population of Holkham had increased from two hundred to six hundred within a few years. Under cultivation, by the union of capital and skill, had been advanced. In all his parish, there was not one person of any age, that did not find full employment—and they even wanted hands. He had been applied to, some time ago, by the principal inhabitants of the three parishes of Holkham, Warham and Wighton, to say that their poor house was no longer wanted. That their poor was so much diminished by their employment, that they had to tell them to consider itself what they were about, and look forward to times when the poor might increase, they were convinced that, by the spirit of independence which their comfort inspired, and the certainty of labor, they had no dread of a reverse—so the workhouse was pulled down—and the aged and infirm were a very small weight on the three parishes. The introduction of cotton gowns, white petticoats and white stockings. The bride and her maids were distinguished by white satin trimmed in their caps; to the beaver hat in ever the same time these were ornamented with a sunster bow than those of the rustics. The morning being rather cloudy, a part of their finery was eclipsed by their blue cloaks, which nothing but the honest sun-shine, and sometimes not even that can tempt them to lay by.

When the clergyman came to a certain part of the service he stopped; the bridegroom and bride, each, laid four shillings on his book. The person very compassedly gave out to the clerk, produced the other three himself; and the source of his reward proceeded to make the lovers man and wife. The ceremony ended, the two bridesmen fired at the two poor defenceless guilds; and, after some struggling each ravished a kiss. This is an established custom at a wedding, and also between godfathers and godmothers at a christening. If the lady can leave the church without receiving a salute, she claims a pair of gloves; if the gentleman presented, she is entitled to be satisfied.

Every person acquainted with either of the families will feel a point of honor to attend the wedding feast.

A considerable sum is thus collected, for the benefit of a young couple beginning the world; and really, receiving it in this form is only laying up a fund against his own marriage, or paying a debt contracted at it."

Curious effect attributed to Saffron.

A mercantile man, who had invariably been accustomed with wearing during the voyages which he was frequently under the necessity of taking, one day purchased a quantity of saffron. Finding with a view of evading the heavy duty imposed upon it, concealed the packet in his shirt. During the passage the experiment was made, and proved fearless, although the sea was rough. The good effect in question he ascribed, to the saffron. We have communicated his conjectures to several others, who have repeated the experiment with success. From that time the narrator has never gone to sea without his shirt stuffed with saffron from packet—London paper.

PICTURE OF MANNERS.

From letters written during a third tour of North Wales.—By Miss Hutton.

"Public houses are the universal custom among the common people, throughout the Principality of Wales.—There, if the father of the brian can afford it, he spends the marriage feast, and it is her portion. If he cannot, or if he have no parents, she borrows money of some friend, or obtains credit at some public house & after the expences of the feast are defrayed, the residue is carried to the bridegroom, as the dowry. Every man who does pays a shilling; every woman six-pence; though many choose to give a shilling—Every one that drinks tea pays sixpence, every pint of ale is served up to the person who calls for it, and many come only to drink and dance.

"The house, in the hollow of the mountain, married his daughter since we came here. His brewed a quarter of malt for the occasion. The table was covered with dishes of the best fare, consisting of one room only, could not contain the company. Forty persons sat down to dinner—and as soon as these had dined, forty others took their places, and my father, who gave me the account, was an invited guest. He remained with the party from noon, in the forenoon of that time now about one hundred and fifty persons. Two only of this number were Welch Englishmen. Not a female appeared in any thing but woolen; nor one without the beaver hat, except the mother of the bride, who was the cook.

The banquet consisted of five rounds of beef, attended by bags of pease, and mountains of cabbage and leeks were placed on the table in succession, as fresh company demanded a fresh supply, and formed luxurious fare to people accustomed to live upon potatoes and buttermilk. The guests dined off wooden trenchers, and sat on wooden stools, brought by them for the occasion; wet was butter and cheese. The bride her father and mother waited. A harper made one of the party i and amused the company with his music. He served for an occasional drawing-room—and two beds that were in it supplied the place of sofas.

At Laubellic, the parish church at Caernarvon, I saw a sailor married to the daughter of a shoemaker. The bridegroom marched first, with his bridesmen, or as they are ie e called, his servants, one on each side; the rest of the men followed, three abreast. Then came the intended bride between her servants, and the rest of the women; in the same order closed the procession.—There were about forty persons in the whole; these town indies were not cald like the mountaineers, in woolen but flowered cotton gowns, white petticoats and white stockings. The bride and her maids were distinguished by white satin trimmed in their caps; to the beaver hat in ever the same time these were ornamented with a sunster bow than those of the rustics. The morning being rather cloudy, a part of their finery was eclipsed by their blue cloaks, which nothing but the honest sun-shine, and sometimes not even that can tempt them to lay by.

When the clergyman came to a certain part of the service he stopped; the bridegroom and bride, each, laid four shillings on his book. SALT FOR PRESENT EATING.

The following recent exportation of the well-known use of salt in the feeding of cattle, is said to be published by the owner to carry on the scheme of that useful and patriotic gentleman, Mr. Curwen.

"The following is a correct statement of your experiments in giving salt to cattle and sheep my carts, beginning Nov. 19, 1817. From that time until now, your cattle have had salt as their common food; your sheep and breeding heifers had each four ounces per day; fattening young and fat cattle, each three ounces; eighteen working oxen, each four ounces; twenty cows and heifers and oxen of one year old, each two ounces; twenty young calves, one ounce each; and each horse employed at the farm, cattery, &c. four ounces per day. Four hundred and forty-four sheep have had time since, or two ounces each per week, given at twice, and on slates. The advantages of salt for sheep appears to be great; as we have had none die since we have commenced giving salt. Besides which we lost some of our young ewes and wethers, in what we call the sickness. Our cows, &c. have their salt given in steamed chaff, twice a day, which makes them eat it

It will appear by this report, that the quantity of salt which Mr. Curwen has given to his cattle, with the most complete success, is more than double what Lord Somerville used. The effects of this use of salt in Mr. Curwen's farmyard at Workington Hall, and the exigencies of the cattle to obtain it, have attracted the attention of the farmers for many miles round; and hundreds of them have come to see the cattle fed.

Of SPAIN.—Great numbers of the Spanish refugees have availed themselves of the amnesty proclaimed by his catholic majesty, and have returned to Spain.—Several have applied for the amnesty, and who have received stipends from the French government, have been informed, by address not issued, that if they leave France, and do not embark for America or elsewhere, they will receive two months advance of their stipends, which will still continue. The decree adds, "The English government having formally interdicted the entrance of Spanish refugees in their territory, they cannot be directed to French ports, with a view of proceeding to England."

Upsetta of fifty beautiful Roman urns have been accidently dis-covered within the last few days, in a field belonging to the Marquis Cornwallis, at Rye, in Suffolk. From the great length of time they have been deposited in the earth, the workmen discovered much difficulty in getting them out entire.

A few days since, an extraordinary interposition of Divine Providence was evinced in the deliverance of William Baltor, of St. Croux mill, in the Isle of Wight, who being employed in the mill had occasion to make some alteration in the van. While so engaged his foot became entangled in the dressing strap, and he was instantly drawn up over the drum, and suspended by one of his thighs, expecting every moment to be torn to pieces but, to his great astonishment, the strap, which was three inches wide and proportionably thick, and three of the cogs, gave way, by which he was providentially rescued from his perilous situation without sustaining any injury.

Lord Exmouth, commander of the Plymouth station, has directed her removal to Falmont, to wait the determination of the government.

United States.—The war with the Indians, carried on by general Jackson, presents a horrid character of ferocious atrocity. The orders of this officer, to carry on an extermination war against the, is, is little relieved by the exception of the women and children; for what must be their fate, when their natural protectors are cut off? We can see no means of purchasing these brutal excesses, dishonourable to the character of a civilized age in them, espp if he is acting under the orders of his government; and if he is not, that government is called upon by the sacredness of character to disavow them in the most expressive manner. It is really sickening to see a civilized nation practising a barbarism of the worst description among its subjects; cheapening human life; familiarizing scenes of slaughter, and rendering callous the principles of justice and the sympathies of humanity. Let us even suppose that the Indians have been the aggressors; that they have given just provocation by their harsh and savage warfare: then examples of severity are necessary. They may be punished; but, upon the whole, is this a slaughter? That is impossible; and the conduct of Jackson must, therefore, be the abhorrence and reprobation of the world; and if not punished by his government, must fix upon the state itself a deep and ruinous stain.

The Spanish papers are full of the constant encroachments of the American upon the Indian grounds has excited a hostile spirit among the savages. The Indians, however, are willing to grant truth in the favourite principle of the Americans, that the claims of savages to grounds which they can only occupy as hunting, ought not to arrest the progress of civilization. But the maxim rests upon principles which the mind of a savage cannot be expected to comprehend. He argues more directly; he says, "You take away our hunting grounds, you take away our food; you are, therefore, our enemies." To our minds there is as fine logic in this as the other, though the science of political economy may not place it over with its terms. Unquestionably, no nation has a right to oppose the progress of the means of civilization, learning in the arts of civilization, banning in the noble means of banishing them with the exception of such. But the only honourable mode of proceeding in this case is to proceed as William Penn did, to purchase a country. When this is agreed upon, the savages have their choice to fix their abodes deeper in the wilderness. But if to this are added kind and conciliatory attempts, by which civilization, and the most useful arts among them, not only is an enlargement of territory acquired, (for 100 square miles of cultivation, are worth a thousand of a tribe of Indians than 1000 of hunting ground;) and all the surplus land is then fairly thrown into the national stock; many subjects are acquired, who must, as civilization advances, merge into the mass of the superior people. Little of advantage is to be gained by the unfeeling Americans, and the indiscriminate massacre of a helpless people is but a poor apology for the neglect. In all the natural feelings, that the oppressed are hated because they are injured, and again injured because they are hated.

We fear, that the situation of Arbuthnot and his companions is another atrocity, and one which must call for the interference of our government. From the present aspect of the case, Arbuthnot was a respectable commercial man, not a military character at all; and from his instantly coming down in a minute Indian, was engaged by them to make some representation of the wrongs they were suffering from the Spanish authorities, the British Government, their ally. For this, it appears, he has been most barbarously, and in defiance of the United States, and we will hope of their own authority, put to death. A specimen of charges have, of late, fastened themselves upon the character of the United States, and we will hope that they are able satisfactorily to explain them.

Died, on the 4th of August at Galway, Ireland, in the 16th year of his age, Thomas Taylor, son of the late Rev. Thomas Taylor, of Bolton, Lancashire, and grandson of the late Rev. Thomas Taylor, of Manchester.

From the United States

Commodore Taylor—On Saturday last, the case of this person was argued, on a point of law, in the District Court of the United States, before Judge Van Ness. Suits had been instituted against him by the Spanish Consul, to recover the value of sundry captures made by Taylor, while commanding the privateer called the Patriota.

Among the captures made was an American brig called the Gazella, on board of which was a Spanish gentleman named Juan Jaurnal.—It is stated in some of the affidavits that after the capture this gentleman was examined respecting the ownership of the property, and denied it being Spanish: That Taylor was at this time sailing in company with a small privateer, the captain of which was a Frenchman, and the crew mostly blacks from St. Domingo. The captain told Taylor that he would make the damned Spaniard confess the truth, and would have him so for that purpose, if Taylor would permit it.—That having received the permission, he actually put a rope round his neck and tied it to one of the yards, and then hauled the rope taut, and checked him, until he confessed the property belonged to him; upon which he was let loose and Taylor took possession of the vessel. On the following day the Spaniard was sent ashore to Senegal, and received $15,000 for the ransom of his property, which was delivered to Taylor; when sum of money the libellant now sought to recover in this cause.

The judge having in the first instance ordered the defendant to be held to bail, bail was required to be given to secure the arrest. This application was founded on an affidavit of the defendant himself, stating that he was born in Boston, is a subject of the king of Great-Britain, and had served in the British fleet: that in 1810, he became a citizen of Buenos Ayres, and a commander in their naval service; that he was in the United States in 1816, and there contracted for a vessel to be loaded for naval stores, which vessel he sent to him out of the jurisdiction of the U. States; that the vessel called the Fourth-of-July was accordingly prepared, and in part by her purchased her, clanged her name to Patriota, and put her under a Buenos Ayres commission, which had been extended to him by the then existing government; that the vessel was a public armed vessel, belonging to the government of Buenos Ayres, and not his private property; that he was not in any manner concerned with the fitting out of the vessel in Baltimore, nor with any owning of the crew. He avowed making up two of the captures which were charged against him, and said that he had been prosecuted in Baltimore by Spanish consul for the same causes of action. He also produced a commission which had been made out in blank, and was filled up with the name of the vessel, and the signatures of which were proved by a witness. The defendant also made oath, that since 1810 he had been a citizen of Buenos Ayres, and had not been a citizen of any other state or country whatever.

On the part of the Spanish Consul it was proved, that the brig Fourth-of-July was built, armed, equipped and owned in Baltimore by sundry merchants of that place and commodore Taylor; that all the crew were enlisted there and at Norfolk, in December, 1817, and the beginning of January thereafter; that Taylor sailed in the vessel at that time from Baltimore; that within the jurisdiction of the United States he hoisted the Buenos Ayres flag, and changed the name of the brig from the Fourth-of-July to the Patriota; that the initial capture, made the capture of Spanish property complained of, and returned to Baltimore in July, 1817, with the privateer, without having been at Buenos Ayres at all. That after the return of the vessel, a quantity of specie which they had captured was divided among the crew in Baltimore. It was shown that the sale which had been made at sea was a mere sham sale; that the real owners were interested in the property the whole time, and that the government of Buenos Ayres had no interest in the vessel. It was proved that the vessel at first defendant had not been prosecuted by the Spanish consul in Baltimore, and a certified copy of an indictment found by a grand jury of the house of Baltimore, dated April 10th, 1816, was produced, in which Taylor, swears, that he is a citizen of the U. States of Wilmington, Delaware, and the sole owner of the schr. Rosnip, for which vessel he was then taking out a Register—A deposition of one Joseph Bowers was also produced, —ing he had been engaged by Taylor, in B more, to go in the vessel, to write the log book, and do the other writing on board the vessel; that while in Baltimore, Taylor employed him in forging a commission for the brig, another commission which Taylor had, belonging to another vessel, having been destroyed in attempting to alter it. with vitriol, so that it might serve for the brig Fourth-of-July; that the witness wrote the commission, another person signed it with the name of the Supreme Director of Buenos Ayres, and Taylor signed it with a copper-seal which he had procured to be made in Baltimore; and that during the crimes herein mentioned, the privateer had no other commission than this one which the witness had fabricated.

The point upon which the libellant chiefly relied was that this vessel had been fitted out in the U. States; that it was a violation of the neutrality of this country; that all captures made by such vessel were illegal and void, and the parties concerned in it were all trespassers, and as such were liable to be prosecuted according to the courts of the United States. That although it is a general principle that when a capture is made at sea, no court but the court of the captor can enquire into its legality, yet that this case is an exception to that rule, the warring vessel having been equipped, and fitted out in this country, and having thereby violated our neutral rights, and rendered our government liable to make compensation to the belligerent whose property was captured by this force. That as all events the libellant ought to be held to bail, to give the libellant an opportunity of appealing to the judgement of the highest tribunals for their ultimate redress, should the judge acquitting him without bail was the cause as taking away the right of appeal.

The part of the defendant it was insisted, that the captured property not being brought within the jurisdiction of the court, it could not proceed against the property; that the question of damages was a mere incident to the question of prize or no prize, and that the court not having the principal matter before it, could not determine upon that which only grew out of it.

The court decided:

First—That it had no jurisdiction of prize cases as between Spain and her colonies; or the colonies and any other power at war, where the vessel making the capture was not fitted out of the U. States.

Secondly—That where the vessel making the capture, was alleged to have been fitted out of the United States, but was cruising on the high seas, under the commission and authority of one of the belligerent powers, the court would not interfere, unless the captured property was brought within the jurisdiction of the court.

Thirdly—That the court deemed the question of damages to rest entirely upon the question of prize or no prize; that the court having jurisdiction of the latter, it could not have any of a matter necessarily growing out of, and depending upon it, therefore that it would not hold com. Taylor to bail in the suit instituted against him for damages; the property not being brought within the jurisdiction of the court.

REMARK.

The editor will merely add, that many proceedings of this kind have taken place, which considered it a very extraordinary one, and although not unprecedented, he believes that why the court did not commit him for perjury, we are at loss to conjecture.—N. Y. Eve. Post.

Extract of a letter, dated Sans Souci, Aug. 25, 1818, to a merchant in Boston.

"I have just heard from an officer of the garrison, who was on the spot, an accident of the accident which befel the ship Malabar, on her return.

About 2 o'clock, P. M. of the 25th, the sky became very much overcast, and the accumulating heavy clouds gave the appearance of the high peaks, which surround the Citadel Henry, portended a furious tempest. The gale soon burst forth in all its violence from the eastward. This continued till about 4 o'clock, when the rain began to fall, accompanied by increased lightning, which continued for an hour after a flash of lightning struck the highest point of the citadel about 100 paces from the nearest sentinel, and fortunately passed in a direct line in front of the great powder, it crossed the guard house of the garrison, without doing any violence, and finally exploded in the powder magazine, (salle d'artillerie,) which stands in the rear of the buildings, situated on the side whence the gale blew. The building contained a great quantity to projectils, which had been preparing for some days past, and which time had not allowed to be put in the vessel. A terrible explosion took place, which set fire to the neighboring buildings. The wind and torrent of rain fell in full force.—The Governor and the officers had fled under their respective apartments, and only discovered the impending danger by the blaze of the extending conflagration.

The governor immediately sallied forth with each of the garrison as he could collect about; he saw the damage done by the explosion, and the impossibility of extinguishing the widespreading flames. Cries and lamentations arose from the whole town, and the government of Buenos Ayres had no interest in the vessel. A terrible explosion took place, which set fire to the neighboring buildings. The wind and torrent of rain fell in full force.—The Governor and the officers had fled under their respective apartments, and only discovered the impending danger by the blaze of the extending conflagration.

The governor immediately sallied forth with each of the garrison as he could collect about; he saw the damage done by the explosion, and the impossibility of extinguishing the widespreading flames. Cries and lamentations arose from the whole town, and the astonishing fury. Every one, therefore sought his own safety, and made for those posterns which led to the vaulted battery; many had the good fortune to reach these, but others, thro' terror lost their way, and either perished, or were wounded.

King Henry, who was then at Sans Souci, received the news of this dreadful event, only two hours after it took place. About 6 o'clock in the afternoon, an officer of the garrison gave him the information. He immediately prepared to set off accompanied by the officers of his staff, followed by 6000 of his guards, besides the troops of the line in the neighboring garrison, and arrived in time to save a part of the buildings. The powder magazines, which contained 8,000,000 lbs. powder, the vaulted arsenals and batteries, have escaped destruction. In fine, only those buildings which stood exposed to the storm, such as the fort, are destroyed; all else is uninjured, and the citadel remains in its for mer state of defense.

We learn from Boston that one of the Port de Paix, greatly regretted by the King; besides that of many of the brave soldiers to whom the defence of this bulwark was entrusted.

His Majesty is now occupied in superintending the removal of the rubbish of the buildings destroyed, which he intends to have re-built more solidly and securely. But little time will be necessary to put this into the hands of the numbers and activity employed about it."

Accident—The steam boat Fulton, capt. Lane on her passage from New Haven to New London, was run foul of by the sloop New-York, captain Church, from Providence, R. I. on Saturday night last about 12 o'clock. The Fulton was going at the rate of 8 and the sloop 7 miles an hour, close to each other, the former having a velocity of 15 miles—she received the sloop on her starboard bow, which did some slight injury to her timbers, but the sloop became complete to the mast, her jib boom, bowsprit, windlass and all her timbers were carried away; the crew of the sloop had time to escape from their vessel in safety. Finding the sloop making water very fast, and unable to keep her free with the pumps, they took her from her fastenings, &c. and towed her to Saybrook to repair. Mr. Hamdy, of Rhode Island, and several other passengers received some injury from the shock.—Ib.

A letter received from Savannah states, that the steam boat company's boat No. 7, while on her way from Savannah to Augusta, with a valuable cargo of cotton, on board, took fire by a snag in the river and sunk.—Eve. Post.

Important Discovery.—A Mr. Sherwin, an Indian trader at Fort Wayne states that he has lately discovered that "there is an uninterrupted navigation from Fort Wayne to the Lake at Chicago on the Illinois river, and also from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi, by the Auplain river, which throws part of its waters into the Lake, and part into Illinois river.

QUEBEC, 1st Oct. 1818.

FRANCOIS LAMONTAGNE, Esquire,

Dear sir—I beg leave to call on you to give the particulars of my last trip to Montreal, which was as follows: We got under sail from Mr. Goudie's wharf, at 10 P. M. on Saturday the 27th Sept. The Steamboat Malsham being underway ahead of us, with a head, the wind blowing hard from the westward. We soon perceived ourselves to gain on her from the Malsham being fitted to tow or warp by anchinery, he had considerably the advantage of us by getting their square sail yard fore and aft and lowering it down on the deck, which so as to hold as little wind as possible. At 4 A. M. on same day, we came up with the Steamboat Malsham at anchor and a half we past her. From there to Three-Rivers, we gained on the Malsham considerably. On our arrival there we took on board a quantity of goods and passengers to land, it being late in the night we could not get batteaux to come off. We therefore were forced to land in our own boats, which detained us much longer than otherwise would have done. It appears the Malsham had no occasion to land any passengers, which enabled her to pass us while lying there. The next morning at daylight, we discovered the Malsham about two miles a little above Point Du Loup. We then gave our engine its full power as we could run with more kind happening in broad day, and during clear weather, requires some further explanation, than a detail of the fact. Therefore has received a good deal of injury—happily no lives were lost.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE.

YORK, THURSDAY, OCTOBER 22.

[Owing to the incorrectness of the Manuscript sent to the Editors, some errors occurred in the printing of His Excellency's Speech, as announced in last week's Gazette: it was therefore omitted altogether.—It appears in this week.]

PARLIAMENT OF UPPER CANADA

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY, 13th Oct. 1818.

At 2 o'clock this day, His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, proceeded in State from the Government House to the Council Chamber; where, being seated on the Throne, His Excellency directed the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, to command the attendance of the House of Assembly; when His Excellency was pleased to open the Session with the following

SPEECH:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, &c.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

THE total want of Funds, to meet the exigencies of the State, has compelled me to call you together earlier than the usual period, but I hope it is at a season which interferes little with your convenience.

I have to announce to you, that no alteration has taken place in the indisposition of our venerable Sovereign.

His Royal Highness the Prince Regent receives from Foreign Powers the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition towards England, and of their earnest desire to preserve the general tranquility, affords us the highest satisfaction. Confident that every exertion that a continuance of Peace will be peculiarly suspicious to this Province, to the interests of which we will watch over our unanimity, prepare We will inquire into its wants and endeavour to find out remedies for its embarrassments.

In the course of your investigation you will, I doubt not, feel a just indignation at the attempts which have been made to excite discontent, and to organize opposition. Should it appear to you that a Convention of Delegates cannot exist without danger to the Constitution, in framing a law of prevention we will carefully guard against unwarrantably trespass on the sacred Right of the Subject, to seek a redress of his grievances by Petition.

A Treaty is on foot with our Indian neighbors for the purchase of new Territory, including certain tracts, which will serve by their intervention to disconnect our Western Settlements.

It appears to me that no object can be of more intrinsic value to this Colony, than an increased Population; nor any, on the acquirement of which, a small expenditure of Revenue is likely to present the State with a greater return. Whether it would not be advisable to tender assistance in some effectual manner to those poor Emigrants who may seek to become your countrymen, is a subject I recommend to your serious consideration.

Your attention will be directed to certain Laws which are expiring, and to others which have expired, that you may decide on the propriety of continuing the one or reviving the other. To carry any Laws which you may enact for the comfort, safety, or morality of the people, for the general benefit of the Province into full effect, you may depend on my hearty co-operation.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I shall direct the proper Officer to lay before you the Accounts of the Receipt and Expenditure of the Provincial Revenue, with an Estimate of what may be required for the support of the Civil Government.

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen.

Convened as you now are for the great purpose of elevating your Country by the wisdom of your Councils, you feel each of you impressed with the responsibility and dignity which invests you: You recollect the celebrity of your proceedings; these considerations, enlightened manners, and the beneficent influence of Religion, will no doubt regulate the intercourse between your august Assemblies.

The following Address of the House of Assembly was presented to his Excellency the Lieut. Governor, on Wednesday the 14th inst.

To His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

WE His Majesty's dutiful and Loyal Subjects the Legislative Council of Upper Canada in Provincial Parliament Assembled, beg leave to offer our thanks for your Speech at the opening of this Session of the Legislature.

We are happy to embrace this opportunity of congratulating your Excellency on your safe arrival to resume the duties of your exalted station amongst us.

It is with regret that we learn from Your Excellency that no alteration has taken place in the indisposition of our venerable Sovereign.

We shall at all times feel a just indignation at every attempt which may excite discontent or organize sedition; & it is with pleasure we learn that no convention of delegates cannot exist without danger to the Constitution, in framing a law of prevention we will carefully guard against unwarrantably trespass on the sacred Right of the Subject to seek by Petition a redress of his grievances.

We are persuaded that no object can be of more intrinsic value to this Colony than an increased Population, and we will be ready to concur in any measure which may render assistance to the necessitous Emigrants whomay seek to become Settlers of this Province.

We shall carefully receive your Excellency's co-operation to carry into full effect the Laws which may be enacted for the comfort, safety or morality of the people, or for the general benefit of the Province.

To which His Excellency was pleased to reply.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council.

I am much gratified by the sentiments you have been pleased to express; and I doubt not your wisdom will join them in the enactment of salutary Laws.

On the evening of the 25th ult. His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor and suite, accompanied by Col. Talbot, arrived at Port Talbot, and on the 16th at 2 P. M. almost three hundred of the Inhabitants waited on his Excellency with the following Address.

To His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada, Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces therein. &c. &c. &c.

MAY it please your Excellency.

WE, His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, Inhabitants of the Township of Dunwich, are greatly gratified with the considerations of your Excellency in visiting this infant but flourishing settlement, conscious that we have been led to this retired part of the Province, as well as along the river, will pass through the centre of the Village, the superior advantages of the same will be obvious to all who may view it.

We will bear for 7 years his large and convenient Two Story House, Stables and other Out Houses, with thirty acres of Land, being a good situation for a Tavern or Store; or the House, &c. without Land, with one acre of ground. Possession can be given on the first of January next.

To Settlers.

THE Inhabitants of Smith's Creek have long and great regretted the serious inconvenience suffered by the Settlers daily arriving here, on their way to the new Townships on Rice Lake, from the want of Houses for their temporary accommodations: Anxious to remove this evil, and promote as far, as possible the comfort of the settlers, a numerous and respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Hope and Hamilton was convened on the 10th instant, at Peter Perry's Tavern, Smith's Creek, for the purpose of taking into consideration the necessity of erecting, by public subscription, Buildings for their temporary accommodation.

James Ward, Esq. being called to the Chair, several Resolutions were entered into, and have been published: It was immediately erected, capable of containing a considerable number of Families.—Thomas Ward, Esq. was then unanimously chosen President; Ezekiel Fowke, Treasurer, and Dr. John Hutchison, Secretary.

The following gentlemen were then appointed a committee to carry into effect the laudable object of the meeting, viz—D. McGregor Rogers, Esquire, Messrs. Robert J. Kerr, Alexander Mc Donnell, Jeremiah Britton, M. F. Whitehead, Adam Scott and Francis Page.—A subscription was then opened, which met with very liberal support.

Every exertion will be made to have the said buildings ready for occupation early in November.—For possession of the apartments, application must be made to one or more members of the committee.

I believe the public opinion is much against me on hearing our side of the story.—But let them know that our boat and not the Quebec has received damage, and it will immediately decide the question.

ACCIDENTS.

While some men were amusing themselves, near Mount Pleasant Cottage, in this neighborhood, with firing a quantity of powder, as a salute to H. G. the Duke of Richmond, on his passing down the river, on Sunday last—after the first discharge, either from the piece being heavy loaded, or their ignorance in not sponging it completely, part of the fire remained, which communicated with the powder, that one John Levitt was in the act of cramming home the second charge, it went off, and we are grieved to add, deprived him of his right hand in a degree, that amputation was deemed necessary. He was a native of England by trade a shoemaker, and has been rendered incapable of providing for a wife and four children, who lived by the fruits of his labour.

From another letter we have received the following particulars from an intelligent Correspondent, who was an eye witness to the event.—"The accident occurred on the shore, about 200 yards distance of the house from the mouth of the piece, and about from an elevation of nearly 50 feet in the air. His clothes were all on fire when he was taken up; and besides the injury in his arm, which were both shattered in the most fall manner, his face became severely bruised and cut. So great was the shock he sustained, that the outside case of the watch was dashed in, and the inner and found on the beach, while the rest of the watch and chain remained to his pocket.

His amiable wife fate has induced a few benevolent individuals to commence subscriptions for his support and that of his poor family, which we are happy to see inserted, books for that purpose will be left at the Montreal and Canada Bank Offices.

On Sunday last, as the Steam-Boat Car of Commerce was on her passage to Quebec, (going at the rate of 9 knots an hour) and when off the Isle aux Noix, she received a severe shock from the Steam-Boat Quebec, coming up to Montreal, at the rate of five miles per hour; which carried away the head of the inner and found on the beach, while the rest of the watch and chain remained to his pocket.

HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE.

Singular and interesting description of the Hospital for the insane at Aversa, in the kingdom of Naples—extracted from the unpublished journal of a tour made in 1817, in the kingdom of the two Sicilies:

Aversa was built by the valiant Normans, and cannot boast any honors derived from antiquity. It may be considered as new on this classical ground, where you find at every step Phœnician, Greek, or Roman monuments, and where every corner of ground, every stone, attests to the foreign visitor the ancient glories of Italy.

Formerly, the curious traveller could see every thing worth seeing by casting a look on the country round Aversa, which nature has loaded with her gifts; but now, this place induces him to turn aside from the road which leads him towards the ruins of Capua, to contemplate the progress of philosophy and humanity, in a place where he would not suspect the smallest trace of them to exist: I allude to the royal hospital for the insane.

I had heard this establishment spoken of with praise; but being accustomed to meet with exaggeration in the good as well as in the evil, which travellers relate of the countries they have visited, I resolved to see the place myself. At 8 o'clock in the morning I went to Aversa. After having traversed a short path, we discovered this useful edifice in the midst of the most smiling country. The hall called the people of the neighborhood to mass, which is daily attended by the unhappy inmates of the hospital. The holy ceremonies were just beginning as we entered.—A part of the church was filled with people from the town and from the neighborhood. In the choir and the side seats there were men of all ages and conditions, almost all dressed in a uniform manner; in the middle were some young gentlemen; and in the front a numerous and select auditory made the sacred roof re-echo with the most melodious sounds. Every thing inspired meditation and devotion. My guide said to me, "those whom you see silent and devout at the foot of the altar, those who are in military uniform, and who pay homage with their arms to the God of armies, those who make the multiple resound with their harmonious concert, are no many victims of that dreadful malady, which deprives man of the use of his reason;—even he whom you see penetrated with respect and fear, installing the priest in the expiatory sacrifice, is himself one of these unfortunate beings." It is not easy to express the surprise I felt, & the emotion excited in my mind by this terrible & delightful contrast of the wretchedness & the grandeur of the human mind. Divine services were over, but the attention of my mind still continued. My guide perceived it, took me by the hand, and conducted me into a passage which came from the church to the interior of the house. It is here, said he, that the inhabitants of the place repair to their usual occupations.

At a certain signal they all assembled at a place destined for the music of the morning. My surprize was increased on beholding, that as they arrived in the middle of a spacious court, they all ranged themselves in a line in the precise place which was drawn for it. A profound silence prevailed when the director of this establishment appeared. On seeing him, I observed the most melancholy rejoice, and yield to the sweetest emotions of the heart. I fancied myself in the bosom of a numerous family, assembled in the morning round a tender father who loves his children. The director, passing through the ranks which they formed, listened to the recital of their sufferings, the wants, the grievances, the tokens of zeal, and replied to all by words of peace and consolation. His words were like a talisman, which lulled their agitation, dispelled melancholy chagrin, and spread serenity and smiles on the most thoughtful and perverted countenances. This kind of review being terminated, some of them went into the garden contiguous to the house. There several games were arranged, judiciously conceived to afford them a gentle and agreeable gymnastic exercise, and to dissipate the gloomy thoughts in which they are habitually plunged.

While contemplating this kind of concert, I perceived that the presence of the spectators, and the natural desire of receiving the prize given to the victory, excited in their hearts a noble emulation. While envy of the applauses thus indulged in the pleasure of the wholesome exercise, others walked about in silence and avoided company; others declaimed aloud; here several of them were exhorting flowers; there others stood immoveable, and so plunged in deep reflection, that it seemed as if the fall of the edifice would not have roused them from it.

I had spent an hour in this manner, and was absorbed in the ideas which the sight inspired, when my guide invited my companion and myself to go to a high story. We ascended a magnificent staircase, at the top of which an elegant vase, filled with fine perfume, diffused an agreeable odour through the whole building. On the right, two of our grenadiers stood sentinel before an arsenal of simulated arms. From curiosity, I put several questions to them, but could not obtain any answer, because they would have imagined they committed a great breach of discipline if they had broken their silence.

We were then led into a large saloon, neatly decorated, where we found several of the inmates, who like some in full possession of their reason, were passing their time agreeably in conversation, or in playing on the harpsichord and other instruments, singing pleasing songs & hymns of gratitude in honor of the king, whose bust is set up between the statues of Piety and Wisdom, who placed on his brow a crown offered him by the love of his subjects. In the adjoining apartment were some paintings executed by distinguished birth, quietly amusing themselves with playing billiards.

Astonished at the urbanity, the decorum, the tranquility, and the politeness of this unfortunate family, a stranger could not help saying to my guide, "where then are the insane?" "Where ever you turn your eyes," said he, "peace, the regularity, the good temper which you witness here, are the fruit of vigilance, of order, and of the well combination of the different methods of promoting health, and to the happy application of the means pointed out by medicine, moral philosophy, and a profound knowledge of the human mind.

In more than one kind of mental derangement, the difficulty consists in administering medicines, and, above all, that of prescribing the use of them, must occupy the first rank. The hospitals for the insane, governed like places of confinement, or like prisons, destined to secure dangerous patients who must be sequestered from society, are calculated rather to multiply the kinds of victims whom they contain.

In this hospital, the ancient rigorous treatment of the patients has been happily replaced by tender and affectionate cares, by the admirable art of gaining the mind, and by a mixture of gentleness & firmness. Experience has soon demonstrated the advantages of this system, & every body acknowledges that it was inspired, not by the blind enthusiasm of an ill judged piety, but by profound knowledge and enlightened reflections on the cause of madness, and the means of curing it.

[The writer here gives an account of two eminent physicians, who came to begin a series of Galvanic experiments applied to certain species of madness, very frequent in hospitals for the insane. After having chosen the patients, M. Ronchi, one of them, explained in an elegant and concise manner, the reason which convinced him that the remedy seemed efficacious, and the hopes which might be conceived of it.

Having witnesses to these experiments, and had an opportunity, as I did myself, of observing the effect which the Galvanic electricity produced on several individuals, a statement of which will throw the greatest light on the subject of contesting the infinite variety of mental aberrations.]

It was 12, and the experiments ceased, it being the hour of dinner. We proceeded to the refectory, the chaplain, Tenguci, the other physician, pointed out the chairs for the guests, and the walls of which are covered with mattresses to confine the maniacs when the fit of frenzy is on them; and the beds, on which the patients are placed in such a manner, that (the circulation not being impeded) it is impossible to injure themselves or others. The dinner was served us the strait waistcoats, which permit the inmate to walk about at their ease, without being able to commit any excess; the apartments destined for the surprise bath; the theatre, where these unfortunate persons recreate themselves in representing short pieces; and lastly, that of the puppets, where their minds are frequently diverted in the very height of madness.

Here the whole family again assembled at table. Unhappily it was still too numerous, notwithstanding the frequent and daily cures which take place. There a great number of its members to the state, to their relations, to the arts, the sciences, and humanity. The bread, the wine, the meat, the soup, all these ailments, were wholesome and of good quality, well prepared, and well served up; tranquility, order, and silence, every where observed; but it was then first I first became sensible in what kind of place I was. The continual agitation of the insane, the noise of their muscles, which is not interrupted in their moments of rage, the animal heat, which in many of them is much increased, the extraordinary energy of their strength, sometimes exists in them no extraordinary opacity; and it was such in some of these unfortunate persons that they devoured their food like ferocious beasts, appearing insatiable, whatever quantity their kind directors set before them.—Their physiognomy, their gestures, their secret murmurs which would cause them to be taken less for men than for brutes, evidently proved that in these moments they were deprived of reason, and governed by instinct alone. A melancholy and painful sight, which cannot be beheld a moment without exciting the most sorrowful reflections on the dreadful evils which assail humanity.

PRODUCTIONS OF MAINE.

We understand the extraordinary West-brook Cattle are now on their way to Brighton, where they will be exhibited at the ensuing Cattle Show. The stock now consists of a cow, two heifers and two bulls. One of the heifers, two years and five months old weighs 1521 pounds, and girts seven feet and three inches, the other heifer fifteen months old, weighs 1192 pounds, and girts six feet and four inches. The young bull two months and three days old, weighs 380 pounds and girts four feet and one inch: they are not more remarkable for their size than handsome form and other good qualities. We sincerely hope our enterprising farmers will avail themselves of the present opportunity of rearing these wonderful animals, as they pass through their seasonal towns, that they may be considered of the very important advantages that may be derived from a good breed of cattle. We are assured that these cattle have had no extraordinary feeding to make them what their present size—the average increase of the three young bull, is nearly 3 pounds 7 ounces per day, and has been fed with nothing but the milk which he has sucked from the Cow.

During the month, the cow gave from six to eight quarts of milk per day more than the calf would take. This cattle appear to form a class of an entire new breed, caused by crossing the breeds of the best cattle that could be obtained from Europe, and shows the many important advantages to be derived from crossing the breeds of domestic cattle, which appear to improve wonderfully in this country, so peculiarly adapted to the fertile pastures of Maine.—Connecticut Con.

SECOND CROP.

BANGOR, (Maine,) Sept. 24.

Mr. Thomson, of this town, brought to market on Saturday last, Green Peas of the second crop raised this season. The Peas were sowed the last week in June, and got perfectly ripe, were gathered, dried, sowed again on the same ground, and have produced a good second crop.—Id

LANCASTER, (Penn.) Sept. 25.

Large Melon.—A water melon was raised this year on the farm of Mr. Jacob Miller, about one mile from this city, weighing 60 pounds and measuring in length 4 feet 8 and a half inches, and in circumference 3 feet 2 1-2 inches.

WILMINGTON, (Del.) Sept. 26.

There is now growing on the farm of Robert Hamilton, Esq. in Brandywine Hundred, New Castle county, Delaware, a stalk of corn, measuring 11 feet stands, seventeen and a half feet in height. The seed was brought from the West Indies.

The following circumstance deserves mention, however incredible it may appear:—Mr. Agricule, of Golnitz, in Altenburg, has in his garden an apple tree, which in the year 1816, bore 2000 sorts of apples and other fruits; but this tree has on it above 300 sorts, but those last grafted have not yet borne. This gentleman is offended at this curiosity for his amusement by inoculating and grafting, and has fastened to every branch a little board with the name of the sort of apple it bears. The tree has a strange appearance from the various shapes and colours of the leaves, blossoms and fruits. The trees were ago, the Russians bivouacked near this tree, and were so surprised at the strange shape of it, and the number of boards, that they did not injure it, though they cut down other fruit trees for firewood.—Amsterdam Courant.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 19.

Spontaneous inflammation.—A few days past, one of the woollen manufactories near Germantown, was set on fire by the spontaneous inflammation of wool, of flocks, greased with linseed oil. It had been prepared the day before for a particular purpose, and was thought the quantity did not exceed a couple of bushels, by morning it was completely on fire; and had communicated to the building contiguous to it. By an experiment since made, it is proved that fifty pounds of wool, the same mixture of oil, and the same quantity of flocks, will heat from the same cause in about twelve hours. It has long been known that this effect has sometimes resulted from vegetable substances wet with linseed oil, but it would now appear that from its mixture with wool, or flocks, the effect is even more certain, and it should be a caution to manufacturers, who use these articles, to be careful about their engines.

Thrashing Machine.—A thrashing machine, lately invented in England, was put in operation last week, at the seat of the Hon. Stephen Van Rensselaer, of this city, in presence of a number of gentlemen, and seventy-five sheaves of wheat were neatly thrashed in 12 minutes. We understand this excellent machine, and a new invented Flax Machine, will be in exhibition at the ensuing fair at Coopertown, on the 6th of October.

Steam.—The most impressive and beautiful illustration of the steam power has been applied in that way, that we have ever seen, is in the mill of Major Isaac M'Kim, on Smith's wharf. The machine is one of sixty horses power, and propels eight pair of burr stones with so much ease and precision, that, in the midst of this amazing operation, one is struck with agreeable surprise at the silent smoothness and regularity with which every thing moves.

The measurer of the wheat, without changing his position, casts it, at once, into a hopper placed upon the second floor, and no manual labor whatever is again applied throughout the whole process, until the flour is put into the barrel.—The wheat is elevated by machinery to the roof of the house, where it is by the same means thoroughly cleansed and deposited in the hoppers; it then descends in the shape of flour, and being bolted, and its several qualities duly separated and cooled, is finally conducted to a room on the second floor ready for the hand of the cooper. Such is the astonishing power of this mill, of the last we have heard, turned off 1200 hundred barrels of flour in twenty-four hours, using fuel at the rate of two & a half cords per hundred. We are happy in every opportunity to bear testimony to the public spirit of our citizens; and this establishment certainly does credit to Baltimore, and adds another proof of the forecast and enterprising character of its owner. May we not look for an entire revolution in the milling interest?—Balt. Cabinet.

An artist in England has proposed to the members of the society for superintending the erection of the new churches, the substitution of cast-iron for stone in all the ornamental parts of the building. The expensive work which has hitherto been executed in stone he says, may now be done in iron at a comparatively trifling expense, and if coated with some anti-corrosive substance will endure for ages.

The Dublin Evening Post of Aug. 15, states, that a farmer named John M'Loughlin, and two Englishmen had been arrested for manufacturing tea. They carried on their trade pretty extensively in the Kilmaroine mountain, in the county of Dublin. Their tea was manufactured from the following materials:

Black and deadly night shede—(poison).

Ivy leaves—(poison when taken in large quantities.)

Bay leaves—(ditto bay)

Robin run the hedge—(one of the most severe purgatives among our indigenous plants.)

Wormwood sage—(rather conducive to health.)

Two descriptions of alder leaves—(very bad.)

Potatoe leaves, when in season—(ditto.)

These were curled by a vitriolic preparation, and coloured with Logwood & Sap green, with verdegris—for black tea with copperas!!!

The very quantity of the tea was seized on the spot.

PERPETUAL MOTION.

John Spencer an ingenuous individual of Canterbury, Connecticut, has applied the magnetic power to the production of perpetual motion.

A wooden beam poised by the centre, has a small cord attached to one end of it, which is alternately drawn up by a piece of magnet placed above it, and down by another placed below it; as the end of the beam passes under the magnet, either above or below, the machine intersects a non-conducting substance, which suspends the attraction of the magnet approached and follows the other to exert its powers. Thus the end of the beam continually ascends and descends between the two magnets, without ever coming into contact with either; the attractive power of each being suspended precisely at the moment of nearest approach. And as the magnetic attraction is a permanently operating power, there appears to be no limit to the continuance of the motion, but the endurance of the machine.—London paper.

Sickness at Sandusky.—The Cleveland Gazette mentions that it has been very sickly at Sandusky since the middle of July, that the disease still rages with unabated force, and that there are not persons enough in health to take care of the sick. A letter dated in that place on the 20th ult. states, that the prevailing disorders are agues and bilious fevers, and ascribes the sickness to "the disposition of the water in the bay, and the quantities of timber and brush thrown into heaps and rotting at the mouth of the river."—The writer supposes that "time, combined with the effluvia of putrified weeds, have imprregnated the strongly with unwholesome vapors," and he expresses a hope that the citizens of that neighborhood "will take warning by the past, and clear up the rubbish, before another summer."

It is stated that June (?) array has obtained from the local authorities of Havana, the exclusive privilege of erecting a steam boat which he has already built, between the ports of Havana and Matanzas and Marist; and in this village is completed the whole coast of Cuba, should he hereafter determine to build steam boats for the purpose.—Charleston Times.

From Europe

LONDON, Aug. 19.

Among the announcements which have been most sensibly felt as arising from that general restoration of rights which followed upon the down fall of Napoleon's power, may be reckoned the insecurity of property acquired under the usurped authority of the imperial government. In France itself, this dangerous and difficult question was settled by a wise extension of the principles of restitution; but in Germany, for obvious reasons, the necessity of a similar policy did not exist. The claims and litigations, however, which have arisen from this source, are numerous, and in a recent sitting of the Diet at Frankfort, M. Martens, the minister plenipotentiary from Hannover and Brunswick, developed in a luminous speech, on behalf of the latter power, the reasons why it could not ratify the transfer of property made by the authority of the Westphalian government. The simple right of conquest, he contended, or the occupation of a country by the enemy, did not give to the conqueror the right of alienating the immoveable property of the state, of such portions, at least, which remained null and void, as being at the legitimate sovereign did not renounce his claims, or had not left all reasonable hope of recovering the possessions of his domains. The Diet concurred in the validity of this argument, which was enforced by a variety of copious illustrations, and decreed that those persons who had received donatives of property from the usurped government had no legal title to it, but must refer the restitution to the original proprietors of such property, without any indemnity for those who might themselves complain. The equity of this decree cannot be disputed.

The late Mr. Arbuthnot is thus described by the editor of the Dublin Journal, from a personal knowledge of that unfortunate gentleman :—" Arbuthnot was an amiable man, but the child of misfortune. At an early age he became an orphan; his father was drowned, & his mother died in a mad-house: and now in the prime of life he has fallen a victim to injustice."

The sub-committee of New Drury have determined, it seems, at all hazards, to reopen the theatre for the winter campaign. Mr. Stephen Kemble is actively preparing his troops to take the field in great dramatic force. The theatre will be opened on the 27th of next month. Immediately after the injunction had been developed by the lord Chancellor, notice to such effect were sent to the several performers.

August 20.

We inserted yesterday paragraphs from the Halifax papers, containing complaints against the subjects of the United States who continue to make encroachments on our fisheries on the coast of Labrador and Newfoundland. Only a few days ago, we mentioned that seizures on part of these unwarrantable acts had been captured by captain Harper, and sent in one of our American ports for trials, whence one of them had considered to escape, and had arrived at news extensively. The master of the vessel which thus escaped, thought it a mighty grievance that he should have been captured; and accordingly published a letter in the American papers, complaining of the hard treatment he had experienced from a vessel of war. We hope that his publication will have the effect of preventing his countrymen from continuing their intrusions upon British property. If not, we can assure them that the orders issued to the British cruisers upon the subject are peremptory, and such as will not allow them to smart under unless they desist. These orders instruct our naval officers on the fishing stations, that if any vessel of the United States are found hovering on the coasts they are to be warned off; and if found in the bays or harbors, are to be seized and brought in for trial."

Launch of a line of battle ship in the East-Indies.

On the 8th of January last, the inhabitants of Calcutta were gratified by the most magnificent spectacle of the kind ever witnessed in that country. The new line-of-battle ship ever built on this river, was committed to the waves from the dock yard of Messrs. Kyds & Co at Kidderpore, amid acclamations of some thousands of European and native spectators.

The Bristol Mirror says :—" We learn with satisfaction, that in consequence of some recent regulations in the United States of America, respecting the duties on iron, at several of the iron works, bar-iron is now manufactured under the hammer; and we are led to believe that this alteration will add very considerably to the demand of our own iron for markets where heretofore that of Sweden has been used, as sales are very brisk, at advanced prices."

Died in Hollgarth-street, on Saturday last, Mr. Arthur Fotheby, aged 82. The person, who lived during the greater part of his life in a state of abject penury, is said to have died worth £20,000! He has not unfrequently accepted employment on the turnpike roads, in the breaking of stones &c.; and the cost which he wore up to the time of his death was so patched that scarcely a particle of cloth of which it was originally composed could be discovered amongst the "shreds and patches" which it exhibited.—Durham Advertiser.

LONDON, Aug. 21.

Coffee has fluctuated considerably this week, but prices are now nearly the same as stated in our last; the public sales on Wednesday went rather lower in the ordinary qualities, but yesterday the prices recovered, and the fine qualities, which before were in proportion lower, advanced nearly 2s. per cwt. The sales by private contract have been again extensive.

The manufacturers of this town have this week raised the prices of weaving is per cwt or about 10 per cent on the sort of goods most generally manufactured in this neighborhood.—Preston Chronicle.

Some thousands of quarters of English and foreign wheat are now on board vessels lying in the river Thames; and every granary on its banks, that could be procured, has been taken for the purpose of storing.

We had a pretty good supply of English wheat this week, the quantity of which the major part was new, and for which there was brisk demand, at an advance from 2 to 4s; but there was no improvement in the inferior kinds.

A verdict of £150 sterling has been obtained against the proprietors of a coach from Hungerford to London, for injury sustained by the plaintiff in being overturned by the negligence of the driver, &c.

The operation undergone by the Queen is not that which is common in cases of dropsy. Incisions, we understand, have been made in the lower arms, which are treated in a way well known; and by these she has been relieved.

The ports will continue open for the importation of wheat, rye, barley, oats, beans and peas, till the 15th of November next.

The domestics of Bonaparte and Count Bertrand, who arrived a few days ago in the Thames from St. Helena, have taken their departure for Hamburgh.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 27.

United States.—The opposition papers have raised the alarm of a new war with America—It is almost a pity that it has not taken place, to afford them the gratification of going to tire of proclaiming and predicting shame and discomfiture; and to give them the opportunity of again manufacturing their favorite and long-cherished topic of popular cruelty. Government, they tell us, is seeking occasions for a war, and the seizure of Pensacola, is one of the means which it has taken for that purpose. It is a proof of the contrary, the murder of Arbuthnot and Ambrister have happily occurred to favor the purpose. It is a proof of the moderation, that they have not charged their own government with having advised these measures, and with employing a gentleman of the name of Forbes. Explanations, will doubtless, be demanded, and we hope, they may be given. Jackson's conduct, however, is not to be approved; but its repression does not necessarily require a war with England. They will oppose themselves not so much to England as to associated Europe, and will be expected to be hostile to that interference in law, which alone binds her and every other power to the great family of nations.

A rebellion has broke out in the interior of the Province of Ceylon, which rendered it necessary for the governor to proclaim Martial Law.

A great reformation has taken place at Paris, on account of the long continued drought, and solemn prayers for rain have been offered up.

The Dresden has adopted great economy in the article of linen. The shirt is almost universally exploded as an old fashioned habit, and instead of it Count beaux's complete dress-suit of linen, consists only of a collar, a pair of wrist-bands and a neckcloth. The whole may consequently be carried in a pocket book.

It is asserted in the Paris papers, that the opening of the congress of Aix la Chapelle, is preferred, and definitely for the 27th of September next. It is conjectured, that the sovereigns who will assemble in that town, will remain there two or three months.

BANFF, Aug. 9.

Capt. Ridley, of the Triad whaleship, of this port, just returned from the northern seas, informs us, that on the 10th of May he was in lat. 80 55, about 8 miles from Spitsbergen, in 22 fathoms water : the sun was at a great altitude : there was scarcely any night : they could follow the glorious luminary circling again and again round the heavens; the atmosphere, at this time, was very clear. Capt. R. went to the topmast, and could see, with a glass, to the extent of between 40 and 50 miles (as he supposes) across the ocean, which was more open than when he was in lat. 81, last year. ——There were, indeed, large islands of floe ice floating about; but he is sure the sea was navigable, without great difficulty, as far as the eye could reach. But the ice was running about, and blocking up the bays in masses on the northern coast of Spitzbergen. Indeed, it would undoubtedly, upon that coast, be impossible for a ship to have been obliged to abandon the attempt to navigate the sea between Greenland & Spitzbergen.—Capt. R. says, that, when he left Archangel, there was an immense accumulation of field and floe ice, stretching almost from shore to shore. He quitted the vicinity of Spitzbergen on the 12th of May, and directed his course towards Greenland. About the middle of June, being in lat. 78, 120 miles from land, as nearly as he can judge, the weather very rainy, with a thick fog, he spoke an Aberdeen whale fishing ship, the master of which informed the discovery ships on the 20th of June, in lat 80, and went on board with his log book. He was informed by the officers, that they had explored in every direction to the west of Spitzbergen for a passage northward, but could not get half a degree farther than they were. They were steering S. W. when last seen. Whether they might not find it practicable to pass between Spitzbergen and North Greenland, is matter of doubt.

Their S. W. course would induce us to think they did not intend trying at that time. From all this, there is every apparent cause to regret, that the expedition did not set out sooner; as then they might have coasted Spitzbergen, and entered the polar basin by the opening which captain Phipps found.

Paris Aug. 14.—An article from Constantinople states, that on the 7th of June the Baron de Strogonoff, the Russian Minister, was insulted by a Turk, who met him on the passage. The Baron complained very energetically to the Reis Effendi, who promised him justice. Two days afterwards the Visier sent the Turk and the Russian Minister, stating that the Turk in question was in prison, and that he should be placed at the disposal of the Minister, to undergo whatever punishment he pleased, the Visier, recommending at the same time, that the Turk should be set at liberty. The minister, however, requested the release of the man, which was complied with; and the next day the Czeb published at Constantinople a severe order, as to the respect due to Foreign Ministers, and all those who were under their protection.

The Russian Government has categorically refused to treat with the Students of Gottingen. The resolution was communicated to them at Hesse Homburg, on the 2d instant. After adopting the resolution not again to resume their studies at Gottingen, they were to leave that place within their effects, and then to proceed to other German Universities.

The difficulty of the spinners in Manchester and other towns and their employers continues to be unsettled. Troops have been sent to Macclesfield, Leek and Congleton, to oversee this spirit of insubordination. The spinners during the years 1818 and 1819, were constantly employed, while the weavers and almost every other class of manufacturers, were upon very low wages. At the close of the latter year they obtained an advance, the average weekly wages, which had been regularly paid to them for nine months previously, being from 21s for men and 17s 3d for boy and girl spinners.

BONAPARTE.—The latest accounts from St. Helena, continue to mention the circumstance of the sailor making his way to the residence of Bonaparte. It was also reported on the island, that in consequence of representations from Napoleon, or from other circumstances, he would shortly quit Longwood, and reside at a Mr. Leech's farm, which had been, or was about to be purchased for his future residence. The latter is situated to the westward of the only landing-place on the island, about three or four miles in the interior. The only access to it is by a winding way up the Ladder-hill, at the top of which is a strong battery. The accounts state, that it was considered by every person not only the most pleasant residence on the island, but that all chance of escape was rendered impossible, as any person approaching could be seen at a great distance; and as there was only one path, a few sentinels would be sufficient for the purpose of guarding it. The fortifications on Ladder-hill are represented to be of the most commanding description, large cannon looking nearly perpendicular down both on the narrow pass and also towards the sea. Some of them are said to be mounted on carriages with swings in chains, and could on the instant be levelled at any object, however much below the range of the guns. By means of a telegraph at the house of Mr. Leech, communications could be had in a few seconds with the Governor's house, or with any part of the island. The greatest attention continued to be paid to all vessels sailing from the island. On its being made known by signal that a vessel is about to sail from the island, the officer on duty makes himself sure that Bonaparte is at his residence, or, to speak in the language of the island, "at his grubbing hole." The signal is then made for the vessel to depart, and if she does not instantly leave the anchor, the batteries commence firing, and continue till the vessel has cleared the bay.

It was some time ago mentioned, that some of the army of occupation had been employing themselves in searching for reliques on the field on which the battle of Agincourt was fought, on the 25th October, in the year 1415. We are very happy to learn that their labours have been crowned with success far beyond their expectation, and the number of gold pieces already found amount to upwards of sixty. One of these, in the possession of his grace the duke of Gordon, is in the highest state of preservation. On one side are the arms of France, with the following inscription : Karolus Dei Gracia Francorum rex; and on the reverse; P C vincit, P C regnat, P C Imperat, P C—Christus vincit, regnat per Christum or Crucem. The gentlemen engaged in this research discovered the spot where the nobles who fell on that fatal day were buried; and besides the coin abovementioned, various other reliques have been got: many fragments of armour, swords and daggers, several arrow heads, one of them in the most perfect state of preservation, two buncheads, one six, the other four feet long, and a spur. Several metal rings have also been found, some of gold, and from their diminutive size are supposed to have been originally given to the knights by their fair dames, on departing to the wars. One ring is enamelled, and on the outside bears, in old characters, the words Jesus Maria, and inside a flower like a rose, with Belle after it, possibly intended as an enigma for the lady's name Isabella. Our heroes ring was found filled with clay and a finger bone sticking in it: the wearer did not expect it to remain there for such a length of time.

Buckles and other insignia of the fray have likewise been collected. The gentlemen proceeding in their researches, secured the right by purchase, else it is shrewdly suspected their operations would have been impeded long since by the French government.

Private letters were received yesterday from Madrid, dated 30th inst. They state that the serious differences which have existed between Spain and Portugal, are on the point of being amicably settled, through the mediation of the three allied powers, Great Britain, Russia, and Austria. The conditions of the arrangement, are the restitution of the province of Olivenza, and its Olivenza, with the other cantons, as they are termed, which were detached from Portugal, by one of those cruel measures so common under the late French government. On its side, the court of Rio Janeiro is to give up Monte Video, as soon as a Spanish garrison shall arrive from Europe to take possession.—This arrangement is said to have received general approbation in Spain, as it is considered conformable to the principles of justice and liberality.

We direct you to govern yourselves accordingly, and to be very particular when you transmit to us any information that may have been received by yourselves, or by any officer under your orders, as the anchor, the batteries commence firing, and continue till the vessel has cleared the bay.

Mr. Editor,

Francis F. Boucher, and Paul Brown were tried before all the Judges of the Court of King's Bench, for being concerned in the Murder of Robert Semple (commonly called Governor Semple) at Red River, in June 1816. The trial was of long duration than any one that has ever been known before in this Province; it lasted two days and part of two nights. The Jury retired, and in about ten minutes brought in a verdict NOT GUILTY. As unanimous crowd of spectators attended the trial, which was rendered exceedingly interesting by the disclosure of many facts, that for several years past, have been happily taken place, in the Indian Country, between the Hudson's Bay, Company & the North West Company, and the Settlers at the Red River. In the death of Mr. Semple.

I have lately read a pamphlet, published in behalf of the Hudson's Bay Company, which they attempted to be justified by the death of Mr. Semple, and his party at Red River. But surely his Lordship must have been very badly informed of the truth, for it appears that his Lordship was not even aware that Governor Semple and his party. The following is a short statement of the general tenor of the evidence as it was clearly understood at the trial. There was full testimony given of the intentions of the Hudson's Bay Company, to prevent the North West Company from obtaining provisions, or from carrying down a saleable river what they could obtain. In the Spring of the year 1816 however, it became absolutely necessary for a Mr. Alexander McDonell who commanded at a fort of the North West Company at Cappelle to convey a supply of provisions through the country, and this could not be done without passing a Hudson's Bay fort, called Douglass; which could not be done by water, as cannon were planted at this Fort to stop the passage of the river. Mr. McDonell and his party, therefore hired a few miles above Fort Douglass and near a party of Indians and half breeds (half Indians) with Mr. Boucher. Mr. Brown was also with them and is a half breed. This party under the command of Mr. Boucher, consisted of about sixty men, and they received orders to make a circuit round the fort, on the land side, in order to avoid the cannon. They were then armed each with a gun, and with them carried each load of provisions, and they were expressly sent for the purpose of guarding these provisions from the undirected, and passed as far from the fort as a swamp would allow of. In their progress, they had fallen in with a few settlers, who were detained to prevent information from being given at the Fort; and these persons were never injured, or even threatened by the Indians, and which shows that no injury was intended to the settlers. The party had actually passed the fort of Douglass, and encamped; and Mr. Semple sallied out with twenty men, armed with guns, and bayonets. The Indians, and half breeds were roasting beef. They were reunited however, and sent Mr. Boucher, to ask Mr Semple what were his intentions. Semple answered hold off or I'll fire, Boucher then rudely, and ordered his men to make a prisoner of him, but Boucher being on horseback, slipped off from the saddle, and the men not expecting to be fired upon by their own countrymen, fired over the heads of Semple, and the greater part of his men. On the side of the North West detachment, one man was killed, Mr. Pritchar, one of the Hudson Bay Company's witnesses proved that Boucher saved his life after the battle. He was fully convinced that Paul Brown was not in the battle at all. The Jury who tried this important cause, were Mr. Joseph Stephen, Mr. John Wilson, George Bird, Joseph Harmin, Peter Lamarre, Michael Whitmore, Joshua Leach, John McDougall, Stephen Whitney, William Moore, Arba Shaver, Alexander Mountgomery.

ungrateful for the fostering care that has cherished its infancy, looking anxiously to the period of its strength, as to the moment of its revolt.

5th. Resolved—That to repel at once so foul an imputation, to undeserve the misguided, to vilify the bosom of the disturbers of public peace, and to give to our Parent State and to the world the best grounded assurance, that the Inhabitants of this Province know how to prize their happiness in belonging to the most exalted Nation upon Earth, and desire no more than the secure possession of that just liberty, which her own more immediate children enjoy, it is the opinion of this Committee, that some such Legislative Provisions should be enacted, (as the wisdom of the Imperial Parliament has found it proper to provide, to meet similar occasions,) which may hereafter put it out of the power of any designing persons to organize discontent, and degrade the character of the Province.

6th. Resolved—That these Resolutions be communicated to the Honorable the Legislative Council.

Death of a Priest.—A letter from Madrid, inserted in the French papers, furnishes the following extraordinary fact :—The Bishop of Durango, Marquis de Castinizas, having prohibited the inhabitants from giving bells to their convents, the Incendiot of Province, Don Alejo Garcia Conde, disregarding the prohibition of the Bishop, continued to give bells to the convent of Durango. The consequence was a violent dispute between the Bishop and Intendant, which ended in the exchange of communications being fulminated against the latter.—Shortly after there happened to be a fete at the Cathedral, and on the Intendant presenting himself for admission, he was informed of the order for his exclusion; on hearing which he rushed precipitately forward to the altar, at which the Bishop was officiating pontifically, and wounded him so severely with his drawn sword, that he is since dead.

Lord Cochrane's frigate.—The Richmond Enquirer gives the following account of the escape of Lord Cochrane, on the authority of a gentlemen who was lately on board of her :—She mounts 26 guns, of which 26 are long 18 pounders. She has a steam machinery to move her, which is so fixed that the paddles may be lifted up out of the water in case of a storm. She is rigged in the manner of a Spanish Polacre—her sails managed by halyards from below, and they do not require hands to go aloft to furl or unfurl them. She was completely manned, assistance of the Spanish patriots.

THE LATE

PRINCESS CHARLOTTE OF WALES,

AND

HER ROYAL HIGHNESS THE DUCHESS OF YORK

Having graciously condescended to allow Mr. Mayhew Watts to name her the patroness of hi plan for raising a Cenotaph to the Memory of the late beloved and lamented Princess; public Subscriptions are solicited for this desired object.

The generous spirit of the British public, which has ever shewn itself ready at the call of patriotism in the hour of victory to perpetuate the memory of the brave, is now called upon in the hour of mourning, by the voice of affection and disappointed hope, to perpetuate that of exalted virtue and departed worth.

To make the offering as general as the feeling of sorrow is sincere, no sum exceeding One Guinea will be received from any one Subscriber; whilst the smallest sum, as a tribute of respect, will be accepted.

The Cenotaph will be erected on some public spot, and should sufficient funds be raised, the temple which is to contain the Monumental Group, will be constructed so that it may be appropriated to the purposes of Divine Worship, and constituted a Free Church; thus uniting it, in style, magnitude, as well as utility, commensurate with the sum subscribed.

From the Edinburgh Magazine, for May, 1818.

Some accounts of Signora Girardelli, the incomparable lady, now exhibiting in Edinburgh, with observations on the power of resisting the action of fire, as evinced in a variety of examples.

The public interest is strongly and deservedly excited by the exhibition of the Signora Girardelli at present in this city. I took an early opportunity of seeing her, and made notes of every thing I observed, that I might preserve a record of her singular power of resisting the effects of heat and aqua fortis.

I seated myself in one of the best places and close to a long table, on which were the materials to be made use of in the course of the exhibition, and which it was in the power of the spectators to examine if common sealing wax, pieces of lead, a flask of olive oil, a small phial of aqua fortis, &c.

The lady appeared elevated on a stage behind this table, and was attended by her husband, who prepared and arranged every thing. A brazier, full of heated charcoal, was brought in and placed behind the stage, and as soon as the instruments and materials could be got ready, the following experiments were made:

Experiment 1. A flat iron shovel, about the size of a common room shovel, was made red hot, in order to convince us that it was applied to a piece of deal board, much burnt from having been used in former experiments and of course very dry, which it quickly set in a blaze. The lady then repeatedly drew the edge of the red hot shovel along the upper part of her foot, and the front of her ankle, without any appearance of fear or perspiration, but at the same time, as I permitting it to rest any sensible time on the spot. I observed, that when the shovel touched any loose thread about the foot of her trowsers, it set it on fire. The contact of the hot iron seemed to produce no effect upon her skin, at least it did not seem to become red, nor did it give out any vapor or smell, nor was any sound heard.

Experiment 2. Another shovel, or flat piece of iron, was taken out of the brazier, of a brighter red than the preceding, and was laid upon the deal board. The Signora struck it repeatedly, with the sole of each foot, with great force, until it was a little heat.—The blazing of the board all this time added to the appearance of the spectacle, but the contact of her foot with the hot iron was only momentary.

Experiment 3. She drew a shovel, the fire part of which was red hot, over her hair, which was abundant, and of a fine black, without affecting it in the least. No fumes or vapours were emitted, nor was any crackling produced.

Experiment 4. She passed the edge of the red hot shovel along her arms, as she had applied it in the first experiment to her legs, and with the same result.

Experiment 5. She applied it in a very red state to her tongue, or rather licked it with her tongue. In this experiment we were desired to attend to the hissing noise which would be produced, and it was distinct. She then showed that her tongue was not injured by it.

Experiment 6. She filled a small saucepan with Flore—— oil, and, to prove that it was heated to ebullition an egg was broke, which coagulated in it. She took some of this hot oil into her mouth, and held it a considerable time, rinsing her mouth with it, and then spit it into the brazier, to show, by its blazing, that it was really so.

Experiment 7. She took a little aqua fortis into her mouth, and, after holding it there a little, spit it out on some iron filings, when orange nitrous fumes were extricated.

Experiment 8. She put some aqua fortis on a plate, and put a half penny into it, upon which it acted briskly—The whole was then thrown upon a stone or slab, and she rubbed about the half-penny until it was scoured bright.

Experiment 9. She put a half-penny into the palm of her hand, and poured a little aqua fortis upon it, and allowed them to act upon each other there a considerable time. Her hand was not at all discoloured by this experiment.

Experiment 10. She passed a bundle of eight lighted candles repeatedly, and pretty slowly, beneath each face, arm, which they discoloured by their smoke, but did not seem to affect in any other way.

Experiment 11. She passed the sole of each foot slowly and deliberately over the flame of a bundle of eight wax candles, so that the flame was seen rising between her toes, apparently without effect.

Experiment 12. She applied melted sealing wax to her tongue, and no impression of a seal was taken on it.

Experiment 13.—She seemed to dip the points of her fingers repeatedly into melted lead, and put a little of it each time into her mouth, and she afterwards spit out some lead in the form of thin grains elevated together.

"Experiment 14.—A considerable quantity of melted lead was poured out on the slab, and she put the soles of her feet upon it repeatedly.

Experiment 15.—She seemed to pour melted lead into her mouth, and afterwards spit out a small cheese-d piece of lead, which might be about a drachm in weight.

Signora Girardelli is a pleasant looking woman, about 40 years of age, though at first sight, she appears younger. She has a good address, and appears desirous that all the spectators should see and be satisfied that she performs real and not delusive tricks.—In the whole exhibition the suspicion of juggling or deception is scarcely excited, but on the contrary, there is such an appearance of fairness, and so much encouragement to close examination is given, that any such suspicion is quickly removed. The experiments are also conducted with great decency, and do not excite any unpleasant feeling in the spectators, as the Signora evinces not the slightest suffering from any of them but looks always pleased and gratified with her success in producing astonishment or exciting applause. When she had any thing to say to her husband, she spoke in German, but although she could scarcely expect to be understood by any of the spectators near enough to hear, she only gave directions to her husband to arrange the exhibition, so that every one might be satisfied, and to tell the spectators what she was going to do, or wished them to attend to.

After the exhibition she was so obliging as to comply with a request of some of the spectators to examine her tongue, and came out front behind her screen, although she had begun to undress. Her tongue was clean, of its natural red colour, and not apparently changed either by the degree of heat or acid applied to it. On the stage her teeth seemed bad, but this appearance is owing to her upper front teeth being unusually short and small. The parts of her arms and legs subjected to the experiments were in every respect natural except that they seemed to be destitute of hair; there was no remains of any application upon them. She, however, said, that the power of resisting fire and acids was owing to a preparation which she applied to different parts of her body, that these parts alone possessed this property, and that the effects of the application gradually wore off. She also told us that she had repeated the experiments twice a day at least, almost regularly, for many years, sometimes three times a day, and that she never met with any accident, or, if she did know herself, (perhaps she wished us to understand some of the unprepared parts,) she burn landed in the course of a night. She is evidently a native of Germany, and said that she was the daughter of Offheim, a celebrated professor of chemistry at Munich, and that she had discovered the secret in his papers and books.

To Settlers.

THE Inhabitants of Smith's Creek have for some time past regretted the serious inconvenience suffered by the Settlers daily arriving here, on their way to the new Townships on Rice Lake, from the want of Houses for their temporary accommodations: Anxious to remove this evil, and promote as far as possible the comfort of the Settlers, a numerous and respectable meeting of the Inhabitants of Hope and Hamilton was convened on the 10th instant, at Mr. James Parker's Tavern, Smith's Creek, for the purpose of taking into consideration the necessity of erecting, by public subscription, Buildings for their temporary accommodation.

James Ward, Esq. being called to the Chair, several Resolutions were entered into, purporting that buildings shall be immediately erected, capable of containing a considerable number of Families—Thomas Ward, Esq. was then unanimously chosen President; Lyman Perry, Esq. Treasurer, and Dr. John Hutchison, Secretary.

The following gentlemen were then appointed a committee to carry into effect the laudable object of the meeting, viz:—D. McGregor Rogers, Esquire, Messrs. Robert J. Kerr, Alexander Mc Donnell, Jeremiah Britton, H. P. Whitehead, Adam Scott and Francis Page—A subscription was then opened, which met with very liberal support.

Every exertion will be made to have the said buildings ready for occupation early in November—For possession of the apartments, application must be made to one or more members of the committee.

From Europe.

LONDON, Nov. 16.

"St. Helena, Sept. 28, 1818.

"Marquise sloop of war sails to-morrow for England. She is charged with despatches from Sir Hudson Lowe, relating, it is understood, to an interception and correspondence, which has come into the possession of a spy, the object of which was the liberation of Bonaparte from the island. I forbear to mention names, currently circulated here, of those who are said to be implicated in this transaction. A banker's house in England, however, and two individuals here, with others on the continent, it is rumoured, are concerned. Detection of the plot was produced by the circumstance, it is said, of many letters addressed to a person, (the name of which as an individual is to be found here,) being cancelled for at the post office. Something is in a very good health; he still, however, abstains from exercise; and keeps himself entirely within doors. The reason assigned at Longwood for the departure of General Gourgaud, is a preference for home and his family.

Gourgaud had been challenged by the latter, but Bonaparte forbidding him to fight, Gourgaud quitted. It is confidently said, Bonaparte has recently obtained the sum of fifteen thousand pounds sterling (three hundred thousand dollars); through what means this privilege had been granted I have never learned satisfactorily to myself, but it is still a matter of surprise. The discovery of the plot has also brought to light whether the whole of Bonaparte's treasure is deposited. Bertrand, some time since requested, he could not have time, command a satisfactory. Of the latter circumstances, one only remains on the island; those of Russia & Austria are gone to Europe to lay their affairs before them. Bonaparte will not admit either of these to his presence; the Austrian Commissioner, Baron de Sturmer, who returned some months since to Europe, and who has during the long period he remained on the island, once see Bonaparte.

It is understood, that one part of the contents of the late despatches from St. Helena relates to attempts made to corrupt some of the troops there. While Bonaparte is able to draw for large sums upon the bankers in Europe, to whom his family and his adherents are double, upon requesting, it cannot be wonderful that he should make this use of his funds. But the whole of his conduct, supposing no such attempt to have been detected, must have convinced the allied how unfit his object he is of the extreme tenderness and consideration shown to him.

The 20th & 22d regiments are to embark for Jamaica; the 4th, 5th, 20th & 22d regiments for the Leeward Islands.

The town of Portsmouth and its neighbourhood have not for many years had any thing like the present consternation. In consequence of Godwin & Co. having stopped payment. Such was the confidence of the Inhabitants in that house, that there is scarcely an individual to say one of his business that does not hold some of their notes.

A Paris paper of the 1st of November, announces the death of the Duke of Praslin, Charles.

Foreign Intelligence.

Harvest business is winding up in the northern and backward districts. Perhaps fewer reports may have been too sanguine in the quantity of the wheat crop; it is yet universally abundant, & the quality, which is superior and unprecedented in any late season, may be ridiculed as fancy, comparatively as one eighth in respect of quantity. As to other grains and pulse, this is the season of sample bill of quantity and the report from Scotland is confirmed with respect to the superiority of their barley crops, and their other grain and pulse crops are also represented to be in the south. They have also a fair crop of potatoes, happily also the case in the Islands of Guernsey and Jersey, and in many parts of Ireland, whence this country, in which potatoes have generally failed, must look for partial supplies. Immense profits will be made on those few spots on which onions have succeeded; the importation from Spain will be considerable. Turnips in the south have generally failed, excepting the benefit of late showers, which, however, on their commencement, would have served to promote the speedy vegetation required in a late season. The weather has since improved in its character, we are sure to be free from the pain of hearing and double the price of apples in the present. Planters of Spanish white wheat have been very lately, and in parts of five quarters per acre, of the weight of 66lb. per Winchester bushel, clear of the sacks. Upon wheat this failed, requiring to be gradually accustomed, to a climate so different from its own. It is the finest and richest of white wheat, a cargo of it imported in 1774, being then said to have weighed nearly 70lbs. per bushel. It got it water for cattle has been, and still is, in a most distressing. The drought has had a most unfavourable effect upon the pastures of forest trees and young trees; the forests have also suffered in the same degree, and timber has been felled in the woods, and conveyed to the dock yards, to a much greater extent than the woods will bear.

On the above subject the Morning Chronicle of Wednesday says, "In spite of the impediments which the Courier has thrown in the way of the late communication with Russia, we perceive by our accounts of yesterday, and maintain that no correspondence between St. Petersburgh and London, since the discovered; neither was any plot to convey away treasonable contained in a letter from Bonaparte to Sir Hudson Lowe, which vessel merely consisted in a message from the hands of the Captain of the Partridge, who had undertaken to deliver them to the persons to whom they were directed. The first vessel that arrived at St. Helena, in a month, was the Mosquito, which vessel lost time in daily expectation of having Sir Hudson Lowe's despatches, having completed the time she was to serve in the station, and her sailing delayed only in consequence of the vessel which was to relieve her not having arrived. With respect to the fast sailing ship soon so frequently hovering about St. Helena, we have reason to believe that we attach so much credit to it, as to assume town, has issued circular letters, inviting all persons, particularly the tradesmen, to contribute for the future all articles of fashion & luxury.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.

The Gazette of Saturday se'nnight contains a most extraordinary advertisement—of it sounds strangely in the ears of Bogie & Co. late of Lore Lane, East Cheap, who were bankrupts in the year 1793, being a lapse of forty-five years, that they or their legal representatives may receive the full amount of their respective effects, the total amount of certified is about 22,000 dollars. The lowest sum mentioned is a shilling in the pound, the largest a thousand pounds. The list of creditors enumerates a curious medley of Provisions, viz. small merchants, tailors, hebrashers, shoemakers, &c. The largest debt is due to Mr. Shakspeare, Alderman of the city of London, merchant.

British vessel of War and a Revolutionary Privateer.

A letter from an Officer of his Majesty's ship Bellette, dated at St. Michael's, 29th ult. says—

"We arrived here after a passage of ten days from Spithead, and have had a slight affair with an insurgent privateer of this island, yesterday, which had the temerity to approach near and fire a shot at the British ensign & pendant. We engaged her for an hour, & after chase of four hours, we succeeded in sending her three overboard her guns & stores, which was well nigh sinking her, for her subtlety of impudence. She was a large black schooner, and from information received from Mr. Read, the Consul, said to belong to Riga, and has been in the daily habit of plundering every vessel close in to this roadstead. It is high time the Government took this affair, and of clearing the sea into their hands. The Portuguese are afraid to leave the anchorage after we leave it."

There was taken up last week, in Hoscote garden, Bethwick Water, Roxburghshire, from the stalk of an output potato, planted three last spring, no fewer than 183 large potatoes, which weighed 41 pounds.

THE HERRING FISHERY.

The poor men employed in the herring fishery, from this and the neighbouring towns, at the commencement of their labours this season, had the fairest prospect of a successful fishing, but their hopes were suddenly dashed, when there was a scarcity of them during the great quantity of herrings, by shoals of dog fish suddenly rising and tearing the nets, and the herrings in them, by keeping hold of the nets with their mouths and shaking them in the same manner as a dog would shake any thing he meant to destroy. Many of these fish were taken, by striking them with an iron hook, attached to a short staff, called by the fishermen a gleg. Such is the voracity of these devourers, that they are known several times to have attacked one which was struck, and bit large pieces off it, before it could be got into the boat. On a lanthorn being held over the boat's side, they strike at the reflection given from it. Violence. Some of the boats were fishing last night, and were again alarmed at the appearance of a shoal of large fish, but, instead of their old enemies, the dog fish, it turned out to be a shoal of cod, several of which were taken, & brought on shore, and sold.

DOVER, Oct. 30.

"This morning between nine and ten o'clock, a most magnificent spectacle presented itself to the entrance into the harbour, of forty three vessels, loaded with the division of the army of occupation of France, the heroes of Waterloo, &c. They consisted of 5,676 infantry and artillery, and 600 women and children, the whole of the 15th regiment of foot, under the command of Major Stephens, Richard Power of Kilmac, Esq. and one of his sons, Mr. Robert Grubb, of Clonmel, and Mr. Nimmo, the Engineer, went down in a sloop of war, in Dromore, at the mouth of our harbour. The party amused themselves below exactly sixty minutes; and Miss Stephens the sweetest of Nimrods, delighted her company, one evening with three of her best songs, sung in her very best style.

It was with great concern we heard some time since of the accident which happened to Col. Chichester. A fish-one of his dog went mad, & bit the Colonel severely in the left hand. The most remarkable circumstance the part was resorted to without delay, and every happy to add, that he has returned to town in a state of perfect health.

A resolution has recently been adopted by the Corporation of Liverpool, that the two hundred families of Magdeburgh, which may prove injurious to the natives. They have materially engaged by word of honour, never to take off their hats in saluting, but only to adopt the military custom of touching the head with the right hand. It is well known, that during the late Indian war, two Indians, viz. a chief named Hornet's Nest, who commanded the party that destroyed Eleut. Scott and his men, and the prophet Francis, were decoyed on board an American schooner, believing it to be a British vessel, and were, by the orders of Gen. Jackson, hung. We have been furnished with an account given by a gentleman of this city, which he received from an eye witness.

The two Indians were recognised by Hamby, who was on board, as the men discovering that they were prisoners, the prophet shewed considerable alarm, and even wept—the chief was silent, but firm & undaunted. Upon the arrival of General Jackson, he went on board, and put several questions to them, which they utterly refused to answer, behaving with great firmness & savage dignity. Upon finding them thus obstinate, and resolved, Gen. Jackson immediately ordered an order, and had them both hung. They were not apprized of their fate until they were brought upon deck, and saw the gallows prepared for their execution. Without uttering a syllable, they marched up to it and submitted to their doom with perfect firmness and composure.

The National Intelligencer contains a report from the War Department relative to the establishment of Military Posts.

We shall publish the document at length as soon as we can find room.

The report it appears that the work completed for Old Point Comfort, Chesapeake Bay, is to mount 250 cannon, and the same upon the Rip Raps, to mount 200 cannon. These works are estimated to cost $1,000,000.

The fortification at the Pea Patch, in Delaware Bay, to mount 120 cannon, cost $300,000.—To complete the defence of this pass, it will be necessary to engage with the shoals of the Jersey shore, and Delaware & New Jersey shores.

To aid the works, two steam batteries to be provided.

Harbour of Harbour.—The only work now progressing in this harbour is a continued tower building at the Narrows! which is to mount 90 cannon, 30 on each casemate and will cost $375,000; it is more than half finished, and can be completed in the year 1819. The other position which, most of necessity be occupied, is complete the defence of New York, are, 1st Sandy Hook, 2d Staten Island, 3d fort and city of New York, 4th Brooklyn Heights, and 5th Frog Point, near the Sound.

Lake Champlain.—The works to be erected are at Rouse's Point and Island Point. These works being contemplated by nothing of siege, will mount only 80 cannon, and will cost $200,000.

The government have given orders to commence the works at Rouse's Point, on the 1st of October. The list of cruisers for Lower Canada shall be completed.

Cold weather at Albany.—The Albany Argus of Friday states, that, on Wednesday morning last, Fahrenheit's thermometer stood at 10 degrees below zero, and 11 below, on Thursday morning.

Fire at Virginia.—A letter from Fredericksburg, of the 23d inst. states that the snow was then eighteen inches deep, and adds that the Rappahannock & Rapid rivers were both frozen up.

Accounts from New-Orleans, of the 30th ult. represent the Mississippi as navigable, and it had been for 18 or 20 days, and business, in consequence, in a prosperous state. The Legislature of the state of Louisiana, as compiled a revised. The entry is represented as very handy, and full of strangers. Some of the Kentucky boats had got there, then in New York; and in proof of this fact it is added, that a store, which, in the month of August, had sold goods to the annual rent of seven or eight hundred dollars, would rent on the Levee for three thousand.

Died, in England, Mr. Griffith Wright aged 69. He was perhaps, the oldest freemason in existence, having been initiated in the world, having established Wright's Lodge Intelligencer in 1731; and was, before his majority even a Master Mason.

The Salmon Fish Trade.—It is said that upwards of Two thousand barrels of Salt have been loaded at Erie, (Penn.) during the present season, and that many more will be put up before the boats have been built at Waterford, to convey the salt down the river.

Gentlemen, as invited by certain solicitations of friends, &c.

Allow Applications have been made to the Executive for sanctions to Acts of incorporation for various useful purposes, viz. such as Charities, Banking and Manufacturing Companies, in which the capital of a single person would generally be required. Such Acts are granted annually, by the Legislature, when it is applied, but to which many are willing to vest a part, and wish the remainder not to be subject to the demands of such purposes. Such Applications have received, for answer, that instructions from home were to give sanction to no such purposes. Such Applications have as a grievance, and desire Your Excellency will think proper to recommend to the Legislature, the passing of an Act empowering the Royal Assent to Acts of incorporation, when such Acts appear for the general advantage of the Province; by which a vast sum might be saved to the people, which is now expended in the importation of various articles of manufacture, whose materials are abundant in this Province.

9th—Another abuse of the Custom House is now suggested to us to observe notice. In the winter of 1816, the late Wm. Fairfield Esq. of this town, shipped, then trading in Kingston, ordered his correspondent at Albany to send a good Book which contained promissory Notes & Receipts, to a large amount, owing chiefly to Mr. David Bonar's Store in Kingston, to the amount of one thousand pounds, or about £1765 12 9 H. Currency, which was the balance due to Mr. Fairfield, signed D. Bonar, his Store, it is only necessary to state, that at the final settlement between the parties, Mr. Daniel Brooke, who was then Mr. Bonar's Store keeper, in the month of August, 1816, and that there has been no settlement whatever between us since that date.

Deposition alluded to in the above.

Extract of a letter dated Nov 10 Cantonment, 190 miles up the Missouri river, 3d Nov 1819, from an officer of the Yellow Stone river expedition to a gentleman in St. Louis

"After a very fatiguing and arduous course of nearly sixty days, we arrived at this place a few days ago, & took up our winter quarters [illegible] on a bluff on Vaches" or Cow Island; and immediately commenced building our fort, which is progressing rapidly; I think it the best situation we could find between this and the mouth of the river.

"We have passed through a country which is not surpassed in fertility of soil and water courses by any in the world. Our boats have been propelled thus far excepting a little intermediate sailing by the Cordel; but owing to the rapidity of the current, & numerous sandbars sawyers, planters and ripples, we were not enabled to make more than 9 miles per day on an average. It is a source of much astonishment to me, that we have not met with some serious accident; but, on the contrary, we have experienced none of any importance. Our force consists of about 347 men, including officers. Col. Chambers having been ordered to take command of the 5th military department, this command devolved on Capt. Muston, who I think well qualified to conduct an expedition of that kind—As soon as the ice breaks in the spring, it is expected we will again resume our slow and arduous march for our destination, the mouth of Yellow Stone river. It is, however, my opinion, we will not reach it with our present force and the unfavorable prospects attending it. At least one third of the men's term of enlistment will expire before the march can possibly be performed; and the remainder are of such a description as will never answer the purpose. Last fall in the spring, when the grass has attained a height sufficient for their protection, the Indians will ask us where we are going, and our business: for, you may rest assured, they will never fold their arms & tamely submit to our making an armed force at a point so far in the heart of their country, when they are backed & constantly urged on by the British factory, on the Assyniboin and Red river. We apprehend more danger from the Sioux and Blackfeet than any other nations. My opinion on this subject may be groundless; time alone will determine the fact."

M. Dupuy, a French traveller, has examined and published a description of the principal military establishments in England, viz. Woolwich, Portsmouth, Chatham, &c. The great laboratory and military manufactory of the state is at Woolwich, in which several are employed in making, besides a vast quantity of mortars, and other species of artillery, Portsmouth and Chatham are furnished, but offer nothing in this respect worthy of remark. The steam-engine and the hydraulic press are at present (he says) the principal moving powers employed in [illegible] and it is not without surprise that I saw engines performing the work of 200 or 300 horses without motion [illegible] without noise.

MARRIED,

In Middletown Monmouth, (N. J.) Gerber Thomas Tilton, in the 70th year of his age, to Miss Mary Lucas, in her 18th year. She is the daughter of Thomas Tilton's former wife; so that this husband and wife were at least half brother and half sister to their future children.

At the same time, John Bergen, father of the infant bride, to his brother, Katy Tilton, widow, daughter of Thomas Tilton, bridegroom. Query. If both the above pairs should be blessed with issue, how would genealogical readers trace them in the degrees of affinity?

Trial of A. Arbuthnot concluded.

Q. by the Court. Did you not the confession of the prisoner to this letter made voluntarily, and without any constraint whatever? A. I conceive it was.

The evidence on the part of the prosecution being closed, the prisoner requested as a witness, Robert C. Ambrose, one of his witnesses, against whom criminal charges had been filed, and who was in custody on account thereof, to which the Judge Advocate objecting, the Court was cleared to take its opinion—when it was decided that Robert C. Ambrose, now in the custody of similar offences with the prisoner, cannot be examined as evidence before this Court.

John Lewis Phenix, previous witness, now on the part of the prisoner, being again sworn, was questioned as follows,

Q. by the Prisoner. Was there any other vessel at the mouth of the Sawahnee River when Ambrister seized your vessel?

A. Yes.

Q. What vessel was it? Was it not the vessel which Ambrister came in?

A. It was a sloop, and I understood Ambrister came in her.

Q. Did Ambrister ever mention to you the recommended him to seize the prisoner's schooner, or who assisted him in assisting the negroes to do so?

A. No—I understood he came on and of his own accord.

Q. by the Court. Did the prisoner's vessel, when Ambrister seized it, come under the prisoner's command?

A. No—I brought a quantity of lead and ten kegs of powder in the last trip.

John Wilcott, a former witness on the part of the prosecution, being recalled on behalf of the prisoner, was questioned as follows, viz:

Question by the Prisoner.—Are you not of opinion that the letter which you say was written by the prisoner to the Little Prince, is now in the possession of the Little Prince?

A. After reading it I returned it to him, and believe it to be still in his possession, as Indians seldom destroy papers of that kind.

The prisoner requesting some time to make up his defence, he was given until to-morrow morning at four o'clock.

Fort St. Marks, 26th April, 6 o'clock, P. M.

The Recorder having read over the proceedings of the Court with closed doors, the prisoner was recalled into court, and made the defence marked K, and attached to these proceedings. The doors were then closed, and after most mature deliberation on the evidence adduced, the court find the prisoner, Alexander Arbuthnot, guilty of the first specification of the first charge, and guilty of the first charge & guilty of the second specification of the second charge, and guilty of the second charge, leaving out the words "acting as a spy." They therefore, do, on the most mature reflection, sentence the prisoner, Alexander Arbuthnot, to be suspended by the neck until he be dead, two-thirds of the Court Concurring.

EDMUND GAINES.
Major Gen. by brevet, President of the Court.
J. M. Glassell, Recorder.

DEFENCE K.

May it please this honorable Court.

The prisoner arraigned before you is unmindful of the indulgence granted by this honorable Court, in the examination of the case now before them. It is not the wish of the prisoner, in making his defence, to try the patience of the Court, by making a reference to the whole of the testimony which has come before the honorable Court, in the course of this investigation. Nor is it the intention of the prisoner to waste the valuable time of this court, by appeals to their feelings or sympathy, though I am persuaded that sympathy, on whose more abounds than in a generous American breast. My only appeal is to the sound and impartial judgement of this honorable court, the purity & uprightness of their hearts, that they will, dispassionately and patiently, weigh the evidence they have before them, apply the law, and on these, and these alone, pronounce their judgment.

If this honorable court please, I shall now proceed to examine the law & evidence that is relied on by this honorable court, in support of the first charge and specification.

Wimett, a witness on the part of the prosecution, says the Little Prince showed him a letter written in June last, signed by A. Arbuthnot, requesting his friendship with the lower nation of Indians. This same witness stated that he believed the letter to be now in the possession of the Little Prince. Here, may it please this honorable court, I would call their attention to the law, relating to evidence. First, presuming that the rules of evidence are the same, whether in civil or military tribunals, M'Comb 96 in this point being cited, the next inquiry is, what are the rules of evidence with respect to the admission of letters or papers, of private correspondence, in a court of criminal jurisdiction? May it please this honorable court, must you not produce the original letter and papers if they are not lost or mislaid so that they cannot be obtained, and in case they are lost, proof must be made of said write being the same of that of the original, before they can be received as evidence? M'Comb on court martial Peake's evidence; Gilbert's law of evidence. No instance can be cited where the copy of a letter was read in evidence, where the original could be obtained, much less the giving in evidence the contents of such letter from hare recollection. The only point that this honorable court has of the existence of such letter being in the hands of any person, or its contents being known, is the vague testimony of a vagrant individual.—Make this rule of evidence; and, I ask you where would implication, construction, and inuendo stop? Whose property, whose reputation and whose life would be safe? Here I would beg leave to mention a remark made by the President of this court, in the course of this investigation, which was, that, notwithstanding the letter was proved by the witness to be in the possession of the Little Prince, that, this court could not notice that circumstance because upon his oath as an officer by which it could be obtained. I would ask the honorable court, what means they have adopted, or what exertions have they made to procure this letter? If the honorable court please, I shall here close the defence of the first charge and specification, believing that they are neither supported by law or evidence.

As to the second charge and specification of the same, I will now enter on the second charge and first specification of that charge. In support of this charge and specification, the evidence on a letter, written to my self. If the court please, this letter was written in consequence of my property at Suwannee, and the large debts that were due me by Rawlings and his people. Nothing I believe of an inflammatory nature can be found on reading the document marked A, authorizing the opinion that I was prompting the Indians to war. On the contrary, if the honorable court will examine the document marked A, they will see that I wished to lull them asleep, by informing them that it was the negroes, and not the Indians, the Americans were principally moving against. If the honorable court please, I will make a few remarks upon the second specification, and here close my defence. In proof of this charge, the court have before them the evidence of Hambly, Clark, and sundry letters purporting to be written by myself, to different individuals. May it please the court, what does that prove? Why, that I had ten kegs of powder at Sabawhee; but no appeal to the experience of this court, if they think that this quantity of powder would supply one thousand Indians and an equal number of blacks, more than two months for hunting? As to the letters named in this specification, may it please the court, the rules of evidence laid down in the first part of this defence will apply with equal force in the present case.

It remains now, may it please the court, to say something as to Hambly's testimony—and, may it please this honorable court, the rule laid down in this case, as to hearsay evidence, will be found without a precedent. A strong case was stated by an intelligent member of this court, on the examination of this part of the evidence. That is, would you receive as testimony what a third person had said, who, if present, you would reject as incompetent? Apply this principle to the present case. Could no Indian be examined, on oath, in our courts of judicature. If, then, the testimony of savages is indissoluble, Hambly proves nothing.

Here, may it please the honorable court, I close my reply to the charges and specifications preferred against me, being fully persuaded that, should there be cause of censure, my judges will, in the language of the law, lean to the side of mercy.

It shall be printed with a handsome type, and on good paper of a large size.

The first number shall appear early in March, and a number will be published regularly every month. The work being issued solely from an earnest desire to promote the interests of religion, with the view to its general circulation, it will be furnished at the low rate of twelve shillings and six pence, Halifax Currency, a year.

LONDON, 30th Dec.

Emigration.—This subject is so intimately connected with the middling and lower classes throughout the United Kingdom, that we feel it our duty to extract the following letter from the Dublin Correspondent. The letter is stated to have been written by a young man of a very respectable family in Somersetshire, who was misled by Mr. Birkbeck's positive assertions:—

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 17, 1818.

"I informed you in my last from Pittsburgh, August 1, that we were then far on our way to Birkbeck's Settlement, which we have since visited, and which I shall presently describe. Mr. J. P. Beckwith has published a book, which we have since perused, and three other young men, before that place in a small boat, 14 feet long, early in that month, and proceeded down the Ohio for Cincinnati; the water at that time, unfortunately for us, was very shallow, which obliged us to be continually rowing—hard work, especially to us, who were unacquainted with the art of rowing, and of managing a boat. The views down the river at first were grand, but the high mountains on each side the river, covered with trees, presented a great sameness of scenery. The weather was very warm and in an open boat we were exposed to fill its force. There are many small towns on the banks, some thriving, others the contrary. The number of houses, and craft of different descriptions, is really surprising—some in a trading capacity, others (like our own) conveying emigrants to the west. At Lawrenceburgh Cincinnati till we had been on the water 11 days, to us a long time, as we were obliged to sleep on the ground seven nights. We made a good fire, and laid down, Indian like, wrapped in our great coats. In the morning we resumed our daily labor, refreshed by our night's repose.

"On our arrival at Cincinnati, I waited on Mr. M. who received us kindly, and accommodated us till we proceeded further West. He had a nice house & good business—a general merchant. Cincinnati is a fine thriving place, the nearest I have seen west of Philadelphia. Were I a mechanic, I would settle there. It seems full of trade, & is, I believe, as healthy as any part of the Western States, but at present it is unsettled in its political views. We left it on August 21, on horseback, having purchased two horses & equipments, for about 90 dollars, each of us. Our route was through Indiana, a very young State, the road principally through woods of large extent, and in some places very boggy. We had to ford many creeks. The timber is the stoutest I have seen in America, or elsewhere; the soil is of a black rich nature, a kind of clay. The objection to this State are, the want of good water, as well as the sickliness of its inhabitants, occasioned by so much stagnant by so much stagnant water. The country in general is level, and there are several improving towns.

"The day after our leaving Cincinnati, we fell in with two gentlemen who were going to Birkbeck's, one of them from England, the other from Ireland; this made our party strong, four in number. We reached Vincennes on the 29th, a dull place ! the inhabitants appeared to be a mixture of Indians and French. I saw here several Indians with their squaws, having their children at their backs; some of them are fine looking, but they disfigure themselves with paint, &c. We found, on our arrival here, that Birkbeck's Settlement was about 60 miles South-west of us, and that we should have to travel principally over prairie land, which was an agreeable change, we having rode 200 miles through Indiana, &c. We reached Birkbeck's settlement the second day after leaving Vincennes, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. Previous to our arrival at this prairie, we had seen and travelled over some very fine land, but unhealthily situated, and void of spring water. These disadvantages, we had reason to expect, Birkbeck had guarded against ! but he seems to labor under the same disadvantages as his neighbours. He appears to be a very respectable kind of being.

"On our arrival at his cabin we made known our business, and presented letters of introduction. The reception we met with was very cool. He lives in a small log cabin. There is a long row of cabins for his labourers His cabin being so very small, he told us he could not accommodate strangers, but a cottage about a mile distant would. We reached this cottage late in the evening: we found procure us provisions for our horses, and were obliged to feed them with rough grass ; hard fare after such a journey. Our fare was not much better. This family consisted of a man, his wife, five children, two lodgers, and, without doubt, made 13 persons, who were to lodge in one small room.

"The next morning we called at the Settlement, and found two young men going over the land Birkbeck has to dispose of, and we accompanied them through their day's excursion. His land is generally level of the first quality, a great deal is wet prairie. I do not think he has made a judicious choice. He has not yet any very respectable settlers, except those that came over with him ; neither do I think he will have any. He has greatly misrepresented the settlement. The land is not of the first quality—no spring water, and very much void of wood within many miles, and the country in general unhealthy. No good site for a town, nor convenient ones for ship-building at a low price, and to add to this, he and Flower are at variance, and never speak to each other. Flower left us with us in England since his residing in this country has married the young woman Birkbeck brought out with him ! !—The settlement will do but for a few characters : we come away disgusted with it altogether, and sorry to think so many of our countrymen will probably be deluded by his false publications. The Western States are not calculated for an English labouring man who knows any thing of society ; they will do only for the laboring class, and poor farmers with large families, accustomed to hard labour ; but even these will be at a loss, for Europeans know not how to handle the axe as an American does, nor can they suffer so many privations with patience."

Jan 21.

This day, at half an hour after 2 o'clock, the Lord Chancellor ascended the throne, and the proceeding directly to the table, received the oaths as a Peer of Parliament. Soon after the Noble Lord retired to the House of Lords, and the mother of Frederick Prince of Wales, and the Princess Augusta.

Also the death of the Queen of Wirtemberg.

Dr. Walcot better known as Peter Pindar, was buried, on the 12th Jan. in St. Paul's Church Yard, Covent Garden.

Attempt at Highway Robbery, and determined resistance on Kilworth Mountain, Ireland.

We (Cork Morning Intelligencer) have been favored with the following extract from a letter received by a gentleman in this city, detailing many particulars of an attempt at highway robbery at Kilworth Mountain, and we imagine to give it insertion that the public may be apprised of the fact of robbers being on this road. The letter is from William Wallace, Esq. staff surgeon, and is dated Fermoy, 21st inst. "Last Caher, Saturday, three o'clock." Very great credit, indeed, is due to this Gentleman for the spirited and intrepid manner and we may add, humanity displayed by him on the occasion. Mr. Wallace writes us that as I entered the county last this morning, at six o'clock, I was walking my horse very quietly, when I perceived two men coming down the mountain to the road, on the opposite side. I looked round to see, was any one near but as one person ; it immediately occurred to me that I was about to be attacked by one, and when they approached in about an hundred yards from me, I was more convinced of it from this circumstance, viz. that they separated, and one went to head me, while the other came round to my rear. At this time I jumped out of the gig, and I had my double barrelled gun in my hand, which was well loaded with shot, and instantly formed my plan of defence with my two pistols, and were closing me in. I called out to them that I knew what they were about and if they advanced one foot further towards me, I would shoot them both ; that I was well armed, and that they would rob me. I swore that if they did, it should be with my life, and if they moved one inch further, I would certainly shoot them. At this time they were within 20 yards of me, when they halted, still swearing they would rob me, and I told them I would send my watch, that I would only lose them with my life, and they had better let me pass, as I was determined to remain on this spot ; and I added, that if assistance came up, I would certainly take them both prisoners. I said what did not wish to take the life of any man—I said, while I was thus parleying with them, I observed a horse, and if there were ten more with them I would not be robbed. On which the fellow in front began to swear and curse like a mountain, and came round and joined his companion on the road, who was still at the same distance from me. They now had them quite in my power, as I could have shot them both, but quents a rock will entirely complete them.

4th. Two miles more are about half done.

5th. Twenty-one miles miles more, are a quarter done. These remains, on the Middle Section, fourteen miles more, lying in the detached pieces, which are yet unbroken.

The most costly embankments, were to be made at Nail-Creek, at Sedgwick creek, at Brown brook, at Finally brook, at Oneida creek, at Chittenango creek, at Beaver dam creek, at the outlet of the Little lakes, at Limestone creek, at Caldwell's swamp, at Butternut creek, at Onondaga creek, at Harbour creek, at Geddesburgh, at the west end of section 37, at the Aboukir-lock, at Eleven creek, at the Owasco outlet, at Great brook, and at Crane brook. Of these embankments, the nine most expensive are completed, and the residue in the average, half completed.

Two thirds, of all the deep cutting, is accomplished.

The whole number, of expensive foundations required, was seventeen, of which ten are sunk, and secured, and the rest, in considerable forwardness.

The timber, for the waste-weirs, is now felling, and hewing, and sawing; and their construction, in all stipulated for, at about four dollars, per foot run.

The whole amount of mason work necessary, in culverts, aqueducts and bridges, is one fourth done.

The timber for the lock-sites is preparing; the requisite quantities of stone for 27 locks, are nearly raised; and the scales to weigh them all erected.

The only expensive dam, on the whole route, is that at the Oriskany creek, which is to be built for $5,700, and is already in some progress.

Taking into consideration every item of material and of labor, actually provided and paid for I and comprising them with every item remaining to be provided, and paid for, in order to the enjoyment of a navigable communication between the Mohawk and Seneca rivers, and it is our opinion, that the proportion of the former to the latter, is nearly as two to one.

The whole estimated expense of the canal, from Utica to the Seneca river, including a proportional part of the general charges, for attendants, workshops, barracks for the men, &c., as stated, in our Report of 1817, is as follows, to wit:—

From the west end of the old canal, at Rome to Seneca river,	$858,186
From the east end of the old canal, at Rome, to Nail-creek in Utica, exclusive of locks, the distance being 119 miles,	108,128
Add eight feet lockage between Rome and Utica, at $1,250 per foot,	10,000
Twelve road bridges, at $500,	6,000
Forty-two occupation bridges at $200,	8,200
The proportional part of the grounds allowance above mentioned is	17,237
The expense, of widening and deepening the old canal, was not included, in the Report of 1817, but was estimated in another place, at	4,000
For superintendance of engineers, &c. from west end of old canal, at Rome, to east side of Nail-creek, $1,000 per mile,	15,000
Aggregate amount,	$1,021,851
The whole amount of actual disbursements, is	578,549
Which being deducted from the estimates, leave the sum of	$445,302

applicable to the completion of the Middle Section.

This sum is believed to be more than sufficient for that object. And, if the present winter shall afford five weeks of good sleighing to draw stone, and the next summer shall not be unfavorable, the Commissioners entertain sanguine hopes of being able to pass, in a boat, throughout this section, before the next meeting of your honorable body.

Believing we were authorised to institute and carry on further surveys, on the Eastern and Western Sections of the Erie Canal, Isaac Briggs, Esq. has been employed to explore, and re-survey, and lower, the line of the canal, from Utica towards the Hudson river. Such a location he has made, for upwards of forty miles, including all the different pieces, at Herkimer and the Little Falls. Of his work, he has made ample returns and estimates, accompanied with elegant maps, and profiles, which are herewith presented. From his estimates, it appears, that the cost of opening the canal, through that portion of the line, will be less than our first calculations.

In pursuance of that part of the law, relating to their duties, which requires the Canal Commissioners to recommend such measures, as they may think advisable, for the accomplishment of the objects intended by the legislature; we beg leave to recommend:

1st. That adequate provision be made, for opening a navigable side cut, in the course of the ensuing summer, from the main canal to the salt works, at Salina. This may be performed in six months, at an expense not exceeding one thousand dollars; and, as the main canal is expected to be navigable to the waters of the Cayuga and Seneca lakes, on the 1st June next, and to those of the Mohawk, on the 1st July, the close of the ensuing year, it is apparent, that such side cut would immediately become profitable.

2d. That the militia law be so modified as to exempt from militia duty all persons actually engaged in labouring on the canal. Such labourers are, for the most part, in situations which do not permit them to be properly armed and equipt: They cannot therefore be useful on the parade ground. And, upon a reasonable calculation, there were, during the past season, twenty thousand dollars worth of service lost to the canal, by militia fatiguing.

3d. That a law be passed, the present session, authorising and providing for, the entire completion of the Erie canal. Sufficient experience has now been acquired to establish the practicability of such a measure, within the means of the state. And surely, the prosperity which it will enhance,—of an agricultural, a commercial, and a manufacturing,—of a political, and a moral character, commands it to your patronage. It appears to us to be a measure involving the highest earthly interests. And, illustrious as our country has now been for the utility and glory of its achievements, it never had a legislative body engaged in a measure teeming with such vast, and various, and extensive and solid benefits, since the cry of "stand, hand," was first heard from one of the ships of its great discoverer. It honor be coveted, and solid and expansive as "the great globe itself, and all which it inherits," the accomplishment of this work will ensure its attainment.

N. B. Mr. Hart was appointed a Canal Commissioner in the room of Joseph Ellicott, Esq. resigned.

And, in relation to the Champlain canal, the Commissioners Report—

That, since the first of June last, when the season became favorable, the execution of the Champlain canal has been vigorously and successfully prosecuted. —More than twelve miles have been completed, to the satisfaction of the Engineer, and a final settlement has been had with the contractors.

The remainder of the excavation is in such a state of advancement, that two months of good weather will ensure its completion, as there is not more on the whole line remaining to be done, than the average excavation of two and a half miles. Considerable progress has been made towards the construction of the artificial works. The following locks have been quarried; more than half of them, it is believed, are already delivered at the places where they are to be used, and a considerable portion of them are hewn, and ready to be laid into the work. The timber, also, is framed in such a state of forwardness, that there is little doubt but they will all be prepared and delivered before the breaking up of winter; and unless the next season should be uncommonly bad, it is confidently expected, that within ten months from this time, the navigation of the canal, from the Lake to the Hudson, will be fit for navigation.

The amount of labor which has been performed, and the materials become payable with the expenditures, forbids the opinion expressed in the Report of last session, that the Champlain canal will be finished for a sum not exceeding the estimates; and the Commissioners respectfully recommend the passage of a law, authorising its construction from Fort Edward to the tide waters of the Hudson.

Summary From the N. Y. Spect.

ENGLAND, Dec. 21.

Agricultural prosperity continues to increase—bankruptcies during the fog. Monthly Reporter announces the gratifying good health of the king—his remarkably stubborn mind, &c. British kings prefer reigning; augmented one-third this last year; a new Parliament has been, the work of printing, published, a contemporary arrangement of Coke upon Littleton; the late Queen's house is sold. A revenging almost 140 guineas a head; Lord Castlereagh, and the emperor Alexander are pledged for the accession of Portugal to the general treaties for insuring slave-adjudication, after 1820. We are declared to be materially defficient in regulations gratitude to our revolutionary defenders (general) book of the statesmen's Correspondence of Colbett and Burdett seems to make a great noise.

ENGLAND:—Income of the consolidated fund for this year £31,000,000. Income of the last quarter about half a million. Net produce of the revenue of same duration

The above is a cheering state-ment, upon which, we think have to congratulate the public.

The crown jewels so long missing, were found last Buckingham House, Jan. 10—no comments are made; the discovery was made by the Prince Regent. They were supposed to have been concealed by the king.

Documents—Trial of Arbuthnot and Ambrister published without comment, on the 5th January. The total amount of the Queen's pecuniary property is found to be £100,000. This is an answer to all calumny. Orthis £50, 000 are to go from generation to her eldest male issue—Lord Ellenborough's will is proved; his personal property is worth £300,000.

Another order for the 13th Jan. after a long meeting on the great question, has come out with the strongest testimony of loyalty and hatred of allegiance against General Jackson, for the execution of rather murder of Arbuthnot and Ambrister. It is hard to condemn him—(the Courier) let facts not only as an Englishman, but as a citizen of the world. These are threat ning symptoms, when our friends speak loudly and indignantly against us. Others have reasons to blame us—the Courier, evidently with reluctance denounces Jackson.

These papers are full of complaints made by the Englishmen, who have been employed into the Spanish (republican) service; they suffer every hardship, cruelty and disappointment. Under the 18th, the Courier gives the arguments of our National Intelligencer, in defence of Jackson's proceedings. That is universally just. It is succeeded with an extract from our paper, of the 31th Dec. which suits the foreign editor as our Solicitor, by others.

January 21.

The first letter of Algernon Sidney has been republished in the Traveller, London: it merits some challenge. We are not sorry to meet it—it is honorable to our country. They writer is ashamed of the fear who has ever dared to defend their country against the reproach of countenancing military despotism, and of the tyrany and blood so may that ever stained the records of history. Mr. Coleridge is continuing his lectures. There has also been a remarkable phenomenon appeared. A Mr Redlock has returned from the invasion of Russia, after a 6th months' residence, with a geographical account of the country.

Our Liverpool papers, as we stated, are down to the 24th. There is nothing of interest, however, to be extracted, it is over by the following article. It is horrible indeed. The curiosity of man is terrible in its energy. Who knows but we may yet operate upon graves and foreheads, like the trumpet of the Archangel.

Horrible Phenomenon—Saturday—On the 6th of Nov. inst. various extensive experiments were made on the body of the unfortunate Capt. Dale, by Dr. Ure, with a voltaic battery of 270 pairs of 4 inch plates.—The subject was truly appalling. On moving the rod from the lip to the hand, the knee being previously bent, the leg was thrown out with such violence, as nearly to overturn one of the assistants, who in vain attempted to prevent the extravagant effect. On the second experiment the rod was applied to the sciatick nerve in the ham—the whole lower body immediately commenced; the thigh bended and fell; the body was protruded and outflanged, with the relaxing and retiring distinctness; and it knighted, that but for the ligature of evacuation of the bowels, inflammation might have occured !!—In the 3d experiment, the supra-orbital nerve was touched, and every muscle in the murderer's face was thrown into frightful action. The whole countenance—convulsed of the spectators left the room, and one gentleman actually fainting from terror or sickness! In the 4th experiment the transmitting of the electrical power from the spinal marrow to the other nerves, at the elbow, fingers, &c. seems unfortunately put in motion, and the agitation of the arm was so great that the operator was obliged to point to the different spectators, whose countenances it last caused to shrink back. Dr. Ure appears to be of opinion, that had no incision been made in the blood vessels of the neck, and the spinal marrow been lacerated, the criminal might have restored to life.

Scotland—The Glasgow cotton trade, unparalleled this year. Great sales, attended with several rumors. Fair on the 20th Jan. 12, in Glasgow, Dumfries & Greenock.

FRANCE, Jan. 8.

The following specimen of French magnanimity is worthy of the days of chivalry: Duchis, repeatedly assaulted relinked Fabvier, and at length provoked him to accept a challenge. They met. Duchis fired first, and grievously wounded rel. Fabvier in the shoulder. The latter, supported by firing in the air, and signified pronounced the following remarkable words, which display a great mind:—"Duchis, I was willing to encourage the election of such a man as thou art, but honor forbids me to consider thee as my adversaire."

HOUSE OF LORDS.

London, Thursday, Jan. 21.

The lord Chancellor having at five o'clock his seat on the woolsack, and the Speech having been again read,

The Earl of Warwick rose, for the purpose of moving an answer to the speech. In rising to ask for the consurrence of the house to the speech which had just been read, he felt some degree of embarrassment, from a consciousness of his own incompetence to the task, that at the same time he was confident that there would be no hesitation on the part of the house to concur in every part of the Address. The house was called upon to pay the mournful tribute to the memory of her late Majesty, but the largest example she had exhibited during the long period of nearly sixty years. On that subject there could be but one feeling throughout the house & the country. In considering the various topics of the speech, there would be found no room for discussion, but ample field for congratulation. Our troops had been withdrawn from France, and the independence of that country had thus been secured as an integral part of the great European community. Those troops had not been employed for the purpose of making aggrandizement, but for the safety and welfare of Europe—(Hear, hear!)—and the hopes of the most sanguine had been more fully realized. In the other divisions had been secured by the most brilliant successes obtained in a war that had been entered into for the most just and honorable motives. Our colonies were in a flourishing state, our commercial relations with America were adjusted, and every difficulty removed in the way of being terminated. The Noble Lord, who was very imperfectly heard below the bar, concluded by moving an Address, which was, as usual, an echo of the Speech.

Lord Saltoun seconded the motion. He could not but join from his noble friend, should treason had very slightly on the time of the house.

The Earl of Liverpool said, that in the national calamity sustained by the death of the Queen; on which subject he felt much indisposition to say more than the statements made in the Speech, the greatest possible time should be fixed upon. A Commission had been appointed by the Crown, to be recommended to the other House of Parliament, and there was reason to believe that thy forgery of Bank paper would be rendered a capital crime. Should the Bank not be able to resume the payments in July, he thought the greatest possible time should be fixed upon. A Commission had been appointed by the Crown, to be recommended to the other House of Parliament, and there was reason to believe that thy forgery of Bank paper would be rendered a capital crime. He had, in the last Session, moved for an inquiry into the state of the paper currency, which he should, at an early period, bring forward. Till an enquiry should be made into the state of the circulating medium, and till the Mint regulations should be completed, it was impossible that cash payments could be resumed.

The question was then put, and the Address carried nemi contradicente.

The Earl of Liverpool gave notice, that on Monday he should call the attention of their Lordships to that part of the Speech which related to the Windsor Establishment.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, January 21.

The Speaker took the chair at a quarter past two o'clock, and a number of prayers were read.

The Speaker then announced that they had been summoned to the House of Peers, to hear the Speech of his Majesty, delivered by Commission, which the Expenditure of the last year had amounted to £58 millions, this leaving a deficiency of 14 millions, which, with the sum of eight millions, would be applicable to the reduction of the National Debt. No allusion had been made in the Speech to the system of the currency of the country, which he considered to be the most important of all the questions in the present state of the country. Upon the face of the Statute Book indeed it appeared, that the Suspension Act would expire in the course of the year. He had no doubt that point no man could possibly feel any degree of confidence. He wished for a distinct intimation on the part of the Chancellor, one of the Lords Commissioners appointed to represent his Royal Highness. He had presented a copy of his Royal Highness's speech to the Speaker, and begged leave to read it to the House.

The speech of His Royal Highness having been read,

Mr. Brandlow rose, and in a subsequent speech entered into all the topics of economy, particularly with regard to the Civil List, which he considered to be the most important of all the questions to be agitated at the present moment. With respect to the Revenue, he admitted that there was a surplusage of two or three millions, but that was applicable to the Consolidated Fund, but that would be absorbed by the deficiency in former years. The Revenue, at present, could not be relied upon as an integral part of the year's income. The Expenditure of last year had amounted to 58 millions, this leaving a deficiency of 14 millions, which, with the sum of eight millions, would be applicable to the reduction of the National Debt. No allusion had been made in the Speech to the system of the currency of the country, which he considered to be the most important of all the questions in the present state of the country. Day of Fat Things.—Of the numerous improvements of which our country can boast, that made in rearing Hogs is perhaps the most extraordinary; and ought to confer on the individuals who have been instrumental in introducing and promoting in our country breeds so capable of improvement, the proud title of Public Benefactors. It certainly occurred, on learning, that during last week one of our merchant-victuallers purchased no less than Sixty Thousand weight of Pork principally raised in New Hampshire and Vermont. We saw about thirty animals which composed the purchase, and which for whiteness of flesh, smallness of bone, thinness of skin and ears, and plumpness of body, could not be exceeded. Some of them we learn, before slaughtered, could scarcely see, were unable to rise on all their legs, and were fed in a recumbent posture. We are told by the drovers, that a Farmer in one of the upper towns in New Hampshire, has in one pen twenty pigs, which when slaughtered, it is supposed, will weigh 3000 wt.; & that another neighboring farmer has twelve others, which are expected to weigh 6000 wt.

FROM EUROPE.

LONDON, Jan. 2.

Prussia.—M. de Kamptz has published at Berlin, from authentic documents, a statement of all the fatal accidents which have occurred within the Prussian dominions during the year 1817. The violent deaths amounted to 2025, of which 500 are suicides. The robberies committed within the same period are 9645, of which 353 occurred at Berlin alone. The whole population of the Prussian states, according to de Kamptz, amounts to 10,085,000 souls.

New Expedition.—The Erebus and Terror, ships for a voyage of discovery to the North West, which are to sail early in the ensuing spring, under the command of Lieut. Parry, instead of Capt. Buchan, is said to be determined upon. The following year another attempt will be made to sail to the North Pole direct.

THE ISLAND OF SUMATRA.

By the arrival of the Kingston, from Java, intelligence of much importance, as affecting British interests in the Indian Seas has been received. The Governor of Fort Marlborough (Sir T. S. Raffles) has displayed his characteristic energy and activity since his arrival in Sumatra, and has anxiously endeavoured to enforce the British influence over the whole of that valuable and extensive island. Sumatra has, hitherto, been very little known. The European establishments are entirely on the coast—Europeans had never penetrated into the interior—All attempts to do so, indeed, had proved dangerous; no European would embark in them. The population of the interior were considered as savages, and the mountains inaccessible; and yet the natives would still bring down their gold and cassia, and camphor, to their wretched factories, but to the earliest spot, when tempted. The Governor felt there was but one alternative, and that was to open the road by going himself. His enterprise was crowned with success. He penetrated into the interior in three different directions: to the southward inland of Manilla, to the important plantations occupied by a people called the Passoumalais; to the northward to Menangcabow, the capital of the Island of Sumatra, and inland of Bencoolen, across the island to Palembang.

The result has been the discovery of a mine of wealth—a country highly cultivated, and abounding in precious metals. The Passoumalais are an athletic, fine race of men, as superior to the people on the coast as it is possible to conceive; they are agricultural and numerous. At Menangcabow he was gratified with a population and country fully equal to any part of Java. Within the space of twenty miles the population does not fall short of a million. In short, it is the Governor's opinion, that, with a little encouragement, for greater resources are to be found in this island than the British have derived from Java; but much remains to be done. A central government must be established, the whole inland must be brought under control, and the avenues of commerce, now closed up, re-opened. Our readers are aware, that Menangcabow was the place whence all the gold, that gave Malaca the name of the Golden Chersonesus, was carried.

These discoveries have not, however, been made without great personal risk and fatigue. The country could only be explored on foot—sometimes 6,000 feet high were to be crossed, and rocks, precipices, and forests, to be traversed. For many nights the party had no shelter but the leaves they could collect after their day's journey; and their journies were seldom less than 20 to 30 miles a day, over the very worst roads that ever were passed. In this expedition the Governor was accompanied by lady Raffles: she was occasionally carried on a man's back, but generally walked, as the roads were too bad to admit of her being carried in a chair. Doctor Arnold, physician and naturalist, fell a victim to the fatigue, and died of a violent fever. Dr. Horsefield, who accompanied the Governor to Menangcabow, was on the 12th August, the date of our latest intelligence from Fort Malborough, dangerously ill, with a dysentery, but we hope his life will be spared to carry home the important collections he has made both in Java and Sumatra.

As this was the first appearance of the European authority in the interior, lady Raffles was all the most peaceable standard the party could boast. It was impossible for the natives to consider their object warlike, when the governor proceeded unarmed, and confided his wife to their hospitality.

They found the country beautiful and magnificent. Sir Thomas Stamford Raffles has thrown the light of science, and reformed all the establishments. Treaties have been entered into with the Princes of Menangcabow.

LONDON, Jan. 26.

The vacancy in the Council occasioned by the death of Lord Ellenborough, is to be supplied by the present Chief Justice.

The King of France has given permission for more of the banished to return to France—among them a General Lallemand, who, when the king was on his flight to Lisle, pursued him at the head of some cavalry. Soult, and M. Ney, whom it is said, he also invited to return.

Papa Bolio.—The Saratoga, from Calcutta has brought advices from the Seychelles Islands and Bloduboun to November 4th. The war with the Peshwa & Pindarees had ceased—and the British army had gone into cantonments. The native powers were completely subdued and the English jurisdiction has been widely extended.

The Governor in the island of Ceylon, is nearly quelled.

The Empress of Russia has granted a pension to the widow of General Moreau.

It appears that governor Bentzon of St. Croix is about to leave the island for the recovery of his health, and the planters have addressed him a letter highly approving his administration, and requesting his acceptance of a service of plate of the value of 2000 guineas.

GERMANY.—According to late tables, published officially, the population of the countries composing the present Germanic confederation is 30,294,000—The following are the principal powers according to the amount of their respective population, viz:—Austria 9,300,226—Prussia 6,023,000—Bavaria 3,560,000—Wurtemburg 1,393,462—Hanover 1,805,351—Saxony 1,200,000—Baden 1,000,000, making an aggregate of near 26,000,000. The other territories have more than five hundred thousand and less than a million of inhabitants, viz: Grand Duchy of Hesse—Mecklenburg Schwerin—Churchieni—Territories, having more than one and less than five hundred, viz: Holstein Lauenburg—Luxemburg—Brunswick—Nassau—Saxe Weimar—Saxe-Gotha—Holstein Oldenburg—Hamburg—Twenty-one other territories, have each less than 100,000 inhabitants.

The following very remarkable anecdote was referred to by Mr. Wilmot, in his speech upon seconding Mr. Fawell's motion for a petition to the legislature to revise the criminal code:

"Two men were once convicted of highway robbery, before judge Coulfield, the lineal ancestor of the present archdeacon Caulfield. When the jury had retired in their verdict of guilty, the elder of the two felons turned round to the younger, and with a countenance expressive of the most diabolical rage, malice and revenge, addressed his companion in the following manner: 'Damn your eyes, you have brought ruin upon me; had not been for you, I should have sent that rascal to hell, who bore witness against us. I would have murdered the villain as he came out of the court, but that I am tied.'

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Philadelphia Daily Advertiser
BLOODY MURRAIN.

The above distressing complaint having made its appearance in Chester county, and there being too much reason to fear it may extend its ravages by infection, the following preventives are offered as the most approved. Certain cures it is believed do not exist:—

Cleanly stables—dry sweet straw for litter, often changed—sweet clear water—the rack staves and trough sometimes washed with tar, sulphur and hartshorn mixed—a free use of salt slightly mixed with sulphur—should one of the cattle be infected, remove him from the rest, fumigate the stable with vinegar poured on hot stones, and rub the noses of the sound cattle with the above mixture and in case of death bury the animal deep, with the hide on.

The extensive country watered by the great rivers Orenoco and Magdalena and their tributary streams, in Spanish America, is said, by Dr. Robinson, to produce in abundance the largest and best ship timber in the world. "Vast forests," he says, "of cedar and mahogany are to be found on, and adjacent to, these waters; it is not uncommon to see boats sixty feet in length and eight in diameter hewn out of a single tree; and ebony, satin wood, Cativally, purple wood, and almost every species of wood deemed rare and valuable, are produced in those countries, as well as all the precious gums and balsams so highly prized throughout the rest of the world."

Scotch Fanatics.—A religious sect, professing some most extraordinary doctrines, has appeared in the Highlands of Perthshire. These misguided fanatics have come from the Lowlands—they call themselves a few once," and adopt the tenets of the Missonites of the 16th century, and of that sect known in England by the name of Brownonians. They affirm that every sort of external worship is useless—that they are free from all moral and ipolitical restraint—that the truth has made them free, and that being under the immediate guidance of the holy spirit, they can commit no sin. Happily this sect is not numerous.

From the Albany Argus.

Mr. Farrow—As every thing relating to agriculture is read with great interest, please insert the following:

I sowed 1 bushel of flaxseed in the spring of 1817, on little more than an acre of ground, corn stock land, pretty much worn down, and soil a sandy loam. I soaked the seed 12 hours in a strong lye made of potash, and then dried it with plaster.—The crop was eighteen bushels of seed, and 396 pounds of excellent flax.

SURREY.—HORSEMAN, March 25.

CUTTING and MAIMING.

James Gibbs, a youth of prepossessing appearance, aged about 18, was indicted under Lord Ellenborough's Act, for feloniously and maliciously cutting and wounding Daniel Gibbs, with intent to murder, or do him some grievous bodily harm, on the 15th inst. at the parish of Storrington, in this county.

George Gibbs, a youth about 16, the unfortunate victim of the prisoner's barbarity, appeared on the bar, dreadfully cut, mangled and still labouring under the effects of the outrage which he had suffered, his wounds being yet green, and gave the following statement:—He father was park-keeper to Lord de la Reush, who lived at Parkhouse. In the evening of the 15th of March, about 8 o'clock, his father sent him with a message to the Crown public-house, a short distance from Parkhurst, when he met the prisoner, near the end of his father's garden.—The prisoner had a stick over his shoulder, and although the night was rather dark, he could see him by the light of a lantern which he carried in his hand. The prisoner was then about, but appeared to have parted from another young man, named Duke. When the prisoner approached him, he went about to wish him a good night, when the former struck him over the head and face with the stick which he carried. He was nearly stunned by the blow, which was being repeated, he was knocked down, & from the violence of the blow, the stick was broken. The witness immediately cried out—" Oh! Jemmy Gibbs, don't murder me;" and begged for mercy. The prisoner then went round him, and immediately pulled a pocket-knife, cut him twice under the chin; but his customary design having failed by these means, he published him behind the right ear with the same weapon. Witness struggled to get from him, and in doing so, disarmed him of the knife and in the scuffle the prisoner drew it through his hand, and wounded several of his fingers. The prisoner then took him round the waist, and dragged him to a pits-pool, & endeavoured to swing his head against it. Witness cried out for mercy, and called " murder," upon which the prisoner caught hold of him by the throat, which he gripped with both his hands, in order to prevent his making any noise. He succeeded in effecting what he go, but seized his throat a second time, and then the witness lost his senses, and remembered nothing afterwards; when he recovered he found himself with his friends

Sensible that he never had a very quarrel in life with the prisoner, except what they were not related; that he had known the prisoner as a passing acquaintance, and had seen him occasionally at fairs, but was by no means intimate with him. He could in no manner account for the prisoner's attack upon him.

George Whale proved, that he heard the cry of " murder," on the evening in question, and went to the spot from which it proceeded, where he saw the prosecutor weltering in his blood, and in consequence of the alarm which he gave, the prisoner ran off.

Daniel Duffrasted, that he apprehended the prisoner between nine and ten the same night on Wracklon-common, and saw the prisoner running from him, and endeavouring to escape.

Mr. Bennett, a surgeon, at Storrington, who was called in, described the wounds which had been inflicted on the prosecutor. The knife being shown to him, he said it was dull on the edge, and in his judgment that circumstance prevented the wound being fatal.

Here the case for the prosecution closed.

Mr. Justice Bayley asked the prisoner what he had to say in his defence.

The prisoner said, as I don't know that I can say any thing."

John Gibbs, the father of the prisoner, came forward in a state of pitiable agitation, so much so, that he could not stand, and stated, that he was a labouring man, that his son and he were in the habit of working for Mr. Bennett, a farmer at Parkham. On the day mentioned in the indictment, after he and his son had performed their daily labour for their employer, they came home to do some work in their own garden. He observed that with the residence of Mr. Brook the Chief Secretary, which is placed on the other side of the hill. From this spot looking towards Plantation House, the eye traverses another tract of highly cultivated country, and the villas of Sir George Bisshop, Mr. Donnesdale, and others, diversify the view with the different colored foliages in which they are half buried.

Plantation House is a comfortable residence, placed on an extensive lawn, and surrounded by a profusion of magnificent trees:—here the husband of the fair, the oak of England, and the pine of Norway flourish together, and form a novel and charming embellishment for the retreat of the Governor from the cares of business.

In the course of a wandering life, I never saw so great a variety of objects combined, as are thrown together in Saint Helena.—The bold and imposing appearance of High Knoll, rising from a calm and lovely valley; the rich softness of the verdure, opposed to the wild, barren rocks which skirt the shores, and here and there intrude themselves on the sight; the well stocked farms mingled with patches of sterility evidently voluntary, and the magnificent extent of horizon which bounds the view every where, render the whole of the island a picture of beauty, as uncomfortable or unpleasant residence, a retreat replete with interest & attraction. Under the government of Sir Hudson Lowe every species of cultivation can be introduced, is growing into utility; and taken altogether, there can be no hesitation in pronouncing the colony to be so rapidly improving, that in a few years, under the same system of encouragement, it may be independent of any foreign aid for supplies of grain; at least it is fair to imagine so, judging from what has been done already, and what is actually doing; should this be achieved, no power on earth could subdue the possessors of St. Helena.

Marshals of Bonaparte, 3
Members of the House of Peers of the 100 days, 22
Members of the House of Representatives of the 100 days, 3
Ministers of Bonaparte, 9
Lieutenant Generals of Bonaparte, 15
Chamberlains of Bonaparte, 2
Apothecaries, 0
Unknown Names, 6
Decided Royalists, 1.

The Duke of Sussex intends to visit Ireland in the course of the summer, in relation of the knights of St. Patrick, which is to take place in May next.

A new set of knights distinguished by the appellation of Britannia, has lately sprung up, and are making considerable progress among the inhabitants of Cornwall. Their high priest, it appears, was once a royal disciple of Wellesly; but on account of some disagreement between him and the Duke of York, and the other good people of this commonwealth; he it enacted, &c." the authority given to the Duke of Sussex to live at Kensington, or any other head officer, mayor, or other head officer, might issue his warrant to bring such person before him, to be committed for his impertinence, at the next general sessions, or in default of such bail, send him to prison till it was known if they were there to be tried at the said sessions," for living at high rates and great expences, having no visible estate or profession, or other lawful and livelihood to cheat, defraud, owners of land, tradesmen, and the other good people of this commonwealth; be

From the Crawford Messenger.

SOMETHING SINGULAR.—On the 1st of this instant, at the farm occupied by James Rogers, in the vicinity of this place, as the young men were throwing the sheaves of wheat from off the stack, for the purpose of threshing, a living hare was uncovered, which had been enclosed within the stack when it was first built, (in August last.) I happened to be present, and was careful in the examination of all the circumstances attending this phenomenon.

She lay at the top of the outside sheaf, close to the but end of the sheaf which beuds the heart of the stack, in a hole like a common nest, and so closely confined, that she could not turn herself—her head towards the centre—her excrements were voided in one spot about three inches in diameter; the moisture of which had sunk downward, and caused the sheaf to rot in that place. There was no appearance of her having eaten any of the grain. When first uncovered to the fresh air, she appeared in distress, and made a noise as is common when disturbed in the night, only very weak, but soon fell asleep again. She died in about an hour.

Mrs. Rogers cut her open; there was very little flesh upon her, and no blood—her gizzard contained nothing but two small pieces of gravel—her craw or ingluvies appeared like a little bag perfectly empty, as were her intestines. After some time I examined her again & found her flesh to be somewhat red, and that a little blood had oozed out along the back.

I cannot pretend to account for the manner of her existence in that confined state, where the heat occasioned by the fermentation of the grain, would be great, and the stench arising from the acid and ammonia generated by the dung and other feculent matter would be intolerable.

LONDON, April 25.

COMMERCE.—Independent of the fluctuations to which over speculation and monopoly have occasioned, as has been the case with Cotton, Oil, &c. we think we perceive the gradual, though turtly operation, of the restoration of a general participation in the full of price of the commodities which for profit and trade attendant upon a state of war. Love had caused to rise far, very far, to have their influence but at length it is beginning to be discovered that many transmarine productions can be procured upon much more reasonable terms than even the present reduced prices of such commodities would induce us to suspect. It remains still to be ascertained at what price the planter in America can afford to sell his cotton; perhaps it may be found that from 12 to 14 cents will amply repay his advance of capital and labour for cultivating it—and probably the free traders to the East Indies will soon discover their cotton, in those markets, may be had almost for the trouble of collecting it.—Coffee, it may shortly appear, may be purchased of Batavia for about four-pence per pound, and so on with many other commodities, so that we apprehend the present to be a most critical and still unprecedented period in the history of commerce, and merchants as well as statesmen are imperiously called upon deeply to reflect upon its present awful state, and to regulate their operations accordingly.

Among the long list of exportations to the Continent, we are particularly struck with the extensive, and still increasing shipment of Cotton Wool—that it is not in our power to check the improvement of foreign manufactories, or to prevent, for the Cotton Trade altogether, admit of no question, but we certainly are not called upon to encourage our rivals, as we have done for long, by furnishing them with the raw material upon lower terms than our own artisans can procure it.—The duty upon Cotton, for the present exemption, is one penny per pound, which at the present low rates of that article, is upon Bengal, about 9 p. cent. and upon American and Brazil Cotton, about 8 to 10 per cent. there being no duty upon exportation, we supply manufacturers abroad at as much lower rates than our own countrymen. We are no advocates for any additional imposition of duties, particularly in commerce, yet as we do not think it would be at all inconvenient to repeal the existing duty on Cotton, we are of opinion that, under present circumstances, Ministers, in choosing it from us should, in justice to ourselves, be subject to the like charge.

London, Thursday evening { past 7 o'clock, 28th April 1819.

The Loan.—There are three distinguishes in the City, who, it is understood will deliver proposals for a loan, as soon as the amount and the manner in which it is to be contracted for, are made public.

1. Mr. Rothschild: this gentleman's list is said to be very extensive; it was completely filled before any proposals of a loan had been received from the Treasury, and the sums written for constitute, as a report says, an aggregate more than 40 millions.—Ricardo, Brothers & Co. this is the Stock Exchange list, and nothing has yet been done towards arranging it; the circular letters of this party will not be sent, it is asserted, until the Chancellor of the Exchequer comes forward with the loan.—3. Real, Irving & Co. Sir J. Jackson, Trower & Bottye, Ellis & Barnett, and George Ward, these houses are receiving letters from their several friends, and are forming in fact distinct lists, but a union of interests and a coalition of the whole into one list is considered extremely probable.

The funds were very brisk this morning, owing to what is called an excellent money market, but about two o'clock the rumours were circulated that the loan would be to a very large amount, and some of the principal bankers left selling very easily gave them additional effect. Consols fell about ¼ per ct. but recovered before the end of the market, and left off at 72 a 72 1-8.—Bank stocks are under—Bank Stock 251—Navy 5 per cent. 105 4 per cent 90 3-8—Red. 71 3-8—Consols for money 72 1-8—Bank long ann. 18 13-16—India Bonds 28 pm. Ex. Bills 7 pm. 3¼ per ct. 89½.

The valuable fleet of merchantmen, from the Havana, consisting of seven vessels, under convoy of the Sabina frigate arrived safely at Cadiz on the 9th inst. the amount of specie on board is estimated at two millions and a half of dollars.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The House was occupied until half past 5 this evening, hailing-for Committees against the return for Leicester and Grampound. On our entering the gallery we found that lord Robert Manners, who had been taken into Custody, for having been absent from the last ballot was ordered to be discharged on payment of his fees.

Mr. M. Somerville, was also ordered to be discharged on the payment of his fees.

Lord Castlereagh said, that as the R. H. member (Mr. Gratton,) was in his place, he wished to submit to him the expediency of postponing his motion, on the subject of the Catholic Claims, from to-morrow to Monday next. The noble Lord stated the necessity which existed for bringing forward the report of the Bank Committee as early as possible; and in order to effect this it was necessary they should be next both to-morrow and Saturday—he therefore hoped the R. H. Member would not object to the postponement to the day mention. ed.

Mr. Tierney concurred in the necessity of the Bank Committee's report being matured and finished, as in the present of this question being postponed to Monday; but he hoped that if his Right Hon. friend agreed to the suggestion of the Noble Lord, it would be understood that on Monday this motion would take precedence of other business (Hear, hear.—Yellowgrah was understood to assent to this.)

Mr. Gratton then postponed his motion to Monday next.

We left the house sitting on the motion of Mr. R. Martin, for the production of the minutes of the trial of Edmund Parker, Attorney, for perjury, before Baron McLeland.

Gas Lights, and Whale Fishery.

The engineer of a gas light company, has stated before a committee of the House of Commons, that every inch of pipe or conductor of the gas cost the Company £2000; that the company at present consumed 2 millions of chaldrons of coal per day; that if they increased their capital by about £700,000, (a probable consumption will be about 30,000 chaldrons annually, of coals) which amount who was examined, thought it would require 100 men to raise 30,000 chaldrons of coal in a year, 100 to bring them on board the vessels, it would require about 40 horses, and 17 ships of 300 tons, to convey them to London—that a ship to make 3 voyages annually, there would be required also 10 men for each vessel—That the company burning annually 30,000 chaldrons of coal, at 40s. sold pay to government £13,000, duty per annum.

The whale fishery employs eleven hundred men, and more than 1000 apprentices, who navigate 300 large ships, in fitting out which near 100,000 persons are benefitted, as the ropemakers, sail-cloth, rope and sail-makers, ship chandlers, &c. The only set-off to the above, which the gas company make, is proved in experiments given in the course of the evidence, to be employing 17 ships, each navigated by 10 men in bringing coals to London. Whereas one ship carries in the Greenfishery, at this time employs 17 ships, and has under them nearly 200 apprentices. Is there a doubt which is the best nursery for seamen?—Lon. Pap.

SINKING FUND.

In the House of Commons, last evening, Mr. Grenfell rose in pursuance of the notion of which he had previously given notice, for the production of certain papers, to show how far it may be expedient to apply the Sinking Fund, either in the whole or in part to the purposes of any loan that it might be necessary to contract for the service of the year. From the reasons he had mention. ed yesterday he was induced not only to abstain from discussion himself upon the subject, but to wish that the motion of which he had given notice should not be sent, it is asserted, until the Chancellor of the Exchequer comes forward with the loan. Messrs. Irving & Co. Sir J. Jackson, Trower & Bottye, Ellis & Barnett, and George Ward, these houses are receiving letters from their several friends, and are forming in fact distinct lists, but a union of interests and a coalition of the whole into one list is considered extremely probable.

The funds were very brisk this morning, owing to what is called an excellent money market, but about two o'clock the rumours were circulated that the loan would be to a very large amount, and some of the principal bankers left selling very easily gave them additional effect. HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The House was occupied until half past 5 this evening, hailing-for Committees against the return for Leicester and Grampound. On our entering the gallery we found that lord Robert Manners, who had been taken into Custody, for having been absent from the last ballot was ordered to be discharged on payment of his fees.

Mr. M. Somerville, was also ordered to be discharged on the payment of his fees.

Lord Castlereagh said, that as the R. H. member (Mr. Gratton,) was in his place, he wished to submit to him the expediency of postponing his motion, on the subject of the Catholic Claims, from to-morrow to Monday next. The noble Lord stated the necessity which existed for bringing forward the report of the Bank Committee as early as possible; and in order to effect this it was necessary they should be next both to-morrow and Saturday—he therefore hoped the R. H. Member would not object to the postponement to the day mention. ed.

Mr. Tierney concurred in the necessity of the Bank Committee's report being matured and finished, as in the present of this question being postponed to Monday; but he hoped that if his Right Hon. friend agreed to the suggestion of the Noble Lord, it would be understood that on Monday this motion would take precedence of other business (Hear, hear.—Yellowgrah was understood to assent to this.)

Mr. Gratton then postponed his motion to Monday next.

We left the house sitting on the motion of Mr. R. Martin, for the production of the minutes of the trial of Edmund Parker, Attorney, for perjury, before Baron McLeland.

Gas Lights, and Whale Fishery.

The engineer of a gas light company, has stated before a committee of the House of Commons, that every inch of pipe or conductor of the gas cost the Company £2000; that the company at present consumed 2 millions of chaldrons of coal per day; that if they increased their capital by about £700,000, (a probable consumption will be about 30,000 chaldrons annually, of coals) which amount who was examined, thought it would require 100 men to raise 30,000 chaldrons of coal in a year, 100 to bring them on board the vessels, it would require about 40 horses, and 17 ships of 300 tons, to convey them to London—that a ship to make 3 voyages annually, there would be required also 10 men for each vessel—That the company burning annually 30,000 chaldrons of coal, at 40s. sold pay to government £13,000, duty per annum.

The whale fishery employs eleven hundred men, and more that 1000 apprentices, who navigate 300 large ships, in fitting out which near 100,000 persons are benefitted, as the

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Chatauque Eagle.

The following extract is taken from the report on South America, made by Theodorick Bland, Esq. to congress.—The gentleman was one of the commissioners, who in order to obtain information visited that country, in 1817 and 1818, for the purpose of ascertaining the progress and probable ultimate success of the patriot cause. The country abounds in the extraordinariness one of those gloomy though magnificent solitudes which leaves nothing of variety for the eye or the imagination to rest upon, but all is uniform, cheerlessness and unvarying.

Supposing we were to draw a line, beginning on the river Paraguay, near the city of Santa Fe, which should sweep northwardly, so as to include a portion of Chuchara, near the foot of which stands the town or village of St. Augustine; & the ocean passing, along a little below the eastern boundary of the province of the Pouta Sin Lotta, proceeding due south, we should very nearly designate the western lands of one of the most extensive and peculiar plains in the world, which stretches from the shores of the Pacific to Plata towards the southern extremity of our continent, between the line of which described, and the coast of the Atlantic ocean. This is the vast flat, plain or pasturage round about Buenos Ayres, or as it is usually and correctly called, the Pampas; which word, in the Quechat tongue of Peru, signifies property a valley.

This Pampa, which forms a part of the territory of Cordova, and of Santa Fe, and all that of Buenos Ayres, if measured entire into the country of the Patagonian tribes, extends in length fifteen hundred miles, and in breadth in a direct line, following the southern boundary of Cordova, five hundred miles from the ocean to its western confines. Over all this immense space there is not a tree, not a shrub, nor a single perennial plant to be seen; save only those few, which here and there hill their heads near a borders stream. There are no hills, nor eminences, and the undulations of the surface, as only to be perceived by taking a long view over its surface; and then, the eye passes round and round the horizon over the face of the undulating ocean in a calm, were there is not a single object to delight, or to relieve, or to vary the scene. The bare blades called the Pampa grass sweep over this houseless and unsheltered plain without the least obstruction; and the Gaucho rays after sun are left in all their unmitigated fervour. You are sometimes in the sight of thousands of animals; but, they are chiefly horned cattle, and horses; and the deer, ostriches, wild dogs, and others, fly as you approach. For a while the Pampas present the mind with an agreeable astonishment; but that soon subsides, and the eye may often be directed in vain in any way to obtain a single glimpse of society. Humanity, in the boundless, silent sameness one sensibly feels the value of the voice, and variegated scenes of nature—the only unmistakable pl in spreads out one of the most expanded and awful solitudes on earth.

I do not know, that any chemical analysis has ever been made of the nature of the qualities of the soil of the Pampas, nor can I say, that such an experiment, that have been made with the water, with a lofty growth, were inside with chemical skill; but they have all hitherto failed. I can only relate what I saw, and what was accounted to me as the truth of husbandmen and others; who, actuated by a love of gain, or directed by fancy, were induced to settle upon themselves, or to decorate their possessions. It is now two hundred and thirty-eight years since the city of Buenos Ayres was found, and in six miles out from the Plaza Mayor you take leave of all quitas, and gardens and orchards, and enter upon the open plain. The post road from Buenos Ayres to Mendoza, along which I travelled, passes five hundred miles over these Pampas. In all that distance, I saw not a single stone, no gravel, nor any sand; the surface of the earth appears to be entirely a soil, black, and I on the banks of some of the rivers, and in places, a reddish clay appeared. The water in almost every well in Buenos Ayres is brackish; that of the wells of the Pampas is generally so bad, and in some places worse.—The water of the river Plata, is used for drinking where it can be had. Many of the rivers of the Pampas are brackish, on their names indicate, and there are in these plains sunny salt lakes; those called the Lagoon Bravo, one hundred and twenty miles, the Lagunas Pabladoras, one hundred and forty miles, the Laguna de Mendoza, and del Oeste two hundred miles, and the Salinas de Paraguyes two hundred and sixty miles from Buenos Ayres, before the revolution. At our time employed constantly from five to four hundred carts in carrying salt from them to the city for the supply of the country; and they now furnish a considerable quantity. There is under the whole of these Pampas, from three to twelve feet and some places more, below the surface, a stratum of earth of a foot or more in thickness, which appears to be a concreted clay, about as firm as a common brick. This concretion, as it projects along the water's edge of the Rio de la Plata, at the city of Buenos Ayres, is called toss, or rough earth. On the seaside and beds of most of the water courses, this stratum of toscs is visible; and the Rio Apercide, or the river of the paved bottom, rolls entirely over it, for a great distance.—Near the banks of the Plata, the Paraguay, and their branches, there are a few large trees, and some shrubbery; but most of the lesser streams creep through the plains as in crooked ditches, without their courses being perceived at any distance, either by trees, shrubs, cliffs or hills.

The Pampas are exceedingly productive in grass; and I great proportion of them are beset with a species of thistle, which grows from twelve to seven feet high, and is not unlike our garden artichoke.—The only tree that seems to flourish every where, as a natural free citizen, is the Embuda, or the peruvian poke; its trunk, however, is a mere watery pulp and the growth is utterly useless for every thing but shade. The peach grows well; but as in our country, it flourishes best on the sea coast, and on the borders of the salt marshes. The olive, and the fig, also thrive; but they are natives of the dry and saline deserts of Arabia.—Except these there are no trees which appear to indicate, that nature made them welcome where they were. There is no tradition, that in all the intervening extent of territory, called the Pampas, one single stick of good timber has been ever found growing at the distance of one mile from the rivers. It might be interesting in adding a conjecture to the facts I have related, I would say, that it seemed to me, that this great plain had been gently raised just above the level of the ocean, and left with a surface so unbroken and flat, as not yet to have been sufficiently perfected of its salt, acid and other noxious filtration, or washing, as to admit of the growth of any thing more than mere grass and her herbage, out of the upper stratum by which it is covered.—The Pampas are sometimes afflicted with the most wasteful drought, when vegetation is parched up, the earth cracked and deep dried; and the numerous herds of cattle, either die of thirst, or wander away towards the rivers, in pursuit of water, and are wholly lost."

FROM EUROPE.

LONDON, April, 25—16.

The spirit of negotiation from Portsmouth continues unabated. Every packet for Havre conveys numerous passengers destined for America; and not less than 500 Englishmen are supposed to be now at Havre, waiting favor for wind, many of whom have taken their families with them.

About 80 persons, chiefly artizans and mechanics, with women and children, emigrated from Ireland last week, principally during last week, intending to proceed from Havre in an American brig, belonging to Baltimore, which has been taken up expressly for the purpose.—The expenses of the voyage are to be defrayed out of a fund which has been accumulating for some time past by a small weekly subscription, and the total charge for each person is said to be less than £5.

We have been favored with the following particulars respecting the dreadful accident, occasioned by the bursting of a Steam-engine boiler, in this borough, on Monday evening last, from a correspondent, who has made his observations on the spot.

"The Boiler was made of wrought Iron plates, riveted together, and of what is termed the waggon tilt shape, the top, sides, and ends of the same perfectly horse-way from the bottom by the force of the explosion, and seem to have separated in a body in one part, the great distance of three hundred yards and, from the elevation and direction it took, would, no doubt, have been thrown to twice or three that distance, had not its progress been providentially arrested, by striking against the thick parapet wall of a lofty Premises, whose lofty chimney it completely broke through, damaged the roof upon which parted it lay yesterday, and the remainder of it at the foot of the premises. The Boiler of the Steam-engine, on old one, and the machinery, in general, composed of parts collected, and ill suited to each other. The cylinder, not much regard to their fitness for the use intended to be made of them; and, indeed, the power of the Engine was by no means calculated to produce the effect laid upon it with safety. It was called a three-horse power, but appears by the reasons of the machinery, to be equal to much more labour to perform; there were three circular saws, one of them made in segments, of three feet in diameter, besides a spud-stone, and, no doubt, the pressure of the steam must have been raised to a very undue height when the accident occurred. The cylinder, 8 of very small diameter; the fly-wheel is broken to pieces, and the pressure in which the machinery was erected, a mere hand-mill.

"This lamentable accident adds another to the list of those occasioned by the improper employment, in that capacity, of unable and perfectly safe first-mover of machinery, when directed by skill and judgement; and it ought not to deter o. hers from the proper application of steam, of although it ought, and we trust it will, serve as a warning against the use of it under circumstances similar to those which have led to so much mischief and loss of life; and, in particular, to guard others from the venturing to employ Boilers of the wrought-iron plate, which are intended to produce steam at low pressure only, to be used in the Condensing Engine, for the purpose of high pressure steam, and for which purpose their shape renders them totally unfit."

Some further particulars.—Mr. Smith-erman's son is not dead, but in a most dreadful situation at Guy's Hospital, and notwithstanding the skill and attention of surgeons, and the solicitude of the nurses, but faint hopes are entertained of his recovery. Mr. Smitherman is at St. Thomas's Hospital, a fearful spectacle: the melancholy shadows of life remain, but man can be more easily imagined than described. The explosion burst the top of the boiler from its solid recess, and forced it to the top of Mr. Young's warehouse, above 150 yards distant. The other sufferers who survived the attack are considered out of danger, but a young lad of the name of Hall, a journeyman blacksmith, being unluckily locked down when Morton was in.

A Lizard, the first lizard, of the species described in Count De la Cepede's History of Oviparous Quadrupeds, by the name of Lygosoma in succession, from Gibbale in Africa, was lately on the beach by Hastle Cliff, near Milford, Hampshire, the morning after the ship British Tar, from London, was wrecked there. It appears this animal is the largest of the kind ever brought to Europe—the one in the royal cabinet of Turin measuring 7 ft. 8in. and one in the cabinet at Lisbon, of 6ft. Three are the only two to be found in any public establishment of Europe. The body of this lizard was the same length as the tail, covered with hard scales of an oval and circular form: the color of the body is of a greenish cast; the spots from the back to the sides are regular, and of four distinct rows, about four in a square; these spots had all the appearance of a deep purple set with small eyes, and the black spots are equal in beauty to the white. The legs are furnished with strong hooked claws, beautifully spotted, and resemble a handsome piece of lace. The head is like a frog's, the teeth long and sharp, it could not have been long dead when found, as it was scarcely cold.

TUAM, (Ireland,) April 20.—A short time ago, a man who resides near Ferbane, in this county, gave his daughter, a young girl, who had just been married, a certain quantity of meal, in consequence of a dispute between her husband and herself. The husband, the second day of which the circumstance occurred, went to the house of his father-in-law, for the purpose of having the meal returned to him, but was refused. He then proceeded to the house of a neighbour, and borrowed a bushel of meal, which he carried home with him. The next day, the husband's father, who had heard of the circumstance, went to the house of his son, and demanded the meal which had been borrowed by him. The son refused to give it up, and a scuffle ensued between them, in the course of which the father struck the son with a stick, and killed him. On walking round to the room where the body of his son lay, he observed a large white bear basking. He immediately called to his comrades to fetch a spear, but Bruin not appearing disposed to attack the party, they approached and struck the man, who with great presence of mind, took from his pocket one of his knives, and stuck it into the bear's throat, which was a desperate blow for all his brute ferocity. A repetition of blows soon deprived the monster of life, and the gallant gentleman, and his friends, had the pleasure of a hearty meal on the flesh of the animal, which, we believe, is considered by the Russians as a delicacy.

LONDON, April, 12—17.

An old seaman, about 90 years of age, and a native of South Shields, is said to have been no less than forty-eight voyages to the Greenland fishery.—Being on one occasion with a boat's crew, to make fast their ship to an iceberg, he alone missed the floating island, and the boat left him. On walking round to the many side of the other ice, he observed a large white bear basking. He immediately called to his comrades to fetch a spear, but Bruin not appearing disposed to attack the party, they approached and struck the man, who with great presence of mind, took from his pocket one of his knives, and stuck it into the bear's throat, which was a desperate blow for all his brute ferocity. A repetition of blows soon deprived the monster of life, and the gallant gentleman, and his friends, had the pleasure of a hearty meal on the flesh of the animal, which, we believe, is considered by the Russians as a delicacy.

From the Hull Advertiser, of April 17.

To the Editor.—Thinking that an account of the following remarkable and providential occurrence would be interesting to many of your readers, but serve the cause of Universal Peace, as we esteem that the cause of Lets is, I therefore send it for insertion in your next paper.

"During the rebellion in Ireland, in 1798, the Orkneys had long mediated an attack on the Hanoverian settlement at Grosse Hill, in Yorkshire, which they put their threat in execution, and a large body of them marched to the town. When they arrived there they saw not one in the street near to the house. The Spitfiren had long expected this affray, but true to their Christian profession, they would not have any bloodshed on their defence, but assembled in their chapel, and in solemn prayer besought Him in whom they put their trust to be their shield in the great hour of danger. The ruffian band, hitherto breathing nothing but destruction and slaughter, were struck with astonishment at the sight of the praying assembly, where they expected an armed band, they saw it clasped in prayer. Where they expected opposition to be made, they saw not a single person to be seen.

"Being disappointed in their prey, they all turned their backs and left the town, and the Spitfiren lived happy ever after.

"Now, Sir, I have given you a plain account of this signal work of protection from Heaven, that the readers may see that the burning villages but their goods an lands set for shelter in the Grose Hill, which they called the burning City of Fire.

Yours, &c. PACIFICATOR.

Gretna Green Marriage.—In one of the Appeal Cases which came on at the Easter Session of Cupar, Fife, we had report of a Gretna Green Marriage was detailed:

"The love-struck swain was met with the object of his passion at Carlisle Fair, and in immediate trip to Springfield, alias Gretna Green, was agreed upon. In order to be sure of having a wife, they secretly took a filler along with them, and with a young man whom they accidentally met at Cluden-bridge, arrived at the sacred spot.—They were ushered with due ceremony into the presence of his Reverence the Priest, who commenced the business by enquiring of the lovers if they had a ring? and being answered in the negative, he asked the bridegroom if he had any brogs? in this point he was more fortunate. A bacco box was then produced, and the Priest (said the witness) brinced a ring of the bacco, and put it upon the woman's finger. He recollected this very well, for the bacco ring fell off, and Peggy took it up, and again put it on the bride's finger, and a few words and they were married. The Priest then gave the woman a piece of paper, called lines (he knew this was brought forward as evidence to prove the marriage and consummation; but it appeared that the paper had been left in the pocket of his surgeon, for he endeavored to take the "bit of paper from his bride by force, in order to destroy it."

LONDON, April, 12—17.

Extraordinary circumstance.—On Saturday, the 7th of March, Mr. Louis Gardon, a thread manufacturer of Lyons, his wife, and daughter, were seen by their neighbors at the hour of nine in the evening. The clerk had received orders to call the next morning. Agreeably to which he went, knocked at the door, and not receiving any answer, he concluded that they had stopped, and, from the appearance of the beds, it was evident that they had retired to rest; yet neither of the three could be found in the house during the night of Saturday, or on Sunday morning. No disorder was supposed to exist in any of the apartments, all was in its usual place, untouched, as were their watches, trinkets, &c. On Monday evening the magistrate placed the seal on the premises, which remained intact, at the request of his relations. On Sunday, the 20th, at 11 o'clock, the body of Gardon was found dead in the river Rhone, at Irigny, in the neighborhood of Lyons. He was attired in the same manner as was observed by the clerk, when he called

INVENTION.

Messrs. F. & C. Smith have advertised, in a Utica paper a new invention for excavating the earth and for raising stone. It is stated that two of those machines are now in operation on the great western rail-road, and actually raises one ton one hundred feet, and carries it off seventy feet, and returns in the same time with two to the place where it was taken up in the space of one minute and a half. This is performed by one horse and two men only. The machine, that performs this horse, unloads the horse, by unhook two hooks from the empty box and hook them again as the next full box, when that is emptied, is carried off, and returned in the same manner.—N. Y. Col.

Our female readers may be amused with the following character of one of their sex, from the life of W. Hutton.—N. Y. Courier.

"But the greatest wonder I saw, was Phebe Brown. She was five feet six inches high; is about thirty, well proportioned, round-faced, and ruddy; has a dark penetrating eye, which, the moment it takes upon your face, sees your character, and that with precision. Her step (pardon the Irishism) is more manly than a man's, and can cover forty miles a-day. Her common dress is a man's hat, coat with a spencer over it, and men's shoes. As she is unsurveted, I beheld her as a stranger to breeches.

"She can fill our hundred weight in each hand, and carry fourteen score; can sew, knit, work, and spin, but hates them all; and every accompaniment to the female character, that of modesty excepted. A gentleman at the new Bath had recently treated her rudely:—She had a good mind to have knocked him down. She assured me, "she never drew what fear was." She gives no offence, but offers to fight any man who gives her one. If she never has fought, perhaps it is owing to the insulter having been a coward: for the man of courage would disdain to offer an insult to a female.

Phebe has strong sense, an excellent judgement, says smart things, and supports an easy freedom in all companies. Her voice is more than masculine: it is deep toned. With the wind in her favour, she can send it a mile; but has neither beard nor prominence of breast; she undersizes any kind of manual labour, as holding a plough, driving a team, thatching a barn, mowing the hay, &c. but her chief vocation is breaking horses, for which she charges a guinea a week each. She always rides without a saddle—a thought to be the best judge of a horse or cow in the country, and is frequently employed to purchase for gentlemen at the neighbouring fairs.

"She is fond of Milton, Pope, and Shakespeare; also of music; is self-taught, and performs on several instruments, as the flute, violin, and harpsichord, and supports the bass viol in Matlock church. She is a mere-woman, and carries a gun on her shoulder. She eats no beef or pork, and but little mutton. Her chief food is milk, which is also her drink, decoating wine, ale, and spirits.

SHEPPARDSTOWN, (Va.) May 20.

Domestic Economy.—A lady, "not 3 miles distant from this town, is supplied from Friday the 7th till Saturday the 15th inst. actually supplied a merchant in this place with the large amount of 37 dozen and 4 qts; the produce of her own poultry yard, for the same space of time; and is now willing to make a contract to any extent, for the delivery of 32 dozen a-year-by other day.

The Lady is Mrs. Verdier, and the merchant who received them is Mr. Thomas Toole, who is willing to vouch for the facts above stated.

This is an example worthy of imitation. This industrious matron has, in a single week, by the single article of egg alone, cleared the amount of fourteen dollars, seventy odd cents.

FROM EUROPE.

LONDON, April 10.

Flanders, Hamburgh, and Dutch Mails arrived this morning. Serious disputes have broken out between the soldiers of the harbour and fast corps composing the garrison of the city at Brussels, and there are serious fears in some instances of blood being shed with fatal consequences. Some of the subaltern officers have been engaged in these rencontres. An article of the 18th, at Paris, announces the following particulars of an affray of this kind :—" Notwithstanding the present measures taken by the military authority to prevent the disorders of the officers both of the cavalry and infantry to prevent new disputes between the soldiers of both arms, they could not altogether avoid accidental rencontres, as it seems between some subaltern officers of the infantry and one or two troopers, yesterday afternoon, in the Faubourg of Namur ; they were already engaged, when a detachment of the royal Horse-Guards galloped up, separated the combatants, and took seven hussars to the watch-house. An individual, who imprudently took part in the affair, was severely wounded with a sabre. Numerous patrules prevented the occurrence of any further disorder, which was much apprehended."

On a previous night, a foot soldier of the garrison was found expiring in the street, and carried dead in the hospital. He was robbed in four places of the breast, and had a sabre wound on the head. Within a few days, several other sanguinary cases of the same kind have been carried to the hospital.

BRUSSELS, April 12.

Besides the line of fortresses in the line erecting from the Meuse to the North Sea, on the southern frontier, it is intended to raise the necessary works to cover the Scheldt. The plan of that work will be covered to this end by some forts, and it is even said, that Dendermonde is to be an enclosed place. It is not known if Namur will have an important place among the fortresses which are to cover West Flanders.

GHENT, April 12.

We learn from good authority, that a fort is to be erected without this city near the Canal by Gute. Outlooks and Dendermonde are also to be strengthened.

STOCKHOLM, March 23.

A strong and extensive fortress is to be constructed at the Island of Lost will be covered to this end by some forts, and it is even said, that Dendermonde is to be an enclosed place. It is not known if Namur will have an important place among the fortresses which are to cover West Flanders.

GHENT, April 12.

We learn from good authority, that a fort is to be erected without this city near the Canal by Gute. Outlooks and Dendermonde are also to be strengthened.

STOCKHOLM, March 23.

A strong and extensive fortress is to be constructed at the Island of Lost between the lakes Venern and Vetter, which is to serve as a general magazine and place of retreat for the troops, in the case of a reverse, and as a bulwark against foreign invasion.

Extract from Capt. Rosk's work :—August 18. Lat. 76. While the moon was in sight, she had the appearance of following the sun around the horizon, and while she was below the horizon, she was built along the tops of the mountains, the snow which covered them, and which had naturally a yellowish hue, had been changed to gold, and the reflection of these upon the sky, produced a rich green tint, as delicately beautiful, as to surpass description. The effect was the same, when the sun during over the tops of the mountains, came in contact with the icebergs, which gathered the colour of those of silver, adorned with precious stones of every variety."—Such were the magic scenes enjoyed during a day, which lasted from the 7th of April to the 18th of August—the 1872 hours, without the sun setting to their view.

Height and angular depth.—On Sunday last, Mr. Critchley, carpenter, of the Spey, attended at Kinsdon-Church to be married, and, the religious rite having been completed in the presence of the clerk, book, in the vestry room, he was in the act of putting his hand into his pocket to pay the clerk his usual fee, when he was assailed with apoplexy, sank down, and shortly afterwards expired. He was in his 48th year. He had been married twice before.

LONDON, April 24.

Months ago we called the attention of the Public to the situation of the Ionian Islands, from certain political symptoms which then seemed to indicate a possibility that the port of Patras would be given up to the Force. On this subject Sir C. Stuart puts question to Lord Castlereagh. Last night in the House of Commons, whether any negotiation had been entered into for the cession of Patras to the Turks ? Lord Castlereagh was understood to reply, that " a negotiation to that effect was on foot, but not yet concluded." If not concluded, it never ought to be ; but if we may credit the Paris papers in the Monitor, it is already been concluded ! The following appeared in the Monitor of the 21st inst.

" General Maitland, who is a great favourite with the Grand Seignor, has, in consequence of his offering him a present of a handsome, cooked for him at Corfu, dressed himself in the English, to the Army (How and they) who was succeed by the Grand Seignor to take possession. His Highness has sent the ordinance of the Crescent to the English General, as a mark of his satisfaction."

The suspicions we entertained some months ago, are verified by these facts, in the article relating to these islands to the Treaty of Paris, which runs thus :—Art. 8. The Islands of Corfu, Cephalonia, Zante, Maura, Ithaca, Cerigo, and Paxo, with their Dependencies, such as they are described in the treaty between his Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias and the Ottoman Porte, of the 21st of March, 1800, shall form a single, free, and independent State, under the denomination of the United States of the Ionian Islands.

Grand Equestrian Match.—Mr. Harrison, of Canterbury, on the 7th May, accomplished a match against time, which, for a wager of 500 guineas, he rode from Canterbury to London, (56 miles,) in two hours and 57 minutes. He rode eleven horses, and did not appear much fatigued.

Old Bernet, the pedestrian, who is in the 76th year of his age, has beaten his keel in 1600 successive quarters of an hour, at Ipswich. Betting was from 5 to 3.

It was mentioned in the Vienna papers that a plan had been formed at Rome for establishing military cordons on the frontiers adjoining Turkey, similar to those existing in Austria.

That there was nothing whatever in these Journals respecting the reported conspiracy to poison the Royal Family.

Three frigates have sailed from Plymouth harbour, fitted for the coast of Africa, as an additional force for the suppression of the vile traffic in slaves.

An amusing as well as constitutional application was to be made in the Court of Session in Scotland in the suit of the Person Ambassador. Curiosity will be on the alert upon this occasion, as it is intended to try whether the law of Scotland consents to the close confinement in which she is kept, or would protect the liberty which is the birth-right of the meanest ground.—Ambassadors have extraordinary privileges, but they cannot keep a human being in slavery.

LONDON, May 12.

The effects of the late run upon the Bank are already apparent, both in the reduction in the value of stock and prices of bullion. The latter article is very considerable. The price of gold yesterday in the evening was 4l. 1s. 6d. per ounce, and was lately four pounds two shillings per ounce, and at four pounds 8 ounce. Stocks have declined a little. Consols for money and account have been at 75 1/8 to 1/4, and yesterday in July, are all the same price, 74 1/8, which shows a great opinion of a further decline. H. B. Bayard, Esq. of Bath. He the next Ottoman of Loin, that is to pay in the last instalments for the public as usual, no large loan could be contracted for at a very low rate.

A case was lately tried before the Court of King's Bench, which is of considerable benefit, both to merchants and shipowners. The plaintiff in this case had chartered a vessel to the Defendant to bring home a cargo of coffee and logwood, the charter party the vessel was described as being of the burthen of 201 tons, or thereabout. The Defendant conveyed a quantity of coffee and logwood, and the vessel returned with 251 tons of Coffee, but it appeared she would carry 300 tons. The Jury found a verdict for the Plaintiff, under the engagement of the Defendant to provide her with a full cargo, sought to recover freight. The Defendants were allowed to plead, and cross-examined. The

From the N. Y. Daily Advertiser of June 7.

On Saturday evening a large number of persons were collected together by two persons appearing in the park on velocipedes: the rapidity with which they travelled was truly astonishing. It was difficult for the swiftest runner to keep up with them. One of the persons travelled on his velocipede round the park, starting at the south end, passing in front of the hall and back to the place of starting, in one minute and thirty-five seconds.

One of the fashionable amusements of the day is riding, or driving, or running, at the Washington hall, upon the machine denominated a dracaena, and sometimes a velocipede. It appears to be a pleasant diversion and a salutary exercise, and respectively well adapted to the amusement of persons of sedentary habits, who have the advantage of exercising it upon a regular and tolerably level surface, such as paved ways, pleasure grounds, pavements, &c. This machine has been constructed by Mr. Stewart, late of Baltimore, from an original drawing by the German inventor, and is said to be decidedly superior to any of the others which have been made in this city, or which there are several.

FROM EUROPE.

LONDON, April 28.

We understand that Sir Robert Peel, and Mr. William Peel, on hearing of the sad mistake failure of the Tamworth Bank, immediately sent a munificent sum of money to the town for the purpose of alleviating the inconvenience and distress of the lesser tradesmen & poorer classes, without distinction; and on Friday, the former received thanks equal to one half of their loss. Such benevolence, as might be expected, produced the most lively and sincere and unanimous of joy and gratitude; and we are informed that the purse of the benign donors still contained ones open to the other inhabitants of the town who have suffered, and may wish to take their bounty. How truly christian-like is this!—Staffordshire paper.

Expedition of the Law.—At Coventry Assizes, the week before last, a trial took place which excited a great sensation in that town. Two women, the one a house keeper, and the other dairyman to a respectable farmer in the neighborhood, went into a Pawn-broker's shop to purchase some article for the use of the dairy, when, after their departure, the pawnbroker missed a small piece of cotton, about the value of 10s. He immediately followed and took their basket from them, and they followed him back to the shop. The cotton was found in the basket; they were taken before a Magistrate, committed, and the Grand Jury then sitting, found a true bill against them; they were instantly put on their trial, and one was acquitted, and the other condemned. This, in the little space of two hours, did a yeoman, of previously excellent character, commit a robbery, was taken in custody for it, examined, committed, a true bill found, tried, and condemned to suffer death!!

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—April 27.

Lord Castlereagh moved the order of the day for the House to resolve itself into the Committee on the claims on France Bill.

Mr. Hutchinson said, that claimants of all descriptions were under great obligations to the commissioners for the mode in which they had conducted the business entrusted to them. He therefore did not wish to be understood as intending to impute any blame to the commissioners. He had no doubt that the noble lord, the noble lord in the convention of 1815, was to secure the interests of the British claimants. The total amount of claims was about 3½ millions, and including those called non-commercial, the total amount was not above £6,000,000. To meet this there was in the hand of Government about £3,000,000, or equal to pay about 50 per cent. on the gross amount of claims. That was on the supposition that all the claims were allowed; but it was evident that many of those which had been made, were of such nature as could not be allowed. The class of claimants to whom he wished now particularly to call the attention of the House, were those of merchants who had been plundered of their property in France, and especially of the province of Burgundy, under the Convention of 1788. It had been stipulated that those merchants should not be compelled to take their merchandize to any market or fair but such as they chose—but by the subversion of all the fundamentals of all descriptions, landed, territorial or commercial were opposed by provided for claims. Facts had come to the minds of the Commissioners, whether that convention extended to the claimants who had suffered losses by acting on the treaty of 1786. He was sure that the Committee would be surprised to learn the funded claimants had already received £5,400,000, or one half of the whole amount of the remuneration—the territorial claimants nothing—and the commercial claimants only £3000. Thus the only claimants who had been paid, were those which should have been last of all considered, because they were those who had been speculating on the French funds. By a decree passed during the reign of terror the severest punishments were denounced against any person who should pay over any property belonging to British subjects, and under this decree the partners of several respectable houses had been imprisoned for some time.—He had in his possession certificates from Count Lynch of Bourdeaux, conferring the rights of citizenship since the year 1793, against British property, and those he was ready to produce for the satisfaction of the Noble Lord. He wished for more than half the claimants should have an appeal from the Commissioners on their decision as to the merits of their claims. Such appeal would give those who claimed, indemnity for losses occasioned by these violences.

Lord Castlereagh said, he wished to be distinctly understood as not intending to pronounce any opinion as to any of the claims.—The duty of the House was not as a judicial one, but solely to provide the best tribunal for judging of the several claims. The title of the parties was in the several Conventions, and the whole object now was to provide for the due execution of the various articles. The Noble Lord mentioned that three or four cases only had as yet been decided by the Commissioners, and therefore without the Hon. Member (Mr. Hutchinson) might perhaps be desirous as to the information of the party alluded to. As to precluding appeals in cases doubtful, a period of five months had been given by the Commissioners, during which parties thus situated were empowered to make any amendment to their claims by substantial evidence. The Lord Ship commended the Honourable Member for bestowing those encomiums on the Commissioners to which they were fully entitled. It was attended with great candour and propriety towards them. As to a variety of naked cases which might come before them, the noble Lord, Commissioner, might not feel themselves fully adequate to decide, the King and Council were empowered ultimately to adjust the claims—but where judges, therefore was no reason for making any clause bear partially upon any particular case.

Sir J. Newport thought the Commissioners ought to know the opinion of the House, as variations had been stated to exist between the French and English copies of the treaty.

Mr. Hutchinson replied, when after some observations from Dr. Philimore in Sir C. Robinson, the bill went through the committee, and the report was ordered to be received to-morrow.

ARRIVAL

Facility of remedy on the claims of creditors.—A circular has been addressed "to merchants of great Britain, trading to the United States of America," by the Agent for the purpose of furnishing them with information as to the state of the existing laws for the recovery of debts in that country. The endeavours of several of the principal merchants to obtain an efficient bankrupt law have failed; and the recovery of debts is therefore governed by the different laws of the different states, which are nearly similar in their operation. A friend has favoured us with a copy of one of these letters, which we feel happy in being able to furnish their correspondents

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Philadelphia Union.

Manufacture of Needles.—Needles make a very considerable article in commerce, though there is scarcely any commodity cheaper, the consumption of them being almost incredible. The sizes are from No 1, to No. 25, the smallest. In the manufacture of them, the first thing is to pass the steel through a coal fire, and under a hammer, to bring it out of its square figure into a cylindrical one. This done, it is drawn through a large hole of a wire-drawing iron, reduced into the fire, and drawn through a smaller hole of the iron, smaller than the first, and thus successively, from hole to hole, till it has acquired the degree of fineness required for that species of needles, observing every time it is to be drawn that it is greased over with lard, to reduce it more manageable. The steel thus reduced to fine wire is cut in pieces of the length of the needles intended. These pieces are flatted at one end on the anvil, in order to form the head and eye: they are then put into the fire to soften those further, and then taken out and pierced at each extreme of the flat part on the anvil, by force of a puncheon of well tempered steel; and laid on a leaden block to bring out, with another puncheon, the little piece still remaining in the eye. The corners are then filed off the square of the heads, and a little cavity filed on each side of the flat of the head; this done, the point is ground with a file; and the needle after is put into a charcoal fire, and when taken out, are thrown into a basin of cold water to harden. On this operation a good deal depends; too much heat burns them, and too little leaves them soft; the medium eight, during the summer, and from nine o'clock in the morning until four in the afternoon, in winter.

LONDON, May 12.

Abstract of a letter from Paris dated August, 1818, addressed to the Secretary of the British and Foreign School Society.

Here (in France) the next town by the British and Foreign School Society, in 1816, has produced a most astonishing increase: a month of 800 schools are opened in this and the other department, and every week an increase equally incredible, but for the facts which attest the truth.

I attended the meeting of the Committee last evening, (which takes place every Saturday at seven days,) with Count La Borde, Lasteyrie, Baron de Gerando, &c. &c. &c. numerous an assemblage astonished me: there were forty or fifty men of the first talent and zeal, and many others, whose expenses to propagate the system of education was evinced by their attendance on the occasion; there were thirty or forty letters read which evinced the rapid progress made, some containing addresses from that the boys of the city or village who had formerly attended the schools, on the old system, refusing any longer to go there for instruction, were presents, to crowds in the schools of mutual instruction: the zeal, the spirit that animates the souls of these energetic men will never relax; Count Lasteyrie was in the chair, for uncertain fatigue of body or business, and the deepest in person with which the whole was forwarded, surprised and delighted me. A host of the latfriend of mankind, the glorious deeds was voted to be placed in the hall of the nation, and eulogiums on his virtue are to be delivered and published.

A most important report was made by Count Jubeis on elementary works, the object of which is, to supply the pupils of the schools of mutual instruction, with a course of history, geography, &c.* Men of science are engaged to compress into small compass the best and chief of science so that a general idea may be obtained of the arts and sciences by the pupils. It is supposed that 100 tracts at about four sous each, such, will contain all that will be necessary.

* The plan is that of the books published in England on the interrogative system.—Farr.

RUSSIA.—A new Volcanic Island has been raised among the Aleutian Islands, not far from Unalaschka. This phenomenon appeared in the midst of a storm, attended with flames and smoke. After the sea was colored, a boat was sent from Unalaschka, with twenty Russian boatmen, who landed on the island, June 1st, 1814. They found it full of crevices and precipices. The surface was cooled to the depth of four feet, but below that depth it was still hot. No water was found on any part of it. The vapours rising from it were not injurious, and the new island had begun to take up their dependence on it. Another visit was paid in 1815 : its height was then diminished. It is about one mile in length; they have given it the name of Bogoslof.

M. Lenox has communicated experiments to the Royal Academy of Sciences, in which a cannon ball was fired against a body at rest, and identified by some old people in the neighborhood to be that of a coachman of the late Earl of Bridgewater, grand father to the present Lord Cochrane, who, about seventy-four years ago, committed suicide, by cutting his own throat, and was buried on this spot in a sack. The straw ropes which had befriended the sack, have now entirely rotted, although the sack was not at all consumed. The cloths on the body, stockings, and garters, were also, almost entire, and the colour of the vest and coat (red-velvet) little decayed. The razor, also, with which he had taken away his life, was found at his side. The body itself was in such a state of preservation, that it could be felt entire, and carried a-way for re-interment; but the neighbourhood got it all almost every part of the clothes, each curious to secure a remembrance of this extraordinary fact.—Edinburgh paper.

On Saturday the A sire frigate, Capt. Sir Jas. Alex. Gordon, K. C. B. was moved out of Portsmouth harbour, ag nst a most and nap, by means of an immense fire over their ships to a buoy, with two public vessels, which are fixed on a spindle or axle-tree, projecting from the ship's side, immediately under the main-boom, and just before the gangway. The active started from the upper part of the harbour about first quarter flood, and succeeding in getting abreast of the Platform, against an increasing contrary tide, running about two and a half knots, in a narrow channel, and a light breeze of contrary wind, when the wind freshening, and it being against the orders of the port that a ship of war should anchor in the narrows, she was dropped into the harbour again. In this movement upwards, the paddles were seen, as they worked backwards with equal facility; neither was any boat added here nor there, or cheered again. Had she started from the harbour's mouth, and at an earlier period of the tide, she would have easily made her way to Spithead.

Charge of Murder.—An architect of great talent and excellent character is on his way from Athens to his country, to take his trial upon a charge of murder. The account of the transaction on which the charge is founded, and which we have every reason to suppose entirely false, is as follows :—The accused old and persecuted man his father, about three years ago, to travel. He went to Athens, with the view of adding to his professional excellencies, and became acquainted with an English gentleman who had a servant, Maltese, of a prepossessing discontent, but excessively morose and vindictive. This servant had exercised a considerable influence over his master, and caused could not hear it to witness, and endeavoured to repress. The most implacable enmity arose upon the part of the servant, from whom the master had given reason to apprehend the utmost violence. The young gentleman prepared himself for the assault, dangerous as it was, by carrying a brace of loaded pistols in his breast. At Constantinople, the Maltese gave many proofs of his hostility, and on one occasion which is said to be by him, sent for the Architect, who was at a feast, and who, without knowing by whom he was called, left his wine and with precipitation to attend his visitor. The moment he came into the outward apartment of the house seized him by the collar and made a motion, from which the other expected something dangerous Maltese dragged about the accused, who was aware of his purpose, and had his hand on the hilt of a dagger which he had in the heart. No attempt at escape seemed to be made. The accused immediately went before the British Consul, and demanded to be sent in this country in irons. He was on any charge that might be instituted against him. He is a Gentleman of great merit and integrity.

On Monday last a youth, about 17 years old, was apprehended begging in the streets of Plymouth, and conveyed to the workhouse. On examining him, he could not speak a word of English; various interpreters attended, but none could understand him. Yesterday the Mayor visited him, and ordered that he should be tied up and flogged; when after he had received a few lashes, he cried Murder! in plain English. He is supposed to be taken down, confined himself an impostor, and that his name was Frederick Swaggy, of Hartzo gotten, Lorraine. He was immediately committed to Bridewell.

GIBRALTAR, May 8.

The state of the plague in Barbary is much the same as by the last account.—During the time from the 25th April to the 2d of May, 16. In Tetuan, from the 28th April to the 1st May, 1062 At Fez the number of deaths is stated to be so numerous that it cannot be ascertained; but them could be made, but were supposed to amount to about 400 per diem. At Mequinez, the disease continues to be fatal. Some days upwards of 300 deaths, and the degree most number never exceeds 60 per diem.

In Rabat, up to the 29th ult. the deaths are from 40 to 60. In Salle from 60 to 80. In Larache, by advices as late as the 30th ult. the number were said to decrease. At Mogadore and the city of Morocco, to the 22d ult. no good health; but all the rest of the Empire is more or less infected.

The plague has not shewed itself to Arzilva, on the coast of Riff.

Experiments have been made at Portsmouth on the application of a species of common product of New Zealand, to the manufacture of large and small ropes, of which favourable report has been made. The grass is strong, pliable, and very silky in its nature, and may be cut thrice a year. It may be brought to this country at the estimated price of 40 pounds per ton, or about our seventh the price of hemp.

The kingdom of Great Britain is furnished with another presumptive heir to the throne in the birth of a daughter to the Duchess of Kent. This event took place on the morning of the 20th of May.

The Report of the Bank Committee was discussed at great length, in the British Parliament, but with all liberal support. The discussion terminated in the adoption of a number of Resolutions conformable to the spirit of that Report. The Bank is made liable to pay in Specie, on and after the 1st of February next, to redeem its notes in Gold bars of not less than 60 ounces, at the rate of £3 17s. 10½d. per ounce. Bars are to be assayed and stamped at the Royal Mint. The redemption of the Notes to commence within the period of four years.

Lord Grenville, in the House of Peers, moved, that his son should receive support, during the Restriction Act in 1797. It appeared that the facilities which it had offered to Ministers towards the continuance of the Restriction Act, were more counterbalanced by the distresses it had brought on the country; and that no support was due to it. His motion, as the expedient of putting into the hands of the Bank Directors the power of changing at their pleasure the value of all property, and the price of all necessaries, was of excessive cause of their uncontrollable power at one moment, and by the contraction of it at the next. Such power, which was not given to the throne, or even to the Government did not wish to be deprived of his services.

The Marquis of Lansdowne, and Lord Holland supported the motion, and Lord Cochrane's operations would be known.

Letter of a letter received at Buenos Ayres, dated, Montevideo, April 24th, 1819.

General Aguar, one of Gen. Artigas's principal officers, who had been taken prisoner by the Brazilian troops, has made his escape from Montevideo, and had collected a number to join him, and was proceeding with them to the operations of the city of Maldonado and the adjacent country.

SOUTH AMERICA, March 19.

By the arrival of the Anderson, we have a gate from Lima, (on board of which vessel came Judge Preston) ; we learned that from all that we could learn in Lima, consisting of the O'Higgins, San Martin, and Lautaro, was to sail from Callao on the 17th of April, or sooner, if possible, to cut out Escamerda, the Spanish 74 gun ship, and Spanish ship San Fernando, on board of which were more than half a million of dollars. We hope in a few days to have news of the result. The Chacabuco corvette, sailed from Coquimbo on the 6th to join the squadron.

Owing to the want of money, and to disturbances on the side of the Cordilleras occasioned by Artigas and others, the Chilian army has been unable to realize the expedition against Lima, which has long been contemplated.

The Act, providing for the separation of the District of Maine has passed both Houses of the Legislature. In the House of Representatives, the Bill was carried by 168 to 57. The Town Meetings in the District are to be holden on the 6th of July and the votes are to be returned to the proper place on or before the fourth Monday in August. The votes are then to be taken place, provided there should be, in the whole District, a majority of 1500 votes in favor of the measure.

Yesterday afternoon, Joseph Corvington, a negro, while in the act of jumping from a vessel at anchor in the East River on board of a lighter which lay alongside, fell into the water between the two vessels and was drowned. While in the water, he divested himself of his jacket, handkerchief and hat, but while on board which had put off from the vessel in a boat which had put off from the vessel in search of him. He has left a wife and two children.

We learn that two Convicts under charge of a Sheriff, who was conveying them to the State prison, made their escape from on board the Steam Boat on Monday night, while the boat was on her passage from Albany to N. York. The convicts were in irons and confined in the steward's room on deck, but by some means saved off their chains during the night, forced themselves under into the water and escaped unperceived.—Daily Adv.

Alarm.—The people of Missouri appear to be highly incensed at Congress, for not admitting them into the union on their application, and declare, that they will not submit to it. Many public meetings have been held. At St. Louis it was resolved, that if they (Congress) submitted next winter, they will proceed to organize a government in despite of congress.

Extract from an account of Louisiana

There is no difficulty in obtaining land in this state, but none is to be had for private sale, and none in the market. An accompany sold about 5000 acres in the vicinity of Baton Rouge, at 31s. 3d. per acre, and 5 years credit. The U. S. frigate Macedonian, Capt. Downs, had sailed on the 20th of September for Carpumbo. The Macedonian still continued her preparations making, though slowly, from the want of funds ; Gen. San Martin dined on board the Capitol, and his presence would add spirit to the exertions of the squadron in this important object.

Buenos Ayres.—A treaty or armistice had been concluded for three years, between the Government of Buenos Ayres and an Agent appointed by the people of Entre Rios and Artigas ; the principal opponents to the most liberal terms by which it was supposed would lead to a permanent peace between the Provinces lately at variance.

Commissioners had been appointed to confer on the subject, robbed or captured by the pirates, several hundred dollars of the losers they have sustained, in order that the necessary claims may be made upon the Government. For this purpose, the persons interested to the losses are required to exhibit the above mentioned documents within thirty days after the date of this present notice, that they may be submitted to his majesty for his royal determination.

It is ordered by the said board that the above to be published, in consequence of the order received from the secretary of state and war department, dated the 23d instant.

London, 29 April, 1819.

This seems to have been expected, and it is indeed surprising that we have not heard before of such demands being made upon our government. It is a fact, that there are daily expecting interesting news ; for by the last advices Lord Cochrane with his fleet was before Callao, and along the royal squadron in port, and it was expected he would attack the place and destroy it.

Captain Wooster of New-York presented to the Chili navy, as the Chili navy, as which for so long a time have been plundering, pillaging, and robbing on the ocean, are now in port at Callao, and he would proceed to the attack. We

AGRICULTURAL.

In an English newspaper of February last, we find the follow ing article. It is one of the most impressive facts to establish the advantages of improved cultivation of the soil, that we have ever read, if the fact is to be credited, and we have no reason to disbelieve it more than any other derived from the same source, respecting improvements in the arts, sciences, &c. We do not copy this under the impression that this mode of cultivation can ever be employed otherwise than experimentally, but to show what can be accomplished by system and industry.—Here are an hundred and thirty four bushels of wheat raised from an acre of ground. The highest product we have ever heard of being realized in this country, on the most fertile land, was fifty bushels. The average crop, throughout the Union, is probably not more than ten bushels if so much; in England, it is rated, according to the following article, at more than thirty by the ordinary mode of cultivation. The difference in these averages is again owing to the difference in the mode of culture.

From an English Paper.

GREAT CROPS.

Mr. Falls gives us instance of land cultivated by the spade, and the wheat planted in lines by a dibble, with plants previously raised in a seed bed produced the enormous return of seventeen quarters of wheat to an acre! The average produce in the ordinary mode of cultivation is said more than four quarters; but the extra expence is more than repaid fourfold. The expence of digging an acre of ordinary land at nursery price, he states to be 35s and this he adds in as operation worth two ploughings; and besides, by planting the wheat there is great saving in seed. In the usual mode of broad cast, it requires two bushels to the acre; but in planting, one peck is sufficient. Mr. F. also states, that by spade husbandry he has produced a crop of potatoes amounting to the almost incredible quantity of 800 bushels produce: and he gives it as his opinion, that the more general use of the spade would have the most beneficial effect, not only upon the agricultural laborers themselves, but on their employers also; for, though the farmer might not be able to find laborers to cultivate large quantities of land in this way, he might at least cultivate sufficient to employ his quota of the laborers of his parish, and so at once exonerate the poor rates, and be himself amply repaid.

LONDON, May 13.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. Grenfell, in moving for a committee of the whole house to consider of the act of 1786, establishing the sinking fund, entered into a history of the origin and progress of the fund, and contended that its income should be applied, under Mr. Pitt's scheme, to the service of the state, instead of continuing the system of loans to unnecessary amounts. He proposed, as an amendment to the original motion for the interest of the loan now in contemplation, would go near to exhaust the little effective surplus which yet remained in the sinking fund.—Why then should the delusion be kept up, when it produced no benefit but to his e contemporaries and speculators? Had the sinking fund been applied in aid of the loans contracted from 1793 to 1818, the saving in the public would not have been less than £28,000,000. Upon the single loan of 1815 there would have been a saving of £2,000,'00 in capital, and £77,000 in annual interest. He reminded the Chancellor of Exchequer that, in 1814, when he consulted the assisted interest, whether he should have a loan of £10 or £12,000,000, there was one (Mr. Ricardo) who honestly said, that looking to his own interest, he must concur with the rest in recommending a loan for £24,000,000, but that looking to the interest of the country, he would advise the application of the sinking fund and a loan of £7,000,00. Mr. Nicholl denied, that the commissioners had already the power of applying the sinking fund in aid of any loan, but would be extremely unwise to make it compulsory on them to do so. With regard to the alledged saving of £2,000,000 in the loan of 1818, the hon. gentleman overlooked the battle of Waterloo, and the sudden termination of hostilities, to which alone the great profit of the contractors was to be attributed. With regard to the supposed saving of £20,000,000 upon all the loans contracted for during the war, if the system of applying to the sinking fund had been adopted, it must be recollected that nearly £300,000,000 had been borrowed in that period, and the saving therefore did not exceed 2 per cent. instead of a loss profit, however, a loss had been sometimes incurred, which would probably have balanced the amount of saving.—One great advantage attending the present system was, that it produced a great real steadiness of prices, which was extremely favourable to the improvement of the money market; and the chancellor of the exchequer, as well as the loan contractors, participated in this advantage. Were it not for the temporary purchases made by the commissioners, there would be few real buyers, and persons under the necessity of selling, would be at the mercy of stock-jobbers. After some observations from lord Althorp, Mr. T. Wilson, Mr. Ricardo, and others, the motion was received by a cry of hear, hear. Wallace obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the existing laws relative to the salt-duty.

The attorney general, in moving for leave to bring in a bill to prohibit enlistments in foreign service, and equipments of ships of war without license, stated, that by the 9th and 29th George II. it was already a felony to enlist for the service of such acknowledged foreign power as one of his objects was to amend this provision, by introducing after "king, prince, state, potentate," the words "colony or district who may be in actual hostility or government." Husbould propose to reduce the penalty from a felony to a misdemeanor for the first offence, making it felony for the second. He also wished to make the law equally applicable to acknowledged and to unacknowledged powers. Enlisting in the service of those persons who had assumed to themselves the powers of a government, whether they were justifiable or not in assuming that power he should not enquire, because he wished to avoid the political discussion of such a question; was a violation of the neutrality which this country professed to observe. In the second provision of the bill, two objects were proposed to be embraced; in preventing the fitting out of armed vessels, and also to prevent the fitting out or supplying other ships with warlike stores in a way of his majesty's ports. He stated that vessels might not receive provisions in any port in the British dominions, but the object of the enactment was to prevent them from shipping warlike stores, such as guns, and other things obviously and manifestly intended for no other purpose than war. Mr. Jones Burdett declared his objection to the repeal of the 9th and 29th of George II. which enacted penalties according to humanity. Those laws were intended chiefly for the protection of the navy, to prevent the formation of Jacobite armies, organized in Spain and France, against the peace of the country.—The Bill which it was now proposed to introduce, might, however it was worded, and however cautiously its object was conceived, be enlisted, "a bill for preventing British subjects from lending their assistance to the South American cause, or enlisting in the South American service."—The principles of neutrality only required us to maintain the form in being, as long might elect the character of the belligerents; but they could not command us to change our law. Lease of all vessels being thought to be after any loss for the evident advantage of one of the parties, which would be the result of the measure now proposed, under the pretext of putting both on the same foot ing. He could not refrain from expressing his disapprobation of a measure which could not be carried into effect, but which as an enactment to repress the rising liberty of the South Americans, and to enable Spain to recompose that yoke of slavery which they were resolved to bear which they had so nobly shaken off, and from which, he trusted in God, they would finally be enabled to free themselves, whatever attempts were made by the ministers of this or any other country to countenance or assist their oppressors and speculators? He the solicitor, and Mr. Martin, (of Galway,) supported the motion; Mr. Elliee, Mr. G. Lamb, Col. Davies, Sir J. Newport, and Mr. W. De Crespigny, opposed it. It was then agreed to without a division.

"Paris, May 21.—The conviction of his majesty is at length definitively established in favour of that line of conduct (Mr. Ricardo) who honestly said, that looking to his own interest, he must concur with the rest in recommending a loan for £24.000,00, but that looking to the interest of the country, he would advise the application of the sinking fund and a loan of £7,000,00. George Bidder and Zerah Colburn.—George Bidder of Morton, who possesses such ready and surprising powers of calculating, is at present in London. It is perhaps not generally known, that he asserts the ability of communicating his method to others, and of enabling them to perform the same things as himself. Zerah Colburn has also made the same assertion; and from the developement of part of his method, (arising no doubt it can be done, but would require an excellent memory and probably would not be very generally applicable to use. To mathematicians, engineers, and others, however, it would present many advantages; and it should be known that both have offered to disclose their method, on condition that they be remunerated in a respectable manner.

Scarborough Springs FARM.

For Sale, on liberal terms,

AN extensive and very valuable Farm, situate in the fourth Concession of the Township of Scarboro', within fifteen miles of the Seat of Government, and containing about three hundred acres of the very best timbered Land.

There are about forty acres of the premises in a high state of cultivation, fenced, and abundantly supplied with water. And the Farm, from its being contiguous to an important Salmon Fishery, and containing an extensive Maple Bush, must prove a most desirable purchase to any one wishing to settle in the vicinity of York.

The eligibility of the situation for a Farmer, within a few miles of a good and sure market, connected with the fertility of the soil, and various other local advantages are of themselves fully sufficient to recommend the above to the public; but the subscriber has it in his power further to state, that it is the seat of the much celebrated Scarborough Springs, the efficacy of whose waters in the cure of a variety of maladies is too notorious to need recapitulation: suffice it therefore to say, that if a commodious house were erected for the accommodation of strangers, and conducted by an attentive and enterprising person, the continental resort of the infirm and sickly to these Springs, to enjoy the salubrity of their waters, could not fail to secure most ample remuneration for any exertions which might be bestowed for their ease and comfort.

From the foregoing it may be inferred, and the proprietor is bold to say, that there is not a situation in the Province better adapted for the establishment and speedy growth of a Village, and that to any intelligent and industrious individual he offers a most tempting and lucrative speculation.

For Sale also—The unexpired term of a Lease of the Clergy Reserve adjoining the said Lands, of which Lease three years only have expired. There are ten acres of improvement, well enclosed thereon, with a fine stream of water passing through it, as well as the Springs Farm.

An indisputable Title with immediate possession will be given, and a liberal credit allowed for part of the purchase money, on approved security.

For further particulars application to be made to the proprietor.

FROM EUROPE.

LONDON, June 23.

While the 7th hussars lately passed by the Marquis of Anglesea's seat, near Uttoxeter, on their route to Manchester, they were entertained by the Marquis at his mansion with good old English cheer. Whilst the soldiers were partaking of the beer in front of the house, immediately before their departure, a somewhat singular appearance presented itself in the persons of the Marquis, his brother, (a Captain in the navy,) Lord Uxbridge, (the Marquis' son) and the daughter of the Marquis. The first wished a lad, which he lost at Waterloo, the Captain an arm, the Noble Lord Uxbridge was on crutches, being wounded in the knee, and the fair lady was about little attending her husband at one of the battles in Spain.

LONDON, July 7.

The revenue quarter and revenue year, which closed yesterday, present more favorable results than even our sanguine anticipations could have fixed and anticipated. It is therefore, with heartfelt pleasure that we submit to our readers an accurate comparison with the corresponding quarter of 1819, amounting to 422,832 pounds!

The comparison of the year ended the 5th July, 1819, with the year ended the 5th July, 1818, is equally gratifying.

The total revenue of those periods is as follows:—

Total revenue under every head, ending July, 5, 1818.	£48,053,544
Total revenue under every head, ending July 5, 1819.	£49,561,280
Excess of year ending July 5, 1819	£1,507,736
Total revenue, exclusive of arrears of property tax and unappropriated war duties for the year ending July 5, 1818.	£46,806,660
Total revenue, exclusive of arrears of property tax and unappropriated war duties for the year ending July 5, 1819.	£49,071,922
Excess of total revenue, exclusive of arrears, &c. of the year ending July 5,	£2,265,763

July 9.

We have this morning received Dutch and Hamburgh mails, the former bringing papers to the 7th inst. and the latter to the 30th ult.

Intelligence from Petersburgh of the 19th ult. confirms the accounts of the Emperor Alexander's arrival at Camp of Scarsa, relative to the formation of three camps in Finland, adds, that the works of Riga are to be increased. The heat in that capital was uncommonly oppressive. The thermometer is stated at 25 deg. of Reaumur in the shade, (88 deg. of Fahrenheit.)

News from Copenhagen of the 23d ult. announces, that the generally prevailing stagnation of trade is now felt in that city. The number of bankrupts fallen within the last fortnight. On the preceding day it was 233. An ordinance has been published there, enacting penalties against individuals acting in foreign service.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 1.

Sir Robert Liston, the Ambassador of his Britannic Majesty to the Porte, has just concluded an important Treaty, after three years negociation, by which the Divan at length recognizes the act signed and concluded by the four Allied Powers, respecting the Ionian Islands. However, it appears not yet to have received the finishing stroke from the sanction of the Treaty of the 5th of November, 1815, which will satisfy England only by halves. The new Treaty replaces the fortress of Parga and its dependencies under the dominion of the Sultan, who, in this, also recognizes the inhabitants of the Ionian Islands under the protection of Great Britain. This Treaty was signed on the 26th of April; and it is therefore to be presumed that Parga will be shortly delivered up to the Turkish Authorities.

CADIZ, June 15.

All is in motion here to embark on board the transports artillery, provisions, and ammunition of all kinds; a complete sporting presage is also prepared for the expedition; within these few days 20 more transports have arrived in this port, of which ten come from France; they are speedily equipped. The troops composing the army are daily exercised in military evolutions. Count O'Donnel comes to the most strict discipline to be observed, on which account he is more feared than loved by the army. It is not yet possible to say when it will sail for its destination; but we might judge by the arrangements which we witness, the epoch is not far distant. Meantime we have several insurgent strangers on board, which hasten us to make prices in the Strait, and seem to divide our preparations.—This is our situation.

DRESDEN, June 20.

An event, which happened here last week, continues to occupy public attention. A functionary, who was generally esteemed, made a declaration before the proper judicial authority, and signed the instrument his first wife 20 years ago.—He has surrendered himself a prisoner, and his indictment is preparating.

A FEMALE DOCTOR.

Doctor Charlotte Von Siebold, the celebrated female accoucheur who officiated in delivering her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, is the daughter of Doctor Von Siebold, an eminent professor at Darmstadt, and of Mad. Von S. a lady who, also, is in the obstetric art, have spread her fame over every part of Germany. Miss Von Siebold, after preparing herself in the same career under the tuition of both her parents, determined to add to her knowledge and experience the advantage of an academical education. However singular it might appear in this or any other country, this lady actually attended the various courses of medical lectures at Gottingen, and when she had completed her studies took the degree of Doctor in Medicine in the usual forms there. Since that time her success, not only in the obstetric art but in the different complaints more particularly incidental to her own sex, has established her reputation on the Continent and has led to the choice made of her on the present occasion, a choice which the event has so well justified.

LONDON, June 24.

The Foreign Enlistment Bill was read a third time last night in the House of commons, not withstanding Mr. Waithman expressed his disapprobation of the measure.—Sir W. Scott, in a luminous and argumentive speech, laid down the principles of neutrality, condemned in their elucidation by all the great public writers of Europe. There was a striking difference between his spirit, diligence and research, and that of Mr. Brougham on the reason, and the florid declamation of a learned member, on a former night, whose time has been so much better graced a trial of academic skill than the solemn deliberations of a legislative assembly. It was emphatically observed by Sir W. Scott, that "there could be no solecism more absurd or more mischievous, than that a state could be at peace, and that subjects of that state could take up arms against it." The short sentence comprises the whole essence of the question, and the bill that has just passed one house of parliament, is amply intended to correct as form so mischievous an absurdity.

Under the head of Bruges, we find a copy of a circular letter, addressed by the Governor of the province, to the Mayors and Burgomasters within jurisdiction, stating, that many persons had absented from the country, of religious accessions, and that from the indecision with which they were conducted municipal affairs, the Government had found it necessary to issue the following circular:—

"The King of the Netherlands wishes that his Majesty's orders to appoint a day and having refused to obey them, the possession of the Holy Sacrament in the only one which will not be solemnized, and the authorities are commanded to enforce the observance of his Majesty's wishes.

Affecting case of Suicide.—On Friday an inquest was held at the Bell and Dragon, Gray's Inn Road, before Mr. Ann Hayes, aged 30. During the last six months the deceased has been in a state of despondency, caused by the illness of her son in East-lane, Walworth, for the benefit of her health. On Tuesday morning early she arose and went into the garden; and not returning for some time to come to her breakfast, she was found suspended to a high tree, by a piece of flannel round her neck, and over that two strong pieces of cord, by which she had been strangled. The body was cold, and life quite extinct.—Verdict, Lunacy.

C. in October last, his sister has arrived in this country; but, to her inexpressible mortification, every enquiry for him at York, has proved ineffectual, but in the hope that he may still reside in this Province, or in a situation where this advertisement may come under his notice, his sister takes this method of acquainting him, that she is now residing at Messrs. Piggot & Gurnetts, Ancaster, U. C. where she trust he will instantly repair & relieve her mind from the excessive grief, which the disappointment subdued to her occasioned.

Should any person be able to give Miss O'Bryan any information respecting her brother, they would confer on her an invaluable favor, if they would do so, by means of a letter to her as above.

Scarborough Springs FARM.

For Sale, on liberal terms,

AN extensive and very valuable Farm, situate in the fourth Concession of the Township of Scarboro', within fifteen miles of the Seat of Government, and containing about three hundred acres of the very best timbered Land.

There are about forty acres of the premises in a high state of cultivation, fenced, and abundantly supplied with water. And the Farm, from its being contiguous to an important Salmon Fishery, and containing an extensive Maple Bush, must prove a most desirable purchase to any one wishing to settle in the vicinity of York.

The eligibility of the situation for a Farmer, within a few miles of a good and sure market, connected with the fertility of the soil, and various other local advantages are of themselves fully sufficient to recommend the above to the public; but the subscriber has it in his power further to state, that it is the seat of the much celebrated Scarborough Springs, the efficacy of whose waters in the cure of a variety of maladies is too notorious to need recapitulation: suffice it therefore to say, that if a commodious house were erected for the accommodation of strangers, and conducted by an attentive and enterprising person, the continual resort of the infirm and sickly to these Springs, to enjoy the salubrity of their waters, could not fail to secure most ample remuneration for any exertions which might be bestowed for their ease and comfort.

From the foregoing it may be inferred, and the proprietor is bold to say, that there is not a situation in the Provinces better adapted for the establishment and speedy growth of a Village, and that to any intelligent and industrious individual he offers a most tempting and lucrative speculation.

For Sale also—The unexpired term of a Lease of the Clergy Reserve adjoining the said Lands, on which Lease three years only have expired. There are ten acres of improvement, well enclosed, thrown, with a fine stream of water passing through it, as well as the Springs Farm.

An indisputable Title with immediate possession will be given, and a liberal credit allowed for part of the purchase money, on approved security.

For further particulars application to be made to the proprietor.

FROM EUROPE.

LONDON July 15.

A most novel and extraordinary spectacle has been exhibited in the House of Lords, by the appearance of Ancient Parliaments and Universal Suffrage at Birmingham. Tired of ancient usages, in favour of that descriptive trash, they have at last resolved, theory into practice. On Monday last, about 50,000 of the inhabitants assembled in the open churchyard of that city, to which they immediately conferred the right of sending a member to Parliament, by choosing Sir Charles Wolseley as Legislative Attorney of the people of Birmingham in Parliament for ever.

Thirsk, West Riding, Yorkshire, June 15, 1813.

A most extraordinary occurrence took place on monday last on thesday and in the middle of the great horse fair — when the place was crowded with buyers and sellers, farmers, &c. and horses of all colours, and descriptions, there fell a heavy shower of hail stones. Trees of unusual size, and the most extraordinary shower of hail ever remembered. Many of the hail stones were picked up, were the full size of pullets. At this time the various horses on show were forced to disband, and fled to the walls of the fair. In a short time, however, the hail came on with much violence and impetuosity, that they all fled (in one moment) broke "from their moorings," and rushed in full gallop in all directions on the spectators.— The most direful consternation ensued. In the hall of them, but the fright and fury of the horses knew no stay, and the owners were most of them forced to fly to the public houses for safety. The fair that remained on the ground, more farming, and a little more rascally, were endeavouring to secure hold of the horses, and make off with them. At this night, the strong scene of property overcame the fears of the owners, and they pushed on with the horses and horses to seize the offenders. This produced a grand battle royal, between the Thieves, stallions, and honest horse dealers; were all engaged; and a great length of time elapsed before the business was completed. The scene of action was terrible, and every man was able "to get his mare again." When quiet was ultimately restored, a scene of another position took place, as usual, and many of the innocent speculators went home with their garments dripping from the storm, and their pockets quite empty.

Ascot Course.— few days ago a man and a labourer, both men of prowess, quarrelled on the subject of which was erecting on the tower of the new church. A pugilistic encounter took place, and the two fearless combatants fought one hour and twenty minutes, when it was not quite a yard in diameter; and here the champions buffeted each other lustily at the height of 170 feet above the surface of the ground. Some long and severe blows were given and received, but fortunately neither of the warriors was thrown out of the circle, or so much as came to the ground. It is indeed to be feared, that if they had been precipitated to mother earth, she would undoubtedly have to kindly receive them as she did her son Antæus. We do not think that a spectacle of this nature was ever before beheld by a public; and we hope it will not soon, unless, perhaps at the memorable period between the buck-lovers, masons, and boys, who were engaged in the building of Babel. It is said that the victorious to challenge Crib, Carter, or every other British bruiser who may take his place, to fight him on the top of the monument of London, where he will give him such a cross-buttock, as will throw his head below the street. The only men in modern times, who have equalled these genuine successors of Hercules, Eryx, and Entellus, were Mason and Joseph from Leith, in crossing the Swinnatsins, three fourths of a mile above the clouds, and saw the lightning break, and heard the thunder roll, 1000 feet below them on the scene of action.—N. Telegraph.

Government have issued a circular, which indicates the regulations to be observed by those who engage in from this country to the Cape of Good Hope.— The money granted is to be applied exclusively to the benefit of those who will engage to carry out at least ten able bodied individuals between the ages of with their families, the government reserving to themselves the right of selection. Each person will be entitled to a deposit of £10 for every family so taken out; but the Colony is not to consist of more than a man his wife and two children, under the age of 14; all children above that age, and under 18, are to be paid at the rate of £5 whatever and £3 for every two children under 14. A commissioner will be appointed to the port, a passage and provisions during the voyage will be provided by government. On board one third of the adult males must be farmers, and the remainder of land granted, on a quit rent, not exceeding two pounds, to be remitted for the first seven years, to every person of the above classes taken out. The third mate will be paid when the settlers are finally settled on their allotments, and the remainder three months afterwards. If 100 families emigrate together, and apply for permission to take with them a minister of their own persuasion, government will undertake to give a salary to such minister, if approved of by the secretary of state.

TANGIERS, June 10.

The Emperor of Morocco, at the head of an army of 36,000 men, and attended by his Son and principal Bashaws marched last week, against a numerous tribe of rebellious Arabs, for the purpose of chastising them. On the 21st, the attack commenced at 11 in the morning, and continued to be kept up, fiercely, till five in the afternoon, when the whole of the King's army, himself included, remained at the mercy of the conquered, having been totally defeated and wounded, no fewer than 20,000 men. The Arabs desperately charged with the bayonet, having the deep ravine Malleg at their back, to cut it out of their power to run away. This spirited determination and the skilful manœuvres by which they cut off the retreat of the King's army, were the causes of the victory proving so decisive.

The Arabs, however, did not make such an ill use of it as was to be feared, since, although they completely plundered of their prisoners they engaged a few of the Sheriffs, under whose protection the King put himself, allowed him to come back to his dominions. In the mean time the King having elapsed without the fate of many of his Son being known, this town was threatened with an anarchy, which excited the greatest alarm amongst them. These, however, were at an end, the moment we heard the King had arrived at Tain good health, and that his son was to proceed to Fez.

At Hamburgh, the heat has been so excessive, that many persons died of it, and the Exchange was shut up for a few days.

It appears that the management of Drury Lane Theatre will devolve on Elliston, for the ensuing season, and that they intend to open with thousand pounds. How affairs will prosper under the new government, time must shew. At present, the thieves, stallions, and honest horse dealers were all engaged; and a great length of time elapsed before the business was completed. The scene of action was terrible, and every man was able "to get his mare again." When quiet was ultimately restored, a scene of another position took place as usual, and many of the innocent speculators went home with their garments dripping from the storm, and their pockets quite empty.

It is indeed to be feared, that if they had been precipitated to mother earth, she would undoubtedly have to kindly received them as she did her son Antæus. We do not think that a spectacle of this nature was ever before beheld by a public; and we hope it will not soon, unless, perhaps at the memorable period between the buck-lovers, masons, and boys, who were engaged in the building of Babel. It is said that the victorious to challenge Crib, Carter, or every other British bruiser who may take his place, to fight him on the top of the monument of London, where he will give him such a cross-buttock, as will throw his head below the street. The only men in modern times, who have equalled these genuine successors of Hercules, Eryx, and Entellus, were Mason and Joseph from Leith, in crossing the Swinnatsins, three fourths of a mile above the clouds, and saw the lightning break, and heard the thunder roll, 1000 feet below them on the scene of action.—*N. Government have issued a circular, which indicates the regulations to be observed by those who engage in from this country to the Cape of Good Hope.— The money granted is to be applied exclusively to the benefit of those who will engage to carry out at least ten able bodied individuals between the ages of with their families, the government reserving to themselves the right of selection. Each person will be entitled to a deposit of £10 for every family so taken out; but the Colony is not to consist of more than a man his wife and two children, under the age of 14; all children above that age, and under 18, are to be paid at the rate of £5 whatever and £3 for every two children under 14. A commissioner will be appointed to the port, a passage and provisions during the voyage will be provided by government. On board one third of the adult males must be farmers, and the remainder of land granted, on a quit rent, not exceeding two pounds, to be remitted for the first seven years, to every person of the above classes taken out. The third mate will be paid when the settlers are finally settled on their allotments, and the remainder three months afterwards. If

"A smpatch is just received from the President Bolivar stating, that 150 British cavalry, belonging to Colonel Ujueley's regiment, under General Paez, which had gone up the Orenoko, had attacked and defeated Morillo's cavalry, consisting of 1000, and had destroyed 400 of the best of them. By the command of the President, these men have all received the Order of the Golden Fleece, and a border in the country (and which only the President and Admiral Brion had for their gallant conduct." This is a most valuable corps, and the troops which the patriot cause may have sustained by the annihilation of M'Gregor's army.

Affair of an Hour.—A real sporting race yesterday morning on Epping Flat, between a gentleman from Bilford, named Tollman, and Lieutenant Pigott, for 100 miles for 100 guineas a side. The ground was two miles; the pedestrians did the first four miles in 16 minutes 10 seconds; the second mile in 15 minutes 10 seconds. The latter was completed, but the distance was not quite accomplished in the time. The first two miles were done under 20 minutes; the last two miles were gallantly contested, and Lieutenant Pigott won by six yards; each performed the distance within the hour.

LONDON, July 21.

This is the day when our Sovereign Reformers are to devise those salutary means of accomplishing that equal representation of which every other man in the kingdom knows to be revolution. We have made such preparations as will enable us to commence, only one hour after the hour, the course of their proceeding. If it shall be our good fortune to be able to say that they have completed a perfect constitution — if so can be put down without breach of the peace, let peace be preserved — If they shall succeed in a tiny nut fraud, the E—— of C——— and if those who deserve the punishment they inflict upon these fellow-countrymen, are to be halters more than the forgers they hang, can be annihilated without breach of the peace, let all be peaceful Peace, peaceful Peace, but let us never forget the RESISTANCE TO OPPRESSION IS THE CONSTITUTIONAL PRIVILEGE OF EVERY NATION.—Let the Cities, Counties, and Southwark, there may be about 20,000 voters. Shall a MILLION of stout neofranchised hearts, chained to their anchors, suffer them to kick the feet of such a comparative handful of rascals who trample upon us as they are herded over by superior scoundrels? Shall three times ten fold the body of Electors in infamous Westminster crouch to those who, in a 13 day's poll, insulted the venerable CARTWRIGHT with 38 votes! None but panders to the Borough thieves of both the factions can maintain that any practicable difficulty exists to peace in England. If this work can be done without fasting, praying, or peacebreaking, good; but if the unjust and cruel murderers in the gaol of Ilchester are to be allowed to perform the work in 100 hours. From the small quantity of water required, it is likely to be a considerable request for drying either light or heavy manufactures.

Ship Tinder—The Commissioners of His Majesty's Navy have not only made contracts with different houses for very considerable quantities of oak timber from the Baltic, but numerous cargoes of it have been received at the King's Dockyards, where it has been highly approved of, both on account of its quality and scantling. Orders are also given for the construction of Mr. Smith, Deputy Secretary of the Navy Board, has been for two years past inspecting the Greenwich Hospital School, and has taken the whole charge of the Mathematical department under the direction of Dr. Hutton. Mr. Smith, Deputy Secretary of the Navy Board, has been for two years past inspecting the Greenwich Hospital School, and has taken the whole charge of the Mathematical department under the direction of Dr. Hutton.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer answered, that in consequence of communications on the subject, a short time ago, his Royal Highness the Prince Regent had referred the case to the Lord Chancellor, the first Lord of the Treasury, and himself, to know whether such measures could be introduced. On mature consideration, they had decided that it would be a dangerous precedent, and that no bill of the kind ought to be introduced.—(Hear hear.)—Since that period the petition in question had been presented, and without the sanction of Ministers.—(Loud cheers.)

Mr. Greenfell said, his Majesty's Ministers had acted as became them; but he hoped, that if any bill should be introduced, it would not be let pass without inquiry.

Mr. Brougham was desirous of correcting something that had been imperfectly stated by him on a former evening, in order to prevent speculation. He had said, that 1,000,000 in a part of England, consisting of nine counties, and where the population is mounted to a million and a half, the number of endowed schools was 680, the number of children educated in them 19,000, and their revenue amounted to £78,000. In the same districts the number of unendowed schools was 1030, the number of children 32,000, and the revenue £98,000. In the same districts the number of schools was 1710, the number of children 51,000. The number of Sunday Schools was 650, and the number of children educated in them 39,000. The number of schools in the whole of England was 5,800, and in the same proportion of extent as the above districts, 1,000,000 of the population, there would be 1,000 Sunday Schools, and 70,000 children. The number of unendowed schools throughout England, was 17,000. An infant school had been set on foot in a Gentleman's house at Chelsea, which 150 were at present educated. A calculation had been made in France, that if there were schools for one tenth of the population, that would be sufficient for the education of the country. But in this country a proportion required was from one-sixth to one-ninth of the population, which was the proportion, which was the average proportion to the means of education. In France no distinction was made between the children of Catholic and Protestant parents. A proposition by noble example had been set by the King; and the conduct of the Prince Regent was such as to make it unnecessary to say equal patronage of the schools of the national Society, and of the British and Foreign Society. The schools belong to the latter were open to children of all persuasions, without distinction of any kind, it was the intention of the House being forward a number of the subject.

Lord Lexborough stated, that notice had been done to promote the cause of education in Ireland, and especially in the northern part of the country; some improvement that had been done in that country.

It can be done without fasting, praying, or peacebreaking, good; but if the unjust and cruel murderers in the gaol of Ilchester are to be allowed to perform the work in 100 hours. Wednesday, June 30.—Mr. Grenfell wished to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, whether the petition presented last night for the opening in a bill to allow the Duke of Kent to dispose of part of his property by lottery had received the sanction of Ministers.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer answered, that in consequence of communications on the subject, a short time ago, his Royal Highness the Prince Regent had referred the case to the Lord Chancellor, the first Lord of the Treasury, and himself, to know whether such measures could be introduced. FROM EUROPE.

THE QUEEN'S TRIAL.

Evidence for Her Majesty.

Dr. Henry Holland (the twelfth witness) called in and examined by Mr. Wilde. Was physician to her Royal Highness the Princess of Wales, and left England in that capacity with her Royal Highness in 1814. Proceeded to Naples with her. Remembers the whole period of her Royal Highness's stay there. Knows a Mr. Bergami, a courier who received there. With very few exceptions, only received the principal English and foreigners visiting those who were there at the time. Left Naples and went to Rome, and subsequently to Genoa. Was on board the Clorinde with her Royal Highness. Remembers the courier and all the English there. All the other principal Englishmen. Can't precisely recollect all the persons of the English. The house occupied by the princess was in the suburbs of the town, and the neighbourhood fashionably inhabited. Knows a person of the name of Bergami. He did not live at the Princess's table at Genoa. While with the Princess the conduct of her Royal Highness to Bergami was that of a mistress to a servant. Never saw his conduct to the Princess otherwise than unassuming and respectful. Before witness left England it was the understanding that he should remain in the service of her Royal Highness for about a year and a half. Left the Princess at Venice. There was a conversation about going to Milan before they arrived at Venice. Went on from Milan to Venice at the Princess's suggestion, and was to return therefrom. Left some of his articles at the Princess's with the intention of joining her Royal Highness. On our arrival at Milan, her Royal Highness said I thought, if I pleased, take about six weeks absence for a tour in Switzerland. I replied, that if her Royal Highness would excuse this time a little, I should like to go on private business to England. Her Royal Highness agreed, and it was then in order of consideration to pay for myself whether I should not pay for England from Milan or Venice. I preferred the latter. While at Genoa, Lord and Lady Glenbervie, Lord Malpas, and the principal English officers, then at Genoa, visited her Royal Highness.

Cross-examined by the Solicitor General.—Remembers Bergami's meeting with an accident at Naples. He was in consequence, confined to his room for three or four days. Bignochi attended him. Remembers how the Princess's house at Genoa was situated. There was a small tower in front, regarden in front. Dined every day there. Holds a situation no but not every day in Naples. Remembers a masquerade given by the Princess on the then King of Naples, but was not there. Remembers a masked ball at the theatre of St. Carlos; was there for about an hour. Did not know her royal highness was there till the next morning. Never mentioned on any former occasion the conduct of the Princess to Bergami to have been improper. Knows a minister at York. Never mentioned to that minister it was improper. Never made such a statement to any body. Has always examined to hold the same opinion of the conduct of her Royal Highness. Never stated or informed any individual whatever that the conduct of her Royal Highness was such, that no person who had any regard to character could remain in her service, or words to that effect. His duty led him to be very little about the person of her Royal Highness. Was at no such request as his own part in order to avoid it, nor to interfere with his professional duty to her Royal Highness and her suite. The principal opportunities he had of observing the conduct of her Royal Highness was afforded by the times when he dined with her. Excepting when he was called upon professionally to attend her Royal Highness he had no opportunity of seeing her in the forenoon or in the evening. Bergami waited on her Royal Highness both at Naples and Genoa. Remembers, who is not aware that the niece of Bergami, Vassoni, entered the service of her royal highness at Genoa. A little child whose name he did not know, was introduced to her Royal Highness at Genoa. Knew an elderly person with the child, whom he believed to have been the mother of Bergami. Remembers a person of the name of Louis Bergami entering the service of her Royal Highness. Saw him wait on the other suite did at table. He wore a livery. It was at the beginning of her Royal Highness's residence at Genoa that Louis Bergami entered her service. Lady Charlotte Campbell remained at Milan till three or four days of the departure of her royal highness. After the departure of Lady Charlotte Campbell, no female but the Countess Oldi remained in the service of her majesty. The Countess Oldi entered the service of her majesty, so far as he could recollect, about four days after the departure of Lady Charlotte Campbell. Has but very transiently seen the same carriage with her royal highness. When the Countess Oldi entered the service of her royal highness, was not aware it take place as the order of Bergami. Did not know it take her entered in the service of her royal highness. About eight weeks elapsed after the Countess Oldi entered the service of her royal highness. Two witnesses passed to attend on her. Which house

YORK ESTATE DIRECTORY,

AND LAND PRICE CURRENT OFFICE.

The object and use of this Office will be found in and on lands which have been, and eventually may be, granted by the British Government to individuals of every class, for facilitating both the Settlement and Sale of all future Sales.

By a general collection of located lands in the line of improved farms to be sold or exchanged, a Registration of Estate will constitute a Guide to those in want of employment, and to Capitalists desirous of investing in this highly eligible country, while the immediate intercourse and correspondence (each agent upon an extensive scale) connected with each correspondent (either as a Farmer, a Mill proprietor or resident in the Towns of Upper Canada,) in support of the lands for sale, will be found of the greatest advantage.

The use of so important branch of this institution, must become extensively known and of the richest and finest portion of the agricultural land upon the Province will be rendered known to the public in a Directory, so that the attention of capitalists from abroad may be directed to the purchase of such lands as may be gradually conquered to sustain a Free Government for public use.

But as the establishment of such local reports from every township to York, where the seat of Government is to be, will be attended with certain expense and trouble, to this office, and with other nothing of importance necessary to the arrangement of them, for the press; no reports will be received unless the sum of Two Pounds Ten Shillings are remitted to the same, for every township contained in the said reports.

It may therefore be important to point out a mode of collecting and forwarding such statistical reports from every township, this may be accomplished by local information, obtained at any principal or other general meeting held by the inhabitants; when it can also be ascertained, what each individual's share of the expense subscribing to the report will be, according to the length agreed upon to be remitted; which in Two instances can exceed 1s 3d or 2s 6d Currency.

Reports of large tracts of Land (from private individuals) will never be certainly faithfully published upon the same terms.

☞ Land Proprietors who wish to engage, by contract, with any one for the locating of money, by obtaining and their proposals for the payment of labor whether in land or money) and one dollar free of postage, for the Register, you the same, will be duly recorded in the books of this Office, for the inspection of laborers.

After men who take Land in lieu of money, or register their names and places of abode at 12½ dollar. Those who take half land and half cash, one dollar; and others who take only cash, one dollar and a half.

Printed circular letters of information for every class, will be forwarded to all emigrants with passage, to session ma per quire.

All original reports will be regularly filled and published yearly in a quarto volume.

Public sales of estates will be held at York, monthly.

This Office will open (over the Crown Office in York,) on the 1st day of August next.
