30,000 THOUSAND ACRES OF LAND,

CALLED the Township of MOULTON, situate near the mouth of the Grand River, on Lake Erie, in the District of Niagara.

Emigrants and Settlers in general wishing to live near each other will find this a very desirable situation.

Any quantity from 50 acres upwards may be had, and conditions of Sale known, by application to Mr. William Smith, Merchant, Fort Erie, or to Mr. Mercer, Land Agent, York, Upper-Canada.

Bank of Upper Canada, Kingston, Sept. 13, 1821.

THE President and Directors of the Bank of Upper Canada, having observed (with great concern) for several months past, an endeavor on the part of the Bank of Canada, to injure its credit and cripple its operations, by using means highly unjustifiable, and as they are advised illegal, to collect their Bills by means of numerous agents established in every part of the Upper Province, for the purpose of producing a run on the said Bank of Upper Canada, deem it expedient (in order to prevent any false impression) to give this public notice, that they will not hereafter redeem any of the bills so collected, and presented by the said Bank or its agents—untill compelled by the judgment of his Majesty's courts of justice—In coming to this resolution, the President and Directors have been entirely governed by a sense of justice towards those individuals who repose confidence in the Bank of Upper Canada and who may desire to have bills redeemed that they have obtained by those honorable means best described as being opposite to those pursued by the Bank of Canada.

NOTICE.

Bank of Upper Canada, Kingston, Sept. 13, 1821.

THE President and Directors of the Bank of Upper Canada, having observed (with great concern) for several months past, an endeavor on the part of the Bank of Canada, to injure its credit and cripple its operations, by using means highly unjustifiable, and as they are advised illegal, to collect their Bills by means of numerous agents established in every part of the Upper Province, for the purpose of producing a run on the said Bank of Upper Canada, deem it expedient (in order to prevent any false impression) to give this public notice, that they will not hereafter redeem any of the bills so collected, and presumed by the said Bank or its agents—until compelled by the judgment of his Majesty's courts of justice—In coming to this resolution, the President and Directors have been entirely governed by a sense of justice towards those individuals who repose confidence in the Bank of Upper Canada and who may desire to have bills redeemed that they have obtained by those honorable means best described as being opposite to those pursued by the Bank of Canada.

OF

YORK, 21st Nov. 1821.

At three o'clock this day, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, being seated on the Throne, in the Legislative Council Chamber, and the House of Assembly being present, His Excellency was pleased to open the present Session of Parliament with the following

SPEECH:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,
Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I regret to be under the necessity of informing you, that our Commissioners for adjusting our financial interests with Lower Canada, have found it impracticable to establish a new agreement, on terms which they could regard as compatible with our just claims. A suspension of receipt has thus unavoidably occurred, in that very material branch of our revenue which accrues from our proportion of the Duties collected at the Port of Quebec.

Deeply as I felt the importance of this embarrassing result, I would not overlook the public convenience, by having recourse to your counsel at a period when your absence from your several Districts might have materially interfered with the administration of Justice; but measures will be resorted to for obviating as much as possible the difficulties which, in this conjuncture, unavoidably occurred.

I have now directed that the papers relative to the proceedings of the Commissioners, shall be immediately submitted to you; and I recommend the consideration of this important subject to your earliest attention.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

The Public Accounts, with the estimates for the ensuing year, shall be laid before you without delay. It is satisfactory to observe, that our internal revenue, small as it is, and altogether unequal to our exigencies, has not decreased during the last year, notwithstanding the general depression of trade and agriculture.

Henceforward, the annual expenditure will be considerably lessened by the reductions which have been made in the Militia Pension List under your late Act: and in availing myself of the provision enabling me to borrow on Debenture the sum required to discharge the arrearages due on that head, I was gratified in finding that the negociation of the Loan was immediately effected within the Province.

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen,

The important matter already alluded to, as inducing me to call you thus early together, will demand your first and chief consideration: for until we are relieved from the interruption in the receipt of our principal revenue, the means of advancing public improvement, must necessarily be much circumscribed.

There are doubtless other matters, however, on which your deliberations may be occupied with advantage to your fellow subjects. Looking to the situation of our agricultural interests, I cannot but feel desirous it might be found possible to afford some effectual encouragement to the experiment of cultivating hemp, and such other productions as would find a more constant and profitable demand in the Parent State.

You may be assured that I am always inclined to co-operate heartily with you in every measure in which my duty and judgement will allow me to concur: and I desire to impress upon you, that a continuance of unanimity between the different Branches of the Legislature, is necessary to create confidence in our measures, and to give weight to our representations.

On Friday the 23d inst. the Hon. the Legislative Council, and the House of Assembly, severally waited upon His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, with the Addresses, of which the following are copies:—

To His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces therein, &c. &c. &c.

May it please Your Excellency.

We His Majesty's most Dutiful and Loyal Subjects the Legislative Council of Upper Canada in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our thanks to Your Excellency for your speech to both Houses at the opening of the present Session of the Legislature.

We regret that our Commissioners for adjusting our financial interests with Lower Canada have found it impracticable to establish a new agreement on just and reasonable terms, and that the suspension of such a large branch of our revenue as that arising from our proportion of the duties collected at the Port of Quebec is thus occasioned.

We receive with grateful acknowledgements the fresh proof of Your Excellency's successful labors for the benefit of the Province, in providing the means for obviating the difficulties flowing from this embarassing result, till the Legislature could be assembled without public inconvenience.

Our relations with our Sister Province of Lower Canada, shall command our earliest attention as soon as the proceedings of the Commissioners are laid before us; and we are not without hope that the interruption of the receipt of our principal revenue by which the means of advancing public improvement must necessarily be much circumscribed will be speedily removed by the seasonable interference of the Parent State.

We shall not fail to take the agricultural interests of the Province into serious consideration, and shall readily concur in such encouragements for the cultivation of hemp and other products likely to command a steady market, as our limited means may permit.

We thankfully receive Your Excellency's assurances to co-operate heartily with us in every measure in which your duty and judgment will allow you to concur, and deeply sensible of the value of unanimity between the different branches of the Legislature in creating confidence in our measures, and giving weight to our representations, we shall bear it continually in mind.

(Signed) WM. DUMMER POWELL,
Speaker.

Legislative Council Chamber,
22d November, 1821.

To which His Excellency was pleased to give the following answer:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

I thank you for this Address and rely with confidence on the assurance that you will proceed without delay to the consideration of the important matters which I have recommended to your notice.

To His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland, K. C. B. Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces therein, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

We His Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects the Commons of Upper Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer to Your Excellency, our most humble thanks for your gracious Speech from the Throne, at the opening of the present Session.

While we gratefully acknowledge Your Excellency's consideration in deferring the call of the Legislature to a period when their assembling would least materially interfere with the public interest and convenience, we are deeply sensible of the importance of the Exigency on which Your Excellency has been graciously pleased to desire our Counsel.

It is with extreme regret we learn from Your Excellency that it has been found impracticable to adjust our financial interests with Lower Canada, by establishing a new agreement on terms which our Commissioners could regard as compatible with the just claims of this Province: the consequent suspension of the receipt of that very material Branch of our Revenue which accrues from our proportion of the duties collected at the Port of Quebec, places this Province in a very embarrassing situation, from which we are aware any measures Your Excellency may have been able to resort to, can afford but a partial and temporary relief.

The proceedings of the Commissioners when laid before us and the important Interests involved in their result shall engage our earliest and most earnest attention.

We shall not fail to give due consideration to the Public Accounts, and to the estimates for the ensuing year. It is satisfactory to learn that in the present general depression of Agriculture and Trade our internal Revenue inconsiderable as it is, when compared to the exigencies of the Province, has not decreased during the last year.

The Reduction in the annual expenditure which will be produced by the operation of the late Act for the revision of the Militia Pension list, and the facility with which the authorised loan required for discharging the arrearages due on that head, has been negociated within this Province, are subjects of just congratulation in which we humbly unite with Your Excellency.

Entirely convinced of the necessity of applying our chief consideration to the important matter which has induced Your Excellency to call us thus early together, it will be our first care to seek relief from the interruption in the Receipt of our Provincial Revenue, by which the means of advancing public improvements are at present so much circumscribed. Other matters will necessarily engage a portion of our attention, among which none can be more important than the possibility suggested by Your Excellency of affording effectual encouragement to such of our productions as we hope may find a profitable and certain demand in the Parent State.

We beg to assure Your Excellency that we are fully convinced of Your Excellency's constant desire to promote, by every means in your power the prosperity of this Province, and that in co operating with the other branches of the Legislature in any measures they may devise, Your Excellency will be at all times governed entirely by your sincere opinion of their wisdom and expediency.

With unfeigned desire that in our deliberations we may consult equally the just interests of our Constituents and the Honor of His Majesty's Government, we trust we shall evince the conviction we feel that a continuation of unanimity between the different branches of the Legislature is necessary to create confidence in their measures, and to give weight to their Representations.

(Signed) LEVIUS P. SHERWOOD,
Speaker.

Commons House of Assembly,
22d November, 1821.

To which His Excellency was pleased to reply.

Nothing could be more satisfactory to me than the general expression of this Address, and the particular assurance that you will give your earliest and most earnest attention to the important objects which I have recommended to your consideration

ILLEGAL MARRIAGES BILL.

The Atty. Gen. moved for leave to bring in a Bill for the more certain prevention of illegal marriages in this Province.

He introduced his motion by observing, that his opportunity of observation at the administration of Justice in this Province had convinced him of the necessity of the alterations in the Criminal Law which it was his object to effect by the present Bill. Illegal Marriages were frequent in all parts of the Province; for every Circuit, presentments were made by the Grand Juries, and informations were put into his hands complaining of persons for pretending to solemnize Marriage, who were wholly unauthorized by law to perform that duty, or who having legal authority disregarded all the forms prescribed by Law and married persons without publication of banns, or license. This offence formerly subjected the party in England to a penalty of one fine, by the provisions of several Statutes, but those laws had given place to the Marriage Act of 26 Geo. 2d, which declared it to be felony and consolved it with transportation for 14 years. This law had in England been generally regarded as severe. We had however adopted it in our general adoption of the Criminal Law of England, and the only mode of punishing the offence of illegal solemnization of Marriage which had become so common, was by prosecuting under this highly penal Statute. That it was evident the Juries were unwilling to pronounce persons guilty of felony whom they had respectedand listened to as their moral teachers, and for an offence which they did not seem to think involved much moral guilt, however mischievous in its consequences. They had therefore in most instances or at least in many rather done violence to their duty than to their feelings, and against the most direct evidence had either acquitted the party altogether, or found him guilty but not feloniously, in one case it was guilty but unknowingly. Where they had convicted they hadfrequently passed their verdict with a earnest recommendation to mercy. The consequence was, that the offence had hitherto escaped all punishment, and the example gave in the case of most dangerous tendency to the administration of justice generally. He proposed therefore to re-do the punishment more certain by making it less severe. The proposed Act created no new disabilities. It merely provided generally that all who solemnize said marriage without legal authority, or who having authority shall solemnize it without the necessary license or publication of banns should forfeit £100. The evils which resulted from Illegal Marriages were remediable, and must be provided against, for the issue of such Marriages were of course illegitimate and could not inherit.

Mr. Nichol said he had it in contemplation to bring in a bill to extend the right of marriage to the ministers of every religious denomination of Christians in this country; and therefore opposed the motion of the hon. gentleman, who might wait for the introduction of his [Mr Nichol's] bill, and add such clauses as he thought proper to put down illegal marriages after its enactment. He (Mr. Nichol) should support that law which enabled every man to worship God according to his conscience and with out which there could be no true religion." To exercise, fully free and unbridled mental, was what the people require, and what that house had a right to support, and not to drive persons from the country and make them cross the river, for exercising in their own societies, the sacred functions of our nature. He stated the learned Gentleman of Methodists were not as well entitled to that privilege as the Presbyterians and Catholics? that Church whose doctrine was to condemn, as the Church of England, damnable and heretical, or as the Magistrates of the country, many of whom were of his estimation in his mind, and against some of whom he could, if he thought proper, bring forward charges to show their high infliction for such an ordinance There were in his District 13 000 souls and not one Clergyman of the established church, and unless on the piety and discipline of the Clergymen that that bill was brought in to oppress and put down, what must be the state of society? The dissenting Clergymen were no burdens to the state, they were supported by the voluntary contributions of their societies, and the country, if any, arising from that ordinance should centre amongst themselves, and he looked to good and pious and christian benevolence to put that to flight, which if carried, might lead to the worst consequences. He well knew that to England where laws were so rigidly enforced, upon that subject, that a young couple, of warm affections, might proceed to Gretna Green and become legally united by a blacksmith; but in this country no such impediments existed, and therefore extend to every christian denomination in the country.

Mr. Hagerman expressed in regret that the object of the present bill should be so entirely misunderstood or grossly misrepresented he did not understand why "Religious Toleration" should be at all connected with the subject matter of consideration. The question which the Bill presented to the House was, whether the punishment now inflicted on persons solemnizing marriage contrary to Law should be mantained less severe [—] It was generally admitted in the Country that the existing Law was too highly penal, and the hon. and learned Atty. Gen. had given such information to the House as must satisfy them of the fact, if any doubts had previously existed; not one certainly could be more necessary than that the offence of marriage should be placed on such grounds as to remove it from visitation; upon the legality of its celebration depended the fortunes and peace of families. As the Law now stood, offenders frequently escaped with impunity; to remedy this injury to Society was the only object of the Bill. As to the Bill which the hon. member (Mr. Nichol) declared it to be his intention to introduce, Mr. H. was unwilling to give any assurance on the subject of it, but he would pledge himself to that hon. gentleman that he would find his (Mr. H's) sentiments on the subject of "Religious Toleration" as liberal as that of any man, but he would at the same time take occasion to remark that we were not to infer that there was an "Established Church" in the Country notwithstanding what had fallen from the hon. member who seemed to question the fact.

Mr. Baldwin in reply to what had fallen from the honourable from Norfolk, must say that he would be very sorry to see a provision to celebrate matrimony extended to all classes of religious sectaries. The Bill proposed by the Attorney General, as recommended by him, he highly approved; to nothing could be more important to the peace and well being of society, than preserving this safeguard untouched. The established church of England, the Presbyterian, and the Roman Catholic religion, have all established modes and ceremonies for the celebration of marriage. Remove this protection, and the peace of society is broken up—families become all of variance, property becomes uncertain, one of the chief pillars of public morals is broken down, and the whole country becomes bastardized. What condition would society result in if the followers of Jemima, the children of peace, and several other pretenders to religious distinctions, were permitted to celebrate marriage according to their strange notions of the rite? He must doubt the wisdom of such intitude.

Mr. John Wilson said it was impossible to know any thing about a Bill until it was read, but from what he had heard of its re-petting; it motives, he would vote against the Bill.

Mr. Charles Jones thought the proposed Statute in this part of the Province was too severe; and the Judges Circuits one of the worst, for instance—to commit the delinquents were off as opinions sometimes, he insisted, should lies of Wood, Buck's Theological Dictionary, and Scripture, &c. he done to remedy it. He set had their religious infection and the opinion of the hon. gentleman that the Bill should be extended, he felt no opposition on this head ceremony.—Methodists, he said, were a most respectable class of the Bill that was about to be introduced, he thought there of people, and fully entitled to the privileges of solemnizing would on court it.

Mr. James Wilson said he was aware from what had happened lately in this Province that something was aimed at and were also entitled to the same privileges. Quakers and Tunkers by some person: he heard that men who had preached the Gospel there people would not be deterred by any law passed in this part were actually trampled out of the Province; if the Bill House; however, Methodists might object to the Bill, but those went to lighten the present penalty, he would vote in its favour two sects Menonists and Tunkers would never object to it, but he was apprehensive it might be intended for some particular sect or sects, he should however be happy to find by the bill, were wholly unobjectionable, and fully entitled to the privileges of solemnizing marriage—and also Menonists or Tunkers, he was of opinion that the feelings of such characters as he had, was contrary to the Constitution of the Province. We were religious he hurt by what had fallen from some honorable members, and hoped this bill did not wish.

The Bill was then read a first time. Upon motion for its second reading,

Mr John Wilson said, as this Bill begun to unfold itself to view it appeared to be at variance with all Law. Marriage was a sacred ceremony, and he believed he had the opinion of the first ecclesiastical authorities in England to this effect which was the marriage tie of either they were pre-sent to their presence, the Bishops, or other important treaties—they required it to be done by the Lords Governor. He concluded by as a most solemn and sacred ordinance of religion: and why stating that he thought the Bill before the House was objectionshould we tolerate other figures sects in this Province, and not see after that Religious liberty provided by our Constitution, and those from the full privilege of this great rite which was granted them in a most solemn manner, by an authority of the Magistrates once by the royalty of solemnizing marriage, by an authority of the Magistrates, ministers or teachers of all established Quarter sessions in the different districts, and denominations, and the respect given in all of most dangerthat if marriages should be registered in the Office of the ous tendency to the administration of justice generally. It merely provided generally that all who solemnize Mr. Nichol rose to explain—He opposed the Bill on Public said marriage without legal authority, or who having authority grounds only—and from any persons desire to the hon. The Atty. Gen. moved for the first reading of the Tavern License Bill.—Ordered

The bill is framed to prevent persons having only Tavern Licenses from retailing spirits, Wine, &c. to be taken out of the house; and if they offend, to subject them to the same penalty as though they had not Tavern License.

Mr. John Wilson, said that in many cases evil might arise from the passing of this Bill; that in remote parts of the country, where Merchants or Store-keepers were not numerous, in the event of sickness, &c. it would be necessary to apply to a Tavern to procure those liquors.

Ordered, That the Tavern License Bill be read a 2d time on Friday next.

Committee of the whole on the Illegal Marriage Bill.

The Atty Gen said the provisions of this Bill were of that nature that he hoped the House would have no hesitation in adopting them On a former occasion when introducing the Bill, he had explained particularly the evils it was intended to remedy. It imposed no restrictions that did not exist before, and interfered with no one religious sect more than another. There could be no difference of opinion as to the evils arising from illegal marriages solemnized or pretended to be solemnized by persons having no authority to perform that ceremony, and it was equally necessary that those who were legally competent to so solemnize marriage should observe the forms prescribed by Law, that the parents or friends of the parties concerned might have an opportunity of preventing improper marriages, and that means might be taken to forbid them where legal impediments existed. That however willing he might be to extend the power of solemnizing marriage to other respectable religious sects who were known and acknowledged he would never consent to extend it, as some seemed to wish, to every travelling preacher and to the ministers and teachers of every sect of Christians. Whatever might be the decision of the House, however, on the Bill now before the House for that purpose, it could not affect the present Bill. For it would still be necessary to punish those who had no authority to solemnize Marriage but did presume to do it, and also those who having authority, disregarded the prescribed forms. The object of this Bill was general; to restrain improper and illegal marriages in this Province; and every well wisher of social order must feel anxious that this object should be attained. Under the existing Law, the crime of performing this ceremony illegally, he did say, was he thought too severe; and it was evident it was generally thought so, for sometimes the Juries would not convict, and where there had been convictions the lenity of the Executive Government had produced them and this offence might be said to have heretofore escaped punishment altogether. To remedy this, the present Bill was intended to; but the penalty of £100 inflicted that intention was changed, and it now only goes to make the offender guilty of a misdemeanor, not cognizable by the Courts of Quarter Sessions, but by the Superior Courts

Mr. John Wilson in a very long speech stated his objections to the Bill.—He did not think that any Law existed in this Province by which Ministers of any description were punishable for solemnizing Marriage—He said, the experience of all ages proved, that there was no trial in the human character so prevalent, as a disposition, on the part of those in power, to compel others to receive and adopt their religious opinions and principles—and it was known that they succeeded at various times and in different countries according to their power of compulsion—for his own part, he would grant the full enjoyment of all rights, and religious liberty to all classes and denominations of Christians, and would not interfere with the Laws of England against Popish practices, as regarded the Roman Catholics, he did not object to the Church of England, and contended that Marriages was a solemn religious rite and was entered by Romans and Greeks, and was a most solemn ceremony.—Methodists, he said, were a most respectable class of people, and fully entitled to the privileges of solemnizing Marriages—and also Menonists or Tunkers, he was of opinion that the feelings of such characters as he had, was contrary to the Constitution of the Province. under certain restrictions, and would vote for this Bill if they were introduced therein. He knew them to be a deserving Clergy men, as would not grant it except to such of them as were recommended for the encouragement of the Church of England in some other part of the British Dominions. Methodists might be admitted—they did not differ materially (as believed) from the established Church in their belief or doctrines; but though they who showed an entire zeal generally than other sects, and would grant them a Bill, if they were as responsible to the Colonists of the Province as the Clergy of the Church of England performed their stations, and might solemnize marriage in one place and none from another, or not let go to the States and reside there. He could not in conscience vote for the marriage of all sects, merely of such as might entertain the most absurd and ridiculous principles, and by affording such privileges only, to prejudice more on our acknowledgement, we should be leading the way to very bad consequences.

The Speaker now said he would support this Bill in every stage. If the sects were specifically set down; but without that, he could not give his consent to it.

The question was then put and carried in the Committee, which now rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again to-morrow.

Mr. Burwell moved for leave to bring up the Petition of G. Wilson.—Ordered.

Mr. Rogers moved that the Petition of the Sergeant at Arms be referred to a Committee.

The Atty Gen. moved as an amendment to the above motion, that the words "and 5 members to be chosen by ballot" be added.

Mr. Rogers then put the above question with the amendment, and the latter was put to the vote and for persons and agreed.—Ordered.

The House rose and adjourned to 11 o'clock P. M.

February 15

The Committee appointed to draft an Address to His Excellency the Lieut. Gover. or, in answer to His Excellency's Speech on the subject of unappropriated Townships, reported an Address accordingly.

The Committee appointed for that purpose reported on the Petition of Edmund M'Ilwain and John Bisset and.

The Committee appointed to draft an Address to His Excellency the Lieut. Gover. or, in answer to his Speech relative to the Railway, be Governor in Chief, on the subject of opening the road in a line with Dundas street, at the boundary line between the Province and the United States, reported an Address accordingly.

The question being put to the House for the 3d reading of the Illegal Marriage Bill,

Mr. John Wilson rose and said that he viewed this Bill as affording benefit to the Province, and as such he should vote for it. But according to our Constitution, no religious restrictions could be put on any of His Majesty's subjects in this Province, and that he would never consent to any clause contained in that Bill, that there should be no penalty, viz. on account of religious principles or practices. By this Bill there were a penalty to be inflicted on those who should solemnize marriage, as would be subject to the Constitution. By this Bill a Roman Catholic Priest was allowed to solemnize Christians, and established from another source or motive; he was surprised that his own Catholics were allowed the privilege of performing the ceremony of marriage, and not others equally united in Law and equity, were deprived of it. He thought it a little extraordinary that this Bill of Exemption should take place. He should oppose it in the present stage of the proceedings.

Mr. Nichol said that this Bill should not have gone to the House, and proposed to be read a third time that day, for the encouragement, his unqualified approbation, and opposition. He considered that it is Bill was brought in to no good end. What was before the Legislature of any, the last Session of the 2d was in force in this Province. He said that it was stated that the Law was in force here, and argued, that if this were the case, it made it unnecessary to bring in such a Bill. Such a bill, as occurring, persons offending, not to be twice punished for the same crime, and subject to the penalties inflicted by the Bill from 24, and by this Bill 40 pds. He was not disposed to extend the privilege, either to the magistrates, as he was not necessary to observe, that in many parts of this Province they were not such to be trusted to. He stated that this Bill was of great interest to the people of this Province, and said it should not be hurried through the House; he wished to incorporate Master Bill with it was he could counteract its bad effects and then he would have no objection to it. He thought that the purpose he moved that the Illegal Marriage Bill be re-committed till to-morrow.

The Atty Gen. said, he would have no objection that the Bill be re-committed, only that he knew members were now prepared with every necessary information on it, and did not see why any necessary information should be necessary to the Bill but not go, he said, to prevent persons from solemnizing marriage who had not a right to do so by Law; it only provided a penalty in case they had not a right to do so, and the penalty inflicted was somewhat by ignorance and mere mild than what the present Law inflicted. If Methodists had now a right to marry, this Bill would not prevent them. He felt no personal interest in the Bill, but wished it should be passed with the same consideration as other Bills, and he must say, he thought the opposition to its introduction and this attempt to delay it, did not show a disposition to act fairly. He thought he was doing a good general service when he drew it, and was still convinced that was the case; he would oppose, therefore, the recommitment of it, and he should propound at it in a different manner from that in which other Bills were treated, he would have nothing more to do with it.

Mr. Rogers opposed the Bill in the present shape.

Mr. Baldwin said that Bill should not pass, as persons offending against it, would be subject to two punishments, viz. that provided by this Bill, and 56 Geo. 2d, as was very properly observed by the hon. member, (Mr. Nichol.) He would prefer letting this Law stand as it now is with the doubt you call it, and did not think, could on the necessity of this address, that even the penalties and fines of the 2d Geo. 2d, was at all too great; and, it must be allowed that banishment from this Province, had not half the terrors of transportation from En land.

Mr. J Jones thought that the Bill was not unfairly and unkindly treated in all its stages—as to objecting to this Bill because it did not repeal the 26th Geo. 2d. He was astonished the learned gentleman who just sat down, (Mr. Baldwin) did not know better; he should have been aware that we could not repeal a British Statute. If the clause that the punishment to be inflicted by this Bill was severer, they should oppose it—if not, they should support the Bill. It was stated by the hon member, (Mr. Baldwin) that it was better to let the matter lie in doubt; things lying in doubt, might serve this hon. member and others, who were Lawyers; but where doubts existed, they should be explained; and when such hon members on this side and they were to look to the independent Juries of the Country, it was full time that something should be done.

Mr. John Wilson and Mr. Petersen expressed.

Mr Attn Mr Lean thought the question was sufficiently discussed, and would vote against the Bill being re-committed.

Mr. Crooks wished the Bill to be re-committed, and that some amendment should be made, as to the distance necessary for a magistrate to have power of marrying, from the residence of a minister of the Established Church. He thought the distance of 18 miles too far, and was of opinion that it should be lessened to 8 miles.

The House then divided on Mr. Nichol's motion of re-commitment which was carried, when there appeared in favour of the motion 12, against it 11—majority 1.

On motion of Mr. Baldwin, the House resolved itself into a Committee of the whole, to take into consideration the Road Bill.

Mr. Baldwin moved that it be re-ad, that it is inexpedient to make any grant of money in the present stage of the Road Act this Session, and that it be printed for the information of the members during the Recess.

Mr. Rogers moved as an amendment, that the words concerning the printing of the Bill be expunged.—Negatived.

Mr. Baldwin's original motion, for printing it, &c. was put and carried.

Committee of the whole, on the Marriage Act Amendment Bill

Mr. Crooks moved his amendment to the Bill, that instead of 18 miles from the resident Clergymen of the Established Church, a magistrate should be allowed to marry within six miles of such Clergymen.

Mr. Nichol thought it best to let it as an amendment be over for further consideration till to-morrow.

Committee reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again to-morrow.

The Salem Preservation Bill was read a 2d time. House went into Committee thereon.

Mr. Rutton said the principal object of this Bill was to encourage the growth of Pitsaws, but it might have other good effects: it might prevent an abuse occurring in Mills, Burns, &c. from the Logs being on the ice at night, the notch mark and of rivers and streams, the present practice of drawing with cattle.

On the 2d reading read, Mr. Rabbit said he was opposed to the clause subjecting the offender to summary jurisdiction which was the case of 11 dollars every eighteen hund winters and 5 dollars for every log above that number, before the Quarter Sessions. In the former case, they were brought before single magistrate or two, on perhaps well-qualified to judge of the value, before a Bench of Magistrates fully competent.

Mr. Hagerman thought it would be proper that proceedings should be had against the owners of the mills and not the millers, as it prevented the Salmon from passing up the interior, and materially injured the poor inhabitants residing there.

Mr. Rutton said he would be affected by this Bill, but was unconscious to make a Law which would not affect some persons. He thought that Physicians who had been employed in the Army or Navy, and who passed such examination as the Governor or Executive Council might direct, should not be put on a footing of any time with common students.

Mr. Baldwin thought it would be too severe, that a person assisting his neighbour in distress with a little medicine, should be subject to a penalty of £100—He thought the Bill must be a part of the Medical Act, and also to clauses for loans, &c. and that it appeared that only one recommendation had been received by His Excellency the Lieut.-Governor, and from that, forwarding a Medical Board for public benefit to be proposed and read certain Resolutions to be entered into by the House, and concluded by stating his wish to see rid of the press of Argent first, and also to see the Bill read a 3d time. He thought it right, might be considered by an address from both Houses to His Excellency, as by repealing the Act by which he was appointed.

Mr. Nichol was of opinion that it would not add much to the dignity of the Province, after appointing this Agent, (who he understood was a gentleman of high respectability,) to be underhood was a gentleman of high respectability,) to be underhood was a gentleman of high respectability,) to be underh

The Members convened, were

The Honorable the Chief Justice, Speaker;

The Honorable Messrs. De St. Ours, Hale, Dunkerley, Caldwell, De Gaspe, Cuthbert, Burns, Scott, Coffin, Taschereau, McKenzie, Ferguson, De Lery.

tion—The Counsel for Petitioners produced at the Bar, Charles Fothergill, Esq. as a witness.—After considerable debate on the propriety of admitting Mr. Fothergill's evidence in consequence of his being one of the petitioners, &c., he was objected to by a vote of the House, and Mr. James Baldwin was called to the Bar and Sworn.—The examination of this witness continued till half past 7 o'clock p. m. when the House adjourned till 10 o'clock to-morrow.

February 14th.

The Petition of the inhabitants of the Township of Hallowell, and others, was read.—It prayed for the establishment of a Loan Office in this Province.—After this Petition was read,

Mr. James Wilson rose and observed, that the nature and object of this petition was, to relieve the inhabitants of this Province from the present embarrassment occasioned by the scarcity of the circulating medium.—He hoped it would, like many other gen. projects, meet with opposition; but if it should not succeed, he hoped that something would arise from it, that would be of use to the country.—For his own part, he thought the present petition would be greatly benefitted by it.—But the leading interest would be greatly benefitted by it.—He requested that the hon. and learned gentlemen composing the House of Assembly, would give this matter their serious consideration.—In neighbouring countries, there was much more support given to enterprize than in Upper Canada; and the reason he would ask was there that something should not be done to promote the welfare of this Province?—He was certain the Merchants, &c. of Lower Canada would give every encouragement to such a measure as this—at present the people of the South had many advantages over the inhabitants of this Province—they filled every market, bye and easy—at this object of this petition was complied with, it would contribute in a great measure, to the advancement of all put business in a much better state in this Province, than it has heretofore been in. It might be said, that this measure was a "Yankee trick," but he denied that, and hoped that no person would entertain any such opinion—from his own experience in business, he knew its necessity, and hoped it would be established: and, from the number of enlightened Members that were in the House, the country entertained the highest expectations.

Mr. James Wilson then moved, that the Atty. Gen'l. Messrs. McLean of Frontenac, Peter Robinson, Rattz, Crooks and Burnett, be a Committee to take into consideration the petition of the inhabitants of the Township of Hallowell and others, praying for the establishment of a Loan-Office in this Province.

Mr. Baldwin thought that this was a matter of high importance to the interests of the Province, and hoped it would get due consideration—he was of opinion, that no proper steps could be taken without the interference of the Legislature, and wished that Gentlemen who were better acquainted with Banking systems than he was, would deliver their opinions; he feared that the Committee composed was rather confined, and was desirous that other Gentlemen be included in it, who were extensively engaged in Mercantile pursuits.

Mr. Allan McLean considered it would be better to refer the subject of this petition to the Committee on Internal Resources.

Mr. Burwell was of the same opinion, and made a motion for that purpose.

Mr. C. Jones opposed Mr. Burwell's motion, and observed, that the Committee on Internal Resources had more than enough to do, without being burthened with the present petition—he was of opinion, that the proper steps could not be obtained

LONDON, Nov. 21.

STATISTICS.

In Great Britain the number of men capable of bearing arms, en masse, from fifteen to sixty years of age, is 2,744,945, or about four in every seventeen males.

The total number of inhabited houses in England, in 1801, was 1,474,740. In 1790, there were 1,319,215. In 1750, the surveyors of the house and window duties returned 805,421; and in 1781, 1,260,816.

In 1801, the proportion of persons to a house in England were five and two-thirds; in Wales, five; in England and Wales, five and three-fifths; in Scotland, five and two-fifths; and in Great Britain, five and five sixths.

Total of the male population of Great Britain, in 1801, was 5,450,899, and of females, 5,492,304, which is in the proportion of 100 females to 99 males.

There are in Great Britain six millions of males, and in Ireland, three millions; of whom the year 1812, 800,000 were in arms, that is in the proportion of one to eleven.

In Great Britain there die every year about 332,700; every month, about 28,892, every week 6,398; every day, 914; and every hour, about 40.

The proportion of deaths of women to that of men is 63 to fifty-four.

There are about 90,000 marriages yearly, and of sixty-three marriages, three only are observed to be without offspring.

In country places there are, on an average, four children born of each marriage. In cities and large towns the proportion is seven to every two marriages.

The married women are, to all the female inhabitants of a country, as one to three, and the married men to all the males, as three to five.

The number of widows is to that of widowers as three to one but that of the widows who remarry to that of widowers as four to five.

The number of old persons who die during the cold weather, is, to those who die during the warm season, as seven to four.

Half of all that are born die before they attain seventeen years.

The number of twins is to that of single births, as one to sixty-five.

The proportion of males born, to that of females, is as seven to six to twenty-five.

In the ten parts of Great Britain there are 152 females to 100 males; and in manufacturing towns 113 females to 100 males.

Taking the whole population of Great Britain, according to the last enumeration, 1,089,104, the proportion of males to females is as 100 to 126.

The small pox, in the natural way, usually carries off eight out of every hundred. By inoculation, one dies out of three hundred; but according to Dr. Wilson, one in two hundred and fifty dies of inoculated small-pox.

During the first thirty years of the eighteenth century, the number of deaths in London, from small pox, was 74 out of every 1000.

In the last thirty years of the same century, the deaths from the same cause were about one tenth of the whole mortality, or 93 out of every 1000. Inoculation for the small pox has, therefore actually multiplied the disease which it was intended to ameliorate, in the proportion of 93 to four.

It is estimated that of the number of persons who are blind, one in four lose their sight by the small pox.

Out of more than 40,000 cases where sight has fallen under the observation of an eminent physician, he never met with one to which a person with red or light brown hair had the small pox to condemn.

The Clergy of the Church of England, including their families, form about one eighteth part of the population of England.

In the county of Somerset, the number of males to that of females, is in the proportion of 100 to 101; and in the four western counties of England, Cornwall, Devon, Somerset, and Dorset, the number of males to that of females is as 88 to 100.

It appears from tables, from 1772 to 1787, that seventy out in eight of the cases of insanity, are imputed to religious fanaticism.

According to Dr. Simmons, 6000 insane patients have been admitted into St. Luke's Hospital in the course of the last thirty years, half of whom have recovered. Out of 6000 patients, 78 were aged 70 years and upwards, only one in five of whom were cured.

According to the population returns of 1811, taking the integral number of twenty, there were in England, seven employed in agriculture, nine in trade, manufactures, or handicraft, and four who lived either on rentals of lands or houses, or on the interest arising from accumulation of money In Wales the farmers are to the manufacturers as two to one, or three to three; the above mentioned classes in the proportion of eight, four, and two.

A nation, without being exhausted, can annually afford to employ the one hundredth part of its population in the profession of arms. The quota which England could afford, according to this proportion, in addition to its military and naval establishment previous to the peace of 1814, without exhaustion, would be 170,000, of which 70,000 would suffice for the navy, and 100,000 for the army.

Londongrave Eel.—A few days ago, an eel of the common species, but of extraordinary dimensions, got entangled in the herring cruives in the Frith of Forth, near Higgin's Neuk On being approached by the fishermen, it flopped its tail most violently, and had it struck either of them, there is no doubt it would have forfeited his life for his temerity. Aware of their danger, they cautiously approached it, and after many efforts succeeded in fixing it with a hook, in which way it was hauled out and dragged it on shore, where they triumphed over their victim. When measured it was found to be 13 feet in length, and two feet in girth at the middle. The skin, which is studded, and which, we understand is in the possession of Mr. Higgins, the proprietor of the cruvies, must excite the attention of the naturalist. Part of the fish being dressed, was found to be most delicate eating.—Stirling Journal.

The Female Benevolent Society of Dumfries put up a public notice that they had determined not to illuminate in honor of a woman who is a disgrace to her sex; and that if any of their widows were broken they would repair them out of the society's funds, and the next day dismiss their Charity School, in which 150 poor children had been taught to read, and stop their yearly gift of 40 pounds per annum to poor families in distress.——A copper plate printer and his wife have been seized in Birmingham charged with forging Bank of England notes. 10,000 pounds of which were found on their premises with the plates. They fabricated as high as 20 pound notes —Mr Jeffrey, the advocate, has been elected Rector of the University of Glasgow.

The Northern Expedition.—It is a certain as important to notice, that there can be no doubt of the vessels having crossed the Magnetic Meridian and entered the Polar Sea.

Our readers may remember Captain Scoresby's conjecture with regard to the mean temperature during twelve months at the North Pole, being from 10 to 12 degrees below zero. His hypothesis was found to be erroneous; for our navigators ascertained, that even in the latitude where they wintered, the mean annual temperature was two degrees below zero! On sir John Ross's return home, they underwent great hardships; of which it was no small aggravation, that for the last nine months they were upon short allowance of bread, and during the summer months, of other necessaries, thus adding the cravings of hunger to the pinches of frost.

It affords a striking instance of the right feeling and characteristic perseverance of British seamen, to tell that the men who could not be buoyed up by the same shoal of fame which seduced their officers to suffering and hardship; bore every deprivation not merely with patience and equanimity, but with good humour. Frog-mutiny when they had reached, from a day of fatiguing and unproductive search for game, they wrapped themselves in their blankets, to try by sleep to forget their exhausted appetites which they durst not satisfy; or when they should, by encroaching on their next day's scanty allowance, or on their own real stock, be in the end confined to those dreary regions starving and without subsistence. Notwithstanding this, never a murmur escaped on these; but for patience, fortitude and firmness, they displayed a picture unsurpassed even by the noblest examples of Sarah Seamen.

The following anecdote is worth preserving:—"Long plays was one of the amusements devised to while away the long night of the Polar Circle. A drama was written by Mr. Parry solely to please the men, and called" The North West Passage. The scenery was painted by Mr. Beechy, and the officers were the performers The delight of the crew was cogreat, that they not only clapped, but loudly cheered the actors on every favourable improvement. One of the latter was so amused with this that on making an exit he was induced to go into the house to see how the thing looked. He happened to place himself immediately behind the bulwarks and another man, who exclaimed with rapture "Oh, it's beautiful! it's beautiful!" "Beautiful, dapes call it," returned the boatswain, "Beautiful !" I say by G—— it's philosophy!"

A translation of A system of education for the Infant King of Rome, has just appeared in England, published along with the original French. It is stated to have been drawn up by the Imperial Council of State, with the approbation, and under the personal superintendance, of the Emperor Napoleon; and that the plan has been extended to the education of the other French Princes of the Blood. This is very singular, and, in some respects, a very able work. It is quite characteristic of the French Senate and style of writing. The master like that of Napole — — There are some great truths, and fine moral and philosophical principles, strangely mingled with a theatrical air. The spirit of liberty, however, is interwoven in every page, and the true and doctrine of liberality and feeling—while the name of the Emperor is every where used like that of the Deity, as the only source of happiness possible to the whole. The most treacherous, with hypocrisy and terror, as the means, are cooverily recommended to the sovereign and the people as is justly observed, it did not escape the penetrating eye of Napoleon, that his political scheme, like that of Mahomet, could only life makes a deep impression upon the mind; and, for this purpose, he established a military education upon a national basis, of which he himself was the only director. He consulted the members of the University, and they appointed the professors in all the public schools. The present system is merely an epitome of the general and of his political government.

It is added that Bergerac has purchased the Villa, formerly the residence of his royal master.

Bermuda papers contain accounts from Jamaica to the 20th of December. On the 13th, the Governor, (Duke of Manchester) while returning from his morning ride, the swinging tree of his carriole gave way, and the horses took fright, and set off at full speed. In endeavouring to stop them, the carriole struck against the step of a door, and the Governor was thrown with such violence as to fracture his scull. On examination, a piece as to the scull, the size of a half dollar, was found near the spot where the accident happened. Ten other pieces were extracted from the wound. His Grace was enabled after the operation, to dress-ribe how the accident happened, and at the latest dates, hopes were entertained of his recovery. The parliament was adjourned immediately.

Discovery Ship.—The lords of the admiralty have printed, lithographically, a chart of the Hecla and Griper, on the north west expedition. Some copies of the chart have been distributed among their friends and men of science, which convey some information of the position of Lancaster's Sound. Measured by the eye, without reference to a scale, it appears to be about 150 miles long, and from twenty to thirty-five miles broad. On leaving the sound the ships proceeded a few miles to the south-east, and then returning to the point from which they had diverged, proceeded in a direct line to the west. Notwithstanding the attempts to decry the value of the discoveries that are accomplished, much commercial benefit has already resulted from the navigation of those trackless seas. the confidence acquired by the experience of captain Ross has this year induced the whalers, who had been intimidated at the horrors of the higher regions, to venture as was suggested, to the mouth of Lancaster sound; and the consequence has been, that they have returned with fuller cargoes than were ever known.

A letter from Baron D'Endelinn has been received by the Queen's Consort, stating fully his reasons for refusing to go to England. He regrets the state of his health being very bad—being such as to require "his most anxious cares;" he then declares he has discovered in a speech of Mr. Brougham's, something so very injurious to the memory of the late Grand Duke, his master, that "he would lose all esteem for himself, if he could lend himself to a cause in which they had dared to blacken so unjustly his late Highness's most sacred memory." He concludes with saying, that, at any rate, the testimony he could give would not be of that use to her Majesty which it is supposed.

The ship Ceres, from Savannah, while at the quarantine dock at midnight, on Thursday, parted all her lines and drifted on shore abreast of the Bar, and there quarantined, but by yesterday noon in a very bad situation. Captain M'Leren writes to his consignees:—"I cannot get a boat to or from the shore, with provisions, or any thing I want, although I have lost an anchor—all my crew are frozen and sent to the hospital. I have not once employed, but if an opportunity offers to lighten the ship, shall employ some. The ice has parted all my lines, three or four times, and every time fastened her on board. If I do not lighten the ship before the ice starts again, she may be greatly injured.—It is a dreadful scene of destruction among the shipping here all owing to the frost.

The ice in the North River has increased in thickness, but was not strong enough near the Jersey shore for teams to cross. A great quantity of wood is deposited at Jersey, ready to be brought across by the first passage. No small craft or sloops were crossing yesterday, that three or four temporary taverns were erected upon the ice for their accommodation. A correspondent of the Albany Argus passed upon the ice yesterday, who crossed in the same manner in 1780, and has never till now, had an opportunity to do it again since that period. Considerable apprehensions are entertained for the safety of the sloop Diligence—in the course of the debate, a large number of the Members expressed their wish to go into the general merits of the Election together with the Return;

Mr. Baldwin moved, that it be resolved, that the House do take into consideration the merits of the Election, as well as the Return.

After some further debate on this question, the House divided and here appeared in favour of Mr. Baldwin's motion 30, against it 8, majority 19.

Mr. Gordon moved that the House do defer the consideration of the Durham contested Election till to-morrow at 10 o'clock.—Ordered

The House went into Committee on the Forfeiture amendment Bill.

Mr. J. Jones moved for the adoption of the first clause, &c. which was adopted.

The Att'y Gen'l. said, that by the last Act, there were 5 or 6 Commissioners appointed—that it was supposed necessary by some of the dif ent Commissioners should sum the Deeds of sale, &c. and that any of the Commissioners being absent, might cause some difficulty; to remedy which, he would propose a clause, that all Deeds of Bargains and Sale, &c. signed by the majority of the Commissioners, should be as valid, as if signed by the whole. The clause was adopted.

The Att'y Gen'l. then moved another clause, that after the expiration of four months, the Commissioners of Forfeited Estates should meet four times a year; on the first Tuesdays of January, April, July and November, and at no other time, unless for determining some matters specially referred to them.

This clause was also adopted, and the Committee rose and reported the Bill as amended

Mr. J. Jones moved, that the Forfeiture amendment Bill be engrossed and read a 2d time to-morrow.—Ordered.

At 7 o'clock, the House adjourned till 10 to morrow.

Friday 29th.

The Roman Catholic Trustee Bill was read a 2d time and passed.

The Speaker read the Report of the Clerk of the House of Assembly, relating to the Provincial Agent, which stated that they were now two communications from that Agent, entered on the Journals of the House.

On the Att'y General's motion for the Bill to legalize the leasing of small Notes in this Province, being announced as next on the order of the day, Mr. Gordon observed, that as these were two Statutes of Geo 3d relative to Notes, &c. (which he quoted) that by the introduction of the Criminal Law of England, those Statutes were in force in this Province; some of the Notes forbidden by those Statutes were in circulation in part of this Province; but, people not being, perhaps, aware of their illegality, no complaint has been made against them. However, some persons have been lately sent for the stealing & forgery of three Notes; but as they were not in trial, there was a hesitation on the part of Magistrates to give judgement, and their conduct was applauded; many Notes were first circulated by Commercial and Manufacturing Towns in England, where workmen &c. were usually paid with them—however as many persons might thus be ruined, he thought it right to call the attention of the public, as a Law was passed against them.—But he saw no reason why small Notes might not be lawfully issued in this Province; yet if they were issued in the present state of the paper currency, and the want of specie for purchasing, &c. felt, therefore the Provisions of the Bill he was about to introduce were useful, and applicable to the state of the country.

The Att'y Gen'l. moved for leave to bring in a Bill to legalize small Notes and Bills in this Province.—Ordered, and the Bill read a first time.

Mr. M. Donnell moved for leave to bring in a Bill to make good certain monies advanced by His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, in pursuance of an Address from the House of Assembly, to the Earl of Bathurst.—Ordered.

On the Illegal Marriage Bill being announced from the Chair,

Mr. Nichol moved, that the order of the day, for the Committee of the whole on the Illegal Marriage Bill, be postponed to Saturday next.—Ordered.

On the Bill to repeal the Act increasing the salary of the Speaker of the House of Assembly, being read a 2d time.

Mr. J. Jones moved, that the House do go into Committee on the above Bill.

Mr. Gordon thought the House had not prepared to go into Committee on this Bill, & hoped it would not be pressed at present; it was necessary to know the state of the funds, House of Quebec, and this authorized to shew how the Kings Courts will extend the operation of provincial Statutes and how such as are made for the public good.

The Forfeiture Amendment Bill was read a 3d time and passed.

The Petition of the Land-holders of the Township of Markham was read.

Mr. Hagerman moved for leave to bring up a Bill to require all persons a Rising Sun, and other Liquors not Spirituous, to take out Li ences for selling.—Ordered.

At quarter past 7 o'clock, the House adjourned till 10 to-morrow.

March 1st.

Mr. Speaker of Lords, moved for leave to bring up the Petition of the inhabitants of Prescot.—Ordered.

The Bill to relieve wrecks propelled by steam from Lighthouse and Tonnage Duty was read a 2d time, when the House went into Committee on it.

Mr. Hagerman stated the object of the Bill, and observed, that it was unnecessary for him to take up the time of the House by any comments on it; the Bill, he hoped, would meet the consideration and generosity of the House—nothing could be more proper than to encourage such persons as the Proprietors of the Steam Boat Frontenac, who had expended so much capital for the public good and convenience, and who had found by experience that the tax paid at this port excluded all profit arising from the capital expended. This was the only Light House, and in consequence of the tax, many of the ships were obliged to alter this usual course, which was from Kingston to this Port, from this to Niagara, touching at this Port on their way up to Kingston from Niagara, and thus a considerable saving here for the purpose of collecting their freight, for one at the other ports, where no Light House duty was to be paid.—The charge for the use of the Frontenac, by the Proprietors of Steam Boat, he argued, also, was not proper to great inconvenience and expence procuring their passage, &c. otherwise; he had no personal interest in this Bill, but supported it on the general principles of justice, and thought that the House should not discourage such persons as those who employed so much capital and enterprize for the good of the country.

Mr. James Wilson, believed it was not in the breast of any hon. Member to oppose this Bill; the Proprietors of this Steam Boat had employed a great capital in building her, and in keeping boats, &c. our country, at its early stage, could not well support the charges they thus incurred; this would be one of the first attempt at building Steam Vessels, in this part, it should meet with every possible aid.

Mr. J. Jones supported the Bill; he thought that encouragement should be held out to every description of enterprize; he said they had it not in their power at present to afford any pecuniary assistance to the Province, but they could make a law.—It was certain the owners of the Frontenac were losing money, and thought that any thing that was possible should be done to encourage them.

Mr. Van Koughnett was in hopes, that when the hon. moves brought in this Bill, he would have shown to this House, that the Light-House would not be a tax upon the Province; it was for the consideration of the House, whether they would exempt the Steam-Boat, and oblige masters of schooners on the lake to pay the whole Light-House duty In consequence of the Steam Boat navigating the lake, the trade of schooners was monopolized by her from those schooners, and if the masters of such small vessels were obliged to pay the whole of the Light-House and Tonnage Duty, it would, in many cases, be more than their entire freight; this would be a great hardship on them, and would be taking from one person, to give to another.

Mr. J. Jones thought that the arguments used by this Hon. Gentleman could have no weight with the Committee. Steam Vessels were navigated with much more expence than small schooners—and were more for the public good, therefore, should not be put on a footing with them. If the Light-House Duty was three times as much as it is, he would rather it should come out of the public funds, and that the Steam-Boat would be exempted from it; as it: Steam Boat was so useful to the country at present.

Mr. Rattan rose to support the Bill, he admitted, that small vessels were discouraged by the Steam-Boat; but, when this mode of conveyance was found much better, it should be encouraged—He did not think it necessary to show, that the

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

February 28th.

The Tavern License Bill was read a 3d time and passed.

The Forfeited Amendment Bill was read a 2d time, and the House went into Committee on it.

Mr. J. Jones explained the object of this Bill in a few words—which was, to secure bona fide purchasers, &c. of the Estates of Traitors whose claims were previous to the 1st July, 1818 and moved for the adoption of the Preamble.

Mr. Nichol observed, that the circumstance of his absence on account of sickness, prevented him from paying the attention which he wished to this Bill; he was aware that persons were affected by the present Statute, who had just and bona fide claims on the Estates of Traitors—he wished the House to pause a little on this Bill, before they interfered with private property; there had been too little regard paid to this point for some time past, and he wished the House to reflect seriously on it. In other countries private property was thought sacred—but here, in the Province, he was sorry to say, it was looked on with very little respect—he therefore hoped the Committee to rise and report progress, &c.

The Committee rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again to-morrow.

The House was called over and proceeded to the contested Election for the County of Durham. The examination of Mr. Bull was resumed, and lasted till a quarter before 3 o'clock, when the House adjourned till 4.

The House was called over on the Durham contested Election, and proceeded with the examination of Mr. James Boulton. A late hour in the evening, Mr. Ward, the Returning Officer, was called to the Bar, and there questioned on oath by the Counsel for the petitioners; after which, about half past 6 o'clock, the Counsel for the petitioners closed his case.

Mr. G. Ridout, the Counsel for the sitting Member, was then called on to proceed with his defence, which he opened with a speech of considerable length, after which, he headed in the Deeds, and witnesses for the defence, one of whom was called to the Bar and sworn.

At half past 8 o'clock p. m. the House adjourned till 10 o'clock to-morrow.

February 27th.

Mr. Hagerman moved for leave to bring in a Bill to relieve the owners of vessels propelled by steam from the payment of Light House and Tonnage Duty.—Ordered

The Roman Catholic Trustee Bill was read a 2d time.

The House was called over on the Durham contested Election, and such witnesses produced on the question of coming the House, in its present investigation and decision, to the legality of the Return made by Mr. Ward, the Returning Officer.—In the course of the debate, a large number of the Members expressed their wish to go into the general merits of the Election together with the Return;

Mr. Baldwin moved, that it be resolved, that the House do take into consideration the merits of the Election, as well as the Return.

After some further debate on this question, the House divided and here appeared in favour of Mr. Baldwin's motion 30, against it 8, majority 19.

At 5 o'clock, the House adjourned till 4.

On opening the House, the Uniform Currency Amendment Bill was read a 2d time, and the House went into Committee on it.—The Committee, after adopting the amendments made to the Bill in the Upper House, rose and reported the amendments.

On the Att'y General's motion, that the amendments do pass.

Mr John Wilson moved, that this further consideration of the amendments made by the Hon the Legislative Council to the Uniform Currency Bill, be postponed till 1 o'clock next —Ordered.

The House was now called over on the Durham contested Election, and after Counsel were heard on both sides, and some debate on the question, the Counsel for the petitioners came to the following resolution signed by himself and the tenants on the Coll Book for Mr. Boulton at the last Durham Election, appointed one Mr. T. Ke. were marked, held the Land from which they voted, under the several Deeds of Location produced by the Land Office, and Council of Upper Canada, and that they were subject to the patent fees.

The Counsel for the sitting Member at first objected to the witnesses, because it did not state whether the Settlement Duties were performed within the time specified in the Tickets of Location; but on the suggestion of some of the Members, he admitted it, and declined bringing forward any other evidence on the part of the Petitioners.

Mr. Gordon moved that the House do defer the consideration of the Durham contested Election till to-morrow at 10 o'clock.—Ordered

The House went into Committee on the Forfeiture amendment Bill.

Mr. J. Jones moved for the adoption of the first clause, &c. which was adopted.

PRINTED FOR R. C. HORNE.

Light-House would be a charge to the country, it was for the consideration of the House, whether persons employing so much capital on the public good, did not consider claim to them—he hoped the House would hold out every possible encouragement to this, and every future thing of the kind.

Mr. Hogeroon did not the least doubt, but the speakers, by an foreign vessels would fully pay the expence of the Light-House, and had no objection that all our own vessels otherwise exemption might be relieved from Light House and Tonnage Duty, he was satisfied there would be no charge to the Province on that account.

Mr. Baldwin said, this question required some consideration, he was willing but other persons more conversant with the subject to give their opinions, but begged leave to make his objections to it; he was of opinion that the country could not support improvident speculations, the Steam-Boat Frontenac, he thought, was a speculation of this description. It was a monopoly of the carrying trade, from the small vessels, on this lake, a monopoly, which did not seem to answer the object of the petitioners, which was enlarged trade, whether the whole system of Steam Boats was of service to this Province, it might turn out otherwise—This country was growing rapidly, in war also our neighbours (the Americans) come low, we would be called to action, by the event of a war; in this view, it was to be considered, whether it would be wise to encourage Steam-Boats, to the destruction of every thing like a marine on the lake.—He thought it very improvident to strike at the root of that system of navigation, which might be made at a future day, would afford a quantity of sailors and marines in case of an emergency, which the Steam Boat system would exclude; therefore, he thought it was a question, whether it would be wise to encourage them at all on this lake. If the system was carried on in such a manner as enabled the country to support it, it might be of some benefit; but what great benefit could it be to the country at large, if merchants received their goods a week sooner by the encouragement they had, if they could not afford to pay the extravagance that by the system adopted? He thought the carrying trade left to the usual way, would answer all the necessary purposes of the country, and merchant's goods, &c. could be forwarded in the other ways fully as well as in Steam-Boats; and there was no additional interest to the country If the owners of the Frontenac were on a larger scale than necessary, the country should not be obliged to make a grant for their loss—they had been built on a proper scale, the profits would be large enough to serve themselves, and it would equally answer the public good. The Light-House was a thing of necessity, to save the lives of many, and the destruction of property, &c. to would not, therefore, wish that this revenue should be disturbed, for any other purpose. The Frontenac might fall to pieces, and rot or even sprung a leak, and sink to the bottom, before to keep up this tottering establishment? He thought not. He viewed the institute of the Steam-Boat system, if adopted would completely destroy it.

Mr. McDonell observed that he happened to be at Kingston when the Frontenac was building, that timber and every thing else, was very dear at that time and the expence was very great—He was of opinion that that vessel could not navigate three years hence, and as to the objection of preventing seamen, he did not think it was much to be feared; he would hope there would have been no opposition to the Bill, as he thought that justly required that they should protect the owners of the Steam Boat so far as possible.

Mr. Crooks thought that the Frontenac was an unfortunate speculation—he did not allege any thing against the Bill, but to keep up this tottering establishment? He thought not. He viewed the institute of the Steam-Boat system, if adopted would completely destroy it.

Mr. McDonell observed that he happened to be at Kingston when the Frontenac was building, that timber and every thing else, was very dear at that time and the expence was very great—He was of opinion that that vessel could not navigate three years hence, and as to the objection of preventing seamen, he did not think it was much to be feared; he would hope there would have been no opposition to the Bill, as he thought that justly required that they should protect the owners of the Steam Boat so far as possible.

Mr. Crooks thought that the Frontenac was an unfortunate speculation—he did not allege any thing against the Bill, but it was from Glengarry and York. He was of opinion that the Steam Boat was of great advantage to Merchants in obtaining their goods regularly—that it was a saving of expence to passengers to travellers from the States, who came for amusement, &c. and spent money in the Province. He was himself the owner of a vessel on this Lake, but that would not influence his opinion on this subject. He would propose a clause that the Act should be limited to three years.

Mr. Hagerman was satisfied that all persons who embarked money in enterprise, would always act with liberal encouragement from this House. There could not be a doubt but the Frontenac was of the greatest utility to the country. If the House did not now afford some encouragement when the Steam Boat was at an end, what inducement would there be for persons again expending so much capital in similar enterprises? No person would do it, and the public would be deprived of a great advantage

Mr. J. Jones said, that now the landing this Steam Boat was a bad precedent, it should be encouraged; and also every other enterprise which advanced the public good. It was their duty to support every thing of the kind. He would not therefore postpone this question, or any other, of consequence, that came before us at present but to take the matter into consideration now as at any other time.

Mr. Baldwin explained—he did not, he said, speak a word about postponement—but, he insisted that if on our agreement was now laid out, it would be a dangerous precedent, whenever the Steam Boats to be built, to the exclusion of other vessels. If Steam Boats were profitable to merchants, he could not see that they should be exempt from the general duties—If it was on the score of the House that the proprietors of the Frontenac should receive the loss they have sustained, he would not subject to it. The bill should then be brought in to relieve the owners of this Steam Boat from the loss they sustained, and should be confined to it alone, and not extended to others. He would not encourage the building of such Boats or any other speculation that were ruinous.

The Attorney General said, as far as respected this Steam Boat, he thought the Bill would be a support to enterprize, which should be encouraged; and he could see that the Frontenac should not be now put to the whole Light-House duty should be done away As to other vessels raising a marine, he did not think that much was to be done in that way, at present; however, as the business of the country would improve, that point might become of more importance. He thought that every objection, as to justice would be answered, if they would say, that Steam Boats should only pay duty according to the freight they may bring with them. This, he thought, would put the Steam Boat on a footing with the other vessels. It did not appear equal justice that she should be allowed to transport goods, free of duty, and that other vessels should be compelled to pay duty for the same. He would rather that all vessels except foreign vessels, were free from duty—together.

Mr. Hagerman would mention that it was not necessary for our own vessels to pay Light-House or tonnage duty at all—foreign vessels would fully meet the duty necessary for that purpose. It was right our own vessels should be free from all duty, as the masters of vessels could not afford to pay any—If the mode was adopted which was suggested by the learned Atty. Gen. it would make the Steam Boat pay duty for flour, and many other articles which it could not afford it.

Mr. Baldwin thought it might be wise to lessen Light-House and Tonnage duties on all vessels on this Lake; but he would be sorry to see them altogether done away—as they were the foundation of a fund applicable to the navigation of the Lake, and to the improvement of the Harbours. Some duty should be established by the Legislature, and applied in this way, which, above all others, would be most useful to the Country. Improvements were wanting in many ways, and this House would have the power to apply duties in such way as seemed most necessary—Although it might be laid on the Masters of Vessels at present, for convenience, in the end, would pay for it. He thought this Bill should be confined to the Frontenac, if it was meant to enlarge it, and should not apply to other vessels of the kind—he believed she had been already relieved from 1-3 tonnage duty in consequence of her machinery—He would, however, be happy to encourage all enterprize.

Mr. Nichol wished to say a few words on this subject—all the Steam Boats that were built, were built on the faith of being encouraged, in every country, and advantage or profit arose, to the Proprietors, by patent, or other wise. As to encouraging the Frontenac, he was perfectly with the Province, it might turn out otherwise—This country was growing rapidly, in war also our neighbours (the Americans) come low, we would be called to action, by the event of a war; in this view, it was to be considered, whether it would be wise to encourage Steam-Boats, to the destruction of every thing like a marine on the lake.—He thought it very improvident to strike at the root of that system of navigation, which might be made at a future day, would afford a quantity of sailors and marines in case of an emergency, which the Steam Boat system would exclude; therefore, he thought it was a question, whether it would be wise to encourage them at all on this lake. It was their duty to support every thing of the kind. He would not therefore postpone this question, or any other, of consequence, that came before us at present but to take the matter into consideration now as at any other time.

Mr. Baldwin explained—he did not, he said, speak a word about postponement—but, he insisted that if on our agreement was now laid out, it would be a dangerous precedent, whenever the Steam Boats to be built, to the exclusion of other vessels. If Steam Boats were profitable to merchants, he could not see that they should be exempt from the general duties—If it was on the score of the House that the proprietors of the Frontenac should receive the loss they have sustained, he would not subject to it. The bill should then be brought in to relieve the owners of this Steam Boat from the loss they sustained, and should be confined to it alone, and not extended to others. He would not encourage the building of such Boats or any other speculation that were ruinous.

The Attorney General said, as far as respected this Steam Boat, he thought the Bill would be a support to enterprize, which should be encouraged; and he could see that the Frontenac should not be now put to the whole Light-House duty should be done away As to other vessels raising a marine, he did not think that much was to be done in that way, at present; however, as the business of the country would improve, that point might become of more importance. He thought that every objection, as to justice would be answered, if they would say, that Steam Boats should only pay duty according to the freight they may bring with them. This, he thought, would put the Steam Boat on a footing with the other vessels. It did not appear equal justice that she should be allowed to transport goods, free of duty, and that other vessels should be compelled to pay duty for the same. He would rather that all vessels except foreign vessels, were free from duty—together.

Mr. Hagerman would mention that it was not necessary for our own vessels to pay Light-House or tonnage duty at all—foreign vessels would fully meet the duty necessary for that purpose. It was right our own vessels should be free from all duty, as the masters of vessels could not afford to pay any—If the mode was adopted which was suggested by the learned Atty. Gen. it would make the Steam Boat pay duty for flour, and many other articles which it could not afford it.

Mr. Baldwin thought it might be wise to lessen Light-House and Tonnage duties on all vessels on this Lake; but he would be sorry to see them altogether done away—as they were the foundation of a fund applicable to the navigation of the Lake, and to the improvement of the Harbours. Some duty should be established by the Legislature, and applied in this way, which, above all others, would be most useful to the Country. Improvements were wanting in many ways, and this House

The Paris papers of the 20th, contain the speech of the French King to the legislature, on the 18th inst.

Speech of the King of France, delivered in person from the Throne, in the Palace of the Louvre, to the Peers and Deputies.

"Gentlemen—Having reached the end of a year memorable in the early part by calamitous events, but subsequently full of hope and consolation, let us return thanks to Divine Providence for our new blessings

"My house was a house of mourning: a child has been granted to my ardent prayers: France having mingled her tears with mine, has shared with transport my joy and gratitude.

"The Almighty has not limited his protection—one owes to him the consummation of peace, the source of all our prosperity. Time has strengthened the alliance of which France forms a part. This alliance, whilst it averts all causes for war, must also secure to the world the most durable social order or the political equilibrium might be expected.

"These dangers because daily more distant, yet will I not withhold, in this solemn communication with my people the declaration of the past year, how much my heart must be touched from the part of virtuous enemy, and that, retrace the steps of sanctity and honour, it must be through pain and disgrace. King, is delighted for the glory of having for the second time accepted snatched away, and her interests exposed to a restless spirit of anarchy which else detests.

"Time has it happened that this spirit has been unable to stop the course of my prosperity. On the interior peace crowns all the laborious activity, which has been applied with equal anxiety to Agriculture, to Arts, and to Commerce.

"The Powers, which are at first view the guardians of the retrenchments which I have prescribed, and the solidity of our national credit, enable me to propose to you, in this very session, a further reduction of the taxes, and that which support the available expenditure. This alleviation will be the more welcome as it will produce a more equal distribution of the public burthens. This success renders more dear to me the duties which loyalty imposes.

"To perfect the movement of the great political bodies created by the charter—to put the various branches of the government in harmony with the new institutions—to inspire general confidence in the stability of the throne, and in the inviolability of the laws, which protect the interest of all; such is the object of my exertions. For the accomplishment of that object two conditions are necessary—time and tranquility. We ought not to expect from incipient institutions what can only be expected from their entire development, and the moral influence they are destined to form. Until then let us acknowledge that, in public affairs, patience and moderation are also powers; and the all others will deceive the least. Let us not forget that liberty is our important object, that it is impossible for the government to maintain it, without the primary guarantees of liberty, if it be not armed with a power commensurate with the difficulties with which it is environed.

"Every thing, gentlemen, which in modifications in our electoral system will produce the benefits which I flattered myself we should derive from them. Whatever augments the energy and the independence of the electors, adds to the dignity and the authority of the Crown. This session will terminate, if I trust, the work so auspiciously begun by the last By strengthening the harmony reciprocal relations between the Monarch and the Chambers, we shall at length succeed in founding the system of government which so vast a Monarchy shall require in time to come, and which the present state of France and of Europe still more imperiously commands

"It is for the accomplishment of those objects that I am desirous for the prolongation of the days which may be still reserved for me; it is for the accomplishment of them, that we ought mutually to depend, you, Gentlemen, upon my fidelity and unalterable will, and I upon your loyal and constant support."

The King was received by a deputation of twelve Peers and twenty five Deputies in the saloon, adjoining the Gallery of Apollo.

An address from a clergyman to his parishioners on the present exhibition of popular feeling.

Nothing can be more abhorrent from my feelings or more contrary to my principles, than to address the flock of which I am the appointed shepherd, on the political dissentions which agitate and convulse the world. I am far from being one of those who would plead for peace by the contentions of hostile parties, or make the house of God a vehicle for any topic which are unconnected with pure and undefiled religion. But I am also required to make delusion there—to the Customs Authorities within fifteen days from the 16th December of the present year (1820.) Those goods will then be stamped and deposited where the said authorities shall appoint until further orders. Which is my opinion, that if they are undermined, seems a duty that I am called upon to perform, not only as a private christian, but even as a minister of the gospel.

And here can I fail to look back, with sensations of the bitterest regret, upon that great queen* and illustrious woman, who was for more than half a century, the brightest ornament of the court of Britain, as she was the most effectual safeguard ? When can calculate the benefits of her pure example, of her unstained reputation, of the determined stand which she made against vice, however high in birth and exalted in rank ?

The court over which she presided, was the most correct in christendom; and the steady influx which emanated from the throne, though it shone brightness upon those by whom it was immediately surrounded, shed a radiance as clear, though it might not be as strong, upon the humblest cottage in the most remote part of her dominions.

When the end reserve of the picture is before me, and its melancholy consequences are anticipated, can I, as one of the constituted guardians of the public morals, be silent with innocence ? I view " the signs of the times" with the most melancholy forbodings. And, however hopeless I may be that any thing which I can say will influence even my own parishioners, amidst the general madness which I see around me, I will raise my own individual voice against those who can triumph in the victory, not of unblemished honour, not of established innocence, not of decency and decorum, but of popular clamour and opposition to " the powers that be." I must say, that the general tendency to rejoice for one whom her warm of sufferance will scarcely venture to praise, whose many of his offences have openly and decidedly censured, is a scandle to piety and not to truth, is a departure from Christian morality, a " loving of darkness rather than light." an encouragement of those " whose deeds are evil."

Let it not be supposed from the example, which fills our streets with riot, is not over the counties in our country, but over men as distinguished by party and hatred as they are by rank and influence. Let it not be supposed that the triumph was chimerical, but by no means disproved, not by unanimity, but by a majority of two-thirds of the house of commons, which, to say nothing of the corruption of boroughs, and by unconstitutional influence in all who were upon expectation ? And " How is the fine gold become dim ! how is the most fine gold changed !"

My brethren ! do you not see the mischief of all this ? Do you not see the triumph, not of the opposition over the ministry, but of the many over the higher, but of trinity over duality ? Do you not see virtues, in proportion to power party ?

Women wives, and sisters, and daughters ! In had a lesson of morality do we give them, by thus offering the incense of our praise, adore at our adultery, to consult, which, to say the least of it, is not what the Lord requires of us, and which he knows we cannot but to see that we, female whom he loved remember !

Was non-intercourse the interest of our subjects, and tell the unhappy truth, that for the last year, how many have excluded from the part of virtuous society, and that, retrace the steps of sanctity and honour, it must be through pain and disgrace. King, is delighted for the glory of having for the second time accepted snatched away, and her interests exposed to a restless spirit of anarchy which else detests.

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT OF LOWER-CANADA.

Ordered, That the Entry in the Journal at the Legislative Council of the 21st April, 1819, on the order of the day being read for the second reading of the Bill from the Assembly, intituled, "An Act to appropriate a certain sum of money to defray the expenses of the Civil Government of this Province for the year one thousand eight hundred and nineteen," "that the clause sought by the Bill to defray the expenses of the Civil List, is unprecedented and unconstitutional; and is an assumption on the part of the Assembly, of the most important rights and prerogatives of the Crown; that were this Bill to be passed into a Law, it would give to the Commons of this Province, not merely the constitutional privilege of providing the supplies, but the power also of prescribing to the Crown the manner and description of its servants, and of regulating and rewarding their services individually as the Assembly should from time to time, judge meet or expedient, by which means they would be rendered dependent on an elective body, instead of being dependent on the Crown, and might, eventually, be made instrumental to the overthrow of that authority which by their allegiance they are bound to support," be now read.

Ordered, That so much of the Entry in the Journals of the House of the 24th April, 1819, of the Speech of His Excellency the then Governor in Chief, as states, "You, Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, have not disappointed our hopes, and I cannot express you my thanks for the zeal and alacrity you have shewn in all that are immediately belonging to your body. It is with much concern I feel myself compelled to say, that I cannot express to you, Gentlemen of the House of Assembly, the same satisfaction, nor my approbation of the general result of your labours, (at the expence of so much valuable time) and of the public principles upon which they proceed, as recorded in your Journals. I am compelled upon this ground, to remind you, that before you, to me a part of the sum required for the expence of the year one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, but the Bill of Appropriation which you have thought proper not to pass, is withheld, it appears from the Journals of the Upper House to have been constitutionally rejected; His Majesty's Government has been thereby without the necessary supplies for carrying on the Administration of the Province for the ensuing year, notwithstanding the voluntary offer and pledge given to his Majesty by the readers of your House of Parliament February, 1818, of eight hundred and sixty," be now read.

Ordered, That so much of the Clause 2 of an Act passed in the Parliament of Great-Britain, in the thirty-first year of the reign of His Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further provision for the Government of the said Province," enacting as follows—"And whereas His Majesty has been graciously pleased to signify to us, His Majesty's Parliament, his royal intention to divide his Province of Quebec, into two separate Provinces, to be called the Province of Upper Canada and the Province of Lower Canada; be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, that there shall be within each of the said Provinces respectively, a Legislative Council and Assembly, to be severally composed and constituted in the manner hereinafter described; and that in each of the said provinces respectively, his Majesty, his heirs and successors shall have power, during the continuance of this Act, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of such Provinces respectively, to make laws for the peace, welfare and good government thereof, such laws not being repugnant to this Act; and that such laws being passed by the said Legislative Council and Assembly, or either of the said Provinces respectively, and assented to by His Majesty, his heirs and successors, or reserved in his Majesty's name, for the pleasure of His Majesty his heirs and successors, shall from time to time, appear to be to the Governor or Lieutenant Governor of such Province, or by such persons as his Majesty, his heirs and successors shall from time to time appoint to administer the Government within the same, shall be, and the same are hereby declared to be, by virtue and under the authority of this Act, valid and binding to all intents and purposes whatever within the Province in which the same shall have been passed," be now read.

Ordered, That the 28th Clause of the same Act, viz: "And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that all Acts and Ordinances of the said Legislative Councils or Assemblies respectively, shall be decided by the majority of voices of such Members as shall be present; and that in all cases where the Council or Assembly, as the case shall be, shall have a casting voice," be now read.

Resolved—That the second standing Rule of this House, under the head "Petitions," viz: "That all Acts and Supplies granted to His Majesty, by the Legislature of Lower Canada, are the sole gift of the Assembly of this Province; and that the granting such Acts and Supplies ought to begin with the Assembly; and it is the undoubted right of the Assembly, to direct, limit, and appoint, in all such Acts the end, purpose, considerations, conditions, limitations and qualifications of such Grants, which are not alterable by the Legislative Council:"

"That this House will receive no Petition for any sum of money relating to the Public Service, but what is recommended by His Majesty's Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the time:"—be now read.

That the said order in the Journal of the Legislative Council of the 21st April, 1819, and the Speech of his Grace the then Governor in Chief, of the 24th April of the same year, do severally, contain a censure of the Proceedings of this branch of the Legislature.

Resolved—That all censure of any proceedings of this branch of the Legislature, by any of the other branches thereof, is an assumption and exercise of power contrary to Law, a breach of the undoubted rights and privileges of this House, and subversive of the Constitution of Government, as by Law established in this Province.

Resolved—That it is the undoubted right of this House, in voting aids or supplies, or offering money bills for the consent of the other branches of the Legislature (as well as in all its other proceedings under the afore recited Act of the 31st year of the reign of King George the Third) to adopt such order or mode of proceedings as it may find comfortable to its Rules, and to propound such matters, as in its judgment, shall seem direct and most conducive to the peace, welfare, and good government of this Province.

LONDON, Nov. 21.

Drury Lane Theatre.—Mr. Wallack last night, made his first appearance before a London audience since his return from America. He has been absent, we believe, three or four years, and left the British stage, a promising and talented actor. After this transatlantic voyage, he returns elevated to the ground of rank in his profession, by the announcement of an appearance in Hamlet. He was received in the most gratifying manner by the audience, and his efforts were considerably applauded throughout the play.

Curious Apprehension.—As Mr. Ower, of Thomas-street, Commercial-road, was reading in the ground parlour, he was disturbed by a noise, as if a cat had cut among the cages on the side of the room, and he sung in the dark, and brought him in the parlour, he observed a youth having his head in at the window, the sash of which he had partly raised up, endeavouring, by means of long wire extended at the end, to obtain a canary bird which was in a cage. Hannibal cautiously across the room, and the thief never once perceived Mr. O. till he had hold of him by the arm. He struggled hard to get off, but Mr. Ower secured the young gallant him at the window. He observed the youth's apprehension was about ten years of age, and of so diminutive a stature that he could scarcely reach the window. He was taken to Lambeth-street, Police Office, where he gave his name Wilkins Spencer, and was committed to the Sessions.

Sunday Schools.—It appears, that in no less than 22,454 children are instructed in Sunday Schools, in London, 350,000, attended by nearly 60,000 teachers. The progress of education may be judged from the fact, that above 10,000 per month are now sold of Stuart's well known spelling book, and Perkins's London primer.

Two Warriors of the Island of Otaheite

Manifest Sun.—Two natives of the Island of Otaheite in the Pacific Ocean, where capt. Cook lost his life, were on Wednesday brought before the Lord Mayor, for the purpose of being sworn to the oath of Chief of the Sandwich Isles. Their names are Rome-oh-Hum-a-Hoo; it had been the day before represented to his Lordship that the two strangers were brought to the city gaol, on the previous day, on extraordinary charges, and that being desirous, and without money or knowledge of the language or power of making themselves understood, two would in all probability be put under mittimus were not taken to send them back to their native country.

With some difficulty an interpreter was found. He is a young American who had been taken prisoner by the natives of Otaheite, where he had gone in the character of the Seaborer; to one or more social wood, with whi h that island abounds.

The following circumstances came out in the course of the examination:

Mr. Stead, of the clergyman who officiated on board the floating chapel on the River Thames, observed two foreigners in the appeard of seamen, who were very attentive during the performance of the Divine Service, and who gave evident symptoms of their having seen any thing of the kind before. The Rev. Gentleman made different inquiries, and found that they were natives of Otaheite, that they had been brought to this country in an American ship, and had no friend but a Mr. John Tudgay, schoolmaster, and owner of the ship and slop public-house High-street Wapping, who had been supporting them about two months.

Through the medium of the interpreter, it was stated that the two warriors had been fishing at some distance from the shore, in a canoe, and that a boat, load ed an American schooner which had touched at the island for some of their valuable produce, bore down upon them as all prisoners and sailed on the Sabbath day. In the skiff of the latter is a short conference took place between the schooner, and took the prize and crew into Sandwich, were the Spaniards murdered two of the warriors countrymen, and made slaves of the warriors themselves. They were soon after separated, and that all agreed to the authority of the Lord Mayor, who had been supporting them about two months.

The Lord Mayor and the account of the two unfortunate strangers, which was confirmed by the interpreter, the application of the resident of Mr. Tudgay and the clergyman, but at the same time expressed his opinion that there was no fund to be appropriated to the pure purpose, as to accept of that which might spring from a source which had a thousand streams—all generous and active sympathy of Englishmen.

[Extract of a Private Letter.]

"I think you will be desirous to know something of the result of Lieut. Parry's expedition to explore a passage to the North Pole; we have not had time to hear from Lieut. Parry himself, but much further than capt. Ross, and is enabled completely to refute his statement as to there being land across Lancaster Sound. For most distinctly from the ship's mast-head, and with the assistance of Capt. Sabine, of the Royal Horse Artillery, who was attached to the expedition, for the purpose of making scientific observations. He writes, 'A coast and horizon of mountains is supposed to be seen from Lancaster Sound, might drive from Baffin's Bay into the Polar sea, through the celebrated Lancaster Sound—a Sound now no more; for we have structured Barrow's Straits (Mr. Barrow is Deputy Secretary to the Admiralty, and by him this last expedition was planned) 150 miles in length. The sides are as straight and as parallel as those of a high road. We shall be with you in a short time, we hope to see something of Captain Somerville Straits, which are alterable by the Legislative Council."

"Thus it would appear that a suit commenced on the 1st of June, with the utmost diligence on both sides, might be tried in two years, or 30 months, and should there be questions reserved (as in most litigated cases of importance there are) for the decision of all the judges, it might by possibility be detained, and the money collected, if by law and chicane any thing remained to the unfortunate debtor, in four years."

Cold Weather.—Accounts from all quarters agree, that the present winter will justly claim the unenviable notice of meteorology, for the severest for fifty years; and that even the hard one of 1780 must yield the palm to 1821. Every paper we receive furnishes new proofs of this pre-eminence.

Within the last month, no less than nine persons in this town have narrowly escaped falling victims to the practice of warming chambers with coal, all of whom required medical aid for their restoration. On Christmas day, four persons of the same family were found senseless on the floor of the kitchen of their house, and it is related, had been placed on the hearth—the coals in it were supposed to be properly kindled in the open air, and the chimney of the chamber was open. The discovery of the intention of the Bill was, to reimburse the owners of the Frontenac, for the large capital expended on her, and lost; but he did not see why steam vessels generally, should be exempt from the effects of the Bill. If they were dangerous to the public, why not to the proprietors? Neither steam vessels be erected, and that it turns out that they have any claim on the Legislature, they will receive ample assistance, but he thought the proposed Bill would hold out encouragement to improper speculations.

Mr. Jones said the object of this Bill was not to encourage the owners of the Frontenac, if was a general Bill, and not confined to this vessel, as would appear by the very preamble.

Mr. Peters said, if appeared to him almost unnecessary to express his sentiments on this subject; but, he was sorry to differ from most Hon. Gentlemen who spoke, as to the general benefit of the Steam Boat, and thought it was by no means as great as was represented. Those who travelled in her, were generally rich men, and the poor reaped very little benefit from her. It was observed that the persons who entered into the speculations were ruined by it, but not the country, as every other speculation in the country. They might as well relieve merchants who were now losing, or relieve persons for whom no bail bonds were also losing; for Mr. Crooks opposed this hon. gentleman's argument, and observed that the tax of a mill was only 1½ d. which bore no kind of comparison with the duty paid by the Steam Boat, and thought it was the duty of every member of the House to encourage useful speculations.

Mr. Baldwin's amendment confining the Bill to the Frontenac, was put and negatived.

Mr. McCormick said he would vote against the Bill, if it did not include vessels of every description.

Mr. Peter Robinson observed, that unless it extended to vessels of all kinds, he would feel it his duty to oppose it.

The original clause to relieve all vessels propelled by steam, from light house and tonnage duty was put and carried.

After some more discussion which we have not room to insert,

Mr. Crooks moved a clause, that this Act should continue for three years, and till the end of the next session of Parliament, and no longer. This clause was adopted.

The Committee rose and reported the Bill as amended.

Mr. Baldwin moved for this Bill to be postponed for further consideration.

Mr. Hagerman moved, that the Bill to relieve vessels propelled by steam, from light-house and tonnage duty, be engrossed, and read a 3d time to-morrow.

On this question the House divided and there appearing 18 votes on each side, the Speaker decided in favour of the post ponement.

Mr. Hagerman gave notice, that he would to-morrow move, that the Bill to relieve steam vessels from light house and tonnage duty be read a 3d time on Monday.

The House was now called over on the Durham contested election, and Mr. Ridout, the Counsel for the sitting member, was called on to proceed with his defence. He observed that he might, should not be limited to questions, but he thought at this time he wished to prepare himself; he thought it unnecessary to go into a wide range that the opposite Counsel had taken; but would confine himself first to the question whether the petitioners were legally entitled to a vote, and secondly, to the propriety of the conduct of Mr Ward, the Returning Officer, whose character, he observed, was known to every person in this House, as well as to others, most respected and popular. He argued that the information used to compel the Returning officer to take the Lists on Ticket votes was illegal, and that it was objected that the objection to these from the commencement. That the Returning Officer refusing the electors by empties; that he asked could this be, when their own witnesses proved that Mr Fothergill read the Statute to a packed meeting, and refused to hear on their part, stating at the same time to them, that the Location Ticket votes were objected to by the Returning Officer? He gave as a reason why the Returning Officer was aware that those Delegates, or any other persons, had not the right to vote under the Statute, but which we must done. He argued that the Statute gives the persons who held Certificates, issued by the Government of the day, a right to vote, and that the objection to the Location Tickets in this Province these Certificates were given to persons who were properly speaking U. E. loyalists—That even this was doubtful, as the Statute says, he-one, who had been driven from their homes, and who were put again in possession of those premises which they had previously enjoyed by virtue of old settlement, at the early part of the 21st of the late King, George the Third was supposed) it was impossible that Parliament could have been prepared with proper Location Tickets; and in general Emigrants that the Executive would not be entitled to vote on these Tickets did not confer upon the other more than a temporary at will; they could be removed at pleasure, the Tickets were given to persons, and ordered to be delivered to them on equitable claim on Government until all the conditions were fulfilled. If the Crown saw fit to compel with the conditions of their agreement on their Tickets, they could but have a right to hold them at pleasure. The Location Tickets, as the Tickets were all lodged in a particular office so to the conditions were performed and the fees paid To constitute an equitable Freehold, all the conditions upon which the property was bestowed must be completed; certainly where the title had not been completed through the act of the vendor the case was different; and that the Statute of Elizabeth applied to persons who were not completed owing to their own neglect. The 31st of the King, was the only guide for this House, which plainly defined the title required to give a vote. The learned Counsel read the Statute, and called attention to the words as to Escheats; to show that the Returning Officer was a judicial officer, and as such had a right to consider and reject improper votes. He observed at any time during the Election, and to strike out any that he considered illegal, before he declared the person having the majority of legal votes. The act of the Returning Candidate was conducive to protect himself: he should on the scrutiny that took place immediately after the close of the Poll: at which a though many votes were struck off, no attempt was made on the part to persecute the Returning Officer, as the London Tory Committee, good or bad to a least remark at that time was made respecting them: that this conduct tended to confirm the Returning Officer, with the exception of Mr. Ward, who had expressed suspicion, their ill-policy, and completely to ridicule him, if any justification were necessary, where both the law and the oath he had been dictated the course he should pursue.

The House adjourned at one o'clock till four.

On opening the House, Mr. Walsh moved for leave to bring in a Bill for the preservation of Deer, throughout the Province. Ordered.

The House went into Committee on the Parish and Town Officers Bill; which was, after discussion, referred to a select committee.

Mr. Baldwin moved for leave to bring in a Bill to appropriate a certain sum of money to the improvement of the Roads appointed by the Commissioners.

This being objected to as a private Bill, which should be brought in by petition, the motion was withdrawn.

nulled to vote, for such were the words of 31. Geo. 2. Ch. 21. Sec. 20. That they "possessed the lands in their own use and freehold" there was no doubt; they were residing upon them, improving the soil by their labour, and paying taxes for it to their District Treasury. The remaining question turned upon the words "held in freehold." To determine the meaning of these three words should exercise in this instance, it was necessary to see on what ground the right of voting for Counties was granted in England, and to examine the words of our Statute with them.

The words of our statute "possessed of freehold in their own use and lawful ful being by them held in freehold." By 10 Geo. 3. ch. 18. which governs the right of voters for Counties in England, "no person shall vote for any county before he shall have been in the actual possession of the freehold for which he votes of the clear yearly value or the value and rent of 40 shillings." Freehold estate, in the Mother Country, is "what a man hath in fee, or fee tail, or for his life." Here, then, were land and freehold than he owned—possessed of—held in freehold—and was entitled to vote to his own exclusive property, and for whose sake that property is held not yet arrived. It had been argued in the bar that an equitable freehold could only be where there was a remedy in equity to compel a title—that, though a perfect equitable right, it was not a freehold to vote, unless the law case in 6 Peckwell 112. a person was admitted to vote who had only a legal estate, although it was acknowledged that he could not be made to compel a better title. But, on principle, he said, the phrase of lawful freehold could scarcely be too much regarded than the words of the act provided. It certainly was in the power of the King to make the grant for the time, and so could an individual: who had himself bound to give a deed to such his daughter and country to another, and the only remedy he would be an action to recover damages on the bond.

As to the leading principles which had arisen in the question of electoral franchise, he said they were in favour of these voters.

On the general principles of the Constitution of England it is the law which is represented, and not "the corner or occupier." Heywood & Blackburn, 30—and surely land could be represented, which was the business of the State. It had been pointed out as a criterion to determine whether persons have a right to vote at the elections of members of Parliament, to examine whether they were assessed to the tax called "attitude to their wages when elected." Heywood, 81.—This the case with every one of these voters. He did not see by what principle of law or Act of Parliament, the Court could have stated, if assessed only upon grounds of rent, and governed by the decision in the Queen's case, that they had not a good title to all requests similar. But he had gone further—he had stated upon this matter; and he contended that the Commissioners had regarded the tenure under these Tickets or other authorities of the Governor in Council, in the different States they had passed, and using the rights of an absolute owner of the land. He referred to the Act in the Provincial Statute book—and that was such had left out the words of the 31st, which, he contended, were not necessary to be used in order to pass. Every these persons to the King. The Kind of freeholds inherent in these colonies conveyed, was recognized in the Statute 31 Geo. 3 ch. 31 and the British Statute 31 Geo. 3 ch. 31 sec 44 & 45 recite the requests as free hold the titles held under such Grants which could have no other title upon them than one under a deliverance from the Crown, and which therefore from any reserve from grants, and it carefully guards against the injury of intermediate land from grants made of certain lands. The Statute 31 Geo. 3 ch. 31 sec.

served that slender such as title, did not, could not affect the Government of this Colony. He would ask those gentlemen to look around them, and point out one single part of the habitable globe, where the elective franchise was more perfect by free from the influence or interference of Government than in this Province? He was confident no such place existed; and indeed what object could the government have in view by exercising any influence or interference? many riches could not be aimed at; for this was a country where fortunes were seldom acquired by men in power; neither could honors be, argued, for there are none to bestow; and as to the Power of Government had, or could have, was to see Parliament composed of men who understood and promoted the interests of the Province; who those men were was left to the choice of the people, except right in this respect he Mr. H. trusted would ever be preserved to them. It was however for the House to consider whether this right would not be materially impaired, if it could be determined that the votes which were the subject of the present discussion were declared invalid: let him, soon as effect with what justice they could lay taxes on people who were not represented, or with what degree of zeal they could claim wages, (if such they condescended to accept), from men whose voice in their election they disallowed; let them also reflect upon the feelings which such a decision would naturally excite in the minds of those men,—coming from a country where it must be admitted the elective franchise is more perfectly exercised than they would find this Province, a part of the British Empire, free from undue influence, & guided entirely by the will of the people; in this respect they are not ultimately deceived, but they find that long before they are entitled to such rights, they must bear the burthens imposed on the inhabitants of the Province without being permitted to share in the blessings of its Constitution: a decision such as this, must fill their minds with doubts, and would have the most direct tendency to promote discontent and fix in their minds an idea that the greatest injustice had been done them. Mr. H. therefore thought this House would by a contrary determination, show to those who sought this Province as a place of residence, that the Laws of England governed our decisions, without the interference of factious men, or the capricious opinions of power; for he could not believe that any desire to see an increase in wealth and prosperity to increase; and he was satisfied that every thing else was divested of prejudice and party, would exert themselves to do.

He concluded by observing, that being satisfied the Returning Officer had violated his duty in rejecting votes he declared legal, and in receiving votes declared illegal, and Wilmot not having been returned by the majority of legal votes, his seat should be vacated, and a new Writ issued.

Mr No Bird did not pretend to the splendid eloquence of some of the honorable gentlemen who spoke before him, but he possessed common sense and understanding, and could read an Act of Parliament. In his opinion, the Location Tickets could not be considered a freehold under the 31st of the late King. The Atty. Genl. he said, used an argument, which he was sorry to hear coming from such a quarter, that the persons possessing the Location Tickets were entitled to vote (Here the Atty Gen. interrupted Mr No Bird and explained.) (Mr. N.) did not think that any thing was to be done in the emigrants, by withholding the elective franchise from them until they got their Deeds. That was never generally such a description of persons as did not possess that right, before they came here, therefore, there could be no hardship in their waiting to be only upon an equality with other votes. The other gentlemen, (Mr. Hegeman) he said, had said that there was not a word of the persons not being allowed to vote in the Statute, (Mr. N.) said that it was quite unnecessary as the Statute was very well understood without it. As to the argument that the Location Ticket was an equivalent freehold; this he contended, was not the case, a freehold of any description must be in the power of the person holding it; but the very words of the Location Tickets say they are not transferable. Mr. N. then read a Location Ticket granted to himself, and observed that he could never get these lands unless he performed the Settlement Duty; he knew persons who were settled on their Lands and could not get their Deed till the Settlement Duty was completed; and when this duty is completed if the government proceed to withhold their Deeds, who, he asked, could they Petition? It must be the very persons who refused their claims. He would be glad Hon. Gentlemen in a contrary opinion would show any Law to compel the Crown to grant a title; he was certain there was none. The Location Tickets were subject to two contingencies; the neglect of the settlement duty on the part of the holders, in which case the Lands would return to the Crown, and the power of withholding the Deeds on the part of the Crown. Another point was argued, that every person possessed a freehold, he argued, the Location Ticket conveyed no claim to freehold; but were the same as to an Estate at will; no country could exist, although it was attempted in the days, between the Land Board and the Location Tickets, the former being transferable, the latter not transferable. (Mr. N. here introduced an explanation of the word Estate from Johnston's Dictionary.) He said the Location Ticket inhabitants paying taxes, he thought it was very proper that all those who were protected by the Laws should support it. The Atty. Genl's remarks on the Council Members missing on voting, he thought, was not happily applied, as there was an express Law against soldiers being present at Elections. As to the objections against the Location Tickets, stating the influence of Government, he did not see any thing in it so horrible or indecent, as was alleged by some hon. members; they could put any person they pleased into the House of Assembly by the sale of Lands. As to the influence of the Government in this House should be guarded against and members should be chosen according to the existing condition of 31st of the late King, by persons possessed of Lands, & held by freehold, &c. The Returning Officer, he thought acted wrong in putting the Location Ticket votes on the Poll; but was right in striking them off. He stated generally, but not correctly. If the Returning Officer had no right to put the votes on the Poll on the mere assertion of Mr. Bedford, that he would allow Law for them; had he been in the Officer's situation he would not have conducted them in such a manner, it was his duty to reject them at first and his principal error was in receiving them on the Poll at all. If they admitted Location Tickets to have a right to vote, they would put the whole power of returning members to the House of Assembly, in the hands of the Government; and most of the very persons who obtained these Location Tickets, came from the corporations in England, where power and the spirit of corruption appears, where votes are bought and sold at Elections, as a coin or a horse was in this country. If these persons were allowed, they would swarm in this Province like Locusts through the country, therefore, they should be granted against; if the members of this House did not do their duty, they would leave themselves in the eyes of the country, and members would be returned to the House of Assembly who would not pay such a sum on the mouths of every house at seen in this country. He advised the house to be cautious how they would act and the strict line to take in such persons as could [illegible] to either by Parliament, by paying 25 £1. for their votes. Mr. N. concluded by saying if the house came to a decision in favour of such persons, he would have at it for ever.

Mr. Howard to claim his [illegible] said, that he did not [illegible] the present question a matter of ordinary discussion, [illegible] thereof would not reply to the opinions expressed by others he had kept a memorandum of all the Law authorities a which reference had been made by the learned Counsel before the Bar on both sides of the question, and had carefully examined all those authorities himself, and had formed his opinion from the evidence added before the Bar, and the result of those examinations was, which was, that the conduct of the Returning Officer was illegal, he would not say corrupt, but he was decided from the evidence of both the Returning Officer and the Poll Clerk, that there ought to be a new Election, and that Mr. Wilmot had been returned by a majority of votes (Mr. Baldwin's motion) to that effect. Several Gentlemen had expressed their opinions against the Return, who thought they had a right to vote on the Location Tickets, he thought now was the object of his amendment was to decide the question as to be take the sense of the House likely upon each point.

In framing his amendment he had carefully avoided all the element duties in Cases, and whose votes had been received on the Poll Book by the Returning Officer, and afterwards considered by him as not to admit; after the best consideration that he (Mr. H.) had been able to give the subject, had was of opinion that they had a right to vote; because, by the Statute of the 31st year of his late Majesty's Reign, which is the Constitution of this Province as well as Lower Canada, it was provided, that persons holding or possessing Lands by certificate derived under the authority of the Governor and Council of the late province of Quebec, should have the right of voting for members to represent them in the Assembly of each Province; and surely it would be gentlemen enough to say, or suppose for a moment, that the true spirit and meaning of that Act was that it should not extend to the Province of which it was the Constitution? or to say that the faith of the Government of this Province, or of Lower Canada was not entitled to as much confidence in matters of this nature, as that of the late province of Quebec. He (Mr. H.) said he was convinced that those persons had equitable freeholds in every sense of the word, and he was confirmed in this opinion by the opinion, both by its meaning and expression. Mr. Baldwin concluded by moving his amendment, which after some discussion was negatived.

Mr. Joseph Knowlton rose with diffidence to give his opinion, after hearing the eloquent arguments used by the learned gentlemen who spoke before him; but as this was a great and important question, he felt it his duty to say a few words. He thought the Return of Mr. Wilmot was illegal, when there was a majority of votes on the Poll in favour of Mr. Bouton; but he could not vote for the amendment now before the House, as he had a right to vote; as it was not warranted by the 31st of the late king, which gave us our Constitution. It was said, that any person having a Location Ticket had a right to vote, but he contended a freehold right was necessary to entitle him to without having a right to vote. By Law, the freehold should be of the full value of 40s, and was, he asked, of that description? He would ask those gentlemen who had voted for Wilmot, if they were possessed of a freehold worth 40s.? No one could do it. He would vote that the Returning Officer did right in striking off the votes, and against the Return; but would give his vote again at the Location Tickets having any right to vote.

Mr. Allan McLean said, that after this case being so ably discussed, it was unnecessary for him to say much on it, yet he felt himself called upon by the gentlemen who supported both as a magistrate and judicial officer, and was of opinion that he acted improperly on this election; he took votes on the Poll from persons who produced Location Tickets, and without proper evidence, he altered his Poll Book after the Election, contrary to the freedom of election. If he could alter one vote, he could another; this one circumstance was sufficient to make void the Election without any thing else, he said, that if any man died after getting his Location Ticket and performing his settlement duty, his heirs were entitled to a deed, on application to the Commissioners of the Land Boards, therefore, he thought they were entitled to vote.

Mr Andrew McLean did not intend to occupy much of the time of the House, but he thought it necessary to say a few words in support of the hon. Atty Gen and other hon members who had preceded him. He had voted for the present sitting member for the County, and was in good deal of consideration according to the best of his judgment, that the Location Tickets conferred a right to vote, as they were granted by the hon Atty. Gen'l to his personal knowledge, and that the opinion which he had then entertained was the more confirmed on that point by the opinion of the learned Judge who presided at the Election, and it was argued that persons holding lands under the late Government of Canada, were not considered freeholders, a there could be no necessity of issuing to them certificates, being particularly mentioned was because at the time of the passing of the Act of 31st of the late King, Lower Canada and Upper Canada, there was not one freehold in any titles derived from the late province of Upper Canada, and consequently it was necessary to give the inhabitants of this Province a right to vote therefore, as persons holding lands under the late province of Quebec. If this were not the case, there could not have been any Elections in Upper Canada, which every one knows to have been and there Persons therein. He was persuaded that the Location Tickets, as mentioned, were considered by the Legislature of Lower Canada, as they were not considered freeholders, a there could be no necessity of issuing to them certificates

AGRICULTURAL CALENDAR.

MARCH.

If you wish to know how much the days have lengthened look back to the calendar; the peeping of the frogs and appearance of the birds tell the farmer it is time for him to be stirring. If you have done your duty in February you have now a good, round wood-pile to cut and split up. In packing away your wood in the wood-house, (and a spring I will say take for granted you have) you will be careful to assort the wood in each manner that the greater and the smaller shall come out even—this costs but little labor, and saves much.

If you would be master of your own business, get all your forming implements ready for use, so that you will have no needed to borrow of your neighbour. The borrower is a slave to the lender. The man who sows you oats in March, will not be willing to lend you a chain or a shovel in April. If your plough-irons are dull, if your cranes are broken or your stone-boats bunted, send them to the blacksmith before the ground is clear of frost.

Now make your ox bows and yokes, if you have not on hand sufficient for the year. Lay aside some good timber for ox-carts and bows, for and pitchfork handles; staths, cart ladders and axe-helves; if you should have but little occasion for them this year, they will be ready for the next, and be no worse for seasoning.

Prune your orchards this month if not done the last. The fruit you will procure will nearly or quite pay you for the labor, but next year will present you a rich reward.

Remember "time is money," and that money at 6 per cent. doubles in sixteen years and two thirds. If, by doing your work well and attending to it in season, you can save one day's labor this year, save two within 17 years, that loser is put out to interest.

These hints, though given in March, apply to every month in the year—Drive your business before you, and it will go on easily—but let that drive you and you will find a hard master. Attend strictly to the economy of your family, and you will have no reason to complain of hard times and scarcity of money.

"Trim, sir, for information," said a very grave member of a legislative body, who then made no great figure in the business in which he was engaged, but has since far outgrown in political importance both his own and his neighbours' expectations. "I'm very glad to hear it, and a hyperbole is the very man wants it most. Whether it proceeds from the sense-cency, or some other not revealed, we do not know, but rising members have no superfluity of information when they first take their seats in the House of Representatives of the Congress. We have not kept an accurate account of the various motions of this sort, but we are strongly inclined to the opinion, that more resolutions, calling for information, have been moved this session, (that of any other, (especially considering its length) since the formation of the government. Information is an excellent thing, and, at times, an indispensable thing. Whether this extraordinary call arises from a fear, or a general scarcity among the members when they leave home, or from a disposition to introduce themselves, in this way, to public notice, for the purpose of securing a re-election, or that they are attentive to their duty, and careful of their interests, or from an uneasy restless spirit, which will not suffer them to keep their seats through a session, we pretend not to know. Nor would we by any means be understood to complain of the general plan. If the members are as ignorant of the public affairs as they would seem to be, they are to be better informed, and no one should find fault with them for seeking it.

There ought, however, to be some limit to these multiplied and incessant enquiries in every session. The information obtained, however important in itself will be of no public value, unless brought into some kind of use. A member may grow into such overstanding with knowledge, that he will soon over-eat, out unless he turns it to some public account, instead of deriving benefit from it, neither he nor his constituents will be either practically wiser or better. The first session, no advantage in calling for more information than can be worked up during the session. So much has been asked for this session, and the time has so far elapsed, that many of the members are more than ordinarily diligent and laborious, much of the stock must lie on hand for a future opportunity, or what is more probable, be entirely wasted. The great business of the session is almost already embarked, and there will be but about six weeks of it left, in the course of which a new President must be made.—Am. pap.

Norristown, (Penn.) Jan. 17.

On Friday night last, about 8 o'clock, the Chain Bridge at Fleming's Ford was broken down by the weight of a six horse team, loaded with Plaster and Salt. The team was in about the middle of the Bridge, some of the chains and timber gave away, and distressing to relate, the waggon, horses and every, together with an immense quantity of timber and boards, fell from the height of 20 feet on the ice beneath, which gave away and let them all into the water, which was about 11 feet deep. The noise alarmed several persons who were near, who ran to their assistance, just in time to save the driver, and dr aw g—ripes &c. were immediately got, and four of the horses were taken out alive, though not without being cut or bruised considerably, the remaining two were drowned by falling in the fall—the waggon was taken out, but the loading remains in the water.

Raleigh, N. C. Jan. 29.

Remarkable preservation.—Two or three days since, one of the workmen (an Irishman) who was engaged in pulling the shingles from the roof of our Capitol, was accidentally precipitated from his situation, at the top of the building, and must eventually have met with instant death, had he not most providentially been arrested in his descent by a projecting dormer window, which entering deeply into the fleshy part of his thigh, suspended him to the eaves of the house until the necessary aid was afforded him His wound, which was the immediate object of surgical care, is pronounced to be slight, and the honest and industrious laborer is likely soon to be able to make a second ascent, and, we hope, not so dangerous and rapid a descent.—Star.

From the Connecticut Times.

Mr Zachariah Spalding, of Brooklaw, improves 43 acres of Land, he keeps six cows, three yearlings, and thirteen sheep. From his six cows he made the ensuing year, as was ascertained, 2,000 weight of cheese, making an average of 338 pounds to an cow. He also made a considerable quantity of butter and skim cheese, from the same cows. He has a number of hogs fatting which will make 2,400 weight of pork. All this done from the produce of his 43 acres—and he will besides have an ample sufficient for the use of his family for ensuing year. Mr. Spalding is what we commonly call an old fashioned farmer, and does not resort to the experienced mode of purchasing manure and plaster, that many farmers do who obtain great crops. His land is by no means fine land, and the labor does not exceed that of one man, that could be hired for 100 dollars a year.

Last Friday, a man boy advancing on the ice to scrape the end of the North Battery wharf, where the rapidity of the current had kept a space open more than 60 feet square, he fell through, and the edge of the ice was so tough that his efforts to d-liver himself were entirely useless. At this critical moment, Julius Cæsar, who was dining in the vicinity, immediately threw off his coat and jacket, and intrepidly sprang into the water, swam to and seized the boy, and not only held him above the water, but prevented the current from sweeping both under the ice, until some men with a pole, assisted him to push the little fellow upon the ice, and afterwards got up himself. By other person was near enough to have effected timely assistance to the child, and unless his thought and act had been instantaneous, even the generous Cæsar would have been lost in vain. Cæsar is said to be only fifteen years old.

A warning to Youths.—On Saturday last a lad by the name of Lyon, while sliding near the Navy Yard, broke through the ice and must have been drawn under it, had the current been running with its usual force. Boats were immediately sent to his assistance from the Frigate Guerriere, but previous to the sight of the ice, found it too thick to penetrate, when Midshipman James F. Kidd sprung upon it and proceeded without hesitation to the lad's relief and fortunately arrived just in time to save him from a watery grave. We take pleasure in recording instances of this nature, and think it deserves the attention of the Humane Society, whose thanks must certainly be gratifying to a gentleman of such philanthropy.

It appears by an official statement that the Central Bank of Georgetown and Washington, received 92 thousand 500 of counterfeit notes on that Bank as genuine and not discovering the cheat in season to detect those concerned, this amount is lost up the bank. A bad look out.

From the London Courier, Nov. 20.

Her majesty and the mob, yesterday, had their triumphs—though we suspect, if the thoughts of the chief personages in the pageant could be penetrated, they would tell accord with any feelings of exultation. Such a scene as the metropolis yesterday exhibited, ought to have secured a successful issue to candidate, but we have no hesitation in saying it disgraced a Queen. What! A Queen of England partakes in solemn profession through the capital, and just amongst the loudest of the terrest rabble—the most infamous that London can could congregate together.—Where were the nobility of England?—Where were the gentry? Where were the Peeresses, and the ladies of England? Where were the wives and daughters of Queen's these should be marshalled in her train, to do homage to her station, and honor to her character. Alas! not one—a single female was not to be seen in the train.—Even Wood was left to himself, and the Lord Mayor, and his brother Aldermen, or were have permitted their names to swell the list of visitors at Brande-shugh house, was to be found yesterday in all the splendor of his office.

Let us get a step lower, we find, indeed, six Members of Parliament among her followers. Sir! And such a set! Sir Gerard Noel—himself a host in all that regards conjugal virtue and domestic fidelity—Sir Charles Wetherell, that famous pounder of manners without morals—Joseph Hume—the enemy of our Established Church—Peter Moore—with his worthy colleague Mr. Hunt—and last not least—Sir Francis Burdett no less celebrated for his absolute wisdom, than his portable thunderbolts,—and lastly—Sir Robert Wilson—the "stainless knight," the "gallant and generous foe" of every tyrant who ever set a tavern dinner and taste—at meetings. People of England! Read these names! Ponder on the characters of the individuals to whom they belong—and then ask yourselves what the Queen's visit to the City, out of six hundred and forty Members of the House of Commons, found herself honored with their countenance alone.

We have not yet a word upon the burlesque cavalcade of "Gentlemen"—the "Guard of Honor" on horseback—the promiscuous crew of Publicans, Bakers, Butchers, &c. (for such, and no better, were the persons who bestrid their Rosinantes on this occasion. They were only the middle link of the chain, which commenced with the six distinguished Members of Parliament, and ended with a vagabond rabble.

Thus, however, was the Queen attended—and thus we say, she ought to be attended—for thus, nearly, was that attended, when even he had a triumphal procession through the streets of London. Her conduct, however, in other respects, has raised the mob, by defying the government, insulting the King, and reviling the Laws, any always be attended. The Morning Chronicle says, that the "immense multitude of people" at the "grand" of the spectacle which was yesterday exhibited; and the Times explains, "so wish all England could have been present to witness a spectacle which, for the first time, perhaps, never before exhibited!" We join in this wish from the very bottom of our hearts; for if all England—nay, all Europe—could have seen the spectacle, they would have seen the perfection of worship—the purity of Queen Caroline, and the national character would have been rescued. But now—all England and all Europe, will only read of what took place; and alas! the reading will not be sufficient to counteract the effects of the degrading exhibition. The tatterdemalions, whose squalid appearance excited disgust—and whose ferocious aspect might well terrify the timid—were the only persons in a state of decent decription, as a multitude. The few, the very few exceptions to this general character, detract nothing from its accuracy.

In the midst of the splendid pageantry of yesterday, the following lines were not the least extraordinary. Contrary to the express direction of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, as conveyed through other channels, as well as by printed boards in the Cathedral, the audience in the church of yesterday, the following were not the least extraordinary. Contrary to the express direction of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, as conveyed through other channels, as well as by printed boards in the Cathedral by the violence of the city constables who refused to obey all orders emanating from the Dean and Chapter.

A Prodigious Potato.—There were raised, at Galloway-house, near Wigtown, the seat of the Right Honourable the Earl of Galloway, on Wednesday, the 15th November, eight bushels (or eight 60 lb) one pounds) of potatoes, being the produce of one potato, which was raised last season in the field of Egerness, near Carlieston, and preserved by Mr. Kennedy, garden to the Earl of Galloway. The mother potato, which was cut into 8 sets, weighed 3lbs. 7oz. and many of the offspring this year have certainly done justice to such an ancestor, one weighing 3lbs. another 4lbs., a third 3lbs., and many 2lbs. The sets were planted in the open garden in two rows, and received no more attention from Mr Kennedy than any other plants of the same species, being only once covered and hilled up.

Anecdote of the late Gen. Knox since.—This beautiful turned compliment is taken from a Polish journal: a higher eulogy could hardly be prin-ceived on the bone of the late "King," once since wished to send some bottles of good wine to a clergyman at Salisbury; and as he hesitated to send them by his servant lest he should drink a part, he gave the commission to a young man the name of Lobster, and desired him to take the house which he himself usually rode.—On his return young Lobster said that he never would ride his horse again, unless he gave him his purse at the same time. Knowing asking what he meant, he answered, "As soon as a poor stranger the road takes off his hat and asks the charity of a trifle, your horse stands still, and won't stir till something is given to the petitioner; and as I had no money about me, I was afraid I should be driven to give something. In order to satisfy the horse."

Mr. Emlin and Mr. J. Keenble stated some days since that Mr. Kemble had assigned all his property in Covent Garden theatre to his brother. The circumstances attending this generous act of affection deserve to be recorded. It appears that Mr. Kemble had always signified that he intended to bequeath his property, in case of his death, to his brother Charles, but his health not admitting of any more exertions in such a capacity, he determined to anticipate his will, and have the pleasure of bestowing it in person. Mr Charles Kemble had some intimation that his brother intended to make a proof of his affection, but had no conception of the munificence. When the instrument was read, Mr. Charles Kemble was so affected, that he was absolutely deprived of its utterance, and the brothers then fell into each other's arms presenting a scene of the most gratifying nature, and in its effect upon the present present more interesting and impressive than perhaps had ever attended the exertions of their great talents on the stage. It will be gratifying to the public to learn, that Mr. John Kemble has retained what Thompson styles "an elegant sufficiency," which we earnestly hope he will long enjoy, as it is the result of genuine worth and liberality of mind, and will be employed in acts of hospitality and benevolence.

IRELAND.

On the 6th of December, a gentleman was fired upon by a number of highwaymen on the road between Butler's bridge and Ahoe. He escaped without injury. On the same night, a band of robbers, amounting to 30, entered the village of Kilbeggan in the county of Westmeath. They forced their way into a house in which were lodged some of the soldiers of the fifth regiment, who were on their route from Dublin to Athlone, and commenced an attack with them. When they entered the house of G. Brophy, (the proctor at Esker, Kilkenny, murdered him and robbed his house. On the 11th, a person named Prince, a farmer, living at Tullo-hilla upon the fair, was met by four men who demanded his money.—He replied he was but a poor man, but before he had finished his reply, they shot him through the heart. A person in company with Prince made his escape. Some dreadful atrocities have been committed lately in Mayo county. A man had been killed by another with a pitch-fork. His wife was present, and fearing the night previous, that a similar fate would be her's entered, her throat cut, her tongue dragged out and fastened with a large needle to her cheek, in which condition she was left to expire in the agonies of death. It is said that the wretched throat was again cut, but still she survived; a fortnight after, the horrid monster effected his purpose by drowning her.

These dreadful crimes in Ireland are imputed to the extreme poverty that prevails in that country.

SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

Since the latest revolutions in these countries things appear to be in a very unsettled state, arising from the jealousies of the different parties respecting the measures which may be adopted under the new order of affairs. One day every thing appears to be tranquil, and on the day following all is uproar and confusion. Regiments of soldiers parade the streets with loaded cannon, threatening the most serious commotions. In consequence of the great difficulty seems to be in the way of their election laws, which shall give satisfaction to all parties. The party in favour of adopting the Spanish constitution appears to be the strongest, and enforce their will by measures more decisive and alarming than any of their opponents, and the military leaders to swear to whatever they may dictate. These make mounting in some instances to 30,000, meet at night, with flambeaux in hand, in the open fields, to the sound of music, where they demand their will to be obeyed. This unsettled state of things destroys all regular business. The expences of the regiments of cavalry and infantry are enormous, as manifested by the sale of the public journals. One news paper entitled the Star of Lusitania had sold 13,000 copies in the month, and 3000 of the supplement in the evening.

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT OF UPPER CANADA.

Mr. Hatton supported the introduction of this Bill, as he was well convinced that something of the kind was necessary; but to leave it so vague, when it might as well be defined at once, would be such a dooor open for litigation and cross-ruing. His friends assured him, that the evil might prove greater than the benefit. Instead of saying that persons accepting offices of profit & emolu- ments from the Crown," it would be as well to say "all those offices as shall be; as it is well known what offices are at present in the disposal of the Executive Government Commissioners, to the King's Bench, and other such situations which are known to be offices of great trouble, without any little emolument, might otherwise be considered offices of emolument or profit; but to avoid doubt and litigation, and to give the public to learn, that Mr. John Kemble has retained what Thompson styles "an elegant sufficiency," which we earnestly hope he will long enjoy, as it is the result of genuine worth and liberality of mind, and will be employed in acts of hospitality and benevolence.

Mr. Nichol moved that if be resolved, that a conference be requested with the Hon. Legislative Council, on the subject of their amendments to the Bill for securing the independency of the Commons House of Assembly.

Mr. Burwell moved that the House go into consideration of the Bill for the Independency of the Commons House of Assembly in this day three months. The House divided on this motion Yeas 8, Nays 22, Majority, 14.

The motion by Mr. Nichol, for the Conference, was put and agreed.

Mr. Nichol moved that Messrs Baldwin, Kerr, and John Wilson, be a committee to prepare reasons at the conference, to induce the Hon. Legislative Council to recede from their amendments to the Bill for securing the Independency of the Commons House of Assembly.—Ordered.

Mr. Morris moved for leave to bring in a Bill to establish a Market in the Town of Perth, in the county of Carlton.—Ordered, and the Bill read a first time.

Mr. Rogers, from the Committee appointed to inspect the progress of the Bill to Repeal a certain Act, reported that progress against and most attempts, &c. reported that the Bill was read a 1st and 2nd time, referred to a committee of the whole, and had obtained leave to sit again that day at seven.

The House went into the Committee on the Bill for the preservation of deer in this Province.

Mr. Nichol took the chair, and the Bill was read.

Mr. Hagerman thought that no man would commit forgery, but a cool deliberate villain, who should always be united with eagles and ravens, and hold God and man at defiance.

Mr. John Wilson said the Criminal Law of England was too severe, and as this clause by Mr Baldwin went to freeze it more and more, he should support it. He thought it necessary to go into the examination of the Criminal Code at one time; they should begin with one thing first, and in a few years, they would work a wholesome change.

Mr. James Wilson said, they should be very careful, before they should adopt a Law that would take away the life of a fellow mortal. By this Law a man could be executed for uttering or forging a very small note. This Law, took up a good deal of time in debating a Bill for the preservation of Salmon; how much more deliberation, he asked, should they give to that in passing a Bill which would take away the lives of their fellow-men? He was not well acquainted with Laws, and he hoped the House would give him till tomorrow to consider this Bill, as it is a very important one, and he would endeavour to think and even to pray to the Almighty to direct him to such a case. They were talking of establishing a Loan Office in this Province; he thought this would be good, but if we established it with the clause now before the House, many small notes and Bills would get into circulation which might be the means of taking away the lives of many poor unfortunate creatures in this Province; and if they were to pass such a Law, he would request his friends to think and consider this matter, it, before, meet maturely.

Mr. Button said they were now making that Law which was to be the means of taking away the lives of many of their fellow-men. Mr. Baldwin's clause. In they time of the Criminal Law too severe, they should remedy it, otherwise than by such a clause as is proposed.

Mr. Nichol opposed very much the sentiments that fell from the hon. member (Mr Wilson,) and hoped the House would consider that the time was now arrived, when the Criminal Law would be required, and even pray. He would oppose Mr. Baldwin's clause, and support the original Bill; he thought there were strong reasons for doing so. This Bill would make that property which was of little value before; but if it was passed into a Law as proposed, it would, most likely prevent the Bill from passing the other House, and, of course, from passing into a Law. There was a great deal of property in the Province, the loss of which fell from justice in their own country, probably some of them for offences of this nature; if Mr. Baldwin's clause was adopted, these persons would, of course, take the advantage of it, and there were very few Bank Notes, (which that clause excepted) in circulation in this Province.

The motion on Mr. Baldwin's clause was now put and negatived.

The Committee rose, and reported the Bill as amended.

Mr. Nichol moved, that the Message of His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, on the subject of granting a salary to the clerk of the Crown in Chancery, be referred to a Committee of the whole House on Monday next.—Ordered.

The Act House Bill was read a 2d time, and the House went into Committee on it.

Mr. Hagerman explained the object of this Bill, which was to lay a kind of restriction on Beer Houses, by making it necessary for them to take out Licenses: houses of this description, were frequently disorderly, and a great nuisance in many places, particularly in Kingston and York. He thought it necessary they should be under the control of the magistrates in the different Districts.

Mr. Baldwin said this Bill was palpably devised and wrong in all its principles. The hon. mover (Mr. Hagerman) brought a Petition before the House to encourage Breweries, which, he said, should be encouraged as much as possible; yet this Bill went directly to be in direct opposition to that object. He did not know as to the fact that such a Bill was necessary in Kingston; but he did not wish any restriction to be put on Beer Houses in this Province in York. There were many inhabitants in York who kept small shops and sold Beer &c. which afforded them the means of support, and poor strangers and emigrants, coming to Town, were entertained in them, and saved the heavy expence of putting up in Taverns. If these little shops were prevented from keeping Beer, Cider, &c. the persons entertained in them would be obliged to drink spirituous Liquors, procured from taverns and stores. He did not wish to see the interference of the Magistrates in every small transaction of life. This, he said was a grievance in the country at large, and he would always oppose it. Although the

Mr. Nichol supported this Bill; he thought these small Notes and Bills should be legislated.

Mr. James Wilson was of opinion that the Law was too severe on this point. He knew a case where a man was condemned to death for forging the amount of, he believed, twenty shillings; he would wish that all offenders should be punished but not too severely.

Mr. Hagerman said the instrument forged (alluded to by Mr. Wilson) was a Receipt, and this circumstance was an aggravation of the nature of the Offence; and he would submit the sentence in that case; the small Notes and Bills included in this Bill were of a different kind.

Mr. Baldwin said there was one person actually executed in this Province for the sum of 50 dollars; and, however they might deplore the depravity of human nature in these instances, yet, as much lenity should be extended as possible. It would be advisable to talk to strangers from capital punishments, all minor offences in the various transactions between man and man, he would prefer long confinement or some such punishment. He then moved a clause; that every person forging or forging Notes, other than Bank Notes, should be liable to imprisonment for 3 years, or less, at the discretion of the Judge.

Mr. Nichol opposed this clause; he said that banishment from this Province was no punishment at all. He admitted the Criminal Law of England was too severe, but yet some Statutes, he said, were passed by able men; they were very grave things, and should not be hastily altered. He thought there should be a Committee appointed, who would examine the Criminal Law of England, and report.

Mr. J. Jones hoped the Committee would not rise from the clause proposed by Mr. Baldwin. It would be very wrong and unjust, he said, that one man should be executed for forging a Receipt for one shilling, and that a person stealing or forging a large sum, should escape capital punishment.

Mr. Cameron said he thought the Criminal Law of England was too severe, and should be modified to its application to this Province as he conceived nothing of the kind should be done partially; but he would not support Mr. Baldwin's clause.

Mr. Hagerman thought that no man would commit forgery, but a cool deliberate villain, who should always be united with eagles and ravens, and hold God and man at defiance.

Mr. John Wilson said the Criminal Law of England was too severe, and as this clause by Mr Baldwin went to freeze it more and more, he should support it. He thought it necessary to go into the examination of the Criminal Code at one time; they should begin with one thing first, and in a few years, they would work a wholesome change.

Mr. James Wilson said, they should be very careful, before they should adopt a Law that would take away the life of a fellow mortal. By this Law a man could be executed for uttering or forging a very small note. This Law, took up a good deal of time in debating a Bill for the preservation of Salmon; how much more deliberation, he asked, should they give to that in passing a Bill which would take away the lives of their fellow-men? At 6 o'clock P. M. the House adjourned till 11 to morrow.

March 9th.

The Deer preservation Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Illegal Marriage Bill was read a 3d time, and on motion for its passing, the House divided Yeas 21, Nays 19, Majority 2.

Mr. Rogers in absence of Mr. Baldwin, moved a clause, as a Rider, that the Illegal Marriage Bill continue in force for two years, and no longer. The House divided on this motion for 12, against it 14.

The Bill to legislate the issuing of small notes, &c. in this Province, was read a 2d time, and the House went into Committee on it.

Mr. Hagerman, (Atty. Gen.) explained the object of this Bill which was principally to remedy the inconvenience arising from the illegality of small Notes and Bills in the Province, and to put in the power of the Law to punish persons forging or stealing the same.

Mr. Baldwin opposed this Bill in a speech of considerable length; it was not the object he said to legislate against, or adopting generally the Criminal Law of England in this Province. By the Criminal Law of England, if this Bill passed, a person would be subject to capital punishment for forging a Receipt for two shillings. He thought the House should therefore be very cautious in passing this Bill, as the principal object of it was, the passing and issuing of Notes &c. in 1816. The Criminal Law of England, he said, was much too severe on this point, and nothing, but the Commercial weight of that country, could justify it. He did not think that any inconvenience sustained by the country, on account of the illegality of these small Notes, would justify the passing of this Bill, or called for Legislative interference.

Mr. J. Jones said these small Notes and Bills were at present illegal; if the House thought they should be legal, they could pass the Bill; otherwise they would reject it: he thought as to the necessity of their being legal, there could not be a second opinion; it was much to the adv magistrates might think they acted rightly, they often entertain'd strong prejudices, &c. so as to limit power, have acted under them to the very great injury of His Majesty's subjects; therefore, he would not allow them to interfere, unless in case of absolute necessity; such interference was not for thought property & for such purposes as this Province. In Scotland, where such matters are well regulated, the magistrates were not allowed much interference; yet the horrors of the people were generally known, and the country was regulated to a much better way. He thought that the Revenue arising from this Bill would be very trifling, and its effects on this class of inhabitants would be so bad, as to deprive many of support; but also for the good of the country, he very much wished, which would hold out continual encouragement to informers. If this Law passed, many a poor widow's last blanket would be sold, and a few pence for the price of it would go into the pocket of the informer; this would completely destroy many a poor person now struggling for a living, and he would never consent to such a Bill.

Mr. Hagerman explained; he said this Bill was well considered; it was first suggested to him by the Magistrates of the Town of Kingston, and if it was necessary there, he thought it was so here also. The principal object in the Bill was to place this description of people under the direction of the Magistrates. Many persons now were permitted to sell Beer, sold Spirituous Liquors, to the disadvantage of the Revenue who took out Licenses for Taverns; it was only the lower order of persons who frequented these houses, and every description of mischief originated in them.—As to the arrears, he supposed he believed there were not three farmers in the Province who would not sign a petition to get them under a proper regulation if it was in whose case, they would be kept in a state of misery, & it was in many cases, the persons would rather go to them than to Taverns. This Bill, he admitted, might affect a poor widow, to some bottoms, and should not put much into the Treasury; not he thought it would do great service to the country at large. He was informed by the Magistrates of Kingston, that three houses were a more cover to sell Spirituous Liquors, and he knew himself, that many gentlemen had been taken up before on his account, in Kingston. These regulations were found necessary in England; it was a matter of little personal consequence to him, but he hoped it would engage the notice of the House.

Mr. Nichol did not concur altogether in what fell from either of the hon. gentlemen, (Messrs. Baldwin and Hagerman,) he thought they were both wrong; some deviation from the middle ground between, that had been by both, should be adopted. It was necessary to make some regulation to keep these houses in order; but Magistrates were too fond of granting licenses for little matter, and should not be encouraged in so doing. The partial manner in which no Magistrates acted in Canada, occupied the consideration of the House of Commons three or four long time; and the Magistrates in this Province were very inferior to them, in point of information. Magistrates were also frequently interested, who, having houses to let, or being in public business, should always be excluded from granting Taverns with License, &c. He did not think that any new regulation was necessary for the construction of these houses selling Spirits, as the hon. owner of Pic. Bill stated, that the same had been taken place under the present regulation. He objected also to the Preamble of this Bill, which sets forth that these houses were frequently disorderly—if this were the case, they could be indicted.

Mr. Baldwin thought the whole object of this Bill was, that a few Magistrates in Kingston put their heads together for the purpose of suppressing a few disorderly houses in that description, in the Town of Kingston; but by making it a general Bill, they would suppress many useful houses, kept by well conducted and decent individuals; and that the persons selling Beer, &c. however orderly, would still be as open to the informer and the Magistrate, as those who were disorderly. There were, he said, many houses of this kind in the Town of York; but not one of them disorderly; on the contrary, well conducted. He thought the Bill unwise and unjust in all its bearings, and hoped it would never pass this House.

Mr. Boulton said he would not allow the Magistrates to shut these houses, but was still of opinion they should be licensed. He said he would propose a clause making it necessary for them to take out Licenses under a very small duty, and also to give some security to keep orderly houses. These houses, he thought, were very useful, and it was much better that persons should be encouraged to sell and drink Beer, Cider, &c. than Spirituous Liquors; therefore, he would not consent to any measure that would limit their number.

Mr. Baldwin would oppose this amendment, and the whole tenor of the Bill in any shape. Take away the sale of Spirituous Liquors, and would not bear any comparison with London or Countries. Many persons, incapable of labour, support themselves by this means, and if this Bill passed would be deprived of that opportunity. They were generally poor, and often strangers, who kept these houses, and could not possibly pay one but to any amount.

Mr. C. Jones heard an extraordinary from the hon. mover of this Bill (Mr. Hagerman,) to make him to believe that this Bill was necessary, on such general predictions. It was true as inhabitants were so very fine orderly as he (Mr. Jones) could wish, the Bill was necessary, he could if very much with the hon. mover; but he (Mr. Jones) could assure him, that there was no necessity whatever for it in any other part of the Province.

Mr. Rattan believed this Bill was to be necessary in Kingston, and would support the Bill for that Town alone; but thought it quite unnecessary for any other Town in the Province.

Mr. J. Jones would oppose the measure of confining this Bill to any Town; it was well known, he said, that Beer houses of the most disorderly kind, were kept in every part of this Province.

A message having been sent down from the Hon. Legislative Council, with amendments made by them, to the Bill for the preservation of Salmon, the Clerk was ordered to carry the same to the Chair, and those amendments were read.—To report 2 Thursday next Monday.

Committee of the whole on the Ale House Bill.

Mr. J. Jones resumed.—He thought the Bill should be granted, as it was the value of any revenue arising in that way, but that those Houses should be under the regulation of Magistrates, in the different Districts. He should support the amendment by Mr. Nichol.

The Atty Gen'l considered this Bill useful and necessary. He did intend to have brought in a Bill of that kind himself during this Session, but this one not been introduced; he thought the hon. member (Mr. Baldwin) might take the intention of this Bill. He concurred in most of what fell from the hon. member (Mr. Nichol) on this subject, and thought these houses should be under recognizance to keep them orderly; they should come under the same rules and regulations as Taverns & inns, and if disorderly, they should be suppressed; that was the great object of the Licence. Some improvement, he said, might perhaps be made in the Bill; but in its present shape, a good one. He saw nothing harsh or wrong in it, and would support it.

Mr. John Wilson said, when this Bill was first proposed, he objected to it as speaking to the country in general; there was not town or village between York and Sandwich, where it was at all necessary for these houses to take out Licence. He thought it was right to mention such towns in the Bill as supported orders.

Mr. Gordon was of opinion that the revenue suffered very much by these houses being suffered to exist in such numbers; it was well known that they generally sold Spirituous Liquors, and frequently caused Tavern Keepers to give up their Licence in the neighbourhoods where they were.

Mr. Martin would support the Bill in the present state; if confined to York or Kingston, he would support it. In his part of the country, there were many houses of this description, and of no injury whatever; but if the Bill was altered, he would propose an amendment to it, if it meet the approbation of the Committee.

Mr. Allan McLean could not concur in what fell from the hon. member from York; he believed there was a petition not long since from York for this purpose. It was thought improper to allow the Magistrates to regulate these houses; but they regulated Taverns, and why not houses of this description?

Mr. Baldwin moved that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again this day three months.—Negatived.

Mr. Arch. McLean thought this Bill was necessary, those houses did great injury to the Taverns Keepers, who took out Licence, as they generally sold Spirituous Liquors.

Mr. Clerk would oppose this Bill extending to the Town of Niagara; Beer-houses were very great accommodations to the poor people, and he knew them to be kept very orderly.

Mr. Baldwin would oppose the Bill in every stage and shape, it was unjust, unwise, and unreasonable, and if it passed it ill, would some evil as garbled in the end, that it would be a most abominable bill.

Mr. Arch. McLean thought this Bill must be attended to the vicinity of all the large Towns, as persons residing in the Country Parts would have a great advantage over the inhabitants of the Town, if this were not the case.

Mr. John Wilson moved an amendment, that this Bill be confined to the Town and Village of Kingston, (the word "described" was afterward substituted.) This clause was adopted.

Mr. Nichol said, the adoption of such clause, in the Committee of the whole, was at variance with all Parliamentary proceedings, it was adopting an amendment on an amendment. He would rather see the whole Bill lost in any Parliamentary House, than adopt such a clause.

Mr. James Wilson said, these houses were a very great grievance all over the Province, and thought the Bill should not be confined to Kingston; it was very hard to be obliged to be obliged to take out License for a Tavern, and that a person would be allow'd to keep a beer house contiguous to him, who sold Spirits frequently without Licence; he wished these houses to keep time; and the Magistrates in this Province were very inferior to them, in point of information. Magistrate were also frequently interested, who, having houses to let, or being in public business, should always be excluded from granting Taverns with Licence, &c. Mr. Clerk would oppose this Bill extending to the Town of Niagara; Beer-houses were very great accommodations to the poor people, and he knew them to be kept very orderly.

Mr. Baldwin would oppose the Bill in every stage and shape, it was unjust, unwise, and unreasonable, and if it passed it ill, would some evil as garbled in the end, that it would be a most abominable bill.

Mr. Arch. McLean thought this Bill must be attended to the vicinity of all the large Towns, as persons residing in the Country Parts would have a great advantage over the inhabitants of the Town, if this were not the case.

Mr. John Wilson moved an amendment, that this Bill be confined to the Town and Village of Kingston. (the word "described" was afterward substituted.) This clause was adopted.

Mr. Nichol said, the adoption of such clause, in the Committee of the whole, was at variance with all Parliamentary proceedings, it was adopting an amendment on an amendment. He would rather see the whole Bill lost in any Parliamentary House, than adopt such a clause.

Mr. James Wilson said, these houses were a very great grievance all over the Province, and thought the Bill should not be confined to Kingston; it was very hard to be obliged to be obliged to take out License for a Tavern, and that a person would be allow'd to keep a beer house contiguous to him, who sold Spirits frequently without Licence; he wished these houses to keep time; and the Magistrates in this Province were very inferior to them, in point of information. Magistrate were also frequently interested, who, having houses to let, or being in public business, should always be excluded from granting Taverns with Licence, &c. He did not think that any new regulation was necessary for the construction of these houses selling Spirits, as the hon. owner of Pic. Bill stated, that the same had been taken place under the present regulation. He objected also to the Preamble of this Bill, which sets forth that these houses were frequently disorderly—if this were the case, they could be indicted.

Mr. Baldwin thought the whole object of this Bill was, that a few Magistrates in Kingston put their heads together for the purpose of suppressing a few disorderly houses in that description, in the Town of Kingston; but by making it a general Bill, they would suppress many useful houses, kept by well conducted and decent individuals; and that the persons selling Beer, &c. however orderly, would still be as open to the informer and the Magistrate, as those who were disorderly. There were, he said, many houses of this kind in the Town of York; but not one of them disorderly; on the contrary, well conducted. He thought the Bill unwise and unjust in all its bearings, and hoped it would never pass this House.

Mr. Boulton said he would not allow the Magistrates to shut these houses, but was still of opinion they should be licensed. He said he would propose a clause making it necessary for them to take out Licence under a very small duty, and also to give some security to keep orderly houses. These houses, he thought, were very useful, and it was much better that persons should be encouraged to sell and drink Beer, Cider, &c. than Spirituous Liquors; therefore, he would not consent to any measure that would limit their number.

Mr. Baldwin would oppose this amendment, and the whole tenor of the Bill in any shape. Take away the sale of Spirituous Liquors, and would not bear any comparison with London or Countries. Many persons, incapable of labour, support themselves by this means, and if this Bill passed would be deprived of that opportunity. They were generally poor, and often strangers, who kept these houses, and could not possibly pay one but to any amount.

Mr. C. Jones heard an extraordinary from the hon. mover of this Bill (Mr. Hagerman,) to make him to believe that this Bill was necessary, on such general predictions. It was true as inhabitants were so very fine orderly as he (Mr. Jones) could wish, the Bill was necessary, he could if very much with the hon. mover; but he (Mr. Jones) could assure him, that there was no necessity whatever for it in any other part of the Province.

Mr. Rattan believed this Bill was to be necessary in Kingston, and would support the Bill for that Town alone; but thought it quite unnecessary for any other Town in the Province.

Mr. J. Jones would oppose the measure of confining this Bill to any Town; it was well known, he said, that Beer-houses of the most disorderly kind, were kept in every part of this Province.

A message having been sent down from the Hon. Legislative Council, with amendments made by them, to the Bill for the preservation of Salmon, the Clerk was ordered to carry the same to the Chair, and those amendments were read.—To report 2 Thursday next Monday.

Committee of the whole on the Ale House Bill.

Mr. J. Jones resumed.—He thought the Bill should be granted, as it was the value of any revenue arising in that way, but that those Houses should be under the regulation of Magistrates, in the different Districts. He should support the amendment by Mr. Nichol.

The Atty Gen'l considered this Bill useful and necessary. He did intend to have brought in a Bill of that kind himself during this Session, but this one not been introduced; he thought the hon. member (Mr. Baldwin) might take the intention of this Bill. He concurred in most of what fell from the hon. member (Mr. Nichol) on this subject, and thought these houses should be under recognizance to keep them orderly; they should come under the same rules and regulations as Taverns & inns, and if disorderly, they should be suppressed; that was the great object of the Licence. Some improvement, he said, might perhaps be made in the Bill; but in its present shape, a good one. He saw nothing harsh or wrong in it, and would support it.

Mr. John Wilson said, when this Bill was first proposed, he objected to it as speaking to the country in general; there was not town or village between York and Sandwich, where it was at all necessary for these houses to take out Licence. He thought it was right to mention such towns in the Bill as supported orders.

Mr. Gordon was of opinion that the revenue suffered very much by these houses being suffered to exist in such numbers; it was well known that they generally sold Spirituous Liquors, and frequently caused Tavern Keepers to give up their Licence in the neighbourhoods where they were.

Mr. Martin would support the Bill in the present state; if confined to York or Kingston, he would support it. In his part of the country, there were many houses of this description, and of no injury whatever; but if the Bill was altered, he would propose an amendment to it, if it meet the approbation of the Committee.

Mr. Allan McLean could not concur in what fell from the hon. member from York; he believed there was a petition not long since from York for this purpose. It was thought improper to allow the Magistrates to regulate these houses; but they regulated Taverns, and why not houses of this description?

Mr. Baldwin moved that the Committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again this day three months.—Negatived.

Mr. Arch. McLean thought this Bill was necessary, those houses did great injury to the Taverns Keepers, who took out Licence, as they generally sold Spirituous Liquors.

Mr. Clerk would oppose this Bill extending to the Town of Niagara; Beer-houses were very great accommodations to the poor people, and he knew them to be kept very orderly.

Mr. Baldwin would oppose the Bill in every stage and shape, it was unjust, unwise, and unreasonable, and if it passed it ill, would some evil as garbled in the end, that it would be a most abominable bill.

CATO'S LETTER TO THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHERWOOD

[From the New Times, of Nov. 21, 1820.]

My Lord—To no one can I with so much propriety as to yourself, both from public and personal reasons, address this Letter, on the late conduct and decision of the House of Peers. Your being associated with that class of men in the House who profess to have no party interests, and who, it is but justice to say, abstain, for occasional errors, practice what they profess, in your opinion and unwearied discharge of your duties, while a Member of the Lower House; your extensive knowledge of the great interests of your country, and your steady endeavours to promote them, have all excited in me the highest admiration of your public conduct, while it has perhaps been increased by the circumstance of our being natives of the same county If therefore, this Letter become more of censure than panegyric, it cannot be ascribed to personal prejudice, or to the blind asperity of a political antagonist.

Seldom has the House of Peers been placed in so delicate and candled a situation as that in which it was placed by the late Bill of Pains and Penalties. It was called upon to legislate for Virtue, and to pronounce judgment upon Royalty itself; the King and the Country were alike matters of its Bar, the one arraying reasons for outraged honour, the other for outraged laws and outraged reputation, and both seeking security for the future. If the momentous subject embraced neither Foreign or Political Relations or Domestic Stumbles, it was of still higher import; it involved the whole character of the Nation, as it is comprehended, not the mere details, but the essence of national welfare; the lords were called upon, not to add to, or degrade the Constitution, but to save its very ground-work—its stability. That Illustrious was, directing his sole attention to foreign alliances and acquisitions, and the gross matters of revenue and expenditure, overlooks the morals and religion of his country, will soon be without an object to guard, or ally to treat with, and a country to govern. The novelty of the case, most unanswerable argument was should have been used as the high trust of the accused person, the unfortunate unseemly point your vote. The element of nineteen twentieths of the who had transacted business in Europe, and who had seen the Nations upon the throne of Peter the great, not of England only, but of brought against the King's wife was false; they had no competthe world; this immense and general current was united by the freedom of the country as they knew no other. It has put a question to the slippery nature of the Whigs, and they conceived that when every thing else, so far as I have been able, " If she be guilty, ought every Lord would honor that every error would be remarked. she to be the Queen ?" and the prompt and emphatic answer every trifling inconsistency detected and made shamed, and every has invariably been, from the most furious of them, " No, if breach of honesty and principle made public, she could not but be the object of universal contempt and detestation, never to be forgotten,—regard for reputation she would be a disgrace it." I believe this opinion, setting the would supply every deficiency of subjects, and that will have leaders out of the question, to be nearly universal. If, Lords (spoken in the pride of duty and honour) over all the corrupt against, and the public insults which were cast upon, her virtu influences of Royalty and Ministers, over all the terrors of the ous character, which those who compose it bear in Italy, their extinction, and past history, your Lordship cannot be unacquainted. all other restraints. It was a sweet day for Whigs and Radicals, and a right merry holiday, " greeted upon pipe and tabor." They viewed the motley host with surprise and admiration, numbered it five, and listened to its reports, praised its exploits, doled out to it secret supplies, and regarded it as the force with which they should storm the Treasury. A change of their conduct in the House of Peers was now necessary, and Lord Erskine, with a hardened, which I believe no other man in the House could have displayed on the occasion, immediately set to own words, at that time of the Queen's return, and re-clothed with all the brazen which his position long could supply, the empty and unmeaning fallacious opinion with which the radical speakers and writers out of doors could furnish him. As the proceedings advanced, hope, that the future will not be even worse than the past ? said as the cult of the King's wife became more apparent, the House she as I with more propriety—how herself more capable Whig Lords acted with less and less decency, they were content by naked their indirect portmanteau of hopes of office upon the measure, and trusted it as more popular action. No other consequence would have flowed from their conduct ? Are her answers to Addresses now less libel-ous than they were before the Bill ? Are her powers of mischief, or her character for decision, more circumscribed ? Are the powers of the Peers had not, unfortunately, been bewildered by the ideas of some mad-headed individuals of independency, and they, in consequence, were led to act in a manner which they knew to be disgusting at a speculative and controverted point of doctrine! they hope, tumbled into a net which the Whigs with characteristic infancy had spread, and were dragged till the next session, that the same woman had plotted its reputation, violated its laws, squandered its money in the most criminal manner, and that she would do so again—see with its contempt, and if placed her at the head, to mock, and to curse and blaspheme the King, and to furnish matter and conduct for the whole of its families to copy. Having done this, the Peers say, rated! Its not for me to point the dotes of their world, or to anticipate the contempt of posterity, but let them not expect to escape either the one or the other.

Your vote and example, my Lord, are understood to have greatly contributed to this deplorable issue ; the surprise which that vote gave me, was only equalled by that which I felt, on perusing the speech which accompanied it. If the one seemed to be given in breach of every duty of a Judge, the other seemed to be spoken in ignorance of every maxim of a Statesman. You are represented to have admitted your conviction of the guilt, and to have stated, that you opposed the Bill on the ground of public clamour. From what part of the nation, my Lord, did this clamour proceed ? From the Nobility—the Clergy—the Gentry—the Whigs—the Tories—the remnants of the party of the Whigs—the Agricultural, Commercial, or Manufacturing Interests ? No! All these were, either passive, or in favour of the measure. Who then were the clamourers ? The demagogues who have been so long endeavouring to drive the nation to revolution; the dupes who were so lately in a open insurrection against the Constitution, and from whom there was every reason to expect, on any initial movement, Addresses of by cart loads. What were the grounds of this clamour ? Knowledge of the Queen's conduct ? Knowledge of the evidence ? Knowledge of the documents on which the measure was founded ? Not one tittle. It notoriously began with the most blind and complete ignorance on the subject and it was as notoriously the offspring of the most gross delusion. The most abominable principles were put in circulation. Where did this clamour exist ? Almost exclusively in London; and can you find any surprise at it, when you are acquainted with the political feelings which pervaded London and Westminster the many thousands of guineas which have been expended in distributing gratuitous seditious placards and newspapers—the incessant activity which the mob leaders have displayed, and the numerous and base temptations which have been employed to mislead and seduce the populace; Is it for a chancer like this,—raised by such persons, on such grounds, and by such means—that the Peers have given to the Nobles of the land, and guarded—as honour sacrificed—its laws violated—its Crown polluted—its religion and morals endangered, and its Legislature degraded in the eyes ? Shame, shame !! " Publish it not in Gath ! —tell it not to the daughters at Ascalon !"

Your Lordship is requested, by the most sacred duties to your conscience, that when this clamour subsided, the public mind would have been calm and collected, and that the Bill would have been passed by a vast majority. Is it for a chancer like this,—raised by such persons, on such grounds, and by such means—that the Peers have given to the Nobles of the land, and to the world this immense and general current was united by the freedom of the country as they knew no other. Having done this, the Peers say, rated! Its not for me to point the dotes of their world, or to anticipate the contempt of posterity, but let them not expect to escape either the one or the other.

Your vote and example, my Lord, are understood to have greatly contributed to this deplorable issue ; the surprise which that vote gave me, was only equalled by that which I felt, on perusing the speech which accompanied it. If the one seemed to be given in breach of every duty of a Judge, the other seemed to be spoken in ignorance of every maxim of a Statesman. You are represented to have admitted your conviction of the guilt, and to have stated, that you opposed the Bill on the for its violence, and its consideration regard for the privileges of the subject. He found the country engaged in a desperate war—apparently exhausted—without an ally, and almost without a friend ; and under the guidance it rose in the very plenitude of its greatness. Its fleets and its armies of glory which had not been equalled in its name. Every heart upon each hand, round her throne, the proudest to see for friendship, and the humblest to offer blessings. Why is he now deserted ? Why is that power, of which the memory of his services would reconcile for meritorious conduct, withheld ? And why is that justice, which the meanest of his subjects could obtain, denied him ? Posterity will judge between him and his ungrateful country. It do justice to his reputation, if it can restore soothe his feelings our redress his wrongs.

It I am vainly instructed, my Lord, with regard to the Constitution of my country, the very highest and the most sacred of the duties of the House of Peers, as a separate estate of the realm, is to form a barrier between the Crown and the People, to protect the prerogatives, rights, and privileges of both from the encroachments of either ; to poise the scales equally between them, and to add weight to the one as the other preponderates. In the late struggle between them, the interference of the Commons was an act of aggression. The Crown ought not to extend its prerogatives, nor to infringe on popular rights, but to obtain redress for wrongs, and protection from dishonour ; it sought these legally and constitutionally, and, had they been granted, the nation would have gained by them still more than itself. Has not the House of Peers in this instance been guilty of a gross breach of its duty ? Has it not suffered the most wicked, insolent, and unprincipled, and unconstitutional effort, against equitable right and lawful claim ? Let the Lords lay their hands on their hearts and answer these questions before God and their Country. The democratic Peer is the most crazy of all political masters, and the most blind of all political services. Like the sun to the planets, the Throne gives to the Nobles office, and light, and harmony, and beauty. Behind—they share in the obscuration, and freeze from the chill. Destroyed—they fly into chaos, dash each other to pieces by collision, or fall into the frightful abyss of which nothing but darkness is known.

The time for judicial proceedings is past, but something may yet be done by individual conduct and example. Among the rightful duties of the Peers is that of endeavouring to put an end to the Italian Court in the midst of us. With the characters which those who compose it bear in Italy, their extinction, and past history, your Lordship cannot be unacquainted. The question of the Queen's guilt or innocence ought never to have been brought before the Peers who have voted against the Bill, particularly of those Peers who have been invited to be present on new occasions. It is painful to me to enter on the question, and it is not necessary, it can be more forcibly answered by the consciences of those to whom it is addressed.

Public clamour, my Lord, furnished you with your sole argument against the Bill, but, if you had reflected a moment, publication would have furnished you with the most unanswerable arguments in favour. Have you not ignored the King's crimes, and even allowed him to speak ? Have you not ignored the Queen's ? Have you not ignored the organization of the Administration, the Bill was passed, the gratuitous plunder and murder were dying about the country in all directions; the whole cost of Retention took the people of England, and all its leaders were crushed for ever. Are her powers of mischief, or her character for decision, more circumscribed ? Are the powers of the Peers had not, unfortunately, been bewildered by the ideas of some mad-headed individuals of independency, and they, in consequence, were led to act in a manner which they knew to be disgusting at a speculative and controverted point of doctrine! they hope, tumbled into a net which the Whigs with characteristic infancy had spread, and were dragged till the next session, that the same woman had plotted its reputation, violated its laws, squandered its money in the most criminal manner, and that she would do so again—see with its contempt, and if placed her at the head, to mock, and to curse and blaspheme the King, and to furnish matter and conduct for the whole of its families to copy. Having done this, the Peers say, rated! Its not for me to point the dotes of their world, or to anticipate the contempt of posterity, but let them not expect to escape either the one or the other.

Your vote and example, my Lord, are understood to have greatly contributed to this deplorable issue ; the surprise which that vote gave me, was only equalled by that which I felt, on perusing the speech which accompanied it. If the one seemed to be given in breach of every duty of a Judge, the other seemed to be spoken in ignorance of every maxim of a Statesman. You are represented to have admitted your conviction of the guilt, and to have stated, that you opposed the Bill on the

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY,

March 16th.

The House went into Committee on the Tavern Licence Bill and after some discussion on the propriety of continuing the present statute granting Magistrates the power of regulating the Licence duty according to the situation, the sense of the House seemed opposed to it, and the Committee rose without making any Report.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the whole on the Report of the Committee of Finance.

A very long debate took place on this Report, which was principally on points of Order, and on the mode of shaping an offer which, the Committee rose and obtained leave to sit again to-morrow.

The Bill to amend the Laws respecting Forfeited Estates was sent down from the Hon. Legislative Council with some amendments, which were read, and Mr. J. Jones moved that these amendments be read a 2d time to-morrow.—Ordered.

March 17th.

Mr. Randall moved for leave to bring up the Petition of E. Whiting of the London District.—Ordered.

Mr. Hagerman moved for leave to bring up the Petition of the Inhabitants of Whitchurch and E. Gwillimbury.—Ordered.

The House went into Committee on the Report of the Select Committee of Finance.

Mr. Nichol proposed several Resolutions founded on the Report, some of which were adopted, and the Committee then reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on Monday next.

The Bill for regulating the Commercial Intercourse with the United States of America was read a 2d time, and the House went into Committee on it.

Mr. Hagerman explained the object of this Bill. He hoped the intercourse with the U. States would be put on a more permanent footing than heretofore; he was not inclined to encourage an intercourse in such a way, as to prejudice the people of Upper Canada. The agricultural class, it was their bounden dogous to sit at the same table with Bergami's sister, when her ante infamous ones and duties are in evidence before the world, be shunned as one in whom modesty has no part, and chastity but a shadow. It would prevent goods from coming from one country into this Province. There were many poor people in this Province, who had not the means of supplying themselves and their families with the necessaries of life, but from the United States, if they were to impose such restrictions, as would raise the price of provisions on these people. There were now the representation of the " Autocrator," or of a party for " Bindman's Bay?" and he hoped that the answer would be satisfaction ; it might afford leisure for thought, and perhaps—faint ey as is the hope, it ought to be indulged by the Christian—lead to repentance.

On such men as your Lordship and Mr. Wilberforce, myself and that part of the nation whose purity is our country, and whose purity predicates new governments by the superiority, in point of interests and principles, of one set of men over another, rest our hopes in this tremendous crisis; but we expect you to be firm, as well as upright, and to act courageously, as well as uprightly. Impressed with the most religious and moral principles, and the most religious and real, whom she has exfreedom is on the eve of destruction from those who adopt it as their motto and cant to its favor, and the Crown, instead of seeking protection and support in its people, is, by unconstitutionally occupied, in defending its just rights from the incessant attacks of an infuriated democracy. Old feelings are lost; the fine, plastic, enthusiastic spirit which once enveloped the country in spiritual dreams—and that she should be severed from her, and which is now in the place, cold, contracted, selfish, arrogant, & ferocious, which sagacious and senseless as the beast of the field, conceives all her power for the consumption of the Province. The same remarks might apply, he said, to Iron; there was, he believed sufficient ore in the country, but it was not sufficiently worked. He would admit articles for the consumption of the Lower Province, such as Flour, Pork, Pot Ash, Staves, &c. free of duty. This, he said, would bring the carrying trade into the hands of the Canadians; but if they laid prohibitory duties on these articles & required bonds, it would ultimately prevent them coming to this side altogether, as many Farmers could not and would not apply for bonds here, and would be obliged to sell their goods down on their own side to the great injury of the inhabitants of this Province. The sole object, he said, of the great Western Canal, in the state of New York, was, to draw the produce of this part of the States from the market of Montreal and Quebec, to the market of New York, with the produce also of the Western Country. Another consideration was, that the West India market was principally supplied with Flour and Pork, of American produce ; but withstanding the present non-intercourse prevented this, yet, it was well known that these articles were shipped for other free Ports and from them to those Islands and if this mode was found too troublesome they smuggled them. If they admitted the American Flour free of duty, they would still be supply those markets, as it acquired a new character when admitted here, and transported down on the Canadian side. It was the well known policy of the States to prevent their produce from going down the St. Lawrence and, said with this view they have made the great Canal. Mr. H. proceeded at some length on this subject, and concluded by observing that all remote advertised as Packets, used in the trade between this Province and the United States, should be free of tonnage duty, or pay only according to the cargo they contained each trip. This Act, he said should extend, as the present Act, which was limited to the next session of Parliament, it would tend to prevent merchants from entering into extensive speculations.

Mr. Nichol rose, not to make general objections, but to make a few remarks in detail. He concurred in a great measure with the hon. member (Mr. Hagerman); but on looking over the Bill, some things struck him as contrary to the interest of this Province, among them, was the article of Flour, free of duty. Although he would not object to Flour being admitted for exportation, he would oppose it for home consumption, as it would be doing manifest injustice to our own people. There would be an uncertainty in depending on the American produce to supply the West India market, and unless they were certain of a supply they would never send here for it ; they might, in that case, send their flour to Montreal, but they would not meet a demand for it, unless there was a certainty of a supply. He would limit this Act to one year, because then was a Committee investigating the whole resources of this Province, and it would be very wrong to be deprived of any advantage that might arise from their researches. He thought there should be a correspondence with Lower Canada, on this important subject; they were confined to that market to buy, and should, in justice, have the privilege to sell there as since these also. He would admit Pot and Pearl Ashes, free of duty, as he thought this Province could not at present supply them. He agreed with the hon. mover as to the Acts for Packets, and thought they should be free of tonnage duty.—This Bill he said would have come well from the Committee of Resources, and wished it to be deferred until their Report should come in.

Mr. C Jones concurred in the sentiments of the hon. mover of this Bill, and was happy to find the hon. member from Norfolk agreeing in the principal points with them. Every facility should be afforded to the importation of articles intended for exportation : Bonding and other restrictions imposed upon those also, other exported to the United States, had been found injurious to the interests of this Province. In consequence of the existing restrictions, the farmers and merchants in the United States shipped their flour and other articles from some of the lower ports on the St. Lawrence, direct to the markets of the lower Province ; which articles, if admitted freely into our Province, would very much increase the carrying trade, and thereby afford employment to many persons who were inclined to industrious habits, and would also be the means of very much increasing the circulating medium. There was no person on this House who was more opposed to this Bill generally than he was, but only objected to some of its clauses, which he thought would operate against the best interests of this Province. In consequence of the Bill not having been printed for the use of the House, he could not speak to the particular clauses of it, but would reserve his observations until it came before the House.

Mr. Hagerman explained the object of this Bill. He hoped the intercourse with the U. States would be put on a more permanent footing than heretofore; he was not inclined to encourage an intercourse in such a way, as to prejudice the people of Upper Canada. The agricultural class, it was their bounden dogous to sit at the same table with Bergami's sister, when her ante infamous ones and duties are in evidence before the world, be shunned as one in whom modesty has no part, and chastity but a shadow. Mr. McDonell moved, that the House do now go into Committee of the whole on Supplies ; the House divided on the question ; Yeas, 15, Nays 18, Majority 3.

The House was called over on the Frontier contested Election.

Mr. McNabb, hon. Deputy Sergeant at Arms, who proceeded to arrest Messrs. Fortune and Russell, in consequence of his disobedience to the summons of the Speaker of the House of Assembly, had returned without Mr. Fortune, and was called to the Bar, and interrogated. He said when he went there, Mr. Fortune was in the Lower Province ; witness followed him into the Lower Province, he believed nearly 30 miles, and saw Mr. Fortune there who was in company with Hon. Hamilton Esq. Judge of the District Court, brother to the sitting member, and a Mr. Strange; witness told Mr. Fortune his business, and asked him to go before the House of Assembly, Mr. Fortune said he would go to-morrow morning ; Mr. Fortune told witness that he should come with him, if he would give him two hours to arrange some business for his family ; witness agreed to wait ; but after the exposition of this time Mr. Fortune told witness that he was advised by Judge Hamilton not to come with him, and therefore refused to do so, witness asked Judge Hamilton if he was this advice, in presence of Mr. Fortune, but he denied it, Capt. Bradley told Witness that Mrs Fortune and they were aware of the proceedings against Mr Fortune, before witness went down to arrest Mr. Fortune.

Mr. Nichol moved, that it be resolved, that the conduct of J. Fortune, Esq. Returning Officer at the last Election for the Frontenac contested Election, in refusing to receive the vote of Peter Ditts, is highly contemptuous, a direct violation of his oath of Office, and flagrant breach of the Privileges of this House. This Resolution was carried unanimously.

Mr. Nichol moved, that it be resolved, That an humble Address be presented to his Excellency the Lieut. Governor, informing him of the above Resolution, and requesting that he will be pleased to direct J. Fortune, Esq. from every situation which he may hold under the Crown.

The House divided on the above Resolution, when there appeared in favour of it 20, against it 3, Majority 27.

Mr. Nichol moved that a free conference be appointed with the Hon. Legislative Council on the subject of the detached Townships.

The Atty. Genl. moved for leave to bring up the Petition of Geo. Duggan, and others, inhabitants of the Town of York.—Ordered.

Mr. Baldwin moved for leave to bring up the Petition of several inhabitants of the District of London.—Ordered.

At half past 6 o'clock the House adjourned till 12 noon to-morrow.

March 20th.

Mr. Rogers moved that it be resolved, that as much inconvenience has arisen, and expence incurred, by entering Petitions on the Journals, it shall not hereafter be necessary for the Clerk to enter such Petitions, unless ordered so to be done.—Carried.

The Petitions of E. Withby of the District of London, E. Phelps, and Benjamin Hoby of the Township of Yonge Front, and Isaac Crooks, Esqr. of West Flamborough, were read.

The Petition of the Inhabitants of Whitchurch and East Gwillambury, and also of the Inhabitants of the Township of Toronto, Trafalgar and Etobicoke, were read. This last petition complained of the great inconvenience they suffered for the want of a convenient Grist Mills, and prayed for leave to erect Mills on navigable streams, in such a manner, as not to impede the navigation, or the fish from ascending the same.

The Petition was proceeded to the 1st of the Frontenac contested Election.

Mr. McNabb, hon. Deputy Sergeat at Arms, was sworn, and gave evidence with the substance of what we have stated in yesterday's Report.

Mr. J. Jones moved, that it be resolved, that the Counsel for the petitioner having proceeded to the 1st of the Frontenac contested Election, the Counsel for the sitting Member, and also Clerk of the Peace for said Counties, should proceed to the 2nd ten, 4 or 5 persons voted for Mr. Hamilton from one Lot, No. 6, to the 6th Concession, Caledonia. Mr. Pattie objected to this, but witness did not hear what answer the Returning Officer made to his objections, nor did he recollect that any of those votes were struck off—believed each of them would had a Location Ticket for his Land; he thought the Returning Officer examined a Mrs. Johnston, a widow, who voted for Mr. Hamilton, and was clearly not the full answer; the evidence was very warm, and he detained her, after many applications to be examined, in order to get out into the open air (from among the people) to answer the questions; he answered Roman Catholic voters with the sign of the cross on the Bible, after Judge Hamilton had suggested to him to do so.

This witness was very ably cross-examined by Mr. Small, Counsel for the sitting Member; but nothing came out, which appeared to differ materially from his examination in chief. It appeared that No. 102, on the copy of the Poll Book, was entered in the Poll Book as Peter Ross, and not Peter Ross Junior; that the name of Peter Ross Junior was originally entered at the bottom of the page, which made the copy true in substance.

Mr. James Wells was called to the Bar, and sworn, after which, the House adjourned, at 6 o'clock P. M. till 10 to-morrow.

March 21.

Mr. Morris moved that the petition of James Crooks, Esq. be referred to the Committee on the petition of Peter Grant.—Ordered.

Mr. Bamfield moved that the petition of John Hardy be referred to a select Committee, and that Messrs. Nichol and Baldwin compose the same.

Some opposition was made to this motion, by Members who thought that if the petitioner had applied to the Lieut. Governor and Council in a proper manner, he would have obtained the prayer of his petition, if his claims were found to be just, to be registered on the U. E. List, from which, he stated in his petition, he was struck off without any reason for it.—After a long discussion, Mr. Randal's motion for a select Committee on this petition was put and resolved.

Mr. McMartin moved for leave to bring up the petition of John and James Dunlap, of the Township of Lancaster in the County of Glengarry.—Ordered.

Mr. Baldwin moved, that the petition of Samuel Holl and Margaret Phelps, be referred to a select Committee.—Ordered.

Mr. Allan McLean moved for leave to bring up the petition of Wm. Hamilton, Esq.—Ordered.

This petition was from the sitting Member from Prescott & Russell, and stated inter certain documents were in the possession of His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, (having been sent to him, on a former occasion) which were necessary for his defence in the trial of the contested Election.

The House refused to comply with the prayer of the above petition, and proceeded to the Trial of the Present Election.

The Hon. Sol. Gen'l. appealed to the House, if he did not call witnesses to bring forward, but thought he proved sufficient to make void the Election of Mr. Hamilton; he had proved the Returning Officer guilty of the most gross partiality, which he thought sufficient in itself to set aside the Election; but he could go further, and prove that Mr. Hamilton, the sitting Member, was not eligible, and was disqualified to take his seat, not possessing the property required by Law, and was under a declaration of judgment against Mr. Hamilton from the Crown Office.

Mr. F. Small was called to the Bar and sworn; witness appeared there as Deputy Clerk of the Crown, and produced to the House a Judgment Roll against the property of Wm. Hamilton, Esq. to the amount of £135.

Hon. the Sol. Gen'l. Counsel for the petitioning Candidate closed his case, and Mr. Small, Counsel for the sitting Member, requested time till to-morrow, to make up his defence, by which time, it expected to be able to show the House that this Judgment was satisfied. The application of Mr. Small was granted, and the House deferred the further consideration of the Present Election till to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

The House went into Committee on the Outlawry Bill, and reported it without amendment.

The Committee of the whole reported the Married Women's Estate Bill without amendment.

The House went into Committee on the Bill for the relief of Robert Bigger, which was rejected.

Contempt of the House on the Bill regulating the Commercial Intercourse with the United States.

At 6 o'clock P. M. the House adjourned till to-morrow.

March 22.

The Outlawry Bill was read a 3d time, and the Atty. Gen'l. moved that it be re-committed on Saturday next.—Ordered.

The House proceeded to the trial of the Prescott Election.

Mr. Small, as Counsel for the sitting Member, commenced the defence.—He quoted Heywood on Elections, and other authorities, to shew that partiality, on the part of the Returning Officer, was not sufficient to vacate the seat of a Member.—He felt grossly at a loss, in his defence, in consequence of this Hon. House refusing the prayer of the Petition of the sitting Member, to address the Lieut. Governor, for certain documents at present in his possession, and which were most material for his defence; he hoped the House would yet comply with that request.

Mr. J. Jones moved for leave to bring up the Petition of James Small, Esq. Counsel for the sitting Member.—Ordered.

Mr. J. Jones moved, that it be resolved, that the Petition of James Small, Esq. therein described and set forth, appears required, in such a way, as to induce the House to grant the prayer of his Petition.—The prayer of the petition Negatived.

At 3 o'clock, this House adjourned for one hour.

On opening the House, Mr. Nichol moved that it be resolved, that an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, praying him to direct the proper Officer to lay before the House, an account of the amount of the Civil Expenditure of the Administration of the Government of this Province, for the years 1815-17-18-19 and 20.—Ordered.

The House proceeded to the trial of the Present Election.

Allan McLean, Esq. was sworn, and examined by Mr. Small Witness heard some accounts from Kingston, which induced him to think the Judge produced against Mr. Hamilton was paid; but could not speak positively on this subject.

Archb. McLean, Esq. was sworn.—He was applied to, in a professional way, for instructions concerning the Lands of Mr. Hamilton, the sitting Member—four Patents and Deeds of witness afterwards issued that 1000 acres of Mr. Hamilton's lands were sold by Mr. Brass, of Kingston, but that the sale did not satisfy the debt, and a part still remained due. Witness could not speak positively, but only from hearsay, as to this point.

Mr. James Wells, who was before sworn, was called to the Bar, and examined by Mr. Small.

This witness, (a very young lad) gave a most clear and distinct evidence, and corroborated most of what was stated by Mr. Morrison, only appearing to differ materially in one point, which was, that Mr. Marston said, after Judge Hamilton suggested to the Returning Officer to use the sign of the cross, in swearing the Roman Catholic voters, they were all sworn in this way either.

Witness was a sworn Poll Clerk—identified the Candidates—the Returning Officer declared Mr. Hamilton duly elected, at the close of the Poll—believed Judge and the Returning Officer declare, at the same time, that there were 59 votes for Mr. Hamilton, and 103 for Mr. Pattie—the Returning Officer told witnesses and Masters, the other Poll Clerk, to take down certain votes on a slip of paper, but gave no reason for so doing, that he recollected—all the voters the Candidates objected to, were taken down—Judge and Returning Officer objected, and the other Clerk, to put them down, marked objected,—both the Clerks returned a copy of the Poll Book to the Returning Officer,—witness never heard the Returning Officer say at the Hustings, that he would strike off the votes that were put on the slip of paper, but he told witness privately, in presence of the other Poll Clerk, Marston, that he would do so and cautioned them not to speak of his intention—saw Judge Hamilton and Allan McLean take votes with the sign of the cross on the Bible, after Judge Hamilton had suggested to him to do so.

This witness was very ably cross-examined by Mr. Small, Counsel for the sitting Member; but nothing came out, which appeared to differ materially from his examination in chief. Mr. Morris moved that the petition of James Crooks, Esq. be referred to the Committee on the petition of Peter Grant.—Ordered.

Mr. Bamfield moved that the petition of John Hardy be referred to a select Committee, and that Messrs. Nichol and Baldwin compose the same.

Some opposition was made to this motion, by Members who thought that if the petitioner had applied to the Lieut. Governor and Council in a proper manner, he would have obtained the prayer of his petition, if his claims were found to be just, to be registered on the U. E. List, from which, he stated in his petition, he was struck off without any reason for it.—After a long discussion, Mr. Randal's motion for a select Committee on this petition was put and resolved.

Mr. McMartin moved for leave to bring up the petition of John and James Dunlap, of the Township of Lancaster in the County of Glengarry.—Ordered.

Mr. Baldwin moved, that the petition of Samuel Holl and Margaret Phelps, be referred to a select Committee.—Ordered.

Mr. Allan McLean moved for leave to bring up the petition of Wm. Hamilton, Esq.—Ordered.

This petition was from the sitting Member from Prescott & Russell, and stated inter certain documents were in the possession of His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, (having been sent to him, on a former occasion) which were necessary for his defence in the trial of the contested Election.

The House refused to comply with the prayer of the above petition, and proceeded to the Trial of the Present Election.

The Hon. Sol. Gen'l. appealed to the House, if he did not call witnesses to bring forward, but thought he proved sufficient to make void the Election of Mr. Hamilton; he had proved the Returning Officer guilty of the most gross partiality, which he thought sufficient in itself to set aside the Election; but he could go further, and prove that Mr. Hamilton, the sitting Member, was not eligible, and was disqualified to take his seat, not possessing the property required by Law, and was under a declaration of judgment against Mr. Hamilton from the Crown Office.

Mr. F. Small was called to the Bar and sworn; witness appeared there as Deputy Clerk of the Crown, and produced to the House a Judgment Roll against the property of Wm. Hamilton, Esq. to the amount of £135.

Hon. the Sol. Gen'l. Counsel for the petitioning Candidate closed his case, and Mr. Small, Counsel for the sitting Member, requested time till to-morrow, to make up his defence, by which time, it expected to be able to show the House that this Judgment was satisfied. The application of Mr. Small was granted, and the House deferred the further consideration of the Present Election till to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

The House went into Committee on the Outlawry Bill, and reported it without amendment.

The Committee of the whole reported the Married Women's Estate Bill without amendment.

The House went into Committee on the Bill for the relief of Robert Bigger, which was rejected.

Contempt of the House on the Bill regulating the Commercial Intercourse with the United States.

At 6 o'clock P. M. the House adjourned till to-morrow.

March 22.

The Outlawry Bill was read a 3d time, and the Atty. Gen'l. moved that it be re-committed on Saturday next.—Ordered.

The House proceeded to the trial of the Prescott Election.

Mr. Small, as Counsel for the sitting Member, commenced the defence.—He quoted Heywood on Elections, and other authorities, to shew that partiality, on the part of the Returning Officer, was not sufficient to vacate the seat of a Member.—He felt grossly at a loss, in his defence, in consequence of this Hon. House refusing the prayer of the Petition of the sitting Member, to address the Lieut. Governor, for certain documents at present in his possession, and which were most material for his defence; he hoped the House would yet comply with that request.

Mr. J. Jones moved for leave to bring up the Petition of James Small, Esq. Counsel for the sitting Member.—Ordered.

Mr. J. Jones moved, that it be resolved, that the Petition of James Small, Esq. therein described and set forth, appears required, in such a way, as to induce the House to grant the prayer of his Petition.—The prayer of the petition Negatived.

At 3 o'clock, this House adjourned for one hour.

On opening the House, Mr. Nichol moved that it be resolved, that an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, praying him to direct the proper Officer to lay before the House, an account of the amount of the Civil Expenditure of the Administration of the Government of this Province, for the years 1815-17-18-19 and 20.—Ordered.

The House proceeded to the trial of the Present Election.

Allan McLean, Esq. was sworn, and examined by Mr. Small Witness heard some accounts from Kingston, which induced him to think the Judge produced against Mr. Hamilton was paid; but could not speak positively on this subject.

Archb. McLean, Esq. was sworn.—He was applied to, in a professional way, for instructions concerning the Lands of Mr. Hamilton, the sitting Member—four Patents and Deeds of witness afterwards issued that 1000 acres of Mr. Hamilton's lands were sold by Mr. Brass, of Kingston, but that the sale did not satisfy the debt, and a part still remained due. Witness could not speak positively, but only from hearsay, as to this point.

Mr. James Wells, who was before sworn, was called to the Bar, and examined by Mr. Small.

This witness, (a very young lad) gave a most clear and distinct evidence, and corroborated most of what was stated by Mr. Morrison, only appearing to differ materially in one point, which was, that Mr. Marston said, after Judge Hamilton suggested to the Returning Officer to use the sign of the cross, in swearing the Roman Catholic voters, they were all sworn in this way either.

Witness was a sworn Poll Clerk—identified the Candidates—the Returning Officer declared Mr. Hamilton duly elected, at the close of the Poll—believed Judge and the Returning Officer declare, at the same time, that there were 59 votes for Mr. Hamilton, and 103 for Mr. Pattie—the Returning Officer told wit-could the party be examined in this Bill? Bill was introduced, but would begin with it first, and afterwards proceed to others. He believed that retrenchment was about to be introduced generally, especially as far as regarded all salaries that would bear reduction; he hoped that gentlemen would support the said resolution. On this motion the House divided, Yeas, 10 nays 19.

It was resolved that the name of William Hamilton Esq. be erased from the Return, and that of David Pattie Esq. substituted.

After which Mr. Pattie was introduced and took his seat.

Mr. Arch. McLean moved for leave to bring up the Petition of Mr. Gates, and others, the witnesses, who attended at the Bar of the House during the Trial of the Prescott Election.—Ordered.

The Committee of the whole on the Bill for the relief of Small Craft reported the Bill, without amendment.

Mr. Hagerman reported from the Committee of the whole on the Bill, for the appointment of Commissioners to enquire into the Accounts of the Receiver General, to the Address of the House, praying him to dismiss from all Officers under the Crown, Joseph Forster, Esq. Returning Officer for the last Election of Prescott and Russell. His Excellency promised to comply with the Address, and so far as the Law would admit.

The House went into Committee on the Parish and Town Officer Bill.

Mr. C. Jones explained the intention of this Bill, which was, to make some amendments to the Laws now in force respecting Parish and Town Officers, and to combine all the statutes on this subject, in one general Bill.

The Committee reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on Monday next.

At 6½ o'clock the House adjourned till 12, on Monday next.

March, 16th.

The Married Women's Estate Bill, and the Bill for the relief of Small Craft, were read a 3d time and passed.

The House went into Committee of the whole, on the Bill to regulate the Commercial Intercourse with the United States.

Mr. Hagerman explained the object of the Committee's report, on which a duty of 6d per bushel was laid in the last sitting of this Committee.—Ordered.

Mr. Hagerman said, and thought this article could well bear so much of that duty, he said, it would also be a source of productive Revenue. After a long discussion the amendment was negatived.

Mr. Hagerman moved a resolution to extend duty free in this sitting of the Committee, which lasted the whole of this day. The Committee rose and reported the resolution to the House.

Mr. Baldwin moved for leave to bring up the Petition of the Inhabitants of Gore District.—Ordered.

At last past 6 the House adjourned till 11 to-morrow.

March 18th.

Mr. F. Jones moved that the 6th Rule of the House be dispensed with so far as relates to the Petition of many Inhabitants of this Province, and that the same be now read.—Ordered.

The Petition was read, and contain Mill Dams, erected by Mr Hamilton which would obstruct the Navigation of the River. Referred to the select Committee on Mr. Hamilton's Petition.

The House went into Committee of the whole, on the Report of the Select Committee on Dec. Townships.

Mr. Hagerman moved for Dividing the District of Johnstown, and that as soon as the county of Lanark shall contain 6000 souls, it may be declared a separate District. This Resolution was warmly supported by Messrs. Morris, Nichol, Bamfield, Lyon, Cook, Wilkinson, Jones, Casselman, and Rogers, and strenuously opposed by the Hon. Speaker, Messrs. Baldwin, Randal, Forsyth, McMartin, Van Koughnett, Malcolm Fraser, and Allan M'Lean.

Mr. Rogers moved that his honorable friend from Norfolk (Mr N.) had stated that he expected strong opposition to the Resolution from him, and had gone so far as to anticipate what his arguments would be, and to answer them, and rather than not have an opportunity of doing so, he would move the question, that the Speaker do now leave the Chair.

Mr. Burwell would grant the Speaker a liberal salary; his situation was much more arduous than that of other members. Here Mr. R. read a clause of an English Statute on retrenchment where the Speaker's salary was expressly excepted.

Mr. Rattan said it gave him much pain to hear so much spoken about supporting the dignity of the Speaker with the sum of £200. It was, in his opinion, necessary for the dignity of the House, and the Province also, that they should pay the public debts. As the country was in such a distressed state at present he would vote for this Bill.

Mr. John Wilson would only say a few words, as this matter was so generally spoken to. He wished to notify gentlemen who seemed anxious for general retrenchment, that all matters

LETTER OF Mr. HART DAVIS.

London, Dec. 1, 1820.

"My Dear Sir,—I have had the honour to receive your letter, with the information, that at a numerous and respectable meeting of the county-citizens, at which you were called to the Chair, an Address to the Queen was unanimously voted, which the representatives in Parliament for the City of Bristol, were requested to present to her Majesty.

"It is very painful to me to be obliged to decline a duty which such a respectable body of my Constituents have imposed upon me, and I feel it necessary, in few words, to explain the reasons of my dissent from their wishes.

"I should have felt no difficulty in transmitting this address, conjointly with my worthy Colleague, to the Hon. Keppel Craven, the Vice Chamberlain of her Majesty, being an officer of the British Parliament; To seriously object to paying my personal respects to the Queen, until she has publicly disavowed my injurious letter written and published in her name, and addressed to our most gracious Sovereign.

"If this letter be not a treasonable act, which my legal knowledge does not permit me precisely to determine, it is no testimony of a character so closely bordering upon it, that the loyal subject who loves and honors his King, can consider it in any other light than as leading and intended to bring the King's person and the Monarchy of the country into contempt.

"With this conviction deeply impressed in my mind, is there one of my Constituents, who will not feel that I should dishonour them when next on the Parliament, if, through any base desire of popular applause, I should act in contradiction to it? I will rest my case here, and trust for my apology to the good sense, and loyal feelings of my fellow-citizens.

"Where the honor to be, dear Sir, with "Sentiments of esteem and regard, your

"Faithful and obedient servant,

(Signed) "RICHARD HART DAVIS.

"Richard Bright, Esq. Chairman."

LONDON, Jan. 21.—Evening.

Attempt to assassinate Col Browne.—It was the duty of the Metropolitan Police to investigate the circumstances of the attempt to assassinate Col Browne, as well known from his connection with the Milan Commission. The account is contained in a letter from the Duke de Rivas, to the Earl of Liverpool. The following statement has been published:—

"Col. Browne some time ago came over to England, where having learnt the particular charges brought against him, he instituted a strict inquiry to collect documents necessary for the refutation of those calumnies. Whilst he was here, he did not conceive the belief that his life would be attempted in Italy; and he mentioned to the gentleman from whom he received the information, that he commonly carried pistols for self-defence. He had recently arranged his affairs at Milan, and had already forwarded the greater part of his property to England, preparatory to his own departure. He was to set out on the 8th inst. returning late in the night and alone from the Opera, he was attacked by two assassins, evidently with no intention of robbery; for though they boarded him, they did not attempt to plunder him of his watch, money or other valuables. The Colonel defended himself resolutely, and a violent struggle ensued, in which he received four wounds in the head, apparently with a knife, and one in the chest, evidently with a stiletto. The last would certainly have been fatal, but for the thickness of his great coat. All the wounds, as it was, the weapon penetrated as far as the left side of the chest, and considerably injured the seventh rib. The Colonel's friend and physician, Dr. Ciceri, was called in, who, on perceiving the nature of the wounds, thought it necessary to require the assistance of two surgeons, Professor Paletta, of the Milan hospital, and both of them continued assiduously to attend their patient. Three of the wounds in the head were pretty deep, one about two inches, but the most dangerous was the wound in the chest; from which, however, his medical attendants are inclined to think fatal consequences will not be apprehended. Dr. Cicceri says, that the acute pain, restlessness and difficulty of breathing; but these symptoms have been alleviated by bleeding. Upon the whole, the Colonel's going up as well as could be expected; he is in the hands of very skilful men, and every possible care and attention can give. The assassins have for the present escaped, but the government has taken every step for their apprehension. The above account is from a letter addressed from the Duke of Leeds to the Earl of Liverpool; and a bulletin by Dr. Cicceri and Professor Paletta, up to six p. m. on the 10th instant, has also been forwarded to the satisfaction of the Colonel's friends. It is hoped, that he will himself be able to write by the next courier."

Friday was settling-day at the Stock Exchange, when one of the leading speculators for a rise, took nearly 1,000,000*l.* of the consols previously purchased for time. This operation was anticipated, and relied on by many as the cause of an advance in the price of the opposite party to the contract for the delivery of the whole that was claimed, the funds remained stationary. All the great speculators for a rise concurred in taking stock to a large amount, although not to the extent of the instance above mentioned. The ability to supply so large a demand, at a short notice, is a singular circumstance. It is sufficient evidence in itself of that which we are assured is the fact, that the public at large have not disposed of their stock for many freely, in the interval since the payment of the dividends. We may add, that there are few indications more certain of a steadily approaching depression of the value of stock. The abundance of money produced by the circulation of the dividends, is at present considered the chief support of the market. Consols for the ordinary account left off yesterday at 69 3-8 to 3-4, without the dividend.

Extract of a letter, dated Bombay, Aug. 27.

"We are making a quarrel with the Emirs of Sinde. It is said, that our army is Cutch, under Sir Chas. Colville, will take the field 16,000 strong, effective troops. The rains prevent the commencement of actual hostilities, and it probably will not be before October that the first blow will be struck. The Emirs of Sinde are three brothers, Mahometans, and very rich, and having ever been engaged in warfare with Europeans. The Sindeans are described as a very brave and athletic race of people, superior to the Indians in strength and stature. We are not without fears that, at the period when this warfare commences, there may be a simultaneous breaking out in the districts of central India, under the command of Sir John Malcolm, to many parts of these are by no means in a settled state."

"We are making a quarrel with the Emirs of Sinde. It is said, that our army is Cutch, under Sir Chas. Colville, will take the field 16,000 strong, effective troops. The rains prevent the commencement of actual hostilities, and it probably will not be before October that the first blow will be struck. The Emirs of Sinde are three brothers, Mahometans, and very rich, and having ever been engaged in warfare with Europeans. The Sindeans are described as a very brave and athletic race of people, superior to the Indians in strength and stature. We are not without fears that, at the period when this warfare commences, there may be a simultaneous breaking out in the districts of central India, under the command of Sir John Malcolm, to many parts of these are by no means in a settled state."

Vol. I.] YORK, UPPER-CANADA, THURSDAY, APRIL 13, 1821. [No. 2.

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT OF UPPER CANADA.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY,

A Resolution for forming the county of Simcoe, in the Home District, into a separate District, whose limits should contain 6000 souls, was then adopted. Several other Resolutions were adopted, joining the new Townships to different Counties and Districts, according to their situations, after which, the committee rose and reported said Resolutions. On receiving this Report the House divided; yeas, 17, nays 8.

The Bill regulating the Commercial intercourse with the United States, was read a 3d time and passed.

At half past 7 o'clock, adjourned till 11 to morrow.

March 8th.

The Bill framed on the Resolutions of the Committee of the whole on detached Townships, was read.

On the question being put, for the House to go into Committee on the Parish and Town Officer Bill,

Mr. Van Koughnet moved that the House do go into Committee on the Parish and Town Officer Bill this day 3 months hence.

The House resolved itself into Committee on the Parish and Town Officer Bill, and after some discussion, the Committee rose, and obtained leave to sit again on Friday next.

Mr. C. Jones brought in a Bill to legalize Marriages heretofore contracted within this Province.

Mr. Van Koughnet moved for leave to bring in a Bill to repeal part of a Law now in force, granting Poundage to the Rector or General of this Province.—Ordered.

Mr. C. Jones moved for leave to bring in a Bill relative to the Courts of Request in this Province.—Ordered.

The Brockville Police Bill was read a 2d time, and the House went into Committee on it.

Mr. C. Jones stated to the Committee the object of this Bill, which was that the Lieut. Gov. should have power to appoint a certain number of Police Commissioners, who were to establish a Market &c. in the Town of Brockville, and to make Police Regulations in said town.

Mr. Morris said, he was happy that the hon. gentleman had brought forward a Bill to establish a Police in Brockville, and although in general he was very much opposed to the principle, yet might be modified as to meet the wishes of all parties. The appointment of Commissioners by the Governor, possessing so many discretionary powers, he considered objectionable, yet might be modified as to meet the wishes of all parties. The appointment of Commissioners by the Governor, possessing so many discretionary powers, he considered objectionable, yet might be modified as to meet the wishes of all parties.

Mr. Rogers said the whole country, in this direction, was much at a loss for a proper landing place that they had sub Head large quays for all the purposes of trade. He lived in that neighbourhood, that it was a matter of general utility and called for the aid of the Legislature; he hoped the House would enfortain the Bill, and when it came before the Committee of the whole, that it would receive the propriety of such a measure.

Mr. F. Robinson moved that the Bill regulating the Commercial Intercourse of this Province with the United States be now read a 3d time; that the 3d Rule of the House be dispensed with, so far as relates to the same. The Bill was read accordingly, and the House went into committee on it.

Mr. F. Robinson moved that the words "Spirits distilled from Grain" in this Bill be expunged, and the words "Distilled Spirits" inserted.—Adopted.

This Bill is extended for two years, and until the then next ensuing session of Parliament.

The above Bill, was read a 3d time this day and passed. On motion for its passing the House resolved itself into the Committee of the whole on the Report of the select Committee of Finance. To sit again to-morrow.

The Debenture Bill was read a 2d time, and the House went into Committee on it.

After some debate on this subject, the Speaker moved an amendment; that no sale of Lands, Tenements &c. made by the Commissioners of Police, appointed under this Act, shall be lawful, without being approved of by the Magistrates, in General Quarter Sessions assembled. This clause was adopted.

The Speaker moved another Clause: That the Magistrates, in General Quarter Sessions, shall have power to appoint a place for a Market in the Town of Brockville.—Adopted.

Mr. Jones moved an amendment, and: That all the Regulations of Commissioners shall be submitted to the Judges of the Court of King's Bench.—Negatived.

The Speaker moved an amendment: That all persons rated or assessed by the Commissioners to be appointed under this Act, shall have an appeal to the General Quarter Sessions and that they shall not be obliged to pay the rate or assessment put on them by the said Commissioners, until ordered so to do by the Magistrates in General Quarter Sessions assembled.—Adopted.

Mr. C. Jones said that the Amendments moved by the hon. Speaker and adopted by the House, were in direct opposition to the spirit of the Bill; he had at the commencement of the discussion, given notice to the Committee that he should oppose the Bill altogether, and he should be ashamed to be found in the House, after the Bill as framed should be altered in the manner it had been altered with the enemy. He therefore moved that the Committee do now rise, and ask leave to sit again this day three months.—This motion was carried.

Mr. Morris was astonished that the hon. gentleman should move to have the Committee rise, and ask leave to sit again this three months.—The Bill when introduced by that hon. gentleman, was objectionable and dangerous, and when he found that the amendments would alter what he conceived to be the very spirit of the Bill, he abandoned it altogether and left the house; he (Mr M.) had taken charge of the Bill, and was astonished at the conduct of the hon. Speaker, many salutary amendments had been made to it, and now when the Bill was nearly gone through with, that hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones) wished it should be lost, because he could not carry it in his own way he wished.

A Message was received from His Excellency the Lieut. Governor on the subject of the expenses of going from Lower Canada, inclosing a Memorial from Thos. Robert, Esq. Accountant for the additional expense of the Surveyor Gen'l's Department.

A Message was received from the hon. Legislative Council, requesting a conference with this House, on the subject of the Library of the Legislature, to-morrow, at 3 o'clock, in the joint Committee Room. Committee of Conference ordered.

The House went into Committee of the whole on the Pension Bill. To sit again to-morrow.

At 7 o'clock the House adjourned till 10 to-morrow.

March 31st.

Mr. Morris moved that the Message of His Excellency the Lieut Governor of the 7th February inst. on the subject of the new Road from Richmond to Perth, be referred to the Committee of Supply.—Ordered.

The House went into Committee on the Tavern Licence Bill; but being unready this, the Committee rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again on Monday next.

At 2 o'clock, the House adjourned for an hour.

The House, (after waiting some time from yesterday,) resolved itself into Committee of the whole on the Registry amendment Bill, which was adopted, and the Committee reported the same without amendment.

The House went into Committee on the Pension Bill.

After a long discussion on the claims of Teanstairs, during the late war, that Clause of Pensioners was struck out of the List.

A clause was adopted, to appoint two Medical Gentlemen, to be sent by the Medical Board at York, through the different Districts in this Province, for the purpose of examining the Pensioners, at a salary of three guineas per diem, while in discharge of this duty.

At a little past 7 o'clock the House adjourned till 10 o'clock on Monday.

Monday April 2.

Mr. John Wilson brought up the Petitions of the Inhabitants of the village of Lancaster and its vicinity, and of the Inhabitants of the Township of Moulton

A Bill founded on the last Petition was read, and an objection made to it, in consequence of the Petition not being signed, (agreed, nemine contradicente,) that the Petition being in such petitions from the country by petition, and which was to fact not signed, should be received.

Mr. Nichol rose to speak to this amendment; he wished the hon. mover of it, would give some reasons for making so extraordinary a motion, which had already been received by the House; he thought the language of the Preamble was correct and true, and that it was expedient at present to make provisions for dividing the Home District into two districts.

He said that this Bill went to divide Districts and Counties; he thought the hon. mover of the Bill (Mr. Nichol) should rather give some reasons in the Committee of the House, why the Inhabitants of those parts, should giving the Inhabitants time and opportunity of being heard, for or against it, by Petition. He wished to know, if that Hon. Gentleman thought that the people would be satisfied after to the Inhabitants of Johnstown or other parts, by postponing this measure until next Session, when they would have an opportunity of being heard; and as the Bill was not the only opportunity of being heard; and as the Bill was not the only opportunity of being heard; and as the Bill was not the only

Bill to create a district of the District of Johnstown was proposed, although he must confess that he considered the present proposition an premature. If this bill should be lost, it would probably be found at a future day, unless he changed his mind, that he (Hon.) would support the division upon the ground of expediency. But he was opposed to the present Bill upon principle; he considered the mode of proceeding adopted in this instance as unconstitutional, and dangerous in its tendency. His Excellency the Hon. Governor's Message related exclusively to unattached Townships, which matter had been referred to a select Committee; that Committee had brought in their report not to refer the matter back to the House, but had proceeded to cutting up and carving nearly the whole Province, according to its own views, without the consent or even knowledge of those most interested. A numerous petition, he had not an opportunity of being heard by Petition; this opportunity they should have. The measure was an, ex-parte, unjust, and uncalled for, in every respect.

Mr. Nichol said he was astonished to hear the opposition given to the Bill at this stage. The information given the hon. member, (Mr. C. Jones) as to the two Townships alluded to was not true; it was a matter of fact, that the two Townships alluded to, belonged originally to the County of Norfolk; and although they were now reckoned in the county of Middlesex, they had been brought in that county contrary to their wishes, and therefore it was not correct to say that they were drawn up to the County of Norfolk, to which they originally belonged. As to what fell from the hon. Speaker upon using the division of Upper Canada into districts, he would answer, that the division was made on political grounds because it was thought necessary to do so; therefore, he would not take up the time of the House with other arguments; he thought there was sufficient good sense in the committee to decide correctly on this point.

Mr. Allan McLean rose to oppose certain parts of this Bill; the Bill, as drawn up when the framed it, were opposed to the wishes of the Lieut. Governor to make provision for unattached Townships; but there was not a word in that Message about dividing Districts. This he said, was a strong reason for opposing the Bill. Another reason, was, that the people of these Districts, had no opportunity of being heard by Petition; the Bill should also, in his opinion, be two sessions before this Bill passed, he said, the people would be turned out of one District into another, and consequently disfranchised, with out having an opportunity of being heard.

Mr. C. Jones said he could not answer for the correctness of the information he had received upon the subject of the Townships of Bayham and Malahide belonging to the county of Middlesex and not to Norfolk, as he was informed by Petition; but the hon. gentleman from Norfolk ought to preserve more temper upon the subject. He would ask that gentleman if the two Townships alluded to were not in the County of Middlesex, and why were they suffered to vote in that County for Members to represent them in Parliament? Middlesex now returned two Members if those Townships were attached to Norfolk they would go to Norfolk that County (Middlesex) would at another Election, return but one Member; and consequently one of the two hon. gentlemen now on the floor of the House for that County, would be deprived of his seat, although he might be the person wish of his present constituents to return him again. This, of itself, was on an unimportant consideration; he therefore hoped that the House would reject the present Bill, and that it would be brought in to provide for the unattached Townships, examined with busier matter.

Mr. Ferrell observed, that the Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Nichol) said the Townships of Bayham and Malahide, formerly belonged to the County of Norfolk; this he (Mr. F.) denied; the original Act, and even the Acts of Parliament, re-annexed and described them as in the County of Middlesex; he therefore had the hon. to propose a clause of an Act recognizing them as belonging to Middlesex, and that the Member (Mr. Nichol) who sent them present in the House, did not expect to R. Mr. B. again disclaimed all personal interest in his opposition to the Bill.

Mr. Nichol explained; he also disclaimed all personal interest and private motives; he supported the bill on public Grounds only.

Mr. Archd McLean said he would oppose this Bill as altogether unparliamentary—Bills for the purpose of dividing Districts, &c. should always be brought in on Petition; but there was nothing of this kind before the House in the present case. He had no objection to divisions being made, if seen properly; and not squeezed on in such a way as this. He thought the Committee, to whom the Message of His Excellency was referred, went beyond their instructions, in the case of the two Townships in taking the two Townships of Bayham and Malahide from the County of Middlesex, without their having an opportunity of petitioning against it; they were also to be considered in Middlesex that County return three Members at present, but at these two Township were taken away it could not do so; therefore the people would be disfranchised. He had no personal feeling upon this subject, but he would oppose the Bill, on account of the bad precedent which would be given should it pass into a Law.

Mr. Boswell believed the hon. gentleman (Mr. Nichol) was anxious to set the people of Middlesex to assist in insulting the Court and Court-house. "One strong reason against giving these two Townships to the County of Norfolk, was that all the inhabitants of Middlesex are far distant from the Court and Court house, they were anxious to have that County divided into a separate District; and the Townships of Bayham and Malahide taken away, would defeat that object.

Mr. Hatch spoke in opposition to the Bill upon similar grounds with those voiced by Mr. Boswell.

Mr. Morris, as far as regarded the division of the District of Johnstown, was well aware, if they were allowed to petition, there would be a majority against the County of Carleton, and that County would never obtain a separation, by numbers, although the inhabitants were all anxious for it.

Mr. McMartin much regretted being under the necessity of differing in opinion from the hon. member from Carleton, (Mr. Morris,) and his honorable colleague, (Mr. McDonell) but he could justify himself on sound principles. In the first place, the Proclamation of His Excellency's Message was referred had divided so widely from the subject thereof, and recognized new matter in no sense connected with nor called for by the Message or by the Bill itself. Many serious inconveniences had been felt in the Home District from the Townships not being attached to it, and if they refused to do this, the People of this Province should immediately address the Imperial Parliament on this important subject.

The Att'y. Gen'l. observed, that this was certainly a question of great interest to this Province, and it would perhaps be well to require a conference with the hon. Legislative Council on the subject. In order to consider the matter, he thought the Committee should rise and ask leave to sit again on Saturday.

Mr. Nichol said, he would oppose the conference with the hon. Legislative Council; as this was a money-matter, in which they were not concerned; it was more particularly the duty of this House.

Mr. James Wilson was much pleased with, and heard with great attention, the remarks of the hon. member from Norfolk; he was a little acquainted with the Parts in the Lower Province himself, and was certain from his own knowledge, that most of the matters stated by that hon. gentleman were true. This, he said, was one of the greatest obstacles to the wealth and prosperity of this Province, he concurred with the observations of the hon. gentleman, that the Outer Province was rarely in doing us justice, and considered the same paid as he believed was a most heavy tax. This House, he said, had the right way to remedy it, was, by application to the Parliament of Great Britain. He was happy to find persons in this House who were ever ready to support every thing with such assiduity and research, as was exhibited by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Nichol) on this subject; and was well pleased with the manner in which business was conducted generally in the House this Session; he hoped this hon. gentleman would step forward all his Resolutions on this subject, that the members might be able to give their votes clearly on the matter. There were many grievances to be complained of in the Province, he was well aware that many Canadian trains and sleighs had ered with goods came up to this Province, and passed the Custom-house without being entered duly on their post, and leaving them for others; therefore, the duties received by this Province from Lower Canada, have been given at mere guess work. This circumstance, on the part of Lower Canada, he, for one, would never tamely submit to; for people in Lower Canada had a right, and just claim, to their share of the duties, in proportion to the goods they consumed; and it was the industry and wealth of this Province that rendered the people of Lower Canada rich.

The Committee rose, reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again.

The Committee of the whole on the Tavern Licence Bill.

The original Bill, (as now in operation) was adopted, to continue in force till 1st January, 1822.

Committee of the whole on the Resolutions of the House, concerning the Provincial Agent

Mr. Nichol stated, that in a former sitting of this Committee, four Resolutions were adopted, the object of which, was, to remove the present Provincial Agent, for neglect of duty, and to do away that Office altogether. It appeared now, although the papers are not completed with many communications from that Officer, that letters were received from him by the late Speaker of this House, of which, until lately, he (Mr. Nichol) was totally ignorant, after making a general search for all such communications; although three two communications had received the Agent from some part of the charges, they did not acquit him of the neglectful manner, in which he has at all times performed his duty. Upon a review of the whole case, and the state of the latest of those communications; since that time, the King's Ministers have again agitated the subject of laying a duty on Timber in favor of the Provincial Agent for this Province no information whatever on this very important subject on this account, he would propose to do away that Office altogether. He regretted exceedingly, that any Officer of the House of Assembly should feel himself authorized to keep the documents of that House in his private cabinet, which should be deposited in, and be at the disposition of the House, at all times; the gentleman who did so, he thought, was guilty of a neglect of duty, which should not be treated lightly; he would, therefore, bring this subject before the House by a resolution.

Hon. Mr. Allan moved that Mr. Nichol be desired to move for the Speaker to resume the Chair, and requested the House to be cleared. (The doors remained closed nearly an hour.)

Mr. Nichol resumed; he had been in possession of these documents, he would not have spoken as much on the subject as he had; and in consequence of them, he was obliged to alter the Resolutions which he had prepared. He wished every communication that had been received from the Officer to come fairly before the House, and before the Country, that they may be enabled fully to judge of his services. Mr. N. observed, that the appointment of this Agent, only five letters were received from him, which cost this Province £2500, so that for each of these communications, that Officer received £500 sterling, this was extraordinary, and they might hereafter be very fairly termed the £500 letters.

A long debate ensued on this question; at the close of which, the following resolutions on motion of Mr. Nichol, were adopted:—

That since the appointment of the Provincial Agent, of this Province, only five communications have been officially received from that Officer.

That the question of laying a new duty on timber, has again been agitated by the King's Ministers, and no communication has been received from the Provincial Agent, on that subject.

That it is the opinion of this Committee, that it is expedient to repeal the Act appointing a Provincial Agent for this Province.

The Committee rose, and reported the above resolutions. On the question for receiving the Report, the House divided—Yeas 18, Nays 3. Majority 15.

The Marriage Amendment Bill was read a third time and passed.

At half past 6 o'clock the House adjourned till 12 to-morrow.

April 5th.

The Tavern Licence Bill and the Marriage Confirmation Bill, were read a 3d time and passed.

Committee of the whole on the Provincial Agent repeal bill.

Mr. Morris said he did not rise to support the amendment allowing to Major Fulton a pension for life, the law which created that officer was a useless one, and never should have been enacted, but he rose to say that if the House passed this Bill without making some provision for that Gentleman, he feared they would do an act of extreme injustice; for although the son of a Baronet it was well known that he was not a rich man, and by the nature of his appointment to this office he must have supposed that he would hold the situation for life, and consequently has not endeavored to obtain any other employment.

He, he did not expect much good to result from the appointment of the present Commissioners, who, he was informed, were principally the former persons re-appointed. He was induced by observing that it was contrary to the spirit of the British Constitution that this Province should be taxed by a Sister Colony. This Province should obtain a share of the duties at Quebec on their right—on the Port of Quebec, is a British Province south of the great River St. Lawrence which is passed through this Province, and was as much the right of this Province as of Lower Canada. They should give this Province an account, at present they had not the slightest information on the subject, and were totally ignorant of the goods that were landed and the House that several new Townships had been surveyed, that were not attached to any organized County or District, and recommended a provision by Law for the same. Instead of the Commissioners, he thought that the Inspectors of Districts should be empowered to make the returns.

Mr. Boswell moved an amendment to the clause detaching the Townships of Bayham and Malahide from Middlesex—Negatived.

Mr. Boswell moved an amendment to the clause detaching the Townships of Bayham and Malahide from Middlesex—Negatived.

Mr. Burwell moved for leave to bring in a Bill to provide for the erection of Grammar Schools, and to make provision for District Treasurers, for the duties imposed on them thereby.—Ordered.

The House went into Committee on the Road Amendment Bill.

The Committee rose, and reported the Bill as amended.

The Bill was read a 3d time, and the House resolved itself into Committee on it.

The Att'y. Gen'l said, he drew up this Bill according to the Resolutions passed at the last session of the House, on Supplies granted for the adoption of the Provisions.

Mr. Geo. Hamilton rose to protest against the whole proceedings on this Bill. Every Department of Government should have been taken separately, and put to the vote, taking the smallest sum first, as was done in the Bill regulating our Commercial Intercourse with the United States. He did not see why a separate Bill, for each Department, was not brought in, owing to the embarrassed state of the Province, and of their funds, he, for one, would protest against this Bill, until these steps were taken, and he would move that the Committee rise and report progress, and demand most strictly. Objections were made to this, because there was not sufficient time this Session; but he thought the time of the House could be better employed, and that the Bill was also on this subject to the consideration of the Committee.

Mr. Casey said, he took some pains in informing himself on the subject of this Bill, and that there was a positive clause in an Act of Parliament, by which, the items, in detail of the public accounts, should be laid before this House, and until that was complied with, he would vote for no Bill.

Mr. Nichol regretted that these two honorable gentlemen were both out of order; they could not now object to this Bill; they should have made their objections in the House in Committee with all proper order, when the Committee of Supply; this was only a Bill authorising the payment of the money already granted. The Resolutions would be taken into consideration in detail, and amendments proposed by the hon. members of this House. He was anxious for procuring the accounts in detail, as any hon. member on the floor, and only voted the Supplies granted, because they could not immediately obtain the detailed items of the accounts; he would insist on their being laid before the House next Session, and would examine them with a fine tooth comb. He hoped that the House would therefore withdraw their opposition at present.

Mr. Geo. Hamilton had no doubt but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Nichol) wished to do what was right, but he (Mr. H.) could not vote for this Bill in order to pay for supplies, without knowing the detailed accounts of the sums expended, and necessary to be raised; public money should not be raised, except for necessary and pressing purposes, unless what was barely necessary for present use.

Mr. John Wilson rose for information; he wished to know if this Bill and the Resolutions on which it was founded, were to be considered as one; as to those Resolutions, although he voted for them, he confessed he was much in the dark about them, not having the detailed accounts before him. He thought that what was done was premature, yet he was willing to grant an ample supply, so that there might be no difficulty; embarrassment in the way of the Government; he agreed with Mr. Nichol, that the Bill should not immediately become a law; in these times of distress, public money should not be raised unless immediately wanted; but he believed that gentlemen were rather out of order in their observations; Mr. W.) was anxious that the House should be in possession of every item of the public accounts in full detail, and trusted that before the close of this Session, they would be laid before the House; he would consent to every item of what was before granted, and would not object to this Bill for this time; but would never again be prevailed on to vote, whether for or against any Bill, unless fully and clearly before us.

Mr. Crooks said, his hon. friend from Wentworth, (Mr. G. Hamilton) was entitled to great credit, for the attention he paid to this subject; the Bill was the usual one, and he would vote for the House to endeavour to lay down and establish a correct and proper principle to be observed on the subject of the public accounts; on the principle that the Supplies will never be granted, but when the public accounts, in detail, to come fairly before the House, yet, it was necessary that the wheels of Government should not be stopped, and he thought that the Bill should pass, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. G. Hamilton) was right in giving his objections,—his motives were correct.

Mr. Burwell suspected the public accounts would have been produced before this; but it was his full determination to go no further until they were brought forward and considered maturely.

Mr. Gordon said he would at present support the Bill; he voted for the Resolutions on which this Bill was framed, in the Committee of Supply, with great reluctance; because the Resolutions were not laid before the House: they should examine these accounts closely, and be very careful in voting away the people's money; however, he thought the objections to this Bill were too late, as the Supplies were voted by the former Resolutions; he voted for them, but he would never again do so, without having the full statement of detailed accounts before him; the money expended, should be always regularly accounted for ,to this House.

The Att'y. Gen'l. said, the hon. gentleman from Wentworth was not correct in his opposition to this Bill, which was only a Bill of appropriation, the Supplies having been already granted. As to the present estimate, it might be considered large; but it was the smallest estimate that ever came before the House. The hon. gentleman from Wentworth was entitled to great credit, for his industry about the public accounts, notwithstanding he has made an error of £300 in his calculation.

Mr. Geo. Hamilton explained; he had not given any personal knowledge of public accounts; he hoped however, the accounts in detail would be called for, at twenty period of next Session; he was sorry his objections were taken as personal; he was willing to grant the Government as large a sum as was necessary, but would not give one farthing more. If it were not the law to lay the accounts before us, he would not vote for the detail should be laid before us; he thought they should not be too careful in bestowing the people's money.

Mr. Nichol explained; he wished to grant the Government every thing that was necessary, but was loth to obtain the items, in detail, of the accounts; he was not at all desirous to see the Government embarrassed, this was never his wish; but he thought it necessary that the expenditure of the public money should be carefully inspected; he felt every confidence in the present Governor; yet, although all Governors were considered good and wise men, for the time being, by people generally, he could not bring himself to join in this opinion; he thought them as fallible as other people The present opposition, however, he considered unparliamentary, and he would support the bill.

Mr. Morris hoped there would be no further opposition to this Bill; it was drafted according to the Resolutions already adopted, and certainly should pass, without any opposition. He wished also to enquire into the detailed items of the public accounts; but thought it would be fully time enough to do this in the next Session.

Mr. Peterson said he would not vote for this Bill at present when they were giving away the public money, it was their duty to be prudent; he regretted that it had been laid so late before the House for the consideration of it till Monday; there was a Bill at present before the Hon. Legislative Council, (he meant the Bill to provide for the Regulation of Commercial Intercourse with the United States,) and until that Bill passed, he felt it a duty he owed his constituents, to oppose the Supply Bill; the Intercourse Bill was of such importance to this Province, that he would not consent to any Supplies, this Session, by the Representatives of the people, was lost, if that Bill did not pass. He therefore would move that the Committee do rise and ask leave to sit again on Monday next.

The Attorney General was astonished at the arguments used by the honorable gentleman who spoke last—to refuse the necessary Supplies, for the support of the Government, because his favorite Bill (such a principle as this, might have been harboured in the breast of that hon gentleman, and perhaps otherwise, but he never expected to hear a public avowal of it in the House.

Mr. P. Robinson had heard no sufficient reason why the Bill should not pass, unless what was advanced by the hon. member from Prescott; he thought it regretted that it had been so late before the House, and that he would not give his vote on this subject to the consideration of the Committee.

Mr. Nichol regretted that these two honorable gentlemen were both out of order; they could not now object to this Bill; they should have made their objections in the House in Committee with all proper order, when the Committee of Supply; this was only a Bill authorising the payment of the money already granted. The Resolutions would be taken into consideration in detail, and amendments proposed by the hon. members of this House. He hoped that the House would therefore withdraw their opposition at present.

YORK, April 12, 1821.

The principal topics of interest contained in the late English news, are the debates on the subject of a provision for the Queen. On every occasion that has been mentioned, the ministry have very large majorities. Her Majesty has expressed her determination not to accept the £50,000 per annum, which the House voted.

When His Majesty visited the theatres in London, his presence was hailed with the most rapturous and fervent expressions of delight. He also visited the Bank of England, and was received in the most flattering manner by the assembled people.

Several attempts have been made to destroy the royal family of France. A man named Nevon, was arrested; it was ascertained that he had bought a number of knives, and had them ground to a point, and sharpened. Information was given to the police of the circumstance, by one of the persons employed to do the work. Nevon was found guilty, and sentenced to be executed. Several pocket pistols, containing a which powder, mounted to be poisoned, and a considerable sum in gold, were found upon him.

Sir W. Curtis, on the 3d Feb. brought up a petition in the House of Commons, from the inhabitants of the city of London, complaining of the distress.

On the same day Mr Curtis called the attention of the house to an advertisement in the London newspapers, announcing for sale by auction, "the property of the American Flour tax for the use of the troops in the West Indies." Stating the President of the Board of Trade to his place, he would ask that gentleman whether this was true, why Ministers were selling the property of the West Indies, to the manufacturers of our Agriculturists.—(Hear). He would also ask if it was not a fact, that the Canada Company, which was a British subject, should not have a preference of other American flour?

Mr. Curtis read the advertisement, and the petition had been preferred to Bristol, for the West India service, was, that the latter had not been supplied to any extent so long as the former, and that there were three years stored in ships, as it was supposed for sending this country's produce to the West Indies exclusively; but if failed, for the reason he had already stated. He did not see what use it was going to the West Indies, unless it

[From the inadvertence of a journeyman, the last paragraph but one of the Speech of His Excellency the Governor in Chief when closing the late Session of the Lower Canada Parliament was omitted, and not observed by the Editor, the hour being late when the paper went to press. We regret very much that it includes what was left out in our paper of the 20th ult. —Ed.]

"When this Parliament met for the despatch of public business, I did entertain a hope that the experience of the last few years would have led you to a mature and serious consideration of the consequences that would inevitably follow from the three plans should not be remedied; you cannot therefore be surprised that I should now express not only my disappointment but great concern, that the same cause by which at principle should have again defeated the ordinary of your Legislative proceedings.

"Upon this occasion, I think it a duty which I owe to you and to your country to call upon you to consider during the summer the result of the discussions of the Session in all its bearings.

"You will see the administration of the Civil Government left without any pecuniary means but what I shall advance upon my own personal responsibility; you will see individuals suffering under severe and unmerited hardships, resulting for want of that Constitutional authority that is necessary for the payments of the expenses of the Government; you will see the ulterior improvement of the Country nearly at a stand; you will see, in short, the Executive Government in a manner paralized and powerless.

"When I shall again summon you to meet here in Parliament you will come to decide the important question, whether the Government shall be restored to its Constitutional energy, or whether you are to deplore the prospect of lasting misfortune, by a continuance in the present state of things. Important as that question is, there can be no difficulty in the decision.—When the blessings of the British Constitution were granted to this Province, it was not intended to make an ed experience of centuries of practice; there is no question of doubt or difficulty that may not find its precedent in the records of the Imperial Parliament, and I cannot think that any wise guide could be desired.

HALIFAX, February 12, 1821.

Provincial Agricultural Society.

By the terms of the charter granted to the Provincial Agricultural Society it was enacted, that a general meeting should annually be held during the sitting of the Legislature, for the purpose of reviewing the progress of the Society during the past year, and of fixing upon such plans as would accelerate its advancement in the course of the ensuing year. In conformity with the general rule, a meeting of the Society was called on Saturday last at 12 o'clock, and was held in the House of Assembly room. It was numerously attended by all classes of society; not less than 6 or 500 people were present before and in the gallery. Both branches of the Provincial Legislature—the council and members of assembly, attested their zeal for the interests of the Institution by honouring it with their distinguished and gratifying presence, by active support.—The magistrates also and other respectable inhabitants of the town, evinced their wishes to advance the prosperity of our agriculture, by very generally attending this appointed meeting.

At half past 12 the Hon. Michael Wallace, in the capacity of Vice President, took the chair; and explained briefly the object of the meeting upon the purposes for which it had been convened.

He stated that according to the constitution of the Society, it was necessary that a meeting of its members should be held at this period, for the examining of the manner in which the Directors had complied with the instructions of the Society in the expenditure of its funds. A report of the Board of proceedings had been drawn up by the secretary, embracing every point of information which the Directors thought necessary and interesting, and which they considered it their duty to perform. He hoped that an attentive review of the progress of last year, would be attended with the most gratifying feelings; would invigorate the exertions of the Society, and better able to perform country to still greater and more noble efforts. He should conclude with observing that if any explanations were necessary Mr. Tonge would of course supply them.

The Secretary then rose and read the following Reports:

The first Report presented to the meeting, contained a very satisfactory explanation of the manner in which the private funds of the Society had been appropriated towards the attainment of the new modes of culture throughout the district of Halifax Proper. A part of its annual income, which was obtained from the subscriptions of the members, had been applied in cattle shows, ploughing matches, and in premiums given in to excite the farmer to activity in his rural labours. Immediately after the establishment of the Society, they had imported from England a very extensive list of the newest and most improved implements,—ploughs, harrows of all descriptions, —turnip harrows, and the drill machinery. All of which had been open to public inspection, that they might become familiar to our different workmen. A sum too had been expended in purchasing a library of agricultural works, that they might consult these in all cases of difficulty, and better able to perform the functions of their important office. They had likewise obtained some Fife Cattle from the mother country, that in their increase capacity of carry might hasten the improvement of our live stock. Part of these animals had been sold; but there were still on hand wintering at Shubenacadie, which in the spring would appear on the Peninsula, to supply the wants of our farmers. And lastly it was stated that a great part of their capital had been vested in the importation of seeds for distribution among the members here as well as to all the subordinate associations throughout the province.

The second Report took a much more wide and general review of their public conduct—It explained in what way the last grant of £1000 had been appropriated, and the benefit it has assisted in the progress of our advancement. The advantages were explained under the six following heads.—1st. The prizes which have been given have drawn attention to manures, and introduced more correct and new modes of culture. 2d. These efforts in manuring and correct cultivation, have shown themselves in the extraordinary products per acre, of which the soil of Nova-Scotia has produced. 3d. In the premiums which have been held out, the still machinery has been introduced throughout all parts of the province, as well as improvements in other implements. 4th. From the exertions of the Board, Oatmeal has been introduced to a great extent as an article of food, and the quantity of oatmeal sown, and flowers. 5th. The live stock has been improved by the importation of good horses, of cattle, and of hogs. 6th. The Central Board has promoted the forming a quality of character, and to preserve at all principle should have again defeated the ordinary of your Legislative proceedings. spring up under its auspices.

LONDON, Jan. 23.

After his Majesty had delivered the Royal Speech, he handed it to the Lord Chancellor, who had receive[d] the right hand side of the throne; and his Lordship thence proceeded to the Woolsack. The King then retired, and having unrobed, returned to, and re-occupied the Royal Carriage.

At an early hour the streets leading from Carlton-house to Westminster, was strewed with gravel, and soon after one, the same avenues were lined with files of the Royal Horse Guards, and Foot Guards, who were marshalled on this occasion, in the most imposing manner, and of course, consisted of persons of all descriptions.

The windows of the houses in Pall-mall, Cockspur-street, and Charing-cross, were filled with ladies and gentlemen of respectable appearance, who waited with great patience for a considerable space of time to witness the splendid spectacle. The barrier gates at Hyde Park, however, was collected to Waterloo-place, immediately opposite Carlton-house, in order to have a view of his Majesty as he came forth.

Precisely at half past one, the great doors of the Palace were thrown open, and the head of the cavalcade advanced—it consisted as usual of a detachment of the Royal Horse Guards. The Royal Carriages followed in their order, drawn by six horses each, in which were the principal Officers of his Majesty's Household. Next came his Majesty, preceded by a party of grenadiers, and the usual number of running footmen and state attendants and followed by a detachment of the Life Guards, in excellent health and spirits, and was dressed in the full dress uniform of a Field Marshal.

The moment his Majesty's carriage was recognised, the great majority of the individuals assembled took of their hats in the most respectful manner; and the Ladies in the windows and balconies waved their handkerchiefs with every exhibition of loyalty among the respectable part of the populace.

From the Horse Guards the manifestations of loyalty continued with the same fervour

Stabled to the above Committee.

As three Gentlemen were opposed to the Bill, an objection was made to their being appointed on the Conference, when the House divided on this motion, and 16 votes being on each side, the Speaker decided in the affirmative.

Adopted.

The Committee reported progress, and obtained leave to sit again to-morrow.

Mr. Arch'd M'Lean obtained leave to bring in a Bill to provide for the payment of Pensions, to such Militia Officers who were wounded during the late war with the United States.

Mr. Nichol obtained leave to bring in a Bill to repeal an Act passed in the 56th year of His late Majesty's Reign, entitled "An Act for granting to His Majesty a sum of money towards defraying the expenses of the Civil Administration of the Government of this Province." This Bill was read, and contained a provision for the payment of such Allowances as were granted to persons out of the Civil List fund.

At half past 4 o'clock, P. M. adjourned till to-morrow.

April 10.

The Committee rose, and reported the above Resolutions.

Mr. Baldwin, one of the Committee to whom was referred the Petition of sundry inhabitants of the District of London, reported thereon, by Bill, which was read a 1st time, for granting a loan of £1500 to Elizabeth Mason, widow of the late John Mason, of London District, Founder, to enable her to prosecute the Foundry Works, established by her late Husband, and which were now falling into a state of decay, for want of tools.

The Bill for establishing a Provincial Bank, in the town of York, was read a second time, and the House went into Committee on it. The Capital Stock £80,000—Shares £12 10s.

Mr. Baldwin explained this Bill, which was for a claim of £317 on the Estate of a trailor who was executed during the late war. The opinion of the Committee was, that it would be unfair to grant relief to Mr. Crooks, the present, as many persons were in a similar, or perhaps worse, situation, to whom they could not afford the same relief although equally entitled to it,—many persons being now in a state of poverty and distress, and Mr. Crooks in affluence. Under this impression, the Committee rose and asked leave to sit again this day three months.—Yeas 17, Nays 11.

The Bill for the relief of Gilman Wilson was read a second time

It was the opinion of the Committee, that Mr. Whiting should apply again to His Excellency the Lt. Governor in Council, to which a representation of his claims for half pay, &c. having been well grounded, His Excellency would afford him relief. The Committee therefore rose and asked leave to sit again this day 3 months.—On receiving this Report, the House divided,—yeas 21, nays 7.

The House went into Committee on the Message of His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, relative to the arrears of Revenue due this Province by Lower Canada.

Mr. Nichol moved a number of Resolutions, which were adopted unanimously. The whole tenor of these Resolutions went to shew, that this Province was fairly entitled to her proportion of the duties, on imports at the port of Quebec—that the amount of such proportion of duties, was withheld from this Province by Lower Canada, to the serious injury to a large amount—that it was the right of His Majesty to retain such portion of the duties of the Port of Quebec, for the use of this Province, as the Imperial Parliament, in its wisdom, may think fit, &c.

The Committee rose and reported the Resolutions.

Mr. Nichol obtained leave to bring in a Bill, to provide for the appointment of Commissioners, to explore and survey the line of a Canal, from Lake Erie to Lake Ontario, and thence to the Commencement of the River St. Lawrence. The Bill was read, and on motion of Mr. Nichol, was read a second time, and the House went into Committee on it

The Bill was adopted,—vesting the power of appointing Commissioners in His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, appropriating the sum of £2,000 to be expended in this project, and giving the Commissioners power to employ Surveyors, Clerks, &c. for executing the work. Their plans &c. to be laid before the Parliament next Session.

Mr. Gordon expressed his approbation of this measure, but was strongly opposed to granting the Commissioners unlimited power in employing Surveyors, Clerks, &c. lest they should bring forward, at a future Session, such contingent expenses, as the House, in the present low state of the finances, would not be able to meet.

The Committee rose and reported the Bill as amended.

At half past 10 o'clock P. M. adjourned till 9 to-morrow.

April 13th.

The Bill appointing the Hon. Speaker and Robert Nichol Esq. two additional Commissioners to treat with the five Commissioners appointed by Lower Canada, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. Baldwin explained the motives for altering the time for holding the Quarter Sessions—which was, because they were frequently held on the days when the Superior Courts were sitting, and the present holdings, in which they were held, was too confined to accommodate both.

Mr. B. moved that the time for holding the Quarter Sessions be altered till the 3d Tuesday in January, April, and July, and the 2d Tuesday in October.—Adopted.

The Committee reported the Bill without amendment. The Attorney-General brought in a Bill for continuing, for a limited time, the Act granting Magistrates the power of regulating the duty on Tavern Licenses, which was read, and continued the former Act for two years, and until the end of the ensuing session of Parliament. This Bill was read a 3d time, adopted in a Committee of the whole, and read a 3d time this day.

Mr. Nichol moved that the 5th Rule be dispensed with, to enable him to move certain Resolutions, on the subject of Commercial Intercourse between this Province and Great Britain. Ordered.

This Committee rose and reported certain Resolutions.

The Speaker announced from the Chair, that an application was made by him to sign a warrant in favour of Wm. Hamilton, Esqr. for his services during the time he retained his seat in the House of Assembly, and he wished to submit the propriety of doing so to the House

A discussion took place on this subject, on which, there was great difference of opinion. The Speaker was of opinion that Mr. Hamilton was not entitled to any wages. Messrs. Baldwin, Burwell, and others, spoke in favor of this opinion, and Messrs Nichol, Att'y Gen'l. Arch'd. M'Lean, and John Wilson, in favour of paying Mr. H's. wages, as long as he retained his seat in the House after writs issued.

Mr. Nichol moved, that it be resolved, that Wm. Hamilton, Esqr. having attended this House as member for the Counties of Prescott and Russell, is entitled to his wages until his election was declared void, and that the Speaker do sign a warrant for the time he served.—Ordered.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The debates of the British Parliament form the most interesting portion of the contents of the late English papers. We have made various extracts tending to exemplify several striking traits in the tenor and tone of the political discussions of that body. The following extracts will serve to have some practical use in the ensuing session in their influence on the conduct of the Administration and the House of Commons, in relation to the proceedings of the Queen's character was so puzzled that she deserved and was worthy to be received by him with the honors appertaining to a Queen of England.—" (Loud Cheering.)

Mr. Peter.—" If ever a state of necessity called for the departure from the ordinary rules which govern the administration of justice, it was when a Queen, about to be arraigned with those dignities which befitted her rank and station, was charged with a grave moral offence; it was to prevent adultery from being committed in the palace of the throne of the country. [Loud cries of hear.]

Mr. Tierney.—" Ministers had brought the House into this unfortunate situation, however any thing was urged against her Majesty, on the score of indiscretion, they had not only selected and embodied all the common place charges which had ever been urged against misconduct institutions, but they had descended even to the lowest dregs of scandal, and had given them that attractive and amusing form which was the very food to gratify the depraved appetites of those who resorted to them. They had lavished the most lavish of money by they had ransacked the vile, and expended the most disgusting materials that had thrown open all that was most sacred to the vulgar gaze, and made those, who ought to be the objects of our veneration and respect, the objects of our loathing and contempt. By thus exposing the domestic misfortunes of the King and Queen, the noble Lord and his colleagues had agitated the whole country, and destroyed the best feelings of civil society. They had placed the throne itself in the most hazardous and precarious situation, and it would require a very strong mind to contemplate, without pain and anxiety, such constitutional measures, entirely to efface the consequences of this most impolitic proceeding."

The concluding words of Sir J. Mackintosh's speech in the House of Commons, are worth notice, as proceeding from one of the Queen's most zealous advocates. He says "The people of England (that is himself and his political friends) thought the Queen acquitted, but they were not satisfied without unanimity—a thing said to be exacted without sufficient evidence." Why not said, that she was "innocent of the deed?" Because, like Macbeth, he found "innocent" much in too throat.

From the Kingston Chronicle.

In the York Observer, dated the 22d January last, the following speech is given to the debate in the House of Assembly, on the 8th of November, prior to the second reading of the Bill for Pauperand Pedlicies.

Mr. Boulton, or RICHMOND said, after viewing the whole of the proceeding, that he could not but oppose the Bill. In his mind Ministers betrayed the King, or they were betrayed by the Milan Commissioners. (Hear, hear, hear.) He was sorry that the Bill had such bad support, as he considered it in so unwarrantable a manner upon the conclusion of his speech, on a former day, as such language tended to encourage the Que'n's party, and to give a timid support to the machinations of traitors, the real enemies of his Majesty and the country, were the persons who spread the poison by the introduction of this Bill, directed to the General Assembly of the Nat'n's support it; (hear, hear,) and not the persons who opposed it and vided the wills of that House. (Hear, hear,) He was perfectly satisfied that the Bill could not pass, as he was sure the perjury of the witnesses brought against her, or the foul and unnatural plot set on foot to destroy her, and degrade the nation (hear, hear.) And united with his noble friend (Grosvenor) in saying that no proof could put a degree of guilt to her charge, sufficient for the rejection of a measure, which had nothing for its object, but the dismemberment of the country, (hear, hear.")

This speech is naturally enough attracted our attention, as coming from the Noble Son and Heir of our late lamented Governor General, and we have been since indicted to look into other papers for a report of it, but we have not been able to find it. The debates of the 7th and 8th of November, as published in the Courier, Observer, Weekly Messenger, and other London papers, contain no such speech. Have we been so dazed and stupified into any of the American papers which have come to hand? We have, indeed, strong reason to suspect that it is a mere fabrication, interpolated at the conclusion of the debate after Earl Darnley's speech, by some crafty Editor, for party purposes. We will not positively assert that Mr. Cary has been playing off this trick on his readers:—Though, indeed, his motive for placing the name in large capitals, at the commencement of the speech, cannot be mistaken. We would only give Mr. C. a hint that the authenticity of the foregoing paragraph, which we have copied from the Kingston Chronicle, by some, and positively denied by others, and test if he regards his own credit, as the conductor of a public journal, he will (if he can) immediately remove the suspicions of the former, and disprove the assertions of the latter.

We have not hitherto observed any reply to the above article.—Ed. W. F.]

FOREIGN NEWS.

We have received this morning Lisbon Papers to the 3d inst. They contain the proceeding of the Cortes on their first assembling, which are of considerable interest. The insurrectionary symptoms, however, which attend this early stage of the disorder, must not be too implicitly relied upon. The dark and ominous passage, which great political changes always generate, have not yet begun to display themselves. The combustible itself is scarcely in motion, and its operations are consequently but imperfectly ascertained. Examples are not wanting to illustrate these opinions. If they were, we refer to Spain, as the most recent.—That country is hastening with rapid strides, to the inevitable goal of successful revolution—a sanctity.—From this chaotic mass, order and beauty may perhaps hereafter arise: but why seek them by such means?

Mr. Nichol moved that it be Resolved, That the passage of all letters, from and to the residents of this House, be paid for by the Clerk, and charged to the Contingent Accounts.—Ordered.

Mr. Nichol moved that it be Resolved, That a Copy of the Upper Canada Gazette be sent to each of the Members of this House, during the Session, and that the Clerk be directed to include the charge for the same in the Contingent Accounts.—Ordered.

The 6th Rule of the House was dispensed with, and Mr. Nichol obtained leave to bring up the Petitions of Wm. H. Merrit, Esqr. Captain of the late Provincial Dragoons, and Peter St. Jean, Esqr. Captain of the late Artillery Drivers, which were read. These Petitions prayed for the allowance of the pay and to be considered as belonging to the Militia Corps of the Province.

Mr. Peter Robinson moved that it be Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to furnish David Pattie, Esqr. with several copies of the Resolutions of this House on the trial of the hon. contested election of Prescott and Russell.—Ordered.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Extract of a letter from the Rev. William Shaw, dated Algoa Bay.

The place of our residence is a delightful valley, through which the Bosgen River runs in a curious serpentine manner. There are two or three smaller valleys through which the same river runs, and in each of our stations we are located; but the principal places there are between 20 and 30 families. The village is intended to be built according to the course of the river, with all the gardens adjoining the water: it will unite the beauty of a village with the regularity, in form, but its very irregularity, in my opinion, will constitute its beauty. We have named our place Salem, and I pray that the name which the Lord appeared to bless may be applied in the heart of every inhabitant, and that every visitor may be a witness of the harmony of the whole village.—We are, by the present regulations, Algoa Bay of any party, being about 100 miles distant. We are within sixteen miles of Graham Town, the residence of the Deputy Landrost for the district, and about thirty miles distant from Bathurst, the intended capital of the New Settlements. from Bathurst is near the coast on the Kowie River. The intended town is laid out on a fine plan; I believe it is proposed for the future it appears that the Government will not encourage the residence of the mechanics, &c. of whom great numbers may hereafter be expected to emigrate from the mother country. It is Government continue to future settlers the same support and encouragement as it has given those who have come out this year. It is impossible for any language, however strong, fully to express the care which has been taken to secure the interests of the settlers. A great number of waggons were prepared at immense trouble and expense, and from a great distance, to convey the settlers with the different places of location. Liberal rations of beef, mutton, bread, and flour, viz. ten lbs. have been served to them from the time they left the ship, to the present time. I suppose they will continue for some time longer. A large supply of agricultural implements and various descriptions of tools were allowed to sale at Port Elizabeth at very moderate prices. A liberal quantity of seed corn can be had from the public stores, without cost or expense. I have not seen any one day of mind which they may actually plough. Ten pounds per hundred weight is the price of wheat, and it cannot but give pleasure to you, as you are carefully instructed in the principles and engagement of loyalty to Government and you will not contract for me when I say, that the reports of the Cape never received where rulers are disobeyed, and the good order of society is destroyed.

An alteration in the uniform of the Royal Marines is to take place, and it is said will be carried into effect from the day appointed for the celebration of his Majesty's birth day.

The following is the report of the intended reduction of the army:—The whole of the veteran foot dismounted cavalry regiments of the line are to be reduced under five hundred men to the two battalion regiments under five hundred men to the Colonies—and five foot men in the third regiment.

The following changes in the army are to be effected: Admiral Sir A. Leslie Cochrane, at present in the room of Viscount Exmouth; Admiral Hart, vice Admiral Sir Thomas Boulden Thompson, at present in Plymouth, in the room of Sir John Gore, at Chatham.

A report having been circulated that Mr. J. Gratton, son of the late Right Hon. H. Gratton, was by the receipt of a pension of £300 a year for having given the first information of Bonaparte's escape from Elba, Mr. Gratton has written a letter to the Freeman's Journal, in which he reports to be wholly false and that the only reward he obtained was the thanks of the British minister at Florence.

A young man, named George Kettering, a weaver by trade, undertook to stand four hours on one leg, without any support, on a house in Smithfield. The wager was for ten guineas. Before he stood for three hours and three quarters he fainted. He began to speak, but he could not speak, and with difficulty could support himself; however, to the surprise of all he stood out and was carried to bed. He is now recovering, and is expected to be well enough for some time, and some cordial given to him, he recovered.

Bonaparte dies.—A celebrated 4 to, called Caps-All, of the Bonaparte family, died lately in Ireland. The rough is low of this animal weigh'd 266 pounds:—on cut down the breast, he measured not one thickness of wood fat. During the last year he was so weak that he could not speak, and with difficulty could support himself; however, to the surprise of all he stood out and was carried to bed. He is now recovering, and is expected to be well enough for some time, and some cordial given to him, he recovered.

Bonaparte dies.—A celebrated 4 to, called Caps-All, of the Bonaparte family, died lately in Ireland. The rough is low of this animal weigh'd 266 pounds:—on cut down the breast, he measured not one thickness of wood fat. During the last year he was so weak that he could not speak, and with difficulty could support himself; however, to the surprise of all he stood out and was carried to bed. He is now recovering, and is expected to be well enough for some time, and some cordial given to him, he recovered.

No. 6.—An account of the Revenue arising from duties on merchandize imported from the United States of the Ports of entry within this Province, from the 1st January to the 31st December, 1820, inclusive, as far as the several Collectors have reported the same.

The net amount of which is £1313 4 9½

No. 7.—An account of Licenses issued to Hawkers and Pedlers, as per returns received from the Collectors belonging, the 21st February 1820, and 21st July.

1821—The net amount of which is 180 10 0

No. 8.—An account of Revenue arising from Licenses issued to Auctioneers, and on Sales at Auction by the same period as the last account—The net amount of which is 111 4 4

No. 9.—An account of the Tonnage Duty collected between the 1st January and 31st December 1820. £51 13 4½

No. 10.—General Statements of the Receiver General's Receipts and. Payments of the Provincial Revenue between the 1st January and 31st December 1820, and the 1st and 31st January 1821, by which it appears that at the last date there was a balance in the Receiver General's hands of £328 8 8½, subject as in the said statement is noted, to the repayment of a sum of £7500 from the Crown, advanced to carry on the public service.

No's. 12 & 13—Amount of Monies paid by the Receiver General of the Province, in pursuance of warrants issued by His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland, K.C. B. Lieut. Governor, and His Honor Samuel Smith, Esq. Administrator out of the funds arising from the duties imposed by the Provincial Legislature between 1st January and 31st December, 1820, and 1st and 31st January 1821.

These warrants appear to contain mcthorgres not warranted by law, or former usages, with the exception of a warrant in favour of Lt. Col. James Fitzgibbon, to defray the unavoidable expenses of assembling and holding a Militia General Court Martial, under the Provincial Act authorising the formation of such court.

No. 14—A schedule of payments made to the Receiver General by Collectors and Inspectors on account of duties between the 1st and 31st January, 1821.—£2588 2 0½

No. 15—An abstract account of the appropriation for the year 1820, towards defraying the expences of the administration of justice, and support of the government of this Province; by which it appears that of the sum granted by Parliament for those purposes, there remains unexpended £2 6 10½, and that there has been a total saving on the last years estimate of £1445 11. 6½. which is now subject to the disposition of Parliament.

No. 16.—A schedule of appropriations made by various Provincial statutes chargeable against the year 1821, £34169 3 10½. This account appears perfectly correct, the Fnonian Agent's salary, and the contingencies of his office, depend upon the continuance of the Fenian law of 1816, which will expire unless continued in this Session.

No. 17.—An Estimate for the year 1821, of the expences of the civil government of Upper Canada, the interest on debts provided by the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, and paid in England, which contains the same heads of charge as that for the last year, but is less in amount by the sum of £7.10. After deducting from the estimates the probable proceeds of the Crown Revenue under 14th Geo. III. there remains £1436 to be provided by the Provincial Legislature, including the sum of £145 unexpended of the last year's appropriations.

No. 18—An account of Public Monies outstanding in the hands of Inspectors and Collectors on account of duties on the 31st Dec. 1820, and 5th Jan. 1821. The sum outstanding on 31st Dec. last was £4175 3 0½, of which £2506 8 0½ has been paid into the hands of the Receiver General between that period and the 21st January last as appears by the account in No. 14, which left a balance outstanding on the last as £1288 19 112

No. 19.—An Account from Peter Howard, Esq. of the expenditure of £200 granted by Statute of 58th Geo. III. Chap. 50.

No 20—A Statement of Duties collected at the Port of Quebec between the 6th Jan. and 1st July 1819, on which the Province is entitled to its proportionate amount, £7381 1 6. This amount is for the period up to the 1st July 1819, since which there is no official account of duties at Quebec, the provisional agreement having expired.

On application to the Inspector General it appears that large sums are outstanding in the hands of two officers of some Districts contrary to the provisions of the act to amend the schools law passed in the last Session of the last Provincial Parliament—deductions made by the different treasurers without legal authority, under a claim of per centage, and for appropriations beyond the authority of the act. Your Committee observes that £500 has been lost by the Treasurer of the London District to that District under the auction of the Board of Education, but in direct violation of the law, and in breach of the trust committed to the Trustees and Treasurer, without any account of the application of the remaining balance has been rendered; your Committee are also compelled to remark that £2400 paid to the Treasurer of the Gore District, on account of expenditure has ever been rendered, the consequences of this want of punctuality and breach of duty in public officers, at all times pernicious, are particularly unseasonable at the present moment, when the Provincial Treasury does not afford the means of meeting the charge created by former Acts of the Legislature, and your Committee trust that the treasurers which it may be found necessary to adopt in these instances, may tend to prevent similar abuses in future.

The appropriations under the various Acts of Parliament, as stated in account No. 16, amount together to £34169 3 10½

To which add the amount to be provided for the present year, 4496 0 0

And the sum advanced from the Crown

Revenue by way of loan 2000 0 0

To meet these demands which include the whole arrearage of Militia Pensions, and every charge against the Provincial Treasury to the knowledge of your Committee, the probable resources will be as follows:

Our proportion of Revenue from Lower Canada, for the period between the 1st July 1819, (at which time the provisional agreement expired,) and the 1st January last, should our proportion continue at no more than 1-5th, deducting £33849 17 6, already received on account, £17731 19 0

Amount in Receiver General's hands, 31st Jan. 1821. £328 6 8½

Amount outstanding in the hands of Collectors and Inspectors 31st January last, £1588 12 4

Ordinary sum it appears on an average to the Inspector General that on the 31 March instant, 1068 17

£, had been paid into the hands of the Receiver General of Provincial Revenue arising from duties on licenses to Shop-keepers, Innkeepers, Distillers and Wholesale Dealers, £4000 0 0

Licenses to Hawkers and Pedlers, £150 0 0

Licenses to Auctioneers and duties on sales at auction, £110 0 0

Upon this estimate of probable resources your Committee have to remark, that their anticipation of Revenue from Lower Canada up to the 1st January last is founded on the printed Report of the Committee of Finance of the Legislature of that Province now in Session, in which they state the amount of duties payable to Upper Canada, (if the proportion continues at 1-5th,) up to the period last mentioned, at £33479 7 1, of which the sum of £4307 10 7 being the proportion of duties imposed by the British Acts, belongs to the Crown Revenue, and being applied to the public uses of the Province, would have unrecorded for about £2000. It is evident that our receipt of duties from Lower Canada as well as the amount of those duties, depends upon the renewal of a provisional agreement with the Province of Lower Canada, or upon the Legislature between 1st January and 31st December, 1820, and 1st and 31st January 1821.

These warrants appear to contain mcthorgres not warranted by law, or former usages, with the exception of a warrant in favour of Lt. Col. James Fitzgibbon, to defray the unavoidable expenses of assembling and holding a Militia General Court Martial, under the Provincial Act authorising the formation of such court.

The King's visit to Drury Lane Theatre.

It is not in our power to day, to give that minute account of His Majesty's visit to Drury Lane Theatre last night, and of his reception there, which the importance and interest of the event deserve. But we should do a violence to our own feelings, were we not to attempt to express the joy of the loyalty of the empire, if we do not at least announce the noble dictates of British sentiment which the occasion elicited. We have witnessed the effects of popular enthusiasm calculated to rouse the heart, and fill it with ecstacy; but we have never before been; but they all fade before the glorious exhibition of last night. The most beloved Monarch that ever won the affections of a great and loyal people, never received more rapturous expressions of attachment, of devotion, of almost maddening rapture, surpassing those which burst forth yesterday evening, upon the King entering the Theatre. The prolonged and simultaneous acclamations still ring upon our ears, and we still feel that thrill of honest English Joy, which God forbid we should ever cease to feel. when our King is welcomed by his people as he deserves. And this joy was the more extraordinary, since it triumphantly proved that the base arts of a base faction —the foul calumnies of privileged slanderers—and the detestable efforts of degenerate Englishmen have rendered him as sordid traders in calumny—have had no operation beyond the corrupted circle in which they originated. It was nearly ten minutes before the enthusiasm of the audience could be so stilled, as to permit the national anthem of "God save the King" to be sung by the performers. This anthem was thrice sung, during the evening, and each time the audience joined in full emphatic cheers in the chorus of each verse. "God save the King! King!" was vociferated from a thousand voices, with an energy that well bespoke the feelings of every heart. Acclamations of this description are not easily noted, nor is the operation which the eager loyalty of the audience could apply to their beloved sovereign. was instantly seized. When Arthur's shouts of applause, the tumult and protect my King," the audience were three or four of the Queen's friends, who vented to call out her name; but it was like trying to stop a torrent by throwing a stone match to a train of gunpowder, for the explosion of loyal feeling which instantly burst forth decisively showed what was the real influence her Majesty's cause possessed. We can only add, that the King seemed deeply sensible of the affectionate demonstrations of attachment which were displayed. He repeatedly bowed to the audience in the most graceful manner, and more than once laid his hand upon his heart, the most forcible and eloquence of which act perfectly electrified the house. After he withdrew, the audience gave three unanimous and hearty cheers, and then gradually retired.

New Comet.—Signor Pons, astronomer of the Duchy of Lucca, discovered on the 12th of last month between six and seven o'clock at night, in the constellation of Pegasus, a comet, with very extraordinary nature. It appears like a white spot, not unlike one of a kernel form, and with a very small tail. On the 22d Signor Pons continued his observations, that the Comet had not changed its position, but that its tail was becoming more visible, and its light had acquired greater intensity. He thence concluded, that the Comet will become more and more luminous, and to such a degree as to be visible to the naked eye. Astronomers have fixed its right ascension at 0 deg. 30 min. and its northern declination at 5 deg. between the stars of the sixth magnitude x and e of Pegasus.

An investigation of the numerous records of the city of Exeter has lately taken place. These valuable strides of antiquity have been found in a wretched state, in a private apartment of the Guildhall, almost neglected. Upwards of 100 manuscripts have already been discovered and examined by the Rev. Geo. Oliver, Thomas Jones, Esq. &c.; many of them are beautifully written on five vellum, and present some curious and interesting historical occurrences. The earliest yet found is of the time of King William Rufus, 1090, being about the period that Osbern, a valuary, was bishop of that see. Exeter; and it is thought some earlier manuscripts may still be discovered.

As a proof of the "glorious uncertainty of the law," the following authentic anecdote may not be uninteresting to our readers:—At the Assizes of a Western County, before the present Lord Chief Justice Abbott, a notorious character was arraigned at the bar for stealing seven geese.—The property was found in his possession, and every evidence adduced, so as to leave no doubt, in the mind of every person present, of a conviction. The Judge, after summing up the evidence, turned to the prisoner (or his decence re-called the old woman (prosecutor's servant) who identified the geese to be the property of her master. "Now, my good woman," said the prisoner, "those geese were your master's; now will you swear that these were no ganders amongst them?" "Yes," answered the old woman pertly, "there was one gander and six geese." "Now my Lord," said the prisoner, addressing himself to the Court, "I stand here charged with stealing seven geese, whereas it appears in evidence that they were six geese and one gander. His Lordship took an immediate advantage of the admission, which the Legislature between 1st January and 31st December, 1820, and 1st and 31st January 1821. and Judge held to be a good one, and the prisoner was accordingly discharged

The following strange but well attested occurrence, actually took place a few days since.

A non-servant in the employ of the Rev. Dr. Palmer of Tarcombe, near Chard, being taken ill, the medical attendant on the family was sent for, who prescribed for the man a bolus from the family medicine chest, and having wrapped up paper the grain-weights used in weighing out the proper proportion of the drugs, left them on the table, and went to them the bolus, which he desired one of the children in bed-land, to carry to the man servant, with instructions to take immediately in trouble. Some hours afterwards, his master came to enquire about the patient, and found him suffering in violent symptoms which the man attributed to the strange kind of medicine the Doctor had ordered for him, and which he said he could never have got through, but for not cutting it smaller pieces;" but he thanked God that, though it was rather rough and sharpish he had got it all down." This account puzzled his master exceedingly, who, however, soon discovered that the man had actually swallowed in the bolus all the brass grain-weights, instead of the bolus, which was found lying on the table, in his master's room! Proper remedies were immediately applied, and the following day this unconscious dose from the man's stomach, who subsequently recovered from his illness. It would be difficult to find a parallel to this instance of implicit faith in the power of the curative art, or a similar exhibition of astonishing, but unconscious eating" unfledged animals walking on two legs."—Bristol Mercury.

Two Lighters are to be built in this yard, solely of African timber, and of the largest scantling that can be procured from the East Indies. Frames of other vessels of larger size are also to be set up of the same kind of timber. The consumption of English timber, it is hoped, will be as much as possible, and indeed the fine qualities of dift sort for which the oak of Old England is famed, will supersede the extensive use of the use in our forests for a considerable time. The Semiramis frigate, Captain Warren, full of teak, is now fitting here.—Plymouth Paper.

Tuesday the Old Bailey Sessions ended, when sentence of death was passed on 13 prisoners, 3 were sentenced to be transported for life, 2 for fourteen years, 1 for seven years; 2 to 2 imprisonment in the House of Correction for 2 years; thirty-one to the House of Correction for Middlesex; and five in Newgate for various periods.—Larrah Maynard, a deaf and dumb girl was put to the bar on Tuesday, charged with stealing a watch. The prisoner was remarkably handsome, and defended herself by signs, which she employed apparently with perfect intelligence and great animation. Several of the law witnessed their assistance; and her innocence being satisfactorily established, the jury acquitted her.

LONDON FASHIONS FOR FEBRUARY.

Morning Dress.—A wrapping dress composed of exclusive of the stuff of the gown, which is fastened close to the throat in the back of the neck, but is a little sloped in front, and is worn over all round so as to form a pelerine; it wraps across before, and sloped in front of the bosom, and is confined by a rouleau of patriotism. Thirty-six thousand men have been raised in the militia regiments and legions; 24,000 have been completely clothed, armed, and disciplined in Catalonia, and 12,000 will be in depot in the course of January.—" What is most prime worthy," says the General, "is that, with all their noble enthusiasm, the inhabitants of the Abruzzi display the arms of prudence and skill. The skirt is moderately wide; it wraps across the left side, and hangs only a little deeper in front than behind. The sleeve is easy, but not wide; it is finished at the wrist by folds of gros de Naples, to correspond dy in colour with the gown. The pelerine is also of gros de Naples, it is rather broad, and fastens with a gold clasp at the side

The Musk Deer.—In the review of Fraser's tour through the Himalaya mountains [Quarterly, No. XLVII] we find the following account of the animal which yields the fashionable perfume called musk. Mr Fraser calls the animal the musk deer: though it has generally been denominated the musk cat:

The musk deer is an animal by no means common in any situation, but keeps entirely to the most inaccessible and remote heights among rocks and forests that defy the foot of man. They cannot endure heat, and several young ones which were presented to us invariably perished, after being exposed a few days to the warmth of a lower region. The figure of the musk deer is somewhat singular. It retains the size of a fallow doe, or small buck, and its body and legs are completely those of a deer. The head, however, bears no resemblance to that of a hog; the eye is black and full, but not so large as that of a deer usually is; and the sharp snout, and wrinkled countenance give it a considerable resemblance to a pig's head, which is rendered more remarkable by the two tusks that project from the upper jaw, and hang pointing downward, considerably over the lower; and their colour is dark brown. It is commonly known that the musk is contained in a liquid state in a small bag near the navel of the animal. When it is caught, the bag is taken just as it is found, and cut from the beast while yet alive. A small hollow reed is inserted into it that the musk may not suffer, as it would be apt to do, from want of air; and the whole is tied around with a sinew of the animal. In this state, when it has dried, which it does in the shape of small brown grains, it is sold, together with the skin for twice it weight in silver. It is said that theanimal must be caught alive in order to obtain its musk. Should it be shot, the drug (its affirmed) is absorbed into the body, and consequently not only lost, but the animal is rendered unsaleable. The great value of the article makes the animal an object of great request. Wherever, therefore it is understood that a musk deer has been seen on any particular hill, the whole country in turned out to hunt him down. This alone would tend to create a scarcity of the animal; and if it is as rare on the hills to the south eastward, and on the opposite side of the Himalaya range, as it is in that portion between the Sutley and Alaknunds, there is little danger that the market will ever be overstocked by the genuine musk.

THE UNICORN.

In the forty seventh number of that invaluable work, the Quarterly Review, received from London, we find another amusing and interesting article in relation to the snowy range of the Himalya mountains, forming that stupendous buttress which supports on the south the elevated table land of Central Asia. The article of which we speak, is a review of a tour through a part of these mountains, to the sources of the rivers Jumna and Ganges. In the course of the review, the writer introduces a letter from a British officer commanding in the hilly country east of Nepaul, to the marquis of Hastings, stating that the Unicorn, so long considered as a fabulous animal, actually exists at this moment in the interior of Thibet, where it is well known to the inhabitants. The description of the animal corresponds exactly with the Unicorn of the ancients. The hoofs are divided, and the size that of a horse from twelve to thirteen hands high; fierce and extremely wild; seldom, if ever caught alive, but frequently shot; and that the flesh is used for food. The person who gave the information to the author of the letter (Major Latter,) has repeatedly seen those animals, and eaten the flesh of them. They go together in herds like wild buffaloes.—The drawing accompanying the letter shows some resemblance to the horse, but has cloven hoofs, a long curved horn growing out of the forehead, and a boar shaped tail. From its herding together, observes the reviewer, as the Unicorn of the scriptures is said to do, as well as from the rest of the description, it is evident that it cannot be the rhinoceros, which is a solitary animal.

CONTRAST.—The Comforts of Human Life, by R. Heron, were written in a prison under the most distressing circumstances. The Miseries of Human Life by Beresford, were, on the contrary composed in a drawing-room, where the author was surrounded by all the good things of this world. A striking contrast will be found to exist between authors & their works; melancholy writers being usually the most jocular and lively in society, and humorists in theory, but the most lugubrious of animals in practice. Burton, the author of The Anatomy of Melancholy, was extremely facetious in conversation.

Composition for healing wounds in Trees.

Take of dry pounded chalk, three measures, and of common vegetable tar one measure; mix them thoroughly and boil them, with a low heat, till the composition becomes of the consistency of bees-wax, it may be preserved for use in this state any length of time; if chalk cannot conveniently be got, dry brickdust may be subsaitured.

Application—After the broken or decayed limb has been sawed off, the whole of the sawed end must be carefully pared away, and the rough edges of the bark, in particular, must be made quite smooth; the doing of this properly is of great consequence; then lay on the thickness of half a crown, over the wounded place, and over the edges of the surrounding bark, it should be spread with a hot trowel.

A singular discovery has been made in the south of Africa, about ten miles north of Cape Town. Whilst digging in the earth a piece of timber was found buried, which on being traced led to the complete disinterment of a ship, or other large vessel that was buried some feet beneath the surface. The wood is in excellent preservation, and appears to be cedar. A more complete account of this extraordinary circumstance is shortly expected.

Productive Crop.—We some days ago published an account of a very productive crop of barley, raised to the eastward. We believe the following instance in our state equals, if not exceeds it. Mr. Peter Wager, at his farm at Montgomery square, from five acres of spring barley, raised 225 bushels, weighing 52 and half lbs. per bushel, which he sold to Mr. George Pepper, brewer of this city, who was so much pleased with its qualities, that he has reserved it for seed.—*Poulson's Phila. Extraordinary case.—M. Gourbillon, in his travels in Sicily, in 1819, gives the following strange statement:

"Nothing is more remarkable, says M. Gourbillon, than the constitution of the consulates of this city, Messina. The American Consul is a Russian; the Russian Consul a German; the German Consul a Dutchman; the Dutch Consul a Swiss; the Neapolitan Consul a Frenchman; and the French Consul is a Neapolitan. Not one of them has ever been in the country which employs him, nor can speak its language. These are six nations very singularly represented! These Consuls are, however, a good sort of people, who occupy themselves very steadily with their affairs; and the last mentioned of them is a musician and poet, and plays ill enough indeed on the flute."

The Russian American company has received intelligence from their colony at Sitka, which states, that there are Russian families in the North of Behring's Straits, under 67 north latitude, whose ancestors were driven there by a storm above a century ago. The directors of the company expects in a short time a circumstantial account of this remarkable occurrence

On rendering Cloth incombustible.—Mr. Guy Lussac has proposed a means of rendering the various tissues of cloth, stuffs, &c. incombustible; and the means he recommends appear superior to those which as yet have been proposed; that the combustibility of these substances is diminished by their having been immersed in solution of certain salts, as of alum, muriate of soda, &c. has been long known. Mr. Gay Lussac considered that those salts should possess this property most eminently, which entered most readily into fusion, being enabled by that means to cover perfectly the fibre of the substances, and preserve them from the contact of the air. Guided by this thought, he substituted phosphate of ammonia and borates of soda for alum, &c. and he found that muslins thus treated could be placed in contact with ignited bodies, without danger. They were carbonized, but would not inflame.

Sir E. Home has communicated to the British Royal Society some experiments tending to prove that black protects from the head of the sun better than white. We believe Franklin from some experiments adopted a contrary opinion.

Effect of Bad Company.—Greatest part of Thursday the presiding Alderman at the Town Hall, Southwark, J. J. Smith, was occupied in the investigation of a most heart-rending affair, where the son was charged with burglary in his own father's house, supported by the testimony of his mother and brother. The prosecutor, whose name was Raymond, is in a respectable way, as a lighterman at Horsleydown, and had reared a large family with credit. The prisoner, from his youth, had abandoned himself to dissolute habits, to bad company, and, to support his extravagance, had committed innumerable depredations on his father's property, all of which had been hitherto overlooked. On Tuesday morning last, about two o'clock, he effected an entrance into his father's house, by forcing open several locks and bolts, with all the dexterity of an accomplished house breaker; having gained the inside in safety, he proceeded to the room in which his parents slept, the lock of which he contrived to pick, without awakening any one within. He found, to his great disappointment, that no arrangement such which he was unacquainted had been made in the vicinities of the bureau and boxes, so that he could not get at them for that night; and he was compelled to rest content with all he could find in the pockets of his father and mother, which amounted to 1l. 14s 6d. and a few halfpence. All this the prisoner took, then left the room, and proceeded cautiously to the third floor, where his brothers, [two lads of 12 or 14] slept, with the intention of picking their pockets also; but the moon shining brightly through the window, disclosed his person to one of the boys who was awake, and gave an alarm. The prisoner instantly fled; his father dressed hastily and went in pursuit; he met the prisoner against the church of Allhallows, Barking, but the moment he attempted to collar him, the latter attacked and beat him most brutally, and would have effected his escape, but for the timely intervention of the beadle of Tower Ward, who took him to the watch-house, and found a sum of money on his person equal to that which the prosecutor had been robbed of. The money was produced, and the prisoner's mother swore it was the exact sum that had been stolen out of her pocket; she also identified a penny-piece which had been in her possession a fortnight, from its having the name of a cutler at Uxbridge engraved upon it. The prisoner, in answer to the charge, carelessly observed, that the money was his own, and that all his mother had asserted about the penny-piece was false! Mr. Alderman Smith observed, that the case was one of a most painful nature, and it was his duty to commit him to the Assizes for trial. The prisoner's father, with tears in his eyes, requested the magistrate to take off the capital part of the charge, as he did not wish to take his life, although it was his wish to send him out of the country. The Alderman informed him that however he might regret it, the law did not allow him to grant his request.

The prisoner was then fully committed, and the parties were ordered to attend on Friday to be bound over.

Vaccination.—The following letter on the interesting subject of vaccination, has been addressed by the celebrated Dr. Jenner to a lady resident near Devizes:—

"My dear Madam,—You ask me if I have any reason to doubt the efficacy of vaccination, as a certain preventive of the infection of small-pox. Various, you tell me, are the opinions on this subject; I beg pardon for opposing your declaration; be assured there is but one opinion among medical men who have conducted the practice with that attention which it requires, according to the rules I have precisely laid down. The island might have been entirely freed from the pestilence many years ago, if its wisdom in this respect had kept pace with many of the Continental kingdoms, where small-pox has been entirely unknown for many years; and for ages previously to the introduction of the new practice, it had frequently raged with unconscionable fury. I do not know how its merits can be set in a more intelligible or convincing point of view, than by giving you the substance of a quotation from a very recent publication on the subject by Mr. Cross, an eminent surgeon at Norwich, where, through the folly and obstinacy of the people, the small-pox lately committed great havoc. He tells us that 10,000 of this population who had been vaccinated, lived in the midst of a contaminated atmosphere, and exceptions to complete protection, after perfect vaccination, were so few as not to be worth detailing; on the other hand, out of 3000 who had neglected to be vaccinated, 580 individuals died, and some who had been inoculated with irregular small-pox caught the disease a second time!! What you have heard respecting my opinion of re-vaccinating in seven years, has no foundation in truth. Perfect vaccination is permanent in its influence. It is quite terrible to see the obstinacy of the people, but the basis of it rests with the superior orders; coercion, however, has never a good effect, but quote the contrary. It is shocking to contrast the conduct of people at home with that of those abroad. Let the country be ever so extensive, ever so populous, where vaccination has been solely and universally propagated, small-pox has been wholly got out of, and never brought back again, even after periods of years have elapsed in most instances. I am sorry to find the poor people around you are so infatuated, but does the fault lie with them? I remain, dear Madam, very faithfully yours.

From the London Observer, 5th August.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO IRELAND.

Our next gracious monarch is now "upon the seas," and the whole Irish population are, perhaps, at this moment straining their sight for a view of the auspicious bark which, for the first time, bears to their shores a Sovereign of the House of Brunswick. We have no doubt of his fervid and enthusiastic reception. He has always been the friend of Ireland, and the companions whom he most esteemed have been selected from her people. She has not only shared his privacy, and sweetened his pleasures, but she has been the genius of his councils and the guide to his glory. The wit of Sheridan illumined his youth—the friendship of Moore directed his manhood—Castlereagh devised in the cabinet what Wellington achieved in the field; and the first act of the crowned King, has been a person at tribute to the country which made his regency servile first in our annals. A thousand associations render Ireland dear to George the Fourth, and George the Fourth dear to Ireland. When he was not only far from power, but opposed to power she clung to him with prodigal affection; the address of 400 was one of the first fruits of her infant independence; and his Coronation Gazette proves that he does not forget it. Nine Irish names elevated to the peerage are proofs that prosperity is not always without a heart, and that even in palaces gratitude may be found with. But even independent of my personal affection for the reigning King, he visit presents a phenomenon to Ireland: it represents the first instance in Irish history of an Irish domestic visiting her as a friend. When other Monarchs went, it was not a visit, but a visitation. Blood heralded their approach, blood marked their progress, blood stroked their return! Even their success, (if the accession of the Brunswick dynasty, but two trifles, yet mixed the bitter with cup of a little Hanoverian Lowerings—"in what history," said a modern cavalier, "is one history, St. Hercules, shall I find an answer out of the Irish Lord in Lord next." "Indeed I do not know, sir, Lord," replied Languish, "unless it be in a cousin and a half (apart.")

The first regular ground of invasion was that of Henry II. It had its origin in ambition, its pretence in adultery, and its successful justification in a Papal Edict. From the hour that Henry landed with his army at Waterford, till his presentation of the staff at Ardeen at Cashel his entire march, was marked only by unanimous homage and extorted submission; and the refusal of Dublin to grant the Shannon to greet him, proved how partially that fine old city shone which elsewhere acknowledged him, was more ostentatious than sincere. His time was spent in opposing the piety for the benefit of the clergy; and the troops only proof concluded afterwards at Windsor, between him and Roderick, showed in its conditions that even Adrian's edict had not been unheeded by his authority. Henry passed to Carnsmore at Dublin, and it is curious to mark that there was not a single house, even in the metropolis, large enough to receive him. He was obliged to construct one of the timber and wattles, according to the custom of the country.

Twenty-four years after the visit of John, who remained three months, during which time the circumstance most worthy of remark is, that it was peaceable. It would be beside our purpose to recount the cruel and unchristian tale of Ireland's misgovernment from that period till Cromwell wrote upon her fields, in letters of blood, what fire, his murderous predecessors at her hands put to the flue rest. On the 15th of April, 1650, he landed at Dublin with a numerous army,—and he knew Irish and cold blooded massacre in the town of Drogheda, were the precedent to a series of exterminations, to oppress one, and desolations, to outrage unprecedented for being a period. Peace succeeded a famine followed in the train of war, and a system of ruthless no rising extermination left, now, in three fourths of the country, a single native to record, or mourn the inhumanity of the conquest. Two whole nations were depopulated that profession the rich lots of their ancestors were driven, like so many wild beasts into Clare and Connaught, and a proclamation was issued, stating that, after the 1st March, 1654, any Irish Catholic, man, woman or child, found in any other part of the kingdom, they might be legally put to death without charge or trial. This sanguine, terrific, and literally unheard, confiscation did not succeed, was denominated by the Protestant act of Grace! His remorseless pretensions to compensation of a Highland chief, including, of course, a brace of hounds, each of such an outrage was, because it was a salvation for cattle. Had travelled about six hundred miles for that purpose—plan of universal extermination. Nearly four centuries have now elapsed since the visit of the regal republican; but its traces are still in many places frightfully discernible; the confiscation grant, the name from which it took its date, for both, are abbey, are the landmarks of his progress, his power, and his impolicy. His immortality is preserved in the ruins he made, and he cannot die! After the death of Cromwell, and the subsequent base restoration of the Stuarts, James the Second, infatuated as he was once more, by his evil presence, filled Ireland with blood and misery to its. A legal by education, a tyrant by instinct, and a rebel by nature, he ruined beneath his banner the party at the by a full view of his Majesty and the royal Duke's upon his very moment he called to his standard. I had been standing in that position for many hours, and my people of a brave people and then betrayed them to the ingratitude of his own dastard person. An outcast from England and ex- ankle was one of the planters in the fields of my right arm, and my pelled by his own subjects from her throne, this greatness propelled a rabble here at point-blank range, I heard him distinctly call out, "Lord, Lord, O Lord, there is a gentleman with a pistol!" to which I answered, "the pistol will do you no harm, Madam," but a dreadful scene immediately followed. By the anxiety of the ladies, which induced them to crowd round me, I was deprived of the power of using my right arm, and my pistol fell from my hand. I then, with my left hand, endeavoured to draw my sword, but found it entangled in the skirts of my coat, which prevented me from doing so. I then made a desperate effort to disengage myself from the crowd, and succeeded in getting my sword out of the scabbard, when I received a violent blow on the head from behind, which brought me to the ground. I was then seized by a number of persons, who disarmed me, and I was conducted to the Castle of Edinburgh, where I remained a prisoner for nearly two years. I was then liberated, and returned to my native country, where I remained in peace for a few years, when I was again arrested, and sent to Fort George, where I remained a prisoner for nearly seven years more tain from Vienna, Augsburg, Frankfort, &c. are purely fabrications, as not one word or line is to be found in the treaty concluded between Prussia and Turkey. Surely a few days may be expected to terminate these speculations, and present us with facts decisive of the issue of the question. It will be seen, by a proceeding, article, that in the city the municipal, a strong pressure prevailed of the amicable adjustment of the differences between the Porte and the Russian Cabinet. But the whole tenor of the news brought by the French Papers is against the supposition.

PARIS, Sept. 1.

"Yesterday morning the Duke of Wellington took leave of the King and the members of the Royal Family.

The state of affairs between Russia and Turkey may render acceptable to our readers a summary of the relations in which these Powers reciprocally stand with regard to the Greek subjects of the Ottoman empire, and to each other :—

Russia founds her right to interfere, in certain cases, on behalf of a portion of the subjects of the Porte, upon the treaty of Kainardgi, in 1774, which was confirmed by that of Jassy, in 1792, and that of Bucharest, in 1812, and by which she restored to that Power all Bessarabia, with the towns of Akerman, Kilia, Ismail, and the Forts as of Bender and also the two principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia, upon conditions of which the following made part :—The Porte promised to protect the Christian religion and churches without hindering in any manner the free exercise of the former, or putting any obstacle in the way of repairing the latter or building new ones and further to restore to the convents, and to private persons, the lands taken from them in the district of Akerman, Kilia, Ismail, and Bender, and to hold no ecclesiastic in that district for consideration which their office requires. She also promised that she would regard baim and grant generally all the existing taxes, and would receive them through the medium of deputies to be sent every two years; that the Pacha, Governor, or any other persons whatever, should have no power to demand other payment or impositions of any kind: in fine that the natives should have all the advantages which they enjoyed during the reign of Mahomet IV. The Princes of Wallachia and Moldavia were to be allowed to have at the Porte, Charges d'Affaires of the Christian communion to watch over the interests of those principalities; and those agents were to be treated with the kindness and regard previously enjoyed by the ministers of nation. And lastly, the Ministers of the Russian Court were to be permitted to speak in favour of those principalities, when ever circumstances might require it. Russia, on her part, ceded to the Porte the isles of the Archipelago, which she had seized, stipulating for the inhabitants to guard, the same privileges as the Subjects of Moldavia and the treaty of Bucharest further guaranteed to the Servians, "the right of administering their internal affairs, upon paying to the Porte, a small contribution."

LONDON, Sept. 2

By the arrival of the Stanmore packet, at Falmouth, letters have been received from Lisbon to the 21st of August, from which are extremely important, inasmuch as they afford ample proof of the instability of the king of Portugal, under the present state of affairs in that kingdom. The insurrection of the military is assuming a tone which is likely to lead to most unpleasant consequences. A general review of the Portuguese troops, under the orders of General Sepulcida, the military Commandant of the city of Lisbon, took place in the square of the Terreiro do Pace, in the presence of the King, who had placed himself at one of the windows of the Royal Palace.— Before the review concluded, the King being in conversation with several persons of rank, accidentally turned his back to the troops in the square. On the first persons who noticed the circumstance was Gen Peniche, who immediately observed to several of the officers, that the King had placed himself in that position, in order to show his contempt and disgust of the army. This report, in a few minutes, was current throughout every regiment review, which occasioned from every side—" Fora, fora," (Off. off.) This exclamations was addressed to his King. So great was the insult at this moment, that apprehensions were entertained that some acts of violence would be committed on the King, and all those around him. After a short time it is said, however, he succeeded in mastering himself and, he assured the troops that nothing was further from his intentions than that of being guilty of what was attributed to him. He left—he add, that the devil in person of the King had the effect of subduing the anger of the troops.

VIENNA, Aug. 22.

(From the Journal de Paris).

"All the attention of our Monarch is now exclusively fixed upon Turkey, and especially upon Constantinople and Besserabia, for it is at Constantinople that the important question at present war will be decided, and it is from Bessarabia that the Russian armies will proceed to the invasion of Turkey, should war take place. Up to this day we have received no positive news from Constantinople. It is certain that on the 3rd of July no further than July 31, have received Vienna, and at the period of Strogonoff was, it is affirmed, detained at Bucharest by violent tempests. According to other reports of Forte, fortified the wasting that war would inevitably ensue if M. Strogonoff execution his project, had itself solicited him to continue his stay, to which he had consented after—very off reply.

"A recent letter received from Vienna, containing the following passage :— The Divan, having at length declared that it would adhere to the proposed arrangements of the Minister of the Mediating Powers of Constantinople, have had several conferences with Baron Strogonoff when they persuaded not without much difficulty, to return to Bucharest, where they have been three or four days on board the vessel in which he had embarked." The next courier from Constantinople will doubtless supply us with positive accounts as to the issue of the negotiations.

AUGSBURG, Aug. 26.

"A courier, which arrived to day, has brought a letter from Brody, of the 11th, and others from Odessa of the 13th instant.

"They contain long details of the preparations for war, which are spreading as well in Bessarabia as in other frontier provinces of Russia.

"All the corps which form the army of Count Wittgenstein, have marched to concentrate on the Pruth. This General in chief has visited, with great circumspection, all the positions. He now waits for orders to advance.

"With respect to Jassy Pacha, his army is concentrated on the right bank of the Pruth. It is now very numerous and animated with an infinited confidence in the issue of impending war. The Porte himself—sent orations for the commencement of hostilities. The advance posts of both armies are in mutual observation ; but at the departure of the courier, not a moment had been fired on either side.

FRANKFORT, Aug. 26.

"A second Russian army of 180,000 men, is now coming on the banks of the Dwina, A third, which will consist of 150,000 m., will also be on foot here in the course of two months. All the troops will be abundantly supplied with ammunition and provisions.

Advices from the borders of the Danube state, that war between the Ottoman Porte and Russia only be considered certain.

"Borders of the Danube, July 28.

"Besides the considerable forces which are already established in this quarter, a second army is forming of 120,000 men, of which several divisions are already concentrated, and orders are issued for the transition of another army, to consist of 150,000 before the beginning of the month of September.— The Cabinet negociates" says our soldiers, "but the arm advances." The shrewd intention of a certain foreign junior subject of the Porte, we can no find in the Divan, which we laugh at and pity its folly. There is, perhaps, no power that has more need of our unity than the very one which has been represented as having all at once transformed itself into an active ally of the Sublime Ottoman Porte.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 1.

The public tranquility has been again seriously disturbed here, within these few days. On the 23th of July accounts were received from the Peloponnesus, which the Divan care fully concealed. The people, however, soon got at that they were of an unfavorable nature ; it was rumored that the Greeks daily grew stronger, and had obtained great advantages, that the new Turkish fleet was entirely destroyed, &c. On the 27th in the morning, bands of assassins, who have long since infested the city, assembled, and jointly resolved to bid defiance to the forces of the Sultan. A party of Janissaries joined them. They fell on the Greeks, and massacred all they met, without distinction, but continued plundered at discretion, and above 200 Greeks were killed The Government did not resolve till evening to have these bands dispersed ; but after that time, all was quiet, except in the Fauxbourg of Galata, and that of the departure of three men of war, which were ordered to sail for the mouth of the Danube, to the Admiral of the fleet at Sebastopol, on to be by the Emperor at St. Petersburg. They add that M. de Strogonoff, the Russian Ambassador, who had very much exasperated M. Strogonoff in Odessa, were received with respect and attended by the authorities and the most distinguished inhabitants.

Extract of a letter from Paris.

"You are no doubt aware that the object of Lord Welling ton's visit to Paris was for the purpose of urging the French Government to join us in a league, offensive and defensive, for promptly opposing the projects of Alexander. You are also aware that 50,000 of the allied forces are already in French territory, and that the departure of three more divisions is only delayed by official despatches and private information, that there would be no possibility of forming an army to act with effect in such a scheme, while it put together as considered by Napoleon, the present disposition must be accordingly a matter of course. Louis is said to have entered into the project, and referred Lord Wellington to the Minister at War. The latter was equally well disposed ; but, before he proceeded, he called for more positive

From the Nantucket Enquirer.

In the year 1663, captain Walter Folger, from this town, on a whaling voyage, anchored in the harbor of Saguus, in company with another vessel, which was made fast to his vessel, besides being anchored. In the middle of the night the vessels were carried out of the harbor, in the most peculiar manner perhaps ever known. Finding themselves in this situation, they cut the warps that fastened them together, and upon taking up the anchors, they found that a whale called a hump back, had taken the anchor of captain Folger's vessel in its mouth, and was making a run with the two vessels! The whale was hove up, killed, and taken on board.!!!

Death of a Bear.

At Middlebury, N. Y. Mr. Martin Pholand, leaving a wife and three children. The death of Mr. Pholand, we are informed, was occasioned in the following manner:—He and Mr. Crum had caught some sun-fish for the purpose of putting into a certain pond; while alive in the vessel containing them, they undertook to see which could swallow the most and largest of the same; each swallowed three alive, and on Mr. Pholand's attempting to swallow a fourth, about the width of a man's three fingers, it stuck in his throat so tight he could not get it down A part of the fish was extracted just before he expired

The Duke of Athol.—At the Circuit Court of Justiciary at Perth, on Saturday the 11th instant, James Murray was brought to the bar, accused of writing threatening letters to the Duke of Athol. By the indictment it appeared, that in the month of July, 1820, the prisoner had written to his Grace, offering to make known, for a pecuniary consideration a conspiracy, in which the Duke, as Lord Lieutenant of the county, was materially interested. His Grace accordingly met him in the porter's lodge at Dunkeld, when the prisoner presented him with a letter, in which he stated that he had claims upon the estate of Soltzary, now the property of the Duke; and that, unless his Grace would instantly give him the sum of 5000l. or a check upon his banker for that amount, his life should pay the forfeit. In the letter he stated that he would allow five minutes for consideration; and that if the Duke did not within that space comply with his demand, the prisoner had two pistols in his possession, with the one he would blow his Grace's brains out, and with the other his own, being determined not to survive the want of his property. By the manly and decisive conduct of his Grace, it appeared that the prisoner's attempt was frustrated, and his person secured. The prisoner, a tall elderly looking man, pleaded guilty.—Mr. Urquhart, counsel for the panuel, urged in alleviation of the crime, the obvious defect of intention which is implied, and endeavored to show that there was no serious intention on the part of the prisoner to commit murder, who never doubted that he would accomplish his object by threats alone. The jury found the prisoner guilty, and he was sentenced to seven years transportation.

Precaution.—The novel just published under this title, is of the Cadebs school. It will please both the young and the old: the former will like it because incalcutes in every page the value of precaution on entering the matrimonial state. The author is extremely happy in his delineation of character. The portrait of Mr. Benedict, an elderly old Bachelor, whom a disappointment of the heart has early driven into retirement, after sitting one session in parliament, and acting the courtier and the beau for one season at the commencement of the last reign, is particularly amusing: and the readiness with which he connects his monotonous present with his gayer past by finding likenesses in every one whom he encounters, is unlike, to Lord Gosford, the companion of his former days, or Lady Juliana, the mistress of his youth. has something in it not less entertaining to the imagination, than touching to the affections. The portraits of the Jarvis's, the Chatterton's, and the Mesceley's, are all admirably drawn; in short, we may congratulate the public on the accession of a new novelist, possessing talents of no ordinary cast.

(From Madame de Stael's Ten Year's Exile.)

THE IMPERIAL FAMILY OF RUSSIA.

I had at last the pleasure of seeing that monarch, equally absolute by law and custom, and so moderate from his own disposition. The Empress Elizabeth, to whom I was at first presented, appeared to me the tutelary angel of Russia. Her manners are extremely reserved, but what she says is full of life, and it is from the focus of all generous ideas that her sentiments and opinions have derived strength and warmth. While I listened to her, I was affected by something inexpressible, which did not proceed from her grandeur, but from the harmony of her soul; so long was it since of concord between power and virtue. As I was conversing with the empress, the door opened, and the Emperor Alexander did me the honor to come and talk with me, What first struck me in him was such an expression of goodness and dignity, that the two qualities appeared inseparable, and in him to form only one. I was afraid to pronounce a word to which any real meaning can be attached.

The Emperor Alexander, on the contrary, conversed with me as statesmen in England would have done, who place their strength in themselves, and not in the barriers with which they are surrounded. The Emperor Alexander, whom Napoleon has endeavored to misrepresent, has a most remarkable understanding and information, I do not believe that in the whole extent of his empire he could find a minister better versed than himself in all that belong to the judgment and direction of public affairs. He did not disguise from me his regret for the admiration to which he had rendered himself in his intercourse with Napoleon. "I believe," said he, "that in the same way, he entertained a great enthusiasm for Frederic II. In this sort of illusion, produced by an extraordinary character, there is always a generous motive, whatsoever may be the errors that result from it. The Emperor Alexander however described with great sagacity the effect produced upon him by these conversations with Napoleon. "I was afraid," said the emperor, "of his opposite ideas, as if one must be astonished at each, without thinking of their being contradictory. He related to me also the lessons a la Machiavel which Napoleon had thought proper to give him: "You see," said he, " I am careful to keep my ministers and generals at variance among themselves, in order that each may reveal to me the faults of the other; I keep up around me a continual jealousy by the manner I treat those who are about me: one day one thinks himself the favorite, the next day another, so that no one is ever certain of my favor."

In obtaining the conviction of the good faith of the Emperor Alexander, in his relations of Napoleon, I was at the same time convinced that he would not imitate the example of the unfortunate sovereigns of Germany, and would sign no peace with him who is equally the enemy of people and kings. A noble soul cannot be twice deceived by the same person. Alexander gives and withdraws his confidence with the greatest reflection. His youth and personal advantages have not, at the beginning of his reign, allowed him be suspected of levity; but he is serious, even as much so as a man may be who has known misfortune. Alexander expressed to me his regret at not being a great captain: I replied to this noble modesty, that a sovereign was much more rare than a general, and that the support of the publick feelings of his people, by his example, was achieving the greatest victory, and the first of the kind which had ever been gained. The Emperor talked to me with enthusiasm of his nation, and of all that it was capable of becoming. He expressed to me the desire, which all the world knows him to entertain, of ameliorating the state of the peasants still subject to slavery. "Sire," said I to him, "your character is a constitution for your empire, and your conscience is the guarantee of it." "Were that even the case," replied he, "I should only be a fortunate accident," Noble words! the first of the kind, I believe, which an absolute monarch ever pronounced! How many virtues it requires, in a despot, properly to estimate despotism! and how many virtues also, properly to abuse it, when the nation which he governs is almost astonished at such signal moderation.

From the emperor's I went to his respectable mother's, that princess to whom calumny has never been able to impute a sentiment unconnected with the happiness of her husband, her children, or the family of unfortunate persons of whom she is the protectress. I shall relate further on, in what manner she governs that empire of charity, which she exercises in the midst of the omnipotent empire of her son. She lives in the palace of the Taurida, and to get to her apartment you have to cross a hall, built by Prince Potemkin, of incomparable grandeur; a winter garden occupies a part of it, and you see the trees and plants through the pillars which surround the middle inclosure. Every thing in this residence is colossal; the conceptions of the prince who built it were fantastically gigantic. He had towns built in the Crimea, solely that the empress might see them on her passage; he ordered the assault of a fortress, to please a beautiful woman, the Princess Dologoruski, who had disdained his suit.

CITY OF MEXICO.

From the Baltimore Intelligencer.

Messrs Editors —I have sent you a description of the city of Mexico, abridged from the travels of the Baron de Humbolt, who stated that city on the patronage of the Spanish King. It may be interesting to your readers, as it is a city of which very little is known; owing to the extreme jealousy of the Spaniards in rigidly excluding foreigners.—It is also the capital of a province which is daily assuming a more interesting aspect.

The city of Mexico in situated in a wide surrounded by verdant and lofty mountains. The capital so attracted by the Spaniards, exhibits, perhaps, alone trait, though a more august and majestic appearance. With the exception of Petersburg, Berlin, and Philadelphia, in some quarters of Westminster, there does not exist a city of the same extent, which can be compared to the capital of New Spain: it the author's level of the ground on which it stands, for the regular city and breadth of the streets, and the symmetry of the public edifices. The architecture generally is of a very pure style, and there are even edifices of very beautiful proportions. The habitations and gates are all of free-stone. The royal palace, and the school of mines, for which the country furnished a sum of more than three millions of francs, (1,000,000 pounds sterling) would adorn the principal places of Paris or London.—Four great palaces are now building, and by Mexican artists, palaces of the Academy of Fine Arts of the city of three palaces exhibits a very beautiful and pure style of execution equally. The Mint is a truly sublime and correct specimen paved with porphyry flags, and covered with an immense, richly ornamented with bronze, containing an exposition statues of the Kings of Spain. The cathedral is the largest and most remarkable for its excellent proportions. The two spires of the church have seven bells apiece, and they are chosen and well tuned. The sky which generally attracts the attention of the traveller on his first arrival, is hardly noticed here. The air is mild, and the climate is unchangeable. The city is surrounded with villas and stations, and is very populous. 2. The Treasury, from which, since the beginning of the 18th century, upwards of 300 millions of dollars have been coined! 3. The convent, among which the good convent of St. Francis is particularly distinguished, from its size and magnificence, and the splendid riches of the order of Francis 4. The Hospital, or rather the various Hospitals, of which, the one numbers 600, the other 200 children and old people. 5. The Alcadia, a fine edifice of white free-stone, in which are preserved the principal archives of the province. Mines, with the collections in physic, mechanics and conchology. The Botanical Garden, which a extensive, but very unproductive. 8. The edifices of the University and public Library. 9. The equestrian statue of King Charles the Fourth. According to the most recent and last enumeration there, the population of the city of Mexico appears to be from 135 to 140,000 souls. The clergy of Mexico are extremely numer ous. The Archbishop possesses a revenue of 600 000 livres (14 400, sterling.) The revenue of the Inquisition amounts to 1,200,000 livres. The Viceroy of Mexico is also supplied. The greater part of the rents are collected on the Chinampas, called by the Europeans floating gardens. They are formed with rafts of reeds. The edges of these gardens are generally ornamented with flowers. The promenade in boats around the Chinampas, is one of the most agreeable that can be enjoyed in the environs of Mexico.

No city of the new continent, without even excepting those of the United States, can display such great solid and scientific establishments as the capital of Mexico. In the Academy of the Arts, a number of young people are educated, at the expense of the state, who are born in any part of Germany. The collection of casts brought to Mexico, cost the King 200,000 francs.

The revenue of the Academy of Fine Arts already amounts to 125,000 francs. It is impossible not to perceive the influence of this establishment on the taste of the nation. What a contrast to the wretched state of the arts in the capitals of all the provinces of Europe! Those manufactures which frequently cost a million to a million and a half of francs, would appear to no advantage in the first streets of St. Petersburgh, Berlin, or London. The Mexicans have not yet a public square, but are already in possession of the equestrian statue of King Charles the Fourth which with the exception of the Marcus Aurelius at Rome, is the finest monument of style, every thing in which is common in this way in Europe.—Information is communicated gratis at the Academy of Fine Arts. The architectural works of the capital of Mexico are so great, that the author, notwithstanding the low rate of wages, the aspect edifice for the school of mines will cost at least 3,000,000 francs.

Nothing can present a more rich and varied appearance than the valley, which in a fine summer morning, we transport ourselves to the top of one of the towers of the cathedral of Mexico. The city appears as if washed by the waters of the Lake of Tezcuco, whose basin, surrounded by the mountains and boarders, brings to mind the most beautiful lakes of the mountains of Switzerland. Large avenues of elms and poplars lead in every direction to the capital, and to its numerous country-houses, over arches and regular elevations, cross the plain, and exhibit an appearance equally agreeable and interesting

THE LIFE GUARDS.

Yesterday morning, it having been generally understood that the first regiment of life guards, which was out on duty during the whole of Tuesday the 11th inst, would be drawn up in rank, in their barrack yard, in order to be inspected by the officers of the Sovereign's household, as who have given evidence on the Coroner's inquests, the Knightsbridge barracks was the an early hour, be engaged by crowds of persons, anxious to know the result. The manner was to take place at one o'clock, and strict orders had been given to every man to appear in the new regimentals and accoutrements which he was to wear on the occasion of her Majesty's funeral; but these were not all been out, were desired to consult with corbeaux. It being apprehended that the crowd would force their way through the gates, a party of regulars were stationed there under the command of Captain Vyse, to draw on, they were found of great service during the day in the streets, and kept the police in check.

The barracks, about twenty acres in number, began to assume a scene of bustle and activity at an early hour. Officers of the Commanding, the men ordered first to the right hand, and afterwards in the riding room, at all the men were ready to mount, when every one had been satisfied that his dress was correct, and each of his accoutrements, which, in the course of the day, would inspect the principal places of Paris or London.—Four great palaces are now building, and by Mexican artists, palaces of the Academy of Fine Arts of the city of three palaces exhibits a very beautiful and pure style of execution equally. All his gracious Majesty's household, and the chief object of her Majesty, during her residence in this country, to cherish and promote.

His Majesty well knows the generosity and warmth of heart which distinguishes the character of the faithful people of Ireland, and he knows them with a heart full of affection towards them, and with a confident and grateful persuasion, that in this portion of his subjects, and in every other portion, he will not be given in vain. tury half-Sterne, which deserve to be recorded. The Life Guards on coming up to the rear of the Halt in front, distinguished a regular solid assemblage of men in front of the line, sustaining and repelling a most furious able onset of the French, called out to them, as if it had been on parade in the Park, "Brave Blues! don't you further front, and we'll alter them."

A Life Guardsman who, from being bald, was known among his comrades by the appellation of the Marquis of Granby, had his horse shot under him, and lost his hat; but he immediately rose, and though he last attacked a cuirassier, whom he killed, mounted his horse and rode forward, his comrades cheering—"Well done, Marquis of Granby!"

Among the officers attended to the Duke of Wellington, was the late Lieut. Col. Erskine. He had his left arm carried off by a cannon ball, and 1 of two fingers of his right hand. When the former event shot had thrown him from his horse, and as he lay bleeding upon the ground in this mangl d condition, the French mounted cuirassiers and trumpets being heard close behind, he seized his hat with his four losing shattered arm and waving it around him cheered his companions, in the midst of the dying and the dead.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Dr. JOHN REID has published a second edition, with considerable additions, of the Essays on Hypochondriasis, and other Nervous Affections. On a subject like this, many people feel inclined to dwell with an intense personal interest; and they will certainly not be repelled by the style in which Dr. Reid has treated it. We have seldom read a more entertaining performance. Many anecdotes, and some of a ludicrous nature, are detailed. In one instance, the Doctor was asked for bark, or some correct native medicine, to enable his patient to go through an impending suit in Chancery. He was not then ill, but he expected to be so; and, we think, very reasonably. The style of these essays is lively and spirited, exhibiting great ease of composition, and happiness of illustration.

To those who take much interest in the enjoyments of the table, Mr. ACCUM's Treatise on Culinary Chemistry, and the scientific principles of Cookery, will form an attractive object of study. After sundry philosophical disquisitions on the food of man, and an exposition of the importance of the art of cookery, he proceeds to analyze the general operations of the kitchen, and concludes with recommending and explaining the best and most wholesome of its preparations. To some such work as this, Mr. ACCUM was in duty in the public bound, having in his previous Treatise on the "Adulteration of Food, and Culinary Poisons," stepped a horror of ordinary etiquette in our minds, which it is unquestionably the purpose of the present volume to allay. Our satisfaction is great on finding, on this occasion, not Death, but "Health in the Pot." We are once more reconciled to the flesh-pots of Egypt. For what we shall venture to receive, we shall be thankful to Mr. ACCUM. To say the truth, there are many plain and useful directions laid down here, for which house keepers are indebted to him; being free from the cavilous generally advanced against the recipes of professed cooks—scarcity of materials and good glory of expence. This work is published by Mr. ACCUM, into whose hands it came in consequence of some unfortunate circumstances, well known to the public.

"The fortunes D. SYMES has completed his third and final tour, and after various misadventures in search of a wife, altogether different from those of CAESAR, has passed from matrimony into sovereignty. The deserts of this author Doctor is much to be deplored. He was one of those who might exclaim with the Irish some boy—What a funny thing it is to be alive!" For with the Doctor, life and sin were synonymous. His adventures, however, as here recorded, illustrated with appropriate plates, are not to remain so. His epitaph ought to be an epigram, and his requiem a chorus of hearty laughter—in which the reader, who takes in hand this original and grotesque piece of drollery, will have no objection to join.

FROM THE CONNECTICUT COURANT.

Messrs. PERSONS,

Whatever contributes to promote a knowledge of rural or domestic economy must of course conduce to the public good. To this end I have thought it might be useful to make known the following mode of feeding Cows, which I have pursued during the past winter, and which has appeared to me to combine the advantage of affording a nutritious succulent food, at perhaps as small an expense, as is compatible with the object of productiveness. I have but two Cows, both of which are young, and neither of them remarkable for excellence. As labor was cheap, and could easily be spared, it occured to me, in the beginning of winter, that I would try to keep them chiefly on cut straw. This, when the weather would permit, I soaked in water, and mixed with it, both when soked and dry, a small quantity of Indian meal, in the proportion of one quart of the meal to a bushel of the cut straw, and occasionally adding an handful of old salt pounded fine.—Three bushels of straw so prepared were found sufficient for the feeding of the two Cows, with the addition of a peck and an half of potatoes given to them in the middle of the day, and a boiling of hay at night. The expense of feeding in the manner described above may be thus estimated, the figures expressing cents and hundredths:

3 bushels of cut straw, weighing 16 1-2 pounds at $2 1-2 ton, cost - - - Cents 2 38
3 quarts of Indian meal, at 25 cts bushel, 3 91
1 1-2 peck of potatoes, at 1s, bushel, 6 25
16 pounds of hay, at $10 ton, 7 14

thus making the expense of keeping one cow, through the winter, upon an average less than ten cents a day. Put as I had to purchase all the provender which I used, and as a considerable part of the value of the articles, being all of them with exception of the meal very bulky, consists in the expense of conveying them to market, it is apparent that a person who raises his own feed on his own land can perform the same operation at about three fourths the cost. Where it suits the convenience of the party, turnips or carrots can be substituted for potatoes, both of which may be raised at about as small an expense, taking into account cultivation, product and value, and the first of which is thought, particularly by the English agriculturalists, to be as good an article of food for cows, and the last a better. And wheat or rye bran, when not cleaned very closely, might also be substituted in some cases with advantage for the Indian meal. It appears besides that hay is the dearest article in the above list, costing nearly three times as much as the straw, much more than potatoes, and nearly as much as an equal weight of Indian meal. It would be gratifying if this publication were to lead some of our intelligent farmers to think further on this subject, and it is possible some person, who has had more experience than the writer, might suggest a different combination of provender which may be still cheaper, and yet equally nutritious and productive of milk My two cows eat readily their allowance of food as stated above, and have kept in perfectly good order. Although by no means of more than ordinary goodness, they furnished a plentiful supply of milk for all the purposes of a family consisting of eleven persons, have enabled us to make about seven pounds of butter of excellent quality a week, and to keep a number of pigs thriving and very fat.

There is a circumstance relating to the feeding of cows which may be worth mentioning. Every one knows that water, when very cold, cannot be swallowed but in small quantities at a time, and that with some pain, and neither men nor animals can drink as freely of cold liquids in cold weather, as they can when either the drink or the weather is temperate. I am persuaded it would be beneficial if, in very cold weather, the chill could be taken from the water, before it is given to cows. They would drink more, and would of course give more milk.—This practice, I have heard, has been adopted by some farmers to the North of England; and it might be introduced here with facility, in most cases where persons water their cows from a well adjoining their dwellings. From the general introduction of the principles of economy into our fire places, most persons have now the opportunity of keeping a constant supply of hot water; a pail full of which poured into the trough where the cows are watered would temper the chilled water, and make a mixture which would be more palatable to them, and would be drunk more freely.

The cow has been emphatically styled the poor man's friend. And I shall conclude my remarks by a brief calculation of the advantage of keeping a cow, which, where the milk can be either used or sold, will demonstrate the truth of the assertion. It is reasonable to calculate that a cow may have during the year grass feed, upon an average, for about 24 weeks. This at 50 cents a week will cost $12 00 for the annual expense of keeping a cow. Taking into account the time a cow, one with another, will go dry prior to calving, and estimating the worth of the calf equivalent to the milk which the family does not obtain while the calf sucks, and it will be a moderate calculation to allow that a cow of middling excellence may yield on an average seven quarts of milk a day throughout the year, if taken care of as she deserves to be. This will give 49 quarts a week, or 2538 quarts in the year. The lowest price I have heard of milk being sold for is four cents the quart. But, to reduce the price even to three cents the quart, so as to cut off the idea of a retailing profit, the worth of the milk will amount to $76 14, which will leave a balance of advantage, in favor of keeping a cow, of $44 96, supposing that the feeding and tending can be performed within the limits of the ordinary assistance in a family, and that the manure is an offset for the expense of stable room.

Dry feed for the remaining 28 weeks, it has been shewn, will cost $19 48

MARRIAGES

In England, Mr Alex. Mitchell, aged 109 years (much afflicted with the palsy,) to a middle aged highly accomplished Miss Jane Hammond, aged 19 years.—At Great Torrington, Honor Down, aged 77, to a youth of 16. Her youngest son is more than double the age of her present husband.—In Manchester, Mr. Edward Honey, musician, aged 32, to Mrs Ingram, musician, aged 29, both blind. What renders this union more singular, is, that she is his sixth wife, and he her fifth husband.

Steam-boats.—We have before us a list of the steam-boats, which plied up and down the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, with their tonnage, &c. on the 19th January last. They are alphabetically arranged. Their numbers and tonnage are really astonishing. There are not less than twenty employed. The Feliciana is 408 tons; the Tennessee 416; the Manhattan 427; the Columbus 450; but the United States, Capt. Hart, is of the astonishing size of six hundred and forty six tons!—There is one steam-boat on Lake Pontchartrain; one on Plaquemine lake; and one on Mobile bay. There are several more boats now on the stocks; and the number for the transportation of passengers and cargoes is so rapidly increasing, as will outstrip any moderate calculation. The river is occasionally animated by the smoking boats passing each other; in many stretches, several are sometimes visible; and along the levee at New-Orleans, twenty steam-boats or more are sometimes to be seen together. The people of the Mississippi ought to erect a statue to the genius of Fulton, in the most conspicuous part of New Orleans.—Richmond Comp.

A letter from the Post Master at New London N. H. mentions that the whirlwind came across the N. W. end of Sunapee Lake and passed over the S. W. end of Kearsarge mountain, making a path of 30 rods wide across New London, and taking in buildings the distance of a quarter of a mile, each side of its path. There are demolished by the whirlwind, one saw mill, nine barns, three dwellings, four sheds, and several dwelling houses, and other buildings partly down. Several orchards, and 250 acres of wood blown down, with injury to walls, fences, fields, cattle and property of every kind. No lives lost in New London. Four persons were killed in Warner, and a number very severely wounded.

Singular Prediction.—A man of the name of Barry, who lives near this town, and in as good health and spirits as we ever saw a man of his age, has got a grave stone cut in memory of his father and mother—the former died at the age of 103, and the latter 83 years; and underneath it says,—"This stone was erected by James Barry, of Ballyquin, who died May the 1st 1826, aged 95; also his wife Catherine Barry, alias Power, who died May 5, 1825, aged 85 years."—Chanel Paper.

Married.—On Wednesday, Mr. John Penny, to Miss Isabella Penny, both of Preston:—

The Lady thought upon a plan
To turn a penny—just to try it:
She laid her Penny out on man,
And got a handsome Penny by it.

SKETCH OF AN EDITOR'S LIFE.

Enter the office in the morning and pick up the papers to see what we can garner from our contemporaries, for the gratification of our readers. Agree to exchange and propose to subscribe for our paper. Pressed with the proposition, we make all possible haste to receive it, but to our infinite mortification find, at the end of—, that he was out of money, but would send one, and call in a few days and pay us.—Re-commence reading, and stopping third with our flesh—on the second sweat is upon the floor a hundred we hold them "come in" when a gentleman enters and accosts us with—"Sir I have a handbill for you to print, and should be glad if it could be done so as." "Very good, sir," we reply, "it shall be immediately attended to." He thanks us for our accommodating, requests us to send it to—, steps complacently to charge it to his account, and then retires. Another rap board—"come in,"—a boy from the country enters—"I saw an advertisement for the next paper, and sending that Mr. ——, has received our bill, and no money—sent him at that moment; he will, however, call in a few days and pay the old and new one together. Annoy a good deal—so sets with an advertisement, and enquires, 'can this appear in your next paper?'—O yes, sir.' Very good he retires, no money of course. Immediately another enters, with a letter—Request him to take a seat; but he cannot tarry; he calls 'good morning,' and retires. Read the letter—Sir, I am very much pleased with your notices on a recent war subject; and you will therefore erase my name from your subscription list, I will call in a day or two and pay you.'—By and by in comes the paper maker, and wants some money—get some for him—put him off as well as we can. The printers calls unbidden—"No money to buy any more, would rather send a set." Here, Bob, take these bills and try to collect some money; but here, Tom, we should see you too. Don't stay—run sir—go, sir; enter a subscriber—"I wonder how it happened that I got no paper the last time?" I don't know indeed—I reserved to the place you ordered." While endeavoring to satisfy him—proof is rushed out. Begin to read the proof, and another calls for copy. Copy is furnished.—In comes Mr.——, is at Philadelphia, Mr.——, is in Baltimore, Mr.——, is in the country, Mr.——, had no change about him, Mr.——, says you must send again, Mr.——, says you owed me a note to him for money, where the hell is he will dodge and pay you.—So there is no money.—Attempt again to read the proof, just interrupted again by another call for money. While endeavoring to tell the best story we can, in comes Tom, with a face similar to Bob's. The person goes away disappointed, and leaves us mortified. Tom is sent to the post office—While he is gone, the proof is finished, the scissors to work with a bundle of letters; commence reading the letters, find one a long communication from a friend, which it would be improper to insert; another a complaint for not having published a philippic against a friend; a third a communication on an indifferent subject, on which we have the postage to pay; and a fourth an order for the paper, but without the advance enclosed. Others collect the printer's money and put it into their own pocket.

"Variety is the very spice of life,
Which gives it all its flavor."

But with an editor it is generally a very unpleasant flavor, since his varieties are sometimes calculated to bring vexation upon vexation.

It is true we sometimes meet with events, a little different from those we have here detailed, or our readers may imagine how it would be with us.

YORK WEEKLY POST.

Vol. I.] YORK, UPPER-CANADA, TUESDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1819. [No.

From the United States.

Extract from Mr. Gist's Address, Delivered before the Albany County Agricultural Society.

I shall not take the liberty, gentlemen, to point out some of our prevalent errors in our husbandry, and to suggest such improvements, as, in the opinion, may come within the means of most ordinary enterprise and capital.

The [illegible] and suitable application of manures, from one of the best resources of a good farmer. We have certainly left, in all collections [illegible] and [illegible] to the [illegible] and [illegible] to the [illegible] and [illegible] to the pound to the impoverishing influence of the wealthy, and on public materially improved.

While various opinions continue to be entertained, as to the manner in which gypsum, or plaster of paris, exerts upon vegetation, the fact of its being a cheap and highly beneficial application in certain soils, is now universally admitted. Its effects upon the oldest are wonderful; and by the application of a few bushels, poor and exhausted soils have been made to produce abundant crops, and whole districts to double their agricultural products. As a general rule, gypsum benefits all kind of soils, except those that are habitually wet, and to still clayey and even sandy soils of the latter I have known it do well where the surface was undulating. On grass, the best time to sow it is when vegetation starts in the spring, at the rate of one bushel per acre, and the same quantity immediately after the hay is taken from the ground. A greater dressing seldom proves beneficial, and in sometimes of disservice. On corn and potatoes, it is generally applied in the growing plant, though, on the former, Judge Peters and Mr. Taylor concur in recommending, as a preferable mode, that it be sown broad cast, at the rate of two bushels per acre, previous to the last ploughing.

Another point of primary importance in rural farming, but to which our country is deficient, is the draining of wet and marshy grounds. Much of our best-watered land is not only rendered useless by this neglect but, in cases, and spicy apples of the orchard. These wet seasons, becomes the focal source of sickness and death to the neighbors, which good cultivation would annually devote a few days after the crop had been secured to ditching their wet grounds, and directing the water off from those bogs and brush, they would generally become fit for cultivation, and by proper attention to the health of their neighbors, would amply remunerate them for their labor.

Another source upon you, gentlemen, the importance of attending to the best breeds of stock, and of keeping them well. It costs no more to keep a sheep which flees well to bring you six shillings or a dollar a pound, than one which fleeces a-much less quantity, or whose carcase is worth at market from four to ten dollars, than one which is only worth three or four dollars. The Merino and Leicester breeds are among us; and the extra cost of procuring them in the first instance, is soon recompensed by the increased value of their flocks. Wool is becoming a valuable staple of our country, and the attention to its good stock is likely to increase in a ratio, greater than the increase of our flocks. It will not be exaggerated to say, that one hundred sheep have increased tenfold within the last ten years; and yet the supply is inadequate to the demand, that a merchant in New York recently imported a cargo of wool from Liverpool, which he sold to our manufacturers at a handsome profit. This fact should do away any doubts which may exist in the minds of our growers, as to the home demand for this article.

The advantages of a good breed of neat cattle, of horses, and of swine, over bad ones, must be equally apparent. The former generally require less food to subsist them than the latter, as they grow less, and are more docile and orderly in their habits.

But the advantages of good feeding, whether we regard the fleece, the labor, the milk, or the carcase, are much greater than would be imagined on a superficial view, particularly to milch cows. The English dairy of agriculture once published an account of the expense of keeping, and of the product and profit, of a cow kept by William Crump, of Lewes. The cow was generally fed on a half bushel of grains, malt dust and shorts, per day, besides roots and grass and kept in a stable. The expense of her keeping was stated at £8 5 5 ($1015) per annum, and amounted to $411 in four years; and yet the net profit of the cow are stated to have amounted to $170 a year, or $680 for the whole time. The cow gave from 5 to 22 quarts of milk per day, which produced from five to eighteen pounds of butter per week. The skim milk and manure were taken into the account of profits.

The Massachusetts Agricultural Repository afford a cow equally remarkable. Mr. Oakes, of Gardner, purchased a cow in 1815, which had been selected out of a drove. She was then five years old. With ordinary keeping, he made from her, in that year, 170 lbs. butter. In 1814, he fed her with ten bushels of meal, and she produced him 300 lbs butter. In 1815, he gave her from 20 to 25 bushels of meal, and her butter exceeded 400 lbs. In 1816, she was fed with a bushel of meal per week, and all her skim milk; and between the 5th April and 2nd September, she produced 464 lbs. pounds, and her calf five weeks of the time. The cow was exhibited at the latter date, and took the premium at Brighton fair.

With the same attention to feeding, and care in grooming and preserving our best animals, that has been bestowed upon these subjects in Great Britain, I am persuaded that our cattle might, in a few years, be made to equal any in the world.

As improved implements of agriculture are coming into use, as their advantages are appreciated, I will quit my stand I designed to say on that subject, and invite your attention to gardens and orchards, as not on any and profit.

The predecessors of a good kitchen garden, cultivate correctly in the maintenance and health of a family. They afford an agreeable variety in our diet, and are one of the best ornaments in the vicinity of a farm house. Half an acre of ground, devoted to garden fruit, and the cultivation attended to, in general terms more profitable, in the economy of a family, than any other two acres upon a farm. When in travelling, we see a garden abounding with vegetables, and filled with fruit trees in abundance, and ornamented with borders and flowers, we immediately ascribe to the unknown possessors, industry, good taste, hospitality and comfort. And I would be disingenuous did I not add that the female part of the family cannot in for a large share of the imputed merit. The expense of cultivating such a garden is comparatively trifling, and the gratification is charming and even lasting, or on a lowery day, aided by the always ready assistance of the females, is all that is requisite.

From trees, whether of the orchard or garden, are to be procured additional profit. A gentleman in this neighborhood has sold garden fruit from two acres of his ground for more than $1000; and I know of orchards which yield the proprietors from $30 to $1000 per annum. But independent of consideration of profit, the association of fairing, for our families and friends, a succession of garden fruit, is of itself ample compensation for the trouble of raising it. And how pleasant it is in a social mind, especially to the sons of New England, to participate the hospitality of their fathers, by treating a circle of neighbors, with a mess of sweet corn, a dish of peas, a basket of fine fruit, and a warm evening's fire with the work of the garden, or the hoeball, become greatly shorted by the torrents which descended in all direction from the mountains, and with such extreme rapidity, that because very difficult for them to escape the danger of being overwhelmed by the waters, or greatly benefited by the violence of the storm. The cotton mills in Hollywell sustained much damage from the extraordinary torrent, having no way thrown down lower stories with such rapid progress, that two of the people employed in the works were greatly astonished, the lower rooms becoming literally filled with water in few seconds. Great and repeated inundations of which were crying in all directions for help, and flying for security to the sides of the hills. The copper works were also speedily filled with the flood which created so incontestible degree of alarm. On the waters reaching the heated steam furnaces, the latter acted, with an explosive force—hitting a heavy piece of timber, and throwing it with such force and sequence took fire; and it was not without difficulty extinguished. Coals and lead and copper ore were washed in considerable quantities from the different works in the neighborhood. On Saturday morning the match below Hed, we'll, presented a scene of desolation, in which were discernible the wrecks of valuable property which had been swept away by the impetuous deluge. Coal, copper and lead ore, cotton packs, broken machinery, dead cattle, house-hold furniture, stacks of hay, shrubs of trees, and in fact all kinds of materials which lay in the progress of the storm, were forced before the storm. It is said that the loss sustained by the cotton and copper works is estimated at several thousand pounds; and it is also reported that three persons were drowned by the ravaging deluge.—Chester Courier.

PARIS, Oct. 15.

On the 9th inst. about 250 Liberals gave a dinner to M. Lafayette, on his return as Deputy for that city. There were present Liberty, the Constitution, and the Charter, represented on a board by the Goddess of Liberty, where there was a display of fine works, new books, and other amusements, in honor of that Deputy—without consequently the company did not confine themselves to the repast of "Lafayette's favorite article" dinner mentioned, which cannot be reported, and would, indeed, the necessity of its hearty character to partake of the sumptuous and delicious fare provided by the gentleman, two pre-eminent for the perfect of the town, and the other by the mayor of the city, to be honored, and had the desired effect, without the aid of wine.

The following is the proclamation of the Prefect of the department:—

"Complaints of Lyons—the tranquility which we enjoy was accidentally disturbed in the evening of last year. A crowd assembled & uttered cries tending to the overthrow of the power. In a short time the tumult was suppressed, and the public peace restored. Order, it now still more confirmed, seemed to give promise of which might be viewed as hostile, entered our walls, and roused by their scandalous clamours, peaceful citizens.

Vain would be the attempt to disguise that immoral attitude which would forever and blindly give you. You form no other wishes grieved at the heart of man by the law of the gospel as well as by that of nature, the every government is bound to protect the persons and properties of its subjects. Setting out with these principles, she concludes that the two powers, if they pulled together, might easily not only induce, but even compel the Grand Seignior to consent to the measures mentioned above, and to cause to the Greeks full and entire protection for their religion, Laws and properties. The Divan, it is supposed, would be more tractable on this head, as it is not but perceive the danger which threatens the European part of its empire. As to the objection which will doubtless be made, that the Sultan, deposed by the Muftis and Ulemas, a fanatical body, and on a numerous and undisciplined soldiery, cannot offer coercive means for the fulfilment of the stipulations of the treaty, the Memoir replies that, in the extremity to which the Porte is reduced, all the exterior dispute on might be easily obtained; and consequently all the necessary guarantees against the rebellion of them, or whether side it might be, England and France would be entitled to require the right of interposing vengeance on the rebellion, in case of impunity of the Agents of the Turkish Government.

Hereafterward according to the author of the Memoir, we shall state that none of those inconveniences which the humanity manifest, and of which George IV. has been the means for nearly four centuries, will be incurred, because the interests of the Seignior will cease to more insecure or spoliations, and the Agents of the Sultan, the subjects, or the people or dare to commit the outrages with which they have been familiarized, when they shall be convinced that no influence or intrigue will be able to withdraw them from a punishment deserved.

The Memoir was then enjoyed in the unknown to their ancestors for perhaps two centuries; for it is not only more to the interest of the Turks that they have to the Greeks, but also to every respect, as regards equal rights in religion, under their own empire. The history of the other country presents such a mass of cruel, unjust, & preposterous acts from Peter, I. it cannot be discredited, says the author of the Memoir, that any other mode of assisting the Greeks would so much offend the ottoman power, as to produce the immediate rupture of the alliance. This would be the case even though Greece was declared independent; for it is to be observed, that the Greeks profess the same religion as the Russians, and that they are more attached to it than the latter. Their hatred and fanaticism against nations which profess not their religion are well known.—Russia would therefore exert over the Greeks the same influence as that now exercised over the confederation of the Rhine, and even a greater. The latter was regulated only on form, whereas the former would be founded upon force and active principles. The opponent of Europe, therefore, requires that the Ottoman throne should be preserved, for if this throne were once destroyed, the colossal power of Russia would become if by mere formidable in Europe & for itself the immense resources which it would find in Greece."

Advices from Genoa of the 21 October, state that by the latest accounts from Tuscany, the contagion had been received at that place. At Corsica, on the Marseilles, were daily. Funerals, several fatal cases, and convalescents, with sporadic attacks of the 14th September, of the extremity of Cape Bon, were severe effects. Agreeable reports proceeding the north for Levant. An Agenine Xebec bearing despatches from Smyrna, fell in with a large Greek pirate which it captured, with 90 men on board. At Port Zante, stating that the Turkish fleet had put to sea and to destroy without leaving a vestige, if possible, Hydra, Spezzia, and Ipsara, pests which from the coast of the Greek flotilla and traders.

The bodies lately exhumed on the gates of the Seraglio, were those of Yeli Pacha, the son of Ali of Janina, and of his son Mehemed Pacha. These deaths have been provoked by the intrigues of Ishmael Pacha, and of Behir Thersekadar.—They have insinuated to the Divan, that Yeli and his son had deposited a sum of 25,000,000 at Santa Maura, of which they declared the English General, Sir F. Adam, to be lord in case of their death. A negotiation to remove the money had been entered into with the Turkish Chief, whom we have named. They reasoned that a Pacha being a slave employed by his Highness the Sultan, was not likely to make a will, except in favour of the sovereign, and in consequence they demanded the deposite. The reply was that Yeli and others could not be divested of the property." A second demand was made, a reply was given, and the Divan, in order to end the loss of the difficulty, ordered the heads of the two persons to be cut off who had been employed to replace the treasure.

A Madrid article, of October 4, says, Francis Villanueva, charged with having endeavoured to subjugate the Republican for the Constitutional system, was condemned on the 24th September, by the Tribunal of the Four Readers of Sarragosa, to eight years banishment in the city of Santa Maria de Benaventa, in one of the Canary Islands, to be deprived of his commission and rank, and to pay the costs of the process. The proceedings against Caguet de Notaire are continued with great activity.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 23.

The extraordinary Cortes of Spain was opened on the 25th ult. and a very cordial disposition appears to exist between the King and the Deputies. His Majesty's speech stated briefly the subjects which he intended to submit to the consideration of the Cortes, the military ordinance, the plan of decree of the organization of the naval force, and the decree for the organization of the marine militia. Other points are to be brought before the Extraordinary Cortes, namely the measures to be adopted to restore the tranquility of the Americas, the examination and reform of the duties of Customs, and some steps to prevent the introduction of a false or defective foreign currency. His Majesty in conclusion, assured the Representatives of Spain that his people should always consider the Cortes as the firmest supporter of the constitutional throne.

To which the President replied, that the country was indebted to His Majesty for calling this extraordinary Cortes, this they considered as an auspicious testimony of mutual love and confidence. The Spanish nation, he added, has declared against absolute despotism and anarchy; though desirous of liberty they ask only such liberty as may be founded on the laws and that does not degenerate into licentiousness.—They will support a government but a limited monarchy, such as the constitution has established, and they entertain the most unbounded love and respect for which his Majesty's person. The subsequent sitting a project of law was introduced for a new division of the territory of Spain, conformable to the recommendations of the speech from the throne, and the subject is likely to be warmly debated in every stage of the proceedings.—One of the objects which is to engage the attention of the extraordinary Cortes, is the introduction of tranquility to the Americas.

Ohio River.—The legislature of Ohio having appropriated $10,000 for deepening the channel of the river between Pittsburg and Wheeling, the work has progressed as far as the state line, with a success and economy beyond all expectation. ADDRESS TO THE NUMBY AT BELZONI'S EXHIBITION.

Arn thou lust wall'd about (how sit-uge a story!)
In Thebes' streets, three thousand years ago,
When the Mem-nonium was in all its glory,
And Time had not begun to overthr w
Those temples, palaces, and pil-l ars proud,
Of which the very ru-ins are tremendous.

Speak! for thou long-e-nough hast acted Dummy.
Thou hast a tongue—come, let us hear its tune;
Till art standing on thy legs, above ground, Mummy!
Be minding the affairs of the nine-,
Not like true bones or dry-embalmed creatures,
But with thy bones and flesh, and limbs and features.

Tell me; for oh! these thou canst recollect,
To whom shalt we assign the Sphinx's name?
Who cheops or Cephrenes architect
Of either pyramid that by his name?
Is Pompey's Pillar really a mistake?
Did Thebes a hundred gates indeed sustain; by Homer?

Pitch, pe-thaps were a Manic, and forbidden
To bath to tell the mysteries of the tr-de—
Then say what see-et-s elo-dy was hid-n
In Memn-on's sister which it no-ne-ply's?
Perhaps they were a Priest—if so, my st-ry lies
Are rem-, for priests ell never owns it- faggles.

Perchance that very hand, now pinion'd fl-t,
Has rob-n-bob'd with Pharaoh, all so to-gins,
Or dropp'd a bribe, mi- in Homer's hat,
Or diff'd what was in Upper Dahlon's case;
Or sold, by Solomon's and-i-quities,
About as the great Temple's con-ec-tion.

Lord—not on these if it had, who a-sm'd,
Anon- my form wouldst find if not knot-bled;
For I am ver- real, and-ured, a d-mb-nd'd,
Ere Romulus and Remus had been suckled.
Attempt sports to have be-n,
As my fore limp proved race was run.

Thou coul-t develope, if that mither'd tongue
Might tell us what tones sightless orbs have seen,
How the wor-d look-d when it was fresh and young,
And the gay creeds of old-n ti-e green;
Or was it then so old that His ory's pages
Contain'd no record of its e-rly ages?

Still silent, mommio-mistive elf?
Art sworn to secrecy? then keep thy vows;
But, grabber, tell us something of thyself,
Reveal the secret of thy prison-house;
Since in the word of s-ri-tis! on b-st sleep-r's,
What hast thou seen—what str-nge adventur- s-m be-n?

Since first thy form was in this box extended,
We have above ground seen some strange mutations;
The Roman empire has begun and ended,
New worlds have risen, we have lost old nations,
And countless kings have into dust be n humbled,
While not a fragment of thy flesh has crumbled.

Didst thou not hear the pother o'er thy head,
When the great Persian conqu-ror came, Cambyses,
March'd armies o'er thy tomb with fire and sword,
Or when Osiris, Orus, Apis, Isis,
And mock the Pharaoh—did not a d-mdee
Wave o'er the ma-ble Memnon fel- a-nder?

If the tomb's secrets may not be confi-'d,
The a-cne of thy present life-time fill—
A lot it has thro-bb'd to be the first leathern breast,
And o-er-whom that day she-k-bone roll'd;
Have eh-ek-ws clothed it- sr- knees, and kiss'd that face?
What was thy name and station, age and race?

Statue of flesh! Immortal o- the dead!
Imperishable type of vane-wence!
Postumous man, who quit-t thy narrow bed,
And standest sudden-ly o this our presence,
Thou will hear nothing till the Judgment morning,
When the great trumps hall thrill thee with its warning.

Why should this wor-bless fragment endure,
If its ending guest be lost forever?
O, let us keep the soul enbalm'd and pure
In living virtue, that when -ach must sever,
Although corruption may our frame consume,
Th' immortal spirit in the skies may bl-om.

Farming in extreme."—In Bot-ct's range, sh-rell-d in Cl-v-land county, in this state, it is mentioned that major Hall, of Duchess county, has taken a farm which he intends to stock with one thousand merino sheep. Family spinner.—A vertical family spinning machine recently invented by Mr. John Brown, of Providence, which it is said may be afforded at a very small expense, can be managed by any one who can operate the old fashioned spinning wheel, and will turn off more than four times as much yarn, with one hand as two women.

From the N. Y. Daily Gazette.

We are gratified to find that the culture of flax is becoming an object of interest among the agriculturists in our country, particularly in the eastern states. The importance of the article for domestic consumption, and the immense sums annually sent out of country for the various fabrics manufactured both go to show the necessity of much greater attention to the subject than it has nevertheless gained during our fathers.

Although large quantities of flax are always raised in our country, we shall impert a vast proportion of the article that are used—as it is believed, that it will not only be attended with profit, but interesting to the preparation of the flax necessary even for the finest manufactures, we might, at no distant period, work up the raw material to great profit, and return in the country a large proportion of the money that is now sent abroad for foreign linens manufactured.

Our great difficulty in the way of our country was in the use of flax for the fabrics has been, the want of an efficient and cheap process for cleaning the flax. The process of rotting flax in water or dew, is generally attended with much hazard and labor; and the beauty of it is always impaired by that mode of preparation. We are much gratified at being able to state, that a machine has been invented in this city, which, as far as we are able to judge from our own observation, and the opinions of a number of highly respectable gentlemen, will fully remove the difficulties that have hitherto existed with regard to it, and answer all the purposes that the inventor had in view, or the largest can desire.

The inventor of this machine is Anthony Dey, Esq. assisted in his operations by Mr James M'Donald. both of this city. Mr. Dey raised the past season 60 acres of flax on rented land, which he has in New Jersey. As it would be impossible, without the most great expense, to procure this large quantity of flax dressed in the usual manner, and not being able to obtain the machines in use in Great Britain, he undertook to form one for his own use; and succeeded to his utmost wish and to the astonishment of all the persons that the inventor had in view, or the largest can desire.

The machine is intended to be moved by animal or water power—it dresses flax in an unretted state, and of course saves all the expense and evils of retting; and it is supposed when moved by water power equal to that of a yoke of oxen, will dress a ton of flax in a day.

Its operations are such, that it will carry through the machine three lengths of flax in a minute; and its performance is superior to any thing that has yet been done. After having passed three times through the machine, it fits to be hackled in the usual manner previously to the process of every former flax would be hackled. It will be seen in the first order. We have a sample at this office, which is composed of one-fifth tow and two-fifths fibre, in very little manner to fine flax-silk. It is certain, very far superior to every proper flax, by flax that we have ever seen dressed in our country; and as far as we may be allowed to judge, would be fit to be worked into the finest fabrics of which flax is now applied.

The whole expense of dressing flax in this machine, including that of boiling also, it is supposed by the inventor will not exceed two cents per pound. It might be done cheaper if the ground or tow should be preserved; it is very apparent that one machine will be sufficient to dress all the flax in a town.

By dressing flax in an unretted state, there is one fact that much is saved in quantity as well as quality; as nothing in either mode is essentially injured by its appearance. Unretted flax is also said to be much stronger and more substantial than that which is rotted.

An instance [illegible] occurred near the village of Ellicott's Mills, [illegible] from which place we have received the following particulars, in a letter from a gentleman of the medical profession in that village, to his friend in this city.

"On the 6th inst. a duel was fought between Dr. Hodge of the medical profession in this village, and Mr. Thomas Sewell, a young gentleman of this place, with pistols, each party having received only two balls. Dr. Hodge fell at the first fire, and expired in about two hours after. Mr. Sewell received a ball in his thigh, which has since been extracted, and is now doing well. The cause of the duel was a dispute between the parties relative to the character of a young lady, which originated at a ball on the evening of the 5th inst. Dr. Hodge was a native of Baltimore, and has left a wife and two children to mourn his untimely fate."

FROM EUROPE.

HANOVER, Oct 10.

This being the day which His M-jesty appointed for making his public entry into the capital of his hereditary dominions, an immense concourse of people assembled at an early hour on the road to Herrenhausen. The long vistas leading to the palace, which are near two miles long, were lined on the sides by whole regiments of cavalry, dressed in splendid uniform, and on the other side was seen pedestrians, of different ranks and classes, but for the most part very respectable in appearance. The different streets through which the procession was to pass, were strewed with the gayest flowers that so late a season afforded, nor was any thing omitted that could enhance a scene strikingly imposing in itself, without the aid of an adventitious display. Among the most distinguished orches that were erected, the two which stood at the extremity of the grand avenue leading to the palace, were particularly conspicuous. The Stranes from the grand arch to the Duke of Cambridge's house, occupying a circuitous route, were lined with numerous bodies of the most respectable inhabitants, dressed in their costly uniforms and what ornaments each of them had a number of the-n, and displayed a bunch of leaves in each hat. Over a great silk cockade the Hanoverian cockade was placed, and in the hat or bonnet of each female was seen a bunch of the same leaves. The Duke of Cambridge's house, which is in the immediate vicinity of the palace, was decorated with much taste and elegance, and displayed a number of various-colored flags, with the Hanoverian arms in the centre. At half past 10 o'clock the Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by his son Prince George, and preceded by a numerous staff, entered the palace, where he was received by His M-jesty's household, and conducted to the apartment of His M-jesty's person. The Duke of Cumberland rode on the right of his M-jesty, and the Duke of Cambridge on the left. The M-jesty was dressed in a plain suit of scarlet cloth, with a star of the Guelphic order on his breast, and wore a cocked hat. The Princes were dressed in full uniform, and wore the star of their respective orders. The Duke of Cambridge rode on a beautiful white charger, and the Duke of Cumberland on a dark bay horse, which he managed with much dexterity. The Princes were mounted on fine grey horses. The procession was preceded by a numerous staff, and the whole was closed by a numerous body of cavalry. The M-jesty was received at the palace gate by the Duke of Cambridge, and the Princes dismounted and followed the carriage of the M-jesty, which was drawn by eight beautiful grey horses

The British Empire.—The pt. debts of Great Britain, at the close, in 1811, was 811,000,000, exclusive of the sums for their grandeur, and of grandeur in the shape of their shipping. Compare the war and Mr. Pitt

The Times gives a laughable account of an awkward mistake which it recently occurred in England to appears, is about, find a popular preacher, who was intimate in the family of Mr. and Mrs. Whitbread, a favorite with Lady Augusta Murray, (Duchess of Sussex,) had received invitations from both to dinner on the same day. He wrote two notes in answer, but in his hurry sent the one intended for Lady Murray to Mrs. Whitbread, and that for Mrs. W. to Lady Murray.

Copy of the first note.—" Dear Duchess, a thousand thanks for your most delightful invitation. I must, will accept it, though to do so, I am compelled to put off the brewer and his wife."

Copy of the other Note.—The Rev. H presents his respectful compliments to Lady Elizabeth Whitbread, and regrets that the sudden indisposition of his aunt, from whom he has great expectations, will prevent him from indulging himself in the high honor of waiting upon the family to dinner this evening."

No man could ever be more disappointed, than when he received the following note from Mr. Whitbread:

" Lady Elizabeth Whitbread presents her compliments to the Rev. H. and doubts not but that when in unison with the society of Dukes and Duchesses, he will kindly condescend to put up with the humble fare of a brewer and his wife."

A Winter Comfort.—Last night about the hour of 8 o'clock, Mr. Brady appeared on the river Liffey, in his Mercier Chapel, amidst the shouts of assembled hundreds of persons, who crowded the Barrister's Steps, Aston's quay, and Carlisle bridge, attracted by the sight so novel. The Chapel appeared to be drawn by two horses, who seemed as if swimming, and the prow were held by Mr. Brady. The intrepid chaplain fired several shots, during his voyage or drive; a bow from which a lighted flambeau was kept waving, followed him the entire way.

Remarkable return in Breeding and Feeding.

Mr. Bunnity, of the neighbourhood of Carlisle, bought a lot of the small Highland Breed of cattle at last year's Dunse Fair, from Mr. M'Neel of Colonsay; he this season had 80 calves from the lot, and of such quality as cannot be surpassed. The following is a statement of the weight of one of them will suffice as a specimen of what may be attained by good stock & feeding :—

DECEMBER.

The year is closing. Let us inquire of ourselves whether we have used the hours and duties of it as we ought. Let us not be disposed to say, how short has been this year, until we have examined whether we have made a wise and suitable improvement of the three hundred and sixty five days which have been allowed time. Has no part of this time hung heavy upon your hands? Are there no minutes, no whole hours and in our reckoning since the first day of January 1821? It is to be feared that we have greater cause to regret the misimprovement, than the abstinent of our time.

The flowers which a few days past were clothed in youth and beauty, present to us now, but a dreary prospect. This should make us thoughtful—and it is a full instruction. But even winter and age delight with them their enjoyments and comforts as do the Spring, Summer and Autumn. hours become slightly improved. This is the season for social and not for intellectual improvement, and for repose. There is nothing better for a man, said Solomon, than that he should eat and drink, and that he should make his soul enjoy good in his labour.

ON THE UNRESTRICTED MANUFACTURE AND SALE OF ARDENT SPIRITS.

Nothing is more common than the use of what we usually portray language in speaking on the subject. People talk of swallowing down poisons and rendering draughts; but these expressions have ceased to be figurative. That we daily are of the poisoned, though we have seen it demonstrated to be at once the sole cause of all the sufferings, the poverty, and the crime to be found in this country, we still proceed without any attempt to lessen or to arrest it.—We convert the sustenance of our harvests which the bounty of Providence has bestowed, into a potion for poisons; the ingredient is a devil! There is not one restraint on the production of the article, but on the facility it affords for its distribution. Men who are too late to work, are allowed easily with out a check, to reduce others to lose their senses, their property and their honesty in these infernal dens. Formerly a dram could only be obtained at taverns, but now every store, in the country, is turned into a dram shop; while in the cities there are up in every street and at every corner. Numbers are led to purchase it—until for his family's sake is solely exposed to the temptation of intoxication. No home without pining a victim of these fiends. Nor, but for who h he would have gone to the family. If he passes them at first, they are sure to decoy him at last. Fatigued, thirsty, and seeing them surrounded with the companions, he may go by a few times, but he begins to enter by degrees, the practice soon becomes a habit, and he finally consumes his earnings and his strength without further profit or attraction.—Yet with all this acknowledged, this fearful, and the fear increasing, evil, when a moderate tax would be none should upon it, a tax that would enjoy all the evils traders the treasury, and be levied upon the most careless of all luxuries. we find the legislators of this nation shrink from imposing it, for fear of popularity! Shortly they ought to look with some pity on the wretch who has been drawn into the commission of crime through intoxication, and the cheapness and facilities, for which they have declined to remove."

THE INFLEXIBLE MAGISTRATE.

In the year 1506, James Lynch Fitz-stephen, merchant, being elected mayor of Galway, in Ireland, went (as only can, commander of one of his ships, to Bilboa, in Spain, for a cargo of wine.—Former dealings at this place were the means of recommending the father's credit, which young Lynch took the advantage of, to receive the money for his own use, which his father had entrusted him with for the cargo. The Spaniard who supplied him on this occasion sent his nephew with him to Ireland, to receive the debt and to establish further correspondence. The young man, who were most of an age, sailed together with that seeming satisfaction which a congenial sensations generally creates among mankind. Open and generous, the Spaniard soon gained the pleasures which he should enjoy with such a friend in a place then remote. Value for qualities which we are no longer to be in for but in the narrations of other times. The ship proceeded on her voyage, & every day must bring them nearer the place of destination, and discover the friend intended by Lynch, he determined the stain of a resolution of throwing his friend overboard. After meditating the sentiments of the hands on board, he brought the major part of them to his purposes by promises of reward, and the rest by fear. On the night of the fifth day, the unfortunate Spaniard was seized in his bed, and thrown overboard. A few days more brought them to port. Lynch's father and family received them with joy, and a short time beheld on him a sufficient capital to set him up in business.

Security had lulled every sense of danger, and Lynch proposed to sue for a beautiful girl, the daughter of a neighbor, in marriage; his terms were accepted, and the day fixed, elated with his success in this yet unpunished villainy, whose one of the sailors who had been with him on his voyage to Spain was taken ill, and finding himself at the point of death sent for his father and communicated a full relation of the horrid deed in which he had committed on the high seas. The father, though struck speechless at the astonishment and grief, at length struck off the bonds which in case the parent to natural passivity. "Jo shall take do course," said the indignant magistrate and he in ten minutes had his son ex with the rest of the crew, and threw them into prison; they all confessed the crime; a criminal process was made out against them, and in a few days a small town in the west of Ireland beheld at the gallows by very few tears to mark the lot of a murderer. Father sitting in judgment, like another Lucius Junius Brutus, on his own son, and, like him to condemning him to die as a sacrifice to public justice.—Were any other but your wretched father your judge, (and the infinitive is guilty,) I might drop a tear over my child's misfortunes, and solace me his side, though stained with murder—but you must die. These are the last drops which shall quench the sparks of nature; and, if your date have been long, Heaven may not shut the gates of mercy on the destroyer of its fellow creature.'

He was led back to prison, and a short time appointed for his execution. Amusement set on the face of every one within this little community, which at most did not consist of more than three thousand people. The relations of the unhappy culprit surrounded the father; they conjured him by all the solemnities of nature and compassion to spare his son. His wretched mother, whose family name was Black, drew in deputation to the heads of her own family, and at length prevailed on them to for the honor of their house, to rescue her from the ignominy of the death and being on their cause. They armed to deliver him from prison, when his father being informed of their intentions, had him conveyed to his own house, which he surrounded with the officers of Justice. He made the executioner fasten the rope to his neck. "You have but little time to live my son," said he "let the care of your soul employ the few moments, take the last embrace of your unhappy father." He then ordered the rope to be well secured to a window, and compelled the constables to throw the body out; a few minutes passed to the son's existence. Under the window in Lombard Street, to this day, a skull and bones, cut in black marble, are to be seen, which the father put as a memento mori.

The celebrated alabaster Sarcophagus, which lately arrived from Alexandria, was yesterday uncased, and deposited in the British Museum. This antique is certainly a very extraordinary and admirable specimen of the arts of Egypt. The sarcophagus is nine feet long, and about four feet high, apparently a single piece, and that of a very fine alabaster. It is shaped like a modern coffin, and is more than large enough to hold the mummy with all its cerements. which is preserved in it here been deposited. No. 2.—As the Officers and Soldiers who composed the late incorporated Battalion, are now serving in the different County Regiments throughout the Province, these Colors will be lodged in the Government House, until the formation of a similar Corps, shall require their being brought into the Field; and the Lieutenant Governor has no doubt that the honorable testimony thus afforded of the high sense His Majesty has been pleased to entertain of the Zeal and Gallantry of the Militia of Upper Canada, and the proud distinction which attends these Banners, will not fail to excite the most animating recollections, whenever the Country shall again call for their services.

THE MONUMENTAL TROPHY IN HONOR OF HIS LATE MAJESTY

KING GEORGE III.

(DESIGNED, AND TO BE EXECUTED BY MATTHEW WYATT.)

THE Memory of His late Majesty has been endeared to the British Nation, not only by the firmness of his public principles, and the purity of his private virtues, but by the lustre these derived from the severe trial to which they were subjected, at a period when the spirit of the age was strongly opposed even to the merits of Royalty.

To a liberal and loyal people, it must be gratifying to have an opportunity of testifying their respect for such an example of Royal Worth. It is therefore intended to erect by Public Subscription, a Monument, which may record to future generations, the sense which the present age entertains of the many blessings enjoyed under the mild and beneficent sway of George III.

Books opened for receiving Subscriptions at WILLIAM ALLAN'S, Esquire, York.

N. B Subscribers are requested to be particular in writing their names and designations, as it is intended to record them in Bronze on the Pedestal of the Monument.

THE MONUMENTAL TROPHY IN HONOR OF HIS LATE MAJESTY

KING GEORGE III.

(DESIGNED, AND TO BE EXECUTED BY MATTHEW WYATT)

THE Memory of His late Majesty has been endeared to the British Nation, not only by the firmness of his public principles, and the purity of his private virtues, but by the lustre these derived from the severe trial to which they were subjected, at a period when the spirit of the age was strongly opposed even to the merits of Royalty.

To a liberal and loyal people, it must be gratifying to have an opportunity of testifying their respect for such an example of Royal Worth. It is therefore intended to erect by Public Subscription, a Monument, which may record to future generations, the sense which the present age entertains of the many blessings enjoyed under the mild and beneficent sway of George III.

Books opened for receiving Subscriptions at WILLIAM ALLAN'S, Esquire, York.

To the Subscribers,

We are sorry that necessity obliges us to introduce our first number of the "WEEKLY REGISTER" with an apology. It has been totally out of our power to procure paper of the size and quality we desired for this work. It is our earnest wish to render it respectable in every particular; even to the quality of the paper, and we have induced a manufacturer to make a superior article, of the size we want, purposely for this work.—In the mean time we are obliged to use such as we have been able to procure.

Ever since the Weekly Post has been discontinued we have sent the Gazette to its Subscribers gratis, supposing they would wish to have this Newspaper when published.—We shall therefore continue to regard those Gentlemen as subscribers to the "Upper Canada Gazette and Weekly Register" unless we are certified to the contrary, within the space of one month.

Editorial Commentary.

THE arrivals of this week have brought us His Majesty's Speech at the opening of the British Parliament, and a large body of Miscellaneous news; yet little of that extraordinary and decisive character which at once arrests attention, and agitates the mind with all those conflicting emotions which seem to be inseparable from political inquiry.

It is usual for all classes to look with antiety to a Speech from the Throne, its contents being generally indicative of the views of Government on questions of the most vital importance. Happy are we to find that Great Britain is likely to continue at peace with every nation of the globe.—She has need of a long repose, after the tremendous conflict in which she has been, for so many years, engaged;—a conflict that has tried to the uttermost many of her internal resources.—Peace and the energies of her people, will, without doubt, speedily accomplish the renovation of her financial health, which has never been seriously impaired. But; though we are freed from any apprehensions of Foreign war, we are grieved to find it has been necessary for his Majesty to notice the present most alarming and disturbed state of poor Ireland.—Alas, when will the wounds of that unhappy, yet beautiful, portion of the Empire be healed? when will the bright verdure of "the emerald Isle" cease to be stained by the blood of her brave sons shed in the lawless tumult of civil broils, and her lovely daughters no longer have occasion to "hang their harps on the willows" to sit down and weep?

We have confidence in the wisdom of Parliament and in the well known tried abilities, energy, and character of the present Viceroy.—Though the accounts are gloomy, we have little doubt that tranquility will soon be restored; and we earnestly wish, by an endeavour to remove the true cause so far as it can be done without injury to the Constitution, that measures will be taken to prevent the recurrence of scenes so revolting as those which have recently been exhibited in Ireland.

It is impossible to look at the affairs of Turkey without the most lively interest.—Whether that hour is at hand, which sooner or later must come, when the standard of Mahommed will be for ever prostrate in Europe; and when the bright crescent will fade and become dim, before the Cross of Christ, seems to be doubtful.—Notwithstanding the alledged retreat of the Turks from Wallachia and Moldavia, and the revolt of the Servians, we are not in the possession of facts sufficient to decide our opinion as to the result,—yet the portentous demonstrations of Russia, would seem to be as the awful "hand writing on the wall," as the Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin, to the unfortunate Sultan Mahmoud.

With respect to the designs of the Emperor Alexander on Turkey, we think there can be but one opinion, perhaps only one wish. The ferocity of the Turks may render it a battle of some difficulty and danger; but the fierceness or the fanaticism of Barbarians, will avail but little against the skill and discipline of European Armies. A very few battles, one or two campaigns will, in all probability, finish the barbarous dominion of the Ottomans in Europe.

Whether it is the wish of the ancient possessors of those Provinces which now form Turkey in Europe, to pass from the cruel and oppressive dominion of the Grand Semor to the Sovereignty of a Power already bound to them by the interests, the ties, and the sympathies of a common Religion,—or it is their desire, to be an independent nation, can not perhaps, be determined by the conduct of the Greek Princes, whose actions may be governed either by private ambition or the gifts of Alexander. At all events it is truly lamentable to see so fine and so large a portion of the earth possessed by a people so hoggish as the Turks, a people who have no other enjoyment in this garden of the world than to trample upon that large abundance which remains after satisfying all their wants.

We have endeavoured to make an interesting selection of notices, under their proper heads, from a large file of English Papers with which we have been favoured, we cannot help wishing, however, that we had been informed of the real cause of the disturbances in Ireland, since it is said by the first Minister of the Crown, according to a statement in the Morning Post, "that in no instance, had those outrages displayed a trace of disaffection towards Government, or assumed a religious complexion"—Is it possible, that the exactions of middlemen have at length become so enormous as to produce such terrible results?

European News.

Great Britain.

The British Parliament met on the 5th of February. His Majesty's Speech will be found below.

Ireland was still in a disturbed state. The latest advices in the London papers of the 7th mention fresh outrages. We have inserted an official document on the state of this country in a subsequent column.

The London Morning Post of the 7th of February, states, that by a mail from Holland it is announced, on the authority of the "Austrian Observer," that the Turkish troops are daily evacuating Wallachia and Moldavia, and proceeding towards the Danube. A general insurrection is stated to have taken place in Servia, the chiefs of which do not hesitate to make unequivocal declaration of their determination to effect the liberty of their country. It is added, that four corps of Russians, under the orders of Generals Wittgenstein, Sacken, Xermanoff and another, had passed the Dniester, and were followed by fresh troops from the interior; but this statement derives no confirmation from any of the accounts received through other channels.

From the Morning Post, of February 7.

This very day the Marquis of Londonderry is to call the attention of the Commons to the state of Ireland; and in the Peers, the Earl of Liverpool has not only laid on the table the correspondence of the Lord Lieutenant with the Secretary of State for the Home Department, but it is already printed, and in the hands of their Lordships, and our readers will find in a preceding column a copy of the fifth Dispatch which is the last and the most important. On or before Friday se'nnight, the Marquis of Londonderry has announced his intention of bringing before Parliament the great question of Agricultural Distress, and of opening the view which Ministers take of the subject and of the remedy proper to be applied. In the course of the following week, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, on moving for the repeal of the present Act relative to Superannuations, will set forth the reductions which Ministers have made, and describe as far as this can be done so early in the Session, the condition of the revenue, and generally of the finances of the State. The Right Hon. Gentleman has also declared that Government were determined to maintain the public faith inviolate, and that he had no intention of making any alteration in the circulating medium of the country. This readiness to investigate and to explain, at a time when such mighty interests are concerned in the result, is a favourable and promising symptom; nor is it less gratifying to find, that even whilst demanding fresh powers for the Irish Administration to suppress outrage and insubordination, the first Minister of the Crown has declared, that in no instance had those outrages displayed a trace of disaffection towards the Government, or assumed a religious complexion; and that loyalty to the King glowed at this moment in the breasts of the people at Limerick, as fervently as it did last year at Dublin.

LONDON, Feb. 5.

HIS MAJESTY'S SPEECH.

His Majesty proceeded this day, with the usual state, to open the Session of Parliament. In the most popular days of his late Majesty, we never witnessed a greater degee of interest excited in the public mind. As early as eleven o'clock, the whole avenue leading from Carlton House to the House of Lords, was thronged beyond all precedent. The windows were filled with spectators, and every elevated spot had its temporary tenant.

His Majesty quitted Carlton House at twenty minutes before two, and throughout the whole line of his progress, was cheered with the warmest enthusiasm. The immense multitude vied with each other, from the highest to the lowest, in expressions of loyalty and attachment. His Majesty reached the grand entrance to the House of Lords precisely at two. The passages leading to his robing room were filled with beauty and fashion, anxious to approach. His Majesty's entrance to the House was announced by a discharge of artillery.

His Majesty appeared in excellent health and spirits. He was attired in full dress Field-Marshal's uniform.

His Majesty was escorted by a guard of the Royal Blues; but, as there were fewer in attendance than in former occasions, the view of His Majesty's person was less obstructed than heretofore. This arrangement seemed to give very general satisfaction.

His Majesty having robed with the customary ceremonies, immediately entered the House, attended by the Lord Great Chamberlain, the Usher of the Black Rod, and the Officers of State. On his Majesty's entrance, the Peers, who wore their robes, and of whom there were a very numerous attendance, together with the Peeresses, stood up, and the other usual forms having been observed, His Majesty delivered the following most gracious speech in a firm and audible voice:—

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I have the satisfaction of informing you, that I continue to receive from foreign powers the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition towards this country.

It is impossible for me not to feel deeply interested in any event that may have a tendency to disturb the peace of Europe. My endeavours have therefore been directed, in conjunction with my allies, to the settlement of the differences which have unfortunately arisen between the Court of St. Petersburgh and the Ottoman Porte, and I have reason to entertain hopes that these differences will be satisfactorily adjusted.

In my late visit to Ireland, I derived the most sincere gratification from the loyalty and attachment manifested by all classes of my subjects. With this impression it must be matter of the deepest concern to me that a spirit of outrage, which has led to daring and systematic violations of the law, has arisen and still prevails in some parts of that country.

I am determined to use all the means in my power for the protection of the persons and property of my loyal and peaceable subjects; and it will be for your immediate consideration, whether the existing laws are sufficient for that purpose.

Notwithstanding this serious interruption of public tranquility, I have the satisfaction of believing, that my presence in Ireland has been productive of very beneficial effects; and all descriptions of my people may confidently rely upon the just and equal administration of the law, and upon my paternal solicitude for their welfare.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

It is very gratifying to me to be able to inform you, that during the last year the revenue has exceeded that of the preceeding, and appears to be in a course of progressive improvement.

I have directed the estimates of the current year to be laid before you. They have been framed with every attention to economy which the circumstances of the country will permit; and it will be satisfactory to you to learn, that I have been able to make a large reduction in our annual expenditure, particularly in our naval and military establishments.

My Lords and Gentlemen

I have the greatest pleasure in acquainting you, that a considerable improvement has taken place, in the course of the last year, in the commerce and manufactures of the United Kingdom, and that I can now state them to be, in their important branches, in a very flourishing condition.

I must at the same time deeply regret the depressed state of the agricultural interest.

The condition of an interest so essentially connected with the prosperity of the country will, of course, attract your early attention, and I have the fullest reliance on your wisdom in the consideration of this important subject.

I am persuaded, that whatever measures you may adopt, you will bear constantly in mind, that in the maintenance of our public credit, all the best interests of this kingdom are equally involved; and that it is by a steady adherence to that principle that we have attained, and can alone expect to preserve, our high station among the nations of the world.

On moving an Address to the King in answer to his Speech,—the majority in favour of Ministers was 128.

IRISH BENEFICES.

An attempt has been made to shew that the present disturbances in Ireland originate in the enormous amount of the benefices of that Country. Is it be true that their revenues have increased from £45,000 to £679,000 since the year 1799, there may be some grounds for the assertion; but we are inclined to believe that the grievance is not so much in the large amount of the aggregate sum, as in the manner in which it iscollected by the tacksmen or middle-men under landlords, and the Tythe-gatherers, which is often vexatious to the last degree. For our own parts we could wish to see that voracious and unprincipled tribe of blood-suckers of the poor and needy transformed into some shape more honest and useful, instead of being injurious to the state by exciting universal discontent.

Church Establishment in Ireland.

The Clergy of the established Church of Ireland consists of 4 Archbishops, 18 Bishops, 900 Dignitaries, and about 1200 Parochial Incumbents; and the tythe and church revenues, which, in 1799 amounted to about £45,000 are at this time supposed to be of the value of £679,000 per annum. Mr. Wakefield, from the estimate of well informed persons, has given the value of a few of the Bishopricks, as follows:—The Primacy (Armagh) 14,000*l.* Derry, 12,000*l.* Kilmore, 10,000*l.* Waterford, 7,000*l.* Clogher, 10,000*l.* The livings in the gift of the Archbishop of Cashel are worth 35,000*l.* per ann.; of the Bishop of Cloyne, 50,000*l.*; of Cork, 30,000*l.*; of Ferns, 30,000*l.* Killaloe has 108 benefices, many worth 1500*l.* per ann. In the Bishoprick of Cloyne, one living is worth 3,000*l.* one 2,000*l.* and three 1500 each. The Deanary of Down, in 1720, which was worth only 2,000*l.* per annum, now lets for 3,700*l.* The Rectory of Middleton, in the County of Cork, in the year 1735, yielded scarcely 800*l.* per ann. at present it produces upwards of 3,800*l.*

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

We have lately received from our correspondent in London, one of the most important and interesting pamphlets relating to the political and commercial state of the world, that we have ever read. It comprises 210 pages, and is entitled,—"The State of the Nation at the commencement of the year 1822, considered under the four Departments, of the Finance,—Foreign Relations,—Home Department, Colonies and Board of Trade." The work bears internal evidence of having been sanctioned, if not absolutely digested and issued by the Ministry. Certain it is that it is a most able exposition and defence of the conduct of the British system, since the peace; and whoever the writer may have been, he must have had official sources of information to aid him at every step.

The political, and commercial relations of Great Britain, are circumscribed only by the dimensions of the globe; and the work before us, therefore, may in a great measure be considered as a general expose of the commercial and political affairs of all nations, with the views entertained by the British Government towards each. This being the character of the pamphlet, we shall proceed with all due expedition to present our readers with copious extracts from it, in which we shall include all that comes under the head of "Foreign Relations," and the interesting account of the state of Ireland, under the head of the "Home Department."

The pamphlet may fairly be considered as a ministerial statement and vindication of the past conduct of the government, since the year 1814; though the writer has probably been left, at least in some degree to the exercise of his own sagacity, in assuming probabilities for the future. It is not likely that the ministry has so far committed themselves, as to communicate any of their present views and intentions, respecting any of the great concerns and interests of the empires foreign or domestic, to any writer, as being their positive determinations; but enough is said particularly as it regards the quarrel between the Greeks and Turks, to enable us to form pretty correct opinions as to the course both Great Britain & Russia will pursue, in regard to that affair.

We do not think it probable that since the peace there have been no circumstances or occurrences in the conduct of the British Government, which Ministers themselves have regretted though they have not thought proper to avow that regret to the author of the pamphlet, nor to make a frank acknowledgment of any errors into which they may have fallen, in any part of the familiar and intelligible exposition of the "State of the Nation," with which they are said to have thus favoured their country. That is a part of their duty, (if a duty on their part it must be deemed,) which their political opponents have very amply performed for them; and as the latter content themselves with presenting one side of the picture only, containing a tolerably prominent representation of both the real and imaginary faults committed by the Ministry,—it is surely allowable that the former should in their turn favour the public with a full view of the other side also, though it contains all the excellencies of the own character and conduct, and although those excellencies are perhaps rather highly coloured. In treating of their Foreign Relations, the author very fully confirms the view which we have uniformly exhibited of the British Government respecting the existing situation of Turkey. The Ministers have been desirous of upholding that Power, under the idea that its position in the European common wealth is essential to the preservation of the actual arrangements of Europe. It is acknowledged, however, that the Janissaries are "absolute masters," both of the Empire and of the Sultan; and that "it is scarcely possible not to feel for a Sovereign in such circumstances." It may be that the personal character of the Sultan entitles him to their consideration; but why continue to treat with a Monarch, who, it is acknowledged, is destitute of power, and who knows his incompetence with the demands of Russia would incur the forfeiture of his own head?

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Without going into a detail of the new system upon which Europe was settled at the period of the treaties, it may be sufficient to state, that the European Commonwealth was re-constructed upon these principles.

The first was, that there should be such a distribution of power amongst the several principal states as might render each sufficient in itself to maintain its independence, and to withstand any possible incursion of France, till the general confederacy of Europe could move up in defence of the common tranquility.

Secondly, but always subservient to the first principle, the restoration of ancient powers to their former state of possession.

Thirdly, where such restoration was manifestly impossible, or where it seemed expedient to forego it, in pursuit of the more valuable object of rendering each state sufficient to its own defence, in such case to indemnify the suffering power for its lost territories from the common fund of conquest.

The system of Europe was accordingly settled upon these principles. Under the first of them, the kingdom of the Netherlands was erected, and was rendered compact and self sufficient by its annexation to the United Provinces. And as the Netherlands were thus interposed as a barrier between France and Germany, Sardinia, by the annexation of Genoa, was rendered a more adequate barrier between France and Italy. Under the second principle, the Swiss Republics and Italian States were restored as nearly as possible to their ancient condition. Under the third, Austria received an indemnity in Italy—whilst Prussia, who was in some degrees affected by the new changes, and who lost her ancient influence in Holland, received a portion of Saxony. This last modification was indeed further recommended by the new state of things in Germany, and by the extinction, during the wars of the French Revolution, of the Germanic Empire. Under these circumstances, there was no longer any power in Germany sufficiently compact and united to oppose an adequate defensive force against a sudden invasion. Experience had proved, that Prussia, in her actual state, was no equal opponent to France, and that the supposed condition of the smaller principalities, and their compulsory submission to an invading army necessarily threw them as instruments into the hands of the invader. Nor is it necessary to contend, that it would not have been expedient upon many other considerations, to bestow this increase of territory upon Prussia, and to take it from Saxony. If the one had suffered more than any other power in Europe under long and unsparing oppression of France, the other in one shorter term, was merely little entitled to escape the penalty of a war, in which her princes had borne so prominent a part.

As such is the new system upon which Europe is now settled, our duties, under our foreign relations, consist in little more than in a faithful observance of the spirit of the treaties upon which this system is grounded. The leading principle and object of these treaties, and of the condition which they constitute, are the maintenance of the peace of Europe by the personal amity of the sovereigns, and by a system of mediation, which should on the one side, recognize the perfect independence of the several States in their own internal concerns; and, upon the other, should hold forth their common interests, and therein their common ability, to coerce with the general power of Europe in all questions affecting the safety of the whole.

INDEX AT END

It is a malicious and most unjust representation of the character of his system to assert that the allied powers, England amongst them, are bound by these treaties to control the internal concerns of other states, or even to act the arbitrator in dissentions between state and state, upon interests belonging only to themselves. As regards England, the old-fashioned of the treaties are expressed in her treaties, and our contract is known to the latter. If the ministers of some of the other armed powers, may appear to have pressed the assertion of this right of friendly mediation into that of an arbitrative control over all and each of the states on the continent, the excess belongs only to them, and no portion of it attaches to us. They find nothing of this principle in the general treaties; and accordingly the king and government of England do not admit that they are comprehended in the obligation. If the assertion of these pretensions existed at all, it is totally a separate concern of the powers that make them. But it is not perhaps too much to say, that the Holy Alliance of the present time, like the treaty of Pilnitz in the French Revolution, has no other existence, at least in the degree asserted, than in the factious writings of the day.

A very few words will explain intelligibly, our different relations, and the good faith with which we adhere to the spirit of the peace. If we follow them geographically, our first relation is with Portugal, an ancient ally of the British Crown, and one in the name of which we confidently indented to us in the late war, for deliverance and safety.

Under the ancient system of Europe, the object of our alliance with Portugal was to counterpoise the power of the house of Bourbon. Under the former close union of the two Crowns of France and Spain, the common object of jealousy to Portugal and England was necessarily France and Spain; and the natural support of Portugal, a secondary state combining upon a powerful neighbor was England. In the vicissitudes of human affairs, the original reasons for this alliance have passed away; but in the opening of the Brazils to British Commerce a new state of things has arisen, which may render it very doubtful, and till lately much more so, whether our close connexion with Portugal be not our best policy. There can be no doubt but a commercial connexion with France would be more lucrative, as to a pecuniary result, than with Portugal; and, if commerce were the only question, it would be erroneous policy to adopt a minor state in preference to a principal. But as the maintenance of the political relations of Europe and Great Britain is an end of greater value and importance, it is a rule of sound prudence to consult the more valuable object, though with some sacrifice of the secondary one. Recent events, indeed, may render this relation of more problematical value. These events have not, however, as yet, assumed a shape sufficiently determinate to justify further remarks.

As regards the present question it is sufficient that the solemn treaty of Portugal of the present period is another proof of the good faith and moderation of the British Government. It can scarcely be doubted that a monarch in the situation of the King of Portugal should not have made some friendly representation of the difficulties of his condition to the King and Government of Great Britain. It is scarce by possible, that the King of England and the other Allied Sovereigns can have regarded without some feeling the recent proceedings amongst the Portuguese populace. It is equally impossible for the people of England not to feel some indignation at the unworthy levity, to use no other term with which Portugal has forgotten the blood and treasure of England, lavished in her defence. But, under all these circumstances, Portugal is still left to the administration of her own concerns. She is still left to work her way through her own anarchy. There is still encouragement to hope that the fire may burn out without reaching the walls of her neighbor. It remains to be seen, how far the event may justify the expectation—but in the mean time her entire confidence may be assumed as no less a proof of the moderation of England than of the true spirit of the treaties. For, under such a state of circumstances, what becomes of the alledged secret article, that all the King's of Europe should possess the to exclude either the actual heir of the monarchical power of each over his own subject? "Will it admit a doubt, that under the projected constitutions of Spain and Portugal, the Kings of those countries will possess a much less degree of sovereign power, and a much more arduous discharge of their duties as heads of their states, than the former Stadtholder of Holland or the President of America.

SPAIN.

Important News, via Gibraltar and New York.

By the brig Active, Capt. Noble, the Editors of the Commercial Advertiser have received files of the Gibraltar Chronicle to the 27th February. It appears that the Spanish Cortes, contrary to the recommendation of the King, adopted, on the 18th February, the opinion of their committee relative to sending Commissioners to South America; and, the day following, they further approved of the following three additional propositions, viz. that the Cortes should annul the Cordova Convention between Gen. O'Donoju and the Mexican authorities, as also any other treaty, act, or step whatsoever, relative to the acknowledgement of the independance of Mexico by the same general; that the government be urged to declare to other Governments, that Spain has not given up her right to her provinces beyond the seas, and that, therefore, she will consider as a violation of the existing treaties, the partial or absolute acknowledgement of their independence before the differences between them and the mother country shall have been adjusted;—and lastly, that Government be likewise urged to endeavor by every possible means to preserve, and specially to reinforce, such points in those countries as still maintain their relations, with the mother country, and refuse to make common cause with the insurgents.—On the 14th, the King closed the session, and he is said to have expressed himself highly satisfied with the legislative measures adopted by the assembly, as he conceived them to have so greatly promoted the work of the political regeneration of Spain, that a few more efforts of the same nature must bring it to the very acme of perfection.

It might be inferred from all this, that nothing but an immediate war with Spain, would be the consequence of the recognition by our Congress of the independence of the South American Governments.—We expect, however, when this fact is known at Madrid, that the King and the Cortes will alter their tone. It is not to be expected that Spain, in her present unsettled state, will think of hostilities with this country. Nor do we imagine, after having given such decided proofs of her inability to retain her South American Provinces, and after the consolidation of power which has taken place, that the Cortes are serious in asserting it to be their intention still to attempt their reduction. We are satisfied, if they do, that they will again be baffled.—N. Y. Spec.

It has been finally resolved, that the PARTHENON, or Temple of Minerva, at ATHENS, shall be adopted as the National Monument of Scotland;—and hopes are entertained that the magnificent structure will be begun, and the foundation-stone laid on the occasion of his Majesty's approaching visit to the Metropolis of Scotland. The Calton Hill, which is the Acropolis of Britain is to be the scite of this superb edifice:—the total cost of which, it is said, will not exceed £40,000.

Mrs. Patiat lately died in Wiltshire, who had frequently expressed her hope "to live long enough to see her daughter married, and then she should die cheerfully!" Her wish has been literally accomplished. Her daughter was married; the anxiously affectionate parent took a small piece of the bride cake; drunk the health of the bride and bridegroom in a glass of wine, and instantly expired.

An extraordinary discovery has recently occurred on account of the order of Knighthood having been conferred on Captain Phillimore of the British Navy, by the new Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. It appears that, before the Union, the Viceroys of Ireland enjoyed the privilege of conferring this honor, but that it was not reserved to them on that occasion, and then devolved wholly on the Sovereign; so that all the Knighthoods bestowed by the Earl of HARDWICK, the Duke of BEDFORD, Earl TALBOT, Duke of RICHMOND, and the Marquis of WELLESLEY, are found to be null and void.

The following are the names of some of the Gentlemen who have been Knighted by the different Lord Lieutenants who have governed here since the union, and whose honors are declared to be null and void:—Sir James Riddall, Sir Arthur Clarke, Sir Edward Stanley, Sir John Ferns, Sir William Smyth, Sir Thomas Whelan, Sir William Betham, Sir Charles Morgan, Sir Charles Vernon, Sir John Phillimore, (R. A family of Laplanders, with their summer and winter residences, domestic implements, and herd of living rein deer are now exhibiting in London. The Deer are decorated in the manner of their country and are seen drawing light carriages and sledges. A Laplander, in his sledge, will travel 100 miles a day with ease. The worthy and intelligent Mr. Bullock has undertaken to naturalize the rein deer in England;—should he succeed, it will prove a permanent advantage to the country, since this noble animal not only feeds upon what is rejected by all other creatures, a species of hard Lichen, but is a useful beast of burthen and draught—its skin is valuable—its flesh the finest venison and the milk of the female of the richness and consistency of cream.

It seems by information from Constantinople, received at Paris, that the war which is now carrying on by the Persians against the Turks was not declared by the KING of PERSIA; but, by the PRINCE ROYAL, his son, who has been for six years at variance with his father, on account of being excluded from his succession to the Throne, in favor of his younger brother: he has therefore meditated the foundation of a new Empire for himself, by foreign conquest, intending Bagdad to be the Capital.

What an enormous increase in the course of 70 years.

The price of Rum, in many of the West India Islands is so low as not to pay half the cost of the Cask, and several Planters have ceased to manufacture it,—the same as to Molasses,—Sugar too, is so low as to bring the Estates in the leeward Islands, in debt.

NEW HOLLAND

We have often been told that Ministers wished to divert the strong current of Emigration which, for so many years, has been directed to this western Continent, towards southern Africa and New Holland.—The beautiful language in which the Courier notices the arrival of some Australian intelligence would seem to strengthen such an opinion—for there cannot be a more successful mode of attracting attention than by drawing pictures in colours like these.

We have received this morning New South Wales papers to August 12th. They are, as usual, replete with interesting matter; not in the ordinary sense of these words, but as exhibiting to an inquisitive and philosophical mind the progressive developments of social life in a region which, thirty years ago, was the undisputed abode of ferocious savages. Nor is it the comparison of the past and present alone which excites our curiosity. If we connect these with the future, we see the foundations laid of what may hereafter become a populous and mighty empire, where the language of SHAKESPEARE and NEWTON will be spoken, when the country that gave them birth shall have declined from its majesty of power—when, perhaps, the traveller of after-times will explore among the ruins of the emporium of the world, the traces of its opulence and splendor. Thus in the United States and in New Holland will be perpetuated the literature of England, and with it, her renown for, to use the language of JOHNSON, the "chief glory of every people arises from its authors."

We really cannot conceive a theme more pregnant with matter for philosophical reflection upon the vast creative powers of civilised man, than the dawnings of society, as displayed in the common newspapers of this interesting colony. When we read in them, for example, as we do in those now lying before us—an advertisement convening the members of an auxiliary Bible Society—another announcing the publication of the fourth number of the Australian Magazine—a third, notifying the next quarterly meeting of the Committee of the Female Orphan Institution—a fourth, a stage coach to be raffled for—a fifth, informing the pub ic when the next races would take place, besides paragraphs of arrivals, departures, assemblies, &c.—the whole in fact, presenting a miniature resemblance of the occupations, amusements, and pursuits of this great metropolis—when, we repeat, we read these things, and reflect upon the little interval that has elapsed since the scene of them was one of barbarian strife and cheerless desolation—where the insatiate savage roamed in search of prey, amid hills, and forests and swamps, we are equally impressed with admiration, at the undaunted spirit of enterprize which belongs to our country, and at the resistless moral force of knowledge which, in the emphatic language of BACON, is, indeed, "power."

Now the whole of this fine passage is as strictly applicable to our favourite CANADA, especially to the Upper Province, as it can possibly be to the more distant climes of New-Holland—and we cannot help feeling a kind of secret pleasure that the greater difficulties which are thrown in the way of emigration to those distant regions, by the additional memorandum, following Official Memorandum, must operate in favor of our adopted country on this continent, when all its superior advantages are more generally known in Great Britain:—Ed.

Official Memorandum.

1st. Persons are not provided with passages, at the public expense, to any of his Majesty's settlements.

2dly. Persons proceeding at their own expense to North America, and to the Cape of Good Hope, and desirous of settling there, require no previous authority from his Majesty's Secretary of State to enable them to obtain grants of land, the Governors of those settlements being fully empowered to assign lands to applicants, proportioned to the means which they actually possess for bringing them into a state of cultivation. The extent of those grants must depend upon their quality, position, and other circumstances, which can only be ascertained in the colony.

3dly. Persons desirous of settling in New South Wales or Van Diemen's Land must be provided with the sanction of his Majesty's Secretary of State; and this can only be obtained upon written applications, accompanied by references to two or more respectable persons, as to the character of the applicant, and the extent of his capital, which must amount to 500*l* at the least.

STRICTURES on a WORK recently Published, and entitled "OBSERVATIONS on the STATE of the COLONY"

"Ferdinand Mendes Pinto, was but a type of thee, thou Prince of Liars!"

Old Play

Dr. JOHNSON never uttered a truer saying than that there is always a certain degree of wonderfulness about a low mind.

Having more of earth than of heaven in his composition, and being near the mud, he is very apt to bespatter those around him with all manner of filth.—Men of exalted rank, station, and worth, are the most liable to the attacks of this dirty animal; just on the same principle which induced the famous incendiary of Ephesus to set fire to the Temple of Diana: rather than be without notoriety, we will not call it renown, he would consign his name to perpetual infamy.—This is one of the species of scoundrelism about a low mind; he is even fond of shewing his deformity.—he is as proud of his tail as a Squirrel, though his tail is not half so handsome, being more like that of an Ape, and our Old English ancestors have long ago said, that

"The higher an Ape climbs, the more he shews his tail"

We have been led to these reflections by the perusal of a Pamphlet which bears the title quoted—it is one of the most extraordinary tirades of bad writing, misrepresentation, and falsehood, we have ever seen; and were it not that speculations may be reasonably entertained of its having some painful effects on certain weak or unfortunate minds in this Province, and at a distance—for there is every reason to believe that agents will not be found wanting to spread abroad its calumnies—the work would have been utterly unworthy the notice of the public; as it is, we consider it necessary that this author, whosoever he may be, should "pass under the rod"—and if our castigations are attended with some severity—we hope to stand excused by the virtuous and well disposed portion of the community, in whose service we shall be ever ready to come forward, and it must be surely their desire that vice and immorality, in whatever shape those monsters may appear, should be lashed, if they cannot be awed, into silence.

We shall begin our animadversions with the title page, which sufficiently shews at whose breast this writer aims his poisoned shafts. The Lieutenant Governor, then whom no one that ever filled the same exalted station could be more universally respected and beloved, in his Address to the two Houses of Assembly at the opening of the last Parliament, save one, made use of the following words:—

"You will concur in promoting the interests of true religion, and in improving all those means which can add to the welfare, tranquillity, or happiness of the People. Nor will you overlook those which tend to increase the wealth and power of the Country, &c &c. These words, which so well express the warm benevolence, and parental solicitude, which fills the heart of him who presides over our interests, are misquoted in the title page, as a motto, and to them are added—"Do unto all Men, who never so would that Men should do to you, &c &c.—In this attack upon the Governor it is difficult to say whether the impudence or the wickedness of the writer is the most conspicuous.—It is evident he means to insinuate that the language of our Governor is a mere mockery; and, that His Excellency does not "do unto all men whatsoever he would that men should do unto him" or else we do not understand the meaning of the quotation, or the Pamphlet; for, the whole tenor of this wretched production shews it to be the author's intention to make the quotation opposite; to his design of insulting the Executive by charges of the most gross, false, and scandalous nature.—Unfortunately, however, his statements are without either truth, or reason; his arguments without either skill, or connection; and his irony, in which he seems to pride himself without either point or meaning.

As we have a good deal to say on the only subject of any real importance which is discussed in the Pamphlet before us; the mode and terms of granting land in this Province, we do not wish to take up much of the time of our readers by staying to discuss the merits of his argument respecting the "great and vital cause of our distress," though our author begins very early to use unjustified assertion for fact; and, consequently, to draw erroneous conclusions

This Colony, heretofore, whatever it may be able to do hereafter, could not have supplied the markets of Montreal and Quebec, with Lumber, Ashes, Flour, &c. &c. equally well, and as abundantly as could the farmers and merchants of the United States. It is both idle and false to state the contrary. The trade described as being so disgraceful to the Lower Province, is neither astonishing, nor at all at variance, but on the contrary it is in full consonance, with the well known maxims and principles of general commerce in all parts of the world, where mon-polies and intercolonies do not exist. We are sanguine enough to believe that if this pamphlet scribler were asked why he did not get his paper hee, from Ireland or England, in order to encourage the manufactures and Commerce of his dearly beloved country, he would immediately reply, that he could get it on cheaper terms, or more readily, from the United States

We have something of the indicrous, however, along with this falsehood; for our luminous author calls it "a predatory system," which has been pursued by the Lower Province. We are afraid he has not lately consulted any other Dictionary than his own. We are inclined to believe that he would find brother Jonathan's Lumber Merchants and Farmers totally inimical to any kind of predatory system, on the part of the Quebec and Montreal Merchants, whom our author very liberally styles "our enslavers"—and "the freebooters of our rights"; and as "vultures" preying "upon the very vitals of our country," &c. &c. Our author, too, is particularly unfortunate in his attempts to rouse the passions, and when he becomes, as he thinks, very pathetic he becomes, in reality, very unintelligible and absurd:—for instance, he tells his readers that the unfortunate Emigrant is "impelled by the binding and indissoluble ties of nature" to break those very bonds which he says are binding, and to dissolve that which he, himself, declares to be indissoluble.—Strange incongruity! reasoning we cannot call it; for surely he means, if he is to be understood as meaning any thing at all, that those ties which he represents as "binding and indissoluble" are the same that connect individuals to their "dearest" and "only friends" and "native land" which they happen to have left!!!

As matters are in a train for the proper adjustment of all difficulties in the commercial relations between the two Provinces, and the United States; we shall, for the present waive any further notice of our author's eloquent dissertation on these heads, and proceed to give him relief from the main burden of his ditty,—a burden which, in truth, seems quite too heavy, even for his brawny shoulders to bear, for it makes him lie most confoundedly, notwithstanding he would wish to do unto all men whatsoever he would that they should do unto him"—he tells us that farmers cannot obtain any thing for their produce to liquidate their debts!—Oh, John, John, do not, do not thy garden is certainly unweeded!—Ashes in demand!—large contracts for Beef!—Pork $10 and 12 per Barrel! Agents in most parts of the Province who will pay cash for Wheat!—yet no sales; farmers can sell nothing; can't obtain any thing for their produce!!!—Oh, John, John, do not! do not, what art thou? art Roman? seek thy Confessor! art Radical? seek thy vomit or thy purge cathartic!—Be clean, preserve thy paper from pollution—Blank Sheets are infinitely preferable to pages seamed over with lies, and bound with infamy.

AGRICULTURE.

Salt.—We have received a very important and valuable work, from England to explain the advantages of using SALT in the various branches of Agriculture, and in feeding all kinds of farming stock. It is from the pen of SAMUEL PARKES, F. L. S. &c. &c. &c. and has gone through many editions.—The subject is indeed far more important than it is generally conceived to be, and we shall from time to time present our readers with such extracts as may be practically useful to the Farmers and Landholders of Canada. We should be rejoiced to see this Province independent of a foreign supply of an article so indispensable; and, when it is considered that SALT may be obtained in most parts of the Province by boring deep enough, and that, in country situations, even during the past winter, it has sold as high as from five to seven dollars per barrel, and that, during the late war, there were instances of its costing, to the consumer, no less than $40 per bushel, it is realy astonishing that a sufficient number of enterprising persons cannot be found to establish Salt-Works in the various Districts of the Province.

Mr. MERRITT, of St. Catharines, deserves the thanks and general patronage of his countrymen, for his perseverering efforts in the establishment of a Salt Manufacture, in which there is much ingenuity of mechanism employed, and we are happy to learn that his success is likely to be complete. About fifty bushels of this article, of a very superior quality, are manufactured daily, at present, and we are told that preparations are making for an extension of the works. We hope, shortly, to be able to give a more particular account of what has been done at St. Catharines, as an inducement for others to "go and do likewise." Ed.

Wheat.—A scientific gentleman has communicated to the Royal Society a Process for sweetening musty Corn, by simply immersing it in boiling water and letting it remain till cold. The quantity of water should be double that of the Corn to be purified. He has found that the musty quality rarely penetrates through the husk of the wheat, and that in the very worst cases it does not extend beyond the amylaceous matter immediately under the skin. In the hot water all the decayed or rotten grain swims on the surface, so that the remaining wheat is effectually cleaned from all impurities, and without any material loss. The wheat must afterwards be dried and occasionally stirred on the kiln, when it will be found improved to a degree scarcely credible without actual experiment

Poet's Corner.

We have, in other countries, made frequent enquiries after the author of the following exquisite Stanzas, but hitherto in vain. We shall state all that is known respecting this fine production of the amatory muse which must have the effect, rather, of exciting, than of gratifying curiosity. They were first inserted in a Novel that did not obtain the popularity its merits seemed to deserve; and, they subsequently re-appeared in the "LEAF OF LOVE"—but they are still not generally known—nor sufficiently well appreciated. We have an Elegy by the same author for our next number—These beautiful Poems are supposed to have been written by a lovely and highly accomplished young lady who resided in the vicinity of Southampton, (England.) We shall be very thankful for any information relative to the charming author. As effusions of genuine passion, and refined sensibility, they have been seldom equalled, perhaps never surpassed.

The Ecstacies of Love.

"Awake, my Harp, some joyful measure!
No longer breath a pensive strain;
Be, like my soul, attun'd to pleasure,
And never mourn again.

Awake, my Harp, some joyful measure!
'Twas love that taught thy strings to move;
And love now fills my soul with pleasure—
Then hymn the charms of love!

O love! some call thy musings folly,
Some call thee cruel, base, and blind;
But thou, methinks, art pure and holy,
Exalted, rais'd, refin'd.

And some there are who can dissemble,
The raptures of thy ardent flame;
And some poor maidens start and tremble,
If they but hear thy name.

Ah! though thy charms were all illusion,
Such dear deceits I still would seek!
Thy mantle blush, thy soft confusion,
Thy looks that more than speak.

Then know'st, O love! how I have blest thee,
How oft for thee my heart hath beat;
How oft in sorrow I've caress'd thee,
And thought thy sorrow sweet.

O love! some call thy musings folly;
Some call thee cruel, base, and blind;
But thou, methinks, art pure and holy,
Exalted, rais'd, refin'd.

As the "PIRATE" by the author of "WAVERLY" has only just arrived, it cannot be yet generally known in this Province; it may be therefore interesting to many of our readers to be presented with a selection from the original poetry by which it is adorned and illustrated.

The Song of Harold Harfager.

"The sun is rising dimly red
The wind is wailing low and dead;
From his cliff the eagle sailies,
Leaves the wolf his darksome vallies;
In the mist the ravens hover,
Screaming, croaking, baying, yelling,
Each in his wild accents telling,
—"Soon we feast on dead and dying,
Fair haird Harrold's flag is flying."

Many a crest on air is streaming;
Many a helmet darkly gleaming,
Many an arm the axe upreares,
Doom'd to hew the wood of spears,
All along the crowded ranks,
Horses neigh and armour clanks;
Chiefs are shouting, clarions ringing,
Louder still the bard is singing,
—"Gather footmen, gather horsemen,
To the Field, ye valiant Normen!

"Hail ye not for food or slumber,
View not vantage, count not number;
Jolly rospers, forward still,
Grow the crop on vale or hill,
Thick or scatter'd stiff or lithe,
It shall down before the scythe
Forward with your sickles bright,
Reape the harvest of the fight,—
—Onward footmen, onward horsemen,
To the charge, ye gallant Normen!

"Fatal chuser of the slaughter,
Ov'r you hovers Odin's daughter;
Hear the choice she spreads before ye,—
Victory, and wealth, and glory;
Or old Valhalla's roaring hall,
Her ever-circling mead and ale,
Where for eternity unite
The joys of wassail and of fight,
"Headlong forward, foot and horsemen,
Charge and fight, and die like Normen!

"Pirate."

POSTCRIPT.

(From the New York Spectator, of April 9, just received.)

TWO DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND.

By the British Packet Manchester, the Editors of the Commercial Advertiser have received from their attentive correspondent, London papers to the 13th of February, and Shipping Lists to the 11th.

On the 11th of February the royal assent was given to the Irish Insurrection Bill, and to the Habeas Corpus Suspension Act. The Insurrection Bill, says a London paper, gives to Magistrates a right to enter into the most retired and delicate part of any dwelling house, and, if refused admittance, to force the chambers even of females. By this Act, any man found out of his house between sun-set and sun-rise, any person found drinking in a public house in the same period whether a traveller or not—any owner or occupier of a house, absent from home within the same period—any person in whose possession either arms or ammunition are found—all these are liable to transportation for seven years; and this too without the interference of a Grand Jury by Bill—without the Petty Jury by their verdict, and without allowing the grieved party any satisfactory appeal.

Bell's Weekly Messenger of the 11th Feb. states, that "Government have at length agreed with the country gentlemen to borrow of the Bank four millions, and to distribute it among the Agriculturists at a low rate of interest, and upon easy security."

The accounts received from Ireland during the preceding week, are stated to be seriously alarming, and to almost excite an apprehension that even the increasing terrors of the law will be insufficient for the accomplishment of an object so universally and fervently desired.

THE MONUMENTAL TROPHY IN HONOR OF HIS LATE MAJESTY

KING GEORGE III.

(DESIGNED, AND TO BE EXECUTED BY MATTHEW WYATT.)

THE Memory of His late Majesty has been endeared to the British Nation, not only by the firmness of his public principles, and the purity of his private virtues, but by the lustre these derived from the severe trial to which they were subjected, at a period when the spirit of the age was strongly opposed even to the merits of Royalty.

To a liberal and loyal people, it must be gratifying to have an opportunity of testifying their respect for such an example of Royal Worth. It is therefore intended to erect by Public Subscription, a Monument, which may record to future generations, the sense which the present age entertains of the many blessings enjoyed under the mild and beneficent sway of George III.

Books opened for receiving Subscriptions at WILLIAM ALLAN'S, Esquire, York.

N. B Subscribers are requested to be particular in writing their names and designations, as it is intended to record them in Brass on the Pedestal of the Monument.

NOT OFFICIAL.

WANTED.

WE the Subscribers, feeling the want of a Medical Gentleman of liberal education and undoubted loyalty, to practice in the Village of BATH, will pay, annually, the amount opposite our respective names, to any person of that description, who will establish himself among us.

Editorial Commentary.

A very extraordinary fall of snow occurred in the neighbourhood of Quebec, and over a large portion of the Lower Province, on the 10th of April,—insomuch that at Quebec, even where it was not drifted, the mean depth was about four feet—We notice this circumstance, not merely because it is very unusual at this season of the year, but as it is the probable cause of the non-arrival of the United States Mail, by which we expected our largest supply of weekly news.

A file of the London COURIER, however, up to the 26th of Feb. received by yesterday's mail, from another quarter, makes ample amends for the absence of other papers.—From these we have made a selection of the most important matter which we doubt not will be highly interesting to our readers.

Some very warm and lengthy debates appear to have taken place in the House of Commons.—Ministers have clearly the advantage, and carry their measures by large majorities.—HUNT, the famous Radical, has prevailed upon Mr. HUME, to present a petition complaining of ill usage in his place of confinement, which appears to be somewhat too solitary for one of his social and popular disposition.—ZIMMERMAN has observed that many that a virtuous man can endure solitude, for any great length of time. The truth is that the mind driven back on itself, by the exclusion of outward consolations must have internal resources of that precious value which virtuous principles and rectitude of conduct alone can give. For our own parts we are very much inclined to say with the Cottier, that we feel no sympathy, or very little, for Mr. Hume's present situation, nor shall we see any for those degrees of privation and suffering the laws may apportion him.—We lack that tender disposition, which thrills with pity only for criminal distress; we have none of those infirmmal sympathies which can be called forth only by the cries of imprisoned demagogues. The united voice of all loyal, peaceable, virtuous, and moral citizens, cried aloud for the punishment of this man, and that cry is not to be stifled by the whining accents of Mr. Grey Bennet, the pitiful censures of Mr. Joseph Hume, or the factious petition of the mob who once ran yelling at the heels of their now fallen leader.

Under the head of Ireland, we have this day given a very seriously interesting passage from the able charge of Baron M'Clelland to the Grand Jury of the County of Cork, in order to shew that we were not wrong in our surmise of last week, as to the present disturbances of Ireland, originating in local circumstances connected with the tythe system and the exorbitant rents or the oppressive tyranny of middlemen.—It is far from our wish to palliate the conduct of those who seek redress by outraging decency, by violating the laws of the land, by pillage, rapine, and murder; yet, when we consider the cruelly oppressive conduct of many of the "Petty Lords" of the country, or their agents, and the state of poverty, ignorance and wretchedness, not only of few families but of several millions of the inhabitants,—we cannot help pitying the hapless victims, and hoping that some efficient remedy will be found as a preventative for the future against those atrocities which are shocking to humanity, and disgraceful to the age and country in which they occur.

We have given a few instances of the kind of outrage which is almost daily committed in the disturbed parts of Ireland.—It would have been no difficult matter to have filled our columns with atrocities of a similar description, but we trust that our readers are as averse as ourselves to narratives fitted only for the chronicles and the records of Pandemonium.

The general Trade of England is in a most prosperous state.—All the extensive manufactories are busily employed.—Radicalism knocked on the head. The Agricultural interests alone seem to suffer—but the Great Council of the Nation is in close and serious deliberation in order to provide effectual relief, and we have no doubt that effectual relief will be found.

It is our intention to form a kind of digest of Parliamentary proceedings in England, up to the most recent dates, for our next paper.

We have no news from Russia, Greece, or Turkey, this week, so decisive or important, as to merit particular notice.

A Report is in circulation, and from a respectable quarter, that Spain has at length become wise enough to acknowledge the Independence of her former Colonies in South America.

France is rapidly recovering from the disastrous effects of the late War.—Her commerce improves; and her Finances are in a healthy state.—There is no truth in the report of Insurrections having taken place.

Our limits of this week do not permit us to notice, as we intended, some very extraordinary remarks on certain public men and measures which have lately appeared in the Great Radical Paper of this Country, the enlightened, the patriotic, the ever consistent and the truly charitable, impartial, and moderate Observer. In our next we hope to find room for what we have to say on the particular subject alluded to; in the mean while, we beg leave to call the attention of our readers to the very able letter of Philo-Veritas.

ENGLAND.

British Parliament.

A very interesting debate on the internal resources of Great Britain took place in the House of Commons on the 15th of February, on which the Courier makes the following remarks.

The exposition of our domestic resources, made by the Marquis of Londonderry, on Friday night, was unquestionably one of the most important statements that has been laid before Parliament, and the country, for a long series of years, whether we estimate its effect with reference only to our internal prosperity, or in connexion with our foreign relations. In the latter point of view indeed it must necessarily be attended with the most beneficial consequences. Should there be any continental Statesmen credulous enough to have confided in the gloomy anticipations of our patriotic Whigs and Radicals, some of whom have predicted the approach of certain ruin, while others have asserted its actual commencement; if they have fallen into the delusion so pertinaciously propagated, that our financial embarrassments had crippled our strength, and rendered us unable any longer to assert that high rank among nations which we attained at the close of the last war—should there, we say, be any Statesmen in Europe who may have dreamed, (as Buonaparte did, trusting to the same perfidious prophets) that England was no longer England, except in name—the developement of our national resources by the Noble Marquis, will at once annihilate what might prove so fatal an error.

It must also, we think, tend to impress them with something like an adequate notion of the vast and irresistible energies of this great country; great in all the elements of political ascendency, though comparatively such a mere speck—in territorial extent. If they reason correctly and impartially, it must fill them with wonder, to behold us in our present condition, after sacrifices, and exertions, ten-fold greater than were made by any one of the Continental Governments, during the long struggle with Republican and Imperial France. To many, indeed, it must appear an inexplicable phenomenon, that after such a war, a war of twenty years, carried on in almost every quarter of the Globe, we should now be in the path of rapid prosperity, as to our manufactures and commerce, repealing millions of taxes every year, and still in the possession of a surplus revenue of between five and six millions.

IMPORTANT MEASURE.

Paying off the Five Per Cents.

Annuities.—Ministers have determined upon paying off the Navy five per cent. annuities, and creating a new four per cent stock, by which a very considerable saving will accrue to Government.

The amount of stock now existing in the Navy five per cents created under the several Acts of Parliament from the 24th George III. to 1st George IV. is £141 850,057 9 7.

When the plan communicated by Lord Liverpool and the Chancellor of the Exchequer shall be in full operation, there will accrue an annual saving of interest to the nation of £1.124.640 This is independent of the Irish five per cents, which amount to about £13,000.000. If the same plan should be adopted in regard to them, there will arise a further saving, exceeding £100.000. making together a reduction in the charge of interest upon the National Debt of £1,234,000.

The surplus revenue in the current expenditure is £5,260,000 and the Ministers very greatly to th it credit, have resolved on applying the sum to the reduction of the National Debt. We were very greatly surprised to find that Lord Althorp, who is a whig, should propose that this sum should be taken for the current service of Government, instead of passing it into the sinking fund for the progressive reduction of the National Debt, and the adequate support of public credit. Mr. Robinson, however, very ably carried a counter resolution by a majority of 111

Lord Sidmouth.

From the Courier.

His Lordship has resigned the Seals of office and may now be considered as having retired from public life. It is not a natural wish to every man that some interval should be allowed him between active public life and the grave—that he should have a season of repose both for retrospect and preparation,—a season in which the mind may take a calmer and more unprejudiced view of the past, and prepare itself with more reflection for the future. How long that interval may be (and long may it be!) is known only to Him to whom all things are known, but few, very few in public or private men there are who can look back to the past with less regret, or to the future with more hope, than Lord Sidmouth. His public life has been extended through the long space of nearly half a century—a time during which perils—so important and eventful that no one can forget it, during its progress, without awe and trembling, or contemplate it close without wonder, admiration and gratitude.

We are not writing a biographical sketch of his Lordship's life we purpose to seize only one or two prominent features of his character, to sketch a brief outline, which we fear will be deemed an imperfect one, but which we are sure will be drawn by the hand of sincerity and truth.

Since the period when Lord Sidmouth ceased to fill the Chair in the House of Commons, there has scarcely been a public measure which his Lordship has not advised or promoted. When the insecurity of the peace of Amiens was ascertained, and abundant proof of the impossibility of remaining at peace with Bonaparte his Lordship with a vigour, a courage, and a steadiness, that never was surpassed, roused and directed all the energies of the country against the tyrant—and gave an impulse to the people that never failed, or faltered. It carried them through all the dangers and difficulties of the contest—made them submit not only with patience, but cheerfulness, to all the sacrifices and privations consequent upon it—and finally led them to that consummation which has placed the nation upon the highest pinnacle of greatness and glory. This is the proudest period of his Lordship's life he may look back to it with feelings of pride and pleasure, which the pettiness of his warmest admirers can hardly heighten, nor the censures of his bitterest enemies subdue or diminish.

In the post which his Lordship last filled, he had to contend with difficulties of another kind. He had to guard and watch over more closely the peace and security of the Empire at home to take care that the dangers from our internal, did not become more formidable than the dangers from our external enemies; and that the sacred fabric which had withstood so many assaults from without, should not be undermined and undermined from within. Posterity, perhaps, will wonder that such a task could have been imposed upon him, that men could have been found, not only so base and wicked but so silly and improvident, as to desire and contribute the destruction of so admirable a scheme of Government. It is his Lordship's merit, it will redound to his eternal honour, that his efforts manly detected and defeated the successive attempts of sedition and treason—that its activity was never resisted—his vigilance never tired—that he was always equal to the occasion, inflexibly firm, when inflexible firmness was necessary—forbearing and mild, when forbearance and mildness could be exercised without danger to the Empire. No man can accuse him of any acts of cruelty or injustice and truly and eloquently has it been said of him, that "mercy almost overtook Justice, and always followed it, and the guilty themselves were obliged to admit that they had deserved the chastisement which they did not receive." To talents that have been so eminently useful to his country, his Lordship adds those moral virtues which dignify and adorn private life—and he combines, too, all those qualities which are the grace and ornament of social intercourse. It may be said, perhaps, that this is a part of his character, which ought to have been left to his Biographer—for we reflected that we might not have been spared to have exercised that painful duty, and we are anxious to pay, as soon as possible our sincere, though feeble, tribute, to a statesman whose character and conduct we have contemplated with such feelings of pleasure and admiration.

IRELAND.

An Extract from the charge of Baron M'Clelland, to the Grand Jury of the County of Cork, in a Special Commission, opened at the City of Cork, February 16th, 1822.

Beyond all doubt, there exists in this and some of the neighbouring Counties a conspiracy, the objects of which were as wicked and daring as only to be exceeded by the atrocious means by which it was sought to be effected—so cruel, vindictive, and relentless, as to strike the mind with horror. As far as one could judge, one of those objects was the abolition of tythes, and the reduction, if not the abolition also, of rents, and that the legitimate owners of the soil should derive nothing from it.—Such, it would appear, was the decision of this self-erected tribunal; and the means by which it was endeavoured to be enforced, were, by introducing a system of terror, so despotic and dreadful, that the most tyrannical Government that ever existed, never thought of. It commenced by armed bodies traversing the country by day and by night, issuing their laws as they passed and punishing any violation of them with sanguinary vengeance; they deprived the gentry of their arms, in order, at once, to make themselves more formidable, and to lessen the force of those who were naturally interested in the preservation of order and tranquility; they were guilty of the foul crime of murder; and, in the prosecution of their nefarious designs, had dispensed with every obligation sanctified by the laws of God and man. To illustrate, the Learned Baron stated an instance which had occurred at the last Special commission for Limerick, where a man came to prosecute some persons who had been concerned in a daring attack on his house, when his wife, gave evidence against him (her husband,) and admitted that she had sworn, that if he ever prosecuted those persons she would never cohabit with him. In the same case was seen the Crown Prosecutor, at one side of the Court, receiving suggestions from the father, in order to lead to the conviction of those who had plundered and robbed him of his property; and at the other side, the son of that father directing the defence of the same persons. But the objects of these miscreants may be traced farther. Not content with aiming at the lives and properties of the peaceful and industrious—of not only those who resisted, but those who did not abet them, they aimed at the dissolution of the entire frame of society, until from the terrors of impending danger, all sunk before this lawless conspiracy. If such a state of things was suffered to exist, the country would not be worth living in. But he did not despair—he had no fears but it would be put down. If those who had enjoyed a Constitution, the glory of our own, and the envy of surrounding nations, would suffer it to be displaced by a system such as he had described, they would deserve all the consequences of their criminal acquiescence.

From the Limerick Chronicle

F. Petit, servant to W. Smyth Esqr. a magistrate, returning to his masters house at Ballyline, from Adare, was way-laid near Garranbuie Castle, by a party of ruffians, who murdered him in the most cruel manner. The unfortunate man had received a duck shot in the right side, his back was completely burned, supposed from the shots being fired at a very short distance, and his skull was fractured in three parts it was indeed literally pounded to pieces by the infernal demons, who are yet, we are concerned to say, undiscovered. It is very remarkable that this is the fourth murder committed within a short time near the same spot.

Another foul murder.

This moment we have been informed that Wick Burke Esqr. returning from his farm to his dwelling at New-bridge, was murdered within one hundred yards of the village of Cappa, in the County. He was a most inoffensive gentleman, and universally esteemed.

Most barbarous outrage at which human nature shudders.

KILLALLOCK, Feb. 19th, 1822.

"Sunday night, as a detachment of the Rifle Brigade were on their march from Mitchelstown to Kilfinan, their wives and children having preceded them on cars, they were attacked by a party of about forty men, who immediately called for the commanding officer's wife. This unfortunate woman was not with them, they declined their intention of discovering and murdering every Scotch and English woman amongst them, and insisted on knowing whether there was an officer or sergeant's wife of their party.

"They then dragged the women out of the cars and barbarously abused nine of them!!! Two of their lives are despaired of, and a third was missing for twenty-four hours."

The Limerick Telegraph of Tuesday, gives the following statement of the above affair.

Rumours Outrage.—Yesterday a party of the Rifle Corps, proceeding to out quarters, between Rathkeale and New Castle, some of the women, who happened to be in the rear, on a military baggage-car, were met by a party of Whiteboys; they asked them whether they were Scotch or Irish? some answered that they were Scotch; they immediately seized on two of them, whose persons were violated by twenty six of these infernal ruffians!!! We understand some of the villains have been apprehended.

We are informed, that an engagement took place on Monday last, between the small detachment of the 42d and Pastime Yeomanry, from Askeaton, and a party of Whiteboys, who attempted to rescue one of their associates, and that it is ascertained that one of the latter is killed, several are said have been wounded, as the military expended each sixteen rounds of ball The insurgents retreated into the wood near Askeaton.

Before the Baron left Cork sentence of death was passed on Thirty-five Whiteboys!

The Magistracy of Cork and Limerick have both petitioned the Lord Lieutenant to extend the operation of the Insurgent Act, the nature of which we explained last week, to their respective countries Does not this prove the necessity and the policy of the act?—Ed.

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

Our next foreign relation, following the same local order, is with Spain. Here our moderation has been equally tried, both as regards our own peculiar gain, and as bears upon the alleged principle of defending kings at all events. In the contest between Spain and her Colonies, we have held forth a different example from the former conduct of that crown between ourselves and America. It will not be denied that a strong temptation urged us. The emancipation of so large a customer could not but be most advantageous to so large a dealer as Great Britain The free commerce with south America is nothing to other kingdoms in proportion to what it will eventually become to England. If our interest were strong, the impotence of the power to be injured (it is said without any purpose of offence) opened every thing to our mercy. There was no restraint but in our own generosity and justice. But this restraint was sufficient. We remember red that if honesty be the best policy at individuals, who are but creatures of the day, still more so is it the best wisdom of those more durable moral persons, the permanent riches of states and empires. The time might arrive when fortune might reduce us to the same appeal to the justice of others, and we might receive the benefit, of our own example. Under these feelings, the South Americans were left to fight alone. Under these feelings the gentlemen of the English Opposition have taunted, and the British manufactures have supplicated in vain. The answer of his Majesty's ministers to the one has been, that the faith of treaties was with them something more than a word of course; and that the weakness of a friendly power only superadded a duty of generosity to justice. To the other party they answered, that a nation had other interests besides present gain; and that if commerce be a good thing, national honour is a better.

It was under these principles that the Foreign Enlistment Bill was passed, and that our officers and soldiers were prohibited from entering into the service of the insurgent subjects of a friendly state. In the treaty signed at Madrid in 1814, it was stipulated between the governments of Spain and Great Britain, that, in performance of the duties of friendly states toward each other, his Britannic Majesty should prohibit his subjects from furnishing arms to the insurgent Colonies of South America. It was manifestly within the obligations of friendly states, and the acknowledged public law of Europe, that the one power should require this engagement, and that the other should accede to it; the South American Colonies being at the time a component portion of the Spanish empire, and the demand of Spain being nothing more than a stipulation that we should not interfere in the war between her colonies and herself. As it was, therefore, a matter of course in the British government to make this engagement, so it was a point of good faith to give it an effectual observance. The Foreign Enlistment Bill was but the execution of this article of the treaty of Madrid. The treaty was merely declaratory of a pre-existing duty, and neither the article nor its performance gave any thing to Spain to which she had not a previous and perfect right Under the public law of Europe, our actual relations with Spain and South America afforded us only the choice of two courses—either that of giving positive aid to the mother country, or of remaining in a perfect neutrality. As either of these courses was open to us, just views of our own policy decided the choice, and we adopted, as we had good right to adopt, the part of neutrality. So far only we were at liberty to consult our own peculiar interests; for though the law of nations would admit us to afford positive aid to Spain, in the reduction of her colonies, the same law prohibited us, as contrary to the duty of friendly states, from giving any assistance to the Colonies. Our conduct towards South America, from the peace to the present day, has been in conformity with these principles. With the strongest interest for assisting the Colonies, in the face of the taunts of the Opposition, and against the clamours of our traders, his Majesty's ministers have steadily adhered to the obligations of public law, and to the faith of treaties. Nor have we satisfied ourselves with a merely apparent observance of this neutral conduct. We have acted throughout as becomes the direct and highminded character of the country. We have sent no expedition to examine the respective strength of the two belligerent parties; we have held forth no encouragement to a perseverring warfare by the expectation that a certain degree of success only was wanting to ensure our recognition and co-operation. Our language to Spain has been—You have a right to require our neutrality, and therefore we engage for it; we have, indeed, a strong interest to decline such an engagement, but we have a manifest duty to make it. To the Colonies we have said—We cannot aid you, but we will stand apart. To both we have fulfilled our duties and contract.

It is impossible upon this part of our subject, and with a view to events about closing as these observations are written not to congratulate the country upon the full and unequivocal success of this part of our foreign policy; by which, with safe and unimpeached honour, and against the most urgent temptations, the course of human events has at length opened this commercial field to the full extent of our possible wishes. There can be no disposition in his Majesty's ministers and their friends to undervalue the importance of a temptation which so long solicited them in vain, and to which they only preferred the sincerity of our public faith, and the integrity of our national honor. They cannot see with indifference an acquisition to general commerce at once so vast in expanse, so various in climate, so fertile in all the materials of industry and manufacture; and in that stage, moreover, of social progress, which, above all others, qualifies it to become the largest customer of a manufacturing nation. They cannot be indifferent under the well-grounded conviction, that this new [illegible] will be peculiarly open to British trade and industry, and will at once add to the supply of our stock of raw materials, and to the abundant consumption of our manufactures. They cannot be insensible to the value of a dealer, whose exports to the mother country, under all the disadvantages of a civil warfare amongst themselves exceeded fifteen millions; and whose imports were only of less extent under the system of an injudicious monopoly. But in the proportion in which they must feel this satisfaction under the present state of things, do they feel a just pride in the conscious remembrance, that a prize of such splendor, and always lying at their feet, never induced them from the path of national honor; and that if they have at length attained it, they have attained it with generosity and good faith—Non conquanates sed dem, not acting the pedlar and treebooter, but as the representatives of a great state, and of a generous and sincere people, his majesty's ministers, so far as this question goes, have at once satisfied their own honor, and dignified the character of their country.

INDEX AT END.

NATURAL HISTORY.

Very little is known of the large horned sheep of the Rocky Mountains in the North western regions of this continent. It has not, to our knowledge, been even noticed in any of the numerous Histories of Quadrupeds until the last edition of Burrow, by Wood, and it is there but slightly described in the appendix from information by a Gentleman of our Northwest Company. We have great pleasure therefore, in presenting our readers with the following paragraph from the New York Statesman and we take this opportunity of soliciting any information, generally, that may tend to illustrate the habits, manners, economy, and history of an animal that must prove so valuable an acquisition to manufactures, commerce, and, may we not add, to the farming interest?—Ed.

WILD SHEEP OF NORTH AMERICA.

We are favoured with specimen of the wool of the Ovis Montana Americana brought from the Rocky Mountains, near the sources of the Missouri and Columbia rivers. This wool, in fineness, softness, and delicacy, resembles that of the Cashmere goat, from which the beautiful shawls of that name are made. We learn on the authority of a gentleman who has traversed the Rocky Mountains from the north branch of the Columbia to the Athapescow that numerous flocks of these sheep inhabit that region. No doubt is entertained that this animal may be domesticated, and its fleece wrought into fabrics which will rival in richness and beauty the far famed productions of the east. The French government have recently imported several hundred of Cashmere goats from their native region, which thrive well in France, and promise to be a source of great national wealth. We hope this laudable example will be followed by the United States; and that measures will be taken through the agency of the enterprising officers of our army station ed on the Missouri, to procure a number of these curious and valuable animals. Perhaps it would be worth the expense to send an exploring party, especially for that object. A skin of this animal is deposited in the Lyceum of Natural history in this city and was presented by John Jacob Astor, Esq

Falls of Niagara.
By Dr. Howison.

The following is by far the best published description we have ever seen of the Falls,—from the pen of a writer whose work on Canada has not yet reached our hands.—

"The Table Rock, from which the Falls of Niagara may be contemplated in all their grandeur, lies on an exact level with the edge of the cataract, on the Canadian side, and, indeed, forms a part of the precipice over which the water gushes. It derives its name from the circumstance of its projecting beyond the cliffs that support it, like the leaf of a table. To gain this position it is necessary to descend a steep bank, and to follow a path that winds among shrubbery and trees, which entirely conceals from the eye, the scene that awaits him who traverses it. When near the termination of this road, a few steps carried me beyond all these obstructions, and a magnificent amphitheatre of cataracts burst upon my view with appalling suddenness and majesty. However, in a moment the scene was concealed from my eyes by a dense cloud of spray, which involved me so completely, that I did not dare to extricate my self. A mingled rushing and thundering filled my ears. I could see nothing except when the wind made a chasm in the spray, and then a tremendous cataracts seemed to encompass me on every side, while below, a raging and foaming gulf of undiscoverable extent lashed the rocks with its hissing waves, and swallowed, under a horrible obscurity, the smoking floods that were precipitated into its bosom.

"At first the sky was obscured by the clouds, but after a few minutes the sun burst forth, and the breeze subsiding at the same time, permitted the spray to ascend perpendicularly. A host of pyramidal clouds rose majestically, one after another from the abyss at the bottom of the fall; and each, when it had ascended a little above the edge of the cataract, displayed a beautiful rainbow, which in a few moments was gradually transferred into the bosom of the cloud that immediately succeeded. The spray of the Great Fall had extended itself through a wide space directly over me, and, receiving the full influence of the sun, exhibited a luminous and magnificent rainbow, which continued to over-arch and irradiate the spot on which I stood, while I enthusiastically contemplated the indescribable scene.

"Any person, who had nerve enough, (as I had) may plunge his hand into the water of the Great Fall, after it is projected over the precipice merely by laying down flat, with his face beyond the edge of the Table Rock, and stretching out his arm to its utmost extent. The experiment is truly a horrible one, and such as I would not wish to repeat; for, even to this day, I feel a shuddering and recoiling sensation when I recollect having been in the posture above described.

"The body of water which composes the middle part of the Great Fall is so immense, that it descends nearly two thirds of the space without being in the smallest degree ruffled or broken, and the solemn calmness with which it rolls over the edge of the precipice, is finely contrasted with the perturbed appearance it assumes after having reached the gulf below. But the water towards each side of the Fall is shattered the moment it drops over the rocks, and loses as it descend, in a great measure, the character of a fluid, being divided into pyramidal shaped fragments, the bases of which are turned upwards. The surface of the gulf below the cataract presents a very singular aspect; seeming, as it were, filled with an immense quantity of hoar frost, which is agitated by small and rapid undulations. The particles of water are dazzingly white, and do not apparently unite together, as might be supposed, but seem to continue for a time in a state of distinct commination and to repeal each other with a thrilling and shivering motion which cannot easily be described.

"The noise made by the Horseshoe Fall, though very great, is infinitely less than might be expected, and varies in loudness according to the state of the atmosphere. When the weather is clear or frosty, it might be distinctly heard at the distance of ten or twelve miles; nay, much further when here is a steady breeze; but I have frequently stood upon the declivity of the high bank which overlooks the Table Rock, and distinguished a low thundering only, which at times was almost drowned amidst the roaring of the rapids above the cataract. In my opinion, the concave shape of the Great Fall explains this circumstance. The noise vibrates from one side of the rocky recess to the other, and a little only escapes from its confinement, and even this is less distinctly heard than it would otherwise be, as the profusion of spray renders the air near the cataract a very indifferent conductor of sound.

"The road to the bottom of the Fall presents many more difficulties than that which leads to the Table Rock. After leaving the Table Rock the traveller must proceed down the river nearly half a mile, where he will come to a small chasm in the bank, in which there is a spiral stair-case, enclosed in a wooden building. By descending this stair, which is seventy or eighty feet, perpendicular height, he will find himself under the precipice on the top of which he formerly walked. A high, but sloping bank extends from its base to the edge of the river, and on the summit of this is a slippery path, covered with angular fragments of rock, which leads to the Great Fall. The impending cliffs, hung with a profusion of trees, over-arch this road, and seem to vibrate with the thunders of the cataract. In some places they rise abruptly to the height of one hundred feet, and display upon their surfaces fossil shells, and the organic remains of a former world; thus sublimely leading the mind to contemplate the convulsions which nature has undergone since the creation. As the traveller advances, he is frightfully stunned by the appalling noise: for clouds of spray sometimes envelope him, and suddenly check his fluttering steps,—rattlesnakes start from the cavities of the rocks, and the scream of eagles soaring among the whirlwinds of eddying vapour, which obscure the gulf of the cataract, at intervals announce that the waters have hurled some bewildered animal over the precipice. After scrambling among piles of huge rocks that obstruct his way, the traveller gains the bottom of the Fall, where the soul can be susceptible only of one emotion, viz. that of unextinguishable horror.

"It was not until I had, by frequent excursions to the Falls, in some measure familiarized my mind with their sublimities, that I ventured to explore the penetralia of the Great Cataract. The precipice over which it rolls is very much arched underneath; while the impetus which the water receives in its descent, projects it far beyond the cliff, and thus an immense Gothic arch is formed by the rock and the torrent. Twice I entered this cavern, and twice I was obliged to retrace my steps, lest I should be suffocated by the blasts of dense spray that whirled around me, however, the third time I succeeded in advancing about twenty five yards. Here darkness began to encircle me; on one side the black cliff stretched itself into a gigantic arch far above my head, and on the other, the dense and hissing torrent formed an impenetrable sheet of foam, with which I was drenched in a moment. The rocks were so slippery, that I could hardly keep my feet, or hold securely by them; while the horrid din made me think the precipices above were tumbling down in colossal fragments upon my head

"It is not easy to determine how far an individual might advance between the sheet of water and the rock; but were it even possible to explore the recess to its utmost extremity, scarcely any one, I believe would have courage to attempt an expedition of the kind.

"A little way below the Great Fall, the river is, comparatively speaking, so tranquil, that a ferry boat plies between the Canada and American shores, for the convenience of travellers. When I first crossed, the heaving flood tossed about the skiff with a violence that seemed very alarming, but as soon as we gained the middle of the river, my attention was altogether engaged by the surpassing grandeur of the scene before me. I was now within the area of a semi circle of cataracts more than three thousand feet in extent, and flanked on the surface of a gulf raging, fathomless, and interminable. Majestic cliffs, splendid rainbows, lofty trees, and columns of spray, were the gorgeous decorations of this theatre of wonders, while a dazzling sun sited refulgent glories upon every part of the scene. Surrounded with clouds of vapour, and stunned into a state of confusion and terror by the hideous noise I looked upwards to the height of one hundred and fifty feet, and saw vast floods, dense, awful, and stupendous, vehemently bursting over the precipice, and rolling down, as if the windows of Heaven were opened to pour down another deluge upon the earth. Loud sounds, resembling discharges of artillery or volcanic explosions, were now distinguishable amidst the watery tumult, and added terrors to the abyss from which they issued. The sun looking majestically through the ascending spray, was encircled by a radiant halo; whilst fragments of rainbows floated on every side, and momentarily vanished only to give place to a succession of others more brilliant. Looking backwards, I saw the Niagara river again become calm and tranquil, rolling magnificently between the towering cliff, that rose on either side, and receiving showers of orient dewdrops from the trees that gracefully over-arched its transparent bosom. A gentle breeze ruffled the waters, and beautiful birds fluttered around, as if to welcome its egress from those clouds of spray, accompanied by thunders and rainbows, which were the heralds of its precipitation into the abyss of the cataract."

Poet's Corner.

The following verses are ascribed to Lord Byron, by the London Editors. We insert them as a contrast to the exquisite Elegy alluded to in the department of our paper last week, and which immediately follows; and, to show how great is the difference, in point of delicacy and moral feeling, between what is not unjustly termed the "Satanic" and what may with equal propriety be called the "sympathetic" School of Poetry.—Ed.

Lord Byron on his Marriage and Separation from his Wife.

How strangely time does run
In parting me and you,
'Tis now six years since we were one,
And five since we were two.

On the seizure of his Tragedy, and the recovery of Lady Noel, by his wife Miss Milbanke.

Alas! how very cruel is cupid,
My Play is damn'd, and Lady Noel not.

Elegy.

'Twas sweet as violet breathing gale,
'Twas soothing as the moon's faint beam,
'Twas tender as the ring dove's tale,—
Alas! and was it but a dream?

Methought I saw him once again,
Again I listen'd to his voice;
It calm'd the tumults of my brain,
It made my throbbing heart rejoice.

O! with what eager, keen delight,
I tracd a form distinct and clear,
That cheated my enraptur'd sight,
With the blest thought that he was near.

Love still was weeping in his eyes,
As first the little traitor stole,
Conceal'd in Pity's soft disguise,
To pierce and agonize my soul.

Upon his cheek the lingering tear
Told me in absence he was true;
And that pale cheek was far more dear
Than had it glow'd with joy's bright hue.

His glist'ning eyes long fixed on me,
A thousand tender hopes impart;
For such the looks twas heaven to see,
When first he sought and won my heart.

Methought they bade my sorrows cease,
And charm'd despondence from my breast;
Methought they promis'd joy and peace,
And for a moment I was blest.

But ah! too soon I wake and weep!
Too soon the hated morning beam
Dispels the phantasies of sleep!
Alas! and was it but a dream?

In dreams by night, in dreams by day,
Methinks I see thee still before me!
Methinks I hear the faltring voice
That whisper'd "Laura, I adore thee?"

Alas! the rapid, ruthless blush
Too soon proclaim'd what thou fear'd me!
My downcast looks, my trembling frame,
Told much, much more than words could tell thee.

And art thou lost? forever lost?
Ah! how I weep when it was told me
That I must hear thy voice no more!
That I must never more behold thee!

These fruitless tears will ever fall!
Ev'n grief refuses to deceive me,
But the bleak sadness that I feel,
I will not paint, for it would grieve thee.

Yet faithful memory oft shall bring
Thy tender words and looks, to cheer me:
Still on her treasur'd hoards I'll live,
And my fond soul shall hover near thee!

Song
OF THE

MERMAID.

Fathoms deep beneath the wave,
Stringing beaded glist'ning pearl,
Singing the achievements brave
Of many an old Norwegian Earl;
Dwelling where the tempest's raving
Falls as light upon our ear,
As the sigh of lover, craving
Pity from his lady dear.
Children of wild Thule, we,
From the deep caves of the sea,
As the lark springs from the lea,
Hither come to share your glee.

MERMAN

From reining of the water horse,
That bounded till the waves were foaming,
Watching the distant tempest's course,
Chasing the seas snake in his roaming;
From winding charge-notes on the shell,
When the huge whale and sword fish duel,
Or telling shoreless seamen's knell,
When the winds and waves are cruel;
Children of wild Thule, we
Have plough'd such furrows on the sea,
As the steer draws on the lea,
And hither we come to share your glee.

MERMAID AND MERMEN.

We heard you in our twilight caves,
A hundred fathom deep below,
For notes of joy can pierce the waves,
That drown each sound of war and woe.
Those who dwell beneath the sea,
Love the sons of Thule well;
Thus to aid your mirth, bring we,
Dance and song, and sounding shell,
Children of dark Thule know,
Those who dwell by hut and woe,
Where your daring shallops row,
Come to share the festal show.

Old Play.

As to throwing wealth and talent into the bosom of the United States, and increasing our numbers, this is also a remove from truth as we for one believe it from a right investigation into this complaint. It may appear that some few discontented individuals, and such there will always be in all countries, have left this Province, after having made comfortable settlements therein, but where one goes out an hundred come in. We will mention only one out of several instances of the same kind which have come to our knowledge. A man who arrived in this Province, from the north of England, with a few pounds in his pocket, settled on a farm between York and Lake Simcoe;—the industry and economy of five or six years, in this new situation, made him, comparatively, independent. He had a sufficient quantity of land cleared, and a saw-mill, to bring him a handsome income; and he lived at his ease, and with plenty. But it is the nature of man to be restless and dissatisfied;—so it was in this instance. Although he had never enjoyed so much affluence at any former period of his life—this man grew uneasy;—he thought of England;—his former abodes;—his scenes;—his ancient friends;—his recollections became insupportable;—he sold his farm, his mill, his stock, and soon more set his face towards England;—the voyage was performed;—a few hours brought him into the midst of the scenes of his youth;—he again took a farm, stocked it,—again tried the fluctuations of markets and fairs, and was again bankrupt—finally bankrupt, for now there was nothing left—and this foolish man ended his days in a work-house!—Frightful exchange for the ease and independence of a Canadian Yeoman!!

If it be true, however, that "every countenance wears the picture of dependency," that new honors are paid "at Sheriff's Sale, for one third of the money they cost in building" and that "executions have been so numerous during the present year as they were the previous two" Ed. and that such are the true and indubitable signs of the times. If all these things be true, then is it indeed time to rise and shake off our lethargy like dew drops from the lion's mane, and look around us to see what can be done. But we have many doubts of the alledged increase of Sheriff's Sales; yet, if, for the moment, we are inclined to admit the assertion for a truth; has there not been a general depreciation of produce in both hemispheres? and has not the depreciation in the United States greatly exceeded what has been felt here? Most unquestionably! But, when this subject seriously presents our Government to "let the money that comes into the Province remain in it," and, that a considerable part of what comes into the hands of Government, instead of being paid to their deserving officers, should be laid out "in draining swamps," (we suppose he means turmeric and cedar swamps for these are few of any other description in Canada) and, that unfortunate emigrants should not be "strung with disappointment." We are really afraid he will find himself wrong with disappointment, (if he has any feelings to wring) and to the predicament of the countryman who had very hospitably entertained king CHARLES II during his flight after the battle of Worcester. The grateful monarch, had assured this honest clown, that, should it please God ever to restore him to the throne, he would grant him, the said cudle, any favour it was in his power to give. Soon after the restoration, this same clown made his appearance at court; obtained an audience; and claimed his payment of the royal debt. "What would you have me do for you, my good fellow? said the merry king: After a long demur—much hesitation—many hummings—"I—I—I would have—your Kingship make me a gentman,"—alas, how unfortunate! replied the monarch, "had you asked me to make a Duke or a Lord of you, perhaps I might have done so, in order to fulfil a sacred promise; but, to make you a gentleman is quite beyond the reach of my prerogative—it is utterly impossible! The poor fellow returned home, "strung with disappointment."

AGRICULTURE.

Salt.—According to our promise of last week, we shall now give some interesting gleanings from the excellent letter of Mr. PARKES, addressed to the Farmers and Graziers of Great Britain, on the advantages of using Salt in the various branches of Agriculture, and in feeding all kinds of farming stock, together with a few remarks of our own upon this important subject.

The value of common Salt as a manure was known to many individuals in England several hundred years ago, but the high duties and other impediments prevented its use becoming general. The value of Salt for agricultural purposes has also been long known in Germany, Poland, Holland, Flanders, and in the United States of America. It is a substance found in great abundance in a mineral state, in several parts of England; and we have every reason to believe that it abounds, deeply imbedded in a substratum, throughout Canada; so many Salt springs, and salt licks frequented by the wild deer of the forest, being found at various points, and frequently at great distances from each other. It only requires deep boring to find it;—and, if Mr. Parkes's remarks be true, and we fully coincide with his opinion, that "no agriculturalist, not even the most humble gardener, should remain ignorant of the value of so rich and useful a commodity as rock salt," we trust that what may be said on the subject will induce some capitalists in this Province immediately to go to work, and embark in a speculation that cannot fail to prove extremely lucrative and of national importance.

Mr. Parkes is of opinion that rock salt, at the reduced duty of five pounds per ton is by far the cheapest, the most efficacious, and the most convenient manure for arable and pasture land that can possibly be obtained.

More than one hundred and fifty years ago, Sir Hugh Platt, an eminent writer of that day, speaks very decidedly of the benefits which might be derived from the practice of sprinkling common salt upon land, and calls it the sweetest, the cheapest, and the most philosophical marle of all others. He relates the case of a man, who, in passing over a creek on the sea shore, suffered his sack of seed corn to fall into the water, and there it lay there until it was low tide, when, being unable to buy more seed, he sowed that which had lain in the salt-water; and when the harvest time arrived he reaped a crop far superior to any in the neighborhood.

The same curious author tells us of "a man who sowed a bushel of salt, long since, upon a plot of barren ground on Clapham Common, and that to that day (the time when he was writing) it remained more fresh and green than any of the ground round about it.

The eminent Dr. Brownerigg, who wrote in the year 1748, in speaking of common salt, says, "it is dispersed over all nature; it is treasured up in the bowels of the earth; it impregnates the ocean; it descends in rain; it fertilizes the soil; it arises in vegetables; and from them is conveyed into animals; so that it may well be esteemed the universal condiment of nature; friendly and beneficent to all creatures.

After we have given our readers a general introduction to the subject, we shall point out the best modes of practice in the use of Salt, both as a manure and a condiment in fodder, and in animal food.—Ed. To be Continued.

COMMUNICATION.

To the Editor of the Weekly Register.

Sir,

I perceive that Col. Nichol's late appointment to a Colonelcy has been brought before the public coupled with some very extravagant insinuations. I cannot, for my part, conceive more than three bearings in which a promotion in the Militia can be justly considered as a matter of public importance. To these I shall briefly advert.

In the first place, it may be attended with an undue exercise of the prerogative;—but this, in the first instance, is out of the question.

Secondly, it may seem to have the color of injustice to others belonging to the same Corps, or more generally to the same service with the individual promoted. But, in this case the Colonel has received his promotion only according to his standing. Well then, neither has the Regulation been outraged, nor have the Militia any just cause for offence, in this particular case. Let us proceed, therefore, to the third bearing, which regards the individual.

Thirdly, perhaps, may have reason to complain that his services have been too tardily, or too humiliatingly rewarded. But this was far from being the case according, to the honest Observer's original view of the subject; for he, good man, manfully designated the Colonel's promotion, as the wages of prostitution! Hard words truly!—afterwards as unblushingly abandoned, as they were at first maliciously applied. But, gentle reader, remark the weakness of this wretched accusation. He first advances that the Colonel received a promotion that he did not deserve, but being borne down by the incontrovertible evidence of well known facts—without any apology—without any confession—he takes up a new ground, and make a terrible clamour because the Colonel who, he has discovered, was entitled to promotion, did not receive (to use his own phrase) the wages of corruption, at an earlier period! Shame, shame, to the Govern——t, for withholding the wages of corruption!! Out upon the puzzle headed fellow, he perplexes one in deciding whether he is most knave or fool.

It is true that the Colonel may have long ago represented his case to the Government, and having represented it in vain he may have poured forth his complaints into the bosom of the companionate Observer, and have wrought in his mind a conviction that his friend had been neglected.

Now, if the honest Editor was impressed with such a conviction, he has clearly written himself down a Liar in his first statement—If, on the other hand, he has a knowledge of the Colonel's representation having been neglected by the Government, it is equally clear that he has taken up his second ground as much at random as his first, and has ended by giving the public a fresh instance of the folly and want of principle which characterizes a Journal that might with great propriety drop its present title and take that of a little two penny book well known to Children by the name of Mother C——'s Tales.

PHILO VERITAS.

DOMESTIC.

Tuesday the 23d inst. being the Anniversary of St. George, on which it has been appointed to celebrate his Majesty's Birth Day, the East and West Regiments of York Militia, with Capt Fuller's Troop of Cavalry, which are attached to the North York Regiment, on the night, were formed in line, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon, on the road in front of the Government House, and a Guard of Honor, consisting of 100 rank and file from each Regiment, with Officers and Serjeants in proportion, under the command of Lieut. Col Fitz Gibbon, were formed at a short distance in front of the centre, as the representatives of the Militia of this Province, in order to receive the rich and beautiful Colors which his Majesty has been graciously pleased to command should be prepared for the late Incorporated Battalion, as an honorable testimony of the high sense which his Majesty has been pleased to entertain of the zeal and gallantry of the Militia of Upper Canada.

At 12 o'clock, a Royal Salute was fired from the Garrison, and the Lieutenant Governor with his Staff, having arrived on the ground, proceeded to review the widely extended line—after which, taking his station in front of the whole, the band struck up the national anthem of "God save the King," His Excellency then dismounted and accompanied by his Staff, on foot, approached the Guard of Honor so near as to be distinctly heard by the men—when, uncovering himself, and taking one of the Colors in his hand, in the most dignified and graceful manner, he presented them to the proper officer with the following address:—

Soldiers—I have great satisfaction in presenting you, as the representatives of the late Incorporated Battalion, with these Colors—a distinguished mark of His Majesty's approbation. They will be to you a proud memorial of the past, and a rallying point, around which you will gather with alacrity and confidence should your active services be required hereafter, by your King and Country.

The day was raw and cold, and the ground being very wet and uneven, the men could neither form nor march with that precision they would otherwise have exhibited. We were very much pleased, however, with the soldier like appearance of the "Guard of Honor" and we were particularly struck by the new uniform of the Officers of the West York, as being peculiarly well adapted for the kind of warfare incident to a thickly wooded country. Even at a short distance it would be difficult to distinguish the grey coat or jacket from the bole of a tree. There was a very full attendance on the field, and it was peculiarly gratifying to observe so much satisfaction on all sides.

The Colors which are very elegant, are inscribed with the word "Niagara" to commemorate the services rendered by the Incorporated Battalion on that frontier; and we doubt not that the proud distinction which attends these banners will always serve to excite the most animating recollections, whenever it shall be necessary for them to wave over the heads of our Canadian Heroes, actually formed in battle array against the invaders of our Country.

At 2 o'clock His Excellency held a Levee; and, in the evening a splendid Ball at the Government House concluded the ceremonies and rejoicings of the day.

FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

In the Court of King's Bench and at our late assizes in a cause Wilcocks vs Jarvis, the Jury found for the Plaintiff, Damages £5. This verdict has been set aside and the Plaintiff non suited.—Gen. Jarvis being a Magistrate acting, as he conceived, strictly according to his sense of duty the cause excited some interest.

Mr. Coke has led to the hymenial altar, Lady Ann Keppel, second daughter of the Earl of Albemarle. The ceremony was performed by the Bishop of Norwich, at his Lordship's house in St. James' Square. The bridegroom, we understand, is in his 74th year; the bride in her 21st.

Editorial Commentary.

There appears to be an unusual dearth of foreign news of importance, this week. The Parliamentary debates of England form the most interesting feature in the communications we have received. Our readers will find as comprehensive a digest of the most important questions, as our present limits will afford. We shall continue this digest, from week to week, during the present session.

A very splendid entertainment has been given in Dublin, by the Lord Mayor, to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant. One hundred and twenty persons of the first rank and character in the country were present; and it is unspeakably gratifying to find how distinguished is the good will borne by the Irish Nobility to his Majesty, and to his representative:—a good will that was most enthusiastically evinced at this magnificent banquet. Whatever may be the feelings of some misguided individuals, it is manifest that at no period of history has a Brunswick Monarch been more ardently and universally beloved than George IV.

Amongst our English news of this week we have given an abbreviated notice of an extraordinary trial which has lately taken place in London wherein Major Cartwright was plaintiff and one Wright defendant. It is principally remarkable as developing further the character of one of the most notorious demagogues of these times and as showing how little dependence can be placed on such men even by their own partizans. We have not, however, to learn the character of Cobbett at this time of day. It has been long known to the public in all parts of the world where the English language prevails. The applause, or the censure of such a man has ceased to be either praise or blame, and he is another striking instance, amongst the many thousand which the records of History afford, to shew how unavailing are the most powerful talents, without integrity, and sound moral and religious principle, either to dignify the possessor or to aggrandize the country the fame, or the splendor of the country, which claims his allegiance.

The most wonderful thing to our apprehension is that any consideration could be found sufficiently weighty to induce men of rank, talents, virtue, and undoubted honor, to act in mic, as associates, persons whose characters are infamous for crime, immorality, baseness, inconsistency, and utter want of all principle both public and private. Let us ever by day see that party spirit can produce such effects, and make the most honorable men forget, for a season, what is due to their own individual character. For our own part we always lament to see any thing like an union between beast ty and deformity, or virtue and vice. No consideration should induce good, or well meaning men to employ wicked instruments in the attainment even of a just end. We might then hope to see, with the progress of time, the gradual purification of the great Augean stable of politics It should never be forgotten that, amongst Christians, the end cannot be allowed to justify the means.

For the amusement of our readers we intend, hereafter, to give a short parallel similar to the one published this week, (which exhibits two distinct characters of Sir Francis Burdett, by his consistent, ci devant, friend Cobbett,) wherein it will be seen that Radicals are inconsistent in the Colonies as well as in England, and to what an extent they are able to gull their simple followers, by the use of a certain slang peculiar to themselves, and an abundant supply of servility.

We perceive by the Observer of Monday last that the animal described in the Strictures on the "Observation on the State of the Colony" published in our first number, has been hard hit; he is now sprawling, in his native element—and the mud flies about by wholesale. It is evident the first shot has taken effect, and that a palpable hit has been given though we could not have been quite sure of the object, when the shot was fired. However, we now see who it is that seems so eager to wear the cap we had suspended. When we made use of the old English adage which declares that "the higher an ape climbs the more he shews his tail," we scarcely anticipated that the figure could prove so truly symbolical. An Ape, as is well known to naturalists, has the facility of sticking se defendendo. If you wound an Ape, or even make him angry, he can squirt a most odious liquid towards his opponent; the contents of a common sewer are not half so offensive as this same liquid—an enraged Ape can soak your house stink for a twelvemonth, and the only way to handle him is with a pair of tongs. A large share of Silk has been thrown our way; but, haply the stains do not attach to us; we shall therefore, abstain for the present, from the punishment we might inflict, and content ourselves with making a few serious remarks written neither in anger nor resentment.

It has been justly remarked that "where there is shame in time there may be virtue." Nothing is more true. The flush which tinges the human cheek is a sure sign that feeling and sensibility are not wholly extinct. But hapless indeed, and truly melancholy, is the case where no symptom of sorrow or repentance can be discerned, when it is quite certain there is guilt.

In the case we allude to, we shall prove there is guilt; and that the officers of Government have been most falsely, unjustly and infamously accused of peculation to an enormous amount;—of "filching from the hard hands of penury" the earnings of their industry, by the most unjustifiable means. We have written twelve strictures, three of which are now published to shew that the pamphlet which is made the vehicle of these serious accusations teems with misrepresentation and falsehood from one end to the other—and no scurility, nor abuse, from one in our eyes so utterly unworthy, shall prevent us from performing a duty so paramount. It is a public, and a truly important question, and we are quite sure that the facts we have to bring forward are eagerly demanded by a large majority of the people of this country. We do not wish to deal in personal and low invective, and we shall endeavor to avoid it as much as possible, and we think the Observer would do much better were he to attempt the task of pointing out any fallacy in our arguments, instead of mounting his dung hill and scattering his filth in every direction. He should remember that it is possible for a Caccatore to be smothered by the rank slew of its own hot shot. We are sensible that our readers can take no pleasure in a contest of abusive epithet. It is a contest we shall avoid as one unworthy of our subject and of ourselves.

PARLIAMENTARY DIGEST.

AGRICULTURAL PETITIONS.

Mr. Lockhart presented a petition from Derbyshire in which the Petitioners were of opinion that, excessive production was one of the causes of the present distress, and that this was one of the strongest reasons why that production should not be increased by foreign importation.

Mr. Jones thought the reduction of one shilling a bushel on the Malt Tax, could only partially relieve the distressed agricultural interests generally. He thought the removal of the duty on Salt a much more effectual relief. The duty on Salt amounting to one million and a half, and the duty on Leather, might be taken off with great benefit to the public. The duty of 6d per lb. on leather pressed with peculiar hardship on the poor who were obliged to wear the thickest leather for their shoes.

MR HUNT.

Mr. Hume presented a Petition from the town of Preston in favour of Hunt. Much of the old ground of the legality of the Meeting at Manchester, and the illegality of the seizure passed on Mr. Hunt was gone over, and a long list of grievances, said to be suffered by this framework radical in his place of confinement at Ilchester, duled forth.

Sir T. Lethbridge rose in defence of the Magistrates of Somersetshire, whose characters had been aspersed in the Petition from Preston. In the course of his speech he remarked that "the hon. Member from Aberdeen was wholly in error, if he thought that Mr. Hunt had been treated with malice or caprice. He was equally wrong if he supposed that that individual was treated as a prisoner sentenced to solitary confinement. The fact was, that when Mr Hunt was first imprisoned, he received indulgences which, he was convinced, no other prisoner under his circumstances would have received; and to that indulgence was to be attributed most of the complaints which they now heard.

SLAVE TRADE.

Mr. Brougham wished to know from the Marquis of Londonderry whether the Cortes of Spain had finally abolished the Slave Trade.

The Marquis of London terry said that no documents had been received from Spain Officially announcing any recent steps taken by the Cortes respecting the slave Trade. He was not aware that any new law was passed upon that subject, but he understood that the Cortes had lately taken a proceeding with a view of rendering more effective the laws already in force against the traffic. The Hon and Learned Member was not ignorant that spain had already abolished the Slave Trade: By a former law the traffic in slaves was made a highly criminal offence; but this law not having been rigidly enforced hitherto, it only remained with the Cortes to make it more effectual.

Febry. 21.

In the House of Lords the Earl of Stanhope found himself obliged to withdraw a petition complaining of agricultural Distress in consequence of the signatures being on a separate sheet, which it appears is a fatal informality.

West India Trade,

In answer to a question from Mr Bernal Mr Wilmot said there was no foundation whatever for the report which had appeared in the public papers, stating that his Majesty's Government had issued an order permitting a Trade between the West Indies and the United States of America. No such order could be issued; because the law which sanctioned orders of that kind had expired six months after the ratification of the Treaty of Peace.

COBBETT, Major CARTWRIGHT, AND SIR FRANCIS BURDETT.

In the Court of King's Bench in England, an action of Libel was lately tried, wherein the famous Political Reformist Cartwright, was Plaintiff, and one Wright the Defendant. The Damages were laid at One Thousand Pounds.

In the course of the proceedings Mr Denman, who addressed the jury on behalf of the Plaintiff, had occasion to animadvert on the character of Cobbett, (who appears to have been implicated in the affair,) as pourtrayed in a political pamphlet, entitled the Book of Wonders which appears sufficiently correct in this particular. Mr. Denman very justly remarks that "if they did authentically state the sentiments of Mr. Cobbett, he could only say, that they exhibited a degree of unprincipled audacity, and of profligate and unfeeling depravity, such as no man had ever betrayed before."

"The book in question was dedicated to her late Majesty, and consisted principally of extracts from the writings of Mr. Cobbett. Cobbett was there stated to have avowed himself on one occasion, to be a swindler, who would not pay his just debts, under the false and contemptible pretext that his creditors had upheld that Government of which he (Cobbett) had personally a right to complain.—Cobbett was here also represented to have told the people of England, that the assassination of Mr. Perceval was a subject of universal joy, and to have spoken with something like exultation of the death of Sir Samuel Romilly. It is also stated that whilst in America, Cobbett made a project of destroying the Bank of England, by inducing persons to commit the crime of Forgery, and to have had the meanness to enter into the details of the manner in which these forgeries were to be carried into effect. He was represented also to have spoken with exultation of the destruction which he was thus to effect, and of the delight which he should feel when an American sixpence should be worth more than a ten pound Bank of England note, and when the ruin and desolation of his country should be universal. "Cobbett's plan was this, to prevent one house in particular, from being pillaged and gutted in a style more effectual and compleat than any thing of the kind had ever been done in a stormed city, on the continent of Europe, during the last war.—Several of the letters were taken in the house.

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

Our relations next in order are those with the two governments of France and the Netherlands. It might be sufficient as respects our existing relations with these states to observe, that they are in perfect concordance with the spirit of the general treatises, and with the maintenance of the best interests of each country respectively. Our intercourse with them, so far as any events since the withdrawing of the armies have led into any, has been that of the most unreserved amity and confidence. It is manifest that in this part of our subject we are treading upon tender ground.—Doubtless our advice, under circumstances in which the French Government, from their persuasion of our experience in the affairs of a mixed constitution have solicited it, has been given with equal sincerity and good will. Doubtless our authority itself has not been refused, where the fermenting ill spirit during the first years of the peace required the indirect control of the expression of our continuing amity in this tone. But, on the other hand, we have cautiously abstained from any language or conduct, by which we might seem to arrogate the right of interference in the internal affairs of France. With still more delicacy have we abstained from assuming any tone of national superiority, and from employing our actual influence in procuring, or even in soliciting, any commercial regulations, which, in the existing spirit of the French people, might increase the difficulties of the king's government. We have never forgotten, that, under some circumstances and in dealing with natures as generous as truly royal, to ask, is to have, however the concession might embarrass the princely giver, and whatever might be the true character of the gift. But considering that the best interest of England is in the maintenance of tranquility, and in the permanent return of religion, morals, and good government, to a kingdom so situated as France, we have passed by all single, and more peculiar objects, in pursuit of the secure attainment and confirmation of the general end. The language of our foreign relations to France has been and is—Let us see you occupy your due state in the system of Europe and we will then, on equal terms, renew with you the race of glory and national wealth.

One of the measures arising from this spirit was the Alien Act, by which we at once performed a duty to sa ards the French government, and exercised an act of mu diate prudence towards our public peace at home. His Majesty's ministers retained in their minds, that the former leaders of the Whigs themselves, Lord Fitzwilliam, Mr Windham, and other names of equal repute, had always entertained a strong apprehension of too free a communication with France—and during the revolutionary war, had always anticipated, as one of the most dreadful effects of peace, an unrestrained intercourse between the bad men of France and the comparative innocence of the English and Irish Reformers. His Majesty's ministers coincided with his Lordship and other Whigs still living on this apprehension. They could not reconcile it to themselves to supersede the lectures of M. Constant to the oration of Mr Hunt; nor to surrender the innocence of Mr. Cobbett, the candour and directness of Mr. Hobhouse, and the truth, the fixed principles, and generous warmth of Sir Robert Wilson, to any possible association with men like Fouche. Though they knew the distinction between laws and manners, between crimes and vices, between acts and opinions, and were aware that it did not belong to governments to make laws against errors and false teachers, they still felt it a duty to guard against the corruption of youth. As regarded France, these considerations were further strengthened by the relative state of the two countries. They could not reconcile it with their sense of duty towards a friendly power to permit a depot of plots and plotters to be established at Dover. Under all these circumstances, his Majesty's ministers conceded to the best precedents, and to the best times, and recommended the Alien Act. The Parliament coincided to feeling and opinion with the ministers, and the act was passed with a large majority in both houses.

John Rumble and Mrs. Siddons.—We believe it is not generally known that these celebrated, may we not say melodramatic Tragedians have been of late resident in one of the finest and most romantic parts of Switzerland. The following extract is from some letters lately published on a tour in that country.—Ed

"At Lausanne, we had the gratification of visiting the great classic hero of our stage, whom we found enjoying leisure and literary ease, and distinguished reputation, amongst all the charms of picturesque nature. His abode is one of the handsomest and most pleasingly situated chateaugnes near Lausanne, commanding a lovely prospect of the Lake and the Alps. The interior unites all the elegance of a foreign villa with the comfort of an English gentlemen's mansion; and we considered ourselves highly fortunate in spending some most agreeable hours with its interesting host, and a selection of individuals eminent in the literary roles of our Country.

Mrs. Siddons was a chief ornament of this interesting circle; and her conversation seemed to have acquired a new warmth and eloquence from the inspiring scenes which she was visiting for the first time. Her descriptions of the sensations she had experienced, and the deep admiration she had felt in witnessing the wonders of Alpine nature, particularly on her first entrance into Switzerland, and her visit to the Alps of Berne, had all the energy of truth and the glow of real sensibility. As we stood in a window of Mr Kemble's Villa, listening to Mrs. Siddons's charming enthusiasm, and joining in her expressions of admiration, the moon was streaming in all her lustre across the glassy lake spread out before the house. The Alps on the opposite bank marked out their dark and jagged outlines on the pure blue of the heavens. It was impossible to behold an evening or a scene of more exquisite and lovely repose; and the society in which we enjoyed it, and by which it was enjoyed, gave an increased zest to its beauties. Lord Byron, who by the way is the best of companions and guides in Switzerland, has seized every feature of a moon-light scene on the lake with his usual power and felicity.

It is the hush of night, and all between
Thy margin and the mountains dusk yet clean,
Mellow'd and mingling, yet distinctly seen
Save darken'd dark, whose caps beigh's appear
Precipitously steep; and drawing near,
There breathes a living fragrance from the shore
Of flow'rs yet fresh with childhood; on the ear
Drops the light drip of the suspended oar,
Or chirp the grass-hopper one good night carol more.

NEW HOLLAND.

Shipwreck in th. South Seas.—There is an account in a New South Wales paper of one of the most remarkable catastrophies at sea probably ever heard of. Our limits will not permit us to give the melancholy and wonderful detail at length. An American whaler had been attacked by a whale in so violent a manner as to occasion the vessel to founder, and most of the crew eventually to perish. A great proportion of the crew had been

SCOTLAND.

A very serious riot has occurred at Glasgow. It happened on a Sunday and the Courier of that place declares it was "the most wanton, daring, and disgraceful sense of violence and destruction which ever disgraced that city." and finishes by observing.—"We hear a constant cry about reducing the military. In Scotland, and in Glasgow in particular, we would not be the worse for a few more."

It seems that the Military did not arrive in time to prevent one house in particular, from being pillaged and gutted in a style more effectual and compleat than any thing of the kind had ever been done in a stormed city, on the continent of Europe, during the last war.—Several of the rioters were taken in the house.

INDEX AT END

90 days at sea, in an open boat, before they were fallen in with, and had experienced the most dreadful of all human vicissitudes;—from the extremity of hunger they had been reduced to the shocking necessity of killing and devouring each other to sustain a wretched life, that was hourly expected to terminate. Eight times had lots been drawn, and eight human beings had been sacrificed; and on that day when these wretched mortals were discovered the Captain and the boy had also drawn lots, and it had been determined that the boy should die! It is no less true than it is horrible to relate that the fingers, and other fragments of their deceased companions were in the pockets of the Captain and boy when they were taken up at sea.

They sailed from Nantucket in the American ship Essex, of about two hundred and sixty tons, G. Pollard, master, on the 19th of August, 1819, on a whaling voyage; they arrived in the South Seas, where they were pretty fortunate, having succeeded in procuring 750 barrels of oil, and were in latitude 47 deg. S. and lon. 118 W. when the accident happened, which was on the 15th of Nov. 1820. On that day they were among whales, and the three boats were lowered down: the mate's boat got stove, and had returned to the ship to be repaired. Shortly after, a whale of the largest class, struck the ship, and knocked part of the false keel off, just abreast of the main channel. The animal then remained for some time alongside, endeavoring to clasp the ship with her jaws, but could not accomplish it; she then turned, went round the stern, and came upon the other side, and went ahead about a quarter of a mile, and then suddenly turning, came at the ship, with tremendous velocity, head on. The vessel was going at the rate of five knotts, but such was the force when she struck the ship, which was under the cat head, that the vessel had stern way, at the rate of three or four knots; the consequence was, that the sea rushed into the cabin windows, every man on deck was knocked down, and worse than all the bows were completely stove in, and in a very few minutes, the vessel filled, and went on her beam ends. At this unhappy juncture, the Captain and second mate were fast to a whale each; but, on beholding the awful catastrophe that had taken place, immediately cut from the fish, and made for the ship. By cutting away the masts, the vessel righted; the upper deck was then scuttled; and some water and bread were procured for the two boats, in which they were compelled to remain, as all thoughts of saving the ship were given up. In expectation of falling in with some vessel, they remained three days by the wreck, making sails, &c. but were compelled at length to abandon it, and stood away to the southward in hopes of getting the variable winds and experiencing fine weather; but the wind being constantly from the east and east south east, they made much lee way, and were prevented from keeping to the southard, in consequence of which, on the 20th of December, they made the island from which Capt. Raine took them.

YANKEE DICTIONARY.

Mr. Editor,

Sir,

I recollect being amongst the number of those who smiled at a very well authenticated anecdote, that was told a few years ago of the famous Lavalette, in order to prove his ignorance of the modern languages. I mean the same Lavalette, whom his wife so heroically liberated from prison, and in whose final escape Sir Robert Wilson, and other English gentlemen were implicated. He was then at the head of the Post office department in France:—

When the Berlin Decree was published at Paris, a deputation of American merchants waited upon M. Lavalette to be informed how they were to carry on their correspondence with their countrymen in America, since the use of the English Language, even in correspondence, was strictly prohibited by an article in the decree.—" Why," said Lavalette with no small surprise at the question, "you must correspond in your own, in the American Language, to conceive what use they could possibly make of my little nations. I began to think, however, that I had come to a fine country, if I could dispose of every little fanciful vagary that flitted across my mind, for such good substantial things as wheat, flour, pork, &c. and I resolved forthwith to become a large dealer and speculator in notions. The English reader will readily guess my astonishment when I found their notions turned out to be pins and needles, the same term applying to all the little knick-knacks in my store.!!!

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM.

It is a very remarkable circumstance, that the Composer of the universally admired music of God save the King should have remained a matter of doubt, which is now completely set at rest in a publication issued by Mr. Clark, of the King's Chapel Royal. He has noticed very candidly all that has been said or published upon it, as giving very satisfactory reasons why they are all wrong; in fact, all who have written and published on the subject have been mere assertions and conjectures without any proof; and in all the printed copies of that delightful music, it has never appeared in the list of any composer's works who has been reported the Composer of it.

In fact, no composer has claimed it, but it has been attributed to them after their decease. Mr. Clark has by indefatigable research and perseverance, for several years past, most completely decided the question and set it at rest, not to be disputed any longer, his name is most appropriate, as it is no other than the national character, John Bull. Mr. Clark has traced back from the records and books of the Merchant Tailor's Company, that it was composed and sung on the wonderful escape of King James the First, from the powder plot, and sung in their Hall by the Children of His Majesty's Chapel Royal on the day when King James dined there, when a grand solemn entertainment to celebrate the event of the King's escape from the Gunpowder plot was given, and it is supposed that the Church Service was performed previous to the entertainment, as the Dean and Sub-Dean were present, and an organ was erected in the Hall upon the occasion, which was on the 16th of July, 1607. Dr. John Bull was first Professor of Music to King James First, in 1607, and played before the King at the above entertainment. It appears by the Merchant Tailors Record that the Master of the Company conferred with Ben Johnson, who was then Poet Laureat, to write some verses for an Anthem, which he accordingly did, beginning with God save Great James our King," and Dr. John Bull set them to music, which is the same so universally admired now George is substituted. The whole will be found applicable to those times; and in Dr. John Bull's M S. Catalogue of Music, No. 56, " God save the King." Another memorable composition was performed at the above entertainment for the first occasion, and set to music as a Canon by Mr. William Byord, one of the gentlemen of the King's Chapel, and it was sung at the King's table for the first time. It is a remarkable circumstance that these two pieces continue to be preferred to all others; in fact, no other have vied with them, and they are both still sung at every festival and public dinner.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

A respectable tradesman's wife formerly of this town, where still reside some members of her numerous family, having lost one out of two and twenty children, at a distant city, where the burial fees are high, actually transmitted the corpse hither, as a coach parcel, in order to its being formally interred in one of our parish churches, which was immediately effected with the accustomed solemnity. —Woolmer's Plymouth Gazette.

BALLAD.

By John Clare.

I dreamt not what it was to woo,
And felt my heart secure;
Till Robin dropt a word or two,
Last ev'ning on the moor.
Though with no flattering words, the while,
His suit he urged to move,
Fond ways inform'd me, with a smile,
How sweet it was to love.

He left the path to let me pass,
The dropping dews to shun;
And walk'd himself among the grass,—
I deem'd it kindly done
And when his hand was held to me,
As o'er each stile we went,
I deem'd it rude to say him nay,
And manners to consent.

He saw me to the town, and then
He sigh'd, but kissed me not;
And whisper'd, " we shall meet again,"
But did not say for what—
Yet on my breast his choice was seen,
And though it gently press'd,
It bruised my heart, and left a pain,
That robs it of its rest.

Song of the Tempest.

(A free translation from the ancient Norse.)

I.

Stern eagle of the far north-west,
Whom that bearest in thy grasp the thunderbolt,
Whose rushing pinions stir the ocean to madness,
Thou the destroyer of herds, thou the scatterer of navies,
Amidst the scream of thy rage,
Amidst the rushing of thy crowd-winged wings,
Though thy scream be loud as the cry of a perishing nation
Though the rushing of thy wings be like the roar of ten thousand waves,
Yet hear in thine ire and thy haste,
Hear thou the voice of the Reim-Kennar.

II.

Thou hast met the pine-trees of Drontheim,
Their dark green heads lie prostrate beside the uprooted stems;
Thou hast met the rider of the ocean,
The tall, the strong bark of the fearless rover,
And she has struck to thee the topsail
That she had not veil'd to a royal armada;
Thou hast met the tower that bears its crest among the clouds,
The battle massive tower of the Jarl of former days,
And the rose stone of the turret
Relying on its hospitable hearth;
But thou too shalt stoop proud compeller of clouds,
When thou hearest the voice of the Reim-Kennar.

III.

There are verses that can stop the stag in the forest,
Ay, and when the dark-coloured dog is opening on his track,
There are verses that can make the wild hawk pause on the wing,
Like the falcon that wears the hood and the jesses,
And who knows the shrill whistle of the fowler;
Thou canst mark the scream of the drowning mariner,
And the crash of the ravaged forest,
And the groan of the overwhelmed crouds,
Yet a the church bath fallen in the moment of prayer,
There are sounds which thou also must list,
When they are chaunted by the voice of the Reim Kennar.

IV.

Though of woe hast thou wrought on the ocean,
The widows wring their hands on the beach;
Though of woe hast thou wrought on the land,
The husbandman folds his arms in despair;
Cease thou the waving of thy pinions,
Let the ocean repose in her dark strength;
Cease thou the flashing of thine eye,
Let the thunderbolt sleep in the armoury of Odin;
Be thou still at my bidding, viewless racer of the north western heaven,
Sleep thou at the voice of Norna the Reim-Kennar.

Old Play.

We think that any philological niciter as to the use and meaning of words would have come with a much better grace, and with more power and effect, from one who had given proof of his own superior knowledge and skill in the application of terms,—in which our author is most lamentably and ludicrously deficient.—We imagine it would be very difficult for him to shew that the word " Grant," when used as a verb, in which signification it is used in all Deeds of the Crown, and we presume in other deeds of a like nature, does not imply that there is a Grantor and a Grantee; and, consequently, that the terms imposed, if any, must come from the Grantor, and be subscribed to by the Grantee before he, the Grantee, can obtain the thing desired.—It would be reversing the order of things if the receiver was to dictate terms to the giver,—he may refuse to receive, should he dislike the terms on which the thing is offered; but, surely, he can claim no lawful right of dictation to the donor.

Whatever encouragement the Provincial Government of Canada, for Colonizing purposes, may have held out—it is very well known that the British Government, at Home does not wish to encourage emigration; especially to this country—as every one who has emigrated must know from the difficulties he has experienced in passing through the Custom Houses, and they " proclaim" no inducements, as this author would make us believe, " to their suffering subjects" which could be at all flattering either to cupidity or ambition, in this particular.—What is promised, indeed, at home, falls far short of what is actually given gratuitously, in Canada. It was Mr Vansittart's object, and the object of the British Ministry in general, to direct the tide of emigration to the Cape of Good Hope; and the circulars, or recommendatory letters, issued from the office of Lord Bathurst directed the colonial Governments to grant no more than Twenty five Acres to each settler; unless, in some particular instances, and this order for Twenty five acres, as may still be seen by referring to a public advertisement, was not confined only to the Colony at the Cape of Good Hope. The circulars were printed, were general, and were intended also, at the suggestion of Mr. Vansittart, for other British Colonies, and this amongst the number If the order for 25 acres was intended for any one Colony in particular, more than for another, it was that of Canada! and we well remember the panic it occasioned amongst the lower orders in this country.

Thus, it must be seen, that there can be no degree of pardon attachable to our Provincial Government, unless it be that it is censurable for exceeding the bounds of generosity pointed out by the Mother Country.—And as to the British Ministry, holding out any hopes that are fallacious; it is no such thing. It is easy to demonstrate the falsehood and wickedness of any assertion of that nature. The words of the printed circulars directing " a Grant of Land from his Majesty, proportioned to the means of cultivation," prove that the intention of Government is to give settlers more or less than what can be brought into cultivation within a reasonable period, and such a quantity of land as may be sufficient for the support of a family. If words so plain, and so easily to be understood, excite hopes that are fallacious, the fallacy cannot, with any degree of justice, be chargeable to Government either in England or Canada.

Again; how is it possible for Ministers to know the amount of property or money which a Gentleman of broken fortunes from the country, or a bankrupt tradesman from town, or a ruined or discontented farmer, or a Scotch pedlar, or an Irish peasant, may bring out to this country?—They have plenty to do without searching into the pockets and packages of such persons, it is therefore natural for them to leave it to the Council here to judge of the quantity of them who apply on land, and it is to the honor and credit of the Council at York, that they have heretofore observed an extraordinary degree of delicacy and liberality in examining into the pecuniary means of those who apply for land. And as they are with a kind of inquisitorial power in this respect, they might put very direct and personal questions, and insist on demonstrations of property, that should be satisfactory to themselves before they gave an order for any land at all. How far this power has been abused is well known to every individual who has been before them; and as there has been no abuse to our knowledge, we have no further comment to make on this head.

It would be not merely absurd; it would be in the highest degree, prejudicial to the interests of this Colony, were applicants in general to receive two, three, or four times more than the quantity of land they could bring into cultivation. What, for instance, could a man, with the limited capital of £100 do with a Grant of 500, or 1000, acres of wilderness? it may be answered that he could sell it:—true, but if it is to be sold at all, is it not manifestly more consistent with justice, and the welfare of the Colony, that Government, who bought it from the aboriginees of the country, should dispose of it? because Government can not only afford to sell it cheaper, but it is certain the money, arising from public sales, would be applied to public purposes.

We have seen a great deal of the land-granting department, and we know that this writer has uttered calumnies of the grossest and most scandalous description; and, when a man is so lost to all sense of rectitude as to tell, what cannot but appear, wilful lies in the face of the public, evidently for the worst of purposes, there is no epithet sufficiently strong to mark his infamy, and such a man ought to be held up to public resentment. Where one emigrant has failed to obtain as much land, according to the terms of the letter which he brought from the Colonial Office in London, as he could cultivate, we are quite sure there are one thousand who have obtained far more than they could possibly bring into cultivation, by their own means, in any length of time; and, we defy either this, or any other writer, to prove the contrary. And we do not know a single instance where a complaint has been shewn his power to cultivate more land than was originally ordered for him in Council, or that he could shew any just right or claim for more, that he has been disappointed, except in the case of Gourlay, who came here this country as a firebrand, and met with a treatment far more gentle and generous than he deserved.

This vast continent is so extensive, and every thing upon it appears on so grand a scale, that it seems to have the effect of expanding the ideas of all sorts of people who come to it; and those who, perhaps, in any other country, would have counted themselves rich in the possession of a few acres of land which they could call their own, here find themselves, according to this author, in abundance, and despair, on 50 or 100, acres of land, which is, to them, an unincumbered Freehold!—Far be it from us to trifle with the misfortunes of others, and to mock at human calamity—It is not the misery, whether real or affected, of any class of emigrants, that occasions these remarks, but the wilful and wicked perversions of the writer before us, who has gone abroad inventing lies, and arranging them into formal statements for the purpose of creating disaffection, and rendering those discontented, and unhappy, who were previously disposed to be fully satisfied and contented. A greater crime than that of poisoning the fountain of Truth we know not.

We believe that we are much better acquainted with the past and present condition of those who take the smaller Grants of Land, than the author of this pamphlet can possibly be, judging, as we can only do, from the facts and statements which he is pleased so gratuitously to lay before us; and we shall proceed to say a few words on that condition, when those persons were in the land of their nativity, and before the visions of future joy and prosperity in Trans-Atlantic regions glanced upon their heated imagination; and, also, when they are snugly seated under their " own vine" and their " own fig tree" in this land of freedom and of abundance.

AGRICULTURE.

Salt Continued.

In some parts of Great Britain, particularly in the neighborhood of the Salt Works, the value of common salt, as a manure, is well known and acknowledged; and it has lately been given in evidence before the select Committee of the House of Commons, by a gentleman of the highest credit, that the farmers in Cornwall are so convinced of the value of salt as a manure,* that whenever the waste salt that has been employed in curing fish is on sale, there is a violent contention among the occupiers of land who shall obtain the largest share. The same gentleman informed the committee, that where wheat or barley has followed turnips, on land which had been salted, the ensuing crop has invariably escaped mildew, although that disease had affected all the corn upon the lands immediately adjoining, on which salt had not been used. The efficacy of salt in destroying noxious weeds, grubs, worms, flies, and insects, is well known in many Districts, and those who are incredulous may easily satisfy themselves by direct experiment. For instance, if a few com-

* There is also a practice in Cornwall of manuring the lands with sea sand, for the sake of the salt that it contains; and so very efficacious is this found to be, that a writer, ninety years ago, computed the money laid out in that and the adjoining county for sea sand to amount to thirty-two thousand pounds per annum; and so much has this practice increased of late years, that Dr Paris considers "the expense of land carriage for sand used as a manure in Cornwall only, as now amounting at least to thirty thousand pounds annually."

mon earth worms be taken out of the ground, and sprinkled with a little salt, they will be seen to wreathe about for a few minutes, and then expire. This salt does, as it were, perform two operations at once, for by destroying the worms and the weeds, while the land lies fallow, it prepares the ground most effectually for the reception of the Corn or the plants, before it can possibly take any effect upon the crop itself. And besides this peculiar advantage, the extreme luxuriance and verdure which common salt gives to grass land when properly applied, would be so satisfactory to such farmers who would make use of it, and so convincing to all the neighboring agriculturalists of every description, that if only one or two gentlemen in each district were to employ it in a few instances, I am certain this mode of top dressing† would very soon engage the attention of every person in the Empire, who had even but a garden to manage and cultivate.

From the evidence which has already been collected upon this subject, it is obvious that a great portion of the land in this kingdom might, by the proper use of salt, be made to produce nearly double the amount of the present crops of Grass as well as Corn. How greatly this would serve the manufacturing, and indeed all other interests of the Country, I need not attempt to explain to you. Moreover, by forcing the land with a sufficient portion of Salt, our Crops would be brought to maturity much sooner than they now are; a matter of considerable importance in the northern parts of this island, where much of the Corn is frequently spoiled by the autumnal rains before it can be sufficiently dried by the sun and wind to stack with safety. And in the hay harvest, should the farmer be induced, from the uncertainty of the weather, to carry his hay too soon, a small quantity of Salt sprinkled upon each layer of the rick will prevent the hay from becoming mow-burned, as it is called, and when hay which has been thus treated is presented to horses and c..., it will be preferred by them to that which has been put together in a more favourable season, and not treated with Salt.

The cleanliness of Rock-Salt as a manure is likewise another considerable advantage. In many cases this circumstance will be found to be very important, particularly in the grazing Districts. It has repeatedly been observed, that if land be manured with dung after the hay has been carried off, the next cattle will refuse to eat the eddish which grows upon such land. On the contrary, if a field be dressed with about two bushels of fine Salt instead of dung, soon after the hay is cut, this inconvenience and loss will be avoided, and a large crop of aftergrass will be obtained, possessing such peculiar sweetness that all kinds of Cattle, as well as horses, will eat it with the utmost avidity.

The farmers in some districts, are accustomed to steep their seed corn in lime-water, and doubtless the practice is often useful; but I am decidedly of opinion that a strong lime, made by the solution of Rock-salt in water, will be more efficacious. Crops of wheat are often reduced one half in value by a disease to which this kind of grain is very liable, called the smut or rust, but when the seed has been properly prepared with Salt, this misfortune can never happen. It has also been proved by some public spirited individuals, who have made the necessary experiments, that the scab is never found upon potatoes which have grown upon land that has had a proper dressing of Common Salt.

In many parts of Flanders, but more particularly at Lisle, it is the practice to preserve the urine of those cattle that eat common salt with their food. This is preserved in appropriated reservoirs, and when the farmers apply it to a certain description of land, which experience has taught them to select, the effect, even without any other manure, is not only advantageous, but it is truly astonishing.

† I think it necessary to remark, that where Salt is used as a top-dressing for grass land, the quantity employed ought to be much less than is commonly used for a round that is to be afterwards ploughed for a crop of grain. Six bushels, or three hundred and thirty-six pounds of Rock-Salt, ground very fine, and regularly sown upon the grass, would be a proper quantity for an acre of pasture land; whereas sixteen or twenty bushels may be used upon tallows for cleaning the grass for a story to the putting in the grain. For meadow-land two or three bushels of crushed Rock Salt may be evenly sown upon each acre, immediately.

‡ The late Dr. Darwin in treating on Salt as a manure, remarks that "as it is a stimulus which excites the vegetable absorbent vessels into greater action than usual, it may, in a certain quantity, encourage their growth by enabling them to take up more nourishment in a given time, and perform their circulations and secretions with greater energy."

Thames East Indiaman.—The Thames East Indiaman lately wrecked on the coast of Sussex, has been hove off the beach, and has gone up to London. A few days before, it was considered impossible that the ship could be saved. It is considered, that this is the first instance, of a ship of this size, having ever been got off, on the coast of Sussex.

Successful Fortune Telling.—Last week some young ladies, who had been taking a walk, were accosted by a gypsey woman, who, for a small reward very politely offered to shew them their future husbands faces in a pool of water that stood near them. Such an offer was too good to be refused, and on paying the stipulated sum, the ladies hastened to the water, each in anxious expectation of getting a glance of the "beloved object;" but lo! instead of beholding the "form and face" they so fondly anticipated, they were surprised to see only their own rosy cheeks and sparkling eyes glancing from below. Sure you are mistaken, woman, exclaimed one of them, "for we see nothing but our own faces in the water;" "very true Mem," replied the sagacious fortune teller, "but these will be your husbands faces when you are married."—Lancaster Gazette.

Death of Mr. Thomas Coutts.

Died, yesterday, at his house, in Stratton street, Thomas Coutts, Esq. Mr. Coutts had attained the advanced age of 87. His life was one of great and useful exertion; he possessed a singularly clear judgment, with a warm and affectionate heart. Few men ever enjoyed, in the degree which Mr. Coutts did, the confidence and esteem of his friends, or obtained, unaided by rank or political power, so much consideration and influence in society. The large fortune which he acquired was a consequence, and not the object of his active life, which, at every period, was devoted to the aid and advancement of those he loved. He died surrounded with friends in the presence of Mrs. Coutts, and his daughters, the Countess of Guilford and Lady Burdett, with their families, and Lord Dudley Stuart, the son of his beloved daughter, the Marchioness of Bute, who is now in Italy, on account of her health.

Mr Coleridge proposes to devote a determinate portion of each week to a small and select number of gentlemen not younger than 18 or 20, for the purpose of assisting them in the formation of their minds, and the regulation of their studies. The plan, which is divided between direct instruction and conversation, the days and other particulars may be learnt by personal application to Mr. Coleridge at High, etc.

DOMESTIC.

We have to apologize to Philo-Veritas for the careless manner in which his able communication on the subject of Col. Nichol's appointment was published last week. The fact is, that it arrived just as the paper was going to press, and it was corrected in a hasty manner. We subjoin an errata for that letter. As the gentleman resides at a distance he is not, perhaps, aware of the late hour in which the mail usually arrives on the day previous to our publication. We shall be always thankful for his valuable communications; but we hope, in future, to receive them at least one mail before the day of publication.

Editorial Commentary.

Our readers will find very important news under the European head in our columns of this week, and a comprehensive digest of Parliamentary debates on one of the most serious questions that ever demanded the attention of that great body; the representatives of the people of England.

We cannot help now expressing our sentiments as to the prospect of a war in Europe. When we reflect on what was the well known policy of the Empress CATHERINE of Russia, towards Poland, and towards Turkey;—when we reflect that all her designs were fully matured, and bequeathed to her successors as a policy and system of aggrandizement by which the Russian Empire was not only to be extended but, as it were, rounded off, and consolidated;—when we reflect on the general conduct hitherto, and the character of ALEXANDER, (which was in truth better known to BUONAPARTE than to any other Sovereign in Europe,) and his vast means, his popularity, the wishes of his army and probably of the whole Russian people, the prayers, the wrongs, the clamors, of the Greeks;—and, above all, the fairness of the present opportunity—we cannot help feeling certain that war will be declared. We have not so soon forgotten the conduct of the magnanimous ALEXANDER, who had professed to desire nothing for himself from the spoils of French conquests, at the time when the Congress of Vienna was deliberating on the fate of Poland. We have not forgotten the manner in which the Prince CONSTANTINE was sent off to Warsaw, with orders to put himself at the head of a formidable army, and take, and keep, possession of Poland—nor the domineering firmness with which, when certain that his brother had already got a sufficient start to execute the orders, the magnanimous Emperor, (who wanted nothing) informed the Congress that its members might save themselves the trouble of any further discussion on that head, for he had taken possession of Poland and would keep it!—After this manner was one of the great objects of Russian policy and ambition secured. Is it then likely that she will suffer so fair an opportunity of further aggrandizement, in respect of the other great object to pass by unattempted—or that the cession of the Provinces of Moldavia and Wallachia will allay the thirst of ALEXANDER'S ambition? We think not—and that nothing short of the annihilation of the Turkish power in Europe will satisfy the mighty Autocrat.

So many interesting objects, so many splendid prospects open to our view as the curtain of this great Turkish Drama rises to our prospective ken, that we feel strongly inclined to indulge in what may be, and to speculate on the grand conceptions with which the womb of time seems to be pregnant. But it must not be;—our limits are confined;—and we must leave the consideration of an Independent Grecian empire, and the consequences of driving the Infidel from Europe, and perhaps, eventually, from Palestine for another opportunity.

We should be wanting in our duty were we to avoid expressing our opinion as to the causes of the present agricultural distresses of the parent state—distresses which commenced immediately on the return of peace, and which have continued ever since. Our opinion perfectly coincides with that expressed so long ago as the year 1816, in that excellent paper, "BELL'S WEEKLY MESSENGER," and it is remarkable how completely the prophecies then declared, as to the long continuance, and perhaps the augmentation of those distresses, have been fulfilled.

The return of peace had the natural effect of restoring things to their original state. Corn does not maintain its price, because there is now as much Corn as is required by the public demand, and because that demand is gradual and regular,—because government, and their contractors, no longer come into the markets, and because the general price of Europe, (from the effect of Peace, however prohibited) necessarily produces its effect upon the English market.

The causes of this distress, indeed, may all be reduced to this. The increase of land in cultivation by means of the capital forced (by high profits) into agriculture, and the consequent increase of annual produce;—and secondly, to the diminished consumption in peace.

"The trade of the Farmer, like all other trades, is a species of manufacture; and his produce, therefore, follows the rule of other manufactures. The market always follows the relative state of the supply and demand; where the stock (as in ordinary cases) is proportionate to the demand, the price is necessarily sufficient to give the Farmer his proper return for his industry, and the suitable profit for his capital. But where this agricultural manufacturer has raised a greater stock than what the demand requires, the market is glutted with his goods, and the prices necessarily fall in the proportion of the superfluity.

And now comes the difference between the farmer or manufacturer of Corn, and the manufacturer of Cotton. The one, finding that he has worked up too much Cotton in one year, works up less in another; the stock is thus reduced to the level of the demand, and the price rises to the same level. But the Farmer, having brought his lands into cultivation must continue this cultivation. The abundance, therefore, or in other words, the plenty, will continue in despite of him, and the price thereby becomes permanently lowered."

The result of this reasoning is, that the present low prices of Corn will certainly continue for some years, because England grows Corn enough for the supply of its population. The farmers, therefore, must not hope to improve their circumstances by any material rise of prices. The immediate and necessary consequence of the present state of agriculture is, that, for many years to come, the abundance of its produce will occasion the continuance of cheap prices. There is but one remedy for the Farmer's distress:—the diminution of his expenses, of his taxes, of his tythe, of his rent, of every thing which he uses in agriculture.

Very much of this reasoning applies to the situation of our Canadian Farmers. Although our taxes are as nothing, and our tythes and rents none at all,—and the capital expended in agricultural pursuits, comparatively small,—yet we produce far more of the staff of life than is necessary for the support of our present population, and the balance of trade is seriously against us. What is to be done and what ought to be done by our Farmers here, will be the subject of an early discussion in this paper.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The manufacturing and agricultural interests do not appear to be satisfied with the plans suggested by government for their relief, and are loud and unceasing in their demands for succour. In Ireland, the White Boys had somewhat abated their outrageous proceedings. "This diminution of crime" says the Courier, "is owing, not to any abatement of their lawless spirit, but to the summary operation of the insurrection act. Aware that their apprehension is inevitable, if found abroad after a certain hour, they now keep in ambush in the mountains, and only detach strong armed parties during the night to provide subsistence.

Notwithstanding the rumours of war, and of revolutions, and of insurrectionary movements, stocks at Paris and in London appear to hold their ground. This at least, is no proof of alarm on the part of their respective governments.

LONDON, March 7.

A very extraordinary phenomenon was caused in the river Thames by the gale of yesterday morning. As it blew from the S. W. and with extreme violence, the entrance of the tide was interrupted for several hours. About one o'clock was the time of flood, by the tables, but at ten in the morning the tide was still ebbing with great rapidity at London bridge. In consequence of this, the water in the river sank so low as to render it fordable in many places. Many persons were seen walking across, and as the bed of the river was exposed in large tracts, valuable articles which had lain there a long period were picked up. This was the case as far out as Gravesend. The water has not been known so low for many years by several feet. Ships were seen aground in all parts of the river below London bridge.—About twelve o'clock the tide began to return, and with a rapidity proportioned to the check it had experienced, the wind having acted as a temporary dam to its progress. Such was the force of the current, that barges and small crafts in great numbers were driven against each other and sunk, or otherwise much injured. The time of high water did not take place till after three o'clock.

March 14.—Upon the subject of the report now current upon the continent of an intended matrimonial alliance between his Britannic Majesty and a Danish Princess, a letter from Aix-la-Chapelle, of the 5th inst. inserted in the French papers, contains the following passage "It is affirmed that on the occasion of the coming marriage of George IV. with a Danish Princess a treaty of alliance will be concluded between England and Denmark, in which certain modifications will be stipulated relative to the navigation of the Baltic. It is not said whether Russia and Sweden will be parties to this treaty."

An order has been issued, dispensing with the services of the militia of the United Kingdom during the present year.

In the House of Commons on the 28th February, after a long debate on a proposition to repeal the salt tax, the house divided, when there appeared 165 for the motion, and 169 against it; giving the small majority of four in favour of the administration; and on the 1st of March ministers were left in a minority of 54, on a proposition to continue the present number of Admiralty Lords. One hundred and twenty eight voted in favour of ministers, and 182 against them. The majorities on keeping up the army establishment were as large as every Stock Exchange, 1 o'clock.—The business doing is immense. Consols have been on a gradual rise during the morning, and the purchases have been most extensive. The price for account is 81. Bets are numerous that consols are done at 85 before the account day, and an expectation is general that the bank will discount at 4 per cent. This is to be taken into consideration at the meeting of the directors to-morrow, and is one cause of the rapid rise in the funds.

It was generally reported at Paris, that George IV. would visit that capital in the month of June.

A report has prevailed in the city this morning that all differences between Russia and Turkey are adjusted, and that Turkey gives up to Russia the provinces of Moldavia and Wallachia.

PARLIAMENTARY DIGEST.

FEBRUARY 21st.

State of the Country.

LORD ALTHORP, considered that the present distress of the Agriculturists must be attributed to excessive Taxation. "It ought to be borne in mind that every Tax, wherever it was laid, and whether it passed directly upon the agriculturist or not, tended to increase the expence of production, and by that means operated against the agriculturist." "Taxation, by raising the price of the necessaries of life, raised the price of labour and the rise in the price of labour is produced, fell more severely upon the agriculturist than upon the manufacturer." His Lordship proposed a diminution of Taxation as the only efficient means of alleviating the distress. He agreed that the surplus, in the revenue, of five millions should not pass to the sinking fund; but go to the immediate relief of the country by repealing Taxes to that amount.

The Hon F. Robinson, complimented his Hon. friend for the manner in which the motion was brought forward. The House would recollect that they were not arguing the question of reduction or no reduction; but whether they were to adopt an immediate and vehement reduction which might endanger the country, by shaking the basis of public credit, or that wholesome and gradual course which would maintain the honor and interest of the country (Hear, Hear!) "They had not for 30 years, had it in their power to argue such a question, as how to dispose of a real and efficient surplus revenue which they actually had in their hands to the sinking fund. They would reduce the expenditure, they would reduce taxation; he felt much pleasure in being able to state that they could do both, and preserve the integrity of that fund.—They could not without the greatest danger break in upon those great establishments upon which the security of the country depended. If gentlemen would but look at the general condition, they would with him admit that it was not distressed. Improvements had taken place in every branch of the revenue, not merely in those articles, which were of a personal and domestic nature, but in those which formed our foreign trade; and this could not have been the case without an improvement in the general condition of the country, for an increase of revenue can arise only from an increase of consumption, and an increase of consumption could not take place without increased means on the part of the people. It is hence that we have an increase of revenue. The Ministers were anxious to have the whole of their conduct made clear, and Parliament would do them that justice which a disinterested attention to the public merited.

Lord John Russel gave credit to the Hon. member (Mr. Robinson) for the way in which he had met the proposition of his noble friend (Lord Althorp.) The general argument of this speaker went against the appreciation of the surplus revenue to the sinking funds, and, indeed, against the benefits generally anticipated from the principle of a sinking fund. Relief to the country was to be given by an alleviation of taxes, allowing to the farmer to obtain a remunerating price on a lower value of the produce, and to enable him to live upon the reduced profits. He did not mean to say that taxation was the SOLE cause of the distress, but that was no reason why it should not be removed, to enable the country to recover. If a horse under a carriage had fallen down, and while the people were taking off the harness to enable the horse to rise, a sage Philosopher should come up and seeing the operation, tell the people to desist from doing so, because it was not the harness which had thrown the horse down, but the stones on the road, he believed the people, although no philosophers at all, would pay little attention to him, but take the harness off, and enable the horse to rise again, (Hear, Hear!) His Lordship spoke much on the nature of a fluctuating currency, "such fluctuations" as he had described "and such great depreciations, in the currency, were calculated to produce effects destructive of the welfare of its inhabitants as perversion and conquest by an enemy, as disastrous almost as plague, pestilence, and famine." He was glad to hear that a better state of things was advancing.

Mr Whitmore said, "that any measure which would go to abolish the sinking fund, would deprive Ministers of the means and power of carrying into effect the desirable reduction in the debt of the country. He could not understand how high taxation could produce low prices, he should rather think it would cause high ones. He was aware that a considerable proportion of the distress arose from the removal of the stimulus of the war. This Gentleman, in the course of his speech mentioned a remarkable fact:—a Gentleman of his in one year, alone, expended £1,500 for manure for his farm. Mr. W. argued against the forcing system and thought that land ought rather to be suffered to be thrown out of cultivation. Wheat could be imported from the Baltic, even without duty, under 60s. the quarter. In summing up a very able speech, Mr W. eloquently observed, "there was yet elasticity enough in the British Character to recover it from the pressure under which it now laboured. (Hear.) It was true, that the horizon was at present overcast, that dark clouds lowered over it; but he was happy to say, that he perceived on their margin a tinge of sunshine, that was neither transient nor illusory, but was the certain harbinger of a brilliant and glorious day. (Hear) When he turned his eye from the domestic relations of the nation, to look at its foreign connections,—when he considered its immense possessions in the East Indies, and the increase of trade which they had naturally created,—when he reflected on the progress that we were at present making in the Eastern Archipelago, and the commerce which must naturally ensue to us from that quarter,—when he examined the golden prospects that had been recently opened to our merchants by the emancipation of South America, he could not sit down in gloomy discontent, nor view our situation as if it were destitute of all hope and consolation."—Loud Cheers.

Mr Price observed, that the right hon. Gentleman opposite had been guilty of one great fallacy, in representing that any man on his side (Mr. P's.) of the House had asserted, that the present low prices were caused by taxation. No such assertion had ever been made. He saw no reason for despair, great as was the debt, and great as were the difficulties of the country, its resources appeared still greater.

Mr. Wilmot.—"Whatever difference of opinion might exist on other subjects, he trusted that there were very few members of that House disposed to deny that the maintenance of the sinking fund, and of the consequent public credit, was consonant to the true interests of the country. He shared the opinions of the Hon. Member for Parliarlington and others, who contended that the people of this country would speedily emerge from that condition which was the consequence of their overstrained exertions. He was convinced that we possessed the elements of prosperity in all the branches of our agriculture, commerce, and manufactures; and that the energies of the country would be soon liberated, and manifest themselves in every direction."

Mr. Wilson thought, that a million and a half out of the four millions to be advanced by the Bank, might be advantageously employed in the purchase of corn, when the average was between 49s. and 55s. to be kept from the market until the average had risen to 60s. This in his opinion would be a great relief to the farmer. It appeared to him most material to keep the poorer kinds of land still in cultivation, which could not be the case unless some such measure as that he proposed were adopted. If these lands were allowed to go out of cultivation, a number of persons would be thrown out of employment, and the burden of the poor's rate would be materially increased. He admitted, that it was possible a quarter of a million, or half a million, might be lost by the operation he advised; but he was persuaded that so way could be point'd out in which the same sum could be made to go so far in the relief of the agricultural distress.

Mr. Hankes approved of the plan described by the Hon. Member who had just sat down, as one that, in his opinion was admirably calculated to relieve the distresses of the agricu lturist.

Mr Tierney evinced his usual acuteness on subjects of finance, in a very ingenious and argumentative speech. He did not approve of the modern sinking fund, but did approve of that introduced by Mr. PITT, in his, (Mr. T's) moments of great solicitude to Mr. Pitt, he had always given him credit for his sinking fund; but the House would observe that was the sinking fund of Mr. PITT, not the modern one. That was a sinking fund which arose, not from taxes purposely imposed for its establishment, but from a fund of one million sterling of a clear surplus revenue over the expenditure. Mr. T. concluded a long and very able speech by observing, that the reduction of taxes, in the present state of the country, would more benefit the public without any injustice to the fund holder, than the application of five millions raised in a season of distress to pay off debt.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer rose, but was for sometime inaudible in the gallery. Amongst the many valuable remarks made by this eminent financier, however, we are able to give the following. Mr. Pitt's sinking fund, had it remained untouched after the operations of 1813, would now have amounted to £17,000,000; but the country would, at this moment, be paying £17,000,000 of taxes for its support. Such a sum would have enabled us to reduce rapidly the public debt, and to perform great financial results. The sacrifice, however, would have been in proportion to the advantage. Instead of being able to remit taxes after the peace, we should now have been labouring under the great burden and unalleviated pressure of 17 millions of taxes. The property tax, and other taxes which had been reduced, would have been necessarily kept up to their war amount. (Hear) It was true that our sinking fund of 5 millions was now small, when compared with 17 millions, but it seemed adequate to the support of public credit, if religiously guarded and properly applied to redeem the debt. Though nominally greater before the late charge, it was never so effective; for it could not be denied that, however great the nominal amount of a sinking fund, the only part of it applicable to the redemption of debt was the surplus of the public expenditure. With regard to the revenue, he had to congratulate the House on it being so flourishing as to enable us to supply the £5,000,000 of sinking fund without difficulty. By comparing the present period with the period between 1786, when the sinking fund was first established, it would be seen how much the condition of the country was improved. With the view to establish the fact that there was little difficulty in the collection of the revenue, the amount of £20,000,000, only £4,500 had been recovered by the Exchequer process. The reduction of taxes, therefore, did not appear a matter of indispensable necessity, and would be thought by all sensible men to be dearly purchased, by any interference with the delicate subject of public credit. Having thus addressed the House as the guardians of the public purse, he would conclude by speaking to them as politicians and statesmen: and he would say, that if public credit was injured or tampered with, the glory and honor of this country had passed away for ever, what he would ask, had elevated us above all other nations? What had given us so much power in the late struggle? What had enabled us to excite and to direct the military force of Europe from St. Petersburgh to Cadiz? He would answer, our public credit. In this respect we had become an example to other nations. France, treading in our footsteps, had now a greater sinking fund, in proportion to her debt than we had; and America had a sinking fund that would redeem her debt in less than 20 years. He, therefore, looked to the House for the exertion of its energy and firmness to preserve this great monument of our strength and security. Never was a more important question submitted to Parliament than that on which they were this night called upon to decide, and on their decision would depend the maintenance of the public faith, the success of the negociation for reducing the 5 per cents which had commenced, and almost all the other financial operations.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT.

TEN DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND.

THE ATTEMPTED COUNTER REVOLUTION IN FRANCE.

By the ship Herald, arrived at Boston, from Liverpool, London papers have been received of the 11th of March, containing the highly important intelligence that every appearance seemed to indicate the approach of another revolution in France. The measures which have been for a long time incautiously pursued, by the adherents to the Bourbon family, to restore the ancient order of things, and which in consequence of the very recent restrictive impositions on the press, have burst upon the nation like a flash of lightning, (if these accounts are to be believed,) have diffused almost universal discontent throughout the country. Complaints were pouring in from all quarters; reiterated attempts were making to oppose the constituted authorities: and, if private letters are to be credited, a revolution had already broken out in the interior, headed by General Berton, who is stated to have assembled a considerable force in opposition to the government, and to have issued a proclamation, containing sentiments hostile to the Bourbon family, and recommending their expulsion. A similar feeling is stated to be spreading throughout the departments, where Napoleon II, is said to have been proclaimed as the rightful sovereign. Disturbances are even said to have taken place among the law students in Paris, and the cries of "Vive le Roi," and "Rien que la Charte," heard among the contending parties. It was necessary to call out the Gen d'Arms before these commotions were suppressed.

That France is at present in a very convulsed state there can be no doubt. The British government had received despatches in great haste from Paris, which were considered of such importance, that Lord Londonderry, who had just sat down to dinner, on hearing their contents, instantly rose and hastened apparently in great agitation to his office. The Courier, alluding to the subject remarks, that "the peril is indeed the greater, because France is literally surrounded with the combustible materials of revolutionary explosion; and that Spain, the North of Italy, and Germany, are so many sources whence the torrent of disaffection to legitimate government may receive inexhaustible supplies."

MOST IMPORTANT INTELLIGENCE.

Received late last night from our Correspondent at Paris

We have just received the following very important communication from our exclusive Correspondent at Paris. From other sources we learn that a general rising against the Bourbons is deemed inevitable. All is suspicion and alarm. Several eminent political characters in London, have had their Paris letters stopped by the French Police. Momentous events are known to be in progress.

"If the Agents of Police have not intercepted it, you will receive a letter by this morning's Courier, throwing some light on the state of things here, and relative to the unanimity that prevails with regard to Benton's operations. I have since written, heard that the fact of his force being dispersed, is doubted by the Patriots; on the contrary, there is a very general belief that he has reached Nantes. If the Ministers were satisfied with the despatches said to have been received from the Prefects, and other authorities, why are they not published?—This is a question asked by all parties. As to those who have prophesied the downfall of the present system, they maintain, that such is the feeling throughout France. If Benton can only hold out ten days, there is no doubt of a general rising; even to morrow's post from the Departments may clear up a number of points which are now involved in obscurity. Meantime the general tone of the Ultra Journals of this day is thought to furnish a conclusive argument in favour of the opinion, that the Patriot General is still in the field.

"It is singular that the proclamation of Benton, has not yet appeared at Paris. I should not be surprised if it reached London before we got it here—so badly are things managed!"

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

The symptoms of war with Russia and Turkey are certainly not less apparent, although we have nothing positive to guide us on the subject. It appears by accounts from St. Petersburgh of the 6th of February, that the Emperor Alexander had given such an answer to the joint notes of the cabinets of London and Vienna, as to induce the latter to renounce the hope of maintaining peace, and abandon their plans of mediation. In answer to this the Russian Emperor returns his thanks to the cabinets of Austria and England for the efforts they have made to establish a good understanding between Russia and the Porte; but he declares at the same time that he cannot rest a passive spectator of the injuries done to the Greek religion by the Ottomans, and their excesses every day renewed. He will be willing to renew negociations, if the Turks will consent to evacuate Moldavia and Wallachia, and name new hospidars. He reserves full and entire liberty to make peace or war, without being willing to admit any foreign interference.

A letter under date of St. Petersburgh, Feb. 4, says, that the manifesto or declaration of war against Turkey, was momently expected. Hostilities would commence with the spring.

As usual we have contradictory statements as to the intentions of these two powers, neither of which in our opinion, are entitled to much attention. A letter from Odessa dated February the 12th, states, that a great number of Russian officers had arrived there with long leaves of absence, from which a continuance of peace was inferred; and it is said to be currently reported on the Exchange at Liverpool, the 13th of March, that Lord Walpole the British minister had arrived in London from Vienna, with a copy of the treaty of peace between Russia and Turkey. On the other hand it appears from the language of Mr. Tierney in the House of Commons, that he believed Ministers were fully aware of the certainty of an approaching rupture. The Chancellor of the Exchequer neither confessed nor denied this statement; on which the Morning Chronicle remarks, that "there is now an almost universal conviction in the best informed circles, that a Russian and Turkish war is inevitable." We are inclined to think that this is the most correct view of the subject.

The Emperor Alexander was looked for at Minsk, to join the Imperial Guards and then proceed to the grand army. It was also rumoured that he was forming an offensive and defensive alliance with another power. These are any other than symptoms of a pacific disposition.

A letter from Odessa states, that the Schah of Persia has refused the intervention of the English Minister, and has issued a formal declaration of war against the Porte.

LONDON, March 8.

The following is an extract on a private letter, which we have received this morning from Paris, in that capital among the best informed persons upon political events, the persuasion is very strong that hostilities must take place between Russia and Turkey, and that the declaration of war by the former Power, will soon be put forth. We can add nothing to this belief, of our own knowledge, either one way or the other; but shall merely lay before our readers the facts communicated by our correspondent:—Courier.

Paris, Tuesday night.—A commercial courier arrived here to day, from St. Petersburgh, which he left on the 17th of February. It was believed at his departure, war was on the point of breaking out with Turkey, for orders were sent to all the armies and the Russian fleet in the Black Sea. The Grand Dukes were gone to the army, and the Emperor and his Ministers were expected to set off immediately.

GREECE.

The Greeks appear to be making every possible effort to secure the advantages which they have gained. The Senate of Argos had declared that the government would always have 80,000 men under arms until the end of the war with the Turks, and the complete establishment of their national independence, and that their maritime forces should be composed of sixty vessels. It is added that the 80,000 men are on foot, and that the sixty vessels are in the ports of the Morea.

A letter from Malta had arrived off the Morea, with troops on board, intended for it is said, to reinforce that country, and to act in concert with another body advancing through Livadia. These attempts to subdue the rising spirit of the Greeks, will not avail the Porte, if their cause is seriously espoused by Alexander, of which there seems to be little doubt.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE

It appears there is no foundation for the rumour that the Caffres had made war upon the Settlers in ALBANY. They have not shewn the least symptom of hostility for above two years past.

The rate of Exchange at the Cape, when our last intelligence came away, was at the unheard of sum of 270 per cent. Think of this ye who are dissatisfied in Canada, and be content! Our present rate of Exchange with England is not more than 10 per cent and this we have thought high.—How sad is man to trample on a present and positive good—whilst he is gazing after some distant, foreign, chimerical advantage be!—There are those in Canada who talk of going to the Cape.—Ed.

A Distressing Case.—Henry Newbery, a lad of thirteen years, and Edward Chidley, aged seventeen, were committed for trial, charged with stealing a silver tea-pot from the house of R. H. Cooke, Esq Gravesend place.

There was nothing extraordinary in the case itself, but it was made peculiarly interesting by the unsophisticated display of Newbery's father.

The poor old man, who it seems has been a soldier, and at now a journeyman saviour, refused at first to believe that his son had committed the crime imputed to him, and was very clamorous against the witnesses—but as their evidence proceeded, he himself appeared to become gradually convinced. He listened with intense anxiety to the various details—but when they were finished, he fixed his eyes in silence, for a second or two upon his son, and turning to the magistrate, with his eyes swimming in tears, he exclaimed, 'I have carried him many a score miles on my knapsack, your honour.'

There was something so deeply pathetic in the tone with which this fond remembrance was uttered by the old soldier, that every person present, even the very gaoler himself, was affected by it. 'I have carried him many score miles on my knapsack, your honor,' repeated the poor fellow, whilst he brushed away the tears from his cheek with his rough unwashed hand; and then continued, 'But its all over now—he has done—and so have I!'

The Magistrate asked him something of his story.

He said he had formerly driven a coach in the north of Ireland and that he had a small share in the proprietorship of the coach. About that time, he married a young woman with a little property, but he failed in business, and, after enduring many troubles he enlisted as a soldier in the 18th, or Royal Irish Regiment of Foot, and went on service with his wife and four children. Henry (the prisoner) was his second son, and his darling pride. At the end of nine years, he was discharged in this country without a pension, or a friend in the world—and coming to London, he with some trouble got employed as a pavisour by the gentlemen who engage the streets at Mary-le-bone.

"Two years ago, your honour," he continued, "my poor wife was wearied with the world, and she deceased from me, and I was left alone with the children, and every night I came home I washed their faces, and put them to bed, and washed their little bits of things, and hanged them to the fire to dry myself—for I'd no money, your honour, and so could not have a house keeper to do them, you know—and, you honour, I was as happy as I could well be, considering my wife was deceased from me; but some bad people came to live at the back of us, and they were always striving to get Henry amongst them, and I was terribly afraid something bad would come of it, as it was but poorly I could live—and so I'd made up my mind to take all my children to Ireland. If he had only held up another week, your honour, we should have gone, and he would have been saved. But now—

Here the poor man looked at his boy again, and wept—and when the magistrate endeavoured to console him he observing, that his son would sail for Botany Bay, and probably do well there—he replied somewhat impatiently. 'Aye is fine talking, your worship—I pray to the great God he may never sail any where, unless he sails with one of Ireland and then, after a moment's thought, he asked, in the most tone imaginable, 'Doesn't your honor think a little bit of a petition might help him?'

The magistrate replied it possibly might, and added, if you attend his trial at the Old Bailly, and plead for him as eloquently in words and actions as you have done here, I think it would help him still more.'

'Aye, but then you won't be there, I suppose, will you?' asked the poor fellow, with that familiarity which is in some degree sanctioned by extreme distress—and when his worship replied that he should not be present, he impatiently rejoined. "Then—what's the use of it? There will be nobody there who knows me—but what stranger will listen to a poor broken hearted fellow, who can't speak for crying?"

The prisoners were now removed from the bar to be committed to prison, and his son, who had kept incessantly all the time, called to him—'Father, Father!' repeatedly, as though he wished him to follow; but the old man stood, rooted, as it were, to the spot on which he stood, with his eyes fixed on the lad; and when the door had closed upon him, he put on his hat, as if unconscious where he was; and crushing it down over his eyes, he began wandering about the room in a state of stupor. The officer in waiting reminded him that he should not wear his hat in the presence of the Magistrate, and he instantly removed it—but he still seemed lost to every thing round him, and though one or two gentlemen put money into his hands he scarcely noticed it.

At length he slowly sauntered on of the office, apparently reckless of every thing.

Resurrection Man in North Wales!—On Friday night, the 8th inst, or early on Saturday morning, the vault of the late Thomas Jones, Esq. of Llantysilio Hall, in the County of Denbigh, was broken into by seven or eight men, with an Attorney and Surgeon, from a neighboring town at their head. The coffins containing the body of the deceased were forced open, the dead on outside, turned upside down, and the corpse trampled upon the ground. The body having been interred on the 12th of December 1820, was of course in a state of great decay, as appeared by the stains and smell left upon the grass, so late as Sunday evening, notwithstanding the heavy rain of that day, and the day before, when the place was viewed by the Clergyman of the parish, and the Church wardens. The only motive we hear assigned for this outrage is, that a person supposing himself interested in a will, had dreamt that one was deposited under the head of the deceased. Upon this vision of a disordered mind, strange as it may appear, an Attorney was found weak enough, and wicked enough, to commit the above outrage. He came prepared with a plumber, masons, blacksmiths, &c. and even two females are said to be present. For obvious reasons, we forbear to mention names at present; but as legal measures are instituted against the parties, who are all well known, we hope soon to have it in our power to give them to the world. The exact state in which the body was returned to the vault is not as yet ascertained, but it is believed that the coffins were left unclosed.

From the London Courier.

Sir Robert Wilson.—Our readers, perhaps, are not aware of the fact, that for several years, the child of Sir Robert Wilson were educated at the charge of his present Majesty, then Prince Regent. The sum of nearly three hundred pounds was annually disbursed from the privy purse, for this purpose, and the last payment was made in 1819. The only reason why it was then discontinued was, because the education was completed; and, if our memory do not deceive us, it is a remarkable fact, that the very year when those payments ceased, Sir Robert stood for the borough, flaming patriot. In two years afterwards, he required the kind efforts of his Royal benefactor, by espousing the cause of the late Queen! We know what some men would call such conduct. Sir Robert himself, we presume, calls it independence.

Poet's Corner.

ROSAS HILL is the highest mountain of Shetland. It is a huge mass of red granite, rising abruptly from a beautiful and placid inland vase of salt water; from the top of which the whole group of Island may be seen lying, like a map, at the feet of the admiring spectator, whose feelings are further excited by the reflection that he is then in sight of the German, the Atlantic, and the great Northern Ocean; that, westward, there is no land between the spot where he stands and the shores of America; and, to the North that there is no land between him and the Pole; whilst the bold and noble air coast of Norway, bounds the ocean towards the East. What heightens the interest of the whole scene is the superstitious veneration in which this mountain is held by the simple and credulous natives, who tell many a wild story of the fairy beings that haunt its craggy solitudes, and lonely lakes. We shall not soon forget our visit to the ruined breast-work or watch-tower, that crowns its topmost height; nor the magnificent prospect that surrounded us, on all sides.

We do not think the author of the "PINARA" has made so much of the picturesque and sublime scenery, nor of the remarkable antiquities, and mild and extravagant legends with which the Zetland Islands generally abound, as he might have done in a work of that kind; yet, we must pay him our tribute of unfeigned admiration for the singular beauty of the picture which he makes his Spirit, NORNA, drawn from this mountain, to illustrate the future destinies of the lovely Sisters, Minna and Brinda, the one of whom is destined to be the fruitful mother of a happy family, while the other is doomed to languish in hopeless sterility and irremediable sorrow. Ed.

NORNA TO BRINDA.

"Untouched by love, the maiden's breast
Is like the snow on Rona's crest,
High seated in the midst of sky,
In bright and barren purity;
But by the sunbeam gently kissed,
Scarce by the passing eye 'tis missed,
Ere down the lonely valley sending,
Fresh grass and growth its coarse revealing
It cheers the flock, revives the flower,
And deck's some happy shepherd's bower.

NORNA TO MINNA.

"Untouched by love the maiden's breast
So like the snow on Rona's Crest;
So pure, so free from earthly care,
It seems, whilst leaning on the sky,
But passion, like the wild March rain,
May soil the wreath with many a stain,
We gaze—the lonely vision's gone—
A torrent fills the bed of stone,
That hurrying to destruction's shock,
Leaps headlong from the lofty rock

THE great majority of the poorer class of Emigrants who arrive in Canada for the purpose of obtaining lands, with the exception of discharged Soldiers and Sailors, are either the Cotters of Scotland, and its Islands; or, the lower peasantry of Ireland. The latter bear the greatest proportion.

The Cotters of Scotland, of the Hebrides, and of the Orkney Islands, are a class of labourers appended to, and living under, almost every large farm—they generally occupy a very small quantity of land, what is barely sufficient, perhaps, to maintain a cow. It is a great privilege if in consequence of having a large family, a Cotter is allowed to keep two cows; besides the maintainance of a cow, they have a potatoe garden and a kail yard, in many instances, in the Orkney Islands, we have seen a Cotter allowed no more than a kail yard, probably not more than about ten yards square, and the privilege of cutting peat, for fuel, and turning a little run of a cow into the hills

In return for these truly important privileges, (which are sometimes sold for the same term that binds the lease of the farm, to which the Cotter is appended, but more frequently of the pleasure of the farmer or landlord) the poor Cottier, his wife, and children, must work for a certain number of days to the year for the farmer to whom the whole family may be said to belong; these working days are taken, as may be naturally expected, in seed time, and harvest and on such occasions as are the most important to the farmer, when the poor people are also desirous of attending to their own little concerns; and, many a time and oft, have we known the whole of their little crops totally lost in a wet and cold season whilst they were compelled to labour for their more affluent master. We do not wish to aggravate the picture, or give it any degree of false colouring; but, certain it is that thousands of Negroes in our West India Islands, who are possessed by benevolent masters, are infinitely better off as to all that concerns the good things of this world, and an easy journey through it.

The extreme poverty of the lower Irish, partly owing to the excess of population, and partly to the system generally adopted of letting out farms to what are called Intakers, or middlemen, has become almost proverbial. The national culture of the potatoe may have probably contributed to the same end, by yielding so largely on so small a surface. An Irish peasant, of the class we are speaking, on his marriage, hires half an acre of ground and a cabin, of which he has undertaken his bride, with a pig brief, to his mother. The whole family, pigs and all, feed on the potatoe crop of this patch of land. The woman is continually spinning, and the man works occasionally: if he can get work, to purchase milk and some stirabout and indifferent clothing. The pigs, fattened chiefly with the produce of "the garden" and the road-side, are valuable enough, in war-time, to pay the middle man his rent; and a numerous progeny start up around this couple, born to the same hereditary modes of existence [illegible] unenlightened, half naked, and improvident, as their parents. In some parts of Ireland, indeed, we have witnessed the most shocking state of poverty in the class of which we are speaking; we have seen men, women and children, more than half naked, in a state of starvation, and covered with filth, creeping on all-fours out of holes in the banks of earth which bounded the high-way; beseeching, in terms the most pathetic, for something wherewithal to satisfy the cravings of a gnawing hunger! Should any one doubt the truth of this, our plain statement of facts, let him read the works of those authors who have written expressly on the subject; and, even from those who desire to look on the bright side of the picture, especially from the exquisite portraits drawn by the Edgeworths, enough may be gathered to corroborate this statement. For our own parts we speak of what we have seen. we have no wish to declaim on a subject so pregnant with facts as that of human misery. We desire merely to shew, in as brief a manner as possible, what is the condition of the Cottier at Scotland, and the peasant of Ireland, in their own country; and, what they may become, here, in Canada, upon one of the smallest Grants of Land, which the author, we are speaking, affects as greatly to despise, and that, too, without any extraordinary exertion on their parts and even supposing them to arrive at the seat of any of the country-land boards, (one of which is held in each District where there is any land for location,) without a single shilling in their pockets.

AGRICULTURE.

SALT, CONTINUED.—The most undeniable evidence has been afforded, that common salt promotes digestion in horses and cattle, and that this occasions them to make a rapid progress in fattening. It has also been found, that in feeding with chaff or cut straw, a larger quantity of this cheap and ordinary food can be given when sprinkled with salt, than can be administered any other way; and that as the filling the stomachs of cattle while fattening is a circumstance of the greatest importance, a very large portion of chaff if seasoned with salt, may be given with the utmost advantage to the growth and health of the animals. That every experimental grazier knows, that an abundance of very ordinary food, if eaten with a relish, will fatten cattle much sooner when given with a small allowance of substantial provender, than better food alone in a moderate quantity. There is indeed hardly any food that can be offered to cattle, which if mixed with salt will not be eaten with eagerness. Hence, nothing can be of more importance to a practical grazier than to know how to obtain this valuable saline mineral substance, at a cheap rate and with little difficulty.

It was given in evidence last year, before the select Committee of the House of Commons, that in feeding cattle, fourteen pounds of Chaff, such as is produced in winnowing corn, and which of itself is of little or no value, will, when properly moistened and heated by steam, and mixed with two ounces of salt, save forty-two pounds of turnips. Surely this is a most important circumstance in the economy of a farm. Is it possible that this fact should pass unnoticed by any agriculturist?

It cannot then be doubted that salt when judiciously administered to live stock, assists their digestion, preserves them from disease, and improves their condition; and from the evidence to be hereafter adduced, it will appear that the milk and butter from those cows which have salt given to them is more abundant, and never acquires that turnip flavour which is generally so predominant in the milk and butter from those cows which are kept upon turnips without salt. It has likewise been proved that common salt is a certain cure for the bots in horses, and is a specific against the rot in sheep; and the wool is materially improved of such sheep as are fed with salt.

It is impossible, I conceive, to read the great body of evidence which was delivered to the Honourable the Board of Trade, and to the Committee of the House of Commons, without being convinced that the benefits resulting to the grazier and agriculturist, from the employment of salt, must be great and important; especially the evidence of JOHN CHRISTIAN CURWEN, Esq. the representative in parliament for the city of Carlisle, who is himself a large farmer and grazier, and who stated to the Committee that upon a farm of one thousand pounds a year, he could not estimate the annual advantages that might fairly be expected from the free use of salt, at less than three hundred pounds.!

BUTTER.—The following is given as an improved method of preventing the bitter taste which Butter has at this period of the year, from cattle feeding on turnips, cabbages, leaves of trees, &c. Boil two ounces of saltpeter in a quart of water, and put two or more spoonfuls, according to the quantity of milk, into a pail before milking; if this is done constantly, it will prevent the taste of turnips, but it will not be effected if even once neglected. This has been proved by twenty years experience, and if it does not succeed, the farmers may rest assured that the fault arises from the dairy maid.

ORDER.—Mr. MacDonald, gardener to the Duke of Buccleuch and Queensbury, at Dalkeith, has communicated to the Caledonian Horticultural Society, an important improvement in the Culture of Onions. As soon as the seed leaf attain a proper size, he chooses a moist day, takes up the plants, and after immersing them in a puddle composed of one part soot and three parts earth, transplants them (drilling) about four inches asunder, in rows, and afterwards carefully hoes them with any kind of hoe, and the root equals in size the best Spanish Onion, heavier for its bulk and more pungent. Were the Onion is cultivated on a large scale, boys and girls may be employed in transplanting them at a cheap rate.

LINEN.—M Naude, Physician to Louis XIII says, that the ancients, though they had no Linen to make paper, had a knowledge of hemp as an herb, but did not apply it to that purpose. Rapeldis, at the end of the third book, mentions some under the term Pentagullion, as a newly discovered plant, which had not been in use above a century. In the time of Charles VII, linen was scarce, and the Queen only had two shifts of it.

NEW MACHINE.—Mr. Kuhalewski, a Gentleman of Warsaw, in Poland, has invented a portable Machine for cleaning grain, which in separating the grain from the ear, breaks neither the grain nor the straw. A single man by this machine can do the work of some dozens of common labourers. The same able mechanic has contrived a sawing mill, to work by hand, and an astronomical watch which indicates the time in various parts of the globe. The Emperor Alexander has sent to the inventor a magnificent snuff box, and has furnished him with funds to carry on his useful labours.

The following is in circulation as a sketch of the plan of Lord Byron's Parody of Mr. Southey's "Vision of Judgment."—Mr. Hone, who is in religion and politics rather takes the lead of his Lordship, has already parodied the same work with some success:—"The Parody places the Spirit of a revered Monarch at the Gate of Hell, where Satan and the Archangel hold a long argument respecting its final disposition. The situation and colloquy, as offensive to every good feeling, is attoned by the interposition of the Soul of Mr. Southey, which offers to unite the Devil's Biography in two volumes duodicimo. The Devil rejects the proposal, and the Laureate Soul makes a similar tender of its literary services to Michael, who also declines them. Other particulars have been mentioned to us, but they are not worth repeating, especially as we are not certain of their authenticity."

LORD BYRON.—A letter, in the London Courier, from Pisa, of Dec. 21, states:—In the Romagna several persons have been arrested as Carbonari. Among those banished is Count Gambi, from Ravenna. The Count has come to Pisa with his daughter, Signora Guccicoli; and the celebrated Poet, Lord Byron, the friend of the latter, immediately fo lowed her. Even after the separation of Signora Guccicoli from her husband, he had lived in the house of the latter, paid 1,500 scudi for lodging, and spent, perhaps, 50,000 scudi annual-ly, especially in charity. In public, he appeared so seldom, that Englishmen often paid a Louis d'or to see him secretly, through the latticed windows of a neighbouring house. The Magistrates of Ravenna have earnestly solicited the pardon of the Count, and the Legate has supported this petition to his Holiness, only for the purpose of having back the celebrated, and generally respected guest.

Origin of Newspapers in France, &c.—De Saint Foix in his historical essays gives the following account of the introduction of Gazettes:—Theophrastus Renaudot, a Physician of Paris, picked up news from all quarters, to amuse his patients; he presently became more in request than any of his brethren; but as a whole city is not ill, or at least don't imagine itself to be so, he began to reflect at the end of some years, that he might gain a more considerable income by giving a paper every week, containing the news of different countries. A permission was necessary, he obtained it, with an exclusive privilege in the year 1632. Such papers had been in use for a considerable time at Venice, and were called Gazettes, because a small coin called Gazetta, was paid for reading them.—This is the origin of our Gazettes, and its name, about ten years afterwards, they were common in England, by the name of Mercuries.

Editorial Commentary.

Expecting, almost hourly, to receive intelligence of the greatest importance from Europe, we shall defer all comment on the present truly critical state of affairs in respect of certain Great Powers, until our next, and in the mean time furnish our readers with the following general

SYNOPSIS OF ENGLISH AND FOREIGN NEWS.

The intelligence from Ireland can scarcely be called favourable. In the county of Limerick, several outrages have been committed by men with their faces blackened, and dressed in women's clothes. In the county of Cork, the peasantry are giving up their arms and returning to a state of tranquility.—George IV. has given up £30,000, which is ten per cent, of that part of the civil list which is allotted to his personal expenses.—It is rumoured that the Lord Chancellor is anxious to retire from the fatigue of his high official situations after the termination of the present session of Parliament.

The report of the death of Ali Pacha, is again repeated in advices from Constantinople. The sight of the head of the Pacha, said to have been cut off, and presented to the Sultan, is stated to have given him great satisfaction. The bloody trophy has been sent to the Grand Seignor at Constantinople.—The Turkish troops continue to be reinforced in Moldavia, where they are now 40,000 strong.—The Ottoman fleet, commanded by Captain Bey, is in the Archipelago, with 10,000 men on board, destined for the Morea.—Letters from Odessa say, that contracts are making there for the supply of the Russian Armies.—Couriers are constantly passing between all the great Courts of Europe.

General Berthon, not Benton, had been searched for in the woods of La Mielleraye, but in vain, he is supposed to have left the country.—other reports say that he was seen with some of his adherents near Rhennes.

The Hon Gronge Cannig is appointed Governor General of Bengal.—A Society has been established in London for the purpose of promoting the education of the Irish through the medium of their native language.—It appears by the last London Traveller, that the gold coined in 1821, amounted to £9,520,758 13s. 10d. sterling.—Passage boats had made their first trip on the canal near Edinburgh, they are named the Flora Macivor, and Die Vernon.—Sir Samuel Achmuty is to assume the command of the military forces in Ireland, —Large purchases of flax and hemp have been made at Riga for the English navy.—Contracts had also been entered into at the same place for ship timber, to be sent to France in the course of the summer.—At Lancaster Castle, from thirty to fifty pieces of Manchester cottons are worked off per week. The amount of earnings for the last year is stated to be £800. —The affairs of the banking house of Mr. Coutts, have been made up since his decease, and it is said there is a balance of £670,000 due to Mrs. C which sum will be proved under the will.—The students in the medical and law schools in France, appear to have been the most active in exciting the late disturbances.—At Limerick thirty-one prisoners have passed from the County Gaol, for trial; they were marched two and two, and fastened together by a long iron chain. Their number and solemnity was really an awful sight.—The King of France has issued an ordinance for the encouragement of the French Fisheries.—There had been no rain at the Cape of Good Hope for the last two seasons. The settlers had suffered greatly in consequence.—The latter part of Feb. Hudson Bay Stock was sold in London at more than a hundred per cent. advance.—It is confidently affirmed that an association has been discovered at Warsaw, which has communications with the secret societies of the South of Europe. Two important personages have been arrested.—A new work by Mr. Washington Irving, author of the Sketch Book, called Bracebridge Hall, has been bought by Murray for 1000 guineas.

Parties of 2 or 300 men march about the County of Norfolk, England, to destroy those agricultural machines which abridge human labour. Many new threshing machines have been broken to pieces. Some of the offenders have been arrested.

Intelligence has been received at Philadelphia from China, that the British frigate Topaz, Capt. Blackwood, had fired upon the Chinese village of Linten. 20 miles above Macao, and had killed and wounded 13 Chinese. It appeared that the frigate's boats were on shore watering, when a fracas took place between them and the natives, who had attacked the seamen with bamboos, &c. Capt. Blackwood was induced to open a fire in order to cover the retreat of his men.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Fresh outrages continue to be committed in Ireland. The insurgents attacked the mail coach on its way from Waterford to Limerick. There were two gentlemen passengers; Miss Wilson, the celebrated singer, and a Miss Ryan. The latter was carried off, but no other violence was used, nor was any attempt made to plunder the coach or passengers.—Miss Ryan it appears, was on her way to prosecute a man who had attempted to force her into a marriage, and who was in prison for the offence. The carrying her off was with the view of preventing her evidence, in which, however, the adherents of the accused were defeated, as the young lady was rescued some hours afterwards by a detachment of troops. A man who had given evidence against the White Boys, had been murdered; his body was found under a heap of stones, horribly mangled. The criminal calender of Cork amounted to the unprecedent number of 350.

Large purchases of flax and hemp have been made at Riga for the English Navy. Contracts had also been entered into at the same place for ship timber to be sent to France in the course of the summer.

The new Governor General, Mr Canning, sets out immediately for India. The Active frigate, Capt. A. King, was fitting out at Portsmouth to convey Mr C. and suite. Mr. Ellis had been appointed his Secretary. A subscription had been set on foot at Liverpool for starting a popular candidate to represent that borough in parliament, in the place of Mr. Canning. Cobbet, it is whispered, means to offer himself!

FRANCE.

The accounts brought by this conveyance relative to the state of matters in France, evidently justify a persuasion, that that country is in a very critical state. The affair at Rochelle turns out to have been of a more serious nature than was at first suspected, and quantities of arms are stated to have been seized at Brest and at Paris, belonging to the opponents of the present system. In the Chamber of Deputies, General Gerard, in a speech on the Budget, and alluding to the causes of the commotions, eulogised Napoleon, whom he denominated "the immortal captain, whose name will go down to posterity with those of Alexander and Cæsar." This allusion excited a storm of applause and murmuring; on which the General said "pardon, gentlemen, I thought a word of that old French army might find an echo in this chamber, which so many of its trophies once decorated."—To this General Foy replied—"Patience, the time will come again."—Other members, on the right exclaimed, "No never."

General Berthon is still at large, and it appears no little was known of him in Paris and London, as is in New York. The capital of France was so surrounded by troops and spies, that ingress or egress was equally attended with difficulty. Passports, stated by M. Girardin in the Chamber of Deputies, were only obtained after a most minute investigation, especially by those travelling as merchants, that being said to be the disguise of the missionaries of revolt now traversing the provinces of France. The police, though not in the same hands, is stated to be conducted on the principle, and with a degree of rigor even surpassing, what constituted so prominent a feature of despotism under Bourparte. A merchant of Rouen, whose business required his presence every fortnight in Paris, was lately arrested in consequence of travelling post without a passport; nor was it without the aid of friends, to vouch the truth of his explanation, that he was released; and this the ministers and ultras justified, on the ground of the activity and numbers of the conspirators, and the generally disturbed state of France.

If these are not symptoms of a revolutionary character we do not understand what the word revolution means.

Chateaubriand, who some months ago, was appointed ambassador to London, is at last announced to have received definitive orders to proceed on his mission.

TURKEY.

Circumstantial accounts of the death of Ali Pacha are again reiterated in letters from Constantinople, dated the 25th February. His head is said to have been exhibited on the gate of the serai on the 24th, where it was to continue for three days.

The same letter states that the French Ambassador, who, was to have had an interview with the Turkish authorities on the 18th February, declined the honour until a final answer had been given to the late propositions of Lord Strangford and the Austrian Internuncio. The former had an audience on the 16th, when dispatches received by an extra courier, in 12 days from St Petersburgh, were laid before the Divan. Two Greek vessels from Odessa, with grain, had been detained; they had attempted to pass under the Neapolitan flag, but were detected.

A postcript to this letter, announce the firing of guns at Constantinople on account of the birth of a boy of whom one of the Sultanas was delivered that morning.

GREECE.

Accounts from Ancona of the 11th of March state, that advices had been received there by a vessel from Calmata of the Turkish fleet having entered the Gulf of Lepanto, where it was descried by the Greek fleet, which immediately sailed in pursuit. Subsequent accounts from Trieste, state that the former were defeated with the loss of 25 small vessels. This part of the intelligence rests on the authority of the commander of a vessel who had arrived at Trieste, and who declared that he was an eye witness of the engagement. The Greeks are stated to have had seventy-five sail, and the Turks only sixty. If this statement proves correct, and it has all the appearance of being so, the independence of the Greeks may be regarded as secured even without the aid of Russia, and certainly in opposition to the wishes of the English ministry, and, perhaps, those also of Austria.

Ali Pacha.—Of the death of Ali, some interesting particulars are given in the Journal des Debats of Sunday, on the authority of a letter from Corfu. His immediate fall is there ascribed to a pestilential disorder suddenly appearing within the fortress on the lake, which excited so much terror, that the Albanians, until that time faithful to their Chief opened the gates on the 2d Feb. to the troops of Chourschid Pacha. On this Ali took refuge in a stone chamber, of peculiar construction, in the southern part of the fortress, beneath which were deposited a considerable quantity of treasure, and sufficient gunpowder to blow up the place. In this vault Selim, a faithful slave, constantly kept watch with a lighted match, ready to execute the orders of his master. On the 5th of February, Ali, cajoled into confidence by a promise of pardon from the Sultan, ordered Selim to extinguish the match. Immediately the Turkish troops forced the apartments, in which Ali lost his life, having received four pistol shots in the head and abdomen. Athanase Vaga, his Minister, perished by his side, being literally hacked to pieces. It is supposed that Ali could not have been subdued, had he been in possession of the unfortified island, in the middle of the lake, but which had been previously occupied by some Greek sailors of Hydra, in the service of Chourschid. The Suliots took no part on either side, although they had offered their services to Ali, who rejected them with indignation. A comparatively inconsiderable quantity of treasure was found in the citadel, not exceeding 12 or 15 millions, the numerous chests in which his gold was kept, are said to have been emptied into the lake, and, that, in order to conceal the exact place at which they were immerged, all the boatmen employed in executing his orders had been killed. On examining his papers, many interesting documents were found, and which are stated to have been transmitted to Sir Thomas Maitland.

NOTICES

Literary and Political.

The marriage of George IV. with a Danish Princess, daughter of the present King of Denmark, and aged only 29 years, continues to occupy the attention of the London Editors.

His Majesty is said to have written a letter to his sister, the Landgravine of Hesse Homburgh, in which he states that he means to proceed for the continent in the month of June next. Preparations are already making for his reception at the court of Homburgh. His Majesty proposes visiting the Courts of Vienna and Berlin, whence he will repair to his Hanoverian dominions, and take the waters of Pyrmont, which the physicians have recommended. The British Monarch is also expected at Dramstadt, and several new Operas, in congratulation of his presence, are already under rehearsal at the theatres at that Court.

Sir John Sylvester, Recorder of London, died suddenly at an advanced age. He was found dead on his bed by his valet. The day preceding, he dined with the Duke of York, and a party of friends, and was then observed not to be in his customary health and spirits.

Sir Alexander Boswell, Bart. of Auchinlay, was dangerously wounded in a duel with Mr. Stuart of Duncarn, both Scotchmen. Their seconds were the Earl of Rosslyn, and the Hon. John Scudamore, brother to the Marquis of Queensbury. The duel originated in some squibs which appeared in the Glasgow papers.

Fifty thousand olive trees have perished by the frost in the department of the Var in France.

Accounts from Madeira, of the 12th February state, that the soldiery had, in a tumultuous manner, taken possession of the island, and pointed the guns at the fort of the town. It is said that the writings of one of the priests is the cause of it, censuring the conduct of the soldiery during the revolution in Portugal. The soldiery seized the priest at his residence, dragged him, and left him nearly in an expiring state. He afterwards applied to the Governor for redress, who censured the soldiery; it was feared they would rise against the local authorities.

It is rumoured that the principal of a famous distillery in Paris, is about to establish himself in London, to distil brandy from potatoes, by a process which has succeeded in France, but which he was there obliged to relinquish on account of the high duties laid on to protect the vinegrowers. The brandy made was accounted as fine flavoured and wholesome as that distilled from grapes.

Trade.—We learn from authentic sources of information, that the trade in the manufacturing districts in England is unprecedently brisk. All hands are more busily employed than usual. The quantity of goods which are brought forward exceed any thing ever before known, and the moment they are manufactured and produced in the market, they are bought up and carried off for home and foreign markets. In this city, also, we learn, that the export trade is great. We are informed by Excise Export Officers, that they have not been so busily and urgently employed for several years, as during the last three weeks. The river at the Broomielaw is usually crowded with shipping, busily employed loading and unloading. Many of these are vessels of considerable burthen from foreign countries, and such as 20 years ago, the citizens of Glasgow could not possibly have dreamed would have been seen at the port of this city.—Glasgow Courier.

Slave Trade.—A letter in the Royal Gazette of Sierra Leone, dated the 24th Nov, gives the painful intelligence that many of the French vessels engaged in the coast, in the horrid traffic of human flesh. Most of these were fitted out and equipped at Nantes, a certain evidence of the indifference (to use the mildest term) shewn by their Government towards the prevention of that traffic, for the manner in which they are fitted sufficiently indicated the only trade to which they were applicable. The number of French slaves were actually engaged in the coast, and indeed the vessels at present on the coast, and indeed the arrivals of the masters and supercargoes, too plainly testify, that France, profiting by our treaties with the other powers, has become the carriers of slaves for those nations, and thus reaps the enormous gains produced by this odious system. One of the French schooners boarded (says the writer) was a mere boat, though she had on board 153 slaves, literally packed together; these poor creatures were in a truly pitiable state; and by their most expressive cries and gestures towards us, evinced their anxiety to be released.

At the first days sale of books by public auction, belonging to Mr. Perry, late the Editor of the London Morning Chronicle, "The Beauty of Women," a poem of only six leaves, small 4to. sold at sixteen guineas, being £2 16s. sterling per leaf. A number of other unique productions, were eagerly sought after, and brought corresponding high prices. On the second day Biblia Sacra Latina, the first edition of the holy scriptures, and the first book executed by the inventors of printing with moveable types, was knocked down at one hundred and sixty guineas, supposed to be for the Duke of Sussex. A collection of old ballads, originally published at a penny a dozen, brought nine guineas. Sir Walter Scott is named as the purchaser.

Mr. Cohen editor of the Exchange list, has in the press, a work on the public debts and finances of foreign states, including a compendious view of the increase and present state of the British national debt.

The life of Mr. Adam Blair, minister of the gospel at Crossmeikle, also in the press, is expected to make as powerful an impression on the public mind as any work that has lately appeared, and is said, not unlikely to become the Scottish Vicar of Wakefield.

A line of communication from London to Portsmouth, by means of telegraphs, takes place directly. They are to be under the direction of Naval Lieutenants.

Queen Caroline (wife of George II.) wished to shut up St. James's Park from the people, and asked Sir Robert Walpole what it would cost to do it. He replied, "only a Crown Madam."

Important to Assignees of Bankrupts.—In the Court of Chancery, last week, a petition was presented on behalf of a bankrupt, praying for his discharge out of the custody of the Sheriff of Middlesex, by whom he had been taken at the suit of the assignees of his estate. The Lord Chancellor ordered his discharge, and said, that a bankrupt having conformed to all the regulations of the bankrupt laws, in surrendering the whole of his estate to the Assignees, could not be held in custody for the cost of any proceedings in his affairs.

Canine Sagacity.—In the services, perseverance and affectionate attachment of the dog, we have daily proofs of his sagacity, but the following, communicated to us by a respectable correspondent, furnishes, we believe, a very uncommon trait in the character of the cat:—On the 9th of November, Samuel Sparks, servant to Mr. John Cox of Peddington in the parish of Berkeley, in this county, brought a fine large tabby cat in a waggon, from Mr. Isaac Hillier's house at Newmarket (a distance of 15 miles,) tied up in a bag, as a present to Mr. Cox, who kept her three days in his house, when she made her escape, and actually returned to her native home that day six weeks, and in much better condition than she left it.—Gloucester Herald.

A gyr falcon was lately shot near Parham, by Lord de la Zouch's keeper, the wings of which measured nearly four feet. This bird being a native of the cold and dreary climes of the North, is but seldom found to the south of Norway, Iceland, and the northern parts of Russia. The prevailing colour of its plumage is a dusky brown and spotted, the feathers on the legs below the knees are of a pale blue, and very strongly made. Its migrating so far to the south, renders the above a singular occurrence.

Died, lately in the city, ——— Stewart Esq. well known in the metropolis by the designation of walking Stewart. This singular man was originally educated at the Charter House, and afterwards went to India, as a writer in the service of the Hon. East India Company. He was employed as Secretary to the Nabob of Arcot. At length having acquired moderate means of subsistence, after trav- lly striking—the wide river of fire ran on in majes slow ness ; innumerable pale torches were seen sting its sides, on which some bold and curious ns seemed every now and then to be tread ng; the flames were reflected across the bay, and rew a stirring figure on the buildings, and on the es of the quarters of spectators, who had gather- ed on the Molo, Santa Lucia, and other open places, to gaze at the magnificent conflagration.

On Monday (25th of Feb.) the eruption was much ess considerable ; in the evening, the Princess of Partano, the King's wife, ascended to the hermi age of San Salvatore. On Tuesday (26th) loud rumbling noises were heard in Naples, at very short intervals, during all the day; the quantity of smoke which issued from the volcano was s great that the sun was quite discoloured ; its re flex was of a murky red tint, and the atmosphere was heavily clouded. Religious processions were made in the little towns at the foot of the mountain, which have so often suffered from their dangerous neighbour. Towards evening, as appearances pro mised a good night's work, we set off from Naples to view the operations nearer ; the road to Resina was covered with people going and returning, like a fair ; when we reached the spot where strangers are, on common occasions, surrounded by guides, and asses and mules, to conduct them up the moun tain, we found that no animals were to be procur ed, and it was with difficulty we could get a stupid old man for a cicerone, who rendered us no other service than carrying a torch. The ascent was thronged with people, some pushing on eagerly to the objects of their curiosity, and others return ing and discussing what they had seen ; far below San Salvatore we saw the stream of fire rolling a long a wide hollow, and approaching the path by which we were going up ; it was then, however, at a considerable distance, and its course was very slow. On reaching the hermitage we refreshed ourselves, as well as the crowd there assembled could permit, we then continued, and for short ness traversed the Lava chiefly formed by the erup tion of January, 1821 ; we reached the foot of the cone just where the stream was descending ; we found it about thirty feet wide ; it was not li quid lava, but composed of ashes, ignited stones, and old masses of volcanic ejections, swept away in its course and heated again ; these lumps rolled over each other, producing a strange clinking noise ; some of them were of very great size and the whole stream, though descending a steep cone, moved but slowly. Beyond this principal stream, midway up the cone, was an opening, whence ve ry large stones and other burning matter were con tinually thrust out ; this mouth fed a scattered stream, proceeding (like the principal one) from the crater ; they both united with the main body in the deep hollow below, and rolled on towards the road which leads from Resina up to the hermitage. The quantity of spectators standing by the sides of this burning river was astonishing ; we, with a great many of the most adventurous, determined to ascend the cone ; we therefore passed a little to the left of the great stream, and began to scramble through the deep loose cinders and ashes which co ver this part of the mountain, and render it at times a most fatiguing climb. A little path or tract formerly existed, in which the guides had laid masses of lava to facilitate the mounting, but it was just in that line that the present eruption de scended, and we were in consequence obliged to go up over the sand and cinders, in which we stuck up to our knees, and at every three steps lost one on an average. After a most breathin toil of an hour and a half, we found ourselves with a few others, on the edge of the grand crater ; hence the coup d'œil was terrifically sublime ; the flames rushed out of the mouth and threw themselves in the air in a broad body to the elevation of at least a hundred feet, whilst many of the fiery stones flew up twice that height ; the flames fell back into the mouth and then burst out again, as though impelled by a fresh impulse, like the blast of a bellows ; in the descent some of the stones and lumps of cinder returned into the mouth, but the greater part fell outside the flames like the jets of a fountain. While we were standing on the exposed side of the crater, very intent in observation, all of a sudden the volcano gave a tremendous roar ; it was like the crash of a long line of artillery, and was instantly succeeded by such a discharge of stones as we had never before seen, at the same moment the wind, which was very high, gave an irregular gust, which directed a good part of the stones towards where we were posted; our situation was for a minute or two very perilous, but there was no shelter near, and we stood still, looking at the descending shower which fell around us ; we, however, happily sustained no other injury than a short alarm, and having some ashes dashed in our faces by stones which fell near us. Two or three gentlemen who were ascending the cone after us, were not quite so fortunate, for many of the stones falling outside of the ridge, rolled down the side with great velocity, loosening and carrying with them lumps of cold lava, &c. some of which struck those persons on the legs with great violence, and nearly precipitated one of them headlong to the foot of the cone.—After this we thought we had seen enough, and turned to go down ; the descent is as easy as the ascent is difficult, the cinders and ashes slide away beneath the feet ; nothing is necessary but to step out (the quicker the better) to keep one's equilibrium and to avoid the fixed or large stones and pieces of lava—we were not more than ten minutes in reaching the point, whence it had taken us an hour and a half to mount. In coming down we were struck with the strange appearance of the torches of companies ascending and descending ; they formed a pale wavering line from Resina to the hermitage, and thence to the cone they were scattered about in thick and fantastic groups. On reaching the hermitage we found it so crowded that we could not enter ; the large flat around, was covered like a crowded fair, by people of all nations and of all ranks, from the beautiful countess of Fiquelmont, wife of the Austrian Ambassador, to the Austrian serjeant and his wife, who had come to see the blazing mountain ; numbers of people had come from the towns and villages below with bread and wine, and fruit and aqua-vita, all of which articles seemed in very great demand.—The motley scene was lighted by the bright silvery moon, and the red towering flames at the summit of the volcano. We took some slight refreshment, and repaired homeward in the midst of as gay a groups as ever returned from scenes of festivity and joy. When we got lower down, we found that the lava had approached very near to the road, and had already seized upon a fine vineyard, which was blazing very brilliantly. After our retreat, we learned that the lava traversed the road. On Wednesday, the 27th, the eruption was in a great measure tranquilized ; still, however, crowds of people continued going up the mountain, and an Austrian officer, who had come from Capua to see it, was unfortunately killed on the ridge of the cone, by a large stone striking him on his head. On Thursday scarcely any thing but smoke issued from the crater, and it has continued in this peaceful state ever since.

The news of the eruption reaching Rome, induced crowds of Englismen to set off immediately for Naples ; on Saturday and Sunday above twenty carriages arrived here, where, to the no small mortification of the travellers, all the business was finished.

Poet's Corner.

ITALY, a Poem.

The name of the Author of Italy is carefully guarded, but we think there can be but little hesitation in ascribing it to Southey. One note alone excites a doubt in our breasts ; and at a period so fertile in imitative genius, it would perhaps be too much to say positively that the verse is the Laureate's ; but it bears strong resemblance to his earlier poetry, and its theme accords so entirely with his visit to the scenes here described, that the identity, if suspected at all, can be but very slightly questioned.

O Italy, how beautiful thou art !
Yet I could weep—for thou art lying, alas,
Low in the dust ; and they, who come, admire thee
As we admire the beautiful in death,
Thine was a dangerous gift, the gift of Beauty,
Would thou hadst less, or wert so once thou wast,
Inspiring awe in those who now enslave thee !
—But why despair! Twice hast thou lived already ;
Twice shone among the lesser lights
Of heaven ; and shalt again. * *

No track of men, no footsteps to and fro,
Led to her gates. The path lay o'er the sea,
Invisible ; and from the land we went No'to a floating City—steering in,
And gliding up her streets as in a dream,
So smoothly, silently—by many a dome
Mosque-like, and many a stately portico,
The statues ranged along an azure sky ;
By many a pile in more than Eastern splendour.
Of old the residence of merchant kings ;
The fronts of some, though time had shattered them,
Still glowing with the richest hues of art,
As though the wealth within them had run o'er.

Old Play.

The erroneous calculations and, what is much worse, the deliberate falsehoods of this author, continually oblige us to speak of our own observation and experience, a thing we do not like, because it has the appearance of egotism and personal vanity, weaknesses to which we have a particular aversion. However, we disclaim any other motive than that of the love of truth What we have seen and known we can declare with the greater confidence, and the less fear of contradiction. We have ourselves been farmers both in England and Canada, to a much greater extent than the cultivation of a "potat-a-garden" in Ireland or a "keil yard" in Scotland, and we can speak from experience as to what may be done on a grant of 50 acres in Upper Canada, which is a free and gratuitous possession, that the poorest and most abject cotter or peasant of Great Britain and Ireland may receive from the Crown, for himself and his heirs for ever, without any other trouble than that of making his own choice, as to situation and quality of land :—an instance of liberality, and of paternal care, and solicitude for the interests of its poor subjects, which can be found under no other Government nor in any other part of the world, except in a British Colony, and of all the British Colonies only this; yet a man has been found base enough publicly to deride and detract from this unparalleled generosity ! !

Although the soil of this fine country is fruitful beyond any thing that can be calculated respecting it, by those who have heard only exaggerated descriptions of the severities and extremes of its climate—its long winters—its frosts—its snows—and the intense heat of its summers—yet it seems to require as many teams to cultivate a certain quantity of arable land, after the first crop or two, (if the farmer has any ambition to see his ground in proper order, or view rich and clean crops,) as it does in Great Britain

In the best farming districts of England, supposing that three ploughings are given, and allowing the same horses used with the plough to carry out manure, to go to mill and market, and perform all the team work necessary for this given quantity; it is considered that a pair of good horses is equal to the tillage and team work of 40 acres, when in a good state and under a proper course of management but no more, if the work is to be done as it should be.

Now ; how many hundred, say how many thousand farms are there in Great Britain. With a proportion of no more than 40 acres of land under tillage, which, notwithstanding rack-rents of from 2*l.* to 3*l.* per acre, and in many instances even 4*l.* and 6*l.* per acre, with assessed and other taxes to an enormous amount, poor-rates heavily burthensome, parish rates and cesspools scarcely to be enumerated, and tythes, and various other tributes and expenses we cannot stay to enumerate —how many farms of this description, we repeat, have been found sufficient to maintain with ease, and decency and respectability, numerous families, who have, on many occasions, shewn themselves the best and steadiest supporters of their country in the hour of difficulty, danger, and distress ?

And what is the calculation of an English farmer of this class—a calculation that has been so universally made as at length to be resolved into a proverb? Why, it is this, that every farm has three rents to pay—one for the landlord—one for the payment of taxes and assessments, and labour, and the expence of cultivation,—and one for the tenant, and support of his family ; so that if a farm is valued to the tenant at 3*l.* per acre, it must yield to the amount of 6*l.* to be worth having, and if at 3*l.* per acre it must yield 9*l.* and so on in proportion Perhaps it will be said that the superior advantages of market, and the high price of the various articles of agricultural produce, to which the British farmer has access, enable him to conquer every difficulty. But these advantages are not so greatly superior to those possessed by other countries as is generally supposed ; there is not such an immense superiority in this respect, to counterbalance all those heavy burdens with which the British farmer is saddled ; rather let us attribute his success to the right cause,—his superior skill,—his unwearied industry,—his sober habits,—his beautiful economy,—and, above all, his fine moral character.

Let the discontented and splenetic observer once behold a man of this description, (and we are thankful that many of this class have at length arrived amongst us,) upon a gratuitous grant of 50 acres, in this country, and he will see a heart-cheering spectacle indeed. One of his three rents will still be sufficient to support the farmer as in England, and more than sufficient, and there will be nothing to prevent his laying out the other two rents; or in other words, the other three-thirds of the entire produce of the land, in either towards a fund for the comfort and support of his declining years, or to enable him to put out his sons to trades and handicrafts ; or, should he wish it, to extend his farm by the purchase of more land ; and in doing so, he cannot find much difficulty for a great number of years to come.

In the new settlements of the District of Newcastle, there are many individuals who have abundance, and to spare, upon the smaller grants, who have not yet been three years in the province ; and it is not many days since we saw a man of Emily, which is the most remote of the surveyed townships in that District, who is a native of Cumberland in England, who arrived in this country in a penniless state, little more than two years ago ; yet we had the pleasure of seeing this man with a heavy load of wheat for sale, at Port Hope, thirty miles distant from his residence in Emily, which he had brought down in a sleigh with a yoke of oxen of his own, as part of a quantity of produce which he had reaped and sown since he required a fund for seed and for his own year's consumption ; he added that he owed no man a shilling, and he told us "with joy parkling in his eye," that he thanked God he was now at his ease for life. This man had not watered the great with his tears ! Such a look upon the face, and honest satisfaction, and joy, as he gave us, would be a dagger to men like GOURLAY, and the writer of the pitiful pamphlet before us. We do not, however, mean to say that all are satisfied, even in the District of Newcastle. It would be in the highest degree utopian, to suppose any community of human beings so happy, as not to have unfortunate perturbed spirits within its bosom ; let it suffice, and we assert it boldly, and without fear of contradiction, because it is matter of fact, that not one in twenty dissatisfied loser in the new settlements will be found with their bread and butter, it has been so in all countries, and in all ages, and we are to suppose it will remain so till the coming of the great Millenium We cannot help stating here as historical fact that happened to pop into our recollection—In the time of Charles XI King of Sweden, when the troops were paid in land, a trooper bitterly complained that the ground upon which the spacious and beautiful city of St. Petersburgh, the capital of all the Russias, now stands, was an unfair and an inadequate allotment for his maintenance.* But were we inclined to search into the rich stores of history for facts to illustrate the force of our argument, we might fill our columns with the record, and shew the various portions of land which, in different countries, have been deemed sufficient for the maintenance of a family, up to the more ancient and virtuous days of Rome, when two acres were considered amply sufficient for that purpose. But the primitive days of virtue, of patriotism, and of true glory, have long since departed the older nations of the earth ; yet, we trust not for ever. In this western world, at least, we will hope to see their beauty rise upon us, like the morning sun, with renewed splendour.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

Court of Chancery.

LONDON, March 26.

Hawes vs. Sams.—The parties in this case being in attendance, Mr. Shadwell said he should not trouble the Court upon this subject until the next Seal. It was an application to restrain the defendant from publishing the Song of "We're a' Noddin," in a work entitled the Gazette of Fashion, of which he is a proprietor.

The Lord Chancellor,—How long will it be expected I shall interfere with these trifling subjects of Song Singing ? (a laugh.) It will, I suppose, be expected for me to restrain a music or singing master from teaching a young lady the method of singing a particular song ? It is a jocular subject, and I suppose I shall be called on to restrain Cerus' your Punning. (much laughing) I would, however, suggest that it would be fitter to apply to the Vice Chancellor, a much younger man than me, and understands, I have no doubt, matters of this sort much better than I do."—The parties then left the Court.

Mrs. Shadwell on Thursday applied for an Injunction in the above Case to the Vice Chancellor, who refused the application, and dismissed the motion with costs.

INJUNCTION.

Lawrence vs. Smith.—This morning the Lord Chancellor directed Mr. Wetherall to proceed with his argument, in answer to Mr. Shadwell, who was heard on Thursday last in support of the injunction which had been obtained to restrain the defendant from publishing a series of Lectures on Physiology, Zoology, &c. delivered by the plaintiff at the Royal College of Surgeons, in Lincoln's Inn fields, it being contended that the copyright of such work was vested exclusively in the plaintiff ; the ground upon which it was sought to dissolve the injunction was, that in many parts of the Lectures, the Immortality of the Soul was denied, and that being contrary to the Christian Religion, and law of the land, did not entitle the plaintiff to the protection of Courts of either law or equity in this country.

The Lord Chancellor was of the same opinion, and stated, that until a Court of law had shown the book to be entitled to their protection, the injunction could not be sustained.—Injunction dissolved.

A REVENUE VENTRILOQUIST.—A smuggling lugger, of considerable value, has been captured off Ballycotta Head, by the boats of the Seamanis and Cyrus. Intelligence of the vessel being seen from the land was communicated to Lord Colville, while he was engaged in divine service on Christmas day. He sent his advices on a slip of paper, and they were fulfilled by those appointed to execute them. The boats separated in a thick fog, and only one, containing seven men, fell in with the lugger, the officer in which practised a stratagem with success He gave orders audibly, as if several boats were at hand, varying the tone of his voice, in order to make it appear as if the officers commanding the different boats were cautiously inspiriting their crews. When the crew of seven, boarded the smuggler she proved to be manned with forty picked seamen, and well armed. No resistance was made, and the remaining boats crews having rowed up when the fog cleared off, the vessel was safely brought into Cove.—Glasgow Chron.

COMMERCIAL.—It was decided by the Court of King's Bench in February term, in the case of Cox v. Troy, that a person has a right to cancel any acceptance he may have given to a bill, any time previous to that Bill being called for by the holder of it. It was ruled by Lord Ellenborough for many years, that if a bill was once accepted, the accepter, no matter what new light had broken in upon him as to the drawer, between the interval of the bill being left for acceptance, and its being called for, had no right to cancel his acceptance. This legal reading is now found to be erroneous.

AGRICULTURE.

THE SHEEP OF PERU.—The HUANACO, is rather smaller than the Alpaca, of course less than the Llama, its general Stature is about three and a half feet high. That it can be domesticated when taken as a suckling, has been proved in several instances; and that it will intermix with the Alpaca, the Llama, and the common European Sheep, has likewise been proved by various experiments

That the Huanaco as well as the Vicuna have generally remained in a wild state, has arisen from the inattention of the Spanish Government, and from the Indians having a superabundance of the Alpaca and Llama for all domestic purposes.

At the time of the expulsion of the Jesuits from South America, they had upwards of a thousand of Huanacos and Vicunas in a tame state in their inclosures, they had crossed the breed with the other species of Sheep, and saw the importance of the scheme both for the country, as well as Europe, but after the departure of the Jesuits, the plan of domesticating the two wild species was abandoned, and it has not since been renewed.

It has been found that the Huanaco, though of a deep bay colour, crossing with a white female Llama, produces an offspring nearly of the hue of the mother, and in the second generation, besides being perfectly white, the wool has been considerably improved in fineness.

The Huanaco is the swiftest animal of Peru, and is more courageous than either of the other species of sheep; and although, as regards his wool, he is of less value than the others, yet it is probable that great advantages may be derived by crossing with this breed, and therefore it is desirable to introduce this species as well as the others, into the United States.

Peach Trees.—Make boxes around your trees about one foot in height, and in capacity exclusive of the tree, to hold a peck, fill this in with the bark taken from tan vats, pressing it a little together, and your trees will remain free from worms around the roots, which are so destructive to trees; and it is found that worms will not inhabit this bark if ever so old.

ORIGIN OF NERVES.

Some have boldly said they came over in chests of tea; but, as a commodity can only come from a place where it is, and never from a place where it is not, that assertion, as to the celestial empire, is doubtful; besides, Dr Johnson had no nerves, yet swallowed oceans of that beverage called tea.—Nerves could not, we think, have been imported from France; the French may have nerves, since they have invented a word called ennui, which, after all, is but dabbling in things they know nothing about or show nothing of; just as many people here talk as familiarly about philosophy as about puppy dogs. From the Netherlands they could not have come as Dutchman has not time to be nervous.—Nor from Germany; for though their novels and plays go very far towards a trial of the nerves, by the endless introduction of ghosts, murders, incests, and all the genuine horrific, still where do people laugh more, or enjoy Bologna sausages, sour-krout, and white beans, better than they do? From Russia, Sweden, Denmark, or Poland. It is in vain to imagine that these northerns had any nerves to export; for a nervous man to exist whole months in the midst of Snow and ice, is as out of character, as for an elephant to be comfortable in a lady's boudoir, could those Russian noblemen be supposed nervous, who stole Dr. Clarke's hat, or who combed their heads in public with their finger? unquestionably not. If we look to other parts of Europe, we find the Italian for ever fiddling or dancing, and therefore without nerves. The Spaniard, who is continually strumming, either at mass, or otherwise has no nerves. The Turk, with his hookha, dividing his time between the smoke of tobacco and the sanctity of the Koran, and the sweets of his Harem, has no nerves. If we go to the newly discovered islands of Australasia, they have no idea of these nerves.—Oh yes, we beg pardon, in due time, they may be infected for we trade there; the savage monarchs get civilized, get rich, and so may become nervous. Were we to take a bird's eye view of the whole globe, however, we must admit at last, that nerves are indigenous, that they have not been imported, that we are not infected from abroad, and we must look further still for their origin.

The Ruling Passion.

The ruling passion of a Frenchman is 'our fine France.' To this national vanity truth itself must give way, experience bite the dust. Hear Sr Fobx! 'In three or four thousand years the name of the other nations, who inhabit Europe, will scarce be known; whereas our language will be the learned language, and will be taught to children. Every one will pride himself in being acquainted with our history, and in enumerating the celebrated names and actions of our Kings and heroes; and the softness of our manners will be admired by all posterity.' &c.

(Vol. 2. p. 219, of his Essays.)

SINKING FUND.

At a time when so much is said both in and out of Parliament respecting the operation of a Sinking Fund—it may be amusing and instructive to our readers to present them with a very curious calculation which shews in a small compass how immensely superior is the accumulating power of compound over simple interest.

Ed.

Curious Calculation.—Supposing the National Debt of England to be one Thousand Million Pounds, and that it was condensed into a globe, its diameter will be 30 feet, 6 inches and 4–10ths;—its weight, avoirdupoise, 7,581 tons, 16 cwt. 1 qr. 3 lbs. 1 oz. 7 dr.;—its cubic contents, 14,915 feet 69 inches; if it was heat into a pute to the 1-8th of an inch thick, it would cover 32 acres, 2 roods 19 perches, 3 yards, 7 feet of land. £1,000,000 at 5 per cent. compound interest, will discharge the whole debt in 141 years, 197 days, 9 hours, 5 minutes.

The following statement will shew the immense power of compound, over that of simple interest From the birth of Christ to Christmas day, 1815, one penny at 5 per cent. simple interest, comes to 7s. 7 3-4d. at compound interest, to the enormous sum of

Allowing the value of a cubic inch of gold to be 38l 16s. 6d. and this immense sum condensed into a globe, its diameter will be 6,193,604 miles, 2 furlongs, 106 yards, one foot, six inches, and a fraction, which would exceed in magnitude all the planets in the solar system. Supposing this earth solid gold, it would not discharge the interest of the above sum for one hour. The compound interest calculations are plainly demonstrated by common arithmetic, independent of tabular numbers.

B. W. M.

These calculations shew how little we have to dread from a National Debt, however large,—"if a Sinking Fund, properly organized and to be held sacred for its original purpose was in operation.—Ed.

POOR'S RATES.—By the returns of the expence of the poor in England and Wales, it appears, that, for law expences only, in the year 1819, more money was paid than the whole expenditure for the King, his Court, Ministers, Judges, Ambassadors, the Princes, and all the State Pensioners added together. The whole expences of the poor amount to a sum equal to the revenue of the Emperor of Russia, who maintains an army of a million of soldiers, and to more than twice the expences of the Government of the United States.

North West Coast.—The documents communicated to Congress on Wednesday, relative to this subject are publised

In making the communication, the Secretary of State observes, that the British Minister had intimated that the proposed plan of occupying Columbia River might interfere with the rights of his government. The secretary declined to answer his enquiries, or discuss the claims of England otherwise than in writing, but no written communications had been received.

Provoking Exposure.

It was an usual custom with the English Painters at Rome, to meet in the evenings for conversation, and frequently to make little excursions together in the country. On one of those occasions, on a summer's afternoon, when the season was particularly hot, the whole company threw off their coats, as being an incumbrance to them, except poor Astley (a fellow pupil of Sir Joshua Reynolds with Hudson,) who alone showed great reluctance to take off his; this seemed unaccountable to his companions, when some jokes made on his singularity, at last obliged him to take off his coat The mystery was then explained, for it appeared that the back of his waistcoat was made, by way of economy, out of one of his own pictures, and thus displayed a tremendous Waterfall on his back, to the great diversion of all present.

Editorial Commentary.

We are still looking with anxiety for authentic intelligence from RUSSIA. The rumours of war in that quarter are yet afloat. In FRANCE it appears the internal commotions are not of that serious importance which were at first anticipated; but there seems to be a vast mass of combustible matter spread abroad in that unsettled Kingdom which it is much to be feared will one day or other, and at no very distant period, explode with overwhelming force.

That wandering and indefatigable Patriot Gourlay cannot rest from his labors. Not satisfied with the failure of two attempts, one in the year 1820, and another in 1821, to interest the House of Commons in favor of his plans; he has again come forward with a Petition, presented by Mr. HUME, having faith, probably, in the mystical number three. But we are inclined to believe this third attempt will be as unsuccessful as the two preceeding; if it were for no other reason than that the main statements of the Petition are untrue. We cannot believe that his proposal of rendering CANADA productive of a revenue to the Mother Country, could be admitted on either side the Atlantic—it is certainly a very extraordinary proposal to come from such a man as GOURLAY. The allegations in his Petition are brought, as before, chiefly against the land granting department. He says, "whilst lands in the United States have been sold to the amount of two millions of dollars, our grants have cost the Government a round sum." Alas! how difficult is it to satisfy such flaming Patriots as Messrs. GOURLAY and CARTWRIGHT. They affect economy and a right feeling; yet one of them censures the system, because it is too expensive to Government, whilst the other abuses the same Government in the most shameless and unprincipled manner, because it makes an immense profit of those who receive grants of land. Well might an aged Statesman observe that such is the repugnance of a great part of mankind to good government that if an Angel from Heaven was to bring down a constitution, formed there for our use, it would nevertheless meet with violent opposition. His complaints of large unsubstantial interests may be well founded. Our present Governor does all in his power to prevent the recurrence of any such interests for the future. But as to there being no villages, the assertion is untrue; and the contrary, immediately on the frontier line, so far from being in favor of the United States, is unquestionably in favor of Canada, from Cornwall to Fort Erie, if not still further to the westward. This land is not of small value, nor is it thinly peopled, nor is the land, generally, on the other side of five or six times the value. He still holds the language of his lawless Conventions in this country, and dares to say that if the mode of administering the Government, here, is not altered, CANADA in ten years, will not be a dependant on Great Britain!! He further says, that it is better to make it the interest of the Colony to remain subject to Britain, &c. &c. &c. as if there was any general wish, or interest, to the contrary!! Whatever may be the bad feelings and unprincipled conduct of some individuals; we are satisfied that in no part of the British Empire is there a larger body, according to the population, of well disposed, and truly loyal people, than in Canada.

We have thrown together under one head several valuable extracts immediately interesting to this country. It gave us great pleasure to see the statements given in the pamphlet which is said to be semi official, because they indicate a pre-disposition to admit many of the leading arguments we have already made use of in our unpublished work on the general state and political bearings of this Country, a work which was announced more than a year and a half ago, but which we have not yet had time to publish.

The policy of the British Government in withdrawing all Bounty on Emigration is ably defended in the extract we have given from BELL'S MESSENGER. That part which alludes to the removal of Pauperism from a country where it may be borne, to another which is unable to sustain the weight, appears to us particularly beautiful and conclusive.—It is worthy of the especial consideration of our friend B—, whose work we have seen, and which we shall notice in due time. One of the best and most effectual means of alleviating the general distress, here, would be a modification of the existing Corn Laws, by which our grain might be imported into England. The quantity we might send for several years to come, could not materially influence the markets against the British growers, whilst to our farmers the quantity sold would be a happy relief. We were glad to find the subject of Emigration resumed by Mr BELL, not only because his paper has a very extensive circulation in Great Britain; but because it must be manifest to all unprejudiced persons, who read his remarks, that notwithstanding the difficulties of the times, CANADA still holds out the fairest prospect of success to the Emigrant, whether he is a man of capital, or one in low and narrow circumstances.

At the solicitation of several respectable Gentlemen, our subscribers, we have this week given the letter, which has been so much the subject of conversation, from CAMPBELL, the Poet, to JOHN BRANT Esq. known, as it should seem, in London, by the Mohawk name of AHYONWAEGHS. Whatever were the motives which induced Mr. BRANT to call upon the Poet for something like a public apology for the freedom with which his father's memory had been aspersed—they ought to be attributed to the warmth of filial affection, respect and that nice sense of honour which should ever distinguish the gentleman and the soldier. We by no means admire the justification which has been given by the Poet. We think it lame, evasive, ostentatious, and prolix. How much better would it have been for him simply to have rested his defence upon the evidence of history; such as he had found in books of established authority! In works of Fancy a Poet is not expected to be always faithful to the simple nakedness of truth, and great allowances are generally made in his behalf. For this reason we were rather surprised that Mr. B. should think it necessary to call the Poet to any account.—Had it been a grave passage of historical record, we should have thought it right to interfere and demand an explanation.—There is something very contemptuous and unbecoming in the manner in which the Poet says he knew not that the son and daughter of an Indian Chief were ever likely to peruse his book, or be affected by its contents, and where he observes that most persons smiled with the same surprise on mentioning it! When e that smile, Mr. Poet? What is there extraordinary in the circumstance of a man of strong understanding, and of enlarged and comprehensive views, and withal a man of extensive property, and a Christian, though an Indian, thinking it right to give his children an excellent education after the English mode? and, why should it be extraordinary that those children, thus educated, and with feelings of the nicest honor and sensibility, should be capable of perusing and estimating according to its merits, a book of English Poetry, in which their father's memory had been aspersed, and as they conceived, unjustly? We see nothing remarkable in all this; but we discern more ignorance, and more of the common failing of Poets in this letter, than we could have expected to find in a production written by the justly celebrated author of the PLEASURES of HOPE.

We dislike this letter on other grounds;—there is an evident warm justification of the Americans, in the revolutionary war, that was uncalled for, and might as well have been left out, as having nothing to do with the main subject. No one disputes the splendour which adorned the mighty talents, nor denies the power, almost irresistable, which attended the eloquence of the great CHATHAM; but when he declared that the fall of America would involve the destruction of the Constitution of England, his zeal carried him far beyond the bounds of probability. None but Englishmen could ever, or can ever effect so awful, so tremendous a catastrophe, and there can be no other theatre, for so frightful a spectacle, than the soil of Britain herself. Although we might not have desired to see WASHINGTON brought home in chains, we are not therefore obliged to consider him only a nominal foe to England. He was assuredly something more. We have no desire to advocate some of the principles, particularly that of taxation without representation, the operation of which led to the war; but this defence of CAMPBELL goes to throw the whole blame upon England! There is a wide difference between regretting and justifying the conduct of the American. All good men, and Englishmen in particular, must regret it, but they are not therefore bound to justify it. The Poet regrets his "mistake" concerning the brave old Chief because he is called upon to do something more than regret it. The general aspersion implied, if not openly expressed, on his countrymen, remains unregretted, and without an apology.

AFFAIRS OF CANADA.

The following paragraph is from the debates in the House of Commons on the 27th March; the petitioner is doubtless remembered by our readers, as also the excitement of which his writings and speeches were productive in this province:

"Mr. Hume said he had been requested by an individual, named Robert Gourlay, to present his petition to this House. He stated that similar petitions had been presented from him on the 21st of July, 1820, and on the 27th of June, 1821. He stated that he had resided in Upper Canada for several years, and he wished to call the attention of the House to the present situation of the Colonies there. He was of opinion that under a different system, these colonies, which were now a great charge, might be maintained, not only free of expence to this country, but be made productive of a revenue under proper management. The point to which he called the more particular attention of the House, was the manner in which the waste land in Canada was disposed of. In the laboring districts of America the land was sold at so much an acre, and last year this sale produced upwards of 2,000,000 of dollars; whilst in Canada the distribution of land in the same time cost this Government a round sum. A great objection lay to the manner in which the land was portioned out. In most places large intervening tracts were left totally unprepared, whilst the emigrants were scattered about, and there being no villages, they were unable to give each other that support which was necessary to all colonies. The consequences of this mismanagement were strongly marked by the contrast which Canada presented with the neighboring districts. A line was drawn between Upper Canada and the provinces of the United States, and though the mode of cultivation was alike, yet upon the British side the land was of small value and thinly peopled, whilst on the other there was a dense population, and the land was five or six times more valuable. This state of things was attributable to the existing laws. The revision of these laws was one of the prayers of this petition.—Petitioner also called the attention of the House to the mode in which the Government of Canada was administered, and he asserted that in some alteration was not made in these respects, Canada, in ten years hence, would not be a dependant on Great Britain. He suggested that it was better to make it the interest of the colony to remain subject to this country, than be hereafter obliged, at a great expence, to retain them. The Hon. Member said, the petition contained many other observations worthy the attention of this House, and as upon reading it over he found that it contained nothing objectionable, he would move that it be brought up.—The petition was laid on the table."

Extract of a Pamphlet on the state of the British Nation.—"It has been too much the practice of Popular writers to undervalue the possession of Canada. Canada is of three main uses to the British Empire—The first, that of constituting a point of contract with the United States; secondly, that of administering to the maintenance of the British navy by the employment of a large amount of tonnage, and by the formation of seamen in long and rough voyages; and thirdly, that of consuming a very considerable portion of our manufactures.

"Under the first of these heads, it has been the policy of successive administrations to regard the possessions of Canada as a point of primary importance. It would be ungracious to anticipate events yet hidden behind the clouds of time, and which every man hopes may be of very remote occurrence. But as empires are not the creatures of the day, political prudence must extend its reach beyond the precautions of a living generation. Quid brevi fortes jaculamur ævo, is not a rule of political wisdom. In the vicissitudes of human affairs, a breach with America is assuredly not an impossible event. But if former statesmen have justified the retention of Gibraltar; a point of much more questionable wisdom upon the side ground of its affording a position on the Peninsula, and a port and station in the Mediteranean; and if the experience of the last fifty years has sanctioned this policy, how much stronger is the argument for the same provisional precaution with regard to British America and the West Indies. In any future war, a large naval force could be promptly applied from this quarter to the American seas. Possibly, this may be considered as of no inconsiderable importance."

"Under the next head, the seamen and tonnage engaged in trading with Canada are not to be overlooked. They compose a very material proportion in the total amount of our navigation. It has been before mentioned, that the vessels employed in our trade with Canada amount to nearly one fourth of the tonnage of the British empire—add to this consideration, her supply of timber in any event of a war with the northern powers of Europe. Under the third head, the consumption of British manufactures in Canada exceeds the amount of the consumption of the East Indies. A further and a final circumstance, not to be omitted, arises from the late American navigation laws. Under the operation of these laws, our West India colonies, without the aid of Canada, would be subjected to great occasional distress. So much as to the importance and value of Canada.

COLONIES AND EMIGRATION.

The attention of our readers has not, we believe, been directed, by this subject for a great length of time, though it is unquestionably a consideration of the first importance to the British public. But the distress of agriculture, and the embarrassments of the landed interests, having occupied so large a portion of public attention, it became, of necessity, a subject of the first importance to our-selves. It now appears, that Government no longer offers a bounty upon Emigration, but leaves it to operate upon ordinary motives and inducements. The Emigrants to Canada and the Cape of Good Hope are requested to supply themselves with the means of removal, and to pay their passage and freightage when they arrive in British America: they are then directed to apply to the local authorities, residing in those countries, for allotments, or what are there termed, locations of land. The emigrants to New South Wales and Van Dieman's Land are subject to further regulations. Not only have they no passage and freightage supplied to them gratuitously; not only have they no understood promise held out for an allotment or location of any sort, but they are required to come under certain conditions and guarantee before they emigrate. They must be worth a capital of five hundred pounds before they are allowed to transport themselves to those colonies; and they must give respectable references to satisfy the Colonial Office that they have this capital actually in hand.

But it will be asked, why is this distinction taken? Ought not Emigration to be encouraged? Is it politic and provident, in the present state of things, to give a check to an operative cause, which relieves the heavy burden of an over-abundant population, and opens a vent to that scant and industry which can no longer find employment at home, to seek it in more favorable regions? Our answer is, that we dislike the system of bounties, whether applied to emigration or commerce.—They are founded in mistaken notions, and act injuriously under almost all circumstances. In commerce, they are mischievous, in-somuch as they force the capital of traffic by requiring a tax to be paid by the public towards its support. What is a bounty paid to the whale fishery, for instance, but a tax levied upon the community at large, to remunerate private speculators? If the branch of commerce, which it is sought to provoke by a bounty, be worthy of pursuit, the natural principle of self-interest and love of gain will induce men to embark in it. If it be an unprofitable trade, the sooner it is discontinued the better; and every artifice, whether by bounty or otherwise, employed to keep it alive and encourage it, is a violation of all just economical principles, and an exercise thrown upon the community without any sufficient cause.

Now the same argument applies to Emigration. This principle should be left to itself, to operate upon its own motives and inducements, extrinsic to every other consideration whatever. To excite and encourage Emigration would be as absurd as mischievous. It would be cruel as well as impolitic. Its effects would be, to shift poverty and misery from one country to plant them in another.—It would only change the scene of pauperism, with the superadded aggravation, that it would remove it further from the immediate sources of assistance, and from the assuaging relief of sympathy and compassion. A further effect would be to overstock our own colonies, and to carry off the abundant population of Great Britain, to produce a like excess in countries, where it would less easily be tolerated and relieved.

The ministers, therefore, are perfectly right in leaving Emigration to itself. With regard to Canada, it appears from the official accounts, that the emigrants, during the last year, exceeded 8,000.—Some of them (such, indeed, as had capital,) have obtained locations of land. Others are obliged to support themselves by mechanical or agricultural labor. But it is well known that Canada herself is suffering under great distress. Wheat is about half the price at which it now is in England, and there is no relief to be obtained from exportation.—It cannot be transmitted to England under the operation of our Corn Laws; and in France, to which country it might even now be sent with profit it has been recently prohibited. Mean time the people in Canada are suffering from their agricultural distress, in the same manner as the British landholder. Manufactures cannot be purchased, because the farmer cannot sell his produce, and the demand for labor slackens, because more of the produce of human industry is already raised than can be consumed.

With respect to the Cape of Good Hope, no suitable Emigration can take place to this colony, unless the emigrant has capital. Mechanical skill can here do little, and manufacturing ingenuity less.—What-ever is required, whether to clothe the body, or to furnish implements of trade and art, can be had much cheaper from England than it can be manufactured at the Cape of Good Hope. The shoemaker, the weaver, and the cutler, would here have no power to compete with the present existing state of the market. Every thing is in abundance. Capital, indeed, may always find a valuable employment; and the vineyards of this country open a prospect of cultivation and improvement, which may meliorate their produce, and bring it more upon a level with European wines.

As respects New South Wales, and Van Dieman's Land, the emigrant to these thriving colonies is required to have £500 capital; and we know no spot of the globe to which the emigrant can go with more certain prospect of advantage. The Merino sheep are found greatly to flour-ish in this country; that their wool is rendered of more than double the value which it is in the home market.—Whilst the best Spanish wool is worth about four shillings per lb; the wool of New South Wales will always obtain a price of nine shillings per lb. Now as wool will always command a market in England, this is the province to which the emigrant should

FROM THOMAS CAMPBELL.

LONDON, January 20th, 1822.

SIR,

Ten days ago I was not aware that such a person existed as the son of the Indian Brant, who is mentioned in my poem of "Gertrude of Wyoming." Last week, however, Mr S Bannister of Lincoln's Inn, called to inform me of your being in London, and of your having documents in your possession which he believed would change my opinion of your father's memory, and induce me to do it justice—Mr. Bannister distinctly assured me that no declaration of my sentiments on the subject was desired but such as should proceed solely from my own judgment of the papers that were to be submitted to me.

I could not be deaf to such an appeal. It was my duty to inspect the justification of a man whose memory I had reperused, and I felt a satisfaction at the prospect of his character being redressed; which was not likely to have been felt by one who had wilfully wronged it. As far as my intention to wound the feelings of the living was concerned, I really know not, when I wrote my poem, that the son and daughter of an Indian Chief were ever likely to peruse it, or be affected by its contents. And I have observed most persons to whom I have mentioned the circumstance of my having so to me, smile with a surprise which I experienced on first receiving it With regard to your father's character I took it as I found it in popular history. Among the documents in his favour I was that you have shewn me one which I regret that I never saw before though I might have seen it viz the Duke of Rochecoucault's honourable mention of the Chief in his travels I Without meaning however, in the least to invalidate that nobleman's respectable authority, I must say, that even if I had met with it, it would have still offered only a general and presumptive vindication of your father, and not such a specific one as I now recognize. On the other hand, judge how naturally I adopted sensations against him which had stood in the Annual Register of 1779, as far as I knew, uncontradicted for thirty years. A number of authors had repeated them with a confidence which beguiled at last my suspicion, and I believe that of the public at large. Among those authors were Gordon, Ramsay Macaulay, Belsham, and Wild. The most of these, you may tell me perhaps, were with zeal against the American war Well, but Mr. John Adolphus was never suspected of any such zeal, and yet he has said in his History of England, &c. (vol. iii p. 160) " that a force of sixteen hundred savages and Americans in disguise, headed by an Indian Col Butler, and a half Indian of extraordinary fero city named Brandt, lulling the fears of the inhabitants (of Wyoming) by treachery, suddenly possessed themselves of two forts, and massacred the garrisons" He says further, " that all were involved in unsparing slaughter, and that even the devices of torment were exhausted" He possessed, if I possessed them, the means of consulting better authorities; yet he has never in my knowledge made any atonement to your father's memory When your Canadian friends, therefore call me to trial for having defamed the warrior Brant, I beg that Mr John Adolphus may be also included in the summons. And after his open reference and acquittal, I think he is bound, having been one of my historical misleaders, to stand up as my gratuitous counsel, and say, " Gentlemen, you must acquit my client, for he has only fallen into an error which even my judgment could not escape."

In short, I imbibed my conception of your father from accounts of him that were published when I was scarcely out of my cradle—And if there were any public, direct and specific challenges to those accounts in England ten years ago, I am yet to learn where they existed.

I rose from perusing the papers you submitted to me certainly with an altered impression of his character. I find that the unfavourable accounts of him were erroneous, even on points not immediately connected with his reputation. It turns out for instance, that he was a Mohawk Indian of unmixed parentage. This circumstance, however, ought not to be overlooked in estimating the merits of his attainments. He spoke and wrote our language with force and facility, and had enlarged views of the union and policy of the Indian tribes A gentleman who had been in America, and published, perhaps, that they also called themselves Tuyell from whom I sought information respecting him in consequence of your interesting message, told me that though he could not pretend to appreciate his character entirely, he had been struck by the entirely unfavourable tone of his conversations. They had talked of music, and Kean and, " He is the harpsichord well, and the organ well better; but I like make even Lord North's admiration answerable for it drum and trumpet best of all. For they make my heart leap the actions of Butler's rangers; and I should be sadly quick." This gentleman also described to me the estimation sorry to make all England answerable either to Lord North in which he spoke of written records. Brant pos- or Butler's rangers. Was the American sessed at that time a native chief—a Hidalgo of the Six Nations, as our gentlemen and hardly worth the powder? Were thus the gentle of history should be rather partial to such the best, generals and statesmen of our country for, or against it? Chatham declared that if America a man.

* The same has been almost always inaccurately spelt Brandt in English Books

† The following testimony is borne to his fair name by Rochefoucault, whose ability and means of forming a correct judgement will not be denied. " Colonel Brandt is an Indian by birth. In the American war he fought under the English banner, and he has since been in England, where he was most graciously received by the king, and met with a kind reception from all classes of people. His manners are semi-European. He is attended by two negroes; has established himself in the English way; has a garden and a farm; dresses after the European fashion; and nevertheless possesses much influence over the Indians He assists at present (1796) at the Miami Treaty, which the United States are concluding with the Western Indians. He is also much respected by the Americans; and in general bears so exalted a character, that I regret that I could not see and become acquainted with him."—Rochefoucault's Travels in North America.

I find that when he came to England after the peace of 83 he would fall like the drum-major—but she would only be a hopeless undertaking. All parties and the public at our command and perish beneath its ruins. seem to have treated him with the attention due to a man of Jefferson's conduct in these cases the breeder of Sir Sidney Smith, these were the late Bishop of London, the late Duke of Portland, Lord Rawdon, now Marquess of Hastings, and the late Duke of Northumberland, and Charles Fox; Lord Rawdon, now Marquess of Hastings, gave him his picture. This circumstance of itself was a blessing, even amid with the triumphant personal distinction. In Canada the memorials of his moral character represent it as not only ingenious and generous, but the injustice of this war. Ben Washington was only an the evidence offered induces me to believe that he often intensely our friend in sending it; and he was as much France was going to bring a petty swindler about myself before the conduct of England in warfare Lastly, my own recollections world. I forbore to say any thing about it The case was of the worst enemies of our constitution, as if he had been the bath which decided the fate of Wyoming, struck by the Senate on the backs of Washington, Franklin, and other revolutionary worthies, who were in that place, and from your offer of reference to living witnesses I thought it my duty to those who think differently. But the American war against the sacred cause of Liberty. If so, the Marquess of Hastings that the top of the wa is a passage dedicated wholly to churches, religious houses, Princes palaces, Noblemen's lodgings and Navigation, but now all these are retected and nothing but Oke any whit regarded, and yet see the chaunge, for when our houses were buylded of Willowes then had we Whan men, but nowe that our houses are come to be made of Oke, our men are not only become willowe, but a great many altogither of straw, which is a sore alteration In those the courage of the owner was a sufficient defence to keepe the house in safetie, but now the assurance of the timber must defende the man from robbing &c. I might here take occasion to speke of the great sales yerly made of wood, whereby an infinite deale hath beene destroyed within these few yers, but I give ouer to daule in this behalf, howbeit (by I dare affirme, that if woodes doe go so fast to decay in the next hundred yeare of grace, as they have done and are like to doe in this (some tymes for increase of shepe-walkes, and some maintaynance of prodigalitie and pompe, for I have knowne a gentleman* that hath borne three score and nine in one paire of galigaskins to shew his strength and brawery) it is to be feared that brome, furse, gal, heth, fearn, brakes whinnes, ling, dies, bassocks, flags straw, sedge, reede, rush, and sea-cole will be good merchandize corn in the citie of London, whereunto some of them dayelie have gotten readie passage and taken up their loues in the great ost marchaunts parlors."†

We have given this quotation from a scarce work, for the double purpose of amusement and instruction; besides being, in some measure a rare to point. It is remarkable that when this quaint and curious writer spoke of his men of Wilkes and Straw, he spoke of the age of DRAKE, of RALEIGH, of BURLEIGH, of BACON and a host of famous warriors, statesmen, and philosophers; and, perhaps it is still more remarkable, that fuel is cheaper in the towns and cities of England, at this day with but few exceptions, than it is in Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, or York, in Canada; which, if not love forest, are upon the borders of a wilderness of interminable extent. These facts are instructive But it is time we went back to our friends upon the 50 acre lots, though we have little more to add, at present, on the steps it may be necessary for them to take at the first entrance on their new farms, since that subject is in some measure irrelevant to the object of these Strictures

For a great number of years to come there will be an ample range for a large stock of cattle and pigs in the woods, and on the plains; so that the small capitor will be freed from the necessity of having any part of his Means in pasture, unless it should be his choice to have it otherwise We have tried the cultivation of Swedish turnips, and find they will stand the utmost severity of this climate; with a couple of acres under a crop of this invaluable root, and the straw of his wheat, barley, oat, or Indian-corn crops, he may maintain a large stock of horned cattle through the winter; and in summer the only expense, attending them will be an occasional visit, to see that all are going on well Pigs get extremely fat when running at large in the woods, especially towards the fall of the year.

In short, the Canadian Yeoman of 50 acres, if he is a man of integrity, of prudence, of perseverance, and of good plain common sense, instead of being an object of pity, in the eyes and estimation of such a caitiff scribbler as the one we have been bound in duty to criticize, may, in a short time, realize every object of a reasonable ambition, and become one of the most free and independent men on earth.

* This gentleman caught such an heate with this same loade that he was faine to go to Rome for physicke, yet it could not save his life, but he must needes die home-wardes.

I am desirous of remarking that no land can be said to be fruitful which is entirely exhausted of carbonaceous matter, therefore, if it were possible for an estate to be so worn out by successive crops that little or no carbon would re-store it to its original fertility. I consider also that the land which contains most carbon will derive most benefit from the application of Salt. But the safest way for a farmer to proceed is to use his Salt sparingly at first, and in all cases to leave a small portion of the same land without Salt, so that the real effects produced by the Salt may be, by comparison, in every instance, self-evident and palpable.

A farmer who does not wish his land to lie fallow, ought, undoubtedly, to use too little, rather than too much Salt; because a very abundant dressing of this saline mineral substance might render the land, for one year at least, absolutely barren. We read in scripture of the "Valley of Salt," where David smote the Syrians, which in all probability was an extent of low land that had been rendered barren by an influx of salt water. In one of the very early numbers of the Philosophical Transactions is an account of a valley of the same kind near Aleppo; and the late Dr. Browning relates that there is a vast desert on the frontiers of Russia, towards Orim Tartary, which, in consequence of a superabundance of Salt, has become so absolutely sterile that for the space of many miles neither tree nor herb grows upon it.

As to the quantity of Salt which it will be advisable to use for the respective crops, and upon the different kinds of land, this will be best learned by a perusal of the several testimonials and other documents which will be found in the Appendix. But the best way of all others for ascertaining this point would be for every Agriculturist to depend upon the results of his own experiments. To this end, I would advise him to institute a set of experiments upon every distinct species of grain which he is in the practice of cultivating, as well as upon his pasture and,* and to keep a register of every minute circumstance attending each of these trials.

A large kitchen-garden, wherever there is one attached to a farm house, would in some cases be the most appropriate spot for such experiments; as this would be more under the immediate eye of the proprietor, and the experiments being upon a small scale, would be attended with little or no expense.

From the trials which have already been made in feeding the live stock upon a farm, it appears that the following quantities may at all times be administered with perfect safety :—

To neat cattle four ounces per day, mixed up with steamed chaff or other moistened food; one half to be given in the morning, and the other half in the latter part of the day.—To horses four ounces per day, as aforesaid.—To young heifers two ounces per day, at twice as aforesaid.—To calves one ounce per day, divided into two portions.—To sheep two ounces per head per week. The salt to be spread very thin upon slates or tiles, in the field where the sheep are fed.

* The Right Honorable Sir John Sinclair, Baronet, lately published a series of sixteen distinct experiments, which he is desirous of having tried by farmers, as best calculated to ascertain the advantages of using Salt in agriculture, and he distributed the paper gratis. This valuable sheet which may be obtained at the Board of Agriculture, is well deserving the attention of all practical men.

POSTSCRIPT.

An arrival from the Texel, via New-York, brings a report that hostilities have actually commenced between the Russians and Turks.

It appears the West India Trade is to be thrown open to the United States, subject to a small discriminating duty

Disturbances, outrages, and murders continue in Ireland, and executions of the discontented were continually taking place.

France is still greatly disturbed.

The report of the death of Ali Pacha is confirmed; he was 84 years old.

An English paper has the following paragraph: "Government have, it seems, determined on uniting Upper and Lower Canada, with a view, as it is given out to save the expenditure incurred by the present double administration. The measure, however, will not be carried into effect without great opposition in the country; and Mr. Robinson, Attorney General in Upper Canada, has been sent over with a Memorial and Remonstrance against it, and may be daily expected in England from New-York The Administration of the two Canadas costs this country nearly five hundred thousand a year, without producing to us any equivalent advantage. But this is altogether the fault of the system; and very different reforms are necessary than merely uniting the two Provinces to rectify the matter."—English paper.

ANECDOTE.—Mr. Halley, throwing out, upon a time some indecent reflections against christianity, his friend, Sir Isaac Newton, stopt him short, and thus addressed him; "Dr. Halley, I am always glad to hear you speak of astronomy, or other parts of the mathematics, because that is a subject you have studied, and well understand; but you should not talk of Christianity, for you have not studied it: I have, and am certain you know nothing of the matter."

GEORGII IV. REGIS.

CAP. LXVI.

An Act for regulating the Fur Trade, and establishing a Criminal and Civil Jurisdiction within certain parts of North America.

[2d July, 1821.]

WHEREAS the Competition in the Fur Trade between the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and certain Associations of Persons trading under the name of "The North-West Company of Montreal," has been found for some years past to be productive of great inconvenience and loss, not only to the said Company and Associations, but to the said Trade in general and also of great injury to the native Indians, and of other Persons Subjects of His Majesty And whereas the animosities and feuds arising from such Competition, have also for some years past kept the interior of America, to the North west and West ward of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and of the Territories of the United States of America, in a state of continued disturbance: And whereas many Breaches of the Peace, and violence extending to the loss of lives, and considerable destruction of property, have continually occurred therein: And whereas, for remedy of such evils, it is expedient and necessary that some effectual Regulation should be established for the apprehending, securing, and bringing to Justice all Persons committing such Offences, and that His Majesty should be empowered to regulate the said Trade: And whereas doubts have been entertained, whether the provisions of an Act passed in the Forty-third year of the reign of His Majesty King George the Third, intituled An Act for extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, to the Trial and Punishment of Persons guilty of Crimes and Offences within certain parts of North America adjoining to the said Provinces, extended to the Territories granted by Charter to the said Governor and Company; and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed, and that the said Act should be further extended: Be it therefore enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That from and after the passing of the Act, it shall be lawful for his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, to make Grants or give His Royal Licence, under the Hand and Seal of One of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to any Body Corporate, or Company, or Person or Persons, of or for the exclusive Privilege of Trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America as shall be specified in any such Grants or Licences respectively, not being part of the Lands or Territories hereinbefore granted to the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and not being part of any of His Majesty's Provinces in North America, or of any Lands or Territories belonging to the United States of America; and all such Grants and Licences shall be good, valid, and effectual for the purpose of securing to all such Bodies Corporate, or Companies or persons, the sole and exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America (except as herein after excepted,) as shall be specified in such Grants or Licences: any thing contained in any Act or Acts of Parliament, or any Law to the contrary notwithstanding.

43 G.3.c. 138.

Empowering his Majesty to grant Grants for the exclusive Trade to certain parts of North America.

Limiting the Periods for which such Grants may be made.

II Provided always, and be it further enacted, That no such Grant or Licence, made or given by his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, of any such parts of North America as aforesaid, shall be made or given for any longer period than the term of twenty one years; and no rent shall be required or demanded for or in respect of any such Grant or Licence, or any privileges given thereby under the provisions of this Act, for the first period of twenty one years; and from and after the expiration of such first period of twenty-one years, it shall be lawful for his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, to reserve such rents in any future Grants or Licences to be made to the same or any other parties, as shall be deemed just and reasonable, with security for the payment thereof; and such rents shall be deemed part of the Land Revenues of his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, and be applied and accounted for as the other Land Revenues of his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, shall, at the times of payment of any such rent being made, be applied and accounted for.

Persons to whom such Grants shall be made, to enter into Security.

III. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay, and every Body Corporate and Company and person to whom every such Grant or Licence shall be made or given as aforesaid, shall respectively keep accurate Registers of all persons in their employ in any parts of North America, and shall, once in each year, return to his Majesty's Secretaries of State accurate Duplicates of such Registers, and shall also enter into such Security as shall be required by his Majesty for the due execution of all Processes Criminal and Civil, as well within the Territories included in any such Grant, as within those granted by Charter to the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay, and for the producing or delivering into safe Custody, for purposes of Trial, of all persons in their employ or acting under their Authority, who shall be charged with any Criminal Offence, and also for the due and faithful observance of all such Rules, Regulations, and Stipulations as shall be contained in any such Grant or Licence, either for diminishing or preventing the sale or distribution of Spirituous Liquors to the Indians, or for promoting their moral and religious improvement, or for any other object which his Majesty may deem necessary for the remedy or prevention of the other evils which have hitherto been found to exist.

IV And whereas by a convention entered into between his Majesty and the United States of America, it was stipulated and agreed, that any Country, on the North-west coast of America, to-the West-ward of the Stony Mountains, should be free and open to the Citizens and Subjects of the Two Powers, for the term of ten years from the date of the signature of that convention; be it therefore enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall be deemed or construed to authorize any Body Corporate, Company, or Person, to claim or exercise any such exclusive Trade within the Limits specified in the said Article, to the prejudice or exclusion of any Citizens of the said United States of America, who may be engaged in the said Trade: Provided always, that no British Subject shall trade with the Indians within such limits, without such Grant or Licence as is by this Act required.

VII. And be it further enacted, That all Process, Writs, Orders, Judgments, Decrees, and Acts whatsoever, to be issued, made, delivered, given, and done by or under the Authority of the said Courts, or either of them, shall have the same Force, Authority, and Effect within the said Indian Territory and other parts of America as aforesaid, as the same now have within the said Province of Upper Canada.

Editorial Commentary.

Many vessels have arrived at Quebec, some of them after unusually short passages. The March, which sailed from Liverpool, on the 8th of April, reported that there were no less than 30 vessels at the entrance of the Gulph, when she passed. We were glad to hear of a few more settlers amongst these arrivals.

It seems to be no longer problematical that hostilities would commence between Russia and Turkey. From the first differences we regarded such an event as certain. It is true the report of actual war has not yet been confirmed; but, from the news of the week, we may conclude that ere this, one of the fairest portions of Europe has been stained with the intermingled blood of Christians and Infidels, in a war of aggrandisement and revenge on the one side, and of brutal fanaticism and barbarous tyranny, on the other. The affairs of the Greeks were undoubtedly the principal obstacle, whether real or pretended in the way of adjustment. We can admit that the Emperor ALEXANDER condescended to use secret influence, and that he gave protection to those Greeks who fled to him for refuge, but, however the haughty Divan may resent it, this was all fair and in character.

The Turk is assuredly very insolent in his tone, which is somewhat too lofty for his present situation; but he has no idea of defeat; He cannot think it possible whilst the sacred banner of MOHAMMED waves over the turbans of his infuriated brethren assembled in battle array against the unbeliever. Perhaps the Christian may be also too lofty. "The race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong." We are amongst those who believe that the SUPREME BEING is not an indifferent spectator of the scenes that are acted on the great stage of this world. We further believe that "we" dom governs and regulates the moral, as well as the physical, world, and that the winds, the seasons and the tempests are not more under His controul, than the projects and the passions of men. Man may propose, but it is God who disposes. If the cup of the iniquity of Mahometanism is full; if the days of its dominion are fulfilled; if the hour is at hand when the empire of the CROSS OF CHRIST is to be more widely extended; we may indeed look for the most extraordinary, the most important results, and this modern Crusade possesses an interest far beyond that of any ordinary contest. The Turk is cruel as he is insolent, yet we trust, in meeting him, the Emperor ALEXANDER will practise, as far as it is possible in such a contest, all those great Christian charities for which he has been famed, and forbear, ere he brings shame to the great cause in which he is engaged, by any atrocity—an immense power is delegated to him, and we hope he will not abuse it.

Whatever may be the conduct of Austria, who may probably have an eye to some of the plunder, we cannot imagine that England will dash into the contest at the outset. Even if she has an intent on to take any part in it, her best policy will certainly be to suffer the storm to roll on awhile and discharge a part of its fury. A single year more of peace will be of incalculable, healing, benefit to the country, and after a time, when the combatants are in some degree weakened, she may have a fairer chance of attaining her object, whatever it may be.

We are as fully aware, as any other persons can be, of the necessity there is for a strong barrier, on the side of Asiatic and European Turkey, between the mighty Autocrat and our possessions in the East. But we would certainly prefer the establishment of an independent Grecian monarchy, under proper limitations, and professing christianity, to the licentious military despotism of barbarous infidels. We have always regretted, indeed, that our policy should seem to compel us, as it were, into an alliance with the professed and implacable enemies of that CHRIST and SAVIOUR, whose followers we profess to be; and there is something unaccountably strange and inconsistent, in a religious point of view, at least, in our subscribing largely to Bible Societies, and towards spreading the heavenly doctrine through every part of the habitable globe, whilst at the very same time we were entering into a strict alliance with the bitterest and most cruel enemies of that doctrine!—Who is it that can unsay what has been proclaimed by the MOST HIGH! or declare that we are at liberty to serve two masters, that we may give our prayers to One, but our services to Mammon!

It is very satisfactory to think that there is no possibility of the Greeks effecting their own deliverance from the Turkish yoke, without the interference of Russia. The accounts lately received of the victory obtained by their fleet over that of Turkey, are fully confirmed. The Greeks captured twenty five ships, drove five ashore, and blew up two Algerines, besides seven vessels of the Ottomans, amongst which that of the Vice Admiral was one, that were sunk.

We have great reason to congratulate our Canadian brethren on the opening of a new commercial era to this country. It is in contemplation to give us a free trade with all nations, as well in foreign as in English bottoms; provided the foreign vessels are built in the country to which they belong, and are navigated according to the laws of that country. The trade is to be under certain regulations which are detailed in the two bills brought into Parliament by Mr. ROBINSON. So much unanimity was displayed in the House of Commons on the subject that we have no doubt the business will be done, and that we may shortly have the delightful satisfaction of beholding the flags of all maritime nations flying in the harbours of Quebec and Montreal as a protection to these colonies, duties are to be imposed on the produce of the U. States of America shipped to the West Indies.

Some bright glimmerings of hope begin to pierce the dark and heavy clouds which have so long obscured our agricultural and commercial horizon. May they soon be wholly triumphant, and bring gladness to the hearts, and plenty to the cots of our industrious and worthy farmers!

In the Supplement that will immediately follow the publication of this number—the Observer will be made happy by our sentiments on the subject of the Commissioner's appointment, according to his own desire; and his friends will also have an opportunity of judging of his consistency, and the nature of his accommodating loyalty—and how far it is likely that it could ever be of service to any party or any faction!

GREAT BRITAIN.

LONDON, (Courier,) April 7.

The advices from Constantinople, are to March 6th. The Divan assembled on the 28th of February to take into consideration the note of the Ambassadors. The result was a reply not so favourable to peace as was expected. "The Assembly unanimously resolved, that the propositions contained in the Russian ultimatum were of a nature that could not be accepted." Subsequently repeated interviews took place between Lord Strangford and the Reis Effendi, which terminated abruptly; and on the 3d, a note was delivered to the English and Austrian Ambassadors, of which the following has been given as the substance:

"The Divan witnesses with pleasure the efforts which its friends, the Ambassadors of England and the Austrian Internuncio, make to adjust the differences which have arisen between the Sublime Porte and the Czar of the Muscovites; but the Divan views, as useless to the proposed object, all further discussion of the propositions contained in the Russian ultimatum—propositions which are incompatible with the sovereignty of his highness

"It would be desirable that the above mentioned Ambassadors would make known to their Courts the subjects of complaint which the Porte has against the Muscovites, viz.—That the Russian Consuls, chosen from the Greek nation, thinking themselves secure under their Berat (or Russian letter of naturalization) have openly taken parts in the plots which have been concerted at Smyrna and in the Isles of the Archipelago; to insurrectionize the Rajahs (subjects of the Porte); that a Russian ship, laden with arms and ammunition, has been seized in the Gulph of Smyrna, when on the point of sailing for Ispara; that the merchants of Odessa send to the Greek insurgents money and corn, supplies of which were seized in the streight of the Bosphorus; that Alex. Ypsilanti, styling himself as 'Agent of Russia,' and attired in Russian uniform, came to Bucharest at the head of a troop composed of Greeks and Russians, seized the public coffers, put to death the Musselman merchants established in Wallachia, and posted proclamations exciting the subjects of the Porte to insurrection, and promising them the aid of Russia; that in truth, the Court of Russia had declared that all this was the work of particular individuals, who acted in opposition to the will of the Emperor; but that, notwithstanding this declaration, the traitor Michael Suzzo, after having opened the gates of Jassy to Ypsilanti, and after having decapitated several Turks who resided where, fled to Russia, where he was hospitably received, and supplied with money, as were also other Greek refugees; whilst his Majesty the Emperor of Austria, faithful to the treaties, caused those to be arrested who fled into his dominions, and even confined Ypsilanti in a state prison.

"From these facts the Courts of England and Austria will judge whether it is Russia or Turkey which has provoked war. These Porte demanded no satisfaction whatever for these hostile circumventions on the part of Russia, the result of which only disturbed the peace of the Ottoman Empire but an instant. But the Porte will not suffer that a foreign court, a known supporter of all the rebellious against the authority of his highness, should come and interfere in the domestic affairs of the Empire. If some Christian Temple has been unjustly demolished, it shall be restored after tranquility shall have been completely re-established. His Highness will grant an amnesty to his Greek subjects of the Archipelago and Morea, when they shall have laid down their arms.

"The Ottoman troops shall continue to occupy Wallachia and Moldavia, so long as the Divan shall consider those provinces as menaced by the Cossacks and Heteraits assembled on the eastern bank of the Pruth. With respect to the nomination of the Hospodar, the Sublime Porte acknowledges that treaties, among others that of Bucharest, prescribe it; hence she has no intention to refuse it, nor to make any change in the form of government, guaranteed by conventions to those two Principalities, as she has declared to the Wallachian and Moldavian Boyars; only Russia having violated the treaty of Bucharest (as has been mentioned above) has no right to claim the execution of that article.—His Highness having besides by this treaty, liberty to name as Hospodar the person who shall deserve that favour, has already decided that in future no Greek can be Hospodar either of Wallachia or Moldavia; for the Greek Princes elevated to that post for a century, instead of shewing themselves grateful and faithful, have accepted the pay of Russia, and have framed conspiracies, without reckoning that several of them, after having pillaged the people of Wallachia and Moldavia, have fled into Christian countries with the unjust treasures, the fruits of their rapacity and Tyranny. His Highness will name as Hospodar either a Turk or a Wallachian, as he has made known to the Boyars.

"Finally, it is not for the Porte to send Commissioners to the frontiers to negociate peace—she is not at war with Russia, notwithstanding all the provocations—and if the Muscovite armies shall begin hostilities, she has taken measures to repel them."

"I can assure you," adds a private letter, "that on receiving this note, M. de Lutzow let it fall from his hands, so incredible did its contents and tone appear. He could not believe his eyes, and re-perused it several times previously to dispatching it for Vienna. It is also said, that Lord Strangford endeavoured to delay the courier, with the hope of observing some modification of its character.

Frankfort, March 30.—It appears the note of the Reis Effendi is unfortunately, of such a nature as to render useless the mediation of the three Powers, and that notwithstanding all their efforts to preserve peace, the obstinacy and the infatuation of the Sublime Porte, will render war inevitable. But even in case it should take place, it will be carried on like that of Naples, in full concert with the Allied Powers; and even before it is under taken, they will previously arrange together the results of the different chances which the war may have.

The intelligence of the rejection of the Russian ultimatum, appears to have excited considerable agitation at Paris and in London, and to have had the effect of reducing the funds in both places. This was to be looked for. From the little that was known of the actual state of the negociations and the contradictory accounts, which were every other day put in circulation, people's minds were prepared to expect that the failure of these negociations would be followed by an open rupture between the allied powers, and that the flames of war would spread throughout Europe. A little time, however, will show the groundless nature of these apprehensions; and that the only thing we shall have to dread, will be, a renewal of the horrible cruelties, which the Turkish government has already exercised on their Christian subjects. The Reis Kiaje Bey, published, that if he was forced to evacuate the country, he would carry all the male inhabitants into slavery, and that he would not leave a village standing. The fugitives reach our frontier almost naked; the soldiers strip them of all their clothes."

LONDON, APRIL 6, ONE O'CLOCK.

"There has been great bustle at the Stock Exchange this morning. Consols for account opened at 79 3-8, and immediately fell to 78 4-5. The market has since recovered considerably. The cause of the depression is entirely ascribed to the reports respecting Russia and Turkey.

LONDON, APRIL 7.

M. Chataubriand, Ambassador of France, arrived in London yesterday.

Notwithstanding the arrogant language held by the Porte, it is confidently stated that Russia, had removed every obstacle to an amicable settlement, but that the contemptuous light in which all Christians are viewed by the followers of the prophet, and the confidence they put in the invincibility of his standard, had induced the Divan to reject all terms whatever. The Sultan himself, is stated to have been disposed to listen to the proposals of England and Austria; but the Janissaries, who rule the empire, would admit of no difference between an European and an Asiatic "infidel."

The Generals in Chief of the Russian armies had held a council of war at the grand head-quarters at Minsk. The Russians were shortly to enter Wallachia and Moldavia.

Subsequent to the Ultimatum, Russia demanded of the Porte a large sum to indemnify for the expences of her armament, &c

Should war ensue between Russia and Turkey, it will be next to impossible for Austria to remain neutral. Austria borders on European Turkey to a much larger extent than Russia; and should this part of the domain of the Turk be conquered and his reign of tyranny be terminated a very valuable part of it must necessarily be assigned to Austria European Turkey contains a population of about nine millions and a half of souls. Moldavia with a population of 420,000; Wallachia, 950,000 and Bulgaria, with 1,800,000, would unquestionably be added to the Russian Empire; and Servia with a population of 960:000; Bosnia, 850,000; and Dalmatia, would make a very snug addition to the Austrian Empire. To whose share Romania, with its population of nearly two and a half millions, and its great capital, Constantinople is to fall, may occasion some serious negotiation. Greece, and the Peloponesus, ought to become Independent States; and the islands may be given to some of the great maritime powers to conciliate them.

The trial of the Manchester Yeomanry, charged with an unsult, and cutting and broiling on the memorable 16th of August, had commenced at Lancaster, and from the number of witnesses, it was likely to continue right or ten days.

There are two candidates for the Recordership of London; Mr. Knowlys and Sir James Mackintosh. The former being ministerial, it is thought has the best chance, though it appears there is a majority of radicals in the Common Council, with which the appointment lies.

The Farmers.—Mr. Brougham, in his late speech says the farmers of the north are considerably better off than those of the other parts of England, on account of the very favourable manner in which their grain was got in last year. There are other reasons for their better condition; they are more industrious than the generality of the south and western counties, they work harder themselves and make their children work harder; are less expensive in their habits; and trust less to servants.

Within the last thirty years it is calculated that in Lincolnshire alone, upwards of 300,000 acres of heath, wolds and fen lands, have been converted into arable.—Lincoln Gazette.

Sir Alexander Boswell, who was killed in the duel at Auchtertool, was a son of Boswell, the friend and Biographer of Doctor Johnson. Mr. Stuart his antagonist has taken refuge in France.

Mrs. Coutts.—It is rumoured that this rich, and still lovely widow, is solicited by several men of rank and fashion. The Marquis of Worcester is said to be the most assiduous, and the most highly favoured.

IRELAND.

LIMERICK.—Six thousand Police are immediately to be raised.

A Kerry paper announces the following account of the military preparations of Rebel Rock:—"Within the present week numbers of persons residing in the mountainous district between this barony and that of Clanmaurice, were visited by the insurgents, and sworn to repair an old road, long since suffered to go to ruin, running through the mountains of Glasboreegh, and in the direction of the county of Limerick. This task was imposed for the avowed purpose of facilitating the march of General Rock's army from Abbeyfeale, &c. &c. and such is the stupid infatuation of these deluded wretches, that hundreds of them have been since working with the greatest assiduity on this old road, in obedience to this ridiculous mandate."

The manner of letting land in Ireland, particularly the state of absentees, has been one great source of discontent, the landholder speculating in pence an acre offered by a land speculator, to a proposal from his old tenantry, what is to be expected from a wretched, ignorant, and starving population?—Such is unfortunately the state of a great part of the south of Ireland: and add to this the non-residence of the established clergy, and the manner which too many of these gentlemen have adopted of letting their tithes to speculators, who re-let them to the occupying tenant, or exact a full tenth of his titheable produce.

An order was lately received, by the Storekeeper of Chester Castle, to prepare and forward 35,000 rounds of ball cartridge by the earliest conveyance, to the sister kingdom.—In little more than an hour the ammunition was on the way to Liverpool, via canal, to be shipped for Dublin.

FRANCE

Other matter of more importance, as it appeared to us at the time, prevented our taking an earlier notice of a transaction of an abominable nature, which has occurred to an English family at Paris. The communications we have seen on the subject are mostly of great length. The following is a brief notice of the principal facts.—Ed.

An occurrence has just taken place at Paris which has sensibly affected the public mind here, and gives rise to reflections, with the expression of which we do not wish to trust ourselves. We allude to the conversion of the eldest daughter of a Mr. Douglas Loveday, an English gentleman. This unfortunate man, smitten, it seems, with the too prevailing mania for a French education, was induced to place his two daughters and his neice at a boarding school of a Madame Reboul, with an express stipulation that there should be no interference with their religious principles. At this school they continued for six years, and, at length, the father announced his intention of taking them back to England. What was his horror, however, on going to the school for the purpose, at finding that they had not only all been converted to Catholicism, but that the eldest had been juggled into a convent. It seems their understandings were darkened, and their terrors excited, by some fraudulent legend of a miraculous host tortured by a Jew in the year 1290, under the reign of Philip le Bel. Mr. Loveday presented a petition on the subject to the Chamber of Deputies, complaining of the fraud, and imploring the restitution of his child. This petition is to be the subject of a future discussion, and is said to be drawn up by Dupin, the celebrated advocate. It embraces all the facts, and occupies much more space than we can spare. The father states, that having gone to the convent to demand his daughter, he was compelled, under four bayonets, to settle a pension for life on her to enable her to live there, while the infatuated victim, surrounded by monks and nuns, actually laughed at the agony of her own father.

EMIGRATION.—The number of emigrants who left Ireland for the United States from 1812 to 1821, both years included, was 30,653. The number of passengers who embarked from England for do. in the same period from Scotland, 4727—Total from the United Kingdom, 67,988 During the same period there embarked from the British dominions in America 90,972, viz.—47,323 from Ireland, 23, 783 from Scotland. The whole number of emigrants to North America, from the British dominions during the period of ten years amounted to 459,960.

ALI PACHA.—The death of the celebrated Ali Pacha, of Joanina, is fully confirmed.—When his head was exhibited on the gate of the Seraglio, it bore this inscription: "Behold the head separated from the body of that traitor Depsdelendi Ali Pacha, from whose cunning, perfidy and tyranny, the faithful are at length delivered."

The following particulars respecting the death of this daring chieftain, have more the air of probability than any account that has previously reached us.

In consequence of repeated offers made to him by Chourschid Pacha, of the Sultan's pardon, on condition of his surrender, Ali was at length induced to negociate, the result of the negociation was, that an instrument was drawn up and signed by himself and all the seventy Pachas opposed to him, by which he engaged to surrender himself, his fortress, and treasures, on the condition of his receiving the Sultan's pardon. During the interval, while measures were under stood to be in progress for obtaining the promised pardon, both parties remained inactive. At length the arrival of his pardon was announced to Ali, but he received notice at the same time, that it was necessary for him to give up his fortress, &c. before the pardon could be delivered to him. Ali saw now that he was lost but he had already gone too far to allow of his receding. Arrangements were made for giving up the fortress; when possession had been taken, one of the Pachas, with other officers, went to read to Ali his supposed pardon.—Having entered his chamber, they found him surrounded by a few faithful followers, and they announced to him that the Firman of the Sultan contained his death warrant, and recommended to him, as his fate was inevitable, to make no resistance. Ali, on this, drew his pistol, and declaring that he would not allow himself to be taken alive, fired at and wounded the Pacha. A bloody scuffle now ensued between Ali's followers and the Turks, in which Ali received a wound in his breast and fell. His followers, who amounted in number to about 150, were at length overpowered, and most of them shared his fate. His treasure was secured in the place where he himself had deposited it, to wait the pleasure of the Sultan respecting it. The news of this event had scarcely been made known, when most of the Turkish troops dispersed and proceeded immediately to their homes.

TURKEY AND GREECE.

It is well understood that the power of the Sultan and of his ministry is merely nominal, and that no act of the government is permanent without the concurrence of the Janissaries. The sovereignty of Turkey is virtually vested in this Hydra headed power, to the caprice of which the Sultan is merely a tool, and upon which the State Officers are at best but dependants. This military despotism has a feature still ruder than that of any age or nation which history records.—It is not a military power wielded by the hand of a single despot; but the conflicting tyranny of thousands, as blind in their zeal for the Musselman faith as they are cruel and rapacious. The Janissaries, who may justly be assimilated to the degenerate Prætorian Guard of Rome, are anxious for a state of things in which their services will be in requisition, and when every species of rapine and plunder which they may commit will be sanctioned by the necessities of war: besides, their faith inculcates the destruction of Christians, and a war with Russia will both satisfy their rapacity, and gratify their religious propensities. Their belief in the infallability of their religion will not admit a moment's hesitation in consideration of numerical disparity: so deeply impressed are they with the ideas of predestination, so firmly do they believe that no human wisdom, foresight, or valor can avert the sure fate which omnipotence has decreed to man, that their inferences are by no mens drawn upon the same scale with those of Christians; a blinded faith teaches them that man has no agency or controul over his circumstances or destiny, and under such impressions, it is not to be wondered that the scimetar and arquebuss of the Janissaries were more instrumental in forming the decision of the Porte, than the scroll and pen of the Reis Effendi.

When in the commencement of the disturbances in Wallachia and Moldavia, Russia interposed as a mediator, still avowing a determination to support the rights of legitimacy, which was generally supposed to signify the government of Turkey; the act was looked upon as that of the Holy Alliance; but from many circumstances of late, an individuality of interest has been discovered in the measures of Russia and Austria, the two leading powers of that association; the interposition of Austria has been transacted independently of any coalition with Russia; her government has seemingly urged the Porte to accede to the proposals of Russia upon the ground of her separate influence over the Turkish Government, and in no manner as in conjunction with the former. Indeed much so indicate has been apparent on the part of Austria to prevent a war in which either to participate or to be neutral was dangerous. The surprise and disappointment of the Austrian Minister upon receiving the message of the Reis Effendi, will demonstrate the order, with which the Austrian Government had pursued its endeavours to preserve peace, and effect the terms dictated by Russia. It is, however, stated, that Austria will join Russia in the war; probably with an idea of sharing the Lion's skin when he shall have been overthrown. In doing this, there is no risque, as a doubt cannot be entertained of the ultimate success of Russia over the weak and shattered remnants of Turkish power; nor is it to Austria a new policy; during the whole of Buonaparte's reign her only idea of right had its foundation in that of power, and the strongest party was sure of her aid. Doubtless this vacillating disposition remains, and Austria will engage with ardor in a war, to prevent which every nerve was strained.

The Greeks in whose cause the war may be said to have been commenced, seem at present in less need of assistance than at any period during their revolution. Successful on the sea in a very considerable engagement, they have effected an advantage on an element upon which the Turks were most likely to prove formidable. The modern Greeks are emulating the deeds of Lysander and Cymon: and, if travellers may be credited with little more skill or improvement in navigation, than were possessed by their illustrious ancestors.

There are several accounts of the naval action between the Greeks and Turks at the entrance of the Gulph of Lepanto, in which it is stated, the latter were defeated. The battle was a very bloody one. The Turks lost 25 ships of war, and the Greeks 15. It is stated, that the fortress of Corinth surrendered to the Greeks the first week in February.

Trade with the West Indies.—On the 1st inst Mr. ROBINSON, President of the Board of Trade proposed two Resolutions to the House of Commons, in committee, on the subject of the trade with the West Indies

"Mr. ROBINSON did not distinctly present the features of his proposed bills—but mentioned that his purpose was to increase the intercourse of the colonies with Foreign nations, and to put them upon a footing as favourable as the now independent colonies of other powers. He said the commerce might be carried on in British or Foreign ships, those ships being described as ships built in the country and navigated according to the laws of that country. In this way exports from the colonies and imports to them from the Continent and islands of America would be carried on in Foreign and British ships. If any differences were attempted to be made, the only consequence would be that foreign powers would make the same difference with respect to British vessels.—He developed the advantages of a free trade, and after some conversation the motion was agreed to."

The resolutions to bring in two Bills were then proposed and passed with much unanimity. The restricted trade has for a long time past been enforced by the Edinbro' Review, and we have lately remarked that the Quarterly Review which had always professed and defended opposite principles, had also in a recent instance strongly recommended a free trade in Corn, and proposed a gradual reduction, so that restriction might in a few years be entirely supplanted.—It was easy to see what, together with other writings, would be the ultimate effect on the minds of the public men of England, when the two most popular and valuable periodical works in Europe defended the same principles; and it may now, perhaps, be fairly said, that these principles will form an essential part of the future commercial policy of Great Britain.

One of the Bills alluded to above, has for its object to regulate the intercourse of British North America, and America generally with the West Indies; and the other, to regulate the intercourse between British North America and the West In-tries with other parts of the world, this, it is evident, is intending British North America and the West Indies to have intercourse with other parts of the world, or why talk of regulating that intercourse? in other words, it is the intention of allowing the British American Colonies to trade with other than British possessions, and vice versa, subject,it may be supposed, to certain regulations.

Every thing seems to indicate that these Bills may pass—If they do, they will materially change the direction of our commerce. perhaps in due time some of the articles of commerce themselves, and send our vessels to almost every port of the known world.—The enterprize and intelligence o merchants will no doubt soon discover new sources of profitable trade, and the measure perhaps may not essentially affect the actual prosperity of the country

The Timber Trade to England without some prejudicial alteration in the Lumber Act, will not be superseded; nor yet the expensive and exclusive introduction of British Manufactures, which are cheaper and superior to those of any other country; so that the greater part of our trade would continue in its usual course, bo-editing the mother country, while that which could not before be carried on at all, or only upon the most unfavourable terms, would find some other channel, at once doing us a material ben-fit. The spirit of hazardous speculation would grow up among our merchants, and they would gradually in that sense be more nearly assimilated to those of the extensive trading towns in other parts of the world We believe that the petitions from the Colonies have had some effect in suggesting the measure, so that if we are allowed to trade with foreign nations, it is only what we have asked for, and the consequences, good or bad, partly are to be attributed to ourselves.

SUGGESTED ON A WORK recently Published, and entitled

"OBSERVATIONS ON THE STATE OF THE COLONY."

No. VII.

Old Play.

We are really and unaffectedly sick of the falsehoods of this writer, for every page of his performance teems with them; and, were it not that we consider it our duty to remove the impression some of his statements have so strong a tendency to make, we should throw down his pamphlet in disgust. But the duty is imperious, and we must discharge it

He says that emigrants very often purchase lands from Government "at a price far beyond what is asked by land holders in the most eligible situations."! Does he conceive that assertions of this nature are to pass current for truths? Who is this chameleon man that dares to utter such untruths in the face of an intelligent and well informed public? He has some reason to congratulate himself on the freedom of the press, when it allows the utterance of falsehoods so shamleable, and a public exhibition of effrontery so unparalleled. One fact would be worth a thousand assertions. Let him enumerate the most eligible situations, and those landholders who would sell them "at a price far below the Government fees;" we will undertake to find purchasers for them all.

This assertion is, however, so far from being the truth, that even in the new settlements, lands situated more than twenty miles from any market, have been sold in a great many instances at 2 per acre, the purchaser to bear the expence and risk of the settlement duty Other instances we know, in Carden and Monaghan, where from 4 to 6 per acre have been paid in cash at the time of sale: and, at a sale which recently took place by public auction, for cash, and where no credit could be given, lands in a wild state, to the northward of the Rice Lake, sold for very nearly 2 per acre. So that, it must be obvious to the most ordinary understanding, if Government sell their lands "at a price far beyond what is asked by landholders in the most eligible situations," under the "delusive term of fees," they must receive at least 3 per acre. An absurdity and falsehood too great even for comment.

But, supposing it to be a fact that Government really do ask in fees more than lands can be bought for by private sale, which in general, is by no means the case, (we say in general, because there may still be, as there have been, instances where needy persons will make almost any sacrifice, for the sake of obtaining money,) they may have an object in view very far beyond the gains of this right eloquent and sagacious author! That, if they should view a widely scattered population, as many great statesmen have done rather as an evil than as a benefit certainly an evil to the individuals, and a weakness in the body politic! What, if they purposely lay heavy fees on the large grants, (clearly to their own disadvantage, according to the reasoning of this author) in order to induce men to purchase lands in the more eligible, if not the most eligible situations, nearer to, and in the midst of, the old settlements, for the purpose of condensing and packing, the population into a strong cordon along the frontier, in order to form a better rampart and a stronger barrier against an invading foe; but if a rich man, a man with adequate means, will go back into the forest, let him pay for it; he is made acquainted with the terms, and cannot afterwards say, under any colour of justice, that he has been beguiled into expenses, difficulties and perplexities, of which he was unlicensed. We have not taken our pen for the purpose of advocating the system of high fees, but for the purpose of preventing the ignorant and unwary from being misled by the false statements of this author; yet, we cannot help remarking that if the present high fees on the larger grants had no other effect than that of consolidating the poorer and most numerous classes of society, by placing four families on 200 acres of land that were formerly given to one family; and, bringing other lands, long since granted to individuals, who could make no use of them, into market, and increasing the amount of the assessment rolls; and giving additional strength and support to Government; it is no light advantage that has been gained.

It has been remarked by a very eminent Naturalist that, with but few exceptions amongst the animal creation, it has pleased the great Author of our being to limit the faculties of those creatures which possess the most cunning, whilst to extraordinary degree of sagacity and quickness of perception is given to those which are the most useful; and the Lion, the Tiger, the Migator, and the Rattlesnake, have not those superior gifts of mental power which distinguish the Elephant, the Camel, the Horse, and the Dog. Amongst man there are nearly as many shades of difference, as amongst the inferior animals. Experience alone would teach us that all men have not five talents But the one talent may glorify him who gave it, if it is not buried in the earth, or suffered to corrode. How clear; how brilliant; how comprehensive; how commanding were the talents of BACON—MILTON—LOCKE—and NEWTON! How dim, how replete with the most wretched sophistry, how revolting to common sense, and how repugnant to common honesty, to morality of religion and morality, were the narrow views of PAINE and COBBET, and a cloud of inferior assailants of all that is great and good! We do not very well know in what class to range the book under review, who has brought after immortality through the narrow and crooked defiles of this miserable pamphlet on the State of the Colony; but, we are very thankful that his talents are not commensurate with his desire for mischief;—he does indeed see through a glass dark ly; he is in a perpetual fog, where the appearance of object is continually changing; one while a mole-hill suddenly rises to the magnitude of a mountain, and the mountain as suddenly sinks into nothingness; at one time he seems to despise a little stone against which he has run his foot; then in a moment it becomes a vast overhanging cliff. ready to fall down and crush a whole people; what is one moment is holy and beautiful, in another is wicked and deformed; common things are made uncommon; men of sound sense and of plain human shape become giants and monsters; and spectres, and hobgoblins, and ruin and devastation stalk around him on every side, and bound his view in every direction:—May God have mercy upon him, and restore his wandering faculties to consistency, and make him at least a harmless, if not an useful animal!

*After repeatedly telling us that Government sell their lands "Under the delusive term of fees" for much more than they are worth—and the highest fees charged in his schedule is a very little more than $1 per acre, he gives us what is very rare in account, a FACT, that some lands were lately sold at a public vendue at various prices from $2 to $7 per acre! We suppose he alludes to the confiscated lands; but the man writes with so much obscurity in this passage (page 6 of his work) that we confess we were obliged to read it over two or three times before we could be satisfied we understood his meaning. Nay this may be logic, but if it is it is not logic "for unlearned"! It may be possible that one can could be found so great a fool as to go and buy a thing at auction for a price greatly beyond what it was worth; but that a great number of persons, to various parts of the province, should at such public sales and unnecessarily give more than the lands were worth would be strange indeed: and we are all a pack of fools together and the splendid character who is the author of the work before us, is alone the wise man. But, perhaps, according to the sublimities of his wise acre, a sum between 3 and $7, which according to the general sense of the people, appears to have been the average value of the lands sold, is far less in amount than a fraction more than $1, asked for lands in remote and wild the term of fees!*

But many are the contradictions, and strange are the inferences drawn by this writer. His statement, if believed, would go to prove that land is the most eligible situation that is not worth more than half a dollar an acre, and then he tells us as to how the Right Hon. Lord MANSFIELD, who is one of the Cabinet Ministers, through an agent informed a certain emigrant, that one of Mr. GUELBURN'S well known circular letters would enable the Lieut. Governor of Upper Canada to get him, the said emigrant, to possession of lands worth at least 1,000! Did his Lordship receive for the person alluded to, an order for 4,000 acres? Such is the natural inference;—nay, according to the author's present reasoning, it ought to have put him in possession of 8,000 acres! yet it is well known, that Government here can only grant to the extent of 1200 acres to any individual.

We have frequently been asked our opinion as to the number of Emigrants that may be expected to arrive in Canada, from the Mother Country during the present season.—We know of nothing more likely to occasion a preference in favour of this country, so far, at least, as regards Scotch Emigrants, than the recent publication of Mr. HOWISON'S work, which is so highly spoken of in Blackwood's Magazine, and other periodical publications, that it can scarcely fail to excite very general attention; and, Mr. Howison's remarks on this important subject are not only sensible and elaborate; but, on the whole, very favourable to this country.—His reviewers acknowledge there is a necessity for emigration and observe "it is most consolatory to be assured by such a man as Mr. Howison, that by emigrating to Upper Canada, a man in the power of any industrious man to purchase by the labour of three or four years, the certainty of a comfortable subsistence for himself and the whole of his family, during all the rest of their days."

"It seems to be made out quite clearly and convincingly, that any industrious family, who can command a capital of £20 or £30, may safely embark for Canada, and nourish the hope of not seeing themselves elevated into a situation of comfort and independence, altogether unknown among the poorer classes of our countrymen here in Britain, while the man who is in possession of twice as much money, cannot fail, unless through the most culpable negligence on his own part, to establish himself in the course of a very few years in a manner far more than adequate to secure all the purposes for which any Scotchman ever emigrates, or thinks of emigrating, from his native shores." Such remarks cannot fail to make a deep impression. We are only sorry that Mr. Howison has himself was not induced to become a permanent settler—Ed.

P. S. As the Advertisements of this week occupy more space than was anticipated by the Editors, in their intention to publish a Supplement to the present number, in order that the subscribers may not lose any part of the news, or information, it was determined to give them.

Supplement to the Seventh Number
OF THE
WEEKLY REGISTER.
Delivered to Subscribers Gratis.

SATURDAY, JUNE, 1, 1822.

We wish to apprise our country subscribers, who may not have an opportunity of seeing many periodical publications, that we do not intend they shall ever be subscribers in consequence of our being favoured with numerous, or lengthy advertisements. We eat our own case, and that we lived in a retired situations, and could not afford to subscribe to more than one Newspaper, we should instantly decline taking it when we found it filled only with advertisements. Whatever may be the causes which induce a man to get out of the bustle of the world, he generally wishes to know what is going forward in the gay or busy throng. Whenever our advertisements are so numerous, or so lengthy, as to narrow that space of our paper intended for general Politics or Literature too much, we shall add a Supplement, as in the present instance, which will be delivered to our subscribers without any additional charge.

A short time since, the Observer expressed his happiness that we had announced our intention of commenting on his remarks, upon the subject of appointing the Attorney General a Commissioner for the affairs of this Province in England. We are not aware that we ever did announce any such intention; however, we have no objection to im part happiness, even to such a wayward wight as the Observer, and we would have granted him this indulgence in the present Supplement, along with some remarks we have to make, shewing to what a sad and lamentable condition the Members of the House of Assembly will reduce themselves, if they continue to pay a man for lampooning them, and turning all their speeches into ridicule. But our Foreman tells us that the paper for this week is already full, so that we must postpone the intended treat, as well as some remarkable specimens of ebbing and flowing loyalty. We trust, in this instance, that "hope deferred" will not make the heart sick!

FRANCE.

Paris dates of the 31st of March state, that the rebel General Berthon was then at large, notwithstanding all that was said about the great efforts making to capture him, and the high price put upon his head. He is stated to have been in some measure concerned in the plot at Rochelle, and to have very recently shown himself at a fair with seven others well armed, and endeavoring to get new recruits. When he passed through Thours, he had with him an iron box, which it is estimated, contained one hundred thousand francs. Persons, who a few days previously, were in penury, had all at once been observed to possess sufficient to supply their wants.

The aspect of French affairs is still gloomy in the extreme—It appears that the new laws with respect to the Press had gone into operation—much excitement was felt on occasion of the apprehension of Mr. Bodin, suspected of being in the plot of General Berthon, to whom he had formerly been Aid de-Camp; and from whom, two letters were found in his possession. He was arrested while on the point of setting out on a journey;—one account says while suggesting a vessel near Brest, in which it was supposed Berthon himself intended to escape. Many Piedmontese Refugees have been implicated in the insurrection and arrested. "Domiciliary visits" are very common, most generally followed by arrests. An individual was apprehended in the department of the Sarthe for General Berthon; but it proved to be a mistake.

The state of the periodical press in France has determined several French literati of the first eminence to commence a Literary Magazine in the French language in London. Literature, Science, the useful and elegant Arts, Poetry, and Criticism, will constitute its prominent features, and its political details will be strictly limited to facts. It will in truth be a mirror of current French literature. The first number was expected to appear on the 1st of March.

A duel has taken place between two deputies of the French Chamber of Deputies, M. Lefont and Gen. Semle, in consequence of an interruption by the latter, in the midst of a violent harangue against the liberals denouncing them as being destitute of Justice or generosity and as unwilling to acknowledge the royal clemency. Gen. Semle rose and in a loud voice exclaimed, "You are a contemtible fellow and it is I who tell you so." This occurred on the 29th of March, and next day they ought with pistols, and having each fired three times without injury, the seconds parted them.

NOTICES,
Literary and Scientific.

MR. PERRY'S LIBRARY.—The magnificent Mazarine Bible, in Mr. Perry's Library, was sold on Thursday se'night by Evans, for 160 guineas; it was purchased by Bohte, the German bookseller, and, as it was understood for his Royal highness the Duke of Sussex.

The Variorum Classics, absolutely produced a larger amount than they originally cost Mr. Perry. They sold for nearly £6000. The Dolphin Latin Classics, in one lot, £16215s Harman's Caveat for Common Cursetors, vulgarly called Vagaboons, 1567, £19 10s. XII. Merry Jests of the Wyddow Edith, in verse, 1573, £16 10s. Jesuits Miracles, or New Popish Wonders, a Poem, 1607, £4 16s. Jack Jugler and Thesytes, interludes reprinted by Mr. Haselwood for the Roxburghe Club, £3 13s. 6d.—The company was very numerous and some of the most distinguished persons in the country as regards both title and taste, were among the purchasers of the Classics. The bijoux of the Olden Time were contended for with more than usual avidity.

A lyric poem on the death of Bonaparte, worthy, as the Constitution says, of the subject, and of Pindar, has been published in Paris. The author is M. P. Lebrun, author of "Mary Stuart."

One of the Liverpool papers, describing the powers of Madame Catalani's voice, says, "Such was the torrent of sound she emitted at one moment, that the glass globules pendant from the central chandelier, were powerfully agitated, and struck against each other."

The Thermometer, through the winter, has ranged between 40 degrees and 50 degrees; and not more than once or twice has any ice been seen, while there has been no snow in Middlesex.—Under these circumstances, vegetation was never more forward and promising, and most articles have appeared in Covent Garden Market a month earlier than usual.—London paper.

STEAM CARRIAGES!—A patent has been recently secured by Mr. Griffith, of Brompton, a gentleman not unknown in the literary world, by his travels in Asia Minor, and other works. Mr G. in connection with a professor of mechanics on the Continent, has at length solved the long considered problem of propelling, by steam, carriages capable of transporting merchandise, and also passengers, upon common roads, without the aid of horses. The actual construction of such a carriage is now proceeding at the manufactory of Messrs. Braman.—The power to be applied in this machine is equal to that of six horses, and the carriage altogether will be 28 feet in length, running upon three inch wheels, and equal to the conveyance of three tons and a half, with a velocity of from three to seven miles per hour, varied at pleasure. The vast importance in a political and social sense, of the introduction of such machines, on all our great roads, must be evident. The saving in carriage of goods will be 50 per cent, & for passengers inside fares will be taken at the outside prices. The universal importance of this great triumph of the mechanical arts has led Mr. Griffith to take out patents in Austria and France; one carriage has actually been launched at Vienna, and operates with success. By availing himself of various improvements, in the transfer, regulation and economy of force, all the usual objections are removed, such as the ascent of hills, securing a supply of fuel and water; and, in fine, the danger of explosion is prevented, not only by the safety valve, but by the distribution of the steam into tubes, so as to render any possible explosion wholly unimportant.—Every carriage will be provided with a director of the fore wheels sitting in front, and with a director of the steams apparatus sitting in the rear, and the body of the vehicle will be situated between the fore wheels and the machinery.

Jenning's Guns.—A curious invention in fire-arms, has lately been completed by an ingenious mechanic of this place, by the name of Isaiah Jennings; on the point of importance, both for public and private use, is probably not equalled by any invention of the present age. It is a single barrel and lock, stocked in the usual style, and is perfectly simple, safe and convenient. The number of charges may be extended to fifteen, or even twenty; the discharge being under as complete control as a single charge in an ordinary gun, and may be fired in the space of two seconds to a charge, or at longer intervals, at the option of the possessor, with the same accuracy and force as any other gun. The principle can be applied to any musket rifle, fowling piece or pistol, which can be made to fire from two to twelve times, without adding any thing to the incumbrance of the piece, except 5 or 6 ounces to its weight. Thus the soldier is put in possession of a gun out of which he can throw twelve or fifteen charges at his enemy, at the Commencement of an engagement, as fast as he can cock and pull the triger, and be left in possession of a simple gun, to load and fire single charges, like any other gun, with the advantage of its priming itself. The cavalry may be furnished with holster pistols, containing five or six charges, which can be used on horseback with the same convenience as ordinary pistols. The navy can be furnished with muskets for marines in close engagements, and boarding pistols unequalled by any thing in naval warfare. In defending a breach the power of ten men is concentrated in one, and in arming our small garrisons on the Indian frontiers, their power might be increased four fold, at an inconsiderable expense; and as a defence against the pirates that now throng our neighboring waters, two or three of these guns in the hands of skilful marksmen, would be able to cut off a whole boat's crew, before they could succeed in boarding a vessel.

As a sporting or hunting gun, its advantages are not unimportant. It enables the sportsman to meet a flock with twice the advantage of a double barrel gun, without any of its incumbrances and it enables the hunter to meet his game in any emergency.—This gun has been shown to many of the principal officers of our navy and army, and has been highly approved of, and indeed no one who has seen a fair exhibition of its powers, has ever been able to find an objection to it. It will shortly be offered to our government, and we trust it will meet the attention it merits. A manufactory of these guns is established at No. 51 Fulton Street, where any one is at liberty to call and satisfy himself as to the correctness of this statement.—N. Y. E Post.

Commercial and Political.

The East India Company.—The first order of the East India Company for the importation of tea was in 1667–8 it was for the in agents to send one hundred pounds weight only! In 1814, the quantity of tea consumed in England was 24,640,000; yielding a revenue to the government of more than four millions sterling!

A singular circumstance occurred at the Auction Mart on Friday Feb. 28, in the sale of some Stock of the Hudson's Bay Company The whole amount to be sold was somewhat exceeding £7800, which was put up in lots of £100 each. The first lot was knocked down at £103, but a gradual advance took place on all those which succeeded it, so that the last lot but one was purchased at £255. The last lot which was for £107 Stock, was knocked down at £281, and would probably have produced more, but that it was supposed to be an even £100 in Stock, as the rest of the lots were. The present interest paid on the Stock is only 4 per cent, and the advantages expected to accrue from the union with the North-West Company are believed to have given to it the increased value above mentioned. The disproportion in price between the first and last lot, is still difficult to account for.

The consumption of Port Wine in England which has annually diminished since the peace with France, has of course occasioned a more limited importation of it from year to year. The Oporto merchants, have however hit upon an expedient, by which the demand has, for the present, become as brisk as during those times of fancied prosperity, when every man conceived himself entitled to his bottle.—They state that the wines of the vintages of 1820 are short in quantity, but more highly and peculiarly flavoured than any others which Portugal has produced for many years.—This ingenious stratagem has had its effect, and the price in bond has advanced from £10 to £15 per pipe for what are denominated fair wines. The gross quantity shipped from Oporto, in the year 1815, was 24,655 pipes.

Vauxhall-gardens were lately sold by auction, at the Mart, for £20,000. The anxiety of the public was so great, that the largest room in the establishment could not accommodate half the audience who were assembled. Mr. G. Robins stated, that it was possible to realise a profit of £30,000 in one year, while the greatest loss the proprietors had ever experienced was £830 in two rainy seasons.

Trade is so bad at Hamburgh, that abundance of money may be had so low as at the rate of 1½ per cent, per annum.

Cobbett's Gridiron.—This work is advertised in the Morning Chronicle, purporting to be written :—

"To Warn Farmers of their Danger; and to put Landholders, Mortgagers, Lenders, Borrowers, the Labouring, and indeed All Classes of the Community upon their guard

The object has been, to present the People of England, Scotland, and Ireland, with a sort of Text Book, which may be conned over at their fire sides, be taken to all their public meetings, and be read with advantage from every market cross and church porch in the kingdom. A sale of 100,000 copies is calculated on; and the press will be kept standing until the 1st of May, in order that the most remote parts of the kingdom may be supplied"

The name of this work arose from a very whimsical circumstance—Cobbet had laid a wager that, if a certain event did not take place he would broil himself on a Gridiron He has therefore kept his word, and put his Gridiron into operation

POETRY.

The following sublime effusion has never before been published. We are indebted for it to a gentleman, whose taste is not less refined, than his judgment is solid and his knowledge various. We are sure that all our readers will be grateful for such a treat. It affords a rich and beautiful display of genius, on a subject worthy the incense of an inspired bard.—Ed.

HYMN BEFORE SUN-RISE,

In the Vale of Chamouny, Switzerland.

ORIGINAL.

Hast thou a power to stay the morning star
In his steep course?—so long he seems to pause
On thy bald, awful head—O, Sovran Blanc!
The Arve and Arveiron at thy base
Rave ceaselessly; but thou, most awful form,
Risest from forth thy silent sea of pines,
How silently! Around thee, and above,
Deep in the air, and dark, transpicuous, black,
An ebon mass—Methinks thou piercest it
As with a wedge; but when I look again,
It is thine own calm home—thy chrystal shrine—
Thy habitation from eternity.
O dread and silent mount, I gazed upon thee,
Till thou, still present to my bodily sense,
Didst vanish from my thought; entranc'd in prayer
I worship'd the Invisible alone.

Yet, like some sweet beguiling melody,
So sweet, we know not we are listening to it,
Thou, the mean while, was blending with my thoughts,
Yea with my life, and life's own secret joy;
Till the dilating soul, enrapt, transfused
Into the mighty vision passing—there,
As in her natural form, swelled vast to heaven!
Awake my soul, not only passive praise
Thou mast, not alone, these swelling tears,
Mute thanks, and secret ecstasy—awake,
Voice of sweet song, awake my heart, awake,
Green vales, and icy cliffs, all join my hymn!

Thou first and chief, sole sovran of the vale,
O struggling with the darkness all the night,
And visited all night with troops of stars,
"Or when they climb the sky, or when they sink,"
Companion of the morning star at dawn,
Co herald, wake, O wake, and utter praise!
Who sunk thy countless pillars deep in earth?
Who filled thy countenance with rosy light?
Who made thee parent of perpetual streams?

And you ye five wild torrents, fiercely glad,
Who called you forth from night and utter death,
From dark and icy caverns called you forth,
Down these precipitous, black jagged rocks,
For ever shatter'd and the same for ever?
Who gave you invulnerable life,—
Your strength, your speed, your fury, and your joy—
Unceasing thunder and eternal foam?
And who commanded, and the silence came,
"Here let the billows stiffen, and have rest"?

Ye ice falls—ye that from the mountain's brow
Adown enormous ravings, slope amain
Torrents, methinks, that heard a mighty voice,
And stopp'd at once amid their maddest plunge.
Motionless torrents!—silent cataracts!
Who made you glorious as the gates of heaven
Beneath the keen full moon?—Who bade the sun
Clothe you with rainbows?—Who with living flowers
Of loveliest blue, spread garlands at your feet?

God!—let the torrents, like a shout of nations,
Answer—and let the ice plains echo God!—
God!—sing ye meadow streams with gladsome voice;
Ye pine groves with your soft and soul-like sounds;
—And they too have a voice—yon piles of snow,
And in their perilous fall thunder God!

Ye living flowers that skirt the eternal frost;
Ye wild goats sporting round the eagle's nest;
Ye eagles, play-mates of the mountain storm;
Ye lightnings, the dread arrows of the clouds;
Ye signs and wonders of the elements,
Utter forth God! and fill the hills with praise.

Once more hear mount! with thy sky-pointing peaks
Oft from whose feet the avalanche unheard
Shoots downward—glittering in the blue serene,
Into the depth of clouds that veil thy breast.

Thou too once more—stupendous mountain, thou,
That as I raise my head, awhile bow'd low
In adoration—upward from thy base
Slow travelling—with dim eyes suffused with tears,
Solemnly seemest, like a vapouring cloud,
To rise before me—rise, oh! ever rise;
Rise like a cloud of incense from the earth,
Thou kingly spirit, throne among the hills,
Thou dread ambassador from earth to heaven,
Great Hierarch! tell thou the silent sky—
And tell the stars—and tell you rising sun,
Earth, with her thousand voices, praises God!

NATURAL HISTORY.

The Lord of the creation plumes himself upon his powers of invention, and machines to which they have given birth, not aware that "He who teacheth man knowledge," has instructed these despised insects to anticipate him in many of them.—The builders of Babel doubtless thought their invention of turning earth into artificial stone a very happy discovery; yet a little bee* had practised this art, using indeed a different process, on a small scale, and the white ants on a large one, ever since the world began. Man thinks that he stands unrivalled as an architect, and that his buildings are without a parallel among the works of the inferior orders of animals. He would be of a different opinion did he attend to the history of insects; he would find that many of them have been architects from time immemorial: that they have had their houses divided into various apartments, and containing staircases, gigantic arches, domes, colonades, and the like; nay, that even tunnels are excavated by them so immense, compared with their own size, as to be twelve times bigger than that projected by Mr. Dodd to be carried under the Thames at Gravesend†

The modern fine Lady, who prides herself on the lustre and beauty of the scarlet hangings which adorn the state apartments of her drawing room, or the carpets that cover its floor, fancying that nothing so rich and splendid was ever seen before, and pitying her ruder ancestors, who were doomed to unsightly white wash and rushes, is ignorant all the while, that before she or her ancestors were in existence, and even before the Tyrian Dye was discovered, a little insect had known how to hang the walls of its cell with tapestry of a scarlet more brilliant than any her rooms can exhibit,‡ and that others daily weave silken carpets, both in texture and texture infinitely superior to those she so much admires. Other arts (as we shall shew in some of our succeeding numbers) have been equally forestalled, by these creatures Kirby and Spences Etomology.

Unconquerable Spirit of the ENGLISH BELL DOG.

We never witnessed such an instance of the unconquerable ferocity of this savage animal as on Monday last. A large dog of this species, from some cause that was not observed, suddenly flew at a fine cart horse that was standing at the end of the salt house Dock, and fixing his lacerating teeth in his shoulder, defied every effort to get him off. At first he was beaten with cart whips and sticks, with such fury as seemed enough to break his bones; but this being unavailing, a carpenter, with an adze in his hand, came up, and beat him with the blunt iron head of the instrument, till it was thought he had pounded him to a jelly, but the dog never moved a tooth. A man then took up a large pointed clasp knife, with which he stabbed him repeatedly in the back, loins and ribs, but with no better success. At length, one of the spectators who happened to have more strength of sinew and arm than the rest, squeezed the ferocious beast so tightly about the throat, that at length he turned up the white of his eyes, and relaxed his jaws. The man threw him off to a distance, but the dog immediately went round the crowd, got behind the horse, and again seized him by the under part of the thigh. As no terms could now be kept with this untameable brute, he was again loosened, and thrown into the dock to drown. He instantly, however, rose to the surface, when a sailor struck him a deadly blow on the head with a handspike, which again sent him to the bottom. He rose once more and was again sent down in the same manner, and this process was repeated five or six times. At length, one of the by standers who either possessed or assumed some right of property in the dog, overcome by his amazing tenacity for life, and weary of persecution, got him out, and walked off with this prodigy of English Courage, to all appearance very little worse for the horrible conflict he had undergone.—Liverpool Advertiser.

AGRICULTURE.

As it is now the season for trying the experiment; we earnestly request the serious attention of our agricultural friends towards a subject which they will find of great importance. We have made the experiment detailed below, and know that, in favourable seasons, the results will far exceed those stated in the Boston Palladium, upwards of TEN TONS of the finest, and most succulent, fodder may be obtained from a single acre of good land, by a method similar to the one now detailed. We believe that this practice would succeed in many parts of the South and West of England, where crops of Maize do not generally succeed, merely because the summer heat is not sufficiently intense to ripen the grain.—Ed.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER ON THE SUBJECT OF SOWING INDIAN CORN FOR FODDER.

"I have found the advantages of sowing Indian Corn for fodder so many, that I hope it will be brought into general use. The quantity which can be produced on an acre, when compared to any other fodder, is immense, and the quality (if cut in proper season, and well cured) is superior to the best hay.

The manner in which I proceeded, is to plough the land as is usual for corn, and about the same time. Then lay it off into furrows a foot wide, and two and half feet distant from each other, so as to admit a small horse plough between the rows.—Spread manure into the furrows, and then sow southern corn on the manure, so that the seed may be about six or seven inches apart, and cover them the same depth as corn is when planted. Where corn will afford a much greater quantity than northern corn.

When the corn is about eight or ten inches high, it will be proper to pass a horse plough up and down each row. Hoe up all the large weeds, and cover the small ones. It is important that this ploughing and weeding be done well.

About the middle of July it will be fit to mow, which should be done while it is succulent, and before it spindles; for if it is not cut early, it exhausts the land unnecessarily, and the stalk grows hard and tough, and loses its nutritive quality, consequently be comes unfit for use. Care should be taken not to cut it too near the ground, for it will sprout again, and in September you will have another crop. The value of this kind of fodder, more than any other, depends on the success of curing it, as rain or dew injures it extremely. If possible, it should be carried where it could be placed under covering during a shower, or thrown into stacks and as soon as it is sufficiently cured, it should be immediately housed for the winter use—when cattle or horses will prefer it to the best and sweetest clover.

If, in consequence of spring drought, you should apprehend that your crop of hay will fall short of the necessary quantity to support your cattle thro' the ensuing winter, you can "break up" a piece of land even as late as June, sow it with corn as above described, and it will produce you, if a good season, eight tons of excellent fodder to the acre. If your pastures are parched with heat, and afford little feed, which often occurs in July and August, you can provide against the exigency by appropriating in the spring a portion of land for the cultivation of this article, to be used as green fodder.—You will be abundantly repaid in an abundant quantity of rich milk from your cows, and your butter will be as sweet as a violet, without sugar, and as yellow as gold without any assistance from dye-stuffs.

GYPSUM.—A valuable bed of Gypsum has been lately found in the bank of Niagara River, a few miles below the Falls.

ANECDOTES.

A few years since, when Mr. Coutts was residing at Clifton, with Lady Guildford, he used to walk up Park street, when the carriage generally took him in at the top. As his dress and appearance had more the costume of a decayed gentleman than a rich banker, he was mistaken one day, whilst walking to and fro waiting for the carriage, for a person of the former discription, by a benevolent clergyman, who lived in Park-street, and who having noticed his anxious looks, and somewhat worn apparel, sent a servant to him with 5s. The wealthy banker smiled, and returned his thanks, with an assurance that he was not in immediate want.

When we saw in the papers an account of poor Mrs. C. bewailing the loss of her old, dear, and doting lord, it carried our recollection to former days, when we always thought her a very respectable actress.—London Paper.

Aupe, the Turk, who appeared at the last Maidstone Assizes, against certain persons for robbing him, was a young man of very fine and expressive countenance, and with all the energy and vivacity so natural to Asiatics; the manner in which he gave his testimony was a most pleasing display of expressive action and change of countenance. It was a fine study for an actor. His story could be read in his action.—When he was sworn, he took, with every appearance of profound veneration, his Alcoran from his bosom. It was carefully enveloped in a long piece of silk. An officer was about to take the book from his hand, when the believer in Mahomet displayed great agitation. The base idea of the holy volume being defiled by the hand of a Christian, seemed to fill him with horror The blood rushed into his cheeks, his eyes flushed fire, and he evinced the strongest marks of indignation. His attitude, the peculiarity of his dress, and the other circumstances of his situation, threw around him an interest which was extremely gratifying to an attentive observer. The gestures of the indignant mussulman were understood, and his book remained untouched by the hands of unbelievers. When he was desired by the interpreter to swear, he lifted his eyes to HEAVEN, with a solemn seriousness, as if addressing a short and silent prayer to Alla, after which he opened his Alcoran, put it to his lips, then to his forehead, and lastly above his head. To judge from appearances, he seemed to be most seriously impressed with a sense of that solemnity of his appeal to the Prophet, to witness the truth of the circumstances he was about to detail. When informed of the result of the trial, he evinced great satisfaction.

A certain Chief Justice, on hearing an ass bray, interrupted the late Mr. Curran, in his speech to the Jury, by saying "one at a time, Mr Curran if you please."—The speech being finished, the Judge began his charge, and during its progress, he ass sent forth the full charge of his lungs, whereupon the advocate said, "does not your lordship bear a remarkable echo in the Court?"

A Coachman's Conscience.—A hackney coachman appeared before the Bench, upon a summons to answer a complaint of a gentleman from whom he had extorted seven shillings and sixpence for a four shilling fare!

"How could you think of attempting such an impudent extortion?" asked the Magistrate.

"Why, your worship, I thought the gentleman was in a hurry, and would not stand higgling about a trifle."

INDEX AT END

to fire from two to twelve times, without adding any thing to the incumbrance of the piece, except 5 or 6 ounces to its weight. Thus the soldier is put in possession of a gun out of which he can throw twelve or fifteen charges at his enemy, at the Commencement of an engagement, as fast as he can cock and pull the triger, and be left in possession of a simple gun, to load and fire single charges, like any other gun, with the advantage of its priming tube. The cavalry may be furnished with holster pistols, containing fire or six charges, which can be used on horseback with the same convenience as ordinary pistols. The navy can be furnished with muskets for marines in close engagements, and boarding pistols unequalled by any thing in naval warfare. In defending a breach the power of ten men is concentred in one, and in arming our small garrisons on the Indian frontiers, their power might be increased four told, at an inconsiderable expense; and as a defence against the pirates that now throng our neighboring waters, two or three of these guns in the hands of skilful marksmen, would be able to cut off a whole boat's crew, before they could succeed in boarding a vessel.

As a sporting or hunting gun, its advantages are not unimportant. It enables the sportsman to meet a flock with twice the advantage of a double barrel gun, without any of its incumbrances and it enables the hunter to meet his game in any emergency.—This gun has been shown to many of the principal officers of our navy and army, and has been highly approved of, and indeed no one who has seen a fair exhibition of its powers, has ever been able to find an objection to it. It will shortly be offered to our government, and we trust it will meet the attention it merits. A manufactory of these guns is established at No. 51 Fulton street, where any one is at liberty to call and satisfy himself as to the correctness of this statement.—N. Y. E Post.

Commercial and Political.

The East India Company.—The first order of the East India Company for the importation of tea was in 1667–8 it was for their agents to send one hundred pounds weight only! In 1814, the quantity of tea consumed in England was 24,640,000; yielding a revenue to the government of more than four millions sterling!

A singular circumstance occurred at the Auction Mart on Friday Feb. 28, in the sale of some Stock of the Hudson's Bay Company. The whole amount to be sold was somewhat exceeding £7800, which was put up in lots of £100 each. The first lot was knocked down at £103, but a gradual advance took place on all those which succeeded it, so that the last lot but one was purchased at £255. The last lot which was for £107 Stock, was knocked down at £261, and would probably have produced more, but that it was supposed to be an even £100 in Stock, as the rest of the lots were. The present interest paid on the Stock is only 4 per cent, and the advantages expected to accrue from the union with the North-West Company are believed to have given to it the increased value above mentioned. The disproportion in price between the, first and last lot, is still difficult to account for.

The consumption of Port Wine in England which has annually diminished since the peace with France, has of course occasioned a more limited importation of it from year to year. The Oporto merchants, have however hit upon an expedient, by which the demand has, for the present, become as brisk as during those times of fancied prosperity, when every man conceived himself entitled to six bottle.—They state that the wines of the vintages of 1820 are short in quantity, but more highly and peculiarly flavoured than any others which Portugal has produced for many years.—This ingenious stratagem has had its effect, and the price in bond has advanced from £10 to £15 per pipe for what are denominated fair wines. The gross quantity shipped from Oporto, in the year 1813, was 24,655 pipes.

Vauxhall-gardens were lately sold by auction, at the Mart, for £20,000. The anxiety of the public was so great, that the largest room in the establishment could not accommodate half the audience who were assembled. Mr. G. Robins stated, that it was possible to realise a profit of £30,000 a one year, while the greatest loss the proprietors had ever experienced was £830 in two rainy seasons.

Trade is so bad at Hamburgh, that abundance of money may be had so low as at the rate of 1½ per cent, per annum.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER ON THE SUBJECT OF SOWING INDIAN CORN FOR FODDER.

"I have found the advantages of sowing Indian Corn for fodder so many, that I hope it will be brought into general use. The quantity which can be produced on an acre, when compared to any other fodder, is immense, and the quality (if cut in proper season, and well cured) is superior to the best hay.

The manner in which I proceeded, is to plough the land as is usual for corn, and about the same time. Then lay it off into furrows a foot wide, and two and half feet distant from each other, so as to admit a small horse plough between the rows.—Spread manure into the furrows, and then sow southern corn on the manure, so that the seed may be about six or seven inches apart, and cover them the same depth as corn is when planted. Southern corn will afford a much greater quantity than northern corn.

When the corn is about eight or ten inches high, it will be proper to pass a horse plough up and down each row. Hoe up all the large weeds, and cover the small ones. It is important that this ploughing and weeding be done well.

About the middle of July it will be fit to mow, which should be done while it is succulent, and before it spindles; for if it is not cut early, it exhausts the land unnecessarily, and the stalk grows hard and tough, and loses its nutritive quality, consequently becomes unfit for use. Care should be taken not to cut it too near the ground, for it will sprout again, and in September you will have another crop. The value of this kind of fodder, more than any other, depends on the success of curing it, as rain or dew injures it extremely. If possible, it should be carried where it could be placed under covering during a shower, or thrown into stacks and as soon as it is sufficiently cured, it should be immediately housed for the winter use—when cattle or horses will prefer it to the best and sweetest clover.

If, in consequence of spring drought, you should apprehend that your crop of hay will fall short of the necessary quantity to support your cattle through the ensuing winter, you can "break up" a piece of land even as late as June, sow it with corn as above described, and it will produce you, if a good season, eight tons of excellent fodder to the acre. If your pastures are parched with heat, and afford little feed, which often occurs in July and August, you can provide against the exigency by appropriating in the spring a portion of land for the cultivation of this article, to be used as green fodder.—You will be abundantly repaid in an abundant quantity of rich milk from your cows, and your butter will be as sweet as a violet, without sugar, and as yellow as gold without any assistance from dyestuffs.

GYPSUM.—A valuable bed of Gypsum has been lately found in the bank of Niagara River, a few miles below the Falls.

ANECDOTES.

A few years since, when Mr. Coutts was residing at Clifton, with Lady Guildford, he used to walk up Park street, when the carriage generally took him in at the top. As his dress and appearance had more the costume of a decayed gentleman than a rich banker, he was mistaken one day, whilst walking to and fro waiting for the carriage, for a person of the former discription, by a benevolent clergyman, who lived in Park-street, and who having noticed his anxious looks, and somewhat worn apparel, sent a servant to him with 5s. The wealthy banker smiled, and returned his thanks, with an assurance that he was not in immediate want.

When we saw in the papers an account of poor Mrs. C. bewailing the loss of her old, dear, and doting lord, it carried our recollection to former days, when we always thought her a very respectable actress.—London Paper.

Aupe, the Turk, who appeared at the last Middstone Assizes, against certain persons for robbing him, was a young man of very fine and expressive countenance, and with all the energy and vivacity so natural to Asiatics; the manner in which he gave his testimony was a most pleasing display of expressive action and change of countenance. It was a fine study for an actor. His story could be read in his action.—When he was sworn, he took, with every appearance of profound veneration, his Alcoran from his bosom. It was carefully enveloped in a long piece of silk. An officer was about to take the book from his hand, when the believer in Mahomet displayed great agitation. The base idea of the holy volume being defiled by the hand of a Christian, seemed to fill him with horror. The blood rushed into his cheeks, his eyes flashed fire, and he evinced the strongest marks of indignation. His attitude, the peculiarity of his dress, and the other circumstances of his situation, threw around him an interest which was extremely gratifying to an attentive observer. The gestures of the indignant mussulman were understood, and his book remained untouched by the hands of unbelievers. When he was desired by the interpreter to swear, he lifted his eyes to HEAVEN, with a solemn seriousness, as if addressing a short and silent prayer to Alla, after which he opened his Alcoran, put it to his lips, then to his forehead, and lastly above his head. To judge from appearances, he seemed to be most seriously impressed with a sense of that solemnity of his appeal to the Prophet, to witness the truth of the circumstances he was about to detail. When informed of the result of the trial, he evinced great satisfaction.

A certain Chief Justice, on hearing an ass bray, interrupted the late Mr. Curran, in his speech to the Jury, by saying "one at a time, Mr Curran if you please."—The speech being finished, the Judge began his charge, and during its progress, he ass sent forth the full charge of his lungs, whereupon the advocate said, "does not your lordship hear a remarkable echo in the Court?"

A Coachman's Conscience.—A hackney coachman appeared before the Bench, upon a summons to answer a complaint of a gentleman from whom he had extorted seven shillings and sixpence for a four shilling fare!

"How could you think of attempting such an impudent extortion?" asked the Magistrate.

INDEX AT END

"Why, your worship," replied the honest coachee, "I'll tell you how it was—I knows I'm guilty, but I'll tell you how it was, and I hope you'll take it into your consideration, and not be too hard upon me. The ge'mman's servant what rode on the box wi' me, said to me, says he, as we were toddling a little ways down Oxford street your worship—says he to me, says he, 'Coachee there's a *weddin*g (wedding) in this job, so you need'nt be afraid of laying it on pretty thick; and then you know you can tip me a bob for my own cheek."

"And pray what is a bob ?" asked his worship.

"Why, a shilling, your honor, all the world over !—just as we say a tanner, or a fizzy, or a tilbury, for a sixpence; or a guid for a guinea. Well, your worship, when he ax'd me to stand a bob, I thought he was a rummish sort of a customer, but howsomever I took the hint, and when I set the ge'mman down I ax'd seven and sixpence, instead of four shilling, God forgive me ! But I could not in conscience ax less !"

"And pray," asked the Magistrate, "did you give the servant the shilling you promised him ?"

"No, your worship, I would'nt give him any thing; 'cause I thought he didn't desarve it, after putting me up to diddle his master in that manner."

The gentleman said it was certainly true that on the day in question he had been present at a wedding; but he had received an excellent character with the servant, and as he had lived with him several years, during which time his whole conduct had been unexceptionable, he would not believe him capable of making such an unprincipled proposition.

The Magistrate said he had little doubt that it was mere invention of the coachman's, even admitting it to be true, it was no palliation of his offence.

Honest Coachee was then fined twenty shillings for the pliability of his conscience, and he left the office, observing "I'll take 'nation good care how I gets into this ere sort of a scrape again."—London paper.

Odd way of testifying Pleasure.—"I saw at Brescia, in 1790," says a late writer, "a man of all Italy perhaps the most affected by music. He passed his life in hearing it; when it pleased him, he slipped off his shoes without being aware of it; and if the pathetic was carried to its height, he was accustomed to throw them over his head upon the spectators.

Busy week. A young woman within 20 miles of Alesbury, (Mass) was this month christened, married, delivered of a child, the child christened, died, and buried, all within seven days.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WEEKLY REGISTER.

SIR—I find the foolish Editor of the Observer, with his usual malevolence of disposition, endeavours to make it appear that you, or I, or both of us, have made an audacious "attack on the American character" by the publication of the specimen of the "YANKEE DICTIONARY" which I sent to you.

To reason with, or even to notice, such a person, who seems to be indeed amongst "the foolish ones, and those devoid of understanding," is a culpable waste of time and it is not for the purpose of badying arguments with such a man that I have taken my pen—but to mention a fact with which many of your readers may be unacquainted :—

The "American Academy of Languages and Belles Letters," of which JOHN Q. ADAMS is president, has appointed a committee to collect throughout the United States a list of words and phrases, whether acknowledged corruptions, or words of doubtful authority, which are charged upon the Americans as bad English, with a view to take the best practical course for promoting the purity and uniformity of their language.

Now, we have yet to learn whether JOHN Q. ADAMS is a likely person to make an audacious attack on his own countrymen !

I am greatly obliged by your publication of my former letter, as it has been the means of furnishing me with many curious additions to my vocabulary, I hope, shortly, to give you another specimen of my work, for which, I doubt not that I shall receive the thanks of all liberal and enlightened Americans.

I remain with profound respect, your obliged

ANNO PRIMO & SECUNDO

GEORGII IV. REGIS.

CAP. LXVI.

An Act for regulating the Fur Trade, and establishing a Criminal and Civil Jurisdiction within certain parts of North America.

[2d July, 1821.]

WHEREAS the Competition in the Fur Trade between the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and certain Associations of Persons trading under the name of "The North West Company of Montreal," has been found for some years past to be productive of great inconvenience and loss, not only to the said Company and Associations, but to the said Trade in general and also of great injury to the native Indians, and of other Persons Subjects of His Majesty And whereas the animosities and feuds, arising from such Competition, have also for some years past kept the Interior of America, to the North ward and West ward of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and of the Territories of the United States of America, in a state of continued Disturbance: And whereas many Breaches of the Peace, and violence extending to the loss of lives, and considerable destruction of property, have continually occurred therein: And whereas, for remedy of such evils, it is expedient and necessary that some effectual Regulations should be established for the apprehending, securing, and bringing to Justice all Persons committing such Offences, and that His Majesty should be empowered to regulate the said Trade: And whereas doubts have been entertained, whether the provisions of an Act passed in the Forty-third year of the reign of His Majesty King George the Third, intituled An Act for extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, to the Trial and Punishment of Persons guilty of Crimes and Offences within certain parts of North America adjoining to the said Provinces extended to the Territories granted by Charter to the said Governor and Company; and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed, and that the said Act should be further extended: Be it therefore enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same. That from and after the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, to make Grants or to give His Royal Licence, under the Hand and Seal of One of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to any Body Corporate, or Company, or Person or Persons, of or for the exclusive Privilege of Trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America as shall be specified in any such Grants or Licences respectively, not being part of the Lands or Territories hereinbefore granted to the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and not being part of any of His Majesty's Provinces in North America, or of any Lands or Territories belonging to the United States of America: and all such Grants and Licences shall be good, valid, and effectual for the purpose of securing to all such Bodies Corporate, or Companies or persons, the sole and exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America (except as herein after excepted,) as shall be specified in such Grants or Licences: any thing contained in any Act or Acts of Parliament, or any Law to the contrary notwithstanding.

43 G.3.c. 138.

Empowering his Majesty to make Grants for the exclusive Trade to certain parts of North America.

Limiting the Periods by which such Grants may be made.

II. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That no such Grant or Licence, made or given by his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, of any such parts of North America as aforesaid, shall be made or given for any longer period than 21 years; and no rent shall be required or demanded for or in respect of any such Grant or Licence, or any privileges given thereby under the provisions of this Act, for the first period of twenty one years; and from and after the expiration of such first period of twenty one years, it shall be lawful for his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, to reserve such rents in any future Grants or Licences to be made in the same or any other parties, as shall be deemed just and reasonable, with security for the payment thereof; and such rents shall be deemed part of the Land Revenues of his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, and be applied and accounted for as the other Land Revenues of his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, shall, at the times of payment of any such rent being made, be applied and accounted for.

Persons to whom such Grants shall be made, to enter into Security.

III. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay, and every Body Corporate and Company and person to whom every such Grant or Licence shall be made or given as aforesaid, shall respectively keep secure Registers of all persons in their employ in any parts of North America, and shall, once in each year, return to his Majesty's Secretaries of State accurate Duplicates of such Registers, and shall also enter into such Security as shall be required by his Majesty for the due execution of all Processes Criminal and Civil, as well within the Territories included in any such Grant, as within those granted by Charter to the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay, and for the production or delivering into safe Custody, for purposes of Trial, of all persons in their employ or under their Authority, who shall be charged with having committed any Criminal Offences, and for the due and faithful observance of all Regulations, and Rules, and Orders after the due and faithful observance of all Regulations, and Rules, and Orders which shall be made by his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, touching any such Grant or Licence, either for diminishing or preventing the sale or distribution of Spirituous Liquors to the Indians, or for promoting their moral and religious improvement, or for any other object which his Majesty may deem necessary for the remedy or prevention of the other evils which have hitherto been found to exist.

IV And whereas by a convention entered into between his Majesty and the United States of America, it was stipulated and agreed, that any Country on the North west coast of America, the

the West-ward of the Stony Mountains, should be free and open to the Citizens and Subjects of the Two Powers, for the term of ten years from the date of the signature of that convention; be it therefore enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall be deemed or constructed to authorize any Body Corporate, Company, or Person, to whom his Majesty may have, under the provisions of this Act, made a Grant or given a License of exclusive Trade with the Indians in such parts of North America as aforesaid, to claim or exercise any such exclusive Trade within the Limits specified in the said Article, to the prejudice or exclusion of any Citizens of the said United States of America, who may be engaged in the said Trade: Provided always, that no British Subject shall trade with the Indians within such limits, without such Grant or Licence as is by this Act required.

Y And be it declared and enacted That the said Act passed in the forty-third year of the Reign of his late Majesty, intituled An Act for extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, to the Trial and Punishment of Persons guilty of Crimes and Offences within certain parts of North America adjoining to the said Provinces, and all the Clauses and Provisions therein contained, shall be deemed and construed, and it is and are hereby respectively declared, to extend to and over, and to be in full force in and through all the Territories hereinbefore granted to the Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay; any thing in any Act or Acts of Parliament, or this Act, or in any Grant or Charter to the Company, to the contrary notwithstanding.

THURSDAY, JUNE, 6, 1822.

Editorial Commentary.

The most important article in our foreign news, received during the past week, is a report of the massacre of the whole Royal Family of Spain. Frightful as such a catastrophe must be, to all men of reflection and feeling, whatever may be their political opinions, there is, we fear, but too much ground for the report. Throughout his whole career FERDINAND appears to have been driven forward by a sort of strange fatality;—weak, fanatical and despotic, he seems to have been all along preparing the way for an untimely end, and to have been wholly incapable of judging of the signs of the times. If it be true that the assassination of RIEGO, the idol of the people, has taken place, it is exceedingly probable the exasperated populace would take an immediate, and a signal vengeance. In a short time all doubts on this subject must be removed. We look with great anxiety for further information, conceiving that extraordinary results must follow so awful an event, should it be true.

For the amusement and information of our readers, we have this week given sketches, from the Atheneum, of the characters of several of the great Spanish Chieftains, which have been drawn with much spirit.

Although we are well assured that our Strictures on the literary and political misdemeanors of the patriotic Observer, are quite as unwelcome to him, as a summons for trial in a court of Justice is to a common malefactor; yet he affects to remove his agony, by many a broad grin, and by grimaces of the most singular, and non-descript character. Affectation is always amusing to a certain degree, even should it be exercised under a feeling of pain that might otherwise excite our compassion and pity. Thus, when a fanatic declares his felicity, under the lash from a bunch of sharp nettles, and that he is making rapid progress towards perfectibility, whilst sitting on a chair stuck full of pointed nails, it is no easy matter to withhold a smile. Now, though the Observer is nettled unto madness, he still cries out for more castigation; and, as we really desire his reform, we cannot object to gratify his wish, particularly as we believe in the truth of the proverb, "he that spareth the rod, spoileth the child" The child to be sure, in this instance, is somewhat aged, tough, and incorrigible. But time and reflection, superadded to a little wholesome, chastisment may do much.

On the present occasion we shall content ourselves with giving him a little sober advice, keeping the rod still in pickle. If he means to be respected by any party, it is absolutely necessary that he should endeavour to attain some kind of fixed principle. His loyalty, in particular, ebbs and flows in the most remarkable manner, and seems to be mainly influenced by the increase or wane of radicalism in England. When the Radicals were in force, our revered monarch was not quite in such high estimation with the OBSERVER, as he now is, being at present stiled with great justice a truly patriotic king:—Yet this same excellent monarch was most scandalously alluded to in December 1820, by this same man, as we shall hereafter shew in our "Tables of consistency and inconsistency."

The same remarks apply to his feeling towards Ministers. In a late number of his paper, when remarking on the Commissioner's going home, he says they, the Ministers, are sworn to act justly, and that they must consequently do so; yet in December 1820 he called these self-same Ministers, a gang of assassins and accused them of every thing horrible. Perhaps at that time they had either taken no oaths, or else they had, without regard to honesty, forgotten them!!

His remarks, however, as is very frequently the case with this blunder headed writer, have a contrary bearing to that which he evidently intended to give them. If the Government, as he is pleased for once to suppose, (and which in fact it is) is equitable and just, it would hardly decide between two parties without hearing both. It never does so. The British Houses of Parliament never decide on any point of importance without hearing evidence at their bar. How would it be possible for a Dispatch, which the sapient OBSERVER thinks would be all-sufficient for the purpose, to foresee and answer all the questions that may arise in a discussion of the matter at issue, particularly when all the objections would originate from another Province?

The sending a special Commissioner to England was both wise and politic; and when the integrity, the acknowledged ability, and the profession of the Attorney General are considered, whom could the Legislature have recommended so much to the general satisfaction of the Country at large. It is true that he is the Attorney General. But what then? Does that high situation disqualify him; when the very same talents and qualifications which are necessary to enable him to fill that situation with honor to himself, and satisfaction to the public, are required in a Commissioner going home, on such a business as that now in hand, if any kind of success is to be looked for? It is, however, a most lamentable consideration, that these are persons who unceasingly labor to impress the public there with an idea, that whoever is selected by the King to hold any situation under Government in this Colony, however well approved may have been his past services, or however respectable and unimpeachable may have been his previous character, that, from the moment of his appointment, from the moment he commences the performance of his arduous duties here, he becomes no longer worthy of trust, or even of a civil mention of his name; and that honesty, integrity, and patriotism, have taken up their residence exclusively with those who, upon all occasions, seek to clog and impede all the measures of Government, no matter how wise or benificent they may be. This wicked cabal could not have found, with respect to accommodating principle, (though they might certainly have obtained one with much more ability,) a more ready agent than the indiscriminately abusive OBSERVER, who, whatever may be his stock of assurance and insolence, shall never bully us into a forgetfulness of what belongs to our duty, and he may expect the lash, whenever he is guilty of shameless perversion, or of public misrepresentation and falsehood, in matters concerning the general welfare of the province. With his private sentiments, feelings, character, or conduct we have nothing to do, and we disclaim any and every wish to crush him, which he has been pleased to allledge against us. When a man fails to rise no more, it is generally by his own hand.

SPAIN.

Massacre of the Royal Family of Spain.

The London Courier of the evening of the 18th April, gives the following particulars of this event, which there seems to be strong grounds for believing, from the manner in which it is stated in that paper, and from the cause assigned. The assassination of so distinguished an individual as RIEGO, who is looked up to by the Spaniards as the father of his country, and the guardian of their liberties, was sufficient we must acknowledge, to rouse all Spain against the perpetrators of so dasterdly an act.

From the London Courier. of April 13.

We have received the following letter from Paris, this morning, and lay it before our readers precisely as it has reached us. It is proper to mention, that it is not from any of our own correspondents, and therefore we cannot vouch for its accuracy. With this fair qualification we submit it to the public.

With respect to the alleged assassination of Riego, we perceive that the Morning Chronicle mentions the same circumstance upon the authority of a private letter of the 8th inst.

"Paris, April 10.

"A private letter from Madrid states, that on leaving the Cortes, Riego, and the most distinguished Constitutional Members were assassinated by the Servilles; that the populace of Madrid instantly rose en masse, penetrated into the Royal Palace and massacred all the Royal Family. We know not what credit is due to this intelligence, which we have traced to General B——s, who states, he had seen the letter to the above purport."

National property in Spain.—The superficial area of Spain exceeds 15,000 square leagues, one half of which extent of country is actually now on sale; and, besides, the lands in this predicament are the most fertile, the best situated, and the most productive the country possesses To the mass of property belonging to the Inquisition, Monks, encomiendas, privileged orders, &c. the Cortes, by a recent decree, added the whole of the property in the hands of the clergy, leaving them for their subsistence, one half of the former tithes. The Ecclesiastical proprietors, according to the report of Canga Argueiles, late Finance Minister, amounted to 82,279. Although each, on an average, possessed no more than three estates, or thee distinct items of property, the aggregate sum would nevertheless be immense—according to the best information to be obtained at the office of public credit, or the department intrusted with the administration and sale of this mass of property, the total and effective value of the whole eventually to be put up at auction is estimated at 4000 millions of rials, or two hundred millions of dollars. Of the above about 100 millions of rials, or 5 millions of dollars have already been disposed of, and the sales are going on gradually, and at prices much higher than were at first expected.

RIEGO.

The following interesting account of this celebrated Spanish Chieftain was addressed to the Editor of the MONTHLY MAGAZINE, in London, by an English Gentleman, at Madrid.

I will tell you what a beautiful Spanish lady said to a friend of mine, who asked for a description of RIEGO. "His image is so deeply engraved here (pressing her forehead with her hand,) that were I a painter, you should have his very counterpart. But it is not enough to be a painter: one must burn with the same sacred fire that is kindled in him. That fire is in my bosom. He is not fair—no! but what does that matter? If he has not the beauty of form, he has all the beauty of generous passion, and that is better. His black eyes are always sparkling before me; busy, pen-trating, enquiring;—his lips express the delicacy of his sentiments; his hair is nearly black, but mixed with grey, though he has only seen thirty years to whiten it. His figure is of the middle size, but strikingly martial. You would fix on him for a hero. The love of liberty is in him ever obvious and ever active; he is alive to all its vibrations. You may read his thoughts and his affections. That gloom which hung upon the brow of Napoleon, and which served to cover the deep purposes of personal ambition, never clouds his countenance. He is too ardent to bury himself in long concentrated thoughts. He is the soldier's brother. A sergeant and a man from the ranks are always with him. He was made a prisoner in the war of independence, and remained two years in France, where he cultivated his mind with continual study. He speaks French and Italian admirably. Towards me (she continued) his conduct has been a model of grace and politeness. When he arrived here, I could not separate myself from him. He knew that I loved one of the companions of his perils and his glories; and they say he is a lover. This annoys me. He will then devote himself to something besides his country: he may then love something besides liberty! He should never marry; it would be infidelity to the nation. Is he not pledged to her? And then—could other women love him?"

The part which Riego took in the movements of the Isla de Leon—the series of melancholy events which dispersed his little band, and left him to wander in solitude and despair—are such as even now, when the dangers are passed and the victory is achieved, I can hardly think of without trembling. After several vain attempts to enter Cadiz, he left Quiroga in San Fernando, for the purpose of exciting the public feelings in different parts of Andolusia. His division consisted of 1500 men, with whom he marched upon Chiclana, whose authorities fled on his arrival From thence he proceeded to Algesiras, in the hope that the friends of freedom in Gibraltar would facilitate his objects and provide for his wants. In some of the villages he was received with ecstasy, in others with alarm. At Algesiras the people crowded to welcome him. but refused to join his banners. The coldness of the Governor of Gibraltar, and the interruption of all communication with that fortress, disappointed all his expectations. His troops wanted shoes, and horses, and money. Some supplies were furnished in the midst of immense difficulties by the zeal of his friends. In the mean time, O'Donnel approached with the royalist army. Riego had determined to attack them, when a letter from Quiroga was delivered to him, urging his immediate return. In the plains of Taibilla he was surrounded by a large body of the enemy's cavalry. They were received with shouts of "Long live the Constitution!—long live our Country!" and the ranks resounded with that song which I will here insert, for it has become the watchword of the Constitutional party, and has been re-echoed a thousand and ten thousand times though the Peninsula, just like Ca Ira and the Marseillois in France, at the commencement of the French Revolution.

Soldiers! soldiers! hear
Your country's earnest cry!—
Soldiers! soldiers! swear
To conquer or to die!
Valiant, daring, strong,
And serene as gays
Be our song to day,
Victory's growing song.
Worlds are listening now,
Children of the Cid—
His proud fame, though hid,
Shall revive in you—Soldiers, &c.
Wave the glorious steel;
Let the trembling slave,
Of the strong, the brave,
All the triumph feel.
As the mists disperse,
Shall their squadrons fly;
Shouts of liberty
Fill the universe—Soldiers, &c.
What a glorious day.
Full of light and bliss—
O, how bright a ray
Freedom sheds on this!
When Riego, first
Joined our patriot bands,
And the freeing hands
Of dull slavery burst—Soldiers, &c.
Honour on his brow!
Honour, praise be your'd—
Who the patriot's sword
Dares to brandish now.
Long our country's eye
Hfs been veil'd in tears—
Now the smile of joy
On her cheeks appears—Soldiers, &c.
We have heard her call!
Could she speak in vain?
We have sworn for Spain—
Sworn—to perish all.
No!—these eyes shall see
Every fetter broke—
Rescued from the yoke,
Spain shall yet be free.—Soldiers, &c.
See, our fetters fall—
And the slaves, whose will Wears those letters still,
Shall our masks appal!
Free—to freedom true,
We assume again
All the strength of men;—
Slaves are cowards too—Soldiers, &c.
Hear! the trumpet! heart
Shame and slavery
They may fear to die—
What have we to fear!
While the patriot file
Moves serenely on,
Doubt and danger frown
On the mean—the vile.—Soldiers, &c.
Lo! the joyous breeze
Martial music brings;
Cannon's thunderings
Shout your victories
Mars has call'd you his;
Spain was ever brave;—
Who would be a slave
In such clime as this!—Soldiers, &c.
Look—the enemy—
Steady as a rock
To the battle's shock—
Look—they faint—they fly.
Can a servile crew,
Bought by tyrants' gold,
E'er withstand the bold,
Freedom led—as you.—Soldiers, &c.

They reached Cordoba;—there were only 300 left, and were received in melancholy silence by the inhabitants, who only saw so many victims marked out for certain signal sacrifice. They sought again the hilly parts of the province. The days were dark and rainy; the roads almost impassible; the enemy always at hand. A little band, too few for mutual defence, and unwieldy, of course, for attack,—a little band reached Bienvenida; and one of its commanders, Evaresto de San Migues, speaks of its dispersion in the following affecting terms:—

"Our remaining united now served only to expose us to the irresistible attacks of the enemy. We had no breathing time—we had no repose. We were driven to the hard necessity of separating, and this was determined on at a council of all the officers who were left. Tender and sad was this parting! We had made costly sacrifices to our country—our only reward was then the prospect of passing the rest of our days in exile!"

TURKEY.

Constantinople, Feb. 18.

A grand Divan was held with the usual state, for the payment of the troops, and at the moment the pay of the Janissaries was reckoning, the cannon of the Seraglio announced the birth of a son to the Sultan, who received the name of Mahomet. The Janissaries and their Agas evinced their joy in the most intemperate manner—the Asiatic troops went through the military evolutions, the exercise of the Djerid, and afterwards actively participated in the public rejoicings. But few excesses were committed on this day of general exultation, and the Bostangi Bascha maintained order in the Fauxbourgs. The rejoicings were continued throughout the following day.

Feb. 23 ——The Sibilidar, (sword bearer of Chourschid) arrived at Constantinople, escorted by Tartars, with the Harem, the treasures, the grandson of Ali (a child eight years of age) and lastly, the head of this old Chief, who had attained the age of 84. The head was carried in triumph to the Grand Vizier, and thence to the seraglio.

Feb. 24.—The head of Ali was fixed, in ceremony, over the portal of the seraglio, with a copy of the sentence which condemned to death this traitor to Ismalism, this rebel to the porte, this supporter of the revolted Greeks, &c. It is impossible to convey an idea of the fanatical enthusiasm which this sight excited in the soldiers and populace—cries were heard on all sides, that the Porte might now declare war against the 'Gnours,' (Christians)—that the Musselmen were sure of exterminating them. Rich presents were distributed, by order of the Grand Seignior, and Chourschid Pacha was loaded with wealth and honors.

The Courier of the 10th says "when speaking of the news from the continent, "we cannot discover in the numerous reports from different quarters the least kind of a pacific kind."

A letter from the Southern frontiers of Russia, dated March 10, says "the Janissaries have fought with the Asiatic troops in Jassy; about 500 men were killed on both sides. During the massacre, the city was set on fire in several places, for the purpose of plunder. The wind being high, 430 houses were burnt."

Turkish Justice—The Turkish Ambassador, who was at Paris in 1798, bought a diamond of a jeweller in that city While the bargain was concluding, one of his people stole a ring. A little child saw it, and told his father after the Turk was gone. The jeweller immediately wrote to the Ambassador, who sent him word that he should wait twenty four hours. After the expiration of this time, the jeweller received a box directed to him, which he opened, and found in it the head of the thief with the ring between his teeth!

INDEX AT END

MOROCCO.

The following extract will shew to what an extent, and how zealously, the SUBLIME PORTE intends to carry on the war against Russia.

"Hamburg, April 4.

"We have received the following interesting accounts from Fez, in Africa, by way of Gibraltar.

"Fez, January 19, 1822.

"To-day fortnight (Jan. 2, 1822) arrived the Imperial Ambassador of the Ottomans, Ismael Mahomet Effendi, with the First Secretary of State, Salah Bicher, accompanied by twelve Janissaries, a Pacha of Egypt, Bucchum Ammani Bassa, and son of the Viceroy of Egypt. They brought to the Emperor of Fez presents, the value of which is estimated at 200,000 piasters. The next day the Emperor opened the papers they had presented him, and was greatly surprised at their contents, relative to the present hostilities.

"The Emperor answered, 'he was ready, and God would help.' For this week past, this Monarch has, in consequence, been busy with the correspondence from Constantinople and Egypt. The Emperor was greatly pleased at the arrival of the Ambassador, and of the Secretary of State, Salah Bicher, and admired the prudence of the latter, who is an Israelite. This Salabi Bicher is the intimate friend of a great merchant named Mayer Ben Mackain, now living in Morocco, who formerly resided 18 years in England (and who presented to the Emperor a work published in Europe against the Turks,) and this Mayer has obtained, by the means of his friend Salabi Bicher, the Imperial permission to correspond with all subjects of Morocco living in Europe.

"On the 29th the Turkish Ambassador departed, together with the Egyptian Pacha, the two Imperial Princes, Muley Abd Laudel, and Muley el Rhaery, the two Governors Mohamed Mahul, and Abd Rackman Medinah, and two Israelite Secretaries of State. They go first to Egypt, and then to Constantinople

"The two Princes, with their suite proceed first to the North, where they are to expect further orders. They bring to the Sultan letters, one of which engages to furnish him every month with five thousand horses, one thousand mules, and five hundred negroes, from 18 to 20 years of age; the Viceroy of Egypt, 2000 horses, 200 negroes, and 200 mules. The Ambassador and the Egyptian Pacha likewise received valuable presents; and to Salabi Bicher the Emperor gave a snuff box set with diamonds, a present from the king of France in 1757, the value of which is estimated at 10,000 piastres. The Emperor immediately dispatched couriers to Tunis, Tripoli, and Algiers, to renew, within four weeks, the treaties concluded by his late Father, Sydi Mahomet, in the year 1170, Schuban 19th, or the 23d of July, 1757."

Remarkable Prediction!—In Gibbon's history of the rise and fall of the Roman empire, the author is speaking of the "naval expeditions of the Russians against Constantinople," says, "In a period of 190 years (from 855 to 1043) the Russians made four attempts to plunder the treasures of Constantinople. The event was various, but the motive, the means, and the object, were the same, in these naval expeditions. The Russian traders had seen the magnificence and tasted the luxury of the city of the Cæsars. A marvellous tale, and a scanty supply, excited the desires of their savage countrymen; they envied the gifts of nature which their climate denied; they coveted the works of art which they were too lazy to imitate and too indigent to purchase; the Varangian princes unfurled the banners of piratical adventure, and their bravest soldiers were drawn from the nations that dwelt in the northern isles of the ocean."

"The memory of these arctic fleets that seemed to descend from the polar circle, left a deep impression of terror on the imperial city. By the vulgar of every rank, it was asserted and believed, that an equestrian statue in the square of Taurus, was secretly inscribed with a prophecy, NOW THE RUSSIANS, IN THE LAST DAYS, SHOULD BECOME MASTERS OF CONSTANTINOPLE.—In our time a Russian armament, instead of sailing from the Borysthenes, has circumnavigated the Continent of Europe; and the Turkish capital has been threatened by a squadron of strong and lofty ships of war, each of which with its naval science and thundering artillery, could have sunk or scattered an hundred vessels such as those of their ancestors." "Perhaps the present generation, adds Mr. Gibbon, may yet behold the accomplishment of the prediction, of a rare prediction, of which the style is unambiguous and the date unquestionable."

From a late London Paper.

Turkish Declaration of War.—The German papers have published the following curious declaration of war, issued in 1663, by Mahomet IV. against Leopold Emperor of Germany.—

"By the grace of God, the great God in heaven, We Molo Mahomet, God of the earth, renowned and powerful emperor of Babylon and Judea, from the rising to the setting of the sun, king of all earthly kings, mighty ruler of Arabia and Mauritiania, born triumphant sovereign of Jerusalem, possessor of the tomb of Christ the crucified, declare to the emperor of Germany, to the King of Poland, and all thy allies, sword in hand, burning, plundering, murdering and destroying the country and subjects. As for thee, thou shalt suffer the most horrible death that can be imagined. As thy government is weak and cruel even amongst Christians, we will wrest from thee with fire and sword, thy empire and kingdom, and likewise overthrow and annihilate the See of Rome and its triple crow

"This, Emperor of Germany, and King of Poland, is our declaration to thee and to all thy dependents; and We moreover inform the, that these words will speedily be followed by deed, for which thou hast to hold thyself in readiness.

"Given in our powerful city of Stamboul; containing 1859 streets, 90 hospitals, 1000 public baths, 697 fountains, 120 markets, 115 stables for mules, 480 inns for foreigners, 1652 great and small schools, 4122 mosques and churches. This great and powerful city is four German miles in circumference, and on its walls are 360 strong towers. Our ancestors wrested it from the hands of the Christians, whose wives and children were murdered before their eyes. Thus will We treat thee and all Christians, to prove our hatred and disdain.

"Given in the 26th year of Our age and the 7th of Our potent reign.

Signed, "MOLO MAHOMET."

STRICTURES on a WORK recently Published, and entitled "OBSERVATIONS ON THE STATE OF THE COLONY."

No. VIII.

"Ferdinand Mendez Pinto, was but a type of thee, thou Prince of Liars!"

Old Play.

While we were perusing our author's "Observations on the state of the Colony," we could not help frequently lamenting that the divine songs of Dr. WATTS were not among the author's school-books; or, if they were, that he had not been obliged to learn them so as to be well fixed in his memory; if he has children, we very strongly urge him to make atonement by directing their infant minds to the study of that beautiful production early in life, and we would especially direct his and their attention to these words:—

O, 'tis a lovely thing for youth,
To walk betimes in wisdom's way,
To fear a lie to speak the truth,
That we may trust to all they say.
But liars we can never trust,
Though they should speak the thing that's true
And he that does one fault at first,
And lies to hide it makes it two.

We hope he will take all this in good part, as it proves incontestably, that we have some regard for his best interests, and those of his family.

No part of his work puzzled us more than the blarney that is lavished (at p 4) on the Council, which he seems to take especial care, for some private reason of his own, no doubt, to separate and distinguish, on all occasions, from his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor. It may be well for the gentlemen who are so honoured and beloved, with the rank and offensive mention, to be on their guard; men of this stamp do not pour warm water down great men's back's for nothing. If we know any thing of the characters alluded to, however, his flattery will be as unwelcome and loathesome to them as it must appear to others. He says, he cannot for a moment imagine that they are the authors of, or assenting to, the high fees, of which he complains so much. In the name of common sense, then, who are the authors?—Is it not universally known that all changes as to the rate of fees and other matters relative to the land-granting department, either originate with, or are at least debated, and approved in the Council?

What this man is made of we cannot tell, when he further adds "that none of the Hon. members of the Council have large tracts of land;" when it is certain some of them are amongst the largest land-holders in the country!—He is such a blunderhead, that he probably means this assertion for a fine piece of irony; for afterwards, (at page 22) he says "their state in the country is great" How can it be great if they have no large possessions? O, John, John, to learn to speak and write the truth, and then thou mayest have a chance, according to the old adage, of shaming the devil; but as thou hast undertaken to edite for the special benefit, behoof, and instruction of Mr VANSITTART, and the Honorable LEGISLATURE, thou oughtest to be more careful, than to think it very witty to tell lies, but it won't do out of thine own circle, we do assure thee.

As to the increase of wealth and population, there is no need of idle assertions, the truth lies beyond the ipse dixit of any man; for there are such things as Assessment Rolls, and the Tables of an Annual Census of the population. If this scribbler can bear to look at truth, let him view the returns for the last five years, from the period of Mr GORE's departure from this country, till the present time, and compare them with the returns of the five preceding that departure. We can speak of the District in which we have resided for that space of time, which is one of the most extensive in the Province, and declare, without fear of contradiction, that it has more than trebled the number of its inhabitants, and has become proportionably more wealthy; some of the other Districts have more than kept pace with us, and very few are far behind.

The author expressly asserts (at p 9) that the famous remonstrance, to which he so frequently alludes, was sent home during the Administration of President SMITH, or of his Excellency Sir F MAITLAND and he plainly insinuates by whom it was actually made. He is fortunately beyond the utterance of any lie, we can scarcely be surprised at his wonderful impudence; yet he must know it would be absolutely impossible for either of those gentlemen, or any other person at the head of the affairs in this Colony, to state in the manner described, that emigration to this Province "proved a very great grievance both to the Government and People." It may not be improbable, (though we are entirely ignorant of the fact) that some statement was sent home from Quebec, (but not from York,) in consequence of the many wretched objects which crowded the streets of Montreal and Quebec, chiefly poor emigrants in distress, during a very inclement season; if we mistake not, there were upwards of one thousand on the list of public charity at one time in the city of Montreal: but certain it is that if those people had proceeded up the country, and had they reached far within the limits of Upper Canada, their distress could not have been so urgent and deplorable. What sort of remonstrance was sent home, or by whom, or to whom, we know not; but we dare assert that nothing of the kind was ever sent from York. We have no doubt in our own minds, however, that Mr. VANSITTART simply alluded to a report by the Quebec Emigrant Society.

In our next Stricture we shall give an impartial view of the fees that are taken in the land granting department, as the best refutation that can be given to the false statements; and, consequently, to the false deductions, of this falsifying scribbler.

BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

The following Debate on the Distresses of Canada is so interesting to this country that we intended to have inserted it last week, but was prevented by matter that appeared more urgent:

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

March 14.

Mr. MARRYAT presented a Petition from the House of Assembly of Lower Canada, which, he said, contained a simple, but melancholy recital of plain facts and official documents. The petitioners state, that within the last year the wages of labor, the prices of the produce of the soil, and the value of landed property in that Province, have diminished one half; that the amount of the exports has decreased from near £900,000 to little more than £600,000; that the imports have decreased from near £1,300,000 to between 8 and £900,000; and that the Provincial Revenue has fallen off, within the last year, from more than £100,000 to between 70 and £80,000. They add, that all these results have been occasioned by the Acts of the British Legislature which have imposed a duty on the importation of their timber, while at the same time they have lowered the duty on the importation of foreign timber; and have established a system of Corn Laws, under the operation of which their corn has been excluded from British consumption ever since the month of October 1820. They respectfully state, that their produce is thus rendered of no value by the Legislative measures of the Mother Country, while they are compelled to send their produce to her ports, and prohibited from all commercial intercourse with every foreign power, they shall be unable to find the means of providing their population with those articles of comfort and necessity which they have hitherto been in the habit of importing, or to raise a revenue to defray the expences of the civil establishment of the Province; and they conclude by praying, that their grain may be admitted into the home consumption of Great Britain.—Sir, this tale of distress is interesting to us as well as to the petitioners; because the adversity as well as the prosperity of every Colony is reflected back upon the Mother Country. It is obvious that if the exports of Lower-Canada are insufficient to pay for her imports, the British merchants and manufacturers, by whom they are supplied, cannot be paid; and that if the Colonial Revenue will not provide for the civil establishment (as Lower-Canada is the only British Colony that pays the whole expence of her civil establishment,) the Governor, Judges, and other Officers, who are sent out from hence, must be paid out of the revenue of this country.—The statements in the Petition, that their produce is rendered of no value by our late regulations, are by no means exaggerated. As to their timber, it is a fact within my own knowledge, that a cargo was lately consigned to a respectable house in this city, who refuses to receive it, being aware that instead of leaving any nett proceeds, it would bring the shipper in debt. They, therefore, left it to the Captain, who disposed of it, and found it insufficient to pay the freight and charges of sale. So that timber from the British Provinces in North America is not only a total loss of the prime cost, but brings a further demand upon the owner.—Such are the consequences of the new duties on their timber, settled last session of Parliament.—With respect to their corn, it is only admitted into our home consumption when the average price of British wheat exceeds 67s. per quarter; and therefore, all that has arrived here since the month of October 1820, still lies locked up in our warehouses, with every prospect of remaining there till it is spoiled, or till the value of it is sunk in rent and charges. I have before had occasion to assert, in this House, the necessity either of continuing to act towards our Colonies on our old system of protection, or of releasing them from those restrictions to which they are subjected for the advantage of the mother country. To require from them a double monopoly, to bind them to take all their supplies from you, and to ship all the produce of their industry to your market, while you pass such laws as render it of no value, or prohibit it from your home consumption altogether, (which is precisely the case with these Petitioners,) is exercising an unexampled degree of arbitrary power over them, and if continued, must soon devote them to absolute ruin; I trust, therefore, that this petition will meet that favorable consideration to which it is entitled.

Mr. ELLICE wished to offer one or two observations on the Petition presented by his Hon. Friend (Mr. Marryat,) and to bespeak the attention of the house to the serious evils so justly complained of by the Petitioners. No person unacquainted with the Provinces of Canada could form a just idea of the contrast which their present situation presented to their former prosperity, or of the consequences that must inevitably result from the continued restrictions on their trade. Last year the alteration on the timber duties bore heavily on that branch of their commerce; and for the first time the operation of the corn Laws prevented the introduction into this market of the other staple article of their produce. They were also, if report spoke true, threatened with the loss of their West India trade: a subject now under discussion, and which must be settled with fair reference to the various interests concerned in it; and it was impossible to foresee what might be the results of all these measures to that unfortunate colony. If they were not permitted to send their produce to this market, while it was excluded from many others by the operation of the navigation laws, it was impossible they could long pay for the manufactures and supplies we compelled them to receive solely from this country; and he did hope some relaxation of the present restriction, and, above all, the admission of their corn, might be concerned, without risk of injury to the agricultural interests. He again begged leave to recommend the Petition to the serious consideration of the House and Government.

Mr BENNETT (of Wilts,) opposed the prayer of the Petition, on the ground that it was as necessary to protect the English Agriculturist, as it could be to relieve the Canadian corn grower. When corn might be imported into this country, large quantities of American grain had been sent to Canada, and thence smuggled into England as being of Canadian growth; so that the restraint now complained of, the Petitioners had in fact brought upon themselves. He wished to give the Colonies all equitable protection, but could not consent to afford that species of relief which the Petitioners now desired.

Mr. WILMOT was fully convinced of the reality of the distress complained of by the Petitioners, but at the same time he must remark, that there was nothing in the measures lately adopted that could produce that distress. He thought it desirable that this Petition should be referred to the special notice of the Agricultural Committee.

Mr. RICARDO thought the House bound to attend to the justice of the complaints contained in the Petition. The Canadians, in his opinion, suffered great and serious hardships which ought to be removed; they complained chiefly of three grievances, which were—1st. That we did not take timber from them on the same terms as we did before.—2d. That we refused to admit their corn.—And 3dly. That they were subjected to the inconvenience of purchasing all articles in our markets. As to the first, we had a right to go to any market we please for our timber, but on that very principle the second cause of grievance ought to be done away, & their corn ought to have access to our markets. Whenever that subject was proposed in the House, he would give it his best assistance to put their corn trade on that footing; with respect to the third point, the forcing the colonies to purchase in our markets, when they might be more conveniently supplied elsewhere, it was an inconvenience to which they ought not to be exposed. He would always oppose that principle, not only as applied to Canada, but to every other colony.

Sir I. COFFIN thought it would have been a good thing for this country, if Canada had been sunk to the bottom of the sea. It cost this country £300,000 per annum, and did not make a return to it of 500 pence. The Canadians, by the timber trade, had been in the habit of cheating this country out of £300,000 yearly. This had been done by suffering great quantities of American timber to be sent down the River St. Lawrence, which had been then brought to England as Canadian timber. Yet after acting such a part, they now threw themselves on that House for support. The sooner the Governor was called home and the sooner the Assembly and Colony were suffered to go, he should be sorry to say—au Diable, the better.

Mr. W. SMITH allowed that Canada cost us a great deal of money, but that made it the more necessary to take such steps as did not interfere with its improvement. He was convinced that if the province of Canada was made easy and comfortable with respect to its commercial relations, we need not be at the expence of a heavy Military Establishment to defend them. While we kept them in a state of good humour this expence was necessary, but if we treated them in the spirit of a kind and liberal policy, they would defend themselves.

The Petition was then ordered to be referred to the Agricultural Committee.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

The general Expose of the British Ministry on the state of the Nation is too valuable a document to be lost sight of.—As we may hereafter have occasion to refer to the facts and principles which are so ably stated in this work, we shall continue to make extracts from it on all such points as are materially important or interesting, until we have gone through the whole pamphlet——Ed.

The Netherlands, Sardinia, Naples and Italy.

As regards our relations with the Netherlands, they are too obvious to require remark. It is sufficient to say, that the amity and confidence of the two governments continue to gather strength with their progress. The completion of the fortresses is, in fact, the completion of the due securities for the permanence of the new general system. It cannot have escaped public observation, that in Holland, as in France, there is not that warm popular feeling towards the government and people of Great Britain, to which we are assuredly most justly entitled by our long constancy in the common cause of Europe.

In Holland, as in France, there exists a vulgar opinion, that the true motive of our persevering courage and conduct is to be sought in our commercial spirit; and that our government is still seeking to advance our commerce and manufactures at the expence of all other nations.—However false and ungenerous may be such a report, it is to be lamented that it still exists——Under these circumstances, his Majesty's ministers have considered it to be a first object of policy to avoid every kind of conduct which might cherish and increase these unfriendly suspicions. Under the same circumstances, they have declined to solicit for any commercial treatry, or to negociate for any commercial treaty, or to negociate for any of those facilities (for they can amount to nothing more) which would cost more in the Dutch government than they would be worth to the trade and commerce of England. But when this observation is made, it is necessary to qualify it by the assertion, that it is very difficult to conceive the possibility of any commercial treaty between England and the Netherlands; there wants indeed all subject-matter for such a treaty. The people of the two states are in a direct rivalry with each other. The Dutch and Netherlanders manufacture almost everything for their own consumption; they have no raw material with which to supply us, nor can we, on the other hand, supply them. They receive their colonial produce from their own planters; they grow their own wool; import their own cotton; in a word they exist so nearly in the same stage of commerce and manufacture with ourselves, and grow, work up, and deal so exactly in the articles, that there is a total want of all subject matter of exchange between us. The large extent and various climate of France affords her some staples of her own produce, her wines and brandies for example, upon which to found a commercial exchange; and it is certainly not impossible, but that at some more convenient period the wines of France might be admitted into England upon the condition of the equivalent admission into France of British cutlery and hardware. But, as regards Holland and the Netherlands, it is almost impossible to discover the materials for any commercial treaty. One article alone with which we supply them, cotton-yarn, was so little satisfactory to our manufactures of piece-goods, that in the year 1817, a strong petition was presented to parliament against its exportation; and it required the utmost efforts of his Majesty's ministers to convince the petitioners of the folly of their demand. One observation, indeed, encounters us universally with regard to these commercial treaties. When we look collectively to the petitions of our several manufactures, and the arguments of their advocates for new commercial treaties, and for opening a more enlarged sphere of foreign trade, they amount to nothing more than to the expression of their wishes, that all foreign markets should be opened to British commodities, whilst the British market should most religiously continue its exclusion against all foreign manufactures. Would all demand a free trade and an open market, not one of them is willing to surrender to foreigners any restriction in favor of their own commodities. But is it to be expected for a moment, that foreign nations will accede to a treaty under unequal circumstances? Will Portugal, or what is of more importance, will the Brazils continue a favored consumption of British cotton and woollen manufactures, when we shall exclude her wines, or at least withdraw our preference of Portugal in favor of France? Will the landed interest consent to a more free admission of foreign spirits in competition with our own distilleries? Can we in fact lay our hand upon any existing restriction, in favor of British trade, which the manufacturers concerned in that trade would voluntarily concede, or which could be taken from them without such a violence to the actual employment of capital, and without so much suffering to large bodies employed in the manufacture, as to render it very doubtful whether the ultimate good would be worth the greatest cost? As regards our present subject, Holland, it is impossible not to acknowledge, that our foreign relations can exist in no other form than the present. All closer commercial connection is impossible. The people of Holland and the Netherlands are as jealous of our manufactures as we can possibly be of theirs. The agriculturists and manufacturers of those countries are making the same demands of their government for the exclusive support of their own growth and manufacture.—The crown of Holland and the Netherlands is a new institution; it is necessary for the Dutch government to concede even to the popular prejudices. Our increased tax upon the Dutch provision trade, has removed still further any possibility of negociation for commercial advantages. In a word, under our foreign relations with Holland, we possess all that we can possess; the friendship and confidence of the government, and the same degree of trade to which we admit the Dutch and Netherlanders.

As regards Sardinia, Naples, and Italy in general, the spirit of our foreign relations has been directed towards the maintenance of general tranquility. It was no part of our duty to interfere with the internal concerns of those governments nor to take any part in such dissentions between them and their neighbors, as did not affect the due distribution of power in the system of Europe. We have no where contracted the obligation to defend these states in all their conflicts with their subjects, or each other. We have no where excluded ourselves from the question of prudence. Accordingly, when the late invasion of the states occurred, the first consideration of our own government was; is there any thing in the circumstances of these dissentions, which either affects the permanence of the general settlement of Europe, or involves any interest peculiarly British. The answer to these questions was in the negative. No interest was concerned but the internal state of the countries themselves.—As respected England, our interference could be accompanied with no possible good, equivalent to its necessary cost. The cause itself afforded no appeal to our generosity. The Carbonari were but French reformers under another name. Under all these circumstances, and this character of the cause, our ministers had the forbearance to adhere to strict neutrality between the contending parties. But as the mere appearance of a good cause could not appeal in vain to British feelings, the English government, following the character and public opinion of the country, did not hesitate to express their own adherence to the principles of general freedom, and to guard their neutrality from any construction unfavourable to the cause of national independence. Whilst in the exercise of a sound discretion, they adhered to a strict neutrality in fact, they fully asserted the law of nations in their diplomatic correspondence, and actually published a declaration in recognition of the general principles. In this note, having to address themselves to friendly governments, and to states of dignity and power, they spoke with temper and moderation, but certainly not without dignity and firmness.—They have yet to learn, that prudence is the duty of official intercourse, and that other nations are not entitled to the same courtesy from us, which we are in the habit of extracting from them. They have yet to learn, that the personal indisposition of foreign sovereigns and states, not to say their actual hostility, is a matter of such utter indifference to the government and people of England, as to be needlessly incurred by the application of intemperate language and indecorous terms to Kings and Emperors. They have yet to learn, that the rules of prudence and decorum in common life are not to be carried into political intercourse; and that in discussing the ordinary differences of states and governments, the tone of meditation is not more effectual, as well as more courteous, than that of arrogance and menace.

GEORGE THE THIRD.

Having resided for some time on Richmond Hill, in the immediate neighbourhood of the Royal Palace of Kew, at a period when his late Majesty spent much of his time there, we had several opportunities of knowing the manner in which that excellent monarch employed many of his hours of relaxation, and we can vouch for the general truth of the picture, which is drawn with so much spirit and accuracy in the extract below, which is given from a work that has had a considerable run in England.—Ed.

From a London Paper.

We extract the following characteristic scene from a work just published, entitled, "Sir Andrew Wylie, of that Ilk." It describes the progress of a shrewd Scotchman from humble life to political distinction. The writer of the book was evidently acquainted with the peculiar habits of his late majesty; and if his well known condescension and familiarity be somewhat exaggerated, we may forgive this attempt to produce an effect, when we see the author's anxiety to render justice to the goodness of heart, the benevolence, and the patriotism, of that exemplary monarch.

"By sunrise on the Sunday morning, Wylie was brushing the early dew in the little park, to taste the freshness of the morning gale, or as he himself better expressed it, to take a snuff of caller air on the brow of the hill. But healthful exercise was not his only reason for being so soon abroad; it occurred to him in the watches of the night, that as his majesty was an early riser, the household too would of course be stirring with the cock; and that some of them might be more readily met with at that time, than later in the morning. Accordingly, he kept a sharp look out on all sides as he strolled through the park, but he saw only a solitary laundress with a basket of linen on her head, going to the town, and three or four lumpish country boys that came whistling along the footpath from Datchet, in their clod shoes, with white cotton stockings and the knees of their yellow teen breeches, shown in front beneath clean smock frocks; the tails of which, behind, were tucked up to show their Sunday coats.

"Somewhat disappointed, but thinking he was still too early for the inmates of a palace, he prolonged his walk towards the meadows, and in stepping over a stile, he saw, close before him, a stout and tall elderly man, in a plain blue coat, with scarlet cuffs and collar, which at first he took for a livery. There was something, however, in the air of the wearer, which convinced him that he could not be a servant, and an ivory headed cane, virlled with gold, which he carried in a sort of negligent poking manner, led him to conclude that he was either an old officer, or one of the poor knights of Windsor: for he had added to his learning, in the course of the preceeding evening, a knowledge of the existence of this appendage to the noble order of the Garter. 'This,' said the embryo courtier to himself, 'is just the very thing that I have been seeking. I'll make up to this decent earl, for nae doubt he's well acquainted with a' about the king, and he stepped alertly forward. But before he had advanced many paces, the old gentleman turned round, and seeing a stranger, stopped; and looking at him for two or three seconds, said to himself, loud enough, however, to be heard, 'Strange man—don't know him;' and then he paused till our hero had come up.

"'Gude day Sir,' said Wylie as he approached; "ye're early a-fit on the Sabbath: but I'm thinking his majesty, honest man, sees you a' here an example of sobriety and early rising."

"'Scotchman, eh!' said the old gentleman "fine morning, Sir——weather warmer here than with you?"

"What part of Scotland do you come from? How do you like Windsor? Come to see the king, eh?" and loudly he made the echoes ring with his laughter.

The senator was a little at a loss which question to answer first; but delighted with the hearty freedom of salutation, jocularly said, 'It's no easy to answer so many questions all at once; but if ye'll no object to the method, I would say that ye guess right, sir, and that I've come from the shire of Ayr."

"'Ah, shire of Ayr!—a fine county that—good farming there—no smuggling now among you, eh? no excisemen shooting lords now?—bad game, bad game. Poor Lord Eglinton had a true taste for agriculture; the county, I have heard, owes him much. Still improving?—Nothing like it.—The war needs men—Come is our dragon's teeth—Potatoes do as well in Ireland, eh?"

The humor of this sally tickled our hero as well as the author or it, and they both laughed themselves into a greater intimacy.

"'Well, but, sir,' said Andrew, "As I am only a stranger here, I would like to ask you a question or two about the king, just as to what sort of a man he really is; for we can place no sort of dependance on newspapers or history books, in matters anent rulers and men of government."

"'What! like Sir Robert Walpole—not believe history? Scotchman very cautious." But the old gentleman added, in a graver accent, "The king is not as good as some say to him he is: nor is he so bad as others say of him. But I know that he has conscientiously endeavored to do his duty, and the best man can do no more, be their trusts high or low."

"'That I believe, we a' in general think; even the blackguards never dispute his honesty, though they undervalue his talents. But what I wish to know and understand, is no wi' regard to his kingly faculties, but as to his familiar ways and behaviour—the things in which he is like the generality of the world."

"'Ha!" said the stranger, briskly relapsing in to his wonted freedom. "very particular, very particular, indeed What reason, friend, have you to be so particular? Must have some?——People never so without reason."

"'Surely, sir, it's a very natural curiosity for a subject to inquire what sort of a man the sovereign is, whom he has sworn to honor and obey, and to bear true allegiance with hand and heart."

"'True, true, true," exclaimed the old gentleman—'Just remark—Come on business to England? What business?"

"'My chief business, in truth, Sir, at present here, is to see and learn something about the king. I have no other turn in hand at this time"

"'Turn, turn," cried the stranger perplexed, "What turn? Would place the king on your lathe, eh?"

Our hero did not well know what to make of his quick and versatile companion; and while the old gentleman was laughing at the jocular turn which he had himself given the Scotticism, he said, "I'm thinking, friend, ye're commanded no to speak with strangers anent his majesty's conduct, for ye'll ink the question, as they say in parliament."

"'Parliament?—Been there?—How do you like it?—Much cry, and little wool among them, eh?"

"'Ye say Gude's truth, sir; and I wish they would make their speeches as short and pithy as the king's. I'm told his majesty has a very gracious and pleasant delivery," replied our hero, pawkily; and the stranger not heeding his drift, said, with simplicity.—

"'It was so thought when he was young; but he is now an old man, and not what I have known him."

"'I suppose," replied our hero, "that you have been long in his service?"

"'Yes, I am one of his oldest servants—Ever since I could help myself," was the answer, with a sly smile. I may say I have been his servant."

"'And I dinna doubt," replied the senator, that "you have had an easy post"

"'I have certainly obeyed his will" cried the stranger, in a lively laughing tone; but changing into a graver, he added. "But what may be my reward, at least in this world, it is for you and others to judge."

"'I'm mista'en, then, if it shouldna be liberal," replied Andrew, 'for ye seem a man of discretion, and, doubtless, merit the post ye have so long possessed. May be some day in parliament I may call this conversation to mind for your behoof. 'The King canna gang far wrang sae lang as he keeps counsel with such douce and prudent like men, even tho' ye have a bit flight of the fancy. What's your name?"

The old gentleman looked sharply; but in a moment his countenance resumed its wonted open cheerfulness and he said, "So you are in Parliament eh? I have a seat there too—Don't often go, however—Perhaps may see you there—Good bye, good bye"

"'Ye'll excuse my freedom, sir," said Andrew, somewhat rebuked by the air and manner in which his new acquaintance separated from him; "but if you are not better engaged, I would be glad if we could breakfast together."

"'Can't, can't," cried the old gentleman, shortly, as he walked away; but turning half round after he had walked two or three paces, he added, "Obliged to breakfast with the king—he won't without me;" and a long and mirthful laugh gave notice to all the surrounding echoes that a light and pleased spirit claimed their liveliest responses.

There was no much in this conversation that satisfied our hero, who perceived that it was no easy matter to gain the sort of knowledge which he had come on purpose to procure; and in the lonesome humor which this reflection produced, he consumed the morning, loitering in the park and about the castle, till his usual breakfast hour, when he returned to the inn.

During breakfast in the coffee room, Andrew learned from some of the other strangers, who were similarly employed, that the best opportunity of seeing the royal family was when they went and came from church; for it was not always certain that they would walk on the Terrace in the evening.

"'But," said he, "how am I to know the king? for I dinna suppose that his arms are like two wild beasts, the lion and the unicorn. However, I'll avail myself of your counselling, and take my stance to St. George's Chapel.

Accordingly, at the proper time, he was at the place; but the moment that the carriage with their majesties drew up, he saw the old gentleman whom he had met in the park, alone with the Queen. His heart sank within him at the sight, and he fled as bashed and confounded, for he discovered that it was the king himself, and he shrunk with alarm at the liberties he had taken.

The terrors of this idea, however, abated as he re urned to London; and when he recalled to recollection all that had passed, he was satisfied his majesty was not likely to be displeased with him. By the time he reached home, he could, indeed, scarcely refrain from smiling, at the adventure, when he thought how completely he had succeeded in the object of his excursion, at the very time when he was despairing of any success."

MARY.

"Farewell to Northmoreu,
Grey Hilleswicke, farewell!
To the calms of thy haven,
The storms on thy fell—
To each breeze that can vary
The mood of thy main,
And to thee, bonny Mary!
We meet not again.

"Farewell the wild ferry,
Which Hacon could brave,
When the peaks of the Skerry,
Were white in the wave.
There's a maid may look over
Those wild waves in vain,
For the skiff of her lover—
He comes not again.

"The vow thou hast broke,
On the wild current fling them;
On the quicksand and rock,
Let the mermaiden sing them.
New sweetness they'll give her
Bewildering strain;
But there's one who will never Believe them again

"O were there an island,
Though ever so wild,
Where woman could smile, and
No man be beguiled—
Too tempting a snare
To poor mortals were given,
And the hope would fix there,
That should anchor in heaven."

NATURAL HISTORY.

Insects.—What vast importance is attached to the invention of paper! For near six thousand years, one of our commonest insects has known how to make and apply it to its purposes; and even pasteboard, superior in substance and polish to any we can produce, is manufactured by another. We imagine that nothing short of human intellect can be equal to the construction of a diving bell or an air pump—yet a spider is in the daily habit of using the one, and what is more, one exactly similar in principle to ours, but more ingeniously contrived.

HIPPOPOTAMUS.

* Enterprizing Naturalists.—LALANDE, a distinguished naturalist, sent by the French Government to Africa, has returned in the Panther, arrived at Bourdeaux, and has brought with him, (among other objects of value) a Hippopotamus of the largest size, an adult Rhinoceros, (bicornis,) and three whales of 75, 36, and 18 feet in length.

He himself obtained the Hippopotamus and the Rhinoceros; the whales were stranded on the shore. It was he also that prepared the skeletons and skins of these monsters. Of these achivements, which all do equal honor to the courage, address, and activity of the intrepid naturalist, the most important acquisition to science is that of the Hippopotamus. We had no whole skeleton of this animal, and a scale of comparison was wanting by which to judge of its fossil remains, such as they are found in France. After waiting for six months in the Savannas, Mr. LALANDE at last met with the monster, six feet high and twelve feet long. His walk made a noise similar to four washer-women alternately beating linen against stones But no language can express the frightful tumult of his direct and rapid course when mortally wounded; he endeavored precipitately to gain the water, overturning every thing in his way; his eyes swimming in blood, seemed to dart fire, his throat was agitated with convulsive motions; he gnashed his grinders, and vomited frothy blood, while two long jets of blood started from his nostrils. His bellowing and roaring rolled in the woods like thunder, and the ground trembled under his feet. A second shot fired close at his ear, streched him lifeless.—Ten yoke of oxen were unable to draw his gigantic body out of the woods. LALANDE was obliged to cut it to pieces on the spot, and to construct hastily around it a rampart of reeds and bamboos to protect it in the night from wild beasts. Great strength of mind was certainly requisite to preserve a necessary sang froid at sight of this animal; but much greater must have been the firmness and impassiveness of LALANDE to have dissected such a mass of flesh with all the care and precaution necessary to the operation, under a burning sun, and in so torrid a climate that putrefaction in twenty-four hours occurs in all its most hideous and disgusting stages.

ANNO PRIMO & SECUNDO
GEORGII IV. REGIS.

CAP. LXVI.

An Act for regulating the Fur Trade, and establishing a Criminal and Civil Jurisdiction within certain parts of North America.

[3d July, 1821.]

WHEREAS the Competition in the Fur Trade between the Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading into Hudson's Bay, and certain Associations of Persons trading under the name of "The North-west Company of Montreal," has been found for some years past to be productive of great inconvenience and loss, not only to the said Company and Associations, but to the said Trade in general and also of great injury to the native Indians, and of other Persons Subjects of His Majesty. And whereas the animosities and feuds, arising from such Competition, have also for some years past kept the interior of America, to the North-ward and West-ward of the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and of the Territories of the United States of America, in a state of continued disturbance: And whereas many Breaches of the Peace, and violence extending to the loss of lives, and considerable destruction of property, have continually occurred therein: And whereas, for remedy of such evils, It is expedient and necessary that some effectual Regulations should be established for the apprehending, securing, and bringing to Justice all Persons committing such Offences, and that His Majesty should be empowered to regulate the said Trade: And whereas doubts have been entertained, whether the provisions of an Act passed in the Forty-third year of the reign of His Majesty King George the Third, intituled An Act for extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, to the Trial and Punishment of Persons guilty of Crimes and Offences within certain parts of North America adjoining to the said Provinces, extended to the Territories granted by Charter to the said Governor and Company; and it is expedient that such doubts should be removed, and that the said Act should be further extended: Be it therefore enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same. That from and after the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, to make Grants or give His Royal Licence, under the Hand and Seal of One of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, to any Body Corporate, or Company, or Person or Persons, of or for the exclusive Privilege of Trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America as shall be specified in any such Grants or Licences respectively, not being part of the Lands or Territories heretofore granted to the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay, and not being part of any of His Majesty's Provinces in North America, or of any Lands or Territories belonging to the United States of America; and all such Grants and Licences shall be good, valid, and effectual for the purpose of securing to all such Bodies Corporate, or Companies or persons, the sole and exclusive privilege of trading with the Indians in all such parts of North America (except as herein-after excepted,) as shall be specified in such Grants or Licences; any thing contained in any Act or Acts of Parliament, or any Law to the contrary notwithstanding.

43 G. 3. c. 138.

Empowering his Majesty to make Grants for the exclusive Trade to certain parts of North America.

Limiting the Periods for which such Grants may be made.

II. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That no such Grant or Licence, made or given by his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, of any such parts of North America as aforesaid, shall be made or given for any longer period than twenty-one years; and no rent shall be required or demanded for or in respect of any such Grant or Licence, or any privilege given thereby under the provisions of this Act, for the first period of twenty one years; and from and after the expiration of such first period of twenty-one years, it shall be lawful for his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, to reserve such rents in any future Grant or Licences to be made to the same or any other parties, as shall be deemed just and reasonable, with equity to the payment thereof; and such rents shall be deemed part of the Land Revenues of his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, and be applied and accounted for as the other Land Revenues of his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, shall, at the times of payment of any such rent being made, be applied and accounted for.

Persons to whom such Grants shall be made, to enter into Security.

III. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay, and every Body Corporate and Company and person to whom every such Grant or Licence shall be made or given as aforesaid, shall respectively keep accurate Registers of all persons in their employ in any parts of North America, and shall, once in each year, return to his Majesty's Secretaries of State accurate Duplicates of such Registers, and shall also enter into such Security as shall be required by his Majesty for the due execution of all Processes Criminal and Civil, as well within the Territories included in any such Grant, as within those granted by Charter to the Governor and Company of Adventurers trading to Hudson's Bay, and for the producing or delivering into safe Custody, for purpose of Trial, of all persons in their employ or acting under their Authority, who shall be charged with any Criminal Offence, and also for the due and faithful observance of all such Rules, Regulations, and Stipulations as shall be contained in any such Grant or Licence, either for diminishing or preventing the sale or distribution of Spirituous Liquors to the Indians, or for promoting their moral and religious improvement, or for any other object which his Majesty may deem necessary for the remedy or prevention of the other evils which have hitherto been found to exist.

IV. And whereas by a convention entered into between his Majesty and the United States of America, it was stipulated and agreed, that any Country on the North west coast of America, the Wat-ward of the Stony Mountains, should be free and open to the Citizens and Subjects of the Two Powers, for the term of ten years from the date of the signature of that convention; but it therefore enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall be deemed or constructed to authorize any Body Corporate, Company, or Person, to whom his Majesty may have, under the provisions of this Act, made a Grant or given a Licence of exclusive Trade with the Indians in such parts of North America as aforesaid, to claim or exercise any such exclusive Trade within the Limits specified in the said Article, to the prejudice or exclusion of any Citizens of the said United States of America, who may be engaged in the said Trade: Provided always, that no British Subject shall trade with the Indians within such limits, without such Grant or Licence as is by this Act required.

Such Grant of exclusive Trade not to interfere with Citizens of the United States beyond the stony Mountains.

V. And be it declared and enacted That the said Act passed in the forty-third year of the Reign of his late Majesty, intituled An Act for extending the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Justices in the Provinces of Lower and Upper-Canada, to the Trial and Punishment of Persons guilty of Crimes and Offences within certain parts of North America adjoining to the said Provinces, and all the Clauses and Provisoes therein contained, shall be deemed and construed, and it is and are hereby respectively declared, to extend to and over, and to be in full force in and through all the Territories hereinafore granted to the Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay; any thing in any Act or Acts of Parliament, or this Act, or in any Grant or Charter to the Company, to the contrary notwithstanding.

43 G. 3. c. 138. extended to the Territories granted to the Hudson's Bay Company.

Courts of Judicature established in U. Canada to take cognizance of Causes in Indian Territories.

VI. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, the Courts of Judicature now existing, or which may be hereafter established in the Province of Upper-Canada, shall have the same Civil Jurisdiction, Power, and Authority, as well in the Cognizance of Suits, as in the issuing Process, mesne and final, and in all other respects whatsoever, within the said Indian Territories, and other parts of America not within the Limits of either of the Provinces of Lower or Upper-Canada, or of any Civil Government of the United States, as the said Courts have or are invested with within the Limits of the said Provinces of Lower or Upper-Canada respectively; and that all and every contract, agreement, debt, liability, or demand whatsoever, made, entered into, incurred, or arising within the said Indian Territories and other parts of America, and all and every wrong and injury to person or to property real or personal, committed or done within the same, shall be and be deemed to be of the same nature, and be cognizable by the same Courts, Magistrates, or Justices of the Peace, and be tried in the same manner, and subject to the same consequences in all respects, as if the same had been made, entered into, incurred, arisen, committed, or done within the said Province of Upper Canada; any thing in any Act or Acts of Parliament, or Grant or Charter, to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided always, that all such Suits and Actions relating to Lands, or to any Claims in respect of Land, not being within the Province of Upper-Canada, shall be decided according to the Laws of that part of the United Kingdom called England, and shall not be subject to or affected by any Local Acts, Statutes, or Laws of the Legislature of Upper-Canada.

Actions relating to Lands not within the Province of Upper Canada to be decided according to the law of England.

Proceedings of Courts to be held in the same manner as heretofore.

VII. And be it further enacted, That all Process, Writs, Orders, Judgments, Decrees, and Acts whatsoever, to be issued, made, delivered, given, and done by or under the Authority of the said Courts, or either of them, shall have the same Force, Authority, and Effect within the said Indian Territory and other parts of America as aforesaid, as the same now have within the said Province of Upper-Canada.

Appointment of Justices of Peace.

VIII. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Governor or Lieut. And be it further enacted, That in case such person or persons shall not perform and fulfil the Condition or Conditions of such Recognizance, then and in such Case it shall and may be lawful for any such Justice or Commissioner, and he is hereby required, to assign such Recognizance to the Plaintiff or Plaintiffs, in any Suit in which such Process, Writ, Order, Decree, Judgment, or Act shall have been issued, made, delivered, given or done, who may maintain an Action in the said Courts in his own name against the said Sureties, and recover against such Sureties the full Amount of such Loss or Damage as such Plaintiff shall prove to have been sustained by him, by reason of the original Cause of Action in respect of which such Process, Writ, Order, Decree, Judgment, or Act of the said Courts were issued, made, delivered, given or done as aforesaid, notwithstanding any Condition contained in any Charter granted to the said Governor and Company of Adventurers of England trading to Hudson's Bay.

Editorial Commentary.

We neglected stating in our last, that Mr. KNOWLYS, Common Sejeant, has succeeded to the Recordership of London. Sir JAMES MACKINTOSH and Mr. DENMAN, were the unsuccessful candidates.

In our supplement of last week, we stated from private, but what we have every reason to believe authentic, intelligence, received with great expedition by the way of New York, that RUSSIA and TURKEY had submitted their differences to the arbitration of ENGLAND and AUSTRIA. Notwithstanding the contradictory and uncertain news of the present week, our reliance upon the above information remains firm, though our private opinion, as regards Russia, is the same it always has been:—although she may appear to submit to the arbitration of a third power;—although she may seem to be satisfied with the occupation of Moldavia and Wallachia;—she will not surrender that policy, which for nearly a century, has been bequeathed to the successors of the throne of all the Russias. The manner in which she is now acting, by the shew of an uncommon forbearance, and the seeming modesty of requesting merely to occupy two of the Turkish provinces, proves to our mind a consummate political cunning, and that she is eventually sure of the stake, for which she is playing. We must again repeat that, of all the European Sovereigns, Napoleon best understood the character of Alexander.

It is our painful duty this week, to record one of the most terrible disasters, at sea, that has occurred for many years; we mean the loss of the ship Albion, on the coast of Ireland. We have given the details at length, for here they have a sad and melancholy interest, rendered more deep and lasting, by the recollections we must all have of several of the unfortunate sufferers. It is, indeed, a frightful calamity; but we ought to regard it as one of those awful lessons which are decreed for our good by Him who "rides on the whirlwind and directs the storm." It should at least teach us to be humble, and the need we all have of a support greater, and better far, than that which poor, frail man, can impart to his fellow.

The reported union of the two Provinces of Canada, continues to be a subject of conversation. We thought it right to give the report a place in this paper, but we gave it as we found it, and made no comment. We shall now, however, venture to predict that no such event will take place. We have been favoured with a file of the London Couriers up to a late date, and there does not appear to be any Bill before Parliament leading to such a measure. The Provinces have been too long separated, to admit of a re-union without inconveniences and impediments, that seem to be insurmountable.

Our Attorney General arrived in London about the 22d of March, and up to the 11th of April, had daily interviews, of great length, with Ministers. It gives us real pleasure to announce, that his mission is likely to be attended with the most complete success; and that our relations with the Lower Province, will be put on a firm and advantageous footing. We have no doubt that Mr. Robinson will deserve the general thanks of the country.

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

AUSTRIA AND RUSSIA.

Our relations next in order, are those with Austria and Russia. As regards Austria, it is unnecessary to go into any detail; the principal point of incidental contract between Austria and ourselves having been touched upon above. Some points, however, may appear to deserve observation. One of these is, the erroneous estimate amongst our popular speakers and writers, of the character and alledged views of this Government. No Sovereign is, perhaps, more injuriously treated than the Emperor of Austria. He is not the despotic prince which our libellous writers represent. Considering the extent of his dominions, and their exposed condition, the defensive power of the Emperor of Austria is not equal to the dignity and station of his empire in the European common-wealth. His kingdom is composed of members too distinct, having little more union than in the circumstance of their being governed by a common sovereign; whilst each member is alike suspicious, lest the force of one part should be directed towards the subversion of the privileges of the other. The power of the sovereign, under the Hungarian constitution, amounts to little more than the feudal superiority of the supreme chief over his barons. In his German states, the power of the emperor is rather patrimonial than political. In Italy, he has to contend with an adverse public opinion, and with the natural hostility of a people subjected to a foreign ruler. The local character of his dominions, and their relative situation towards each other, are equally ill adapted to compose a compact power, or to constitute a force of ready application. The greater portion of his kingdom consists of a plain level country, intersected indeed, by large rivers, but almost totally without any defensive strength upon its frontier. The political character of Austria is necessarily governed by these circumstances of its imperfect means of protection. If the re-construction of the Dutch barrier, by means of the kingdom of the Netherlands, have given additional security to Austria on the part of France, the growth of the Prussian monarchy, and the extension of that of Russia have introduced other and larger objects, which in the vicissitudes of time and in the varying policy of cabinets, may more seriously effect the safety of the House of Austria. It is far, very far from the purpose of the present observations, epargere voces ambiguas, or to give countenance to reports which, under present circumstances, have no shadow of foundation in truth. But the prudence of states, which we call policy, has necessarily a longer reach than the precautionary wisdom of private life. It is the duty of Austria to consider the future as well as the present. The generosity and moderation of her present neighbors are their personal virtues; their successors may be more open to temptation. Under such circumstances, the situation of Austria is one of much delicacy and difficulty, and her policy necessarily partakes of this character. She must vigilantly attend to the maintenance of her actual power; she must jealously guard that system of Europe, the continuance of which is her best security, and most effectual strength. In a word, it peculiarly belongs to her relations, to encounter in their first re-appearance, the return of those principles to the progress of which she would necessarily become the first sacrifice.

The tone and conduct of the British Government towards Austria, have been regulated by a knowledge of these circumstances in her situation.——Doubtless His Majesty's Ministers well knew her difficulties, with regard to her Italian state, and as the due power of Austria is necessary for the system of Europe, they must at once have known and lamented the reluctant obedience of her Italian subjects. They could not but be informed by their resident ministers in Italy, that a very dangerous faction was gaining a most alarming strength, and that it particularly menaced the Austrian dominions. Considering the local contract of the Alpine states with France, and with that part of France which, within a very short period, had been the chief scene upon which the troubles of Europe were renewed, the British cabinet could not but entertain some apprehension for the safety of the general system. The next house had caught fire, before the flames were well extinguished in its adjoining neighborhood. It was under these circumstances, that his Majesty's ministers deemed that the situation of Austria justified some latitude in her defensive measures. If the Austrian government appeared to some persons, to assert too broadly the principle of this invasion, the British cabinet deemed it sufficient upon their part, to declare their own construction of the public law of Europe; at the same time rendering justice to the peculiar situation of Austria.

This danger, and assuredly not an inconsiderable danger, has now happily passed away. We are now instructed by events. But will it be denied in the face of these events, that experience has well justified the wisdom of the policy pursued by the British governments? What might not have been the situation of Europe, if the King's ministers, following the rash but perhaps generous impulse of public opinion, and adopting the injudicious vehemence of the opposition, had immediately involved the nation in this contest. Naples would still have been over-run, and Sardinia would still have submitted. Her revolutionary army would still have been disposed. We could have intermeddled with no other effect, than to excite an unfriendly feeling in our former allies, and to cherish the designs of the ill-disposed throughout Europe. We must have interposed, if at all, either by the exercise of our influence, or, more authoritatively, by a direct declaration that the rights of nations were invaded. If, by our influence, the peril of Austria was possibly too immediate to induce her to surrender the interests of her own safety to our remonstrance and advice. If we had resorted more at once to the one, our naval armament, in support of our declaration, would scarcely have reached the Neapolitan seas, before the submission of Naples and Piedmont would have rendered it nugatory. What must then have been the course suitable to the honor and dignity of England! Unless we must have renewed the general war for such objects, or have withdrawn with a barren exertion of our authority.—To say nothing of our internal situation at this period, and of the importance of not suffering any remote and incidental object to impede us in the great work of national retrenchment.

The interests of the several European states are so involved with each other, that it is perhaps an imperfect method to enumerate, thus distinctly, our foreign relation with the several states individually. Our relations with Russia, are but little different from the same relations with Austria. Our leading object with both, has been to confirm the full confidence established at the period of the treaties.—His Majesty's ministers have felt none of that jealousy towards the emperor of Russia, to which they have been strongly urged by the gentlemen of the opposition. They have seen nothing in the conduct of Russia, to justify such a jealousy. All the public measures of Russia since the peace, have been characterized with the sincerity and moderation of her emperor. The powers of Europe, whose dominions are in immediate contact with those of Russia, have expressed no jealousy of this kind; and his Majesty's ministers have deemed it absurd to admit apprehensions for Austria, Prussia, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, which none of those states feel for themselves. Possibly, the personal character of the emperor of Russia is better known by his Majesty's ministers, than by gentlemen more remote from official intercourse. Possibly, they may have learned from their resident ministers, that a perfect community of sentiment and feeling exists between the emperor and his own subjects; and that no wish has arisen with any party in Russia, but that of maintaining the general peace.—Ministers cannot forget, that when the vast spoil of the French conquest was in nodo at the period of the general peace, the emperor Alexander contended with England in a high minded and generous abstinence from all claims for himself. They cannot forget, that having then the power to retain, and certainly not without the strongest to indemnify for his sufferings during the invasion of his empire, he concurred, as fully as themselves, in the restoration of kingdoms, provinces, cities, & towns, to their former possessors. Remembering this, they possibly think they do him only justice in offering his moderation, under less temptation, by his experienced magnanimity under greater.

One event indeed has arisen which has placed the emperor Alexander in a situation of much difficulty, and which, in some of its circumstances, has apparently given countenance to the assertions of popular writers. The insurrection of the Greeks against Turkey has necessarily involved a prince and people of the same religion with themselves.—There is a strange injustice amongst our party writers in considering the situation of the emperor Alexander as regards this unforeseen event. They entirely overlook circumstances obvious to themselves, and which stand forth upon the very face of his situation. They impute to his own seekings, and to his seeking for a selfish purpose, an extreme state of difficulties, manifestly thrown upon him by fortune. The Russian people, and of course the Russian army, are not only of the same religion, but exercise it precisely in the same form with the Greeks. The great body of the Russian population has not yet reached the high degree of civilization of some parts of Europe. It is more simple in its habits, and at the same time less corrupted. Their hearts are most warmly attached to the religion of their country:—Their religious faith is more singly the object of their affection. We may all remember what a degree of popular clamor was excited amongst ourselves, about three years since, by some false and absurd reports of a persecution against the Puritans in a remote part of France. But if such a feeling, and upon such an occasion, was raised amongst our own people, whose character at the present day is assuredly not an excess of religious enthusiasm, and whose affections are subdivided among it the hundred other objects of attachment in a rich and luxurious community; is it difficult to conceive what must be the general sensation throughout the Russian empire, where such acts exercised against the most sacred person of the same religious faith, were passing in adjoining provinces; and where these acts were brought home with so much increased force to their feelings and passions, by the daily reception and personal supplication of the persecuted fugitives? Is it any reasonable subject of astonishment, that, under the presence of such images, and under the daily exhortation of priests of the same religion, a kind of epidemic indignation should run through the body of the Russian people, and that the contagion in some degree should reach the army? Far be it from the writer of these remarks to insinuate any imputation against the officers and men of an army, who in the common contest for the deliverance of Europe sustained at least their equal part. The truth is, that they could not have been men, and assuredly not the brave and generous people which they are, if they had beheld without sympathy the scenes and acts which were passing before their eyes. Under such circumstances, is it necessary to insist further upon the extreme difficulty of the situation of the emperor Alexander in the dissentions between Greece and Turkey? Supposing for a moment, but which must not be supposed, that he did not himself partake of this feeling of his people and army, it is manifestly contrary to every rule of prudence that he should oppose himself singly and directly to this national enthusiasm. It was totally impossible to stem such a torrent by moving in a direct line across it. There are some circumstances in the general condition of a foreign state, which should be touched with the same delicacy as if belonging to the privacy of common life. It is presumed, that enough has already been said to enable the candid reader to enter into the situation of the Emperor Alexander, and to deduce the inference that this sovereign has not failed in his obligations to the general system of Europe.

Nor in forming an estimate of the conduct of this sovereign should it be omitted, that he most readily assented to the British protection of the Ionian Islands, and this at a period when all Europe was ringing with a clamour against his alleged designs in the Mediterranean. This act of magnanimity is, indeed, in itself an answer to all illiberal suspicions for if the object of Russia had been the conquest of Turkey, and the ultimate appropriation of its provinces, her cabinet could never have consented to this anticipated cession of a part of her spoil, and still less could have augmented, if not established, a controlling power in the Mediterranean.

WRECK OF THE ALBION.

The following letter from a correspondent in Liverpool, gives the painful news of the wreck and total loss of the Packet ship ALBION, from this port for Liverpool, together with all the passengers but one or two, and the Captain and all the crew but seven. Two other letters, published in Liverpool, and containing all the particulars that had been received of this distressing disaster, will be among our extracts.

Liverpool, April 27, 1822.

I have now to inform you of the melancholy loss of the Albion, Captain Williams; and, sad to relate, the captain and all the passengers, except one, (twenty seven ladies and gentlemen,) are said to have perished. This disastrous event happened on the morning of the 22d, very near the head of Old Kinsale. No particulars have yet been received, and we remain in the most painful anxiety to learn the names of the sufferers. It is a most extraordinary fact, that no person here, that I can find out, knows the names of any of them. It is said that the ship was dismasted in a severe gale on the 21st, and all their efforts to keep her off the shore were rendered unavailing, as she was within fifty yards of the shore. Such is the nature of the coast there, that the persons who were on the spot, could render little or no assistance; only seven of the crew and one passenger having been saved. This gentleman's name is not known. He was so much exhausted that he could give no information, either about himself or the others; but it is said he is from Boston. The body of Major Prevost, of the 8th regiment, has come on shore.

Liverpool, May 1.

In addition to the particulars of the loss of the Albion, published on the 27th ult. the following have been received:—

Kinsale, 4th Month, 26, 1822.

"On my arrival here on the 23d, I wrote you a hasty letter, apprising you of the melancholy fate of the ship Albion. I went over the fatal spot, and cannot describe the scene that presented itself to my view, nor am I disposed to dwell on the heart rending scene.

"I shall be as brief as possible. Henry Cameyer, the first mate, is saved, and six of the crew. The whole company on board, including passengers, amounted to fifty six, of whom forty five perished and nine are saved. The log book being lost, the mate could not give me a list of the passengers; but, from memory, he has given me the names of eighteen, which are annexed. As the bodies that were found lay on the shore, the mate pointed out to me their respective names, which were put on paper and placed on each body, and I gave directions that the graves should be numbered and a list made out, which I expected to get this day, by which it can be easily ascertained where each body lies in the grave yard. A clergyman attended this melancholy procession. This may be some consolation to the afflicted relatives of the dead.—Very little of the wreck remains, and the country people are carrying it off in all directions, in small pieces. I have desired the remnant to be put up at auction and sold. I inquired of the mate about the specie—there were two boxes for you, two for professor Fisher, a passenger, besides a package of dollars belonging to the only cabin passenger saved, Mr. Overheart, of Pennsylvania, who is very ill in bed. The mate thought I had not the least chance of recovering a dollar. I, however, thought otherwise. I accordingly took aside a confidential man, John Purcell, who is in the employment, and enjoys the unlimited confidence of my worthy and respectable friend, Thomas Rochfort, Esq. of Garrettstown, who owns all the land in the neighborhood. I told him to employ a few men, on whose honesty he could depend, and set them to work to examine the spot where I received the mate's report the money might be, and that I would give him a good commission (I think I said 5 per cent) if he could prevent plunder and save the property. Late last night I received the enclosed, by express, and I am now on the point of returning to the wreck. The box was broken open and plunder attempted.

"Yours truly,

"JACOB MARK.

"Cropper, Benson & Co."

Garrettstown,
Thursday evening, April 25, 1822.

Sir—I have only time to inform you, that we found, near where the wreck of the Albion lay, this day, different gold coins, in a small box, in all by a rough calculation, amounting to upwards of £3000. The coins being many of them foreign, and of different dates, prevents me from giving the exact sum, but it has all been brought up here safe, and counted in the presence of Mr. Pratt, the officer of the customs, Mr. Lemon and myself. I haste to acquaint you of this pleasing circumstance.

I have the honor to be sir, your most obedient and humble servant,

JOHN PURCELL.

To Jacob Mark, Esq.

From the Cork Southern Reporter of April 22.

The Albion whose loss at Garretstown bay, we first mentioned in our paper of Tuesday, was one of the finest class of ships between Liverpool and New York, and was 500 tons burthen. We have since learned some further particulars, by which it appears that her loss was attended with circumstances of a peculiarly affecting nature. She had lived out the tremendous gale of the entire day on Sunday, and Captain Williams consoled the passengers at eight o'clock in the evening, with the hope of being able to reach Liverpool on the day but one after, which cheering expectation induced almost all the passengers particularly the females, to retire to rest. In some short time, however, a violent squall came on, which in a moment carried away the masts, and their being no possibility of disengaging them from the rigging, they encumbered the hull that she became unmanageable, and drifted at the mercy of the waves, till the lighthouse of the Old Head was discovered, the wreck still nearing in, when the Captain told the sad news to the passengers that there was no longer any hope, and soon after she struck. From thence to ward all was distress and confusion. The vessel soon went to pieces, and of the crew and passengers, only six of the former and nine of the latter were saved.

The mate is among the preserved, and that preservation was almost miraculous. He was thrown on a cliff by a wave, and had succeeded in climbing to the top of it, when another took him off. He was thrown back and was more fortunate—but his appearance bespeaks the sufferings he endured from the beating of his body against the rocks. He is dreadfully bruised.

The number of passengers, we believe, was 25. Of these, we have already stated, one only was saved, a gentleman of Boston who traded with Liverpool. He had arrived at New York almost in the Albion was on the point of sailing, and had not time to get bills for a large sum in specie, which he had. It was therefore shipped and lost

Several of the bodies have been washed ashore; and Jacob Mark, Esq. the American Consul at this port, having repaired to the scene where the wreck took place, immediately on learning the melancholy intelligence, has done every thing befitting his situation, and a man of humanity under the circumstances. He has provided coffins for the bodies, and caused them to be interred with their respective name affixed, having first had the mate to point them out, in order that, if the families of any of them should wish hereafter to have the bodies removed, they may be enabled to do so. Mr. Mark's conduct is in every respect praiseworthy, and he has taken measures for the protection of every thing that has been washed ashore, as well as for securing any thing that may yet be recovered Among the property already found is a box of specie—and among the bodies washed ashore is that of a French lady—she was extremely beautiful—when first discovered by some respectable persons it was entirely naked. It was mentioned to us as a fact, which we think, ought to be mentioned, that a country boy, who saw the body, took off his outside coat and covered it—and it is related of others of the country people they also took off their warm clothing, and put them on the unfortunate and nearly half perished part of the crew that escaped. While there are so many to censure and condemn their crimes, let them at least have justice rendered to their good qualities.

It is distressing to be obliged to add to this melancholy event that, on Wednesday, a boat from Courtmasherry, in which were eight men in endeavouring to save a piece of the wreck, was upset, and of the eight, seven were drowned.

The names of the passengers by the vessel were as follows:

Cabin Passengers.—Mr. Benyon, a London gentleman; †Mr. N. Ross, of Troy, near New York; Mr. Convers, his brother-in law Major Gough, 68th regiment; Mr. and Mrs. Clarke, Americans; †Madame Gardiener and son, a boy about eight years of age; †Colonel Prevost; †Mr. Dwight, of Boston; †Mrs. Mary Pye, N. York; †Miss Powell, daughter of the Hon. William Dummer Powell, Chief Justice of Upper Canada; †Rev. Mr. Hill, Jamaica coming home by the way of the U. States; Professor Fisher, New Haven, Connecticut; Mr. Gurnee, New York; Mr. Proctor, New York; Mr. Depont, and five other Frenchmen.

Steerage Passengers.—†Mrs. Mary Brewster, Mr. Hirst. Mr. Morrison, Stephen Chase.

The bodies marked (†) have been picked up and buried.

A great number of bills drawn by the British officers in America, on Greenwood and Cox, army agents in London, and on other persons in England, have also been washed ashore. Mr. Mark's activity and vigilance have been successful in securing whatever has been saved. Mr. Gibbons, the agent for Lloyds, at Kinsale, has been unwearied in his attentions, and whatever the mansion of Mr. Rochfort, of Garretstown could contribute for the relief of the survivors has been bounteously administered.

Major Gough's watch and seals have been picked up, and a small gold watch was found in Col. Prevost's box. These articles Mr. Mark has in his possession.

The box of specie, of which we have spoken, contains coins foreign and English, to the value of £5000. It is addressed to T. U. & Co. care of C. Hughes, Liverpool.

The Bills found are to an immense amount, on London, Paris, and different parts of the Continent.

Mr. Marks speaks in terms of great praise of the exertions of Mr. Pratt, Surveyor of Kinsale, and of Mr. John Purcell a confidential steward of Mr. Rochort.

FRANCE.

Superstition in France.—Letters from the French capital mention a fact or two concerning the efforts of a certain religious party in France, with which the English are not generally acquainted. Great exertions have of late been making by the Pavilion Marsan, in conjunction with a great body of the clergy, and a portion of nobility, to restore, in its pristine rigour, with all its ornamental appendages, and in all its exclusive intolerance, the ancient superstition.—For this purpose, missionaries have travers d all the Provinces of France, as if France was a heathen land, preaching conversion and planting the cross. In some cases they beard the authorities, and threatned them with dismissal if they opposed their views. They even (about two months ago) appeared in the capital and took up their station at one of the principal churches, addressing the Parisians as heathens. The working of miracles, the efficacy of relics, and every part of the old system, which requires the most abject surrender of the understanding, are the themes of their discourse. The peers and old women who patronize them, openly declare against the instruction of the people, and look upon a Lancasterian School as a seminary for perdition. These missionaries are said to be warmly patronized by the French Princes and Ultras.

"I know," said the Emperor Joseph, "these people (the Jesuits) as well as any man; I know all the plans which they have executed; their endeavor to spread darkness over the earth, and to govern and confuse Europe from Cape Finisterre to the North Sea." Now that the Continental Sovereigns are anxious to replunge Europe in darkness, to degrade and demoralize the people, to bring them "to the condition of the beasts of the field," it is natural that they should look for aid to this society. Hence we find the Jesuits again protected, countenanced, and in full activity, not merely at Rome, but in Austria, France, &c.—In Austria the Jesuits have again obtained nearly the monopoly of Education. By a late Edict, all private tuition is prohibited, by which measure the Jesuits have got rid of intelligent rivals from Protestant Germany, and Switzerland. A Papal Brief has been issued, expressive of grief and indignation that the Bishops and Clergy should allow their flocks to read the poetry of Schiller, Herder, Goethe, and Wieland, the four greatest names in German literature! In France we see the same attempts to favour the Jesuits. The King is himself too enlightened to enter into all the views of the Ultras on this subject; but the Princes seem ready tools for them. Accordingly, we find them taking a prominent part in all the ridiculous mummery with which, under the name of religion, France is every day scandalized.

Miscellaneous Notices.

It is rumoured that the Lord Chancellor is anxious to retire from the fatigue of his high official situations after the termination of the present session of Parliament.

The amount of the Solicitor's bill for Exchequer prosecutions in the year 1821 was about 38,000l.; and the amount paid to Counsel in respect of the same prosecutions amounted to about 2,500l.

Of the ring when we are married.—The ring at first was not of gold but of iron, and adorned with adamant; signifying the durance of the contract. The form of it being round and with at end, doth impart, that their love should circulate and flow continually. The finger on which it is placed, the fourth on the left hand, next the little finger, because there was supposed a vein of blood to pass from thence unto the heart.

A favourite horse, the property of Henry Waldron, Esq. of Badfield house, Devon, died a few days since, at the advanced age of 50 years.

In consequence of the mildness of the winter, a schooner called the Albion, has sailed from Newcastle to North Bergen, to bring home a cargo of ice.

An infant Lambert.—In a country village, about 12 miles from Bristol, there is a child, whose present appearance bids fair to equal if not surpass the wonderful prodigy in Leicester. The child is only six months old, measures seven inches round the arm-wrist, and nine inches three quarters at the small of the leg; he is supposed to weigh between 40 and 50 lbs. He is quite a burthen to be held long in the arms; appears lively and healthy, and flesh firm and hard, and is suckled by his mother to have commenced eating animal food at a fortnight old.

Forensic Medicine.—It was till very lately the practice, in trials for infanticide, to place the lungs in water, and to judge from them floating or not floating, whether the child was born alive. At the present Worcester Assizes, Baron Garrow in his address to the grand jury, observed, that it was a matter of exultation to him, that this absurdity was by the advance of science, exploded; nothing could be more ridiculous than such a test, and it was gratifying to see it now universally abandoned.

INDEX AT END

SPANISH CHIEFTAINS.

I knew Portier. His death might serve as a model for a dying patriot;—it was solemn—it was noble—it was worthy of the worthiest! Every thing which cruelty could invent to aggravate: every thing which malignity could imagine to degrade, accompanied his execution. His remains were buried on the sea shore, and on a day when the roar of the waves, & the chorus of the winds, were most magnificent. I wandered along the sands to visit "the place of his rest." Poor triumph of baffled hatred——Could Portier have desired a sublimer sepulchre? Nor were my thoughts unaffected by the awful and well suited inscription over the gate of the cemetery before which I had just passed:

"El termino de la vida es lo que vela!—
"El dela muerte sera segun obrias."

QUIROGA,

Has a martial air; he is in the prime of life; somewhat above the middle stature, with a pleasing, sometimes even fascinating, expression of countenance. But I shall secure my sketch from severe criticism—you will judge of him for yourself, for he is about to visit England. He was, as you know, the commander-in-chief of the liberating army. Neither he, nor any of his compeers had obtained any considerable distinctions, nor had been much known before the great events of the Isla de Leon. It is a strange fact that those who had failed in various attempts to rescue Spain, were most of them men of signal reputation; Mina, whose whole public life is one of chivalry; Portier; Abisbal; Lacy; while those who succeeded in the perilous enterprize were men, till then, obscure and unnoticed. Argo Arguero's talents, as an officer of engineers, were distinguished. Lopez Bano, and, indeed, all the rest, had served bravely in the Peninsular war. They had every one of them been engaged in Abisbal's plot; if tyranny had trampled them under foot; contempt and scorn would have been poured upon their ignoble heads;—your worldly-wise ones—your servile, slavish creatures—would have called them rebels and traitors—and have linked their names to shame and infamy; but the bright and glorious success of the few heroes who triumph may repay us for the disappointments of the many who are baffled in their struggle for national liberty.

Quiroga was well aware of the perils of the task he had undertaken. He told me that he had determined, however, never to fall alive into the hands of his enemies; he always sleeps with a pair of loaded pistols under his pillow, and in case of surprise he had vowed that he would destroy himself and his wife; (then in an advanced state of pregnancy,) "that nothing," he added "of me or mine might witness the horrors they have prepared for me." His wife is of an English descent; and during the events of the Isla his only child, a daughter, whom he called Victoria, was born. "I passed," he said, "many moments of doubt and agony."—"And which were the bitterest moments?" I enquired. "The first when we attacked the Isla, for I knew, that if it were defended bravely, we never could succeed against it: the second, when Riego left me with his division: the third, when I knew that his troops were dispersed, and that he, a fugitive, was wandering alone among the mountains" And let it be owned, the heart must be made of stern and solid stuff which would bear its noble projects onward amidst a series of events like these.

But it has been remarked of Spaniards, and it has been well remarked, that they never calculate difficulties—they conquer them. Their no importa—'it does not matter,'—leads them through every perplexity. When Mina made his unsuccessful attack on Pampeluna, Spaniards were not disheartened—'No importa, Spain will be free."—When Portier was hanged—when Lacy was shot, the answer to all one's sympathizing regrets was, "No importa, Spain will be free;" and when, in the enthusiasm of joy and congratulation, you hail their deliverance, the reply is ready, "I told you before that all which happened no importa, and Spain is free."

The plot which was carried on to its full accomplishment by Quiroga, had been cherished and conducted by Abisbal, whose conduct throughout has been mysterious and irreconcileable. It was he who had fostered the spirit of opposition in 1816; it was he who arrested Quiroga, Arco, Aguero, and their fellow officers, amidst cries of "Long live the King;" and it was he who consummated the revolution by proclaiming the constitution at Ocana, in 1820. All parties he had seemed to serve—all parties he had seemed to betray. All have forgotten services whose sincerity was, at the least, doubtful; and Abisbal, who might have become the most illustrious character in Spain, has sunk into obscurity—not to say disgrace.

Every sort of national honour which can be gratifying to the pride or the patriotism of the heroes of the Isla de Leon, has been conferred on them by their grateful country. One of them is already no more. Arco Aguero was lately killed by a fall from his horse in the midst of his youth and of his glory. Riego has been of late the object of the attacks and persecutions of a proud and selfish faction—but Riego is the object of the idolatry of his fellow-citizens.

"OBSERVATIONS ON THE STATE OF THE COLONY."

but a type of thee, thou Prince of Liars!"

Old Play.

This man daringly asserts that not only large, but "immense" sums of money have been of late received for fees in the land-granting department of Upper Canada; and, that those sums have been sent out of the country; by whom, he dares not positively say, although he throws out so many broad insinuations, that it is not difficult to know against whom he has the wickedness and effrontery to assert this gross falsehood.

We will take upon ourselves to rebut the calumny, and to shew that it is impossible for any such sums to have been received; and, what has not been received, cannot have been disposed of in any way.

In the first place we shall deny that there have been any, or but very few, extensive grants, where the new fees have been paid; for we know of none after being at some pains in making the enquiry.

The three Settlements which have received by far the greatest augmentation, since the establishment of the new system, are the Perth, on the waters of the Rideau; the Talbot, in the London District; and the new Town ships on the tributary streams of the Rice Lake, and River Trent, in the Newcastle District. The first of these being a Military Settlement, needs no comment. In the second, which is under the immediate control of Colonel Talbot, we have every reason to believe there are no large grants on the new fees. Of the third we can speak very decisively.

In the Newcastle District, within the space of a few years, there are six newly settled Townships, to the northward of the Rice Lake, viz;—Cavan, Monaghan, Smith, Emily, Otonabee, and Asphodel; and there are six more at present under survey.

The only grants of any magnitude which were made in these new Townships before the establishment of country land-boards, are two; one of which, of three thousand acres, was made to the representatives of the late much lamented General, Sir Isaac Brock, and the other, of twelve hundred acres, to Mr. Fothergill. As the lands given to the representatives of General Brock, were in reward for public services, they were subject to no fees; Mr. Fothergill paid something less than sixty pounds, as fees, upon his 1200 acres, the exact sum he does not recollect.

It is true there have been many grants in that District of 400, 600, 800, 1000, and a few of 1200 acres; but these have been given to officers of the army and navy, and to other privileged persons, who pay no more than £2 ten. for stationary and engrossing.

The Land-Board was established in the year 1819 and we shall give an accurate statement of the grants that have been made in the three Townships, of which the Board has had the management;—to wit, Emily, South, and Otonabee; the townships of Cavan, Monaghan, and Asphodel, having been located almost as quickly as they were thrown open to the public, their diagrams have not been sent down to the Board. Our statement is taken from the minutes of the Board, up to the 12th of December last, and may be relied upon. It should be observed, however, that the gratuitous grants of 50 acres were not ordered until the 12th of January 1820; at least, they were not acted upon till that date by the Board at Hamilton.

We find that between the establishment of the Board in March, 1819, and the 12th of December 1821, inclusive, the Board had made 410 grants in the whole; of which number, 84 grants were made before the orders for 50 acres were acted upon; so that there remain the number of 326 grants which have been given out since the month of January 1820; and it is only necessary for our present purpose, to give a statement of these 326 grants, by order of the District Land Board, which stands as follows:—

278	Grants have been made of	50 Acres
1	do.	of 200 Acres

17 of 100 Acres, each
2 of 200 Acres,
1 of 500 Acres,
1 of 800 Acres.

On the above stated grants, and in the whole period between the dates mentioned, that is, subsequently to January, 1820, the sum total that has been received by the Treasurer, amounts to no more than £127 16s. 8d., for the granting of 30,700 Acres of land! and any one, of all acquaintance with the Public Offices in York, and the expences attending them, must be quite certain that the sum we have stated, and its correctness cannot be disputed, is wholly inadequate to the discharge of Office-fees on the gratuitous grants alone.—Alas! what now becomes of our author's fine and flourishing statement which gives an average profit, in fees, of £239,580, on 30 Townships! While he was doing, he might as well have made the sum sufficient to pay off the National debt of England, at once. When the truth is once deprived us there can be no limits put to falsehood. Those whom he accuses of peculation in this department, will have but slender pickings in the Newcastle District, nor can the poor settlers have any chance of a share of the 2000 mitch cows, should our author's patriotic appeal, have the effect of mollifying the obdurate hearts of the said peculators!

But our author is so evidently in the secret that he does not scruple to say the whole sum of £239,580, received in fees from poor emigrants, (mark him well, gentle reader, from poor and needy emigrants,) in 30 Townships, is sent out of the country; and adds, is this the only system, (a most lying system truly of his own invention) to promote true religion?—clearly, and beyond any doubt, publicly to insult the Lieut. Governor, else why should he thus repeat the very words used by his Excellency, in his address to Parliament? A fine man this to convince Mr. VANSITTART and Sir ISAAC COFFIN;—yes, verily, he will convince them—should they happen to see his labours in this disaffected and abominable ministry—that he is one of the veriest blockheads that ever pestered any society. It was said by an ancient author that the Emperor TIBERIUS, of Rome, was made of dirt kneaded with blood; what would that author, had he lived in our times, have said of the strange compound before us; would he not have said that he was made of dirt kneaded with impudence and falsehood?

This volunteer counsellor of Parliaments, and of Cabinet Ministers, observes that our Governor, in his address to the House of Assembly, said "not one word about the immense sums which must have been paid, and carried out of the Country, upon the settlement of the new Townships, nor have our honourable and enlightened members (House of Assembly) whom we pay for attending to our interests, demanded an account of them!"

It would have been strange indeed, if his Excellency could have said "one word" about what was not in existence; and it would have been slightly becoming the wisdom and gravity of a legislative body to demand an account of sums of money, which existed only in the wild and fanciful vagaries of a luna tic's brain.

In order that a question of so much importance, and one of such general interest, should be well understood, and set at rest; we shall, next week, present our readers with an accurate statement of all the grants made during one year, throughout the whole province; together with the amount of patent fees, and the expences upon each. Also, the numbers and expense of the Militia patents, and the amount annually paid to the Indians for their lands. The entire statement must confound those who have too readily admitted the infamous assertions of the publishing Observer.

NOTICES,

Commercial and Political.

The Russian American Company.—A German Paper states that this Company, the privileges of which have been recently confirmed by the Emperor Alexander, is in a most flourishing state It was established by the Emperor Paul in 1797, and has extensive factories in Irkutch, Yakutsk, Okotsk, and Moscow, besides agencies in Kasan, Tomsk, and Kamtschatka. The Company has also formed establishments on the north-west coast of America, on the Baranow Islands, at Kudjskun, and in the new Russian colony of Koss, in Romanzoff's Bay. Before the existence of the Company, there were only some private trading houses on the Aleutian and Kurtle Islands, amounting altogether to 44. In the course of 54 years, from 1797, these houses exported peltry to the amount of only 6,344,000 rubles. On the contrary, the company from its establishment in 1797 to 1818, only 21 years, exported from the same Islands peltry to the amount of more than 15,000,000, and have paid the station of Kiachta on the Chinese frontier alone. The Company was founded by shares, 8000 of which were inscribed at 500 rubles each, but they are now worth more than 600 rubles. An excellent post, called New Archangel, has lately been formed by the company, on the north west coast of America, and more than 10,000 savages of the Polar regions have been converted to Christianity. The Company has allotted 57,000 rubles to the building of an hospital on the island of Suke.

Riga, February 22.

One of the most remarkable places near Riga is the port of Kunda, in Esthoma, which was made a few years ago. A more important enterprize is the Alexander Canal, which is intended to unite the Peipus, that vast lake of the north, with the Gulf of Penau. Six millions of rubles are assigned for this work, which will be completed in a few years. Peter the Great conquered an enemy's fleet in the Peipus lake; but his great grandson will obtain a more valuable conquest by opening to navigation many large and small rivers, and thus giving to provinces remote from the sea, the blessings of a free commerce. When the Alexander Canal is finished, Dorpat will likewise become important as a commercial town.

From the New London Gazette of April 24.

CONTINENT OF NEW SOUTH ICELAND.—We have been favored with interesting particulars respecting a Southern Continent, by Capt. Nathaniel B. Palmer, of the sloop James Monroe, lately arrived at Stonington, from the South Shetlands.

Capt Palmer proceeded in the James Monroe from the Shetland Isles to the continent, and coasted it, from abreast of the Isles, to the Eastward as far as 44° West Longitude, keeping as near to the shore as the edge of floe ice would admit. At some places he could coast along shore; at other parts he could not approach nearer the shore than from one to five or six leagues, owing to the firm and fast ice; although it was midsummer there at the time, being in November, December and January.

In 61° 11' South Latitude, 45° 27' West Longitude from Greenwich, the coast was clear of firm ice, and here they discoved a fine harbour, lying about one mile within the entrance of Washington Strait, which harbor was named Palmer's Harbor, where he came to anchor. He found not the least appearance of vegetation on the land excepting the winter Moss. Neither did he here discover any animals, only a few Sea-Leopards, beautifully spotted. Of birds, there were Penguins, Port Egmont or Sea Hens, White Pigeons and Gulls.

There is now no doubt, that there exists a South Continent, and that Capt. Cook's "Southern Thule" belongs to it. Capt. Palmer could discern the mountains covered with snow, in the interior, as he sailed along the coast.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Extract of a letter from Capt. John Ebbets of the ship John and Edward, belonging to J. J. Astor and Son of this City, (N. York) dated at Canton, January 5th, 1822.

"On the 2d August last we launched at Woahoo, one of the Sandwich Islands, the elegant pilot-boat built schooner John Jacob Astor. The frame of this vessel was carried out in the William and John from this city and put together under my direction, at this island. For model and beauty she is not exceeded by any boat of her class She glided into her destined element in fine style, amidst the shouts and admiration of thousands of the natives. She has been purchased by William Pitt, the prime Minister of his Owyhenian Majesty Rhee Rhee."

From the Nantucket Inquirer.

While Capt Gardner lay at the Island of Woahoo on the 12th Nov. the Royal Palace of his Owyheean Majesty, was consumed by fire; consisting of three large and elegant wicker-work buildings, surrounded by a neat and tasty enclosure; the fire commenced at 11 o'clock A. M. and in twenty minutes the whole was a ruin.

The Sandwich Islands are now becoming a place of great commerce, and the Natives are making rapid strides towards civilization From the frequent visits they have had of late years from Americans and English, they are daily assuming their manners and customs and abolishing their own. No longer is seen the bow or the spear—no more is heard the shrill sound of the War Conch or the agonizing shrieks of the victim prepared for the sacrifice.—Superstition is done away—Idolatry has ceased, the "church going bell" is now heard to break on the stillness of the sabbath, and the cheering rays of christianity already begin to beam on these children of nature. There are now residing amongst them several of the Missionary Society from the United States with their wives and families; there is a school kept by them and a number of the rising generation are taught the arts of reading, writing, drawing, &c. which together with the exemplary conduct of all the society,—is daily increasing amongst those children of nature a high sense of moral rectitude.

Since the commencement of the year 1821 no less than 28 Ships and Brigs have visited those Islands for the object of trade or producing supplies.

The Natives themselves are now the owners of ten square rigged vessels, none less than 120 tons, besides a number of Schooners, and Sloops, all of which they keep constantly going from Island to Island with Sandal wood, provisions, &c. &c. they are principally manned by Natives, sailing them with skill and regularity.

While Capt Gardner remained at Woahoo one of their vessels arrived from a voyage to Kamtschatka, she was commanded by a white man, but manned entirely by natives. The governor also made his Owhyheean majesty a present of a large tract of land, and sent him a deed of it. They were pleased with the success of the voyage, and would soon undertake another.

On the south side of the Island of Woahoo is one of the most commodious harbours in the world; no wind or waves ever enter there to endanger the safety of a vessel. There can be obtained refreshments of every kind, and a ship be repaired if needed—for this last year it has been a resort for all the whale ships cruising in the northern latitudes, for refreshments and supplies.

New-York, May 11.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE.—There is not a remote expectation that bills of exchange can be m[illegible] higher than they are at present, for it is very evident that this excess of importation, by which a heavy debt has been incurred, must are long have a fatal termination in the prospect of the importer. We should not conceal the fact, that the real demand for British manufactures has been annually decreasing, and the annual increase of American manufactures, with their encouragement, may have led to this tactic exertion to check their sale by heavy importations, and by efforts to shew the difficulty of the competition.

Payment must be made, and how is this to be done? Silver and gold are no longer to be found in our market; while they could be purchased at a less premium than bills, our vaults and iron chests were emptied. This resource fails. Cotton decreases in price, and sales are not prompt in England, and as a remittance it is several per cent dearer than bills. Here again we fail. The English government will receive little or nothing from the fruit of our soil and labor, and they have but a small sum to invest in our stocks. How are we then to pay for the goods imported? We have neither silver, gold, stocks, or produce, that we can offer, and will be accepted. It follows, then, that importers must be heavy losers, and importations promptly checked, for, while banks stop discounting, while facilities and credit are withheld, merchants cannot fulfil their contracts. However difficult it may appear to some to regulate our imports by our exports, and buy nothing without payment is made by our own commodities, acquired in exchange by us, the time will arrive when something like that system will prevail, when we will be compelled to cherish and improve our own resources, curtail our expenditures, improve our finances, decrease our public debt, and let very little silver and gold escape from the country.

INDEX AT END

New-York, May 15.

English Trade to China.—Some time since a British frigate fired on a village in Canton river, and killed four persons. In consequence the Chinese demanded four Englishmen to be delivered up for punishment. This being refused, an order passed the Chinese government, suspending all intercourse with the British; and in consequence the British flag was hauled down, all the property embarked, and arrangements were making to convey the whole to another settlement.

From Canton.—Under the head of shipping intelligence in yesterday's paper, we noticed the circumstance that the British had been ordered off and had embarked on board their shipping below Canton, in consequence of recent difficulties with the Chinese. By the Gov. Endicott, arrived yesterday, which left there the 24th Jan. we learn that the English company's ships, with all the English on board, were at anchor at the mouth of the Bocca Tigris. The frigate Topaz was at anchor about 5 miles below, stopping all English vessels bound up. It was reported they would proceed to Serampore in a few days.

Palm Tree Cordage.—The owner of the ship Ajax has favored us with a beautiful specimen of the material of which the India cordage is made, which may be seen at the Gazette office. The fibre is elastic, more durable, and stronger than rope made of hemp. It is said to be excellent for making sieves and stuffing matrasses. Well qualified judges say it is four times more durable for rigging, than cord made of hemp; and it is supposed that the trial about to be made of the 30 tons now imported, will prove the assertions here made. From the ingenuity of our manufacturers, we should not be surprised to learn, that this article has been applied to uses heretofore unthought of; and that it would become an article of extensive importation.

Literary and Scientific.

The valuable library of George III. consisting of nearly 90,000 vols, in geography, history, divinity, and classical literature, is about to be sold to the Emperor of Russia.

A letter with the following superscription was left at the London post office, but not being claimed there, it was deposited at the London museum as a curiosity. It was there discovered to be intended for one of the distinguished British Savans, whose name the writer had probably heard pronounced, but never seen it written:

"Al sua Excellenza, Sromfredevi."

Rendered into English—His Excellency Sir Humphry Davy.

Arithometer—A French artist, M. Thomas, of Colmar, Honorary Director of the Phœnix Company, has obtained a brevet of invention (patent) for a machine of calculation, to be called the Arithometer. It has been presented to the Society for encouragement of National Industry, and by it a person unacquainted with figures may be made to perform, with wonderful promptitude, all the rules of arithmetic. The most complicated calculations are done as readily and as exactly as the most simple; sums in multiplication and division of seven or eight figures require no more time than those of two or three.

Commodore Rogers' Invention.—A writer in the Alexandria Gazette says, "that the plan of hauling up vessels on an inclined plane, for the purpose of coppering, sheathing, caulking, &c. although new in the United States, is in full operation, at present, on the river Clyde, in Scotland. The inventor, an inhabitant of Glasgow, has obtained a patent from the British government, and has formed a company to carry through his invention. A canal, or slip, has been dug on the margin of the Clyde, about half a mile below Glasgow, where the writer of this article saw the plan carried into effect in February last. The ways are formed of cast iron, with steps, if the expression may be used, at regular and short distances, to arrest and retain the vessels after their gradual elevation by the powerful windlass by which they are hauled up. There is also an "Inclined Plane" upon a larger scale at Dumbarton on the Clyde, for vessels of greater burthen. The plan has not yet been attempted with vessels of a frigate tonnage; but the principle being known, it is of course capable of further extention."

The same writer states, that he does not consider the above facts as derogatory from the credit due to Commodore Rogers' discovery; as "the same invention may have taken place cotemporaneously in both hemispheres."

NATURAL HISTORY.

Insects.—That insects should thus have forestalled us in our inventions, ought to urge us to pay a closer attention to them and their ways than we have hitherto done, since it is not at all improbable that the result would be many useful hints for the improvement of our arts and manufactures, and perhaps for some beneficial discoveries. The painter might thus probably be furnished with more brilliant pigments, the dyer with more delicate tints, and the artisan with a new and improved set of tools. In this last respect insects deserve particular notice. All their operations are performed with admirable precision and dexterity: and though they do not usually vary the mode, yet that mode is always the best that can be conceived for attaining the end in view. The instruments also with which they are provided, are no less wonderful and various than the operations themselves. They have their saws, and files, and augers, and gimblets, and knives, and lancets, and scissors, and forceps, with many other similar implements, several of which act in more than one capacity, and with a complex and alternate motion, to which we have not yet attained in the use of our tools. Nor is the fact so extraordinary as it may seem at first, since "He who is wise in heart, and wonderful in working" is the inventor and fabricator of the apparatus of insects; which may be considered as a set of miniature patterns drawn for our use by a Divine hand.

I shall hereafter give you a more detailed account of some of the most striking of these instruments; and if you study insects in this view, you will be well repaid for all the labor and attention you bestow upon them.—Kirby and Spence's Entomology.

Breed of Camels.—A southern writer recommends the importation, for use, into the U. S. of Camels, and says:—

"When the use of the Camel in transporting heavy loads over any kind of road, with the trivial expense of his keeping—the value of the flesh when killed—the high price given for shawls, &c. made from his hair—the nutrition of the females milk—the animal's quietness and docility, how is it that our countrymen have so long neglected the importation of so useful a creature, while they are all anxious to introduce European innovations of noxious tendency? There is no source of wealth, which presents itself more temptingly, or at least more advantageous to our fellow citizens, than the addition of the Camel to our domestic comforts. All vessels going to the African or Asiatic shores, would find it more to their interest to bring over Camels, than was their introduction of negroes some years ago, which, thanks to providence, is at last abolished; and in a few years let us hope that our rapid improvement will preclude the disagreeable and painful necessity of holding slaves.

Squirrels and Cat.—A Singular Circumstance.—In Hounsfield, Jefferson County, a short time since, Mr. Walter D. Herrick, in cutting down a hollow tree, found two squirrels, which he took home with him, and having in his house a cat with kittens, he took the kittens from her, and put the young squirrels in their places; and the cat now suckles them with equal fondness as she did her own kittens, and the squirrels are perfectly tame, and playful about the house.

AGRICULTURE.

Gervaise Markham, a learned writer in the reigns of James I. and Charles I. who was noted for his skill in Agriculture, observes,

"Now methinks I hear it objected, what if the ground do lye so farre within the land, that there is no salt sand within many miles of it, how then shall I make good my barren earth? To this I answer, that albeit this salt sea-sand be of infinite good and necessary use, inriching grounds wonderfully much; but if your ground lye much within land, and farre from the sea, then to every acre of land you shall take two bushels of very dry-bay-salt, and in such manner as you sow your wheat, you shall sow this salt upon the ground, then immediately after the sowing of the salt, you shall sow your wheat, which wheat would be thus prepared before you sow it. The day before you are to sow your grain, you shall take bay-salt, and water, and mixing them together, make a brine so strong that it will bear an egg, then put the wheat you are to sow into that brine, and let it steep therein till next day; then drain it from the brine and so sow it; and no doubt but you shall find a marvellous great increase thereby. Neither is the thing itself without good and strong probability of much increase, and strength for the bettering of all manner of arable grounds; for there is nothing which killeth weeds, quicks, and other offences of the ground, so much as saltness."—Page 12.

In the Chapter respecting the treatment of land over-run with weeds, he directs such land to be covered with a certain black plant growing on the sea shore, which is to be plowed in, and the ground harrowed, it is then to be sown with pigeons and pullens' dung mixt together, allowing to every acre two or three bushels thereof, and he adds, "but in case you can neither get Salt, sea-sand, nor sea weeds, then you shall by no means omit the steeping of your seed, neither shall you fail before you sow your seed, to mix with your pigeons and pullens' dung a full equal part of bay-salt well dried and broke, and so sown with the dung upon the land, and the seed after it." Page 17.

Sir Hugh Platt, a writer of some eminence in the time of Oliver Cromwell, states it to be his opinion that it is Salt which makes all seeds to flourish and grow; and that no dung which is laid on barren ground could any way enrich the same, if it were not for the salt in it. "see his Jewell House of art and nature." London, 1653, chapter 104.

The great Lord Bacon, who flourished early in the seventeenth century, having noticed the advantages which the farmers of Cornwall, Devon, and other maritime counties, derived from the free use of sea-sand, which upon those coasts chiefly consists of broken shells impregnated with salt-water, declares that the best manure next to marle is sea-sand, which no doubt, (says his Lordship) obtaineth a special virtue by the salt water, and concludes by affirming that Salt is the first rudiment of life.

(Nat. Hist. Cent. 6, Exp. 596.)

The celebrated Anthony De Leewenhoek, who was a Fellow of the Royal Society, in his observations on the storm which happened in the year 1704, when many of the banks of Holland were broken down and the country overflowed, addresses himself to his countrymen in the following manner:—

"There are some" says he, "that affirm, that the scattering of this salt water by the storm will do a great deal of harm to the fruits of the earth; but, for my part, I am of a quite different opinion, for I believe that a little salt spread over the surface of the earth, especially where it is heavy clay ground, does render it exceedingly fruitful; and so it would be if the sand of the sea were made use of for the same purpose."—Philos. Trans. No. 289. The year following, the Dutch had the largest crops of grass, and of what little corn they sow, that had been known for many years before.

Young Fruit Trees.—Will be greatly benefitted by a seasonable application of common house soap (otherwise called soft soap, which may be applied by rubbing the soap with the hand) to the body and limbs. It will loosen the moss and enable the tree to cast it off, with the vermin which it frequently harbours to the injury of the tree.

POETRY.

HELEN GREME.

A spirit glides to my bed-side,
Wringing its hands of virgin snow;
Loosely it's robes of floating light,
Loosely it's golden ringlets flow;
All in a shadowy mantle clad,
It climbs my blisless bridal bed.

"Thou airy phantom of the night,
Unveil thy face, and gaze on me,
Until my shivering heart is cold,
And I'll arise and follow thee.
Oh! Helen Graeme, celestial maid,
I commune with thine angel shade.

"Ill omen'd was this morn to me,
The woeful morn of my wedding;
Matilda heard a death-bell toll—
When on her finger glow'd the ring.
My cold hand clasp'd the blushing dame's,—
But O! my heart was Helen Graeme's.

'Arise, Lord Auchinlea, arise,
And wrap thee in this shroud of mine;
Turn from thy softly slumbering bride,
And press my shivering cheek to thine.
On forest glade and naked wold,
The wind is keen—the dew is cold.

"I know thee well, deserving youth;
Fair honour clothes thy gentle brow;
The rage of feud withheld thy hand,—
But hand and heart are Helen's now
Another lock'd embrace, and we Will lie us to eternity.

"An angry father's scowling brow,
A lady mother's wrathful eye
Will never more our loves divide—
Will never more our peace annoy.
In one wide bed, beneath the yew,
There will we sleep—and soundly too."

His young bride woke in sore affright—
Pale as the cold, the lifeless clay;
She saw her lord in Helen's arms,—
His quivering corse beside her lay,
Wrapt in a mantling blaze of light,
They vanish'd from that lady's sight.

Green grows the birk on Laggan burn,
And fair the opening blossom blows;
But greener is the sacred grass,
And ruddier too the wild-briar rose,
Where dew-bath'd flowrets gently rest.
Their gloomy heads on Helen's breast.

VALERIUS.

A Novel, under this title, has recently made its appearance in England. It is a Roman story, and the period of history chosen is part of the reign of Trajan. Valerius is the son of a Roman officer, settled in Britain, who has occasion to visit the capital of the world, on account of a law-suit. The description of Rome, and of the adventures of the young Valerius, whilst in that gorgeous city, occupies the greater part of the work. In some of his descriptions we think the author surpasses all his cotemporaries, not excepting the great unknown himself; because, it must be more difficult, and require greater powers of imagination, to describe that which we can never have seen, than to paint the manners, customs, and features of a people, with whom the ties of consanguinity, and of similar modes of existence, have made us familiar; and such is the power of this writer, that he makes us not merely spectators, but he gives us a fellow-feeling with men and scenes, that have ceased to exist for nearly two thousand years. We shall present our readers with three specimens of this interesting work;—the entrance into Rome, by the Tiber, late in the evening.—description of the crowd about the amphitheatre,—and of the exhibitions within the walls of that astonishing edifice.—Ed.

When the heat of the sun was greatest, we pushed our bark into a little creek, where the boatmen rested themselves for a space from their labours; and we, along with the master, made an end of the provisions we had brought along with us. Having halted as long as we deemed expedient, we resumed our seats in the vessel; but the fervor of the atmosphere being much diminished, our canopy was no longer upheld. By degrees the shades of the evening began to spread themselves over the east; but we did not see the sun for a long time previous to his setting, by reason of the hugeness of the trees, and their impervious foliage. Trees, and temples, and gardens, and meadows, and towns, and villages, were, e'er long, lost in one uniform sobriety of twilight: and it was already quite dark, when the Centurion, pointing to the left bank, said, 'Behold these gigantic willows, which dip their long boughs down into the water,—these are the Gardens of Cæsar—beyond, is the Portian Gate, and the street of the Rural Lares. In a few moments we shall see the lights of the Sublician Bridge, and be in the city.

At these words I started up, and gazing forward, could already penetrate through the mists of evening into the busy glare of a thousand streets and lanes, opening upon the river. The old city wall, on the left side was visible; where, after having swept round the region towards the Vatican and Janicular hills, it brings the last of its turrets close down to the Tiber, over against the great dock-yard by the field of Brutus.

Its shadow lay in frowning darkness, far out upon the stream, and we glided for some minutes in silence beneath the influence of the venerable rampart. Through a forest of triremes, galleys, and all sorts of craft, we then shot on to the bridge, beneath the center arch of which, our steersman conducted us. Beyond, such was the hum of people on the quays, and such the startlike profusion of lights reflected on the water, that we doubted not we had already reached the chief seat of the bustle of Rome. On, however, we still held our course, till the huge bulk of the theatre of Marcellus rear like a mountain on our right. It was there that we ran our bark into the shore; not far from the little bridge the third as you ascend the river, which conducts to the Island and the temple of Æsculapius. While our friend was settling matters with the master, and the boatmen were bringing out our baggage, I stood for a little space by myself, in silence, on the elevated quay. Below me lay the bark, in which Boto and the Centurion were still engaged. Here am I alone, I might almost say to myself, in the greatest city in the world, not one of whose inhabitants I have ever, so far as I know, conversed with. Up and down, wherever my eye fell, it rested on some bright spot in the river, answering to some light in bark or edifice, kindled by hands, and for purposes, to which I was equally a stranger. Here a long tier of reflected radiance bespoke, it may be, the vicinity of some splendid portico, or palace, or temple, or bath, or theatre; there a broad and steady blaze of burning red, indicated the abode of artizans, resolved, as it seemed, on carrying their toil into the bosom of the night. Between, some small single speck of tinier lustre, betrayed, perhaps, the lamp of the solitary student, or the sober social hour of some peaceful family, assembled around the hearth of their own modest lares. Behold me, then, said I, in the capital of the globe. Alas! were I to be swallowed up this moment by the waves of Tiber, not one of all these lights would be dimmed by reason of my calamity.

ANOTHER DREADFUL SHIPWRECK.

The Liverpool paper of May 1st, contains the account of the loss of His Majesty's Ship Confiance, with all her crew, consisting of one hundred and twenty men. This melancholy event took place near the spot where the Albion was cast away.

The same paper contains the loss of the Esther, and Sandwich Packet. These vessels were lost on the night of the 21st April.

ANECDOTES.

The proud Duke of Somerset, who lived in the reign of Anne and George I. On a quarrel with Geor. I. the Duke threw up his appointment of Master of the Horse, in a manner which sufficiently evinces the littleness of pride. Having commanded his servants to strip off the Royal and put on the family livery, he sent for a common dust cart and directed that all badges of his office should be thrown into it, he then, followed by his retinue and the aforesaid vehicle, proceeded to the Court yard of St. James Palace, and, after ordering the driver to shoot the rubbish, he stalked back indignantly to Northumberland house, accompanied by the same cavalcade in which he had left it. "Get out the way," said one of the people to a country man who was driving a hog along the path by which the Duke had to pass. "Why?" inquired the boor. "Because my Lord Duke is coming, & he does not like to be looked at," rejoined the man. The clown enraged at the imperious manner in which the mandate was urged, exclaimed, "But I will see, and my pig shall see too;" and seizing the animal by the ears, held it up before him till his Grace and retinue were gone by. Lady Charlotte Finch, his second wife, once tapped him playfully on the shoulder with her fan; he turned to her with marked displeasure, and observed, "My first wife, Madam, never took that liberty, and she was a Percy." His two youngest daughters were accustomed to watch him, standing, while he slept in the afternoon; one of them overcome with fatigue, sat down; the Duke awoke unexpectedly—he assured her that he should remember her disobedience, and accordingly left her £30,000 less than her sister.

A Dandy of the Old School.

Casanova, in his account of his visit to Voltaire, describes thus the Duke de Villars, whom he met at Ferney:—

"The exterior of the Duke de Villars, then governor of Provence, attracted my principal attention.—When I contemplated his figure and demeanour, I fancied I saw a woman of sixty years of age in men's clothes, who, though now lean, shrunk, and feeble, might have been handsome in her youth. His copper-coloured cheeks were painted with rouge, his lips with carmine, his eyebrows black, and he had artificial teeth and hair. A well scented pomatum kept the curls close to his head, and a large nosegay, fixed in the uppermost button hole of his coat, reached to his chin. He affected the amiable man in every thing, and spoke so affectedly and lispingly, that it was difficult to understand him. He was, in other respects, polite and condescending, but all his manners were of the taste prevalent in the time of the Regency."

Colbert —Soon after Colbert came into the management of the finances of France, he sent for the principal merchants of that kingdom, and in order to ingratiate himself with them, and to acquire their confidence, he asked what he could do for them. They unanimously answered, "Pray, sir, do nothing! Laissez nous faire."—"Let us do for our selves."

ally a violation of all principle to encourage these sources of her weakness. His Majesty's ministers are doubtless acting upon an inference so manifestly just. They can see no certain advantage in further reducing the power of Turkey, nor in concurring in any line of policy which would effectually lead to such a reduction. They see, that Turkey in her actual state gives no disturbance to the general system—but they are not equally certain, that a new state of things may not lead to very unforeseen consequences. They can see no prudence in foregoing a safe actual condition for an uncertain futurity. It is under these considerations, that the British minister at Constantinople is probably instructed to regulate his intercourse with the Turks. He is probably authorized to second the representations of the Sublime Porte to Russia, that the militia of the provinces is raised, encamped, and in winter quarters, less under any strong apprehension of war, than with the purpose of using the occasion to reduce and extinguish the Janizaries. He is probably instructed to confirm the assurances of the Porte, that the abolition of this barbarous and fanatic force would be the best guarantee against future excesses. Under the constitution of Turkey, the Janizaries, are a standing army almost independent of the government, and therefore its absolute master. They are a feudal army, a deliberating army, a military corporation; having privileges of their own, and all, officers and men, uniting, maintaining and advancing them against their sovereign and fellow subjects. It is scarcely possible not to feel for a sovereign in such circumstances, and possibly this representation has not been made in vain to the Emperor Alexander.

NATURAL HISTORY.

Insects.—In another point of view entomological information is very useful. A great deal of unnecessary mischief is produced, and unnecessary unbusiness occasioned by what are called vulgar errors and that superstitious reliance upon charms, which prevents us from having recourse to remedies that are really efficacious. Thus, for instance, eating figs and other sweet things has been supposed to generate lice. a. Nine larvæ of the moth of the wild teasel inclosed in a reed or goose quill have been reckoned a cure for ague. b. Matthiolus gravely affirms, that every oakgall contains either a fly, a spider, or a worm, and that the first foretells a war, the second pestilence, and the third famine. A. In Sweden the peasants look upon the grub of the cock-chafer as furnishing an unfailing prognostic whether the ensuing winter will be mild or severe: if the animal have a blueish hue (a circumstance which arises from its being replete with food) they affirm it will be mild, but on the contrary if it be white the weather will be severe: and they carry this so far as to foretell, that if the anterior part be white and the posterior blue, the cold will be most severe at the beginning of the winter. Hence they call this grub Bemarickts mask, or prognostic worm. B. A similar augury as to the harvest is drawn by the Danish peasants from the Acari, which infest the common beetle (Scarabæus Stercorarius, L.) called in Danish Skarnbuse or Torbist. If there are many of these mites between the fore-feet, they believe that there will be an early harvest, but a late one if they abound between the hind feet. C. The appearance of the death's head moth (Sphinx Atropos, L.) has in some countries produced the most violent alarm and trepidation amongst the people, who, because it emits a plaintive sound, and is marked with what looks like a death's head upon its back, regarded it as the messenger of pestilence and death. We learn from Linne that a similar superstition, built upon the black hue and strange aspect of that beetle, prevails in Sweden with respect to Blaps mortisaga, Le; and in Barbadoes, according to Hughes, the ignorant deem the appearance of a certain grasshopper in their houses as a sure presage of illness to some of the family.

AGRICULTURE.

(Salt in continuation.)

I am well assured from a Scotch gentleman, that they have long used Salt in that part of Great Britain, always sowing ten or twelve bushels by hand of their coarse Salt on an acre of young green wheat, sometime in November, December, January, or February, it being, from the several accounts which I have had of it, very effectual in the Killing of tender weeds amongst corn, yet at the same time cherishing the corn; and though it does not add altogether to the bulk a height of the straw, yet it does much to the goodness and plumpness of of the grain. And whoever has been curious in their remarks abroad, will find that it is the usual practice of the Milanese to sow Salt on their pastures, as I have been informed by one who has sold great quantities for that purpose; as also by as merchant of Liverpool, who is well acquainted with that trade, who affirms that the finest crops they have of hemp and flax amongst the Datzickers and others, who raise those commodities in those countries, and from lands on which Salt is strewed." The Practical Husbandman, page 48, Vol. I London, 1733.

"Salt certainly sweetens the grass much, and it may on all such occasions be mixed with a proper quantity of dung, which is more sulpherous than Salt, and will make grass shoot away much faster than any other manure. Lime in its own nature makes grass sour, but when mixed with Salt, that acidity will be taken away." Practical Husbandman, vol. I page 57.

"As to the proportion of Salt to be used on land, it ought to be according to the nature of it, cold, wet, clayey land requiring more, and loose soft land though it be poor, requiring less. Again, the crops of grass or grain you would improve. For cold, wet, and spewy land, ten loads of dung, six of earth and eight bushels of Salt per acre.

For lean, hungry, sandy land, fourteen loads of pond earth, six loads of dung, and six loads of dung, and six bushels of Salt per acre when employed for corn and grazing.

For meadow land, fourteen or fifteen loads of dung, five bushels of Salt, and four of pond earth, the quantity of each to be altered according to the quality of the ground. Practical Husbandman, London, 138, page 59.

"Thus have I made out what I proposed, viz. than every acre of land in England, which wants to be improved, may be done ten or twelve shillings an acre cheaper by Salt than any other way.

Method to prevent Seed Corn from being destroyed by the Birds.—Gilbert Barclay, Esq. of Sunderland of late years, has never had a hill of corn destroyed by birds or other vermin, by preparing his seed in the following manner viz:—Take a quart of warm Tar, and gently pour on it eighteen or twenty quarts of corn, stirring it at the same time—then add so much dry lime as will prevent the kernels from adhering to each other. The corn thus planted will be longer in sprouting, but the blade will be stronger and of a dark colour, and will sooner come to maturity than that planted in the common way. The expense is very trifling, and vast property might have been saved to our farmers by this preparation.

To save Cucumbers from Bugs.—Set out an onion (or set an onion stalk) in each hill of cucumbers, and the bugs will keep away.

Another.—Sprinkle on at evening, (after cool) tea grounds, as they are commonly left by families after use. This as often as two or three times a week, will not only prevent injuries from bugs, but strengthen and invigorate the vine, and cause it to become exceedingly fruitful.

Early productions.—A box of ripe strawberries was sold in Boston market on the 17th ult. during the snow storm, for eight dollars. Cucumbers upwards of eight inches in length, fresh from the vines, were exhibited the same day.—Boston paper of May.

Awful Dispensation of Providence.

The Rev. Asa Meach from Canterbury, Connecticut, having a numerous young family, was induced to remove to Hull, on the Grand or Ottawa River, hoping to see all of them settled near him, and by their industry & economy to become valuable and happy members of Society. He commenced the removal of his family by bringing his wife, and all the little helpless ones and his son, about 17 years of age in the month of March, when the winter roads were yet good, and after placing them in situation of security he returned to Connecticut to settle his affairs and send on the remainder of his family; about the first of May his eldest son arrived with a waggon and other property, and proceeded on to join the rest of the family. Mr. Meach, arrived at Montreal on Thusday the 16th instant, and on Monday following proceeded to join his family, anticipating a happy meeting after his toils:—But distressing to relate, on Wednesday the 22nd inst. as his wife, his second son, and two youngest children were crossing a small creek to make a visit to the family of P. Wright Esq. they were unfortunately turned over, and thrown into the River and all drowned. The bodies of Mrs. Meach and the two youngest children, were found soon after: that of the son has not yet been discovered. The bodies of Mrs. Meach, and the two youngest children were interred on the following day: truly, may it be said, that in the "midst of Life we are in Death."

In the last seven years, the London Times has paid the enormous amount of £300,587, 6s to the British government for stamps & advertisement duty, "the Queen's trial" say the editors "a prodigious monument of the wickedness and folly of the British Government, which we exerted ourselves in every way possible to expose—gave us an astonishing lift in the year 1820: in that year we paid to Government for The Times journal, upwards of fifty-five thousand pounds."

Captain Slowman, who last year did the task of going 60 miles per day, for twelve successive days, in the vicinity of Bath, started from Shoreditch after 12 o'clock on Saturday night week, to go to Weatherby, in Yorkshire, and return, a distance of 384 miles, in six successive days. The performance is much greater than Powell's travel to York and back, thirty years ago.

Letters have been received from Major Denham, who commands the expedition into the interior of Africa, dated from Tripoli in the west, where they had arrived in November last. A salute was fired from the batteries on their landing, and the best understanding prevails between the Bashaw, Col. Warrington, the British Consul and the travellers: and his highness has expressed his readiness to afford them all the assistance and protection in his power in order to convince the king of England of his sincerity. It was proposed that the expedition should depart for Fezzan in Feb. last, and a competent escort was provided by his highness to convey them considerably beyond Bornou, at which place the learned professor, Dr. Cudenay, is to remain as British vice-consul. They were all in high health and spirits, and entertained the most sanguine hopes of at least going far beyond any former travellers in that direction.

Mr. Stewart is to be tried for killing Sir Alexander Boswell in a duel.—Wright, the pedestrian, had accomplished his Herculean undertaking: he was backed to walk 100 miles in twenty-four hours. Sapper, the pedestrian, was on his task to walk 1200 miles in 1200 hours.

Matrimonial Journal.

Monday.—Rather cloudy; in the afternoon, rainy.

Tuesday.—Vaporish; brightened up a little at night.

Wednesday.—Changeable, gloomy, squally, inclined to rain.

Thursday.—High wind, and some peals of thunder.

Friday.—Fair in the morning; variable till the afternoon, cloudy all night.

Saturday.—A gentle breeze, hazy, a thick fog, and a few flashes of lightning.

A hen is at present in possession of Mr. Robbins, at Shottery, near Stratford upon Avon, which has hatched no fewer than nine broods of chickens with in the last twelve months. This extraordinary fowl attended each brood till it had laid two or three eggs towards the next—and what is equally singular, the pullets from the three first broods have all been laying some time. The fourth brood are at present fine chickens fit for the market—and the last (ninth in number, being the smallest brood in the whole) are now under the care of their prolific parent.

Counsellor Lillienstein, of Frankfort on the Maine, has published a work, in which he attempts to prove, argumentally and methodically, that the predictions respecting Anti Christ, are now on the eve of being accomplished. Anti Christ, he asserts, will appear in 1823—his arrival will be succeeded by ten years of religious wars—after which, the Millenium, as he assures us, is to commence in 1836.

Shrove Tuesday Amusement.—A most diabolical scene was witnessed on Shrove Tuesday, in the neighborhood of Abercrombie-square. A poor cock was turned loose, to be hunted by a parcel of boys whose hands were tied behind them. He who could secure the animal with his teeth was entitled to it as his prize. It would often happen that several of these little ruffians were tugging at the miserable fowl's legs or wings. But the bare idea of human creatures seizing a living animal with the teeth, independent of the torture inflicted, is so cannibal-like, that it is painful and disgusting to think of it.

Prodigious Tree.—A description of the tree of Kebyrbor, in the island of that name, situated 12 miles N. E. of Barostch, in the vicinity of the Cornaline mines, has been read to the Literary society of Bombay, by J. Copland, M. D who had personally visited it. He says. "Its leafy colonnades, its verdant arcades, its immense festoons, the spacious area that this giant of the forest covers with its shades, its enormous trunk, all concur to attest its antiquity, and I experienced emotions similar to what are felt in the vast basilicos of the gothic order, while the freshness which emanated from the thick foliage seemed to give me new life.

The ground which this tree covers with its branches, as far as I could judge, is about 3 or 4 acres! They ascend to such a height as to be visible in a radius of many miles: at certain distances the tree appears like a hill, forming one extremity of the island."

MISSIONARIES IN TONQUIN, CHINA.

The Diario di Roma of the 15th Dec. contains reports from the Missionaries in Tonquin down to the 20th of September, 1820, and gives at the same time interesting information of the latest state of that country. The following is the substance of it:—"Gia Long, the Sovereign of this great kingdom, the empire of Anam, (which includes the provinces of Tonquin, Cochin-China, Chiempa, Camboja, and Laos u Lac-Tho, and contains 23,000,000 inhabitants) died in the beginning of 1820, in the 70th year of his age. During his reign of eighteen years he constantly protected the Catholic religion, and esteemed the European Missionaries, whom he honored with his entire confidence. It was feared that after his death there would arise a persecution against this Faith, because the Crown Prince some years ago seemed to be ill inclined towards the missionaries, and even threatened to banish them all out of the kingdom as soon as he ascended the throne. But he who sways the hearts of princes, disposed otherwise, in his infinite mercy. Gia-Long, a short time before his death, called the prince to his sick bed, and gave him many counsels which he desired him to observe; among others he most urgently exhorted him not to disturb in the least the professors of the Catholic religion, if he would not, like the tyrant Tan-son, who prohibited the exercise of the Catholic faith in this kingdom in 1798, and was soon after deposed and murdered, lose both his throne and life. The new sovereign, who calls himself Minh-Manh and is 30 years old, punctually followed this paternal advice. The Catholic religion is in the most flourishing condition in Tonquin as well as in Cochin-China, and several Mandarins shew themselves as well disposed to it as in the life-time of the late emperor. Minh-Manh has signalized his accession, which happened exactly on the Tonquinese new year (our 14th of Feb.) also by other acts beneficial for his people: released them, by an edict issued that day, from all their debts to the imperial Treasury; diminished the taxes, which were very heavy under the government of his father; recalled exiles, and pardoned criminals sentenced to death, and other prisoners."

Old Play.

Nothing can more clearly demonstrate the uprightness to Government, in all its views and transactions relative to the Land granting Department, than the readiness, and undisguised manner, with which the documents, that furnish the following statements, have been laid open for inspection and comment; and, it must now be manifest that, if the public have been long in ignorance on these points, it has been for the want of due consideration, and making application to the proper authorities.

But it has so happened, there is no one subject on which greater misapprehensions have gone abroad, and injurious reflections made, than upon this; and we hope to be instrumental in removing so much error, and in doing justice to those who have been so long and so shamefully aspersed. Had it not been for this consideration, indeed, and the hope of putting thousands of well-meaning individuals right on so important a subject, the author, and his rickety bantling of a pamphlet, on the State of the Colony, might have slept sound enough, for any thing we should have cared about them.

Last week, we presented our readers with a statement of grants made, and fees taken, during a certain period, in the District of Newcastle, one of the most extensive in the Province. Least it might be said, that such a view would be too partial, on which to form any final judgment, we shall now give a more enlarged statement, obtained from the authorities in York; a statement that must be altogether conclusive, as to the amount of actual profit and loss, on purchasing lands from the Indians, and making grants of various extents to individuals.

STATEMENT OF GRANTS OF LAND FOR ONE YEAR.

24 Grants of 200 Acres at £30 each	720	0	0
1 Grant of 300 Acres at £60	60	0	0
269—Total number of Grants	£3997	0	0

INCREASE:

1st Fees to various Officers on 269 Patents, at £2 18s 8d each,	£789	1	4
2nd Fees to do. on 618 gratuitous Grants of 50 Acres each, made during the same period at £2 18s. 8d each	1812	16	0
3rd Fees to do. on 208 U E. Patents at £1 9s 4d each	297	14	0
4th Stationary for 11 Surveyors and 1168 Militia Patents at 6s. 1-2d each	356	8	11½
	3255	15	11½
Apparent Ballance in favor of the Government Offices,	£641	4	10½

By the above statement it would appear there was a balance of £641 4s. 10½d. in favour of Government, or of its Offices; but, let us proceed and this sum becomes absorbed, and wholly inadequate to the annual charge of £3,812 10s. for the purchase of goods to pay the Indians for upwards of four millions of acres of Land, purchased from them since the month of August 1819; as may be seen by the statement below, which specifies the different purchases, and the sums allowed, per annum, for each.

Editorial Commentary.

We are on the tip-toe of expectation for news from Russia and Turkey. The papers of this week have brought us nothing more than conjecture: we shall therefore defer the remarks we have to make on the probable consequences of hostilities between those powers, until we are assured a blow is struck. The present aspect of affairs in that quarter is most portentous. Any augmentation to the already stupendous power of Russia is to be deprecated, and to be regarded with the most serious alarm. We shall, ere long venture upon conjectures as to what that mighty power is capable of effecting. Much, very much, good may arise to the European Commonwealth by the establishment of an Independent Grecian Empire, unshackled and uncontroled by Russia, in the place where European Turkey now stands. Few capitals in all the wide circumference of the globe, whether we regard grandeur, strength, and beauty of situation, or commercial advantages can surpass Constantinople. Let us see what that learned and observant traveller, Dr. Clarke, says of it: he gives the following picture on his approach to that capital:—

"The sides of the Canal appeared covered with magnificent pavilions, whose porticoes, reaching to the waters edge, were supported by pillars of marble; where, all at once, the prospect of Constantinople, with the towers of Scutari and Pera, opened upon us, and filled our minds with such astonishment and admiration, that the impression can never be effaced. Would only, that the effect produced upon the mind could receive expression from the pen! as nothing in the whole world can equal such a scene, it is impossible by any comparison, to convey an idea of what we saw. Le Brun, one of the oldest European travellers, before the close of the 17th century, apologized for introducing a description of this astonishing sight, after the number of relations which other authors had afforded:—what must then be the nature of an apology used by an author, who, at the beginning of the 19th, should presume to add one to the number.

"View the exterior of Constantinople, and it seems the most opulent and flourishing city in Europe; examine its interior, and its miseries and deficiencies are so striking, that it must be considered the meanest and poorest metropolis of the world. The ships which crowd its ports have no connection with its welfare: they are for the worst part French, Venetian, Sclavonian, and Grecian vessels, to and from the Mediterranean, exchanging the produce of their own countries for the rich harvests of Poland: the salt, honey and butter of the Ukraine; the hides, tallow, hemp, furs and metals of Russia and Siberia; the whole of which exchange is transacted in other ports without the interference on the part of Turkey.——Never was there a people in possession of such advantages who either knew or cared so little for their enjoyment. Under a wise government, the inhabitants of Constantinople might obtain the riches of all the Empires of the earth. Situated as they are, it can not be long before other nations, depriving them of such important sources of wealth, will convert to better purposes the advantages they have so long neglected."

We have much to remark on this important subject, but must wait for another opportunity.—We shall only repeat what we have often said—Let England beware of Alexander!!!

It is gratifying to learn that tranquility is in a great measure restored in the south of Ireland.—We beg to call the attention of our agricultural friends to a serious consideration of the remarks made under the head of Domestic News, on the subject of Flour. The prosperity of the Province may in a great measure be said to be in the hands of our Farmers and Millers. It is a great object, just now, with the Merchants below, to extend their commerce with the West Indies; and it is not from choice, but from necessity, that they are obliged to apply to the American markets for their Flour.—Let our people manufacture a good article, and there is not the smallest doubt that they will be able to command a fair price and bring money into the country.

It seems to be impossible for the Observer to turn from the "evil of his ways"—he must continue to lie, in spite of the numerous floggings he receives. He has told his readers in his last production that there are no Mills between Napane and Amhersburg, excepting those belonging to the Messrs. Crook's of Ancaster and Flamboro', capable of manufacturing Flour fit for a foreign market. We have no doubt that M. Henry at the Coburg Mills, and Mr. Smith at the Port Hope Mills, (both in the District of Newcastle) would undertake to produce as fine a specimen of Flour as any that can be made in the Province. But the Observer is incorrigible. It seems to be impossible for him to exist without abusing some one or another; and to promulgate falsehood seems to be his delight!!!

GREAT BRITAIN.

TRADE WITH SOUTH AMERICA.

To the Lords of his Majesty's most hon. Privy Council.

The humble Memorial of the undersigned Merchants, Ship Owners, Manufacturers, and Traders of London.

Sheweth—That since the establishment of Independent Governments in the countries of South America, which were formerly under the dominion of Spain, an extensive Trade has been carried on with them from this country, either directly, or through the medium of other places

That this valuable Trade, which with due encouragement and protection, may become of much greater importance, has been interrupted; and (according to the declaration of Mr Zea, the Minister deputed to the Powers of Europe by the Government of Columbia) is likely to be lost, or subject to serious disadvantage, unless timely measures be taken by his Majesty's Government, to place the commercial intercourse between the United Kingdom and those countries, upon such a footing, as will be conformable to those regulations which they appear to have adopted as the rule of their government in that respect.

That the principle of those regulations appears to be, to admit into their ports the ships and merchandize of nations which recognize and admit the flags and merchandize of their respective countries

That your Memorialists therefore beg to submit for the consideration of your Lordships, whether in perfect consistency with the spirit of the Navigation Laws, the letter of them may not be so far relaxed, as to admit vessels belonging to the several newly established countries in South America, to trade, as such, at the several ports of this kingdom, in the same manner, as ships from the United States and Brazils.

That unless the ships of those countries be admitted to a participation in that advantage, your Memorialists are apprehensive that foreign countries, especially the United States (whose regulations are governed by the rule adopted by the said newly established governments) availing themselves of the opportunity which any hesitation on the part of this nation might afford, will secure to themselves most important advantages at the expense of the shipping, commercial, and manufacturing interests of this kingdom.

Your Memorialists therefore entreat, that the subject may engage your Lordships attention, and that such measures may be timely adopted, to secure the advantages of a direct and extensive commercial intercourse with the United Kingdom, which are offered in the change of the government of the countries here mentioned, as to your Lordships shall seem meet and expedient, for extending and improving the commerce of this empire—And your Memorialists will ever pray

Gentlemen.—We have the pleasure to acquaint you, that the Lords of the Council have decided favourably on the application for admitting to entry in this country, the ships of the Independent Governments established in the Spanish part of South America, conformable to the petition presented to their Lordships on the 23d instant.

The English Secretary of Mr. Zea, the Columbian Minister, arrived in London on Tuesday with dispatches for Lord Londonderry's Office, said to be on the subject of the formal recognition of Columbia by Great Britain.

THE DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM

The following admirable sentiments and patriotic declarations of the Duke of Buckingham deserve an imperishable record; they may tend more than all the speeches at all the County Meetings yet held, to show how agricultural distress can be most effectually relieved. After a dinner given at Stowe, to no less than 130 of his Grace's tenantry, he told them that he had directed his steward, at the next Lady day audit, to make a reduction on that audit of 20 per cent on their rents; "and, I further pledge myself," said the Duke, "that it is my intention, on Midsummer day next, to institute a minute inquiry into the situation of all my estates, of every individual farm and former, and then I shall make a final arrangement of rent according to the times, whether they shall be better or worse. I trust that this will enable you to live in contentment on your farms. I mean that you should do so. It will be for the benefit of us both. We must stand or fall together." The Duke's hearth having been drank with great enthusiasm, he said, in returning thanks, "What is most satisfactory to me is, that this good understanding exists between me and a body of tenantry holding their farms at will. I know that there are fanciful itinerant agriculturists, who go about the country speaking exclusively in favor of long leases, as beneficial to tenants, and deny that tenants at will are equally benefitted. I have not a tenant on lease upon my estates in this country, and yet I could show those gentlemen, were they in this room, a young man, whose family have been tenants at will to my family, upon the same land, upwards of a hundred years. A tenancy at will shows an honourable confidence in both parties. Up to the present time I have no arrears of rent among my tenants of that description; but I know that those gentlemen who have granted long leases, cannot say the same of their rents. Every tenant of mine knows that he shall remain in his farm as long as he can live on it. He has the full benefit of his improvements if he remains upon it; and if he is obliged to leave it, he appoints one referee and I another, and an equivalent for what he loses by leaving his farm before his improvements are fairly worn out, is thrown back to him in his rent. What can the admirers of long leases want more?" On taking leave the Duke said, "I hope we shall meet again in happier and better times; they cannot be bad for you and better for me. I cannot live in this house, if you do not live in your farm-houses. The poor who depend on you cannot live in their cottages, if you cannot live in your farms. The beauty of the Constitution of this country is, that we are all linked together in one chain; if one link breaks the whole is disunited. I will live as long as I can in this house; and I declare, that let the times be what they will, I will never go a-bread and spend your money there."

The Dumfries Courier mentions the departure of two vessels, with emigrants, for America, from that place; and observes, "In the present groupe of 263 souls, there are very few tradesmen; by far the greatest number have been bred as farmers, and farm servants, and some of them possess considerable property. One economical veteran, who wears a sack scarcely gude enough for a linseed bag, carries out with him £1200 in sovereigns, and there are numbers that can muster £50, £60, £70, and £100, sterling."

Madame Christophe, ci devant Empress of Hayti was about to take up her residence at Blackheath. It was generally understood that she had saved about £1,500 per annum, from the wreck of her husband's fortune.

Sir William Congreve's New Stamps on the Country Bank Notes, which were put forth as inimitable, had scarcely been sent into circulation, but it was found, as was previously proved by Messrs. Perkins & Co they might be imitated with the greatest ease, and a forgery had been committed on the Blackburn Bank by various parties, who had severally been apprehended and committed to take their trial

An article dated Naples, March 19th, states, on the authority of letters from London, that the English government has granted permission to the Neapolitan government to recruit men in Ireland. In order to preserve order and tranquility in the country, after the departure of the Austrians, it had been determined to form six foreign Regiments of 1200 men each; and as the negotiation for Swiss troops failed, the Irish had been thought of; and Albanese are also to be taken into pay.

IRELAND.

The accounts from Ireland are stated to be of a mixed complexion: lawless outrage is on the decline; but in some of the south western counties it has been succeeded by the extremes of wretchedness and famine. Last year's potatoe crop failed. Numbers of unfortunate peasants had abandoned, in despair, their miserable habitations, and taken to beg for the support of their starving children. Some individuals in the county of Clare had perished of absolute want; and not only was present food unattainable, but the ground work of future destruction was laid in the utter scarcity of seed for the approaching season. In the House of Commons, it was distinctly stated by Mr. Grant, the late Secretary of Ireland, that distress in its most frightful form, had already made its appearance in the southern counties, and symptoms of famine had already commenced in Clare, Limerick and Kerry. In the Cork Southern Reporter it is said, that "a family consisting of five persons having no means of getting a morsel to eat, locked themselves up in a room, determined to suffer under the pangs of hunger sooner than to go out to beg; one of them, a young girl, not able to endure with the rest, rushed into the street, and from a stand snatched a piece of raw bacon, which she eat greedily before the owner. The house was searched, and four of the family were found to have perished."

The enormities in Ireland are represented to have diminished in consequence of the exertions of the Catholic Clergy

Population of Ireland—An abstract of the population of Ireland, according to the late census printed by order of the House of Commons, makes the number of souls in 1821, in Leinster, 1,785,703; Munster, 1,605,363; Ulster, 2,001,966; and Connaught, 1,053,918;—Total in Ireland, 6,846,960.—The enumeration of several counties in 1813 is also given; and it is curious to observe that the increase of population has been beyond proportion greatest in the disturbed counties. The population of Cork county in 1813, was 523,936; in 1821, it was 702,000. But the most extraordinary increase is that of Limerick; in 1813, it was 168,866; in 1821, it was 214,286; that is, it has more than doubled itself in eight years

The Confiance, British sloop of war, lost on the night of the 21st of April off Mizen Head, and only sailed from Cove, on the morning of that day. She was commanded by Capt Morgan, who was first Lieutenant of the Endymion, which was one of the squadron that captured the President, and promoted for his gallantry on that occasion. In the loss of the officers of the Confiance, we regret also to be obliged to add that of Lieutenant Shepherd, who proceeded in her with the intention of joining the Bramen, which is stationed near Galway, and commanded by his father, Capt. Shepherd

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

Accounts from Paris of the 25th April state, that the Government were sending troops into the Cantons in the neighborhood of Paris, which were a prey to conflagration. The flames are said to prevail in L'Oise, in Seine, and to have reached to the gates of the Capital. The utmost consternation prevailed in consequence of the spread of this devouring scourge, which seems to be the work of incendiaries. and intended to favor their views of revolt. Two individuals implicated in the late Summer conspiracy had been before a court martial at Tours and tried; one of them, named Sirejean, condemned to death; the other, Condert, was sentenced to imprisonment for five years.

Paris, April 16.

A report has spread, that disorders have broken out at Nanci, in which a regiment of cavalry and a regiment of infantry garrisoned there took part on different sides. It does not, however, appear that politics was the cause.—We shall hereafter give details which may reach us on this subject.

Statements have been for some days in circulation, respecting the quarrels which took place at Befort, between the young recruits and the soldiers of the garrison. These accounts require confirmation, the more, as they have not been mentioned in any journal.

The journal of St. Sebastian states the arrival of General Berthon on the frontiers; he had not entered the town, but five of his officers had landed on the coast and entered the city, where he had been well received.

To day at four o'clock, the English Journal, the Morning Chronicle, was seized in all the public places of this city. No. 12 of this liberal Journal contains, it is said, a revolutionary song, in French, addressed to the soldiers who form the cordon of health at the foot of the Pyrenees. It is to be presumed, that the French Ambassador at London will have maintained on this occasion the honour of his Government in a manner worthy of his noble character—Paris Paper.

Extract of a letter from Paris, April 15.

"Mr. Burdett, a relative of Sir Francis Burdett, and who has not been in France before for four years, has just been arrested on his arrival in Paris by the Police, on suspicion of his having treasonable papers in his possession."

GREECE.

All accounts agree in representing the internal affairs of Greece as in a good situation. At Zitani, near Thermopylæ, they had gained a victory, in which Ulysses was wounded. The Servian is a considerable a my. Lycurgus their chief had introduced many wise regulations, and frequently made excursions to the coast of Asia Minor, where he uniformly defeated the Turks, and brought off considerable booty. Tsilechini had formed an alliance with the Cretans, to whom he sent a reinforcement of 2000 men, well armed He also recognizes the General Assembly of the Peloponnesus. Regulations had been established by the Central Government, for levying duties on vessels and goods in the ports and islands in their power. The public contributions were regularly settled and the land and sea forces paid by the state. To meet the expenses of the corps lately sent to Epirus and Thessaly, the government had put to sale the lands and houses, depending upon Beis belonging to Sultanas, (the mother or wives of the Sultan,) or to the Chief Agas of the Eunuchs and the Janissaries From these energetic measures it was confidently expected, that the government would soon be able to meet all the expenses of the glorious struggle in which it was engaged

The Brussels papers contain a proclamation from Chourschid Pacha to the Greeks, after the death of Ali, which the London Courier does not believe to be authentic. The following are passages in this proclamation (as given in the paper:—" In the humble petition which you shall address to our Sublime Porte, your names shall be always preceded by the titles of Klopick, Kaiar, Kexvour, (dog, caffre, infidel,) signs of your unworthiness, and of your servitude as vile Christians." &c &c

" You shall shall deliver into the hands of our Selictor (sword bearer) the thirtieth of your children, both male and female, to be educated in the principles of the religion of our Great Prophet Mahomet. You and yours shall henceforth ride as thing but as ass."——The Greeks lately held an Assembly at Corinth, at which it was decreed to send Ambassadors to Russia, England and France, to solicit support in their struggle against the Ottoman government.

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

Greece and Turkey.

At the time these observations are writing, the question of Greece and Turkey is still undetermined. In such a state of things, it must be sufficient to observe, that there exists a sincere effort amongst all the powers of Europe, and with the English government in particular, to procure a settlement of these differences upon views of general policy and a due consideration of the whole case. Their mediation between Turkey, Russia, and the Greeks, is regulated upon two main principles—the first, the termination of a state of things which in its ultimate consequence, may affect the general peace of Europe;—the second, a security on the part of Turkey against any fanatical revenge, or future excesses by her misguided populace. If the Greek insurrection, and the pending discussions between Russia and Turkey, can be finally settled upon this basis, all parties may have just cause for satisfaction. The Greeks will obtain a security against future oppression—the Emperor Alexander will have satisfied his people and himself—and Europe will have extinguished a fire which, though beginning only on a remote circumference, but, finding fuel as it moved along, might have burned to the centre.

It is, doubtless, a natural wish amongst all Christian nations, that a people so connected with the fondest images of our imagination, and carrying us by associations not only to our own early lives, but to scenes and characters immortalized by poets, and orators, should obtain a better return for its sufferings, and should more nearly accomplish its independence. But in this case, as in others, where the subject is the member of a system, the question has two bearings: there is a particular interest, and there is a general interest. As regards the particular interest of Greece only, there can exist no doubt what ought to be the wish and object of herself and friends. But as regards the general interests of Europe, and as respects maintenance of principles upon which the safety of all empires must stand, it is impossible that the great powers can actively co-operate in the pending contest. The very progress of this conflict, without their co-operation, holds forth such a possible state of things—so many disjoined members, and such a difficulty to effect a due disposition of them—such a disturbance in the actual state of possession, and such an uncertainty of retaining the relative equality of states by a new proportionate distribution, as to render even neutrality a very questionable prudence. Sed incidimus per ignes. It is one of the hard conditions of fortune that our duties are sometimes in direct opposition with our feelings. But let it not be said or thought, that Englishmen cannot feel for Greece. The wheel of human affairs, running through every possible evolution, may ultimately cast up a condition of things in which our wishes and duties may be in union; and Greece in her freedom may delight us with a more lively resemblance of the mother from which she springs—Turne, quod optantii &c.

Our relations with Turkey are necessarily comprehended in those with Greece and Russia. A word only may conclude this part of the subject.—Whatever may be the character of Turkey and her government, Turkey is de facto an independent power in Europe, and has a certain place and station to fill. Having such a character, it is to the interest of Europe that Turkey should possess the means of maintaining it. She cannot fail in her part without proportionately disturbing the general order. It is peculiarly the interest of England that Turkey should possess this relative sufficiency; and it is our best preventive policy to maintain her in this degree of strength. Our diplomatic intercourse with her government has always been directed towards this end. But, under present circumstances, in order to accomplish this object, it has perhaps become necessary rather to increase than to reduce her power. The efficiency of Turkey is counteracted by two main circumstances—her internal dissensions, and the peculiar character of her military force. But if it be our manifest policy to uphold Turkey in a certain degree of strength, it is assur-
