ACCOUNT OF LANDS PURCHASED FROM THE INDIANS, SUBSEQUENTLY TO AUGUST 1818.

November	The RICE LAKE purchase of 1,861,200 Acres	740	0	0

February	The MOHAWK purchase of 27,000 Acres	450	0	0

Being 4,880,390 Acres at the annual charge of £3,512 10 –

So that we have now to deduct the sum of £641 4s 10 1 2d from the sum of £3 512 10s, and the government obtains, instead of making an enormous profit, are minus in the amount of £2871 5s. 1 1-2d! and this comes of the Large Fee System!!!—that mountain of corruption and pernicion, heaped up by men in office for the destruction of a whole people!!

That our statements may be the more compleat, we shall observe, the Fees which are paid to the Patent-Officers, are adopted from the old Halifax Table, and have not been altered, or increased, since their first institution. They are so divided as to meet the expense of Stationary, and to remunerate the actual labor of the officers. But the patriotic writer of the pamphlet before us, will probably argue, that it is only the private labourer who is worthy of his hire; and that he who labors for the public should feed on the "*chaff*ering dish," and be clothed with the the thinnest garb of charity.

POETRY.

SONG OF THE FISHERMAN.

"Farewell, merry maidens, to dance, song, and laugh,
For the brave lads of Westra are bound to the Haaf;
And we must have labor, and hunger, and pain,
Ere we dance with the maids of Dunrossness again.

"For now, in our trim-boats of Norway Deal,
We must dance on the waves, with the porpus and seal.
The breeze it shall pipe, so it pipe not too high,
And the gull be our songstress whene'er she flits by.

"Stag on, my brave bird, while we follow, like thee,
By bank, shoal, and quicksand, the swarms of the sea;
And when twenty-score fishes are straining my line,
Sing louder brave bird, for their spoils shall be thine.

"We'll sing while we bait, and we'll sing when we haul,
For the deeps of the Haaf have enough for us all;
There is torsk for the gentle, and skate for the carle,
And there's wealth for bold Magnus the son of the Earl.

"Hemm! my brave comrades, give way for the Haaf,
We shall sooner come back to the dance and the laugh;
For life without mirth, is a lamp without oil;
Then, mirth and long life to the bold Magnus Troil!"

"PIRATE."

DOMESTIC.

Always happy to be instrumental in cheering up the desponding countenances of those worthy farmers, who constitute the main pillar of a state just rising into political and commercial importance, it is no less our duty than our pleasure, to inform our agricultural friends that, by intelligence received from the respectable house of HORATIO GATES, & Co. of Montreal, (whose name is alone sufficient to warrant the most perfect confidence,) in any statement that may come from them,) the markets for produce are looking up. Upper Canada Superfine Flour is in brisk demand, for the West-India market, at 25s., to 26s. 6d.; Fine at 22s. 6d., to 23s. 9d.; Pot-Ashes are in good demand at 34s.; Pearls at 39s.; Mess Pork, 72s 9d; Prime, 52s. 6d.

We must take this occasion, however, to remark, that much of the ill success of our farmers, when in competition in the market, with those of the United States, arises from a general carelessness, in not sending their grain to mill in a cleanly state; in not superintending its manufacture into fine, merchantable, flour; and, for the want of seeing it properly packed in good barrels; which last is a very essential point. We have just seen an account of the nett proceeds of a sale (in Montreal) of flour, sent down from York, as fine, one twelfth of which, only, bore inspection; the residue passing as middling, and a few barrels being wholly rejected; and all this loss was occasioned to the proprietor, through the carelessness of the manufacture, and the imperfection of the barrels. It is very certain that, notwithstanding the general depression of the times, if the farmer is only attentive, industriously and properly attentive, to his own interests, he can, even now, obtain a very fair price for his Flour, his Pot-Ashes, and his Pork. Let him neither despond, nor slacken his exertions;—better times are coming.—Ed.

FAIR AT PORT-HOPE, DISTRICT OF NEWCASTLE.

We have ever been zealous advocates for the holding of public FAIRS. They are equally convenient to buyers and sellers, and are alike advantageous to old and new communities. The buyer is almost certain to meet with what he wants, having abundant choice, at a fair market price, without being obliged to ramble over a wide extent of country, and consequently suffering a serious loss of time, with a probability of disappointment at the end. The seller has almost an equal certainty of meeting with a customer for his superfluous-mercantile stock.—The average value of stock, is also more readily ascertained, and much is done by collision, and competition. We even that we were always anxious to see a FAIR established at our favourite village of PORT-HOPE, and the time has at length arrived, when we have the pleasure of announcing that event.

The first public Fair at PORT-HOPE, was held on the 5th instant; and even on the first day, a numerous stock of various descriptions, was exhibited for sale; though, from the shortness of the notice, (the Commission having arrived only ten days before,) but few sales were effected.

A liberal sum was subscribed by the Gentlemen of PORT-HOPE, and its vicinity, to be distributed in premiums for the best stallion; the best mare; the best bull; the best milch-cow; the best yearling, and two-year old heifer, the best ram and ewe; and for the best boar.

A very spirited competition took place; as a proof of it, perhaps, considering the hardness of the times, the cow which gained the premium, was sold immediately for $30. SAMUEL STREET WILMOT, Esq., the worthy and intelligent representative in Parliament, for the County of Durham, who has long been noted for his superior breed of cattle, produced the best bull.

After the exhibition, nearly thirty gentlemen of the village and neighbourhood, sat down to an excellent dinner, at the Wellington Hotel. The evening was spent with that harmony and conviviality, which we hope will ever characterize the public meetings of that fine District; many an appropriate toast was drank, giving additional zest to the sparkling glass; and the merry song went round, whilst the CAVAN Band, perhaps unequalled in any country situation, played their choicest music. It was not until a late hour, and not without that reluctance we poor mortals always feel, when parting with present joy, that the company separated, and retired to rest.

JOHN HUTCHISON Esq., as steward, gave general satisfaction, and to him we are indebted for most of the above particulars.—Ed.

Death.

It is with deep regret we have to notice the untimely fate of one of the worthiest, most ingenious, and valuable settlers in the Township of CAVAN.—poor JOHN WALTON! He was a man of singular merit, and was remarkable for the originality of his genius, and his self-taught skill in mechanics (his profession, when in England, was that of a lead miner, but he could make clocks and watches, and almost any instrument, no matter how complex, that he had once seen, or had had accurately described to him. He was quiet, inoffensive, obliging, and modest; it was almost impossible not to respect such a man!

Last week, a party of settlers, from the Township of Smith, went to the Crance river, in search of a lead mine, of which they had received some intelligence. As they were descending the river, on their return, one of the party, J. B. MACDONALD, had his hat knocked off, by an overhanging tree, and in attempting to recover it in a very careless manner, he overset the canoe, in which were W. DIXON, another worthy and respectable settler, poor WALTON, and himself. Macdonald gained the bank without much difficulty; Dixon and Walton held by the canoe until it was carried down a rapid, where the latter lost his hold and sank to be seen no more; for after the most diligent search, his body could not be found. Such was his irreproachable character, the strength and universality of his genius, and the usefulness of his attainments, that he is greatly lamented, and his loss is felt to be irreparible, not to his afflicted family alone, but to the whole settlement.

When we undertook the editorial department of this paper, it was our wish, nay it was our ardent desire, to be instrumental in promoting the general prosperity of this country, and to watch over its interests in every particular, so far as our humble exertions might be of service. Applause, or censure through the medium of the public press, may be frequently used with great success for the accomplishment of beneficial results. We are desired, by a respectable Majistrate of the district in the present instance, publicly to notice the culpable negligence, amounting to a wicked indifference, the unfeeling barbarity of the above mentioned J. B. MACDONALD, who, though the immediate cause of the catastrophe, evinced throughout a shocking degree of apathy and absence of all right feeling, apparently exulting in what gave so much pain to others. It is said that he was also the cause of another melancholy accident of a similar nature, by which a young man was lately drowned on the RIVER TRENT; and he has recently boasted that he had drowned two of his fellow creatures!!! Such a wretched, horrid thoughtlessness, and total want of humanity, has seldom been found. We hope that all those who either associate, or come in contact, with such a being, will manifest their abhorrence in such a manner, as to make the wretch sensible that he is amenable to the laws, opinions, and feelings of civilized society.

To Correspondents.

Our friend on the Banks of the Ohio, 45 miles below Pittsburg, will perceive that, notwithstanding he has made us pay postage, we have not been unmindful of his request. We shall allways be ready at the call of charity when not misapplied; and we hope the family in question will be successful in their object.——There is one hint, however, we wish to give Mr. W. Patton, P. M.; which is, that although there may be many "Little" York's in the United States, we know of no place called "Little York," in Canada, and beg that he will bear this little circumstance in his recollection, when he again addresses us.

We have received the communication of L—s, and are pleased to see him embarked in so good a cause. His essay is rather too long for our paper; but it is under consideration, and we should be glad to see the second part.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The King of England held a grand Levee at Carlton House on his birth day, which is stated to have been the most numerous and splendid that has for many years taken place. Most of the principle and distinguished families in the kingdom attended, and the presentations were unusually numerous.—Prior to the Levee, the new French Ambassador, Count de Chateaubriand, had his first audience of the King.

A grand cabinet Council, attended by all the Ministers, was held in London on the 28th of April.

The Marquises Conigham and Londonderry, Lord Montcharles, Sir W. Knighton, & Mr Walker, the apothecary, it is understood, are to attend his Majesty George the fourth in his visit to the continent.

Mr. Canning had been invited to partake of a public dinner at Liverpool to take place after the close of the parliamentary session.

Sir James Mackintosh had given notice of a motion in the House of Commons for the 1st of May, on the subject of the criminal code.

The British government do not intend to send any more convicts to Botany Bay, the state of that settlement having become so civilized that numbers of the free settlers are removing thither, in preference to North America and the Cape of Good Hope. It is reported that convicts will in future be sent to New Zealand.

Miss Seymour, grand daughter to the Earl of Yarmouth, and one of the richest heiresses in England, was married on the 12th April at Paris, to M. De Chevigny, Sub Lieutenant in the French Guards.

The well known Spanish General O'Reilly, is stated to have thrown himself overboard, in a fit of despair, on his passage from South America to Gibraltar. This was on the 23d January last.——Every attempt was made to save him, but without effect.

Accounts received in London from Gibraltar of the 26th March, state that the Board of Health of the Isle of Minorca have published an account of their proceeding during the prevalence of the yellow fever in the Lazaret of Mahon. It appears that 176 persons from 43 infected ships had entered the infirmaries, out of which number 22 had died. Through the precautionary measures taken by the Board of Health, Fort Mahon and the whole island continued to enjoy perfect salubrity, although the seat of contagion and death was not 200 yards from the town.

The proprietor and publisher of the John Bull has been subjected in 500*l.* damages, for a libel on Mr. Aiderman Waithman

IRELAND.

The accounts from Ireland are not so gloomy as they have been of late. With one or two exceptions, there had been nothing of an atrocious nature. In the counties of Kerry and Tipperary, tranquility was nearly restored; and in Limerick, with the exception of an attempt to assassinate the Rev. John Croker of Groom Glebe, there had been no new outrages. At the Cork assizes, sentence of death was passed upon Mr Roger Hefferman, who was tried and convicted at the late Special Commission, for selling arms and ammunition, &c. for the use of the Whiteboys, and whose case had been reserved for the opinion of the twelve Judges, who decided that it came within the provisions of the act under which he was tried. No day, however, was fixed for the execution. The unhappy prisoner was in a respectable line of life.

IMPORTANT PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE
(From the Limerick Chronicle.)

For months past our columns have presented details of outrages and barbarities, which on a retrospect, form a fright ful mass of accumulated crime. but we trust in God, this scene of horror is nearly at an end. This day we have a truly pleasing duty to perform, that of stating the capture of the leaders or chiefs of all the diabolical acts committed in the county since the commencement of his disturbances. In addition to this, it is also gratifying to learn, that quantities of arms have been surrendered in various parts of the county, and the peasantry voluntarily come forward to subscribe to the oath of allegiance. Many circumstances have, of course, combined to bring about those desirable objects; and though the awful examples of death that have been made since the Commission Assizes, ought of themselves to have struck terror into the minds of this hapless peasantry, yet it is the general opinion that the operation of the Insurrection Act has been the more effectual persuasive, as it powerfully pressed down at once upon the offending ranks, with all its dread effects —the father, the mother, the sister, and brother, have been doomed to exile in a foreign land. The manner alone in which those sentences have been carried into effect, by sending off the unfortunate wretches from the dock, must in itself have been a great auxiliary to the Act.

The influence of the Roman Catholic Clergy upon their respective flocks, with whom they have been unremittingly engaged in exhortation and prayers, has also mainly contributed to this prespective happy result. The co-operative resident Magistracy, who were not to be influenced by plebeian popularity have also had their share in this delightful work. Their own minds tell them they have done their duty, and they seek no other approval. The neuter gender Magistrates were also roused from their lethargy finding that their silence would not only bring them into contempt with both parties, but render them sufferers in the end, at least such as had property to protect; this class may also seek approval—let them have it, "better late than never."

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

Our foreign relations next in order, and our last in the long list, for we pass over those with the minor states, as necessarily involved in our policy towards the greater, are those with the U. States of America.

It is a just observation of moral writers, that the happiest condition of human fortune is in the uniform and uninterrupted current of ordinary life, affording, from day to day, only the same unvaried aspect. The same observation may be extended generally to the relations of kingdoms and to those between England and America in particular, which are perhaps never more satisfactory than when they least afford matter of remark. Our relations with America are those of two governments respecting the character of each other, and remembering their common origin whilst they look around upon their different situations.

The situation of America, and her manifest policy under it is marked by one strong circumstance. Of all the nations in the world America has suffered most by the return of peace. Her commerce, her customs, and her total revenue, have been diminished, at certain periods since the peace, by more than one half. In the year 1815, the net produce of her customs exceeded thirty-six millions of dollars. In the year 1819, the produce of the same duties was only seventeen millions, being a diminution of nineteen millions of dollars out of thirty-six. Her total revenue, in 1815, was in round figures forty-nine and a half millions of dollars. In 1819, her total revenue was not twenty-seven millions and a half. This diminution was chiefly in her customs, which declined from the cessation of her carrying trade and the resumption by foreign nations of their own commerce.

These circumstances in her situation are of so much more importance to us, as they at once explain the causes which, in a less degree, affected ourselves, and as their operation in both countries has been in kind the same. As England, during the war, manufactured for the world, America, in a very great degree, was the carrier of the world.—Even her raw produce was raised to an immense price by the demand for it on the continent of Europe. There was a constant exportation of her flour to England, on an average excepting half a million of barrels, and, in the years 1801, 1802 and 1811, exceeding a million. Her flour, cotton, tobacco, and whatever else she exported of raw produce, thus attained a price exceeding in all articles one third, and, in many, double its present amount. Her freights, her shipping, her navy, her price of land, her amount of circulating currency, her wages of labor, and her returns of capital; in a word, her agriculture, her commerce, her navigation, her internal industry and improvements, and whatever she possesses of rough domestic manufactures, increased in the general rate as amongst ourselves. Under the general competition of one branch of employment with another, added to the universal demand for labor, and to the abundance of money in paper and cash, prices rose throughout all commodities, and in every division of industry. The general peace overtook America in this state of things. Her commerce immediately fell, and fell by nearly one half. Her circulating capital, her paper currency were necessarily called in, or forced back in the same proportion. Most of her banks, trading only on accommodation, broke up, and by their bankruptcy, and the general alarm excited by it, still farther reduced, or rather almost extinguished their paper medium.

Under this general state of things, prices fell as abruptly in peace, as they had risen during the war. The cessation of a great portion of foreign demand, necessarily caused a glut of all raw produce in her markets. Prices thus fell from abundance. The withdrawing of the foreign carrying trade, and of foreign commerce in general, reduced the general income of the nation; and as this trade had been carried on in a great degree by new men, and as profits, however large, had either been expended by a more profuse mode of living, or had been embarked in augmenting stocks, (now violently rendered of less than half their recent value), income was destroyed before capitals were accumulated.—Prices thus fell from the second cause of the reduced general means. The diminution of the quantum of the currency of cash and paper necessarily followed, as above said, the diminution of trade. There were fewer dealings, and of course less occasion for the medium by which they were computed. There was no security in future profits, and of course no loans nor accommodation. There was no employment for capital, and of course neither the means nor the inducement to create or to continue it artificially. Prices thus fell from the third cause of the reduced quantity of money.—Under this concurrence of circumstances, America has been suffering in a greater degree than ourselves, and affords a strong illustration of the actual causes of what we have seen amongst our own merchants, manufacturers, and farmers.—If we have suffered, indeed, in a less degree from some of these causes, it is only because our state of society is more advanced, and that our capitalists are less dependent upon their income from year to year. The national wealth of England is composed of two descriptions,—accumulated capital, and current income. The one may suffer in the vicissitudes of commerce, trade, and in the pecuniary value of produce in the markets—but the other fund is necessarily more permanent, and in a rich society will maintain a large consumption for many years.

But in all new countries like America the national wealth consists in little more than in the annual income. For the time, the withdrawing of income is with them reduction to poverty.

This condition of America leads to another important conclusion, and to one more immediately bearing upon our foreign relations with her government. Of the whole actual revenue of the United States, about twenty-five millions dollars, eighteen millions are raised by her customs. Of so much importance to that government is the collection of her customs, or in other words, the continuance of her commerce. But it is unnecessary to observe, that an interest of this kind must bind her strongly to the maintenance of her pacific and friendly relations with England. It is impossible to imagine any event more injurious to the commerce of America and England than an interruption of these relations. It must be a war directly against the commerce of each other. America must at once lose three out of five parts of her national revenue, and whatever she retains of trade must disappear from the face of the ocean. England, on the other hand, would undoubtedly lose her best customer, and it is difficult to imagine any thing that she could gain.

The foreign relations of the two states have necessarily some respect towards these circumstances of their relative situation, as great commercial dealers. It would assuredly be as unjust as it is mean to impute the existing amity to these causes only. The governors of both proceed from a stock with whom justice and generosity are always more than mere names, and who require no proof of interest to retain them within the obligations of moral duty. But it is in the nature of man, and indeed it is his duty, to give due weight to considerations of personal prudence. With every allowance for national generosity, the practical statesman will always see with pleasure this concurrence of interest and duty in neighboring states. He has a good reliance, who has to deal with good faith and honor; but he has a better, who has to deal with good faith and common interest.

As to any practical subjects which have recently arisen under the head of our foreign relations with America, three circumstances of principal importance have occurred since the war, in all of which has been manifested the amicable dispositions of the two states towards each other. The convention of commerce, which was to expire in 1819, has been renewed for ten years, until the year 1828. The British government has opposed no obstacle to the cession of the Floridas—but on the contrary, has co-operated with the American minister in removing difficulties, and influencing the Spanish government to execute the articles of their treaty with the United States. The third circumstance regards the navigation acts of the two countries. It was not consistent with British policy to extend the admission of foreigners into our colonial trade. It would have interfered too much with the interests of our own merchants and shipping. But we did not wholly repel the solicitations of a friendly government on this head. By instituting, or at least continuing in peace, the special free port of the Bermudas, we enabled America to supply herself directly with British colonial produce, and thus saved her the expense of long voyages, and large freights. The American government was still dissatisfied, and in 1817 and 1818, passed her own navigation laws. We admitted her right to do so, and the friendly relations of the two governments remain uninterrupted. It may be allowed us to express a sincere hope, that the confidence and amicable intercourse of the two governments may long continue, and that the United States may rather recover that condition of foreign commerce, and internal trade and industry, which so long rendered them the large and liberal customers of the merchants and manufacturers of Great Britain. It will be time enough a century hence, to think of contending interests. It is the absence of a friendly spirit to anticipate, amidst peace and good will, the possible condition of rivalry and hostility. The sea is open to both nations, and assuredly there is no disposition in England to appropriate this highway of the world. America has a territory, and a new and virgin territory, almost as spacious as the face of the seas themselves. She is of the same stock, and has the same materials of greatness and future glory with Great Britain. Let her use the example we have set her, and run the same race.

Such is the question as regards the integrity of our foreign relations.

The Editor of the New York Spectator whose style of writing we generally admire, makes the following remarks on that part of this semi-official pamphlet which relates to the United States.

"In making the foregoing review of that part of the British pamphlet which we have already published, we have quoted more freely, perhaps, than some may think it was necessary, from what is said of the United States. We feel justified, however, in our own minds. For although the British writer has considerably exaggerated our commercial embarrassments, yet the tone and temper of his language is very different from what we have been accustomed to receive from that country; and we feel disposed to extend at least a corresponding degree of comity. The pamphlet before us was issued under the sanction of the British cabinet, and we see no just reason to distrust the sincerity of its language.—With this belief, we hail it as the harbinger of a better feeling between the two nations. Let the English press, in general, speak in terms equally liberal, and we doubt not that a corresponding feeling will be manifested here. Thus may the cords of friendship between the two countries be strengthened.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

We find by the London Courier of the evening of the 25th April, that the negociations at Constantinople continued to be carried on with great vigor down to the 23d March, from which it was inferred that it was possible there would be an amicable adjustment of all differences. On the 26th March, the English consul at Odessa, forwarded an important dispatch from Lord Strangford to Petersburgh; and on the 28d the merchants at Constantinople were informed that the Austrian Minister had dispatches to forward, and that the post would be off at eight o'clock in the evening, in place of midnight, the usual post hour. Previous accounts say that the Russian government had agreed to withdraw its troops from Wallachia and Moldavia; but the value of this concession was lessened in some degree by new difficulties which had arisen in determining the treatment of the Greeks, a point on which the Divan is extremely irritable, and the demands of Russia difficult to satisfy. The Austrian government in its character of mediator, had applied itself actively to heal the breach threatened from this cause. A project had been drawn up, copies of which had been transmitted both to the Emperor of Russia, and to the Turkish government, for determining under what regulations the government of the Greeks shall be administered. It is even affirmed in an article dated Aix-la-Chapelle, April 16th, that the last dispatches which the Cabinet of Berlin has received from the Court of Vienna, relate to a convention agreed upon between Prince Metternich, and M. de Tatischeff, to regulate the future fate of the Greek nation, and determine its political existence. A similar communication is said to have been made to the Courts of St. Cloud and St. James.

These statements certainly bear a more pacific aspect than those brought by the last arrival. It cannot, however, be concealed, that other accounts give a very different representation. At Odessa, which is nearer the seat of action than either Paris, Vienna, or London, late accounts had been received from Constantinople, by which it appeared that notwithstanding the great efforts made by the Austrian and English Ministers to prolong the negociations the Reis Effendi had refused all kinds of conference with them. It is even positively asserted that "the Porte had already decided for war, when it invited the people to assist at the Divan. What other determination (continues the writer) could be expected from the Chiefs of the Janissaries, who hope for the pillage of Pera? The Mufti proposed at this great council to spare the lives of the poor christians, because they were destined by Providence to do hard work for the Mussulmen. Nor is this all; accounts from Augsburg of the 15th April, affirm that Austria, despairing of succeeding with the Porte, had engaged to act in concert with Russia against that power, and that a treaty fixing the number of auxiliary troops, which the Emperor Francis was to bring into the field had been concluded. Aware of this arrangement, the Turkish government is stated to have ordered a large body of troops to proceed to Belgrade to form a check on the cordon of Austrians posted towards the extreme frontier of the Barmat of Temesar. The Ottomans were likewise reinforcing themselves in Bosnia and Turkish Croatia, a report having been spread that the Austrian army (which was to come from Italy through the Venetian territory) was going to take up a position in Illyria, and that the head quarters of this army would be at Carlowitz, the capital of Austrian Croatia.

VALERIUS.

The following striking passage is descriptive of the crowd of persons and carriages which the young Valerius found without the walls of the Amphitheatre at Rome.

"I had a pretty accurate notion of the way from that grand edifice to the house of Licinius, and therefore moved towards it immediately, intending to pass straight down from thence into the Sacred way. But when I came close to the Amphitheatre, I found that, surrounded on all sides by a city of sleep and silence, that region was already filled with all manner of noise and tumult, in consequence of the preparations which had begun to be made for the spectacles of the succeeding day. The east was just beginning to be streaked with the first faint blushes of the morning; but the torches and innumerable lanterns, in the hands of the different workmen and artificers employed there, threw more light than was sufficient to give me an idea of all that was going forward. On one side the whole way was blocked up with countless throng of waggons; the conductors of which, almost all of them Ethiopians and Numidians, were lashing each others horses, and exchanging in their barbarous tongues, violent outries of, I doubt not, more barbarous wrath and execration. The fearful bellowings that resounded from many of the waggons, which happened to be set in motion amidst the choaking throng, intimated the savage beasts were confined within them; and who, had discovered this, and then regarded the prodigious multitude of waggons, I cannot say what horror came over me, at thinking what cruel sights, and how lavish in cruelty, were become the favourite pastimes of the most refined of people. I recognised the well known short deep snort of the wild boar, and the long hollow bark of the wolf, but a thousand fierce sounds mingled with these, were equally new and terrific to my ears.—One voice, however, was so grand in its notes and soulleurage, that I could not help asking a soldier, who sate on horseback near me, from what wild beast it proceeded. The man answered, that it was a Lion; but then what laughter arose among some of the rabble, that had overheard my interrogation and what contemptuous looks were thrown upon me by the naked negroes, who sat grinning in the torch-light, on the top of their carriages! Then one or two of the soldiers would be compelled to ride into the midst of the confusion, to separate some of these wretches fighting with their whips, about precedence in the approaching entrance to the Amphitheatre: and then it seemed to me that the horses could not away with the strong sickly smell of some of the beasts that were carried there, for they would prance and caper, and ear on end, and snort as if panic struck, and dart themselves towards the other side; while some of the riders were thrown off in the midst of the tumult, and others, with fierce and strong bits, compelled the frightened or infuriated animals to endure the thing they abhorred—to their wrath and pride forcing them even nearer than was necessary to the hated waggons. In one quarter, this close-mingled pile of cars and horses was surmounted by the enormous heads of elephants, thrust high up into the air, some of them with the huge lithe trunks, lashing and beating, (for hey too, as you have heard, would rather die than snuff in the breath of these monsters of the woods,) while the inraged heads of their leaders would be seen tossed to and fro by the contortions of those high necks, wherron, for the most part they had their sitting places. There was such a cry of cursing, and such a sound of whips and cords, and such blowing of horns, and whistling and screaming; and all this mixed with such roaring, and bellowing, and howling from the savage creatures within the caged waggons, that I stood, as it were, aghast and terrified, by reason of the tumult that was round about me.

NOTICES,

Commercial and Political.

Halifax.—The schooner Two Brothers, had arrived at Halifax, with about 130 of the officers and seamen, including the 1st Lieut Surgeon and Purser of H.C.M. ship, L'Africaine, of 44 guns, which was wrecked on the south side of the Isle de Sable, on the 10th May, by striking on a shoal in foggy weather. In less than an hour after she struck, the ship bilged, and the weather lan-yards being cut, the masts soon went over board. In this perilous situation part of the crew in five boats, attempted to land; the boats were overset, and destroyed in the breakers; but the men with the exception of three or four, were happily saved by the exertions of Captain Hudson, the keeper, and the people under his direction on the Island. The ship's complement was originally 330; but 78 had died on the West India station. The Captain, 2nd Lieutenant, and several other officers, and part of the crew, remained on Sable Island, where a vessel was about to be dispatched from Halifax, to bring them off.

On the 30th April, the brig John & Charlotte, Capt. Sims, from Portsmouth, (England,) struck on the ice off the Magdalen Islands, Captain and crew saved by it lying to the long boat.

Information was reached Halifax, via Jamaica, that three Spanish frigates, cruising in the Pacific, had been taken by Lord Cochrane; or rather, two of them are said to have voluntarily surrendered, without opposition.

On board the English seamen on board the Chilian squadron, are stated to have deserted; considered to be in consequence of the severity of discipline.—N. Y. Spectator.

Islands of Ice.—The British ship Bengal, arrived at Philadelphia, from Liverpool, came in contact with an island of ice, and saw several others. It was extremely foggy, and the dangerous obstruction was not noticed until close along side. By a prompt and judicious wearing of the ship, the blow was a sliding one on the larboard bow, and the ship went clear of it with quarter. It was a precipice, the summit of which almost swept the top gallant mast head.

The Lord Sidmouth, (says the Gazette,) which left New York in Feb. arrived in England after a passage of twelve days—the shortest ever known.

Literary and Scientific.

Dr. Franklin was once in company with Dr. Priestly, with whom he was very intimate, and with a number of scientific men, who made up a party; they were mostly members of the Royal Society, and known to each other. The conversation turned on the progress of the arts, and on the discoveries favourable to human life, which remained to be made. Franklin regretted much, that no method had yet been found out to spin two threads of cotton or wool at the same moment. Each of the company lifted up his eyes in wonder, first at the thought itself, and secondly at the impossibility of executing it. Franklin, however, insisted that the thing was practicable, and not only so, but would not long remain a mystery. He lived long enough, not only to see his notion reduced to practice, but to see as many as forty threads spun by the same motion. Had he lived till now, he would have seen a hundred spun at the same instant, by a single female, with only the help of a child.—Hartford Times.

M. Baffi, the celebrated Roman Chemist, has received from the Viceroy of Egypt, a present of 100,000 crowns, and the title of Bey, for having discovered a method of producing saltpetre, without the assistance of fire, by the mere heat of the sun.

A journey from Merat in India, to London, through Arabia, Persia, Armenia, Georgia, Russia, Switzerland and France, during the years 1819 and 1820, by Thomas Lumsden, of the Bengal Horse Artillery, has lately been published in London.

Pliny relates, that the art of making glass was discovered by the following circumstance. As some merchants were carrying nitre, they stopped near a river issuing from Mount Carmel; not readily finding stone to rest their kettles on, they employed some pieces of their nitre for that purpose. The fire gradually dissolving the nitre, it mixed with the sand and a transparent matter flowed, which in fact was nothing less than glass.

A Monthly Magazine in the French language, is about to be published in London, under the title of La Muse des curieux.

Dr. Meyrick, who has been many years engaged in collecting the scattered notices to be found in the old English Poets, chroniclers, wills, deeds, and inventories of ancient armour, has now given an historic form to his materials; the result of which is announced to appear in 3 volumes, imperial 4to, which will contain about 100 specimens of ancient armour.

A memoir of the life of the distinguished author and artist, Mr. C. A. Stothard, is preparing for the press by his widow, who has already given to the literary world, Letters on Normandy, Brittany, &c. Besides original letters, essays, and antiquarian researches, the forthcoming volume will contain an account of a journey in the Netherlands.

New York, June 8th.

We have received by the Amity, the first number of a new Literary Weekly Journal, published in London, entitled "The London Museum; or Record of Literature, Fine Arts, Sciences Antiquities, the Drama, &c." of the same size and arranged and printed exactly in the manner of the "Literary Gazette." It appears to have been set up as a rival to the latter work, and bids fair to be a successful one, the Editor having pledged himself to avoid all party questions, a course not pursued in the Gazette.

Alluding to the Sketch Book of Washington Irving, the Museum remarks, that "there is a freshness, vigor, and raciness in the performance, which will long secure to it a place among our purest British Classics.

Philosophical Discovery.—A tip-top fashionable stay maker, advertised, that she had studied anatomy towards the adaption of those whalebone machines for the human body female. It was very ingenious to enlist philosophy under the banners of stay-making; but it is reported, that they were famous only for standing upright in; for, in sitting down, the ladies had to endure a sort of crucifixion.

Of minute carving.—At Halston, in Shropshire, the seat of the Mytton's, is preserved a carving, much resembling that mentioned by Walpole, in his "Anecdotes of Painting," vol 2, page 42. It is the portrait of Charles I., full faced, cut on a peach stone; above is a crown; his face and clothes, which are vandyck, are painted; on the reverse is an eagle, transfixed with an arrow; and around it is this motto, "I feathered this arrow." The whole is most admirably executed, and is set in gold, with a crystal on each side. It probably was the work of Nicholas Briot, a great graver of the month in the time of Charles I.—(Pennant's Wales.) In the Royal Museum at Copenhagen, is a common cherry stone, on the surface of which are engraved two hundred and twenty heads; but their smallness makes them rather appear imperfect.

Miscellaneous Notices.

The statue to be erected, by the Ladies of England, in commemoration of the duke of Wellington, is to be placed on a pedestal of granite in Hyde Park: the statue is twenty feet in height, and its weight nearly 36 tons; it is cast from a mould made upon the statue at Quirinal Hill, at Rome, generally attributed to the hand of Phidias, and supposed to be in honor of Achilles. The statue is expected to be erected in Hyde Park in the course of a few weeks.

It is reported at Liverpool that Mr. Ricardo will be invited thither to offer himself as successor to Mr. Canning.

The Gazette of April 20th contains the ceremonial of the investiture of Lieut.-general, Sir Rufane Shaw Donkin, Major-gen. Sir Hudson Lowe, and Major-gen. Sir John Cameron, with the ensigns of Knight Commander of the Military Order of the Bath.

Mr. Justice Best, in his charge to the grand jury, at the assizes for Nottingham, adverted to the subject of the employment of prisoners and strongly recommended that hard labor should be introduced into all the houses of correction. Any prisoner who wants support may be refused assistance if he will not work; none are to be supported in a prison in a state of idleness, but those who, from infirmity or sickness are incapable.

Since the famous treading mill has been erected at Brixton, the business of the Union-hall office has greatly declined. The thieves have gone to places where there is greater encouragement. The mill is so constructed, that when a man ventures to be idle in it, he receives a knock on the head.

The proprietors of the coal mines in the vicinity of Edinburgh have suffered greatly by the opening of the new canal from Glasgow. In one day the price of coals in Edinburgh fell from 15s. the cart load to 10s.

A considerable part of the dresses of the ladies who appeared at his Majesty's drawing room, were importations from Paris, notwithstanding the duty of 30 per cent on their importation.

EXTRACTS FROM A PROSPECTUS

OF

A New Weekly Paper, to be called,

THE ALBION;

OR

BRITISH, COLONIAL, AND FOREIGN WEEKLY GAZETTE,

The Editorial Department by

The scanty intelligence respecting the internal condition of the British Empire, which is to be gleaned from the Journals of the United States, of necessity occupied with domestic concerns, has long rendered the establishment of a Newspaper devoted, besides its requisite political character, to the diffusion of British intelligence of a local and familiar nature, a great desideratum with the numerous Subjects and Natives of Great Britain and Ireland, resident in this country. It is well known that in London there is at present a French, and in Paris an English Journal—the establishment of a British Paper, therefore, in America, seems to offer itself a fit object for honorable enterprise. Events daily occur at home of sufficient interest, to command the attention of Britons even at this distance; and it is with reason presumed, there are but few who will not gladly avail themselves of an opportunity to recal to vivid remembrance the scenes of their early youth;—to renew their intercourse with the land of their birth;—and to acquire, from time to time, a more intimate knowledge of its existing political state, and domestic resources.

To the Loyal Inhabitants of the British Colonies in North America, the Editor has reason to believe, that the establishment of a paper on the plan detailed in this Prospectus will afford considerable gratification. In some particular instances, when their earliest news from Europe is necessarily obtained through the medium of the United States—the extracts from British papers which will be found in The Albion, for the reasons stated in a preceding paragraph, cannot fail to prove of material importance to his neighbors and fellow subjects; and it was with a determination to consult their interest and welfare on all occasions, and also as a mark of respect peculiarly due to their well-tried attachment to the Parent country, that the Editor has selected one of the Titles, in the designation of his paper, as prefixed to this Prospectus.

CONDITIONS.

1. The Albion will be published at New York once a week, in the octavo form, on super royal paper to contain sixteen pages—so as to admit of being conveniently bound, half yearly into a moderate sized volume. Two pages only will be devoted to advertisements. The price of annual subscription will be Six Dollars, half payable in advance, on publication of the first number.
2. The Albion will be composed, principally, of extracts from the most interesting English, Scotch and Irish papers of all parties. An original article, by the Editor, containing comments on the news of the week, and also a summary of all American news of interest, will be contained in each publication.
3. The Debates in both Houses of Parliament will always form a prominent article. When interesting to this country, they will be given verbatim, as far as the limits will permit. This will also be the case with Judicial proceedings in the Court of Admiralty, and other Courts.
4. Columns will be set apart in every paper for Irish and Scotish News—for Provincial occurrences in the three kingdoms, and for intelligence from the Foreign possessions of Great Britain.—The more interesting trials at the County Assizes will also frequently be given.
5. For the particular information of Civil, Military and Naval Officers in His Majesty's Service, in North America, care will be taken to extract from the London Royal Gazette all such promotions, and other documents, as may appear interesting to them in their absence from England on service, or otherwise.
6. Literary notices, Selections, & Theatrical Criticisms—as well as a register of the most remarkable births, marriages, and deaths, as they appear in the British papers, will form a material part of the plan.
7. Agricultural and Commercial Intelligence—extracts from Lloyds lists—Prices Current—principal Ship news, &c. will be condensed in every number.
8. Communications connected with the avowed objects of the paper, post paid, are solicited, and will be inserted, subject of course to the discretion of the Editor.

Sir,

It being desirable to afford every encouragement to the growth of hemp, in Canada, I have the honor to transmit to you, in the absence of Lord Bathurst, a correspondence which has passed on this subject between this Department and the Admiralty, by which you will perceive that their Lordships have instructed Commissioner Barrie, to purchase hemp, being the produce of Canada, for the use of the Navy in the Province, provided the quality be good and the price not more than that at which it can be imported from England, and they have further authorized the purchase for the use of the Dock Yards in this country, (by way of experiment,) to the extent of one fourth of the annual consumption of Hemp, provided the quality be certified to be good by Commissioner Barrie, and that the price should not exceed on delivery here the price at which Russian Hemp is to be delivered according to the last Contracts.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c.

Admiralty Office, 10th April, 1822.

Sir,

Having laid before My Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, your letter of the 3d Inst., stating that it is considered by his Majesty's Government of much importance to afford every encouragement to the proprietors of Hemp in Canada, and submitting by direction of Earl Bathurst, the expediency of giving instructions for the purchase of Hemp, being the produce of Canada, for the use of the Navy there, and also suggesting whether it may not be advisable, by way of experiment, to give orders for the purchase of that article being the produce of Canada, for the use of His Majesty's Dock Yards in this country: I have their Lordships commands to acquaint you, for the information of Lord Bathurst, that they have directed the Navy Board to instruct Commissioner Barrie, to purchase Hemp, being the produce of Canada, for the use of the Navy in the Province, provided the quality be good, and the price not more than that at which it can be imported from England; and that they have further ordered them to purchase for the use of the Dock Yards in this country (by way of experiment) to the extent of one fourth of the annual consumption of Hemp, being the produce of Canada provided the quality be certified to be good by Commissioner Barrie, and that the price should not exceed on delivery here, the price at which Russian Hemp is to be delivered according to the last Contracts.

GREAT BRITAIN

HOUSE OF COMMONS—April 30.

Relief of Agriculture.—On the motion of the Marquis of Londonderry, the house resolved itself into a committee of the whole house, to take into consideration the report upon agricultural distress. After some observations on the increase of the revenue last quarter, and of a net increase of £90,000 a week, the Noble Lord said, that the distresses of the country had, in a great degree arisen from circumstances which were beyond the reach of legislative interference. Circumstances had produced an over supply in the market, and until that supply regulated itself to the demand, it was impossible to expect that the distress could be fully relieved. Under the respective heads of currency, of credit, and of finance, he should now beg leave to advert to a few points that might explain the views taken by government, and the grounds on which they now stood. The Noble Marquis then entered into a detailed exposition of the plan adopted by his Majesty's ministers, and for affording some relief to the distresses of the country, of which the following is an outline.

Relief of the agricultural Interest, by an advance of one million to farmers, on the security of corn stored in compliance with the suggestion of the agricultural committee. For the relief of the distresses in the south of Ireland, the sum of one million is to be placed at the disposal of the Irish government, to be advanced upon personal security to the projectors and proprietors of public works, as on the year 1816. The two millions which are to be thus advanced here and in Ireland, for the relief of the public, form a part of a sum of four millions, which are to be obtained on the security of Exchequer bills from the Bank of England, at three per cent, and of which the remainder is to be applied for paying off the claims of persons who have dissented from the plan of transferring the Navy five per cents into the new stock. For this accommodation to the public, the Bank of England is to obtain an extension of its charter for ten years. The right of issuing notes under five pounds is to be continued to the country banks during the extended duration of the charter of the Bank of England, namely, to the year 1833, and then notes are to be made payable in the notes of the Bank of England of the same denomination, which, in their turn, may be converted into cash, as is done at present. In addition to the above, the statute is to be repealed that restricts the number of proprietors in country banks to six members.

The next measure proposed was one of finance, and framed with a view to relieve a large portion of the debt of the country, namely, the dead expense or charge, as it was called, of our military establishment. It was proposed to place that charge upon a totally different footing from the one on which it at present stood. It was the charge for officers pensions, retired allowances, the pensions of officer's widows, and the half pay under the heads of the navy, army, and ordnance, being at present about £3,000,000. It is proposed therefore to make arrangements for the payment of the present half pay, &c. during the period of 45 years, by granting in lieu thereof, a fixed annuity for 45 years, or by granting perpetual annuities for the same period, with a fund applicable to and sufficient for its redemption within 45 years. The effect of this scheme, in the present situation of the country, would be this—that the annuity to be granted should be £2,800,000, (the present total of the charge thus to be relieved being £3 000,000,) the saving to the country would be £2,200,000, and consequently Parliament would be enabled to add that sum to the moneys and savings recommend d by the Finance Committee, as properly applicable to the purposes of affording relief to the country and aiding it to provide for a portion of the public services.

If Parliament should be enabled to realize that measure in the course of the present session, there will in two years have been remitted—

The horse tax amounting to	£480,000
Of the malt tax	1,300,000
And the reduction of taxes now proposed was	1,800,000
	1,800,000

In all, a reduction in two years only of £3,780,000

The law that governs the corn trade is to be modified, and a scale of duties to be established for the purpose of preventing a sudden and unrestricted influx of foreign corn when the home markets should have reached the specified averages of importation. The importing price is to remain for the present at 80s. a quarter for wheat, but is subsequently to be reduced to 70s. with the addition, however, of a protecting duty, the amount of which is to be determined by the House. Lord Londonderry seemed inclined to take it at 15s. duty, plus 12s. expenses, making altogether 27s. which must be paid before the importer could have the benefit of the English market. He would suppose the price in the English market 70s. a quarter, though foreign grain could not now be brought in under 80s. a quarter. Taking 27s. from 70, there would remain 43s. which was all that the importer could put in his pocket to pay for the corn abroad.

The Noble Marquis concluded by moving a resolution to empower his Majesty to issue one million in Exchequer bills to Commissioners, who might advance the same on British corn warehoused in proper warehouses, when the average price was under 60s. per quarter, American Trade Bill.—Mr. Chetwynd presented a petition from the merchants of London interested in the trade with the British North American Colonies, praying that the Bill pending in Parliament for the regulation of that trade might not pass into a law, and that they might be heard against it by Counsel.—Laid on the table.

Mr. T. Wilson presented a petition from the Merchants and Woollen drapers of the city of London against the American and West India Trade Bill.—Laid on the table.

Sir W. Curtis presented a petition from the Shipowners of the Port of London, and others, against the American and West India Bill.—Laid on the table.

Catholic Peers.—Mr. Canning's motion for the admission of Catholic peers into the House of Lords, was carried by a majority of five, in an unusually full house; the number of members present being 493.

The other speakers were Mr. Secretary Peel, who opposed the motion, and Mr. Plunkett who supported it. Lord Nugent also spoke. He did not give his sanction to the proposition; yet did not dwell upon the impropriety of the measure, but on the imprudence of bringing it forward at the present time, separated as it was, by the moves, from the case of the Roman Catholic question in general.

PROGRESS OF LITERATURE.

Extract from the speech of Lord John Russel in the House of Commons, on the dissemination of instruction, and the improvement of moral and political knowledge.

"The dissemination of instruction and the improvement in knowledge advanced even in more than equal proportion—this would appear from the increase of books and the very high prices which were paid for the exercises of literary talent—one author had received from the sale of his works no less a sum than £30,000.

"From the immense distribution of works of every description throughout the country, one would infer that, as the opportunities of information increased, the education of the lower classes must be enlarged in the same proportion—an eminent bookselling house in the city sold six millions of books in the year; employed 60 clerks; paid in advertisements 5,500l. and gave constant employment to 250 book-binders.

"Another great source of information to the country was the increase of Circulating Libraries.

"In 1770 there were only four circulating libraries in the metropolis; at present, 100, and scattered throughout the country about 1000.—Besides these, there were from 1500 to 2000 marts for the sale of books, distributing throughout the kingdom large masses of information on history, voyages, and every species of science, by which the sum of human knowledge could be increased or the human mind improved.—He might remark the increase of periodical works. Of these there were two, the Edinburgh and Quarterly Reviews, written with an ability equal to some of the best original works of former times, and having a greater circulation than all the periodical works of 30 years ago put together. Besides these, there are five periodical works of science, all in great demand—nor is this demand confined to the vicinity of the Universities alone—a friend of his travelling through Inverness, was enabled to procure at a small shop, a Journal of science, and a number of the Encyclopedia. While such sources of information were thus opened to the higher orders, the means of improving the minds of the poorer classes had advanced no less rapid and steady. First the Lancastrian Schools distributing instruction widely; to these followed the National Schools, affording an education suitable to their state and condition.

"Another means of improvement was the great facilities which at present existed by the cheap rate at which valuable works were got and thus brought within the compass of all. An establishment was commenced by a number of individuals with a capital of 1,000,000l. for the purpose of printing standard works at a cheap rate. From that establishment the works of Hume, of Buffon, the Encyclopedia, and other valuable productions, were sold in small numbers of six pence, and by this means sources of the highest instruction were placed within the poor man's reach.

He regretted much to add, that this valuable establishment was very much checked in its operation by the effect of one of those acts for the suppression of knowledge passed in 1819, especially as one of the rules of that establishment had been, not to allow any of the venders of their works to sell any book on the political controversies of the day. He should not omit the good effects of the Bible Society, the Religious Tract Society, the Society for the Dissemination of Christian Knowledge, and other valuable associations of that character. Since the commencement of the Bible Society, it had applied the immense sum of £900,000 to the laudable purpose of disseminating moral instruction. From the Religious Tract Society not fewer than four millions of Tracts had been distributed; and the Society for Christian Knowledge had distributed one million of little works. These facts would shew the rapid improvements which had been made by the public in the improvement of general knowledge. As to the state of political knowledge, it appeared that there were no less than 25,000,000 papers sold in the country last year. The daily London papers sold 11,000,000; the weekly papers above two millions.

"As to the increase of the number of papers within the last 30 or 40 years, he gave the following statement:

England,	50	60	135 papers
Scotland,	8	27	31
Ireland,	3	27	56
London daily,	9	14	16
Twice a week,	9	7	8
Weekly,	0	11	32
British Isles,	0	0	6

making in the whole the increase in the number since 1790, from 146 to 284, which was very nearly double in the space of 30 years. From the above statements, the house would judge of the vast increase of the wealth and importance of the country, and of the rapid strides it had made in moral and political knowledge."

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

Home Department.

The first twelve pages of this interesting expose, after enumerating the duties of the Minister of the "Home Department relate almost exclusively to the internal affairs of the Island of Britain alone—to the dangers they have encountered, and the perils they have escaped, in consequence of the wisdom of the ministry and the energy of the government. We find little or nothing however, in these pages but what must be familiar to every intelligent reader. The Internal troubles of 1817, 18, and 19, they attribute chiefly to the efforts of seditious writers, directed against the religion, morality, and loyalty of the populace. "A new form of libellous publication, of cheap blasphemous and seditious tracts, diffused the poison from one end of the kingdom to the other." Touching the celebrated Manchester affair, they say that several thousands of persons were assembled together, and it was proposed and resolved, that on the same day in the following week another more general meeting should be holden, and that ten out of every twenty persons then assembled should march in mass to London; that the large towns in Yorkshire should be invited to adopt the same plan, and meeting the array upon the road, and composing together a popular army exceeding one hundred thousand men, should fearlessly and in good confidence proceed to the metropolis.

Near the conclusion of this branch of the subject, the writer says, "The execution [of the laws] in practise, everywhere proceeded with their moderation in purpose. They have all effected their object by menace only. The business has been done by exciting the salutary apprehension of the seditious and turbulent. Assuredly, measures of such firmness were never executed with such moderation. The six acts, as they have been termed from their number, exist only as so many wholesome rods, suspended over the heads of the seditious leaders. The sword, indeed, hangs by a thread; but it falls not; while the terror of its fall restrains the audacious. The greater part of the blasphemous and seditious publications has nearly disappeared. If some still continue to insult the morals and good sense of the people, the resort to juries has become safe and certain. The most perilous and malignant of these libellers has become a commentator on Scottish theories and Leghorn laundis. In a word, at no period, perhaps, is the public tranquility throughout England and Scotland more firmly settled than at present. Others are suffering, and it may be added, without compassion from any quarter, the just retribution on their successful wicked ness, under the verdicts of their countrymen. In no single instance whatever, within the last four years, has government failed in its resort to juries; whether in prosecutions for treason, libel, or seditious misdemeanour; whether for the consummation of the crime in its first form, or for its origination in the latter."

After alluding to the agricultural difficulties of the Kingdom, and the wild schemes of certain of the Radical Reformers, in relation to the public debt and public faith, we find the following observations, which we extract chiefly because we find the government of the United States quoted as a precedent; and that of great Britain This circumstance is so extraordinary that we could not well pass it over.—"What interest (says the writer) could promise itself a movement's safety, under the general convulsion which would follow the disturbance of property, as sacred as the titles of the land. Parliament has a natural power, and parliament has a moral power. Its natural power is to do any thing its moral power is to act only according to the obligations of justice Parliament, therefore has no power to cancel obligations of this kind. But are we not here fighting shadows? Under our most confirmed confidence in the honor of the country, we sincerely believe that we are; and that no proposition of this kind has any chance of finding such support as to render it an object of momentary apprehension. The example of the United States will not here be lost upon us. In the year 1810, when her revenue had fallen from thirty six million dollars to seventeen millions; a fall equivalent to the reduction of our own total income from fifty-six millions to twenty-six; and when, under these circumstances, there was a bold proposition about reducing the interest of the national debt, the government and congress rejected it with indignation. As respects ourselves indeed, could the proposal only be made; could the mere mention in parliament only be admitted, without causing such a panic and thereupon such a violent reduction in the price of stocks, as would at once introduce general disorder and ruin.

But it is time to bring this article to a close. In our next we shall extract if possible the whole of what is said of Ireland.

Miscellaneous Notices.

Some movements are said to have taken place in the Russian army commanded by Count Wittgenstein.

A Special Congress, to take into consideration the present state of Europe, was about to assemble at Vienna.

Three bridges are said to have been constructed over Dneister, to afford a passage to the Russians into Bessarabia, the moment that war commenced.

Plymouth, April 26.—We have now here, if required, a fleet, in excellent condition, consisting of three ships of the line of 120 guns, three of 80 guns, thirteen of 74 guns, two of 60 guns, and 9 of 40 guns, with thirty other vessels of minor description.

Mr. Gordon, who was reported in the Courier, to have left the service of the Greeks in disgust, has arrived in town, and has authorised the most positive contradiction of that statement. He left Greece on a regular leave of absence, in consequence of extreme illness, which confined him in bed at Zante for two months; and so far from having been under the necessity of escaping by stealth, he was saluted in every town he passed through all the way to the coast opposite Zante, where he embarked. He now holds the commission of General in the service of the Greeks.

Match to Dover.—Mr. Wes', the celebrated pedestrian, and who is considered the best of his day at a long journey, undertook on Thursday to go on foot from Holborn to within two miles of Dover, making 72 miles, in 12 hours. This is much more than has ever been attempted, and the match was 100 guineas to 30 on time. The pedestrian did rather over 23 miles in the first three hours and appeared fresh and well. Having got five miles more than the rate of travelling off, he pursued a steady course of something less than six miles an hour, and had accomplished 37 miles in six hours. He had no time for resting, and it was evident he could not win. He did 54 miles in nine hours and fifty minutes, and resigned the task, having won a bet that he did fifty miles in nine hours, which he accomplished with eight minutes to spare.

Men of war's Tackle.—The sails and cordage of a first rate man of war require 180,000lbs. of rough hemp for their construction; and it is said to average five acres of land to produce a ton of hemp; thus one of these monstrous towers of human ingenuity, consumes a year's produce of 424 acres of land to furnish its necessary tackle

It is calculated that above 20,000 English families now reside in Paris.

It is calculated that the silver lead mines now at work in Cornwall, and others about to commence, will in a few years raise sufficient silver for the use of the kingdom. At Sir Christopher Hawkin's mine in that county, a plate of silver has been extracted which weighed nearly 400lbs. This mine produces two and sometimes three such pieces a month.

During the last twelve months, a poor woman, about 50 years of age, has occasionally visited the surgeons in the Gorbals, purchasing opium or laudanum, as suited her taste and circumstances.—Sometimes when scarce of money she has swallowed the laudanum and gone off without paying for it. Saturday morning she went into a surgeon's shop and asked for an ounce and a half of her favourite liquid, a quantity, in ordinary circumstances, sufficient for 24 men. The surgeon gave her the glass in her hand, thinking she intended to empty it into some article of her own, and carry it off, when to his astonishment, she swallowed the whole contents. The surgeon having recognized his old acquaintance, handed her over to the police, to deter her from troubling him again. After a confinement of two hours, she was liberated. She states that a morning dram of that kind, keeps her cheery a' day.—Glasgow Paper.

The Plymouth Telegraph states that an adventurous cabbage merchant, of Liskeard, has sailed from that port for America, with a cargo of 30, or 40,000 cabbage plants! He once before took out a smaller speculation of the same kind, which paid him handsomely, and induced him to undertake this larger adventure.

Distress and disturbances in Monmouthshire.—The peace of this county is greatly disturbed. Numbers of men nightly attack those who work at the mines, at prices which they consider low; though according to resolutions of a late meeting, at which the Lord Lieutenant presided, it was deemed impossible to raise wages, on account of the depression of trade. Some coal waggons were attacked by the populace, whom it was found necessary to disperse by the military (the Scotch Greys) which was done with celerity and humanity, not a man being wounded. The dreadful distress to which the farmers are reduced, may be learned from the following facts: "The desertion of farms by these occupiers, after a thorough clearance of the property, is beginning to be very alarming in part of Monmouthshire. It is an absolute fact, that two magistrates residing in that county, travelled each seven miles on Saturday Se'nnight, to give possession of a deserted farm; and in order to complete the business, they must travel as many more The magistrates had the mortification to learn, as they went along, that several other tenants in that part of the country had already done the same thing.

INDEX AT END

Since Sunday the 30th April, upwards of 800 vessels are supposed to have sailed from this port. The Custom-House books, on the 30th ult. presented a list of 150 vessels loading for foreign parts—unprecedented in the history of the town.—Liverpool Advertiser.

We copy the following from the circular of an innkeeper at Verona, in Italy. That the accommodation that his house affords may be made known to travellers from different nations, he publishes his address in the Italian, German, French and English languages; the latter translation we give verbatim at literatim, as it will no doubt entertain our English readers:—

"Circulatory.—The old Inn of London's Tower, placed among the more agreable situation of Verona's course, belonging at Sir Theodocius Zagnoni, restored by the decorum most indulgent to good things, of life's cases, which are favoured from every arts liable of Inn same, with all object that is concern'd convenience of stage coaches, proper horses, but good foragers and coach house; Do offers at Inkeeper the constant hope, to be honored from a great concourse, where politeness, good genius of meats, to delight of Nations, round table Coffee house, hackney coach, men servant of place, swiftness of service, and moderation of prices, shall arrive to accomplish in Him all satisfaction, and at Sirs, who will do the favor of honoring him a very assured kindness."—Durham County Advertiser.

A man sentenced to death for burglary, had contrived by means of associates outside, to get a meat pie introduced, which contained with other ingredients, a pair of pistols.—The culprit intended to shoot his keeper and escape

A young woman living at Newcastle, became deranged after seeing the play of Othello—she frequently exclaimed 'oh the villains murdered her.' This says the London Editor is a sort of parallel case with that of the American Sentinel, who lately shot Othello, remarking at the time that no negro rascal should kill a white women in his presence.

A young man, a shoemaker, having been discarded by a young woman to whom he had paid his addresses, stabbed his rival in the street of which wounds he died. The prisoner was designated as the "Dandy Cobler." He was executed for the above crime.

ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

In the Arctic Land Expedition Lieutenant Franklin, R. N. proceeded from York Factory towards their wintering ground at Cumberland, a distance of about 900 miles from the coast.—Lieut. Franklin, Dr. Richardson Mr. Back, and Mr. Hood, attended by the Orkneymen, who had been engaged to man the boats in the rivers of the interior, had worked in the Company's service several years, and understood the language of many of the Indian tribes, left the factory on the 7th of September, 1819. As the travellers advanced, the mild season not having yet begun to disappear, vast herds of grey deer were observed passing the rivers towards the Esquimaux lands. They entered upon Lake Winnipie, at the farther side of which they had to encounter the grand rapid, extending nearly three miles, and abounding in obstructions quite insurmountable. Here they were obliged to drag their boats on shore, and carry them over the land. The woods along the banks were all in a blaze, it being the custom of the natives, as well as of the traders, to set fire to the trees, for the double purpose of keeping off the cold and the wolves. The expedition passed several other rapids and falls, along a flat, woody, and swampy country, across five miles of which no eye could see. After a tedious Journey of forty-six days, (the dangers and distresses of which rather increased than diminished as they advanced,) the expedition arrived at Cumberland, a post situated on the banks of a beautiful lake, and stockaded against incursions of savages, the attacks of wolves and bears, and the more ferocious assaults of rival traders. Here the winter of 1819 was passed. In June 1820 they set forward in canoes manned by Canadians. On the 29th of July they arrived at the north side of Slave Lake. A party of Copper Indians were engaged to accompany them, and they commenced the work of discovery. On the 1st of September they reached the banks of the Copper Mine River, in lat. 55. 15. N. long. 113 W. a magnificent body of water two miles wide. They had penetrated into a country destitute of wood, and the men were exhausted with the labor of carrying canoes, cargoes, &c. amounting to three tons, from lake to lake. Their broken spirits were revived by success; but the season was too far advanced to make farther progress. They returned to a small wood of pines, and erected their winter residence of mud and timber, which they named Fort Enterprise. By Indian report this river runs into the Northern Sea, in west-longitude 110, and in lat. 72. In June, 1821, they proposed to re-embark, and it was supposed that the river would enable them to reach the sea in a fortnight.

THE WELLINGTON SHIELD.

This magnificent trophy, executed in silver richly gilt, together with the ornamental columns of the same costly material, has been completed, under the superintendance of Messrs Green, Ward, & Co. of Lombard-street. It was ordered in 1814, by the Committee of Merchants and Bankers of London, as a splendid record of the Duke of Wellington's high achievements; but the time which has since elapsed has not been thrown away: the subject has undergone the fullest study and reflection, the first artists have been employed, the designs and models have been made with the greatest taste, the workmanship has been directed with the utmost care and ability, and the result is undoubtedly one of the finest productions of art ever executed in the precious metals.

On Saturday last, this magnificent Wellington shield, forming, together with the ornamental columns, one of the finest productions of modern art, was presented to the illustrious General, whose name it bears. The death of some of the artists employed in the work, and other inelubible causes having deferred its completion till very lately, the presentation could not take place earlier; but on Saturday his Grace (having previously appointed that day) attended at Messrs. Green and Ward's, accompanied by Lord Fitzroy Somerset, and was there met by William Manning, Esq. M.P the Chairman of the Committee, who delivered the Shield and Columns to his Grace, in the name of the Merchants and Bankers; and at the same time expressed to him the sentiments of respect and attachment, with which they, in common with a grateful country, are animated towards his Grace's person. The illustrious Duke made an appropriate reply to this Address, and testified his high admiration of the singular richness and beauty of this valuable present

We shall attempt a short description both of the shield and of the columns, which are meant as ornamental accessions to it, when placed among the other splendid memorials of the illustrious General's victories.

The Shield is circular; its diameter is about three feet eight inches. At the first glance of the eye three concentric divisions strike the spectator, namely, a convex broad border of deadened gold richly ornamented in basso relievo, an inner circle of polished gold reclining from the center and slightly convex, and a bold group of figures in alto relievo executed in deadened gold, occupying the center of the Shield.

The central group, nobly prominent, and beautifully relieved by the radiant ground on which it is placed, consists of 14 equestrian figures, besides an allegorical representation of Fame, crowning the illustrious Commander; and there are three prostrate figures under his feet, descriptive of the violence and the devastation, and the despotism to which his victories so happily put an end. The Duke of Wellington himself appears on horseback in the middle, and he is surrounded by officers who held important commands under him in the Peninsula. The grouping is most admirable. The Duke, without appearing detached from his associates, is sufficiently distinct and striking; whilst the other officers fill the surrounding space, without producing any effect of crowd or confusion. Some of the countenances struck us as remarkable likenesses, especially those of Lord Beresford and Sir t. Cole, which are both finished with a precision and sharpness truly surprising in this sort of workmanship.

The outer border is divided into ten compartments, representing the principal features of the Duke's military life, up to the General Peace of 1814, when the plan of this costly work was first adopted. Of course, the unparalleled triumphs does not enter into the series of events here recorded; but it must remain indelibly engraved on every British heart to the latest posterity. The subjects of the different compartments are as follows:—

1. THE VICTORY OF ASSAYE (Sept. 23, 1803.)—The British cavalry and infantry having left the artillery, whose progress (being drawn by bullocks) was too slow, advance, and overcome all opposition; and the charge made by the 74th regiment of dragoons overthrows the Mahrattas, and decide the day.

2. THE BATTLE OF VIMIERA (August 21, 1808)—This victory led to the delivery of Lisbon. The charge of the 71st Highland regiment, which mainly contributed to the defeat of the French, is here introduced.

3. THE PASSAGE OF THE DOURO (May 12, 1809)—The city of Oporto is here personified, surrounded by women and children, who receive Wellington as their deliverer. The French are seen flying at his approach.

4. TAKES VEDRAS (March 6, 1811)—The Allied troops advancing from the lines and pursuing the enemy, whom flight is marked by conflagration and famine.

5. SALAMANCA TAKEN BY ASSAULT (April 6, 1812)—This subject may be said to represent the conquest of the many strong holds on the frontiers of Portugal.

6. THE BATTLE OF SALAMANCA (July 22, 1812)—The British army having entered Spain, defeat the French under Marmont, at Salamanca. Marmont wounded.

7. THE BATTLE OF VITTORIA (June 21, 1813)—Where the usurper Joseph is defeated in person, the females of his suite, baggage waggons, &c. taken, and the French eagles captured.

8. THE BASTLE OF THE PYRENEES (1813).—An officer is seen planting the British colours on the heights, before which the Imperial standard is overthrown. The city of Bordeaux is personified, rising to welcome the British army, and hoisting the ancient colours of France.

9 THE ENTRANCE OF WELLINGTON INTO TOULOUSE (April 12, 1814)—where all sexes and ages hail him as their deliverer; an old Knight of St. Louis is seen grasping his hand, and welcoming him as the restorer of the Bourbon Dynasty, &c.

10. THE DUKEDOM OF WELLINGTON CONFERRED (1814)—The Duke with the "Baton de Marechal" in his hand, kneeling before the Prince Regent to receive the Ducal Coronet.

Four Columns are intended to represent the traits of the victories depicted on the shield. They are each about four feet three inches in height, including the figures of FAME and VICTORY, by which they are surmounted. The body of each column is formed by the trunk of a palm tree, with a cropped leaves: it stands on a triangular base, and is surrounded in each instance by three characteristic figures.

Around the column, obtaining the figure of Victory, are resting in attitudes of repose, three soldiers of the United Kingdom, namely, a British Grenadier, a Highlander, and an Irish Light Infantry man; each supporting the flag of his country, distinguished by the Rose, Thistle, and Shamrock. The subjects described in basso relievo on the base are—Britannia awarding the laurel wreath, sword to the Army and Navy.—Return to the full occupation of the useful and ingenious Arts;—And the old and young joining in the feast &c.—Groups of military trophies and weapons are heaped up at the angles as if no longer required.

Around the column surmounted by the figure of Fame, are placed in quiescent attitudes, three soldiers, emblematical of three of the nations whose troops the Duke commanded, namely, a Portuguese a Sepoy, and a Guerilla, who are supposed to have bound a medallion of the Duke among the folds of their respective flags. Under each figure is a bas-relief, describing the peaceful occupations of the several Countries, released from their enemies: thus under the Guerilla are Spanish peasants dancing, while the vine and the corn denote the return of agriculture and the vintage. Under the Portuguese, the long neglected vineyard appears restored to its productive harvest: and beneath the Sepoy, a Hindostanee family reposes in peace under the protection of the British Government, while a Warrior is relating an account of the Battle of Assaye, by which the country was freed from the ravages of the Mahrattas.

The guardians of the scene are—A Soldier of the 10th Dragoons and a Sepoy, with a Mahratta Captive. Groups of military trophies and weapons ornament the corners of the base, as in the first column

THEATRICAL

MADAME CATALANI.—Madame Catalani gave her first concert at the Argyle Rooms on the 24th of April. The Editor of the London Courier gives the following fine description of her singing:

"There is nothing in the annals of music so remarkable as the empire which Madame Catalani originally acquired in her profession, unless it be the circumstance that she has so long retained it without even the appearance of a rival. To the hour her voice is as clear, as firm, and as extensive in its compass, as when it first sounded on our ears ten winters ago. Still it is felt floating in the same grandeur over all the instruments of the orchestra. The same extraordinary power of execution which first enabled her to melt in an instant from frenzy to supplication, or to rush from tenderness to rage, still distinguishes her from all other singers whom it has been our fortune to hear. Doubtless she owes a great deal of her celebrity to the formation of her vocal organ, which it is well known is of singular capacity. But it is the intelligence with which she exercises it that renders her worthy of the heavenly gift. It is the mental beauty, the force, and propriety of expression she infuses thro it which renders it so genial and so cheering to the human heart that tears alone can sometimes tell the extent to which it captivates. The finest emotions which the divine poetry of Homer, or the matchless pencil of Titian produces in the mind are alone comparable with those which this woman awakens, and awakens with the facility of an enchanter. In the recitative and air, Psyno pie grato, she had an opportunity for displaying the magnificence of her style. But it was in Rode's air that she justified all that has been ever said or imagined of her executive powers.

The variations of this air nearly all consist of shakes, which are alternately strong and soft in extremes. In her transitions she excited sensations of astonishment, such as we have never witnessed in an audience: the swell of her voice from the piano to the trumpet, came like the burst of a tempest on the ear; and whilst she was sporting with the gentler passages, her noble countenance all reflaxed in smiles, her voice twittering and joyous like that of a lark in a glorious vernal sky, all present suspended breath, that not one of such exquisite notes might be lost. It was encored; and to those who heard it, it will remain long the object of delightful remembrance. In the second part of the concert, Madame Catalani's first piece was a composition of Sampieri's; but in this instance we thought the accompaniments formed by far too prominent a part of the composition; her voice, however, at times broke out amongst them with an overwhelming effect. The room was so crowded that all the places in the Orchestra not assigned to the musicians, were occupied by gentlemen and even ladies who were glad to have any seat or even standing places.

Kean was playing at Drury-lane Theatre; Romeo Kean; Mercutio, Elliston.—At the Coventgarden theatre, Mr. Young was advertised for Garden theatre, Mr. Young was advertised for King Lear; Edgar, Kemble; Cordelia, Miss Foote.

A liberal subscription had been raised in London to erect a monument to the memory of Charles Dibdin, Esq. the celebated naval song writer.

The inimitable singer, INCLEDON, last evening took his final leave of the stage, at the English Opera House, before an audience which filled the theatre almost to suffocation in every part, and numbers of persons retired without being able to obtain even a peep, at the drawing up of the curtain.

Vienna, March 4.

This capital is all in motion to behold and compliment the celebrated composer Rossini, who has just arrived with his new married wife, Mademoiselle Colburn. In their train are the singers of the Neapolitan Opera, David, Nozzari and Ambrosi. Rossini himself will direct the performance of his Operas, beginning with Zelmira.—Paris paper.

VALERIUS.

(Concluded from our last.)

But an exhibition of more fearful interest follows. He is taken in Rubellia's chariot to the Amphitheatre, the Coliseum; that place in which the grandeur of imperial opulence, and the horrors of Heathenism, seem to have met in one unequalled consummation. The passage is very eloquent, picturesque, and touching. The author treads upon untried ground, and he treads with a learned and manly step.

Behold me, therefore, in the midst of the Flavian Amphitheatre, and seated under the wing of this luxurious lady, in one of the best situations which the range of benches set apart for the females and their company, afforded. There was a general silence in the place at the time we entered and seated ourselves, because proclamation had just been made that the Gladiators, with whose combats the exhibition of the day was to commence, were about to enter upon the arena. I had shew themselves in order to the people. As yet, how ever, they had not come forth from that place of concealment to which so many of their number were of necessity destined never to return; so that I has leisure to collect my thoughts, and to survey for a moment, without disturbance, the mighty and most motley multitude, piled above, below, and on every side around me, from the lordly senators, on their silken couches, along the parapet of the arena, up to the impenetrable mass of plebian heads which skirted the horizon, above the top most wall of the Amphitheatre itself. Such was the enormous crowd of human beings, high and low, assembled therein, that when any motion went through their assembly, the noise of their rising up or sitting down could be likened to nothing, except, perhaps, the far off sullen roaring of the illimitable sea, or the rushing of a great nightwind amongst the boughs of a forest. It was the first time that I had ever seen a peopled Amphitheatre—nay, it was the first time that I had ever seen any great multitudes of men assembled together within any fabric of human erection; so that you cannot doubt there was, in the scene before me, enough to impress my mind with a very serious feeling of astonishment—not to say of veneration. Not less than eighty thousand human beings, (for such they told me was the stupendous capacity of the building,) were here met together. Such a multitude can nowhere be regarded, without inspiring a certain indefinite, indefinable sense of majesty; at least of awe. But when the wide sweep of seats of such a glorious edifice as this, and surrounded on all sides with every circumstance of ornament and splendour, befitting an everlasting monument of Roman victories, the munificence of Roman princes, and the imperial luxury of universal Rome, is filled, as it was then, with that eyes of wonder all this was surveyed by me, who had but of yesterday, as it were, emerged from the solitary stillness of a British gallery, who had been accustomed all my life to consider as among the most impressive of human spectacles, the casual passage of a few series of legionaries, through some dark alley of a wood or awe struck village of barbarians.

Trajan himself was already present, but in nowise, except from the canopy over his ivory chair, to be distinguished from the other Consul that ate over against him; tall, nevertheless, and of a surety very majestic in his demeanour, grave, sedate, and benign in countenance, even according to the likeness which you have seen upon his medals and statues. He was arrayed in a plain gown, and supported on a curule chair, similarly, and without the least affectation of condescension with such patricians as had their places near him; among whom Bestius and Rubellia pointed out to me with much perspicuity my neighbour, as for example, many remarkable personages to my mother; as for example, the Emperor, who was then Emperor; Pliny, the orator, a man of very courtly presence, and lively agreeable aspect; and above all, the historian Tacitus, the worthy son in-law of our Agricola, in whose pale countenance I thought I could recognise the traits of that high sought to train to discover any traces of the keenness of his genius. Of all the then proud names that were whispered into my ear, could I recollect or repeat them now, how would awaken any interest in your minds! Those indeed, which I have mentioned, have an interest that will never die. Would that the greatest and the best of them all were to be remembered only for greatness and goodness.

The proclamation being repeated a second time, a door on the right of the arena was laid open, and a single trumpet sounded, as it seemed to me mournfully, while the gladiators marched in with slow steps, each man naked, except being girt with a cloth about his loins, bearing on his left arm a small buckler, and having a short straight sword unsheathed by a cord around his neck. They marched, as I have said, slowly and steadily: so that the whole assembly had full leisure to contemplate the forms of the men; while those who were, or who imagined themselves to be skilled in the fashions of the arena, were busy in their own minds, on such as they thought were likely to be victorious, and laying wagers concerning the chances of success, with as much earnestness as if they had been contemplating so many irrational animals, or rather, indeed, I should say, so many speechless pieces of ingenious mechanism. The wide diversity of complexion and feature exhibited among these devoted athletes, afforded at once a majestic idea of the extent of the Roman empire, and a terrible one of the purposes to which its wide sway had compelled them to be subservient. The beautiful Greek, with a countenance of noble serenity, and limbs after which the sculptors of his country might have modelled their gods, here arrayed in a panoply of steel, walked side by side with the yellow-haired Saxon, whose gigantic muscles had been nurtured in the freezing waves of the Elbe or the Danube, or whose thick strong hair was congealed and shagged on his brow with the breath of Scythian or Scandinavian winters. Many fierce Moors and Arabians and curled Ethiopians, were there, with every various shade of swarthiness upon their skins. Nor did our own remote island want their representatives in the deadly procession, for I saw among the armed multitude—and that not altogether without some feelings of particular interest—two or three gaunt barbarians, whose breasts and shoulders bore uncouth marks of blue and purple, so vivid in the tints, that I thought many months could not have elapsed since they must have been wandering in wild freedom along the native ridges of some Silurian or Caledonian forest. As they moved around the arena, some of these men were saluted by the whole multitude with noisy acclamations, in token, I supposed, of the approbation wherewith the feats of some former festival had deserved to be remembered. On the appearance of others, groans and hisses were heard from some parts of the Amphitheatre, mixed with contending cheers and hisses from others of the spectators. But by far the greater part were suffered to pass on in silence; this being in all likelihood the first—while I who could tell whether it might not also be the last day of their sharing in that fearful exhibition.

Their masters paired them shortly, and in succession they began to make proof of their fatal skill. At first, Scythian was matched against Scythian—Greek against Greek—Ethiopian against Ethiopian; and I saw the sand dyed beneath their feet with blood streaming from the wounds of kindred hands. But these combats, although abundantly bloody and terrible, were regarded only as preludes to the serious business of the day, which consisted of duels between Europeans on the one side, and Africans on the other; wherein it was the well-nigh intransgressible law of the Amphitheatre, that at least one out of every pair of combatants should die on the arena before the eyes of the multitude. Instead of shrinking from the more desperate brutalities of these latter conflicts, the almost certainty of their fatal termination seemed only to make the assembly gape on them with a more intolerable curiosity. Of the many which I witnessed that night, Methinks I feel as if it were but of yesterday,—when, sickened with the protracted terrors of a conflict, that seemed as if it were never to have an end, although both the combatants were already covered all over with blood and wounds, I bowed ready covered all over with blood and wounds, I bowed down my head, and clasped my hands upon my eyes, to save them from the torture of gazing thereon further: and I had scarce done so, when Rubellia laid her hand upon my elbow, whispering, "Look, look, my child, look, a voice of such masculine manliness. I did look, but not to the arena: No; it was upon the beautiful features of that woman's face that I looked, and truly it seemed to me as if they presented a spectacle almost as fearful as that from which I had just averted mine eyes. I saw these rich lips parted asunder, and those dark eyes extended in their sockets, and those smooth cheeks suffused with a steadfast blush, and that lovely bosom swelled and glowing; and I hated Rubellia as I gazed, for I knew not before how utterly beauty can be brutalised by the loathsomeness of a cruel heart;—and than the hundreds of females that I saw with their eyes fixed, with equal earnestness, on the same spot of horrors, taught me, even at that moment, to think with more charity of that pitiless gaze of love.

At that instant all were silent, in the contemplation of the breathless strife; insomuch, that a groan, the first that had escaped from either of the combatants, although low and reluctant, and half suppressed, sounded quite distinctly amidst the deep hush of the assembly, and being constrained thereby to turn mine eyes once more downwards, I beheld that, at length, one of the two had received the sword of his adversary quite through his body, and had sunk to the ground in the sands of the arena. It was the man that had received this harm, with fair hair, clustered in glossy ringlets upon his neck and brows; but the sickness of his wound was already visible on his drooping eye-lids, and his lips were pale, as if the blood had rushed from them to the ruddiness of his cheeks. Nevertheless the Moorish gladiator who had fought with him, had drawn forth again his weapon, and stood there awaiting in silence the decision of the multitude, whether at once to slay the defenceless youth, or to assist in removing him from the arena, if perchance the blood might be stopped from flowing, and some hope of recovery yet extended to him. Hereupon there arose, on the instant, a loud voice of contention; and it seemed to me as if the wounded man spoke, and the multitude with a proud, and withal contemptuous clance, being aware, without question, that he had executed all things so as to deserve their compassion, but aware, moreover, that even had that been freely vouchsafed to him, it was too late for any hopes of safety. But the cruelty of their faces, it may be, the loudness of their cries, were a sorrow to him, and filled his dying breast with loathing. Whether or not the haughtiness of his countenance had been observed by them with displeasure, I cannot say; but so it was, that those who had cried out to give him a chance of recovery, were speedily silent, and the Emperor looking round, and seeing all the thumbs turned downwards, (for that is, you know, the signal of death,) was constrained to give the sign, and forthwith the young man received without a struggle the sword of the Moor into his gashed bosom, breathed forth his life, and lay stretched out in his blood upon the place of guilt.

LITERARY NOTICES.

LORD BYRON'S Pictures.—Tell me the company you keep' says the proverb, "and I'll tell you what you are." On a former occasion which may have been forgotten, we mentioned that the favorite drinking cup of Lord Byron, was formed from the scull of one of his ancestors. Dr. Young wrote his Night Thoughts with a candle stuck in a human scull. Such eccentricities are indicative of the peculiar structure of mind, and habit of thinking, of those in whom they are found.

ing to the different tastes for the objects represented. "Boys purchase original copies or engravings of Titian's Venuses, Wouvermans's Graces, and Rubens's Bathing Nymphs; Soldiers delight in Battle Pieces; and Sailors in Sea Fights. Botanists have their Van Hymms, Van Oosts, and Rachel Ruysches. Picturesquists, their Claude Lorrraines, Salvator Rosas, and Gaspar Poussins. All which display and confirm their various inclinations." The following is said to be a catalogue of Lord Byron's Picture Gallery. If correct, it may account for the gloomy and licentious paintings of his muse.

A late English paper speaks of "one redeeming act" of his Lordship's life, connected with his neglected and amiable lady. LADY NOEL ON her death, bequeathed property to Lord Byron to a considerable amount (we believe as much as seven thousand pounds per annum!) viz. upon proving the will, it was discovered that, by the wording the whole of the legacy, contrary to the intention of the testator, devolved upon Lord Byron. His Lordship, however, convinced (as he well indeed might) that no part of the legacy was intended for him, and yet under his circumstances not feeling disposed to abandon his right altogether, suggested the appointment of a friend on his part to meet a friend of her Ladyship's, by whose award upon the subject he agreed to abide. This suggestion was adopted, and the arbitrators (LORD DACRE on the one part, and SIR FRANCIS BURDET on the other,) agreed that the legacy should be equally divided between the parties, in which arrangement Lord Byron has acquiesced. This may be considered magnanimous as far as it goes, but it would have been a much more noble act, if the noble author had relinquished the whole.

The Rev. Dr. Clarke, the traveller.—The Cambridge Chronicle has taken a more particular notice of the death of the above named traveller than we have met with in any other journal. He died on the 9th of March, at the house of Sir W. Rush, in Pall Mall. The Rev. E. D. Clarke, soon after taking his degree, accompanied Lord Berwick, abroad, and remained for some time in Italy. The classic scenes he there met with, and his own inquisitive genius, stimulated him to enter into a wide field of research, and shortly after his return to England, he embarked on those travels which have rendered his name so celebrated throughout Europe. Upon his return from this extensive tour, during which he had visited nearly the whole of Europe, and parts of Asia and Africa, Dr. Clarke presented to the university of Cambridge, those memorials of his travels which now decorate the vestibule of the library. From that moment his residence was confined to Cambridge, and he shortly after commenced those public lectures in mineralogy, which, if possible, have made his name more known and honored, both in England and in foreign countries than even his long and interesting travels. Natural history was his earliest and most favorite study: and that peculiar branch of it which refers to the mineral kingdom, soon engrossed the whole of his attention. Dr. Clarke was librarian to the university at the time of his death, and was in the 54th year of his age. He fell a victim to his generous ardour in the pursuit of science—he looked only to the fame of the university: and in his honest endeavours to exhalt her reputation, he unhappily neglected his own individual health.

"Ferdinahd Mendez Pinto, was but a type of thee, thou Prince of Liars!"

Old Play.

Not content with giving us his flourishing statement of an average profit of £239,580 on the location of 30 Townships, for the edification of Mr. VANSITTART, and Sir ISAAC COFFIN, this wholesale dealer in misrepresentation and falsehood adds another of his abominable lies, by saying there is the payment of the Patent-fee of £3 5s. besides the fees stated in his schedule a; which said payment we positively assert to (at p. 29) grow to the Governor, or to his officers, from 3,17 1600, to £951600!! This is speaking out pretty roundly, and we cannot doubt to whom he alludes (at p. 22,) where he talks about using the Colony as one who takes a farm at rack-rent, and about a "want of charity and respectability, lurking in the bosom of society;" &c &c.

One would really wonder how such a man could dare to shew his face in public after uttering such wicked and premeditated falsehoods in open day; he must have been long hardened to a profligate disregard of truth and decency, or he would fear being pointed out, and hooted at in the public streets, for there are many thousands capable of detecting these falsehoods. Every man who has paid fees must know into what offices he has paid them; and, that the fees publicly advertised include every expence. This last assertion, therefore, in an especial manner, proves the undisguised and foul malignity of his disposition; and he has been led to this instance, if in no other, to lay himself open to a criminal prosecution for one of the most false, wicked, and scandalous libels ever printed.

No person can be so ignorant, since so many hundreds, and thousands have paid fees in this Province, as not to know that the RECEIVER GENERAL alone, can receive the money; and that that officer is not merely bound by an oath, but also by very heavy pecuniary bonds, to account for every shilling that passes through his hands, to the LORDS OF THE TREASURY;—and we are very strongly inclined to think that Mr. VANSITTART, and Sir ISAAC COFFIN, will greatly prefer forming their judgment on the official documents of that officer, rather than upon the statements of the acute ex-collector and powerful reasoner before us; however accurate, splendid, or luminous, those statements may appear in his own eyes; for this man, like another NARCISSUS, seems to be continually falling in love with his own image, though, unfortunately, he is not half so pretty as a daffodil.

After all, however, we must confess that the sum of £239,580, is enough to make even a British Chancellor of the Exchequer prick up his ears, and it looks so snug a sum, and sounds so well in these hard times, that we own we are very sorry to part with it, even to those we so greatly respect as the Governor and his officers.

But we must say a little more on the subject of fees, about which such a fuss, and hubbub, has been raised, not for the information of this miserable writer, (for he is wholly undeserving any attention from those who consider him not merely as a simple lunatic, but something of a worse description,) but for those who may have suffered their minds to be biassed in any degree by the false statements we have considered it our duty thus to expose.

We think that we have sufficiently shewn, by matter of fact, by the example of the Newcastle District, and by the superior authorities at York; that, so far from there being any surplus, arising to Government, from the receipt of fees, the reverse is clearly demonstrable, by reason of the large Grants being so very, very few; and the small gratuitous grants being so many.

The sum of £239,580, appears so well in figures, printed with a good type, on fine paper, that we must again express our sorrow it should so quickly vanish before the torch of truth especially as its rapid evaporation into thin air, "like the baseless fabric of a vision," and leaving not a wreck behind, would a sous, be likely to be of serious consequence to a class of people for whose welfare we have a tender concern, and sincere regard, the poorer emigrants. But what a world of "Family Bibles" and "Prayer Books," those "sacred gifts of their parents, (to say nothing of their clothes,) must those poor unfortunates have pawned, or sold, to make up the sum of £239 580!! Surely the Bible Society will have no occasion to send any of those sacred volumes to York, or even to the Province, for an immense length of time to come, and his EXCELLENCY the LIEUT. GOVERNOR, and his officers, must have a library of bibles alone, nearly equal to the famous collection belonging to a certain German Prince, who has boasted of having 20,000 different editions.

It must certainly be a very hard thing to part with Family Bibles, and Prayer Books; but as we know the GOVERNOR to be a warm friend to the dissemination of the scriptures, we have no doubt he will take care that all the bibles taken for fees, shall be restored, or at least lent, to the original owners on Sundays. What we most lament, as we happen to know something of the look," is the want of clothes. The ragged dress of a poor fellow who, perhaps, had never had an axe in his hand, in the whole course of his life, standing without clothes, up to his breach in snow, chopping at trees almost as thickly set as the hairs of his own head, and sometimes larger than anplings, in the depth of winter, is enough to give an alderman an ague! but, alas, what would be the extacy of this ana-calathe in summer? especially if he had chanced to locate a swamp, or some drowned land? it is true the musketoes might rejoice while the poor man exhausted, and toughed, and the chopping went slowly forward; but it would be no fun for the patient, who must shortly dance himself into a fever, and exhibit a gesticulation ten thousand times more fierce and imposing than the famous dance of St Vitus. We would certainly recommend an emigrant to retain all the "sacred gifts of his parents," and his breeches in as regular and quiet manner as he can put up with the free gift of 80 acres—than run such terrible risks in order to obtain 200 acres. Ambition is at all times a dangerous passion; but, according to the statement of our author, to give way to it in this instance, can only have the effect of procuring cold nights in winter and of listening musquitoes, a tribe of animals we all wish to see exterminated, to whom?

But as our author may not be given to merriment, we will be a little more serious and put the plain, simple question to him—Does he, when in his sober senses, really believe, that all the Emigrants put together, rich and poor, low and high, stage, within the last two or three years, have brought the sum of £239,580 to this Province, or even half the amount? If he can really believe so great an improbability, he is not fit for rational intercourse, and we might rather to pity him as an incurable lunatic, than be indignant, or angry with him for being so great a liar

Instead of there being any overplus, we have much cause to fear, that the fees in the larger grants will not prove sufficient to enable Government to continue the gratuitous grants of 50 Acres. Yet, we earnestly desire that a system which has proved so beneficial to such numbers of needy people, who have so gratefully received these grants, will not be hastily abandoned; we would rather see a little more taxed, gratuitously added; so as to do away with the only objection that can, with any shadow of reason, be advanced against them; the fear of a want of fuel in a few years! If it is considered, as it probably is, and will be, that fees operate as a species of taxation, the wish may be general that the burden, if a burden it is, should fall upon those shoulders that are the best able to bear it, the affluent, or those whose means cannot be materially injured by supporting it, while the poor and needy go free. The system itself, is an excellent one, and is fraught with wisdom, and the most beneficial consequences, as experience will very shortly demonstrate, beyond the reach of cavil or gainsayers, and we will say to the author, or authors of that system, go on and prosper, a blessing must attend your exertions towards the permanent prosperity of this country.

Before we conclude this stricture we will just observe that, although it is affected to despise the gratuitous grants of 50 acres, very probably because they are gratuitous, almost innumerable instances of persons thriving on smaller farms, without travelling homewards, either to England, Scotland, or Ireland, may be found. In Lower Canada, the hundred seigneuries, equal to about 90 English acres, is often subdivided into four farms, each of which maintains a thriving family. But, if we were to go to England, we could shew that some of the most INDEPENDENT FREEHOLDERS, men who have often turned the scale in favour or ratio out freedom on public questions, are small proprietors; for example, let the inquirer look into the rich and beautiful dales of the north-western parts of Yorkshire, of Lancashire, of Westmoreland, and of Cumberland. But enough; amplification is sometimes tedious, seldom necessary.

GREAT BRITAIN.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—22d APRIL.

Disturbances in Ireland.

Mr. Goulburn, Secretary of State for Ireland, replied to the speech of Sir John Newport, respecting the cause of the late disturbances in that country. Mr. Goulburn remarked that the Right Hon Baronet (Sir John Newport) appeared to attribute the evils to three main causes—the first of which was the long misgovernment of that country; the second, the large revenue raised in it; and the third, the system of tythes. Mr. G also remarked that the Right Hon Baronet had superadded another cause, the Roman Catholic disabilities, but in his opinion the Catholic question, important as it was, had nothing to do with the late disturbances, which had neither originated in or depended upon the settlement of that question, although there might have been indications of religious feelings on the part of those who were engaged in them. He remarked—"with respect to the long misgovernment of Ireland he was by no means disposed to deny what every one who knew any thing of the history and condition of Ireland, was perfectly aware of, that the early misgovernment of that country, or rather the course which was adopted on its conquest was one of the main causes of all the evils that had since occurred. The conquest of Ireland had been conducted on principles more adverse to the happiness of the people than any event of a similar nature that has occurred in the history of the world. No attempt had been made to conciliate the conquered, or to amalgamate them with the conquerors. On the contrary, the policy which had been pursued was to keep the two parties distinct and separate; thereby laying the foundation of that bitter animosity which had been handed down from father to son, and which at that very moment pervaded the minds of the great body of the Irish peasantry. In support of that opinion he need only refer the house to those domestic and familiar songs and tales in which the Irish peasant continued to harp with fondness on the period when the English name was unknown in Ireland, when she was the glory of the world, superior to all the countries by which she was surrounded. To this very moment the conduct which had been pursued on the conquest of Ireland, was referred to in that country as a just ground for hatred of the existing government."

South American Independence.

On the 1st of May, Sir J. Mackintosh enquired of the Marquis of Londonderry whether his Majesty's Government had formally recognised the independent Republics which had been established in that portion of South America which formerly belonged to Spain; or whether that country had entered into any regular intercourse or correspondence with them, which would imply such a recognition; and if not whether it was in contemplation of the Government to do either?

The Marquis replied that the British Government had not recognised the independence, but that in whatever communications the British Government had had with them, they had been treated as governments de facto. His Lordship further remarked—"we looked upon the parties at war in that quarter of the world as belligerents: we respected their rights as such; and our naval force, in the adjoining seas, did not interfere with their blockade. As to commercial intercourse with them, it would be found to be provided for by the bill of his right hon. friend. (Mr. F. Robinson) on the subject of foreign trade."

Sir J. Mackintosh said, it was not his intention to proceed, or call for any general statement on the subject of the political situation of those states. It was known that South America had been for a long time divided by parties, in a state of civil war; and during that time, the rights of each party to the possessions they then occupied was not interfered with. But the United States were about to recognise the independence—a communication to that effect having been made to Congress.—This was an important consideration and deserved attention.

The Marquis of Londonderry said these matters were pressed upon Government too soon. He had not heard that the United States had recognised the independence of those governments, but he had heard that a measure of this nature had been recommended to the Legislature of the United States, upon which it had not yet decided.—He perceived that Honorable Members opposite were too ready to catch at reports or rumours, and to found questions regarding them which were only calculated to embarrass the government.

Sir J. Mackintosh said he did not wish to be misunderstood. He had not said that the Government of the United States had recognized the independence of the Governments of South America, but that they almost recognized them having a measure of that nature proposed by their president, the assent to which might very probably be brought by the next packet from America.

Here the conversation dropped.

Lord Norberry brought forward a motion, on the 2d. for an address to the Crown to abolish the office of one of the Postmasters General, thereby saving the salary to the public.

A warm debate ensued, and the question was finally carried on a division, by a majority of 15.—The decision was received with loud cheers.

Lord Londonderry delivered a reply from the King next day, in which he says he will forthwith order the discontinuance of the salary of one of the Postmasters General. He at the same time stated he should postpone the abolition of one of the Postmasters until he should have had an opportunity of considering what permanent arrangements might be advisable for conducting that business.

Friday, May 3d.

The discussion of the agricultural resolutions was postponed to Monday, with an understanding that only that part of the question which relates to the mere business of Foreign corn should then be taken up.

The Report of the Committee on the Resolutions for the payment of Naval and Military Pensions was brought up.

Mr. Bernal opposed the plan.

General Gascoyne thought the details complicated, but had no objection to the principle.

The first four resolutions were carried without a division. On the 5th,

Mr. Hume moved an amendment, to the effect that the contract should be made with the Commissioners to the Sinking Fund. Without this the public would be losing to the amount of the contractor's profit.

Mr. Cripps and Mr. T Wilson spoke in favor of the original resolution. Mr. Whitmore, Mr. J. Martin, and Mr. Ricardo, approved of the amendment.

Mr Brougham went into a detail of figures to shew the injurious operation of the proposed plan as compared with the straight forward course of taking the money at once from the Sinking Fund. He would impress upon the House how gross an absurdity it was which they were called upon to sanction: and what ridicule and just censure it would entail upon them out of doors. They were taking £5,000,000 and putting it into a chest, in order that it might accumulate for the payment of a debt at the end of a certain period. In one and the same moment they borrowed the same sum as they had put into the chest, but at a great disadvantage. They were going into debt as lenders and as borrowers While they were perplexed how they should dispose of the money they had to lend, (a laugh) and ultimately lend it at a great advantage—to the borrower; they were borrowing the same sum at a signal advantage to the lender. They were taking special care that the benefit should be all to the contractors, and in short, upholding an absurdity of that kind, that the man in private life who should suggest such a principle, would stand a chance of being conveyed to Bedlam, rather than to his own mansion. (a laugh.)

Mr. Vansittart repeated his former arguments in favor of the plan.

After some observations against the amendment by Mr. Jones and Mr. Dennis Browne, and in support of it, by Mr. J. P. Grant and Mr. H. G. Bennett, it was negatived by 135 to 56. The original resolution was then agreed to.

THE KING'S VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

Mr. Mash of the Lord Chamberlain's Office, has had orders to go to Holyrood House, to prepare it for a visit from the King for next year. Special directions were given not to meddle with the room which was occupied by the Earl of Darnley, the husband of the unhappy Queen Mary: and we understand that a like interest has been expressed concerning a room in which James I. (from whom it is well known the Brunswick family descended) was born.

London, May 5.

THE FUNDS.

Saturday.—Message to the Stock Exchange.—At a quarter before one o'clock to-day, Mr. Bros, from the Bank of England, communicated to the Stock Exchange the following notice received by the Bank of England, respecting the new plan of government for the payment of pensions.

Fife-house, May 4th, 1822.

Gentlemen—We request that you will be so good as to cause notice to be given in the usual manner, that on Tuesday next at twelve o'clock, we shall be ready to see at the Treasury Chambers, such parties as may be disposed to enter into a contract conformably to the Resolution agreed to by the House of Commons on the 3d of May. We are, gentlemen your most obedient humble servants.

(Signed) LIVERPOOL,
N. VANSITT ART.

To the Governor and Deputy Governor of the Bank of England.

Immediately after this communication was read, Consols for account which had, during the morning remained pretty stationary at 79 1-8 and 1-4, suddenly fell to 78 7-8 and before half past one, declined to 78 3-8, and for money 78 1-2 but afterwards recovered a little from the panic. Much fluctuation is looked for on Monday and Tuesday next, until the terms of the contract shall be made known. Besides persons from the Stock exchange it is probable that many others will attend at Fife-house on Tuesday.

The London papers of the 5th May state, that according to private advices from Vienna, an official communication has been made from St. Petersburg to the court of Austria, indicating on the part of the Emperor Alexander, the most pacific sentiments and a perfect acquiescence in the proposals submitted to him by the mediating powers for the preserving the peace of Europe. Messengers, it is added, were immediately dispatched by the Austrian government to convey the agreeable intelligence to the different courts of Europe which have taken an interest in the negociations. It is believed that the matter in dispute will be referred to a Congress.

A meeting was held in London on the 7th of May to consider of the most effectual means of relieving the wants of the peasantry in the South and West of Ireland.

All accounts from Yorkshire, particularly from Huddersfield, agree that the manufacturers were never better off or in fuller employ. Every thing there is quiet, and no discontent.

A public meeting was called at Bath to relieve the peasantry of Ireland.

It is stated that Mr. Canning will proceed to India in the Jupiter 54 gun ship, Capt. Thomas Briggs.

The Active, 44, was on the eve of sailing from Portsmouth for Dominica, with the Earl of Huntingdon, as Governor of that place.

It is rumoured that the salt tax will be abolished by Ministers, should the measure of commuting the Half-pay allowances and pensions succeed.

DUEL IN HIGH LIFE.

The higher circle at the West End of the Town were thrown into an unusual bustle on Thursday, in consequence of a duel having taken place, in the course of the morning, between the Dukes of Bedford and Buckingham. The affair is said to have originated in the following observations delivered by the Duke of Bedford, at the late County of Bedford Meeting, on the subject of agricultural distress:—

"He would now advert to another transaction, which he was almost ashamed to mention; he alluded to a great borough proprietor, now a noble Duke, late a noble Marquis, whose services, and the services of whose adherents in Parliament had been purchased by government, had been purchased by conferring high offices on those adherents. It was an odious task to mention those circumstances, but he introduced them for the purpose of asking whether if a Reform had been effected in Parliament, such transactions could possibly happen? The noble Duke's family and connections were, of course, sent back to their constituents, when they accepted of place; because by the Act of Parliament, it was provided, that when a member of the House of Commons took an office under Government, he must return to his constituents to know whether they would or would not re elect them—no, they were sent back to the borough proprietor—to their own patron, to the person who had engaged in the corrupt traffic—who had, in fact, made the bargain with Ministers. He would again ask could such a circumstance possibly occur, if a Reform were effected in the Commons House of Parliament."

It seems that the Duke of Buckingham took umbrage at these observations which, if it must be confessed, are somewhat strong) and personally demanded that his Grace of Bedford should retract them as publicly as they had been promulgated The noble Duke peremptorily refused to accede to this demand, and a challenge was the consequence At half past seven o'clock on Thursday morning the Duke of Bedford left his house in St. James' square, in a private carriage, accompanied by Lord Lynedock, and drove directly to Kensington Gardens, where the Duke of Buckingham arrived about the same time, at a retired spot, previously agreed upon, and attended by Sir Watkins William Wynn A chirurgical professor of eminence, it is said, was also in attendance upon either party. The ground was measured by the seconds at 12 paces, and on a signal given, the parties presented, but the Duke of Buckingham only fired; and his shot not taking effect, the Duke of Bedford instantly discharged his pistol in the air, upon which the Duke of Buckingham advanced towards his Grace, and said "My Lord Duke, your Grace is the last man existence I would wish to quarrel with; but you must be well aware, that the life of a public man is not worth preserving, unless it be preserved with honour." Whereupon the Duke of Bedford promptly replied, that upon his honor he meant no personal offence to the Duke of Buckingham in the words he had used, nor did he mean to impute to him, personally, any bad or corrupt motives whatever.—Their Lordships then shook hands, and the business was terminated most satisfactorily.

IRELAND.

The Courier of the 6th says, "The accounts from Ireland to-day, which will be found in a preceding column, gave a melancholy confirmation of all that has hitherto been related of the distress which prevails in particular counties. The details (and authentic ones they may be considered we fear,) from the County of Clare, exhibit a picture of wretchedness which needs only to be known to command relief. We look forward with anxious impatience, to the result of to-morrow's Meeting in the City; but meanwhile it is gratifying to know, that the benevolent are at work in various directions. A letter which we have received this morning from Gloucester, mentions that a subscription had been opened for the "immediate relief" of the suffering Irish peasantry. We have no doubt the example will be followed by cities and towns, and the consoling reflection therefore may be safely indulged that, ere long, relief will flow through so many channels to its distressed objects, that all anxiety as to their future condition, may be dismissed."

Liberal subscriptions were making for the distressed Irish, and the Lord Lieutenant had appointed Commissioners for purchasing and distributing provisions among them.—The insurgents, evidently urged on by want, were continuing their lawless depredations in some of the counties.

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

DISTURBANCES IN IRELAND.

The memorials upon the state of Ireland, and upon the actual causes of its internal disorders, comprehend a long list of grievances—the principal of which are, absenteeship, disproportionate rents, the want of all poor laws, the comparatively defective state of industry, illicit distillation, the uneducated state of the poor, superabundance of population, and the want of employment. To which may be added, as two of these heads of complaint in point of fact, whether just or unjust, the inefficiency of the local magistracy and police, and the want of a permanent insurrection act.

The first complaint, therefore, according to these channels of representation, is the mischief of absenteeship, as it is termed, by which they mean the non-residence of the landed proprietors, and which non-residence some of the memorialists most absurdly impute to government. In considering this complaint, his Majesty's ministers doubtless saw, that the question distributed itself into two points of enquiry—the first, was it a mischief, and to what extent—and secondly, did it admit of any remedy on the part of government.

As to the first of these points, they were probably forced to conclude, that, under the peculiar circumstances of Ireland, the question admitted of no doubt. It could not avoid their observation, that absenteeship, existed to a most enormous extent, and that it was, and is, productive in a very great degree, of the continuing misery and distress of the people. In a rich, active, and industrious country like England, where agriculture, commerce and manufactures exist in such an extent as to afford occupation to the population, in a ratio nearly co-extensive with its amount, the absence of a few hundred landed proprietors is of no national importance. They are not the chief customers of the national agriculture, commerce, and manufactures. England works for the civilized world, and not merely for its own country gentlemen. Accordingly, the casual absenteeism of English gentlemen, in the course of their travelling, or long abode abroad, is totally without effect upon the large subject matter of English consumption. The withdrawing of their expenditure is like the abstraction of a drop from the running stream, and in national consideration, is wholly without any momentary importance. But, in a country like Ireland, where there is so little of commerce and manufactures, and a most imperfect and narrow agriculture, the system of absenteeship is necessarily productive of extensive mischief. In the absence of the natural protectors, benefactors, and sole employers of the great body of the nation. It is the withdrawing of a large demand for labor, from a country which requires that demand in every possible shape. It reduces, and has reduced, the Irish poor to a similar state with what was the condition of the English poor in the age of Henry the 8th, and in the early part of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, when the suppression of the monasteries turned them loose upon the nation at large, and rendered necessary the enactment of the poor laws. It spreads hopeless poverty, irremediable ignorance, and barbarous ferocity, through the population. It substitutes the interested overseer, the avaricious, or at least, trading middleman, the ignorant, and therefore comparatively unfeeling factor and agent, for country gentlemen and landlords, whose interests, education, and habits, would lead them to the improvement and assistance of their tenants, and of the peasantry in their neighborhood or estates. It nearly eradicates charity, the last refuge of the poor and miserable. As regards this head of complaint, and its extent upon Ireland, it can scarcely therefore be contended, that the complaints of absentee landlords, and the evils thereby caused, are overcharged.

The next alleged evil in these memorials was in the oppression of the poor tenants, and the poor in general, by rents enormously disproportionate to the value of the land. This, up to a certain extent, is true, and is likewise a prevalent evil in the condition of the Irish. In England the price of labor, and the wages of all kinds of industry, necessarily keep down the price of land to the level of its actual worth, and accordingly, as we see under present circumstances, any demand of extravagant rents would speedily find—no one would give it. The answer would be, I make more by my daily labor as a husbandman, a manufacturer, or an artizan. But in Ireland, where there is no such demand for labor in agriculture, manufactures, or internal industry, the poor laborer has no choice—he must procure his quarter of an acre of ground for potatoes, or he must starve. Every poor husbandman is in the same need and in the same condition—they accordingly, bid each against the other, and their necessity and their competition have enormously increased the price of land. Again, as population always keeps pace with the quantity of food upon which the can be sustained, and as an acre of potatoes does ever miserable such kind of food may be) will feed twice the number of human beings which an acre of wheat will feed, the Irish poor give on daily increasing and more distressed objects are daily growing up to his agonized view already in the market, and to effect still further this ominous subdivision of the land into small portions and patches. Every potatoe, in fact, thus produces a new family, every member of a family a new patch, and so on. Hence an enormous population, and an enormous rent for these small divisions. Hence a country covered with beggars—a complete pauper warren. Under this head of grievance it was equally impossible to insist that the statement was marked overcharged—but what remedy did this admit on the part of government? If, by the fundamental principles of our constitution, every individual amongst us is the uncontrolled master of his own person, except when the state requires its service under an obligation common to all classes of subjects, still more is he master of his own property. A particular law against personal liberty, or a particular statute against the unqualified dominion of a proprietor over his own property would be like an invasion of the first principles of our constitution. Under these principles, the two first heads of complaint—absenteeism and high rent—admitted but the same answer; they belong to manners, and not to laws: to the native, local gentry, and not to the United Parliament.

The third alleged cause is the want of employment and of capital, the absence of almost all manufactures but linen, and the comparatively defective state of industry. It was equally impossible to deny the existence of this head of causes, but it is at least equally absurd to insinuate the existence of this condition to government. In England, the employment of the poor is distributed through agriculture, commerce, manufactures, internal trade, the mechanic arts, and the supply of the large consumption of a highly civilized, rich and luxurious people. The circulating capital of the country may possibly employ about three fourths of its laboring population; the income of accumulated capital, expended only in consumption, affords nearly a full employment to the remainder. In Ireland, the whole of capital employed in trade is assuredly very little; and the amount of income from capital formerly accumulated of the fruits of savings from large incomes, bears a very small proportion to the same species of income in England. While the population of Ireland is nearly one half of that of England, the consumption of Ireland of all articles of elegance, convenience, and luxury, is less than one tenth of that of England. The gross actual receipt of the excise for England, in the year ending the 5th of January 1822 was upwards of twenty seven millions: whilst the same receipt for Ireland was little more than one million nine hundred thousand pounds. It is true that the excise of the two countries does not comprehend entirely the same articles, or in many cases the same duties; but there is nearly the same disproportion of one to ten, if the produce of the same commodity in one country be compared with its produce in the other. It is therefore perfectly true that Ireland contains at once a great redundant population, and a very inadequate employment for its laboring classes. The unfortunate system of subdividing the land, in some of the counties, into an infinite number of small tenements, is the undoubted cause of the redundant population.—Every acre is thus made to support twice as many mouths as it can miserably feed. In the inconsiderate language of her best poet, every rood of land maintains its man. Hence a defect of agricultural capital, and hence likewise, as unhappily proved by experience, all the possible temptation to idle, and vagabond habits in the Irish poor, from the absence of the necessity of the owners of these tenements and their families to procure the food of the day by the labor of the day. May the exam le prove a salutary lesson to England of the minute subdivision of the soil, and of the absurdity of the loose and idle declamation, which would relieve the current distress of the poor by distributing among them the wastes and commons of the country.

It was impossible therefore to deny the justice of this head of complaint; but what remedy does it admit on the part of government? Is England to supply capital for the Irish manufacturers and agriculturists? Would the supply of such capital be of any effect under the actual condition of the Irish? Is money wanting, or is trade wanting? But do we not in fact actually contribute a portion of this capital? At whose cost are the linen bounties paid? To whom is Ireland indebted for the continuation of this tax, but to the United Kingdom, for her peculiar benefit? In aid of whose manufactures do we further violate every just principle of commercial policy, by a continuation of the transit duties on foreign linen? Upon what principle, except upon that of a free gift to a sister kingdom, can the imposition of such duties, operating as general restraints upon trade, be justified? It is not in fact so much given to Ireland by England? The Scotch poor are assisted by the sums voted for the completion of the Caledonian Canal, and public works in Scotland. The Irish poor are assisted by the linen bounties, and transit duty on foreign linen.

Nor should it be omitted under this head, that the Irish poor are further assisted by several distinct acts for the improvement and extension of the fisheries on the coast of Ireland. The first and principle of these acts the 36th Geo. III has been continued and extended by the 59th of the same king. Whilst the progress of just commercial principles has induced the government and legislature of Great Britain to relieve themselves as much as possible of the system of bounties; whilst in some branches of our peculiar industry these bounties have entirely ceased, and in others are gradually reducing, such favor has been afforded to the particular condition of the laboring class in Ireland that while some of them, the ancient bounties are still continued, and others have been recently superadded and augmented.

It has never escaped the Parliament of Great Britain, that under the erroneous principles of ancestors a century back, Ireland was called upon to sacrifice her incipient woollen trade, and that the parliament of England then contracted an obligation to favor her linen manufactures. In discharge of this obligation we have always given an exclusive support to this staple manufacture of the sister kingdom. It is unnecessary to call to the remembrance of the Irish manufacturers what difficulty our merchants have to encounter in forcing the Irish linens on the South American markets, and how are only the English government has been solicited to make such a change in the present system as would admit the exportation of assorted cargoes.

The next cause of complaint is the absence of all poor laws. As a cause of distress, there can be no doubt that it is justly alledged; but, under the experience of the effect of these laws in our own country, there can surely be no encouragement to extend that same system to Ireland. But the absence of all provision of this kind unquestionably aggravates the condition of the Irish poor. They are not only miserably poor, but poor without refuge. They have no resort but in mendicance and vagrancy. Hence another fertile source of informal associations, and hence that clannish and conspirative spirit common to the Irish of the present day, and to the Scottish of former times. Without fixed residence, without a home, without a parish, and without any circumstance to render them local, or to attach them to a particular spot, they have a natural propensity to herd together in masses, and to form those irregular brotherhoods and societies by which the peace of Ireland is continually assailed. Doubtless this is a very unhappy condition of society; but what remedy does it admit? Will it add one of those general states arising from remote circumstances long continuety which can only be cured by the gradual influence of equal laws, regular government, and by the example and infusion of a more disciplined people? What just justice is this barbarous state of the Irish poor (if so it must be called) to be imputed to the government of England, whose manifest and unquestionable interest it is to remedy it, and who, by local institutions and general laws have attempted to do so. But the effect of centuries is not to be cured by the regulations of a day; it is totally impossible to civilize people by act of Parliament. All that can be done is done. To the sacrifice of our own interest we consume nearly exclusively the peculiar manufacture of Ireland. In dispute of the jealousy of our landed interest, we admit her corn of all kinds equally with that of our own countries. We know of no distinction between English and Irish industry. We confine and limit to her the West Indian market. We force her commodities upon South America. We provoke remaining prohibitions from the Northern lands by the exclusive admission of her butter and provision trade. To say in a word, we foster a trade which will not be fostered; we cherish and invite the augmentation of her existing manufactures, and the origination of others, but unhappily we cherish and invite in vain. But to put this question in the strongest point of view—The exports of Ireland, for the year ending January 5th, 1821, to England and all parts of the world, amounted to seven millions; of which England alone took more than six millions, and the remainder was the amount of her total exportation to all other quarters of the globe. Such unhappily is the comparative state of English and Irish industry; an effect from causes too deeply rooted to admit of any sudden cure.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Russia and Turkey.

It is stated in Galignani's Paris journal, of the 2d May, "that the Russian army have crossed the Pruth at several points." Such a movement can only be regarded as an indication of the determination of Alexander, to obtain by force what he had failed to accomplish by negotiation. In the same paper we find it stated, that the Emperor of Russia had "arrived at Minsk, the head quarters of the Imperial guard;" while the Turks are represented as continuing "to make preparations for defence in Moldavia and Wallachia," as having laid an embargo at Constantinople upon all Turkish vessels trading at the mouth of the Danube, and that the European families were gradually leaving the Turkish capital. Formerly, such prominent circumstances used to be regarded as unequivocal symptoms of the approach of hostilities, the more especially if accounts, as in the present case of a similar tendency, were reiterated from various quarters. It seems, however, that different rules of judging have now been established, and that what did and might seem to us indications of war, ought to be regarded as proofs of the reverse. As we do not profess to understand the ground work of this reasoning, and have no wish to puzzle ourselves about it, we shall leave the decision of the question to events; premising, however, that if the Emperor Alexander agrees to sign a treaty with the Porte without obtaining large concessions from that power, we shall be ready to acknowledge that we have been altogether mistaken as to the policy of the Russian cabinet.

An article from Alexandria of March 20th, states that the Turkish fleet had arrived there after having landed troops at Modon and Patras. The greater part of the ships sailed into the harbor, while a violent snow storm arose; the larger vessels anchored in the new harbor; but scarcely had the whole fleet entered when the fury of the storm increased, and did great damage. A Barbary Corvette stranded on the sand banks; another ship of Tripoli had the same fate at the entrance of the new Canal of Machomondi. The storm broke the cables of the Admiral's ship, the Viceroy, and drove it against the walls of the fort, where it was dashed to pieces. A frigate, belonging to the Sultan, sunk near the Rosetta, and it is feared that others of the fleet which had not come in may have experienced the same fate.

Description of a Turkish Imperial Army of contingents require from the Vaizers, Pachas, or the Governors of Provinces; written by an eye-witness.

The most accurate notion which can be formed of a Turkish Imperial Army of Provincial contingent troops, (if troops they deserve to be called,) must be obtained by comparing them with those bands of armed pilgrims, who in days of yore, traversed Europe from various countries to St. Jago of Compostella, or our Lady of the Pillar, at Saragosa, to the holy house of Loretto, &c. &c. regulating and animating their march by hymns and litanies, their devotions uninterrupted, excepting when some traveller was to be stript, some village to be plundered and burnt. But instead of long trains of peregrinators adorned with crosses and cockle shells, the Ottoman army exhibits Mahomtan monks in party-colored caps and garments, mounted as a mark of humility, on asses; marching at the head of tumultuary columns, flourishing the flags of the prophet, and vociferating prayers and imprecations with all their might. Behind these appear the Delis, or select horsemen, who scour and plunder the country over every side. Then follow the Timariots, or national cavalry, mounted on horseback or mules, which they are bound to provide: but rarely indeed in any other way than at the expence of the lawful owners, who fall in their route; furnished with packsaddles and ropes for stirrops. Last advance the infantry, once the glory of an Ottoman army, but now held as the meanest body in their service. Armed with guns without bayonets, with enormous horse pistols and massy daggers, they press forward in confused crowds, raising clouds of dust as numerous flocks of sheep hurried on by their shepherds. —Behind this infantry come the bagas, or artillery, their guns dragged along by buffaloes, or by Christian slaves equally under the lash.

The rear of this strange association of barbarians of various countries, languages, and habits of life; some shouting and singing aloud, others firing off their pistols in the air: is closed by commanders of different ranks, superbly apparelled, and surrounded by multitudes of insolent attendants and servants liberally exercising their cudgels on all who do not keep a respectful distance from their haughty masters. Notwithstanding their brutality, yet it is under the protection of these attendants that the Greek sutlers and canteeners, the Jew furnishers of clothing, old or new, the gypsey blacksmiths, conjurers, and fortune tellers, poultry stealers, and when requisite, executioners place themselves.

No Turkish army ever takes the field without Jewish contractors and furnishers; for they supply the Spahis and Timariots with barley for their horses, and bread-corn for the men; unless the army be to remain for some time in one position; when the surrounding country, friend or foe, is equally laid under contribution.

When on a march, the army halts for the night, and the attendants are employed to set up tents for the commanders; the bazaars, or markets, are opened in various parts of the camp. The scouring parties produce the sheep, &c. they have stolen: the gypsies open their packs of poultry, often suffocated by the sulphur burnt under the trees or roots to bring them down; the sutlers and coffee-men display their stores and stoves, the Jews their scales for exchange or money; the soldiers sing to the sound of their lute; the serasikier or commander holds his court; the great men give and receive visits of ceremony; but all this time no outpost, not even a sentinel, is appointed, every one lays himself down to rest under the protection of that fatality in which the essence of Mahometanism consists.

There was a report at Paris on the 2d of May, that a Spanish force was forming in Arragon and Catalonia, of infantry, cavalry and artillery, "equal to that of the French Sanitary Cordon."

The French Legislative body closed on the 30th of May, to meet again the 4th of June.

A Paris paper remarks, that there is no news of an authentic character respecting Russia & Turkey.

Mails from Hamburgh, Holland, Flanders and France, arrived in London on the 6th May. The complexion of the accounts furnished by them were decidedly of a pacific nature; not the smallest fear of a rupture between Russia and Turkey seemed to exist in the minds of intelligent men in the cities of the continent.

An article from Vienna, under date of April 20, says that the public attention had been excited in consequence of frequent conferences between the French Ambassador, Prince Metternich and Baron Stutmer, Director of the Chancery of Foreign Affairs.

The affairs of the Greeks appear by all accounts, to be in a prosperous state. After several hard fought battles on the island of Negropont, they have succeeded in driving out the Turks from that important island, and, in other respects, have obtained considerable advantages over the followers of Mahomet. We have already given the substance of the constitution, formed by the provisional government at Argos. It now appears that this body has removed its sittings to Corinth, the centre of Greece, and possessing many advantages from its natural fortifications, besides having the command of the two seas which wash its walls, and by which the government can have more direct communication with the islands and a l parts of the interior.

An article from Copenhagen dated the 27th of April, says—"In the memory of man there was never so much damage done by storms as in the last winter.—It is calculated that about 2000 ships and 20,000 men, have perished on the several coasts of Europe, of which 250 ships and 2,500 men were lost on the Danish coast alone."

Miscellaneous Notices.

Lord Byron.—The king of England has granted to the Right Hon. George Gordon, Baron Byron, and to Anne Isabella, Baroness Byron, his wife, the licence to use the surname and bear the arms of Noel only, and that the said Baron Byron may subscribe the said surname of Noel before all titles of honor.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Clarence is in a way to compensate the loss sustained in the death of her late infant daughter, Princess Elizabeth.—Sunday Paper.

Robert Burns.—The public will be gratified to learn, that Mr. Flaxman has produced a model of a statue to be erected to the memory of Robert Burns which has been approved of by the Committee. The poet is represented in his native costume, in the attitude of contemplative reflection; in his right hand is placed the mountain daisy, emblematical of one of his sweetest poems; in his left he holds a roll, on which are engraved the words—"Cotters Saturday Night," a poem equally remarkable for its genuine piety and poetical simplicity. The likeness to Burns is very striking, being executed from the original portrait by Nasmith procured for the occasion by Mr. Flaxman from the venerable widow of the bard. The statue, which is to be colossal, and of bronze, will be placed in one of the most appropriate situations in the New Town of Edinburgh.

The 58th regiment had arrived at Gosport from Jamaica, West Indies. This regiment left Ireland in 1816, and have lost since that time 5 officers, 530 men, 110 women, and 200 children, nearly the whole of whom were carried off by the local fevers of Jamaica.

A ludicrous circumstance occurred at an Irish wedding in Dumfries one evening last week.—After the nuptial knot had been tied, and amidst libations of the mountain dew distributed to a numerous party assembled on the occasion, two Hibernians (formerly lovers of the bride) being doubly inspired by the enlivening spirit, determined, in their frolicsome humour, to disappoint the bridegroom, for one night at least, of the company of his dear Judy, and proceeded forthwith to lay violent hands upon her. This conduct, as might naturally be expected, produced a loud remonstrance from their justy of feuded host, who, uniting "the action to the word" dealt about several blows with no sparing hand. A complete row ensued, the visitors having ranged themselves on different sides, and some tremendous hits were exchanged with true Irish humor. In the midst of the affray, and fortunately before any serious consequences had taken place—the day lights of a few adorning my darken d—the police interfered and seized the unlucky cause of the quarrel, whose clamorous cries (from having, probably, got too much of the cratur) indicated them to be of a most obstreperous cast. The offender was borne off to "durance vile," amid the tears, sighs and groans of her honest Pat, who would willingly have agreed to spend even there the honey moon.

The unknown Man.—It will be recollected that the Constitutional Bridge street Gang, some time ago, apprehended a shopman of Carlisle's, for selling the Republican; but, not choosing to declare his name, to which the prosecutors had no clew, he was, when brought up, remanded until he should do so. After being in prison for four months, he was, on Friday last, again put to the Bar of the Old Bailey; and persisting in the denial of his cognomen, was again remanded.

Miles Colvine, the Cumberland Mariner.

On the English side of the sea of Solway, for a long line of flat and cultivated coast, where the sea foul find refuge from the guns of the fowler, and which, save the headland and the deep sea, presents but one object of attraction, namely, the cottage of Miles Colvine the Cumberland mariner. The owner of this rude dwelling, once a seaman, a soldier, a scholar and a gentleman, was shipwrecked on the coast about thirty years ago, and was the only living soul that escaped from the fatal storm. The vessel was from a foreign land, and something mysterious always hung over her fate and the destiny of her crew. The wreck of Miles Colvine was less likely to remain than confirm suspicion. He heard all enquiries concerning the ship and crew in perfect tranquility and silence, and once only he deigned to answer, when a shepherd asked, "if the blood of beasts was upon the deck?"—"No it was the blood of men." From this time forward, all further intercourse was courted by the peasantry, and he was allowed to construct a small hut, fence it round with a wall of loose stone, and occupy it without molestation. He seemed anxious to shun all intercourse with human beings, and sought and found his subsistence in the sea; for it was the common remark of the Allonby fishermen, that no man dipped a hook, or wetted a net, between Skinburness and Saint Bees, with greater skill and success. In this solitude, extending to every storm that swept the beach from year to year, and much seeming privation and wretchedness, he remained during a summer and autumn; winter, a season of great severity on an undefended coast, was expected either to destroy or drive him from his abode, but he braved every storm, and resisted all offers of food or raiment.

The first winter of his abode was one of prodigious storm and infinite hardship. The snow lay long and deep on the ground, the ice was thick on lake and pool, and the Solway presented one continual scene of commotion and distress. The shore was covered with the wrecks of ships, the eddies chocked with drowned men, and the sea itself so rough and boisterous that the fishermen suspended their customary labours, and sat with their families at the hearth fire, listening to the sounding of the surge, and relating tales of maritime disaster and shipwreck. But on Miles Colvine the severe and continued storm seemed to have no influence. He ranged the shore, collecting for his fire the wrecks of ships; he committed his nets and hooks to the sea with his usual skill; and having found a shed of boat, which belonged to some unfortunate vessel, he obtained command over the element most congenial to his heart, and wandered about on the bosom of the waters noon and night, more like a troubled spirit than a human being. When the severity of the winter had passed away, and sea birds laid their eggs in the sand, the mariner remitted his excursions at sea, and commenced a labour which surprised many. The sea shore, or that portion of the coast which lies between the margin of the sea and the cultivated land, a region of sands, and drift sand, and pebbles, has ever been regarded as a kind of common, and the right of suspending nets, hawling boats aground and constructing huts for the summer residence of the fishermen, has never been disputed by the natural lord of those endless domains. It seems that a portion of ground, between the barren sea and the cultivated field, that the mariner fixed his abode; but it soon appeared that he wished to extend his possession, and augment his household accommodation. He encroached a large and more substantial house, with equal attention to durability and neatness; he fenced off the sea by a barrier of large stones, and scattered around his dwelling a few of the common flowers which love to blossom near the sea breeze. The smoke of his chimney, and the unremitting clank of his hammer finishing the interior accommodations, were seen and heard from afar. When all this was concluded he launched his boat and took to sea again, and became known from the Mull of Galloway to the food of Annan water.

I remember the first time I ever saw him was in the market place of Dumfries: his beard seemed of more than a year's growth, his clothes, once rich and fine, were darned and patched, and over the whole he wore a kind of loose frock, which fastened at the neck, and descended nigh the ground; but all this penury could not conceal the step and air of other and better days. He seldom looked in the face of any one; man he seemed to regard with an eye of scorn, and ever and deadly hatred; but on women he looked with softness and regard, and when he happened to meet a mother and child, she gazed on them with something of settled sorrow and affection. He once made a full stop, and gazed on a beautiful girl of four or five years old, as she was gathering primroses on the margin of the Nith; the child, alarmed at his uncouth appearance, shrieked and fell in its fright into the deep stream; the mariner made but one spring from the bank into the river,—saved the child, replaced it in its mother's bosom, and resumed his journey, apparently unconscious that he had done any thing remarkable. Ever after this the children of Dumfries pursued him with the hue and cry. "Eh! come and see the wild bearded man, who saved Mary Lawson!" On another occasion, I was hunting on the Scottish mountain of Criffel, and having reached its summit I sat down to look around on the prospect of sea and land below me, and take some refreshment. At a little distance I saw something like the figure of a human being, bedded in the heath, and lying looking on the Solway from a projecting rock, so still and motionless that he seemed dead. I went near; it was Miles Colvine: he seemed unconscious of my approach, and, looking on the sea, remained fixed in a meditating mood as I continued to the mountain. Indeed wherever he went he talked more like a man holding communion with his own mind, than one sharing his thoughts with others, and the general purport of such imperfect sentences as could be heard was that he escaped many men should perish for some irreparable wrong they had offered to a lady. Sometimes he spoke of the lady as his wife, or his love, and the men he had doomed to destruction as the lawless crew of his own vessel. At other times he addressed his invisible spirits whom he had sent to be tortured for wrongs done in the body, and his lady as an angel that still visited his daily dreams and his nightly visions. Through the whole the cry of revenge, and the deep sense of injury, were heard and understood by all.

Agriculture.

Mr. Ricardo, the celebrated political economist, has published a pamphlet in London, "on Protection to Agriculture," which is written with great ability. He contends that the government should, with as little delay as possible, consistently with a due regard to temporary interests, establish what may be called a substantially free trade in corn, and that the interests of the farmer, consumer and co-patriot would all be promoted by such a measure. The following, among his general views of the subject, are of interest to the countries from which Great Britain receives her foreign supply of bread stuff.

INDEX AT END

"Before I conclude, it will be proper to notice an objection which is frequently made against freedom of trade in corn; namely, the dependence in which it would place us for an essential article of subsistence on foreign countries. This objection is founded on the supposition that we should be importers of a considerable portion of the quantity which we annually consume. In the first place, I differ from those who think that the quantity which we should import would be immense; and in the second, if it were as large as the objection requires, I can see no danger as likely to arise from it. From all the evidence given to the Agricultural Committee, it appears that no very great quantity could be obtained from abroad, without a considerable increase in the growing price of corn in foreign countries. In proportion as the quantity required came from the interior of Poland and Germany, the cost would be greatly increased by the expences of land carriage. To raise a large supply, too, those countries would be obliged to have recourse to an inferior quality of land; and as it is the cost of raising corn on the worst soils in cultivation requiring the heaviest charges, which regulates the price of all the corn of a country, there could not be a great additional quantity produced, without a rise in the price necessary to remunerate the foreign grower. In proportion as the price rose abroad, it would become advantageous to cultivate poorer lands at home, and, therefore, there is every probability that, under the freest state of demand, we should not be importers of any large quantity.

"But suppose the case to be otherwise, what danger should we incur from our dependence, as it is called, on foreign countries for a considerable portion of our food? If our demand was constant and uniform, which, under such a system it would undoubtedly be, a considerably quantity of corn must be grown abroad expressly for our market. It would be more the interest, if possible, of the countries so growing corn for our use, to oppose no obstacles to its reaching us, than it would be ours to receive it. Let us look attentively to what is passing in this country before our eyes.—Do we not see the effects of a small excess of quantity on the price of corn? What would be the glut, if England habitually raised a considerable additional quantity for foreign consumption? Should we be willing to expose our farmers and landlords to the ruin which would overwhelm them, if we voluntarily deprived them of the foreign market, even in case of war? I am sure we should not. Whatever allowance we may make for the feelings of enmity, and for the desire we might have to inflict suffering on our foe, by depriving him of part of his usual food, I am sure that at such a price as it must be inflicted, in the case which I am supposing, we should forbear exercising such a power. If such would be our policy, so would it also be that of other countries in the same circumstances; and I am fully persuaded that we should never suffer from being deprived of the quantity of food for which we uniformly depended on importation."

of Liars!"

Old Play

Our author makes another great flourish, and chuckles himself greatly, like an old hen that has just been laying an egg, by introducing a certain gentleman, whom we suppose to be the late Mr. G—e, and saying that he relinquished his situation in the LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR'S Office, in order to be appointed Commissioner for administering the Oath of Allegiance to Emigrants; adding,—"for here every emigrant, no matter whether he had given proofs of his loyalty at Trafalgar or Waterloo (and he might have added, at Wexford or Vinegar-Hill?) appears to be looked upon with suspicion on applying for land," &c. &c. and ends by saying that in consequence of the high fees, the profits were not sufficient to pay the expence of fuel, and sweeping, for the Office.

All this makes a mighty fine parade, as he thinks, on his side the question. But here, as usual, he shows that unaccountable ignorance, and obliquity of view, for which this unhappy scribbler is so remarkable. Surely he ought to have known that the office of administering the Oath of Allegiance is not a special office! Surely, he ought to have known that there are two or more Commissions, in every District throughout the Province! and if he was capable of reflecting like other people, and had the candour, like other people, to avow his honest convictions, if ever he had any honest convictions, he would have considered the effect of the establishment of country Land Boards; and attributed much of the decrease of Mr. G's business, as a Commissioner in York, to the true cause; for undoubtedly the country Land Boards must have prevented numbers from coming to take the Oath of Allegiance in York. Indeed they were chiefly instituted with the charitable view of saving the poor emigrant a long and expensive journey to the seat of Government. But we might as well look for candour in a man of this description, as for generosity in a miser, or beauty in a toad!

Perhaps we should not discharge our duty so completely as we wish to do, were we to pass unnoticed an attempt of this writer to lay a particular stress upon, and draw a particular inference from, the term "FREE SETTLER" which is used in the printed letters that are issued from the Colonial Office in London. The inference which seems to be mainly insisted upon is, that the applicant is entitled to a free Grant of Land, that is without the payment of any fees. Now, is a Free-Mason entitled to an exemption of Fees, because he happens to be a Free-Mason? or a Negro, because he might be able to prove himself a free-Negro? or a Free Liar because he should take the liberty of lying by wholesale like the very free and enlightened inquirer into the State of the Colony?

The truth is, that a FREE SETTLER is one that is not an alien; nor a person who has been banished; nor one who comes out under any particular disqualification; nor one who is subject to any particular restriction; but he is a person entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of a British Subject; and all the advantages that are consistent with the Provincial regulations:—for example, a settler coming out with an order for one year's rations, and the use of agricultural implements, &c. is not a free settler, because he must, in order to obtain it, set himself down in a Military Settlement. Again, there are cases where an individual by the payment of £10 each (to be repaid on actual location) procures from Government a passage for a given number of settlers, and those can scarcely be deemed free settlers; at least they cannot be so free as those who are under no particular obligation, and who have accepted no species of indulgence. The term FREE SETTLER is used in contra-distinction to those who must follow a leader; or, who are bound by particular restrictions.

The circular-letters which issue from the Colonial-office in London, as we have before observed, are intended for all the Colonies and are filled up equally for those coming to Upper-Canada as for those who are going to New South Wales, where it must be more than presumed, even by this blunderhead, that there are many who are not FREE SETTLERS.

But we ought not to be greatly surprised that this author should have difficulty in understanding the plainest language, when he knows so little how to use it. He talks of the Acts of the House of Assembly, as he would of bomb-vessels, and fireships, yet gives us this consolation, however, that their fire "may be averted by every man"!!! We have three tropes and figures with a vengeance;—the fee suddenly become chain-shot, killing and wounding all ranks of people; and then, even the grave itself; which, in this case, does not appear to be quite so still and quiet a place as that sanctuary is usually described to be: it is next pretty plainly intimated that we have "Cato-street conspirators" amongst us, and our author (may hap from a sort of fellow feeling with those heroes) seems to lament that even such worthies can not "escape the chain-shot of the fees," and "the grave"! We have then a very fine portrait of a physician trifling away his time in removing pimples from the face of his patient; and, what is a very unusual sight, (unless the pigs of this country do as the sailors very humorously said of the cows of Orkney and Shetland,) a hog in flames. The most wonderful thing of all is, however, reserved for the last, as a blow that must be irresistible; and in truth we must allow it to be what is called a settler—a man is actually found capable of lying under a stone stone whilst a thorn is pulled out of his finger!!! It will be well for the House of Assembly to be on their guard, and take care what they do, for this modern JUNIUS seems to threaten them hard.—He seems to have assumed the office of Dictator in verse. (To be continued.)

Editorial Commentary.

We have, at length, in this number, published the last Stricture we have thought it necessary to write, at present, in contradiction of the falsehoods which are contained in the Pamphlet entitled, "Observations on the State of the Colony."

The task to us has been full of pain. Without a single feeling of personal enmity towards the Author for whom, indeed, we entertain a sentiment of unaffected pity: we found it necessary to expose the wicked tendency of a Pamphlet which, though very badly written, was calculated to do all the mischief it has done, and which it was most probably intended to do amongst a certain class of readers, who seldom stay to inquire into the truth of statements which gratify any evil propensity, or prejudice.

If we have been censured for using strong language, we can only say that had we given way to our feelings we should have been much more violent. It has been, with us, a continued struggle to restrain emotions of the keenest indignation. Had there been any shew of modesty; any relenting of that hard-featured, unblushing, countenance of affrontery which seems determined to bully, where it can neither vindicate nor defend; if, in short, we had seen any thing like shame, or a consciousness of having acted wrong and with a foolish precipitation in treating of subjects above his reach and comprehension—we might have had some hopes of him: but, What has been the consequence of his exposure? Even the pouring out of his whole budget of abusive epithets upon us, the instruments of his conviction, without even an attempt at apology to the public, for having been either precipitate or misinformed. He has made his readers pay for some fifty columns of such unmeaning, unconnected, abuse as probably never before disgraced a public print; in a single number of his paper he treated them with no less than seven columns of such stuff that had a petulent, ignorant school-boy selected all the abusive terms he could find and put them in a bag and shaken them out in a promiscuous manner, they would have fallen with quite as much connection, sense, meaning, and propriety of application.

But, for the present, we have done with him, and we leave him to his reflections and consolations with but faint hopes of his amendment. For ourselves, it only remains to make the antidote as general as the poison it was intended to eradicate, by publishing and circulating the strictures in a separate pamphlet.

GREAT BRITAIN.

In the House of Commons, Mr. Hume brought forward his motion relative to the Ionian Islands, the object of which was to obtain an enquiry into the causes of disarming the inhabitants of these Islands. The motion was lost by a majority of 85 out of 218 members. An opinion continued to be entertained that the bill for the admission into the House of Lords of the Catholic peers, which had passed the Committee of the House of Commons without a dissenting voice, would be rejected in the Upper House. The efforts of the opposition to obtain further reductions in the ministerial corps, were defeated by a majority of 127 out of 321. Lord Londonderry's bill for amending the Corn laws was read a first time on the 14th, and ordered for a second reading on the 21st of May.

The middle of June was spoken of as the period when Parliament would be dissolved; after which the King was expected to commence his tour to the Continent, and to return by Scotland.

The King's visit to the Continent.—According to new accounts with respect to the journey which the King of England intends to take, it appears that his Majesty's plan is to set out from London in the latter-fortnight in June, at which time the Parliament will be prorogued, and the levees and presentations at Court are usually suspended. His Majesty will first visit Hanover, where he will remain until the end of June; thence he will go to Vienna, in fulfilment of the promise which he made to the Emperor of Austria. His stay in this capital will be signalized by splendid fetes.—The King will then come to Paris, where it is believed, he will pass some time, residing at the Bourbon. The King will then embark at Dieppe, to return to his pavilion at Brighton.—It was at first doubted whether this journey would take place, although the Newspapers had hastened to announce it; but the beneficial effects on the King's health, produced by his excursion to Hanover, have induced the Ministers to urge his Majesty to repeat an experiment, which proved in the first instance so salutary.

Dover, May 14, half-past eight o'clock.

Arrival of the Prince and Princess of Denmark.—The Prince and Princess of Denmark have just landed from the Prince Regent yacht, under a salute from the Heights' battery; their Royal Highnesses were received by a guard of honour, and were cheered by an immense concourse of people. The evening being very fine, the sight was very imposing, the whole of the vessels in the harbor having numerous flags flying. Every class of people vied with each other, in demonstrations of respect to their royal visitors, who seemed highly gratified by the cordiality and kindness of their reception.

A French paper says—"The Prince of Denmark, previous to his departure from Paris, sent a very beautiful gold snuff-box to M. Denon, by M. Adler, his private secretary; his Royal Highness also presented one, enriched with a fine mosaic to M. Bourdet de la Nievre, who accompanied him in his mineralogical and geological excursions to Switzerland.

In regard to the affairs of the Continent the Dublin editor holds the following language:—

"The Correspondents who purvey intelligence for the Paris Journals, appear weary of the Russian ultimatum, and of Turkish obstinacy—of the quarrelsome negociation which has been so long depending between the Sultan and "the Czar of the Muscovites"—the rattle of warlike preparations on the Pruth—and the marching of armies, have been of late continual entertainment. The imaginations of those ingenious persons are now refreshing themselves with the Greek Insurrection.

Mr. Fermerty the radical, who was imprisoned in Ireland for two years, charged with seditious writings, about the beginning of the French revolution lately died in London.

According to a paper printed by order of the House of Commons, the amount of Bank Notes and Post Bills in circulation, on the 7th May, was 17,725,670*l*. The notes under 5*l* were now reduced to 1,089,780*l*.

GOLD AND SILVER COINAGE.

We have been favored with the following very curious and authentic details of the forms observed in ascertaining the purity of our Gold and Silver Coin. We are persuaded, they will be perused with great interest by a large portion of our readers, to whom the particulars of this ancient practice can not be familiar.

TRIAL OF THE PIX.

On Saturday last, the Right Honorable the Lord Chancellor, attended by four other of His Majesty's Honorable Privy Council, viz. Lord Maryborough, Master of the Mint, Lord Stowell, Lord Harrowby, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, assembled in the Duchy of Lancaster Court, at Westminster, to swear in a Jury of Goldsmiths, for the purpose of their examining into the quality of the gold and silver coin made between May 1818, and June 1821, during which period the largest amount of gold money was coined that is upon the record in this country, the sum being no less than £18,473,249, which, added to the silver coined within that same short period, makes a total of upwards of thirteen million pounds sterling.

The Jury were selected from the Worshipful Company of Goldsmiths, and was composed of the following gentlemen:—

Robert Makepeace, Esq. Foreman,	Samuel Haines, Esq.
William Newman, Esq.	John Robinson, Esq.
John Harker Esq.	Samuel Thomas, Esq.
Thomas Hayter, Esq.	Richard Brook, Esq.
John Brogden, Esq.	Wm. Bateman, Esq.
Edmund Rundell, Esq.	Philip Gilbert, Esq.
	John G. Bridge, Esq.

The Lord Chancellor arrived at nine o'clock, and proceeded in a most impressive manner to charge the Jury. We lament our inability to do justice to the able and eloquent address of his Lordship, which was in substance as follows:—

"Gentlemen,—You are assembled on behalf of the King and his people, to enquire into the due performance of an indenture entered into between his Majesty the King, and the Right Honorable Lord Maryborough, Master of the Mint.

"This inquiry will embrace an examination of the fineness and purity of all the gold and silver monies coined between the 13th of June, 1818, and the 31st of December, 1821, during which period the immense and unprecedented sum of £18,473,249 1s. 8d. gold coin has been delivered into the office of receipt of the said Mint, and of silver coin, £2,719,926, between the 21st of May, 1818, and the 31st of December, 1821.

"This mode of enquiry, Gentlemen, has existed so long and is of such ancient institution, as to render it perhaps impossible to state with any precision, when it commenced; but of one thing we are certain, that while different States have adopted different modes of satisfying the public concerning the purity of their respective coins, the British public have never been satisfied with any thing short of the application of the invaluable principle of trial by jury.

In the performance of this duty, it is very evident, that a large portion of your time will be consumed, and that much skill added to much circumspection, will be necessary.

"The object of your enquiry, and the consequences of your verdict, it is almost unnecessary for me to advert to; for by the indenture entered into by the Master of the Mint with the Crown, it will appear that the King ordains what the standard of the coin of these realms shall be, and your verdict will determine whether that indenture has been duly performed.

"The indenture proceeds to state, that upon a reasonable warning, the pix or box shall be opened, and such monies as had been delivered as good, shall be subjected to the ordeal of fire, touch, water, or weight. Should you find them good, you will say so, upon which the Crown will grant to the Master of the Mint its letters patent of ease. Should your enquiries lead you to a contrary conclusion, you will report accordingly, for before the Crown will grant the release of the Master of the Mint, your consciences must be satisfied, that the coin of the present day is equal in purity to British coin in the best of British times.

"It will not, I trust, be considered as travelling out of my way, to allude to an important proceeding which the legislature deemed it necessary to adopt. I mean the cessation of cash payments for a season. Subsequent events have, however, convinced every one that Government only interfered at sacrificed, the blessings of our happy constitution, for a time, in order to preserve it for ever.

"And you cannot fail, Gentlemen, upon opening the pix or box, to receive the most agreeable emotions upon witnessing the superscription of a gracious monarch upon the coins submitted to your trust, and not that of a tyrant, reigning over subjects little better than slaves.

"You will now commence your important proceedings, and will, no doubt, discharge your duty to both the king and his people."

The Jury then proceeded to the rooms purposely prepared for their reception in the Exchequer, and it may not be unacceptable to our readers to be informed of the process used in this important enquiry, the more so, as this is the largest coinage performed in this or any other country, within the same period of time.

The practice of his Majesty's Mint, and which has existed from time immemorial, is to divide the operation into divisions of 15 pounds troy weight of gold, which 15 pounds weight of gold is called a "Journey."

One sovereign is then taken from each Journey or fifteen pounds weight so coined, and is carefully wrapped in paper sealed by three of the principal officers of the Mint, and deposited in the pix, which has also three locks, the paper being endorsed with the date of its delivery.

There have been instances, within the period of this enquiry, when upwards of two hundred journies have been delivered in one day, and consequently upwards of two hundred sovereigns put in one packet into the pix or box, they being synonimous terms. From what has been stated, the number of sovereigns put into the pix, are weighed (that is the most delicate balance, the weight of the fine gold produced from the sovereigns, should exactly agree with the weight of the fine gold produced from the Exchequer trial pieces.

The practical knowledge of the leading Officers of his Majesty's mint, combined with their pre eminent scientific attainments, are known and confessed by every Mint in Europe. Yet with conscious integrity, added to these qualities, it may be reasonably supposed, that the moment in which the assay piece taken from the coin is opposed to the opposite balance, to that taken from the trial piece, is to them a moment, if not of anxiety, at least of eager expectation.

In the present enquiry, the nicest balance, or scales, could discover no difference, and the points in the centre of the beam came in contact as the points of two fine needles, thereby enabling the Jury to render a verdict, that the coin was as good as the King had ordained, and the Right Honorable the Master of the Mint undertaken that it should be.

These facts and observations apply with slight and unimportant variations, to the silver as to the gold coin.

These operations employed the Jury from nine in the morning till three in the evening, when they returned from the Exchequer to Goldsmiths' Hall, the Lord Chancellor having very kindly condescended to receive their verdict at the latter place; after which his Lordship, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Maryborough, the Master of the Mint, Lord Harrowby, and Lord Stowell, honored the Wardens of the Company and Jury with their company at dinner, to which were also invited the Principal Officers of his Majesty's Mint, the number who sat down being about thirty-five.

After the health of his Majesty had been given, the Duke of York and Royal Family, with appropriate and grateful feelings to the Navy and Army, the Lord Chancellor gave the healths of the Jury, at the same time thanking them for the ability and industry they had displayed in the discharge of the high and important duty intrusted to them.

IRELAND.

The distresses of the peasantry in the Southern districts of Ireland have excited an intense interest in the sister Island. On the 7th of May a highly respectable meeting was held at the City of London Tavern, for the purpose of opening a subscription to relieve those portions of the community which now labour under the combined miseries of want and disease. The chair was taken by Thomas Wilson, Esq. one of the representatives of the City of London; a highly respectable Committee was appointed, and a subscription was instantly commenced. Amongst the subscribers were the following:—

Marquis of Hertford,	£300	Mr. John Smith,	£100
Earl of Liverpool	200	Mr Spring Rice,	150
Rt. Hon. R. Peel,	200	Mr Edward Ellice,	150
Rt Hon. N. Vansittart	200	Roberts & Co.	100
Marquis Conyngham,	100	Boosanquet & Co.	100
Archb. of Canterbury,	100	Barclay & Co.	105
Archb. of York,	100	Praeds & Co.	100

Five thousand pounds were subscribed in the course of a few hours; and some of the London papers assert that the sum will be soon augmented to 50000*l*. Three of his Majesty's ministers have contributed liberally, an example which, it is to be hoped, will be imitated by every person who in right of office, receives any portion of the public money.

At the meeting, Sir Edward O'Brien stated, that a benevolent individual intended to forward a cargo of meal and rice for the relief of the sufferers. A lady at her own expense had shipped 40 tons of potatoes, and 10 barrels of herrings for a similar purpose.

The city committee have already remitted the following sums to Ireland—

To the county of Clare,	1,000*l*.
To the county and city of Limerick,	500
To Galway and Mayo,	500
To Kerry,	500
To Skibbereen and its vicinity,	100

It has been alleged, we know not on what grounds, that government intends to supply the wants of the people, by sending from England large quantities of grain, rice, and American flour into Ireland. The Irish editor opposes the measure, as he says there is grain enough in Ireland (oats) to supply all their necessities, and the government should purchase there. Foreign flour and rice, he contends, should not be introduced where they had oats enough of their own!

A meeting was to be held at Belfast, for similar objects to that held in London.

His Grace the Right Hon. and the Hon. William Stewart D. D. Lord Arch. Bishop of Armagh, and Primate of Ireland, died on the 6th of May. His Grace's decease was occasioned by a fatal error in administering medicine to him. "The contents of a bottle, in which, among other ingredients, were two ounces of laudanum, were to be exteriorly applied. They were, however, given to his Grace to swallow; and when the dreadful mistake was discovered, every medical means was employed, but without effect, to cause their discharge from his stomach. It was too weak to yield them up, and death shortly after ensued. He was born, Feb. 1755.

BELFAST, May 13.

It is most gratifying to contemplate the generous sympathy so abundantly manifested towards Ireland in the British Capital and other parts of England.

In London alone, the sum advertised in the papers of Saturday, as subscribed to relieve the distresses of the Irish Poor, amounts to £18,653 19. Among the generous donors we notice the Earl of Fitz William, £500; the Marquis of Hertford £300; the Cabinet Ministers £200 each; and several large sums from the corporate companies of London, among others £200 from the Mercer's Company. It is not only those houses which are connected with Ireland that subscribe on this occasion; we find in the honored lists hundreds of names having no apparent relation to this country, but as forming part of the British Empire, a portion of the family of mankind.

Seventy-one convicts under the Insurrection Act, were sent on board a transport ship at Cork on the 8th of May.

Letters from various Irish members of Parliament to their constituents, state, with great confidence, that Ministers have at length determined to relieve this country from the window tax, which, it is said will not be collected after the present year.

A vast quantity of American flour has been shipped at Liverpool, for the ports of Cork, Limerick, and Galway. The Government, among other shippers, have sent 1000 tons of potatoes.

LATEST FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The elections going on in France, appear to be favorable to the liberals. In the department of the Seine, out of ten members there were only two royalists, and out of the eight departments, six were patriots. France is represented to be generally tranquil. A party of Spanish insurgents who had passed the frontiers were instantly disarmed by the Cordon Sanataire, which is considered as evidence of the good disposition of the French government towards Spain. Two failures had taken place at Bordeaux to a considerable amount, the one a French mercantile house, and the other an English.

The Moniteur, has published an explanation respecting the affair of Samana, in St. Domingo. That paper states the fact of the case to be, that some of the French vessels stationed in the West Indies, repaired, at the request of the French residents in Samana, to assist them in their escape, and afford them an asylum in case of need. It is positively demed that troops were landed, the white flag hoisted, or any hostile act whatever committed.

The accounts from Paris are to the 10th of May, from Constantinople to the 10th of April, and from Leipzig to the 29th of April. The latest letters from Poland and Russia, are decidedly for war.

FRENCH NAVY.—In a debate April 1, on the budget, Gen. Sebastiani moved for a reduction of the navy appropriations, as to do what they could, he said they would be unable to cope with the omnipotence of the British Navy.

The Minister of the Marine opposed the motion. He stated, that sixty-five millions of francs had been appropriated in 1820, for ten years, for the augmentation of the French Navy, in which time it would present a force of forty sail of the line, and fifty frigates, besides smaller vessels. The system he hoped would never be deviated from.—"The Hon General," he said, "had spoken of the degradation of the French Marine, and the omnipotence of England upon the seas; but was it possible that such a word as omnipotence could be employed in a country which had given birth to Duguay-Trouin, to Jean Bart, to Tourville, to so many heroes, not less distinguished than those who had fallen upon the field of battle? The idea of recognizing a superior force, either upon the land or upon the sea, was unworthy of France."

Constantinople, April 11.

Great disorders have taken place at Foeg, as well as in other parts adjacent to the Danube; they proceed from the misunderstanding which prevails between the Janissaries and the troops of the country. The Captain Pacha has sailed for the Archipelago with a fleet, having on board 11,700 men, and is to be joined by other ships of war and transports.—Journal des Debats.

Aix La Chapelle, May 7.

According to a letter from an eminent personage at Vienna, Austria, and Russia are agreed on the policy which they will observe relatively to the affairs of Turkey. Further, the latter power, it is said, has formally consented not to open the campaign against the Turks except in the case that every medium of conciliation prove unavailing, and that, should the Divan persist in its resolution of the 5th of February last, the Russian armies shall not commence hostilities until the troops of the other powers, (probably Austria and Prussia,) shall have arrived at the positions assigned them. It is added that in order to the final arrangement of this important affair, the ministers of the five great powers will meet at Vienna in the course of June next. No open new conferences. This is what has given rise to the report of an approaching Congress in the capital of Austria. —Journal de Paris.

INDEX AT END.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

It will now be seen that so far from the intelligence previously received, of Turkey having lowered its tone and shown a disposition to give up Moldavia, and Wallachia, the Divan had resolved not to give up one single point, notwithstanding the continued efforts of the ministers of Great Britain and Austria, to induce the Sultan and his ministers to accede to the proposals of Russia. The Divan still behave in the most supercilious manner towards the European Ambassadors, to whom they scarcely deign to return an answer to the diplomatic notes which the latter present: while the soldiers of Turkey continue to commit the greatest atrocities on the unfortunate Greeks, who are within their power. The accounts by this conveyance do not warrant the belief, that a Congress would be held for the purpose of settling the existing differences. On the contrary it appears that the Emperor Alexander was to have left his capital on the 4th of May for Warsaw, to place himself at the head of his armies, and that all the letters from Russia and Poland up to the end of April, breathed nothing but hostility. The Turks too, are stated to have 18,000 men in Moldavia and Wallachia, and on the Danube, and betwixt that river and Mount Haemus, their whole forces, consisting mostly of Asiatic troops, are estimated at 200,000 men. It is obvious from these statements, whether the negociations going on, terminate in peace or war, that both parties are preparing for the worst.

The accounts from St. Petersburgh, are of the 17th April, and decidedly warlike. The equipages of the Grand Dukes, who wish to accompany the Russian guard-, had been forwarded to Minsk; those of Alexander were not to be forwarded until he joined the army, which he was only prevented doing by the non-arrival of M. Tatischeff, who, however, was hourly expected.

The Dutch papers are full of details, highly consolatory, respecting the triumphs which every where attend the Grecian arms. The subscriptions in aid of their cause in Russia alone, amounted to 600,000 rubles.

GREECE.

Corfu, April 2.—The Greeks commanded by Colocotroni, have made an assault upon the entrenched camp of Patras, defended by Turkish troops which had landed from the fleet. The slaughter was dreadful, and they have taken forty field pieces. Jussuf Pacha, the commander of the fortress, is in a treaty for capitulation.

On the 19th of March, a Greek division having Suliote troops on board, taken in at Regnasser, was ready to make a descent at Mourtoux when an English brig of war presented itself to prohibit them by a higher order, from entering the channel of Corfu.—The Hydriote Admiral Miaoulis then sent a flag of truce, which is retained here for the present. The Suliotes were carried back to Regnasser (between Prevesa and Farga), and the projected operations against Mourtoux, or rather against the Turkish vessels which had taken refuge in that port, have not only been abandoned, but the Greek squadron has been obliged to escape precipitately from our seas —This circumstance, unfavorable to the Greeks, was the result of the first attack upon the Turks. In consequence, on the 20th of April, they made another descent upon Veltzes, (in the gulf of Arta) and advanced a considerable distance into the country.—On the 24th, there was a contest which lasted from morning to five in the afternoon, in which the Turks were completely beaten and were forced to retreat upon Prevesa. This was only the prelude to a more important action. The 26th, the Turks having formed a new corps of expedition, composed of 3000 men, of troops drawn from Prevesa and Arta, advanced towards Regnassa in order to cut off the communication of the Suliotes with their advanced post. They were on the point of succeeding, when the brave Marc Botcheri arrived the 28th, with a corps d'elite preceding him at the sound of the trumpet, in order to deceive the enemy, who believed that an effective reinforcement had arrived. Under cover of this stratagem, he suddenly attacked the Turks, and forced them to retreat as far as Castro Ischia, four leagues to the north of Prevesa, where he now holds them blockaded.

At the Chester (English) Races, while seven horses were running a severe contested heat, the leading horse fell, and four of the other horses and their riders being unable to pull up, were all thrown down together. The rider of the first horse died from his contusions.

According to a return presented to the House of Commons, the number of persons admitted to see the British Museum, from the 25th of March, 1821, to the 26th of March, 1822, amounted to 91,192.

Wright the Yorkshire pedestrian, has performed the Barclay match (1000 miles in 1000 successive hours) at Sheffield. —Much money was lost and won. An officer of the Guards pockets £800.

The Duchess of Montfort (the consort of Jerome Bonaparte) has had the good luck to gain a cause that was brought before the tribunal of Paris. She recovers by the verdict an estate worth 464,000 francs, nearly £20,000 sterling.

Robert Burns.—At a meeting of some gentlemen at Dumfries, Scotland, to celebrate the anniversary of the birth day of Robert Burns, the following toast was given by Mr. Harkness :—" the health of Washington Irving, the author of the Sketch book"—A transatlantic writer, to whom we are indebted for one of the richest and most intellectual repasts which perhaps has ever been served up to the votaries of literature; and who has emblazoned his memory in a work which will float his name to after ages in a noble strain of melodious prose.

Bow-Street.—An elderly man, rather robust in person and complexion, and wearing a large cocked hat, and a white ribbon in his button-hole, walked with a sort of military air into the office, and having waited until the Magistrates were disengaged, helapproached the Bench, and, with a stiff bow, begged the favour of an audience.

Mr Minshull expressed his readiness to attend him ; and he stated that he was just arrived from France, where he had been a long time resident, and was on his way to Wexford, in Ireland, but could proceed no further for want of money. He was cousin to Louis XVIII. who some months ago created him a Peer of France ; but before he could procure his patent, the new Ministry came into power, and being himself an avowed Jacobin, his expected honours were withheld from him. While endeavouring to obtain redress for this act of injustice, he heard that his father had died at Wexford, where he himself was born, leaving immense property, and that his sisters administered to the will, and possessed themselves of that to which he was the rightful heir. Upon receiving this intelligence, he quitted Paris very hastily, and had proceeded thus far when his finances were exhausted, and he was under the necessity of making this application for assistance to from the Magistrates to complete his journey.

Mr. Minshull Pray, Sir, will you give me leave to ask if you were ever in confinement ?

Applicant. In confinement, Sir, what do you mean ?

Mr. Minshull. Were you ever in a prison ?

Applicant. Never in my life; and I think the question a very extraordinary one. You ought to know the treatment due to a gentleman, though he happens to be in poverty.

Mr. Minshull. Well, Sir, I will be plainer with you ; were you ever in a mad house ?

Applicant (reddening) A mad-house, why do you ask ?

Mr. Minshull. Because I believe you are mad, or at least, deranged in your mind, and I fancy it is the opinion of every one who hears me, except the person I am addressing.

The applicant said he was really at a loss to know what the Magistrate had seen in his manner, or what he had said to give rise to such an opinion. He was in his sober senses as much as any man that heard him.

Sir R. Birnie. Well, Sir, it may be very true ; but unfortunately, we have no funds with which to forward your journey in a manner suited to the dignity of a descendant of Charlemagne, and I am afraid you must find your way to Wexford as you can, without our aid.

Applicant. Very well, Sir.

Mr. Minshull expressed his surprise that he did not apply for aid to his cousin Louis.

The applicant, without regarding this observation, said, he was sorry he had troubled the Magistrates, and should press his request no further. He bowed, and, placing his hat cocked hat on his head with an air of dignity, he walked out of the Office.

Deputations from the merchants connected with the South American and other trades in Liverpool, had arrived in London to attend to the measures now before his Majesty's government and the House of Commons, touching the commercial connection with the former colonies of Spain in the western hemisphere, and the other important questions affecting the shipping and mercantile interests in that country.

AGRICULTURE.

" Salt provokes the appetite, strengthens the stomach, promotes the digestion and concoction of the aliments, resists putrefaction, prevents unnatural concretions of the humours, and is most friendly and agreeable to the human body, entering its composition as a necessary ingredient. No wonder, therefore, that the Laplanders, amongst whom the use of salt is unknown, seem to discover the want of it by the exility of their bodies, and the weakness of their constitutions ; being much less robust and strong than other northern nations who enjoy this excellent gift of God.—Moreover, its uses extend to many other animals besides the human race : black cattle and sheep take a pleasure in licking it, and by it are preserved from many diseases ; they also thrive to admiration, and quickly grow fat in marshy grounds, that are frequently overflowed by the sea. And if we descend to the vegetable tribe, we shall find that salt contributes greatly to fruitify the earth ; and when properly used as a manure, affords ample nourishment to corn, and other vegetables ; and renders kingdoms rich and fertile, where it happens to abound in the soil."—Dr. Brownrigg's Art of Salt.

" To show an acquaintance of mine the effects and advantages of salt, properly applied to vegetables, I made the following experiment, in an extreme dry summer, upon a bare piece of pasture land, out of which the cattle were all taken for want of grass :—I marked four places with stakes, each of which I watered nine nights successively, in the following manner ; the first with spring water alone, to the quantity of a gallon ; the second with the same quantity of water, adding an ounce of common salt ; the third and fourth with the same quantity, mixing the water in the third place with two ounces of salt, and that in the fourth with three ounces, which produced the following different effects :—

The grass in the second place grew more and of a darker green than that in the first ; in the third, it only grew by spots, or part of it was killed, where the greatest quantity of water fell ; and the fourth was quite brown for a greater compass than the third ; by which it appeared that an ounce of salt in a gallon of water, had a better effect than the water had alone ; and that three ounces of salt mixed with a gallon of water, was more than the grass could immediately receive ; but the fourth place in the ensuing spring was the most fertile of them all."—Treatise on Fruit Trees. by Thos Hitt, Esq. Third Edition, London, 1768, page 17.

" Soils which are subject to the grub, and must be fertilized by common dung, which is a proper nest for the mother beetle to deposit its eggs, must be well impregnated with the brine of dissolved salt, after the dung is first cut up : two large hogsheads of salt will make brine enough for a dunghill of fifty feet square. This cure for the grub is a late discovery, for which I am obliged to a judicious planter, and which I have tried with success on fire as the experiment is made. But though it proves effectual to destroy that pernicious insect in plantation, I much doubt and believe it will not be sufficient to save rattoons without a new application of Salt pounded to a powder ; because the first brine must be washed away by the time when rattoons spring up. I therefore advise the planter who would save his rattoons from grub, to cut off the heads of the stools by sharp hoes, three inches below the surface of the soil, and then strew a handful of salt round each stool ; and cover it up to a level with fine mould taken from the edges."—

From an Essay on Plantership by Samuel Martin, Esq. of Antigua

" Having tried salt upon a small scale on a sandy soil, I can assert sixteen bushels to be a proper quantity for one acre. It gradually advanced in its effects to sixteen, and as gradually diminished to forty bushels when vegetation was destroyed.—Twice only, have I had an opportunity of buying a few tons of foul Salt and used it both times on a barley tilth, sowing the Salt immediately after the barley. The event was perfectly satisfactory.—The verdure of the spring exceeded any thing of the kind I ever saw ; and the ripened appearance was whiter by many shades than I ever beheld.

N. B. Salt is noxious both to weeds and vermin."

R. Legrand, Esq. on Manures, in the Annals of Agriculture, vol. 5, page 140.

To keep Pork fresh.—Take out the bones, and without any salt, cover the pieces with Spanish brown (or red ochre,) then pack them in bags. Pork thus packed will keep sweet a year.—Plough Boy.

To relieve Cattle that are choaked or horen by Clover.—Provide a tough piece of grape vine, about a yard and a half long and as thick as a man's finger, with a knob from one to two inches diameter at one end. Surround this knob with a piece of linen or leather, which when stuffed with wool or tow, will make a ball of three inches diameter ; and secure it well, so as to prevent its slipping over the knob ; roll it in soft soap or grease, and having secured the creature, and holding its tongue, thrust the ball down its throat quite into the stomach, and it will be immediately relieved.—Ditto.

MILES COLVINE, THE CUMBERLAND MARINER.

When Miles Colvine had lately finished his new residence, and the flowers and fruits had returned to field and tree, he was observed to launch his boat : this was a common occurrence, a small lair of sheep-skins, a jar of water and some dried fish, called skippred salmon by the Scotch, looked like preparation for a long journey. The journey was begun, for he was seen scudding away southward, by the light of the stars, and no more was seen or heard of him for some time. Day after day his door continued shut, his chimney ceased to smoke, and his nets hung unemployed. Atlength the revenue cutter from Saint Bees arrived at Allanbay. It land a cargo of fine Hollands which the officers had taken from an Irish smuggler, between Archikergus and the Isle of Man. They had been terribly alarmed, they said, on their way, by the appearance, about the third watch of the night, of a visionary boat, navigated by a bearded figure which scudded with supernatural swiftness along the surface of the water. This tale, with all the variations which a peculiar sea-faring credulity supply, found its way from seatown to hamlet, and from hamlet to hall. Old men shook their heads, and talked of the exploits of the great fiend by sea and land, and wished that good might happen to old England from the visit of such a sea-commander. Others who were willing to believe that the apparition was Miles Colvine on a coasting voyage, seemed no less ready to confound the maritime ravisher with an evil being who had murdered a whole ship's crew, sunk their ship, and dwelt on the coast of "canny Cumberland," for the express purpose of raising storms, shaking corn, and making unwedded mothers of half the fair damsels between Saint Bees and Saint Bees. Several misfortunes of the latter kind, which happened about this time, confirmed this suspicion, and his departure from the coast was as welcome as rain to the farmer after a long drought.

About a fortnight after this event, I happened to be on a moonlight excursion by water, as far as the ruined castle of Cumlongen. I was accompanied by an idle friend or two, and on our return we allowed the receding tide to carry us along the Cumberland coast, till we came nearly opposite the cottage of Miles Colvine. As we directed our boat to the shelter of a small bank, I observed a light glimmering in the mariner's house, and landing and approaching closer, I saw plainly the shadows of two persons, one tall and manly, the other slim and stylish-like, passing, and repassing on the wall. I soon obtained a fairer view. I saw the mariner himself, his dress once rude and seedid was replaced by one of the coarsest materials, but remarkably clean ; his beard was removed, and his hair, once matted and wild, now hung orderly about his neck and temples. The natural colour was black, but snow-white locks now predominated : his look was placid, but sedate, and he seemed about forty years of age. The figure of the creature that accompanied him was much too tender and beautiful to last long in a situation so rude and unprotected as the cottage of a fisherman. It was a female, richly dressed, and of a beauty so exquisite, and a look so full of sweetness and grace, that the rude scene around was not wanted to exalt her above all other maidens I had ever seen. She glided about the cottage, arranging the various articles of furniture, and passing two white hands, outrivalling the fairest creations of the sculptor, over the rude chairs and tables and every moment giving a glance at the mariner, like one who took delight in pleasing him, and seemed to work for his sake. And he was pleased : he saw him smile, and no one had ever seen him smile before ; he raised his hand over the long clustering tresses of the maiden ; caused her to sit down beside him, and looked on her face, which outgrowing the child, had not yet grown into woman, with a look of affection, and reverence and joy.

I was pondering on what I witnessed and imagining an interview with the unhappy mariner and his beautiful child, for such his companion was, when I observed the latter take out a small musical instrument from a chest, and touching its well-ordered strings with slight and ready hand, she played several of the simple and plaintive airs so common among the peasantry of the Scottish and English coasts. After a pause she resumed her instrument, and to an air singularly wild and melancholy, sang the following ballad, which relates to the story of her father's and mother's misfortunes ; but the min-trel has observed a mystery in his narrative which excites suspicion rather than gratifies curiosity.

O MARINER, O MARINER.

O mariner, O mariner
When will our gallant men
Make our cliffs and woodlands ring
With their homeward hail again ;
Full fifteen paced the stately deck,
And fifteen stood below,
And maidens waved them from the shore,
With hands more white than snow ;
All underneath them flashed the wave,
The sun laugh'd out aloon,
Will they come bounding homeward,
By the waning of yon moon ?

O maid, the moon shines lovely down
The stars all brightly burn,
And they may shine till doomsday come,
Ere your love have return ;
O'e his white forehead roll the waves,
The wind sigh-lone and low,
And the cry the sea-fowl uttereth
Is one to wail and woe ;
So wail thy on, I'll the, maid,
One of thy tresses dark,
Is worth all the souls who perish'd
In that good and gallant bark.

O mariner, O mariner,
It s whisper'd in the hall,
And sun, upon the mountain side
Among our neighbours all,
That the wave, that fill the measure
Of that wide and fatal flood,
Cannot cleanse the decks of thy good ship,
Or wash thy hands from blood ;
And sailors meet, and shake their heads,
And eye they sunder say,

Cut heap on heap Miles Colvine,
On the wide and watery way.

And up then spoke he, Miles Colvine,
His thigh thus smiting soon,
By all that's dark amath the deep,
By all that's bright above,
By all that's blessed on the earth,
Or blessed on the flood,
And by my sharp and stalwart blade
That revel'd in their blood—
I could not spare them ; for there came
My loved one's spirit nigh,
With a shriek of joy at ever stroke
That doom'd her foes to die.

" O mariner, O mariner,
There was a lovely dame,
Wrat down with thee into the deep
His dark eyes like a thunder cloud
Did rain and lighten fast,
And ob, his bold and manful face
All grimly grew and ghast.
I loved her, and those evil men
Wrong'd her as far we ranged
But were ever woman's woes or wrongs
More fearfully avenged ?

The ballad had proceeded thus far, when a band of smugglers from the coasts of Ireland and Scotland, under the reckless desperation of the former with the craft and cruelty of the latter, attracted by the report of the wealth of the mariner, and by the lonely house, which represented hope of plunder with little appearance of resistance, landed to the number of seven, and leaping over the exterior wall, seized the door and shook it violently, calling loudly for admittance. I lay down with my two companions behind a small bed, or of course, to see the issue of this visit, for at that time I imagined the mariner maintained some mysterious correspondence with these lawless men. " Open the door," said one, in a strong Irish accent, " or by the powers I'll blow your cabin to peelings of potatoes about your ears, my darlings." —" Howl, Patrick, or what's your name," said one of his comrades in Lowland Scotch, " ye mauna gang that rough way to work. we mean speak kindly and reasonlies, man, till we get in our hand, and then we can take it our ain way, like Willie Wilson's sow, when she ran off with a knife in her neck." The mariner, on hearing this dialogue, prepared himself like one perfectly well acquainted with such encounters. With a sword in one hand, a cocked pistol in the other and a brace in his belt, he posted himself behind the door, and in a low voice admonished his daughter to retire to a little chamber constructed for her accommodation. With a voice which, though tremulous with emotion, lost nothing of its native sweetness, the young maiden answered, " Oh let me be near you father let me be near you "—Her low and gentle voice was drowned in the wild exclamations of one of the smugglers. " Och my dears, let us break the door and clap a red tar to the roof, and all to give me light to see to kill this maiden with the sweet voice I have not been within seven acres broad of a woman since we sailed with Miles Colvine's lady.—And by the bagpipe she was a monster, and a pretty die she made about it after all, and ask it into her head to shriek till the shore rang, and pray if the saints grew deaf ; ah my heart, it would'nt do—What the d—l holds this door ? stand by till I snow you how unadvisedly I'll stick it against the wall ;" and setting his shoulders to the door, he thrust with all his might, and though seconded by his comrades, who seemed all alike eager for violence, the door resisted his utmost efforts " Stand back, my darlings," said the miscreant, " I'll show you a trick worth two of this ; I'll teach you how we bring out a bounce from a bolted chamber in little Ireland ;" so saying he proceeded to prime a pistol, having previously hammered the flint with a little steel cross, curiously chased and ornamented which he took from his bosom. " Now come on, my arty boys—my souls of boys ; the boy that wont do as I do, deserves to be whipped through purgatory." In a moment the door opened. Miles Colvine stood on the threshold, a cocked pistol in his right hand, his sword gleaming in the other, his eyes shooting from them a fierce dark light but his manner perfectly calm and collected. Behind him came the beautiful form of his daughter, and with her right hand on his shoulder, and shuddering from head to foot, as the naughter peril which seemed to beset her father. These maritime desperadoes started back at this sudden apparition of an armed man, and even their insolent leader, forward as he was, recoiled a pace or two The mariner eyed him for a moment, and said, " Did my sword and then do its work upward ? and the very sea not devour these thou immeasureable villain ? but God has given thee back to earth, to become a warning how men and how certain just vengeance is." And long as he spoke, I saw the pistol flash, and the gleam of the descending sword, in almost the same instant. I instantly rushed in with my companions, and the smugglers, perceiving his sudden reinforcement, carried off their companion, roaring, and cursing, and vowing ; and calling their boat from the shore, vanished along the misty bosom of the summer sea.

STRICTURES ON A WORK recently Published, and entitled "OBSERVATIONS ON THE STATE OF THE COLONY."

No. XIII.

"Ferdinand Mendez Pinto, was but a type of these, thou Prince of Liars!"

Old Play.

Since writing the preceding Strictures, we have been at some pains to ascertain the real sentiments of the more sensible, well-meaning, and loyal portion of the emigrant settlers, and we find their opinions so consonant with our own upon this important subject (of course we mean the amount of fees payable on grants of land to a certain extent) that we cannot refrain from giving them to our readers, though we utterly abjure all intention of dictating to those who have the power of regulating and deciding on these matters.—What we are going to state has always been our own opinion, and observation and inquiry have confirmed its propriety, and it would give us no small pleasure to see it acted upon. It is this:—

Let the pauper emigrants have 50 acres without being at any cost; let those who wish for 100 acres have that quantity on payment of the old fees of £5 14s. 9d. Sterling; and let those who want 200 acres have that quantity on payment of £12 Sterling; and let all the larger Grants be on the new fees, and under the new regulations, and we are pretty sure that no complaints would be heard from any quarter, that could be entitled to the smallest consideration. So many more persons would take the grants of 100 and 200 acres, than is now the case, that the funds of this department would be greatly increased, and the office fees on the small gratuitous grants would be therefore scarcely felt. Nor could the capitalist, who wished to speculate on large grants, have any just cause of complaint, when it is considered that the Government of the United States sell their wild lands, even in the most remote situations, and generally speaking, of a greatly inferior quality, for two dollars per acre.

It seems to have been amongst the objects of the unfortunate author; whom we have felt ourselves bound to criticise, to do away with the oath of allegiance;—but surely, if it is ever necessary to take an oath, it is necessary, situated as this country is, to have this oath administered without distinction as to the countries from whence the applicant may come. Not only aliens and strangers, but frequently disaffected persons from Great Britain, come amongst us: it must no doubt be a bitter pill to them, but why it should be objected to by those who are well-affected to the British Government, is hard to conceive. It is a suspicious circumstance when a man, who has no religious scruples of conscience respecting the lawfulness of oaths in other countries, he makes any difficulty, in taking the Oath of Allegiance, on becoming a permanent resident here.

Another of the abominable falsehoods of this writer, is the assertion, (see p. 15) that an alien who may have fought against this country, is entitled to advantages and privileges which a British Subject, who has fulfilled all his duties to his Sovereign and to his country, cannot enjoy!!! Is it not notorious that an alien cannot hold lands in fee-simple from the British Crown?—But upon the lying varlet, out upon him, the truth is not in him.

But it is time, judging of the feelings of our readers, by our own, that we brought these Strictures to a close. It is painful to view any outward deformity of the human figure, but it is infinitely worse to be forced into the contemplation of mental depravity; a beautiful form, and a countenance adorned by the smiles of virtue, tell us that we are children of the light, and heirs of heaven; a hideous aspect, a lying tongue, and a heart full of wickedness, but too plainly remind us of a fallen state, and the danger of an endless perdition. It has been our melancholy task to confront more impudence and falsehood, in proportion to the bulk of the vehicle which contains it, than it has ever been our lot to review, and we do most sincerely hope, and trust, we shall be spared any future labours of a similar kind. We might have pointed out many more instances of misrepresentation, and of a total disregard of truth, but we consider that our readers are as tired as ourselves, and we forbear.

When we first took this pamphlet "on the State of the Colony" into our hands, we were so much disgusted, that it was our intention to have gone to our bottles of strongest aquafortis, gall, and wormwood; and to have treated the author with some severity; but we own, the name given in the title-page, in a great degree disarmed us; we knew but of one in this country of that name, and we were fearful of hurting his feelings;—yet after a little reflection, we could not believe that one who possesses so much of the assurance in words, whose countenance expresses so much of the demigod,—whose whole figure and deportment is manly,—whose eye beams with benevolence and an universal love to mankind,—an eye full of the softness, brilliancy, and sweetness of the Antelope,—facinating as the glance of the basilisk, but without its fatality;—a man whom no one can see perambulate the streets of York, without being secured there upon a sum of the people;—a patriot;—a friend;—a father;—a brother;—the defender of his country; and, the asserter of its rights; but neither an adviser of Cabinet Ministers;—a Dictator of Parliaments,—nor a Terror to Governors; and it must surely be an impossible for him to write or utter lying calumnies, as that the children of darkness and of iniquity, can delight in the beams of the sun of righteousness. He has shown himself to be of a charitable disposition, and it may be that he has lent his name, (knowing how great a sanctuary it would prove,) to some luckless wight, the very scum and off scouring of a wretched defaming society of profligate radicals. If this is the case, in God's name let him do so no more:—his title to favor, great as it is, will in its protecting power and influence; our battles of wits and corrosives will be resorted to, the gates of our mercy will be closed; and the unhappy victim consigned to the utmost vengeance of retributive justice.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OBSERVER.

SIR,—The philosopher and moralist is frequently employed in the contemplation of the various classes and denominations of the votaries of ambition, who pursue their assiduous avocations in this world of bustle and activity. It is likewise matter of speculation, to observe the diversified materials they press into the service of their particular aims, and the petticoat of conciliation they are constantly stitching together where they are at a loss for system and congruity—at least, the appearance of them—and the endless dirty subterfuges to which some classes of them have continual resort, in order to keep a chain of some sort of connection in their system, that the heedless spectator, or the dupe of their artifice may be led to imagine they are really removing mountains. There is one genus of this great family that surpasses all the others in many of its qualities; and though it may possess a difficultivity in many respects, yet it carries a general family resemblance: I mean public patriots and reformers, who, from a kind of prodigate necessity, or a paramount obligation to do mischief, which they have generously imposed upon themselves, put their shoulders to the wheels of discord, and with the lash of satanic malevolence drive on the wild beasts of faction, until they either beat their own brains out against the rocks of correct principle, or stick fast in mire of degradation, into which they thought to plunge the objects of their malice.

I was led into the above thought upon perusing the invidious and malicious remarks, found under the Editorial head of your paper of the 10th ult upon the toasts given at the annual celebration of the Talbot Anniversary, the account of which you inserted in a forgoing column, apparently for the purpose of making those remarks. As the Talbot Anniversary is celebrated for local purposes, no man can be so silly as to think the omission, you would appear so significantly to notice, had any meaning at all, much less the one you have foisted upon the Gentleman, who are as little inclined to accept of the coarse and unmanly compliment you have so impudently and voluntarily presumed to offer them, as to join the scurrilous Editor of a nasty newspaper in insulting the lore of Billingsgate upon "the ruler of the people," of whom "thou shalt not speak evil." As to their being men "capable of judging of the merits of all parties," you might be assured, if you had any knowledge of their opinions or conduct, that they do know how to estimate, by the rules of good manners, common honesty, and a proper respect for religion and morality, as they deserve, your very praiseworthy and virtuous labors to rescue "the rising generation of this infant colony" from that demoralization you seem to fear. And indeed there is a vast difference between the patriotism with which they are warmed, and that which you would attribute to them; and they look with a proper pity and contempt upon the folly and wickedness of the man that would eat his morsel, purchased at the expense of every great principle.

I am, Sir, &c.

POETRY.

THE POET'S TOMB.

How sweet rests the poet's head
Beneath the turf, his silent bed,
He need not envy all the great,
Nor all their monumental state;
His is a stone that cannot die,
The sleep of immortality.

His lyre is mute, his hand is cold,
But oh! how blest'd his hallow'd mould?
Genius shall leave his lofty sphere
To look within and drop a tear;
Fame shall entwine the laurel round,
And unseen lips shall kiss the ground.

DOMESTIC.

A gentleman who arrived here a few days ago and left London on the 10th May, has furnished the intelligence that a bill for the union of the Legislature of the Canadas had either been brought into the Imperial Parliament before he left England or was certainly to be brought in, in a few days. No doubts existed that it would ultimately pass into a Law.—Quebec Gazette.

Arrived this season, 4507 settlers—two hundred and ninety vessels.—Quebec Mercury, July 24.

At present our City has perhaps more company of the mercantile character than we have seen at any other season, for many years; and business is brisk in proportion. It would seem that the hard times of which we have long been complaining are now about to subside, and a regular state of affairs to take their place. The inducement given by the free circulation of cash during the late war, to persons to commence business upon unsafe ground; the revulsion consequent to such an excitement after the cause of it had ceased to exist; and the attendant depression of trade, arising from an overstock of the materials, and the scarcity of money, have operated very seriously against the merchants of this country; but the evil will gradually decrease; and even at present, we see symptoms of the return into proper and safe channels of that commerce which has for some years experienced an unnatural bias—first of the most prosperous tendency, and latterly of an equally disastrous nature, Canadian Courant.

We have it on the authority of private letters from Montreal, that the bill for the union of the Provinces had been prepared by His Majesty's Ministers, and that it was to be immediately submitted to the consideration of Parliament. This is an important corroboration of our first reports on the subject.—Kingston Chronicle.

We have received the first number of the ALBION published in New-York which has for some time been announced; we shall defer a more particular notice of it until our next than is contained in the following paragraph from a Boston Paper:—

"The leading object of the paper is stated to be to furnish more full intelligence of the internal condition of the British Empire than is afforded by any American Journal, for the gratification of the numerous subjects and natives of Great Britain and Ireland resident in this country. It is conducted by an English gentlemen who has been for three or four years past an inhabitant of this town, and who is by his learning, talents and literary taste well qualified to conduct a publication of this sort. We have no doubt that it will be a paper extremely interesting, not only to the subjects and natives of Great Britain, but to many others who may wish to be more fully informed than they can be through the ordinary channels, of the politics, history, and literature of that country. It is handsomely printed, on a large sheet, in the quarto form, and we are happy to learn that from the high literary reputation of the editor, it has already received the assurance of an extensive support."

Death.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—May 6.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

The House having resolved itself into a committee, for the further consideration of the agricultural report,

The Marquis of Londonderry rose to move the resolution for making advances to the holders of corn, when the average price of wheat shall be under 60s. per qr. In order that the House might clearly see the principle they were called upon to consider, it would be proper to notice the two chief propositions which had been discussed in the agricultural Committee. One was for the purchase of corn by an agent of Government, when it should be at a stated low price—the other was for encouraging, by bounties the purchases of private individuals; because it was considered, that the purchaser of corn for the Government would not have the exact sort of influence which was desirable. Looking at the other proposition, the Committee thought they might adopt it, and afford relief without violating any general principle. The whole policy of this proposed arrangement arose out of the circumstances noticed by the Committee, respecting the state of the market. They found that the quantity of corn brought to market in the early months of the year, doubled the quantity brought within the same months in several preceding years. —(Hear, hear.) From this they inferred, and very naturally, that the market this year displayed a superabundance, which caused a ruinous competition among the sellers. The latter could not reduce the interest they were paying upon mortgages, although the prices had thus fallen; and a measure of some description was therefore tho't necessary, because the market was not in a natural state—indeed, it was obvious, that if the number of sellers became doubled, while that of buyers remained stationary, there must be a losing competition among the former. It was therefore conceived, that if additional purchases could be created, it would counteract the disposition to inundate the market. He must here observe, that it was by no means a fair description of the present measure, to say that it merely proposed to raise the price of corn: in fact, a convenient distribution was all that was desired. This would be accompanied by giving additional degree of facility to purchases. He really thought that the idea of a law to raise prices had long since been exploded in that House. One advantage of the proposed measure was that if it did no good, it certainly could do no harm, and this he believed the House would consider of no mean advantage when they were trying an experiment.—(A laugh.) If corn should not rise, no one would suffer from the measure; and if it should rise, the agricultural interest would be relieved from the multiplied distress with which it was at present surrounded. He certainly had not voted for this plan in the Committee; his own proposal had not been adopted, and he had therefore left the whole subject to the consideration of the Committee, and it was in deference to the judgment of that Committee that he brought the proposal before the House for its favourable opinion. After an eulogium on the character and talent of the Members composing the Committee, the noble Marquis proceeded to observe, that he learned from many of those Members, that the measure now proposed was that which the farmers thought would afford them the most relief. Whether they were right or wrong in this conjecture, he believed the House would be sorry to reject a favorite proposition, which at all events, was harmless; for the farmers, if it were rejected, would not very unnaturally, attribute the continuance of their distress to its rejection. The noble Marquis then moved the resolution, which has been already before the public, authorising the advance of one million upon corn in warehouse, when the average price of wheat shall be under 60s. per qr.

Mr. Huskisson would give his reasons for objecting to this resolution. He had gathered from his Noble Friend that this was a temporary and not a permanent measure; and his objection to it mainly was the time at which it was proposed to be applied. Many of the most distressed farmers were no longer sellers of corn, but buyers to support the poor of their parishes. This must add to the distress of the small farmers, until the next harvest. Every practical surveyor could tell who was the most distressed farmer, by looking at his stack-yard. He was satisfied that this assistance by loan would be an injury to the small farmers. Besides, if it were objectionable to lend money on any one article more than another, it was on the deposit of corn. On the —th of September, corn was at 55s. and in twenty days more it was 70s. to 78s. He would agree with his Noble Friend, that killdried damaged corn would not be a safe speculation to lend money on. If we had a good harvest and well got in, no one would buy this damaged corn if they could get sound. Besides, to lend damaged corn, would be an inducement to farmers to damage their good corn. The prices as between landlord and tenant, were fast adjusting themselves; and he thought were fast adjusting themselves; and he thought they had better not meddle with a measure which they had better not meddle with a measure which they had better not meddle with a measure which and resolution, before the committee entered into the question; and as the time was now so late, he thought it would be better to postpone the discussion to another night.

Mr. Estcourt wished to know whether it was the Noble Lord's intention that the second resolution should follow the fate of the first?—A laugh.)

The Marquis of Londonderry said, that the debate would come better after his statement, and suggested that the Chairman should report progress, and obtain leave for the Committee to sit again. If that course should meet the feelings of the House, and the Noble Lord (A. Hamilton,) whose motion stood for to-morrow, would consent to postpone it, the (Lord Londonderry) would propose that the debate on the second resolution should take place to-morrow.

Lord A. Hamilton consented to postpone his motion on that understanding. Adjourned.

May 7.—The House in a Committee on the agricultural report.

The Marquis of Londonderry wished to call the attention of the House to the danger of an immense importation of foreign corn. The leading point was, at what price the ports should be opened; and from the ample stores on the Continent, there was danger of the country being inundated with them. The price now at which the ports might be opened was 60s.; but there was no limit as to the quantity to be imported. He did not believe that by giving protection, the price at the same time could be given. In all ordinary years the price of 70s. would amount to a prohibition. He should have no objection to vote either for the Chancellor of the Exchequer or the Member for Portarlington. In his own opinion the ports might be opened at 65s. subject to a duty of 20s. to which was to be added 10s. more for the expense of importation. But in legislating upon this subject, regard was to be had to public opinion. He was not, therefore, disposed to alter in the first instance, the present rate at which corn might be imported; and that had been the opinion of the Committee. The Member for Somerset (Sir T. B. Lethbridge) had proposed 35s. of duty on an article that fetched from 80s. to 90s. in the market. It was, in fact, equivalent to a prohibition. A nearly similar objection applied to the duty proposed by the Member for Wilts, who wished for a permanent duty of 24s. and 10s. as the expence of importation. The Member for Portarlington wished for a permanent duty; and in the first instance the duty was to be 70s. The Chancellor of the Exchequer had, in the first instance, proposed a duty of 15s. which, as the price of corn rose, was to be reduced to 5s. and ultimately to 1s. He would prefer a fixed duty, rather than having any opening price whatever, or a duty by an increasing scale. He therefore considered, that the recommendation of his Right Hon. Friend should be adopted. Still he could not hope to persuade the country to the adoption of a measure like that of a permanent duty. He must, therefore look to the scale of duties; and if they were not to make an alteration in the scale of duty until corn came to 80s. which would be 90s. in our market, then with 25s. duty, the price would be 65s. to the foreign importer. This would be a circumstance ruinous to the home market. The foreign corn in warehouse was at 25s. because the holder did not know when he could get a home market for it. This, however, was not a price at which the Continent could always afford to supply us with corn. But as the Continent was in an unnatural state as well as ourselves as to the price of corn, then he could understand that there should be a protecting duty for the time laid upon it. Still he was of opinion, that all such restrictions were hurtful to the interest of nations. He had not seen any reason why his Right Hon. Friend's suggestion of a permanent duty should be adopted, and therefore he was inclined to agree with the suggestion of last year's Committee, which was that the import price should be fixed at a lower rate, before a fixed duty should be imposed. He saw no reason for a change in the circumstances of the world, since last year, which would call for an alteration in import price and duty. He had, in the Committee, wished that the ports should open at 65s. with a scale of duty; but that did not meet the opinion of the Committee, but they wished a duty of 12s. when the price should be above 80s. He would take the duty, however, at 15s. or 20s rather than leave the country in its present perilous state. With that laudable anxiety for agricultural distress, they ought to take care not to awaken the jealousy of the rest of the country. He was endeavouring to manage this matter with as even a hand as possible for both parties. His resolution would be, that the ports should not be opened till the price was at 80s. allowing importation duty at 70s. He then moved a resolution, that foreign corn should not be permitted to be imported, free from duty, until the price should be 80s. in the home market.

Sir T. Lethbridge was aware of the difficulty of legislating on articles of food; but it was necessary to provide a remedy for the existing evil. He should therefore move a resolution to protect the whole agricultural produce of the country. A merchant in the city had said, that he could afford foreign wheat of good quality at 26s. per quarter. It had been asked, what would they have beyond a monopoly. That was not true, for they had large importations of fore gn wheat which was waiting the price of 80s. Last week a quantity of butter was sold at 50s. a firkin, which could not be raised by the farmer under 70s. or 80s. Good Buckinghamshire butter could not be sold because the Dutch merchant had paid his 2d. in the pound duty on his butter, and sold it at a profit of 3d. per lb. It was in vain to tell him that they should confine this question of corn, or that protection could not be carried farther than monopoly. Some remedy must be found for these evils. He believed that, except in very scarce years, we were capable of growing sufficient for our own consumption; and then where was the necessity for the immense care taken of foreign importation? A merchant, in a Committee had said, that, with a duty of 40s. he would undertake to inundate the country with foreign corn. Members might not recollect that; but it made an impression on him that would not be easily effaced. The landholders had stood firm; and they would do so if not goaded to desperation by that abominable political economy now in vogue. He hoped the House would not support the propositions of the Noble Marquis. The Hon. Member concluded by moving the following resolution as an amendment to that proposed by the Noble Lord (Londonderry):—

"That it is expedient for the protection of the agriculture of the united kingdom against foreign competition, that the following rate of duties shall be payable on the import of any production of foreign countries similar to those of our own soil; and that, subject to such rates and duties, the import of all such productions shall, whenever the ports shall open under the present law, thereafter remain free for the import of all such productions, viz:—

Wheat	40s. per quar.	Hemp	15s. cwt.
Meal	10s. cwt.	Hides	2d lb.
Flour	14s. cwt.	Tallow	20s cwt.
Rye	26s. 6d. qur.	Seeds	28s cwt.
Oats	13s 6d. quar	Butter	56s cwt.
Peas	26s 6d quar.	Cheese	37s 6d. cwt.
Beans	26s 6d quar	Poultry, 33l. per cent. ad valorem according to price current.
Barley, Bear, or Bigg,	20s quar.
Wool	1s lb.	Apples	5s. per bush.
Flax	20s cwt	Pears	7s per bush

All things not enumerated 33l per cent. ad valorem.

Sir F. Burdett said, the Hon. Baronet, however erroneous, had stated a clear and intelligible proposition, which was more than the Noble Lord had done. His persuasion was, that the country would not be relieved by any restrictive measures in the importation of foreign corn.—The Noble Lord had appeared to him to be so little serious on this occasion, as he also was last evening; so much so, that if he (Sir F.) had a musical voice, he would reply to him by the line of the old song, "cease your funning." The Noble Lord had abandoned all carelessness about popular opinion; and now was inclined to yield to all interests. He rather thought the Noble Lord intended to treat his own child with as little tenderness as he had done that to which he was last night foster father, or nurse, or whatever he pleased to call himself. It was a bad reason for the Noble Lord, as a Minister, to give in to the opinions of the farmers, because the measure would do no injury. All delay did injury; and though the Noble Lord had referred to time, as a cure for the evil, yet time to things of this kind made all matters worse. The Noble Lord had made a bold hyperbole, that if the whole of the taxes were taken off, the country would receive no relief. If that were so, to what a state had Ministers reduced the country? The Prime Minister in another place had over and over again said, the evils arose from a superabundant production, but that was denied by the agricultural committee itself. It seemed that there had been a reduction in the currency of the country; and that he thought was a sufficient cause for the evils complained of. A diminution of the currency affected all interests in the country, but especially agriculture. Importing countries were all rich countries, and exporting ones were always poor. Whatever they might strive to do, without restrictive measures they would drive a number of poor on their parishes. He thought the landlords should have high rents, for then they would have prosperous farmers, manufacturers, and labourers. For the reason he liked high rents. He thought that it was idle to say that the present evils arose from Mr. Peel's bill; for the mischiefs had operated before that bill was proposed. The fact was, that Government was from time to time acting fraudulently with each separate interest. Ministers should have been impeached for not providing for the ruin brought on by the alteration of the currency, which had enhanced the evils of all the taxes; while all the means of corruption were increased to them. In the reign of William III. and other times, when there was a new coinage, the old coin was taken at its full value for taxes, &c. Unless they looked at the standard of value, the remission of taxes would do no good. It was too much to burden this country with a civil list of two millions a year. They should soon relieve the people from every slight sum, for the proverb said it was the last hair that broke the camel's back. He hoped the Noble Lord, who had got rid of the Postmaster General would persevere. He might find other useless offices. There was no difficulty in the search; for he might find some new diplomatic appointment which required pruning. The country Gentlemen were entitled to respect, because they could not take wing, and be off like others—they must stand or fall with their county. But he was sure they would not sacrifice their estates, or the liberties of their country, to the blind and vascillating policy of Ministers, with which the Noble Lord had insulted them. He ridiculed the various schemes which Ministers had proposed and abandoned. The next thing to be considered was the excessive taxation. Without these considerations, there could be no relief for the country. Instead of the House occupying itself in such measures as that now before it, attention should be paid to the state of the currency, to the civil list, and to the whole public expenditure; and above all things, a free corn trade; and if all other trades were free also, he was persuaded it would be for the benefit of the country. The Hon Baronet then adverted to the conduct of the Noble Lord, who, he said, by first proposing and then abandoning measures, and thereby plainly proving he did not know what to do, had proved himself incompetent to the high situation in which he was placed—to continue him in it would be to risk the ruin of the country. The imbecility of those whose superior talents ought to guide us, placed us in a more dangerous situation, than any we were placed in during the arduous contest in which we had been engaged; and the house would stultify itself by submitting longer to be governed by such a set of men as those who now held the reins of government; and he believed nothing but a change of men could save the country.

Mr. Robinson thought, in the present situation of the country, and in considering the importance of the question now before the house, the Hon. Bart would better have discharged his duty by discussing the merits of the proposition before them, than making such an attack as he had done on administration.

If the Hon. Baronet really believed that nothing but a change of Ministers would save the country, let him fairly bring the question forward, and he, for one, should have no fears in meeting him. The propositions thrown out by the Hon. Baronet went to a repeal of taxation to such an extent as could only be effected by a reduction in the currency of the country; and that he thought was a sufficient cause for the evils complained of. A diminution of the currency affected all interests in the country, but especially agriculture. Importing countries were all rich countries, and exporting ones were always poor. Whatever they might strive to do, without restrictive measures they would drive a number of poor on their parishes. STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

DISTURBANCES IN IRELAND.

The next alledged cause is the effect of illicit distillation.

Unhappily, this feature in the condition of Ireland is sufficiently obvious, and is at once a cause of distress and a circumstance of disorder. But this practice likewise arose from the two peculiar circumstances in the general condition of the Irish population—the non-residence of the native gentry, and the imperfect civilization of the lower orders. The pernicious propensity to the extravagant use of spirituous liquors always exist en congeri in societies approaching nearest to a state of nature. The use of such excitements is the sole remedy for the painful listlessness of savage life. The imperfect civilization of the Irish poor leads them to this sad resource. The absence of their native gentry removes the supervision and control of their natural protectors. They are thus left to themselves, and follow where the precipitate misery of their condition leads them. But the habits of smugglers are from the outset the habits of outlaws; they become too easily, and by too natural a progress, the habits of more atrocious criminals. There can be no doubt both of the bearing of this cause on the general distress of the country, and of its extent. But on the part of government, no efforts have been neglected to check the progress of this mischief.

In the year 1820, a bill was introduced into Parliament by the Chancellor of Exchequer, for extending the practice of Scotland into Ireland, and allowing the use of small legalised stills, of a capacity to contain not less than a hundred gallons, by all persons who should make a proper entry. It is to be hoped that this measure will have the same beneficial effect in Ireland as in Scotland, where it has assisted both landlord and farmer, by raising the price of oats and barley, and inciting the consumption of the produce of those articles in a legal manner. If this measure and other measures directed against the evil of illicit distillation, should turn out to be nugatory, the fault surely cannot rest with his Majesty's ministers. The principle of this measure was solicited by the Irish members themselves, as the representatives of the public opinion in their own country.

It was only with the same purpose of effectually eradicating this most mischievous practice, that the government so long maintained the salutary measure, originally introduced into the Irish parliament, that of making districts responsible for unlicensed stills discovered within their precincts. But the Irish gentry themselves complained of the extreme severity of this law, and in compliance with the general feelings of his majesty's ministers consented to relax it. The Irish Spirits Bill was brought in with this purpose. But so sensible were his Majesty's ministers of the real character of this measure, and of its mere partial utility, that the accompanied the introduction of the bill by observations almost protesting against it. But the Irish members insisted, and the bill was accordingly carried. If illicit distillations have since increased, if the stewards, middle-men, and resident factors, of absentee proprietors, have since countenanced this practice—if the produce of the illicit still be employed to pay the exactions of these sub-landlords—if a system of most pernicious toleration, not to say actual connivance, have originated upon a repeal of the old acts: if the charges of the judges, and the exhortation of the superior magistrates, be nullified by the known practice of men in power and influence, how decidedly innocent amongst themselves; if all these evils have arisen from the actual repeal (for so it may be called) of the old Silt Fines Bill, the fault must not, at least, be imputed to his Majesty's ministers.

The next, and last alledged head, comprehends in substance some loose complaints against the local magistracy of the country, and a more formal recommendation, that government should try the effect of stronger measures. In a brief examination of this head, the enquiry discloses itself into that trite question, first, whether stronger measures were required at the period of this recommendation, 1820; and, secondly, whether a state of things may not arise (perhaps has arisen since) which may unquestionably require the introduction of stronger restraints.

In the year 1820 his Majesty's ministers certainly declined the application, on the part of some gentlemen, magistrates of Ireland, to renew the provisions of the Insurrection Act. They saw no necessity for the renewal of this act under the circumstances of those times. The existing statutes appeared to have produced their full effect. The memorials alledged disturbances in Galway, Clare, and Mayo. But the disturbances in Clare had been effectually suppressed by the active efforts of the resident gentry. The disturbances in Galway had been more considerable, but they had been soon quieted in that county likewise by the concurrent effect of the zealous efforts of the local magistracy, and by the Peace Preservation Bill. In Mayo the resident gentry had suppressed them almost as soon as they appeared. Thus government saw no necessity, at that period at least, for any measure required by the failure of the existing acts. Nor has there any thing in the character of these extraordinary measures to recommend their adoption upon their own merits. During the last fifty years, it had been the constant effort of successive administrations in Ireland, to relieve themselves and the country from the system of extraordinary measures, by which that kingdom had been governed during the two preceding centuries. Expedience had taught the true character of this system. If it put down the evil for the present, it sheltered its re-appearance with increased malignity for the future. It put out the fire by kicking about the brands. It repressed the disturbance for the time, but provoked retaliating passions, which afterwards broke out with increased outrages. It is the character of a free government, and of fixed constitutional laws, that such a government should operate more by its influence than by its power; and that being recognised by every one system of equal protection, it should command obedience, more from the feeling of general prudence and common interest, than under terror and intimidation. It is contrary to all principle, to hold forth the law, to a whole people, as an angry and vindictive avenger, instead of a benevolent and paternal protector. His Majesty's ministers acted under these principles. They saw the necessity of doing something for the Irish people in the way of gradual discipline. It was more consonant with the personal feelings of his Majesty's ministers to conciliate than to menace, and amongst means equally efficient for the same end, to prefer those of lenity, moderation, and forbearance.

As to the second point of the question, whether a state of things may not arise to render necessary a resort to stronger measures, it admits only of one answer—that, under the actual state of the country, composed of such elements, a condition of this kind unquestionably may arise. But it will then be time enough to consider the necessity of such measures. Assuredly, under circumstances of actual necessity, it would be contrary to the benevolence of government to renew the insurrection act. Is it forgotten, that this statute is almost the Curfew Act of King William? It forbade the inhabitants of the disturbed districts to be absent from their houses from sun-set to sun-rise. It established a perpetual sessions, composed not of judges, but of magistrates. Every person apprehended might be taken on the spot to this sessions, and without a grand jury, or a petty jury, on the sole opinion of the magistrates of these sessions, be condemned to transportation for seven years. But will it even be objected to a British ministry, that under the influence of another system of government, and personally accustomed to an administration upon different principles, they felt a natural reluctance to renew the provisions of an act of this kind, and that they were slow to invest themselves with this tremendous power. If they had consulted only the facility of administration, they would have naturally coveted the possession of a power, which, however severe towards its objects, could necessarily be effectual in its end. If they had consulted only the present interest, the readiest means were the best, and the most powerful were the readiest. But they could not forget that Ireland had suffered much under the erroneous system of former times, and that the excesses of one period by her population, threw was much to commiserate, as well as to punish. Upon these principles, the administration of Irish affairs has been directed towards the two objects—of attempting improvements by a gradual return to the ordinary progress of law and government; and apply force only on those occasions, where local disturbances might demand it. If new excesses, and in an alarming degree, should require the renewal of the Insurrection Act, renewed it must be, however the occasion may be lamented.

But his Majesty's ministers have never for a moment overlooked the actual situation of Ireland, and have attempted to improve it, more by a course of gradual discipline and the reform of pressing evils, than by any precipitate measures. To say one who will cast his eyes over the history of Irish legislation, for the last twenty years, these remarks will be obvious. From bringing round the habits of the people to the influence of this principle of amelioration by measured steps, and by bringing round the habits of the people to the influence of better morals, as well as of fixed laws, have arisen innumerable acts. By the Irish Preservation Bill, his Majesty's ministers endeavored to return by one step towards the maintenance of public order in Ireland by the ordinary administration of justice. They saw a disposition towards the severity of the Irish Insurrection act; retaining so much only of the rigor of that statute, as was unhappily still necessary to restrain the excesses of the disturbed districts.—The object of this was to assimilate, as nearly as possible the local administration of the law. In the two kingdoms. If the local magistracy of Ireland, (it is said, without offence and speaking only generally, and with numerous exceptions) be still very far removed from the country magistracy in England, the fault is not from any want of effort on the part of his Majesty's ministers, but in that prominent feature in the condition of Ireland—the absence of the great local proprietors. It is impossible for government to work without suitable subject matter. It is impossible to procure in Ireland the same weight, and condition, habits and respectability, which characterize the magistracy of England. It was under the sense of this inconvenience, that Government endeavored to repair it by a provisional magistracy, appointed from the bar. Here again, is another example of difficulty; the intentions of his Majesty's ministers have been illiberally slandered, this most salutary measure being supported more to a desire of augmenting their patronage, than of improving the local administration of the laws. The Grand Jury presentment bill was a measure of a similar character, its object was to cure an abuse leading to much practical oppression. But a still more useful measure of the same kind was the sanction of government of its ancient appointment sheriffs of counties. Here ministers gave up a very important portion of the patronage of the crown. But it is unnecessary to enter into a further detail of the numerous measures flowing from the same principle; that of gradually amending the administration of law in Ireland, and of depriving step by step, from that extreme and rigorous system, which had effected the good will of the two countries.

It is but just, however, to add, in conclusion of this subject, that none of the present distractions in Ireland can be ascribed to religious differences—Catholics and Protestants, are alike sufferers and aggressors. It is but rank faction, therefore, to refer her present state to tythes, taxes, and the absence of a complete Catholic emancipation.

THE FRISONER.

FROM THE HERMIT IN THE COUNTRY, OR SKETCHES OF ENGLISH MANNERS.

Here I dip,
My sword, and do contest
As not and nobly with thy love,
As ever, in ambitious strength, I did
Against thy valour.

SHAKESPEARE.

The duty of forgiveness has ever appeared to me not only to be imperative, but to carry with it an elevating magnanimity—mingled with the most soothing sensation. In pardoning an injury, the heart dilates, and our poor mansion seems to be illuminated by the rays of immortality. We feel exalted without intemperance—humble without debasement; we seem to borrow from the intended injury, and while we discharge a most sacred duty imposed on us by the Most High, we are paid an hundred fold by feeling that all within us is peace, harmony, gentleness and love. To love the man who has injured us, is still of a degree of elevation above generous forgiveness: 'tis a higher step towards the regions of celestial refulgence; a brighter jewel in the diadem of perfection to which we ought to aspire.

While musing on these truths, and turning over the rare instances of this kind which we meet within our voyage thro' life, the following story recurred to my memory just as it was related to me by a relation, who was at the time a Midshipman in the British Navy. It may lose a little by my narration, as it is impossible for me to give it, its genuine cast, told as it was by all the blunt but noble feeling of one who is a Briton and a Seaman to the heart's core; and whose changeful countenance by turns assumed the features of the Lion and the Lamb, whose affections were all flying outwards as his feelings came more and more into play—as the revived interest of tender reminiscence rekindled in his breast. I must content myself therefore by simply relating the story, leaving my reader and his sensibility to himself; and if I fail in execution, yet I am convinced of one truth, namely, that it is a duty of a most gratifying nature, where we can do it, to hold out example of what is great and good, to serve as copies to our fellow men.

"It was a few minutes past meridian (said my young relation) when the French Captain came on board. The sun shone uncommon bright, and seemed to add a lustre to our victory. The vessel which he commanded had suffered severely in the action; and the deck was covered with the dead, the dying, and the wounded. We carried her by boarding, previous to which we suffered a good deal, by having a great part of our rigging shot away, and many of our people picked off by the Riflmen, in the tops of the enemies ship. Both crews did their duty.

The features of the French Captain's countenance bore the impression of manly fortitude, not unused to dangers and disappointments, but unsettled by fear of any kind, and above every species of dishonour.

"There was a nobility even in his submission to the fortune of War, which seemed to say like Francis the first of France, "nous avons tout perdu, hormis l'honneur." His stature was above the middle size; his complexion dark and weather-bea ten; but there was comeliness in the character o his features, and he had a fine Roman Nose, an dark Eye, which, however, was sunk more fro various climates and hardships, than from age, and its fire somewhat dissipated from disappointed hopes.

"Our Captain met him with kindness and urbanity; he returned it by a smile, which vainly tried to triumph over defeat, and to rise superior to misfortune.

"When called upon to deliver his sword, he drew it slowly from the scabbard, and glancing a look of regret and disappointment upon its blade, as much as to say, Alas! thou hast failed me in the hour of trial," he broke it across his knee, and threw it into the Sea; and whilst a tear of indignation stood in his eye, he exclaimed, "put me in irons if you please; refuse me my Parole, keep me in Prison, "unexchanged until the War, or my life conclude; "but my Honor and Sword go together, and I can- "not surrender them to any Man."

Our Captain stepp'd back a moment, in silent amazement and admiration; then springing forward with both hands extended, to meet and grasp his, in friendly union, he assured him, that had he gone through the ceremony of giving up his sword, it should have been instantly returned him, and that so far from bearing enmity to him, for what he had done, he valued and respected him the more for it. "Be assured, my Brother," said he, "that a British "Seaman knows how to respect courage in a foe, as "well as in a friend."

The eyes of the whole crew were on him, and there was not a Sailor in the Ship, whose heart did not lean towards him. So is valor the same, in whatever climate, or whatever soil, it may exist. The Oak is still the Oak, whether it grow on the mountain or in the plain, whether it flourish in all its beauty, in a friendly climate, or perish blasted with its hopes and pride, in the barren desert, or on the flinty rock. I need not say the Captain was treated with friendship. Friendship!!! (here my young friend swore a round oath) Friendship is nothing; he was treated more like a brother, for the kindness which he received from all was enhanced by high consideration.

Our Captain lost no time in applying for his exchange, and as we were now off the coast of France, we determined on landing him and all his property, at every risk, on a remote spot. His gentlemanlike deportment had gained particularly the young hearts of us Midshipmen, who he noticed greatly, calling the Cockpit the nursery of Heroes, and testifying his esteem for us on every occasion. We therefore begged permission to man the Boat, and put him ashore ourselves, which we accordingly did.

It would be impossible to paint his parting with us. In vain did he offer his Ring, his Gold Snuff-Box, his purse, and many other little valuables, in token of gratitude to our officers and crew. He was told that to receive them would be not to respect property, as well as person. Arrived on the beach, his strength of mind failed him, or rather his feelings prevailed over a Warrior's pride. Bursting into a flood of tears, he exclaimed, "can these be foes? no, all brave men are friends and brother! and shall I never behold ye again? shall I not have the happiness when peace returns, of presenting you to my family, of planting you in the hearts and bosoms of all who are dear to me, of pourtraying in true colours the British character, to my admiring neighbours, and of shewing the brave defenders o. the British Isles in a proper point of view? If ever Victory should put a Briton in my power, how kindly, how fondly will I treat him!"—"His tongue faltered. The light was decreasing. He embraced us all. We then motioned him three cheers in silence with our Hats. We looked our last in mute regard, and pulled off precipitately from the shore; not a word escaped us. We saw him pass his hand across his eyes, when our Boat was lessening on his view. We now stopped the motion of the Boat, remained for a few seconds with our Oars, then gave him the last wave of our Hats, and gained our Ship; every bosom feeling a divided sentiment of Ship; every bosom feeling a divided sentiment of satisfaction and regret,—satisfaction that a brave man should be set free, regret that brave and feeling hearts should ever be separated." Such was my young relatives story, and at the moment he told it to me, I felt as if I had rather be the Captain of a man of War, than

POETRY.

THE NIGHT-BLOWING STOCK,

"Come! look at this plant, with its narrow pale leaves,
And its tall, slim, delicate stem,
Thinly studded with flowers—yes, with flowers—there they
Don't you see, at each joint there's a little brown star?
But in truth, there's no beauty in them."

"So, you ask, why I keep it, the little mean thing!
Why I stick it up here just in sight?
'Tis a fancy of mine."—"A strange fancy!" you say,
"No accounting for tastes—In this instance you may,
For the flower—but I'll tell you to night

"Some six hours hence, when the Lady Moon
Looks down on that bastion'd wall,
When the twinkling stars dance silently
On the rippling surface of the sea,
And the heavy night dews fall,

"Then meet me again in this casement niche,
On the spot where we're standing now,
Nay, question not wherefore—perhaps with me
To look out on the night, and the bright broad sea
And to hear its majestic flow."

* * * * * * * *

"Well, we're met here again; and the moonlight sleeps
On the sea and the bastion'd wall;
And the flowers there below—how the night wind brings
Their delicious breath on its dewy wings!"
"But there's one," say you, "sweeter than all!"

"Which is it? the mirtle or jessamine,
Or their sovereign lady the rose?
Or the heliotrope, or the virgin's lower?
What! neither?"—"On no, 'tis some other flower,
Far sweeter than either of those."

"Far sweeter! and where, think you, groweth the plant
That exhaleth such perfume rare?
Look about, up and down, but take care, or you'll break

dwelth of counties. Here ministers gave up a very important portion of the patronage of the crown But it is unnecessary to enter into a further detail of the numerous measures flowing from the same principle; that of gradually amending the administration of law in Ireland, and of departing step by step, from that extreme and rigorous system, which had affected the good will of the two countries

It is but just, however, to add, in conclusion of this subject, that none of the present distractions in Ireland can be ascribed to religious differences—Catholics and Protestants, are alike sufferers and aggressors. It is but rank faction, therefore, to refer her present state to tythes, taxes, and the absence of a complete Catholic emancipation.

SHAKESPEARE.

The duty of forgiveness has ever appeared to me not only to be imperative, but to carry with it an elevating magnanimity—mingled with the most soothing sensation. In pardoning an injury, the heart dilates, and our poor mansion seems to be illuminated by the rays of immortality. We feel proud without intemperance—humble without debasement; we seem to borrow from the intended injury, and while we discharge a most sacred duty imposed on us by the Most High, we are paid an hundred fold by feeling that all within us is peace, harmony, gentleness and love To love the man who has injured us, is still of a degree of elevation above generous forgiveness: 'tis a higher step towards the regions of celestial refulgence; a brighter jewel in the diadem of perfection to which we ought to aspire.

While musing on these truths, and turning over the rare instances of this kind which we meet within our voyage thro' life, the following story recurred to my memory just as it was related to me by a relation, who was at the time a Midshipman in the British Navy. It may lose a little by my narration, as it is impossible for me to give it, its genuine cast, told as it was by all the blunt but noble feeling of one who is a Briton and a Seaman to the heart's core; and whose changeful countenance by turns assumed the features of the Lion and the Lamb, whose affections were all flying outwards as his feelings came more and more into play—as the revived interest of tender reminiscence rekindled in his breast. I must content myself therefore by simply relating the story, leaving my reader and his sensibility to himself; and if I fail in execution, yet I am convinced of one truth, namely, that it is a duty of a most gratifying nature, where we can do it, to hold out example of what is great and good, to serve as copies to our fellow men.

"It was a few minutes past meridian (said my young relation) when the French Captain came on board. The sun shone uncommon bright, and seemed to add a lustre to our victory. The vessel which he commanded had suffered severely in the action; and the deck was covered with the dead, the dying, and the wounded. We carried her by boarding, previous to which we suffered a good deal, by having a great part of our rigging shot away, and many of our people picked off by the Riflmen, in the tops of the enemies ship. Both crews did their duty.

The features of the French Captain's countenance bore the impression of manly fortitude, not unused to dangers and disappointments, but unsettled by fear of any kind, and above every species of dishonour.

"There was a nobility even in his submission to the fortune of War, which seemed to say like Francis the first of France, "nous avons tout perdu, hormis l'honneur." His stature was above the middle size; his complexion dark and weather-beaten; but there was comeliness in the character of his features, and he had a fine Roman Nose, and dark Eye, which, however, was sunk more from various climates and hardships, than from age, and its fire somewhat dissipated from disappointed hopes.

"Our Captain met him with kindness and urbanity; he returned it by a smile, which vainly tried to triumph over defeat, and to rise superior to misfortune.

"When called upon to deliver his sword, he drew it slowly from the scabbard, and glancing a look of regret and disappointment upon its blade, as much as to say, Alas! thou hast failed me in the hour of trial," he broke it across his knee, and threw it into the Sea; and whilst a tear of indignation stood in his eye, he exclaimed, "put me in Irons if you "please; refuse me my Parole, keep me in Prison, "unexchanged until the War, or my life conclude; "but my Honor and Sword go together, and I can- "not surrender them to any Man."

Our Captain stepped back a moment, in silent amazement and admiration; then springing forward with both hands extended, to meet and grasp his in friendly union, he assured him, that had he gone through the ceremony of giving up his sword, it should have been instantly returned him, and that so far from bearing enmity to him, for what he had done, he valued and respected him the more for it. "Be assured, my Brother," said he, "that a British "Seaman knows how to respect courage in a foe, as "well as in a friend."

The eyes of the whole crew were on him, and there was not a Sailor in the Ship, whose heart did not lean towards him. So is valor the same, in whatever climate, or whatever soil, it may exist. The Oak is still the Oak, whether it grow on the mountain or in the plain, whether it flourish in all its beauty, in a friendly climate, or perish blasted with its hopes and pride, in the barren desert, or on the flinty rock. I need not say the Captain was treated with friendship. Friendship!!! (here my young friend swore a round oath) Friendship is nothing; he was treated more like a brother, for the kindness which he received from all was enhanced by high consideration.

Our Captain lost no time in applying for his exchange, and as we were now off the coast of France, we determined on landing him and all his property, at every risk, on a remote spot. His gentlemanlike deportment had gained particularly the young hearts of us Midshipmen, who he noticed greatly, calling the Cockpit the nursery of Heroes, and testifying his esteem for us on every occasion. We therefore begged permission to man the Boat, and put him ashore ourselves, which we accordingly did.

It would be impossible to paint his parting with us. In vain did he offer his Ring, his Gold Snuff-Box, his purse, and many other little valuables, in token of gratitude to our officers and crew. He was told that to receive them would be not to respect properly, as well as person. Arrived on the beach, his strength of mind failed him, or rather his feelings prevailed over a Warrior's pride. Bursting into a flood of tears, he exclaimed, "can these be foes? no, all brave men are friends and brothers! and shall I never behold ye again? shall I not have the happiness when peace returns, of presenting you to my family, of planting you in the hearts and bosoms of all who are dear to me, of pourtraying in true colours the British character, to my admiring neighbours, and of shewing the brave defenders of the British Isles in a proper point of view? If ever Victory should put a Briton in my power, how kindly, how fondly will I treat him!"—"His tongue faltered. The light was decreasing. He embraced us all. We then motioned him three cheers to silence with our Hats. We looked our last in mute regard, and pulled off precipitately from the shore; not a word escaped us. We saw him pass his hand across his eyes, when our Boat was lessening on his view. We now stopped the motion of the Boat, remained for a few seconds with our Oars, then gave him the last wave of our Hats, and gained our Ship; every bosom feeling a divided sentiment of satisfaction and regret,—satisfaction that a brave man should be set free, regret that brave and feeling hearts should ever be separated." Such was my young relatives story, and at the moment he told it to me, I felt as if I had rather be the Captain of a man of War, than

The Hermit in the Country.

THE NIGHT-BLOWING STOCK.

"Come! look at this plant, with its narrow pale leaves,
And its tall, slim, delicate stem,
Thinly studded with flowers—yes, with flowers—there they
Don't you see, at each joint there's a little brown star?
But in truth, there's no beauty in them"

"So, you ask, why I keep it, the little mean thing?
Why I stick it up here just in sight?
'Tis a fancy of mine."—"A strange fancy!" you say,
"No accounting for tastes—In this instance you may,
For the flower—but I'll tell you to night

"Some six hours hence, when the Lady Moon
Looks down on that bastion'd wall,
When the twinkling stars dance silently
On the rippling surface of the sea,
And the heavy night dews fall,

"Then meet me again in this casement niche,
On the spot where we're standing now,
Nay, question not wherefore—perhaps with me
To look out on the night, and the bright broad sea,
And to hear its majestic flow."

* * * * * * * *

"Well, we're met here again; and the moonlight sleeps
On the sea and the bastion'd wall;
And the flowers there below—how the night wind brings
Their delicious breath on its dewy wings!"
"But there's one," say you, "sweeter than all!"

"Which is it? the myrtle or jessamine,
Or their sovereign lady the rose?
Or the heliotrope, or the virgin's bower?
What! neither!"—Oh no, 'tis some other flower,
Far sweeter than either of those."

"Far sweeter! and where, think you, groweth the plant
That exhaleth such perfume rare?
Look about, up and down, but take care, or you'll break
With your elbow that poor little thing that's so weak"—
"Why, 'tis that smells so sweet, I declare!"

"Ah ha! is it that?—have you found out now
Why I cherish that odd little fright?
All is not gold that glitters, you know;
And it is not all worth makes the greatest show,
In the glare of the strongest light.

"There are human flowers, full many, I trow,
As unlovely as that by your side,
That a common observer passeth by,
With a scornful lip, and a careless eye,
In the bey-day of pleasure and pride.

"But move one of those to some quiet spot,
From the mid-day sun's broad glare,
Where domestic peace broods with dove-like wing,
And try if the homely, despised thing,
May not yield sweet fragrance there.

"Or wait till the days of trial come,
The dark days of trouble and woe,
When fitz shrink and shut up, late so bright in the sun;
Then turn to the little despised one,
And see if 'twill serve you so.

GREAT BRITAIN.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT
HOUSE OF LORDS.—MAY 17.

Lord KING wished to know if it was intended to continue the Irish Insurrection Acts in force, beyond the time now fixed for their duration.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL, as we understood, said it was not intended to renew the Habeas Corpus Suspension Act, but he considered it would be indispensible to continue, for a further time, the Insurrection Acts

DISTRESSES IN IRELAND.

The Earl of DARNLEY, alluding to the distress in Ireland, said he was desirous of repeating the questions he put on a former night, viz—he wished to know what steps Government had taken to relieve the Distresses in question, and what was the first date of the correspondence which had taken place between this Country and the Irish Government. The Noble Earl repeated his sentiments upon this subject, urging the emergency of the case, and calling for the exertion of every means as promptly as possible, to effect relief.—The Noble Earl intimated, that if his questions were not satisfactorily answered, he should submit to the House a motion on the subject.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL said he had no difficulty in replying to the questions of the Noble Earl—The Noble Marquis of the Irish Government had no sooner commenced his functions, than an inquiry was directed to be made into the distresses of that country, and as far as possible every practicable relief had been afforded; measures had been taken relative to the seed for the different crops; and other measures adopted to relieve, as much as possible, the privations which were felt by the lower classes; but he did not hesitate to say that it was a matter of great difficulty, and altogether impossible for any Government to come forward for the purpose of supplying provisions to the people, at the same time; however, it was the duty of every one to combine every effort in his individual capacity to give relief, which added to the exertions of Government, so far as they were able to act, would not fail to have a beneficial result. The Noble Lord highly praised the meeting in this country, who had so nobly stepped forward in the present distressed state of Ireland, and whose efforts in the cause of humanity had been so successful. The Noble Earl stated, that in January last the Government of Ireland, together with the Government of this country, had taken every measure in their power to ameliorate the wants of the Irish people.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE acquiesced in the general principles laid down by the noble Lord; but the instance to which in the course of his speech he had alluded, where interference had been taken by the government, without any practical good, did not in his opinion apply to the present case. The present distress was one which arose where there was plenty, but without the reach of the poor; it was occasioned by the failure of the potatoe crop alone, in the gardens of the poor, to which they look for sustenance. The noble Marquis alluded to the bill in the other house, which provides for relief, on condition that for it work was to be performed. This bill was deserving their Lordships attention, it would have the effect of circulating money, and thereby promote much good. He trusted that when it came up from the other house, the standing orders would be dispensed with, in order that it might pass into a law with as little delay as possible.

The Earl of DARNLEY withdrew his motion, and the House adjourned.

MAY 20—Mr. CANNING brought up the Catholic Peers' bill.

The Duke of PORTLAND moved that the preamble of the bill be now read by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The preamble was accordingly read, when the noble Duke moved that the bill be read a first time on Thursday next, and that their Lordships be summoned. Agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MAY 6th.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

Adjourned Debate.

Mr. WYVILL said, he was satisfied the country would be no longer deluded by the Noble Marquis, and he trusted the House would also begin to resist the effects of that delusion. He (Mr. W.) felt assured there were but two modes of relieving the distresses of the country; one by repealing the act generally called Mr. Peel's Bill, the other by a considerable reduction of taxation—The first he should oppose, because they had proceeded too far in that measure to retrace their steps; but a reduction of taxes was called for from one end of the country to the other. A reduction of twenty millions in annual amount ought to take place immediately; and even of this only ten millions, he thought, would be saved to the agricultural interest. All the resolutions proposed in the Committee he considered as of no avail, and he should therefore move, as an amendment, "That it is the opinion of this House that the only effectual relief which can be provided for the agricultural interest will be in a large remission of taxation."

Mr. LOCKHART said, a reduction of taxes would, in his opinion, be tantamount to a breach of national faith; for with such a reduction, it would be impossible to pay the interest of the national debt. He had heard the distress ascribed to a superabundant produce—but of this he was not satisfied. Whatever was the cause of the distress, he conceived the proposition of the member for Pontefract was altogether unsound—It would have the effect of throwing much of the poor lands out of cultivation; a measure so destructive to those interested in it that had he not known the amiable disposition of the honourable member, he should be disposed to question his motives. The persons engaged in the cultivation of these lands could not successfully look for employment in any other direction, as manufactures were already overstocked. He (Mr L.) only wanted protection for the English farmer—no matter whether it was caused by a duty of 5s. or one of 50s. It was indifferent to him at what price he sold, provided he could be insured from the competition of the foreigner.

Mr. Monck would cordially support the motion of his Hon friend. He had heard a great deal of low prices. He would be glad to learn at what period, except during the late war, had we higher prices? Our prices at this moment were higher than in any part of the continent. In the French provinces bread was but one penny the pound; though their pound weight was ten per cent heavier than ours. In England it was two pence the pound, 100 per cent dearer than in France. Notwithstanding this great difference in favor of the English farmer, there were none of the gentlemen of this country to be satisfied. The average price in 1792 and for the nine years preceding, was 44s the quarter; during the American war it was at 42s. For the whole period of twenty-seven years previous to the late war, grain was not so high as at present. He would ask this plain question—When they had in 1792, so much better crops and inferior prices to what they had at present, why should not the landed gentlemen be able to obtain their rents, and possess the same advantages as at that period—a time which was considered to have been that of our greatest prosperity? The question was one of easy solution. What were the distinctions between the two periods? In 1792 the charge of the national debt was but £10,000,000
At present it amounts to 30,000,000
Our civil and military establishments in 1792 was 7,000,000
At present it was 18,000,000
The sinking fund in 1792, was 1,200,000
At present it was 5,000,000
The poor rates in 1792, were 2,000,000
Now they amounted to 7,000,000

In 1792, the whole expenditure of the country did not exceed 20 millions, and at the present time it had accumulated to the extent of 70 millions, inclusive of taxation and poor rates. He had heard a statement made by the noble Marquis, that taxation did not come to more than 5 per cent on the gross produce of the land. He would to show the fallacy of that opinion, give a sketch of the produce and disbursement of a farm in 1792, producing £400 a year rent.

Supposing the gross produce to be	£1600
Tithes and other rates would be	400
The farmer would require for his own and labourers profit	800

Which deducted from the gross produce, would leave 400 for the landlord. Government taxes might then have been estimated at 2s. 6d in the pound, or 100l on that farm. Now that the taxes were quadrupled, instead of 100l the land 1836 would have to pay 400l and that from the same quantity of produce, sold at the same price as at that period. The difference to be sure went to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the Exchequer was made to flourish by the declension of the fair profit of the people. The government seemed altogether to forget the maxim of Adam Smith—"That excessive taxation was nothing more than artificial sterility." He himself was so convinced of the truth of that opinion, that he could, with the power of taxation, convert the lands of Yorkshire, or the most fertile in Europe, into a barren and unproductive waste—Switzerland was brought as an example to prove that agriculture may be distressed where there was no taxation; but that country laboured under a cause equally powerful—large mortgages and heavy money payments.—The laws there not being that of primogeniture, but of gavelkind, few farmers held more than thirty acres. He was convinced that few Swiss peasants suffered a deprivation of their family comforts from low prices or over production. As he had shown that the reduction of taxation was the remedy necessary to be applied to correct the general evil, he would add, particular cases might require more detailed investigation. He was also of opinion that the change in the circulation materially affected the question. Feeling that all the plans arising from the report of the Agricultural Committee were a mockery and an illusion, he would cordially support that effective one which called for a reduction of taxation.

Sir R. Wilson could not continue silent when he heard positions made for the purpose of advancing the price of corn, and raising the prices of food, which would have the effect of making the quartern loaf sell at 2s. or 2s. 6d. He felt it his duty to protest against such measure. He would not pretend to investigate the causes of the present distress. The Member for Portarlington had said that it proceeded from circumstances—he was at a loss to understand what that could be so. In France the average harvest was one fifth more than in this country, and they did not see there the farmers becoming bankrupts or peasants seeking alms. They both may have personal causes of complaint, the farmer continued happy and the peasant well fed, and always in possession of three meals a day. They had no fear from the tax-gatherer, or for the produce of their industry being seized upon by him. The population of France was thirty millions; the taxation was thirty four millions, including the sinking fund. The people of England were about seventeen millions, and the taxation was sixty-four millions, including tithes and poor rates. In one country the taxes were one pound a head, in the other nearly four. He thought that a great reduction in the pressure of taxation should immediately take place.

Mr. Gurney was satisfied that whatever was done of the nature of the measures recommended by the resolutions of the agricultural committee would be productive of more harm than good. Ireland had exported all her corn for the sake of getting the ready money of this country; but it did not appear to have done her any good. The removal of taxation alone would give relief.

Mr. Western made a few comments on the motion of his Hon. Friend, to which he gave his decided and hearty approbation. He contended that until they had fully grappled with that question—the new standard of value as fixed in 1819, it was useless to discuss all subordinate questions.

Mr. Secretary Peel did not rise with the view of replying to the Hon. Member, who had last addressed the House, on the subject of the bill which he had been instructed to introduce to the House. He merely rose to observe, that he abstained from making any such remarks, because this was not the proper time for discussing that important question, and because he understood that the Hon. Member intended to make the act of 1819 the subject of a distinct motion.

Mr. Williams (the Barrister, and the new Member for Lincoln) called upon the House to pause in the pursuit of measures which it was acknowledged could be productive of no immediate relief, and to consider what was the language of the petitions under which the rabble groaned. They did not ask for some remote prospect of relief for future generations after the present was swept away; but, from what he had heard, it undeviatingly was—that they required immediate relief, or they died—(Hear.)—What, then, signified it to the present sufferers at what time the bill introduced by the Right Hon Gentlemen opposite came into operation? Now that the Noble Marquis had withdrawn his proposition, there remained none which had an immediate operation at hand to relieve them. If the House could devise no means of relief, let them have the manliness to state it.—But was it to be said that if the House set seriously about it, no relief could be given? Ministers only began to oblige them to do so. It had been said that they were receding from the affection of the people of England. He knew no way of recovering it better than by shewing an anxiety to follow the suggestions to relieve them from the distress consequent upon an abundant, exorbitant, grinding taxation. He thought the motion would make a good beginning to that reform, and as such he would vote for it—(Hear, hear.)—This was the Learned Gentleman's "maiden" speech in the House of Commons.

Sir Isaac Coffin observed, that an Hon. Member had stated that the French peasantry were better fed than those of England. He had travelled through France, but he had seen nothing would warrant such an assertion; on the contrary, he was satisfied "that an Englishman eat four times as much at a meal as a Frenchman"—He had travelled through Europe, and he declared that the Nobility and Gentry—in fact, all classes were better fed in England, than were the like classes in any part of the world.

Mr. Brougham heartily supported the amendment, because it went to establish a most essential principle, and one on which all their proceedings ought to be founded—the necessity of a large reduction of the taxation.

The Marquis of Londonderry observed, that if the House agreed to the amendment, such opinions would sanction the opinion that there ought to be a reduction of taxation to the amount of at least twenty millions—(Hear, and no, no.)—And what less would that be than sanctioning the confiscation of much of the property of the country?

Mr. Tierney denied that this motion had the revolutionary tendency imputed to it by the Noble Marquis. It only went to establish a principle, and he thought if due notice had been given, it would be carried.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer was of opinion, that the motion involved a ruinous and revolutionary principle.

Mr. F. Wilson was anxious that taxation should be diminished to such a reasonable extent, but he could not support this motion, because he saw it was brought forward under circumstances that were ruinous to the interests of the country.

A division having taken place, the numbers were—Ayes 87—Noes 120—Majority against Mr Wyvill's motion 83.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT.

The order of the day having been read for resuming the adjourned debate on the report of the agricultural committee—

The Marquis of Londonderry moved that the Speaker should leave the Chair.

The House resolved itself into a Committee.

Lord Althorp moved an amendment, whose object was to impose an import duty of 20s. with an ascending scale, and to give a bounty on exportation of 18s a quarter—

1. The average price of wheat exceeding 80s. and the ports being declared open for the importation of foreign wheat, quantity not exceeding four hundred thousand quarters shall be admitted, on a duty of 10s. per quarter.

2d The average price of wheat continuing above 80s. at the expiration of six weeks from the first opening the ports, a further importation of four hundred thousand quarters to be permitted, at 5s. per quarter.

Several divisions took place. The first was upon Lord Althorp's amendment; the numbers were—For the amendment 24—Against it 220—Majority 196.

The second division was upon Sir Curwen's amendment.—The number were—For the amendment 25—Against it 238—Majority 193.

The Committee then divided on the first resolution of the Marquis of Londonderry, viz. "That the present duties do cease and determine;" when the numbers were—Ayes 218—Noes 36—Majority 182. The other resolutions were passed without a division.

When the resolution for grinding foreign corn, warehoused, was read, Lord Londonderry said he did not mean to offer any proposition upon it.

The Chairman then reported progress, and the report was ordered to be received in morrow (this day)—Adj. quad.

London, Friday Evening, May 17.

French papers of Wednesday have arrived by express. The Monitieur contains a long account of the tumult which took place at Lyons, during the election of the deputies, which proves to have been much more serious than at first described. The nomination of T. Corcelles was followed by seditious cries, and several royalists present thrown down, trampled on, and otherwise much injured. The civil authorities were unable to quell the disturbances, and the military were called in; it required several detachments, both of cavalry and infantry, so numerous were they, and so highly excited on the occasion. The tumultuous assemblage was on the Place de Terreaux, close to the theatre, and owing to the pressure in avoiding the attack of the cavalry, the doors were forced in, and numbers of people took possession of the boxes and galleries. The performances were then going on, and a scene of great confusion ensued. At eleven o'clock, by great exertions the whole of the populace were dispersed, and the tranquility of the city remained for the rest of the evening without interruption.

A tremendous hail storm, which caused the greatest disasters in the South of France, occurred on the 7th inst. Its effects extended over 30 communes. The hail stones were between two and three inches in diameter. All glass exposed to it, and even in many places tiles were broken. A great quantity of game was found dead, and a large stock of pigeons was also destroyed. In the marshes between Hergnies and Bruille, a great quantity of geese, which are the principal wealth of the district were destroyed. In all places where the hail fell the harvest has been ruined. Many accidents also happened to carriage drivers. The hail was accompanied with a storm of wind.

Disturbances in Staffordshire.—The South western District of this County still continues in a very unsatisfactory state, the miners generally refusing to work for the reduced wages, and the masters persisting in their determination not to employ them at the old ones. Indeed, the few masters who have hitherto continued to pay the old rate of wages, have lately taken the determination of reducing them—a very numerous meeting of the trade having been held at Walsal on Tuesday last, when it was unanimously resolved not to give any other wages than those for which the men refuse to work. In consequence of the disposition which had been manifested to offer violence to persons and property, it was deemed advisable to make more extensive arrangements for preserving the peace of the district—and four troops of the Yeomanry Cavalry were ordered on duty in the neighborhood till their places could be supplied by regular—Mr. Littleton, their Lieutenant Colonel, left town to take the command of them. In the course of the week, Earl Talbot, the Lord Lieutenant, visited the neighborhood, where he concerted such measures with the Magistrates, as it is hoped may prevent any evil consequences to the public peace from the continuance of the struggles between the masters and the men. The Yeomanry Cavalry have since been relieved, after having been thanked by the Lieutenant for the promptitude with which they had turned out to support the civil power. They have been replaced by a detachment of the 73d regiment of Infantry, another of the 2d. and another of the 8 otch Greys. During the week the Magistrates, the Rev. Sir Leigh, of Bilston, the Rev. J. Clare, the Rev. A. B. Haden, and Joseph Lane, Esq. assisted by parties of the Militia Staff, and Yeomanry Cavalry, apprehended many of the ringleaders in the late disturbances, and lodged them in the county gaol. The conduct of these Magistrates deserve the thanks of their neighborhood and the public at large.—Staffordshire Adv.

AFRICAN INSTITUTION.

London, May 13.

On the 10th inst. the anniversary meeting of the London African Institution was held at the Freemason's Tavern, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's Inn Fields, when upwards of 1500 persons of the greatest respectability assembled in the Great Hall, the majority consisting of ladies. His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester took the Chair, and after stating the object of the meeting, called upon the secretary to read his report of last year; which commenced by stating that a wonderful increase had taken place since the last annual meeting.—The whole of western Africa, from the River Senegal to Benguela, had during that period swarmed with slave vessels, and an active and increasing slave trade had also been carried on on the eastern shores of that continent, particularly from the island of Zanebar. It had been ascertained that the chief seat of this traffic was in the river Bonny and at Calabar, and that 190 slave ships had entered the former river, and 162 the latter, for the purpose of purchasing slaves. Speech in the Chair, Lord Calthorpe, the Marquis of Lansdown, Mr. Wilberforce, Lord Nugent, Mr. Brougham, and other gentlemen addressed the meeting, expressive of praise towards the institution, and recommending its support. The greatest praise was bestowed by several speakers on the liberal governments of North and South America.

John Randolph, Esq. late member of Congress from Virginia, who was present, then rose and returned thanks for this mark of respect towards the United States of America. He said, after the eloquence which had been already displayed upon this great subject, it would be an act of presumption scarcely excusable in any stranger, but unpardonable in him, to intrude his unpremeditated expressions upon them, after the able speeches which they had not only heard but felt. (Applause.)—He was, however, impelled by a double motive, which he could not resist, to offer himself for a few moments to their attention. First, to discharge an act of duty to his native land, in the absence of its official representative—an absence as unexpected by him as it was unforeseen, and which had cast upon him a duty he felt inadequate to perform—that of thanking this meeting for the grateful sense they had expressed towards America, and also to assure them that all that was exalted in station, in talent, and in moral character, among his country men, was (as was also to be found in England) firmly united for the suppression of this infamous traffic. (Loud applause.) It was delightful to him to know that Virginia, the land of his sires, the place of his nativity, had for half a century offered public brand, an indelible stigma upon this traffic and had put in the claim of the wretched object of it to the common rights and attributes of humanity. (Loud applause.) He repeated his thanks to the meeting for the flattering reception they had given him.

The plainness of Mr. Randolph's appearance, his republican simplicity of manners, and easy unaffected address, attracted much attention; he sat down amidst a burst of applause.

IRELAND.

The Belfast Chronicle remarks it as not a little singular, that notwithstanding the starving situation of the peasantry of the South, two vessels had recently arrived in Belfast from Galway with oatmeal; and on the same day another vessel arrived from Waterford with oats. In the Waterford Mirror, we find the following remark:—"Great as the present emergency is deemed, the patriot the philosopher, the statesman, may be well occupied in considering how Ireland, a country so eminently productive, has been reduced to such scarcity, after a harvest which was so plentiful, the food was said to pay little more than the cost of growth, preparation, and carriage."

To add to the misfortunes of that portion of the Irish people who are suffering from the want of provisions, the Typhus Fever has broke out among them. At Sligo, so great were its ravages, that although a new Hospital had been recently opened there, they could not accommodate the sick. The type of the fever is stated, by a medical gentleman of eminence, to be more malignant, and its duration much longer than in May 1817, running out with out intermission, frequently to twenty-seven or even thirty days, and then leaving the survivor idiotic for several weeks.

A gallant and generous English regiment, quartered at present in Dublin, has not waited for any formal notice to follow the noble example of London, as appears from the following subscription for the distressed Irish:—

From the Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers, and privates of the third battalion of the Grenadier Regiment of Foot Guards, by the hands of Messrs. Armit, Borrough, & Co., one days pay,	£26	19	1
Do. additional by the Officers,	51	6	2

More.—That gallant and distinguished Regiment, the 7th Hussars, now in this garrison, have come forward with a subscription of a day's pay from each man, for our suffering countrymen in the South and West.

A dreadful occurrence took place on Tuesday last, between Durrow and Ballyragget, county of Kilkenny. A horse, the property of a Mr. Shelby, grazing in a field, turned upon his owner, as he was passing out by a gate, and killed him. The horse reared, knocked him down, broke his thigh, seemed to suck his blood, and then tore off the flesh, scattering it about the field. Our postman who delivers the Journal on that route, saw the melancholy spectacle of the man's mangled remains, and described it as one of the most appalling scenes that on our fair; several Poles and Russians have, in consequence, gone home again. The Prohibitory System, which is so injurious to Commerce, gains ground more and more.—The number of Booksellers at the fair is estimated at about 150, many of whom complain of the want of business in the course of last year.—Indigo has risen in price, on account of the failure of the crop in the East Indies. Great complaints are made of the want of business; but, if we consider the expensive mode of living of many artisans, and the extravagance of servants, we must be sensible that these complaints are not generally well founded. Couriers between Paris and St. Petersburgh, very frequently pass through this town. Men of consequence in Russia consider war to be inevitable.

GREECE.

It is stated in the Paris papers of the 10th inst. that the Greek peasantry of the north of Thessaly and Upper Macedonia, having been compelled to take the field to resist the repeated attempts of the Pacha of Salonichi to deprive them of their arms, formed a body of seven thousand men, including the best sharp shooters in Greece, and under the command of Captains Tassos, Diamentes, and Saphirakes, proceeded, in the first instance, to occupy the defiles of Mount Olympus, the valley of Tempe, and the banks of Peneus; and thence, their numbers increasing on their march, traversed the country as far as Killiderven, on the sea coast. The Macedonian army then commenced the seige of Serrhoe. A body of Turks, sent to its relief by the Pacha of Salonichi, were defeated, and the place surrendered on the 24th of March. The new insurrection has compelled Chourschid Pacha to relinquish his plan of marching to the relief of Patras. An entrenched camp, occupied by the Turkish troops, under the walls of Patras, is said to have been forced by the Greeks, who, after killing a considerable number of the enemy, carried off 10 pieces of artillery, sent from Constantinople, and a quantity of ammunition. The President of the Greek Congress has notified to the Agents of the European powers, that all the ports of Crete are in a state of blockade. Napoli di Romania was on the point of capitulating at the date of the last advices from Zante.

A vessel has arrived at Toulon with intelligence that the Greeks were besieging the Turks in the Acropolis, at Athens, and it was feared that many of the noble works of art in that city would be destroyed. The Parthenon, (Temple of Minerva) has been demolished. The French Admiral had succeeded in saving some of the beautiful bas reliefs which adorn the celebrated lantern of Demosthenes.

Accounts have been received to-day, (May 17,) from Odessa to the 20th ult. with information from Constantinople to the 14th. The former speak of war as extremely probable, but mention that there was so great a scarcity of food among the Russian forces on the frontiers of Turkey, that it was supposed they would be obliged to change their quarters, as there was not more than ten days' provisions remaining. The Captain Pacha had quitted the Turkish capital, in order to take the command of the squadron proceeding against the Greeks and which had been for some time under preparation.

GERMAN COMMERCE.

Leipsic, May 5.—Our Fair has hitherto not been so bad as we feared it would be, and there has been a great demand for coarse cloths, leather, linen, and English printed calicoes, cambric muslins, &c. We hope this will have a favorable effect on the sale of coarse wool. According to the accounts from England, it is said that the prices of fine wool have fallen there—but this is considered to be rather a false report, for in many large estates in Saxony, the wool is already sold for two or three years to come. The Jews that were expected have not come.—The new Russian Tariff has an unfavorable effect on our fair; several Poles and Russians have, in consequence, gone home again. The Prohibitory System, which is so injurious to Commerce, gains ground more and more.—The number of Booksellers at the fair is estimated at about 150, many of whom complain of the want of business in the course of last year.—Indigo has risen in price, on account of the failure of the crop in the East Indies. Great complaints are made of the want of business; but, if we consider the expensive mode of living of many artisans, and the extravagance of servants, we must be sensible that these complaints are not generally well founded. Couriers between Paris and St. Petersburgh, very frequently pass through this town. Men of consequence in Russia consider war to be inevitable.

Miscellaneous Notices.

The Duc de Coigny will, on Wednesday next, receive the hand of the rich and accomplished Miss Hamilton, daughter of Sir Hugh Dalrymple, Bart.—London Paper.

Yesterday afternoon the Marquis of Londonderry, in full dress, paid his respects to their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Denmark. His Lordship had a long interview with his Royal Highness.

A court-martial has been holden in Dublin, on a Captain of the 1st Dragoon Guards, on a most extraordinary prosecution. It seems that a restive horse had been prohibited from being sent out on a detachment, that this Captain had sent it out, and that the man who rode it was, in consequence drowned.—Limerick Chronicle.

Belzoni, the celebrated traveller, was at St. Petersburgh, on the 24th ult. A copy of his works had been presented to the emperor, who honored him with a present of a diamond ring.

An extraordinary murder was lately committed at St Petersburgh. The servant of a family on going into the kitchen found a basket containing an infant, together with a letter and purse of 200 roubles. The letter escaped her notice, and, tempted by the money, the inhuman wretch resolved to destroy the child. She threw it into the large stove used in that country, when the poor innocent was speedily consumed; the money was secreted, and every thing likely to lead to suspicion put away by the time that the family, which had been abroad, returned home. The master, however, a humane and respectable man, by accident found the letter, which informed him of the deposit, and stated that he should receive 200 roubles every quarter while the infant, whom circumstances forced to conceal, lived under his charge. He called up the servant, who at first denied all knowledge of the fact; but being closely questioned, at last confessed her crime, to the enormity of which the ashes from the stove bore horrible testimony. She was committed to prison, and has probably ere now paid her forfeit of life to the laws.

On the 2d of May, a hair-dresser, who lives in Water street, New-ry, after having made a libation to Bacchus, imagined that he was to be hanged, and that the officers of justice were entering his house to carry him to execution. Under this strange impression, he contrived to get on the roof of his habitation, along which he darted with the velocity of a hunted squirrel. From his own roof he was seen bounding, like a terrific kangaroo, over several other roofs, now and then pausing when he came to a chimney—and either peeping into the funnel, like a magpie into a narrow-hole, or listening to his imaginary pursuers, like a hare when she catches, with cocked ears, the tones of the distant beagles. Meanwhile several of his neighbours collected together, anxious to secure the man, and prevent his expected fall. He saw them, mistook them for bailiffs, ran rapidly along the roof of Mr. Wallace's stores, proceeded to that of Mr. John Quinn's stores, over which he rushed with as much security as a sharp-lawed cat, or muscular enraged outang, till he came to the gable, from which he jumped, with dauntless intrepidity, upon an adjacent dwelling house, and a-cent of about (we believe) eight feet, imagining, no doubt, that it was rock or nothing with him. From thence he proceeded to Mr Smith's roof, were he stripped a portion of the chimney of bricks, and squeezing himself into one of the funnels, pelted the people who wished to secure him, with these missiles, as long as his supply lasted. In this situation he was secured, secured with ropes, and lowered down to an immense multitude of the market people, who were gazing with astonishment at the funny gambols of the frisky fellow.

ON THE GENIUS AND WRITINGS OF LORD BYRON

There perhaps never was a man, in the whole annals of English literature, who attained to high a station among the poets, within so short a space of time, as Lord Byron. When we reflect, however that the tendency of all writing should be to the side of virtue and morality, and that every author is responsible for the ill effects which his writings produce, we cannot but look upon Lord Byron with a considerable degree of horror. The more powerful the genius of a man may be if those powers are employed in the cause of vice and in the perversion of evil, the more they call for a louder detestation and abhorrence; and we feel that to pardon such a man, would only be heaping destruction upon his head. He may become the idol of many, and be acknowledged as a master spirit; but we must recollect, that with such qualities he is like the image which the King of Babylon saw in his dream, part gold and part silver, but part brass and clay; and such as one must inevitably fall to pieces.

When we speak of Lord Byron, we do it with a full consciousness of his mighty genius. we speak of him as of a man gifted beyond all mortal calculation, as exploring the "UNREVEL'D deserts of the soul," and as one who drops his line of research "deeper than ever did plummet sound." But while we acknowledge his power, we regret that it should be so misdirected; we lament to see a mind, so noble in itself, employing its powers in portraying characters so detestable, in picturing murderers, adulterers, and assassins. Throughout all of his writings there is none of that sweet balm, that holy tenderness, that supports and heals the troubled soul. The Grave of piety he has never felt; his hope is not hope, for it is not that "anchor of the soul" which points to a future and a better world. The rock of faith he cannot rest upon, and the still small voice speaks not to him. The heavenly feeling that cheers to the latest moment, that smooths the pangs of woe, and that renders placid the visage of old age, he is unacquainted with; and the star that shall rise beyond the dreary grave, telling the forgiveness of every fault, and welcoming the pilgrim to his home, is to him a dream—a vision—a deceit. His hope is annihilation,—futurity a jest,—and his religion despair.—He laughs at the weakness, as he deems it, of his fellow-creatures, and trample in cold blooded mockery upon all the best interests of a true Christian. What can we think of the man who tells us of death as being

The first dark day of nothingness,
The last of danger and distress. GIAOUR.

Again, in his song to INEZ in Childe Harold, he speaks of the snark

The fabled Hebrew wanderer born,
To whom hath been decreed beyond the tomb,
But cannot hope for rest before.

Another specimen, and that I have done; he tells us, that ——religions take th ir turns.

"I was Jove's, ,ts Mahomet's, and other Creeds
Will rise with other years—till man shall learn

Vainly his incense soars—his victim bleeds.
Childe Harold.

There is not a single passage in all he has ever written, that can elect one ray of hope, or cast one gleam of peace, upon the mind. We take up his poems, to read what?—all a gloom and despair—the hero lives—becomes a villain—dies, and "makes no sign." Look to his Manfred, his Giaour, his Lara, and all he has written. They are a chaos of horror, of unbridled passion, horror, and misanthropy. He loves her—but it is the icy Saxon wind of death: he looks—but it is the withered sneer of a demon.

He is as devoid of patriotism also as he is of every amiable virtue. The man who could pass over the ground whereon his LOST LOVE had strolled and died, and address them as Ambitious haunted spots—there let them rot, deserves nothing but contempt. While his country was engaged in a desperate conflict, did he wield the sword—did he devote his own powerful genius in her behalf? No; rambling in a foreign land, he turned the powers he possessed against her, and falsely charged her as one Who fights for all—but ever fights in vain.

Love has been the theme of many poets. But Lord Byron's love is wholly Eastern: he knows nothing of that feeling which breathes forth for the object of its earthly adoration in purity and truth; he never tells us of that "sweet constancy" that "happy time" in which ——a late knot on a lady's brow,

Is fairer than the fairest star in heaven.
WORDSWORTH.

No; his beings are only lovely to him, in proportion as their feet and hands resemble the whiteness of marble, and their long tresses of gold. The features of the body he picture, but he never gives them the heavenly features of the soul—his heroes are monsters—his heroines are harlots. In Manfred there is adultery—in Parisina incest—and in Manfred that which makes us shudder to trace;—though the crime is obscurely told, yet there is sufficient to show us that he who can delight to revel in such scenes of wickedness is far gone indeed. From the shameless Don Juan I will not publish my page with a quotation: it is loathsome beyond conception. How truly is it to be regretted, that the highest powers of poetry are so demeaned as to become the channels for so much impurity—we lament to see the whole strength of a man like Lord Byron, thrown away upon creatures with whose actions we are disgusted, and whom we are obliged to hate. But, however, it matters not, in his own estimation, what objects are chosen, or what crimes portrayed, for he tells us the lyre is

The only heaven to which earth's children may aspire.
CHILDE HAROLD.

When we take up the works of a poet, we expect to find in them something that shall give us as exalted ideas of God and heaven—that shall raise our thoughts—or that shall at least create in us such a train of feelings, that when we close the volume, we shall rise with a consciousness that though life be in some degree rough and thorny, yet the steady practice of religion and virtue will enable us to bear its ills with patience, looking unto the recompence of reward. But who ever took up one of Lord Byron's poems with such feelings, and did not find that it cast a chilling damp over his thoughts—a gloom which endeavored to chain his soul to earth and earthly things? Who, I ask, ever found one persuasive to religion, or one incentive to virtue, in all he has ever written? His feelings are not those feelings which "wonder at their own sweet will," scattering beauty around them—and which picture this earth as a path ——a flowery path to heavenly skies.

No; he never touches upon those things—he draws but one portrait—it is that of a man laden with iniquity—who like a wretch unforgiven—is walking his track in silence—and whose views his own vicious actions without remorse. It is that of a man who keeps aloof from his fellow creatures—devoid of every feeling, and foremost in every crime. Burns, the dissipated Burns, had far loftier ideas of all that is great and good, than this man; and had burns such more of the duty of a real poet—for in his letters he declares that an "irreligious poet is a monster."

But is there any hope of a change—of a renunciation of those infidel principles which he now cherishes? It is true that there are hints and passages in his writings, which indicate better feelings; but these recur but seldom, they vanish like shadows, so depart." Perhaps it might be wrong to say that such a change is impossible; but we are obliged to say it is unlikely, for though we may be willing to hope that he will one day come to that fountain which is open for sin and uncleanness, yet we must recollect that men do not gather figs of thorns, or grapes of thistles. G. M.

MR. COBBETT.

Since the London Statesman, which had been languishing for months, has passed into the hands of the erratic Mr. COBBETT, we have perused it with more attention. COBBETT has imparted fresh life and vigor to its drowsy columns, but we cannot discover that he has undergone any change for the better. His rage raves like a madman, and cuts and slashes in all directions.

In the Statesman of the 2d of May, COBBETT has a furious attack upon Mr. CANNING and JUNIUS. In the late debate on Parliamentary Reform, Mr. CANNING, it seems, took the liberty of quoting this celebrated Whig writer, as authority against the present generation of whigs. This circumstance gives Mr. COBBETT an opportunity to express his opinion of this distinguished writer, which is as follows.

"We cannot quit this subject without just noticing the high authority that that great spouter CANNING, quoted the other night against the breaking up of rotten boroughs. He made a monstrous show of it. He said he would not tell who the authority was till after he had stated the doctrine; and after a long preparation of this sort, out it came: "an other; no less an authority" said he "than JUNIUS himself." What an empty, what a contemptible piece of bombast. To quote an anonymous scribbler; as corrupt a man, perhaps, as ever sucked public money; a writer, who to be damned instantly, only needed to have given his name; a hooker-together of antithesis; the writer of a long book without any one sound principle, except by accident; and without as much useful knowledge in the whole book, as is equal in amount to what any ploughboy can give you respecting the best mode of killing rats and mice. A writer that never was praised by any man of sense, except from mere fashion and carelessness; a writer that owes his reputation to the sort of mystery that hangs about the book; the foundation for reputation just as good as that of the ghost of Cock-lane, and not one whit better. The matter of the book is bad; the style affected and every way vicious. There is nothing in the book that enlightens the mind, or warms the heart. Strings of coolly framed sentences; and, which is a great vice with us, antithesis without end; and in general without point. This book has been praised by that quoterie of men calling themselves the learned; men who solemnly decided that the writings of WILL. ENGLAND could have come from no other pen than that of SHAKESPEARE. A book, in short, containing nothing but impertinent malignity; and praised by nobody but solemn fools"

The same paper from which we take the above, contains an attack of a whole column upon the political friend Mr. Brougham. Mr. C. accuses him of plagiarism, in having worked up one of the editorial articles into a parliamentary speech!

AGRICULTURE.

From the Boston Patriot.

SHEEP.—The Philadelphia Union, on the authority of a practical farmer and extensive sheep-owner, informs, that tar, applied to the horns of these valuable animals, around the roots, operates both as a preventive and cure of the worm disease, which, it is thought, has proved fatal to several sheep in this state. At the same time a portion of tar should be administered internaly. Sheep it is observed will take the prescription, if a suitable quantity of salt enter into its composition. The above information is communicated in reply to an inquiry on the subject originating in this state.—The cause of the disease is not accounted for.

From the American Farmer.

REMEDY FOR FOUNDER IN HORSES.—Communicated by Col. B. Chambers, who experienced its good effect on his own horses and others.

"One of the writers in your 'Farmer,' calls foundering 'chills and founder,' and compares it to inflammatory rheumajism. I apprehend he does not understand the disease in all its stages; it evidently proceeds from surfeit. A horse, rode until heated and fatigued, and fed too plentifully while warm and hungary—and swallows his food too greedily; and the stable being wet or damp, and the horse in a copious sweat; are reasons, the best that can be given for the formation of the disease.

Instead of rising up refreshed, the poor animal is stiff and useless. If he had got leave to cool perfectly and been fed sparingly, he would have escaped this sore complaint.

The cure is a lump of alum the size of a walnut, reduced to powder and dissolved in warm water; the horse must be drenched with this liquid, which in a short time will throw him into profuse perspiration; and he will be able to pursue his journey the next day, and if not badly foundered, in a few hours.

Preservation of Hay.—An English paper says, in a former year, in which it rained violently during the hay harvest, and much hay was spoiled, a gentleman in a midland county preserved his whole stock, solely by persevering in keeping his hay constantly moved and turned, as it lay upon the ground, during the continuance of the rain. The result was, that while his neighbors' hay was valued only as spoiled hay, his crop was sound and good, retained its fragrancy, and bore the price of fine hay.

Pruning of Fruit Trees.—The best time for pruning fruit trees is found to be as soon as they are pretty full of sap, so that the bark will peel with ease, which is about the beginning of June. If branches of any considerable size are taken from the trees in autumn, or early in the spring, the stumps will be apt to die before the new growth can heal over the wound; the stumps indeed will generally rot very soon and this defection will penetrate to the heart of the tree, and cause it to perish. It is worthy of notice that the sap runs freely between the bark and the wood, in these northern states but about three months in the year during which time nearly the whole year's growth of the tree takes place.—If pruning be done in June, or before the middle of July, a new circle of wood will be formed around the stumps of limbs taken off from thrifty trees, and the wounds will shortly heal over.

Extraordinary Produce.—Dr. Roulston, of Roupoe, in Ireland, lately dug up on his garden a single potatoe hill, which produced 365 evenly sized potatoes.

MILES COLVINE, THE CUMBERLAND MARINER.

I found Miles Colvine standing on the threshold of his house, and his daughter on her knee beside him. He knew me, for we had often passed each other on the beach and on the sea, and he was aware I was a friend, for I had endeavored in vain to oblige him in his forlorn state with little acts of kindness. "Come hither, sir," said the mariner, "I have to thank you for all this nig...." He paused for a moment, and then said, in a lower tone, "I know your faith is not my faith, and that your life is not embittered with what has embittered mine. But tell me, sir, tell me, do you believe that the events of our life are ordained, for what hath appeared to night seems of a wise Being's ordering." "Surely, sir," I said, "God knoweth all things, present and to come, but whether he permits evil deeds to be wrought or ordains good ones to be done."—" Enough, enough," said the mariner, "May Colvine, my love, trim thy father's shealing, and set the supper-table in array, for it is ordained that our deliverers shall rest with us, and break bread at our board; so come in, Francis Forster" And into the mariner's cottage we walked, not unawed by the presence of a being of whose temper and character we had seen such a proof.

If the exterior of the cottage was rude and unskilfully built, the interior was wonderfully commodious and neat The floor was laid of drifted ship timber, and the walls were hung with nets as with tapestry, and fish spears and gaffs and other implements of the sea, more graceful like weapons for battle in a chieftian's hall of old. The fruits of the fisherman's skill were every where visible; the chimney-mantle, a beam of wood which extended from side to side of the cottage, was full of lobsters, and the supper board, large, and well covered, and various kegs were filled with salted fish of the many excellent kinds which the Solway affords. A small bed stood near the chimney, swelled with the feathers of sea fowl, and hillocked high with quilts and mantles, from beneath which some three or four heads only rivalled in whiteness by the snow. A very small chamber was constructed at the farther end, into which May Colvine disappeared for a moment to re-adjust her dress, and perhaps, add some other of those artificial attractions which women always bring to the aid of their natural charms. The mariner seated himself, motioned me to a seat, over which a sheepskin was thrown, while a lamp, fed plentifully with oil, and suspended from the roof diffused light over the apartment. Nor was the place destitute of other ornaments, among which I observed Robinson Crusoe, and Homer's Odyssey in Greek, with a curious collection of northern legendary ballads, were scattered about, and a shepherd's pipe and a fiddle were there to assist in the dissipation of melancholy thought. May Colvine soon forth from her little chamber with an increase of loveliness, such as a rose appears when refreshed in dew She had laid aside the snood of silk and pearl which enclosed her hair, and the curling luxuriance of her ringlets descended over her shoulders, while her white temples, and whiter neck, were seen through the waving fleece which fell so profusely over them. Her father gazed on her like one who recals the lovely past with the beautiful present, and his thoughts had flitted to other days and remoter climes, for many of which he said, "Come, my love, the supper is ready, the mariners aboard, the sails spread to the wind, and we must pass the haunted headland before the moon goes down." The maiden meanwhile had filled the supper board with such coarse fare as the cabin afforded, and while drawing in her chair, said, "Sir, the table is prepared, your guests are waiting, and will expect you to bless the fare which is set before them." The mariner laid his hand aside, and rising in his place, after the manner of the Presbyterians, said—"Thou who spreadest thy table on the deep waters, and feedest with abundance on the desert places, make this coarse food seem savoury and delicate unto these three men and this tender virgin,—but my hands, on which the blood of man yet rests unatoned for, may not presume to touch blessed food." And spreading the fold of his gaunte over his face, and stooping down, he appeared to busy himself in mental devotion, while, tasting the supper set before us, and obeying the mute invitation of the maiden to a guise of worship, we supplied with all the forms which this extraordinary author observed to impose upon us. After this was past, the young woman took up one of the instruments, and singing as she played, with inexpressible sweetness and grace, her father gradually uncovered his face, his looks began to brighten, and uttering a deep sigh, he waved his hand, the minstrel ceased, and he thus addressed us:

"I was not always an unhappy man—I had fair domains, a stately house, a beauteous wife, and a sweet daughter; but it is not what we have, but what we enjoy, that blesseth man's heart, and of which him seems of the angels. I dwelt on a wild sea-coast, full of woods and caverns, the haunt of banditti of smugglers, those fierce, and vulgar, and infrancie de spirits, who find subsistence in fraud and violence, and from a constant perseverance in hostility to human law, become daily more hardened of heart and fierce of nature. I was young then, and romantic, and though I did not approve of the course of these men's lives, there appeared glimpses of generosity, and courage, and fortitude, about them, which shed a pale over a life of immorality and crime. I protested them not, neither did I associate with them, but they soon saw in the passive manner in which I regarded their nocturnal intercourse on the coast, and the ready and delighted ear which I lent to the narratives of their adventures by sea and land, that they had nothing to fear and much to hope Their confidence increased, and their numbers augmented, and they soon found a leader capable of giving an aim to all their movements, and who brought something like regular craft and ability to their counsels

I was reputed rich, and was rich; my treasures were mostly of gold and silver plate, and bars of the former metal, via the gain of a relative who had shared with the Buccaneers in the plunder of Panama. I had also been wedded for a number of years, my wife was young and beautiful, and our daughter, an only child, my own May Colvine, here whom she sits, with a frame that seemed much too delicate to survive the disasters she has since been doomed to meet. We were counselled to carry her to warmer climates, and were preparing for our voyage, and my wife was ready to accompany me, when a large smuggling cutter cast anchor in a deep woody bay which belonged to my estate, and as I sat on the top of my house, looking towards the sea, a person in naval dress came and accosted me. He was, he said, the captain of the Free trader lying in the bay, with a cargo of choice wine, and his mariners were short hels and true, had perilled themselves freely by land and water, and often experienced the protection of Miles Colvine's bay, and the hospitality of his mensals. They had heard of my intention to carry my wife and daughter to a more genial climate, and if we wished to touch at Lisbon, where Europeans seek for health, they would give us a passage, for they honored us next to commerce without law or restra nt But I must tell you, that the chief of this band, knowing my love for mercantile affairs, had represented himself as a merchant, who, for the purpose of barter in foreign climes, had fitted out for the purpose of commerce, and the name only of being grad, but for the enlargement of commerce, the extension of arts and sciences, and those blessings which attend the progress of civilization, and to the purpose of an universal improvement in the condition of the human race. What other nation ever looked so far into the grand perspective of futority, and these beheld such visions of greatness and true glory as awakening to be realities, on the foundation of a broad and liberal system of colonization. ON THE CULTIVATION OF HEMP IN CANADA.

The abundance of National Wealth depends upon the amount of productive Industry.

It is not the least of those glorious characteristics which distinguishes GREAT BRITAIN, that she is mindful of the desires, the wants, and the sufferings, of her Colonies, when to gratify or relieve them is not inconsistent with sound policy. It is true that it is her interest to be thus attentive, But how few are the examples in which history affords of an empire gradually rising to the zenith of glory, not for the purpose of barren foreign conquest, and the name only of being great, but for the enlargement of commerce, the extension of arts and sciences, and those blessings which attend the progress of civilization, and to the purpose of an universal improvement in the condition of the human race. What other nation ever looked so far into the grand perspective of futority, and these beheld such visions of greatness and true glory as awakening to be realities, on the foundation of a broad and liberal system of colonization. Like a wise, and prudent, and affectionate parent, she is always ready to do every thing in her power to secure the welfare of her children; no matter how far off, nor to what clime, they may be situated; nor in what region their destinies may require her aid; her fostering hand is still there to succour her abroad and widely extended wings are still there to afford protection and a protect them.

But it sometimes happens to many emigrants as it does to children. They incessantly expect that every thing is to be done for them Without any corresponding exertion being trade on their part; they seem to think that if they eat the bread that is already made for them, it is enough, and that they are not obliged to labor at all for the production of that bread. We have frequently thought there has been a little too much repining and lamentation in this Province, by reason of the great and general depression of the time; and that rather too much was expected from the parent State, whose children at home were perhaps still more injured and depressed by the serious aspect of affairs, than were their brethren of Canada. Though we were always, and still are of opinion, that any quantity of wheat that we might be able to send to the English market for several years to come, could not materially affect the general market price in that country, either one way or another; whilst at the same time, the exportation of so much wheat from this country, would afford a very material relief to the farmers here: yet, it was expecting too much, perhaps, from the large land holders who sit in the British Parliament, (for we must make some allowances for self interest, and the want of information regarding Canada, and the quantity of wheat grown here,) that they should pass an act to allow the importation of any more grain, even from British Colonies, when the markets were already glutted, and the prices almost unprecedently low.

But it was not to discuss a question on the existing corn laws of England, or the necessity of some modification of those laws, so far as they bear upon this country, that we took our pen on the present occasion, but to show what a fine field for enterprize and aggrandizement the liberal policy of our parent State has thrown open for the exercise of our skill and industry; and that we can no longer complain, with any color of justice, that she is unmindful of what regards our prosperity and future wealth, and commercial greatness. The protecting duties in favour of our trade to the West Indies; the proposed plan of opening a Free trade to all parts of the world except China; and now, the extraordinary encouragement given to the growth of Hemp, all prove the honesty and sincerity of her views in regard to us:

We have taken our pen on this occasion for the purpose of entreating in the most earnest manner, that every farmer in the country, who can possibly make it convenient to try the experiment, will sow at least one acre of Hemp, which can be done at a small expence, and we trust that will do for him. On the part of Government, we think the very best measures have been taken to secure success; and it only wants a corresponding exertion on the part of the farmers to insure the most beneficial results to the country at large. Agriculture, manufactures, and commerce, will be alike benefited, and the encouragement now given to the cultivation of Hemp, may be found hereafter, to have constituted a new era in the history of the country, from which its permanent prosperity may take its date.

We never approved of the former plans, and the measures that were taken to encourage the growth of this important article. Giving a bounty, no matter how considerable, for the production of a commodity that could not be sold when produced, was a palpable absurdity. The best kind of bounty that can be offered for any article, is a good demand, and a good market; the demand makes the market.—" Buy my wheat, or buy my hemp at a fair price, a price that will amply compensate me for my labor, and I shall be glad to raise as much as I possibly can; but don't talk of giving me in a bounty one half of what the article costs me to produce it, and then leave it on my hands "—Such would be the language of a prudent farmer in this country, where he has not a choice of markets.

By the wisdom, foresight and liberality of the British Government, such a market as the grower wants, is now open to him. By a dispatch from the Under Secretary of State for the Colonial Department (see the important notice published in the Gazette) received by our Lieutenant Governor, it seems that Commissioner Barnie, at Kingston, has received orders from the Lords of the Admiralty, to purchase Hemp, being the produce of Canada, at the same price that imported Hemp cost Government, when laid down in the Dock yard at Kingston. These orders must, therefore, enable the Commissioner to offer a very handsome price, compared with that paid in Russia and in the North of Europe, for the same article; since the various expenses of freight employed, and the charges of transport from the Baltic to England, and from England to the interior of this country, must add materially to the original cost of the article where it was raised: and according to the notice publicly given, the Canadian grower will have all the advantage of these additional charges, since all that Government requires, is, that it shall not pay more than the gross price at which the article can be laid down, from abroad. In his majesty's dock yards at Kingston. From this it does it appears that the whole of the British Navy, employed on the great Lakes and rivers in the interior of Canada, is to be supplied with Canadian Hemp, provided our farmers will accept the liberal offer that is made, and produce the quantity required.

Great as this encouragement undoubtedly is, it is not all. Importations are to be allowed into England, from the country, to the amount of one fourth of the supply for the whole British Navy, by way of experiment; and, if that experiment should succeed we can have little doubt that the entire consumption of Great Britain will be eventually taken from this country. Really, it appears to us that nothing has ever yet occurred in the agricultural and commercial history of Canada, at all to be compared, in point of general importance, with this extraordinary encouragement for the growth of Hemp. It alone, may be the means, if the farmers take proper advantage of it, of at once restoring the balance of trade in our favour and giving us a super abundance of the circulating medium. There is no doubt that Upper Canada produces Hemp of the best quality, and of the finest, and most luxuriant growth; and, that by no very extraordinary exertion on the part of her farmers, a sufficient quantity may be obtained, not only for the consumption of the British Navy, but after a very few years for the equipment of any number of ships it can ever be likely either this or the mother country can employ. In the encouragement now held out the wisdom of the British Government is strikingly manifested; for by this new arrangement, not only will this Colony, in particular, be materially enriched, and acquire fresh importance, but Great Britain will be in a great measure if not altogether, rendered independent of the Northern Powers of Europe. (with whom it is not in the nature of things, she can remain always on friendly terms) for the raw material on which the equipment of her fleets depends; and were it for this consideration alone, England ought to prize her possessions in North America, far beyond any value that has been yet placed upon them, whatever they may have cost, or may yet cost her to maintain them; and she should cherish them with the warmest solicitude as an inexhaustible resource hereafter, in the hour of need. To say nothing of the exports and imports, generally in other respects, to be assured that as long as the two Canadas were retained, an inexhaustible supply of the two principle materials for the equipment of a Navy of any extent—Timber and Hemp, could be had, is a satisfaction and a resource, the value of which it would be hard, duely to appreciate.

Our farmers can now have nothing left to complain of, at least in this particular. The Legislature having granted a sum of money for the erection of a suitable Mill for the dressing of hemp, and the liberal offer which is now made by the British Government for the purchase of the article when manufactured, seems to leave nothing unwished for. If our neighbors on the other side the Lakes had such an offer made them, what a scene of bustle and of enterprize would be immediately exhibited! Let our farmers for once rouse themselves from the apparent apathy into which they have sunk; let the bustle and spirit of enterprize, become general; now is the time for them to show how far they are worthy of assistance; let them not say the field is not sufficiently extensive for general competition. When it is considered that for the sails and cordage of a single first rate man-of-war, no less a quantity than 180,000lbs of rough Hemp are required; and that on an average, it would require upwards of 400 acres of land to produce that quantity, some idea may be formed of the extent of the new field that is opened for the enterprize of our farmers.

But if the certainty of individual wealth, and of the general prosperity of the country, in consequence of the cultivation of this branch of domestic economy, fails to hold out an incitement sufficiently strong, any thing we can say must be unavailing. We have, however, a better opinion of our farmers, and we trust they will eagerly manifest an universal disposition to take advantage of so glorious an opportunity of national aggrandizement. That nothing may be wanting on our part to encourage the growth of Hemp in this country, we shall take an early opportunity of detailing the best modes of culture, and of pointing out from whence the best seed may be obtained.

DOMESTIC.

As the bill for the Union of the Legislature of the two Provinces was to be presented to the Imperial Parliament about the middle of May, we have obtained upon the best information the following outline of it, we think it may be entirely relied upon.

There shall be but one Legislature—The Legislative Council and Assembly of the joint Legislature to be formed of the present Members of the Councils and Assemblies in both Provinces—The Qualifications to sit in the Assembly to be £500 real property, of £100 per annum from real or personal property—the mode of Election to be the same as at present.—Every County in Lower-Canada with more than 4000 inhabitants to send two Members to the Assembly.—The governor may form new Counties from the Townships, each to return one Member until it contain 4000 inhabitants, and when it contains more to send two.—No act which shall alter the number of representatives to pass without a majority of two thirds in both houses—The present privileges of the Members of both houses to be secured to them—The joint Legislature shall assemble for the first time not later than September 1823, sooner if the Governor deems fit and annually afterwards.—The duration of the Joint Parliament to be until 1825 unless dissolved—every future Parliament to be quinquennial. Persons holding lands under any other tenure than free and common soccage may have the power to give them up to the Crown, and obtain another grant of them under the free and common soccage tenure under such conditions and with such commutations as the Governor shall deem fit—The Governor to appoint such place of meeting for the Parliament as he shall think best.—Religion to be kept inviolate.—All written proceedings of the Legislature to be hence forward kept in Englis, and the debates in both houses at the end of ten years to be in English.—All duties existing at the end of the last session of the Legislature of this Province, to be levied to 1st February 1825, unless sooner repealed and to be appropriated by the Executive Governments of each Province until other Provisions be made by the joint Legislature; after the 1st February 1825, the joint Legislature will appropriate for each Province its proportion of duties—The administration of justice and of the Civil Government once permanently provided for, the surplus of revenue after such provision shall be applied to purposes of common utility. There will be added clauses for settling the proportion of duties to be paid to Upper-Canada.

It is the intention of the Colonial Government to take a Census of the people in Lower-Canada, without delay; this it is to be carried into execution through the medium of the Protestant and Catholic Clergy, to whom circulars for that purpose will be addressed. It is understood that returns were made by the latter to Monseigneur the Catholic Bishop during last autumn, and that it will now only be necessary to add those from the Protestant Clergy. The Census thus taken will approximate very near perfect accuracy, and is supposed to be 1-50th of the whole. (Quebec Gazette.)

LOYAL ORANGE ASSOCIATION.

The Members of the York Lodge assembled at their Lodge Room on the 12th inst. to celebrate the anniversary of KING WILLIAM THE THIRD, PRINCE OF ORANGE. At Two O'clock they Marched in Procession to Church, accompanied by the Band of the West York Militia, where the Hon. and Rev. Dr. Strachan gave an elegant and appropriate Discourse on the occasion.—After Divine Service they returned to Mr. Phairs' Tavern, where upwards of one hundred Members sat down to an elegant Dinner, prepared for their reception. They remained until a late hour—the greatest harmony prevailed.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Prince and Princess of Denmark had been introduced to George IV.; and a grand entertainment was given at the palace on the occasion. The Prince, whose name is Christian, is said to be about 36 years of age, and has a son by a former consort; he has no issue by his present Princess, who accompanies him, and whom he married about eight years ago.

Prince Augustus, the reigning Duke of Saxe-Gotha and Altenburg, died on the 17th of May, in consequence of a long illness, which was followed by a stroke of apoplexy. He has been succeeded by his brother Prince Frederick.

Lord Kinsale lately died at Cork where he had gone for medical assistance. He is succeeded in his titles and estates by his eldest son, the Hon and Rev. —— De Courcy, now Lord Kinsale, and the 27th Lord. His Lordship's ancestor was presented in 1792 to his late Majesty, and had the honor of asserting the ancient privilege of his family of wearing his hat in his Majesty's presence. The late Lord also enjoyed the same privilege.

The famous English banker, Baring, is stated to have been carried on his way, with his wife, from Naples to Rome, by a band of robbers, and compelled to ransom himself by the payment of several millions.

The Hon. Sir W. D. Evans, Recorder of Bombay, died on the 5th of December last.

The bookseller Benbow, the noted radical, has been held under bail to stand trial at the Quarter Sessions, charged with having published "a wicked and obscene libel." The principal editor of the John Bull, was sentenced to pay a fine of 300*l.* to the King, and the other two persons concerned to be imprisoned three months, and each to pay a fine of 100*l.* to the King, for a libel on her late Majesty.

The weather throughout Great Britain and Ireland continued remarkably fine, and the most cheering accounts were received from every district of the state of every species of vegetation.

The greater part of the colliers and miners, in the disturbed parts of Monmouthshire and Staffordshire, had returned to their work.

The West India and American Trade Bill, was ordered in the House of Commons, to be taken into further consideration on the 31st of May; and the Navigation Bill for a third reading on the 30th. We shall take the earliest opportunity of continuing our parliamentary summary.

It is stated in the French papers, that the Princess Elizabeth, Ladedavie of Hesse Hombourg, and sister to the King of Great Britain, had received intelligence from London, which formally contradicted the rumours of his Britannic Majesty's visit to the continent, the state of Health of the King not permitting such a voyage.

The Juniter of 50 guns had been taken down to Plymouth harbor, to be fitted up for the accommodation of Mr. Canning, as Governor-General of India.

No less a personage than His Highness Prince Nawab Meer Shere Khan, son of King of Delhi, had arrived at London, and with two of the ladies of his Harem, had taken lodgings at the Plough Tavern. John Bull does not seem to be much pleased with his Highness for refusing to exhibit the ladies to his prying eyes.

The second reading of the Catholic bill in the House of Peers, had been postponed in consequence of the temporary absence of Earl Grey, whose mother had just deceased.

Advices had been received in London, that the deputation from the London Missionary Society to the South Sea Islands, with additional Missionaries, sent out in the Tuscan, in May last arrived in safety and health at Otaheite on the 27th of September, after a fine voyage of four months and nine days.

By an official return laid on the table of the House of Commons it appears that the sum paid for ambassadors envoys and different kinds of foreign ministers, in 1792 was 88,340*l.*; in 1821 it is 171,499*l.* or nearly double.

INDEX AT END

The importation of ice into Great Britain, pays an ad valorem duty on its arrival. A dispute arose about the value of a cargo, and before the dispute was settled, the captain of the vessel was deprived of his freight, and the custom-house of the duty, by the melting of the ice.

In the House of Commons on the 21st of May, in answer to a question from Mr. Ellice, relative to the claims of the sufferers in the Province of Upper Canada, Mr Wilmot said, his Majesty's Government had come to a determination to advance a loan for the relief of those individuals of 100,000*l.* one half of which, 50,000*l.* to be secured by government, and the other half by the provincial Assembly, and a commission to be sent out immediately, to adjust the claims of the claimants.

IRELAND.

From the London Courier of May 30.

The Irish papers which we have received this morning furnish melancholy proofs of the still suffering condition of the wretched peasantry. In the town of Sligo, a Committee of Gentlemen have been exploring the obscure abodes of their misery, and their report of what they saw is indeed a sad and melancholy one. The town was divided into four districts, for the greater convenience of visiting, and the following are a few of the afflicting facts, which are authenticated by the names of the narrators.

In district No. 1, there were 400 individuals in absolute want. Many families had been wholly without food for 24 and 36 hours. One family had subsisted from Friday to Sunday upon boiled water grass, and one wretched woman died from want!

In district No. 2, where not more than two thirds of the houses had been visited, 618 persons were found in a starving condition, many of them not having tasted food of any kind for two days, and others sustaining nature by water-cresses.

In district No. 3, 600 individuals were suffering the same deplorable privations.

In district No. 4, the number of famishing creatures amounted to nearly 1800. "We were very particular," observe the gentlemen appointed to visit this district "in going into every house, and minutely examining into their general conduct, state of health, and means of support, attended and assisted by two respectable men living in the same district, and well acquainted with its inhabitants; that during such examination, we witnessed several instances of distress not to be described, many of them, particularly on last Sunday (a dreadful wet day,) being without a turf and destitute of either meal or a potatoe."

From the Liverpool Mercury, of May 31.

State of Ireland.—Extracts from information received by the Liverpool Committee.

A letter from the Archbishop of Tuam, to the secretaries at Liverpool, says, "I pray the relief of your benevolent committee to the perishing population of this town and and immediate neighborhood. Our distressed state is truly deplorable, and I have the same to report of almost the whole of the province of Connaught, over which, as Metropolitan, I preside. I am appalled at the conviction that many must die from actual hunger, and many more from the effects of bad, scanty, unwholesome, unnutritious food."

A letter from the Rector of Castlehaven, says, "already four individuals have died from famine. I yesterday found by the road side a girl, 12 years old attempting to eat grass. she had not tasted food for three days, and could scarcely articulate. The squalid countenances of the peasantry are appalling. I saw a man, yesterday, faint, whilst digging a field, from hunger.—weeds of the corn field are collected to furnish a wretched meal. Famine will soon be followed by pestilence."

A letter from a gentleman of Sligo, now at Dublin, says, "I am induced to address myself to you, on behalf of the poor in the town and neighborhood of Sligo, where not only famine, but disease prevails to an alarming extent, and where it is computed, that upwards of 7000 persons will be for some months depending on public bounty for the means of existence. I had a letter from Sligo this morning, which represents, on the report of visiting committees, the misery greater than those who were best acquainted with the situation of the poor could have possibly conceived. My friend says, at their second public meeting, the county court house where it was held, was nearly filled with poor persons, piteously inquiring what was to be done for them; it was an affecting sight. He calculates on 6000*l.* being got, which, under present circumstances, is a large sum for Sligo. The committee are going prudently to work; they are giving out seed potatoes on credit, and finding work for the poor at reduced rates. Any assistance your committee can afford, will be most acceptable and will be most gratefully acknowledged."

A letter from the committee at Clonakilty, county of Cork, says, "Were we to attempt a description to you of the appalling scenes of famine faced misery, with which we are surrounded, it would only add another pang to acting philanthropists. We have entered into a subscription which enables us to employ one hundred and twenty labourers on works of utility, leaving thousands on thousands unemployed. Melancholy to state, of the small number we have employed, many of them had not eaten any food from thirty to forty hours previous."

A letter from T. S Lindsay, Esq High Sheriff of Mayo, says, the distresses arise from "A failure in the potatoe crop of last year, and the inability of the lower classes to purchase either this root or any other provision at present. The small plots usually attached to the cabins of the poor, in many cases remain unsown from the impossibility of procuring seed. Nothing can be more wretched than the situation of the peasantry generally in Mayo. I have seen hundreds of wretched people greedily seeking for water cresses, wild mustard, nettletops dwarf thistles, or dandelion all the spring, and the unnatural food has been the only meal within their reach."

LATEST FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Our Continental letters continue to speak confidently of an approaching Congress of the European Powers; but they could not agree upon the place where it is to be held. Some mention Florence, others Vienna; and it is said that if Vienna should be the chosen spot, the Emperor Alexander would attend it in person.—London Courier.

The German Papers contain a message from the Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands to the Legislative Assembly, announcing the further continuance of martial law in those Islands.

An article from Vienna states that one of the Austrian Arch-dukes is to be sent to London on a mission of the highest importance, the object of which is to lay the basis of a new treaty between England and Austria, and to agree on the measures to be taken in common by those two Powers, in case the Port should persist in rejecting, "as it is probable," all the modes of conciliation proposed by the Mediatory Courts.

TURKEY.

It is clear, that the Divan has made no other concessions to Russia than it had done upwards of six months ago, when it announced its determination not to give up Moldavia and Wallachia till it had reduced the "rebel Greeks" to submission, and tranquility was restored throughout the Turkish empire. It is also obvious, that all the efforts of the ministers of the allied powers, to induce the Sultan to relax in his determination, have proved fruitless; for, notwithstanding what we find stated to the contrary in some of the foreign journals, it is put beyond all question, that no relaxation has taken place in the cruelties exercised upon the unfortunate Greeks, whom, we have not the smallest doubt, it is the fixed determination of the Mahometans utterly to exterminate. Let those who doubt this, only peruse the accounts of their treatment at Scio, in the month of April last, the particulars of which will be found in another column. The picture there given surpasses, if possible, all former details of the barbarous atrocities of these implacable enemies of the Christians. Neither age nor sex found favor in the eyes of these ferocious madmen. That they might have an opportunity of effectually glutting their thirst for blood, and rooting out for ever a race they abhorred, seems, indeed, to have been the secret motive that induced the Divan to assume the appearance of listening with attention to the representations of the foreign Ambassadors; who duped by the deceptive conduct of the Turks, have evidently been the cause of inducing the Emperor Alexander to delay his long meditated attack on the Ottoman empire.

Whether in consequence of recent events the Russian army will be ordered to advance, it is impossible for any one to say. The Editors of the London Journals appear to have no doubt on the subject. They think, and with apparent good reason, that the immense expense of keeping up so large a military force, independent of all other considerations, will compel Alexander to take the field. Accounts from St. Petersburgh of the 4th of May, announces the arrival there of the Russian minister Tatischeu on the 30th April, and state, that his dispatches were forwarded to the Emperor by express, his Majesty having previously gone a short way into the country. A Privy Council was held on the 1st of May; and Alexander is said, in some accounts, to have actually set out a few days after for the army. Previous to this, the Russian government had made large contracts for the conveyance of military stores to Minsk and Riga, and the second Russian army had received orders for the second time to hold themselves ready to march. The third order, it is added, would fix its destination.

From the Turkish frontier, the aspect of the intelligence is equally hostile. Large reinforcements of troops were arriving from different parts of Asia, ordered hither by the Divan, the members of which however, are said to differ extremely in their opinion since Ali Pacha's decease. In the event of war, it is thought the whole Turkish army will unite; cross the Danube at Widden, and occupy Wallachia, extending to the Austrian territories. The army of the Grand Vizier advances in two columns, one by way of Sophia to Rudschuck, the other by way of Schumla to Bralow. Churschid Pacha, the favorite of the day, but whose motives, it is said, are greatly impeded by the Greeks, is likewise to have a command in the great Turkish army assembling on the Danube. What effect these mighty preparations will produce, time only can develope. At present, they evidently indicate any thing but a pacific disposition on the part of the opposing powers.

GREECE.

The details to be found in another part of our paper, respecting the Greeks, will be read with interest. The efforts made by this people to establish their liberty will always endear them to freedom, and call forth unfeigned wishes for their success. We are pleased to observe, that, surrounded as they are by dangers and difficulties, the constituted authorities appointed in the different districts, display much firmness. Those who have lately visited this cradle of liberty, of arts, and of science, speak of the country as the finest in the world; the air perfectly pure and serene, particularly on the coast, it but rarely rains, and only for a few hours. All the advantages of Switzerland and Italy are united here.

Extract of a letter dated Marseilles, May 17th, to a house in London:

"We have accounts from Scio up to the 17th of April. The city was entirely destroyed, all the houses were opened and ransacked of their furniture, &c. and after being thus plundered, were set fire to, which continued till the 17th, date of the last advices. Up to the 13th, the hostages in the Castle were still alive, but nothing has been heard of them since. On the 14th, great numbers of the Turks dispersed themselves over the face of the country, plundering and burning all the country houses they met with—they then advanced to the village of Calchio, Thimiana, and Vassilionco, which were all three burned and destroyed. All the churches, both in the city and in the country, were broken open, robbed, and many of them burned. They even vented their rage on the Catholic Church of St. Nicholas, in the city, and on two others in Frangecumi in the country, and which were used in the same way as those of the Greek communion. You may judge if they have hid violent and sacrilegious hands on the Catholic Church es, what they must have done to those belonging to the Greeks. What a picture for humanity! The streets fill'd with heaps of men, women and children, cruelly butchered by the Turks. The large place before the fortress, and the fortress itself, filled with women and children of the most respectable families, exposed to the brutal conduct and savage ferocity of the Asiatics. Nor is it the sword or fire alone that the poor Greeks have to suffer from, they are also threatened with an immediate famine. The French Consul has provisions only for 14 days, for he has given shelter in his palace (a very large and extensive building you know) to 1,500 souls, among whom are 642 Greeks, the rest Latins. Among them is Mr. —, with his family—he was taken there by a Turk, to whom he gave a handsome sum, but who afterwards repenting of his humanity in having placed them in safety, went with some other Turks to demand them back from the Consul, who however, peremptorily refused, and forthwith requested the Pacha to give him a guard, which was granted, and five Turks were placed there as a protection. The Consul bought M——'s sister, found, after a great deal of difficulty, in the possession of a Turk, for 150 piastres. The wife of poor Mr. ——, and his two lovely boys, were bought as slaves by an Algerine, and taken to Alexandria. Should any vessel arrive here from Smyrna, we shall have fuller accounts and particulars respecting this ill-fated island, as the clerk of Mr. ——, who is a Frenchman, went to Scio for the purpose of assisting and redeeming the families of his employers. He has taken with him a large sum of money, and eight cwt. of biscuit.

"You can form but a poor idea of the state of my feelings whilst reading the heart rending recital of these calamitous events. God only knows what will become of our unfortunate families."

Zante, April 16.—The system of neutrality which has been proclaimed in the Ionian Isles goes directly to the confiscation of the property of all the Ionian Nobles suspected of being favorable to the cause of the Greeks, who are combating for their independence. Several of these Nobles, known by their fortune and their principles, have been obliged to expatriate themselves and seek for safety in the insurgent island. Amongst them are the Count Metaxa, a rich proprietor, of Argostoli, known for his wealth and the honorable employment of his fortune, and the venerable Archbishop of Cephalonia, Typeldo, known for his piety and learning.

Triste, May 16.—A letter from Athens, dated in the middle of April, states that it is the determination of all the Greek chiefs to gain time, and to make a mountain warfare, in imitation of that of Spain, which will be much favored by the nature of the localities.

It has been also determined to send to the different courts of Europe, persons with mine ons to intercede with them for the purpose of inducing them to grant a political existence to the confederated States of Greece. Amongst these Envoys or Deputies, are appointed the Archimandrite Ignatius and the Prince Caradgio, who are at present at Pisa, and M. Thomas Negris, Minister for Foreign Affairs. The Minister of War is a Suliote, named Botzioris: that of Police is named Lambro Nacco, of one of the principle families of Livadia; Panousious Nataros, of Corinth, of the house of the counts of that name, is Minister of Finance; Alexander Mauro cordato is president of the Council of Ministers, and Minister also, it is said, of Justice; Demetrius Ypsilanti is president of the council.

Extract from a letter written at Athens, by M. V——, pupil of the Polythenic School, formerly an officer in the French Navy, now commanding, with the rank of General, the artillery of Ypsilanti's army:—

"It is only by living among the Greeks that an adequate idea can be formed of the courage and devotion of this people, which so long has groaned under the most frightful tyranny.

"Our cause prospers on every side. We have just gained important advantages at Patrujek, and have almost totally destroyed the Turkish troops which had disembarked at Patras. The fleet, after so wretched an expedition, could not return to Constantinople. Either from bad weather, or through fear of the Greek fleet, it has entirely dispersed; part of the ships made for the coast of Barbary; the rest for Egypt, where six or eight of them have been wrecked.

"The Samians, after providing for the safety of their island, made a descent on Tchesmen, where they rescued a great number of Greek families. They next assisted the island of Chio to throw off the yoke. The important fortress of Napoli di Romania, has now began to treat for a capitulation. I hope a fortnight will not elapse before the Turks will deliver up the keys of our Acropolis. You will, I fear, look upon me as a Vandal, when I tell you that I have already thrown 200 shells but the gift of Minerva has protected her Temple. Our flag flies on the Parthenon.

"You know the end of Ali Pacha. This event might have been detrimental to our cause, had our enemies known how to profit by it. Every thing indicates that the Pacha of Egypt is about to throw off that remnant of dependence which he can but very ill brook.

"The Persians are constantly gaining advantages over the Turks; they continue to advance but their diversion is not sufficient. Should no European Power take a part in our affairs, we shall find ourselves much embarrassed, unless Russia shall persist in that system of observation which obliges the Turks to concentrate their principal forces on the Danube. How can European policy look with such coldness on interests so great! It appears to be forgotten that blood is flowing on all sides, and that our portion of daily sacrifices portion of victims."—Courier Francois, May 19.

FRANCE.

A list of the recent elections throughout France is given in the Moniteur, by which it appears that 54 Deputies have been returned by the Ministry, and 32 by the opposition, leaving a majority of 22 in favor of the Royalists. Notwithstanding this result, it is believed the party called Liberals, have gained an accession of force, which it is supposed will buy the King under the necessity of again changing his Ministers. The Duke of Cazes, it is remarked in the Paris papers, not only appears at Court as formerly, but is stated to have lately had an interview with the Duke d'Argoleme. Talleyrand had also recently shewn himself at Court. We hear very little about the state of public feeling in France. The Mayor of Lyons had issued a police ordinance on the 17th of May, in consequence of an election disturbance, which happened on the preceding evening, calling on the inhabitants to shut their houses, shops, or coffee rooms, at dusk. A tumult was expected at the close of the election, and this ordinance was intended to check it—but no further disturbance occurred. The Quotidienne announces a change in the Ministry of Naples, urged by Austria herself, in order that she may be enabled to concentrate her forces in Lombardy.

The Duke of Richilieu, the late prime minister of France, died suddenly on his arrival from England at his country seat near Paris.

SPAIN.

By the latest accounts from Madrid it appears that the servile factionists, had renewed their attempts in some districts to excite revolt, but without success. Ferdinand was at Aranjuez. It is said, that from some dislike to Constitutional troops, he prefers being accompanied in his country excursions by two or three forest keepers, to an escort of the regiments of Almanza—but the Colonel, being responsible for the safety of the monarch, takes the precaution of always sending escorts after his Majesty. The decree of the Cortes, sanctioned by the King, declaring the hymn of Riego a National Hymn had been publicly read before the Volunteer National Guard at Madrid, in presence of an immense concourse of people.

The Special committee of the Cortes, relative to responsibility, propose to bring to trial the Political Chief of Madrid. This functionary is said to be protected by the ministry, whose confidence he enjoys. It was decreed that the 14th of April the anniversary of the return of the King to Madrid, being a day of mourning for Spaniards on account of the overthrow of the Constitutional regime, should be henceforth be forbidden to be celebrated at Court. A resolution was adopted testifying to the army the high satisfaction of the National Congress respecting an offer made for reduction of pay, and declaring to the nation that they saw in this patriotic offer a new pledge of those civic virtues of which the whole army had not hesitated to give splendid proofs wherever they had acted in support of the liberty, the glory, and the independence of the Spanish people. It was also decreed, notwithstanding the opposition of the Minister of War and of the Deputy Augustin Arguelles, to disband the Brigade of Royal Carbineers from the 1st of July, and incorporate them with the other regiments of cavalry. The conduct of this corps when under the orders of General Freyre, during the events of the Isle of Leon is assigned for this proceeding.

GERMANY.

The news from Germany, received yesterday by a special courier, was wholly pacific—that which has arrived to day is warlike. We now know what expectation to form of the reply of the first Effendi at Constantinople; not only our private letters, but the Gazette of Augsburgh elucidate the true spirit in which this fresh but tardy answer of the Ottoman Court is conceived. It was on the 15th of this month that it was delivered to M. de Lebzow, the Austrian Ambassador, and it appears to be considered in no other light than as a second edition of the memorable note of the 28th Feb.

Once more the Porte admits the existence of the treaties insisted upon by Russia, and recognizes her obligation to perform the stipulations—professes her willingness to evacuate Moldavia and Wallachia—to rebuild the Christian Churches—refuses nothing—and accedes to all that is demanded.—But at what period will the Divan realize these professions?—when the insurrection in the Turkish provinces shall be suppressed—when the Greeks shall be reduced to absolute submission!!! We feel it our duty to recommend our readers seriously to meditate on the letter of our correspondent at Vienna. In that exposition will be found, the real ground and motive of these interminating negociations. To defer the period of hostility, was evidently the policy of the Divan, and in that object they have thus far succeeded, by deferring that war—which, nevertheless, cannot, for a long time, be eventually avoided.

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

COLONIAL DEPARTMENT.

The next division of the British Pamphlet, from which we have been extracting, and which appears to attract more attention than any thing else that we can publish, is panned under the head of the "Colonial Department." The writer considers this in conjunction with the Board of Trade, and chiefly confines his attention to the three principal subjects of Canada, Jamaica, and the Free Port Islands in the West Indies; adding a few observations upon the Cape of Good Hope, and the Ionian Islands. We shall make such extracts as will afford the most interest and information to our American and Canadian readers.

The following extract shows how high the British North American possessions are estimated by the Ministry, and, we presume by the Nation at large. Three facts of importance appear from this statement, viz. that the Canada trade employs about one-fourth of the British tonnage; that the Canadas consume more of British manufactures than the East Indies; and that in consequence of our navigation laws, were it not for the Canadas, the British West India Colonies would be subjected to great occasional distress.

"It has been too much the practice for popular writers to undervalue the possession of Canada. Canada is of three main uses to the British Empire—The first, that of constituting a point of contact with the United States; secondly, that of administering to the maintenance of the British navy, by the employment of a large amount of tonnage, and by the formation of seamen in long and rough voyages; and thirdly, that of consuming a very considerable portion of our manufactures.

"Under the first of these heads, it has been the policy of successive administrations to regard the possession of Canada as a point of primary importance. It would be ungracious to anticipate events yet hidden behind the clouds of time, and which every man hopes may be of remote occurrence. But, no surprise are not the exercises of the day, political prudence must extend its reach beyond the precautions of a living generation. Quid breni fortes jaculemur ævo, is not a rule of political wisdom. In the vicissitudes of human affairs a breach with America is assuredly not an impossible event. But if former statesmen have justified the retention of Gibraltar, a point of much more questionable wisdom, upon the sole ground of its affording a position on the Peninsula, and a port and station in the Mediterranean; and if the experience of the last fifty years has sanctioned this policy;—how much stronger is the argument for the same provisional precaution with regard to British America and the West Indies. In any future war, a large naval force could be promptly applied from this quarter to the American seas. Possibly, this may be considered as of no inconsiderable importance.

"Under the next head, the seamen and tonnage engaged in trading with Canada are not to be overlooked. They compose a very material proportion in the total amount of our navigation.—It has before been mentioned, that the vessels employed in our trade with Canada amount to nearly one fourth of the tonnage of the British empire—and to this consideration, her supply of timber in any event of a war with the northern powers of Europe. Under the third head, the consumption of British manufactures in Canada exceeds the amount of the consumption of the East Indies. A further and a final circumstance, not to be omitted, arises from the late American navigation laws. Under the operation of those laws, our West India colonies, without the aid of Canada, would be subjected to great occasional distress. So much as to the importance and value of Canada.

Next in order and importance, as it regards the wealth, navigation and revenue of the British empire, the Island of Jamaica is considered. The value derived from the single article of sugar, is placed next to the agricultural produce of Great Britain.—During the year 1821, the revenue of this article alone, amounted to 5,000,000*l.*—exceeding by 200,000*l.* the whole revenue of Ireland, and greater by 500,000*l.* than the whole nett duties in England.—Add to the revenue of sugar, that derived from the other tropical productions, and the sum total is about $,200,000*l.* The total of all the sums raised upon the lands of Great Britain and Ireland, under the several heads of beer, malt, hops, and land tax for 1821, was but 9,000,000*l.* Of the total amount of colonial produce, Jamaica alone exports 100,000 hogsheads of sugar, employing 20,000 tons of British shipping, and 8,000 British seamen, and affording 2,000,000*l.* net receipt to the exchequer of the country. Such is the value and importance of Jamaica to Great Britain.

We extract entire, what is said of the free port system; in doing which, we cannot but smile at the apparent sincerity with which the writer speaks of the exceeding good will towards us which they have exhibited by interdicting our direct trade with the West Indies, and their wonderful kindness in their opening the Bermudas, for the sole purpose, as it would seem, of saving our people the trouble of double voyages across the Atlantic, and the consequent heavy freights!

"The next point for consideration are the Free Ports, so wisely established and enlarged in the West Indies, and particularly those in the Bermuda Islands. Enough has already been said of the general purpose for which these free ports were first established, and with a view to which end they have been continued and extended during peace. It is here sufficient to repeat, that the object of their maintenance is two fold; the one, reflecting much honor upon the political generosity of the country; the other, more particularly connected in its immediate and advancement of our own interest. The first of these ends was to afford a more convenient magazine of colonial supply to the United States, and thus to save the people of America the double voyages and expensive freights from their vicinity to Great Britain. This direct commerce between our West India Islands and America, the Bermuda Free Port system has repaired the inconvenience, and the United States may still receive our colonial produce without a voyage to Europe. It is sufficient here to add, that in this national object we have every facility which the system has given to this system, and that every regulation has been made to remove impediments to this beneficial intercourse. Possibly, the real and solid advantages of this relaxation from our colonial monopoly will be hereafter much better understood by the country. In its present liberal extent is new both to our colonies and to the traders of the United States. In our own colonies, a sufficient capital is not perhaps yet embarked to reap the full advantage of a market so calculated to enlarge itself. Possibly, the present description of traders in these Free Ports is not exactly qualified to give a due effect to such a system. Larger capitals, and merchants more exercised in the habits of national trade, will necessarily lead to smaller profits and lower prices; and thence to a larger dealing and consumption in the United States. It is impossible not to acknowledge that the frame work is excellent, and in every respect consistent with liberal policy and just commercial views."

This head of the exposé is concluded by a few remarks upon the Cape of Good Hope, and the Ionian Islands. Of the former they say, it is "a vineyard, and at no distant period will be a granary under the most favorable climate in the world." Of the latter, they say, "we have faithfully fulfilled our duties as their protectors;—we have purified, so much as in us lay, the old system of the old administration;—we have raised the character of the inferior classes of the people, and have reduced the feudal chiefs to obedience of the laws. They no longer afford the most disgraceful spectacle in the midst of civilized Europe—a people without law, private morals, or public honor. In process of time we may contribute as much to their culture and commerce, as we have already done to their laws and morals. A promising fruit trade may hereafter become of proportionate importance to our foreign trade."

Miscellaneous Notices.

An Indian Juggler, while exhibiting his performance in France, actually swallowed a sword, or metallic blade.—The unfortunate Juggler had the sword held by one end in his fingers, while the other end was in his stomach; something surprised him, he felt hold of the blade, and it descended immediately beyond his reach.—His astonishment, subsequent pains, and lingering illness, can better be conceived than described. Several months thus passed away, when he came under the care of Professor Dubois, of Paris, who extracted the instrument from the right groin, where an extensive operation had taken place. The blade, after its removal from the body of the sufferer, measured ten inches and a half in length, and one inch in breadth, at its widest part.—The last accounts, dated one month after the operation, states the patient to be doing well.

A few days ago the wife of a person, who was incarcerated, in Edinburgh gaol died suddenly, and he obtained leave to attend the funeral; the obsequies were no sooner performed than the husband also took ill, and died in four days, at his own house in the western suburbs. During his short illness he would not suffer certain parts of his clothes to be taken off, and at his death several sums of money were found sewed in his garments. About this unexpected riches his sons quarrelled and fought.

A child, of about five years of age, was lately exhibited at the Royal Academy of Medicines in Paris, who is so fat that he can hardly walk. He is not taller than other children of the same age, but weighs 108 pounds!—French Paper.

Aquatic pedestrianism.—An English paper informs us that a Mr Kent has made a bet of 1000 guineas, that he will walk from Dover to Calais, and has set out on his journey by passing along the river from Alnwich, he fixed several shots and went through the evolutions of the firelock, and sword exercise.

The wreck of the Albion was sold by public auction, and brought £40 16s. 7d sterling: the missing box of specie, amounting to £5000 had not been recovered.

John Townsend, the Pedestrian who had undertaken to walk 50 miles a day for three successive days, 75 miles backwards and 75 miles forward, completed the task in the specified time.

Oliver Cromwell.—A short time ago, a naval officer, on his journey towards London, met with in the stage coach, an intelligent and accomplished lady, who in the course of conversation, said she had resided in Paris and in York, is in the possession of the head of this distinguished character. It appears, that Cromwell's head was, soon after the Restoration, affixed on a pole on one of the public buildings in Westminster, but by some accident got into the custody of a soldier, who was on duty near the place; that a reward was offered for it, but the soldier's family retained it, though some time after it was sold, and ultimately reached the hands of its present owner. There seems to be no doubt that it is the head of the Protector, from the evidence which has descended with it.

British Navy.—According to reports made to the British Parliament, such is the state of the British ships in ordinary, that at one porte (Plymouth) a fleet of twenty sail of the line, and nearly double that number of frigates and smaller vessels, can, in case of necessity, be equipped for service in three month. Most of the new built ships have round sterns.—The King George the 4th 120 guns, and a frigate of 46 guns, recent launched, are built in this manner.

Gambling.—A case was lately brought in the Court of King's Bench, London, to recover a sum of money lost in gambling. An attempt was made to destroy the evidence of those brought forward to prove the facts, because they were in the habit of visiting gambling houses, but the Chief Justice Abbott ruled that no objection existed to the testimony of a witness because he went into a gambling house. If that was the case the statute would be declared, because it would be impossible to prove a case unless by the evidence of those who visited such houses—verdict for the plaintiff £50.

NOTICES,
Literary, and Scientific.

LONDON, May 7.—Somerset House Exhibition.—The competition of rival art in the Exhibition of the Royal Academy, this season, is on the whole creditable to the genius of some and the industry of many of the candidates for public favor. In point of variety, the character of the Exhibition had three credible sources, but it was in some points lame. The number of inferior portraits is not so great as it has been, while that of the better class has augmented. Subjects of a familiar if not of an historical character, bear a greater proportion to the whole mass than they usually did, and the skew of landscape, as well as the minor works of the pencil, invite every taste and diversify the matter of general inspection; still, however, it cannot be denied that a large number of the paintings do not rise above the dead level of mediocrity, and many have been admitted, which critical merit will allow to remain in unpariable repose.

Portrait of His Majesty, for the Royal Palace, Windsor by SIR T. LAWRENCE.—This portrait is in every respect worthy of the character of the President. It represents the King in the full robes of the order of the Garter, standing beside a table, on which he places one hand, and which is occupied by the Crown and some other parts of the regalia. The figure is admirably drawn—the expression grave and dignified—the position unconstrained, and the whole department full of grace and majesty. The likeness is very striking, and the character of the countenance is given with severe fidelity. The richness and splendour of the robes and various Orders which decorate the Royal person would reduce inferior talent into a tawdry display of colors; but the artist has given them all their brilliancy, while every thing like glare is obviated by the pure harmony of the tints and the exquisite management of the combination.

The Chelsea Pensioners receiving the London Gazette Extraordinary of Thursday, June 22, 1815, announcing the Battle of Waterloo; D. WILKIE, R. A.—The subject of this picture is well chosen for the display of Mr. Wilkie's peculiar talents. It embraces a great scope of individual character and popular expression. The effect of the news upon the crowd is preserved with a due attention to the character and occupation of the persons who compose it; of course the feeling of loyal exultation is the prevailing, if not the only one.—There are some groups, which are in the very best style of Wilkie, particularly that of the grave and sentimental Chelsea Pensioner, to whom the younger and more animated Life Guards-man addresses himself, and that of the soldier and the females on the right of the picture, and the Oyster Woman and her Customers. The Highland enthusiasm gives great variety and relief to the general expression.

We have before noticed that a work was preparing under the patronage of the King of Great Britain, representing his Coronation; we now have some further particulars of this SPLENDID PUBLICATION. The whole of the text is to be in letters of gold. It will be accompanied with superb engravings of the procession, including a great number of Portraits, highly finished drawings in colours, the figures to be about five inches in length. Plates, in the same style, exhibiting the Crowning of George IV, and, the Banquet, will also adorn the volume. It is to be published by Mr Ackermann, who assures the public that not one copy shall be printed beyond the number subscribed for.—Specimens of the work were exhibited in London in May. The price is not mentioned.

Improvement in Naval Architecture.

On Thursday last, the public were much gratified and astonished, at the exhibition of an Iron Steam Boat, in the River Thames. A large party of distinguished Naval Officers and Engineers, and Servants, embarked at Parliament Stairs, on Board the Iron Steam Boat, which immediately got under weigh, and proceeded to Battersea Bridge; she then descended to Blackfriars, and manœuvred for several hours between the bridges in a very superior style. This Steam Boat was built at the Horsley Iron Works, by Mr. Hanby, and published in Rotherhithe. She is the most complete piece of workmanship in the iron way that has ever been witnessed, and draws one foot water less than any steamboat that has ever been built. She is 106 feet long, and is propelled by a 30 horse engine, and 60 inch stroke. The most perfect piece of mechanism has been revolving and working in the engine, and Oil has been used instead of water, which has never been adopted in steam boats. The great advantage of these oars is their entering and leaving the water edgeways, by which means no power is lost, and they are particularly useful in rivers, which are full of craft, as they do not injure them more than half the breadth of the common oars. We have no doubt but the iron boats will be generally adopted, particularly where a small draft of water is necessary. Another advantage they have over steam boats is their perfect safety from fire, and consequently freedom from danger. This boat will leave London in a few days for Paris, the first instance of a direct communication between the capitals of France and England.—London Courier.

LITERARY SOCIETY, GLASGOW.

The question on Thursday evening, at the lyceum, "whether he writings of Sir Walter Scott or Robert Burns have tended most to the improvement of mankind?" was, after an animated debate, carried by a considerable majority in favor of Burns.—Glasgow Chron.

The celebrated Abbe Sicard, whose death we lately announced, was buried on Monday at Paris. His remains were attended by a military escort, members of the Institute, and the deaf and dumb pupils of the deceased. Two days before his death, he addressed these words to the Abbe Gondelin, the Director of the Deaf and Dumb School of Bordeaux:—"My dear brother, ready to die, I bequeath to you my dear children.—I bequeath their souls to your religion, their bodies to your care, their intellectual faculties to your enlightened capacity. Perfo m this noble task, and I die tranquil."

Amongst the literary novelties of the day, the Travels of a Blind Man are not the least remarkable. Notwithstanding the peculiar disadvantages arising from a total loss of sight, the gentleman's Narrative of his Journey through the South of Europe," will be found to contain a variety of interesting details.

The Nutmeg.—The nutmeg tree is a beautiful vegetable. The trunk with a smooth brown bark, rises perfectly straight and numerous branches proceed regularly from it in an oblique direction upwards. They bear large oval leaves pendulous from them, some of a foot in length. The upper and outer surface of the leaf is smooth, and of a deep green; the under and inner surface is marked with a strong nerve in the middle of the leaf, from the foot stalk to the point; and from this middle nerve others proceed obliquely towards the point and edges of the leaf, but what distinguishes and this inner surface, it is uniform brown colour, without the least intermixture of green, and is strewed as over with a fine brown powder. The whole leaf is characterised by its fragrant odour, sufficiently denoting the fruit which the tree produces. This fruit, when fresh, is about the size and figure of a common nectarine. It consists of an outer rind, between which and the inward shell, is found a reticulated membrane or divided skin, which, when dried, is called the mace. What is known by the name of the nutmeg is the kernel within the shell, and is soft in its original state.

The Gazette of Lyons announces the death of Sir Walter Scott, with a biographical notice of the celebrated romance-er's life which will give Sir Walter, (whom we believe still alive, and hope well,) no great gratification in the reading.—It describes him as given to the pleasures of the table—fond of his bottle, when the wine is good—a great Tory, and a friend (somewhat inconsistently) to the Spanish Liberals.

There is a copper coin in the possession of Colonel Ross, of Nigg, of a size somewhat less than a farthing, which was found in the ruins of his old farm-offices. On one side of it the Scotch Thistle is easily traced, but the impression on the other side seems difficult to ascertain. The date, however, is perfectly distinct, being 918. We cannot venture to affirm that this is a Scotch coin, the silver penny of ALEXANDER II., 1214, being the oldest we have any knowledge of. The coin in the possession of Colonel Ross, however, deserves the attention of the antiquary, as it may strengthen the belief that there are Scotch coins of older date than the last mentioned.

ANALYSIS OF TEA.—An opinion has long prevailed, that green tea is impregnated with poisonous substances, in consequence of its being dried by the Chinese on copper plates. Although it was easy to have ascertained this fact at once, no one seems to have regarded it as of any consequence, and we have been going on drinking, what has been almost universally considered a deleterious infusion, without speculating in the least apprehension of its consequences.—The fact is, however, that a solution of pernicious qualities as black tea, which has been recently ascertained in London, by a variety of experiments. A member of the royal institution has published the result of these, in which he says, that "ammonia was never indicative of the least trace of copper in samples of green tea which were perfectly genuine." He also states, that the tea is dried in China on porcelain slabs, and not on copper plates as generally supposed, and that the Northern Tartars are entire strangers to black tea, the green tea being only familiar to them. It should seem that there are two distinct species of genus thea; the thea bohea and thea viridis; and that hot alcohol poured on green tea, does not cause the evolution of the leaves, but that they may become black, and that has yet been adopted in steam boats. The great advantage of these oars is their entering and leaving the water edgeways, by which means no power is lost, and they are particularly useful in rivers, which are full of craft, as they do not injure them more than half the breadth of the common oars. We have no doubt but the iron boats will be generally adopted, particularly where a small draft of water is necessary. "MODES OF CATCHING."—Munich.—A very extraordinary circumstance has occurred here. A servant being in a garden with a child nine months old, set it down on the ground, when suddenly an Eagle darted from the air to seize upon it as a prey. The servant, who was fortunately close by with the greatest courage and presence of mind threw a shawl at the bird, which covering its eyes, not only prevented him from seizing the infant but even from escaping. She then boldly caught hold of the robber, and in spite of his struggles threw every thing presented a contrast to the quiet scene that I had quitted:—here was a group of fashionables, male and female, whose bows of recognition, and smiles and whispers, betrayed that they were more occupied with each other, than with the auction. At another side was a set of elderly ladies, whose scrutinising glances, and airs of self importance, were expressive of their conscious superiority. Next to the se were some gentlemen, of a certain period in life, who had lost their clubs to look in at the sale, and whose ardent looks and unguarded tongues betrayed them well accustomed to such scenes. The rest of the crowd was composed of brokers, and dealers in bijouterie, who evidently wished the fashionables away.

"Dis-rous (says the Estayest) is eager in the pursuit of some article that pleases his fancy, and seems to think of self alone.

The mandon that I now was in, had lately been the residence of a family of distinction, and bore evident marks of good taste.—The furniture was rich and elegant, and chosen with a view to use as well as ornament.—the pictures were the chef d'œuvre of the best masters; and a library of well-chosen books, with globes, fine maps, and all the apparatus for astronomical and geographical studies, marked the intellectual pursuits of the late possessors.

"The morning room being the principal part of the family next excited my attention; here were all the indications of female elegance and female usefulness—the neat book shelves, stored with the best authors; the writing table, with all its appendages; the drawing table on which the easel and pencil still rested, and the harp and piano forte, with the music books still open, all spoke the refined taste and avocations of the owners of this room, and how sudden had been the ruin that had expelled them from it.

"Some pictures with their faces turned towards the wall, were placed in a corner of the room, and curiosity induced me to examine them. I found them to be coloured drawings, admirably executed, and evidently portraits: on examining them more closely I discovered that some of the accompaniments were copies of part of the furniture now before me. One of the drawings represented two very lovely girls performing on the harp and piano forte, and never did I behold a sweeter personification of a duet, 'Both warbling of one song, both in one key;' as if their heads, their sides, voices, and minds had been incorporate.' Another represented a most animated, intelligent looking girl, reading to one who was drawing, and whose countenance, though pale and languid, was expressive of genius and sensibility. Here thought I, are the two actors in this domestic scene; and as I gazed on the sweet faces before me, my interest became excited to a painful degree. Imagination pictured those delicate looking females driven from their home, stripped at once of all the enjoyments of life, and sent to brave a world, the hardships of which they then knew not for the first time to learn. I saw them cling to each other in agony of affection—I saw the last looks of parting sorrow which they cast on this scene of happy hours for ever gone by; and I saw the efforts they made to compose their tearful countenances, and to regain some portion of fortitude, while with hurried steps, as if afraid to trust themselves with another parting glance, they left the apartment. My heart bled at the picture which my fancy had painted, and I hastened into the street, where the sale was going on, to lose the gushing agony of my emotions. Here every thing presented a contrast to the quiet scene that I had quitted:—here was a group of fashionables, male and female, whose bows of recognition, and smiles and whispers, betrayed that they were more occupied with each other, than with the auction. POETRY.

THE ROSE.

As late each flow'r that sweetest blows,
I plucked the garden's pride!
Within the petals of a rose
A sleeping love I spied.

Around his brows a beaming wreath
Of many a lucid hue;
All purple glowed his cheek beneath,
Inebriate with dew.

I softly seized th' unguarded power,
Nor scared his balmy rest;
And placed him, caged within the flow'r,
On spotless SARAH'S breast.

But when, unweeting of the guile,
Awoke the prisoner sweet,
He struggled to escape awhile,
And stamped his fairy feet.

Ah! soon the soul-entrancing sight,
Subdued th' impatient boy!
He gazed he throbbed, with deep delight,
Then clapped his wings for joy.

'And O,' he cried—'of magic kind,
What charms this throne endear?
Some other love let Venus find—
I'll fix my empire here.'

SKETCHES OF SOCIETY.

The Auction.—This sketch relates to a sale of household effects in a fashionable square, a scene which exhibits human nature in a very unamiable point of view.

"Each person (says the Essayest) is eager in the pursuit of some article that pleases his fancy, and seems to think of self alone.

The mandon that I now was in, had lately been the residence of a family of distinction, and bore evident marks of good taste.—The furniture was rich and elegant, and chosen with a view to use as well as ornament.—the pictures were the chef d'œuvre of the best masters; and a library of well-chosen books, with globes, fine maps, and all the apparatus for astronomical and geographical studies, marked the intellectual pursuits of the late possessors.

INDEX AT END.

extorted a smile of horrid admiration from the beau, who rejoined, 'If it gives you pleasure to excite envy, you must often enjoy that gratification, as all women kind must be ready to expire with envy wherever you appear.'—'Oh! you flattering creature, you don't really think so,' was the lady's reply.'

Some fine moral reflections are offered on the possible ruin to which an intimacy thus weakly commenced may lead; and the narrative proceeds—

"From these ruminations I was disturbed by the tinkling accents of another party of fashionables. 'Do you go to lady D——'s ball to-night?' enquired a listless looking young man, of an affected sickly looking young lady.—'I am not quite sure (was the answer) for lady D——'s balls are, in general, so dull, that I don't much fancy going to them; I am to look in at Mrs C——'s, and the marchioness of L——'s, and if they offer nothing very tempting, I may go to lady D——'s. By the bye, apropos of balls—what very pleasant ones we have been at in this house; your Mrs B—— will give no more balls; for, I understand, they are quite ruined.' 'Well, I declare, now that I think of it, I am very sorry; for there are so very few people that give pleasant balls.' Here the conversation became general, each of the ladies, young and old, mingling their voices:—'We' I must say, I always thought how it would end,' says one. 'What a very conceited woman Mrs B—— was' cries another. 'Yes, and what fine people made about the beauty and accomplishments of the daughters,' said a third. 'I could a pale sickly looking girl (would never see any beauty in them; and I am sure they wore rouge and pearl powder.' 'They gave devilish good dinners though. (said one of the beaux) and I must do B—— the justice to say that he kept one of the best cooks in London.' 'Yes, and he gave capital claret,' rejoined another. 'I thought his white hermitage better than his claret,' said the third; while another exclaimed, 'Well, give me his luck in preference to all his other wines, for that was nought.' 'I hope G—— will buy B——'s wines; as he gives such good feeds: his is the only house in town where you may rely on finding a perfect supreme desirable; or where you get ecloettes des pigeons, a la champagne.'—Oh! but (remarked the first speaker) G—'s cellar is not so cool or well arranged as B——'s, and the wine may get injured.' 'There wont be time enough for that, for G—— can't last long; he will be done up in a short time,' was the reply 'I did hear some hint of that,' said another. 'It's a fact, I assure you, I had it from his lawyer,' said the first speaker 'Well, G—— is a monstrous good fellow, and we must dine with him very often, that the wine mayn't be spoiled before he is done up,' said one of the connoisseurs; which friendly intention they all expressed their willingness to carry into effect. 'Have you any idea what is become of B——?' interrupted one of the party. 'I did hear something, that he was in the bench—or gone to France; but (yawningly) I really forget all about it.' 'I intend to bid for his carriole horses at Tattersall's.' 'And I (said another) will bid for his Vandyke picture.'—'What, do you like pictures?' said a third. 'O, no, I have not the least fancy for them; indeed I dont' know a Titian from a Vandyke; but one must have pictures, and I know that R——, who is a judge in things of that sort, wants to have this, and I am determined he shan't' was the reply of the intended purchaser of one of the chef d'oeuvres of Vandyke.

"A young man of the party, who had hitherto been silent, and in whose countenance good nature and silliness strove for mastery, remarked, that 'it was a pity that people who gave such good dinners were so soon ruined.' 'A pity! (replied another) no, no; give me a short campaign, and a brisk one; for let the dinners and wines be ever so good, one gets so tired of seeing always the same faces, and the same kind of dishes; for if a dinner-giving man holds out many seasons, he gives so often the same sort of dinners, and the same set of men, that it at last becomes as tiresome as dining at the mess of the guards. Believe me, there is nothing like a transient; and no man; at least no dinner giving man, should last more than two seasons, unless he would change his cook every month, to prevent a repetition of the same dishes and keep a regular roster of his invitations, with a mark to each name, to prevent people from sending at his house twice in a season.' 'Would it not be better to cut his acquaintances every month, instead of his cook, particularly if he once got a perfect artist? Who is it that would not give up all his acquaintances, rather than part with such a cook as Monsieur Ude?' All the party agreed in this sentiment, but the silent young man observed, that 'carrying it into practice might be attended with disagreeable consequences; for some men are so ridiculous, that if you take it into your head to cut them, they sail you out, and nothing but a duel or an apology remains.'

"While this edifying conversation was going on, the elderly ladies were all haranguing on the follies, errors, and extravagances of Mrs B——; and the young ones were deploring the looks, accomplishments and manners of the Miss Bs——. Each article of ornament or dress that was exhibited for sale elicited fresh accounts from the acquaintances of the unfortunate B—— family, who appeared to exult in the misfortunes of those for whom they once professed a regard."

Another set of loungers elderly gentlemen, who enter into a disquisition on the pictures, &c. are next described, and the writer continues:

"I exclaimed, 'And this is an auction! a scene so often the resort of the old and the young, the grave and the gay, where human beings go to triumph in the ruin and misery of their fellow creatures; and where those who have partaken of the luxuriancy of the once opulent owner of the mansion, now come to witness his downfall, regardless of his misfortunes, or ease to exult in their own contested prosperity. Never were mankind so low in my estimation; and I was hurrying from this scene of heartless self-baseness, when I perceived two females engaged in conversation, whose looks were expressive of the sympathy which they felt in it.

MILES COLVINE, THE CUMBERLAND MARINER.

(Concluded from our last.)

In about fifteen days the spice groves of one of the Portuguese islands appeared before us, and as the sun was setting, it was resolved we should remain at the entrance of a bay till day-light. We were crowded on the deck, looking on the green and beauteous landscape, and a gentle steward wind wafted the perfume of the forest about us. My wife was then in the bloom of youth and beauty, full of health, and life, and love; and as she stood leaning on my arm, the sailors surveyed their rough looks, and reclaimed from curses, so much were they touched by her beauty; but this awe lasted but a little while. The captain was merry far beyond his usual measure of delight and drained one wine cup after another, to, my wife's health and mine; he vowed I was as a god among his men, and that my wife was reverenced as a divinity. 'But come' said he, 'Miles Colvine, I have a curious and cunning thing to show you, which you alone deserves to see; I got it among the Moors, so come, and come alone.'—I rose and followed him, for my curiosity was unbounded; he conducted me below, and opening a small wicket in the wall of his cabin with a key, ushered me in, and closing it suddenly upon me, locked it, and then I heard him bounding up the stair to the deck. I stood half imagining this to be a jest or something at least of a light nature; but shriek after shriek of my wife, uttered in the piercing agony of anguish and despair, soon undeceived me. I called, I entreated, I used force, and though I was seized by anger and despair, with almost supernatural might, the door with stood all my efforts. But why should I dwell upon a scene of such unutterable misery? What I endured, and the woman I loved and adored suffered, are fit only to be imagined, not, surely, to be spoken. Her wrongs were remembered, and her shrieks numbered by a vow in for more terrible than man, and a certain doom and deplorable death was pronounced against them, at the moment their joy was fullest.

The evening passed away, and morning came, and through a little cricket which looked upon the sea, the light showed me that my chamber was the treasure room of the pirates, for such they were as well as smugglers; at the same moment a hole opened above, and a piece of bread and an antique silver cup, filled with wine, were lowered down. Amid the misery of my situation it seemed but a light evil that I recognized the silver vessel to be part of the treasure I had left home, and in seeking a weapon to force the wicket, I found that my whole riches, in gold as well as silver, had been seized and put on board. I could now measure the extent of my calamity, and prepared myself for a fate, which, among such miscreants, could not be deemed far distant. The morning was not much advanced, when the sun dipped at once into a dark and tempestuous ocean of clouds, the wind began to whistle shriller and shriller among our sails, and the sea agitated by sudden and heavy gusts of wind, showed as far as the eye could reach, the darkand treacherous furrows so fatal to mariners. The wind was from the land, and I could both see and feel that the vessel was unable to gain the harbor, and had sought security from the approaching tempest by standing out to sea. I heard the wind was louder, and saw the billows roll, with a joy that arose from the hope of revenge: the sky became darker, the sea flashed over the decks, and the tempest lurried the ship onward with a rapidity which alarmed the sailors, accustomed as they were to the element. The seams of the vessel began to admit the sea, and every where pumps were appeared of less immediate destruction.

I heard a conversation over head I shall never forget. 'I tell you,' said a voice in lowland Scotch, "good can never come of such evil as your captain and you have wrought.' 'And you (said the other) have got gold and silver alone, the sin had been small, and a grey headed repentance might have mended all. But the bonnie lady! her voice has been heard to-day, and tremble all you that touched her sweet body, for here has come an avenging tempest. The sea will soon devour us, and the mother who bore, and the wife who loved me, and the bonnie babes I have nursed on my knee, will be hold me no more; and all for being in company with such evil hounds as you.' A voice replied to all this in a tone too low and suppressed to be audible; and the Scotchman answered again. "Lo, look, did ever eyes behold such a sight, all around us the sea is as smooth as glass, and other ships pass by us, under a gentle breeze, without a settled sail, but we! the anger of heaven has found us, for on us the thick tempest beats, and the evil one is pursuing us to destruction. O thou villain,—captain, shall I call him so more—and you!—you fifteen wretches, who shared with him in his crime, make you ready, for that storm will leave you, nor forsake you, till you are buried in the ocean.' At the very moment when ruin seemed inevitable the tempest ceased, the clouds passed away, and the descending sun shone brightly down, making the shoreless waters sparkle so far as the eye could reach. No sounds were now set to the joy of the crew; they crowded the deck, made a circle round several vessels of wine and baskets of biscuit, and before the twilight had passed away a few only were capable of guiding the vessel. The night grew very dark, and as I sat in utter despair, I hear I the same friendly voice, that I had so lately heard, say, "Miles Colvine, put your trust in me, who can still the tempest, the hour is come." In a moment the wicket opened, and the same voice said, "Take this sword, and come with me. If you have courage to avenge the miseries and death of your beautiful and wretched wife, come, for the hours at hand, and as sure as I hate sin, and love immortal happiness, I shall help you." I took the sword and followed in silence, and coming on deck, I beheld a scene which the hope of sure and immediate revenge rendered inexpressibly sweet. The captain and five sailors, though nearly overcome with wine, were seated on the deck; the remainder of the crew had retired below; some sinmated, some sung, all blasphemed, and one loud din of quarling and carousal echoed far and wide: the mingled clamour that ascended from this scene of wicked mirth and domestic partook of all the evil qualities of devised infamy and the most infamous pursuits, and cannot be described. Discord had its full share in the conference on deck between the captain and his confederates; they were debating about their shares in the plunder of my home—"Share! by my saul, man," said a Scottish sailor to the captain, "your share in Miles Colvine's pure gold shall be but a nail; one hour of his sweet lady, a hundred leagues from land, was worth all the gold that ever shone"—"I shall share all fairly," said the captain, laying his hand on the hilt of his cutlass, "and first I shall send thy wicked carcase among the fishes of the sea, if I hear such a word a-gin. Did I plan the glorious plot of carrying away the fair lady, and her lord's treasure, to share either with such a Scottish savage as thee?" The wrath of the Scotchman burned on his brow, far redder than the blood of the wine he had drunk. "Friend seethe my saul, if ye taste na' cauld iron for this!"—And out came his cutlass as he spoke. "That's my hearty Caledonian," said one of his Comrades, "give him a touch of the toasting iron; I didn't he give a blow to the head of my mother's own son, this blessed morning, for only playing pluck at the lady's garment. Ah, give him the cold piece of steel, my hearty." A blow from the captain's cutlass was the answer to this; several drunkards drew their swords, and ill-directed blows, and ineffectual stabs, were given and received in the dark. "Now," said my sailor, laying his hand on mine, to stay me till I received his admonition, "say not onwards, for words slay not, but glide in among them like a spirit; thrust your blade, for anger strikes, but revenge stabs, and I will secure the gangway and fight along with you." I heard and obeyed, and gliding among them, thrust one of them through and through; a second and a third dropped, ere they saw who was among them. The captain attempted to draw a pistol, but my sword, and my friend's, entered at back and bosom; and though two yet remained unhurt, I struck my sword a second time, through the bosom of my mortal enemy, as he lay beneath me; and and the last expiring glance of his eye was a look worth remembering. Ere this was accomplished, the other two were lying with their companions. I have frequently mentioned that a firmness and strength more than my own, were given me during this desperate encounter. Meanwhile the remainder of the crew before set no bounds to their merriment and shouting, and seemed as my friend remarked, ordained to die by my hand, since their clamor by drowning the groans of their comrades, prevented them from providing for their safety. We fastened the cabin door, and barricaded the gangway, keeping watch with pistol and sword, with the hope of seeing some friendly shore, or a compassionate sail, while the vessel urged onward by a strong wind, scudded with supernatural swiftness through the midnight waters. We had entered the Solway sea, when the storm augmenting every moment, carried us rapidly along, and when opposite Allanbay, a shiekland seizing our ship by the ragging whirled her lately round, and down she went head foremost. Even on this moment of extreme peril, I shall never forget the figure that, crouched among the slain, started to its feet to free me in health and unhurt. There is a face in all things: it was that fiend in human form that I slew to-night. Revenge is sweetest when it comes unhoped for. As we took a passing vessel saved my pretty May Colvine, her murdered mother's image, and her wretched father's love, and saved too the heroic sailor; while the drunken wretches went to the bottom, without the chance of swimming for an existence they deserved not to prolong."

Such was the narrative of Miles Colvine. He has been dead for several years,and though his daughter wedded the man who saved her father and her, he refused to forsake the sight of the Solway, and the sound of its waters, and was found at his cottage door cold and stiff, with his eyes open and looking seaward.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1822

GREAT BRITAIN.

The British Parliament, which had adjourned from the 24th to the 30th May, met again on the latter day. The second reading of the Catholic Bill, was fixed in the House of Lords for the 21st of June. There appeared no chance, however, of its being carried. Last year there was a majority against it in the Upper House of 39; and out of 14 newly elected representative Peers, 10 are said to be hostile to the measure. The Duke of Wellington is stated to have authorised a party to vote in favor of the bill. Sir James Mackintosh, in the House of Commons, introduced by an eloquent speech, the following resolution: "that this House do take into its most serious consideration the means of increasing the efficacy of the laws by moderating their undue rigor." On taking the sense of the House, the numbers were, for the resolution 117; for the previous question, 101; majority, 16. The navigation bill was read a third time, and passed. The Marquis of Londonderry postponed till Friday the 12th of June, the receiving of the report of the corn importation bill, observing, that it would be the first introduced for discussion on that day. On the motion of Mr. B. Martin, the ill-treatment of cattle bill was read a second time, and ordered to be read a third time on Friday.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer was expected to retire from his office.

The price of tea had been somewhat affected in the metropolis, owing to the stoppage of trade with the Chinese. The general opinion in London was that the Chinese can as ill spare their trade, as the English; and that, consequently, the matter, would, ere this, have been over-looked.

Marquis Hasting's return from India is assigned to a general decay of his constitution, and the affliction of an aneurism in the thigh.

The Irish papers continue to be filled with the most afflicting narratives of human suffering, arising from the want of food and the progress of disease. Mr. Kean had determined to devote the produce of his benefit, this year, to the fund for the relief of the distressed peasantry in Ireland.

Carlisle's shopman, who refused to give up his name, had been tried at the Old Bailey under the appellation of "a man whose name is unknown," and found guilty of publishing a seditious and blasphemous libel. He was sentenced to be imprisoned 18 months in the house of correction, and to find securities for good behaviour for five years, himself in 100l and two sureties in 50l. each.

Mr. Hunt, the proprietor of The Examiner, was liberated from Coldbath fields prison, after suffering a year's confinement.

Butter is stated to have been sold in one of the markets of England at 4 pence (about 7 cents per pound)

THE KING'S MARRIAGE.—The belief that it is the intention of His Majesty to marry the daughter of the King of Denmark gains ground in almost all circles in the metropolis, and is held with peculiar satisfaction by many who think that the British court is robbed of half its splendour in the absence of a Queen. How far these remarks are grounded in probability we have been unable to discover. The Morning Chronicle, however, speaks confidently on the subject as to state, that, during the last week, the King inspected the Palace at Kew, preparatory to it becoming the occasional residence of our future Queen. There is no doubt that such an alliance with the court of Denmark at this precise crisis of affairs in Europe would be of great political importance to this country.—London paper.

Application was made on the 23d June in the prerogative court to give effect to a testamentary injunction of his late Majesty, requiring his next heir and successor to pay to Three Princesses of Cumberland, £15,000. Some unpleasant question arising, the cause was undecided. It is the recollection that soon after the death of the late Princess Charlotte, it was duly made known to her residuary executors (after the decease of George III. should have been effected) as the heiress, presumptive of the throne, claiming to be the daughter of the late Duke of Cumberland by a private marriage. Her pretensions were by many deemed spurious, but from the legacy referred to, it would seem that her claim has indirectly received the Royal sanction.

IRELAND.

DISTRESSED DISTRICTS.

County of Clare.—The Committee have purchased to cargoes of potatoes to be distributed as seed and the Monsi m-house Committee of Dublin have sent 100 tons to the barony of Tulla.

From the Ennis Chronicle we extract the following paragraph:—"Never in the recollection of the oldest inhabitant of this town, was a finer spring known than the present—the ear has appeared ready on some fields of barley in our suburbs; the wheat too, in a few days, will present a similar show; the potatoes look rich and promising, and will come amongst us much earlier than usual."

County of Galway.—As the season advances, distress seems to advance in this quarter. It is stated that many persons having no other alternative, have sold their shirts and sheets, with other linen and cotton articles to the agents of the paper makers, to avert for a moment the ravages of hunger. Fever being prevalent, many have died, and some persons have been buried without a coffin. From Connmara, the intelligence is most afflicting—many have died from want of food, and many others are dreadfully affected from eating sea-weed and shell fish; several have been drowned by permitting the tide to surrounnd them while searching for this food.—From the Arran Islands the accounts are not less painful—the misery, wretchedness, and disease, with which the people are afflicted are extreme. These Islands belong to the Digby family. The people are honest and industrious, and have always paid a high rent for a sterile soil.

Mullingar, May 30.—The result of last Thursday's market completely verifies the prediction, we had made in our preceding number, as to the fall in provisions. Apple potatoes brought no more than 5 1-2d. per stone, blacks 4 1-2d. to 5d. and seed potatoes 4d. This rapid decline, from the alarming rise of the former market, was highly consolatory to the numerous class of persons who depend solely on potatoes as an article of food.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

Intelligence was received in London, on the 6th of June, from almost every part of the continent of Europe. It supplied the usual quantity of contradictory rumours relative to Russia and Turkey, which leave us as much in the dark as ever as to the ulterior designs of these rival powers. The latest accounts from St. Petersburgh are of the 16th May at which period M. de Tatischeff had been a fortnight in the Russian capital, without any appearance of a change in the state of relations with the Sublime Porte; although a belief was said to be entertained in favor of a continuation of peace. A letter from Odessa of the 17th May states "that there seems no probability, since the mission of M. de Tatischeff, of a war with the Turks." Similar expectations are held out in correspondence from the same quarter of the 10th of that month, and the exchanges are stated to have improved four per cent in consequence.

So much for the pacific side of the question. As to the prospect of war, the latest French papers confidently assert that no diplomatic can possibly be entertained on the subject. It appears pretty certain, and is said not to be denied by those who persist in the belief of peace, that the Russian troops have actually marched into Moldavia. It is, however, asserted in the occupation of that province was only temporary and that it was not a pledge of the pacific intentions of the Emperor. It is remarked, that the consent of Austria not having been obtained, it would be difficult for the Porte to consider such provisional occupation in any other light than an act of hostility. Between these contradictory statements we conceive ourselves unable to decide as to the result. The affairs between these powers may, perhaps, with the greatest truth, be considered in statu quo. We have given below a document from the French papers, purporting to be a Manifesto published by the Russian government, which, if authentic, could be considered in no other light than a Declaration of War against the Porte. Circumstances connected with its appearance however, leave no doubt of its being a forgery of the stock jobbers at Paris.

GREECE.

Accounts from Smyrna of the 18th April, say, the Turks who landed at Scio, had shed so much blood that they had given courage to the vanquished. After stating that 12,000 dead bodies of Christians, of all ages and both sexes were lying in the streets, squares, and environs of the city, and that the Turks had 4,000 killed, and 10,000 wounded, the writer remarks that "the Greeks are now entrenched in the mountainous parts of Scio, whence they will not probably venture, except with a sure prospect of success. An amnesty has been proposed for the insurgents, and the proposals have been seconded by the agents of France and Austria, who met with a positive refusal. To conquer or die, is the unanimous cry of the whole population. Since then the standard of the cross floats on all the mountains."

FRANCE.

The King of France opened the Sessions of the Chambers on the 4th June, by a speech, which we subjoin. As to Turkey and Russia, he merely expresses a hope, that tranquility may be preserved. With regard to France, the speech presents us with a most favorable picture of its continued prosperity; although every now and then seems to have been taken to discourage all idea of the existence of dissatisfaction with the government of the reigning family.

The French papers continue extremely guarded as to the state of the public mind, which, however, is represented in private letters, as extremely feverish with respect to the Bourbons. A fracas is stated to have taken place at Lyons, on the 10th of May, in consequence of hostility displayed to an election return, by a few individuals. The Royalists, who accompanied the principal Hotel, called out "Vive le Roi!" during which a mass from 6 to 7000 men, who had assembled in the Place Bertoux, fell on the Soldiers, and in some measure overpowered them. The whole afternoon, in every street, was heard the cry of—"Down with the Bourbons! Down with the King! Vive la Liberté!"—pitchers and flowerpots were thrown from the windows on the soldiers. Things went on dreadfully, and several persons were killed. Even the life of the Prefect was attempted. It was only possible to still the movement by commanding to the military (3000 strong) orders to fire on the people. Tranquility was far from being fully restored when the last accounts came away.

SPEECH OF THE KING OF FRANCE.

Speech pronounced by his Majesty upon opening the Session of the Chambers

"GENTLEMEN—The circumstance which has long been felt of liberating the financial administration from the provisional measures to which it has been necessary hitherto to recur, has determined me, this year to anticipate the period of calling you together. In exacting from you this new sacrifice, I rely upon your zeal, and upon that devotion of which you have given me so many proofs.

"Providence has preserved the infant which it has given to us, and it is a pleasing thought to imagine that he is destined to recall the honor and the misfortunes which have beset my family and my people.

"I have the satisfaction to announce to you, that my relations with Foreign Powers continue to be of the most amicable description. A perfect unanimity has influenced the efforts concerted between my Allies and myself, to put an end to the calamities which oppress the East, and which affect humanity. I cherish the hope of seeing tranquility restored in those countries without the occurrence of a new war to aggravate their miseries.

"The naval force which I maintain in the Levant has accomplished its destination, by protecting my subjects, and by affording aid to the unfortunate, whose gratitude has been the reward of our assistance.

"I have adopted precautions which have kept from our frontiers the contagion which have ravaged a part of Spain. The present year does not permit that we should relax these precautions, and that I shall therefore continue them.

as long as the safety of the country may require it. Moreover, Prince Klosse can discover in these measures a motive foreign to my real intentions.

"Rash enterprises have disturbed in some parts of the kingdom public tranquillity; but they have only served to display more signally the zeal of all the magistrates and the fidelity of the troops. If a small number of individuals who are the enemies of order, were, with design, our institutions consolidated and rendering a new support to the Throne, my people abhor their criminal designs. I shall take care that violence does not deprive them of the privileges they enjoy. Positive calamities, though exaggerated by fear, have recently desolated the departments contiguous to the capital. The aid of public and private benevolence has, however mitigated them. The activity of the inhabitants shortened the duration of these disasters; authority seconded their zeal; justice will punish the guilty.

"The exact state of the debt arriere is at length ascertained, and will be submitted to you. This debt, whose origin is no longer happily far removed from us, and whose liquidation has developed its full extent, will retard, for the present year, in spite of my most deep regret, a part of those ameliorations of which the various branches of the public revenue will be susceptible.

"The advantages we have already obtained, should encourage us to persevere for their maintenance and increase. Freely upon your aid to secure, in our beautiful country, that prosperity which Providence designs for us; this is the wish of my heart; the incessant object of my thoughts; it is the consoling idea which alleviates the recollection of my pains, and which redoubles the anticipations of the future."

" PARIS, JUNE 4.

"A serious tumult took place in Paris on Monday. It had been reported during several previous days, that the law students intended publicly to commemorate the anniversary of the death of the young Lallemand, who, it will be recollected, met his untimely fate during the commotions which were excited in that capital by the solemn. The authorities, to prevent their design, had caused the gates of the cemetery Pere La Chaise to be closed, and posted a civil force adjacent. At eight o'clock, a number of youths belonging to the schools of law and physic, attired in deep mourning, came to the spot in procession, and followed by a numerous multitude. M. Benjamin Constant also made his appearance in a hackney coach, accompanied by another person, who, it was said, was the Count de Thiers, member of the chamber of Deputies. Cries were heard of "Benjamin Constant for ever! The charter for ever! We will enter!" The students demanded to pass to the tomb of their deceased fellow; this was refused, and some disposition being evinced to enter by force, the military were brought to the spot, and the place was promptly cleared. They rallied again on the Boulevard de Bonne Nouvelle, and marched in files, a second time to the burial ground, where, on being refused entrance, a volley of stones was directed against the military, two of whom were grievously hurt by the missiles. On this the horse gendarmerie vigorously charged sword in hand; above twenty of the Students were, in consequence wounded and eight taken prisoners.—This took place at noon, and scarcely had the troops dispersed the refractory mob, when a fire broke out in the faubourg St. Antoine; and whilst the authorities were occupied in aiding to extinguish the flames, and to maintain order, the Students mustered on the Place St. Genevieve, provided with stones, and declared loudly that they had a debt to revenge. The Commissary of Police, with five infantry soldiers, was all the force here opposed to them, at whom several stones were thrown; these men loaded their muskets, and seemed resolved to oppose force by force: happily, however, they restrained the vengeance which had been provoked, until a troop of gendarmerie came to their assistance, and put the infatuated youths and the attendant rabble again to flight. Up to ten on Monday night no further tumult had taken place; the refractory being awed by their repeated discomfiture, and the flying Patroles which were on foot. The posts around the Palais Royal were doubled, and every measure adopted to repress any hostile effort.

SPAIN.

The advices from Madrid, through the French papers, are of the 24th May. The project of an Address to the King of Spain on the state of the Nation, was adopted in an extraordinary sitting of the Cortes held on that day. A report of the committee of finance on the Marine Budget, was read in the sitting of the 20th. It recommends a navy "compatible with the mercantile marine, and the resources of the treasury"—Twenty-seven vessels of all classes, including 5 ships of the line, and 4 frigates, in the whole marine force proposed. It may be lately interested from this limited navy that the Cortes are not very ambitious of reconquering the former transatlantic possessions of Spain. A treaty with Portugal is stated to have been signed by Ferdinand, according to which the former is to furnish troops to Spain in case of need. The Commandant General of Cadiz had communicated to the Consulate at that place, the contents of a private letter, received from a Lieut. Col. of Engineers, at Funchal, dated April 14, which states, that "people's minds in the Canaries were in great agitation, and that every thing announced their desire to proclaim themselves independent."

FOOTPRINTS BETWEEN SPAIN AND ALGIERS.

Translation of an official Communication made to the Town Council of Port Mahon, by Don Jose Julian, commandant of the Spanish frigate Perula, arrived at that port from Algiers.

"The Dey of Algiers, having rejected on the 26th of last month, the friendly propositions of our Monarch, for adjusting certain pecuniary differences between the two Governments (as must you with the same, that you may, if you think proper, give notice to the merchants of this island, in order that they may provide against the hostile attempts that may be made on their shipping by the Algerines, although the latter have at present no great disposable forces for such cruises. Trusting that you will also take the most efficacious means to make it known in the island of Majorca. I remain, &c.

"JOSE JULIAO."

PERSIA.

It is asserted, in advices from the Turkish frontiers, that the Persians insist upon the cession of Armenia, but that the Porte had avoided giving any reply, in the hope that existing differences might be adjusted through the mediation of England. According to other accounts, said to rest on good authority, the Porte had ordered the Pacha of Bagdad to continue the war with Persia, and not to listen to any proposals for peace.

LONDON, JUNE 6.

The rumoured Congress at the city of Florence is mentioned in Paris with increasing confidence; but the sovereigns of which this assemblage will be composed, are not even affected to be known. That Russia and Austria will be the principals is obvious: what other potentates might be invited to assist the council of Legitimacy, no conjecture is yet hazarded. If such assemblage be really held, it may be hoped that the results of the deliberations will be more conducive to the permanent tranquility of Europe than those of the memorable Congress at Vienna. Mr. De Tatischeff is represented as remaining at Petersburgh, without any appearance of the negociation having terminated. From that circumstance peace is inferred, and the Austrian Metalliques bear a better price. At Paris, and in London, the expectation is for peace. The obstacle to publicly promulgating an event which cannot but give satisfaction to the monied interests, is yet involved in mystery. From Bucharest we learn, that the Asiatic troops spread havoc and destruction at every point within the sphere of their retreat: but that the inhabitants could not divest themselves of apprehension that they might yet return. The mutual atrocities of Turks and Greeks give a character of sanguinary ferocity to the contest, altogether disgusting and fiendish. The war said to be covered with thousands of dead Greeks, in which were comprehended, as well females as males. If in the capture of the place 4000 of the assailants were destroyed, that was account in some degree for the extent of the massacre. But here we have no reason to doubt that the vengeance of the Greeks, if successful, had been equally sanguinary. It must, however, be remembered that the Greeks have been groaning under the yoke of oppression during three months, and of the many anomalies in national policy, which modern times present, that of the support of Turkey, by Austria and England, is not the least surprising. That the Governments secretly abet the Turks, has been long conjectured—if the following extract of a letter from Constantinople to Chourschid Pacha. The Hyriots have seized three English vessels with ammunition for the Turks. The Greek government paid the captains of these vessels the price of their cargoes, and sent them to Zante, with a letter to the English commander, complaining of the repeated violations of the neutrality to which the English had pledged themselves. An Austrian vessel, after consenting to be searched by a Greek brig, fired upon her, and killed several of her crew; but the Greeks returned the charge, captured the Austrian, and carried her to Patmos, where the Captain will be tried."—British Traveller.

We lament to find that these papers furnish additional proofs of the increased and the still increasing number of slave vessels by whom wretched Africa continues to be depopulated.

ANECDOTES OF LORD CHATHAM.

Chatham had the greatest aversion to the counsels of timidity, and to the regulated measures that generally prevail in the routine of public affairs. Without his himself he would not suffer others to yield to apprehensions—he fixed his eye on victory, and reached her by the intrepidity and flight of the eagle.—When the first Lord of the Admiralty was called to him, upon a sudden exigency, he required of him the equipment of a considerable naval force. He of the Admiralty replied, that he would inquire into the business, and inform him on the morrow what could be done. He came the day following to Chatham and told him that, from the state of the navy yards, it was impossible to have a fleet ready as soon as it was wanted. The minister regarded him sternly and said, "Sir, his majesty's service demands this duty at your hands—the fleet can, and must be ready at or before the time fixed upon; and I further declare to you, sir, that if this service be not rendered to his Majesty, that he will stand in need of none that you can render him hereafter." The fleet was equipped in the specified time.

The labors of Chatham in the cabinet were unremitted, and his intuition was so great that he marked any subject with apparent ease. One of the ambassadors of France said of him, "Sometimes when I call on Mr. Pitt, on affairs of State, he appears to know nothing of the subject on which I address him—he appoints a meeting for a few days after, and when I see him again, he knows more about it than any man in Europe."

The countenance and figure of Chatham were grand and imposing—but the flash of his eyes could not be endured. A sailor, who saw him addressing a public meeting in his most impassioned manner, and who did not know him, was so astonished at the appearance of the man, that he exclaimed, "Good God! look at the fellow's eyes." Lord Holland his old antagonist, once retired home, after a warm debate in the house, and flung himself in great agitation upon a sofa. His lady who perceived it said, "my lord something seems to have disturbed you." Holland would not hear any more, but burst out abruptly—"I don't mind his arguments, for we can give as good as he can—nor do I care for his vehemence, for that often does him as much harm as good—but those d——d eyes of his; they always give me the colic." I understand you, my lord, said lady H. it is your old friend Mr. Pitt that has been troubling you.

Death Bed saying of Sir Isaac Newton.—"I do not know, (said the great philosopher, a little before his death,) what I may appear to the world; but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the sea shore, and diverting myself in now and then finding a smoother pebble, or a prettier shell then ordinary, whilst the great ocean of truth lay all undiscovered before me."

The fair Circassian.—It will be recollected that this celebrated beauty, who was purchased by the Persian Ambassador, on his way to this country, at Constantinople, and who was so much an object of attraction during her stay in England, was sent back to Persia by her lord and master, under the care of a favourite eunuch. On her journey, it appears she was met by Sir Kerr Porter, the British traveller, and recognizing him as an Englishman, she immediately rode up to him, with an intention of addressing him. This was, however, according to the notion of her attendant contra bonos mores; and in order to remind her of her duty, struck her a violent blow across the shoulders with a stick. She instantly dropped her veil, clouded her lips, and proceeded in sad silence, and no doubt was thus deprived of an opportunity of expressing those feelings of gratitude which her heart dictated on seeing the native of a kingdom where she had been so hospitably received.

Egyptian Mummy.—Thousands of persons have within the last few days been at the Custom House at Plymouth, to see an Egyptian Mummy, which has lately been brought there, and must be sold for payment of the duties. It was announced to be seen three days before the sale, which took place on Friday last, and ever since Tuesday morning the custom house had been crowded by persons of all ranks, from the highest to the lowest, all eager to get a view of so great a curiosity. The exterior coffin has several figures painted round the sides, the colors of which are exceedingly bright. The body which is that of a female, is placed in a shell, and wrapped up in an immense quantity of coarse linen cloth, great part of which is in a perfect state. The body is in some parts much decayed, and has altered exceedingly since it was exposed to the air, but even now the skin and nails are to be seen on one hand, and the bones are quite entire, even to the toes and finger joints. The head appears to have been sawed open for the purpose of taking out the brain. It is said to be two thousand years of it, and is supposed to be a person of quality.—Plymouth paper.

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

BOARD OF TRADE.

The "Board of Trade" constitutes the next and concluding department of the work before us. After a few words in relation to the labors of the Board of Trade, we have the following important passage, from which we learn that some great, and as they hope, efficient measures will be adopted during the present session of Parliament, to improve the Commercial system.

"Under the head of Navigation Laws, the board has been long occupied in a most useful and laborious investigation of the complicate system of these statutes. The result of its labors has been the preparation of several measures, which will probably become acts of the legislature in the session now ensuing. The enactments of these laws will greatly confer more upon British commerce than it has received within the last hundred years. They will assist the business of the general merchant; they will advance the trade and commerce of the country, foreign, colonial, and domestic; they will remove much grudge and jealousy in foreign nations, without any proportionate sacrifice of our own peculiar interests.

"It is scarcely necessary to premise, except for the sake of order, that British commerce, with reference to the Navigation Laws, is distributed into the five heads: the European trade, the trade to Asia, Africa and America, not being colonial;—the Colonial Trade the Coasting Trade, and the Fisheries. The Navigation System is composed of a class of rules arranged under these titles, and applicable to each. With respect to the European trade, the rule is, that all goods, the produce of Europe, shall be imported into England in three species of ships only—In British built ships; in ships of the build of the country or place of which such goods are the growth; or in ships of the build of the country or place which is the usual shipment of such goods. With respect to the trade beyond Europe, not being colonial, the general rule is, that nothing with or manufacture of such country can be imported only direct in British ships; such importation to be made either from the place of growth or manufacture, or from the usual place of shipment only. The three rules of the Colonial Trade, Coasting Trade, and Fisheries, are more exclusive: ships built in the British build and owned ship. Such, speaking in general terms, is the outline of our Navigation System.

"But however wise the general system of these laws, and most wise has it been proved by the experience of its effects, the exact and rigid application of all the above rules has been attended with particular mischief, pressing hardly upon general trade. The first rule, for example, consists of two parts, the former of which confines the importation of European goods to British ships, to ships of the build of the country, and to ships of the build of the usual place of shipment. By a second part of this rule, an invidious and most groundless exception is made against the produce of Holland and the Netherlands; certain articles of which are prohibited to be imported in any ship whatever. It is indeed true, that these exceptions, originating in particular feeling against Holland at the time the acts were passed, have been reduced by subsequent statutes. But it is equally true, that enough of these jealous restrictions still remain to create embarrassment in trade, and to excite an angry feeling in a friendly people. Many goods are prohibited from Ostend, which may come from Calais—and, more absurdly still, many goods may come from Calais, which would be forfeited coming from Dunkirk. Again, under the rule of the trade beyond Europe, not being colonial, British ships can bring the produce of such countries place of usual shipment directly only. "Hence," as well observed by the able Vice President of the Board of Trade, in his eloquent speech in the House of Commons, upon this subject, "if a British ship finds in an American, African, or valuable port, articles the produce of any of the other quarters of the world, he never convenient for its assortment, or market, such ship is prohibited from receiving and carrying them, under the penalty of confiscation of ship and cargo, on its arrival in a British port." Again, the rule of the European trade confines, as above said, the importation of European produce to British ships, or ships of the country of production. By the effect of this rule, it becomes totally impossible for a foreign merchant, trading from a port abroad, to send an assorted cargo to a British port, inasmuch as the goods of each country require a seperate ship. Such in practice are the main actual inconveniences under our existing navigation laws.

"The labors of the Board of Trade, and of its most intelligent President and Vice President, have been directed, in the first instance, to apply a remedy to these particular defects of a system so generally excellent. Accordingly, under a course of persevering industry, a bill will probably be passed in the ensuing session, which will remove these heads of grievance, common to ourselves and foreign nations—and will so simplify the general system of our navigation laws, as greatly to facilitate foreign and domestic commerce. Under the proposed clauses of this bill, the invidious and useless exceptions respecting Holland and the Netherlands, will doubtless be repealed. British ships will be enabled to bring cargoes from any port or place of Asia, Africa, and America, not being colonial, without the useless and mischievous restriction of the cargoes being the produce of the place only from which they are brought. And still more importantly, and with a promise of much future benefit to general commerce, foreign merchants will be enabled to bring assorted cargoes in the European trade."

"The Board of Trade has directed, in the ware-housing system, the object of which is, to invite the deposit of foreign commodities, of every description, in British warehouses; for the purpose of enabling British and foreign ships, departing from the ports of that country, to take assorted cargoes, and thus to carry on a general exportation trade to every part of the world. This system, heretofore partially adopted, is now continued to an extent, and with a degree of liberality which will render it almost entirely new.

"The subject next in order and importance for the consideration of the Board was such a new arrangement of timber duties, as might reconcile the fair claims of our North American colonists, and our British ship owners, with the interests of general commerce, and with the reasonable expectations of friendly nations. To this subject the Board, in the course of the last session of Parliament, directed its laborious attention; and the result was the act of the last session of Parliament. It is scarcely necessary to observe, that the former duties upon timber had been imposed in the year 1809, when our naval resources were measured by the effects of the French decrees.—Under these circumstances, an alteration had been made to government, by some merchants, and ship owners to supply the necessary timber from Canada, if the employment of their capital were secured by protecting duties. His Majesty's ministers accepted the offer, but with the distinct understanding, that the duties should only be temporary; and that upon the conclusion of the war, or the occurrence of another state of things, the continuance or repeal of these duties should be open to the consideration of Parliament.—Upon this subject, his Majesty's ministers are surely a just claim to the praise of not having sacrificed general principles to the urgency of a temporary embarrassment. Their hands were untied when the occasion was favorable. Accordingly, they were then enabled to consider this system of preference upon its own merits. On the one side, were the interests of the colonists, the capitals of the ship owners actually employed, and the national objects of our naval resources, and our navigation laws. On the other side, were the undeniable interests of the general trader, and the fair expectations of the northern powers of Europe. In the recent act of Parliament, it is presumed, that these objects are consulted in a degree due to their several importance. It is always a matter of much practical difficulty to repeal a protective system. This difficulty is not wholly removed by the circumstance of Government having acted with due foresight and precaution, and having reserved to itself the full right to make the repeal. The difficult question of prudence still remains. Much actual capital is necessarily employed; great interests adapt themselves to existing channels of trade; adventure and speculation imprudently extended their prospect beyond the licensed limit. The boundary itself, depending upon the duration of a fluctuating state of things, is uncertain; in this case, uncertain; and the error of calculating beyond the line granted, belongs rather to reasonable expectation, than to unwarranted folly. If ministers had to contend with these difficulties, let them rather receive the just praise of having done so much, than incur any reproach for not having done more. It is one thing to prune, and another to cut down.—It is one thing to perform a simple operation, and another to meddle with a principle or movement in a piece of complicate machinery, so connected in all its points, that a new modification introduced into one part renders it necessary to carry a new relative adaptation throughout the whole.—All amendments in our commercial system are more servile of this nature. We have not to repair a movement, but to re-construct a machine."

AGRICULTURE.

"Salt," says Mr. Hollinshead, "will be found to be the cheapest, best, and most durable manure ever yet made use of."

Nothing in nature is so powerful as Salt, to meliorate and drain strong and stiff soils, and also to give moisture to dry grounds: it is also a certain destruction to weeds and insects. Besides its efficacy on corn and fallow grounds, its excellent qualities in giving luxuriance and salubrity to grass lands are peculiarly worthy the attention of the grazier and breeder of cattle.

When a farmer intends to fallow a piece of ground, he ought first to sow it with such a quantity of salt as would be sufficient to destroy all vegetation, viz. forty bushels per acre;* which by cutting and dividing the viscous substances which are in the earth, would reduce it into a proper state to become food for plants. The farmer must take notice, that this salt is to be sown on the ground sometime before he begins to work his fallow with the plough (the autumn will be the most proper season), in order to give the salt sufficient time to destroy the grass and other roots upon it, before he begins to work it. The salt being thoroughly mixed and incorporated with the soil, during the Spring and Summer following, whilst the land is on the plough, will, by the time the seed is sown upon it, be reduced to that strength which is the most proper for effectually and vigorously assisting and supporting vegetation while the seed is on the ground, and such lands will be found to produce a crop superior to those under any other mode of cultivation.

What a striking and manifest superiority is here observable in favour of manuring with salt, which does, as it were, itself, in a good measure prepare the soil, before its nutritive operation takes effect; and thus having cleared the ground of all extraneous and pernicious weeds, gives room and full scope to the genuine plant.

This method of sowing the intended fallows with salt will therefore, serve very much to lessen the labour of the Husbandman in working his ground; for the tough and adhesive clods and lumps which are generally so troublesome, especially upon clayey soils, will be so completely broken and dissolved by the operation of the salt, as to give much less obstruction to the harrow at the first working.

In deep, loamy, dry earth, upon which wheat has grown, after the crop is got in, the land should be ploughed, and lie in that state until spring, when it must be cross-ploughed and wrought fine with the harrow, and planted with potatoes: as soon as the potatoes are covered with earth, then sow or spread sixteen bushels of Salt per statute acre upon them; and when they are dug up in the autumn, sow a crop of wheat again, taking care to pick all the potatoes clean out, that they may not injure the wheat in the following Spring by growing up amongst it. By this method of cultivation, a crop of wheat, and another of potatoes, may be produced alternately on the same ground for ever, instead of losing a whole year's produce, according to the old custom, whilst the land is in fallowing.

For other corn lands sown in the usual way, after a Spring ploughing, the best method will be to sow sixteen bushels of salt per acre, immediately after the grain is covered in by the harrow; this, by meliorating the soil, destroying weeds and insects, and attracting moisture, will produce an abundant crop, and, by sowing ten bushels per acre annually, these lands will ever after be exceedingly productive.

* I think it necessary to remark upon these directions, that I believe the writer is here, and in the former extracts, speaking of foul Cheshire Salt, such as at that time was to be used for land. Therefore in using Rock Salt, only half the quantities which he mentions ought to be employed.

INDEX AT END

Caterpillars, Grubs & Grasshoppers.—These noxious insects have again commenced their ravages on every description of vegetation, and every one enquires what is to be done to stay the devastation they make.

In the absence of better information for our readers, we may be allowed to state what is within our personal knowledge. The writer of this article during the Summer of last year occupied a small Orchard, and the Caterpillars having greatly accumulated, he caused the trunks of the trees to be smeared with coarse grease, about two feet from the ground, and the trees to be afterwards gently shaken. The insect finding itself dislodged, immediately after commences his journey to the Trunk, and having descended as far as the circle of grease is incapable of passing it. In this state millions may be destroyed. With regard to Grasshoppers, we have yet heard of no enemy equal to Poultry in general, but particularly Turkies.

Caterpillars in Gooseberry and Currant bushes.—If a piece of old woollen-cloth is hung in the middle of Currant or Gooseberry-bushes, all the Caterpillars will go into it—and by frequent removals, and immersion into scalding water, all may be gradually destroyed.

Mowing Grass.—A machine for mowing grass has been invented in Pennsylvania. It is said that by its assistance, one man and one horse, can mow in the handsomest manner eight acres per day. If this be correct, the improvement must be of great value.

NATURAL HISTORY.

Leech of Ceylon.—This animal is seldom more than half an inch in length, and is nearly semitransparent. It is very active, and is said occasionally to spring. Its powers of contraction and extension are very great. It is like a fine cord when fully extended, and its point is so sharp, that it easily makes its way through very small openings. It is supposed to have an acute sense of smell, for no sooner does a person stop where leeches abound, than they appear to crowd eagerly to the spot from all quarters. "Those who have had no experience of these animals," says Dr. Davy, "of their immense numbers in their favourite haunts,—of their activity, keen appetite, and love of blood, can have no idea of the kind and extent of annoyance they are to travellers in the interior, of which they may be truly said to be the plague. In rainy weather it is almost shocking to see the legs of men on a long march, thickly beset with them, gorged with blood, and the blood trickling down in streams. In attempting to keep them off they crowd to the attack, and fasten on quicker than they can be removed. I do not exaggerate when I say that I have occasionally seen at least fifty on a person at a time. Their bites are apt to fester, and become sores, and frequently degenerate into extensive ulcers, which in too many instances, have occasioned the loss of limb, and even of life."

Multitude of Squirrels.—12,415 squirrels were killed at Berlin, Vt. at a squirrel hunt, on the 1st May. In another town, in the same state, the number of these animals killed is said to have exceeded 1600.

Toad in a Stone.—The Lockport Observatory contains an account of the discovery of a toad beded to the depth of 6 inches in stone (probably lime stone,) the stone was dug out from the bed of the canal, at that place, and was, with the exception of the cavity in which the toad was immured, perfectly solid.

Quantity of Pigeons.—Pigeons have appeared in such numbers in several of the counties of Ohio that the horizon has been darkened with them. Flavor they have made among the trees on which they alighted is astonishing. The elm and oak trees, from 18 inches to 2 feet in diameter, were fairly broken down by their weight and turned out at the roots. As many as from 500 to 800 have been shot in one night. The ground occupied as a roost is an oblong of 3 1-2 miles in length by two miles in width, and every sprig within these bounds was loaded with them at night.

Pigeons.—In the same village, for several weeks past, innumerable flocks of Pigeons had filled the air in all directions. In the woods, about ten miles west, they had occupied a space for nesting, nearly ten miles in length, and from 2 to 5 miles in width. "All things above, beneath, around," seemed alive with these light winged tenants: every tree was covered with their nests; frequently twenty five or thirty upon one. Gentlemen of the village had been out and after spending but two or three hours in the woods, returned with vengeance satiated and prospect of a good dinner in the shape of one or two hundred pigeons. So thick were they that twenty or thirty had in many instances been killed at a single shot. It is supposed that in one day, more than five thousand paid for their dear bought pleasures of love, with their lives.

ON THE DEATH OF A CHILD.

TO ALEXANDER

Hast thou, sweet babe! gone to the cave of rest,
There to enjoy a undisturbed repose,
A peaceful mansion, where none can molest,
Freed from this toilsome life and all its woes!

Scarce could thy speech communicate the thoughts
That sprung spontaneous from thy dawning soul;
Yet didst thou show an elevated mind,
Its latent powers ambitious to unfold.

The seeds of evil lay inert and dead,
Or heaven withheld them kindly from thy heart;
Whose every passion flow'd in purity,
For aught but goodness there was known to start.

Meekness and gentleness smil'd in thy face,
With sister passions lovely quite as they,
And 'midst the sweetness of gay blooming spring,
Reason shot forth a pure, unclouded ray.

The eye of heaven beheld thee, peerless child!
A flower too fair to feel the blasts of time;—
The hand of heaven took thee full soon from hence
To plant thee in a more congenial clime.

Ah, doubly blest! to join the angelic band,
From this vile earth and its attractions free,
With a'll unstain'd by sin's polluting hand,
A grateful offering to the Deity

From a late London Magazine.

REVIEW OF LORD BYRON'S DON JUAN.

The duty of a Reviewer is but half performed in pointing out to his readers the merits of good books, unless he, with equal fidelity, warns them against encumbering their libraries with bad ones. And if this is the case where the literary merits of a work only are concerned, still more imperatively and closely does the duty press upon him, when he is called to protect them against the moral taint of vicious principles, clothed in all the charms that a depraved genius can give them, or conceal'ed with all the subtlety of an infernal minister of destruction in a mortal garb. To some of these productions we have therefore accordingly determined to revert, and had selected for the commencement of our index expurgatorious two, we might indeed say three, works of Lord Byron and Bysshe Shelly, companions and fellow-workers in iniquity and to debauch the mind and deprave the heart, (as if to destroy the surest safeguards of virtue here,—the only hopes of happiness hereafter, be iniquitous,) and fellow candidates for the just recompence of the proud station of the noble seat of heaven, in a future store of rewards and punishments, in which they are too enlightened to believe; though, with the devils, they shall believe, and tremble too. An unforeseen accumulation in another department of our work, compels us, however, most reluctantly, to limit our present remarks to the first part of Don Juan, the production of Lord Byron's muse, to which we have thus referred; leaving to one next Number the completion of the castigation of himself and his worthy friend, in which we promise that they shall not be spared. For that Number our unwillingness to leave the biographical memoir which we had commenced incomplete, induces us also, as the least of two unavoidable evils, to take out of the sheet for which it was already composed, our notice of a work of Hogg's, (his Mountain Bard) in which he unhappily has proved himself an humble, but too sham-less an imitator of the wretched school, to whose leader we now direct, for a short time, the attention of our readers.

The career of this nobleman, as a poet and a man, has been alike singular, though on the latter we shall, for the present only, forbear to enlarge. In the year 1807, he first appeared before the public, as the author of "Hours of Idleness; a Series of Poems, Original and Translated. By George Gordon, Lord Byron, a minor." This juvenile production gave at least as flattering promises of future excellence, as is usually to be found in the first production of a youthful poet; yet for some reason or another, at which we never could form a nearer guess, than that its author was an Englishman, a young man, and a lord, the wise men of the North,—a phrase, courteous reader, by which we doubt not that you will be aware of our intention to designate those gigantic critics, the Edinburgh Reviewers,—thought proper to wreck upon it their direst vengeance. "The posy of this young lord," they told the public, whose oracle they assumed to be, "belongs to that class of which neither gods nor men are said to permit." "His effusions," they go on to add, "are spread over a dead flat, and can no more get above or below the level, than if they were so much stagnated water."—Poems "without even one thought" "nobbling stanzas;" "things, and other things called translations;" these are a few of the laudatory epithets of a critique, concluding with this witty and complimentary conceit, "again we say, let us be thankful; and, with honest Sancho, bid God bless the giver, nor look the gift horse in the mouth." In a previous part of that choice and very curious article, after having most obligingly assured his lordship, that nothing but a regard to the saying of Dr. Johnston, that "when a nobleman appears as an author, his merit should be handsomely acknowledged," could induce them to give poems a place in their review, they bestow on him their friendly counsel, that "he do forthwith abandon poetry, and turn his talents, which are considerable, and his opportunities, which are great, to better account." To that advice his lordship did not think proper to attend, but at once astounded the world, and confounded his critics, by publishing the "English Bards and Scottish Reviewers," a poem as caustic in its satire, as nervous in its language, and as merciless in its vengeance, as any that the English language then had, or yet has, produced. To that indignant philippic the reviewers vouchsafed not to reply: a still severer one was threatened, and they were silent until the appearance of the two first cantos of Childe Harold afforded an opportunity which they eagerly embraced, of soothing the irritated bard. The lording was now a lord, a peer of parliament, and, worse and worse, a most decided Whig, a fact of which his reviewers had previously been ignorant, and which they learnt but when it was too late to repair the grievous mistake into which they had been led. Now light burst in upon them; the film was removed from the prophetic eye, and he who could neither write poetry for gods nor man, now wrote verses all worthy of the gods. Scott only could come near him, and even Scott was his inferior. His "lines without a single thought," suddenly, and as by magic, expanded into poetry, "full of considerable power, spirit, and originality," giving "promise of future excellence," say these infallable judges of literary excellence, and of poetical talent, "to which it is quite comfortable to look forward." Overpowered by the beauty of the prospect which met the enraptured gaze of the seers, on their second peep into futurity,—and second sight is unerring in a Gael,—when they came as critics to pronounce again upon the poetical career of the minor Lord, his defects were converted into excellence, and, as did the sprites, and fays, and elves, at the crowing of the cock, so, at the lash of his unsparing satire, did lord Byron's immensities and hobblings; lines without a thought, and things without a name, evanish into air. His irreligious opinions were merely "not more orthodox than his political;" his "speaking without any respect of priests, and creeds, and dogmas, of all descriptions,"—such "sentiments" as the reviewers would "have thought not likely to attract popularity in the present temper of the country;" and his doubting very freely of the immortality of the soul, and other points as fundamental," but one of the disadvantages under which this poem lay to claim to the public favour," which, notwithstanding this little demerit, if demerit it may, indeed, be called, they very confidently bespeak on its behalf. Nor ends the marvellous revolution here; for in the pen of the noble lord, whose effusions they resemble but to dead flats and stagnant pools, they now every where discovered "a singular freedom of thought and expression;" thought before, it will be recollected, he had none, "a great force and felicity of diction, the more pleasing that it does not appear to be the result of long labor or humble imitation; a plain manliness and strength of manners infinitely refreshing, after the sickly affectation of so many modern writers, and reconciling these candid gentlemen to be delighted writers, to the asperity into which it sometimes degenerates, and even to a sneering degree to the unanimous upon which it constantly borders." But even this was not enough for the amende honorable, we will not call it, for neither in its French or English acceptation can the term honorable be applied to any thing so dastardly, so crouching, and so mean,—as in the excess of their newly inspired admiration, the inoffensive beings about whether there is not even "some thing piquant in the very novelty and singularity of that close fitting roundabout," universal scorn which they could not but reckon as "among the requisite features of the composition." From the year 1812, when this extraordinary, and, we would fain hope, unique recantation, for such it is in substance, if not in form, was published, down to the year 1821, in which we the Edinburgh Reviewers have been amongst the staunchest of Lord Byron's admirers, the most shameless panderers of the grossly immoral and irreligious tendency of his productions; though on both these points the Quarterly has not left them far behind. A smile has, indeed, been occasionally excited upon our countenance by the awkward attempts of the latter to reconcile its severe respect for the laws and established religion of the country, with that gentle and most temperate measure of censure upon my lord Byron for his daring contempt of them, and fall that is good, which was necessary to secure the continued influence of John Murray, Albemarle Street," to the very salesable productions of so irascible a being. His lordship, in one of his wayward fits, for which, in charity, we hope that he is not at all times accountable, determined to put the compliance of his publisher and his critics to a severer test, by sending over to the former the two first cantos of Don Juan, a poem which, in spite of all his remonstrances, and we sure reason to believe they were urgent and repeated, Mr. Murray was compelled to purchase and to print, or to hand its titled author over to some other publisher, to make as much of the thousand after thousand copies of this work, as not withstanding all his liberality in purchasing the copywright,—and no bookseller, we are persuaded, has more,—he had done of those which he had published. The temptation certainly was strong, the loss actual and incidental; in case of an obstinate refusal, great and certain; the long hesitating publisher yielded to the licentious bard, but he had grace enough left not to put his name upon the title page of a work, of which, we honestly believe, that he was thoroughly ashamed. Thus did the publisher of the Quarterly act in this emergence; but how acted its editor—how did the Edinburgh Reviewers, guardians of the public taste and morals proceed? To their disgrace, their lasting discredit, be it spoken, they deserted the post of duty; afraid of speaking what they thought, lest Lord Byron, in the one case should be offended, or Mr. Murray injured, in the other, by what they said. Three years have rolled by since the first appearance of this most disgraceful production; and both the leading journals of the day have in the interim bestowed on it unusually abundant meed of praise upon subsequent productions of his Lordship's pen, without any the most distant allusion to this objectionable poem. We tread not, however, in their steps; for with infinitely humbler talents, we trust that we are actuated by far better principles, and therefore, fearless alike of Lord Byron, of his mercenary or self interested critics, and of the whole host of his indiscriminate admirers, we advance boldly to a charge infinitely more easy to substantiate than to meet.

(To be concluded in our next.)

ICE BERGS.

The following novel account of an Ice Berg is from a Review of Kotzebue's Voyage of Discovery, in the last number of the Quarterly.

On a promontory, which juts into the south-eastern part of the bay, the party who had landed made a "singular discovery;"—

"We had climbed much about during our stay, without discovering that we were on real icebergs. The doctor, who had extended his excursions, found part of the bank broken down, and saw to his astonishment that the interior of the mountain consisted of pure ice. At this news we all went provided with hoods and crows, to examine this phenomenon more closely; and on arrived at a place, where the bank rises almost perpendicularly out of the sea, to the height of a hundred feet; and found it to be a mass of moss and grass; and could not have been produced but by some terrible convulsion. The place which, by some accident, had fallen in, and is now exposed to the sun and air, melts away, and a good deal of water flows into the sea. An indisputable proof that what we saw was real ice, is the quantity of mammoth's teeth and bones, which were exposed to view by the melting, and among which I found a very fine tooth. We could not assign any reason for a strong smell, like that of burnt horn, which we perceived in this place. The covering of these mountains, on which the most luxuriant grass grows to a certain height, is only [illegible], and consists of a mixture of [illegible] sand, and earth; below which the ice gradually melts away, the green cover sinks with it, and continues to grow; and thus it may be foreseen, that in a long series of years the mountain will vanish, and a green valley be formed in its stead. By a good observation, we found the latitude of the tongue of land 66 d. 18 m. 26 s. north."

PETRIFACTIONS—TABRIZ MARBLE.

The last number of the Quarterly Review contains an interesting article upon Sir Robert Ker Porter's Travels in Georgia, Persia, &c. We extract from it the following account of the white transparent marble, so renowned by the name of Tabriz Marble, and which is dug from the borders of the Lake of Ourmia, as given by another traveller, (Mr. Morier,) and quoted by the Reviewers.—Mr. Morier had the good fortune to examine the spot.

"This natural curiosity consists of certain extraordinary ponds, or plashes, whose indolent waters, by a slow and regular process, stagnate, concrete and petrify, and produce that beautiful transparent stone, commonly called Tabriz Marble, which is so remarkable in most of the burial places in Persia, and which forms a chief ornament in all the buildings of note throughout the country. These ponds, which are situated close to one another, are contained in a circumference of about half a mile, and their position is marked by confused heaps and mounds of the stone, which have accumulated as the excavations have increased. We had seen nothing in Persia yet which was more worthy of the attention of the naturalist than this, and I never so much regretted my ignorance o subjects of this nature, because I felt that it is of consequence they should be brought into notice by scientific observation. However, rather than omit all description of a spot which, perhaps, no Europeans but ourselves have had the opportunity of examining, and on which therefore we are bound (in justice to those opportunities) not to withhold the information which we obtained, I will venture to give the following notes of our visit, relying upon the candour and the science of my readers to fill up my imperfect outline:—On approaching the spot the ground has a hollow sound, with a particularly dreary and calcined appearance, and when upon it a strong mineral smell arises from the ponds. The process of petrifaction is to be traced from its first beginning to its termination. In one part the water is clear; in a second it appears thicker and stagnant; in a third quite black, and in its last stage is white, like a hoar frost. Indeed a petrified pond looks like frozen water, and before the operation is quite finished, a stone is duly thrown upon it breaks the outer coating, and causes the black water underneath to exoude. When the operation is complete a stone makes no impression, and a man may walk upon it without wetting his shoes. Wherever the petrifaction has been hewn into, the curious progress of the concretion is clearly seen; and shows itself like sheets of rough paper placed one over the other in accumulated layers. Such is the constant tendency of this water to become stone, that where it exudes from the ground in bubbles, the petrifaction assumes a globular shape, as if the bubbles of a spring, by a stroke of magic, had become arrested in their play, and metamorphosed into marble. The substance thus produced is brittle, transparent, and sometimes most richly streaked with green, red, and copper coloured veins. It admits of being cut into immense slabs, and takes a good polish. The present royal family of Persia, whose princes do not spend large sums in the construction of public buildings, have not carried away much of it; but some immense slabs which were cut by Nadir Shah, and now lie neglected amongst innumerable fragments, show the objects which he had in view.

INDEX AT END

So much is this stone looked upon as an article of luxury, that none but the King, his sons, and persons privileged by special firman, are permitted to excavate; and such is the ascendency of pride over avarice, that the scheme of farming it to the highest bidder does not seem to have ever come within the calculations of its present possessors."—286.

The waters of Ourmia have been analysed in this country, and show a degree of saline impregnation greater than that of any other lake, with the exception of the Dead Sea; the specific gravity of which is 1211, while that of lake Ourmia was found by Dr. Marcet, who examined a specimen sent home by the late Mr. Browne, to be 1165,07.——Salt lakes, entirely unconnected with the ocean, are by no means of frequent occurrence; the water of this last is so nearly saturated that it begins to deposit crystals the moment that heat is applied to it. It contains no lime, but yields about twenty times as much sulphuric acid, and six times as much muriatic acid, as sea water does. No fish can live in it; the surface, however, is not, as has been stated, incrusted with salt, but appears as pellucid as that of the clearest rivulet.

EXTREME COLD.

Sir Robert gives the following account of the severity of the cold at Tabriz, which the Reviewers say they should hardly have expected to find in this part of Persia

"Scarcely a day passes without one or two persons being found frozen to death in the neighbourhood. Several instances which happened during my stay at Tabriz were particularly distressing; and amongst them was the perishing of three women and two men, with five asses belonging to them, which had taken shelter from a sudden drift of snow and wind under an arch of the Augi bridge. They were discovered after the storm had subsided perfectly dead, and as stiff as the blocks of ice which lay on each side of them. Another calamity of this kind I shall mention, as having a circumstance of greatly augmented pain connected with it. The gates of all the towns and cities in Persia are shut a little after sunset and re opened at sun-rise.—Strict adherence to this injunction, and carelessness or unavoidable delays on the part of the travellers, often subject them to the inconvenience of reaching the gates when they are closed. Hence they must stay without till morning. And during the inclement season, at opening the gates, very often a terrible scene of death unfolds itself close to the threshold; old and young animals and children, lying one life less heap. But the particular instance I would now recount relates to a solitary traveller, who had performed a long journey on his own horse, a member of their families to which these people are eminently attached. When he arrived at Tabriz, the ingress was already barred. The night was one of the severest which had been known; and the poor man, to save himself from the fatal effect he too surely anticipated, pierced his faithful horse with his dagger, and ripping up his body, thrust himself into it, in the vain hope of the warmth which might remain preserving his own vital heat till the morning; but in the morning, when the gates were opened, he was found frozen to death in this horrible shroud."

No. XV.

ON THE POSSIBILITY OF CULTIVATING THE BEAVER and MUSKRAT,

AS DOMESTIC ANIMALS; AND FOR THE PURPOSES OF COMMERCE IN CANADA.

It is a matter very well worthy the consideration of those persons who are best qualified to judge of the feasibility of the scheme, and to carry it into practice, to ascertain how far it is possible to domesticate the Beaver and Muskrat, and to render those animals a profitable description of farming-stock, in this country?

There is nothing more certain than that as the white population increases and extends far into the interior of this vast country, wild animals of every description must decrease, and become gradually exterminated, or driven into those wild and remote fastnesses where human foot cannot follow them: to say nothing of the havoc that is made amongst them by the Indians, whose modes of hunting are ill suited to the encouragement of the breed of any animal; for it is their usual practice to destroy every thing alive that they meet with, whether old or young, in season or out of season, and not even a bird's nest can be passed by them without having its contents wantonly destroyed.

The BEAVER was once plentiful in various parts of the North of Europe, and even in Great Britain, where the last was killed about two hundred years ago, in a small river in Wales, (see Pennant) This valuable creature has not only become extinct in Great Britain, but very generally in Europe, owing to the increase of human population and the extension of agriculture; and that it is gradually receding in America, there cannot be the smallest doubt, though it may be many, many years before it is wholly exterminated in so vast a region. Nevertheless, the time must come, when BEAVERS can no longer be found even in this country; and it may perhaps be regretted when too late, that a timely experiment of the kind we have now to mention, was not carried into successful execution.

To many, no doubt, our plan will appear quixotic What is strange or new often seems to be absurd; but the absurdity is only at first sight, and vanishes when the utility is felt, and it always becomes us, as rational beings, to examine with care into the pretensions of any new scheme, before it receives our condemnation. In arguing the present question it appears to us there are three several points, in which to consider its feasibility;—first, whether the value of the animal is such as to warrant the cost and trouble of making the experiment, and whether it would be worth general attention as a species of farming stock, and for the purposes of commerce?—secondly whether it would be possible to reclaim this animal (we speak of the BEAVER) so far as to become domestic, and submit to those restraints that would be necessary, and submit on such kinds of food as could be produced on an ordinary farm?—and, thirdly what kind of ground would be most suitable for a BEAVER-FARM, and what sort of economy, or management should be adopted? We shall begin with the first of these points:—

1st.—The value of a full grown BEAVER, in the present state of the market, (and there is no doubt that as the animal became scarcer the price would augment.) is about Twelve Dollars, a sum for which, at the present market prices, no less than Six Sheep might be purchased When fat, there is no animal whatever that affords better meat for the table; and what would prove a fortunate coincidence to the breeder, in the consideration we are now engaged, is, that the flesh is in the greatest perfection just before the breaking up of the ice in Spring, when the fur also is in the finest order, and it is at a time too, when, by reason of the coldness of the weather, and the goodness of the roads, the carcase might be transported without difficulty to any market within the two Provinces

When at a mature age the BEAVER is very prolific; her first litter is not more, generally, than one or two; her next three, three, or four, gradually encreasing in number, till she has from six to ten; and we have heard of instances of twelve

GREA. BRITAIN.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—JUNE 4, 1822.

The Navigation Bill.—Mr. WALLACE moved that the above bill be read a third time.

Mr. DAVENPORT was of opinion that the bill was highly injurious to the silk manufacturers of this country. He wished the promoters of it had attended to a good old saying, "Let well alone." If the measure were to pass, thrown silk would be imported into this country from Italy in such quantities as to produce a glut into the market, which would necessarily prove very detrimental to our home manufactures. He hoped the house would take into consideration the large sums which had been invested in the silk manufactures of this country, and the great number of individuals to which these manufactures gave employment. It was calculated that between 4 and 500,000 persons were employed in the silk trade, most of whom would, if the bill were to pass, be thrown upon the poor rates for support. Objecting to the bi upon these grounds, he moved that it be read a third time this day six months.

Mr. ROBERTSON also opposed the bill, on the ground that it would prove injurious to the general industry of the country.

SIR W DE CRESPIGNY expressed himself hostile to the bill.

Mr LENNARD was glad to perceive, that one of the clauses of the bill afforded permission for trading between this country and the South American colonies, but he at the same time regretted that the independence of those states had not been formally recognized by the British Government.

Mr LITTLETON said a few words in support, as we understand, of the bill.

SIR M. W. RIDLEY opposed the bill.

Mr. WALLACE maintained that no injury to the manufacturers of the country would be affected by the bill.

SIR J. BOURNEY could not support the amendment, because it would have the effect of getting rid of the bill altogether, which, in his opinion, contained much good matter, although some parts of it were objectionable.

Mr. CANNING concurred in the sentiments delivered by the hon member who had preceded him. He could not consent to give a vote against the whole of the bill. It was in many respects an excellent measure, and he thought his right honorable friend was entitled to the thanks of the country for having brought it forward. The importation of silk from Bengal had lately increased very much, greatly to the benefit of that country. The present measure would therefore run directly against a vast interest in England, an interest that had grown into a magnitude so fearful, as if at all interfered with, required the most delicate hand to touch it.

Mr. T. WILSON thought it would be much better for the country if the bill did not pass at present.

Mr. ANSON did not see the necessity for making alterations in laws which had been so long established, and from which so much benefit had been derived.

Mr. EGERTON did not see the necessity for this measure Trade was now going on very well and he could not see any reason for interfering with it. Why not suffer it to go on flourishing, as it had done for some time?

SI DICKINSON observed that a very large capital was employed in the trade now carried on for the raw silk of India, which was better than the of Italian silk.

Mr RICARDO said, that the trade in question, though described to be an improving trade was in fact acknowledged to be a bad trade: and the proof of its being a bad trade was to be found in the fact, that it required special protection. As it was nurtured by protection, he, on a point of principle, instead of being glad that it increased, felt considerable regret When the agriculturists called for protection, the manufacturers argued that it should not be granted; and why should the latter now call for the extension of the same principle to them?—The Right Hon Gent. (Mr WALLACE) said, that England should show to other countries, even at a adoption of the principles of free trade was calculated to sacrifice the interests of the country. Now it was on the perfect conviction that the adoption of those principles would be highly beneficial to England, and from no other feeling whatsoever, that he supported them (Hear.) He was sure, if they showed to other countries that England benefited by the system, those countries would be eager to adopt it. The Right Hon. Gentleman had his hearty thanks for the measures he had heretofore introduced, and he hoped he would continue to persevere in the same course.

After a few words from SIR T. LETHBRIDGE, the gallery was cleared for a division, when there appeared—

Shipping.—SIR R. FERGUSON presented a petition from the Ship owners of Leith, and three other Ports adjacent, stating that if the Navigation Bill passed into a law, the British Ship Owners would require many changes to enable them to re-train the competition of foreigners They complained of the tonnage duty, (which was now to be repealed) of the light house charges, of the charges of Consuls abroad, and in the Custom houses of the Colonies.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—THE WESTMINSTER PIT.

Mr. R. MARTIN presented a Petition from the inhabitants of Camberwell, praying that the House would adopt some measure for protecting animals from the cruelties to which they were often subjected. The Hon. Member said that there was a place in this city called the "Westminster Pit," which was appropriated to the exhibition of combats between different animals—Round this Pit were congregated a set of the greatest vagrants that ever existed. He had heard it remarked, that parliament ought not to interfere with the amusements of the lower orders; but he denied that the populace assembled in any considerable numbers round the "Westminster Pit:" it was attended by the very lowest miscreants.—Printed bills of the amusements of the "Pit" were distributed, and tickets of admission were sold. One of the printed bills ran as follows:—

"Jacco Maccacco, the celebrated monkey, will this day fight Tom Cribb's white bitch Puss.—(A laugh.) Jacco has fought many battles with some of the first dogs of the day, and has beat them all, and he hereby offers to fight any dog in England of double his own weight.'

(A laugh.) The battle advertised in this bill took place, and after having continued for upwards of an hour, it was determined by Puss tearing away the wrinkle of the under jaw of Jacco, who in consequence would not fight any longer. Puss, in this state the animals lived for two hours, and then they died. (A laugh.) He would be the last man living to interfere with what might properly be called the amusements of the people, but scenes such as he had described could afford pleasure only to the lowest and most vile of mankind.—(Hear.) He once went to see the "Pit," and there he saw one of the miscreants, a woman, who belonged to it, who had just returned from the hospital where she had been confined for six months, on account of a wound which she had received from a bear; for an animal of that kind was kept at the "Pit," besides 50 or 60 badgers. (A laugh.) The way in which the woman received her wound was this: she was passing the bear one day, when the animal gave her a claw and immediately scalped her. He hoped that the Hon Friend, who had introduced a bill or regulating the Police of the Metropolis, would bring the "Pit" within the purview of that measure.

Mr. LOCKHART said a few words in support of the prayer of the petition.

Mr. H GURNEY reprobated the transaction which took place at the "Westminster Pit." He was opposed to interfering with the amusements of the lower orders, but he did not believe that the scenes which took place at the "Pit" were exclusive patronized by the lower orders. The Hon Member for Gs'wny had said, that he had visited the "Pit," and he might, perhaps, tell the House how many Members of Parliament he saw there.—

ENGLAND.

MAGNIFICENT AND INTERESTING FETE.

LORD STEWART'S GRAND MILITARY ENTERTAINMENT,

To present his Majesty's Piece of Plate to the 10th Royal Hussars.

This was one of the most magnificent fetes which has been given this season, and was intended to commemorate his Majesty's munificent gift to the regiment, which he had personally commanded from the year 1793 to his Accession to the Throne, and which he had graciously deputed Lord Stewart to present in his name; and certainly nothing was omitted on the part of that Noble Chief to render the occasion as splendid as possible, and worthy of his Majesty's royal confederation. His Royal Highness the Duke of York and his staff, and their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Bonna k, were present, with upwards of sixty of the most distinguished military characters of the empire, as well as the Foreign Ambassadors and his Majesty's Ministers.

After the cloth was removed, and the tees had gone round, the Serjeant Major of the Royal Hussars, assisted by another Serjeant, entered the room, bearing his Majesty's present, while a flourish of trumpets sounded, and a more superb trophy was never seen than this Royal gift to an old and favourite corps. The height of this plate is about two feet and a half, and it is composed of three figures, representing Courage, Honour, and Victory. On the three sides are the King's Arms, surrounded with laurels; and above them, on one of the sides, is the following inscription:

"The Gift of his Majesty George IV. to the 10th (or Prince of Wales's own) Royal Regiment, which he commanded from the year 1793, until his accession to the Throne."

On the other side is the badge of the Regiment, with the words, "Peninsula." "Waterloo," "Morales"

And, on the third side, are the names of the battles in which the Regiment was during the late war.—"Benevente," "Corunna." "Morales de Toro," "Villiers." "Genes," "Toulouse," "Waterloo."

The whole is surmounted by a figure of his Majesty standing in a fluted column, in imperial costume, with a truncheon in his right hand, and a wreath of laurel on his head.

When the Serjeant-Major had placed the plate on the table, Lord Stewart rose and addressed the officers of the Royal Hussars, who all stood up, as follows:—

"OFFICERS OF THE ROYAL HUSSARS,

"It is my duty to state to you the commands which have been laid upon me by our gracious Sovereign and Royal Master.

"His Majesty has commanded me to present to the Corps of Officers in his name, for their mess, the splendid piece of plate which is now before you, in commemoration of the paternal solicitude and anxious care which the King personally devoted to the regiment, from the year 1793 until his accession to the Throne.

"His Majesty further commanded me to convey to you the expressions of his constant affections and interest, not doubting but you will preserve that high reputation which the regiment, under his Majesty's especial command, has so precociously obtained. I am aware much more might be said on the present occasion, but my feeling is, that I could not add any thing so strong as the sentiment of the Sovereign, and the merit of the Corps which has called it forth; and I am sure they therefore add a fervent prayer, that this mark of his Majesty's gracious favour may descend to the children's children of our regiment, a memorial alike of the interest, attention, and munificence of the Monarch, and of the conduct, character, and reputation of the Corps"

This speech was received with the loudest acclamations, and the hearty health was drank amidst loud huzzas, the band playing "God save the King," and the company standing.

The following toasts were afterwards given, and drank with enthusiasm:—

"The King and Princess of Denmark"—"The Commander-in-Chief and the Army"—"The Duke of Clarence and the Navy"—"The Foreign Ambassadors"—"Lord Liverpool and his Majesty's Ministers"—"The Duke of Wellington"—"The Marquess of Anglesey"—"Lord Lashcart and the Household Troops," &c

Some time afterwards, and just as the ladies were about to retire, Lord Stewart rose, and, in a very elegant and neat address, begged in Lady Stewart's name to present the Royal Hussars with two silver tureens, which were then brought in, and he, as his Lordship said, to commemorate the festive day on which he conferred upon him by his Majesty his appointment to the command of the regiment, and which he considered as a mark of grateful feeling from Lady Stewart for the attentions and affectionate conduct received from the corps at Brussels.

The toast was received with loud cheers, and after the lady-ship's health drank with three times three, and the loudest applause His Royal Highness the Duke of York did not retire from the table until eleven, and we never saw him in higher spirits.

Among the company present on this splendid occasion, besides the Royal Hussars and Foreign Ambassadors, were—

Marquesses—Camden, Anglesey, Londonderry.

Earls—Liverpool, Bathurst, Uxbridge.

Lords—R Manners, Burghersh, F Conyngham.

Generals—Sir W Keppel, Sir W Gordon, Sir H Taylor Sir H Vivian, Sir E. Kerrison, Sir A Barnard, Sir C Doyle

Colonels—Sir H Hardinge, Wood, Cooke, Browne, Wa ters Taylor, Sir H Floyd.

Sir Thomas Lawrence, Mr Greenwood, Mr. Cox, &c—

Globe, June 3.

GRAND FETE AT THE OPERA HOUSE.

The stage exhibited the appearance of an immense pavilion, its sides and canopy being formed of white and yellow drapery, disposed in a very picturesque style. The columns on each side, which, to the number of six, or more, are disposed in a semicircular order round the stage, and which could not be removed, were turned to advantage. They were richly gilt and painted, and were hung with ancient armour, with helmets and spears, which were brought from the Tower. The remains of chivalry were disposed with much taste, and each group of them was surrounded by banners. The pit was floored and made level with the stage The lower tier of boxes was hung with white drapery, which was festooned and bound with bands of red roses The second tier was hung with crimson drapery and festooned in the same elegant style, with bands of white roses. From this tier the festoons ascended on each side to the roof, and their foliage gave an air of lightness, and at the same time of freshness to the scene, which, in such a crowd, was peculiarly grateful. The ceiling also was suitably decorated Bands of green leaves intermingled with roses were suspended from the centre compartment, over the chandelier, and, being allowed to bend responsibly, were attached to its extremities in circumference. The canopy of foliage combined with the festoons at the side, gave the whole of this part of the theatre the appearance of a vast arbour. The decoration was not destroyed by the introduction of incognita dress, which fell into large basins, one on each side They were filled with flowers, which, however, did not prevent the water from sprinkling the dresses of such ladies as had the importune to be near the scene of its action. Repeated applications were made to have these jets d'eau stopped; but they were a favourite object and the men employed to turn the engines which supplied them, paid no attention to all the appeals that were made to their gallantry

The King's box was in the centre of the house. The divisions between it and the five or six boxes on each side were removed, those on the right of his Majesty being assigned to the Royal Princesses and the Ladies of the Foreign Ambassadors, and those on the left to the Ladies Patronesses and their families. The Royal box was separated from those on each side only by a curtain, which enabled his Majesty to visit the distinguished persons near him without any inconvenience This select row was surmounted by an immense piece of drapery, which might be supposed to have completely covered the open side of the stage pavilion Its folds reached to the gallery, where it terminated in a Crown, decorated with various ensigns The fleur-de-lys (in silver) was scattered over its front, but the immediate vicinity of the Royal box was hung with silk, and surmounted with the usual emblems. The lighting of these various decorations was admirably and judiciously arranged Independently of the large chandelier in the centre, there was one almost equally large hung over the stage. Small glass lustres for wax lights were suspended from the ceiling, which were considerably lower than the chandelier, and these, with an additional number of side lustres, contributed altogether to shed a flood of splendour on this enchanting scene. So early as nine o'clock the company began to arrive, each lady and gentleman being accompanied by a card, with their names written on the back The card was handsomely engraved. It was surrounded by a border of shamrock, within which, at the top, "King's Theatre," in a semicircular line,—Ball for the relief of the distressed Irish; within the semi-circle the Crown, sending the rays of its patronage around; under the Crown a smaller semi-circle, composed of the rose shamrock, and thistle, and at the bottom, "Thursday, May 30, 1822—Full dress, not Transferable." The glitter of the whole was a Pomona

The arrangements for receiving and passing the tickets were admirable.

Soon after midnight the scene was at its zenith The immense saloon was filled to overflow A vast number of noble and distinguished Naval Officers formed a striking contrast to the Staff of the Commander in Chief. The Hussars (ministerially the 10th, the Yeomanry, Cavalry, and the Lancers, all raised a splendid spectacle—Added to these were many noble Foreigners in the uniforms of their respective regiments, Knights of every grade wearing orders of all kinds. (his Majesty set the example by wearing all his) Ambassadors and ally remained Tens of thousands of both sexes were seen braving all the inconveniences of dust and excessive heat on foot; while the stands erected on each side were crammed to suffocation. The line of carriages on each side the course extended a great distance, and were filled with spectators.

At a quarter past one, a shouting in the distance, announced the approach of the King, and in a few minutes his Majesty and suite, in two carriages, attended by out riders on every side, arrived on the ground His Majesty did not drive along the course in front, as was the late King's custom, but proceeded along the rear of the booths, and drove in at the back entrance of the royal stand, amidst the cheers of an immense multitude. The wax were closed and fastened the moment the carriages had entered. In the first carriage were his Majesty, his Royal Highness the Duke of York, and the Duke of Wellington and Dorset; in the other the Marchioness of Conyngham Lady E herdaughter, Lord F Conyngham, and the Countess Lieven In a few moments the King appeared at the front window of the Royal Stand, the Duke of York and Wellington at his right and left. He was loudly cheered, and bowed gracefully in return. Several distinguished persons appeared in the Royal Stand soon afterwards; among them were the Marquess Conyngham, the Earl Cowper, the Earl and Countess Harcourt, Sir Edmund Nagle, General Cuppel, Colonel Thornton, &c &c his Majesty seemed in high spirits, and looked extremely well. Contrary to very general expectation, the Prince and Princess of Denmark did not attend the course, as they (the Duke of York was dressed in green. Most of the Noble and Gentlemen in the Royal suite wore the Windsor uniform. The Royal stand situate opposite to the winning post, is a light tasteful building, with fluted pilasters of composition supporting the roof in imitation of a Greek portico. It is two stories high, of which the upper only was used It consists of two apartments divided by a wooden partition, prettily fitted up with white muslin curtains, &c This stand was built by Mr Nash, the King's architect (one of no uncommon degree of taste and elegance) which accounts for the comforts which could be expected in a building of such a nature The lower apartment is appropriated exclusively to the ladies who may accompany his Majesty in his visits

There were eight or nine stand in each side filled with spectators The Prince and Princess Esterhazy and suite occupied a stand opposite to his Majesty.

The weather turned out very fine, and his Majesty seemed in good health and spirits, entering much into conversation with those around him during the whole time he was on the course, which he did not leave until nearly five o'clock. The Police were numerous and active, and took several pickpockets. The spot was very good.

The Cottage in Windsor Park is most complete, and the Royal Party will retire to it from the bustle and dust on Ascot

That of the Marchioness of Waterford was as near the original Irish dress as could be consistent with the Court Costume, being a robe of white Irish tabinet embroidered with green and gold shamrocks, fastened with a girdle of Irish amethysts; the ancient Irish mantle fringed with gold, suspended from the shoulder by an amethyst brooch, and fastened with a silver bodkin at the neck. The head dress diamonds with a beautiful plume of green and white feathers, and also a heron's and eagle's plume set with diamonds, and the Gloriosa bodkin at the back of the head.

Lady Sarah Bereaford, her Ladyship's daughter, wore an elegant net dress over white satin, embroidered in green and silver shamrocks, and scarlet sash fringed with silver

In retiring, some accidents happened, which were unavoidable The greatest crush of pursuits happened about one o'clock

Owing to the temerity of the coachman who attempted to break the line in Jermyn street, a great destruction of the panneis of carriages took place In the morning, it being impossible to bring on the coaches, many ladies were obliged to walk to their respective residences

The line of carriages at eleven o'clock, extended to Lower Grosvenor street.

The Duke of Wellington was present at the ball on Thursday night, in a Field Marshal's uniform, with a ribbon only, and no star. A serious accident nearly occurred about three o'clock after the King quitted; a Lady fell over the projection under the King's box and had she not been caught, would, in all probability, have gone on the spikes; but she fortunately escaped with only the fright, several Gentlemen having with difficulty released her.

THE TURF.

ASCOT HEATH RACES.

These races never excited greater interest nor presented a more splendid and numerous assemblage than yesterday At a very early hour in the morning the roads in all directions leading to the course were crowded; and as the time of racing drew nearer, the huge volumes of dust which impeded the zealous spectator's best vision notwithstanding this, there was the usual racing amongst the steel vehicles for precedence, and now and then much crossing and jostling.

The Race Course towards twelve o'clock filled rapidly, and a little before one, extended to its full. It was almost literally crammed Tens of thousands of both sexes were seen braving all the inconveniences of dust and excessive heat on foot; while the stands erected on each side were crammed almost to suffocation. The line of carriages on each side the course extended a great distance, and were filled with spectators.

At a quarter past one, a shouting in the distance, announced the approach of the King, and in a few minutes his Majesty and suite, in two carriages, attended by out riders on every side, arrived on the ground His Majesty did not drive along the course in front, as was the late King's custom, but proceeded along the rear of the booths, and drove in at the back entrance of the royal stand, amidst the cheers of an immense multitude. ROYAL SQUABBLES.

From the London Courier, June 8.

Parties has found or pretended to find, a new theme for malicious outery. The Morning Chronicle says, "We understand that his Majesty notified to the Duke of Devonshire (the Manager of the Fete at the Opera House, for the relief of the Irish) that a box must be set apart for the Royal Family, and that he, the Duke of Devonshire, must inform the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, the Princess Sophia of Gloucester, and the Duke of Sussex, that there was no place for them in it. This notification, which was calculated to wound deeply the feelings of the Royal personages in question, prevented them, of course, from being present at the Fete.

It would seem that the species of persecution which was put in practice against the late Queen, and the Duke of Sussex was only the commencement of a system which is to be permanently adhered to. The Duke of Clarence was commanded last year not to invite the Duke of Sussex to his ball. So then exclusion is now to be the order of the day. The whole weight of Court influence is to be directed against all those in high life, who may be so unfortunate as to incur at any time the Royal displeasure."

For any thing we know this statement may be utterly false, or it may be strictly true. We will suppose it to be the latter, and what then? In all families there are secrets; in almost all families there are dissensions. What man has a right to pry into the reasons which induce the King to decline meeting any branch of his illustrious house? Among the other hard conditions of Royalty, is that to in addition, which would deny to a Sovereign the sanctuary of a private feeling, and consign him to solitude, or drag him into a circle of undesired guests? We neither know, nor wish to know, what are the circumstances which have determined his Majesty to avoid any direct intercourse with those branches of his family; but this we know, that only vulgar impertinence would thrust itself into the business. With respect indeed, to one of the personages mentioned, the cause of that individual's exclusion are sufficiently notorious. As to the others, we repeat our entire ignorance upon the subject; but be the motives what ever they may, every man of refined and liberal feelings must experience unmingled disgust at the the heartless use that has been made of the thing, by a faction which cares not what decencies of private life are violated, so as a public clamor can be excited against the object of their splenetic hatred.

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

BOARD OF TRADE.

Next follow a few paces in relation to the commerce between Great Britain and India, and the great difficulty of increasing their exports to that country, (arising from the totally dissimilar habits and wants of the people of the two countries,) excepting for the consumption of their European subjects. It is very justly remarked, that "A large mutual consumption of produce and manufactures can only occur between nations of the same general wants and habits. The largest trader with a manufacturing nation is, necessarily, a people of the same original habits with itself, but which people from the effect of some incidental circumstance, are in a different stage of wealth progress. Hence, the largest customer of England is America, another people having the same objects of comfort, conveniences, and luxury, with the natives of Great Britain; but being as yet only in the agricultural state of society, they necessarily find it more profitable to confine their own industry to the growth of raw produce, and to take their manufactures from England. But the relative state of England and the East Indies is precisely the contrary. A people of a temperate latitude, and a people of the tropics; a highly civilized people and a nearly barbarous people; a people living on rice, and abstaining from animal food, and a people pursuing luxury, through all its endless variety. A people without the means, almost the desire, of applying to any one either the growth of our soil, or the produce of our manufactures. A people by the immense population of their country, and the simplicity of their habits, working up their own raw produce so cheaply, as almost to make it a moral miracle, that the machinery of Europe can compete in any slight degree with their hand work. In a people, in fine, to whom the glass, cutlery, paper, printed goods, earthenware, salt, soap, spirits, fine, cutlery, and woolens of Europe, must be all nearly totally useless. Under such circumstances, it is impossible to anticipate any large consumption amongst the millions of her Indian population."

A few remarks follow upon the intercourse between France and Portugal and England and France. The value of the trade with Portugal, in consequence of the ravages of the Brazils to them, has increased from £3,000,000 to £4,000,000 per annum. Their commerce with France is of very inconsiderable. The writer says, "The causes of this failure are in [illegible] perfectly intelligible. France has the enormous commercial objects with ourselves. Her government has to protect its own manufactures, her silks, her [illegible], her woolens, her own hardware, and her own produce. We possess nothing in peculiar to ourselves at all or wines to France; and we have, therefore, nothing which France is in absolute want, or to which her government can give a preference, without a proportionate sacrifice from their own subjects. Under such circumstances, it is nearly impossible that our exports to France can amount beyond their actual amount.

A review of the whole contents in this work, concludes in volume. Having devoted from time to time, so much room to it, we can only make a few short extracts.

"Such therefore is the general state of the nation under its several departments in which the public business appears more conveniently to arrange itself. Under the departure of Finance, it has been made to appear, that from the year 1816, to the present period, ministers have preserved in a continued course of reduction and retrenchment. In the year 1816, the total of the annual expenditure for army, navy, ordnance, and miscellaneous, including the sum then of the public debt, amounted to twenty-four millions, eight hundred and eighty-seven thousand pounds. The total for the same service for 1821 was eighteen millions. A reduction of nearly seven millions annual expenditure. But it is unnecessary to repeat what has been so amply explained in former part of these observations.—Suffice it to say under the summary of finance, that through every branch of the public service, the retrenchment has been as sincere as effectual."

Of the three main branches of our foreign commerce, our European trade, our trade with the United States, and our trade with Asia, Africa, and America, not being colonial, the first holds forth an actual considerable increase—and in a good justifies the expectation of a speedy return to its former large amount; whilst the third already exceed every reasonable expectation. If we follow the natural order of the component members of our European commerce, our trade with Portugal, including the Brazils, has augmented the two millions to four millions. The political state of Spain has affected in some degree its external relations—but her exclusive tariff has been in great part recalled, and our dealings with her, under the circumstances of our own wool tax, exceed what could reasonably be anticipated. Our commerce with France, Holland, the Netherlands and Germany, equals the average amount of any former year. If our exportation of colonial produce to the continent of Europe be not so great in amount as during some of the war years, and the two following immediately on the peace, the cause is in the resumption by foreign states of their own colonies. It will be found, however that our exportation of raw sugar is greatly on the increase, whilst our refined sugars have gradually advanced, since the year 1814, from one million and a half to two millions—and our export of cotton yarn has increased during the same period from little more than one million annually to two millions two hundred thousand pounds. Our exports of copper manufactures have nearly doubled their amount. Our export of iron still retains the Mediterranean market, and is daily becoming an article of growing demand in France. If an unfounded jealousy has recently caused the importation of a high duty, it is trusted that a new French ministry will correct the effects of this prejudice—Our woollen manufactures will be found on an average of last five years to exceed the like average during the 5 years of peace—whilst our exports of cotton manufactures, now forming our principal export to the continent of Europe, as well as to America, have advanced from sixteen to twenty-one millions.

The general character of our internal trade and manufactures affords a spectacle no less splendid and grateful.

"If Canada in common with the United States, suffer under the operation of our corn laws, she suffers from the necessity of the supreme government not to sacrifice a greater interest in favor of one of minor consideration—It is true that Canada is sacrificed to Great Britain, but that Great Britain cannot be sacrificed to Canada. Under circumstances of the most obvious policy, we withhold from our Canadian subjects not a right but a grant. But where is the person amongst us, who, under the existing depression of British agriculture, can venture to propose any relaxation of the prohibitory system? If the amount of colonial corn be not considerable, there prevails still a current opinion, mistaken perhaps, but certainly popular, that our own home market, however small, affects the value of the whole growth in a proportion far greater than its own amount. But there are circumstances, in which it is necessary to consult the improvements, produce of economy, and certainly on colonial just measure of their causes."

We have now done with, our extracts from this highly important work; but it will be recollected that when we commenced with it, we passed over the first seventy-five pages, which gave a particular account of the retrenchments made by the ministry in the army and navy, and in other departments of the government. We have prepared a summary of this part of the work, which we intend to publish.

DESCRIPTION OF ATHENIAN GIRLS.

Our hostess, Signora Vitali, introduced us to our next door neighbour, who consisted of her own sister, with three tall daughters, considered at this time the belles of Athens. They are known by the title of Counsilini, their father having held the post of British vice Consul. One of these young ladies was supposed to be that "Maid of Athens," who is celebrated in a vague beautiful verses annexed to Childe Harold. Her countenance was extremely interesting, and her eye retained much of its ancient brilliancy; but the roses had already deserted the cheek, and we observed the remains only of that vermilion which effected such ravages from an unpaired complexion. So fading a flower is beauty in these climes, that a very few years see it rise to sparkle like a meteor, and to vanish. A Grecian damsel at sixteen is frequently the magnificent; and in five years more frightfully ugly. There is no time, as to with us, from the light beauty of the girl to the solemn grandeur of the matron and the venerable dignity of advanced age; the face of a stylish beauty at most at once transformed into a gorgon's head. In deference to this subject with Signor Logotheti, he assured me that the fault lay not so much in the climate as in the destructive habits of the Grecian females, more especially in the abuse of the bath, which they attend almost daily, remaining in it hot fomentations several hours at a time, where they devote more valuable time to their toilet, as an English tea table in as many weeks: hence their complexion vanishes and their fibres are relaxed; hence they become languid, and unable to take with demonstrative exercise. [illegible] the age of twenty, wrinkles begin to appear, and they suffer all the inconveniences of premature debility. Thence the Grecian females are not accomplished, yet they possess a considerable degree of elegance in their address and manners; their salutation is particularly graceful, consisting of a gentle inclination of the body, while the right hand is brought in contact with the waist; they are generally found by visiters reclining indolently on the sofas of the apartment, their ribbon robes bound round with a silver clasped zone, their hair partly wreathed with flowers or adorned with pearls, and partly flowing in curls over their shoulders, their eyebrows carefully arranged and tinged with surme, a powder of the bruised dye, their nails stained with henna, and their complexion often aided by an artificial lustre, exhibiting unfavorable examples of the neglect of nature's choicest gifts, the substantial graces of the mind.—Hugh's Travels in Greece.

Miscellaneous Notices.

The editor of the London Morning Chronicle, says:—"We learn from head quarters, that it is in contemplation to effect a reunion of the provinces of Canada, and that his Majesty's Ministers have prepared a bill on the subject, which was immediately submitted to Parliament."

The Lords of the Admiralty have issued directions to all naval officers, &c. to state to them, without delay, their respective ages, with the amount of salary attached thereto, independently of their half pay. The same is also required of all pensioners, &c. throughout the naval departments including the widows of officers.

Sir W. Ridley, lately stated in the British Parliament, that the expense of building and navigating a British ship of 500 tons was £1700 more than for a foreign ship of the same burthen.

On the 11th ult. as the team of Messrs. T. and R. Carless was ploughing in a field, in the parish of South Littleton, Worcestershire, they discovered a little below the surface, 104 swords and pikes. From their make it is conjectured, that they have remained in that place ever since the battle of Evesham, in 1265.

Theatrical.—It is understood that Mr. Mathews, the celebrated comedian, is about to leave England, for America. The New Times presents the following sketch of his peculiar merit as an actor.—"Among the wonders of Mathews is his endurance of effort. This fatigue of this perpetual recitation would seem enough to wear down a much more athletic frame. But he goes through its labors steadily and spiritedly. No night finds him failing; he has the same liveliness of manner and the toughness of memory; the innumerable disentries of the comical code already noticed. That with the U. States relates principally to the establishment of a mutual right to search. Dispatches have been sent to the Governments of Denmark, Sweden and Holland, complaining of facilities afforded to the Slave Trade in the island of St. Thomas, St. Bartholomew, and St. Eustatius.

garret, by catching with infinite presence of mind, a decanter which one gentleman threw at another's head, merely observing to the former that he was "passing the bottle rather too freely."

An East Sussex Tale.—Says the busy tongue of fame, a mercer, who resided in this part of the county, having had an amour, which time placed a period to upon, with his female servant, to hide her shame and his own weakness, provided a private lodging for her in the metropolis, where he intended she should snugly remain till time's mark became obliterated; but, neglecting a remittance to her, and she being consequently compelled to write to him for a supply of the needful, her letter, on being from home when it was delivered, fell into the hands of his wife, who opened it, read its contents, carefully re-sealed it, and on his return gave it to him, saying—"Here is a letter for you, my dear," which having read, (of course to himself,) he exclaimed—"Bless me! my dear! there is a sale of silks to-morrow, at the India House; I must be off to London," and having previously made preparations, took an affectionate leave of her for the journey. His good honoured wife, however, resolved to enjoy the joke at the expense of her inconstant spouse's mortification, went post, and arrived at the lodgings of her rival a little before him, and at the moment the mark had removed from its pristine habitation to make a noise in this world of sin; and during the door on his arrival, said, "Work in my dear! the sale has just begun, and the first lot is knocked down to you!"

The Slave Trade.—Further papers relating to the Slave Trade have been laid before the House of Commons. They are too long for insertion, or even for an abstract to be given. The first series consists of correspondence with France, the Netherlands, Portugal, Spain, and the United States; and the second, of correspondence with his Majesty's Commissioners at Sierra Leone, Havana and Surinam. With the French government, the urgent applications of the British Secretary of State, and Ambassador, do not appear to have been peculiarly successful, for the correspondence concludes with a letter of Lord Londonderry, dated the 26th of March, 1822, enumerating a formidable list of offences by French vessels, and concluding with an injunction to Sir Charles Stewart to urge the propriety of following in France the example set by the Spanish Cortes, who have made it felony for a native of that country to be engaged in the Slave Trade. The correspondence with the Netherlands concludes with a letter from Lord Clancarty, in which he states that he had on the 21st of March a most satisfactory conference with the Minister for the Colonies, who admitted that, by the treaty between Great Britain and the Netherlands, the Slave Trade was entirely forbidden to the subjects of both countries, and declared that the measures which he had taken, and, at the orders of the King, were such as to ensure the full execution of the treaty. In the correspondence with Portugal, the Marquis of Londonderry proposes—"that a declaration should be issued in the spirit of the treaty by the powers concerned, purporting, that if there should be a proof that a Slave or Slaves had been, for the purpose of illegal traffic, put on board a vessel in the course of the voyage to which she was captured, such vessel might justifiably be detained by the cruisers, and finally be condemned by the commissions." In the correspondence with Spain we observed nothing of importance except the article of the criminal code already notified. That

The new satirical poem, entitled "The Mohawks," which is just ready for publication, is expected to make much noise in the literary as well as political world.

Among the literary notices, we find announced as in the press, Halidon Hill, a dramatic sketch from Scottish history, by Sir Walter Scott.

The following were published early in June.

Mr. Pradel, the author of a volume of poems, has been condemned by the court of correctional police in Paris, to six months' imprisonment, for five songs said to be directed against the throne, religion, and public morals. The singularity of the trial was, that the defendant, after his counsel had been heard, pleaded his own cause in terse, which excited the enthusiastic plaudits of the numerous audience that filled the court.

A book has just appeared in London, without title page, designation, or printers name, consisting of a list of the names of men notorious about the metropolis for not caring who suffers, so that they can be well dressed and furnished! This work is to be continued annually; tradesmen contributing names from the black list of their bad debts. The first number contains upwards of 4000 such names, with such additions of rank, title, and profession, as must astonish every one but a London trades man

A case of singular interest has, we understand, lately fallen under the observation of Dr. W. Pickells, one of the Physicians to a Dispensary—that of a female aged about 25 years, in which the larvæ of a great number of insects of the beetle and fly kind, were discharged alive from the stomach. Several of the larvæ of the beetle kind, though discharged upwards of a fortnight since, remain still alive, in health and vigor. They consist, besides the head, of twelve joints, and are furnished with six feet—some exceed an inch in length.—The young woman laboured, at intervals, during a long time past, under vomiting of blood, and the most violent convulsions, which have been considerably alleviated by the discharge of the in sects. The probable supposition is, that the ova, or eggs, were taken in by the mouth, and deposited and hatched in the stomach.—The case, we understand, will shortly appear in a detailed form, in a distinguished medical publication.—London Paper.

An invention of a useful nature has been made by Jackson, of this city, which is a Life Preserving Mattress, for ship and packets, answering the purpose of an ordinary mattress to sleep upon in berths, and so constructed, as to be caught up in an instant of danger, secured round the body, it will float any length of time in the water, and carry a passenger safe on shore, at any distance; and from its safe and buoyant qualities and peculiar construction, it will carry a person on the very top and curling of the billows in the most dreadful sea, and if thrown on the rocks, it acts as a guard to afford to the Slave Trade the island of St. Thomas, St. Bartholomew, and St. Eustatius.

SHIPWRECK.

To a late number of "the Annals of Philosophy," a paper was communicated by Mr. Buckland, giving an account of what is alledged to be an "antediluvian den of hyænas," discovered last summer at Kirkdale, near Kirby Moorside, Yorkshire. The den is a natural fissure, extending 300 feet into the body of the solid rock, and varying from two to five feet in height and breadth. Its mouth was overgrown with grass and bushes, and was accidentally intersected by the working of a stone quarry. It is on the slope of a hill about 100 feet above the level of a small river, which, during a great part of the year, is engulphed. The bottom of the cavern is covered to the depth of about a foot, with a sediment of mud: at the bottom of this mud, the floor of the cave was strewed from one end to the other with teeth and fragments of the bones of the hyæna, elephant, rhinoceros, hippopotamus, horse, ox two or three species of deer, bear, fox, water rat, and birds. The bones are for the most part broken, and gnawed in pieces, and their teeth lie loose among the fragments of the bones. No bone or tooth has been rolled, or in the least acted upon by water; nor are there any pebbles mixed with them. The bones are not at all mineralized. The extinct fossile hyæna is stated most nearly to resemble that species which now inhabit the Cape of Good Hope, whose teeth are adapted beyond those of any other animal to the purpose of cracking bones, and whose habit it is to carry home parts of its prey to devour them in the caves of rocks which it inhabits. Five examples are given of bones of the same animal discovered in other parts of this island.—Christian Obs. May 1822.

ST. JOHN, NEWFOUNDLAND, JULY 2, 1822.

MELANCHOLY LOSS OF H. M. BRIG DRAKE.

(Communicated.)

The Drake sailed from Halifax on Thursday morning, the 20th June, for St. Johns, the weather being uncommonly fine, and the wind favourable, she continued to steer a direct course for Cape Race; on Sunday it came on extremely thick, with a fresh breeze from W. S. W. when it shared up for about a quarter of an hour, just giving us time to get a good observation of the latitude, which agreed very well with the latitude by account; at that time we supposed ourselves, from our reckoning, to be 50 miles from Cape Race, at 6 in the evening, having run about 60 miles since noon, and finding the fog still continued, we hauled out four points, intending to have steered S. E. during the night; about half past 7, all hands being on deck, breakers were reported to be ahead; the ship was instantly hauled to the wind, but not being able to clear the danger on that tack, we endeavoured to stay the vessel, but from the heavy sea, and whilst in stays her stern took the breakers, and she immediately fell broadside on, the sea beating immediately over her; the masts were immediately cut away, with the view of lighting the vessel, as well as affording a bridge to save the crew, but without success in either point, for in a few moments she bilged, at which time there did not appear the slightest hope of saving a man. The cutter was launched over the lee gangway, but immediately sunk; a man attempted with the lead line to swim on shore, but the current setting strong to the northward, he was nearly carried in the stream. The only hope remained in the gig, (the jolly boat having been washed away) which was launched from the forecastle with the boatswain and lead line, a heavy surf washed her upon a rock not communicable with the main, and as we thought to perish and the line carried away, but the boat-swain succeeded in scrambling up the rock with a few fathoms of the line; the sea at this moment making heavy breaches over the ship, and the crew were on the forecastle hanging by ropes, and each succeeding wave appearing to bring with it total destruction, when a tremendous sea brought her quarter over the rock on which she first struck, and close to another compassable shelter. The forecastle, hitherto the most sheltered part of the ship, was now abandoned for the rock, and all hope of the vessel being clear, it was determined, if possible, to quit her. The people severally stepped from the poop to the rock, in attempting which a few (among whom was Lieut. Stanley) were washed away, and dashed with tremendous force against the wreck. Captain Bazen after seeing the whole of the crew on the rock, followed: but it was now found that the rock was insulated, and that the rising tide would cover it, the boatswain observing this, swam with the piece of line in his mouth; and in spite of the surf, succeeded in reaching it: and coming opposite the rock on which we were, threw the line across: it was found just long enough for one to hold it on the main, and one on the rock, at arms length, by this means assistance 44 out of 50 who landed on the rock, succeeded in gaining the main, and it is probable at would, had not a man and a woman stretched to meet her. ... which time ... the one of the men's hands on the rock, and on the attempt to get it back it was wrenched away ... Capt. Baker was repeatedly requested to come, but every time resolutely refused; and throughout the whole unfortunate occurrence to save the lives of the crew appeared to be his principal object, regardless of his own. Every refusal ... the water rose and swell increased, when the officers and ship's crew used every endeavour, by tying handkerchiefs together, to make another hold fast, but proving too short, we were soon after reluctantly compelled to abandon them to their fate, and at day break there was not the slightest trace of the unfortunate sufferers; at this time we found the frame of the wreck broken in halves, with the after part thrown on the top of the bow, on discovering we were on the Eastern head of St Shott's, we repaired to a house we found there, after having in vain searched for the body of Capt Baker, and then proceeded, after a little refreshment, to Trepassey. The only reason of so many lives being saved, certainly was from the great order and discipline of the crew. Every man's exertion appeared not to be for his own life, but for the general good; had any confusion prevailed, there is little doubt but few would have remained to tell the mournful tale. The end of those left upon the rock was truly melancholy, for it is probable they might have remained half an hour after the line was gone; the tide every instant rising, and their inevitable fate every instant approaching nearer. Capt. B. died severally regretted by both officers and crew; his mild form kindness and attention to every individual on board during the whole of his command, made a deep impression, and it will be long before the memory of him and his untimely fate will be effaced from the memory of the survivors.

The following is a list of the sufferers on this melancholy occasion, viz.

Captain Baker, Lieutenant Stanley, Mr. Newnham, master, Mr. Wm. Moore, midshipman, (Son of John Moore, Esq. of H M Customs in this place.) Master's Son, Carpenter's Son, 9 Seamen, 2 Marines, 2 Women.

POETRY.

THE RAINBOW.

From Baldwin's London Magazine.

The evening was glorious, and light thro' the trees
Play'd in sunshine, the rain drops, the birds and the breeze;
The landscape, outstretching, in loveliness lay
On the lap of the year in the beauty of May.

For the queen of the spring, as she passed down the vale,
Left her robe on the trees, and her breath on the gale;
And the smile of her promise gave joy to the hours,
And hush'd her footsteps sprang herbage and flowers.

The skies like a banner in sunset unroll'd,
O'er the west threw their splendor of azure and gold:
But one cloud at a distance rose dense, and increas'd,
'Till its margin of black touch'd the zenith and east.

We paus'd on these scenes, while around us they glow'd,
When a vision of beauty appeared on the cloud;
'Twas not like the sun, as at mid day we view,
Nor the moon, that rolls lightly thro' starlight and blue.

Like a spirit it came in the van of a storm,
And the eye and the heart half'd its beautiful form;
For it look'd not severe, like an angel of wrath,
But its garment of brightness illumes its dark path.

In the hues of its grandeur sublimely it stood,
O'er the ocean, the village, the field and the wood;
And river, field, village and woodland grew bright,
As conscious they gave and afforded delight.

'Twas the bow of Omnipotence, bent in HIS hand,
Whose grasp at creation the universe spann'd;
'Twas the presence of God, in symbol sublime,
His vow from the flood to the ruin of time;

Not dreadful as when in the whirlwind he pleads,
When ocean are his chariot, and lightning his steeds;
The black cloud of vengeance his banner unfurl'd,
And thunder his voice to a guilt stricken world;

In the breath of his presence, when thousands expire,
And seas boil with fury, and rocks burn with fire
And the sword and the plague spot with death strew the plain,
And vultures and wolves are the graves of the slain!

But such was that rainbow, that beautiful one!
Whose arch was refraction, its key-stone—the sun;
A promise it seem'd, with a Deity graved,
And justice and mercy met there and embraced.

Awhile, and it sadly bent over the gloom,
Like love o'er a death couch, or hope o'er the tomb:
Then left the dark ocean, whence it slowly retired,
As love and just vanished, or hope had expired.

I read not where on that source of my song;
Yet still who would it these verses bring;
Its presence to all our sins part of the Lord's
Each fair heart expanded, grew warm and adored.

Like a visit—the converse of friendship—for a day,
That blew from my sight pass'd for ever away;
Like that visit, that converse, that day, to my heart,
That bore from remembrance can never depart.

'Tis a picture in memory, distinctly defined,
With the strong and imperishing colours of mind;
A part of my being beyond my control,
Beheld on that cloud, and transcribed on my soul.

ON THE POSSIBILITY OF CULTIVATING THE BEAVER and MUSKRAT, AS DOMESTIC ANIMALS; AND FOR THE PURPOSES OF COMMERCE IN CANADA.

Having in our last, shewn the value of the BEAVER, and the possibility of rendering it a domestic animal, we shall now proceed to a consideration of the third point of our argument—What kind of land is most suitable for a BEAVER FARM, and what is the economy, or mode of management that should be adopted.

Here we probably come to our greatest obstacle, not that it is difficult to find thousands of acres in Canada, suitable for such a purpose; but, because of the heavy expence that must attend the erection of a fence sufficiently high, secure, and durable for our purpose. Next to a stone wall, which is certainly the costliest, a stout oak paling, similar to the so called pig fences of England, clinched at the bottom, would be the most effective and the most lasting. The paling could be put up at a less expence than the wall, from the abundance of the material on the spot; and as a running stream, and a dam would be indispensible on such a farm, a saw mill to cut up the wood into plank proper for the fence might be erected at a mod-rate cost. After all, if the animal was once thoroughly domesticated, it might not require so tremendous a fortification round the establishment. There are many rabbit warrens in Great Britain, that are surrounded, merely by earthen mounds for fences, and the BEAVER, with all his superior strength and sagacity, is not so great a burrower as the RABBIT. And it has not been found difficult to restrain RABBITS within proper bounds.

By the bye, it may not be altogether an irrevalent digression to mention a curious fact respecting the cultivation of RABBITS in England, which happened to come under our notice. Formerly there was a very extensive warren on the Wolds of Yorkshire, between Pocklington and Great Driffield, worth from £1000 to £1500 per annum, nearly thirty years ago. When the price of wheat became so exorbitant that every landholder was desirous to raise as much of that article as was possible, and commons and waste grounds were brought under the plough, the owner of this rabbit warren conceived it would be more profitable under tillage, than as a warren; and accordingly ordered all the RABBITS killed off, he had it ploughed and divided into several small farms, with dwelling houses, barns &c. at a vast expence. But the soil proved light, sandy, and unproductive, and after many unsuccessful attempts to obtain as much rent for the same portion, or tract of land in arable farms, as it produced when a rabbit warren, it was found best to throw down the fences, and restock the land with RABBITS; and for aught we know, it remains a warren unto this day.

This fact will show, not only that land should always be appropriated to that description of stock for which it is best adapted, but also, that the profit to the owner is much more considerable when so appropriated; and we feel pretty well convinced there are many thousand acres of land in CANADA that would yield a much larger profit under BEAVER FARMS than by any other mode of management; however whimsical such an assertion may seem to those who have never thought much on the subject.

The kind of land best suited for a BEAVER-FARM, would be such of pasture, with a small lake, from which ran a stream of living water, with a certain portion of wet or drowned land. A stream of water would be indispensible. The want of a lake might be remedied by the BEAVERS, themselves, as they could build a dam and make an artificial lake. However, in this country, there is no want of proper situations in which at least to try the experiment; for we have, especially in what is termed the back country, innumerable streams of water, and small lakes, in every variety of situation. The gregarious animals would build houses for themselves, and several families would dwell together. One man, with dogs properly trained, would be able to attend to a large establishment, besides having those to cultivate such crops as it would be proper to give the BEAVERS for food, such as potatoes, carrots, parsnips, &c. &c. and by taking his regular rounds, and being frequently amongst them, he would preserve the gentleness and familiarity that would be necessary. The French Canadians, we think, would make the best BEAVER-FARMERS.

MUSKRATS, (perhaps a few OTTERS,) might be kept on the same waters, and in the drowned lands, and would maintain themselves without any trouble from the keeper. It would not be proper to clear any more of the land than was necessary for the cultivation of the potatoes, parsnips, &c. and it might be of service to plant such trees as the BEAVERS have a predilection for, and of the bark of which they are greedy.

The best way of commencing an experiment of this kind would be to employ the Indians to catch a few young pairs of both sexes, about the months of June or July. These should be thoroughly tamed, made to eat any kind of vegetables, or succulent food, besides fish; and taught to answer to their names, all which may be easily done. Being at length well acquainted, and familiar, with their master and his dogs, they might be turned out at first into a smaller enclosure, which might be enlarged, or thrown down, as the numbers increased, until the whole space allotted for such a farm was occupied, when a certain number, at a proper age, should be annually killed off, and sent to market. On a farm of this kind, of 240 acres of land, properly stocked and managed, we suppose it possible that One Thousand BEAVERS—worth Two Thousand Pounds, over and above all costs and charges, could be annually sent to market.

In this little essay we do not pretend to give all the instructions it may be necessary to observe, but merely to throw out a few useful hints, being well assured the plan is feasible, and worthy the notice of any one with leisure and curiosity enough to try the experiment. At all events it might be made a profitable amusement, far more so than a farm of KANGAROOS, which has succeeded near London. Should any of our numerous readers be able to favour us with any further hints, that may be useful or curious on this subject, we shall gladly give them a place in the Register.

From the Kingston Chronicle.

An abstract of the West India Trade Bill has been published in the Quebec Gazette, but as it may yet undergo some alterations in the course of its different readings before it becomes a law, we do not think it necessary to insert it in its present shape, more especially as the outlines of the bill are already generally known.

Though the latest accounts from England afford us no further information respecting the proposed bill for the union of these Provinces, we are not the less confirmed in the opinion which we have already expressed, that the Bill will not only be introduced into Parliament this season, but that it will pass into a law without further delay.

Last Sunday morning about eight o'clock this town was visited by a dreadful thunder storm.—The wind blew violently from the westward: for nearly an hour there was a perfect hurricane, while the rain fell in torrents, and for the time deluged our streets with water. Though we have not heard of any material injury done by the storm in this neighborhood, its effects have been seriously felt about the head of the Bay of Quinte, as appears by the following extract of a letter received from a correspondent in Murray.

"Murray, July 29, 1822.

"SIR—Yesterday morning about five o'clock a tremendous shower of rain, accompanied with hail of an uncommon size, passed round the head of the Bay, and did much injury to the fields of grain, to the gardens, and dwelling houses. Eighty panes of glass have been broken in the large house of R. Watkins, Esq. and several other houses of smaller size have suffered in proportion. A young woman who happened to be standing near a window had her face severely cut by some panes of glass which were broken by the hail and precipitated across the room by the driving tempest.

ENGLAND

We do not observe that much business, of public importance, has been transacted in the British Parliament since our last arrivals. A bill preventing cruelty to animals, brought in by Mr. Martin, had passed both Houses. The West India Trade Bill had gone through the House of Commons, and was to be read a second time in the House of Lords on the 15th June. Mr. Western's motion for a resumption of cash payment, was negatived in the House of Commons on the 12th June, and Mr Huskisson's amendment "not to alter the standard of silver in fineness, weight, or denomination," was carried.—The vote in both cases was 194 to 30.

It is stated that the King's journey to the Continent had been postponed, owing to ministers having objected to it on the ground of the expense which would be incurred, at a moment when the whole country was so clamorous for reform and retrenchment.

James Stewart, Esq. who killed Sir Alexander Boswell in a duel, was tried at Edinburgh on the 10th of June on a charge of murder. After sitting eighteen hours, the case was left to the Jury, who, without leaving the box, returned an unanimous verdict of not guilty, which was received with marked approbation within, and with loud cheers from without the doors.

Mr. Washington Irving was presented by the American Minister to the King, at a royal levee held at Carlton House on the 12th June.

George Stephen Kemble, Esq. brother of John Kemble and of Mrs. Siddons, died after a short illness in the 65th year of his age. Mr. K. was also an actor, and was chiefly remarkable for playing Sir John Fullstaff without stuffing.

The Marquis of Hastings.—A meeting of the proprietors of the East India House, was held in London on the 29th May, for the purpose of voting thanks to the Marquis of Hastings for his good government in India, both civil and military. It appears, from the speeches delivered on the occasion, that by one act of the Marquis, he had effected a saving to the company of between 150,000 and 200,000 pounds sterling, by making the interest of the debt payable in England. For his good conduct in the Napaulese and Mahratta wars, the East India company, in 1819, voted to him the sum of £5000 sterling a year for 20 years. Col. Stanhope, in alluding to the civil administration of the Governor General, said, "he would begin with Hydrabad, where a most happy reform had been affected under the judicious management of Mr Medcalf.—By the difference of education and the freedom to the Press, the Marquis of Hastings laid the foundation of permanent good government. Before these he had little doubt that the superstitions of the Hindoos would soon vanish; their 46,000 Prophets, their 3,300,000 Gods, their system of easis, their burning of widows, and all the other enormities of that system, which the Mahometan conquerors, and the Portuguese with all their efforts, were unable to eradicate. It was a free Press that beat down Pagan Christianity, and brought about the Reformation. The same effects, he had no doubt, it would produce on the rebellion of the Hindoos."

Mr. Hume remarked that the Noble Marquis was worthy of the highest praise, but he said, "it was not fair to call on the Court of Proprietors for the general opinion, until they had the necessary documents before them. Allusion had been made to the improvement of the revenue. He found, however, that in the year 1813, the debt was £29,965,000 and in 1821, £36,999,000 being an increase of £9,000,000. In 1813 the revenue was £17,267,000 leaving a surplus over the expenditure of £1,632,000. In the years 1818 and 1819, the revenue increased from £17,267,000 to £19,000,000, but the expenditure bore no proportion to this increase. The surplus revenue in 1813, as compared with 1819, was £2,000,000 greater in the former year. Perhaps the last returns were more favorable, but those of the proceeding year did not shew a surplus."

The heat had been very oppressive in England during the early part of the month of June. In London the thermometer was up to 85°; and in Warwich on the 8th of June, it was 95 in the shade.—Thirteen post horses had ended their miserable existence in one day on As ot racecourse, and several fine horses belonging to coach proprietors dropped down and died on the road between the Heath and London.

PITT CLUB ANNIVERSARY.

The Anniversary of the Right Hon. Wm. Pitt was celebrated by a public dinner at the City of London Tavern, Bishopsgate street, on the 28th May, Wm. Ralph Cartwright, Esq M. P in the Chair. On taking the Chair he was supported on the right by the Lord Chancellor and on the left by the Duke of Wellington.

Among the company we noticed the following Noblemen and Gentlemen:—Lord Viscount Sidmouth, the Earl of Glasgow, Earl of Harewood, Lord Hotham the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Miles Nightingall, K C B M P Vice Admiral Sir E Harvey, K C B M P Sir Robert Vaughan, Bart. M. P. Sir Thomas Dyke, Bart. Sir Robert Wigram, Bart. Sir Chas. Flower, Bart Sir John Gibbons, Bart. Bt. Bart. Sir Henry Russel, E. B. Willbraham, Esq. M. P Henry Bankes, Esq. M P

After the cloth had been removed, "Non nobis Domine" was sung by a number of professional singers, under the regulation of Mr. Leete

The Chairman then proposed—"The King: may he long live to Reign over a Faithful people, and enjoy the benefits of a peace, for which Great Britain is indebted to him."

This toast was drank with enthusiasm. Air and song—"God save the King."

The CHAIRMAN next proposed—"The Duke of York and the other branches of the Royal Family"

Drank with loud applause Air—"The Duke of York's March Song—"Hail, Star of Brunswick."

The CHAIRMAN rose to give "The immortal memory of the late Right Hon. Wm. Pitt" This toast, he remarked, had already been proposed so often through many successive years that for him to enlarge on it was as unnecessary as it would be presumptuous. He acknowledged himself to be one of those who were convinced that the principles of the Right Hon. Wm. Pitt, had saved the salvation of his country. Unaided by his abilities, we never could have stemmed the torrent which threatened to overwhelm the country thirty years ago, nor could we have triumphed over the numerous difficulties by which we were at that time enveloped. By his principles when he was no more. He was aware that attempts were constantly making to depreciate the merit of Mr. Pitt, and to represent every calamity to be the necessary result of the principles on which he had acted. But he would ask what would have been the result, had an opposite line of policy been preferred? He was satisfied as he was convinced every man must be, who looked fairly on the history of the past, that much as we have still to contend with, we had much to exult for It was notorious that Sir Pitt never wished to enter into the late war, and had only reluctantly done so, on the sound principles of necessity and self preservation. But being in it, he had thought it wisdom to persevere with firmness and courage. The result was glorious beyond the danger being passed, and the difficulties overcome. But our former perilous situation was but too frequently forgotten, and but imperfect justice was done to the merits of Mr. Pitt—he believed that the fame of that Statesman would rise much higher hereafter. If ever there was a man who had the interest of his country at heart, it was Mr. Pitt: and if ever there was a man who fell in the cause of his country, it was Mr Pitt (Applause) Fearing as they did, whom he had then the honor to address, he was confident that they would feel it to be their duty to unite with him to keep alive the memory of that Great Man, and he had therefore the fullest conviction that they would drink the toast which he had proposed—

"The Immortal memory of William Pitt."

The toast was drank with enthusiasm. Air—"Should auld acquaintance be forgot"—Song, "Pitt was his country's pride, and his country's safety too."

"The Army and Navy, and may we never forget the efforts of our gallant countrymen to ensure our independence, and to maintain our liberties."—Air and Song, "Rule Britannia."

"The House of Brunswick, and may they never forget the principles which seated them upon the Throne"—Song, "With a jolly full bottle let each man be armed. We must be good subjects when our hearts are thus warmed."

The song, and in particular, the burden or chorus of it, "The King and the Church," was received with loud acclamations

The Chairman then rose to propose the health of his Majesty's Ministers In giving this toast he had only to refer the company to the history of the period during which they had administered the affairs of the country. A more arduous and more brilliant period was not to be found in our annals.—They had led us through a most tempestuous war to a glorious peace. It was true that we had not as yet recovered from the exertions demanded during the protracted contest; but if we continue to confide in them in whom we had so long reposed our confidence—if we were, in fact, true to ourselves, and were not misled by factious declamations or idle theories, he was sanguine enough to hope, that at no distant period we should recover, and gain the reward of all the sacrifices we had made in the cause of the best and happiest Government which had ever been devised, and under which, more security, comfort, and liberty were to be enjoyed than had ever fallen to the lot of any other country.

"The health of his Majesty's Ministers" having been drank with three times three:

The Lord Chancellor rose, as well as did the Duke of Wellington, Lord Viscount Sidmouth, and the Rt Hon. Nicholas Vansittart. The Lord Chancellor then returned thanks, not only on behalf of such of his Majesty's Ministers as were present, but of several others, who had stated to him their regret at being unable to attend If any credit was due to them for having overcome the multiplied dangers which had surrounded their acceptance of office, that credit was due not so much to them, as to their having followed the line of conduct marked out for them by their illustrious predecessor, whose memory they were then celebrating. He was the man who led them to success; his name was a bulwark and a tower of strength. If it might be said that much evil yet existed—if it would be asserted that nothing had been gained by the contest, he would refer to the time when a foreigner threatened to hold the rule of Great Britain, when the independance, the freedom, and the religion of the country had been at stake—they had been saved—the independence of the kingdom, its freedom and its religion, were still safe; and for their safety, they had to thank the great man whose memory they revered; for the continuance of them they would be indebted to themselves. Old as he was he rejoiced that in consequence of the measures recommended by Mr. Pitt, it was his to yield obedience to a gracious British Sovereign, who respected the law of God and the law of the country Had a different course been pursued, we might now have been under the yoke of a foreign tyrant Rome under the yoke of a foreign tyrant! whose only God was ambition—whose only law despotic power! It was impossible for any one to be so blind as not to see that distress which we now experienced was the necessary consequence of the exertions which we had made, but those principles which had saved us from the extent of dangers which once menaced us, would eventually triumph over the difficulties with which we had still to contend In conclusion, he remarked, that the religion of the country was safe, and he firmly believed that it would remain so, but he begged to caution those who loved the Constitution, not to suffer themselves to be misled by individuals, who professing anxiety to improve the Constitution, had no object in view but its destruction.

Air, "Steady, boys. Steady."

The Chairman then gave the health of the Duke of Wellington, to whose exertions, and to whom illustrious achievements so much was due.

Air, "See the Conquering Hero comes."

INDEX AT END.

The Duke of Wellington returned thanks. He saw much was due to him for exertion; he claimed not so much praise for them as for his uniform and determined approbation of the principles of the immortal and illustrious William Pitt.

The Chairman next gave the health of a Nobleman much attached to the principles of Mr. Pitt, who had been found by the side of that great man during the most difficult parts of his career, he meant the President of the Club, the Earl of Harewood.

The toast having been drank with three times three,

The Earl of Harewood, in returning thanks, said, though that Club was run down as a party club, he should ever consider himself highly honored by being considered its President. Much of what he might have said had been anticipated by the Honorable and worthy Chairman, and by the Lord Chancellor But he would contend that to judge of the merits of Mr. Pitt, they ought to go back to the time in which he lived, and then to go forward to trace the effects of his system on those who were to follow the present generation, to understand how much they owed to that Great Man. It was true, the danger of the war was now at an end, but other dangers, perhaps still more formidable than those which prevailed then, relieves with an enemy in front, remained to be met He alluded to the insidious, undermining, illiberal attacks (as they were called) upon every part of our institutions. He especially set forth the importance of making an exertion to put down these, and to support the exertion he would say it there, and he would say it before the whole world, the country was not safe (Applause)

Lord Viscount Sidmouth proposed "the health of the Chairman, with three times three."

The toast was drank with loud acclamations.

The Chairman, in returning thanks, again expressed his admiration of the principles of Mr. Pitt; and held the honor he had just received to be peculiarly enhanced, coming as it did from the friends and admirers of Mr. Pitt

"The Protestant Ascendancy" was drank with three times three.

The Lord Chancellor begged to be allowed to give his favorite toast.— "Prosperity and perpetuity to the Pitt Club"

The toast was received with shouts of approbation; after which the Lord Chancellor, the Duke of Wellington, and the other Members of the Government retired

"The Immortal memory of King George III" was drank in silence.

Mr. Acheson begged to give a toast. He called upon the Meeting to drink the health of an individual who was most firmly attached to the principles of Mr Pitt and who had constantly attended the Meetings of the Club, when his residence in town would permit. He had instilled in the cause in his own country, and had never shirked the principles which he had once avowed. He begged to give, in his individual capacity, their worthy Chairman, "Mr. Cartwright," the Member for Northampton. This toast was drank with three times three

The Chairman was so little prepared for the insidious attack just made on him, that he was unprepared to reply — (A laugh.) He begged to thank them, and to propose the health of the Founder of the Society, "Mr. Acheson"

The health of Mr. Acheson was drank with three times three

Mr. Acheson had not anticipated the return which would be made by the Chairman. He declared himself largely repaid for any exertions which he had made towards the organization of the Pitt Club, by the notice which he had gained from persons of the best consideration, and best principles in the country. He hoped the Members of that institution would ever be ready to rally round the Throne and that the Throne in return would always be ready to maintain the rights of the people.

The Chairman then gave "Lord Hopetoun, and the Pitt Club of Scotland."

The toast having been drunk with three times three.

The Earl of Glasgow returned thanks for the honor rendered to the Pitt Club of Scotland, bore testimony to the enthusiasm with which the day was honored there, and rendered an elegant tribute to the virtues and talents of Mr. Pitt.

The standing toasts were then successively given. Several convivial and national sentiments were added, and the company continued to enjoy the pleasures of agreeable society and of hilarity until a late hour.

THE KING'S VISIT TO THE ITALIAN OPERA.

The announcement of his Majesty's intention to visit the Italian Opera, attracted a vast concourse of persons around the Theatre, and thence to the Palace. The most perfect order, however, was preserved by the excellent police arrangements made under the direction of the Chief Magistrate, Sir R. Birnie. A detachment of the Royal Horse Guards were in attendance in aid of the civil power At half-past seven o'clock the outer entrance to the royal box was thrown open, and a scarlet floor cloth laid down across the pavement. This was flanked on each side by a guard of honour from the Coldstream The ve[illegible] was superbly illuminated, and within it was [illegible] Court dress— the Marquis of Aldesbury, the Earls of [illegible]ford and Mount Edgcumbe, Lord Lowther, the Count St Antonio, and Mr. Ebers, the active manager and lessee of the Theatre.

From this time till the approach of the King the different branches of the Royal Family arrived in quick succession Among others, we observed the Duke of York the Princess Augusta, the Princess Sophia of Gloucester, and the Duchess of Kent. The Prince and Princess of Denmark also arrived about the same time and were received with military honours.

At about ten minutes before eight o'clock the sound of trumpets, and the shouts of the populace in Pall mall announced that the King had left the Palace, and in the next minute the Royal cavalcade, consisting of five carriages, drove round the colonnade amidst the reiterated applauses of the multitude.

The carriage in which his Majesty rode was, for the first time on such occasions since his accession to the throne, drawn by a pair of cream-colored horses, driven by Mr Roberts, the state coachman. This was the etiquette always used by his late Majesty, whenever he visited any place of public amusement; and we understand it is to be strictly observed in future.

The Duke of Dorset, Master of the Horse, and Lord Lovaine the Lord in Waiting, were the immediate attendants in the carriage of the King The other attendants were—the Lord Chamberlain, the Vice Chamberlain, Earl Cathcart, Gold Stick in Waiting, the Silver Stick in Waiting, the Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard, Sir Robert Bolton, the Equerry in Waiting, the Gentlemen Ushers, the Exon, &c.

His Majesty wore a Field Marshal's dress, with the insignia of six different Orders He appeared in excellent health, and as the carriage drove up, and whilst the King was alighting, the shouts of applause were incessant

His Majesty was received on the stage by Lords Aldesbury, Fife, Mount Edgecumbe, and Lowther, Count St Antonio, and Mr Ebers, and he was by them conducted to the royal box

THEATRE.—The King entered the royal box at eight o'clock, and was followed by the Duke of York, who took his station at some little distance on his Majesty's left hand The pit had been overcrowded two hours before, but the boxes were by no means full at the rising of the curtain. Among the fashionable attendants were, the Prince and Princess Esterhazy, and the Prince and Princess of Denmark The royal strangers occupied the King's private box, where the Duchess of Gloucester received them. The moment his Majesty's person was visible, the audience rose as usual, and expressed their approbation in the satisfactions they felt on seeing their Sovereign among them. The national anthem was performed in excellent style, chiefly by Mesdames Campo rese, De Begnis, and Vestris. The opera of Il Barbiere di Siviglia then followed, being, we believe, the first time of its representation here these three years. Rosina was played by Madame Cinti, her debut on this stage. Madame Cinti has an interesting countenance, a beautiful figure, a lady-like demeanour; and these are qualifications in themselves so inspiring, that one likes to admit every possible degree of merit which the fair possessor of them can wish to claim. She is evidently a pupil of the French school. Her voice is not capable of penetrating the space of this Theatre, but is peculiarly sweet and correct in intonation, and it acquires a resistless power, when assisted by the eloquence of the fine dark eyes. She sung that charming little air, Io son fedele, in a very pretty style She ran down one division in semi tones, with a facility and precision which were marked by a general burst of approbation. Ah si rede, which belongs to her part in the second act, was omitted. She deserves praise for her acting, which was in a style of subdued animation, calculated to make a favourable, though not a very strong impression. When the opera was concluded, "God save the King" was again called for, and played in a resistless power, when assisted by the eloquence of the fine dark eyes. When the opera was concluded, "God save the King" was again called for, and played in the midst of the applause of the audience. By this time every box was tenanted, and the prospect which the house presented during the performance of the anthem was magnificent in the extreme. The ballet was Les Pages du Duc de Vendome, which went off with unusual eclat, as Paul, Noblet, Alexandroffi, and indeed, the whole of the corps du ballet exerted their utmost powers to attract admiration. It was late when the performance was over, but the wonderful state of the theatre continued until his Majesty took his departure.

LADY VANE STEWART'S GRAND BALL.

Her Ladyship gave one of the most splendid balls of the season, on Monday evening, at her residence in St James's square. The evening was spent most brilliantly till eleven o'clock; the supper, which consisted of every delicacy of the season, was announced at half past one, it was prepared in the two principal dining parlors, where covers were laid for near 400 The merry dance was resumed soon after two, and did not break up till nearly five o'clock yesterday morning There were upwards of 600 persons of the first distinction and fashion, among whom were,—

The Prince of Denmark, Prince and Princess Esterhazy, Prince Cariath, Count and Countess Lieven, Count and Countess Munster, Count and Countess Lndoll, the Duchess of Portland, Dowager Duchess of Richmond, Dowager Duchess of Rutland, the Marchioness of Londonderry, Lansdown, and Hertford, the Countess of Clare, the Countess of Harrowby, Lady Mary Ryder, the Earl and Countess of Aboyne, the Ladies Gordon, the Ladies Lenox, &c. &c.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.—Mr KEAN'S benefit took place on the 3d June, and we are happy to learn was well attended. It has been already announced to the Public that the profits arising from this performance are to be appropriated to the relief of the unfortunate sufferers in Ireland. We believe it is the first instance of the kind in the history of the stage, unless we consider the present made by Dr Young of his last Tragedy, to a charitable institution, an exception. It was had any disposition to appear as the panegyrist of Mr. Kean, the present opportunity would afford us an ample scope; but we shall better consult our own dignity and his feelings, by simply noticing the fact, and leaving society to make the comment.

SPARRING.—The Fives-court was very respectably attended yesterday, for the Benefit of the Distressed Irish The Great Captain of the Milling Fives was the promoter of this laudable act; the whole of the pugilistic Corps mustered upon the occasion, and, by their exertions, appeared to give additional satisfaction. The day was not a favourable one for the cause, it being a great day at Tattersall's, and thousands in the Fancy had left for Ascot The sets-to were of the best order The best bout was between Ben Burn and Shelton, formidable left hand hitters, and the exchanges were various; it was a combination of science and determination, which was greatly applauded. Burn had been Cribb's Sparring displayed science too good humouredly Randall and Holt made an excellent set to, and, as usual, had a scientific idea in every movement. Curtis, and Cooper the gipsey, had a good turn; but the gipsey's superior length and weight made but few points on his opponent's tolerable share of pugilistic talent. Turner set to with Parrot and had decidedly the best of it. The company left well satisfied.—Morning Chronicle, June 4.

THE CHAMPION OF ENGLAND.

The celebrated Tom Cribb Champion, of England, lately took his farewell benefit at the Fives-Court Peace and happiness attend him in his retirement! A braver or a more gallant hero never graced the ring, of which he has been for upwards of 20 years the pride, grace, and boast. It was well observed by the late Mr Wyndham in his amusing speech on the Bull baiting Suppression Bill, that gymnastic sports, instead of making men ferocious, were calculated to assuage and subdue the natural passions and vice of human nature; as evidence of which he stated, that the anger which was delayed by a few homilies blows at a boxing match in England, generally found vent at the point of the dagger or in the pole-poned fowl in the continental nations of the Continent, where the practice of pugilism is unknown. Tom Cribb is a proof of the truth of the observation of that liberal and enlightened statesman. The rough and craggy exterior of this mountain of manhood contains a mine of genuine worth, of kindness, and good nature within the heart within The boldest, the bravest, and the strongest of all living men, is at the same time the most peaceable and inoffensive In the plenitude of his power, far from courting quarrel, he has in many instances either turned aside or shunned opportunities of displaying his superior strength, in a way that in ordinary men might pass for timidity We shall cite one case from a hundred:—As Tom was walking one morning with two ladies upon the Pavement, Moorfields, a little tailor came plump against the two, and attempted to force his way stitch through. Failing in his manœuvre to break the line, he placed himself in a boxing attitude, and made two hits right and left at the Champion. Cribb smiled at his puny efforts, and one of the Ladies exclaimed, "Oh dear, Mr Cribb, don't mind him?" More was unnecessary; the name of Cribb was enough. The Knight of the Thimble turned on his heel, and fled with precipitation. After Gully, the other great ornament of the prize-ring, beat Gregson, he opened the Plough public house in Carey-street, and Tom Cribb officiated as an assistant in a disinterested kind way, purely from friendship Tom afterwards fought and beat the sable hero, Molyneux, and since that time he too has been generally the proprietor of a public-house. It was for some years a favorite point, eagerly sought and anxiously promoted among the amateurs and connoisseurs of the Fancy, to invoke a combat between these two friends and heroes, the Pylades and Orestes, the Nysus and Euryalus of the ring; but to their eternal honor be it recorded, nothing could tempt or provoke them to engage in combat with each other It was the singular fate of this hero never to have been beaten in any regular battle. His friends and strons, who knew him intimately from his boyish days, are convinced that he could not be beaten. Superior strength and science might kill him, but such was his obstinate courage he could not be brought to yield. He might be killed, he conquered.

Latest Foreign Intelligence.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

Although by this arrival we have advices from almost every part of Europe many days later than the intelligence previously received from that quarter, we do not find that the accounts of the state of the negociations with Turkey, are much more to be relied on than formerly. Some of the French and English papers, which have always expressed a belief that there would be no war, are more confident that their anticipations will be realized: while those who hold a contrary opinion still doubt on the subject. The former rest their hopes of peace on the circumstance, which certainly carries with it great weight, that the King of France in his reply to the address of the House of Peers, (given in another column) distinctly states he had received advices, which announce "that the peace will not be interrupted in the East." Those on the other hand, who calculate on war say, that they will not believe in the statements relative to the concessions made by the Turks, until the ratifications of the peace by the Divan be officially announced; and they justify their want of faith in the statement of the French King, on the ground that no reliance whatever can be placed in the assurances of the Turkish government, which neither regards promises nor treaties made or entered into with the Christian powers, unless in so far as it finds these conducive to its own advantage. In the present instance, the Turkish ministers were said to have acquiesced on the 8th of May in the demands of Russia for the evacuation of Moldavia and Wallachia; but suddenly retracting, Lord Strangford was reduced to the necessity of threatening the Reis Effendi, who in consequence of these threats, renewed the promise of withdrawing from the provinces in question, and even fixed the day for finally evacuating them both. But so far from the Divan holding themselves bound by this assurance, up to the latest accounts from the East, neither Bucharest nor Jassey, the capitals of Wallachia and Moldavia, had been evacuated; nor had the Russian army of observation made demonstrations from which it could be inferred that Alexander placed any reliance on such an event taking place To this it is added, in the London evening papers of the 15th June, that letters had that day been received from Odessa of the 17th May, two days later than the dates of any previous arrivals, which did not contain a confirmation of the news announced in the King of France's speech. The Austrian Observer of the 31st May was also silent on the subject; circumstances, considering that Odessa and Vienna were much nearer to Constantinople than Paris, which gave rise to strong doubts as to the peacible arrangements said to have taken place.

Besides, say the advocates for war, the ministers of the King of France, A confident of peace, would never have put into the mouth of his Majesty such expressions as "I cherish the hope" and "I have received news which assures me." They would have used other language had it not been to notorious, that no positive dependence can be placed on the intermediate acquiescence of any minister, until it receive the sanction of the Divan; whose ultimate decision is even then contingent on the fiat of the Sultan.

So standing the case, we are free to confess that every thing appears to us involved in mysterious obscurity. In putting down these bandits, we observe that some unnecessary severity was exercised by the soldiers in a town called Cervera, where a desperate resistance of sixteen hours was opposed to the regular troops, who, after the place surrendered, were allowed to gratify their fury without discriminations On this intelligence being communicated to the Cortes, they were about to pass a vote of thanks to the army, but Gen. Riego moved "that whilst paying due homage to the brilliant conduct of the constitutional troops, they should declare at the same time that they had learned with grief that Cervera had been taken by storm, as on that unfortunate occasion Spanish blood had been shed" This patriotic and humane suggestion was unanimously adopted.

It has been discovered that the old national debt of Spain is not half so large as was thought When the regulation of the finances occupied the Cortes, the ministers of this department made a return or estimate of the old public debt, from such imperfect data and records as he found in the offices; but as very incorrect accounts had been kept of the sums paid off, a notice was given to all public creditors to bring in their statements and claims, and the term of two years granted. It now turns out, that the amount claimed is not half as much as the one set down in the minister's estimate

We have on file an article of some importance being an address, voted on the 24th May, by the Spanish Cortes to the King on the state of the nation In this document the Cortes paint in brilliant colors, the calamitous efforts of the Royalist party to deprive the people of the benefits of the constitution; they loudly condemn the appointments, which the King had made to the command of provinces, of men who had been guilty of the greatest enormities; and they call on him in language not to be mistaken, to concur honestly with them in carrying the constitution into effect. The conduct of the priests appears particularly to have excited the indignation of the Cortes, whom they directly accuse of exciting all the disturbances that had taken place "in the deceitful hope of annihilating for ever the national glory, liberty, the throne and the representation." To re-establish perfect order, the most energetic measures are recommended; and the king is requested "to inform every foreign government, which, whether directly or indirectly, would take part in our domestic concerns, that the nation is not in a situation to receive laws; that she possesses power and resources to cause herself to be respected, and that if she knew how to defend her independence and her King with gory, it is with the same glory and with still greater exertions, that she will always know how do defend her King and her liberty."

FRANCE.

The intelligence from France refers principally to the proceedings of the Chamber of Deputies, which were of a most tumultuous character, and presage a session even more tempestuous than distinguished the last chamber. From the circumstance of the parties being more equally balanced, the Ultras would not be able to overbalance the liberals by such decided majorities. Among the candidates for the Presidency, the King had again selected M. Ravez to preside over the session of 1822. M. de Bonald, M. Vaublanc, de la Bourdonnaye, and Chabrol de Crousol, had been elected Vice Presidents, by large majorities

A duel took place at Paris, between Benjamin Constant and M Forbin des Issarts, both members of the Chamber of Deputies. The former had demanded satisfaction for a letter published by the latter on the 8th, in answer to one of the 4th, of Benjamin Constant's. Without farther explanation, the two deputies proceeded to the ground at 7 o'clock in the morning. M Benjamin Constant was attended by Gen. Sebastiani and M. de Schonardin—M. des Issarts by Gen Bethny and Col Chamois, Lieutenant of Gardes du Corps, in the company of Luxembourg; all but the last mentioned, members of the chamber. M Constant finding it difficult to walk, or stand erect, the two gentlemen were seated on chairs at ten paces distance. They fired together two shots, each at a given signal. Neither having been touched, the respective friends pronounced that the combat must terminate. And so ended this "very honourable" affair

The Abbe Frayssinous, the preacher, who recommended that the mass of the people should not be allowed to learn to read and write, is said to be placed at the head of the education of France This appointment is sufficient to show the sincere and liberal views of government towards the people.

SPAIN.

The latest accounts from Madrid confirm the accounts we had previously received, that the remains of the insurgent party are dwindling into obscurity. In putting down these bandits, we observe that some unnecessary severity was exercised by the soldiers in a town called Cervera, where a desperate resistance of sixteen hours was opposed to the regular troops, who, after the place surrendered, were allowed to gratify their fury without discriminations On this intelligence being communicated to the Cortes, they were about to pass a vote of thanks to the army, but Gen. THE GREEKS.

If the Turkish government has really evinced symptoms of a pacific nature, in its negociations with the European powers, we are at a loss to conceive on what ground the barbarities, which continue to be practised on the Greeks, are permitted. In a letter dated Constantinople, May the 10th, it is stated that, "thousands of women, girls and boys have been brought here, and exposed for sale in the Bazaar. Let me not describe the cruelties which such a market presents. Many prisoners have killed each other, in order to rescue themselves from the Turks. The women refuse to take food, but are compelled to do it by the whips of their masters"—Such is the manner in which the Porte treats innocent Christians, notwithstanding the promises which it gave on receiving the Russian ultimatum. The fate of the Scios merchants settled at Constantinople, who have been thrown into prison, is still unknown, and we are ignorant whether they have been put to death, or whether they still languish in the dungeons of the arsenal or the Lazaretto. We expect here shortly a Russian Ambassador."

In another letter from Odessa, of the 15th May, it is said, "many women and young girls from Scio have been sold at Constantinople. Several fanatical Musselmen have purchased some of them for thirty piasters a piece, to kill them, and thus obtain, according to the precepts of the Koran, eternal reward for their zeal. Other accounts state that the Turks have destroyed several villages in the vicinity of Salonica, because the inhabitants had refused to give up their arms; and that many Greeks at the request of their wives and daughters, have immolated them, with their own hands, in order that they should not be polluted by the Turks."

It is affirmed in more than one of the continental papers, and repeated as true, in the London Morning Chronicle, that "the English took on a five years lease the exploitation of the Cape Perch, and greatly contributed to the reduction of the island of Scio by the Turks." It is added, "that the object of that long and apparently hostile armament, which has been closed for some months, is to intimidate; In 1819, of two millions; in 1820, of the same, and a small addition having been made in 1820, under the two circumstances of the expected coronation and the interruption of public tranquillity by the practices of incendiary writers and workers; this charge was thrown off in the following year, 1821, and a return effected to the reduced standard of 1815 and 1819.

"Third, this reduction was carried through every head of the ordinary annual supply. The supply for the army in 1817, was, in round numbers, eleven millions. For 1818, the supply for the same service was nine millions four hundred thousand. For 1819 eight millions nine hundred thousand. For 1820 (under the new circumstances of an interruption in the public tranquillity by the causes which have been already stated) nine million four hundred thousand. For 1821 eight millions seven hundred and fifty thousand—a return again to the reduced estimates of 1818 and 1819.

"Fourth,—The same reductions was made in the naval supply. For 1816 the naval supply was ten millions. For 1817 the navy (including some extraordinaries upon making up the account of the year) cost seven millions. For 1818 six millions and a half. For 1819 the naval supply was six millions four hundred thousand. For 1820 six millions five hundred thousand and a fraction. For 1821 six millions one hundred thousand and a fraction.

"Fifth.—The same successive reduction was effected in the Ordnance. For 1816, the ordnance service was sixteen hundred thousand.—For 1817 twelve hundred and seventy thousand.—For 1818 twelve hundred and forty thousand.—For 1819 eleven hundred and ninety thousand.—For 1820 twelve hundred thousand.—For 1821 eleven hundred and ninety thousand; being a return to the reduced estimates of the year 1819—the small addition in the preceding year being occasioned by the disturbed state of the country, by the same cause as the increase of the army, namely, the agitated condition of certain districts, and the employment of marines to perform garrison duty.

"Sixth.—In the miscellaneous, allowing for the less protection in which this head of service is effected by the difference of peace and war, a system of retrenchment is equally visible. For 1816 the miscellaneous was two millions and a half. For 1817 the same service was seventeen hundred thousand. For 1818 the same. For 1819 one million nine hundred thousand pounds. For 1820 (under the two new circumstances of the coronation and the continuance of the public peace) it was two millions four hundred thousand. In 1821 the supply was one million nine hundred thousand, being a return to the reduced estimate of the year 1819.

"Seventh —The same successive reduction was made in the number of men taken for the military and naval establishments through the several years In the course of 1815 and 1816 three hundred thousand men were discharged from the army and navy In 1816 the peace establishment for the home service, Ireland, and the Colonies, was fixed at ninety-nine thousand men In 1818 the army was reduced to ninety-one thousand In 1818 it was reduced to eighty-one thousand. In 1819 it was again reduced to seventy-eight thousand.

"Eighth.—And, during these reductions, more than sixteen millions of annual taxes were removed, and ten millions of the bank debt paid.

"Ninth.—And by these uniform efforts for reduction on the one part, and for the support of public credit on the other, the national currency was re-established, and cash payments finally restored in the present year."

Nor had (continues the writer) his Majesty's ministers stopped here, but since the close of the last sessions, they had still, with the same earnestness and sincerity, been occupied in such further reductions as the exigencies of the public service would admit; in a very few weeks after these observations should meet the public eye, a detailed statement would be made in Parliament, by which it would appear that a further reduction of upwards of two millions had been effected within the short time between the close of the last session and the commencement of the present. It was surely not too much to say, that this amount of reduction exceeded what could have been anticipated by the warmest friends of economy.

We are next led by our author to consider the sources of national revenue and public wealth, which he contends, are in their actual state, entire and unimpaired, and fully justified in confidence in his Majesty's ministers for the present, and a strong expectation for the future. The heads of these funds are Commerce, the Navigation, the Manufactures, the Internal Trade, and (so far as respects the interests of the revenue, and as affording proof that the general means of consuming are unimpaired) the National Consumption.

Slave Trade.—Notwithstanding all the boasted professions of the present government of France, in favor of the abolition of slavery, it has been for some time asserted in the English papers, that no other nation in Europe carried on that abominable traffic, the slave trade, to such an extent as the subjects of Louis the XVIII. We have heard this denied by the writers attached to the French Government, and were willing, in consequence, to think the statements of the London editors exaggerated.

Now, however, we are compelled to believe all they have said on the subject; for, by authentic accounts received at Philadelphia from Cuba, we learn that a French brig from Africa with one hundred and sixty slaves on board, had arrived at Havana on the 10th instant, having been brought there by Captain Read, of the sloop of war Hornet. The French slave trader had been captured on the 5th, by the Colombian cruiser, General Paez, and was afterwards taken possession of by Capt. Read. Heavy as the sins of Napoleon were, he was free of that enormous crime of trafficing in human flesh, which is now permitted with impunity by the reigning family of France. Even all that this family owes to the sovereigns of Europe, without whose exertions it would have remained for ever in exile, has not had the effect of obtaining a favorable hearing of the remonstrances presented by the different foreign ministers against continuing a system as disgraceful to the national character of France, and so abhorrent to the feeling of humanity. The ministers, insensible to the sufferings of the much injured natives of Africa, present a deaf ear to their reiterated complaints, throw aside as waste paper, the numerous memorials presented to them on the subject by the other sovereigns, and by pursuing a course so unworthy the character of a great nation, give a direct encouragement to the people to continue in a traffic which degrades them in the eyes of the whole world. But the day of retribution will come; the cup of iniquity must fill something: too late, we suspect for the authors of crimes that are perpetrated, but not for the cause of justice.—*N. Y. FRENCH PAPERS.

PARIS, JUNE 10.

Yesterday, at eight o'clock in the evening, the King received the deputation of Peers, charged with presenting the Address voted by the Chamber. It was read by the Chancellor, as follows:—

"Sire—Your faithful subjects the Peers of France come to lay at your feet the usual homage of respect and love. When the good of the state demands it, our eagerness to answer to the call of your Majesty cannot be regarded as a sacrifice. Provisional grants are, in act, incompatible with the free voting of taxes, and this irregularity, the constant object of our regret, can be justified only by the most imperious necessity. In freeing us from this constraint your Majesty gives to France a new proof of the firm determination you have always manifested to consolidate the institutions for which a grateful country is indebted to you.

"We receive with joy the hopes which your Majesty holds out to us of the maintenance of peace in the East. May success crown the efforts, which, in concert with his allies, the King makes to attain this important result; to put an end to the unheard of calamities which desolate those fine regions. And yet we see with pride the White flag, so long banished from those seas, again appear with a splendor which recals the most glorious days of the monarchy. The French commerce owes its security to it—and during this terrible crisis, the unfortunate of all nations finding on board of our vessels a safe refuge, invoke a blessing upon the magnanimous prince, who makes so noble a use of his power

"In keeping up, during the present season, the precautions which have hitherto preserved the French territory from the contagion from which the provinces of the north of Spain have so severely suffered, your Majesty performs the sacred duty imposed upon you of protecting the people committed to your care;—humanity applauds intentions so pure, and they can be misinterpreted only by that malevolence which is incessantly seeking for pretexts to rekindle the yet smoking brands of discord and of war.

"If insensate attempts have produced momentary disorder in some parts of the kingdom, France, indignant at the criminal authors of them, has every where seen the troops and the magistrates vying in zeal and fidelity—the approbation of your Majesty will be their most pleasing reward. Impressed with a sense of its duties, the army knows, that to oppose the factious is to fight in the cause of their country.—The boldness of the disturbers gained credit for their number; but as soon as they could be counted, the most timid felt no alarm at their chimerical enterprise. If real misfortune have distressed some of our departments, that beneficence, of which the example is always given by the Monarch and his august family, has hastened to alleviate them. The people may rest secure—crime will not escape the vengeance of the laws—justice is watchful, and will reach the guilty.

"Your Majesty announces to us that the state of the debt in arrear is at length fixed and will be laid before us. It is important to order and to credit that no uncertainty should exist with respect to these burdens, the sad inheritance of twenty-five years of revolutions. When once this shall be effected, nothing will restrain the growth of our financial prosperity. Then may the universal wish of your dejected people be accomplished, and all the fathers of families who support the public burdens advance with ease to seeing a reimbursement will finish the weight of them sensibly diminished. And was easy to calculate the extent of the prosperity which our happy country may then attain, when we consider how immense losses so many ills, already nearly repaired, and those great disasters, the lamentable traces of which disappear with a rapidity beyond all expectation! The French pay the tribute of their just gratitude to the author of so many benefits; they vow to him only the one wish that his work may be permanently sustained. And therefore all hearts have been filled with hope and joy by this truly Royal sentiment.—"The King will not allow evidence to vanish from his people the blessings which they enjoy."—The benedictions, Sire, of that people are the only recompence worthy of your labors May you long enjoy them, while you behold the precious offspring of our Kings growing up under the shelter of your Throne! Providence has not given him to us in vain; he will follow the glorious examples of his ancestors, but he will learn more particularly from your Majesty how in the most difficult circumstances a Monarch may acquire the affection of his people and the respect of strangers."

The King answered—

"I am deeply touched by the sentiments which the Chamber of Peers expresses towards me; I feel the warmest satisfaction at its eagerness in answering the call which I made upon it, and at the unanimous good understanding which has prevailed in its deliberations; it is by this co-operation that we shall succeed in stifling the efforts of malevolence which will be always ineffectual. It is with sincere pleasure that I announce to the Chamber that since the day of the opening of the Session I have received advices which announce to me that the peace will not be interrupted in the east: I see a lively satisfaction in informing you of this."

STATE OF THE BRITISH NATION.

(Concluded from our last)

COMMERCE.

Our author, in taking a view of the state of public affairs from the period of the late treaties to the conclusion of the year 1821, states, in alluding to the first division of his book, the condition in which the ministry found the nation at one period, and in which they left it another. We have disposed of all out the first part, relating to the Financial concerns of the nation, and in which he considers the reductions that had been made in the public expenditure, and the actual state of the sources of the national revenues and public wealth. Introductory to these, he states, that in the year 1792 the peace establishment was 17,000 men. This was the peace establishment as applicable to Great Britain. In Ireland, owing to the ferment prevailing there, the military force had been increased from 1792 to 1816 to the same number of men. In the Old Colonies, there were 17,000 troops in 1792, which, from various causes, it was found necessary to increase to 26,000. Thus making the total peace establishment for the year 1816, 59,000 men. By this arrangement, the supplies of the year 1816, when compared with the estimates of the previous year, for the three branches, the army, navy, and ordnance, were reduced nearly forty millions, and as respected the burthens of the country, eighteen millions of taxes were repealed within the same year. Under these circumstances, it was but justice to acknowledge that ministers had been prompt in making reductions in the public expenditure. Nor should it be forgotten, that they raised the whole supply of the year (twenty seven millions) without new taxes, and by an advantageous bargain with the Bank.

The writer then proceeds to show, that during the subsequent years of 1817, 1818, 1819 and 1820, ministers continued progressively, and with an anxious desire for the public good, to reduce the amount of the public expenditure. This part of the pamphlet consists chiefly of financial details of supply so far saved the necessity of publishing, as the author himself, for the sake of affording a simple and collective view of these reductions, has presented us with the following enumeration:—

"First, the total of the ordinary and extraordinary annual supply for 1815 (exclusive of the interest of the national debt and the charges on the Consolidated Fund) was twenty-four millions. The total of the ordinary and extraordinary supply for 1817 was twenty-two millions. The total of the same supply for the year 1818 was twenty millions one hundred thousand.—The total of the same supply for the year 1819 was twenty millions two hundred thousand.—The total of the same for 1820 was twenty millions seven hundred thousand. For 1821 the same was twenty millions.

"Second.—The total of the ordinary expenditure (for army, navy, ordnance, and miscellaneous) for 1816 was twenty-four millions eight hundred and eighty-seven thousand pounds.—The total for 1817 was twenty millions. The total for 1818 was a small excess above eighteen millions. The total for 1819 was nearly the same sum. The total for 1820 (including the estimated expense of the coronation) was a small excess above nineteen millions. The total for 1821 was eighteen millions. Being a reduction, in 1817, of five millions; in 1818, of two millions; in 1819, of the same, and a small addition having been made in 1820, under the two circumstances of the expected coronation and the interruption of public tranquillity by the practices of incendiary writers and workers; this charge was thrown off in the following year, 1821, and a return effected to the reduced standard of 1815 and 1819.

"Third, this reduction was carried through every head of the ordinary annual supply. The supply for the army in 1817, was, in round numbers, eleven millions. For 1818, the supply for the same service was nine millions four hundred thousand. For 1819 eight millions nine hundred thousand. For 1820 (under the new circumstances of an interruption in the public tranquillity by the causes which have been already stated) nine million four hundred thousand. For 1821 eight millions seven hundred and fifty thousand—a return again to the reduced estimates of 1818 and 1819

"Fourth.—The same reductions was made in the naval supply. For 1816 the naval supply was ten millions. For 1817 the navy (including some extraordinaries upon making up the account of the year) cost seven millions. For 1818 six millions and a half. For 1819 the naval supply was six millions four hundred thousand. For 1820 six millions five hundred thousand and a fraction. For 1821 six millions one hundred thousand and a fraction.

"Fifth.—The same successive reduction was effected in the Ordnance. For 1816, the ordnance service was sixteen hundred thousand.—For 1817 twelve hundred and seventy thousand.—For 1818 twelve hundred and forty thousand.—For 1819 eleven hundred and ninety thousand.—For 1820 twelve hundred thousand.—For 1821 eleven hundred and ninety thousand; being a return to the reduced estimates of the year 1819—the small addition in the preceding year being occasioned by the disturbed state of the country, by the same cause as the increase of the army, namely, the agitated condition of certain districts, and the employment of marines to perform garrison duty.

"Sixth.—In the miscellaneous, allowing for the less protection in which this head of service is effected by the difference of peace and war, a system of retrenchment is equally visible. For 1816 the miscellaneous was two millions and a half. For 1817 the same service was seventeen hundred thousand. For 1818 the same. For 1819 one million nine hundred thousand pounds. For 1820 (under the two new circumstances of the coronation and the continuance of the public peace) it was two millions four hundred thousand. In 1821 the supply was one million nine hundred thousand, being a return to the reduced estimate of the year 1819.

"Seventh —The same successive reduction was made in the number of men taken for the military and naval establishments through the several years In the course of 1815 and 1816 three hundred thousand men were discharged from the army and navy In 1816 the peace establishment for the home service, Ireland, and the Colonies, was fixed at ninety-nine thousand men In 1818 the army was reduced to ninety-one thousand In 1818 it was reduced to eighty-one thousand. In 1819 it was again reduced to seventy-eight thousand.

"Eighth.—And, during these reductions, more than sixteen millions of annual taxes were removed, and ten millions of the bank debt paid.

"Ninth.—And by these uniform efforts for reduction on the one part, and for the support of public credit on the other, the national currency was re-established, and cash payments finally restored in the present year."

Nor had (continues the writer) his Majesty's ministers stopped here, but since the close of the last sessions, they had still, with the same earnestness and sincerity, been occupied in such further reductions as the exigencies of the public service would admit; in a very few weeks after these observations should meet the public eye, a detailed statement would be made in Parliament, by which it would appear that a further reduction of upwards of two millions had been effected within the short time between the close of the last session and the commencement of the present. It was surely not too much to say, that this amount of reduction exceeded what could have been anticipated by the warmest friends of economy.

We are next led by our author to consider the sources of national revenue and public wealth, which he contends, are in their actual state, entire and unimpaired, and fully justified in confidence in his Majesty's ministers for the present, and a strong expectation for the future. The heads of these funds are Commerce, the Navigation, the Manufactures, the Internal Trade, and (so far as respects the interests of the revenue, and as affording proof that the general means of consuming are unimpaired) the National Consumption.

Slave Trade.—Notwithstanding all the boasted professions of the present government of France, in favor of the abolition of slavery, it has been for some time asserted in the English papers, that no other nation in Europe carried on that abominable traffic, the slave trade, to such an extent as the subjects of Louis the XVIII. We have heard this denied by the writers attached to the French Government, and were willing, in consequence, to think the statements of the London editors exaggerated.

Now, however, we are compelled to believe all they have said on the subject; for, by authentic accounts received at Philadelphia from Cuba, we learn that a French brig from Africa with one hundred and sixty slaves on board, had arrived at Havana on the 10th instant, having been brought there by Captain Read, of the sloop of war Hornet. The French slave trader had been captured on the 5th, by the Colombian cruiser, General Paez, and was afterwards taken possession of by Capt. Read. Heavy as the sins of Napoleon were, he was free of that enormous crime of trafficing in human flesh, which is now permitted with impunity by the reigning family of France. Even all that this family owes to the sovereigns of Europe, without whose exertions it would have remained for ever in exile, has not had the effect of obtaining a favorable hearing of the remonstrances presented by the different foreign ministers against continuing a system as disgraceful to the national character of France, and so abhorrent to the feeling of humanity. The ministers, insensible to the sufferings of the much injured natives of Africa, present a deaf ear to their reiterated complaints, throw aside as waste paper, the numerous memorials presented to them on the subject by the other sovereigns, and by pursuing a course so unworthy the character of a great nation, give a direct encouragement to the people to continue in a traffic which degrades them in the eyes of the whole world. But the day of retribution will come; the cup of iniquity must fill something: too late, we suspect for the authors of crimes that are perpetrated, but not for the cause of justice.—*N. Y. POSTSCRIPT,

From the New-York Spectator of August 6th, Just received.

By the arrival of the ship Cortes, Capt. De Gost, in 39 days from Liverpool, the editors of the Commercial Advertiser have received London and Liverpool papers—the former to the 23d of June, and the latter to the 26th. Also Lloyds List of the 21st.

LONDON, June 22.

Last night, in the House of Lords, Mr. Cannings Bill for the admission of Roman Catholic Peers into Parliament, was thrown out by a majority of Forty two. Lord Colchester, who, when Speaker of the House of Commons, distinguished himself by his opposition to the Catholic Claims, and who has recently returned from the Continent, spoke strongly against the measure, as did the Lord Chancellor, the Earl of Liverpool, and Lord Redesdale. The Bill was supported by the Duke of Portland, Lords Erskine, Grey and Holland.

The West Indies and American Trade, Bill and the Navigation Bill, were read a third time in the House of Lords, on the 20th, and passed The non importation Bill was read a first time the same day

The bill for consolidating the two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada was read a first time on the 20th of June, and ordered for a second reading the following day.

In the Commons on the 20th, Mr. Wilmot introduced a bill to regulate the trade between Upper and Lower Canada

It is repeated that a Congress of Sovereigns will be held for the present at Florence, but doubted whether either Turkish or Greek Representatives will be admitted.

Bible Society.—A General meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society was held on the 1st May, at the Freemason's Tavern. Lord Teignmouth took the chair. The Report stated, that the subscriptions last year amounted to £103,009 of which upwards of £95,000 had been disbursed. The Society had now upwards of three millions of Bibles in silent but active operation, in almost every quarter of the globe, and in almost every language. They had received contributions from the most remote quarters; and it was announced, that even at Labrador, some of the natives who had been informed of the object of the Society's agents, had subscribed some seals and blubber for the benefit of its funds. Amongst those present were—the Duke of Gloucester, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Lord Harrowby, Lord Calthorpe, the Earl of Gosford, Lord Gambier, the Grace the Bishop of Norwich, Mr. Wilberforce, and a number of other distinguished characters. The most confident hopes are expressed, that, through the medium of this Institution, the Bible would, at no distant period, be circulated at Rome, and Bible Societies be established at Constantinople, China, and Tartary.

The Statue of Memnon.—The Russian ambassador at the court of Rome has received a letter from Sir A Smith, an English traveller, who is at present at the Egyptian Thebes. He states, that he has himself examined the celebrated statue of Memnon, accompanied by a numerous escort. At six o'clock in the morning he heard very distinctly the sound so much spoken of in former times, and which had generally been treated as fabulous. "One may," he says, "assign to this phenomenon a thousand different causes, before it can be supposed to be simply the result of a certain arrangement of the stones." The statue of Memnon was overturned by an earthquake, and it is from the pedestal that the mysterious sound is emitted, of which the cause has never been ascertained, and which was denied merely because it was inexplicable.

"WALKING STEWART."

Died in London, April 1822, Mr. Stewart, generally known as the "Walking Stewart." This most extraordinary man was born in Bond-street, and educated at the Charter-house, to the year 1763, he was sent out a writer to Madras, and was employed as secretary to the Nabob of Arcot, and expended a large sum in giving official entertainments by order of his master. Within two years after his arrival in India, at the age of eighteen, he determined on leaving his situation in the company's service, assigning as a reason, that he was resolved to travel, the inner riches, being irresistible—that he would see, if he could, the whole world—that he would unlearn all he had learned—that he would become an Automathes, think and act for himself In pursuance of this resolution, he addressed a letter to the Court of Directors, which, from its juvenile impudence and audacity, is preserved on their record to this day; in which he tells them he was born for nobler pursuits, and higher attainments, than to be a copier of invoices and bills of lading to a company of grocers, haberdashers, and ironmongers. Within a few weeks after writing this epistle, he took his leave of the presidency, and began his pedestrian life—Some of his friends lamenting his abrupt departure, and thinking he might be involved in pecuniary difficulties, followed him, begging him to return, and offering him assistance. He replied to their invitation, that he thanked them, that his resolution was taken that his finances were small, but adequate to his wants. He prosecuted his route over Hindostan, and walked to Delhi, to Persepolis and other parts of Persia He visited Abyssinia and Ethiopia. He entered the Carnatic, and became known to the then Nabob, who conceived an esteem for him, which eventually in his latter days became the means of his support, for the Nabob appointed him his private secretary. A few years ago the House of Commons, in order to spare Mr Stewart's feeling, granted him 15,000£ to liquidate his demands on the Nabob. Quitting the Carnatic, he adopted the quad resolution of walking to Scrinagapatam, which he effected; when there, Tippoo, hearing that a European had entered his city, ordered him to be immediately arrested and directed him to appear before him at his Durbar. He questioned him as to his motive for coming to his kingdom—he answered, solely a desire to see it. Tippoo told him he must consider himself as his subject, and as such, a military one, and he must be enrolled in his army; and that as he appeared a gentleman, he would make him, after some tactical instruction, a Captain of Sepoys He became one, and was engaged in several affairs against the Mahrattas, and was wounded in the right arm He continued a detenu of Tippoo's several years, until the late Sir James Sibbald, bart. then at Bombay, was appointed by that Pro tidiency to settle the terms of peace with Tippoo Stewart availed himself of the opportunity of requesting Sir James to use his interest with his Highness to procure his release. This, with some difficulty, Sir James Sibbald effected; and Stewart set forward to walk to Europe. He crossed the Desart of Arabia and arrived at Mancilier He walked through the whole kingdom of France, through Spain, came to England—left England for America, through every state of which he walked, as he did through Ireland and Scotland. On his return from Ireland he was nearly shipwrecked; and at the moment of being so, he begged of some of the crew, if they survived, to take care of the book he had written, and intended to publish, entitled "Omnium Maximum." a favorite work of his. His mental powers were of a character unique in the extreme, and perhaps without any approximation of any similitude in the thoughts of any human being. He was the Atomical Philosopher; his de-

He passed his last ten years in the neighborhood of Charing Cross and Cockspur street; to be, as he said, in the "full tide of human existence." He must have been seen by those lands sitting in St. James's Park, drinking warm milk.

THE HEAD STONE.

The coffin was let down to the bottom of the grave, the planks were removed from the heaped up brink, the first rattling clods had struck their knell, the quick shovelling was over, and the long, broad, skilfully cut pieces of turf were apt by joined together, and trimly laid by the beating spade, so that the newest mound in the church yard was scarcely distinguishable from those that were grown over by the undisturbed grass and daisies of a luxuriant spring. The burial was soon over—and the party, with one consenting motion, having uncovered their heads in decent reverence of the place and occasion, were beginning to separate, and about to leave the church yard.—Here some acquaintance, from distant parts of the parish, who had not had an opportunity of addressing each other in the house that had belonged to the deceased, nor in the course of the few hundred yards that the little procession had to move from his bed to his grave, were shaking hands quietly but cheerfully, and enquiring of for the welfare of each other's families. There a small knot of neighbors were speaking without exaggeration, of the respectable character which the deceased had borne, and mentioning to one another little accidents of his life, some of them so remote as to be known only to the grey-headed persons of the groupe. While a few yards farther removed from the spot, were standing together parties who disposed ordinary concerns, altogether unconnected with the funeral, such as the state of the markets, the promise of the season, or chance of tenants; but still with a sobriety of manner and voice that was insensibly produced by the simple ceremony now closed, by the quiet graves around, and the shadow of the spire and grey walls of the house of God

Two men yet stood together at the head of the grave, with countenances of sincere, but unimpassioned grief. They were Brothers, the only sons of him who had been buried; and there was something in their situation that naturally kept the eyes of many directed upon them, for a longer time, and more intently than would have been the case, had there been nothing more observable about them than the common sympathy of a common sorrow. But these two Brothers, who were now standing at the head of their father's grave, had for some years been totally estranged from each other, and the only words that had passed between them during all that time, had been uttered within a few days past, during the necessary preparations for the old man's funeral.

No deep and deadly quarrel was between these Brothers, and neither of them could distinctly tell the cause of this unnatural estrangement. Perhaps dim jealousies of their father's favor—selfish thoughts that will sometimes force themselves into poor men's hearts, respecting temporal expectations—uncommodating manners on both sides—taunting words that mean little when uttered, but which rank and fester in remembrance—imagined opposition of interests, that, duly considered, would have been found one and the same—these, and many other causes, slight when single, but strong when rising up together in one baleful band, had gradually but fatally infected their hearts, till at last they who in youth had been seldom separate, and truly attached, now met at market, and miserable to say, at church, with dark and averted faces, like different clansmen during a feud

Surely if any thing could have softened their hearts towards each other, it must have been to stand silently side by side, while the earth stones and clods, were falling down upon their father's coffin. And doubtless their hearts were so softened But pride, though it cannot prevent the holy affections of nature from being felt, may prevent them from being shown; and these two brothers stood there together, determined not to let each other know the mutual tenderness that, in spite of them was gushing up in their hearts, and teaching them the unconcealed folly and wickedness of their senseless quarrel

A head stone had been prepared, and a person came forward to plant it. The elder brother directed him how to place it—a plain stone, with a sand glass, skull, and cross bones, chiselled not rudely, and a few words inscribed The younger he the regarded the operation with a troubled eye, and said, loud enough to be heard by several of the bystanders, "William, this was not kind in you —you should have told me of this I loved my father as well as you could love him You were the elder, and it may be, the favorite son; but I had a right in nature to have joined you in ordering this head-stone, had I not?

During these words, the stone was sinking in the earth, and many persons who were on their way from the grave returned For a while the elder brother said nothing, for he had a consciousness in his heart that he ought to have consulted his father's son in designing this last becoming mark of affection and respect to his memory; so the stone was planted in silence, and now stood erect, decently and simply among the other unostentatious memorials of the humble dead

The inscription merely gave the name and age of the deceased, and told that the stone had been erected by his affectionate sons." The sight of these words seemed to soften the displeasure of the angry man, and he said, somewhat stone mildly, "Yes, we were his affectionate sons, and since my name is on the stone, I am satisfied Brother. We have not drawn together kindly of late years, and perhaps never may; but I acknowledge and respect your worth; and here, before our own friends, and before the friends of our father, with my foot above his head I express my willingness to be on better and other terms with you. and if we cannot command love in our hearts, let us, at least, brother, bar out all unkindness"

The minister who had attended the funeral, and had someted upon the relenting man, and then changing his countenance into serenity, said gently,

Behold how good a thing it is,
And how becoming well,
Together such as brethren are
In unity to dwell.

The time, the place, and this beautiful expression of a natural sentiment, quite overcome a heart, in which many kind, if not warm, affections dwelt; and the man thus appealed to bowed down his head and wept. "Give me your hand. Brother, and it was given, while a murmur of satisfaction arose from all present, and all hearts felt kindlier and more humanely towards each other.

As the brothers stood fervently, but composedly grasping each other's hands, in the little hollow that lay between the grave of their mother, long since dead, and of their father, whose shroud was haply not yet still from the fall of dust to for the last time, you were both absent, nor was it your fault that you were not beside the old man when he died. As long as sense continued with him here, did he not think of you two, and of you two alone Tears were in his eyes, I saw them there, and on his cheeks too, when no breath came them there, and on his cheeks too, when no breath came from his lips. But of this no more. He died with this paper in his hand and he made me know that I was to read it to you over his grave —I now obey him.

"My sons, if you will let my bones lie quiet in the grave, near the dust of your mother, depart not from my burial till, in the name of God and Christ, you promise to love one another as you used to do Dear boys, receive my blessing."

Some turned their head away to hide the tears that need ed not to be hidden,—and when the brothers had released each other from a long and sobbing embrace, many went up to them, and in a single word or two, expressed their joy at this perfect reconciliation. The bro hers themselves walked away from the church yard, arm in arm, with the ministers to the manse On the following Sabbath, they were seen sitting with their families in the same pew, and it was observed, that they read together off the same Bible when the minister gave out the text, and that they sung together, taking hold of the same psalm book The same psalm was sung (given out at their own request) of which one verse had been repeated at their father's grave; a larger sum than usual was on that Sabbath found on the plate for the poor, for Love and Charity are sisters. And ever after, both during the peace and the troubles of this life, the hearts of the brothers were as one, and in nothing were they divided

POETRY.

The poem which we are about to transcribe, is on a subject often treated; and no wonder;—it would be hard to find another, which embraces so many of the elements of poetical feeling; soothing a mixture of pleasant melancholy and yet a hope; such an assemblage of the ideas of tender beauty, of artless playfulness, of spotless purity, of transient yet imperishable brightness, of affections wounded, but not in bitterness, of sorrows gently subdued, of eternal happiness. We know so little of the heart of man, that when we stand by the grave of him whom we deem most excellent, the thought of death will be mingled with some awe and uncertainty; but the gracious promise of scripture leaves us no doubt as to the blessedness of departed infants; and when we think what they now are and what they might have been; what they now enjoy, and what they might have suffered; what they have now gained, and what they might have lost; we may, indeed, learn to follow them; but we must be selfish indeed, to wish them again constrained to dwell in these tenements of pain and sorrow The Dirge of a Child, which follows, embodies these thoughts and feelings, but in a more beautiful order and language.—Lond. Quar. Review.

No bitter tears for thee he shed,
Blossom of being! seen and gone!
With flowers alone we strew thy bed,
O blest departed one!
Whose all of life a rosy ray,
Blushed into dawn and passed away.

Yes, thou art gone ere guilt had power
To stain thy cherub soul and form!
Closed is the soft ephemeral flower
That never felt a storm!
The sun beam's smile, the zephyr's breath,
All that it knew from birth to death.

Thou wast so like a form of light,
That heaven beni, ely called thee hence
Ere the world could breathe or blight
O'er thy swget innocence;
And thou tist brighter home to bless
Art possessed with all thy loveliness.

O hadst thou still on earth remained,
Vision of beauty, fair as brief,
How soon thy brightness had been stain'd
With passion, or with grief!
Now not a sullying breath can rise
To dim thy glory in the skies.

We rear no marble o'er thy tomb,
No sculptur'd image there shall mourn,
Ah! fitter for the vernal bloom
Such dwellings to adorn;
Fragrance and flowers and dews must be
The only emblems meet for thee.

Thy grave shall be a blessed shrine
Adorned with nature's brightest w eath,
Each glowing season shall combine
Its incense there to breathe;
And oft upon the midnight air
Shall viewless harps be murmuring there.

And oh! sometimes in visions blest,
Sweet spirit visit our repose,
And hear from thine own world of rest,
Some faint n for human woes;
What forms more lovely could be given
Than thine, to messenger of heaven

TO DELIA.

Fair the face of orient day,
Fair the tints of opening rose;
But fairer still my Delia dawns,
More lovely far her beauty shows

Sweet the lark's wild warbled lay,
Sweet the tinkling rill to hear;
But Delia, more delightful still,
Steal thine accents on mine ear.

The flower enamour'd busy bee,
The rosy banquet loves to sip;
Sweet the streamlet's limpid lapse,
To the sun brown'd Arab's lip.

But Delia, on thy balmy lips,
Let me, no vagrant insect, rove;
O let me steal one liquid kiss,
For oh! my soul is parch'd with love.

GREAT BRITAIN.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—JUNE 17.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL moved the second reading of the ancient Commercial System—Repeal Bill, the Importation of Goods Bond Bill, and the Navigation Amendment Bill. His Lordship observed, that the three bills formed a system which he thought would be highly beneficial to our commerce and navigation. The first bill repealed no less than three hundred Acts of Parliament, not by any sweeping clause, but separately and seriatim—a measure which of itself would prove highly beneficial, it being a fact, that there were persons who actually obtained a living by informing merchants what they could do—that they could not do, the acts, as they at present stood, operating as a bar to almost all the operations of commerce. With regard to the Navigation Act, dated 12 Charles II. it had invariably since that period been the policy of the country to adhere to it; and when it was considered that the Navigation Laws formed a nursery for seamen for the service of the country in time of war, it must be obvious that to adhere to those laws, if for no possible cause, was the best policy upon which the British Government could act. This policy must however, of course, be subject to times and circumstances, and it was upon the principle of it, modified by changes which had taken place that the system proposed to be carried into effect by those bills was established. Under the navigation laws the farmers stood the steadiest and most effective friends to the shipping and manufactures of the country. Ships were brought forward, and had been passed by the House of Commons.

The three bills above mentioned were read a second time, and committed for to-morrow.

The Earl of CARNARVON moved the second reading of the Colonial Trade Bill, and the American and West India Trade Bill. His Lordship observed, that the latter clause had been the cause of the second not having been read before, and he understood the United States of America on British ships, the same footing as British ships were to be regarded in the ports of the United States, as well as in British ships, and to allow similar trade between our West India Island and other States on the Continent of America. To protect our North American Colonies, it had been deemed expedient to impose a duty on the articles imported into the West Indies from the United States—not a prohibitory one, but merely to place the trade on an equal footing with that from our North American Colonies.

The two Bills moved by the Earl Bathurst, were read a second time and committed for to-morrow.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, JUNE 10.

Corn Importation Bill.

The Marquis of LONDONDERRY, on the report being brought up thought it would be desirable to defer further discussion on it till the third reading. He said there was a strong opinion against the clause introduced by the member for Liverpool, and he should oppose that clause and proceed with the Bill. The clause might be brought forward in the shape of a separate bill

Mr CANNING said he would take the sense of the House on the clause. The session was too far advanced to admit of any compromise; and his constituents were willing to acquiesce to any regulations or precautions that might be devised

Several members here expressed their disapprobation of the clause.

Mr. CURWEN said it could not protect the agriculturist for whose protection it was intended; and it afforded no security against any quantity of corn finding its way into the home market

Mr. BRIGHT supported the clause as due in equity to the commercial interest. The Custom-house regulations were sufficient to prevent the illicit importation of foreign flour.

INDEX AT END

Gen. Gascoyne said the commercial interest asked for no boon, or for any thing they were not entitled to in equity, he supported the clause

Sir J. Sebright, Sir E. Knatchbull, Sir T Lethbridge and others opposed it.

Mr. Ricardo supported it.

Mr. Canning replied. He would not have brought it forward had he conceived it militated against the agriculturists. He conceived that his clause went to remove an evil which Parliament were called upon in justice and equity to remedy. Still, however, much as he thought the clause necessary, he would not press it if he believed it could defeat the main objects of the bill; and whether this clause was agreed to or not, he should still vote for the bill. But he begged of the house to consider the situation in which importers of foreign corn were placed. He contended, that they ought not to refuse the commercial interests the clauses. While it would not injure the agriculturists; it would be more fair to prohibit the importation of foreign corn altogether, than from time to time, by legislative enactments to deprive the importer of his advantage, whenever God's providence should render the corn so imported unnecessary to our national wants If this principle was that upon which the country gentlemen meant to act, let them avow it plainly; but if they did not mean to go thus far, then he would be unwise, unjust and unfair, to turn that importation which was at first calculated for the national advantage, to the ruin of the importers.

The Marquis of Londonderry allowed that those who had quantities of foreign corn warehoused were entitled to some boon He thought this bill gave them some advantages by enabling them to bring the corn into market at 70s These importers had still the resource of sending their corn across the channel, where at a small expense it might be ground and sent to the West Indies. On account also of the anxiety excited by the clause, he should now contrary to his former opinion oppose it.

The House now divided, when there appeared, For the clause, 21—Against 116.

Mr. Hume regretted that the Noble Lord had changed sides so often, backward and forwards throughout the discussion of this question. A few nights ago only, he [Mr. Hume] was in a large majority with the Noble Lord, in favour of the grinding clause. To night he found himself in a small minority, on the same clause, because the Noble Lord had withdrawn his support of it—a clear proof, this, that the House would vote the very way that the minister voted.

The Bill was eventually ordered to be read a third time on Wednesday.

On the 19th, Mr Robinson called for the third reading of the corn importation bill. It was opposed by Messrs. Curwen and Western, who considered the reduction of the import duty from 80s. to 70s. as a great handship and very injurious to the agriculturist. Mr. C. moved that the bill be read a third time that day three months, which was lost, and the original motion prevailed, without a division. The above bill was brought up and read a first time in the House of Lords on the 20th, and ordered to be read a second time on Tuesday the 27th.

The first reading of the bill for consolidating the two provinces of Upper and Lower Canada was called for in the House on the 20th, which after some conversation, was granted, and it was order'd to be read a second time the next day.

The West India and American trade bill, Colonial trade bill, and the navigation bill, were all read a third time in the House of Lords on the 20th and passed. The editor of the Courier, in noticing the passage of the two former bills, observes—"These acts will produce an important reserves upon what has hitherto been the commercial policy of the country; and we only hope they may fully answer the expectations of their supporters. Their operation will, no doubt, be vigilantly watched by those whose interests will be more immediately affected; and should the property less be official than is anticipated, we trust no false notions of consistency, nor any attachment to theory, will prevent such immediate modifications as may be expedient."

The Catholic Peers bill was taken up, in the House of Lords on the 21st for a second reading, and after a long and animated debate, the bill was thrown out by a majority of 42.

ENGLAND

LONDON, JUNE 21

In the afternoon of yesterday, the following resolution of the Directors of the Bank of England, was announced at the Royal Exchange.

"Bank of England, 20th June, 1822.

"Resolved—That all bills and notes approved in the usual manner, and not having more than 95 days to run, be discounted at the rate of four per cent. per annum, on and after the 21st of June, 1822."

Of this determination, there was not the most distant anticipation, and it had been so effectually withheld, until the moment when it was thus publicly announced, that no individual advantage could be taken of the impulse which such a measure must inevitably give to landed property.

Consols for account rose one per cent. in the short time that elapsed before the market closed. To day they fully kept their ground, notwithstanding the operations of the Israelites, who have been extremely active in selling out. Up to 1 o'clock their operations had no effect, but the intelligence of a fall in the French funds of one per cent, then occasioned a reduction in Consols of 1-4 per cent To this succeeded a sudden panic in foreign securities. Spanish Bonds in particular, felt their quarters—in the first bargain, after the rumour of this intelligence As to Russia Bonds, they were merely nominal. No one dares to hazard a bidding, knowing that it would be instantly caught. Thus the public have a taste of what may be expected from Foreign securities—evidently fragile as glass. The sooner the species of bubble is brought to a crisis, the better for the public. Want of time and space constrains us to defer until to-morrow, the communication of some further particulars on the subject of those same Foreign securities.

At a private meeting of the principal bankers held this day, we understand that it has been agreed to follow the example of the bank of England in discounting at 4 per cent.

We understand that the Resolution of the Bank of England to discount at 4 per cent. was carried by a majority of only one voice. On a former discussion when it came to the vote, it was lost by a majority of only one. The previous discussion was long and vehement and the question was not finally determined till past two o'clock. The notice first appeared in the discount office, where it was stuck up at half past two o'clock.

THE FUNDS

Stock Exchange, 12 o'clock.

The Bank discounting at 4 per cent has caused a great deal of business in the market. This morning's opening operation at 81 5-8 and up to the hour remain steady at the above price. Reduced 80 4 3-8.

The public in general praise the Bank for their impartial conduct of yesterday; not even a message was sent to the Stock Exchange on the business, therefore no advantage could be taken in the market. The moment the rise in the funds took place, the Jew party sold largely, to get out of their Bull account. The Bank discounting at 4 per cent. will be the cause of great improvement in the Foreign Securities, as the public can obtain discounts at 3 1-2 a 4 per cent, and immediately invest the money in the Foreign Funds, which produce from 6 to 8 per cent.

One O'clock.

Within the last hour the Jews have been selling out without the least effect upon the market. Consols are 81½ for the account, and Reduced 80¾.

Prices of Stocks at one o'clock.—3 per cent Reduced 80¾ ⅞; 3 per Cent Cons-ls, shut; 3½ per Cent. 97¼; 4 per cents; 97½ ⅝; 4 per Cent. new, 98½; Bank Long Anns 20⅞ ⅛; Exchequer bills of 1000l 3s. prem. par 2s prem; ditto small, 4l, 1s. 6d prem; Consols for Acct. 81½ ⅝.

French Funds, June 19.—5 per Cents opened at 90f 85c; closed at 91.—Bank Stock, 162f 50c.

Cribb's Farewell to the King—On Saturday the Champion of England made his last bow to the Amateurs at the Fives' Court. Tom had to box for a Corinthian attendance, and St. Martin's street was filled with carriages. The sets to, generally, were good.

The Champion of England and Spring ascended the stage amidst loud approbation. Crib was decorated with the belt, in the front of which are a couple of silver fists, and on each side of which are two large circles of silver plate with an inscription engraved on them. "The belt is about four inches wide, and made of fawn skin. It was an excellent combat; and although Tom had a touch of the gout, he displayed great activity. But the swell mob had now arrived or poor Tom to say FAREWELL! He scratched its nob—looked about him, his heart full of gratitude, at a loss what to say—and his chaps almost forsook his office. Tom at length managed to hold forth in these words:—"Gentlemen, I return you thanks for your kindness this day. (A short pause and confusion.) Indeed gentlemen, I sincerely thank you for all the favors you have conferred on me." (A long pause, as if Tom could not get out his word.) Gentlemen, may your purses never fail you." Crib now retired, amidst loud and long plaudits

Spring now mounted the stage, and thus addressed the spectators:—"Gentlemen, I once more present myself to your notice; but as my old dad has retired from the stage, and the prize ring altogether, and as I have stood next to him for some time past, I mean to stand in his place, till I am beat out of it!"

Aid in case of Shipwreck.—Several experiments have recently been made before the Trinity board, and a board of General Officers at Woolwich, of a new plan for affording speedy and effectual aid in case of shipwreck. It differs from Capt. Manby's plan, in as much as the line of communication can be made by means of rocket instead of a mortar—a rocket is also added, and so remarkably constructed, as to render coasts dreadly facility and safety in reaching the shore. The advantage that must be derived in the night time, from the rocket, is obvious, as it is so constructed that it will burn in the water. The precision by which the line of communication is formed, is also wonderful; by aiming at, and the safety of the end properly conveyed upon having the apparatus ready and on board, in case of accident, is paramountly encouraging. The two boats we spoke in reference to, have the new plan, and have made their report accordingly.

SCOTLAND.

James Stuart, Esq. was tried before the High Court of Justiciary, Edinburgh, on the 10th June Among the counsel for the accused appeared F. Jeffrey, H. Cockburn, J. Monchief, and T. Maitland, Esquires. Mr Stuart was attended by the Earl of Moray, Admiral Fleming, Capt. Gordon, R. N. and several other distinguished persons.—The indictment charged Mr Stuart with the crime of murder, by discharging a pistol at Sir Alexander Boswell, whereby he was mortally wounded. Mr S. pleaded not guilty. Mr. Cockburn opened the pleadings on behalf of the defendant, after which the witnesses were examined. The Lord Advocate stated it to be their duty to bring this case to trial; that duelling was in no way sanctioned by law; but a deadly wound committed in a duel, however fair the duel might have been, constituted the crime of murder. He left the verdict to the Jury. Mr Jeffrey made a long argumentative speech. The Lord Chief Justice Clerk then addressed the Jury, and remarked there had not been even an attempt to establish the charge of malice; that Mr Stuart had made two offers of conciliation to Sir A. Boswell, before the duel; then the jury would keep in mind Mr. Stuart's conduct on the field, the contribution he had expressed for the fatal blow, &c. &c. The jury, after consulting for a few minutes, delivered an unanimous verdict not guilty, which was received with loud cheers from without the doors, and approbation within. The trial lasted 18 hours, the court was crowded to excess, all the avenues filled, and thousands remained outside.

The Edinburgh Reviewers refer the cause of the present Agricultural distress, and to the weight of taxation, for it is impossible that corn can ever produce low prices, but to the cessation of the same demand as existed during the last war, to produce of the soil, and which during the period alluded to, brought into cultivation extensive tracts of poor land at the expense of great capital, that ever ordinary demand, by the reduction of the army and establishments, and other causes, has now ceased, and two or three luxuriant harvests have produced crops far above the consumption, of the country, and thus totally glutted the market. The distress cannot be relieved unless by industrious habits are no longer cultivated, and only as much raised as will supply the wants of the country, since the price of Agricultural Produce in England is double and triple that among the surrounding nations, and any attempt to lower it, in other words a partial destruction of Agricultural Capital must take place, and in connexion with it, a reduction of rent.

Highland Fidelity.—The generous self devotion of Roderick Mackenzie has been often recited.—This young man, who had sought concealment among the mountains of Ross-shire, after the battle of Culloden, was surprised by a party of soldiers, on a sea plan for affording speedy and effectual aid in case of shipwreck. It differs from Capt. Manby's plan, in as much as the line of communication can be made by means of rocket instead of a mortar—a rocket is also added, and so remarkably constructed, as to render coasts dreadly facility and safety in reaching the shore. The advantage that must be derived in the night time, from the rocket, is obvious, as it is so constructed that it will burn in the water. The precision by which the line of communication is formed, is also wonderful; by aiming at, and the safety of the end properly conveyed upon having the apparatus ready and on board, in case of accident, is paramountly encouraging. The two boats we spoke in reference to, have the new plan, and have made their report accordingly.

IRELAND.

DREADFUL SITUATION OF IRELAND.

The distresses in Ireland seem rather to increase than otherwise The papers are filled with accounts of suffering of the most melancholy and afflicting character The sums subscribed in England for their relief, exceeds 90,000 pounds sterling.

The London papers of the 22d June contain the Report of the Committee of London Tavern; and a supplement to the Liverpool Mercury of the 21st June, a variety of extracts of letters, addressed to the committee at that place, depicting in the most glowing colors, the unparalleled sufferings of the Irish people, and calling loudly for the aid of charity to save the lives of thousands, who are daily perishing from the want of the necessaries of life. We have no room for the London committee report; but the extracts which we have given below from the letters received by them, appear likely, we should think to judge of the extent of this great evil at the time the last accounts were received from Ireland. Great, how ever as these distresses were, fearful apprehensions were entertained that they would be still greater The months of July and August were expected by the London committee to "resound with appallin, cries from the dying peasantry."

From his Grace the Archbishop of Tuam—On my way to Castlebar, I passed a multitude of half starved men, women, and children, at Ballygibbon and Balearta, seeking a share of nonsuffical weeds, which could only keep them alive, and no more.

I have not to the committee a full statement of the hideous scene I have witnessed. If thousands are not sent to Mayo and Galway, whole populations must die.

From Clifden.—To his Grace the Archbishop of Tuam—Our poor creature who was on dooyed by me last week to amuse but not to satisfie himself, at the repairing of roads—was at work on Saturday evening, fasted, I am afraid yesterday, (Sunday) got up this morning (Monday) not from bed (for he had none) but from the ground, on which he slept without bed clothes in his daily rags. He said he felt languid and heavy, he was in fact getting worse, he lay down again on the ground and died!!! Four died in Bofin, and swelled bodies, pale looks, sunken cheeks, and hollow eyes, are the harbingers of death, the work of death will soon be very rapid in this country. As to the public works and general employment of the poor of this country, I fear it is almost too late, a few days more will incapacitate them from any thing. I dined I dismissed this evening 30 men whom I had employed in the repair of roads; I never witnessed such distress as my communication of not being able to give them a another day's work occasioned; they said—day or two more without employment, that it without food. would put an end to their labors.

A letter from the Curate of Skull near Skibbereen, says, "By a census lately taken, it appears that the population consists of 13 000 persons. Of these, I feel not the slightest hesitation in saying, that a third part are actually in a state of starvation.

"For the last month, multitudes in my own immediate neighborhood have been living on shell fish sea weed, and cow's milk, the consequence of which is, what must have been universally expected, that fever and dysentery have made their appearance; of the latter, an awfully deplorable case have come within my own observation within the last week; and of the malignity of the former, some idea may be formed, when I assure you that on one farm thirteen persons died out of it within the last six weeks."

A letter from the Catholic priest of Athenry, Kilmallock, says, "The pangs of hunger are now generally felt—deep, caused by fatigue, at times the moment the sighs and tears of men, women and children, only to be renewed in the anguish and more violent and while I am writing this afflicted countenance, probably some unfortunate victim is breathing his last. This, Gentlemen, is not fancy, nor imagination, the picture is reality, has been often realized to my view. Death hereafter the kingly terrors to lose become more familiar. Pity exclaimed may be treated as many a one treasure and in many instances as a welcome visitor. Orphan sources are deserted, and paupers are given. We have been elected by the sons of your liberality, and have succeeded in this land of misery, [illegible] Mansion House Committee of London, Dublin, Manchester, &c. for hope, that you will not merely cease to extend to us relief as you may consider our present extended demands, and the prayers of your distressed brethren in Ireland will be incessantly offered to the throne of God, to obtain for you blessings, both temporal and eternal.

A letter from George Cheldening, Esq. of Westport, says, "The famine becomes hourly more appalling; thousands and tens of thousands without the means of purchasing, and every day additional numbers become exhausted of their remaining stock of provisions The noble generosity of England adds to her laurels. on this melancholy calamity befalling her sister island.—Words cannot express the feelings of gratitude our only means of return. We have 2000 families under our care, to save from perishing; as many more in a lesser degree of suffering."

A letter from Mr Cliff, on behalf of the parish of Rossa Galway, says, "The district for which I now solicit your kind consideration is wild and mountainous. quite unimproved, and never sufficiently cultivated, any year, to produce provision to support its inhabitants, whose number amounted, by the late census, to above 7000 I am not able. I have not language to describe the deplorable state to which this wretched people are reduced; many of them are subsisting solely on a weed gathered on the seashore and carried many miles on their backs, perhaps so far as twenty or twenty-five miles This but barely supports existence; but for that what will not man do; what labor will not a parent undergo to still the piercing cries of his famishing children looking to him and calling on him to preserve that existence he was the cause of giving."

A letter from Mr. Read, of Ballyglass says, "The appalling scenes, occasioned by starvation, are so truly deplorable, and increasing momentarily, to such an awful pitch that annihilation must ensue, unless we can get immediate assistance I have the honour to address your humane committee, praying that you will send relief to the lower part of the half parish of Ballinrobbe, which takes in thirty-one villages, containing two thousand souls in a state of frenzy, bordering on the actual verge of starvation to death."

A letter from Mr. O'Donell, near Newport Pratt, says, "The cry of starvation is almost every direction of the parish of Ballacray, in the different villages bending thereto, is heart rending to the feeling, and makes it an imperative duty on me to seek for them your benevolent aid, and also for the parish of Kilmore, where they are literally, in some places, trying so support nature by converting the wild herb and a kind of sea weed into food, which is creating a general disease that is carrying them off fast"

From Bantry—The pride of the people adds not a little to the calamity one woman, with three children, died of actual starvation; they were nearly a week without sustenance, and the woman ashamed to make her case known, and before assistance could be administered they were all found lifeless together.

A letter from the Rev C Seymour, Rector of Clifton, says, "The great extent of this barony (Ballynahinch) obliged us to divide it into six districts; and every benefaction we have received we have divided into as many portions, the population of each district amounting to upwards of 8000 souls, almost all of whom are without food and without any means of procuring it, except through the channel of charity, because we have no circulating medium in this part of the United Kingdom and no employment for the poor. Very many are suffering the pangs of hunger and the pains of sickness without a murmur; and several have died of famine without complaining a complaint. It is astonishing to see the passive fortitude of men, women, and children; it is wonderful that their sufferings have not produced a single act of outrage in this afflicted country. The contributions we have received are great, liberal, and kind; but they will not effectually relieve the inhabitants; they will not save them from pestilence and the grave Only think of one 20,000 souls, in a mountain one country, extending to a length of thirty English miles, and at least twenty broad, in the whole of which there is not one cart of home grown provisions to be had, nor one hundred pounds among all its inhabitants, to purchase food."

Foreign Intelligence.

The French King received the address on the Chamber of Deputies, June 11. In his answer, adverting to the Turkish question, he said, 'Peace, general peace, is the object of the wishes of Henry 4th; it will perhaps not be permitted to behold it. But I will neglect nothing to announce to the chamber, that the accounts which I have received are very favorable to the maintenance of peace in the East, and give us reason to expect the entire re-establishment of peace there.

The French Minister of Finance brought forward his estimates to the Chamber of Deputies for the ensuing year—the sum to be expended amounting to 1,045,503,000 francs; the Revenue to 969,460,000, giving a surplus of 8,965,280 fr.

INDEX AT END

The latest papers contain many confused accounts of the unsettled state of Spain. The Royalists are said to be in arms, and to great force in many parts of the Kingdom. In the mean time intelligence from both France and Spain leaves no doubt of the fact of strong military movements on both sides of the Pyrenees. Those who believe a regiment of troops cannot shoulder their muskets without a belligerent intention, are getting up a war between the two nations. We know not what may take place; but if the holy Alliance prevented the Czar from marching upon the Dissenters, they will not allow the French and Spanish Bourbons to come to loggerheads. The Liberals, however, make out a plausible story that the Ultra Royalists of France are preparing to assist the insurgent royalists in Spain. From what we can collect, however, the internal affairs of Spain are much worse than we have supposed them to be for the last six months.

A London paper of June 23 states that Madrid papers to the 13th had arrived. On the 4th the Cortes were informed by the Minister of State of Valencia, and Catalonia, and the remonstrances made by the French government on the subject of Spanish emigrants to France plotting against the peace of the country, were communicated. A favorable answer appears to have been returned to the French government.

From the Paris papers it appears that the French government has at length issued orders for the Spanish refugees to quit the frontier towns, and proceed into the interior towns.

The Emperor Alexander is stated to have left St. Petersburgh on the 23d of May, accompanied by three generals, to inspect the new fortifications at Dunneberg, whence he was to proceed to Wilna to review the troops at that place. This at all events, does not bear a pacific aspect.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

Match for Five Hundred Guineas.—The great trotting match between Mr. Barnard's mare, of the Arabian breed and Captain Colston's brown horse, took place yesterday morning over a two mile circle, in the Grove Park, at Rutherford, near Gerrard's Cross, for the above stake. It was, to trot nine miles against each other, and to start at different ends of the two miles. The persons present were dismounted to give fair play to the horses, and not to cause a bustle, to induce them to break from the trot. Each did the two miles as follows:

THE MARE.	Min.	Sec.	THE HORSE	Min.	Sec.
1st. 2 miles in	6	11	1st. 2 miles in	6	9
2d. do.	6	10	2d. do.	6	9
3d. do.	6	9	3d. do.	6	11
4th do.	6	10	4th. do.	6	13
9th mile	3	6	Last mile,	3	7
	27	46		27	49

It was as fine a race as ever was run, and both were neck and neck at the seventh mile, when the horse began to fall a little off in speed, and did not require the mare to be pushed. The race was won by several lengths at last.

Sums Won at the Races in 1822.—The following account of the money, and gold and silver cups won at the five principal places of sport this year:

York,	5,992	15 and 3 Cup.
Doncaster,	5,647	10 and 4 Cup.
Ascot,	3,208	5 and 1 Cup.
Epsom,	3,538	5 and 1 Cup.

The whole amount in backing the above, won at the different races, is £39,784 1s. and 189 Cups.—The greatest prize was the 1st and Duke Michael's Cup, with 3,000 guineas in it, won by Mr. Chaelmas Newmarket.

"Napoleon in Exile."—A work of considerable interest, under this title, is expected to appear in the course of the ensuing month. It consists almost entirely of Napoleon's own remarks, in his own words, written down at the moment, during three years of the most unreserved communication, and furnishes, in a way that could probably never be anticipated, details of all the remarkable events of his life, public and private—characters of his ministers and generals—estimates of the armies and courts of Europe—the development of his foreign and domestic policy—anecdotes of his campaigns, and, indeed, illustrations of most of the extraordinary occurrences and persons that have astonished the world during the last half century, and which carries with it its own evidence, and is sustained by facts known only to the distinguished individual by whom they were related.

Mr. Montgomery, the poet, will furnish in a few days a work entitled "Songs of Zion," being imitations of the Psalms in verse.

Mr. Dunlop, author of the "History of Fiction," has a new work in the press entitled the History of Roman Literature, from the earliest period to the Augustan age; in 2 volumes 8vo.

The concluding volume of Sir R. K. Porter's Travels in Georgia, Persia, Babylonia, &c. &c. have just appeared.

Marmion; by the author of the "Caxtons"—Roche Blanc, by Miss A. M. Porter—the Reigning Beauty, by the author of "Correction"—and Tales of the Manor, by Mrs. Holland, are nearly ready for publication.

At a late meeting of the French Academy, among other literary productions noticed, the Marquis de Lally Tollendal read several fragments of a tragedy entitled Tuathan Mesmer, or the Restoration of the Irish Monarchy; the subject of which is taken from the ancient history of Ireland towards the end of the first century.

Lady Morgan's Florantine Macarthy has been translated into German, by B. T. F. Von Halem, and published at Leipzig, by Hinricks. A Leipzig Review, (which has just been received) severely satirical upon her Ladyship, and gives her but little credit for invention or original authorship.

Count Franz Von Erbach, a distinguished antiquary, and promoter of fine arts, has made some valuable additions to his extensive museum. Among others he has received a carpus papyrus, which is nine feet long, and but little injured. It presents some hieroglyphics, which have not been noticed before, and are considered to be of great moment. Another curiosity is a fragment of an ancient Egyptian papyrus, easily to be deciphered. Count Von Erbach has also received an Egyptian mummy, preserved in an unusual manner and position. The box or coffin is highly ornamented with hieroglyphics. A detailed report on these interesting antiquities will soon be published.

Extract from Bracebridge Hall.

The Young Lovers.—"To a man who is a little of a philosopher, and a bachelor to boot, and who, by dint of some experience in the follies of life, begins to look with a learned eye upon the ways of man, nothing is more entertaining to note the conduct of a pair of young lovers. It may not be as grave and scientific a study as the love of the plants; but it is certainly as interesting. I have therefore derived much pleasure since my arrival at the Hall, from observing the two Justices' clerks. She has all the deliberation and coolness of an artless girl, inexperienced in coquetry, who has made her first conquest: while the captain regards her with that fondness and exultation, with which a youthful lover is apt to accomplish the acquisition of a prize. I observed him yesterday in the garden advancing along one of the gravel walks, making great demonstrations of his love, and sighing through his whiskers. The cockoon, that harbinger of spring, was boldly heard from a distance; the brook piped from the hawthorn, and the yellow butterflies sported and toyed and coquetted in the air. For John was leaning on her lover's arm, and seeming to listen to conversation, with her eyes cast down, and a soft blush upon their cheek, and a quiet smile upon her lips: while in the hand that was disengaged by her side was a branch of flowers. In this way they were sauntering slowly along, and when I considered them, and the scene in which they were moving, I could not but think it a beautiful and pure thing to see two young people should ever grow old, or that their blossoms should give way to fruit, or that lovers should ever get married."

Miscellaneous Notices.

The Iron Steam Boat arrived at Paris on the 11th of June, in 55 hours from London, with a cargo of clover seed and cast iron. This boat is spoken of in high terms of praise.

A Warrant has been issued from the War department ordering that no soldier enlisted after 24th April 1822 shall be entitled to pension unless on 21 years service in the infantry, and 24 years service in the cavalry.

A Grand Concert took place at the Mansion House on the 12th June, in aid of the Irish Distressed Fund. We are sorry to find that, owing to the unpopularity of our city Ladies, the concert was not as well attended as the distinguished names of the titled patronesses, under whose direction it was given would have induced us to expect. The performers gave their services gratuitously, and the talent in requisition embraced the most popular names of the season.

A valuable blood mare, in London, was lately bitten by a mad dog. The stable keeper was not a little surprised at hearing the horse bark several times, which was so vicious that no one dare enter the stable. The animal was shot to prevent its biting itself to pieces.

The Marquis of Hertford died at his house in Manchester square, London. He was born in 1743, and is succeeded by his only son, the Earl of Yarmouth. He was advanced to the marquisate in 1793, and was 79 years of age. He had been in a declining state of health for upwards of two years; but within the last ten days the decay had been rapid—latterly his memory appeared to be wholly gone. The present numerous successes to the estate, of three guineas each by a length per yard. The successions alone may give an idea of luxury, more than Oriental, which pervades the whole.

Sagacious Repartee.—The reformists of England lately celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of Sir Francis Burdett's election, when the following toast was given:—

Parliament Reform.—A full, fair and free representation of the people: the common house of parliament:—Air. Kick the rogues out.

In commenting on the toast and time, the London Courier, (a ministerial paper) sagely observes, "We may suppose what we mean by this toast, and to our own minds should rejoice to see the thing done. But, considering who would be the persons that must undergo the disciplinary kicking, it would not be [illegible] very easy to note. [illegible] from the Daily Advertiser, is a fair specimen."

Animal Sagacity.—Mr. Martin, keeper & gardener, a short time since took the young of a sow on the manor of Edward Mainwaring, Esq. of Whitmore, one of which he kept in the garden, and had so far domesticated the animal, that it became the familiar pet with the servants of the establishment; but not having forgot its dam, its cries in the night excited the attention of the mother, who actually burrowed under the garden wall in several places—but frustrated in her design, the subtle animal ascended and entered a flue of the hot houses, and actually extricated her young by repeating through the same difficult passage.—Chester Courant.

Liberality.—It is stated in the London Investigator, that Withe Bramston, Esq. of Oak Hill, has, at his own expense, rebuilt Deen church, at the estimated cost of 7000 or £8000. The edifice is splendid and beautiful. All the windows are of colour'd glass, and the eastern one, which represents the crucifixion, by Backler, after Le Brun, is a fine specimen of the art; it alone cost 500 guineas. Also to him, Mr. Bramston has presented the parish with a set of new bells. It is not long since that the neighboring parish of Oakley was indebted for a new set of bells to the bounty of the same gentleman.

Singular instance of Longevity of a Horse.—There is now living and in the possession of the proprietors of the Mersey and Irwell Navigation, where he has been the most part of his life, a horse 63 years old this grass; he is perfectly sound and five from blemish, and has been in regular work till within a few years. He is now kept at his ease for his past services, which have been great to an extreme.

In the Peculiar Court of Canterbury, June 12th, the case of Olive, calling herself the Princess of Cumberland, came on for the second time, and was postponed at her own request. She claims £15,000, stated to have been left by the late King, but the question involves the proof of her allegations. The King's Proctor had received no instructions and the imposture is too barefaced to claim the least attention.

Wanstead House.—During the last four days the influx of fashionable to view the splendid mansion belonging to the Hon. William Long Wellesley, has astonished the natives." Upon an average not less than from three to five thousand persons have been, daily, to view that matchless mansion.

The furniture is of surpassing magnificence, that we have nothing like it in the kingdom. And when we state that the carpets and hangings alone, have cost sixty thousand pounds, within the last ten years, we do not exaggerate. The family room of Lyttney and Wellesley are embroidered on all the carpets, the materials of which is silk—the walls, as well as windows, are hung with the richest Genoa velvet, with corresponding draperies of the same place, at three guineas and a half per yard. These specimens alone may give an idea of luxury, more than Oriental, which pervades the whole.

Sarcastic Repartee.—The reformists of England lately celebrated the fifteenth anniversary of Sir Francis Burdett's election, when the following toast was given:—

UNITED STATES.

THE NEGRO PLOT AT CHARLESTON.

A letter from that place, dated the 19th instant, gives the following particulars:

"A Negro belonging to Col. Prideau who was solicited to join the gang, declined, and consulted a friend named Pencell, who advised him to give information thereof to his owners. He did so and the proper authorities took measures accordingly.

"Their plan appears to have been well digested. They intended to have provided themselves with passes so as to deceive the guard, and place themselves at certain parts of the city; then a party was to secure the guard and the guard house, and an indiscriminate massacre was to commence on all whites who appeared in the streets, and particularly to prevent any company to form. Also to prevent the bells to ring to give any alarm.

It appears that this was in agitation for a considerable length of time. They formed themselves into a society, and held meetings at a farm that they could approach by water, to avoid being stopped by any patrol—by which farm is situated near the fork of the road on the meeting street side. Religion and superstition were used by the more cunning to delude the incredulous Africans in the plot. Gullah Jack was considered invincible, he could not be hurt nor killed by any means whatever, but a blow from him would be instant execution.—At one of these meetings they had a fowl dressed and put on a table—Gullah Jack performed some ceremony of witchcraft over it; when he was done the fowl got up and walked off. Indeed, he showed great fears of death under the gallows.

Most of the ringleaders were the rulers of class leaders in what is called the African Society, and considered faithful, honest fellows. Indeed many of the owners would not be convinced till the fellows confessed themselves that they were concerned, and the first object of all was to kill their masters.

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

"Charleston, July 14, 1822.

"You will no doubt hear a variety of reports relative to the unfortunate situation of affairs here, as the daily arrests continue, and it is difficult to say what number of the deluded wretches may yet be taken up. There was certainly considerable cause for alarm, and had the conspirators measure been adopted, the consequence, both as to life and property must have been serious. Too much praise cannot be paid to the vigilance and firmness of Major James Hamilton, Junior Intendent of the city, who upon the first discovery of the infernal plot, secured the conspirators, and immediately formed a Court of Magistrates and Freeholders, consisting of seven of the most respectable gentlemen in the state, and possessing every qualification as examined lawyers, intelligent men, and in whom these is not an individual in the city but places the most implicit confidence, both as to their sound judgment and discretion. The Court have had a judicial and laborious investigation, and it is to be hoped that they may soon get through the [illegible] and that we shall be restored to our former quiet, and peaceful situation. No disposition for mercy has been shown in the country.

Life Preserving Dress.—On Thursday afternoon we were invited by the inventor to attend an exhibition of the Life Preserving Dress, in Battersea [illegible], but we had other engagements to attend to, [illegible] from the Daily Advertiser, is a fair specimen.

The wind blew strong, and the sea was rough, which afforded those present a good opportunity to examine the utility of this dress in case of shipwreck. The inventor himself, who is unable to swim, put on his buoyant small clothes and jacket in the presence of several gentlemen, and committed himself fearlessly to the waves, in which he remained for upwards of an hour, apparently without the least struggle, and wholly unconcerned—and this, too, in a sea that kept constantly washing over our boat. The buoyancy of the dress kept his body, from his chest upwards, above the water, whilst his arms and legs were at perfect liberty. We narrowly watched his situation, and were highly pleased at the ease and safety with which he rode the waves, drifting with a rapid current for upwards of two miles. The inventor has also prepared a dress for a colored man, which, with some additions to the one he wore himself, enabled him to remain with his body above the water from the waist—and the two floated together, conversing with each other with as much sang froid as though they had a firm footing on terra firma. It is our opinion, that this dress, with some trifling improvement, may be rendered a means of safety to the shipwrecked mariner, in many situations, in which he may be unfortunately placed, and as such it is entitled to a respectable consideration from the public.

We understand that the inventor will give a public exhibition to the citizens in a few days, when the community at large will be enabled to judge of its utility; and we have no hesitation in stating they will be highly gratified. This dress has no connection with the Life Preserving Mattresses.

Mr. Kean.—This gentleman, it appears from the Richmond papers, is soon expected in the United States. If we recollect right, he promised us another visit in his farewell letter to fulfil his southern engagement. He is looked for in the fall.

Mr. Braham.—The celebrated Vocalist, is also said to have decided on crossing the Atlantic. The lovers of exquisite singing will not fail to hail his arrival as a fortunate occurrence.

FROM THE LONDON LITERARY GAZETTE.

Periodical Publications.—The inquisitorial power of the House of Commons has brought forth a document at once of public curiosity, and of much anxious interest to those connected with the periodical Press, requiring the circulation of the stamps of Government for its productions. An account of all Stamps issued for Newspapers, &c. in the several years of 1801 and 1821, was laid before Parliament, thus exposing, in a manner little to be relished, more objections than ever the scouted Income Tax challenged, the private concerns of men, and affecting investigations to the amount of millions. We have no feeling on the matter, because our standard is alone, which is but a very one fourth of our circulation (as sets us at the top of the list of prosperous works; but we cannot help saying that the injury which the Stamp Office disclosures to many respectable Journals, the sale of which (amid the fine nations to which all are more or less liable) may not at this moment be extensive, is most unjust, irretrievable, unconstitutional and cruel. The Returns of Issue were divulged to no purpose, but the proper jealousy of Britain could not endure even this partial inquisition—here, we have secrets affecting property, in a far more direct and sensible manner, not only incorrectly exacted, but published and promulgated to the wide world, without regard to individual interests or the principles of universal right.

Such being our view of the question, we have felt some reluctance at giving insertion to the following paper; but on considering it as one for which we complain, as already done, and that our correspondent's ingenious calculations can do evil to no one, our scruples have yielded, and we give place to his strictly. Estimate of the Powers of the many Newspapers &c. issued, and as they appear in the above document to which we have alluded.

The Morning and Evening Papers, The British Press and Colonial, require in 1821, 77,000 stamps, equal to a joint circulation of 1200 a day.

The British Traveller, Evening Paper, 81,577 stamps, or 1260 daily; but it did not, we believe, commence till the year was advanced, so that the calculation does not appear.

The Courier, 1,504,700 stamps. It is Paper lasted through the year, and issued 6000 per day.

The Morning Advertiser, and Sunday Advertiser, 970,000 or average, 3500 daily.

The Provincial Newspapers are in number 8.825.282; their duties £142.087 10s. 8d.

The total stamps issued for the two, 24,779,786. for which the Treasury received £142.996 8s. 8d. independent of the immense revenues from Paper and Advertisements.

In 1801 the Stamps issued were 16,084,906. and the duties amounted to £234.571 10s. 7. In that year the Provincial papers are estimated at about half a million in number more than last year—the London papers having on the contrary increased from 7 to 16 1-4 millions.

(a) We stamp only that portion which is required to be sent by post; all other London circulation, and what can be sent through book-sellers to the provinces, are unstamped

* Where two Journals are mentioned, the division is by the sum total of their joint number of days' publications, though one may greatly exceed the other, as no doubt the Times does the Evening Mail.

† The papers of this class probably issue fourfifth of their impression on the Sunday, and a very small proportion on the Monday; thus the former publication will be much greater, and the latter much less than is stated, the whole being double what appears in the second column.

‡ This publication is principally unstamped.

‖ Idem.

§ Also chiefly circulated by an unstamped edition.

We observe from exclamations, however, that the Stamp Office does not seem to be very accurate in its returns—whether the revenue officers or not is another question—as several journals, besides the mistakes of that department, declare that they obtain Stamps from the Stationers, and are disappointed by the Official Documents.

The whole nevertheless presents an extraordinary picture of the activity and wide dissemination of the periodical Press

If the sheets published in England in 1821 were laid in a circle upon our Globe, a child might walk on paper round the earth !!!—And if the Stamp duties were also distributed in shillings, no single pack easily one up at every third step !!!

CORAL REEFS, OR ISLANDS

FROM KOTZEBUE'S VOYAGE OF DISCOVERY

Two or three days after sunset, they fell in with a chain of islands extending from lat. 62° to lat. 12° long. 187° to long. 193° 0' or rather a succession of groups, each consisting of a circular reef of coral rocks, and of which at irregular distances, rose a number of small detached islands, richly covered with the loftiest forms of the arborescent cocoa nut trees. Captain Kotzebuen claims for Lieutenant Kittlitz the merit of having first discovered these groups; but we can scarcely permit ourselves to doubt that they are the same which were seen by Captain Marshall, in the Scarborough, in 1788, and by the Nautilus, in 1799, and named on the charts the Nautilus, the Chatham, and Calvert's Islands. We readily admit, however, that if Lieutenant Kotzebue be not the first discoverer of these islands, he is, at all events, the first who has made an acquaintance with their true position; and we are disposed to allow him the further merit of having thrown much additional light on the nature and forms both of those singular coral groups, which rise out of the Pacific, circular chains, like fairy rings in a meadow, also of those which are extended from east to west, and from the 30th parallel of northern, to the same parallel of southern latitude.

It has long been known that the upper surface of these islands usually known by the name of Coral Rocks, is composed of immense fragments of a great variety of forms, the production of marine animals; and, since the voyages of Cook, Flinders, D'Entrecasteaux, and others, it has been ascertained that these minute creatures began their wonderful labours at the depth of the ocean, building upwards from the bottom, and that each generation, dying in its cells, was succeeded by others, building upon the labors of their predecessors and thus rising in succession till they reached the surface. This was assumed to be the process from the circumstance of the sea being found so deep close to the external side of the reef as frequently to be unfathomable. It now appears that this is not precisely the case. The facility with which the little vessel of Kotzebue entered through the open spaces in the surrounding reef or dam, into the included lagoon, enabled M. Chamisso to inspect more narrowly the nature of these extraordinary fabrics, and to give a more distinct and intelligible account of their origin and progress. From the circumstance of their being grouped only in certain seas of the Pacific, and always of the same kind, though irregular chain, generally more or less approaching to a circle; we were led to conclude that the coral animals lay the foundation of their edifices on shoals in the ocean, or perhaps more correctly speaking, on the summits of the submarine mountains, which advance sufficiently near the surface to afford them so much light and heat as may be necessary for their operations. The extreme depth at which they can perform their functions has not yet been ascertained; but it was found on the late Voyage of Discovery, that in Baffin's Bay, marine animals existed at the depth of one thousand fathoms, and in a temperature below the freezing point. The outer edge of the reef exposed to the surf is the first that shows itself above water, and consists of the largest blocks of coral rock, composed of madrepores mixed with various shells, and the spines of the sea hedge hog, which break into large tablets, and are so compact, as to sound loudly under the hammer. On the sloping side of the inner edge or reef, the animals uncovered by the ebb are set at carrying on their operations, were the lobopora musica, the millepora cervicornis, distichopora, actinias, and various kinds of polypi. The living branches of the lythophytes were generally attached to the dead stems; many of the latter, however, crumbled into sand, which, accumulating on the inner declivity, constituted a considerable part of the surface of the new islands.

The ridge or reef when once above water on the windward side, extends itself by slow degrees till it has surrounded the whole island, or the greater part of it, leaving in the middle an enclosed lake, into which are passages, more or less deep, communicating with the ocean; the islets formed on the reef or wall are smaller or larger, according to accidental circumstances. Chamisso observed, that the smaller species of corals had sought a quiet abode in the lagoon, where they were silently and slowly throwing up banks, which in process of time unite with the islets that surround them, and at length fill up the lagoon, so that what was at first a ring of islands, becomes one connected mass of land. One progress towards a state fit for the habitation of man has been described by he naturalist.

As soon as it has reached such a height, that it remains uncovered dry at low water, at the time of ebb, the corals keep building higher, sea shells, fragments of corals, sea hedgehog shells and their broken off prickles are united by the burning sun, through the medium of the cementing calcareous sand which has arisen from the pulverisation of the stone work and shells into one whole or solid stone. This strengthened by the continual throwing up of new materials gradually increases in thickness, till it at last becomes such that it is covered only during some seasons of the year by the high tides. The heat of the sun so penetrates the stone when it is dry, that it splits in many places, and masses break off to flakes. These flakes, so separated, are now and then cemented one another by the waves at the time of high water. The always active surf throws blocks of coral (frequently a fathom in length, and three or four feet thick) and other marine animals between and upon the foundation, and over this the calcareous sand lies undisturbed, and affords to the seeds of trees and plants cast upon it by the waves a soil upon which they rapidly grow to overspread its dazzling white surface. Entire trunks of trees, which have arrived by the rivers from other countries and islands, and have, at length, a resting place, after their long wanderings, with these come some small animals, such as lizards, insects, as the first inhabitants. Even before the trees have found, the real sea birds settle here, strayed land birds follow in the bushes; and at a much later period, when the work has been long since completed, man also appears, builds his hut on the fruitful soil formed by the corruption of the leaves of the trees and calls himself lord and proprietor of this new creation.—Vol. iii. pp. 321 & 322.

The reflections of Kotzebue are just and natural —

"The spot on which I stood filled me with astonishment, and I indeed in silent admiration the omnipotence of God, who had given even to these minute animals the power to construct such a work. My thoughts were confounded when I consider the immense series of years that must elapse before such an island can rise from the fathomless abyss of the ocean and become visible on the surface. At a future period they will assume another shape; all the islands will join, and form a circular ship's earth, with a pond or lake in the circle—and this form will again change, as these animals continue building, till they reach the surface and then the water will no day vanish, and only one great island be visible. It is a strange feeling to walk about on a living island, where all below is actively at work. And to what corner of the earth can we penetrate where human beings are not already to be found? In the remotest regions of the north, amidst mountains of ice, under the burning sun of the equator, and even in the middle of the ocean, on islands which have been formed by animals, they are met with!"—vol. iii. p. 36

POETRY.

SONNET.

What to the man is left below,
When she is far he holds most dear?
The sigh of anguish? sorrow's tear?
But can these heal the wound? Oh, no!

Will comfort rise to bless him, where
He oft has found delight before?
No; things once pleasing shake no more
All speak of her who oft was there!

May be then hope by change of scene
To gain his bosom's former peace?
The fruitless—for he cannot cease
From thinking, here she has not been!

What then has he left to him below?
Has life a single charm? Oh! no!

Editorial Commentary.

THE Parliamentary Debates in our late arrivals are so interesting, we have been induced to make large extracts for our paper of this week.—Several of the subjects in debate are of high importance to this country

We have hitherto avoided, and we shall still avoid, any general discussion of our own on the great question of the Union of the Provinces, until we are in possession of the Act of Parliament authorizing that measure; being assured that, in the interim, we could have little more than conjecture on which to ground our reasoning.—Our kind Monitor, The Observer, has been pleased to indulge his wit and his learning, with some profusion, on this fruitful theme, and he seems to have been particularly gratified by having, as he thought a fair opportunity of twitting us for holding forth a prediction that would seem to be groundless. But, though this assumed prediction may not be fulfilled, we stated no untruths. At that time there was no Bill, on the subject of the Union, before Parliament; and there were, and are, impediments of so serious a nature that it will be well, after all, if they are not found to be "insurmountable."—If the "Pat Riot" Observer, or any other Observer, supposes we are personally adverse to a Union of the Provinces, he is quite as much mistaken as he usually is on matters of importance. It was always our opinion that the Provinces should not have been separated.—It was always our opinion that the Act of separation was one of the few mistakes committed by the immortal PITT.—If a house divided against itself cannot stand, it can scarcely be less injurious to give separate interests, by which the seeds of discord are sown amongst a people who are, or ought to be the same. It is politically and morally wrong to do so, and to shew what were our sentiments long ago, and they remain the same, on this great question, we shall endeavour to find, for our next paper, a review of the Debates in Parliament, on the Lords and Commons, at the time of the division of the Province of Quebec into Upper and Lower Canada, a piece that was written for a work on this country, that is still unpublished, and which will prove how erroneous we considered the arrangements to be that led to the adoption of the measure which it now seems is to be reversed. But it will be strange indeed if, after a separation of more than 30 years, the affairs and relations of the two Provinces should not have become so en-will as to cause many serious obstacles in the way of a re-union, and we are persuaded that these obstacles, not only exist, but that they will be very seriously felt. However, as we have already stated, we deem it best to forbear entering at length on the discussion until the new Act of Parliament is before us, when we can make our deductions with greater certainty.

We hope our Merchants will avail themselves of the liberal provisions of the new Corn Bill, by which the Ports of England are opened to the country at 55s. as that price, in sterling money, after all leaving all costs and charges, would amply repay, and be a great relief to, our Farmers.

Our desire to hear of some permanent remedy for the sufferings of the lower Irish is as great as can be felt by any one, but it is a subject of the utmost difficulty, and we are much afraid that Mr. Goulburn's plan of granting leases of the tithes for 21 years to the proprietors of the soil, will not, by any means, prove an adequate relief. It is merely producing a change of tithe masters, without giving the poor occupier any security that the landlord will be more indulgent than the pastor.—If the tythes are leased by the landlord at their full value, he cannot make any alleviation in the system, favorable to the occupier, without, in fact, lowering his rents, which is scarcely to be expected generally.

It is gratifying to learn that Ministers are hostile to the preposterous views of Alexander, respecting the territory on the north west coast of this Continent, to which it seems he has claim as low down as the 51st° of N. lat.: the value and commercial importance of that region is infinitely greater than an ordinary inquirer can have any idea of.—If there is any part of the world where the Fur trade may be said to be inexhaustible, it is that region to which the autocrat now lays claim.

It does not appear there is any nearer prospect of war between Russia and Turkey, notwithstanding the horrible atrocities lately committed by the Infidels.

CANADA LOAN.

Mr. Ellice inquired of the Honorable Colonial Secretary, in the House of Commons on the 21st of May, "whether his Majesty's Government had not decided upon the claims of the sufferers in Upper Canada during the last war

Mr Wilmot said, "That his Majesty's Government had so far decided as to set on foot a loan of 10,000 pounds in Canada—half of the interest of which was to be paid by the government and the other half by Canada: and they had ordered commissioners to revise, with the least possible delay, the report already transmitted on the subject of the losses"

HOUSE OF LORDS,—June 21.

CATHOLIC PEERS' BILL.

Petitions were presented against this Bill from Horsham, Clerkenwell, St. Leonard's, Shoreditch. Huntingdon's Countess, several dissenting Congregations, the University of Oxford, Warwick, the Seceders of Glasgow, the Parish of St Mary, Woolmoth; the Parish of St. Luke, Old Street; Northwick, and a great many other places; after which the Duke of Portland moved the second reading of the Bill

Lord Colchester opposed the motion. The Roman Catholic Peers sat at the time of Elizabeth by sufferance only, and in consequence of a summons. The laws for their exclusion were enacted on general principles, as a safeguard against the dangers which threatened the Constitution. Many civil and military honors are open to the Roman Catholics. They, the army, and the navy were permitted to them He agreed with their having every toleration for their worship; but he could not consent to their monastic institutions which had lately set up in this country. These were calculated to excite a just alarm. The King was rightly advised to receive their addresses when in Ireland, but they ought never to be allowed to be addressed as an ecclesiastical body. Their principles are directly hostile to our Church. For this he had also quoted their own writers. The paucity of the existing number of their Lords, was no security against the peril of their admission. He then moved to amendment, that the Bill be read a second time that day three months.

Lord Eldon spoke in favor of the Bill.

The Lord Chancellor would consent to no further relaxation of the Law respecting Catholics, without having the securities for the Protestant establishment, of which no man had yet shewn him the possibility.

Lord Grey concluded that the necessity for excluding Catholic Peers should be proved by those who maintained that it was required for the self defence and protection of the Protestant Church and State. The rights of the Catholic Peers descended through a long line of ancestry, were coeval with the monarchy itself, and could only be suspended from motives of absolute danger and general alarm.

The Earl of Liverpool said, if the King from conscience, became a Catholic, he must descend from his Throne, as his subjects would be absolved from their allegiance; and, therefore, if the Catholic Peers owed from conscience to preserve their religion, they were placed in no worse situation than the King would be were he to turn Catholic

Lord Grenville would advise the concessions to the Catholics to be made as full and unrestrained as possible, in order to tranquilize that part of the country, which, God knows, required tranquility so much

Lord Redesdale said, the Bill sought power for those who were hostile to our faith, and bound in conscience to the destruction of their own. It was a question of expediency only. When the King had sworn to protect the Protestant Establishment, is he to be surrounded with persons of different objects and persuasions? Are their Lordships to give this Parliament with principles directly contrary to his oath? Without the Act of Chas II James could never have been foiled in his attempts on our church and liberty If the Roman Catholic Peers got into Parliament, they would never cease machinating for the recovery of the Church property. If this Bill is passed, Rome in Catholic Commoners must also be admitted into the other House; and Popery would become so mixed with our constitution, that it would cease to be Protestant.

Lord Holland insisted that no general principle was involved in the Bill. It stood entirely on its own grounds. He appealed to the standing order of the House against Peers being required to take the oaths: an order, which was opposite to the Act Charles II. There was no danger from six Roman Catholic Lords in that House, no more than from sixteen Roman Catholic Lords

On a division the amendment was carried by 132 to 92 proxies included. The Bill is Consequently lost for the present session.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, June 24.

CANADA.

Mr. Wilmot moved the order of the day for the committee of the Canada Government and Trade Bill. The Honorable Member said his object at present was not to go into discussion, but merely, pro forma, to allow the Bill to be committed, and then to be printed, for the fullest consideration. The discussion on the Bill would therefore, take place with the advantage of a full understanding of its object and provisions.

Mr Bright considered it improper to press a measure at that kind, which went to effect changes as great as the proximate cause of the American Revolution at that advanced period of the Session

Mr. Ellice was convinced that his Honorable Friend, the Member for Bristol, (Mr. Bright) would not have used the epithets as to the Bill, had he been acquainted with its object and provisions There was no advantage gained in making the Bill the subject of discussion, for the purpose of getting that full information which its principle must produce. He must, however, be allowed to state, as he had been consulted on that Bill, that it had no such tendency as his Hon Friend anticipated. It did not extinguish the constitution of Canada.—It did not interfere with a single right or liberty of the humblest individual in that branch of the British dominions. But as it did embrace questions of very great importance, and involved questions of considerable constitutional magnitude, he wished that the Hon Gentleman, (Mr. Wilmot) should be allowed to pass the Bill through the present stage; so as to have all the provisions of the Bill before the House when the discussion was entered upon

Mr Bright said he did not mean to oppose the present stage of the Bill, but he thought full time should be given to the people of Canada to consider of all its provisions. The House then went into the Committee, after which the Report was received, and ordered to be taken into further consideration on Friday, July 5, and to be printed

IRISH TITHES

Mr Goulburn opened his motion to the House, by avowing his sense of the difficulties of the subject The measure he was now presenting to the House did not proceed upon the footing of commutation, although he did not pledge himself against a future proposition to that effect. With regard to the principle of his measure, he would say that titles were, to all intents and purposes, private property, and not only so, property held under the most ancient and unobjectionable title, but public emergencies occasionally required sacrifices of private property, and the Clergy were prepared to stand those sacrifices fairly with the rest of the nation. The tithe system in Ireland was attended with grievances which did not follow it elsewhere, and which made it more hurtful than it was in England, or he would never have consented to specific measure on her behalf; and one of its greatest benefactors was, that the portion received its profits from the very poorest classes of the community. In England the thing was different; there the Clergyman took his tithes from a high description of individuals—from a farmer who employed capital in his agricultural operations, and who was furnished, therefore, of course, with the means of meeting his demand, but the Clergyman of England was reduced to this dilemma—he must exact his tithes from the poorest individuals, or abandon his right, and consequently, his income, altogether. It would be impossible for the Clergyman to resist the amount of his small tithes, without, in many cases, depriving him of the greater portion of his income He had now before him a list of Irish livings, from which he would instance one parish, not selected, but casually taken. In that parish the income of the Clergyman did not exceed £280 per annum, and it was only by other livings being accidentally united to the present system was, that it brought the Clergyman in contact and unpleasant contact with the poorest of his parishioners, who generally had little community of feeling with him and who for the most part, being of a different religion were averse from payments of the kind. To remedy this evil, he would move to bring in a Bill, which should enable the incumbent, in all such parishes as he had described, to enter into leases of the tithes for 21 years, not with the occupier, but with the proprietor of the soil. The Right Hon. Gentleman then explained what measure it was intended to render the proposed measure effectual, and combated such objections as might be possibly raised against it, and he concluded by moving for leave to bring in a Bill to enable certain ecclesiastical property, situated in Ireland to grant leases of tithes binding on their successors.

A discussion of some length ensued, on which,

Sir John Newport and Sir Henry Parnell declared the proposed Bill insufficient to remedy the existing evil, and a discussion involving the just speculations of Political Economy followed.

The motion was, however, ultimately carried without a division

The Royal Assent was given on the 24th June, to the West India and American Trade Bills, the Navigation Laws Amendment Bill, the Colonial Trade Bill, and the Importation Goods Bill. The same day the Bill for the Union of the two Provinces, of Canada was ordered to be taken into further consideration on the 5th July, when it would be brought forward with a full understanding of its object and provisions. As Parliament was not expected to be prorogued before the 1st August, we are still fully confident that the Bill will pass even if Mr. Bright and a few others should be disposed to perplex the measure by opposing it.

SLAVE TRADE.

The following resolutions on the subject of the Slave Trade, were moved by Mr Wilberforce, in the British House of Commons on the 27th June, and unanimously adopted. They present an interesting sketch of the present state of this abominable traffic, and of the obstacles which have hitherto retarded its final abolition, and the opposition of the powers who have co-operated with Great Britain for its suppression, as well as of those who have openly permitted its continuance, or have virtually sanctioned it by the inefficiency of their prohibitory laws and declarations, or by secret connivance.

Resolved, nemine contradicente, That an humble address be presented to his Majesty, to represent to his Majesty that the deep interest which this House has so long taken, and still continues to take, in the abolition of the Slave Trade, has led us to peruse with no little solicitude the papers relative to that subject, which by his Majesty's command were lately laid before us; nor could we forbear indulging a hope that his Majesty's renewed representations and remonstrances would have at length produced the desired effect on the minds of the various governments by whose subjects the Slave Trade was still carried on, seriously to consider the numerous and powerful obligations under which they lay, to co-operate with his Majesty, heartily and effectually, in order to put an end for ever to that enormous evil.

But that we have learned with grief and shame, that with very few exceptions, every hope of this nature has been altogether frustrated, and that we are still compelled to witness the frauds and the unfeeling spectacle of practices which we acknowledged to be made up of wickedness and cruelty by the very governments whose subjects are nevertheless carrying them on, upon a great and continually increasing scale.

That we observe, however, with satisfaction that the powerful reasoning and continued remonstrances of his Majesty's government, enforced by the strong and persevering remonstrances on his Majesty's Ambassador at the Court of the Netherlands, have at length produced an admission of the just construction of the treaty with that power

That we are glad to see that some of the abuses have been corrected which had prevailed in the conduct of the courts of mixed jurisdiction at Sierra Leone, but that experience has proved the necessity of altering that provision, which renders it necessary for the slaves to have been actually on ship-board to justify the condemnation of the vessel, and of allowing due weight to be given to that decisive proof of the object of the voyage, which is afforded by the peculiar mode of fitting and equipping slave vessels

That it is some alleviation of the pain produced by the almost uniform tenour of those distressing accounts, to learn that the Cortes of Spain has subjected all who should be found concerned in Slave Trading, to a severe and infamous punishment; and that with this evidence of a just estimate of the guilt of the crime, we cannot but hope that they will not rest satisfied with a legal prohibition, but that they will provide the requisite means for carrying their law into execution.

That we find with concern that the vessels of Portugal, so far from gradually retiring from the trade, have been carrying it on with increased activity, more especially on that very part of the coast which is to the north of the line, in direct violation of the treaty by which she had stipulated to confine her trade to the south of it.

That we cannot but cherish the hope that the new government of Portugal will manifest a warmer zeal for enforcing a treaty which every law, divine or human, binds her to observe. That we have observed with no little pleasure the zeal for the abolition of the Slave Trade, that has been manifested by the commanders of ships of war of the United States of America, employed on the coast of Africa, and the disposition they have shown to co-operate with the officers of his Majesty's navy for their common object: but that we are concerned to have perceived in the American government no disposition to give up the objections it formerly urged against the establishment of a mutual right of examining each other's ships on the coast of Africa. That we have heard that the powerful arguments used by a Committee of the House of Representatives in favor of this arrangement would have equal weight, more especially that which points out the difference, or rather the contrariety, between this conventional and established system and the right of searching neutral vessels, without any previous and definite treaty, as claimed and practised in war. Above all, that the consideration, so strongly enforced, that it is only by the establishment of some such system that the Trade can ever be effectually abolished, would have induced the American government to consent to it, when the object in question involves the rights and happiness of so large a portion of our fellow creatures.

That with the deepest concern we find, as in the last year, vessels under the French flag trading for slaves along the whole extent of the coast of Africa, at home and abroad. Proposals are circulated for slave trading voyages, inviting the smallest capitals, and tempting adventurers by the hopes of enormous profits, and the few ships of war of that country stationed in Africa offer no material obstruction of the trade, nor do the measures her colonies enjoy are to be more active. And all this, while the French Government reprobates this traffic in the strongest terms, and declares that it is using its utmost endeavours for the prevention of so great an evil. That it is deeply to be regretted that a government which has been generally regarded as eminent for its efficiency, should here assume find its efforts so entirely paralysed. That meanwhile, we can only continue to lament, that a great and gallant nation, eminently favoured by Providence with natural advantages, and enjoying the very foremost in all the distinctions and enjoyments of civilized life, should thus, on its restoration to the blessings of Peace and to the Government of its Legitimate Sovereign, appear, in fact, to be the chief agent in thwarting the opening prospects of civilization, which every African, as yet present, and in prolonging the misery and barbarism of that vast Continent.

That on the whole we conjure his majesty to renew his remonstrances, and to render it manifest that his interference has not been a matter of mere form, but of serious and urgent duty. That this country will at least have the satisfaction of knowing that we have been active and unwearied in making reparation to Africa for the wrongs with which we ourselves were so long chargeable, and we cannot doubt that we shall ultimately be able to congratulate his Majesty on the success of his endeavours; and on his having had a principal share in giving away the foulest blot on the character of christendom.

On the 1st of July, in the House of Commons, the Chancellor of the Exchequer introduced his Budget, by which it appears that there was a deficiency in the last quarter of the revenue of about £36,000 sterling. The estimated expences of the year, however, were £51,119,000 and the receipts in the same period £54,482,000, leaving a surplus of £3,163,000

HOUSE OF COMMONS, JUNE 7.

MARITIME PRETENSIONS OF RUSSIA.

Sir James Macintosh wished to ask the Noble Marquis opposite, these questions: 1st. Had his Majesty's government any received authentic copy of the Ukase issued by the Emperor of Russia, in which he declared to mankind dominion over the north west coast of America, and the north east coast of Asia? And, secondly, if they had, whether they had taken any measures to protect British navigation from such extravagant and preposterous pretensions?

The Secretary for Foreign Affairs replied to the questions, in a very low tone of voice.—We understood him to say, that he had received a copy of the Ukase soon after it was issued.—As soon as his Majesty's government had received it, the lost no time before they sent a note to the Russian Ambassador in this country, declaring that they could not accede either to the claim of Sovereignty or the principle of maritime law laid down in it (cheers, hear.) At the same time they intended to enter into an amicable negotiation on the subject. I perceive a misunderstanding arising between the subjects of the two powers.

EXTRACTS OF ENGLISH PAPERS.

On the 18th June, the Duke of Wellington gave a magnificent dinner to the Staff and principal officers who fought with him at Waterloo. It was observed that most of the gallant men present had received severe wounds in their country's service on that trice glorious day. The Earl Bathurst was the only civilian present The Duke of York was there as Commander in Chief The splendid service of gold plate, valued at £200,000 presented to the Duke of Wellington by the King of Portugal, was used on this interesting occasion

Resumption of the Trade with China.

The Kent has arrived from China, bringing the agreeable intelligence of a complete settlement of the difference with the Chinese Government and in the most honorable manner to the English character: during the whole discussion there was not the least attempt at disguise or apology respecting these differences; the whole transaction was laid before the Chinese Authorities in the most open and candid manner, at the same time in the most peremptory language, stating that no native of England would be given over to Chinese Authorities for trial. In consequence of the determined manner in which this was given, and the decisive steps taken for a final departure, the Chinese Authorities gave way, and the edict for re-uniting the intercourse was given without the smallest proviso. By the date of the sailing of the Kent, the Committee were proceeding to Canton—the vessels to the second bar.—Courier, June 27.

The Parliament was not to be prorogued before the 8th of August.

The management of the whole Barrack Department for the general service of the Army in Great Britain and Ireland, and also in the Colonies, is to be vested in the Board of ordnance. The Store Branch of the Commissariat is also to be put under the same direction. By these arrangements considerable savings will be effected.

The new London Bridge is to be erected as nearly as possible to, and not exceeding 170 feet from the west side of the present bridge, and to afford a clear water-way of not less than 600 feet. It is to be faced with granite, and to consist of 5 arches; the centre arch to rise 25 feet above high water mark of an average spring tide, according to the Trinity House standard, which is shewn upon the face of the present bridge. Proper stairs of granite to be provided. The acclivity of the road way, to and over the bridge, is not to be steeper than one foot in 26 feet.

A diving bell under the direction of a submarine adventurer, called Crusoe, of this place, has been shipped from London for Holland, to recover the cargo of a vessel sunk there 22 years ago. She is stated to have 24 brass guns on board, £30,000 in gold, 32 casks of gold in bars, and 25 casks of silver in bars. The vessel lies in 30 feet at high water, which being very clear, the most sanguine expectations are formed of their saving the whole of the property. One of the casks of gold was lately raised to the water's edge, but from the bursting of the hoops, only one bar was saved, which weighed seven pounds and a half.

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.

The arrest of Gen Berton is confirmed; he is to be tried by a military tribunal. A bank note forgery to the amount of 2 millions of francs, has been discovered in the Chamber of Deputies. The opposition contend for the system of Colonial Monopoly while the other maintains the policy of liberating commerce from the shackles of protecting duties. The discussion had been long. At the same time they moved to enter into an amicable negotiation on the subject. I perceive a misunderstanding arising between the subjects of the two powers.

The Police of Paris lately adopted an arbitrary system of search and espionage. Two persons coming out of a bookseller's shop with some pamphlets, were seized by a man in coloured clothes, aided by gens d'armes, without any warrant or authority, dragged to the Prefecture of the Police, searched there, and dismissed with the bare satisfaction of being told that the agent of the Police suspected them of having prohibited engravings. The studies of the artists are also rummaged by the police for likenesses or emblems of Bonaparte and his government. Wofel, the Quarter-master, who performed the odious service of winning the confidence, in order to shed the blood of Berton, is to be made a commissioned officer, and decorated with the ribband of the Legion of Honors.

The excessive drought which prevailed in the early part of June in France, had caused a total failure in many places of the harvest.

The measure adopted by the Bavarian government of imposing heavy duties on articles coming from France had been officially promulgated.

SPAIN.

Prorogation of the Cortes.—We have received by express, Madrid papers from the 27th ult. to the 1st inst. inclusive from which we have extracted some interesting intelligence. A deputation of the Cortes having waited upon the King on the 28th, to receive his commands relative to the close of the session, his Majesty proceeded in state on Sunday the 30th ult. to perform the august ceremony of terminating their legislative labours.—When his Majesty arrived at the Hall of the Congress, he was again received by a deputation of the same body. Her Majesty and the Infants accompanied him. The speech from the throne, is chiefly remarkable for the constitutional spirit which it breathes, for the resolute firmness with which the King professes the determination of his government to support public credit, by adhering strictly to the stipulations of existing contracts, and the confidence with which it announces hopes of a restoration of tranquility to the disturbed districts. Unhappily for this last topic, the occurrences which his Majesty had witnessed on his way to the Hall of the Cortes, and those which took place at his palace, and under his eye after his return, show an exultation of the public mind, not much calculated to inspire perfect belief in his flattering anticipations.

The event of yesterday in the arcade of the Palace, which related to the militia man, who was pursued and wounded by some drummers of the guard, because he should divine " to the constitutional King " gave a sad presage of the succeeding day. Accordingly, at the hour appointed for the departure of his Majesty to meet the Cortes, groups, composed of the enemies of the Constitutional system, in whose countenances were observed joy and defiance, took their station at the foot of the principal staircase. His Majesty descended, and at the moment of his entering his coach these persons shouted repeatedly and with enthusiasm Viva el Rey nato (God save the unadulterated and absolute King.) Some of the same gang introduced themselves in the ranks of the guards, and excited them to utter the same cry At the same time others cried out "Long live the constitutional King!" One deluded person uttered Viva el Rey absoluto, and was immediately arrested by the authorities. This had scarcely happened when about 18 or 20 soldiers of the guard approached the group who were shouting to the constitutional King, and drowning their words, threaten d their assailants with vengeance. While this was going forward, his Majesty returned from the Cortes, and entered his palace.

The Manifesto of the Spanish government, in which it views as to South America are developed, is a document of great importance. It leaves all doubt that if it is the intention of Spain to persist in maintaining her authority over her former transatlantic possessions, and to use her utmost efforts to dissuade the European powers from acknowledging the new Governments. A good deal is said in the French papers about the convulsed state of Spain and of its being ripe for a counter-revolution. On comparing dates, we are satisfied that these rumours have no other foundation than the partial excitements occasioned by the brigands at Valencia and some other towns, which we know, by late accounts, were completely got under. The Cortes had agreed to the proposition for calling out 20,000 of the militia, to be stationed on the frontiers, "for the safety and defence of the new institutions."

A MANIFESTO.

Which circulates confidentially at Madrid, and which presents the views of the Spanish Government for constituting its interests with those of the other European Nations, and with the true advantages of the Spanish American Provinces.

His Catholic Majesty, in calling the attention of august Allies on the state of the revolted provinces of Spanish America, deems useless and unseasonable the examination of the causes which excited in those regions the desire of separating themselves from the mother country. It is enough for his Majesty to be convinced that it was neither the abuse of power nor the weight of oppression which inspired the desire of this separation, and that a disunion so absolutely between the members of the great Spanish family, has been the effect of extraordinary circumstances, and of the terrible crisis which Spain encountered in protecting its throne and dignity from the capacity of foreign domination.

Since that epoch of glory and misfortune the political aspect of various of our ultramarine provinces has often varied Military successes have been divided between the contending parties; the cause of the insurgents has assumed a different face in each of the chief portions of the Spanish American continent; and his Majesty endures the poignant distress in seeing these interesting regions exposed to all the evils and all the dangers inevitably attached to a revolution.

His heart desiring ardently to terminate this painful situation of anxiety and uncertainty, and to execute the benevolent disposition of the Cortes, has appointed Commissioners, who, by proceeding to the insurgent regions of America, are to hear their propositions, to transmit them to the Spanish Government, and to establish a frank and sincere correspondence, the objects and the results of which will be the advantage of Spaniards in both hemispheres

It is not as a Monarch irritated against his wayward subjects, that his Majesty shows himself to the powers of Spanish Americans, it is as a father who wishes to act as a peace making mediator in the dissensions of his children. He throws a veil on the past, the better to see the present; and considers their existing situation in all the relations which bind it with the future. The common good of the provinces of the two worlds is a great object of the negociation, its only basis, and the common centre to which all arrangements shall tend.

Nor are were transactions more important, but at the same time never will a Government in similar circumstances show more integrity and sound faith. His Majesty cannot persuade himself that the interests of the provinces beyond seas are opposed to those of European Spain; and this sentiment, worthy of his paternal heart, urges him to seek the means of reconciling the common advantage, and inspires him with consoling hope of finding them

His Catholic Majesty flatters himself that by this frank and generous conduct he shall be able to save the American religious whole ages of misery and misfortunes to prevent any bounds being set to the progress of civilization and knowledge by civil war and anarchy—to avoid the depopulation, misery and immorality, the inevitable consequences of long political oscillations, which condemn to misfortune the present generation, without securing the happiness or repose of future generations.

His Catholic Majesty thinks, at the same time, that the greatest blessing which he can procure to Transatlantic Spain, is to put and end to a devastating and parricidal war; and that, placed in the midst of brethren, united by the ties of religion, of blood, of language, of habits, and even interests, this voice will be listened to for the advantage of all

His Catholic Majesty carries his views to a more distant horizon, and considers this question as a European question A long space of time elapsed before the beneficent effects of the discovery of the new world were felt in the old;—no body could foresee them or calculate upon them—it was an immense, unknown and unbounded career which determined their extent His Majesty thinks the same thing may be said about the great events which agitate America, the effects of which must necessarily influence the fate of Europe even in a very rapid manner. It is impossible to calculate either the degree of this influence, or the alteration which it must produce in the mutual relations of the two worlds; but his Majesty is not afraid to affirm, that the transaction which will fix the fate of the Spanish American provinces, and arrest the blind and impetuous course of revolution, will be one of the greatest blessings for the civilized world.

Wants, commerce, habit, and relations of every nature have multiplied the ties which unite the two hemispheres; and it may easily be conceived that a vast continent drawn into a conflict of the passions and become the theatre of a revolution, the end of which is not seen, must exercise a pernicious influence on the political and moral relations of Europe, which is beginning to repose after 30 years of convulsions.

There are perhaps superficial minds, who see a consolidated nation, and a solid and stable government in each of the provinces which have declared their independence, and who, without regard to obstacles of every nature, to the principles of public right and the most known maxims of the law of nations, think that a province legitimazes its independent existence, and acquires the right of being recognized as a state by other powers, by the simple fact of its being detached from that of which it formed a part.

But a sad experience has demonstrated to governments the lamentable effects which such an overthrow of principles has produced; they foresee the consequences of its propagation so fatal to legitimate governments as to the integrity of nations, and they examine to the bottom the consequences which would be occasioned in Europe by a sanction of the indefinite right of insurrection demanded for America by some persons.

Thus, then his Catholic Majesty not only deems interested in this question the nations who possess ultra-marine colonies, to which the same theory may be applied, which it is wished to legitimize in the Spanish American provinces, but it considers this affair as being intimately connected with those guardian principles which form the safety of governments and the guarantees of society.

RUSSIA.

We have it on undoubted authority, that forty-eight Russian officers are under trial at Kitchenoff for acts of rebellion and conspiracy against the Government. It is certain, that the Government of that country is not so strong as is generally thought. The disaffection among the nobility and the army is very great and very general

We are informed by the editors of the Quarterly Review, in the number published in March, that the Emperor Alexander has published a ukase or edict in which he lays claim to the North West coast of North America from the 51st degree of North latitude to the Icy Cape, and prohibits foreign vessels from approaching within a hundred miles of that part of the coast. An examination of his right may lead us to reflect on the futility of his pretensions. The claims of nations to disputed territories are usually founded either on discovery, possession or conquest. We are informed by Dr. Morse, that the Russian navigator Bhering, in the year 1741, after sailing through the streights to which he has given his name, visited the coast as far as 53 degrees of North latitude The Spaniards are allowed about the year 1741, to have been the first who sailed South from that parallel to about the 54th degree. The Emperor's title by priority of discovery, cannot therefore be good; and the British North West company being in possession of 5 degrees and 14 minutes of the part which he claims render it no better on the second principle than the first. As to conquest that is yet to be attempted. To mention that this country is of considerable importance, on account of the fur trade with the natives, is unnecessary, as it is well known that different nations have found it advantageous to have large companies established in different parts of it. It has been justly remarked that in most other places where furs have been hitherto procured, the number of fur bearing animals are gradually decreasing; and in the course of a few years but a very small number will probably remain. Then the extent of this country; the thinness of the population and the abundance and variety of fur bearing animals will conspire to render it of the utmost consequence. The climate is represented as much milder than in the same parallels of latitude on the eastern coast; the natives as peaceable and ingenious, the rivers and lakes so abounding with the finest fish, and the general appearance of the country is highly picturesque and beautiful. No wonder then that Alexander wishes to annex this to his empire which is now only equal to about two millions of square miles. But let us, for a moment, consider what consequences will probably result from publishing the ukase. It cannot be reasonably supposed that the Emperor will endeavor to enforce a claim so totally unfounded, yet acting otherwise must appear ridiculous. Probably his reputation for soundness of judgment and promptitude of decision will not be raised much by his conduct either in this instance or with respect to his affairs with the Porte.

GREEKS.

The following Address from the Greeks at Constantinople, to their brethren in London, cannot be read without the deepest emotion;—

"Constantinople, May 25, 1822.

"Dear and beloved Brethren and Countrymen in London,

"We doubt not that the news contained therein must have already reached you and fallen like a thunderbolt on your hearts. What more dreadful than the knowledge that our country has been visited with such misery;—ten of them in person here—and those in the castle of Scio, universally live in all universally esteemed and respected, chosen and held as natives for more than a year past. at least without a single motive, without even the shadow of a personal accusation against them, have been barbarously executed! These at first deeply lamented the unmerited restraint put upon the persons of those now no more Their death ignominious and cruel, is the first burst of grief, nearly paralysed our faculties; but these we look upon now as enjoying eternal and immutable felicity. Our pity no longer is then due, but it flows for those unfortunates who have survived, and who henceforth are doomed to have tyranny unexampled in history, and deprivations of every kind. Who can, without shuddering, recall to the total ruin, the entire desolation, of our famed and once happy Isle—the destruction of all its inhabitants, nearly one hundred thousand, who, except a very few, who almost miraculously escaped from those ill fated shores, have fallen victims to the sword, to fire, hunger, and slavery, that worst of all evils? Who can, without feelings of indignation mantling their cheeks—without execrating the perpetrators of these horrid acts, behold a whole city, lately so flourishing, now one heap of ruins—whole villages, innumerable country seats, a prey to the flames? Our celebrated School, Library, Hospital for the sick and for the leper, a hazard for those attacked with the plague, hundreds of churches richly adorned —all, all one confused mass of smoking rubbish. Our island, lately so much frequented by Europeans, and more especially by English families of the first rank, will now have only wretched fruit, to be seen so harrowing to the feelings! How miserable those still suffered to exist—who see the sufferings, hear the cries, and piteous accents of their wives, children and relations; and are witnesses to the barbarous treatment this devoted and innocent people receive from the wretches who have them in their power! What can be laid to our charge? we poor Sciots, who from the beginning have remained faithful, are rewarded with death and slavery! It is well known, as soon as the Porte heard of the insurrection in the Morea and sundry islands of the Archipelago, it sent here a Pacha with three tails, having with him about three thousand troops; the whole of the expenses of the garrison was defrayed by our island, which in the course of about fourteen months paid more than 2,700,000 plastres, each, according to his means. Besides this, the Sultan ordered a choice to be made of sixty of the most considerable and respectable from our countrymen, beginning with our Archbishop Plato, the Elders, and other principal inhabitants. The Pacha was to treat them as Britons, as men, as fellow beings—it is in the cause of humanity and religion; they cannot, will not, be deaf to your prayers and exertions; they will afford us, as far as lies in their power, the means of redeeming the captive. Of aiding those families that are in a state of nudity and starvation, who will soon arrive in almost every part of the Mediterranean, when they have been enabled to fly from a yoke worse than death. We rely upon your endeavors, and still more upon the high character of the nation, among whom you inhabit—thousands of hands are raised towards you to claim your interference in behalf of your oppressed countrymen. Thousands of hearts will feel grateful for your assistance Brethren and countrymen, exert yourselves in behalf of humanity—with tearful eye we cordially salute you, and beg you will pray to God for our safety.

RECIPE FOR MAKING EVERLASTING SHOES.

A fobleman of Grasco y, (for al Grasco s noblemen) complaining that his pumps did not last, long enough, the humble shoemaker asked him of what stuff his lordship would like to have them made—"Make the vamp" said he, "of the throat of a coonister—the quarter of the skin of a wolf's neck—and the sole of a woman's tongue." The astonished Crispin made bold with a second question, in the shape of a timid and hesitating "pourquoi?"—"Why? you blockhead," replied the wag, "because the first never admits water—the second, because it never bends on either side;—and the last, because, though always in motion, it never wears out."

THE RISING OF THE WAVES.

From the London Literary Gazette.

The sovereignty of the seas has long been the boast of England, and it is not extraordinary that the stage, which we all know from many good authorities to be the copy the imitation, the speculum as it were of the real world, should partake in some consentient degree of aqueous claims, wars and accidents of the country A remarkable instance of this occurred last week at Covent Garden Theatre.

Almost every (dramatical) body has seen the pompous pageant of Cherry and Fair Star, in which an ancient ship sails into the port of Cyprus amid the shouts of the Cyprians, the plaudits of the British spectators, and the well contrived rolling of the Mediterranean. Probably few, however are aware of the means employed to cause this natural heaving of the mighty vessel, this surge beating against the towers of Cyprus, and this tossing of the gilded galley of Greece It will hardly be believed that the whole is accomplished by about 35 boys tumbling about under a sheet of painted canvass—but so it is. These submarine performers whose exertions have always been crowned with roars of applause, could not it seems, escape from the manacles of enchantment, which is the prevailing endemic of our times. One of the new managers, Capt. Forbes, (more denominated by the discontented, Sixpenny Forbes) took it into his head that the salary of the waves, videlicet, a shilling a head, was too high. Even Shakspeare himself might be got up in a less expensive form; and he resolved to have his boys in the water at sixpence a piece. This determination being communicated to the waves, was particularly salt to them, they curled up their noses in scorn, and appeared ready to swallow up the hateful propounder. Had he wielded Neptune's trident they would not have obeyed him; and two-thirds of the Mediterranean immediately ran dry—affording a striking proof of the difference between that sea and the Pacific. A tearful storm ensued, such as the captain though an old & good sailor, had never witnessed before. He could no longer spread his canvass to the breeze; and as for tacking his vessel into port, it was not to be hoped for, without the tax of another kind Like all British seamen, he was nevertheless firm and rather than be drained himself, he washed his hands of them and ordered the mutinous waters to be poured into the street. The fluids offered a solid resistance, but in vain; they were disposed and a new set of sixpenny waves secured to secure overflowing audiences. It was on Thursday that this memorable event happened, and that this great unconscious metropolis was exposed to all the horrors of an inundation. In the adjacent streets, Hart-street, Bow-street, and Covent Garden market, the rebellious flows boiled and lashed themselves into fury. About midnight the tempest was at its height; and when the Sea of Sixpence rolled out upon the shilling sea, a dreadful conflict ensued There is a tide in the affairs of boys as well as in affairs of men; and here it was exemplified both in flood and ebb. Mr Thomas Moore's beautiful lady fair the Queen of the Waters." was to be conjured to this meeting—The insurgent surges prevailed and the last poor representatives of waves which washed the classic coast of Greece, were precipitated upon the common shores whence their reflux resembled nothing so nearly as that of the Euxine or Black Sea.

A calm followed; and upon re-agitating the matter in all its fluctuations, the naval commander found that it would be wisdom to yield to a current which he could not resist. The original waves, at the original prices, again roll under the meridian of Fair Star.

An English traveller after describing the fete given at Paris in honor of the late peace with England, concludes with the following anecdote, "A lusty young Frenchman, who, from his head dress, a la Titus, I shall distinguish by that name, escorting a lady, whom on account of her beautiful hair, I shall style Berenice, stood on one of the hindmost benches. The belle, habited in a tunic a la Grecque, with a species of sandals which discovered the elegant form of her leg, was unfortunately not of a stature sufficiently commanding to see over the heads of the other spectators. It was to no purpose that the gentleman called out a bas les Chapeaux! when the hats were off the lady still saw no better. What will not gallantry suggest to a man of fashionable education? Our considerate youth perceived at no great distance some persons standing on a plank supported by a couple of casks. Confiding the fair Berenice to my care he vanished; but almost in an instant he re-appeared, followed by two men, bearing an empty hogshead, which it seems, he procured from the Tavern at the west entrance of the Thuileries, To place the cask near the feet of the lady, pay for it, and fix her on it was the business of a moment. Here then she was like a statue on its pedestal, enjoying the double gratification of seeing and being seen. But, for enjoyment to be complete, we must share it with those we love. On examining the space where the wood, the lady saw there was room for two; and accordingly invited the gentleman to place himself beside her. In vain he resisted her intreaties; in vain he feared to incommode her She commanded, he could do no less than obey. Stepping upon the bench, he thence nimbly sprang to the cask; but O, fatal catastrophe! while by the light of the neighboring clusters of lamps every one was admiring the mutual attention of this sympathising pair, in went the head of the hogshead

Our till then envied couple fell suddenly up to the middle of the leg in the wine lees left in the cask, by which they were bespattered up to their very eyes Nor was this all; being too eager to extricate themselves they overset the cask, and came to the ground rolling in it and its offensive contents. It would be no easy matter to picture the ludicrous situation of citizen Titus and Madam Berenice. This being the only mischief resulting from their fall a universal burst of laughter seized the surrounding spectators, in which I took so considerable a share that I could not immediately afford my assistance."

COPPER MINE RIVER.

Through the solicitude of a Gentleman, who has just arrived in this City, from a distant post in the North West Territory, we have received intelligence that the expedition which was fitted out by direction of the Admiralty, in the Summer of 1819, under the orders of Lieut. Franklin, was on its return to Hudson's Bay.

The expedition advanced as near to the Copper Mine River in the following year, as the approaching winter would permit; and in the Spring of the next year, having embarked the canoes which they had carried over land with them, they descended that River, until it discharges itself into the Hyperborean or Frozen Ocean. The expedition then proceeded in the execution of its ulterior object, namely, to explore the coast of the Polar Sea from the mouth of the Copper Mine River, round to Hudson's Bay —This, however, it would appear from the information we have been able to collect, it could no further effect than by surveying a few hundred miles at the coast to the Northward and Eastward, the winter having set in, towards the latter end of August with such severity as to oblige the party to return. It does not appear from the arrangement which was made, that land marks should be placed by either Captain Parry or Lieut. Franklin as they should first arrive at certain points as they proceeded, that the former had reached so far as the party of the latter.

Several deaths had occurred among whom was Mr. Wood a native Canadian and the Esquimaux.

It is stated that from the observations made in this expedition, the mouth of the Copper Mine River is differ by several degrees of latitude from what laid down by Hearn —Montreal Herald

MONASTIC SEAL —A monastic seal, in perfect preservation, was found last November, in a potatoe field, called Low Garth, near Langrick in the Ouse. It is of mixed or bell metal, two and a half inches long, of an oval shape, pointed at the ends, and pierced through the shield; the inscription is "Sigillum fr territuatis monasterii beate Marie de Hayes."—In the centre on a ground of flowers, is the figure of a man, clothed in a monkish style, bare headed and shorn, standing on an elevation of three steps, holding in his right hand a globe surmounted by a cross, and in his left a staff or sceptre, sparkling into three buds or bunches at the top. Although found within a short distance of Drax Abbey, which was sometimes called also Heilham, and possessed a neighboring estate named Hales, it cannot be referred to that foundation, which was a Priory dedicated to St Nicholas; neither does it appear to belong to Hales Owen Abbey, but to the mitred Cistern Abbey of Hayles, in Gloucestershire, which was founded by Richard, Earl of Cornwall and king of the Romans, in 1246, at the expense of 10,000 marks, and dedicated to the virgin. How it come into Yorkshire must be mere conjecture, as there was no connexion between the two establishments.—Hull Advertiser.

NATURAL HISTORY.

Mermaid.—There is an account of a Mermaid, said to have been taken in the sea of Japan, going the rounds of the American papers. Many will suppose it is intended to succeed the Sea Serpent in that Book of Wonders, which must be kept up in order to gratify that love of the marvelous, which is so prevalent amongst our neighbours.—Whether the account is correct, it is impossible for us to say, but it derives considerable interest from the extraordinary resemblance which the description of this Japanese specimen bears to an animal of the same kind taken in the Gulph of Stanchio in the year 1764 and which is both described and figured in the General Chronicle for March 1812.—Such a striking resemblance between two different specimens taken in seas so remote from each other, should go far to prove the actual existence of this famous animal, although we are well aware it is no difficult matter to make up an artificial specimen from parts of different animals, so nicely adjusted as to be of difficult detection.—It is remarkable that the instances now alluded to should have arrived so far to the southward, it being anciently supposed that the Mermaid was a creature of the higher northern latitudes.—Ed.

A MERMAID.

An American shipmaster from this port became the fortunate purchaser, some months ago, in the island of Java, of a preserved Mermaid which had been brought to Batavia by a Japanese, and was supposed to have been taken on the coast of one of the Japan Isles. The fish had become putrefy, dry, and was originally, it is thought, about four feet in length. From a gentleman who lately saw the specimen, we learn that the descriptions given in old natural history and the representations frequently seen in old drawings of the Mermaid, are fully confirmed by the appearance of this rare and perhaps unexampled preparation. The head is covered with light colored hair coarser than human hair. The upper part of the face resembles a man's but the lower part approaches a monkey's. The nose is flat like that of an African Negro.—From the upper jaw of a very wide mouth, descend two tusks passing over the lower lip; but the rest on both jaws are very like human teeth. The eyes are sunken from the dissicated state of the skin, and the eyes are deeply sunk in the sockets. The shape of the bust is precisely like the configuration of a woman, below which the body gradually becomes scaly, and tapering by degrees, terminates in a fish's tail. There are four fins on the lower part of the body, and the extremity of the tail is forked.

This curiosity was exhibited at the Cape of Good Hope, and submitted to the inspection of several naturalists from England who entirely concurred in the opinion that this is an example of the Mermaid, whose existence has been generally held to be fabulous. The owner is proceeding to Europe and we may soon expect to hear of its arrival in England.

A Petrified Woman.—An account dated Exton, (Ohio,) June 2d. states that "An elderly gentleman who lately died in Fayette county, State of Kentucky, previous to his death requested that his daughter's remains should be disinterred and deposited by the side of his own. His daughter had been buried about eleven years, in the County of Bourbon, Ky. After his decease, the old gentleman's request was complied with. To the great surprise and astonishment of those engaged in raising the daughter's remains, her body was found to be entire, and of it full size. On a minute examination, it was discovered to be perfectly petrified; its specific gravity was about the same as that of common lime stone. The coffin was entirely decayed. Her countenance had undergone so small an alteration, that her husband, it is said, on beholding her fainted."

An Affectionate Rattlesnake.—The Petersburgh Intelligencer announces an attractive exhibition of Serpents. Among them is a full grown Rattle Snake, (perhaps the most deadly poisonous of the serpentine race,) upwards of four feet in length, five or six inches in circumference, with its fangs and rattles entire. So completely domesticated as to be handled with perfect safety, as to coil itself upon the neck and kiss the cheeks of its master—in short to be as completely under his command as his dog, and to manifest the same grateful affection towards him! There is no disputing about tastes; but it would require sometime to reconcile us to a live Rattle Snake for a cravat, or even to receive kiss from such a loving animal.

POETRY.

The following lines have appeared in an English paper. They are part of a copy of verses found in a wretched garret, in the city of Glasgow, after the decease of a young female of superior education and connexions, who fell a victim of disease, of poverty and wretchedness, exhibiting a terrible picture of mental anguish in the midst of pollution. In turning from the melancholy portrait, we are assured with the Poet, that

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
"That to be hated, needs but to be seen"

And yet how many thousands there are who, for the want of a little resolution in resisting the first approaches of the Tempter, run the dreadful risk of perishing in a manner equally shocking and hopeless!

Wher pamper'd, starv'd, abandon'd or in drink,
My thoughts were rack'd in striving not to think,
Nor could rejected conscience claim the pow'r,
T'improve the respite of one serious hour,
I durst not look to what I was before
My soul shrunk back, and wish'd to be no more.
Of eye undaunted and of touch impure;
Of a're of age; worn out when scarce mature;
Daily debased; to stifle my disgust
Of forced enjoyment in affected lust;
Cover'd with guilt, infection, debt and want;
My home a brothel, and the street my haunt;
Till the full course of vice and sin gone through,
My shatter'd fabric fall'd at twenty-two.
Then Death, with ev'ry horror in his train,
Here closed the scene of nought but guilt and pain
Ye fair associates of my op'ning bloom,
Oh! come and weep, and profit at my tomb!
Then shun the path where gay delusions shine!
Be your's the lesson—and experience mine.

DOMESTIC.

HALIFAX, July 30.

Communication with Quebec.—We understand it is proposed to purchase one of the Steam vessels that at present navigate the St Lawrence, and that this vessel shall be owned by a Company to be formed in Quebec and Halifax. The first cost of the vessel together with the outfits are estimated at £10,000, and it is intended that there should be 200 shares at £100 each; it appears that the passage from one port to the other would occupy six days, and therefore the vessel could call at Pictou and take in coals, and complete her voyage round in twenty four days, and thus make 14 trips during the summer season.

No. 21. Our endeavor will be to "stamp the very body of the time—its form and pressure"— we shall exhaust nothing, nor shall we set down aught in malice. Vol. I.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1822.

Editorial Commentary.

The thanks of every loyal British Subject on this Continent are due to the Editor of the ALBION, the new English Paper published at New York, for the very proper manner in which he has rebuked two American Editors, who are chiefly remarkable for their self conceit, wonderful impertinence, and gross, republican, licentiousness,—although editing News Papers of considerable repute amongst our neighbours. We mean the Editors of the "Baltimore Patriot," a paper celebrated for its senseless animosity towards the British Monarchy; and of "Niles's Register."—These men have thought proper to insult our Gracious Sovereign, and consequently all true Englishmen, in a very gross, though at the same time a very silly and childish, manner. We do not think it necessary to repeat the libels, but we beg leave to remind the Baltimore Patriot of one characteristic of our beloved Sovereign, which even his enemies, and the enemies of the British name and greatness, universally accede to him, which is, that he is, in all respects, a finished Gentleman, so much so, that he has been styled, even by Foreigners not very well disposed towards him, "the most finished Gentleman in Europe."—Now, as it is well known that swearing, and the use of epithets approaching to that vile habit, is banished from the higher, and more refined circles of society, not only as an unmeaning and vulgar, but a wicked practice, altogether unbecoming the name and character of a Gentleman, it is not very likely that he, who is the model of gentility, should be guilty of it.—So that, although we may allow that his Majesty did chat, with his accustomed urbanity and spirit, and in pure French, with M. DE CHATEAUBRIAND, we cannot believe that he either swore, or called in the assistance of the D—l, to eke out the conversation!!

We have this week been furnished with the "Heads of the Bill for re uniting the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, as amended in the Committee of the House of Commons, and ordered to be printed." Of these we have given, under the head of Great Britain, all those which can, at present, be of any importance to our readers.—Although more numerous, they do not very materially differ from the outline we gave of this Bill so long ago as the 18th of July.

According to our promise we have published, in this number, the first part of a review of the Parliamentary Debates in the year 1791, on the subject of dividing the Province of Quebec into separate Provinces, as they have since been.—This will enable our readers to compare the reasoning of our Statesmen 30 years ago, with the reasoning of our Statesmen of the present day, on the same important question. So many years of practical experience has fairly tried one side of the question: we are shortly to make an actual experiment of the advantages and disadvantages of the other side: and we doubt not that if the parental solicitude of our mother country, for our prosperity, is fairly tested by corresponding exertions, and unanimity, on our part, that all will end well, and be for the real interests, strength, power, and future greatness, of this country.

Upwards of 10 000 Settlers have arrived Quebec, so far, during the present season.

GREAT BRITAIN.

(Concluded from our last.)

All other considerations disappear in presence of the latter; and therefore his Catholic Majesty does not wish to recur to the less important reasons which, in ordinary times, policy enough to respect and the defence of justice.

In further looking at the question in a new point of view, Spain presents in all her relations new and powerful motives for determining other Powers to preserve the strictest impartiality regarding her. Exempt from every kind of ambitious pretensions, based relatively to other nations in an offensive position, and exclusively occupied with the establishment and consolidation of her internal happiness, she cannot provoke the jealousy of rivals, nor excite a desire to dismember different countries of monarchy, with the object of weakening her. Spain, whatever may be her force, cannot menace the power or the safety of other nations, but rich and flourishing, she may have an advantageous influence in preserving the equilibrium of the Powers. An instinct of honor and integrity has united the unknown elements of her force; and engaged in the most unequal struggle, she afforded time to the continent to rise against the common enemy, and destroy his oppressive yoke. This one fact renders every other reflection and commentary useless; it is sufficient to inspire interest in favor of a magnanimous nation, and to announce that its influence shall be always beneficent and never offensive. This is the position which nature and policy assign to Spain among the nations. European governments acted upon this great sufficient principle when they saw the colossal power of Spain destroyed, which during two centuries had alarmed Europe. After a long conflict, it was considered how to fix the lot of this kingdom, which was looked upon as connected with the federative system of Europe, and at that time the advantage was foreseen of consolidating its power by securing for it in America, a point d'appui, which by increasing its consequence, render it better calculated to maintain the equilibrium of European political balance

This consideration of the general interest appeared so important, that Spain was bound not to alienate in any form, the smallest portion of her territory in America; and to reduce her possession of it still more secure and inviolable, at the same time that it took away all motive for distrust, she renounced the power of granting to other nations, by any means or under any pretext whatever, the advantage of trading in those regions.

Time has nevertheless produced on this point a very important change. A less restricted policy, changes occurring in commercial relations, the modification of economical principles, and a multitude of other combined causes have convinced Spain that to aspire to a preservation or a commercial monopoly, which formerly had been regarded as the principal bond of union between the two great parts of the Spanish monarchy, would be as injurious to the interests of the Peninsula, as to those of the American provinces.

On the contrary, his Catholic Majesty thinks that there are no durable interests in that are not founded on common interests; that peninsular Spain can obtain commercial advantages by her industry and her marine, without aspiring to an exclusive privilege; that new wants and new desires, as a consequence of civilization and riches, render necessary to the provinces beyond seas, a more frank and liberal system, and that instead of struggling uselessly against the mercantile system, which exercises such influence on the political system of modern nations, the true interest of Spain consists in adopting this spirit as a useful ally, and not in converting it into an irreconcilable enemy

To obtain so important results, all the laws and arrangements made posterior to the reform of the Colonial government have had a tendency beneficent, generous, and favorable to the colonization of fore gners in Spanish America, and the freedom of commerce with those distant regions. The trial made in the island of Cuba has been sufficient to demonstrate that their interests, those of Spain, and in general those of other nations, coincide in the same point.

His Catholic Majesty, by this simple and natural means has removed the only obstacle which could prevent the most complete union between the policy of Spain and that of other Cabinets A government that is solid and stable, recognized, and the faithful observer of treaties, is disposed to negociate with the insurgent provinces of America, and offers to other nations the greatest commercial advantages. It would be impossible to point out (though the question were reduced to a simple calculation of interests) an object which could serve as a counterpoise in the opposite scale.

Civil war and anarchy, which are often the consequence of revolution, and more particularly when, as in America, its elements are heterogeneous and opposite, are assuredly not calculated to increase the exchangeable productions of a country, nor to attract foreigners, by offering them that safety which leaves no doubt and which is the soul of commerce; neither can vacillating governments do it, precarious in their nature and without guarantee, which cannot themselves secure the advantages which they themselves present. Borne down, abandoned to itself, has endeavored in vain for the last twelve years to consolidate a government. The wretchedness and depopulation of the provinces of the Main, instead of advancing have removed to a greater distance the epoch of their prosperity and their riches. In affairs of this nature, and when facts come to the support of reasoning, it is useless to oppose vague and indefinite hopes to certain and known results.

But it appears that a new calamity has arrived to increase the evils which might have been foreseen.—The insurrection on the American Continent has favored piracy on the seas. General commerce begins to feel the want of security, and the dangers of this war, which knows no other laws than those of self interest, and pillages indiscriminately the industrious citizens of all nations

Thus by an admirable concatenation of facts, every thing concurs to demonstrate the utility, nay, even the urgency, of a vast definite arrangement in an affair which has so vast and profound ramifications; and every thing contributes to press upon the Spanish government the folly of retarding, through any secondary motive, a transaction so important.

His Catholic Majesty, in entering upon this frank and amicable negociation with the insurgent provinces, expects, with the greatest confidence, to find in all governments, that circumspection and that reserve of conduct, prescribed by justice, recommended by policy, and inspired by sentiments of impartiality and good will.

When the Spanish nation endeavors to put an end to this domestic misunderstanding, the same inviolable respect which she professes for the rights of other nations, inspires her with the just confidence of being treated with similar consideration and regard. She cannot even suspect, on the part of those who desire to preserve friendship and good understanding, any step hazarded, which might suppose the question already resolved, the decision of which belongs to Spain alone, in making use of her legitimate and recognized rights, which she has never renounced. In this state of things, the steps taken to engage different powers in a recognition of the independence of the insurgent powers of America will present, on the contrary, a solemn occasion to sanction the fundamental principles on which the integrity of territory, the repose of nations, and the public morality of governments are founded.

The text and spirit of treaties—the good faith which ought to reign between powers in amity—the conviction of a duty equally supported upon a temporary and general policy—the real welfare of the insurgent provinces, and even the general advantage of all commerce, are the motives which his Catholic Majesty sees as sovereign guarantees that his laudable desires will find among his august allies the most favorable and most friendly reception

By the Author of the "Sketch Book."

From the following specimen it would appear that WASHINGTON IRVING has touched on subjects of a much higher nature, and in a style very superior to what it is commonly handled in Novels and works of mere fiction—as yet only stray extracts of the work have reached us: they make us long to see the entire production.—The passage we now present to our readers, exhibits a display of philosophical inquiry; manly sentiment; and noble principle, seldom found in the class of writers to which he belongs.—It will be long before he wearies the admiration of the British public with his productions should they possess equal merit with those he has already given us.—Ed.

"Though born and brought up in a Republic, and more and more confirmed in republican principles by every year's observation and experience, yet I am not insensible to the excellence that may exist in other forms of government, nor to the idea that they may be more suitable to the situation and circumstances of the countries in which they exist. I have endeavored rather to look at them as they are, and to observe how they are calculated to effect the end which they purpose. Considering, therefore, the mixed nature of the government of this country, and the representative form, I have looked with admiration at the manner in which the wealth and influence and intelligence were spread over its whole surface; not as in some monarchies, drained from the country, and collected in towns and cities. I have considered the great rural establishments of the nobility, and lesser establishments of the gentry, as so many reservoirs of wealth and intelligence distributed about the kingdom, a part from the towns to irrigate, freshen, and fertilize the surrounding country. I have looked upon them too, as the august retreats of patriots and statesmen, where, in the enjoyment of honorable independence and elegant leisure, they might train up their minds to appear in those Legislative Assemblies, whose debates and decisions form the study and precedents of other nations, and involve the interests of the world. I have been both surprised and disappointed, therefore, at finding, that on this subject I was often indulging in a Utopian dream, rather than a well founded opinion. I have been concerned at finding, that those fine estates were too often mortgaged, and placed to the hands of creditors, and the owners exiled from their paternal lands.—There is an extravagance, I am told, that runs parallel with wealth; a lavish expenditure among the great; a senseless competition among the aspiring; a heedless, joyless dissipation, among all the upper ranks, that often beggars even those splendid establishments, breaks down the pride and principles of their possessors, and makes too many of them mere place hunters, or shifting absentees. It is thus that so many are thrown into the hands of government; and a court, which ought to be the most pure and honorable in Europe, is so often degraded by noble, but importunate time servers. It is thus, too, that so many become exiles from their native land, crowding the hotels of foreign countries, and expending upon thankless strangers the wealth so hardly drained from their laborious peasantry. I have looked upon these latter with a mixture of censure and concern.

"Knowing the almost bigotted fondness of an Englishman for his native home, I can conceive what must be their compunction and regret, when amidst the sunburnt plains of France, they call to mind the green fields of England; the hereditary groves which they have left desolate, or to be inhabited by strangers. But retrenchment is plea for an abandonment of country. They have risen with the prosperity of the land; let them abide its fluctuations, and conform to its fortunes. It is not for the rich to fly because the country is suffering: let them share, in their relative proportion, the common lot; they owe it to the land that has elevated them to honor and influence. When the poor have to diminish their scanty morsel of bread; when they have to compound with the cravings of nature, and study with how little they can do, and not to be starved; it is not then for the rich to fly, and diminish still further the resources of the poor, that they themselves may live in splendor in a cheaper country.—Let them rather retire to their estates, and there practice retrenchment. Let them return to that noble simplicity, that practical good sense, that honest pride, which form the foundation of true English character, and from them they may again rear the edifice of fair and honorable prosperity.

"On the rural habits of the English nobility and gentry; on the manner in which they discharge their duties on their paternal possessions, depend greatly the virtue and welfare of the nation,

INDEX AT END

So long as they pass the greater part of their time in the quiet and purity of the country; surrounded by the monuments of their illustrious ancestors; surrounded by every thing that can inspire generous pride, noble emulation, and amiable and magnanimous sentiment; so long as they are safe, and in them the nation may repose its interests and its honor. But the moment that they become the servile throngers of court avenues, and give themselves up to political intrigues and heartless dissipations of the metropolis, that moment they lose the real nobilities of their natures, and become the mere leeches of their country. That the great majority of the nobility and gentry in England are endowed with high notions of honor and independence, I thoroughly believe.—They have evidenced it lately on very important questions, and have given an example of adherence to principles, in preference to party and power, that must have astonished many of the venal and obsequious courts of Europe. Such are the glorious effects of freedom, when infused into a constitution.—But it seems to me that they ought never to forget the positive nature of the duties, and to fancy that their eminent privileges are only so many means of self-indulgence. They should recollect, that in a constitution like that of England, the titled orders are intended to be as useful as they are ornamental, and it is their virtues alone that can render them both. Their duties are divided between the sovereign and the subject; surrounding and giving lustre and dignity to the throne, and at the same time tempering and mitigating the rays until they are transmitted, in mild and genial radiance to the people. Born to leisure and opulence, they owe the exercise of their talents, and the expenditure of their wealth to the native country. They may be compared to the clouds; which being drawn up by the sun, and elevated in the heavens, reflect and magnify his splendor, while they repay the earth, from which they derive their sustenance, by returning their treasures to its bosom in fertilizing showers."

The new London Bridge is to be erected as nearly as possible to and not exceeding 170 feet from, the west side of the present bridge, and to afford a clear water way of not less than 696 feet. It is to be faced with granite, and to consist of five arches; the centre arch to rise 23 feet above high water mark of an average spring tide, according to the Trinity House standard, which is shewn upon the face of the present bridge. Proper stairs of granite are to be provided. The acclivity of the road way, to and over the bridge, is not to be steeper than one foot in 26 feet.

Consumption of Spirits.—In the second Agricultural Report just printed, Mr. Dunlop, a distiller, of Haddington, is stated to have given the following interesting evidence on the subject of the consumption of spirits, paying duty:—

State the quantity of spirits for which duty was paid respectively, in England, Ireland, and Scotland, with reference to the population?—The people of England, exclusively of the army and navy, is stated to be 11,977,662; the spirits made in England last year upon which duty was paid, amounted to 3,053,351 gallons; there was imported from the export distillers in Scotland, 1,160,575 gallons; but as I have seen no return from Ireland, the consumption may be stated the same as the preceding year, which it may be better to for the statement; consequently there was made in England in the preceding year, 3,186,905 gallons; brought from Scotland, 1,104,153 gallons; brought from Ireland, 378,376 gallons; making a total of 4,671,738 gallons, and affording a consumption for 5,840 quarters of barley. The population of Ireland is stated at 6,847,949; the spirits charged with duty from the 1st October, 1820, to the 1st of October, 1821, as 4,618,105 gallons, making the consumption of barley 256,561 quarters. The population of Scotland is stated at 2,092,014—the spirits charged with duty from the 10th of November 1820, to the 10th of November, 1821, 2,563,676 gallons; making the consumption of barley 142,593 quarters.

To what do you attribute so great a difference in the consumptions of British spirits, in the different parts of the kingdom? Principally to the quality.

This witness further stated, that in Scotland there are 109 distillers, working for home consumption; the distillers in that country are confined entirely to their own market, not having permission to send the spirits they make out of Scotland, and they cannot become export distillers, until their works have remained one year unemployed, and even then it is very difficult to overcome the obstacles placed in their way; and if they do obtain a license as export distillers, they are obliged to work under the English law which allows the manufacture of spirits only applicable for rectification, & the English market.

EQUALITY CONSIDERED.

[From Dr James Scott's "Sermon" preached at St. George's, Hanover Square, April 5th, 1794, and lately published.]

IT is one of the wildest and most fantastic of all chimeras to suppose that men, fashioned and disposed as we are by the Almighty, could ever live peaceably together for any length of time in a state of equality, and have all things in common; for it is plain that, unless they had all things in common; such a state of equality could not possibly subsist. Those who have planned such a visionary project have always taken for granted the very thing that stood in the greatest need of proof, and without which they built only castles in the air without any foundation, or amused themselves like children with blowing up gaudy bubbles, which the least breath of air would disperse in a moment. If indeed all men were perfectly just and honest, a supposition which is the key-stone that supports all their reasoning, such a communion of goods might be natural enough, and convenient; but, where shall we find this primitive innocence and simplicity, this more than Saturnian Justice and perfection of virtue? We must look for it in Atlantis*, Utopia†, the Realm of the Sun‡, or any where in short except in this corrupt and degenerate world of ours, where it would be downright idiotism to expect it. No! We are here distracted with a variety of wild and irregular passions, which, unless they are held with a bit and bridle, will be always hurrying us over the bounds of Justice and honesty. In such a state as this, and to persons disposed thus waywardly, a community of goods would be attended with a thousand inconveniences, a thousand mischiefs. Let us put the case as favourably as possible; and, flying away from this iron age of penury and violence, transport ourselves back to the favourite æra of poets and moralists, to the happy golden days of peace and plenty. Let us suppose that the hand of all bountiful Nature was to pour her blessings so lavishly upon us, that they were more than sufficient to supply all our wants and necessaries; nay, since we have once begun, let us suppose too that her bounty was so miraculously circumstanced, to prevent all rapacious and greedy hoarding, as the manna of the Israelites, of which we read, that whosoever gathered much had nothing over, and he that gathered little had no lack; yet even then, what would be the consequence? We should sink into a state of supineness and indolence; we should be more despicable to the impartial eye of Reason than the little, busy, provident, communities of ants and bees; there would be no society nor kind intercourse of benefits where we could none of us stand in need of another's assistance; all the liberal arts and sciences, which at present embellish and beautify§ human life, would be unknown and unthought of; we should live, or rather vegetate, in dull and inglorious solitude, and subsist, like worthless drones, on the common plunder of the creation. What a flat unvarying prospect is this! and how intolerable would be such a state of inactivity and indifference! Yet, bad as it appears, it is far preferable to what would really ensue from a communion of goods in our present situation and circumstances. We see that Nature is impaired with age, and almost worn out with hard and incessant labours; she is no longer a kind and indulgent parent, that prevents the wishes of her numerous children; but like a cruel and obdurate step-mother, will part with nothing till compelled to it by necessity. Now, in this situation, were men to labour in common, and be supported from the same promiscuous heap, the feuds and animosities that would arise are innumerable and endless. What equality could there be between the profit and expences of different persons? One man would be indolent, and another luxurious; yet both are to be maintained from the common stock, as well as the industrious and frugal. It would be vain to enumerate all the inconveniences that would attend such a disposition of the goods of Nature; and we can never sufficiently adore the wisdom and providence of God, who has so contrived it that, though all men are by nature equal, there should be a regular subordination in the world, and that we should all stand in need of each other's assistance. What an orderly and beautiful gradation, what a continued chain and series of dependences, what frequent opportunities for a reciprocation of kindness and benevolence, spring naturally from this distribution and management of affairs!

I have just asserted that all men are by nature equal; by which I cannot be understood to mean that all men are born with the same sagacity of mind or vigour of constitution, nor that they are born with equal rights; for, that would be a palpable absurdity, as they are born with no rights at all. It is a mortifying, but an undeniable truth, that of all God's creatures, man at his birth is the most indigent and impotent; he depends for support and existence upon parental affection; this is his only claim, his only right; and, though Providence by a powerful instinct has contrived that this right should be generally allowed, yet there are instances, in civilized as well as savage nations, that controvert it. When it is affirmed, therefore, that all men are by nature equal, it can mean only that we are all children of the same common father; all partakers of the same common nature; all endowed with the same rational and immortal principle; all introduced without our consent into the same world—a world full of irregularity, full of inequality, in which we are placed, as in a state of trial and probation, to fit that particular rank which Providence has thought fit to assign to us. If we consider the vast disparity there is in the tempers, dispositions, capacities, endowments, & passions, of different men, it is plain that an inequality of rank must have been a part of the plan of the divine architect, or mankind would certainly have been framed and fashioned differently. If we consider too the nature and properties of this earth which we inhabit, it is evident, without retroverting to the primæval curse, that the bulk of mankind can only be supported by labour and industry. "Thorns and thistles does it bring forth, and the sweat of their face must they eat the bread thereof." It is clear, therefore, that, in the order of Providence, the distinctions of high and low rich and poor, were determined; and that the latter should bear, in point of numbers, a vast disproportion to the former.

If ever there was a crisis in human affairs when the poor should learn to be content, and the rich to condescend to men of low estate, it is at present. The visionary system of equality, which is so enchanting to the lower class of mankind, has been tried in France, and has rendered the condition of the poor unspeakably wretched. All their resources since the proscription and murder of the rich, are cut off—there is no reward for labor, no encouragement for ingenuity; the hireling is robbed of his wages, the mechanic and manufacturer of their goods, the crops of the farmer are wrested from him by violence, and sold at an arbitrary price; there is no repose, no security even of life; they are harrassed with constant dread and terror; and those, who are not massacred upon false and frivolous pretences, are torn away from their wives and children, and driven like sheep to the slaughter-house, where they are butchered by thousands to promote the views of a few bloody and unfeeling tyrants. If we add to all this, that they are half famished and half naked, we shall have a true picture of the poor in France. How different from that which this happy island exhibits! Here labor and industry are sure of their reward; here every one's engagement is given to ingenuity, the first situations in Church and State being open to the poor as well as the rich; here is no oppression, no injustice, but a perfect security of property, and an equality of right; the peer and the peasant are under the control and protection of the same laws, which in all essential points make no distinction between them: here the gains of the mechanic, the wages of the laborer, and the harvest of the husbandman, are protected from violence and depredation—in short, every poor man is sure in this happy country, to eat the labor of his hands in peace and safety. O! that they were wise, that they understood this! that they would consider these inestimable blessings; blessings derived from our excellent Constitution, which seems to second as it were the intentions of Providence, by taking under its protection that part of his numerous family, which, in other countries, is but too much neglected and oppressed!

BUDGET OF VALUABLE RECIPES.

No. 1.

A large collection of valuable recipes, ancient and modern, in manuscript and in print, in the culinary arts, medicine, farriery, surgery, domestic economy, chemistry, and various arts, and practical sciences, being in our possession, many of which are altogether original—we have considered that it may be acceptable to many of our country subscribers, to whom those recipes must prove useful, from time to time, to publish a budget of them—adding all such that appear in the various prints of the passing day, that are worth preserving. By this means, those who regularly file the "Weekly Register" will gradually find themselves in possession of the best recipes on almost every subject of domestic importance to a good Housewife or Manager of a Family.—The copious Index to be given at the end of each year, will readily enable the inquirer to find any particular recipe.—ED.

Plaister for rendering Linen Cloth impenetrable to Air and Water.—A quarter of a pound of gum elastic is boiled slowly with three quarters of a pint of boiled linseed oil. When the gum is dissolved, about two pints of boiled oil, one pound of rosin, one pound of yellow wax, and as much lithargare added, the whole is boiled together. This mass is applied whilst hot to the linen, which remains, after this layer, as supple as it was before, and it may be applied instead of leather for pipes for fire engines or covering for loaded waggons, and other articles which require to be kept from moisture. Hempen cloth is the best to be used, and the seams are to be done two over.—(Magazinda Exfineurgon)

To cure tainted Meat whether salted or unsalted.—Salted bacon, and unsalted beef and mutton, and other kinds of animal food when too long kept, or improperly cured, so as to be tainted with putridity, may be perfectly recovered, or rendered quite sweet by being buried in fresh earth for a few days. The above hint must be very acceptable at this season of the year; for hares, pheasants, and other game are often thrown away in consequence of persons supposing, on their smelling a little, that they are not eatable; whereas, were they wrapped in coarse cloth, and buried in the earth a short time (where dogs and cats cannot come) they will soon be restored, and be highly acceptable for the table.

Indian cure for the Ear ache.—Take a piece of lean mutton, about the size of a large walnut, put it into the fire and burn it for some time, till it becomes almost reduced to a cinder; then put it into a piece of clean linen, and squeeze it until some moisture is expressed, which must be dropped into the ear as hot as the patient can bear it. This has been tried in a family at Madras, in more than one instance, and gave immediate relief, after laudanum and other medicines had been ineffectually applied.

Recipe for the Itch.—Take of rhubarb, magnesia, crysta tartar, and sulphur, five grains each, with six grains of ginger powdered. To be taken in a wine glass of cold water three mornings successively, and continued once a week, if necessary.

To kill Cockroaches.—Lay the green leaves and stalks, or the roots, of the plant called black hellebore, (veratum veride) on the floor, or where the cockroaches most frequent during the night, and the race of these vile insects will soon be extirpated. They are fond of every part of the plant, and it operates as a poison to them. It grows in rich swampy grounds, with an erect stalk, and sharp pointed leaves, joined to the stalk, the leaves being usually from 4 to 6 inches long, and from 1 to 2 inches wide. It is an early spring plant. The roots are no doubt most efficacious. The cockroach is seldom found in houses in the country, but in compact built towns is often very troublesome and offensive.

NATURAL HISTORY.

THE TEAK TREE.

The following interesting little document was published at a time during the late war, when Oak was exceedingly scarce and dear in England.—Its statements shew the value of Teak-Wood in a very striking manner.—Ed.

OAK AND TEAK TIMBER.

To people accustomed to hear of the durability of ships built with Teak, the rapidity with which those constructed of oak are said to decay, will appear almost incredible. According to the present mode of ship-building, that noble structure, a first rate man of war is said to become useless from premature decay, in five or six years; and it is said the average duration of the navy itself has been limited to eight or ten years! This, particularly when the scarcity of oak timber is considered, is by no means a bright prospect; and is the source of a most serious expence to the nation. Nothing appears so likely to remedy this evil, as building the navy of Teak. The following are some examples of the durability of teak built ships. The Turkish flag ship at Bussorah, was build by Nadir Shah more than seventy years ago; this ship was not long since in dock, when all her timbers were ascertained to be perfectly sound. The Hercules, built, in 1763, and constantly employed till 1805, when she was captured by the French, was sound when Lauched. The Milford, of 679 tons, after constant employment to China and Europe for twenty four years, was examined, but it was not found necessary to [illegible] and the whole of her repairs did not cost £1000. Prejudices, it seems, were entertained in England against teak timber; it was said to be heavier than oak; as one description of teak has been found to be lighter than oak, and another about the same weight. It was also thought to splinter more than oak, an idea equally erroneous with the former; indeed, teak is supposed to have the advantage in this respect, and to splinter less than oak. It is well known that teak has an oil in it, which preserve iron and destroys the worm; while the acid of the oak corrodes iron, and appears peculiarly grateful to the taste of the worm. Nor is teak subject to that incurable cause of rapid decay called the dry rot. From these circumstances it is suggested that the British Navy be, for a time built with teak in order to give time for planting such parts of the Royal Domains appropriated to this purpose as required to be planted, and for the shipwright to execute his work properly: for in old times oak ships have run nearly as long as the term here allowed for teak-built ships, that is, near half a century.

THE PLAGUE.

The inhabitants of Egypt greatly rejoice when the Plague attacks the dogs, for then it always ceases in the human species. Birds are not known to be liable to this lamentable disease.

Remarkable Antipathies.

A lady, a native of France, would faint on seeing boiled lobsters.—A gentleman (name not mentioned) would fall into convulsions at the sight of a carp.—Erasmus, though a native of Rotterdam had such an aversion to fish, that the smell of it gave him a fever.—Ambrose Parr mentions a gentleman who could never see an egg without fainting.—Joseph Scaliger and Peter Abona never could drink milk.—Cardan was particularly disgusted at the sight of eggs.—Uladislaus, King of Poland, could not bear to see apples.—If an apple was shewn to Cheshe, Secretary to Francis I. a prodigious quantity of blood would issue from his nose.—Henry III. of France could never sit in a room with a cat; the D. of Schomberg had the same antipathy. A courier of the Emperor Ferdinand would bleed at the nose on the mewing of a cat.—M. de Lancre, in his Tableau de l'inconstance de toutes choses, relates that a very sensible man was so terrified on seeing a hedge hog, that for two years he imagined his bowels were gnawed out by such an animal; and that a very brave officer, whom he knew perfectly well, never dared to look at a mouse unless he had a sword in his hand.—John Rol, a gentleman of Alcantara, would swoon on hearing the word Lana (wool) pronounced, although his coat was made of it.—Monthly Mag

AGRICULTURE.

The change produced in the condition of English Farmers by a few years of peace, is really wonderful.—In the year 1815, a farmer died in the neighbourhood of Exeter, who rented a large farm. Besides other property which he left, he bequeathed £25,000 each, to his two eldest sons, in money, £10,000 each, to his third and fourth sons, and £5000 to his daughter. The wife of this farmer regularly attended Exeter Market for many years with Fowls, Butter and Eggs.—This account is taken from the Exeter Gazette.—England at that time afforded almost innumerable instances of extraordinary affluence in that class:—now, men of the same rank are flying from their farms, in poverty, to the most distant Colonies.—Ed.

ON THE SMUT IN WHEAT

Of the smut there seems to be two kinds: the one comes out a little earlier than the other, and both spring from the same root, and have the smut formed in what I call the uterus, or folium vaginæ, some time before the ear makes its appearance. The one that is the most early, comes out naked, the whole of its chaff being quite destroyed; so that the dust is mostly carried off by the wind before the crop is harvested. This kind is considered as the least destructive of the two, as what of the dust remains, may be removed when spread upon the thrashing floor. But I am not quite certain, whether the wind may not be the means of conveying it to sound ears, at that time hastening to maturity in the same field. The other kind of smut does not destroy the chaff; so that the ear puts on a healthy appearance. The smut is contained in round bags composed of a dark green cuticle, which, when broken, discharge the black powder. This is more dangerous than the other, as the smutty ears cannot be distinguished from such as are sound, even when placed upon the thrashing floor. The smut is evidently a minute vegetable body, of the order of fungi, and may frequently be considered as a parasitical plant, but how it comes, at so early a period, to take possession of the infant germ, is a matter hitherto unknown. It is most certain, that when this black powder is rubbed upon sound grain, that the produce will be in general smutty. I have sometimes found sound ears to arise from an infected root; and I have seen, though but seldom, sound and smutty grains in the same ear. The whole of this part of natural history, is wrapt up in obscurity; but it is a singular happiness, that the negative principle of smut may be destroyed by certain steeps, well-known to the farmer. These seem, to operate in a two fold capacity, by destroying the germination of the smut, and by allowing the farmer to skim it off during the time of brining. When stale urine and lime are alone used, it is plain that the cultivator has no view beyond the destruction of the vegetative principle of the smut; a practice recommended by many judicious farmers, in preference to brining and steeping.

INDEX AT END.

A Review and Abstract

OF THE DEBATES IN BOTH HOUSES OF THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT;

On the expediency of dividing the Province of Quebec, into Upper and Lower Canada, each Province to have a distinct Legislature; which took place in the year 1791.

With Notes Critical and Explanatory.

It is our purpose in this, and a few succeeding numbers of our Register to give such parts of a manuscript written for an unpublished work on Canada, long before the now-talked of re-union of the Provinces was even dreamt of, as we think will prove interesting at the present juncture. The truth of the Parliamentary report may be ascertained by a reference to the Parliamentary Register, vols. 29 and 30, for 1791; and to Fiery Speeches, vol. 4, p. 204; and to the Speeches of Mr. Pitt. What consideration is due to the inferences and arguments to be found in the notes on the Debates is, perhaps, best determined by the fact, that it has been found necessary to consolidate the two Legislatures.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

LORD GRENVILLE.—The Province of Canada stood in a different situation from the other British possessions in America. It was not a Colony planted, or originally conquered from another nation, a Colony already in possession of settled laws, already in possession of much agriculture, and of an extensive commerce. This was the state with regard to the great majority of the Lower Province of Quebec; but there had been particular circumstances since the conclusion of the last peace, which had created a population in Upper Canada of a different sort; a population which had not only been formerly acquainted with British Privileges, but which had retired to that country for the purpose of enjoying them in greater perfection than they could elsewhere. From the circumstances of the inhabitants of the Province consisting of two classes, it was judged proper to divide the Province into Upper and Lower Canada, each division having a distinct Legislature within itself. It had been stated that the French inhabitants of Canada were so much attached to the prejudices of the Canadians, to their customs, laws, and manners, as to prefer them to the laws of England. He thought such an attachment deserved a better name than that of prejudice. He conceived it was an attachment founded in reason, or in something better than reason; in the best feelings of the human heart.

It was undoubtedly a mistake to suppose that any Government was free only as it approached to democratic principles. Absolute monarchy, absolute aristocracy, absolute democracy, had in the history of mankind, been tried in the scale of experience, and had been found wanting. Our own Constitution, which was compounded of three three, was the first in the world, and the envy of every surrounding nation. It was for that reason that they were now about to communicate the blessings of the English Constitution to the subjects of Canada, because they were fully convinced that it was the best in the world. The Governor represented the King; the Legislative Council represented that body in this country, whom he then had the honour of addressing; and it had been objected among other things, to that Council, that it would consist of two different classes of persons, some only to sit for life, and others by inheritance. There was precisely the same objection to the august assembly he had then the honour of addressing; some of that House derive their titles by inheritance, while others sit for life, and a third class by election, or Parliament.

It had been stated, as an objection to this bill, that the Lower Province might oppress the Upper Province, as all the trade of the Higher Province must come through the Lower Province; the Lower Province might enact what duties it pleased, and might harrass and oppress the Upper Province to any extent, and that Great Britain could not possibly interfere consistently with her profession of giving a free Constitution to Canada. His Lordship conceived there was a difference between a free Constitution, and a free and independent Constitution. Great Britain had not only the power of enacting laws, which were obligatory on the inhabitants of this Country (England,) but she could alter and new model those laws according to the circumstances and exigencies of the times. If this were not so, it would be impossible for a nation to improve in any one part of its Constitution; and if Great Britain had a superintending power over the laws and government of this country, she ought to have had the same power over Canada; and that if the Lower Province were to oppress the Upper Province, by imposing exorbitant duties, it was competent to this country to end the balance between the two Provinces, and to remove the grievance.

His Lordship observed it had been the great object of ministers to adhere as closely as possible to the forms and principles of the English Constitution in every part of the Bill.

LORD ABINGDON remarked, that the Bill was new of its kind it being, as far as he knew, the first, (except the former unprecedented Quebec Bill, unprecedented in every view of it) by which a Constitution is given by an act of the Legislature to any of the Colonies. Formerly the Constitutions, or forms of Government, in the Colonies, were derived from the executive Government of this country. This new creation and connexion between one and the other. This gave the Colony the idea of one branch, of one King, without the idea of a House of Lords, or House of Commons, which involved in it the idea of a Legislature, and of course of Legislation; and the Executive Government being part of the Constitution of this country, and under the guidance and control of its Legislature, whilst it communicated to the Colonies the true principles of the Constitution, it governed and controuled them in the application, and kept them in the use and exercise of those principles. This was the dependency; and wise and just it seemed to be.

LORD RAWDON.—With regard to the Division of Canada, he never had been prepossessed by any thing he had heard, to give his approbation of it, on the contrary, in the way proposed by the Bill, he thought it would be sacrificing, in some measure, one part of the Province to the other; and he owned, likewise, that he was not quite satisfied that there was a power in the Crown, to make such a Division as that marked out by the Bill. The experiment of heriditary nobility, which the Bill set forth, he was afraid, could not be attended with any good effect, and from what information he had been able to collect, and form any judgment upon, would rather be a dangerous and unnecessary scheme; for he would ask, of what class those people were, that it was intended to make nobility? Was there, by the existing laws of Canada, any set of men, whose property entitled them to form any sort of a proper, respectable, and useful nobility? He feared there was not; and even if there should be at this moment, what might be reckoned a sufficient number to form the necessary degree of aristocracy in that Province might it not be a question, whether it were proper to confer hereditary honors upon them, or of what utility that could be to the other inhabitants.

These extracts from the Speeches of the Lords GRENVILLE, ABINGDON, and RAWDON, may suffice for what took place in the House of Lords. At this period they are particularly interesting and curious. In our next we shall give extracts from the most material Debates in the House of Commons at the same important period; and then take the liberty of reviewing and commenting on the whole, drawing such inferences, and applying them to the present state of affairs, as we suppose may be of use towards a fuller understanding of this great question—Whether it is for the welfare, happiness, and prosperity of CANADA, that it should be under one undivided Government, and system of Legislation; or, that it should remain divided into UPPER and LOWER CANADA, each Province to be in possession of a distinct and separate Legislature?

POSTSCRIPT.

We announce, with sorrow, the loss of another Packet-Ship, a fine, new, vessel of 320 tons burthen, called the Liverpool Packet.—She ran foul of an ice-berg, off the coast of Newfoundland, in lat. 43 50, West Long. 48, during a thick fog, whilst going at the rate of 7 knots, on the 25th July.—The Crew and Passengers were providentially saved after having been seven days at Sea, in open boats, and were carried to St. Johns in Newfoundland, from whence, through the kindness of a friend we have this information.

The accounts from Spain are gloomy; an immediate Civil-War is threatened, and it is certain that FERDINAND secretly favours those who cry out for absolute Monarchy and Privileged Clergy.—Nearly a million of Dollars have been remitted to Gibraltar within a fortnight, and the capitalists are anxious to get their property out of jeopardy.

Notice to Correspondents.

We have received the Letter of "AN INHABITANT," and thank him for the Communication which is of importance—it shall appear in our next.

It is intended to give whatever may be useful to the man of business; resident in the country;—and, also, such information that may be useful to strangers—The work will be neatly stitched in a cover, of a convenient size—and the price not to exceed half a dollar.

Editorial Commentary.

Of the news of this week, the affairs of Spain seem to excite, and deserve, the most interest. The affliction which have hung for so many years over that long benighted country appear not to have had that salutary, chastening effect they were no doubt intended to produce by the All-wise Disposer of events. The Augean stable of Spanish bigotry, tyranny, and slavery, is not entirely cleansed. The weak and impolitic King is rather extremely irrerolute, or treacherous to his people, or both; the consequence is, that the country is on the eve of a civil war. A report prevails that the French army which has been assembled for some time past on the frontier as a cordon of health, to the amount of 50,000 men, has marched into Spain, directing its course towards the Capital. If this be so, it may be conjectured that a deep, and secretly laid plan exists of rendering FERDINAND absolute, and of destroying the power of the Cortes, and the growing liberties of the people. Should this be the case, the infatuated Monarch must take care of his head!

The situation of affairs between Russia, Greece, and Turkey, remains much the same, and there is no prospect of an immediate war, beyond the limits of the Grecian insurrection. So much severity of animadversion on the conduct of the British Government, relative to the disastrous conflict for the liberties of Greece, has been indulged in by the Editors of several respectable American, and even of many English papers, that we are desirous of making a few remarks on the subject, in vindication of the uprightness of the views and conduct of our Ministers; but we have not room for any of these comments, which appear to us loudly called for, this week.

Another furious attack has been made upon Ministers, in the House of Commons Lord SIDMOUTH's pension was made the pretext. In his reply Lord LONDONDERRY departed from the usual mildness and forbearance of his manner, and retorted with a severity seldom used by him, and, therefore, it was the more effectually felt; his remarks seem to have cut some of the leading members of the Opposition to the quick, who in vain endeavoured to make his Lordship retract some of his indignant expressions. We are sorry that our limits do not permit us to give the whole debate this week. Surely no one, after this, can justly assert there is not freedom of speech and of debate in the British House of Commons!

Willing to oblige all those of our Correspondents, who are evidently desirous of promoting the general welfare of this province, no matter in what particular department, we have this week given the letter of an "INHABITANT," on a subject of great importance. Although there are some who will smile at the proposal, it is our opinion that the plan is feasible, and that it would be productive of results even more beneficial than those which the writer anticipates. The principal objection appears to us, at present, to be the enormous waste and expence of fuel that would be required in a Mill of the requisite power. If, however, the proper kinds of wood were used, a manufacture of Pot-ash might be added to the establishment, in order to mitigate that expense. As yet we are ignorant of the means by which this writer propose to carry his plan into execution, but we have little doubt it might be done by subscription, and by company holding shares of £25 or £50 each. We are the more confident that such a plan might succeed from the fact, that in many large towns in England, there are establishments of a similar kind, that are very lucrative. We shall be glad to receive the remainder of the promised communication.

Upwards of £200,000 have been subscribed, already, in England, (generous, noble, sympathising, England) towards removing the horrid calamities which have befallen our poor, suffering, sister Ireland.—Surely a blessing must rest on such a people!

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—June 27

REPEAL OF THE PENSION ACT.

Mr. CREEVEY said, that in pursuance of his notice, he rose to submit a series of Resolutions to the House. He felt sensibly as any man could the difficulty of persuading a set of Gentlemen that it would be expedient and just that they should relinquish the enjoyment of the sum of £30,000 between friend, instead of the disgusting comparison which had been them. which the Act of the 67th of the late King conferred, made, the noble character which he represents in the history and which he now proposed to repeal.—There were strong of the kingdom.—(Hear, hear.) It was attempted to avoid facts relative to the pension of Lord SIDMOUTH embodied in him in the way that was known would be most hurtful to his 7th Resolution which, he trusted, would be put on the feelings, that by imputation of evil interest when he records of the House. Other Prime Ministers, with as much the chair which he had filled for fifteen years, he would not claim on the country, never received more than one pension consent to any compensation which his late majesty, most Lord GODOLPHIN and Lord CHATHAM had but single pensions insisted on bringing before the house. Nobody interposed. The Committee understood to take but one from the Crown; refused it. He again refused to receive any pension, when but Lord SIDMOUTH made no scruple of taking 3,000*l.* a year the late King sent his commands to Mr. Yorke to have a message undertook to confer pensions by one of its own Committee without any Royal application, it infringed on the liberties of his family.—And he asked, was it too large a compensation the Crown.—(Hear.) No Minister should venture to appoint to his noble friend, who during twelve years filled the state his own Committee for the purpose of conferring pensions of this House, and during ten other years of the most trying Sidmouth. After all the distress which the country en- period recorded in history, filled the arduous place of Secre- dured, it was entitled to demand, as a matter of justice that tary of State? In the exposition of these several offices his all useless places or overgrown pensions should be abolished, conduct was as marked by integrity, candor, and attention and therefore he would seek to have the Pension Bill repeal- to the public interests, as his actions were invariably reward- ed forthwith. Such was the substance of the Resolutions he warded by the public confidence.—(Hear.) He was not, would offer. He was convinced that sooner or later the whatever gentlemen might think at the other side, that the Pension Act would be withdrawn from the statute book.—country did not grudge to Lord Sidmouth a fair compensation (Hear, hear.) for his services. I protest against the doctrine, that a King's Minister during his stay in this House—(The Hon. Member's voice was here drown- ed by the cheers which proceeded from every part of the House.)

The MARQUIS of LONDONDERRY then rose, and when the cheers and laughter had subsided, he said—"When my hon. member, at this house make use of the word 'daring' as applied to the conduct of any other hon. member he must be understood as addressing himself to some part of that conduct which was inconsistent with the decorum of Parliament, or against the rules of the house. If in any thing which fell from me I had fluxed a note these rules, it was the duty of the hon. member to interpose at the time—to call me to order—to take down my words, and to take the sense of the house upon them.—(Hear.) This he should have done, and, therefore, seeing that he has neglected duty, I protest against the propriety of bringing forward a motion which fell from me the explanation which he has given, I appeal to the Chair, whether I was out of order, and whether the expressions I used, strong as they were, were not warranted by the use which had been previously made of them. But I will not suffer the hon. member himself to be- gin the disorder, when it is clear he lost sight of his duty in not seeking the proper time for interrupting me."—(Hear.)

The SPEAKER said—"I have been appealed to by the Noble Marquis to declare if it was or was not orderly to apply the word 'daring' to some part of his conduct. If I could bring myself to think that the word was used in the sense in which it was interpreted by the Noble Marquis, I should, undoubtedly, say that the use of it was most irregular. But I am bound to say, that in this House I have been used to hear the word used most commonly with quite a different meaning. (Hear, hear.) I have often and repeatedly heard it used, when no Hon. Member thought himself called upon to object to it. I must not, however, be understood to say that I approve of or sanction its use; but what I would say, is this, that in the heat of debate many expressions escape honorable Members, which, undoubtedly, would not bear the canvas of a cool criticism. (Hear, hear.) Acting under such feelings, then, I trust I shall not be charged with a neglect of duty for having actually interfered upon this occasion. My reasons I have already stated, and I only wish to add, that I have always found it the wisest course not to be too straight in giving to expressions offensive interpretations, for fear I should come to make an offence where it was never intended. I think that, if the House would only recur to what had happened, even in the course of the present session, they would not on at a loss to know what I now refer to—I mean the expression used by the Hon. Member for Corfe Castle, (Mr. PEARCE,) who in defending himself from some attack made upon him made use of words, in the heat of debate, which are certainly offensive in themselves; but which, as they did not appear to me to be intended to give offence, I thought it my duty to interpose to reprove, or to interrupt the proceedings of the House."—(Hear, hear.)

LONDON, July 1.

Cold Bath Fields Prison.—The want of means to employ the prisoners in hard labor, which, to many, constitute the most severe part of their punishment, has at length been obviated by the construction of a series of revolving wheels in each yard, upon which the prisoners are placed at stated periods, and the motion of which depends upon their constant exertion. On Tuesday last, the plan was brought into complete activity, and all the prisoners in the jail, both male and female, were set to work. At the first onset it was looked upon as a mere matter of amusement, but the experience of a quarter of an hour proved that it was a most irksome occupation. In the end, the whole of the men in one of the wards, to the number of forty, declared they would not work, and absolutely refused to obey their taskmaster. Among these were some notorious characters. The Governor, Mr. Adkins, was immediately sent for, and on his arrival he remonstrated with the mutineers on their conduct. This remonstrance was in vain; one of the ring leaders, acting as spokesman for the rest, positively declared their intention not to go to work again. Mr. Adkins, with becoming firmness, immediately ordered sixteen of the most prominent to be double ironed and locked up in their cells, declaring at the same time that they should remain in this state, on proper to show contrition for their offence. This had the desired effect. The whole of those who remained, immediately set to work with apparent good will, and in the course of the day, eleven of the sixteen who had been locked up, sent for the Governor, and begged to be permitted to resume their occupation, with a promise that he should hear no more of their opposition. The prayer was complied with, and they mounted the wheel, and in the course of the next day, the remaining five, with a humbled spirit, followed their example. The whole of the prisoners are now kept to actual hard labor, a plan, which experience proves to create a stronger prejudice towards the inside of prison than any other which can be adopted. At present only a signal all the prisoners to the different yards are ordered on the wheels, and immediately the machine is set in motion. In the court yard there is erected a sort of pyramid, surrounded by wood- work of a particular construction. Upon looking at which, the Governor can at once ascertain the degree of labor which is applied, and thereby discover whether there is any negligence on the part of the prisoner, for which, of course, the taskmaster is answerable. At present the power of the wheels is applied to no profitable purpose, but it is in contemplation to erect a mill outside of the prison for grinding flour, in which it can effectually be brought into action.

Gin Pies.—A baker was last week fined fifteen pounds, on being convicted of conveying spirits into White cross street prison. The turnkey felt a curiosity to taste an apparently large pie, which the baker assured him was a gooseberry one; and on breaking the crust, his knife came in contact with a tin case, fitting the dish under the crust, and containing about two gallons of strong gin. The baker's pies had long been held in much esteem by the prisoners.

Only fifteen deaths lately took place in London during one week.

It is said that in Leeds, Eng. when a malignant fever prevailed it spared persons having near slaughter houses. In consequence the Fever Hospitals were built near them.

An altercation having arisen between Mr. Abercrombie, the Member of Parliament, and Messrs. Hope and M'nzies, two Scotch Advocates, in consequence of some reflections by the former on the manner of their conducting the late trial at Edinburgh for a duel, a second rencontre was about to take place, which, however, was prevented by the arrest of the two Advocates, who were bound over to keep the peace, under the penalty of £500. The matter was to be brought before the House of Commons.

The number of vessels in the British Navy, in 1822, is stated to be 515, carrying 22,321 guns.

Mr. Potter who was at Paris on the execution of Louis the XVI. obtained the hair cut off the head of the King by the executioner, brought it to England, and the late George III. hearing of this, requested a lock to place in a ring, which was granted with pleasure. The same gentleman obtained a record of the Bastile, which proves a great curiosity.

We are happy to see that Acts were passed in the last Session for lighting with gas, Leicester, Bristol, Hull, Coventry, four miles on the Essex road, Newport, Isle of Wight, Chichester, Brentford, &c. Dudley, Portsea, Poplar, Bromley, and Ipswich. More towns of above 10,000 inhabitants are now lighted on this way than are not.

English literature is rapidly advancing in Poland. Lord Byron's "Bride of Abydos," and Sir Walter Scott's "Lay of the Last Minstrel," have already been translated; and several other English poetical works are in forwardness. Shakespeare's plays are an object of study; and the principal ones are frequently performed at Wilna, Cracow, Warsaw, and Leopold.

Accounts from Rome state the number of Jesuits now living in Europe and America to be about 2000. The same number was left by their founder at his death. Their present general is Father Fortis, who resides in Rome. In Italy and Sicily alone there are 700 Jesuits, who already occupy eighteen colleges. At the time of their suppression, the number of Jesuits amounted to 22,000.

The Memoirs of William Lilly, the Sidrophel of Hudibras, and the most popular astrologer of his day, present one of the most amusing specimens of unbridled credulity which we are acquainted.

A Mr. Shaw has lately published a new number of the National Melodies, equal, if not superior, in all respects, to the two former ones. We subjoin from it the song adapted to the Venetian air, as of that kind in which he pre-eminently excels.

Row gently here, my gondolier!
So softly wake the tide,
That not an ear on earth may hear
But here to whom we glide.
Had Heaven but tongues to speak, as well
As starry eyes to see,
Oh think! what tales it would have to tell
Of wandering youth like me.

Now rest thee here, my gondolier!
Hush! hush! for up I go,
To climb yon light balcony's height,
Whilst thou keep'st watch below.
Oh! did we take for Heaven above,
But half such pains as we Take, day and night, for woman's love,
What angels we should be.

Extract of a letter from Buenos Ayres:—"Vaccination is becoming pretty general in the province of La Plata. The Lancaster system had been established some time ago in Buenos Ayres, by a Mr. Thomson, and was followed by Monte Video."

From the Sydney Gazette of Jan. 7.—The cultivation and population of the settlement on Van Diemen's Land are both greatly increased since last year. The cultivation is 14 914 acres, exclusive of gardens, of which there are 12 966 acres in wheat. The population is about 7,400, horned cattle 35,000, sheep 170,000, horses 550, and swine 5,000.

Danger of Premature Interment.—About fourteen years ago, a female then in the service of Mrs. West of Glenallen, near Rostrevor expired to all appearance, after a very short illness, and was buried the next day. About a quarter of an hour after her interment, some children heard her moaning under the ground and alarmed the sexton. The man came, listened, heard the sound, then went home for his spade, returned with it to the grave and raised the poor woman, who was found half turned in the coffin, with foam at her mouth and blood streaming from her nose. All efforts to restore animation to this unfortunate being, who had been thus buried alive, proved fruitless.—Belfast News Letter Appalling Distress.—We understand that one hundred and forty persons have died of starvation and fever in one parish in the county of Mayo, during the short period of ten days! The greatest anxiety prevails in Dublin to ascertain the particulars of this extraordinary calamity.

In the county of Cork, the first greatest distress exists in the populous and extensive Barony of Duhallow, distant from all relief and the sea coast, particularly the Carberrys, four great Baronies of immense extent, including the parish of Snill.—Dublin Journal, July 10.

It is proposed in London that every family should go without a dinner one day, and contribute the saving to the fund for the relief of the sufferers in Ireland.

A table has been published in England of the comparative expense of maintaining the Clergy in different countries. For the United States, the expense is estimated at £60,000 for a million of hearers; France 35,000; Spain 100,000; Portugal 100,000; Italy 40,000; Austria 50,000; Switzerland 50,000; Prussia 50,000; German small States 60,000; Holland 40,000; Denmark 70,000; Sweden 70,000; Russia, Greeks, 15,000; Catholics and Lutherans 50,000; S. America 30,000; England and Wales 1,266,000; Ireland 3,500,000.

WASHTENAW HOUSE.—We may take this opportunity of stating, that Mr. LORD WORTHLEY, (such is styled, in some American papers, a Noble man, and whose House at Wanstead, eight miles from town, is said to be to London, did not owe his present embarrassments to a total passion for gambling. The common expence of the culture of that magnificent palace, and the vast income re-cured for maintaining so large an establishment in the vicinity of the metropolis, added to the late reduction of rents to the amount of 30 per cent, afford an easy solution of the manner in which he has become involved. The debts which were magnified to half a million, amount only to £80,000, all of which will be secured to his creditors by the sale of the house, and by letting the Park on building leases. Mr. LORD WELLESLEY, so far from being a professed gambler, never lost more than £50 at play, at one sitting; and after parting with Wanstead House, too expensive for the residence of any subject, he will still possess two noble seats in Wiltshire, property derived from the ancient family of the LORDS which has for many years represented that county in Parliament.

GIBRALTAR, July 10.

SERIOUS EVENTS IN SPAIN.

We have numerous advices from Madrid, as late as the 5th inst. It was anticipated that the adjournment of the Cortes would be a signal for new attempts to excite general acts of insurgency throughout the peninsula. Three parties exist in Spain. One the advocates of a pure Democracy;—a second in favor of the old Regieme, with an absolute King, and the privileged Nobility and Clergy;—and the third, the friends of the existing Constitution of King and Cortes, and a Government of Laws. All these parties have their watchwords, cries, and songs. On the return of the King from adjourning the Cortes, his carriage was beset with assemblages vociferating "Riego for ever;" and the household troops, which surrounded the coach and kept the mob off, were stoned, insulted with vile epithets, the mob making signs that it was time the King's throat was cut. The guards did their duty, and only replied to the shouts of the mob, by cry ng, "The King for ever;" but when provoked by the pelting they received, they fired a few shots, wounded several of their assailants, and compelled the mob to disperse. They then repeated their cry "The King with absolute power, forever." Great exasperation prevailed—The Municipal body called upon the Militia to parade and revenge the outrage committed on the people; but the whole garrison of the city being in arms, the six battalions of the King's guards being in readiness, and all the posts around the palace doubled, no hostile act was attempted by the militia, and the night passed without bloodshed.

On the next day (the 1st inst.) the irritation appeared increased. Numerous accounts of insurrectionary movements in the Provinces were circulated in Madrid; and that the "Army of the Faith" had obtained a decided advantage near Roncal. Bloody scenes were anticipated; but at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, two battalions of the King's guards left the palace, and marched to their barracks, leaving only the ordinary Body Guard in the palace. During the night, however, nearly the whole six battalions of guards left their barracks, marched out of the city and encamped a league to the northward of Madrid. But many of their officers, non-commissioned officers, and some privates, refused to accompany them, and joined the guard left in the palace. The number which marched out was estimated as high as 4000; and they appointed a Frenchman of great merit and valor, and who commanded one of the battalions, to be their Commander in Chief. It was supposed their destination was Navarre, where they meant to raise the Royal Absolute Standard. During these events all business was suspended; the shops were shut, the bull fight was postponed, and the theatre ordered to be shut up.

On the 2d, the Guards marched to La Pradera de Guardias, where they were followed by the brave Gen. MORILLO, who attempted to dissuade them from their undertaking. He satisfied them from their conference in his palace; and advised the King remained in his palace; and advised them to return to protect him, should he be in danger; and that regarding the insults they were continually receiving at Madrid, that they ought to consider them as he did, to be in most when they proceeded from worthless men. He could not however recede from worthless men. He could not however prevail upon them; and they in their turn, endeavored to prevail upon him to join them; and on his refusal, attempted to arrest him. He, however, refused, attempted to arrest him. He, however, refused, attempted to arrest him. He, however, refused

OF THE DEBATES IN BOTH HOUSES OF THE

BRITISH PARLIAMENT;

On the expediency of dividing the Province of Quebec, into Upper and Lower Canada, each Province to have a distinct Legislature; which took place in the year 1791.

With Notes Critical and Explanatory.

The interest of these Debates in the House of Commons, is greatly heightened by the sort of reverential consideration all parties entertain for those eminent statesmen, who took an active part in the discussion, & who are now no more—PITT [illegible]; and BURKE! Names immortal in the page of British history; whose opinions on great national questions, (Gods, accident of the virulence of party) are now become oracular, and as constituting the highest human authority: certain it is there are no such men in the present assembly of the British Nation, in respect of superior talent, whatever may be the honesty of their intentions.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. Fox frankly declared, as he thought, that under the pretence of giving to Canada the British Constitution, we in reality gave them a Constitution essentially different, and by no means possessed of the same privileges.

Mr. BURKE thought it was of importance that the people of Canada should have nothing to envy in the Constitution of a country so near its own.—(alluding to the UNITED STATES)

Mr. HUSKEY objected to the division of the Provinces stated in the Bill, a measure which he considered as not united to the purposes of Legislation. He thought that all the inhabitants would become British subjects sooner, if this division did not take place. He considered the measure, instead of tending to heal their differences, as calculated to preserve and inflame their animosity.

Mr. POWNE—The reason of this division was stated to be the prevention of feuds and animosities, but very much doubted that the method of division, whether or not it came in the form of a declaration of His Majesty's intention, would be but ill calculated for this purpose.

On a query being put by Mr Fox, it was found that the House had the power (which had been doubted) of dividing the Provinces, or by the 14th of GEO III.

Mr. FOX said, it appeared to his Majesty's Ministers, first, that the only way of consulting the interest of the internal situation of the Province of Quebec, and of rendering it profitable to this country, was to give it a legislature as near as circumstances would admit, according to the principles of the British Constitution. In the next place, it appeared to them, that there was no probability of reconciling the jarring interests and opposite views of the inhabitants, but by giving them two Legislatures. It was conceived this form of Government as best adapted to put an end to all the difficulties of a legislature, and to render the regulations more useful to the subjects of this country. He believed there was such a united opposition of interests of one description and the other that if there was a Constitution, consisting of a House of Assembly, in which the parties might be nearly balanced, the consequence, at least for a long series of years, would be a great degree of animosity, and a great degree of confusion in one of the parties had a great degree of ascendancy over the other, the party having the superiority was very unlikely, to give satisfaction to the other party. It seemed to his Majesty's servants the most desirable thing, if they could possibly give satisfaction to all descriptions of men, to divide the Province, and to contrive that one division should consist, as much as possible, of those who were well inclined towards the English Laws, and that the other part should contain of a decided preponderance of the ancient inhabitants who were attached to the French Laws. It was intended that in Lower Canada there still remained a certain number of English subjects, but these would hold a much smaller proportion, than if there was one form of Government for every part of the Province. It was in Upper Canada particularly that they were to expect a great addition of English inhabitants. The consequence was, that if it was not divided from the rest, the Canadians forming a majority of five to one, the grievance would be every year increasing in proportion as the population increased. It was intended to give a free Constitution to Canada, according to British principles of Freedom. This could not be done without a division of the Provinces, to prevent that clashing of opposite interests, which must otherwise necessarily ensue.

Lord SHEFFIELD noticed the design of building the seat of the new Government on the most distant part of Lake Ontario, between which place and the mother country the communication must ever be difficult. His Lordship observed, that it could not be to the interest of Great Britain to form a settlement of farmers in a country which grows the same articles as our own. The expence would be great, before it could maintain its own Government, at the same time it would not be possible to retain the supply of such settlements, as it would not be practicable to prevent the smuggling of manufactures from the adjoining United States. His Lordship concluded by saying, that it would be advisable to maintain a few posts, to promote a trade with the Indians; but to encourage migration from the coast to the interior parts of that great continent, he conceived to be a system extremely unwise.

Mr. FOX would suggest one expedient, and that was, to adopt the French Laws in the Upper Province, and compel the Government to alter them, till they should have accommodated them to the local circumstances of the country! But as for the Division he owned that he regarded it as attended with the utmost possible inconvenience. The commerce of the Upper Province, in order to be carried on, must pass through the Lower, and might in its passage be frittered by the Legislature there, with whatever duties, or obstructions, they might choose to impose.

On a question being put by Mr. FRANCIS, Mr. PITT allowed that it was his intention to assimilate the Canadians to the language, manners, habits, laws, and Constitution of Great Britain; but thought that object would be best attained by a division of the Provinces.

YORK STEAM-MILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE WEEKLY REGISTER.

SIR,

In this time of public embarrassment for the want of a market for our produce, it becomes every well-wisher of the community to inquire into the cause of our difficulties, and endeavour to adopt some means to remedy the evils complained of. It is this consideration which has induced me to send you the following remarks, for the perusal of the Inhabitants of this Town, and District, as all are interested in the plan I am about to propose.

Bread-Stuffs are the chief commodities we have to dispose of in payment for the goods we require from foreign, or distant markets. Now, it is notorious that these are not usually carried near this place at all fit for exportation; and this is the only reason, that I can conceive, why Wheat is worth from 25 to 30 per Cent. less here, than it is in a similar situation on the other side of the Lake. At Rochester, on the River Genesee, Wheat is worth 62 1/2 Cents, or 3s 1 1/2 Halifax currency. Beef is also very much cheaper. But here, it is not worth more than 2s. or 2s. 3d. currency. It may be said that this difference of price is caused by the advantages of sale possessed by our neighbors on the other side the Lake; but that cannot be the case, for we can send a barrel of flour to New York, as cheaply, within 25 Cents, as they can from Rochester, and to Montreal for the same cost, and we have the choice of two markets as well as they have. Others may say, again, consider the advantages which Rochester possesses, over us, in respect of water privileges!—Well, suppose we admit that that town has every advantage else can desire in this way; we have a water communication equal, nay in some respect superior, to the one she has, and to the same markets; but soon we have no Mill-seats! To remedy this evil a STEAM-MILL should be erected in the Town of York, close to the Bay, so that Wheat, and wood for fuel, and Stores could be sent to the Mill, from all parts of the Lake; and if the Mill was so situated, all the hulling and middling of cereals might be performed by machinery.

It may be answered, all this is very good, but we want sum of capital among us to do these things. To this I reply, suppose no sum of capital will not come amongst us what can I do to do that? Why, even this: to set our own shoulders to the work, and do it ourselves. If I could succeed in convincing you of the benefit that would result from the doubtless of this plan, all that would be wanting to attain the object, would be to shew its practicability.

This STEAM MILL should be of sufficient power to turn, at least four run of stones, and a cooper one to cut wood for the barrels; and also to work the machinery for lifting and unloading vessels, and for whatever else may be deemed necessary for the good of the concern. The Mill should be on the best possible construction, having apparatus for the cleaning of Wheat fine Bolts Fresne burrs, and every thing necessary for the manufacture of superfine flour of the first quality, and fit for the West India market; where we shall soon have a preference of 10s per barrel.

There are Mills in Rochester last mentioned upon an average, 60 barrels of flour per day, each. Now if this could be done in York the benefit would be $240 per day, supposing the Flour to be worth no more than $4 per barrel, which is low. I mean that we should actually gain $240 in day; in this wise; suppose we are obliged to sell Flour for 16s in States, and Lumber to the amount of the Goods we are obliged to import from the Mother Country; if we do not dispose of a sufficient quantity of the commodities enumerated, to meet the demand against us, we shall be obliged either to pay the balance in money, or extract it out of us money neither grows nor is it manufactured in this country, it follows that if much of it is sent away, the price of all kinds of native produce must come down, as it is to scarcity, or in other words the circulating medium, that all the disposable property of our country is bought or sold! Now suppose the circulating medium last year to have been £50,000, and that in consequence of money being sent away for the payment of goods, instead of flour, £5,000 were sent out of the country more than was brought into it, there would be only £45,000 remaining with which to purchase all the disposable property of the country; therefore the value of property, in relation to that of money, must fall 10 per cent.

Now you will perceive, that if this amount of £5000 had been sent out of the country in the shape of flour, instead of money, the sum of £50,000 would have remained either as the floating capital, according to the above rated supposition. Thus it would be with the Mill! I am more than sure such a Mill would save to the country all that it manufactured; because the article would be fit for a foreign market, and would meet with a ready sale, whilst it would gain for its proprietors a handsome profit.

If Mr Editor, you think proper to give these remarks an insertion in your paper, my next communication shall be to show how this object may be attained.

By inserting these observation you will oblige

DOMESTIC.

On Thursday night, the new Steam Boat, Dalhousie, sunk her first entry into this port. The vessel has been built at Prescott, and supplied with an engine of Canadian manufacture, which being of 20 horse power, propels her at the rate of about 7 mile an hour. The accommodation for passengers, considering the small dimensions of the vessel, are very well arranged. As two steam boats now ply between Prescott and Kingston, every facility is afforded for travelling—Kingston Chronicle.

Notice to Correspondents.

The well-written letter of "ALEXANDER" from Maughan, has been received. We respect those warm and patriotic feelings which gave rise to his communication; but in this instance, he is mistaken—It is not the least of those trials which an impartial Editor has to undergo, when he is called upon to do justice in despite of his own political antipathies and feelings. For our part, we are perfectly fearless when duty calls—whatever may be our secret wishes or feelings.—We love Ireland; and, were it in our power, we would rather bind up and heal her wounds than add a single pang to any one of her sons or daughters, whose high spirit, and warmth of feelings, is no where surpassed, and every where admired.

We have been much amused by the letter of "ERNESTUS," and are think it will amuse our readers—we shall therefore give it the first opportunity. We do not mean to say the subject of complaint is amusing, but the manner in which it is handled.

The communication of L. S. is much too lengthy, and we are a good deal puzzled how to abbreviate it without injury. The intention of the writer is no good, that we will endeavor to find room for this production—either in the whole, or in part, at some future period

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

As a domestic calamity has been the occasion of a slight delay in the publication of this number of the Register (which will be found to contain an unusually large portion of interesting matter,) by which Thursday's Mail for the country was lost, it is hoped the Conductor will be pardoned for that, which could be neither foreseen nor prevented

CURRENT OCCURRENCES.

It is reported, through various channels, that the Bill for the Union of the two Provinces of Canada has been so far altered as to have it pass in two Houses which relate to the consolidation of the two Legislatures; with a view, as it is said, of ascertaining more certainly, what are the real sentiments, wishes and desires of the Canadian Subjects; but that all the other clauses have been approved and passed. If the report be true, this result is chiefly owing to the exertions of Mr Ryland and Chief Justice Monk-Tosh, who deserve well for their services; for however we may be [illegible] of this measure, [illegible] to the immediate Union as constitutional, and founded in wisdom and true patriotism We have been assured that his speech, upon the occasion, exhibited a display of eloquence, most brilliant and convincing, superior to what has been heard in the House of Commons for many years; and it is to be much regretted that we are not in possession of a more enlarged report, not one fifth part of his speech being given in the public prints. Our report is taken from a Morning Post of the 19th of July, with which we were politely favored several days ago, and we have been induced to present our readers with the whole debate, as it reached us, not doubting the deep and general interest which this great question has occasioned throughout the country The Bill of a very short time will determine the [illegible] over Canada.

Besides the sum, amounting to between £200,000 and £300,000 which has been raised by a general subscription throughout England for the relief of the suffering districts of Ireland, Parliament has voted £200,000 to aid of the same fund. We may therefore feel reasonable ground to hope that famine will [illegible] long train of misfortune, will be banished; and that measures will be taken to prevent the recurrence of any of those shocking calamities with which the papers have been filled for so many weeks past.

The most distressing accounts continue to be received of enormities committed in Greece, and the adjacent islands. A letter from Leghorn, in our paper of this day, contains further details of the miseries of Scio It is impossible not to shudder at the contemplation of such a picture, and not to deplore the existence of so much wickedness,—which is scarcely to be paralleled in the whole history of mankind! Nevertheless, we cannot join with those, who either openly or obliquely, censure the British Government for not interfering more than it has done in order to prevent, or palliate, these evils. There are persons whose minds nobly, and or affected, is so sensitive and so sorbent, as to obliterate all other, even the highest, considerations. Because we lament and shed tears over the fate of unhappy Greece, are we therefore to forget what is due to the [illegible] and [illegible] Empire, to individual or the [illegible] from whence our [illegible] is derived? nations of the world for her good faith, and her hon- and learned gentleman then proceeded to address him religious observance of Treaties, shall she all at once fall from her high estate, or voluntarily descend from the loftiness of her character, and sully her fair fame for probity and honor, by taking part, either directly or indirectly, with insurgents against a legitimate Government, acknowledged as such for a series of ages by every court in Europe, not only to the manifest detriment of her own interests, but in direct violation of the most solemn treaties?—No cruelty on the part of Turkey, in a contest like this, can justify a moral and political crime on our part.

It is said the Turk is an Infidel, and the Greek a Christian, and what then? have we these things to learn at this time of day? The Turk was always an Infidel. He was no less a disciple of Mahomet at the time our engagements were made with him, than he is now. Turkey was, and is, an acknowledged, lawful, member of the European commonwealth, and her rights are to be respected as such, unless Christians may do those things that would dishonor, even an Infidel. It is not usual to catechise the parties to a political connexion, or a commercial treaty, before it is entered into, on questions of religious faith; and we have many treaties with unbelievers, in other parts of the world, besides the Turks. But we have no more right to interfere in this case, than the Turks had to interfere with the Scotch or Irish rebellion; and what should we have said had they dared to intermeddle with our domestic troubles? The charge of unparalleled cruelty (which by the bye, lies equally against the Greek) in the present case, will not, cannot, justify any dereliction from justice, probity, and good faith, on our part.

That the Greeks may be finally successful in achieving their own independence, and in shaking off the Turkish yoke, we must all anxiously desire. But England cannot, at present, interfere, without sacrificing her best interests, and injuring her national character for ever. Nothing can shew in a stronger point of view, the firm dependence that may be placed on the British Faith, than the temptation that now exists to induce her to part from it, in regard to Spain and her South American Colonies. Being the greatest commercial nation in the world, she has the most to expect, and the most to gain, from an early acknowledgment of the Independence of, and from early treaties with, those Colonies, whose gratitude and friendship might now be permanently secured. But England is bound by such treaties with old Spain, that she cannot avail herself of the golden opportunity that is offered without sacrificing her honor, and we are sure that she does not hesitate which course to pursue.

EBENEZER will find, in this number, that we have granted his request by publishing his eccentric epistle; and we beg to assure him that the laws at present in force are fully adequate to the eradication of the evil complained of (which we allow to be disgraceful in the highest degree,) provided the magistracy do their duty.

BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS—June 27.

(Concluded from our last.)

Mr. BROUGHAM declared that he would have bowed to the decision of the chair if it had been directed against him, with as much implicit submission as he now felt gratitude in thanking the right honorable gentleman who filled the chair, for the conclusion to which he came.

He was sorry to have used any intemperate language. He could not, however, help giving vent to his feelings, when he heard a fellow member treated in a novel and certainly unparliamentary fashion—(Hear, hear.) And his feelings were the more keenly roused, because that hon. member who possessed so many qualities in private life, was his dear and intimate friend. So much, then, for this matter. That

He objected to the getting a sinecure, and keeping a sinecure for the same time; because the grant of pensions was avowedly made with a view to facilitate the abolition of all sinecure places. A pension was by way of substitute for a place, and Lord Sidmouth was offered to keep the thing itself, and not the substitute too.—(Hear.)—After eulogizing the generous conduct of the Marquis Camden, in giving up so large pension from a similar place, and contrasting his conduct with that of Lord Sidmouth, the hon. and learned gentleman concluded by giving his support to the motion.

The Marquess of LONDONDERRY again rose and said: "It has been insinuated that as a Minister of the Crown, I assumed an improper tone in the course of the discussion. I don't know that I have assumed any tone, which as a Member of this House I was not entitled to, and I trust that I am not when I heard it intimated, that the hon. and learned gentleman (Mr. Creevey,) was prepared to prove that illegal practices and disgraceful. I could not help saying so, and thought the expressions were strong, yet upon reflection, I cannot possibly persuade myself that they were misplaced.

BANK OF ENGLAND NOTES.

Mr. BENNET presented a petition from a Stereotype Printer, praying that Parliament would not sanction the bill for enabling the Bank to issue small notes again, and they had been taken in hand by the Bank, that the best means were taken to render the note difficult of forgery. Mr. Hume said, an insuitable note was unattainable; but there was great room for rendering the notes less liable to imitation. Mr. Pearce (for the Bank) contended that great pains had been taken, and it was impossible to find out any other plan of note which was not more easily imitable than the present one!!! The Bank engravers had imitated all, from plans of all kinds, laid before them. Several members concurred in recommending note imposers in the metropolis and large towns, to give information relative to the notes of the Bank. The petition was ordered to be printed.

July 18.

CANADA TRADE AND GOVERNMENT.

Mr. WILMOT having moved the Order of the Day for taking into further consideration the Report on the Canada Trade and Government, begged to state to the House the provisions of the bill which he should now have the honour to introduce. The Bill might be described under three heads. In the first place, it went to make an alteration in the Act of the 31st George the Third for the Government of Canada. It then was intended to put an end to the measures introduced in the present Session by his Right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade. And thirdly, it went to make an arrangement with respect to the appropriation of the duties levied in Canada; and in furtherance of this object it proposed to consolidate the Upper and Lower Canada Revenues. On the last of these he proposed to speak first—the differences which had arisen between the two Colonies on the subject of the duties to be divided between them. He placed them in a very anomalous situation, which called loudly for some remedial measure. He intended to describe a situation of these provinces from the conquest of Canada. They were governed by a Governor and Executive Council. The Criminal Law of England had been introduced at the first instance, but the Old Civil Law of the Colony had been retained. Some Ordinances, however, were enacted, which were at variance with that system, and fully illustrated the anomalous character of the laws thus combined, made it necessary, in the year 1774, to restore the Civil Code—as it had originally been, and to declare the Ordinances of Upper Canada at the same time the introduction of a representative body at a future period was contemplated. Under this system the Government was carried on to 1791, when the Act of the 31st of the late King respecting Canada was passed. It was chiefly with a view to incorporate the two Legislatures in that province, which had till then been called one province Canada was divided into two parts, in consequence of refugees and American Loyalists coming thither at that time in great numbers, that part of the province, which was now called Upper Canada. This division was objected to by no less a Personage than the late Mr. Fox, who was then in the Opposition, and on the grounds on which the Government of that day defended the Act for giving the Canadas their present Constitution were these, that there were many persons residing in Upper Canada who were English, and it was extremely unjust that the population of that part of the Country who had English feelings should be under a code of Laws that was foreign to their habits and habits. From 1791, the two Provinces had their respective judicial and legislature establishments. The only [illegible] process to the Sea enjoyed by the inhabitants of Upper Canada, was through the Port of Quebec. The consequence was, they were considered entitled to a share of the duties, and one eighth was accordingly their share, that being supposed to be the proportion which the inhabitants of the Upper Province bore to those of the Lower. This continued till 1797, when a system of examination and appropriation by Custom-House Officers was adopted. From 1797 one fifth of the duties had been allowed as the share to which the people of Upper Canada were entitled. This arrangement continued till 1817, when a new inquiry took place. It was then found impossible to make a satisfactory appropriation of the duties, and in consequence Upper Canada had been kept out of its fair share of them ever since. The Commission appointed to inquire into the subject had declined in their Report that the present mode of taking the duties was likely to lead to a serious misunderstanding between the two Provinces. This state of things naturally led the Government to consider whether a closer union between them could not be brought about. It would be for the House to consider whether this might not cause those differences which were now referred to the mother country for decision to be decided altogether. With a view to this they would see it might not be advisable to unite the two Legislatures, and if other unsurmountable advantages should seem likely thence to arise, and it on general principles, independent of local circumstances this should seem desirable, there was no reason why it should not be done. The Bill would then only have the consideration of Parliament. He showed from the returns which took place at the time, and from the language of Mr. Pitt, that the Act of the 31st of the late King was not considered one that was never to be altered. On the contrary it was distinctly stated that it would be open for discussion, and it had never been stated by Mr. Pitt that it would be necessary to obtain the consent of the Legislature of the two Provinces to any change that might be contemplated. The Parliament of Great Britain, it was maintained, would always have the power to make such changes as it might seem necessary. By the alteration now proposed the privileges at present enjoyed by Electors would be in no respect interfered with. A qualification would be named for those elected, which had been omitted before, but such a qualification would be fixed upon as would not have the effect of interfering with that competition which ought to be excited. He described other enactments which the Bill was to contain, and stated a drawback was intended to be allowed on the re-exportation of rum, the produce of our West India Colonies. To settle the petition of the duties which each province should receive arbitration was to be resorted to, of which so many examples were afforded in this country. The Bill prescribed that persons should be selected who would be acted upon by no local motives, and who would have no effect in view but to decide with justice and impartiality. He recapitulated the circumstances under which he had recommended this Bill to the House. It might be expected that the measure would meet with some objection from the inhabitants of Upper Canada, but he trusted their representatives having to travel to Lower Canada. But this which was merely a personal inconvenience when balanced against the advantages to be derived from a law framed for the benefit of those appendages to the British Empire, the two Canadas, and consequently for that of England, and he was confident be over-ruled. This bill would affect no privileges hitherto enjoyed, and the union of the two Legislatures must lead to more extended discussions than would otherwise have taken place, and thus contribute to the permanent improvement of a colony which had been saved at our hands by the loyalty evinced during the late contest—The measure he believed to be founded on the soundest principles of wisdom. Every information on the subject had been sought from those whose experience best qualified them to afford it, and convinced of the utility of the bill he wished to introduce, he should now move for leave to bring it in, earnestly hoping that no opposition would be offered to so general principle.

Sir J. MACKINTOSH thought the time at which this subject was brought before the House, the 18th of July, would forbid any objection to one part of the Bill, and give irresistible weight to the claim which he should advance for delay. He wished that part of the measure delayed for six months, before the Bill went to consolidate the two Legislatures of Upper and Lower Canada; he had no objection to any other parts of the Bill. It was, therefore, his intention to move "that the Bill be read a second time this day six months."

Mr. CALCRAFT considered this measure to be one of so rash and bold a character, that he could not give a silent vote upon the question. The measure might be necessary and right; but it was one of too important a nature to be carried at this period of the Session, and without notice being given to the parties interested. He entreated His Majesty's Ministers to accede to the proposal for leaving this part of the bill to another Session. He appealed to them, whether, with a House containing so small forty persons, they would proceed to legislate so important a measure. He trusted they would not, and that the commercial regulations contained in the bill would not be coupled with so important and exceptionable a proposition.

Mr. HUSKISSON opposed the Bill. He looked upon the Act which had been referred to, as the charter of Canada; and this act confirmed, was accepted as a permanent Act, as those who legislated [illegible] The bill was objectionable, because it assumed the loss of those Colonies which now formed a great [illegible] States, not perhaps ultimately to the detriment of England, but certainly to the disadvantage of her Colonies. To pass this Bill without notice to the people and Legislature of Canada, was not consistent with the principles upon which wise states governed their colonial dependencies. He would say from what had been seen in the instance of the North American Colonies, that such possessions were only to be retained by governing them with a loose rein. He had no objection to the union of the two Legislatures of the Canadas, but he objected to its taking place now. The present instance was the first in which Parliament had consolidated two Legislatures, or taken a Legislative body away from any colony with one exception—that of the State of Massachusetts, which led to the general revolt in America—Nothing of the kind had been done on the ravished West India Island. But in the single instance which he had mentioned, nothing of the kind had occurred during the two hundred years, at the commencement of which our colonies in America were founded by British wisdom down to the period at which they were lost by British folly. He asked to know on what inform. on they were act? What evidence had been referred to the mother country for decision to be decided by the House before it on the necessity and expediency of making such a change? He would ask, if it were consistent with the dignity of the House to proceed at once to pass such a Bill without granting six months to obtain that information which it was a duty it could not fail to supply, and without which he must say they would legislate in the dark? What were the advantages of the measure might be, were the merits and opinions of the inhabitants of these colonies to pass for nothing? The Hon. Gentleman had said opposition could be expected from the Upper Canada, as the inhabitants would object to the distance which their representatives must travel to pass into Lower Canada. This objection the Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Wilmot) thought of not much weight. Mr. (J. Mackintosh) did not say this objection might not be counterbalanced by other considerations, but it was fitting that those who were so much interested in the change should be heard, that the House might have an opportunity of considering the objections to the Bill on the one part with the reasonable grounds in its favour on the other. It was important, were made in the Constitution of Canada without the slightest notice of such a measure being given, what alarm might it not spread in all our colonies? What security in any of those colonies for the continuance of those constitutions under which they lived? Such policy would be most injurious in every respect, and to take such a course would, in his opinion, be to make a very ill return to Canada for the loyal attachment to this country, which it had evinced during the late war. He was one of those who thought that we had no right to abandon any one of our colonies, which were all bound to us by the strongest of all treaties of alliance. He begged pardon of the House for making these general observations, but he felt himself called for by the nature of the question. He should, as an amendment to the motion "that the Speaker do leave the Chair."—"that it be an instruction to the Committee to divide the Bill into two Bills."

Mr. LITTLETON entirely coincided with the general principles laid down by his Hon. Friend, but considered the present case to be an exception to those principles. If he did not think so, and if this had been a proposition for taking away the Legislature of an independent colony, he would not be

The Polish Count Dzialinski has lately carried from Paris to Warsaw a work, which he is said to have put by as for its weight in gold. It is a volume of about thirty or forty leaves, in small folio, in Napoleon's own hand, the authenticity of which is confirmed by the certificates and signatures of Count Mouthoulon, Baron Mounier, and the Duke of Bassano. The work contains in part highly interesting documents towards the history of the age. —from the time when he saw himself suddenly put out of activity, as general of brigade, till the commencement of the war; there is a plan for the improvement of the Turkish artillery, with several pieces relating to the Italian campaign, entirely in his own hand. But by far the most remarkable, most important, and boldest document, is the plan for the first Spanish campaign, which he dictated to the Duke of Abrantes; accompanied by a great many notes, developing his secret plans respecting the boundaries of France and Austria.

By the munificence of the Pope, the triumphal arch of Titus at Rome is about being restored to its ancient splendor. The labors in the Coliseum are also rapidly proceeding, and it is hoped that it will soon again be seen in its pristine form. An Egyptian obelisk, covered with hieroglyphics, which once belonged to the circus of Aurelian, and which has been presented by a princess of the house of Barberini to Pope Gangonelli, is shortly to be raised in the square of the twelve Apostles.

Increase of Crime.—Eight hundred prisoners have been committed since the 3d January to the 24 inst. from Lambeth street Police office.

Longevity.—There is now living in the township of Edale, in the parish of Castleton, Derbyshire, a man of the name of John Fox, who completed his 104th year on the 9th of May last; he is an general pig butcher of the neighbourhood, and is employment he follows as usual; he is also a husbandman and our informant found him in May last putting his scythe in order for mowing the present summer. Upon observing to him that he must have been quite a young man at 60, he smartly replied, "Aye, at 80, there were few I'd not turned my back to, take me for a week together; and I'll not be left so very far this summer, if it please God to spare my health." His health, strength, and faculties, seem nearly unimpaired; he goes regularly to bed at eight, and rises at four; and his general diet is bread (oat cake), milk, but ter and cheese. He drove one of the Government baggage waggons from Castleton to Sheffield, at the time of the Rebellion in 1745.—Manchester Mercury.

English Auction Sales.—In one of our late English papers we notice among other property disposed of at public sale, that a congregation of the established Church was knocked down to the highest bidder, for £2,350 sterling, or, in the words of the advertisement, that sum was given for "the next presentation to a vicarage, with an income of £600 per annum, the present incumbent being 59 years of age.

Marriages here are at present contracting in greater numbers than ever before known. In some of our churches the publication of the banns for marriage has, on the Sabbaths of late, occupied about half as much as the sermon. Last night, we really began to think that the whole of the Liboring classes were going to be buckled. All the streets, coaches and noddies in town were in full activity. At every corner in our way home, we met a wedding.—Glasgow Courier.

Kent, the water pedestrian, has undertaken, for a wager of 1000 guineas, to walk across the sea from Dover to Calais.

Mr. Kent, the aquatic pedestrian, exhibited his Marine Velocipede on the North sea, to a large party who accompanied him down the river in the Kingston Steam Packet. The machine is of rude construction and very bulky, and is evidently susceptible of improvement; although we do not suppose it will ever be of much practical utility. The apparatus consists of three hollow tin cases of the form of an oblong hemispheriod, connected together by three iron bars, at the meeting of which is a seat for the exhibitor. These cases filled with air, or some gas, are of such a magnitude that they can easily support his weight. The feet of the exhibitor rests on stirrups, which he attaches to his shoes by leather belts, two paddles which turn round a joint when he brings his foot forward to take the stroke, and keep a vertical position when he draws it back against the resisting water. The party returned about ten o'clock in the evening, and expressed themselves highly delighted with the exhibition.—Hull Paper

By this Act all marriages which have been contracted by license previously to the passing of the new act, without consent specified of parents or guardians, and where the parties have continued to live together as husband and wife until the passing of the present Act, shall be held to be good and valid to all intents and purposes. There are of course several clauses and exceptions.

IRELAND.

TITHES IN IRELAND.

(From Bell's Weekly Despatch.)

A volume would be hardly sufficient to give a detail of the miseries suffered by the laboring population of Ireland, in consequence of bad government, of official corruption, disregard of the laws, and religious animosities. All that can be done, then, is to take up some prominent grievance to which the attention of the public may, for the moment, be specifically directed. During the discussions on the tithes, some of the Irish members adverted to that which formed the subject of the present article, in a spirit of truth and justice which does them great credit. Whatever may be said in favor of tythes in England (and we have ever considered them as highly injurious to public industry,) not a shadow of defence can be set up for such a tax upon the people of Ireland as we hope now to be able to show, that so far from promoting the objects of morality or religion in the latter country, they operate there as a national curse, and form one of the leading causes of those dreadful outrages for the suppression of which Parliament has been recently obliged to pass the two bills just alluded to—in short that if any thing can be more than another repugnant to moral justice and to the divine precepts of Christianity, it is that of the tithe system which has been long been acted upon in Ireland. The best way to prove this is, to describe the grievance at once and in few words.—Rent Island, like England, is divided into Parishes, each of which must have its Protestant Rector, whether he is wanted or not. In many of those parishes, of which the extent is not less than 4 or 5 miles in diameter, there is scarcely a Protestant inhabitant, and of course no Protestant Church. They abound, however, with Roman Catholic peasants, who are all employed, more or less, in cultivating the land. The Parsons, who are non-resident, and from whom if resident, the people could derive no religious instruction, never make their appearance, even for the purpose of receiving a reasonable modus for their tithes; but after having ascertained, through the medium of others, how much the tenth of the produce is worth, they make contracts with a set of sharp running fellows, called tithe-farmers, who agree to pay their annual incomes, and who have the power of exacting from the cultivators whatever sums they chose to fix upon. In this precious work they were joined by another set of men called tithe-proctors. While the crops are still standing, and before the potatoes are dug up, these farmers and proctors take a survey of the whole of they fields, with all the absolute authority of the Parliament, tell the cultivators how much they are to pay for the produce of each field; and against this fiat there is no power of appeal; for the unhappy sufferers, already denying themselves the common necessaries of life, in order to make up their oppressive rack rents, have no means of seeking redress in a court of law. It has been ascertained that, by such exertions, these harpies have often put more money in their pockets than the rectors of the parishes; and it is no uncommon thing to see numbers of poor people drudge 14 to a potion for not getting out such sums as they thought fit to name. This, in general, is the system that has long prevailed throughout the south of Ireland, where the disturbances are now raging with the greatest violence; and surely it was not at all unnatural to expect that men laboring under such oppression, and denied all redress by law, should take the law into their own hands, and come forth in that spirit of vengeance and frightful re action which has been so repeatedly witnessed in that wretched country.

If this is not a system at once immoral and unchristian, we know not what the terms mean. But this is not all; it is as impolitic—so dangerous to the safety of the State, that a wise government should not allow it to exist for a single day. We know that there are many persons of serious and excellent Protestant ascendancy and rich ecclesiastical benefices, who will put these questions—Why should not an ecclesiastical establishment be as predominant in one part of the kingdom as in another? how can the payment of tithes be a greater hardship in Ireland than in England? and must it not become a proportionate reduction to be made in rents? Our answer is short and decisive. An ecclesiastical establishment should always be in conformity with the religious opinions of the great bulk of the inhabitants; and this principle has been recognized by the British government. His Majesty's subjects in Canada are allowed to have a Catholic and those in Scotland, a Presbyterian establishment, although there are unquestionably many Protestants in both countries. In England the great bulk of the people are Protestant; and mostly the whole of those who dissent from the church have done so since its first establishment. In Ireland about three fourths of the people are Catholics; the value of a clergy of their own whom they are obliged to maintain; and will any one venture to tell us that it is no hardship upon them to be forced to pay an enormous taxation for the support of a Protestant hierarchy, from whom they derive no benefit whatever. The payment of tithes, as well as the manner of enforcing that payment, produces eternal discontent, discordance and bloodshed. As to the quantum of rent being diminished on account of the tithes, that is a thing which can never be expected in a county swarming with middlemen, land contests, and rack renters. It is not the bounden duty of government then, to follow up the suggestion of those Irish members, who have so often joined of this trying grievance; and if it were only for the sake of public tranquility, to alter the whole system of tithes in Ireland, by making a different sort of provision for the Protestant clergy? Such a provision as would have the effect of keeping them resident in their parishes and enabling them to convey some moral instruction to the inhabitants. At present it is hardly possible to conceive a greater mockery on religion and common sense than the manner in which the bulk of the Irish Protestant clergymen affect to perform their clerical duties. The Rector of a country parish holds it as a complete sinecure; his income, amounting sometimes perhaps to £2000 a year, is all spent at a distance, perhaps in the taverns of Dublin or London. If there be a church in the parish, where serving must be performed, he employs a curate, who goes there once a week, and hurries over a few prayers, to a congregation consisting of half a dozen persons; and the rest of the week is passed away in hunting, coursing, or acting the part of a parasite and sycophant at the tables of the neighboring squires. This is the manner in which a great part of the Irish Protestant clergymen passtheir lives, and this burlesque on religion is entirely owing to the monstrous tithe system.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND.

From an article relative to the interesting new Colony, which appears in the last number of that able and masterly work the Quarterly Review, just published, we make the following extracts:—

"Among the many advantages which the settlers of this southern Britain possess over those of the western territories of North America. It is not the least to be free from the tomahawk and the scalping knife, and from all collision with the right of proprietors of the soil; and, above all, from the intrusion of those freebooters of rifle celebrity, mentioned in our preceding article by the name of squatters. The Australasians had indeed their bush rangers for a time, who stole their sheep and disc hered their cattle; but by the care of an active magistracy and a vigilant police, the last of these marauders has, we believe, been extirpated. With regard to the Aborigines, it is difficult to say in what part of the island the few that remain now exist, so little are they given to the settlers or their Mosquitoes, in the Report of Governor Macquarie, who visited it in the winter of last year. He states that the wretched huts and cottages of which Hobart town was composed in 1811, were now converted into regular and substantial buildings; many of them two stories high, spacious, and not deficient in architectural taste; the industry, enterprize, and respectability of the inhabitants, appear to keep pace with the growth of their town; and their substantial comforts are rapidly multiplying under the judicious arrangements of the Lieutenant Governor Sorrel, under whose administration almost the whole of these improvements are stated to have taken place.

"He was no less gratified at the rapid improvements effected at George Town in Port Dalrymple, which, at the date of our former article, had been merely marked out; but were now found quarters for the civil and military officers, a commodious parsonage house, a temporary church, a gaol, a guard house, and a road over the mountain completed, together with a large school house nearly finished. The troops were well accommodated and the convicts were living in neat huts, with ground enough attached to supply them with vegetables in abundance. This 'creation' (the Governor observes) 'of George Town is not only beautiful, but also during a dispatch for all the purposes of trade being situated on the banks of a navigable for ships of large burden, and but a short distance from the sea in Bass's Strait; and has the advantage of a plentiful supply of fresh water from Springs in its immediate neighbourhood.'

"From George Town, the Governor proceeded by Launceston across the island to Hobart Town, and marked out the sites of four new townships, all seated in the midst of extensive tracts of rich land, and forming a regular chain of stations between Hobart Town and George Town, by which the communication between these places will be rendered both safe and convenient. Before this, indeed, Lieutenant Jeffreys had traversed almost the whole extent of the island, from Hobart Town to Launceston and Port Dalrymple, a distance of one hundred and twenty-five miles, in a borouche, with three and sometimes four horses in hand, in which extent, he says, 'there were not twenty miles of what could be called a road; the rest being a beautiful level pasture, with but few trees to obstruct either the passage or the view.'

"Governor Macquarie concludes his Report with expressions of the great gratification which he experienced throughout every part of his tour, arising from the happy situation of the people, the fertility of the soil, and the beauty of the country at large, which at no very distant day must, he thinks, be raised to the proud distinction of being one of the most valuable colonies belonging to the crown: a period which, he further observes, will be hastened by the recent influx of several respectable free settlers, with considerable property. He subjoins the result of a census taken some little time before his arrival, which is—that the population of Van Diemen's Land amounts to 6372 souls, exclusive of the civil and military officers; and that it contains no less than 28,838 head of horned cattle; 182,468 sheep; 424 horses; and 10,603 acres of land in cultivation.

"With such an island in our possession, not one hundreth part of which has yet been granted away, it may perhaps be worth consideration whether some facilities might not be afforded to such of the labouring poor with their families, as should be willing to avail themselves of the offer. We speak with some hesitation on so nice a point; but by opening the colony to persons of such a description the necessity of send ng out so many convicts would be superseded; and the whole of those who have offended against the laws of the country might, perhaps be disposed of with greater utility to the public and no less to themselves, on the unlimited parent colony of New South Wales. The vast range of country recently explored between the Hawkesbury and the Hunter has all the appearance of being extremely fertile, and every where well watered by numerous rivers, some of which are supposed to be navigable by small craft to a considerable distance from the sea coast. Here then there is ample scope to try the experiment of composing the convicts to support themselves by their own labour; which while it would free the nation from a large expense, would, by suitable encouragement, contribute to the comfort and advantages of the criminal and consequently to his reformation, which we believe is rarely effected under the present system."

There has been an attempt, in the department of the Upper Rhine, to induce a regiment of the line to revolt, in favour of Napoleon. The person concerned was a Lieutenant Colonel Caron, "already

"No country on the face of the earth is blessed with a finer climate than this beautiful island; favourable to most of the useful productions of the soil, it is at the same time salubrious, refreshing, and in every respect delightful. It is, in fact, England with a finer sky, with less of its winter frosts and of its autumnal and spring moisture: all the fruits and vegetables of an English kitchen garden are, without difficulty, raised here

"Plenty of timber trees, of the same species as those of New South Wales, and which have been enumerated and described by Brown and Labillardiere, are found on the banks of the Tamar along the shores of Dentrecasteaux's Canal and the Derwent, and in almost every part of the Island, but not so thick as to obstruct the labours of the agriculturist. The wild animals are the same as those of New South Wales, consisting chiefly of the kangaroo, the opossum, the wombat, the squirrel, the bandycoot, the kangaroo rat, &c. Horses, asses, horned cattle, sheep, goats, pigs, dogs, cats, and rabbits, together with all kinds of European poultry, have been introduced with success.

"Among the mineralogical productions, Mr. Evans enumerates copper, iron, alum, slate, limestone, asbestos, and basalt, together with cornelian, crystal, chrysolite, jasper, marble, and a great variety of petrefactions. Iron, in particular, is said to be most abundant near Launceston, on the Tamar, where there are entire mountains of this ore, and so rich as to have yielded 70 per cent. of pure metal. This, with the coal, which is also said to abound, cannot fail, as population increases, to become a source of wealth to the inhabitants.

"A country such as this needs only to be known to invite settlers, and fortunately there is no want of room for them. 'Large tracts of land,' says Mr. Wentworth, 'of perfectly free from timber or underwood, and covered with the most luxuriant herbage, are to be found in all directions, but more particularly in the environs of Port Dalrymple." * * * *

"Of the flourishing and highly improving state of the colony no stronger testimony can be adduced than the Report of Governor Macquarie, who visited it in the winter of last year. He states that the wretched huts and cottages of which Hobart town was composed in 1811, were now converted into regular and substantial buildings; many of them two stories high, spacious, and not deficient in architectural taste; the industry, enterprize, and respectability of the inhabitants, appear to keep pace with the growth of their town; and their substantial comforts are rapidly multiplying under the judicious arrangements of the Lieutenant Governor Sorrel, under whose administration almost the whole of these improvements are stated to have taken place.

"He was no less gratified at the rapid improvements effected at George Town in Port Dalrymple, which, at the date of our former article, had been merely marked out; but were now found quarters for the civil and military officers, a commodious parsonage house, a temporary church, a gaol, a guard house, and a road over the mountain completed, together with a large school house nearly finished. The troops were well accommodated and the convicts were living in neat huts, with ground enough attached to supply them with vegetables in abundance. This creation' (the Governor observes) 'of George Town is not only beautiful, but also during a dispatch for all the purposes of trade being situated on the banks of a navigable for ships of large burden, and but a short distance from the sea in Bass's Strait; and has the advantage of a plentiful supply of fresh water from Springs in its immediate neighbourhood.'

"From George Town, the Governor proceeded by Launceston across the island to Hobart Town, and marked out the sites of four new townships, all seated in the midst of extensive tracts of rich land, and forming a regular chain of stations between Hobart Town and George Town, by which the communication between these places will be rendered both safe and convenient. implicated in the conspiracy of the 19th August, 1822, and a veteran named Roger." The account in the Moniteur is very lame one. They "had previously made," says that paper, "a gratuitous distributions of money, and were continually giving out that they were acting by virtue of orders from a central committee established in the capital." We have no doubt they were—and in all these revolutionary attempts, we find that the conspirators are never in want of funds. Whence, and by whom are they furnished? However, the conspiracy broke out on the 2d July, as had been concerted. One squadron left Colmar, and another Neuf Brisach, to meet at a central point—Roussach. Caron had at first announced his intention of releasing the prisoners at Belfort, but postponed it until he had received reinforcements.—Now, as this intent was so publicly known to the troops, they could not have supposed that his designs were friendly to the existing government. When he arrived at Roussach, he cried out, "Vive l'Empereur," and led the squadron to Mayenheim, where he found another squadron of chasseurs. He announced to them also, that he came to command them in the name of the Emperor. He then shaped his course to Lusisheim, which he wished to enter, but was opposed by two Quarter-Masters, who reminded him that he had promised to conduct them to the rendezvous of his associates.

The Moniteur then closes its account abruptly, with saying that Caron and Roger took the alarm, endeavored to effect their escape, were arrested and carried to Colmar.—Now, as the conspiracy was known beforehand, five or six officers, faithful to the king, having marched in the ranks of the two squadrons as privates, we did not see why the two leaders were not arrested at once, without suffering the troops to march from place to place, and to follow a man who had announced his treasonable intentions by calling out Vive l'Empereur! The Moniteur account affords us sufficient grounds for suspecting that the conspiracy was more serious than it was willing to allow.

GREECE.

Copy of a letter written from Leghorn by a Greek lady, to one of their friends

LEGHORN, June 10.

My dear friend—In my last of the 15th inst I informed you of the arrival here on that day of our countrymen, M. Rodocanachi and M. G. Zizinia, from Scio; they had obtained their passage on board an Austrian ship of war, and had performed their journey in 37 days from Scio and 30 days from Smyrna. I know the anxiety you must feel respecting the deplorable situation of our unfortunate island, of that we judge by the keenness of our own feelings on the subject, and as these two friends had come directly from Scio, had been witnesses of part of the horrors committed there, I hardly left them for two days, during which time they gave me the following vivid picture of the misery of our dear country, as nearly as I can remember.

It was on the 11th of April that the Captain Pacha landed several thousand men, but the Turkish fleet had scarcely hove in sight when the commandant in the castle began bombarding the town, and from that time till our departure, it was one continual scene of murder, and conflagration and plunder, both in country and town, nor were they even satisfied with the ravages fire made upon our houses; its progress was too slow for their fury. They took to the castle about 300 of the gardeners of the principal and most respectable families, who by dint of threats of instant death, and promises of freedom they forced to confess as far as they knew, where any property had been hid; in almost every garden of six or eight yards distance were seen pits dug for the purpose of grasping the supposed concealed treasure.—All the women were sent into slavery, the men and male children above 12 years of age, were massacred, the children of the tenderest age, and the most beautiful from among the young women, they sent on board the ships, with great pomp and solemnity under a salute of guns. They circumcised the male children in token of conversion of the Mahometan faith, and then sent off the children of both sexes by land to Constantinople, by way of Smyrna, under an escort of Turkish soldiery — Two regiments of Turks had assembled and shut up in a place in the country about 700 persons chiefly peasants which they meant to divide among themselves as slaves, but not being able to agree in the partition, began disputing. An Imean or priest, more humane than the rest, expostulated with them on their dissensions and exhorted them to concord; when one of these savage brutes exclaimed, the only way to avoid dissension was to put them all to the sword, and to the lasting shame of the human race, to less than half an hour, all those innocent men were put to death; others of those butchers had in their possession four families of distinction; the women and children they sent to the city, and the men they bled to death as sheep in a slaughter house, near which they were passing at the time.

One of these unfortunate beings to whom they had not given a mortal stab, was left to linger out his existence in excruciating agony and pain for two days But what will you say of those innocent young children who have fallen victims to the most horrible death caused by the brutal conduct of those monsters into whose hands they fell! By all we have been able to gather, it appears, that from the very moment the Turkish fleet was destined to Scio, the total destruction of the island, and annihilation of its inhabitants were resolved upon without any examination of their culpability or innocence. On the 8th May the Pacha ordered 35 respectable men that he had on board to be hung up as a signal to the governor to do the same with the 85 hostages, ordering at the same time the 300 gardeners who were still in custody, to be strangled. Till the 16th of May, on which day we left Scio, there had been no cessation to murders, conflagrations and enslaving, with all their accompanying ferocity. Do not be surprised if you hear that there have been nearly 60,000 Turks in the Island; the report of the numerous and rich spoils of those who first went over, the sight of gold, silver, jewels, &c. snipped off by the captors to places of safety, enticed over a horde of these barbarians, thirsting for Christian blood and plunder. The number of slain amounts to 25,000, of captives, 30,000; those who have saved themselves by flight are comparatively few; those who have already reached the continent, and those immediately expected are the only ones that are saved, all the others you may reckon among the dead or the captives.—Those even who have escaped from the Turks must soon fall a prey to famine, as they are lurking about the mountains, without food or raiment. How we have escaped, we hardly know; it seems a dream; but the Divine Providence assisted us.

Having so many dangers to encounter, and being so well known to the Turkish inhabitants of Scio, it was only by changing clothes, and being accompanied by the Austrian Consul, that saved us. Together we traversed the city—or rather hell—for the whole of the way was strewed with dead bodies of men, and carcases of animals. The walls of our beautiful houses, built with black Pojan marble, alone remained, and in them were seen figures of women and children, pale, wan and emaciated, watching in morbid despair, till they should be transported as slaves on board the Turkish vessels: methinks their cries, sighs, and lamentations are still in our ears, as they implored the consolation of heaven to take compassion on them, not to deliver them into the hands of their worst foes, not to leave them in the power of those who would force them to embrace the Mahometan faith.—Oh! how agonizing were our feelings then! But alas! what could be done to save them? It was through scenes harrowing to the soul that we at last reached the ship that was to convey us to Smyrna. Yet, as if our cup of affliction and danger was not yet full, we unexpectedly found on board this vessel 34 young women of the best of families, on their road to Constantinople by the way of Smyrna, sent thither by the Pacha as presents to the Grand Seignior; many of them we were personally known to; the least sign of recognition on their parts would have immediately discovered us to their Turkish guard, and our lives would have been forfeited; it was with the greatest difficulty we veiled our features from observation, keeping all the day below deck, and only a few hours in the night, breathing the fresh air on deck.

At last we reached Smyrna, and were immediately transported on board the Austrian armed ship, and from thence arrived here. But what tongue can tell the perils and dangers of every kind we have been exposed to. 'Tis God, and God alone, that can give aid and consolation to this humiliated, persecuted race of beings; those that are gone to another life are the most happy; it is their enslaved survivors that claim our pity. These are, my dear friend, the gloomy accounts that the above esteemed friend gave me. I have heard, and will you with a bleeding heart and tear fraught eye, that my poor father and mother are among the hostages. Oh God! what a blow! a vessel has just arrived from Constantinople, giving us the advice of the execution there of ten hostages. Will this never end! I really can write no more.—I feel sick at heart. Adieu!

NAVIGATION OF THE GREEKS.

As we have heard much of late about the Grecian navy, and their battles, the following amusing account, by Chateaubriand, of their ignorance of navigation, will lead us to wonder how they keep their ships at sea, and much more how they gain naval victories.

"It is really surprising to see how the Greeks navigate their ships. The pilot sits cross legged, with his pipe in his mouth, holding the tiller, which, to be on a level with the hand that guides it, must graze the deck. Before this pilot, who is half reclined, and consequently can never see forward, is a compass, which he knows nothing about, and which he never looks at. On the least appearance of danger, French or Italian charts are spread out upon the deck; the whole crew, with the captain at their head, lie down upon their bellies; they examine the chart: they follow the lines delineated upon it, with their fingers; they endeavor to find out where they are; each gives his opinion; they conclude at last it is impossible to make head or tail of these conjuring books of the Franks, fold up the map again, lower the sails, or bring the wind astern: they then have recourse again to their pipes and their chaplets, recommend themselves to Providence, and wait the event"

The author then relates an extraordinary dispute which took place in his presence, between the pilot, the master and mariners, as to where the vessel was, whether within or without the island of Cyprus, and how they should steer.—"To talk of taking a reckoning, or the altitude, would have been Hebrew to our sailors."

SOUTH AMERICA.

From Peru accounts state, that a division, 2500 strong, of the army of Gen. SAN MARTIN* had been cut to pieces by a Spanish division, about 30 leagues from Lima; but that the central, with 10,000 men, was about to take the field against the Spaniards; and as the Spanish force did not exceed 7, 500 men, and were much divided, confident hopes were entertained of his success.

*We believe it is not generally known that this General is an Englishman. He served under the Duke of Wellington in his campaigns in Spain, and is very honorably noticed in the Duke's official account of the battle of Talavera.

"WAR OF THE SOUTH ENDED.—Government has just received official dispatches from the General Laberator, dated Pastos, the 8th of June, enclosing the terms of capitulation granted to the Spanish troops, who defended Pastos and Quito, in virtue of wich the first place was taken possession of by the President Laberator the same day (8th of June) and the latter by Gen. Sucre on the 20th of May. The brilliant days of Bombona and Pichincha which preceded the capitulation obliged the enemy to surrender and the liberators of the South proved themselves as generous as they were valient. The Colombian guard has increased its reputation, the warriors of Pichincha have proved that the love of liberty can vanquish every difficulty. The war of the South was ended to the glory of the Colombian arms, a million of Americans is added to the family of the Republic, and the victor of a hundred battles, the generous enemy of Spain, the Creator of Colombia, the immortal Bolivar, has added new laurels to his imperishable fame.—Caracoas Gazette, Extra, July 22.

A VOICE FROM ST. HELENA.

For the first weeks, Rear Admiral Sir George Cockburn had the charge of the fallen exile: upon the whole, he and his captive seem to have agreed tolerably well, but he was soon to be superseded by Sir Hudson Lowe, and if Bonaparte was not all together satisfied with his first guardian he was greatly discontented with the second. In a little time, in the usual order of things, they came to open war. Napoleon growing more and more fretful, and the Governor more and more rigorous, the severity of public duty taking a deeper tinge from the feelings of the individual. Bonaparte's temper may be pretty well ascertained from his private expressions in regard to Sir Hudson; "bugiardo," "sbirro," "Sirfiluno," "ignoscllo," "assassino!" "capo di spioni," were not his worst terms of reproach, yet at the same time there appears to have been some cause for this violent irritation in the irksome restraints imposed upon him, and in the natural evils of Longwood, made doubly vexatious by the want of fit accommodations, supposing always our author's statement to be correct. The whole island seems to be particularly unpleasant, and Longwood to be the most unpleasant part of it: sometime for want of water Napoleon could not have a bath which to his habits was an essential luxury, and if the attempt to move out he was either scorched by the sun or blighted by the fogs; "here," he was wont to say, "it either blows a furious wind, loaded with rain and fog, che mi taglia l'anima, or, if that is wanting, il sole mi brucbia il cervello through the want of shade." Nor do these complaints appear to have been without some reason, for he was constantly annoyed by head-ache by swellings of the gums and cheeks, and by pains in the side, which last, we should suppose, were indicative of a disease liver. All this, however, arose from the nature of the climate. Sir Hudson Lowe could not help; but whether he or the English government might not have been milder keepers, is a question not so easily decided. But this is a subject we do not wish to dwell upon, and having first given our author's account of Napoleon's bed room, as a specimen of his lodging, we shall go on to other matters less liable to discussion.

"It was about fourteen feet by twelve, and ten or eleven feet in height. The walls were lined with brown nankeen, bordered and edged with common green bordering paper, and destitute of surbase. Two small windows, without jallies, looked towards the camp of the 53d regiment, one of which was thrown up and fastened by a piece of notched wood. Window curtains of white long cloth, a small fire-place, a shabby grate and fire irons to match, with a paltry mantle-piece of wood, painted white, upon which stood a small marble bust of his son. Above the mantle-piece hung the portrait of Marie Louise, and four or five of young Napoleon, one of either sex, embroidered by the hands of the mother. A little more to the right also hung a miniature picture of the Empress Josephine, and to the left was suspended the alarm chamber watch of Frederic the Great, obtained by Napoleon at Potsdam; while on the right, the consular watch, engraved with the cypher B. hung by a cord of the plaited hair of Marie Louise, from a nail in stuck in the nankeen lining. The floor was covered with a second hand carpet, which had once decorated the living room of a lieutenant of the 20th Foot—artillery. In the right hand corner was placed a little iron camp bedstead, with green silk curtains upon which no master had reposed on the fields of Marengo and Austerlitz. Between the windows there was placed a paltry second hand chest of drawers; and an old book case with green blinds stood on the left of the door leading to the next apartment. Four or five cane-bottomed chairs, painted green, were standing here and there about the room. Before the back-door, there was a screen covered with nankeen, and between that and the fire-place, an old fashioned sofa covered with white long cloth, upon which reclined Napoleon, clothed in his white morning gown, white loose trowsers and stockings all in one. A clampered red madras upon his head, and his shirt collar open without a cravat. His air was melancholy and troubled. Before him stood a little round table, with some books, at the foot of which lay, in confusion upon the carpet, a heap of those which he had already perused, and at the foot of the sofa facing him was suspended a portrait of the Empress Maria Louise, with her son in her arms. In front of the fire-place stood Las Casas, with his arms folded over his breast, and some papers in one of his hands. Of all the former magnificence of the once mighty emperor of France, nothing was present, except a superb wash-stand, containing a silver basin and water jug of the same metal, in the left hand corner."

ON THE ACCEPTATION OF THE WORD "TYRANT," AMONG THE ANCIENT GRECIANS

"The term Tyrant among the Greeks, had a very different signification from what it now bears in all modern languages. It meant a citizen, of a republic, who by any means acquired sovereignty over his fellow-citizens. Many of the Grecian tyrants were men of extraordinary virtue, who used their power in strict conformity to established law, and very advantageously for the people they governed. Thus they differed widely from Tyrants in the modern acceptation of the word. But some were even raised to the dignity of tyrant by a voluntary decree of the people themselves. Plutarch mentions particularly Tynnondas thus elected by the Eubœans, and Phidias by the Matylenæans; and he says the Athenians would also have elected Solon. Under therefore is not a constant one: though in general the Grecian tyrants were usurpers. Without a favoring party among the people, no man could rise to the tyranny; therefore a man of universal bad character could not become a tyrant. But the violence of faction among the Greeks was extreme: enormous severities were frequently practised against a defeated party; perhaps most enormous when the prevailing one was not headed by a tyrant; who might have authority to restrain private malice and check popular fury. A citizen, however, irregularly raised to sovereignty over his fellow-citizens, would often find time, if very infirm in his person, to establish a power, which, though in its more confined popular favor, are extremely liable to fluctuate. But firmness is necessary to command; and even great abilities united with fortunate circumstances would with difficulty, in such a situation, avoid the necessity of occasional severity: weak minds and morose tempers would naturally fall into cruelty. The outcry against tyrants then has been first raised by the disappointment of faction; for among the ancients the appellation was arbitrarily applied; the person to whom it was given being often really no more than the leader of a faction; and sometimes, as we have just seen, a sovereign by the vote of all rights, the voice of the people. But most commonly tyrants were more or less usurpers of power which the laws of their country forbad; and too frequent severities were used, sometimes atrocious crimes perpetrated, to acquire that power or to retain it. Hence arose the modern acceptation of the term Tyrant, from which it is necessary to distinguish the ancient."

BUDGET OF VALUABLE RECIPES.

No. 2.

Account of a new kind of Paint.

Applicable both to the interior and exterior of Habitations, by M. Cadet de Vaux.

From the Journal de Physique.

POTATOES - - -	one pound
WHITE LEAD - - -	two pounds
WATER - - -	four quarts

"The potatoes are boiled in water or steam, (steam in the large way is the most economical and expeditious) peeled, crushed, and while yet warm, tempered with two quarts of warm water. The mixture is then passed through a horse hair sieve, to free it from lumps and specks. When a large quantity is to be prepared at once, the mixture of potatoes and water must be put into a boiler for a quarter of an hour, in order to render the solution more complete, by a heat nearly approaching to ebullition. When in this state, the mixture is added to the white lead, previously mixed with two other quarts of water; but this proportion is not to be strictly kept, because a wood or wall that has not been covered with preceding coats, absorbs more water, and requires a thinner paint.—I will now give an instance in which the above quantity was used. I caused to be painted a peristyle, ornamented with four handsome columns, of a single stone, bases, bronzes, capitals, cornices, two statues, the whole comprising six fathoms; two coats of paint were given to it, which we will call therefore twelve fathoms.—This paint is of a fine milk white. It may be rendered gray by the addition of a little pulverised charcoal; a yellow stone color, more or less deep, by yellow ochre. The two coats may be put on in immediate succession without hurt, because no other paint dries so soon, at the same time that it spreads easily from the brush. A bed-chamber that is painted with it may be inhabited the same day; no damp, no smells to be apprehended.—With the above proportions, of one pound of potatoes, and two of the white lead, we can give two coats of paint to a surface of six square fathoms; but as the potatoes are to be boiled, we should estimate them at six centimes, which brings the price of twelve fathoms to twelve centimes.—It remains for time to decide on its duration, but in the space of two years, applied externally, it has not undergone the slightest alteration"

To destroy Red Bugs.—Take a sufficient quantity of fourth proof spirits, and as much pearl ashes as will dissolve in it, and after washing every hole and crevice in the bedstead with it, take a clean strip of linen or muslin, wet it with the liquor and wrap it round the bed posts close to the floor. This will destroy the bugs and prevent others from getting on the bedsteads.

Easy method of destroying Warts.—Take an apple and cut it, and rub it a few minutes over the wart; the juice of the apple will so stain the root of the wart, which will in a few days drop off.

Stains in linen.—Stains occasioned by fruit, are readily removed from clothes by wetting them and placing them near lighted brimstone; a few matches will answer the propose. The sulphurous gas extracts the stain.

Soda for Washing.—A few ounces of Soda will soften a hogshead of the hardest water. It is generally superior to any kind of pearlash now in use; it gives a delicate whiteness to linen without the slightest injury.

NATURAL HISTORY.

Hot Spring of Java.—In the Blue Mountains, about 37 miles from Batavia, in the island of Java, is a spring of water so hot, that few persons can bear immersion in it; with little more than two feet of this almost boiling fountain, another spring arises, as cold, that it almost instantly benumbs those who attempt to use it—these waters overflowing, join in a current, and supply a bath formed by the natives, of such a temperature as to be delightful at all seasons of the year.

Growth of Wood.—It has been ascertained that wood increases in the following proportion: The first year as 1, the second as 3, the third as 9, the fourth as 15, the fifth as 22, the sixth as 30, the seventh as 40, the eighth as 51, the ninth as 70, and the tenth as 22.—From this it is concluded, that wood ought never to be cut, till it is in the tenth year of its growth.

INDEX AT END

From the Monthly Magazine for March 1822.

Animal Life —The following is a scale of the average duration of animal life, from the most celebrated writers on Natural History:—A hare will live 10 years; a cat, 10; a goat 8; an ass, 30; a sheep, 10; a ram, 15; a dog, from 14 to 20, and sometimes more; a bull, 15; an ox, (a curious fact) 20; swine 25; a pigeon, 8; a turtle dove, 25; a partridge, 25; a raven, 100; an eagle, 100; a goose, 100.

Sagacity of the Horse.—As a lady was lately driving a gig at a gentle pace along the Bailey, in Durham, a young child ran before the horse, whom he instantly stopped, and though plyed with the whip, he did not proceed till he had first pushed the child out of danger with one of his feet!!

AGRICULTURE.

To the Conductors of the Farmer's Magazine.

On the mischief arising from Thistles and other weeds by the sides of roads and fences.

Gentlemen,

I wish you would, through the channel of your Magazine, point out the mischief arising from the slovenly practice, of allowing thistles and other bearded weeds, to grow and shake their seeds by the road sides, and along the whole line of fences in many farms, and which are annually carried by the winds into the adjoining fields, where they prove a fruitful source of mischief. Were a little more attention paid to this subject, and to the kind of hay seeds sown, much expence and labor would be saved, and fewer absurd complaints made, of the tendency of particular fields to run to weeds. It is to slovenly practices that dirt is owing, "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap:" Whoever sows bad hay seeds, will reap the natural produce; and vice versa. I hope, at no distant period, to see a law, making dirty farmers liable for the damage done, by their bad management to their cleanly neighbours.

Yours, &c R: S.

Rye.—A writer in the American Farmer says, "the great and only secret with regard to insuring a good crop of rye is early sowing. From the middle of August to the middle of September, I have always found the best time for sowing rye. From three pecks to a bushel per acre, is amply sufficient for seed. Early sown rye is much more heavy than the latter; and further, it affords excellent pasture both in the fall and spring, nor does pasturing injure the crop; in many cases it is a real benefit—particularly when eaten down by sheep. Clover also succeeds much better after rye than after wheat."

At a sale of farming stock, in Gloucestershire, lately, the auctioneer gave the following extempore description of a beautiful cow:—

"Long in her sides—bright in her eyes,
Short in her legs—thin in her thighs,
Big in her ribs—wide in her pins,
Full in her bosom—small in her shins;
Long in her face—fine in her tail,
And never deficient in filling the pail."

Fatal consequence of drinking Noyeau.—(From the Gazette of Health.)—"It is ever a painful duty we perform, to report the sacrifice of human existence, from whatever cause derived; but when the liability to such dreadful catastrophes is connected with any of our familiar habits of life, we are bound, from the office we have imposed on ourselves as conservators of the public health, not to apply to the narration of facts, but to all the collateral circumstances which elucidate the subject, so as to put the general reader in possession of such information, as removes the danger to which the want of knowledge of the subject necessarily subjects him. Our readers are of course aware, that it is a practise amongst many tradesmen to keep a bottle of some liquor, either wine or spirits behind the counter, for the purpose of regaling their customers. A shopkeeper in the country, in observing this custom, selected noyeau for this purpose, which seems to have pleased the taste of his friends as well, that several regretted it was not stronger. The complaisant tradesman, realising the fable of the Old Man and the Ass,' by wishing to oblige every body, transmitted in order to a person who manufactured the noyeau, that he would prepare him a certain quantity of double the usual strength. This was complied with, without either enquiries or explanation on the other.—Shortly after the noyeau had arrived, a lady visited the shop, who being an excellent customer, the tradesman was desirous of evincing his respect, and therefore presented her with the first glass of his improved cordial. The lady drank it, and in a few minutes afterwards fell on the floor and expired. The terror of the poor man was heightened to a greater degree by the observations of the bystanders, who remarked the coincidence of her death, and her taking the noyeau, asserted, that he must have given her poison: he assured them that it was "nothing but noyeau" she had taken, and to convince them, as he conceived, of its harmless qualities, he seized the bottle, and pouring out a glass of it, drank it in an agony of earnestness, when so rapid was the action of this potent poison, that the persons before him had not time to recapse from the attention that his conduct exerted, before they were assailed with the additional horror of witnessing the destruction of a second victim:—the poor man trembled, fell, and expired. Many of our readers doubtless know that Prussic acid is one of the most potent poisons in the vegetable kingdom; and it is to the presence of this principle in "noyeau," "ratafia," "black cherry water," and other similar articles, that their flavour, as well as their pernicious qualities is owing. The kernells of cherries, peaches and apricots, as well as sweet and bitter almonds, contain Prussic acid; the bitter almond possesses it in a great degree.—An infusion of peach leaves, and of laurel or nectarine leaves, is found to be a powerful and dangerous medicine because it contains Prussic acid; in fine, it is possible, by the skill of the chemist, to obtain this acid in such a concentrated state, (from almonds, peach leaves, or any of the substances before enumerated) that a single drop falling upon or touching the skin upon any part of the body, destroys life instantaneously; the moment the poison has touched the skin the person falls dead, as though they had been killed with a stroke of lightning; but such a dangerous process is it to obtain Prussic acid in this state of purity, that few, if any will incur the dreadful risk in preparing it, for should the finger of the operator but touch the matter he has prepared, he dies for his temerity. We believe Mr. H. C. Jennings, a gentleman well known as one of the most ingenious and philosophical experimenters of this country, has obtained it in a state equal, or nearly so, to this strength; the stopper of the bottle only applied to the nose of a large Newfoundland dog, produced instant death to the animal. But violent and dreadful as are the effects of this poison, it is nevertheless a most valuable medicine in all those diseases in which it is desirable to depress the vital powers."

POETRY.

The following lines are received from Belville. They are certainly above mediocrity, and if original, (our kind, though anonymous, correspondent must excuse the conjunction,) they give promise of still superior efforts.

I love the balmy breath of Spring,
As freed from Winter's dreary reign;
And, fann'd by Zephyr's downy wing,
Love Summer, and her silken train;
I prize the gifts rich Autumn yields;
The mellow tints of her attire;
And, King of Storms, tho' bleak thy fields,
There's comfort in thy cheering fire:
The blushes on the morning's cheek,
Emblems of innocence I prize;
And, noonday beams that proudly speak
Day's manhood glad my ravish'd eyes;
How softly soothing, beauteous eve
The whisp'rings of thy fragrant gales;
And, thou too, fairy night, receive
My homage for thy "wondrous tales":
Yet, without One, these loves were vain;
This world, a barren waste would seem;
Its riches want; its pleasures pain;
And, lengthen'd life, a weary dream:
LAURA.

LAURA, thou'rt love without alloy;
Fair as created thing may be,
For, Oh! there's not an earthly joy
That bears with not a charm from thee.

LOVE, A CHILD!

FROM THE FRENCH OF BOUFFLERS.

L'Amour est un enfant trompeur,
Me dit souvent ma mere; &c.

My mother, dear good creature, says
That Love, with all his coaxing ways,
Is fierce as any ferret;
But Lord, she'll never prove to me,
That such a little child as he,
Can hurt a girl of spirit.

I'm sure, the ev'ning before last,
The closest, sweetest whispers pass'd
B-tween—but that's no matter:
I know, I thought Love very charming,
And not by any means alarming,
For all my mother's clatter

However, just to ease my mind,
(Though we must keep my mother blind)
I'll search for Love with THOMAS;
For—even if her fears are true
An infant is no match for two:
We'd meet with something from us!

THE FEMALE CONVICT TO HER INFANT.

By T DALE, of Bennet Col. Cambridge.

Oh sleep not my babe, for the morn of to-morrow
Shall soothe me to slumbers more tranquil than thine;
The dark grave shall shield me from shame and from sorrow,
Though the deeds and the doom of the guilty are mine:
Not long shall the arm of affection infold thee,
Not long shall thou hang on a mother's fond breast;
And who with an eye of delight shall behold thee,
And watch thee and guard thee when I am at rest!

A Review and Abstract

OF THE DEBATES IN BOTH HOUSES OF THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT;

On the expediency of dividing the Province of Quebec, into Upper and Lower Canada, each Province to have a distinct Legislature; which took place in the year 1791.

With Notes Critical and Explanatory.

We particularly beg the attention of our readers to the following remarks of Mr. Fox, which seem to derive greater weight from the circumstance of their being the real opinions of the great champion of Whiggism that England ever had.

Mr. Fox laid it down as a principle, never to be departed from, that every part of the British Dominions ought to possess a government, in the constitution of which, monarchy, aristocracy and democracy were mutually blended and united; nor could any government be a fit one for British subjects to live under, which did not contain in due weight of ARISTOCRACY because that he considered to be the proper poise of the constitution, the balance that equalized and meliorated the powers of the two other extreme branches, and gave stability and firmness to the whole. It became necessary to look what were the principles on which aristocracy was founded; and he believed it would be admitted to him, that they were two-fold, namely, rank and property, or both united. In this country, the House of LORDS formed the aristocracy, and that consisted of hereditary titles, in noble families of ancient origin, or possessed by Peers newly created, on account of their extended landed property: that prejudice in ancient families, and that sort of pride which belonged to nobility, was right to be encouraged in a country like this, or one great incentive to virtue would be abolished, and the noble dignity, as well as its domestic interest, would be diminished and weakened. Upon every ground of consideration, therefore, it would be wise and what was more, indispensably necessary, that an aristocracy should make a branch of the constitution of Canada. If Canada should grow into a great and flourishing colony, (and he trusted that it would) as it was removed at such a distance from the principal seat of Parliament, it was more necessary to make the Council in a considerable degree, independent of the Governor and the people, because the Province being so far off, the power of control, could not be properly exercised by that House, with a view to the calling upon the responsibility of Ministers and punishing them for any abuse of the prerogative, by giving wrong advice to the Council, through the medium of the Governor. This was, he said, a clear argument why the Council ought not to be appointed by the Crown. He proposed that the Members of the Council should not be eligible to be elected, unless they possessed qualifications infinitely higher than those who were eligible to be chosen Members of the House of Assembly; and in like manner, the electors of the Members of the Council, must possess qualifications also proportionably higher than those of the electors to representatives in the House of Assembly. By this means Canada would have a real aristocracy chosen by persons of property, from among persons of the highest property, and would thence necessarily possess that weight, influence, and independence, from which alone could be derived a power of guarding against any innovations that might be made, either by the people on the one part, or the Crown on the other. He did not think it advisable to make the British House of Lords elective, because the British House of Lords stood on the hereditary, known and acknowledged respect of the country for particular institutions; and it was impossible to put an infant constitution on the same footing. Mr. Fox concluded by declaring emphatically, that true aristocracy was a country that sort of energy, that sort of spirit, and that sort of enterprize, which always made a country great and happy.

Mr. PITT thought that hereditary distinctions flowing from the Crown as the fountain of honor, formed the most essential respectability of the character of British Peers, not less, therefore, the proper poise of the constitution. He argued for the gradual introduction of nobility and thought there was something in the habits, manners and manners of Canada, peculiarly fitted for the reception of hereditary honors. The want of those honors, he contended, had accelerated the separation of the former colonies. He said there was not above 10,000 inhabitants in Upper Canada, including men, women, and children.

Mr. POWYS and Mr BERNARD stated that the population of both Provinces was 150,000.

Mr. FOX again rose, and said, that if the council were wholly hereditary, he should equally object to it; it would only add to the power of the King and Governor; for a Council so constituted, would only be the tool and engine of the King. Canada was a country as capable of enjoying political freedom, in its utmost extent, as any country on the face of the globe, and when we look at a colony like this, capable of freedom, and capable of great increase of population, it was material that the inhabitants should have nothing to look to among their neighbours to excite their envy. Canada must be preserved to Great Britain by the choice of its inhabitants, and it could not possibly be kept by any other means. He wished them to be in such a situation as to have nothing to envy in any part of the King's dominions. The Legislative Councils ought to be totally free and repeatedly chosen, in a manner as much independent of the Governor, as the nature of a colony would admit. Those he conceived would be the best; but if not, they should have their seats for life; be appointed by the King, consist of a limited number, and possess no hereditary honors. Those honors might be very proper, as, of great utility in countries where they had existed by long custom; but, in his opinion, they were not fit to be introduced where they had no original existence; where there was no particular reason for introducing them, arising from the nature of the country, its extent, its state of improvement, or its peculiar customs. He agreed that the most desirable circumstance was, that the French and English inhabitants of Canada should unite and coalesce; if it were into one body, and that the different distinctions of the people might be extinguished for ever. If this had been the object in view, the English laws might soon have prevailed universally throughout Canada, not from force, but from choice and conviction of their superiority.

That we may not weary our readers by any useless repetition of the arguments used by the chief speakers on this momentous occasion, we shall here close our extracts from the debates in the House of Commons, and, in our next, shall take the liberty of making some comments on those passages we have already quoted; We have purposely omitted all notice of the arguments used relative to the provision made for the protestant Clergy, as having nothing to do with the present question, the re union of the two provinces.

CHARLES FOTHERGILL,

For that I understand is thy name, I have read the first numbers of thy Newspaper, all but the advertisements, which do not concern me. Thou seemest to possess a considerable share of this world's learning; and canst dress thy speech in the gay clothing which the world admireth—I approve of thy loyalty to GEORGE the KING;—of thy love to thy country;—of thy abhorrence of radical principles; and, that thou canst not bear that child of the wicked one, WILLIAM COBBET.

As thou professest to give instruction to thy Readers on all subjects of importance, permit me, an unknown man, to point out to thee a subject which hath oppressed my spirit for some years; which, if thou will lay before the public in one of the columns of thy publication, dressed in whatever style thou pleasest, thou will do well, and relieve thy friend from the burthen which lieth upon his mind.

The thing I mean is a wicked practice which hath been introduced into this Colony; and which, I am told, hath long been the custom of the Blacks in the Southern States, but now practised by whitemen in this country, upon the persons of the subjects of GEORGE, the KING.

Friend; no doubt thou already perceivest I mean a new mode of fighting, (new at least to the inhabitants of Europe) termed by wicked men from the United States, "rough and tumble," or, in English, thus—gnawing flesh like wild beasts; and turning eye-balls out of their sockets, biting noses and ears off, and laying hold of a certain part of the outward man which it is a shame even to speak of.—Friend Charles this is a grievous and horrible thing committed in the land, and calls loudly for the Rulers of the People to interpose and by wise laws to rescue our children from the jaws and claws of these bloodsucking and devouring Cannibals.—Friend, Friend! a lion will not devour a lion—nor will a bear lift up his paws against a bear;—but man, whose "heaven erected face" adorned with the smiles of love, will stoop, it appears, on the slightest provocation, to commit acts which degrade him lower than the beasts that perish.

I have often heard of men having had the cruelty to imbrue their hands in the blood of their fellows; but, never, till I came to America, did I hear of a man besmearing his jaws with the blood of another!

Thy correspondent and his friend were lately journeying on the highway. We beheld a number of the men of the world, sons of Belial, convened together at the door of a tavern.—In the midst of these people two young men strove together, as if they were wrestling. My friend said aloud, what meaneth these men, they cannot surely be in wrath, for neither of the two seemed to smite with the fist of wickedness; but on drawing nearer, we discovered our mistake. We beheld one of the men bleeding very much at the ear, whilst the fingers of the enemy were twisted in his hair, and the two thumbs pointed towards the poor bleeding man's eyes, just ready to gouge, (as the wicked ones term it). The inward man leaped for joy within me when I found that we had it in our power, by the force of our hands, to deliver this unfortunate man, to whose assistance we ran—and verily he was truly thankful to get off with the loss of an ear and, —From the account he gave us it appeared that he was a stranger in the land;—that he came from a far country, beyond the seas, to sojourn amongst us;—that being weary and faint with his journey, he had turned aside to tarry for the night at the tavern where we found him;—that a number of the men of the place assembled to drink and play;—that one of them began to mock him, and ask him if he had ever learned Virginia play. The stranger having replied, that he had no acquaintance with such language, and that he had not heard of such a play—before he could be aware of it, he was pulled off his feet and wounded, and mal treated, in the manner we had seen him—and that none of the men of the place offered to give him any protection or assistance.

Friend Fothergill. Sir FREDERICK MAITLAND, the Governor, and the Rulers of the land, are willing to do good and not evil, in the Province, over the which GEORGE, the KING, hath given them charge. They cannot be uninformed of this great evil. Then lift up thy voice on high, and shew them this great sin which is daily committed, and which appears to be increasing among us.—Should not an Act of Parliament be made especially against this very thing? Bodily confinement cannot be considered too much, as a punishment, for making the attempt, nor can banishment from our land be too severe for the actual commission of such a crime. Thus, should we put away the evil thing from amongst us—a thing which corrupteth our youth, endangereth our persons, and bringeth disgrace upon this fair portion of the British Empire.

Fare thee well

POSTSCRIPT.

The report of the Union of the two Legislatures of Canada being, for the present, abandoned, is confirmed by the last arrivals from England. The Bill for regulating the Trade of Upper Canada was passed on the 26th of July. As so much time is given for the re-consideration of the Union, we should not be surprised if it were abandoned in toto.

The news from Spain is interesting and important. We have given copious extracts. The conduct of France throughout this affair has been more than suspicious, all her accounts of the various events are twisted as much as possible in favour of FERDINAND and absolute monarchy.

The additional particulars of the North West Expedition overland towards the Polar Seas, to those we gave our readers a few weeks ago, must be perused with extraordinary interest.

GREAT BRITAIN.

The Canada Trade Bill was read the third time in the House of Commons on the 26th July, and passed. Several clauses were added to the Bill. It is entitled a Bill to regulate the Trade of Upper Canada, &c.

A petition was presented to the Commons on the 30th July, from certain merchants and shipowners in London, complaining that British shipping was not sufficiently protected in the South Seas. Mr. Marryat stated that British vessels had been subjected to capture, in consequence of the blockades that had been declared against the coasts of each other by the governments of Chili and Peru, and that they were annoyed by the Pirates in those seas.—He complained that the British cruizers had not adopted the same course towards Pirates that had been pursued by the Americans—a long debate followed.

A select committee of the House of Commons made a report of the number of members of the house who held offices under the Crown, at the pleasure of the Crown, or otherwise, and the emoluments of each. The number is 57, and the a-amount of their emoluments is £108,565. There are besides 13 members who hold offices in the appointment of public officers, the emoluments of which amount to £28,107. There are 8 members holding pensions from the Crown for life, amounting to £3,658.

The Duchess of Cambridge, on the 19th of July, gave birth to a Princess near Hanover.

SPAIN.

LONDON, July 31.—We have again examined the file of Madrid papers to the 18th inst. whose arrival we yesterday stated, and feel a pleasure in reporting to a brief notice of their contents. So completely was not only civil tranquility restored, but social confidence re established, and so satisfactory was the state of the capital considered, that on the 17th, the national militia who had been encamped to the square of the Constitution, from the 1st inst. to that date, broke up and retired to their homes, after having proceeded in great pomp to the house of the Municipality, to receive the thanks of the Authorities. The artillery likewise retired to the Park, and only a sufficient number of men remained under arms to do the duty of the garrison.

MADRID, July 13.—In execution of the law of 26th April, 1821, a commission was yesterday appointed, composed of officers of the garrison and the volunteer militia, to try the authors and accomplices of the late revolt.—The accused are divided into four classes: 1, the officers; 2, the soldiers taken firing; 3, soldiers taken with arms; 4, soldiers taken without arms.

"MADRID, July 15.—The Royal Carbineers entered on the 11th in the morning, Ciudad Real, and had proclaimed the King and Religion. The Constitutionals had not expected them. General O'Donojo took advantageous positions to attack the Royal Carbineers, but he endeavored before hand to induce them to return to their duty, and promised them general conditions. The Chief of the Carbineers, who is also called Espinosa, affected to listen to them, and availed himself of the delay of the negociation to quit Ciudad Real with his troop; he took the direction of the Mountains of Toledo, in the direction of the Puente de Fresno.

"The 400 Guards who had retreated to the Escurial, have not awaited the arrival of the troops from Madrid; they stopped merely to unite and organize; three of their officers are with them, and appeared to wish to take the direction of Navarre, without abandoning its mountains, because 180 only have preserved their arms.

The troops from the Escurial have brought back eighty Guards prisoners. At Quisola, the regiment of the Prince made seventy Guards prisoners.

"Mention is made of an explosion at Badajoz, but it produced only a massacre of the Royalists. At Zamora, at Valencia, at Sacedon, Royalist movements burst forth on the news of the events at Madrid.

BRITISH NORTH WEST EXPEDITION.

In addition to the communication which appeared in the Montreal Herald of the 17th ultimo, relative to the Arctic Expedition, under the orders of Lieut. Frankland, we are happy to be empowered to state, upon the authority of more recent arrivals, that the Expedition had arrived at York Factory, in Hudson's Bay, and was about to embark for England.

It appears that the toils and the sufferings of the Expedition have been of the most trying description, and that if they do not exceed belief, they were at least of such a nature as almost to overcome the stoutest heart, and deter all future attempts of similar tendency. It was fitted out in the summer of 1819, and, in the course of the following year, it was enabled by a liberal aid and reinforcement from the North West Company, to advance to the shores of the Great Bear Lake; which, we think, is situated in about 67° North Latitude, where it encamped and wintered. In the ensuing spring it approached the Copper Mine River, which it descended, until it fell into the ocean. Hitherto the expedition was accompanied by Mr. Wintzel a clerk to the North West Company, with ten of their best Indian hunters; but the wide and open sea, which appeared at the confluence of the river with the ocean, elated the expedition so much with the hope of a fortunate success, that it was thought proper to dispense with the further attendance of Mr. Wintzel and his hunters, who accordingly returned up the river, leaving the Expedition to proceed in two canoes, to explore the coast of the Polar Sea, eastward from the mouth of the Copper Mine River, towards Hudson's Bay. But it seems, that in consequence of the approach of winter, so early as the latter end of August, heavy falls of snow, dense as mist, and an extremely harsh and ill provided weather, the expedition was unfortunately prevented from accomplishing its ends, farther than exploring about 580 miles of the coast which lies to the northeast of the Copper Mine River, and ascertaining, that, so far as the eye could penetrate, the sea which lay before them was quite open, and perfectly free of ice.

As the expedition returned, its wants and its exigencies became alarming in the extreme, and it soon required the whole fortitude of the heart, and the utmost exertion of the frame, to brave the shipwreck which stared it in the face. In approaching that part of the Copper Mine River from whence it set out, it was necessary to double an immense point of land, which would occupy a greater length of time than its emergencies could well admit of, and it was therefore deemed necessary to set the canoes adrift, and cut a direct course over land to the Copper Mine River. When the travellers arrived on the banks of this river, they experienced some trifling difficulties how to get across, but having killed ten elks, with the skins of which they contrived to construct a canoe, this hardship was soon overcome; but joy which it diffused was as transient as disappointed hope. In forcing their melancholy way through the untravelled wilds between the Copper Mine River and the Great Bear Lake, they fell completely short of provisions, and were for many days under the necessity of subsisting upon sea weeds, and a powder produced from pounding the withered bones of the food which they had already consumed. In this struggle betwixt the love of life and the dread of a death that must be terrifying to all mankind, Mr. Wood, nine Canadians, & an Esquimaux fell untimely and regretted victims; and had not the survivors, who, for several days, were driven to the necessity of prolonging a miserable existence, by feeding upon the tattered remnants of their shoes, and, we fear, upon a more forbidding and unpalatable fare, exerted themselves by a super human effort to reach the Great Bear Lake, it is probable that they would have all suffered the most exquisite and appalling martyrdom. Here they found the heads and the bleached bones of the animals that had served them for last winter's provision, which afford them the melancholy ingredients for preserving the vital spark, until their arrival at some Post belonging to the Hudson's Bay Company. It is said, that, upon the arrival of this surveying party of the expedition at Slave Lake, the Canadians there were very nigh breaking forth into some alarming outrage when they found that their former comrades, instead of returning with the expedition, had been lost for ever: but we understand that no serious injury has ensued in consequence of this very natural disappointment.

DOMESTIC.

The settlers from Ireland, Scotland and England, which have arrived in the Canadas, Nova Scotia, &c. this year exceed 30,000.

UPPER CANADA.

At a meeting of Magistrates and other respectable inhabitants in the Eastern District, at Cornwall, on Friday, the ninth day of August, 1822, convened for the purpose of taking into consideration what measures are necessary to be adopted to make known with as little delay as possible, to His Majesty's Government, the very injurious consequences which must result to Upper Canada, should the agreement of the Commissioners relative to the Boundary Line at the Long Sault and Barnhart's Islands be carried into effect.

The Hon. Neil McLean was called to the Chair, and the following Resolutions were adopted.

1st. RESOLVED, That it plainly appears to this meeting, that should the agreement of the Commissioners under the treaty of Ghent, relative to the Boundary Line between this Province and the United States be carried into effect as recently published, the inhabitants of this Province will have no water communication by which they can transport their produce to the market of Lower Canada, inasmuch as the extent of one hundred yards agreed upon by the Commissioners as the American Boundary on the north side of Barnhart's Island will come within a few yards of the Canadian shore, and will cover the whole navigable channel of the St. Lawrence.

2d. RESOLVED, That it appears to this meeting, that should the lower Long Sault and Barnhart's Island be given up to the United States it will in effect be surrendering all right to the free navigation of the St. Lawrence, as it will be in the power of the United States at any time its policy may seem to require it, to prevent the inhabitants of Upper Canada from using the channel on the South side of Long Sault and Barnhart's Islands, which in the present state of the country is the only navigable channel for boats carrying any cargo.

3d. RESOLVED, That a Memorial be presented to his Excellency the Governor General, praying his immediate interference with His Majesty's Government to prevent the ratification of the Agreement entered into by the Commissioners to ascertain the Boundary Line between this Province and the United States under the treaty of Ghent, as far as that agreement relates to the Line at the Long Sault and Barnhart's Islands; and that Donald McDonell, Alexander Wilkinson, Philip Vankoughnet, and Archibald McLean, Esqrs. be a Committee to draft the said Memorial.

4th. RESOLVED, That it is expedient to ascertain with as little delay as possible the width of the channel and depth of the water between Barnhart's Island and the main land on the north bank of the St. Lawrence, and that William Browne and William McDonald, Esqrs. Deputy Surveyors, be requested to survey the same, and to make a plan thereto to accompany the said Memorial, shewing if possible, the depth of the water and the extent of the channel, which will be left to Upper Canada, should the said agreement be ratified.

5th. RESOLVED, That the thanks of the meeting be given to the Chairman, and that the proceedings of this meeting be published, in order that the inhabitants of the Province of this Province may forthwith be apprised of the necessity of immediate application and exertion, to secure to themselves a channel by which to convey their produce to their only market.

Upper-Canada Almanac, FOR 1823.

AS it is the intention of the Editors of the "Weekly Register," to publish an Almanac for the year 1823, on an improved plan, with many additions; and, to compleat it as soon as possible, they are anxious to ascertain the number of copies it may be necessary to print, as it would be attended with loss to strike off many more than were actually wanted—They take this opportunity, therefore, of requesting that all those who may wish to patronize the undertaking, will take the trouble of sending their names and address, either to the U. C. Gazette Office, in York, or to some of the undermentioned Gentlemen, as may be most convenient.

It is intended to give whatever may be useful to the man of business; resident in the country—and, also, much information that may be useful to strangers—The work will be neatly stitched in a cover, of a convenient size—and the price not to exceed half a dollar.

Upper-Canada Almanac, FOR 1823.

AS it is the intention of the Editors of the "Weekly Register," to publish an Almanac for the year 1823, on an improved plan, with many additions; and, to compleat it as soon as possible, they are anxious to ascertain the number of copies it may be necessary to print, as it would be attended with loss to strike off many more than were actually wanted—They take this opportunity, therefore, of requesting that all those who may wish to patronize the undertaking, will take the trouble of sending their names and address, either to the U. C. Gazette Office, in York, or to some of the undermentioned Gentlemen, as may be most convenient.

It is intended to give whatever may be useful to the man of business; resident in the country—and, also, much information that may be useful to strangers—The work will be neatly stitched in a cover, of a convenient size—and the price not to exceed half a dollar.

Any hints or communications for this Work will be thankfully received.

Editorial Commentary.

The Publication of the 44th Chap. of the Act for regulating the Trade between His Majesty's Possessions in America and the West Indies, and other parts of the World, (of which the 45th Chap. will be printed next week) prevents our continuing the Debates of the British Parliament, on the separation of the two Provinces in the year 1791, for the present, as we intended; but we shall take the earliest opportunity of fulfilling our promise on that head.

If it were lawful for Christians to rejoice in the destruction of an enemy, there is ample room for such a feeling in the horrible fate of the CAPTAIN PACHA, the unrelenting ravager of Scio.—It will be seen, by this day's publication, in what manner it has pleased the ALL-WISE Disposer of Events to cut off that wretched Infidel. It is possible that the sufferings of the unfortunate Greeks may be allowed to expiate all their sins; that they may become regenerated; and that, finally, their candlestick may not be removed out of his place.

It seems now to be ascertained beyond any doubt that there is such an animal as the Mermaid which has been so long deemed fabulous by the Learned.—The usual form in which Fancy Thomas Brown conceives the idea of its existence to have arisen from the manner in which Dagon, the Idol, was represented, with human figure above, and fishy shape below, whose fishy part alone remained when the hands and upper part fell before the ARK of GOD: or, from an Idol of the Phœnicians, Derceto, or Artergates, in whose fishy and feminine mixture were implied the Moon and the Sea, or the Deity of the Waters;—wherefore, that ancient people made oblations of fishes in their sacrifices to that Idol.—The Grecians placed a similar figure on the top of the Temple of Saturn. It is now, however, certain that such a creature, as the Mermaid, has existence.—When we first heard an account of the Japanese specimen we own that we thought it an imposition; but the description given in this day's paper, is so evidently written by a man of observation, and science, that we can no longer doubt.

Selections from English Papers.

It is expected that the King will prorogue Parliament in person, on the 6th of August. On Thursday, it is understood, his Majesty contemplates leaving town, on his visit to Scotland. His Majesty it is now expected, will embark on board a steam vessel, somewhere about Tilbury Fort, where several steam vessels will be stationed to receive the King's suite. Those vessels will then proceed to the Nore, to join the vessels now riding off that station, awaiting his Majesty's arrival. The scene presented by this Royal aquatic excursion will be peculiar and novel, on account of the number of steam vessels that will be amongst the fleet; more of those vessels, it is calculated, than have yet been seen collected at one point, and engaged in the same voyage.—Great preparations are making for the gratification of Royalty in Edinburgh and its neighbourhood.

THE KING'S VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

It being understood that his Majesty is to land at the chain pier, near New-Haven, the Honourable the Trustees for the Cramond District of roads have employed, for the last eight days, between 200 carts in embanking, widening, and repairing the road from the westward of the chain-pier to that leading to Lilliput, which his majesty has to pass.

By whatever route it shall be decided that his Majesty shall enter Edinburgh, we understand it is intended to erect a triumphal arch or gateway at the entrance of the royalty, where the ceremony of surrendering the keys of the city will take place.

A carriage is preparing for the Lord Provost, with the arms of the city painted on the pannels; and a hammer-cloth, and liveries of orange, the city colour, dresses are preparing similar to that of the beef-eaters, for 30 men, who are to do the duty of the Lord High Constable, and Knight.

His Majesty's stay in this city will not, it is said, exceed a fortnight. He will hold a grand drawing room and levee, as in Dublin, and receive and give one grand public dinner. The Royal suite will not be so numerous as in Ireland; but it will principally consist of the same personages. His Majesty intends to continue his aquatic excursion after his departure from Edinburgh, but for what length of time is not yet determined.

Mr. Mash, of the Lord Chamberlain's Office, arrived at Oman's Hotel yesterday.

Amidst the din of joyous preparation for the reception of a gracious and beloved Monarch, we are glad to learn that the Committee of Noblemen and Gentlemen, contributors to the National Monument of Scotland are, in redemption of their pledge in the petition presented to the Throne in May last, determined to lay the foundation stone of the edifice on the occasion of his majesty's approaching and auspicious visit to the ancient palace and capital of his royal ancestors.

Accordingly the necessary preliminary measures are in full activity, and it will be a most happy and striking coincidence, if this imposing ceremony should be accomplished under the immediate auspices of his majesty, the patron of the Grand Lodge of Scotland, and that, too, on the 12th of August, the anniversary of his birth day, thus perpetuating the epoch of his royal birth, and his gracious visit, and identifying them with the commencement of that grand memorial which is to commemorate the past, and conduce to the future glory of Scotland; immortalizing his reign not less by its warlike achievements than by the splendid monuments of art by which it will thus be adorned.

We are further authorised to state, that the magistrates of Edinburgh have, in the handsomest manner, given every facility on their part towards the forwarding of this great national object.—Caledonian Mercury.

The society of Writers to the Signet met again yesterday, when they approved of the report of their Committee, and of an Address prepared by them, which is to be presented by the Keeper, Deputy Keeper, and 15 Members of the Society have made offer to the Lord Provost of the use of their Library and Hall, on the occasion of the entertainment to be given to his Majesty, which it is now decided will take place in the Outer Parliament House.

Several of the counties of Scotland have been already summoned to meet, for the purpose of proposing addresses to his Majesty; and there is no doubt all the rest will follow the example. An extraordinary general meeting of the Highland Society of Scotland has also been called; the meeting is summoned for the 9th of August.

Extract of a letter, dated Edinburgh, July 23.—"The Royal Company of Archers will claim their old privilege of defending the King's person as a body guard, within six miles of the capital. This company, which owes its origin to the commissioners appointed in the reign of James I. for enforcing the exercise of Archery, was revived during the reign of his late majesty. It now consists of one thousand members, among whom are most of our Scottish Nobility and persons of distinction. Such guard, we doubt not, will be most acceptable to his Majesty, and we are all anticipating the pleasure of seeing our Sovereign escorted by this fine Company of Nobles and Gentlemen."

At the request of the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, Sir R. Birnie has appointed Townshend, Sayer, Vickery, and Bishop, to be in attendance during his Majesty's stay in that city.

From the Morning Chronicle.

ROYAL TOUR.

His Majesty's present plan is to take water at Greenwich, on the 7th or 8th of August. In addition to the Royal Yatch, a Steam Boat has been provided, which the king will enter, should the weather be perfectly calm. There has been much discussion in his Majesty's domestic circle on the subject of the suite, which in the highest quarter, is wished to be most numerous, and selected without any regard to party. Previously to the Duke of Devonshire's journey to the continent, his Majesty expressed a desire that he would join the royal Tourists, and his grace returns from Aix la Chapelle, for the express purpose of doing so. One of the finest hotels in Edinburgh, has been engaged for the noble duke and his immediate friends.—His Majesty and suite will land at Leith harbour, and proceed from thence in the royal carriages, which have been sent to Scotland by sea, to Holyrood house, where such preparations are making for his reception, as the shortness of the notice would permit. It is not exactly determined whether the King will sleep at Holyrood house, or immediately proceed to the Duke of Buccleughs's palace, at Dalkeith, which his majesty's known love for retirement, has induced him to select for his residence during his stay in the neighbourhood of Edinburgh. His Majesty intends to visit the fine ruins of Roslyn Castle and the Chapel; likewise Hawthornden, the hallowed seat of Drummond the Poet, and proceed from thence by Lasswade to Dalkeith. All state matters are to be observed and kept up at Holyrood house, in case His Majesty should not choose to sleep in Edinburgh. The Duke of Hamilton, the Duke of Argyle, Lord Roslyn, Lord Lauderdale, the Hon. W. Maule, & all the distinguished friends of liberty in Scotland, will be included in the select circle during the King's stay in that hospitable country.

FRANCE.

Both the situation and the conduct of the Bourbons in France very much resemble those of the infatuated James the Second. Like him, under the influence of their Priests, they are vainly striving to make their people retrograde in knowledge to the dark periods of the crusades. What in the name of common sense can be expected from men who are endeavoring to revive the feast days of all the visionary and nondescript Saints of the old Catholic Calendar; or can any sensible Frenchman read without visible indignation paragraphs which announce the intention of the Duchess of Berry and the Duke of Bourdeaux to become godfather and godmother to a Bell? Yet such are the Puerilities which are reviving with so much earnestness, as to endanger the very existence of the French crown. The French paper The Quotidienne, of Sunday last, gives the following account of a ceremony performed by the Comte d'Artois, on Holy Thursday:—"About o'clock in the morning an altar was raised in that part of the Tuileries called the Gallery of Diana. Before this altar was placed twelve children, dressed in scarlet, to represent the twelve Apostles, seated at a table served with feast dishes, crowned with flowers, and a decanter of wine and a piece of bread to each of the thirteen dishes. The Count d'Artois acting for the King, now proceeded to wash the feet of the children, whilst the Duke of Angoulême waited on them at table. The Archbishop of Arles officiated, and the Vicar General, Abbe Feutrier, preached an eulogy upon the beneficence, goodness, and christian humility of the Princes."

A subscription has been opened in France under the sanction of the King, for the erection of a monument, at Arbois, in Franche Comte, to the memory of General Pichegru, who perished in a dungeon of the Temple, where he was sent by Buonaparte. The subscription is extended to England. Pichegru commanded the army opposed to the British forces under the command of the Duke of York. He refused to execute the sanguinary decree of the National Convention, which ordered him to make no British prisoners, but to put them all to death:—"We are soldiers, not assassins," was his indignant reply.

A French paper contains the following remarkable case:—"A letter from Commercy, dated the 2d of April, states, that the widow Hocquith, of Barle Rue, aged 55 years, who lived quite easy upon the interest of her property in the Sinting Fund, died a few days since in the most deplorable and astonishing manner. We presume her death is a new example of the phenomenon called "spontaneous human combustion." This woman, who was corpulent, was, according to report, in the habit of using spirituous liquors imprudently. A vase standing near her filled with burning coals, determined the inflamation of her body. She was burnt to a cinder inwardly. The extremities were not affected. The room and her clothes also escaped the fire. There are on record, instances of internal combustion, but they are few, and the majority of these were occasioned by an excessive use of ardent spirits.

SPAIN.

From the New Monthly Magazine.

SPANISH PRIESTS.—It would be tedious to enter into a discussion of the numerous orders comprehended under the two classes of Monks and Friars. The distinguishing characters of the first are wealth, ease, and indulgence—those of the last, vulgarity, filth, and vice. I shall only add that among the Monks, the Benedictines are at the top of the scale for learning and decency of manners, while the Hieronimites deservedly occupy the bottom. To the Friars I am forced to apply the Spanish proverb—"There is little choice in a mangy flock."—The Franciscans, however, both from their multitude and their low habits of mendicity, may be held as the proper representatives of all that is most objectionable in the religious orders.

The inveterate superstition which still supports these institutions amongst us has lost, of late, its power to draw recruits to the cloister from the middle and higher classes. Few Monks, and scarcely a Friar, can be found, who, by taking the cowl, has not escaped a life of menial toil. Boys of this rank of life are received as novices at the age of fourteen, and admitted, after a year's probation, to the perpetual vows of obedience, poverty and celibacy.—Engagements so discordant with the first laws of human nature could hardly stand the test of time, even if they arose from the deepest feelings of enthusiasm. But this affection of the mind is seldom found in our convents. The year of noviciate is spent in learning the cant and gestures of the vilest hypocrisy, as well as in strengthening, by the example of the professed young Friars, the original gross manners and vicious habits of the probationers. The result of such a system is but too visible. It is a common jest among the friars themselves, that in the act of taking the vows, when the superior of the convent draws the cowl over the head of the probationer, he uses the words Tolle vere candiam—"Put off shame." And indeed, were the friars half so true to their profession as they are to this supposed injunction, the Church of Rome would really teem with saints. Shameless in begging, they share the scanty meal of the labourer, and extort a portion of every produce of the earth from the farmer. Shameless in conduct, they spread vice and demoralization among the lower classes, secure in the respect which is felt for their profession, that they may engage in a course of profligacy without any risk of exposure. When an instance of gross misconduct obtrudes itself upon the eye of the public, every pious person thinks it his duty to hush up the report, and cast a veil on the transaction. Even the sword of Justice is glanced aside from these consecrated criminals.

The most lucrative employment for friars, in Spain, is preaching. I have not the means to ascertain the number of sermons delivered at Seville in the course of the year; but there is good reason to suppose that the average cannot be less than twelve a day. One popular preacher, a clergyman, I know, who scarcely passes one day without mounting the pulpit, and reckons on three sermons every four and twenty hours during the last half of Lent.

Of those indefatigable preachers, the greatest favorite is a young Franciscan friar, called Padre S——z, whose only merit consists in a soft, clear toned voice, a tender and affectionate manner, and an incredible fluency of language. Being, by his profession, under a vow of absolute poverty, and the Franciscan rule carrying this vow so far as not to allow the members of the order to touch money, it was generally understood that the produce of these apostolical labors was faithfully deposited to be used in common by the whole religious community. An incident, however, which lately came to light, has given us reason to suspect that we are not quite in the secret of the internal management of these societies of saintly paupers, and that individual industry is rewarded among them with a considerable share of profits. A young female, cousin of the zealous preacher in question, was living quite alone in a retired part of the town, where her relative paid her, it should seem, not unfrequent visits. Few however, except her obscure neighbors, suspected her connection with the friar, or had the least notion of her existence. An old woman attended her in the day time, and retired in the evening, leaving her mistress alone in the house. One morning the street was alarmed by the old servant, who, having gained admittance, as usual, by means of a private key, found the young woman dead in her bed, the room and other parts of the house stained with blood. It was clear, indeed upon a slight inspection of the body, that no violence had taken place—yet the power of interest existed at the moment, and before measures had been taken to hush the whole matter spread at the circumstances of the case all over the town, and brought the fact to light, that the house itself belonged to the friar, having been purchased by an agent with the money arising from his sermons.—The hungry vultures of the law would have reaped an abundant harvest upon any lay individual who had been involved in such a train of suspicious circumstances. But probably a proper douceur out of the sermon fees increased their pious tenderness for the friar—while he was so emboldened by the disposition of the people to shut their eyes on every circumstance which might sully the fair name of a son of St. Francis, that a few days after the event, he preached a sermon, denouncing the curse of heaven on the impious individuals who could harbor a belief derogatory to his sacred character.

GREECE AND TURKEY.

The French papers of Wednesday contain an article, dated Constantinople, 26th ult. giving an account of the death of the Captain Pacha, that chief actor in the late tragedy at Scio. "Divine vengeance begins to be displayed, and the cause of humanity has found avengers. The Captain Pacha, that ferocious Mussulman, who plunged all the inhabitants of Scio into the abyss of calamity, no longer exists. The Greeks have displayed a courage & boldness the result of which will resound through all Europe. On the 22d of June, the eve of the feast of Bairam, three Greek vessels, charged with combustibles, passed the Turkish fleet, and under cover of the friendly flag which they had hoisted, approached the ship of the Admiral. The Turks, occupied with preparations for their feast, paid little attention to the fire-ships, and the Greeks had thus time to throw their fusees on the Admiral's ship, which soon was in flames. Disorder immediately spread among the crew, and each man tried to save himself from the conflagration. The Captain Pacha, half burnt, was transported to the blood-stained shores of the Isle of Scio, which he had atrociously laid waste, after half an hour of torment, he expired. Three Turkish vessels were much damaged, and the rest of the fleet dispersed in different directions, dreading an attack from the Greek fire-ships. The intelligence is confirmed by letters received at Lloyd's.

GREECE.

The advices of the success of the Greeks over the Turkish fleet appear to be put out of doubt.—The Greeks seized a most propitious moment for sending the fireships among the Turkish fleet. It was at the period of the Turkish feast of Ramadan, when, from religious scruples, the Turks endeavored to avoid fighting. The commander of the Turkish fleet was the Captain Pacha, who was the principal perpetrator of the atrocities at the Island of Scio, where he yielded his forfeited life, after miserably suffering from the conflagration of his vessel. Thus were the Sciots, in some measure, avenged.

Some of the London papers, on the first receipt of this news, regarded it as a fabrication, got up for the purpose of stockjobbing. But accounts having been received at Lloyd's, as mentioned in the Liverpool Mercury of the 2d of August, confirming the previous intelligence, no doubt remains of the fact. The advices from Constantinople, in which this successful attack of the Greeks were detailed, add that "affairs of the Morea assume a calmer aspect for the Porte." The tide of success, which has hitherto bore the patriots of Greece through the unparalelled struggle with their merciless oppressors, seems to warrant the expectation, that even without the aid of Russia, they will be able to maintain their independence. He would be unworthy the name of a freeman who could desire any other result.

INDEX AT END

Smyrna, May 13.—Among the number of private circumstances the following is quoted by several eyewitnesses. A young Greek female, sixteen or seventeen years of age, of great beauty, was carried off by an Arab, who sold her to a Turk for 300 piastres. Shortly afterwards he offered 3,000 piastres to her new master for the re-purchase of this beautiful Child. The Turk, who already felt a sentiment of love, refused the money. The Arab proceeded to the market, met the Turk, and wanted to compel him to restore the slave on receiving 300 piastres, the original price. The Turk opposed this, and high words arose; the Arab, at length, in a transport of anger, said 'you shall not have her,' and, taking out his pistol, lodged the contents in her bosom, she fell and expired. The Turk embraced the inanimate body, and mingled his tears with its blood. Recovering himself, he presented himself before the Captain Pacha and demanded justice. 'You shall have it,' said the Grand Admiral. 'Do you know the murderer?' 'Yes,' 'Let all the Arabs be arrested and brought before me.' The order was executed, and the Turk pointed out the guilty individual. 'Draw thy sabre and cut off his head' The Turk decline ed the office, which was then performed by the executioner.

Moldavia, which, with Wallachia and Transylvania, were called the Daci by the Romans—and their rugged and poor inhabitants long withstood the Roman arms—became tributary to the Turks, under Mahomet the Great. Moldavia alone paid 2000 crowns per annum, which was considered but a small tribute. The amount, however, of the tribute, led the Moldavians to fear that it would pave the way for the future encroachment of the Turks; and, forming alliance with the King of Poland, they made war upon the Porte, but owing to the treachery of some of the commanders, and an alliance between the Porte and Wallachia, the province of Moldavia fell entirely into the hands of the Mussumen.

In the year 2462, Mahomet the Great undertook the entire conquest of these countries. An alliance was formed by the Moldavians with Sigismond of Transylvania, but, after many bloody wars and factions, they became a part of the Turkish empire. Subsequent treaties with Christian powers, compelled the Turkish Government to appoint Hospodars, and give them some authority; but the value of these provinces to the Porte, and their favorable position, renders it impossible for them to transfer these provinces to Russia.

A MERMAID.

Extract of a letter from the Rev. Dr. Philip, Representative of the London Missionary Society at Cape Town, Cape of Good Hope, dated April 26, 1822 :—

"I have to-day seen a Mermaid, now exhibiting in this town. I have always treated the existence of this creature as fabulous; but my scepticism is now removed. As it is probable no description of this extraordinary creature has yet reached England, the following particulars respecting it may gratify your curiosity and amuse you.

"The head is almost the size of a baboon. It is thinly covered with black hair, hanging down, and not inclined to frizzle. On the upper lip and on the chin there are a few hairs, resembling those upon the head. The nasa malarum, or cheek bones, are prominent. The forehead is low, but, except in this particular, the features are much better proportioned, and bear a more decided resemblance to the human countenance than those of any of the baboon tribes. The head is turned back and the countenance has an expression of error, which gives it an appearance of a caricature of the human face; but I am disposed to think that both these circumstances are accidental, and have arisen from the manner in which the creature met its death. It bears the appearance of having died in great agony.

"The ears, nose, lips, chin, breast, and nipples, fingers and nails, resemble those of a human figure.

"The spinous process of the vertebræ are very prominent, and apparently arranged as in the human body.

"From the position of the arms, and the manner in which they are placed, and from such an examination as could be made in the circumstances in which I was placed at the time I saw it, I have no doubt that it has clavicles—an appendage belonging to the human subject, which baboons are without.

"The appearance of the teeth affords sufficient evidence that it is full grown, the incisores being worn to the upper surface. There are eight incisores, four canina, and eight morales. The canine teeth resemble those of a full grown dog; all the others resemble those of a human subject.

"The length of the animal is three feet; but not having been well preserved, it has shrunk considerably, and must have been both longer and thicker when alive than it is now. Its resemblance to the human species ceases immediately under the mamma. On the line of separation, and directly under the breast, are two fins. From the point where the human figure ceases, which is about 12 inches below the vertex of the head, it resembles a large fish of the salmon species. It is covered with scales all over. On the lower part of the animal the scales resemble those of a fish; but on that part of the animal which resembles a human form, they are much less, and scarcely preceptible except on a near inspection. On the lower part of the body, it has six fins, one dorsal, two ventrical, two pectoral, and the tail.

"The pectoral fins are very remarkable; they are horizontal, and evidentally formed as an apparatus to support the creature when in an erect posture, like that in which it has been sometimes represented combing its hair.

"The figure of the tail is exactly that which is given in the usual representations of the Mermaid.

"The proprietor of this extraordinary animal is Captain Eades, of Boston, in the United States of America. Since writing the above description, he has called upon me, and I have learned from him the following particulars :—

"It was caught somewhere on the North of China, by a fisherman who sold it for a trifle; after which it was brought to Batavia. Here it was purchased by Captain Eades for 5000 Spanish dollars, and he has since been offered 10,000 Spanish dollars for it, but refused to part with it for that sum. Captain Eades, is a passenger on board the American ship Lion, now in Table Bay; he leaves this port in about a fortnight, and the Lion visits the Thames on her passage to America, so that it will probably be soon exhibited in London."

ANECDOTES.

WHITE SATIN ROBES.—King Charles the First was the first English Monarch who wore white satin robes at his coronation, till his time all the Kings of England were crowned in purple robes. From this circumstance he obtained the appellation of the White King.—at his death he also wore a white satin cap, being so formed as not to obstruct the stroke of the executioner.

DR. FRANKLIN.—The following may be reckoned a pretty successful hit at illiteracy :—Dr. Franklin used to repeat an observation of his negro servant, when the Dr. was making the tour of Derbyshire, Lancashire, and other manufacturing towns in England : "Every thing, massa, work in this country—Water work; wind work; fire work; smoke work; dog work; man work; ox work; horse work; ass work; every thing here work but the hog; he eat, he drink, he sleep, he do nothing all day, but walk about like a Gentleman."

TALLEYRAND most correctly and philosophically drew the distinction between the English and the American character, to a diplomatic personage from that country, in an unreserved conversation after a family dinner in Paris. "I do not know how it is," said that experienced French Statesman, "but I never saw an American who did not glory in being taken for an Englishman; and I never yet saw an Englishman, who was not ashamed to be taken for an American!"

DR. JOHNSON.—Dr. Johnson was once shewn a long prosing poem, in blank verse, in order to have his opinion of it; he shortly returned it to the author, assuring him, that if he struck out every other line, it would be better by half.

FONTENELLE, author of the Plurality of Worlds, lived to be nearly 100 years old, and even at that age had an extraordinary turn of wit on suitable occasions. A lady of nearly equal age said to him one day in a large company—"Monsieur, you and I stay here so long, I have a notion death has forgotten us :—"Speak as softly as you can, Madam," replied the veteran, "lest you should remind him of us!"

POETRY.

THE CRUCIFIXION.

[Imitated from the Italian of Crescembini.]

I ask'd the Heavens—What foe to God hath done
This unexampled deed?"—the Heavens exclaim,
"Twas MAN; and we in horror snatch'd the Sun,
From such a spectacle of grief and shame."

I ask'd the Sea;—the Sea with fury boil'd,
And answered by her voice of storms—"Twas MAN;
My waves in panic at his crimes recoil'd,
Disclosed the abyss, and from the centre ran."

I ask'd the Earth;—the Earth replied aghast,
"Twas MAN"; and such pangs my bosom rent,
That still I fear and tremble at the past."

—To Man, gay, smiling, thoughtless Man I went,
And ask'd HIM next;—He turned a scornful eye,
Shook his proud head, and deign'd me no reply.

DOMESTIC.

ST. JOHNS, (N. B.) Aug. 29.

We cannot refrain from congratulating our fellow citizens on the liberality which has been displayed in filling up the subscription necessary for defraying the expence of an accurate survey of the proper line for the proposed Canal between the Bay of Fundy and the Bay of Verte. We have now the satisfaction of thinking that efficient means will be applied to the furtherance of this great object so signally beneficial to the rising interests of this Province, and which has hitherto had an existence only in the imaginations of the sanguine, may eventually be carried into effect.—Star.

C. Gazette Office, in York, or to some of the undermentioned Gentlemen, as may be most convenient.

It is intended to give whatever may be useful to the man of business; resident in the country;—and also such information that may be useful to strangers.—The work will be shortly published in a cover, at a convenient size—and the price not to exceed half a dollar.

ERRATA.

In the 43rd line, of the first column, of Page 216, in our last number ;—for 2462 read 1462.

Editorial Commentary.

Having been applied to, from various quarters, for an early fulfilment of the promise made in our 14th number, respecting a detail of the best mode of cultivating Hemp, we have this week acquitted ourselves of the engagement, in the best manner we are able, by consulting all the most approved modes of culture practised in other countries. We expect very soon to give the result of an important experiment made in the immediate vicinity of this Town, which may prove both useful and incentive.

We regret exceedingly that our limits will not allow us to notice in the manner we desire, and the subject demands, some very extraordinary, extravagant, and absurd reasoning. (I reasoning it can be termed) which has appeared in the editorial department of the last OBSERVER, on the subject of the proposed Union of the two Provinces. After this specimen of the consistency of this modern Proteus, who dislikes one day, what he approves another, and whose judgment is ever changeable, e'en as variable as the tide of his own passions ; we ought to be surprised at nothing that comes from such a writer. Indeed, the great uncertainty, and inconstancy, always to be remarked amongst imbecile, or badly disposed, politicians, may be accounted for as proceeding from the nature of their passions, (rather than from the truth and reality of things,) which being changeable and irregular, can never produce regular ideas, any more than a crooked rule can be the measure of a straight line.

It is but a very short time since this would be politician honored us with his pity and his ridicule, for stating what has been since found true ; and it was only in June last that he gave us this assurance—"without the consolidation of the Governments, this Province must remain a poor, enslaved portion of his Majesty's dominions" ! Now ; within three short months,—

(Three little months ; or ere those shoes were old.
With which he ran from shop to shop with the news,
In self importance great:—) this same Union is termed "an infamous attempt to deprive us of our liberty, and our freedom," with a long tissue of balderdash besides ; and the whole country is called upon to petit on against it, in terms inflammatory enough, in all conscience, if a single man could be found so foolish as to suffer his equanimity to be disturbed by such stuff. Alas, what will become of this luckless Knight of the quill ?—what will his brother pat riots say of him ?—one way only is left for him to escape, which is for once to make an honest confession, and declare his innocence, inasmuch as he did not edite the "special appeal to the country which appeared on Monday last, and we have no doubt that a general credence will be given to such an asseveration. For, it is manifestly the work of one of the Chiefs of the party, whose genius now and then shoots a brighter ray o'er the page of the Observer.

"YE SHALL KNOW THEM BY THEIR FRUITS."

But; is it not lamentable, is it not shocking, that in the very moment when all parties are shewing so publicly, so decidedly, so unquestionably, a sincere determination to consult the best interests of the Canadas; and when time has been requested by one party, and granted by the other, for the express purpose of ascertaining the general feeling and wishes of the country, in order that as much attention as possible may be paid to those feelings on a subject, The language of this attempt to rouse discontent and distrust appears to us not merely preposterous—it is abominable ; wicked ; execrable ! To talk of LIBERTY ; of FREEDOM ; of the RIGHTS of MAN ; and of many other blessings enjoyed under a rational and good Government, is the common cant of designing men ; but, how often are we forced to exclaim with Madame ROLAND as she turned in agony towards the statue of liberty :—"Oh, Liberty ; how long shall thy sacred name be profaned ?"—Faction knows how to assume, occasionally, the most beautiful forms, and to use the most enticing epithets ; but it is generally in order to consummate her worst purposes :—when Satan tempted our first progenitors it is not to be supposed he painted the horrors of sin, and of disobedience, and the shudderings of a death-bed : No, he spoke of the treasures of wisdom, and the joys of eternal light, and life ! and what was the consequence ? the Spirit of Evil and of Death laid hold of the destines of man, and the cemeteries and charnel houses of the species have been filled with the spoils, and trophies of his victory unto this day.

Selections from British & Foreign Papers.

Cruelty to Animals.—The Bill to prevent the cruel and improper treatment of Cattle, passed into law last Thursday by the House of Lords, enacts, that if any person shall wantonly or cruelly beat, abuse, or ill treat any horse, mare, gelding, mule, ass, ox, cow, heifer, steer, sheep, or other cattle, on complaint being made to a magistrate, within whose jurisdiction such offence is committed, within ten days after, shall forfeit from £5 to 10s. as the lowest penalty, and, on non-payment, be subject to be committed to the House of Correction, for any time not exceeding three months.

Ancient Histories of Great Britain.—On the 24th of July, in the House of Commons, the Chancellor of the Exchequer brought forward an address to the King, stating, that the present editions of the Ancient Histories of that Kingdom are incorrect and defective, and many of them in manuscript, and that if they were published under the authority of government, it would confer an honor on his reign, and be useful to the public ; and requesting that his Majesty be pleased to order the printing of the said Ancient Histories, at the public expence. Sir James Mackintosh spoke in favor of the proposal of a measure which he thought so much interested the national character, and would contribute so largely to the diffusion of knowledge. He contended that the government should do it, because the work would be of so much magnitude that no private individual would be likely to embark in it. From his speech we are also given to understand that the work is to be prepared by a Mr. Petre, the keeper of the public records in the tower. That gentleman, he said, "had already devoted the greater part of his life to those pursuits best calculated to fit him for such an undertaking ; and unless government listened to avail itself of his assistance, it might not easily find an individual who was at the same time disposed and competent for such a work A collection of the ancient histories of this country would be extremely useful in obtaining an accurate knowledge of the Constitution. Many of the new theories on government arose from an ignorance of the rise and progress of the Constitution, towards a knowledge of which these histories would greatly contribute." The motion, after a feint of opposition from Mr. Hume, was carried without a division. We may therefore probably calculate upon the appearance within a few years at farthest, of the most splendid Historical work ever published ; for the British government will not spare any expence on the occasion. We use the term "splendid" in respect of the style in which it will be "got up" as to the matter we may judge of it afterwards. And in order that we may then have an opportunity to judge, we hope his Majesty will early send us a copy, elegantly bound and double gilt. With Sir James Macintosh, we are persuaded there is no case where drinking largely is more likely to produce sobriety, than the study of history.

Thomas Strickland, Esq. on his last rent day, at Sizergh Hall, ordered that all arrears of rent due last Christmas should be wiped away, and those tenants who had regularly paid their rents, were to have a per centage allowed up to the present time and also a reduction of a per centage up to the end of their leases. The tenants, in gratitude for such generosity, said, that if the times improved they would not require the abatement. It is reported, that in the above instance, one farmer was £700 behind. Another was so rejoiced, that on entering his field when returning home from the feast, he began shouting and hallowing—his wife coming to the door, on hearing so unusual a noise, asked what was to do ?—"The man replied, "The National Debt is paid off." Driving some ducks out of his way, he said, "You are mine to-day, but you were not yesterday "

Since the introduction of the treading mill into Brixton House of Correction, it is singular to observe the decrease of crime within the Borough, and the adjoining districts.

At the trial of a boxer for manslaughter it clearly appeared that seconds to combats by a late Act of Parliament were liable to transportation for life.

Five men have been convicted to be hanged for committing violation on a young woman near Northampton.

The sale of farms and farming stock of which notice has been given in all parts of the country for Michaelmas next, exceeds any former precedent, and excites a very general alarm, as to the ruinous consequences to the landowners.

The "Hermit in the Country" is about to appear again before the public, with a fourth volume of his amusing sketches of life and manners.

After remaining stationary for nearly a month, the funds have experienced a rise of nearly one per cent. during the present week. The improvement does not appear to have been occasioned, as is frequently the case, by any extensive speculation, but by a very steady demand for stock on the part of the public, and the purchases have been continued even at the highest prices.

The Spots on the Sun are said at this time to be very interesting, there being one which is perceptible to the naked eye ; it is three times as large as our earth.—Charleston paper.

English Feeling.—A small farmer in the vicinity of Manchester, not long since, killed a cow, and sent part of the beef and a quantity of suet to his son, a weaver, in Bakeley, who hung it up so near the window, that some one, in the night, broke a pane and carried off the suet.—In the morning, the weaver missing his suet, went to the ale house, where he posted up the following advertisement, which still remains an evidence of the right John Bull generosity and spirit :—"Whereas, last night, a quantity of beef suet was taken from the house of Thomas Wolstonecroft—this is to give notice, that if the person who took it away will appear and prove that he was forced to do so by distress, the said Thomas Wolstonecroft will give him a dozen of flour to make the suet into dumplings. But if he cannot prove that he was in distress when he stole it, the said Thomas Wolstonecroft will fight him, and give him five shillings if he 'beats him.'"

Barber's wit.—A hair dresser at Halifax informed one of his customers, the other morning, that he had just been finishing off an attorney in that place, who had departed soon after to York, to attend his professional duties at the Assizes On which the gentleman enquired if he, the barber, had any cause to try there. "No," replied the operator with great neatness, "I had much rather shave a lawyer than let a lawyer shave me."

Disgraceful Conduct of a Clergyman.—A Curate, who serves two churches in the neighborhood of Billesdan, was so intoxicated Sunday se'nnight, as to be incapable of doing his duty. On ascending the pulpit at R ——, he could scarcely articulate a sentence distinctly, and the service consequently was abruptly concluded. At S——, his conduct, was, if possible, more reprehensible, for after disgusting his congregation to such a pitch as to cause them to quit the church soon after he had entered it, he actually, on being desired to leave the pulpit, "showed fight," by placing himself in a boxing attitude, and using threatening to one of his parishioners. It gives us pain to record an instance of such gross violation of common decency.—Leicester paper.

Judicial pleasantry.—A lawyer, now deceased, a celebrated wag, was pleading before a Scotch Judge, with whom he was on most intimate terms. Happening to have a client, a female, defender in an action, of the name of Tickle, he commenced his speech in the following humorous strain,—"Tickle, my client, the defender, my Lord." The auditors, amused with the oddity of the speech, were almost driven into hysterics of laughter, by the Judge replying—"Tickle her yourself, Harry, you're as able to do it as I."

Columbia.—This new country presents a most interesting aspect. Her independence by the United States government formally acknowledged, and their Representative being now on his way to the seat of Congress at Bogota, nor has the Portuguese government conceded much less, having admitted a free intercourse for all the purposes of commerce—any thing left undone is little more than ideal : and, we presume, they only wait to communicate their determination to the Spanish government before their Independence be formally and duly acknowledged by the British Senate—all other European Powers will probably follow ; and indeed we are disposed to think the Mother Country will ere long adopt such liberal and honorable measures as will at once put an end to a war, now nearly brought to a natural conclusion.

A most extraordinary leap was made by a horse belonging to Mr. Beardsworth, Birmingham, on Saturday se'nnight. In passing over a bar three feet six inches high, the leap was taken at the amazing distance of seventeen feet seven inches from it, and the whole space of ground covered was nine yards eight inches. The horse is 15½ hands high, and carried upwards of twelve stone.

Pitcairn's Island.—The whale ship Russel, Capt. Archer, of New Bedford, touched at this Island in March last, and had opportunities of free and friendly intercourse with the inhabitants. Ten active young men first came on board from the Island, with whom a part of the ship's company returned to the shore, where they were cordially received by the "venerable John Adams," governor of the Island, and regaled with a plentiful repast of fowls, baked pigs, yams, &c. ; they passed the night chiefly in conversation with the governor ; obtained such supplies as they needed in exchange for sundry articles wanted by the natives, and after two or three days, took a very affectionate leave of the hospitable Islanders. John Adams and six Otaheitan women, are all that are left of the crew of the Bounty ; forty-nine have been born on the Island, two of whom are dead ; fifty three are now living, and without exception are enjoying good health The village is a pleasant one. Order prevails. God is acknowledged constantly at their meals ; and no small share of domestic happiness is visible.

The Albion.—On Sunday, the 25th instant, the body of Mr. William Proctor, one of the unfortunate sufferers on board this vessel, was found by some fishermen, floating about two leagues off the Old Head of Kinsale. It exhibited no appearance of decay, and appeared perfectly fresh, but when brought to land it soon changed for the worse. The identity was ascertained by some papers and the cards of this unfortunate gentleman, which were found in the pocket ; and what is surprising, though the body remained upwards of three months in the water, these papers were found very little injured. There was also found in the pocket, one sovereign, a small piece of gold, and a small case with a lock of hair tied up in it. On hearing the circumstance, Mr. Gibbons, the respectable agent of Lloyd's, immediately proceeded to the spot, and had the body decently interred.—Cork Chron.

A correspondent in the Times, in consequence of the fatal mistakes of giving from Druggists' shops, oxalic acid for Epsom salts, &c. suggests that all poisons should be kept in bottles, painted red, and put up in red papers, as a general caution.

Great undertaking.—A gentleman, now in Edinburgh, has engaged for £1,600 sterling to ride 150 miles ; then to walk to the moor, and to kill 10 brace of game ; he has then to walk ten miles back : all this to be done in 24 hours. He is to start about the end of this month, at 12 o'clock of the day, and we understand the horses are engaged.—Edinburgh Star.

Extraordinary Race.—A short time since, a race took place in the city road, between two dogs in a cart, against one of the 4 horse Paddington stages, and was won by the two dogs.

The Wellington Trophy.

The Grand Colossal Statue of Achilles was yesterday placed upon its lofty pedestal in Hyde Park, and excited the admiration of thousands of all ranks and descriptions throughout the day. It stands a proud trophy of the successful valour and pre-eminent glory of Britain, and will serve as a lasting monument of the transcendant merits of the illustrious and immortal WELLINGTON, by whom, and his brave companions in arms, feats of glory have been atchieved, not only surpassing all of modern times but those of the most renowned heroes of antiquity.—The Statue is immensely colossal, and presents a fine imposing appearance ; but, contrary to expectation, the face bears no resemblance to that of the great Captain, whose splendid victories it is avowedly designed to commemorate. The figure is quite upright, holding a shield in one hand, while the other is indicative of an offensive intention, but as yet displays no weapon ; the head is uncovered, and the armour is placed on the right side, rather inclining to the back of the Statue.—The drapery is thrown over the left shoulder, and in front comes down in tolerably graceful folds, but in the rear the same attention has not been paid to the appearance of the garment. On the whole, however, it presents a magnificent specimen of the perfection of the arts, and will not fail to excite universal admiration. The inscription is as follows :—

TO ARTHUR DUKE OF WELLINGTON,
And his brave Companions in Arms,
This Statue of Achilles,
Cast from Cannon,
Taken in the Victories of Salamanca, Vittoria, Toulouse, and Waterloo, is inscribed by their Country-Women.

A vessel, whose length is now ascertained to be about 60 feet, has, within a few days past, been discovered near the wharf at Mathon, near Rolvenden, in Kent, partly in the bank, and the keel under the bed of the river Rother, supposed to have been buried near 500 years. A number of hands have been employed in digging about the same with the intention of getting it out ; some parts of human bodies have been found, also a number of wooden tools, and a gold mounted lance. A number of visitors are daily arriving to view the ancient wreck, and it is expected some valuables may be found to remunerate the laborers.

RUSSIA.

From a report lately made of the extent, population, industry, commerce, &c. of the Russian empire, it appears the 50 governments of Russia comprehend 298,950 geographical square miles, and contain 49,097,000 inhabitants. There are 3742 manufactories in the empire. The capital employed in commerce, as stated by merchants, amounts to 319,660,000 roubles. The revenue arising from the poll tax, and that upon drink, is stated at 169,550,000 roubles.

A letter from St. Petersburgh, of the 10th July, gives as frightful accounts of the deplorable state of the Russian peasantry, as the letters from Ireland contain of the wretched suffrings of that population. The farmers can get no buyers for their produce, and the people are perishing with hunger. The Nobles, so far from reaping benefit from their possessions, find themselves obliged to purchase food for their slaves. There is plenty of food, but the great mass of consumers have no money At Odessa, wheat brought from the interior of Poland and Russia, is worth no more than fifteen shillings a quarter, and other descriptions of grain are low in proportion. The great bulk of his Imperial Majesty's subjects are labouring under the deepest distress.

Extracts from the Journal of a Tour "among the Cherokees, Chickasaws, and Choctaws," in the summer of 1820—by Adam Hodgson, Esq. of Liverpool.

Mr. H mentioned the separation with the missionaries at Elliot, and then continues—"We proceeded through the woods, along an Indian path, till evening, when we reached the dwelling of a half-breed Chickasaw, and whose hut was on the frontier of the two nations. We found him sitting before the door, watching the gambols of fifty or sixty of his horses, which were frolicking before him; and of more than 200 very fine cattle, which at sunset were coming up as usual, of their own accord, from different parts of the surrounding forest, where they have a boundless and luxuriant range. The whole scene reminded me strongly of pastoral and patriarchal times. He had chosen this situation, he said, for its retirement (in some directions he has no neighbours for fifty or a hundred miles,) and because it afforded him excellent pasturage and water for his cattle. He gave us a hospitable reception; and spread a bear skin for each of us in his only room, which we occupied for two nights, the following day being Sunday.

As our host spoke English very well, and was very intelligent, our quiet meals gave an opportunity of obtaining some information from him relative to the Indians.

He told me, that great changes had taken place among the Indians, even in his time—that in many tribes, when he was young, the children as soon as they rose, were made to plunge in the water, and swim, in the coldest weather; and were then collected on the bank of the river, to learn the manners and customs of their ancestors, and hear the old men repeat the traditions of their forefathers They were assembled again at sunset for the same purpose, and were taught to regard as a sacred duty the transmission to their posterity of the lessons thus acquired.

He said, that this custom is now abandoned by all the tribes with which he is acquainted, except, to use his own words, where there is, here and there, an old ancient fellow, who upholds the old way.

He told me that they had an obscure story, somewhat resembling that of Jacob wrestling with an angel; and that the full blooded Indians always separated the sinew which shrank, and that it is never seen in the venison exposed for sale: he did not know what they did with it.—His elder brother, whom I afterwards met, told me that they eat it as a rarity; but I have also heard, though on less respectable authority, that they refrain from it, like the ancient Jews. A gentleman who lived on the Indian frontier, or in the nation for fifteen years, told me that he had been often surprised that the Indians always detached this sinew; but it had never occurred to him to enquire the reason.

With respect to the religious belief of the Choctaws, he said, that it is a great prevailing belief among them, that there is a Great Spirit, who made the earth, and placed them on it, and preserves them in their hunting journies, and gives them "luck in life;" that however they do not often think of him—that they believe all who die, go to the Spirit country; that some suppose it is divided into two nations; the one abounding in fine woods and deer, and buffaloes; the other, destitute of both—that these imagine, that when the spirit of bad men leaves the body, it proceeds on the same road as that of good men till the roads forks, when it takes the way to the bad country, supposing it to be the other—that many expect a great day, when the world will be burnt and made over again, far pleasanter than it is now, when the Spirit will return from the Spirit Country and settle again upon it; and that near the place where they were buried, will be their future home. He here pointed to a common book which he received from his wife Esther (for he can read,) and said the following sentence conveys the opinion of many Indians—"Wheresoever the body is laid till the resurrection, thither, as to a dwelling house, death brings us home."—or, as an Indian would express himself, "one great fire brings us home."

Improvement in Brewing.—A most important improvement has lately taken place in the mode of brewing and distilling and is now practised at the Patent Steam Distillery at the Greenhead, Glasgow. The invention consists in the application of steam to the bottom of the boilers, which are indented with concentric circles, varying in depth according to the progress and quantity of heat wanted. A pipe from the steam-engine boiler, situated outside of the building, is conveyed to three large brewing boilers and two stills. The boiler is not larger than that required for an engine of eight horse power, and not more than the usual pressure is employed. In addition to the saving of fuel, the improvement consists in the great disparity of temperature betwixt this mode and the common way of distilling by coal or peat fire. The difference is as 214 to 21,877 degrees of heat. The consequence is obvious. Steam cannot give any of that empyreumatic nauseous flavour which is so difficult to be avoided in the common method, and which has so long deteriorated our native beverage. Another improvement at the Greenhead is a machine, styled by the inventor a separator, that completely prevents the mixture of the coarse essential oil, which is one of the products of distillation on the old plan, and which has been so greatly injurious to all malt spirits.

A fire and water proof cement.—To half a pint of milk put an equal quantity of vinegar, in order to curdle it; then separate the curd from the whey, and mix the whey with the whites of four or five eggs, beating the whole together. When it is well mixed, add a little quick lime through a sieve, until it has acquired the consistency of thick paste. With this cement broken vessels and cracks of all kinds may be mended. It dries quickly and resists the action of fire and water.

On the Cultivation of Hemp in Canada.

The abundance of National Wealth depends upon the amount of productive Industry.

At page 131 of our Register we introduced an essay on the importance of cultivating Hemp in Canada. We then promised to give a detail of the best mode of culture and to point out from whence the best seed might be obtained. It has so happened that we have been unable to fulfil our engagement until now. The practice detailed below is chiefly that of England, and such as is recommended by Arthur Young. It will be necessary, therefore, to make some allowance for the difference of climate, which a practical farmer will very readily calculate.

The usual profit of cultivating Hemp, in the Home districts of England, is from £6 to £7 per acre. In Canada it would be much more, because the crops would be far more luxuriant, and the drawbacks from the profits, fewer, and of less amount. It requires the very best land to be found in a farm. A rich, deep, putrid, friable, sandy loam; and it cannot be too rich. On old farms it requires ample manuring. It will pay for the dung. Hemp takes much from the soil, and returns nothing to it; rich, mellow, clayey loams do well; and nothing better than old meadow land, no matter what the soil, turned down by the deepest furrow plough.

Tillage.—There are many crops for which things could be cautiously given, as the weeds will not be growing with such and get the better of various plants; but this is not the case with Hemp, which is so predominant in its growth, that it kills all weeds. The land should, from the preceding autumn to the time of sowing, have three or four plowings, and sufficient scufflings, and be harrowed to a fine surface.

Upon the old farms in Canada dung should be amply applied, in proportion to the deficiency of the soil in fertility; but it is rarely ventured on any without a good dressing. And when the culture is continued on the same land (the most usual way for it,) yet they commonly manure it every year if they can; from 16 to 60 cubical yards are given, according to the soil. The new lands of Canada, on first and second rate qualities of soil, will not require manure for the first few years. Cedar swamps that are not too wet, and that produce fine, tall, clean, thrifty trees, would make admirable Hemp grounds.

Seed.—The quantity varies according to the opinions of individuals, and the practice of different districts, from 11 to 14 pecks per acre. The best mode of determining the quantity provided the seed is good, will be as in other cases according to the richness of the Land. Good seed may be procured from England, but the best is from the Ukraine and Russia. It is to be hoped that Government will complete its honest deed and wise design by enabling the some enumerators, in this country, who are to purchase the Hemp, when grown, to supply the growers, in the first instance, with the best seed of a moderate price.

Sowing.—Universally broad cast; nor can we see any motive for drilling a plant which utterly destroys weeds, except one that of burying the seed at an equal depth. Should any person be inclined to drill, the rows should be as near to each other as the shares of the drill can be set.

Cottagers Hemp.—It is an extraordinary circumstance, that by far the greatest part of the hemp that is raised in Europe, is by cottagers, or very little farmers; this is the case in the Ukraine, as well as in Suffolk. There, and in many other countries, it is sown every year on the same land by cottagers, who provide dung for it by keeping a cow or some pigs. Whether it is the most beneficial culture in England for such a person has been disputed; but when the benefit of manufacturing it themselves is taken into consideration, and the advantageous winter employment it affords to the women and children, we have little doubt of its being the best crop, they, or the poorer inhabitants of any northern country can attend to; or, of its yielding them much more neat profit than sufficient to buy any or all other products the same land could yield, if not thus employed.

Some writers have recommended weeding Hemp in June or July; but on all soils proper for this plant it is unnecessary; the crop will get the better, and destroy all weeds; if these get a head among it, it is a sure proof that the soil has been improperly chosen.

The Pulling.—The time of pulling Hemp is, in England, about the beginning of August, or more properly speaking, 14 weeks from the time of sowing: the leaves turning yellow and the stalks white, are signs of maturity; the male and female Hemp are pulled together; indeed, when the crop is thick, it is impossible to separate them.

When it is all taken up, and bound in small bundles, with a band at each end, to such a bigness as you can grasp with both hands, it is conveyed to a pond of standing water (of a clay pit the better,) where it is laid bundle upon bundle, direct and across, thus,

This is termed a bed of Hemp, and after it is pulled to such a thickness as to answer the depth of the water (which cannot be too deep,* although they seldom are found to exceed the depth of 5 feet), it is loaded with blocks and logs of wood, until all of it is submerged; after remaining in this state 4 or 5 days, as the weather shall direct, it is taken out, and carried to a field of aftermath, or of any other grass that is clean and free from cattle; the bundles being untied, it is spread out thin, stick by stick; in this state it must be turned every other day, especially in moist weather, least the worms should injure it. Thus it remains for 6 weeks or more; then it is gathered together tied in large bundles, and kept dry in a house, although it may do as well stacked, if kept perfectly dry, till December or January.

In the foreign districts, the male and female or feeble and seed hemp are frequently separated. This may arise from their Hemp being coarser, and the stalks larger. To attempt it some manufacturers, in Suffolk, would be, I think, injudicious, if not unprofitable.

Hemp, when left for seed, is seldom water-rotted, from the additional trouble and expence, but it would be better if so done. It is generally stacked and covered during the winter, and is sowed upon grass-lay land in January or February. If the season suit (particularly when covered with straw) it will come to a good colour and make strong coarse cloths. It is found inferior to Hemp pulled in proper time, and water-rotted.

* This deserves experimental inquiry; watering Hemp is a partial rotting through fermentation; the vicinity of the atmosphere must, for that purpose, be necessary.

Editorial Commentary.

From the news of this week we have to record a dreadful catastrophe—

How are the Mighty fallen!

That amiable and excellent man, and great Minister, Lord LONDONDERRY is no more! The arduous business of a long Session of Parliament has been too much for him; producing a mental aberration to which this unfortunate, but highly distinguished, Noble man terminated his existence by his own hand; leaving us to deplore the loss of one of the ablest and most upright Ministers England has ever produced—whilst another instance is afforded, to show that the greatest talents, attainments, power, and influence, are, of themselves, insufficient to secure their possessor from a fate that is shocking to humanity.

Those who are destined to walk in the more lowly and retired paths of life may, however, derive consolation even from a calamity like the present; they must perceive how little of ease, of comfort, and of real enjoyment is sometimes possessed in the most exalted situations, and how much corroding anxiety, trouble, and to mad, they escape in the shadow of their obscurity; while such men as WHITBREAD, ROMILLY & CASTLEREAGH, highly gifted as they were, and blessed with wealth, & fame, and influence, were permitted to have their reason overthrown, and to die in misery and mental darkness.

The news of this melancholy event must greatly damp the pleasures of our beloved Sovereign on his northern tour, which it will most probably tend to shorten.

We wish that some of the restless spirits of this country would study, and endeavor to practise, the beautiful sentiment expressed by his Majesty towards the close of his speech at the Prorogation of the British Parliament, where he mentions his paternal desire of uniting, in brotherly love and affection, all classes and descriptions of his subjects:—we should then witness few or none of those attempts which have been so repeatedly made to excite discontent in this otherwise happy province.

In order to make room for a press of interesting matter brought by the last mails we are obliged to forego several discussions of a more domestic nature, and the notice of many communications

Our columns will be found to contain important information from other parts of Europe, as well as from our own "much loved, home still." We consider the article dated Nuremburg, taken from the Journal des Debats, as a true exposition of the views and policy of ALEXANDER, in regard to Turkey. We are confident that the Autocrat will never lose sight of, though he may for a while be compelled to forego the execution of the ancient designs of Russian Ambition. A fearful revolution seems to be inevitable in Spain; and, as there are many collateral circumstances and considerations of serious, political importance involved in the public affairs of that country, and in the events now transacting there, we intend hereafter to give our readers a full connexion with the present state with the liveliest interest.

ENGLAND

LONDON, August 6.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.

His Majesty this day proceeded in person to prorogue Parliament. At an early hour all the avenues leading to the House of Peers were crowded to excess, and every window in the line of the procession presented a pleasing group of well dressed females. Tickets had been issued by the Lord Great Chamberlain for the admission of persons to the passages through which His Majesty had to pass on his way to the Robing room, and every seat which had been prepared for the occasion found an anxious occupant. The interior of the House of Lords likewise presented a brilliant display of Ladies of the first rank and distinction.—The Foreign Ambassadors with their suites, gave additional splendour to the scene. The Peers, as usual, wore their robes of state.

At twenty minutes before two His Majesty quitted Carlton House with the customary state, and on entering Pall-mall, was greeted with the loudest acclamations in which all ranks seemed enthusiastically to join. The same demonstrations of loyalty and affection were manifested throughout His Majesty's progress, and evidently afforded him the highest gratification. He repeatedly bowed and smiled to the populace, and appeared to be in excellent health and spirits. His Majesty's arrival at the House of Peers was announced by a Royal salute. Having come down in his robes, the customary ceremony of robing became unnecessary, and His Majesty immediately proceeded to the House. On taking his seat upon the Throne, the Commons were forthwith summoned to the Bar, and on their arrival His Majesty delivered the following Speech in a clear and audible voice:—

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I cannot release you from your attendance in Parliament, without assuring you how sensible I am of the attention you have paid to the many important objects which have been brought before you in the course of this long and laborious Session.

"I continue to receive from Foreign Powers the strongest assurances of their friendly disposition towards this country; and I have the satisfaction of believing, that the differences which had unfortunately arisen between the Court of St. Petersburgh and the Ottoman Porte, are in such a train of adjustment as to afford a fair prospect that the peace of Europe will not be disturbed.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I thank you for the supplies you have granted me for the service of the present year, and for the readiness you have manifested in availing yourselves of the very first opportunity to reduce the interest of a part of the national debt, without the least infringement of Parliamentary faith.

"It is most gratifying to me that you should have been enabled, in consequence of this, and of other measures, to relieve my people from some of their burthens.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"The distress which has for some months past pervaded a considerable part of our kingdom, arising principally from the failure of that crop on which the great body of the population depend for their subsistence has greatly affected me.

"The measures which you have adopted for the relief of the sufferers meet with my warmest approbation, and, seconded as they have been by the spontaneous and generous efforts of my people, they have most materially contributed to alleviate the pressure of this severe calamity.

"I have the satisfaction of knowing that these exertions have been justly appreciated in Ireland, and I entertain a sincere belief that the benevolence and sympathy, so conspicuously manifested upon the present occasion, will essentially promote the object which I have ever had at heart, that of cementing the connexion between every part of the Empire, and of uniting in brotherly love and affection all classes and descriptions of my subjects."

DEATH OF THE Marquis of Londonderry,

The most important intelligence furnished by the arrival of the packet ship Amity, at New York, in 38 days from Liverpool, is the death of the Marquis of Londonderry, who committed suicide on the morning of the 12th of August, by opening an artery in his neck with a penknife. From the time this melancholy event was known until the sailing of the Amity, it entirely occupied the public attention, almost to the exclusion even of the royal visit to Scotland. We have given below an abstract of the Coroner's inquest as we find it in the Liverpool Mercury. Had we given it at length, as it appeared in the London Courier of the 14th, it would have occupied almost the whole p[aper].

The insanity of his Lordship when he committed the fatal deed, and for several days previously, is clearly established. Before his departure from London, he was observed to behave wildly at times, and was careless and even slovenly in his dress and appearance. And on his return to the house the Friday preceding his death, it was thought expedient to keep every instrument by which he could do violence to his person, out of his reach. The small penknife, not more than an inch long, escaped attention. The King previously to his departure, was the first to discover the change that had taken place, and to communicate the same to Lord Liverpool. The King remarked in the last audience his Lordship had with him that his conversation was very incoherent; and his Majesty immediately wrote to Lord Liverpool about it. At the time of committing the act, his Lordship was making active preparations for proceeding to the continent, in order to be present at the approaching Congress. He had even appointed the next Thursday for his departure, and a steam packet was engaged to convey himself and Suite as far as Calais.

Lord Londonderry was certainly an extraordinary man, and as a statesman. It has been his fortune to guide the ship of state during perhaps the most awful and important crisis that the civilized world of this century has known; and through his long services in the House of Commons, he has shown great courage, energy, and ability. We have seen with sincere regret the [illegible] with respect to his public character (says the editor of the Courier) there is but one sentiment, one opinion with respect to his private one; it was the most excellent and engaging; the most affectionate husband to the most amiable wife; the most polite and finished gentleman; the kindest landlord; the most mild and indulgent master; beneficent to the poor; and so affable, that every man, however inferior his rank, felt himself at his ease the moment he addressed him. In his friendships, he had all the constancy and ardour that so eminently adorned the character of Mr. Pitt. He had all his disinterestedness, all his contempt of every selfish feeling, all his devotedness and attachment to the interests and welfare of the empire." In quoting this passage, the Liverpool Mercury, although a fierce Radical paper, adds, "It is but candid to add, that this favorable character of the deceased, accords with the reports which have been uniformly in circulation respecting his private worth."

His Lordship was the eldest son of the late Marquis of Londonderry (to whose title he succeeded on the death of his father last year) and of Lady Sarah Frances Conway, sister to the late Marquis of Hertford, his Lordship's first wife. He was born in June 18, 1769, and consequently was in the 53d year of his age. He received his early education at Aringh, under Archdeacon Hurrock; and at 17 (1786) was entered at St. John's College, Cambridge. After remaining for the usual time at the University, he made a tour on the Continent, and on his return to his native country, entered on that political career which has since been so successful. His first exploit was starting as a candidate to represent the county of Down, in which his father's estates lay, and where his father's influence could be best exerted. The contest was long, keen, and expensive; costing his father £30,000.

The death of the Marquis of Londonderry, may have an important effect upon the political concerns of Europe. He was to have been at the Royal and Imperial Congress; and he has unquestionably been very influential in preventing an open rupture between the Russians and Turks.

INQUEST ON THE LATE MARQUIS OF LONDONDERRY.

On Tuesday afternoon a jury of the most respectable inhabitants in the vicinity of the estate of the late Marquis was impanelled. The inquest was held at the house of the deceased Lord, where directions were given to admit any person who desired to be present. Mr. Joseph Cartar, the Coroner addressed the jury on the duty they were about to perform, in a speech, of much feeling, in which he expressed his assurance, that if the facts he had heard were proved on evidence, the most important part of their verdict would be that which all good men desired. "If, (said he) it should unfortunately appear that there was not sufficient evidence to prove what were generally considered the indications of a disordered mind, he trusted that the jury would pay some attention to his (the Coroner's) humble opinion, which was, that no more could be in his proper senses at the moment he committed so rash an act as Murder." The Coroner intimated that the Marchioness, whose depressed state of mind it was impossible to describe, could not be persuaded to leave the room adjoining by a slight partition, that wherein the body lay; and the jury, in order not to excite ideas that might further wound the feelings of the unhappy lady, took off their shoes and abstained from speaking. During the Coroner's address, the demeanors of the unfortunate Marquis who were present shed tears. The body was enveloped in a dressing gown, and the head was covered with a handkerchief. The feet were towards the window. The blood which proceeded from the wound was thrown upon the ground. The jury left the room to about ten minutes, much affected by the melancholy spectacle.

The first witness was Anne Robinson, a waiting woman. It was her opinion that the Marquis had been ill for a fortnight, but particularly for the last week. On Monday he rang the bell, and inquired why her Ladyship had not been to see him. Her Ladyship had been with him all night, and witness told him so. The bell again rang about 4 o'clock in the morning. He asked if Dr. Bankhead had been to see him. Witness told him Dr. B. had been with him two hours and a half in the evening. He then asked what he had said to the doctor—— whether he had talked any nonsense to him, or any thing particular, as he had no recollection on the subject. Witness said she was not then in the room. He rang again about seven o'clock, and when witness went asked her what she wanted there. Her Ladyship said, that 'My Lord wanted his breakfast.' Breakfast was brought, and he became testy, saying there was no butter, although it was then on the tray. The tone of the Marquis was unusually harsh, and witness observed several other indications of mental aberration. She was sent to desire Dr. Bankhead's attendance in a few minutes, by his Lordship;—in the interim, she saw the latter rush hurriedly to his bed room, and heard him throw up the window. She informed Dr. B. who entered the room and exclaimed, 'Oh, my Lord,' or 'Oh, my God.' She then rushed in; saw his Lordship in the arms of Dr. B. and the blood streaming from him, a pen-knife being in his right hand. Witness concluded by stating, 'A great many circumstances induce me to believe that he was out of his mind a fortnight before his death. He scolded my Lady on Sunday afternoon, because, as he said, she had not been near him all day, she had entirely forsaken him. Her Ladyship, however, had been sitting with him all the morning.' The witness, in conclusion, repeated her belief, that his Lordship had been in a state of mental delusion for some weeks previous to his death. On seeing two persons together, he always observed, 'there was a conspiracy going on against him.'

The next witness was Dr. Bankhead, who in, consequence of a note from Lady Londonderry on Friday afternoon, stating her apprehensions of his Lordship's nervous state of health, had attended him throughout. On feeling his pulse he conceived him to be exceedingly ill. His Lordship complained of head-ache, and a confusion of recollection, and he was pale and appeared distressed. He ordered bleeding by cupping, from which relief was derived. His Lordship was then in town, and witness followed him on Saturday to North Cray, having before dispensed medicine. His Lordship, on Dr. B's. appearance, expressed suspicion and alarm, and asked him abruptly if he had any thing unpleasant to tell him. On answering no; he said, "the truth was, that he had reason to be suspicious in some degree, but that he hoped that I would be the last person who would engage in any thing that would be injurious to him." His manner of saying this was unusual and disturbed. All Sunday night his speech was incoherent and his manner uncomfortable. Being in an adjoining room, he, (Dr. B.) received a message from Mrs. Robinson, that his Lordship wished to see him by and by. Soon after, says witness, "on coming from my own room to Lord Londonderry's bed room, I observed that the door of the latter was open, and could perceive that his Lordship was not in it. In answer to Mrs Robinson's said to me, 'His Lordship has gone into his dressing room.' I stepped into his dressing room, and saw him in his dressing gown, standing with his front towards the window, which was opposite to the door in which I entered. His face was in a considerable motion, directed towards the ceiling—Without turning his head, on the instant he heard my step he exclaimed, 'Bankhead, let me fall upon your arm—'tis all over.' As quickly as possible I ran to him, thinking he was fainting and going to fall. I caught him in my arms as he was falling, and perceived that he had a knife in his right hand, very firmly clinched, and all over blood. I did not see him use it before I came into the room. In falling he declined upon one side, and the blood burst from him like a torrent from a watering pot. I was unable to support him, and he fell out of my arms. I think the wound must have been inflicted as soon as I put my foot on the threshold of the door, as its nature was such that the extinction of life must have followed it in the twinkling of an eye. I think that no less than two quarts of blood flowed from him in one minute. I am satisfied that a minute did not elapse from the moment of my first entering the room until he died, and during that time he said not a word, except that which I have already mentioned. I have not the least hesitation, having known him for upwards of thirty years, in saying that he was perfectly deranged, and in a state of complete insanity. I had observed a great decline in his general health for three weeks past, but I was not aware of any mental delusion until within four days of his decease."

No further evidence being required by the Jury, in half an hour they drew out a verdict as follows.

"That on Monday, August 12, and for some time previously, the most Noble Robert, Marquis of Londonderry, under a grievous disorder did labour and languish, and became, in consequence, delirious and of insane mind; and that whilst in that state, with a knife of iron and steel, he did inflict on himself, on the left side of the neck, and of the carotid artery, a wound of one inch in length, and half an inch in depth, of which he instantly died; and that no other person except himself was the cause of his death."

The Coroner afterwards addressed the Jury, stating, that there were witnesses in the house who could trace the melody under which the unfortunate nobleman had laboured, to a considerable period antecedent to the act which was the subject of inquiry. In corroboration, he read a letter from the Duke of Wellington to Dr Bankhead, dated on the 9th, expressing an opinion that Lord L. laboured under mental delirium, and requesting him, on some pretence, to visit his Lordship. The Jury expressed their satisfaction at this further proof of the propriety of their verdict, and the Court was dissolved.

The knife with which the Marquis consummated the deplorable act was what is generally called a nail knife, having a file on the extremity nearest the handle, and the remaining part of a blade of an inch long. It is supposed his Lordship's remains will be removed to the family vault in the county of Down, Ireland.

His Majesty, after the conference on Friday, was the first to communicate the fear of a change, and recommended caution and medical aid.—He is said to have written to Lord Liverpool, and his communication led to the calling in of medical aid, and to the adoption of precautions in the removal of pistols, razors, &c out of the apartments; but sufficient watchfulness was not exercised.

The deceased, shortly before the awful event, told his confidential valet that he was sure there was a design on his life; he knew that he was beset by assassins.'

The Courier, speaking of the mental alienation of the late Lord Londonderry, says, "Had it been possible or decorous to have demanded of his Majesty's testimony, we are informed that Illustrious personage would have stated his conviction that a great change had taken place in Lord Londonderry's general demeanour and conversation. This is confirmed to have struck his Majesty more particularly on Friday, when his Lordship waited on him to take leave, before His Majesty's departure for Scotland. On the same day, his Lordship, after walking in a quick manner up and down Cockspur street, suddenly addressed the master of the British Coffee house, who was standing on the step of his hotel, and asked if Sir Edmund Nagle was in the house.—To the waiter replied in the negative, upon which his Lordship insisted that he was, in a way very unusual with him, and upon being assured that he was not, he beat his hands together and walked away."

The following letter from the Duke of Wellington, within three days before the event took place, was read by the Coroner.

"Apsley House, Aug. 9.—Dear Sir—I called upon you with the intention of talking to you on the subject of the health of Lord Londonderry, and to request of you that you will call on him. I told his Lordship that he was unwell, and particularly requested him to send for you; but lest he should not. I sincerely hope that you will contrive by some pretence to go down to his Lordship. I have no doubt he is very unwell.—He appears to me to have been exceedingly harassed, much fatigued, and over-worked during the last Session of Parliament; and I have no doubt he labors under mental delirium; at least this is my impression." I beg you'll never mention to any one what I have communicated to you, respecting his Lordship.

"I am, &c

"WELLINGTON.

"To Charles Bankhead, M. D. &c."

The following private letters give some additional particulars, which will be found interesting:—

"For the last ten days, the Marquis had been suffering under a nervous fever, accompanied by a depression of spirits. On Friday he underwent the operation of cupping; after which, it appeared that the fever did not increase, though no alteration in the state of his mind was perceptible, he being ill subject to despondency. Yesterday morning his Lordship rose and went to his dressing room. He then desired the servant by whom he was attended to request that his physician, Dr. Bankhead, of Lower Brook-street, Grosvenor-square might be sent for. During the absence of his servant, it appears that his Lordship had got possession of a razor or some sharp instrument, which he applied to his throat, and divided the great artery on the left side of his neck. When the servant re-entered the dressing-room, the Marquis fell into his arms and almost immediately expired. The following circumstance which was collected in the village of North Cray, ought to be mentioned as an indication of the previous state of his Lordship's mind. On Saturday the Noble Marquis was heard to exclaim to one of his attendants—'Business and I must part—the perplexities of office are too much for me—I cannot endure them much longer.'—It is said that his Lordship made use of similar language about a year ago, when his health appeared to be in the same state as it was on the present occasion. It has been reported that his Lordship received a fall from his horse during the last week, but this, on inquiry, we believe to be unfounded. His Lordship retired to have his bed made on Sunday night, expressing an apprehension of taking cold. We understand, however, that he rose as early as seven o'clock yesterday morning, and drank a cup of tea, and ate a muffin, before the fatal event took place.

"Yesterday morning, Dr. Bankhead had an interview with the Earl of Liverpool, and laid before him a statement of the circumstances attending the death of his noble colleague."

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

"The Marquis was observed to be very low spirited on Friday and Saturday last, and would often say that he was surrounded by spies, and inquire who was in the house, as he was sure there were people watching him; and on being informed that his Private Secretary was down stairs, he said there were other people as well. Last Sunday he took a walk; when he came home he was very incoherent in his conversation. His attendants removed every means of self destruction out of his reach. His pistols were taken away, and it was supposed that nothing was left in the room of a destructive nature. On coming out of his room in the morning, and going into his dressing room, Doctor Bankhead followed him, and just as they got in, the Marquis said, 'It is of no use,' and immediately fell into the Doctor's arms, and was a corpse in a moment. It was discovered that he had cut the carotid artery, which leads to the brain, with a small penknife, with the point turned the reverse way to what they usually are, which he had taken out of his writing desk. He was expected to go to Vienna, to the Congress, the latter end of this week, which preyed on his mind very much. He observed to a gentleman at the House of Commons, on Tuesday, that the very harassing Session they had just finished, would be the death of him. Mr. Canning is talked of as likely to succeed the Marquis. He is at present at Henley on Thames."

SCOTLAND.

From the London Sun, Aug. 6.

THE KING'S VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

EQUIPAGE OF THE LORD PROVOST OF EDINBURGH.

The preparations due to the great occasion of His Majesty's visit to the Northern Kingdom, are carrying on with an energy and promptitude rarely exceeded, and testify the high sense entertained by all classes, of the distinguished honor about to be conferred on them. Amongst others, we have noticed the Right Hon. Lord Provost of Edinburgh has been anxious to pay every respect becoming his high rank on the first arrival of His Majesty. A handsome six-horse set of harness has just been completed, highly finished in rich ornamental silver, and elegant State appendages throughout, composed, as suitable to his Lordship's livery, of white and orange, tastefully blended. A most superb hammer cloth for the State carriage, made of rich full orange drapery, with elegant white and orange trimmings, has been finished, which reflects great honor on his Lordship's taste and liberality.—The Armorial Bearings of the City of Edinburgh are beautifully conspicuous, being richly embossed in solid silver, and borne on each side. The State holders for the servants are equally correspondent. The whole, perhaps, forms an equipage seldom equalled, which while it boasts a superior elegance and beauty, bears also so chaste and delicate a character as cannot fail to excite a lively approbation, and give a happy specimen of the general features of his Lordship's arrangement. Mr. Geo. Mabery, of Welbeck-street, from whose house these equipages were furnished, appears to have been in this instance, as eminently successful as perhaps in any one of the many wherein the house has enjoyed an equal share of confidence. The whole was embarked for Scotland on Thursday last.

IRELAND.

Bell's London Weekly Messenger, speaking of the unparalelled sufferings in Ireland, says—

The first question asked by every one under such circumstances, is, what is the cause of so much misery? What occasion such a degree of distress in a country blessed with such fertility? We fear the answer is too prominent upon the very face of Irish society. The undoubted evil of the country is its excessive population, so infinitely beyond the demand of agriculture and manufacture to employ. The cause of this excessive population is in the wretched system adopted by all entire Landlords; that of letting their lands to middle-men, who subdivide them into small patches, and then re-let them to the peasantry at enormous rents.

Mr. Plunkett, the attorney general for Ireland, stated in one of his speeches, that small portions of land, not exceeding half an acre, are let as high as five pounds per annum; and that the rent of even ordinary land let for potatoes is from seven to ten pounds yearly. Mr. Martin of Galway, confirmed this statement, and added an anecdote of his own experience, still further illustrating this abominable system. He stated that one of his friends was travelling along the road in a remote part of Ireland, when a poor miserable ragged wretch, issued from his mud cabin by the side of the road, ran up to him, and put two shillings into his hand, exclaiming, "here it is sir." "What is this for?" demanded the gentleman. "It is my rent," replied the poor object. "For a potatoe field I suppose," added the gentleman.—"No sir, for that mud cabin by the side of this ditch—I have no potatoe land"—"Then how do you make your rent?" "I make it by begging, sir.—Your honor's agent knows that I live by the road side, and he said that he should tax me at ten shillings a year rent, because he knew I could make that by begging."

In such a state of society, and amidst such land lords, or rather such agents, is it matter of any unreasonable surprise, that the Irish poor should be in the state described and that every year they should grow from bad to worse. As they must consume the whole of their potatoe crop in the support of their numerous family; they have no means of raising the £5 or £7, or £10, per annum rent, but the produce of their daily labor, and in no part of Ireland, under the active competition of her excessive population, is there more than three days work out of the week to be procured, and happy are those who can obtain these. Six or seven pounds a year is, therefore the utmost of their possible earnings, wages not exceeding ten pence per day. A kind of clothing is, therefore entirely out of the question, and accordingly such scenes as are exhibited in the remote parts of Ireland are not to be equalled in any part of the world. In their habitations there is no such thing as any local separation of the sexes; and it redounds greatly to the national character, that under such circumstances, there is so much virtue, as there certainly is, amongst the lower order of Irish females. The truth is that they are naturally a good and honest people, and they deserve every thing that England can do for them.

Selections from British Papers.

The King had left the capital for Scotland, and the people of Edinburgh were "looking forward with the greatest impetuence to the moment when his Majesty's arrival shall be announced." To such a height, indeed, had this expectation arisen that it was with difficulty the streets could be walked, owing to the crowds of people who had assembled from all parts of the country, to gratify their eyes with the sight of royalty. Among the scenes to be played off on this occasion, we find it gravely reiterated in an Edinburgh paper, that Sir Walter Scott has been selected by the Scottish ladies to undertake the gallant mission of laying at the feet of Majesty the ancient emblem of Scotland. It consists of a broad and rich cross of pearls raised on blue velvet, and enclosed within a belt of gold, on which is embroidered with pearls, the Gaelic motto of Riogh aibhan ga brath (Hail to the King of Scotland.) The belt is attached by a brilliant diamond buckle, and from its extremity is suspended a magnificent pearl, the produce of Scotland, and probably the finest ever found in that country. The whole is surmounted by the Imperial crown, girt round with brilliants, and richly decorated with rubies, emeralds, and the topaz, alternating with pearls, in the manner of the ancient Scottish crown, so long forgotten, and so ominously brought to light at this auspicious period. A band with a buckle of Scottish gems is adjusted, so as to admit of this elegant and costly jewel being worn either on the hat, or bound round the arm.

The Duke of Roxburgh has declined subscribing to the Peer's Ball, to be given in honor of his Majesty's arrival at Edinburgh, at which the latter is to be present. He is the only peer who stands aloof on the occasion. The Courier says "his Grace pleads his personal infirmities, as a reason for the course he has adopted. This might be a good motive for his Grace remaining at home, or not dancing, if he went, but we cannot understand why it should prevent him from uniting with his brother peers in doing what is intended as a mark of respect towards his sovereign."

The Liverpool Mercury mentions, as curious historical coincidences, that when the King visited that country, wh le Prince of Wales, Perceval was assassinated. Last Year, whilst his Majesty was on a visit to Ireland, during the first week the Queen died, and lastly, during the first week of the royal tour to Scotland, his confidential minister, the very life and soul of the cabinet, has died by his own hand.

Conjecture is already busy in finding a successor for Lord Londonderry in the cabinet. Some think Mr. Peel will be the Foreign Secretary, and Mr. Grant succeed to Mr. Peel. Others confidently assert that Sir Charles Stuart, Ambassador at Paris, will be the new Minister. Others, again, predict that Mr. Canning will relinquish his appointment as Governor-General of India, and go to at the head of the cabinet. This selection would undoubtedly be a judicious one.

The Canada Trade Bill had received the royal assent with others; there is now no doubt of its being a law of the land.

In the House of Lords, Aug 2, the Lord Chancellor brought in a new bill for the amendment of the Bankrupt Laws. The principal new clause was one, to enable persons to declare themselves bankrupts by filing declarations of bankruptcy. This and the other clauses were introduced with the view of receiving every information on the subject, and every consideration during the recess. Another clause he thought highly necessary; viz that any application under the Insolvent Debtor's Act should be an act of bankruptcy. the bill was then read a first time, ordered to be printed, and to stand over till next session.

The Irish Tithes' Bill was passed in the House of Lords on the 5th of August.

In the House of Commons, on the same day, General Gascoigne presented a petition, signed as he said by every Liverpool Merchant who had transactions with South America, complaining that the British Government had not recognised the independence of Columbia.

The King of Persia, it is said has been recently converted to Christianity, by the arguments of the celebrated Missionary, Mr. Martin. Such a conversion must have an important effect in spreading the lights of the Gospel through regions of darkness, ignorance, and idolatry.

The most singular and important discovery which has, since the restoration of letters, been given to the world, we owe, during the last month, to the learning, industry, and patriotism of Mr. O'Connor, who, having preserved, through all mutation of fortune, the ancient manuscripts, which have been the hereditary trust of his family, publishes a version of them under the title of "Chronicles of Eri, being the History of the Gael Sciot Eer; or the Irish People: translated from the original Manuscripts in the Phanician dialect of the Scythian language." The earliest of these traditions purport to be compiled by Lolus, Chief of the Gael, between the years 1725 and 1335, before Christ, about 50 years later than Moses; and they give the preliminary history of the Scythians from the earliest point of time to his own days. To these succeed the annals of Eri, commencing with the invasion of Ireland by the Scythian colonies of Spain, 1006 years B. C. and bringing down the history of the settlement to within seven years of the Christian æra.—Of the antiquity and genuineness of the manuscript, however, no doubts can possibly exist; and the translater, while he admits that they are not of so old a date as the events recorded, asserts with confidence, that they must be faithful transcripts from the most ancient records.—A fac-simile is given in the second volume from the "Roll of the Laws of Eri," and we understand that he has gratified the public with an inspection of the originals, which he has deposited at the publisher's.

The Remains of Henry Kirke White, by Robert Southey—vol. III, contains several more letters and poems, together with a few prose compositions of this ingenious and unfortunate young man.—We shall subjoin a small poem which possesses some beauty.

I have a wish, and near my heart
That wish lies buried:
To keep it there's a foolish part,
For oh! it must not be,
It must not, must not be.

Why my fond heart, why beat'st thou so?
The dream is fair to see,
But bid the lovely flatterer go,
It must not, must not be,
Oh no! it must not be

'Tis well this tear in secret falls,
This weakness suits not me;
I know where sterner duty calls,
It must not, cannot be,
Oh no! it cannot be.

Percy B. Shelly, the infidel poet, died early in August.

Hail Storm.—A dreadful storm of thunder, lightning rain and hail, was experienced at Venice the 24th June.—Three vessels at anchor in the canal were sunk, others were greatly damaged. The lead was torn from the churches and other edifices and carried to a great distance. The hailstones were very large, some weighing nearly a pound.—The bodies of 137 persons had been taken up, who had perished by the fall of hail, tiles, chimneys, &c.

Ingenious Thief, and hopeful Family.

James Mackeouli, a notorious pick pocket, having in the course of his business, remarked how very disagreeable it was to come in contact with a bad breath in a crowd, used to chew onions when he fixed upon a subject to be robbed, and getting up with him, and breathing in his face, was sure of making him turn away his head, until he stole other his pocket book, watch or money. James Mackeouli died in Edinburgh gaol while under sentence of death for robbing the bank at Glasgow: Ben, the younger brother was hanged; and John, the eldest, (who published a book called "The Anuses of Justice") was frequently tried for his life. The only sister of these worthies was a notorious thief.

A monthly journal in English and French is about to be commenced by an Englishman at Moscow, under the sanction of the governor. It is the first attempt to print the English language in Russia.

13 Newspapers in the Russian language; 2 in the German and 1 in the French, are now printed in St. Petersburgh.

Sheep Times.—In passing down a close in Dumfries the other day, a friend of ours encountered two old women, who were busily engaged in the following colloquy:—Jannet—You've been at the market I see Tibbie, makin' grand bargains the warrant. Tibbie.—Aloee! Aloee! it's no muckle I pae to ware; but what Jamie brings in I aye try to mak' gang as far as possible. This is Saturday night, ane it's hard if a sair-working man dinna get ane comfortable dinner out o' the seven. Jannet—And what might you gie for what's i' your apron—There's a brave liver, and that bacon flitch is perfectly beautiful. Tibbie.—No verra muckle a'weel. If this thing was in proportion to butcher meat, and wark a little plentier, the poor wud do yet But o woman! wark's ill to seek, and waur paid when it is fund. The butchers, i' my opinion, are better to us than either the bakers or the brewers.—Maybe they hae their auld profits after a'; but really Jannet, I'm wae for the farmers, for rents they tell me haena fa'en in ony thing like the proportion o' flesh-meat and meal. Jannet.—The farmers! my certy! I wonder how you can you're mouth about sic a word. Wha do the farmers mak, say mair for the puir folk when meal was selling 4s. and 7s. the stane? Then like farmer leaved like a laird, and tret his daughters to a piano forte, and his sons to bluid horses, they've got an unco downsome hows-me'er. Assizes.—Exeter, Aug. 2.—Crown Side—Murder.

Joseph Chapman, "one who loved not wisely, but too well," stood charged with the murder of Sarah Chapman, his wife at Week, St. Pancras, on the 20th of May last. It was a case of no deep interest as was ever heard in any Court of Justice, and one in which an unusual degree of pity and commiseration was manifested for the unhappy being about to be tried. We lament that the limits of our paper prevent the possibility of going into a lengthened detail of the evidence, and therefore we can only have the heads. It appeared that this unhappy man had been married to the deceased only nine months, whe he had but much reason to doubt her fidelity to him. The sequel proved his suspicion to be well founded, as her partiality for other men became indispatable, particulary to a person of the name of William Robinson, with whom she had gone so far as to have the ceremony of a sham marriage performed over a broomstick and a prayer book at a public house, on the very morning of the day on which she lost her life. The prisoner was told by a person, that his wife was seen walking in a field not far off with this man, and intending only (as he said in a written defence put into the Court,) to frighten Robinson, he went for a gun, which he did not know to be loaded, and which it was sworn to have been done by a person, to whom it belonged, to kill crows in March last.—On his overtaking them, he desired the wife to go back, and on her refusing to do so, he lost all recollection of himself, and in a state of mind bordering on madness, fired the piece, which was loaded with small shot; she instantly fell dead. Several witnesses swore to the subsequent agony of the man. He had been a most kind and affectionate husband, and treated his wife in the tenderest manner. The Learned Judge charged the Jury on the law of the case; at the meaning of which, stories in a day eye was to be seen. There were two questions for the consideration of the jury. Was he (the prisoner) at the time he committed the act, in such a state of mind as to know what he did? for, if he were, then was he guilty of murder; for the conduct of his wife, however bad it might have been, could not justify the act; nor could passion put in the scale weigh in his favor. The law presumes a man to be a person not capable of judging what he said or did, and in such cases it did not amount to murder; but if the prisoner was at the time in his right reason, and knew the gun to be loaded, then it amounted to that crime; on the contrary, if he did not, it would only amount to manslaughter. It was, therefore, for the Jury to consider this in their minds, and if any doubt existed, the prisoner would be entitled to that doubt, and he wished no misunderstanding of the law to go to the public—the case was left to them, and the life of the prisoner depended on their verdict, which he had no doubt would be founded on a right view of the case. The Jury consulted for a short time and brought the unhappy man in Guilty of Manslaughter, to the high satisfaction of every person in Court. The Judge, in the most feeling manner sentenced him to one year's imprisonment and hard labor in the House of Correction.

SPAIN.

Madrid, July 28.—On the 19th, their Majesties and Royal Highnesses appeared in public, for the first time since the late events. They took an airing as far as the gate of Atocha. They were escorted by a brilliant squadron of the volunteer mounted militia. In every place through which they passed, they were received by the people with repectful silence. At the moment when they arrived at the Puerto del Sol, an Ecclesiastic, said to be a Franciscan, cried out in a loud tone, "Muerron los perjero." He was immediately arrested by the Police, as a disturber of the public order, but was afterwards set at liberty, after having shown that he was not actuated by any ill attention.

The speedy convocation of the Extraordinary Cortes and of a counter-cordon, is called for in numerous and energetic addresses from all parts of the kingdom.

It is calculated that the Volunteer Militia, who have been armed and clothed during the last three months, pursuant to a late decree of the Cortes, exceed the number of 500,000 men throughout the whole Peninsula.

While the King was passings through several streets of this city on his way to the Retiro, he was hailed with shouts of "Long live the Constitutional King.—Long live the Constitution."

It is positively stated that, on the 17th instant, after the defeat of the Guards in the streets of Madrid, and when they were retreating to the palace, the King ordered his horses to be saddled, that he might place himself at their head; but that he was dissuaded from his project by a General, who pointed out to him the dangers he must incur in the midst of undisciplined troops.

The Courier of the 14th, on the authority of Bayonne papers to the 6th, says, "anarchy is making rapid progress. The King has been publicly insulted and his authority contemned. The legislature is now attacked.—" The Permanent deputation of the Cortes," observe these papers, "have lost the confidence of the people, and are accused of temporising with his Majesty, and displaying an unbecoming apathy under pressent circumstances." In plainer language, military execution is not made the order of the day.

The latest Madrid papers, which are of the 7th of August inform us that a change of Ministry is to be taken place in accordance with the wishes of the people. On this change the Universal of the 9th expresses its satisfaction, because it was an event which showed that his "Majesty is at last convinced of the urgent necessity of making those reforms in his royal household which the nation considers indispensable for its welfare and for the tranquility and dignity of the Monarch."—The following are said to be the persons fixed on to compose the new Ministry:—viz. Don Evaristo San Miguel, Don Francisco Fernandes Gasco, Don Felipe Benicio Navarro, Don Antonio Martinez, Don Manuel, Vadillo, and Senor Capaz. The Marquis of Santa Cruz, had been appointed, pro tempore, Major Domo of the Palace. General Lopez Banos, who was recently appointed Minister at War, and General Mina had both arrived at Madrid, to concert with the government as to the best means of effectually eradicating the seeds of rebellion. Great expectations were entertained from the known talents and influence of these men, that the wicked designs of the enemies of the liberties of Spain would be ultimately defeated.

The Duke of Infantado is still viewed with suspicion, and is stated to have shown a disposition to linger on the road to his place of banishment. It also appears that part of the King's household had been guilty of some very imprudent acts; such as throwing stones, bottle, and old shoes from the windows of the palace on the 8th ins. A female, from whose window these marks of insult appear to have come, had been taken into custody, and other measures adopted to bring the authors of these disorders to punishment. The Madrid papers are extremely indignant at these occurrences, which, though apparently trifling in their nature, are regarded by them as subordinate to the general plan which the enemies of liberty had formed for the purpose of restoring the ancient tyranny. They therefore earnestly urge the dismissal of the old household, and the appointment of officers who think like the two Chiefs lately appointed, and that each shall have the power of making the necessary reform in his own department. "If this be not done (say they) we cannot venture to predict how far the evil disposed may be able to compromise the security of the throne."—It seems pretty evident, that Ferdinand will have to comply with demands so loudly and repeatedly made; otherwise he will enjoy little peace in the possession of his crown, and, may probably occasion, by his obstinacy, the adoption of measures, which will render his authority mere ly nominal, or extinguish it altogether.

Should Ferdinand fall a victim, it will be to servile counsels at home, and sinister excitements from abroad. The French ministers avowed that the Cordon Sanitaire, was formed, not merely as a protection against pestilence, but insults; and in order that the French government might be on the alert to discharge the duty of a faithful ally, in supporting a strong monarchial authority as necessary to the welfare of Spain.

Extracts from private letters.

"Madrid, Aug 3.—Here is a short picture of our situation—no Government—under military despotism—the King as headstrong as ever, and a prisoner—his wishes disregarded—no money—direct contributions—insurrection in the provinces—dread of there—murders—exiles—silence—all go silence—and yet no minor—lopping—suppression—confusion—this is our actual situation! Can what has happened, judge what will happen—streams of blood must flow."

"Madrid, Aug 8.—Since my last of the 11th July, I have been on the point of shutting down—frequently to address you upon the horrible situation in which we find ourselves in this capital; but have been as frequently deterred in the hope of obtaining, by delay, the means of communicating something more cheering than what I have hitherto to relate—but such is not the case. On the contrary, each day pro-ges us deeper into a state of stupor and mistrust—each day brings us nearer to a crisis which in a few days or hours may arrive, or it may by possibility be retarded for a month or two—but nothing can prevent it. God grant I may get safe away before the bloody strife begins! I must remain at present, or consent to sacrifice the greatest part of my fortune, which I am realising with as much rapidity as the confused state of affairs will admit. The numbers leaving this City and Court (Villa y Corte) are beyond all precedent; and of those who remain, many do so for the want of the means of getting away, or because their absence would be productive of great pecuniary loss, as in my case. I am almost tired of liberalism; for though I am quite of opinion that the King and his friends have deservedly lost the confidence of the people here, I cannot say one word more favorable of the opposite party; the two bodies are aiming at the same end, by different courses, and with diametrically opposite views—they both want the establishment of absolute despotism—and, cost what it will, that end will be obtained by one or other of the contending powers. Either the King will annihilate the Cortes, or the Cortes the King, and that shortly."

RUSSIA, AUSTRIA, & TURKEY,

The Journal des Debats of the 1st August, contains an article headed Nuremburg, 24th July, that furnishes some interesting explanations as to the state of things with Turkey, which the German Editor would not have printed but on good authority. We proceed to translate some parts of the article.

"It must not be thought that no interest is taken at Vienna, in the fate of the Greeks, and that the cruelties exercised towards them, are not held in horror there as well as in the rest of Germany. It is affirmed that several members of the Imperial family sympathise in the most lively manner in those sentiments. Our cabinet, although it could have wished for the sake of general stability in the political order of things, that no revolution had broken out in Turkey, could have no objection to the deliverance of the Greeks from the Turkish yoke, if this could be accomplished without the interference of another great power. The prevention of such a combination has formed the spring of all the efforts of our cabinet."

"As the interests of the other great powers were in unison, on this point, with those of Austria, the court of Vienna opened with those of London, Paris, and Berlin, negotiations, the result of which was, that these three courts joined that of Vienna to mediate in the differences between Turkey and Russia, and to do their utmost, by this mediation, to prevent a rupture. This end could not be accomplished without bringing, by a common effort, both parties to principles of moderation. When M. de Strogonoff, the Russian Ambassador, suddenly quitted Constantinople, it was much to be apprehended that neither the Russian nor the Ottoman cabinet, would be found disposed to yield.—The Porte had clearly signified that it considered not only the irruption of Alexander Ypsilanti into the principalities beyond the Danube, but even the insurrection of the Greek nation, as the work of Russia. It is believed and affirmed that it possessed proofs of the fact in both instances.

"All the dispatches of our (the Austrian) internuncio, at Constnople, shew, however, that the Porte did not wish for war with Russia, nor fear it, if it become inevitable. On the other hand, Russia, by assembling large armies on the frontiers, took an attitude every day more and more menacing for Turkey, and had made all preparations to decide by force, if necessary, what M de Strogonoff had not been able to settle by negociation.—This is precisely the issue which European diplomacy aimed at preventing; it is considered here as a triumph of the policy of our cabinet, that success attended the design by means of negociation judiciously managed. If hostilities had broken out, and if the Russian arms had been victorious—as was easy to be foreseen from the critical situation of the Porte, and as the European cabinets could of the Porte, and as the European cabinets could see—it would easily believe that the Porte in its prudence would have declared war against Russia on the aggrandizement of Russia on the side of Turkey, were it only as an indemnity for the expenses of the war, could with difficulty be avoided.—These anxieties are now dissipated; the united efforts of the cabinets have brought back the differences to the point at which they were when M. de Strogonoff set out from Bojardere."

"We have succeeded so far as to put the point in dispute in its original state, Russia having consented to open anew, direct negociations with the Porte: it will now be left with the latter to arrange the matter with the former. The apprehension that the balance and peace of Europe might be disturbed, being removed, we are now also allowed to take to heart the affairs of Greece without any interested motives. But a strict neutrality in this quarrel, is all that the Courts intend; this system will, it is said, be confirmed in the Congress which is to meet in the autumn."

The foregoing article appears to be the true history of the case. Russia intended to avail herself of the opportunity to make war upon Turkey; and probably excited the insurrectionary movements in Moldavia and Wallachia, in order to create that opportunity. Austria would not have prompted the Greek rebellion, because it was rebellion, and operated a change in the old legitimate order of things, but, it having been begun, she would not much have regretted its success abstractedly. If, however, the Russians took part with the Greeks, the Russian power would be aggrandized, and this did not at all suit her interests and views. She found England, France, and Prussia, under the same jealousy and dread of the influence and force, which must accrue to Russia from the demolition of the Turkish empire in Europe;—and France and England had, besides, reasons for deprecating this event, peculiar to themselves. A concert for active and resolute mediation; a common determination that war should be prevented at all hazards, were therefore easily and quickly established. Russia saw herself compelled, in some sort, to postpone at least the execution of her designs upon Turkey. She must leave the Greeks to their own courage and resources. She will negociate directly with the Porte—but probably admit of no fixed accommodation of differences, as she will never relinquish "together, her original purpose, and may, ere long, be in a situation to effect it, in spite of the policy of what the Nuremburg Editor so significantly terms the European Cabinets, and European Diplomacy, in contra-distinction, as it were, to the Russian Cabinet and system.

THE GREEKS.

The most favorable accounts continue to be received of this long oppressed and interesting people. It appears from an official account published by the Greek Admiralty, that the damage sustained in the Turkish fleet by the fire ships, was much greater than is represented in the accounts previously received. Besides the Capitan Pacha's ship, three others of the line were burnt and sunk, and seven frigates forced on shore, the crews of most of which perished. The victors immediately detached a part of their squadron to the succour of Candia, which was in danger of falling into the power of the Turks, and consequently succeeded in the enterprize. Nay it is the Romaic had capitulated, and the Turkish garrison was to be transported in French and English vessels. According to the report of the Turks themselves, their fleet consisted of 55 sail before the disaster at Scio, and after it had been joined by the expedition which left Constantinople on the 4th of June. On the 7th of July there were only 35 vessels; consequently 20 were missing.

On the intelligence reaching Constantinople of the catastrophe of the fleet, it was felt like an electric shock, in which the Sultan and Divan participated; and such was the effect on the inhabitants, that the Grand Seignieur is said to have ordered some hundreds of Greeks to be publicly put to death, in order to prevent the former from committing murder. The English ministers is stated to have taken advantage of the consternation, and to have profited by the terror of a moment to obtain concessions. It is not said, however to what these concessions related. That they could not refer to the Greeks is evident from the circumstances just noticed, and also from the barbarous cruelty which appear, by the latest accounts, to be carrying on at Scio, where the Turks continue to massacre the inoffensive villagers. Thirty thousand men, women, and children, are stated to have been recently drowned, burnt, or led into slavery; 780 of whom were young women, between the ages of 13 and 17, who were led to the market at Smyrna, tied to a string like brute beasts. We are glad to hear that the city of Edinburgh has led the example of opening a subscription for the relief generally of the suffering Greeks.

Accounts received at Gibraltar from Greece, confirm the intelligence of the capture of Napoli de Romania, the strongest fortress not only of the Morea, but of European Turkey. Coron and Modon were negociating to surrender, and the entire Peninsula was soon expected to be freed of barbarians. In Thessaly, victory had also accompanied the standard of the Greeks, who had made themselves masters of Badrasuk. Hassan Pacha, who commanded in this quarter, had lost 5000 men, and had been compelled to retreat. Three Turkish Beys and three hundred Spahis were among the prisoners.

Accounts from Vienna of the 18th ult. confirm the intelligence already received, of the destruction of the Turkish fleet and the death of the Captain Pacha. They add the following details:—

"The chiefs of the Greek navy held a council at Ipsara, and decided on the plan which was afterwards adopted.—They called upon all those who were willing to devote their lives for the public good; more than 2000 immediately presented themselves, and swore on the cross to execute the preconcerted enterprize, or to die gloriously.—Out of these, 48 were chosen by casting lots, and received the benediction of their priests before engaging in their magnanimous design. All arrangements having been made on the first day of the festival of Bairam, a Greek frigate and five vessels appeared under a foreign flag, before the Turkish line, as though to take a part in the rejoicings.—The 200 heroes, who passed for Englishmen and Frenchmen, were well received by the enemy, who allowed them to enter the port of Tschesme, in order to anchor in the centre of the Turkish fleet. But scarcely had they reached that position when they carried their plan into effect, in a short time five ships of the line were on fire. The Admiral's ship ran out of the harbor all in a blaze, in the hope of escaping total destruction, and ran aground on the neighbouring coast of Scio, where the Captain Pacha was landed expiring.—After this signal success, the two hundred self devoted patriots returned without having experienced any loss." The enterprize seems to have been conceived and executed in a spirit of self devotion worthy the best times of ancient Greece.

Editorial Commentary.

The King landed at Leith on the 15th of August, and we are sorry to hear was somewhat indisposed We have given as many extracts relative to the royal visit in Scotland, as our limits of this week will allow.

The death of Mr ISOLIS, and the failure of that great mercantile house of which he was the head, must be deeply felt by many gentlemen of this country who were extensively connected with that respectable house. It is most lamentable and humiliating to find so many instances of men, even in the first rank of ability, character, and fortune, in whom fortitude appears to have but a name, continuing with them only so long as they are at ease and in prosperity; of men, who, when the clouds lower, and the storm begins to rave, and the days of evil and of darkness come upon them, are so suddenly, so fatally overthrown. Alas, how melancholy is the consideration, that the cares and perplexities of so inconsiderable a space of fretful, feverish life, as this world affords, should have power to render us forgetful, even for a moment, of "HIM THAT REIGNETH," and who wills the evil as well as the good!

All our American papers confirm the intelligence that ITURBIDE is elected Emperor of Mexico, under the title of AUGUSTINE I.—He is said to be a fine, tall, young man, not more than 22 years of age, of a handsome countenance, possessed of great military talents, and by no means friendly, as his conduct has sufficiently evinced, to revolutionary principles. Thus, the first example of royalty, which it is expected will be followed in Peru, has been shewn among the newly established governments of South America.—We shall be anxious to learn the true nature and powers of these new monarchies; for if, according to English ideas, a limited monarchy, like that of England, is the best, an unlimited monarchy without religious toleration, must, necessarily, be the worst kind of government. The general complexion and character of the South Americans hitherto, is not very favorable to rational liberty—and DR. PRICE has said that Civil Liberty, in its most perfect degree, (the possession of which should be the sole object of political revolutions,) can be enjoyed only in small states, where every member is capable of giving his suffrage in person, and of being chosen into public offices.

One of the wonders of the present wonderful age, is the rise and progress of a new naval, and Christian, Power in the South Seas.—We allude to the Sandwich Islands: and, what is singular enough, a vessel belonging to these islands, manned by the natives, has been the first to violate the extraordinary Ukase of Russia respecting the North west region of America—that vessel lately visited Kamscatcka where the crew was very well treated—it is delightful to contemplate such proofs of the progress we march of knowledge.

Disturbances are at an alarming height in Spain, but the news of this week, relative to that country, are confused and contradictory.—The cause of the Greeks is prosperous beyond our most sanguine expectations. Should that interesting people succeed in throwing off the Turk'sh yoke, and in the establishment of their independence, unaided by foreign power, it will be a glorious proof that the energies, virtues, and courage of their forefathers dwell in their children of the present day; and no success which is now more promising than ever, will doubtless go far towards the final overthrow, in a legitimate and satisfactory manner, of the Infidel power in Europe.

COLONEL GORE who has lately arrived at Quebec, with his family, is said to be placed at the head of the Ordnance Department in Canada.—GENERAL GORDON has likewise arrived, with his two daughters during the last week.

A Public Meeting of the Inhabitants of Quebec was to take place at the Union Hotel in that city, on the 15th inst. "to take measures" as it is expressed in the Mercury, "to prevent any change in our Constitution!"—This phraseology, singular as it is, is not quite so bad, however, as an expression in the Traveller, quoted this day in our Selections, where it is asserted that LORD LIVERPOOL makes it a sine qua non, that Mr. CANNING shall have the "management of the House of Commons." We "guess" he must be a "pretty considerable, smart, kip, sort of a man" if he is able to manage, that is, to govern, command, and direct, such a body:—no wonder honest, plain, upright JOHN BULL growls at such language!

Turning to matters of a domestic nature, it would be difficult for us todo justice to those feelings of exultation with which we announce the compleat success of two experiments highly important to the commerce, manufactures, and future wealth and power of this great and promissing country. They are indeed feelings of exultation, of honest pride, and of brilliant hope.—We allude to the progress of the Marmora Iron Works, and the superior article of Bar-Iron manufactured there; and to the success of an experiment wherein a specimen of Canadian Hemp was tried against an English Bolt in the Navy-Yard at Kingston.

Being amongst the first, if not the very first, to solicit Government to grant either a lease, or a right of soil upon the Crowe-river, for the purpose of working the inexhaustible stratum of Iron discovered there, nearly five years ago, it may be supposed that our satisfaction is large and sincere, in announcing the success of the deserving and enterprising proprietor of the works recently established there, CHARLES HAYES, Esquire, who has sent down a quantity of Bar-Iron to Kingston, which has been tried by one of the principal Blacksmiths of that town, and found to be of a superior quality.

The people of Canada, generally, are not sufficiently aware of the great natural advantages of their situation, and the political advantages they enjoy, or they would prize them more highly than they do, and evince more activity and spirit of enterprize. We have repeatedly endeavoured, both by public and private admonition, to rouse such a spirit as would seize upon every ground of honorable competition in all those points which affect national wealth and aggrandizement. Before that universal insurrection of the provinces of America, which led to their independence of the Crown of Great Britain, one of their most serious complaints was, that they were not allowed to work their iron, but were obliged to transport it to England, there to be manufactured into the most necessary articles, such as axes, nails, ploughs, &c. &c.; in order that England might monopolize the benefits of every species of manufacture.

But the really free and happy Canadians of the present day are under no such restrictions. So far is it otherwise, that the Government, itself, has given a large order to the proprietor of the Marmora Iron Works, with a view to encourage them—and there is no question that the patronage of Government may be at all times obtained for any great or useful project.

The next object of a domestic nature to which we are desirous of again calling the attention of our readers, is the cultivation of Hemp. We need not repeat what we have already stated in a former number concerning its vast importance, in an agricultural and commercial point of view; nor have we anything further to add, at present, regarding its culture, but we have the satisfaction of communicating the result of a very successful experiment lately made in Kingston. Having forwarded a small quantity of Hemp to his Majesty's Navall Commissioner, in order to ascertain its value, that gentleman did us the honor of writing very fully on the subject, after making an experiment that must be generally interesting. It was hackled and spun into yarns, that were tried against the yarns of Bolt Rope, sent from England; and the result was, the Bolt Rope yarn bore 129 lbs. and the Canadian yarn 124 lbs.—upon this result the Honorable Commissioner observes—"I consider this experiment very favorable to the Canadian Hemp, as from the small quantity you sent me, it could not be so nicely spun, or the long Hemp so well selected, when hackled as it ought to be."——"I think the quality of the sample you sent me, (if properly dressed,) would be equal to PETERSBURGH Hemp, and is, agreably to the present rate, at which that article is delivered into the Homeyards, now worth 4d Halifax Curr per lb. here. This price allows Five Pounds per Ton, for the expense of packing the Hemp at Kingston, and sending it to England:—Hemp equal in quality to Riga, would, according to the present prices at home, be worth, here, about a halfpenny per lb. more than the sample you sent:—Perhaps, individuals may, sometimes, be enabled to pack their Hemp and forward it to England at a little cheaper rate than Government can."

The Honorable Commissioner observes that he should not be disposed to purchase any quantity of Hemp less than 1 cwt, and he remarks that this article is of a better colour when retted in a running water.

The truth is, the specimen we sent consisted of one small hank, only; and was by no means the best of 12 cwt, grown upon a small piece of land in this neighborhood by Mr. Sheppard. A better sample is about to be tried, and we have no doubt that the Hemp of Canada will turn out to be fully equal, if not superior, to any that is produced in any other part of the world. Hemp at 4d per lb. yields £37 6s. 8d. per Ton; at 4½, (the quality of Riga Hemp,) which the Canadian Farmer may expect to raise, it yields £42 per Ton, and when the extent of the demand, and the unexceptionable kind of payment now so much wanted in this impoverished country, is considered, to what other species of domestic industry can our farmers turn their attention with the same prospect of immediate and permanent advantage? The bounty of the British Government is now liberally held forth.—The demand is ample, let the supply therefore, be ample, and Canada will be speedily replenished with the circulating medium of which she is now so much in want.

May these our admonitions have their full effect!

Selections from British Papers.

Melancholy Death of Sir Samuel Auchmuty.—It is with feelings of sincere and deep regret that we announce the death of this brave and excellent officer, which took place about four o'clock on Sunday. Sir Samuel was riding in the Phœnix Park, Dublin, in company with Col. Thornton, when he was seized with an apoplectic fit, and fell dead from his horse! The body of Sir Samuel would be sent to England on Monday.

Death of Mr. Inglis.—We are grieved to announce the death of John Inglis, Esq. a Director of the East India Company, and one of the most respectable merchants in the city of London who, in a fit of insanity, deprived himself of existence, on Wednesday morning last, at his house in Mark Lane, by firing a pistol through his body. It appears that he had been in a desponding state for some time, exceedingly fretful and irritable, subject to occasional paroxysms, and averse from the presence of strangers.

The King has conferred the order of the garter on Frederick VI King of Denmark.

The New Marriage Act, it appears, is so bewildered with legal jargon, technicalities, and tautology, that many persons who have been joined in wedlock complain that they cannot really decide, from perusing it, whether they are married or not.

The Glasgow frigate was about to leave Calcutta for England with the Marquis of Hastings and suite. It was to bring 55 lacs of rupees in silver, (2,750,000l. sterling,) and the Ganges from Bombay was also expected with 45 lacs of rupees (2,250,000l. sterling,) on account of the East India Company, and sundry British merchants.

London, Aug. 8.—The Gazette of yesterday notifies the appointment of the Hon. William Pole Tilney Long Wellesley, as gentleman usher daily writer to his Majesty. This will enable Mr. W. to return from his covert in France, without fear of being arrested by his numerous creditors.

The King has been pleased to appoint Major General the Right Honorable Sir Benjamin Bloomfield, Bart and G. C. B. to be Governor of Fort Charles, in Port Royal, in the Island of Jamaica.—London Gazette.

London, August 13.—Read and Wainwright's large plate glass manufactory has been destroyed by fire.—Loss estimated at £100,000 sterling.

On Thursday, a most extraordinary and singular accident happened in a court leading from Cranbourne street, Leicester square. A young girl was sitting in the second floor of a house in the court, at the window, with an infant of twelve months old in her arms, when it suddenly sprang from her arms into the court, and fell upon a man who was eating oysters, which fortunately broke its fall, and the little infant dropped at his feet. It was almost instantaneously picked up and conveyed to a surgeon's, who, on examining it, declared to the delight and surprise of the mother, that the infant was not materially hurt: her feelings may be better conceived than described.

A Lady is in the habit of making short aerial excursions at Tivoli, near Paris. She takes coffee during her ascent in a balloon, and descends an hour after, with perfect sang froid, to supper. She is seldom detained more than a few minutes beyond the time fixed for her return. We suppose that a cord is attached to the balloon. If not, the lady must be possessed of the secret to "ride the whirlwind and direct the storm."

The rich heiress, Miss Patten Bold, is about to be led to the Hymeneal altar by the Polish Prince Saphieha. The Lady's fortune exceeds twenty thousand a year.

A benefit had been given at Covent Garden Theatre for the family of the late Mr. Emery. The house was crowded to excess.

THE LATE MARQUIS OF LONDONDERRY.

NORTH CRAY, Friday, August 16.

An alteration has been made with respect to the funeral since yesterday. The ceremony of interment will not take place till Tuesday next, and the lying in state will be altogether dispensed with.

The body will be removed in a private hearse, in the night of Monday, to the house in St James' square, and from thence the funeral procession will set forward for Westminster Abbey at eight o'clock on Tuesday morning. Many of the Nobility have sent notice of their intention of following in the procession.

DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

This morning Mr Meres, the King's Messenger, arrived from London with letters for Earl Clanwilliam, stating that the Duke of Wellington had set out on his return to this country the moment he was informed of his Lordship's death, and that he might be expected at North Cray in the course of the afternoon; but up to half past seven in the evening he had not arrived.

Yesterday morning His Grace the Duke of Wellington passed through Hartford, on his way to North Cray. His Lordship, on landing at Dover was greatly surprised at reading the account of his having had a duel.

Whilst the Royal squadron was passing Whitby, on Monday, Lord and Lady Normanby put to sea in an open boat, and came alongside the Royal George, and His Majesty complimented her Ladyship on her courage.

Miss Chester, the Lady to whom Lord Liverpool is about to be married, is forty-one; Lord Liverpool is fifty-two.

From the Traveller

It is believed in the best informed political circles, that Sir Charles Stuart will succeed Lord Londonderry, as Foreign Secretary. But it is stated that Lord Liverpool intends to make it a "sine qua non," that Mr. Canning shall have the management of the House of Commons. When Lord Liverpool heard of the death of his noble colleague, he was, for a long time, unable to speak, and his nerves were agitated in a most extraordinary manner.

SCOTLAND.

His Majesty left London on Saturday the 12th August, and arrived at 12 o'clock, on Wednesday, in Leith roads, after a prosperous voyage; he appeared on the deck of the royal yacht to an immense number of barges which had collected, dressed in a blue great coat, with a star on his left breast, and appeared in excellent spirits and graciously bowed to the cheering multitude. His Majesty only landed on Thursday, owing to the bad weather.

His Majesty was received by the Magistrates of Leith with an appropriate address, and having entered his carriage, drove in procession loudly cheered by immense crowds.—The barrier at Picardy Place was shut, and then opened with formality, at the request of the king; the keys of the city were then presented to His Majesty, who proceeded to the Canongood house, and shortly after left the place for Dalkeith.

GREENOCK, Aug. 16.

We have been politely favoured with the following brief but interesting letter received here this morning. We regret to observe that it speaks of the King as looking rather unwell—but this may naturally be imputed to the joint operation of the fatigues of the voyage, and the shock which his feelings must have received on learning the melancholy death of the Marquis of Londonderry. From the latter circumstance also, we are sorry to say, it is stated that his Majesty's stay will be limited to Wednesday next; but this we strongly hope and trust will prove incorrect.

EDINBURGH, Aug. 15, 3 P. M.

"I am once more seated, after standing and walking since 11 when we took our station near the barrier gate of Picardy Place. At 12 the roaring of cannon announced that His Majesty had left his yacht, and just at 1, I had the consummate delight of beholding my Sovereign. We were within a few yards of him; I saw the ceremony of the keys of the city being presented. I had no idea of his Majesty being so low in stature. He did not seem to be well, owing to the sudden death of Lord Londonderry.

THE BALL.

The Peers of Scotland have agreed to give a ball in the Assembly rooms, for which four hundred tickets will be issued, and for which the most splendid preparations are making. The design for the embellishment of the east end of the Assembly rooms, exceeds in magnificence any thing which has been previously seen in Scotland.

THE REGALIA

As the ancient symbols of Scottish Royalty derive a peculiar interest from a visit which is the first that any Sovereign of the House of Hanover ever made to the country of the unfortunate Stuarts, some account of them may not be unacceptable.—They consist of the crown, sceptre, and sword of state, and were placed in the castle on the 26th of March, 1607. It will be recollected, however, that for a long time they were thought to have been purloined, being no where to be found till the Commissioners, appointed by his present Majesty, when Prince Regent, discovered them on the 5th February, 1818, in a large oak chest in the Crown-room. Besides the crown, sceptre, and sword of state, which are of elegant workmanship, and in perfect preservation, a silver rod of office was also found, said to be that of the Lord Treasurer. The Crown is of pure gold, and has a broad band, which goes round the head, adorned with twenty-two precious stones, between each of which is a large oriental pearl. Above the great circle is a smaller one, fronted with 20 points, having diamonds and imitation sapphires disposed in them alternately. The points are all decorated with pearls at the top.—The upper circle is raised into ten crosses flore, each having in the centre a large diamond between four pearls, placed in cross saltire, & these crosses flore are intermingled with the fleurs-de-lis, which surmount the points of the second small circle.—From the upper circle, rise four arches, adorned with enamelled figures, which meet and close at the top, surmounted with a globe and cross patee. In the centre of the patee is an amethyst, which points the front of the crown; and behind, on the other side, is a large pearl. Below the pearl are the initials of J. R. V. The Crown is nine inches in diameter, and in height six inches from the under circle to the top of the cross. It is turned up with ermine, and the cap which was formerly of purple velvet, was changed to crimson in 1685.—The precious stones in the crown consist of diamonds, jacinths, oriental pearls, garnets, crystallizations, and amethysts. The emeralds are doublets, and the sapphires are imitations in enamel.—The sceptre is silver, double gilt; it is 2 feet long, of a hexagonal form, and divided by three bands or knots. Between the first and second buttons the handle; from the second to the capital, three sides are engraved; the other three are plain.—Upon the top of the stock is an antique capital of embossed leaves, upon the abacus of which are several figures of Saints. Under these figures are the initials J. R. V. The sceptre is surmounted by a crystal globe, two inches and a quarter in diameter, and surmounted with a large cross patee. The whole length of the sceptre is thirty-four inches. The Sword of State is five feet long, and of elegant workmanship. The handle and pomel are silver gilt, and fifteen inches in length; the transverse or cross seventeen inches and a half. On the blade is indented, in gold letters, Julius II. P. and was a present from that Pope to James the IV. The scabbard is of crimson velvet, and richly ornamented. The Lord Treasurer's rod of Office is silver gilt, curiously worked; and the old oak chest itself, in which the whole were contained for so many years, is an object worthy of attention.—The Crown-room is newly fitted up for the exhibition of these venerable relics. They are placed on a table, in the centre of an oval space, inclosed by an iron railing, and the Crown stands on the original square cushion of crimson velvet found along with it. The room is lighted by four lamps, and hung with crimson.

THE LEVEE.

On the second day after his Majesty's arrival, his first levee will, it is said, be held in the Palace of Holyrood.

After dressing in his private apartments, (the same lately occupied by the Earl of Strathmore, part of whose splendid collection of cabinet pictures still remains there,) the King will proceed to the presence chamber, in which a throne has been erected. Seated upon his throne, he will receive the address of the Magistracy of the city; and, after he has admitted the officers of state, and others who enjoy the privilege of the entree into his closet, the doors will be opened, and the noblemen and gentlemen desirous of being presented, or of paying their respects to their Sovereign, will be successively introduced.

Each individual attending the levee will carry with him two visiting cards marked thus:—

"'Mr. A——B—— (Designation)
'On occasion of—— ——
'To be presented by —— ——

If no particular nobleman about court is to introduce the gentleman, he will fill up the last blank thus:—'To be presented by the Lord in waiting.'

One of the cards, marked as above, will be taken by the pages in the anti-chamber who have the care of the court record. The stranger will then walk through the suite of apartments, until he finds himself in that immediately adjoining the presence chamber.

At two o'clock exactly the door of the presence chamber is thrown open by the Lord in Waiting. The gentleman who happens to be nearest, immediately advances, and gives his card to the Lord in Waiting, who announces the gentleman's name, and the particular purpose (if any) of his arrival.

The person advances through what may be described as a sort of narrow lane—his Majesty, with his immediate attendants, on his right and left, standing on the one side; and on the other, the Cabinet Ministers, and others who have the entree, being drawn up in front of the Sovereign.

The person, on coming up to His Majesty drops on his right knee; and if he has received any appointment, &c. kisses his hand. The round he may make, he is immediately pushed forward, but may pay his respects, en passant, to any of the Cabinet Ministers, &c. with whom he may be acquainted. When any address is presented to the king, he immediately hands it to the Lords in Waiting. No person must turn his back to the King in retiring.

On this occasion, no gentleman can appear otherwise than in full dress suit, with sword and bag; but hair powder is not now held to be indispensable.

Gentlemen may appear in any uniform to which they have a right; and for those who present themselves as Highlanders, the costume of their country is always a fashionable dress. The whole Vestiary of the Highland dress must, however, be carefully to be armed in the proper Highland fashion: steel wrought pistols, broad-sword and dirk. It is understood that Glengary, Breadalbane, Huntly, and several other chieftains, mean to attend the levee, with their tail on, i. e. with a considerable attendance of their gentlemen followers. And, without doubt, this will add very greatly to the variety, gracefulness, and appropriate splendour of the scene.

On the fourth day, it is understood his Majesty will hold a drawing room.

No gentleman can come to the drawing room without having been previously presented at the levee. The proper object of the drawing room is the presentation of Ladies.

Ladies are introduced to the King, either by ladies who have already been at Court, or by the Lord in Waiting.

The Lady drops her train (about four yards in length, when she enters the circle of the King. It is held up by the Lord in Waiting till she is close to His Majesty, she curtsies. The King raises her up, and salutes her on the cheek. She then retires, always facing the Sovereign till she is beyond the circle. A considerable difficulty is presented to the inexperienced by the necessity of retiring (without assistance) backwards. The Ladies must exert their skill to move their trains quietly and neatly from behind them as they retire; and those who have never worn such dresses should lose no time in beginning to practice this. Most painful must be the situation of a young female who is so unfortunate as to make a faux pas on such an occasion. It was by no means so difficult when hoops were in fashion; but now that these have been discarded, there is nothing to assist in keeping the train off the ground.

DUKE OF ATHOLL'S SPEAR-HOUSE.

We are informed that His Majesty will certainly visit the Duke of Athell. Preparations are, it is said, making for a grand Stag Hunt to be given during his stay at Blair. The whole tailorage of the north east of Perthshire, are now busy in equipping the tenantry of the Duke of Athell in proper costume. There is a report that His Majesty will also visit Gordon Castle and Dunrobin, but very little credit is attached to it.—Inverness Courier.

The Inhabitants of the oppulent and Flourishing City of Glasgow are said to feel great this appointment, in consequence of the annunciation that they were not to be honoured with the Royal Presence during his Majesty's visit to the Northern part of the Island.

IRELAND.

The disturbances in Ireland are now, we are happy to say, very generally giving way before the exertions of national benevolence.

According to a Sligo Paper, the cutting of wheat has begun in almost every county,—the wheats would be as good as they are plentiful.

A Limerick paper says, "Never were we likely to have a more abundant harvest. Corn of every description appears remarkably well and productive. The potatoe gardens far exceed our expectations, by the operation of the late rains.—New potato's have already appeared in many places in the neighborhood."

So far so good, and thanks be to Providence for its bounty;—but what share of it may fall to the unfortunate is another question. We trust, however, that the worst has past, and that the exertions of Government to employ the poor will produce future beneficial consequences. A line of road has been commenced in Dunmanus, that will open up this wild district to the extent of sixty miles. Thirteen piers or quays, some of them of great importance have also been commenced, and many other useful works are constructing in the distressed parts of Ireland. These sources of employment must greatly relieve immediate distresses, and from the utility of the erections, the country must derive permanent advantage. This is the first cheering paragraph which circumstances have permitted us to write for many months. In the name of Ireland, we express our warmest gratitude to the English people, and beg leave to congratulate them on the beneficial result of their unexampled benevolence.—Dublin E. Post.

Forty thousand persons are employed by Government on the roads and quays in Mayo and Galway.

Challenging a Jury.—An Irish Colonel of Dragoons, previous to a trial in which he was defendant was informed by his counsel, that if there were any of the Jury to whom he had any personal objections he might legally challenge them.—"Faith, and so I will," replied the son of Mars; "if they do not bring me off handsomely, I will challenge every man of them."

Extraordinary Phenomenon.—Extract of a letter from a correspondent, dated near Athlone, July 25, received this morning.—"On Thursday the 18th inst. a most unaccountable phenomenon appeared in this neighbourhood. About four o'clock in the afternoon, after a heavy fall of rain, attended with thunder and lightning, a kind of tail was seen suspended towards the earth from a thick heavy cloud. Its unusual shape attracted the attention of many persons, who observed it in its progress, breaking down large trees, with which it came in contact, and hurling them several hundred yards from their trunks, and lifting many haycocks in the air—it proceeded slowly in an oblique direction from the river Shannon, injuring whatever came in its way, until it came to the village of Ballymurray, (within four miles of Roscommon,) where, in passing the house of Joseph Coleman, it swept from the roof every atom of thatch that covered it on one side, raised it aloft, and convey'd it through the air to a considerable distance; the greater part of the straw was found a mile and a half from the village. I this day saw the house, with half of it quite bare, very little of the timber was stirred from its situation, nor had any other part of it sustained any injury, with exception of a few panes of glass that were broken in the windows. In the course of its movement, it assumed different shapes; at one time it was twisted after the manner of an eel; at another, quite perpendicular; at intervals it glittered like, as it were, a fire encircled in a mist. The oldest inhabitant of this county, never heard of such a circumstance—it may appear incredible, but you may depend on its veracity."

Foreign Intelligence.

FRANCE.

The French official paper, the Moniteur, contains the indictment against General Berton and his accomplices in the conspiracy at Saumur. The numbers of persons accused is fifty six, of whom 19 have fled, General Berton, and 37 others, are in custody. The object of the conspiracy is stated to have been to destroy the King's government, and to ex ite civil war.

Freedom of the Press.—A suspicion seems to prevail among all parties in France that when the chambers are prorogued, some restrictions will be imposed by Ministers upon the freedom of the Press. This power is reserved to them by the Law which passed shortly after their accession to office. A Royal Ordonnance may immediately thereby be enforced in any way which the exigency of the moment may render necessary. We can scarcely believe, however, that so despotic a measure will be resorted to; a measure which would so clearly show any intention on the part which was to follow a greater and more serious one.

INDEX AT END

upon France, than what the preceding Ministry had it in contemplation to grant, they, in fact, only gave the name, and not the thing.

By the last arrival we learn that the chambers are prorogued.

GREECE AND TURKEY.

"Constantinople, July 11.

"The Greek Ships, to the number of from 55 to 60, are cruising off Ipsara, and now and then advance as far as to the north of Scio roads. The Turks are far too slow in their movements, and I apprehend that some further misfortunes may happen to them through stratagem, on the part of the Greeks.

"Bara Mahomet Pacha, of Patras, has been appointed Captain Pacha.

"The Castle of Athens has at last capitulated.

The most of the wives of Ali Pacha of Janina, who had been brought here with his harem, were drowned by order of the Sultan. It is probable that his lawful wife, the celebrated Wasiekia, will share the same fate, as soon as all the information which she can give can be obtained from her. The number of Christian slaves for sale in the Bazar of Constantinople was so great, that a lad had been sold for a small quantity of vegetables Though that may appear improbable it is not the less true

MEXICO.

(From the Boston Gazette.)

Our papers from Havana contain a full account of the Emperor Iturbide's household—consisting of a major-domo, master of the horse, captain of the guard, eight aids-de camp, a grand almoner and assistant, grand chaplain and assistant, three confessors, one for the emperor, one for the empress, and one for the prince of the empire, a governor and two tutors for the princes, six chaplains and ten ordinary chaplains for their majesties, four preachers and four honorary ones, a surveyor of the palace, master of ceremonies, ten gentlemen of the bed chamber, thirteen major-domos, for the week, to serve alternately, a private chaplain for the family, a physician and surgeon for his majesty's bed chamber, and the same for the imperial family—four gentlemen ushers—two pages of the bed-chamber. For the empress there are appointed a first lady of the bed chamber—a first lady of the household—seven ladies in waiting—nine ladies of honor—seven ladies of the bedchamber, and a mistress of the wardrobe.

Iturbide has instituted an order of knighthood, called the Imperial order of Guadaloupe, of which he is grand master. In the order, there are four grand crosses of prelates, among which appears the name of O'Donoju, who is considered as living in order to perpetuate his memory by such an emolument—a sort of canonization; one hundred knights, and one hundred and five commanders, among which there is a great number of the clergy.

The coronation of the emperor and empress, took place on the 21st July—the ceremony was one of great pomp and splendor.

The Havana Noticioso, of the 10th August, is nearly filled with the names of the new officers and dignitaries created by the Emperor Iturbide.—The Marquis of San Miguel de Aguavó is named Secretary of State; the Conde de Regla, master of the horse; the Marquis de Salvatierra, commander of the imperial guards, the Bishop of Puebla, chaplain to the Emperor, &c. &c. The Emperor himself is the Grand master of the Order of Guadaloupe.

A Decree of the Sovereign Congress of Mexico, dated 11th June, provides at great length for a new emission of gold, silver and copper coin for the empire. On one side of the gold and silver pieces is to be the bust of the Emperor, with the words, "Augustinus dei providentia," and the year of mission; on the reverse the national arms, being a spread eagle crowned. On the circumference, "Mexici primus Emperator constitutionalis." The other coins are to be impressed with the emblems of liberty, and to have certain initials to designate the cities in which they were made.

St. Fe, of New-Mexico, is now often visited by our traders on the upper parts of the Arkansas river. It is stated that there has not been any rain at the place for three years, and no complaint about it, the people irrigating their fields by ditches and canals from the river del Norte, and from the streams which issue from the highlands and neighboring mountains.

UNITED STATES.

Consumption of Cigars.

We have extracted the following from the Boston Palladium, as worthy of a more general attention. The custom of smoking cigars is so unseemly and filthy in the eyes of those unaccostomed to it, that we are not sorry to see its pernicious consequences so publicly made known in the land of spitters.—Ed.

Consumption of Cigars in the United States.—Although the use of cigars is lessened among the first circles, since the circulation of Dr. Waterhouse's convincing lecture on the pernicious effects of the use of tobacco in young persons, still there is a shocking quantity consumed amongst us. The practise is more diffused among the laborious part of the community, and among school boys. The custom has crept into that seminary, from whence it was banished 20 years ago by one of the medical professors; and it is thought that now more than two thirds of the students are cigar smoakers; and what is said of one college may be remarked of most of the others. If this be so, the evil is not trifling.

It appears from our custom house books, that the importation of cigars has greatly increased within these four past years—for

In 1818, were entered	1,255,000
1819,	1,031,000
1820,	796,000
1821,	2,438,000

And so far as the year 1822 is expired, the importation of cigars is far greater. If we add to this that the manufactory in this country is immense, and that some may be smuggled, it is enough to strike any thinking man, of the consequences to our progeny. The number of cigars imported annually into New York is so great, that it is hardly thought prudent to mention it; and all for what? for that which is neither meat, drink, nor raiment: but an insidious underminer of the constitutions of young persons.

SLAVE POPULATION.

Niles' Register contains several valuable tables on the population of the United States.—Among them is one giving the progress of the slave population, which stands thus:—

In 1750,	697,697
In 1800,	896,349
In 1810,	1,191,346
In 1820,	1,531,435

Supposed, In 1830, 1,962,000

The free whites are considerably gaining on the amount of slaves.

POETRY.

It is pleasing to find the Muses condescending to visit our brothers in the wilderness, and assisting to mitigate their cares and their labours by the "voice of song."—We can assure our readers that in many instances (some of which may be hereafter named,) where, only a very few years ago, the Bears and the Wolves dwelt securely in their coverts, and where no Surveyors line had been run, not only excellent Farmers and Mechanics, but even Poets and Philosophers of no ingonsiderable attainments, are now to be found, preparing another exemplification of the truth and beauty of that fine passage in EZEKIEL where the Prophet, speaking of another country and another people, declares that

"The desolate land shall be tilled, whereas it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by, and they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden."—

SIR,

The following verses were written on seeing an advertisement, in the Quebec Mercury, for a female Servant.—It appeared to come from a person of the name of Daunton, and concluded with these words 'No Irish Woman need apply.'—I hope you will not object to give them a corner in the Weekly Register. "ALEXANDER."

Monaghan, July 22, 1822.

Let Erin's simple maids beware
So daily here arriving,
Of ev'ry groveling sen of care
As ignorant as he's thriving

And most of all, though s'ee so poor,
Though absolutely wanting
Oh shun th' inhospitable door
Of vain, contemptuous, DAUNTON.

The wretch, whose narrow soul, confin'd
Within the bounds of nation,
How base, how low, th' illiberal mind,
Too low for any station!

Is there s'cline beneath the sun
Where virtues rays are purer?
In Europe, or Columbia, none,—
We scorn the base allurer!

And scorn with all its rancour fall
On him unknown to pity,
Whose weak, degenerate, saucy s
Addresses thus the city.

Is Erin poor?—who made her such?
Who sunk her Muse in sighing?
Let others wipe the foul reproach
Upon their country lying.

GOOD EFFECTS OF BIBLE SOCIETIES.

We cannot resist the inclination we feel to transcribe the following passage from the admirable Speech delivered by W. WILBERFORCE, Esq. at the Eighteenth Anniversary of the British and Foreign Bible Societies.—Ed.

"Of all parts of the world which the report has recommended to my grateful attention, none struck me more than the opposite coast of America; for from one end to the other we see the triumphs of Bible Societies.—My Lord, allow me to say, that we should be encouraged in the promotion of this cause, by the extensive prospect before us, and the immense benefits connected with this Institution. for consider what a Bible may do for a single family or individual, and then multiply this by all the Bibles we distribute in the extent of surface which we cover; and who shall fix limits to the benefits thus conferred. The United States of America have now nobly vindicated their rights to the name and privileges of Englishmen, by circulating the same truth in the same language; and surely we are children of one common Parent, speaking one mother tongue.—I know, my lord, that so long as the infirmities and bad passions of men remain, there will be differences arising from ambition, or the jealousies one country may entertain of another; but here we have a principle in operation, which tends all the while gradually and imperceptibly, but surely, to unite the good of both communities, and make them love one another as brethren, and to concur in endeavouring to promote peace and concord among men. As the differences we have had with that country have been peculiarly painful to me, so, I doubt not, there is now a principle at work which will promote the most lasting agreement"

Where any Article is liable to a Colonial Duty equal to the one imposed, such Article shall not be charged with the Duty

III. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That if upon the Importation of any Article charged with Duty by this Act, the said Article shall also be liable to the Payment of Duty under the Authority of any Colonial Law, equal to or exceeding in amount the Duty charged by this Act, then and in such Case the Duty charged upon such Article by this Act shall not be demanded or paid upon the Importation of such Article: Provided also, that if the Duty payable under such Colonial Law shall be less in Amount than the Duty payable by this Act, then and in such case the Difference only between the Amount of the Duty payable by this Act, and the Duty payable under the Authority of such Colonial Law, shall be deemed to be the Duty payable by this Act; and the same shall be collected and paid in such and the like Manner, and appropriated and applied to such and the like Uses, as the Duties specified in the said Schedule annexed to this Act marked (B.) are directed to be collected, paid, appropriated, and applied.

If Duty be less the Difference only shall be paid.

Tonnage Duties for American Vessels, in the same manner as United States impose on British Vessels.

IV. And be it further enacted, That the same Tonnage Duties shall be paid upon all American Vessels or Boats, importing any Goods into either of the said Provinces, as are or may be for the time being payable in the United States of America, on British Vessels or Boats entering the Harbours of the State from whence such Goods shall have been imported.

Value of Goods to be ascertained in manner by the Act 3 Geo. 4. c. 41.

V And be it further enacted, That in all Cases in which the Duties mentioned in Schedule (B.) of this Act upon the Importation of Articles into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada are charged on the Value thereof, such Value shall be ascertained by the Declaration of the Importer or Proprietor of such Articles, or his known Agent or Factor, in the Manner and Form prescribed by the said Act, and the Duties on such Articles shall be collected, secured, and paid upon such Value, and the Importer or Proprietor, or his known Agent or Factor, shall be subject to the same Penalties and Forfeitures in case of any false Declaration touching the Value of such Articles, as are imposed by the said Act in case of any false Declaration touching the Value of Articles charged with Duty according to the Value thereof.

If Payment of Duties be refused, Collector may seize Goods and sell the same within 20 Days.

VI. And be it further enacted, That if the Importer or Proprietor of such Articles shall refuse to pay the Duties hereby imposed thereon, it shall and may be lawful for the Collector or other Chief Officer of the Customs where such Articles shall be imported, and he is hereby respectively required, to take and secure the same, with the Casks or other Package thereof and to cause the same to be publicly sold, within the Space of Twenty Days at the most after such refusal made, and at such Time and place as such Officer shall, by Four or more Days public Notice, appoint for that Purpose which Articles shall be sold to the highest Bidder; and the Money arising from the Sale thereof shall be applied to the Payment of the said Duties, together with the Charges which shall have been occasioned by the said Sale, and the Overplus (if any) shall be paid to such Importer, Proprietor, or any other Person authorized to receive the same.

After Payment of Duty, Overplus to be paid to the Importer.

VII. And whereas a certain Act made and passed in the Twenty-eighth Year of the Reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled An Act to allow the Importation of Rum and other Spirits from His Majesty's Colonies or Plantations in the West Indies into the Province of Quebec, without Payment of Duty, under certain Conditions and Restrictions, has been repealed during the present Session of Parliament: And whereas Doubts may be entertained whether a certain other Act, passed in the Forty-ninth Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, intituled An Act to allow the Importation of Rum and other Spirits from the Island of Bermuda into the Province of Lower Canada, without payment of Duty, on the same Terms and Conditions as such Importation may be made directly from His Majesty's Sugar Colonies in the West Indies, might not still remain in force, notwithstanding the Repeal of the said first mentioned Act; be it therefore enacted and declared, That the last mentioned Act shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

28. G. 3. c. 30.

49 G. 3. c. 16. allowing the Importation of Rum, repealed.

VIII. And whereas it is expedient to afford Protection to the Trade between the said Colonies and Plantations and the Province of Lower Canada, by imposing the same Duty of 6d. upon Rum or other Spirits, the Produce or Manufacture of the said Colonies, imported from Great Britain, into Canada from the said Province, as is now payable upon the same Articles when imported from His Majesty's said Colonies or Plantations in the West Indies; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be raised, levied, collected and paid unto His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, for and upon every Gallon of Rum or other Spirits, the Produce or Manufacture of any of His Majesty's Islands, Colonies, or Plantations in the West Indies, which shall be imported or brought into any Part of the said Province of Lower Canada from Great Britain or Ireland, or any of the British Dominions in Europe, the Sum of Six Pence, over and above all other Duties now or hereafter to be made payable thereon to the said Province.

Additional Duty of 6d. per Gallon on West India Rum imported into Lower Canada.

IX. And be it further enacted, That the Rates and Duties chargeable by the Act shall be deemed,

Goods the Produce of His Majesty's Dominions may be exported to any Port in the United States; but no Arms or Naval Stores to be exported without Licence

X. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful to export in any British or American Vessel or Vessels, Boat or Boats, Carriage or Carriages, from any Ports or Places of Entry now or hereafter to be established in the said Provinces, to any Port or Place in the United States of America, any Article of the Growth, Produce, or Manufacture of any of His Majesty's Dominions, or any other Article legally imported into the said Provinces: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to permit or allow the Exportation of any Arms or Naval Stores, unless a Licence shall have been obtained for that Purpose from his Majesty's Secretary of State; and in case any such Articles shall be shipped or waterborne for the Purpose of being exported contrary to this Act, the same shall be forfeited, and shall and may be seized and prosecuted as hereinafter directed.

Not to affect Inland Navigations of the Provinces.

XI. And be it further enacted, That nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to interfere with or repeal, as respects the Inland Navigation of the said Provinces, any of the Provisions contained in a certain Act passed in the Seventh and Eighth Years of the Reign of King William, intituled An Act for preventing Frauds, and regulating Abuses in the Plantation Trade; except in so far as the same are altered or repealed by this Act

Recovery and Application of Penalties

XII And be it further enacted, That all Penalties and Forfeitures incurred in either of the said Provinces under this Act (except where it is otherwise provided,) shall and may be sued for and prosecuted in any Court having competent Jurisdiction within such Province respectively; and the same shall and may be recovered, divided, and accounted for in the same Manner and Form, and by the same Rules and Regulations in all respects, as other Penalties and Forfeitures for Offences against the Laws relating to the Customs and Trade of the said Provinces respectively, shall or may by any Act or Acts of the Legislatures of such Provinces be directed to be sued for, prosecuted, recovered, divided, and accounted for within the same respectively.

Drawback on the Exportation of Rum and Spirits from Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Canada.

XIII. And whereas it is expedient to encourage Trade between Canada and his Majesty's Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward's Island, by enabling the Merchants and Traders of Newfoundland to export from thence into Canada, Rum and other Spirits, the Produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, free of any Duty which may have been imposed upon its Importation from any of the Places last aforesaid, and for which Purpose to allow, upon the Export of such Rum or other Spirits a Drawback of the full Duties paid upon the Importation thereof; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be paid and allowed, upon the Exportation from any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, into Canada, of Rum or other Spirits, being the produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, a Drawback of the full Duties of Customs which may have been paid upon the Importation thereof from any of the Places last aforesaid, into any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, upon a Certificate being produced, under the Hands and Seals of the Collector and Comptroller of His Majesty's Customs at Quebec, certifying that the said Rum or other Spirits have been duly landed in Canada.

Conditions on which the Drawback shall be paid.

XIV. And be it further enacted, That no Entry shall pass, nor any Drawback be paid or allowed, upon the Exportation of Rum or other Spirits from any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, into Canada, unless such Entry be made in the Name of the real Owner or Owners, Proprietor or Proprietors of the said Goods, and that before such Owner or Owners, Proprietor or Proprietors, shall receive the said Drawback so allowed as aforesaid, One or more of them shall verify upon Oath, upon the Debenture to be made out for the Payment of such Drawback, that he or they is or are the real Owner or Owners of the said Goods; nor unless Proof on Oath shall be made to the Satisfaction of the Collector and Comptroller of His Majesty's Customs at the Port from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, that the full Duties due upon the Importation of the said Goods at the said Port had been paid and discharged: Provided always, that in Cases where the Owners of the said Goods are resident in any other Part of the British Dominions, it shall be lawful for their known and established Agents in the Colonies from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, to take the necessary Oaths on behalf of the said Owners.

Drawback now payable

XV. And be it further enacted, That the said Drawback shall be paid by the Collector of His Majesty's Customs at the Port from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, with the Consent of the Comptroller there, out of any Monies in his Hands arising from Duties of Customs.

Rum to be exported from

XVI. And be it further enacted That no Drawback shall be paid and allowed as aforesaid, unless the said Rum or other Spirits shall be duly entered for Exportation with the proper Officers of the Customs, and actually shipped on board the Ship or Vessel in which the said Goods are intended to be exported, within the Space of one Year from the Time such Rum or other Spirits were originally imported into the Colony from whence it is intended to export them to Canada, nor unless such Drawback shall be claimed within one Year after the Goods are so shipped for Exportation.

Rum and other Spirits to be exported within One Year after First Importation.

Regulations as to settling the Proportions of Duties and Drawbacks between the Provinces, by Arbitrators.

XVII And whereas since the Division of the Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, divers Regulations have from Time to Time been made, by Agreements concluded under the Authority of Acts passed by the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces respectively, concerning the imposing of Duties upon Articles imported into the Province of Lower Canada, and the Payment of Drawbacks of such Duties to the Province of Upper Canada, on account of the Proportion of Goods so imported into Lower Canada, and passing from thence into the said Province of Upper Canada and consumed therein; the last of which Agreement expired on the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen: And whereas it appears by the Report of the Commissioners last appointed for the purposes aforesaid, that the Province of Upper Canada claims certain Arrearages from the Province of Lower Canada, on account of such Drawbacks, which claims are not admitted on the part of the Province of Lower Canada; and it further appears by the Report of the said Commissioners, appointed on behalf of both Provinces for the purposes aforesaid, that they have failed to establish any Regulations for the Period beyond the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, by reason that they could not agree upon the Proportion of Duties to be paid to Upper Canada by way of Drawbacks: For Remedy of the inconvenience occasioned by the Suspension of the said Agreement, and for the satisfactory Investigation and Adjustment of the said claims, be it enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, so soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this Act, to appoint, by Commission under the Great Seal of his respective Province, one Arbitrator; and that the said Arbitrators so appointed shall have Power, by an Instrument under their Hands and Seals, to appoint a Third Arbitrator; and in case of their not agreeing in such Appointment within one Month from the Date of the Appointment of the Arbitrators so directed to be made on the part of the respective Provinces, or the last thereof if the said Appointments shall not have been made on the same day, His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, shall have power, by an Instrument under His Sign Manual, to appoint such Third Arbitrator who (if appointed in manner last mentioned) shall not be an Inhabitant of either of the said Provinces; and that the Three Arbitrators so appointed as aforesaid, shall have power to hear and determine all claims of the Province of Upper Canada upon the Province of Lower Canada, on account of Drawbacks or Proportion of Duties under Agreements made and ratified by the Authority of the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces, according to the fair understanding and construction of the said Agreements; and also to hear any claim which may be advanced on the part of the Province of Upper Canada, to a proportion of Duties heretofore levied on Lower Canada under British Acts of Parliament, the Division of which

And be it further enacted, That the said Arbitrators shall have Power to send for and examine such Persons, Papers, and Records as they shall judge necessary for their Information in the Matters referred to them; and that if any Person or Persons shall refuse or neglect to attend the said Arbitrators, or to produce before them any Papers or Documents, having been duly served in either Province with reasonable Notice in Writing for that Purpose, he, she, or they shall forfeit and pay the Sum of Fifty Pounds, to be recovered by Bill, Plaint, or Information, in any Court having competent Jurisdiction within the Province in which such Person usually resides, to be applied towards the Support of the Civil Government of the said Province, and to be accounted for to His Majesty, through the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasurer for the Time being, in such Manner and Form as it shall please His Majesty to direct.

Witnesses to be sworn

XIX. And be it further enacted, That the Witnesses to be produced before the said Arbitrators, if it is desired by either of the said Arbitrators, shall and may be sworn before any of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace within either of the said Provinces, or before any one of the said Arbitrators, who are hereby empowered jointly or severally to administer such Oath; and that if any Person shall, in any such Oath so taken as aforesaid, wilfully forswear himself, he shall be deemed guilty of wilful and corrupt Perjury.

Appointing Arbitrators on Vacancies

XX. And be it further enacted, That in case of the Death, Removal, or Incapacity of either of the said Arbitrators before making an Award, or in case the Third Arbitrator chosen or appointed as aforesaid shall refuse to act, another shall be appointed in his Stead, in the same Manner as such Arbitrator so dead, removed, or become incapable or refusing to act as aforesaid, was originally appointed; and that in case a Third Arbitrator shall be appointed by His Majesty as herein before mentioned, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor in Chief in and over the said Provinces, to detain the Amount of Remuneration to be paid to such Arbitrator, which Amount shall be defrayed in equal Proportions by each Province, and shall be paid by Warrants, to be issued for that purpose by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each Province, upon the Receiver General thereof respectively.

Award of Arbitrators to be final.

XXI And be it further enacted, That the Award of the Majority of the said Arbitrators, so far as the same shall be authorized by this Act, shall be final.

Award to be certified to the Treasury and by them as before-mentioned,

XXII. And be it further enacted, That the said Arbitrators, or a Major the Governor, or certify the Award to be made by them in the Premises, under their Hands and Seals, to the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces; and that if any Sum be directed by the said Award to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada by the Province of Lower Canada, it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada, and he is hereby required to issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of the Province of Lower Canada, in favour of the Receiver General of the Province of Upper Canada, for the Sum so awarded; which Sum shall be accordingly paid by the Receiver General of Lower Canada, in discharge of such Warrant, and shall be accounted for by him to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the Time being, in such Manner and Form as His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, shall be graciously pleased to direct.

Power to Arbitrators to determine Claims and Award by Lower Canada on Upper Canada

XXIII. And be it further enacted, That the Arbitrators to be appointed under this Act shall have Power to hear and determine any claim which may be advanced on the Part of the Province of Lower Canada, upon the Province of Upper Canada, being of the same Description as those which by this Act may be preferred to the same Arbitrators on the Part of Upper Canada; and that their Award thereupon shall be final and conclusive, and shall be carried into Effect if the same be made in Favour of the Province of Lower Canada, in the same Manner as is herein directed with respect to any Award which may be made in favour of the Province of Upper Canada.

Proportion of Duties arising in Lower Canada shall be considered Upper Canada.

XXIV. And be it further enacted, That of all Duties which have been levied in the Province of Lower Canada since the First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and nineteen, under any Act passed in the said Province, upon any Goods, Wares, Merchandize, or Commodities imported by Sea into the said Province of Lower Canada, and also of all Duties which after the passing of this Act, and before the First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and twenty four, shall be levied in the Province of Lower Canada, under any Act passed in the said Province, upon any Goods, Wares, Merchandize, or Commodities imported by Sea into the said Province of Lower Canada, the Province of Upper Canada shall be entitled to have and receive One-fifth Part as the proportion of Duties arising and due to the said Province of Upper Canada upon such Importations; and that the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, shall and may issue his Warrant forthwith upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada, in favour of the Receiver General of the Province of Upper Canada, for such proportion of the Duties as shall have been received in the Province of Lower Canada before the passing of this Act, and shall and may on the First Day of January and the First Day of July, in each and every Year thereafter, issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada in like Manner for the payment to the Receiver General of Upper Canada, of such Sum as may be then ascertained to be due on account of the said proportion, according to the Provisions of this Act.

Award to be made every Four Years.

Proportion hereby established to be paid until a new one is made.

XXVI. And be it further Enacted, That after the said First Day of July, one thousand eight hundred and twenty four, until a new Proportion of Duties, to be paid to Upper Canada, shall be established, as hereinbefore provided, and also at all Times hereafter, in default of any such Proportion being appointed, the Proportion of Duties last assigned to be paid to Upper Canada under the Authority of this Act, shall continue to be paid by the Province of Lower Canada, and Warrants shall issue for the Payment of the same, in the same Manner as for the Period before the same First Day of July One thousand eight hundred and twenty four: Provided always that it shall be in the Power of the Arbitrators nevertheless, by their subsequent Award, to alter such Proportion from the Period for which was last established, if it shall appear to them just so to do.

Proportion of Duties how to be allotted between the Two Provinces.

14 G. 3. c. 88.

XXVII. And whereas by a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain passed in the Fourteenth Year of His late Majesty's Reign, intituled An Act for the better Regulating and Governing the Province of Quebec, and for making more effectual Provision for the Government of the said Province, for the Purpose of establishing a Fund towards further defraying the Charges of the Administration of Justice and Support of the Civil Government within the Province of Quebec in America, certain Duties were imposed upon Goods and Commodities imported into the said Province, and which Duties are by the said Act directed to be applied, under the Authority of the Lord High Treasurer, or Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, in making a more certain and Adequate Provision towards defraying the Expence of the Administration of Justice, and the Support of the Civil Government in the said Province of Quebec; and since the Division of the said Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, it has been contended, on behalf of the said Provinces, that the Proceeds of such Duties should be distributed between the said Two Provinces in proportion to the Amount of Expences defrayed by each respectively towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of its Civil Government, and not in proportion to the estimated Consumption within either Province of the Articles upon which such Duties shall have been paid; be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Arbitrators to be appointed, from Time to Time, for the Purpose of establishing the Proportion which shall be paid to Upper Canada, of such Duties as now are, or hereafter may be imposed by Acts passed in the Province of Lower Canada, to receive the Claims in behalf of each Province with respect to its Proportion of Duties levied under the said Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, since the Expiration of the last Provincial Agreement heretofore ratified between the said two Provinces, or which may hereafter be levied under the Authority of the said Act, upon Goods and Commodities imported into Lower Canada, and to report the same, with the evidence thereon, to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the Time being, in order that they may make such Order respecting the Proportion in which the same shall be expended within each of the said Provinces respectively, for the Purposes mentioned in the said Act, as to them shall seem meet; Provided always nevertheless, that until such Order shall be made by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury as aforesaid, the Proceeds of such Duties shall be distributed in the same Proportion between the said two Provinces as the Duties levied under the Provincial Acts of the Province of Lower Canada within the same Period, subject nevertheless to be increased or diminished, as respects either of the said Provinces, by any subsequent Order of the said Lords Commissioners, extending to the Period for which no such Order had before been made.

Duties imposed by Lower Canada to remain in force unless repealed or altered by a Legislative Act of that Province.

XXVIII. And whereas the Division of the Province of Quebec, into the Two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, was intended for the common Benefit of His Majesty's Subjects residing within both of the newly constituted Provinces, and not in any Manner to obstruct the Intercourse or prejudice the Trade to be carried on by the Inhabitants of any parts of the said late Province of Quebec with Great Britain, or with other Countries; and it has accordingly been made a Subject of mutual Stipulation between the said Two Provinces, in the several Agreements which have heretofore subsisted, that the Province of Upper Canada should not impose any Duties upon Articles imported from Lower Canada, but would permit and allow the Province of Lower Canada to impose such Duties as they might think fit, upon Articles imported into the said Province of Lower Canada; of which Duties a certain Proportion was by the said Agreements appointed to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada: And whereas in consequence of the Inconveniences arising from the Cessation of such Agreements as above recited, it has been found expedient to remedy the Evils now experienced in the Province of Upper Canada, and to guard against such as might in future arise from the Exercise of an exclusive Controul, by the Legislature of Lower Canada, over the Imports and Exports into and out of the Part of Quebec; and it is further expedient, in order to enable the said Province of Upper Canada to meet the necessary Charges upon its ordinary Revenue, and to provide with sufficient Certainty for the Support of its Civil Government, to establish such Controul as may prevent the Evils which have arisen or may arise from the Legislature of Lower Canada, suffering to expire unexpectedly, or repealing suddenly, and without affording to Upper Canada an Opportunity of Remonstrance, existing Duties, upon which the principal part of it Revenue, and the necessary Maintenance of its Government may depend; be it therefore enacted, That all and every the Duties which, at the Time of the Expiration of the last Agreement between the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, were payable under any Act or Acts of the Province of Lower Canada, on the Importation of any Goods, Wares, or Commodities into the said Province of Lower Canada (except such as may have been imposed for the Regulation of the Trade by Land or Inland Navigation, between the said Province and the United States of America,) shall be payable and shall be levied according to the Provisions contained in any such Acts until any Act or Acts for the repealing or altering the said Duties, or any Part thereof respectively, shall be passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of the said Province of Lower Canada, and until such Act or Acts, repealing or altering such Duties, shall, after a Copy thereof has been transmitted to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, be laid before both Houses of the Imperial Parliament, according to the Forms and Provisions contained in a certain Act of the Parliament, according to the Forms and Provisions contained in a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, passed in the Thirty first Year of the Reign of His said late Majesty, intituled An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled 'An Act for making more effectual Provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec, in North America, and to make further Provision for the Government of the said Province' and the Royal Assent thereto proclaimed within the Province of Lower Canada, according to the provisions of the said last mentioned Act.

31 G. 3. c. 31.

No Act of Legislature imposing Duties, whereby the Province of Upper Canada may be affected, to be valid until laid before Parliament.

XXIX. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, no Act of the Legislature of the Province of Lower Canada, whereby any additional or other Duties shall or may be imposed on Articles imported by Sea into the said Province of Lower Canada, and whereby the Province of Upper Canada shall or may in any respect be directly or indirectly affected, shall have the Force of Law untill the same shall have been laid before the Imperial Parliament, as provided in certain cases by the said Act passed in the Thirty-first Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, and the Royal Assent thereto published by Proclamation in the said Province of Lower Canada, a Copy of such Act having, within One Month from the Time of presenting the same for the Royal Assent in the said Province, been transmitted by by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada: Provided always nevertheless, that it shall not be necessary to transmit any such Act to be laid before the Imperial Parliament, if, before the same shall have been presented for the Royal Assent within the said Province of Lower Canada, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the said Province of Upper Canada shall, by Address to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Upper Canada, pray that their Concurrence in the Imposition of the Duties intended to be imposed by such Act may be signified to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada.

XXX. And whereas it is expedient that the Productions of the Province of Upper Canada should be permitted to be exported without being made subject to any Duty in any of the Province of Lower Canada, either directly or indirectly, to Duties or Impositions on their Arrival in that Province, or in passing through the waters thereof: Be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, and every the Boats, Scows, Rafts, Cribs, and other Craft belonging to any of His Majesty's Subjects, and coming from the Province of Upper Canada into the Province of Lower Canada, not laden with the Productions of any Foreign Country, Boats and other Craft belonging to Upper Canada shall be permitted to enter Lower Canada without being subject to any Duty.

shall be allowed freely to pass into and through the said Province, and shall not be subject to any Rate, Tax, Duty, or Imposition, other than any Charge which may now exist for Pilotage, or which may be established for Toll at any Lock or other Work now actually erected on the navigable Waters thereof; any Law, Statute, or Usage of the Province of Lower Canada to the contrary notwithstanding; and that the Expence of improving the Navigation of the Waters of the River Saint Lawrence shall in future be defrayed by such Measures and in such proportions as the Arbitrators to be appointed under the provisions of this Act shall determine, upon the prayer of either Province: Provided always, that no such Determination shall be carried into effect until sanctioned and enacted by the Legislatures of both of the said Provinces.

How Expences of improving the Navigation shall be paid.

Lands held in Fief and Seigneury, on Petition of the Owners to His Majesty, for exchanging and Power of free and common Soccage.

XXXI And whereas Doubts have been entertained whether Tenures of Lands within the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada holden in Fief and Seigneury can legally be changed to Soccage, And whereas it may materially tend to the Improvement of such Lands, and to the general Advantage of the said Provinces, that such Tenures may henceforth be changed in manner hereinafter mentioned: Be it therefore further enacted and declared, That if any Person or Persons holding any Lands in the said Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, or either of them, in Fief and Seigneury, and having legal Power and Authority to alienate the same, shall at any Time from and after Commencement of this Act, surrender the same into the Hands of His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, and shall by Petition to His Majesty, or to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province in which the Lands so holden shall be situated, set forth that he, she, or they is or are desirous of holding the same in free and common Soccage, such Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of such Province as aforesaid in pursuance of His Majesty's Instructions, transmitted through his Principal Secretary of State for Colonial Affairs, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Executive Council of such Province, shall cause a fresh Grant to be made to such Person or Persons of such Lands to be holden in free and common Soccage, in like Manner as Lands are now holden in free and common Soccage in that part of Great Britain called England; subject nevertheless to Payment to His Majesty, by such Grantee or Grantees, of such Sum or Sums of Money as and for a Commutation for the Fines and other Dues which would have been payable to His Majesty under the original Tenures, and to such Conditions as to His Majesty, or to the said Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government as aforesaid, shall seem just and reasonable: Provided always, that on any such fresh Grant being made as aforesaid, no allotment or Appropriation of Lands for the Support or Maintenance of a Protestant Clergy shall be necessary; but every such fresh Grant shall be valid and effectual without any Specification of Lands for the Purpose aforesaid; any Law or Statute to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

Treble Costs. The Defendants shall have Treble Costs, and shall give the like Remedy for the same as in Cases where Costs by Law are given to Defendants.

XXXII. Upper-Canada Almanac, FOR 1823.

IT is the intention of the Editors of the "Weekly Register" to publish an Almanac for the year 1823, on an improved plan, with many additions; and to compleat as soon as possible, there are reasons to ascertain the number of copies it may be necessary to print, as it would be attended with loss to strike off many more than were actually wanted—They take this opportunity, therefore, of requesting that all those who may wish to patronize the undertaking, will take the trouble of sending their names and address either to the U. C. Gazette Office, in York, or to some of the undermentioned Gentlemen, as may be most convenient.

It is intended to give whatever may be useful to the man of business; resident in the country;—and, also, such information that may be useful to strangers;—the work will be neatly stitched in a cover, of a convenient size—and the price not to exceed half a dollar

No. 23 — Our enemies will be to attempt the very body of the time—its form and pressure"— we shall extenuate nothing, nor shall we set down aught in malice. — Vol. I.

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1822

Our readers must have noticed an unwillingness to insert in this paper any of those spurious copies of the "CANADA BILL" which many on our brother Editors in both Provinces thought fit to publish. Knowing them to be incorrect, we deemed it best to await the arrival of the Bill in its perfect state. It has, at length, arrived, and we have the pleasure of presenting it to our readers entire, and as it stands, THE LAW OF THE LAND, and a most momentous one it is.

Our present limits do not allow us to comment, at any length, on its merits, but it appears to remove all things necessary, and to leave nothing unsettled, except the Union of the Legislatures of Upper and Lower Canada, an Union that is now probable will not take place for many years to come; perhaps, never!

It must be very satisfactory to the friends of the ATTORNEY GENERAL of this Province, and to those public men who were advocates for his mission to England, to know that he has been completely successful in every object, for the attainment of which he was so honorably delegated.

Selections from British Papers.

The King arrived in London in good health on the 1st September. On the 4th he held a privy Council, which was attended by most of the cabinet ministers; but it does not appear that any appointments had been made in consequence of the death of the Marquis of Londonderry. Various speculations, as usual, were afloat on the subject, Lord Bathurst seems to be considered as the future Secretary for the foreign department.

FUNERAL OF THE MARQUIS OF LONDONDERRY.

The body of this exceedingly and much lamented Nobleman, was removed from North Cray on the night of the 10th ult. and arrived at his late residence, in St. James's square, at half past one on the morning of the 20th, where it lay in state until nine, when it was conveyed to Westminster Abbey, and deposited in the sepulcre at twenty minutes before ten. The Earl of Liverpool was close by the grave, on which, during the greater part of the service, his eyes were steadfastly fixed. Behind him stood the Lord Chancellor in tears. The Duke of Wellington was next to the left of the Premier On the left of the Duke stood his brother, Lord Marlborough, and next to him appeared the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The Hon. Frederick Robinson stood near the Chancellor, on his Lord ship's right.

When the ceremony concluded, the Earl of Liverpool, the Lord Chancellor, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer took a last sad view of the coffin which contained the mortal remains of their deceased friend, and the whole of the mourners then withdrew.

The service terminated about a minute before the Abbey clock struck ten.

The scene was solemn and impressive in the highest degree, which we regret we are not more particular in our description of. All the Foreign Ministers, and their suites, with some few exceptions, and those of the deceased, attended on the mournful occasion.

Police officers had been stationed for some days in the house of the Duke of Wellington, in consequence of anonymous information having been sent to the Magistracy, that an attempt would be made upon the life of his Grace. The noble Duke read the information with supreme contempt, and not only refused to adopt any precautionary measures, but even expressed a disinclination to receive the officers in his house. He rode out every day, attended by a single groom as usual.

Sir William Herschell, the eminent Astronomer, died on the 25th August, at Slough, near Windsor, in the 86th year of his age.

The Bank of England had in contemplation to reduce the rate of interest payable upon their stock from 10 to 8 per cent, the proprietors will, in consideration of such reduction, receive it is said, a bonus of 10 per cent upon their capital, Baron Wood and Baron Graham of the Exchequer were about to retire from the bench. The Attorney General, Sir Robert Gifford, and the Hon. G. Warner, Chief Justice of Chester, are named as their successors. Mr. Serjeant Cross is expected to fill the vacancy this will occasion at Chester.

Dr. Balfour, of Edinburgh, has published a wonderful instance of the power of nature. A Carpenter, the nail of whose fore-finger was cut off by the blow of an axe, applied to him to have the wound dressed. The Doctor inquired after the remainder of the finger; it was brought to him: it was quite cold, of the color of tallow, half an hour having elapsed since the accident happened. The finger was not cut off straight across, but at an acute angle—one side of the divided piece measured an inch in length, the other an inch and a half. The Doctor cleaned the two wounded surfaces with cold water, joined them carefully, and tied up the man's hand in a sling In a short time the man recovered feeling in the finger, and the free use of it in every respect.

Steam Coaches—The following extraordinary advertisement is literally copied from Carrick's Dublin Morning Post. Many wonders have been effected by the power of steam, but this exceeds any thing we have heard of.

"Public Coaches.—On the first day of March at twenty minutes past seven, the new invented coach, impelled by steam and air pressure, will leave the Mews Hotel Stickville street; its motion equal to 13 Irish miles an hour, and deliver the passengers and baggage in Belfast at two o'clock—allowing 50 minutes for breakfast, and four minutes at each stage. It will remain forty minutes at Belfast, and reach Dublin by nine. The coaches will in a few days be ready for inspection. They are mounted on Mr. Bellingham's Patent Axles—roomy and comfortable as the best finished gentlemen's carriage. The proprietor will be answerable for all luggage under the value of £100, and pay £5 forfeit for every parcel not delivered in forty minutes after the arrival of the coach. Iron locks placed in the coach with master keys, may now be contracted for. Commands addressed to Steam Coach, Mews Hotel, will be attended to; the proprietor having an exclusive patent, will neither take meals, nor use horses, their fare no delay from post offices or toll gates can occur.

"Glasgow, Jan 1, 1820.—We certify that we tried one of Mr Bellingham's new invented Steam Pleasure Engines on the most hilly road within twenty miles of this town—that we supposed a coach loaded for the purpose, weighing in all four tons, at the rate of 20 English miles in one hour, without any inconvenience except the firing of the wave of the wheels, in consequence of the axles being common ones—with standing we were obliged to run it at night, to prevent the invention being known until the patent is out.—On turn stopped it with ease, and we consider it the best and next mode of impelling a carriage ever invented, and not so liable to accide ts as a carriage drawn by horses—Given under our hands this day—George Irvine, Engineer; Thomas Clerk, Engineer; Thomas M'Mahon, Millwright

At Prestwich, near Manchester, there is a young woman, 19 years of age, who has been confined 16 months by sickness; during which period she presents state, no food, solid or liquid, has passed her mouth; nor has she spoken one word. She is worn to a skeleton.

On the last day of the assizes at Ayr, two Jurymen who were empanelled to try two men for a burglary having agreed, were locked up in the jury room all night, and the next morning the Sheriff provided them with breakfasts; each drawing a cork with a screw in it. We have confirmation of the conflagration of Jassy in Moldavia, by the mussulmen, who appear to have taken advantage of the quiet and peaceable disposition of the inhabitants, and at the moment the wine was ready, to set fire to the city in the night of the 10th of August, by which 20,000 houses were destroyed. Taking advantage of the consternation occasioned, the Turks gave themselves up to universal pillage, and such was the insatiable thirst of these barbarians for plunder that it was supposed they would not be satisfied until the whole was laid in ashes.

It is asserted, that the conferences which were to precede the opening of the Continental Congress had already taken place at Vienna; and that the objects which are to form the topics of discussion in the Congress have been determined at these conferences, at which were present the Prince de Metternich, (Austria,) M. de Tatischeff, (Russia,) the Marquis de Gamara, (France,) Mr. Gordon, (England,) and the Prince de Hauzfield, (Prussia)

It appears by the Paris papers that Samos had been the seat of fresh disturbances of a political and military nature. On the 28th August, an individual cried "Vive Napoleon II." before a Swiss guard house, before the door of one of the first merchants of the city and some other persons. The gendarmerie, the superior officers of the garrison, and the municipal police hastened to the spot. Arrests took place, and a judicial inquiry was to be the consequence.

Several ministers from foreign courts are stated to have arrived at Paris on their way to Congress. The following is given in the Paris papers of the 5th August, as a summary of the propositions to be submitted to the Congress of Verona:—

"1 To declare firmly, and openly, against every attempt of every kind. 2. To entrust the guarantee to Italy and Germany to Austria. 3 To agree to a secret article relative to Spain. 4. To renew the guarantees given to the other States of Europe. 5. To declare a neutrality, at least openly to sible, with respect to the affairs of Turkey. 6. Queen Anne, in favor of the Royal Company. GEORGE THE FOURTH'S WELCOME.

Tune—"Who is o'er the lone sea?"

Hark! the pibroch's martial strain
On's the clans to Lothian's plain:
Scotland's out her King again,
Welcome Royal Geordie!

Blaw, ye breezes! fair'ring blaw,
Round North Berwick's holy Law;
Gently on the squadron fa',
That brings up Royal Geordie!

Geordie leaves his proud domains,
For our northern mountain scenes,
He comes to see our nymphs and swains,
Courteous Royal Geordie.

And O! among our mountains blue,
Are loyal cluers to value true,
And hearts as dauntless as you may wind a clue
Around the heart o' Geordie.

Welcome to green Allyn's shore
As the gallant Duke of York;
He, the lion rem, and more,
And sae does Royal Geordie!

Holyrood again looks gay,
Martial flies, in bright array
Glitter in the golden ray,
To welcome Royal Geordie.

On tower and hill the banners fly,
Ten thousand hands are waving high,
While thund'ring plaudits shake the sky,
Welcome Royal Geordie!

Let the wine cup circle round,
Let the trumpet's flourish sound,
While our ships and forts respond
A blithe salute to Geordie!

The palace of Holyrood is handsomely fitted up. The throne is at the west end of the presence room, the walls of which are covered with scarlet cloth, and a large mirror covers the east end. The King was received at the palace by the Duke of Hamilton, keeper of the palace, the Duke of Montrose, Lord Melville, and other high officers, whom we have not time to enumerate. The King soon proceeded to the presence chamber, when the sword of state was brought to him, and presented by the Knight Marischal, "who kissed the King's hand, and made three reverences." Immediately afterwards the Magistrates of Edinburgh were announced, admitted, and an address was read by Sir Cunyngham, the Senior City Clerk, to which the King made a suitable reply. He afterwards left the throne, and proceeded to the royal closet, preceded by the regalia. His Majesty then commenced the attendance of the Captain, General, and Council of the Royal Company of Archers, to perform the service of delivering a pair of barbed arrows, which is the reddendo contained in the Charter by

"I have the utmost pleasure in attending your Majesty's command, to present to your Majesty, as Captain General, and Council of the Royal Company of Archers, a pair of barbed arrows, which is the reddendo contained in the Charter by Queen Anne, in favor of the Royal Company. The ceremony having been done, the King, having left the palace for Dalkeith, a little after 3 o'clock, after expressing the great satisfaction he had experienced during the day.

At Dalkeith his Majesty was received with every manifestation of affectionate loyalty. The people assembled in crowds to hail his arrival, and in the evening a general illumination took place, with a splendid display of fire works. Wade a grand display of fireworks blazed on all the surrounding hills.

One part of the ceremonial which happened to attract much attention to the King, was the presentation of Petitioners, (or as they are technically called, the tails) of the Highland Noblemen and Gentlemen in the ancient Celtic dress and clothing. The two most remarkable were those of the Earl of Breadalbane, and the Marchioness of Stafford. Her Ladyship's tail was really magnificent, consisting of about 100 of the finest men of her clan.

On the 19th of August, every Scotch dish had a place on the King's dinner table, such as sheep's head, haggies, hotch potch, &c. On the day when the King in person goes to the Castle, the Duke of Hamilton, Premier Peer of Scotland, carries the crown This is a privilege which he enjoys as Earl of Angus. The sword of state is, on the same occasion, carried by the young Earl of Errol, Lord High Constable of Scotland. On one of the days of his residence in Scotland, the King is to be present at a great entertainment given in the Parliament House, by the Lord Provost and Magistrates of Edinburgh.

The sword which was drawn by the renowned Sir William Wallace, and now in possession of the noble family of Loudon, who were lineal descendants of that illustrious hero, has been sent off from Loudon Castle, in Ayrshire, under an escort of a detachment of the London Troop of Ayrshire Yeomanry Cavalry, for the inspection of the King.

On Tuesday the 20th, his Majesty held a Drawing Room at the palace of Holyrood House, which was attended by four or five hundred Ladies of the first rank and distinction. His Majesty was dressed in the uniform of a Field Marshal. The presentations commenced at two o'clock. The dresses worn on the occasion were uncommonly magnificent.

The King visited, in grand procession, Edinburgh Castle on the 22d. His Majesty expressed himself highly gratified, and as he looked around exclaimed, "This is wonderful—what a sight!"

Loyal and dutiful addresses have been presented to the King from the Church of Scotland, the different Universities, from Glasgow, Paisley, and many other places.

A grand dinner was given to his Majesty in Parliament house, On the cloth being removed, "The King, with four times three," was given amidst the loudest acclamations, and the thundering of the artillery at the Castle, which announced the toast. His Majesty then rose and said, "My Lords and Gentlemen, it is impossible for me to express my feelings at this moment. This is one of the proudest days of my life I have not words to express the gratification it gives me, the very flattering manner in which I have been received by the citizens of Edinburgh, and the mark of attention which has been paid to me on all occasions since I have come to Scotland. I am indeed highly satisfied with the reception I have experienced from all ranks of my subjects" and concluded emphatically in these words—"How strong, how deeply, how feelingly, and how sincerely, I have been affected by this, no language of mine can adequately express" His Majesty gave the following toasts—"The Lord Provost, Sir Wm. Arbuthnot, Bart. and the Corporation of Edinburgh." "The Chieftains and their Clans, and God bless the land of Cakes."

On the 26th a splendid ball was given to His Majesty by the Members of the Caledonian Hunt.

At the King's Levee, held at Holyrood House on Saturday last, his Majesty was dressed in a full Highland uniform, and wore the broad sword, pistols, and plaid belt; and the fine person of the Monarch gave great effect to this martial and picturesque dress. Both Whigs and Tories attended the Levee in great numbers, all party distinctions being laid aside on the occasion, and every countenance testifying the joy felt in every party at seeing their Sovereign in their capital, on an occasion of more than any could be manimous in their loyalty and attachment to their Sovereign.

An equestrian statue in bronze, of his Majesty, is to be erected in Edinburgh, to commemorate the Royal visit. On the King's return to London, which was expected about the 8th or 10th of September, he was to visit St Pauls in state, and dine at Guildhall, as usual after every Coronation.

SPLENDID VICTORY AT THERMOPYLÆ.

It is reported through what appears to be an authentic channel that Thermopylæ has again witnessed a splendid victory, in which the true courage of Spartans was conspicuously displayed and a terrible blow given by the hands of Freemen to that sanguinary despotism, which has been too long tolerated in Europe. It was on the 8th of July, as appears by the accounts from Constantinople, that the great battle was fought. The Turkish forces, commanded by Chourshid Pacha, had previously formed a junction with the troops of the Pachas of Negropont, Larissa, and Janina. These combined armies, amounting to 70,000 men, engaged the Greeks, on the 7th of July, and seem on that day to have repulsed the patriots. On the following day, however, the Greeks, led on by Odysseus, Ipsilanti, Normann, and Buzzaris, attacked the Musselmen, whom they totally defeated, with the loss of 50,000 men, including three Pachas who were made prisoners.—So complete was the victory, that of the great body of Turkish troops brought into action, Courschid Pacha was only able to rally 4000 of them, with which he fled from the field of battle. The number of the Greeks engaged is not mentioned; but their loss is estimated at 18,000. They are said to have been principally indebted for their success to an ambuscade, and the want of discipline in the enemy. But it might have been stated with greater truth, that they triumphed because every one of them was animated by the spirit of liberty, and fought for their individual rights; whereas, their opponents were hurried on by blind zeal, and contended in a cause in which they participated only as the hirelings of a slavish and barbarous policy, that existed by rapine, and trampled on the most sacred rights of humanity.—It is impossible that a battle so decisive should not produce the most beneficial result to the conquerors. The consternation which the destruction of part of their fleet lately created at Constantinople may enable us to form some idea of what will be the general feeling there, when the intelligence arrives of this new and terrible disaster. Naturally cowards, the followers of Mahomet, in the moment of victory, are the most insolent people on earth. When defeated, none will crouch or humble themselves more to the victor. If the Greeks are as united in their councils as they are in the field, they will follow up the opportunity which this battle has given them, and dictate their own terms to the haughty Ottoman. Temporising policy will ruin the cause. They must, and we are persuaded they will strike the final blow with promptitude, and thus give another memorable proof to the world, of what a people can accomplish when roused by oppression, and animated by the love of liberty. Amidst the pleasure which we feel at contemplating the prosperous state of the affairs of Greece, we consider we no inconsiderable gratification from the circumstances, that they owe this entirely to their own unassisted efforts; and that, while we look in vain for assistance from the Emperor Alexander and regret that actually clustered with rapture. When the vehicle their own patriotic exertions. May the result be as satisfactory, as the commencement has been glorious.

The Greeks appear to be every where successful, and scarcely a doubt seems to be entertained, in any quarter, of their ultimate triumph over the barbarians. The Turkish Sultan is now said to be very angry at the massacre of Scio, in consequence of his sister expressing great dissatisfaction at the cruelties which were there committed.

A letter received at one of the outports in England from Constantinople states:—"Since I have been here, (14 days) a great number of Greeks have lost their heads; they are taken from their houses, and their heads cut off before their own doors; they are then stripped, and laid with their heads upon their bodies for three days; after which they are thrown into the harbour. The streets being very narrow, I have been obliged to step over many, laying in that state daily."

NATURAL HISTORY.

Wonderful Snakes.—On the 27th July there was killed in the town of Ogden, a large snake, which upon examination, was found to contain one hundred and six live snakes! One of the snakes had two complete heads and necks, with one body; another had two heads with one neck and body; and a third had one and a half heads, with one neck and two bodies! What is more singular still, these deformed reptiles were as active and sprightly as the others. They are now in the possession of one of the Canal Engineers, where they may be seen by the curious.—Rochester Telegraph.

Bees—Singular Occurrence.—On Monday last, as Mr. Thomas French, brother to Mr. French, of Iken hall, was passing through Tunstall, a swarm of bees alighted on him, and rolled into his coat pocket. Mr. French took off his coat, and the bees were hived from it without doing him any harm. Mr. F. had some scented herb in his pocket.—Suffolk Chronicle.

Anecdote of a Dog.—A beautiful liver-coloured bitch, belonging to James Clarke, one of the convicts now under the sentence of death in our county gaol, followed her owner there on his commitment in October last, and has remained somewhere about the prison walls ever since. The faithful animal was then in excellent condition—fat, clean, and sleek; but poor Dutch (that is her name) lost that fostering hand that administered to her necessities, and being destitute of a master and a home, has been picking up her precarious and scanty subsistance on any mid den that yielded a bone or offal. At length our Assizes came, and Clarke was conveyed, with about thirty culprits, from the prison to the County Hall for trial. How wonderful is instinct! no one could tell poor Dutch that her beloved master was condemned among the thirty culprits in the caravan, or in his attendant crowd; but that surprising faculty which the God of Nature has bestowed on the species, brought this faithful animal to the tail of the caravan, and notwithstanding the constables stores she followed as chief mourner; watched all the day about the courthouse during the trials, and when the caravan returned in the evening, poor Dutch had dropped into the same situation, and was following it back to the county gaol; with weeping eye her condemned master saw her, and said, "Ah, poor Dutch, now this!" but here destruction fails;—it may be much better circumstances, that they owe this entirely, to their own unassisted efforts; and that, while we look in vain for assistance from the Emperor Alexander and regret actually clustered with rapture. When the vehicle arrived at the gaol poor Dutch was shut out. And being denied the enemies of Greece by famine, and treating herself on a mound, surveyed anxiously the prison, gave four loud and pitiful yells, as if she had said, "Alas! my master, thy well-known voice has just cheered my heart, and now let me die with thee." The poor animal then solemnly and slowly walked away.—Shrewsbury Chronicle.

BUDGET OF VALUABLE RECIPES.

No. 4.

To remove the taste of garlic or wild onions from milk.—When the milk is new from the cow, put one quart of boiling water into every gallon of milk,—stir it thoroughly, and put the whole into broad shallow dishes, so that it will not be above two inches deep. Let these dishes be placed on an open shelf, that the vapor may pass freely and entirely away. When the milk has stood in this manner twelve hours, it may be put into a churn altogether, or only the cream as may be most agreeable to the taste or practice of the operator. Milk from cows that have pastured on garlic, when managed in this way, will be quite sweet.

To improve impoverished Land.—Put on two successive crops of buck wheat; and when in bloom plough them down. This may be done in each season; and in the fall sow your wheat or rye, and you cannot fail of having a promising crop of grain next year.

Dysentery.—Several persons who have lately labored under the attacks of the dysentery, have experienced a relief from using the made of the common blackberry root.

Essence of Pennyroyal!!!—The essence of this well known herb is found by experience to be an effectual preventive of the "pestilent effects" of mosquitoes. To those annoyed by this unwelcome little visitors, we mention this fact as worthy of attention. The essence can at any time be had at the stores, and the application of a few drops on the hands and face (merely sufficient to create a slight effluvia, or scent,) will cause them to vacate the room immediately; and thus may be superseded the necessity of constructing mosquito bars.

To get rid of Rats and Mice.—Let An old one be caught and well basted with tar and tar. By flight amongst the rest is so much infectable a predicament, that he will commemorate terror to the whole tribe and produce a speedy decampment.

VIII. And whereas it is expedient to afford Protection to the Trade between the said Colonies and Plantations and the Province of Lower Canada, by imposing the same Duty per Gallon on Rum or other Spirits, the Produce or Manufacture of the said Colonies, imported from Great Britain, to that imposed upon the same Articles when imported from His Majesty's said Colonies or Plantations in the West Indies; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be raised, levied, collected, and paid unto His Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, for and upon every Gallon of Rum or other Spirits, the Produce or Manufacture of any of His Majesty's Islands, Colonies, or Plantations in the West Indies, which shall be imported or brought into any Part of the said Province of Lower Canada from Great Britain or Ireland, or any of the British Dominions in Europe, the Sum of Six Pence, over and above all other Duties now or hereafter to be made payable thereon in the said Province.

Additional Duty of 6d. per Gallon on Rum imported into Lower Canada from the United Kingdom.

If Payment of Duties be refused, Collector may seize Goods and sell the same within 20 Days.

VI. And be it further enacted, That if the Importer or Proprietor of such Articles shall refuse to pay the Duties hereby imposed thereon, it shall and may be lawful for the Collector or other Chief Officer of the Customs where such Articles shall be imported and he is hereby respectively required to take and secure the same, with the Casks or other Package thereof and to cause the same to be publicly sold, within the Space of Twenty Days at the most after such refusal made, and at such Time and place as such Officer shall, by Four or more Days public Notice, appoint for that Purpose which Articles shall be sold to the highest Bidder; and the Money arising from the Sale thereof shall be applied to the Payment of the said Duties, together with the Charges which shall have been occasioned by the said Sale, and the Overplus (if any) shall be paid to such Importer, Proprietor, or any other Person authorized to receive the same.

Drawback on the Exportation of Rum and Spirits from Newfoundland, &c. to Canada.

XIII. And whereas it is expedient to encourage Trade between Canada and his Majesty's Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and Prince Edward's Island, by enabling the Merchants and Traders of Newfoundland to export from thence into Canada, Rum and other Spirits, the Produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, free of any Duty which may have been imposed upon its Importation from any of the Places last aforesaid, and for which Purpose to allow, upon the Export of such Rum or other Spirits a Drawback of the full Duties paid upon the Importation thereof; be it therefore enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, there shall be paid and allowed, upon the Exportation from any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, into Canada, of Rum or other Spirits, being the produce of the British West India Islands, or any of His Majesty's Colonies on the Continent of South America, a Drawback of the full Duties of Customs which may have been paid upon the Importation thereof from any of the Places last aforesaid, into any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, upon a Certificate being produced, under the Hands and Seals of the Collector and Comptroller of His Majesty's Customs at Quebec, certifying that the said Rum or other Spirits have been duly landed in Canada.

Conditions on which the Drawback shall be paid.

XIV. And be it further enacted, That no Entry shall pass, nor any Drawback be paid or allowed, upon the Exportation of Rum or other Spirits from any or either of the said Colonies of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, or Prince Edward's Island, into Canada, unless such Entry be made in the Name of the real Owner or Owners, Proprietor or Proprietors of the said Goods, and that before such Owner or Owners, Proprietor or Proprietors, shall receive the said Drawback so allowed as aforesaid, One or more of them shall verify upon Oath, upon the Debenture to be made out for the Payment of such Drawback, that he or they is or are the real Owner or Owners of the said Goods; nor unless Proof on Oath shall be made to the Satisfaction of the Collector and Comptroller of His Majesty's Customs at the Port from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, that the full Duties due upon the Importation of the said Goods at the said Port had been paid and discharged: Provided always, that in Cases where the Owners of the said Goods are resident in any other Part of the British Dominions, it shall be lawful for their known and established Agents in the Colonies from whence the said Goods shall be so imported into Canada, to take the necessary Oaths on behalf of the said Owners.

Regulations as to settling the Proportions of Duties and Drawbacks between the Provinces, by Arbitrators.

XVII. And whereas since the Division of the Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, divers Regulations have from Time to Time been made, by Agreements concluded under the Authority of Acts passed by the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces respectively, concerning the imposing of Duties upon Articles imported into the Province of Lower Canada, and the Payment of Drawbacks of such Duties to the Province of Upper Canada, on account of the Proportion of Goods so imported into Lower Canada, and passing from thence into the said Province of Upper Canada and consumed therein: the last of which Agreement expired on the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen: And whereas it appears by the Report of the Commissioners last appointed for the purposes aforesaid, that the Province of Upper Canada claims certain Arrearages from the Province of Lower Canada, on account of such Drawbacks, which claims are not admitted on the part of the Province of Lower Canada; and it further appears by the Report of the said Commissioners, appointed on behalf of both Provinces for the purposes aforesaid, that they have failed to establish any Regulations for the Period beyond the First Day of July one thousand eight hundred and nineteen, by reason that they could not agree upon the Proportion of Duties to be paid to Upper Canada by way of Drawbacks: For Remedy of the inconvenience occasioned by the Suspension of the said Agreement, and for the satisfactory Investigation and Adjustment of the said claims, be it enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of each of the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, so soon as conveniently may be after the passing of this Act, to appoint, by Commission under the Great Seal of his respective Province, one Arbitrator; and that the said Arbitrators so appointed shall have Power, by an Instrument under their Hands and Seals, to appoint a Third Arbitrator; and in case of their not agreeing in such Appointment within one Month from the Date of the Appointment of the Arbitrators so directed to be made on the part of the respective Provinces, or the last thereof if the said Appointments shall not have been made on the same day, His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, shall have power, by an Instrument under His Sign Manual, to appoint such Third Arbitrator, who (if appointed in manner last mentioned) shall not be an Inhabitant of either of the said Provinces; and that the Three Arbitrators so appointed as aforesaid, shall have power to hear and determine all claims of the Province of Upper Canada upon the Province of Lower Canada, on account of Drawbacks or Proportion of Duties under Agreements made and ratified by the Authority of the Legislatures of the said Two Provinces, according to the fair understanding and construction of the said Agreements; and also to hear any claim which may be advanced on the part of the Province of Upper Canada, to a proportion of Duties heretofore levied in Lower Canada under British Acts of Parliament, the Division of which Duties shall not have been embraced within the Terms of any provisional Agreement, and to report the particulars of any such claim, with the Evidence thereupon, to the Lords Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury for the time being; and if it shall appear to the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury that any Sum is justly due from the Province of Lower Canada to the Province of Upper Canada on account of such last-mentioned claim, they shall signify the same, together with the Amount, to the Governor or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada for the Time being, who shall thereupon issue his Warrant upon the Receiver General of Lower Canada, to pay such Amount to the Receiver General of Upper Canada, in full Discharge of any such Claims.

Proportion of Duties how to be allotted between the Two Provinces to establish a Fund towards defraying the Charges of the Administration of Justice and Support of the Civil Government within the Province of Quebec.

XXVII. And whereas by a certain Act of the Parliament of Great Britain passed in the Fourteenth Year of His Majesty's Reign, intituled An Act for making more effectual Provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America, certain Duties were imposed upon Goods and Commodities imported into the said Province, and which Duties are by the said Act directed to be applied, under the Authority of the Lord High Treasurer, or Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, in making a more certain and adequate Provision towards defraying the Expence of the Administration of Justice, and the Support of the Civil Government in the said Province of Quebec; and since the Division of the said Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, it has been considered, on behalf of the said Provinces, that the Proceeds of such Duties should be distributed between the said Two Provinces in proportion to the Amount of Expences defrayed by each respectively towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of its Civil Government, and not in proportion to the several Consumption within either Province of the Articles upon which such Duties shall have been paid; be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Arbitrators to be appointed, from Time to Time, for the Purpose of establishing the Proportion which shall be paid to Upper Canada, of such Duties as now are, or hereafter may be imposed by Acts passed in the Province of Lower Canada, to receive the Claims in behalf of each Province with respect to its Proportion of Duties levied under the said Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, since the Expiration of the last Provincial Agreement hereinbefore established between the said two Provinces, or which may be either be levied under the Authority of the said Act, upon Goods and Commodities imported into Lower Canada, and to report the same, with the Evidence thereon, to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury for the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland for the Time being, in order that they may make such Orders respecting the Proportion in which the same shall be expended within each of the said Provinces respectively, for the Purpose mentioned in the said Act, as to them shall seem meet; Provided always nevertheless, that until such Order shall be made by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury as aforesaid, the Proceeds of such Duties shall be distributed in the same Proportion between the said two Provinces as the Duties levied under the Provincial Acts of the Province of Lower Canada within the same Period, subject nevertheless to be increased or diminished, as respect part of the said Provinces, by any subsequent Order of the said Lords Commissioners, exceeding the Period or which no such Order had before been made.

Duties imposed by Lower Canada to be two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, was intended for the common Benefit of His Majesty's Subjects residing within both of the new constituted Provinces, and not in any Manner to obstruct the Intercourse or prejudice the Trade to be carried on by the Inhabitants of any parts of the said late Province of Quebec with Great Britain, or with other Countries; and it has accordingly been made a Subject of mutual Stipulation between the said Two Provinces, in the several Agreements which have heretofore subsisted, that the Province of Upper Canada should not impose any Duties upon Articles imported from Lower Canada, but would permit and allow the Province of Lower Canada to impose such Duties as they might think fit, upon Articles imported into the said Province of Lower Canada; of which Duties a certain Proportion was by the said Agreements appointed to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada: And whereas in consequence of the Inconveniences arising from the Cessation of such Agreements as above recited, it has been found expedient to remedy the Evils now experienced in the Province of Upper Canada, and to guard against such as might in future arise from the Existence of an exclusive Control, by the Legislature of Lower Canada, over the Imports and Exports into and out of the Port of Quebec; and it is further expedient, in order to enable the said Province of Upper Canada to meet the necessary Charges upon its ordinary Revenue, and to provide with sufficient Certainty for the Support of its Civil Government, to establish such Controul as may prevent the Evils which have arisen or may arise from the Legislature of Lower Canada, suffering to expire unexpectedly, or repealing suddenly, and without affording to Upper Canada an Opportunity of Remonstrance, existing Duties, upon which the principal part of it Revenue, and the necessary Maintenance of its Government may depend; be it therefore enacted, That all and every the Duties which, at the Time of the Expiration of the last Agreement between the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, were payable under any Act or Acts of the Province of Lower Canada, on the Importation of any Goods, Wares, or Commodities into the said Province of Lower Canada (except such as may have been imposed for the Regulation of the Trade by Land or Inland Navigation, between the said Province and the United States of America,) shall be payable and shall be levied according to the Provisions contained in any such Acts until any Act or Acts for the repealing or altering the said Duties, or any Part thereof respectively, shall be passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of the said Province of Lower Canada, and until such Act or Acts, repealing or altering such Duties, shall, after a Copy thereof has been transmitted to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, for the Time being, in order that they may make such Observations upon the Proportion in which the same shall be expended within each of the said Provinces respectively, for the Purpose mentioned in the said Act, as to them shall seem meet; Provided always nevertheless, that until such Order shall be made by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury as aforesaid, the Proceeds of such Duties shall be distributed in the same Proportion between the said two Provinces as the Duties levied under the Provincial Acts of the Province of Lower Canada within the same Period, subject nevertheless to be increased or diminished, as respect part of the said Provinces, by any subsequent Order of the said Lords Commissioners, exceeding the Period or which no such Order had before been made.

Duties imposed by Lower Canada to be two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, was intended for the common Benefit of His Majesty's Subjects residing within both of the new constituted Provinces, and not in any Manner to obstruct the Intercourse or prejudice the Trade to be carried on by the Inhabitants of any parts of the said late Province of Quebec with Great Britain, or with other Countries; and it has accordingly been made a Subject of mutual Stipulation between the said Two Provinces, in the several Agreements which have heretofore subsisted, that the Province of Upper Canada should not impose any Duties upon Articles imported from Lower Canada, but would permit and allow the Province of Lower Canada to impose such Duties as they might think fit, upon Articles imported into the said Province of Lower Canada; of which Duties a certain Proportion was by the said Agreements appointed to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada: And whereas in consequence of the Inconveniences arising from the Cessation of such Agreements as above recited, it has been found expedient to remedy the Evils now experienced in the Province of Upper Canada, and to guard against such as might in future arise from the Existence of an exclusive Control, by the Legislature of Lower Canada, over the Imports and Exports into and out of the Port of Quebec; and it is further expedient, in order to enable the said Province of Upper Canada to meet the necessary Charges upon its ordinary Revenue, and to provide with sufficient Certainty for the Support of its Civil Government, to establish such Controul as may prevent the Evils which have arisen or may arise from the Legislature of Lower Canada, suffering to expire unexpectedly, or repealing suddenly, and without affording to Upper Canada an Opportunity of Remonstrance, existing Duties, upon which the principal part of it Revenue, and the necessary Maintenance of its Government may depend; be it therefore enacted, That all and every the Duties which, at the Time of the Expiration of the last Agreement between the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, were payable under any Act or Acts of the Province of Lower Canada, on the Importation of any Goods, Wares, or Commodities into the said Province of Lower Canada (except such as may have been imposed for the Regulation of the Trade by Land or Inland Navigation, between the said Province and the United States of America,) shall be payable and shall be levied according to the Provisions contained in any such Acts until any Act or Acts for the repealing or altering the said Duties, or any Part thereof respectively, shall be passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of the said Province of Lower Canada, and until such Act or Acts, repealing or altering such Duties, shall, after a Copy thereof has been transmitted to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, for the Time being, in order that they may make such Observations upon the Proportion in which the same shall be expended within each of the said Provinces respectively, for the Purpose mentioned in the said Act, as to them shall seem meet; Provided always nevertheless, that until such Order shall be made by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury as aforesaid, the Proceeds of such Duties shall be distributed in the same Proportion between the said two Provinces as the Duties levied under the Provincial Acts of the Province of Lower Canada within the same Period, subject nevertheless to be increased or diminished, as respect part of the said Provinces, by any subsequent Order of the said Lords Commissioners, exceeding the Period or which no such Order had before been made.

Lands held in Fief and Seigniory, on Petition of the Owners to His Majesty, may be exchanged for Lands in free and common Soccage.

XXIX. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passing of this Act, it shall be lawful for the Owners of any Lands in the said Provinces of Lower Canada, or either of them, in Fief and Seigniory, and having legal Power and Authority to alienate the same, to surrender the same into the Hands of His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, and to petition His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, to grant the same to the Petitioners, their Heirs and Assigns, in free and common Soccage, and that His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, may thereupon grant the same accordingly, by Letters Patent under the Great Seal of the said Provinces, to the Petitioners, their Heirs and Assigns, in free and common Soccage, to be held of His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, as of His Manor of East Greenwich, in the County of Kent, in free and common Soccage, subject nevertheless to such Rents, Services, Dues and Demands, as the same were before the Surrender thereof subject and liable to, or such other Rents, Services, Dues and Demands, as may be thereafter lawfully imposed upon the same by Competent Authority.

Treble Costs.

XXX. And be it further enacted, That in all Cases where Costs by Law are given to Defendants, the Defendants shall have Treble Costs, and shall give the like Remedy for the same as in Cases where Costs by Law are given to Defendants.

No Act of Legislature imposing Duties, Act, no Act of the Legislature of the Province of any additional or other Duties shall or Upper Canada may be imposed on Articles imported Lower Canada, shall or may in any respect be directly or indirectly affected, shall have the Force of Law until the same shall have been laid before the Imperial Parliament, as provided in certain cases by the said Act passed in the Thirty-first Year of His said late Majesty's Reign, and the Royal Assent thereto published by Proclamation in the said Province of Lower Canada, a Copy of such Act having, within One Month from the Time of presenting the same for the Royal Assent in the said Province, been transmitted by the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada: Provided always nevertheless, that it shall not be necessary to transmit any such Act to be laid before the Imperial Parliament, if, before the same shall have been presented for the Royal Assent within the said Province of Lower Canada, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the said Province of Upper Canada shall, by Address to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Upper Canada, pray that their Concurrence in the Imposition of the Duties intended to be imposed by such Act may be signified to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the said Province of Lower Canada.

Fief and Seigniory, Lands within the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada holden in Fief and Seigniory can legally be changed; Act.

XXXI. And whereas Doubts have been entertained whether Tenures of per and Lower Canada holden in Fief and Seigniory can legally be changed; And whereas it may materially tend to the Improvement of such Lands, and to the general Advantage of the said Provinces, that such Tenures may henceforth be changed in manner hereinafter mentioned: Be it therefore further enacted and declared, That if any Person or Persons holding any Lands in the said Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, or either of them, in Fief and Seigniory, and having legal Power and Authority to alienate the same, shall at any Time from and after Commencement of this Act, surrender the same into the Hands of His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, and shall by Petition to His Majesty, or to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of the Province in which the Lands so holden shall be situated, set forth that he, she, or they is or are desirous of holding the same in free and common Soccage, such Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of such Province, shall cause a fresh Grant to be made to such Person or Persons of such Lands to be holden in free and common Soccage, in like Manner as Lands are now holden in free and common Soccage in that part of Great Britain called England; subject nevertheless to Payment to His Majesty, by such Grantee or Grantees, of such Sum or Sums of Money as may for a Commutation for the Fines and other Dues which would have been payable to His Majesty under the original Tenures, and to such Conditions as to His Majesty, or to the said Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government as aforesaid, shall seem just and reasonable: Provided always, that on any such fresh Grant being made as aforesaid, no all Itonant or Appropriation of Lands for the Support or Maintenance of a Protestant Clergy shall be necessary; but every such fresh Grant shall be valid and effectual without any Specification of Lands for the Purpose aforesaid; any Law or Statute to the contrary thereof in anywise notwithstanding.

XXXII. And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful for His said Majesty, His Heirs and Successors, to commute with any Person holding Lands at Cens et Rentes in any Censive or Fief of His said Majesty within either of the said Provinces, and such Person may obtain a Release from His Majesty of all feudal Rights arising by reason of such Tenure, and receive a Grant from His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, in free and common Soccage, upon Payment to His Majesty of such Sum of Money as His Majesty, His Heirs or Successors, may deem to be just and reasonable, by reason of the Release and Grant aforesaid; and all such Sums of Money as shall be paid upon any Commutations made by virtue of this Act shall be applied towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of the Civil Government of the said Province.

Goods, Wares, and Commodities imported into Lower Canada, shall be subject to the Payment of such Duties as are by the said Act directed to be applied, under the Authority of the Lord High Treasurer, or Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, in making a more certain and adequate Provision towards defraying the Expence of the Administration of Justice, and the Support of the Civil Government in the said Province of Quebec; and since the Division of the said Province of Quebec into the Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, it has been considered, on behalf of the said Provinces, that the Proceeds of such Duties should be distributed between the said Two Provinces in proportion to the Amount of Expences defrayed by each respectively towards the Administration of Justice and the Support of its Civil Government, and not in proportion to the several Consumption within either Province of the Articles upon which such Duties shall have been paid; be it therefore enacted, That it shall be lawful for the Arbitrators to be appointed, from Time to Time, for the Purpose of establishing the Proportion which shall be paid to Upper Canada, of such Duties as now are, or hereafter may be imposed by Acts passed in the Province of Lower Canada, to receive the Claims in behalf of each Province with respect to its Proportion of Duties levied under the said Act passed in the Fourteenth Scows, Rafts, Cribs, and other Craft belonging to any of His Majesty's Subjects, and coming from the Province of Upper Canada into the Province of Lower Canada, not laden with the Productions of any Foreign Country, shall be allowed freely to pass into and through the said Province, and shall not be subject to any Rate, Tax, Duty, or Imposition, other than any Charge which may now exist for Pilotage, or which may now be established for Toll on any Lock or other Work now actually erected on the navigable Waters thereof; any Law, Statute, or Usage of the Province of Lower Canada to the contrary notwithstanding; and that the Expence of improving the Navigation of the Waters of the River Saint Lawrence shall in future be defrayed by such Measures and in such proportions as the Arbitrators to be appointed under the provisions of this Act shall determine, upon the prayer of either Province: Provided always, that no such Determination shall be carried into effect until sanctioned and enacted by the Legislatures of both of the said Provinces.

Duties not to be increased or diminished, as respect part of the said Provinces, by any subsequent Order of the said Lords Commissioners, exceeding the Period or which no such Order had before been made.

XXVIII. And whereas the Division of the Province of Quebec, into the Two Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, was intended for the common Benefit of His Majesty's Subjects residing within both of the new constituted Provinces, and not in any Manner to obstruct the Intercourse or prejudice the Trade to be carried on by the Inhabitants of any parts of the said late Province of Quebec with Great Britain, or with other Countries; and it has accordingly been made a Subject of mutual Stipulation between the said Two Provinces, in the several Agreements which have heretofore subsisted, that the Province of Upper Canada should not impose any Duties upon Articles imported from Lower Canada, but would permit and allow the Province of Lower Canada to impose such Duties as they might think fit, upon Articles imported into the said Province of Lower Canada; of which Duties a certain Proportion was by the said Agreements appointed to be paid to the Province of Upper Canada: And whereas in consequence of the Inconveniences arising from the Cessation of such Agreements as above recited, it has been found expedient to remedy the Evils now experienced in the Province of Upper Canada, and to guard against such as might in future arise from the Existence of an exclusive Control, by the Legislature of Lower Canada, over the Imports and Exports into and out of the Port of Quebec; and it is further expedient, in order to enable the said Province of Upper Canada to meet the necessary Charges upon its ordinary Revenue, and to provide with sufficient Certainty for the Support of its Civil Government, to establish such Controul as may prevent the Evils which have arisen or may arise from the Legislature of Lower Canada, suffering to expire unexpectedly, or repealing suddenly, and without affording to Upper Canada an Opportunity of Remonstrance, existing Duties, upon which the principal part of it Revenue, and the necessary Maintenance of its Government may depend; be it therefore enacted, That all and every the Duties which, at the Time of the Expiration of the last Agreement between the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, were payable under any Act or Acts of the Province of Lower Canada, on the Importation of any Goods, Wares, or Commodities into the said Province of Lower Canada (except such as may have been imposed for the Regulation of the Trade by Land or Inland Navigation, between the said Province and the United States of America,) shall be payable and shall be levied according to the Provisions contained in any such Acts until any Act or Acts for the repealing or altering the said Duties, or any Part thereof respectively, shall be passed by the Legislative Council and Assembly of the said Province of Lower Canada, and until such Act or Acts, repealing or altering such Duties, shall, after a Copy thereof has been transmitted to the Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person Administering the Government of the Province of Upper Canada, for the Time being, in order that they may make such Observations upon the Proportion in which the same shall be expended within each of the said Provinces respectively, for the Purpose mentioned in the said Act, as to them shall seem meet; Provided always nevertheless, that until such Order shall be made by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury as aforesaid, the Proceeds of such Duties shall be distributed in the same Proportion between the said two Provinces as the Duties levied under the Provincial Acts of the Province of Lower Canada within the same Period, subject nevertheless to be increased or diminished, as respect part of the said Provinces, by any subsequent Order of the said Lords Commissioners, exceeding the Period or which no such Order had before been made.

XXXIII. And be it further enacted, That if any Person or persons shall be sued or prosecuted for any thing done or to be done in pursuance of this Act, such Person or Persons may plead the General Issue, and give this Act and the special Matter in Evidence; and if the Plaintiff or Plaintiffs, Prosecutor or Prosecutors, shall become non-suit, or forbear the Prosecution, or discontinue his, her, or their Action, or if a Verdict shall pass against him, her, or them, the Defendants shall have Treble Costs, and shall give the like Remedy for the same as in Cases where Costs by Law are given to Defendants.

Editorial Miscellany.

English papers of so late a date as the 16th Sept. have arrived at New York.—By these we have the satisfactory intelligence that Mr CASSING has been appointed the successor of the late much lamented Lord LONDONDERRY in the Cabinet. When we consider the long experience of this Gentleman, who was brought up in the school of the Great PITT (to whom he acted for some time as private secretary,)—his erudition; knowledge of business; eloquence; and various and splendid talents; we have good reason to rejoice, and to congratulate our fellow countrymen on the appointment;—an appointment that will preserve her Majesty's Councils, and do away with the necessity of any material change, or removal, amongst the higher Officers of Government.

The extraordinary answer of the Dutch Government to an application from Lloyd's, respecting the wreck of the Lutine frigate, to be seen in our last paper of this day, puts us in mind of a familiar saying of the illustrious PITT, than whom no one ever had a clearer insight into national, or individual character,—he was accustomed to mark that "In Dutchman's creed" was the Dutchman's creed" to which perhaps, we may justly add, Individual aggrandizement at any cost! What contemptible rubbish, and meanness, is displayed in this same answer! Mynheers, no doubt, would run up the treasure, and appropriate to his own use, but other people are not quite so credulous as for every thing, they will even confer trust his cupidity will be treated by some such and kind manner as to induce him well to search of them; and, like Sancho Panza, hang in gaminal suspense by the seat of his breeches, when, by putting out their feet, they might find a firm bottom to stand upon!

So many Noblemen and Gentlemen of Ireland having resolved upon a Commutation of Tythes, gives us hope that a permanent remedy will be at length found for evils that threatened a continual increase, rather than a diminution.

It will be seen by a paragraph from a French newspaper, that the fourth battle-ring of the French, against the English, Officers, has not yet subsided. Another forward young gentleman, one M. Pinac, has paid dearly for his rashly by running "immediately, unmanned," with all his faculties collected, to a Tribunal that can admit neither party, nor personal superiorities, and before which the plea of honour must be as the vapour of one breath of understanding; and, as "a bare bodkin" by the Selections from British Papers.

Extraordinary Case.—Richard Hays, a laboring man, 45 years of age was charged with having broken into the house of Thomas Fishwick, at Heapy, near Chorley, and stolen several articles of wearing apparel.—In the course of this trial circumstances of a most extraordinary nature were denied in evidence. The principal witness against the prisoner was an accomplice named Lettice Smith, a very pretty looking girl of 18, who it appeared, had been seduced by the prisoner, and had been living with him in a state of adultry (ha being a married man and having a family.) She stated that, on the 13th day of May last, the prisoner came to her at Blackburn, where she was then living with her mother, and told her he had a job for her to do. She went off with him, and he took her to the house of the prosecutor, with whom she had previously lived as servant. Here he took out a window and put her into the house. At his request she opened the door and let him in, and he stole the articles mentioned in the indictment. These were afterwards pledged by her at Blackburn, under the direction of the prisoner. She was cross-examined by Mr Coltman for the prisoner, and stated that she herself gave information of the robbery to the prosecutor, on the 10th of August. She would have given earlier information, but the prisoner had kept her a long time in a wood, tied to a tree!—This strange and incredible assertion, of course, caused further questions to be put to her, which elicited the following very extraordinary account:—She stated, that, some time after the robbery, she became uneasy in her mind, on account of the robbery, and the prisoner being apprehensive that she would disclose it, erected a small hut of sods and sticks in a wood called Lower Nabb Wood, about two miles from Chorley, and 200 yards from his own house. To this place he decoyed the unfortunate girl, and tied a rope round her middle, and fastened her to a tree, against which the hut was built. In this place he kept her, according to her own account (which was corroborated by other evidence) for more than a month.—The place was so low that she could not stand up, and she had only some old racks and a little straw to lie upon.—The prisoner visited her occasionally during the night, and brought her scanty supplies of food; but she was occasionally two days without sustenance. He used to untie her when he came; and one night, whilst she was thus at liberty, she fell asleep, and she took the opportunity to make her escape. She went to the prosecutor's house and told him what had befallen her, and he went with other persons to search for the hut in the spot to which she directed him. The prisoner, however, had demolished it in the mean time; but they found traces of its existence. The mother of the girl proved that she was decoyed away by the prisoner on the 13th of May. She afterwards saw her occasionally for a few weeks. She then disappeared; and for seven weeks before the 10th of August, she had never heard of her, and did not at all know where she was. When she returned home, she was in a dreadful state of emaciation, and covered with sores, and her clothes were much soiled and in a very tattered condition. In short, to use the mother's expression, it would have pitied any one to look upon her. The girl gave her evidence with remarkable clearness and propriety; and her account, extraordinary as it was, commanded the full belief of the court. The prisoner, in his defence, merely said that he had nothing to do with the robbery. He call d no witnesses, and the Jury without hesitation, found him guilty.—Death.

Child Stealing.—An Exeter paper says, "Horrible as the thought is, we are assured, from well informed quarter, that there are strong grounds for suspecting that children stolen in the country have been deliberately tied to death, packed up in boxes, sent to London, and sold to anatomists."

Discovery of the La Lutine Frigate.—Intelligence has been lately received from Ireland, that La Lutine Frigate, of 32 guns, which was cast away on the outward bank of the Fly Island passage, in the year 1799, has been lately discovered there, buried in the sands, but whole and entire; and it is considered extremely probable that the immense treasure lost in the ship may still be recovered. La Lutine, commanded by Captain Skynner, had been captured from the French in the early part of the Revolutionary War, and was lost on the 9th of October, 1799. She had, on the same morning, sailed from Yarmouth Roads, with an immense quantity of treasure, and had on board several passengers; but a strong ke tide, rendered every effort of Captain Skynner to avoid the threatened danger unavailable, and it was alike impossible, during the night to receive any assistance, either from the Arrow, Capt. Fornlock, which was in company, or the shore, from whence several schuyts were in readiness to go to her. When the dawn broke, La Lutine was in vain looked for; she had gone to pieces, as was supposed, and all on board perished, except two men, who were picked up, one of whom died, from the fatigue he had encountered, the survivor, was Mr. Schabracq, a notary public. In the annals of naval history there has very rarely been found a loss attended with so much calamity, both of a public and private nature. The returns from the Bullion Office made the whole amount to 600,000 dollars, about £140,000 sterling, in specie, which had been shipped by individual merchants in this country, for the relief of different commercial houses in Hamburgh; there were also several merchants on board, at the time of the disaster. Should the hope of this treasure being recovered be realised, it will be a most fortunate circumstance to the underwriters.

LONDON, August 26.

The Lutine Frigate.—An answer has been received by the Underwriters at Lloyd's Coffee House, from the Dutch Government, which has excited some surprise. It regards the Lutine frigate, which has been stated in the newspapers, was long since wrecked on the coast of Holland, with half a million of specie on board, intended for Prussia. Not a soul survived, nor was it known what had become of the frigate, until recently, when she was found buried in the sand on the Dutch coast. The British Government, which sent the specie as a subsidy to Prusia, insured at Lloyd's, and in due course received the money on proof of the loss. The insurers, therefore, or such of them as are alive, applied a short time since to the Dutch Government, for permission to take the specie out of the wreck of the Lutine. The answer obtained this day, though very courteous, is by no means satisfactory upon any account, it is this—that as the frigate was wrecked pending a war with England, the property of course became Dutch, and no restoration can therefore be made. Had the disaster occurred while peace existed the Dutch Government would have been most ready to afford every facility for the recovery of the specie from the wreck.

A letter from Edinburgh of the 19th inst. says—"Among the various reports in circulation here, respecting the immediate cause which produced so fatal an effect on the Marquis of Londonderry's mind, as led him to destroy himself, as coming from good authority, it is said, 'that his Majesty was always opposed to coming to Scotland, and stood out against the remonstrances of his Ministers almost to the very last moment. Being, however, extremely desirous of paying another visit to the Continent, in a style more suited to his rank than the former one, he repeatedly urged the Earl of Liverpool and the Marquis of Londonderry to provide him with the necessary funds. But the Premier was not to be moved, and his Noble Colleague was no less intractable. They both peremptorily refused to call on the public for money to defray the expences of the proposed visit, and by doing so, it is said they both equally excited the displeasure of his Majesty.' The report adds, 'that the Marquis of Londonderry was particularly decisive in the terms of his refusal—so much so, that when the King pressed him on the subject, the noble Secretary replied, "I must now take leave to tell your Majesty, that it cannot be done—the thing is impossible." This answer was not to be forgotten; his Majesty finding at last that Scotland and not the Continent must be his destination, resolved, it is said, to punish the Minister, by forbidding him to accompany him to the North."

Colbett, in reviewing the late session of Parliament, says, there has appeared, in the conduct of the government, for some time past, a disposition to conciliate, a disposition by which it may gain, and by which it cannot lose. By mild and humane measures it will soften, if not subdue its honest foes; its foes of another description it never need care a straw about. The country is essentially tranquil. The ministers are better off than they were. We should on the part of the common people, say that we are all perfectly satisfied, if the tax on salt and malt were wholly taken off.

Among the preparations for the late Bartholemew Fair, a ludicrous scene took place. As one of the itinerant showmen was passing through Long lane to Smithfield, the axletree of his caravan broke, and discharged its cargo in the street. Several monkeys were instantly seen running in different directions, one of which took refuge in a cook's shop, to the no small discomfiture of the master cook and his hungry guests. Pug, without waiting to examine the bill of fare, placed himself by a dish of ready sliced plum pudding and sans ceremonie, helped himself, and all remonstrance on the part of the cook could not persuade him to relinquish his delicious repast, until his master, by force of arms, dislodged him from the luxurious banquet.

Lord Kennedy has gained his bet, (we believe, of 1500 guineas) that he would ride 150 miles, walk ten miles, shoot forty brace of grouse, and walk ten miles back, all in twenty-four hours, which he performed in twenty-one hours, and shot forty-nine brace, being nine brace more than his number, and in three hours less time.—Edin. Observer.

Accounts have been received at Lloyds, stating that the American squadron had received peremptory orders from the Spanish Government, to remove their depot of Naval Stores from the island of MINORCA.

Accounts state that the Pope had recovered his wonted health.

NOTICES OF CHIEFS AND CLANS.

The "invasion of the Celts" (as some term it) upon the present happy occasion, having made no small noise in Edinburgh, we have been at some pains to analyze the materials of the plaided and plumed army which occupy our streets and highest places; and we submit the following detailed account of the various members of this Tartan confederacy:—

1. There are the Breadalbane men, above fifty, armed with swords, under the Earl of Breadalbane; their march, "The Campbells are coming." Their dress is dark green; badge, a yellow plume in the bonnet, and a crest on the right arm.

2. The Celtic Society, under the Duke of Argyll; with Gen. Graham Stirling, Colonel David Stewart, Macleod of Macleod, Macdougal of Lorn, &c. as Captains. A body of about eighty or a hundred Highlanders and Amateurs, associated for encouraging and reviving the national dress and customs of the mountains, and numbering many men of rank and consequence. In general, they are fully and even superbly dressed and arrayed in the belted plaid, each in his own clan tartan, which distinction gives a rich and half barbaric effect to their appearance. Their grenadiers carry battle-axes and targets, and are headed by Captain Mackenzie, of Guinard, whose stately, and at the same time handsome and active figure, realizes the idea of a complete Highland soldier. Here and there a white knee betrays the Southron or Lowlander—in most the limb is as dark as that of Gilhaie dhu (Black Knee) himself.

3. Strathfillan Society; associated, like the former, for the purpose of pursuing Highland sports and games, also as a Benefit Society. They wear various tartans, as the Celtic Society, and are in general well basked and armed. Leaders—Stewart of Ardvorlich and Grahame of Orth.

4. Clan Macgregor, under their Chief, Sir Evan Mac Gregor, whom we rejoiced to see completely recovered of the wounds he had sustained in India. The tartan of his clansmen is red, with a branch of fir in the bonnet. They are gentlemen and kernes, about thirty in number; and we saw with particular interest this clan, whose sufferings and proscriptions are so well known, come forth so gallantly to attend the Crown of Scotland, "Which still they love because their fathers war."

5. Glengarry has a small, but select following; twelve gentlemen of his house, amongst whom we noticed the gallant Colonel Macdonell, brother of the Chief, and famous for his achievements at the defence of Hougemont, where, assisted only by a Serjeant of the Guards, he slew or drove back six of the French grenadiers, who had forced their way into the Court-yard. Also we saw Barrisdale, Scotus, Major Macdonell, and other Cadets of this ancient line. Each had a gillie in attendance—tall, raw-boned, swarthy fellows, who, besides the sword and target, carried guns of a portentous length. We believe they are chiefly the foresters of the Chieftain; and indeed they look as if they had done nothing all their lives but lived by hunting, and slept in the woods.

6. The Marchioness of Stafford has sent up fifty men from Dunrobin. They came to attend on her Ladyship's second son, Lord Francis Leveson Gower, who carries the Sceptre, by Royal permission, as representing his mother. They wear the plaid, scarf fashion, and the trews; which, though perhaps as ancient a garb, has not quite such a military effect as the belted plaid. The Sutherland men have swords, without any other weapon. It has been disputed whether this great Lady's following has been diminished by the late improvements on her Highland estate. The following accurate statement will enable the reader to judge. Upon the first intimation that men were wanted, two hundred volunteered within six hours; and in the course of the next day, a thousand came down to the castle, all eager for the expedition.

7. Lady Gwydyr has produced a very gallant band of Drummonds, about thirty we think; for equipments, in the hurry, could be found for no more, though many were assembled. They wear sword and target, have a holly-bough in their cap, the ancient badge of their tribe, and are as smart mountaineers as the eye could wish to look on.

The Dukes of Athol and Gordon, Macleod, Lord Fife, Mrs. Farquharson of Invercauld, and other High Chiefs, off red, we understand, to contribute to this martial attendance; and it would have been, no doubt, an easy thing to have rendered it twenty-fold more numerous. This was, however, declined, for various reasons; and, in particular, because the two or three hundred men already assembled formed a sufficient specimen of readiness of the Highlanders, their martial appearance, and their attachment to their chiefs.

To legalise the meeting of so many of the clans, they were all sworn in to act as guards to the Lord High Constable and Knight Marischal, in discharge of their high offices; and nothing could be more orderly than the conduct of these military strangers. Sir Walter Scott, by universal consent, acted as Adjutant General to these gallant mountaineers.

The men in Edinburgh get it into their heads that the King sometimes appeared incognito; and on one occasion, a wag made them believe that His Majesty was actually passing on foot across the North Bridge. A tall portly man, dressed in a brown surtout, was pointed out as the Sovereign, and immediately such a crowd collected around the astonished pedestrian that he could neither advance nor retreat—neither move to the right nor left. At first the man supposed they took him for a sharper in place of a king, but understanding at last the meaning of their pantdits, he appeared distressed and embarrassed beyond measure. Often he tried to speak, and as often his voice was drowned in a fresh huzza. At length, while pinned up in a corner, he exclaimed, "I beseech you, Gentlemen, that you will let me alone. You—you were never more mistaken in your lives. (Huzza, huzza, huzza.) Upon my honor, Gentlemen, I am no King. I—I am a plain man like yourselves. I'm not even a Knight or Baronet." (Loud laughter.) After this candid confession, the joke was smoked, and the prisoner set at liberty.

It gives us the greatest pleasure to present to our readers the following tribute which His Majesty pays to the people of Scotland:—

Edinburgh, August 29, 1822.

MY LORDS,

I have had the honor of receiving the King's commands to signify to your Lordships His Majesty's unqualified approbation of all the arrangements which have been made preparatory to His Majesty's reception, and during his stay in Scotland.

His Majesty is desirous of returning his particular acknowledgments to the several Departments of the State, to the local Authorities, and to those Societies and Institutions which have so zealously co-operated with them, in paying every mark of respect and attention to his Majesty, and in promoting that perfect order, regularity, and success, with which every ceremony has been conducted.

His Majesty commands me to add, that his residence in Scotland has proved to him a source of unalloyed satisfaction. It has confirmed every favorable impression which he previously entertained of the character and habits of the people, and it has afforded to him, that which must ever constitute his chief gratification, the opportunity of witnessing the happiness of his subjects, and of receiving the most convincing proofs of their faithful attachment and loyalty.

He takes leave of Scotland with the most cordial feelings of affection towards her people, and with the deepest anxiety to promote their welfare.

I have the honor to be, with great truth and regard, my Lords, your Lordships' most obedient and faithful servant,

(Signed) ROBERT PEEL.

IRELAND.

City of London Tavern, August 28th, 1822.

The Committee have great satisfaction in being able to announce that the distress of scarcity in Ireland, which at first presented such an alarming appearance, has yielded to British beneficence, and the exertions made to relieve it.

The apprehensions of famine gradually diminished, and are now ended by the prospect of an early, and abundant harvest.

Among the effects of the kindness shewn to the distressed Peasantry, are found numerous testimonies of the most lively gratitude and sense of benefit.

The Committee are anxious, as far as they may be enabled, to alleviate the distress which must be felt in the ensuing winter, from the general want of the clothing absolutely necessary for health and existence.

An early attention to this mode of relief is highly desirable, that it may reach the distressed Districts in Ireland, for distribution in the months of October and November.

Amount of Subscriptions already Advertised £266,132 1 6.

Tithes of Ireland.—The Noblemen and Gentlemen of Ireland, who have signed resolutions in favour of the commutation of tithes, consist of 68 peers, and as many commoners. The resolutions are as follows:—"Resolved, That, for the tranquility and happiness of Ireland, it is expedient to substitute, for the present precarious and vexatious mode of supporting the Clergy of the established Church, a full and liberal equivalent fairly assessed and levied. That we are the more inclined to express this our opinion because we are satisfied that it is essential to the stability, and independence and dignity of the established Church, and to the general interests of the country."

FRANCE.

The French papers appear to be almost exclusively occupied with the reports of the trials going on at Paris and Poictiers of the persons charged with a conspiracy against the government. General Berton has been denied the privilege of appointing his own counsel; and from the nature of the evidence brought forward in his case, it appeared that the prosecutors were more anxious to implicate La Fayette, Benjamin Constant, and other leaders of the liberal party, than to convict the accused.

A Society of the Carbonari is said recently to have been discovered at Paris, with the object of overturning the existing government.

A letter in the Journal des Debats, dated Bagnères, July 20, states as follows:—"A deplorable event has just taken place in this town. The unfortunate young Pinac was interred this day, having been killed in a duel with an Englishman. The affair did not arise from any personal quarrel. The Englishman being in the reading room of Frescati, happened to write on the margin of a pamphlet respecting the battle of Toulouse, that every thing in it was false; that Lord Wellington had gained a complete victory, and that our (the French) army was indebted to his generosity for not having been put to the sword." M. Pinac, a young officer, not in actual service, who was first made acquainted with this circumstance, called on him to account for having written these words. The Englishman did all they could to prevent the duel, but their precaution became useless; and Pinac, having received a ball in his belly died some hours afterwards.

French Voyage of Discovery.—The Coquille corvette, commanded by M. Duperry, Lieut. de Vaisseau, the fitting out of which has occupied some months at Toulon, sailed from that port on the 11th inst. She is about to undertake a voyage from which results interesting to the progress of geography and physical science may be expected. The Coquille will first call for the Cape of Good Hope. She will afterwards proceed to the Great Archipelago of Asia, several parts of which she will explore. She will likewise visit the points of the west coast of New Holland, which were observed towards the end of the last century and the com-commencement of the present, by Rear Admiral Entrecasteaux and Captain Baudin; and after putting into some of the islands of the Pacific Ocean, discovered by Cook and Bougainville, she will return to France by doubling Cape Horn. M. Duperrey is to avail himself of all the favourable circumstances which this long voyage may present, and make different observations relative to the configuration of the globe, the inclination of the needle, &c. Several medical men of the Academy of Sciences and the Observatory of Longitudes have manifested their zeal in communicating to him instructions for that purpose. Nothing which could prepare for the success of this expedition has been neglected. The corvette has been fitted out with parental care. The crew consists of picked seamen. Letters of recommendation were furnished to the commanders of such Foreign Establishments as the Coquille may visit.—Bath Weekly Messenger.

Horrible Murder.—A Paris paper of August 14, contains the following account of a murder (committed as it is supposed, by a priest) from a Mayor of the Commune where the crime took place.

"On Sunday, May 5, 1822, in the afternoon, M. , ecclesiastic, of the age of 28, Cure of Cruet-and-Isere, went to the house of a young woman, whose tragical end I am induced to lay before the public. (Marie Germ, whose maiden name was Chorin-Et, and remained there about two hours. This woman, who was very pious, was enceinte, having on the next day one month to Veury, a neighbouring parish, where the first communion of children was to take place, and it appears that the Cure appointed her to meet her on that occasion in the evening. She was seen entering the church about six in the evening; she went in alone, and was not seen to come out.

"The husband of this unfortunate woman went at nine o'clock to seek her at the houses of several of her relations; he went with a female cousin of his wife to the parsonage house, contiguous to the church. The Cure, who made them wait a few instants, said, at first, he had not seen her; then recollecting himself, added, he had seen her devoutly praying, but without speaking to her. While he spoke, the Cure walked out from the parsonage, as if he feared they might come in. The Cure afterwards held the same language to different persons, to others he said, that not having found this female in a decent dress enough, he had declined hearing her confession. The Wednesday, it must be remarked, was a working day.

"About half past four o'clock in the morning, an inhabitant of the town, descending towards the plain by a path not frequented at night, perceived a hole cut in the iron rail, and about 200 yards from the parsonage, bound in abundance, a pen-knife stuck in the ground, and a stone, about six metres long, both bloody. In the same place were found bits of flesh, and some fragments of bone. Traces of blood led to other persons to the bank of the Isere, where the neck-kerchief of the unfortunate woman was recognized, without doubt placed there to give rise to the idea that she had drowned herself. The idea of assassination occurred to no one in a country which, within the memory of man, had not been stained by any crime. Suicide was thought of. It was imagined contrary to all probability that, after having stabbed herself with the knife, which was afterwards recognized as not belonging to her, she had preserved strength enough to go and throw herself into the Isere. It is 900 paces from the place where the knife was found to the bank of the Isere, where the neck-kerchief was. The despair of the woman was explained by the great rigor of the Cure in confession; and it was imagined, that after having been refused absolution, she had destroyed herself. The death was said to be the work of the Devil, and credulity and superstition propagated the story. On the 16th of the same month, however, the character of the terrible was changed, when some shepherds discovered the neck kerchief was found, the thigh and the leg of the victim. On the Thursday following, the day of the Ascension, the bust was found, about six leagues below St. Quentin. The identity was established.

"It appears hence certain, that the body of the victim was carried whole by the assassin to the place where the rope and knife were found, and cut he there dismembered the body! On Friday, May 17, about ten in the morning, the gendarmerie came to St. Quentin, and went to the parsonage to make investigations. Almost immediately after the departure of the gendarmes, the Cure went off himself, and the same day gained Les Eschets, a frontier of Savoy. He was arrested a few days after, and conducted to the prison of Chambery, where he remains detained. No other inhabitants of St. Quentin has left it since May 8. It could enter into other details—speak of groans heard the evening of the same day in the neighborhood of the church, but the procedure will undoubtedly dissipate the darkness in which crime would envelope itself.

(Signed) DAVID, Mayor."

"We are somewhat surprised (says the Courier Francais) at learning that a man accused of so execrable a crime has not yet been delivered up. The Piedmontese Government made no difficulty in giving up Didier, accused of a political conspiracy. It thought itself accused of murder should appear less dangerous than those cast forth by our sad civil dissensions?"

SPAIN

The accounts from Madrid are to the 27th August. At the first interview between the new ministers of Foreign Affairs, and the Foreign Ambassadors, the Spanish Minister called on them to pronounce frankly the relations they propose to maintain with Spain under her present constitution; and those who were not prepared to give an unequivocal assurance of their friendly disposition, were informed that they might have their passports without a moment's delay.

The result of the proceedings respecting the occurrences in the palace on the 30th July had been published. It was clearly proved that stones were thrown at the sentinels from the windows or balconies of the palace, but no proof could be obtained of the persons or persons who were guilty of the act. The statement closes with a recommendation to his Majesty to take the most energetic means to prevent a repetition of this offence towards the National Militia.

The Queen was extremely ill from continued nervous attacks.—The King appears to be a captive in his palace. The trials of the officers of the royal guard, charged with carrying arms against the constitution, are in progress. One of them, Lieut. Griffin, has been found guilty, and condemned to death.

A treaty of commerce between Spain and England was confidently spoken of.—There is a rumor of a projected union of the kingdoms of Spain and Portugal, the sovereignty, at the death of Ferdinand, to be conferred on the house of Braganza.

GREECE AND TURKEY

From the Courier of September 6.

We have received a Flanders Mail this morning, bringing Brussels papers to the 3d instant. They contain a letter from Corfu, dated July 25, which relates, how truly we know not, shocking, but mutual cruelties perpetrated by the Greeks and Turks. They seem to be rivalling each other in barbarity. It would be idle to contend that the Greeks only retaliate injuries heaped upon themselves, for this very retaliation becomes a motive for fresh vengeance on the part of the Turks; and thus the two belligerents may continue to move in a circle of slaughter and blood. Besides, when the Morning Chronicle, that paragon of orthodoxy and piety, calls upon us to support the Greek cause, as a Christian cause, it is to be lamented that we find so little of Christianity in its conduct.

The following are extracts:—

"CORFU, July 28.

"The accounts from the Continent of the 16th of this month, inform us that a post of 30 Frenchmen, encamped in the village of Pera, near Arta, was surprised by the Turks. They were taken to Arta, where the barbarians cut off their ears and noses, and put out their eyes, and sent them back in this condition to the camp of the Greeks; which inflamed with anger at this affair, fell upon the Mahometans, and retaliated, by cutting in pieces, 340 prisoners who fell into their hands.

"After the taking of Athens, the Greeks, having learnt the massacres at Scio, retaliated by massacring the Turks. Two French vessels succeeded in saving about 300 Musselmen women. It is affecting, that amidst so many instances of horrible barbarity, perseverance, and ingenuity, humanity should have to deplore excesses, of which Christians should never be guilty.

"It is affirmed, that the accounts of the Turkish people, the Greeks were ordered by the consuls of foreign Generals of distinction who came from Corinth. This affair, which happened at the time of the taking of Athens, was known to the whole of the Turkish people. You know how they treated the dead of the Patriarch, their cruelties are of long standing. In August, 1821, when KALAVOS of Thessalonica was executed, that dead Jew passing near his dead body, amused himself by pulling out his eyes. A Turk that was passing, and who had no part with the deceased, shot the Jew dead. When the Bishop of Kitro was killed and thrown into the streets, the Jews put a stick into his mouth, to represent a pipe, and tore the flesh off from his head as they passed along. LIBERAKIS, an enlightened ecclesiastic, has saved the Turks made prisoners at Athens, though they had massacred all the Greeks in the citadel, and thrown their mangled remains over the wall. The same has occurred at Lavadia.

Victory at Thermopylæ.—During the battle, Greek women, leading with them boys of ten years of age, who followed the example of their mothers, hurled down stones on the Turks from the tops of the mountains. In general, the Hellenic fought with enthusiasm, great almost beyond example. Their cry was 'Death to the Barbarians. Vengeance, our Brethren were massacred at Scio.' Young Bozzaris, the modern hero of Thermopylæ, in a devotion to his country forfeited his life. His corpse was transported to Corinth, with the greatest pomp; 1,000 women, preceded by 180 priests, accompanied the procession. There are preparing in that city to pay him the greatest honors.
