Diet Debate (R)
Experts are warning that if North Americans don't get their weight under control, life expectancy may actually decline for the first time in history. But the reality is that only 5% of those who diet manage to successfully keep the weight off. Debating this issue are Dr. David Katz, the director of medical studies in public health at Yale University and author of the "The Way to Eat." Dr. Eric Grief, a family doctor representing the Dr. Bernstein diet, Rick Gallop, author of the best selling Canadian Diet book, "The GI Index," and Sandy Naiman, a senior writer for the Toronto Sun, who has tried dozens of fad diets with little success.

Chronic Pain
As more Canadians continue to live well into their 80s, chronic pain is becoming a top medical complaint. But contrary to popular opinion, chronic pain is not inevitable, and critics say our medical system labels pain as a low priority. Debating the issue are Dr. Peter Rothbart a chronic pain specialist, Dr. Allan Gordon, director of the Wasser Pain Clinic at Mount Sinai Hospital in Toronto, Dr. Lawrence Ballon a psychiatrist specializing in the treatment of chronic pain, and Marni Jackson, author of "Pain, The Science and Culture of Why We Hurt".
