Sorry for the delay. Can send below along.

Patrick Brown and the Conservatives are choosing once again to mislead Ontarians about our energy sector. But it should come as no surprise that they would continue to distract from themselves as well. Not only do they have no plan of their own, they have also admitted that they may not share any policy ideas with Ontarians until as late as 2018. Worse, they actually voted against our government's Fair Hydro Plan, which is providing a 25 per cent reduction on average to all residential customers across the province

Patrick Brown's visit to Sault Ste. Marie showed us that once again the Conservatives don't fully understand Ontario's energy system either. One advantage of the clean, reliable, and flexible system we have built is that we are able to procure energy on as needed basis, using only the electricity that can be produced most cheaply at that time. This is key – any time a generator is not producing electricity, it is because there were cheaper options available at that time. Apparently, Patrick Brown thinks we should be running these generators anyway.

Think we can use the statement from the other day. Thoughts?
