Video Hearing Pilot

- Goals:
 - Test video technology in the hearing room
 - Test the consumer experience in accessing and participating in a video hearing
 - Identify whether/what additional steps or changes to existing processes might be needed
 - Document lessons learned, protocols etc. for future video hearings

(Mock) Video Hearing Pilot

- Opted for a mock hearing
- Planned OEB's online consumer panel as a live consumer audience
- Relied on many of you to make it happen
- Developed fact pattern, evidence and other supporting documents
- Had issues with livestream
- Shot video and tested with same online consumer panel
- Also tested other aspects of hearing process

I think the pre-documentation is absolutely critical to be able to read that and get a concept, an idea of what you're going to be watching and then watch the actual videos to fill in some of the spaces and to hear people speak and respond.

...if there was a summary of the hearing that particular day, outlining the main points I'd be more likely to look at it that way. And then if there's an agenda I could look and see if there's a spot I want to look at in that agenda and tune in on that day... Almost like a sports highlight package where you see the winning goal kind of idea.

I was impressed with the way the hearing was presented. Very formal and informative. I also enjoyed that there was someone asking to clarify certain company specific words to make it clearer for consumers.

Gave me a sense of how the process works. It was informative, but also fairly boring. I'm not sure I would sit through this voluntarily.

OEB pilot project gives London Hydro customers a chance to test new electricity pricing and tools

London, Ont. (March 23, 2018) – The Ontario Energy Board (OEB) is exploring new ways to give residential customers greater choice in the price they pay for electricity at different times, and more tools to help them better understand and manage their electricity use.

London Hydro's pilot is one of several across Ontario selected by the OEB as it redesigns the Regulated Price Plan (RPP) under which it sets prices that apply to more than 90 per cent of the province's electricity customers.

"London Hydro's pilot will help us evaluate the impact of options that give customers greater control over their electricity costs while also helping to improve system efficiency," says Ceiran Bishop, manager of strategic policy for the OEB. "In all, the pilot initiatives will allow the real-world experience of approximately 20,000 customers to inform how electricity is priced for RPP customers in the future – potentially unlocking more value for them and the electricity system as a whole in the process."

Under its pilot, London Hydro is offering two year-long trial programs designed to enable customers to monitor and understand their consumption better, and to provide the convenience of remotely
