Role of the Tribunal

Since 1998, Ontario's main social assistance programs have been Ontario Works (OW) and the Ontario Disability Support Program (ODSP). The enabling legislation for these programs is the Ontario Works Act, 1997 and the Ontario Disability Support Plan Act, 1997.

OW helps people who are in temporary financial need; ODSP helps people with disabilities. Administered by the Ministry of Children, Community and Social Services, both programs offer financial and employment assistance.

The role of the Social Benefits Tribunal is to hear appeals from the Ministry employees who make decisions regarding entitlement to OW and ODSP benefits. In particular, the Tribunal hears appeals pertaining to

- the refusal or cutting off of assistance;
- the amount of assistance;
- reductions in assistance to recover over-payments;
- special diet assistance;
- employment and training start-up assistance;
- medically necessary transportation costs and certain health supplies; and
- the appointment of a trustee to receive a benefit payment for applicants 18 years of age and older.²

Recent Activities

In 2019-2020, the Tribunal received over 10,500 applications, an increase of more than 1,800 from the previous fiscal year; however, it completed almost 1,500 fewer appeals than in 2018-2019 (and more than 5,000 fewer than in 2016-2017).³

As compared with 2018-2019, the Tribunal had almost 3,000 more active cases at the end of 2019-2020, had held more than 1,000 fewer hearings, and had rendered almost 1,000 fewer decisions.

As in previous years, the vast majority of appeals—93%—concerned ODSP decisions, with 85% to 90% of these pertaining to the specific issue of whether an individual meets the definition of a person with a disability under the ODSP Act.

In 2019-2020, the Tribunal granted 58% of ODSP appeals and just over 30% of OW appeals.

The Tribunal's most recent annual report (2019-2020) notes the following operational highlights:

- In October 2019, the Tribunal began holding its Toronto hearings at the new Tribunals Ontario Mediation and Hearing Centre on Grosvenor Street. The centre is equipped for teleconference and video conference hearings.
- The Tribunal continues to develop its process for accepting electronic submissions from legal clinics and respondent offices.
- The Tribunal continues to work on its case management system to streamline daily operations and improve service delivery.
- The Tribunal continues to expand its Early Resolution Opportunity program (ERO), which helps to resolve appeals without a hearing. Of the 2,250 ERO sessions held in 2019-2020, 38% resulted in a settlement.

The Social Benefits Tribunal is designated as one of 14 adjudicative tribunals that together form Tribunals Ontario, an office within the Ministry of the Attorney General.⁴ In March 2021, Tribunals Ontario posted the following update on activities during the COVID-19 pandemic:

Tribunals Ontario continues to provide services to the public while keeping Ontarians safe. To comply with physical-distancing direction from public health authorities, most staff and adjudicators are working remotely.

⁴ The Tribunal is designated under the Adjudicative Tribunals Accountability, Governance and Appointments Act, 2009, S.O. 2009, c. 33, Sched. 5 (O. Reg. 126/10).

Tribunals Ontario is postponing and rescheduling all in-person hearings, and where possible, is moving forward with alternative options such as written and telephone hearings.

In response to COVID-19, all in-person service counters are closed until further notice. Where possible, please use email to contact Tribunals Ontario's boards and tribunals.⁵

In addition, the Social Benefits Tribunal announced that it would be accepting

- appeals outside of the 30-day legislative requirement;
- additional documents for hearings outside of the regular timelines; and
- requests to reconsider Tribunal decisions outside the 30-day legislative requirement.⁶

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

The Auditor General's 2019 Annual Report

The Auditor General conducted two value-for-money audits of the ODSP in the space of ten years (2009 and 2019). In 2019, the Auditor found that, as in 2009, the Tribunal continues to overturn almost 60% of Ministry decisions that deny eligibility for ODSP benefits ("non-disabled decisions").⁷

Other findings relating to the Tribunal's role in the ODSP system included the following:

- A review of decisions rendered in 2018-2019 found a "high variation" in Tribunal member decisions. For example, one member overturned 28% of Ministry decisions that a person was not disabled; another member overturned 93% of Ministry decisions.
- Tribunal members are not required to have a medical background.
- The Ministry does not review Tribunal decisions for quality or consistency, so as to preserve independent decision-making.

To ensure that only eligible individuals receive ODSP income support, the Auditor recommended that the Tribunal, "while respecting Tribunal member independence,"

- review the rates at which Ministry decisions are overturned "for reasonableness between Tribunal members," and determine whether changes in training or other tools are needed to foster greater quality; and
- make improvements where needed.⁸

⁵ Tribunals Ontario, COVID-19 Updates on Tribunals Ontario Operations, March 10, 2021.

⁶ Ibid. Tribunals Ontario's update also notes that the emergency order issued in March 2020, suspending limitation periods and procedural time periods pertaining to tribunal proceedings, was lifted on September 14, 2020.

⁷ Auditor General, 2019 Annual Report, Chapter 3, Section 3.09, p. 542.

⁸ Ibid. (Recommendation 8).

In response to the Auditor's report, the Tribunal said that it "is committed to ensuring members receive the professional development and supports they require to make fair and just decisions," and that it currently had a number of internal processes that "support this objective." Nonetheless, the Tribunal committed to actively look for opportunities to foster and improve the quality, reasonable consistency, and coherence of Tribunal decisions, and will take steps to identify and put in place additional processes if determined needed, provided that they respect judicial independence as well as the appearance of that propriety.⁹

Delays at the Tribunal

Groups such as Tribunal Watch Ontario and Defend Disability, as well as legal clinics that work with OW and ODSP claimants, say that delays at the Social Benefits Tribunal are no longer the exception—they have become the norm.¹⁰

In some parts of the province, delays are said to range from 18 months to two years. One legal clinic in Thunder Bay reports that none of the ODSP appeals it filed in 2020 has been scheduled for a hearing in 2021. Other clinics say their clients will have to wait until 2022 to get a hearing.

As some observers have pointed out, this means that people with disabilities who are currently "subsisting" on OW benefits at $730 per month are being forced to wait many months to see if they qualify for ODSP benefits, which pay $1,169 per month.

Critics attribute these delays to a high vacancy rate at the Tribunal. They note, for example, that whereas the Tribunal had 38 full- and part-time adjudicators in 2018, it had only 26 in February 2021. Moreover, the more senior and experienced members of the Tribunal are reportedly not being reappointed to further terms.

Some allege that this understaffing is a deliberate attempt to reduce the cost of social assistance, in part, by restricting the right of appeal and therefore the number of people eligible for support.

Stakeholders are also concerned that understaffing may be the first step toward dismantling the Tribunal. In their view, the government has been too quick to embrace the Auditor General's 2019 report, which they say unfairly blamed Tribunal members for inefficiencies, rather than the Ministry's bureaucrats.¹¹
