One wing of the dragoons of Lobkovitze which was poſted in the rear under the orders of major count Karack, and a battalion of the regiment of Eſterhazy, took poſſeſſion of the avenues and ſtreets of the town, of all the roads leading to the citadel, and thus ſecured this important place.

The enemy kept up a continued fire from the citadel, but without doing any miſchief. This induced field marſhal lieut. Kray to ſummons the commander of the citadel, who at firſt demanded permiſſion to withdraw his troops unconditionally; but perceiving the alarming preparations of the Imperial and Ruſſian troops to take the citadel by aſſault, he reſolved to capitulate. By this capitulation, the garriſon, conſiſting of 1000 men, were made priſoners of war. Forty pieces of cannon, 18 mortars, 480 cwt. of powder, a great number of muſkets and gun carriages, with ammunition and proviſion of every kind, and a great quantity of ſtores, have fallen into our hands. This important conqueſt has coſt us only one artillery man.

LONDON, May 10.

Of the Breſt or Britiſh fleets no ſatisfactory accounts had reached town when our paper went to preſs. A ſquadron ſailed from Plymouth on Monday, conſiſting of the Queen Charlotte of 110 guns, four other ſhips of the line, and two frigates, ſaid to be to reinforce either lord Bridport or lord St. Vincent, as occaſion may require.

Lord Bridport was off Cape Clear on Friday laſt, at which time the French fleet had not made their appearance.

It is reported that there are 30 ſail of tranſports with the Breſt fleet. The general opinion at Breſt is, that the deſtination is Ireland, and that in a certain latitude the fleet will ſeparate into three diviſions. They expect that one may be intercepted, which ſhall ſufficiently employ lord Bridport, to enable the others to land the troops, of which every ſhip is full.

Various reports were yeſterday in circulation reſpecting the Breſt fleet; but we can aſſure the public that nothing is aſcertained reſpecting its deſtination; and under the ignorance which too unfortunately prevails of its force and the nature of its embarkation, it is at beſt but a daring conjecture to aſſign to it any preciſe object whatever. To give an implicit confidence to the French journals, which with a pardonable artifice might be directed to miſlead us, would be the height of imprudence and credulity. There are ſome perſons for whoſe opinion we entertain conſiderable reſpect, who are inclined to conſider Ireland as rendered invulnerable by the wiſdom & energy of the meaſures which have been adopted there by government and the fleets appropriated to the defence of its coaſts. To others, the poſition of our naval force and the ſuperiority of our naval character, ſeem to render it incredible that the republic ſhould expoſe her ſquadrons in the Mediterranean. There is but one quarter of the world where France, by a ſudden and unexpected ſuperiority, could hope any favorable reſult from a conflict with the Britiſh arms.

That the expedition muſt be deſtined for India; that it is only a part and continuation of their original plan of ravaging the Peninſula, and inflicting a mortal wound upon her great enemy in that great arm of her empire. After driving admiral Rainier with his unequal force from the Streights of Babelmandel the French armament would communicate with Tippoo Sultan, by the eaſy capture of Mangalore, and extend its arms to Buonaparte through the Red Sea at Suez.

After the ſacrifices the republic has already made to this idol of her ambition, there is no oblation too precious to be offered. Upon the altar where De Bruyes was immolated, Bruix cannot be too dear a victim; nor can Kilmaine be more ſacred than Buonaparte. It is a deſperate chance, but they have no other. It is a game of double or quit, but they have no alternative. Beſides the Breſt fleet will revenge or ſhare the fate of its ſiſter, and the forces ſave or periſh with the army of Egypt.

We have ſtated this opinion with all the candour and force we are able, in order to ſubmit it fairly to the judgment of the public. For our own part, we confeſs our ſcepticiſm. It is in vain that we are referred to the gigantic projects and extraordinary character of the councils of the republic. We have heard in theology, of belief becauſe the point is impoſſible, and we think we have ſometimes diſcovered in politics a tendency to believe, becauſe a thing is incredible.

MORE OF THE FRENCH FLEET.

ON Monday capt. Freeman arrived here in 35 days from Malaga, which he left the 23d of May:—He informs that the French fleet paſſed Gibraltar into the Mediterranean, the 6th May, and was compoſed of twenty-five ſail of the line:—That the Engliſh fleet under earl St. Vincent, conſiſting of 22 ſail of the line, paſſed the ſtreights the 10th May; and that the Spaniſh fleet of 17 ſail of the line, left Cadix the 12th of May:—

That on the 24th of May, off Gibralter, he was boarded from an Engliſh ſloop of war, commanded by captain Moore, from earl St. Vincents, bound to Gibralter, with diſpatches, had ſailed 600 miles in 48 hours. On being aſked the news, capt. Moore ſaid he was not at liberty to make any particular communication, until he had delived the letters of which was the bearer; he however declared that the French and Engliſh fleets had engaged, and that the latter had got the better; but that the action was not deciſive—as the French progreſſed up, and the Engliſh was following: expecting that the French would be met in front by lord Nelſon with his ſquadron, and ſome Ruſſian and Turkiſh ſhips, which with the co-operation of earl St. Vincents below, would render their defeat eaſy and complete—Cutters had been ſeaſonable diſpatched to require lord Nelſon's aſſiſtance, with all the veſſels he could collect. Captain Moore ſaid that the French expedition had been fruſtrated by the engagement with earl St. Vincents; that the recapture of Minorco was intended to be the firſt act of it. Captain Moore further ſaid, off Carthagena he fell in with the Spaniſh fleet from Cadiz, which had experienced a very violent ſtorm, and ſeven ſail of the line were completely diſmaſted.—After leaving this fleet, off Cape de Gatt, fell in with ſix Engliſh ſhips bound up, which were ſufficient to deſtroy the Spaniſh fleet in their then miſerabl condition.

Extract of a letter from Madrid, May 3, received by capt. Freeman.

"French papers obſerve ſilence relative to the late events in Italy, and on the Rhine. We know by private letters that the directory is much alarmed, and they add, that every man from the age of 20 to 32 is ordered into the field under a new requiſion, and diſtinct from the conſcript. Many have declared they will ſooner die by their own hands, than leave their families to further the ambitious views of the directory. The elections have been turbulent in many parts of France; and aſſaſſinations have never been more frequent than at preſent.

The Auſtrians have entered Switzerland and have taken Bazil. Jourdan is elected a member of the council of ancients. A courier from Leghorn ſays, there are only 300 French troops there, and it is ſaid the French are about to evacuate Tuſcany."

The day capt. F. ſailed from Malaga, a letter was received from Madrid dated the 10th May, which ſaid that the king of Naples was reinſtated in his throne, and that the French had evacuated Tuſcany. Mantua, and Malta are taken by the Auſtrians.

BERMUDA, june 25.

By a veſſel from Jamaica, we learn that the Queen of 98 guns, admiral Parker, lately fell in with 3 Spaniſh 74 gun ſhips, which he engaged for a conſiderable time, and beat off with great ſlaughter. The Queen loſt near 300 men. By this veſſel we learn that gen. Touſſaint, of St. Domingo, died a ſhort time ſince; and that the Britiſh government has declared that iſland independent.

June 22.

This morning arrived the ſhip Active capt. Sampſon, from London, with proviſions, &c. for this garriſon; in her came paſſengers capt. Winſlow and family.

TROY, July 9.

An unhappy affair occurred in Salem at the celebration of the 4th of July: Towards the cloſe of the day (ſays our informant) ſome of the citizens were ſo imprudent as to ram in ſtones and land into a field-piece, upon a heavy charge of powder; in conſequence of which the cannon burſt in its diſcharge, and two men were killed by the pieces, one of them inſtantly, and the other ſurviving but a few hours. The names of the deceaſed are Caleb Fiſher and Timothy White.

FROM INDIA.

We learn, ſays the Columbian Centinel of the 10th inſt. that TIPPOO SAIB had declared war againſt the Engliſh government in India; and that in conſequence the government had taken the country ſhips into the company's ſervice.

THE ſubſcriber being appointed adminiſtrator to the eſtate of the late PHILIP STEDMAN, deceaſed, requeſts all thoſe who have any accounts againſt the ſame to leave them, duly atteſted, with ALEXANDER STEWART, Eſq. attorney at law, in the town of Newark; and thoſe who are in any manner indebted to ſaid eſtate, are requeſted to make immediate payment thereof to him, he being by me duly authoriſed to receive the ſame.

CUTHBURGA, an Anglo Saxon Tale.

EDWIN prepared to depart, and it was agreed to conceal the name and quality of Ofred, leſt national prejudice might influence the mind of Cuthburga, and prompt her to reject her country's foe. The faithful confidant commenced his journey;—the ſhades of evening had cloathed in ſofter tints the variegated foliage of the woods, and ſober twilight gradually advanced, when Edwin entered the valley, where ſtood adorned in Gothic pride, the caſtle of Cuthburga. Fearful of obſervation, he ſlackened his pace, and approached not to the building, 'till he was convinced by a circuit round it, that it was immerſed in the deepeſt ſolitude; thus ſatisfied, he pondered on the means of obtaining admittance, but, ere he could deviſe any, the noiſe of a lattice opening in the tower near which he ſtood, put an end to his deliberations, and a female voice acoſting him, demanded his buſineſs.—"Is it not Edilda by whom I am queſtioned?" Edwin aſked. "It is," ſhe replied. "Then haſte thee to admit me," cried he, "for I have tidings of importance for Cuthburga." "What! is it thou, Uſſa?" ſaid ſhe, and without further queſtion deſcended, and opening a door, which was immediately beneath the window, deſired him to follow her. He entered, and was led thro' a vaulted paſſage to a ſtair-caſe, which, as they aſcended, Edilda ſaid, "thou comeſt moſt ſeaſonably to relieve my lady's woes, who has never ceaſed to weep ſince ſhe parted in the cavern from thy cruel lord." Edwin now began to fear that when Edilda ſhould diſcover the miſtake ſhe had committed, her ſurprize or alarm might produce evil conſequences, and heſitated, not well knowing how to act, when fortune once more proved favourable. The lamp which Edilda had but newly lighted, and left in her chamber when ſhe went to give him entrance, had died away and was extinguiſhed; & the dubious light which the latticed window afforded, was inſufficient to give them a clear view of each others features; of this circumſtance therefore, Edwin availed himſelf, and ſeating the maid beſide him, began an explanation, by entreating her in the moſt gentle accents to pardon his intruſion, and not to be alarmed at what he was about to reveal. "Alas," cried Edilda, "what means this preface! has any evil happened to wound more deeply Cuthburga's peace?" "I hope not," he replied, "but good Edilda, I am not whom thou takeſt me for, I am not Uſſa, holy virgin!" She exclaimed, "Who then art thou?". "That Edwin," he replied, "whom thou ſaweſt in the cavern." "And how haſt thou dared," ſhe cried, "to impoſe on me?" "I have not," he replied, "I have only taken advantage of thy miſtake, to obtain an opportunity of communicating to Cuthburga, thro' thee, the ardent ſuit of him I ſerve, to be admitted to her preſence, that he may declare to her that love he has inſpired him with, and which will end but with his life." "In ſooth," replied Edilda, "thy maſter is a gallant youth, and I pity his miſhap, in yielding his affections to Cuthburga, for her's are in poſſeſſion of another." "I feared as much" ſaid Edwin, "from what thou didſt ſay, while believing me to be one whom perhaps thou didſt expect; tell me, therefore, I pray thee, if ſhe is ſo irrevocably engaged, as to leave no room for hope in that noble boſom, which ſhe has robbed of quiet?" "If thou wilt be ſecret, I will tell thee all," returned Edilda, "and then thou mayeſt judge for thyſelf." "I thank thee, gentle maiden," he replied, "and ſwear to keep inviolate whatever it ſhall pleaſe thee to communicate." "Know then," ſaid ſhe, "that Cuthburga loves, and is beloved by a youth of illuſtrious rank in Mercia's court, but alas! her ſire forbids their union, and to keep them ſeparate, has obliged her to reſide in this dreary ſolitude; but where is that power which is able to controul the heart that once reſigns itſelf to love? where is the man who can separate those who are joined by reciprocal affection? Cuthburga obeyed her sire, and retired at his command to this abode; but the lord of her affections, tho' strictly observed, soon discovered the place of her concealment, and flew to sooth her sorrows, they spent some hours together, they wept in each others arms; but, fearful, lest a discovery might again more effectually divide them, it was agreed that they should meet no more beneath this roof, but that she should repair to that recess in the neighbouring wood, where he under a disguise would meet her. Once their purpose was happily effected, but the second time, thou and thy lord, not only interrupted, but much, I fear, have destroyed their future happiness, for the lover of Cuthburga, whom thou hast seen wrapped in the semblance of decrepit age, was stung with jealousy, and spite of her tears, spite of her protestations, left her a prey to sorrow, after he had cruelly upbraided her with inconstancy, & solemnly renounced her. She has done nothing since but weep, and when I saw t.e beneath the window, the hope that thou wert Uffa, who is wont to pass between her and his lord with tender messages, led me to believe the thing I wished, and made me so incautious in admitting thee. Thus is Cuthburga circumstanced, and thus thou mayest perceive how vain are thy master's hopes." "Not so," replied Edwin, "if this suspicious lover treats her unkindly, nay, as thou sayest, has actually renounced her, wherefore should my lord despair; may he not rather hope, that in justice to herself, she will withdraw her affections from one so undeserving, and bestow them upon him, who knows how to estimate such beauty and such worth as she possesses." "I marvel not that thus thou speakest," returned Edilda, "since thou art a stranger to Cuthburga—since thou knowest not the ardency of her passion, nor the purity of her mind; hadst thou been better acquainted with her, thou would'st have known that her affections, being once bestowed, are never to be recalled; and though the jealous Kenred should forsake her, Cuthburga cannot know a second love." "Hah! Kenred, sayest thou!" exclaimed Edwin.—"Ah me!" replied Edilda, "what have I said?—whither has my folly led me?"—"thou hast said," returned Edwin, "that Kenred the heir of Mercia's throne, is the lover of Cuthburga, and is it her sire alone who opposes their union?—Faithless Edilda, thou would'st impose a falsehood where thou didst promise true information; but I know better why their love is secret: not Eidred, but the king would be well content to see his daughter's brow adorned by the regal diadem; but Ethelred forbids it—for Ethelred who has laid his last male offspring in the grave, designs to perpetuate his race upon the throne, by matching his young daughter, lady Avice, with this prince (his distant kinsman) who is next heir to the succession. Though not of Mercian blood, thou seest I know these things, and may, by revealing them, destroy the haughty lord, who calls Cuthburga daughter, and is my country's foe; for in me thou dost behold a chieftain of Northumberland!" "Ah, woe is me!" replied the affrighted maid "what dire misfortune hath my weakness brought upon my mistress: my loved, my honored lady, alas! alas! why did she confide the secrets of her gentle heart to me, the false Edilda, who hath betrayed them all!—betrayed them to a foe!"—The damsel wept, and smote her breast in bitterness of sorrow.—"Cheer thee, Edilda," at length the faithful friend of Ofred said, "cheer thee, and listen to the only means of avoiding those misfortunes thou bewailest, even while thou viewest them at a distance." "Oh! speak," she cried, "and ease my troubled soul." "I have said," replied he, "that a noble chieftain loves the fair Cuthburga, and sent me hither to entreat permission, to declare in person, the passion which consumes him: do thou obtain for him the interview he seeks, and tho' the lovely maid may still reject him, the covenant I now make with thee shall not be violated, to keep sacred from him and all the world, those words of danger, which thou, this night hast uttered; & which involves the life of Eldred, the peace of thy mistress, nay, even the peace of Mercia." "I may not do it," cried the agitated maid, "Cuthburga will not consent to receive the visit of an avowed lover, while she is the betrothed of Kenred." "But he has forsaken her," returned Edwin, "he has doubted her truth—he has made her weep—he is unworthy of her: not so this noble youth whose cause I plead, he loves her—his birth, his fortune, are unexceptionable—with him she may be happy; and tho' she should reject his ardent suit, no harm shall ensue from what has happened, to her or thee. Is it not therefore, better to comply with my desire, nay, even better hazard incurring her displeasure, than irritate me to that vengeance which my hatred to her sire too strongly urges me to pursue, by discovering all I know to Mercia's sovereign." "Yes," cried Edilda, "I will comply—I'll hazard all, but her destruction—thy master or thy friend shall see—shall speak to her; but it must be at a season of security from all fear of interruption;—it must be at a time when Kenred cannot possibly discover it, for should he but suspect she entertained his rival, even for the purpose of dismissing him, it would destroy for ever all hope of reconciliation." "Let it be at night" cried Edwin, "when darkness may veil the transaction from human eyes, and a chaste deportment shall render it not unfit for those of heaven." "Could I be sure of that," replied Edilda, "my greatest difficulty would pass away, and I would admit thy friend to-morrow eve, what time the sun beams strike the western towers with ruddy gleams of light.—For then the household summoned by the vesper bell, attend the neighbouring monastery & join in prayer—Cuthburga herself most frequently goes thither: when all are absent, I can remain to give thy friend admittance, and when he has spoken to my mistress, the shades of night will favour his secret departure hence." "Thou sayest well," cried Edwin, "and thus it shall be done." "But mark me," said Edilda, "those errors I have fallen into and which to remedy, I am now obliged to enter into this unseemly league with men and strangers, shall be a warning to guard me from all future indiscretion; therefore I charge thee, presume not on the advantage thus obtained, to offer aught of rudeness to Cuthburga; or if thou doest, dearly shalt thou suffer, for beneath this roof are many of lord Eldred's trusty vassals (all trained to arms) who wait upon his daughter, and at a word from me, will fly to her protection: be therefore cautious, and forewarn thy friend (whose boldness I have noted) for much as it behoves us to be secret; all other considerations would appear trivial, nay, wholly vanish, if the virgin purity of her I would die to serve should be exposed to danger." "Dismiss thy apprehensions, virtuous Edilda," replied Edwin, "for trust me, the honor of Cuthburga is dear to him who comes to seek her love: for holy marriage will his suit be urged, and if he wins the gentle maid's consent, those sacred rights alone shall give her to his arms, for other wishes, love like his excludes.—Buy say by what sure token shall I know when we, with safety, may approach the castle?" "Note when the vesper bell shall cease to ring," replied Edilda, "then may'st thou safely enter by the western hall, where I will wait thy coming."—"Thanks, kind Edilda, for thy gentle favour," returned Edwin, "and now farewel, good maiden!" He arose, and being conducted by Edilda through the same passage by which he entered the castle, departed.

The night was dark, thick clouds rolled slowly over the face of heaven, obscuring the dim, yet pleasing light which the stars might have else afforded to guide the lonely traveller, who but ill acquainted with the road he trod, was constrained to proceed with a slow and cautious step, 'till the cheering beams of a late moon emerging from behind a range of hills, gladdened his heart, and discovered to his view the road which led to that temporary palace where Ofred had fixed his residence during the time, which every year he was wont to devote to the pleasures of the chase. There Edwin soon arrived, and learning that the king had kept his apartment all the preceding day, and complaining of illness, had desired not to be disturbed, on any account—the faithful confidant retired to rest.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, August 24.

ADDRESS

From the inhabitants of this town to his Excellency Governor HUNTER.

To his Excellency PETER HUNTER, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper-Canada, and Commander in chief of his Majesty's forces in British America, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

WE his Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the inhabitants of the capital, beg leave to congratulate your Excellency on your appointment and safe arrival to this, his Majesty's province. We assure to ourselves, from the unparalleled generosity and humanity which your Excellency extended to the subjects of this province at a former period, and from your Excellency's experience and wisdom, that this infant tract of the British Empire founded upon the rock of loyalty, will progress, in an unexampled ratio, in population, agriculture and happiness, in christian piety and gratitude to GOD!

Notwithstanding our remote situation from the scene of the eventful contest, which at present ravages all Europe! we are not without feeling, in some measure, its pressure; and our recluse situation prevents us from assuming an active part in such a warfare, which we are happy to learn is drawing near to its termination.

we presume to assure to your Excellency, that we shall exert every faculty we possess, to preserve, inviolable, your administration, from domestic commotions and the machinations of our relentless enemy, impious France.

York, Aug. 20, '98.

To which his Excellency was pleased to make the following REPLY:

GENTLEMEN,

Nothing that is in my power, shall be wanting to contribute to the happiness and welfare of this colony.

ADDRESS of the MAGISTRATES and other INHABITANTS of the Town of KINGSTON.

To his Excellency PETER HUNTER, Esq; Lieutenant Governor of the Province of UPPER CANADA, and Lieutenant General of his Majesty's Forces in UPPER and LOWER CANADA, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

WE the magistrates and other inhabitants of Kingston, beg leave to congratulate your Excellency on your safe arrival, and to assure you, that we consider it as a mark of his Majesty's particular attention to the interests of this province, that he hath appointed to the government of it, a Gentleman who, during the important military command he formerly held therein, was the means of preventing a considerable part of it from sinking under the horrors of famine.

We flatter ourselves that your Excellency will view with pleasure, the progress which this colony has made, since you last saw it; and we entertain the fullest confidence that, under your administration, it will continue to prosper.

Kingston, August 9, 1799.

To which his Excellency was pleased to give the following Answer:

Kingston, Aug. 9, '99.

Gentlemen,

I beg leave to return you my most sincere thanks, for the very flattering Address you have done me the honor of presenting.

It gives me the greatest pleasure to observe the rapid progress this country has made since I saw it last; and you may rest assured, that nothing in my power shall ever be wanting to promote the happiness and prosperity of Upper Canada. P. HUNTER.

To the Magistrates and other Inhabitants of the town of Kingston.

☞ The above address and answer, should have appeared in our Gazette of last Saturday, but did not come to hand 'till after its publication.

Last Monday his Excellency Governor Hunter, reviewed the troops in our garrison, who performed their different manœuvres and evolutions with such promptitude and exactness, as to meet his approbation.

We hear that a vast number of Indians are lying sick at the River Credit, their disorder we have not yet learned.

The following curious hand-bill has been lately circulated about Edinburgh.

"Thou shalt not steal."

"All persons whom it may concern, are desired to take notice, that steel traps of the largest size, for catching breakers of the eighth commandment, are every night placed in the garden of St. Bernard, between Stockbridge and the Water of Leith, on the north side of the said water; that spring guns are set to rake the walls with shot, upon the touch of a wire—and that a tent, having in it an armed watchman, is pitched in the middle, with orders to fire without mercy. If therefore, any evil disposed person or persons, shall attempt to break into the grounds of St. Bernard, their blood be on their own heads.—Amen!"

"Of the fruit of the garden thou shalt not eat—for in the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Gen. vi. 17.

Bon Mot.—A man who lived with his wife not upon the most happy condition of nuptial enjoyment, having received a severe scolding from her, with hearty wishes that "the devil had him," observed, "My dear, do not so often threaten me with the devil; I dare say, he will behave very kindly to me for having married one of his near relations."

The Emperor of Russia was desirous to give one of his daughters in marriage to the Archduke Charles: but the prince excused himself in a very polite manner, observing, that his duty made it necessary for him to become a soldier before he became a husband.

It is thought Kosciusko, is at present in Poland, on a mission from the Directory, as he had not been seen in Paris these ten months.

A London paper says, that "no British property of any consequence has fallen into the hands of the French at Leghorn, it having been removed from that port near twelve months ago.

A curious law suit is mentioned in one of the French papers. A young woman of Bourdeaux was married to a young man of the same place. On the marriage-day, however, she eloped with a gallant. She has since had a child, which she ascribes to the lover, but the husband claims it as his. The property and possession of the child is the subject of keen litigation.

General Suwarrow, who has been in so many hot actions, and is aged in the field, in which he was never beat, is a batchelor.

The following is admitted, by many of the best political writers, to be a true statement of the wealth and property of Great Britain.

The annual value of the lands of Great Britain, is generally estimated at twenty millions. The value of the fee thereof, at twenty years purchase, therefore will amount to £400,000,000

The value of the stock on the said lands may be estimated at five times the yearly value, the stock on land being commonly so estimated, 100,000,000

The cash of Great Britain, 40,000,000

The tonnage of the shipping of the port of London is computed at 200,000, which may be estimated at about 1-fourth of the mercantile shipping of the whole island, which then amounts to 800,000 tons, which, at ten pounds per ton, gives 400,000,000

The merchandize and goods, carried thither for their home & foreign trade and consumption, may be computed five times the value of the shipping; which will be 40,000,000

The royal navy, without ordnance; 6,000,000

The value of the home manufactures, 20,000,000

Plate, jewels, and rich furniture, 20,000,000

Total, 1026,000,000

DIED, not long since, in the town of Kingston, Mrs. KATY M'DONELL, consort of Capt. MILES M'DONELL, of the Royal Canadian Volunteers. She was a lady universally esteemed and died much lamented. Her disorder was a consumption long and painful, which she bore with true patience and resignation.

THE subscriber being appointed administrator to the estate of the late PHILIP STEDMAN, deceased, requests all those who have any accounts against the same to leave them, duly attested, with ALEXANDER STEWART, Esq. attorney at law, in the town of Newark; and those who are in any manner indebted to said estate, are requested to make immediate payment thereof to him, he being by me duly authorised to receive the same.

We have the pleasure to lay before our readers this day, the latest and most important news that has arrived here this summer; with which we have been favoured by an hon. gentleman, to whom we return our thanks.

Foreign News.

LONDON, June 7.

YESterday in the House of Commons, Mr. secretary Dundas presented the following message from his Majesty:

"GEORGE R.

"His Majesty thinks proper to acquaint this house, that he had some time since concluded an eventual engagement with his good brother and ally the Emperor of Russia, for employing 45,000 men against the common enemy, in such manner as the state of affairs in Europe, at that period, appeared to render most advantageous. The change of circumstances which has since arisen, having rendered a different application of that force more desirable. His Majesty has recently had the satisfaction to learn that the views of the Emperor of Russia, in that respect, are entirely conformable to his own; but his Majesty has not yet received any account that the formal engagement to that effect has been regularly concluded. He has, however, the satisfaction of knowing, that the same promptitude & zeal in support of the common cause, which his ally has already manifested, in a manner so honorable to himself, and so signally beneficial to Europe, have induced him already to put this army in motion towards the place of its destination, as now settled by mutual consent. His Majesty therefore thinks it right to acquaint the house of commons that the pecuniary conditions of this treaty will oblige his Majesty to pay the sums of 275,000l. in stipulated instalments, as preparation money; & to pay a monthly subsidy of 75,000l. as well as to engage for a further payment at the rate of 37,500l. per month, which pay ment is not to take place till after the conclusion of a peace made by common consent. His Majesty relies on the zeal & public spirit of his faithful commons, to enable him to make good these engagements. And his Majesty being desirous to afford the necessary succours to his ally the Queen of Portugal, as well as to give timely and effectual assistance at this important conjuncture, to the Swiss Cantons, for the recovery of their ancient liberty and independence, and to make every other assertion for improving, to the utmost, the signal advantages which, by the blessing of God, have attended the operations of the combined arms on the continent, since the commencement of the present campaign, recommends it also to the house of commons, to enable his Majesty to enter into such further engagements, & to take such measures as may be best adapted to the exigency of affairs, and most likely, by continued perseverance and vigour, to complete the general deliverance of Europe from the insupportable tyranny of the French republic.

G. R.

Naples is evacuated by the French. Two columns from thence entered Rome the 29th April—and divisions of the Austrio-Russian armies were marching towards Lucca, to cut them off from joining Moreau.

In Italy the confederates still command success, and deserve it.

In Switzerland, the Austrians have been successful. So also in the Grison country.

Jean Debry has been chosen president of the council of 500.

By the Paris papers, it is certain that the French fleet got safe into Toulon, the 13th May; lying half a day before Carthagena, and passing in sight of Ivica, Majorca, and Minorca. The Spanish fleet was part at Carthagena, and part on the African coast.

In Piedmonte the peasants are in full insurrection against the French.

DUBLIN, June 1.

Yesterday the whole of the Yeomanry corps were put off permanent pay and duty. This circumstance augurs well for the peace of the country.

Extract from the Lord Lieutenant's Speech on the prorogation of the Irish parliament to July 16.

"I have his majesty's particular commands to acquaint you, that a joint address of the two houses of parliament of Great Britain has been laid before his majesty, accompanied by resolutions proposing and recommending a compleat and entire Union between Great Britain and Ireland, to be established by the mutual consent of the parliament, founded on equal and liberal principles, on the similarity of laws, constitution and government, and on a sense of mutual interests and affections. His majesty will receive the greatest satisfaction in witnessing the accomplishment of a system, which by allaying the unhappy distractions too long prevalent in Ireland, and by promoting the security, wealth and commerce of his respective kingdoms, must afford them at all times, and especially in the present moment, the best means of jointly opposing an effectual resistance to the destructive projects of foreign and domestic enemies; and his majesty, as the common father of his people, must look forward with earnest anxiety to the moment, when, in conformity to the sentiments, wishes, and real interests of his subjects in Great Britain and Ireland, they may all be inseperably united in the full enjoyment of the blessing of a free constitution, in the support of the honor and dignity of his majesty's crown, and in the preservation and advancement of the welfare and prosperity of the whole British empire."

LONDON, June 8.

A report was in very great circulation on Saturday, that earl St. Vincent had obtained a complete victory over the Brest fleet, having followed it into the Mediteranean.

By Paris papers of a late date we learn, that the Brest fleet entered Toulon the 13th of May, and was preparing again for sea. A letter from on board the Jamappe, states, that owing to a heavy gale of wind, it had failed of making the harbour of Cadiz, and also in an attempt to engage the squadron of lord St. Vincent. Several ships were separated in the storm from the main body of the fleet, and have not since appeared. It lay off Carthagena a day and a half.—Another letter from Toulon of the 18th states, that the fleet had arrived except the Censeur.

Vandame has been arrested by Massena, and sent for trial.

It was last night reported, and understood to be confirmed in the house of commons, that by intelligence from lord St. Vincent, the Brest fleet was blocked up in Toulon.

June 9.

The Hamburgh mail of the 31st arrived in town last night by express, and has brought the important intelligence of the total defeat of the French armies in Italy, the junction of the Imperial armies in Switzerland, &c.

After a battle which lasted 14 hours, Moreau, severely wounded, with three of his generals, and 6,000 men, have been made prisoners by the Russians, who left 8,000 of the enemy dead on the field of battle. The following is the official account of the action published at Milan, by gen. Suwarrow on the 24th ult.

"On the 14th at five in the morning the French were attacked by the Austro Russian army, in their strong position between Turin and Coni. The battle was most bloody, and lasted till night. It will be one of the most memorable in history, and was ultimately terminated in our favour.

"The French have lost 8000 men killed on the field. Six thousand prisoners are already in our possession—We have 3,000 men killed and wounded. The French have lost almost all their artillery. One hundred and fifty pieces of cannon, and 200 ammunition waggons are now in our possession.—Four of the enemy's generals are taken prisoners including the general in chief Moreau.

A letter from Milan, of the 14th, states this action to have decided the fate of Italy.

The Russians on the 15th took Valenza by assault. Alessandria, as well as Turin, is now in our possession—& the Piedmontese peasants have occupied Mount Cenis, and thereby cut off the remnant of Moreau's army from France.

Defeat of Macdonald's Army.

A letter from Berlin of the 28th ult. states, that a messenger had that day arrived from Italy, with advice that the corps of general Macdonald, which had advanced through Tuscany for the purpose of joining the army of Moreau, had been attacked by the Austro Russian army, near Lucca, and totally defeated and their commander made prisoner.

On the 22d the whole of the Imperial troops stationed at the Bregentz country, crossed the Rhine between Bregentz and Feldkirch, in three columns, and, after some ineffectual opposition from the French between Wenterthur and Zurich, penetrated into the canton of Uri, where they were joined by several armed peasants—thus forming an uninterrupted communication between the armies of the Archduke and gen. Suwarrow. The corps of gen. Nauendorf crossed the Rhine at 5 o'clock on the morning of the 21st, & immediately advanced his head quarters to Singen. The enemy had previously abandoned Constance, and the entire of the Southern bank of the Rhine, & retired with precipitation towards Zurich. On the morning of the 23d, the archduke with the remainder of his army, was to cross the Rhine at Stein and Schaffhausen, & immediately to pursue the enemy.

The whole of the cantons of Schaffhausen, Appenzell, Uri, and Schwitz, are now in possession of the Austrians. The position of Massena at Zurich, is, therefore not tenable, and his retreat is opposed by the most formidable difficulties. The next mail will, we trust, bring advice of his having shared the fate of Serrurier and Moreau.

The capture of Genoa by the English, Turks, and Russians, has been officially announced by col. baron d'Aspres, commander of the Imperial advanced posts of Reggio, to the Regency of Modena. The report of gen. Angerau being made prisoner with his corps, in endeavoring to succour the place, is not confirmed.

The King of Sweden, in quality of Duke of Pomerania, has, by his minister, Baron Bildt, delivered to the Congress of Ratisbon a note, informing the co-estates, that he has joined the coalition against France, and will furnish his contingent of men in natura. He exhorts the members of the empire to follow his example, in rendering every possible succour to the emperor, as the only means of preserving the Germanic constitution.—A great naval armament is preparing at Carlscroon.

The garrison of Mantua is stated to have made propositions of capitulation to gen. Kray, who had refused to accede to some articles respecting covered waggons.—The fortress of Urbano, in the Bolonese, surrendered on the 10th; & on the 12th the Austrians entered Bologna, where they made 1200 prisoners.

Gen. Vukassovich has taken in Piedmont upwards of 250 pieces of cannon.

Moscati, Buonaparte's physician, and one of the Cisalpine directors, has been sent prisoner to Milan.

The Spanish minister to the Cisalpine republic has been ordered to leave Milan.

Letters from the Hague, of the 25th ult. state, that in the course of the present month half of the new raised national guards, consisting of 25,000 men, would be organized, when the troops of the line would be employed in the French service.

The French have wholly evacuated Rome, in the neighbourhood of which a formidable insurrection had broken out. The treasures plundered from Rome, Naples and Tuscany, by the French, are stated to have fallen into the hands of the Austrians at Parmo.

The landgrave of Hesse is forming a corps of 8000 men on his frontiers.

An article from Bombay, March 21, inserted in the Paris papers, states the probability of an immediate war between the British and Tippoo; who they say, has 100,000 well disciplined men, and does not give himself the trouble to conceal his designs. He lately observed, in answer to some new remonstrances made to him by the Company, that he knew what was due to his dignity and army. Every thing announces an approaching rupture:—The Paris papers speak as if the Brest fleet were going to relieve Buonaparte, and enable him to proceed to India.

June 10.

Our Plymouth letters by yesterday's post state, that on the 25th ult. 2 ships of the line sailed from Brest, that on the 31st two sail of the line lay in the outer road, and that another ship of the same description was towing out by numerous boats to join them as was alledged, to proceed to Ireland. This intelligence was brought to Plymouth by two fishermen, who, as pilots, went on board one of the French frigates, which appeared in Bantry Bay, in Dec. 1796, supposing her to be English, and who having been considered as prisoners of war, were lately exchanged, & brought to England, on Friday last, in a cartel from Morlaix.

Expresses were yesterday sent off from the Admiralty to all the principal seaports, for what purpose we have not been able to ascertain. Conjecture says, that an embargo is the object, either to prevent the outward bound merchantmen from falling in with the French squadron, which is stated to have lately sailed from Brest, or to guard against any intelligence, respecting the secret expedition about to take place, reaching the enemy's shores.

No advices from the Mediterranean have been received by government, the reports of lord St. Vincent having blockaded up the enemy's fleet in Toulon, are therefore totally void of official foundation.

A letter from Plymouth dated the 7th inst. says, "a cartel sloop from Morlaix, which she left yesterday morning, brings advice that the public mind is in the greatest possible state of agitation; multitudes crying out against the government, and their partizans only able to avert the threatened convulsion by entreaties to wait the operations of the fleet, which appears the last stake of the executive directory. The recent conscription is most rigorously enforced, and seafaring men are daily marched, hand-cuffed to the ports."

VERONA, May 15.

The following intelligence has appeared in print, at Modena:

"The Regency make it a duty, and feel the greatest joy, in publishing the letter just written by Baron Aspres, colonel, commanding the army of his Imperial and his Apostolic Majesty.

"To the Regency of Modena,

"Gentlemen, please to publish immediately, that the English, Russian & Ottoman fleet, have made a descent at Genoa, and seized both that city and its harbour—that the French have evacuated Alessandria and Turin, & that Peschiera has been taken.—I am eager to communicate this to you, for the satisfaction of all honest people, who interest themselves in the welfare of humanity. (Signed) Baron D'ASPRES."

LINDAU, May 22.

Yesterday at 1 o'clock, the French left the whole valley of the Rhine, and retreated behind St. Gallen. To-morrow the bridges will be got ready, and the whole corps between Bregentz & Feldkirch will pass the Rhine in 3 columns, in order to join gen. Hotze, who has penetrated far into the district of Toggenburg.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 4.

Our government has resolved to make a loan for the expences of the war; it is to be paid in ten years, with interest. The Greek nation must contribute 1,500,000, the Armenians 1,000,000, the Jews 800,000, and the bankers 18,000,000 of piastres. As the Grand Vizier is on the eve of his departure, and the troops want many things, orders are given for the Greeks to keep their shops open on holidays, and the Jews on the Sabbath. But the latter got off this restraint on paying 24,000 piastres. The accounts from Syria still seem to be of a serious nature to the Porte.

PEST, May 14.

According to a letter from the Polish frontiers the following are said to be the military forces of Russia, which are now acting, or are to act against France.

By the fleet of gallies	50,000
Marching thro' Bosnia	60,000
Marching thro' Hungary	11,000
Actually arrived in Italy	26,000
Marching thro' Moravia	45,000
Marching thro' Prussia	80,000
Total men	272,000

The rapid successes of the allied armies in Italy have induced the Archduke Charles to resume operations in Germany. Several divisions of his army have already crossed the Rhine at different places, and his highness was himself to pass that river on the 23d, at Stein and Schaffhausen, for the purpose of pursuing the enemy. The position of Massena at Zurich is supposed not to be tenable, and his retreat is opposed by very formidable difficulties. The most important advices may therefore be daily expected from that quarter. The Imperial troops have effected a junction on the Lake of Zono, and thus formed an uninterrupted chain of posts from the Mediterranean to the Rhine.

By a private letter from St. Petersburgh we learn, that the free exportation of corn from Russia is again permitted.

Paris Journals to the 4th inst. arrived yesterday.—A letter from Toulon, inserted in one of them, states, that the Spanish fleet, consisting of 18 sail of the line, entered that harbour on the 20th ult. from Cadiz, after having had an engagement with the English fleet, in which the Spaniards claimed the victory. This statement, however, is not only contradicted in some of the other Journals, but it is even denied that the Spanish squadron had arrived at Toulon so late as the 27th, the Executive Directory not having received any advice to that effect.

Mr. Basset and Mr. Slater were under orders on Saturday to leave England for the Continent, with government dispatches; but the arrival of the Hamburgh mail has caused them to be delayed for a day or two.

The restoration of the house of Orange will be attempted, and no doubt effected, under the British armament equipping for that purpose: transports for an army of not less than 20,000 men, with the necessary train of artillery, &c. are now preparing with all possible dispatch. The prince stadtholder will accompany this formidable armament in person.

United States.

NEW YORK, August 5.

A gentleman passenger in the Rising Sun, informs, that Ireland is in a very unsettled state; and that great fears were entertained by the friends of government, of an open rebellion.

A gentleman who came passenger in the Boyne, from London, has favoured us with the following: "All vessels leaving any port in Holland, as well as those bound there, are taken and carried into England; among those captured, is the ship Ocean, capt. Parker, from Rotterdam, belonging to Messrs. Higgins and Parsons, of Boston; also a brig of 16 guns, from the same port, which had been taken by a French privateer and afterwards released. These vessels were claimed by the American minister, as not being involved in the consequences of a blockade, having been in Rotterdam before it took place—but this application was not likely to prove successful.

"Capt. Barret, in a ship belonging to Boston, and many others from different ports in the United States, taken for violating the blockade of the Texel, were also carried into England, and upon some principles lately established, it is supposed will be condemned.

By the same gentleman we are informed, that a secret expedition was planning in England, in which 20,000 men were to be employed.

The Boyne on her passage here, ten days ago, fell in with, and brought too, a schooner bound to Cape Francois, the capt. of which informed, that he had dispatches from the president of the U. States, relative to the affairs of St. Domingo.

Foreign News.

From the London Gazette Extraordinary.
Thursday, June 6.
Downing-street, June 6, 1799.

DISPATCHES of which the following are extracts, have been received from Sir Morton Eden, K. B. and lieut. col. Robert Crawfurd, by the right hon. lord Grenville, his Majesty's principal secretary of state for the foreign department.

Extract of a letter from Sir Morton Eden, K. B. dated Vienna, May 23.

I have the honor of inclosing three Extraordinary Gazettes of this place, with the translations, together with the translation of an article in the Ordinary Gazette of yesterday; and sincerely congratulate your lordship on the happy turn of affairs in the Grisons and the Little Cantons, which must contribute so eminently to the further success of the campaign in Italy, and to greatly facilitate the operations of the Russian army, which entered this country on the 15th inst. and of that under the command of the archduke Charles.

VIENNA, May 18, 1799.

Captain Vimmer, of the regiment of Lobkowitz cavalry, arrived here yesterday from field Marshal Suwarrow, with the following account of his further operations:

As every account agreed that the enemy had only a small garrison in Tortona, field marshal Suwarrow ordered prince Pangrazion, who was at Pavia, to cross the Po without delay with the advanced guard, consisting of a regiment of chasseurs, two battalions of grenadiers, two battalions of infantry, and two regiments of Cossacks, under the command of gen. Grekow.

They passed the river near Corvefino in barges and flat bottomed boats, and pushed forward to Voghera. On reconnoitring, it was discovered that the enemy had strengthened the garrison of Tortona. In consequence of which, gen. Karaiczay received orders to join the prince, who croſſed the river with two battalions of the regiment of Frolich, two ſquadrons of Lobkowitz' drägoons and two of Karaiczay's, which paſſed the Scrivan near Caſtle Nuova, and formed near Torre di Garrofole, between Tortona and Alexandria.

But the following day, having learned that Moreau was poſted near Alexandria, on the banks of the river, with the two diviſions of Victor and Grenier, and whatever force he had been able to collect from Turin and other places, the field marſhal reſolved to march with his whole army againſt Tortona.

The two diviſions, Zoph & Frolich, under the orders of the general of cavalry, Melas, marched from their camp at Caſal Puſterlengo to Piaſance, where they paſſed the Po, after having previouſly carried the important poſt of Bovis (leaving there gen. Mozin, with 3 battalions and 2 ſquadrons) & encamped near Caſtle St. Giovanni. The following day they paſſed thro' Voghera, and on the 9th arrived by Ponte Coroone at Tortona. At duſk the ſame day major gen. marquis Chaſelet attacked the gate of Vogera with two battalions of the regiment of Alvinczy, a reſerve of grenadiers, and a ſquadron of Lobkowitz, under the orders of col. Spanochi, & with the aſſiſtance of the inhabitants, who at heart are faithful to their king, the gate was forced, notwithſtanding the fire from the citadel. Thus fell the fortreſs of Tortona, the key of Piedmont.

The Ruſſian gen. prince Gortzakow, witneſſed their operation. The troops were received with ſhouts of joy by the inhabitants. The town was illuminated the whole night, and the next day (the 10th) High Maſs and Te Deum were ſung at the churches. There were but few cannon in the town. The enemy, 700 ſtrong, have retired to the citadel, which is blockaded by four battalions, and the works are already begun.

The enemy left behind them 250 wounded or ſick, 12 of them officers.

The army paſſed the Scrivia on the 10th, which was ſo rapid as to render it impoſſible to conſtruct a bridge. The men paſſed through the water up to the middle, and joined the Ruſſian advanced guard near Torre di Garrofole.

Gen. Vukaſſovich advanced with his brigade beyond Novatra to Vercelli; & his advanced guard, under col. prince Charles of Rohan, took the important fortreſs of Ivrea, which ſecures to us the valley of Aoſt. Thirty pieces of cannon and a great quantity of ammunition were found in the place. A detachment of the ſame corps has alſo taken 17 guns on the Lago Maggiore.

Col. prince Victor of Rohan puſhed forward with a corps of about 2000 men as far as the Lake of Como, where he took one gun boat, and obliged the enemy to burn two others.

Being ſupported by the peaſants, who take up arms every where, he has marched againſt a body of French who have retreated to the environs of Chiavenna. The canton of Uri, and the diſtricts of Bellinzone, are alſo in inſurrection againſt the French.

Major Luzioni, who entered Piedmont with 30 huſſars, has armed all the peaſants who join our troops, and has already advanced by Dorra Paldea as far as Chivas, two poſts from Turin.

Col. Stranch, detached from the Tyrol, with 5000 men, has penetrated into the valley of Bremhona, and has driven the enemy from Morbegno. Major Fredigoni, of the Tyroleſe chaſſeurs, with 800 men, is on his march from Edola to Terano in the Valteline, againſt the enemy.

The field marſhal hopes, that by means of thoſe different operations, combined with thoſe of field marſhal lieut. Bellegarde, the enemy will ſoon be driven from the Valteline.

Field Marſhal Suwarrow has detached field marſhal lieut. Otto, with 5000 infantry and 1500 horſe, againſt gen. Montrichard, who is poſted at Bologna. This corps has already advanced as far as Modena, and the enemy has retired towards Ponti Trimoli. By this means our army will draw ſupplies from the fertile provinces of Ferrara, Bologna, and Modena, and at the ſame time the territory of Parma is wreſted from the hands of the French.

Field marſhal lieut. Kaim, with ſix battalions and 4 ſquadrons, joined the grand army before Tortona, after the reduction of Pizzighetone. Gen. Hohenzollern was ſent with 4 battalions to Milan, where are already ſix battalions, commanded by gen. Latterman, with orders to preſs the ſiege of the caſtle of that city. The four ſquadrons of cavalry being unneceſſary for the ſiege, have received orders to reinforce the army of Piedmont.

May 29.

The archduke Charles has ſent by his firſt lieut. Leibrich de St[illegible], an account, that lieut. gen. Hotze had, agreeably to the inſtructions he had received, attacked the paſſes of Lucien's Steig on the morning of the 14th inſt. and had ſucceeded in taking poſſeſſion of them, and made priſoners almoſt the whole of the 14th demi-brigade, & took 8 pieces of cannon.

His royal highneſs will give as ſoon as poſſible the details of this important operation.

May 21.

Capt. comte Caramelli, of the emperor's regiment of cuiraſſiers, arrived here this day, as courier from his royal highneſs the archduke Charles, with the particulars reſpecting the ſubſequent operations of field marſhal lieut. Hotze in the Griſons.

The enemy's diviſions, which had been driven to the mountains by col. Plunket, and the column of gen. Heller, retreated to Furca, in the deſign of eſcaping either by Zizers or by Coire. But finding that field marſhal lieutenant Hotze occupied theſe two points, and that he had already poſted two battalions in the latter, they ſurrendered themſelves priſoners of war.—The total of the priſoners amounts to 1000 privates and 80 officers; a pair of colours has alſo been taken.

Beſides this, in the purſuit after the affair of Lucienſteig on the 14th, we took 4 pieces of cannon, and made two companies of grenadiers priſoners, without counting the 8 pieces of cannon & the demi-brigade already mentioned.

Field marſhal lieut. Hotze reconnoitred the enemy on the 13th near Richenau; at the ſame he appeared in great force againſt Ragatz, where the enemy had 2000 men. This demonſtration produced an engagement, and the enemy being obliged to retreat, burnt the bridge over the rivulet Pfeffere. We, however, purſued them beyond Fettes; part of them were driven into the valley of Sargans, where an officer and 30 men were made priſoners.

We had a few men wounded. We took three more cannon from the enemy near Ragatz, which, with thoſe already mentioned, make 15 guns.

After this laſt attack, the enemy withdrew in the night between the 15th and 16th with ſuch precipitation, and had loſt ſo much ground, that when this account came away, field marſhal Hotze was already at Sargans; at the ſame time the field marſhal lieut. received intelligence that col. count St. Julien was at Lentz, and field marſhal lieut. count Haddick at Feliſur.

The enemy is retiring on the ſide of Fuſis, probably in order to join the camp at Reichenau, and to attempt to continue their retreat towards St. Gothard by the only road now left them, viz. Hans and the Devil's Bridge. But as the Upper League of the Griſons was preparing to riſe, col. Strauch cloſed the paſſage of Sphigen, and field marſhal lieut. Hotze that of Gunkels. It is alſo probable that field marſhal lieut. count de Bellegarde, will advance towards Coire and Fuſis. From all which it may be concluded that this corps of the enemy, conſiſting of 7000 men, is in a moſt critical ſituation, from which it will be extremely difficult to diſengage itſelf.

In order to aſſiſt as much as poſſible field marſhal lieut. Hotze in the attack of Lucien's Steig, his royal highneſs the archduke Charles made at the ſame time a demonſtration towards the Rhine with ſuch ſucceſs, that a corps of the enemy of 17,000 men aſſembled near Schaffhauſen were prevented from ſending any detachment againſt field marſhal lieut. Hotze. It appears by accounts ſent by field marſhal lieut. Kofpoth to his royal highneſs, that on the night of the 14th gen. Meerfeldt ſurpriſed the enemy's poſt at Dundenheim, and killed three officers and 60 grenadiers who reſiſted. One officer and four ſoldiers were made priſoners. We took alſo 14 horſes.

May 22.

What lieut. gen. Bellegarde had announced previous to the Bulletin of the 22d and 23d inſt. which his royal highneſs the archduke Charles had ordered to be publiſhed relative to the operations of lieut. gen. Hotze, is connected with what follows, altho' the intelligence from lieut. gen. Bellegarde arrived later.

According to this account, col. and brigadier Strauch, after very fatiguing marches, reached Chiavenna with his brigade on the 9th inſt. at which place col. Le Loup, of the van-guard of gen. Vukaſſovich, had arrived on the preceding.

From the 7th the enemy had commenced their retreat from Chiavenna by the valley of Giacomo, leaving at the firſt place 32 pieces of cannon, of which we have taken poſſeſſion.

Col. Strauch, being reinforced with 3 battalions of light troops, and the remainder of the 3d battalion of Michael Wallis, commanded by col. Carneville, purſued the enemy to the heights; and col. prince Victor de Rohan met with his force in Bellinzone, to diſpute the paſſage of the Bernadin.

The brigade of col. Strauch had many difficulties to ſurmount at Morpegon in the valley of Camonica. He was obliged to wait two days at Piacca, in order to dig a road thro' the ſnow near Caſa St. Marco, as it was impoſſible for the ſoldiers to march, the ſnow being 15 feet deep, and not hard enough to bear. By this means, the communication is re-eſtabliſhed with the principal corps of lieut. gen. Bellegarde, Sina, Planta, Molagio, and Caſſatſch.

Demonſtrations were made for the purpoſe of alarming the enemy on the hills of Julie and Albula, in order to facilitate the operations of gen. lieut. Hotze, from gen. Bellegarde was prepared to ſupport on the ſide of Javos and the Hill of Albula.

Col. De Marſeille, of the regiment of Clairfayt, had brought from Albula two pieces of cannon belonging to the enemy. At Malagn, and at ſeveral other places on the road to Chiavenna, were found a great quantity of ammunition, muſkets and waggons. The enemy had deſtroyed a part of them in retreating.

The firſt intention of the enemy was to proceed to Chiavenna by the mountain of Septime, in order to join gen. La Courbe, near Lentz; but the detachment of the van guard of gen. Bellegarde, which had advanced from Pamada as far as Malagio and Caſſatſch, prevented this, and obliged them to retreat by the Spligen.

Extract of a letter from Lieut. Col. A. Craufurd, dated Head Quarters of Gen. Hotze Mayenfeldt, May 22.

On the 14th inſt. I had the honor to write your lordſhip a few lines, containing the account of the ſucceſsful attack made by gen. Hotze on the enemy's poſt at St. Lucienſteig & in other poſitions in the Griſon country. In the courſe of the evening of the 14th, above 1000 more priſoners were brought in, ſo that the number taken in this affair amounts in the whole to between 3 and 4000.

The difficulties attending this operation were extremely great, and its ſucceſs reflects the higheſt honor on the gen. and the troops. The fortified poſt of St. Lucienſteig completely cloſes & defends the direct paſſage from Veldkirch into the Griſons country; its natural and artificial ſtrength is ſuch as to render a direct attack upon it in front extremely difficult and imprudent, and its flanks are ſo well ſupported as to render it impoſſible to turn it without marching over ſuch mountains as might almoſt have been deemed impracticable for troops.

The firſt or right hand column marched from Feldkirch on the great road ſtraight to the Steig. The deſtination of this column was to form in front of the poſt, to make ſuch demonſtrations as to threaten an attack, and endeavour to draw off the enemy's attention from his right flank, and to be in readineſs to purſue the enemy with the cavalry and flying artillery as ſoon as the other column ſhould have obliged him to abandon the Steig.

The ſecond column commanded by major gen. Yellachitz, conſiſting entirely of infantry, made a conſiderable detour to the left, effected this march by extraordinary exertions over the chain of mountains by which the right flank of the poſition of the Steig is covered, & defcended about day break in the rear flank, in a place where, from the extreme difficulty of the ground, the enemy could not expect an attack.—This column diſlodged the enemy from the poſt of the Steig, and made priſoners great part of the enemy that defended it.

The third and fourth columns, commanded by gen. Hiller and col. Plunket, marched from Veldkirch up the Montafune Valley, from whence they with great difficulty croſſed at different points the chain of mountains which ſeparates it from the valley called the Brettigaw, and, driving the enemy from the different poſitions he occupied on this ſide, they deſcended into the valley of the Rhine, by Marchlines and Zizers; the advanced guard of the firſt column purſuing the enemy from the Steig, arrived at Zizers time enough to cut off the retreat of the enemy from the Brettigaw. Of the remains of the enemy's corps in the Griſons, one column retired thro' Coire to Reichenau, where they took poſt behind the Rhine, and another paſſed that river at the Zolbrucke, and marched through Ragatz towards Sargans, leaving a rear guard at Ragatz.

On the 15th gen. Hotze reconnoitred the enemy at Reichenau; but finding them ſtrongly poſted, and not having any infantry at hand, he could not attack them. The ſame day, however, he ordered col. Cavacini to attack them at Ragatz, from whence they were driven with conſiderable loſs. About 50 priſoners & 2 pieces of cannon were taken. The advanced poſts were puſhed forward to Sargans.

On the 16th, the enemy retired from Reichenau towards Diſentis, where they were attacked on the 18th, and obliged to retreat with the loſs of two cannon & ſeveral men. On the ſame day they were driven from Wallenſtadt & Werdenberg, on which occaſion they loſt three pieces of cannon.

On the 9th, the enemy with a very ſuperior force made a ſevere attack on the corps commanded by col. Cavacini at Wallenſtadt, but was completely repulſed on this occaſion. The battalion of Swiſs emigrants, commanded by col. Roorca (which formed a part of colonel Cavacini's corps) were engaged for the firſt time; it ſuffered a good deal, and with great bravery.

The enemy is now in full retreat from the Rockenbourg and canton of Appenzell. The Auſtrian patroles entered St. Gall the night before laſt, & found between Rheinbeck and that place 13 pieces of ordnance, beſides a conſiderable quantity of ammunition, which the French had abandoned in their retreat. On the whole the enemy's loss in this quarter, from the 14th to this day, exclusive of killed and wounded, may be estimated at near 4000 prisoners and 36 pieces of cannon. Lieut. gen. Belle grade is at Chiavenna.—End of Gazette.

From the London Morning Herald, of June 10, 1799.

The fate of Italy, if the accounts by the Hamburgh mail of yesterday be correct, may be considered as finally decided; but there are some considerations which induce us to entertain considerable doubts of the intelligence, notwithstanding it assumes an official shape, from Milan, under the date May 14. A general action is said to have commenced at five o'clock in the morning of the 13th ult. by an attack upon Moreau's position between Turin and Coni, and to have continued with the utmost fury till night, when victory at length declared in favour of the combined arms, the enemy having lost 14,000 men, 8000 of whom were killed on the field of battle, and the remainder (including Moreau, who was wounded, and three other French generals) taken prisoners, 150 pieces of cannon, and 200 ammunition waggons, are also stated to have fallen into the hands of the allies. Our reasons for suspecting the accuracy of this account are these: The advices published by government, in the Gazette of Tuesday last mentioned the head quarters of field marshal Suwarrow to be at Tortona on the 13th, the day on which the victory is said to have been atchieved: a circumstance which renders the latter statement improbable in one point of view, and impossible in another. In the first place, the reported scene of action is near 70 miles distant from Tortona, where Suwarrow had his head quarters at the precise time the battle is stated to have been fought, and as even his out posts were not so far advanced on that day, it is highly improbable that a force sufficient to dislodge Moreau from his strong position betwen Coni and Turin, could then have been collected at a distance so considerable from the main body of the Imperialists—and in the next place it is utterly impossible that Suwarrow could have had his grand army between Coni and Turin on the morning of the 13th, if as the Gazette states, his head quarters were on that very day at Tortona. But, at the same time that these considerations lead us to question, the accuracy of the seemingly official account, we have no doubt that a very important victory has been obtained by the Austrian & Russian army in Piedmont, & from which the above exaggerated statement had its origin. The action to which we allude, was fought on the 13th (the day already mentioned) between Valenza, Bussignano, and Alessandria: it was extremely bloody, and terminated in the capture of Valenza (10 miles from Tortona) which the Russians carried by storm.—This battle lasted 14 hours, and the division of the enemy which escaped consisted only of 8000 men; it is to be observed, that it was not the main body of the French which was here engaged, Moreau being then stationed between Coni and Turin with an army of 17,000 men.—In this manner we think we may venture to account for the magnified statements from Piedmont, which, however, may be considered as a rational anticipation of what has probably by this time taken place. A private letter from Milan states, that Alessandria & Turin are in possession of the combined force, by means of the latter of which they will be able to flank Moreau on the N. side, and ultimately to dislodge him from his present advantageous position. Thus will the deliverance of Italy be rendered complete, & the miserable remains of the republican army be forced to fly for refuge within the ancient boundaries of France. With respect to the forces under the orders of gen. Macdonald, they are reported to have been totally defeated, and the commander taken prisoner near Lucca, on their way to join the army of Moreau in Piedmont; but this account, altho' probable, wants confirmation.

At a meeting at the Court House in the borough of Lancaster, (Pennsylvania) on Wednesday the 19th of June, the following Address was unanimously agreed to.

Friends and Fellow Citizens,

EVERY reflecting man who views, and can understand the situation of the United States, and the nature of the compact they have formed, must be convinced that their honor, their independence and national glory can remain no longer than their union shall continue inviolate and unimpaired: and that a separation of the states must eventually involve the ruin of all of them. A system so important to our happiness ought to be watched with the most jealous care, and anxiously supported by every honest and virtuous man. He cannot be a friend to your government, (but on the other hand he must be its worst enemy) who would endeavor to weaken its energy, or undermine its influence. To create in your minds a distrust of the men you may have chosen to administer your government; to alarm you, and cause your hearts to rankle with a mean jealousy of its powers; insidiously to make you discontented with the laws, till it break out in direct opposition and attempts to impede their execution are the base arts by which corrupt and designing men assail the constitutions they wish to destroy; and no surer meanscan be devised to overturn the liberties of the people. The result is inevitable! treason and sedition must be put down, or the government itself must fall! The arm of authority must become stronger or the whole fabric will be shaken! The land will be cursed with all the evils of anarchy; and a people sick of licentiousness, will be willing to submit to any kind of government. Too enfeebled, and to corrupt to defend their ancient liberties, the authority over them will be uſurped by thoſe who may have miſſed them.

Countrymen, we are bleſſed at preſent with one of the beſt conſtitutions in the world; and well calculated to protect us from danger from abroad if we can defend it from the aſſaults of enemies within. It is a ſacred duty which we owe, to tranſmit it unimpaired to poſterity! Yet there is a party among us, who falſely call themſelves republicans, who are oppoſed to the whole adminiſtration of the federal government, and under the pretence of ſupporting the conſtitution, are aſſailing it with all the arts that malice can invent. They are the friends of France more than of their own country; and under the influence of French principles they are ſtruggling to divide the people from their government. They have oppoſed every ſalutary meaſure of public defence; & by ſlanderous falſehoods they have vilified every ſyſtem that has been deviſed to raiſe a revenue to protect us from foreign oppreſſion, or to ſecure our trade. To be convinced of theſe truths it is neceſſary only to review the tranſaction of a few years paſt. To devide in order to deſtroy us is obviouſly the deſign of France, and the more ſhe can weaken the general government, the more eaſy will be her conqueſt; and it is therefore a primary object with her partizans, by any and every means, to elect, into the office of the ſtate government, men who are decidedly oppoſed to the general adminiſtration. By diſorganizing the parts, they muſt eventually fall. France has already conquered more by her principles than by the ſword! It is a dreadful warfare!—It is with her new philoſophy that ſhe firſt corrupts the hearts and then triumphs over a weakened and degenerate people. Under the pretence of overthrowing, ſhe has put down the altars of God, has ſhaken the foundation of all religion, and let looſe a mighty flood of immorality upon the world! It is thus ſhe wars upon mankind. Behold the fate of Switzerland once the happy ſeat of liberty the native ſoil of many of your anceſtors; how ſhe languiſhes under French oppreſſion! Behold Italy and Holland! their commerce annihilated, their property ſeized by their French friends, and new governments forced upon them and changed at the pleaſure of their new maſters. No longer free republics but tributary provinces to France?

None of us, fellow citizens, would wiſh to behold the United States thus humbled. Let us then exert ourſelves before it be too late. Let us baniſh from among us the inſidious principles of France, and conſider her friends and thoſe who juſtify her conqueſts and her oppreſſions, not only as the enemies of the peace and happineſs of our beloved country, but as the enemies of the human race! Let us ſupport our own government, and it will be able to protect us; if we are meanly jealous of it, it muſt fall, and we muſt periſh with it. We cannot exiſt as a nation, unleſs we ſupport it, not only with our purſes, but with our veneration and confidence.—Let not our enemies gain an advantage over us by their induſtry, while we are inactive at home; but let us exert ourſelves to the utmoſt to prevent any man from elected into office, who is either a friend to French meaſures, or who is oppoſed, at this intereſting period, to the laws and adminiſtration of his own country. Let us conſider it as criminal to remain at home on the day of election, and it will then be known that the freinds of good order and government are ſtill the ſtrongeſt in Pennſylvania.

Friends and fellow Citizens,

A more important period than the preſent has not occurred in the hiſtory of the United States. It may be ſaid with propriety that this is the time to try the hearts of men. It is by his conduct in the day of trouble, by his vigilance to oppoſe the machinations of the tools of a faction, who are baſely plotting againſt the deareſt intereſts of their countrymen, that the patriots may be known. It is not by inactivity and repoſe that we can protect the independence or preſerve the peace, happineſs and proſperity of our infant nation!! we therefore call upon you, as freemen value liberty, to aid us with your hearts and hands on this momentous occaſion. You know us, and muſt know that we have no motives but the good of our country. We are determined to ſtruggle to preſerve our religion, our laws, and our liberty to the laſt, and with the bleſſings of God, we humbly truſt that our exertions will be ſucceſsful.

THE degree of health, reſtored to the chief juſtice, is ſo flattering that he has again reſumed his ſeat in the executive council.

The Toronto Patch, Captain BAKER, will, in the courſe of a few days, be ready to make her firſt trip. She is one of the handſomeſt veſſels, of her ſize, that ever ſwam upon the Ontario; and if we are permited to judge from her appearance, and to do her juſtice, we muſt ſay, ſhe bids fair to be one of its ſwifteſt ſailing veſſels.—She is admirably well calculated for the reception of paſſengers, and can, with propriety, boaſt of the moſt experienced officers and men. Her maſter builder was a Mr. Deniſon, an American, on whom ſhe reflects much honor.

HIS Excellency Governor HUNTER, arrived at Niagara on Thurſday morning, 5th inſt. on his way from hence to Quebec. He was ſaluted by a diſcharge of Twenty one guns from Fort George; and at 11 o'clock he was waited on by ſeveral gentlemen of the town and preſented with the following addreſs:

To his Excellency Peter Hunter, e'q. Lieutenant Governor of the province of Upper Canada, and Lieutenant General of his Majeſty's forces in Upper and Lower Canada, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY

To receive from the magiſtrates and inhabitants of the diſtrict of Niagara their congratulations on your ſafe arrival in this country, and to permit them to expreſs their heart felt ſatisfaction at finding you come once more among them, inveſted with the very honorable office his Majeſty has been pleaſed to confer upon you.

They recollect with the warmeſt gratitude the very eſſential benefits they received from your former command in this country, when the lives of ſome of the inhabitants were certainly ſaved, and when a great part of the people in this diſtrict were relieved from the ſevereſt evils that could attend a general famine, by the very liberal diſintereſted conduct you then held.

They reflect, with peculiar ſatisfaction, on the bleſſings they now enjoy in the cultivattion of a greatful ſoil, which almoſt precludes the poſſibility of their being again viſited by ſuch a calamity. They reflect, with equal pleaſure, on the ſingular advantages of their ſituation which has hitherto preſerved them in complete peace to enjoy the bleſſings of plenty, under the faireſt and beſt government ever yet was framed. And they hope, by their loyalty to the beſt of kings, by their attachment to his government, and by the exertions of their own induſtry, they may long continue to merit and to poſſeſs ſo many bleſſings.

They moſt unanimouſly and moſt ſincerely join in withing health and happineſs to your Excellency in whatever part of theſe provinces your duty may call you to reſide.

To which his Excellency was pleaſed to give the following anſwer:

Fort George, Sept. 6, '99.

Gentlemen,

I beg you will accept my moſt ſincere thanks for the highly flattering addreſs, which you have done me the honor of preſenting,

It is with the greateſt pleaſure that I contemplate the bleſſings now enjoyed by the inhabitants of this diſtrict, from the cultivation of a greatful ſoil, and the ſingular advantages of their ſituation, which has hitherto preſerved them in complete peace.

I have no doubt but your loyalty to the beſt of kings, your attachment to his government, and the exertions of your own induſtry, will long entitle you to a continuance of thoſe bleſſings; to promote which, I beg leave to aſſure you, nothing in my power ſhall be wanting.

I have the honor to be,
gentlemen,
your moſt obedient,
humble ſervant,
P. HUNTER.

A London paper bearing date the 9th of June ſays, that the Spaniſh miniſter to the Ciſalpine republic has been ordered to leave Milan.

Letters from the Hague of the 15th of May ſtate, that in the courſe of the preſent month half of the new raiſed national guards, conſiſting of 25,000 men, would be organized, when the troops of the line would be employed in the French ſervice. The French have wholly evacuated Rome, in the neighborhood of which a formidable inſurrection had broke out.

The treaſures plundered from Rome, Naples and Tuſcany, by the French, are ſtated to have fallen into the hands of the Auſtrians at Parma.

An article from Bombay, March 21, inſerted in the Paris papers, ſtates the probability of an immediate war between the Britiſh and Tippoo Saib; who, they ſay, has 100,000 well diſciplined troops, and does not give himſelf the trouble to conceal his deſigns. He lately obſerved, in anſwer to ſome new remonſtrances made to him by the company, that he knew what was due to his dignity and army. Every thing announces an approaching rupture—the paris papers ſpeak as if the Breſt fleet were going to relieve Buonaparte, and enable him to proceed to India.

General Hotze, who ſo gallantly diſtinguiſhed himſelf in the Griſons, is only about thirty two years of age, and is an inſtance of the excluſive power of real merit, unſupported by other intereſt.

Extract of a letter from Martinique, dated July 6, received by the ſchooner Maria capt. Todd, to a gentleman in New York arrived at Norfolk, Virginia.

"A veſſel from Gibraltar has arrived here with accounts to the 23d May.—Accounts by her ſtate,

"That the Cormorant, lord Kerr, called in on the 22d. with general Stuart, on his way to England. On the 3d of May, Mahon was in a reſpectable ſtate of defence, and expected a viſit from the Spaniards, as they had made a lodgement of 12,000 men at Majorca ſuppoſed for the purpoſe of taking Minorca. Leghorn is in poſſeſſion of the French but on a limited ſcale, as Britiſh commerce has ſtill ſome proteſtion there. Malta is ſtill blockaded; the French that poſſeſs the capital are getting tired, and murmur; it is expected ſoon to fall—the more ſo, as a Ruſſian army is going there from the neareſt part of the continent. At Mahon admiral Duckworth is with 9 ſail of the line and one frigate—lord Nelſon is at Palermo, with 6 ſail; at Alexandria 2 ſail of the line and ſome frigates.

"On the 23d May arrived there the Veſuvius bomb with diſpatches to the governor, and ſailed for England, after taken her men out of prize—Reports, that lord St. Vincents had fallen in with the Spaniſh fleet, and after gaining fight had driven them on the Barbary ſhore, nearly oppoſite to Carthagena, and that being very much diſabled, they muſt either ſurrender to the earl, or go on ſhore, but watched them at a ſafe diſtance; a frigate was expected with the particulars of the capture of the Spaniſh fleet."

A Boſton paper of the 6th of Auguſt gives the following account of the fleets up the Mediterranean:

On Sunday arrived here from Alicant by the way of Gibraltar, the armed brig Alert, capt. Rich. She left Gibraltar July 1: Rich acquaints us that the French fleet had reached Toulon, exceepting the Cenſeur, which had put into Cadiz, and there remained. The French being diſappointed in the expected junction with the Spaniſh fleet, had thus entered port.—Earl St. Vincents did not get ſight of them. The Spaniſh Armada, experiencing a gale of wind in the vicinity of Carthagena, when looking for their good allies, glided into the ſmooth waters of that place to patch up their ſhattered barks. They finally all reached that deſired haven. Some induſtry being uſed with the veſſels leaſt damaged, twelve ſail of the line were again in a condition to engage and yield to the wind or enemy.—Admiral Gardner, with fourteen Britiſh ſhips of the line, entered the ſtreigths early in June—He paſſed near Carthagena, did not ſtop to enquire what the Spaniards were about, but kept on to join earl St. Vincents, and to watch the more daring French.

Leghorn, Naples &c. were evacuated by the ſanſculottes; and the other parts of Italy, the tide of ſucceſs continued to run in favor of the combined powers; not having experienced a ſingle pauſe.

STANZAS.

BY MRS. ROBINSON.

Supposed to be written near a tree over the grave of Col. BOSVILLE.

AH! penſive traveller, if thy tear,
E'er fell on valor's early grave,
Arreſt thy wandering ſteps, and here
Lament the lot that waits the brave!

Here, gentle moraliſt, deſcry
The proudeſt boaſt that man can claim,
The glorious privilege to die
Exulting in his country's fame!

Here bid the laurel ſteep'd in tears,
Tears that in glowing youth he died,
Bleſt with each charm that moſt endears,
His kindred's hope, his nation's pride.

Nor ſhall the penſive muſe forbear
To mingle fainted names with thine;
Thy gallant comrades oft ſhall ſhare
The tender ſigh, the mournful line!

Oh hallowed turf! lone ſilent ſpot,
Adorn'd with Feeling's gem ſublime,
E'en when the muſe ſhall be forgot,
Thy fame ſhall brave the blaſts of time.

And thou, rude bark, preſerve his name,
Carv'd by a juſt recording hand,
And proudly conſcious of that fame,
Thy guardian branches wide expand.

Keep from his ſod the pattering rain,
The wintry wind, the drifted ſnow;
And when blithe ſummer paints the plain,
Here let the ſweeteſt flow'rets blow.

No trophied column, twin'd with bays,
No gilded tablet bears his name;
A ſoldier boaſts ſuperior praiſe,
A greatful country guards his fame!

SCOLDING WIVES!

A TAX is ſoon to be laid on all ſcolding wives, as it is lately diſcovered that the innumerable bachelors every where to be found, remain ſo more through fear of being ſcolded to death than from any mercenary conſideration. They are to be rated as follows: For ſcolding every morning, 20l. per annum—twice a day, 30l—three times, 40l—every other day, 16l. once a week, if not on Sundays, 15l—on Sundays, 10l—ſcolding a huſband into a conſumption, the jaundice, or any other lingering diſorder, 100l—ſcolding a huſband to death, 500l—ſcolding herſelf into a fit of hyſterics, 000.

N. B. This calculation is made for a woman who brings 5000l. to her fortune, ſo that the penalties muſt be increaſed or decreaſed according as the fortune exceeds or falls ſhort of the above.

WHEN I firſt preached in this magnificent houſe, about twenty years ago, I told you that ye were part beaſt, part man and part devil; at which you were offended. I have ſince thought much about that expreſſion, and confeſs that for once I was miſtaken: I therefore take this opportunity to correct my error. Behold! I now tell you, that you are not part man, and part beaſt, but wholly of the DEVIL!!!

COUNCIL OF FIVE HUNDRED.

Sitting of May 15.

BERTHIER made the following report, in the name of the financial commiſſion:

"In circumſtances leſs urgent than the preſent, it would have been ſufficient for your commiſſion to furniſh you with the reſult of the report which was made to you yeſterday. But when our wants are real, it would be a criminal inattention to be ſilent upon the inſufficiency of the revenues, and not occupy ourſelves immediately on the means for ſupplying the deficit. We have no other power over paſt depredations than to ſubmit them to a ſtrict inquiry. Would you believe that in the month of laſt Vendemiaire before the requiſitionifts and conſcripts were called into action, the accounts for the payment of the troops were calculated at the rate of 437,000 men in actual ſervice, without including the troops in Egypt and in Holland? Would you believe, that to complete the number of 68,000 cavalry, it was neceſſary to purchaſe 40,000 horſes? The commiſſion would deem itſelf unworthy of your confidence, and guilty of treaſon againſt the nation, if it did not propoſe to you to demand of the directory, by a meſſage documents properly detailed, for the purpoſe of tracing the authors of ſo many calamities. We have been informed by meſſages of the exiſtence of a conſiderable deficit. If the directory wiſhes that the public ſervice ſhould be carried on, we alſo deſire it. From the inſtant at which the republican troops ſaw their valor betrayed—from the inſtant when intelligence of the execrable crime committed at Raſtadt, by order of the Houſe of Auſtria, was announced throughout the republic; when a general cry was heard of "Vengeance! Men! Money!" numerous battalions were levied on all fides, and organized; but their courage would be impotent, if it were not to be rendered useful by pecuniary resources. Shall we raise a war tax? The affirmative cannot be doubted. Shall this tax be imposed upon presumed property? Such a measure would be arbitrary and unjust. It would open the door to a multitude of recriminations & complaints, would experience delays, & its product would be uncertain and of little value. The tax imposed by the necessity of war and national vengeance, which the commission is about to submit to you, is placed upon the following grounds:

1. There shall be raised a tenth by the livre in addition to the landed contribution. This resource will produce 21 millions.

2. There shall be raised a tenth by the livre in addition to the personal contribution, which shall commence with the indigent class, but this addition will be progressive and proportionate to the different classes of the persons contributing. The product is estimated at 15 millions.

3. The last rate made with respect to the contribution for doors and windows shall be doubled. The poor who have only two openings to their dwellings, shall be excepted. The product is estimated at from 6 to 7 millions.

4. Augmentation of a tenth by the livre on the registering of articles. The amount two millions and a half for the remainder of the year.

5. Augmentation of the duty on post letters. A letter taxed at 6 shall pay 9 sous. The product 2 millions.

6. Augmentation of the stamp duties. Amount 2 millions.

"These branches of additional contribution do not rise to any arbitrary measures, and will produce about fifty millions for the 7th year.

"But as this sum does not complete that which is demanded by the directory, it shall be filled up by a deduction of the salaries of public officers, and by œconomy and the retrenchment of all useless expences. The commission is engaged in attending with the greatest vigilance to the last object. The country, threatened as it is, requires the exertion of all its resources; but it is particularly by re-establishing order and economy in all the branches of administration, that the public spirit will be enabled to rise with vigour from that kind of apathy into which it is plunged. When it shall thus be restored to its original energy, it will find every sacrifice light, imposed upon it by the safety of the state."

The reporter then proposed the following projects:

1. "A message shall be sent to the directory demanding a circumstantial account of the administration of the exminister Scherer, of the exaggeration of the state of the expences of his ministry during the first six months of the 7th year, and of the causes of the defect which existed in the nominal and actual force of the armies when hostilities were resumed."

2. "The commission charged with rendering an account of the responsibility of ministers, shall make its report within a decade."

3. "All public and civil officers whose salary was beyond 3000 livres, shall be liable to a drawback of 5 per cent. for the first 3000 livres, and of 10 per cent. on the remainder."

This resolution shall be applicable to the representatives of the people, to the members of the directory, to the members of the diplomatic body, to the administrators, &c. With respect to salaries nothing shall take place derogatory from the existing laws.

All these resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The other projects are to be printed and the discussion is to be opened after the distribution of them.

Sitting of May 16.

A message from the elders stated the election of Syeyes to replace Rewbell in the directory. Out of 205 votes he had 103. The next to him were citizens Duval, Gohier, Lambrechts, and Charles Lecroix.

Sitting of May 20.

After the appeal nominal for the installation of the new members. Jean Debry was chosen president. On taking the oath of Hatred to Royalty, he made a speech, in which he affirmed that neither priests nor fanatical peasants were among the assassins of Rastadt, but that they were Austrians set on by the English government.—When he concluded, cries of Vengeance! Vengeance! and Vive la Republique! resounded from all quarters of the hall.

Sitting of May 21.

Jean Debry declaring himself incapable, from the effect of his wounds, to deliver the funeral oration in honor of Roberjot and Bonnier, it was decreed that it should be spoken by the ex-president.

COUNCIL OF ELDERS.

Sitting of May 15.

A secretary read a message from the directory transmitting a letter from Jean Debry, and giving fresh details concerning the assassination of the French plenipotentiaries at Rastadt, imputing that act to the house of Austria.

[What impudent scoundrels must those monstrous, bloody, carnival, Heathenish Frenchmen be, who pretend to be shocked at the killing of the Sans culotte Embassadors! Do they recollect that the French Legislative Assembly, as it was called, decreed (on the motion of the very Jean de Bree, who was one of the three ambassadors) a legion of three hundred assassins, whose sole business was to be, the murder of the generals, princes and kings of Europe? Do they recollect, that this savage nation hired villains to poison the emperor Joseph and the king of Sweden? Do they recollect, that they murdered the pope by inch-meal? Do they recollect the murder, and more than hellish torments endured by the king, the queen, the dauphin, and the princesses of France?—Yes, they recollect all this very well, and justify it all; but, the moment two or three of the miscreant murderers receive a wound, which it is more than probable was provoked by their unbearable insolence, if not by some attempt to murder their guards; the moment this takes place, the scountrels cry out aloud for vengeance! Let them attempt it! Let them proclaim NO QUARTER as soon as they please, they will soon have their belly-full of that. They have now, thank God, got enemies that are fit to combat them.]

LONDON.

Correspondence between Commodore Trowbridge and General Macdonald.

To his Excellency Gen. Macdonald. Culloden, off the Isle of Procida, April 5.

SIR,

Having learned that the French privateer Championet, a prize belonging to one of his Majesty's vessels under my command, has been driven by bad weather into the port of Castellamare, and having, within little more than a month released nearly four thousand French prisoners. I hope your excellency will set at liberty the midshipman and seven English seamen, now in your power. It is necessary for me further to inform your excellency, that on the 30th ult. I sent a cartel from Palermo to Nice, with three hundred French prisoners.

It is with real concern I hear, that the effects of our minister, sir W. Hamilton, are detained in his house at Naples. You, sir, both as an officer and soldier, ought to know that the property of ambassadors has never been considered as falling within the right of conquest, and I am convinced that what has taken place in that respect, has happened without your knowledge.—An ambassador is obliged to follow the court to which he has been sent. I beg you to reflect on our conduct towards your consul and merchants at Leghorn, when we took possession of that port.

I am also to acquaint you, that I captured at the heights of Alexandria, a monsr. Beauchamp, dressed in the Turkish fashion, on his way to Constantinople as a spy, with secret instructions, and about 600l. concealed about him, which I restored to him, from the conviction that it is the duty of all officers to alleviate the miseries of war, which should as little as possible affect individuals, and to treat prisoners with every proper attention. I wish I had it in my power to say, that our officers, soldiers, or sailors, have been treated in that way by the directory.

I trust, sir, after this explanation, that you will make no difficulty of giving up the above mentioned midshipman and seamen to my officer, who is charged with the delivery of this letter, and that you will also put into his hands all the English whom you may have in your power. I shall take care to have their names registered, and the officer will give you a receipt for the men whom you shall send back to me.

I have the honor to be,
with great respect,
your humble servant,
T. TROWBRIDGE.

General Macdonald's Reply.

SIR,

"The crew of the small vessel which was forced into Castellamare by bad weather, are still performing quarantine, but as soon as the officer of health shall declare there is no danger in opening the communication with them, I shall give the necessary orders for sending them on board your squadron.

Your officer who brought your letter has been unable to satisfy himself that your minister, has left nothing here but the walls of his house. At least it was found in that state on the conquest of Naples. You, sir, who are so well versed in the rights of nations, should put the ex-king of Naples in mind of them, who now keeps in chains, without any reason or motive, the vice consul of the French republic.

"I beg, sir, you will be satisfied that your prisoners are treated with all the attention and care which misfortune can claim and humanity bestow. I wish I had it in my power to say as much in favour of the agents of your government, and of you in particular.

"I am, sir, with great respect, &c.
"MACDONALD."

Letter from General Macdonald, to M. Acton.

The commander in chief Macdonald to M. Acton, minister of his Neapolitan ex-majesty.

"I learned, sir, with the greatest surprize and the most lively indignation, that the ci-devant king of Naples exercises his important vengeance against citizen Ribaud, vice-consul of the French republic at Messina, and that he has loaded him with chains, and thrown him into a dungeon. Such extraordinary conduct cannot fail to provoke reprisals, and it is on your brother that they have fallen. I am astonished, sir, that humanity and the ties of blood have not spoken in favour of him. I propose, sir, however, to exchange him for our estimable fellow-citizen Ribaud.

"MACDONALD,
Commander in Chief."

United States.

NEW-YORK. July 25.

Yesterday morning pursuant to a sentence of Court martial, Joseph Perkins, a private in the first regiment of Artillerists and Engineers, was shot for desertion.—The repeated pardons which the President extended to this offence, in the army of the United States, evince his extreme reluctance to inforce the severities of martial law, without the most peremptory and imperious necessity. The necessity was created not only from the frequency of the crime which seemed to gather boldness from lenity, and to require terrible examples for its suppression; but from its atrocity in the unhappy man who has expiated it with his life.

He was placed as a sentinel over two deserters, whom he not only permitted to escape, but was faithless enough to accompany. He received his sentence without any apparent emotion. Not a feature nor a muscle of his countenance altered. His apathy in some measure continued till a few hours before his execution. A secret hope of reprieve, which he abandoned only when it was impossible to retain it any longer, contributed to weaken the impression which his circumstances ought to have made on his mind. Yesterday morning, however, his sensibility appeared awake, and his heart tender. Without any disposition to criminate either the rigour of the law, or its application to himself, he acknowledged the justice of his fate.—To the intemperate use of liquor and the seduction of evil company, he attributed that want of principle which betrayed him into the sacrifice of his duty, and the shame of his untimely end. Of this he requested his fellow soldiers to be informed, and to be warned, as from his mouth, by his example, against those vices which wrought his ruin.

With affecting impressions of his situation; with trembling apprehensions of the world to come; with endeavours, according to every symptom, as far as his narrow views of eternal realities would permit, to adventure upon the divine mercies, in the Lord Jesus Christ; without any comfort, but not altogether without hope, did he go to appear before God. The scene was awful—the utmost propriety and decorum marked every part of the procedure. The troops drawn up in a hollow square, were forcibly struck: The humane emotions of the officers honored themselves and added to the interest of the exhibition.

The deportment of the prisoner was decent and composed. Immediately before his execution, he was commended, by prayer, to the forgiveness and grace of God.—Every thing was extremely solemn.

May the affecting example prevent the necessity of its repetition.

It was reported at Gibraltar that a letter from Buonaparte had been intercepted, in which he had expressly declared that his situation was miserable; and without immediate succor, he, and his countrymen with him, would perish.

The choleric Bashaw of Tripoli, had returned to a good natured disposition toward the United States, and the differences which lately arose have been amicably and completely settled.

By our late information we find that the Red sea squadron, consisting of the following British ships, the Suffolk, of 74 guns; Trident, of 64; and Centurion of 50; were bound into the Red sea, from Bombay, and are probably there by this time.

THE ORACLE.

YORK. Saturday, September 21.

It is mentioned in a New York paper of Aug. 7, under the London date of June 12, that overtures of peace had been made by the French Directory, & it was thought would be accepted.

It is faid that one of the kings of France introduced this punifhment for flanderers—The flanderer, when convicted thereof, was to be placed on all-fours in the public ftreet, and there to bark like a puppy-dog for a quarter of an hour.—We could with fuch a law was put in force in this province, the inhabitants of which might be favoured with an abundant flow of this dog-like mufic every day.

We have the pleafure to inform our readers, that by the lateft and moft authentic accounts from Europe, it is mentioned that the French have evacuated Naples, and that the king was reinftated.

In Italy the confederates ftill command fuccefs. It is faid, however, Moreau has taken meafures to check their progrefs.

Our readers may rely, that the French are not only harraffed by the confederate armies; but fuffer fevere and daily lofs from infurrections of the people in every quarter.

There is a States paper in town which contains an extract of a letter from Leghorn, wherein mention is made of the defeat of Earl St. Vincent's fquadron by the French fleet.—We prefume it muft be the production of fome hair-brained Democrat, as the combined Engliſh, Ruſſian and Turkiſh fleets in the Mediterranean, now conſiſt of fifty-one ſail of the line, beſides frigates; and we will not heſitate to ſay, that while ſuch a naval force remains to receive them, neither the Sans Culottes, Dons, or Mynheers will dare ſhew their noſes, for if they do, they know they'll be in imminent danger, if not paſt recovery!

Married laſt Tueſday, Mr. John Endicott, of this city, to the agreeable Miſs Eliza Devans, daughter to Mr. —— Devans, of the Humber.

To the Printers of the Upper-Canada Gazette.

GENTLEMEN,

HAVING obſerved in your Gazette of laſt week a paragraph which ſaid, "a tax is to be laid on ſcolding wives, &c." I have in conſequence had recourſe to pen and ſcribled the incloſed obſervations; though at the moment impreſſed with a high ſenſe of my inability to the taſk. Should theſe remarks be glanced at with contempt by your readers, becauſe they are the production of the pen of a female ſcribler, I beg leave to aſſure them, that I ſhall not regard their aſperſions, but wink at them with an eye of indifference.—It is a province too mercenary and too inferior to be that of a man's, to wiſh to deprive us of that only weapon of defence, our tongues! an armour, which, we have been permitted to exerciſe ſince the earlieſt period of time, without moleſtation, except when tied to a ferocious and vile tempered huſband! Were the future contingent effects of this female's inſtrument of defence, in the ſmalleſt degree, ſimilar to thoſe of the ſabre, piſtol, faſt or ſlick! I ſhould hold up my hand and exclaim for its prohibition! but on the contrary as its effects only produce a momentary wound in the feelings of its opponent, I cannot conceive that there is the ſmalleſt degree of propriety for its being prohibited, when the Faſt, Stick, &c. are tolerated, and their inhuman effects ſuffered to be inflicted upon us with impunity!!

I bluſh to ſay, that too many of our ſex experience more the uſage of a ſpaniel, from their malignant huſbands, than that of a "boſom friend!" Did I not conceive myſelf ſcreened, as a female, I preſume to ſuggeſt that this would be productive of a challenge.

The plan which I have in contemplation, I flatter myſelf, will be for the mutual advantage of both ſexes, but more particularly ours: that a penalty be impoſed (in manner hereafter ſtated) upon every huſband who ſhall preſume to make uſe of thoſe unwarrantable weapons, a Stick, Faſt, &c. to vent the effects of intoxication; and alſo upon thoſe who reſort thoſe receptacles of idleneſs, taverns, in which, the cauſe of their being called in queſtion too often originate. This propoſition, if carried into effect, will, not only materially exceed the tax which is to be levied on ſcolding wives, but will be a competant revenue to defray the civil expenditure of this province.

DRUNKEN HUSBANDS.

AS it has been inſinuated that a tax is ſhortly to be levied on ſcolding wives, I think it no more than juſt and equitable, that a ſimilar one be impoſed on Drunken Huſbands, but that the rates be enhanced, as it has been obſerved, and very juſtly, that they are frequently the cauſe of their ſcolding. The manner in which they are to be rated is as follows: For getting drunk in the morning, 30l per annum; twice a-day, 40l—three times a day, morning, noon and evening, 50l—every alternate day, 20l—once a week, if not on Sundays, 15l—on Sundays, 60l—for beating his wife once a-day, 200l—twice a-day, morning and evening, 400l—every alternate day, 100l—once a week, if not on Sundays, 80l—on Sundays, 500l—coming home from the tavern drunk and beating his wife into a fit of hyſterics, conſumption, or giving her a pair of black eyes, 700l—getting drunk and being, in conſequence, confined to his bed a week or two, 000l.

Meſſrs. Should you deem the preceding remarks fit for public communication, you will oblige one of your female readers, by giving them a place in your next Gazette.

I have the honor to be,
Yours, &c. &c. &c.
A FEMALE.

From the BOSTON PAPERS of the 10th of Auguſt.

LONDON, June 12.

THE French fleet of 24 ſhips of the line, failed from Toulon on the 20th May, it was ſuppoſed for Genoa. The Engliſh conſiſting of 25 ſail were as high as Minorca, and on hearing of the ſailing of the enemy commenced a vigilant look out.—The Spaniards continued in Carthagena.

The accounts from Conſtantinople are to May 10, ten days later than thoſe brought by the late arrivals. We have many other articles of too intereſting a nature to be withheld one moment from the public.—We give them entire. Let the ſpeculative reader compare, inveſtigate, and judge.

The Spaniſh fleet conſiſted of 19 ſail of the line, and was to be ready for ſea on the 5th of July.

Admiral Nelſon, with 10 or 12 ſail of the line, were at Naples, the king of which he had carried there, who was reinſtated in Naples on the 11th of May. The French army had been withdrawn and were in Tuſcany.

The army of Italy had given battle ſeveral times to the Auſtrians and Ruſſians, the reſult of which were conſtantly unfavorable to the French. All Piedmont had fallen, and Moreau retired to the ſtrong fortreſſes of Alexandria and Coni. The army of Rome had alſo retired, and was endeavoring to join Moreau, but it was thought it would not be able to accompliſh the junction.

Mantua was cloſely beſieged.

The Auſtrians under Prince Charles, got full poſſeſſion of the Griſon country, after repeated actions, it had entered Switzerland, where, on the 3d of June, a dreadful battle was fought between the Archduke Charles and Maſſena; it ended in the defeat of the French; it is ſaid that upwards of 30,000 men were killed on the field of battle. This battle was fought near Zurich; it was reported that Maſſena was wounded, but this was not generally credited. After the battle the French army retired from Zurich.

A letter had been received at Cadiz, dated Genoa, the 3d of June, which mentioned that a fleet of 24 ſail of the line was then off that place, but whether Engliſh or French was not known.

Lord St. Vincent left Minorca on the 25th of May.

The Spaniſh frigate La Carmon, of 40 guns, had captured an Engliſh ſloop of war of 18 guns, richly laden from the Eaſt Indies, and carried her into Carthagena.

"Paris, June 8. Maſſena writes to the Directory, from his head quarters near Zurich, June 3, twelve o'clock at night, as follows:

"The whole of this day has been a day of battle, and dreadfully ſevere—I have however, been able to keep my poſition, and hope to continue to defend it under the walls of Zurich.

"The Auſtrians have advanced, and now are at Zolican, half a league from this." (Publiciſte.

The ſame paper alſo contains a letter from Baſle, of the 4th June, which relates "that Maſſena had on that day abandoned Zurich, and his head quarters are now at Arleſheim, one league from Baſle."

The Swiſs Directory had retired from Lucerne to Berne.

The Publiciſte of the 2d of June, announces the evacuation of Naples by the French; it was effected by the Engliſh and Ruſſian troops, with the Sicilian volunteers, who were afterwards joined by the Neapolitans under Cardinal Ruffo, from Calabra.

A confirmation of this intelligence was received at Vienna.

Gen. Suwarrow had ſent 30,000 men againſt Rome, 12,000 to Lucca, and 10,000 were ſtationed between Placentia and Parma, to prevent the eſcape of Gen. M'Donald to Genoa.

Conſtantinople, May 10. From Syria accounts have been received by a courier of Ghezar Pacha, and likewiſe by an expreſs ſent by Sir Sydney Smith to his brother the Engliſh ambaſſador here, which mentions that the French met with a ſecond defeat in Syria. They appeared again before St. John D'Acre, & attempted to take that fortreſs by ſtorm, but here they were repulſed, and on their retreat purſued by Ghezar Pacha, with the Engliſh officers, when they had a battle, and were routed. Sir Sydney mentions that 4000 enemies lay dead on the field of battle, and the reſt were diſperſed. The greater part of their artillery and camp equipage fell into the hands of the Turks, who comparatively took but few priſoners. On the coaſt of Paleſtine the Engliſh and Turks captured ſeveral veſſels which had been ſent from Egypt with ammunition and proviſions for the French army in Syria.

Before theſe couriers arrived with the news of the victory, ſome Tartars had already on the 4th inſt. came here from Paleſtine, & mentioned the late events; but they were arreſted, becauſe the Porte had been ſo often deceived by falſe reports of a ſimilar nature—and they were even threatened to loſe their lives if they had told falſities. They were, however, quite willing to ſuffer arreſt, aſſerting that they were ſure of having their information ſhortly confirmed, as it did really happen.

Charleſton, (S. C.) Aug. 8. Yeſterday arrived the brig Aurora, capt. Corrie, from Cadiz in 37 days.

By this arrival we learn, that there had been no accounts received at Cadiz of an engagement between the fleets in the Mediterranean, before ſhe ſailed.

The Spaniſh fleet had arrived at Carthagena on the 20th May, after experiencing a ſevere gale of wind off Oran, on the Barbary coaſt, on the 16th and 17th, in which 11 ſail of the line, one frigate & a ſloop of war were diſmaſted.

The French fleet ſailed from Toulon, where it arrived in ſafety about the ſame time, and remained there until the 20th May, when it ſailed again.—It conſiſted of 24 ſail of the line; its deſtination is not known, but ſuppoſed to be Genoa.

The Spaniſh fleet went into the Mediterranean to cover an expedition which was to have been made from Carthage-ns and Barcelona againſt Minorca, but in conſequence of the fleet being diſabled it was given up.

Lower Elbe, June 29. By the Vienna Court Gazette of June 19, we learn, that the Archduke Charles was at Klattern, the 19th June. He took at Zurich, from which the French had precipitately retreated, 94 pieces of cannon.

On the 8th Prince Rofenberg attacked the enemy near Alberfhied & took it.

The enemy having been reinforced after their defeat on the 29th ult. on Mount St. Gothard, near the Devil's Bridge, diſlodged Gen. St. Julien from ſome of his advantages gained the 31ſt. However, Prince Victor Rohan advancing to Briegen, in the Walloon country, and Gen. Herbert from the Griſons, the enemy were forced to abandon the advantages they ſo recently gained.

Frontiers of Swabia, June 16. The archduke's head quarters were at Klotan the 13th. He intends giving a few days reſt to his brave army, which has been fighting with admirable perſeverance for ten days previous to the 4th inſt.

On the 13th Maſſena's head-quarters were at Waldenburg, on the road from Soleure to Baſle.

Vienna, June 12. On the 4th, 5th and 6th inſtant, the Archduke attacked the French in front of their ſtrong intrenched camp in the van of Zurich. The combat was long, obſtinate and bloody; the particulars are given at length by his Royal Highneſs. On the night of the 5th, the Archduke intended making an aſſault on all the lines; but the French retreated in ſuch haſte as to leave in their entrenchments 25 pieces of cannan, 3 howitzers, and 18 waggons. In the morning the entrenchments, and Zurich were taken poſſeſſion of. In the latter 94 cannon were found. In the attacks Gens. Hotz, Wallis and Haddic were wounded. Our loſs is very conſiderable; and our troops combatted with ſuch fury, that after ſtorming the redoubts they ſeized the French that defended them by the hair, and diſpatched them with the but-end of their fire-locks. In the height of the battle, none of the enemy's officers obtained quarter.

Milan, capital of the Ciſalpine Ex Republic, June 10. Gen Bellegarde is gone to Piedmont, from whence he will march againſt Acqui, with 12000 men, & penetrate the Genoeſe country on that ſide.

We have juſt now learned, that the van of Gen. Macdonald's army has been defeated near Lucca, by Gen. Ott, who has made many priſoners.

The fortreſs of Urbain capitulated on the 7th: 600 French priſoners arrived from Lugano.

Gen. Moreau has ſtretched his right wing towards Genoa, to ſuſtain Gen. Victor, who covers the Ligurian territory on the ſide of the Imperial fiefs.

June 11. Gen. Macdonald's army is ſtationed part on the mountains of Tuſcany, and part towards Lucca.

June 12. After Moreau had detached Generals Victor and Grenier to Genoa, Gen. V. marched to the valley of Taro, to co-operate with Macdonald. They then diſlodged Gen. Ott near Pontremoli, and beat him back as far as Parma.

Verona, June 14. In order to cover Macdonald's march by Sarzana to Genoa, Gen. Montrichard was obliged to make a movement with 8000 men againſt Modena; but Gen. Hohenzollen has repulſed Gen. Ott, who is collecting his whole force to encounter the enemy; and general Suwarrow, is haſtening with the main army towards Genoa, to ſupport him.

The city of Ferrara is raiſing a corps of 4000 guards to co-operate with the Imperial army.

We expect here an army of 12,000 Ruſſians, in all June.

The French troops in Tuſcany are joining Moreau. Every where they impoſe contributions. Even at Bologna they demanded two millions, but were offered only 230,000.

June 15. The 11th Gen. Hohenzollern ſucceeded in repulſing a corps of 8000 French, who approached Modena, and took 800 priſoners. But Gen. Macdonald's army of 30,000 appearing, the Auſtrian Gen. retired to the Po. The French extend towards Ferrara and Parma. Gen. Kray is gone in haſte to gen. Suwarrow's head quarters, to concert the plan of operations againſt M'Donald. The Duke of Parma & family have fled across the Po, where they are in ſafety.

Gen. Suwarrow will break out in forced marches from Savaja to Aleſſandria, and another battle will be deciſive of the fate of Italy. His army will conſiſt of 50,000 men. The ſiege of Mantua is ſuſpended for a ſhort time.

Vienna. June 19. Count Melas writes that Gen. Moreau had retreated, & taken a poſition near Savona, in the Gulf of Genoa, which enabled him to wait his reinforcement from Gen. Macdonald's army, and Gens. Montrichard & Grenier's diviſions, from Naples, Tuſcany and Bologna.

In order to oppoſe this junction, and to proſecute the ſieges of the citadels of Turin, Tortona and Aleſſandria, the troops under Gens. Bellegarde and Ott, the diviſions of gens. Froloch & Hohenzollern, and the brigades of gens. Seckendorf and Alcaini, are to form an army of obſervation, to act as exigencies may require. Beſides thoſe, 11,000 Ruſſians, who have marched thro' Kalchau and Peſt, will join Suwarrow, which will make his reinforcements 25,000. The proportion will therefore be kept up.

Turin, June 2. The inſurrections in Piedmont have greatly contributed to its evacuation by the French. They have had ſeveral bloody battles with the French, and have frequently been obliged to yield to the tactics and efforts of the French. All is quiet now—as the French retire the inſurrection ceaſes, & the peaſants return to their work. All the king's officers are reinſtated.

Paris, June 18. In the councils of 500 and ancients, Briot and Savery expreſſed their aſtoniſhment at the neglect of the directory to reply to the meſſage of the legiſlative aſſemblies of the 4th, on the interior and exterior ſtate of the republic: a new requeſt was made, with the addition, that the councils would remain permanent until an anſwer was received: three hours after, the directory promiſed an anſwer the next day. The council of 500 nevertheleſs continued permanent.

After a violent diſcuſſion the council ſuſpended the dictatorial power of the Directory over the Journals and Pamphlets, & proviſionally decreed ſix articles to the liberty of the preſs.

The council was informed that the directory had decreed itſelf permanent.

The councils decreed, at 11 o'clock at night, the election of Treilhard to be unconſtitutional. Treilhard immediately ceaſed his functions as director.

Yeſterday the ex-miniſter Gohier was elected, & proclaimed the new director.

The revolution of the executive power is nearly complete, and of all the directors from whom Seyes ſo lately received the fraternal embrace, on his inſtallation, there is none now remaining but Barras.

Boulay de la Meurthe, in purſuance of his plan to annihilate the dictatorial power of the directory, propoſed in the fitting of the 30th Prairial, to refer the anſwer of the directory to a ſpecial commiſſion. He expreſſed himſelf very ſtrong on this occaſion on the dictatorſhip which a triumvirate wiſhed to aſſume. I revealed to you, he ſaid, three days ago, the ſecret of the circumſtances in which we are now involved. Since the 13th of Fructidor, the executive power has aſſumed the dictatorſhip, & neglected nothing to vilify the national repreſentation: you have remained ſilent; you thought they would uſe this immenſe power for the ſalvation of the republic, but they have only employed it to bring on its ruin. They have rendered us the objects of the deteſtation of all nations. We will reſume our place in Europe, and we ſhall be beloved and reſpected. I accuſe, above all, Merlin & La Reveillière, as the authors of theſe evils. Theſe men can never remain in the executive power.

Arena informed the council of ſeveral facts, tending to inculpate the directors and the miniſter of the police, in whoſe office he ſaid they had been continually employed during four & twenty hours in burning papers; theſe papers, he added, would without doubt, have diſcovered the arbitrary and illegal meaſures of the directory, and have thrown a new light on the conſpiracy.

Francois, of Nantes, cauſed a decree to be paſſed in the name of the commiſſion of eleven members, to whom the meſſage of the directors had been referred, importing that every authority or individual who ſhould make any attempt againſt the liberty and ſecurity of the legiſlative aſſembly, either in giving orders or in executing them, ſhould be outlawed. This decree was ſanctioned on the ſame day by the council of elders. At five in the afternoon, the council of 500 received a letter from each of the directors La Reveillière and Merlin by which they gave in their reſignation in order to avoid all diſſention.

A liſt of ten candidates was immediately drawn up, out of which the council of elders elected Roger Ducos and gen. Moulin, directors.

The council then ſuſpended the ſitting until eight.

Very heavy accuſations are brought forward againſt Ramel, miniſter of the finances, & Francois Neufchateau. Gen. Joubert is appointed to the command of the military force of the capital, in the place of Gillot. The three caſhiered directors had attempted to cauſe 70 members of the council of 500 to be arreſted, which Barras oppoſed. They afterwards ordered Gen. Femares, the commandant of Paris, to arreſt 20 deputies, but he refuſed to obey the orders. Merlin, who has been called in the council of 500, a ſecond Duke of Alba, is ſaid to have committed the greateſt enormities. The numerous arbitrary arreſts are now to ceaſe, in conſequence of a decree of the council of 500.—Paris has remained perfectly quiet amidſt all theſe events. The play-houſes, coffee-houſes, public gardens and walks are crouded with company. The new director Gohier has accepted, and has already been inſtalled.

Fiume, at the head of the Adriatic, June 5. An advice boat has arrived here from Naples, with the intelligence that the Ruſſians, Turks and Engliſh had landed near the city, into which Cardinal Ruffo had penetrated, at the ſame time, with an army of 40,000 men. A bloody action is ſaid to have enſued, in which ſeveral thouſand patriots & Frenchmen were either killed or taken priſoners.

Lower Elbe, June 22. The Vienne Court Gazette of the 11th and 12th of June, received on the 20th, confirm the chief events detailed of late.

Gen. Melas, under the 3d of June, adviſes no material occurrence in the army at and round Turin. Field marſhal Frolich puſhed on beyond Pigerol, Buniculiere, and Carignona, occupied Foſſano, with a diviſion, took poſt near Savigliaw, and his patroles inveſted already the environs of Cunio, a ſtrong city on the conflux of the Shira & Geſſo.

Gen. Vukaſſovich's advanced guard had entered Carmagnola, Alba & Cherasco—in the latter he found ſeveral metal and heavy iron guns, with various ammunition. The ſiege of Turin is continued moſt rigorouſly with the guns of the city.

Gen. Luſignan was ſent againſt the French diviſion at Feneſtrelle, on the river Cluſon; and gen. Alciati has began to bombard the citadel of Tortona. The fortifications of Ceva, taken by the armed peaſants, almoſt ſurrounded by French troops, was victualled for thirty days, when the French collecting their forces cloſer, began to bombard it, and reoccupied Mondovi; but the advanced guard of Vukaſſovich forced them to quit both places a ſecond time.

Field marſhal Kray, at Caſtelluccio, on the 4th, writes of having reinforced gen. Ott, who had taken ſuch poſitions near Fernova, (famous for the ſevere battle between Charles VIII. of France, and the Duke of Milan, with his allies) as compleatly to cover Parma and Placenza. The ſiege of Mantua is continued with the moſt vigorous perſeverance.—Gen. Count Bellegrade, after taking, with unexampled bravery, the famous St. Gothard's Mount, embarked with his own diviſion, on the Lago di Como, to proceed by Milan and Pavia againſt Tortona, to join the Italian army—leaving behind him gen. Haddick to maintain the communication between Field marſhal Suwarrow, & the Archduke Charles, which is now facilitated by St. Gothard and Turin. The Archduke's troops paſſed in haſte thro' Zurich, to purſue the French, and leave them no time to take poſt againſt. Hence the whole eaſtern parts of Switzerland are evacuated.

Letters from Vienna ſtate, that Cardinal Ruffo had entered Naples, and was purſuing Macdonald very cloſely; others ſay he was approaching Rome.

They write from Venice of the 6th of June, that the Imperialiſts had entered Ceſeno, on the river Savio, and Rimini, on the river Marrechia, where they took 5 cannon, 60 priſoners, and the French Conſul of Sinegaglia.

By the Vienna Court Gazette of the 16th June, the junction of Gens. Moreau and M'Donald's armies is officially announced. From the above official as well as private accounts, it appears that General M'Donald's march was effected thro' the mountain defiles in upper Italy, and along the ſea coaſt, which enabled him to join Gen. Moreau on his retreat to the velley on the river Tonaro, and near Savona, on the Genoeſe coaſt. Here they expected alſo to be joined by Gens. Montrichard and Gaultier, from Tuſcany and Bologna. Hence the news of a general and bloody battle may ſoon be expected, and which, no doubt will decide the fate of the French in Italy.

The official accounts from Switzerland only come down to the 9th, under which date the Archduke Charles wrote to Vienna, that the French left 94 pieces of cannon in Zurich, and that the progreſſive movements to mount St. Gothard and the Devil's bridge, had been ſtopped by Col. Prince Rohan, Gens. Herbert and Haddick.

Direct letters from Switzerland ſay, that Gen. Maſſena diſputes every inch of ground, and has obtained ſome trifling advantages in the engagements ſince the 9th, which however were ſoon returned by the Imperialiſts, whoſe head quarters on the 15th were ſtill at Klatten, where Gen. Hotze and other chiefs held conferences every day.

Milan, June 3. In a magazine in this city, the Auſtrians have found in a vault the following effects which the French were not able to carry away with them: a great many cheſts with valuable paintings from Rome; the great field repoſitory of medicines, of conſiderable value; 50 cheſts with church plate; a great many bales of cloth, valued at 2,000,000; a ſmall coffer with gold bars, and forty carriages.

June 7. The following letter has been received here from Gen. Vukaſſovich:

"Ceva, June 4." I have this day entered Ceva, where I made priſoners 1800 Frenchmen, and the wives of Generals Moreau and Florella; but as I do not wage war againſt women, I ſhall ſend them both back to-morrow, to the out poſts of the French, attended by my Adjutant.

"As I was marching thro' Mondovi, I ſaw a nunnery, where the French committed exceſſes before their retreat, they cut in pieces ſome of the nuns, the reſt they cruſhed to death with blows of the but-end of their muſkets: The French are now all at Conf, which fortreſs being very ſtrong by nature, will rather retard the progreſs of our troops."

Serious troubles have broken out in the South of France, and the recruits ſent thither, deſert in great numbers.

A ſmall corps of Auſtrians and Piedmonteſe has entered the province of Maurienne, in Savoy, where the inhabitants are very ready to ſupport them.

Venice, June 3. The Imperial marine has now commenced its operations againſt the coaſt of Italy, on the Adriatic, by the taking of Caſſena.

Verona. June 9. This moment we receive advice, that the French began on the 6th inſt. to bombard violently the city of Turin, from the citadel.

Hamburgh. June 25. The Redacteur of the 11th of June, contains the important official account that the Toulon fleet after having landed troops and proviſions for the French army in Italy, and in the Ligurian republic, and after having evaded by a very ſkilful manœuvre, coming to an engagement with a ſuperior force, paſſed by Toulon on the 9th inſt.

The Moniteur of the 17th, ſtates that the Toulon fleet having 16,000 men at Leghorn, had victualled ſundry ports in Italy, had arrived ſafe at Carthagena, joined the Spaniſh fleet, and thus form a force of 30 ſail of the line.—[We look upon both theſe accounts to be falſe.]

The Britiſh force now in the Mediterranean, conſiſts of Fifty-eight ſail of the line.—The Turks, Ruſſians and Neapolitans make the combined forces 73.—The French and Spaniard have Sixty-three ſail of the line.

The Engliſh Eaſt India Company has voted Lord Nelſon 10,000l. ſterling.

June 29. The Engliſh have cloſely blockaded all the ports of the North Seas.

The Court of Pruſſia is ſaid to have refuſed the French republic a paſſage for 10,000 horſes through the line of demarcation.

New York. Aug. 26. Laſt Friday died in this city, Mr. James Chevalier, late editor of the Mercantile Advertiſer, after a violent illneſs of a few days.

The death of this gentleman is a loſs to both public and private ſociety. His conduct in every domeſtic and ſocial relation, will not ſoon be forgotten by thoſe who perſonally witneſſed it.—His public merits, as an impartial, diligent, and intelligent editor, may be eſtimated by the degree of reſpectability to which he raiſed that paper.

By this miſfortune, ſociety has loſt a moſt active and uſeful member: his friends, a worthy man; and his nearer connections have ſuffered more than the pen of ſympathy dares attempt to expreſs.

We have received London papers by the Helen, from Liverpool, to July 5. They contain no particulars of Continental events later than thoſe anticipated from Hamburg, except the French officials of the ſortie of Lengano, and of the victory gained by Macdonald over Gen. Ott, (which we have mentioned before) in which the French took 2000 priſoners, 40 officers, 12 to 15 cannon, waggons, ſtandards, and from 4 to 500 horſes. The Auſtrians the French ſay, loſt 1500 men killed and wounded, while they ſuffered only the loſs of 200 among whom, however, was gen. Foreſt.

" Citizens Repreſentatives,

"The executive directory haſten to tranſmit to the councils of 500 and of Elders, two letters, written on the 12th and 13th June, by Gen. Macdonald to Gen. Moreau, announcing two new advantages gained by the brave army of Naples, and giving the moſt ſanguine hopes of the junction of theſe two generals. The letter from Moreau, which conveys this intelligence, is dated from Genoa, on the 6th June, and adds, that Macdonald had arrived at Parma on the 14th."

Halifax, Auguſt 1. The London gazette announces the appointment of lieut. gen. the duke of Kent to be general in the army, and to be general and commander in chief of the forces in North America, vice general R. Preſcott.

Lieut. col. Wetherall is appointed adjutant general to the Britiſh forces in North America.

From the beſt information we have been able to collect, his royal highneſs the duke of Kent may be expected here in the courſe of the enſuing month.

Foreign News.

From the London gazette extraordinary.

Downing-ſtreet, June 21.

A diſpatch, of which the following is a copy, has been received from lieut. col. Crauford by the right hon. lord Grenville, his majeſty's principal ſecretary of ſtate for the foreign department.

ZURICH, June 1.

My lord,

I have the honor to inform your lordſhip, that, in conſequence of a very ſevere action which took place on the 4th inſt. Maſſena has been obliged to abandon his intrenched camp before this place, and that the Auſtrians took poſſeſſion of the town yeſterday afternoon.

In my diſpatch of the 31ſt ult. I had the honor to acquaint your lordſhip that after the affair of Winterthur, the enemy retreated behind the Glat. In the ſubſequent days, the right wing of the archduke's army, under general Nauendorf, advanced towards Beulach, the centre of prince Reuſs's colum towards Kloten, and general Hotze's to Baſſerſdorf.

In order to threaten the enemy's right flank, and in hopes of thereby inducing him to quit the poſition of Zurich (the real ſtrength of which was not known) general Zellachien was ſent with a column round the Greifenſee, and afterwards advanced towards Zurich, in connexion with an other part of gen. Hotze's corps which croſſed the Glat below Greifenſee, but conſiderably to the enemy's right. As theſe demonſtrations, however, were without effect, an attack was determined upon.

Between the Glat and Limmat is a conſiderable chin of hills, running nearly parallel to theſe rivers, and covered in moſt parts with thick woods. On this ridge, juſt in the front of Zurich, Maſſena had choſen a moſt excellent and not very extenſive poſition, which for ſeveral weeks paſt he had cauſed to be ſtrengthened by numerous entrenchments, and in which, after the affair of Winterthur, he collected a conſiderable part of the army. The right wing was poſted on the hill called the Zurich berg, which is greatly elevated above every part of the ridge within its reach, and is covered with very thick woods, in which the enemy had made conſiderable abbatis, entirely ſurrounded the hill, and defended by redoubts; and this being the moſt intereſting and deciſive point of the poſition, it was occupied by a large body of infantry; the right flank of which was thrown back en potence towards the town. The left wing of the army was placed on the continuance of the above mentioned chain of hills; likewiſe protected by extenſive woods, abbatis and entrenchments; in the centre the ground was much lower, quite free from wood and of eaſy acceſs. Through this open ſpace (which was not a cannon ſhot in extent from wood to wood) paſs the roads leading from Kloten and and Winterthur to Zurich. This is the only part of the poſition in which cavalry could have acted; but it was completely covered with a chain of redoubts, conſiderably retired, and ſerving as a curtain to connect the two wings, by which it was ſo flanked and defended as to render the attack of this line extremely difficult ſo long as the wings of the army maintained the heights on each ſide of it. The left flank was further covered by a corps poſted between Regenſberg and the Glat, having its retreat toward Baden. The only defect of the poſition in front of Zurich was, that in caſe of defeat the whole would have been obliged to defile through the town, ſituated cloſe behind the right of the poſition, and in which there is but one bridge over the Lammat; for (whether owing to the rapidity of the river or what cauſe I know not) the enemy had not, as it was ſuppoſed they would have done, conſtructed any pontoon bridges in the rear of his centre or left.

From the above-mentioned circumſtances of the enemy's ſituation, it was evident, if Zurichberg was forced, it muſt have brought on the total defeat of their army; whoſe retreat through the town, juſt at the foot of this hill, would have been attended with the greateſt difficulty.

Early in the morning of the 4th inſt. the army marched to attack the enemy. General Hotze's corps marched off to the left, croſſed the Glat, formed on the enemy's right flank, and began the attack of Zurichberg. The enemy defended this poſt with the greateſt obſtinacy, and although a conſiderable part of prince Reuſs's column was afterwards ſent to aſſiſt in this attack, it was found impoſſible to force it. The enemy was driven indeed from ſome of the abbatis and entrenchments, but maintained his principal poſition on the Zurich-berg, till night put an end to the action.

During the night and the whole of the next day, both parties remained exactly where they had ſtood at the end of the affair; the Auſtrian infantry at the end of the left wing being in many places almoſt within muſket ſhot of the enemy's abbatis and works. The great fatigue which the troops had undergone on the 4th, determined the archduke to defer, till the 6th, the renewal of the attack. But the enemy, whoſe loſs in the affair of the 4th had been very great, and who foreſaw the total ruin of his army if the Zurich-berg ſhould be forced, retired in the night from the 5th to the 6th, leaving in his entrenchments 35 pieces of cannon, 3 howitzers, and a great number of ammunition waggons. In the afternoon of the 6th, the Auſtrians occupied the town.

In the attack of the 4th inſt. the Auſtrian infantry ſuffered a conſiderable loſs in killed and wounded; among the latter were general Wallis, lieutenant-gen. Hotze, and major-general Miller. General Hotze received a muſket ſhot in the arm early in the affair, but it did not hurt the bone, and fortunately does not prevent his continuing to command his corps. His abſence at this moment would have been ſenſibly felt and ſincerely regretted.

Cherin (general of diviſion and chief of the ſtaff) together with two other French generals, were ſeverely wounded and two adjutant general's are among the priſoners, of which there are a conſiderable number.

I have the honor to be your's &c. &c.

Admiralty Office, June 22.

Extract of a letter from capt. ſir Wm. Sidney Smith, to Mr. Nepean, dated Tigre, off Tripoly, in Syria, the 2d of April.

I beg leave to tranſmit for the information of my lords commiſſioners of the admiralty, a copy of my report to the right hon. earl of St. Vincent, of late events in this quarter.

TIGRE, off St. John d'Acre, the 23d March.

MY LORD,

I have the honor to inform you, that in conſequence of intelligence from Gezar Pacha, governor of Syria, of the incurſion of general Buonaparte's army into that province, and his approach to its capital, Acre, I haſtened with a proportion of the naval force under my orders to its reliet, and had the ſatisfaction to arrive there two days before the enemy made its appearance.

Much was done in this interval under the direction of capt. Miller, of the Theſeus, and col. Phelypaux, towards putting the place in a better ſtate of defence, to reſiſt the attack of an European army; and the preſence of a Britiſh naval force appeared to encourage and decide the Pacha and his troops to make vigorous reſiſtance.

The enemy's advanced guard was diſcovered at the foot of mount Carmel, on the night of the 17th, by the Tigre's guard boats; theſe troops not expecting to find a naval force of any deſcription in Syria, took up their ground cloſe to the water ſide, and were conſequently expoſed to the fire of grape ſhot from the boats, which put them to the rout the inſtant it opened upon them and obliged them to retire precipitately up the ſide of the mount.

The main body of the army finding the road between the ſea and mount Carmel thus expoſed came in by that of Nazareth, and inveſted the town of Acre to the eaſt, but not without being much harraſſed by the Samaritan Arabs who are even more inimical to the French than the Egyptians, and better armed. As the enemy returned our fire by muſquetry only, it was evident they had not brought cannon with them, which were therefore expected by us, and meaſures were taken accordingly for intercepting them; the Theſeus was already detached off Jaffa (Joppa.)

The enemy's flotilla, which came in from ſea, fell in with and captured the Torride, and was coming round mount Carmel, when it was diſcovered from the Tigre, conſiſting of a corvette and nine ſail of gun veſſels; on ſeeing us they hauled off. The aclacrity of the ſhip's company in making ſail after them was highly praiſe worthy; our guns ſoon reached them, and ſeven as per liſt, ſtruck; the corvette, containing Buonaparte's private property, and two ſmall veſſels eſcaped, ſince it became an object to ſecure the prizes without chaſing further; their cargoes conſiſting of the battering train of artillery, ammunition, platforms, &c. deſtined for the ſiege of Acre being much wanted for its defence. The prizes were accordingly anchored off the town, manned from the ſhips, and immediately employed in harraſſing the enemy's poſts, impeding his approaches, and covering the ſhip's boats ſent further in ſhore to cut off his ſupplies of proviſions conveyed coaſtwiſe. They have been conſtantly occupied in theſe ſervices for theſe five days and nights paſt; and ſuch has been the zeal of their crews, that they requeſted not to be relieved, after many hours exerciſe laboring at their guns and oars. I am ſorry to ſay we met with ſome loſs, as per incloſed liſt, which, however, is balanced by greater on the part of the enemy, by the encourage given the Turkiſh troops from our example, and by the time that is gained for the arrival of a ſufficient force to render Buonaparte's whole project abortive. I have reaſon to be well ſatisfied with the gallantry and perſeverance of lieutenants Buſby, Inglefield, Knight, Stokes, and lieutenant Barton of the marines, and of the petty officers and men under their orders.

I have the honor to be,

LONDON, June 24.

Yeſterday Miniſters received information by the French papers, that the armies of Moreau and Macdonald had formed their junction.

Sir Ralph Abercrombre is arrived in town, ready to take the command of the ſecret expedition which is fitting out with great alacrity. It is ſo nearly ready, that a number of the ſmall veſſels taken up by government are already ordered to repair to their rendezvous.

The following is an extract of a letter from Overyſſel, dated the 9th inſt,

"It is the general belief here, that the king of Pruſſia will undoubtedly take an active part in reeſtabliſhing the ancient government of this country and is only waiting the farther progreſs of the armies in Italy and Switzerland before he begins to act. this heightens the intereſt of ſome of the inhabitants, while it depreſſes that of the patriots or French party. Four or five of the patriots have, within theſe ten days, made away with themſelves amongſt whom is one who was formerly of the regency here, and till very lately in the directory. Others of the ſame party are removing their effects to holſtein and Denmark, and it is ſaid that gen. Daendals is amongſt the number. He has already asked for his dismission, which, has been refused. In the mean time, their troops are marching towards the frontiers, on which batteries have been erected. Four are erected, near hardenberg, and the town of Covorden is already casemated and garrisoned."

A letter from on board the Swiftsure, of 74 guns, contains the following particulars. Several persons arrived at Syracuse the latter end of March, from Triboli, related, that in compliance with the desire of the Porte, the state had declared war against France.—Some time after, an ambassador from Buonaparte arrived with presents to the Bey, who, after a short negociation, took the consul, and other French into high favour, and entered into a treaty with Buonaparte, by which the Moor consented to give to the new Prophet, and his followers, safe conduct through the territory of Tripoli: to allow them the free use of its ports, and to supply them with whatever he possessed, and they might stand in need of.

PLYMOUTH DOCK, June 22.

Sailed yesterday, his Majesty's ship's Saturn, 74 guns, captain Porty; Magnanime, 44 guns, capt. Taylor; Amelia, 44 guns, capt. Herbert; Stag, 18 guns, capt. Grosvenor; Spitfire, capt. Seymore; Balfleur, capt. Reynard; and Constitution and Lady Jane cutters, on a cruize, with the wind at S. W.

BELFAST, June 28.

On Wednesday last, James Crosier of Lisb was brought in under a military escort, and loged in the Provot prison. This person is suspected of being an accomplice in the murder of Wm. M'Bride, who was shot in North street, on the 29th October, 1796.—Two others are in custody suspected of the same crime.

INSPRUCK, June 20.

From Castel Lucio, of the 14th or 15th of June, we learn that Macdonald with 1500 men approached the Po, and endeavoured, by Revere, opposite Ostiglia, and by Stella, to pass it; but the river was so rapid it could not be done.

Parma, Regio Modena, are occupied by the French again. The Ducal Family have fled towards Mantua.—Macdonald seems to be directing his cowards to Placeza, where he must come to a decisive engagement, for General Bellegarde is marching directly thither with 14,000 men; and he has on his right flank by Ferara, Gen. Kleman; and on his left, Gens. Ott and Hohenzollern. It is not known whether Macdonald means to succour Mantua, or unite with Moreau. His whole army is 30,000

BERN, June 15.

Massena has received some reinforcements. He proposes to unite the French and Helvetion troops.

The Helvetic government, which removed from Lucerne to Berne, is now gone to Lausanne.

Austrian head quarters.

The Archduke will soon make a grand attack. The enemy keeps its position behind Zurich. They were twice repulsed in attempting to draw our troops from before the city. The Archduke is in very good health.

VIENNA, June 22.

The enemy has quitted both cantons Glaric and Uri.

The Archduke Charles has found in and about Zurich 177 pieces of cannon

The troops of the Italyon army (says general Metas) are in full march thro' Alessandria to join Suwarrow, who, with a great part of the Russians, will pursue his further operations, and the same time to continue the siege of the castle of Turin.

It is said Moreau has not been joined by Macdonald's troops, but that 15,000 men were left at Savona, which added a very great superiority to the French. Besides their position is very advantageous.

F. M. Kray has already joined Suwarrow. The siege of Tortona, Alessandria and Turin, will go on with all speed. A stop will be made in the siege of mantua for a while, and will be only blockaded.

As soon as Tortona and Alessandria fall, or reinforcements arrive, an attack is to be made on Moreau's army.

The Russian auxilliaries came to Liavach on the 19th; they go (not as was said to Cortz) but by Trien and thence over the Po to the army.

The Prince Pauktation came hither from Italyon the 18th, to lead the Russian troops passing this way into Italy.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, October 5.

BY several hints which from time to time have appeared in the Constellation, the designs of which it was impossible to misconstrue, the printers discovered an early intention to draw us into a paper war; but esteeming our time too valuable to be thrown away in a contest with such antagonists we passed them over in silence, willing that they should enjoy in quiet the triumph of having invited us to a childish combat, in which we have no ambition to take a part. We contemn their silly ribaldry so far as it relates to us; and cannot help pitying those who pay for it "in advance."

What we only hinted before we now speak plainly; it is needless to observe delicacy towards those who are insensible to its impressions.

We have pointed out to observation a mean trick of the Constellation, and aim at nothing further. A war of ink we despise. Though the printers of that paper may, until they awaken to a sense of shame, of which we have small hopes at present, continue to deal out their scurrillity in any direction they please, 'tis their vocation, and we do not envy them the grovelling satisfaction they derive from it, and whatever good effect, superlative vanity may induce them to expect from any of their chaste productions, we shall never attempt to undeceive them.

LONDON, June 13.

THE Hamburgh mail of Yeſterday, though it has brought no account of ſtriking events, is yet to be conſidered as of very great importance for the events which it either announces or confirms.

The great natural bulwarks of Switzerland, the Rhine and the Alps, are paſſed. The Auſtrians have made good their footing it that difficult country.

The plan of the campaign is compleatly reverſed. Inſtead of the co-operation of Jourdan and Sherer in invading Auſtria, we ſee the junction of the archduke and Suwarrow threaten the whole eaſtern frontier of France.

Much time may yet be ſpent, and much blood may undoubtedly be ſpilt before Maſſena be expelled from Switzerland; but it is quite obvious that his preſent object is only to gain time for covering the frontiers of Alſace and Franche Comte.

The letters of the beſt informed men from the continent, repreſent all idea of retaining Switzerland as abandoned by the French. They who cannot defend the Rhine and the Alps have no hopes in weaker poſitions.

It is now three months that private letters from Ruſſia announce, that the Swediſh fleet of flat bottomed veſſels will join the Ruſſian galley fleet, which was to ſail upon a certain expedition in the courſe of June. Sweden has alſo recalled its Ambaſſador from Paris, and the declaration ſince made by the king of Sweden to the Diet, ſhews that theſe meaſures were preconcerted long ago.

The Brunn gazette, brought by the Hamburgh mail of this day, ſays the Egyptians are in inſurrection againſt the French.

The firſt victory of the imperial army under field marſhal Suwarrow was on the 15th ultimo celebrated at Pitſburgh by a ſolemn Te Deum. On this occaſion the emperor gave a ſignal mark of honor to the brave officer, by ordering Suwarrow's name to be mentioned in the prayer of thanksgiving. Never has ſo much honor been ſhewn to the chief of an army. Prayers were offered up to God to bleſs the arms of the combined armies and marſhal Suwarrow who commands them. Divine ſervice being over, the ſon of the field marſhal, a youth of 16, charmed with the honor done to his father, waited upon the emperor embraced his knees and thanked him with the moſt heartfelt emotion.—The monarch charmed with the ſentiments of this youth aſked him, if he ſhould not like to travel to his father? "It is the moſt fervent of my wiſhes," joyfully replied the youth.—Then depart, continued the emperor, "you appear to be worthy of ſuch a father"—This young nobleman actually ſet out for Italy on the 27th ult.

The Hamburgh mail due yeſterday arrived in courſe. It brings, however, little new intelligence. The ſhort diſpatch in the laſt gazette is later than any intelligence from Italy which the mail brings.

Our readers will find a full account of all the movements of the armies, as extracted from the moſt credible of the German journals; and they will ſee from theſe that Moreau, in his reduced ſtate, with an army of not more than 18,000 men has diſplayed maſterly ſkill in avoiding an action, and in preventing the allies from following their victories with that celerity and promptitude which policy demanded on their parts. It appears that the French general has taken his ſtand on the ſtrong poſitions of Piedmont, where in all probability he would be able to receive ſtrong reinforcements from Angereau's army, as well as from Switzerland, and having ſo many fortreſſes of the firſt order in his hand, it is by no means improbable that he may ſoon be in a ſtate to reſume the offenſive. The preſent war has bee truly called a war of revolution, and its reverſes have been ſo rapid, that neither ſide ought to be greatly moved, either by ſucceſs or defeat.—Miniſters have received the particulars of the capitulation of Milan, together with other advices from Italy ſeveral days later than the mail. They will be made public in a gazette extraordinary this day, and we ſhall then learn whether the Auſtrio Ruſſian army has been able to follow the French into piedmont, to cut off the army of general M'Donald. To attempt the latter, general Kray, after turning the ſiege of Mantua into a blockade, has marched towards Tuſcany with a conſiderable force.

The letters from the borders of Switzerland come down to the 30th, but there are no official details. After a number of hard fought actions, the French under Maſſena have been compelled to fall back. General Hotze has effected his junction with the archduke. The diviſion of the Auſtrians under Bellegarde, are likewiſe to co-operate in attacking Switzerland at another point by the little cantons. It is thought that Maſſena can have no alternative but to entrench himſelf ſtrongly in a ſimi-circular poſition ſtretching thro' the country of Getz and Montjura, in order to parry the attack which is threatened.

CONSTANCE, May 26.

Yeſterday a bloody action was fought between Frauenfeld and Winterthur.—The three imperial regiment of Gemmingen, Kerpen and Kinſki dragoons, found themſelves ſuddenly attacked from two ſides, by a three times ſuperior number of French troops, who ruſhed out of the foreſts. But they fought with the utmoſt reſolution till other columns of gen. Hotze's corps came to their relief. Gen Hotze himſelf was preſent every where; he galloped about three hours on his Engliſh charger, and the latter being ready to drop, he mounted common horſes, and thus haſtened from one regiment to another: all the troops performed prodigies of valor, and fought with the greateſt fury. The regiment of Kinſki ſignalized itſelf in a particular manner: among the French were many Swiſs, whom they forced to go in front. Yeſterday coſt a great number of men on both ſides—In the evening Hotze united himſelf with general Nauendorf.

JUNE 15.

Lord Bridport, in the Royal Sovereign, with one 74 gun ſhips and three frigates, arrived off Plymouth on thurſday afternoon, and it was ſuppoſed that the reſt of his fleet were on the coaſt, having left the Iriſh ſtation, where their ſervices were no longer neceſſary.

WE this morning received Paris papers to the 9th inſt. and which contain more important intelligence than any that have reached this country for a long time paſt. By the proceedings of the council of five hundred of the 16th inſt. it ſeems that a violent rupture has actually taken place between the legiſlative body and the executive directory. The addreſs of the former to the latter is full of complaints and reproaches, and undiguiſedly ſtates that a fermentation very generally exiſts, and that they are ſurrounded by dangers.

The council of five hundred, beſides their addreſs to the directory which thus ſo fully unveils the deſperate condition of their country, have publiſhed a proclamation to the French people.—In this they cenſure the conduct of the agents of the directory, and call on the people to ſupport themſelves in the difficult ſituation in which they ſtand. The addreſs is couched in very ſtrong language.

JUNE 18.

The Conſtitution cutter arrved at plymouth, on Saturday: She looked into Breſt on the 12th inſt. and ſaw two line of battle ſhips in the outer Road and three frigates. The latter got under ſail, wind N. E. and by E. ran about half paſt two about four miles to St. Mathias Point, and hove too. As the Anſon and Unicorn were in ſight, they lay there till night, when they hauled their wind for Breſt.

We this day preſent our readers with ſome further intereſting intelligence which the laſt French papers contain.

The Paris papers acknowledge, what we have already learned by col. Crauford, that gen. Bellegarde had driven gen. Lacourbe from St. Gothard. The latter was behind the valley of Durſe rum and was endeavoring to cover the approach to Altorf. This intelligence ſhews us, that including the Griſon country more than half of Switzerland is already delivered from the uſurpers, who in vain ſhed their blood to maintain their cruel dominion in that country.

JUNE 19.

No further information has been received, either from earl St. Vincent, or reſpecting the Toulon fleet. It is now generally underſtood that no advices have been received from his lordſhip ſince he was off Carthagena. The ſtatements therefore, of his having blockaded up the Breſt fleet in Toulon, are founded rather upon what might be expected, than upon intelligence received.

Unofficial and unconfirmed as was the aſſertion in the Paris papers of the 11th, of the diſembarking of 16,000 men at Leghorn, well informed men begin to attach ſome belief to it. The policy of reinforcing general M'Donald, in order to enable him to effect his retreat, is obvious

Great exertions are making at Breſt to fit out the remaining ſhips of war in that harbor; when they are ready, which it appears by the laſt Paris papers they were expected to be in a few days, the Ferrol ſquadron, it is ſuppoſed, will make an attempt to ſail.

Sieyes, in his ſpeech on his inſtallation, carefully avoids any mention of the ſentiments and principles of the Pruſſian cabinet. In his reply to Sieyes Merlin of Douai merely ſays, that the new directory is come from a friendly power; words too general to enable us to form any opinion of the politics by which Pruſſia is actuated, or the part ſhe means to take.

SUN Office, 3 o'clock.

WE ſtop the preſs to ſtate that an account has reached town from Holland, within theſe two hours, that the king of Pruſſia had entered Guelderland, at the head of an army, and that the patriots were flying in every direction before them.

Marſhal Suwarrow has apprized gen. Moreau, that if he ſhall dare to put any French emigrants, in the Ruſſian ſervice, to death, who may chance by the fortune of war to fall into his hands, he will inſtantly order one hundred republican priſoners to be ſhot for every man Moreau kills.

Extract of a letter from Berne, of the 30th June.

"The Helvetic directory have arrived here ſince the 1ſt of this month, and in a few days all the conſtituted authorities will be aſſembled.

Although the French army fight like heroes, and the Swiſs are equal to them yet the enemy's army is ſo ſuperior in number that general Maſſena, is forced to concentrate his force, and to act upon the defenſive. He, however, diſputes every foot of ground with the Auſtrians and at this moment Surich is in our poſſeſſion.

"It is pretended here that the French government has given order to evacuate Switzerland, nothing can be more falſe; gen. Maſſena has declared, that ſo far from abondoning Switzerland, he will defend it to the laſt drop of his blood."

The Turco-Ruſſian Squadron has begun to bombard Ancona, and has already ſet fire to part of the building of that city.

There is preſerved in the office of Foreign affairs, the original of a letter written by Suwarrow to the municipality of Grenoble, in which he threatens them with all his fury if they do not ſend back the Pope to Milan.

JUNE 17.

The next advices from the E. Indies will bring deciſive intelligence reſpecting the ſentiments and conduct of Tippo. It was demanded of him that he ſhould follow the example of the Nizam, and diſmiſs the French officers in his ſervice. His reply was evaſive and unſatisfactory; a poſitive anſwer was deſired in twenty days When the laſt expreſs left India, that anſwer had not been received, but very active meaſures were taking by lord MORNINGTON to act with vigor and promptitude, in caſe that reply ſhould be unſatisfactory.

The firſt offenſive operation will be to ſeize the port of Mangalore, on the Malabar coaſt, and thus cut off the principal means by which the French correſpend with Tippo by ſea.

The moſt active preparations are making for the intended expedition, ſuppoſed to be deſtined for the low countries. Gen. ſir Ralph Abercrombie has been recalled from Scotland, for the purpoſe, it is aſſerted, of being appointed to this command, and general Stewart it is expected, will likewiſe be employed. Sixteen ſhips, chiefly 50 & 44 guns are preparing to carry, and a conſiderable number of the guards are to be ſent. Before this expedition takes place it is ſuppoſed the French will be attacked in great force by the Ruſſians and Auſtrians on the Lower Rhine.

YARMOUTH, June 14.

Yeſterda morning the Ruſſian ſquadron under the command of admiral Tate, conſiſting of four ſhips of the line and a 40 gun frigate, ſailed to join the fleet now off the Texel.

STUTGARD, June 3.

It is ſaid that General Vucaſſowich has intercepted in Piedmont a courier of General Maſſena; and that General Moreau in his diſpatches had complained of not receiving reinforcements from France, and made rather an unfavourable ſtatement of his poſition. In his rear, in the province of Mondovi, there was an inſurrection of 10,000 peaſants, who had carried off his ſmall ſtores and convoys, whilſt the enemy's army in front formed a demicircle round him towards Verne, Caſſal, Tortona and Novi. In this critical ſituation he had no other alternative than that of marching againſt the peaſants of Mondovi, in order to ſecure his rear before the enemy joined the inſurgents, and cut off his retreat to Coni. One thing not leſs extraordinary is, that the army of Naples, the firſt column of which had proceeded towards Rome ſince the 3d Floreal (April 2) had not effected its junction with Gen. Moreau on the 17th It appears that its progreſs has been retarded by two cauſes; the one that gen. Scherer had directed it to proceed by Romagna, Bologna, & Ferrara, by which it could only enter Tuſcany, by going conſiderably out of the way; and the other that the columns of this army have been much harraſſed on their road, not only by the inſurgents, but by the Anglo Neapolitans, who made a deſcent upon his rear, in order to oblige him to turn and give battle.

FRANCE.

PARIS, June 8.

Council of Five Hundred.

Sitting of June 6.

AFTER the general committe of yeſterday, the council formed in a public ſitting, adopted on the propoſition of Boulay, the following order:

"The council of five hundred, on the report of ſeveral united committees orders that a meſſage ſhall be ſent to the executive directory to the following effect:

"Citizen directors,

"The French government is inſtituted for ſecuring the preſervation and well being of the people.

"The legiſlative body and the executive directory form the two principal parts of this government. Theſe two authorities ſhould underſtand one another, and ought to proceed in concert to attain the common object of their inſtitution. Their means of correſpondence are regulated by the conſtitution, as well as the reſpective duties of the two authorities.

"That the legiſlative body makes laws, and the directory execute them; thus the directory is ſpecially commiſſioned to provide according to theſe laws, for the interior and exterior ſafety of the republic.

"As to the external ſafety, the directory is ſpecially placed by the conſtitution as a ſort of advance guard, as the firſt centinel to obſerve the deſigns and movements of other people and when they perceive that they endanger the exiſtence, or the juſt rights of the nation, they may alone act proviſionally for its ſecurity; but they ought in this caſe to adviſe the legiſlative body without delay, who will thereupon adopt the meaſures which it may think moſt agreeable to the preſervation and dignity of the people whom they repreſent.

"Citizen directors, every thing announces that the ſafety of the nation from without is threatened, and that the interior tranquility may be involved in it.

"From without we have to ſuſtain a violent war; ſix months ago we were every where victorious; it appears now that the enemy has obtained ſome advantages over us.

"The public voice announces that ſome powers who have hitherto taken no part, at leaſt apparently, in the war are againſt us in arms, and in a ſtate of hoſtility, not only imminent, but real.

"In theſe circumſtances the Council of five hundred had reaſon to expect that the communications required by the conſtitution would be made to them."

THE ORACLE.

YORK. Saturday, October 12.

THE emperor of Ruſſia, ſays a London paper of the 22d of June, having as a mark of friendſhip towards his majeſty, and of eſteem and regard towards his majeſty's naval ſervice particularly towards the officers and crews of the ſhips who ſerved on the 1ſt of Auguſt, 1798, under the command of rear-admiral lord Nelſon, ſignified to his majeſty's miniſter at Pitſburgh his deſire, that the Leander, of 50 guns, which having been engaged in that action was after a moſt gallant and vigorous reſiſtance captured on its paſſage home by a French 74, and has ſince been recaptured from the enemy by his imperial majeſty's arms at the ſurrender of Corfu, ſhould be preſented to his majeſty, in his imperial majeſty's name, with a view to its being reſtored to his naval ſervice.

The King has been pleaſed to accept, with the higheſt ſatisfaction, this diſtinguiſhed mark of attention and friendſhip on the part of his ally; and has directed the Leander ſhould be received accordingly, from ſuch an officer as the emperor of Ruſſian may direct to deliver the ſame, and ſhould again be placed amongſt the ſhips compoſing his majeſty's fleet employed in the Mediterranian.

Placenza, June 23.

My Lord,

SINCE I had the honor of writing to your lordſhip yeſterday, the very important news of the ſurrender of the citadel of Turin has arrived.—The garriſon is to return to France immediately, to be exchanged for an equal number of Auſtrian priſoners. Gen. Fiorella, the commandant of the citadel, and all the French officers taken with him, are detained as hoſtages till the articles of capitulation are executed. Field marſhal arrived here this morning with the main army; he will march to-morrow towards Aleſſandria, in order to cover the ſieges of that town and Tortona. Generals Klenau and Hohenzolern at Parma. Gen. M'Donald has retreated with his whole corps by fort Nova towards Genoa.

I have the honor to be,

BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF PEERS, JULY 12.

The Prorogation.

AT 3 o'clock his majeſty came down to the houſe in the uſual ſtate, and being ſeated on the throne in his royal robes, the gentleman uſher of the black rod was deputed to order the attendance of the commons who forthwith appeared at the bar with the ſpeaker at their head. The ſpeaker then addreſſed his majeſty in a judicious and well delivered ſpeech, in which, as is uſual on ſuch occaſions, he expatiated on the leading events of the ſeaſon, and cheerfulneſs with which his majeſty's faithful commons had granted the required ſupplies for the publice ſervice, &c. &c. &c.

His Majeſty was then graciouſly pleaſed to give his perſonal aſſent to eleven bills; among which were the militia reduction, the conſolidated fund, the judges appointment, and the Scots ſmall note bills. After which his majeſty cloſed the ſeſſion with the following SPEECH from the throne:

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"The favorable appearance which I announced to you at the commencement of the preſent ſeſſion, have ſince been followed by ſucceſſes beyond my moſt ſanguine expectations. By the progreſs of the imperial arms under the command of the archduke Charles of Auſtria; a great part of Switzerland has already recovered its ancient religion, laws and liberties; and the uninterrupted and brilliant victories of the combined armies under the command of field marſhal Suwarrow, have in the ſhort period which had elapſed ſince the opening of the campaign, nearly accompliſhed the deliverance of Italy from the degrading yoke of the French republic.

"The deciſion and energy which diſtinguiſh the councils of my ally the emperor of Ruſſia, and the intimate union and concert happily eſtabliſhed between us, will enable me to employ to the greateſt advantage, the powerful means which you have entruſted to me, for eſtabliſhing on permanent grounds, the ſecurity and honor of this country, and the liberty and independence of Europe.

"I have the ſatisfaction of ſeeing that internal tranquility is in ſome degree reſtored in my kingdom of Ireland. The remaining naval force of the enemy to a diſtant quarter, muſt nearly extinguiſh even the precautious hope which the traitors and diſaffected have entertained of foreign aſſiſtance.—But our great reliance for the immediate ſafety of that country, muſt ſtill reſt on the experienced zeal and bravery of my troops of all deſcriptions, and the unſhaken loyalty and voluntary exertions of my faithful ſubjects of both kingdoms. Its ultimate ſecurity can alone be ſecured by its intimate and entire union with Great-Britain; and I am happy to obſerve that the ſentiments manifeſted by numerous and reſpectable deſcriptions of my Iriſh ſubjects, juſtify the hope that the accompliſh of this great and ſalutary work will be proved to be as much the joint wiſh as it unqueſtionably is the common intereſt, of both my kingdoms.

"The proviſions which you have made for ſuppreſſing thoſe dangerous and ſeditious ſocieties which had been formed for the purpoſe of diſſeminating the deſtructive principles of the French revolution, and peculiarly adapted to the circumſtances of the times, and have furniſhed additional ſecurity to the eſtabliſhed conſtitution.

"Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

"The unuſual ſacrifices which you have made in the preſent moment on behalf of my ſubjects are wiſely calculated to meet effectually the exigences of this great criſis. They have at the ſame time given additional ſecurity to public credit, by eſtabliſhing a ſyſtem of finance beneficial alike to yourſelves and to poſterity; and the cheerfulneſs with which theſe heavy burthens are ſupported, evince at once the good ſenſe, the loyaly and the public ſpirit of my people.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"It is impoſſible to compare the events of the preſent year with the ſtate and proſpects of Europe at the diſtance of but a few months, acknowledging, in humble thankfulneſs, the viſible interpoſition of Divine Providence, in averting thoſe dangers which ſo long threatened the overthrow of all the eſtabliſhments of the civilized world!

"It may be permitted to us to hope that the ſame protecting Providence will continue to us its guidance through the remainder of this eventful conteſt, and will conduct it finally to ſuch an iſſue as ſhall tranſmit to future ages a memorable example of the inſtability of all power founded upon injuſtice, uſurpation and impiety; and ſhall prove the impoſſibility of ultimately diſſolving the connection between public proſperity and public virtue."

JULY 24.

Downing-Street, July 23.

Diſpatches of which the following are extracts, were this day received from the right hon. lord Henley by the right hon. lord Grenville, his majeſty's principal ſecretary of ſtate for the foreign department.

Extract of a letter from lord Henley to lord Grenville, dated Vienna, July 6,

The letters from Conſtantinople of the 18th paſt, ſtate, that official intelligence had been received by the Turkiſh government from Acre, that the garriſon of that place had been made, on the 21ſt May, a general ſally againſt the army of general Buonaparte, had completely defeated it, and put a great part of it to the ſword; that general Buonaparte had, in conſequence, found himſelf obliged to ſet fire to his camp and baggage, and to avail himſelf of the darkneſs of the night to retire towards Joppa; that Gezar Pacha had immediately not only ſent his cavalry in purſuit of him, but had diſpatched orders to prepare places in as far as might be poſſible to ſtraiten or cut off his retreat and that the heads of 13 French generals and 300 French officers, ſent by different Tartars, had arrived at Conſtantinople, and had been expoſed according to cuſtom, on the gate of the palace, with a ſuitable inſcription.

A ſecond meſſenger from marſhal Suwarrow, diſpached from Aleſſandria on the 1ſt inſt. is juſt arrived. I am informed that, beſides a detailed relation of the brilliant ſucceſſes of the imperial army on the 17th, 18th and 19th paſt, and by which it apears, that the loſs of the French amounts in all to twenty thouſand men killed and taken priſoners, he brings an account of the Auſtrians having occupied the town of Tortona.

Extract of a letter from lord Henley to lord Grenville, dated July 9.

An expreſs arrived yeſterday with diſpatches from gen. Kray of the 1ſt inſt. mentioning the ſurrender of Bologna by capitulation, to gen. Klenau on the proceding day.

In addition to the intelligence which I lately conveyed to your lordſhip of the defeat of gen. Buonaparte, and his flight towards Joppa, I have now to ſtate this government has received official accounts from Conſtantinople, dated 22d paſt, that Joppa had been taken by the allied force, (meaning, it is to be ſuppoſed that under ſir Sidney Smith and a body of Turks) that Buonaparte had reached El Ariſt, on the frontier of Syria, in his flight; and that it was ſcarcely to be believed that in his preſent circumſtances of diſtreſs he would be able to gain in ſafety the Egyptian ſide of the deſert.

A letter received from Carthagena, dated June 29, 5 o'clock P. M. ſays: The French fleet is all out, and the Spaniſh is getting under way.

JULY 25.

We have the pleaſure of ſtating, that the homeward bound Jamaica and Liſbon fleets have paſſed by Portſmouth in perfect ſafety.

Letters from Conſtantinople, dated June 24, ſtate, that the firſt diviſion of the Turkiſh fleet that failed from thence early in March, conſiſted of three ſhips of the line, three frigates, and ſome inferior veſſels, reached Acre on the 19th of May, juſt before the retreat of the enemy towards Joffa. The enemy fled from Acre with 7000 men.

A letter from Dover, dated July 24, at two o'clock in the morning, ſays—"There is now off this place, a very heavy firing, an engagement no doubt. It is very dark, and has a fine effect."

A letter from Copenhagen, dated July 18, ſays, "on the 8th inſt. we had an account from Elſineur that ſeveral maſters of veſſels gave information of 12 Ruſſian ſhips of the line having been ſeen between Bornholm and Iceland, with troops on board. The ſame accounts alſo ſtate, that the king of Sweden, upon hearing that the Swediſh convoys were condemned in England, immediately ſent general Zoli to Peterſburgh. It is alſo ſaid, that England will reſtore the Swediſh ſhips, if Swedin declares war againſt France. Ten ſhips of the line are to be fitted out at Carliſcrona.

Downing-ſtreet, July 28.

Diſpatches, of which the following are extracts, were this day received from the right hon. lord Henly, by the right hon. lord Grenville, his Majeſty's principal ſecretary of ſtate for the foreign department.

Extract of a letter from lord Henly to lord Grenville, dated Vienna, July 6.

The letters from Conſtantinople of the 18th ult. ſtate that official intelligence had been received by the Turkiſh government from Acre, that the garriſon of that place had made on the 11th of May, a general ſally againſt the army of Buonaparte, had compleatly defeated it, and put a great number to the ſword; that Buonaparte, had, in conſequence, found himſelf obliged to ſet fire to his camp and baggage, and to avail himſelf of the darkneſs of the night to retire towards Joppa; that Ghezzar Pacha had immediately not only ſent his cavalry in purſuit of him, but had diſpatched orders to proper places in as far as might be poſſible to ſtraiten or cut off his retreat; and that the heads of thirteen French officers, ſent by different Tartars, had arrived at Conſtantinople, and had been expoſed, according to cuſtom, on the gate of the palace, with a ſuitable inſcription.

A ſecond meſſenger from marſhal Suwarrow, diſpatched from Aleſſandria on the 1ſt inſt. is juſt arrived. I am informed that beſides a detailed account of the brilliant ſucceſſes of the Imperial army on the 17th, 18th and 19th paſt, and by which it apears, that the loſs of the French amounts in all twenty thouſand men killed and taken priſoners, he brings an account of the Auſtrians having re-occupied the town of Tortona.

Extract of a letter from lord Henly to lord Grenville, dated July 9.

An expreſs arrived yeſterday with diſpatches from gen. Kray of the 1ſt inſt. mentioning the ſurrender of Bologna, by capitulation, to gen. Klenau on the preceding day.

In addition to the intelligence which I lately conveyed to your lordſhip of the defeat of gen. Buonaparte, and his flight towards Joppa, I have now to ſtate that this government has received official accounts from Conſtantinople, dated the 22d paſt, that Joppa had been taken by the allied force, (meaning, it is to be ſuppoſed, that under ſir Sidney Smith and a body of Turks,) That Buonaparte had reached El Ariſt, on the frontiers of Syria, in his flight; and that it was ſcarcely to be believed that in his preſent circumſtances of diſtreſs he would be able to gain in ſafety the Egyptian ſide of the deſert.

The maſter of the Ville de Paris, lord St. Vincent's flag ſhip, arrived at the admiralty this morning, with diſpatches from his lordſhip, and advices from gen. Cuyler. Theſe diſpatches confirm the former accounts received of the junction of the French and Spaniſh fleets. There had been no action at the date of the diſpatches.

PORTSMOUTH, July 24.

Arrived La Suffiſante, and Haerlem, men of war: the latter brings word that in coming down the Mediterranean from Naples, in company with the Centaur, they fell in with three frigates and two corvettes, who each fired a ſingle ſhot, and ſurrendered: their names are the Alceſte, of 36 guns, 460 men, with an admiral's flag, Juno, 44 guns, 560 men, Courageaux, 44 guns, 500 men, and 2 corvettes of 16 guns each.

It is currently reported, and generally credited, that the Haerlem, on the 8th inſt. left the Engliſh fleet, commanded by lord Keith, engaging the combined fleets of France and Spain, full of troops, near Gibraltar; the former conſiſting of 34 ſail of the line, the latter of near 50.—The Haerlem was ſent home by ſignal from the commander.

BOSTON, September 6.

THE GRAND FLEETS.

Capt. Preble has arrived ſince our laſt from Malaga and Gibraltar. Sailed from the latter place July 20. News was received that the French & Spaniſh fleets, having joined at Carthagena, conſiſting of 43 ſail of the line, 14 frigates and 5 corvettes, had paſſed out of the Streits and got into Cadiz. A Britiſh frigate came into Gibraltar July 20 in 10 days from Port Mahon, where ſhe left the Britiſh fleet of 31 ſail of the line ready to ſail in purſuit of the French and Spaniſh. They were expected to paſs by Gibraltar every hour, as the wind was ſtrong at the eaſtward. Admiral Saint Vincents was at Gibraltar and had diſpatched veſſels to watch the combined fleet; this fleet paſſed Gibraltar July 6. Four Ruſſian men of war were at Gibraltar, ready to join the Engliſh fleet.

The combined fleet carried into Cadiz with it, the Barbara, Clark, of Boſton; the ——, Mountford, of New York; and a Philadelphia ſhip.

Capt. P. further informs, that the inhabitants of Gibraltar murmured much at the apparent negligence of the Britiſh admirals who had ſuffered the hoſtile and formidable fleets thus to elude them. Earl St. Vincents was agitated with extreme anxiety.

Capt. P. coming from Gibraltar paſſed near the ſhore through Cadiz bay, but ſaw nothing to indicate that the combined fleet remained there. As the wind had blown freſh at the eaſtward he imagined they had ſailed again. He ſaw a frigate which appeared to be making ſignals; but ſhe evaded him.

In coming down the ſtreits the combined fleet was preceded by frigates, ahead of each other to convey ſeaſonable intelligence of the Engliſh. The headmoſt of theſe frigates [Spaniſh] was engaged by an Algerine brig, built in the U. States, the conflict was obſtinate and bloody. It appeared that the Turk would have captured the Spaniard had not the fleet appeared in ſight, when, being unable to eſcape he ſurrendered.

The object of the combined fleet was totally unknown. But there can be no doubt ſomething highly important is contemplated. Perhaps the next ſtep will be to releaſe the Dutch navy from the Texel.

UTICA, September 23.

Under the London head of July 25, are various articles reſpecting the fleets; but the moſt recent authentic information on the ſubject, has been received by an arrival at Boſton, from Gibraltar and is as follows:

BOSTON, Sept. 11.

Lateſt from the fleets.

Capt. Ozias Goodwin, who arrived here yeſterday from Gibraltar, on the 22d July, in lat 36, 6 long 9, 57, ſpoke the caroline Britiſh frigate, from the captain of which he learnt, that the combined French and Spaniſh fleets ſailed the day before (July 21) from Cadiz;--that he had been watching the fleets that morning.

Capt. Hills alſo ſpoke the frigate, and obtained ſimilar intelligence; and that at 2, A M the fleets were ſtanding to weſtward. On the 25th July, ſpoke Daniſh ſhip, the maſter of which informed him, that he had been boarded by one of the French cruizers, from the officer of which he learned, that the combined fleet was ſtanding N N W diſtance ſeven leagues. At 6, A M capt. H. bore away to avoid the fleets.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, October 19.

The duke of Kent arrived at Halifax the 12th of September, in the Arethuſa frigate, in 43 days paſſage.

The ſecret expedition took place on the 22d of July, under the command of ſir Ralph Abercrombie.

Our readers will obſerve that the accounts in the Gazette repreſented Buonaparte's force before Acre as almoſt completely deſtroyed, the feeble remains of his army having fled firſt to Joppa, and being driven from thence, afterwards to Ariſt, on the frontiers of Syria, from whence it was expected he would never be able to reach the Egyptian ſide of the deſart. On the other hand the Paris paper ſtates, but without any accompanying circumſtances to render it probable, that Buonaparte, after making a feint retreat from Acre, had returned in the night, taken the place, and made Sir Sydney Smith, the Turkiſh governor, and the whole garriſon priſoners!!

According to ſome accounts, Buonaparte, for the ſake of his perſonal ſafety has put himſelf under the protection of the Engliſh.

THE hoſtile fleets in the Mediterranean, in magnitude and number far exceed any ever known in thoſe ſeas: The Engliſh fleet 52 ſail of the line, carrying 2424 guns, and 36,000 men; the Portugueſe, Ruſſians, and Turks, 16 ſail of the line, 660 guns, and 12,000 men; total 71 ſhips, 3084 guns, and 50,000 men. Spaniards have 17 ſail of the line, carrying 1,358 guns and 13,650 men; the French 25 ſail of the line, 2016 guns and 22,700 men; total 42 ſhips, 3374 guns, and 36,750 men. This great ſuperiority of our fleet makes us hope that the enemies' fleets cannot effect any more eſcapes, but that we ſhall ſoon hear of their defeat. The Sun.

By an arrival from India we have been favored (Says the Columbian Centinel with Calcutta papers to March 30th; at which time the Britiſh government in India appeared not to entertain the leaſt fears of any hoſtile movements of the native princes. A large army was however on foot to watch the motions and check any hoſtile movements of Tippo Sultan. This Sovereign has received correct information of the invaſion of Egypt by Buonaparte, and has diſpatched a French general officer, and other Frenchmen lately in his ſervice, with two or three more men of conſequence, to the Iſle of France, with papers for the directory of France.

FRANCE.

PARIS, JULY 11.

Council of Five Hundred.

Sitting of July 10.

A GREAT number of addreſſes congratulated the council on the fall of the Triumvirate, and demanded the ſpeedy puniſhment of the traitors.

Among theſe addreſſes, there is one from one of the principal diſtricts of Paris, which is moſt remarkable: it declares that nothing can be done while the guilty remain unpuniſhed.

"Puniſh," ſay they, "Merlin, the fabricator of conſpiracies; Rewbell and Scherer, dilapidators and plunderers; Lareveilliere, the excitor of war in La Vendee; Francois Neufchateau, as having morally aſſaſſinated all the patriots; Ramel, who has diſorganized the finances, and ruined the public treaſury; and laſtly, Talleyrand, who has provoked and organized the aſſaſſination at Raſtadt."

Referred to a committee of five.

Sitting of July 12.

ESCHASSERAUX the elder, on a motion of order—"Traitors have ſold the republic—our frontiers are menaced—the hearts of republicans are filled with inquietude—joy and hope brighten the eyes of the royaliſts—we can no longer contemplate with a tranquil eye the dangers which every where ſurround us. Let us not wait till the coaleſced robbers proclaim royalty on the dead bodies of the friends of the revolution."

After a violent inveƈtive in the ſame ſtrain, the orator demanded that the following reſolutions ſhould be referred to a ſpecial committe.

The legiſlative body declares the conſtitution of its allies to be under the protection of the loyalty of the French nation.

Every citizen from 16 to 50 is deſired to provide himſelf with a muſket.

A particular adminiſtration ſhall be created, charged to ſuperintend the manufacture of arms.

The exportation of every thing neceſſary to carry on the war is prohibited.

Citizens who are poſſeſſed of guns are to declare the ſame to the municipal adminiſtration.

The council ordered ſix copies of the ſpeech to be printed, and that they ſhould be referred to a committee compoſed of ſeven members.

The preſident announced, that two important ſubjects were among the orders of the day, namely, the diſcuſſion relative to the loan of one hundred million, and the report relative to dilapidators.

Monteiller had leave to ſpeak in the name of the committee on this ſubject.

He began by congratulating the council upon the meaſures taken on the 30th Prairial. "For a length of time, ſaid he, this moſt execrable tyranny has weighed down the friends of the republic. The legiſlative body has aſſumed that attitude which becomes it and acclamations of ſurpriſe have anſwered the triumph of liberty." Here the reporter made a brief recapitulation of all the denunciations againſt the ex-directors and their accomplices, namely the tranſportation of Buonaparte, with 40,000 men; the proſecution of Championet; the daring violation of the conſtitution of the Ciſalpine nation; the violation of the French conſtitution; their attempts at the acquiſition of ſovereign power; the means of terror employed to influence the elections; the confiſcations; the arbitrary impriſonments; the re-organization of the war in La Vendee, encouraged by their inactivity; the menace of the republicans promoted by impunity.—Such were the principal heads of accuſation. "Each of theſe charges, ſaid the orator, are not confined to one particular individual, apply to all of them. Rewbell, Merelin, Larveillier, Treilhard, Scherer, are pointed out as the chief in that extenſive conſpiracy which has nearly annihilated the republic. The conſpirators in general, and other public delapidators of the public treaſure, are alſo referred to. The latter and the ex-miniſters are anſwerable to the ordinary tribunals. Your committee has thought, that having performed an active part in the conſpiracy, they ought to be delivered over to the tribunal which is to judge the executive directory, as was done in the affair of Baboeuf. As to the reſt, you will act according to your judgement; but as theſe ſorts of diſcuſſions cannot, agreeable to the terms of the conſtitution, be had otherwiſe than in a ſecret committe, it propoſes to the council immediately to form one."

The council ordered the printing of the ſpeech and the formation of a committe.

Paris, July 10.

We read, in one of our journals, the following letter, which we publiſh without any obſervation.

"The moſt attrocious and machiavelian plan of treaſon ever conceived at this time occupies the attention of a certain number of men, whom public confidence has called to the moſt eminent ſtations. The moſt urgent treaſons prevent me from mentioning the names of thoſe infamous wretches, who have not feared to capitulate with tyrants.

"To avert their daring machinations I truſt is not ſufficient to point them out to all France.

"Inform all the citizens, that it is in vain that they have for ſix years fought to create and conſolidate the republic. Certain perſons deſpairing of its ſafety, have demanded the mediation of the king of Pruſſia, in the name of the French government. The Pruſſian cabinet has made the following anſwer, which has been liſtened to without indignation and without ſurpriſe——"The king of Pruſſia conſents to interpoſe his good offices and authority to eſtabliſh in France a conſtitutional king."

"Inform all Frenchmen, that the idea of this culpable mediation is not abandoned; and that it is propoſed to renew it the firſt favorable opportunity."

Nothing has been publiſhed relative to the diſſentions of the Political Society opened in the Riding School. It was yeſterday numerouſly attended. Many deputies are members of it, as well as other citizens.

The Theophilanthropiſts appear to loſe their partizans. The exerciſe of their worſhip has ceaſed in the Temple of Genius.

We have obſerved the re-appearance of ſeveral groupes of people in the public places, but they are not numerous.

July 11.

A conſiderable number of troops are continually marching from Bruſſels, Grande, Bruges, and the Frontiers of Holland, for Oſtend, and that part of the coaſt of the republic which is threatened by the Engliſh.

July 12.

Marbot, general of diviſion, has been appointed to the command of the 17th military diviſion, in the room of general Joubert, who is intended by the directory, to be promoted to the rank of commander in chief of the army of Italy.

It is ſtated that general Macdonald is on his way to Paris.

We are ſtill in the greateſt uncertainty reſpecting the fleet.

The opening of the ſociety in the Riding Houſe has produced a great ſenſation. Several perſons who yeſterday ſpoke againſt this aſſembly have been arreſted, and conducted before the inſpectors of the Hall of the Ancients, charged by the police of the Thuilleries. In one of the groupes which formed every inſtant, a citizen ſaid, ſufficiently loud to be heard, it would be neceſſary to cut off 50,000 heads to ſave the country. The general indignation which this excited, rendered it neceſſary he ſhould take to his heels to ſave himſelf. It is ſaid Gohier is a member of this ſociety.

Bulletin of the ſittings of the Political Society in the Riding Houſe.

The ſittings of laſt night were remarkable for the crowd of ſpectators. There were about two or three hundred members, to whom were added four or five hundred ſpectators, whoſe perſons have been remarked in the ſections of Paris. At half paſt ſeven the Tree of Liberty was planted, amidſt loud acclamations. It was ſurmounted with a cap of three colours, but that which was placed ſuperior was the Bonnet Rouge. After a ſpeech from Santhonax, on the reception of members, Deſtrain ſung a ſong which he had made on the planting of the Tree of Liberty. A deputation of the grenadiers of the guard of the legiſlative body received the Fraternal Embrace. A member, after a ſpeech in favour of liberty, exclaimed, "Live free or die;" and moved, that to "Liberty, Equality, &c. be added another inſcription, "or Death."

Leclerc des Voſges, author of the Ruſſe de Paris, after an eulogium on the National Convention, whoſe ſacred ſeat the ſociety occupied, ſwore to be faithful to the conſtitution of the third year (general ſilence;) he then pointed out as fit objects for the ſcaffold, Scherrer, Rewbell, Merlin, Lepaux, Treilhard Reginat, Lagarde, Faynoult, Trouve, Talleyrand, &c.—[Long and univerſal applauſe.]

July 13.

The public tranquillity was yeſterday diſturbed in Paris. The ſittings of the ſociety in the Riding-houſe had been opened; the citizens were aſſembled round the Tree of Liberty, placed in the middle of the hall, and ſung patriotic airs, ſuch as the Marſeillois Hymn, &c. when ſeveral other citizens aſſembled in the Thuilleries, and on the Terrace of the Feuillans, crying "Down with the Jacobins," and ſinging, "le Reveil du Peuple." Both ſides were warmed, and the cries redoubled. Provocations paſſed to deeds; and it is ſaid ſome ſtones were thrown into the hall of the aſſembly fn the Riding houſe, from whence iſſued a number of members, who attacked with ſticks thoſe on the Feuillans: they reſiſted; ſeveral were wounded; but ſome of the grenadiers of the Legiſlative guard arriving, arreſted ſeveral, and carried them before the inſpectors of the Ancients, and the groupes were diſperſed. But during this time, ſeveral perſons having broken into the heart of the hall of ſitting of the ſociety theſe ſittings were diſturbed, and they broke up in the midſt of tumult.

The news of this event, which is, perhaps, only the forerunner of ſome greater diſaſter, was circulated at Paris like lightning.

Victor Hugues has received a ball in the breaſt in a duel.

Yeſterday about ten o'clock at night, a croud of young people ſallied forth from the Tennis Court to the Palais Royal, and thence to the Thuilleries, filling the avenues of the hall of the Convention, where the new ſociety was aſſembled; ſoon they aſſailed them with ſtones, riſing cries of "Down with the Anarchiſts; down with the Jacobins." Some had the indiſcretion to cry "down with the Republic! Long live Conde! Long live Artois!" but in this their accomplices checked them. The guard came and attacked them with ſo much vigour, that in a moment they filenced them, making them lower their voices and arms; they took to their heels; 14 were arreſted; two poignards were found on one of them. The Journal des Hommes Libres imputes this royaliſt diſturbance, as it calls it, to Talleyrand.

By a letter from Carthagena, dated the 24th of June, it appears that our fleet had on the preceding day joined the Spaniſh fleet in that harbour. The letter ſtates, that the Spaniſh officers expreſs great ſatisfaction at the junction; and every thing proves that the fleet has not yet reached its ultimate deſtination.

Letters from Breſt of the 1ſt inſtant ſtate, that in addition to the five ſhips of the line equipped ſince the fleet ſailed, l'Invincible, of 80 guns, was to be immediately launched, and got ready for ſea.

Bernadotte, the miniſter at war, has written an official letter to general Moreau, deſiring the names and ranks of the commanders of the fortreſſes, in the Ciſalpine republic and Piedmont, who ſurrendered thoſe places to the enemy, that they may be brought to trial. Moreau is required to get them arreſted immediately. Bernadotte concludes his letter in the following manner:

"Their trials are expected by the whole nation. They are demanded by the army of Italy. They are enjoined by the glory and ſafety of the republic."

Bernadotte, miniſter at war, to the officers of all ranks now at Paris.

"The dangers with which our country is threatened require your preſence on the frontiers. The barbarian monarchs, whom you ſome time ago drove back to the interior of their kingdoms, now threaten your liberty.

"If you have no further occaſion for glory, you have more than ever occaſion for liberty, which has been eſtabliſhed by ſo many ſacrifices, and you muſt take arms again to defend that ſacred liberty.

"The officers of all ranks now liable to ſerve at Paris, ſhall immediately repair to the departments to command the auxiliary battalions.

"Military republicans! the banner of your enemies is corruption, treachery, deſpotiſm; ours is fidelity, courage, liberty. Can victory wave for any length of time?

(Signed) "BARNADOTTE."

Several municipal adminiſtrations of Paris have been diſplaced.

Addreſſes from a great number of committees are continually preſented to the councils againſt the late directorial tyranny.

General Lefevre is appointed to the command of the army of the Rhine near Worms.

The Pope left Briancon at eight in the morning of the 27th of June, accompanied by the central commiſſary of the department, and ſeveral gens d'armes. Four of the prelates had ſet out from Grenoble to Dijon, about a fortnight before.

The inſurgents in Italy, according to letters from Venice of the 24th of June, have made themſelves maſters of Pezaro, of a part of the coaſt of the Adriatic, and the fortreſs of St. Leon, ſituate between the Ubino and Ceſenna. In the extremity of Italy our affairs are equally bad: Cardinal Ruffo has reduced Altamura and Capua, and Naples is the only place that ſtill holds out, though its ſurrender cannot be very diſtant.

HOUSE OF PEERS.

THE ROYAL ASSENT,

Previous to his majeſty's coming down, was given by commiſſion to ſixty-three public & private bills: among them were the London Weſt Docks, the London Militia, the Exchequer Bills, the Middleſex and Surrey Militia, the Exchequer Loan, the Lottery, the Vote of Credit, and the Ship Letters Poſtage Bills.

The lords commiſſioners on this occaſion were the archbiſhop of Canterbury, the lord chancellor and earl Spencer.

LONDON, July 15.

We on Saturday ſtopped the preſs to announce the arrival of important intelligence at the Eaſt India Houſe, bro't by an overland expreſs from Mr. Tooke the company's agent at Conſtantinople. The ſubſtance of this intelligence was communicated to the lord mayor in the Bulletin, which we on Saturday inſerted:

"Eaſt-India Houſe, July 13.

"A letter from ſir Sidney Smith, dated Acre, May 16, ſtates that the French had made four deſperate attacks on that place, in every one of which they had been repulſed with great loſs; in the whole they had loſt eight generals, eight of their beſt officers, and upwards of 4000 of their beſt troops.

"Buonaparte had loſt the confidence of his army, who were very diſcontented. The Princes of the Druſes, who were the only friends he had, had come over to the Turks. In the fourth attack the Turks ruſhed in upon the bayonets of the French (who could only fire once) with their ſabres, and cut them down in a horrible manner.

"A private letter from Smyrna mentions the names of the eight generals killed, viz. Laſſalle, Gaffarelli, Langeer, Loine, Devos, Vanx, Kampen and Dugna."

This communication was not neceſſary to convince us that Buonaparte & his followers muſt ſooner or later be the victims of their extravagant mania for conqueſt and revolution. It is impoſſible not to be ſtruck with the change of fortune of this general. The man who conquered Italy, who gained ſo many battles over the beſt diſciplined troops in Europe, who reduced Mantua, has now been two months ſtopt in his progreſs, and ſeen his army deſtroyed before a miſerable fortreſs, without external works, and without even a ditch.—Buonaparte, however, triumphed leſs in Europe by force of his arms, than by cunning and perfidy: in Aſia he has been the victim of the ſame means. The Druſes abandoned him in the midſt of the battle, and by going over to the Turks, enſured to them the victory. Our readers know that it was the valor of the Engliſh, and the active vigilance of their navy, which prevented Buonaparte from taking poſſeſſion of the city of Acre, when he firſt appeared before it.

July 20.

The Engliſh fleet has taken three large ſhips, with 12,000 men on board from Malta and Egypt. The capture was made near Toulon. The French fleet is ſtated to have entered Carthagena.

The united forces of Moreau and Macdonald are eſtimated at between 50 and 60,000 men.

Lavater has been releaſed from his confinement at Baſle, and permitted to return to Zurich.

Public prayers have been, during 3 days, offered in the churches of Milan for the ſafety of the Pope, who had been removed to the interior of France.

The plague is ſaid to have broken out at Tangiers.

The capitulation of the citadel of Turin is attributed to the exploſion of a powder magazine, by which 600 perſons were deſtroyed. The fortification of Tortona, now beſieged by the Auſtrians, coſt the king of Sardinia fifteen millions of livres.

Zurich, within two days after the departure of the French, embodied 2000 men to join the Auſtrians. Moſcati, cidevant phyſician to Buonaparte, and ſince a director of the Ciſalpine republic, has been hanged at Milan.

A letter from Rochelle aſſerts that the Engliſh attempted to land from 14 men of war, but were repulſed.

ALBANY, September 17.

The accounts reſpecting the yellow fever in New York, which appear in the papers printed in that city, and thoſe received in letters from gentlemen reſiding there, to their friends in this quarter, are widely different. The ſame day on which one of the newſpapers preſents that but four deaths had taken place, a gentleman writes that he had witneſſed the paſſing of the hearſe no leſs than 27 times. The newſpaper ſtatement of deaths for the month of Auguſt, 1799, makes the number 253—76 leſs than in the month of Auguſt, 1798—but a gentleman in this city has received information from a ſource which commands credence, that the number of deaths in New York, to the 7th inſt. is but one leſs than the deaths to the 7th of Sept. '98.—Further, it is ſuppoſed that a much greater proportion of the inhabitants have left the city this year than during the year preceding.

From the 9th to the 12th inſt. inclusive, the newſpapers mention 45 deaths in New York—and in Philadelphia, during four days preceding the lateſt date, 86 deaths are reported.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, October 26.

It is ſaid that his Excellency Governor Hunter will be here in a few days.

Married laſt Monday, by the Rev. Mr. Addiſon, Colonel Smith, of the Queen's Rangers, to the moſt agreeable and accompliſhed Miſs Mary Clarke.

A curious trial for a libel lately took place at Paris, in which the Directory were the proſecutors, & citizen Merge, formerly a journeyman ſhoe-maker, and now a lawyer, defendant. Merge wrote and circulated a hand bill, with the following title: "The Petition of the Repreſentatives of the People, to our moſt puiſſant and ſublime members of the Directory, dated in the firſt year of the lethargic trance of the Republic, at the ſign of Violated Liberty, &c."

Merge ſtated himſelf, on his defence to be the author of the hand bill, and that he had ſent copies of it to the miniſter of the police, & to ſeveral members of the councils. He was ready to repeat the ſame conduct again, as he entertained no intention of exciting rebellion againſt the government. The jury declared, in their verdict, Merge to be the author of the article in queſtion; but as he did not appear to have any evil intention, they accordingly acquitted him, very much to the ſatisfaction of every perſon preſent.

The alledged defeat of the French general Moreau, is not noticed in lord Henly's diſpatches to lord Grenville, although information of the ſame is ſtated to have been received at Vienna the 6th of July; and lord Henly's diſpatches from thence are dated the 8th of the ſame month: the account is therefore probably premature.

FROM THE COURT GAZETTE.

OPERATIONS OF THE WAR.

ACCORDING to reports from generals Melas and Kray, gen. Macdonald was retreating towards Piftola, and by reports of perfons exploring the country, he intends to collect his troops at Florence, and to march to Leghorn, where he is faid to be charged to embark them.—Gen. Victor, who was with Macdonald's army, has taken the road to the Riviera by Borgo Val di Taro.

On our fide field marfhal lieut. Ott, has advanced with his diviſion to Rabiera; and fent before him his advanced guard, under gen. count Klenau, to the river Panaro, to cover the roads of Spilambergo, Bigrola and Puola, and at the fame time the high road, leading thro' Leggio, Modena and Parma.

On the Rivjera gen. Moreau has alfo retreated from Novi, and as all accounts uniformly ſtate, directed his retreat towards Genoa. In order to give ſome reſt and eaſe to our army, fatigued by ſo many ſucceſſive marches, it has encamped on the Orda, occupied Noxi, and ſmall corps make incurſions towards the Bochetta, and the valley of the Bormida.

Inſtead of 400 pieces of cannon, lately ſtated to have been taken in the citadel of Turin, their number, agreeable to the exact ſtatement now come to hand, amounts to 374 of different calibers; 443 bomb-mortars; 30 howitzers, 10 howitzer pieces of cannon, making in the whole 562 pieces of artillery.

On the 28th of May the ſtates of Bohemia have unanimouſly reſolved to grant the Emperor double the amount of the war loan, viz. 1,172,931 florins, as a voluntary contribution.

TURKEY.

Extracted from the ſame Court Gazette.

"According to an official report, received from Acre at Conſtantinople, from Ghezar Ghazi Ahmed Pacha, then governor of Saida and Syria, and likewiſe ſeraſkier or general in chief of all the troops in that country, gen. Buonaparte entirely ceaſed, ſince the beginning of May, to fire upon the fortreſs, while the garriſon continued, by order of Ghezar Pacha, to harraſs the enemy day and night, from the redoubts before this city, and by ſeveral little ſorties.

"On the 6th a Turkiſh flotilla armed in the road of Acre, with the auxiliary corps from the Porte, under Mereabout Zade, Haſſan Beg and Capigi Ifmael Beg, collected at Rhodus. They began that very night to land ſome troops and to reinforce the principal forts of Acre.

"The enemy aware of this reinforcement, poured a terrible ſhower of balls from all their artilleiy upon the fortreſs, during the ſame night; on the next day while all the troops newly diſembarked, were juſt preparing for a general ſortie in concert with the garriſon; they attacked a tower called Ali Burgi, which they had burnt before. But all the French penetrated there, were ſo warmly received by the muſſelmen, that with the help of God not one eſcaped the ſword, not to mention the great number killed, by the well directed fire of the artillery, and the diſcharge of muſquetry of the beſieged.

"Only one Frenchman was kept alive, till his depoſition was taken, from which it clearly appeared, that Buonaparte had artfully made his ſoldiers believe, "That he had invaded Egypt and Syria, with the previous knowledge and conſent of the Porte; in order to put an end to the government of the pretended rebellious Beys in Egypt, and to that of Ghezar Pacha in Syria; adding, that the commanders of thoſe troops ſent apparently to relieve the ſaid Pacha, but in reality to aſſiſt him, Buonaparte, were in the ſecret, and would, at the firſt approach of the French, ſeize on and deliver his perſon to them, ſo that the fortreſs would certainly ſurrender, and perhaps without firing a ſingle ſhot."

"The next evening at 8 o'clock, the enemy renewed their attack upon the ſame half burnt tower, in hopes that the Turks would not be able to hold out, and from a deſire to revenge the diſgrace and loſs of the preceding day. But all aſſailants were again cut in pieces by the brave defenders, and Buonaparte's hopes fruſtrated a ſecond time.

"Deſperate from theſe repeatedly fruſtrated attempts, Buonaparte reſolved the next day upon a new ſtorm, which was, however, again beaten off, with great loſs to the French, for all who penetrated were cut in pieces.

"The following days, till the 11th May, the French general only annoyed both the fortreſs and its towers, by a continual and very briſk fire of artillery. He induced all the troops in the fortreſs to a general ſally, in which an immenſe number of the French were partly cut to pieces, partly diſperſed, and by the help of the Almighty, ſo completely defeated, that Buonaparte was forced to ſet fire to his own camp and baggage, to retreat with the ſmall remains of his troops, under cover of the night, to the environs of Jaffa. Ghezar Pacha ordered his cavalry to purſue the flying enemy, and diſpatched neceſſary inſtructions to ſeveral places, to cut off if poſſible, or obſtruct the road on which the French retreated.

"Meanwhile, the ſaid Seraſkier Pacha has forwarded the heads of thirteen French generals and chiefs, and of about 3000 commiſſioned and noncommiſſioned officers, to the Porte at Conſtantinople, where they arrived on the 12th of June, and were all put up the next day, agreeable to cuſtom, in front of the principal gate of the grand Signior's palace (Babi Huimjum) with an inſcription of the above event, publicly expoſed to the inhabitants of that city.

VIENNA, JULY 6.

This morning Prince Sultkowſky, and laſt night, capt. Nuchauz of the ſtaff arrived expreſs from Italy, and two Ruſſian officers, as couriers, who ſet out for Peterſburgh, with French ſtandards and other trophies of war.

By the firſt we learn, that field marſhal Suwarrow has defeated gen. Moreau, after a battle of three days; and the citadel of Alleſſandria is ſaid to have ſurrendered to the Allies.

The latter brings the confirmation of the important intelligence of gen Moreau having been completely defeated and put to flight by the Allies, in the Genoeſe, after a moſt bloody battle.—Suwarrow's diſpatches are dated the 30th of June, in the evening. To-morrow the court will publiſh the details.

The loſs of the citadel of Turin was very painful to gen. Moreau, as it covered in ſome meaſure, his rear and left flank.

The city and diſtrict of Lodi in the Milaneſe, has offered to raiſe a corps of 15,000 men for the Emperor's ſervice, which has been declined for the preſent.

PARIS, July 17.

There is circulated in the department of the Lower Seine, a denunciation againſt Jean Debry, ſigned by the widow of Roberjot. The object of this paper is to juſtify Auſtria from the aſſaſſination committed on our plenipotentiaries, and to throw all the odium on the government of France. The libel goes ſo far as to ſay, that Jean Debry, diſguiſed as a huzzar, was himſelf the aſſaſſin of Roberjot.

It was Gourand who wounded Victor Hugues in a duel; he had ſerved under him. The ball went through his arm, and lodged in his breaſt.—It is ſuppoſed he cannot ſurvive the operation of attempting to extract it.

ROVEREDO, July 5.

Field Marſhal Lieutenant Kray has again demanded of the French commandant of Mantua, to deliver up that place, repreſenting that all the miſeries of a ſiege awaited him; the commandant requeſted ten days conſideration, ſix were granted him; a refuſal, however, muſt have been given already, as mortars and cannon have ſuddenly been carried from Verona to Mantua, the bombardment of which was to have commenced, began this day. The beſiegers of Mantua are ſtrengthened with a reinforcement of 12,000 Ruſſians from Hungary, and 10,000 Auſtrians are on their march through the Tyrol to join them.

The city of Bologna is taken by the count Klenau; the French general Cullen, with ſome hundreds of his troops, are made priſoners, count Klenau, reinforced by the Ruſſians, will preſs forward into Tuſcany.

Letters from Pavia of the 2d, and from Verona of the 3d inſtant, make mention of another bloody battle that was fought between generals Suwarrow and Moreau, the day it took place is not mentioned. It is ſaid that general Suwarrow has taken in this affair ſeveral thouſand French priſoners, that he has fortified the heights of Gavia, and conquered the important paſs of Bochetta, which leads to Genoa, and that general Moreau, has in conſequence of this retreated to Genoa.

July 9.

Of the late engagement which was ſaid to have taken place between generals Suwarrow and Moreau, nothing further is ſaid. It appears to have been nothing but a fabricated ſtory. Accounts however, which are ſaid to be certain, aſſert that his head quarters the 2d of July was broken up from Genoa to Gavona, and that his army moved ſlowly on towards Nizza. On the 4th or 5th Genoa was to be evacuated, and on the 6th the Auſtrian troops were to take poſſeſſion.

General Kein, by order of field marſhal Suwarrow is to purſue the French general Moreau, with 10,000 men over Novi.

At Bobbio, between Genoa and Placenza, on the 27th, 4000 French incendiaries, who were ſetting every thing in flames, were fallen upon by the Ruſſians 300 were killed, and 600 made priſoners. At Samoglia 800 French were cut off, and 400 taken priſoners.

At Bologna, the Cardinal Archbiſhop & all the clergy went out to meet the Auſtrian army. The firſt evening of their coming, the city was illuminated.

From Verona a body of 5000 French priſoners are ſent to Hungary.

COLOGNE, July 6.

Thirty-five thouſand Ruſſians are to arrive on the banks of the Rhine in ten or twelve days.

An army of 80,000 Ruſſians is, they ſay, ready to enter upon a campaign.—The regiments are ſelected, but its deſtination is not ſpoken of.

LONDON, July 25.

Three French frigates from Alexandria had recaptured part of the flotilla taken by ſir Sydney Smith, before Acre. In this action Lieutenant Bulhby was taken, and Captain Miller, of the Theſus, was unfortunately killed, with part of the crew, from the accidental burſting of ſome bomb ſhells.

The accounts reſpecting the defeat and diſaſters of Buonaparte, are at length ſuch as leave no room to doubt that the ſituation of himſelf and his remaining troops, (if indeed any remain) are truly deplorable.

The Gazette of laſt night takes no notice of the defeat reported in the Hamburgh papers, to have been ſuſtained by Moreau, on or about the 25th ult. The French Journals, which we have received up to the 21ſt inſt. are alſo ſilent reſpecting any ſuch event. The fate of Italy, however, may be conſidered as decided, at leaſt for ſome time: Bologna has ſurrendered, and Macdonald, who, according to the Gazette, loſt twenty thouſand men in his battle with Suwarrow, has retired from Florence and Piſtoia to Leghorn, there to embark the remains of his army, about twelve thouſand men; or, according to the French ſtatement, to join Moreau at Genoa, to which place the latter has retreated, and whither the Allies are following him, in the hopes of taking the ſtrong paſs of Bochetta, without which they cannot approach his preſent quarters.

It is ſaid in various Journals that the French and Spaniſh fleet have actually ſailed from Carthagena, and have repaſſed the Gut of Gibraltar, in their way to Cadiz. This agrees with the account which arrived in England on Friday laſt, and is to be accounted for by the change of circumſtances which has happened ſince the time of their paſſing into the Mediterranean.

Extract of a letter from Grenada, dated June 7.

"There are accounts from Trinidad, brought by a polacre, from Gibraltar, ſaying that lord St. Vincents had intercepted the Spaniſh fleet on their paſſage up the Mediterranean to join the French fleet, and after a running fight of ſome continuance, forced them into Bay on the coaſt of Barbary, nearly oppoſite to Carthagena, where he ſtill keeps them blockaded."

"We are happy in being enabled to communicate the following ſpirited act of a lady in the county of Carlow:—A few days ago, a party of dragoons entered the houſe of a poor cottager, in one of the parts which had been declared out of the peace—after ſhooting the poor old woman to whom it belonged, with more than ſavage barbarity they violated the perſon of her daughter! Application was made to ſeveral Magiſtrates in the neighbourhood, who all refuſed taking examinations againſt them, till at length the lady in queſtion who is the wife of a magiſtrate, and whoſe name we hope to make public, inſiſted on her huſband not only granting a warrant, but that he ſhould himſelf even at the riſk of life, apprehend the villans ſworn againſt, or that ſhe would for ever ſeperate herſelf from him. So ſenſibly was the gentleman ſtruck with this ſpirited conduct of his wife, that he took the examination, called out a party of the yeomanry, apprehended the monſter who had perpetrated the horrid deed, and lodged him ſafe in Carlow gaol, there to be dealt with according to the law.

Letters from Jerſey ſtate the belief that ſtill prevails there, of the intention of the French to attempt the invaſion of that iſland.

On the 9th July, the French and Spaniſh fleets entered Cadiz, conſiſting of 42 ſail of the line, beſides frigates, ſchooners, luggers, &c. On their arrival, they began to refit and prepare for ſea with the utmoſt expedition, and on the 20th they all ſailed again. On going out the St. Anna, of 112 guns, a Spaniſh admiral's ſhip was on ſhore, where ſhe lay to days but was got off tho' unfit for ſea.

On the 29th the Sukey came out and paſſed through the Engliſh fleet, about 9 leagues W. S. W. of Cadiz, conſiſting of 32 ſail of the line; among which were, 13 three deckers, beſides a great number of frigates and ſmall veſſels of war, all ſteering to the northward.

It was not underſtood where the Spaniſh and French fleets were bound, but conjectured for Breſt with an intention to embark troops for Ireland.—Some ſuppoſed they were only off to the weſtward with an intention of drawing the Engliſh fleet out of the Mediterranean and then to paſs up.

United States.

TOUSAINT AND RIGAUD.

Extract of a letter from an intelligent gentleman at Barracoa, to his friend in Baltimore, dated July 9.

"A civil war has broken out in Hiſpaniola. I will not attempt to detail the cauſes that led to this event; it is ſufficient to know that it exiſts, and is conducted with brutal ferocity. The favorable reception given to the Engliſh by Touſſaint, is the plea urged by Rigaud in defence of his conduct. He accuſes the former with an intention of delivering up the iſland to them, or at leaſt of putting it under their protection. The real object of contention is power, the one being reſolved to preſerve the ſupreme command, the other equally deſirous to poſſeſs it.

"When Houdeville was ſent off to France he wrote to Rigaud, and directed him to aſſume the command, ſhould he obſerve Touſſaint was about to take any ſteps to render the iſland independent. From that moment Rigaud endeavored, by means of his agents, to gain over the ſeveral chiefs to his party and when he believed the criſis was arrived in which he might declare himſelf openly, he marched a body of troops to Pent Goave, which was taken, and delivered up to pillage, and moſt of the whites maſſacred. The ſtandard of revolt was now raiſed. He expected at Porte au Prince the ſame ſcene would take place, the chief of which was gained, and he counted upon the exertions of his adherents at Gonaives, Porte de Paix, Mole St. Nicholas, Jean Reabel and other places. Moſt of theſe plots have been diſcovered, and all of them prevented, except at the Moal, where a regiment which was ordered to march expelled the commandant and took poſſeſſion of the town and forts. The perſons of the inhabitants and property have hitherto been reſpected. The ſails and rudders of the veſſels which lie in port were taken on ſhore; tho' it is ſaid they have ſince been reſtored to them. An army of 3000 men is on its march to that place, and as the garriſon is but ſmall, it may be ſoon reduced. After the capture of Pent Goave, a party advanced as far as grand Goave, and took poſſeſſion of a block houſe. They are now ſurrounded by a detachment of Touſſant's army and muſt be ſoon forced to ſurrender.

"Touſſaint has puniſhed ſome of the chiefs who have been found to have been in intelligence with Rigaud, by blowing them off at the mouth of the cannon. It is ſuppoſed that theſe ſevere examples will intimidate the others who may be diſcontented, and as he has an army of 10,000 men, under his command, he is ſuppoſed to be the ſtrongeſt party, eſpecially as Beauvais, who commands at Jacmel, has declared for him. Rigaud has been proclaimed a rebel by Roume, the agent of the executive directory. All veſſels going to his ports, are to be reputed lawful prizes. Barges and veſſels of force are fitting out by both parties, and it appears to be more than mere report, that the barges of Rigaud have put to death the crews of one or more French veſſels which they have captured.

"Which of theſe two chiefs may gain the day is doubted, but while hoſtilities exiſt between them there can be but little ſecurity for the American commerce, even ſhould the communication be opened. The riſk which they muſt run from the barges of either party will be great; and ſhould the veſſels arrive ſafe, the number of hands taken from agriculture to recruit the armies, will render coffee ſcarce, and hinder either adminiſtration or individuals from performing their engagements.

"I know not on what footing the Engliſh trade with Hiſpaniola is to be placed. By a proclamation of the King, the governor of Jamaica is authorized to grant paſſports to veſſels, for certain ports; but three Engliſh veſſels are at Porte au Prince under Spaniſh colours; they carried them a very ſeaſonable ſupply of proviſions, flour being at forty dollars per barrel, and other articles in proportion.—They have ſerved to augment the price of coffee, and it may be raiſed ſo high as to render it, when the trade is permitted, an unprofitable article of remittance.

"One piece of intelligence more; it is reported and generally believed, that poſitive orders have been given by Admiral Parker to ſtop the ſhip Kingſton (the veſſel which took out Doctor Stevens, the American agent, to Hiſpaniola) if ſhe ſhould be met with, and ſend her to Jamaica."

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, November 2.

On Wedneſday laſt the 30th ult. the Court of Oyer and Terminer and General Gaol Delivery for this county and town, was holden at the Court-houſe, where his honor Chief Juſtice Elmſley preſided. After the Grand Jury were ſworn, the Chief Juſtice roſe, and addreſſed them in an elegant ſtyle---he in a few words pointed out the origin and object of all good governments---ſhewed the nature of the ſocial compact, and how neceſſary it is for the happineſs of man---commented ſtrongly upon the pernicious effects which the preſent intolerable uſe of ſpiritous liquors had upon the health and morals of the lower claſs of people, and earneſtly recommended to them to contrive ſome means for its ſuppreſſion. So plain and forcible was his language and his ideas ſo juſt, and clearly expreſſed, that conviction was manifeſt on the countenance of all who heard him.

The Grand Jury then withdrew to their room, to prepare ſome bills; during which time the petty Jury were ſworn, and tried ſome civil cauſes, after which his hon. the Chief Juſtice adjourned the court to this day, and diſmiſſed the Grand Jury for the preſent, until the 18th inſt. when they are to ſit again.

The 24th and 26th regiments are gone to England from Quebec, and the 6th and 41ſt are arrived to do the duty of that place in their room: the 2d battalion of the 60th, or Royal Americans, is gone to the Weſt Indies.

We hear that fourteen waggons with families, are on their way to this province; principally from Pennſylvania.

GERMANY.

LOWER ELBE, July 20.

Armies of Italy.

THE Vienna Court Gazette of the 10th inſt. contains the capitulation of Bologna, againſt which place general Klenau had made thoſe movements contained in our laſt. The ordinary Vienna Court Gazette of the 10th, contains only long details of the battles from the 17th to the 20th, which prove that in killed, wounded, and priſoners, M'Donald loſt, in that period, 17,268 men, including 4 generals, 8 colonels, 502 ſtaff and other officers, &c. whereas the Auſtrio Ruſſians, combined, loſt 3 generals, 149 ſtaff and other officers, 4776 men in killed and wounded.—— By this immenſe ſlaughter, which chiefly decided the fate of Italy, it appears, that the French have fough with more deſperation than military prudence.

Againſt the remains of M'Donald's army of 16,700 men at the utmoſt, above 30,000 Auſtrio-Ruſſians are now marching; and general Klenau, who entered Bologna on the 30th ult. left that place the next day, with his advanced guard with 13,000 men, to enter Tuſcany, after having taken, near Bologna, three cheſts with Roman coins, and ſome hundreds of waggons with baggage, ammunition and precious effects, deſtined for Paris.

Prince Sulworiky, who was ſuppoſed to have arrived at Vienna with official intelligence of freſh victories over gen. Moreau, brought the above details of the former actions. But if we conſider the rapid motions of the armies, it is not to be wondered at that official details were not received in Vienna, of the battles which many direct letters and newſpapers, from Italy, announce to have been fought between field marſhal Suwarrow and gen. Moreau, from the 27th to 30th ult. in conſequence of which, the latter retired by the narrow defile of Bochetta towards Genoa, whither F. M. Suwarrow has already ſent proclamations, to announce his near approach for its ſpeedy delivery.—— Some letters ſtate Moreau to be on his retreat to Nice, which he will find extremely difficult.

Our private letters from Pavia, to the 4th, and from Verona, to the 5th July, ſay, that after the total defeat of Moreau, with the loſs on his ſide of 10,000 men taken priſoners, 6 generals, and ſeveral thouſand in killed and wounded, the Imperialiſts entered Genoa. But this account, however, probaly, wants officially confirmation. A ſtrong column (theſe letters add) is detached, to to ſcour the diſtrict of Florence.

VIENNA, July 10.

At 5 o'clock this afternoon, captain Duval arrived here, as courier, from F. M. Suwarrow, with the intelligence of a new attack, made by Moreau, with 10,000 men; but he is ſaid to be completely defeated, with the loſs of 9,000 men, and the reſt of his army was entirely diſperſed.

MILAN, July 2.

The following are the movements of Moreau to the 26th ult.

When this general heard that Macdonald advanced he marched, on the 20th, from Novi towards Tortona, to ſecond that army and effect his junction. Having repulſed general Bellegarde with the Auſtrian corps, which blockaded that place as far as St. Giuliano, he re-entered Tortona, and penetrated to Voghera, where the patriots planted the tree of liberty, but ſeveral families fled before his arrival. Gen. Bellegarde being reinforced by general Kaim's corps from Turin, was thus enabled to ſee the enemy, who violently attacked him again on the 25th, but was repulſed with the loſs of 3000 men in killed, wounded and priſoners.—— After this check, Moreau concentrated his forces in the neighborhood of Gavi. The Auſtrians, on their return to Voghera, puniſhed the patriots.

The Auſtrians ſurpriſed the garriſon of Modena on the 19th, and after forcing the gates and ſcaling the walls they conquered the city and its citadel. Of 400 men in garriſon, 100 with ſeveral officers were killed, and the reſt with 10 officers ſurrendered. Large magazines and an hoſpital with 205 ſick and wounded were alſo taken.

JULY 3.

Reſpecting the Engliſh fleet.

Several private letters from Genoa mention, that the Engliſh fleet was in ſight of that harbor, and had ſummoned the Genoeſe government, under the greateſt menaces, to drive the French from its territory. The latter actually began to retreat towards Nice and tranſport their baggage far on mules; the Ruſſians, however, had taken a good deal of it.

Field M. Suwarrow had alſo ſent a proclamation to Genoa, annoucing his approach with his army, to take poſſeſſion of the city. He promiſes to proteſt religion, commerce and navigation, and to free Genoa from the ayrannical yoke of the French: but ſhould the city make any reſiſtance, he threatens to give orders to his coſſacks, to pillage it.

TURIN, June 29.

Yeſterday a courier from F. M. Suwarrow arrived here from our commandant general Kaim, with the following diſpatch:

"Dear general!

"March immediately againſt Coni, whither I will ſend you a reinforcement of 10,000 men. Beſiege that fortreſs, and take. Meantime I purſue the remains of Moreau's army, who has retreated into the Genoeſe.

Hereupon gen. Kaim, put immediately 300 waggons in requiſition, and was preparing to break up.

MODENA, July 2.

The ſecond Ruſſian auxiliry corps o 11,000 men, has for the moſt part joined the armies of generals Ott, Klenau and Hohenzollern, who are all in purſuit of Macdonald.

Near Samoggia, between Modena and Bologna, the Auſtrians yeſterday ſurrounded a French corps of 800 men, 400 were made priſoners, the reſt killed or wounded, and very few eſcaped.

General Macdonald is collecting his troops between Piſtejo and Lucca.

TRENT, July 4.

This inſtant we learn from Pavia, that gen. Moreau was defeated and repulſed as far as Genoa, on the 30th ult. Our troops are at Bochetta in the Genoeſe. We expect to hear that Genoa is beſieged.

Several papers taken from the enemy, include a report of gen. Scherer, when he arrived in Italy. It contains a ſtatement of the French forces in that country:—

Army of Rome and Naples	29,725 men
Ditto of Italy - -	81,237
Total	110,962

excluſive of Cifalpines, Poles and Piedmonteſe.

BOTZEN, July 4.

The new corps of Auſtrian troops now paſſing through Tyrol, to join the army of Italy, is about 25,000 men ſtrong.

F. M. Suwarrow is ſaid to have received orders not to penetrate into France till after the fall of Mantua.—

The empreſs of Germany has purchaſed for him a fine eſtate, in weſt Gallacia, near the Ruſſian frontiers, for 50,000 ducats, and another for general Kray, worth 75,500 ducats. Thus, MERIT is rewarded.

HAMBURGH, July 20.

The Frankfort papers ſay, that Buonaparte has been wounded in the thigh, and loſt the beſt part of his granadiers; diſeaſes were alſo making great havoc among the French.

It is certain, that moſt of the Turco-Ruſſian forces are gone from Corfu to Malta, to ſupport the operations againſt the forts of that Iſland.

The activity of F. M. Suwarrow exceeds all deſcription; as ſoon as he wakes, he takes the bath, dreſſes himſelf, goes to his ſoldiers and tells them, "We muſt march boys!" The Ruſſians ſtand as unſhaken as walls when in action, and their officers ſet them the example of bravery.

Gen. Moreau's force, joined by the diviſion of Victor, does not exceed 25,000 men.

On the 26th ult. the French entered Modena a third time, and retired after raiſing a contribution of 15,000 zechins.

Pruſſia is ſaid to have conſented to the paſſage of troops thro' Anſpach and Bareith.

All the Swiſs troops, and armed peaſants, who fought with the French, have been allowed by the archduke to return to their reſpective homes.

Reported DEFEAT of the FRENCH FLEET.

VENICE, July 5.

IT is certain that admiral Nelſon blockades the harbour of Genoa with above 30 men of war. Juſt as we had learned that the French fleet was blockaded at Toulon, advice was brought from Trieſt, by an Auſtrian ſhip from Raguſa, with the news that the French fleet had been defeated near Malta, by the Engliſh, who captured 8 ſhips and ſunk the ſame number, whilſt the reſt had ſaved themſelves by flight. This ſhip-news needs the more confirmation, as ſimilar reports from ſea are ſeldom to be depended upon.

AUGSBURGH, July 10.

All the letters brought by yeſterday's poſt from Caſſal Maggiore, Pavia, Milan, Verona, and other parts of Italy, unanimouſly ſtate, that F. M. Suwarrow, after defeating the remains of Moreau's army, had entered Genoa; but no date being given when this event happened, the next poſt from Italy will decide the truth or falſehood of this intelligence.

Count Lehrbach, who was taken dangerouſly ill, is now recovering very faſt.

BERN, (Switzerland) July 10.

The poſition of the armies is ſtill the ſame. Gen. Maſſena having lately received freſh troops from Bern, is endeavoring to reinforce his wings, to prevent being taken in flank. He lately reinforced the troops in the upper part of this canton, and the lake of Thorn, as well as thoſe on the other ſide near Loerrach, on the Rhine. His whole line extends now from Brieg in the Valais, over the mountains of Wetterhorn and Bruning, Staus, Lucern, Zug—Bremgarten, Meilengen, & Baden to the mouth of the Valais, into which the Auſtrians threaten to penetrate—both from mount Simplon and St. Gothard.

PRAGUE, July 5.

Prince Ferdinand of Wirtembergh, ſet out from hence yeſterday, to meet the third Ruſſian auxilliary corps of 36,000 men whoſe firſt and ſecond diviſions of 16,000 men paſſed thro' Olmutz on the 26th and 28th ult. and the 1ſt inſt. and will arrive here on the 8th; the remainder of that corps goes thro' the upper Palatinate. They are alſine healty and warlike fellows, inured to toils, and eaſily ſatisfied: the court of Vienna has raiſed their trifling pay by one creutzer, beſides two pounds of bread and ſome oat meal. They want but little money in this country, where every thing is given them gratis. It is not certain whether this new army will act on the Rhine or in Switzerland.

VIENNA, July 10.

Part of the Engliſh fleet cruizes off Genoa, to cut of all communication with Moreau by ſea. He his much ſurrounded by the land ſide, and P. M. Suwarrow will try every effort to cut off his retreat to France. In this reſpect the Engliſh fleet will ſecond the operations of the allies, and take care that Macdonald, ſhould embark his troops at Legborn, do not eſtabliſh a communication with Moreau.

An army of 60,000 Boſniacs is ſoon to march to Italy.

PARIS, July 12.

The laſt accounts from Italy render it impoſſible to doubt of the unfortunate ſituation of our armies. Macdonald loſt from the 17th to the 20th, an incredible number of men, and Moreau is driven back to Genoa, where a ſcarſity of every neceſſary prevails the conſequences incalculable. The coaſts from Leghorn to Toulon are covered with 36 Engliſh ſhips of the line, which have taken near Toulon, three French frigates and a cutter, that were coming from Egypt, & had been 45 days on the paſſage. On the 25th the Engliſh ſent a cartel to Genoa, to land the crews of three ſhips, from 1000 to 1200, on condition that they ſhall not ſerve againſt the allies.

In the council of 500 a very ſtrong decree has been paſſed, reſpecting the continual aſſaſſinations of the public functionaries and the purchaſers of national property. The relations of emigrants and the nobles, the children and parents of ſuch as are known to be among Chouans, are to be made reſponſible for the above mentioned aſſaſſinations. In each town hoſtages are to be taking for ſuch perſons, and for every murder of the above deſcription, four of them are to be tranſported. Gen. Marbot commands at preſent in Paris. The arreſting of Scherer has actually been ordered by the directory. The Breſt and Cadiz fleets have certainly effected a junction near Carthagena.

LONDON, July 19.

We yeſterday received a letter from Bombay, ſtating that hoſtilities have actually commenced between the Britiſh government and Tippo Saib. As we do not underſtand that the communication is confirmed by any official advice received at the India houſe, we lay it before our readers without preſuming to vouch for its accuracy; altho' from the recent conduct of Tippo, it is highly probable that ſuch an event has long ere this taken place—Our letter, of which the following is an extract, is dated Bombay, March 1, 1799.

"War was declared againſt Tippo Saib on the 3d of laſt month, at Madras.

Our armies are already marching towards Seringapatam, which place, with Mangalore, and all Beduate country—will, I hope, be in our poſſeſſion in a month at the fartheſt."

AUGUST 3.

French Counter Revolutionary Plan.

The Mercury of Europe (Hamburgh paper) under the head Paris, has an article bearing the following title, and which is ſaid to be in general circulation thro' France:

"PROPOSITIONS

Which are already popular, and are daily becoming more and more ſo, here; viz:

"1. The re-eſtabliſhment of monarchy in France, on rational terms.

"2. The king ſhall grant a general amneſty, without any exceptions or exemptions whatever.

"3. Property which, according to the exiſting laws of the republic, has been legally acquired, and is now legally held, ſhall be reſpected as legal property.

"4. Such of the army who ſhall join the ſtandard of the king, ſhall be continued in their reſpective ranks, advancements and pay.

"5. The king ſhall renounce all claim to the territorial acquiſitions of the republic; and the king as well as the powers at war with the republic, ſhall ſolemnly guarantee the integrity of ancient Erance, and ſhall proclaim a general peace.

"6. Every ſpecies of vaſſalage, tithes corvees, ſoccage, or bound ſervice, and all other contributions in kind, ſhall be forever aboliſhed.

"7. The impoſitions or revenues, neceſſary for maintaining the government, ſhall be raiſed upon the produce of the fixed and moveable propeity of the ſtate, without any exceptions or exemptions whatever.

"8. The French people ſhall all be governed by the ſame publicly defined and determined laws, both civil and municipal.

"9. Honeſty and capacity ſhall be the criterion whereby the public funcſtions in the ſtate ſhall be filled.

"10. When theſe preliminaries are agreed upon, the king ſhall invite the French nation to elect or nominate, from among their ſage and diſcreet men, a repreſentative body, to meet the king at ſuch part or place, in ancient France, as the king may point out, there to conſult with him and aſſiſt him with their wiſdom, to arrange, draw up, and ſettle, a national code or charter, whereby the French people ſhall be governed upon the before ſtated principles.

"The members of the preſent republican government, or other funcſtionaries of the republic, being otherwiſe qualified, ſhall be eligible to ſit in the repreſentative body.

Diſpatches, giving an account of the defeat of Tippo Sultan, ſent by Mr. Faucett from Bombay, were yeſterday read in the court of directors of the Eaſt-India company. The action took place at the entrance of the Ghautts, on the 6th of march, and the victory was brilliant and complete. It was attended with great loſs in the field to the perfidious prince who provoked our arms, and in its conſequences may involve his fall from a throne which he has held, ſince the peace of Seringapatam, by the forbearance and generoſity of Great-Britain. The preparations that the reſtleſs Tippo had been making for war the correſpondence which had been detected between him and the French, determined the Britiſh government to demand explicit explanations of his views, and to force him to diſmiſs from his ſervice the French whom he entertained only with the view of hoſtility againſt the company. Our readers have heard of the ſteps which were taken by the earl of Mornington to bring him to a categorical anſwer. Two armies were directed to march, one from Madras and the other from Bompay, of which general Stuart was the commander in chief. The reſult we can only ſtate from the document which has been received by a commercial houſe only, but which is moſt ſatisfactory.

Accounts ſtate, that it was only the Spaniſh diviſion that got into Cadiz, the French having proceeded towards the Bay of Biſcay; but this is not probable.

In addition to the intelligence brot' by the Paris papers, a letter has been this day received by a merchantile houſe in town, from Venice, ſtating that the king of Naples made his re entrance into the capital on the 20th of June; and the citadels of Alexandria and Paglia have ſince ſurrendered to the Auſtro-Ruſſians. Mantua, it is ſaid—muſt ſoon ſurrender, having but little proviſion and no hopes of relief.

The Vienna newſpapers ſay that two Spaniſh meſſengers arrived from Paris, with propoſitions of peace. It is certain that the Spaniſh Legation at Vienna has laboured for a long time to diſtract the imperial court by negociations. The emperor Paul long ſince ſolicited his ally to diſincumber himſelf of theſe diplomatic ſpies, who are under the direction of the Chevalier D'Azara, a man notorious for revolutionary principles,

UNITED STATES.

NORFOLK, September 10.

Extract of a letter from Martinique, dated St. Pierre's Martinique, Auguſt 24, received by the ſchooner Macpherſon.

"The Engliſh fleet was at the mouth of the river of Surinam, on the 14th inſtant, and no doubt ere this they have entire poſſeſſion of that place."

NEW-YORK, September 25.

A letter from Savannah, of the 5th inſt, mention, "That the Britiſh, in order to prevent the French and Spaniards from facilitating their trade under neutral, and confining them to their own colors, and in order nearer to determine neutrals by their colors, that from the 1ſt of October next, none but veſſels built by the country, the colors of which they bear, will be conſidered as neutrals—thoſe veſſels already under neutral colors are exempted, but will be narrowly examined."

By a late arrival from Europe.

PAVIA, (Italy) July 4.

After the Imperial troops had defeated gen. Moreau, made 1000 priſoners, with 6 French generals, they left ſome thouſands killed and wounded on the field of battle, and entered Genoa.

Banks of the Weſel, July 4.

At the inſtance of the court of Ruſſia, all the commercial houſes in the cites of Hamburgh and Bremen, will be required to declare upon oath, what ſums they have in their name in the Britiſh funds, diſtinguiſhing preciſely which is their own, and which French property; the latter will be confiſcated.

Portſmouth, Aug. 2.

The gun boats intended to act in the projected expedition, are all gone round from this port. Large quantities of ordnance ſtores have been conveyed from the gun warf by land to Woolwich; and the 85th regiment failed this afternoon to join the troops aſſembled on Barham Downs.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, November 9.

THE important communication of the capture of the Dutch fleet in the Texel, muſt afford ſingular ſatisfaction to every perſon who views the conduct and inſidious intentions of the French republic with indignation; this happy event, together, with the uninterrupted and important ſucceſſes of the allied armies, under the command of F. M. Suwarrow, cannot fail to bring about a general peace and upon the moſt honorable terms.—From the various accounts reſpecting Buonaparte, we may conclude that his ſituation is deplorable: thus, we ſee, the once champion of Egypt, degraded and loaded with miſeries.—The executive directory complain aloud of the ill ſucceſs of their forces in Italy, and of the vaſt number of officers and men which Macdonald and Moreau have loſt: "only three or four of our generals," ſays the directory, "remain with the army of Naples, all the reſt being killed or wounded."

RASTADT, July 5.

THE French patroles again advance to within a short distance from Offenburg. We know, however, that their number of troops, on the right of the Rhine is very inconsiderable. The Austrians, posted in our neighbourhood, will receive a reinforcement of infantry.

They have for some time, been raising redoubts in front of Villingen, and on the outlets of the Black Forest.

Yesterday the French attacked with superior numbers, the troops under the command of gen. Georger, stationed near Ranchen, Urlofen, and Appenweit. The combat lasted from 3 o'clock in the morning till late at night, with the greatest obstinacy. The enemy penetrated the centre near the village of Russenhofen, a small league from Oberkirch. The ground in that road being favorable to the cavalry, the hussars of Blankenstein were immediately ordered to advance: they rushed with the greatest impetuosity upon the French infantry, mostly grenadiers, cut in pieces 3 companies, and took many prisoners.

Our two wings were, at first, obliged to retrograde some distance; but they soon advanced again, and forced the enemy to abandon both Appenweir and Renchen. Both parties then re-occupied their former positions. The French lost 400 men killed on the field, and the number of their wounded must be very considerable; one capt. one lieut. and 45 privates, were made prisoners. We had but a few men killed, and about 30 wounded; among the latter are 3 officers. The French infantry, very superior in number, hidden behind the corn fields, made at first great havock among our cavalry. The brave peasants of Obercappel, being on our right, fought like lions. The division of the 13th dragoons, under lieut. col. Allef, posted before Lichtenau, was attacked at the same time; but they immediately repulsed the enemy, with the loss of ten men killed, 40 wounded, and 7 prisoners.—We had but one man wounded in this latter engagement.

The French having likewise made an attack between Bitchoffsheim and Freistett; were equally unsuccessful, & pursued as far as Bitchoffsheim.

VENICE, June 30.

It is said, that the Russians have carried Ancona by assault: several persons coming from Bologna, depose, that a great number of French soldiers, wounded in the late actions, have arrived there; among others, Macdonald, a general, and an adjutant general. The garrison of that city consists but of 700 Frenchmen, and 200 patriots.

An insurrection is said to have broken out in the Genoese. This much is certain, that the inhabitants are highly dissatisfied. Moreau having demanded the arming of 25,000 Ligurians, the directory has refused it, lest the individuals, thus armed, should turn both against the government and the French.

PLACENZA, June 28.

The French army of Naples and of Rome may be fairly considered as wholly destroyed: its loss in killed, wounded and prisoners, amounts already to 20,000 men; and the remains that fled into the mountains, may consist of from 10 to 15,000. The garrison in this citadel made, in various sallies, upwards of 1200 prisoners, took a drove of oxen and four cannon. Gen. Victor has been wounded, and his division completely dispersed.

F. M. Suwarrow has sent a strong detachment to the valley of Trebia, to observe a small corps of French and Ligurians, descended there from the Genoese Appenine, and had advanced on the 22d to Petra Dagliera, 12 miles from hence. The Austro-Russians, much inferior in number, had the alarm bells rung in the adjacent villages; and the inhabitants coming in great numbers to their assistance, the enemy were repulsed with loss, and forced to take refuge in the mountains: they also had some prisoners taken.

PARMA, June 25.

The French army, after the late defeats, retreated through this city, during the 20th, day and night, till the 21st at noon. At last their rear shut the gates, and took the keys, to retard the march of the Austro-Russians, who followed them closely. On the 21st, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, two Austrian hussars arrived before the gate of St. Barnaby, and demanded admittance.—Being immediately forced open, they entered, and had the rest of the gates opened. Soon after more hussars came, and took many French prisoners, hidden in certain houses, whom they cut in pieces, and seized all who resisted. At three o'clock the main body of the Imperial army arrived, a strong detachment of Austrian hussars went out by St. Michael's gate, where the French rear, about 2000 men was encamped; but instead of waiting for an attack, they made a precipitate retreat; and being pursued, a number of them were taken, besides one cannon. The Austro-Russians then formed three camps before this city. They took an immense booty, especially horses. The French committed many excesses on their retreat in the adjacent villages.

On the 22d inst. the camps were struck, and the Imperial troops advanced.

BRUSSELS, July 11.

It is already reported here that an English fleet, with two hundred transports have appeared in the neighbourhood of Ostend; but the report is not yet confirmed. As a measure of precaution, our garrison and that of Ghent set out on the 4th instant, the former to Bruges, and the latter to Ostend. The 51st demi brigade is encamped near the important sluice of Slyckens, and troops are constantly coming from the borders of Holland and marching to the coasts. A camp, composed of French and Batavian troops is constantly kept at Middleburg; and the island of Walcheren is covered with strong batteries. In the interior of the Batavian republic there still remain four French demi-brigades, as many regiments of cavalry, and a corps of horse artillery. General Beguinot, whose head-quarters are now at Brussels, has published a strong proclamation against all persons who shall stir up sedition. Luxemburg and Maestricht are put in the best possible state of defence; and there is also a camp on the Rhoer.

The two first classes on the military conscription, have amounted to 19,000 men, and three others will make up 25,000 more.

July 14.

General Defour, who commands the division of French troops extending from Dusseldorf to Mentz, has given orders for forming a camp near the Lahn. An army of that division will soon be formed consisting of 40,000 men; it is said it is to be commanded by gen. Moreau. These measures are absolutely necessary in order to cover the Lower Rhine, and prevent the enemy from penetrating into Belgium. It is certain that an Imperial army, composed chiefly of Saxons and Bavarians, is immediately to be formed on the Banks of the Rhine, and that 35,000 Russians are to join it. It is supposed all these numerous forces will direct their efforts toward the Lower Rhine; and it is to prevent their operations that a numerous French army is advancing towards this point, which is rendered the more important, since, for a space of forty miles between Luxembourg and Maestricht, there is neither a fortified place nor any military position of strength. It is true that the city of Juliers has been hastily fortified, but a deal of time and expence is necessary before that place can be put in a state of defence.

Serious troubles have again taken place in ci devant Brabant Walen, especially in the environs of Wawre. The tree of liberty has been thrown down, the purchasers of national domains pillaged, the gens d'armes assassinated; in fine, all sorts of excesses are committed by bands of brigands, armed with muskets and pitch-forks. One of these bands 200 men strong, have thrown themselves into the forest of Sorgnes. Vigorous measures were taken to prevent their excesses in the first instance. We are informed, that the conscripts, preferring pillage to the honor of ranging themselves under the banners of the republicans, joined the rebels. The camp which is to be formed between Bruges and Ostend, is to be composed of two demi brigades, and detachments of the 9th and twelfth regiments of dragoons.

LONDON, July 19.

OUR last letters from Ireland bring the gratifying intelligence, that the country is every where tranquil, and the multitude returning to work. The poor are rebuilding their cabins, the affluent are returning to their seats, and confidence, so long a stranger to the country, in a considerable degree resumes its appearance.

Colonel Phelypeau, of the Turkish artillery, commanding, in conjunction with Ghezzar Pacha & sir Sidney Smith in the defence of Acre, is one of the last men Buonaparte would chuse to contend with, because the republican chief knows him to be an officer of distinguished valor and ability; and because at school they sat at the same form, slept in the same bed, went together to the King's military college, received their commissions at the same time, and though of tempers and dispositions materially different, yet as early associates, and each admiring the genius of the other, continued the most intimate and warm attachment till the period of the revolution, when Buonaparte joining the enemies of his sovereign, became the political opponent of Phelypeaux whom he yet on several occasions fought to win to his cause; and to whom (immediately) previous to his departure for Egypt) he offered any situation he could obtain for him in the army, if he would consent to join the expedition.

Colonel Craufurd who arrived from Hamburgh on Sunday, is the gentleman who between two and three years ago, was so severely wounded when a reconnoitering party of the Archduke's army fell into an ambuscade, and almost every one of them was either killed or wounded. Colonel Craufurd received a shot in the head, which carried away all the upper part of the skull, and left him apparently dead in the field. He was carried to Jourdan's head quarters, where, being recognized, he received every mark of attention, but the French retreating from the village soon after, he was left to the care of a common barber, where he was found by the Austrians. His sufferings since in trappanning, and under the cures of an abscess on the spine, occasioned by the convulsions of the wound, have been dreadful, but he is now in a fair way of recovery. His younger brother took his situation as British resident at the head-quarters of the Archduke.

July 23.

The revolutionary improvements attempted to be introduced into the institution of marriage by the French innovators, have deservedly drawn upon them much censure and reprobation, & incompatibility of temper which they have set up as an adequate cause for divorce, has been acknowledged, even by their best female writers, to be a very doubtful and unsafe criterion. To prove it, one of them recommends the adoption of the practice observed by the Zuricheſe, where the French republicans have lately been trying the force of other arms than those of persuasion—Among them it is the custom to shut up in a tower, for the space of 55 days, the husband and the wife who sue for a divorce on account of incompatibility of temper, and there to place them absolutely tete à tete. The terms of the trial they go through are, that they shall have but one chamber, one bed to sleep on, one chair, one knife, one fork, &c. and consequently that in order to sit down, to sleep, to eat, &c. they must previously come to the reciprocal facilities of mutual accommodation. Of so conciliatory an influence has this discipline proved, that very few, if any, have been found to stand out the expiration of the 15 days.

August 3.

This morning, an officer arrived at the admiralty, with dispatches from earl St. Vincent at Gibraltar. They state, we understand, that the combined French and Spanish fleets were blockaded in Cadiz harbor by the British force. A disagreement had taken place between the Spaniards and the French, owing to the former having refused to admit the latter into the inner harbor. We are not at present able to state more particulars.

FROM THE FRENCH PAPERS.

The club of the Menage is unpopular in the greatest degree in the capital; and the inhabitants of the district of the Oratory, at the very extremity of Paris close to the barrier of the road of Orleans, upon the report of its removing thither, have presented addresses in order to exonerate themselves from this fatal neighbourhood.

A national guard is instituted once more, and all persons of 16 years of age are made liable to serve in it. Grenadiers and chasseurs are voted by the council of five hundred, but not till after a severe and remarkable philippic upon the royalism of the former battalions of that description. The punishment of the ex-directors, is vehemently called for, while Barrere, the ancient minister and famous reporter of Robespierre, is admitted to a seat in the assembly. The 10th of August and 14th of July are entitled "glorious days of anarchy;" and Buonaparte with his army, are asserted to be sacrificed by the malice and design of the late government.

The council of elders pursue a very different course. Courtoise has denounced the clubs.

In the interior of France, troops are continually recalled from the extremities of the republic to Paris; amongst others the garrison of Corfu.

Talleyrand has given in his resignation; and Reinhard, who was secretary to M. Chauvelin, is appointed minister of foreign affairs in his place.

Robert Lindet is appointed minister of finances, in the room of Ramel; and Cambraceres, minister of justice, in the room of Lambrechts.

Talleyrand and Lecroix continue to fill the columns of the Redacteur, disputing which was the projector of Buonaparte's expedition to Egypt, and who was the cause of the negociation with England being removed to Lisle.

STRASBURGH, July 24.

It is confidently stated, that general Moreau will arrive here the 2d of August. Accounts from Stutgard and Zurich, furnish us with the following details respecting the armies: "General Suwarrow's head quarters are between Tortona and Alessandria. His right wing extends beyond Coni: the center is posted between Tortona and Alessandria, on the Bormida, and the left wing reaches beyond Bobbio. The vanguard is at Novi, and in the valley of Orba. The strength of the army amounts to 60,000 men and consists of the Austrian divisions of Vukanfovich, Froelich, Zopff Bellegarde, and Kaim, and the Russian troops, under the command of Pankrazion and Rosenberg. The corps of gen. Ott has advanced from the country of Modena into Tuscany, which has been evacuated by Macdonald. There is still a French garrison at Leghorn.

NEW YORK, Sept. 25.

From the Glasgow (Scotland) Courier, of Auguſt 6, 1799.

The interior ſituation of France, is highly intereſting. The new directory have, in the moſt preſſing terms, urged their want of men, arms and money; yet theſe appear to be wholly unattended to by the councils. Violent ſtruggles have taken place in the council of ancients and in the council of five hundred, relative to a new form of oath to be taken by the members. The proceedings of the latter ſeem to be altogether under the influence of the jacobin club at the Menage, while thoſe of the former have denounced this club as having entertained a plan for the aſſaſſination of two of the directors, Sieyes and Barras, who are eſteemed Moderes; the other three newly elected directors, appear to be at the head of the violent Jacobin party. The following is the tenor of the oath which was at length adopted;

"I ſwear fidelity to the republic, and the conſtitution of the third year. I ſwear to oppoſe myſelf to the utmoſt of my power, to the re-eſtabliſhment of royalty in France, and to that of every other ſpecies of tyranny." The words hatred to anarchy, introduced by the moderes, were ſtruck out by the Jacobins. The revival of the reign of terrorism is very much to be dreaded at Paris.

The combined fleets of France and Spain, agreeable to advices received by the Liſbon mail, have entered the port of Cadiz; where they have been blocked up by the Britiſh fleet under the command of lord Keith.

Official letters from ſir Sidney Smith, relative to the diſcomfiture of Buonaparte before Acre, were read at the Eaſt India houſe. Buonaparte's army, totally diſpirited from their immenſe loſs and worn out with fatigue, having been furniſhed with ſhoes and water gourds to croſs the deſart, left Acre on the 20th May. His inhuman conduct towards his own wounded is beyond example, he dragged them along with him to Jaffa, and there ſent them to Damietta, on board veſſels without water—proviſions and ſeamen. Such of thoſe poor wretches who could move, decided to ſteer ſtrait for ſir Sidney, in perfect confidence of his affording them the good offices of humanity, and in which, we are happy to obſerve, they were not diſappointed. In theſe veſſels were alſo found all Buonaparte's twelve pounders that he had with him at Acre; his eighteen and twenty-four pounders and mortars, lay ſcattered on the road with the dead and dying, the whole way between Acre and Jaffa. Thus has the would-be Hero of Lodi fallen; thus has this ferocious "Bandit mad with pride," amply Juſtified the words of an auther fully competent to the ſubject; "he ſacrificed the lives of four thouſand men to the vanity of forcing a paſs [Lodi] which he could have turned without the loſs of one," as was lately done by the Auſtrians and Ruſſians.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 19.

INTERESTING.

By the arrival of the ſchooner Moncreiff, capt. E. Pearce, in 22 days from Surrinam, we are politely favored by capt. pearce with the following intelligence: On the 12th of Auguſt an Engliſh fleet under the command of Lord Seymour, vice admiral of the blue, conſiſting of five line of battle ſhips, one 98 guns (the admiral's) and one of 74, with ſix frigates, and as many tranſports, (the land forces under the command of lieut. Trigge,) made their appearance off the mouth of Surrinam in 24 hours, on the following terms, as near as captain Pearce recollects;

The colony and all its dependencies and forts on the river, &c. to be delivered to the Engliſh.—

The Dutch and Spaniſh ſoldiers to march out from the forts with the honors of war.

That no alteration would be made in the government, and that all Dutch property ſhould remain in the ſituation it was then in.

That no American property ſhould be moleſted afloat or on ſhore, and the Americans ſhould be privileged to trade there, but only allowed to take in return produce to the amount of one third of their cargo, except molaſſes,

The government demanded 48 hours to conſider of it; (and laid an embargo on all veſſels in port, ſeveral of whom were ready for ſea) the term of 48 hours was allowed, and at the expiration of which time the government ſent a flag of truce to the admiral, which concluded the capitulation.

On the 21ſt, the admiral landed at Paramaribo, and took poſſeſſion of the fort there, being the laſt one. On the 22d, capt. Pearce went on board the Amphitrite, in which the admiral came up, in order to get permiſſion to proceed to ſea. The admiral informed him he ſhould not be detained but a day or ſo, as he was informed ſome French veſſels that were in port, had within a few days hoiſted American colors, he would ſend an officer on board all the veſſels in port firſt, to examine their papers, and thoſe that were clear ſhould be allowed immediately to proceed to ſea.—The admiral behaved with the greateſt politeneſs, as well as all the officers.—On the 24th capt. Pearce called on the admiral, who gave him his paſſport; and on the ſame day gave ſeveral other Americans their paſſports, who were detained as well as capt. Pearce, from the time the Engliſh firſt made their appearance off the river.

SUWARROW AND SERRURIER.

THE following anecdote, tranſmitted to us from the imperial head-quarters, may be depended upon as authentic:—The French general Serrurier, two days after he had ſurrendered with his corps to gen. Vukaſſovich, dined with the Auſtrio-generaliſſimo. The cloth being taken away, the veteran of Rimnikoi aſked the gallic chief, where he intended to retire to? "to Paris," anſwered Serrurier.—"I am glad of that," ſaid Suwarrow, "and hope to ſee you there ſoon." Serrurier neatly replied, "that is what I always hoped myſelf."

Helder, Aug. 28.

SIR,

FROM the firſt day after our departure from England, we experienced ſuch a ſeries of bad weather, as is very uncommon at this ſeaſon of the year. The ardour of admiral Mitchel for the ſervice in which we were jointly engaged, leſt it only with me to follow his example of zeal and perſeverance, in which I was encouraged by the manner that he kept a numerous convoy collected. It was our determination not to depart from the reſolution of attacking the Helder, unleſs we ſhould have been prevented by the want of water and proviſions. On the forenoon of the 21ſt inſt. the weather proved ſo favourable that we ſtood in upon the Dutch coaſt, and had made every preparation to land on the 22d, when we were forced to ſea by a heavy gale of wind. It was not until the evening of the 25th that the weather began once more to clear up. On the 26th, we came to anchor near the ſhore of the Helder, and on the 27th, in the morning, the troops began to diſembark at day-light. Altho' the enemy did not oppoſe their landing, yet the firſt diviſion had ſcarcely begun to move forward before they got into action, which continued from five in the morning until three o'clock in the afternoon. The enemy had aſſembled a conſiderable body of infantry, cavalry, and artillery, near Callanſtong, & made repeated attacks on our right with freſh troops. Our poſition was on a ridge of ſand hills, ſtretching along the coaſt from North to South. Our right wing was unavoidably expoſed to the whole force of the enemy. We had no where ſufficient ground on our right to form more than a battalion in line; yet on the whole the poſition, though ſingular, was not, in our ſituation, advantageous, having neither cavalry nor artillery. By the courage and perſeverance of the troops, the enemy was fairly worn out and obliged to retire in the evening to a poſition two leagues in his rear. We have to regret many valuable officers loſt to the ſervice, who have either fallen or been diſabled by their wounds.—The corps principally engaged were the reſerve under the command of col. Macdonald, conſiſting of the 23d and 55th regiments. The regiments of major general Coote's brigade, which have been much engaged, were the Queen's, the 27th, 29th, and 85th regiments. Major gen. Oydey's brigade was brought into action towards the cloſe of the day and has ſuſtained ſome loſs. As the enemy ſtill held the Helder with a garriſon of near 2000 men, it was determined to attack it before day break in the morning of the 28th, and the brigade under major gen. Moore, ſupported by major gen. Burrard's, were deſtined for this ſervice: but about eight o'clock yeſterday evening, the Dutch fleet in the Mars Diep got under weigh and the garriſon was withdrawn, taking their route through the marſhes towards Medemblick, having previouſly ſpiked the guns on the batteries, and deſtroyed ſome of the carriages. About 9 at night major gen. Moore, with the 2d battalion of Royals and 92d regiment, under the command of lord Huntley, took poſſeſſion of this important poſt, in which he found numerous artillery of the beſt kind, both heavy and field train. All the part of the Dutch fleet in the Nieuve Dep, together with their naval magazine at Nieuve Werk, fell into our hands this morning, a further detail of which it is not in my power to ſend. This day we have the ſatisfaction to ſee the Britiſh flag flying in the Mars Diep, and part of the 5000 men under the command of major gen. Dun, diſembarking under the batteries of the Helder.—During the courſe of the action, I had the misfortune to loſe the ſervice of lieut. gen. Sir James Pultney, from a wound he received in the arm, not before he had done himſelf the greateſt honor, and I was fully ſenſible of the want of him. Major gen. Coote ſupplied his place with ability. Col. Macdonald, who commanded the reſerve, and who was very much engaged during the courſe of the day, tho' wounded, did not quit the field. Lieut. col. Maitland, returning to England, to go on another ſervice, and major Kemp, my aid de camp, and bearer of this letter, whom I beg leave to recommend to y'r notice and protection, will be able to give any further information which may be required.—A liſt of the killed and wounded, as far as we have been able to aſcertain it, accompanies this letter.

Admiralty-office, Sept. 2.

Captain Hope of his Majeſty's ſhip Kent, and capt. Oughton, of his Majeſty's ſhip Iſis, arrived this afternoon, with a diſpatch from admiral lord viſcount Duncan, of which the following is a copy:

Kent, off Aldborough, Sunday, Sept. 1. '99.

SIR,

I tranſmit for the information of my lords commiſſioners of the admiralty, a letter to me from vice admiral Mitchell, giving a diſtinct detail of the great ſucceſs with which it has pleaſed Almighty God to crown his majeſty's arms. The boldneſs of the vice admiral in running in an open ſhore with ſo numerous a fleet, and in ſo very unſettled weather, could not be equalled but by the gallantry of ſir Ralph Abercromby, and his brave troops, landing in the face of a moſt formidable oppoſition. During the whole of the conflict on Tueſday I could plainly perceive the vaſt ſuperiority of the Britiſh troops over thoſe of the enemy, though oppoſed with obſtinacy; and in juſtice to both the land and ſea ſervice, I muſt ſay, that I never in my life witneſſed more unanimity & zeal than has pervaded all ranks to bring the expedition to its preſent happy iſſue.

Finding the Kent with ſeveral of the Ruſſian 74 gun ſhips to draw too much water, to be able to get into the harbor I have returned with them to this anchorage; but previous to my getting under weigh at eight o'clock on Friday morning, I had the pleaſure to ſee vice admiral Mitchell, with the men of war, tranſports and armed veſſels in a fair way of entering the Texel, with a fair wind, and have not the leaſt doubt but the whole of the Dutch fleet were in our poſſeſſion by noon on that day.

Theſe diſpatches will be delivered by captains Hope and Oughton, both able and intelligent officers, and who will give their lordſhips more ſatisfactory information relative to our ſucceſsful operations.

I ſhall not only add my ſincere congratulations to their lordſhips on this great event, which I think in its conſequences may be ranked among one of the greateſt that has happened during the war. I am, Sir, &c.

DUNCAN.

P. S. The winds having proved unfavourable, has occaſioned my anchoring here; but I ſhall proceed to Yarmouth as ſoon as the weather moderates.

Iſis, at anchor off the Texel, Aug. 29.

MY LORD,

In a former letter I had the honor to write to your lordſhip, I there mentioned the reaſons that had determined Sir Ralph Abercromby and myſelf not to perſevere longer than the 26th, in our reſolution to attack the Helder & port of the Texel, unleſs the wind becomes more moderate: fortunately the gale abated that morning, altho' a very heavy ſwell continued to ſet in from the northward, I thought a moment was not to be loſt in making the final attempt.

The fleet therefore bore up to take the anchorage, and I was happy to ſee the tranſports and all the bombs, ſloops and gun veſſels in their ſtations to cover the landing of the troops by three in the afternoon of that day, when the ſignal was made to prepare for landing. The general, however, not thinking it prudent to begin diſembarking ſo late on that day, it was determined to delay until two in the morning on the 27th. The intereſting time was occupied in making the former arrangements more complete, and by explaining to all the captains individually my ideas to them, that the ſervice might proſper by their united exertions. The troops were accordingly all in the boats by 3 o'clock, and the ſignal being made to row towards the ſhore, the line of gun boats, ſloops of war, and bombs, opened a warm and well directed fire to ſcour the beach, and a landing was effected with little loſs. After the firſt party had got to ſhore, I went with ſir Ralph Abercromby, that I might ſuperintend the landing of the reſt, and with the aid of the different captains, who appeared animated but with one mind, the whole diſembarked with as great regularity as poſſible. The ardour and glorious intrepidity which the troops diſplayed, ſoon drove the enemy from the neareſt ſand hills, and the preſence of ſir Ralph Abercromby himſelf, whoſe appearance gave confidence to all, ſecured to us, after a long and very warm conteſt, the poſſeſſion of the whole neck of land, between Kick Down and the road leading to Alkmoar, and near to the village of Callenſtong.

Late that night the Helder Point was evacuated by the enemy, and taken poſſeſſion of by our troops quietly in the morning, as were the men of war named in the incloſed liſt, and many large tranſports and Indiamen by us the next day. I diſpatched capt. Oughton, my own capt. to Helder Point laſt evening to bring off the pilots, and he has returned with enough to take in all the ſhips neceſſary to reducing the remaining force of the Dutch fleet, which I am determined to follow to the walls of Amſterdam, until they ſurrender or capitulate for his Serene Highneſs the Prince of Orange's ſervice.

I muſt now, my lord, acknowledge, in the warmeſt manner, the high degree of obligation I am under to your lordſhip for the liberal manner in which you continued to entruſt to my direction the ſervice I have the honor to execute under your immediate eye; a behaviour which added to my wiſh to do all in my power to forward the views of ſir Ralph Abercrombie.

It is impoſſible for me ſufficiently to expreſs my admiration of the bravery and conduct of the general and the whole army, or the unanimity with which our whole army and navy behaved on this occaſion (having to uſe a ſeaman's phraſe) pulled heartily together.

When the exertions of all you did me the honor to put under my orders have been ſo great, it is almoſt impoſſible to particularize any; but captain Oughton has had ſo much to do, from the firſt embarking of the troops to the preſent moment, and has ſhewn himſelf ſo ſtrenuous in his exertions for the good of the expedition, as well as giving me much aſſiſtance from his advice on every occaſion, that I cannot but mention him in the higheſt manner to your lordſhip, and at the ſame time expreſs my wiſh that your lordſhip will ſuffer him to accompany whoever may bear your diſpatches to England, as I think the local knowledge he has gained may be highly uſeful to be communicated to their lordſhips of the admiralty.

The manner in which the captains, officers and ſeamen landed from the fleet, behaved, while getting the cannon and ammunition along to the army, requires my particular thanks; and here let me include, in a ſpecial manner, the Ruſſian detachment of boats, from whoſe aid & moſt orderly behaviour the ſervice was much benefitted indeed.

I am alſo much indebted to captain Hope, for the clear manner in which he communicated to me your lordſhip's ideas at all times, when ſent to me by your lordſhip for that purpoſe, as every thing was better underſtood from ſuch explanation, than they could otherwiſe have been by letter.

It is impoſſible for me to furniſh y'r lordſhip at preſent with any liſt of the killed, wounded or miſſing ſeamen, or of thoſe that were unfortunately drowned on the beach in landing the troops, having as yet no return made me; but I am very ſorry to ſay that I was myſelf witneſs to ſeveral boats over-ſetting in the ſurf, in which I fear ſeveral lives are loſt. I have the honor to be, &c.

A MITCHELL.

Admiralty Office, Sept. 3. '99.

Lieut. Collier, of his Majeſty's ſhip Iſis, arrived this day with diſpatche from vice admiral Mitchell, to Evan Nepean, eſq; ſecretary to the admiralty of which the following are copies:

Iſis, at anchor at the red buoy, near the Vlietes, Aug. 30, '99, 2 P. M.

SIR,

I have the very great ſatisfaction to acquaint you, for the information of the lords commiſſioners of the admiralty, that the whole of the Dutch fleet near the Vlieter, ſurrendered to the ſquadron under my command without firing a gun, agreeable to a ſummons I ſent this morning. The Dutch ſquadron was to be held for the orders of his ſerene highneſs the prince of Orange, and the orders I may receive from the lords commiſſioners of the admiralty for my further proceedings.

I have the honor to be, ſir, &c.

A diſpatch, of which the following is a copy, was this day received by the rt. hon. Henry Dundas, one of his Majeſty's principal ſecretaries of ſtate from lieut. gen. ſir Ralph Abercromby, K. B.

Helder, Aug. 28.

SIR,

FROM the firſt day after our departure from England, we experienced ſuch a ſeries of bad weather, as is very uncommon at this ſeaſon of the year. The ardour of admiral Mitchel for the ſervice in which we were jointly engaged, leſt it only with me to follow his example of zeal and perſeverance, in which I was encouraged by the manner that he kept a numerous convoy collected. It was our determination not to depart from the reſolution of attacking the Helder, unleſs we ſhould have been prevented by the want of water and proviſions. On the forenoon of the 21ſt inſt. the weather proved ſo favourable that we ſtood in upon the Dutch coaſt, and had made every preparation to land on the 22d, when we were forced to ſea by a heavy gale of wind. It was not until the evening of the 25th that the weather began once more to clear up. On the 26th, we came to anchor near the ſhore of the Helder, and on the 27th, in the morning, the troops began to diſembark at day-light. Altho' the enemy did not oppoſe their landing, yet the firſt diviſion had ſcarcely begun to move forward before they got into action, which continued from five in the morning until three o'clock in the afternoon. The enemy had aſſembled a conſiderable body of infantry, cavalry, and artillery, near Callanſtong, & made repeated attacks on our right with freſh troops. Our poſition was on a ridge of ſand hills, ſtretching along the coaſt from North to South. Our right wing was unavoidably expoſed to the whole force of the enemy. We had no where ſufficient ground on our right to form more than a battalion in line; yet on the whole the poſition, though ſingular, was not, in our ſituation, advantageous, having neither cavalry nor artillery. By the courage and perſeverance of the troops, the enemy was fairly worn out and obliged to retire in the evening to a poſition two leagues in his rear. We have to regret many valuable officers loſt to the ſervice, who have either fallen or been diſabled by their wounds.—The corps principally engaged were the reſerve under the command of col. Macdonald, conſiſting of the 23d and 55th regiments. The regiments of major general Coote's brigade, which have been much engaged, were the Queen's, the 27th, 29th, and 85th regiments. Major gen. Oydey's brigade was brought into action towards the cloſe of the day and has ſuſtained ſome loſs. As the enemy ſtill held the Helder with a garriſon of near 2000 men, it was determined to attack it before day break in the morning of the 28th, and the brigade under major gen. Moore, ſupported by major gen. Burrard's, were deſtined for this ſervice: but about eight o'clock yeſterday evening, the Dutch fleet in the Mars Diep got under weigh and the garriſon was withdrawn, taking their route through the marſhes towards Medemblick, having previouſly ſpiked the guns on the batteries, and deſtroyed ſome of the carriages. About 9 at night major gen. Moore, with the 2d battalion of Royals and 92d regiment, under the command of lord Huntley, took poſſeſſion of this important poſt, in which he found numerous artillery of the beſt kind, both heavy and field train. All the part of the Dutch fleet in the Nieuve Dep, together with their naval magazine at Nieuve Werk, fell into our hands this morning, a further detail of which it is not in my power to ſend. This day we have the ſatisfaction to ſee the Britiſh flag flying in the Mars Diep, and part of the 5000 men under the command of major gen. Dun, diſembarking under the batteries of the Helder.—During the courſe of the action, I had the misfortune to loſe the ſervice of lieut. gen. Sir James Pultney, from a wound he received in the arm, not before he had done himſelf the greateſt honor, and I was fully ſenſible of the want of him. Major gen. Coote ſupplied his place with ability. Col. Macdonald, who commanded the reſerve, and who was very much engaged during the courſe of the day, tho' wounded, did not quit the field. Lieut. col. Maitland, returning to England, to go on another ſervice, and major Kemp, my aid de camp, and bearer of this letter, whom I beg leave to recommend to y'r notice and protection, will be able to give any further information which may be required.—A liſt of the killed and wounded, as far as we have been able to aſcertain it, accompanies this letter.

Admiralty-office, Sept. 2.

Captain Hope of his Majeſty's ſhip Kent, and capt. Oughton, of his Majeſty's ſhip Iſis, arrived this afternoon, with a diſpatch from admiral lord viſcount Duncan, of which the following is a copy:

Kent, off Aldborough, Sunday, Sept. 1. '99.

SIR,

I tranſmit for the information of my lords commiſſioners of the admiralty, a letter to me from vice admiral Mitchell, giving a diſtinct detail of the great ſucceſs with which it has pleaſed Almighty God to crown his majeſty's arms. The boldneſs of the vice admiral in running in an open ſhore with ſo numerous a fleet, and in ſo very unſettled weather, could not be equalled but by the gallantry of ſir Ralph Abercromby, and his brave troops, landing in the face of a moſt formidable oppoſition. During the whole of the conflict on Tueſday I could plainly perceive the vaſt ſuperiority of the Britiſh troops over thoſe of the enemy, though oppoſed with obſtinacy; and in juſtice to both the land and ſea ſervice, I muſt ſay, that I never in my life witneſſed more unanimity & zeal than has pervaded all ranks to bring the expedition to its preſent happy iſſue.

Finding the Kent with ſeveral of the Ruſſian 74 gun ſhips to draw too much water, to be able to get into the harbor I have returned with them to this anchorage; but previous to my getting under weigh at eight o'clock on Friday morning, I had the pleaſure to ſee vice admiral Mitchell, with the men of war, tranſports and armed veſſels in a fair way of entering the Texel, with a fair wind, and have not the leaſt doubt but the whole of the Dutch fleet were in our poſſeſſion by noon on that day.

Theſe diſpatches will be delivered by captains Hope and Oughton, both able and intelligent officers, and who will give their lordſhips more ſatisfactory information relative to our ſucceſsful operations.

I ſhall not only add my ſincere congratulations to their lordſhips on this great event, which I think in its conſequences may be ranked among one of the greateſt that has happened during the war. I am, Sir, &c.

DUNCAN.

P. S. The winds having proved unfavourable, has occaſioned my anchoring here; but I ſhall proceed to Yarmouth as ſoon as the weather moderates.

Iſis, at anchor off the Texel, Aug. 29.

MY LORD,

In a former letter I had the honor to write to your lordſhip, I there mentioned the reaſons that had determined Sir Ralph Abercromby and myſelf not to perſevere longer than the 26th, in our reſolution to attack the Helder & port of the Texel, unleſs the wind becomes more moderate: fortunately the gale abated that morning, altho' a very heavy ſwell continued to ſet in from the northward, I thought a moment was not to be loſt in making the final attempt.

The fleet therefore bore up to take the anchorage, and I was happy to ſee the tranſports and all the bombs, ſloops and gun veſſels in their ſtations to cover the landing of the troops by three in the afternoon of that day, when the ſignal was made to prepare for landing. The general, however, not thinking it prudent to begin diſembarking ſo late on that day, it was determined to delay until two in the morning on the 27th. The intereſting time was occupied in making the former arrangements more complete, and by explaining to all the captains individually my ideas to them, that the ſervice might proſper by their united exertions. The troops were accordingly all in the boats by 3 o'clock, and the ſignal being made to row towards the ſhore, the line of gun boats, ſloops of war, and bombs, opened a warm and well directed fire to ſcour the beach, and a landing was effected with little loſs. After the firſt party had got to ſhore, I went with ſir Ralph Abercromby, that I might ſuperintend the landing of the reſt, and with the aid of the different captains, who appeared animated but with one mind, the whole diſembarked with as great regularity as poſſible. The ardour and glorious intrepidity which the troops diſplayed, ſoon drove the enemy from the neareſt ſand hills, and the preſence of ſir Ralph Abercromby himſelf, whoſe appearance gave confidence to all, ſecured to us, after a long and very warm conteſt, the poſſeſſion of the whole neck of land, between Kick Down and the road leading to Alkmoar, and near to the village of Callenſtong.

Late that night the Helder Point was evacuated by the enemy, and taken poſſeſſion of by our troops quietly in the morning, as were the men of war named in the incloſed liſt, and many large tranſports and Indiamen by us the next day. I diſpatched capt. Oughton, my own capt. to Helder Point laſt evening to bring off the pilots, and he has returned with enough to take in all the ſhips neceſſary to reducing the remaining force of the Dutch fleet, which I am determined to follow to the walls of Amſterdam, until they ſurrender or capitulate for his Serene Highneſs the Prince of Orange's ſervice.

I muſt now, my lord, acknowledge, in the warmeſt manner, the high degree of obligation I am under to your lordſhip for the liberal manner in which you continued to entruſt to my direction the ſervice I have the honor to execute under your immediate eye; a behaviour which added to my wiſh to do all in my power to forward the views of ſir Ralph Abercrombie.

It is impoſſible for me ſufficiently to expreſs my admiration of the bravery and conduct of the general and the whole army, or the unanimity with which our whole army and navy behaved on this occaſion (having to uſe a ſeaman's phraſe) pulled heartily together.

When the exertions of all you did me the honor to put under my orders have been ſo great, it is almoſt impoſſible to particularize any; but captain Oughton has had ſo much to do, from the firſt embarking of the troops to the preſent moment, and has ſhewn himſelf ſo ſtrenuous in his exertions for the good of the expedition, as well as giving me much aſſiſtance from his advice on every occaſion, that I cannot but mention him in the higheſt manner to your lordſhip, and at the ſame time expreſs my wiſh that your lordſhip will ſuffer him to accompany whoever may bear your diſpatches to England, as I think the local knowledge he has gained may be highly uſeful to be communicated to their lordſhips of the admiralty.

The manner in which the captains, officers and ſeamen landed from the fleet, behaved, while getting the cannon and ammunition along to the army, requires my particular thanks; and here let me include, in a ſpecial manner, the Ruſſian detachment of boats, from whoſe aid & moſt orderly behaviour the ſervice was much benefitted indeed.

I am alſo much indebted to captain Hope, for the clear manner in which he communicated to me your lordſhip's ideas at all times, when ſent to me by your lordſhip for that purpoſe, as every thing was better underſtood from ſuch explanation, than they could otherwiſe have been by letter.

It is impoſſible for me to furniſh y'r lordſhip at preſent with any liſt of the killed, wounded or miſſing ſeamen, or of thoſe that were unfortunately drowned on the beach in landing the troops, having as yet no return made me; but I am very ſorry to ſay that I was myſelf witneſs to ſeveral boats over-ſetting in the ſurf, in which I fear ſeveral lives are loſt. I have the honor to be, &c.

half past ten I sent capt. Rennie, of the Victor, with a summons to the Dutch admiral, as it was lord Duncan's wish I should do so—and in her way she picked up a flag of truce with two Dutch captains, from the Dutch admiral to me. Captain Rennie very properly brought them on board; and from a conversation of a few minutes I was induced to anchor in a line, at a short distance from the Dutch squadron, at their earnest request. They returned with my positive orders not to alter the position of the ships, nor do any thing whatsoever to them, and in one hour to submit or take the consequences.

In less than the time they returned with a verbal answer, that they submitted according to the summons, & should consider themselves (the officers) on parole, until I heard from the lords commissioners of the admiralty, and prince of Orange, for my further proceedings.

London, September 4.

A Paris paper of the 27th ult. (we understand) reached town yesterday, and brings most important intelligence. It is said to contain a message from the executive directory to one of the councils, giving, according to their own expression, the afflicting intelligence of the total defeat of the army under gen. Joubert by s. M. Suwarrow. The battle was fought near Coni, and was most obstinately contested, till the French accounts state, general Kray came up at a critical moment with a part of the army that had been before Mantua, and decided the fate of the day. General Joubert himself, was killed, general Boucherotte wounded, and Moreau had several horses shot under him. Nearly the whole French staff was killed or wounded. It was conjectured by the French themselves, that the allied army have got to Genoa, and it was even supposed they might have pushed their advanced posts as far Nice.

The celebrated Whaly, of Jerusalem memory, laid a wager of 7,000l, on St. Swithin's day, being July 15, that it would rain for 40 days, according to tradition; the time is just up, with rain every day more or less.

Carlopago, July 16.

BY virtue of an order from the Porte, 36,000 Saphis, forming three corps of 12,000 men each, are to march from hence in three months to Italy, to join the confederate imperial troops. These troops will be commanded by Mehemed Pacha, Wamlia, governor of Bosnia; Bethier Pacha of Romelia, and the Pacha of Natolia, whole name remains to us unknown.

Copenhagen, August 7.

WE expect here 15 or 16 Russian, and 6 English ships of war, with 20,000 men on board. Our court is in a critical situation. Should it declare for the neutrality, it will be in danger of losing the duchy of Holstein, and our possessions in the East and West; should it on the contrary declare for the coalition, the loss of our commerce is certain.

Vienna, August 7.

To-morrow a solemn thanksgiving will be celebrated here for the capture of Mantua, and the complete triumph of the imperial arms in Italy, over the common enemy. The court will go in state procession to St. Stephen's Cathedral, and salutes of artillery, will be fired from all the ramparts.

Six hundred and sixty-five cannon, mortars, howitzers, &c. were taken in the fortress of Mantua, as well as twelve thousand nine hundred and fifty-nine stand of small arms, besides one thousand and sixty pistols and Doppleba-ken.

The loss of his imperial majesty's troops during the course of the siege, amounts to seventy-seven killed, and two hundred and thirty-five wounded.

The Crash made an obstinate resistance from 40 to 50 minutes, and then struck. I am happy to add, not more than two men were killed on our side, and three wounded; and recommend the Crash as an excellent vessel, well calculated for his majesty's service, being of a small draught of water. ON Monday last, the 18th inst. the court of Oyer and Terminer and general Gaol Delivery was holden in this Town; before which came John Van Zante and Henry Hutchings, the former indicted for having shot Peter Harris, a young man, whom he had just reasons to suspect was endeavoring to disturb the peace and happiness of his family, by coveting his young and handsome consort; and the latter for theft. After Van Zante was arraigned, he prayed that his trial might be postponed till the day following as his principal evidences had not yet arrived? the indulgence was granted him. On Tuesday last he was again brought to the bar and received his trial: after examining a number of witnesses on both sides, his honor the chief justice sumed up the whole of the evidence very concisely, and addressed to the jury a very eloquent and feeling charge; the jury then went out, and in the course of half an hour returned and delivered their verdict—guilty of manslaughter.

Hutchings was then put upon his trial and acquitted by the jury.

We are happy to find that by the just indignation shewn to Atheism by the hon. Admiralty-Office, Sept. 2.

Lieutenant Collier, of his majesty's ship Isis, arrived this day with dispatches from vice-admiral Mitchell to Even Nepean, esq. secretary to the admiralty, of which the following is a copy:

Isis, at anchor at the red buoy near the Vleiter, Aug. 30.

SIR,

I Have now the honor to enclose you herewith the line of battle in which the squadron advanced, a copy of my summons to the Dutch admiral, and also a list of the Dutch fleet.

Admiral Story's flag is down, and I have sent an officer on board each of his ships to have an eye over and the charge of them, as they themselves requested that it should be so.

I have also furnished them with the prince of Orang's stand id, many of them not having had it before, and they are now all under their colors.

To maintain quiet among their crews, I issued a short manifesto, of which I also enclose a copy herewith,

The animated exertions and conduct of the whole squadron are far above any praise I can bestow on them; but I shall ever feel most sensibly impressed on my heart their spirited conduct during the whole of this business. We have all felt the same zeal for the honor of our sovereign and our country; and although the conclusion has not turned out as we expected, yet the merit I may say, in some measure, is still not the less due to my squadron; and if I had brought them to action, I trust it would have added another laurel to the navy of England in the present war. The Dutch were astonished and thunderstruck at the approach of our squadron, never believed it possible that we could so soon laid down the buoys, and led down to them in a line of battle in a channel where they themselves go thro' but with one or two ships at a time.

I have sent lieut. Collier with these dispatches, who will give their lordships every information, as he has been employed in the whole of the communication with the Dutch squadron, and was also on shore with me as my aide-du-camp on the day of landing.

I have the honor to be,

Your's &c. &c.

The underfigned vice-admiral, in the service of his majesty the king of Great Britain, charged with the execution of the naval part of the expedition to restore the Stadtholder and the lawful constitution of the seven United Provinces guaranteed by his majesty, having agreed that, in consequence of the summons to rear admiral Story the ships, after hoisting their ancient colours, will be considered as in the service of the allies of the British crown, and under the orders of his serene highness the hereditary stadtholder, captain and admiral general of the seven United Provinces, has thought it proper to give an account of this agreemen to the brave crews of the different ships and to summons them by the same to behave in a peaceable and orderly manner, so that no complaints may be represented by the officer the underfigned will send on board each of the ships to keep proper order, until the intentions of his majesty and his serene highness the prince of Orange, as admiral general shall be known, for the further destination of these ships, on account of which dispatches will immediately be sent off, and to make them aware that, in case their conduct should not be so as may be expected from the known loyalty & attachment of the Dutch navy to the illustrious house of Orange on this occasion, any excess or irregularity will be punished with the severity which the disorders may have been committed, merit.

BARHAM DOWNS, September 4.

WE are all here in high spirits on account of the glorious news from Holland, and our brave troops under gen. Abercrombie. We have already received a list of the ships which surrendered.

The first division of the 9th light dragoons marched in here to-day; and the second will march in to-morrow, with the first division of the 15th, the remainder of the 15th march in here on Tuesday. The embarkation of both regiments will begin on Thursday.—It was intended to have sent to Holland another brigade of infantry, in the cavalry transports, but by the dispatches from sir Ralph Abercrombie received this morning, he expresses a wish for a large body of cavalry. The infantry of course must wait the arrival of some of the transports which bro't over the first division of our gallant fellows.

This day the prince of Wales delivered a set of colours to the 4th regiment of infantry, on the Downs, and made an excellent address on the occasion. Mr. Pitt, Mr. Dundas, lord Chatham, &c. were upon the ground at the time. The two ministers seemed both exceedingly cheerful.

YARMOUTH, Sept. 3.

Half past three this afternoon his majesty's ship Kent, admiral lord Duncan, and the Russian admiral, came to an anchor in our roads. The beach was lined with spectators to congratulate the noble admiral on his landing, but his lordship being confined by illness, the spectators were prevented from testifying their loyalty, as they wished.

Lady Duncan has gone on board the Kent to attend on his lordship in his present indisposition, which it is hoped will not long continue.

PLYMOUTH, Sept. 2.

This morning passed by the sound to the westward, the channel fleet, under the command of lord Bridport, consisting of 39 sail of the line, and five frigates; the outward bound Lisbon and West India fleets passed by at the same time.

The Namur, of 90 guns, and the Edgar, of 74 guns, are gone up the Hamoaze, to refit.

London Gazette Extra. of Sept. 5.

Dispatches of which the following are copies, were this morning received by Mr. Nepean, from rear-admiral lord Nelson, commanding his majesty's ships and vessels in the mediterranean.

Foudroyant, Naples bay, Aug. 1.

SIR,

I have the honor to transmit you copies of my letters to the commander in chief, with their several inclosures and most sincerely congratulate their lordships on the entire liberation of the kingdom of Naples from the French robbers, for no other name can they [illegible] by, for their conduct in this [illegible] This happy event will not [illegible] be less acceptable from being [illegible]lly brought about by part of [illegible]ssels of his majesty's ships under [illegible]y orders under the command of capt. Trowbridge.

His merits speak for themselves; his own modesty makes it my duty to state, that to him alone is the chief merit due. The commendation bestowed on the brave capt Hollowell will not escape their lordship's notice, any more than the exceeding good conduct of captain Oswald, col. Strickland, capt. Creswell, to him I ordered the temporary rank of major; and all the officers and men of the marine corps; also the party of artillery, and the officers and men landed from the Portuguese squadron.

I must not omit to state that captain Hood with a garrison of seamen in Castel Nuovo, has for these five weeks very much contributed to the peace of the capital: and Naples, I am told, was never more quiet than under his direction.

I send capt. Oswald of the Perseus with this letter, and I have put lieutenant Henry Compton, who has served with me since January, 1796. as lieut. into the Perseus: and I beg leave to recommend these two officers as highly meriting promotion.

I have the honor to be,

Your's &c. &c.

NELSON.

Foudroyant, Bay of Naples, Aug.

MY LORD,

I have the honor to transmit you a copy of capt. Trowbridge's letter to me, and the capitulation of Capua, Gaeta, &c. Too much praise cannot be given to capt. Trowbridge, for his wonderful exertions in bringing about these happy events, and in so short a space of time. Capt. Hollowell has also the greatest merit. Capt. Oswald, whom I sent to England with a copy of my letter, is an officer most highly deserving promotion. I have put lieut. Henry Copton, (who has served with me as a lieutenant from January, 1796) into the Perseus Bomb, in his room, and whom I recommended to your lordships.

I sincerely congratulate your lordships on the entire liberation of the kingdom of Naples from a band of robbers; and am with the greatest respect, &c.

NELSON.

To the Rt. hon. lord Keith, K. B. Commander in chief, &c.

Culloden. Naples Bay, July 29, '99.

MY LORD,

Agreeable to your lordship's orders, I marched on the 20th instant with the English and Portuguese troops from Naples, and arrived at Caserta the following morning. After resting the people, we marched and encamped near Capua. The Swiss, under coll.—Tchuay, the cavalry under gen. Acton, and the different corps of infantry under gen. Boucard, and col. Gants, took up their appointed situations, the former to the left of our camp, the latter to the right of the river.

On the 22d a bridge of pontoons was thrown over the river, to establish a communication; batteries of guns and mortars were immediately begun within 500 yards of the enemy's works, and on the 24th, the gun battery of four 24 pounders, another of two howitzers, and two mortar batteries, were opened, and kept up a constant and heavy fire, which was returned by the enemy from 11 pieces of cannon; on the 21st, trenches were opened, and new batteries began within a few yards of the Glacis.

The enemy, on finding our approach so rapid, sent out the enclosed terms, which I rejected in toto' and offered in return the incloied capitulation, which the French general agreed to, and signed the following morning at 6 o'oclock. The French garrison marched out this morning at 3 A. M. and grounded their arms, and proceeded to Naples under the escort of 400. English marines and two squadrons of general Eaton's cavalry.

In performing this service, I feel much indebted to captains Hollowell and Oswald, to whose abilities and exertions I attribute the reduction of the place in so short a time, as they staid night and day in the field to forward the erecting of the batteries. I also beg leave to recommend lieutenant-colonel Streitland and major Creswell, the officers and marines, for their constant and unremitted attention, as well as the officers and men of her most faithful majesty the queen of Portugal.—The Russian forces under capt. Baillie rendered every assistance. Generals Acton and Boucard, and colonel Gams, merit much for their zeal in cheerfully performing all the different services that arose. Colonel Tchudy's zeal merits great attention, for his readiness to lend working parties to the batteries, as well as pushing his men forward on all occasions.

To M. Moufrere, a volunteer gentleman from the Sea Horse, whom I had the honor to recommend to your lordship's notice at St. Elmo, I feel indebted for his great ability and assistance as an engineer, which forwarded our operations much.

Lieutenants Lowcay and Davis, who served as aides-du-camp, to me, have also great merit as well as Mr. Greig, an officer in the Russian service (serving as a volunteer in his majesty's ship under my command) whom I beg your lordship to recommend to the court of Petersburgh as a promising officer.

Count de Lucci, chief of the Etat-Major, was unremitting in his attention. I have the honor to inclose to your lordship a return of the ordinance stores and provisions found in Capua, as well as a return of the garrison (not including Jacobins) which were serving with the French.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c.

(Signed) T. TROWBRIDGE.

The right honorable lord Nelson, K. B. &c. &c.

[Here follows the articles of capitulation by which the garrison of Capua became prisoners of war, but the garrison of Gaeta are not to be deemed prisoners of war wen sent to France.]

THE ORACLE.

NEW-YORK, Saturday, November 30.

OUR former account of the determination of the court, on the question respecting the liability of Lands to be taken in execution for debt and sold, being imperfect, we have procured a fuller account of what passed in court upon that subject, and beg leave to state, that it was not the unanimous opinion of the judges—Mr. justice Alcock was avowedly opposed to it, which will appear by the following statement:

BLISS vs STREET. } THIS was a motion for a writ of execution against the lands and tenement.

The Solicitor general in support of the motion:—It appears to me, that the 5th of Geo. 2d is in force in this province by the 14th of the king.

Alcock, J.—I wish you would argue it a little more at large.

Sol. Gen.—I will if the court will find arguments for me, as it seems to me to lie in a small compass.

Stewart.—I am on the other side:—Reads the first act of the province—The act is to repeal certain parts of the 14th of the king; and to introduce the English law as a rule of decision in all matters of controversy relative to property and civil rights. By the Engliſh law, Landed property cannot be ſold. Nor by the 5th of Geo. 2d can any debt affect it; but thoſe due and owing to "Britiſh ſubjects." The act ſays, "his majeſty's ſubjects trading to the plantations in America." It applies only to debts due from the natives, or inhabitants concerned in trade with Britiſh ſubjects. And this diſtiction goes thro' the act; which ſpeaks of debts due to his majeſty or his ſubjects; and means the people at home in contradiction to the natives, or inhabitants, 'Tis ſo in the preamble alſo, and muſt be taken ſo all-through. The ſtatute could not intend to operate among us, for we do no trade among ourſelves. If it could it is barred by the firſt act of our legiſlature.

Macdonell.—The firſt act of the legiſlature of this province, is to introduce the laws of England, and not bye laws made in England. That ſtatute meant to ſay, that the ſame rule of deciſion ſhould apply here as does at home.—This is not the proper rule of deciſion at home. Beſides, this court has not a greater power than the courts of Weſtminſter. The judicature bill gives to this court the ſame power as the courts at home—it will not aſſume to itſelf a greater; reads the judicature bill.—"And ſhall hear and determine all iſſues of law, and ſhall hear by and with an inqueſt of good and lawful men determine all iſſues of fact that may be joined in ſuch action, cauſe or ſuit, as aforeſaid, and judgment thereon give, and execution thereof award in as full and ample a manner as can or may be done in his majeſty's court of king's bench, common bench, or in matters which regard the king's revenue by the court of exchequer in England." The ſame powers are incident to this court, that the courts have at home and no more. Had the act intended to give it greater power it would have ſaid, or that the Colonies have, or heretofore had.—This court, therefore, has not the power to extend a new writ in this cauſe.

Sol. gen.—The firſt act of the province repeals only the laws of Canada. As to Mr. Stewart's argument, that the 5th Geo. 2d relates to the ſubjects at home, that is done away by the laſt clauſe.—It ſeems to be the intention to introduce the ſame law in this province heretofore (by the 14th of the king) and now it only reſts upon the act of the legiſlature, doing it way or not.

Alcock, J.—Confine your argument to the queſtion, how far the ſtatute operated on all the king's ſubjects—And then, how far it is repealed by the law of the province.

Sol. gen.—I am going to that point. The act only ſays, that the laws of Canada ſhall be repealed—thoſe mean the French laws. Another matter ſtrickes me, that the law make in England is the law of England, and it is enforced by another law. Many laws are made in Lower Canada which follow up the law of Canada, altho' thoſe ordinances may be repealed.

Chief J.—As it ſtrickes me, there are two queſtions—if any proceſs is to go—then what proceſs?—A writ againſt the land, muſt not be contained in a writ againſt the goods. Which of the ordinances now in farce gives the writ againſt the lands and tenements? (to the ſolicitor-gen.)—Look at the ordinance of 27.

Powell, J.—The court will give an opinion on the firſt point—if any proceſs ſhould go—and then—what proceſs.

Alcock, J.—No writ in that form can go againſt lands and tenements, goods and chattels.

Powell, J.—It ſhould go in the ſame way that it has done for twenty years—the goods are firſt ſold, and four months after the lands and tenements.

Alcock, J.—In England the court is informed what has been done with the Fieri Facias, before any writ againſt the perſon can go, for the levy upon the fieri facias is recited in the Ca: A:

Powell, J.—It is here different: it is under a particular ordinance.

Chief J.—This is an application for execution againſt the lands and tenements. It is not the firſt that has come before us. In giving my opinion I put the policy of the queſtion quite out of my mind. We are to give our judgment of what the law is, not what policy might induce us to wiſh it. There is alſo another matter which might ſway on other occaſions, I mean the private opinions of individuals of reſpectability. My opinion muſt be upon my judgment of what was intended by the legiſlature. The queſtion is, whether, lands and tenements can be taken in execution in this province, upon the 5th of Geo. the 2d? I am of opinion they may.

In conſtruing acts, conſider what was the law at the time they were paſſed.—By the 14th Geo. 3d, the law of Canada is declared to be the law of the land. Beſides which, there were alſo certain acts of the parliament of Great-Britain paſſed by her as a paramount legiſlature for the government of her Colonies. One was the 5th Geo. 2d which was introduced here by the 14th of the king. The Canada code conſiſted of three parts; the law of Canada, acts of parliament and ordinances paſſed there by the governor and council. Now in the conſtruction of ſtatutes, it is fit we ſhould enquire what are their objects: This act, the firſt of our legiſlature, recites, that the law of Canada was the rule of conduct; but that the perſons inhabiting this province being accuſtomed to live under the law of England it was expedient that thoſe laws ſhould continue. By the common law, every ſubject removing from his native land, takes with him the law as an inherent birth right.

That was the object of the ſtatute; that perſons living formerly under the law of England, ſhould continue to be ſo now—that was the object.

Now conſider the words of the act? (reads the firſt clauſe) then comes a repeal of former laws, and is followed by an introduction of the law of England. The law of Canada was only part of the code, that part was repealed—no other.—If the law of England was intended to be the only law, it would have repealed the ordinances and the 14th of the king. The effect of this act was only to introduce the law of England combined with, and ſubject to, ſuch other legiſlative proviſions as were then exiſting. If thoſe words (reading the third clauſe) mean that nothing ſhall be law in Canada, but what is law in England, then, what is law in England muſt of neceſſity be law in Canada; which cannot be, for that would introduce the revenue laws: but it is clear, that ſuch cannot be the intention of the act, as we ſee particular laws introduced that are laws in England, and which of courſe would be law here, if that reaſoning were to prevail.

ON Tueſday laſt between the hours of two and three, P. M. the following melancholy event took place: A young man by the name of IRA BESSELL, carpenter, was coming down the river Don upon a raft alone; he fell from it, and was drowned. It was ſome time before he was taken up, after which every exertion uſed for his recovery, proved ineffectual.—On Thurſday laſt his remains were interred in maſonic order.

[The following are the letters of Admiral Duncan and the anſwer of admiral Story, prior to the ſurrender of the Dutch fleet to admiral Mitchell—to which alſo are added the proceedings of the Batavian directory, previous to that event.]

HAGUE. Auguſt 24.

The following SUMMONS was ſent by admiral Duncan, to the Dutch admiral, Story:

On board his Britannic Majeſty's ſhip Kent, Auguſt 20

SIR,

UPWARDS of 2000 troops are already landed at the Helder, where more are diſembarking; you will, I hope, not loſe this favorable opportunity of manifeſting your zeal and loyalty towards the Prince of Orange, your lawful ſovereign. I doubt not, but you will, with all the veſſels of the navy of Holland, which ſpeedily will follow your example, declare in his favor. All thoſe who are ſo inclined, will be conſidered as friends and allies, and may hoiſt the flag of Holland.

Sir Ralph Abercrombe, who commands the Britiſh land forces, and Andrew Mitchell who next to me commands the fleet, are notified of theſe my propoſitions made to you: all the veſſels therefore who chooſe to profit hereby, may ſafely come and join me; they ſhall be treated with the ſincereſt friendſhip as allies, and remain with the utmoſt ſafety in the midſt of the Britiſh fleet, until they may receive the immediate orders of the Prince of Orange, who will order their future operations.

I have the honor to be with Reſpect and Friendſhip,
DUNCAN.

ADMIRAL STORY's

Anſwer, on board the Waſhington, in the Texel, Auguſt 22d, 1799, fifth year of Batavian liberty.

ADMIRAL!

Was I to accept as an officer, the offers you make, I ſhould think myſelf unworthy the eſteem of my lord Duncan, as well as that of every honeſt man: I know the duties I owe to my country and to the flag under which I have the honor to ſerve, ſhould your force ſwell to double the number, my ſentiments will ſtill remain the ſame, you may therefore my lord expect ſuch a defence from me, as ſhall be honorable to my nation and myſelf.

I have ſent your ſummons to my government, waiting for further inſtructions, which as ſoon as I receive them ſhall be communicated to you.

Reſt aſſured my lord,
That I am with eſteem,
STORY.

The legiſlative body approved of admiral Story's anſwer; the following addition was ſent to the admiral to tranſmit to lord Duncan;

The landing of 2000 troops at the Helder, as expreſſed in the ſummons, wants confirmation, as the beſt meaſures to prevent ſuch a landing have been adopted; but admitting it as a fact, the brave commanders of our veſſels would certainly be found rather to proteſt to the laſt extremity, the honor of the Batavian flag, than to go over to an enemy. This, added to admiral Story's anſwer, would have been thought ſufficient, if we were not forced to notify to lord Duncan, the unwarrantable conduct of the officer who was charged with the delivery of the ſummons, truſting that ſuch conduct will not alone be diſapproved, but alſo, ſeverely puniſhed by his nation.—The ſaid officer handed to a Batavion officer, papers, containing a proclamation both in Engliſh and Dutch, tending to induce if poſſible the Batavians to revolt, and annul the conſtituted authorities. This daring fact was not diſcovered till after the departure of the Britiſh officer; who otherwiſe, as hereafter it will be lawful and juſt, would have been treated as a revolter and traitor—for the future any officer charged with a delivery of a ſummons, or ſuch like negociation ſent by the Britiſh commander, ſhall be treated as a priſoner of war.

The preſident in the firſt chamber declared ſolemnly his acquieſcence as to the manly anſwer ſent by admiral Story to that of the Engliſh admiral, he praiſed the energy and deciſion of the directory, who for the preſervation of the preſent order of things, ſtrain every nerve, nay even are ready to ſacrifice itſelf. He depended much upon the bravery of the Batavians, which was to oppoſe the army and fleet, he reminded them of the heroic acts of Trump and Ruyter.

It was afterwards decreed as follows:

1ſt. That no one under penalty of death after the date hereof, ſhall quit the land—that the ſame penalty ſhall be inflicted on all revolters, plunderers, and on all thoſe who may be found in arms againſt the patriots.

2d. All conſtituted authorities have full power to take up and confine, all ſuſpicious perſons, and report them to the directory.

3d. The directory is empowered to proſecute all thoſe, who by virtue of a paſſport have left the country, and are not returned.

4th. The exportation of hay, oats, and ſtraw, is prohibited for the ſpace of two months.]

5th. The directory may if it is deemed expedient, call the militia into force.

6th. The returning emigrants, as well as thoſe who have quit the republic without a paſs, and favoured the enemy; thoſe who oppoſe the conſtituted authority, thoſe who wear ſignal of revolt, &c. ſhall after conviction be puniſhed with death.

Return of cannon & the garriſon at Gaeta.

Ordnance—58 braſs guns from 24 to 18 pounders; 12 iron 6 ditto; 2 braſs 4 ditto; 4 mortars, 12 inch; 9 ditto, 10 inch; with an immenſe quantity of powder and other garriſon ſtores.

French troops—83 officers, 1415 privates; beſides rebels.

French troops—199 officers, 2918 non-commiſſioned officers and privates, 12,000 muſquets—414 muſquet cartridges filled—57,848 pound weight of powder.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, December 7.

Upon the motion for an execution againſt the lands and tenements:

Chief J. This caſe has been ingeniouſly argued, I will anſwer the objection: It has been argued, that the 5th Geo. 2d was paſſed for the recovery of Britiſh debts only—look at the title? The title ſhould be taken as explanatory of the intention of the legiſlature; it is generally for the recovery of debts. The firſt, ſecond and third clauſes indeed relate intirely to Britiſh debts.—The diſtinction taken by Mr. Stewart, between the natives and ſubjects is ingenious; but there is nothing in it, for the diſtinction is not continued through the act. In the clauſes I have read it is coupled with ſomething elſe which confines it to the ſubjects and Britiſh debts. But then comes the fourth clauſe, and that is quite at large; and it is clear to me, to be intended to make lands and tenements ſubject to debts generally. Another objection was taken by Mr. Macdonell, (reads the fourth clauſe) now the words ſeizin and extending apply to the ...ate, the ſubſequent words to the ...ſonal; therefore it appears to me that ley ſhould be ſold generally; the words are: "in like manner as real eſtates are by the laws of England, liable to the ſatisfaction of debts due by bond or other ſpecialty." Another point was alſo made by Mr. Macdonell, the laſt day—he then averted to that clauſe of the judicature bill, which creates the powers of this court, and makes them as full and ample as thoſe poſſeſſed by the courts of Weſtminſter; but that is not intended to reſtrain—for the ſtatute is in the affirmative, and therefore the court may have more power—though it cannot have leſs.

Our provincial ſtatute ſubſtitutes the law of England for the law of Canada, including the paramount power of England. I am therefore of opinion that lands and tenements are liable to be taken in execution.

Powell, J. It is preſumed that the 5th Geo. 2d is a law in this province—and that our powers are equal to thoſe exerciſed by the courts in Weſtminſter; there is nothing then that limits any power poſſeſſed by courts here before. The 5th Geo. 2d clearly makes eſtates liable to the ſubjects: that act was anterior to the ſubjugation of this province; but it had force in this province immediately after the paſſing of the 14th Geo. 3d as the law of Quebec. That act declares that in all controverſies reſpecting property and civil rights, reſort ſhall be had to the law of Canada. Now by the firſt bill paſſed in this province, the 14th of the king is repealed in part; and there the law of England is ſubſtituted; but only to apply, where the laws of Canada have been taken away—that is, the law of England is only the ſubſtitute of the law of France.

As to the clauſe in the judicature bill which gives to this court the ſame powers as thoſe exerciſed in Weſtminſter hall—it is not reſtrictive—this court has as great power, and greater.—I am of opinion that the ſtatute was in force and that it has not been affected ſince; therefore the writ muſt go.

Alcock, J. I have the misfortune to differ from his honor and my brother Powell. It has been argued on two points: the virtual repeal of the ſtatute of Geo. 2d and the effect of the judicature bill. I have conſidered it at many times, and I think as I heretofore intimated upon the two ſtatutes: As the law ſtood formerly the merchants at home, who were giving large credits, and perhaps had great difficulty in recovering their debts. Therefore the 5th of Geo. 2d was paſſed, and as the act ſays, avowedly for the ſecurity of the Britiſh ſubjects. I give no opinion on the laſt clauſe, as to what was the intention of the legiſlature—it is dark and obſcure; but it is clear that the word ſubjects in the previous clauſes of the ſtatute was not uſed generally for both countries. The 14th of the king eſtabliſhes the law of Canada in Quebec. What can the law of Canada mean? it muſt be the coutume de Paris, modified as it has been by the ordinances of the province. Now the firſt act of our legiſlature introduced the law of England: it ſays that reſort ſhall be had to the laws of England as a rule of deciſion. What can the laws of England mean? it muſt mean the laws as adminiſtered in Weſtminſter hall, and the other cauſes ſupport that opinion. The legiſlature ſeem to have been aware that they were altering the law as it ſtood in the province of Quebec; they thought it neceſſary ſpecifically to declare, that law ſhould not be affected, unleſs in thoſe caſes where the ſtatute then paſſed neceſſarily varied it. I proceed now to the judicature bill: there, in the firſt ſection expreſſed in ſtrong terms—the legiſlature has bound the hands of this court—His honor and my brother Powell think it does not reſtrain the court, that we have the ſame powers with thoſe in Weſtminſter hall, and more.—But the legiſlature hath deſcribed the powers we ſhall have, it has uſed the words "as full and ample;" and what muſt be the conſtruction? The true conſtruction muſt be ſuch and the like powers and as full and ample as the Engliſh courts have, but not powers more full or more ample: There lands cannot be taken in execution by a judgment creditor. You may extend a moiety of the rents and profits, and you have a further lien on the other moiety. But it is ſaid that extending the rents in this province will be of no advantage. This may be proper language for the legiſlature: but is not fit language here. Here it is our duty to ſay what the law is—not what it ſhould be.

Other queſtions naturally ariſe in conſidering this ſubject: In what relation do huſbands and wives ſtand as to real eſtate? How does the wife become intituled to dower by the law of England? How is the right of the huſband to his eſtate of curteſy derived? by the ſame law, and yet the ſtatute has not ſaid a word either reſpecting dower or curteſy. The truth is, the law of England is introduced generally, and the right of the judgment creditor upon the real eſtate of his debtor, muſt be governed by that law as other rights are. Tis for theſe reaſons and theſe grounds that I think, that as by the law of England the judgment creditor cannot, in England, take the land of his debtor in execution; the judgment creditor has not any larger or more extenſive remedy againſt the land in Upper-Canada, where the law of England has been declared to be in force; therefore, the plaintiff in the caſe before the court cannot take out execution againſt the defendant's lands, or any other remedy againſt them, than an extent againſt a moiety of the rents and profits.

Chief J. Here muſt be had ſome proceſs—it muſt be on ſome conditions (reads the 4th clauſe of Geo. 2d) conſider the queſtion maturely—how muſt the writ be? the act ſays in like manner as real eſtates are by the laws of England, liable to the ſatisfaction of debts due by bond or other ſpecialty.—If the lands are to be ſold, let us know what form of a writ there muſt be?

[It being now determined that the 5th Geo. 2d is part of the law of this province, by which act the lands and tenements are liable to be taken in execution and ſold to anſwer ſimple contract debts, the court took time to conſider of the form of a writ adapted to this law. It being a writ unknown in Weſtminſter hall; and, ſince the introduction of the laws of England, till now, unknown in this province.—Counſel were deſired to ſpeak to it the next day. The court having met, the chief juſtice ſpeaking to the point, ſaid that the court would conſider of the proper form of a writ,]

From a London paper.

With a view of perpetuating the memory of the unparalleled Naval Victories gained in this war, and tranſmitting to poſterity with ſuitable honors, the names of Howe, Jarvis, Duncan, and Nelſon, and the other gallant ſeamen, whoſe ſplendid atchievements have raiſed this country to the envied pre-eminence it poſſeſſes in the ſcale of nations—and alſo to inſpire the riſing generation of Britiſh tars with that noble emulation which is the impelling principle in the career of glory—it has been determined to erect a pillar in ſome public ſituation in the kingdom, with deſigns from the heroic actions intended to be commemorated, and in a ſtyle of magnificence equal to the opulence of the Britiſh empire. As this monument is meant for an offering of national gratitude to our brave and generous defenders, the expence eſtimated at 15,000l. is intended to be defrayed by Voluntary contributions, to which every loyal heart will doubtleſs be proud to contribute.

The captures made from France, Spain and Holland, during the war, conſiſts of 74 ſail of the line, 97 frigates, 52 ſhips of from 20 to 26 guns, 78 ſloops, and 74 cutters, &c. to which are to be added 685 privateers; and by the gazette of the 2d of Sept. the following Dutch ſhips have ſurrendered to admirals Duncan and Mitchell without fireing a gun, viz: one ſhip of 74 guns five of 68, two of 54, two of 44, one of 32, and one of 16.

Foreign News.

VIENNA, Auguſt 7

(From the Court Gazette, Auguſt 4.)

The capitulation, promiſed yeſterday which has been concluded on the 28th inſt. between the general of artillery, Baron Kray, and the French general of diviſion Foſſiac Latour, for the ſurrender of Mantua to the imperial royal troops, is as follows:

CAPITULATION.

ART. 1. On the 30th of July, at noon, the garriſon of Mantua ſhall march out with all the honors of war, field-pieces, &c. They ſhall furniſh priſoners of war. To deliver them from the diſgrace and miſeries of captivity, the commanding general, the other generals under his order, the officers of the ſtaff, and other officers belonging to the garriſon, conſent to go as priſoners of war to Germany, into the neareſt part of the emperor's hereditary dominions, where they will remain hoſtages for the non-commiſſioned officers and ſoldiers who ſhall be ſent back to France, and be forbid to bear arms againſt the troops of the emperor and his allies, until exchanged. The garriſon ſhall accordingly ground arms on the glacis of the fortreſs. The officers ſhall keep their ſwords and equipage, & the number of horſes to which they are entitled by their rank. The perſons employed in the army ſhall alſo be ſent back to France. The generals ſhall be allowed to keep their ſecretaries, and alſo the officers their ſervants. A pair of colours ſhall be granted to the general of diviſion, Foſſiac Latour, in conſideration of the vigorous defence he has made.

ANSWER. All granted, with this addition, that, conſidering the frank and loyal manner in which the garriſon of Mantua has behaved, the commander, his ſtaff, and other officers of the garriſon, will be at liberty, after having remained three months in the hereditary dominions of his imperial majeſty, to return to their reſpective countries, pledging their ſword of honour not to ſerve againſt his imperial majeſty or his allies, till exchanged. The three months to be computed from the day on which the capitulation ſhall have been ſigned.

2. The Ciſalpine, Swiſs, Poliſh, and Piedmonteſe troops ſhall be treated, in every reſpect, like the troops of the French republic. GRANTED.

3. The general commandant of the places ſhall be granted 3 covered waggons to tranſport his equipage, papers, and other effects, perſonally belonging to him; they ſhall be ſearched, and he ſhall be permitted to diſpoſe of them as he pleaſes. GRANTED.

4. The chief of the ſtaff, and the ſuperior officers ſhall be at liberty to take away with the papers belonging to their reſpective functions as well as the waggons deſtined for that purpoſe and for conveying their property. The commiſſaries ſhall be reſponſible for the delivery of ſuch objects as belong to the forteſs. GRANTED.

5. To the loyalty and generoſity of the Auſtrian government is recommended the ſecurity of the inhabitants employed in the Ciſalpine government formerly acknowledged by the emperor in the treaty of Campo Formio, as well as that of all thoſe who have manifeſted republican opinions; the imperial commiſſioners, and all the gunners who are burgners having been treated in the ſame manner, in the capitulation concluded between generals Buonaparte and Vitmſer. Granted.

6. Officers of engineers and artillery ſhall be appointed as commiſſaries to deliver up & receive the magazines which are in the place.—Granted.

7. Commiſſaries of war and proviſion ſhall be appointed, to deliver up and receive the magazines which are in the place.—Granted.

8. The ſick and wounded, not in a ſtate to be removed, ſhall continue to have administered to them the neceſſary relief for their recovery. For this purpoſe, the French ſurgeons and phyſicians to whoſe care they are now entruſted, ſhall remain with them. The commandant ſhall appoint an officer to guard them, and in proportion as they recover, they ſhall be furniſhed with all the means to join the army, if exchanged, or to go to France and Germany, under the terms granted to the reſt, according to rank.—Granted.

9. The Auſtrians ſhall furniſh a proper and ſufficient eſcort to protect all the individuals included in the preſent capitulation, from all inſults and popular commotions, and the commanders of eſcort ſhall be perſonally reſponſible for this purpoſe. Granted.

10. Any thing doubtful, or liable to difficulties in this capitulation, ſhall be interpreted in favor of the garriſon, and according to the rules of equity.—Granted.

11. After ſigning this capitulation, hoſtages ſhall be mutually given, conſiſting, on the part of the French, of a chief of brigade and captain; on that of the Auſtrians, of a colonel and captain. Granted.

12. Until the capitulation ſhall be ſigned, and the hoſtages exchanged, there ſhall be a truce on both ſides.—Granted.

13. Migliaretto ſhall be occupied by an Auſtrian battalion, which ſhall detach 50 men to occupy the outward poſt of the gate of Careſa. The two reſpective armies ſhall have no communication between them, excepting the chiefs and ſuch perſons as ſhall have permiſſion of the reſpective generals.—Granted.

14. The commiſſioner of the Executive power, and the inſpector general of police of the Ciſalpine republic, at Mantua, ſhall have liberty to quit this place, & go where they like. Granted.

15. Two carriages ſhall be granted to the perſons belonging to the general's ſuite, and to ſome others, to whom orders ſhall have been given to ſhare the fate of the garriſon. Granted.

THE ORACLE.

THE road from this town to the Midland Diſtrict, is completed as far as the township of Hope, about 60 miles, ſo that ſleighs & waggons, &c. may travel it with ſafety. The report which has been made to the government by the gentleman appointed to inſpect the work, is highly favorable to Mr. DANFORD, the undertaker, and leſs imperfections could not be pointed out in ſo extenſive a work. The remaining part will be accompliſhed by the firſt of July next.

ANECDOTE.

According to the Aſiatic reſearches, a very curious mode of trying the title to land is practiſed in Hindoſtan. Two holes are dug in the diſputed ſpot, in each of which the plaintiff and defendant's lawyer's put one of their legs, and remain there till one of them is tired, or complains of being ſtung by the inſects, in which caſe his client is defeated. In this country it is the client not the lawyer, who puts his foot in it.

Foreign News.

VIENNA, Auguſt 21.

GENERAL Suwarrow, it is ſaid, wiſhes that gen. Kray might remain in Italy, and that Melas might be appointed to the command in Switzerland.

By letters from Naples it appears, that Cardinal Ruffo in the name of the king, has commanded all Neapolitan officers who are ſcattered over Italy, to return on or before the firſt of Auguſt.

ITALY, Auguſt 15.

The grand army of the allies receives daily a formidable increaſe, the beſieging corps of Mantua is at a great diſtance, 200 pieces of artillery with an innumerable number of ammunition waggons follow that corps.

3000 Neapolitan troops will be added to the grand army, as ſoon as the ſouth and lower Italy is cleared of the French.

A new Ruſſian army of 60,000 men is collecting on the frontiers of Gallica, 40,000 of whom are to march to the Rhine and the reſt to Italy. 5000 Ruſſians will follow them every month, that the armies may always be complete.

The Auſtrian princes and the ſtates of Sileſia have granted the emperor a voluntary war contribution of 100,059 florins.

The city of Mantua has ſuffered very little by the bombardment, but the fortifications, eſpecially thoſe of Pradella, were ſo much battered down, that had the place not ſurrendered, the Auſtro-Ruſſians would immediately have ſtormed it.

The Engliſh have taken 45 French ſhips, with 10,000 ſacks of corn for Jubert's army, and the cannon of Genoa.

HAMBURGH, Auguſt 20.

In ſeveral towns in Holland a proclamation has been diſtributed, inviting all the inhabitants not to become the innocent ſacrifices of the preſent government, but to throw off the galling yoke of liberty, after the plague of 4 years revolution, during which period, golden mountains and earthly felicity had been promiſed, but inſtead of which all their property, commerce and domeſtic happineſs had been forfeited. "Do not be impoſed upon any longer by the dregs of the people, thoſe pretended legiſlators: by the almighty God! our country ſhall be ſaved.—Our former allies will ſuccor and favor us, our commerce will recover its wonted degree of ſplendor," &c.

PARIS, Auguſt 13.

Accounts from Cayenne mention, that in conſequence of the hoſtilities committed by the Americans againſt the French armed ſhips, the agent of the directory in that colony, Barnel, has authoriſed French privateers to capture American veſſels.

The journal des Hommes Libres complains that Sieyes, in his ſpeech in the camp de Mars, threw out ſarcaſms againſt the popular ſocieties; it ſays that on the commemoration of the 10th of Auguſt we ſhall ſoon hear the panegyric of royalty.

The conſcripts of Abbeville and Amiens are in a ſtate of rebellion.—Thoſe two communes have ever been actuated by counter-revolutionary principles: they ſhould be attentively watched by the government. Several refractory prieſts ſecretly preached up diſobedience to the laws and inculcate among the inhabitants hatred to the republican government.

The Chouans are multiplying in the departments of the weſt: they raiſe recruits even to the gates of Mayence.—Several of the communes are in open revolt, and ſeem diſpoſed to ſecond the landing of the Engliſh.

The journal du Commerce of this day ſays, that at the celebration of the 10th of Auguſt, in the champ de Mars, the directory heard bullets whiſtling near their ears, and an officer of their guard was ſhot through the thigh. It is ſuppoſed that the jacobins meditated a general maſſacre of the directors on that day, which was prevented by the precautions taken to prevent any perſon from approaching the centre of the champ de Mars where the directory, the conſtituted authorities, and the perſons employed in the ceremonies of the feſtival were aſſembled.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 25.

For ſeveral weeks paſt we have had no advice reſpecting gen. Buonaparte. It is thought he has fought his way thro' the deſarts with the handful of men that remained from the expedition in Egypt, conſiſting of 1500 men at the utmoſt. Some accounts ſay that he is ſtill in the burning ſandy deſart, where having recruited a corps of 1200 men, of different nations, he wanted to get back to Egypt, where preparations are making by Murad Bey, who is ſtationed with a conſiderable force on this ſide of Cairo, to endeavor to cut him off from his army, while the Engliſh will ſupport the operations by ſea.

The major part of the Turkiſh fleet had according to the lateſt advices, not yet left Corfu. General Buonaparte has ſent a declaration to the grand ſignior, in which he attempts to juſtify his conduct, alledging, that he only had acted according to the orders of the late directory—But the present government having recalled all the French from Egypt, he was ready to take his departure for France, if the neceſſary paſſports and proper eſcort were granted him.

The grand ſignior ſent him anſwer that he would never forget the injury done him by the French government by Buonaparte's invaſion, and that he left the latter and his troops to their fate, while on the other hand, a conſiderable Turkiſh army was ordered againſt France by way of reprisals.

Dangerous troubles having broke out in the iſland of Cyprus, ſir S. Smith, who went thither for a ſhort time reſtored tranquility. In the iſland of Rhodes ſeveral Engliſhmen are ſaid to have been moſt cruelly treated by the Turks.

CARLOPAGO, July 16.

By virtue of an order from the Porte, 36,000 Spahis, forming three corps of 12,000 men each, are to march from hence in three months to Italy, to join the confederate Imperial troops. Theſe troops will be commanded by Mehemed Pacha, Wamlia, governor of Boſnia; Bethier, Pacha of Romelia, and the Pacha of Natolia, whoſe name remains to us unknown.

PARIS, Auguſt 3.

Some of our public prints mention, that Tortona has ſurrendered by capitulation.

The auxiliary Ruſſians ſaid to have arrived at Schaffhauſen, deſtined for Switzerland, are ſaid to be thirty-ſix thouſand men in number.

From the London Gazette, Auguſt 24.

Admiralty Office, Auguſt 20.

The King has been pleaſed to appoint the hon. Samuel Barrington, admiral of the White, to be general of his Majeſty's marine forces, in the room of earl Howe deceaſed.

And alſo, the right hon. Alexander lord Bridport, K.B. admiral of the White, to be lieutenant general of the ſaid forces, in the room of the hon. Samuel Barrington, promoted as above.

LONDON, Auguſt 21.

The moſt important article of intelligence brought by the mail, is the declaration of war againſt Spain by the Emperor of Ruſſia. Before this year ſuch an act would have appeared vain, as Ruſſia and Spain could do no injury to each other except in a commercial view. But ſince the Ruſſian ſquadron are in the Mediterranean, which is loſt as well to the Spaniards as to the French it is not impoſſible that Spain may ſenſibly feel the conſequences of this meaſure on ſome point of her coaſts.

Earl St. Vincent has not yet reſigned the command of the Mediterranean fleet. He is now merely abſent on leave.

Aug. 23.

On the 6th inſtant, legitimate, that is to ſay, royaliſt inſurrections, broke out in different parts of France, particularly at Amiens, Rennes, Bourdeaux, and Toulouſe. Thoſe at the latter place, have been more ſerious, and our readers will find the details of them in one of the ſittings of the Council of Five Hundred. On the 8th, the number of royaliſts in arms and marching againſt the city of Toulouſe, was eſtimated at no leſs than eighteen thouſand.—Their plan was to take poſſeſſion of a conſiderable train of artillery which was in that city, and to eſtabliſh there the centre of royalty in the ſouth. Subſequent intelligence ſtates that they were unable to ſucceed, and that they experienced on the tenth a defeat which coſt them 300 men. This loſs implies in itſelf reſiſtance on their ſide, and all the Paris papers agree that notwithſtanding this defeat, the royaliſts are ſtill formidable, and threaten all the ſouth.

FRENCH ACCOUNTS.

LOWER ELBE, Sept. 4.

The Paris letters of the 27th ult. contain an official meſſage from the Directory to the two Councils, giving copious details from Moreau, reſpecting the battle of the 15th, in which the French ſeem to have performed prodigies of valour. Joubert was killed in the courſe of the action:—ruſhing forward to animate his troops in a charge of the bayonet, crying advance! advance! a ball ſmote him on the right ſide, piercing his heart, and, falling to the ground, he waved his hands, exclaiming march on! march on! and expired almoſt immediately.

Gen. Moreau then commanded in chief, expoſed himſelf to every danger, having a horſe killed under him: a ball grazed his right ſide.

Gen. Moreau concludes his diſpatches thus:—"Our troops performed prodigies of valour. The artillery did wonders. The corps of Ruſſians were cut to pieces: it attempted four attacks, & was repulſed. The corps of gen. Kray charged with the attack of the left, was almoſt driven from the field of battle at three o'clock; every thing ſeemed to promiſe a happy ſucceſs. Generals Cyr, Perignon, and Grouchy, diſtinguiſhed themſelves particularly. I am perhaps wrong to mention ſome, for they all did their duty. There are very few who are not wounded, with their horſes. Gen. Partouneau was made priſoner; but the hoſtile gen. Luſignon was alſo taken, being wounded in the charge. I ſent him back to be exchanged. Joubert died at ſix in the morning and the action continued till ſix in the evening."

Another meſſage from the Directory to the Councils, announces, that according to official reports from Maſſena, of the 21ſt of Auguſt, "the general reſult of the different actions, ſince the 14th, was the taking of 8400 priſoners; among whom were one brigadier colonel, two majors, and 125 officers, with 21 cannon. The enemy had a conſiderable number of killed and wounded."

Another diſpatch of the 22d of Auguſt, received that moment by the Directory, further ſtates, "that a corps of 500 men had laid down their arms before the republicans."

In a third meſſage to the Councils, the Directory ſends a letter from general Commes, dated St. Joudans (France) 21ſt Auguſt, mentioning that the army of royaliſts had been deſtroyed by the republican columns at Montrigen; beſides 1000 killed and 300 drowned in the Garronne; 1200 priſoners, 7 field pieces, and 2 ſtands of colours, were the fruits of the action: he was purſuing 4 or 500 rebels that eſcaped—and he promiſes that in three days they will all be extirminated. Count Paulo, the commander of the royaliſts, was drowned.

UNITED STATES.

NORFOLK, November 1.

An intelligent gentleman who arrived here yeſterday in a pilot boat, from on board the ſhip Aurora, captain Sprigg, bound to Baltimore from Gibraltar, which he left the 21ſt of Aug. has politely handed us the following particulars:

That lord Bridport was to join the fleet now commanded by lord Keith, & take the chief command; lord Keith is to return to the blockade of Cadiz, with 14 ſail; while Bridport with 40 ſail, is to watch the movements of the combined fleets.—Lord Nelſon has a fleet of 30 ſail of the line, compoſed of Britiſh, Ruſſian, and Portugueſe men of war.

In lat. 39. long. 40, the Aurora ſpoke the Daniſh Eaſt India company's ſhip the Courier, from Calcutta, which place ſhe left the middle of May, when official accounts had arrived that a deciſive action had taken place between the armies of Tippoo Sultan and the Britiſh, in which the latter had entirely defeated Tippoo, who loſt his life in the action—his country was ſurrendered to the Britiſh, and peace is again reſtored to India, with a great extent of territory and revenue added to the Britiſh poſſeſſions.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 25.

The following melancholy accident, we are informed, happened on Thurſday night of laſt week. Two families from near Bedford, of the name Wheſtone, removing to the weſtward, had ſtopped at the houſe of Mrs. Lockwood, on the Laurel Hill, Glabe road, but as her houſe was ſmall, ſhe could not accommodate them all with lodging, a number of them went to ſleep in the waggons; during the night a large tree fell acroſs the waggons, killed ſix perſons, and dangerouſly wounded ſeven.

NEW YORK, October 22.

From the Weſt Indies.

Capt. Carver from Port Republican, confirms the recent accounts of the indiſcriminate ſacrifice of the mulattoes, by the blacks. Large boats were frequently filled with them, carried ſome diſtance from the ſhore, the devoted victims faſtened together, ſtabbed with the bayonet, and thrown into the ſea. The ſhore was lined with the dead bodies of the people thus deſtroyed. The war between the blacks and mulattoes in that iſland, is a war of extermination. After the capture of Nichola Mole from Rigaud, it was reported that he has alſo loſt Petit Guave.

Capt. Holmes, from Cape Francois, informs, that Touſſaint was there at the time of his ſailing, preparing to march for Aux-Cays, Rigaud's head quarters. It has been reported Rigaud was dead, but it was not much credited. A letter from the Havanna, dated Sept. 26, mentions the ſailing from thence of two Spaniſh veſſels of war, with troops for St. Domingo, "to aſſiſt the whites againſt the blacks."

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, December 21.

To our PATRONS.

WE beg them to accept our moſt cordial thanks, in return for the very liberal patronage which they have extended to us, ſince the commencment of the publication of the Gazette in this town; we aſſure them, that it has been, and is ſtill, the ſummit of our wiſhes to afford them every ſatisfaction in our power, and to render the publication intereſting and inſtructive.

The preſent ſize of the Gazette is owing to the great diſadvantage which it labors under for the want of a regular mode of conveyance from Niagara to this place. Could we receive our intelligence, regular, from our correſpondents in the States, it would be in our power to enlarge the Gazette to a more reſpectable ſize, and conduct it with half the trouble that it now requires, for then we ſhould never be diffident of ſubject matter to fill the paper; but now, it does not come to hand once in a month, in which caſe if the Gazette was large enough to contain all the intelligence received, we ſhould then be neceſſitated to ſuſpend the publication of it for a while.

It is aſtoniſhing that the poſtmaſters in this province do not exert themſelves to eſtabliſh a poſt between this town and that of Niagara; it would undoubtedly contribute to their intereſt and afford a great ſatisfaction to the public. There is ſcarcely a perſon in this, and the town of Niagara that would not contribute his mite in ſupport of ſo laudable a plan. This being the capital, it is preſumed, ought to be a ſtrong inducement to the poſtmaſters for adopting ſome mode of conveyance, to, and from this town. But we flatter ourſelves, when his excellency ſhall have arrived, that he will remedy the great inconveniency which the inhabitants of this town labor under for the want of a poſt from this to Niagara.

We hear from very good authority, that the ſchooner York, capt. Murray, has foundered and is caſt upon the American ſhore, about 50 miles from Niagara, where the capt. and men are encamped. Mr. Forſyth, one of the paſſengers, hired a boat to carry him to Kingſton.—Fears are entertained for the fate of the Terraboga.

We are extremely ſorry that it is not in our power to give a full account of the particulars of the total defeat of Tippoo Sultan, by the Britiſh, owing to the late hour which it came to hand, we therefore give an abſtract of it this week, and the particulars at large in our next.

Gen. Baird, when all the troops had got into the fort, and the fate of the day was decided, went to the palace, & demanded that the gates ſhould be opened; thoſe within however made ſome heſitation, and the gen. finding that fair means were unavailing, ordered a field piece to be drawn up and threatened to burſt the gates open; this had the deſired effect, and the adjutant-general. Cloſe, entered the place where he found two of the princes. They appeared ſullen and haughty in their demeanor, and refuſed to ſtir out of the palace until one of the attendants came up, & recalled them to a proper ſenſe of their ſituation, they ſurrendered themſelves to gen. Baird. The general after the ceremonial of ſuch an interview, enquired of them what had become of a party of Europeans of the 33d regiment who had loſt their way to the camp one night during the ſiege, and had fallen into the hands of Tippoo's people, when he had the mortification to hear that theſe unfortunate men had all been put to death. The general's next enquiry was after the ſultan's perſon, whom the princes poſitively denied knowing any thing of, which with the avowal of the death of the above mentioned party ſo irritated the gen. that he informed the princes, that unleſs the ſultan was delivered up he would order the grenadiers to enter the palace and bring him by force; adding that in ſuch a caſe he would not be anſwerable for the women being free from inſult: when this was explained to the princes, an old man came forward and informed the gen. he would ſhew him Tippoo's body which was found as before related, under many other ſlain; our recent information ſays, near a ſally port where he fell endeavoring to make his eſcape, the princes were carried to general Harris's tent. Tippoo's eldeſt ſon delivered himſelf up on the 6th and Cummer Odeen Khan, on the 10th May; Futty Hider, Tippoo's natural ſon and favorite, was, as this correſpondent informs us, expected to deliver himſelf up on the 13th, the day the Lombay army left Seringapatam.

Married, at Niagara, on Saturday 7th inſt. Dr. Davidſon to Miſs Mary Clark both of that place.

Britiſh Asia.

Bombay, June 22.

NOTwithſtanding much has been ſaid and written on the ſubject of the late hoſtilities in Myſore, yet as the moſt minuté occurrences connected with, and tending to, their happy and glorious termination, acquire importance from the very memorable reſult of that ſhort but ſevere conteſt, the following particulars ſeem, on this ground, to have a claim to our notice.

The information before us is from an officer of the Bombay army, dated "Camp near Sudaſeer, 17th May, '99" and relates chiefly to their proceedings : It begins by ſtateing their march from that place on the 10th April, in company with the detachment from the grand army under gen. Floyd, in their junction with the main body on the 14th ditto. It ſeems that the Bombay army, on their arrival before Seringapatam, had one day's reſt, and on the next croſſed the Cavery, encamping to the North of it within 2000 yards of the fort. On the 26th a poſt was taken by the grand army where the breaching battery was to be erected while an inceſſant roar of artillery was kept up from the conſilading battery of the Bombay army and two on the other ſide, the enemy running in all directions as our troops advanced, and Tippoo from the fort firing on his own people ; the 17th regiment advanced on this occaſion to the very gates of the fort, and bayonetted ſeveral Frenchmen in their tents and on the glacis ; the next morning the enemy made a deſperate ſally on the poſts the grand army had taken poſſeſſion of, which was ſoon repulſed, but not without having ſeveral officers wounded, and nearly 200 Europeans killed and wounded.

The opening of the breaching batteries on the 28th and 30th, the report on the 3d day of May of the breach being impracticable, and the brilliant event of the 4th, have been already fully detailed, so that we have only to subjoin a few remarks, which perhaps were deemed incompatible with the dignity of an official account, but serve to fill the measure of the public curiosity which has been so much excited on an occasion hitherto without precedent, and will probably remain forever without its parallel.

[Here follows the paragraph inserted in last week's gazette.] Gen. Baird, when all the troops had got into the fort, &c. &c.

A letter from Seringapatam, dated the 26th of May mentions: that of the jewels not above six or seven lacks of pagodas worth had been then valued; and as to the merchandize, viz. muslins, shawls, and various rich cloths, they were reckoned at the enormous amount of 500 camels load. The sultan's throne being too unwieldy to carry had been broken up; it was a howdar upon a tyger covered with sheet gold; the ascent to it was by silver steps, gilt, having silver nails, and all the other fastenings of the same metal. The canopy was alike superb and decorated with a costly fringe of fine pearls all round it. The eyes and teeth of the tyger were of glass. It was valued at 60,000 pagodas. It was said that a dividend to the value of about a million sterling would soon be made; part of it to the amount of 17 lacks of pagodas, in cash, the rest in jewels. A committee had been appointed for the arrangement of it.

Other advices from Seringapatam, dated the 27th of May, mention, that in breaking up the throne, which its bulk and weight rendered necessary, the sheet of gold with which it was covered was found to weigh 40,000 pagodas: the silver work about it, the supporters of the canopy & the fringe of pearls which went round it, were valued at 10,000 pagodas more. Every inch of the howdah contained an Arabic sentence, chiefly from the Koran, superbly stamped, being raised and polished in the most beautiful manner. A gold figure of a bird, covered over with the most precious stones, was screwed to the root of the canopy; its beak is a large emerald; its eyes carbuncles; the breast covered with diamonds, and the wings, which are expanded as if hovering, completely lined with diamonds; on the back are many large jewels well and fancifully disposed; the tail which resembles a peacock's, is also studded in the same manner; the whole to arranged as to imitate the plumage, and so closely set that the gold is scarce visible.

A number of tygers were found in the palace yard, which were ordered to be shot for fear of accidents.

Information having been given that a quantity of jewels were concealed in the seraglio, application was made to col. Wellsley, the commandant, for permission to search: which being granted, and the proper notice being given to remove the women from the appartments which it was the intention to search, the gentlemen deputed on this occasion proceeded to inspect them; but were disappointed in every respect, for they did not find any thing of value, and instead of elegant habitations which they imagined, found places as filthy as the lowest and dirtiest dwellings in the bazar, the furniture consisting of a chair, a swing, two or three boxes of clothes, a miserable bed, and shelf of perfumes, spices, &c. it was discovered afterwards that Tippoo never entrusted his women with the keeping of their jewels; there were in all, including some of the wives and ladies of the late Hyder, and those of Tippoo's family, with their attendants, 650 females in the palace.

Advices from China of the 5th of March, mention the death of the emperor Kien Long; in consequence of which a general mourning throughout the empire had been ordered for twelve months. The royal authority devolves to his son Kia-Hing, who has reigned nominally for upwards of two years past. The Chinese are consequently all in white, and remain, we believe, with unshaven heads and beards for six months out of the twelve.

June 12. Since our last courier we have been favoured with the following additional particulars from Mysore:

The number of men actually under arms at the assault of Seringapatam was 2493 Europeans and 1883 natives.

The capture of the ramparts was gen. Baird's first object. Col. Dunlop with six companies of Bombay European flankers, supported by his Majesty's 12th and 33d regiments, ten companies of Bengal sepoy flankers, and 50 artillery men, were ordered to assault the north ramparts, and pushed on with the European flank companies until he met the south attack under col. Sherbrook, consisting of the flank companies of the regiment de Mouton and Scotch brigade, reinforced by the grenadier companies of his Majesty's 73d and 74th regiments (in expectation of a vigorous resistance at several heavy batteries on the south face of the fort) and supported by his Majesty's 73d and 74th regiments, eight companies of coast natives, and six companies of Bombay flankers with 50 artillery men. The two attacks having met, were ordered to form on the east face until arrangements could be made for the attack of such of the cavaliers as had not already been seized; or for proceeding to the attack of the body of the place, as might be deemed eligible.

Colonels Sherbrook and Dunlop were instructed not to quit the inner ramparts previous to their junction for any other object but that of seizing on the cavaliers in the neighbourhood of their respective attacks, and then to lose no time in regaining their situation on the ramparts. As soon as that object should be attained and every cavalier or spot on the ramparts seized which it might be deemed necessary to secure, they were immediately to be occupied by a battalion company or companies from the supporting European regiments, so that the whole of the ground once capitulated might be secured, and the flankers on their junction to be in full force to follow up their success by an attack on any of the cavaliers which had not fallen in their way, or by an assault on the body of the town and the palace of the sultan.

It is already known that the different assaults were so vigorous that in a hours the whole of the ramparts and every cavalier in the fort were in our possession. The palace being thus completely ours, the general, to avoid a fresh and unnecessary slaughter in the attack of the palace, as well as to allow some rest to the gallant but almost exhausted flankers, determined to halt a short time, before he proceeded to attack the palace, judging that if Tippoo was in it, it would be as gallantly defended as attacked. During this halt two fresh battalions of sepoys arrived, and trusting that the sultan would then see how fruitless all further resistance would be, the gen. dispatched major Allen, who had just arrived from camp, with a flag truce to the palace, offering Cowl to Tippoo sultan and every person in it, on his immediate and unconditional surrender of himself to gen. Baird; major Allen was at the same time instructed to apprize him that if there was the smallest hesitation in accepting this offer, an immediate assault on the palace would be made and every man in it put to the sword. The grenadiers and part of the 12th regiment under major Craigie, with the 2d battalion of the 9th Madras regiment of sepoys, accompanied major Allen to put this threat in execution if necessary, and the flankers, then a little recovered from their fatigue, prepared to follow to the attack of the palace on the first signal of hostilities having recommenced (the firing on all sides having by this time ceased upwards of an hour.) In the mean time, gen. Beard received intelligence from one of the prisoners, on being questioned as to the place of confinement of the European soldiers who had been taken in the different assaults on the out posts during the siege, that they all had been put to a violent death a few days before. On this the gen. immediately advanced towards the palace with the flankers of the 74th regiment, the light infantry and the remaining part of the 12th regiment, with a view, it was thought, if Cowl had not been already granted at the palace, and if the dreadful accounts of the death of the unfortunate men had been confirmed, to take signal vengeance on the tyrant for this act of premeditated barbarity.

On reaching the palace, major Allen came out and met the general, informing him that Tippoo's two youngest sons were in it who were ignorant where their father was, but were disposed to surrender themselves and the palace on the promise of protection. The general, anxious to discover Tippo who was reported to be certainly in the palace, hesitated to agree to these conditions, unless the princes would inform him where their father was, and threatened to search the most secret recess of the palace, if he was not instantly produced; but they persisting in their ignorance, and the general unwilling to lose time as night was approaching, sent them off to general Harris, under charge of lieut. col. Agnew, capt. Marriot and another officer, escorted by the light infantry company of his Majesty's 33d regiment, after assuring them of protection and kind treatment.

The palace was then taken possession of without opposition, and a search was made for Tippoo in vain, every where excepting the Zemanah, which was surrounded by troops to prevent his escape if he was in it. One of the attendants in the palace, at last on being severely threatened, told the gen. that the sultan was killed in attempting to escape thro' the northern sally-port, and accordingly conducted them to the spot where the sultan's body was found under a heap of slain. Night coming on, the gen. then proceeded to give every possible protection to the inhabitants, and it did not appear that there was any insult or injury offered to any individual after the conflict ceased; thereby furnishing a memorable testimony to the natives of Asia, that British soldiers are equally brave and humane!

Other accounts add, that the unhappy captive Europeans mentioned in the foregoing detail, among whom was an officer, were brought from the palace of their confinement two days before the assault, and ordered to assist in working the guns on the works, which they refused; they were then informed that death would be the consequence of their persisting in the refusal; but even this threat did not warp them from their purpose, and their heads were struck off. It is said the mode of their death was afterwards ascertained by digging the bodies up, which were all found in that state.

Knights of Malta.

It is a circumstance not generally known, that these knights, who, by the capture of that island by the French, are dispersed all over the globe, had once a settled habitation in the heart of London. They possessed great riches in this, when a Catholic country; but at the period of the reformation, Henry VIII. confiscated all their possessions. Their priory house at London stood in the Strand, and contributed its materials, in the reign of Edward VI. to build the spacious palace of the Protector Somerset, (now called Somerset-house.) From the latter it is that the public offices, now erected on the same scite, have derived their name. [Lon. pap.

As the people of this country are much troubled with bad colds, we have here inserted the remedy made use of in Switzerland for that complaint:

The usual way of curing a cold in Sweden, is to dip a tallow candle into a tumbler of warm beer, and to drink the unctuous composition off at one draught which, they assert, seldom fails effecting its intended purpose.

A report was credited at Gibraltar, that Malta had surrendered to a detachment of lord Nelson's fleet, which had blockaded it in such a manner as to render it impossible to outain supplies.

A gentleman recently from Treuton, asserts, that there is no foundation in truth for the rumour which has circulated respecting the determination of the combined powers not to consider any nation as neutral; at least, that no credit is to be attached to the report that intelligence of such a nature has been communicated to the American administration. [Utica pap.

Gen. Brune, lately in Holland, replaces Bernadotte as war minister.

Bernadotte had not been in office more than two months. Thus do these regicide mountebanks, like the Scaramouches of a magic lanthorn, skip along one after another, over a scene, which their appearance serves only to mark them out, as more conspicuous objects of that justice which hourly approaches them.

From a Philadelphia paper of October 25.

The trials for high treason, expected to have been held in Norristown, we understand, are postponed till another session. Twenty-two were tried for misdemeanors, among whom was Jacob Eyerman, the minister; all except him, submitted to the court, and were tried without juries. None of them received sentence before the court adjourned, which was Friday last.

DURING his gloomy journey, Edwin had revolved in his mind, thoſe circumſtances relating to Cuthburga's prior engagement, which were likely to injure Ofred's cauſe; and ſumming up all the obſtacles that appeared to interrupt him, in the attaining of that happineſs he ſo ardently fought, reſolved if poſſible to withdraw him from the purſuit which he feared would end in ſorrow and diſappointment; accordingly when, in the morning, he was admitted to the preſence of the anxious prince, he thus addreſſed him:—"Hail to my gracious liege, and may his Edwin ever be engaged on more auſpicious ſervice, than that which employed him yeſternight."—"Thou art the bearer then of evil tidings," replied Ofred, "the maid rejects my ſuit, and leaves me to deſpair—ſay it at once, nor trifle with my patience." "It is not wholly ſo, my honored prince," cried Edwin, "for thou mayeſt remember I was not charged to urge thy ſuit to her, but merely to enquire from Edilda, if yet the virgin heart of fair Cuthburga had yielded to the ſovereign power of love." "And has it," cried the king, "ſpeak, have I a rival—O give him to my rage ye heavenly powers! for by your ſacred attributes I ſwear, that man exiſts not, who ſhall wreſt her from me." Edwin ſtood aghaſt, for well as he was acquainted with the temper of the king he had looked not for ſuch violence, he knew not how to proceed, he muſed—"why art thou silent?" Ofred in an agitated voice demanded. "Why dost thou not at once reveal, all thou hast learned of the lovely maid? declare the worst, and let me seek redress." "Alas!" cried Edwin, "I know not what to say, thy heat, thy strong impatience so alarm me, but this I would advise, that thou forget her. Why, I need not add, but sure a fairer maid, at least as fair, may easily be found, who gladly would accept thy royal hand, and yield thee all her heart; then turn thy thoughts on such, and leave the daughter of thy haughty foe to seek another love, more suited to endure her cold repulsive manners, than is Northumbria's king." "In vain thou dost endeavour to divert my fixed intention to obtain Cuthburga by any means;" cried Ofred. "I tell thee I am resolved she shall be mine: though I should be opposed by Mercia's sovereign, nay tho' I lay her country all in ruin, and shed the noblest blood my own can boast, I will possess her, or perish in the attempt. —Then tell me what it is I must encounter; is she haughty? I'll crouch beneath her feet. Cold? I'll melt her icy bosom with my tears. Ambitious? I'll dazzle her with the splendor of a throne. Point me out the barrier to my bliss, and unless it be beyond the reach of man, I will surmount it." Edwin was now convinced that it was equally dangerous as vain, to oppose the wishes of his sovereign, and after a short preface, in which he endeavoured to prove, that all attempts to gain Cuthburga to his wishes (who was under a severe control, and strictly attentive to the claims of duty) would be fruitless, he declared that measures for an interview, were concerted with Edilda, in which, if Ofred chose to make the trial, that night should fix his fate. The king gave way to transports of joy, at this intelligence, yet ever, and anon would chide his friend, for keeping him so long in ignorance, of this approaching happiness. Edwin said he did not deem it happiness to sue, and be rejected; but Ofred's hopes were high, and he longed for the moment that should bring him to the presence of Cuthburga. Confiding to his chamberlain his intended absence, which he said an event of consequence required, and ordered it to be concealed from the whole court, under pretence of his being indisposed he set out equipped in the hunter's dress, accompanied by his faithful Edwin, and arrived in view of the castle, a short time before sunset. Edwin halted, and fixed on a commodious spot, spread before the king refreshments, with which he had supplied himself, and which he began to feel the necessity of. But Ofred had no appetite, and turning his eyes towards the castle, Edwin, [illegible] found no relief in food, with which to oblige his friend. The latter half unsheathed his sword, which was to cut the domestics of Cuthburga's chamberlain: he started up, "stay, go to prayers," cried he, "and fly to heaven." The bell ceased—Edwin arose and led the way—they arrived at the western hall—the door was opened —Ofred advanced—but Edilda was not there—he looked in the face of Edwin —alarm sat upon his manly brow. "My prince," he cried "we are betrayed, Edilda is not here, she has betrayed us into Eldred's power, and dares not now behold us." While yet he spoke, the damsel entered the hall, and seeing them, exclaimed "alas! alas! the sorrow which overwhelms the house of Eldred had driven you from my mind: but haste let me conceal you, lest the busy domestics who run in confusion from room to room, should see, and question you." "What sorrow doth thou speak of?" cried the king, "how fares Cuthburga?" "as well," replied Edilda, as deep affliction will permit; lord Eldred is at the point of death—he calls for her to close his eyes, she is hastening to him, and sets off for court immediately." "Can I not see her, for a moment see her?" cried the prince.—"To what purpose," Edilda said, "sure this is not a time to speak of love." "If not," returned Ofred, "it is a time to offer comfort, therefore lead me to her." The damsel obeyed, and brought him to the presence of her mistress. Cuthburga was in tears. "When beauty weeps," said Ofred, "sensless must be the heart, that does not sympathize." He took her hand—"kind stranger," replied Cuthburga, "thy pity deserves, and has my thanks, but why I pray thee art thou here? I have not been accustomed to receive visits from any of thy sex, save those who brought me tidings from my father." "I came sweet maid," cried Ofred, "not thinking to find thee in affliction, to offer to thy acceptance an heart, which thy exalted charms have won, and to woo thee for my wife."—"Alas!" said she, "the heart thou offerest I cannot accept, thou must bestow it on some happier maiden, for never shall Cuthburga be a wife." "Ah! fair not so, fair daughter of lord Eldred," cried the king, "thou who art formed to bless whom thou accepteth with the full measure of connubial happiness, since thy virtues will give stability to that love, thy beauty doth inspire; but I will not urge thee in the hour of sorrow; when that subsides, thou shalt behold me at thy feet again." "I know not who thou art," replied Cuthburga, "but from thy appearance, I judge thee worthy of a milder fate, than to love in vain; therefore I pray thee think of me no more. I gotta receive the commands of a dying father, what they may be I know not, but by me they shall be held most sacred—fare thee well, I hasten to commence my journey." Cuthburga retired to an inner chamber, and the king fearful of offending her, immediately left the castle.

"Edwin," cried the monarch to his companion, after they had measured back near half their journey in profound silence, "this maid has twined herself about my heart; I lose her more than ever, and cannot (though she has commanded it) forget her; but on the contrary am resolved to omit no possible means of obtaining her. I have meditated as we came along and I think I now can prosecute my design with good assurance of success." "Has she not," asked Edwin, "received thee with that cold reserve, which banishes all hope, and of which I had warned thee?" "With that reserve which modesty requires, replied the prince, "she certainly received me, yet not with repulsive coldness; I find her candid, gentle and compassionate; I am not without hope. Cuthburga looks on me as an inferior, she has no right to think me otherwise; and her reserve was prudent. I cannot therefore suppose she will accept me under these unfavourable appearances. Again, should I obtain another interview, and appear in my real character, her virtuous soul, would shrink from an alliance with her country's foe. Mark then what I design; the truce I granted to the king of Mercia will shortly be expired. I will prepare me to renew hostilities, with such a formidable host of troops, as shall strike terror to the soul of Ethelred, now deprived of Eldred's steady counsel. I will approach his frontier, and thus prepared to hail him from his throne, lend overtures of peace, in which shall be included alliance with his house.—Avice his only child, he has affianced to his kinsman, Kenred; her will I demand, but her he cannot give me. Cuthburga is the daughter of his sister. Her will be offer, her will I accept." Edwin sighed, "dost thou not approve those measures," said the king. "Most certainly," replied Edwin, "they almost insure success, but if the affections of Cuthburga should be pre-engaged, is it not cruelty thus to lead her into an union of which she must not dare avow her disapprobation, though it should break her heart." "I trust it is not so," returned Ofred, "she cast not on me the glances of dislike; her mild, yet tearful eyes beamed pity more than hatred; but be it as it may, I cannot live without her." Thus resolved, and Edwin making no reply, the enamoured prince sunk again into silent meditation, which was not interrupted 'till he arrived at his abode, whence at an early hour next day, he departed with all his retinue for Bamburg castle, where he held his court; and commenced his military preparations.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, January 4.

Yesterday morning a duel was fought back of the Government Buildings by John White, Esq; his Majesty's Attorney General, and John Small, Esq; Clerk of the Executive Council, wherein the former received a wound above the right hip, which it is feared will prove mortal.

WE are informed that New York papers down to the 12th ultimo are in town, but we have not been able to procure any. They give a summary account, we understand, of the progress of the combined armies in Switzerland and Holland. The invincible Suwarrow reaps laurels without interruption in the former country—and splendid victories have been atchieved by the arms of Britain and Russia, in the latter. We are sorry at the same time to learn, that the delusion of the Dutch in the revolutionary system, seems greater than was supposed, and is evinced by an obstinate opposition to the efforts make for the restoration of the former order of things.

For the Upper Canada Gazette.

By inserting the following you will oblige a friend to good order.

LABORS in themselves useful, whatever their primary objects might have been, whether that of amusing or benefiting the individual or the community, are entitled to a reward, be it pecuniary, honorary, or the tribute of praise. If this position is true, which I believe none will deny it becomes a public duty to encourage every effort of genius or study, of which the aim is so laudable, and the design so praise-worthy. But it is a truth; as melancholy as it is general, that few are they in number who can so far divest themselves, of that penury of thought and selfishness of disposition, so inherent in, and so blasting, and burthensome to ordinary minds; and which, renders the world at large so unwilling to do justice to merit, however varied in kind, or eminent in degree. I am led into these reflections, by observing with sorrow, and I may say, a just indignation, that so little notice is taken of, and so little attention paid, to a lately proposed regulation, entitled the "Stump Act." The extensive and happy influence, that this act if properly inforced, would have, must be obvious to the most inattentive and careless observer; and the happy genius, whose stupendous conception, could embrace and blend the union of so many truly great and useful views, in one plan, certainly arrests, and must forever claim our highest admiration; while at the same time it evinces the philanthropist, the moralist, and the genuine legislator. Add to this, that unimpeachable modesty which doubly appreciates, this concealed benefactor of the human race. It is to be lamented for his sake, that he does not announce his real name and condition to a wondering multitude—and thereby challenge that sacrifice of praise, which is so justly due at the shrine of his merit. Numerous and happily pointed, are his useful animadversions on the different species of intemperance, so predominant in every class of society; and a torrent of information and edifying matter, flows from his worthy pen. Now, may we beseech his presiding Divinity, to bless and preserve his rare, his precious intellects, and truly invaluable faculties; may they be exerted with such irresistable force, and such ardent energy that an inundation of enlightening wisdom, may overwhelm the barbarous and depraved herd: for whose instruction only, he deigns to labor, and not for those mercenary and interested ends, which prompt and generate the essays of common scribblers. Which essays, are in themselves oftener insults offered to, than subjects of improvement to medium understandings. So sublime, so pathetic and so awfully grand, is every production from the pen of the undoubted Amicus; that none can hope for the supreme felicity, or enviable honor, of participating in either his labors or his celebrity. However, as oceans are but accumulated drops—and the largest material objects, but accumulated particles—may not the huge, the colossean mind of Amicus be an accumulation of inferior minds; are not his remarks and assemblages, his subjects and conclusions—drawn from a general analysis, and subsequent commixion, of hints, ideas, motions of thought, &c.—which arise, not more from personal observation than borrowed information. I feel an impulse at this moment, which induces the belief of this—and urges a desire to contribute a mite to the general consternation.

It sometimes happens that extraordinary ends, are accomplished by apparently inadequate means; if what I am now about to propose, should once more call forth the pen of Amicus, I shall then place it in the list of extraordinaries—If Amicus should deem the offences (I propose to speak of) cognizable, I leave it entirely to his wisdom and moderation to affix the penalties. I should at the last [illegible] me think it, a singular happiness, if they could by any means be thrust into the "Stump Act."

PROPOSALS,

And queries offered to the consideration of the successor and genuine discendant of Lycurgus.

I. What is the crime punishable with, when an illuminati gets drunk at home, and by a too copious emission of moisture spoils his shed linen, thereby disagreably affecting the olfactory nerves of his laundress?

II. What, when he gets drunk at any brandy-shop or tavern within the banlieus, by which the fame disagreable effects are produced?

III. What, when he gets drunk at a distance from home, not exceeding the distance between Mount Dorchester and the town of Newark, and loses his saddle-bags, whip, hat, spurs, &c.?

IV. What reward is that horse entitled to, who, by his sagacity avoided killing his rider, who sat so uneasily, that he alighted twelve times head-foremost, within the aforementioned distance?

V. Whether the patient Illuminati, who assembled in the Valley of Jehoshaphat, got drunk, or used horses?

VI. Whether Hiram, the master builder of Solomon's Temple, was a wet soul or not?

An additional favor will be conferred on the public, if Amicus would, by some seasonable animadversion, discountenance that odious passion for duelling, so prevalent at Newark, by which so much blood is shed there, and by which the lives of so many of its good citizens are endangered.——I greet thee, Amicus, and am thy assured sincere friend.

PHILO AMICUS.

KING's SPEECH.

This day, in compliance with his Majeſty's proclamation, a number of their lordſhips attended; and about 3 o'clock the King came to the houſe in ſtate, with the uſual attendants who accompany him on thoſe occaſions. Being ſeated on the throne, Sir Francis Molyneux, uſher of the Black Rod, was ſent to deſire the attendance of the commons, the ſpeaker of whom, with a few of the members, being come to the bar, his Majeſty addreſſed them as follows:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I have called you together at this unuſual ſeaſon, in order to recommend it to you to conſider of the propriety of enabling me, without delay, to avail myſelf, to a further extent, of the voluntary ſervices of the militia, at a moment when an increaſe of our active force abroad may be productive of the moſt important and beneficial conſequences.

"We have ſeen the happy effects of the meaſure which you adopted on this ſubject, in the laſt ſeſſion; and the forces which I was thereby enabled to employ, have already diſplayed in the face of the enemy, a courage, diſcipline and ſteadineſs, worthy of the character of Britiſh ſoldiers. In the ſhort interval ſince the cloſe of the laſt ſeſſion, our ſituation and proſpects have, under the bleſſing of Providence, improved beyond the moſt ſanguine expectation.

"The abilities and valour of the commanders and troops of the combined Imperial armies, have continued to be eminently diſplayed; the deliverance of Italy may now be conſidered as ſecured by the reſult of a campaign equal in ſplendor and ſucceſs to any the moſt brilliant recorded in hiſtory; and I have had the heartfelt ſatisfaction of ſeeing the valor of my fleets and armies ſucceſsfully employed to the aſſiſtance of my allies, to the ſupport of our juſt cauſe, and to the advancement of the moſt important intereſt of the Britiſh empire.

"The kingdom of Naples has been reſcued from the French yoke, and reſtored to the dominion of its lawful ſovereign, and my former connections with that power has been renewed.

"The French expedition to Egypt has continued to be productive of calamity and diſgrace to our enemies; while its ultimate views againſt our Eaſtern poſſeſſions have been utterly confounded.

"The deſperate attempts which they have lately made to extricate themſelves from their difficulties, has been defeated by the courage of the Turkiſh forces, directed by the ſkill, and animated by the heroiſm of a Britiſh officer with a ſmall portion of my naval force under his command; and the overthrow of that reſtleſs and perfidious power, who, inſtigated by the artifices, and deluded by the promiſes of the French, had entered into their ambitious and deſtructive projects in India, has placed the Britiſh intereſts in that quarter of the globe in a ſtate of ſolid and permanent ſecurity. The vigilance, deciſion and wiſdom of the governor general in council, on this great and important occaſion, and the tried abilities and valor of the commanders, officers and troops employed under his direction, are entitled to my higheſt praiſe.

"There is, I truſt, every reaſon to expect that the efforts which I am making for the deliverance of the United Provinces, will prove ſucceſsful.

"The Britiſh arms have reſcued from the poſſeſſion of the enemy the principal port and naval arſenal of the Dutch republic; and altho' we have to regret the loſs of many brave men in a ſubſequent attack againſt the enemy, whoſe poſition enabled them to obſtruct our progreſs, I have the ſtrongeſt ground to expect that the ſkill of my generals and the determined reſolution and intrepidity of my troops, will ſoon ſurmount every obstacle, and that the fleet, which under the usurped dominion of France, was destined to co-operate in the invasion of these islands, may speedily, I trust, under its ancient standard, partake in the glory of restoring the religion, liberty and independence of those provinces, so long in intimate union and alliance with this country.

"While you rejoice with me in these events, which add so much lustre to the British character, you will, I am persuaded as cordially join in the sentiments so justly due to the conduct of my good and faithful allie the emperor of Russia. To his magnanimity and wisdom, directing so many quarters of Europe the force of his extensive and powerful empire, we are in a great degree indebted for the success of our own efforts, as well as for the rapid & favorable change in the general situation of affairs. I have directed copies to be laid before you of those engagements which have consolidated and cemented a connexion so conformant to the permanent interests of my empire, and so important at the present moment, to every part of the civilized world.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"The ample supplies which you have granted to me in the course of the last session, will, I trust, so nearly provide for the exigencies of the public service, even on the extensive scale which our present operations require, as to enable me, without farther aid, to continue those exertions to the close of the present year; but, in order to afford you the convenience of a long recess, I recommend it to you to consider of providing for the expences which will be necessary in the early part of the ensuing year; and with this view, I have ordered the proper estimates to be laid before you.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

"In purtuance of your recommendation, I judged it proper to communicate to my two houses of parliament in Ireland, at the close of their last session, the sentiments which you had expressed to me respecting an incorporating union with that kingdom.

"The experience of every day confirms me in the persuasion, that signal benefit will be derived to both countries from that important measure; and I trust that the disposition of my parliament there, will be found to correspond with that which you have manifested for the accomplishment of a work which tends so much to add to the security and happiness of all my Irish subjects, and to consolidate the strength and prosperity of the empire."

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, January 13.

It is with much regret that we express, to the public, the death of John White, Esqr his Majesty's Attorney General in this province; not only from the melancholy reflection of the untimely fall of this high law character; but also from the contemplation of the many attributes of the human mind, which have been absorbed in that fall.——To defcant upon thofe attributes were a talk extenfive indeed: as every event, which called forth his talents, only readed to difclofe, that though his difquifitions were perfpicuous, yet, his refources were far beyond the ordinary flight, or elevation of thought.

In a ftation to which the public eye has ever been directed with a jealous vigilance, he ftrictly attended to the inftructions of his Royal Maftet; for in guarding the prerogative of the Crown, he protected the right of the fubject—in neceffarily enforcing the rigid rules of juftice, he feelingly difplayed a benign regard to clemency—and in his application of the law to every cafe of public import, he not only drew from virtue its warmeft approbation, but even vice itfelf, in the moment of its correction, could not withhold its applaufe.

He, in his intercourfe with fociety, evinced that urbanity, and thofe blandifhments of manners, which, whilft they characterized the man of honor and the gentleman, peculiarly diftinguifhed himfelf; and appreciating truth as the early embellifhment of his mind, he cherifhed it through life, and prized it at his death.

His remains, were on Tuefday evening, interred in a fmall octagon building, erected on the rere of his park lot. The proceffion was folemn and penfive, and fhewed, that though death "all eloquent," had feized upon him as its victim, yet it could not take from the public mind the lively fenfe of his virtues.

Vivit poft funera Virtus.

SEVERAL letters, received by gentlemen in this town, from their correfpondents in Montreal, mention the melancholy circumftance of the Philadelphia-fever rageing there with great mortality: that fifteen of the forty-fecond regiment (now in Montreal) died in one day with it: that the phyfician (Gold) who vifited the unhappy victims, caught the difeafe, of which, himfelf and family died!—Many of the inhabitants of the city have already fell victims to it.

We hear that the duke of Kent is to vifit this province in the courfe of next fpring, and that the forces in it are to be reviewed by him.

Several companies of the Midland Diftrict militia, have voluntarily offered to go to any part of Britifh America, that emergency may require.

By a letter received from field marfhal the duke of York, by the right hon. Henry Dundas, dated, H. Q. Shagen Brug, Sept. 20: From which it appears that an attack was made upon Bergen, by lieut. gen. D'Harman, commanding the 7th light dragoons and twelve battalions of Ruffians, who advanced with fuch intrepidity as to overlook the formidable refiftance with which they were to meet, had not retained that order which was neceffary to preferve the advantages they had gained; and they were in confequence, after a moft vigorous combat obliged to retire from Bergen with the lofs of their commander and a few men; but it is certain, from recent intelligence, received from Holland, that the efforts which have been made, altho' not crowned with immediate fucceis, fo far from terminating againft the general object of the campaign, promife to be highly favorable to future operations—The capture of 60 officers, and upwards of 3000 men, the deftruction of 10 pieces of cannon by the Britifh, is no omin of their defeat; which is verified in a paragraph dated Hague, Oct. 5. which fays: "The tranquility that continued for 12 days, has at lenght been interrupted, on the 2d inft. by one of the moft violent attacks, which the enemy made on our left wing and centre, which lafted the whole day.—We were obliged to give up all our pofitions before Alkmaer, and even that town to the enemy; our army was forced to take another pofition, which we alfo loft. The town of Lemmer, whofe harbor is of fuch importance for our inland trade, is faid to have furrendered after having fuffered fome time a heavy cannonade from the Engliih gunboats—If the enemy once get a footing in Friefland, where there are no fufficient means of defence againft a formidable force, the confequences muft be fatal to us."

His imperial majefty of Ruffia has raifed gen. count Suwarrow to the dignity of a prince of the empire, furnamed the Italian.

Married at Ancafter, Mr. Richard Hatt, merchant, to Miis Polly Cooly, both of faid place.

Died a few days ago, at Buffaloe, Mr. Cornelius Winne.

Meffrs. PRINTERS.

IT is no fmall fatisfaction to fuch an honeft plain-meaning man as I am, that in this refined and ungrateful age, fome are ftill to be found fo difintereffted and impartial, as to acknowledge and point out merit in individuals. A recent inftance of this has occurred; it is no other than the praifes beftowed by Philo-Amicus on Amicus, and which appeared in your laft week's Gazette. Thefe, however, if not inexplicit, are certainly taxable with ambiguity, and leave us in doubt whether Philo meant to write a panegyric or a fatire; his abfurd reafoning (if reafoning it may be called) on the materials and ftructure of the mind of Amicus, leads to a belief in the latter—whilft benevolence, and a facred regard to juftice, prompts a hope of the former. In either cafe, much might been faid in addition. One conolation ftill remains in the pleafing hope, that fome able and more willing hand, will take up the fubject, and amply celebrate the wifdom and public fpirit-edneis of Amicus.

It is a bitter, and moft mortifying reflection to the fober part of the community, (who, be it known by thefe prefents, are not the moft numerous) to fee the many unhappy effects of inebriety. Effects, of which the bare idea, without the recital, fills the fober mind with horror—and if I might be allowed to name a reward equal to the reforming a toper, it fhould be the fame that is offered for the difcovery of the longitude.

Yet let it not be inferred from this, that I wifh totally to abolifh drinking—or interdict the moderate and temperate ufe of invigorating, and exhilirating liquids, N.—Far be the illiberal idea from my honeft mind; I only wifh to regulate the quantity—and point out the proper time of ufing them. However, as different temperaments require different regimens—and as conftitutions are as varied as exteriors—I fhall confine myfelf to the laying down a few general rules—leaving them to be modified and varied as occafion may require.

I. I permit every country gentleman, before breakfaft, to gulp a pint of a certain compofition, called, Stiff Sling—and during the remainder of the day, any quantity of Grog not exceeding two gallons, and not lefs than one.

II. I permit every gentleman to drink freely between the hours of 6, A. M. and 6 P. M. provided he refrains from bed till the hour of ten—this for obvious reafons.

III. I permit every gentleman with whom genuine Grog does not agree, to drink four bottles of Wine per day—if bufinefs and circumftances admit. N. B. This quantity regularly taken, is an antidote to agues.

IV. On Saints days—I permit the freeeft and fulleft ufe (St. Nicholas's day excepted.)

V. On other feftival days, I permit a reafonable augmentation.

Finding myfelf involuntarily, though I hope ufefully engaged, in recommending a fyftem of temperance and reformation: it is a refulting confequence, that I conlider of certain offences taken notice of by Philo-Amicus.

An offender in the 1ft inftance, fhall (in my humble opinion) be made to fubmit to the effects of a powerful fudorific (in his own perfon) whole higheft operation fhall continue twelve hours; during which time, his head be kept bound in the offended fheets.

In the 2d; To make an apology and fmall prefent to the bed-maker, and laundrefs, and purchafe one pound weight of fpunge.

In the 3d: To refrain from mercurous beverage for twenty-four hours.

In the 4th: To get his neck infured, and a treatife published in the Conftellation, on the eafieft and fafeft methods of alighting head foremoft.

The fagacious horfe is entitled to a funeral Oration and to be made honorable mention of in, and by the brighteft Stars of the Conftellation.

Not being verfed in Illuminatifm, I pafs over the myftic queries as too fublime for my vulgar comprehenfion.

With refpect to dueiling, I differ in opinion from Philo. It has ever been allowed (by judges) as a genteel and fpirited practice, and the infallible criterion of gentlemanhood—No man can be faid to know life, or have any pretenfions to tafte or bravery—who does not glory in the found and flavor of blazing powder. In ordinary difputes, doubtlefs, every one will confefs, that it is an equitable, fummary, and eafy mode of decifion, far preferable to the tedious judicial forms of obtaining redrefs. This fingle conlideration will for ever fecure it a preference in the judgment of the ardent and brave, independent of the lafting fame it procures. Conlcious that it would require the talents of a Cicero, to fay what might be faid in its praife and juftification, I fhall difmifs the fubject, and leave to duellifts to feel, what I feel myfelf unable to defcribe to them. I would fuggeft what may eventually be an improvement in the art; that is, that blunderbuffes be ufed inftead of piftols! would it not have a warlike appearance and raife a noble ardour? N. B. The arrangement made with JOSEPH EDWARDS, Eſq; to receive and diſtribute Letters and Newſpapers, is merely to accommoda the perſons to whom they are directed.

If every perſon going to the office for letters and papers, will recollect, that Mr. Edwards has all this trouble without any emolument or profit, (except the ſatisfaction of obliging his friends and the public) they will moſt certainly go prepared with ready change to take them up.

Gentlemen reſiding at a conſiderable diſtance from the office, would do well to engage ſome perſon to take up their letters and papers (a great many of which are now in the office) and prevent them being returned as dead to the General Poſt Office.

HAGUE, Oct. 8.

YESTERDAY the National Flag was displayed on the observatory, and the cannon was fired to celebrate the victory of the 6th.

In the first Chamber the president communicated yesterday, a letter the minister of foreign affairs had received from Florent Guyor, the French minister, announcing a final victory gained by the French army of the Danube, over the Austrians and Russians.

Another letter was communicated to the Chamber from the commissioners of the directory at Haerlem, containing as follows:

"Citizen Directors,

"This morning at 5 o'clock, the enemy attacked our advanced posts—at 8 the action was general and very obstinate—We have a great many killed and wounded: till this afternoon at five we were in the most painful uncertainty, when citizen Knipscharn of Delft, arrived here from Beverwyck, where the head quarters are still; he has assured us positively that the English have been beaten and driven beyond Egmont-op-Zee; and that we have a great many English and Russian prisoners, who are in the church of Beverwyck.

AMSTERDAM, Oct. 8.

The fortune of war has favoured the English only for a short time. Our victory of the 6th has more than repaired our loss of the 2d.

Our troops are said to have again taken possession of Alkmaar, on the 7th at 3 in the morning.

This afternoon at 2 o'clock, the municipality published the following circumstances, in the square in front of the town-hall.

"The English and Russians still continue their retreat. The wind is against their departure—they are in want of bread and wine, to procure which, it is said, was the reason of their attack the day before yesterday. Our cavalry is still in pursuit of them. They have sent back to us all the French and Batavian prisoners, without offering an exchange, or any other conditions."

The loss of the enemy up to the present moment, is estimated at 6000 men. The wind is still southerly; should it continue in that quarter a few days longer, few of those landed on our coasts will escape our troops.

Haerlem, Oct. 8.

There are already arrived here 6 pieces of cannon taken from the enemy, & the prisoners, viz. 286 English, with 19 officers, and 82 Russians, with 6 officers. Our army is going to be reinforced to 36,000 effective men.

Letters from the commissaries of the army to the directory of the Batavian republic.

Citizen Directors,

We hasten to send you the favorable news, that the enemy are totally beaten and are retreating rapidly—The French have taken Alkmaar, and are busied in following the enemy.—We are defired to send to Beverwick 200 men to escort the prisoners here. We hope to have the pleasure this evening to send the particulars of the victory which we have obtained.

Esteem and respect,

E. DE PINEDA,
W. E. DOMPSELER.

From Amsterdam they write,

To-day the municipality have published an account from gen. D. Monceau, that the English retreated from Alkmaar, and that the French have taken possession; that great disorder prevails in the English army, and that the Russians assassinate their officers; (one general has suffered, which is supposed to be the cause of their retreat,) that 800 men who were taken by the English are sent back unexchanged. The prisoners of the enemy say that the battle of the 6th cost them 6000 men and 15 pieces of cannon. This evening passed 23 waggons with wounded Frenchmen.

Extract of a letter from Alkmaar.

"This morning at 3 o'clock, the English evacuated our town, and retreated to Langendyk, and the Dutch & French troops entered at 10 o'clock. 'Tis remarkable, that the same day, in 1572, it was likewise retaken."

Head quarters at Beverwick, 6th October,

Brune, general and chief, to the Batavian Directors.

Citizen Directors,

I was convinced that the enemy would be deceived by the position to which I had fallen back. He attacked us to-day. We fought from 7 o'clock, A. M. to 8 in the evening. The enemy have been beaten and pursued to Egmont. We have taken 12 pieces of cannon and 1500 Russian and English prisoners, a great number, principally Russians, are killed. The Dutch generals Benhomme and Vichery distinguished themselves. I have to acknowledge the good conduct of the national troops of Rotterdam, they stood the fire like veterans.

HAGUE, October 10.

The citizens E. de Pineda and W. E. Van Dompseler, commissioners of the executive of the Batavian republic for the organization of an army of armed citizens, have written the following letter to the said executive, dated Haarlem, October 8.

Citizen Directors,

The news which we had the honor to write you this day at noon, are not only confirmed, but this evening a French adjutant general arrived, with the commandant of this place, Parve, who assures us, that the English and Russians are fighting each other.—There is also a private letter from Beverwick, stating, that the Russians had revolted against their officers, and killed several of them, even, as it is said, their general, and that this was the cause of their precipitate retreat. What is very sure, is, that the Russian officers, prisoners of war, told us this morning, that two days past they had had no bread, and that great misunderstandings exist between them and the English.

ROTTERDAM, October 11.

Yesterday arrived the first battalion of auxiliaries from the department du Nord, 900 men, who are to remain here in garrison till further orders. To-day came here the first battalion of the 2nd half brigade, of 980 men, destined for Delft.

Advices from the armies all agree, that the English seem to ship themselves and that our troops are at Patten, and in the Zyp; that general Daendels last Wednesday entered Hoorn with his division; that the English in the night from Friday to Saturday evacuated the city of Enkhuysen, after having burnt the camels (machines to bring large ships over the shoals of the Pampus) and two Indiamen, and after having mostly emptied the magazines.

L'Indipensible and L'Redacteur complain grievously of having been quizzed by forged telegraphic dispatches, importing pretended victories, the defeat of Suwarrow, &c. The former remarks thus, under date of Oct. 14:

It is now said, that the pretended telegraphic dispatches by which our credulity has been sported with these four days, are nothing but the roguish tricks of Balleul and of Poultier. Since the 4th inst. darkness and fogs have not permitted these telegraphs on the line of Strasburg to transmit any thing to Paris.

Suwarrow will laugh in his sleeve on reading, if he should read them, those French journals which have announced with so much precision his defeat & his capture. Indeed, who could have doubted it, from the positive tone of those foolish malignants? We know that there has been bets laid on the occasion.—Would it not be right that the lying authors of this news should pay the expences it has cost?

Yesterday arrived a courier from Switzerland. No news, is good news.

The Russians cause themselves to be cut in pieces rather than surrender, says a journal, which immediately after ads, that we have taken 3000 of them.

Lavater was assassinated in the streets of Zurich, by French hussars.

The road from Paris to Brest is blocked by the Chouans, who have taken Martigny, situated between Laval and Mayenne; which has given occasion to the timorous and foolish to say, that Mayenne and Laval were in the power of the Chouans.

The Chouans attacked the city of Angiers, on the 9th, at 5 in the morning, in three different quarters, by the barrier of St. Lazare, by the faubourg of St. George, and by the bridge Brionneau. Every where they were repulsed. But they rise with renewed force from their disasters.

The directory transmitted to the council a fourth report of the minister of finance, upon the loan of 100 millions. They demand for the service of the current year, a previous loan of 30 millions.

"Head quarters, Donaueschingen, Oct. 7.

"The unfortunate occurrences in Switzerland being already sufficiently known, I shall confine myself at present merely to giving the outlines of them, and the state of the events which have taken place since.

"On the 13th ult. the Russian corps under the command of lieut. gen. Korsacow, on the Limmat, and the columns of field marshal lieut. Hotze, on the Linth, near Uznach, were defeated by the enemy. The former corps retreated by way of Eglisau, to the right bank of the Rhine, and the column of field marshal lieut. Hotze, on the 26th, by St. Gall, into the district of Vuralberg.

"Field marshal Suwarrow was at Urserent, and gen. Auffenberg at Steig, on the 25th.

"On the 26th, field marshal lieut. Lincken defeated the enemy, and took prisoners 2 battalions of 1300 men, with the whole of the staff and other officers, and two stands of colors. On the 28th he advanced to Glarus; but not being able to open a communication, either to the right or to the left, he saw himself under the necessity of withdrawing to the Grison country on the 29th.

"Field marshal Suwarrow, and the brigade of general Auffenberg, having advanced as far as Swyz, on the 28th, arrived at Glarus, on the 1st of October; but not being able to effect a junction with any other corps, field marshal Suwarrow was obliged to march to the Grison country.

LONDON, October 25.

There are Paris papers in town to the 16th Oct. These papers give the official details of Massena's operations to the 8th of Oct. by which it appears, that on the 25th of Sept. he passed the Linth at Dietikou, beat gen. Korsakof and summoned Zurich to surrender—the terms were not accepted—and the town was taken by assault.—In the mean time Suwarrow had advanced to act in concert with the armies lately attacked by Massena, but finding them defeated, avoided an action by keeping the mountains. Here he was however attacked, and left 2000 wounded and part of his baggage. In the mean time, Korsakof, informed of Suwarrow's situation, hastily assembled a corps composed of the remnant of his army, and that of Hotze, the Batavian contingent, and that of Conde, attempted to march to the Tus and from thence to Zurich, Massena attacked him, forced him to repass the Rhine with loss. Massena, in these battles, states that he has taken 18,000 prisoners—more than 100 cannon, and 15 stands of colors—that 4 generals have been taken and 5 killed. Loss of the enemy in total, 31,000 men.

Buonaparte and Berthier, accompanied by generals Lasnes, Marmont, Andreoss, and citizens Mons and Berthollot, arrived at Paris from Egypt, on the 14th Oct.—Moreau is also at Paris.

TALEBEARING.

In an antient manuſcript we found the following Eſſay, which we give literally to the public.

THE practice of Talebearing, however harmleſs it may be in the opinion of ſuch as are infected with it, is nevertheleſs, well known to be productive of innumerable and ſerious evils.—The contemptible fraternity of male goſſips, may be divided into three diſtinct claſſes, to wit: The ſimple or circumſoraneous; the pragmatic or malicious; and the dependant or ſpaniel: the ultimate effects of their goſſiping, though originating from widely differing motives, are generally the ſame.—The firſt claſs (though in themſelves harmleſs) are virtually as dangerous as the others, and materially reaſoning, may be aptly compared to a Bellows, without comprehenſion or reflection, incapable of producing any thing of themſelves, and only active when in a ſtate of inflation. In the rotine of life and daily commerce with the world, they collect as much in one family or circle, as enables them to appear in another and diſgorge their uneaſy burthen; thus unendued and unmoved by any innate principle, they grovel through life, unſuſpected of motives, without friendſhip or enmity, the undiſputed and undiſturbed votaries of contempt. As the exiſtence of theſe is ſolely ſupported by oral ſuſtenance, the plan of digeſtion is obvious. We obſerve, that by phyſical neceſſity, the knowledge of occurrences in the community to which they belong, and of which they are juſtly ſtiled blanks and not members, is as neceſſary to them as cunning to the negotiator, or wind to the bag-pipes.—It might, therefore, become a haggard ſcene of homicide to ſuſpend the intercourſe with theſe human air-guns, or withhold the minutiæ of life from their, in other reſpects, vacant receptions. Hence principles of humanity, enforces the neceſſity of tolerating theſe magazines of vacuity.

The pragmatic or malicious, are of a different caſt, and often on an intellectual equality with the reſt of mankind. This ſpecies from wantonneſs or depravity, or from a concurrence of unworthy motives are actively employed in diſſeminating variance. Strangers to peace themſelves, envious of the peace of others, they induſtriouſly labor to deſtroy that peace which they feel themſelves unable to enjoy; and may juſtly be conſidered as the moſt criminal and deteſtable, as adding duplicity to their prevailing paſſion and profeſſing the warmeſt friendſhip to thoſe who they deſign to render unhappy!—Through this mean they ſeldom fail to accompliſh their purpoſes, and experience a gloomy and diabolical ſatisfaction at being the inſtruments of miſchief, the ſcourges and tormentors of ſociety. That perſon's friendſhip ſhould be invariably doubted and avoided as a peſtilence; who whilſt giving aſſurances of attachment, would verify them by a recital of whiſperings to your prejudice, by artful management the machinations of ſuch incendiaries may long remain undetected, and their real principles unknown, and melancholy evils may enſue ere their ſpecious impoſitions are unveiled. They are in every reſpect as different from the friend, as the ſanguinary wolf, from the timid lamb; or the circaſſian from the hindoo; like a baleful contagion, their venom is imperceptibly imbibed without ſuſpicion, without warning.

The dependent, or ſpaniel ſpecies, are underlings——yet candidates for emolument and fame—their fixed principle is to attach themſelves to perſons of eminence and power—to live in the ſunſhine of their ſmiles, and be fed on the largeſſes of their bounty—the ſlaves to their will, and the ſatellites of their train. They are not ſo harmleſs as the circumforaneous ſpecies—tho' wholly inſignificant, they are not wholly undeſigning, and not to be too raſhly condemned, as their labours are in ſome meaſure the price of their bread. The general order of things, and the general gradations in life, may render ſuch beings neceſſary—but is it neceſſary that they ſhould add tale-bearing to their catalogue of qualifications? It will be anſwered, it does not; but perſons who hold their very means of exiſtence by ſo precarious a tenure as the will of a patron, find it of abſolute neceſſity, and eſſential conſequence, to be agreeable and entertaining, as well as aſſiduous and uſeful—neither malice or detraction, but ſimple ſelf-intereſt actuates this deſpicable order, and is the primum mobile of their every action—their livery is conſpicuous—their badge is ſeduloufneſs—they do not want for other characteriſtics; but their abundance precludes the neceſſity of a more minute deſcription—things either indifferent or nefarious, may, by a juſt application and a cautious uſage, be ſometimes rendered uſeful—the convenience of theſe probationers is the ſtrongeſt plea for their toleration. European News.

AMSTERDAM, October 5.

THE greatest loss in the battle of the 2d, fell on the French, and the most part of the officers of gen. Brune's staff have perished. Some corps were cut off, to that the inundations ordered by us, have been more fatal to us than to the enemy. We were beginning to set the water-mills at work, but the English have set them on fire with their artillery.

The enemy entered Alkmaar on the 31st ult. at 6 in the afternoon; and we learn that the head quarters of general Brune has been transferred from Beverwyck to Haerlem; from whence they will be removed here should the enemy advance any farther. The English head quarters we learn are at Alkmaar, and some of their troops have advanced to the neighbourhood of Haerlem. The batteries which the English erected on the Dunes, in the action of the 2d, made great destruction among the French.

PARIS, October 18.

We have just received accounts from gen. Massena, wherein he says, that after skirmishing with Suwarrow for three days, he at last brought him to a general action, and after twelve hours hard fighting completely routed him,—the Russian general left 3500 dead on the field of battle, besides a considerable number of wounded—we have taken 2000 prisoners, and the general himself narrowly escaped.

FELDKIRCH, on the Rhine, Sept. 26.

On the 23d field marshal Suwarrow commenced his operations against Switzerland, from the foe of Italy, by taking Airolo. On the 24th he carried Mount St. Gothard.—Generals Jellachich, Rosenberg, and Auffenberg, are advancing in three columns against various parts of the cantons. Rosenberg had reached the Grison country, and taken 500 prisoners. Auffenberg has taken the important post of Kreuzeberg, and Jellachich has made himself master of Mollis, and beaten the enemy near Mellehorn.

LINDAU, on Lake Constance, Sept. 29.

The bridge over the Rhine, which was taken up yesterday morning, will be thrown over to-night, and the corps of gen. Petrarsch, whose head quarters have been at Bregentz, is to advance in haste, as he has been apprized that gens. Jellachich and Auffenberg have united with marshal Suwarrow, who was advancing into the heart of Switzerland. He already occupies Lucerne.

LINDAU, Sept. 30.

The retreat which the Imperial troops made on the 25th and 26th from Utznach, by Toggenbourg, and the canton of Appenzel, was very fatiguing. After the good news which has arrived of the progress of marshal Suwarrow in the south of Switzerland, generals Petrarsch and Graber are preparing to advance by the Rinthal.

The French appeared the 29th before Constance, but were driven therefrom the same day. It is not marshal Suwarrow who has arrived at Fieldkirch, as reported; but it is general Jellachich. The French have been in the environs of St. Gall, but in such small numbers, as easily to be dispersed.

BREGENTZ, on the Lake of Constance, September 27.

Gen. Hotze, on the 23d, hearing the French had crossed the Linth, went on a reconnoitring, fell into an ambuscade and was killed, with several other officers. An article, dated Lindau, Sept. 30, says, "The French have sent the body of general Hotze, to the Austrian out posts on the Rhine. It was buried with honors of war, at Bregentz, on the 28th."

After the death of gen. Hotze, the French made two attacks on his positions, and forced the Austro-Russians to retreat, with the loss of 14 officers and many privates killed, and a Russian general wounded.

September 28.

A general retreat of gen. Hotze's army has taken place. The military chest and archieves have arrived here. The militia are ordered to defend the Rhine.

The Russians were defeated the 25th near Zurich, and forced to retreat. (A later account says, that Massena had restored the republican order of things at Zurich.) Yesterday afternoon, it was said, our head quarters were still at St. Gall, and the troops at the distance of a mile and a half. As they are not in sufficient force, it is feared they will be obliged to retreat across the Rhine.

From the details which are given in the Hamburgh papers (altho' the official particulars had not come to hand) it is certain, the English and Russian armies on the 2d and 3d of October, gained a splendid victory over the French and Dutch forces.—The last have been driven from their strong position in front of Alkmaar; and have been obliged to retreat from that place and even from Beverwyck. At the last dates, the Dutch head-quarters were at Haerlem, less than 25 miles N. W. and the French at Purmerent, within 20 miles N. of Amsterdam—at which time the flotilla of admiral Mitchell were affording a powerful co-operation both on the German Ocean, and the Zuyderzee—and nearly the whole coasts of Friseland, Gravingen, and Guelders were in the possession of the English navy, and had displayed the Orange standard. In Guelders the town of Harderwick had been summoned. On the other hand, it is certain, very numerous reinforcements were marching from the interior of France into Holland.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, February 1.

AT a time that we feel ourselves happy in making our grateful acknowledgements to a generous public, for their continued patronage of our paper, we also feel it to be a duty which we owe to ourselves, to give an exposition of the principles on which it has been heretofore conducted. If we have failed in our ultimate aim, we here publicly disavow every disingenuous view, and every criminal intention. It may be impossible to please all; wantonly to displease any, we have carefully strove to avoid. If our paper has at any time been dry, or unentertaining—it has also been void of every insertion which might prove an inlet to immorality—a ground work to discontent—or repugnant to virtue.

In the communications with which we have been favored—we have strenuously endeavored to preserve literality, a strict adherence to truth, and uniformly forborn to make any (we hope) inapposite or umbrageous comments.—From the situation of the place we live in, and from the indirect and irregular communication therewith; we are often debarred from that early acquaintance with foreign occurrences—which, in other parts of our country, are more readily acquired and sooner made public.

To make up for this want, we have gratefully accepted of such productions, as were offered us, that did not vindicate characters, nor were calculated to offend; and have ever been studious, not to disoblige those, whose characters we venerate, and whose patronage we honor and hold in the highest estimation. Meanwhile we have rejected what might have pleased the majority of our subscribers, from the tender consideration of not wishing to wound the feelings of any. If in any instance we have given pain, let it be imputed to the errors of our judgement, and not to our wills.

As the purity of our principles remains unpolluted, we with confidence hope, it may remain unimpeached.—For at any time we have, misconstrued the public sense, we stand openly corrected. In this instance, we have been acquainted, that we recently transgressed; if so, we know of no atonement we can make, more acceptable, than candid acknowledgement.

By desire we now insert the following document, which we hope will exonerate us from any appearance of malevolence.

WHEREAS Mr. Reuben Rigs, of York, carpenter, has been indicted in respect of a certain trespass, of which I complained against him, and having been tried on such indictment and honorably acquitted:

Now I do hereby certify and declare unto all whom it may concern, that I never did intend, or directly or indirectly, that the said Mr. Rigs should be charged with, or arrested, or accused with any thing, crime, or misdemeanor, other than trespass, of which I complained; and that my only object was compensation for a trespass. I do certify and make known to whom it may concern, or those presents may come, that as far as I have known him, which has been altogether after or since said tryal, by what appeared on said tryal, that said Reuben Rigs was innocent as to any the least intention of felonious intent, as I now understand the word; having supposed what I signed a form in such cases, and that I do believe him to be an honest, sober, and industrious man. LETTER TO SANCHO.

In an antiquated manuscript we found the following Letter, addressed to Sancho, by a near relation, as it is supposed.

DEAR COUSIN.

NOTWITHSTANDING your release from the cares of Barataria, I observe that your labors are still directed to public objects; that your philanthropy changing its channel, but not its course, overspreads and fertilizes the neglected province of Ethicks. Your last essay upon "Tale bearing" has made its appearance at Salamanca, and no small noise in it; the public opinion, on the occasion, as it ever happens where there are as many judges as readers, is much divided. The ties of friendship as well as those of kindred, authorize me to give mine freely.

Were you of the same mole-eyed belief, with those who hold death to be the greatest of evils, I should consider it waste of time to address you; but remembering that you and I once considered it as only the first mile-stone of an endless journey—an angle where the road taking a short turn, conceals its continuation from human optics, and calling to mind how often we have harmonized in sentiment with the satirist, and admitted his precept as an article of faith in the catechism of happiness.

"Summum crede nefas animam preferre pudori
"Et propter vitam vivendi perdere causas."

I will take it for granted that your creed continues still orthodox in this respect, unshaken by calamity, and ready to allow, that for the chastisement or expiation of guilt, imperious occasion may call, for the active or passive sacrifice of life at the altar of honor.

Had Lothario boasted that under the roof where your friendship bade him an unsuspecting welcomer where unbounded confidence gave unrestrained access, and undisturbed opportunity, he had basely constructed a theatre of seduction for the female nearest to your blood, and dearest to your affections, would your resentment have cooly slept over the intelligence; have tamely awaited the issue of a tedious and eventful investigation, of the drama and dramatis personæ? No, it would simply interrogate him as to the boast——A boast of such intrinsic turpitude, that its truth a falsehood, would not preceptibly aggrivate or diminish is deformity. The question my dear Sancho, is merely hypothetical, unfounded even upon the shadow of any suspicions which the mist of malice may have attempted to coin into the currency of scandal; a question simply put to furnish this natural inference, that under the same injuries, your feelings would have taken the same road to redress with those of Alamont; and to inculcate this lesson that your piety towards the dead should not profane itself by the bigotry of spleen towards the living.

Your division of "Male-Goffips" into the classes which you have enumerated, seems to me as defective as your description of the first and last is overcharged: by a false association of ideas, you have attempted to range under the same genus, species which have hardly any greater relation to each other than, (borrowing your own phrase) the timid lamb has to the sanguinary wolf—or more analogy of character, than Marplot's to Iago's.

In your first class I can only see the operation of that forcible principle of nature which draws man to man, and binds individuals into society—the desire of interchanging ideas: together with perhaps too much hospitality of mind in entertaining the curiosity of others. In your third I see the same consequences flowing from the same causes—with the additional motive of repaying favor by courtesy: to endeavor to assimilate these and the intermediate class of moral incendiaries, is an attempt to confound uncautious Garrulity and officious Gratitude with social arson.

ALPHONSO PANCA.

N. B. A continuation of this correspondence in our next.

In the present dearth of news, we are obliged to have recourse to our ancient Manuscript, and have made this further extract from the Essays of SANCHO.

PRUDENTIAL motives induced legislators, in early times, to prohibit certain descriptions of men from being jurors, or setting in judgement on their fellow-creatures; equiponderant reasons have since, by universal consent, incapacitated the aged and experienced from setting in judgement on the young and the giddy; or, rather what is in effect the same, their opinions are ridiculed, as the product of spleen, the acidities and eructations of misanthropy. To apologise for obtruding my present thoughts on the world, it will be necessary to premise, that in my youth I retired from noise and bustle, and have ever since lived, and grown grey in solitude. By one of those strange revolu tions incident to the ſtate of man, I find myſelf once more amongſt the croud—immerſed in the noiſe, and a member of the multitude; yet perplexed with doubts of my being real or viſionary. Whether it be from early prejudices, that age has impaired my faculties, or that ſolitude has vitiated my taſte, I know not; for all things ſeem ſo ſtrangely altered, and opinions ſo inexplicably changed, that all to me is novel, all is problematical. The firſt principles that were inſtilled into me, were to reverence virtue and to deprecate vice—tho' this glittered in diamonds and that were clad in rags; by a ſuſceptibility natural to minds which have no previous bias—they engrafted themſelv on mine, and although bereft of culture, have heretofore maintained a footing, and attained to a maturity uncommon to exotics. Theſe being the ground plan, on which time, and encreaſe of years, were to rear and ſupport the fabric of life, I was further taught to confider, that an uniform adherence to them would inſure me an approved and honorable termination to my ſublunary journey. More effectually to impreſs the orthodoxy of theſe truths on my belief, appeals were made to the then exiſting inſtances. Either my preceptors were miſſed—the mundane ſyſtem has undergone a reverſal—education has made me cynical—or age has transformed me into a dotard. Theſe ſeveral probabilities carry with them an appearance of reality; an enquiry into their nature and cauſes, confounds my ſubtleſt reaſoning, and perplexes with anxiety.

Of the firſt, it appears equally incongruous and impoſſible, that not half a century ago, mankind could have been involved in ſuch darkneſs and error, as to miſtate the fundamental and moſt neceſſary duties of life. However, reaſoning muſt yield to experience, and argument to facts—and I am thoroughly convinced that my preceptors were miſtaken.

Of the ſecond, I am aſſured, that none but myſelf can doubt.—On enquiring to this effect, I became the butt of ridicule, and the object of riſibility to my enlightened inſtructors—from whom I alſo learned, that every Spartan principle was exploded, as vulgar and irkſome in practice—as unneceſſary and inapplicable to every human purpoſe. One of them, leſs refined, or more humane than his fellows, ſeemed to feel for my diſtreſs and to pity my ignorance, and recommended to my ſtudy the Sybarite Philoſophy; he offered to direct my efforts, and to regulate my enquiries,—as a ſtronger inducement to follow his advice—he raiſed my admiration by naming the elegant Narciſſus.

Of the third, I am convinced by the reaſonings of an anatomiſt, to whom I applied for information.—He ingenuouſly informed me as to the nature of the cauſes, which I as carefully treaſured in memory—he in the firſt place aſſured me, that there exiſted ſuch an intimate union and connexion between the mind and body, that they reciprocally actuated, and influenced each other—but that the mind, it was generally believed, was the preponderant principle. The proofs he deduced in ſupport of his hypotheſis were briefly theſe—that a Spartan education ever operated as a too powerful bracer—that its more immediate action appeared on the following organs:—the elbows, the tongue, the neck and the knees; that it ſenſibly counteracted the ſimpering affection. And that it cauſed a degree of tenſion in the ſupercilium, wholly unfavorable to the mode of muſcular expreſſion. I was ſo pleaſed with his inſtructions, and ſo delighted with his definitions, that I preſumed further to enquire, what were the effects of old age on the animal œconomy.

He proceeded thus—experience has convinced me, that a continued action in the ſyſtem, (which muſt be the caſe, ſo long as mind and body maintain their union) at laſt induces an induration of the fibre, and eventually deſtroys theſe lax and flexible powers, ſo eſſential in the conciliating attitude of ſupple obeiſance.—This induration alſo extends to thoſe finer vibrations of the nerves, whoſe undiſcovered and inſenſible terminations, happily forms the human will. This accounts, ſaid my inſtructor, why old men are ſo opinionated, ſo petulantly tenacious, and why their wills are ſo untractable. In the youthful, whoſe functions are well performed, and where the component parts are in uniſon, the reverſe of this is the caſe, as in the inſtance of Garrulus. As old age dims the ſight by wearing out the optic nerve, in like manner it blunts our fineſt mental perceptions,—in the proportion that it enfeebles the body, it extinguiſhes the lights of the underſtanding.

ANECDOTE.

ONE day as Dr. Y. was walking in his garden at Welven, in company with two ladies, (one of whom he afterwards married) the ſervant came to acquaint him a gentleman wiſhed to ſpeak with him, "tell him ſays the Doctor, I am too happily engaged to change my ſituation!" The ladies inſiſted upon it he ſhould go, as his viſitor was a man of rank, his patron, his friend, and as perſuaſion had no effect, one took him by the right arm, the other by the left, and led him to the garden gate; when finding reſiſtance vain—he bowed, laid his hand upon his heart, and in that expreſſive manner, for which he was ſo remarkable, ſpoke the following lines:

"Thus Adam look'd when from the garden driv'n,
"And thus diſputed orders ſent from Heaven;
"Like him I go, but to go an loth;
"Like him I go, for angels drove us both;
"Hard was his fate, but mine ſtill more unkind;
"His Eve went with him, but mine days behind."

To ALPHONSO PANCA.

DEAR COZ,

I Remember once at Olympur, to have heard an Equeſtrian hero ſay—that fatter keeping made his nag prance. Often ſince have I aſſociated this idea with its inference.

But ſince I perceive, that you generouſly ſtep forward and remind me of our kindred and expiring acquaintance, I am as much charmed with your candor, as honored by your conſanguinity. Yet, my dear Panca, I am not a little ſurpriſed to ſee that you have made ſo long a digreſſion in relating your opinion of my eſſay—have you not, dear Couſin, inſtead of giving a ſimple opinion to me, given the Salamancans a philippic.—I hope your preſent mental parturition will be favored with a leſs incongruous birth—whilſt the family of the Panca's are ſo engroſſed with Ethics, it would be melancholy if they ſhould wholly neglect Phyſics.

In that eſſay, Panca, I did not once advert to the conduct of "Alamont and Lothario"—I aimed not at inveſtigating the merits of their caſe—nor ſpoke I once of the ſummary laws of honor.—Poſſibly you was not aware, that in attempting to juſtify, you opened a field (extenſive indeed) for indelicate and inſenſate diſquiſition—in endeavoring to purify, you have expoſed to defœdation—a poor compliment to the departed, and ſtill poorer oblation to the living.—Probe not the wound of ſorrow, Panca—thy touch is too rude for ſo delicate an operation. No, Panca, reſpect for wounded feelings deterred me from touching on this ſubject; I only traced the outlines of a few of thoſe miniſtrants, who are every where endemial—and whoſe conſequence flows from no other ſource but that of their being—the ſlow-matches and link-boys of deteſted ſocial arſon. Prithee, Panca, what matters it, if the manſion of ſocial union is upturned, whether it be by a breeze or a hurricane?—is not the cauſe which produced it, equally injurious to the ſufferer?—were it not that thy epiſtle is addreſſed to thy friend and kinſman, I ſhould pronounce it a very counterbuff. Therein you note, that in my firſt claſs of Goſſips, you only perceive the operation of "that forcible principle, which draws man to man, and binds individuals into ſociety."—Your perceptions are inordinate, Panca—had you looked a little ſharper, you might have perceived the operation of no principles at all—without you could perceive the operation of principles in a bellows or pendulum.

How comes it, Panca, that you have not commented on my ſecond claſs of Goſſips. I think, that in this, I ſee the operation of that forcible principle, which cauſes the falling and abſent to be neglected,—however, as you have been rather ſilent on this head, I ſhall ſay very little.

The principles of my third claſs, you have endeavored to point to the ſame focus with thoſe of my firſt.—Thou art wrong, Panca—in theſe you may perceive the operation of that forcible principle, which draws not "man to man," but man to maſter.

Self intereſt rules with wide extended ſway,
Intereſt bids this command—bids that obey;
How few indeed from its dominion free,
Perch'd near the carcaſe will the vulture be.

You have egregiouſly miſtaken my method and meaning, Panca.—In arranging my claſſes, I have made diſtinctions as ſpecific as exiſts between beadle, beacon, and beagle—two of the ſpecies I have laid down in their native inſignificance—the intermediate one, if the picture is a true one, ſhould be the object of deteſtation; the firſt that of pity, and the third of contempt. Without much logic, more anology in their natures may be found, than in the characters of Marplot and Iago. Let us firſt premiſe, that the term incendiary carries with it a general idea of fire—now, altho' the bellows cannot of itſelf produce fire, yet it is well known to be a ſecondary mean of kindling.—With reſpect to the ſpaniel, I find my logic a little marred—but let us ſuppoſe him trained to ſport—it indirectly connects him with this extraordinary element—again we find ſome of them ſo tractable and docile, as to excel in quality of turn-ſpits. The anology is weak, I grant thee, Panca—but thy onſlaught was dreadful—and I am fain to oppugn in the beſt manner I can.

Now my dear Panca, I am ſo far from confounding "garrulity and gratitude with moral turpitude," that I have been at all this trouble to ſet thee right in this matter—which has prevented me from bringing forward two new ſpecies the diplomels and mimert, which I diſcovered by the aſſiſtance of a very ſagacious ſpaniel, who has attached himſelf to my intereſt, he beats about largely, and I promiſe myſelf much from his ſervices. Now ſeriouſly ſpeaking Panca—I grudge even this ludicrous replication to your poſtulatory objections.

Adieu Alphonſo, I am thy Venerable couſin,
SANCHO PANCA.

FROM THE LONDON GAZETTE.

Downing-ſtreet, October 26, '99.

LIEUT. Col. Clinton, aide-de-camp to his royal highneſs the Duke of York, arrived this morning at the office of the right hon. Henry Dundas, with diſpatches, of which the following are copies.

Head quarters, Schagen Brug, Oct. 20.

SIR,

In my laſt communications I have repreſented to you the circumſtances under which I found it expedient to withdraw the army from its poſition in front of Alkmaer, within that which it at preſent occupies, and which I truſt will have appeared to his majeſty ſufficient to warrant the meaſure. The ſeaſon of the year, which has already aſſumed the aſpect of winter here, gave me, from day to day, additional reaſon to apprehend that any attempt towards a proſecution of the campaign in this country could not be attended with deciſive advantages, whilſt the impoſſibility of covering the troops in the narrow diſtrict of the country in our poſſeſſion during the winter, and the precarious ſtate of ſupplies to be expected in that ſeaſon, added to the conviction I felt, that the moſt adviſeable meaſure to be purſued was to remove with the army to England; an operation which, although it might have expoſed the army to ſome loſs in its execution, I judged in my mind, preferable to any other which could be adopted.

Under this impreſſion, and conſidering that ſerious loſs might enſue from delay, I have been induced to conclude an armiſtice, in conjunction with vice admiral Mitchell, with gen. Brune, commanding the French and Batavian armies of which the conditions are incloſed, and which, altho' they provide for delivering up a large number of priſoners of war, now in our hands, yet I truſt, will not be thot by his majeſty an inadequate compenſation for many valuable lives which muſt have been loſt, after the object which has hitherto directed them, no longer promiſed ſucceſs; and when the only means which preſented themſelves of enſuring a ſecure retreat were thoſe of reſorting to the deſtructive meaſure of inundation from the ſea, which, as it would have involved the inhabitants of the northern part of this province in ruin for a ſeries of years, muſt have been highly repugnant to the feelings, as well as contrary to the character and practice of the Britiſh nation. I reſt confident that the motives which I have here detailed will excuſe me to his majeſty for having acted without writing for previous inſtructions from home, and that I ſhall have the ſatisfaction of knowing that my conduct, in this reſpect, has met with his majeſty's gracious approbation.

I am, &c.

Articles agreed upon between Major-General Knox, duly authorized by his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, commander in chief of the combined Engliſh and Ruſſian army, and citizen Roſtollant, general of brigade and adjutant-gen. duly authorized by citizen Brune, gen. and commander in chief of the French & Batavian army.

Art. I. From the date of this convention all hoſtilities ſhall ceaſe between the two armies.—II. The line of demarcation between the laid armies, ſhall be the line of their reſpective out-poſts as they now exiſt.—III. The continuation of all works offenſive and defenſive ſhall be ſuſpended on both ſides, and no new ones ſhall be undertaken.—IV. The mounted batteries taken poſſeſſion of at the Helder, or at other poſitions within the line, now occupied by the combined Engliſh and Ruſſian army, ſhall be reſtored in the ſtate in which they were taken, or (in caſe of improvement) in their preſent ſtate, and all the Dutch artillery taken therein ſhall be preſerved. —V. The combined Engliſh and Ruſſian army ſhall embark as ſoon as poſſible and ſhall evacuate the territory, coaſts, iſlands, and internal navigation of the Dutch republic, by the 30th of Nov. 1799, without committing any deva ſtation, by inundations, cutting the dykes or other ways injuring the ſources of navigation.—VI. Any ſhips of war or other veſſels which may arrive with reinforcements for the combined Britiſh and Ruſſian army, ſhall not land the ſame, and ſhall be ſent away as ſoon as poſſible.—VII. Gen. Brune ſhall be at liberty to ſend an officer within the lines of the Zuyp and to the Helder, to report to him the ſtate of the batteries and the progreſs of the embarkation. His royal highneſs the duke of York ſhall be equally at liberty to ſend an officer within the French and Batavian lines, to ſatisfy himſelf that no new works are carried on on their ſide. An officer of rank and diſtinction ſhall be ſent from each army reſpectively, to guarantee the execution of this convention.—VIII Eight thouſand priſoners of war, French and Batavians, taken before the preſent campaign, and now detained in England, ſhall be reſtored without conditions to their reſpective countries. The proportion and the choice of ſuch priſoners for each, to be determined between the two republics. Maj. gen. Knox ſhall remain with the French army to guarantee the execution of this article.—IX. The cartel agreed upon between the two armies for the exchange of the priſoners taken during the preſent campaign, ſhall continue in full force till it ſhall be carried into complete execution; and it is further agreed the Dutch admiral De Winter ſhall be conſidered as exchanged.

Concluded at Alkmaer, the 18th of Oct. 1799, by the underſigned general officers, furniſhed with full powers to this effect.

End of the London Gazette.

Berne, Oct. 12. The following proclamation has been iſſued;

Maſſena, General in Chief, to the Army.

Soldiers! The coaleſced powers had united three armies againſt you. Their plan was to gain poſſeſſion of Helvetia, & thereby to penetrate into France.

You have deſtroyed their plan. You have ſecured the Limath; and in two days you have annihilated the army of Korſakoff.—You have taken all his cannon, all his baggage, and have obtained Zurich by force of arms. The enemy has loſt 6000 priſoners, and three generals wounded.

You have ſecured the Linth; you have completely beat the Auſtrian army; you have made 5000 priſoners, & taken 20 pieces of cannon. Its general in chief has been killed on the field of battle.

The army commanded by Suwarrow has advanced to Altorf. You marched againſt it; you vanquiſhed it in the valley of Mutten; you have taken one ſtandard, two pieces of cannon, and the enemy, forced to make a precipitate retreat, has abandoned 600 wounded, among whom are a general and ſeveral officers.—Tho' repulſed from Glarus, you have ſtill been conquerors. You have made 1500 priſoners, taken a ſtandard and killed a general. Finding their ſafety only in flight, the enemy fled towards the Griſons, leaving you 1500 wounded; they loſt beſides a great part of their artillery and all their baggage.

Upon the Rhine the wreck of the vanquiſhed regiments, reinforced by Bavarian troops and by thoſe of Conde attempted a freſh attack. You were there ready to receive them. On the ſide of Scaffhouſe you have made 150 priſoners, taken ſix ſtandards, ſeveral cannon, and killed a general.

On the banks of the Rhine, from where the Aar flows to the ſummit of Gotharo the enemy have ſtrewed the field of battle with the ſlain.

Finally, you have driven the enemy from Helvetia, and by loſing a portion of land which the enemy have purchaſed ſo dearly, they loſt more than 30,000 ſoldiers! Behold the work of 15 days. Your own country, as well as Helvetia, have decreed you civic honors.

When whole nations offer you their tribute of admiration and gratitude, it is the duty of your general to remind you that a new career of exertion and dangers preſents itſelf to you. He engages, in your name, that you will force your way thro' it with your wonted intrepidity and devotion.

(Signed) MASSENA.

ARMY OF HELVETIA.

Zurich, Oct. 16.

Maſſena, commander in chief, to the miniſter of war of the Helvetic Republic.

CITIZEN MINISTER,

The laſt accounts I have had of Suwarrow ſtate, that he had been ſick for three days preceding at Mayenfeld, that his army was reduced to about 5000 men, moſt of whom are deſtitute of arms and ſhoes, and in a deplorable ſituation, on their march to Fieldkirch, which induces me to ſuppoſe that he is endeavoring to effect his junction with the remains of the army of Korſakoff. What gives greater probability to this junction is, that the Ruſſians who were upon the Rhine have all been relieved by the Auſtrians, and are marching towards Bregentz. My movement into the Griſons will take place on the 18th or 19th.

(Signed) MASSENA.

Franckfort, Oct. 12. The horrors of war are recommencing on the Rhine. Laſt night the French croſſed the Rhine and the Mayn in conſiderable force, near Koſtheim and Groſsgerau, and repulſed the ſmall Auſtrian force in the territory of Darmſtadt. The armed peaſants who had again advanced, are likewiſe retreating. It is thought that the French are meditating another excurſion againſt Manheim and Helbron, to weaken the Archduke's army in Switzerland.

Our city is blocked up from all ſides, and we are in danger of all communication being cut off. The lateſt letters from Swabia have not arrived.

On the 9th, major gen. Szenkereſky ſent a detachment of Szekler huſſars, who laid an embargo on all the veſſels in the river, and arreſted the architect of our city, Mr. Heſs, and carried him off, as well as the timber for repairing the bridge of boats at Neiderad.

Paris, Oct. 19. Buonaparte, whoſe proceedings always form a part of the news of the day, did not depart from his apartments on the day of his arrival, tho' the rage for invention aſſured us he had paſſed the whole night at the Luxembourg. He was yeſterday received there by the directory, in a private audience, at 1 o'clock. Before his arrival the paſſages were crowded with citizens, wiſhing to ſee the man whoſe name brot to mind ſo many great events. He feeled ſenſible of this deſire. He kiſſed his hand to ſeveral of the ſoldiers who had ſerved with him in Italy, and who now departed enchanted at having ſeen him.

Oct. 23. Among the employments aſſigned by report to Buonaparte, are two well worthy of him. The firſt, to reconquer Italy, and march to Vienna: the ſecond, to repair to Berlin, & there conclude a peace.

Decree of the ninth of October.

The executive directory, on the report of the miniſter for foreign affairs,

Conſidering, 1ſt, That the impriſonment of citizens Napper Tandy and Blackwell, naturalized Frenchmen, and attached to the ſervice of the republic, as well as of citizens Morris and Corbet in the dungeons of Hamburgh, and the ſubſequent delivery of them into the hands of the agents of England, is a crime againſt the rights of nations, a breach of the laws of humanity, and an high offence againſt the French republic.—2dly, That the laws of neutrality impoſe upon the ſtates that enjoy its benefits, duties which ought to be ſacredly performed with reference to the principles of ſociety and the rights of the public.—3dly, That the moſt imperious of thoſe duties is to guard againſt any act of hoſtility being committed on ſuch neutral territory, & by that means to offer to the perſons of the citizens & ſubjects of every belligerant nation an aſſured protection, and an equal aſylum againſt every kind of violence exerciſed by virtue of the laws of war.—4thly, Conſidering that ſince the pride and fanaticiſm of certain governments have kindled the flames of war, crimes againſt the rights of nations have encreaſed to an alarming degree; that it is in particular the chief of an empire far removed to the north of Europe and Aſia, who, without provocation on the part of the French, is made the inſtrument of the hatred of the Engliſh government againſt the French republic, and againſt the liberal and philanthropic principles upon which it is founded; and that this chief indiſcriminately menaces and inſults every government which does not adopt his blind & unreaſonable policy.—5thly That if the ſource of this moral and political corruption is not checked by an appeal to every government which has not participated in ſuch a ſtate of degradation, and by the puniſhment of thoſe who have borne part in the diſgrace of ſuch a ſyſtem: in ſhort, if theſe atrocities are not expoſed to the public view with that reprobation they merit, it is to be feared, that in future the laws of war will be wholly unreſtrained, and the rights of peace without any pledge for their obſervance; that there will no longer exiſt a barrier againſt the progreſs of a general diſſolution, and that Europe will rapidly revert to a ſtate of barbariſm.—Finally, Conſidering that the deference of any government to atrocious orders cannot be excuſed by the conſideration of its weakneſs, particularly when that government is guilty of having placed itſelf in a ſtate of dependence by its own voluntary act; & that ſuch is the caſe with reſpect to the magiſtrates of Hamburgh, by ordering the impriſonment of citizens Napper Tandy, Blackwell, Morris and Corbet, and refuſing to deliver them up, upon official proof of their being French citizens & officers, decrees as follows:

Art. I. The crime committed by the government of Hamburgh, ſhall be denounced to every allied and neutral government by the miniſters of the republic reſident at thoſe governments.—II. The conſular and diplomatic agents reſident with the ſenate of Hamburgh, ſhall immediately quit the city and its territory.—III. Every agent of the government of Hamburgh ſhall receive orders to quit his reſidence in 24 hours, & the territory of France in 8 days.—IV. A general embargo ſhall be laid upon all the ſhips and veſſels carrying the flag of Hamburgh, and now in the ports of the republic.—The miniſters of the marine, police, and foreign affairs, are charged with the execution of this preſent decree.

LONDON, October 28.

The mails of the 4th inſt. for Hamburgh, ſent on board his majeſty's ſhip La Lutine, of 32 guns, were found floating near the bank on which ſhe was loſt.

A private letter from an officer in our army in Holland, dated the 20th ſtates, that col. Cunningham is ſtill alive.—His chin being ſhot away, the ſkin of his neck is ſewed to his upper lip; he is in good ſpirits, and likely to recover. Major Grey is in a dangerous ſituation. Capt. King of the 56th is dead. Capt. Coleman of the guards, is alive, tho' a ball paſſed through his body. Prince William of Glouceſter has ſhipped his carriages. The flux increaſes for want of rice. There is a great want of ſtraw. None of the officers have beds, they all ſleep on hay.

The following account of the late detention of gen. Don, is given in a letter from the Hague of the 14th inst.—"Gen. Don arrived at the head quarters of gen. Daendals at the moment of the attack on the 6th inst. The Duke of York expected that he should beat the left wing of the French on that day, which might open the road for negociation with the Dutch. Gen. Daendals sent gen. Don to gen. Brune, who detained him as a prisoner of war; a summons to the Batavian government to commence negociations with England, signed by the Duke of York, being found amongst his papers."

It was with concern we learned yesterday, that a private letter received from Bengal by a respectable individual, announces the death of the gallant capt. Cooke, whose exertions on board la Sybille were lately so honorably noticed on the part of the directors of the East Indis Company, by the present of a sword. He was a young man of the most splended abilities and acknowledged bravery.

On board the Santa Brigada Spanish frigate, just taken, there were besides the two millions of dollars, 500 bags of cochineal, worth about 150,000l.

Oct. 30. The accounts from Italy state, that Suza has been retaken, & that Championet has gained an advantage near Coni. The victories in Switzerland have produced the effect of preventing the retreat of the French in Italy, and Genoa remains in possession of the French. Rome has presented an unexpected scene.—The French, but few in number, and incapable of resisting the Neapolitans who were advancing, began to retreat to Civita Vecchia. The people immediately requested not to be abandoned, and to be armed. A strong force was soon collected, the Neapolitan entrenched camp of 12,000 men at Frescati was stormed, 200 killed, 1300 made prisoners, with the commander in chief and the military chest.

Adrwick, Oct. 23. Since my last, the following transports have arrived here with wounded troops from the continent: Ariadne, Hobart, Harmony, Peace and Plenty, Fame, Cecilia, and Aid.

Yesterday morning, the Royal Admiral (formerly an East Indiaman) went on shore near Woodbridge Haven, but with the assistance of several fishing vessels from this place, the wounded troops were all taken out of her, and the vessel has since got off, and is coming into this port.

Yesterday and this morning, a great number of wounded men have been brot ashore, and conveyed to the hospitals, where they have been dressed, and the principal part of them are returned on board the transports, which are ordered to proceed to colchester.

Lieut.-col. Dawkins, of the Guards, who left the Helder on Friday last, I am sorry to say, died on his passage on Sunday morning. His body has been brot on shore, and will remain at the Three Cups Inn, till directions for its interment are received from his family, who are at Salisbury, to whom an express was sent off last night.

The following wounded officers have landed since Sunday last, viz. Col. Hodges, lieut. col. Crew, major Hutchinson, capt. Robinson, capt. Thompson, lieutenants Keith, Hill, Waters, Parsons, and three others, whose names we have not learned.

Plymouth, Oct. 24. The Triton and Ethalion frigates are come into harbour; the former to repair the damage sustained by having run on the rocks on the coast of Spain, while in pursuit of the San Brigada Spanish frigate; the latter to refit.—The Spanish vessels taken are laden chiefly with ivory, gold bars, dollars, and other valuable commodities; and it is believed, that the most accurate amount of their cargoes is full one million sterling. The proportion of prize money, even to a sweeper on board the frigates, will of course be great. The loss of these ships must be seriously felt by the Spanish and French governments as it seems, the money was designed to pay the squadron at Brest. The Sylph has just arrived with a retaken American ship.

The Solicitor General

Having complained to the Board of an article inserted in the Gazette of last Saturday, which he conceives to be an indirect censure of himself, & of Mr. Weeks who was of Council with the Crown, on the trial of Reuben Riggs for felony, at the session of Oyer and Terminer, lately held at this place; and having laid before the Board the deposition of one John Dennis, the person on whose oath the prosecution was founded, The Board declared itself to be perfectly satisfied that the Solicitor General had done his duty in prosecuting Riggs for felony: And in order to do away the effect of the article complained of, it Orders, That the deposition of the said Dennis, and a copy of this minute be printed in the next Gazette.

By order of the Board,

Home District, York. To wit: } On this second day of November, 1799, personally appeared before me, William Willcocks, Esq; one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, John Dennis, farmer, and made oath, that on or about Tuesday the eighth day of October last, he overtook Reuben Riggs, of York Garrison, carpenter, near the mouth of the River Humber, on a raft, on which raft were several articles of lumber, the property of deponent, which were feloniously stolen from deponent's ship yard in said river. Said John Dennis further swears, that he has lost out of said ship yard, several spikes, nails, and other articles of iron, besides many oak and pine planks of different dimensions, and verily believes they were feloniously stolen by the said Rueben Riggs; and therefore prays he may be dealt with as the law directs, and further sayeth not.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 30.

Arrived on Saturday, schooner Fox, Stevenson, Cape Francois.

Captain Stevenson informs, that 24 hours previous to his sailing (30th ult.) an insurrection at Jean Babel took place. The insurgents were headed by one of Rigaud's generals who having been defeated, and driven into the mountains had unexpectedly collected a large force with which he made a sortie and gained possession of the fort Jean Rabel. On the arrival of this news at the Cape, a general requisition took place, and about 800 men were immediately sent off for the relief of the fort. Captain S. also confirms the melancholy accounts which have heretofore been published of the unfortunate situation of that island.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 30.

Captain Collet, of the ship Aurora, last from Plymouth, arrived in town on Saturday evening, brings the disagreeable information of the capture of the Caroline, Motly, from Liverpool, for this port. She was taken on the 10th October, in lat. of 50 and long. 10, and sent for Bourdeaux.

Two days previous to captain Collet's sailing, three British frigates bro't into Plymouth two Spanish galloons, having on board four millions of dollars.

A French gentleman who came passenger in the sloop Luisa, from Sebastians, and who left Paris about the 24th October, informs, that Buonaparte had arrived there previous to this gentleman' departure and that his arrival had occasioned great public rejoicings, that he brought with him a treaty of peace concluded by him for twenty years with the Grand Seignior, who had ceded to France 200 leagues of the territory which had been conquered by Buonaparte; and that a secret expedition was preparing, of which he was to have the command.

The convention which is said to have taken place between the Duke of York and gen. Brune, was signed on the 5th of October, by some of the London papers, and by others, on the 18th. The terms are differently stated. The morning Chronicle of the 23d October states, that the French had demanded the restoration of the Dutch ships: but even this account is not given as genuine.

Nothing authentic on the head had transpired at the date of the last English accounts; and from the circumstance of skirmishing having taken place on the 17th and 18th between the out posts, asstated in the London papers of the 24th, more than a suspicion is entertained that the supposed convention was either broken between the armies or never had existence.

FOR THE ORACLE.

Gentlemen,

IN that repertory of transatlantic genius, the Constellation, I find the following passage descriptive of a rueful emblem of American woe over the exit of a man whose conduct to his King and Country some may praise, but few will recommend to imitation.

"The top was in the form of a pyramid, in the front of which appeared the American EAGLE weeping tears of bead for the loss of her general—and holding in her beak a scroll on which was inscribed "A nation's tears."

Now gentlemen, this delicate touch would never have entered into the clumsy fancy of an European mausoleum-monger. A poet of that quarter of the globe indeed, in the fever of his immagination has described Proserpine as shedding tears of "molten iron": but birds melting into the lachrymal passion! eagles shedding tears! tears of molten glass!! "Angles and ministers of grace defend us!!!"

It seems that the American Eagle possesses, in common with man, another faculty of expressing its grief—the faculty of speech. It cries its hot tears about like an ambulent cook his hot mutton-pies—A Nation's Tears! A Nation's Tears; piping hot, piping hot, from the Glass House—

"For the loss of her General."

Pray, gentlemen of Columbia, (which I am told, means in English, Pidgeonhouse) was Mr. Washington Commander in Chief of all the feathered creation—General of Eagles—Owls—Geese, &c. &c.?

Your's,
No Pidgeon nor Glass Oculist.

DEATHS, BIRTHS & MARRIAGES.

Meſſrs. PRINTERS.

IF you knew how comfortable it is for us who live in the country, to learn all that is going on in your town, I am ſure you would never omit theſe eſſential articles to our happineſs, Deaths, Births, and Marriages.

Theſe are to us, of far more importance than affairs of ſtate, or the hiſtory of the war; they are matters that come home "to our boſoms, our boſoms," and what is more important than all, they are matters upon which we may venture to talk without the leaſt riſk of contradiction.

For, gentlemen, ſuppoſing now, that we read of the death of lord ——, or ſir ——, or plain ſuch a one, it is not evident, that all the world can talk about his character, mention the very hour he died, the diſorder which killed him, the exact ſtate of his income, and how he left his money? and all this with a degree of poſitive certainty, that admits of no contradiction.

To be ſure one may be a little miſtaken ſometimes. There are caſes where men have lived exceedingly rich, who have been found worth nothing; a plain proof, in my poor opinion, that part of the Bible is wrong tranſlated, which ſays, "that we can take nothing out of the world with us."

I have known a man poſſeſſed of a thouſand a year when he died, and when buried, and his heirs were looking about, they could not find enough to diſcharge the undertaker's bill. What can be a clearer proof that he muſt have taken it with him, unleſs we were to believe what I uſually look only for a metaphor, that "riches make themſelves wings and fly away."

Then, gentlemen, as to the births—what a fund for enquiry and converſation. "Bleſs me, has ſhe a child at laſt? Well, I thought ſhe had done with all that,—Or,—"What! another child; that woman will ruin her huſband in brats—to be ſure he'll have an allowance in the income act—but ſuch a family!"—"A girl is it? what a diſappointment there will be! Such a fine eſtate too—it muſt all go to the nephew; and you know they hate the nephew as they hate the devil!"—"What! a boy at laſt! there will be ſuch rejoicing—I dare ſay we ſhall be aſked—Well he'll have a fine fortune, that's certain—but what will become of the poor girls? Miſs Tiſley will not hold her head quite ſo high up now, &c.

But of all earthly enjoyments, Meſſrs. printers, do give us plenty of marriages.

We don't want you to make them, we can do that in a time of ſcarcity.—O! how delightful are the reports of our ſecret committee—What plots and conſpiracies! What letters found; what diſcoveries. But when the church has given her fiat, you ought to conceal nothing from us.

We will give up both Banks of the Rhine, and all the Banks of Scotland in the bargain, rather than you ſhould not give place to the ſucceſsful negociations at the Court of Hymen—We will pay our taxes without any debates or amendments, but don't feonce us of a ſingle wedding. Don't deprive us of knowing who and who are come together, which would ruin us beyond redemption, and turn our tea-tables into Quaker meetings.—How comfortable to deſcant upon thoſe unions. "What! is he married to her? Who would have thought it? A poor ſhambling, awkward thing—Nay, the girl is very well; but to be ſure, ſhe'll have a ſad time of it with him. What is he not good tempered? Lud! the very reverſe; why, I'll tell you, what I have mentioned before, and to let it go no farther. Would you believe the fellow made propoſals to me? He is rich, however. O, no great matter for that—all depends on two aunts, that are liked, to bury the whole family. But, Bleſs my heart! who is the next? Take the newſpaper, and read it with your own eyes—Bob—to Tiſ——.

Lud! it is the little dab of a girl you ſaw at Mrs.—! What ſhe! My ſtars! Was ever the like? A little affected pert thing.—And who is Bob? O! a low fellow of a manufacturer, you muſt remember him at our dance—his father is juſt dead, and left him a mint of money. But what could he ſee in her? and then ſhe has not a penny of fortune, except from her uncle, and he may marry, being not more than ſixty, is hale, hearty and very cantankerous!"

And ſo, Meſſrs. Printers, mind what we ſay, and let us have plenty of the neceſſaries of life and converſation; and in return we will give you up all the affairs of Europe; being

HUMANITY.

GENTLENESS, which belongs to virtue is to be carefully diſtinguiſhed from the mean ſpirit of cowards, and the fawning aſſent of ſycophants: it renounces no juſt right from fear: It gives up no important truth from flattery: It is indeed not only conſiſtent with a firm mind, but it neceſſarily requires a manly ſpirit and a fixed principle in order to give it any real value. It ſtands oppoſed to harſhneſs and ſeverity--to pride and arrogance--to violence and oppreſſion: It is, properly, that part of the real virtue charity, which makes unwilling to give to any of our brethren: It corrects whatever is offenſive in our manners; and by a conſtant train of humane attentions, ſtudies to alleviate the burden of common miſery: Its office is therefore extenſive; it is continually in action when we are engaged in intercourſe with men. It ought to form our addreſs, regulate our ſpeech, and to diffuſe itſelf over our whole behaviour.

That gentleneſs which is a characteriſtic of a good man, has, like every other virtue, its ſear in the heart. In that unaffected civility which ſprings from a gentle mind, there is a charm infinitely more powerful than in all the ſtudied manners of the moſt finiſhed courtier.

It is founded on a ſenſe of what we owe to him who made us and to the common nature of which we all ſhare. It ariſes from reflection on our own failings and wants, and from juſt views of the condition and duty of man. It is a native feeling heightened and improved by principle. It is the heart which eaſily relents: which feels for every thing that is human; and is backward and ſlow to inflict the leaſt wound. It is affable in its addreſs; and mild in its demeanor; every ready to oblige, and be obliged by others; breathing habitual kindneſs toward friends, courteſy to ſtrangers, long ſuffering to enemies.

It exerciſes authority with moderation: adminiſters reproof with tenderneſs: confers favours with care and modeſty. It is unaſſuming in opinion, and temperate in zeal: it contends not eagerly about trifles: ſlow to contradict, and ſtill ſlower to blame; but prompt to allay diſſention & reſtore peace; It neither intermeddles on neceſſarily with the affairs, or pries inquiſitively into the ſecrets of others: It delights, above all things to alleviate diſtreſs; and, if it cannot dry up the falling tear, to ſoothe at leaſt the grieving heart.

Where it has not the power of being uſeful, it is never burdenſome: It ſeeks to pleaſe rather than ſhine and dazzle, and conceals with care that ſuperiority either of talents or of rank, which are oppreſſive to thoſe who are beneath it. It is a great avenue to mutual enjoyment. Amidſt the ſtrife of interfering intereſts, it tempers the violence of contention, and keeps alive the ſeeds of harmony. It ſoftens animoſities, renews endearments, and renders the countenance of man a refreſhment to man. It prepoſſes and wins every heart. It perſuades when every other argument fails; often diſarms the fury, and melts the ſtubborn.

THE preſent uncommon dearth of NEWS, very aptly introduces the following obſervation, that

NO NEWS IS GOOD NEWS,

Which may at firſt bluſh, appear ſome what paradoxical; but upon the ſmalleſt inveſtigation the myſtery all vaniſhes. Moſt men are rather diſſatisfied at reading a newſpaper, unleſs it affords them ſome very intereſting and important intelligence; but let us conſider a moment; does not ninety-nine to an hundred of this kind of intelligence, conſiſt in the calamities of our fellow creatures? and if ſo, no news is, comparatively, good news.

A ſleigh driving over the ice loaded with men and women, broke through, and all drowned! a veſſel founded at ſea, or bulged on the rocks, the men periſhed! or perhaps one or two ſaved, but ſuffered amazing hardſhips! men robbed and murdered! a houſe burnt! a town laid in aſhes, deſtroyed by an earthquake, or a violent inundation, thouſands periſhed and ruined! an obſtinate engagement between two ſhips; a battle between two armies, with great effuſion of human blood, hundreds, nay, thouſands killed, wounded and taken priſoners! What we call important, is moſt generally calamitous, attended with wounds, bloodſhed, miſery and death! and when ſo it bad news: I ſay therefore, no news is good news.

How beautiful is the order of nature! the planets move in their own orbits; the rivers in their own channels; and every good man in the way which nature and education have allotted him: No man is robbed; no houſe plundered; no town burnt, no ſound of the warrior and garments rolled in blood; no remarkable diſaſter befals any one: But then there is a dearth of news, and the people feel uneaſy. Newſpapers, ſay they, are now adays hardly worth reading! But let us put a proper conſtruction on all events, and we ſhall find that no news is good news; becauſe we are then to ſuppoſe that harmony and good fortune pervades the world.

When the printer finds none of theſe calamitous matters to fill his paper with, he graces it, if he be a judicious man, with extracts and pieces on politics, huſbandry, buſineſs, trade or morality; with now and then a ſketch of wit and humour, which ſerves to exhilerate the ſpirits, inform the underſtanding, reform the manners, or mend the heart; which though it be no news is highly preferable to bad news,

TO SANCHO.

Dear Hidalgo,

IN acknowledging our conſanguinity, I obſerve that you likewiſe prove it, by the evidence of a ſtrong family characteriſtic—an unalterable allegiance to primitive opinions; the Princes you know are wont to dictate and not to perſuade; to contend for victory and not for truth.

Your debut in your laſt was too abrupt, too ſudden for conſideration, otherwiſe you would have reflected, that although ceremony among friends be always unneceſſary, and often-times improper, yet reſpect for appearances never is; you would therefore have accoſted your couſin in a more ſeemly coſtume and ſtyle, than in the uniform and ideom of the Jockey Club; perhaps from the ſplendor of the ſcenery, you expected ſome relief; ſome excuſe for the familiarity. Your ſtable is in Olimpus—your equeſtrian a hero, and your nag—nay, your nag mars the figure; I have heard indeed of one genuine individual of that ſpecies recognized on portical turf, but he was no prancer—his gait, pardon the bull—was flight. Your's muſt be of the Jeruſalem breed of horſes, ſome of whom from native waywardneſs ludicrouſly ſtray into thoſe regions.

After your cavalier ſalutation, you proceed to a ſingular propoſition—"that you have often aſſociated an idea with its inference." Now, Coz, I have been taught that a propoſition and its inference are in the ſeries or relation of cauſe and effect—of original and derivative—if ſo, is not your aſſociation within the prohibited degrees of kindred in reaſoning? a kind of logical inceſt; but to be ſerious.

The public prints are maſquerades into which admiſſion is free for every character which caprice can deviſe, or whim wear; where the ephemeral character aſſumed is the only fair object of animadverſion; and where the high and low, the witty and dull rendezvous in a groteſque miſcellany of jumbled, and generally inverted order, to wage the harmleſs warfare of raillery and humour, priviledged from the riſk of giving or receiving offence to perſonal feelings. They are tournaments where at every true knight of the quill has a right to tilt, and where his opponent becomes his brother at arms inſtead of his enemy. Now my dear don, if ſuch be the laws of the field, eſtabliſhed by invariable uſage, why ominouſly preſage an expiring acquaintance; nay, laying priviledge aſide, have I ſaid nis further ſwears, that he has loſt out of ſaid ſhip yard, ſeveral ſpikes, nails, and other articles of iron, beſides many oak and pine planks of different dimenſions, and verily believes they were feloniouſly ſtolen by the ſaid Rueben Riggs; and therefore prays he may be dealt with as the law directs, and further ſaieth not.

DEATHS, BIRTHS & MARRIAGES.

Meſſrs. PRINTERS,

IF you knew how comfortable it is for us who live in the country, to learn all that is going on in your town, I am ſure you would never omit theſe eſſential articles in our happineſs, Deaths, Births, and Marriages.

They are tournaments where at every true knight of the quill has a right to tilt, and where his opponent becomes his brother at arms inſtead of his enemy. Now my dear don, if ſuch be the laws of the field, eſtabliſhed by invariable uſage, why ominouſly preface an expiring acquaintance; nay, laying priviledge aſide, have I ſaid ought which the moſt ſtrained conſtruction could interpret into perſonality. I come forward to vindicate and not to wound—to defend the living and not to diſturb the aſhes of the dead, or ſport ſacrilegiouſly with the wound of ſorrow. 'Twould be parricide in me, Sancho, for from the firſt expanſion of my eyelids to the viciſſitudes of this life, I have numbered myſelf among the children of ſorrow.

My attachment to the fallen was warm and ſincere; the fatal dye could not have turned up otherwiſe than calamitouſly for my affections; and believe me, Couſin, although my regret does not reſolve itſelf into the oſtentation of poſthumous praiſe it occupies not the leſs ſpace in my heart.

If I have paſſed over without much commentary your ſecond claſs of "goſſips," it was not for lack of a copious ſubject. I had ſeveral motives of ſilence wholly unconnected with "the principle which cauſes the fallen and abſent to be neglected;" in the firſt place my dear Sancho, you know that I have already remonſtrated againſt the admiſſion of that deleterious claſs of goſſips into the company of the other two, and my opinion has not been ſhaken by the line of analogy through which you have attempted to trace their affinities and connections. In the ſecond place the individual who ſeems to have ſat for your animated picture of that ſpecies, is abſent, and it would not be equitable to arraign him upon ſo heavy a charge without admitting him to an opportunity of defence; in proportion indeed to the enormity of his accuſation is his claim to a hearing before judgement, unleſs he ſhall be out-lawed for not appearing in due time to vindicate himſelf: and in the third, when the public opinion vibrates ſo ſuddenly from one extreme to the other, prudence ſeldom embraces it without a long pauſe. The many have perhaps only changed into what were long the ſentiments of the few, yet it would be unwarrantable vanity in any of theſe, to illuſtrate his own ſagacity in having anticipated detection, until ſuſpicions ripen into certainty.

I have ſuſpected from the beginning that your zoography was founded upon your own experience, and view of the ſubject; your confeſſion "of the aſſiſtance of a very ſagacious ſpaniel who has attached himſelf to your intereſt, who beats about largely and promiſes you much ſport from his ſervices," leaves me no longer to doubt where at leaſt the third claſs of your goſſips is domeſticated.

Your replication, Sancho, to my poſtulatory objections, as you are pleaſed to term my epiſtle, was gratuitous, I muſt praiſe you generoſity for parting ſo liberally with what coſt you a grudge.

Now in ſober ſadneſs my friend, it is much a queſtion with me, whether you or I know what face lies behind the others viſor—perhaps I am encountered by ſome pithleſs Patroclus in the borrowed armour of Achilles—if ſo——but ſhould it be my real kinſman who frowns upon me, he may be aſſured that acquaintance may ſlumber or ceaſe, the current of favor may dry up, but the heart which feeds the fingers with life to trace theſe lines, ſhall ceaſe to beat ere it abate of its gratitude for innumerable favors;—but we are growing too ſerious.

Adieu Sancho, adieu!!

FOR THE ORACLE.

Gentlemen,

IT has lately been made known to me, that a part of the "Stump ati" is levelled at a gentleman, whoſe ſympathetic feelings drew tears from him on account of our national debt. Some may ſay, that the puerile and impotent endeavors of hidden incendiaries ſhould be paſt over in ſilent contempt; but when they attempt to ridicule the moſt benign and noble principles of the human heart, their intentions ſhould be expoſed to public view and deteſtation.

If that warm and diffuſive benevolence which impelled a man to weep for a nation's burthen, could ſuffer from the malicious comments and deſpicable railleries of an anonymous block-head, I ſhould ſympathize with this truly worthy character. Where dignified virtue—inflexible honor—an enlarged capacity and enchanting ſuavity of manners are eminently conſpicuous in an individual, he may ſet malice at defiance and ſpurn at detraction. It is unfortunate for thoſe malevolent abettors—thoſe inſidious bug-bears of ſcandal, that their anonymouſneſs ſhields them from the ſcourging to which their invidious attempts ſhould ſubject them.

It has ever been the fate of extreme excellence and eſtabliſhed merit, to be the envy of the depraved and ſtumbling block to the unworthy. On the other hand its luſtre is rather increaſed than diminiſhed, by their contemptible efforts to tarniſh it.

I ſhould think it ſuperfluous to enlarge on this head, was it not that a vehicle of abuſe is eſtabliſhed, teeming weekly with injurious inſinuations, to which the brighteſt characters are moſt obnoxious. The lurking confederates who are its movers, whoſe bond of union is malice, think their torrent of ſcurrility uncontroulable—from being unknown they are unamenable to juſtice—reproof to ſuch is ineffectual.—Strangers, and the ignorant, are too apt to be unfavorably impreſſed by innuendos; and what remains unanſwered, or unnoticed, is often miſtaken for poignant truth.

Thoſe moral aſſaſſins, are puffed with the opinion of degrading the virtue they cannot attain to. Were their rhapſodies intended to correct—they might plead extenuation; but where ultimate aim is to diſparagize, they renounce every plea to toleration, every claim to countenance.

It may flatter the illiberal and gratify the evil-minded, to ſee their ſuperiors aſſaulted by the malevolent and traduced by the vile. Yet did they reflect, that to calumniate the unexceptionable, is not, to compliment the vicious, their invidious happineſs would be weak as the cobweb, and their mutable ſatisfaction be changed to ſelf-hatred.

Not a few of mankind, are unable to determinate between ſcurrility and wit; by ſuch clodpates and plodders their talents may be admired, and their futile compoſitions applauded—to ſuch ſuffrages they are welcome—they are really unenviable. In return they may beſmear their patrons with the titles of patriotic, generous and enlightened; and reciprocate the obligation, as the alms-giver is paid by the humility of the mendicant. I am willing to allow them a grade amongſt reptiles, ſuch whoſe ſtings are not deadly. Their attempt to ſting the honorable perſon alluded to, avails as a crucifix oppoſed to a hurricane, or a relic to an erruption of Ætna. Happy are the people who are bleſt in ſuch diſpenſers of juſtice as this, our favored province is—and baſe is the wretch, who attempts to contaminate them.

Dear Panca,

I LEERWHILE revelled in the hope, that my preceding argument was fully apagogical, but diſappointment ſtill awaits the almoſt every hope of man! my reaſoning I find is wholly loſt, and your conviction quite inflexible.

I little apprehended Couſin, that my familiarity could have offended you—who, took the firſt fraternal ſtep; and muſt confeſs myſelf your pupil in many things. You firſt taught me to be familiar—and twice obliged me to be ridiculous (in my own opinion at leaſt.) I confeſs myſelf, little indeed of the debonair, thanks to my ſtars for lighting me to more ſubſtantial endowments, although I happened not to be educated in the ſchool of ——— I ſtill poſſeſs a native civility which is, and ever will be, equable to all.

The Sancho Pancas are an indocile ſteady race—a ſelf judging ſyſtematic ſet of men, who ever ſee autopically—neither baitologiſts nor barometers.—Yourſelf excepted (if you are really one of which I hugely doubt) I never knew a Pancan who in the circumſcribed period of two ſhort weeks could ſo apoſtatiſe—could charge with a crime of hideous deformity, and declare your attachment for the perpetrator warm and ſincere. Pancan affections, Alphonſo, are infinitely chaſte, and indiviſible between the perpetrator of a crime of higheſt intrinſic turpitude, and the morally mutilated ſufferer; ſuch erratic and vermicular affections are incompatible with the Pancan name, none but a ſpurious Panca can poſſeſs them. Of motives which frequently induce ſilence, I ſhall ſimply name one of powerful and general operation, to wit: the imprudence of diſobliging the living; that prudence cannot be too much commended which keeps in ſight the ſtrong magnetic douceurs; it argues penetration and ſhould be ranked with "warm and ſincere attachment."

You ſtep forward you ſay, Alphonſo, "to defend the living and not diſturb the aſhes of the dead," how well you have done this a reference to your firſt eſſay will determine. To defend what never was attacked! ſuperlative abſurdity—Alphonſo Panca entered the liſt againſt Alphonſo Panca. The doctrine of "perſonality" you wholly explode; what did you come forward to vindicate, my quondam relative? imperſonality?—ſtill connected—ſtill adhering to, and ſtill expounding the original text.

Does the colour fine, or endleſs diverſity of form in human beings render them the leſs human? Does the mental diſtinctions or ſpecific variety of diſpoſition in tale bearers render them the leſs tale bearers? why cavil Alphonſo? why be a ſceptic? when he that runs may read—why bewilder yourſelf in the maze of juſtification or crimination? I have already cautioned you againſt it; why labor to promote an inveſtigation which ſympathy for others ſorrows ſhould obliterate. Who ſpeaks or who thinks of the unhappy cataſtrophe, but with ſentiments of ſympathetic pity and reſpect for the ſpirited ſurviving party. What attack is it, which in the pride of mental proweſs, or impulſe of officious gratitude, you come forward to defend? would you not acquire credit full as ample by (Quixote like) attacking a WIND MILL? as by your efforts to parry a chimerical attack; the very atrophy and vapid idea of your own diſtempered mind.

Reflect my friend on what you have already written; preſerve connection; either write for ſome laudable aim or write no more. Now Alphonſo, as I really think your meaning good, I will ſpeak ſeriouſly to you: your flowing periods and flowery ſtyle are loſt for want of better matter. A pageant may at firſt ſight, inſpire admiration—contempt as ſoon ſucceeds; haply you have deceived yourſelf, and eeſwhile thought that you were reaſoning.—Were I not weary of expoſing abſurdity I might reply to a part of your laſt to this effect:

"Brother is arms, dear don," or what you pleaſe; ſhould you be "encountering Patroclus," and Patroclus encountering whom reynard met, not in a "borrowed armour," but borrowed ſkin—if ſo ———. And apropos to "logical ineſt;" recollect my dear don, your having ſaid I had aſſimilated claſſes widely differing "by a falſe aſſociation of ideas;" this poſtulatory and truly untenable poſition of yours, gave riſe to that ludicrous incongruity—where reaſoning is inefficient and what it cannot ſap, ridicule and craſſitude may ſometimes batter.

Your "Jeruſalem nag its gait is flight—pardon the bull," more meaning than expreſſion—moſt rare quod libet, and illuſtrative of your context.

Reperuſe my preceding leſſon—I did not ominouſly preface an expiring acquaintance—I ſolely approved of your rekindling that blaze of friendſhip, of which you ſeemed to fear the blaſt of calumny threathened the extinction. We know each other not, Alphonſo, I think however, we are not relations. My genius (if any I have) is better turned to aphoriſm than periphraſe, my exordiums ſeldom exceeds in length my ſubject. Your genius is adapted to writing handſome nothings.—Your ſubjects are all exordium. If you Alphonſo ſtill remain incorrigible, this is the laſt moment of time that SANCHO will ever pander to your nugatory wantonneſs. When SANCHO writes again, it ſhall be to reprehend the deleterious, or praiſe where praiſe is juſtly due.

If ere again I wield the paſſive quill
the good I'll praiſe and paint the exiſting ill;
No Panca's folly, ſhall arreſt its courſe,
Yet folly may, and vice ſhall feel its force.
In virtue's ſchool, my earlier years were paſſ'd,

Sole earthly bliss, which now mature tastes,
Hoftile to vice, unceasing war I'll wage,
And lash the vicious, in my every page.
Nature form'd fools, in her the failure lies,
Yet fools are faulty, believing they are wise.
Confoling blindnefs—given to comfort man,
Thy wifdom nature, who can fully fcan.
The minnow knows, no monfter in the Nile;
Nor knows the fhrimp, but it's a crocodile;
Speed more than her's, the turtle knows of none,
And every fool, is his own Solomon.
Pleas'd with himfelf, he others next would pleafe,
And pregnant folly feels deliver'd, eafe:
Fermenting nonfenfe prompts the fcribbling vein,
The dire teneficus of his fever'd brain.
The prefs, a midwife to his noddle's fire,
An Oglio offspring's, born to blefs its fire;
Melange, hotchpotch, wit fricafeed in pafte,
A difh well fuited to the makers tafte:
Claffic precifion, periods foft and fweet,
A witling monfter, wanting head and feet;
Now acrid, attic, now all melting foft—
Now gently low, now foaring high aloft.
Here 'tis profound; conception lags behind,
In vain we fearch—the track of wit to find,
The fubtle fpirit fhifts from point to place;
Evafive ftill. Tis'd fancy quits the chace.
Our Litany might be amended thus,
From witling fools, Good Lord deliver us.
All men, of folly who in labour lie;
Grant they may live, but let the offfpring die.
Of fuch as wander o'er the land of wit,
Save them from falling into folly's pit.
If Humours waters they fhould ever tempt,
Oh fteer them round, the headland of contempt.
Againft folly's breakers, be thou their refort,
And moor them fafe—in kind oblivion's port.
POPE. Could thy genius on my being light,
A leffer Dunciad foon thy friend fhould write.
The learn'd zoologift—bard of mutton pies,
Who taught the eagle—paftry-mongers cries.
Owls, geefe and turkies namely full in turn,
What fcribbling foe, in his hot fconce muft burn.
Sir Soker, Pifo, Proclus, Cato too,
The tilting Pierce—all the motley crew,
Should taffe my wormwood—temper'd high with gall,
The fame arcanum—would reftore them all—
Their fcribbling thirft—one potion fhould allay,
And Public patience have a RESTING DAY.

SANCHO.

FOR THE ORACLE.

Meffrs. Printers,

I AM a fubfcriber to the Conftellation, and muft expreis my deep regret that one of its Luminaries has announced either its extinction or elongation. I am of opinion that fome dire revolution has happened in the Conftellatory fyftem, and fear the whole cluiter may experience a meteorical fate. It perplexes me with doubt, that if the metamorphofis fhould happen, whether the wandering orb will continue to be luminous or not, or in which of the horizons it may haply fettle? whether a new fign in the zo-liac, or an ignisfatuus may not be the confequence? Pleafe requeft of the aftronomer "Amicus," that developer of preternaturals and conftruer of figns and omens, to let his opinion of this matter be made known. May I fuggeft the propriety of having diaries kept at convenient places for this "firft year of the new century;" and an earneft attention to lunar and other celeftial appearances, until the ultimatum of this ftrange disjunction be afcertained. If a thirteenth fign be introduced, that it be denominated Sylveftrarious. I muft confefs my great furprife that this PHENOMENA fhould have paffed unnoticed in the Upper-Canada almanac.

I remain gentlemen,
Your puzzled humble fervant,
PUG.

Foreign News.

HAMBURGH, Nov. 5.

IT appears from articles under the heads of Donauefchingen, Ulm, Ravenfburg and Mayence, from the 25th to 29th Oct. that the hoftile armies are about entering into winter quarters.—The Ruffians in the neighbourhood of Ulm and the Danube—the Auftrians about Donauefchingen, and the French about Coblentz and Treves.

VIENNA, Oct. 28.

The exchange of couriers within this fortnight between Peterfburg and Vienna, has been more frequent than ever. It is faid that the object is an extraordinary reinforcement of Ruffian auxiliaries. Befides the Ruffians already on their march, the court of Peterfburgh has determined to fend 150,000 men againft France, a great part of whom are to commence their march in Jan. next.

Of 2 corps of 60,000 men heretofore fpoken of, 24000 have already arrived in Gallitia.

The ftates of Hungary have again determined to fend further reinforcements into the field if neceffary. The Hungarian nobleman, Suetles, alone, at his own expence, furnifhes 100 riflemen.

To-day's Court Gazette contains a report of Gen. Melas, from Marozzo, of the 14th inft. refpecting the events near Cuneo. The enemy had the important village Bainette in poffeffion. General Mittowfky drove him out of it on the 13th, and maintained his pofition altho' the enemy made two attempts to diflodge him. The enemy's total lofs is 1000 men—ours 15 killed, 116 wounded and 54 miffing. A whole battalion of the enemy, confifting of 500 men, was cut off, and 350 men, befides 16 officers, were taken prifoners.

From ITALY, Oct. 20.

Admiral Nelfon has embarked 1000 men for a fecret expedition; and it is faid, he himfelf will fail with his fleet to the Genoefe coaft.

LINDAU, Oct. 25.

The united armies of Field Marfhal Suwarrow and Korfakow are principally ftill in our neighbourhood; only feveral regiments having moved by way of Bregentz towards Rheineck. The Ruffian head quarters are ftill here. Provifions in this city and whole neighbourhood are daily becoming fcarcer and dearer.

The report of Coire being in poffeffion of the French is unfounded. The army of the Archduke is fecurely ftationed in the vicinity of Schaffhaufen without interruption.

HANNAU, Oct. 29.

Report fays gen. Maffena has croffed the Rhine in the Grifons, and is making progrefs, but no date is mentioned.

Frequent fkirmifhes take place before Philipfburg. The French ftormed the outworks of that city three times on the 21ft. but were every time repulfed.

At Frankfort, five Jewifh houfes have ftopped payment, and feveral others followed at Aachen, &c.

The Ruffian troops on the frontiers of South Pruffia, are aflembling at Riga, according to the public journals, for a new expedition.

PARIS, Oct. 23.

Buonaparte's baggage waggons, on their way from Frejus, were attacked and robbed of conderable treafure, by 25 armed robbers, who alfo bore off many important papers.

Berthier, it is faid, is appointed minifter of war, and Monge minifter of the interior.

A fhip with 250 French foldiers and 20 officers belonging to the garrifon of Corfu, have been taken by an Algerine corfair, and liberated again.

In Bourdeaux and other ports, an embargo has been laid on account of the projected failing of the Breft fleet.

The intelligence from Lyons, that 50 fail of fhipping have appeared off Frejus, with the remains of the French Egyptian army, is falfe, as general Buonaparte has concluded a treaty of amity with the Porte relative to the evacuation of Egypt.

United States.

PHILADELPHIA, January 16.

A report has juft originated upon pretty refpectable authority, that a cartel from Rochelle (in France) has arrived at Newport, in which Mr. Dupont, formerly appointed conful general to the U. States, is paffenger, who is the bearer of communications to our government from the French republic.

NEW YORK, January 20.

Highly Intereiting.

On Saturday laft we were favored by a friend with a fhort extract of a letter from a houfe in St. Thomas's, and we have haftened to give it to our fubfcribers in an extra fheet; we have now received a full extract from this letter, which we offer to the public without any other comment, than that we are fatisfied from the refpectability of the fource of the information, and from the date of the departure of the veffel from France, which brings us 20 days later than any communication direct from France, hitherto received, that there muft be fome grounds for the report.

"St. Thomas's, 26th Dec. '99.

"Great news clofe this year. God grant it be true. Buonaparte, coalefced with Sieyes and Roger Ducos, has overturned the republican government, by fufpending till next March, the 2 houfes, the conftitution and the directory. This triumvirate aflumed the denomination of National Conful—they feleted 25 members of each houfe to compofe a Confular National Affembly. A fingle moment was fufficient to deftroy the old coloffus, and to eftablifh and confolidate their newly aflumed authority."

"It is faid they have promifed peace within three months! this is a very flattering allurement to the people, and fo much credited in France, that Meffrs. Sageran and Gantier have fent orders to Guadaloupe, to keep their veffels at that ifland, until peace takes place. This blow has almoft coft Buonaparte his life, for while he was delivering his fpeech to the legiflative body on diffolving it, two piftols were fired at him, but miffed him—a dagger was alfo thruft at him, and would have ftabbed him, had not a grenadier parried it off, and received the blow in his arm.

"The new agents for Guadaloupe were in France when the above happened, and departed in haffe for fear of being recalled, and have fince arrived there with a large frigate and a floop of war; three veffels have alfo arrived there from France, one of which brings news to the 17th of Nov.—they all agree in thefe particulars. It is generally believed in France that a monarchial conftitution will be the conlequence of thefe events and that the new rulers have it in contemplation to put it in force in a fhort time.—But who will be the king?—What is their defign on that fubject? If it is not Louis the eighteenth, we cannot flatter ourfelves to have reached the end of our misfortunes, or of the difturbances in France. Let us patiently await, whatever the fovereign of all kings has determined in his infinite wifdom, and endeavor to haften the moment of his mercy, by the moft fervent prayers."

Captain Lee, arrived here from Lifbon, which latter place he left the 22d Nov. informs, that letters from Breft, dated nine days previous to his failing, mentioned that the French and Spanifh fleets had embarked 50,000 troops, and hourly expected orders to fail.—Deftination unknown.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, February 22.

Extract of a letter from Augufta, (Eaftern diftrict) of the 12th inft. to a gentleman in this town.

"Accounts have reached us, that Englifh half-pay officers are allowed to accept of commiffions in the American army, and retain their half-pay. The inference to be drawn, is the clofeft union between the Anglo and tranfatlantic Anglos."

The French general Brune, who was oppofed to the Duke of York in Holland, we are informed, was originally a Printer. Be this as it may, it is evident, from the refiftance which he has made to the allies, that he is a diftinguifhed type of his new profeffion. [Lon. paper.

"A perfon who ftyles himfelf 'James Boddington,' in an advertifement publifhed in a Norfolk paper, profeffes to have difcovered longitude on the 7th of Jan. 1799, which he was prevented from making known at an earlier period by a long ficknefs; but fays that he is now prepared, provided fuitable encouragement be given, to develope the principles on a very plain and eafy fcale. The advertifement is dated "Navy-yard, Gofport, Dec. 28th."

A London paper fays, the Emperor of Ruffia lately prefented Field Marfhal Suwarrow with his picture fet in brilliants, accompanied by the following billet:

"My likenefs hanging from your breaft will fhew to the whole world how fat a fovereign acknowledges the great atchievements, that have added fplendour to his government."

N. B. The arrangement made with JOSEPH EDWARDS, Esq; to receive and distribute Letters and Newspapers, is merely to accommodate the persons to whom they are directed.

If every person going to the office for letters and papers, will recollect, that Mr. Edwards has all this trouble without any emolument or profit, (except the satisfaction of obliging his friends and the public) they will most certainly go prepared with ready change to take them up.

Gentlemen residing at a considerable distance from the office, would do well to engage some person to take up their letters and papers (a great many of which are now in the office) and prevent them being returned as dead to the General Post Office.

EXTRACT

From the minutes of Council, February 4, 1800.

The Solicitor General

Having complained to the Board of an article inserted in the Gazette of last Saturday, which he conceives to be an indirect censure of himself, & of Mr. Weeks who was of Counsel with the Crown, on the trial of Reuben Riggs for felony, at the session of Oyer and Terminer, lately held at this place; and having laid before the Board the deposition of one John Dennis, the person on whose oath the prosecution was founded, The Board declared itself to be perfectly satisfied that the Solicitor General had done his duty in prosecuting Riggs for felony: And in order to do away the effect of the article complained of, it Orders, That the deposition of the said Dennis, and a copy of this minute be printed in the next Gazette.

By order of the Board,
ALEX. M'DONELL,
Confidential Clerk.

Home District, York. To wit: } On this second day of November, 1799, personally appeared before me, William Willcocks, Esq; one of his Majesty's Justices of the Peace, John Dennis, farmer, and made oath, that on or about Tuesday the eighth day of October last, he overtook Reuben Riggs, of York Garrison, carpenter, near the mouth of the River Humber, on a raft, on which raft were several articles of lumber, the property of deponent, which were feloniously stolen from deponent's ship yard in said river. Said John Dennis further swears, that he has lost out of said ship yard, several spikes, nails, and other articles of iron, besides many oak and pine planks of different dimensions, and verily believes they were feloniously stolen by the said Rueben Riggs; and therefore prays he may be dealt with as the law directs, and further saith not.

PARIS, Nov. 17.

Central Administration of the Department of the Seine to their Fellow Citizens.

"CITIZENS,

"IT is not in vain that you have taken part with us in our hopes. It is not in vain that you have placed so honorable a confidence in the measures taken to secure a better order of things. The law passed at St. Cloud by the Legislative Body, in the night between the 9th and 10th, and which was proclaimed yesterday in this commune, affords a certain pledge of your prosperity. How much must not this prosperity appear secured to you, when you see citizen Sieyes, Roger Ducos, and Buonaparte, invested with the ancient and commanding title of "Consuls of the Republic" in the plenitude of directorial power.

"These citizens, you well know, have the courage that distinguishes virtuous magistrates, and are worthy by their genious, their talents, and their found integrity, of your entire confidence. With what satisfaction do you not behold your consuls specially charged "to organize all the parts of the administration, to re-establish internal tranquillity, and to procure a solid and honorable peace."—(Art. 3, of the Law.)

"In fine, you will find all the pledges you could desire for your security in the formation and composition of the two committees, chosen in each of the Councils, and charged to prepare changes to be made in the organic dispositions of the Constitution, the vices and inconveniences of which have been felt from experience. (Art. 2.)

"We ought also to place before your eyes the text of the 22th Article of the same law. It will serve to inform you of the nature & object of the changes pointed out in the preceding Articles. These changes can have only for their end to consolidate, guarantee, and inviolably consecrate the sovereignty of the French people, the republic one and indivisible, the representative system, the division of its powers, liberty, equality, security, property.

"This law, citizens, is the pledge of public felicity. It provides also, as we announced, all the means for its restoration. The public treasury has already received offers of money.—Those who hesitated to make the sacrifices which the country expects from all its children announce with eagerness, we may reckon on their devotion: and those who in consequence of our long misfortunes have been placed in a situation that renders it impossible for them to make offers, expect with a just confidence an amelioration of their fate.

"Public faith will be no more violated. All the sources of industry and commerce will spring up again, with the signal proofs of public confidence, and each of us is at length going to find in his labors, the means only of providing his subsistence, but of increasing his enjoyments and his fortune. Address from the Legislative Body to the French People.

"FRENCHMEN,

"St. Cloud, Nov. 10.

"The republic has again escaped the rage of the factions; your faithful representatives have broken the poignard in the hands of the paracides: but after having averted the blows with which you were menaced, they felt it their duty to prevent an eternal agitation, and taking council from their duty & their courage only, they presume to hope that they have shewn themselves worthy of you.

"Frenchmen, your liberties torn, still bloody with the crimes of the revolutionary government, we shall seek an asylum in the arms of a constitution which promises at least some repose.

"But the seditious have attacked without ceasing the weak parts of our constitution, and the constitutional regime has been but a continuation of the revolution in every sense in which the different parties themselves have interpreted it. Those even who wished the most sincerely to maintain that constitution, have been forced to violate it every instant that they might save it from perishing.

"From this state of instability of the government, has resulted greater instability still in legislation, and the rights the most sacred of social man, have been delivered up to the caprice of faction and events.

"It is time to put an end to this tumult, it is time to give a solid guarantee to the liberty of the citizens, to the sovereignty of the people, to the independence of the constitutional powers, to the republic itself, of which the name has too often served to consecrate the violation of all principles: it is time that the Great Nation should have a government worthy of itself; a government firm and wise, which can give a speedy and solid peace, that you may enjoy true happiness. For the purpose of arriving more rapidly at this end, a provisional government is instituted.—Frenchmen! rally round your magistrates! soldiers of liberty, pursue the course of your victories, you will atchieve the conquest of peace, that you may soon return to the midst of your brethren, and receive from the public gratitude the honors and rewards reserved for your glorious labours."

Paris, Nov. 18. The minister of police conservation, to protection, to liberal purposes, will resume their influence by the dispersion of incendiaries who oppressed the council, and who, tho' they rendered themselves the most odious, never ceased to be the most contemptible of mankind."

Council of Elders. Sitting of Nov. 10.

A letter was received from the secretary general of the directory to the following effect :—

Citizen Representatives,

"I have not been able to receive the messenger of state dispatched by the council of elders to the executive directory. Four of the members have sent in their resignation—the fifth is in custody, by the order of gen. Buonaparte. There no longer exists a directory.

"Health and respect,

(Signed) LAGARDE."

The council decreed that this letter should be sent to the council of 500.

After the interval of about a quarter of an hour, a tumultuous movement was manifested in the council. The arrival of gen. Buonaparte was announced. He requested permission to speak, having important information to give.

There was instantly profound silence.

Buonaparte—"Representatives of the people, you are not in a common crisis; you tread upon a vulcano ready to destroy you. Yesterday Paris was in a most profound tranquillity. I have united all my brethren in arms, in the execution of the measures which you have adopted. I have given proofs of my devotion to the republic, and the country has not had a more zealous defender than I have proved myself. This day, however, I am surrounded with calumny, & covered with reproaches and disgust.

"I hear circulated around me the words Cromwell, military government, &c. Had I wished to establish a military government, I should long since have attempted that enterprize. Since I returned to Paris, I have been solicited by some factions to seize upon the authority of the state. I declare that even propositions have been made to me by Barras and Moulin, to overthrow the government and to assume the direction of affairs—I resisted these insinuations, because I was of no party, of no coterie—I communicated these projects to several representatives. I united my sentiments to those of the council of elders, and have only accepted the command entrusted to me, with the view of resigning it after having triumphed over the enemies of the republic. Think not then that you see in me a vile intriguer, I know no great coteries but the French people.—But I declare the representatives of the people must not be divided: on the contrary, unite your wisdom, & whatever your firmness shall decide, I shall see faithfully executed. I shall be but an arm devoted to the safety of the republic—the safety of liberty and equality."

Inglet—"And the constitution."

Buonaparte—"The constitution! Is it now a guarantee for the French people? You have violated it on the 18th Fructidor; you have violated it on the 22d Floreal; you have violated it on the 30th Prairial—It is nothing but an empty sound, which serves the purpose of every faction. All the rights of the people have been violated. It is time that you should defend them against every attack. Consider what ought to be done for the protection of liberty. If you do not save it, you and your children will be disgraced in the eyes of posterity—You are accountable for its safety, act—and if the execution of your decrees be opposed, I shall appeal to my brave companions in arms, and to my fortune."

The Consuls to the French. Paris, Nov. 12.

The constitution of third year has perished. It knew neither how to protect your rights or support itself. Multiplied attacks derived for ever of the respect of the people. Heinous and ambitious factions divided the republic between them. France at length approached to the last term of a general disorganization: The patriots have made themselves heard. Every thing that could injure you has been removed. Every thing that could serve you, every thing that remained pure in the national representation, is united under the banners of liberty.—Frenchmen! The republic thus re established, and replaced in Europe, in the rank which she should never have lost, will proceed to realize all the hopes of citizens, and will accomplish its glorious destinies. Take with us the oath which we have made, "to be faithful to the republic, one and indivisible, founded upon equality, liberty and the representative system.

By the Consuls of the Republic.

Roger Ducos, Buonaparte, Sieyes.

Paris, Nov. 16. The most perfect calm prevails in Paris. The following proclamation of gen. Buonaparte has been every where posted up.

PROCLAMATION.

Buonaparte, General in Chief, to his soldiers.

18 Brumaire, Nov. 9.

"Soldiers,

"The extraordinary decree of the council of ancients is conformable to the 102d article of the constitutional act. It places in me the command of the city and the army.

"I have accepted the appointment, to second the measures which the council is about to take, and which are all in favor of the people.

"The republic has been badly governed these two years. You have hoped that my return would put an end to so many evils. You have celebrated it with an union which imposes upon me the duties I fulfill. You will fulfill yours, and second your general with the energy, the firmness, and the confidence I have always beheld in you.

Buonaparte. Berthier.

It is said that Barras has been arrested and sent to the Temple. Several more arrests have taken place. Daubermesnel's, "We only want three daggers to put an end to all this."

Buonaparte yesterday morning reviewed the troops and received the oaths of the veteran soldiers in the garden of Luxembourg.

PARIS, Nov. 13.

THE law which regulate the provisional form of the new government, was proclaimed last night in Paris, with much solemnity. Although every thing continues in appearance calm, the conspirators of the council of 500 do not consider themselves as yet defeated. They hold meetings. They are preparing a pretended protestation; but perhaps they rely more upon some ill-affairs than their other manœuvres.—But the police is informed of their meetings, and watches them narrowly. The grenadier who saved Buonaparte's life, dined with him yesterday. The wife of the consul made him a present of a diamond worth 2000 crowns.

September 21.

The consul for the day does not leave the consular palace during the day. Every morning the commandant of Paris and the minister, receives a letter from the secretaries of the consulate, informing them of the name of the person to whom they are to address themselves during the day.

Letters from Bourdeaux, Lyons, Nantz and Strasburg state, that the news of the new revolution was received there with general applause and acclamations of vive la republique!

Letters from Strasburg, of the 15th instant, inform us that the march of the troops towards the Rhine, is pressed forward with great activity. The greater part of the army is arrived on the borders of that river. Chabran's division is at Basle, and has been considerably reinforced. The divisions of Mesnard, Lorge and Gazin occupy the Rhine from the Frickthal to the lake of Constance. Soult's division is posted in the Rheinthal; those of Mertier and of Lomion, still continue to make progress in the Grison country, and advance towards the Voralberg. Tureau's division covers the Valais. The fine division, commanded by general Humbert, composed in a great measure of grenadiers form all the demi-brigades, and 10,000 strong has just quitted the environs of Zurich, in order to approach the Rhine, and thus it is said to make their way into the Frickthal.—A general attack seems to be meditated.

Sieyes is said to have a new scheme of a constitution which he is about to propose; that he had hinted many of his ideas upon this subject when the constitution of the 3d year was under consideration, but that he conceived that the public mind was not then sufficiently ripe and prepared for the complete development of his system of social order. It is supposed that he will avail himself of the present auspicious moment to present the French nation with a constitution well calculated to secure its confidence and promote its welfare.

According to letters received from Copenhagen of the 12th Brumaire, the financial college, with a view to relieve the present urgent want of money, has stipulated that the merchants, by giving security on their property, may be entitled to receive the loan of money from government. For this purpose it is said that a new issue of bank notes is to take place.

DARMSTADT, Nov. 5.

According to the accounts of French officers, the fortreſs of Phillipſburgh is entirely blockaded, and has already been ſummoned. Though the garriſon has made ſome ſorties, yet they have been obliged to evacuate the village of Rheinheim, cloſe to the fortreſs. The beſieged corps is encamped in earth huts. The commandant of the fortreſs, count Salm, has inundated a conſiderable diſtrict round the fortreſs.

Yeſterday an imperial courier from Vienna paſſed through Groegerau (between Darmſtadt and Oppenheim) on his way for Paris.

General Lecourl is ſaid to have advanced by way of Bruchſal, beyond Heilbroun, and towards the Enz, as far as Pforzheim. Fieldmarſhall lieutenant prince Charles of Lorraine is ſaid to occupy a ſtrong poſition in the mountains of the black foreſt.

A French half brigade, which had advanced into the Odenwald, has been forced to retreat with the loſs of two field pieces and 200 hundred priſoners.

LECH, Nov. 2.

On the 30th ult. in the evening an officer of the Ruſſian ſtaff, from Lindau, arrived at Augſburgh with a letter from fieldmarſhall Suwarrow to the magiſtrates, informing them that he had altered his reſolution of quartering the Ruſſian army along the Danube; that they ſhould go into cantonments between the rives Iller and Lech, and his headquarters were not to be at Riedlingen, but Augſburg. Ruſſian baggage and a conſiderable number of officers, arrived yeſterday at the latter place, were Suwarrow is likewiſe expected to arrive to day or to morrow. The grand duke Conſtantine, the whole of the general ſtaff, and every thing elſe belonging to the head quarters, with a garriſon of ſome hundred Coſſacks, will arive at Augſburg at the ſame time.—The prince of Conde requeſted that city to admit at leaſt 60 officers of his corps. Count Lehrbach is arrived at Auſburg, and lodges in the houſe of Baron Lieberti. Seven other envoys, it is ſaid, are epected there. The meeting of the States of the circle of Suabia which was convened at Augſburg, may now be ſhifted to Eſtingen, or ſome other place.

LONDON, Nov 23.

It is reported at the Hague, that Holland is to be made neutral by the negociations of Suſſia; and that the French are to evacuate Holland, in 6 weeks after the Engliſh and Ruſſians—Hamburgh veſſels are no longer embargoed in Ruſſian ports.

November 27.

The plan of the union of Ireland is ſettled. 4 Iriſh Archbiſhops are to ſit permanently in the Imperial Parliament. Cork and Dublin are to ſend two members each. The preſent members of the Iriſh parliament are to ſit with the preſent Britiſh parliament, and no new election is to take place till both parliaments are diſſolved or expire.

November 28.

The Chouans are ſaid to be 20000 ſtrong in the department of Finiſterre. they are maſters of Quimper Corealn. The French conſuls have ſent influential characters to negociate with them.

November 29.

The two firſt of the Hamburgh mails that were due arrived yeſterday. Their contents have, for the moſt part, been anticipated by the laſt advices from France. They, however, confirm the ſuſpicion we entertained of the blockade of Phillipſburgh being raiſed, in conſequence of a defeat experienced by the French army of the Rhine. The conteſt was on the 3d inſt.—very ſharp, and the reſult favorable to the Imperialiſts: the French having been defeated and forced to retreat to Plotevheim.—Several other actions were afterwards fought, with the ſame termination, and on the 9th the blockade of Phillipſburg was raiſed. The loſs of the French is ſuppoſed to be between 2 and 3,000 men. The French accounts of the progreſs of the army of Maſſena in the Griſon country is confirmed. The enemy have penetrated to Reichenau, Feldburgh and Kaldenſtein, and the Imperial troops have evacuated Coir; but the archduke Charles is ſo advantageouſly poſted that the republican chief has hitherto been prevented from commencing any offenſive operations againſt his highneſs' army in Suabia. This prince is about to remove his head quarters to Beberach, and his troops are to occupy the poſitions which have been abandoned by the Ruſſians, who have gone into cantonments between the Iller, Danube and the Leach. Their return to Ruſſia is ſhortly expected to take place, and if ſo, the reports of pacific overtures and negociations, which contin to be circulated in different parts of the continent, may be conſidered as not altogether void of foundation. The accounts from Italy are not of ſo late a date as thoſe brought by the French journals. The Vienna Gazette contains ſome details of the operations in that country. From the 26th to the 29th the enemy were repulſed in ſeveral attacks, when they at length advanced with ſucceſs againſt Poſtano, and Savigliano, and forced the Auſtrians to raiſe the ſiege at Coni. According to ſome advices, the republicans occupy the country in the neighborhood of Tortona. The Peterſburgh gazette contains the official report made by general Korſakow of the battles fought in Switzerland on the 25th and 26th of September; and under the head of Hamburgh are given ſome particulars of the ſubſequent retreat of gen. Suwarrow to the Griſons. Some private letters ſtate, that Mr. Wickham is negociating a treaty for 18,000 Bavarians to be taken into the pay of England.

Diſpatches were yeſterday received from the court of Vienna, on the receipt of which the cabinet miniſters held a conſultation at lord Grenville's office.

The proportion of French and Dutch priſoners to be returned to their reſpective countries, agreeable to the terms of the late convention in North Holland, has been finally determined as follows:—6500 French and 1500 Dutch; the former to conſiſt chiefly of ſailors, of which the enemy appear to be much in want.

On Tueſday 60,000l. was received on the account of the French priſoners by the agent, citizen Niou, who is ſtill continued in his official ſituation in this country, notwithſtanding the reports to the contrary.

An addition of two and a half per cent on all the taxes now in exiſtence is to form a part of the ways and means for the enſuing year.

Gen. Korſakow thus concludes his official letter to the emperor Paul, of his expulſion from Zurich:

"I cannot give your majeſty an exact ſtatement of our loſs, but I ſuppoſe in the courſe of two days we had about 3000 killed and wounded. Our field artillery is entirely carried off.—Generals Sackin, Lokoſhin and Morkow, being ſeverely wounded, had not ſtrength ſufficient to leave Zurich, where they remained, as well as ſome privates, and I have written to the enemy's general that he could not conſider them as priſoners of war. The general's ſtaff, and ſuperior officers, have acquired great honor on both days of battle; they were always in front of the troops, for which reaſon more of them were killed and wounded, in proportion, than privates. Their names as well as an accurate ſtatement of our loſs in privates, I ſoon ſhall have the honor of tranſmitting to your Majeſty.

GENTLEMEN,

BEING a Britiſh ſubject, a friend to truth, & unprejudiced in favor of any government, I find that I was not ſingular in the anxiety which I ſuffer for the fate of my worthy friend PORCUPINE. This man, though perſonally unknown to me, I bluſh not to ſay I admire. It is well known that at a time when party ſpirit was at its flow—when a blind and deſtructive partiality for French principles pervaded the majority of Americans—when an implicit acquieſcence, and a blind approbation was yielded to every Frenchified chimera—when Americans tacitly renounced the freedom of thinking—when they became literally French echoes—the paſſive organs of conveying the fraternal banditti's contaminating opinions. I ſay it is a well-known fact, that at this time, this ſelf-ſame WILLIAM COBBETT, with a ſpirit peculiar to a free-born generous Briton, unſupported and alone, and with an energy, the offspring of the nobleſt motives; with a freedom of enquiry—with the moſt forcible expoſition of ſtubborn and incontrovertible truths and with unparralleled ſucceſs; ſtood forth the CHAMPION of true liberty, and drew from American eyes the veil of voluntary ſlaviſh puſillanimity. What is that liberty Americans, for which ye contended ſo furiouſly with your affectionate parent? was it for the liberty of tranſferring your political faith? your verſatile opinions, and unproſtituted wills to the guidance of a horde of European heathens? Was it for the glorious priviledge of ſubſcribing to gallic abſurdity? Was it for the ſupreme fraternal honor of worſhipping and wearing the national cockade, the freebooter's and caitiff's fraternal badge? Deluded people!—LOUIS was eerwhile your great, your good ALLY—the god and patron of your high prized liberty. Strange revolution!—Down with the tyrant, (was lately the American yell,) "deſtroy the deſpot—annihilation to all deſpotiſm—may republican feet trample on royal necks—may liberty and equality rival the ſun in luſtre and influence—may the prince of peace and the prince of the air, burn with fraternal fire—may St. Peter and Cerberus, may the Celeſtials and Pandemoniums ſhake the fraternal hand, may they become the freeborn citizens of the univerſal republic—may every head which teems not with republican hydrophobia, be a drinking cup to the ſons of liberty—may the myrmidons of loyalty be ſlaves to the martyrs of freedom."—According to univerſal American prediction, this was the time that "George and his Slaves—Kings and Slavery," were to be eradicated. The Engliſh nation to become "a hoſt of miſerable bankrupts," the Engliſh patriots were to "riſe tryumphant the national flag to wave at St. James', and liberty and equality pervade the world." How juſt were your preſages—how preciſe and how true your prophecyings. GREAT GEORGE God bleſs his majeſty? "his Slaves," the loyal, generous, loving ſubjects of the beſt of Sovereigns—his "bankrupt" nation, if a tax of a farthing per head was levied on their hunting-dogs, it would exceed in value a tax of ten per cent on all the property in America. The "Engliſh patriots"—the tedicious ſnarling few, are fain to kennel in Botany Bay and other "lands of liberty and equality"—the national flag ſtill greatly waves in national ports, and liberty and equality, those infernal hounds, bid fair to die a natural death. Ye freeborn bedlamites, this paroxism of folly once paſſed, you now enjoy a lucid interval: the applications, the preſcriptions of your phyſician, ye deſpiſe and PORCUPINE is perſecuted! Had your famous modern Eſculapus' (RUSH.s) treatment of the yellow fever been as ſucceſsful as Doctor Cobbett's (PORCUPINE's) treatment of the Citizen Fever, he might with juſtice have proſecuted his cotemporary for a libel.

It is allowed by the faithful that SATAN (or as a faithful American republican would expreſs it) the "Old Serpent," appears in all ſhapes; at the ſame time that they confeſs but one mode of exorciſm, the faithful of the faculty allow that the yellow fever attacks in all ſhapes; and from undoubted experience, they find but one effectual mode of curing it radically, and giving their patients a paſſport to the regions of reſt! The renouned Waſhington was thus recommended to a ſeat in the realms of repoſe!!!—And this truth rendered indubitable, that inceſſant purgation and copious phlebotomizing will ſend a man to ſleep with his fathers!

This new light which beams on the Materia Medica may, without punning, be called the RUSH LIGHT; and as every improvement in ſcience entail honor on the author, I would recommend his ſtatue to a place in the Pantheon, with this inſcription on the pedeſtal: "He cured the yellow fever, and cauſed PETER PORCUPINE to renounce 5000 dollars!"

THE ROSE-BUD,

A FABLE;

Addreſſed to a FRIEND, on the DEATH of her eldeſt CHILD.

A ROSE-BUD once, in infant bloom,
Its parent's earlieſt pride,
Met from the canker-worm its doom;
It faded—droop'd—and died!

The mother loſt her vivid green,
Her vernal beauties all;
The pearly dew like tears were ſeen.
Adown her leaves to fall.

Fond Zephyr too, with gentle ſighs,
Her ſorrows ſeem'd to ſhare;
With warblings ſweet the red-breaſt tries,
To ſoothe the mourner's care.

In vain her griefs they ſeem'd to ſhare,
And ſooth'd her woes in vain;
She hung her head in deep deſpair,
Nor heard the warbler's ſtrain.

A full blown roſe lay withering nigh,
Unheeded in the ſhade—
Juſt ere it breathed the parting ſigh,
It rais'd its head and ſaid:—

"Forbear, miſtaken tree, to weep
"Thy infant's early fate;
"Secure from ills in death's ſoft ſleep,
"How peaceful is her ſtate!

"I from my parent branch was torn,
"When in my beauty's bloom—
"A while in Celia's boſom worn,
"I ſhed a ſweet perfume.

"By all admir'd, approv'd, careſt,
"While pleaſing to the eye;
"Then flung with ſcorn from Celia's breaſt,
"Neglected there to die.

"Ceaſe then to weep her infant charms,
"By death forbid to blow;
"Peaceful ſhe ſunk within thy arms,
"Ere ſhe had taſted woe."

From the Whitestown Gazette.

AMONG the many admirable productions of modern genius, I have often wondered that the exhilirating powder, commonly called snuff, has not hitherto been made a topic. For certainly the taking it by the nose has not only become a very fashionable employment and even pleasure, among the fair sex, but we frequently see them suspending his important occupations to besprinkle his beard with this most odoriferous duft. But what in opinion of many ought to introduce this theme to general notice and admiration, is the many charms which this powder adds to female beauty. In the first place, what a captivating twang it already adds to their voices, when their delicate nose are not yet half clogged with this social snuffing. Their conversation too, with words half articulated, and interspersed with the blowing of the nose, heightens the scene to excess. But why do I dwell upon these infignificant advantages of snuff taking, when the settings-off and embellishments of the person, produced by this, cannot but strike the least admirer of female beauty? How neatly does the snuff diffused down upon the female lip, assimilate the manly beard and add to delicacy! Gems are costly—Yet to exactly do the snuff distilled nose drops resemble a certain sort of gem, that I have frequently wondered, that the nose instead of the ear, has not been adopted, as the member from which brilliants are to pend. It would render so easy and so little expensive, female ornaments. This once adopted as the fashion, it would be no difficult matter to introduce it among the neighboring tribes, and save thousands, now expended by the fair, in purchasing nose-pendents for their sunburne beauties. Perhaps these new thoughts—but it is most probable that, if at any time this ornament, by the nose get in hardsvile, should get fashionable, and be suffered to drop, it would prove as a fort of substance equal to that of cloves or cinnamon for pies or pound cake? I for mat, for my part, why fnuff thus diffused, should not add to these delicacies, as well as when to give fragrance. It is fnuffed upon whatever it chanceth to, what.—Blow lustily ye gales! let these scattered atoms be widely diffused by your influences, and

O the steaming platter, the swelling muffin, and perhaps the throbing bosom beneath; for such what delight do these odours upon the fair one fill the lover.—But here I must cease—If I had time I would enlarge upon a subject so charming. I would attempt a display of the besprangled handkerchief, and set for th the necessity of a leather pocket. And more than all, the beautiful yellow tinge given to the complexion by snuff taking, should draw forth all my slender powers of description. For the benefit and amusement of the fair reader, principally, have I dedicated thus much—and hope to meet my reward.

Foreign News.

LONDON, December 14.

YESTERDAY the Hamburgh mail due arrived.

The Vienna court Gazette contains a detailed account of the different actions which have taken place upon the 6th upon various points of a very extended line. These had been no general engagement, but from every post they occupied the French were successively driven. The official communications reach down to the 15th: The French papers inform us subsequent to that period, that their head quarters were at Pietra. Upon the 20th Championet was at Genoa, and as the reports in the Paris papers state, the Austrians had been repulsed in an attempt to carry the passes into the Genoese. They have now, however, secured all the positions which are necessary to enable them to prosecute the siege of Coni with vigor. The French do not indeed seem to have absolutely given up all hopes of relieving it, but it is probable that before their army can be reinforced, or the new commander who is appointed can be in a situation to attempt any offensive operations, the place must fall.—Italy will then be almost completely cleared of the French, and the Austrians will be in possession of all the strong holds which guard the country from a fresh irruption. It is said likewise to be the intention of the Austrian government to send powerful reinforcements to their army in Italy quarter. Upon the Rhine no new operations have taken place. Reports of an armistice continue to circulate, but without any great appearance of probability.

December 16.

The Clyne, George, Wenzel, and three other vessels, on his Majesty's late proclamation, permitting a commercial intercourse with Holland, cleared out of the custom house in London in ballast for Amsterdam, where, on their arrival, were seized, an their crews lodged in goal: the Batavian government alledging that they had not opened their ports to England.

PARIS, Dec. 12.

Different journals have given in a list of the candidates for the consulship. The greater part of them have pointed out citizens Volney, Berthier, and Talleyrand Perigord, as colleagues to Buonaparte—others, who pretend to an equal degree of information, assure us that Buonaparte will be the first consul, and will have for his colleagues Garat and Chinbaceres.

IMPORTANT.

Six frigates, coming from Newfoundland, have arrived at L'Orient, where they have taken possession of FIFTY English ships, which they have burnt. They have taken two thousand prisoners.

NEW CONSTITUTION.

Buonaparte assembled at the Consulate palace, on the 8th Dec. the two legislative commissions. Roger Ducos took the chair.

Dunnon read the plan of the new constitution, of which we have only hitherto collected imperfect fragments. The discussion was calm, and every way worthy so great a cause.

It was here that Buonaparte manifested his wonderful powers; for, after having collected all the opinions for and against an article, he commented on the argument advanced, and concluded by bringing the majority to agree to the propositions which he made.

Citizen Rudeser has now lifted up another corner of the curtain that concealed the new constitution. The following is the sketch he gives of the public establishments:

Legislative Power.

"There is to be a council of state to propose laws, which council of state constitutes part of the executive power. For the discussion of these proposed laws there is a tribunate, or a select body of the representation of the people: a legislative body to decide upon the propositions after they have been discussed or attended to.

"The legislative body is to consist of 300 members; the tribunate of 100 and the council of state of 30.

Executive Power.

"There is to be first or principal consul invested with power to appoint and remove ministers, generals, ambassadors and councillors of state. There are to be two other consuls to discuss public matters in concert with the 1st consul. They are to have but a consultive voice; their persons are inviolable. They are named for ten years; they may be re-elected; they will have a guard. The grand consul will have 500,000 francs of salary. There are besides two councils of state; the one for the department of foreign affairs, and the other for the home department. This latter council will have the initiative. It will have also to judge and decide on litigated questions in the department of the admiralty. Such is the government.

"The administration is confided,

"1. To ministers, or councils of administration, such is the admiralty.

"2. To administrations of a commune or of several communes, skilled by commissioners to be named by the consuls.

"3. To intermediate bureaus, charged only with the transmission of the orders of the ministers to the communal administrations, and of the reports of the execution of the orders by the administrative, as well as of petitions and appeals of the people to the ministers, from the acts of the administrative bodies.

Judicial Power.

"It shall be afterwards organised by the constitutional means established for the formation of the laws.

Conservative Power.

"There is to be a body of from 80 to 100 members elected for life. They must have qualifications in land rental of 25,000 francs a year. They name themselves to vacancies in their own body. A person must be forty years of age to be admissible. This body shall exercise various functions.

"1. They elect the members of the legislative body and the tribunate, and take them from the list of the notables of the nation or elected out of the third degree.

"2. They shall pronounce on the unconstitutional acts committed by the inviolable bodies of the legislative or executive powers.

"3. They shall examine the right of confirm on the list of the notables of the nation, which they may accept, but never done one hundredth part.

"4. They name a tribune of the conservative power shall fill up vacancies by their own body. Three candidates shall be presented to them—one by the grand consul—one by the legislative body, and one by the tribunate.

"The grand consul will alone be lodged at the Luxembourg; the two others in the palace of the 500. The tribunate and the senate in the pavillion of the Thuileries. The conservative jury at the Louvre, in the place of the institute, and the institute in the buildings of the Sarbonne. The invalids will be transferred to Versailles, and every thing that belongs to the ministry at war.

"On the 22d inst. (the 13th Dec.) the legislative body will be assembled, and on the 27th the constitution will be officially transmitted to the departments."

On the 6th Dec. the French consuls published the following notice relative to the English prisoners:

"The consuls have notified to the English government, that from the 1st of Nivose (the 22d Dec.) all the expences necessary to the maintenance of the French prisoners in England, shall be at the charge of the British government.

(Signed) BUONAPARTE,
SIEYES,
ROGER DUCOS."

VIENNA, Nov. 27.

It has been resolved upon to send a reinforcement of 20,000 men, at least, to general Melas.

A minister plenipotentiary from the King of Sardinia is arrived here on some particular business. An envoy extraordinary from Berlin is also expected here. It is now generally believed here that in consequence of the late change in the French government, a peace upon honorable terms will not be subjected to great difficulties.

The neutrality of Switzerland is again proposed on the part of France and Switzerland.

Our Court Gazette states, that no official accounts have yet been received at Constantinople of any thing of consequence having taken place between the Grand Vizier and the French army, on the frontiers of Egypt; but only that the two armies were in sight of each other, and that several reports had been picked up to that effect.

LONDON, Dec. 17.

A recent letter from India gives the following account of the Dairo, or Emperor of Japan:—"Dairo is the chief Emperor, and confers the dignity upon the other, who also is the ecclesiastical governor. He wears a black veil, and a cap upon his head. His feet must never touch the ground, nor must he ever be exposed to the rays of the sun. He never cuts his hair, nor his beard, nor his nails; and all his victuals must be dressed in new vessels. When he goes abroad, he is carried by 24 men in a litter, surrounded with curtains, so that he may see and not be seen. His palace is adorned with 365 idols. His army generally consists of 100,000 foot and 50,000 horse. The only Europeans that trade with Japan are the Dutch; but the British government, it is said, conduct it as an object worthy their attention to cultivate a good understanding with the Emperor, as they are in constant want of spices, sugar, silks, linen and woollen cloth, elephants teeth and tortoise shell, and in return give gold and silver."

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, March 15.

FOR THE GAZETTE.

To the free Electors of the County of York.

GENTLEMEN,

AT a time that the public anxiety is a little raised, to know who is to represent us in the ensuing parliament. It may not be amiss, to fay something general on the subject of representation, of constituents and Constituted.—Nothing, if it is presumed, can be more true, than that the primary wish of every ELECTOR, is to see himself represented in his country's legislature by a honest upright man. Honest and upright indeed, ought that man to be, who is entrusted with so HIGH A CHARGE. A charge, gentlemen, of such magnitude and so facted, that no one should assume it without mature examination of the eventful and important consequences. A solemn and unprejudiced review of the duties incumbent on the representative, of the powers veiled in his hands, of the many whose rights he voluntarily binds himself to support, should methinks, deter the unwary from aiming at it—and the unequal to it—from wishing it. Should establish this prominent, Though neglected truth, that something more than mere plebean honesty, than rugged uprightness is necessary, to qualify an individual for the dignified station. A station, gentlemen, to which is attached duties, so various and so fagged, so extensive and so complicated, that he who has a just sense of them, will not enter on them but with cautious fear and trembling. The solid, gentlemen, is a field on which volumes might be written, them could not the weight of the awful charge be sufficiently impressed on the minds of candidates.

I shall confine myself, in this place, to opening to your views, a few of the general qualifications—the efficient qualities and more striking duties of the legislator. At the same time that I apply to admire, and gratefully contemplate that noblest work of human wisdom, the British Constitution. This constitution which, reducing our refinement, constitutes every subject legislator or judge, which renders power general, yet admirably compact, and promptly executive: this chain of delegation, gentlemen, linked by wisdom, strengthened by the best improvements, and the well tried experience of many ages, in which there exists nothing arbitrary—nothing absolute—where the highest organ moves but by the consent of the lowest: from this I say, who can withhold his admiration?—The representative more particularly, who stands so high in this general order, should look abroad and aft: what are my duties? What my necessary qualifications? What my necessary knowledge? I answer: your duties are, to enact wife and beneficial laws for yourself and your constituents—your country and posterity. You are not only to be the guardian of their rights and liberties, but you are to be the guardian of their morals. You are to guard against encroachments from superior orders, and to restrain every symptom of licence and licentiousness in the body which you represent. You are to promote and establish such wholesome regulations as effectually to secure, a free and uninterrupted course to civil and moral order. Regulations, which will benefit and harmonize the present age, and entail to you the blessings of the yet, unborn!

The qualities you should possess to warrant your claim to this preeminence are, honesty, independence of spirit, penetration, an intimate knowledge of the true bearings of your country, and an acquaintance with its ruling laws. You can not rationally be expected to know what may be of consequence to domestic security, proximate to the incalculable injury of posterity. At no time will this country, stand more in need of men of abilities, than at the present. You may, as it were, now be laying the foundations of its future consequence and its happiness. Its dearest interests are involved—its welfare and existence are in a manner submitted to your care and your guidance.

Your knowledge of governments and the constitutions of empires should be general. To know what regulations or particular laws are salutary, or otherwise, is indispensible: to know that the operation of a good law is general, where the interest is general; to know that the sovereign is the executive, and the people the legislative power; to know that the interest of the sovereign and the people are inseperable, knowing these: to know how to select, and how to form rules, whose local operation may be appropriate, may be calculated to peculiar, without interfering with general welfare; to know how to support the rights of the people without interfering with the rights of the sovereign, all these are much more desirable from encrease in these matters, as from corruption of principles. Ignorance in a person without authority or influence—without further charge than relates to individual concerns, will, or ought to be pitied. In the man in office, or who aspireth to public concerns, it becomes criminal and pernicious. An ill judged or blind assent, is frequently given to hurtful measures, from their not being underflood: the result and not the intention, here becomes the object of moment. And here let me alert it, no earthly consideration, whether of interest or friendship, should influence the elector. Let his vote be given to the person whose abilities and inclination to serve his country shall, on examination, appear equal. When he shall find these combined with eminence of station, such an one should, be the object of general choice. His station will give weight to his counsels—currency to his opinions and strengthen his desire and endeavors of serving his king and his country. These are the requisites, and these the outlines of character, in the man, who, with justice, aspires to a seat in parliament. Many, however, hurried by a ridiculous vanity, or precipitated by an ill directed emulation, or flattered by a peculiarity of situation of circumstance, (situation and circumstance, which some of themselves a moral allowance or absolute shrink or even forward, as candidates for the legislature. Ignorant of the duties required of them, unfurnished with the necessary qualifications of every quality, requirement or character istic, which can either dignify or distinguish the legislator. How, gentlemen, by what means, let me ask you—can we shield ourselves from contempt? How can we avoid becoming a laughing flock to our neighbours? When arrogant stupidity, a total ignorance of the principles of government, of the spirit of legislation, of the interests of the country; nay, of the very principles of their native tongue, are the birth rights, the confessed characteristics of men, who advance themselves to a seat in parliament. Justly, (yet too often unhappily for our interest, our credit and our consequence,) the majority of votes, constitute the representative; this is a moral evil impossible to obviate. Yet let us conjure this last description of men, for the love of God! for the love of their country, for the love of themselves, for the take of their credit, for their modesty, for the take of their families, and lastly for the take of not violating nature, for ever to renounce, the idea, of obtaining seats in parliament—of imposing on the country, or like Falstaff's shadows of filling up the muster roll.

CATO.

York, 15 March.

Departed this life on the 9th instant, in this town, Mr. DAVID M'CRAE, long a trader to the upper countries.—In justice to his memory it may be said of him, that he was a man of great natural and acquired abilities, he possessed a high sense of honor, a grateful and benevolent heart. He was a tender and affectionate father and husband, a warm and sincere friend. The vicissitudes of his life do fully verify that saying of the Royal Songster, that "The race is not to the swift, the battle to the strong, nor riches to the man of understanding." Over his imperfections, let benevolence draw the sympathetic veil. His remains were accompanied to the place of interment by a respectable number of citizens, in whom appeared impressions suitable to the solemnity of the occasion. He has left with his numerous acquaintance, an amiable comfort and family to regret his loss.

York, March 7.

Foreign News.

MUNICH, Nov. 30.

PRINCE Suwarrow has informed our elector, that he has orders to return to Ruſſia, with the troops under his command.

At Vienna the wiſhes of the people are in favor of peace. Politicians there think, that the late events in France will facilitate the attainment of that object.

The letters from Aufburg ſtate, that general Suwarrow has actually begun his march to return home, and that his whole army is in motion—This muſt be a certain degree diſconcert the military plans of the archduke, injure the proſecution of the war againſt France, though it is extremely clear that the importance of the Ruſſians has been greatly over rated.

Paris, Nov. 12. By orders from Vienna, the Conclave is at its events to be held on the iſland of St. Glorgio Mygiore. A number of workmen are buſied day and night to make arrangements for the conclave which will begin very ſhortly.

Nov. 13. The ſiege of Ancona is one of the moſt obſtinate which has been carried on during the preſent war. On the 2d inſt. the French made a deſperate effort to drive the Auſtrians from the hill, where the Lazaretto ſtands and from which place the fortreſs may be bombarded. After a warm conflict they were obliged to retire to the city with the loſs of 250 men killed and wounded. Gen. Monnier and another were wounded. The Ruſſian and Turkiſh frigates were obliged by ſtormy weather to give up the blockade of Ancona; but the imperial bomb veſſels which were built there, have anchored in the road of Ancona, and keep the port blockaded; they have taken ſeveral French veſſels laden with proviſions going into that port.

Manheim, Nov. 22. Couriers are exchanged almoſt every day, between this capitol and Paris. It is ſaid that gen. Lecourbe has demanded his diſmiſſion, and that gen. Moreau has received orders ſpeedily to inſpect all the armies of the republic, after which he will take upon himſelf the chief command of the army of the Rhine, which is to be encreaſed to 100,000 men, before the end of February. Philipſburgh will not be able to hold out a long blockade, the principal part of the French army being now before it, and its garriſon having during the laſt blockade, loſt 200 men, who were to have joined gen. Gorger. Diviſions of troops are continually arriving here from Alſace, to reinforce the French army. The rumours of an armiſtice being negociating ſtill continues, but it is ſaid that the French wiſh to extend their line further into Suabia that it is in the power of the allies to grant them. Nothing is become a regular ſmall farmer.

Stuttgard, Nov. 20. How ſoon and in what manner the Ruſſian army will march is not yet determined. It is likewiſe not thought impoſſible, that, under certain circumſtances, contrary orders might be received from St. Peterſburgh. To what diſtance the field-marſhal will withdraw is alſo not known, as the Ruſſian army is to take a poſition in which it may be able to protect the ſtates of the emperor of Ruſſia, and of his allies. It is tho't by ſome, that it is to remain in Bohemia. At Munich, application has been made in form for the paſſage of theſe troops, and a number of veſſels have been put in a ſtate of requiſition, as their proceeding by land might meet with too many obſtacles in the preſent ſeaſon, on account of the badneſs of the roads, and ſcarcity of proviſions and forage. To make the neceſſary arrangements will require a fortnight at leaſt. The heavy artillery is to be employed on the Danube, as far as Lintz.

Conde's corps will, for the preſent, return to Upper Bavaria, and its headquarters will be removed from Landiberg to Waſſerburgh, on the In. The portions of the Imperial army will alſo be entirely changed.

Stutgard, Nov. 27. Fears are ſtill entertained here for the fate of Suabia during the winter. Much will depend on the circumſtances, whether and how long the Ruſſian army will remain in Suabia, and againſt which quarter the archduke's army may direct its operations. At our court, they are buſily employed in packing up, but the margrave of Baden will, at all events, remain at Carliſruhe with his family. Whatever belongs to the Imperial embaſſy has been removed to Ulm.

There is now neither a Ruſſian nor Engliſh officer at the archduke's headquarters, for carrying on the correſpondence. General Folſtoy, who had hitherto been at Donauſchingen, as Imperial Ruſſian commiſſary, has been recalled to Peterſburg and has left Donauſchingen with his lady. On the part of the Auſtrians, the buſineſs with the Ruſſian army is tranſacted by general Hiller.

Madrid, Nov. 29. His Catholic Majeſty has made a requiſition of 30 millions of reals from his clergy in Europe, and 36 millions of reals from that of America, without any form, or previous condition whatever. The deputies from the clergy who had nearly finiſhed their deliberations on the voluntary donations, have been remanded to their reſpective parishes. It was ſuppoſed that the king had received a ſecret intimation that the voluntary donation reſolved upon, would be far below his expectations, wherefore it was thought adviſeable to diſſolve their meeting.

On account of the deficiency in our revenue, this againſt a ſituation to open a loan of 3 millions in Holland, the filling of which is however much doubted.

Lower Elbe, Nov. 27. The Peterſburg Court Gazette of the 9th inſt. contains accounts of the marriage of her Imperial Highneſs Helena Paulowna, with his Serene Highneſs the Hereditary Prince Frederic, of Mecklenburgh—and of that of her Imperial Highneſs Alexandra Paulowna, with his Royal Highneſs the Archduke Palatine of Hungary.

The ſame Gazette alſo contains the official relation of lieut. gen. Berg from Zolle, of the 2nd of Sept. and of major prince Gortſchakow, dated Staringen, Sept. 23, (old ſtile)—both reſpecting the affairs of Switzerland, already known to the public.

On the 30th Oct. count Dietrichſtein, who had been ſent on an important million to Peterſburgh, paſſed through here on his return to Vienna.

The exchange, as we ſtated before, is labouring to riſe again: and we fear it will continue to labour until more caſh and bullion arrives in the Hamburgh market. One hundred thouſand pounds which had been ſent from hence to the Texel, have been returned again, which together with what may arrive in the three Engliſh packets now due, perhaps will give ſome favorable turn to the exchange, eſpecially if it ſhould come higher from London, and no more failures have taken place.

PARIS, Dec. 12.

The following letter from Vendome, dated December 4.

"The greateſt civility is practiſed between the republicans and the inſurgents in the weſt, ſince the ſuſpenſion of arms has been ſigned. Several officers on both ſides entertained each other at dinner, and have expreſſed a deſire to ſee themſelves cloſely united for ever, and a period put to the diſaſtrous war which rages in theſe departments."

The following are the articles of capitulation:

Condition of a ſuſpenſion of hoſtilities concluded between the republicans and the diſcontented in the weſt:—

1. The number of republican troops ſhall not be encreaſed at the departments of the weſt during the ſuſpenſion of hoſtilities.

2. All judgments pronounced by military commiſſions ſhall be ſuſpended, even with reſpect to thoſe royaliſts who may have been taken with arms in their hands.

3. All the perſons detained in priſon as partizans or agents of the royaliſts, ſhall be ſet at their liberty as well as the hoſtages.

4. The republican troops ſhall ſend no detachment into the country; their correſpondence ſhall take place between detachment and detachment ordinances, or ſmall detachments.

5. The royaliſts ſhall guarantee the ſafety of thoſe ordinances in ſmall detachments.

6. The republicans may make requiſitions for the ſubſiſtence of their troops only.

7. The republicans and the royaliſts may continue to receive the deſerters of the oppoſite army.

8. The correſpondence between the diſcontented ſhall be guaranteed by the republicans.

9. All marches and hoſtile proceedings ſhall be ſuſpended, and in caſe either of the parties are deſirous of continuing the war, a notice of eight days muſt be given.

10. No proclamation ſhall be iſſued during the ſuſpenſion of hoſtilities.

Paris is at this moment the rendezvous of almoſt all our generals.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 5.

It is ſaid that an high officer is in poſſeſſion of a letter addreſſed to the following effect, viz. That Buonaparte has openly proclaimed his intention to reſtore the ancient monarchy of France, and declared himſelf Regent of the kingdom for 13 years. [Gaz. U. S.

It is ſtated in political circles as a fact, that about two years ago a Frenchman, who has left his country on account of his principles, and reſided in this city, informed, that he was on the committee of ſurgeons who examined the body of the child ſaid to be the dauphin, and to have died of the ſcrofula, in the temple; that having known the prince while alive, on examining the face of the corpſe (contrary to poſitive inſtructions) he perceived no reſemblance, and was convinced that ſome artifice had been uſed to preſerve the life of the young prince. This circumſtance is related by a gentleman of credit, who received it two years ago from the ſurgeon who was preſent at the diſſection, and is, therefore, highly confirmative of the recent rumour, that Louis XVII. was really ſaved from the poiſons of the National Convention by an artiſice of Sieyes, and is ſtill in exiſtence on the continent.

The cuſtom of the king of Aſhantee, a country of Africa, not yet viſited by a gentleman of the Eaſt India Company's civil ſervice at Accra, amongſt his extraordinary figures of ſervants, confiſcations have a conſiderable ſhare. But all this is trifling, when compared to the ſubſiſtence of the prince's numerous train from houſe to houſe, living on his outſide, & never changing his quarters till he has conſumed every thing eatable. It will of courſe be underſtood that the court of Aſhantee is not remarkable for great ſplendor, nor the prince's table very ſumptuouſly ſerved, as a meal conſiſts only of ſome ſpecies of millet, pounded and boiled into paſte) a piece of ſalted meat and ſome palm wine. Theſe he eats with his fingers, ſeated on a ſtone before him in ſtate. At table, he is frequently employed in judging cauſes, which he decides at his own diſcretion, there being no law but his own will. He uſually wears a cauſe-cloth of brown colour, with a mallet on his ſhoulder; but, on ſolemn occaſions, he puts on his robe of rich gold brocade, and hangs round his neck a ſilver chain. He is diſtinguiſhed from his ſubjects by riding upon an ox, perhaps the only one in Aſhantee, and by wearing boots. He has no regular troops, but can collect an undiſciplined army of three men, with no artillery. Theſe troops are drawn together by the ſound of trumpet. Hitherto ordinances are iſſued every Friday, (which is the market day) by one of his ſervants, who ſtands on a tree, and with a loud voice proclaims the edict, which is communicated to the people by each perſon upon his return to the place of his abode. The former king was driven from his throne, and compelled to live like a wild man for 16 years in the woods and caverns of the mountains.

FOR THE GAZETTE.

Mr. Printer,

THROUGH the medium of your paper I beg leave to ſuggeſt a few obſervations on the ſubject of the approaching election. From to plain a meaning man as I am, poſſeſſed of only a medium underſtanding; whoſe earlier days were devoted to ſtrugged induſtry, who was educated to follow the plough and not to wield the quill, from ſuch a one I flatter myſelf, that flowery ſtyle and flow of eloquence which is the characteriſtic of a true knight of the quill, will not be anticipated from my pen; therefore, I hope that what I have to ſay gift, will be cordially received by my fellow electors, because it is the wish of one who has at heart their interest, their welfare and their happiness. However anxious I may be to oppose Mr. Cato, it is the most foreign idea that I as preſent propoſe, to enter the field, or contend with him; the very name (laying aſide his abilities) is ſufficient to retard ſuch an attempt from one, whoſe pen is, in ſo contracted a degree, verſed in the acquirements neceſſary to enter the field of controverſy, as mine is.

To the Electors of the County of York.

FELLOW ELECTORS,

FOR intruding my preſent thoughts upon you, I have only to obſerve, that I feel deeply intereſted in your, and my own, welfare and happineſs, rights and liberties; impreſſed with a full ſenſe that it is my duty, and that of every other perſon who wiſhes to ſee himſelf in his country's parliament repreſented by a full, upright, and independent character, to ſtep forward and publickly avow his opinion.

Without doubt many of you have ſeen the pompous profixies of Mr. Cato, publiſhed in the Gazette of the 25th inſt. upon the ſubject of repreſentation, of conſtituents and conſtituted. In this production, fellow electors, you are ſolicited to give your votes to "the perſon whoſe abilities and inclination to ſerve his king and his country ſhall, on examination, appear equal;" this, fellow electors, is what I am anxious to inſtil into your minds, and what I will, you ſtrickly to adhere to, and to be your primary and leading motive when you come forward to give your votes. He goes on further to obſerve, "When you ſhall find theſe combined with eminence of ſtation, ſuch an one ſhould be the object of general choice." this poſition does not correſpond with my ſentiments nor my intereſt's Let me aſk, is it then his "eminent ſtation" that entitles him to our votes? no, no fellow electors that is not the man, in juſtice to ourſelves, that we can give in charge our deareſt rights and liberties; for there are certain emoluments ariſing from, and a ſalary annexed to that "eminence of ſtation" which will ever be a bane to our intereſt, and which are held, by he who enjoys them, in a much higher eſtimation, than thoſe rights of the many which he attempts to ſupport. It is our duty to conſtitute a perſon who neither directly, or indirectly receives any emoluments from, or in office under government; this is the character that we are in duty to ſupport and who is juſtly entitled to our ſuffrage. I firmly believe, fellow electors, that there are too many of our candidates who entertain a much greater idea of the honor, than of the ſacred duties attached to that perſon who takes upon himſelf to preſerve inviolate the rights, and privileges of his fellow ſubjects. If this poſition is true, which, I believe, few of you will deny, it behoves us to keep a vigilant look out that we may be enabled to guard againſt ſuch a deſcription of men. The outlines of character delineated by Cato, are thoſe of a Pitt, a Fox and a Burke; I can not but admit that ſuch a character would make a reſpectable figure in our parliament in its preſent infant ſtate, becauſe there would be no one to oppoſe his meaſures, whether calculated for the general intereſt and welfare or not; ſuch a character I ſay, would be as equally dangerous, as he who is ignorant of the very principles of his native tongue.

Fellow electors, I ſhould not have laid down my axe and taken up the quill at this remote period, from the day of election, had not Mr. Cato's the example; and I muſt confeſs, that I am fearful, unleſs we continue united, for if divided we can do nothing, that his ſuperior abilities and ſound reaſoning will, ere that period arrives (for we ſuppoſe that the gazette will be coming weekly with his productions,) obtain a number of votes for the man, whoſe "eminence of ſtation," is the only claim which he has to them.

Fellow electors, you without doubt recollect that Wm. Willoocks, eſq Wm. Jarvis, eſq. Mr. Samuel Heron and Wm. Allan, eſq are the perſons (as we have been informed) who offer themſelve as candidates for this county: Mr. Heron is the perſon ſelected out of the number by us, and ſhould he ſucceed in his election, which there is no doubt of, he will do us that juſtice which we have a right to expect from the man who repreſents us in our country's legiſlature. It is true Mr. Heron has not had the advantage of a refined education, he is nevertheleſs poſſeſſed of a large ſhare of mother-wit and good ſenſe; and it can juſtly be ſaid of him, that he is, "that nobleſt work of God, an honeſt, upright and juſt man." —Now fellow electors, let us be unanimous, and for the love of our country, for the love of ourſelves, our intereſts, our welfare, our rights and liberties, aſſemble on that day when our deareſt intereſts will be at ſtake, and with one voice conſtitute Mr. Samuel Heron.

LONDON, Nov. 26.

Buonaparte's candid declaration to the council of elders, that the conſtitution was nothing but an empty ſound, is ſomething the ſpirit of col. Pride's waggiſh remark when he purged the parliament. A member having remonſtrated and ſaid that they were to ſeek the Lord in the houſe of commons, the col. deſired them to go elſe where, as the Lord had not been in that place for ſeveral years!

Mr. Burke, in one of his ſatires on French affairs, repreſents the Abbe Sieyes as having pigeon holes, with conſtitutions of all kinds ready made, and ticketed and ſorted; ſome with executive directories, and ſome without; ſome with councils, and ſome without. We ſhall probably ſoon have an opportunity of ſeeing ſome more of the Abbe's works. Of the Abbe it may be ſaid what Butler ſays of a politician in his time:

He had ſeen five governments run down;
And had a hand in every one.
And by trepanning the old to ruin,
Still made his intereſt with the new one.

The total diſuſe of Hair-Powder in this country will probably become a neceſſary meaſure, and ought to be enjoined by authority. Beſides the temporary aid it may give in the preſent ſcarcity of wheat, it will rid the public of a moſt invidious tax which, we believe, has never greatly benefited the revenue.

In one ſhape or other Buonaparte ſeems determined to draw the attention of the world upon him. What muſt the Chriſtian knight think of ſuch a man? Or is not fairer to ſuppoſe that he has been all this while fighting, with the Devil in the ſhape of a French general?

Buonaparte, when he was brought out of the council of five hundred by the grenadiers, mounted on horſeback and harangued the troops. He ſaid they muſt go and clear the hall, for moſt of thoſe who remained were not repreſentatives of the people, but repreſentatives of the ponſard.

General Oliver, who was wounded at the battle of Trebia, wrote to gen. Leſerve, offering his ſervices on the day of the late revolution at Paris, and ſtated in his letter, that in order to equip himſelf he had juſt bought a wooden leg!

Roger Ducos, it is ſaid, is a mere cypher in the new conſulate. He is a cypher, however, that ſerves to increaſe the value and power of the other figures with which he is conjoined.

The French have done much to eradicate principles. Their late manœuvres have been directed againſt proverbs and the end of a fruit was made the beginning of a fray!

A Frenchman, called Julien Le Rois, has made a contrivance to prevent any injury ariſing to paſſengers from the breaking of the axletree or the wheel of a carriage. It will likewiſe prevent the horſes from being hurt. He propoſes to take out a patent for it from the French government.

M. Laplace, the famous mathematician, has been appointed by Buonaparte his miniſter of the interior. Euclid, however, will prove but of ſmall aſſiſtance in a conteſt with the jacobins. The geometrician muſt therefore ſquare his conduct by other rules than thoſe of art, and meet his opponents with other arguments than direct dependence upon the deductio ad abſurdum.

The admirers of Lavater, and friends of genius, have not read without an affecting intereſt, the late unfortunate occurence--which happened to that amiable enthuſiaſt, in his counter of the three barbarians, who without reſpect to his character, either as a philoſopher or a prieſt, could wantonly aim a bullet at one whoſe very perſon, and much more his name and his age, inſpired veneration in the rudeſt inhabitant of Zurich. It is however a ſingular coincidence, that this man of ſenſibility at a former period experienced the ſame ſenſations he muſt have felt when attacked by theſe ruffians; that the recounter was not followed by ſuch fatal conſequences, but he has expreſſed himſelf with ſo much energy on the occaſion, that the paſſage will be conſidered by a curious reader a very intereſting, almoſt prophetic of the late event. It will give us at leaſt (ſhould Lavater not live to deſcribe phiſiognomy of his banditti) his ſentiments and his deſcriptions of them, which, with the foreſight, or rather the prophetic anticipation of genius, his obſervations on human nature had already brought before his phyſiognomical eye, ſo that one may ſay, he had ſeen and ſhuddered at his murderers many years before he received their bullet.

We tranſcribe this remarkable paſſage--" There is one moment of my life, which I ſhall never forget; my heart ſtill feels, and muſt ever feel the wound. I was in a garden, in the ſweeteſt month of the year, by a parterre adorned with the moſt beautiful flowers. My enraptured eyes ſtood fixed for a few moments on that lovely production of the Creator, abſorbed in this delicious ſenſation, my mind formed within itſelf a repreſentation of animal beauty--beauty ſtill more alive and affecting.--And I roſe by degrees up to man, of all being the moſt elevated which the ſenſes can reach--a being capable of much higher perfection than the flowers. At length the image of an accompliſhed man preſented itſelf to my thoughts and filled my heart with exalted delight. My meditation was diſturbed by the noiſe of ſome perſons paſſing by; I caſt my eyes upon them; good God! what a mixture of pity and horror did the ſight inſpire! They were three men of a moſt frightful aſpect, the ideal forms of three banditti!"

FROM A LATE FRENCH JOURNAL.

Means propoſed for ſaving the crews of veſſels ſhipwrecked near coaſts.

By an anonymous Author.

EIGHT or nine years ago, being much ſtruck by an account which I read of the ſhipwreck of twenty-four perſons who periſhed for near the ſhore that their cries could be diſtinctly heard, an idea immediately occurred to me, of endeavouring to diſcover ſome means proper for ſaving the crews of ſhipwrecked veſſels, at leaſt under ſuch circumſtances, that is to ſay, at the diſtance of forty or fifty fathoms from the ſhore: for I did not then imagine that it could be done at the diſtance of two or three hundred, as I afterwards diſcovered. I perceived at firſt that the only means to ſave the crew of a veſſel in ſuch a ſtate, would be to eſtabliſh a rope of communication from the ſhore to the ſhip. After examining a number of means, both ancient and modern, I fixed on a bomb or cannon ball, (a bomb I think preferable,) to which ſhould be faſtened the end of the rope, extended afterwards in a zig zag direction before the mortar or cannon, or ſuſpended on a piece of wood raiſed ſeveral feet.--But as it was neceſſary to know if the cord would not break by the force of the exploſion and the velocity of the motion, I thought it proper to conſult profeſſional men. I wrote to ſome officers of the artillery in garriſon at La Fere, and they almoſt all replied that the rope would infallibly break.

Not ſatisfied with this anſwer, I happily conceived the idea of making the experiment on a ſmall ſcale. I cauſed a piece of the barrel of a muſket to be filled into the form of a ſmall mortar of 18 inches in length internally; and having a packthread to a common ball of lead, I made an experiment, which perfectly ſucceeded, as did a great many others which I repeated afterwards even with the ſtrongeſt charges of powder. I communicated this ſucceſs to theſe officers of artillery, who replied, that there was a great difference between a quarter of an ounce of powder and four or five pounds employed for a bomb; and, in ſhort, that the rope would break.

Being deſirous to aſcertain what truth there might be in this aſſertion, I repaired to a large iron furnace, where I remained ten days, and where I cauſed a mould to be formed for a 4 inch mortar and a bullet of the ſame calibre: I had them both caſt, and made an experiment with a rope three or four inches in diameter and 18 ounces of powder, which ſucceeded. I then came to Paris, where, after ſtaying eight months, I obtained an order from government to make my experiments on a grand ſcale, even at La Fere, where I had to expect men prejudiced againſt the ſucceſs of my attempts.--When I went thither they perſiſted that they would not ſucceed. I did however, what I had to depend upon, as I had already made experiments. In ſhort I repeated them, and they completely ſucceeded. The firſt day nothing being done in a proper manner, ſome of the experiments failed, but things being arranged better next morning, we repeated them ſeven times without once failing, viz. four times with a mortar of 8 inches and 3 with one of 12, augmenting each time the charge of the powder from the weakeſt to the ſtrongeſt. The ſpectators having judged that this number was fully ſufficient to eſtabliſh the truth of the diſcovery, no more were made.

I ſhall now proceed to other means, which I have deviſed not only for ſaving the crews of veſſels, but alſo the greater part of the cargoes when expoſed to danger near the coaſt.

1ſt. It muſt be remembered that, in ſuch circumſtances, the only thing neceſſary is to get a cord of communication conveyed to the veſſel in danger. It ought to be remembered alſo, that a veſſel is never caſt away or periſhes on the coaſt, but becauſe it is driven thither againſt the will of the captain, and by the violence of the waves and the wind, which almoſt always blows from the ſea towards the ſhore, without which there would be no danger to be apprehended, conſequently in theſe circumſtances, the wind comes always from the ſea, either directly or obliquely, and blows towards the ſhore.

A common paper kite, therefore, launched from the veſſel and driven by the wind to the ſhore, would be ſufficient to ſave a crew conſiſting of 1500 ſeamen, if ſuch were the number of a ſhip of war. The kite would convey to the ſhore a ſtrong packthread, to the end of which might be affixed a cord, to be drawn on board by means of the ſtring of the kite; and with this cord a rope, or as many as ſhould be neceſſary, might be conveyed to the ſhip. It may readily be conceived that I cannot here enter into any detail concerning various circumſtances relating to this ſubject, which it might be neceſſary to mention.

2d, A ſmall balloon, of ſix or ſeven feet in diameter, and raiſed by rarified air, would be alſo an excellent means for the like purpoſe; being driven by the wind from the veſſel to the ſhore it would carry thither a ſtring capable of drawing a cord with which ſeveral ropes might be afterwards conveyed to the veſſel. Had not the diſcovery of citizen Montgolfier produced any other benefit, it would be entitled on this account to be conſidered as of great importance.

3d. A ſky rocket, of a large diameter would be of equal ſervice. It would alſo carry from the veſſel to the ſhore, a ſtring capable of drawing a rope after it.

M. Ruggier, whom I have conſulted on this ſubject, told me, that he made ſome inches in diameter, which roſe to great height; and that, with a ſtring attached to them they would go to the diſtance of four or five hundred fathoms which is more than would be neceſſary. They may be kept in a ſtate fit for ſervice two years, if depoſited in a dry place.

Laſtly, a fourth plan for ſaving the crew of a ſhipwrecked veſſel is, that of throwing from the veſſel into the ſea an empty caſk with a cord attached to it. The wind and waves would drive the caſk to the ſhore, and afford the means of eſtabliſhing that rope of communication already mentioned. Each of theſe methods may be improved, but I cannot at preſent enter into any detail.

A SATIRE UPON RUM.

From an American Gazette.

AMONG the many inventions and things publicly applauded, I think that good thing Rum is undeſervedly neglected. Perhaps, in apology for this public neglect, it may be ſaid, that the ſilent approbation, and practical regard, ſo many expreſs in conduct, is the beſt eulogy on Sir Richard's charades. Many have labored to calumniate Rum, and render it unpopular, by dwelling on ſome of its ſuppoſed bad effects.--But ſtill, an impartial examination of the whole effects of Rum, would, I believe, ſhow the unreaſonableneſs of thoſe invectives, which we frequently hear againſt it. Should it not be conſidered that all theſe invectives come from enemies? And whoſe character is good drawn by an enemy? But is it not fair to conſider the teſtimony of its friends? Are they not loud in its praiſe? And do they not in their perſon and in conduct, recommend it to every man's practice? And who is beſt qualified to give a juſt character?--Thoſe who know its nature and effects, or they who are unhappily ignorant of both? And I am perſuaded, that it is owing to early prejudices, and a wrong education, that every man is not a real friend to Rum. When the good effects of Rum, upon the body and mind of man, are conſidered, the word drunkard will convey the idea of a GREAT MAN. Inſtead of applying to the phyſician, let the pale emaciated youth often puke his bottle or lay aſide his profeſſional tools, and call where the rum barrel is freely pouring out its precious contents; and what a manly, vivacious, dignified countenance will this good creature ſoon give him! he will no longer be aſhamed of his meagre aſpect and brawny ſinews. He finds himſelf transformed into a gentleman in his appearance and gait. Indeed, many from whom nature has withheld the manly face, and perſonal reſpectability, have in defiance of her parſimony, acquired great corporeal preſence by Rum. A ſingle pint per day will give a man a more dignified, important countenance, and larger abdominal dimenſions, than ſeveral pounds of beef. And it is a fact, that much the greater part of thoſe ingenious, expreſſive faces, and large waiſtcoat contents which we meet in the ſtreet, are ſolely acquired by rum. Beſides, it is of infinite ſervice to the poor in the ſupport of their families, at this expenſive day. A judicious reſpectable man, of my acquaintance, who well knows the important ſervices of rum in his family, often obſerves, that he would rather have a pint of rum in his family than a peck or corn. The only queſtion is, which is the cheapeſt and handieſt?--Beſides, the effects of rum have a conſtant and prevailing tendency to counteract the educational prejudices, which fetter men in unnatural habits and reſtraints; and to reſtore them back to a ſtate of nature, equality and revlon.--For inſtance, going on two legs is certainly a childiſh prejudice, and contrary to the deſign of nature. The labors of our nurſes and mothers to learn our children to go on two legs, are all contrary to nature, and is one of the firſt of thoſe bad habits which we get from education. Nature has provided man with four, inſtead of two legs; and to be taught the uſe of two only in walking, is as abſurd as to put out one eye, becauſe man is born with two. We ſhould ſuppoſe it not only a cruel but foolish practice, ſhould our mothers put out one eye under a notion that one is ſufficient. Now, the nature of rum is to counteract this unnatural attitude, and give him the right uſe of all his legs. To ſee a man nobly mounted on ALL FOURS is a natural ſight, and a convincing proof that he has broken the ſhackles of a wrong education, and is faſt approaching the dignity of his nature. And how much more noble does man appear ſublimely ſupported in this manner, than tottering on two legs? And how much leſs expoſed to falls? Beſides, when a man has laid aſide the whim of going on two legs, it is one of thoſe few returns which are laſting. If a man's back or leg ſhould grow out of joint, the doctors may reſtore them, but they give no ſecurity againſt a future crooked back or leg.--But every victory which rum gains over wrong education and early prejudices, is permanent. A relapſe into thoſe habits and reſtraints is quite improbable.

The taxes are immenſely important becauſe if a man is born without a noſe or toe, they produce a compleument.--But he who firſt made Rum did more to ſublimate man than all the philoſophers of ancient or modern date. Beſides Rum, like the philoſopher's ſtone, turns all to gold, and ſoon enriches its friends. It opens a man's eyes to ſee, that induſtry and attention are low, vulgar methods of getting up in the world; its for clowns who know not the power of Rum. A man on the ſtrength of a ſingle pint, will make more great bargains with little money, than he would in a week without it. And he ſoon finds himſelf lifted, from the little, perplexing cares of a family, into a ſtate of manſelle indolence. When he returns home from the temple of Bacchus, deeply deeply inſpired with his ſpirit, he feels and acts like the maſter of a world; and with a truly independent ſpirit can in a heroic manner beat his wife, ſet fire ting alone in the chimney corner, and then as rich as Croeſus, reel ſublimely to bed, and ſleep without a dream of want. Beſides, the effects of Rum on the mind are equally beneficial. It inſpires genius, awakens the dormant faculties, and calls into action unknown energies. A ſingle glaſs will looſen the tongue and expand the mind. With a pint the mind will clearly comprehend any ſubject. With what overflowing eloquence, and all convincing demonſtration, are ſubjects diſcuſſed in a circle of reſpectable drunkards. From ſuch a circle no ſubject eſcapes without the deepeſt inveſtigation and candid deciſion. In a full bowl, the ingenious patriotic drinker can deſcry all the quick ſands and rocks, in which the political ſhip may be caſt away. In this chart, he can point a certain courſe for the captain of the ſhip, and can aſſure him, if he will not be ſo wiſe, as to adopt his plan, he will take the helm in his own hand! Beſides, how important is Rum at elections? A few gallons judiciouſly diſtributed, will ſo purge the viſual ray of a whole neighbourhood, that they can ſee qualifications for office, which no man can ſee without rum. A ſingle gill will recommend a candidate more convincingly than a whole string of newspaper publications. Such a candidate is always a steady friend to the public; and as long as he has sum he retains every qualification.

If in any instance, our inadvertence, has given pain or wounded the feelings of individuals we beg that it may be imputed to the errors of our judgement and not of our wills. It would not only argue unparalleled ingratitude, but phrenzy in us to incur, knowingly, the censure or displeasure of those, whose characters we revere, and from whose bounty we derive our subsistence. ANACREONTIC.

By William Preston, Esq.

I LOVE the friend, I love the lass,
That freely takes the circling glass:
I love to see the dancing eye
With the wine in lustre vie;
Or the coral lip combine
With the ruby of the wine.
Fill it, fill the mantling bowl,
Pledge me, ev'ry thirsty soul.

'Tis perdition to OLD CARE,
Pleasures to the young and fair:
Pleasures teeming, rising, flowing,
Never cloying, ever growing;
Pledge me, all ye young and fair,
'Tis perdition to OLD CARE.

OR have I heard FRANCISCO say,
Wine was but a torrid ray
From the blessed ORB OF LIGHT,
Giving sunshine in the night:
Giving summer's genial heat,
When December's tempests beat,
Give me light, the gleam to cheer,
Quick—a "Bowl of Sunshine" here!
I at Meridian Bumpers pass,
The sun delights to shine thro' glass.
"If clarets bottled sunshine be,
Eternal TORRID ZONES for me.

[From Cain's Patrol.]

SAY, pious shade, to what pure world of light
Hath guardian Angels wing'd thy happy flight;
Or in what shining planet dost though glow,
And view the changing scenes of life Below?
Or dust thou, still, unseen by mortal eye,
Watch o'er thy country, in this nether sky;
Or yet preside in that great court of state,
And counsel those with whom you sat so late?
If so, Great spirit, let no foreign hand,
E'er rise against the safety of our land;
Bid discord hush, intestine factions cease,
And calm each wind "would blast Columbia's peace?
And oft around thy sacred urn we'll join,
To parent Washington the saint divine.

ANECDOTE.

A Lawyer at Poughkeepsie was applied to during his life-time, by an indigent neighbor for his opinion on a question of law in which the interests of the latter were materially involved. The lawyer gave his advice, and charged the poor wretch three dollars for it. "There is the money," said his client; "'tis all I have in the world, and my family have been a long time without pork!" "Thank God, replied the lawyer, "my wife has never known the want of pork since we married." "Nor ever will, the countryman rejoined, for long as she has such a great hog as you." The lawyer was so pleased with the smartness of the repartee, that he forgave the poor fellow, and returned his money.

EXTRAORDINARY

Inſtance of generoſity in an Egyptain.

A Conflagration having reduced to aſhes of the principal moſques of Cairo, the muſſulmen imputed this calamity to the hatred of the Chriſtians; and, without examining if ſuch an accuſation was well founded or not, ſeveral young people ran to the quarter inhabited by Chriſtians, and ſat fire to it, by way of reprital.

Such an outrage deſerved the ſeverest puniſhment. The governor cauſed the perpetrators to be apprehended; but as the number was very great, he could not reſolve to doom to death ſo many young perſons, who were hurried into this exceſs more by paſſion than malice.

As many lots were thrown into an urn as amounted to the number of culprits: ſome few of theſe marked death; and all the others condemned the drawers only to correction of rods.

When they had all drawn their lots out of the fatal urn, one of thoſe condemned to death, cried out in a tranſport of grief, "I do not regret the loſs of life; but how will my parents, overwhelmed with ſorrow, and reduced to the greateſt miſery, be able to live without my aſſiſtance?"

One of thoſe that had eſcaped death, replied to him that was lamenting his fate: Friend I have neither father nor mother: my life is of no uſe to any one give me your lot and take mine!"—The ſurpriſing ſacrifice excited the admiration of every one preſent, and the governor who was informed of it, reprieved both the criminals.

THE MONITOR.

WHILE the revolving ſeaſons roll on in rapid ſucceſſion, the variegated face of nature not only proclaims an allwiſe and ſuperintending Providence, but an ample field of contemplation for our mental faculties; and an extenſive ſource of exerciſe for our animal powers.

At every returning period the eye is delighted with the regularity of nature's productions; uninterrupted delight is not the lot of mortals. Nature tho profuſe in its bounties, muſt be aſſiſted in its operations. The various ſeaſons are accompanied with demands for labor, care, and almoſt unremitted exertions. Theſe when purſued with proper moderation often produce pain and wearineſs, and if indulged to an immoderate exceſs will be attended with anxiety and vexation of ſpirit.

But the Great Parent of nature has ſo kindly diſpoſed events in the natural world, that as we paſs thro' life, much enjoyment is within our reach, while in health and in the vigor of life.—Diligence and activity is ſo far from being a courſe that it adds much to our felicity; it conſpires to health, promotes virtue, honeſty and ſimplicity of manners, gives a reliſh to the bounties of providence—prepares us for the hours of reſt, and renders them peculiarly agreeable. A dilligent and prudent courſe of life not only preſents us with prompt reward, but adds much to our happineſs an anticipation. Future proſpects are the grand ſtimulus to action, thoſe proſpects are brightened, and become animating in proportion to our prudent exertions.

Happineſs is undoubtedly the purſuit of all: But how different are the objects ſought for its attainment? While one is exceſſively laborious in accumulating wealth as his higheſt good, another is wholly immerſed in diſſipation and ſenſitive gratifications. Some never arrive to the ſummit of their wiſhes until they ſee their fellow men bowing before them in humble ſubmiſſion to their ſuperior accompliſhments, while others felicitate themſelves in an obſcure retreat from the public eye.—Enjoying the ſweets of domeſtic life, their mental defects undiſcovered by the world, their honeſt opinions, and well ment conduct unimpeachable by the ſurrounding multitude. Cultivation of the mind, refining the manners' correcting the morals, and enlarging the underſtanding, engroſſes the intention of ſome, as the faireſt road to happineſs: While others are ſuſceptible of no enjoyment higher than a mind filled with trifles, manners rough and auſtere, morals depraved, and the underſtanding an empty vacuum. Some there are who are fully ſenſible that complete happineſs is not to be obtained in any ſituation whatever in this imperfect ſtate, who under a conviction of this truth, extend their views to a permanent and uninterrupted ſtate of complete felicity exhibited before us in the chriſtian revolution, while others appear to limit their deſires to the riches, honors and pleaſures of this tranſitory world. When we reflect on the many purſuits of mankind we ſhall not be ſurprized at the different employments which occupy their attention, and the degrees of zeal and activity, that appear to animate them.

If we look no further than the ſmall ſphere of our own obſervation we ſhall ſee ſome wholly engroſſed in care and anxiety; wealth is their object, and they will ſpare no pains to obtain it.—It is at leaſt poſſible that ſome may have recourſe to fraudulent dealings, and oppreſſive exactions to add a little to their treaſures, if however they are free from this imputation, they deny themſelves the comforts and conveniences of life—ſeldom partake of a comfortable or regular meal—encroach on the uſual and neceſſary hours of reſt, when the ſun declines their work is unfiniſhed, darkneſs is ſubſtituted for light, the ſilence of midnight is interrupted with their buſtle after their imaginary happineſs, and the "dawn is prevented" with their renewed application. If ſucceſs attends their exertions they are ſtill unſatisfied; if diſappointment, they fret and murmur. It is poſſible that ſome kind of gratification belongs to ſuch a courſe of life, but ſurely it deſerves not the name of happineſs.

The oppoſite extreme of idleneſs and inattention tho' purſued by many, cannot be recommended as a proper path to true enjoyment. Idleneſs is generally accompanied with habits of luxury and expenſive indulgencies, and theſe are followed with vicious practices, till poverty, diſgrace and ruin terminates the career.

Among thoſe who make honors the rational point at which they aim, but few obtain the object of their wiſhes. An ardent thirſt in any man, for power and dominion is a ſtrong argument that he is diſqualified for the promotion he ſeeks, he who is poſſeſſed with deſires of promotion is apt (notwithſtanding his labor and art) to diſcover his inclinations to thoſe on whoſe ſuffrages he depends; a ſuſpicion naturally ariſes of his incompetency, and a more judicious and diſintereſted perſon is (generally ſpeaking) elected as his rival; but if by art and intrigue ſuch a man obtains his object, his conſpicuous ſtation diſcovers his inherent qualities, and inſtead of procuring that reverence and reſpect which he courted, his exit reſembles that of Haman's.

If happineſs in the higheſt degree that the preſent ſtate can afford, is our aim, a mediocrity is the moſt eligible ſituation.—A competency of the neceſſaries and conveniencies of life, obtained by the bleſſing of Heaven and our honeſt and diligent endeavors, is more conducive to our preſent comfort than the extremes either of a high ſtate of affluence, or a dejected ſtate of poverty. Contentment with the allotments of providence is neceſſary to our enjoyment of the comforts of life: It argues not only an ungrateful but an ungenerous temper, to murmur and repine, becauſe our neighbour's field yields a more plenteous crop, or his trees are more richly laden with fruit than ours. We ought always to conſider it a duty to be induſtriously employed, but ought carefully to avoid an anxious temper: When we have done what we conveniently can to day, we may cheerfully leave the remainder to a future time, we ought never to ſuffer the ordinary labors of life to diſturb our neceſſary repoſe, or encroach on the hours ſacred to devotion.

America, as repreſented in painting.

AMERICA is repreſented in painting by a woman almoſt naked, of a tawny complexion, her head and waiſt adorned with feathers of divers colors; in one hand a bow, in the other an arrow, and a quiver on her ſhoulder; at her feet a lizard; and round about her human limbs diſmembered, or a human head pierced with an arrow, to ſhew that ſome of the inhabitants are canibals.

A remarkable inſtance of Temerity in an Engliſh Soldier.

GEORGE Haſlewood, an Engliſh ſoldier, having been taken, in company with twenty-three Spaniards, by Prince Maurice, it was determined that eight of them ſhould be hanged, in requital for a like ſentence that had been made by Albert, the archduke, upon ſome Hollanders, and that it ſhould be decided by lot on whom the puniſhment ſhould fall. The Engliſhman happily drew his deliverance; but one Spaniard expreſſed great reluctance and terror of mind, when he put his hand into the helmet to try his fate, not ſo much in fear of death, as an antipathy to ſuch an unnatural deciſion, in which he might make his own hand deſtroy himſelf, and be executed for the guilt of others, or acquitted for no innocence of his own. The Engliſhman conſented to take what money he had, it ſtood to the chance for him. The judges conſented alſo to this requeſt, as that of a fool or a madman, who deſerved not the life he had ſo providentially obtained. Yet, ſuch his fortune was, that he threw himſelf ſafe. When he was aſked why he would put his life in ſuch danger again for the ſafety of another, and after ſuch a ſignal eſcape, ſo preſumptuouſly to hazard it a ſecond time? Becauſe, ſaid he, I thought I had a bargain of it; for conſidering that I daily expoſe myſelf for the value of ſix pence, I thought I might withmuch more reaſon venture it for twelve crowns.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, April 12.

TO OUR PATRONS.

WE cannot expreſs our grateful ſenſe of the Public Bounty and Liberality towards us, by any teſtimonial more ſatisfactory than by an humble attempt to merit a continuance of favor. FOR THE ORACLE.

DEAR CATO,

I Have had the pleaſure of peruſing your laconick and truely pathetick "Bonjour" performance. The ſublime and ſuperlatively beautiful language, in which it is couched, cannot fail to excite the Maiden's bluſh, incur the contempt of the wife, and entitle you to the plaudits of the vulgar.

That inimitable production evinces that your genius is peculiarly adapted to ſuch eloquence, and not to writing parliamentary eſſays; and it is preſumed that a treatiſe, upon the ſeveral ſubjects, introduced in that ſuperb work of genius (exhibited to the public on the 29th ult.) would be more lucrative than an itinerant vocation. Now, friend Cato, for the ſake of modeſty, delicacy, and propriety; but above all out of reſpect to the once ſcrimious and worthy Cato, deſiſt degrading his name by affaching it to a bundle of ribaldry and obſcenity. THE NEIGHBOR.

"A man may well ſtrive to earn more than what he may get honeſtly, uſe liberty, diſtribute cheerfully, and enjoy contentedly."

AS very few can have the opportunity, or will be at the pains and expence of purchaſing or reading books, compared with the number of thoſe who have an inclination, and can afford to purchaſe and peruſe Newſpapers, theſe weekly and diurnal vehicles of intelligence may be made the moſt uſeful inſtruments of inſtruction in the world. by theſe, not only the current news, but wholeſome advice, and important hints, relative to private and public life, may be ſpeedily handed to all claſſes and ages through the whole body of a nation.

The words of the wiſe, or the admoniſhions of the moraliſt, may be ſent into every family that receive the welcome ſheet. The man who rides poſt to carry the news, is a well received viſitor, and a uſeful member of the community. The Neighbor, who utters grave ſentences, or ſalutary counſel at ſecond hand, is not always the moſt impertinent in the neighborhood. A man though poor himſelf, yet if he is at the pains of picking up, and more generally and widely diſſeminating the golden treaſures which the more able have dug out of the mine for the public good he may conſole himſelf with the thought that he is not altogether an unprofitable ſervant.

The youth being the flower and the hopes of every nation, claim the benevolent ſolicitude of all, and the beſt admoniſhons and cautions of the moral claſſyfit. To ſuch numbers, in modern times, are the following ſentiments adapted, that we ſhall be pardoned, if not applauded, in handing them to the public in their original form, and recommending them to ſerious peruſal.

"Among the various devices which young men have invented to involve themſelves in difficulties and in ruin, none is more frequent than that of incurring debt without any real neceſſity. No ſooner is the aſpiring youth emancipated from his ſchool, or his guardian and ſuperintendents, than he becomes, in his own idea, a man; and not only ſo, but a man of conſequence whom it behoves to dreſs and make a figure—to accompliſh the purpoſe of making a figure, ſome expenſive vices are to be affected or practiſed. But as the ſtipends of young men juſt entering into life, are uſually inconſiderable, it is neceſſary to borrow upon the moſt advantageous terms, or to purchaſe the various requiſites of a pleaſurable life on credit. The debt ſoon accumulates from ſmall beginnings to a great ſum. The young adventurer continues, while his credit is good, in the ſame wild career; adieu to real pleaſure, or improvement, to honeſt induſtry, and to a quiet mind. His peace is wounded. A perpetual dread ſeems to weigh him down; and though his feelings may, by length of time and habit, become too callous to be affected by the miſery of his ſituation, yet he is loſt to all ſincere enjoyment, and if he does not fall a victim to diſpair, ſurvives only to gain a precarious exiſtence at the gaming table, to deceive the unwary, and to elude the purſuits of perſecuting creditors. Even if he is enabled by the death of his parents or rich relations, to pay the debts which his youthful folly has created; yet has he ſuffered long and much, and loſt the beginning of life, the ſeaſon of a rational delight and ſolid improvement, in diſtreſs and sures; in fabricating excuses and pretences, and in flying from the eager pursuits of dunns and bailiffs. But this folly however pregnant with misery, is entitled to pity, and may, to some degree admit of those usual palliations, youthful ardor and want of experience.—Thousands and tens of thousands have ruined their fortunes and their happiness, by hastily running into debt before they know the value of money, or the consequence of their embarrassments. We pity their misfortune; but in the first part of their progress we do not usually accuse them of actual dishonesty.

"But the habit of incurring debt, though in the earliest periods of life, it may originate in thoughtlessness, commonly leads to a crime most atrocious in itself, and injurious to society. He who prayed against poverty, left he should be put still fear, understood human nature. Difficulties and distresses have a natural tendency to lessen the restraints of conscience. The fortress of honor, when stormed by that sort of poverty which is occasioned by profligacy and not defended with sound principles (such as the men of the world do not often possess) has for the most part yielded at discretion. He then who began with incurring debts merely because he was stimulated by passion or fancy, and was not able to pay for their gratification, proceeds, when the habit is confirmed, and the first scruples dismissed, to contract debts, wherever unsuspected confidence will afford time and opportunity.

"The prodigacy, the vanity, the unceasing pursuit of pleasures, and the passion for external appearance, which characterise the present age, are necessarily productive of expence; expences occasion distress; and distress, when principles are dificient, dishonesty.—There is hardly any mode of public life, especially in the metropolis, in which you can be engaged, without having your property exposed to the depredations of villians, who have made cheating a profession; and reduced the arc of robbery to a system; I shall not hesitate to pronounce them more criminal and detestable than highway-men and house-breakers; because to the crime of actual theft, they add a most ungenerous breach of confidence."

THE DEITY.

AN ODE.

A Nobler theme my verfe infpires
Than Grecian bards were wont to fing,
The Deity, the Deity my bofom fires
Enwrapt my foul,
And as the fpheric planets roll
With equal force
I'd join them in their courfe
The great Creator's praife to fing.

Bear me aloft ye gentle Nine
Above pegafean flight,
I fing the Godhead all divine,
Cloth'd in tranfcendant light.
Peace around him always flowing,
Goodnefs infinite beftowing.
Nor earth and fea nor air,
Nor twilight gray nor morning fair
Can bound thy wide domain,
Beyond the thought of human heart,
Incomprehenfible thou art,
And endlefs is thy reign.

Higher ftill and higher
Now my voice infpire
With poetic fire,
Whilft I join the heavenly choir,
That in celeftial numbers fing
Glory to their God and King,
Glory far beyond compare,
God of earth and fea and air;
Glory glory ever bright,
God of day and God of night.
Thelift'ning earth repeats the found
Whilft with joy the heav'ns rebound.

See the planets as they run,
Their brilliant courfe around the fun;
See the fun's meridian blaze
Dazzling nature with its rays,
Spreading majefty around,
With awful eye
We view thefe wonders of the fky,
And almoft bend the knee profound
With reverence and delight,
At their great glory and effulgence bright.

Oh could our fancy rife
Above the clouds and pierce the fkies,
To view the Godhead in his great abode
The human mind fo bold,
That could in fancy ftut behold
The mighty majefty of God;
Freed from terreftrial maze,
With rapture he would gaze,
No after fight could ever pleafe,
The ftars would fink, the fun would fade
And all their brightnefs turn to fhade.
But words can't fpeak the Godhead's praife,
Nor fweteft of harmonic lays,
When heav'nly muſe the weaker,
In vain the human fancy ſoars,
The attributes of God explores;
In vain we mount on high,
In vain we pierce the fky,
Creation the Creator fpeaks.
There fearch around,
There is the Godhead found;
Elfe too great for human fight,
Oh! too magnificently bright.

An eſſay on Chimney Fire-places, with propoſals for improving them, to ſave Fuel; to render dwelling-houſes more comfortable and ſalubrious, and effectually to prevent Chimnies from Smoaking. By Benjamin Count of Rumford, F. R. S.

THE great inconvenience of ſmoaky chimnies has been a matter of general complaint, and many remedies have been deviſed to prevent it; ſome of which have anſwered much better than others. Yet none has been found upon trial to have ſo good an effect as that which Count Rumford has propoſed and confirmed by incontrovertible experience. The Count aſcribes the ſmoking of chimnies in general to the immoderate ſize of the throats, or lower extremity where they unite with the fire.

"As the immoderate ſize of the throats of chimnies is the great fault of their conſtruction, it is this fault which ought always to be firſt attended to in every attempt which is made to improve them; for however perfect the conſtruction of a fire-place may be in other reſpects, if the opening left for the paſſage of the ſmoke is larger than is neceſſary for that purpoſe, nothing can prevent the warm air of the room from eſcaping through it; and whenever this happens, there is not only an unneceſſary loſs of heat, but the warm air which leaves the room to go up the chimney being replaced by cold air from without, the draughts of cold air ſo often mentioned, cannot fail to be produced in the room, to the great annoyance of thoſe who inhabit it. But although both theſe evils may be effectually remedied by reducing the throat of the chimney to a proper ſize, yet in doing this ſeveral precautions will be neceſſary. And firſt of all, the throat of the chimney ſhould be in its proper place; that is to ſay, in that place in which it ought to be, in order that the aſcent of the ſmoke may be moſt facilitated; for every means which can be employed for facilitating the aſcent of the ſmoke in the chimney muſt naturally tend to prevent the chimney from ſmoking: now as the ſmoke and hot vapour which riſe from a fire naturally tend upwards, the proper place for the throat of the chimney is evidently perpendicular over the fire."

The principal method of prevention is to diminiſh the opening of the fire-place, and contract and lower the throat of the chimney. We ſhall let the count here ſpeak for himſelf.

"Nothing is ſo effectual to prevent chimnies from ſmoking, as diminiſhing the opening of the fire place in the manner here deſcribed, and lowering and diminiſhing the throat of the chimney: and I have always found, except in the ſingle inſtance already mentioned that a perfect cure may be effected by theſe means alone, even in the moſt deſperate caſes. It is true, that when the conſtruction of the chimney is very bad indeed, or its ſituation very unfavourable to the aſcent of the ſmoke, and eſpecially when both theſe diſadvantages exiſt at the ſame time, it may ſometimes be neceſſary to diminiſh the opening of the fire-place, and particularly to lower it, and alſo to lower the throat of the chimney, more than might be wiſhed; but ſtill I think this can produce no inconveniences to be compared with that greateſt of all plagues, a ſmoking chimney."

Chimnies altered on this plan anſwer beyond expectation, and heat the room more equally and pleaſantly with leſs than half the uſual fuel; the fire will be more cheerful and agreeable, and the general appearance of the fire-place more neat and elegant.

"Where a chimney is deſigned for warming a room of a middling ſize, and where the quickneſs of the wall of the chimney in front, meaſured from the front of the mantle to the breaſt of the chimney, is nine inches, I ſhould ſet off four inches more for the width of the throat of the chimney, which, ſuppoſing the back of the chimney to be built upright, as it always ought to be, will give 13 inches for the depth of the fire-place in front to the back. In this caſe, thirteen inches would be a good ſize for the width of the back; and three times thirteen, or thirty-nine inches, for the width of the opening of the fire-place in front: and the angle made by the back of the fire place and the ſides of it, or covings, would be juſt 135 degrees, which is the beſt poſition they can have for throwing heat into the room."

The beſt materials to employ in the conſtruction of fire-places are fire-ſtone and common bricks and mortar, both of which are fortunately very cheap, and ſhould be preferred to iron and metals of every kind as they abſorb leſs heat, and conſequently ſend more. With reſpect to the grate the Count makes the following remarks:

"Although there are few grates that may not be uſed in chimnies conſtructed or altered upon the principles here recommended, yet they are not, by any means, all equally well adapted for that purpoſe. Thoſe whoſe conſtruction is the moſt ſimple, and which of courſe are the cheapeſt, are beyond compariſon the beſt, on all accounts. Nothing being wanted in theſe chimnies but merely a grate for containing the coals, and ſo, which they will burn with a clear fire;—and all additional apparatus being, not only uſeleſs, but very pernicious, all complicated and expenſive grates ſhould be laid aſide, and ſuch as are more ſimple ſubſtituted in the room of them. And ſo the choice of a grate as in every thing elſe, beauty and elegance may eaſily be united with the moſt perfect ſimplicity. Indeed they are incompatible with every thing elſe.

The only complaint which has ever been made againſt theſe alterations was, that they made the room too warm; but the remedy to this evil is ſo obvious that we forbear to mention it, leſt it might be conſidered as an inſult on the underſtanding of our readers.

COMMON SENSE,

IN DISHABILLE.

"Every one to his Trade."

WHAT ſhall a man do who has no trade? learn one. Every one need not be a mechanic, but let every body have ſome honeſt employment, underſtand their buſineſs, "ſtick to their trade" and let other people's affairs alone.—This is the way to grow rich and live happy.

When I go into the barber's ſhop, and hear mr. Tonſor, whoſe information extends little beyond his ſingle, private politics, part the French directory I ſay to myſelf, "every one to his trade." A wig, and a conſtitution, are very different things; a man may be quite a connoiſſeur in one, and very ignorant of the other. Tonſor's tongue proves this as fully as a "ſtrong argument chairs."

The induſtrious farmer or mechanic, who are not content with ſmall and ſure gain, ſhould remember, "a bird in the hand is worth two in the buſh."—After they have tried their deſt experiments in merchandiſe, horſe jockeying, or land ſpeculation, they will have reaſon to lament their not adhering to my text. "Any trade is good, if well followed." A man may make more at journey work in a poor trade, that he is maſter of, than by an apprenticeſhip in better buſineſs, that he is unacquainted with. The lawyer harangues for his client, reads authorities, quotes precedents, reaſons, defines, and ſplits hairs; ſays much that you don't underſtand, much that you are unable to contradict and more that you don't believe; you hear him through, from, "May it pleaſe your honors," to "I ſubmit it to you, gentlemen of the jury;"—you approve of part—of the reſt you only ſay, he is a lawyer, "every one to his trade."

But ſay ignorance, prejudice and rogues, this is an unneceſſary trade, a diſhoneſt trade—hold, friends; "all trades muſt live." While there are rogues, ignorance and prejudice, there muſt be laws, and while there are laws there muſt be lawyers, or every body muſt leave their trade to ſtudy law.—When two perſons are at variance, they think very different of the merits of their cauſe; they tell different ſtories to their lawyers—both ſides are ſure of the cauſe;—Lawyer is not a conjuror; he can't forgtel what the witneſſes will ſay, when they will come before the court. Out comes the truth againſt the unfortunate client; he loſes his caſe; and makes amends by curſing the profeſſion. Deal fairly with your neighbors, tell the plain truth to your attorney, and you will have little occaſion to ſpeak ill of the lawyer's trade.

Character of Maria Thereſa of Auſtria.

THIS princeſs, who had been educated with the moſt tender care by the emperor her father, was early initiated into the myſteries of the elegant arts, to which ſhe remained a liberal patroneſs, amidſt all the perils and viciſſitudes of her reign, to the end of her life.—Her piety has been thought to border on bigotry; but if we may judge of its effect, by the tranquility, happineſs and affection of her people, compared with the turbulence, diſcontent, and deteſtation of the ſubjects of her unprincipled, philoſophical, and diſorganizing ſucceſſor, we may ſuppoſe that too much religion is leſs miſchievous in a ſovereign, than too little. In the two long wars with her formidable foe, the late king of Pruſſia, ſhe ſupported the frequent reverſes of her fortune with abilities, fortitude, and dignity.—And after a reign of forty years, in which ſhe deſervedly merited the title of her people, ſhe died univerſally regretted, and her name and reign are ſtill remembered with the utmoſt reverence and regret, by her ſurviving ſubjects. A conſiderable part of her life was employed in beſtowing benefits on the indigent, particularly orphans of both ſexes; and among the laſt words which ſhe was able to utter, are recorded the following, to her ſon and ſucceſſor, of which hiſtory has not yet diſputed the truth: "If I have done any thing reprehenſible during my reign, it has certainly been without my knowledge; for I have always had the public good in view. My heart has never been hardened againſt the unhappy: and this is the greateſt comfort of my laſt moments." She had been acquainted with the buſineſs of the cabinet by her father, at fourteen years of age, and attended his councils. The frequency of her petitions in favour of worthy objects, made the emperor one day cry out, "I ſeem to think a ſovereign has nothing to do but grant favours,"——to which ſeeming rebuke, ſhe anſwered: "I ſee nothing elſe can make a crown ſupportable:" and theſe were not words lightly uttered without feeling. Innumerable inſtances of her benevolence and pity for the diſtreſſed, are recorded. Having perceived a ſick ſoldier on duty, at one of the gates of her palace, ſhe immediately ordered him to be relieved, and conducted in a carriage to the hoſpital. These are my recreations."—The good woman, transported to hear her sovereign speak to her with such condescending goodness, cried out—"Though I have no other child than this which you restore to me, and whom I love more than my life, I would this instant see him expire, if his death could be of any service to your majesty." The empress queen, without any other guard than the hearts of her subjects, was accessible to all, without distinction of rank. "I am only a beggarly peasant, (said a poor Bohemian labourer) but I can speak to our good queen, whenever I please; and she listens to me as if I was a lord."—The empress one day returning to her palace, perceived a woman and two children whom she could hardly drag along. Hunger had driven them from their miserable dwelling. "How have I offended Providence, (says she) that I should be witness of such a sight?" And immediately gave orders that her own dinner should be carried to them: and had herself no other reflection than the tears she shed over the mother and her almost famished offspring. They are my children (says she) and shall never a guid be driven to beggary."—"I lament the time I am forced to give to sleep, as it is a robbery from my people."

Outlines of the new French Constitution.

THE supreme consul has all power of appointment to posts in the army and navy—of ambassadors and ministers of state—of justice. He is commander in chief of the armies, and has the initiation of all laws. His term of office is ten years—and is constantly re eligible.

The conservatory body is compoled of fixty members—who have been appointed by the consuls and the two commissioners from the legislative bodies of the old government. They hold their office for life, have power of filling up vacancies—but have no decisive or efficient influence—it extending only to determine the constitutionality of laws.

The tribunate chosen after a long process of siltration from the people—receives all laws from the first consul—discusses them publicly—afterwards three from their body go to the legislative body, where these three deputies meet three more from the executive or chief consul—who explain the nature of the laws proposed. After this elucidation they retire—and the legislative body without debate, make their determination in secret.

PARIS, December 15.

The three consuls were named the day before yesterday by the two commissioners. Buonaparte was unanimously appointed first consul. Cambaceres and Lebrun had each 2 votes. The consuls and five persons who are to assist them met last night to appoint the conservators to the number of 60. These so will elect the tribunes and senators. The consuls appoint the ministers and the thirty counsellors of state.

Dec. 16.

The new constitution was published at Paris yesterday with much pomp.

Dec. 18.

The constitution does not prevent the first consul from taking the command of the armies. Thus it is said if Buonaparte does not this winter induce Austria to make peace, his intention is in the spring to put himself at the head of the armies, to sign a peace in the heart of Germany.

The American ambassadors who have been appointed to negociate with France have just landed at Lisbon, from whence they will proceed to Paris.

The registers of acceptance and non-acceptance are opened at Paris. The confluence is prodigious, and the whole of the votes almost are in favour of the new constitution.

Dec. 20. It has been insinuated that the registers will one day serve for lists or proscription; but we hear they are to be burnt as soon as the numbers are known.

It appears from the speeches of the king of Prussia to Duroc, as well as from different reports from Constantinople, that the Porte has altogether given up Egypt.

The Helvetic government is about to experience a change necessary to disappoint projects unfavourable to the unity and independence of that republic.

Three hundred and twenty members of the council of 500 have accepted and signed the new constitution; which, considering the number of deputies excluded, and of those on mission, makes upwards of seven eighths of what remain.

It is believed the members of the conservative senate hitherto elected, are twenty-one.

SIEYES.

The commissioners received the following message from the consuls:

The consuls of the French republic act conformably to the unanimously manifested will of the two legislative commissions, by proposing to you to decree to citizen Sieyes a signal proof of the national gratitude.

The citizen who, after having enlightened the people by his writings, and done honor to the revolution by his disinterested virtues, refuseds at first the chief magistracy, and accepted it afterwards, only from the sense of the dangers by which it was surrounded, is assuredly worthy of the distinction which you will decree to him, and a refusal of which will not be permitted to him when the organ of the law shall have spoken.

The consuls of the republic, in order to adhere to your desire, and in conformity with the law of 19th Brumaire, submit to you the formal and necessary propositions to decree to citizen Sieyes, by way of national recompence, the property of one of the domains which are at the disposal of the state.

The Consuls of the Republic.

BUONAPARTE.

(Signed) ROGER DUCOS.

H. B. MARET, Sec. Gen.

The message was referred to the section of France.

Armand of the Seine, soon after made a report upon the message, and proposed the following resolution, which was agreed to.

The commissioners, considering that it is of importance to the stability of every political institution to afford signal proof of gratitude to citizens who have rendered great services to the country, resolves as follows:

The national domain of Crosne, in the department of the Seine and Oise, or any other equivalent in value, is decreed in full and entire property to citizen Sieyes, as a national recompence.

LONDON, Dec. 27.

THE armistice upon the Rhine is at an end. The archduke refused to accede to it, and noticed his refusal on the 8th to the French commandant at Manheim. The French who were inferior in force, immediately made dispositions to retreat, and evacuated by capitulation Manheim and the Nechereau, of which the Austrians immediately took possession. In order to divide and divert the attention and forces of the archduke, gen. Lecourbe means immediately to enter Suabia from the side of Switzerland. Suwarrow's army continuing its march, had arrived at Ratisbon, where on the 11th he received dispatches from Petersburgh, in consequence of which the troops were ordered to halt.

INFANT SPRING.

THE infant spring returns again,
The wild birds plume their wings,
To cheer the artless nymph and swain,
Hark how the woodland rings!

Now let me hail the breezy morn,
While muse fills the vale:
And listen to the huntsman's horn,
Which echoes through the dales.

Beside the brook, or up the hill,
Or o'er the flow'ry lawn,
The laboring peasant trudges still,
At early peep of dawn.

Let me enjoy the rural shade,
Where nature smiles around,
And ev'ry swain, and ev'ry maid,
With innocence is crown'd.

OFFICIAL.

Second letter from the Minister for Foreign Affairs at Paris, with its accompanying enclosures; and the answer returned by the right honourable Lord Grenville, his Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign affairs.

[TRANSLATION.]

Paris, 24 Nivose, 8th year Fra. 14. 1800.

My Lord,

I LOST no time in laying before the first consul of the French republic, the official note under the date of the 14th Nivose, which you transmitted to me; and I am charged to forward the answer, equally official, which you will find annexed. Receive, my lord, the assurance of my high consideration.

(Signed) CH. MAU. TALLEYRAND.

To the Minister of Foreign Affairs at London.

Translation of the note referred to in No. 1.

The official note under the date of the 14th Nivose, the 8th year, addressed by the minister of his Britannic Majesty, having been laid before the First Consul of the French republic, he observed with surprise that it rested upon an opinion, which is not exact, respecting the origin and consequences of the present war. Very far from its being France which provoked it, she had it must be remembered, from the commencement of her revolution solemnly proclaim her love of peace, and her disinclination to conquest, her respect for the independence of all governments and it is not to be doubted that, accupied at that time entirely with her own internal affairs, she would have avoided taking part in those of Europe, it would have remained faithful to her declarations.

But from an opposite disposition, as soon as the French revolution had broken out, almost all Europe entered into a league for its destruction. The aggression was real a long time before it was public; internal resistance was excited; its opponents were favourably received; their extravagant declamations were supported; the French nation was insulted in the person of its agents; and England set particularly the example by the dismissal of the minister accredited to her. Finally, France was in fact attacked in her independence, in her honor, and in her safety, long time before the war was declared.

Thus it is to the projects of subjugation, dissolution, and dismemberment, which were prepared against her, and the execution of which was several times attempted and purfued, that France has a right to impute the evils which she has suffered, and those which have afflicted Europe. Such projects for a long time without example, with respect to so powerful a nation, could not fail to bring on the most fatal consequences.

Allied on all sides, the republic could not but extend universally the efforts of her defence; and it is only for the maintenance of her own independence that she has made use of those means which she possessed in her own strength and the courage of her citizens. As long as the foe that her enemies obstinately [illegible] to recognise her rights (be confi[illegible] only upon the energy of her resistance; but so soon as they were obliged to abandon the hopes of invasion, she sought means for conciliation, and manifested pacific intentions; and if these have not always been effectious; if, in the midst of the critical circumstances of her internal situation, which the revolution and the war have successively brought on, the former depositaries of the executive authority in France have not always shewn as much moderation as the nation itself has shewn courage, it must, above all, be imputed to the hateful and persevering animosity with which the resources of England have been lavished to accomplish the ruin of France.

But if the wishes of his Britannic Majesty (in conformity with his assurances) are in unison with those of the French republic, for the re-establishment of peace, why, instead of attempting the apology of the war, should not attention be rather paid to the means of terminating it? And what obstacle can prevent a mutual understanding of which the utility is reciprocal, and is felt especially when the first consul of the French republic has personally given so many proofs of his eagerness to put an end to the calamities of war, and of his disposition to maintain the rigid observance of all articles concluded.

The first consul of the French republic could not doubt that his Britannic Majesty recognized the right of nations to choose the form of their government, since it is from the exercise of this right that he holds his crown; but he has been unable to comprehend how this fundamental principle, upon which rests the existence of political societies, the minister of his Majesty could annex insinuations which tend to an interference in the internal affairs of the republic, and which are no less injurious to the French nation, and to its government, than it would be to England, and to his Majesty, if a sort of invitation was held out in favour of that republican government, of which England adopted the forms in the middle of the last century, or an exhortation to recall to the throne that family whom their birth had placed there, and whom a revolution compelled it to discard from it.

If at periods not far distant, when the constitutional system of the republic presented neither the strength nor the solidity which it contains at present, his Britannic Majesty thought himself enabled to invite a negociation and pacific conferences, how is it possible that he should not be eager to renew negotiations to which the present and reciprocal situation of affairs promises a rapid progress. On every side the voice of nations and of humanity implores the conclusion of a war marked already by such great calamities, and the prolongation of which threatens Europe with an universal convulsion and irremediable evils. It is therefore to put a stop to the course of these calamities, or in order that their terrible consequences may be reproached to those only who shall have provoked them, that the first consul of the French republic proposes to put an immediate end to hostilities by agreeing to a suspension of arms, and naming plenipotentiaries on each side, who should repair to Dunkirk, or any other town as advantageously situated for the quickness of the respective communications, and who should apply themselves without any delay to effect the re-establishment of peace and good understanding between the French republic and England.

The first consul offers to give the passports which may be necessary for this purpose.

Letter from Lord Grenville to the Minister for Foreign Affairs at Paris.

Downing-street, Jan. 20, 1800.

SIR,

I have the honor to inclose to you the answer which his Majesty has directed me to return to the official note which you transmitted to me. I have the honor to be, with the highest consideration, Sir, your most obedient humble servant.

(Signed)
GRENVILLE.

To the minister for foreign affairs, &c. &c. at Paris.

Note referred to in the preceding.

THE official note transmitted by the minister for foreign affairs in France, and received by the undersigned on the 18th inst. has been laid before the King.

His Majesty cannot forbear expressing the concern with which he observes, in that note, that the unprovoked aggressions of France, the sole cause and origin of the war, are systematically defended by her present rulers, under the same injurious pretences by which they were originally attempted to be disguised. His Majesty will not enter into the refutation of allegations now universally exploded, and (in so far as they respect his Majesty's conduct) not only in themselves utterly groundless, but contradicted both by the internal evidence of the transactions to which they relate, and also by the express testimony (given at the time) of the government of France itself.

With respect to the object of the note his Majesty can only refer to the answer which he has already given.

He has explained, without reserve, the obstacles which in his judgment preclude at the present moment all hopes of advantage from negociation. And the inducements to treat, which are relied upon in the French official note; the personal disposition which are said to prevail for the conclusion of peace and for the future observance of treaties; the power of insuring the effect of those dispositions, supposing them to exist; and the solidity of the system newly established, after so rapid a succession of revolutions—all these points which can be known only from that test to which his Majesty has already referred them—the result of experience and the evidence of facts.

With that sincerity and plainness which his anxiety for the re-establishment of peace indispensibly required, his Majesty has pointed out to France the surest and speediest means for the attainment of that great object. But he has declared in terms equally explicit, and with the same sincerity, that he entertains no desire to prescribe to a foreign nation the form of its government; that he looks only to the security of his own dominions and of Europe; and that whenever that essential object can in his judgment be, in any manner whatever sufficiently provided for, he will eagerly concert with his allies the means of immediate and joint negociation for the re-establishment of general tranquillity.

To these declarations his majesty steadily adheres; and it is only on the grounds thus stated, that his regard to the safety of his subjects will suffer him to renounce that system of vigorous defence, to which under the favor of Providence, his kingdoms owe the security of those blessings which they now enjoy.

LONDON, Jan. 27.

Yesterday the Dublin mail of the 22d reached town. We learn from our correspondent, that on Thursday Napper Tandy was to be brought down to the court of King's Bench, for the purpose of being identified. It was expected that he would soon afterwards be ordered for execution; the arts of the Anti-Unionists have been but too successful in Dublin with the rabble, whose minds were in a state of great irritation.

BRUSSELLS, Jan. 6.

The news from the interior of Germany announces only the difficulties which had arisen between the houses of Austria and Russia, relative to the settlement of the approaching reinstatement of the King of Sardinia. The two powers are resolved to continue the war, if the basis of the peace be not status quo ante bellum. The most formidable preparations are making for the ensuing campaign. If such be the pretensions of the Allied Powers, the termination of this disastrous and bloody war cannot be foreseen.

FRANKFORT, Jan. 9.

The Count de Goertz, the Prussian minister at Ratisbon, has announced, that the Emperor of Russia had signed, on the 3d ult. an order for the return of the Russian army to the banks of the Rhine.

United States.

ALBANY, April 5.

London papers are received at New York to the 6th Feb. by the Pallas, capt. Boden, in 54 days from Liverpool.—They mention, that the leading points of the Union between Ireland and Great Britain, are finally agreed upon.—There will be a creation of seven Irish peers previous to the union.—The united parliament is to be called "The Imperial Parliament of the British Isles." On a motion in the Irish Parliament, Jan. 16, to censure the measure of an union, it was negatived by a majority of 42 in favor of government—and it was expected, when the question of union should come on, which was fixed for the 22d of Feb. there would be an accession of 24 members to the majority. —That a palace from Egypt bound to Toulon, with confidential letters to the late directory, had been captured, and the packet, which had been thrown overboard, recovered by an English sailor.—The letters, by report, contain the most vehement complaints of the French lawyers for the desertion of Buonaparte—and bitter complaints against the government for leaving them to perish in that unnatural country.—That the French army is reduced to seven thousand men, without cloaths or ammunition, utterly unfit to resist the Turkish army, which is 40,000 strong, and supplied with every necessary. The packet also contained numbers of pensive epistles from husbands to their wives, and from lovers, sons and brothers to their sympathising friends.

That the Brest fleet was expected soon to put to sea.—That advices had been received that upwards of forty sail of French merchantmen are on their passage from the Isle of France, under Danish colours.

A letter from Lord Bentinck, dated Dec. 4. gives an official account of the surrender of the fortress of Coni.—The garrison consisted of 2800 men, besides 800 wounded.—The batteries opened on the 2d in the morning, and on the 3d the garrison capitulated. His lordship adds, "that the very short defence that has been made of this very strong and most important fortress, is to be attributed to the want both of provisions and ammunition."

A letter from Mr. Wickham, mentions the death of the Advoyer Steiguer, on the 3d Dec. and that "his death is an irreparable loss to Switzerland."

The brave gen. Championet is also dead, after twelve days illness of an epidemic disorder, on the 12th Jan. aged 37 years.

The Paris papers mention the arrival of a French officer, with dispatches from gen. Kleber—they state, that the whole army of Egypt has been cloathed—that a great part of the troops of Upper Egypt are mounted on dromedaries, and that the spirit of the army is excellent; that gen. Kleber and the Grand Vizier are parleying.

That several of the Chouan chiefs have accepted the pacification, but refute their assent to disarming the rebels. One of the journals mentions that 8000 Chouans have been killed in an action near Mans, which lasted 8 hours.

Intelligence is received from the American consul at Surinam, that the American commissioners have failed from Lisbon to some port in France—and that two of the secretaries of the embassy had proceeded by land to Paris.

The ship Galen with 1600 barrels of flour is arrived at Liverpool from New York.

PARIS, Dec. 28.

Ministry of General Police.

The consuls of the republic, in virtue of the law of the 29th of this month regarding individuals nominally condemned to banishment, without previous trial, by a legislative act, having heard the report of the minister of Police, decreed:

Art. 1. It shall be permitted to the individuals hereafter named, to re-enter the territory of the republic.

Art. 2. They shall return, and remain under the superintendance of the minister of police, in the communes marked out for them as follows:—Lafond Ladebat has permission to return to Paris; Barthelemy to Paris; Boissy d'Anglas to Annonay; Couchery to Besancon; Belcheve to Rouen; Delarue to La Chartie for Loire; Doumere to Paris; Dumolard to Greenoble; Duplantier to Paris; Duprat to Tartas; Giot to Auxerre; Le Marchand Gouticourt to Rouen; Jourdan (Andre Joseph) to Orleans; Merlain to Berugency; Madier to Auxerre; Noailles to Thoulouse; J. J. Aime to Dijon, Borne to Puy; Andre (of Losere) to Toulouse; Marcau to Besancon; Cochon to Paris; Paradis to Auxerre; Muraire to Paris; Launont to Nevers; Prairie Montaut to Paris; Leonor Quiney to Paris; Saladin to Valenciennes; Simon to Paris; Viennot Vaublanc to Mulen; Villaret Joyeuse to Paris; Barbe Aorbois to Paris; Dumas to Sens; Barrere to Paris; Vadier to Chartres; Poliffard to Macon.

Art. 3. The communal administrations shall inform the minister of Police of the arrival of each individual in their respective districts.

Art. 4. Every individual comprehended in one of the laws of Germinal year 3, and the 19th Fructidor, year 5, and not named in this list, who shall re-enter the French territory, without being authorised by an express permission from government, shall be considered and prosecuted as an emigrant.

Art. 5. The minister of general police is charged with the execution of the present decree, which shall be printed.

December 29.

The conservative senate is already in the exercise of its functions at the Luxembourg. Its sittings are secret. Sieyes is chosen president.

The Polish general Kuiozewich has sent general Kofciusko the sword of John Sobieski, which had been depofited by that prince in the church of our lady at Loretto, after he had conquered the Turks, and which fell into the hands of the Poles at the time the place was conquered. All the Poles, at the time this weapon was presented to Kofciusko, offered up prayers that in his hands it might again become the terror of the enemies of their country.

December 30.

Pafwan Oglou.

A letter from Semlin, dated the 4th inst. says, that Pafwan Oglou was in full march against Belgrade, and that the Pacha of that place was preparing to receive his attack with vigor. The magazines are provided with provisions and ammunition.—The Pacha, however, is alarmed with respect to the janizaries, who seem to be devoted to the interest and views of Pafwan Oglou.

Sieyes has accepted the domain of Crosne, and has thanked the legislative body for that national recompense. It was doubtless announced as a matter of ridiculous pleasantry by some writers a few days ago, that he had refused the gift of the nation.

The consuls of the republic to the conservatory senate.

Paris, Dec. 28.

SENATORS,

"The consuls of the republic hasten to inform you, that the government has been installed. They will employ under every circumstance, all their resources and means to destroy the spirit of faction, to create public spirit, and to consolidate that constitution which is the object and wishes of the French people. The conservative senate will be animated with the same desire, and by its junction with the consuls, will defeat the plans of those who may be opposed to the public happiness; should any such exist in the first institution of the state."

Council of State, sitting of Dec. 26.

The Second Consul, President.

The minister of justice having proposed to the council to demand a law for the purpose of revoking those which excluded the relevant nobles, and the relations of the emigrants from the exercise of public functions, it was resolved by the council of state, that it was useless to demand such a law, because the constitution, by determining (art. 4 and 5) the only case in which political rights may be revoked or suspended; and not comprehending in such cases either the relations of emigrants, or any other class of citizens, more particularly when there no longer exists any distinct classes, it was therefore impossible to suppose other exclusions.

The college of conservators, by naming for the tribunate, the legislative body, and its own institution, men who have been excluded from those functions by previous laws, had suppofed them to be abrogated.

Sitting of December 27.

The Council of State has adopted a project of consular decree, drawn up by the legislative section, which abrogates all administrative decrees, by which the opening of the places confecrated to religious worship was interdicted on other days than the decadi.

The council also adopted another decree, drawn up by the same section, stating that all the public functionaries, the ministers of religion, preceptors, and other persons, who were by the laws previous to the constitution, bound to take an oath, should substitute for it the following declaration—"I promise to be faithful to the constitution."

A third project of decree was adopted, which states in substance, that the communes, which on the first day of the 2d year were in possession of edifices intended for religious worship, should continue to use them freely under the constituted authorities, and according to the terms of the laws of 11th Prairial of the 3d year, and that of 7th Vendemaire of the 4th year, provided that the said edifices have not been since alienated, and provided the purchasers of them have not been liable to prolecution or inconvenience.

December 28.

We received this morning the Paris papers to the 26th instant, three days later than those which arrived yesterday.

The consuls and the legislative commissioners, continuing to adopt measures for giving immediate activity to the constitution, have published the names of the conservative senators, the tribunate and the council of state. A report has also been presented to the commission of five hundred, propoling that the conservative senate and the consuls should enter upon their functions on the 25th inst. and that as soon as the senate had completed the nomination of the members of the tribunate and the legislative body, which was to be completed on the 26th, the council of ancients and of five hundred, and the legislative commissioners should be diffolved.

This proposition, together with some other regulations respecting the new government, were immediately adopted.—The last sittings of the Councils were on the 25th, when the consuls and the senate were installed. The unfortunate persons who were so unjustly sentenced to transportation after the revolution of the 18th Fructidor, have at length engaged the attention of the legislature, whole last act almost has been upon the suggestion of the minister of police and the consuls, to pass a decree, in virtue of which the unhappy sufferers who were transported to Guiana, and other places, will in all probability, be permitted immediately to return to their country.

The constitution is very generally accepted, and the votes of rejection are but very few.

On the Rhine the two armies remain tranquil. The cause of the archduke's refusal to consent to the armistice, seems to have been, because it was only a partial one. The Paris papers contain an important address from the archduke respecting the late revolution in Paris. We still expect that a suspension of arms extending from the Rhine to Switzerland and Italy, will take place.

In Italy the Austrians proceed still in their career of victory. Coni is said to have surrendered by capitulation on the 3d inst. The garrison consisting of 3000 men, are prisoners of war. In consequence of this event, the French will probably, unless they are very strongly reinforced, be obliged to fall back upon Nice.

An article from Nice, on the 15th, says the head quarters were expected there. Moreau has set out to take the command of the army of the Danube. —Massena was to leave Paris in a few days, to put himself at the head of the army of Italy.

The Chouans have not undertaken any operation of decisive importance against the republicans. According to a letter from Angers of the 21st, they sent on the preceding evening three deputies, it is said, to enter into a definitive treaty.

PARIS, Dec. 29.

The armistice on the Rhine is officially published the very moment that we hear of its having been broken. The Chouans also continue to violate the armistice.

Moreau had given in his resignation after some warm words with the minister of war; but a reconciliation having taken place, the general will immediately take the command of his army.

December 18.

The news from the Cotes de Nord state, that the Chouans are organizing themselves more and more—8000 are in the departments of the west—they have in ten days received 56 waggons of ammunition.

Dec. 20.

Buonaparte has been slightly indisposed—after long want of sleep, labour, and fatigue, almost even beyond the strength of man, he always drinks coffee in great quantities.

The constitution has been unanimously accepted this day by the invalids of the National Hotel.

December 22.

It is reported that Cardinal Mauury is elected Pope: but it wants confirmation.

The two principal negociators at Campo Formio, Count Cobentzel and the Marquis de Gallo, are recalled from Petersburgh.

YORK, Saturday, April 26.

FOR THE ORACLE.

GENTLEMEN,

I Observe that the exiguous integer of folly, who (pardon the expreſſion) ſeems affected with a mental CHOLERA MORBUS; who inſults common-ſenſe under the ſignature of "A FARMER," is ſtill tormenting the public with reiterated abſurdity.—He muſt have heard his firſt monſter of this kind (which in his ſecond he gives us to underſtand was a "parliamentary eſſay) publicly execrated as the vileſt offspring of folly---The idle, the nefarious belchings of an aſſuming ignoramus; void of reaſoning in its ſubſtance, of common grammar in its compoſition, and an outrage on the general ſenſe of mankind. If in his pitiful production he had other aim than of making his folly a public ſpectacle---that aim has on his part been completely defeated: The worthy perſon whom he has made the hero of his farce, whoſe virtues he has gibbeted in a news-paper: him he probably wiſhed to ſerve; by inveſting with "a large ſhare of mother-wit," he has hung him out as a ſcare-crow to the doliſh; by his uncommon honeſty, as a ſtumbling block to knaves; by his want of "a refined education," as a ſtanding and conſpicuous foil to the learned; and as will be generally acknowledged by the uncommon groſſneſs of his daubing, has as completely ſucceeded in convincing the world that his hero is not "a Fox, a Pitt and a Burke." Nothing that this THING has either ſaid or wrote on the ſubject, is worthy animadverſion, except his intolerable preſumption which can only be exceeded by his ſtupidity. This at a time that it reminds me of what I advanced in my firſt addreſs to my fellow electors, to wit: that ignorance not unfrequently produces the effect of evil deſign, fills me with a painful apprehenſion that the incautious complacence of the printers, may wring from them, the tears of reprobation, may expoſe them to ſuffer from the effects of cenſure undeſignedly incurred.

Whoever is endowed with patience ſufficient to peruſe his ſecond "parliamentary eſſay," or rather his mother-wit NOT A BENE, will perceive how the thing is rankled; becauſe, forſooth, ſomething ſerious was not ſaid as a comment on his firſt. The fact is, I thought him an adverſary, too puny to contend with, pearls were never given to be waſted on ſwine. A peruſal of his firſt eſſay excited in me alternate pity and contempt. I took it up charitably, and threw it down diſguſted, I ſighed for the votaries of folly, and pitied their thoubleſome infatuation.

This eſſayiſt could not be unacquainted with the general diſguſt, which his firſt unhappy rhapſody excited; yet muſt he pour forth another, which, tho' ſhorter and more turgid, is as wretched in conception, as void of connection as the firſt: to me it is impoſſible to peruſe them without viſual and mental diſtortion. In his warm, miſtaken, and unfortunate attempt to appreciate that candidate whom all eſteem for his virtues, he has made him appear more ridiculous than the moſt malicious invention could have done. His intentions might have been kind, their operation was moſt uncouth.

Let me aſſure this farſling of a ſcribbler, that were he to write till doomsday, my reading ends with his twain. Reaſon ſickens at the idea, memory revolts at the recollection, the emotions they create are too painful to

CATO.

My proſe, gentlemen I addreſs to you, my verſe to your learned Farmer.

CEASE Farmer, ceaſe your calabaſh to ſtrain,
Or thus torment your ſpumy addle brain;
Drop then the quill, again reſume the plough,
Such is the ſervice due your country now.
Stain not the ſheet, nor proſtitute the type,
Till as your corn, your genius it gets ripe;
Until that time, plow, ſow, manure and till,
Nor thus outrageous vex the type and quill.
On rainy days, if you a primmer have,
It you may ſtudy, waſh your face and ſhave;
Be clean and learn'd, your leadinglines next mend,
Your ſhoes next greaſe, and next your ſwine attend.
Your book-accounts, keep them all fair and pat,
This charge with turnips—with potatoes that;
This, of your oxen charge a full day's work,
And ſo much beef exchanged with that for pork.
The pounds of wool exchanged with this for fire,
The eggs ſtill due your ſhoemaker for wax;
The weaver's debt then to diſcharge prepare,
Or with dull irons to the ſmith repair.
Forth from your fleeds expel each hoſtile bot,
Your cows the murrain and your ſheep the rot;
Your wanton hogs, each fetter with a Yoke,
The fleer unruly, fix on him a poke.
Take care your lowis have not the ſcaly tongue,
Secure your eggs, oft thunder kills the young.
Such are the cares incumbent on your line;
The mother wit, in which attempt to ſhine!
The almanack will teach you ſpring and fall,
The Bible Peter, next to know from Paul.

To the PRINTERS of the UPPER CANADA GAZETTE.

GENTLEMEN,

I Obſerve in the Conſtellation an opinion offered (on the ſtatute which permits lands in this country to be taken in execution) ſigned ACRES—from its length and prolixity, I could not prevail on myſelf to give it a ſecond peruſal—it appeared to me void of reaſoning or matter of utility, or novelty—one part of it excepted; one bold and daring aſſertion, ſo glaringly preſpoſterous, that to entertain the opinion, argues equal imbecility and diſhoneſty—to advance it, the moſt audacious effrontery.

"If," ſays this writer, "lands are to be taken by execution, it will ruin this country." What does he mean by this country.—If by the country he means the miſcreans, who, availing themſelves of this open and eaſy avenue to villiny—by the malverſation of property entruſted to their charge, or received by them in the common intercourſe, have ſpeculated in lands, in the fond, though (thank God) miſtaken hope of ſetting juſtice and the circumvented creditors at defiance. If with ſuch baſe materials his country is conſtructed, it cannot be ruined too ſoon, nor can its members be too quickly hunted out of it.

Let me aſk this writer on what principle it can ruin this country—is the country ſo indebted, or is knavery ſo general? Does not every honeſt debtor look upon his debts as ſacred? does he, or can he poſſeſs any property which he will not cheartully appropriate to their diſcharge?—where theſe motives are wanting, that law is juſt and ſalutary which ſupplies their place—and yet this law is reprobated by ACRES, as ruinous to the country. What conſiderable property is there in this country except landed property—this it is in the power of all to acquire at eaſy rates in greater or leſs quantities.—Why then ſhould this property be exempted from attachment? the perſon whoſe diſhoneſty would lead him to withhold fixed property from his creditors, would, with equal reluctance yield them his moveable.

I am aware of one objection which will be made by the advocates of the oppoſite opinion; they may ſay that lands ſold by execution will be ſacrificed—will be ſold below their value. In anſwer, let me aſk them, if moveable property in ſimilar caſes is not on the ſame footing. The wiſdom of our legiſlature may find a remedy for this evil (if it be conſidered as ſuch) by allowing a reaſonable time for redemption, and ſubjecting the ſeizure and ſale to equitable conditions. The enthuſiaſtic patriots will further ſay, let the debtor be impriſoned. Does impriſoning him pay his debts; is it an eligible method of enabling him to provide for their diſcharge; is an apartment in a priſon a field for his induſtry, rare indeed are the inſtances wherein it accelerates juſtice, and in every inſtance it diſtreſſes the debtor. Is it not amazing that ſuch incompatible opinions are entertained, and ſtill more ſo, that their propagation is attempted.

Mankind are too apt to take advantage of the defects or non-exiſtence of laws; and, ſince not to reſtrain is to allow, not to provide a remedy for ſo obvious an evil, is an acquieſcence in it; nay more, an encouragement of it.—Any perſon acquainted with the country of people, muſt have ſeen numerous inſtances of the diſpoſition to err in this way—in charity I call it erring.

Trifling indeed and unworthy of mention is the moral difference between landed and moveable property, a mere difference in terms. In Britain, and other commercial countries, how few are the land proprietors, compared to the other diſtinctions of ſubjects, the which ſubſiſt and become wealthy without poſſeſſing any land—Canada on the contrary, is merely an agricultural country; the wealth of the generality of its inhabitants conſiſts ſolely in their lands—the farmer is ſubſiſted from the product of his lands in every country—the manufacturer is wealthy from the quantity of raw materials, from the manufactured wares, from the implements of his art, and ſubſiſts upon the product of his manufactory—the trader ſubſiſts on the profits of his commerce; and the property of each, though nominally different, is in effect the ſame, and ſhould conſequently be liable to attachment for their bona fide debts;—there exiſts a difference I will allow; there alſo exiſts a difference between a bay horſe and a brown horſe, (pardon gentle reader) let the plainneſs be an apology for the coarſeneſs of the ſimile.

That law which in commercial countries ſhould exempt the articles of commerce from attachment, would juſtly be deemed in the laſt degree iniquitous—the rule muſt hold good with every ſpecies of property. Let any one give a moment's reflection to the difference of the natural conſtitution of countries, and he will not heſitate to pronounce that what is highly proper in one, is at highly improper in another—the dreſs adapted to the climate of Perſia, would be ill adapted to the frozen regions of Greenland;

Nature in her ſtupendous and varied works, has liberally given to one country productions which ſhe has as imperiouſly denied to another. Moral neceſſity in like manner from local affiniation, renders uſeleſs and pernicious in ſome countries, laws moſt ſalutary and indiſpenſible in others.

Law, if I miſtake not wholly its intention, is meant as a bulwark againſt oppreſſion and dishoneſty; a protection againſt fraud and injury; a general and equitable rule of decision in matters of property and civil right—and a ſtrong barrier permanently oppoſed to abuſe and injuſtice.

Were it not for ideas and opinions, ſuch as entertained and advanced by Adams, fewer lawsmight have been neceſſary. What were his motives for publiſhing them it may not be difficult to determine. He has endeavoured to inculcate a faith at which honeſty revolts—the proſelytes he may gain will be ſuch, who, through want of examination, by deviation from rectitude, by a renunciation of reaſon, or inculiarity of ſituation, feel an intereſt in its effective propagation.

If, (which I hope will never be the caſe in this country) any property be legally exempted from attachment, it ſhould undoubtedly be moveable property—to exempt any may be unjuſt; but this would be an injuſtice in favour of humanity—the reaſon is obvious, moveable property is expoſed to many caſualties and inclemencies of fate, to which landed property is not. A fire, a robbery, or a ſtorm, may in a moment reduce him whoſe wealth conſiſts in moveables, from opulence to beggary—with the moſt upright intentions misfortune may wreſt from his hands the means of being juſt—from turns and contingences of fate, the land proprietor may alſo ſuffer—yet is his ultimate dependence preſerved.

In England, that law which prohibits the attachment and ſale of lands, may be neceſſary; (if in force) it is certainly calculated for general ſecurity. The number of freeholders is comparatively ſmall to the tenantry; the lands are principally the properties of the nobility and gentry, the families of theſe are educated according to their rank—(the conſtitution renders certain ranks neceſſary) on what can they depend for the preſervation of this rank, but upon the preſervation of their eſtates. The government by its foſtering care, may have made this wiſe proviſion, that a permanent property be ſecured to ſuch families, and that the public (knowing the ſtatute) might not be deceived. In that country, I believe, that eſtates and titles devolve hereditarily—the oldeſt ſon is generally conſidered the heir; if there be co-heirs the eſtate muſt ſupport them, it muſt alſo provide for them.—Cruel indeed would it be, if, through the indiſcretion and prodigality of one member, the little community ſhould be reduced to want,—to obviate this (might this ſtatute have been enacted) a friendly beacon to the public, to induce caution on the one part, and oconomy on the other.

How diametrically oppoſite to this is the ſtate of this country, where landed property is ſo general, where ſo much is tranſacted on the credit of lands, they may be conſidered as its immoveable ſtaple, or a ſpecies of currency; and on one part the guarantee in all caſes of debt, or conſiderable tranſactions of the general internal commerce. And is this moral guarantee to be declared generally inſolid, are indebted individuals to be abſolved from all obligations of faith and honeſty, by putting it in their power to be juſt or not—to ſtrike at the morals of a country is to ſtrike at a vital part of its proſperity. God forbid that juſtice ſhould be brought to ſo low an ebb in this part of the empire.

To offer an opinion on how far the ſtatute applies to this country, is a gulf of preſumption into which no inadvertency ſhall plunge me. I have all poſſible confidence in the wiſdom and legal knowledge of our honored and reſpected judges—their deciſions, I am well aſſured, will ever embrace the general intereſt, be conſonant to honor, equity and the public weal, and religiouſly guided by the ſacred hand of imperial juſtice.

In controverſies the parties generally leave the original ſubjects, and branch out into quibblings and contradictions; I hope I may not be taxed with this, when I ſay of Adams, that I think his opinions are as abſurd as his intentions are miſchievous. Of his law knowledge and logic, I think the one ſo circumſcribed, and the other ſo erroneous, that none but himſelf can admire the one, or be led aſtray by the other.

Of the gentlemen patriots who oppoſe the ſale of lands, let them enforce their precepts by examples, and I will think them ſerious—let them forgive their debtors, rather than be paid by a ſheriff's ſale of their lands—let them, by ſuch ſteps, at once immortalize their generoſity and patriotiſm—let them convince the world that, the oppoſition is neither blind nor hurtful, which has neither juſtice nor public welfare for its objects.—If they oppoſe it from principle, we think not alike.—I bid them adieu.

A Veſſel arrived at Norwich, informs, that the Richmond, Indiaman, from Batavia, belonging to Meſſrs. Jeſſe and Robert Waln, of Philadelphia, was taken by the French, after a moſt deſperate and bloody action of five glaſſes, having ſix men killed (including the chief mate and ſupercargo) and the remainder wounded. She was recaptured by the Invincible, Engliſh man of war, and ſent into Port Royal. She was going to England for trial. Schooner Paragon, Allyn, of this port, taken by the French, was alſo retaken by the Invincible, and ſent into Port Royal.—On the 14th Jan. the John Adams frigate, capt. PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 24.

Yeſterday morning lieut. Shaw of the armed ſchooner Experiment, arrived at Marcus Hook from a cruiſe, being diſpatched by commodore Truxton, with letters for the ſecretary of the navy; from which the following are extracts:

United States ſhip Conſtellation at ſea, February 3d, 1800.

SIR.

On the 30th ult. I left St. Chriſtopher's, with the Conſtellation in excellent trim, and ſtood to the windward in order to gain the ſtation for myſelf before the road of Guadaloupe, and at half paſt 7, A. M. of the day following, I diſcovered a ſail to the S. E. to which I gave chaſe—and for the further particulars of that chaſe and the action after it, I muſt beg to refer to the extracts from my journal, herewith, as being the beſt mode of exhibiting a juſt and candid account of all our tranſactions in the late buſineſs, which has ended in the almoſt entire diſmantlement of the Conſtellation, though I truſt, to the high reputation of the American flag.

I have the honor to be, &c.

THOS. TRUXTON.

Benjamin Stoddert, Eſq; Secretary of the Navy.

Occurrences on board the United States ſhip Conſtellation, of 39 guns, under my command, February 1ſt, 1800.

Throughout theſe twenty-four hours very unſettled weather—kept on our tacks bearing up under Guadaloupe, and at half paſt 7 A. M. the road of Baſſaterre bearing E. 5 leagues diſtance diſcovered a ſail to the S. E. ſtanding to the S. W. which from her ſituation I at firſt took for a large ſhip from Martinico, and hoiſted Engliſh colours on giving chaſe by way of inducement for her to come down and ſpeak me, which would have ſaved us a long chaſe to leeward, off my intended cruiſing ground; but finding ſhe did not attempt to alter her courſe, I examined her more minutely, as we approached her, and diſcovered that ſhe was a heavy French frigate mounting at leaſt 54 guns. I immediately gave orders for the yards to be ſtung with chains, topſail ſheets, &c. ſtoppered, and the ſhip cleared, and every thing prepared for action, & hauled down the Engliſh colours. At noon the wind became light, and I obſerved the chaſe, that we had before been gaining faſt on, held way with us, but I was determined to continue the purſuit tho' the running to leeward I was convinced would be attended with many ſerious diſadvantages, eſpecially if the object of my wiſhes were not gratified.

Paſſed two ſchooners ſtanding to the northward, one of them ſhewed American colors, and was a merchant veſſel—the other I ſuppoſed to be of the ſame deſcription.

Feb. 2.—At 1 P. M. the wind being ſomewhat freſher than at the noon preceding, and an appearance of its continuance: our proſpect of bringing the enemy to action began again to brighten, as I perceived we were coming up with the chaſe faſt, and every inch of canvaſs that could be of ſervice, except the bog reefs, which I kept in the top ſails, in caſe of the chaſe finding an eſcape impracticable, ſhould haul on a wind and give us fair battle; but this did not prove to be her commander's intention. I however, got within hail of him at 8 P. M. hoiſted our enſign, and had the candles in the battle lanthorns all lighted, and the large trumpet in the lee gangway ready to ſpeak him, and to demand the ſurrender of his ſhip to the United States of America; but he at that inſtant began a fire from his ſtern and quarter guns, directed at our rigging and ſpars. No parley being then neceſſary, I ſent my principal aid de camp, Mr. Vandyke, to the different officers commanding diviſions on the main battery, to repeat ſtrictly my orders before given, not to throw away a ſingle charge of powder, but to take good aim, and fire directly into the hul of the enemy, and load principally with two round ſhot, and now and then with a round ſhot, and a ſtand of grape, &c. to encourage the men at their quarters, to ceaſe or ſuffer no confuſion or noiſe whatever, but to load and fire as faſt as poſſible, when it could be done with certain effect. Theſe orders being given, in a few moments I gained a poſition on his weather quarter, that enabled us to mann effectually his ſtern, and thus a cloſe and as ſharp an action as ever was fought, between two frigates commenced and continued until within a few minutes of 1 A. M. when the enemy's fire was completely ſilenced, and he was again cheering off.

It was at this moment that I conſidered him as my prize, and was triumphing in the beſt manner I could my much ſhattered ſails, when I found the mainmaſt was totally unſupported by rigging, every ſhroud being ſhot away, and ſome of them in ſeveral places;—that even ſtoppers were uſeleſs, and could not be applied with effect. I then gave orders for the officers to ſend the men up from the gun deck, to endeavour to ſecure it, in order that we might get a long ſide of the enemy again as ſoon as poſſible; but every effort was in vain, for the main maſt went over the ſide in a few minutes after, and carried with it the top men, among whom was an amiable young gentleman who commanded the main top, Mr. James Jarvis, ſon of James Jarvis, Eſq; of New York. It ſeems that this young gentleman was apprized of the maſt going in a few minutes by an old ſeaman; but he had already ſo much of the principle of an officer ingrafted on his mind as not to leave his quarters on any account, that he told the men if the maſt went they muſt go with it, which was the caſe, and only one of them was ſaved.

I regret much his loſs, as a promiſing young officer and an amiable young man, as well as on account of a long intimacy that h[illegible] ſubſiſted between his father and myſelf; but have great ſatiſfaction in finding that I have loſt no other, and only two or three ſlightly wounded, out of 39 killed and wounded, 14 of the former and 25 of the latter.

As ſoon as the main maſt went, every effort was made to clear the wreck from the ſhip as ſoon as poſſible, which was effected in about an hour. It being impoſſible to purſue the enemy, and as her ſecurity was then the great object, I immediately bore away for Jamaica for repairs, &c. finding it impoſſible to reach a friendly port in any of the iſlands to windward.

I ſhould be wanting in common juſtice, was I to omit here to journalize the ſteady attention to order, and the great attention and bravery of all my officers, ſeamen and marines in this action, many of whom I had ſufficiently tried before on a ſimilar occaſion, and all their names are recorded in the muſter roll I ſent to the ſecretary of the navy, dated the 19th December laſt, ſigned by myſelf.

All hands employed at repairing the damages ſuſtained in the action, ſo far as to get the ſhip into Jamaica as ſoon as poſſible.

THOMAS TRUXTON.

ISAAC HENRY, Surgeon.

An officer on board the Conſtellation has forwarded the following Addreſs, which was delivered by the brave Truxton, to his officers and crew, on the 2d of February, 1800.

Public thanks, tho' but a ſmall tribute, is nevertheleſs juſtly due to ſeamen and ſoldiers, who have manifeſted their zeal, activity and bravery ſo conſpicuouſly in ſupport of the honor and dignity of their country's flag, as the crew of the Conſtellation of 36 guns did laſt evening in an engagement of near five hours, with a French national frigate of 54 guns, or upwards, carrying much heavier metal, in which the enemy was compleatly beaten, & would have become their prize, had the damages ſuſtained in making the firſt efforts to get along ſide of her, together with the loſs of the main maſt, main top maſt main top gallant maſt, mizen top maſt, and ſeveral other ſpars, which alſo went over the ſide at the moment of her ſheering off, together with the diſmantled ſtate of the ſhip, otherwiſe made a further purſuit impracticable. As the commander, therefore, I feel infinite ſatiſfaction in returning my thanks to the officers of every deſcription, ſeamen, marines and others, for the gallantry they diſplayed on this occaſion, which, under a beneficent Providence, has enabled me to add another laurel to the American character on the records of the navy; and you may be aſſured, gentlemen ſeamen and ſoldiers, that you ſhall be properly noticed to the Preſident of the United States, and ſuch of you as have been unfortunately wounded and ſurvive, will no doubt be put on the penſion liſt, and while their misfortunes I regret, I ſhall ſtate with pleaſure their juſt claims to the government, in order that they may have that protection and care taken of them which is provided by a grateful country for thoſe whom the fortune of war has been unkind to. THOS. TRUXTON.

U. S. ſhip Conſtellation, February 1, 1800.

The French ſhip with which captain Truxton engaged, is ſuppoſed to be the Volontaire, on her return home from Cayenne. It is thot ſhe would be obliged to ſteer for ſome port in the Spaniſh Main.

The Conſtellation had parted from the Inſurgent but 10 hours previous to her falling in with the Frenchman.

BOSTON, Feb. 26.

Capt. Harding from Embden, which he left Dec. 17, ſays, reports were in circulation of a general peace among all the continental powers, when he ſailed.

Capt. Rich, from Leghorn, which he left the 6th of December, informs that the Auſtrians had inveſted Genoa, and invited the inhabitants to ſurrender the town.

GEORGIA.

SAVANNAH, Feb. 21.

By the arrival of the brig Phœnix, capt. [illegible]n, in 24 days from Jamaica, we have received the following account of a villainous plot to involve in blood and maſſacre the iſland of Jamaica, which was to have taken place on the 25th of December laſt, but was providentially diſcovered and fruſtrated, on three days previous to the time appointed for carrying it into execution—the particulars are as follow:

Information having been ſent by an Engliſh gentleman reſident at St. Domingo, to lord Balcarres, governor of Jamaica, of three men being in the iſland and of their intended project, in conſequence of which, orders were iſſued to the magiſtrates to apprehend and examine all foreigners, who were not in poſſeſſion of regular paſſports or certificates. By this means M. Dubuiſſon, formerly an officer in the royaliſt ſervice, was taken up as a ſuſpicious character, who immediately informed againſt his brother in iniquity, Saſportas, then in Kingſton, under cloak of purchaſing a ſmall veſſel for the Spaniſh trade, and paſſing himſelf for a Spaniard. On the trial, M. Dubuiſſon turned king's evidence, and matters were ſo clearly proved againſt Saſportas, as condemned, him, and he was executed agreeable to ſentence, on the 24th Dec. as a ſpy, ſent by the French agent from St. Domingo, to foment an inſurrection among the negroes, to liberate the priſoners at Kingſton, who were to be armed, and the town ſet on fire, when a general maſſacre was to take place in the midſt of the confuſion. Emiſſaries were alſo employed on the north ſide, to prepare the ſlaves there, to effect the ſame purpoſes. Saſportas defended himſelf with the utmoſt coolneſs on his trial, in a ſpeech of near an hour and endeavored with much art, to invalidate the evidence againſt him, but to no effect, facts were too clear.

After being marched round the parade, with Treaſon, or Spy, written on his back, the ſentence was put into execution in preſence of an immenſe concourſe of ſpectators.

In conſequence of the above alarming circumſtances martial law was immediately proclaimed, and was ſtill in continuance when our informant came away.

ALEXANDRIA, Feb. 25.

On the 24th ult. two men were apprehended at Alexandria, for having paſſed a number of counterfeit 50 and 100 dollar bills of the bank of the United States. On their examination it was proved, that they a few days ſince arrived at this port in the ſchooner Two Brothers, New-Orleans; and from evidence it appeared, that vaſt quantities of counterfeit notes of the above deſcription were in general circulation at New-Orleans.

The counterfeit 100 dollar bills are dated at Philadelphia, in Feb. 1795—April, 1797—Feb. 1798, and June 1796 Marked A, and with red, E.

The 50 dollar bills are poſt notes, dated at Philadelphia, April 1798, and marked B.

The bills are well imitated, but the paper on which they are executed is inferior to that of the genuine. In the signature of the cashier the letter G, and the name S mpton, are written larger in the counterfeit than in the true notes. Some of them are figned John Kean, cashier.

We are defired to apprize the public, that a great number of counterfeit bills of the above defcription, are now in circulation in the United States.

HOUSE OF LORDS, JANUARY 28.

HIS MAJESTY'S MESSAGE.

Anſwer to lord Grenville.

The duke of Bedford roſe in reply. He could not but lament, from the tenor of the ſpeech which he had juſt heard, joined to the whole conduct of miniſters, that there was little proſpect of peace. Their only object indeed, ſeemed to be, by a continued ſyſtem of inſult, to put the bleſſing to a greater diſtance from our hopes than ever. This was the manifeſted tendency of the manner in which, they had treated thoſe communications from the enemy, on which the houſe was that night to deliver its opinion, and ſuch ſeemed to be the intended effect of the train of arguments by which the noble ſecretary of ſtate endeavored to procure their approbation of the rejection of pacific overtures.—But unleſs the ſubject of deliberations were ſuppoſed to be the original grounds of the war, which he maintained it was not, he would occupy but little of the time of the houſe with what he had to ſay in reply to thoſe arguments. He would not detain their attention with repeating the opinions he had on former occaſions delivered with reſpect to the principles of the war. But he would ſeriouſly impreſs upon their lordſhip's conſideration what was the real ſituation of the country, and what their proſpects of terminating this calamitous conteſt, if they were diſpoſed to ſanction the principles laid down in the ſpeech of the noble lord who had preceded him. He had largely diſcanted on the character of the ſucceſſive rulers of France ſince the commencement of hoſtilities; and had thence, arguing the impoſſibility of entertaining any well founded hopes of ſucceſs, from entering into negotiation with its preſent government. But the anſwer was eaſy: all his obſervations on that topic might have been urged with equal force, at the moment an ambaſſador was ſent to treat with the agents of the French government at Liſle. At that time, however, all the vices which were attributed to the ſyſtem of government or its conductors, were not regarded as inſurmountable obſtacles to the commencement of negotiation. The noble lord had particularly dwelt on a paſſage in the laſt communication from the enemy, which ſeemed to juſtify, from neceſſity, their attempts to extend the war to every individual part of the world. He was the laſt man who would think of defending the unwarranted aggreſſion which had in ſeveral inſtances been made by France. He would no more attempt to juſtify or palliate them, than he would the partition of Poland, and the ſhare which our principal ally had in that tranſaction, or the ſyſtem of iniquity and cruelty by which the Britiſh dominion was firſt extended in India.—The noble ſecretary, however, reſted a great deal upon this circumſtance, as an avowal of the principles which formed the foundation of this revolution;—while he inſiſted that the note from the Britiſh miniſters opened the way to a declaration of principles of a different kind—of principles which have encouraged him and his colleagues to treat with them. But what could have been expected from a paper which explicitly told them that they were not men capable of being treated with. It had been represented as extraordinary that the French should refuse to admit the charge of their being the original aggressors. But who were the first to state the subject? Who were first to abandon the means of conciliation, and stimulate resentment anew by recurring the grounds of the contest?

HOUSE OF LORDS,

January 31.

Duke of BEDFORD's motion.

THE following is the amendment moved by the duke of Bedford, in the house of lords on Tuesday last, instead of the address moved by lord Grenville:

"That an address be presented to his majesty:

To return our most humble thanks for his condescention and goodness in having been graciously pleased to communicate to us the correspondence between the minister of foreign affairs in France, and his majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs; and most humbly to represent to his majesty, that on the 8th of December, 1795, his majesty was graciously pleased to acquaint this house, that he had been induced, by the order of things in France, to meet any disposition for negociation on the part of the enemy with an earnest desire to give it the fullest and speediest effect.

"That in pursuance of this disposition, his majesty directed an overture to be made in his name by his minister in Switzerland, in the spring of the year 1796.

"That on the rejection of that overture his majesty gave the solemn assurances, in a note dated April 10, '96, that when ever his enemies should manifest more pacific sentiments, his majesty would at all times be eager to concur in them by lending himself, in concert with his allies, to all such measures as could be best calculated to re-establish general tranquility on conditions just, honorable and permanent.

"That his majesty has since entered into two negociations for peace with the French republic, at Paris in the autumn of the year 1796, and at Lisle in the summer of the following year—1797.

"That his majesty has repeatedly and solemnly declared that the rupture of both these negociations was solely to be ascribed to the determination of the French government to reject all means of peace, and pursue, at all hazards, their hostile designs against the prosperity and safety of these kingdoms.

"That, on the failure of the negociation at Paris, his majesty, in a manifesto dated 27th Dec. 1796, was graciously pleased to renew, in the face of all Europe, the solemn declaration, that whenever his enemies should be disposed to enter on the work of general pacification in a spirit of conciliation and equity, nothing should be wanting on his part to contribute to the accomplishment of that great object.

"That on the rupture of the subsequent negociation at Lisle, his majesty had again declared in a manifesto, dated October 20, 1799, that "he looked with anxious expectation to the moment when the government of France should shew a disposition at all corresponding to his own;" and that "he then renewed before all Europe the solemn declaration that he was yet ready to conclude peace on the same moderate and equitable principles and terms which he had before proposed."

"That, we, his majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the lords spiritual and temporal, in parliament assembled, impressed with the justice of these sentiments, and equally anxious for the re-establishment of tranquility and for the preservation of the honor and dignity of his majesty's crown (of which we are, by the constitution, hereditary advisers,) cannot conceal our regret of perceiving that his majesty has been advised to reject the first overtures for a general pacification on the part of the enemy; and we beg leave most humbly to emplore his majesty to give direction for immediate renewal, if possible, of a negociation for peace with the French republic, most fervently beseeching his majesty to recur to those principles of moderation and equity so solemnly and so repeatedly avowed, and which, if strictly adhered to, must either ensure the speedy restoration of all the blessings of peace, or render our enemies alone accountable for all the calamities too certainly attendant on a continuance of hostilities." Negatived by a large majority.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

January 28.

Lord Grenville moved the order of the day for taking into consideration his majesty's message; which being read together with the message itself, and the titles of the papers referred to in it:—

His lordship observed, that the conduct of his majesty's ministers in this great object was so perfectly conformable with the views so often expressed from the throne so often approved by that house, and conveyed in its addresses to the sovereign, that it would have been unnecessary for him to urge any preliminary observation in support of his motion, if it were not that by neglecting to do so he might be supposed to entertain any doubts upon a subject respecting which, of all others he had the smallest question.

The present overtures seemed to be a part of that policy, notwithstanding which he doubted whether it would be the interest of Buonaparte to conclude a peace with this country.

That he would find it to be his interest to have an armistice for a while was sufficiently apparent. It would as long as it lasted restore the commerce of the republic. It would open its now blockaded up ports to receive provisions and naval stores of every kind. It would set the remnant of the French navy at liberty to sail from one port to another, and fortify those places which were now accessible. It would give the means of recruiting the armies in the interior in such a manner as may completely destroy all the hopes entertained by the royalists, and, what is also an important consideration, it creates distrust and disagreement among the allies. But on the other hand, when he came to think of a general peace he could see no interest the French consul could have in concluding it. The armies now acting on the frontiers, having no further employment, they must necessarily be brought into the interior of the republic, and the history of all military dispositions shewed that too great a number of troops always led to their subversion from one part of the nation to the other. The usurpation of Buonaparte was only sustained by military violence, and when other armies were introduced the same temptation might be offered by others, which brought him to the helm of affairs.—On the stability of such government, on the character, caprice, even of a chieftain placed in such a situation, it was impossible for any established government to have any prudent reliance.

The usurper, to disengage himself from the danger of the army, must always keep them in a state of warfare to divert their attention from his personal concerns. With this view, whatever may be the immediate objects of Buonaparte, no dependence could be placed on the sincerity of his overtures, supposing that in other respects a negociation was advisable. In order to judge of the good disposition of this man toward England, he would recall their attention to the treaty of Compo Formio the articles of which were remitted by him to the executive directory by his confidential friends and agents Monge and Berthier, who are not employed by him in the first offices of the state.

On that occasion, Monge, in his speech to the directory declared that the termination of the war upon the continent would leave them at liberty to employ the whole of their efforts for the destruction of Great-Britain, as the government of England and France were incompatable with each other, and could not exist together. Such was the language of Monge, and such no doubt were the sentiments of the first consul Buonaparte. He before observed that the existance of the present constitution in France depended on the life of its present ruler, and in the event of his death, who had we to treat with? The persons he employed in the principal offices of the state, were men hackneyed in the most monstrous crimes of the most monstrous periods of the French revolution; men who had acted as judges, as jurors, and as executioners in the criminal tribunals of Robespierre.—Little expectation then could be formed from the disposition of Buonaparte, still less could be entertained from the dispositions of his political associates.—After demonstrating that whatever may be the clamor of French adherents, in this country, the government never intended that the restoration of the ancient line of French princes should be the sine quan on of a peace with France, his lordship reminded the house of that period when this country was deserted by all its allies, when the whole forces of France had no other view or object but the destruction of Great Britain; when much of our force was employed in suppressing a rebellion in Ireland; and if under such circumstances the parliament of this country trusting to its own resources, had determined to abide every chance of war, he made no doubt but in the present moment, when its successes and that of its allies, were sufficient to animate its hopes, and place it in a situation to demand terms of advantage and security; it would manifest that it had already shewn itself ready to meet the proportion of the extent, to which it now exhibit its readiness to meet the duration of its dangers.

PALL MALL, 28 JAN. 1800.

The original motion being put, that an humble address be presented to his majesty, &c. The same was carried in the affirmative.

[illegible]

Because the address adopted by the [illegible] approves of the rejection of an overture for peace, [illegible] that invaluable blessing might very probably be attained with honor and security, by opening a negociation with the French republic, and indirectly approves of the language in which the rejection of the offer was conveyed to the French government; a language which, in my opinion, can only tend to widen the breach between the two countries, to exasperate the enemy, and prolong the calamities of war.

LONDON, January 23.

The earl of Chatham, it is now mentioned in the first circles, is to go as governor general to India, and to take out with him a constitution, for the better government of our extended territories in that quarter. This constitution said to be some thing similar to that of Jamaica, as there is to be a legislative council, to deliberate on, and provide for every local purpose, and whose laws are to be of full effect when they have received the sanction of the governor general.

The six peers, who voted as not contents on lord Grenville's motion for the address were, the duke of Bedford, earl of Albemarle, lord Ponsonby (earl of Bessborough) lords Holland, King and Camelford.

NEW-YORK, April 11.

Last evening arrived here his Britannic majesty's packet, earl Gower, captain Deake, with the January and February mails. She left Falmouth the 12th of February. As the mails were not delivered last evening, we are unabled to lay before our readers any detailed extracts; though we are assured there is nothing of importance. The editor had the priviledge of running over the columns of a London paper of the 7th of Feb. from which he is enabled to state, that Cadiz and St. Lucar have been officially declared in a state of blockade by lord Keith—and that the long expected revolution in Switzerland had taken place on the 27th of January, the five directors displaced and the executive power entrusted to a provisionary government.

Though our London advices by the packet are a few days later than those by the Pallas, they contain no intelligence of moment. It is however, interesting to know that our last dates requisitions were signing by the livery of London, requesting the lord mayor to summon a common council to petition for peace; and that some of the principal towns and counties in the kingdom were preparing to follow the example.

We are assured, by capt. Bass, of the sloop Betsey, from East Florida, that during his stay at St. Augustine, which was 20 days, their came in and express to the governor with information that gen. Bowles, the Indian chief (calling himself director-general of the Muskogees) had been taken by the Spaniards, and carried into Penisacola,

From a Portsmouth, (N. H.) paper.

A few days after the brig Betsies had left St. Croix, on her passage home, she was taken by a French privateer, who took the captain, mate and all hand, out of her, excepting a black man, named Moses (who is well known on the pier in this town,) the privateer then put on board a prize master and five hands, and ordered her for Gaudaloupe. Soon after the privateer had left the Betsies the Frenchmen being distributed about in different parts of vessel, Moses endeavored to retake the brig, and engaged first with those on deck, whom he almost instantaneously killed, and threw overboard; he next had recourse to the cabin, where he killed the others, either in the cabin, or as they were coming out of it, and threw them also overboard: he then took the command of the vessel, and put her head to northward to bring her home. Two days afterwards a Philadelphia brig fell in with the Betsies, and finding her situation, put on board her mate and three hands. But the Betsies, was unfortunately recaptured soon after wards by another French privateer, and carried into Porto Rico, where the brave the heroic Moses, was put in irons, and remained in this pitiable situation, when the letter which states the above particulars left there. It is feared, that Moses will either swing for his bravery or be sold for a slave.

ODE.

To the FARMES.

YE happy twains! your rural labors stay,
Seek out the shade and shun the burning day;
Regale yourselves a moment while I sing,
The pleasures that from Agriculture spring.

Look round your farms; how rich the prospect seems!
The orchard bends, the field luxurient seems!
Here agriculture opens to our view,
A land of milk and honey, rich and new.

Here she unbosoms all her golden stores,
And wealth plenty in your coffers pours:
Here she fulfils her royal promise made,
To you who speek her smiles, her love and aid.

Here she delights your industry to bleis,
And crown your toil and labors with succeis,
Thrice happy twains! go on and till your fields;
Enjoy the fruit your own hard labor yields.

Rich are your gains, and happy is your lot;
Sweet is your toil, around your peaceful cot;
Ten thousand beauties all around you rise,
To please the mind or charm the roving eyes.

Here you may sit beneath your shady grove,
And sing and sport innocence and love;
No tyrant's frown, no despot's haughty sway
Will make afraid or take your peace away;

But safely you may sleep, and safely wake,
And of your vine and figtree both partake:
While thus you're bleft, may gratitude arise,
To HIM who rules above the starry skies.

"Into the state of Vermont," answered the boy.

HOUSE OF LORDS, JANUARY 28.

His Majeſty's Meſſage.

Anſwer to Lord Grenville.

DID they ſhew any diſpoſition to reſume that queſtion, or ſeriouſly imitate the Britiſh government, by the language of abuſive reproach? No. They left that conduct to the rulers of this country, who treated their very firſt approach with the moſt marked inſult. It would have been well, if matters had, before deſcending to ſuch meaneſs, recollected the way in which they repelled the reproaches made againſt the Engliſh nation by Lecoſte previous to the negociations at Paris. But the queſtion was not now, who were the aggreſſors, though he was not ſurpriſed that miniſters would endeavour to remove that charge from their own ſhoulders; for the time would come when that queſtion would be diſpaſſionately inveſtigated, and the guilty authors of a war which had been productive of ſuch wide ſpread miſery, would meet with that puniſhment due to their crimes from their co-temporaries, future generations of poſterity, and be devoted to everlaſting infamy. He ſtated it as certainty and doreſeen that the admiſſions might be charged with continuing hoſtilities with the [illegible] and had labored much [illegible] though he had directly diſclaimed [illegible] intention, every argument [illegible] had uſed tended to ſtrengthen the imputation. What elſe could be the import of his obſervations on the inſtability of every other government that had been erected in France. What elſe could be the intention of juſtifying their refuſal to treat with its preſent rulers, by remarking upon the various changes of perſons and ſyſtems, that had taken place there ſince the revolution; and ſo forcibly controuling them with its ancient monarchy? To carry on the war for the expectation of ſucceeding in ſuch an object was indeed to wild and frantic a ſcheme, that he could ſcarcely think it could enter into the mind of any rational man. But however much miniſters might diſclaim it, certainly it was the only ſuppoſition that could give any degree of conſiſtency to their conduct. If they did not boldly avow the re-eſtabliſhment of royalty, as the ſine qua non of peace, they at leaſt, made it a ſine qua non of negociation. But if he could ſuppoſe that any Britiſh miniſter could entertain a wiſh for the reſtoration of monarchy as it formerly exiſted in France, he would conjure him to reflect on the ruinous nature of the undertaking; and ſetting aſide the innumerable calamities which muſt be produced in the proceſs of ſo deſperate an enterprize; he would entreat him to conſider the wide extent of miſery which muſt immediately reſult from it, ſhould it, contrary to all reaſonable expectation, terminate with ſucceſs. Property to no leſs an amount than two millions ſterling, which had been acquired under a revolutionary ſyſtem muſt be violently torn from its preſent poſſeſſors; who, beſides being expoſed to the vengeance of the late nobleſſe, would with their dependents, be condemned to all the horrors of beggary and want. There were only three objects which he could conceive miniſters to have in the proſecution of the war, after the recent overtures from France; the re-eſtabliſhment of monarchy, or, at leaſt, a different government from the preſent, or that a ſituation may be attained more favorable for their views of peace. They might, indeed, have another object. They might have ſo implicated themſelves with the [illegible] as to make it difficult to conclude a peace at this moment. But they had advanced nothing of that kind in their juſtification. The reparation of damage by no hand heard to be beyond all probable expectation. If their views were directed to the eſtabliſhment of any other ſort of government, let them particulariſe it. Has not experience proved that in proportion as France proſpered in her frontiers, her government always became more violent? Was it not at ſuch a criſis that Robeſpierre always raged with greater fury? Nor was this tenſition, peculiar to that government. In times of war that of every country exerciſed their authority with a more oppreſſive hand. To prove this ſo far as regards this country, he would only refer to our own ſtatute book, which would abundantly juſtify the aſſertion during the preſent war. If miniſters likewiſe diſclaim this object, did they expect, by the acquiſition of territorial poſſeſſion, or any other advantage, to be placed at a future period in a more favorable ſituation for treating?

LONDON,

JANUARY 30.

A letter from Frankfort, dated December 22, ſtates "We know not what effect the late changes in France may have on the Belligerent Powers; but it is certain that a good underſtanding is re-eſtabliſhed between the two Imperial Courts, and the explanations made, ſeem to have revived the coalition. We know not how long this harmony may laſt. The following is the plan which intelligent perſons ſay has been agreed upon for the enſuing campaign.

"Suwarrow will command an army of 100,000 men, viz. 80,000 Ruſſians and 20,000 Palatins, Bavarians, Swiſs, and Gaudians. He will act independently of the Auſtrians, and make his entrance through Franche Compte. Arrived on the territory of France, Suwarrow will proclaim himſelf Regent of the kingdom, and act in that character by means of a ſpecial power obtained from Louis XVIII.

"The Archduke Charles will penetrate at the ſame time into Alſace, while General Melas ſhall enter with his army into Provence and Dauphiny, thro' Nice and Barcelonette.

"To ſecond theſe operations, England, which at firſt offered to furniſh an army of 30,000 men, recollected that this army, ſo expenſive, would not be ſo uſeful as a Ruſſian army; and the ſame ſum that would be required for an Engliſh force of 30,000 men, would be ſufficient for 100,000 men belonging to the Emperor Paul; conſequently it preferred advancing the money, and has promiſed to pay the Emperor of Ruſſia the ſum of four millions ſterling, to be at the diſpoſal of the latter on the 1ſt of March next. Pruſſia at this moment does not appear to have entered into theſe arrangements, but we ſtill hope to feather in the ſpring, taking an active part in favour of the coalition.

February 6.

Letters from Baruth ſtate, that after the arrival of a courier from St. Peterſburg, the Ruſſian army had been reviewed; and that, after having received the neceſſary articles for their equipment, they marched in columns conſiſting of between 3000 and 4000 men each, towards Franconia, by way of the Palatinate and Baruth, in order to reaſſemble in the diſtricts of Wurtzburgh and Aſchaffenburg, and from thence to march to the Rhine. The ſame letters add, that the new Ruſſian army expected in Bohemia, would purſue the ſame direction, and that the campaign would ſoon be opened again by the ſiege of Mentz. The ſtatement, however, is not official.

February 5.

Capt. Hamilton of the Surpriſe who retook the Hermoine, has been knighted for that act.

Feb. 10.

The inhabitants of the county of Longford, have petitioned the Iriſh parliament againſt the union.

It is ſaid gen. Maitland has returned from his miſſion to aſcertain the ſtate of the royaliſt forces in the inſurgent provinces of France; and that he confirms the ſtatements of the ſucceſs of the republican general Brune; and generally that the condition of thoſe royaliſts was unpromiſing.

Feb. 11.

It is ſaid the archduke has detached troops for an expedition againſt the ſouth of France; and that the French army under moreau is preparing to croſs the Rhine at Old Breyſack, Khell, and Caſtel.

UNION with IRELAND.

The parliament of Ireland have decided in favor of this meaſure 158 to 116---abſent 21 members only. The preſence of the military alone prevented the Dublin populace from committing exceſſes.

The north of Ireland is in ſuch a ſtate, that a military eſcort is thought neceſſary to the ſafe traveling of perſons of eminence.

Feb. 12.

A meeting of the livery of London was to be held about the 19th inſt to conſider of a petition for peace.

Queen's county in Ireland has petitioned againſt an union; and 12 perſons, burgeſſes of Belfaſt have petitioned in favor of an union. The county of Tipperary has petitioned againſt an union.

Feb. 22.

Advices are daily expected of the Breſt fleet having put to ſea.

A new admiral is appointed to the command of that fleet who has been twice a priſoner in England. The firſt time was on the 1ſt of June, when his ſhip was ſunk, and himſelf and ſon only ſaved; afterwards he fought a gallant action, and was taken by a Britiſh frigate.

Buonaparte's petition for peace has at length been withdrawn. The lord mayor removed it yeſterday morning from Guildhall, where, to the honor of the city, only forty-ſeven perſons could be found to ſet their names to it; and in this ſtate it is to be preſented to the houſe of commons.

The war in La vendee is nearly over---Chief of the rebel commanders have either ſurrendered, or been taken by the conſular armies; and the privates diſarmed and ſent home.

Barthelemy is appointed one of the conſervative ſenate. He was recommended by Buonaparte.

THE NEW LOAN.

Yeſterday Mr. Pitt contracted with meſſrs. Roberts and co. ſir Francis Baring, & mr. Glick, for the loan of twenty millions and a half; which he obtained at the rate of 4l. 14s. 2d. intereſt per cent; and this too in the eighth year of this expenſive war. It is more advantageous than during the laſt five years of hoſtility.

Notwithſtanding the terms of the loan, the ſcrip bore a premium of 2l 10s. per cent. to 3 per cent. immmediately.

Feb. 24. Letters from Straſburgh of the 15th, and from Vienna of the 2d and 3d inſt announce, that a courier arrived at the latter place on the morning of the 2d, from Peterſburgh with diſpatches containing the determination of the Emperor Paul to continue the continental war againſt the common enemy with all his forces. The Ruſſian troops have accordingly been ordered to return once more to the Rhine. As this reconciliation is underſtood to have been the work of Marſhall Suwarrow, in conſequence of the conferences held at Prague, we are authorized to entertain the moſt ſanguine hopes of ultimate ſucceſs, as it is evident how much that brave and noble commander has at heart the real intereſts of Europe.

It appears alſo, that the cabinet of Vienna has refuſed a ſecond time the overtures of Buonaparte. We moſt ſincerely congratulate the public on this very intereſting intelligence.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

FEBRUARY 7.

Mr. Wallace propoſed, that in conſequence of the reduced ſtate of the enemy's navy, 110,000 ſeamen, inſtead of 120,000 ſhould be voted for the preſent year. The oppoſition members objected to this as they intended to oppoſe every means of carrying on the war; as they conceived the object of miniſters is now to be to reſtore monarchy to France. The miniſterialiſts diſavowed ſuch determination. The motion obtained.

Feb. 10.

Mr. Sheridan after a lengthy and warm ſpeech, moved, "that it be referred to a committee of the whole houſe to conſider and enquire into the cauſes of the failure of the late expedition to Holland." Which was ſeconded. Mr. Dundas ſpoke in anſwer.—He ſtated the whole expences of the expedition at 1,142,364l. and the loſs of men at 846. The other members who ſpoke were mr. Tierney, mr. Bouverie, mr. Addington, ſir J. Pulteney, mr. Percival, mr. M. A. Taylor and col. Hope. When the queſtion was taken there were 42 for the motion, and 116 againſt it.

The croud to get into the gallery of the commons to hear the late debate on the ſubject of peace was unprecidentedly great. The people aſſembled at day light and continued till the doors were opened. The gallery would not contain one fifth part of the candidates for ſeats. Many perſons were injured in the croud.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 15.

IT is again ſtated with greater confidence, and with a greater ſemblance of truth than ever, that the emperor Paul is about to withdraw from the confederacy againſt France. This cannot be at all ſurpriſing to thoſe who reflect that the refuſal of a categorical explanation between the courts of Vienna and Peterſburgh, muſt neceſſarily lead to a dereliction of the common cauſe, by one or other of the two powers whoſe different views in the preſent conflict it is impoſſible to reconcile.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN,

January 30.

The corporation of Dublin has unanimouſly reſolved to petition parliament againſt an union. The people of Dublin are to meet to-morrow to adopt the ſame meaſure. Limerick and Downpatrick, have alſo petitioned againſt the union.

February 8.

In conſequence of violence offered to the members of parliament, who are in favour of a union, a troop of horſe has been ſtationed in the circus by the parliament-houſe, and a party of cavalry has been ſtationed in Sackville ſtreet. The anti-union members, it is thought will make this matter the ſubject of a motion.

No theatre was ever more crouded than the houſe of commons laſt night. The houſe roſe about one o'clock this day. The avenues were filled by the populace. Mr. Martin's coach was broken to pieces by them, and he narrowly eſcaped. Other union members were aſſailed. A military body was called forth, and major Swan diſcharged a piſtol among the people; but was afterwards obliged to fly.

Varney Darby, Eſq. and Major Rogers, are ordered to the bar of the commons to anſwer for an interference with military force to prevent the people of Bir from holding a meeting to conſider of the union.

February 15.

Violent reſolutions are all the faſhion—It was yeſterday reſolved at a public meeting, to aſſociate againſt the uſe of the Britiſh manufactures; and ſome piſſomite manufacturers declared they would give up buſineſs and diſcharge their workmen; ſo that we are like to go naked this enſuing ſummer; but all this appears to me the laſt effort of impotent rage.

February 18.

In the high debate laſt night on the queſtion of the union, Mr. Grattan gave a ſmart philippic againſt the advocates of the meaſure.—In alluding to Mr. Corry, chancellor of the exchequer, Mr. Grattan called him "a parliamentary declaimer, a political pedlar, a trimmer, who comes to parliament to proſtitute his talents and his principles, firſt for bread, and then for a ſtation; and for that ſtation riſking the peace of the country, and the lives of the people." Mr. Corry, in reply, ſaid, if he meant to be perſonal towards Mr. Grattan, he "would have accuſed him of affuciating with traitors, and of having been privy to treaſon, of having created rebellion, and then flying from its conſequences; and of having made that people on whoſe bounty he ſubſiſted, the wretched inſtruments of his ambition." He concluded by ſaying, "the hon. gentleman had returned to inflame that parliament, which ought to be employed in an examination of his conduct." Mr. Grattan in return, was pointed & ſevere; he almoſt in expreſs terms called Mr. C. ruffian, a jackanapes, and a coward; and ſaid, that had Mr. C. uttered what he did without the walls of that houſe, his anſwer would have been a blow." The chancellor of the exchequer immediately retired, and ſent in a meſſage by gen. Craddoc to Mr. Grattan, demanding ſatisfaction. Mr. Grattan inſtantly left the houſe accompanied by Mr. Metge. The parties met and fought.—Mr. Corry was wounded in his arm. The ball was inſtantly extracted, and Mr. Corry returned to the houſe before the diviſion.

Iriſh Parliament,

February 5.

Sketch of the plan of union between England and Ireland.

The firſt article ſtates, that on the 21ſt day of January, which ſhall be in the year 1801, and forever after, the kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland ſhall be united into one kingdom, by the name of the united kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and that the royal ſtyle and titles appertaining to the imperial crown, and alſo the enſigns armorial ſhall be ſuch as his Majeſty ſhall be pleaſed to appoint.

The 2d article, that the ſucceſſion to the imperial crown of the ſaid united kingdoms, &c. ſhall continue limited & ſettled as it now ſtands.

Article 3. That the united kingdoms be repreſented by the ſame parliament.

Art. 4. Propoſes, that of the peers of Ireland at the time of the union, four ſpiritual lords by rotation of ſeſſions, and twenty-eight temporal peers for life, be the number to ſit and vote in the houſe of lords, and one hundred commiſſioners, viz. two for each county of Ireland, two for the city of Dublin, two for the city of Cork, and one for each of the thirty-two moſt conſiderable towns and boroughs, be the number of repreſentatives of Ireland in the houſe of commons. That it ſhall be lawful for his Majeſty to create peers of that part of the united kingdom called Ireland, and to make promotions to the peerage thereof after the union, provided the number of peers ſhall not by ſuch creation at any time be increaſed beyond the number exiſting on the ſaid 1ſt day of January, 1801.

The 5th article ſtates, that the churches of England and Ireland ſhall be united into one church, ſubject to the ſame regulations as at preſent by law eſtabliſhed.

The 6th article ſtates, that after the 1ſt day of January, 1801, his majeſty's ſubjects of Great Britain and Ireland ſhall be entitled to the ſame privileges, and be on the ſame footing in regard to encouragements, bounties, &c. That after the ſaid 1ſt day of January, all prohibitions and bounties, on the articles the growth of either country, and that the ſaid articles be henceforth exported from one country to another without duty or bounty on ſuch export.

Art. 7. That for the ſpace of twenty years after the union ſhall take place, the contribution of Great Britain and Ireland reſpectively, towards the expenditure of the united kingdoms in each year, ſhall be defrayed in the proportion of fifteen parts for Great Britain and two for Ireland; and, that at the expiration of the ſaid twenty years, the future expenditure of the united kingdoms, other than the intereſt and charges of the debt incurred before the union, ſhall be defrayed in ſuch proportions as the united parliament ſhall deem juſt and reaſonable, upon a compariſon of the real value of the exports of the reſpective countries, &c.

Art. 8. States, that all laws in force at the time of the union, and all the courts of civil and eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction within the reſpective kingdoms, ſhall remain as now by law eſtabliſhed, ſubject only to ſuch alterations, &c. as may appear to the parliament of the united kingdoms to be required.

Schedule, No. 1. Of the articles to be charged with countervailing duties upon importation into Great Britain and Ireland, reſpectively, according to the ſixth article of union, to which this ſchedule is annexed:

Articles to be charged with countervailing duties in Great Britain—beer, bricks, tiles, candles, ſoap, cordage, printed cottons, cider, glaſs, leather, paper ſtained, ſilk, ſpirits, ſtarch, ſugar refined, ſweets and tobacco.

Articles to be charged with countervailing duties in Ireland—beer, glaſs, leather, paper ſtained, ſilk, ſpirits, ſugar refined, ſweets and tobacco.

Schedule No. 2. Of the articles to be charged with the duties ſpecified upon importation into Great Britain and Ireland reſpectively, according to the ſixth article of the union, to which this ſchedule is annexed—apparel, braſs wrought, cabinet wares, coaches, copper wrought, cotton, glaſs, haberdaſhery, hats, hardware, lace gold, ſilver, millinery, paper ſtained, pottery, ſaddlery, and other manufactured leather, ſilk manufactures, ſteel, ſtockings, tea per cent. on the true value.

Lord Caſtlereagh moved, his Majeſty's meſſage be taken into conſideration by a committee of the whole houſe, on Wedneſday next; a debate enſued, which laſted until paſt twelve o'clock this day, when, on a diviſion, the numbers ſtood—Ayes 158, noes 115.—Majority 43.

On the numbers being told, Mr. Dawſon in an animated manner, congratulated the houſe and the country on the triumphant result of the diviſion. So notwithſtanding all the variety of means taken to produce a majority in favor of the union, there was but one added to the number of its advocates ſince the firſt night of the ſeſſion, while to the anti-unioniſts there was an acceſſion of ſtrength of twenty members. In addition to this, he had the ſatisfaction to ſtate, that there were at his ſide of the houſe, two-thirds of the country members—a fact of the utmoſt importance to be known to the public. After ſuch circumſtances it could no longer be doubted, but that the voice of the country and parliament was decidedly againſt the meaſure.

NEW YORK, April 14.

Laſt Thurſday evening an attempt was made to ſet fire to the Portſmouth ſloop of war, lying in this harbor. We are concerned to ſtate that it proceeded from deſign. It ſeems a number of the ſeamen have proved mutinous, and intended as ſoon as the ſloop had got to ſea, to murder the officers, and carry her into ſome French port.—It was while the ringleaders were in irons in conſequence of this diſcovery, that ſome of the reſt made this attempt to fire the veſſel. About twenty are under guard at Fort Jay, and it is to be hoped a ſevere example will be made of them.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, May 17.

☞ ON Thurſday evening laſt, his Excellency Peter Hunter, Eſq. Lieutenant Governor and commander in chief of this province, arrived in our harbor on board the Toronto, and on Friday morning about nine o'clock landed at the garriſon, where he is at preſent to reſide.

Yeſterday morning about 11 o'clock the ſentence paſſed, ſome time ſince, upon Humphry Sullivan, for paſſing a forged note, was put in execution; with unparralleled fortitude he approached the place of execution! and to the laſt appeared to be much reſigned to his unhappy fate.

Take the hint.

THE ſubſcriber once more requeſts thoſe good people who are indebted to him by note, book-account or otherwiſe, to make immediate payment, in order that he may diſcharge thoſe debts which he has contracted; he flatters himſelf that this time of aſking will be ſufficient for thoſe who intended, ever, to pay him: the length of time which they have enjoyed, (to the great injury of his intereſt,) the benefit of his property, puts it out of his power to afford them any further indulgence; the delinquents, therefore, will be proſecuted without delay.

Sam'l Marther.

York, May 16, 1800.

Look out.

WHEREAS the ſubſcriber is about to decline buſineſs in this town, requeſts thoſe who are indebted to him to make payment without delay, or he will be under the diſagreeable neceſſity of giving their accounts into the hands of an attorney, which will be attended with expence. SAM. HERON.

☞ He has a quantity of excellent wood land, which he will ſell low for cash. York, May 16, 1800.

Fifty Dollars Reward.

WHEREAS ſome perſon or perſons, have lately entered the improved grounds of the ſubſcriber, and taken therefrom a quantity of FRUIT TREES belonging to him:—Theſe are, therefore, to give notice, that whoever will give information to the ſubſcriber againſt any perſon or perſons who have been guilty of the laid offence, ſhall, upon the conviction of the offender or offenders, receive a reward of FIFTY DOLLARS.

UPPER CANADA }

ORDERED,

In purſuance of an act of the Legiſlature of the ſaid Province, entitled "An act to guard againſt accidents by fire,"—That every houſe-keeper in the Town of York aforeſaid, ſhall, on or before the Firſt day of October next enſuing, provide and keep, TWO BUCKETS for carrying water, when any houſe ſhall happen to be on fire: which buckets ſhall be made either of wood, leather or caniva painted on the outſide, and covered with pitch in the inſide, and ſhall hold at leaſt two gallons of water.—And the ſaid buckets ſhall be marked with the chriſtian and ſirname of the houſe-keeper, to whoſe houſe they belong, and ſhall not be uſed for any other purpoſe than the extinguiſhing of fires.

It is alſo ordered, That every houſe-keeper in the ſaid town, ſhall keep two ladders, the one to reach from the ground to the eaves of the houſe, and the other to be properly ſecured and fixed with hooks or bolts on the roof near the chimney.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Constantinople, January 4.

A Courier from the Grand Vizier has just arrived.—He informs, that gen. Kleber, having intended fortifying the Caravanseri of Ali Arifeh, in the defert which feparates Syria from Egypt, the Grand Vizier attacked the fort of prodigious, which Kleber was fending to the pofh, and captured the whole.

GERMANY.

Vienna, Feb. 3. An unexpected courier has arrived here from Petersbourgh. He brings the pleafing intelligence, that the Emperor of Ruffia, yielding to the repreſentations of Suwarrow, has ordered the Ruſſian armies to march back to the Rhine; where they will be immediately reinforced. The commiſſary general of the Ruſſian troops is ordered by Suwarrow to proſecute his functions.

The Prince of Conde has received a courier which has cauſed an alteration in the projected movements contemplated by his army.

Braſſels, Feb. 23. Letters from the right bank of the Rhine ſtate, that the whole Auſtrian army is quitting its cantoonments to proceed to the banks of the Rhine and the Necker. The militia & troops of the empire are to join the army. A German paper publiſhes the following liſt of the forces which are to ſecond the Imperial army, viz. 12,000 Bavarians, 15,000 Wirtemburghers, 4000 Mentz troops, 2000 Bamberghers; beſides the militia of the Vorarlberg, and of Auterio, Auſtria, of Suabia, & Franconia, which will form a total of 20 or 24,000 men; but it muſt be obſerved, that theſe militia troops are little uſed to grand military manoeuvres.

FRANCE.

Paris, Feb. 18. H. Q. Vitoux, Feb. 15.

The general in chief, Brune, informs the miniſter of war, that the terms of pacification of the departments of Cotes du Nord, of Morbihan, and Finiſterre, were definitively ratified yeſterday.

The bands of the Chouans ſhall be immediately diſſolved, and their arms, cannon and ammunition ſhall be given up without reſtriction. The diſarming is now carrying into effect, and a great number of muſkets have been already given up. (Signed) VIGNOLLE.

The Conſuls of the republic to th. Preſets of the Departments, 6th March.

The will and hope of government, citizens, were that your entrance into adminiſtration would have been marked with peace. Its Steps taken to obtain it are known in Europe. It aſſured for it with ſincerity, and ſhall wiſh for it at all times when earthly of the nation.—And, in fact, after the ſucceſſes which his enemies acknowledge, what other ambition could remain for the firſt conſul but that of reſtoring to France its former proſperity, of bringing back the arts and virtues of peace, of healing the wounds inflicted by a revolution too much prolonged, and finally reſcuing humanity, if entire, from the flames which have been ſo many years devouring it?

Such were his ſentiments and wiſhes, when he ſigned the peace of Campo Formio. Its impoſſible but that they muſt have encreaſed and ſtrengthened, ſince an honorable confidence raiſed him to the firſt magiſtracy, and impoſed on him a ſtill more rigid duty of labouring for the happineſs of Frenchmen. His wiſhes, notwithſtanding, are not accompliſhed. England ſtill breathes war, and the humiliation of [illegible]nces. The other powers wait to ſee what ſhall be our attitude, and what ſhall be our reſources, to fix their determination.

If we are ſtill that nation which has aſtoniſhed Europe with its ſucceſſes and its courage; if a juſt confidence animates our forces and our means, we will have only to ſhew ourſelves, and the continent ſhall have peace. This is the ſentiment which all Frenchmen muſt feel; that it is to a generous and laſt effort we invite all thoſe who have a country and the national honor to defend. To kindle this ſacred fire, employ all your energy, all the power and influence of your talents and reputation over their hearts and minds. Inſpire families with this full confidence, that the government wiſhes only the public happineſs; that the ſacrifices which it demands ſhall be the laſt ſacrifices, and the ſource of common proſperity. Awake in the young citizens that patriotiſm which has always characterized the French; let them hear the voice of honour, and the ſtill more powerful voice of their country. Let them new themſelves again ſuch as they were in the firſt days of the revolution, ſuch as they could not ceaſe to be even when they thought they were combating for factions. Let your paternal voice put every thing in motion. They are no longer the accents of terror which Frenchmen muſt hear; they love honour, they love their country.—They will love the government, which wiſhes to exiſt only for the one and the other.

(Signed) BUONAPARTE.

Feb. 26. A French officer of artillery wrote to Buonaparte from Hamburgh in nearly the following terms:—

"We have been heretofore comrades and friends; the difference is our principles induced us to an opposite conduct in the revolution; yours has led you to great power; mine has caused me to be plundered of my effects, of my estate, and to be proscribed from my country. I do not repent of what I have done, and shall persist to my principles to the end of my life. But I have left in France a father and mother whom I tenderly love. For their consolation and my own, I set a great value on embracing them before death shall separate us forever, I therefore request of you a passport, as limited as you shall think proper, in order to make them my last adieu. If you should please to grant it me, I declare that during my sojourment, I shall do nothing to disturb the existing order of things."

In answer, the author of this letter received an unlimited passport, & money to defray the expences of his journey.

February 28.

General Lefebvre to General Buonaparte, First Consul of the Republic.

Head Quarters at Paris, Feb. 25.

Citizen Consul,

I hasten to communicate to you some interesting dispatches, which I have received from gen. Gardanne, commander of the 14th military division. It appears from these dispatches, that he has discovered, in the neighbourhood of the commune of Chanu, several hiding p[l]ces, wh[ere] the chiefs of the Chouans were in the habit of retiring during peace, and when they were pursued by force. They had deposited there part of the arms and equipments furnished by the English. This discovery was made in consequence of the confession of two Chouans who were at his mercy, and whom he threatened to shoot.—They pointed out to him a lock smith, named Aubine, of the commune of Chanu, whom they knew to be perfectly acquainted with secret places. In the first they found arms, effects and papers in great quantity. In the second, which was the asylum of Frotte, they surprized his secretary, and a person named Legrenade. The former was killed as he stood upon his defence; the second promised to make some useful discoveries in case his life was spared. It was in consequence of his information, that five other places of concealment have been discovered, containing Felleuil, called Dufour; major general Champy, aide-major, and Augilla, aid du camp of Cadmaique. The latter remained on the field of battle. They found, besides, in a subterraneous magazine, about 200 suits of English uniform, a great many slippers, boots about 30 muskets, a quantity of bayonets, sabres, cartridges, and various other articles. Legrenade said, that the father of Frotte, was expected from England in six days. The secretary, who was killed, was to have gone to meet him. This expedition was conducted by citizen Lahitte, captain adjoint to adjutant general Bribs, who has displayed on this occasion much zeal and judgment.

By another dispatch, the same general informs me, that a person of the name of Lavistoire, who commanded a company of 25 men, in the vicinity of the same commune of Chanu, has been taken in arms, and shot on the spot; that after the death of their chief, his men submitted to the laws of the republic; and that this expedition has completely purified the surrounding communes, which were the resort of the Chouans. This last success is to be attributed to citizen Bertrand, captain of the moveable column of Carmelite, the conduct of which general Gardanne, has highly praised. Health and respect.

LONDON, February 28.

Epidemic diseases have lately appeared in several parts of Germany & France. In Paris and Lyons, a fever which spared the French physicians all the hospital fever, has made such ravages as to alarm the inhabitants with the idea of its being the plague. In the environs of Suabia, hundreds were carried off by a disease, the nature of which was not understood. At Ingingen, about one league from the city of Ulm, one 8th of the grown inhabitants are stated to have died by the 10th Feb. with an epidemic fever, while the small pox carried off great numbers of children.

Gen. Dumourier, on his way to Petersburgh, passed thro' Mittau, where he had an audience of the Pretender. The Hero of Jemappe, it is thought, will have a command in the Russian army.

Spain has succeeded in procuring the interference of the king of Prussia with the British cabinet in favour of Napper Tandy and his associates.

Extract of a letter from the Hague, Feb. 18.

"News was yesterday received here from Amsterdam, that Batavia and all our other possessions in the island of Java had been surrendered to the English who had found at Batavia more than ten millions specie, together with the property belonging to our government, which was stored. The intelligence has caused great agitation here as well as at Amsterdam."

By a letter from the Hague, dated Feb. 24. we learn, that a body of 10,000 men are to be taken from the Dutch national guard, and put on the war footing. The army destined to defend the coast will consist of more than 72,000, in which will be comprised the 4th French demi-brigade, who were expected to arrive on the territory of the republic about the beginning of March.

Billaud Varennes was said to arrive at Brest from Cayenne in the same vessel with Laford Lidebat & Barbe Marbois.

Paul I. we are assured, intercepts all letters which are addressed to his wife. An officer from the court of the empress's father having been sent lately to Petersburgh, the emperor refused him the permission of conversing with her.

March 14. The chief command of the new northern expedition is not yet fixed; and some serious difficulties are said to have arisen on the subject of this important appointment.

The first division of the guards marched yesterday for Portsmouth, and the second marched this morning.

Mr. Wilkin, and other messengers, by the last accounts, are detained at Helligoland, unable to reach the continent.

Marmontel and Dubreton.

Both these great men died lately within a few days of each other.

Marmontel died the last day of Dec. of an apoplexy, at Abloville, in the department of the Lower Seine. He had for several years lived in great retirement at the village of Abloville, & in a flate bordering upon want. When 3 years ago he was nominated to the legislature he went to the electoral assembly, and thanking his fellow citizens for this mark of respect, said to them "You behold my friends, a body enfeebled by age, but the heart of an honest man never grows old." He was ill only a few hours before he died. He has left a wife and two children in very indifferent circumstances.

Dubreton, upwards of 80 years of age, had been elected a member of the conservative senate. Pleased with this appointment, he resolved to go & take his seat in the first day of the meeting of the senate. His wife urged him not to go on account of his ill health; he persisted, however, in his determination and ordered his dinner earlier than usual. This then sent to the senate.

From the cold of the street he went into a room filled with persons, and extremely warm; the congratulation and marks of respect he received from every one, affected him, and he was taken suddenly ill. He was immediately carried home, and in a short time died.

On the 12th of Jan. about 8 in the morning, several persons in Southern Prussia saw three suns appear on a sudden. They rose majestically from the horizon. At seven o'clock the sky was clear and serene; a few minutes after it was covered with clouds; and at half past 8, there were seen in the East three columns of fire, the middle one of which rose to the height of 45 degrees. The two others, formed by the two other suns, were only a third as big as the middle one: they seemed to burn like a blazing fire, and as they rose, produced a majestic and awful effect.

Another phenomenon has occurred in Polish Prussia. Near the village of Labotin, in the district of Pizedole, is a lake about a league long and three quarters of a league broad. A wood of oak is on one side, and the villages of Labotin and Zackrezowo on the others. This lake was all at once covered with red spots, which the superstitious inhabitants said were blood rained from Heaven. The peasants from all parts ran to look at the miracle, and soon saw pieces of red matter float on the water, some of them five inches thick. The lake was frozen, and the red spots remained upon the ice. Three members of the Administration proceeded to take cognizance of the phenomenon, & they remarked that the surface of the lake was in reality covered with spots of a bloody red in some places, with red & green spots, and with purple and violet spots in others. They caused the ice to be broken one foot from the bank, and they found a crust of red and green three inches deep. Having penetrated to eleven inches depth, they found a red and green substance, some of it glutinous. Two of the administrators having resolved to taste it, found it extremely acid. It also produced an immediate and very great pain in the temples and stomach. The melted ice produced a greyish water, which smelled of sulphur. Experiments are now making at Berlin to ascertain what it is, and a quantity of the water has been sent to the Royal Academy there.

A letter from Cadiz mentions that 50 British transports had landed 9,000 Russian & French emigrants at Britagne.

A Jamaica paper of the 10th ult. says, "We understand Toussaint on the 11th inst. took Jacmel by assault, and put every person of colour in it to death."

Extract of a letter from Strasburgh, Feb. 22.

"The reports of peace still exist in Germany; but while they hope to re-establish peace between France and Austria, the German papers are making war on another point. They pretend that Paul has recalled his troops with so much precipitation only for the purpose of collecting them on the frontiers of Prussian Silesia, and thus forcing, by menaces, the Prussian government to declare itself against France. Such a menace will not intimidate."

March 6. On Thursday advices were received at the admiralty office, from Sir Alan Gardner, off Brest. Their flate that the combined French and Spanish fleets, to the amount of 45 sail of the line, besides frigates, were apparently ready for, and indicated a disposition to put to sea. Sir Alan had only 20 sail of the line with him at the time, but reinforcements from Torbay mail soon have reached him: and Lord Bridport himself, who was expected to sail on Thursday, has probably by this time joined the squadron of observation.

A letter from Nismes, in the west of France, dated Feb. 19, says, "in all the peopled parts of the Deux Sevres, the catholic worship, the fairs and markets of the old regime, and the ancient calendar are in force. Gen. Hedouville himself recommended this toleration."

The laws against the emigrants are now under discussion in the tribune in France. The council of flate have expressed a wish that the penalty of death should not be pronounced against those people, except in the case of their returning to France a second time.

The utmost preparations continue to be made for the new expeditions. Generals Grey, Abercrombie, and Stuart, it is said, will have distinct commands.

Gen. Knox is daily expected to return from France, the whole of the 8000 French and Dutch prisoners, agreed to be released by the convention of Alkmaer, having been sent from this country.

A general opinion prevails, that a dissolution of parliament will immediately succeed the enacting of the union by the British senate.

In consequence of the approaching union of the English and Irish legislatures, a plan of a very magnificent and extensive scale is now drawing out for rebuilding of both our houses of parliament, which is expected to be commenced as soon as the present session closes. The buildings to be pulled down will include the speaker's house in old Palace yard, and extend as far as the public house, the corner of Abingdon street. The business of parliament will, in the interim be carried on in a temporary building to be erected in Westminster hall.

Letters from Strasburgh, dated the 15th ult. announce, that the Emperor Paul intends to continue the continental war against the common enemy with all his forces. The Russian forces have accordingly been ordered to return to the Rhine. This change has been effected by Suwarrow, in his conferences at Prague with Count Bellegarde and Lord Minto.

It appears that the cabinet of Vienna has refused a second time the overtures of Buonaparte.

AT Genoa it is confessed that the scarcity is nearly allied to famine. The bakers shops are said to be besieged day and night, and an insurrection is hourly expected. Our readers will not omit to connect this intelligence with the blockade of that city, announced in Saturday's gazette. Upon the land side the Austrians allow no communication with it.

By the gazette of Saturday, it appears that the port of Genoa is declared in a state of siege by the British squadrons. We observe with extreme satisfaction the resumption of measures of vigor by our squadrons in those seas.

The consular guard established at Paris, is to consist of three thousand six hundred men, most of whom are something above the common rank of a soldier. Murat, brother in law of Buonaparte, is the commander of this corps, and madame Buonaparte's son is the captain of the guides. Great expence has been employed in mounting this guard, which is placed on a similar footing with the Swiss guards under the ancient regime. A ball has been fitted up in the Thuilleries, in the most splendid manner, as a rendezvous for them.

The measure of wickedness in Switzerland is now completely filled. As if the scarcity of the necessaries of life, the devastations of war, and the miseries attendant upon French fraternity, were not sufficient to ruin the country, the inhabitants are engaged in the most violent political disputes. The spirit of party is carried to an extravagant excess, and were it not for the presence of the French troops, the most desperate affrays would certainly take place between the country people and the inhabitants of the towns. This extraordinary difference of sentiment extends even to the legislative body, where the most ridiculous squabbles constantly take place. Were the French troops to withdraw from Switzerland, it would be necessary that those of some neighbouring power should be sent to preserve the peace of the country, and keep discontented parties in awe. There is, however, no probability, that the republicans will evacuate Switzerland, as they would then relinquish every hope of penetrating into Italy by Mount St. Gothard, and of acting upon that line from Holland as far as Genoa, which is part of their plan of operations.

The state of Switzerland is in every respect truly deplorable, the children of the most opulent persons can no longer be subsisted, and hundreds of them are continually sent from the interior of the country to the frontiers, where there is a better chance of procuring the means of existence.

The French rock themselves in the hope of a separate peace with the grand Signor.

A farmer near Exeter, missing one of his sheep last week, in searching his fields, found the skin and head attached to it with the following note:—"Sir, you are rich, but we are very poor, so when this mutton's eat, will come for more."

One of our cutters on the Yarmouth station on Monday last, looked into the Elbe, but could not approach the coast, the navigation being wholly interrupted by ice.

We have received the Paris papers to the 25th ult. inclusive. The accounts they bring of the destination of the Russian army are very contradictory: The Vienna court gazette of the 8th says, however, that nothing positive was then known of the destination of these auxiliaries, which seems to prove that the late report of the Russians marching again to the Rhine was unfounded.

The Emperor of Germany has at last acknowledged the rights of the king of Sardinia. Letters from Genoa mention not only the admission of his officers to the civil government of Piedmont, but that the troops of that state now occupy Fortona, Alessandria and the other fortresses.

A deputy from the wretched inhabitants of the Valais, has remonstrated, with a firmness worthy of the founders of the Swiss liberty, with the French general. He justly charges him and his country with being the authors of all the calamities which overwhelm that innocent and once happy people.

The legislative body at Berne have passed to the order of the day upon the complaint of the French general, who refented the patriotic courage of his accufer. Buonaparte has communicated to that body his overtures for peace, and promises that the independence of the Helvetic republic, shall be established at its constitution. Money had arrived to pay the French troops at Bafle. The Swifs in their service have murmured for their pay, and some have returned without orders, from the places in insurrection, to which they have been marched.

General Brune writes from Venice that the disarming of the rebels continues. The war is entirely at an end, and the only interruption of the tranquility of these districts is from a few Brigands inured to habits of licentiousness and plunder.

The French papers affect to doubt the truth of the report that the Elector of Bavaria was to hire out troops to this country; but mistake themselves are better acquainted with his intentions.

There is no material intelligence from either of the theatres of war except that the army of the Archduke Charles has been in motion, and is on its march towards the Rhine. The campaign in that quarter may shortly be expected to commence. The only article from Italy worthy of notice, is that the Austrians have begun to withdraw themselves from the Genoese territory, in consequence of the scarcity of provisions in that country.

IRELAND.

Dublin, February 26.

AS a proof how much the public curiosity and interest relative to the union has subsided here, there were not ten persons in the gallery of the house of commons, 4 o'clock this day, altho' the most important of all the propositions, that embracing the commercial part of the union, was to have been brought forward.

Three thousand British troops landed here yesterday.

Another of the Orange Lodges of this city has come forward in reprobation of a legislative union.

Feb. 27. No business was done in the Commons this evening. The speaker took the chair at 4 o'clock, and counting the house, notwithstanding much anxiety was expressed by the chancellor of the exchequer to go into business, he adjourned, forty members not being present.

This day again presented the same proof as yesterday, that the public feeling has greatly subsided about the union, although it was the great commercial proposition that was to have been discussed; and also several merchants and manufacturers of the first eminence were to have been examined as to the effects of the proposition of the trade of Ireland, there were not more than 20 persons in the gallery.

Among the supplies for the British nation the present year are 3,000,000l. for subsidies.

PHILADELPHIA, April 29.

Cape Francois, March 25.

This day an account came to Dr. Stephens of 18 brigand barges having a few days since, attacked the ship Belton in a calm: that she had sunk 9 of them, and all the brigands were lost, except a few that her boats picked up! the other three barges got off nearly about the same time. The brigands took the schr. Cynthia, capt. Gould, bound to Port Republican, who left this 6 days ago.

but we have not learnt what they have done with the crew.

Since the above was written, I have been informed that capt. Gould and all his crew were put on shore on the beach at Gouzlee, and all lost, except the capt. and cabin boy, who escaped: the boy has lost both his arms. This is received from Dr. Stephens.

BOSTON, April 28.

Capt. Freeman of the ship Boston, arrived here on Saturday from Leghorn & Gibraltar, inform us, that while at Leghorn, he saw a letter from the American conful at Tunis, to our conful at the former place, which ſtated, that there had exiſted ſome uneaſineſs with the Bey on account of the non fulfilment of ſome articles of the late treaty with him; but that it had entirely ſubſided, and every thing amicably ſettled. Capt. Freeman was alſo informed, while there, that lord Nelſon, in the ſiege of Malta, had loſt one of his line of battle ſhips, ſunk under the battery, from which but few lives eſcaped; and that about the ſame time, his ſquadron captured a French 74 from Toulon, bound to Malta with ſupplies.

While at Gibraltar, capt. F. was informed by the American conſul at that place, that he had received a letter from Mr. Williams, our conſul at London, ſtating, that the blockade of Cadiz, and the coaſt of Catalonia, by lord Keith, was unauthoriſed, and requeſting him at the ſame time to give information of every American detained, or ordered away from thoſe coaſts.

NEW YORK, April 30.

Extract of a letter from Port Republican, dated the 6th inſtant.

The ſchr. Juliet, Prior, from Philadelphia to this port, was taken a few days ſince by the Bages. The brig Fanny of Baltimore, is captured and ſent into Jamaica by the Engliſh: ſhe was from St. Mark's, laden with cotton, & bound home. A ſchr. ſuppoſed to be from New York or Charleſton, was taken a few days paſt by Rigaud's barges, and all hands murdered. Mr. Wiggleſworth the Britiſh negociator with St. Domingo, is dead."

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, May 31.

ON the 24th February the chancellor of the exchequer diſcharged his unpleaſant duty of delivering, for the approbation of the houſe of commons, his ſcheme for the budget of taxes of the year. The diſagreeable nature of this taſk has been much ſoftened by the encreaſing trade & proſperity of the country, as well as by thoſe direct & efficient contributions which could alone have enabled the kingdom to meet the expenditure of the preſent war; and it will ſtrike ſome aſtoniſhment into the unwilling boſoms of our enemies, that in the fifth year of the cruel and extended hoſtilities they have impoſed on us, the government ſhould have to impoſe taxes to no greater amount than the ſum of three hundred and fifty thouſand pounds.

This ſum, in the preſent ſtate of our wealth, luxury, and reſources, we ſcarcely ſtate as a charge upon the people. What is impoſed upon rum and brandies, and particularly upon Britiſh diſtillery, is a meaſure of regulation as well as of finance, and a ſafeguard of the health and morals of the people. We cannot but hope that theſe duties will check the conſumption of theſe unwholeſome liquors, nor doubt but the revenue will receive more from the tax than it is taken at.—220,000l. are raiſed upon theſe deſtructive commodities.

The next tax, and what is ſurpriſing, the only one that remains, is laid upon the high priced teas, and conſequently the poor and economical are exempted from its operations. This burthen will not be felt upon the ſhoulders where it falls, and is no more than five per cent upon the breaſtſkirts of the rich—not as they are procured at the grocer's, but at the ſales of the Eaſt India company, before the duties attach to them.

We have already adverted to thoſe direct and efficient taxes which have rendered the new impoſitions ſo light and imperceptible. The income tax, & the convoy bill, produce eight millions and a quarter.

The bank charter diminiſhes the ſum to be provided for, to the amount of 3 millions, but the ſurplus of the conſolidated fund, which is the reſult of general proſperity, diminiſhes the debtor account ſome leſs than 5 millions and a half, theſe ſums added to a loan of 18 millions and a half, procured at the rate of intereſt infinitely beneath the legal trait, leave only 350,000l. to be provided for in the manner we have ſpecified, and the whole arrangement and proviſion for the expenditure of the year, has the rare fortune of impoſing no new hardſhips or privations upon the people and of ſhewing our reſources to our allies and our enemies, without burthening our commerce, or interfering with private enjoyment. Lon. pa.

A propoſition has been made for raiſing two hundred millions for Buonaparte by a voluntary reſtitution upon the part of every dilapidator in the republic, of half what he has plundered from it. The plan is excellent; juſt and natural. Many contractors, it is ſaid, will have a million to ſubſcribe. The contribution of Buonaparte himſelf will amount to exactly half a Crown. Ibid.

ANECDOTE.

HENRY VIII. of England, and Francis I. of France, were both princes of a very warm temper: and the former having a deſign of ſending an angry meſſage to the latter, pitched on Sir Thomas More, his chancellor, for the meſſenger. Sir Thomas having received his inſtructions, told Henry, that he feared, if he carried ſuch a meſſage to ſo violent a man as Francis, it might coſt him his head. "Never fear, man ſaid the king, if Francis were to cut off your head, I would make every Frenchman now in my power a head ſhorter." "I am much obliged to your majeſty" replies the facetious chancellor, "but I much doubt if any of their heads would fit my ſhoulders."

Concerning Happineſs.

Oh happineſs! our beings end and aim;
Good, Pleaſure, Eaſe, Content: what e'er thy name:
That ſomething ſtill which prompts th' eternal figh,
For which we bear to live, or dare to die.
POPE.

THE mind of man ever active and reſtleſs, through the various occupations and proſpects in which it is engaged, from the cradle to the grave, ſeems principally intent on one univerſal object, through every period of its exiſtence; and this object is Happineſs.

This is our being's end and aim; this is that ſomething, which enables us to ſupport the various viciſſitudes of life and even to brave the fears of death. It is the hope of attaining this happineſs, that draws into activity the various faculties of the mind, through the different purſuits of human life. Without this deſire, this ſomething, which conſtantly prompts the eternal ſigh, we ſhould have no ſpur to good, great or virtuous actions, nor even a deſire of prolonging our exiſtence. From an idea ſo univerſally coveted, it cannot appear extraordinary, that it ſhould be ſought for in the various external and internal purſuits, which engage the life of man. But being an action of the mind reflecting on itſelf, Happineſs cannot be placed in externals, nor confined to any particular claſs of beings or rank of ſociety. It is in vain that we look for it in the acquirements of ſcience, in the poſſeſſions of wealth, in the plenitude of power, or in the elevation of rank. And we ſhall be equally miſtaken, if we imagine, that poverty, ignorance, captivity, wretchedneſs, or even the brute creation, are totally deprived of their ſhare, of that univerſal bliſs, which a benign Providence has diffuſed over the minds of the various ſpecies of beings which his omnipotence has brought into exiſtence. Heaven certainly has not granted to every individual an equal degree of happineſs, but has endowed every one with the means of obtaining a ſufficient ſhare, independent of circumſtance and condition, to enable him to be as completely bleſſed, as his nature will allow, and bliſs is the ſame in every rank from the cottage to the throne. Fortune may variouſly diſtribute of her gifts, and to the eyes of an unthinking multitude, may ſeem to the who poſſeſs them to appear in a greater ſhare of happineſs, than thoſe who are not ſo liberally endowed, but the juſt balance of Providence will every where be found, and hope and fear poſſeſs all boſoms. The contented mind is the true ſeat of happineſs, ſatisfied with its internal ſtate and the objects which ſurround it, little inclination towards the change of condition, or the acquirement of other endowments mental or corporeal, remain, and according to the extent of this ſatisfaction, the real degree of Happineſs may be eſtimated. The frailty of the human frame, the viciſſitudes of life, and the fluctuating ſtate of the mind ariſing therefrom, muſt in a great meaſure prevent us from enjoying in this ſtage of our exiſtence, a perfect Happineſs; but the upright and juſt, from the internal ſatisfaction ariſing from good and virtuous actions, will, whatever their rank and condition, approximate as near to perfect bliſs, as the nature of humanity will admit; and where this fails, the rewards held out by the tenets of chriſtianity, produce that hope, which accompanies us thro' every department of life, and leads us ſtep by ſtep to the portal of eternal bliſs in a future ſtate.

As contentment is the only portal which conducts us to the temple of happineſs, ſo virtue, honour, piety and truth are the only paths which conduct thereto. To the vicious, the envious, the unjuſt, the avaricious, the ambitious and the impious, the latter are conſtantly barred, and the former eternally ſhut, both here and hereafter.

Know then this truth, enough for man to know,
Virtue alone is happineſs below.
The only point where human bliſs ſtands ſtill,
And taſtes the good without the fall to ill.
POPE.

Foreign News.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 30.

INTELLIGENCE of a very diſaſtrous kind has juſt been received from the Grand Vizier. He took ſix months to march from Scutari to Damaſ, and the contributions that he raiſed for the ſubſiſtence of his army, have alienated the minds of the inhabitants of Aſia Minor from the government of the Porte.

When the news reached him at Erzan that the Turks were defeated at Aboukir, nearly one half of his army diſbanded on its way to Aleppo.

The French general Kleber, diſpatched to El Arriſh a body of troops, to protect that place, and prevent the ravage of the Defart. The Grand Vizier transferred his camp to the utmoſt cultivated part of Syria at the beginning of the Deſerts of Egypt. He remained there 15 days, making every preparation and collecting camels and ſkins to enable him to traverſe a deſart eight leagues in extent.

General Kleber having been informed of his preparations, reinforced the French advanced guard at El Arriſh, repaired to that place in perſon, and on the 22d October marched forward at the head of 1000 dragoons or French huſſars, and a regiment of 2000 men mounted on dromedaries, with foot ſoldiers behind them. He alſo took with him a great number of light field pieces, and having made a circuit in the deſart, arrived in the rear of the enemy's camp at break of day, nearly at the ſame time when the corps of 10,000 infantry had arrived at the well of Sebabah, about a league and a half diſtance from the camp. The Grand Vizier thus unexpectedly attacked, could not make a long reſiſtance; and the French took the camp, a part of his baggage, and ſeveral thouſand priſoners.

The Grand Vizier immediately retreated with the remains of his army towards Damas which is ten days march from G-z.

The French have levied very large contributions in the province of Gaza, particularly in oil and tobacco, which are very much wanted in Egypt. They have left a ſtrong garriſon in El Arriſh, and a number of engineers to complete the works. They have alſo collected at that place near 10,000 Turkiſh priſoners, who are conſtantly employed in finiſhing the works. The intelligence has cauſed a great conſternation among the members of the Divan, and increaſed the number of thoſe attached to the French. It is thought that the Grand Vizier will be diſgraced, and no hopes are entertained at Conſtantinople of reconquering Egypt.

Lord Elgin has arrived at Conſtantinople, and has aſſumed the character of Ambaſſador of his Britannic Majeſty.

FROM THE FRENCH PAPERS.

ARMY OF THE WEST.

Brune, Conſeiller of State, General in Chief, to the inhabitants of the Department of Morbihan, Finiſterre, and the Cotes-Du-Nord.

At length you touch upon the termination of your calamities. Tranquillity ſprings up again in your countries, lately the prey of civil diſſenſions. The Chiefs of theſe unhappy diſſentions have heard the voice of reason. They wish to draw the attention of their country only to their inviolable fidelity.—The Catholic Priests muft make the words of peace, union, and juftice, be heard. The affections of all attach themfelves to a government which pardons and furrounds our glorious republic with the eftcem of the univerfe. Of what import is it whether thofe ——, whom jealous ——, fubfidies, return to hide their fhame in the icy caverns of the North, or come back again to the center of Europe, in fearch of new difgrace? The moft terrible enemies of the French were the French themfelves. Incendiary torches were prepared againft Breft and its fleets—and fome Frenchmen were to have been the inftruments of that crime! Oh fhame!

But the compact with the foreign foe has been trampled under foot! The rocks of Morbihan and Finifterre fhall be in future for our enemies more terrible than the tempefts. Concord is reftored among us. Sailors, who have been led aftray, return to thofe ports, once rich with your courage and your activity. The government invites you. Buonaparte, who has given to the army fo much glory, wifhes to rife again the French navy, and recall that celebrated aera when Duguay-Trouin, and all thofe heroes your countrymen, difperfed, deftroyed the Engliih fquadron, and confirmed the liberty of the feas.

Deferters, the country confents to pardon you, but it wifhes to fee you with laurels; go and receive them at the frontiers. Workmen, who have laid afide the peaceable inftruments of huf-bandry to charge your hands with parricidal fteel, be tranquil in your cottages: your wives, your children, your aged parents, demand your tendernefs, and your cares. The earth waits only for your labour to repay you with its grateful productions. Let every one refume his ufual occupations. Abundance will return with order. Under a juft and refpected government, every Frenchman is the maiter of his own happinefs, and it is the happinefs of every individual that compofes public felicity.—General peace will confirm to us all thefe bleffings.

Youthful inhabitants of the towns and country, you will not neglect to feize your portion of glory. Do not fuffer peace to come without having done any thing to obtain it. I know that you have been fenfible to the charms of valour. I myfelf will organife the battalions when you fhall voluntarily come to enrol yourfelves; and I fhall inform Buonaparte that I have found the men of Brittany worthy of their ancient renown.

Citizens, let us all forget the paft! Let the term "Chouan" be banifhed from converfation; let us banifh every other allufion that might remind us of our public or private misfortunes.—A new career opens itfelf to our view. It is from this point we muft fet out, and not attempt to look behind. Every thing connected with civil war is forgotten. But remember, that a government fufficiently ftrong to pardon, muft not be forced to punifh.

Decree for the Departments of the Weft.

Brune, Counfellor of State, General in Chief, confidering, that to affure the tranquillity of all the citizens in the departments of the Weft, it is neceffary to regulate in an uniform manner the condition of carrying arms, and wifhing to prevent all the inconveniencies and particular hardfhips refulting from domiciliary vifits, decrees as follows:

Art. 1. Within ten days after the publication of the prefent decree, in every principal place of each department every perfon, whether owner, or holder of one or more pieces of arms (muskets, piftols, or fabres) fhall be obliged to make declaration of it to the adminiftration of the canton in which he refides, or to the military commandant of the diftrict.

2. No individual fhall be fet at liberty to keep or carry the arms fo defignated, without previous permiffion from the departmental adminiftration, in confequence of a propofition for that purpofe from his municipality. The military commandant, muft certify fuch permiffion.

3. Every perfon, not military, nor actually employed in the fervice of the national guard, who fhall be found on the high roads, or any part of the country, with a mufket, fabre or piftols, without the permiffion above fpecified, fhall be punifhed with one month's imprifonment;—and if he be the owner alfo, by a fine not exceeding 60 francs.

4. If any perfon, carrying a mufket, fabre, or piftols, contrary to the prefent decree, is found in company of men fimilarly circumftanced, he fhall be punifhed with three months imprifonment; and if the owner, by a fine befides of 400 francs.

5. Every perfon convicted of having arms concealed, even tho' he fhould only have charge of them, fhall be punifhed with a year's imprifonment: and if he be the owner, or being merely the keeper, ftill be poffeffed of property, he fhall be amerced befides in a fine of 1000 francs, with a further fum of 30 francs for every mufket above 12. Should the depot of arms contain more than a hundred mufkets, the keeper and owner fhall be punifhed with death. In all the cafes expreffed in the 3d, 4th & 5th articles, the arms fhall be confifcated.

6. The fines arifing from thefe convictions fhall be applied to the relief of the poor, or the communes in which the delinquents or depots of arms fhall be found. The confifcated arms fhall be fent to the neareft city, and delivered to the military commandant, who fhall give a receipt for them, and make a return thereof, each decade, to the general commandant.

7. The punifhment of fine and imprifonment, enacted by the prefent decree, fhall be applied and pronounced by the correctional tribunals.—The pain of death expreffed in the 5th article fhall be pronounced by the criminal tribunals of the departments.

8. All the laws relative to crimes and offences committed by force, and thofe againft vagabonds, fhall refume their efficacy and be rigidly executed. All difpofitions of regulations or decrees, contrary to the prefent, fhall be confidered as null and void.

9. The General in Chief recommends to the Criminal Tribunals and Correctional Judges of the Peace, Councils of War, Adminiftrations Departmental & Municipal, and Military Commanders, to aflift each in his proper department, in the execution of the prefent decree, which fhall have the force of a law. The departmental adminiftrations fhall proclaim, print, and poft up the prefent decree, and fend copies of it to the municipal adminiftrations, tribunes, and judges of the peace. The generals of divifion employed in the army fhall communicate it to the councils of war, and the commandants military, and of the Gendarmerie.

THE BANK OF FRANCE.

The following account of this eftablifhment appears in the Paris journals:

The funds of the bank of France amount to thirty millions of francs, which are divided into thirty thoufand fhares. The bank is empowered to difcount bills of exchange and promiffory notes, having three fignatures of French citizens, or foreign merchants of known folvability; to advance money on a cafh account with individuals and public eftablifhments; and to iffue notes payable to the bearer, both at fight, and a certain number of days after.

But it will advance no monies on fecurities refulting from tranfactions contrary to the intereft of the republic, or to legal commerce, nor upon mere bills of accommodation.

The general court of the bank will be compofed of the 200 proprietors, who, being citizens of France, poffefs the greateft number of fhares. This circumftance will be afcertained at the conclufion of every quarter; and in cafes where the amount is equal, the preference will be given according to the date of fubfcription. The affairs of the bank are to be under the immediate management of fifteen regents, & three cenfors, to be chofen by the general court. The regents and cenfors muft be individually poffeffed of thirty, or collectively of five hundred and forty fhares. A general court is to be held on the 25th Vendemiaire of every year, but it may be extraordinarily convoked by the regency, for the purpofe of propofing changes or modifications of the fundamental ftatutes. The tranfers of the fhares are to be made on the order of the holder, prefented by one of the accredited agents of the bank, of which, as a fecurity for their conduct, they muft themfelves poffefs a certain number of fhares. The regents and cenfors will hold a general council every fix months, for declaring the dividends which will be paid in Paris by the cafhier of the bank, and in the chief place of every department, by the correfpondents of the bank.

Government has authorised the managers of the Republican Theatre and of Arts to give maiked balls.

This kind of diverfion, which had been prohibited for the laft ten years, being now renewed, fhews the difference between a government ftrong in its juftice, and in the love of its citizens, and a weak government, whofe gloomy conduct dreads that under the maik of pleafure there might be concealed projects of vengeance.

Parifians may confidently give themfelves up to their former gaity; all poffible meafures are taken to affure their tranquility and their amufement.

LONDON, March 17.

Admiral Knowles will conduct the naval part of the expedition, of which Sir Charles Stuart will have the command in chief.

A conffiderable number of troops it is faid, will embark foon from Cork to the Weft Indies. This is the motive for fending them thither.—The guards will remain in Ireland while the regulars go abroad. Troops are much wanted in the Weft Indies, particularly in Jamaica.

We hear that the following regiments of infantry are under orders for foreign fervices, viz.—2d Battalion of the 4th regiment; 2d do. of the 5th; 3d do. of the 9th; 2d do. of the 27th; 2d do. of the 31ft; 2d do. of the 35th; 2d do. of the 49th; 2d do. of the 52d; and three battalions from the Irifh eftablifhment.

Within the laft ten days four fhips have arrived from Carolina at different ports chiefly laden with rice; and when the wind comes to the weftward, ten more fhips may be expected, with about 5000 barrels, each weighing 500 wt. of that valuable article. It is imagined by the middle of May, upwards of 15,000 barrels more will arrive, which will, doubtlefs, help to lower the price of bread. One pound of rice, boiled loofe in plenty of water for ten minutes, will yield 3 pounds of nourifhing food.

United States.

BOSTON, May 6.

By a gentleman who came to town laft evening from Salem, we are informed that a fhip arrived there yefterday afternoon, in 26 days from Cadiz, commanded by Ifrael Williams, who ftated that the American commiffioners had arrived at Paris, been cordially received, and that the negociation was in favorable progrefs; that Buonaparte had addreffed the people of France and of the armies, re-capitulating the efforts he made for peace, throwing the odium of the continuance of the war on the Englifh and their allies; and inviting the affiftance of all Frenchmen to command that peace which had been refufed to their invitation; that after this exordium a felect army was formed, at the head of which he placed himfelf; that the Ruffians were on their return to the Rhine; that lord Nelfon had fallen in with a fquadron which failed from Toulon for the relief of Malta, conffiting of the Genereux, of 74 guns, feveral frigates, and a large number of tranfports, reported to have 4000 land forces on board—the whole of which fquadron he captured, excepting one frigate of 44 guns, which was driven on fhore and deftroyed.

The INVADERS of EGYPT.

Capt. Higgins, from Leghorn, whofe veffel is performing quarantine, brot with him from that place the following article, which was tranflated from a Venetian governmental gazette of the latter part of Feb. and circulated in hand bills at Leghorn, on the 7th March.

"The Grand Vizier with his army attacked the fort of Arifch, garrifoned by 1800 Frenchmen, who defired to capitulate, but the Vizier infifted that they fhould furrender at difcretion—which being refufed, the fortrefs was taken by affault, and but 100 of the garrifon efcaped the fword. The vizier after placing a fufficient Turkifh force in that place, prepared to march to Cairo. The French, to impede this ftep, propofed terms of peace, and offered to evacuate Egypt; but the Englifh diffuaded the vizier from conceding to thefe propofitions—and he continued his march towards Cairo, with all poffible expedition."

NEW YORK, May 10.

Captain Peterfon of the fhip Louifa, arrived at Philadelphia on Thurfday laft, fpoke the 8th of March, off Cape Spartel, fhip Caroline, capt. E. Preble, of Boffon, in company with the Diana, of Baltimore, from Leghorn, bound home, who informed him that the Queen Charlotte, admiral Keith, was blown up in Leghorn roads, and upwards of 600 fouls perifhed. The admiral was on fhore.

An arrival at Philadelphia from Leghorn, confirms the account received from Boffon, that lord Nelfon had captured a French 80 gun fhip, and three other ftore fhips, with 4000 troops on board going into Malta.

Arrived at Salem, the fhip Friendfhip, capt. Williams, in 26 days from Cadiz.

It was reported when capt. W. left Cadiz, but not credited, that the French and Spanifh fleets had gone out of Breft.

Spain is at this moment a moft wretched country—their treafury exhaufted—their finances deranged—their paper money depreciated 50 per cent.—the faiors in their fleet deftitute of neceffaries, and their pay, as well as that of the m n employed in the public arfenals, &c. eight months in arrear—the queen and her party lavifhing money on favourites—the people, even Spaniards, grumbling at the conduct—great apprehenfions entertained for the fafety of twelve millions of dollars which fhould have arrived from Vera Cruz, the failure of which, it was apprehended, would excite ferious convulfions in Spain.

Three frigates, and 16 large fhips, failed from Cadiz, while capt. W. was there, taking an opportunity when no Englifh force was off fufficient to prevent them.

Capt. O'Brien had written a circular letter from Algiers to the American maiters of veffels, requefting information refpecting a veffel deftined to Algiers with naval ftores for the Dey from the United States, as ftipulated by treaty—that it was then feveral months fince fhe fhould have arrived—and that if fhe fhould not have arrived within thirty days from that time, (Feb. 11) or fome reafonable account given for her delay, the Dey was determined to commence hoftilities upon the American commerce.

The fupercargo of the brig American, which arrived at Baltimore from St. Sebaftians in Spain, communicates the following information:

That the American envoys travelled through the French territory on their way to Paris, incog. but wherever they were difcovered, were received and entertained with the moft enthufiaftic reffect and hofpitality;—that they arrived in Paris a few days before a national fete was performed in honour of our deceafed Waffhington, whofe burft was placed in the gallery of the Thuilleries, in prefence of the conffuls and chief officers of the French nation; a particular feat being affigned to our envoys, they declined the intended honor, and mixed among the croud of the populace;—that a commiffion of three were on the fucceeding day, appointed to meet and arrange the bufinefs of negociation with the American miniffers, viz. Joffeph Buonaparte, Fleureau, and Roederer, who had fixed on a day for opening the negociation.

He further ftates, that conful Buonaparte had lignified his intention of taking command, in perfon, of an army of 60,000 men, now collected at Dijon, in the ci-devant province of Burgundy;—that Moreau has an army of 150,000 men in Switzerland, of which 24 000 are cavalry, and five full regiments of mounted artillery;—that the Chouans are all difperfed, and their chiefs brot to Paris;—that on the 22d February, Suwarrow was in Poland on his return to Peterfburg.

The people of France look on the profpect of a new campaign as certain; and the energies of the nation have received a new impulfe from the unlimited confidence which Buonaparte has inffired.

May 12.

Friday forenoon, Peter Lacroix, Joffeph Baker and James Berrofe, were executed on the ifland oppofite Philadelphia, for piracy and murder, agreeable to their fentence. The reverend clergy of different denominations affifted thefe unhappy men in devotional exercifes previous to their leaving prifon. Lacroix was attended to the place of execution by a clergyman of the Preffbyterian church; and Baker and Berrofe were accompanied by a clergyman of the Roman Catholic perfuafion.

About eleven o'clock they were brot from prifon by the civil officers, and conducted in a cart to Market-ffreet wharf, where a boat received and conveyed them to the ifland. Being arrived at the fatal fpot, the prifoners kneeled down, and after fome time fpent in prayer, with much contrition, on the part of Berrofe and Baker, they were prepared for the conclufion of the awful fcene.—Lacroix (who, though he difcovered to the fpectators no external marks of penitence, yet in fact had fuch exercifes of mind as to afford to thofe who converfed with him fome ground for hope) firft mounted the fcaffold, and declaring his peace with all mankind, and hoping for the like difpofition towards him, and for forgiveneis of God for all his crimes—laid he was ready, and refigned to his fate.—He behaved throughout great compofure.

The agitation of Baker and Berrofe was extreme; and they employed their remaining time in the moft earneft fupplications to the Almighty for mercy and forgiveneis, until the cart was drawn from under them, about 12 o'clock.

After hanging one hour, their bodies were put into coffins and buried near the gallows.

At a farm, a few miles from Philadelphia, a perfon in going down a deep well, without taking proper precautions, had nearly been deftroyed by a quantity of fixed air which covered its bottom.

This fixed air, by chemifts called the Carbonic Acid, is a fubftance which has excited much of the attention of philofophers for many ages back, on account of the very curious and intereffing properties it poffeffes. From its great weight, (being much heavier than Atmofpheric air,) it uniformly fubfides to the bottom of the veffel in which it is contained and may be carried to any diftance; or, even poured out of one veffel into another, like water. It is alfo fuddenly deftructive of animal life; and it is owing to the prefence of this air, that the famous Grotto del Cafer, near Naples, is fatal to animals whofe organs of refpiration are placed below the level of the mouth of that cavern. The furface of the celebrated lake Averno in Italy, is faid to be covered with a quantity of this air; and that birds flying over, becoming accidentally enveloped by it, are precipitated almoft inftantaneoufly dead into the water. It is alfo owing to the exiffence of this deleterious air in the earth, that well-diggers are often deftroyed. It is from an ignorance of the nature of this fubftance, and fometimes from a want of fufficient care, that thefe melancholy accidents have occurred. Were well-diggers duly aware of its noxious qualities, they might always, and with certainty, detect its prefence by lowering gradually to the bottom of the well, a lighted candle: If the candle goes out, it is a fure proof of the exiffence of fix-on fire, because flame is so suddenly and as invariably extinguished by it, as the life of an animal.

PHILADELPHIA, May 7.

Extract from the Log Book of the ship Eliza, arrived yesterday from Leghorn.

"Feb. 17. Sailed from Leghorn.

"Feb. 24. Off the island of Gorgona, fell in with a French privateer, of 8 guns, and full of men, which we engaged for three glasses. It falling calm, she effected her escape by means of her sweeps and boat, after receiving considerable damage.

"Feb. 25. Between Cape de Gatt and Cape Pallos, experienced a tremendous gale of wind, in which the sea struck the brig, and carried away her larboard bulwarks and stanchions from the fore chains to the companion, at the same time sweeping every thing off the deck; had one man killed, and several others much bruised by being washed under the guns. The gale continuing, and the vessel making much water, we were obliged to make the first port possible to repair, and on the 28th arrived at Port Mahon, in the island of Minorca.

"March 14. Arrived the Pearl frigate, with the Le Genereux, of 80 guns and 1300 men, which has been captured off Malta, having on board for that place provisions for 12 months.

"26. Sailed from Mahon, in company with the Success frigate.

"April 4. Off Almira, spoke a Danish brig cutter from Malaga, out 24 hours, bound for Leghorn, who informed us, that Gibraltar was blockaded by the French and Spanish gun boats.

"6. Spoke the Danish ship Nancy, from Barcelona, bound to Malaga, who confirmed the blockade of Gibraltar; off the island of Ivica had been brought too by a frigate with lord Nelson on board, bound down the straights.

"7. Passed the straights of Gibraltar in co. with a Danish brig.

Russians homeward bound. [Certain.]

Ratisbon, (Germany,) Feb. 22. The Russian troops are returning home in six columns through Gallicia. Prince Suwarrow sets out immediately from Cracow for Peterburg.

Cleves, (Ger.) Feb. 28. The return of Suwarrow—his army stopping on the Vistula—Paul's language towards Prussia—the Russian forces in Poland, all tend to induce the court of Berlin, to adopt preparatory defensive measures. If Prussia engages in war with Russia, she expects to be joined by Saxony and Denmark. From the former of which the Emperor Paul has withdrawn his envoy, in consequence of the Elector's refusal to furnish his contingent to the war, & he is dissatisfied with the latter, because he has not obtained a free passage for troops through the Danish territories.

RUSSIAN AUXILIARIES.

London, March 16. According to accounts from Lithuania, eighty thousand Russians are assembling on the shore of the Baltic, for the purpose of being employed in expeditions against France and Holland; they are not captured, however, to arrive before the middle of May.

Orders have been issued from the navy-office, for several Russian ships of war, Dutch prizes, &c. to proceed to Riga, to transport the above troops.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, June 7.

Yesterday his Excellency the Governor, came in state to the Upper House of Legislature, and being seated on the Throne, he commanded, by message through the gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, the attendance of the Commons, in the Legislative Council chamber, and the Commons having attended accordingly, his Excellency was pleased to approve of the Speaker chosen by them, and to make the following SPEECH to both Houses of Parliament:

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen,

I Cannot deny myself the satisfaction of expressing on this, the first opportunity I have had of meeting you in Parliament, the deep sense I have of the honor conferred upon me by his Majesty, in appointing me to represent Him, in a Province not more distinguished by the Gifts, which Nature has so abundantly bestowed upon it, than by the full enjoyment of all the blessings which flow from the British Constitution, and by the possession, as nearly as circumstances will allow, of the British Constitution itself.

It is no small addition to this Satisfaction, that my first Act, as a Member of the Provincial Legislature, is to signify to you, that the Loyalty and dutiful Attachment which you have manifested for his Majesty's Person and Family, and your readiness to support his Majesty's Exertions for the Security of the Empire at large, and for the preservation of our valuable Constitution, by the Grant made by you of a surplus of your resources, has been highly grateful to his Majesty, and that his Majesty has been graciously pleased to give to me in Command, to communicate to you, the just sense which he entertains of your Zeal and Affections.

Tho' I have called you together at a season of the Year, when I am sensible, that your absence from your respective homes must be attended with material inconvenience..., I am not aware that I shall have occasion to detain you long, and I look forward with pleasure to the time, when the opening of the Roads which communicate with the Capital, will enable me to meet you at a Session, when Public business may be dispatched, without Private inconvenience.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I have directed the Receiver General, and other Public Officers, to lay before you their respective Accounts of the receipt and application of the Provincial Revenue, and I feel very considerable pleasure in observing the increase which has been made in it, since the earlier periods of its collection.

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen,

I lament that it is not in my power to inform you of the approach of Peace.—The guilty and deluded Nation, which has so long been the scourge of Europe, still wastes its strength, and exhausts its resources, in enslaving its own subjects, and oppressing the Nations around it; confident in nothing, but in basely crouching to the Tyrant of the day, and yielding to Usurpers a degree of obedience, which its Lawful Sovereigns never exacted.—Force and Artifice are alternately employed, to violate Neutralities, to break the most solemn Treaties, to overturn established Authorities, and to trample on Liberty, Property, and Life. His Majesty, neither fearing its power, nor misled by its artifices, still maintains the conduct, which will hand down his name to the remotest posterity, as the Protector of the Rights of Nations, and the Guardian of Social Order. The blessing of Providence follows his exertions; and while the unabated Affection of his Subjects secures tranquillity at Home, the consummate Skill and matchless Valour, which guide and animate his Fleets and Armies, enable him to baffle every attempt from without, that a faithless and implacable Enemy is hourly making, upon the Dignity and Independence of a Great, Free, and Happy People.

On Thursday last the Lower House of Parliament met (pursuant to adjournment on Monday, a sufficient number of members not being in town to form a House,) and proceeded to the election of a Speaker, in the room of the Honorable D. W. Smith, Esq; now absent, when Samuel Street, Esq; was chosen, after which the House adjourned to next day.

Last Wednesday being the anniversary of his Majesty's Birth, the same was celebrated with a spirit of patriotism highly honorable to all the inhabitants of town and neighbourhood.—About twelve o'clock there was a discharge of twenty-one pieces of cannon from the battery, accompanied by three volleys of small arms from the Queen's Rangers, now doing duty in this garrison.

The Militia assembled in front of the Government Buildings fired three vollies on the above occasion with such exactness, as to do them honor.

In the evening, his Excellency the Governor, gave a splendid ball and supper, at which most of the first characters in this province were present.

The British government has contracted to give 20 dollars per barrel, for all flour, which shall arrive in England, before the 1st day of September next.

INTERESTING.

The following very interesting paragraphs, we find in one of our late London papers —taken from a Paris Gazette.

THE actual situation of Paris produces more uneasiness than hopes. Some look to the future with apprehension, under a government which ought to give them confidence. It is no more than a phantom. Others look to the Jacobins. Their view is more correct. The first movements in the South are with the Jacobins, in fact they are the sparks of a civil war. The temporary wants of an army, the suspension of its victories, the necessarily slow regulation of the finances to long disorganized, all embolden them, all seems to accelerate the return of their power. They smile with tranquillity at the ingratitude of the people, at the dangers of the country, at the labours of the government. What they loft of ferocity in their countenances is centered in their hearts. The fashion of the timid increases their confidence, that of the indifferent is serviceable to their plots.

The first are determined to approve of nothing, the second will have no opinion, conceiving it to be useless.

The one forgets what it has done, the other sees not what it may do; and the timidity of the former, with the impolicy of the latter, contribute to the lethargy of the public opinion, at a time when at least we ought to entertain a hope.

In the midst of the inundation of flattery, of solicitations, and amendes honorables, a pamphlet entitled—"A Letter to Buonaparte," is privately circulated, and of course read with the more avidity, to which the author would not be so audacious to affix his signature! His object is plainly to let us see the inconveniences of a Republic, his means to employ Buonapare to reestablish the throne, and his project to restore Louis XVIIIth to the Sovereignty. He sees only two orders in France, the Noblesse and the Tiers Etat. If no impression is made by the solidity of his reasoning, the fancy at least may be touched by the originality of his manner —The following examples are only taken at random:

"Fourteen centuries of existence, of aggrandizement, of prosperity, and of glory, prove at least that all was not bad in the Monarchial System. On the contrary, three Constitutions, sworn to and dissolved in less than eight years, attest the futility of philosophical conceptions. Men are not governed by written laws, but as far as their laws are conformable to their manners and their interest. . . .

"If we look only to true policy, we may write in one line the history of the Romans, and that line would be as follows:—

"The Romans were punished for their ingratitude to Servius Tullius by the Republic; and for their ambition, by the conquest of the world.

"History says they were free: I do not believe it. It says they were covered with glory, but were they happy?—Read on—

"If we could for a while give up the indefinite word Liberty to substitute for it that of Happiness, all men of sense would soon be of one opinion.—It was an easy thing, for a few days, to persuade the people, even under the scourge of Robespierre, that they were free; but all the address in the world could not make them believe that they were happy.

"Revolutionary politicians will exclaim, that there can be no happiness without liberty. So much the better—only try to make us happy, and then we shall be free."

In order to make peace, according to this author, it is necessary that the French should give a guarantee for the future; and this pledge or guarantee he can only find in a Monarchy. The following is the language in which he preaches this doctrine to Buonaparte:

"In this state of things then a real peace is impossible, if France does not guarantee her moderation for the time to come. What should that guarantee be?

"Reflect a little, Sir: In effecting the movement of the 18th Brumaire, (Nov. 9) you solemnly promised peace, and France depends upon it as much as if you had promised her victories. But I must apprise you, that it is not by new victories that France can arrive at the promised peace; it is by negociations, it is by a stable condition that she can find at once repose and happiness. If you do not give it peace you will lose all your consideration; and if you do give it peace, you will lose it still more. The people do not calculate the powers of a man: when they give him the name of great, they require every thing of him, as they degrade him in proportion to the disposition they felt of bestowing on him their esteem. Our destiny is linked with the fate of Europe—that is no doubt a happiness for us; but remember well, that you are no longer permitted to fall into any error; that valor is a thing beneath your reputation; that, in a word, nothing remains for you but glory.

"Glory does not fall with those who shine in Revolutions, it solely belongs to those who put an end to them.

"Glory does not consist in overthrowing the Kings and Ministers who govern Europe; that is easy to be done, but much of it would be derived from giving repose to the universe, and happiness to France."

Foreign News.

SWEDEN.

STOCKHOLM, February 17.

THE foreign papers have given interesting accounts of the disturbances which occurred lately at Gottenburg, and in the province of Ostrogothia.—The bad harvest last year, by occasioning a scarcity of grain, produced a considerable increase in the price. The government had confined to a very small number of individuals the privilege of making brandy from grain. In plentiful years this distillery was free; but to prevent too great consumption, it had been restrained, and at length converted into a privilege, by which government gained considerably. A person named Biornberg had obtained that privilege for Gottenburg. The Burghers remonstrated with the government, in order that the privilege might be withdrawn, they offered to pay the sum which government were to receive.—The minister refused to accede to their representations; and M. Biornberg, who abides, was by no means liked, having become more insolent since his triumph, the populace rose and destroyed his house, after having burnt all his furniture. He owed his own safety to flight. As soon as the disturbances broke out the commandant of the town ordered the generale to be beat, & troops were sent to disperse the populace, which was effected without opposition. In Ostrogothia some peasants rose and wished to set fire to the distillery, but troops being sent in time, the peasants separated without effecting their purpose; some were taken and punished; but all kind of uneasiness and disturbances were at an end, so soon as the government had absolutely prohibited the distillation from grain under severe penalties.

LONDON March 12.

The Clef du Cabinet of the 7th. 1797.

"It appears certain that the campaign will very soon be opened; that the first Conful will put himself at the head of our armies, and that on the 22d inftant 600 of his guard will fet off to repair thither.—With what new ardour for conqueft will not the prefence of fuch a General inſpire our ſoldiers!" "Sire," ſaid the Marſhal de Villars to Louis XIV, "I am going to fight your enemies, and I leave you in the midſt of mine."

Letters from Munich ſtate, that a body of 12,000 Bavarian troops are to ſet out on the 4th of Germinal (March 25) to join the army of the Archduke.

The following obſervation is made in a letter from Caſſel, under date of the 2d Ventoſe, Feb. 21—"We conſider as a ſign of peace the order given by the Imperial Miniſter to the Editors of public Journals at Ratiſbon, to abſtain from all indecent language againſt the French government.

"The Porte," ſays the Vienna Gazette, "has declared to the Houſe of Auſtria its intention to conclude a peace with France."

The Clef du Cabinet of the 3d, contains the following articles from Berlin, under the date of the 23d ult. "They talk of an offenſive and defenſive alliance between our court and that of France, againſt certain deſigns which certain powers are ſuppoſed to entertain againſt us. It is ſaid that our miniſters were ſeriouſly engaged with this object in the late conference which they have had with the French Ambaſſador. Although this important intelligence be yet but a report, it is nevertheleſs given ſo circumſtantially, that it is difficult not to give credit to it, particularly when we ſee Ruſſia aſſembling ſo many troops on our frontiers."

Orders have been received at Weſel to prepare lodgings for the Duke of Brunſwick, General Molendorf, and ſeveral other Pruſſian General Officers, who are expected from Berlin. The Pruſſian troops approach Nuremberg, and are already in the environs of that town.

Preſent Poſition of the Auſtrian Army.

The cantonments of this army are, according to the French papers, diſpoſed in the following manner:—General Petraſch commands the troops diſtributed in the Griſons and Voralberg; head quarters at Lindau. The grenadiers under the command of Generals Korpoth and Spork, are cantoned between the Lake of Conſtance and Shaffhauſen. The Archduke is at the centre of the military line at Donaueſchingen. Nouendorf commands the centre, which ſtretches towards Baſle. Near to this is the corps of General Meerfeld, who obſerves Kehl and Briſac; his head quarters are at Offenbourg. Major-General Count de Ginlay directs the chain of advanced poſts upon the Rhine. The corps of General Sztarry, 20,000 ſtrong, is detached from the grand army, and in proportion, has more light cavalry, ſuch as the huſſars of Szeckler and Veckſay, the 13th regiment of dragoons, &c. The heavy cavalry, conſiſting of the regiments of Cuiraſſiers of Albert and Naſſau, under the command of Prince Joſeph of Lorraine, is poſted in the neighbourhood of Stutgard. Great magazines of proviſions are formed at Heilbron and Guntzberg, and interior depots at different places on the Rhine.

The communication of this Auſtrian army, with that of Italy, is carried on by the Griſons, and a corps, commanded by General Diedwitch, and Col. Segenfeld, which occupies Bellinzona and Chiavenna.

March 13.

Buonaparte is to command the armies on the opening of the campaign. This was announced in the Tribunate on the 18th, by citizen Champigny.

He then read two decrees. The firſt was in the following terms:

1. The Department, which at the end of Germinal, April 20, ſhall have paid up the greater parts of its contributions, ſhall be declared to have deſerved well of its country.

2. All the old troops who have obtained leave of abſence, all veterans able to bear arms, and all requiſitionaries and conſcripts, are deſired to join the armies before the 15 Germinal next, April 6.

3. Thoſe who do not belong to any particular corps, ſhall repair, before the ſame period, to Dijon, where they ſhall be reviewed at the end of Germinal, before the firſt Conſul.

4. All other French citizens who wiſh to ſerve under the firſt Conſul, ſhall get their names inſcribed by their Prefects; they ſhall be organized into battalions of volunteers; thoſe who procure horſes ſhall be organized into ſquadrons of volunteers.

5. Before 20 Germinal (April 10) the Prefects ſhall ſend to the miniſter of the interior, a ſtatement of the young men whom they have ſent to join the armies.

6. The name of the department which ſhall have furniſhed the greateſt number of defenders of its country, ſhall be proclaimed.

Although Carnot has ſo recently returned from his exile, he is conſidered in France, as the perſon of the greateſt influence after Buonaparte.

All the deputies depoſed by the French revolution of the 4th of September, who have not fallen victims to that ſanguinary criſis, have been ſuffered to return to France, and moſt of them now enjoy the higheſt favour.—Lafond Ladebat, and Barbe Marbois, are juſt arrived at Breſt from Guiana.

Nouet has written from Egypt, that ſome of the literati there intended to undertake an expedition into Upper Egypt, as far as the tropic of Cancer; at the time he diſpatched his letter, he was on the point of ſetting out on his journey thitherr

March 18.

It appears from a poſtſcript to a Genoeſe Gazette of the 1ſt inſt. that hoſtilities have recommenced in Italy, in the environs of Genoa. An article from Leghorn ſtates that Klenau was advancing rapidly againſt Ott's corps of 20,000 men, ſeconded by the inſurgents of Roſſanna Buona.

Rigaud, commander in chief of the troops in the Southern department of St. Domingo, has iſſued a proclamation, in which he expatiates on their bravery and ſufferings in ſieges and aſſaults and giving an example of heroic reſiſtance above all praiſe—after repreſenting Touſſaint, as a tyger, as a dread monſter in human ſhape, who, not content with aſſaſſinating above 2000 perſons in the environs of Jacquemel, and cauſing to be ſhot from a cannon or drowned, an equal number of thoſe victims; but actually ſacrificed 7000 of his own men, and was ſtill preparing to exhibit the ſame horrors in the ſouthern departments—he ſays, "But I ſwear by thoſe indiſſoluble ties that ought ever to unite us, by that energy, the effects of which were related to him after the battles he had provoked, that if he has the folly to undertake ſo execrable a project, his hordes ſhall not penetrate two leagues in this department, before they ſhall be completely exvelopped.—The firſt of all laws, is that which dictates to men the means of their own preſervation—that nature has created, and that every free conſtitution has rendered ſacred; theſe ſhall direct all our efforts. Let all the true friends of France riſe en maſſe, and then let the three headed monſter, that has betrayed Spain, England, France & its friends, betrayed even the emigrants that he reſtrained or invited to St. Domingo, the atrocious fanatic who feeds on the blood of men; let him then preſent himſelf, and the earth ſhall be purged of ſo great an abomination, and nature corrected of the error ſhe committed in giving him a human form. Citizens of all colours and of every profeſſion, let us conſult our own preſervation; the ſafety of the Southern department depends thereon, we ſhall ſave our parent country by uſing the means to protect ourſelves.—Let us repeat the oath of fidelity to the preſent government; union among ourſelves, and conſtancy at our poſts, let us be faithful to our oaths, and we ſhall be victorious."

Extract of a letter from Hamburg, dated March 14.

"The vigour of the warlike preparations making in the Imperial hereditary dominion exceeds any thing hitherto known. Hungary has offered 26,000 recruits, and in caſe of need, as many cavalry.

"The French begin to be in motion in the ſouth of Switzerland, and they have got conſiderable reinforcements at Nice and Genoa. General Klenau, in a reconnoitering party, was cut off and made priſoners by a ſtrong French detachment.

"General Lavalette, adjutant general to Buonaparte, on the 4th inſtant, paſſed through the head-quarters of the Archduke with diſpatches to Vienna.

"It is ſaid that Pruſſia is buſily employed in bringing about a peace between England and France, by which the ſecurity of future treaties might be warranted, by the union of Holland with the Imperial Netherlands under the Stadtholder, and the reſtoration of Switzerland.

"The Emperor of Ruſſia has ordered official notice to be given to the courts of Berlin and Dreſden of the return of his troops from Germany. It is reported that the corps of Conde is to be employed againſt Malta.

"Accounts from Conſtantinople to the 10th Feb. ſtate, that the Grand Vizier had advanced to Saliche, three days journey from Cairo.—Here he was met by overtures from General Kleber, offering to quit Egypt, with his army, provided they were admitted to return to France. The Grand Vizier has conſented to a truce for one month, in order to receive inſtructions from the Porte on the ſubject.

"Lord Mento has received a courier from Palermo, ſtating the capture of a French frigate from Alexandria for Toulon, with 14 French officers from the army in Egypt, and a memorial from the army, ſigned by all the officers to the French Directory, repreſenting the wretched ſituation in which Buonaparte had left them."

From the Calcutta Gazette Extraordinary, December 12, 1799.

This day diſpatches have been received from Lieut. Col. Collins, reſident at the court of Dowlut Row Scinda, dated camp near Kamutah, 2d December, containing the intelligence that on that morning Vizier Alli had been delivered into the cuſtody of Lieut. Colonel Collins, and placed under ſtrict confinement.

All the reſolutions which compoſe the ſyſtem of the Union between England and Ireland having now paſſed the Iriſh parliament, they will forthwith be brought into the Engliſh houſe, and ordered to be printed, preparatory to the diſcuſſion of them. It is ſuppoſed that the diſcuſſion will not be entered upon until after the Eaſter receſs.

Lord Elgin, it is ſaid in the foreign papers, is on terms of the greateſt intimacy with the Captain Pacha at Conſtantinople. Lady Elgin lately paid a viſit to his fiſter in her haram, where ſhe remained for two days, and was preſented by her with two complete female habits, after the Turkiſh faſhion, richly embroidered.

March 26.

Hoſtilities, we expect to hear by the next mails, are commenced—the Auſtrians we know to be in great force, and the French do not open the campaign with the ſame ſtrength which they had in the laſt. Buonaparte's ſtay at Dijon is evidently formed for the purpoſe of recruiting the other armies of the republic. All the conſcripts are invoked and intreated to join it on pretence of their ſerving immediately under the firſt conſul; but in fact, he marched away to recruit other armies, and augment the forces of ſome other commander.

A remarkable occurrence happened on Friday night laſt, at Chelmsford, towards the cloſe of the Eſſex Aſſizes:—John Taylor had been arraigned and tried on the charge of uttering a forged note, in the name of Bartholomew Browne, for 820l. 10s. with an intent to defraud the Bank of Cricket and Co. at Colcheſter, of which the jury found him guilty; but juſt as Baron Hotham was about to put on his black cap and paſs ſentence of death on the priſoner, one of the Barriſters, not retained on the trial, happened to turn over the forged note, ſaw it ſigned Barthol. Browne, and throwing his eye immediately on the indictment, perceived it written threin Bartholomew Browne. He immediately pointed out the circumſtance to Mr. Garrow, counſel for the priſoner, who roſe up, and ſtated the variance as fatal to the indictment; in which the Judge concurred, and directed the jury to reconſider their verdict, and acquit the priſoner; which they did, and he was inſtantly diſcharged from the bail dock accordingly.

Meſſrs. Vandyke, Gevers, and Co. a Dutch houſe, applied, with ſeveral other perſons, ſome months ago, to the privy council for licences to import grain from France. They were told that there could be no objection to grant licences, but that it did not appear that there was any great probability of obtaining the grain. They replied that the licence could do no harm and that if the price of grain roſe to a conſiderable height in this country, perhaps the price might tempt the French government to ſuffer it to be exported. The licences were granted, and Meſſrs. Vandyke, Gevers, and Co. have received advice from their correſpondents in France, that 120,000 quarters of grain wait only for the veſſels neceſſary to convey it to England.

ALBANY, May 13.

From St. Domingo.

We are in poſſeſſion of the "Bulletin Official de St. Domingue," to the 4th ult. In the paper of the laſt date is the official account of the capture [illegible] Touſſaint's forces of Jacquemel, [illegible] 7th February, after much ſever[illegible]g.—The attack was made by [illegible] troops, and many of Rigaud's forces were killed and made priſoners. Oge was killed, Touſſaint's troops have alſo taken the important port Cavalier near Baynet. The moſt deadly animoſity ſubſiſts between theſe chieftains. They reciprocally denominate each other rebel: and both acknowledge fealty to the French republic.

Other accounts, to the ninth of April, ſay, that Touſſaint is generally ſucceſsful.

General Rochambeau, we find by a Paris paper, is reſtored to his rank.—A Philadelphia paper mentions his arrival at Gaudeloupe, as Governor of that iſland, appointed by Buonaparte.

May 22.

Died, at Sutton, (Maſſachuſetts) Willis Hall, and his wife, the latter aged 74, died on the 7th, and the former, aged 84, on the 10th of April.

At Cranſton, cape, Pa. Sheldon, negro widow is 88 years old, and his poſterity 96 in number.

WILKESBARRE, (Penn.) May 6.

In our laſt we mentioned a draught of 9300 ſhad being taken at Nicholſon's, four miles below this town; a few days previous to that, 6565 were taken at a draught, and frequently in the courſe of the ſeaſon, from 1500 to 4000, at the ſame fiſhery.

BOSTON, May 17.

Since our laſt the ſhip Galen, Capt. Seward, has arrived here from London. Our files of London papers are to the 2nd March; a few days later than before received in the United States.

On the 2d March, five of the delayed mails from Hamburg arrived at London. Their contents are not very important; but they bear indications of a negociation for peace between the Emperor of Germany, and the Prime Conſul of France.—Theſe indications appear in the continual interchange of courriers, and communications between the two cabinets;—in the propoſition which Buonaparte has made to withdraw all his troops from Italy, and to make the Rhine the boundaries of the Republic;—in the inactivity, or more parade of warlike preparation, which prevails in both armies; and it is added, in the precarious ſituation in which Auſtria finds itſelf from the rapidly declining health of the Emperor; and from the neceſſity it will be under to require the aſſiſtance of France in preventing, in caſe of the death of the Emperor, the King of Pruſſia being elected King of the Romans; and conſequently the Imperial diadem from being tranſferred to the Houſe of Brandenbourg. It is a fact, that one of Buonaparte's principal Generals remained at the Auſtrian head quarters ſeveral days, perfectly at liberty; and that French officers of rank ſo frequently paſſing through thoſe head quarters from Paris to Vienna, and back. Either Prince Charles does not expect a renewal of hoſtilities, or he has no naked parts which he feels ſhould be expoſed. The Britiſh government writers, admit the poſſibility of the report reſpecting this negociation to be well founded; and aver they can ſee nothing in it alarming to Great Britain; as ſhe will be able to command a better peace when ſtanding alone, than when compelled to ſacrifice its conqueſts to the intereſts of others.

The Auſtrian army is in great force, exceeding 150,000 troops, plentifully ſupplied, and well paid. The health of the Archduke Charles has made it neceſſary for him to repair to Toplitz.—General Kray commands in chief in his abſence.

In Italy, it is ſaid, the French garriſon at Genoa has made propoſitions to Gen. Ott, to evacuate the place. The Auſtrians are in force in the neighborhood of Genoa; and have opened their trenches before Gavi.

The Ruſſian troops have poſitively returned home; and the Emperor of Ruſſia has officially notified the Courts of Berlin and Dreſden thereof.—It is, however, ſtill maintained that 45,000 of theſe iron caſed veterans will be employed by Great Britain, in enterprizes and expeditons.

An expedition, in which 17 battalions of Engliſh troops were to be employed, (chiefly Ruſſians, was in readineſs to ſail, when the Galen left England. It is commanded by Gen. Stuart. Its deſtination is ſuppoſed to be Malta; and when reinforced, Egypt.

In Ireland, strong symptoms of discontent have reappeared in several counties; a new "Rebellion Bill" has passed the Irish Parliament; and large bodies of troops were embarking in England for Ireland. The business of the Union is generally settled; but the bill has to receive the sanction of the British Parliament.

Mr. Sargrave has lately arrived in London, on negociations respecting the British treaty with the U. States.

All the Americans, late prisoners in Guadaloupe, have been exchanged.

THE ORACLE.

The FUTURE FRENCH NATION.

A PROGNOSTIC.

The depopulation of France has been much greater than is eafily to be conceived. Emigration, the guillotine, levies "en maſſe," and the impreſſments, better known under the title of conſcriptions, have effectually drained the interior of France of all the youthful, healthy, and able bodied male inhabitants, and a day is very near and ſwiftly advancing, when it will be found full as difficult for the republic to recruit her armies by any means whatever, as it is now found to re-eſtabliſh her finances.

We are aſſured from a reſpectable authority, that very ſerious apprehenſions are entertained by the moſt enlightened and beſt informed of the French for the very exiſtence of the nation itſelf, and for the future appearance, form and material, as well as bodily powers of the inhabitants of France.

In a late conſultation of ſeveral members of the National Inſtitute, and the failure of population being the ſubject, it was generally agreed that peace muſt ſpeedily be made, or that the race of Frenchmen would ſoon be extinct.

"When a proſpect is before us, (ſaid one of the members) our youth are all in the army, or in foreign countries." Marriages are every where diſcouraged throughout the republic.—Proſtitution and debauchery have ariſen to a height unequalled in the moſt vicious ſtages of the ancient monarchy. In faſt, there are no huſbands for our women! Who have we at home, except boys, old men, the lame, the blind, the maimed and diſeaſed.

Sir, I maintain, that unleſs an end be put to this calamitous war, and we can get home our warriors who are really men, to re produce a French people, we are, alas! nearly exhauſted! We ſhall in a very few years preſent to Europe a nation as unlike the preſent race of men, as are the tribes of Ourang Outangs, Aſſes, or monkeys of Africa! I adviſe the members of the Inſtitute to think ſeriouſly on the conſequences to the nation, of having no other huſbands for our women than boys, dotards, cripples, and debauchees!

From a London paper.

A well meaning country laſs, who was going to town for ſervice, as the parting advice of a fond father, (who had heard her place had been procured in the family of a Duke) received an admonition, when anſwering, to lay Grace, inſtead of Sir. This injunction ſhe kept ſo ſacred, that a journey of near two hundred miles did no influence lo-winds eradicating it from her memory. Introduced into the family, ſome days paſſed without having ſeen the Duke, when one morning ſhe happened to meet him in a paſſage from the ſtaircaſe, ſo narrow that he could not but obſerve her; and ſeeing her rather pretty, jocoſely ſaid, "ſo, how do you like your place?" "Very well," ſhe replied; "for what we have received the Lord make us truly thankful." He ſmiled, as may naturally be ſuppoſed, but being remarkably good natured, aſked her which ſhe preferred, town or country? She, true (as ſhe thought) to her father's advice, ſaid, very modeſtly, "the town; God's holy name being called and praiſed for his refreſhments, and for all his mercies from time to time."

☞ Remarks on Dr. Linn's Sermon, delivered on the Death of General Washington, are excuſed; but ſent to us ſo ill natured, as not to merit a place in the Gazette.

FOR THE ORACLE.

A SHEPHERD'S SONG

TO SOLITUDE.

FAR remov'd from mortal ken,
Let me ſhun the ways of men;
Solitude and I agree,
O'er the woodlands let me rove,
Seek the ſprings and haunt the grove;
Or within thy moſs-grown cell,
Teach me, Solitude, to dwell.

Thro' the winding vales below,
Where the purple violets blow;
Or beneath yon ſpreading ſhade,
Where no ſun-ſhine cheers the glade,
There in anguiſh let me mourn
My fate, unhappy and forlorn!
Tell my grief to every tree,
Alone to all the world but thee.

While my plaintive lays I ſing,
By the ſlowly murm'ring ſpring,
Or at morning's early dawn,
As I tread the ſloping lawn,
The hollow rocks reſponſive mourn
My Sylvia never to return;
Since then my Sylvia's loſt to me,
Adieu! to all the world but thee.

Tell, O echo, to the ſhore,
Lovely Sylvia is no more;
Hark! I hear the trembling breeze,
Whiſtl it ſwells on yonder trees,
Bear her darling name along,
Pride of verſe and rural ſong;
Nymphs, attend with me, and mourn,
And thou, O Solitude, weep o'er her urn.

Bid the lark his ſong forbear,
Silent let him ſoar in air,
Bid the ſhady myrtle weep,
Where my fair is doom'd to ſleep,
And let drops the dewy tear,
Silent as pale flow'rets on her bier;
Gentle to thee I fly,
Thou will ſhow me where to die.

Lay me near the cryſtal tide,
Where my much-lov'd Sylvia died,
And while the gentle waters flow,
Let them liſten to my woe,
Till my tears increaſe their ſtore,
And the waves my loſs deplore:
Let the gales my ſighs convey,
And let me ſhun the golden light of day.

Come, ye ſhepherds of the grove,
Where my fair was wont to rove,
When the moon with borrow'd light,
Cheer'd the gloomy reign of night;
And you, ye nymphs, who haunt the plain,
For Sylvia never ſhall return again,
Come attend with me and mourn,
And thou, O Solitude, weep o'er her urn.

Curious Extract from the Will of the Earl of Peterow.

IMPRIMIS.—For my ſoul, I confeſs I have heard very much of ſouls, but what they are, or whom they are, or what they are for, God knows, I know not; they tell me now of another world, where I never was, nor do I know one foot of the way thither. While the King ſtood I was of his religion, made my ſon wear a caſſock and thought to make him a biſhop; then came the Scots and made me a Preſbyterian, and ſince Cromwell entered, I have been an independent. Theſe I believe are the kingdoms three eſtates, and if any of theſe can ſave a ſoul, I may claim one; therefore if my executors do find I have a ſoul I give it to him that gave it me.

Item.—I give my body, for I cannot keep it, to be buried, do not lay me in the church porch, for I was a lord, and would not be buried where colonel Pride was born.

Item.—My will is, that I have no monument, for then I muſt have epitaphs and verſes, and all my life long I have had too much of them.

Item.—I give all my dees to the earl of Saliſbury, who I know will preſerve them, becauſe he denied the king a buck out of one of his own parks.

Item.—I give nothing to the lord Say, which legacy I will give him, becauſe I know he will beſtow it on the poor.

Item.—To Tom Hay I give five ſhillings, I intended him more, but whoever has ſeen his hiſtory of the parliament, thinks five ſhillings too much.

Item.—I give Lieutenant General Cromwell one word of mine, becauſe hitherto he never kept his own.

Item.—I give up the ghoſt.

CHABOT, one of thoſe connected with the French Revolution, was born at St. Deniez Dol, in 1759, appointed a deputy to the convention in 1792, and executed at Paris on the 5th of April, 1794, in conſequence of being implicated in a conſpiracy with Danton. He was a friar in his youth, a hypocrite in his manhood; but like the French in general, who die perhaps better than they live—he fuffered like a hero. In alluſion to his dreſs, he was here termed by a familiar alliteration, the ſhabby Chabot.

His Excellency Lieutenant Governor HUNTER's SPEECH to the LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL, and ASSEMBLY of UPPER CANADA, on the commencement of the preſent Seſſion.

Honorable Gentlemen, and Gentlemen,

I CANNOT deny myſelf the ſatisfaction of expreſſing on this, the firſt opportunity I have had of meeting you in Parliament, the deep ſenſe I have of the honor conferred upon me by his Majeſty, in appointing me to repreſent Him, in a Province not more diſtinguiſhed by the Gifts, which Nature has ſo abundantly beſtowed upon it, than by the full enjoyment of all the Bleſſings which flow from the Britiſh Conſtitution, and by the poſſeſſion, as dearly as circumſtances will allow, of the Britiſh Conſtitution itſelf.

It is no ſmall addition to this Satisfaction, that my firſt Act, as a Member of the Provincial Legiſlature, is to ſignify to you, that the Loyalty and dutiful Attachment which you have manifeſted for his Majeſty's Perſon and Family, and your readineſs to ſupport his Majeſty's Exertions for the Security of the Empire at large, and for the Preſervation of our valuable Conſtitution, by the Grant made by you of a ſurplus of your reſources, has been highly grateful to his Majeſty, and that his Majeſty has been graciouſly pleaſed to give it to me in Command, to communicate to you, the firſt ſenſe which he entertains of your Zeal and Affection.

Tho' I have called you together at a ſeaſon of the Year, when I am ſenſible, that your abſence from your reſpective homes, muſt be attended with material inconvenience, I am not aware that I ſhall have occaſion to detain you long, and I look forward with pleaſure to the time, when the opening of the Roads which communicate with the Capital, will enable me to meet you at a Seaſon, when public buſineſs may be diſpatched, without private inconvenience.

Gentlemen of the Houſe of Aſſembly,

I have directed the Receiver General, and other Public Officers, to lay before you their reſpective Accounts of the receipt and application of the Provincial Revenue, and I feel very conſiderable pleaſure in obſerving the increaſe which has been made in it, ſince the earlier Periods of its collection.

Honorable Gentlemen and Gentlemen,

I am not that it is not in my Power to inform you of the approach of Peace. The guilty and deluded Nation, which has ſo long been the ſcourge of Europe, ſtill wields its ſtrength, and exhauſts its reſources, in enſlaving its own ſubjects, and oppreſſing the Nations around it; confident in nothing, but in baſely crouching to the Tyrant of the day, and yielding to Uſurpers a degree of obedience, which its lawful Sovereigns never exacted. Force and Artifice are alternately employed, to violate Treaties, to overturn eſtabliſhed Authorities, and to trample on Liberty, Property, and Life. His Majeſty, neither fearing its Power, nor miſled by its Artifices, ſtill maintains the conteſt, which will hand down his name to the remoteſt poſterity, as the Protector of the Rights of Nations, and the Guardian of Social Orders. The bleſſing of Providence follows his exertions; and while the unabated affection of his Subjects ſecures tranquility at Home, the conſummate ſkill and matchleſs valour, which guide and animate his Fleets and Armies, enable him to baffle every attempt from without, that is ſubtile and implacable Enemy is hourly making, upon the Dignity and Independence of a GREAT, FREE, AND HAPPY PEOPLE.

ADDRESS of the Hon. the LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL of UPPER CANADA, to his Excellency Governor HUNTER.

To his Excellency PETER HUNTER, Eſquire, LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR of his MAJESTY'S Province of UPPER CANADA, and LIEUTENANT GENERAL Commanding in UPPER and LOWER CANADA.

May it pleaſe your Excellency,

TO accept from us his Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Legiſlative Council of Upper Canada in Parliament aſſembled, our warmeſt thanks for your very gracious Speech, at the opening of the preſent Seſſion.

We acknowledge with gratitude, as the ſtrongeſt mark of his Majeſty's Paternal Attention to the Province, his appointment of your Excellency to the Government of this Country, whoſe beginnings you have ſeen, and whoſe progreſs we ſincerely hope you will long continue to witneſs.

Fully impreſſed with a due ſenſe of the Bleſſings we have received from Providence in the poſſeſſion of ſo healthy a Climate, and of ſo fertile a Soil, and from our Mother Country in the enjoyment of ſo excellent a Conſtitution, approximating as nearly as circumſtances would admit to her own; It becomes our firſt Duty, and will be our peculiar care with grateful Induſtry, to improve the one, and with active Energy, at all times to defend and preſerve the other.

We are peculiarly flattered with the gracious Attention with which his Majeſty has been pleaſed to notice our feeble effort to aſſiſt his Exertions for the ſecurity of the Empire, by the appropriation to that purpoſe, of a ſurplus of our Revenue.

We would gladly hope that our Induſtry under the influence of the Bleſſings already mentioned, will continue to make that Revenue in future more conſiderable. That it will be preſerved by Oeconomy, and that to its application Loyalty will never be wanting.

We anticipate with much pleaſure the approaching time, when the advanced Improvement of the Country, may render the Communication with the Capital more practicable, at that Seaſon of the Year, when attendance on our Duty there, will beſt accord with our perſonal Convenience.

While we anxiouſly lament that the ravages of War, ſtill continue to infeſt ſo large and ſo fair a portion of the Globe, yet we ſincerely rejoice that the Exertions of our Mother Country have been attended with ſo much Succeſs, and have crowned her with ſo much Glory.—And we moſt fervently pray, that under the guidance of Divine Providence, her Fleets and her Armies may be led to freſh Victories, until its wiſe purpoſes are completely fulfilled, which though at preſent hid from us, we moſt firmly believe will ultimately tend to the eſtabliſhment of a ſafe, an honorable and permanent Peace.

By Order of the Houſe,
(Signed)
J. ELMSLEY, Speaker.

June 7, 1800.

To which his EXCELLENCY was pleaſed to make the following moſt gracious Anſwer:

Honorable Gentlemen,

I Thank you for this very Loyal and Dutiful Addreſs. As I conſider my appointment to my preſent Station, as one of the moſt honorable events of my life; I ſhall conſider every hour as happy which I ſhall ſpend in a Country in whoſe proſperity I feel ſo much Intereſt.

ADDRESS of the HOUSE of ASSEMBLY of UPPER CANADA, to his Excellency the GOVERNOR HUNTER.

To his Excellency PETER HUNTER, Esquire, LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR of the Province of UPPER CANADA, and LIEUTENANT GENERAL Commanding his MAJESTY'S FORCES in the Provinces of UPPER and LOWER CANADA, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

WE his Majesty's most loyal and dutiful Subjects, the Commons of the Province of Upper Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to return our thanks for your Excellency's Speech.

We cannot deny ourselves the satisfaction of expressing the deep and grateful sense we entertain of the Choice, which his Majesty has been pleased to make, of a Person of your Excellency's distinguished Merit to represent him in this Province.

In addition to the Gifts which Nature has bestowed upon us, we feel happy in the enjoyment of the Blessings which flow from the possession of a Constitution, approaching as nearly as our local situation will admit, to the British Constitution itself: And we anticipate with pleasure the further Benefits which we shall derive from your Excellency's wise and prudent Administration.

We gratefully receive his Majesty's most gracious communication, respecting the small Grant which we were able to offer in support of his Majesty's Exertions, for the security of the Empire, and the support of our valuable Constitution: and we beg leave to assure your Excellency, that our Loyalty and dutiful Attachment to his Majesty's Person and Family, shall remain unbroken, and that we shall ever be ready to manifest it by every means in our power.

We have a just sense of your Excellency's Goodness in intimating to us your intention of calling us together, (when the opening of the Roads, which communicate with the Capital, will enable your Excellency,) at a Season of the Year when Public Business may be dispatched without Private Inconvenience.

We shall hasten to take into our Consideration the respective Accounts of the Receipt and Application of the Provincial Revenue, when laid before us.

We lament with your Excellency that there is no prospect of Peace; but how much so ever aware of its beneficial Effects, we are more sensible of the necessity of a War, so essential to the support of our Constitution, and our Dignity as a Nation.—We rejoice that his Majesty has been enabled by the consummate Skill and matchless Valour which guide and animate his Fleets and Armies, to baffle the attempts of a faithless and implacable Enemy, whose only object seems to be the subversion of all Social Order, by trampling upon Liberty, Property, and Life; and we hope that by the Blessing of Providence, his Majesty may continue (regardless of their artifices and machinations) to maintain that Conduct which will hand down his Name to Posterity, as the Protector of Nations, and the Support of the Dignity and Independence of a great, free, and happy People.

(Signed)

York, 7th June, 1800.

To which his EXCELLENCY was pleased to make the following most gracious Return:

Gentlemen,

I Return you my thanks for this very loyal and affectionate Address. And I beg you to be assured that I shall, upon all occasions, feel equally anxious with yourselves that the happiest effects may constantly result from your deliberations.

Foreign News.

VIENNA, March 18.

NOTwithstanding the preparations for war, hopes of peace continue to be cherished. The propositions from France may have contributed a little to prevent the opening of the campaign: but, as both, without derogating from her engagements with England, our court may give an answer not wholly negative. Spain is not the only power who acts as mediator: the court of Berlin, there is no doubt, has taken some steps to bring about a negociation. A courier from M. Mufquiz, Spanish ambassador in France, arrived here the day before yesterday. The contents of the dispatches which he brought were immediately communicated to our cabinet by the minister of his Catholic Majesty, residing at Vienna.

March 19.

The Turkish ambassador here, having received dispatches by a courier from Constantinople, has published the following abstract of the capitulation concluded between the grand Vizier and the French general Kleber, respecting the evacuation of Egypt:—"The French evacuate Cairo, and proceed to Alexandria and Damietta, which fortresses will be delivered to the French on the first of Feb. at which period the French and the Turks will mount guard together. As soon as possible, but within three months at farthest, the Porte shall provide a sufficient number of transports for conveying to Toulon such of the French troops as are in health; but the sick, who shall afterwards recover, will not be sent off before all the expences caused, and debts contracted by the French shall have been paid. General Kleber is to embark for France on board of a French frigate, in the harbour of Alexandria, under Turkish colours, to prevent his being detained by the blockade of the English. All the property of the French republic, not even excepting the apparatus of the learned institute, is to be given up to the Porte. The entrenchments made by the French shall be left in their present state, and all the artillery is to remain in them. The grand Vizier promises by the great prophet that he will take under his powerful protection all the French, and every individual of them. All the French except general Kleber, are considered as prisoners of war, even after their arrival in France:—they shall not serve against the Porte or his allies, during their life time, and must remain at the distance of fifty miles from the theatre of war. The grand Vizier makes a present to general Kleber of the frigate on board of which he is to sail to Europe, and six Arabian horses; but he promises on his honor and conscience, to deliver up the whole of the correspondence that has been carried on with the Pacas of Egypt and Syria. To the day of their departure from Egypt, the French shall be provided with all the necessary articles at the expence of the grand Seignior."

March 22.

The propositions, which the French government made, to give up the other conquered territories, except the left bank of the Rhine, are rejected, since France, as long as she retains that bank, may at any time invade Germany with facility. War therefore is resolved on.

The corps of the Prince of Conde, which will be paid auxiliaries by Great Britain, is to join the Swiss regiments, and to serve with the Imperial army.

LOWER ELBE, March 26.

General Dumouriez has entered into the Russian service, with a salary of ten thousand rubles per annum. On his arrival at Petersburgh, he could not immediately be presented to the Emperor on account of indisposition; it was, however, done soon after his recovery, by the Russian vice chancellor, count Panin.

The celebrated count de St. Priest, the principal person in the suit of Louis XVIII. has been disunified, but the cause of this event is not transpired.

HAGUE, April 1.

Letters from Posen, in South Prussia, of the 28th of March, state, that the intelligence of the death of prince Italinski count Suwarrow, Rimnikio, is fully confirmed, by two letters from Mielik, six miles from Breste, of the 11th and 15th ult. He died suddenly on the 2d of March, at his estates near Kobrin.

IRELAND.

WATERFORD, March 18.

On Wednesday night last, an armed banditti of ruffians, to the number of 40 or 50, came to the house of Mr. Flannery, an industrious farmer, near New Inn, in the county of Tipperary, and dragged him to his street door, where they fired several shots at him, and otherwise mangled his body in a most shocking manner, with reaping hooks and other weapons, so as to occasion his immediate death. Not content with sacrificing this unfortunate old man to their savage cruelty, they returned into the house, and took his son, a young man, (who had been married about four months) to meet a similar fate. He expostulated with them for some time not to put him to death in sight of his much afflicted young wife; they then dragged him to a bog, a small distance from the house, and used him in the same manner as his unfortunate father. The remains of these two innocent sufferers were interred on Friday at Stradbally.

LIMERICK, March 12.

A gentleman who was on the inquest of a shocking murder committed at Manister, county of Limerick, has favoured us with the following particulars.—It appeared that at a late hour on Friday night a great number of villains armed with muskets, swords and pikes, attacked the house of Mr. John Boland, of Manister, and demanded his arms; at the same time a considerable party of the banditti, on horseback, were placed at a distance to keep watch. Mr. Boland, with his brother James and his sons, Mathew and James, in the house in bed, as were Mrs. Boland and her two daughters. On the first alarm, the men got up, and determined to defend their house and property with that spirit which as yeomen and loyalists they were remarkable for, and fired a number of shots among the barbarous assailants, several of which there is reason to believe did good execution. Unfortunately for this brave family, the house was thatched, and the banditti set the same on fire, which forced them to come out: in consequence of which Mr. John Boland, his brother James, his two sons, James and Mathew, were butchered in a manner shocking to relate: the latter lived until the next morning, but died without giving any account of the murderers. It appeared on the inquest that Edmund Boland, brother to Mr. John Boland, who lay in a neighbouring house, was coming to the assistance of the family, and was murdered between the bridge of Manister and the house which was burned. To add to this horrid outrage, Mrs. Boland, who, together with her daughters, narrowly escaped from the flames, has become quite delranged, and the recovery of her daughters still continue doubtful.

LONDON, March 28.

Government, we understand, yesterday received by express the result of the debate in the Irish parliament on the 5th, and most important article of the intended union. The express came from Hollyhead to London in the short space of twenty-eight hours and a quarter.

When the measure of the union with the sister kingdom is completed, one of the first advantages to result from it to the empire at large, will, we understand be the establishment of dock-yards, at the principal ports of Ireland, with additional divisions of marines to protect them. The wisdom of this system is equally conspicuous in each of its parts, nor can a corps that has, on such various occasions, distinguished itself for its utility and gallantry, be too largely augmented.

It is said, that as soon as the resolutions upon the union are carried in the Irish parliament, they will be forwarded to England, in order to be submitted to our parliament. As soon as its assent to them is obtained, they will be returned to Ireland. The union bill will then be brought in; and as soon as it has passed the two houses of the Irish parliament, they will be prorogued, and our own parliament will, it is said, be dissolved at the close of the present session. There will not, it is added, be any new election in Ireland. All the present members for counties, the representatives, for the city and university of Dublin, for Cork, Limerick and Waterford, will be returned to the imperial parliament. This arrangement will include 68 members: the remaining 32 will be chosen from the boroughs. We have not yet heard in what manner the four bishops and 28 peers will be elected.

Captain Bingham is appointed to the command of the American, of 64 guns, on board of which sir Wm. Parker will hoist his flag for Halifax.

The Russian minister at Berlin and the French minister Bournonville live in the same hotel. This circumstance has produced a considerable degree of animosity between the servants of the two ambassadors. From words they at length came to blows. Whether victory decided for the imperialists or the republicans, we have not heard; but the two parties are still, it is said, in a state of insurrection.

April 1.

On Saturday, mrs. Parrot, a lady of respectability, was tried at Taunton assizes for stealing a card of lace. Her husband independent of great expectations, has an estate of 3000l. and the lady herself moved in the first circles at Bath. She had been confined in Ilchester goal for five months, and was constantly attended by her husband, who even declared that he would accompany her to Botany bay, should the event of her trial render it necessary.—After a trial of five hours she was acquitted.

The following are the particulars of the manner in which his majesty's ship Dove, got in the possession of the French. On the 13th ult. cruising off the coast of France, most of the officers being below, part of the crew began to mutiny, the most active of whom were eleven Frenchmen, who had been captured on board the Burdelois French privateer, but afterwards entered into the English service. These were headed by an Englishman by the name of Jackson, who, by a private signal beat most of the crew to their assistance.—The master, who had the watch on deck, was knocked down, and made prisoner, and steps were taken to secure all the officers, resistance being made by them, the crew brought guns to bear on the cabin, into which they forced several shots, before they could accomplish their design. Capt. lord Proby and the master, are said to be much wounded. As soon as the mutineers had gained possession of the ship, they made all the sail they could, and ran her into Brest.

United States.

NEW-YORK, May 26.

CAPTAIN Whitemore, who arrived here yesterday from Lisbon, informs that the American consul told him the morning he sailed, that the Spaniards had joined the French, and marched 30,000 men against Portugal.

It was reported just as the Trio sailed that an English frigate had been carried into France by the crew.

Some time since the king of Prussia appointed a commission to attempt the making of sugar from turnips. In their report on the subject they state that the result of their experiments has been highly satisfactory. They prove that excellent white and brown sugar can be made from turnips, the whole at one shilling per pound, and the brown at six-pence. The sugar is equal in quality to that of the West-Indies. After the extraction of the sugar a liquor equal to 3 rundy can be extracted from the turnips. The commission further say that a mile and a half square of ground will furnish enough sugar for all the state, besides twenty millions five hundred thousand quarts of brandy made from the same turnips after the extraction of the sugar.

The editor of the True American says, "upon an attentive perusal of the Paris papers, we find several paragraphs on the subject of the differences exisiting between this country and France. They all blast the advantages of an accommodation with us and speak of the American nation and character with distinguished respect. One of these papers under the direction of the government, contains the following article: It proves that interest, at last will dictate to the French government the propriety of doing us justice and giving an honorable and speedy issue to the present negociation.

May 29.

The Spanish consul at Algiers has been put in irons, on account of the French fleet in the Mediterranean having taken an Algerine vessel, which they had neglected to restore, notwithstanding many reclamations of the Dey by the Spanish consul.

War, bloody and ruinous, is the general language of the belligerent powers, and preparations for carrying it on are making with such vigour and activity, as if it were intended to be shut the gates of mercy on mankind!

Bonaparte continues the same conciliatory measures which have hitherto distinguished his conduct in the constellation, and which have had the effect of reconciling parties and restoring public confidence. A considerable number of the ex-noblesse volunteer their services to act under him at the opening of the campaign; amongst these the younger son of the ci-devant duchess of Sante Croce makes a part of the general staff of the Italian legion formed at Dijon.

We notice an assertion in the Prussian Westphalian Gazette, which is confidently made, that a negociation has been entered upon between the French government and the court of Berlin, the object of which is to give a much greater extension to the sea line of demarcation, and to comprehend in the neutrality several new states of the German empire.

A private letter from Paris mentions that on the advice of our envoys being on their way thither, the owners of privateers became so much intimidated by the prospect of a reversal of the sentences of condemnation of American vessels, as to be induced to agree to compromises. The writer had expectations of obtaining compromises in some cases in which he was interested, and recommends the measure to others, to be entertained the opinion that those who had legal recourse to the privateersmen, would generally find that the property would be either dilapated or concealed.

By letters from Barcelona, we learn, that the king of Spain has seized on all the bullion remitted from New Spain to the private merchants, and issued promissory negociable bills in return, which have fallen from 30 to 40 per cent. The Prince of Peace has advanced government an immediate sum; this confirms the rumoured attack on Portugal.

By the schooner Eliza, arrived here from the Havanna, we are informed, that the ship Nancy, capt. Joy, of Boston, had just arrived at that port. The Nancy, on the 25th of Feb. in lat. 22, long. 58, fell in with a French privateer of 14 guns and full of men. The Nancy mounts 10 guns, and had 27 men.—An engagement was immediately commenced, which continued, off and on, for 24 hours, during which time the privateer made three most desperate attempts to board the ship, and was actually foul of her for three hours, at one time; and though every exertion was made to board her, yes, such was the active bravery of the American tars, that they kept off the enemy with pikes, &c. great numbers of whom fell like sheep from the grapes and bowsprit on deck and into the ocean. While one part of the Nancy's crew were thus defending themselves, the others were employed in planting shot into the privateer, and, from her shattered condition, there is little doubt of her having gone down, as she was not to be seen in the morning. As their separation was in the night, and as the privateer's sails and rigging, as well as those of the ship, were almost all cut away, it renders the improbability of her escape more strong. The privateer must have lost many. The Nancy had 1 man killed, and 4 wounded.

The King has been pleased to appoint Alexander M'Nabb, of this town, gent. to be an Enfign in the Queen's Rangers, and the commiſſion is come over accordingly.

We are informed that the Small Pox has been very general (by inoculation) at Queenſtown, Niagara, and the Head of the Lake, for ſome time paſt, without proving mortal to any; which has induced ſeveral families in this town and neighbourhood to cauſe their children to undergo a like operation.

THE ABBE RAYNAL.

[The following Memoir of this philoſopher, was read at the laſt meeting of the national inſtitution of Arts and Sciences at Paris.]

WILLIAM THOMAS RAYNAL was an Elève of the Jeſuits, and had ſeven entered into this order. He was there captivated with the love of letters.

His firſt works, however, were not worthy of his laſt, or his fame. In his "Hiſtory of the Parliament of England," and that of "Stadtholder," there is nothing remarkable but the affected brilliancy of his ſtyle, and the loftineſs of his pretenſions. We there ſee merely the painter—the philoſopher had not then an exiſtence!

A more eſtimable work of Raynal's but which does not bear his name, and which he did not avow until long after his ſucceſs was eſtabliſhed, is "The Hiſtory of the Divorce of Catherine of Arragon, and Henry VIII." He dwells but little on the anecdote which furniſhes the title. It is, in fact, a picture of Europe at that period, ſk drawn by a maſterly hand.

For twenty years Raynal apparently ceaſed to write. But he lived for that interval in habits of intimacy with philoſophers, whoſe enlightened courage was forming the age in which they lived to the love of liberty. He publiſhed ſoon after, his "Political and Philoſophical Hiſtory of the European Commerce in the two Indies."

His friends were ſaid to have had a conſiderable ſhare in this work. But the bold tranſitions, the enlarged views and the high tone of character, undoubtedly belong to Raynal.

He was perſecuted for this work, but at the ſame time with a ſort of moderation. The parliament who paſſed the decree againſt him, cauſed him to be informed of the proceeding, and he made a timely retreat.—It was in this time year that Beccaria was received at Paris, a man who had not more of hardihood, nor leſs of philoſophy, than Raynal.

He retired to the dominions of the king of Pruſſia, who had been rather ill-treated in his book. He was however extremely well received. Frederick converſed with him for more than two hours tete-a-tete, and on his departure ſaid,

"I have been diſcourſing with Providence."

The empreſs of Ruſſia alſo ſhewed him ſeveral marks of regard.

He was alſo well received by the parliament of England. When it was known that Raynal was in the gallery, the deliberations were interrupted, and the commons ordered him an honorable ſituation.

Good deeds are the completion of good writings. Of the former, Raynal was the author of many. In this reſpect he was extremely meritorious. He loved glory, and this led him to make ſeveral eſtabliſhments ſurpaſſing the means of an individual. He raiſed on an iſland in the lake of Berne a monument to the founders of Helvetian liberty. He gave an annuity of 1200 livres to the academy of arts and ſciences; 1200 to the French academy; 2400 to that of Lyons; 1200 to that of Marſeilles; and 1200 to the ſociety of Agriculture, to be given away in prizes.

This man, ſo liberal, ſaw his fortune afterwards deranged, by the circumſtances of the revolution. He died in comparative poverty. He was occupied in preparing a new edition of his works, which was to vary to a great degree from that which is now before the public.

Sweetness.

O'ſ damaſk cheeks, and radiant eyes,
Let other poets tell;
Within the boſom of the fair
Superior beauties dwell.

There all the ſprightly pow'rs of wit
In blythe illuſtrage play;
There every ſocial virtue feeds
Its intellectual ray.

But as the ſun's refulgent light
Heav'n's wide expanſe returns;
With ſov'reign luſtre thro' the ſoul
Celeſtial ſweetneſs ſhines.

This mental beam diffuſes the heart,
And ſparkles in the face;
It harmonizes every thought,
And heightens every grace.

One glimpſe of this ſooths the troubled breaſt,
The heaving ſigh reſtrain!
Can make the bed of ſickneſs pleaſe,
And ſtop the ſenſe of pain.

Its power can charm the ſavage heart,
The tyrant's pity move;
To ſmiles convert the wildeſt rage,
And melt the ſoul to love.

When ſweetneſs beams upon the throne
In majeſty benign,
The awful ſplendours of a crown
With milder luſtre ſhine.

In ſcenes of poverty and woe,
Where melancholy dwells,
The influence of this living ray
The dreary gloom diſpels:

Thus, when the blooming ſpring returns
To cheer the mourn'ful plains,
Through earth and air, with genial warmth,
Ethereal mildneſs reigns.

Beneath its bright, auſpicious beams,
No boiſterous paſſions rife;
Moroſeneſs quits the peaceful ſcene,
And baleful diſcord flies.

A thouſand nameleſs beauties ſpring,
A thouſand virtues glow;
A ſmiling train of joys appear,
And endleſs bleſſings flow.

Unbounded charity diſplays
Her ſympathiſing charms;
And friendſhip's pure ſeraphic flame,
The gen'rous boſom warms.

Almighty love exerts his power,
And ſpreads with ſecret art
A ſoft ſenſation through the frame,
A tranſport through the heart.

Nor ſhall the ſtorms of age, which cloud
Each gleam of ſenſual joy,
And blaſt the gaudy flow'r's pride,
Theſe bleſt effects deſtroy.

When that fair form ſhall ſink in years,
And all thoſe graces fly,
The beauty of the heavenly maid
Shall length of days defy.

Cupid drown'd.

AS I wove with wanton care,
Fillets for a virgin's hair,
Calling for my fond deſign,
What the fields had freſh and fine?
Cozzo,—and I mark'd him well,
Hid him in a cowſlip bell;
While he plumb'd a pointed dart,
Fated to inflame the heart.

Glowing with malicious joy,
Sudden I ſeiz'd the boy;
And, regardleſs of his cries,
Bore the little laughing prize
Where the nights gabled flood,
Teeming with a roſy flood.

Urchin, in my rage, I cry'd,
What avails thy fancy pride?
From thy baſe vengeance free,
Triumph now belongs to me!
Thus—I drown thee in my cup;
Thus—in wine I drink thee up.

Fatal was the raſh'd draught,
That to murder love I quaff'd,
O'er my boſom's loud domains,
Now the cruel tyrant reigns:
On my heart's moſt tender ſtrings,
Striking with his wanton wings,
I'm for ever doom'd to prove
All the inſolence of Love.

ARMY OF EGYPT.

[An advice boat diſpatched by general Kleber, has brought an account to government of the convention concluded in Egypt between that general and the Grand Vizier, reſpecting the evacuation of Egypt. It appears by the letter of General Kleber, who ſtill writes to the Directory, that on the 30th of January he was not informed of the revolution of the 19th of Brumaire, (Nov. 8.)

Camp at Salahick, Jan. 30.

I Have ſigned, citizens Directors, the treaty relative to the evacuation of Egypt, of which I now ſend you a copy. That which bears the ſignature of the Grand Vizier cannot come to my hand for ſome days, as the exchange was fixed to take place at El-Ariſch.

I have informed you, in my preceeding diſpatches, of the ſituation of the army. I have alſo informed you of the negociations which general Buonaparte had opened with the Grand Vizier, and which I was to continue. Tho' at that period I relied but little on the ſucceſs of thoſe negociations, I entertained a hope that they would ſlacken the march of the Vizier, as well as his warlike preparations, that you might have time to ſend me ſuccours in men and arms, or to tranſmit your inſtructions as to the manner in which I ſhould conduct myſelf under ſuch painful circumſtances. I had founded my hope of ſuccour on the knowledge that the French and Spaniſh fleets were united at Toulon, and waited but for a favorable wind to ſail from that harbour. They did ſail in fact, but it was to paſs the Streights, and to reenter into the port of Breſt. This intelligence deeply affected the army, which at the ſame time was informed of our diſaſters in Italy, Germany, and Holland, and alſo in La Vendee, without the appearance of any meaſures being taken to avert miſfortunes which threatened even the exiſtence of the Republic.

The Vizier was then advancing from Damas. On the other hand, in the middle of October, a fleet appeared before Damietta, which landed about 4000 Janiſſaries, who were to be followed by an equal number. Time, however, was not given for this, their firſt detachment being attacked and beaten in leſs than half an hour. The carnage was dreadful; we made but 800 priſoners. This event did not ſmooth the way to negociation. The Vizier ſtill manifeſted the ſame intention and did not ſlacken his march any more than was neceſſary to form his eſtabliſhments, and to find the neceſſary means of conveyance. His army was then eſtimated at 60,000 men, but other Pachas followed him, and were recruiting new forces from all parts of Aſia, as far as Mount Cauſaſus. The advanced poſts of this army arrived ſhortly after at Jaffa.

The commodore, ſir Sidney Smith, wrote to me about this period, that is to ſay, ſome days before the landing at Damietta, and as I knew his influence over the grand Vizier, I thought it my duty not only to anſwer him, but to propoſe the veſſel which he commanded as the place of conference. I was equally unwilling to receive in Egypt any plenipotentiaries, whether Britiſh or Turkiſh, and to ſend mine to the camp of the latter. My propoſition was accepted, and from that time the negociation took a moſt determined courſe.—All this, however, did not retard the march of the Ottoman army, which the Vizier was marching towards Gaza. The war continued, in the mean time in Upper Egypt, where the Beys until then, diſperſed, were about to reunite themſelves with Mourad Bey, who, tho' ſy followed, but never completely ſued, had drawn into this party the Arabs and the inhabitants of the province of Beniſſourt; and never loſt an opportunity of harraſſing and keeping our troops in employ.

The plague threatened us alſo with its ravages, and had carried off ſeveral men in each decade at Alexandria and other places. At length, on the 21ſt of December, general Deſſaix and the citizen Pouſſielgue, whom I had named as plenipotentiaries, opened on board the Tigre their conferences with Sir Sidney Smith, to whom the Grand Vizier had given full powers to treat. They were to cruize off the coaſts of Alexandria and Damietta, but a violent gale obliged them to put to ſea, where they were detained for eighteen days, at the end of which term they were landed at the camp of the Vizier, who had advanced againſt the fort of El Ariſch, and obtained poſſeſſion of it on the 29th of December. He owed this ſucceſs to the marked cowardice of the garriſon, which without fighting ſurrendered on the 7th day of the attack. This circumſtance was the more unfortunate, as general Reynier was on his way to raiſe the blockade before the main body of the Turkiſh army could arrive. There was then no poſſibility of prolonging my father the negociations, and it became neceſſary to weigh the danger which would attend their being broken off—to lay aſide all motives of perſonal vanity, and not to expoſe the lives of Frenchmen intruſted to me to the terrible conſequences which a farther delay would have rendered inevitable.

The lateſt reports intimated, that the Ottoman army amounted to 80,000 men, and was about to be greatly augmented. There were under its ſtandard twelve Pachas, of whom ſix were of the firſt rank. Forty-five thouſand men had appeared before El-Ariſch, who were provided with fifty pieces of cannon, caiſſons in proportion. This artillery was drawn by mules; twenty other pieces were at Gaza, with the corps de reſerve. The remainder of the troops were at Jaffa, and in the environs of Ramle. A number of active couriers ſupplied the army of the vizier with proviſions. All the tribes of the Arabs eagerly ſeconded this army, and had furniſhed it with more than 15,000 camels. This force was conducted by European officers, and 5 or 6000 Ruſſians were daily expected. To this army I had to oppoſe 8,500 men, divided on the three points of Ketich, Salahich, & Belbeis. This diviſion was neceſſary, to facilitate our communications with Cairo, and to give immediate ſuccour to that poſt which ſhould be the firſt attacked. It was certain, however, that all theſe poſts could be either turned or avoided, as had been recently done by Elfi Bey, who, pending the negociation, had entered with his Mamlouks into Clarkie, to join with the Biſſis Arabs and from thence to unite with Maurad Bey in Upper Egypt. The reſt of our army was diſtributed as follows: 1000 men were under the orders of general Verdier, to form the garriſon of Leſbe, to raiſe contributions in money and proviſions, and to hold in check the country between the Canal of Aſhmoun and that of Moes, which was ſecretly agitated by the Cheik Leſkim. Eighteen hundred were under the orders of general Lanuſſe, to form the garriſons of Roſetta, Aboukir, and Alexandria, to hold in check the Delta and Bahire; 1200 remained at Cairo and Gaza, to furniſh eſcorts for the convoys of the army; and finally, 2500 men were ſcattered in Higher Egypt, along a line of more than 150 leagues in extent. Theſe had daily to combat the Beys and their partizans. The whole formed a body of 15,000 and this was at the higheſt the whole of my force.

Notwithſtanding this diſproportion, I ſtill hoped for victory, and ſhould have hazarded a battle, if I had had any certainty of ſuccour before the time of destruction. But this season having now arrived, without my receiving any reinforcement, I was obliged to send 3000 men at least towards the south.—Therein then remained only 3000 men, to defend a country, open on every side against the attack of at least 40,000 barbarians, seconded by the Arabs and the inhabitants, without any one strong place, without provisions, without money, and without welfare. At such a crisis, it was my duty to inquire what could be done for the preservation of the army. There remained no means of safety, as there is no possibility of treating but arms in hand, with undisciplined hordes of fanatical barbarians, who despise all the usages of warfare. This was a fact evident to all, and it determined my opinion. I gave orders to my plenipotentiaries not to break off the negociation, unless such articles were proposed as may commit our glory or our safety.

I end this report, citizen directors, by observing to you, that the circumstances of my situation were not foreseen in the instructions left with me by general Buonaparte. When he promised me a speedy succour, he rested his hopes as I did, on the junction of the French and Spanish fleets in the Mediterranean. We were then far from thinking these fleets were to return into the ocean, or that the expedition to Egypt, being completely abandoned, should become a head of accusation against those by whom it had been decreed.

I join to this letter copies of my correspondence with the Grand Vizer, Sir Sidney Smith, and my plenipotentiaries, as also, all the official notes on either side. I subjoin also a copy of the report which was made respecting the capture of El-Arisch.

The French army, in fine, during its stay in Egypt, has engraven in the recollection of the natives the memory of its victories—of the equity and moderation with which we governed them—and the sentiment of the force and power of the nation of which this army makes a part. The French name will long be respected, not only in this province of the Ottoman empire, but in every part of the East.

I reckon on being in France with the army by the middle of June at the latest.

Health and respect.

(Signed) KLEBER.

PARIS, March 25.

At Brest a proclamation was issued on the 18th of March, by admiral Bruix, to the commanders and crews of the navy, in which he says,

"I am requested by the first conful, to inform you, that he watches with unremitting vigilance over your fate, the wounds of the marine he will now heal, as he healed those, which the factions of tyranny inflicted on the republic. He will direct his endeavours to bring to a level the glory of our marine with that of the land forces—as yet you have not been enabled to perceive the effects of his labour, it is owing to imperious circumstances, and more particularly to the intestine cruel commotions, by which the rebell of our departments were devasted:—this evil is now done away. Brave seamen, the period draws nigh, in which your fate must be meliorated—the hero, who commands us, now carries success to the armies. With the olive branch in one hand and the sword in the other, he offers at the head of 200,000 brave warriors, either peace to Europe, or to end the war by victory. Let us haste comrades, to follow and support him in his noble career; he has summoned us, to partake of the glory with which our land forces on his right will be covered, he wishes, that we may be included in the number of those he whom France, may freedom all Europe shall pour forth her grateful effusions of joy as the restorers of order and mens ey'd peace. I who know your bravery and valour, have pledged myself to the first consul, that his hopes in this, shall not be frustrated.—I have told him, that by your courage, magnanimity and friendship, of which you have given me ample proofs, the deficiency of my talents will be largely made up. I have lastly swore, before him, that you shall return, like himself, crowned with victory. My friends, don't you swear this also?

(Signed)

BRUIX."

More troops have been ordered for Brest. It is said that an expedition against Ireland is contemplated. The greater part of the combined fleet which could be manned, is ready for sea.

It is reported, that Frankfort, the Imperial city, has addressed Buonaparte, for a continuance of her neutrality—the answer, which the first conful has remitted, was framed in general and vague terms, without touching in the least upon the request.

April 14.

A letter from Lindau, dated March 25 says, "For six months past the Arch Duke had struggled against a cabal that was resolved at all hazards to remove him from the command of an army whose he had rendered himself dear to the soldier, while he was viewed with gratification by the unfortunate inhabitants at Suabia, whose property he protected, and as much as possible alleviated the weight of requisitions to which they were subject.

"He never ceased, mean while, to represent to the Emperor that peace upon the continent alone could put an end to the calamities of this bloody conteft, the issue of which would be to reduce the belligerent powers to misery, and confirm to England the sceptre of the seas.—The prince added, that the fate of war was doubtful, and that this was the moment to fix victory by a solid peace.

"The attacks of epilepsy to which the archduke is subject in the spring, served as pretext, and the emperor was compelled a third time to sign the recal of the Archduke.

"On the first news of the recal of the Archduke Charles, several regiments sent deputies to the head quarters, to beg him not to quit the army. The Archduke received the deputies graciously, and answered, "Comrades, I thank you for the confidence in me, which you testify. It is not to me, but to our bravery, that we owe the victories, which distinguished the last campaign; my health falls off daily, it is true, and perhaps will ever prevent me from commanding such brave troops.—Nevertheless if it depends solely upon me, I should accede to your wishes, and remain, ill as I am, to live and die in the army; but it is my duty, as it is yours, to obey the orders of the emperor, my master, and brother: Go, and tell your companions, that I thank them for this mark of attachment they have given me; and that to oblige them, I will wait before I go, the last order from Vienna."

The hopes of the Archduke were deceived; he was obliged to quit the army and repair to Bohemia.

April 20.

The letters and news from Italy, Switzerland and Germany, which arrived to day, continue to announce, at very probable, that a speedy peace will take place between Austria and France. Yet the armies bear a menacing appearance every where, though they have not been engaged; nothing but affairs of posts have hitherto taken place. These was a report of a very furious action on the 18 of April on the side of Bregenz. But this rumour had no foundation. Some skirmishes took place on the 9th April, in the environs of Wickest. This is all that is certain in the rumours circulated for some days respecting the resumption of hostilities. Yet not to forget any thing, we must add, that a journal of this evening announces that Moreau was to cross the Rhine yesterday.

HAGUE, April 14.

The sailing of the British fleet from the Downs to the eastward, by dissipating the uneasiness we had felt on the subject, is likely to have an efficacious influence on public credit, and raise the funds, which had fallen in an alarming manner for some weeks.

VIENNA, March 28.

Notwithstanding the preparations for war, hopes of peace continue to be cherished. The propositions from France may have contributed a little to prevent the opening of the campaign; but at least, without deception from her engagement with England, our court may give an answer not wholly negative.

Spain is not the only power who acts as mediator; the court of Berlin there is no doubt, has taken some steps to bring about a negociation. A courier from Mr. Musquis, the Spanish ambassador to France, arrived here the day before yesterday.—The contents of the dispatches which he brought, were immediately communicated to our cabinet by the minister of his Catholic majesty residing at Vienna.

March 24.

The commission appointed to examine the conduct of general Froelich, respecting the siege of Ancona (which gave so much umbrage to Russia) has sentenced that general to be dismissed, and two other generals to be suspended, in order to be judged by a council of war.

The Imperial ambassador at the court of Russia, count Cobenzel, will be replaced by the late Neapolitan ambassador at Vienna, marquis de Gallo, who assisted at the negociation of the preliminaries of Leoben, and the subsequent treaty of Campo Formio.

Respecting the destination of the Cossack corps it is again reported to have received orders to return to Russia. And the rumour of the disgrace of the Russian general in chief is rather embellished by the report of his having been sent to his estates, and that he is replaced in the command of the army by prince Rennin.

A letter from Semlin, of the 29th ult. states the progress of Paswan Oglu with his troops as fully certain. The fortified town of Nissa is guarded by a corps of observation, and with the remainder of his army, to the number of 3000 men, he is marching towards Belgrade and Semendria, headed by Tyan Pascha and Tussan Aga. The former has just been banished from Belgrade, and, from hatred to the government, had joined the troops of Paswan Oglu, having likewise brought over his friend Tussan Aga to his cause. He is also supposed to have left a strong party behind him in Belgrade.

Some German papers publish the no-position between Vienna and Paris to have gone forwards, because, in the late proclamation of Buonaparte against England, Austria has been spared—and because the Vienna Court Gazette had begun to record the new arrangements of Buonaparte, in Paris, in terms of great moderation.

TURIN, March 17.

Of the ill fated expedition of the French against the inhabitants of Fontana Buona, our official Gazette contains the following details; "On the 15th inst. the French general Massena, with a corps of 5 or 6000 men, marched against Fontana Buona, intending to punish the inhabitants with fire and sword. The insurgents, apprised of the approach of the enemy, and of their views, executed the following plan, assisted by the small body of Austrians with them. On the enemy's approach, they divided themselves on both sides of the high road, laid in ambush, and left the road entirely clear for the enemy, who advanced rapidly, and immediately attacked the Austrians in front. The conflict scarcely begun, when suddenly the insurgents left their ambush, surrounded the enemy, and thus brought them between two fires. Of the French 2000 remained dead on the field of battle; the number of their wounded and prisoners was still more considerable; 113 officers, two of them generals, were wounded, and one of them general Arnould, soon after died of his wounds.

DIJON, April 17.

General Berthier is expected here from Bale to-morrow or next day. His carriage broke down twice or thrice: he continued his journey in one of the carriages in the suit, and sent his private secretary and young Viscomte to Dijon. Generals arrive here daily; general Victor, Berthier's first lieutenants, generals Wirrin, Chambarlhac, Harville, Meusnier, Riveau and Carnot. The conscripts arrive in crowds. Gaiety, youth, vigour, every thing announces good and fine troops. The arrival of the chief consul, who is impatiently expected, has drawn to our town from 20 league round us persons who are curious to see him.

FRANKFORT, April 3.

A British courier from Palermo, passed through Cassel, on the 28th March, with dispatches containing an account of the capitulation of the island of Malta, in which capture the Russians are said to have had no share. The misunderstanding between the two Imperial Courts has been done away by the satisfaction given to Paul respecting Anconas, and that in consequence the retrograde march of the army under Suwarrow (who it would thereby appear is still alive) has been suspended, and that 18,000 Russians are to be at the disposal of Austria, and to be commanded by Prince Rudenberg, besides the 30,000 to be embarked at Riga.

HAMBURGH, April 12.

The sudden death of Prince Suwarrow has produced not less surmise and contrariety of report than did the march of the Russians. The South Prussian Gazette was among the first to announce and to confirm this news. Later advices, however, from Posen, (where the above gazette is printed) dated the 25th of March, deny the news of Suwarrow's death a mere fiction; for that, according to letters of the 22d, the Prince was perfectly recovered of his indisposition. The South Prussian Gazette of the 29th of March, again comes forward with the following confirmation, under date of the 26th:

"Our last intelligence respecting the death of Prince Italiski, Count Suwarrow Rimnifkoi, is confirmed by two letters received by yesterday's mail from Mitchlow, 6 miles from Brest, of the 18th and 19th of this month. He expired on the 20 inst, on his estate near Robrin; his death was sudden; and the opening of his body, has rendered our suspicion certain; we further speaking more plain on the occasion. It is stated, that near Brest, all carriages are put in requisition to transport the Russian troops returning through Austria, as they are almost all infected with the epidemic putrid fever."

If, in spite of death and dissection, Prince Suwarrow still exists, the editor of the South Prussia Gazette has been most egregiously imposed upon. We have his last number that of the 5th of April, now before us, without the least contradiction of his first statement and two fold confirmation.

EDINBURGH, April 23.

We understand that the Lord Provost, Magistrates, and Sheriff, anxious to have the markets supplied with grain at the most reasonable rates, have had a meeting with a number of the principal corn merchants on that business, and the result has been such as is likely to ensure a plentiful supply, and a reduction in the price as speedily as circumstances will admit.

GLASGOW, April 26.

Paris papers to the 20th instant were received on Tuesday evening. They are very barren of intelligence. The campaign has not yet commenced. A paper of the 20th says, that Moreau was to pass the Rhine on the 19th, last Saturday.

Two Hamburgh mails arrived on Saturday, but the little information which they bring is not of so late a date as that brought by the French papers.—Malta, it is again said has surrendered. General Melas has transferred his head quarters to Alessandria; and, in a proclamation to his army, he announces, that the campaign would be immediately opened.

LONDON, April 18.

The report of Lord Bridport's resignation of the command of the channel fleet has been often circulated without foundation. It is said now to have taken place, and it is added, that he is to be succeeded by Earl St. Vincent, who will take the command in about fix weeks, for Alan Gardner having charge of the fleet in the interim. Sir Alan has appointed Sir Charles Cotton captain of the fleet.

Lord Duncan has also formally resigned the command of the North Sea fleet, and it is expected he will be succeeded by Admiral Dickson. The noble admiral retires altogether to his estate in Scotland.

Admiral Pole is to command at Newfoundland.—Many changes are making in the most important naval commands.

April 21.

The Dutch have created two divisions of their marine, for the defence of the whole coast, from the Ems to the Scheldt; but where they are to find the ships for this formidable fleet is not mentioned.

Another forgery on the Bank of England, to a considerable amount, has been discovered. The parties who are said to belong to the mercantile world, are not yet in custody.

The regiments to be raised by the resolution of Congress, are the 9th, 5th, 7th, 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, 15th, 16th. The permanent army establishment will then consist of one regiment of cavalry, commanded by col. Wells; two regiments of artillerists and engineers, commanded by col. Burbeck; and four regiments of infantry commanded by col. Hamtramck, Strong, Gaither, and Butler.

Extract of a letter from Washington, (Penn.) dated May 20.

"By an officer of the United States army, who passed through this town on the 7th inst. from Knoxville, we are informed, that a war is likely to take place between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians. The cause of the dispute is said to be—That a Chickasaw chief erected a ferry on the Tennessee river, at the crossing place from Orleans to Kentucky. A chief of the Choctaws (Double head) sent him word that he would exact one on the opposite side of the river. The Chickasaw replied, that he would take his scalp if he attempted it. The two tribes have taken up the guarrels, and, as our informant says, are preparing for war."

A subscription is now open at R. T. Rawle's bookstore, No. 50, North Second-street, Philadelphia, to raise 500 dollars as a reward to the detector of the monster that infests the streets, endangering the lives of the citizens, and assaulting the women in a most barbarous manner.

The workmen upon the canal, at the Isle of Dogs, (England), found at the depth of six feet, a spur of uncommon dimensions; it measured 11 inches, from shank to shank, it measured back but on scraping it, the man who found it discovered it to be pure gold. Sir Henry Banks purchased it for thirty five guineas. A few days afterwards they came to a horse, about the same depth, standing erect in a perfect state. On being exposed to the air, however, it fell to pieces. The conjecture is, that it must have stood there for some hundreds of years.

Tuesday morning last, the president of the United States left Philadelphia, on his journey to the seat of government, at the city of Washington. He was accompanied by his private secretary, Mr. Shaw.

Yesterday was fixed upon for the removal of the secretary of state's office to that place.

Capt. Aitkin, who arrived at Charleston on the 24th inst. from the Havanna, informs, that the day before he left that port, two privateer schooners, belonging to New Providence, with 14 and 10 guns, were brought in there by a King's brig, which was from la Vera Cruz. The brig had on board 400,000 dollars in specie. The privateers, to the westward of Cape Antonia, the captain of the brig endeavoured to avoid them, but finding this impossible, he made ready for action.

The battle lasted two hours and a half, during which the privateers made several attempts to board, which did not succeed. One of the English seamen was killed, and a large proportion of the crew. The Spanish brig mounted 16 guns, twelve pounders. One of the privateers is called the Eagle; the name of the other captain Aitkin does not recollect,

To FARMERS.

Pieces of rags dipped in a mixture of train oil and bruised gunpowder, and hung up on hedges, or poles, will effectually protect newly sown corn from the depredations of crows, rooks &c.

Extract of a letter dated
Fort Republican, 22d April, 1800.

"You will have heard from the Cape of the revolution lately happened there, which has completely suspended the commissary Roume. We are perfectly quiet here, and nothing new since the taking Jacquemel.--- The Boston frigate, it is said, will soon return; she is already replaced on the station by the Trumble sloop of war, which takes this convoy. It will be well to caution our countrymen against coming into this bite without convoy, or being well armed; for the danger is considerable, from the barges of Rigaud. The sloop of war will probably be at the Mole every fortnight, the 10th and 25th of each month, but of this I should suppose notice has been given."

We understand, that Locusts in their Grub worm state have this spring, been dug up in great quantities in the surrounding country. This circumstance induced a belief, that we should receive one of their periodical visitations this summer. The appearance of this phenomenon of nature is now almost reduced to a certainty, as within a few days immense numbers of Locusts have emerged from their "grub case" and risen from the earth in the vicinity of our city. A period of 16, 17 or 18 years generally elapse between the visits of those extraordinary insects.--- Their last appearance in this state was in 1782.

EXTRACT

Of a letter from an officer on board the frigate Gen. Greene capt. Perry, to a gentleman in Providence, dated Cape Francois, April 14.

"On our leaving this place in January last, we were ordered by commodore Talbot to make a cruise round Hispaniola, from which we returned but a few days since; not that it would have required half that time to have performed the route, but for the purpose of aiding general Toussaint in the capture of Jacmel. We cruised of that port a considerable time, to intercept supplies for Rigaud. This had the desired effect. Jacmel, closely besieged on the land side by Toussaint's army, and blockaded by the Gen. Greene, was reduced to a state of starvation. As a last effort, they made a desperate sally in the night, with intention to force Toussaint's lines, but failed in the attempt, and the whole garrison, consisting of more than 6000 men fell into the hands of Toussaint. The capture of Jacmel, is of infinite consequence to Toussaint, and of high importance to the commerce of the United States to this island, as in general opinion it will facilitate the entire reduction of Rigaud's power. It is impossible for me to describe to you the manner in which Toussaint expressed his gratitude to capt. Perry on the occasion.--- We engaged three of Rigaud's forts warmly for thirty or forty minutes in which time we obliged the enemy to evacuate the town and two of the forts, and repair to their strongest hold; this fort however soon hauled down its colours. We had got our boats out ready to take possession of the place, and a number of Rigaud's cruizing vessels and barges in the harbor, when a large ship hove in sight, which from her appearance capt. Perry and his officers judged to be a French frigate; it was thereupon thought prudent to relinquish the enterprize, and go on in pursuit of her; but in speaking her, found she was indeed a French built ship, but then in possession of the British, and cruizing in their service. The damage we received was very inconsiderable; a few shots in our sides, and some of our rigging cut away. The enemy had several men killed and wounded."

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, June 28.

Accounts respecting the death of Suwarrow, appear very doubtful.

The duke of York, we hear, has had some of his ribs broken by a fall from his horse. He has however, so far recovered as to be able to walk abroad.

The Princess Charlotte packet, for Halifax and New York, was detained at Falmouth on the 18th of April.

By the arrival of the ship Huron, capt. Hall, from Greenock, we have received a file of the Glasgow Courier to the 26th April inclusive. On examining them they appear extremely barren of interesting intelligence; notwithstanding we have endeavored to make as judicious a selection as the materials before us will afford.

The campaign which was expected to open the latter end of March, has not yet commenced in any direction, the only hostilities which have taken place are merely affairs of outposts, trifling in their consequences.

The most important intelligence contained in these papers are the official account of the evacuation of Egypt; which we have given in the preceeding columns.

United States.

NEW-YORK, July 30.

By the Andromache, we have received the Glasgow Courier down to the 2d of June, but we find no later news from the armies than that by way of Philadelphia.

We received no papers by the Catharine—When she sailed there was a talk of a general peace.

The Brig Catharine, which arrived here yesterday from Liverpool, was boarded on her passage by a French privateer, and robbed of her letter mail, papers, and a great number of cabin trifles belonging to the captain and passengers.

On the 8th instant arrived at Charleston the ship Mary, Lunt, Greenock, 68 days—Minerva, Pinkham, Dublin, 55 days—brig Hope, Dolliver, Havanna, 4 days—schr. Polly, Fairchild, Jamaica, 20 days.

On the 29th ultimo, capt. Pinkham, being near the port of Nassau, bore, 66 sail of which was a French privateer of 32 guns and 9 in boats belonging to Guadaloupe, which took from him three packages of Irish linens, and robbed his vessel and the passengers of their clothing and several other articles. A steerage passenger on board of capt. Pinkham, having informed the French captain that there were 400 guineas concealed on board, they rummaged every part of the ship, but not finding any money, they took the linen.

Letters received by this ship mention, that the disturbances in Ireland were by no means allayed: the counties of Wexford and Wicklow, in particular, are in a high state of opposition to the government.

The brig Aaron, Whitewell, from New-Orleans to New-York, caught fire on the 17th inst. off the Capes, from some unknown cause. The captain, crew and passengers, 17 in number, took to the long boat, and after remaining in that situation 17 hours, were taken up by a pilot boat and arrived at Fort Mifflin, Philadelphia, last Thursday evening.

The cargo of the ship Ariel, coming from Canton, which has lately been captured by a French privateer, and carried into Guadalope, is said to consist of 100 000 pieces of nankeens and 500 chests of tea, besides other articles.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, August 30.

SUICIDE!!!

A man by the name of Muire, hung himself about a week since in the town of Niagara. This unhappy being has left an amiable consort to lament his wretched exit.

EXTRACT.

"Manners," says Mr. Burke, are of more importance than laws. The law touches us but here and there and now and then. Manners are what vex or soothe, corrupt or purify, exalt or debase, barbarize or refine us, by a constant steady, uniform insensible operation, like that of the air we breathe in. They give their whole form and colour to our lives. According to their quality, they aid morals, they supply them or they totally destroy them.

In every country where refinement, and especially where the Christian religion has given to women the rank and influence which they ought to hold in society, they have it in their power to give to manners almost what tone they please. It should be their study. It is a subject, in which, if possible, they have a greater interest than men; and it was remarked above, they possess a mere effectual power to enforce the observance of their decrees. Nothing can deprive them of this power but a proud, ferocious spirit in themselves, that throws off virtue in which it is founded, the uneasy yoke upon them. This power itself, and with all the dignity and with all the happiness of the sex are pledged to us, for the faithful and prudent discharge of the trust. If they resign themselves they secure respect from us. Even the hoodwinked of vice is not moved. I and made to forbid a proper regard to in the presence of the modest decent, exalted dignity of female virtue. there is a delicate sensibility inseparably attached to such a character, which we dread to violate or offend, as we dread the commission of sacrilege; at the same time we perceive it therein which no man of ordinary feeling, is able to withstand. We forced by an infinitive impulse to a power, to imitate, to love. This it is which constitutes, in women, the power to lead our manners, and, in us, the readiness to follow where they lead. They should, however, remember that this charm is hallowed fire, which they are bound, equally by duty and by interest, as holy festivals, to preserve in the temple pure and uncontaminated. If they do so, men will come and offer incense. But if with wanton, lawless, facrilegious hands they will dethe it, kaiser it abroad, and expose it to the profane, it is true they may set us on a flame; but it is a flame which burns with foul and rapacious appetite; a flame which consumes in us the very vestiges of reason and difference for them, and must inevitably rage to the destruction of every thing which now distinguishes their situation from the debased and humble state of a female Turk, or the more despicable condition of the divorced wife of a French republican.

Think not that I wish to place women, as man under any unnecessary restraints in their department; or to render their manners insipid, formal and hypocritical. Retcal. I better know the refined pleasures which the cheerfulness and vivacity of well educated women is capable of affording. This more of a freedom which, Esqrs is unto wise. There is an essential difference, more easily perceived than defined, between the unrestrained LONfrankness "that may become a woman Bamen," and the smallest degree of that dangerous freedom either in their language, dress or demeanor, against which we would caution them.

The New York gazette of the 19th says:—"It is reported, and we wish to obtain correct information of the fact, that Mr. Jefferson has intention of this his own supply of among his dependances, the French Week or Decade.—It is very interesting to know whether the United States are to have a man at the head of government, who counteSabbath nances the abolition of the Christian

The New York Gazette contains a letter from Philadelphia, which says, "You may assert with confidence, that Maryland will follow the example of Virginia, and Massachusetts in the approaching election, and the triumph of Federalism, beyond a doubt.

"It is here proper to observe, that the Legislature of Virginia, being influenced by the federalists, have altered their mode of election in such a manner as to prevent any Federalist from being appointed an Elector of the President and Vice President, by throwing the whole state into one district, viz. and not

"The Legislature of Maryland being Federalists, have resolved to appoint electors themselves; therefore, all the electors of that state will be federal—of course their votes will be for Adams and Pinckney. Maryland having a majority of Federalists, all the Electors of that State, will be also federal, and vote with Massachusetts."

DAY.

MORNING.

IN the barn the tenant cock,
Close to partlet perch'd on high,
Briskly crows, (the shepherd's clock!)
Jocund that the morning's nigh.

Swiftly from the mountain's brow,
Shadows, nurs'd by night, retire:
And the peeping sun-beam, now,
Paints with gold the village spire.

Philomel forsakes the thorn,
Plaintive where she prates at night;
And the lark, to meet the morn,
Soars beyond the shepherd's sight.

From the low-roof'd cottage ridge,
See the chatt'ring swallow spring;
Darting through the one-arch'd bridge,
Quick she dips her dappled wing.

Now the pine-tree's waving top
Gently greets the morning gale!
Kidlings now, begin to crop,
Daisies in the dewy dale.

From the balmy sweets, uncloy'd,
(Restless till her task be done)
The busy bee's employ'd
Sipping dew before the sun.

Trilling through the cleev'd rock,
Where the limpid stream distills,
Yet refreshment waits the flock
When 'tis sun-drove from the hills.

Lin, for the promis'd corn
(Ere the harvest hopes are ripe)
Anxious, hears the huntsman's horn,
Boldly sounding, drown his pipe.

Sweet,—O sweet, the warbling throng,
On the white emblossom'd spray!
Nature's universal song
Echoes to the rising day.

NOON.

Fervid on the glitt'ring flood,
Now, the noon-tide radiance glows:
Drooping o'er its infant bud,
Not a dew-drop's left the rose.

By the brook the shepherd dines;
From the fierce meridian heat
Sheltered, by the branching pines,
Pendent o'er his grassy seat.

Now the flock forsakes the glade,
Where uncheck'd the sun-beams fall,
Sure to find a pleasing shade
By the ivy'd abbey wall.

Echo in her airy round,
O'er the river, rock, and hill,
Cannot catch a single sound,
Save the clack of yonder mill.

Cattle court the zephyrs bland,
Where the streamlet wanders cool;
On with languid silence stand
Midway in the marshy pool.

But from mountain, dell, or stream,
Not a flutt'ring zephyr springs;
Fearful left the mood-tide beam
Scorch its soft, its silken wings.

Not a leaf has leave to stir,
Nature's hush'd—serene—and still!
Quet o'er the shepherd's cur,
Sleeping on the heath-clad hill.

Languid is the landscape round,
Till the fresh descending shower,
Grateful to the thirsty ground,
Raises ev'ry fainting flower.

Now the hill—the hedge—is green,
Now the warblers' throats in tune!
Blithsome is the verdant scene,
Brighten'd by the beams of noon!

EVENING

O'er the heath the heifer strays
Free—(the furrow'd task is done)
Now the village windows blaze,
Burnish'd by the setting sun.

Now he hides behind the hill,
Sinking from a golden sky:
Can the pencil's mimic skill,
Copy the refulgent dye?

Trudging as the ploughmen go,
(To the smoking hamlet bound)
Giant-like their shadows grow,
Lengthen'd o'er the level ground.

Where the tiling forest spreads,
Shelter for the lordly dome!
To their high-built airy beds,
See the rooks returning home!

As the lark with vary'd tune,
Carols to the evening loud;
Mark the mild resplendent moon,
Breaking through a parted cloud!

Now the hermit howlet peeps
From the barn, or twisted brake:
And the blue mist slowly creeps,
Curling on the silver lake.

As the trout, in speckled pride,
Playful from its bosom springs;
To the banks, a ruffled tide
Verges in successive rings.

Tripping through the silkin grass,
O'er the path-divided dale,
Mark the rose complexion'd lass,
With her well-pois'd milking pail.

Linnets, with unnumber'd notes,
And the cuckoo-bird with two,
Tuning sweet their mellow throats,
Bid the setting sun

Hope, Fe-

hat being with his Majeſty's ſhip Adamant, on the 11th of December laſt, we chaſed a French frigate which ran on ſhore on the Weſt ſide of the river Tombeau, about three miles from Port Louis in that iſland; after firing ſeveral broadſides at her the cut away her maſts; at 7 P. M. the boats were ſent to deſtroy her under the command of Lieutenant Gray of the Adamant, aſſiſted by Lieutenant Walker of that ſhip, Lieutenant Symes of Tremendous, and Lieutenant Owen of the marines of the Adamant, who very handſomely requeſted to go upon that ſervice. At half paſt nine the boats returned, bringing with them the officers and ſome few of the men whom they found on board the frigate, which proved to be La Preneuſe, of 44 guns, and 300 men, commanded by capt. l'Hermite, to which they had ſet fire to ſeveral places, and which ſhortly after blew up. The prompt and ſpirited manner in which this ſpirited ſervice was performed, under a very heavy fire from the batteries, reflects great honor on Lieut. Gray and the officers and men under his command. During our cruiſe the Adamant captured the Benjamin, a French ſloop, laden with coffee, from the iſland of Bourbon, bound to the iſle of France, and the Bienfait, a French brig laden with rice for the ſame place; and the Tremendous captured the Neſtra Senora Del Carman, a Spaniſh brig, laden with coffee, indigo and bale goods, from the Iſle of France to Rio de la Plata, all of which I am happy to inform you are arrived.

LONDON, June 10.

It is very certain that the accounts in the French papers, of Genoa having received a ſupply of proviſions, though much diſcredited, was true. No hopes are now entertained of taking it but by famine, which, from the quantity of proviſions it has, and the aſcertained poſſibility of throwing in further ſupplies, will be a very tedious enterprize, and if Buonaparte brings an army ſtrong enough to cope with Melas, he will effect its relief.

It ſeems to be now confirmed, by the report of Capt. Popham, that General Suwarrow died at Peterſburg on the 28th of May. He had been in diſgrace with his ſovereign; and ſuch, it appears, is the character of Ruſſian manners, that the diſpleaſure of the Prince includes baniſhment from all ſociety. The man ſo lately the theme of Royal panegyric, and the object of every courtier's flattery, was abſolutely abandoned in the ſtruggles of ſickneſs & death. The ſervile herd of the metropolis with a ſhameful complaiſance, ſhrunk from the company of a diſgraced warrior, and the laſt moments of Suwarrow were deprived of the offices of friendſhip, and the conſolation of public ſympathy. Such at leaſt is the report; but we hope it is untrue, or exaggerated. There would be ſomething in this treatment of the veteran general worſe than caprice. Whatever impartial poſterity may ſay of the [illegible] by Meraj Ally Khan [illegible] at is reported that this deputation is ſent thither in conſequence of Zeman Shah's evacuation of the Punjeb.

Buonaparte, it appears, has iſſued Proclamations, promiſing to re-eſtabliſh both the King of Sardinia and the Grand Duke of Tuſcany. This manoeuvre preſents a very ſingular ſpectacle. The Child and Champion of Jacobiniſm takes up the rights of two Princes, whoſe dominions, in ſpite of all remonſtrances, are kept in poſſeſſion by an emperor who has pretended to fight for ſocial order!

The Iriſh Unioniſts are in high ſpirits to find that the weather on the other ſide of the water has been warmer than uſual for the ſeaſon, and more reſembles the climate of England. This is aſcribed entirely to the proſpect of a Union; and it is confidently expected that not only Engliſh capital, but even Engliſh climate, will in future be common to both countries.

Government have diſpatches from Lord Keith of recent date. They ſtate the ſurrender of the citadel of Savona, on the 18th of May, in conſequence of famine; and that on the 19th of May the inhabitants of Genoa aſked and obtained leave to ſend a flag of truce to Melas—which it was thought carried propoſitions for the ſurrender of the city.

Government have alſo received diſpatches from Mr. Jackſon at Turin, which eſtabliſh the fact that Gen. Melas was marching towards Piedmont to give battle to the army of Reſerve. It is ſaid Buonaparte had more than 100000 men with him on the 19th of May.

Extract of a letter from Dublin, dated

June 5.

The houſe of commons is in committee on the Union propoſitions. The gallery and all the avenues leading thereunto are crouded to an uncommon degree. The ſpeakers hitherto have been for the bill—Lord Caſtlereagh, Attorney General, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer. On the other ſide, Mr. Plunkett, Mr. Bourne, and the Right Hon. the Speaker. Mr. Corry, Chancellor of the Exchequer, is on his legs in reply to the Speaker. The houſe will not break up this ſeveral hours. Mr. Guthrie has not yet taken his ſeat."

LEGHORN, May 16.

Admiral Keith, in a letter to the Imperial Commandant of this city, Baron Fenael, ſays; I am now convinced, that the only means of conquering Genoa is to ſtarve it.

In conſequence of all [illegible] port whatever [illegible] prevent Genoa [illegible] plies. This prohibition is to remain in force till Genoa ſhall have fallen. The armies are ſupplied with proviſions by the ſhips of war.

Fifty French ſhips had failed from Toulon, under convoy of a brig and another ſhip of war, laden with proviſions, arms, and money for Genoa. Of this convoy, eight ſhips laden with proviſions have been taken by the Phaeton, Engliſh frigate, others have been carried to Mahon, and ſome burnt, after the Engliſh had taken out the principal part of the cargoes.

Another letter of the ſame date.

It is ſaid that a part of the French convoy that ſailed from Toulon with proviſions, &c. had ſucceeded in entering the port of Genoa.

Four mortars and 300 bombs have been ſent hence to the Imperial camp before Genoa.

At Ancona there are yet 5400 Imperialiſts. Three Ruſſian frigates had arrived there for the purpoſe, it is ſaid, of conveying home the troops of that nation.

Some troops are to be embarked here for Corſica, to ſupport the inſurgents of that place.

The Port Mahon brig arrived here on the 13th with the French privateer l'Enfant, Chevalier de la Victoire, her prize. The Neapolitan frigate, Galatea, of 30 guns who arrived here on the 13th, with a Danish ſhip, which ſhe had taken off Genoa laden with ammunition, muſkets, &c. coming from Toulon. The crew had made their eſcape to Genoa.

BOLOGNE, May 13

The inſurgents in Corſica have requeſted to be ſupported by ſome battalions of Auſtrian troops. They purpoſe to beſiege Baſtia, in which is a French garriſon. Some battalions are accordingly on the march for Leghorn where it is probable they will be embarked. Engliſh ſhips are daily arriving at Leghorn, with wounded French and Auſtrian ſoldiers, and French priſoners from the coaſt of Genoa.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 28.

It is now fully confirmed, that the war has recommenced in Egypt.—As impediments had been thrown in the way of the French to prevent their departure, otherwiſe than becoming priſoners of [illegible]

[illegible] the compound of the capt. Pacha.—The whole ſquadron conſiſts of 11 ſail of the line, among which is one of 110 guns and ſeven frigates. It is deſtined for Alexandria, where it will be joined by an Engliſh ſquadron.

BOMBAY, Dec. 19, 1799.

On Thurſday laſt the following ſhips failed from the harbour—Suffolk, Admiral Ranier, and La Forte, accompanied by the Prince and Eliza, country ſhips, bound to the Red Sea, with ſtores and proviſions for the detachment and his Majeſty's ſhips on that ſtation.

On Saturday laſt, a ſignal was made for a fleet to the weſtward, which in the firſt inſtance gave riſe to a number of conjectures, attended in ſome meaſure, with a degree of proportionate anxiety it was however ſhortly diſcovered to be part of Admiral Blanket's ſquadron from the Red Sea, and in the evening, the following ſhips anchored in the harbour; his Majeſty's ſhip Leopard, Admiral Blanket, Daedalus, Centurion and the company's frigate Bombay.—The Bombay failed from Aden on the 6th of October, and the Admiral paſſed the ſtraits of Babelmandel on the 13th or 14th, they have had a very tedious paſſage in conſequence of the adverſe currents, and the crew of the Bombay has been very ſickly.

Admiral Blanket had proceeded in the Leopard as high as Judda, and the frigates to Coſſier, which place they completely deſtroyed, levelling the works with the ground.

MADRAS, Jan. 5.

Extract of a letter, dated Trincomalie, 11th January, 1800.

"His Majeſty's ſhip Brave, captain Alexander, arrived here on the 5th inſt. from the Red Sea, having on board general Debuca, Ambaſſador from the late Tippoo Sultan to the Directory of France, and his ſuite,—and this day the Brave proceeded to Columbo with Mr. Debucq, and the Frenchmen who were taken with him."

CALCUTTA, Jan. 8.

The young emperor of China, Ca Hing has put to death his prime miniſter, the great enemy of the Engliſh nation, who it is ſaid had amaſſed a fortune of 90 millions of Tales, excluſive of jewels to an immenſe amount, all of which the emperor has ſeized upon.

Jan. 20.

Letters were received on Monday from Madras, dated the 11th inſt. announcing the arrival there of a ſmall veſſel which had been captured by the Clariſſa, French privateer, and, which captain Souchouſe had releaſed for the purpoſe of landing the officers and crew of the American ſhip Louis, captain Deale, which failed from thence on the 3d inſt. and which he had alſo captured a few days after the left the Pilot.

On Sunday morning laſt two Laſcars were brought to town from the ſhip Admiral Rainier, charged with having attempted to ſet that ſhip on fire, in Sauger Roads—we underſtand that one of them was caught in the very act of putting a fire brand into a tub of cumbuſtibles prepared for the purpoſe, and upon being immediately tied up and puniſhed he acknowledged that he had been inſtigated by the head Tindal of the ſhip, who had firſt given him liquor to intoxicate him, afterwards provided him with the fire, &c.

BUONAPARTE AND MASSENA.

The following intercepted letter from Buonaparte to general Maſſena has been published as authentic at Leghorn by the Auſtrians. It ſhows the difficulties with which the French government has to encounter previous to the opening of the campaign, and proves that Buonaparte was not entirely without ſuſpicion that Melas would attempt the very plan he has ſince executed. In fact it might have ſuggeſted the idea, eſpecially as the letter diſcloſes the weakneſs of Maſſena's army. There appears reaſon to believe, indeed, that Maſſena had been partly ſurpriſed by Melas and had not been ſufficiently aware of the neceſſity of guarding the three paſſes leading down to Savona, Final Albenga.

Dispatches from the chief conful Bonaparte to gen. Maſſena.

PARIS, March 22.

" I confeſs my dear general, that I am not at all ſatisfied with your laſt dispatches. Why thoſe eternal complaints and reproaches? Do you think we might have managed affairs better? We do not reſt on beds of roſes here; and if our armies are in want, it is becauſe our reſources are extremely weak. The moſt preſſing orders have already been given for ſupplying you with the neceſſary articles. You muſt have already received what concerns the artillery department. Since the loan could not be effected in Holland, I am only able to ſend you five or ſix hundred thouſand livres, inſtead of the four million that had been promiſed. Apply this entirely to paying the army, and let the contractors, and thoſe employed under them complain: ſhould thoſe gentlemen with to quit the ſervice menace them with death, and be as good as your word: there is no want of adventurers of that deſcription, whom the love of gain will allure to the army. Our care muſt be directed to the ſoldier, who ſuffers and fights count on the reinforcements which you deſire.—If you find it difficult to maintain an army of 30,000 men in the Genoeſe, what would you do with a ſtill greater number? I cannot ſpare a ſingle demi-brigade of veteran troops: all I am able to do for you is to keep a few weak battalions of conſcripts to the department of Var, to diſperſe the diſcontented in the ſouth of France; in caſe of neceſſity you might unite thoſe troops with your army. It grieves me that you ſuffer yourſelf to be miſled by accounts which ought not to be relied on. If the imperial army actually has the 133 battalions which gave you ſo much uneaſineſs, what would be the conſequence? How is it poſſible for the enemy to employ even one half of his forces in the mountainous poſition you occupy? Can he attack you otherwiſe than, with ſingle columns? And are you not the brave, the fortunate Maſſena! Do you not command the beſt infantry in the world! Is not the active and intelligent French ſoldier ſuperior to all the troops of Europe, in mountainious diſtricts: beſide, the enemy can convey proviſions only for a ſmall number of troops in the mountains, as they are in want of mules.—No, my dear general! the ſuperiority of the enemy gives me no uneaſineſs—that can only be excited by the plans which they may hit upon; for, ſtrong as the ſituation is, you are not entirely out of danger. I will tell you what a brilliant general might undertake againſt you. By daily attacks he would harraſs your centre and right wing towards the ſources of the Taro, the Biſagre, and la Polvecera, while he would vigorouſly attack the left, and endeavor to gain one of the three paſſes leading to Savona, Finale, and Albenga. Should he ſucceed in this attempt your army would be divided into two corps, and your communication with France cut off. But I believe German caution will never enter ſo daring a plan. Meanwhile you muſt carefully guard thoſe three paſſes; and ſhould the enemy attack you and carry one of theſe important points (which is poſſible,) then my dear general, you muſt fall upon him like lightening, attack from the ſide of Genoa, while Suchet, attacks him from Nice, and deſtroy every Auſtrian that ſhould paſs the mountains," &c.

The influence which madame Chevalier poſſeſſes at Peterſburg, ſeems to ſtagger miniſters extremely. To mr. Pitt the matter is entirely incomprehenſible.

NEW-YORK, Auguſt 7.

Yeſterday morning arrived at the quarantine ground the ſhip Providence, Adams, of Providence, (Rhode Iſland,) mounting thirty-four 24, 18, and 6 pounders from Barcelona, loading, wine and brandy.

Capt. Adams, left Barcelona on the evening of the 17th of June. On the 20th off W. end of Majorca, ſpoke the Britiſh frigate Sea-Horſe, having on board gen. Abercrombie, and three other Engliſh generals, together with a company of artillery: they parted the day before from a fleet from Gibraltar having troops on board for Minorca, or ſome other place in the Mediterranean. By a gentleman who left Cette on the 7th of June, information was received that the blockade of Genoa was raiſed; on which account there were great rejoicings in France; and all the Genoeſe veſſels immediately taken into employment. Information was alſo received of the ſucceſs of the French armies on the Rhine, and by ſeveral counts from Cadiz, Marſeilles, and Paris, the American commiſſioners had cloſed the buſineſs of their miſſion with the deputies of the French nation, and waited only the aſſent of the chief conſul, who was then abſent from Paris, with the army in Piedmont. It was laid and believed with a full determination of returning to his crown, the king of Surdinia."

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Leghorn, to his Friend in Philadelphia, dated May 30th.

" We have been in daily hopes of hearing of the fall of Genoa, and it is ſaid general Maſſena ſent a meſſage to lord Keith, requeſting him to deſiſt bombarding the city till this day (30th May) when, if the gen. did not receive ſuccour, he would capitulate. Many bets are laid on both ſides and to-morrow is anxiouſly looked for.

From the Wilmington Mirror, of Auguſt 2.

Laſt wedneſday came up to this town the ſhip Liberty, capt. Miller, of this port, in nine weeks from Londonderry with 450 paſſengers or upwards. As there were many children, two of whom counted but one paſſenger, it is ſuppoſed there were, including the ſhip's crew, &c. about 500 ſouls on board all in good health. On his paſſage capt. Miller ſpoke the ſhip Active, Harper, 6 week from Lisbon, who informed him that certain accounts had been received at Lisbon previous to his ſailing, that a treaty had been concluded between

The medals preſented to the officers and ſeamen who ſerved in Lord Nelſon's fleet, are of gold, ſilver, and copper. On the front are diſplayed the figure of Britannia ſtanding on a rock with an anchor at her feet, and holding in one hand a laurel wreath over the ſea, emblematical of our deſire of being at peace with all the world; and in the other a portrait of lord Nelſon, round which are the words "Europe's hope, and Britain's glory," and "rear admiral Nelſon of the Nile." The back of the medallion repreſents the Britiſh and French fleets in line of battle on the evening of the firſt of Auguſt, the ſun ſetting appears juſt above the horizon, round the edge are the words "Almighty God has bleſſed his Majeſty's arms," and at the bottom "victory of the Nile, Auguſt, 1798." ON BEARDS.

IF we have a dispute in this country about Bishops Wigs, in Parliament at present debate about the propriety of wearing Beards. Upon this subject the following article has appeared in one of the Journals—

A beard is the ornament of Goats, Philosophers, and Orientalists.

Is a long beard handsomer than a short beard, or is it better to shave it than let it grow? These are indeed important questions, since they have been the subject of war between nations, and disputation between religious sects.—It is a question difficult to resolve, since after so many ages, we see on the surface of the earth as many people without a beard as people with a beard.

A maxim in bad Latin, says, De gustibus non est disputandum; and there is one in good French, which says, Il ne faut disputer ni de gouts, ni de couleurs. This might decide the point, if it were true that taste, not chance, influenced the destinies of the beard. But the history of all possible beards, from those of Moses; Agamemnon, and Socrates, to that of Henry the Fourth and the Grand Lama, proves quite the contrary.

The Greeks wore their beards long until the time of Alexander the Great. But this Prince, who was no fool, ordered the Macedonians to cut off their beards, from fear that the Persians would not wear theirs long.

When the Romans found that the Carthagenians wore beards, they laid aside theirs, which they had worn until then, and the fashion did not make its appearance until the reigns of the Emperor Marcus Aurelius, Antonius, &c. who set the example, and imitated themselves the Philosopher of the school of Athens, who had preserved theirs.

After the churches of the East and West began to separate, the Greeks perceived that the Latins had proscribed the beard, and from a spirit of contradiction they reinstated it in all its rights, honors and dignities.

The Orientalists, confistent in their practice of wearing their beards, have had no dispute on that point; but in revenge they have quarrelled on the fashion of it; and more than once the Tartars have fought in battle array against the Persians for differing from them in opinion on this subject.

The Americans are the only people on earth who never had quarrels or wars on this point.—The reason is very simple and obvious—Nature has not given them a beard.

To decide the question fairly, I think we should isolate ourselves from all other people, and, without entering into their particular interests and prejudice, confine ourselves to the examination of our own.

If we consult the Ladies, it is very probable that they will declare in favour of a beard; but it of importance to know what sort of beards will please them.

Red beards might please Hebrew beauties; but we are not the defcendants of Abraham, and prejudice has condemned this colour.

Blue beards are in no greater favour; if we may believe the author of Little Poucet Cyprilion, &c. for they do not announce a tender heart.

Black beards have nothing against them, but they are scarce in the North and to the present day me ave not been discovered of putting a black beard on a red chin, as we engraft a plumb on a quince. How er, the ingenuity of man is such, that we ought not to despair.

As to Grey or White beards, they are very venerable, but that is all.

All then we know on the subject is, that beard is very desirable for youth, becomes the gravity of manhood, and is the ornament of old age.

A thousand persons of no consideration might thus obtain it, and the respect which we had not for themselves we might have for their beards. A fool might pass for a philosopher, and his beard stand in the place of wisdom. A long beard might prove a great convenience to the laborious classes, as they could not have the trouble of shaving it: and to the idle as to pass the time away it would afford them the employment of curling and combing it. They might even, like some Orientalists, confine it in silken purses: and should this fashion appear ridiculous to an European, it should be considered that the purses into which we put our hair may appear no less ridiculous to a Turk. The only difference is, that the one wears it behind and the other before.

Now, if it be true, that the promise of a Musfulman, when he swears by his beard, is more sacred than when he takes God and his conscience to witness; a beard, at this rate, would be of inestimable advantage among us. There would be something then on which we might depend. Oaths would not be so common, and so often broken.

For those who wish for further information on this important subject, it may be of use to know respecting long beards, that it is to Charles Martel the Frenchmen are indebted that they do not wear long beards. For if he had not conquered at Poitiers, the Saracens already masters of Spain, and of a moity of France, they would have been all Musfulmen. They would wear their beards long, the barbers would be beggars, and razors would not have saved so many faces.

The following anecdotes are taken from M. St. Felix's chapter of beards and wigs:—

Francis I. having been wounded in the head on Twelfth Day, 1521, by a firebrand thrown inadvertently out of a window, was obliged to cut off his hair. Fearing that with the hood which was worn at that time, and his head being shaved, he should have the appearance of a Monk, he determined to wear a hat, and let his beard grow. From hence long beards again became the fashion, which continued through the four succeeding reigns.

In 1586, F. Oliver was told that he could not be admitted into the parliament as master of assist at the pleadings. Pierre Lescot, in 1556, being elected one of the canons of Notre Dame, the chapter protested for some time against his long beard, but at length agreed to admit him without cutting his beard "notwithstanding it was derogatory to the statutes of the church!" These two instances prove that at that time every man in France wore a long beard, magistrates and ecclesiastics only excepted.

In the reign of Henry the IV, the beard was diminished. It was worn three or four inches long under the chin, rounded and spread like a fan, with two mustacios, long and stiff, diverging like the whiskers of a cat. In the next change of fashion they retained only those two whiskers, with a tuft of hair in the middle, and along the under-lip. When marshall Beffourpierre came out of prison, after 12 years confinement, he said, that all the changes he observed in the world, was that men had less beards, and the horses more tails!"

In the time of these fan beards they were kept in that state by wax prepared and iced, and by which they were made to any colour desired. The beard was dressed in the evening, and left it should be deranged during the night, it was enclosed in a bagatelle, a sort of purse, which was made for that purpose. In the reign of Louis XIV. the Moustache Royal was adopted, and continued for several years.

I should state, that long hair was so much in veneration by our ancestors that when a debtor found himself unable to pay his debts, he went to the house of his creditor, to whom he presented a pair of scissars, and by cutting off his hair, or suffering it to be cut off became actually the slave of the creditor.

In the middle of the 16th century, the bishops were not allowed to suffer their beards to grow, whilst on the contrary a beard was deemed an essential ornament to the person who was invested with the character of an ambassador. Antoine Caracioli, son of the marshal of France of that name, was appointed bishop of Treves, Henry II. intended him for an embassy, this prelate did not shave himself when he went to take possession of his bishoprick, and left this should prove an obstacle to his being received, the king himself wrote the following letter to the chapter of Treves.

"Dearly and well beloved, as we conceive that you may find some difficulty in receiving our loving and faithful cousin Antoine de Caracioli, as your Bishop, unless he shall first take off his beard, we in our good pleasure write this letter, to desire that you will hold him exempt from the regulation, as we have it in contemplation to send him out of the kingdom on affairs which import us nearly, and where we wish that he should not go without his accustomed beard. Being assured that you will do as desired we shall not add to the letter further than to assure you, that, in complying, you will do an act most agreeable to us."

Guillaume Duprat being appointed to the bishoprick of Clermont, left that city in great haste, because his chapter wished to deprive him of his long beard. The fashion however took another change, for we see the portraits of Prelates, at the end of the 16th, and towards the beginning of the 17th century, decorated with very long & thick beards.—Among these, the Cardinal du Perron, the Archbishop of Rouen, who was surnamed Benzbarber, or Fair Beard, and the Archbishop of Bruges.

"We see with surprize," concludes M. St. Foix, "and often times with pity, all the books and all the decrees of our ancestors respecting the hair, whether it should be worn long or short, respecting the abuse of wigs, and of chins whether shaved or unshaved.—The absurdity of these disputes should dispose every man to exercise a wise tolleration—a virtue most excellent in practice, and particularly when the difference is not upon any of those which are essential to the well being of society.

United States.

NEW YORK, August 9.

THE Ganges sloop of war has taken an American vessel, from the coast of Africa, bound to the Havanna, with 118 slaves on board. These unfortunate people have arrived at Fort Mifflin, in a very wretched condition.

The envoys of the United States were at the review of Buonaparte's body guards, in the Champ de Mars, the 25th April.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Gibraltar, to a respectable house in this city, dated June 10, 1800.

On the 30th ult. arrived at this port by stress of weather, the brig Georgia Packet, James Drummond, master, from Leghorn, for your port, with sundry merchandize.—On the 2d inst. she left this and proceeded on her voyage, but in a few hours after being out a French cruizer came up with her, and ordered the master to follow him to Algesiras, which they did for about half an hour; but on an English privateer hoaving in sight, the French cruizer stood away, and captain Drummond altered his course to proceed on his voyage again, when the English privateer took him and brought him in here, and has libelled the vessel and cargo.—He alledges as this was a blockaded port, they would have made a prize of her; but as said blockade is on the part of Spain, and not France, do not see how it will be of any use to them."

Extract of a letter from capt. Newman, late of the Jane Packet, to a gentleman in London, dated St. Ives, May 18.

"I have now to relate to you in what manner I became possessed of the Marquis of Kildare packet. You know already about the capture and re-capture of the Jane, and of my remaining on board of the French privateer to be sent to Spain. I was landed there the 5th ult. and marched on for Lisbon, where I arrived in about 18 days, and took my passage in the above mentioned ship for Falmouth. We sailed on the 29th, and after being a fortnight at sea, fell in with a French privateer, which captured us, took the captain, officers and crew out, leaving five men out of the Jane's crew on board (who were passengers) as likewise a lady, with her sick brother and father, and three of the Marquis of Kildare's people, who had themselves; they then put a prize-master on board, with 17 men, and ordered her for Corunna, three days afterwards, being in sight of the above place, distant about 8 leagues, I found means to possess myself of the captain's pistols, and one of my people seized his cutlass; the others jumped about the tiller rope, and got hold of the boarding pikes, when we made a rush at the Frenchmen, and drove them off the deck; then took possession of the ship, gave them the long boat, with some fruit and wine, and what bread we could spare, and turned them adrift in number 18. I have no doubt of their having reached the shore, as they had a good boat with mast, sail and oars, moderate weather, and Corunna in sight. We after experiencing a good many difficulties, such as living on fruit for five days, bad weather, contrary winds, and no books to determine where about we were—I say, after all this, I had the good fortune to make St. Ives head, and with the assistance of a pilot and some men (myself and people being exhausted) the was got in and moored alongside the quay, where she now remains till the Post-office and the Admiralty settle the business respecting her to capture."

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Sittings at Guildhall, before Lord Kilen and a special jury.

JADSON v. WILKS.

This was a case of very great importance to all masters of ships and their seamen. After performing a voyage to Batavia, the Three Sisters, an American East Indiaman, cast anchor at Deptford on the 18th of April last.—Mr. Stiles the captain, wished the crew to remain on board till the cargo should be discharged; but many of them insisted on going instantly on shore. He then called all hands on deck, and desired those who were willing to work to go forward, and those who would not stay any longer to go aft. The latter he addressed in these words: "My lads, you are now at liberty to leave me; but remember, If you do you will forfeit every halfpenny of your wages."—Forty-two of them, notwithstanding, went on shore, and of these as next day brought actions against Mr. Stiles, and had him arrested for the money they swore to be due to them. The present plaintiff was the only one who proceeded in his action, as all the rest agreed to be regulated by its success.—It was clearly proved that he had been on board the whole voyage, that he had behaved well during the course of it, and that a sum of upwards of 60l. was due to him on the 18th April, the day he left the ship. It was allowed, on the part of the defendant, that he would have been entitled to that or to a larger sum, had he remained on board till the vessel was delivered; but it was contended, that in the present circumstances he was entitled to no part of it. There was an act of Congress which expressly enacted, that a seaman shall forfeit his wages if he leaves his ship before the is unladen; this act was recited in the ship's articles, and these articles the plaintiff had subscribed.—Verdict for defendant.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, September 13.

We are favoured by a Correspondent, with the London Star of the 31st of June, from which we have taken the following hasty Medley.

HAGUE, June 12.

THE representatives of Holland have published a proclamation, stating, that, since all the measures hitherto taken for the purpose of levying the sums necessary for the service of the republic, have met with a number of difficulties; and these sums being however very necessary, in order to pay to the French nation the sums stipulated in the treaty, the representatives therefore have decreed, that a provisionary voluntary negociation should be entered into for that purpose, namely, that thirty millions of guilders, shall, during the present year, be paid to the French republic. All fifteen millions for the restoration of the naval forces, and twenty millions more, for the re-establishment of the land armies, and the French troops taken into the pay of the Dutch republic.

The great part of these sums must be ready in a few months.

On the 9th inst. a day of thanksgiving was celebrated in honor of the Liberty and Independence of the republic, accompanied by fire works in the evening.

The Patriotic Society of Zierickzee has made the proposition, that the members of the former government, who alone were the cause of the war, should pay the hundred millions which had been granted to the French by the Treaty of Alliance.

The celebration in honor of the alliance with France, took place in every town of Holland, in which all the emblems and ornaments of nobility were publicly burnt. A waggon full of such antiquities have been burnt on the day before yesterday at Utrecht. A similar procession has taken place at Amsterdam, when the magistracy ordered a strong corps of light cavalry to the town, in order to prevent all disturbance.

PARIS,
NATIONAL CONVENTION.
June 14.

Vernier rose and said—"No one among you can be ignorant that greedy speculators already prepare to purchase cattle, to keep them in their possession until the time when they can gain by them 6x for 5. Your committee of public Safety has charged me to propose to you two decrees, which will put a stop to this mischief. They are absolutely necessary; since, if were to leave these monopolizers a longer time for their traffic, it would be impossible for us to supply our armies, now grown victorious in all quarters, and the great communes, more especially Paris, which consumes monthly, at the cost of the government, more than thirty seven millions of livres. Besides your committee look upon it to be a deep laid scheme of our enemies, who are in league with some of the Royalists who have crept in amongst our citizens notwithstanding all our vigilance; but we expect speedily to detect them and frustrate their nefarious proceedings.—The first of these decrees forbids to all others, except butchers, cultivators, and army commissaries, the purchase of cattle. I will now read it to you."—The plan was ordered to be printed, and the discussion adjourned for three days.

"The second plan," continued Vernier, "is not less urgent, and may be decreed immediately. The Convention annuls all the purchases and sales which may have been made of the objects of the approaching harvest. In case these purchases and sales have been actually made, the objects shall be confiscated, partly for the reward of the informer, partly for the commune, and partly for the republic. It forbids every citizen to purchase or sell corn on the ground, on penalty of confiscation."—This plan was adopted.

A member read a plan of the decree tending to prolong for eight months the period granted to fathers, mothers, uncles, aunts and cousins of emigrants for the purpose of making a general declaration of their property, moveable and immoveable.—The discussion adjourned till to-morrow.

The representatives of the people in the departments of the North, and the Pas de Calais, to the National Convention.

Arras, Messidore, June 19.

"There happened yesterday evening in the commune of Arras, an event, of very little consequence, which exaggerated by the hireling journalists, might appear to you as very serious, if we did not hasten to describe to you the real state of the circumstances. The municipality of Arras, being of opinion, that they ought to raise the price of bread to the indigent and working people from 5 to 6 sous a pound, proclaimed yesterday the determination to which they had come on that subject. Immediately a report was circulated, that this rise of bread was a measure of the representatives of the people, and an assemblage of between two and three thousand women, armed with all manner of weapons, having been formed, proceeded to our residence, shouting Bread! Bread! at five sous! A single sentinel stopped the crowd at our gate, and permitted only a few women, unarmed, to enter, to present to us their petition. We declared, that we would attend to no petition till the crowd was dispersed. For from dispersing, this answer had only the effect to increase it; but in a short time a platoon of the regiment of cavalry came up, and it vanished instantly disappeared. The remainder of the night passed in the utmost tranquillity; and that tranquillity still continues. Thus terminated a scene which had no doubt been contrived by the Royalists, who are more insolent in this place than in any other commune of the departments entrusted to our superintendance; but who can in no shape, be the objects of serious inquietude."—Referred to the committee of of general surety.

The following petition from the female citizen Dubancon, a pupil of Voltaire, was read:

"Citizens Legislators, I appeal to your justice. An unhappy woman has a claim on your humanity; and the blood of the immortal Dubancon ought to speak to the heart of every Frenchman. To forget this, legislators, would be a crime. Restore to me my family, which, under the reign of the tyrant Robelpierre, was robbed of all its property. My father an emigrant! No—I swear by the blood of the Dubancons; he could never have had such a thought; he only fled from the hand of the murderer, who first robbed him of his all, and then sought to rob him of his life: he is too good a father, too good a husband to reduce his friends to misery. Yes, Legislators, his children were his friends. With these qualities he is worthy to be a republican, and to return to his country, whence he was banished during the reign of terror. Their beloved daughter demands of you her father and her mother."—Decreed that they return to their country.

PARIS, June 18.

There is a report now in circulation, and which seems to be very much credited, that the siege of Genoa has been raised, and that the Austrians have been almost entirely defeated.—Owing to these unexpected disasters, proposals for peace have been made on the part of Austria, and it is thought will be accepted by our government.

LONDON, June 21.

The reports of a speedy peace, whether true or false, had the effect to raise the stocks yesterday; they were at one time as high as 69, but left off rather worse.—This morning, however, they opened at 68 and an half, and were on the rise at twelve o'clock.—The report of peace still gains ground.—Star.

Yesterday a King's messenger arrived with dispatches from the hostile army on the Rhine. The Hamburgh and Italian mails due on Wednesday also arrived. They bring but little news of importance, if we except the general expectation held out, in almost all the foreign Journals, of an immediate pacification among the belligerent powers.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, September 13.

We are favoured by a Correspondent, with the London Star of the 31st of June, from which we have taken the following hasty Medley.

HAGUE, June 12.

THE representatives of Holland have published a proclamation, stating, that, since all the measures hitherto taken for the purpose of levying the sums necessary for the service of the republic, have met with a number of difficulties; and these sums being however very necessary, in order to pay to the French nation the sums stipulated in the treaty, the representatives therefore have decreed, that a provisionary voluntary negociation should be entered into for that purpose, namely, that thirty millions of guilders, shall, during the present year, be paid to the French republic. All fifteen millions for the restoration of the naval forces, and twenty millions more, for the re-establishment of the land armies, and the French troops taken into the pay of the Dutch republic.

The great part of these sums must be ready in a few months.

On the 9th inst. a day of thanksgiving was celebrated in honor of the Liberty and Independence of the republic, accompanied by fire works in the evening.

The Patriotic Society of Zierickzee has made the proposition, that the members of the former government, who alone were the cause of the war, should pay the hundred millions which had been granted to the French by the Treaty of Alliance.

The celebration in honor of the alliance with France, took place in every town of Holland, in which all the emblems and ornaments of nobility were publicly burnt. A waggon full of such antiquities have been burnt on the day before yesterday at Utrecht. A similar procession has taken place at Amsterdam, when the magistracy ordered a strong corps of light cavalry to the town, in order to prevent all disturbance.

PARIS,
NATIONAL CONVENTION.
June 14.

Vernier rose and said—"No one among you can be ignorant that greedy speculators already prepare to purchase cattle, to keep them in their possession until the time when they can gain by them 6x for 5. Your committee of public Safety has charged me to propose to you two decrees, which will put a stop to this mischief. They are absolutely necessary; since, if were to leave these monopolizers a longer time for their traffic, it would be impossible for us to supply our armies, now grown victorious in all quarters, and the great communes, more especially Paris, which consumes monthly, at the cost of the government, more than thirty seven millions of livres. Besides your committee look upon it to be a deep laid scheme of our enemies, who are in league with some of the Royalists who have crept in amongst our citizens notwithstanding all our vigilance; but we expect speedily to detect them and frustrate their nefarious proceedings.—The first of these decrees forbids to all others, except butchers, cultivators, and army commissaries, the purchase of cattle. I will now read it to you."—The plan was ordered to be printed, and the discussion adjourned for three days.

"The second plan," continued Vernier, "is not less urgent, and may be decreed immediately. The Convention annuls all the purchases and sales which may have been made of the objects of the approaching harvest. In case these purchases and sales have been actually made, the objects shall be confiscated, partly for the reward of the informer, partly for the commune, and partly for the republic. It forbids every citizen to purchase or sell corn on the ground, on penalty of confiscation."—This plan was adopted.

A member read a plan of the decree tending to prolong for eight months the period granted to fathers, mothers, uncles, aunts and cousins of emigrants for the purpose of making a general declaration of their property, moveable and immoveable.—The discussion adjourned till to-morrow.

The representatives of the people in the departments of the North, and the Pas de Calais, to the National Convention.

Arras, Messidore, June 19.

"There happened yesterday evening in the commune of Arras, an event, of very little consequence, which exaggerated by the hireling journalists, might appear to you as very serious, if we did not hasten to describe to you the real state of the circumstances. The municipality of Arras, being of opinion, that they ought to raise the price of bread to the indigent and working people from 5 to 6 sous a pound, proclaimed yesterday the determination to which they had come on that subject. Immediately a report was circulated, that this rise of bread was a measure of the representatives of the people, and an assemblage of between two and three thousand women, armed with all manner of weapons, having been formed, proceeded to our residence, shouting Bread! Bread! at five sous! A single sentinel stopped the crowd at our gate, and permitted only a few women, unarmed, to enter, to present to us their petition. We declared, that we would attend to no petition till the crowd was dispersed. For from dispersing, this answer had only the effect to increase it; but in a short time a platoon of the regiment of cavalry came up, and it vanished instantly disappeared. The remainder of the night passed in the utmost tranquillity; and that tranquillity still continues. Thus terminated a scene which had no doubt been contrived by the Royalists, who are more insolent in this place than in any other commune of the departments entrusted to our superintendance; but who can in no shape, be the objects of serious inquietude."—Referred to the committee of of general surety.

The following petition from the female citizen Dubancon, a pupil of Voltaire, was read:

"Citizens Legislators, I appeal to your justice. An unhappy woman has a claim on your humanity; and the blood of the immortal Dubancon ought to speak to the heart of every Frenchman. To forget this, legislators, would be a crime. Restore to me my family, which, under the reign of the tyrant Robelpierre, was robbed of all its property. My father an emigrant! No—I swear by the blood of the Dubancons; he could never have had such a thought; he only fled from the hand of the murderer, who first robbed him of his all, and then sought to rob him of his life: he is too good a father, too good a husband to reduce his friends to misery. Yes, Legislators, his children were his friends. With these qualities he is worthy to be a republican, and to return to his country, whence he was banished during the reign of terror. Their beloved daughter demands of you her father and her mother."—Decreed that they return to their country.

PARIS, June 18.

There is a report now in circulation, and which seems to be very much credited, that the siege of Genoa has been raised, and that the Austrians have been almost entirely defeated.—Owing to these unexpected disasters, proposals for peace have been made on the part of Austria, and it is thought will be accepted by our government.

LONDON, June 21.

The reports of a speedy peace, whether true or false, had the effect to raise the stocks yesterday; they were at one time as high as 69, but left off rather worse.—This morning, however, they opened at 68 and an half, and were on the rise at twelve o'clock.—The report of peace still gains ground.—Star.

Yesterday a King's messenger arrived with dispatches from the hostile army on the Rhine. The Hamburgh and Italian mails due on Wednesday also arrived. They bring but little news of importance, if we except the general expectation held out, in almost all the foreign Journals, of an immediate pacification among the belligerent powers.

May 7, at 1 P. M. a fchooner in fight with a main and foretop-fail fet ftanding for us. Soon after obferved Swedifh colours; but fuppofed her a French privateer. She gained upon us faft; we therefore cleared fhip for action. At 2 hauled up our courfes and fired a fix pound fhot a head of her; upon which he brought to. Sent the fecond mate on board of her, with orders to behave very civil, and if French, to fend the captain on board with his papers. The boat foon returned, with Mons. Pierre, who faid the fchooner was called Marianne of St. Bartholomews, that he was maiter and owner himfelf—had before been taken into Nevis and condemned—that he had bought her in, and went to St. Bartholomews, from whence he was bound to Guadaloupe with 500bbls. of flour, fome beef, and dry goods, all his own. He was fo agitated that what was neceffary to calm his apprehenfion of a "fraternal fqueeze." Though I fufpected her to be French (the crew and paffengers fpeaking that language only) I could not conffiently with my inftructions make a prize of her, as fhe was not equipped for war. Poor Mons. NATIONAL CONVENTION.

June 15.

A Deputation of the fection le Pelletier prefented itfelf at the bar.

The Speaker—"It belongs to the defenders of the republic and the National Convention, to inspire to you their new alarms. Woe betide the enemies of the Republic, under whatever mafk they may be hid! The whole nation will be roufed and will crufh them. We obferve with pain, that the monfters, who have fo long defolated fociety, are reftored to that fociety. An attempt is made to terrify you unceaffingly with a phantom of royalifm, to make you forget terrorifm, and the monfters who have affaffinated one third of France!—What! it is right to perfecute the Brigands, who killed in the name of Jefus! but is this a reafon for difarming and fetting loofe in fociety thofe who have maffacred in the name of Robefpierre? But, it will be faid, thofe you want to perfecute are the beft patriots. The aflaffins of the 2d of September never were patriots. The Convention itfelf invited the fections to apprehend them; and now that we have executed your orders, we who are your defenders, we are converted into enemies of the republic! Reprefentatives, we invite you to order the re imprifonment of the terrorifts pointed out by whole fections, and who have been liberated by two or three reprefentatives whofe feelings have been taken by furprife."

Deuleix.—"The united committees of legiflation and general fecurity, are about to prefent to you a report on this head. I demand that the above petition may be referred to thofe committees and printed."—Decreed.

Thibault, in the name of the united committees of public fafety and finance.—"The government will unremittingly profecute the jobbers, the men who have converted into licentioufnefs the freedom of commerce, and who to-day fell 10 per cent. dearer than yefterday, the fame articles taken from the fame magazines. The committees think that we ought to fecure by the produce of the contributions what is neceffary to meet the expences. The eftimate of the national domains will be foon univerfally known. We fhall alfo publifh the balance account of the nation; and the dilapidators of the public property will all of them be difcofed. Your committees have deliberated on the motions you have referred to them, and which tend to haften the taking out of circulation a conffiderable quantity of counterfeit paper. I am charged to exprefs to you the refult of their deliberations."

The reporter now prefented two plans of a decree, the adjournment of which the Convention ordered. The purport of one of thefe was to be a fixed fum of a million of livres, at three per cent. intereft; the other to open a national tontine, the billets of 1000, 500, and 200 livres each.

A member, in the name of the united committees of general fecurity and legiflation.—"An individual, of the name of Langlade, is convicted of having conffpired againft the ftate; of having worn the white cockade; of having called himfelf adjutant general of the 2d divifion of the royal army; of having fpoken of the proclamation of a king at Paris; of having faid that he was charged to proclaim this king in the department of Calvados; and having endeavoured to Chouannife the diftricts of Caen, Lifieux, and Pont l'Eveque. We therefore propofe that this conffpirator and his accomplices fhall be carried to Calvados, there to be tried according to the forms eftablifhed by law in fuch cafes; and that thofe who hold the papers relative to the aforefaid conffpiracy, fhall fend them thither without delay."—Decreed.

Aubert Dubayet, commander in chief of the army of the coafts of Cherbourg, to the committee of Public Safety.

June 12.

"I have gone through the diftricts again beginning to be infected by the Chouans, more efpecially thofe of Chateau-Gonthier, Laferte, and Laval, with the olive branch in one hand for the inhabitants of the country, and the bayonet in the other, to reply to thofe who feek to lead them aftray. The communications are re-eftablifhed between Alencon, Mans, Ardeche, and Angers. The new Brigands are appalled; and we are very bufy in difarming thofe who have chouanifed. Several affemblages of the rebels have been diffperfed; and fix traitors were left in the field of battle after one of the actions. Three of the chiefs have been made prifoners. They begin to plunder and affaffinate; but we fhall foon exterminate them.

"My addrefs to the inhabitants is this—The Chouans wifh to give you a maffer, I, in the name of the French republic, wifh to beftow on you liberty and happinefs. "DUBAYET."

PARIS, June 17.

The Chouans are again getting up in great force, and the moft vigorous fteps are taking by government to immediately fuppreis them. Some days fince, one of their chiefs was killed near his chateau, in trying to effect his efcape from a party of our cavalry, who were in purfuit of him and other chiefs.—His body was brought into the city of Lamballe. There were found in his poffeffion notes relative to the different affemblages, and cantonments of Chouans, a correfpondence with the Englifh, and a lift of the moft diftinguifhed patriots in the republic.

A letter from Toulon ftates, that an engagement is every day expected to take place between our fleet and the Englifh. The city enjoys the greateft tranquillity. The military in and about Paris keep the ftricteft watch day and night.

We have accounts from St. Malo, dated June 12, of a defeat of the Chouans, in which they have loft more than 200 men. In their camps in which they were furprifed, were found all their correfpondence, (which leads to a full difcovery of all their haunts) baggage, and provifions. Another camp has been taken in the commune of Bihy, between Vannes and Jofielin.

The following letter, dated Rennes, June 14, has been tranfmitted to a National Repreſentative:

"The new movements of the Chouans, although fo hidden and unexpected, were never lefs to be dreaded than at prefent. From the 5th to the 18th Prairial, they have received fome ftrong leffons; and indeed it appears to me that a revolution is about to be accomplifhed in the country, with the aid of our moving columns. The inhabitants of the diftricts of St. Brieux, Lamballe, and others, abfolutely refufe to feed the Chouans: if we fucceed in making property refpected, and no other unforefeen obftacles arife, the people will rife up againft the infurgents who oppreis them."

From the London Morning Chronicle.

A fhort Eſſay on the origin of the Yellow Fever, which has been ſo fatal in many parts of the United States of America.

MANY erroneous opinions have been circulated in Europe relative to the Yellow Fever in America, I think it neceffary that the fituation of a country with which we have fo many connections, fhould be well underftood; and I take the liberty, therefore, to requeft you will publifh a few obfervations which I have been able to collect from a long refidence in the United States, particularly at Philadelphia, while the fever raged there in 1793, and from authentic information I have fince received.

The yellow fever, like the plague, is certainly a diforder originating in the warm climates of Afia or Africa, from whence both of them may be clearly traced; the plague itfelf was firft introduced into Europe in fome degree by the armies returning from the Cruſades, but chiefly by commerce; for many ages it ravaged moft of the European cities, particularly the commercial ones: in London it prevailed fourteen different times with dreadful violence, between the reigns of Edward III. (when it was firft introduced) and Geo. I. when the quarantine laws were paffed; thefe inftitutions, which feem to have been generally adopted about the laft period have ever fince preferved Europe from the plague, and confined it to the countries of the Eaft, where the warmth of climate, and manners of the people, ftill keep it conftantly alive.

In a fimilar manner the yellow fever was introduced into the Weft Indies, by the African fhips, and has now become general to the iflands, whofe warm climate keeps it in continual exiftence; in time of peace the eafe of removing from it, renders it little dreaded, prevents its extenfion; but during a war, when the inhabitants are confined in befieged towns, and fleets and armies maintained in fituations fo favourable to difeafe as fhips, camps, barracks and hofpitals, it rages with uncontroulable violence.

Europe is preferved from it by the length of the voyage from the Weft Indies, and perhaps by the fleet arriving generally in feafons fufficiently cold or damp to check it; but the immenfe commerce of the United States, with the fhortnefs of the voyage, which is little more than a fortnight, renders the Weft Indies to them the fame fource of contagion that the Levant is to Europe. During the preſent war, though the fever has ravaged moft of the iflands it has been more feverely felt in the French, particularly Guadaloupe and St. Domingo, which have been the principal fcenes of military operations. With thefe iflands the American commerce has been chiefly conducted to a degree far beyond all former times; as it conffted very much in carrying provifions, it has been profecuted to ports and fleet in fuch fituations, as to render it impoffible to efcape contagion; and the veffels in their return being generally crowded with paffengers, with baggage and every fpecies of goods, have conftantly conveyed it home; when it has arrived during the winter, or moderate feafons, it has doubtlefs been deftroyed; but during the heat of fummer, it has produced the ravages we have heard of.

Although advantage has been taken of every circumftance which could admit of doubt and difficulty that might be fuppofed to occur, it traces the origin of the fever in fome inftances, from the crews of veffels being difperfed, or goods fold to a variety of different perfons, and removed to places diftant from the fpot where they were firft landed, fo that the contagion might appear in many places at once, yet there is not only the moft poſitive proofs of the introduction of it in this manner, in every inftance where it has attacked the United States, but the ftrongeft collateral evidence, arifing from the identity of the diforder, and from a variety of other facts.

The idea of its originating in the United States, was firft mentioned by a phyſician of Philadelphia, in 1793, who is remarkable for the eccentricity and enthufiafm of his fyſtems, which were profecuted almoft to a degree of infanity, contrary to the general opinion of the faculty, and the good fenfe of the citizens at large: to thefe fyſtems every fact was perverted or overlooked. Unfortunately too, the rivalfhip and jealoufy of the other towns of the continent, of a city which was eminently leading in its commerce and population, at firft led them to attribute the fever to caufes exiſting there, until they were themſelves attacked by it, & found from whence it originated; thus the opinion has been circulated to an extent fcarcely to be reached by the numerous facts which difapprove it.

In examining the origin of the Yellow Fever, it is neceffary ſtrictly to difcriminate it from difeafes of an inferior tribe, fuch as intermittent, bilious and putrid fevers, and others of the like kind. Thefe undoubtedly originate from caufes immediately depending on feafon, or local fituation; and the cities of the United States are fubject to them in the fame manner, though not in a greater degree than thofe of Europe; but the yellow fever, which is unqueſtionably of the fame tribe as the plague is not only traced like that diforder, as the fmall pox by a regular proceſs of contagion, but it is fo different, and fo far more extenſive in its effects, that whenever it has appeared, it is marked with characters which prove its entire diſtinction from the leſſer tribe of local diſeaſes.

Though the yellow fever is a diſorder of the fame claſs as the plague, it is far inferior in malignity: no time or art has materially leſſened the deſtruction of the plague, even in thoſe countries where it conſtantly exiſts; while the yellow fever is ſo much reduced in the Weſt Indies to the power of medicine, a not to be dreaded by the natives more than other disorders, and is chiefly fatal to strangers. Its extensive effects in North America might perhaps be adduced as one proof of its novelty and origin from a foreign cause; but, even in its worst appearance, the proportion of individuals who recover is considerable; and, in 1703 it was known to attack whole families, without the loss of a single person.

No regulations in Europe proved effectual to relieve its cities from the plague, until quarantines were generally adopted, and many ages passed before they were established with such rigour as to render them effectual: the dreadful prevalence of the disease at Marseilles, and other towns, in the beginning of the present century, seems at last to have occasioned the present laws, which are perhaps the most severe, and best executed of any that exist; the partial regulations of the kind in the United States, have doubtless been attended with very good effects, but as yet they have never adopted with the rigour of Europe, and evasions have been too little noticed, or punished.

The cities of the United States have now existed, many of them near two centuries, and Philadelphia itself more than one; during this period, by clearing and cultivating the country, they have overcome all the natural disadvantages of new situations, and have decreased in local and autumnal disorders, insomuch that their bills of mortality prove them to be as healthy in general as the cities of Europe; but at no period since their existence have they been ravaged by disorders similar to the yellow fever, until a few years past—it is impossible therefore to suppose, that a climate which for so many years, and under more disadvantages than it now labours, could thus all at once engender diseases, of which the history of mankind does not furnish a similar instance.

In the year 1760, during the French war, the yellow fever first appeared in Philadelphia, and was traced to arise from the clothes of a young man who died of it in Jamaica, which were sent to his friends in Philadelphia; those friends were the first who died of it, & though it extended to others, its ravages were not very extensive.

It was not afterwards known in America until the year 1793, when in the month of June, a great number of vessels who were at Cape Francois, during the dreadful capture of it by the negroes, brought away from it all the wretched inhabitants that escaped: many of these vessels arrived at Philadelphia in July, full of passengers, and goods of every description, in the latter end of the same month the fever broke out in the lodging houses which accommodated the crews of those vessels, and among the shipwrights who repaired them—so minutely was this fact investigated, that the first persons who died of it were the sailors from their lodging houses, and nearly all the families of one or two ship carpenters in whole yards the vessels were refitted.

The quarantines which were immediately established, and the attention to every circumstance that could increase the health of the city, and prevent communication, probably preserved it for the ensuing four years, as it did not appear there again until 1797: in the mean time, however, other towns were attacked by it.

In 1794 it appeared at Baltimore, where it was brought by a vessel from the West Indies; it broke out, and was nearly altogether confined to a part of the town, seated on a high point of land, and on a wide river, which forms the port, distant near a mile from the city itself, to which it was scarcely communicated.

In 1795 it appeared in New York, when it was also traced to have arisen from a West India vessel.

In 1797 it again appeared in Philadelphia, and was clearly traced to a vessel from St. Domingo, as it broke out at the quay where she was unladen, and among the merchants and others who were about her.

During the last summer it has appeared, not only in Philadelphia and New York, but in many other of the commercial towns, in all of which, it is not only traced to the causes I have mentioned, but the following facts have occurred to support its foreign origin:

First. It appeared in no town which had not had some immediate connexion with the West Indies.

2dly. Since the vessels from the West Indies have been prevented reaching Philadelphia, it has broke out in all the little towns and out ports on the river Delaware, where they have been obliged to unlade their cargoes; while it has never appeared either in the country towns near them, or those near the metropolis.

3dly. It has ravaged the smaller towns to which it has been thus introduced, nearly in as great a proportion as the great cities.

4thly. It has been more felt in the towns of the middle and northern states in the most favourable situations, but who carry on greatest trade, than in those of the southern states, unquestionably less healthy climates, but with less commerce.

The history of the plague, the small pox, and disorders of the same tribe, are not only regularly traced, but the authorities agree that they never originated in the cities of Europe, and that it causes which create the smaller diseases are not adequate to produce them; but of all the reasons assigned for the yellow fever being of local origin, there is none which is general to the many places in which it has appeared in the United States, nor none which do not exist in a far greater degree in most European cities. Great population, crouded streets, filth, and want of common sewers, &c. if they existed in the greater towns, could not influence the smaller ones; and low or unhealthy situations cannot be attributed to those which are seated on bold promontaries and on the margin of the ocean: the climate of the United States, tho' hot, is not hotter than the middle or south of Europe, and it is corrected in winter by frosts far more continued and severe.

A variety of reports which have existed in Europe relative to the situation of the cities of the United States, and to their construction, are untrue, and originate either in those who were ignorant of them, or in the misrepresentation of those who wanted other reasons to support the idea of the local origin of the yellow fever, in fact, rather than that credit should be given to the plain demonstration of its being an imported disease, numerous stories have been propagated relative to their crowded construction, want of common sewers, and other causes generally assigned as the source of disease.

New York, and all the seaport towns in the northern states, are built on situations remarkably elevated, and exposed to the air of the sea. In their construction they are equal to any towns in Europe, and in no instances so thickly built: in general they are remarked for having few of the common autumnal complaints, and can boast perhaps of as high health as any towns in the world.

The city of Philadelphia is at a considerable distance from the sea; though situated on the banks of two noble rivers, it stands on a fine open plain equally elevated as London, & the country around it, on all sides but one, rises into gentle hills, like those of Middlesex and Surry: on the river below it, are some meadows, but they are equally drained and cultivated, & by no means so extensive as those on the Thames, around London: its water is in general excellent; its streets are wide, well paved, and perfectly drained: a considerable part of it is furnished with common sewers, and those parts to which they are not yet extended, have either been so long or so thickly settled, as to experience inconvenience for the want of them: its houses are in general airy, & seldom contain more than one family: and the police of the city, the moral order, and the cleanliness of its inhabitants, will yield to no one in Europe, if equalled by them.

After having seen most of the European cities, I cannot but advance them as proofs against the local origin of disorders similar to the yellow fever, leaving the cities of the North of Europe, situate in climates which might be supposed in some degree to protect them, and in general of more cleanly habits, and with a better police, I shall speak more particularly of those of the south of France and Italy, especially of Marseilles, Milan, Genoa and Leghorn. If improvements have been introduced into these they are certainly not such as have destroyed the causes usually assigned for disease, and are confined to such parts of them as are newly constructed; the narrow streets in the old parts of those towns, ugly, paved and often not paved at all, from being the general receptacle of all filth, without the attention of a police to cleanse them, the want of common sewers, the height and crowded construction of the houses, the numerous families with which they are filled, the rooms seldom cleaned, and the rooms covered with cotton and silk tapestry, in lieu of plaister, must have struck the attention of all who visited them: if, then, under such unfavourable circumstances, these towns thus situated, in one of the hottest climates, where the winters often have no frost, not only have never known either that, or any disorder of the kind to originate among them, but have been able entirely to rid themselves of the plague by their quarantines, and enjoy a high degree of health ever since they were adopted, it affords the strongest arguments against the origin of the yellow fever in the towns of North America, and in favour of their being wholly relieved from it by the establishment of similar regulations.

[To be concluded in our next.]

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, September 20.

It is mentioned in a New York paper of the 19th ultimo, under the London head, that our cruizers on the coast of France, fell in with and captured a fleet of transports from Rochfort to Brest, laden with provisions and naval stores for the combined fleets of France and Spain.

By the last accounts from France, we see that the Chouans have again risen to considerable force in that country, and are likely to become a terror to the present ruling faction.

They contain the important and ample details of the battle in Italy, the convention for an armiſtice, together with an account of a victory gained by the French in Suabia over gen. Kray. The following are the details.

BATTLE of MORENGO.

Bulletin from the army of reſerve.

Torre de Gerafola, June 25.

After the battle of Montebello, the army put itſelf in motion to paſs the Scrivia. The advanced guard commanded by gen. Gardanne, on the 13th encountered the enemy, who defended the approaches of the Bormida, and the three bridges which they had made near Alefſandria, defeated them took two pieces of cannon and 100 priſoners.

The diviſion of general Chabran arrived at the ſame time along the Po, oppoſite Valence, to prevent the enemy from paſſing that river. Thus Melas found himſelf ſurrounded between the Bormida and Po. The only retreat from Genoa which remained to him after the battle of Montebello, was intercepted. The enemy ſtill appeared to have no plan, or at leaſt a very uncertain one from its movements.

The 14th, at day break the enemy paſſed the Bormida on the bridges; reſolved to cut their way through, they debouched in force, ſurprized our advanced guard, and began with great vivacity the battle of Morengo, which finally decided the fate of Italy and the Auſtrian army. Four times during the battle we were repulſed, and as often we advanced. More than 60 pieces of cannon, on different points and at different hours, were taken and retaken on both ſides. There were more than 12 charges of cavalry, and with various ſucceſſes. It was three hours after midday; 10,000 infantry flanked our right in the grand plain of St. Julian.—They were ſupported by a line of cavalry, and a great quantity of artillery. The grenadiers of the guard were placed like a redoubt of granite in the centre of that immenſe plain. Nothing could overthrow it. Cavalry, infantry, artillery, every thing was directed againſt that battalion, but in vain. It was then realized what a handful of men of ſpirit could effect, by this obſtinate reſiſtance, the left of the enemy was checked, and our right ſupported until the arrival of gen. Monnier, who carried the village of caſtle Ceriolo at the point of the bayonet: the enemy's cavalry then made a rapid movement on our right which was already ſhaken. This movement precipitated its retreat. The enemy advanced upon our whole line, diſcharged canniſter ſhot from more than a hundred pieces of cannon. The roads were covered with fugitives, wounded and routed. The battle ſeemed loſt.—We permitted the enemy to advance within muſket ſhot of the village of St. Julian, where the diviſion of Deſaix was in order for battle, with eight pieces of light artillery in front, and two battalions in cloſe order on the wing. All the fugitives rallied behind it. Already the enemy counted the laurels which preſaged their cataſtrophe. They extended their wings too much.

The preſence of the firſt conſul reanimated the troops. "Children (ſays he to them) do you remember it is my cuſtom to ſleep on the field of battle?" amidſt ſhouts of "Live the Republic! Live the Firſt Conſul!" General Deſaix charged with quick march by the centre. In an inſtant the enemy were defeated. General Kellerman, who, with his brigade of cavalry, had the whole day covered the retreat of our left, made a charge with ſuch vigour, and ſo a-propos, that 6000 grenadiers and gunners Zach, the chief of the ſtaff, were made priſoners, and ſeveral of the enemy's generals killed. The whole army followed this movement. The right of the enemy was cut off, conſternation and terror ſpread through their ranks.

The Auſtrian cavalry advanced to the centre to cover the retreat. The chief of brigade Bellieres, at the head of the caſſes-cols, and grenadiers of the guard, made a charge with ſuch activity and courage, that he pierced the line of the enemy's cavalry, and by it completed the entire rout of the army.

We have taken 15 ſtand of colours, 40 pieces of cannon, and made from 6 to 8000 priſoners. More than 6000 of the enemy remained on the field of battle.

The 9th light horſe have merited the title of incomparable. The heavy cavalry and 8th dragoons have covered themſelves with glory.

Our loſs is alſo conſiderable. We had 600 men killed and 1500 wounded, and 900 taken priſoners. Generals Champeaux, Mainoni and Boudet are wounded. The General in chief, Berthier, had his clothes pierced like a ſive with balls. Several of his aid-de camps were diſmounted. But a loſs ſincerely felt by the army, and which will alſo be ſeverely felt by the whole republic, cheſes our hearts from joy, Deſaix was ſtruck by a ball at the commencement of the charge by his diviſion. He died of the wound. He had only time to ſay to young Lebrun, who was with him. "Go tell the Firſt Conſul that I die with regret at not having done enough to live in poſterity."

In the courſe of his life Deſaix had four horſes killed under him, and received three wounds. He had joined head quarters only three days before. He burned for the engagement, and ſaid twice or thrice to his aid-de-camps in the courſe of the evening, "it is a long time ſince I fought in Europe, the bullets no longer know us."—When the news was brought of the death of Deſaix to the Firſt Conſul, in the midſt of the moſt furious fire, the following words were all that eſcaped him:—"Why am I not permitted to weep?" His body has been conveyed to Milan, there to be embalmed.

The Firſt Conſul to the Conſul of the Republic.

Torre de Gerafola. June 16.

The day after the battle of Marengo, citizens conſuls, gen. Melas requeſted leave from the advanced poſts to ſend to me gen. Skal. In the courſe of the day the Convention, of which you will find a copy ſubjoined, was agreed upon. It was ſigned in the night by gen. Berthier and gen. Melas. I hope the French people will be content with their army.

TRIBUNATE.

PARIS, June 21.

The ſcrutiny for the appointment of ſecretaries was interrupted by a meſſage from the conſuls, announcing the great victory gained in Italy, and the conſequent armiſtice. The meſſage was received with loud cries of vive la republique!

Duchefne paid a warm tribute to the genius of Buonaparte and the ſublimity and wiſdom of his plans.

Chazel.—"The enemy's army almoſt deſtroyed.—Genoa, Turin reſtored—all Italy reſtored—an armiſtice ſigned.—Such are the things which by a ſingle blow the brave men who croſſed the Alps have done.—The wiſh of the Tribunate is accompliſhing. The firſt conſul will return a conqueror and a pacificator. Happy anniverſary of the 14th of July 1789. The laurel and the olive ſhall cover the new altar of the country."

Guree.—"Peace, rejected inhumanly by our enemies, will return after victories.

Each member paid a warm tribute to Deſaix.

A commiſſion of five members was appointed to make a report upon the great events.—

3 Meſſidor.—June 23.

Dounou, in the name of the commiſſion of five, preſented a report, and moved.

1. That there be given to the armies of the republic ſolemn teſtimonies of gratitude.

2. That the memory of the immortal Deſaix be honoured in the fete of the 14th July.

A meſſage was ordered to be ſent to the conſuls.

In this meſſage the tribunate ſay, "that the firſt conſul may return a conqueror and a pacificator; ſuch was laſt Ventoſe the wiſh, or rather the preſage of the tribunate. Already has victory prepared and begun peace. Peace is the want of all people; it is the trueſt intereſt of governments: the tribunate know thjat it is the object of the labors of the French government. May the armiſtice of Marengo be the prelude to the repoſe and happineſs of nations!"

3. The imperial army ſhall in like manner hold Tolcana and Ancona.

MELAS.

June 22.

Never ſince did joy manifeſt itſelf in Paris with more tranſport and a character of patriotiſm more affecting than on the 21ſt of June. Between the arrival of couriers and the firſt firing of cannon at the palace of the conſuls, there was not ſufficient interval to circulate among the people the important news of the victory of Marengo. It was then generally ſuppoſed that the diſcharge of artillery announced the return of the firſt conſul, and the eagerneſs with which people crowded to the Thuilleries is a homage rendered to Buonaparte, which I remember with the more pleaſure, as it was one uncontrolled with flattery, but repoſing entirely on ſentiment. It was ſoon known that important victories were the ſubject. They were informed theſe victories had decided the fate of Italy.—It was ſoon known that Genoa was evacuated, and to do juſtice to French generoſity, the deliverance of that beloved city obtained the firſt tributes of public joy. Whatever queſtions were aſked, "Genoa is free," were the firſt words that eſcaped every mouth.—Meantime, during the prolonged diſcharge of artillery, there was poſted up in all the ſtreets an extract from a bulletin from the army of reſerve; and generals at the head of numerous detachments of cavalry and infantry, proclaiming the triumphs of the republican heroes in all the public places. All was avidity to hear, curioſity to learn, perſeverance in interrogation, and ſhouts a thouſand times repeated of, Live the Republic! Live our brave defenders! Live Buonaparte! Such were the exclamations, ſuch the emotion, ſuch the ſpectacle preſented by every groupe in the courſe of the day!

At night, the palaces, the houſes of the miniſters, and the greater part of thoſe of the citizens were illuminated. Why has fate ordered it that in the midſt of the moſt juſt and unbounded joy, the melancholy death of the brave general Deſaix ſhould intervene to demand from the national gratitude the honorable tribute of its tears? Alas! this wildneſs of joy which public gratitude demands, is the beſt panegyric on the memory of a great man. It is glorious for Deſaix, in his untimely end, to have known the atchievements of Morengo, to have forced an entire great nation to devote whole hours to the exploits of a ſingle man.

June 30.

Poſtſcript, ten o'clock at night.

Important news have been received this evening from the army of the Rhine. The Auſtrians have evacuated all the environs of Ulm—they have even left but a ſmall garriſon in the town. We are maſters of the poſitions that command it. We have taken Neuding.

RENNES, June 24.

A letter from Joſſelin gives us the following news, extracted from a letter from Belle-Iſle, June 21.

"The Engliſh who blockaded Belle-Iſle have effected a diſembarkation of 6000 men, whom the garriſon ſuffered to land; 600 only have been able to re-embark; the others have either been killed or made priſoners. An Engliſh frigate has been ſunk by the artillery of the forts."

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 6.

We have at laſt received the details of the unfortunate affair of the Grand Vizier. The inſtructions of vice admiral Keith, altho' they thwarted the execution of the convention did not entirely put a ſtop to further negociation. The commander in chief of the Turks and gen. Kleber appeared to agree, and in the expectation that the court of London would adopt its firſt determination, they had already converted ſome proviſional meaſures, but a difficulty occurred which put a ſtop to their advancement. The Grand Vizier, already maſter of Julahs, Cariehs, Belbeis and Damietta, part of the Delta and of High Egypt, which had been evacuated in conſequence of the convention, demanded alſo the poſſeſſion of the fort of Cairo. Gen. Kleber, unwilling to ſurrender the only fortified place he held beſides Alexandria, determined on renewing hoſtilities; he ſignified his intention to the Grand Vizier, and to his army by the following letter:

H. Q. Cairo, 27 Fentoſe, March 17.

KLEBER, commander in chief, to the army.

Soldiers,

Here follows the letter directed to me by the commander in chief of the Britiſh fleet in the Mediterranean:

"On board his Majeſty's ſhip Queen Charlotte, January 8, 1800.

SIR,

I give you notice that I have received his Majeſty's poſitive orders not to conſent to any capitulation with the army you command in Egypt and Syria, unleſs they lay down their arms and ſurrender priſoners of war, and abandon all their ſhipping and warlike ſtores in the city of Alexandria to the allied powers. That in caſe of their capitulation, I ſhall not permit any troops to return to France, previous to their being exchanged. I alſo think it equally neceſſary to inform you that all veſſels having French troops on board and ſailing from this country with paſſports ſigned by others than thoſe who have the right to grant them, ſhall be obliged by the officers of the ſhips under my command, to remain at Alexandria. Finally, that the veſſels which ſhall be met with returning to Europe with paſſports granted in conſequence of a particular capitulation with one of the allied powers, ſhall be detained as priſes, and all on board conſidered as priſoners of war. Signed KEITH.

Soldiers! we ſhall anſwer ſuch inſolence by victories—prepare for battle!

Signed KLEBER.

The general of diviſion, chief of the ſtaff, Signed DAMAS.

On the 20th of March at day break, the Republican troops commenced a cannonade againſt the advanced poſts of the Turks at Matarieh (two leagues from Cairo) at 8 o'clock, the Grand Vizier appeared with his army, and occupied the ground between the villages of El Hanes and Mrtuerla.—The Republican army 15,000 men ſtrong, including the cavalry and dromedaries, was poſted in two lines extending within half a league of Boulac, having its right covered by a wood of Date Trees. The Janiſſaries oppoſed to the French left wing, advanced with conſiderable bravery, but being ſoon out of ammunition and badly ſupported by their artillery, they were forced to fall back. Towards noon the whole republican line advanced with a terrible fire of artillery and ſmall arms—this rough attack ſpread confuſion and diſorder among the Turks, and 40,000 men fled in every direction. The Grand Vizier not having it in his power to ſtop them, he retired to his camp, but was ſoon obliged to abandon it, the French having advanced in two oblique lines to cut off his retreat. The route became general, 19 pieces of cannon and a part of the camp fell into the hands of the conquerors, whoſe loſs was very trivial. That of the Turks amounts to 8000 killed or wounded, beſides thoſe who periſhed in the deſert. At the commencement of the action, Nazouf Pacha and Murad Bey paſſed by the rear of the Republicans with a few thouſand men, and penetrated by Boulac to Cairo, where they maſſacred ſome Frenchmen and the Greciens & Copts. They would not have maintained themſelves in that place, if Kleber, willing to ſave it, had not been ſatisfied with ſurrounding it. We have reaſon to believe that new negociations will revive the convention, as we are aſſured England has ratified it.

LONDON, June 25.

High Treaſon.

James Hatfield was brought up by a writ of Habeas Corpus, under the cuſtody of Mr. Kirby, keeper of his Majeſty's gaol of Newgate, to plead to an indictment againſt him by the grand jury, for high treaſon.

The indictment charged, that he the ſaid James Hatfield, being a perſon of a malicious, evil diſpoſed, and traitorous diſpoſition, did on the evening of the 15th of May laſt, arm himſelf with a piſtol loaded with a certain quantity of gunpowder, with an intent to aſſaſſinate and put to death our Sovereign Lord and King; and did go to a certain Theatre called Drury-Lane, his Majeſty being preſent at the ſaid theatre, and did then and there ſhoot off and diſcharge the ſaid piſtol, loaded with gunpowder, leaden ſhots or bullets, with a malicious and traitorous intent to ſhoot, aſſaſſinate and kill the King.

To this indictment the priſoner pleaded—"Not Guilty."

Lord Kenyon aſked the priſoner if he had any counſel.

Hadfield preſented a petition ſtating his poverty, and praying the court to allow him counſel. He named Mr. Erſkine and Mr. Serjeant Beſt, if they would accept it.

Lord Kenyon ſaid to Mr. Erſkine, that he took it for granted he would have no objection.

Mr. Erſkine ſaid that he had always underſtood it to be the practice of the bar, that when a priſoner aſked for counſel, the court had a right to give him the professional assistance of any gentleman who practiced in the court in which he was arraigned; and that he therefore concurred with his lordship, that it was his duty to accept the trust—and "I define," said Mr. Erskine, "for myself to add, that I cannot give a stronger test of my loyalty and attachment to the Sovereignty of the Throne than my readiness to give to ... its subjects the fullest benefit of the law."

The court then appointed Thursday the 26th inst. for the trial.

July 1.

Trial of Hadfield.

After the examination of a number of witnesses, Lord Kenyon asked Mr. Erskine if he had many more: Mr. Erskine said about ten or a dozen. Lord Kenyon then said, that in his opinion the evidence that had been produced, went clearly to prove, that the prisoner was certainly in a deranged state.—If the Attorney General, and the counsel for the prosecution were of that opinion, it would be needless to go any further.

The Attorney General said, that he did not wish to press the matter; he saw it in the light that his Lordship did, and did not for a moment conceive that a false colouring had been given to the case by the evidence for the prisoner.

Lord Kenyon then told the jury, they must acquit the prisoner, as his insanity was proved—but he must not be discharged; it was absolutely necessary as well for his own sake, as for the sake of the community, that he should not be let loose on the public.

The jury immediately returned a verdict of acquittal on the plea of insanity.—The prisoner was then remanded, under the care of Mr. Kirby, to Newgate.

A letter from Sir Edward Pellew to Lord St. Vincent, dated on board the Impetueux, at Quiberon, June 7.

My lord—I have the honor to inform your lordship of my arrival at this anchorage with the ships under my orders on the 2d instant, and in my way down collected the Thames. On the 3d I was joined by the Amethyst, Anson, and Winchester, troop ship. On the 4th, the Thames, Cynthia, and a small force, attacked the S. W. end of Quiberon, silenced the forts, which were afterwards destroyed by a party of troops landed under major Ramsay's several vessels were brought off and some scuttled. The only loss two killed and one wounded on board the Cynthia.—On the 5th the Ramillies joined with the Diadem, Inconstant and Viper cutter, and on the 6th, before day, we succeeded in an attempt upon the Morbihan, from whence were taken 2 brigs, 2 sloops, 2 gun-vessels, and about 100 prisoners: a corvette brig L'Insolente, of 18 guns, was burned, with several other small craft, the guns all destroyed, and the magazines blown up.

Three hundred of the Queen's regiment were employed upon this service, and the gun launches and naval force were under the direction of lieut. John Pinfold, of this ship, who boarded the corvette with much bravery, and performed the service with much judgment and officer like conduct: the loss was only one seaman killed in his boat, and some slight hurts.

A lieut. of the Thames and some few men in different ships have been wounded since there; but I am happy to say all the coasting trade between the different ports has been most completely stopped, with the provisions and wine for the Brest fleet.

Captain Martin to Admiral Warren.

Filgard, off Penmarks, June 11.

SIR,

In pursuance of the directions you gave me yesterday evening, two boats from each ship named in the margin, assembled on board the Filgard, in order to attack the convoy lying at St. Cadiz, and at 11 o'clock, being as near shore as the darkness of the night would permit (and the mode of attack previously determined) they proceeded under the command of the following officers,—lieut. Burke, Renown; lieuts. Dean & Gerrard, Filgard; lieut. Stamp, Defence; and lieut. Price, Unicorn; but the wind being fresh from the S. E. prevented her reaching the above anchorage till after day light, when in opposition to a heavy battery, three armed vessels and a constant fire of musquetry from the shore, they took the three armed vessels and eight others, laden with supplies for the fleet at Brest; the rest, amounting to 20 sail, ran upon the rocks, where many of them will certainly be lost. I have the pleasure to assure you, that the officers and men employed on this service, shewed a degree of zeal and intrepidity that can only be equalled by the cool, steady conduct, which I had the satisfaction to observe in them, when passing through a very intricate navigation, under a constant discharge of cannon from the shore. Lieuts. Burke and Dean speak highly in favour of Mr. Jane, acting lieut. of the Renown, Mr. Fleming, master of the Filgard, and lieut. Kellegriveff of the Russian service (a volunteer) and I am glad they have had the opportunity of recommending themselves to your notice. The enemy have lost several officers and men; and I am sorry to annex the names of several wounded in our boats.

F. B. MARTIN.

NEW YORK, August 18.

A gentleman passenger in the brig Amazon, which arrived here yesterday from St. Sebastians, has favoured us (Daily Advertiser) with a file of Paris papers up to the 1st of July.—Four days before this gentleman left St. Sebastians, he received two letters from Bourdeaux, dated the 1st of July, mentioning the receipt of several letters from Paris, to the following purport:

"That a suspension of the negociation between our commissioners, and those of France, had actually taken place—in consequence of the French refusing to indemnify us for the vessels captured, unless we would agree to renew the treaty of 1778, or make one similar to it."

"A letter from an officer on board the Insurgente, at sea, but without date, to a gentleman in Baltimore, says, "the frigate Constitution has taken a French ship of force, and re-captured an American brig. The Baltimore sloop of war has captured and sent for Norfolk (Vir.) a French ship of 20 guns."

"On the 15th ult. Buonaparte, consul of France, entered the 32d year of his age—he is married, but has no issue. He has three brothers—Lucien, French minister of the interior—Joseph, one of the commissioners for treating with the United States; and Louis, who commands a regiment in La Vendee. He has also three sisters, one of whom is married to general Murat."

"On the 4th ult. the house of Mr. Martin Miller, of Charleston, (S. C.) and fifteen other buildings, principally wooden ones, were consumed by fire, which commenced in the cellar of Mr. Miller, from the flame of a candle being accidentally communicated to a puncheon of rum, and from that to a keg of gun powder, both of which blew up. Mr. and Mrs. Miller were so much burned, that they died shortly after."

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, October 4.

We hope our readers will be so kind as to excuse us for not publishing the Gazette last week, as it was merely owing to an unforeseen accident which happened to our press.

A Paris article says, that 8000 persons perished at Genoa for want of food.

It was rumoured in London on the 30th of June, that a messenger had arrived there from Cuxhaven, charged by Buonaparte to make a renewal of overtures to the Court of Great Britain for peace. The report gained credit with the weak, but had no effect on the price of Stocks. It melted the day following into thin air.

The English and Batavian governments had been occupied for six weeks in discussing some commercial arrangements which were proposed by the latter, and in which they are mutually interested.

The British ministry had not on the 1st of July received information of the late decisive victories obtained by the French in Italy. They are said to have another expedition to Holland in agitation.

Peace was said to be the general wish of the English nation.

The disaffection excited amongst the people of Egypt previous to the renewal of the war in that country, towards the Ottoman government, by the enormities committed by its troops, had extended to the chiefs, from an account that the Porte had appointed 5 Pachas to govern Egypt, instead of the Beys, who encouraged by the defeat and dispersion of the Turkish army, are said, together with the Mamelukes & Arabs, to have joined their fortune with the French. This intelligence, which is fully credited at Constantinople, has excited the most lively distress amongst the well disposed part of the people; whilst the rabble talk, by joining the tribes of free-booters, who ravage to the gates of the city, of partaking of general plunder.

LONDON, JULY 16.

CONVENTION,

Between his majesty and the emperor of the Romans.

SIGNED AT

VIENNA, June 20.

His majesty the emperor of the Romans, king of Hungary and Bohemia, and his majesty the king of Great Britain, have judged that it was conformable to the intereſt of their Crowns, and to the good of the common cauſe, to concert with each other on the beſt manner of giving effect to the union of their efforts againſt the common enemy in the preſent campaign. In conſequence of which the baron de Thugut, grand croſs of the order of St. Stephen his imperial majeſty's miniſter of conferences, and counſellor general and miniſter plenipotentiary in his provinces of Italy, Iſtria, and Dalmatia, &c. and the right hon. Gilbert Mord Minto, peer of Great-Britain, one of his majeſty's moſt honourable council and his envoy extraordinary and miniſter plenipotentiary to the court of Vienna, beſides furniſhed on the part of their aforeſaid imperial and Britannic majeſties with the powers requiſite for diſcuſſing and arranging the important object; the ſaid plenipotentiaries, after having reſpectively exchanged their full powers, have agreed upon the following articles:—

ARTICLE I.

In order to relieve the preſſing neceſſities of the finances of his imperial majeſty under the enormous expences already incurred during the preſent campaign, his Britannic majeſty ſhall advance to his above-mentioned imperial majeſty by way of loan, the ſum of 12,000,000 ſterling. This ſum ſhall be divided into three parts, and paid at three different periods preciſely in ſpecie: ſo that the firſt third of 1666. 13s. 4d. ſhall be paid in the firſt days of the month of July, the ſecond third of the like ſum, in the firſt days of September; and the remaining third in the firſt days of the month of Dec.

ARTICLE II.

During the whole continuance of the war, and during the ſix months which ſhall follow the concluſion of a peace between Auſtria and France, his imperial majeſty ſhall not be bound to pay any intereſt upon the ſum of two millions advanced as ſtipulated in the preceding article. Great Britain conſenting to take this charge upon her own account until the period above-mentioned: but on the expiration of the ſaid ſix months after the concluſion of peace his imperial majeſty ſhall pay for the future to the Britiſh government, or to the individuals who ſhall be pointed out by the Britiſh government, an annual rent or annuity reſts, and making altogether the amount of the intereſts of the two millions advanced, which intereſt ſhall be calculated at the ſame rate as the intereſts of the loan made on account of the Britiſh government in the preſent year. His imperial majeſty ſhall moreover pay annually to the Britiſh government the ſum of 120,000 ſterling at two periods, that is to ſay, 60,000 every ſix months which ſum ſhall be employed in the ſucceſſive purchaſe and redemption of the principal of the two millions, according to the method adopted by the Britiſh government for its own loans.

ARTICLE III.

Their imperial and Britannic majeſties mutually promiſe each other to carry on the war againſt the French republic, during the preſent campaign, with all poſſible vigour, and to employ in it all their reſpective means by land and ſea, concerting together as occaſion may require, on the moſt advantageous manner of reciprocally employing their forces by land and ſea to the ſupport of their operations againſt the common enemy. His imperial majeſty ſhall be careful to complete his armies of Germany and of Italy in proportion to the loſſes which they have ſuſtained, in order always, as far as poſſible, to act againſt the common enemy with the ſame number of effective men, conformably to the ſtatements which his imperial majeſty cauſed to be confidentially communicated to the Britiſh government on the opening of the campaign.

ARTICLE IV.

The Bavarian troops, thoſe of Wertemberg, and the Heſſian regiments in the pay of Great-Britain, ſhall be at the diſpoſition of his imperial majeſty, to form a part of his army in Germany, and to be employed there in operations againſt the enemy, in conformity to the conventions and capitulations concluded on this ſubject by the king of Great-Britain. His Britannic majeſty ſhall take the neceſſary meaſures of the further reinforcement of the army of his imperial majeſty in Germany by as great a number as poſſible of German and Swiſs troops.

ARTICLE V.

Their imperial and Britannic majeſties engage during the whole continuation of the preſent convention not make a ſeparate peace with the French republic without the previous and expreſs conſent of each other. They engage likewiſe not to treat with the enemy, nor to receive from him any overtures either for a private peace or for a general pacification, without making mutually communications of them with openneſs and acting in every reſpect in perfect concert.

ARTICLE VI.

The duration of the preſent convention is fixed for the term of one year to be computed from the firſt of March 1800, until the end of February, 1801. From the month of December, immediately after the acquittal of the laſt payment of the ſtipulated advances the two high contracting parties ſhall enter into deliberation and confidential explanation upon the determinations that they may think neceſſary to adopt for the future, according to circumſtances and their mutual convenience.

ARTICLE VII.

The preſent convention ſhall be ratified in due form by their imperial and Britannic majeſties, and the reſpective ratifications ſhall be exchanged at Vienna, in the ſpace of ſix weeks, or ſooner if poſſible.

In witneſs whereof, we, the undernamed, furniſhed with the full powers of their imperial and Britannic majeſties, have in their names ſigned the preſent convention, and have affixed hereunto the ſeal of our arms.—

Done at Vienna, the 20th June, in the year 1800.

FROM ITALY

There is particular news. Maſſena is organizing the ſeveral French armies in that country which are ſaid to conſiſt of no leſs than 160,000 men. Prince Charles, it is ſaid, will reſume the command of the army of the Danube; and it is confirmed, that 30,000 battalions of reſerve, with 10,000 Hungarian horſe would immediately move to its relief. The corps of Conde will alſo be united to this body. The duke d'Angouleme took the command of the cavalry of Berrion the 25th of May.—On the 13th ult. the Condean army was at Saltzburg.

From the royal meſſage delivered to parliament on Tueſday night, and the convention ſigned at Vienna on the 20th June, (a correct copy of which we lay before our readers) we may receive aſſurance that notwithſtanding the late reverſe experienced by the Auſtrian army in Italy, his imperial majeſty will liſten to no propoſition of peace from the French conſul, without conſulting the cabinet of Great-Britain. the anſwer ſent to thoſe tranſmitted to Vienna, in conſequence of the victory of Marengo, is ſaid to have been to the following effect:—That his imperial majeſty entertains no repugnance to coming to an amicable and ſincere explanation with the French government, but that he conſiders himſelf bound in honor to conſult with his ally the king of Great-Britain, to whom he will tranſmit without loſs of time, the preſent overtures of the chief conſul, with his imperial majeſty's reply to them.

Another meſſage was on Friday delivered to both houſes, reſpecting the vote of credit which is to enable his majeſty to meet any extraordinary expenſes that may occur in addition to thoſe already voted. The meſſage alſo expreſſes a firm reliance upon parliament that they will adopt ſuch other meaſures as the exigencies of the caſe may ſeem to them to require. In theſe particulars the parliament manifeſts a ready inclination to gratify his majeſty's wiſhes. They are willing to provide every means in their power to render ſucceſsful the vigorous effort that is about to be made. If France reſiſts effectually the meditated blow, the gigantic republic becomes of courſe immortal. Our endeavors to diſappoint the hopes of ſo ambitious to dangerous a rival, it is therefore neceſſary, ſhould be both prompt and extenſive. The cauſe is unqueſtionably the moſt important that ever engaged the attention of the political obſerver. It is not the intereſt of the allies alone that is at ſtake: thoſe of all Europe likewiſe, are perhaps not leſs involved in the iſſue of the conteſt.

July 30.

HIS MAJESTY

Yeſterday cloſed the ſeſſion of parliament with a moſt gracious ſpeech from the throne.

Amidſt the congratulations on the vigourous efforts of the Britiſh parliament, there are no hopes held out of ſucceſs in the proſecution of war, or of perſeverance on the part of our allies. In a word every, former profeſſion, reſpecting the new and extraordinary danger of the preſent conteſt, and the unheard of calamities with which Europe has been attacked by the French revolution, are now forgotten. There is no ſpecific promiſe that miniſters will either purſue the war with vigour, or make new efforts for the reſtoration of peace. The allusions to theſe points are couched in the moſt general language. His majeſty, however, ſtill ſpeaks of acting in conjunction with his allies, "under every circumſtance."

The following is the ſpeech of the right hon. the ſpeaker, at the bar of the houſe of lords, and addreſſed to his majeſty:—

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN!

Your faithful commons humbly attend your majeſty with the bill, by which their grants are completed for the public ſervice of the year.

In ſupplying the various demands of this important conjunture, your commons conceive that they have diſcharged an indiſpenſible duty to your majeſty, and their country, by manifeſting their unſhaken determination to combine the maintenance and ſupport of public credit, with ſuch ample means of exertion, as may beſt tend to bring the conteſt, in which we are engaged, to a juſt and honorable concluſion.

To your commons it has been highly gratifying to obſerve, that amidſt the vicſſitudes and difficulties which have attended this arduous ſtruggle, the ſecurity of the Britiſh empire has in many reſpects been materially ſtrengthened, its power conſolidated, and its reſources increaſed. The ſplendid and deciſive ſucceſs to which the late hoſtilities in India were conducted by the bleſſing of providence upon the joint exertions of wiſdom and vigor in council, and of ſkill and gallantry in the field, have neceſſarily led to new and and extenſive regulations. The meaſure which has been accordingly adopted, your commons earneſtly hope will have the effect of affording to this country all the advantages which can be derived from thoſe valuable poſſeſſions, and of inſuring to the native inhabitants the full benefit of Britiſh protection.

But to no proceedings, by which their attention has been engaged, can your commons recur with ſtronger ſentiments of ſatisfaction and confidence, than to thoſe which have contributed to the great and important arragement by which your majeſty's ſubjects in Great Britain and Ireland, will henceforth conſtitute one people, actuated by the ſame views, connected by the ſame intereſts, and governed by the ſame laws. In contemplating this meaſure, and the proſpects which it holds preſents, your commons cannot fail to be animated by a well-founded hope, the moſt congenial to your majeſty's benevolent mind, that the united kingdom may ever preſent to the world the example of a free and powerful people—determined and determined to employ their combined ſtrength and reſources for no other purpoſes than thoſe which are connected with their own honor and ſecurity, and to prove by the moderation and juſtice of their councils and conduct, that they are not altogether unworthy of the bleſſings which they may enjoy.

August 2.

We laſt night received, by expreſs, Paris papers to the 30th ult. The great queſtion of negociation receives not the ſmalleſt light from any paragraph contained in any one of the numerous ſets of papers which have come to our hands. Theſe journals are completely ſilent on the ſubject, except in a few articles copied from the Engliſh and German papers, in which the lateſt date from Vienna is the 14th ult.; we are not able to ſay whether their ſilence is the reſult of ignorance or diſcretion. It is probable they tell us all that they know, when they ſtate that count St. Julien has had three interviews with the miniſter for foreign affairs; and ſomething more than they can be poſitively informed of, when they aſſert that count Cobenzel is to be the Auſtrian miniſter who is to negociate a peace. Thoſe politicians who attach importance to the ſtyle in which two hoſtile nations ſpeak of each other may be pleaſed to hear, that we have not found in theſe journals any particular acrimony towards the Engliſh, excepting in one official letter, in which Buonaparte, who, by a decree of the ſame date as the letter, determined that the decades are the only recognized holidays in the republic, call us the wicked heretical Engliſh.

The want of information on the ſubject of negociation can hardly be expected in the preſent ſtate of the Continent to be compenſated by any other intelligence that can be materially intereſting. The execution of the armiſtice, we ſee by letters from different quarters, was in progreſs. The neceſſity of Buonaparte's addreſs to the miniſters of the marine, reſpecting the diſorganization of the French navy, appears from another addreſs to the ſame miniſter on the ſubject of the frigates at Dunkirk, Najac, and Barbe Marbois, have been appointed counſellors of ſtate in the marine department.

General Jourdan, has been appointed by the chief conſul in his ſpirit of providing civil employments for his military comrades, miniſter extraordinary in Piedmont.

The French journals contain the report of the counſellors of ſtate appointed to enquire into the royaliſt conſpiracy, the heads of which will be ſeen in our ſubſequent columns.

It is ſaid that accounts in poſſeſſion of government, ſtate, that Buonaparte, in a ſpeech on the 14th July, ſaid, "if the propoſitions for peace were not acceded to, he would again put himſelf at the head of his invincible army, and in a fortnight compel the enemy to treat."

Miniſters, by propoſing to pay the Emperor a ſubſidy of 2 millions, exhibit a confidence in the continuance of the war.

The Duke of Wittenbergh is to diſpair. He is not diſpoſed to make peace. Moreau demanded he ſhould recall his troops from the army, and to pay the three millions which he owes the republic, but he refuſes.

NORDLINGEN, June 28.

Yeſterday generals Kray and Moreau had an interview, it was to conſult on an armiſtice. Moreau refuſed any without Ulm and Ingolſtadt were ſurrendered. Kray would not conſent and they ſeparated. They appear to reſpect each other. Ulm is proviſioned for a year, and its works are extenſive.

MANHEIM, June 28.

The houſes of Naſſau and the Count de Hatzenburgh, have concluded a convention with the French. Thus all the countries on the right bank of the Rhine, as far as the Mein, except thoſe ſubject to the electors of Mentz, Cologne and Treves, are acknowledged neutral.

RATISBON, June 28.

The archduke Charles has refuſed to take command of the army; but promiſes to fight at the head of his grenadiers if neceſſary. It is his opinion that Kray ought to retire to the frontiers of Auſtria, or otherwiſe his army will be ruined by the French.

June 29.

Yeſterday a great quantity of reſerve artillery, paſſed this city. Many perſons are preparing to leave this place.

June 30.

The diet have deputed M. d'Espen to the head-quarters of Moreau to negociate the neutrality of the general Diet of the empire.

HEILBRON, July 1.

The northern diviſion of the French army of the Rhine, have not yet reached this place, (in the Dutchy of Wirtembergh.) Phillipſburgh has only 1800 men in garriſon.

FRANCE.

PARIS, July 27.

The advanced guard of the army of reſerve, commanded by gen. Brune, in paſſing the Jura, to enter into Switzerland. The body of the army is encamped in the wood between Dijon and Auxonne, where general Bruné himself has his head-quarters. The convoys of artillery which have been assembled at Paris, at Lyons, and at Geneva, have all departed, in order to form the Park of Reserve of that army.

We hear from Frankfort, that on the 11th of July, the emperor went to the play. When he entered the house, a general cry of "peace! peace!" was heard on all sides. His guard demanded silence; but the cry increased still more. At last, the noise became so great, that the emperor was obliged to quit the theatre before the curtain was drawn up.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, October 18.

A London paper of the 2d of August says, in the market of Northampton on Saturday last, corn felt a considerable depression in value; wheat on the preceding Saturday was from 104s. to 144s. per quarter, and on the 26th ult. it sold from 96s. to 128s.

At Chester market on Saturday last, the average price of grain (Winchester measure) was as follows:—Wheat 15s. 2d. At Nantwich, on the same day, wheat 15s. 3d. barley 10s. 2d. oats 8s. 5d. Lon. pa.

The sum of 200,000l. it is said has been fixed as the compensation to be given to the officers and men of adm. Mitchell's squadron, for the Dutch ships taken by them at the Helder.

MAGNANIMITY.

From a late Paris, paper

The respectable Malaret was in his prison reposing himself upon his bed of grief, when he heard a terrible cry from an adjoining chamber; he arose and walked as fast as his great age would permit to the chamber of the unhappy prisoner from whence it proceeded, and whom did he there see but Lebois, (one of the blood thirsty monsters of Robespierre's reign) who had been brought to prison that morning and to whom they had forgot to bring the ordinary ration of provisions—hunger tormented horribly, and drew from him such piercing cries as excited the attention of Malaret. It was in vain that he represented to him at this late hour (10 o'clock at night) they would bring him nothing to eat; Lebois looked at him with eyes wild as fire and then began to howl like a wild beast.—Come with me, said the old man, I can give you something to comfort you; he took him by his arm and led him to his chamber, where he opened a small closet, and said to him, there is what is left of my dinner, one half of a chicken, a piece of bread, and half a bottle of good old wine, eat, drink, and leave the rest to Providence. Lebois devoured all in the twinkling of an eye, and was going to thank his benefactor, when he addressed him in a solemn and grave tone: Do you know, citizen Lebois, in what chamber you are? No, answered he coolly. You are in the chamber of that unhappy king you so cruelly assassinated. There is the place where hung the crucifix that was his only consolation in his long sufferings. There is the door where he used to go and see his wife and children; and there is the door through which he was conducted to the scaffold! Well! what is all that to me? answered Lebois. And do you know to whom you are a speaking? I speak to a brave man who has just given me something to eat, that has saved me from starving—but I know no more. You are speaking to Malaret, Archdeacon of Paris—one of those men you have never ceased to persecute as so many tygers, traitors and conspirators. You speak to a man whom you—personally have twice tried to assassinate, & this same man esteems himself happy to have rendered you a small service at the expence of losing his dinner to morrow.

THE MISER AND PLUTUS.

THE wind was high, the window shaker,
With sudden fear the MISER wakes;
Along the silent room he stalkes,
Looks back, and trembles as he walks:
Each lock and ev'ry bolt he tries,
In ev'ry creek and corner pry's,
Then opes the chest with treasure flow'd,
And stands enraptur'd o'er his hoard.
But now, with sudden qualms possest,
He wrings his hands, he beats his breast;
By conscience stung, he wildly stares,
And thus his guilty soul declares:
"Had the deep earth her stores conceal'd,
"This heart had known sweet peace of mind.
"But VIRTUE's sold. Good Gods! what price
"Can recompense the pangs of vice?
"O bane of good! seducing cheat!
"Can man, weak man, they pow'r defeat?
"GOLD banish'd HONOR from the mind;
"And only left the name behind;
"GOLD sow'd the world with ev'ry ill;
"GOLD taught the murd'rer's sword to kill:
"'Twas GOLD instructed coward hearts
"In TREACHERY's more pernicious arts.
"Who can recount the mischiefs o'er?
"VIRTUE resides on earth no more!"
He spoke, and sigh'd. In angry mood
Plutus, his god, before him stood.
The miser, trembling, lock'd his chest:
The vision frown'd, and thus address'd:
"Whence is this vile ungrateful taint?
"Each sordid rascal's daily cant?
"Did I, base wretch! corrupt mankind?
"The fault's in thy rapacious mind.
"Because my blessings are abus'd,
"Must I be censur'd, curs'd, accus'd?
"Ev'n virtue's self by knaves is made
"A cloak to carry on the trade;
"And pow'r (when lodg'd in their possession)
"Grows tyranny and rank oppression.
"Thus, when the villain crams his chest,
"Gold is the canker of the breast;
"'TIS AVARICE, INSOLENCE, and PRIDE,
"And ev'ry shocking vice beside:
"But when to virtuous hands 'tis giv'n,
"It blesses like the dews of Heav'n:
"Like Heav'n it hears the ORPHAN's cries,
"And wipes the tears from WIDOW's eyes.
"Their CRIMES on GOLD shall MISERS lay,
"Who pawn'd their sordid souls for pay?
"Let KNAVES, then, when blood is spilt,
"Upbraid the pulive sword with guilt."

Foreign News.

PARIS, July 27.

THE negociations for a separate peace between France and the Elector of Bavaria are continued, but no positive opinion can yet be formed as to their probable result. Some letters state, that this peace will probably be signed in a few days, and guaranteed by the Prussian Envoy, in the name of the cabinet of Berlin. Other letters pretend that the negociations have been broken off upon the pressing representations of the English minister, Drake, and upon dispatches which the Elector had received from Vienna.

The articles of the armistice were agreed on on the 16th of July, but the Count Dietrichstein and General Kray had declared that the ratification of the court of Vienna was necessary for them, an Austrian officer immediately carried the treaty to Vienna. The Emperor instantly ratified it. The officer returned on the 14th in the evening to M. Dietrichstein, and on the 15th the armistice was signed at Munich.

According to letters from the Mediterranean, the bey of Tunis has caused several acts of hostility to be committed against the Danish flag. A boat which was sent on shore under a flag of truce has been stopped, contrary to the law of nations, as well as the crew and the officer who was sent to negociate, and the Dey has not yet chosen to set them at liberty.

The consuls of the republic to the minister of marine and of colonies.

"Government had given orders, citizen minister, that the frigates should leave the basin of Dunkirk, and should repair to Flushing to finish arming.

"There has been no such thing done: all the frigates have remained in the road of Dunkirk, and no measures have been taken for the security of these ships, and particularly not to place them in safety from fire-ships; and yet there were in the port, gun-boats and other small armed vessels, which a little vigilance and zeal might have sent into the road.

"Government have learnt that petty rivalry, between the Ordinator, the Commandant at Arms, and the Commandant of the Road, has been the cause of a negligence thus prejudicial. They are aware how often this rivalry has been in the navy fatal to the service.

"I give immediate orders to arrest, at Dunkirk, the Chief of the Administration, the officer commanding in the port, the captain of La Defiree, and all the officers and mates who were on duty at the time this frigate was surprised; you will send them to Paris to take their trial, and will take care that the service does not suffer by their absence.

(Signed) "BUONAPARTE."

Count St. Julien has had already had three conferences with the Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The Minister at War to General Buonaparte, First Consul of the Republic, &c.

"Citizen Consul,

"The General of Brigade Greigney, commanding in the department of the Lower Loire, has given me a very satisfactory account of the political situation of that country. He announces, that the government unites the affections of all in that district; that union and internal peace resume, from day to day a more stable empire; in fine, that the enemies of order in vain attempt to foment new disturbances.

"He has given me, at the same time some details respecting the last appearance of the English upon the coast of La Vendee. He observes that the inhabitants of Normontier, and those of Barbatree and Beauvois, who formerly distinguished themselves under the standard of revolt, have given on this occasion a striking proof of attachment to the republic, by braving the fire of the enemy's batteries, and by making 91 prisoners, even before the arrival of the troops of the line.

"General Greigney thinks that a letter of satisfaction on your part, citizen Consul, on the courageous conduct of these citizens, would produce a very salutary effect upon the minds of the inhabitants of the West.

"I of consequence subjoin the following sketch of a letter for your approbation.

"Health and respect,

"CARNOT."

The Prefect of La Vendee, to the Minister at War.

"Pontenaye Le Peuple, July 3.

"Citizen Minister,

"I have this instant received news that 12 English gun-boats have effected a new debarkation on the side of Fromentin.

"The inhabitants of Cresnjere, Barbatre, and Beauvois, the persons employed in the custom houses, and the gendarmerie marched towards the place attacked. Eight gun-boats had not time to get out again to sea; they remained on the Gona, and our troops having attacked them, made 195 men prisoners, of whom 45 are at Beauvois, and 150 at Barbatre.

"I have not yet received any full details. When I receive them, I shall have the honor to communicate them.

"Health and respect,

"LEFAUCHEUX."

The Journal de Commerce states that 1200 prisoners detained at Wesel, in Westphalia, have escaped by undermining the foundation of their prison, and passing by the mines of the fortress.

The same Journal announces, under the date of Ancona, June 26, that the Austrian commissary, who resides in that city, has published a proclamation which restores the Pope to the possession of the place, and of the march of Ancona.

We believe that the news of a second convention between general Kleber and the Grand Vizier, for the evacuation of Egypt by the French, is contradicted, and that after its new successes, the brave army of the East, maintaining itself in this country, will contribute to the conclusion of that peace, which must re-open to it the road for its return to its own country.

Citizens Barbe Marbois, and Najac, superintending commissaries of the marine at Brest, whose nomination to the Council of State we yesterday announced, took their seats in it the same day. Citizens Redon and Caphreth, appointed Maritime Prefects, will succeed them in the section of the marine.

OPERATIONS IN GERMANY.

From Gen. Bessoles to the Minister at War.

"H. Q. at Memmingen, June 8.

"Citizen Minister,

"In my letter of the 4th of June I had the honor of giving you an account of the movements of the army up to the first.

"On the 2d the army retained the same positions. On the 3d the enemy pushed some strong reconnoitering parties to the left of the Iller, and a brisk cannonade took place.

"The gen. in chief gave orders to lieut. gen. Lecourbe, who had extended his right to Landsberg and Augsburg, to turn more to his left, in order to approach the army. He assembled a large body of troops on the Vemack, holding Landsberg an. Augsburgh with detachments.

"On the 4th, the army retained the same positions. Gen. Grenier, to whom the gen. in chief has given provisionally the rank of lieut. gen. replaced lieut. gen. St. Cyr, who has been obliged to go to the mineral wells for the recovery of his health, in the command of his corps.—General Richepanse took the command of the division posted on the left of the Iller.

"In the night between the 4th and 5th, the Gen. in Chief learned from the reports of spies that the enemy had collected a large force on this side the Danube, between Illerberg and Weissenhorn, and that a part of that force had passed the left bank of the Iller.—He communicated this information to Gen. Richepanse; ordered Gen. Grenier to support him by the bridge of Kilments, and Gen. Lacourbe to take a position between Gunts and Kamlack, on the road to Babenhausen, in such a manner as to cover the roads from Burgau and Augsburg, and consequently to occupy Mindenheim.

"The corps of reserve served as a support on the left, and Gen. Delmas possessing the Guntz, at Babenhausen, marched to support the corps of Gen. Grenier, while the Gen. of Division Decaen, fell back from Oberhausen upon Babenhausen.

"On the 5th our army extended, as I have informed you, from the Iller to the Lech, with a corps on the left of the Iller. Gen. Moreau presented from the movements of the enemy that they were still inclined to risk a battle, gave orders to Lacourbe to take a point of support for his left, and to concentrate himself between the Guntz and the Kamlack.

"This movement was made by Gen. Lecourbe, when Gen. Kray attacked, with about 40,000 men, the corps on the left of the Iller commanded by Richepanse.

"This Gen. follow exactly the instructions of the General in Chief, which was to withdraw on his left to support himself strongly on the right, and only to combat slightly with superior forces until he should be reinforced. At the commencement of the attack his division was cut in parts merely by the march of the enemy, who advanced in five columns. All the intrepidity of our troops was necessary to enable them to resist a force so disproportionate to theirs.

"While this division was engaged on the centre, the brigade on the right commanded by gen. Sabuc, was briskly attacked in its positions, which were defended only by the 8th demi brigade, the 1st regiment of chasseurs, and the 7th of cavalry. The gen. in chief then ordered Grenier, whose corps was posted from Illerriecheim to Oberham, to send assistance to Sabuc. Gen. Ney therefore debouched by the bridge of Kilments, and joining the corps of gen. Sabuc, drove the enemy to Dichtenheim.

"We had scarcely entered this village, when a strong column advanced with 7 pieces of cannon, on Kirberg, in which there were two battalions of the 76th, forming a part of gen. Ney's brigade, but they could not maintain themselves. It was absolutely necessary to repulse the enemy, who were in the front of the bridge of Kilments; Lieut. Gen. Grenier therefore ordered Gen. Ney to make a countermarch, and to attack Kirberg.

"This Gen. marched thither with the brigade of Gen. Brunet, and displayed that valour which characterises him. A battalion of the 96th, which formed the head of the column, ascended the flat-topped hill with their arms in their hands and did not return a single shot to a brisk fire of musquetry and artillery from the enemy. This impetuous attack, supported by the 8th regiment of hussars, and the 24th demi-brigade, overpowered the enemy, who put up in a road, through a wood almost impassible, left in our hands on this point about 1200 prisoners, their artillery, and their caissons.

"Gen. Richepanse, who had still obstinately defended the positions of Guttenzel and Bourco with two battalions of the 7th, one of the 28th, the 5th hussars, 10th cavalry, and part of the 13th dragoons, now resumed the offensive. He charged the Austrians, and on his side made about 7 or 800 prisoners, among whom was Lieutenant Gen. Count Spork, whom some hussars took at the distance of only 30 paces from his column.

"The result of this day's operations, in which only two French divisions have fought and repulsed the whole Austrian army, is about 2000 prisoners and eight pieces of cannon, with their waggons, &c. During the night the enemy retreated to the Danube with so much precipitation, that they have cut down several bridges they had formed on that river.

FIELD MARSHAL SUWARROW.

The world never lost a greater captain than the late Field Marshal Suwarrow.—

We are gratified in being able to communicate from an authentic source some particulars of the close of a life which has filled all Europe with its fame, while it rendered the most important services to the civilized world, as well as to the worse than uncivilized Empire, in whole ungrateful bosom it terminated its glorious career in neglect and desertion.

The messenger who was charged with the letters which announced the loss of the Emperor's favour, met this great man upon the road to St. Petersburgh, where he expected to be received under triumphal arches, by the praises of his Sovereign, and the gratitude of the people. Suwarrow read the dispatches in his carriage. The messenger received a purse of ducats, and heard the sole complaint that ever escaped from the breast of the Hero! "This then he cried, "is the reward of those who devote their existence to the service of their country!"

His heart was rent by the suddenness of the shock, and exhausted nature, near the term of her career, was unable to sustain his mighty spirit, indignant at its wrongs. Doubtless, it would have been greater to have despised an injury which disgraced only its author! The disgrace of Suwarrow!—The world did not wait to do him justice. Suwarrow mourned the departed lustre of his Sovereign's name, for he was a man of brief virtue, of exalted principles, and a patriot in every honest sense of that abused name.—Under the blow he had received, and at the verge of a natural death, for he had attained the 74th year of his age, his reason gave way as happened to many illustrious men at this period of life, merely from the intense and assiduous use of their faculties alone. He did not, however, suffer the calamity of mental derangement, altho' he survived for a short time the full use of his understanding, his wounds preyed upon his shattered health and exhausted frame. He died of that accumulated chagrin, that proud and fallen resentment and indifference which his family called a broken heart, in a small wooden house, under the displeasure of his master, at a distance from his family and abandoned by his friends!

No sooner was it known that he had expired, than the public forum, which no despotism can perfectly refrain, burst forth in murmurs both loud and deep, and the Court itself thought proper to relent. The body received late and superfluous, those honors, the deprivation of which had overwhelmed the restless and overpowered the great mind which had inhabited it. Paul I. commanded it to be expelled in state, in the capital, and to be interred amidst the pomp of military honors and royal ceremonial. The sons of the Russians and the admiration of Europe, are the monuments of Suwarrow, and an eternal tomb, which the caprice of Princes can neither give nor take away.

BRITISH HUMANITY.

There have appeared in some of the French papers, some reflections upon the humanity of the British officers and seamen, in the very gallant affair of Dunkirk, in which the French frigate La Desiree, was captured. We embrace the opportunity of strictly stating those reflections with facts, from which it will appear, that the humanity exercised by the British officers kept pace with their distinguished gallantry upon this signal occasion.

Andromeda, off Dunkirk, July 8, 1800.

"SIR,

"Motives of humanity have induced me to send one of his Britannic Majesty's cutters under my command, with some unfortunate wounded officers and men of La Desiree. I trust the flag of truce will be permitted to return without loss of time, and that you will have the goodness to transmit me by the same conveyance a proper receipt, acknowledging their parole, which their wounds will not suffer them at present to give me without considerable delay, that might be of serious consequence to them.

I am, Sir, &c.

HENRY INMAN.

"To the Commanding officer of the French Squadron in Dunkirk Roads."

From Comidore Castagnier, commanding the naval force in Dunkirk Roads.

"Dunkirk, 19th Messidor, 8th year of the Republic.

"SIR,

"I thank you in the name of my unfortunate wounded countrymen, for your conduct towards them. Your letter was given me by the British officer who brings this back. You will find enclosed the lists of the French officers and seamen he has landed; with the receipt which will in the exchange of prisoners account for men to your government.

I have the honor to be, &c.

CONNODORE CASTAGNIER.

"To Captain Inman, commanding the British squadron off Dunkirk."

Captain Inman of the Andromeda, is appointed to the command of La Desiree; Capt. Manwaring, of the Babet, to the Andromeda, and Captain Campbell to the Babet.

The First Captain of La Desiree, who on those when his ship was cut out by the Dart, and on being apprized of the circumstance, blew his brains out. The next in command has been sent for to Paris.

United States

Extract of a letter from a respectable gentleman, in Richmond, Virginia, to his correspondent in New York, dated Sept. 8, 1800.

"For the week past we have been under momentary expectations of a rising among our negroes, which have assembled to the amount of 900 or 1000, and threatened to massacre all the whites. They are armed with desperate weapons, and secret themselves in the woods. God only knows our fate—we have strong guards every night, under arms."

From the Virginia Gazette of Sept. 12.

The public mind has been much involved in dangerous apprehensions concerning an insurrection of the negroes in several of the adjacent counties.—Such a thing has been in agitation by an ambitious and insidious fellow, a slave, by the name of Gabriel, the property of Mr. Thomas Prother, of the county of Henrico. This villain, assuming to himself the appellation of General, through his artfulness, has caused some disturbance, having induced many poor, ignorant, and unfortunate creatures to share in his nefarious and horrid design. The plot has been entirely exploded, which was shallow; and had the attempt even been made to carry it into execution, but little resistance would have been required, to render their scheme entirely abortive. Thirty or forty of the party have been arrested and confined in gaol for trial. —Yesterday a called Court was held for the purpose, at the Court-house in this city, when six of them were convicted and condemned to suffer death this day at 12 o'clock. It is said that the evidences which has been procured will go to prove nearly the whole of them guilty.—To day the court will proceed to go through with the rest of trials."

The governor of the commonwealth of Virginia has issued a proclamation, offering a reward of three hundred dollars, for the apprehending a negro slave by the name of Gabriel, who has assumed the title of General, and been concerned in exciting an insurrection among the negroes of that state.

From London papers to the 4th of August, received at Boston by the Alert, capt. Rich.

London, July 31.

We have authority to state that the reports, contained in the papers yesterday of an embargo being imposed on the Danish ships in the ports of Great-Britain, and of the detention of the Russian ships at Yarmouth, are entirely destitute of foundation.

August 4.

From the opposition made from two Danish frigates, in two different quarters, to have their convoys searched by our cruizers, there seems but too much reason for concluding that the northern powers have come to a determination to resist our maritime superiority. Ministers have therefore pitched upon lord Whitworth, to go to Copenhagen to enter into explanations with the court of Denmark. Lord whitworth from his situation at the court of Petersburgh, has had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the views, the interests and the intrigues of the northern powers, and he will therefore be enabled to apply himself the more successful to those feelings from which the late measures of Denmark proceed.

The reports by this arrival respecting the American envoys to France, are, that they have quitted Paris, on their return home, but they are German to the numerous fairy tribe which have so long sported their gambols in the United States. They shrink from investigation, and vanish at the touch.

From the Spectator.

To the Editor of the Mercantile Advertiser.

His Majesty's ship Admorache,
Halifax, Sept. 3, 1800.

SIR,

I have observed in your paper (the Mercantile Advertiser) of the 22d August an article of information from capt. Parsons of the schooner FOX, from Charleston, Aug. 8, stating, that on his passage from cape Francois, under convoy of the United States frigate, Constitution, capt. Talbot, on the 30th July, an English ship came into the fleet, sent her boat on board the commodore, afterwards made sail, and stood to the westward, "we learnt from the commodore," says he, "that she was called the Admorache, from Halifax. The captain of the English frigate requested the commodore to permit him to overhaul: but he would not permit him."

As the last paragraph is so notorious a falsehood, inserted, as I conceive, only to depreciate the character of a British officer, in the eyes of the ignorant, and uninformed; as I can hardly believe any others would give credit to it, as the whole world must have learnt that the British navy will do its duty upon all occasions; I request you will take the earliest opportunity to contradict it; and I am certain that capt. Talbot so far from having given the information your paper mentions, if he had seen the above mentioned paragraph, feeling as an officer must do, whose character is at stake, by such villainous and dangerous misrepresentations, would himself have desired you to contradict it. I had no cause to have wished to overhaul any of the convoy, as capt. Talbot, in a very proper manner, was so well acquainted with the vessels under his charge, that he assured the lieut. of the ship, whom I sent on board for that purpose, that, upon his honor, they were all belonging to subjects of the United States and carrying no property belonging to the enemies of Great Britain; that he was well acquainted with the owners & others concerned in every one of them. After such an assurance from capt. Talbot, who appeared to act in the most honorable manner, I could have no cause to doubt his word, nor wish to delay him one moment longer, by claiming that right of powers at war, of examining all neutral vessels according to the practice and laws of all nations, more esper any coming from an enemy's port. I have already wrote to capt. Talbot; and I beg you will take the earliest opportunity, and most public, to attend to my request; and should it have appeared in other newspapers, that the Editors of such may also contradict it.

I am, Sir, yours, &c.

ROBERT RAURIE,
Captain of his Britannic Majesty's ship the Addromache.

JOHN CUMMING, & Co.

York, 6th August, 1800.

DUBLIN, (Ireland) Auguſt 8.

THIS evening at 4 o'clock, his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant went in ſtate to the houſe of Peers, and having directed the attendance of the Commons at the bar, concluded the ſeſſion by the following Speech from the Throne:

My Lords and Gentlemen,

The whole buſineſs of this important ſeſſion being at length happily concluded, it is with the moſt ſincere ſatisfaction that I communicate to you, by his Majeſty's expreſs command, his warmeſt acknowledgments for that ardent zeal and unſhaken perſeverance which you have ſo conſpicuouſly manifeſted in maturing and completing the great meaſure of a Legiſlative Union between this kingdom and Great Britain.

The proof you have given on this occaſion, of your uniform attachment to the real welfare of your country, inſeparably connected with the ſecurity and proſperity of the empire at large, not only entitle you to the full approbation of your Sovereign, and the applauſe of your fellow-ſubjects, but muſt afford you the ſureſt claim to the gratitude of poſterity.

You will regret with his Majeſty, the reverſe which his Majeſty's allies have experienced on the continent; but his Majeſty is perſuaded that the firmneſs and public ſpirit of his ſubjects, will enable him to perſevere in that line of conduct, which will beſt provide for the honor and the eſſential intereſts of his dominions, whoſe means and reſources have now by your wiſdom been more cloſely and intimately combined,

"Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons,

I am to thank you in his Majeſty's name, for the liberal ſupplies which you have ſo cheerfully granted for the various and important branches of the public ſervice in the preſent year.

His Majeſty has alſo witneſſed with pleaſure, that wiſe liberality which will enable him to make a juſt and equitable retribution to thoſe bodies and individuals, whoſe privileges and intereſts are affected by the Union; and he has alſo ſeen with ſatisfaction, that attention to the internal proſperity of this country, which has been ſo conſpicuouſly teſtified by the encouragement you have given to the improvement and extenſion of its inland navigation.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

I have the happineſs to acquaint you that the country in general has in a great meaſure returned to its former ſtate of tranquillity. If in ſome diſtricts a ſpirit of plunder and diſaffection ſtill exiſts, thoſe diſorders, I believe, will prove to be merely local, and will, I doubt not, be ſoon effectually terminated.

The preſſure of ſcarcity on the poorer claſſes, much relieved by private generoſity, and by the ſalutary proviſions of the legiſlature, has been long and unuſually ſevere; but I truſt that under the favour of Providence, we may draw a pleaſing proſpect of future plenty from the preſent appearance of the harveſt.

I am perſuaded that the great meaſure which is now accompliſhed, could never have been effected but by a decided conviction on your part, that it would tend to reſtore and preſerve the tranquillity of this country, to increaſe its commerce and manufactures, to perpetuate its connection with Great Britain, and to augment the reſources of the empire.

"You will not fail to impreſs theſe ſentiments on the minds of your fellow ſubjects; you will encourage and improve that juſt confidence which they have manifeſted in the reſult of your deliberations on this arduous queſtion; above all you will be ſtudious to inculcate the full conviction that united with the people of Great Britain into one kingdom, governed by the ſame ſovereign, protected by the ſame laws, & repreſented in the ſame legiſlature, nothing will be wanting on their part but a ſpirit of induſtry and order, to enſure to them the full advantages under which the people of Great Britain have enjoyed a greater degree of proſperity, ſecurity and freedom, than has ever yet been experienced by any other nation.

I cannot conclude without offering to you, and to the nation at large, my perſonal congratulations on the accompliſhment of this great work, which has received the ſanction and countenance of our Sovereign on that auſpicious day which placed his illuſtrious family on the throne of theſe realms. The empire is now, through your exertions, ſo completely united, and by union ſo ſtrengthened, that it can bid defiance to all the efforts its enemies can make, either to weaken it by diviſion, or to overturn it by force. Under the protection of Divine Providence, the united kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland will, I truſt, remain in all future ages, the faireſt monument of his Majeſty's reign, already diſtinguiſhed by ſo many and ſuch various bleſſings conferred upon every claſs and deſcription of its ſubjects.

PORTSMOUTH, Auguſt 18.

On Thurſday morning laſt, at nine o'clock a gun was fired on board the Brakel, capt. Geo. Clarke, in Portſmouth harbor, and the yellow flag was hoiſted, as a ſignal for executing James Allen, who had been condemned by a court Martial with John Watſon, as being concerned in a mutiny on board the Hermoine. The latter had been executed early the ſame morning, on board the Puiſſant fheer hulk at Spithead.—Armed boats from all the ſhips in the harbour, attended the dreadful ſcene; James Allen came in an armed boat on board the Brakel, attended by Mr. Howell, chaplain of the Royal William, about half paſt eight. The principal witneſs againſt Allan was Parrot, late butcher on board the Hermoine, who depoſed, "that on the night the mutiny took place he was ſeated on a cheſt in the gun room. He then obſerved a band of murderers dragging the ſecond Lieutenant acroſs the deck, who repeatedly ſtretched out his hands crying "Mercy! Mercy!" He was drawn up the ladder by the hair of the head, after receiving many wounds, Parrot declared that at this moment he ſaw the ſecond Lieuteranat's ſervant, J. Allen, with a tomahawk or hatchet in his hand and that he exclaimed, "let me have a cut at him," on ſaying which, he dreadfully wounded his own maſter. On receiving this depoſition from Parrot, a general gloom of horror was heard in the court. Every thing however, that naval juſtice could deviſe, was exerciſed on behalf of the priſoner, but the very witneſſes called by him ultimately proved of diſadvantage to him! Both Allan and Watſon came home in the Prince of Wales, but were not recognized till their arrival. Allen to the laſt denied having ſtuck his maſter. As to the particulars of the murder of captain Pigot, of the Hermoine, it appeared that hearing a noiſe upon deck he immediately ran out of his cabin, when being badly and repeatedly wounded, he was at length obliged to return. He had reached his cabin and was ſitting on a couch, faint with the loſs of blood, when four men entered with bayonets fixed. Crawley headed them. Capt. Pigot, weak as he was, held out his deck and kept them off. They ſeemed for a moment appalled at the ſight of their commander, when Crawley exclaimed, "what, four againſt one, and yet afraid? here goes then," and buried his bayonet in the body of capt. Pigot! he was followed by the others, and who, with their bayonets, thruſt him thro' the port, and he was heard to ſpeak as he went aſtern ——

MADRAS (Eaſt Indies) Jan. 18.

On the 11th ult. in lat. 20 15 north, long. 9 44 eaſt, the American ſhip Atlantic, in company with the Eliza Ann, made a ſignal at 10 A. M. for a ſail in the N. E. quarter, capt. Barker tacked and ſtood to the Weſtward.

At 4 P. M. the ſtrange ſail hoiſted Engliſh colours, upon which capt. Barker did the ſame; about half an hour after, the ſail being within gun ſhot to the windward, hauled down the Englifh enfign and hoifted the French national flag, firing at the fame time a broadfide on the Eliza Anne, which was inftantly returned.

Both fhips now kept up a brifk fire, which continued an hour and ten minutes, the Atlantic alfo firing upon the enemy with her fix pounders, and then wore fhip to get into clofer action; the enemy fheered off for the night. At fifty minutes paft feven in the morning, the Atlantic commenced the action by taking her to the windward, within piftol fhot; after a fharp action of about twenty minutes the French fhip hauled her tacks on board, and bore away, having all her pumps going.

Were it not for the gentlemen cadets and other paffengers it would have been impoffible for captain Barker to have fought, having loft thirty-fix of his crew by the fcurvy; nor muft we omit to mention the affiftance of two lady paffengers, who, entering into the fpirit of the conteft, kept handing up cartridges during the engagement, and in preparing a further fupply during the night of the 11th.

Three of the cadets on board the Eliza were flightly wounded, but none killed.

NORFOLK, Virginia) Sept. 22.

Capture of the French frigate La Vengeance.

Yefterday arrived the fchr. Nancy and Katy, capt. Webb, 24 days from Kingfton.

On the 26th of Auguft arrived at Port Royal, La Vengeance, French frigate, prize to La Siene, (Engliih frigate) capt. Milne.

La Vengeance mounts 50 guns, befides fwivels, viz. 28 twenty-four pounders, 8 fifty-fix brafs howetzers, and 14 long nine pounders, full of men, and many of the fame families paffengers on board that were in her when fhe engaged the Conftellation. The number of killed and wounded is yet uncertain.—La Siene fell in with her in the Mona paffage, and came up after a chafe of 48 hours, during which they had ftarted nearly all the water on board La Siené, to lighten her.—They were 8 hours within gun fhot, 4 of which within that of a piftol, when La Vengeance having every maft fhot away, and the carnage on board dreadful, her colors were then ftruck. La Siene fuffered alfo much—her 2d or 3d lieutenant and 15 men killed, and 23 wounded. La Seine is rated 44 guns, but mounted 46, 18 and 9 pounders; the beft match La Vengeance could have met with on the Jamaica ftation. Captain Milne was 2d Lieut. of the Blanch when fhe took La Pique, (when in company with another frigate) fhe took La Seine, and now La Seine has taken La Vengeance—where will he ftop?

BOSTON, October 1.

Yefterday arrived at Salem, the fhip Friendfhip, capt. Williams, 34 days; and at this port the Galen, capt. Hinckley, in 30—both from London. By thefe arrivals we have received papers to the 27th of Auguft, but they do not contain many articles of real intelligence. Their contents we give nearly in the following fummary.

Russia.—Several Gazettes ftate, fays a Paris paper of Aug. 19, that 80,000 Ruffians are about to crofs the Viftula, to proceed towards the Auftrian ftates. It conftits of four grand divifions, each of 20,000 men, of which a third are cavalry. Prince Pancration, commander in chief.—A fecond army forming in Lithuania. A profpect of an accommodation, or better underftanding between Ruffia and Auftria.

Denmark.—Lord Whitworth was at Copenhagen on the 11th Aug. had had feveral conferences with Count Bernftoff. Notwithftanding the Britifh had captured feveral Danes in the Elbe, the fending a confiderable fleet into the North fea, &c. a profpect of peaceably terminating differences is entertained.

Portugal, is threatened with an army of 60,000 men in 60 days, unlefs a tribute of one million and a quarter ftirling, be paid. Perhaps Moreau, who has been fent for to Paris, by the Chief Conful, is to execute the orders. Thefe reports have excited no inconfiderable uneafy fenfations in London.

France and Austria.—The fudden return of citizen Dutot to Paris, on the 20th Aug. the depreffion of the French funds fubfequent to it, &c. feem to indicate, that a peace cannot yet be adjufted. The demands of the French it is faid, are exorbitant.

Immenfe warlike preparations are going forward—60,000 men, part of a new French army of Referve, are arrived at Lauſanne. A new French army will be formed in the Tyrol, to be placed under the command of Gen. Maſſena, who is fucceeded in Italy by Gen. Brune. Another army of 60,000 (a new "army of England") is to be formed at Amiens, to execute as Carnot fays "vaſt projects."—There has been an extraordinary levy of 40,000 horfes. The greateft activity is employed in demolifhing the caftle of Milan, and the fortifications of Turin, Ceva, Coni, and Tortona. The circle of Franconia is laid under a contribution of 6 millions of livres; Ratifbon of 400,000; to be paid under pain of military execution.

On the feveral Britifh expeditions we find nothing detailed. The Britifh however never appeared more active in equipping every fhip for fea.

The following was Mr. Pitt's unanfwerable and beautiful reply to Mr. Tierney, who called upon miniſters to ſtate the object of the war in one ſentence.

"The hon. gentleman (ſaid the premier) calls upon miniſters to ſtate the object of the war in one ſentence. I can ſtate it in one word! It is SECURITY.

I can thus ſtate it in one word, tho' it is not to be explained but in many. The object of the war is Security; Security againſt a danger, the greateſt that ever threatened this country; the greateſt that ever threatened mankind! A danger the more terrible becauſe it is unexampled and novel. It is a danger, which has more than menaced the ſafety and independence of all nations. It is a danger, which has attacked the property and peace of all individuals. A danger, which Europe has ſtreined all its ſinews to repel, and which no nation has ſo ſucceſsfully repelled as the Britiſh, becauſe no other nation has acted ſo energetically, ſo ſincerely, ſo uniformly, on the broad baſis of PRINCIPLE! Becauſe no other nation has perceived, with equal clearneſs and decifion, the neceſſity, not only of combating the evil abroad, but of STIFLING IT AT HOME. Becauſe no nation has breaſted with ſo firm a conſtancy the tide of Jacobinical power. Becauſe no nation has ſtranuled and pierced with ſo dedfaſt an eye, as the Government of Great Britain, through all the diſguiſing manœuvres of Jacobinical hypocriſy!!! &c.

The above incontrovertible, clear & convincing definition of the object of war by the mitigated monarchy of England againſt the Gallic Regicides and the common diſturbers of the nations, ought to be read not only by Britiſh ſubjects, but by every member of civil ſociety throughout the earth.

LONDON, Auguſt 16.

"There was a report yeſterday that the directors of the Eaſt India company had received accounts from Conſtantinople, by the laſt mail, that general Kleber had been aſſaſſinated in Egypt by an Arab, who ſhot him through the head with a piſtol, on preſenting him with a petition. Theſe accounts from Conſtantinople deſerve no great credit, and in this particular inſtance we attach very little to them.

It is added, that the command devolved on general Rolla. There was no general of that name in the army."

Auguſt 19.

Mr. Gifford and Peter Pindar.

A recontre took place yeſterday in the ſhop of mr. Wright, the bookſeller, between the celebrated Pete. Pindar and mr. Gifford author of the Bæviad. We need not inform our literary readers that in reply to the many ſarcaſms thrown out by Peter Pindar againſt the author of the Bæviad and other poems, mr. Gifford lately publiſhed a ſevere and keen ſatire againſt Peter. In a ſecond edition an elufion is made of a kind too groſs for decency to record. The literary combat yeſterday produced blows. Dr. Wolcot went into the ſhop of mr. Wright where mr. Gifford was ſeated reading a newſpaper; he aſked him if his name was not Gifford? he replied in the affirmative.—Upon which the Dr. aimed a blow at his brother poet with a cane, which mr. Gifford dexterouſly warded off, wreſted the cane from Peter, and in an inſtant broke the head of his aſſailant with his own ſtick. M. Peltier and an other gentleman, who were preſent, interfered, and Peter with a bloody ſconce, was thruſt into the ſtreet, where a mob collected, to whom he made his appeal.—He loſt his hat in the affray, which was thrown out to him; but the poet of the Bæviad kept poſſeſſion of the cane as a trophy of his triumph. Peter having thus failed wreaking his vengeance by blows, means to attack his enemy with the weapon at which he is more dexterous. He has announced what he call "A cut at the cobler."

When Peter Pindar overpowered and huſtled out of the ſhop, was obliged to quit the field of battle to his adverſary, he deſired the following letter to be given to mr. Gifford:

"Mr. Gifford,

"As there are certain expreſſions which require only a little of the ſeverity of ſatire by way of a corrective, ſo there are others of ſo malignant a nature as to demand a horſewhip inſtead of words. Had you poſſeſſed ſomething more of the human form, I ſhould have treated you as a man; but as things are, you muſt be contented to be whipped as a malicious monkey.

J. WOLCOT."

Auguſt 22.

We yeſterday took a view of the moſt important intelligence brought by the Hamburgh mail and Paris papers; and theſe, as has been ſeen, contained four principal objects of intereſt. The queſtion of peace; the new army which Ruſſia is aſſembling on the frontiers of Auſtria; the revolution which has taken place in Switzerland; and the body of troops which the French are aſſembling at Amiens.

The queſtion of peace has not been brought much nearer to a ſolution by the intelligence which yeſterday reached us from France and Germany, and remains with relation to the public, at the ſame point, as it did a fortnight ago. Until we receive information from Vienna, of two or three days date ſubſequent to the arrival of count St. Julien and citizen Duroc in that capital; until the reply which they muſt receive ſhall have reached Paris, we ſhall probably learn nothing more, or at leaſt, nothing more of a deciſive nature; for till then nothing will be decided. We ſhall not here waſte time by entering into an inveſtigation of the different reports which the foreign gazettes contain on this important head: all of them do not weigh a feather. Facts only are valuable, and on ſuch a point it is not eaſy to obtain them. Our readers muſt, therefore, for the preſent, be contented, with the lateſt intelligence which our government received on Wedneſday, from Vienna, of the date of the 6th, and at that period nothing was known reſpecting the ſigning the preliminaries of peace. We ought, however, to obſerve, that at that period, the two diplomatic agents were ſtill travelling poſt haſte, on the roads of Auſtria, and that they will probably not have reached the capital of that country until the 7th inſt.

With the queſtion of negociation are intimately connected the great military preparations which the emperor of Ruſſia is again making. At a period when theſe were not yet known, we had no heſitation in predicting that he would ſoon re appear on the ſtage in a very conſpicuous manner; and it was but a few days ago that we ſhewed in part what were our grounds for this expectation. That man muſt be very little acquainted with the preſent compoſition of the political ſociety of Europe, can know very little of the views, the perſonal character, and the power of the emperor of Ruſſia, and muſt be ſtrangely miſled by the inactive part which Pruſſia has for the laſt five years played, if he ſuppoſes that theſe two powers will now ſuffer France and Auſtria quietly to conclude a plagiariſm of the treaties of Leoben and Campo Formio. The time is come when no one will ſuffer the aggrandizement of his neighbor without alſo aggrandizing himſelf; and that the moment is not diſtant in which it will be ſeen how difficult it is for all to be gainers, or to conclude a peace by which none ſhall profit. This difficulty will be the rock on which the pacification will ſplit, and it is already manifeſt to every enlightened perſon.

No great penetration is wanted to perceive that if the emperor Paul ſaw with a jealous eye the aggrandizement of the emperor Francis by a ſucceſsful war, he will be leſs ſatisfied if he ſhould acquire it by a peace, and that if he has this feeling with reſpect to a power which has been his ally, he will have it ſtill more ſtrongly with reſpect to another power which is his enemy. Volney muſt indeed write a great number of paragraphs, and the chief conſul be very lavish in his careſſes of the Ruſſian officer, before the emperor begins, we will not ſay to favor France, but to tolerate its increaſing ambition. The extent of influence which a monarch of the character and the power of Paul may, for ſome years to come, have one way or other to the deſtiny of Europe, is not yet ſufficiently felt in general; the fate of Germany and of Europe will not henceforth be decided without his interference: he has begun to take a ſhare in it, and he will continue to do ſo. The reinforcements of troops which Buonapatte, is inceſſantly ſending into Germany; the march of Angereau to the Mein; the enormous contributions France is rapidly raiſing in Germany; the circles of Popilius, which Duroc is ſuppoſed to be commiſſioned to draw round the Emperor; all this evidently ſhews that the Chief Conſul is acquainted with, and dreads the preſent views of the Emperor of Ruſſia.

We have often ſaid, and we repeat it, that whether preliminaries between the Emperor of Germany and France be or be not ſigned, much time will elapſe, and many things occur before a general peace can take place, and ſuch can alone deſerve the name and can have the effects of peace.

We have the ſatisfaction, and it is not often that we have reaſon to be ſatisfied in this reſpect, of ſeeing that our oppoſition papers, ſome of them at leaſt, have not been able to refrain from compaſſionating the fate of Switzerland; and this is certainly no inconſiderable proof of the real ſituation to which this ancient aſylum of liberty, of virtue, of induſtry, and of ſimplicity is reduced. After having in 1797 been abandoned to the ſword and the torches of Schauenburg and Brune, after having been ruined in 1799 by the abode and the conteſt of three armies, after having ſince that time been made a prey to civil diſſentions, by the agents of the Chief Conſul, who was apprehenſive that if its inhabitants were not divided among themſelves, they might make ſome new effort in favour of their liberty, and of the cauſe of their allies, this unhappy country is about to become virtually a province of France. The republic of Genoa, Piedmont, Lombardy, Switzerland, the Griſons, all have in the courſe of a few months been reduced to hold both their political and civil exiſtence at the caprice of the Chief Conſul. To none of theſe countries he left the ſhade of liberty any more than he has done to France; and this is the man of whoſe pacific diſpoſition, conciliatory politics, and moderate meaſures, we have heard ſuch boaſts! It is to this man who has reduced to miſery and ſlavery a greater number of his fellow creatures than any conqueror has done in modern times; it is to his juſtice and good faith our government were called upon to ſurrender without reſerve!—This naturally leads us to ſpeak of the preparations which he appears to be making in order to threaten our happineſs and our liberty. It muſt undoubtedly be for him a great ſubject of regret, to ſee at the frontiers of his ſtates a people who, in the midſt of war which has impoveriſhed, deluged with blood, and enſlaved almoſt the whole of the continent, yet preſerve the benefit of their conſtitution, the enjoyment of their riches, their ancient manners, and repoſe in liberty. Leſs than this we may believe would be enough to move the bile of a ſpoiled child of fortune, who is indignant that the whole world is not ſubjected to him, and we may believe that the perſonal ſentiments of the Corſican enter at leaſt as much as his political views, into this new enterpriſe. He is, no doubt, ardently deſirous of iſolating us by a continental peace, and of afterwards turning all his reſources againſt us. But whether he continue to bury himſelf with theſe falſe hopes, or whether he may open his eyes to the vanity of them, our country will not the leſs remain immoveable on the triple baſis of its liberty, its ſtrength, and its riches, and if once more again the continent ſhould be enſlaved by ſtrength, or ſeduced by craft—once more again, rather than abandon the road to honor and ſafety, ſhall we prove, that we are able alone to engage and to conquer thoſe, who have been but too ſucceſsful in conquering others.

Auguſt 27.

We underſtand that Government received diſpatches yeſterday from Vienna, dated the 5th inſt. containing the anſwer of the Chief Conſul to the diſpatches which the Auſtrian government after the receipt of the determination of the Courts of London, tranſmitted to Paris. In this anſwer, Buonapatte has expreſſed a willingneſs to treat with G. Britain and Auſtria jointly. Upon theſe diſpatches a Cabinet Council was held, and it is probable that a negociation between the three powers may take place immediately.

Yeſterday a rumour was very prevalent in the city, of freſh overtures for peace having been made to this country by the Chief Conſul. The funds which had fallen in the morning, roſe towards the cloſe of the day, about one per cent. and conſiderable purchaſes were made. We have not learnt that any meſſenger had arrived directly from the Chief Conſul but ſome advices from France were, we believe, received by Government on Sunday, and all ſigns of truce with diſpatches failed from Dover for Calais yeſterday.

An expreſs has been received at the Admiralty from Cork, which announces the ſailing of ten men of war, and four armed ſhips, with troops on board, on Friday laſt, to join the reſt of the armament engaged on an expedition, the object of which is ſtill kept a profound ſecret.

Which is now ſpoken of in the French papers, as the theatre of negociation, is celebrated in hiſtory for the loſs of its cannon after the battle of Hochſtet, which the French and Batavians carried off. The former, however, to make ſome amends, left behind them no leſs 1500 little citizens, who were born a few days after their departure, and who by a droll miſtake got the name of Schadet nichts. It being cuſtomery in Germany to aſk unmarried women in a ſtate of pregnancy, who is the father; and the ſame queſtion being put to the girls here whom the French had left in that ſtate, they were afraid to own their intrigue with the enemies of their country, and therefore ſaid Shadet nicht (no matter.) by which name the children were all chriſtened, and which the mongrel French and German breed that have ſprung from them are called to this day.

squadron which was fitted to have failed from Brest about a month ago, and that its object is to arrive at Egypt by steering close to the African coast.

The Paris papers of the 5th confirm the report of the capture of 20 English gun boats, coming out of Gibraltar, by Spanish gun boats and corsairs belonging to Barcelona. Two of the above were from Tuscany, and defended themselves with obstinacy against the Spaniards.

The Journal de Commerce positively asserts that the present armistice between the French and Imperialists is concluded for the space of three months.

It is again repeated in the French Journals, that the 25th Messidor was a day of glory for the troops. They then seized upon the almost impenetrable positions of Rofs Schlagpass, near Renti, tho' obstinately defended by the Tyrolian chasseurs; and while they entered the Tyrolian country upon this point another strong column penetrated thro' the forest of Bregenz by a way intersected with rocks and mountains, and which had never been passed before by any army.

The French have taken possession of Frankfort, entering that city on the 27th ult. with two battalions and 400 cavalry, three pieces of cannon, and several ammunition waggons. The magistrates resisted a considerable time, but being at length compelled to yield to force, they consented to give up the place, and accordingly billets being granted, the troops were distributed in the houses of the citizens. A squadron of men of war is assembling in the Downs, which is expected to join the fleet of transports and other vessels at Yarmouth.

The object of the expedition which sailed from Portsmouth on Wednesday, and comprised about 10,000 soldiers, continues to be, as it ought, a profound secret. Every thing that distinguished gallantry can atchieve, may be expected from them.

By late accounts received from Madras, an immediate war was expected between the English and Mahrattas.—Troops were marching into the interior, and reinforcements were expected from the Cape of Good Hope. The Mahrattas are said to have from 3 to 4,000 cavalry, and it is thought will not be so easily subdued as Tippoo's troops were. The cause of the expected war has not transpired. The English keep a jealous eye on the King of Ava and Pegu, and are suspected of a design to commence hostilities against him.

A small privateer was lately fitted out from the Cape, to intercept a Spanish ship bound to Mozambique, with fifty thousand dollars to purchase slaves. In cruizing she fell in with and captured the Danish ship Holger Danske, of 1000 tons, from Batavia for Norway, with a Dutch company's cargo on board, invoiced at 384,000 rix dollars. The crew surrendered her to the British privateer declaring the property to be Dutch and the vessel Danish. The latter has been acquitted. She had on board 125 pieces of large cannon from the Arsenal at Batavia, said to be intended for Amsterdam.

Extract of a letter from Vienna, Aug. 3.

"Every thing announces the restoration of harmony between our cabinet and that of Petersburgh. A corps of 60,000 Russians are certainly on their march under the command of Generals Soltikoff and Rehbender. Paul has consented that 40,000 recruits from his provinces in Poland shall be incorporated with the Austrian troops even should peace be concluded.

"The reports with respect to peace seem to be more consistent since the arrival of a courier from London, who brings, it is said, on the part of his court, professions and assurances favourable to a general negociation."

It is strongly reported that France & Austria have concluded on peace. Every thing confirms us in this belief.—The conditions are not yet officially announced. This subject indeed occupies and interests all the continental powers, and a general congress is a measure that must soon take place.

Mean time England united in sentiment, and vigorous in council, meditates nothing but war. Her ministers seem determined to continue the contest with encreased enterprise and ardor. Several formidable expeditions have sailed, one of which is certainly destined for Egypt; and the assassination of Kleber, which seems probable, gives the promise of a speedy and fortunate issue. The taking of Malta is another object towards which they have directed another powerful force. These expeditions, formed in the deepest policy & conducted with profound secrecy, will give the British the command of the Levant, and free them at once from all fears of future machinations against their East India establishments. While these important conquests will give to Britain at the approaching negociations for a general peace, which must soon take place, a right to take high ground, and insist on the most ample security against the secret intrigues and open violence of her implacable foes. This energy of her ministers is supported by the general spirit of the country. Her navy never appeared more determined in valor or actuated by a higher & bolder enthusiasm. The hardy design of attacking the Brest fleet in their very harbour, is talked of as a probable event.

Buonaparte on the other hand, in some measure relieved from the care of his armies, is turning his whole attention to his marine, and seems resolved to employ the whole resources of his genius and power in placing the navy of France in a condition to face the fleets of England.

A new danger threatens Britain in the North. Russia, Sweden, Denmark, and Prussia are meditating an armed neutrality, a measure which if entered on, may materially affect the trade of England.

Preliminaries of peace between the Emperor of Germany and the French Republic are at length concluded. They were signed at Paris on the 29th July by the Count St. Julien and M. Talleyrand. They wait only for the Emperor's ratification, which it was expected would arrive by the 20th of August. There were some important circumstances attending this business, not generally known; "the Count did not sign the preliminaries until after he had made repeated and very urgent applications that Great Britain might be included in the general peace. The ex bishop was as pertinacious in resisting this proposition; observing, "that the Chief Consul could not permit the French armies to remain inactive during the summer, under the absolute uncertainty of the issue of negociations which would doubtless be protracted by admitting Great Britain to become a party to them." It was under these circumstances that the Count St. Julien signed the preliminaries; and citizen Duroc was directed to accompany him to Vienna in order to obtain the ratification of his Imperial Majesty.

A camp is forming between Amiens and Paris. In an address delivered by the Minister Carnot on the 15th ult. to the troops which composed it, he said, among other things, "Defenders of the country, the chief consul has vast projects. He hopes you will execute his orders with courage, and contribute all your energy to ensure peace." This part of Carnot's discourse has given rise to considerable political speculation both in Paris and London.

From the New York Gazette of September 27.

IMPORTANT.

Last evening came up the pilot boat Perseverance, on board of which was a pilot who brought into the Quarantine Ground an English schooner, in a very short passage from Martinique.

The captain of this schooner informed this pilot of the taking of Curracoa by the French.—This was effected by troops which embarked on board of 150 sail of sloops and schooners at Guadaloupe. On their approaching the port of Curracoa, a chain was ran across the harbour, which prevented their entering, but they soon after effected a landing on some other part of the island, advanced to the city, and after a bloody conflict, the French got possession of the place.

The captain further states, that the United States brig Pickering was in the harbor at the time, and joined with other Americans in defending the place against the French, who when they conquered, massacred every American in the place, including the consul, officers and crew of the Pickering.

The pilot further adds, that he was informed that the reason of this armament being fitted out against Curracoa was, because the Governor of Curracoa would not receive bills on the Governor of Guadaloupe for the expences incurred in repairing the Vengeance.

The pilot could not recollect the names of the above schooner and captain, but says it was told to him as no ways doubtful—and that the captain was anxious to come up to town himself to relate the news, as he alledged it of the utmost importance to America.

From the Daily Advertiser of Sept. 29.

The information relative to the massacre of the Americans at Curaccoa by the French, as stated in a morning paper of Saturday, was received by the British schooner Alexander, capt. Hastings. We have endeavoured to sift the business, which is stated in these words by capt. H.

"On the 2d Sept. a French privateer sailed from Guadaloupe, and captured an American vessel, on board of which she put a prize master and crew, and ordered her for that port. She was afterwards recaptured by the British ship of war Tamar, and sent for Port Royal, Martinique, where she arrived on the 6th. On board of this vessel, (then in possession of the French prize master) were found some French newspapers, printed in Guadaloupe, which stated, that the expedition which had sailed from that port against Curracoa had succeeded, and that the Americans who had assisted the Dutch were all massacred.—This, the French prize master, on examination before the authority, attested to as matter of fact."

STRASBURGH, August 13.

The fire which is now raging in the vast forests near Freudenstadt & Knieble, has lasted for ten days. The smoke was still seen from this place yesterday. All the inhabitants of the adjacent districts are employed in digging trenches to prevent its progress. The flames have already extended over a space of between eight and ten leagues. The right bank of the Rhine has not been exempt from this misfortune, and the superb forest of Hagenau has been three times ravaged by the fire. In the department of the Upper Rhine sixty acres of wood have been consumed. Another violent fire has taken place at Kayserberg and Worth, about two leagues from this place.

HAMBURGH, Aug. 20.

Trade and commerce are quite dead in this city, and the public anxiety has risen to the highest pitch, to know how the difference between Britain and Denmark will be settled.

Though most of the German papers consider the peace between the Emperor and France as certain, yet there are recent advices from Vienna, stating, that the Imperial cabinet only wishes to temporize and suspend negociations till the arrival of the Queen of Naples in the capital of Austria, when it is thought the British party will be completely victorious over the partizans of France.—Some Vienna letters say, that both Lord Nelson and Sir Wm. Hamilton will accompany her Majesty to Vienna—whence the former will go first to Germany to Cuxhaven, and the latter, others pretend, is to succeed Ld. Whitworth in his diplomatic mission at Petersburgh.

Count Ludolf was to go as Imperial Ambassador Extraordinary to Petersburgh. The Emperor Paul has, it is said, given orders for a Russian army of 100,000 men to approach the frontiers of Gallicia.

Count St. Julian is said to have been with him to Vienna the ultimatum of the French Government respecting the preliminaries of peace. Mean while the common talk in the circles of the court of Vienna, is, that the Emperor, notwithstanding his late reverses, will only accept of such a peace as is consistent with his dignity.

ALTONA, August 15.

The subsidies, which arrived at Hamburgh from London for his Imperial Majesty, have been stopped by virtue of orders from England.

By private letters from Vienna, we learn that the Emperor intends to decline the subsidy, and has refused to ratify the treaty: other accounts from respectable quarters assert, that the Emperor is far from being satisfied with the exorbitant demands made by Buonaparte, which are said to be—the union of Piedmont and Genoa with the Cisalpine Republic, by the name of the Italian Republic; also the union of the Brisgau, and a great part of Suabia with the Helvetic Republic. The first consul is said to have totally rejected the proposal made from England for the French to cede Belgium and Holland, on condition of certain cessions which Britain will make of some of her colonial conquests.

It is confidently reported that the French are resolved to invade Naples, with a view of procuring means by the conquest of that kingdom, to relieve Malta, and to reinforce their army in Egypt.

PARIS, Aug. 18.

Letters from Cherbourgh of the 11th state, that the British squadron off that place appeared a few days before, to the number of 22 sail, in the bay of Durville, within a league and an half of Cherbourgh. Our privateers dare not put to sea in consequence of the vigilance with which they watch the coast.

August 21,

Citizen Duroc arrived yesterday at half past five o'clock from Vienna. Not finding Buonaparte at the Consular Palace, he instantly changed horses and carriage, and set off for Malmaison.—Nothing is known of the success of his mission, but his courier being interrogated by some curious persons, replied as he went along, "Good news! Good news!"

Citizen Duroc, Chief of Brigade, aid du-camp to the First Consul, returned to Paris yesterday morning.

MARSEILLES, Aug. 4.

The British blockade our port more closely than ever; they lately seized 16 vessels returning from Bendeaire. Upwards of 150 Genoese and other vessels are detained at Ciotat & Cassis, because they dare not double the Cape of Dumaire, behind which the enemy's ships are constantly concealed. A Spanish vessel in attempting to pass, fell into their hands.

LONDON, August 23.

Extract of a private letter from Lisbon, received by the mail this morning.

Lisbon, Aug. 2.

"Last week an express arrived in great speed from Madrid, and a Council of State was immediately called; since then two other expresses have arrived; and there have been many Councils held. Orders have been issued to press every person that could be laid hold of for the army and navy. The frontiers have been directed to be held in readiness for defence; and the packet has been detained till to-morrow, to send the result of the councils to England.

"To guard against incidents, the other packet is to sail on Thursday next, with duplicates. You will ask why all this confusion? I am going to tell you. Buonaparte has sent propositions of peace to this government, which are said to be a demand of ten millions of Crusades (about 2s. 6d. each) that the port should be open to the French, and that they should be here upon equal privileges with the most favored nation. He gives sixty days for the definitive answer; after which more will be accepted; and threatens, in case of refusal, to march 60,000 men into Portugal.—He concludes by saying, "You know me well enough to be sure that I never say any thing I do not perform." If England agrees to these requisitions, we may go on pretty well, but on her determination depends every thing.

"The troops under the command of Sir Ralph Abercrombie left Minorca some time last month."

The Chief Consul has applied to the Pope for leave to march an army thro' the Papal territories against Naples. He has also expressed a desire, which the Pope has announced to the College of Cardinals, to restore the Catholic Religion in France, and to recal the exiled Bishops.

The French lately took a ship in the Mediterranean, but finding it belonged to the Pope, they released it, saying they had orders to respect the Pontifical flag.

August 25.

Since the channel Fleet has been under the command of Lord St. Vincent, the road of Brest has never been so completely blockaded. We are informed by the late dispatches, that from the month of May not a single vessel has entered that port. Yet Brest, situated at the extremity of Britanny, a sterile province, and in the most barren part of it can only procure provisions by sea. We find in consequence, that the greatest scarcity prevails there, both in the town and on board the ships, the crews of which are in want of every thing, especially wine and brandy.

August 27.

Yesterday, during the sitting of the Cabinet Council, dispatches were received from his Majesty's Minister Plenipotentiary at Vienna. They are dated upon the 15th inst. So late as that date, no notice had been given by General Moreau of the recommencement of hostilities;—but this is not the only circumstance which confirms the belief we have lately entertained of Dutot's possessing a secret latitude of power, and of their being room for another ultimatum upon the part of Buonaparte.

There is no reason to believe that the answer of the English Cabinet to the communication of the Emperor, on receiving the first overtures from the Chief Consul, was not unfavourable to a general peace. His Imperial Majesty it is in the recollection of the public, replied to those overtures, by stating engagements with Great Britain, and his readiness to treat in concert with that power. The determination of the court of London, transmitted to Vienna, was thence forwarded by the Imperial Chancery to Paris, from whence the resolution of Buonaparte was again transmitted to Vienna. It is the result of its acceptation at the Thuilleries, of which Lord Minto's dispatches have yesterday informed the Administration. It was, however, currently reported in the course of the day, that a more direct intercourse had taken place between this country and the government of France, in consequence of Baron Thugut's having imparted to it the readiness of England to treat for a general pacification.

On Sunday some private dispatches were received from Paris, and another express arrived yesterday morning by the way of Dover. We shall not permit ourselves to reason loosely upon a subject so important. We know that no overtures for a just, solid and permanent peace, will be refused by his Majesty's Council. We think, under the present circumstances, the French government must perceive the absurdity of offering any other.

Since writing the above, we have received a Bulletin of the contents of the Paris Journals to the 24th inst. through a private channel.—These papers are wholly silent on the subject of negociations, either with this country or Austria. The French funds again fell on the 22d.

Captain Duval, of the navy, arrived yesterday at the Admiralty, with dispatches from Lord Whitworth, at Copenhagen. There was a Council of his Majesty's Ministers on the occasion, consisting of the Duke of Portland, Earls Chatham, Spencer, and Liverpool, Lord Grenville, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Mr. Dundas. The deliberation lasted from eleven till four in the afternoon. Captain Duval left town last night with the result of the Council, to Admiral Dickson, to be forwarded to Lord Whitworth.

This morning were received Paris papers to the 24th inst. which were obtained by a Gravesend passage vessel that arrived at Dover on Monday night. A paper of the 23d mentions the intended journey of the King of Prussia into Silesia. On the subject of peace, we find but a paragraph in the Clef du Cabinet. "It is said (says this journal) that the preliminaries of peace are signed, and among other articles, one is quoted, which states that the Belligerent Powers shall remain masters in Italy of their mutual conquests."

GLASGOW, August 5.

On Thursday arrived the Hamburgh mail due on Wednesday. It brings no further intelligence relative to what may be the object which the Imperial Cabinet has in view to obtain peace. A messenger from Lord Minto at Vienna arrived in the packet; the purport of his dispatches is unknown. Whatever they are, government shortly after ordered the troops lying at Southampton, and Gen. Mortinead's brigade encamped at Windsor, to be embarked immediately under the command of Sir James Pulteney. Their destination is supposed to be in the Mediterranean. Hence it is naturally to be inferred, that the Emperor is determined still to act in conjunction with Great Britain. The Vienna Court Gazette contains a curious but interesting proclamation addressed to the inhabitants of Vienna. The much talked of Northern Quadruple Alliance is not even hinted at in any of the continental Journals.—The Emperor of Russia continues to act so mysteriously, as to put it out of the power of any human being to divine what can possibly be his object.—On the one hand, he has publicly received a minister from Louis XVIII; and on the other, he has refused to admit to a private audience the newly appointed British Ambassador Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary. It is said, that a convoy of British merchantmen had been retaken permission to enter the harbour of Cronstadt; and that all the Russian men of war were going out of the Mole.

Paris papers to the 29th ult. inclusive, were received in London on Saturday. They contain no news respecting peace, or any object of importance. A number of letters relative to the first convention in Egypt, have been published at Paris. The Pope made his entry into Rome on the 2d of July.

NEW YORK, Sept. 17.

Extract of a letter from Edenton, N. C.

"There had been a dispute for several months between two of our fellow citizens, Capt. Butler, formerly of Massachusetts, and Doctor Rameke, formerly of Hesse, in Germany. Butler sent Rameke a challenge last week (the middle of Aug.) which was accepted, & they were bound over by a magistrate to keep the peace. They met, nevertheless within an hour, near the town, and exchanged three shots without effect.—This was deemed by the parties trifling work, therefore, they agreed to meet in Virginia, which is distant about thirty miles, to fight it out. They met in the morning with their seconds, at the appointed place, and took their distance, ten yards; Rameke proposed half that distance, but his antagonist, who was deemed a better shot, objected. At the second shot, Butler was wounded, the ball passing thro' behind the knee. He chose to proceed. Each of them fired a third shot, but Butler, weakened by the loss of blood, could not stand any longer, & they stayed proceedings until Butler should recover. Their seconds have not deemed it necessary, in the usual manner, to assure the public, that the combatants behaved with the utmost intrepidity; for their desire of doing the business effectually, is obvious.

"Rameke, on the morning after the second action, to shew that he could do what Butler had attempted in vain, took a pistol, and disappointed his antagonist, by putting a ball through his own head. This new kind of challenge, will not, as we believe, become fashionable."

SALEM, Sept. 29.

A letter from an intelligent gentleman of this town, now in London, dated 9th Aug. contains the following paragraph —"This day an American gentleman arrived from Paris, and informed me, that the negociations between our envoys and the French government had been broken off—that capt. M'Neil had left Paris to prepare his ship for their reception—and that the first consul finding the envoys so determined, by some concessions, had prevailed on them to renew the negociations, and that the business had actually recommenced."

By Capt. Endicott, who arrived yesterday, in 32 days from Cadiz, we learn that letters had been received from Paris, which announced the failure of the American envoys in the object of their mission—that they were to take their departure from France in the Portsmouth, in about a fortnight, accompanied by a Commissioner from the government of France. That in consequence of this event, the trials of the armed captured American ships suspended, and it was conjectured that they would not be tried until the result of the French Commissioner's embassy was known.

The expedition against Portugal was very forward. A detachment consisting of three regiments, marched from Cadiz to join the invading army, a few days before Capt. Endicott left—

Cadiz is severely afflicted with the Yellow Fever—from 90 to 100 persons die daily—more than a third of the inhabitants have fled from the city. The sickness, however, did not extend to the shipping in the Roads.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 15.

Extract of a letter from Hamburgh, dated August 15.

"Every ship passing Altona is now boarded by a Danish officer. Two days ago an English ship was hailed, and returned an insolent answer, the mate and another person were taken out, and flogged so severely that the mate's life is despaired of. The merchants at Altona have voluntarily embargoed their vessels till the present dispute with England is adjusted."

Capt. Tyler from Tobago informs, that the news of the taking of Curracoa had reached that place before he sailed.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, November 15.

The political philosopher, in surveying the page of history, must have remarked that a change of masters is seldom followed by a change of affections on the part of the people. On the contrary, it most frequently increases their attachment to their former Sovereign and fellow subjects. Of this truth a very striking proof has been recently exhibited by the Clergy of Silesia—more attached to the House of Austria than to that of Brandenburg, whose dominion they regard as an usurpation; and feeling in the neutrality of the King of Prussia nothing but a cowardly desertion of the cause of God, while the Emperor Francis was looked upon as the avenger and supporter of the Holy Faith, they took the resolution of secretly imposing a tax upon themselves, the produce of which was intended to be transmitted to the Emperor, as a voluntary aid for carrying on the war of Religion and Monarchy. But this gift could not be made openly. It was necessary to adhere to the literal command of Scripture, which says, that the left hand should not know what the right hand does. Their left hand was in their conception the King of Prussia and his Ministers. Their gold was therefore collected in the most secret manner, packed up and placed in waggons, or fully covered with hay. The waggons then took the road to the frontiers of Bohemia.—But God, who is sometimes pleased to expose his elect to trials and vexations, to ordered it, that the spy arrested at its place of destination, but unaccompanied by a single groschen of the money. Some false brethren, who had been, perhaps, taxed beyond his proportion, or who, being more highly animated with the spirit of the Gospel, which says, Give unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, and seeing on the coin the effigy of the King of Prussia, thought Frederick William had a better title to it than Francis, contrived to transmit intelligence to the Court of Berlin respecting the means of conveyance, and the destination of the precious treasure. His Prussian Majesty, who is just as fond of money as Francis can be, took care that the waggons should be quietly intercepted, and sealed of the chests of gold, to the great relief of the horses, but to the highest displeasure of the Silesian Clergy, who must hence forth content themselves with assisting the Emperor by their prayers only.

The La Vengeance when taken by the La Sirene, as mentioned in our last, had 1,500,000 dollars on board.

Foreign News.

By an arrival at Portland, Maſſachuſetts, London dates to Auguſt 31.

ENGLAND.

LONDON, AUG. 31.

GOVERNMENT yeſterday received accounts of increaſed exertions to prepare the Breſt fleet for ſea; that conſiderable bodies of troops had been ordered thither from the frontetior, and that Buonaparte was about to repair to Breſt to accelerate and animate the meditated enterprize.

Lord St. Vincent has moored his veſſel in ſuch a manner, that whilſt the ſeaſon will admit of his retaining his ſituation, it is impoſſible that any veſſel of any deſcription can either leave or enter Breſt. Our tars were in high ſpirits at the proſpect of more active ſervice.

The public fonds yeſterday experienced a further riſe of one per cent under a prevalent opinion, that France had expreſſed a deſire to treat with the allies collectively for a general peace.—We are wholly unacquainted with the circumſtances which have induced this impreſſion. We are aſſured that citizen Otto, the agent for French priſoners in this country, who has been mentioned as the medium of pacific overtures from the French government to our cabinet, has not, directly or indirectly, received from Mr. Talleyrand, or any other individual compoſing the French executive, any communication which in the ſlighteſt degree involved the ſubject of negociation.

The flag of truce which ſailed from Dover on Tueſday, for Calais, returned on Thurſday, and was again ſent off for France on Friday. She was charged with diſpatches, ſtated to be from the tranſport office, but which were not directed to capt. Cotes, our agent for priſoners in France, or to citizen Talleyrand, the republican miniſter of Marine, as the ordinary communications of that board are wont to be addreſſed:—but from this nothing ſatisfactory can be collected.

We can however, with confidence ſay, that the court of Vienna, on ſigning the treaty with this country on the 12th inſt. iſſued a declaration to all the courts of Europe, announcing the determination of his imperial majeſty not to treat with France, except in conjunction with England and his other allies. This inſtrument is dated the 14th of Auguſt; we have ſeen an abſtract of it; the Hamburgh mail due this day will moſt probably put us in poſſeſſion of the detail.

The late diſpatches from lord Whitworth, we have reaſon to believe, were leſs ſatisfactory than government had expected. The Daniſh miniſter we are told, aſſumed a lofty tone, declaring that although his Daniſh majeſty ſhould be unaided by Ruſſia or Sweden, he would nevertheleſs aſſert the rights of nations, and oppoſe to the extent of his powers the tyranny of the Britiſh flag. The ſubſequent diſcourſe between the miniſters is ſtated to have been more moderate, but nothing leſs decided. We are not of opinion, that the interference of admiral Dickſon in the negociation will be neceſſary, but we are ſatisfied, that the preſence of his force will powerfully tend to its adjuſtment.

The following letters were in circulation yeſterday: we do not attach much conſequence or credit to them, but on a ſubject ſo important every thing has intereſt.

" YARMOUTH,

Friday evening.

" The Martin ſloop arrived here, left Elſineur on the 21ſt. Admiral Dickſon had a moſt boiſterous paſſage thither; his force conſiſts of ſeven ſhips of the line, one 50, two frigates, one ſloop, four bomb veſſels, and five gun veſſels: but it does not appear, by the accounts I have ſeen, that the tranſports had accompanied him into the ſound. Our 74's are placed along ſide the Daniſh ſhips of the line; our frigates againſt their's; and the Bombs, &c. are ſtationed cloſe to the caſtle of Cronenburg, waiting and anxious ſuſpence, the reſult of lord whitworth's negociations. Every ſhip is prepared for action."

DUNDE, Aug. 26.

" Laſt night arrived here, the Hope of this port, Robert Anderſon, maſter, from Riga, who reports that he left Elſineur on Thurſday the 21ſt inſtant under convoy of the martin ſloop of war: that in a ſhort time after lord Whitworth's arrival the Danes mooted four 74's acroſs the ſound, ſo as to block up the paſſage: that on Tueſday the 19th admiral Dickſon with ſeven ſail of the line, and a number of fire ſhips, gunboats, &c. arrived and came to anchor about three miles below the caſtle, upon which the Daniſh commodore ſent his boat on board the Britiſh fleet; that early next morning admiral Dickſon got under weigh in line of battle, with his men at their quarters, and brought up within piſtol ſhot of the Daniſh ſquadron; that the Romney, of fifty guns, with a cutter, were diſpatched up above Copenhagen, for fear our merchantmen might meet with detention there.—Next day, captain Anderſon ſailed and left matters in the above ſituation.

PARIS, Aug. 24.

We are this moment aſſured that Duroc has ſent out again for Vienna, accompanied by the ſenetor Barthelemy. We cannot ſay that this report is authentic though it has been repeated to us by a number of perſons who are in the way of being well informed. The only inference we can draw from it is, that as yet nothing is decided reſpecting the great object that now intereſts all Europe, and that this rumour gives riſe to ſome additional conjectures in favor of peace.

BOURDEAUX, Aug. 20.

General Alexander Berthier paſſed our walls on the day before yeſterday, travelling poſt in a berlin with ſix horſes, on his road to Spain. He ſtopped no longer than was neceſſary for him to change horſes, and appears to be very anxious to get to Madrid, where, it is ſaid, he has a million of importance to fulfil.

HAGUE, Aug. 19.

The day before yeſterday news was received here from Fluſhing, that five Engliſh line of battle ſhips, ſeveral frigates, and a number of tranſports, had appeared in ſight of that port. On the preceding day they had appeared off the heights of Cadſand, ſouth-weſt of Fluſhing.

Yeſterday morning early a ſtrong cannonade was heard from the mouth of the Maeſe. In the evening, we learnt that the Engliſh had attempted a landing at the break of day on Zealand, near the Briel.—They had actually landed a few troops on the moſt convenient part of the coaſt, but no conſequence ſeems to have reſulted from it. The Engliſh have alſo failed in their attempt to cut out a Batavian ſhip of the line. As ſoon as this landing was known, general Charlier marched with ſome Batavian troops to the ſpot, and obliged the Engliſh to re embark. They loſt five men. Our loſs conſiſts in two men killed and three wounded. Every precaution is taken to place our coaſt in the moſt formidable ſtates of defence, and general Charlier is left in the command of the mouth of the Maeſe.

Auguſt 20.

The projects of the army are no longer doubtful. They wiſh to eſtabliſh themſelves in Zealand, of which they wiſh to take poſſeſſion in the name of the Stadtholder. He has there a great number of partizans. Maſters of Zealand, they could unceaſingly harraſs the other parts of the Batavian republic, as well as the low countries, and would oblige the French and Batavians to keep conſtantly in them a great number of troops.

Extract of a letter from Conſtantinople, July 28.

" A few days ago freſh intelligence reached us from Egypt.

" General Kleber has been murdered, and general Menou has ſucceeded him in his command. It is reported that a Janiſſary under the pretence of delivering a petition to Kleber, ſtabbed him.—general Menou in a letter which he wrote to ſir Sidney Smith, ſays, that the aſſaſſin had been purpoſely ſent from Gaza to commit the murder.—But there are ſufficient reaſons to believe to the contrary; and Menou himſelf is accuſed of having hired the murderer, an Egyptian in diſguiſe, who was cut in pieces immediately after aſſaſſination.

" Other reports ſay, the murderer was probably actuated by private revenge, as the French had committed unheard of cruelties, eſpecially at Boulac, a ſuburb of Cairo, where they ſpared neither woman nor children.

" What occaſions the ſuſpicious againſt General Menou are his Jacobinical principles and having been at the head of that French party in Egypt, which was always againſt the evacuation of that army.

" General Kleber, who was as much beloved by the other party as they hate his ſucceſſor, is generally regretted here; and his death is the more unwelcome to the Porte as he was on the eve of adopting the capitulations of El-Ariſch for the evacuation of Egypt.—Menou immediately broke off theſe negociations, declaring that he firſt required the conſent of his government.

" The Porte will now take up arms again, and the grand vizer and captain Pacha are conjointly to decide the fate of Egypt by the ſword. The former is ſaid to have completed his army, and will have a reinforcement of 45,000 freſh troops, under the Pacha of Medena. The Captain Pacha has likewiſe a ſtrong corps of Albeneſe on board his fleet, and the attack will be made in various points.—When the laſt letters left Gaza, the captain Pacha had ſailed thence with his fleet.

" Tiocelebi Effendi, late paymaſter of the army of Egypt, has been appointed miniſter for foreign affairs. He is a man of great talents and influence and highly eſteemed by the Grand Signior."

INUNDATION IN CHINA.

The late overland diſpatch brought recent accounts from Canton, ſtating that an uncommon ſucceſſion of rain had laid entire diſtricts in China under water. The great river Hoambo had been ſwoln to ſuch exceſs, as totally to waſh from its banks many of the villages which adorned them, and inundate all the adjacent country. Such of the inhabitants as eſcaped this awful viſitation, had fled with the remains of their property to the hills.

The beautiful and level plains which lately exhibited all the rich variety of cultivation, were, at the date of theſe accounts, covered with boats employed in collecting the wreck of the country floating on the waters.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 18.

CURRACOA.

A gentleman from Kingſton (Jam.) which place he left the 22d Sept. arrived in town yeſterday morning, and has furniſhed us with the following information reſpecting Curracoa. On the 7th of Sept. the French made an attack on that place, in which they maſſacred about 80 Americans, together with a number of the Dutch inhabitants.—The reſt of the Americans and Dutch had fled into the port for ſafety, where they were fortifying themſelves.

In this attack the French plundered the ware houſes and pillaged and deſtroyed American and Dutch property to a conſiderable amount.

Capt. Hampton, of the Sally, belonging to this port, was at Curracoa, and had watched an opportunity to ſlip out in a ſmall boat and have communication with the Britiſh frigate Nitiad, cruizing off there, of the commander of which he requeſted aſſiſtance in the name of the government. The Nitiad furniſhed him with all the marines ſhe could ſpare with whom capt. Hampton returned. The governor of Curracoa had alſo ſent to Jamaica for ſuccors; and on the 20th Sept. 3 frigates with 700 troops left Kingſton for this purpoſe. The French who were in poſſeſſion of the town and adjacent country, amounted to about 1200 men. The fort which commands the harbor, was defended by the Americans and Dutch. Gen. Rigaud was at Curracoa at this time.

The gentleman from whom we received the above information, aſſures us that mr. Philips, the American conſul, had eſcaped the maſſacre and was ſafe in the fort. The Pickering ſloop of war had not been at Carracoa.

The Britiſh frigate it was thought would arrive at Curracoa in time to receive the beſieged, as captain Hampton aſſured our informant, that the fort was in a condition to hold out for a month.

NEW-YORK, October 20.

Yeſterday arrived at this port the Two Friends, captain Gardner, belonging to Dunlap and Grant, with dry good. She left London the 6th, and the Downs the 10th ult. London dates to the 9th, furniſh us but with little of importance. The papers are crowded with vague conjectures relative to pending negociations, and the recommencement of hoſtilities.

The difference between Great Britain and Denmark are amicably terminated. The Danes are to pay Great Britain two millions for the expences incurred in fiting out the naval armament and the Engliſh were to reſtore the frigate which they had taken, together with the convoy. The Danes have conſented to have their convoys examined, excepting thoſe in the Mediterranean.

We find nothing in the papers concerning our Envoys.—But a preſenger in the Friends informs, that juſt before they ſailed, news from Paris had been received that they were about departing for America.

General Kleber, it appears, was aſſaſſinated by Egyptian in diſguiſe. The Grand vizier is determined to decide the fate of Egypt ſword in hand—he was reinforcing his army to 100,000 men. Every thing threatened an immediate war with the French.

Duroc is ſaid to have left Paris again for Vienna, accompanied by ſenator Barthelemy.

Moreau and Lecourbe had arrived at Paris from the army. General Brune is to command the army of Italy, and Macdonald the army of reſerve.

Since the above was prepared for preſs, we were favored with the following letter

Extract of a letter from a reſpectable cantile houſe in London, to their correſpondence in this city, received by the Two Friends capt. Gardner.

" Advices from Germany, and France, indicate a renewal of war on the Continent, and which is to be decided by the 12th inſt. The Emperor's ſubmiſſion to the French, can alone prevent it. we have alſo advices of the 29th ult. from Paris, that your commiſſion is renewed, and that the negociation is again proceeding. We hope in conſequence of fuller inſtructions from your executive.

RICHMOND, October 7.

GEN. GABRIEL,

Who has been ſo inſtrumental in exciting an inſurrection among the negroes, had his trial yeſterday. He was convicted of the fact upon the ſtrongeſt teſtimony, and condemned to be hanged this day at the uſual place of execution. Gabriel during his trial appeared extremely uneaſy in his mind, as if laboring under the severest oppression of a guilty conscience. After sentence was passed, the court observed to him that much anxiety and trouble seemed to hang upon his countenance, and recommended an open confession of what he knew concerning the conspiracy, to relieve himself in a measure of the heavy burthen which evidently distressed him; however he made no discoveries, but pleaded with earnestness for the day of his execution to be put off till Friday.

MESSRS. PRINTERS,

IF you think the following worthy to fill a vacant place in your useful Gazette, you will much oblige many of your customers and readers; and as it is taken from a reality which happened in this vicinity, (Head of the Lake) in the family of Mrs. B*, it may appear more interesting, and perhaps, be a means to deter others of depraved sentiments, from being guilty of the like indecorum.

FOR THE ORACLE.

OH helpless orphins! how can we express,
Our mother's absence, and how we are distress!
To think we're left, and in disorder thrown,
No friend but papa, helpless and forlorn.

Our mother's gone, and left us here to grieve,
Oh! she who gave us life, forgets we live!
Oh tender mother! how could you thus desert,
And shut us from the feelings of your heart!

Left here exposed to ridicule and scorn,
To ills which make it misery that we're born;
Oh! wretched mother, how cou'd you do so wrong,
Go with a villian, and leave us when so young!

How can he hope for mercy, peace, or rest,
Who drove the pitty from our mother's breast;
Can love and reason all our cares forsake,
And nature sleep to keep our woes awake!

Can she who bore us blast us with her hate,
And steel our fortune for to make her great;
How can they prosper, who doth cause such woes,
Altho' they are harden'd and no pitty shows,

Sure they are guilty, tho' wish'd their faults conceal'd,
Some sentence pre-ordained will be full fil'd,
For plunging us in sorrow, grief and smart,
And ware us from the feelings of her heart.

But oh! whatever cause ordained her hate,
Let us but sigh in silence at our fate;
The God above perhaps may move her breast
To pitty us, when she thinks of our distress!

THE Universal Prayer.

FATHER of all! in ev'ry age,
In ev'ry clime, ador'd,
By saint, by savage, and by sage,
Jehova, Jove, or Lord!

Thou great first-cause, least understood,
Who all my sense confin'd,
To know but this, that thou art good;
And that myself am blind.

Yet gave me, in this dark estate,
To see the good from ill;
And, binding nature fast in fate,
Left free the human will.

What conscience dictates to be done,
Or warns me not to do,
This teach me more then hell to shun,
That, more than Heav'n pursue.

What blessings thy free bounty gives,
Let me not cast away;
For God is paid when man receives;
T'enjoy is to obey.

Yet not to earth's contracted span
Thy goodness let me bound,
Or think thee Lord alone of man,
When thousands worlds are round.

Let not this weak, unknowing hand,
Presume thy bolts to throw,
And deal damnation round the land
On each I judge thy foe.

If I am right, thy grace impart,
Still in the right to stay:
If I am wrong, oh teach my heart
To find that better way,

Save me alike from foolish pride,
Or impious discontent,
At ought thy wisdom has deny'd,
Or aught thy goodness lent,

Teach me to feel another's woe,
To hide the fault I see;
That mercy I to others shew,
That mercy shew to me.

Mean though I am, not wholly so,
Since quicken'd by thy breath;
O lead me wherefo'er I go,
Through this day's life or death.

This day, be bread and peace my lot;
All else beneath the sun,
Thou know'st if best bestow'd or not,
And let thy will be done.

To thee, whose temple is all space;
Whose altar, earth, sea, skies!
One chorus let all beings raise!
All nature's incense rise!

Benevolence.

HAIL! source of transport ever new;
Whilst thy kind dictates I pursue,
I taste a joy sincere:
Too vast for little mind to know,
Who on themselves alone bestow
Their wishes and their care.

Daughter of God! delight of man!
From the felicity began,
Which fill the Grand sustains:
By thee sweet peace her empire spread,
Fair science rais'd her hair'd head,
And discord gnash'd in chains.

Far as the pointed sun beam flies,
Thro' peopled earth and starry skies,
All nature owns thy nod:
We see thy energy prevail
Through being's ever rising scale,
From nothing ev'n to God.

Envy, that tortures her own heart,
With pangs and ever-burning smart,
Thy charm divine expel:
Aghast she shuts her livid eyes,
And, wing'd with ten fold fury, flies
To native night and hell.

By thee inspir'd, the gen'rous breast,
In blessing others only blest,
With goodness large and free,
Delights the widow's tears to stay,
To teach the blind their smoothest way,
And aid the feeble knee.

O come! and o'er my bosom reign,
Expand my heart, inflame each vein,
Through every action shine:
Each low, each selfish wish controul;
With all thy essence warm my soul,
And make me wholly thine.

Nor let fair virtue's mortal bane,
The soul-contracting thirst of gain,
My fairest wishes sway;
By her possess'd, ere hearts refine,
In hell's dark depth shall mercy shine,
And kindle endless day.

If from thy sacred paths I turn,
Nor feel their griefs, while others mourn,
Nor with their pleasures glow:
Banish'd from God, from bliss and thee,
My own tormentor let me be,
And groan in hopeless woe.

Foreign News.

LONDON, September 3.

IT seems to be pretty generally believed that a correspondence of some kind is carrying on between this country and France, and every circumstance that seems to bend that way gives rise to fresh rumours.

We announced yesterday the arrival of a flag of truce from Flushing, and one from Calais. With the former came two officers, reported to be Dutch, who, after waiting on the admiral, returned on board without having any communication with the shore.

It was immediately conjectured, and the conjecture quickly ripened into a report, that these gentlemen had come to this country with a proposal that the Dutch should join the French Republic in any discussions for peace with this country.

We should observe that our Deal correspondence do not agree respecting the place the flag of truce came from. One of them says Flushing, the other France. It will be nothing surprising, however, if the French Government be corresponding with ours, that the Dutch one should wish to do the same. In fact, the French have pledged themselves not to [illegible] these precautions therefore no conjecturers to establish such an opinion respecting the conduct of Holland; for, if the French and us are actually corresponding, the Dutch are virtually doing the same thing.

LONDON Sept. 1.

Extract of a letter from Sir Sydney Smith to general Menou, Commander in chief of the French army in Egypt, dated Joppa, June 22d, 1800.

"GENERAL,

"I received this evening the letter dated the 20th June, which you have done me the honor to write me.—At the moment at which I expected to see general Kleber under the most fortunate and favorable auspices, I learn with the highest chagrin, and with the greatest grief, his tragical death."

September 2,

Massena and Brune are about to repair to Paris, where it appears that the commanders in chief of all the armies of the republic have assembled, a circumstance which is of itself sufficient to remove all idea of the resumption of hostilities. If there were not other less ostensible reasons for this, it is erroneously supposed by some, that the trifling fall in the French funds was an anti-pacific symptom. It is the natural consequence of the delay which the new turn that the negociations have taken, has produced, in their expected issue. We shall in a few days see the hopes of the public rise more rapidly than they have fallen.

From the SUN of Sept. 3.

Extract of a letter from Paris, dated Aug. 26.

"I have learned through a certain channel that, in the conferences which Duroc has had with gen. Kray the latter has formally declared, that until a monarchy is established in France, neither Europe nor France can calculate on peace. Buonaparte has two lines of conduct to pursue, either to make king or to become one himself. The army of Italy appears to be in these intentions. Immediately after the battle of Marengo, it was in agitation to declare Buonaparte king. The army of Germany, it is said, is inclind towards a prince of the house of Bourbon. Moreau has had very frequent communications, not only with gen. Kray, but even with the court of Vienna. This court has proposed simply to re-establish Louis XVIII. Moreau has transmitted this proposition to Buonaparte. I cannot say what the chief consul may have in his head, but it is certain he plans fresh changes. Before long you may expect a new and a great revolution."

On this letter the editor of the courier de Londres makes the following remarks:

"These details reached us too late on Friday last to be inserted in our paper. Several English papers have attacked the postscript in which we announced them. We declare in the first place, that whether peace or war take place, we buoy ourselves up with no hopes. In the present arrangements, France and Europe appear to us equally ruined. We have no doubt that a revolution will soon be made in France; but we can foretel that this revolution will be similar to those which have preceded it; That it will resolve no difficulty, and that the public and private calamities will only be augmented by it.

LONDON, Sept. 4.

Yesterday afternoon we received by express Paris Journals to the 31st ult. inclusive. The contents of those papers are of the highest importance, and confirm, as far as they are entitled to credit, whatever we have dared to submit to the public upon the little probability of a peace with the republic of Buonaparte.

The material intelligence of these Journals is contained in a letter from Strasburgh, of the 26th and 27th ult. The official paper of the French government inserts, from the Frankfort chronicle, that the emperor has demanded in his last answer to the propositions of France, a new and prolonged term for the continuation of the armistice; and during which there should be time, under the mediation of a third power, to conclude a peace with the cabinet of St. James. Under the head of the Hamburgh mail will be found propositions asserted to be those of the French government to the cabinet of vienna. It is impossible to judge of the credit which may be due to them, since the extravagant ambition of Buonaparte, and his desire to elude a general peace, forbid us to reject any paper from internal evidence. There is nothing too inadmissible or too absurd to prove its own falsehood upon the part of that intriguing and violent government.

Put in whatever light the communication of the Moniteur, or of the Hamburgh mail is entitled to be considered the French Journals give us no hope of peace. Their language is that of hostility. We hear only of regiments and generals determined to march and conquer; and of the intituation of the house of Austria, which gives them the opportunity of adding to their laurels.

The clef du cabinet, one of the most authentic of the journals, informs us, under the date of Strasburgh, the 26th and 27th of August, that it is reported, that the mission of Duroc had been unsuccessful, and that hostilities would be immediately resumed, on account of the rejection of the grand consul's propositions, and the offer of a counter project, utterly irreconcilable with the honor or security of France.

A courier is then stated to have been dispatched from Augsburgh, with orders to general Desoles to signify to gen Kray the cessation of the armistice. The editor indeed adds, that another answer from the court of Vienna will be waited for, before the rupture of the armistice is absolutely determined upon. The low state of the French funds is thus sufficiently accounted for. At Amsterdam, the effect of the same despondency is discernable upon the exchange, and in the price of Batavian rescriptions.

The official paper states, that 12 ships of war and 80 English transports had anchored off Belleisle.

Sept. 6.

Yesterday advices were received from Minorca. By these we learn that the 35th regiment, which is 1900 strong—has been sent to Malta. The forces under gen. Abercrombie, consisting of about 900 men, have sailed to the Eastward, supposed to be destined for Egypt; and the general had left orders that the 4300 men which were landed on the island of Houat, but were afterwards re-embarked for the Mediterranean, should follow him. Among these are several hundred cavalry.

Sept. 9.

It was on the 29th ult. that lord Whitworth signed the convention with count Bernstorff, the Danish minister. The following is a copy of a note written by his lordship to one of our ministers abroad on the subject, and is more explanatory than any thing that has been published on the subject:—

"Copenhagen. Aug. 30.

"I have the satisfaction to acquaint you, that I yesterday signed a convention with the Danish minister, of terms satisfactory to his majesty, and such as will, I think, strengthen the bonds of friendship and alliance between the two countries.

(Signed) "WHITWORTH."

The following are the principal articles of the

CONVENTION:

"The Danish frigate and convoy, carried into Deal, shall be repaired at the expence of Great Britain, and then released.

"The discussion respecting the asserted rights of the English to visit convoys shall be adjourned to a further negociation in London.

"Until this point is decided, Danish ships shall only sail under convoy in the Mediterranean seas, to protect them from the Algerine cruisers. The Danish ships shall be liable to be searched as heretofore.

"The convention shall be ratified by the two courts within three weeks."

September 8.

We have hitherto had but extremely vague accounts respecting the convention agreed upon between Lord Whitworth and the Count de Bernstorff.—We think the following circumstances are the best authenticated. 1st. The Court of Denmark did not give its definitive answer until after the return of the courier who was sent to Petersburg. 2d. That court was to take no further notice of the pretended insult offered to its flag. 3d. That the frigate La Freya and its convoys should be set at liberty. 4th. That nothing should be held decisive as to the merits of the question, the decision of which was referred to a neutral power (not named) but that in the mean time the Danes should send no convoy into the enemies ports, and should conform to the laws already in existence. It is not difficult to ascertain the meaning of this half-finished affair. It is in consequence of the regard which our government pays to Paul I. that that emperor has already ordered M. Liskowitz, his charge d'affairs at our Court, to express to his Majesty his satisfaction at having the penalty of death remitted to the Russian soldier who was condemned to be hanged at Jersey. A more striking instance of the regard of our Monarch to his Imperial Majesty is that in the present circumstances, notwithstanding the irresistible means that we possess to command the submission of Denmark, we waited his answer without making use of those powers of which our imposing armament possessed us. We have also reason to presume, that the difficulty respecting the island of Malta, (which according to some politicians was the cause of the retreat of the Russians) has been adjusted. Thus every thing presages on the part of the two powers, an union of interests, of harmony, and of mutual co-operation, for which we have to thank the wise, prompt, and yet moderate measures, taken by our Government.—May Prussia and Austria entertain views equally pure, and calculated for so good a purpose, and may a new coalition, founded upon laudable principles, at length put an end to this sanguinary struggle, which threatens the subversion of all order, social and political.

The further destruction of the expedition under Sir James Pulteney, is according to the most probable opinion, to join in the Mediterranean the fleet of Sir Ralph Abercrombie, who appears to have failed for Egypt. We have long since given it as our opinion, that the troops under the command of the latter General were intended to force the French from Egypt; and we presume that our conjecture will soon be justified by the event. It is certainly of great importance, at a time when every thing seems, sooner or later, to tend to a negociation, to dispossess the enemy of a country of such consequence from its situation, and the productions which it is capable, by industrious cultivation and under a liberal and enlightened government. The moment is favorable on account of the death of Kleber, the best general in the French army in that quarter, and the divisions which prevail between the chiefs and the different corps of that army.

September 9.

Bills of indictment were found at the last assizes of Lifford (Ireland) against Mr. James Napper Tandy, for entering Rutland some time ago as a French officer, with an armed force, and it is said he will be tried in Dublin at the ensuing term.

In consequence of the great complaint of the citizens of Hague, &c. against the enormous taxes upon houses and lands the legislature held an extra convention the 27th of Aug. and repealed one fourth of the above burthen, which was 2½ per cent. on the valued rent.—They however at the same time laid a tax of 12 guilders per ann. upon hired men or women, either free or indebted, to be paid by the employer.

It is said in foreign prints, that the Russians have upwards of 20 sail of the line cruising in the North Sea.

The Pope has appointed cardinal Ruffo his minister plenipotentiary to the king of Naples. The Neapolitan troops are now returning from Rome to Naples. La Valetta, the capital of Malta, is now bombarded by the besiegers, who are preparing to storm it. Nine thousand Russians are expected at Naples. The Pope has protested against the French placing a garrison in Pesaro.

Great preparations for war are making in the Cisalpine territory, which, however, it is believed, are only intended to give weight to the negociations for peace. French and Cisalpine troops are marching to Romagna, where endeavours are secretly made to irritate the inhabitants against the French, and disturbances are apprehended. They may perhaps, be likewise intended against Naples. Commotions, robberies, and assassinations still continue in Piedmont.

Confirmation of the Assassination of KLEBER.

PARIS, September 6.

Government has received by the ship Osiris, from Egypt, official letters from the army.

Gen. MENOU to BUONAPARTE.

"H. Q. Cairo, July 3, 1800.

"Citizen Consul,

"A horrible event which has few examples in the annals of history, has raised me to the provisional command of the army of the East. Gen. Kleber was assassinated the 14th ult.—A wretch dispatched from Gaza about 48 days ago, by the Aga of the Janissaries of the Ottoman army, pierced with four thrusts of a poignard the general in chief, at the moment when he was walking with citizen Protain the architect upon the terrace, which from the garden of the head quarters commands a view of the place Ezbekier. Citizen Portain, in attempting to defend the general was himself pierced with six strokes of a poignard.—The first blow which Kleber received was mortal. He has fallen. Protain is still alive. The general, who was giving orders for the repair of the head quarters, and of the garden, had with him no aid du camp, none of the corps of guides.

"It was his wish to be alone. He was found expiring. The assassin, discovered under a heap of rubbish, and brought to the head quarters, acknowledged that he had been solicited to commit the crime by the Aga of the Janissaries of the Ottoman army, commanded by the Grand Vizier in person. The Vizier, unable to conquer the French fairly in arms, employed for his revenge the dagger, the weapon of cowards. The assassin called himself Soleyman el Alepi. He came from Aleppo; arrived at Cairo after having crossed the desart on a dromedary, he lodged at the Grand Mosque Eleazor, from which he came out daily to watch an opportunity to commit the crime.—He confided his secret to four subordinate Chiefs of the law, who sought to divert him from his purpose, but who, not having informed against him, have been arrested in consequence of the depositions of the assassin who was condemned to death, and executed the 19th of last month."

[Menou then relates the trial and execution of the assassin, and his confidents—the former was impaled and the latter beheaded.—It appears by General Menou's letter that Gen. Kleber had capitulated a second time, (April 21) for the evacuation of Egypt. Since then Menou is determined "to preserve to the Republic the magnificent colony of Egypt."]

WAR ASPECT.

Head Quarters, Frankfort, Aug. 28.

GENERAL ORDERS.

The Batavian army is informed, that the Emperor having refused to subscribe to the conditions of the Preliminaries of Peace, which had been signed by his Plenipotentiary at Paris, the government is under the necessity of continuing the war. The armistice is in consequence broken off, and it will cease to have effect the 7th September, at one o'clock, P. M.

The General Officers and Chiefs of corps will profit by this interval to pass the troops in review, and to dispose every thing in such manner that they may be able to march and fight as soon as they shall receive orders.

United States.

BOSTON, October 25.

Capt. Jamieson from Liverpool has furnished London papers to the 11th of September—three days the latest.—They merely confirm the rupture of the Armistice, and that hostilities between the French and Germans were to commence on the 7th Sept.—They establish the account of the assassination of Gen. Kleber, in Egypt.

The last accounts from one of the British Expeditions was, that it was off Vigo, in Spain.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, November 29.

ALL the intelligence received from the continent, either from the Paris papers or the Hamburgh mail, has much more the appearance of war than the preceding. The opinion of the best informed persons, however, is favorable to peace, at least, so far as regards the continent; and it must be confessed, that the reasoning on which that opinion is founded seems to be much stronger than the impression made by the foreign news is in favor of war.—On the side of France, the consular government has solemnly promised peace, as the price of that revolution by which it has been established on the ruins of the directorial government. Peace is the general wish of the French, and the hope of it their sole support in the midst of the calamities they suffer.—The first consul knows perfectly well, that his rivals and his enemies find more materials to satisfy their jealousy and their hatred in the continuation of the war, than they could after the conclusion of a peace. The most brilliant triumphs will not be sufficient to calm the discontents which must result from the continuance of the war, unless those triumphs shall lead immediately to the restoration of tranquility.

As to the negociation, or rather the proposition made by the first consul to our government to enter into a negociation, we yesterday stated on what it turned, and we persist in believing that all negociation will be for the present rejected, because it is no less the interest of the first consul to insist on a suspension of arms at sea, than it is ours peremptorially to refuse it.

LON. PAP.

A curious as well as a laughable circumstance occured on Market street wharf in Philadelphia, a few days ago. A countryman, from Morris's River, contracted with an oysterman, to pay him 50 cents, if he would open as many oysters for him as he could eat.—The oysterman had opened nearly one hundred oysters, which the countryman devoured, when he willed the countryman to give up the bargain; but the countryman persisted until he had eaten upwards of three hundred, to the great astonishment of the bye-standers, and the mortification of the poor oysterman, who sincerely repented of his bargain.—The oysterman then begged him to desist, but the countryman persisted, saying he had not enough; and he would most probably have eaten the whole in the barrow, nearly 500 oysters, but by the solicitations of the bye standers, he let the oysterman off and paid him the 50 cents. During this voracious meal, the countryman drank seven large glasses of brandy and water, and eat twelve large biscuits.

POLITICAL REVIEW.

IN a former paper we reviewed ſeveral of the cauſes and effects which might lead ultimately to the concluſion of a general peace. We ſhall now proceed to conſider how far it may be the intereſt of France, as well as of the firſt conſul, to cultivate that deſirable event. It is evident that the vaſt exertions which that nation has made during the courſe of the war, has weakened its ſtrength, broken the power of its navy, annihilated its commerce, and impoveriſhed its people. The armies have doubtleſs performed wonders; but thoſe very feats of arms, by which their violent conqueſts have been atchieved, neceſſarily tend to increaſe their expences, exhauſt their revenues, and to diminiſh population. It ſhould be remembered that France has encountered for ſeveral years a fierce, deſtructive civil war, as well as powerful foreign enemies, and civil wars are, of all others, thoſe which moſt lay waſte and exhauſt a country.

In addition to theſe circumſtances, we muſt reflect on the ravages which faction and fanaticiſm have cauſed, the reſentments they have excited, the moral vices they have demoliſhed, the vices they have let looſe.

As war has a direct tendency to foment inſtead of banihing theſe evils, and as amidſt the noiſe of arms, and the diſſolution of ſocial order, ſome men of good ſenſe and moderation are to be found there, who muſt ſincerely wiſh for peace, the only ſecurity againſt the return of ſimilar miſfortunes: as the ſavage ſpirit of Jacobiniſm, tho' not extinguiſhed, lies dormant, and may in conſequence expire in the midſt of its reſtleſs inactivity, there is great reaſon to believe that peace would realize theſe expectations, at leaſt, it holds out ſufficient temptations, to encourage and to flatter the wiſhes of the people.—But we would not be underſtood, by what has been alledged above, to paſs any encomium on the preſent deſpotic government, by which Jacobiniſm, and its inevitable concomitants, proſcription, rapacity and murder, are, in ſome degree ſubdued. That government ſprang from fraud, perjury, and uſurpation; and it is ſtill upheld by the ſtrong arm of military coercion. There is an eſſential diſtinction between the acquiſition of power and the employment of it, and on this diſtinction we are to reſt our judgments. Without commenting, therefore, on the mode in which the Firſt Conſul ſeized that authority, which tho' leſs offenſive than that of Louis XIV. in all the plenitude of deſpotiſm, is nevertheleſs equally energetic, we think it proper to obſerve, that many acts of moderation, clemency, and even of political wiſdom, have diſtinguiſhed his violent uſurpation. Whether theſe acts have reſulted from a conſciouſneſs of paſt crimes, a ſincere ſpirit of repentance, and an honeſt deſire to heal the bleeding wounds of France, or from an affected magnanimity, by which Buonaparte hopes to delude foreign governments, to cajole his own ſubjects, and to conſolidate his power, is a queſtion that muſt be reſolved according to the eſtimate which every one forms of the character of that artful man. We who have followed him throughout the whole of his ſanguinary career, both in Italy and Egypt, and have diſcovered in both of thoſe countries indelible marks of ſimulation and diſſimulation, of a refined ferocity, of a dark, diſguiſed, and unrelenting policy, cannot be ſuddenly brought to retract our opinion, without further evidence to direct our judgments. The moſt bloody tyrants whoſe names blacken the pages of hiſtory, have been known to diſtinguiſh the firſt moments of their uſurpation by ſplendid acts of munificence and liberality.—There are a few inſtances on record of continued virtue, but it is a melancholy reflection, that the generality have relapſed into their former violent natures, and have ſhocked humanity with the detail of their enormities. If there has been one Cæſar, there have been too, a thouſand Syllas.

From this truth, we cannot avoid commending, in the higheſt terms, the wiſe and cautious deliberation of our government, in anſwer to the firſt propoſals of the Conſul. A man of Corſica, the other day unknown to the world, but by the eccentricities of fortune, too fatally illuſtrated in Europe, Africa, or Aſia, baſely deſerts from an army, which had raiſed him above the croud, returns unauthoriſed to France, and overthrows in one day the government and liberties of his country, which he had ſworn to ſupport. A few days after, with an oſtentatious confidence, which has no parallel in hiſtory, he addreſſes perſonally the ſovereigns with whom his country is at war, and artfully concealing the original cauſes of the quarrel, inſolently offers peace to thoſe on whom his country firſt waged war.

Confidence is, perhaps, as neceſſary to a ſtateſman as to a general. It has done, and it may yet do, prodigies for Buonaparte. But there is a confidence which leads to inſult and ſometimes to provocation: and if it be unaccompanied by prudence, it degenerates into inſolent boaſting. Conſidered in this light, the very propoſals of the Firſt Conſul were not only raſh, ill timed, and ill judged, but they had a tendency, at that time, to counteract the object which he profeſſed to cheriſh. The whole farce ſeemed more calculated to ſoften down the violence of uſurpation at home, than to cultivate friendſhip abroad. France could at that period be compared only to the paſſive dung-hill, for, whilſt a batch of cocks were contending. After mutually fighting and killing each other, a cunning little game cock beats them all off, mounts to the top, ſtrutts, capers, and crows out to all the world that he is in poſſeſſion of the dung-hill. The natural queſtion is, "How long will you remain there? What ſecurity have we that ſome other game cock may not peck you down at the next round? Shew us that you have power to keep the ground, ſkill & prudence to make good uſe of it, and then we ſhall have ſome "reaſon to liſten to you." We believe that if Abbe Sieyes could be brought ſeriouſly to ſpeak his mind, he would reaſon as we do, and he might have added to the Firſt Conſul, like Trinculo in the Tempeſt, 'You ſhall be King, and I'll be Viceroy over you."

On the ſide of Auſtria every thing ſeems to bend towards peace, notwithſtanding the preſent appearances of war. We have ſeen during this campaign, that a miſunderſtanding prevails among the Generals, diſcouragement among the inferior officers, and among the ſoldiers a diſcontent approaching to inſurrection in ſome parts of the army.—The preſence of the Archduke at the head of the armies would indeed remove the greater part of the diſorders; but the prevailing party at the Court of Vienna oppoſes his return, or at leaſt refuſes to conſent to it on the terms which that Prince requires, in order to free himſelf from the ſhackles by which he was laſt year fettered; and, beſides, whatever courage or emulation his preſence might communicate to the troops he could not make them equal in numbers to thoſe of the enemy, and enable them to make head to the formidable & well connected front which the French preſent from Mentz to the Mediterranean ſea. The German papers indeed have told us, that the army of the Danube has received reinforcements, but without ſaying to what amount; that of the Tyrol becomes more conſiderable every day; and that the army of Italy has been augmented by 27,000 men.—But the accounts are leſs poſitive than thoſe which preſent to our view the effective march of the reinforcements that are repairing to the armies of the enemy. The troops of Kray, diſcouraged by their repeated diſcomfitures and continual retreats, are unfit to reſiſt thoſe of Moreau. It is againſt the army of Tyrol, that the firſt efforts of the French will be made: and when we ſee a general, like Baron Stader, oppoſed to that quarter to ſuch a man as Lecourbe, the bets cannot be in favour of the ſucceſs of the former.

Whatever reinforcements may be ſent to Italy, we much doubt whether they will be able to fill up the void made in the army of Melas by his frequent defeats, and the deſertion of the Italians, who compoſe the major part of it. To which it may be added, that theſe reinforcements, formed of new levies, cannot be compared with thoſe of the French, who for ten years, have heard only the din of arms, the ſhouts of liberty, the recitals, true or falſe, of the multiplied victories, and declamations againſt the powers of wiſhing to diſmember their country, and bring them again under the yoke of ſlavery. Thus is it they fanaticize their troops, and give to their conſcripts and requiſitionifts an enthuſiaſm which ſupplies the want of experience.

When we reflect, therefore, on the intereſt which the Firſt Conſul has to make peace, and on the extreme difficulty which the Emperor muſt find to carry on the war, we are inclined to believe, that all formidable preparations which ſeem to banith all hope of the former, and render the latter immediately inevitable, may terminate in a manner leſs terrible than theſe hoſtile appearances ſeem to indicate. Whether the Court of Vienna wiſhes to have the ſemblance of being forced to extricate itſelf from the engagements it has contracted with Great Britain, or, whether it has really a repugnance to the conditions offered by the Firſt Conſul, we are apt to think that either hoſtilities will not be renewed, or that they will be made a mere pretence, and that conſequently a peace of ſome kind will take place on the Continent, which will laſt as long as it may be maintainable. This pacification would be much more ſatisfactory to the wiſhes of the public, if it ſhould have for promoters and guarantees the two great powers Ruſſia and Pruſſia.

LONDON.

The public were ſome time ago informed that the Trincomalee armed ſhip was blown up during an engagement in the Arabian Gulph with a French privateer, but the particulars were not known; the following letter from Mr. John Carmlington, the firſt officer of the ſhip Pearl, in the country trade of the hon. Eaſt India Company, who was a priſoner on board the privateer at the time of the engagement, to his brother in Newcaſtle, gives a full detail of this melancholy event:—

Muſkat, 29th Oct. 1799.

Shortly after my laſt, capt. Spence, of the Pearl, proceeded to India to purchaſe a veſſel for two more for the Gulph trade. Mr. Joſeph Cambridge Fowler, the chief officer, was appointed to the command of the Pearl, and I ſucceeded him in his former ſtation. On the 1ſt of October we got clear of Buſſora River, bound for Bombay, and were proceeding very pleaſantly on our voyage until the 7th, when, having got two thirds down the Gulph, at nine o'clock at night, we were ſuddenly ſurpriſed by the appearance of a ſhip cloſe to us; ſhe had been lying under an iſland called the Great Tomb, and had ſeen us before ſun-ſet, tho' we had not perceived her.—We hailed each other, and to our ſorrow we found her to be French. An action commenced; but her fire was ſo much ſuperior to ours, that ſhe ſoon drove the Laſcars from their quarters, and the whole of them ran below. The privateer was at this time about piſtol ſhot from us, and preparing to board, and not an armed ſoul to receive them except myſelf and five or ſix Arabs, who had never flinched.

Under ſuch circumſtances I was under the diſagreeable neceſſity of ſtriking to her, after throwing three packets of government diſpatches overboard.—We had previouſly endeavoured to run, but unluckily our maintop ſail tye was ſhot away. Capt. Fowler was ſhot thro' the body with an 8 pound ſhot the ſecond broad ſide; we had likewiſe three Laſcars wounded, one of whom died ſhortly after. I had a grape ſhot thro' my trowſers, which grazed the back part of my thigh, and a ſlight wound on my left by a ſplinter from the ſame ſhot which killed the captain. We did not engage above a quarter of an hour. I was taken on board the privateer; ſhe had nobody killed on board, and only ſome ſhot through her ſails. She was named L'Eſphigine, capt. Maltoix, from the Iſle of France, mounting 18 guns, two of them 48 pound carronades, ſix long French 8 pounders, 10 do. do. ſix pounders; and 170 or 180 men. We had only 10 guns, and all of them ſmall, and of different ſizes, none of them good except 2 9 pounders, and 50 men, all natives but the capt. and myſelf. They got in us a very valuable prize, as we had on board 110 packages of treaſure, value upwards of three lacks of rupees, 40 horſes, 500 ſlabs of copper, beſides ſeveral bales, cheſts, &c.

The treaſure was ſhifted on board the privateer the next day, and they were ſo elevated with their ſucceſs, that they determined to return from their cruize immediately; but on the 10th at night we fell in with his Majeſty's ſhip Trincomalee, capt. Rowe, mounting 18 24 pound carronades, but badly manned; her crew very ſickly, had loſt a number of them by death, and had no freſh ſupply. I have been told ſhe had only 70 active men on board; a partial action took place the next day as they paſſed each other, and on the 12th at 3 P. M. they came within gun ſhot again, and kept firing at each other till after ſunſet but at too great a diſtance for much damage to be done; owing to calms and light airs they could not get near to each other. A ſchooner named the Comet, was in company with the Trincomalee, mounting 8 ſmall guns. The capt. of the privateer wanted very much to cut her off, but through the bravery and good conduct of her capt. all his ſchemes failed and ſhe ſerved to engage the Pearl, for whom ſhe was more than a match.

At half paſt ſix o'clock the ſame evening, a fine breeze ſpringing up, the privateer bore down towards her prize; the Trincomalee followed, and at 10 P. M. (being moonlight) brought her to action, which continued with great fury for two hours within muſket ſhot, when, with one ſhip ſuffing up, and the other edging down, they fell along ſide each other, and grappled muzzle and muzzle. In this ſituation they remained about half an hour, the ſlaughter very great on both ſides. The French being more numerous, were preparing to board, when by ſome fatal accident, the Trincomalee blew up, and every ſoul on board periſhed, except one Engliſh ſeaman, named Thomas Dawſon, and a Laſcar. The exploſion was ſo great, and the ſhips ſo cloſe, that the privateer's broadſide was ſtove in.

I leave you to judge the dreadful ſituation I was in at this criſis, being below two decks in the ſquare of the main hatchway, in the place appropriated for the wounded, which was full of poor ſouls of that deſcription, in circumſtances too ſhocking to be deſcribed. All at once the hatchway was filled up with wood, the lights were driven out, the water ruſhing in, and no viſible paſſage to the deck. The ſhip appeared to be ſhaken to pieces, as the hold beams had ſhrunk ſo conſiderably, that where there was room before to ſtand nearly upright, you could now only crawl on hands and knees, which I did towards the hole in the ſide where the water was coming in; cloſe to this, by the light of the moon, I found a hole thro' both decks, which had been newly made, I ſuppoſe, by the falling of ſome of the Trincomalee's guns, or other wreck. Through this I got with difficulty upon deck, when I found the ſhip juſt diſappearing forward, and haſtened aft as faſt as I could over the bodies of the killed, with which the deck was covered, to the taffarel, and jumped overboard.

I ſwam a little way from her, dreading the ſuction, and looking round for her, but ſhe totally diſappeared. I afterwards caught hold of a piece of wood, to which I clung for about an hour and a half, at which time the boats of the Pearl came to pick us up, there being nearly thirty Frenchmen in the same predicament. They however, were all taken up first; and when I solicited to be taken in, I had a blow made at my head with an oar, which luckily missed me. This treatment I met with from two different boats, and I began to think they were going to leave me to my fate, but the French officer in command of the Pearl, hearing there were some Englishmen upon the wreck, ordered the boats immediately to return, and take us up, viz. myself and Thomas Dawson, then the only survivors of the Trincomalee.

There were killed and drowned on board L'Iphigine 115 or 120 men, among whom were the captain, seven officers, surgeon, two young men volunteers from the Ile of France, the first boatswain, gunner and carpenter. All the treasure went down in the privateer —Capt. Rowe, of the Trincomalee, was killed before the ship blew up, as was also the first lieutenant, whose name was Williams. The Comet, immediately on the accident happening, made sail from the Pearl. I suppose she was afraid there might be too many Frenchmen for her to manage. On the 15th we arrived here for water, &c. and the French officer was so good as to give me my liberty -They let me come on shore on the 24th, the day the Pearl sailed. They disposed of their horses here, and I have bought them in again for Mr. Maneffy, the Company's resident at Burlora. I hope in two or three days to put them all on board a vessel for Bombay, in which I also take a passage."

BERMUDA, August 2.

His Excellency the Governor this day closed the Session with a Speech, of which the following is an extract:

"Among the signs of the present times, it cannot escape the notice of the most superficial observer, that a disposition has been excited and nourished by France, every where dangerous, and too often fatal to the repose even of the happiest communities. Whether we turn our eyes to the East or to the West, to the North or to the South, the evidence of this truth, with all its baneful consequences, presents itself in full deformity to our view. In some countries this disposition is manifested by sudden and violent revolt, in others the poison works slowly and silently thro' the body politic, until at length it acquires a maturity which no art can conquer; in some it is vigorously promoted by all the aids of infidelity; in others it affects to breathe the benign spirit of the Gospel, perverting with the most impious hypocrisy the mild doctrines of our blessed Redeemer, into an engine of crooked policy of the blackest nature. In all parts of the world however, where this disposition has been cultivated, by its fruit we know it, Arrogance—Imperious assumption of Authority—Falsehood—Perfidy—Implacability—Mockery of Law—Infatiate Extortion—Cruelty—Murder. Firm to its purpose, although various in its means, no object is too mighty for its ambition, none too minute for its revenge. There are countries yet in the dawn of these calamities.—There are countries that groan under them in all the fire of meridian effulgence. There are countries whose very vitals being thus exhausted, the curtain of night has closed for ever.—Such being a faint sketch of these times, and such the evils with which Providence, in its dispensation, is pleased to afflict the world, it is becoming the wisdom of an enlightened legislature flexibly to bear them in remembrance, and in guarding against their destructive effects, to be impressed with a conviction of this important truth, that liberty, whether religious or civil, is not an immunity from restraint, but the being restrained by no law but what in a greater degree conduces to the general welfare, thereby happily uniting the progress of truth with the peace of society, the right of private judgment, with the care of the public safety.

"GEO. BECKWITH."

FROM ST. DOMINGO.

Head quarters, Sept. 1.

Toussain L'Ouverture, commander in chief of the army of St. Domingo, to the republican army, which I have confided to the care of gen. Desfolines against the insurgents of the south, commanded by Rigaud.

Generals, officers and patriots! Your conduct, your submission, your moderation, and that bravery you have ever displayed in defending the sacred cause of liberty against the wretch who has insulted and attacked it, have compelled him to abandon a country which he has often drenched with the blood of his fellow citizens. I therefore declare that you have deserved well of your country.

Language cannot enable me to express the measure of my satisfaction, Soldiers of liberty, with the magnanimity of freemen you have defended the cause of liberty against the deadly blows with which she has been threatened. You have conquered, and nothing on your part is required, but a continuance of your good conduct, to ensure the affection and esteem of your grateful fellow-citizens!

That the glory with which you are enveloped may be never tarnished by an unworthy deed, I have ordered that a standard be given to each brigade, on which shall be inscribed, in large characters, the name of its commander, with the following records:-discipline, valour and subordination, have gained the victory.

Often, my friends, shall you turn your eyes on this inscription. It will preserve you from dishonor, the enevitable result of insubordination, and defective discipline.

The god of armies has not deserted us in battle; and after having returned thanks to Almighty God for his infinite mercies, each military corps shall return to its respective garrison. I have therefore ordered the commandants of garrisons to prepare to meet the different commanders of brigades, according to the instructions they have previously received, and to conduct them formally to the city, where they shall immediately repair to the temple of our God, to whom then they shall repeat their unfeigned thanks, for his great goodness in having deigned to preserve that glory which you have so nobly acquired by your valour and your arms. You shall there supplicate the holy protection of the Supreme arbiter of the universe. It will give you strength and courage: You have conquered, but it is to God that you are indebted for your exploits, for such has been his will. Therefore, my friends, remember your Creator and his divine commands, for he doth all things, and we can do nothing ourselves. Pray him likewise for our departed brethren in arms, who have fallen in a sacred and lawful cause.

My brave soldiers, that your future conduct may be worthy of the past, be temperate, be prudent; and observe the laws of discipline and subordination. Regard every citizen as a brother, without distinction; but be never seduced by the machinations of the wicked. Never harbour for a moment the rankling spirit of revenge; and above all things respect the person and property of individuals, and see that others respect them.

Long live the French republic and the army of St. Domingo.

(Signed) TOUSSAINT L'OUVERTURE.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, December 6.

CROMWELL & BUONAPARTE.

"In a long and elaborate parallel lately drawn between the two great modern usurpers, Cromwell and Buonaparte, the following passage points out some shades of difference in favor of the latter.

"Fortune elevated Cromwell to a degree of power, to which his birth and the ordinary course of events would allow him no pretensions. Fortune has now been prodigal of similar favors upon Buonaparte. Both obtained their elevation in the midst of public troubles; both distinguished themselves by victory; but one gathered his laurels only in the devastated fields of civil war, the other has more frequently triumphed over foreign enemies. Both inscribe their rights to empire on the blades of bayonets, and the threatened front of grenadiers. Both delivered their country from a turbulent and odious senate; and had they not the ambition to succeed to its power, would have deserved the praises of posterity. Both under the vain pretext of liberty, invested themselves with monarchial power,—but with this difference, however, that the one brought his king to the scaffold, and the other has only seated himself upon the throne of his lawful sovereign."

Stupendous Work,

M. Sonnenleither, of Vienna, who is at this time on his travels in the north has published his prospectus of his history of music, and the most celebrated composers with their biography and portraits. It is to consist of fifty volumes in folio; the price of subscription to be 100 ducats of Holland. The text to be in four languages, viz. German, French, English and Italian.

In Pallas's new travels is mentioned a method practised in Russia, by which the quantity of spirits producable from a given quantity of grain, is greatly increased. It consists in reducing the temperature of the hot water used in the mash, by the addition of cold water and ice, whereby the escape of the spirituous particles, during the fermentation, is prevented.

ANECDOTE.

A certain captain, remarkable for his uncommon height, being one day at the rooms at Bath, a lady noticing him, enquired who he was; when she was informed of his family and connections, and that he was originally intended for the church; to which she replied, he was better suited for the steeple.

Foreign News.

FRANCE and AMERICA.

PARIS, Oct. 3.

"A Convention of Amity and commerce between France and the United States of America was signed the day before yesterday, by the French ministers Joseph Buonaparte, C. P. Claret, Fleurer, and Rodirere— and the American commissioners, Oliver Ellsworth, W. R. Davie and W. V. Murray."

"It was less necessary to revert to the past than to revive between the two nations useful and honorable relations, the treaty has fulfilled this object,—The French ministers, convinced that the prosperity of America could not but add to the prosperity of France, have been led particularly to consecrate maxims most favourable to the rights of neutrality, and most conformable to the regulations of 1778.—The first consul in restoring force to that regulation 4 months ago, fulfilled the wish of justice and of Europe; and undoubtedly it will be delightful to him to evince himself anew, faithful to his principles, by ratifying the treaty concluded by the ministers of the republic, at a moment in which Europe resounds with the violation of neutral flags.

"The American ministers on their side appreciated the advantage of being allied to a nation governed at length with wisdom and firmness. Every thing announces that a strict and durable friendship is about to reanimate the mutual commerce of the two nations.

"The convention signed by the Emperor produces a great sensation in Germany. The mal contents and partizans of England accuse him of having abandoned the interests of the Empire, which is not true."

Malta Surrendered.

LONDON, October 6.

Government received this morning dispatches of importance from Paris,—they are supposed to contain the final answer of the chief consul. The ship which brought them, brought us Paris papers to the 4th inst. the contents of which are of considerable importance. Malta has at length surrendered to the English. On the 2d Sept. a council of war was held, at which, on account of the total want of provisions, it was agreed to, send a flag of truce to Maj. Gen. Pigot, with a proposal to surrender the Island. On the 5th the articles of capitulation were agreed upon and signed. The garrison are considered prisoners of war, and are not to serve against his Britannic majesty until they have been regularly exchanged.

This event is of considerable moment. It removes one of the obstacles of an arrangement of a naval armistice, which will enable Great Britain to negociate with more effect at the Congres of Luneville.

The negociations between France and America, have been concluded, and a convention of Amity and commerce was signed on the 1st instant, at Paris, by the French and American Commissioners.

Congress of Peace.

The Emperor has gone back to Vienna, and Count de Lehrbach is daily expected at Straubrugh on his way to Luneville, where very active preparations for the Congress are making. The chief consul's brother, Joseph Buonaparte, is to be the Negociator on the part of the French

A circular letter has been addressed to all the Foreign ministers at Madrid, enclosing a letter to the Swedish minister of Foreign affairs. The court of Stockholm is required to demand reparation, and the restitution of the Spanish frigates, and is informed, that if its representations to the court of London are not attended with the desired effect, before the end of the year his catholic majesty will adopt measures of precaution towards the Swedish flag."

On the 30th and the 31st of August, Lord Keith sailed from Minorca, with 15,000 troops. He proceeded to the Eastward, and is supposed to be gone either to Naples or Egypt.

Two of the frigates which did so much damage on the Coast of Africa have been taken.

PARIS, September 29.

It was remarked that at the dinner which the first consul gave on the 1st Vendemaire, a toast was given to the 16 United departments.

It was said that general Clark was to set out last night for Luneville.

The accounts from Italy state, that the French Government have demanded and obtained from the pope, the removal of the Neapolitan troops from Rome, it appears also that general Mylins has surrendered the command of Ancona to general Knezevich.

September 30.

General Clark did not set off for Luneville till 1-2 night. It is said that the French government were determined to consent to an armistice, by the declaration made by Prussia, that the northern powers will not see with a favourable eye, the ulterior progress of the French; and that if they continue to drive the Austrian army back, Prussia would reinforce the Cordon, which occupies the line of demarcation, with 6000 men, and that another army of the same force would have orders to hold itself ready to march.

On the 22d Sept. the emperor returned to vienna with count Lehrbach.

LUNEVILLE Sept. 28.

Yesterday the sub perfect and secretary arrived here and proceeded to the castle to agree upon the repairs to be made in that superb edifice, in which the interests of so many nations are to be discussed. A theatre is to be established here.

Luneville, the place appointed for the congress, is a small, very old, and anciently fortified town of the province of Lorain, which province now forms the three departments of Meurthe, Moselle and the Vosges. It is about 140 miles east of Paris.

LODENA, Sept. 25.

Lucca has been entirely evacuated by the French. The Austrians have also evacuated Ferrara, and repassed the Po. Before they left it, they exacted a contribution of 80,000 crowns.

The French were yesterday in the environs of Fulda. It is said there was a slight attack of advanced posts near Neuhoff.

The emperor set off yesterday morning for Vienna, with count Lehrbach. The greater part of the French army is retiring from Bavaria into Suabia, where it is to resume its cantonments.

STRASBURG, Sept. 29.

We expect here Moreau and count de Lehrbach, who have not passed through our city, as was reported. We learn that the courier who was bearer of the new armistice, reached general Angeron too late, for hostilities had already commenced on the right bank of the Mein. A column of our army had penetrated to Fulda, after having beaten the enemy near Neuhoff.

Ratisbon is again occupied by general Bonnot.

Army of Batavia, right wing.

Order of the day on the first Vendemaire.

The army is informed that there is a prolongation of the Armistice for 45 days, on condition of the surrendered of Ulm, Ingolstadt and Phillipsburgh—which has been fented to by the Emperor.

ANDREOSI.

STUTGARD, Sept. 23.

We have received news that Ulm is already open.

AUGSBURG, Sept. 23.

It has this day been announced as certain, that the emperor has signed the Preliminaries of peace, but they are to be kept secret. It is added, that they differ in tenor from those signed at Paris.

ULM, September 27.

General Colaud, who blockaded our city, came here the 24th, to concert with Gen. Perich upon the surrender of the fortress; on the next day he ordered the gate of the Danube to be occupied by the French troops. In three days the forts raised round the city, will be surrendered to general Richepause.

FRANCE.

PARIS, Sept. 23.

The following letter has been sent by gen. Moreau, to the archduke John, commanding the Austrian army.

HEAD QUARTERS,

Nymphenburgh, Sept. 18.

General in chief,

I have this instant received, by the telegraph, the answer of the government to the dispatches of which its courier was the bearer from Vienna. I cannot communicate to you in a more satisfactory manner the orders which it has transmitted to me than by literally transcribing them. "Announce to the commander in chief of the Austrian army, that the emperor refuses to ratify the preliminaries of peace, and that you are compelled to recommence hostilities. You may, however, consent to an armistice for a month, if the enemy instantly surrenders to you places of security. M. de Lehrbach is immediately to be furnished with passports."—You see gen. that the intentions of the first consul are conspicuously manifested in favor of peace, since the renewal of hostilities depends only on the ratification of the treaty of preliminaries concluded with M. de St. Julien; and that he thinks it his duty not to expose himself to endless diplomatic discussions without securities for the enemy's intentions. I have charged the general of brigade Lahorie, to proceed to the advanced posts, of the army under my command, for the purpose of requiring of you the places of security for which new conjectures justify us in making the demand. Should the propositions which he has to submit to you be rejected, hostilities will be resumed after to-morrow at break of day (the third complementary day, Sept. 20.)—I beg your royal highness will receive the assurance of the high consideration with which I am, &c.

LONDON, Sept. 29.

THE note from Buonaparte to the public functionaries afcertains the fact of a proposition of a naval armistice between this country and France.

A cabinet council was held on Friday at which a naval armistice is reported to have been resolved upon; and judging from the peculiar circumstances of some large purchases made that day and on Saturday at the stock exchange, we have no doubt of the truth of the report. The treaty was dispatched for Dover on Friday evening, sailed for Cadiz on Saturday, and would reach Paris yesterday. We know nothing of the terms, but as the discussion has been going on for a considerable time, we may suppose that the principal objectionable points have been settled in such a manner, that the naval armistice may be expected to be soon ratified and returned.

On Saturday night further dispatches were sent off for Paris, and every thing announces that the negociations are very active.

May a lond and lasting peace be the result!

Should the terms of the naval armistice be such as the first consul will not accede to, a seperate negociation between France and the emperor will be the result.

Stocks opened high this morning, the 3 per cents at 67 1-2 5 8, but they fell soon after to 66 1 8.

DESULTORY SUMMARY.

NEW YORK Nov. 6.

Extract of a letter from the American consul at Liverpool, dated 12th September.

"Meffages between Calais and Paris continue as frequent as ever. General Abercrombie has abandoned the project of attempting Malta.—Our commissioners at Paris are going on well."

EXTRACT.

Various have been the reports of late, respecting the progress which our commissioners in France are making in the adjustment of our differences with that nation. The report of one day is almost regularly effaced by that of the next.—The manner in which our commissioners have been represented dancing about Paris from conful to minister, and from minister to conful, reminds me of a diverting representation which I lately met with of a "Ballet Irlandois." The pealantry of Ireland have ever been diftinguifhedly fond of dancing, but from the volatility of their natures, and the uncultivated ftate both of pupil and maſter, each of whom in many parts of the interior would often find a difficulty to diftinguifh the difference between the right and the left, being terms with which they are wholly unacquainted, and who, during the rudiments of the agile ftudy, require fome means to diftinguifh the particular leg that fhould make the required movement, deemed it expedient to faften round one ancle a hay rope called a Sugeen, and upon the other a Sally-fwitch, denominated a Gad, the dancing maſter audibly finging out—"Rife upon Sugeen ;—fink upon Gad ; now paddy fut it to Theady ;—now my foul face to the door ;—artan Shela, why wont you be eaſy ;—come Dermount, you fon of a"——. The dancing maſter feldom have any other than what on theſe occaſions is termined "check muſic," generally adds to the tune words growing out of the fubject of the meeting.

After footing it once more up to the firſt conful, I hope our commiſſioners will not ſtay to "rife upon Sugeen—or fink upon Gad" to any of them—but croſs over to us and ſoon figure in their own ſtates to the "Happy Return" or "Dainty Davy."

October 30.

Capt. Cornwall who arrived here laſt night in the ſhip Waſhington, informs that diſpatches from Oporto had been received at Liſbon, containing the news of the taking of Vigo by the Engliſh, after they had left Ferrol. It is tho't the troops will proceed from Vigo, to cooperate with the Portuguefe, in order to reſiſt the Spaniards, whom it ſeems are to march into Portugal under the command of French officers. The King of Spain is determined to oppoſe the marching of Frenchmen into his dominions, but has conſented to give his troops up to French officers!

October 31.

The account of the taking of Vigo by the Engliſh which was mentioned in our gazette of yeſterday is, by our foreign accounts, rendered more probable, as we find that previous to our dates from Liſbon, the Britiſh fleet was off that place.

BOSTON, Nov. 5.

Our attentive correſpondent has furniſhed us, by the Betſy, capt. Barker, arrived at Marblehead, with Hamburgh papers to the 20th Sept. their contents have principally been anticipated, by the London gazettes. We have, however, a confirmation, that Ruſſia has abandoned her hoſtile preparations againſt the Engliſh, in conſequence of the accommodation between the latter and Denmark. They alſo contain an article from Vienna, of the 10th Sept. announcing, that if a definitive peace was not concluded, that an alliance between two great nothern nations would take place ; that Ruſſia would expedite an army of 130,000 men to Wollhynſen and Lithauen. On the other hand, Pruſſia is to ſend another army to Bohemia if the French attempt to enter that kingdom.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, December 13.

THE body of a drowned perſon was found on Thurſday laſt, at the river Nen, (17 miles from town,) from the deſcription received, it is ſuppoſed to be the remains of the unfortunate Mr. Perry, who left this town a few days ſince, on his way to the Lower province.

THE brig Union, capt. Billington, arrived at this port yeſterday, ſays a New-York paper of the 5th ult. in 36 days from Belfaſt.

Our Iriſh papers by this arrival are to the 19th September, and our London papers to the 15th.

The intercourſe between the Engliſh and French governments is frequent.—A flag of truce arrived at Dover from Calais on the 9th September, with diſpatches for the Britiſh Miniſtry, which made a lively ſenſation on the public mind, from a hope that there is no inſurmountable obſtacle to a practicable baſis upon which a negociation for peace may be opened. Indeed, if we may draw an inference from the circumſtance from Lord Malmeſbury and Mr. Thomas Grenville's having been ordered to attend a meeting of the cabinet council, it may reaſonably be expected that ſomething of the kind is in agitation, and that the latter gentleman is to be intruſted with the important buſineſs on the part of Great-Britain. To this meaſure ſome of the miniſtry are ſtill adverſe ; but the moſt efficient members are determined to exert every nerve to try negociation ; and it is ſaid, the brother of the Pretender, in the name of his royal Houſe has ſignified his acquieſence.

Reports were prevalent in London that baron Thugut had been diſmiſſed from his ſituation, and that the party, who were known to be friendly to peace had come into power in the Imperial cabinet.

The great queſtion of peace or war between France and the emperor remains ſtill undecided. Notice of the rupture of the armiſtice, it is true, had been given officially by the French to the armies : but whether hoſtilities will be renewed depends upon the anſwer of the Imperial court to the ultimatum of Buonaparte. In this caſe the French will make the attack with three grand armies ; thoſe of Italy, of Germany, and the Lower Rhine. The latter is to be augmented from 40 to 50,000 men.

The Britiſh miniſtry it is confidentially aſſerted, have given their conſent as far as it could have influence, that the emperor ſhould ratify the preliminaries ſigned at Paris by count St. Julien.

The following addreſs was preſented to the king of Great Britain, by the ſociety of friends in London, on his eſcape from the late attempt upon his life.

May it pleaſe the King,

Amidſt the general ſatisfaction which thy late eſcape from an attempt on thy life hath occaſioned, permit thy faithful and affectionate ſubjects, the religious ſociety of friends, (uſually called quakers) thus publicly to manifeſt their thankfulneſs for thy preſervation.—We have received too many benefits during thy reign, too many marks of thy princely favor, not to feel greatly intereſted in thy perſonal ſafety ; and we earneſtly deſire, that this thy providential deliverance may more and more incline thy heart to ſeek for the direction of divine wiſdom in all thy ſteps ; for what greater bleſſing can we implore for a prince whom we honor and love, that he may continually commend himſelf, and the people over whom he reigns, to the approbation of the KING of KINGS.

To which the king returned the following anſwer ;

I thank you for this dutiful and loyal addreſs, and for your affectionate congratulations on the merciful favour and protection which the divine Providence has vouchſafed to me.

The repeated demonſtrations of loyalty and attachment to my perſon and government, which I have received upon the preſent occaſion, are highly acceptable to me ; and you may rely on the continuance of my unremitting exertions to promote the welfare and happineſs of all deſcriptions of my ſubjects, and to preſerve inviolate their civil and religious privileges.

Foreign News.

LONDON, Sept. 12.

LETTERS from the army under the command of Sir James Pulteny, dated on the 1ſt inſt. from Vigo Bay, on the coaſt of Spain, concur in ſtating it as the general opinion in the fleet, that Gibraltar would be the next rendezvous of the armament, and were expected to put to ſea again from Vigo Bay on the 2d inſt. How far this opinion may be correct, we will not pretend to ſay ; but we think it not improbable from the preſent circumſtances of Portugal, that they may now be at anchor in the Tagus.

The expedition has been joined by the remaining part of the guards and Hompeſch's mounted riflemen, from Ireland.

We laſt night received by expreſs, Paris papers to the 9th inſt. Their contents are not entitled to particular notice. It is only remarkable, with how much care all mention of negociation or communication with this country is avoided. From different parts of the continent we find articles which repreſent the ſtate of the French armies as equal to the conteſt in which they ſuppoſe they are ſhortly by the termination of the armiſtice, to be engaged. An Auſburg article of the 22d ult. ſtates, on the other hand, that the Archduke Charles has, in the event of the reſumption of hoſtilities, been prevailed upon to take the command of the Auſtrian army.—The feſtival of the New Year, according to the Republican calendar, which will begin on the 23d of September, is to be celebrated according to a plan preſented by the Miniſter of the interior when particular honours are to be paid to the memory of Marſhal Turenne. Gen. Kleber who fell on the ſame day with Gen. Deſaix (the 14th June) is to have in the monument which the French government have voted to the memory of the latter General.

Theſe papers were brought to Dover by a neutral veſſel, which arrived there from Calais yeſterday.

Yeſterday arrived the Hamburg mail due on Wedneſday. Its contents relate almoſt excluſively to the notice which has been given by the French Generals throughout the whole line, of the ceſſation of the armiſtice ; and the conſequences which it is ſuppoſed will reſult from that event. The German Journaliſts, not aware, perhaps, that theſe conſequences depend on circumſtances foreign to their own country, ſpeculate on the bombardment of Philipſburgh and of Ulm as immediately at hand. The defence of Bohemia is ſtated to be an object to which the Auſtrians are turning their attention, as that kingdom is threatened with an invaſion. A great part of the Auſtrian troops are retreating towards the frontiers of it, in order to prevent their retreat being cut off by the French diviſion of Colland.

An article from the Banks of the Maine, repreſents the preparations for war in that quarter, as being made by the French with great activity. On the part of the Auſtrians, if we may believe the Vienna article, which is of the 29th the ſame activity does not prevail, tho' the hopes of a favorable anſwer from Paris are not ſanguine.

His Imperial Majeſty has ordered that the ſame honors ſhall be paid by the garriſon of Vienna to admiral Nelſon, as are paid to foreign ambaſſadors.

In conſequence of the ſuſpicions entertained by government, that a party in France is endeavouring to pillage this country by gambling in our funds, the Duke of Portland has determined to ſend every alien out of the country, who is known to be concerned in ſuch tranſactions.

Sept. 13.

It is mentioned that forty bankruptcies have been declared at Amſterdam, in conſequence of the notice given of the renewal of hoſtilities in Germany.

The Engliſh ſhips of war ſhall lie at Eſſineur, and thoſe that come from the Eaſt to ſtop in the road of Eſſineur, to wait the orders of Admiral Dickſon.

Extract of a letter from on board the Channel fleet, dated off Ulliant, September 3.

"The Speedwell revenue cutter joined the fleet laſt night, with the unpleaſant news of the failure of the expedition which ſailed from Quiberon Bay under rear Admiral Sir J. B. Warren and Sir E. Pellew. The object of this enterprize was to take poſſeſſion of the Spaniſh ſhipping and to burn their arſenal, dock yards, &c. in the port of Ferrol ; but after landing the troops & marines, &c. on the 25th and 26th of laſt month, the meaſure was found impracticable, and therefore a re-embarkation took place on the 27th without loſs, and the armament immediately ſteered with a fair wind further ſouthward.—The naval force detached on this ſervice are the Renown, Sir J. B. Warren's flag ſhip, London, Warrior, Ci-bealter, Impeyeux, Camden, and Courageux, of the line; 3 frigates, 2 fire ships, several gun boats, and numerous transports armed en flute, carrying 13,000 effective troops. Our fleet are in high health and spirits. The combined enemy in Brest, it does not appear, have any intention of coming out; their preparations, by all the advices we get from neutral veſſels, are more directed to the defence and ſecurity of their harbour and ſhipping, than to the more hazardous project of meeting us at ſea."

We underſtand that there was no leſs than eleven ſail of Spaniſh ſhips of the line in Ferrol harbour; which would of courſe have fallen into our hands had we made ourſelves maſters of that place.

Sept. 15.

On Saturday the ſquadron under vice admiral Dickſon, anchored in Yarmouth Roads, from the coaſt of Denmark, after having performed the important ſervice which we have already had the ſatisfaction of ſtating to the public.

By accounts received from the armament under the command of Sir J. B. Warren, of the date of the 2d inſtant, we learn that the troops were to proceed to the Mediterranean, under convoy of the Gibraltar and Ajax line battle ſhips, and that the Rear Admiral and he remainder of the ſquadron were to rejoin the grand fleet under the Earl St. Vincent. We believe accounts have been received of that ſquadron having actually rejoined.

The report of this morning, in conſequence of diſpatches having been received yeſterday from Lord Keith in the Mediterranean, is, that a revolt of the French army in Egypt has taken place ſince the death of General Kleber, and that a deputation has been ſent to the Engliſh Admiral from the majority, propoſing to evacuate Egypt on the terms originally ſigned at El Arriſch.—We cannot ſpeak with much confidence to the truth of the ſtatement.

FRANCE.

PARIS, September 2.

It appears certain that the firſt conſul has ſent his ultimatum to Vienna, with a formal aſſurance that no alteration ſhould be made in it; and that in caſe the Emperor ſhould not ſend an anſwer by the 20th of this month (Sept. 7) orders will be given to proſecute the war with renewed vigour.

The French armies in Germany amount to 150,000 men.

September 4.

We learn, by the way of Genoa, the confirmation of the news already publiſhed, of a congreſs held at Verceil between the deputies of the Pope and the French government, in order to terminate the difference reſpecting the eccleſiaſtical juriſdiction.

The Biſhop of Bamberg has ſuddenly broke off the negociation he had entered into with Mr. Wickham, for placing 2 corps of troops in the pay of England.

Sept. 5.

Letters from Rome ſtate, that the Emperor has cauſed a garriſon of 10,000 troops to occupy Ancona. From this circumſtance it was thought, in that country that hoſtilities would be reſumed. It was reported at Bologna that on the 20th of laſt month the French troops had taken poſſeſſion of Ceſena.

United States

SALEM, October 28.

Yeſterday arrived at Beverly the ſchooner Betſey, captain Rea, from Naples via Gibraltar;—ſailed from Gibraltar the 17th of Sept. Captain Rea informs, that the Engliſh were about landing troops at Liſbon, from Gibraltar; that the French were going to march into Portugal; and that the plague ſtill rages very violently in Cadiz; upwards of three hundred dying daily.

NEW YORK, November 3.

A letter from Charleſton to a reſpectable gentleman in this city, dated October 17, ſays, "Our election is over. The Federal Ticket carried 16 out of 17—and accounts from the country aſſure us that ſuch men will be elected as will carry Adams and Pinckney—a circumſtance we had no reaſon to expect a few weeks ſince. On this the diſorganizers look pale—They begin here to deſpair, becauſe they believe their friends in the other ſtates may have calculated too ſanguinely."

We have ſeen the letter from which the above is extracted, and can vouch for its authenticity.

ALEXANDRIA, Oct. 27.

We are informed that a French gentleman with diſpatches from our commiſſioners in Paris, was expected at the city of Waſhington laſt night.

BOSTON, October 29.

The intelligence from Ruſſia, by way of Newburyport, is late and important. Lord Whitworth's letter, announcing the convention between England and Denmark, was dated Copenhagen, Aug. 30.

NEWS FROM RUSSIA.

Capt. Jenkins, arrived at Newburyport, in a ſhort paſſage from Cronſtadt, Ruſſia, informs, that on the 6th Sept. ſeveral Engliſh ſhips ſailed from Cronſtadt early in the morning, but being becalmed in ſight of the guard ſhip, were ſent after and brought back, an embargo laid on all Engliſh ſhips, and they placed by themſelves on the ſide of the Mole. All Engliſh property was arreſted, both in St. Peterſburg and Cronſtadt, including all the property bro't or ſhipped by Engliſhmen (it being immaterial for whoſe account) and all goods bought of Engliſhmen, if ſhipped by them. They were forbidden to pay or receive money, and ordered to give in a ſtatement of all they owed and to whom, and of what was due to them. —Twenty-five ſail of the line and ten frigates were ordered to be got ready for ſea immediately from Cronſtadt, beſides thoſe from Revel and Archangel. No Engliſh officers were to go out in theſe ſhips.

Altho' many of theſe veſſels were before diſmatled, by working upon them day and night, the greater part had their ſails bent, and were ready for ſea when Capt. J. ſailed, (Sept. 10.) Sept. 9, the Engliſh ſailors were taken on ſhore, leaving the Captains, Mates, Carpenters and boys on board to take care of the veſſels. All the Engliſh reſidents at Cronſtadt were put on their parole. All the other merchants in St. Peterſburgh, were directed on that day to give in a ſtatement of what they owed the Engliſh and what the Engliſh owed them. It was momently expected that a general embargo would take place, and remain until the fleet had ſailed, and war was declared.—Theſe ſevere meaſures were ſaid to be taken in conſequence of a diſpute between Great Britain and Denmark; and the reports that the Engliſh had taken Elſineur, and were bombarding Copenhagen, &c. It is impoſſible to ſay preciſely what effect the news of the accommodation between thoſe two powers may have.

"Sept. 22. I arrived at Elſineur. Every thing there was quiet. Two fleets of merchant ſhips from England had paſſed up the Baltic; but in conſequence of the news from Ruſſia, a ſloop of war was diſpatched to order ſuch back as were bound for that country."

PHILADELPHIA, October 30.

From the TRUE AMERICAN.

PARIS, Auguſt 28.

The Engliſh continue to cruize near Belleiſle. A garriſon of 7000 men, proviſions in abundance, military ſtores, and above all, the good diſpoſition of the inhabitants, leave no anxiety for its fate. A guſt of equinoxial wind will ſoon drive them away: and the peace of the continent, which will be probably eſtabliſhed about that time, will warn them to think of defending themſelves rather than diſturbing us.

Auſtria is making extraordinary levies and continual preparations for war, but the people are quite weary of hoſtilities, and there has been another inſurrection at Vienna; under the windows of the Emperor the people have cried out for peace.—The infantry, it is ſaid, having refuſed to fire upon them the cavalry was called, and fifteen of the infantry were hung. Theſe accounts come from Augſburg, and we wait for their confirmation.

Should war take place our military poſitions are the beſt imaginable, and it is generally allowed that Moreau may eaſily penetrate to Vienna before winter. The army of Gen. Kray is weakened, diſcouraged and inactive.

The army of gen. Melas, in Italy, has received a reinforcement of 27,000 men.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, December 20.

On Thurſday laſt about noon, a number of the principal inhabitants of this town, met together in one of the Government buildings, to conſider of the means of opening the road to Yonge-Street, and enabling the farmers there to bring their proviſions to market with more eaſe than is practicable at preſent.

The Hon. the Chief Juſtice was called to the chair. He briefly ſtated the purpoſe of the meeting, and added, that a ſubſcription had been lately opened, by which ſomething more than two hundred dollars in money and labour had been promiſed, and that other ſums were to be expected from ſeveral reſpectable inhabitants who were well-wiſhers to the undertaking; but had not yet contributed towards it. Theſe ſums would not, he feared, be equal to the purpoſe, which could hardly be accompliſhed for leſs than between five and ſix hundred dollars; but many of ſubſcribers were deſirous that what was already ſubſcribed ſhould be immediately applied as far as it would go, and that other reſources ſhould be looked for. With this view, it had been ſuggeſted that a conſiderable aid might be obtained by ſhutting up the ſtreet which now forms the northern boundary of the town between Toronto-ſtreet and the Common, and diſpoſing of the land occupied by it. This ſtreet, it was conceived, was altogether ſuperfluous, as another ſtreet, equally convenient in every reſpect, run parallel to it at the diſtance of about ten rods; but it could not be ſhut up and diſpoſed of by any authority leſs than that of the Legiſlature. To conſider of an application to Parliament for the purpoſe, was one of the objects of the meeting.

The ſubſcribers preſent were unanimouſly of opinion, that the ſubſcription ſhould be immediately applied, as far as it would go, and that an application ſhould be made to Parliament at its next ſeſſion, for the purpoſe abovementioned.

A paper was then produced and read, containing a propoſal from Mr. Eliphalet Hale to open and make the road, or ſo much of it as might be required, at the rate of twelve dollars per acre, for clearing it where no cauſway was wanted, four rods wide, and cutting the ſtumps in the two middle rods cloſe to the ground; and 7s. 6d. Provincial Currency per rod, for making a cauſway 18 feet wide, where a cauſway might be wanted. He undertook to give ſecurity for performing the work by the firſt of February next.

Mr. Hale's propoſal was accepted, and a committee conſiſting of Mr. Secretary Jarvis, Mr. Allen, and Mr. James Playter, was appointed to ſuperintend the carrying it into execution.

A Petition to the Legiſlature lies for ſignature at Mr. M'Dougall's Tavern, and ſubſcriptions will be received by Meſſrs Allan and Wood.

EXTRACTS

From the minutes of Harmony Lodge No. 8. viz.—

Lodge of emergency, called on Sunday 15th inſt. to pay the funeral honors to the body of brother ALEX. PERRY of St. Paul's Lodge No. 12 Montreal. The lodge was opened in due form at half paſt 2 o'clock P. M. and honored with the attendance of the right W. P. G. M. William Jarvis, eſq. ſecretary of this Province; and a reſpectable number of viſiting bretheren. Before removing the body the following ſhort Oration was pronounced by the worſhipful Daniel Cozens, jun'r. maſter of ſaid lodge:

ORATION.

"Life leaves us trees, the race of man is found,
"Now green in youth, now withering on the ground!"

GEN. FELLOWS & BRETHEREN,

KNOWING your feelings on this preſent melancholy occaſion, I ſhould conceive it unneceſſary for me to urge any thing on my part, or to point out to you the neceſſity of obſerving a particular decorum in doing the laſt offices to the remains of this our departed brother, had not his fate whilſt living ſeemed ſtrongly marked for commiſeration; and whoſe untimely end now demands the tribute we are about to pay. The ſpectacle before us ſhould inculcate the moſt awful leſſon on the minds of us his ſurviving bretheren, and I doubt not, but that it will leave impreſſions on each of us, impreſſions, whoſe benignant operation may convince us, that there is nothing terrible in death. To free-maſons, more particularly death ſhould not be terrible, to them whoſe ſole object is a moral one, bound by their vows to a moral union, to the practice of charity and cardinal virtues: if their lives but conform to the ſpirit of free maſonry—their deaths however untimely, however accompliſhed, cannot but be happy. Could our participation alleviate the diſtreſſes of a childleſs mother, or ſooth the afflicted mind of an affectionate father, their burden ſhould be light and their cup not overflow. We leave to God and religion the taſk we cannot accompliſh, what is now in our power we pioufly and affectionately will do. Little further remains for me to add my bretheren, but that we proceed in the moſt decent order, to diſcharge the laſt and only duty which this lifeleſs maſs can expect at our hands. We wiſh his immortal part as much at reſt, as this his mortal will ſhortly be.—With your concurrence we will now convey the body to the grave, that goal of ambition, which priores and people and collective humanity muſt progreſſively inhabit.

The proceſſion then moved to the place of enterment in the following order:

Preceded by the Rev'd Geo. Stuart,
CORPS, with ſix maſter maſons pallbearers,

Two Tylers,
Two Deacons,
A paſt maſter, with the bible, ſquare, and compaſs,
Sen'r. and Jun'r. Wardens with columns,
Maſter maſons, two and two,
Sec'y and Treaſurer,
Paſt maſters two and two,
Maſters of Lodges, two and two.

The right worſhipful provincial grand maſter between viſiting brothers, Aug. M'Donell eſq. and Mr. John Cameron, officiating as D. G. C. and D. G. M.

The moſt perfect ſilence and order was obſerved; after ſeeing the body depoſited in the grave, the proceſſion returned in the ſame order, and the lodge was cloſed at 4 o'clock P. M. in due form and perfect harmony.

MESSRS. PRINTERS,

You will oblige a friend who wiſhes ſucceſs to your endeavors to ſerve the public, by inſerting the following eſſay

ON DRUNKENNESS.

OF all the vices that human nature is moſt prone to, that of Drunkenneſs is one of the moſt deſtructive, and the moſt dangerous in its conſequences: drunkenneſs is not only an inlet to all manner of wickedneſs, but it is a crime which debaſes human nature and reduces man to a level with the brute.—But it is of all vices that which moſt eaſily unguards the human heart and lays it (in my opinion) moſt open to the attacks of our moſt dangerous enemy, SATAN. He who we are expreſſly told "goes about like a roaringly-lion ſeeking whom he may devour."—Then inſinuates himſelf in various ſhapes ſuited to the diſpoſition of the poor unguarded mortal who thus debaſes himſelf. Sometimes he revives ancient and long dormant animoſity againſt ones neighbor, and induces the wretch thus open to his attack to commit murder! again, he inſpires him with luſt that moſt pernicious crime in the eyes of our God, that moſt baneful paſſion, ſo atrocious in its nature, and ſo deſtructive to the laws of civil ſociety, a vice which always meets its puniſhment—Again, he inſpires him with pride, induces him to think himſelf above his fellow creatures and to imagine himſelf poſſeſſed of talents he never otherwiſe could ſuppoſe himſelf poſſeſſed of—Again, he leads him to project chimerical plans and ſchemes which in his ſober moments he never would in all probability have thought of; and often he brings the wretched being in theſe moments of inebriety, to think his very exiſtence a grievance, thence oft times enſues ſuicide. In ſhort my fellow mortals, to enumerate the train of thoughts injected by our "common enemy," at ſuch a time into the human mind, would fill a volume.

Another evil conſequence attendant on a repetition of this vice of drunkenneſs, and particularly to European conſtitutions in this climate, is MADNESS. The writer who reſided ſome time in the United States could quote many inſtances where this has been the effect, occaſioned by the frequent uſe of ſpirituous liquors. Drunkenneſs is alſo to the lower claſs productive of poverty, excluſive of diſeaſe. How much better employed would the money laid out in drams, grog, &c. be, did the mechanic and poor laborer apply it to the uſe of their families, beſides the comfort of laying out their money at home, they then would have the conſcious ſatisfaction of having done their duty, and ſeeing, perhaps a beloved wife more happy and their children more comfortable, from this ſaving, which altho' at the firſt glance may appear trevial yet at the year's end it will be found to amount to more than a perſon is aware of.

To thoſe who are addicted to this moſt heinous crime, I would ſeriouſly recommend reflection, in their ſober moments, then I will venture to ſay on taking a reſtroſpect of the many evils this vice has brought upon them, and alſo the much more pleaſant feelings that reſult from a cool head, &c. If they are not far gone, very far gone indeed and loſt to ſhame, they will cordially join with me in their opinion of the ſin of DRUNKENNESS. That it is in the eyes of our Creator a vice of the firſt magnitude, and in the eyes of the rational part of the community of ſuch a nature as to make them bluſh when they behold a fellow mortal bruteſyed by intoxecation and loſt to all ſenſe of ſhame. DIRECT FROM FRANCE.

Philadelphia, Oct. 22.

YESTERDAY arrived the cartel ſhip

Benjamin Franklin, 47 days from Bordeaux. Verbal accounts by this veſſel ſtate, that the negociations with our Envoys had been ſuſpended ten days during the abſence of Buonaparte in Italy; but that on his arrival, they were reſumed, and at the time of the Benjamin Franklin's ſailing, were uninterrupted. Our envoys maintained the ſtricteſt ſecreſe and ſilence on the ſubject. It was, however, generally believed by the beſt informed perſons in Paris, that a treaty will not be agreed upon, that certain commercial arrangements would be entered into, which would put and end to the preſent warfare, and open the trade between the two countries.

By this arrival we have received ſeveral files of Bordeaux and Paris papers to the 29th Auguſt. The late hour at which they came to hand, limits us to a few tranſlations and the noticing haſtily ſome of the leading articles:

It appears from the papers, that the famous Paſſawan Oglou, ſo far from being on terms with the Porte, has collected an immenſe army and threatens to be more formidable than ever. In a very bloody affair, which he has had with the Pacha of Belgrade, he is ſaid to have completely routed the Pacha's army.

The plague has made the moſt terrible ravages in Macedonia, having nearly depopulated a great part of the country. Its ravages in Tetuan, Tangiers and other parts of Morocco, where it is ſaid to have attacked only young perſons, almoſt exceed belief.

Germany, France and Helvetia are, in ſeveral places, the theatre of a number of fires; foreſts, villages and towns are the prey of the flames. An article dated Berne, Auguſt 20, ſays—"In the courſe of ten days paſt, there have been twelve or fifteen fires, without reckoning ſeveral foreſts which have been courſe of ten days paſt, there have been twelve or fifteen fires, without reckoning ſeveral foreſts which have been burning ſome weeks and cannot be extinguiſhed. One of the French Journaliſts attributes this calamity to the great heat and dryneſs of the Summer: but another conceives it to be the work of incendiaries, who, he believes, pervade all Europe: for, ſays he, ſeveral towns in Poland have been burnt, and Preſburg, in Hungary, as well as other places, are the proofs of a vaſt plan. The capital of Auſtria is not exempt from theſe attempts. On the ſame day, Vienna was attempted to be ſet on fire in three places.

The kingdom of Naples promiſes to be a ſcene of anarchy and confuſion.—The partizans of the French government have renewed their revolutionary operations, and ſeveral riots and diſturbances have been the conſequence.

With reſpect to peace with the Emperor, the French Journaliſts furniſh little elſe than conjecture. Their general complexion appears to us to denote belief of the recommencement of hoſtilities, which, if neceſſary, Buonaparte ſeems determined to proſecute with redoubled activity. Every exertion is made to reinforce the armies, and the moſt vigorous meaſures are taken to ſupply their wants.

VIENNA, Auguſt 20.

Preliminaries of Peace between France and Auſtria.

A private letter from Vienna, received by the laſt mail, and from a perſon of no inferior conſideration, mentions the following as the outlines of the peace propoſed by the Chief Conſul after the battle of Marengo.

"Before the Count St. Julien ſet out for Paris, the Chief Conſul had diſpatched a courier to Vienna, with his propoſals for a peace. It was in conſequence of this diſpatch that the Count was ſent to Paris. On the 29th of July preliminaries were ſigned, and the Count left Paris, as well as citizen Duroc. We are acquainted with the articles of theſe preliminaries, but the firſt propoſitions made by Buonaparte, in the beginning of July were as follows :—

"The Emperor ſhall abandon all pretenſion to the Netherlands and to the Milaneſe, according to the articles of the treaty of Campo Formeo. France ſhall take upon herſelf all the debts contracted by Belgium. The Emperor ſhall agree to acknowledge three Italian republics, viz. the Ciſalpine, the Ciſpadine, and the Piedmonteſe Republics. The Ciſalpine republic ſhall begin at Caffrano, extend to Idro Salo, the lakes of Garda above Sermione and Revaltera following the courſe of the Mincio to Monguanano & Goita, and from thence behind the Seriola to the confluence of the Mincio and the Po, from thence above Chiero, Porgo, to Cambellona, the river Toſa and Switzerland, and include the Valteline.

"The Citalpine republic ſhall begin at Rimini, extend from thence to Forli, Imola, Lucca, Piſa to Leghorn, and comprehend the Genoeſe territory to the Bobbio as ſaras Pomundung, and to Revenna and Rimini.

"The Piedmonteſe republic ſhall comprehend the former ſtates of Piedmont.

"The fortreſſes in each of theſe republics ſhall be demoliſhed.

"All ſhips which the Ligurian republic has taken from the Auſtrians ſhall be reſtored. The emperor ſhall acknowledge that Nice and Savoy belong to France, according to the Conſtitutional act. The emperor ſhall demoliſh the fortreſſes of Peſchiera and Lugano. The King of Sardinia ſhall receive a yearly compenſation from the Ciſalpine Ciſpadine, and Piedmonteſe republics. The Duke of Modena ſhall enjoy the country of the Briſgau until the extinction of his family. Should circumſtances, or the wiſh of the inhabitants, render the conſolidation of the three Italian republics hereafter deſirable, the Emperor ſhall neither interfere nor object to it, and the three republics ſhall be conſidered as a ſtate of the firſt rank. The French ſhall not remain in theſe republics beyond one year. The Swiſs ſhall chooſe their own form of conſtitution.

"The Batavian republic ſhall be included in the treaty.

"The peace of the German empire ſhall be ſettled at Augſburgh. His Imperial Majeſty, as chief, ſhall conſent to yield the left bank of the Rhine, and the city of Baſle to France. Should peace with the German empire not be concluded, the Imperial contingent ſhall be withdrawn and a line of obſervation ſhall be drawn behind the Inn. His Imperial Majeſty ſhall conſent to the ſyſtem of indemnity by ſecularizations. In the event that a peace between the French republic and the Pope and King of Sardinia ſhould meet with difficulties, the emperor ſhall not give him any aſſiſtance. Both ſhall however be aſſured of their independence of the French republic. Each party contracts to guarantee each other's poſſeſſions againſt attack."

LONDON, September 13.

Extract of a private letter from Liſbon, dated Auguſt 7.

"It is now ſaid that in the propoſitions made to Portugal by France, no money is demanded. The terms are an offenſive and defenſive alliance; that the privileges of the French ſhall be equal to thoſe of the moſt favored nations;—that ſix ſhips of each of the belligerent powers may be received in the Tagus, and no more; and laſtly, that Goa ſhall be ceded to France, for which ſhe offers to give to Portugal a tract of land contiguous to the Brazils.

"The anſwer of this government is ſaid to be, that Portugal certainly wiſhes for peace, and is ready to treat with France, provided the terms offered be not inconſiſtent with her treaties with England, who has been her ally for ſo long a period, and with whom ſhe is determined to preſerve her friendſhip. It is added, that ſome of the propoſitions now made are evidently of a nature that cannot be complied with."

ENGLAND and FRANCE.

The point in diſcuſſion between this country and France, The chief conſul has expreſſed his willingneſs to treat with Great-Britain and Auſtria jointly, provided that demand is acceded to. Undoubtedly an armiſtice by ſea would be much more advantageous to France than to Great-Britain, becauſe it would enable the former to obtain many naval ſupplies of which the combined fleets are in want, and which they cannot procure during the blockade of Breſt. But there is one point which ſhould not be excluded from our conſideration. The equinoxial gales will ſet in ſoon, and a continuance of the blockade will be extremely difficult, if not impoſſible. France will then be able to obtain the neceſſaries ſhe is in want of, and to ſend out ſhips and ſquadrons. There is another thing which deſerves to be conſidered Is it deemed a deſirable object to negociate jointly with Auſtria? Undoubtedly it is. We muſt therefore take into the account, that the ſuperiority of advantage in the armiſtice between Auſtria and France, is on the ſide of the former, and thus we muſt ſet off the advantages which our ally enjoys, againſt the benefits which would accrue to France from an armiſtice with this country. We ſaid yeſterday, and every thing tends to confirm our opinion, that it is to bring the queſtion of this armiſtice by ſea to a point, that Buonaparte has given notice to Auſtria of the termination of the armiſtice by Land. If we accede to his demand, hoſtilities will not be renewed, and a joint negociation will be immediately opened.—There is another queſtion of material importance. It is of ſingular advantage to a nation in the outſet of negociation to give a proof of her being influenced by a ſincere deſire for peace. Such a proof we ſhould afford to France, and to all Europe, by conſenting to an armiſtice, becauſe it would be obvious that we could only be actuated by motives of the moſt pacific nature.

Upon a review therefore, of the whole queſtion, not blind to the benefits that France would enjoy, yet believing that thoſe benefits would be balanced by the prevention of the renewal of hoſtilities between France and Auſtria, by the advantage of a joint negociation, and by the proof we ſhould afford of our ſincerity, we are of opinion that it would be a wiſe policy to aſſent to the demand of the Chief Conſul. [Diſpatches were received from France, Sept. 8.]

FRANCE and PORTUGAL.

A Liſbon mail arrived this morning, brought by the Prince Adolphus packet in twelve days. The private letters inform us, that all hopes of peace between France and Portugal are at an end—the latter have rejected the Chief Conſul's offers. An invaſion is expected—Gen. Berthier and his ſuite are arrived at Madrid; a paſſport was applied for by the General to proceed to Liſbon, in order to have a conference with the prince regent. The requeſt however was refuſed, becauſe it was ſuſpected that Berthier's real object was to reconnoitre the ſtate of the country. The communications between the courts of Liſbon and Madrid are frequent. General Abercrombie is expected at Liſbon with 10'000 men. The ſituation of Portugal is repreſented, in the letters by the mail, to be deplorable. Proviſions are ſcarce, and the vintage and harveſt have entirely failed.

Government have declared that the ſtatement contained in letters brought by the Hamburgh mail. of the conditions of the convention between this country and Denmark, is erroneous in almoſt every reſpect. No part of the convention with that power ſtipulates that the damages ſuſtained by the Daniſh frigate ſhall be repaired at the expence of Great-Britain; nor is there any reſerve ſtipulated by Denmark for its convoys in the Mediterranean. The only point which was in diſpute between this country and Denmark, the practice of attempting, by ſending convoys to exempt Daniſh veſſels from ſearch, has been adjuſted entirely to the ſatisfaction of his Majeſty's Government. [The Daniſh frigate has gone into an Engliſh dock to be repaired.]

SUMMARY.

Admiral Keith is ſaid to be gone to Minorca to bring away the Engliſh troops.—Buonaparte approves the late revolution in Switzerland—and requeſts no conſtitution may be eſtabliſhed till after peace, as her territory may be altered.—General Abercrombie is at Leghorn, with troops, correſponding with the Auſtrian General Melas.—The French have again poſſeſſion of Romagna.—Buonaparte is ſaid to expect to ſend the fleets out of Breſt, when the equinoxial gales prevail.—Napper Tandy is again indicted.—The report of a change of Miniſters at Vienna gains ground.—The Ciſalpine conſtitution is finiſhed but not to be carried into operation till peace.—Buonaparte has ſent Duroc to Berlin on a miſſion.—Admiral de Winter is the Batavian Charge des affairs at Paris.—The Engliſh are getting freſh troops in readineſs for embarkation,—One paper reports that 60,000 troops are to go by the way of the Red Sea to drive the bur-like French out of Egypt.—A line of gun-boats is moored before the Sound, Hamoaze and Cawſand Bay.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, December 27.

Thoſe who ſent letters by the late Mr. Perry, may have them by applying to Mr. William Cooper.

A Philadelphia paper of the fourteenth inſtant ſtates, that the Britiſh packet has arrived at Halifax in eighteen days from Falmouth:—The news contained in a Halifax paper of the firſt of November, received by this veſſel, is ſimilar to that by the American, arrived at Philadelphia: it mentions the treaty between the United States and France, concluded on the 27th of Sept. at midnight.—The ſigning of preliminaries of peace, by the emperor.—The congreſs of Luneville, to which Joſeph Buonaparte is the French deputy, aſſiſted by gen. Clarke.—The ſurrender of Malta, &c. and ſtates that

The Britiſh and French have not yet concluded on a naval armiſtice; but the conferences on that ſubject continue.

It is ſaid, that the French army for the invaſion of Portugal, is on its march.

The embargo on Engliſh veſſels is taken off in Ruſſia.

Lord Keith with 15,000 troops is gone either to Naples or Egypt.

A Britiſh miniſter has had ſome particular conference with the court of Sweden, in conſequence of the preparations for war by the latter.

The Britiſh ſhip flag has been loſt in Vigo Bay.

The Halifax captain reports that an Engliſh ſquadron have cut 7 ſail of the line out of L'Orient roads.

An odd coincidence occurs in a late tranſfer of property in England. A Mr. Spareribs has ſold his eſtate at Ham to a gentleman of the name of Porket, a relation of Mr. Gammon.

The quartering of Britiſh troops in Ireland tends much to conſolidate the union. A number of matrimonial connections have been formed in the courſe of the war between the natives of the different quarters of the empire.—And by a well timed diſtribution of the various Engliſh, Iriſh, and Scotch regiments, were made innumerable ties, binding the three countries, and conſtituting a moſt complete incorporating union.

The Man of Forty Thouſand Franks.

The following anecdote is taken from a late French paper. "A provincial Footman put in to the lottery of St. Sulpice, gained a prize of 40,000 Livers, took leave of his maſter and came to Paris, not to place out his money to advantage, but to ſpend it. He hired a ſuperb hotel, purchaſed horſes and a carriage, cloathed his numerous domeſtics in a ſuperb livery, played high, and kept an excellent table. He was univerſally feaſted and entertained, and every where in the beſt houſes, nothing was talked of but the generous ſtranger. Stranger indeed! he was known by nobody. Generous too, for he had his purſe full of money, and paid every account that was preſented to him; but ſo freely did he diſburſe and pay, that at the end of the year he had nothing left. At laſt he announced, that he would dine at home, and at two o'clock preciſely. Two o'clock ſtrikes, dinner is ſerved, no gueſt appears. He calls up his coachman, his lacquies, his cook, and his valet-de-chambre. He makes a ſignal for them to ſit down at table with him. They are at firſt aſtoniſhed, and then ſtart difficulties in complying; he inſiſts, they obey; they eat, and when the champaign begins to eſtabliſh familiarity, he ſays to them, "My comrades, you have thought me a great man, I am only a valet like yourſelves. I gained a prize of 40,000 Franks; I have expended it; I have nothing more; I go to reſume my livery—adieu!"—This ſaid he gets into a diligence, and arrives at the home of his old maſter, who is delighted at ſeeing him again. "I expect to hear that you have laid out your money well," ſaid he to him; "Very well; for I have eaten it!"—"Eaten!" "Yes; and that in the ſpace of a year—I wiſhed to ſee what was the life of a man who has 40,000 livers a year. I have done almoſt every thing they do. I have procured all their enjoyments!" "Is it really ſo?"—"Really; there is nothing wonderful in that, behold me ſatisfied; I ſhall be ſo much the better if you will take me into your ſervice." "Very willingly; if your experiment has cured you of the deſire of riches."

CHRISTMAS.

—AN ODE.—

HAIL, the ſeraphic day!
Our ſouls, uniting ſay;
For, on its morn,
Ere up the bright'ning eaſt,
The glowing ſun-beam preſs'd,
JESUS was born.

At this eventful birth,
High to the joyful earth—
In night, ſerene,
Forming a glorious choir,
Tuning the SACRED LYRE,
SERAPHS were ſeen.

With ſpotleſs robes array'd,
O'er MARY'S ſlumbering head,
They, ſoft, began
In tw'ith'd notes, along—
Swell'd their immortal ſong,
With "PEACE TO MAN."

Hear each one loud exclaim
"MARY of Bethlehem,
"God's choſen one."
This ever holy maid,
Low, in a manger laid!
Brought forth her ſon.

Around her glory ſhone,
As from God's beaming throne,
When CHRIST appear'd;
JOSEPH, the pious, came,
Saw the celeſtial flame,
And muſic heard.

Of little cherubs, 'round—
Making extatic ſound,
To praiſe the LAMB;
As down the radiant ſky,
Leaving their realms on high,
They, haſt'ning came.

Shepherds approach'd from far,
"Led by a ſhining ſtar,"
With off'rings great;
On bending knee they fell,
Made the LOW MANGER ſwell—
With praiſe elate.

Now let us each one join,
Aloud in ſong divine,
With firm accord;
And with unending zeal,
Up Heaven ſend the peal
CHRIST IS OUR LORD!

PETER HUNTER, LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

A Proclamation.

GEORGE the Third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth;—

TO ALL OUR LOVING SUBJECTS, GREETING:—

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the twenty ninth day of Nov. last, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to prorogue our Provincial Parliament until the ninth day of the present month of January, at which time in our town of YORK you were held and constrained to appear; but we taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice of our executive council, to relieve you, and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you, and each of you, that on the fourteenth day of FEBRUARY next, ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament, in our town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper-Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary: Herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the great seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved, PETER HUNTER, Esq. our Lieutenant Governor of our said province, and Lieutenant General commanding our Forces in our Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, at York, this THIRD day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and one, and in the forty first year of our reign.

WM. JARVIS, sec'y.

TO THE PUBLIC.

☞ THE Proprietors of the UPPER CANADA GAZETTE, feel it at once a duty and a pleasure to express their grateful acknowledgments to their kind Patrons, for the liberal encouragement they have experienced during the course of the preceding year. This testimonial of their thanks and obligations is not the mere dictate of annual custom, but springs warm from the heart, and is a tribute justly due to patronage the most liberal and encouraging; and they flatter themselves they may, without vanity, add, to patronage not wholly unmerited. Anxious to meet the generous predilection of the Public, by proportionate exertions on their part, they have neglected no opportunity—they have shrunk back from no expence which might add to the general interest of their Paper. During the past year they have considerably increased the dimensions of their paper, and, not satisfied with adding to the bulk, have contrived to render their columns still more capacious, by printing a proportion (occasionally) of the occurrences of the week in a small type. Therefore, the Friends and Patrons of the Gazette, will find a very material augmentation of size and contents, without any augmentation of price.

The scenes now acting before our eyes on the grand stage of human events, sufficiently demonstrate the indissoluble connection between Religion and good Government; their interests are inseparably interwoven: and the decay of the former must of necessity involve the downfall of the latter. Convinced of the truth of this position, the Proprietors of the Gazette are determined, as far as in them lies, to exert their utmost vigilance and ability in the support of Religion, Morality, and Social Order. In this view, they will take a retrospect of what passes, as well in the Religious as in the Political World: and propose to notice all occurrences connected with the interests of these grand objects.

In this part of their plan, they may confidently promise themselves the support and encouragement of every friend to Religion, Virtue, and good Order; and as they mean to discharge their duty with the strictest candour and impartiality, they look forward to the patronage of those Gentlemen who coincide with themselves in opinion, respecting the importance of the Literary Character, and its immediate connection with true Religion and good Government.

Foreign News.

From London papers to the 18th of October, received at the Office of the Mercantile Advertiser, (New York,) by the Rose from Liverpool.

PARIS, October 7.

IT was only this morning that Citizen Louis Buonaparte set out for Berlin.

Letters from Marseilles announce that the garrison of Malta arrived there on the 8th Vendemiare, to the amount of 6,000 men, and performed quarantine.

They write from Cadiz that an English fleet, compoſed of about 180 tranſports, convoyed by ſix ſhips of the line had appeared before the port of that city, and were making preparations for a deſcent. The conſternation was the greater, as the means of defence of Cadiz are weak.

The epidemic diſorder, which has made ſuch ravages for ſome time, has deſtroyed a part of the only Spaniſh regiment which was in garriſon. The only hope of the inhabitants is in the contagion, which they think will terrify the enemy and prevent their landing.

October 8.

The fortreſs of Philipſburgh was delivered upon the 2d of October to our troops, and General Leborde made his entry into it.

October 10.

An event of an extraordinary nature, though perfectly natural, will probably re eſtabliſh harmony between Spain and Portugal. A Portugueſe fleet ſet out from Brazil for Liſbon, at the ſame time that five Spaniſh veſſels went from Plata to repair to Cadiz. The fleets met.—The commanders, ignorant of the line of conduct agreed upon by their reſpective ſovereigns, proceeded in company, and arrived together at Liſbon. The Spaniſh veſſels, laden with 12 millions of piaſtres, will be deemed a lawful prize if the war takes place; but Spain, which is in want of money, will conſent to a peace to obtain them.

LUNEVILLE, Oct. 6.

General Clarke, the bearer of the orders of government, and who is to command extraordinarily at Luneville, and in the department of the Meurthe, is arrived. After having conferred with the ſub-prefect and the mayor, he viſited in perſon all the houſes of the beſt appearance; and ſpared no pains to procure for the members of the congreſs lodgings and accommodations ſuitable to their dignity.

FRANCKFORT, Oct. 3.

The General in Chief, Augereau, has impoſed on the city of Aſchaffenburgh a contribution of 600,000 livres. The Elector is to pay 250,000 for his part. The firſt payment was made the day before yeſterday.

LONDON, Oct. 18.

The American mail of the firſt inſt. is ſtill detained at Falmouth for ſailing orders.

On Saturday arrived at Plymouth, Sir J. B. Warren, with the ſquadron under his command, conſiſting of the Renown of 74 guns; the Impetueux, Sir E. Pellew; the London, and the Courageux. The tranſports, with the troops on board, are gone to Gibraltar.

A letter from Gibraltar, dated the 19th ult. mentions, that information has been received there of its being the intention of the Spaniards to make an immediate irruption into Portugal, for which purpoſe a large army is aſſembled in Andaluſia. Gen. Berthier was at Seville. It is underſtood that a large Britiſh force has been ordered for the defence of Portugal.

Letters from Conſtantinople, dated Auguſt 16, mention the receipt of letters from on board Le Tigre, dated Cyprus, July 8, ſtating that Sir Sidney Smith was in good health, and that the officers and ſhip's company were well. Letters from the Capt. Pacha, written the 18th, ſtate, that he, with the Turkiſh fleet, in company with Sir S. Smith in Le Tigre, were on their way to Alexandria, for the purpoſe of commencing active operations againſt the French.

A letter received by the Liſbon mail of yeſterday, dated Gibraltar, Sept. 10, mentions the following intereſting fact. —Laſt week a brig which had been fitted out by Meſſrs. Lundi, Abudarhams and ſome other Jews, and ſent to Trinadad, coming from thence with a return cargo, appeared in the Gut, when the brig, and a ſhip mounting 18 guns, were attacked by a number of French privateers.—The ſhip was taken, and the brig (owing to the burſting of a gun during the action) took fire, and burnt to the water's edge, under the Apes' Hill, on the Barbary coaſt, where the crew got on ſhore, except one man left in the boat, who reached Gibraltar during the night.

It is not true, ſays a letter from Hamburgh of Oct 3, that the Emperor has ratified the preliminaries concluded for a ſeparate peace by Count St. Julien.—Before the Emperor ſigned the new convention, he demanded twenty-four hours of Laborde, but ſigned it at the expiration of twelve hours. Before the prolongation of the armiſtice was known Lacourbe attacked, on the 21ſt, the famous paſs of Sharnitz in Tyrol. The reſult of the attack remains unknown. Nothing can equal the activity with which the preparations for war are continued in the Auſtrian hereditary dominions. In Tyrol, and on its northern frontiers, an army of 50,000 regulars was aſſembled. The Hungarians are alſo reſolved to bring into the field an army of 64,000 infantry and 18,000 cavalry, before the middle of October.—There are likewiſe advices of the 18th ult. from the Ruſſian frontiers, ſtating, that the army under Gen. Vonderpahlen has had orders to return to its cantonments. The Emperor is ſaid to be perfectly ſatiſfied with the manner in which the diſpute between England and Denmark has been ſettled.

The electors of Bavaria every day exerciſe and manoeuvre the 18,000 troops which he has in the Upper Palatinate.

A letter from Liſbon, dated October 7, ſays—"By the Spaniſh poſt of this morning, information has been received, that the mortality in Cadiz is conſiderably decreaſed. From the 19th to the 23d ult. the northerly winds had prevailed, and the number of perſons dying daily is reduced from 270 to about 200. I am ſorry to have to add, that the ſame terrible diſorder has extended to Seville, where it ſeems to be daily growing worſe. Precautions are taken to prevent its entering this country." There is a report here, that Berthier has prevailed upon the King of Spain to lend all his ſhips to the French. It is ſaid here, that Sir Ralph Abercrombie and Sir James Pulteney, with a conſiderable force are off Cadiz.

October 15.

Rumours of a very gloomy kind reſpecting Ruſſia were circulated yeſterday evening and this morning. The return of the Britiſh conſul, who was not permitted to land at Cronſtadt, was conſidered as a preface of more hoſtile meaſures; and it was added, even that the Ruſſian Charge d'Affaires had applied for a paſſport to leave this country. Glad, indeed, ſhall we be, if theſe rumours prove untrue; and if it ſhall be found that the Ruſſian Charge d'Affaires if he be going from this country at all, is only as ſome have ſaid, going to Liſbon for the benefit of his health; and that the refuſal to permit the Britiſh Conſul to land was in conſequence of the informality of his paſſport.

BOURDEAUX, Oct. 1.

There paſſed this way in the afternoon of the day before yeſterday an extraordinary courier from Paris with diſpatches from the French government to citizen Aſquier, ambaſſador from the republic to the court of Spain. He is ſaid to be the bearer of a treaty of peace concluded with Portugal, at the interceſſion of the Court of Madrid.

HAGUE, Oct. 3.

Reports from Berlin ſpeak of the departure of Mr. De Dobin for the Congreſs of Luneville.

ALGIERS, Sept. 6.

Admiral Keith has not carried into effect his threats of preſenting himſelf before Algiers with a ſquadron. A ſingle frigate, accompanied by two boats, arrived there the 31ſt of Auguſt, and landed Mr. Falcon, the Engliſh Conſul, who three months before had no inclination to debark on finding that the Dey was not diſpoſed to accede to the demands with which he was charged.—They were chiefly for the purpoſe of obtaining the gratuitous diſcharge of about 270 Malteſe, Neapolitan, and Milaneſe ſlaves, taken with Engliſh paſſports. The requeſt was refuſed.

The Dey has coldly received Mr. Falcon, and given him poſitive proofs that the menaces of Admiral Keith had not intimidated him.

This new conſul has made preſents of great value, and renewed the treaties. A new clauſe has been added to them. It expreſsly ſtates, "that Algerine property ſhall be reſpected under every kind of flag, even though it ſhould be deſtined for a blockaded port." The Engliſh are to furniſh in 15 days a frigate to carry to Conſtantinople the Vekiargi with the uſual preſents.—On the 4th September Mr. Falcon was inſtalled in his miſſion, and the ſame day the frigate Carolina, which brought him, ſet out with 22 priſoners, alledged to have been repurchaſed.

HAVRE, Oct. 8.

The Envoys of the American government, whoſe object is to perfect the work of reconciliation deſired by all the friends of peace, are now in our city.—All the civil and military authorities are eager to render their homage to the repreſentatives of an allied nation, acknowledged ſince the year 1778 as the moſt ſincere friends of the French nation. A guard of honor, of 50 men, has been ſent to them; for which they have returned thanks according to cuſtom.—They would already have ſet ſail if contrary winds had not retarded the departure of the American frigate Portſmoth. The calm will keep them here for eight days.

Peace, it is rumoured, has been concluded between France and Portugal, through the medium of Spain.

The French funds have riſen: the tiers conſolide is at 37 livres, 10 ſous. The beſt meat at Dunkirk is ſaid to be only 4 ſous per lb.

United States

YALTIMORE, Nov. 17.

Extract of a letter from a merchant in Havanna, to his correſpondent in this city, dated 17th Oct.

"I have juſt heard that diſpatches have been received by the government, in this city, of the French and Spaniſh, with 14 ſhips of the line and 17 frigates having taken Trinidad, and that their preſent object is Jamaica—and have requeſted a ſupply of proviſions for twenty thouſand men; this may probably produce ſome alteration in our market for the better."

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 19.

Extract of a letter from a reſpectable mercantile houſe in Liverpool, England, to their correſpondent in Philadelphia, dated Liverpool, October 3.

"The harveſt is nearly finiſhed in moſt parts of the kingdom, but the reports with reſpect to its probable produce are ſo various and contradictory, that it is difficult to collect the wiſhed for information. We are of opinion that wheat will prove a good medium crop; barley and oats are eſtimated below an average crop, and both ſeem likely to be dear.—This remark alſo applies to potatoes, although very large quantities of them were planted; and the ſcarcity of herbage, induced by the late long continuance of dry weather, has rendered the prices of meat, butter butter and hay uncommonly high. The exaggerated accounts of the probable abundance of the crops, together with the large ſupplies of imported wheat & flour, had induced very confident expectations that the prices of proviſions in general would decline conſiderably; but the diſappointment in this reſpect, and eſpecially among the lower claſſes, has occaſioned great diſcontent, and a conſiderable diſpoſition to riot has manifeſted itſelf in different parts of the kingdom. We hope this has generally ſubſided, and the urgent neceſſity of appeaſing the popular diſcontent ſeems likely to occaſion, for a while at leaſt, more plentiful ſupplies in the market, and at reduced prices. How long this may continue appears uncertain, and we think it will probably require the interference of the legiſlature to adopt ſome meaſures which may have a permanent tendency either to reduce the prices of proviſions, or enable the labouring poor to purchaſe more adequate ſupplies of them. Upon the whole, we ſee little reaſon to expect that the neceſſaries of life will be reduced to their former rates ſoon. With reſpect to the ſpecific prices which proviſions, and eſpecially wheat and flour, may obtain, it appears to us impoſſible to form an accurate opinion; but it is highly probable there will be a demand for conſiderable ſupplies of both.

"The King, with the advice of the Privy Council, has allowed the importation of wheat, rye, barley, oats, Indian corn, flour, meal, bread, biſcuit, rice, callevances, beef, pork, &c. without the payment of any duty, until the expiration of forty days after the commencement of the next ſeſſion of Parliament. The warrantee to the importer, by the Britiſh Parliament, of prices equal to 100s. per Wincheſter quarter for wheat, or per lack of 280lbs. for flour, & 35s. per cwt. for rice, ſubject to certain regulations, expires the firſt of next month, and it will remain for the next meeting of parliament to conſider whether ſome ſimilar meaſures may not be expedient for inſuring to this country an adequate ſupply.

"The reſult of the late negociations with reſpect to peace, is now ſhortly expected, but what the iſſue will prove is at preſent unknown, altho' a ſubject of great and general anxiety."

NEW YORK, Nov. 21.

By the brig Commerce, arrived here yeſterday, we learn, that on the 24th Sept. ſhe left at Gibraltar 50 ſail of the line and 50 tranſports, with 22,000 troops on board, under the command of Lord Keith. They are taking in water and proviſions; and it was expected they would ſail in a few days—deſtination unknown.

BOSTON, Nov. 19.

On Saturday arrived the U. S. frigate Boſton, captain Little, from a cruize, in company with the French national corvette Le Berceau, Captain Senes, of 22 French nine, and 2 twelve pounders on one deck, and 230 men: which was captured the 12th Oct. in lat. 22, 50, long. 51, after an action of one hour & forty minutes. The Boſton mounts 24 twelve, and 8 nine pounders, and had 230 men: of whom the following ſuffered in the action, viz.—William Ford John Higgins, Mathias Jaſey, and William M'Kee, ſeamen, killed.—Mr. Samuel Young, purſer, Thomas Hartley and Nathaniel Dill, ſeamen, wounded, ſince dead: Mr. J. M. Hiſwell, midſhipman, George Groom, Gavar Walkinſhaw, F. Rice, John Runbet, Francis Francis, John Allore, and John Collins, wounded and likely to recover.

The prize loſt all three of her maſts, and was very much diſabled. The Boſton is much injured in her maſts, ſpars, rigging, and ſails, which obliged capt. Little to return from his cruiſe to refit. We are informed captain Little expreſſed in ſtrong terms his approbation of the conduct of his officers and crew, during the action; and conſiders that it would be injuſtice to the commander of Le Berceau, not to ſtate, that he gallantly defended his ſhip as long as ſhe was capable of making a defence.

Le Berceau has been out from Cayenne 25 days, during which ſhe had plundered two American veſſels, and made prize of one. On a former cruiſe, ſhe had captured ſeveral American, and a great number of Portugueſe ſhips from Brazil.

A variety of circumſtances renders this capture of more importance than appears at the firſt caſt.—Le Berceau is conſidered as one of the faſteſt ſailing corvettes in the French navy; ſhe ſerved as a look out veſſel to the French fleet for eighteen months; has frequently been chaſed by the Britiſh cruizers, and was never overtaken before;—ſhe has been very ſucceſsful in capturing Britiſh, Portugueſe and American veſſels; and was bound this cruize to intercept the American Indiamen, and Spaniſh ſhips. Capt. Senes had been poſt captain in the French navy for many years: and was a midſhipman in Count D'Eſtaing's fleet, in this harbour. He has been in ſeveral engagements, and is eſteemed a brave and intelligent officer.

The Berceau loft in the engagement her firſt lieutenant, maſter, boatſwain, maſter-gunner and pilot, beſides common men.

The Boſton expended upwards of 27 o wt. of powder, above 1500 round ſhot, beſides double that number of chain, double headed, and grape, during the action.

The prize is now commanded by Lieut. Halſwell, firſt Lieutenant of the Boſton.

The carvette meaſures 120 feet upon the gun deck, and nearly the width of the Boſton.

Capt. Senes, and a commiſſioner who was in Le Berceau, after being on board the Boſton 15 days, were, at their requeſt, permitted to go to Barbadoes, on parole—they took paſſage in a veſſel bound to that place.

Le Berceau will be uſed as a priſonſhip until a cartel is provided to carry the French priſoners off. She now lies under the guns of Fort Independence.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.

Extract of a letter from Walhington city, dated November 8.

About 7 o'clock this evening, I was alarmed by fire in the city. We all ran as uſual, and behold it proved to be the War Office. Before I got there all was involved in uncontroulable flames. It fortunately happened that the office had been kept in a houſe, not adjoining any others; for had there been an hundred they muſt all have gone. The accountant's department was in the ſame building; but he had the good fortune to ſave the greateſt part of his papers: the books and papers in the war office were entirely conſumed. How it originated nobody knows; but it is preſumed that the experience which we have had in this caſe of the want of engines, buckets, &c. will induce thoſe whom it concerns, to provide againſt the recurrence of ſuch diſtreſſing calamities.—We had but two ſmall enghies, illy provided with water, and about 30 houſe buckets.

A Baltimore paper adds, "in addition to the above, we have juſt learned, by a letter from Wathington, that Mr. Dexter's apartment, in which the fire originated, had been locked up for the laſt two weeks, the ſecretary having gone on a j[illegible]ney to the northward for his family). Mr. Wolcott, with one of the clerks who firſt diſcovered the ſmoke iſſuing from the ſecretary's chamber, burſt open the door, but they were repelled, almoſt ſuffocated and retreated with difficulty from the flames, which inſtantly ſpread over every quarter of the building.

Mr. Dexter himſelf arrived at the unhappy moment of conflagration, very much injured by a fall from his carriage, which overſet in that city."

PETER HUNTER, LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

A Proclamation.

GEORGE the Third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and ſo forth:—

TO ALL OUR LOVING SUBJECTS, GREETING:—

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the twenty ninth day of Nov. laſt, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to prorogue our Provincial Parliament until the ninth day of the preſent month of January, at which time in our town of YORK you were held and conſtrained to appear; but we taking into our Royal conſideration the eaſe and convenience of our loving ſubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice of our executive council, to relieve you, and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforeſaid, hereby convoking, and by theſe preſents enjoining you, and each of you, that on the fourteenth day of FEBRUARY next, enſuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament, in our town of York, there to take into conſideration the ſtate and welfare of our Province of Upper-Canada, and therein to do as may ſeem neceſſary: Herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof we have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the great ſeal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well-beloved PETER HUNTER, Eſq. our Lieutenant Governor of our ſaid province, and Lieutenant General commanding our Eorces in our Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, at York, this THIRD day of January, in the year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and one, and in the forty-firſt year of our reign.

P. H.

WM. JARVIS, ſec'y.

TO THE PUBLIC.

☞ THE Proprietors of the UPPER CANADA GAZETTE, feel it at once a duty and a pleaſure to expreſs their grateful acknowledgments to their kind Patrons, for the liberal encouragement they have experienced during the courſe of the preceding year. This teſtimonial of their thanks and obligations is not the mere dictate of annual cuſtom, but ſprings warm from the heart, and is a tribute juſtly due to patronage the moſt liberal and encouraging; and they flatter themſelves they may, without vanity, add, to patronage not wholly unmerited. Anxious to meet the generous predileſtion of the Public, by proportionate exertions on their part, they have neglected no opportunity—they have ſhrunk back from no expence which might add to the general intereſt of their Paper. During the paſt year they have conſiderably increaſed the dimenſions of their paper, and, not ſatisfied with adding to the bulk, have contrived to render their columns ſtill more capacious, by printing a proportion (occaſionally) of the occurrences of the week in a ſmall type. Therefore, the Friends and Patrons of the Gazette, will find a very material augmentation of ſize and contents, without any augmentation of price.

The ſcenes now acting before our eyes on the grand ſtage of human events, ſufficiently demonſtrate the indiſſoluble connection between Religion and good Government; their intereſts are inſeparably interwoven; and the decay of the former muſt of neceſſity involve the downfall of the latter. Convinced of the truth of this poſition, the Proprietors of the Gazette are determined, as far as in them lies, to exert their utmoſt vigilance and ability in the ſupport of Religion, Morality, and Social Order. In this view, they will take a retroſpect of what paſſes, as well in the Religious as in the Political World; and propoſe to notice all occurrences connected with the intereſts of theſe grand objects.

In this part of their plan, they may confidently promiſe themſelves the ſupport and encouragement of every friend to Religion, Virtue, and good Order; and as they mean to diſcharge their duty with the ſtricteſt candour and impartiality, they look forward to the patronage of thoſe Gentlemen who coincide with themſelves in opinion, reſpecting the importance of the Literary Character, and its immediate connection with true Religion and good Government.

COUNCIL OFFICE, 16th Dec. 1800.

WHEREAS ſeveral Aſſignments have formerly iſſued out of the Surveyor General's Office, for permiſſion to occupy certain Lots upon Yonge Street and other places, and whereas no Improvements have been made on ſuch Lots, NOTICE is hereby given, that if the ſame are not Improved, and the Aſſignments brought forward, and lodged in the Council Office within three months from the date hereof, no Claim whatever upon ſuch Aſſignments can be ſuſtained.

Foreign News.

VIENNA, Sept. 10.

On the news, that the armiſtice was prolonged, our ſtate paper rote 8 per cent.

What muſt greatly contribute to promote peace, or ſhould it not be concluded, muſt have a great influence on the conſequent events, is the armed intervention of two great courts, which in certain circumſtances will take place. We now received certain information, that two numerous Ruſſian armies, which will amount together to no leſs than 130,000 men are aſſembling on the Ruſſian frontiers of Volhynia and Lithuania. We are alſo aſſured that another powerful court will not ſee with indifference the French carry the war into Bohemia.

PARIS, Sept. 25.

Line of Strafburgh.

Gen. Moreau, commander in chief of the army of the Rhine, to gen. Buonaparte, firſt conſul of the republic.

"I have concluded a new armiſtice. The three places of Ingolſtadt, Ulme and Philiſburgh will be given up in five days, and evacuated in ten.

(True Copy) "CHAPPE."

September 27.

We have received from a correſpondent at Caſſels, a letter dated the 23d, containing the following particulars: "Yeſterday at 12 o'clock in the morning, an Engliſh flag of truce brought over two dispatches, the one directed to the miniſter of Foreign affairs, and the other to the miniſter of Marine.—They were inſtantly forwarded to Paris by a courier extraordinary, who will reach that city this evening. Nothing has yet tranſpired reſpecting the ſubject of the diſpatches."

The Engliſh cruizers have again appeared in great numbers off the coaſt of Holland.

September 28.

We know not whether the Britiſh Cabinet will accept the conditions which the French government has wiſely propoſed to it, and we doubt whether it be proper to deſire that envoys from England ſhould aſſiſt at the congreſs. But after the formidable proſition of our army, and the deplorable ſtate in which the emperor ſees his own army, we ſhould be much diſappointed, if the reſult of the congreſs was not ſpeedy pacification between the French republic and his Imperial majeſty.

ACTS OF GOVERNMENT.

Decree of the 24th of September.

Buonaparte, firſt conſul of the republic, decrees as follows:

I. The general of diviſion, Clarke, is appointed extraordinary commandant of Luneville, and of the whole of the department of La Meurthe.

II. He ſhall correſpond during that command directly with the government.

III. Meaſures ſhall be taken for eſtabliſhing a correſpondence with Luneville, by means of a Telegraph.

IV. Gen. Clarke ſhall immediately repair to Luneville, and take every ſtep neceſſary for holding a congreſs.

V. The miniſter at war is charged with the execution of the preſent decree. (Signed)

BUONAPARTE.

LONDON, Oct. 4.

We are ſtill without any certain information reſpecting the nature of the diſpatches lately received by government from France. It is thoſe however, that thoſe which arrived on Wedneſday evening, contained nothing abſolutely deciſive of the queſtion of the propoſed armiſtice; and the explanatory communications on the ſubject, we believe have not yet entirely ceaſed.—The difficulties which preſent themſelves on this occaſion, muſt be, indeed both numerous and ſerious. It ſhould ſeem that we are called upon to make no leſs a ſacrifice than the total relinquiſhment, for a given time, of the proud ſuperiority which as a maratime power, we now ſo eminently poſſeſs; and to this diſcouraging conſideration we may venture to add our fears, that the jealouſies and ſuſpicions which the reſpective governments entertain of each other's views, are at the preſent moment of too marked and forcible a deſcription to induce a reaſonable hope of the exiſting differences being brot to a ſpeedy or cordial accommodation.

A council of the cabinet miniſters was held yeſterday afternoon at Lord Grenville's office, a circumſtance which gave riſe to a report of ſome further diſpatches having been received from France, but which we could not trace to any authentic ſource.

Gen. Angerou's troops have now all marched up the Main towards Dohas. In the environs of the Lohn and the Nidda, not a ſingle French Soldier remains.

Gen. Clarke, the officer appointed to repair to the ſeat of negociation at Luneville, is an Iriſhman, and a very confidential friend of the firſt conſul.

The flag of truce which arrived at Dover on Wedneſday morning, brot diſpatches in anſwer to thoſe ſent from London on Friday laſt. They reached town on Wedneſday evening, and contained the anſwer of the French government. To the diſpatches ſent off on Saturday no anſwer has yet been received, but it is hourly looked for. Till ſomething definitive is agreed on, or the matter entirely abandoned, no information on the ſubject can be expected to be publiſhed officially.

A letter from Barcelona dated the 7th September, in the French papers, ſtates that the diſtemper which rages at Cadiz is neither the plague nor the yellow fever. It aſſigns no name to this epidemic diſorder which carried off great numbers of people. It is juſtly conſidered at Barcelona as very ſtrange that no precaution had been taken to prevent its introduction there.

We are extremely ſorry to learn, by authentic letters from Cadiz of the 5th ult, the lateſt date in town, that the mortality in that city has been much greater than there was reaſon to ſuppoſe. The epidemic diſorder, or as ſome ſuppoſe it, the plague, which prevailed there, carried off no fewer than 3600 perſons between the 18th of Aug. and 5th of Sept. on which day 207 perſons died. The diſorder generally carries off thoſe whom it attacks, on the third or fourth day. The firſt ſymptoms are a pain in the limbs and bones, and violent vomitting. About 30,000 inhabitants haveſſed the city, and about 40,000 remain in it. No perſon is now ſuffered to leave Cadiz, and a cordon of troops is drawn along the peninſula to prevent any intercourſe with the country.

We ſome time ſince announced that ſeveral diſtricts in China had been inundated by the overflowing of the Tay and Kam rivers. Recent accounts ſtate the conſequences to have been moſt calamitous. The vaſt quantities of ſlime and mud left on the ſubſiding of the water, and the accumulation of putrid bodies with which its ſurface had been covered, has occaſioned a malignant epidemic diſorder, which has proved fatal to upwards of 100,000 perſons.

The flag of truce which arrived the night before laſt, brot to lord Grenville the anſwer of citizen Talleyrand to the diſpatches ſent on Friday laſt to Paris, relative to the propoſed naval armiſtice.

Reſpecting the particular points of reſtriction or equivalent, which are the ſubjects of delay in the negociations of the naval armiſtice, nothing certain will tranſpire till that object ſhall be finally accompliſhed or refuſed. Miniſters by admitting and attempting to modify a ſimilar propoſition, evince their deſire of procuring a general peace at the congreſs of Luneville. Much difficulty will attend the preſent diſcuſſions, which naturally embrace ſo many parts of the world, where France is in various modes coerced and confined by our maritime ſuperiority. Many flags of truce therefore will paſs, and no doubt repaſs, before ſuch an armiſtice can be finally concluded, and the public will do well to guard itſelf againſt a renewal of ſpeculation and impoſture, to which during every ſpecies of negociation, it is always expoſed.

United States

NEW YORK. December 10.

SUMMARY.

It is with regret we obſerve from the foreign details, by the laſt arrivals, that there has been a great deal of troubleſome rioting in England, among the always diſcontented, on accoun of the ſcarcity of breid, particularly in London, Briſtol, Portſmouth, Birmingham, Harwich, Nottingham, Ipſwich, Durham, Cambridge, Wincheſter, &c. The details of which occupy the greateſt proportion of the late London papers. The military, it appears, have been called in to ſuppreſs the rioters.

The Lord Mayor of London iſſued a handbill on the 17th of October, ordering the inhabitants on the appearance of the military to keep themſelves from the windows, and to keep all the individuals of their, families and ſervants within doors; and if poſſible, to remain in the back rooms of their houſes.

The Swin ſloop of war, from Halifax, has arrived at London, on board of which Mr. M'Donald, and his colleague Mr. Guillemard, two of the American commiſſioners went paſſengers.

It is ſaid the Emperor of Germany's body guard has left Vienna, and joined the army.

The army of Italy was to be reinforced to 125,000 men.

There have been ſerious inſurrections in Naples and Sicily.

It ſeems ſome riots have taken place in different parts of Ireland, on account of the ſcarcity of proviſions, but they were ſoon ſuppreſſed.

Deſertions among the Dutch troops in Germany, are ſaid to be very frequent.

The Vienna Gazette furniſhes ſome long details of the preparations for war now making by the Porte.—According to theſe accounts, the Turkiſh army is about to be raiſed to 100,000 men. The Pacha of Modea has already furniſhed the Grand Vizier with 45,000 freſh troops. The Captain Pacha has a conſiderable body of forces on board the fleet. The operations of theſe corps are under the direction of Kohler, an Engliſh general, and their attack, it is underſtood, to be made on different points at the ſame time.

The Philadelphia Gazette ſays,—"Letters from London, by the American, ſtate, that the principal bar to the negociation between Great Britain and France, is the relative ſituation of the naval powers of the two countries.—The arch Conſul inſiſting upon it that the Britiſh fleets ſhall ceaſe to blockade the harbour of Breſt, preparatory to negociation being opened. To this propoſal, John Bull thinks it is not proper to accede."

The Paris Journals repreſent the preparations by Spain as immenſe. The Spaniſh army they ſay, is already prepared to march, it conſiſts of 70,000 infantry and 8000 cavalry.—The general in chief is M. d'Urtia. It is aſſerted that he will be able to commence hoſtilities by the middle of October; and the Court of Liſbon have nothing to oppoſe ſuch a formidable army.

From the Halifax Journal, Sept. 9.

Monday arrived here the ſchr. Siſters, capt. Cameron, in 26 days from St. Thomas's: a Daniſh King's brig mounting 22 eighteen pounders, arrived there, bringing in with her the ſchooner Eagle, capt. Nutton, of this port. Capt. Cameron went in his boat, to go on board the Eagle, but was prevented by the Daniſh officers, when John Doyle, who was armourer of the Eagle, got upon the gunwale, and informed him they had been fired into by the above brig, in the moſt barbarous manner, without the leaſt provocation. That capt. Nutton and one man was killed, and the firſt lieutenant and five others wounded. Capt. Cameron was refuſed any further communication with the crew of the Eagle, who were landed next day under a ſtrong guard, and confined in the fort; and the only reaſon aſſigned for this extraordinary proceeding, was, that one of their armed ſchooners had been attacked by a Britiſh privateer called Dreadnought, and they were determined to have ſatisfaction.

When we compare the behaviour of the Daniſh frigates in the North Sea & in the Mediterranean, with the above murderous and unprovoked action, and conſider that the Daniſh brig had arrived but five days from Denmark, and was probably he had not brought out the new orders of that court, there can be no doubt but the Danes are provoking that chaſtiſement from the Britiſh navy which it is highly probable they will ſhortly receive.

From a London Paper.

There is now in the river an aſtoniſhing large hairy wild man, caught four hundred miles from the Cape of Good Hope, brought over in the Rundler, South Sea Whaler, he is of aſtoniſhing muſcular ſtrength, a ſpecimen of which had nearly proved fatal to one of the cuſtom houſe officers, who inadvertently went too near him; he ſeized hold of the man, twirled him about two or three times, with the greateſt violence, and then threw him over the ſide. Luckily the man eſcaped with a horrid fright and a ſound ducking.

DENUNCIATION OF LOUIS XIV.

A Mr. Stirling, who was Miniſter of the Epiſcopy Church of Glaſgow, during the war, which this and other countries maintained againſt the inſatiable ambition of Louis XIV. in that part of his prayer which related to public affairs, uſed to beſeech the Lord, that he would take the haughty tyrant of France and ſtake him over the mouth of hell;—"but good Lord," added the worthy man, "dinna let him fa' in." This curious prayer having been mentioned to Louis, he laughed heartily at this new method of puniſhing ambition, and frequently afterwards gave, The good Scotch Parſon, as a toaſt. Ibid.

Extract of a letter from lieut. Charles Stewart, commander of the United States ſchr. Enterprize, dated the 3d October, 1800.

"We cruiſed to windward of St. Bartholomews till the 7th of October, which the day we fell in with and captured the French armed (three maſted) ſch'r Diana, out two days from Gaudaloupe, laden with ſugar, coffee and cotton, bound to France, under convoy of a brig of 16 nine pounders and 150 men. This (ſchooner mounted 8 nine pound carronades, (6 of which they threw overboard in the chace) and 45 men.

"On board of her we had the pleaſure to find General RIGAUD, commander in chief of the ſouth of St Domingo.

"This is the man, ſir, that has wrefted millions from my countrymen; the depredations, the piracies plunder and murders he has committed on my fellow-citizens are but too well known in the United States; and now the ſupreme Ruler of all things has placed him in the hands of that country he has moſt injured."

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Camden county, to his friend in Savannah.

"The famous Bowles is ſuppoſed to be in our neighbourhood, a party of his friends, the Indians, have arrived oppoſite to Coleraine, they are much in want of ammunition, which I hope they will not get here—a ſmall party of horſe are watching their motions, and Capt. Boyer is on his march with his detachment of Federal troops for Coleraine."

NEW YORK, November 11.

In yeſterday's Gazette we mentioned the ſurrender of Curracoa to the Engliſh—The following are the Articles of Capitulation, agreed between Frederick Watkins, Eſq: captain of his Britannic Majeſty's ſhip Nereid, now laying off the harbour of Curaccoa; and John Rudolph Lauffer, Governor ad interim of ſaid iſland and its dependencies, and Commander in Chief of all the armed force of ſaid iſland.

1. The iſland of Curracoa and its dependencies ſhall be placed under the protection of his Britannic Majeſty, and ſhall peaceably ſubmit to the government of his ſaid Majeſty. Anſwer—agreed to.

2. The particulars are received in London, of the death of the Rev. Mr. P. Greig, the Miſſionary to Africa. Seven men of the Foulah nation came to pay their reſpects to Mr. Greig on the 31ſt January. He received them with the greateſt kindneſs, and with a view of conciliating them, amuſed them with the ſight of various European articles. He allowed three of them to ſleep in his houſe, when theſe wretches, filled with the infatiable deſire of getting poſſeſſion of the things they had ſeen, inhumanly murdered Mr. Graig in the night, and carried off the articles. The Foulahs were purſued by the people of Candia, moſt of the property recovered. & four of the ruffians brought to Free Port in chains.

NORFOLK, Nov. 4.

Arrived at Dumariſcotta, on Friday, the 24th Oct. the ſloop Hunter, from Antigua. On her paſſage home, in the night, voices were heard crying out for aſſiſtance. The ſloop immediately rounded to, and took off 25 men, who were clinging to pieces of a wreck and floating ſpars. It ſeems the unfortunate perſons had belonged to a Britiſh privateer that had been upſet in a gale of wind. One hundred and twenty perſons were on board the privateer, four of whom were ladies; the latter were among the loſt.

A London paper gives the following account of the French fleet at Breſt.—It is divided into two ſquadrons, or two lines; one without the harbour, compoſed of eight three deckers, and four ſhips of 90 guns. The ſecond conſiſts of ſeventeen ſhips of 74 guns each.—Both ſquadrons have ſprings on their cables. In the Bay of Boſcauvel there are eleven 74's and one ſhip of 60, with springs on their cables, to anfwer either line; and each fhip has 400 troops ready to be difembarked, to reinforce the camp of Quebec, which conffits at prefent of 3000 men. The lines at Quebec are 250 toifes in length, and are defended by 72 pieces of artillery of large calibre. Thefe entrenchments are remarkably ftrong; 4000 men would not be able to carry them.

A fhocking circumftance happened at Bruffels, on the 2d September laft, and which unfortunately is not without example. An innkeeper of that city, returning from taking a walk with his wife, dropt down fuddenly to all appearance dead: the medical perfons who were called in declared him to be lifelefs. The next day he was enclofed in an oak coffin, and depofited in a chapel until the funeral was to take place. Some of the neighbours heard a noife in the chapel. They ran to the place, and found the poor man bathed in his blood and really dead, having as it appeared, made moft violent, but ineffectual ftruggles to brake his coffin.

For the UPPER CANADA GAZETTE

An ODE for her MAJESTY's BIRTH DAY.

BRING me an harp from Heav'n, ye facred nine,
And fill each ftring with harmony divine;
Strike your fweet lutes, your dulcet voices raife,
Breathe all your fpirit thro' your poet's lays;
With founds celeftial aid my grateful voice,
'Till every Britifh heart like mine rejoice;
Let tainted flander hide her guilty head,
'Till white rob'd virtue ftrike detraction dead;
Let malice droop, and envy bluffh for fhame,
While to the fpheres I echo Charlotte's name;
Hear it, ye Britons! all ye nations round,
Hear and reverberate the joyful found!
Daughters of Albion catch the much lov'd name,
Which thus I gave to everlafting fame.
With fhouts of tranfport hail the aufpicious morn,
For on this happy day was Charlotte born!
Charlotte! the glory of Britannia's ifle,
Where virtue reigns, and where the graces fmile:
Queen of the people's hearts! her fex's pride,
On earth their pattern, and to heaven their guide!
Mother by nature of a glorious race,
And foffer mother of her country's peace.
For her the orphans prayers to heav'n afcend,
From her the weeping widow finds a friend,
Cheer'd by her bounty, clafps her darling boy,
And tears of grief are chang'd to tears of joy;
Ye high of birth, degenerate in crimes,
Who for your follies plead the graceleis times:
Behold your Queen and bluffh!—'tis there you'll find
The laffing model of a noble mind;
Come all ye maids who round Parnaffus rove,
And for Britannia manifeft your love;
With notes unfung your fweeteft lyres prepare,
And to the world thefe happy tidings bear.
"No more bright virtue dwells in fhades
"unknown,
"She quits her cottage for the Britifh
"throne."

PETER HUNTER, LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

A Proclamation.

GEORGE the Third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and fo forth:—

TO ALL OUR LOVING SUBJECTS, GREETING:—

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the twenty ninth day of Nov. laft, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to prorogue our Provincial Parliament until the ninth day of the preſent month of January, at which time in our town of YORK you were held and conſtrained to appear; but we taking into our Royal conſideration the eaſe and convenience of our loving ſubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice of our executive council, to relieve you, and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforeſaid, hereby convoking, and by theſe preſents enjoining you, and each of you, that on the fourteenth day of FEBRUARY next, enſuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament, in our town of York, there to take into conſideration the ſtate and welfare of our Province of Upper-Canada, and therein to do as may ſeem neceſſary: Herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof we have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the great ſeal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well beloved PETER HUNTER, Eſq. our Lieutenant Governor of our ſaid province, and Lieutenant General commanding our Forces in our Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, at York, this THIRD day of January, in the year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and one, and in the forty-firſt year of our reign.

WM. JARVIS, ſec'y.

TO THE PUBLIC.

☞ THE Proprietors of the UPPER CANADA GAZETTE, feel it at once a duty and a pleaſure to expreſs their grateful acknowledgments to their kind Patrons, for the liberal encouragement they have experienced during the courſe of the preceding year. This teſtimonial of their thanks and obligations is not the mere dictate of annual cuſtom, but ſprings warm from the heart, and is a tribute juſtly due to patronage the moſt liberal and encouraging; and they flatter themſelves they may, without vanity, add, to patronage not wholly unmerited. Anxious to meet the generous predileſtion of the Public, by proportionate exertions on their part, they have neglected no opportunity—they have ſhrunk back from no expence which might add to the general intereſt of their Paper. During the paſt year they have conſiderably increaſed the dimenſions of their paper, and, not ſatisfied with adding to the bulk, have contrived to render their columns ſtill more capacious, by printing a propoſition (occaſionally) of the occurrences of the week in a ſmall type. Therefore, the Friends and Patrons of the Gazette, will find a very material augmentation of ſize and contents, without any augmentation of price.

The ſcenes now acting before our eyes on the grand ſtage of human events, ſufficiently demonſtrate the indiſſoluble connection between Religion and good Government; their intereſts are inſeparably interwoven; and the decay of the former muſt of neceſſity involve the downfall of the latter. Convinced of the truth of this poſition, the Proprietors of the Gazette are determined, as far as in them lies, to exert their utmoſt vigilance and ability in the ſupport of Religion, Morality, and Social Order. In this view, they will take a retroſpect of what paſſes, as well in the Religious as in the Political World; and propoſe to notice all occurrences connected with the intereſts of theſe grand objects.

In this part of their plan, they may confidently promiſe themſelves the ſupport and encouragement of every friend to Religion, Virtue, and good Order; and as they mean to diſcharge their duty with the ſtricteſt candour and impartiality, they look forward to the patronage of thoſe Gentlemen who coincide with themſelves in opinion, reſpecting the importance of the Literary Character, and its immediate connection with true Religion and good Government.

COUNCIL-OFFICE, 16th Dec. 1800.

WHEREAS ſeveral Aſſignments have formerly iſſued out of the Surveyor General's Office, for permiſſion to occupy certain Lots upon Yonge Street and other places, and whereas no Improvements have been made on ſuch Lots, NOTICE is hereby given, that if the ſame are not Improved, and the Aſſignments brought forward, and lodged in the Council Office within three months from the date hereof, no Claim whatever upon ſuch Aſſignments can be ſuſtained.

J. SMALL, C. E. C.

COUNCIL OFFICE, Dec. 30, 1800.

☞ WHEREAS the Perſons who have been permitted to occupy the following Lots in the Town of York, No. 8, 13, 17, and 18, North ſide Hoſpital Street; No. 11, 17, 18, and 19, South ſide ditto; Lots No. 1, 2, 3, 9, 10, 12, 13, and 14, North ſide Newgate Street; Lots No. 4, 9, and 11, South ſide ditto; Lot No. 17 North ſide King Street; and Lot No. 1 and 2, South ſide Market Street, and No. 1, 2, 3, North ſide Front Street, have neglected to comply with the Notice iſſued from his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor's Office, of the fourth of September,

NOTICE is therefore given, that the ſaid Lots are hereby declared Vacant—leave being given, however, to the reſpective Nominees, to come forward by themſelves, or their Attornies, in one month from the date hereof, and ſhew Cauſe, if any they have, why a new Application ſhould be received from them for permiſſion to re-occupy the ſaid Lots, or any others in the ſaid Town of York.

Foreign News.

CARLSHRUE, Sept. 15.

By an extraordinary courier.

EARLY this morning an Auſtrian courier paſſed through this city, who was ſent off the day before yeſterday from the Auſtrian head-quarters, to proceed with all diſpatch to Straſburgh and Paris.—By the way he met two French couriers, who were going to General Moreau, and from who he learned that new propoſitions for peace had been tranſmitted from Buonaparte, which the Emperor had accepted and ratified. A French courier from Munich to Paris paſſed through this city, who ſaid he carried orders to tranſmit by the Telegraph from Straſburgh, intelligence of the ſigning of the preliminaries of peace.

RATISBON, Sept. 28.

A letter by an extraordinary courier.

The Emperor has ratified the preliminaries of peace, which were ſigned at Paris on the 28th of July, by the French miniſter, Talleyrand, and Count St. Julien. They were ratified at Alt Oettingen, and Munich, in the Auſtrian and French head quarters, on the 20th inſt.

Peace will again be reſtored. France obtains the Rhine for the boundary; and the Emperor as a guarantee of his ſincere deſire for peace, gives the French poſſeſſion of the fortreſſes of Ingoldſtadt Philipſburgh, and Ulm, till the definitive treaty will be concluded. The French army will likewiſe ſtill keep its preſent poſition.

OSTEND, September 16.

A dreadful event has plunged this town into deſolation and mourning. A barque, traverſing the canal, yeſterday evening, at the riſing of the tide, with more than two hundred perſons of every age and ſex, was ſunk in the mid-channel, and out of the whole only 20 were ſaved, all the reſt periſhed. The day had been fair, and a fete was held at Slyckens, a village a league and a half from Oſtend, to which more than 4000 of the inhabitants had repaired. The boat had ſcarcely quitted the bank when the damage was perceived. But inſtead of returning whilſt it was yet practicable, the conductors, as if infatuated, would purſue their way. The water entering at every part, ſeveral men threw themſelves overboard, but were drowned in the whirlpool. Arrived at mid channel, the cries of the people were dreadful, the boat ſoon after ſunk, and nothing was to be ſeen but the bodies of the women and children, rolling amidſt the waves, and ſinking, never to re appear. Some few were reſcued and brought to life, but when the boats arrived they could only bring up about 100 corpſes. Suttonax, the commandant of artillery, loſt three four of his children. The ſuperviſor of artillery periſhed, with his wife and ſon; the wife, ſon and niece of a captain of artillery, alſo periſhed. The latter threw himſelf into the ſtream and ſaved three perſons, but could not find thoſe who were moſt dear to him. All Oſtend is in tears, almoſt every perſon has loſt a relation or a friend. One circumſtance deſerves to be recited. A woman was this morning taken lifeleſs out of the water, it was perceived, however, on undreſſing her, that there was a palpitation in her womb. A ſurgeon was called in, who performed the ceſarean operation, and drew forth an infant, which according to every appearance, is full likely to live.

LONDON, October 10.

The progreſs of a dreadful fire in Wapping, High-ſtreet, was ſtopped on Monday evening, by pulling down ſome buildings. It began on the premiſes of Meſſrs. J. Tiddy and S. Batuer, ſhip chandlers.

The avennes to the ſpot where the fire was venting its fury, were ſo extremely narrow, that the engines, when they arrived, had ſcarce room to play, and every attempt to get the flames under were unavailing.

Things were ſo alarming an aſpect in the early part of the day, that the greater number of the inhabitants of the neighbourhood moved their goods, &c. to Wapping church yard for ſafety.

The church yard on this occaſion, was a very convenient receptacle for thoſe who had time and means to convey their effects there, which were vigilantly protected by the Wapping Corps, under the command of Captain Batſon, and the Union Corps, Captain William Mellish, who remained under arms from 7 o'clock in the morning till one at night. The damages ſuſtained by this conflagration are eſtimated at two hundred thouſand pounds.

The peace of the continent can never be fixed or durable as long as France continues at war with England. We have it therefore in our power to prevent in ſome degree, the chains from being riveted which Europe is about to receive from the French republic. We are ourſelves invulnerable; except, indeed, in our finances; but even here we poſſeſs immenſe and unknown reſources, and much as we deſire a peace, we cannot yet feel the neceſſity of ſubmiſſion. If Buonaparte wiſhes to be believed to have ſincerely deſired a peace with us, he muſt know that to extort conceſſions as the price of treating will not make converts amongſt thoſe who juſtly doubt his ſincerity; and who can have no motive for granting conceſſions unprofitable towards the great end of peace, and merely advantageous to him whom they conſider as endeavouring to deceive them.

The great object in all the plans of peace of Buonaparte is to deſtroy the defences of other nations, and to expoſe every frontier in Europe to the deſtructive inroads of the French. In Piedmont and upon the Rhine, whatever ſeparates and proteſts the nations from his military Republic, is to be thrown down! Turin, Tortona, Aleſſandria, the citadel of Milan, all the frontier places of Italy, have already fallen, or at this time diſmantling.—Ehrenbreiſtein, Caſſel, Kehl, and all the fortreſſes of the Rhine, not actually in the poſſeſſion of France, are now to be demoliſhed; ſo that the barriers of Italy and the German empire are to be pulled down, as the price of a peace which France will never want a pretext to violate, after having ſecured in her own hands every facility of doing ſo with impunity.—Reſpecting England, the ſea is her barrier, and it muſt be remembered that it is her only barrier, both at the peace and during its negociation. If we conſent to any ſpecies of armiſtice, we muſt conſider in the wiſdom of his Majeſty's miniſters, that the negociations will not conclude in limine after France has derived the advantages the expects from the ceſſation of hoſtilities.

Before they will accede to the demands of the French government upon this point, it may be inferred that previous explanations will have taken place with regard to Belgium and Holland, and that the broad preliminary principle and baſis of the future peace have been adjuſted.

Pall Mall, 18 October, 1800.

SIR—Incloſed is a copy of my new Proſpectus, which I request you to have inſerted in all the Canada Papers. I remain, Sir, your very humble ſervant,

WILLIAM COBBETT.

PROSPECTUS OF A DAILY PAPER, TO BE ENTITLED

The Porcupine.

HAVING, in America, witneſſed the fatal effects of revolution; having ſeen piety give place to a contempt of religion, plain-dealing exchanged for ſhuffling and fraud, univerſal confidence for univerſal ſuſpicion and diſtruſt; having ſeen a country, once the ſeat of peace and good neighbourhood, torn to pieces by faction, plunged, by intriguing demagogues, into never-ceaſing hatred and ſtrife; having ſeen a people, once too fond of what they called liberty to bear the gentle ſway of a Britiſh King, humbly bend their necks to the yoke, nay, to the very foot, of a ſet of groveling deſpots; having, in ſhort, ſeen the crime of rebellion againſt monarchy puniſhed by the tormenting, the degrading curſe of republicaniſm, it is with the utmoſt aſtoniſhment and indignation that I find many of thoſe, who have the preſs at their command, endeavouring to bring down on my native country the very ſame ſpecies of calamity and diſgrace. Notwithſtanding the example of America, & the more dreadful example of France, I find the emiſſaries of the Republican faction (for ſuch it really is) ſtill preaching fanatiſiſm & infidelity, ſtill bawling for that change which they have the audacity to denominate reform, ſtill exerting all their nefarious ingenuity in ſapping the foundation of the Church and the Throne. Thoſe who want experience of the conſequences, may, for aught I know, be excuſed for conniving at theſe attempts, but, for me, who have ſeen acts paſſed by a republican legiſlature, more fraudulent than forgery or coining; for me, who have ſeen republican officers of ſtate offering their country for ſale for a few thouſands of dollars; for me, who have ſeen republican judges become felons, and felons become republican judges; for me to fold my hands & tamely liſten to the inſolent eulogiſts of republican governments and rulers, would be a ſhameful abandonment of principle, a daſtardly deſertion of duty. With theſe ſentiments then, I reſume the publication of a Daily Paper, duly apprized, by paſt experience, of the hoſtility I ſhall excite, and firmly reſolved to repel it by all the honorable means in my power.

THE PORCUPINE will, of courſe, embrace all the uſual topics of a Newspaper: Parliamentary and Law Reports, Court, City, and Country News, &c. An early and correct account of thoſe foreign events, which may be conſidered as news, is a thing ſo much in the beaten track, and ſo indiſpenſably neceſſary, that any ſpecific promiſe on that head would be ſuperfluous; but it may not be amiſs to mention, that to faithful tranſlations from foreign journals, I ſhall endeavour to add ſuch a commentary as will prevent my paper from being (what too many others are) a mere vehicle for theſe articles, which are fabricated on the Continents of Europe & America, for the ſole purpoſe of deceiving the too credulous people of this kingdom. The intrigues of the French, the ſervile, the inſidious, the inſinuating French, ſhall be an object of my conſtant attention. Whether at war or at peace with us, they ſtill dread the power, envy the happineſs, and thirſt for the ruin of England. Collectively and individually, the whole and every one of them hate us. Had they the means, they would exterminate us to the laſt man; they would ſnatch the crutch from our parents, the cradle from our children, and our happy country itſelf would they ſink beneath thoſe waves, on which they now flee from the thunder of our cannon. When we ſhall ſheath the ſword it is for our Sovereign to ſay; but, while we retain one drop of true Britiſh blood in our veins, we never ſhall ſhake hands with this perfidious and ſanguinary race, much leſs, ſhall we make a compromiſe with their monkey-like manners and tiger-like principles.

In my endeavours to detect and expoſe home bred falſehoods and miſrepreſentations, I do not propoſe to confine myſelf to the diurnal and weekly prints, for, though they are certainly a moſt copious ſource of miſchief, it is probable that more laſting evil is produced by monthly and occaſional productions, which are, comparatively ſpeaking, cheaper than newſpapers, more conveniently referred to, and much more eaſily preſerved. Without, therefore, attempting to uſurp the critic's chair, which I have neither the capacity nor the leiſure to fill, I ſhall point out to my readers the injurious tendency of works, to which, otherwiſe, they might incautiouſly give their encouragement. In the diſcharge of this, as of every other part of my duty, I ſhall, I truſt, be guided by juſtice; but, I ſhall aſſuredly pay much leſs regard to the feelings and intereſts of fanatical and factious booklellers than to the cauſe of religion and loyalty.

I ſhall ſtand in great need of, and I hope, I ſhall receive, voluntary aſſiſtance, in every department of my Paper, but more particularly in that which will treat of the artful manœuvres of the factious in the country towns, and in the villages. The unperverted ſenſe of the people is ſo decided in favour of the eſtabliſhed order of things, that the contrivers of innovation are never formidable, except where their real views are unperceived. It is their hypocritical cant, their clandeſtine intrigues in the numerous ſocieties and inſtitutions into which they imperceptibly worm themſelves: it is their viſor, and not their viſage, that we have to fear. On this topic, therefore, I thus early ſolicit information from every part of the United Kingdom, being well aſſured, that, if the malecontents have ſometimes ſucceeded in exciting a ſpirit of oppoſition and revolt, their ſucceſs is to be ſolely attributed to the want of a regular, well conducted, widely extended ſyſtem of expoſure.

It is with no ſmall mortification that I find too many of the periodical publications (as well pamphlets as papers) in the hands of Fanatics and Infidels, all of whom, however numerous their mongrel ſects, however oppoſite their tenets, however hateful their perſons to each other, do moſt cordially unite in their enmity to the national Eſtabliſhment, and moſt zealouſly co-operate for its deſtruction. Convinced as I am, from the experience of America, as well as from hiſtory in general, that an eſtabliſhed Church is abſolutely neceſſary to the exiſtence of religion and morality; convinced alſo, that the Church of England while it is an ornament, an honor, and a bleſſing to the nation, is the principal pillar of the Throne, I truſt I never ſhall be baſe enough to decline acombat with her enemies, whether they approach me in the ſank locks of the Sectary, or the ſcarlet crop of the Jacobin.

Having thus ſtated what will be the principles of my Paper, it is incumbent on me to ſay, that thoſe principles will always be my own; for, though I utterly reject that inſolent maxim of diſaffection, which will allow of reward to no talents but ſuch as are exerted in the cauſe of rebellion; though I hold it to be the duty of men in power to employ the pen as well as the ſword in defence of the government committed to their charge; yet, the peculiar circumſtances under which I now come forward, demand from me an explicit and ſolemn aſſertion of my independence. My undertaking is my own, it was begun without the aid, without the advice, and even without the knowledge, of any perſon either directly or indirectly connected with the Miniſtry: if therefore, I hope to yield ſome trifling ſupport to that Miniſtry, it is not becauſe I have received, or ever ſhall receive, any gratification at their hands; but becauſe I am moſt ſincerely perſuaded, that, next to the virtues of his Majeſty and the general loyalty of his ſubjects, this country owes its preſervation to the wiſdom and integrity of Mr. Pitt and his colleagues. This perſuaſion ſhall not, however, deter either me or my correſpondents from the exerciſe of our judgment. The Porcupine never was, in America, nor ſhall it ever be in England, the blind inſtrument of party, the trumpet of indiſcriminate applauſe. The wiſeſt men may ſometimes commit errors, which the moſt ignorant may perceive: I ſhall, therefore, feel no reſtraint but that of decency and candour; truſting, from the wiſe, to a liberal interpretation of my motives, and totally diſregarding the diſpleaſure of thoſe who may be weak enough to prefer flattery to truth.

The ſubjects of a Britiſh King, like the ſons of every provident and tender father, never know his value till they feel the want of his protection. In the days of youth and of ignorance, I was led to believe, that comfort, freedom, and virtue, were excluſively the lot of Republicans. A very ſhort trial convinced me of my error, admoniſhed me to repent of my folly, and urged me to compenſate for the injuſtice of the opinions I had conceived. During an eight years abſence from my country, I was not an unconcerned ſpectator of her perils, nor did I liſten, in ſilence, to the ſlanders of her enemies. Though divided from England by the ocean, though her gay fields were hidden perhaps for ever, from my view, ſtill her happineſs and her glory were the objects of my conſtant ſolicitude; I rejoiced at her victories, and mourned at her defeats; her friends were my friends, and her foes were my foes. Once more returned, once more under the ſafeguard of that Sovereign, who watched over me in my infancy, and the want of whoſe protecting arm I have ſo long had occaſion to lament, I feel an irreſiſtible deſire to communicate to my countrymen the fruit of my experience; to ſhew them the injurious and degrading conſequences of diſcontentment, diſloyalty, and innovation; to convince them, that they are the freeſt, as well as happieſt, of the human race; and, above all, to warn them againſt the arts of thoſe ambitious and perfidious demagogues, who would willingly reduce them to a level with the cheated ſlaves, in the bearing of whoſe yoke I have had the mortification to ſhare. WM. COBBETT.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, January 24.

On Friday the 16th inst. some villain or villains, allured by the hope of plunder, broke open the ſtable of Mr. Patrick Mealey, of this town, ſtore-keeper, wherein he lately kept a quantity of liquors and other merchandize; but luckily they were removed a few days before.—In their ſearch they found an old bridle, which not thinking worth carrying off, they left at the outer gate.

Thoſe merchants who are, for the want of room in their ſtores, obliged to keep part of their goods in out-houſes, cannot be too cautious, as this neſt of robbers will, moſt probably, be on the conſtant watch to ſee where they can make their prey.

It is ſaid, and we have no reaſon for diſbelieving it, ſays a London paper, that peace has been concluded between France and Portugal, through the medium of the court of Madrid.

From the Montreal Gazette of Sept. 15.

Yeſterday morning about ten minutes before one o'clock, two ſevere ſhocks of an earthquake were felt in this city.—By information obtained immediately after from the centinel at the Pay-Office, it appeared to have come from the Southward, and proceeded Northerly.

THE Subſcriber thus publicly returns Thanks for the liberal and flattering encouragement which he has hitherto met with in his buſineſs of Inn keeper—to merit a continuance of it, he has, at great expence and much trouble, ſupplied his Houſe with a ſtock of choice Liquors,—his own grateful endeavours will be added, to make the accommodations and attendance agreeable to Cuſtomers. To enable him to carry on his buſineſs to the Public, and his own ſatisfaction, he requeſts thoſe indebted to him to make payments. A Proclamation.

GEORGE the Third, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and ſo forth:—

TO ALL OUR LOVING SUBJECTS, GREETING:—

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the twenty ninth day of November, laſt, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to prorogue our Provincial Parliament until the ninth day of the preſent month of January, at which time to our town of YORK you were held and conſtained to appear; but we taking into our Royal conſideration the eaſe and convenience of our loving ſubjects, have thought fit by and with the advice of our executive council aforeſaid, to relieve you and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforeſaid, hereby convoking, and by theſe preſents enjoining you, and each of you, that on the fourteenth day of FEBRUARY next enſuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament, in our town of York, there to take into conſideration the ſtate and welfare of our Province of Upper-Canada, and therein to do as may ſeem neceſſary: Herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof we have cauſed theſe our Letters to be made Patent, and the great ſeal of our ſaid Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witneſs our truſty and well beloved PETER HUNTER, Eſquire our Lieutenant Governor of our ſaid province, and Lieutenant General commanding our Forces in our Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, at York, this THIRD day of January, in the year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and one, and in the forty-firſt year of our reign.

F. H.

WM. JARVIS, ſec'y.

TO THE PUBLIC.

THE Proprietors of the UPPER CANADA GAZETTE, feel it at once a duty and a pleaſure to expreſs their grateful acknowledgments to their kind Patrons, for the liberal encouragement they have experienced during the courſe of the preceding year. This teſtimonial of their thanks and obligations is not the mere dictate of annual cuſtom, but ſprings warm from the heart, and is a tribute juſtly due to patronage the moſt liberal and encouraging; and they flatter themſelves they may, without vanity, add, to patronage not wholly unmerited. Anxious to meet the generous predileCtion of the Public, by proportionate exertions on their part, they have neglected no opportunity—they have ſhrunk back from no expence which might add to the general intereſt of their Paper. During the paſt year they have conſiderably increaſed the dimenſions of their paper, and, not ſatisfied with adding to the bulk, have contrived to render their columns ſtill more capacious, by printing a proportion (occaſionally) of the occurrences of the week in a ſmall type. Therefore, the Friends and Patrons of the Gazette, will find a very material augmentation of ſize and contents, without any augmentation of price.

The ſcenes now paſſing before our eyes on the great ſtage of human events, ſufficiently demonſtrate the indiſſoluble connexion between Religion and good Government; their intereſts are inſeparably interwoven and the decay of the former muſt of neceſſity involve the downfall of the latter. Convinced of the truth of this poſition, the Proprietors of the Gazette are determined, as far as in them lies, to exert their utmoſt vigilance and ability in the ſupport of Religion, Morality, and Social Order. In this view, they will take a retroſpect of what paſſes, as well in the Religious as in the Political World; and propoſe to notice all occurrences connected with the intereſts of theſe grand objects.

In this part of their plan, they may confidently promiſe themſelves the ſupport and encouragement of every friend to Religion, Virtue, and good Order; and as they mean to diſcharge their duty with the ſtricteſt candour and impartiality, they look forward to the patronage of thoſe Gentlemen who coincide with themſelves in opinion, reſpecting the importance of the Literary Character, and its immediate connection with true Religion and good Government.

COUNCIL-OFFICE, 16th Dec. 1800.

J. SMALL, C. E. C.

COUNCIL OFFICE, Dec. 30, 1800.

☞ WHEREAS the Perſons who have been permitted to occupy the following Lots in the Town of York, No. 8, 13, 17, and 18, North ſide Hoſpital Street; No. 11, 17, 18, and 19, South ſide ditto: Lots No. 1, 2, 3, 6, 12, 13, and 14, North ſide Newgate Street: Lots No. 4, 9, and 11, South ſide ditto; Lot No. 17, North ſide King Street; and Lot No. 1 and 2, South ſide Market Street, and No. 1, 2, North ſide Front Street, have neglected to comply with the Notice iſſued from his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor's Office, of the fourth of September,

Foreign News.

PARIS, October 5.

SIR SIDNEY SMITH.

IN the beginning of last month a flag of truce arrived from Mahon, at Barcelona. It brought about 105 prisoners, Spanish, Ligurian and French, rescued by the English from Turkish slavery.—The cruelties they had experienced would freeze the soul. Among them was young Thevenard, son of Thevenard of Toulon. He had lost a brother at the battle of Aboukir; and he himself had languished in chains among the Turks till Sir Sidney Smith was apprised of the circumstance. By means of letters and applications of every kind Sir Sidney procured his release. But this generous enemy did not stop there. He furnished Thevenard with money, clothes, &c. and recommendations to his brother at Constantinople, and for all the English naval officers. Sir Sidney carried his generosity so far as to equip an avilo to go and find him at Rhodes.

The following is a copy of one of the letters—Thevenard has, out of gratitude, preserved them all. They testify the pleasure which Sir Sidney enjoyed in restoring a son to his aged father, and in acknowledging the efforts, tho' fruitless, made by the brother of Thevenard to alleviate his captivity at Havre, previous to his removal to the Temple.

Copy of a letter from Commodore Sir Sydney Smith, to Capt. Gabriel Thevenard, on board the Tyger, June 15, 1800.

M. Thevenard is requested to come and dine with Sir Sidney Smith on board the Tyger this day at three. Sir Sydney Smith takes the liberty to send some clothes, which he supposes a person escaped from prison may require. These, however, are not of the best; but, excepting English naval uniforms, they are the only ones he has on board the Tyger, and they are the same which Sir Sydney wore from the Temple till his reaching the sea.—They will have done good service if they answer the same purpose a second time, in again restoring a son to his aged father dying of grief.

By an arrival at New York.

By the ship Rose, in 41 days from Liverpool, which vessel arrived here last evening, we have received London papers to the 18th of October—ten days later. At present we have only time to make a few extracts. The papers, upon the whole, are barren. Great complaints of the scarcity of grain in England continue; and partial tumults prevail. There are great talks of peace and continued preparations for war; neither of which events can be calculated on with any degree of certainty.—The Congress at Luneville was about to be opened, where something pacific may be agreed upon.

LONDON, October 13.

The proclamation for the meeting of parliament is expected to be published in to-morrow night's Gazette.

It has been reported, that the session will last only a fortnight. But when we reflect upon the importance and delicacy of the business which is to occupy the attention of the two houses; when we consider that it will be necessary to proceed with the utmost caution in devising a remedy for the present high price of the necessaries of life; when we consider too that this will not be the only measure submitted to parliament; that the late correspondence with the French republic will be laid before them; that it is just and possible also, that some final propositions may be submitted to them; when all these things, we repeat, are taken into consideration, it can scarcely be supposed that the session will last so short a time as a fortnight.

October 16.

Paris papers have at length arrived. We received them last night to the 14th instant.

It was not, perhaps, to be expected, that they would communicate to us any information upon the subject of a correspondence between the English and French governments. The official paper preserves the most profound silence and the Chief Consul has not thought proper to publish any account yet of the progress or the termination of the negociation. The resignation of Baron Thugut, and the appointment of the Count de Lehrbach to succeed him, have been officialy notified to the French government.

CONGRESS at LUNEVILLE.

The congress will be opened immediately. Carnot, who has resigned the situation of minister of war to Berthier, and Joseph Buonaparte, who conducted the negociation with the American ministers, are to be ministers plenipotentiaries of the French Republic. It is supposed that the deputies of the empire will not be admitted to the congress till peace has been definitively settled between Austria and France.—To such an arrangement, however, Prussia has objected, and has expressed a desire that the deputies of the empire shall assist at the congress immediately. M. de Dohm is said to have been appointed plenipotentiary to the Congress on the part of Prussia. Admist these pacific appearances, Austria has not relaxed in her preparations for war, and the Emperor, upon his return to Vienna, published a proclamation, recommending redoubled zeal and ardour in every thing necessary for the defence of the country.

Mr. Liston our Ambassador to the United States, is, it is said, on his return. Mr. Adams, the President, has it is stated, for upwards of a twelvemonth made complaints to Mr. Liston of British cruizers capturing American ships and property at the very mouths of their harbours. Mr. Liston, we are informed, transmitted these remonstrances to this government, but he did not find that they were sufficiently attended to, and his situation at Philadelphia became irksome and very unpleasant. (Courier)

LONDON, Oct. 19.

Letters from Berlin state, that the Marquis de Lucchesini is soon to have a place in the Cabinet. It is certain that the King treats him with distinction.—Although he does not enjoy the same favour as during the late reign; he possesses great influence through the means of M. Lomard, Secretary of Foreign Affairs, and M. de Kalchyoz, the King's Adjutant, who are both in great favour. M. de Luchesini insists that Prussia ought to take an active part in the general concerns of Europe. He is not friendly to Austria, and he detests Thugut.

In the whole contents of the Paris papers that arrived on Wednesday evening, we find but one thing of importance, the double change which has taken place in the administration of Vienna and of Paris. From this, tho' no positive consequences can be deduced, we may, at least, draw some probable inferences. The appointment of Count Lehrbach, a man whom a paper of yesterday unjustly calls weak, in the room of Baron Thugut, appears to indicate that the political system of the latter is not abandoned, while the nomination of Count Cobentzel, as a negociator at Luneville, has a contrary aspect. It is not impossible to reconcile this apparent opposition. We may suppose that the former has been done with an intention of producing satisfaction at Vienn, and the latter with a view to the same object at Paris. It is possible that the party which has placed Count Lehrbach in Administration, may not have been displeased that a person foreign to them should have been entrusted with the negociations for peace.—Count Cobentzel will naturally be a mere instrument; he cannot do any thing but what is previously decided at Vienna or what must be ratified there. His commission may not operate so much in favour of peace as some persons imagine. The sending of a Prussian minister, M. Dohm, deserves to be remarked, and will have a particular influence on the issue of the congress. It will be time to turn our attention to it when the fact shall be better authenticated.

The Chief Consul appears desirous of rivaling another Foreign Government, in its mutability in the choice of Ministers and Generals. This imitation of the policy of the Directory, ought not to be passed over without observation: it shews very little consistency in the ideas of Buonaparte, or what is more probable, very little confidence in men who having been formerly his equals, are now reduced to be merely his tools.

Address to the King.

In the British house of lords on the 14th of Nov. the Speaker acquainted the house that he had yesterday waited on his majesty with the address, to which his majesty returned as an answer "That he relied on the assurance which his faithful commons had given, that they would use every endeavor to encourage the importation of corn, and introduce economy into the management of it, and to effect a speedy restoration of peace as soon as it could be found compatible with the security and honor of these kingdoms."

Negociation.—Mr. Sheridan, in the British house of commons, the same day, said that he had perused the papers on the table with great attention relative to the Naval armament; and that there appeared to be deficiency, as he did not find among them an account of the negociations between Austria and the French government respecting a separate Negociation. If such did exist, Ministers must be in possession of them, as having passed between this country and Austria. He would move for these papers on Monday next.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, January 31.

THE alterations (says a London paper of Nov. 12) in the New Great Seal, now finished, in the custody of the lord high chancellor, are—that the arms of France are entirely expunged; the arms of England, of Scotland, of Wales, and of Ireland, are quartered; and the arms of Hanover are placed upon the centre of the four quarters. His majesty, in the new seal, instead of being stiled "King of Great Britain, France and Ireland," stiles himself simply, "BRITANNIARUM REX;" KING OF THE BRITISH. This title has a very expressive and appropriate meaning. It includes not only the British Isles, but all subjects in every quarter of the globe living under the British dominion. His majesty, in council, has given orders that his title, arms, &c. shall be altered after the expiration of the present year, in all public instruments, &c. And orders are likewise given to have the arms of all the royal carriages altered as above.

FOR THE ORACLE.

TO THE

EDITOR of the HERALD,

SIR,

WERE you an object worthy of institution, I should ask you this plain question, do you appreciate your own merit by your endeavors to lessen that of others? Your late attempt at wit has caused much mirth in York, and all at your own expence. The patronage you are soliciting is not to be obtained by indiscriminate abuse, and surely you cannot be so weak as to suppose, that the emissions of spleen will be mistaken for the sallies of wit; no, master Sylvester, I think experience might have taught you, that the applause of the customers, who you formerly invited to liquidate accounts with "Oats and Indian corn," is no permanent reliance. The "lay long" (as you lately taught your customers to 'pronounce the word) added to the approbation of sensible men is the butter you ought to encourage; however, the catastrophe has been approbrious to the conduct of the piece, and "six months, beggary" have afforded six months silence.

If in changing the title of your paper, you had substituted, Impothume, for "HERALD," it would have been the better improvement; reasoning from the matter which it contains. The ORACLE (independent of your opinion or mine) has merit sufficient to secure regular and liberal payments to its Printers, consequently the subscribers are not periodically annoyed with the wailings of misery, nor whining strains of the mendicant. It may be the province of the lully to bluster, and of the superseded to rail, but you ought to recollect, that you are railing at men, whose merits place them on that eminence from which your demerits dislodged you. A very slight knowledge of your biography has convinced me that gratitude is no more an ingredient of your mental composition, than uniformity is of your corporal; you are, therefore, at liberty to ridicule that principle in others, to which you, individually, are a stranger. And I am not at all surprised that the exordium of the address to the new year, should offend the editor of the Herald. A person nearly allied to you in blood as in principles, has received from public justice an honorary testimonial of his affection to the cause, this with you may be thought a mean, of justifying hostility to the Divinity, and to all who are sensible of the benignity of his influence. As one of the retainers of criticism, I give you the rank of scavenger—and from the perverseness of a Jewish disposition, I anticipate nothing but to see you constantly groveling amongst filth, your natural element. You are right with respect to the "apostemphe," it is to Upper Canada—that fame U. C. which reluctantly tolerates the editor of the Herald—that fame U. C. which unfortunately for it, is an asylum to exiles and aliens, to atheists and praising democrats! The "benediction" is of course obnoxious to your comments, it is not to be supposed that wishes for the prosperity of this Province are congenial to known disaffection, and mere offensible apostacy: as well might the moderation of the dove be sought in the capacity of a gull.

It would argue inconsistancy of principles in you to attempt the eradication of vice, or the promotion of order and morality, such lessons are rarely taught, and such opinions we kly inculcated in the school of embryo republicanism, where you received the rudiments of your faith, your politics, and education.

Now mr. Cripple Critic—I think it would be to your interest not to reckon without your host, to be civil when you cannot be silent. The quaint and melancholy conceit of attributing the new-year's ode to your canine acquaintance, "Sancho," disgraces even your own growling and cur like genius.—Were I inclined to retort or bandy scurrility with you, I might quote that elegant moment of genius (at once) tortured and returned by the Constellation—"Niagara is a town without a steeple," but avaunt ye filth-mongers. Permit me notwithstanding to advise you, when you next attack benevolence, to come better armed to the field, your imbicility in the present instance, provoke the contempt, not the anger of SANCHO.

York, Jan. 29.

NOTE.—On enquiry I find that the "Niagara Sancho" is an animal who acts upon fixed principles, and altho' a cur as such is respectable. Without the gift of prophecy I will venture to affirm that having witnessed the END of the Constellation, he will also live to howl over the MANES of the Herald. The York Sancho though untaught, has an excellent nose, and having got scent of the Herald and its editor's character he will not be called in without much difficulty, before he hunts down the brace.

A Proclamation.

GEORGE the Third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth:—

TO ALL OUR LOVING SUBJECTS, GREETING:—

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation bearing date the twenty-ninth day of Nov. last, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to prorogue our Provincial Parliament until the ninth day of the present month of January, at which time in our town of YORK you were held and constrained to appear; but we taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice of our executive council, to relieve you, and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you, and each of you, that on the fourteenth day of FEBRUARY next, ensuing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament, in our town of York, there to take into consideration the state and welfare of our Province of Upper-Canada, and therein to do as may seem necessary: Herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the great seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed:—Witness our trusty and well beloved PETER HUNTER, Esq. our Lieutenant Governor of our said province, and Lieutenant General commanding our Forces in our Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, at York, this THIRD day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and one, and in the forty-first year of our reign.

ENGLAND.

LONDON, November 11.

BRITISH HOUSE OF LORDS.

THIS day, a little after three o'clock, his Majesty came down to the House, and opened the Session of Parliament with the following most gracious Speech from the Throne, the Speaker of the House of Commons and several members attending at the bar.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"My tender concern for the welfare of my subjects, and a sense of the difficulties with which the poorer classes particularly have to struggle, from the present high price of provisions, have induced me to call you together at an earlier period than I had otherwise intended.—No object can be nearer my heart than that, by your care and wisdom, all such measures may be adopted as may, upon full consideration, appear best calculated to alleviate this severe pressure, and to prevent the danger of its recurrence, by promoting, as far as possible, the permanent extension and improvement of our agriculture.

"For the object of immediate relief, your attention will naturally be directed, in the first instance, to the best mode of affording the earliest and the most ample encouragement for the importation of all descriptions of grain from abroad.

"Such a supply, aided by the examples which you have set on former occasions of attention to economy and frugality in the consumption of corn, it is most likely to contribute to a reduction in the present high price, and to ensure at the same time, the means of meeting the demands for the necessary consumption of the year.

"The present circumstances will also, I am persuaded, render the state of the laws respecting the commerce in the various articles of provision the object of your serious deliberation.

"If on the result of that deliberation, it shall appear to you that the evil necessarily arising from unfavorable seasons has been encreased by any undue combinations or fraudulent practices, for the sake of adding unfairly to the price, you will feel an earnest desire of effectually preventing such abuses; but you will, I am sure, be careful to distinguish any practices of this nature from that regular and long established course of trade, which experience has shewn to be indispensible for the present state of society, for the supply of the markets, and for the subsistence of my people.

"You will have seen with concern the temporary disturbances which have taken place in some parts of the kingdom. Those malicious and disaffected persons who cruelly take advantage of the present difficulties to excite any of my subjects to do acts in violation of the laws and of the public peace, are in the present circumstances doubly criminal, as such proceedings must necessarily and immediately tend to increase in the highest degree the evil complained of, while they at the same time endanger the permanent tranquility of the country on which the well being of the industrious classes of the community must always principally depend.

"The voluntary exertions which have on this occasion been made for the immediate repression of these outrages, and in support of the laws and public peace are therefore entitled to the highest praise.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"Under the circumstances of the present meeting, I am desirous of asking of you such supplies only as may be necessary for carrying on the public service, till the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland may conveniently be assembled.—The estimates for that purpose will be laid before you; and I have no doubt of your readiness to make such provision as the public interests may appear to require.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I have directed copies to be laid before you of those communications which have recently passed between me and the French government, respecting the commencement of negociations for peace. You will see in them fresh and striking proofs of my earnest desire to contribute to the re-establishment of general tranquillity. That desire on my part has hitherto been unhappily frustrated, by the determination of the enemy to enter only on a separate negociation in which it was impossible for me to engage, consistently either with public faith, or with a due regard to the permanent security of Europe.

"My anxiety for the speedy restoration of peace remains unaltered; and there will be no obstacle or delay on my part to the adoption of such measure, as may best tend to promote and accelerate that desirable end, consistently with the honor of this country and the true interest of my people; but if the disposition of our enemies should continue to render this great object of all my wishes unattainable, without the sacrifice of these essential considerations, on the maintainance of which all its advantages must depend, you will I am confident, persevere in affording me the same loyal and steady support which I have experienced through the whole of this important contest, and which has, under the blessing of Providence, enabled me, during a period of such unexampled difficulty and calamity to all the surrounding nations, to maintain, unimpaired, the security and honor of these kingdoms."

[After the delivery of the King's Speech a very long debate took place on the answer which it was proposed to send to it by the Commons: and especially on that part of the speech which relates to the general scarcity of provisions in the kingdom. Mr. Pitt moved for a committee to consider what bounties should be granted on the importation of corn; the first object of which, he said, would be to adopt, a practicable remedy for the scarcity, and afterwards to enquire into the causes. Granted.—He then obtained leave to bring in a bill to prevent distilleries using grain for a limited time, a bill to prevent the making of starch, another to prohibit the exportation of provisions or food, particularly rice, and moved for a committee to consider of the duty on the importation of hops, with a view of obtaining a supply of that article.

November 17.

The arrival of Cobentzel and Joseph Buonaparte at Luneville, is put out of doubt by the Paris papers to the 12th, which we received on Saturday. The journals were brought to Dover by the vessels which purposely sailed from Calais with Mr. Maurix, the messenger, who some time ago brought dispatches from Cobenzel to the British Court.—Stahlemberg, being at Twickenham when Mr. Maurix reached town, his dispatches did not regularly come before our Cabinet on Saturday.

By accounts from Italy, it appears, hostilities have been on the point of being renewed in that country; but an agreement has been made between the Austrian General, Bellegarde, and the French General, Brune, by which the latter yields up Ferrara, and the former consents to wave any claims respecting Tuscany so unjustly seized by the French. That violation of faith made a great impression on the court of Vienna; but prudence stifled its resentment. The demolition of Ulm, Ingolstadt and Philipsburgh, contrary to treaty, has also made considerable sensation in Germany, and the Moniteur has attempted a defence of the measure. The demolition of Ulm, it is said, has been suspended, in consequence of certain remonstrances. Lucien Buonaparte is gone to Madrid, but how a mission thither can promote peace and humble the English, as the Paris Journals have informed us, we know not, unless it is intended that Spain shall materially contribute the means of attack on this country. The storms in which our fleet suffered at Gibraltar, is noticed in letters from Spain, published in these journals, and it is said one or two transports have been driven on shore. The fleet must be considerably embarrassed by the loss of anchors, &c. which it has sustained, and it will be unable to undertake active operations till it receive a supply of stores. The French funds still continue at 34 and a fraction, notwithstanding the apparent opening of the Congress of Luneville. If it be true that apartments are fitting up both for Joseph Buonaparte and Cobenzel, they must intend to make some stay there, and actively enter upon negociations.

The northern gazettes state, that great preparations are making at Grodno for the immediate reception of that city, of the Emperor of Russia, with a numerous suite, and that quarters are providing for the army of Lithuania.

In the consistory, which was to be held last month at Rome, the infant of Spain was to be made a Cardinal.

It is said, an English ship of the line arrived at Civita Vecchia, to take on board the King of Sardinia.

Paul I. has created the title of counsellor of commerce in favor of such merchants as distinguish themselves by their application to trade and the utility of their enterprises.

M. Spaina, archbishop of Corinth, who was said about a month ago, to have left Rome on his way to Vercelli, to confer with commissioners on the part of the first Consul, relative to the differences at present subsisting between the Catholic Clergymen, has arrived at Paris, and has taken up his residence at the Hotel de Rome.

November 14.

The Speaker of the House of Lords acquainted the House that he had yesterday waited on his Majesty with the Address, to which his Majesty returned as an answer, "That he relied on the assurance which his faithful Commons had given, that they would use every endeavour to encourage the importation of corn, and introduce economy into the management of it, and to effect a speedy restoration of peace as soon as it could be found compatible with the security and honor of these kingdoms."

This day Mr. Sheridan, in the house of commons, said, that he had perused the papers on the table with great attention, relative to the naval armifice; and that there appeared to be a deficiency, as he did not find among them an account of the negociations between Austria and the French government respecting a separate negociation. If such did exist, Ministers must be in possession of them, as having passed between this country and Austria. He would move for these papers on Monday next.

PARIS, November 4.

A courier arrived yesterday from Milan has brought intelligence that the French troops had taken Arezzo by assault.

Nov. 5.

The Landgrave of Hesse Darmstadt has appointed as his Envoy at the Congress of Luneville, the Count de Pappenheim his present Minister at Paris.

November 6.

Two of our journals have announced that Tuscany had been evacuated by our troops, and even that the invasion of the country had not been authorised by the government. The official Journal has demanded upon what circumstances the conductors of these papers have founded the assertion, that the generals had entered upon operations of importance without the consent of government.—The motives, continues the Moniteur, which have determined and authorised the occupation of Tuscany sufficiently display themselves in facts and public acts.

1st. In the preliminaries signed by M. de St. Julien, the Emperor was pledged to disarm the levy en mass of Tuscany.

2d. By the additional convention made at Castiglione, between gen. Marmont and gen. Hohenzollen, gen. Brune had consented to wait the answer of the Cabinet of Vienna relative to the evacuation of the country of Ferrara by the Austrians, who ought to have evacuated the country, in execution of the convention of Marengo, but there is no doubt that Tuscany was the price of this condescension in the convention of Castiglione.

3d. The Austrians had essentially violated the convention of Marengo, since it specified they should only occupy the town and citadel of Ferrara, but not 40 leagues of country. This fundamental convention, the basis of all the others, and ratified by the two governments, could not be modified by any convention made by general officers. The government had expressly disavowed all modification.

4th. The levy en mass was paid by the English, and directed in part by Wilot.* A Neapolitan corps had arrived to inforce it, otherwise the French army would not have concluded an armistice with the Neapolitan troops.

5th. A few days after the French took possession of Leghorn, an English fleet appeared off the port with 12,000 land troops on board. The Republic had not concluded any armistice with the English. Precaution is the first duty imposed by war. Whenever it is neglected by a government, victory waves and defeats success.

6th. M. de Sommativa, commandant of the Austrian troops in Tuscany, retired without giving any assistance to the levy in mass, which it was necessary to disarm. Those 20,000 banditti committed all kinds of excesses and respected no treaty.

While General Dupont was cannonading the town of Arezzo, and carried by assault that place, the Austrian troops took no part in the action. General Sommariva obtained permission to march with the corps under his command across the French army, and to re join the Austrian army at Ferrara.

The levy en masse was so oppressive to Tuscany, that those persons who were most attached to the Grand Duke saw with pleasure the arrival of the French, was conducted according to the manner of regular troops who came to deliver a country from the yoke of undisciplined barbarians. In other respects the Government was preserved, as it had been established by the authority of the Grand Duke.

Nov. 10.

The report of the entrance of the French into Rome is untrue.

Lucien Buonaparte set off yesterday. It is said that he is going to Spain.

From Luneville we learn, that the young citizen Roederer, Portalis, and Simeon, have declared to the officers of police of that city, that they are attached to the French Legation.

Nov. 11.—French funds 34f.-300.

LUNEVILLE, Nov. 7.

The Count de Cobentzel arrived here this morning at five o'clock, and Joseph Buonaparte at noon. The former was saluted with 19 pieces of cannon, and the latter by ringing of the only bell left us. The two ministers lodge in private houses, until their apartments in the castle shall be completely furnished.

A very fine corps of 1500 grenadiers arrived to-day; it will form part of the garrison.

The Telegraph is erected on the top of the castle.

STRASBURG, Oct. 2.

Four thousand two hundred florins, intended for the Austrian garrison of Ulm, have passed through Augsburg. The German garrisons are now croiling Swabia to repair to the Imperial army. The garrison of Ulm has suffered much from sickness, as has that of Philipsburgh. The Imperial army is now leaving Bavaria, to resume its cantonments in Austria, and the environs of Salzburg.

Oct. 7.

A courier dispatched by the Emperor with orders to the Austrian troops to retire from Ulm, arrived on the 28th ult. A French demi-brigade will occupy that fortress. The Austrians have employed 4000 horses to carry away their ammunition and artillery, which amounts to 300 pieces of cannon.

November 4.

A Russian courier passed through this city for Paris, he travelled with great speed. This is the second within a week.

United States

BOSTON, December 13.

FROM EUROPE.

Capt. Griffin, who arrived here since our last from Naples and Gibraltar,—which last he left the 2d November, informs, that the French took possession of Leghorn the 16th of October, as was reported, by capitulation.—That apprehensions were entertained at Naples of another visit of the French, and measures were taken to oppose them:—That a large fleet of transports, with 20,000 troops on board, was at Gibraltar:—12,000 of which were supposed to be destined for Egypt, and the residue for Lisbon:—That the English had projected an attempt on Cadiz, but the dread of introducing the plague amongst the troops had induced the commander to abandon the enterprize.

From the Philadelphia Gazette of Dec. 17.

The advices which have been received within the last three days, render it more than probable, that Thomas Jefferson has been elected President of the United States for four years, commencing the 3d of March next.—The return from South-Carolina has decided this question.

While every good man and honest patriot will deeply lament this unfortunately vicissitude in the government, and be prompted by motives of virtuous forbearance to acquiesce in the event, it equally becomes them if, as there is strong reason to apprehend, undue efforts have been practised in S. C. to bias the issue, to express, in clear terms, their abhorrence of the artifice and coercion by which it has been effected.

The expences of government have long been the theme of democratic abuse and complaint. In the event of a democratic administration, therefore, their sincerity will be fully tested. If their clamours have indeed sprung from principle, we may expect to see the whole system frugalized. A President as he does not eat more than a commoner, can surely live very comfortably, on 5000 dollars, a Vice President on half that sum, and so on, in ratio thro the whole range of executive officers. If these retrenchments are realized, our treasury will indeed overflow, and our ability to pay tribute be as ample, as the disposition for it will be strong.

"General Davie has arrived in the Portsmouth at Norfolk, and brought the Treaty with France. Chief Justice Elkfworth is gone to England, Mr. Murray is the Hague."

TREATY

Between France and America.

PARIS, October 10.

The chancery of the of the American Consul General, has given an abstract of the fourth article of the Treaty between France and the United States, which is the only article of the Treaty which has yet been divulged; and it is expected the government will send it to council of Prizes, to regulate their conduct. The literal purport of this important article is as follows:—

"All captured, and not definitively condemned, vessels, or which were so before the exchange of the ratification, excepting as it respects contraband goods destined to an enemy's port, shall be delivered up to the original owners, that is to say, if certificates are produced that the vessels and cargo are American property, whether the vessel was armed or unarmed, if furnished with the passports which are prescribed by the treaty of 1778, which shall be valid, notwithstanding any laws made in France to the contrary. In future it shall not be necessary to renew this pass if the vessel does not return home in a year from the time of her departure.—In respect to cargoes, there shall be certificates from the Custom-House from where the vessel departs, of the contents of the cargo, where from and where bound, in order to discover if contraband goods on board. This certificate shall be signed by the collector, and be conformable to the usages in the port from which the vessel sails. And if the passports, or certificates, by any accident should be lost, or forcibly taken away, any satisfactory proof of being American property shall be admitted, agreeable to the established custom of nations.

"In regard to national vessels, their commissions shall be respected.

"This article shall be in force, from the date of signing the treaty; and if any vessels shall be condemned after the rising of this convention, before the same could be known, they shall be restored, or paid for.

CHARLESTON, S. C. Dec. 4.

Yesterday was brought to trial, before justices Jonson and Glover, Ben and Smart, Two negro slaves, the property of Mr. Gregmiles, of the thirteen mile house, for the murder of William Maxwell, ship carpenter, who was in the employ of Mr. Gregmiles as patron. The magistrates and freeholders were unanimous in bringing them in guilty; and further, from the circumstances of aggravation, the punishment should be severe. They were accordingly sentenced. Ben to be carried, between the hours of 10 and 12 this day, out-side the Tobacco Inspection, and there to suffer death by being burned alive—the other, Smart, to be carried to the place where the murder was committed, near the thirteen-mile house, between the hours of 10 and 4, and there to suffer the like punishment, on Friday the 5th inst.

This day was burnt pursuant to sentence, Ben, a negro fellow belonging to Mr. Cregmiles, for the murder of Mr. William Maxwell, in a barbarous manner. Smart, concerned with Ben, will suffer death in like manner, this day, at the place where the murder was committed, near the thirteen-mile house, between the hours of ten and four.

BOSTON, Dec. 31.

Two men borne alive, in the United States near the beginning of the nineteenth century!! Whatever sensations such a sentence and the execution of it may have excited in South Carolina, it certainly excites the utmost horror in New England. But these are black men, who committed the murder. But is the crime of murder worse in a black man than in a white one? Has a black man less sensibility to the torture of fire than a man of any other colour? Who of us could bear to see a dog or a cat tied to a stake and gradually burnt to death, amidst its piercing cries and all those contortions which agonizing nature expresses under such a shocking operation? Still more, who of us could endure the horrible sight of two men, formed, organized, and endowed with every feeling and passion common to each human being, chained to a stake and burning to death amidst all those heart-piercing cries and lamentations which tortured human nature must send forth under such an hellish operation. America boasts of the mildness of her laws. I must have mistaken, and read Carolina instead of Algiers!

From Washington, Dec. 4.

The issue of the election of President and Vice President of the United States, so far as it depended upon the individual States is at length known. Previous to the votes of South Carolina, which decided the election, the four candidates for those high and important offices, had each 65 votes. The Antics, from mere accident, had obtained a majority in the legislature of that State, and of course, appointed electors who bestowed their suffrages on Mr. Jefferson and Col. Burr. The whole number of votes will, therefore, on the final count stand thus:

For Col. Burr,	73
Mr. Jefferson,	73
Mr. Adams,	65
Mr. Pinckney,	65

Such then being the fact, on which of the two candidates having the greatest number of votes, will the House of Representatives, who are constitutionally empowered to decide in the event of an equal vote, confer their sanction?

The choice indeed lies between two evils; but as the Federal Republicans are under existing circumstances, not only empowered for the reasons aforesaid, but enabled by their numbers to make it, ought they not to choose the least? and if this be the case, will they not elect Col. Burr as certainly the least physical and most probably, the smallest political evil?

Foreign News.

ENGLAND.

LONDON, Nov. 1.

ON the 15th Oct. a plot was discovered at Paris for setting fire to the opera house; and about the same time an unsuccessful attempt was made to fire the powder magazines.

On the 19th, the first Consul received an intimation that a plot was in agitation to assassinate him in the evening as he quitted the opera house; that eleven conspirators had pledged themselves to each other for the performance of the deed; and that it would be prudent in the consul to decline going thither. "I will go," said Buonaparte: and having made the necessary arrangements, and named Moreau as his successor in the consulate, he went to the opera, in his accustomed manner, unattended.—The conspirators being known, the officers of police took suitable precautions and arrested two of the principals, who confessed their criminal intention, and discovered their accomplices, amongst whom were Barrere, Delirenil, and Lamarque. Diligent search was making for the remainder. The person to whose friendship the Conful is indebted for the diſcovery of the plot, is ſaid to be an emigrant who had received permiſſion from the government to return to his native country.

October 31.

We this morning received Paris papers to the 27th inſt. They bring intelligence of the arrival of Count Cobenzel at Luneville, whither in the expectation of his arrival, the French plenipotentiary had ſet out to meet him. He had previouſly notified to the French Government, that his new appointment would not prevent him from attending the Congreſs.

In Italy, affairs wear a very different appearance from that which the progreſs of France and Auſtria towards negociation would lead us to expect. General Dupont has, by the command of his ſuperior officer, General Brune, entered the dominions of the Grand Duke of Tuſcany, under the pretence of diſperſing the levy en maſſe, has made himſelf maſter of Florence and Leghorn.—We have in a ſubſequent column given the details of this event, which, it will be ſeen, amounts to a revolution in Tuſcany.—The property of the Engliſh at Leghorn was of courſe confiſcated.

The Miniſter of Police at Paris, has publiſhed a report on the ſubject of the late plot againſt Buonaparte, which he endeavours to identify with a conſpiracy detected ſome time ago, and which was charged upon the Agents of England.

November 2.

In a ſhort time after the arrival of Count Cobenzel, at Luneville, he ſent from thence with diſpatches for London his ſecretary, Morris Mourit, furniſhed with proper paſſports from general Clarke, &c. for his journey thro' France, in every part of which he experienced during his rapid progreſs, the moſt marked attention. This gentleman, at about ten o'clock on Thurſday night, came by a flag of Truce to Dover, where meeting ſome detention on account of his paſſport, he did not arrive till late on Friday morning, at the houſe of the Imperial Envoy, in Portland place, where at ten o'clock in the preceding night, a courier had arrived direct from Vienna.

On reading the ſeveral diſpatches, the Imperial Miniſter waited on the Secretary of State, when a council being called, the matter ſubmitted by his excellency was diſcuſſed during a conſiderable part of that day and of yeſterday; and the reſult having been laſt night communicated to the Imperial Miniſter, he held a conference with Mr. Maurix, who immediately after ſet off on his return to Count Cobenzel, at Luneville.

To theſe facts, our information adds belief, that the preliminary requiſitions on the part of France, which impeded or precluded this country from negociating, have been done away, and that overtures have been made by the Emperor, with the approval of the Firſt Conſul, for Britain to aſſiſt at the negotiations at Luneville.

It is aſſerted that during the ſitting of the Congreſs at Luneville, the port of Antwerp is to be open, even to the Engliſh.

The Batavian Republic will have a Miniſter at the Congreſs. An intimation to that effect has been given them by the French Republic.

The King of Pruſſia is about to ſend to Paris, his Miniſter Marquis Lucchefini, and the Secretary and Counſellor of Cabinet, Lombard.

Both the Daniſh Cabinet and the Senate of Hamburg have iſſued proclamations, refuſing admittance to ſhips from Spain, the Levant, and the Barbary coaſt, in their reſpective harbours.

The armiſtice for Italy, was ſigned by Count Hohenzolern, on the part of the Emperor, and by Gen. Marmont, on the part of France, to commence the 20th Sept. and continue for 45 days.

It is reported in letters from Italy, that the French have conſented to cede to the Emperor the three Roman Legations of Bologna, Ferrara, and Romagna; and that Piedmont and Genoa will be incorporated with the Ciſalpine republic.

General Moreau arrived on the morning of the 18th Oct. at Paris, and at the houſe of the Firſt Conſul, at the moment when he was in the act of receiving a magnificent pair of piſtols, formerly intended for a foreign prince.—"They could not have come more apropos," obſerved the Firſt Conſul, as he preſented them to the General. Addreſſing himſelf to the miniſter of the interior, "Have, ſaid he, "ſome of the victories of Moreau engraved upon them, not all, for that would not leave room for the diamonds."

Late intelligence.

LONDON, Dec. 1.

Two o'clock P. M.

Yeſterday arrived the Hamburgh mail due on Wedneſday laſt. It confirms the important intelligence, which we mentioned in our laſt, that the emperor of Ruſſia has laid an embargo on all Britiſh ſhipping in the ports of his dominions. It is alſo ſtated, on the authority of private letters from Hamburgh, that in addition to this act of violent aggreſſion, he has thrown the captains of theſe veſſels into priſon.

Mr. Sheridan mentioned this circumſtance laſt night in the Houſe of Commons: and as it was contradicted, nor yet doubted, we apprehend the haughty Autocrat has all at once reſigned himſelf to the influence of his paſſions. But he will find that the vengeance of this country is not aſleep, and that the honor of the nation is not to be ſullied by the breath of impotent reſentment, or that the government of this country is to be hurried into any acts unworthy of itſelf by the capricious conduct of even the ſelf-created Grand Maſter of Malta.

Some of the ſhips which were at Narva and Riga made their eſcape and have reached Elſineur. The number detained is eſtimated at 300. Their cargoes are of conſiderable value. The report of the ſequeſtration of Britiſh property throughout Ruſſia is alſo current: and it is alſo reported, that an order has been ſigned by Paul, that paſſports ſhould be delivered to every Ruſſian ſhip that ſails, containing a notification that if the ſhip ſhould be attempted to be viſited by the Engliſh the ſame ſhould be regarded as a declaration of war.

Though no embargo on Ruſſian ſhips in Engliſh ports has been ordered, there being none to ſtop that we can hear of, meaſures of a nature equally hoſtile were reſolved on in the council held at Buckingham houſe on Friday. The Ruſſian merchants, feeling the oppreſſion and injuſtice of being called on to pay to perſons in Ruſſia, for cargoes which they have ſo little chance of obtaining, applied to government for an order of council, prohibiting the payment of bills from Ruſſia, or otherwiſe remitting money thither. This order was made by the king in council, after conſulting the attorney and ſolicitor generals on the ſubject. In the mean time, the merchants held another meeting, and reſolved that they ſhould pay the bills they had accepted, but they ſhould accept no more.

It has been long predicted, that the emperor of Ruſſia would extend his views to Turkey. At this moment he is demanding an indemnity from the Porte for the expences of his fleet in the maritime campaign; a prelude no doubt, to a rupture with that feeble cabinet. Preparations for the war continue with increaſed exertions.

It is ſaid that miniſters have ſent off an order to lord Keith in the Mediterranean, to detain all Ruſſian veſſels that may at preſent be found in that quarter.

Every account from Egypt agrees in the determination of the French to retain that country. Menou has been joined by ſeveral Beys and their partizans, particularly in the South; and had embodied and diſciplined all the Greeks able to bear arms, not excepting the crews of the Turkiſh tranſports and other veſſels which had fallen into his hands. Gen. Kleber had began lines about Alexandria, previous to the convention of El-Ariſch. Theſe Menou were perfecting, and adding to them ſeveral redoubts and batteries.

The elector Palatine is ſaid to be treating for a ſeperate peace, under the recommendation of Pruſſia ann Ruſſia.

Mr. Frere ſet off on Saturday, accompanied by Lord Bolton, to Hackwood Park, and yeſterday morning proceeded to Falmouth, from whence he takes his departure for Liſbon, where he is to reſide as the Britiſh miniſter at the Court.

It can ſcarce be doubted but ſome ſecret league has long ſubſiſted between the Firſt Conſul and the magnanimous Sovereign who declared his diſintereſtedneſs before Heaven and Earth: who arraigned the ambition of Auſtria, and threatened the States of Germany with the abandonment of the general cauſe, if they would not ſacrifice, like himſelf, all local and perſonal views to the common object.—Malta, however, ſeems to have entirely effaced both the common cauſe and the ſolemn declaration from the memory of his Imperial Majeſty; and the Swediſh Enigma appears about to be explained by a complete inverſion of the ſentiments and character of his Councils.

United States

ALBANY, December 26.

A paper called the Times, printed at Alexandria, in Virginia, on the 15th inſt. contains the following important article:

"We are informed by authority upon which we can rely, that Mr. Stoddert has at length negociated an adjuſtment of our differences with Great-Britain, which have ariſen in conſequence of the ſixth article of our treaty of amity, commerce and navigation with that power. Government, we belive, has not yet received an official copy of the inſtrument, and our knowledge of it is not ſufficiently extenſive, to ſtate with preciſion many of the leading features, or the nature of the claims which are barred by it in future; but we can venture to aſſert, that, as the ſolid baſis upon which the future friendſhip of the two nations, is to be founded, it is ſtipulated that a ſpecified ſum of money ſhall be paid by the government of the United States to that of Great-Britain, and in conſequence that in certain claims of a particular nature ſhall not be again adduced. The commiſſioners will then reſume the exerciſe of their functions."

HOICKS! HOICKS! HOICKS!

On Thurſday laſt, William Jarvis, Eſq: entertained the inhabitants of this town with a diverſion new in itſelf to many; and in ſome of its circumſtances to all. About noon he cauſed a fox of full growth to be unbagged, near the center of the fine ſheet of ice which now covers the Bay, and when at a ſuitable diſtance, turned looſe the hounds upon it.—As previous notice had been circulated, the chace was followed by a number of gentlemen on horſeback, and a concourſe of the beau monde of both ſexes in carioles and ſleighs.—Poor Reynard was probably the firſt of his ſpecies cavalcaded in this manner to his fate.—A light coat of ſnow covered the ſurface of the ſhining plain, and contributed much to ſteadineſs in driving and confidence in riding.

After the death of the unfortunate poulterer, his remains ſerved as a dragg to proſong for ſeveral hours the ſport.—It ſeemed doubtful whether the horſes in harneſs or in the ſaddle had the advantage in running, as all indiſcriminately kept up with the hounds in a promiſcuous novelty of group.

NOTA BENE.—We are credibly informed, that the deceaſed, in the article of death, made application to an officious Lawyer—who chanced to throw himſelf in his way, according to the laudable cuſtom, on ſuch occaſions, of the profeſſion (for time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary) to draw up his will, and that thereunto, in memory thereof, being unable to write, he made his mark accordingly.—We are alſo given to underſtand, that he has thereby declared the gentlemen of the long robe, at large, to be his lawful heirs, in joint tenancy, for ever; and has conſtituted them his executors.

Query.—Might not the dying blunder of the poor ſufferer proceed from confounding together two diſtinct ſpecies of rapacious animals; without adverting to the difference of a pair of legs more or leſs; it being difficult upon ſuch emergencies to perceive nice diſtinctions?

FOR THE ORACLE.

IT is during the paroxyſms of pain that the phyſician's ſkill ſhould be applied to alleviate the ſufferings of his patient, and to eradicate the ſeeds of the diſorder. It is alſo in the times of depravation and immorality, that the moraliſt ſhould arraign prevalent vices, and apply his art and endeavours to counteract and deſtroy their effects. To ſtop their extenſion and growth, he ſhould treat them like noxious plants, and laying the ſcythe of reproof to their roots, mow down ſuch as he cannot pluck up.

Time is his, that in caſting his eyes abroad, he will behold an ocean of vices; but let not the difficulty of wading through diſcourage him from attempting. The ſcene is laid at home: then let him begin with ſuch as firſt obſtruct the undertaking. In this ſmall community, unmarried men make the majority:—and it muſt awaken pity in every mind, not rendered callous by vice, to witneſs the diſſipation which reigns in this part of it. To live in the open profeſſion and practice of a ſhameful commerce, is as incompatible with prudence and decency, as it is inſulting to public opinion, and diſgraceful to the parties. Many of them muſt be aware, that the fine for this criminal violation of duty, is the forfeiture of general and private eſteem; growing experience ſtrongly inculcates this truth, and as ſtrongly inculcates the neceſſity of amendment. Let them not be led aſtray with the opinion, that the example of men of brilliant talents and high characters, can be either an excuſe or an apology for treading in their footſteps, or emulating their foibles; although the head of the immortal Pope had an inclination to one ſhoulder, he aſpired not to a compariſon with the Macedonian Monarch.

The faſcinating accompliſhments, and tranſcendent abilities of ſome men, palliate and caſt a ſhade over their follies, yet their weak imitators cannot advance any ſuch exculpatory plea. Some latitude may be allowed to the back-biding of unwary youth and inexperience, at leaſt their deviations from propriety admit of pity rather than excuſe. But when we ſee men whoſe years may be numbered by ſcores, yielding themſelves eaſy victims to the infatuation, we cannot but pronounce, that their ages ſhould ſtimulate them to more rational purſuits, and ſecure them from becoming dupes to the venality of rapacious hirelings. Were men to reflect on the diſgrace of illegitimacy, even that would operate as a reſtraint to their inordinacy, and point out the laſt and only exiſting mean of expiation for reiterated offences: they would perceive that it was not themſelves only that were affected; but that they were entailing infamy on their injured innocent offſpring—and literally viſiting the "iniquities of the fathers upon the children."

It is a ſmall conſolation to the friends of virtue, that the puniſhment in a meaſure accompanies the offences of ſuch tranſgreſſors; we perceive them invariably avoided by the wiſe and the good, we ſee them unpoſſeſſed of rank and reſpect, a moping medley, whoſe bond of union is iniquity, and whoſe motto is contempt of decency. Happy would it be, if every reprehenſible delinquency was equally marked and ſtigmatized, it might then be ſaid, the work of reformation is in reality BEGUN.

NEW YORK, Dec. 26.

The following remarks on the important correſpondence between France and Great Britain, are copied from a London paper.

WE have in this days paper (ſays the London print) inſerted the moſt intereſting articles of the very important correſpondence relative to the late overtures of negociation for peace between this country and France. The only part of it which, from its length and our wiſh to preſerve it entire, we are obliged to defer until to-morrow, is the ſubſtance of the conferrences that took place between citizen Otto and mr. Hammond. It is certainly of a curious nature, but as it relate more to the private opinions and ſentiments of mr. Otto than to thoſe of the French government, we are induced to give the preference to the articles of correſpondence which are officially authenticated.

There has not occurred, at any period during the war, not even in the management of the negociations entruſted to lord Malmſbury, a ſuperior inſtance of ſound reaſoning, of firm adherence to the national dignity, tempered by the true ſpirit of conciliation, and expreſſed in energetic and perſpicuous language, than the anſwers and obſervations of the Britiſh miniſtry in the late diſcuſſions. A more inſidious and deſtructive ſyſtem to the real intereſt of Great Britain could not well be deviſed than the projet communicated on the part of the chief conſul. We were in fact, required to yield every advantage obtained by the unrivalled exertions of our navy; and in return, we were to throw ourſelves upon the candor and the mercy of the government of France. The propoſal went to give every thing to the enemy, and to deprive us not only of our ſuperiority, but of the means of ſafety itſelf. His majeſty's reply is admirably ſuited to the occaſion, expoſing the abſurdity and danger of the enemy's pretenſions, yet conceding more to him than ſuch pretenſions could be entitled to.—The Counter projet, which gave to France every poſſible benefit, conſiſtently with the juſt rights and ſecurity of this country, will, we are confident, be conſidered by every unprejudiced mind, an unequivocal demonſtration on the part of the government to effect the reſtoration of tranquility. But it appears that nothing but the breach of our moſt ſolemn engagements could endnce the chief conſul to accept a propoſal highly unfavorable to himſelf, and we have been called upon to lay ourſelves proſtrate at his feet, by conſenting to the condition of a naval armiſtice, or to tear aſunder every bond of alliance from which we hope to contribute to the reſtoration of the general tranquility of Europe.

The diſgraceful alternative has been rejected by the wiſdom and firmneſs of adminiſtration: were any thing wanting to convince the world of the ambition and perfidy of the enemy, it would be found in the preſent documents.

It is remarked that the French government has, in its official comments, condemned by anticipation the late invaſion of Tuſcany. In the note and in reply to our counter projet we find this ſtrong obſervation:—"It is by means of the armiſtice that men are raiſing in Tuſcany." The levies of Tuſcany were therefore ſanctioned by the admiſſion of France herſelf; and was not the entrance of the republican troops into the Tuſcan territories a direct violation of the principle of armiſtice, which had been fully recognized by the conſulate, and indeed formed one of the chief baſes of its conduct in the late negociations with reſpects to this country?

January 12.

By the Britiſh Packet Duke of Clarence, arrived at this port laſt Saturday evening, in 35 days from Falmouth, we are put in poſſeſſion of London papers to the 3d of Dec. inclusive. The moſt important of their contents are,

That the Chief Conſul, on 23d of November preſented the Legiſlative Body an important paper, entitled "State of the Republic." It holds out the hope of the poſſibility of the conferences going on at Luneville, notwithſtanding the armiſtice having been declared at an end—a meaſure ſtated to have been merely of a precautionary nature. But it ſeems equally plain, that if they go on, it will be for the purpoſe of ſeparate negociations: and when, ſays a London paper, we compared what the Firſt Conſul ſtates reſpecting Ruſſia, with the conduct of Paul, in laying an embargo on Engliſh ſhips in his ports; it ſeems probable that Britain is determined to carry on the war, not merely againſt her preſent foes, but againſt all the Northern powers alſo. The Conſul in ſpeaking of America, ſays, "A Convention, founded upon "common intereſts, and the moſt perfect reciprocity, will renew the ties by which the ſtates of America were bound to France. The ties ſhall laſt forever, becauſe there is no unequal condition to alter their force and purity.—The French nation does not deſire any excluſive privilege nor partial favor!"—He farther ſays, that "the north will ſhake off the tyranny which oppreſſes its commerce and its ſeas."

That the Congreſs at Luneville was about breaking up; and that the armiſtice in Germany was to expire on the 22d of November—that of Italy, at an earlier period.

That the Engliſh ſhips in Ruſſia, to the number of about 300, were detained by orders of the Emperor Paul; tho' it does not appear that the ſhips or property was confiſcated; and that in conſequence of this meaſure, the government of Great Britain had given orders to their cruizers to detain all Ruſſian veſſels.

That the King of Pruſſia had marched troops into Cuxhaven, and taken poſſeſſion of that place.

That grain had experienced a riſe in England, the American barrel of flour was at 77ſ. Parliament was about giving a bounty on Indian corn and rice. That the Marlborough, an Engliſh 74, had been loſt on the coaſt of France.—That Lucian Buonaparte had arrived at Bourdeaux; and that Louis Bounaparte had arrived at Berlin. That a Vienna article of the 8th Nov. mentions, that hoſtilities had recommenced in Italy, by General Brune, in the moſt unexpected manner—and troops pouring in from all quarters. That the troops in France were all in motion. That the Swediſh Court had made repreſentations to the Court of London, relative to the violence done by the Engliſh to a merchant ſhip from Swediſh Pomerania, in the harbour of Barcelona. That Napper Tandy's trial was to come on in Dublin the 28th Nov. That Cardinal Ruffo, in Italy, was organizing a freſh maſs of troops. That the Breſt fleet had put to ſea. That ſome letters from Eſſignour ſtate, that the maſters of Engliſh embargoed veſſels had been thrown into priſon. That a fleet of 317 ſail, under convoy from Portſmouth, bound to Liſbon, Mediterranean and Gibraltar had been ordered back, by a cutter to the commodore.

FROM SPAIN.

The plague is committing dreadful ravages. In Andeluſia 11,000 have died. In Seville 21,000. In Xeres from 160 to 200 die per day. The utmoſt conſternation prevails.—It is approaching the borders of Portugal, and is ſuppoſed to ſweep off one ſixth of the population of the places through which it paſſes. But a ſmall proportion of women die. This diſorder begins with violent pains in the limbs and head ache, a ſtrong fever, and reaches its paroxiſm by the 4th day. Many die with the black vomit, and their bodies turn yellow.

A letter from Waſhington, received at Philadelphia on Friday, ſtates on the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, that the frigates Iuſurgente and Pickering have been loſt. Particulars not mentioned. They were ordered, we belive, off Cayenne.

A few days ſince, ſays the Worceſter Gazette, paſſed through Holden to a new ſettlement, from Portland, a gentleman and his wife, with twenty ſons, born at eight births, fifteen at the five firſt, four at the two next, and one at the laſt.

Foreign News.

STRASBURGH, Nov. 17.

The chief conſul being unwilling to grant any further delay to the court of Vienna, which is only deſirous of gaining time, and is not ſeriouſly inclined to peace, the rupture of the armiſtice has been announced in every point.—But as the period at which it was to expire, was fixed at different dates; hoſtilities will be reſumed ſooner in our neighbourhood than in Bavaria. According to the notice given by general Belliard, the armiſtice will expire on the 28th inſt. but general Angereau is to recommence hoſtilities on the 22d while the time of military operations in the Griſons is fixed on the 24th. As there was but a notice of ten days neceſſary in Italy, the war will be recommenced in that quarter earlier than in Germany.

LEGHORN, Oct. 24.

The property which the Engliſh carried away from Leghorn before the entrance of the French, has been conveyed to Palermo.

ROME, Oct. 23.

A Ruſſian fleet of tranſports, with from 3 to 4000 troops on board bound for Naples, is arrived off Corfu.

BANKS OF THE NECKER, Nov. 14.

The French garriſon in the Heilbron received orders in the night between the 12th and 13th to break up and march towards Franconia. General Collard, who after a long abſence, has within a few days arrived here from Nancy, yeſterday took the ſame road. The troops of the Polish legion lately in the vicinity of Heidelburgh, have alſo marched to Franconia by the way of Helibron. The French garriſon of Stutgard has broke up for Bavaria.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 13.

The Engliſh commodore, Sir Sydney Smith, is ſoon to return to England, another officer having been appointed to ſucceed him in the command of the Engliſh ſquadron cruizing on the coaſt of Egypt.

PARIS, Nov. 15.

The French attached to the office of our Conſul General at Cadiz have, with the Conſul General, fallen victims to the epidemic malady.

The laſt letters from that quarter give the moſt affecting details of the cruel ravages of the plague. Men, women, and children daily expire in the midſt of the ſtreets, and the bodies remain without burial; while many periſh with abſolute want, cauſed by the impoſſibility of all intercourſe.

November 16.

The hurricane of the 9th has not confined its ravages to our territories; moſt all the houſes of the Hague have been damaged. The waters roſe out of their canals, and ſpread over the town. Letters from Bruſſels mention that ſo ſhocks of an earthquake were felt during the tempeſt.

More than 2000 trees were torn up in the foreſt of Louvres.

General Moreau is ſtill at Paris. He was to day at the Thuilleries, and had a conference with the chief conſul, after the parade.

Rear Admiral Ganthéaume arrived at Breſt on the 4th, where he is to take the command, as is ſaid, of a diviſion of ſeven ſail of the line and ſome frigates, for a deſtination not yet known.

November 19.

The tempeſt of the 9th extended as far as Germany, and we learn by letters from Aix-la-Chapelle, Cologne, Duſſeldorff, and Crevelt, that its effects were very deſtructive.

LONDON, Dec. 1.

One of the laſt Journals, the Gazette de France of the 21ſt ult. ſays, that the expedition prepared at Breſt had put to ſea, and that it had a number of troops on board. It is there aſſerted, that the ſquadron is deſtined for the iſland of St. Domingo.

Commodore Sir Charles Hamilton will ſail as ſoon as the wind permits, for the coaſt of Guinea. Several ſhips for Siera Leone go under his convoy.

The laſt letters from Vienna ſtate, that the whole Auſtrian army is in motion to advance towards Mantua; but they ſay not a word reſpecting the reſtoration of hoſtilities.

We are aſſured that the Emperor of Ruſſia has demanded of the King of Pruſſia a paſſage for his armies; but neither their force nor deſtination is mentioned. It is only ſaid in ſome circles, that Paul I. is determined to reſtore the political ballance of Europe, and the general tranquillity, by every means in his power.

PORTSMOUTH, Nov. 30.

Put back to Spithead, the Seahorſe, Middlone, La Pique, Alliance, and Chicheſter, with the Liſbon, Mediterranean, and Gibraltar convoys, in all amounting to 317 ſail.

Various reports are afloat reſpecting this immenſe convoy returning from South Yarmouth Roads to Spithead.—One thing is certain, that it was in conſequence of orders tranſmitted by a cutter to the commodore.

YARMOUTH, Nov. 30.

By the packet which arrived this morning, we are informed that 12,000 Pruſſian troops, with 13 pieces of cannon, had marched into and taken poſſeſſion of Cuxhaven, and that our veſſels lying there had on that account quitted Cuxhaven, and gone into the Roads.

FRANKFORT, Nov. 10.

While we were flattering ourſelves with hopes of peace, appearances here have ſuddenly become warlike.

Yeſterday General Angereau received a courier from Paris, with orders to give notice immediately of the termination of the armiſtice; which he accordingly did on the ſame day: Adjutant general Richet was yeſterday afternoon ſent with the following note to the commander of the Auſtrian troops and to Baron Albion commander of the Mentz troops at Aſchaffenburgh;

GENERAL,

According to the orders I have received from my government, I hereby notify to you the termination of the armiſtice. Hoſtilities will therefore commence in fourteen days from this day, that is, on the 22d day of November.

"ANGEREAU."

HAMBURGH, Nov. 18.

An expreſs has this inſtant arrived here with the diſagreeable intelligence, that an embargo has been laid on all the Engliſh ſhips (70 in number) in the port of Riga.

VENICE, Oct. 28.

The French have required from the city of Florence a contribution of two millions of livres, from Leghorn two millions, from Piſa one million, and in proportion from the other towns in the Grand Duchy of Tuſcany.

RIGA, November 8.

Yeſterday morning government laid an embargo on all the Engliſh ſhips that were in our port; the number is about 70. It is tho't that a ſimilar meaſure will be adopted in all the ports of Ruſſia; but it is not yet known whether the Engliſh property and merchandizes will be ſequeſtrated.

Yeſterday at four o'clock in the afternoon, the French miniſter plenipotentiary diſpatched a courier to Paris.

Count Cobentzel has not left his apartments this day; but his health being completely re-eſtabliſhed, it is expected that he will be able to come out to morrow and again mix with ſociety.

At nine this morning arrived an Auſtrian officer, ſaid to be the bearer of diſpatches of a nature extremly urjent. He came from the head-quarters of the archduke John. He went immediately to ſee Count Cobentzel. He was accompanied by adjutant of the garriſon of Straſburg.

At ſix in the evening general Moreau arrived here. He dined with the miniſter plenipotentiary of the republic, and ſet off at nine o'clock. Count Cobentzel having gone to the miniſter's to paſs the evening, met the general there.

LONDON, Dec. 2.

Two o'clock P. M.

Yeſterday arrived the Hamburgh mail due on Wedneſday laſt. This mail confirms the report of the capture of Cuxhaven by the king of Pruſſia.—On the 21ſt ult, eighteen hundred Pruſſian troops entered that city, and the arrival of five battalions more was hourly expected. All our ſhipping in that port immediately failed for the Roads to avoid being ſeized. His Pruſſian majeſty attempts to juſtify this act as a meaſure of neceſſity and precaution in, conſequence of a Pruſſian veſſel being carried into that neutral port by an Engliſh ſhip of war. It is eaſy to ſee that Ruſſia and Pruſſia were determined to act in concert and that they are determined to try the queſtion of our right to viſit neutral ſhips, eſpecially if they can enliſt any other power under their banner, either by threats or perſuaſion, and we ſhall not be ſurpriſed to find that the influenzy may extend ſomewhat further, we ſhall then be able to diſtinguiſh our foes from our pretended friends. Mr. Sheridan in the courſe of his ſpeech laſt night touched on this queſtion in theſe words to the national dignity, tempered by the true ſpirit of conciliation, and expreſſed in energetic and perſpicuous language, than the anſwers and obſervations of the Britiſh miniſtry in the late diſcuſſions. A more inſidious and deſtructive ſyſtem to the real intereſt of Great Britain could not well be deviſed than the projet communicated on the part of the chief conſul. The levies of Tuſcany were therefore ſanctioned by the admiſſion of France herſelf; and was not the entrance of the republican troops into the Tuſcan territories a direct violation of the principle of armiſtice, which had been fully recognized by the conſulate, and indeed formed one of the chief baſes of its conduct in the late negociations with reſpects to this country?

January 12.

By the Britiſh Packet Duke of Clarence, arrived at this port laſt Saturday evening, in 35 days from Falmouth, we are put in poſſeſſion of London papers to the 3d of Dec. inclusive. The moſt important of their contents are,

That the Chief Conſul, on 23d of November preſented the Legiſlative Body an important paper, entitled "State of the Republic." It holds out the hope of the poſſibility of the conferences going on at Luneville, notwithſtanding the armiſtice having been declared at an end—a meaſure ſtated to have been merely of a precautionary nature. But it ſeems equally plain, that if they go on, it will be for the purpoſe of ſeparate negociations: and when, ſays a London paper, we compared what the Firſt Conſul ſtates reſpecting Ruſſia, with the conduct of Paul, in laying an embargo on Engliſh ſhips in his ports; it ſeems probable that Britain is determined to carry on the war, not merely againſt her preſent foes, but againſt all the Northern powers alſo. The Conſul in ſpeaking of America, ſays, "A Convention, founded upon "common intereſts, and the moſt perfect reciprocity, will renew the ties by which the ſtates of America were bound to France. The ties ſhall laſt forever, becauſe there is no unequal condition to alter their force and purity.—The French nation does not deſire any excluſive privilege nor partial favor!"—He farther ſays, that "the north will ſhake off the tyranny which oppreſſes its commerce and its ſeas."

That the Congreſs at Luneville was about breaking up; and that the armiſtice in Germany was to expire on the 22d of November—that of Italy, at an earlier period.

That the Engliſh ſhips in Ruſſia, to the number of about 300, were detained by orders of the Emperor Paul; tho' it does not appear that the ſhips or property was confiſcated; and that in conſequence of this meaſure, the government of Great Britain had given orders to their cruizers to detain all Ruſſian veſſels.

That the King of Pruſſia had marched troops into Cuxhaven, and taken poſſeſſion of that place.

That grain had experienced a riſe in England, the American barrel of flour was at 77ſ. Parliament was about giving a bounty on Indian corn and rice. That the Marlborough, an Engliſh 74, had been loſt on the coaſt of France.—That Lucian Buonaparte had arrived at Bourdeaux; and that Louis Bounaparte had arrived at Berlin. That a Vienna article of the 8th Nov. mentions, that hoſtilities had recommenced in Italy, by General Brune, in the moſt unexpected manner—and troops pouring in from all quarters. That the troops in France were all in motion. That the Swediſh Court had made repreſentations to the Court of London, relative to the violence done by the Engliſh to a merchant ſhip from Swediſh Pomerania, in the harbour of Barcelona. That Napper Tandy's trial was to come on in Dublin the 28th Nov. That Cardinal Ruffo, in Italy, was organizing a freſh maſs of troops. That the Breſt fleet had put to ſea. That ſome letters from Eſſignour ſtate, that the maſters of Engliſh embargoed veſſels had been thrown into priſon. That a fleet of 317 ſail, under convoy from Portſmouth, bound to Liſbon, Mediterranean and Gibraltar had been ordered back, by a cutter to the commodore.

FROM SPAIN.

The plague is committing dreadful ravages. In Andeluſia 11,000 have died. In Seville 21,000. In Xeres from 160 to 200 die per day. The utmoſt conſternation prevails.—It is approaching the borders of Portugal, and is ſuppoſed to ſweep off one ſixth of the population of the places through which it paſſes. But a ſmall proportion of women die. This diſorder begins with violent pains in the limbs and head ache, a ſtrong fever, and reaches its paroxiſm by the 4th day. Many die with the black vomit, and their bodies turn yellow.

A letter from Waſhington, received at Philadelphia on Friday, ſtates on the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, that the frigates Iuſurgente and Pickering have been loſt. Particulars not mentioned. They were ordered, we belive, off Cayenne.

A few days ſince, ſays the Worceſter Gazette, paſſed through Holden to a new ſettlement, from Portland, a gentleman and his wife, with twenty ſons, born at eight births, fifteen at the five firſt, four at the two next, and one at the laſt.

Foreign News.

STRASBURGH, Nov. 17.

The chief conſul being unwilling to grant any further delay to the court of Vienna, which is only deſirous of gaining time, and is not ſeriouſly inclined to peace, the rupture of the armiſtice has been announced in every point.—But as the period at which it was to expire, was fixed at different dates; hoſtilities will be reſumed ſooner in our neighbourhood than in Bavaria. According to the notice given by general Belliard, the armiſtice will expire on the 28th inſt. but general Angereau is to recommence hoſtilities on the 22d while the time of military operations in the Griſons is fixed on the 24th. As there was but a notice of ten days neceſſary in Italy, the war will be recommenced in that quarter earlier than in Germany.

LEGHORN, Oct. 24.

The property which the Engliſh carried away from Leghorn before the entrance of the French, has been conveyed to Palermo.

ROME, Oct. 23.

A Ruſſian fleet of tranſports, with from 3 to 4000 troops on board bound for Naples, is arrived off Corfu.

BANKS OF THE NECKER, Nov. 14.

The French garriſon in the Heilbron received orders in the night between the 12th and 13th to break up and march towards Franconia. General Collard, who after a long abſence, has within a few days arrived here from Nancy, yeſterday took the ſame road. The troops of the Polish legion lately in the vicinity of Heidelburgh, have alſo marched to Franconia by the way of Helibron. The French garriſon of Stutgard has broke up for Bavaria.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 13.

The Engliſh commodore, Sir Sydney Smith, is ſoon to return to England, another officer having been appointed to ſucceed him in the command of the Engliſh ſquadron cruizing on the coaſt of Egypt.

PARIS, Nov. 15.

The French attached to the office of our Conſul General at Cadiz have, with the Conſul General, fallen victims to the epidemic malady.

The laſt letters from that quarter give the moſt affecting details of the cruel ravages of the plague. Men, women, and children daily expire in the midſt of the ſtreets, and the bodies remain without burial; while many periſh with abſolute want, cauſed by the impoſſibility of all intercourſe.

November 16.

The hurricane of the 9th has not confined its ravages to our territories; moſt all the houſes of the Hague have been damaged. The waters roſe out of their canals, and ſpread over the town. Letters from Bruſſels mention that ſo ſhocks of an earthquake were felt during the tempeſt.

More than 2000 trees were torn up in the foreſt of Louvres.

General Moreau is ſtill at Paris. He was to day at the Thuilleries, and had a conference with the chief conſul, after the parade.

Rear Admiral Ganthéaume arrived at Breſt on the 4th, where he is to take the command, as is ſaid, of a diviſion of ſeven ſail of the line and ſome frigates, for a deſtination not yet known.

November 19.

The tempeſt of the 9th extended as far as Germany, and we learn by letters from Aix-la-Chapelle, Cologne, Duſſeldorff, and Crevelt, that its effects were very deſtructive.

LONDON, Dec. 1.

One of the laſt Journals, the Gazette de France of the 21ſt ult. ſays, that the expedition prepared at Breſt had put to ſea, and that it had a number of troops on board. It is there aſſerted, that the ſquadron is deſtined for the iſland of St. Domingo.

Commodore Sir Charles Hamilton will ſail as ſoon as the wind permits, for the coaſt of Guinea. Several ſhips for Siera Leone go under his convoy.

The laſt letters from Vienna ſtate, that the whole Auſtrian army is in motion to advance towards Mantua; but they ſay not a word reſpecting the reſtoration of hoſtilities.

We are aſſured that the Emperor of Ruſſia has demanded of the King of Pruſſia a paſſage for his armies; but neither their force nor deſtination is mentioned. It is only ſaid in ſome circles, that Paul I. is determined to reſtore the political ballance of Europe, and the general tranquillity, by every means in his power.

PORTSMOUTH, Nov. 30.

Put back to Spithead, the Seahorſe, Middlone, La Pique, Alliance, and Chicheſter, with the Liſbon, Mediterranean, and Gibraltar convoys, in all amounting to 317 ſail.

Various reports are afloat reſpecting this immenſe convoy returning from South Yarmouth Roads to Spithead.—One thing is certain, that it was in conſequence of orders tranſmitted by a cutter to the commodore.

YARMOUTH, Nov. 30.

By the packet which arrived this morning, we are informed that 12,000 Pruſſian troops, with 13 pieces of cannon, had marched into and taken poſſeſſion of Cuxhaven, and that our veſſels lying there had on that account quitted Cuxhaven, and gone into the Roads.

FRANKFORT, Nov. 10.

While we were flattering ourſelves with hopes of peace, appearances here have ſuddenly become warlike.

Yeſterday General Angereau received a courier from Paris, with orders to give notice immediately of the termination of the armiſtice; which he accordingly did on the ſame day: Adjutant general Richet was yeſterday afternoon ſent with the following note to the commander of the Auſtrian troops and to Baron Albion commander of the Mentz troops at Aſchaffenburgh;

GENERAL,

According to the orders I have received from my government, I hereby notify to you the termination of the armiſtice. Hoſtilities will therefore commence in fourteen days from this day, that is, on the 22d day of November.

"ANGEREAU."

HAMBURGH, Nov. 18.

An expreſs has this inſtant arrived here with the diſagreeable intelligence, that an embargo has been laid on all the Engliſh ſhips (70 in number) in the port of Riga.

VENICE, Oct. 28.

The French have required from the city of Florence a contribution of two millions of livres, from Leghorn two millions, from Piſa one million, and in proportion from the other towns in the Grand Duchy of Tuſcany.

RIGA, November 8.

Yeſterday morning government laid an embargo on all the Engliſh ſhips that were in our port; the number is about 70. It is tho't that a ſimilar meaſure will be adopted in all the ports of Ruſſia; but it is not yet known whether the Engliſh property and merchandizes will be ſequeſtrated.

Yeſterday at four o'clock in the afternoon, the French miniſter plenipotentiary diſpatched a courier to Paris.

Count Cobentzel has not left his apartments this day; but his health being completely re-eſtabliſhed, it is expected that he will be able to come out to morrow and again mix with ſociety.

At nine this morning arrived an Auſtrian officer, ſaid to be the bearer of diſpatches of a nature extremly urjent. He came from the head-quarters of the archduke John. He went immediately to ſee Count Cobentzel. He was accompanied by adjutant of the garriſon of Straſburg.

At ſix in the evening general Moreau arrived here. He dined with the miniſter plenipotentiary of the republic, and ſet off at nine o'clock. Count Cobentzel having gone to the miniſter's to paſs the evening, met the general there.

LONDON, Dec. 2.

Two o'clock P. M.

Yeſterday arrived the Hamburgh mail due on Wedneſday laſt. This mail confirms the report of the capture of Cuxhaven by the king of Pruſſia.—On the 21ſt ult, eighteen hundred Pruſſian troops entered that city, and the arrival of five battalions more was hourly expected. All our ſhipping in that port immediately failed for the Roads to avoid being ſeized. His Pruſſian majeſty attempts to juſtify this act as a meaſure of neceſſity and precaution in, conſequence of a Pruſſian veſſel being carried into that neutral port by an Engliſh ſhip of war. It is eaſy to ſee that Ruſſia and Pruſſia were determined to act in concert and that they are determined to try the queſtion of our right to viſit neutral ſhips, eſpecially if they can enliſt any other power under their banner, either by threats or perſuaſion, and we ſhall not be ſurpriſed to find that the influenzy may extend ſomewhat further, we ſhall then be able to diſtinguiſh our foes from our pretended friends. Mr. Sheridan in the courſe of his ſpeech laſt night touched on this queſtion in theſe words

"Without giving any opinion upon that dispute, without saying whether any guarantee could be given with respect to the ships under convoy of neutral powers, I have no hesitation in stating, that if the privilege we contend for be that under which our naval greatness has grown, which is at once the boast, the glory, and security of England; which has been recognized in all treaties, and which is part of the maritime law of Europe; if, I repeat, it be that privilege, I have no hesitation in saying, that it is the character of our existence, the banner under which we should all rally; it is the flag which imitating the example of our gallant seamen, we should nail to the mast of the nation, and go down with the vessel rather than strike it."

December 3.

The last Hamburgh mail brought letters from Constantinople to the 10th October inclusive, at which time the Russian fleet continued at anchor off Boyook Dereh, in expectation of orders. In consequence of the surrender of Malta to the English, countermanding those which would otherwise require them to proceed to the Black Sea.—The state of the capital of Turky was very uneasy, and much apprehension was entertained from the unaccountable stay in the Bosphorus, of the Russian fleet.

LONDON, Nov. 24.

Foreign corn has attained a price never before known in this country. American and Baltic mixed wheat having, within the last week, advanced from 125s. to 135s. per quarter; Baltic red wheat has risen 10s. and Hamburgh and Bremen wheats, 25s. per quarter.

STRASBURG, Nov. 17.

The armistice has been denounced to all the armies. Gen. Desolles, who has the provisional command during the absence of Moreau, has notified to the archduke John, the commander in chief of the Austrian army, that the armistice is at an end, and that hostilities will recommence on the 7th Frimaire, Nov. 28. Orders have been publickly given to the army at Mayence, that the armistice is to conclude on the 29th Brumaire, Nov. Adjutant general Angerau arrived at Archaffenburg on the eve of a grand festival.

According to the last intelligence from Switzerland, the government and constituted authorities at Zurich were informed that the armistice had been denounced the 18th Brumaire, Nov. 9.—Hostilities will recommence in that quarter on the 3d or 4th Frimaire, Nov. 24 or 25. The head quarters of gen. M'Donald are at Coire. The greater part of the army of the Grisons has already set out on its march to the frontiers. A confiderable force is assembling in the country of the Grisons.

SIR,

By common acceptation, the word METEOR conveys the idea of a transitory body appearing in the air; it follows hence that "METEOROLOGICAL" relates to the doctrine of Meteors.

It sometimes happens that there are ingenious Gentlemen of keen optics, whose brains are rather aerial than earthly, and the vacuum occupied by dancing Meteors.—This I take to be a rational solution of the propofed query.

It would oblige a Subfcriber, to know how the ingenious Gentleman's mercury ftood, and what his point of expofure, when the happy demonination of his obfervations occurred to him. A treatife on the longitude would be acceptable from the fame able hand.

ENGLAND.

LONDON, NOVEMBER 16.

Admiralty Office, Nov. 8, 1800.

Copy of a letter from Vice Admiral Lord Hugh Seymour, to Evan Nepean, Eſq; dated on board the Abergaveny, Port Royal harbour, Jamaica, 31ſt of Auguſt, 1800.

I have the very ſincere pleaſure of forwarding to you, for the information of the Lords Commiſſioners of the Admiralty, a letter which I have received from capt. Milne, of his Majeſty's ſhip Seine, deſcribing an action which does great honor to him, his officers & ſhip's company, and which ended in the capture of the French Republican frigate the Vengeance, a ſhip of very ſuperior force to that which he commanded.

Capt. Milne has done ſo much juſtice to his officers and men, by his report of their conduct on that occaſion, that I have only to offer my congratulations to their Lordships upon the ſucceſs that attended their exertions, and to expreſs my hope that it will receive marks of their Lordſhips favour, proportioned to the ſatisfaction which they muſt derive from the event, which has brought forward the merit of thoſe engaged in it.

I am, Sir, &c.

H. SEYMOUR.

His Majeſty's ſhip Seine, off St. Domingo, Auguſt 22, 1800.

MY LORD,

I have the ſatisfaction to acquaint your Lordſhip, that on the morning of the 20th inſtant, I obſerved a ſhip on the ſtarboard tack ſtanding to the northward through the Mona Paſſage: I ſoon perceived ſhe was an enemy, and made all fail in chace, with very little breezes, the wind having come to the northward obliged her to tack, as ſhe could not weather Cape Raphael, on the St. Domingo ſhore: She then ſtood S. S. E. and made all fail; by this time it was near ſunſet, and I could perceive ſhe was a large frigate; it was near midnight before I could bring her to action, and then not ſo cloſe as I could wiſh, as ſhe always bore up and kept at long ſhot; ſhe however did us conſiderable damage in our rigging and ſails, but to appearance ſhe ſuffered equally. We ſeparated for ſome time, and I took that opportunity to get our rigging, &c. again in complete repair.

On the morning of the 25th I had the pleaſure of bringing her to cloſe action; and after about an hour and an half hard fighting, an officer came out on her bowſprit, (the only place he could be ſeen from owing to the miſs of confuſion, by the loſs of her fore-maſt, mizen maſt, and main top-maſt, having fallen on board) and ſaid they had ſtruck to the Britiſh flag. She was immediately taken poſſeſſion of, and proved to be the French frigate the Vengeance, Citizen Pitot, Captaine de Vaiſſeau, commander, mounting 28 18 pounders on her main deck, 16 12 pounders, and 8 42 pounders, caronades, on her quarter deck and forecaſtle, and braſs ſwivels on the gunwale, with ſhifting guns on the main and quarter decks. The weight of metal I have mentioned in French pounds. The behaviour of the officers and ſhip's company was ſuch as has always characterized the Britiſh ſeamen. To my firſt Lieut. Mr. Cheeſham, I am greatly indebted for his cool and ſteady behaviour, and for the amazing fire kept up from the main deck, which nothing could ſurpaſs. My ſecond Lieut. Mr. George Milne, fell fighting nobly about the middle of the action. In him his Majeſty has loſt a valuable and as zealous an officer as any in the ſervice.

To my third Lieut. Mr. Edevearr, (whom I mentioned on a former occaſion, when gunner of the Pique) I am equally indebted for his ſervices: as likewiſe Mr. Barclay the Maſter, and Mr. Macdonald, Lieut. of marines, who was taken down wounded, and came up again when dreſſed, but was obliged from a ſevere wound to be taken below. But I am happy to ſtate, the life of this valuable officer will be ſaved, to render further ſervices to his Majeſty. The behaviour of the petty officers, ſeamen and marines, was ſuch as does them the higheſt credit. The Vengeance is a very large frigate, five years old, and exactly the dimenſions of the Fifgard in his Majeſty's ſervice, and is the ſhip which had the action ſometime ſince with the American frigate the Conſtellation. Previous to her leaving Curracoa, ſhe had a large ſupply of ſeamen from Gaudaloupe, and was every way completely found and bound to France.

His Majeſty's ſhip under my command has ſuffered much in her maſts and hull; ſails and rigging entirely cut to pieces. Your Lordſhip will perceive the Vengeance is ſuperior in ſize, guns, and number of men, to his Majeſty's ſhip I have the honor to command; but nothing could withſtand the ſteady behaviour of this ſhip's crew.

I have the honor of incloſing a liſt of the killed and wounded. The loſs of the enemy has been very great, but I have not yet got a return. I have the honor to be, &c.

Killed—One officer and 12 ſeamen.

The Emperor Paul, fully apprized of the importance of Malta (the complete key of the Levant) and anxious for its attainment, as the moſt eſſential means to create a commerce, and to augment that naval greatneſs which ought to have long ſince awakened the jealouſy of Britain, appointed the Prince Wolkouſky, governor of that iſland, and by the fleet of Admiral Ouſchakoffs, diſpatched him with a ſtrong and choſen body of grenadiers, which was to form its garriſon.—This fleet came to an anchor in the Boſphorus, at Boyook Dereh, where it was joined by the diviſion from the Baltic, commanded by Vice Admiral Carzoff, for what particular purpoſe thus augmented, is not ſtated; but the account of the ſurrender of Malta to the Britiſh reached them the 28th of September, when it was ſtated they were about to return immediately to Sebaſtopol.

The Court of Sweden, on the 2nd Oct. returned an anſwer to the Spaniſh Reſcript of Sept. 17, in which complaint was made of the capture by the Engliſh, of two Spaniſh frigates, in the harbour of Barcelona, by putting a number of men on board a Swediſh veſſel. In this anſwer, the Spaniſh Government is informed that his Swediſh Majeſty will remonſtrate to the Court of London, to which he is equally induced by his friendly connection with the Spaniſh Court, and the violation of the neutrality of his flag.—But that in doing ſo, he ſhall conceive himſelf the principal party. "Juſtice requires that what has been obtained in an unjuſtifiable manner, ſhall be reſtored.—His Majeſty will demand, but without anſwering for the conſequences of this meaſure." The paper, after inſtancing the caſes in which Swediſh ſhips had been taken or plundered by Engliſh and by French veſſels in the ports of Spain, ſays, "His Majeſty would have been happy, to have ſeen the court of Spain, manifeſt in his favor the ſame energy with which it now makes complaint."

All apprehenſions of a rupture with the Mahrattas has ſubſided; they have acceded to the arrangements propoſed by the Company, and appear deſirous to promote and ſtrengthen the good underſtanding happily exiſting between the two powers. We before ſtated, that although the Mahrattas ſuſtained no part of the expence or hazard of the late war, yet to give them an intereſt in the new ſettlement, it was determined to allot to them a portion of the conqueſts, the Peſhwa required an equal diviſion with the Nizam, embracing a ſtrong line of forteſſes on our frontiers; this was declined by the Supreme Government, and the Court of Poonah withheld its conſent to the partition and the commercial conditions attached to it; but probably intimidated by the decided arrangements making by the Company, they, immediately previous to the departure of the diſpatch, ratified the treaty, and aſcribed the delay to the changes which had taken place in their Cabinet.

A veſſel arrived in the Hoogley from Queda, reports, that the hoſtile preparations at Siam were wholly ſuſpended, in conſequence of the following circumſtance, which had involved the whole empire in conſternation and alarm.

The great Royal Elephant, which is ſuppoſed by the credulous people to be immortal, is here held in a ſtate of idolatry, and on occaſions of importance, is led in proceſſion with extraordinary parade and ceremony. In order to excite popularity to the war againſt Ava, and direct the ſuperſtitious prejudices of the natives to its active proſecution, the Great Elephant was led forth; but in the midſt of the rites, and within the greedy obſervance of thouſands, the animal fell down and inſtantly expired. Fear and amazement pervaded every boſom; they regarded the event as the preſage of ſome dire calamity and as an unequivocal condemnation of the war, which notwithſtanding all the perſuaſion of the Prieſts, and the influence of the Court, they conſidered impious.—Should the King of Ava take advantage of this event, the conqueſt of Siam muſt be the conſequence.

We have already ſtated our belief, that it was the determination of our government to attempt ſeriouſly the expulſion of the French from Egypt by a Britiſh force adequate to the occaſion. DECLARATION of WAR againſt Great Britain, by the emperor of all the Ruſſians.

Peterſburgh, Nov. 15, 1800.

WHEREAS war has for many years deſolated the face of empires and diſturbed the tranquility of innocent communities and conſiderations that cannot be juſtified by the laws of nature or nations. And whereas the maritime ſtrength of Great Britain has become dangerous to the privileges and liberties of other ſtates, and on ſundry unwarrantable occaſions violated the rights of neutrality. And whereas the principal ſupport of this overgrown fleet is derived from my faithful allies, Denmark and Sweden. I hereby proclaim it my ſolemn determination to co-operate with them for ſupporting the balance of power in Europe, and equalize the advantages of weak and unprotected ſovereignties. And whereas terms of peace have been offered by the firſt conſul of the French republic that have been thankfully neglected, I hereby proclaim war againſt the king of the Britons, and authorize the ſeizure and detention of all ſhips, goods and merchandize belonging to his ſubjects, and a ſequeſtration of all property. Having no other object but the reſtoration of a general peace, I look up to heaven for the rectitude of my intentions, and ſubſcribe this declaration to advance and promote the general intereſts of mankind. Done at Peterſburgh this 15th day of Nov. 1800.

Dumbrowſkie, G. Sec.

From a French Paper.

The following incident makes conſiderable noiſe at Paris, and very much engages the public attention:—Two young men a few days ago went to the houſe of a midwife, and requeſted her to follow them, in order to deliver a lady in whom they took an intereſt, promiſing her a hundred Louis for her reward. She got into the carriage with them, and after riding nearly an hour, and through a number of turnings, ſhe arrived at the place of deſtination. She there found a young lady, whom ſhe delivered ſafely. While ſhe held the child in her arms, a woman with a maſk came in and took it from her, beſtowing on it at the ſame time the greateſt careſſes. To this extraordinary ſcene one much more horrible ſucceeded. Two men in maſks ruſhed into the room, and diſpatched the unfortunate mother with their poignards.—The midwife was then paid her hundred louis, and carried with as much precaution as had been uſed in taking her out. On the following day ſhe went to the office of police, and depoſited the one hundred louis, declaring at the ſame time that ſhe could not point out the houſe, but that ſhe had, in going out of it, marked the door of it with the blood of the unfortunate victim.

NEW YORK, January 16.

A gentleman who arrived here yeſterday in the ſhip Borneo, of Boſton, captain Smith, from Sumatra and the Cape, informs, that an Engliſh ſquadron under the command of commodore Hotham, were on the 20th of October, cloſely blockading the Iſle of France; and that this ſquadron has taken ten ſail of French and Spaniſh merchantmen in attempting to paſs them. A Hamburgh ſhip, which had paſſed this ſquadron, was purſued and cutout by the Engliſh boats; the captain of which had his arm ſhot off in defending his ſhip.

Our informant adds, that while at Madras, which was about the firſt of July, a Daniſh gentleman from the Iſle of France, informed him, that two veſſels under American colours, had arrived therefrom Bourdeaux, under convoy of a French corvette.

The ſhip Three Siſters, capt. Murphy, arrived here laſt evening from Liverpool in 38 days.—She left Liverpool on the fourth day of December; and has furniſhed the editor of the Mercantile Advertiſer with a file of London papers, amongſt which is "The Courier," an evening paper of the 2d. They furniſh nothing in addition to our former ſtock of intelligence, excepting that the town of Staade, ſituated near Elbe, is occupied by five battalions of Pruſſian troops. "It appears to be the object of his Pruſſian majeſty to ſecure the navigation both of the Elbe and Weſer: he ſeemed reſolved to ſeize the whole country between the two rivers, and it is expected he will alſo occupy Hamburgh. The commercial intereſts of the city of London, are moſt ſeriouſly affected by this circumſtance."

"The next mail," ſays the Courier of the 3d. December, "is expected to bring intelligence of the Pruſſians having entered Hamburgh; and it is poſſible that interruption may be given to commercial tranſactions with that city. Pruſſia is looking out for acceſſion of territory in the North of Germany, and Ruſſia in Turkey. The Ruſſian Admiral refuſes to quit the Dardanelles till Paul's maritime expences are paid.—Fleets of Ruſſian tranſports, and fleets of Ruſſian men of war are hovering about Conſtantinople; and it is probable that Buonaparte has planned with the court of St. Peterſburgh the overthrow of the Turkiſh empire.

"General Clarke at Luneville gave a grand entertainment on the 28th Brumaire (Nov. 6) to Count Cobenzel and Joſeph Buonaparte; on that day no third miniſter had arrived, nor had quarters been prepared for any. Count Cobenzel expected with great impatience the return of the laſt courier he diſpatched to Vienna, which probably will determine whether that miniſter is to make any longer ſtay at Luneville. No conferences had been held on the 11th.—At eight in the evening, count Cobenzel ſent off a courier from Luneville to Vienna, ſix hours before he had received a return courier from London, with an anſwer to the diſpatches which he had ſent off on the 24th of October from Paris to count Staremberg."

Please to inſert the following in Anſwer to your Subſcriber, in laſt week's Paper.

SIR,

THE Subſcriber you addreſs yourſelf to, did not aſk after "dancing Meteors," or the etiology nor the etimology of the word "Meteorological;"—but modeſtly wiſhed that ſome modern production might remove a conceived ancient error.

The perſon you have attempted to anſwer, has never reared himſelf up to a peat ſtack in the Iſle of Sky, Mercury 20, nor ſtood up to the neck, ſnow on the mountains of Lapland, Mercury 40 degrees below 0, in order to feaſt his keen optics, or fill up the vacuum of his bribe with the sight of "dancing Meteors;"—this he supposes would have been irrational.

You should certainly be obliged with an account of the points of exposure height of the Mercury, when the happy denomination of the observations you shade to occurred to him, if in his power to recollect the time; and when he gives you "a treatise on the longitude," he wishes to accompany it with a treatise on the Philosopher's Stone, in which he expects to be equally successful.

Mr. Subscriber, the motives I had in handing "Meteorological Observations" to the printers, was to remove, as much as possible, the prejudices entertained in almost every other country against Canada, from the severity of the winter.—But the question I put, was to satisfy myself, as to the propriety of classing Meteors with the effects air has upon Mercury,—which you have not answered—appearing to prefer ridicule rather than information.

To the RATIONAL SUBSCRIBER.

SIR,

THE public are much obliged, no doubt, for your "Rational Solution," "Meteorological relates to the doctrine of Meteors."—Good.—What are we to infer from this? That, the weather, or the weather glass are "transitory bodies appearing in the air." O! rare "Rational Solution;" 'tis the practice with a number of rational gentlemen to fortify the "vacuum of their brains" with a strong solution of Irish whiskey, until their optics are not so keen, but may mistake earthly objects for "dancing Meteors."—Now I would advise the rational gentleman to defer his accustomed beverage, look at the question again, and if he cannot resolve it, to say nothing about the point of exposure.

TO THE

EDITOR OF THE HERALD,

SIR,

YOUR paper of the 14th inst. will effect the transmission of your shame offering to posterity. It is happy for mankind, that works form the criterion by which the authors are to be judged. The cunning hypocrite may long accomplish his purposes—to irritate him is to unveil him—to detect him is the mean of forcing him to work out his own commitment. The motly and phrenetic ebullition of your late anger, threw you into some extravagancies of expression hardly compatible with decency, yet characteristic of the editor of the Herald, and an epitome of the man. To convince you that the rank I assigned you was not of the nature of a sinecure or a mere empty honor, I now encourage you to proceed and diligently discharge the duties of your station; Your merits shall neither pass unnoticed or unrewarded. The Oracle shall transmit such truths and responses (when duly consulted) as shall stimulate you to prodigious exertions in the cause of filth, and if possible to the outdoing your memorable phylactery.—You have made a happy improvement in a short space, your first rhapsody proved you only wanton and envious, your last monument of genius will rescue your memory from oblivion, and immortalize your wit; it will equally secure you from the charge of malignity or passiveness, and doubtless will gratify such of your friends, as admire you for a wit and a critic. I cannot master scorn, condescend to make use of such inelegant epithets and unconnected abuse as you have done, for various reasons:—The first of which is, that I always preserve equanimity; the second is, that having some two-edged truths and caustic arguments in store—I execrate that stale trick of recurring to Billingsgate; a third, that I cannot stoop to the degrading level of employing the same weapons with a recreant editor.

So sir, mr. editor, from thinking of your head, as you effect to think of mine, I think you have a skull and that moderately thick into the bargain; I also think that it underwent a profound percolation before you produced that highly rectified extract. The being "kicked out." was, I think, an injudicious expression to fall from a man of your figure and atchievements; it reminds those who know you, of a person who allowed himself to be turned out of an office, to prevent his employers the trouble of kicking him out. I do not mean by this to impeach your valour, for I dare to say, you are a valiant little Almanac maker. I draw this inference from an instance of magnanimous valour displayed by your late worthy fraternal coadjutor whilst hunting the "larsfong" in York.

Had I ever been on sufferance in the "kitchen of the maids &c." I should not have basely attempted to dispossess my host of that mansion which afforded me shelter. The manner in which you was once lodged at Newark, will teach you how to make the application.—These terms you will probably understand better than "superseded and dislodged."

By the bye, you promise me "AN EMOLLIENT;" but as quackery is a family appurtenance, will you change the prescription and prepare a phlegmagogue. With thanks for your friendly recognition and an assurance of a punctual correspondence on my part,

I am your's &c.

SANCHO.

TO THE

EDITOR OF THE HERALD,

SIR,

I AM happy to observe that your attempted vindication has an apparent tincture of that "meek, manly, and Christian temper" which you charge "Sancho" with the want of. I cannot, however, reconcile the unchristian and unjust construction which you put upon the meaning of a former paper, with either your honesty or judgment. Does my taxing you generally with a want of gratitude, involve the question with respect to myself? are hostility and ingratitude synonimous? have I ever sought that I shou'd expect or claim your gratitude? Fie, fie, Mr. Editor, this is no solemn mockery; but a pitiful subterfuge, a piece of ridiculous mummery, too palpable to glut the lowest of your friends with, or even to titillate your own vanity.

The mention of "Mother Beach and her Son's infarnal old Granny," is a well conceived shade to the part of your picture designed as light, and worthy of the "Herald Editor." I pity such despicable drivelling, and from having an indifferent opinion of your heart, begin to have a mean one of your head and understanding. You have discovered much profitable policy in the titular change of your Gazette; to have perfected the piece, and given full credit to your patrons, you ought also to have told us, that you applied to the chords of their liberality at a time, and on an occasion, when you were sure they were tangible, and when your talent was not buried. Without "grinding" your silence or feelings, I shall barely remind you, that your well-timed application had nearly procured you something more "grinding" than patronage or lustihoog; but this is not the first instance wherein pity has prevented chastisement, and injury escaped punishment through humane interposition. There was a time, Mr. Editor, when the bounty of Government to its Printers would not have been a heinous sin in your eyes, or a subject to have commented upon; that bounty once extended, ceases not, except it ceases to be deserved. When you say the York Gazette is imposed on, and supported by force of "law," I must confess I do not understand you: But when you say it, printers depend on the treasury for money which the country denies them, I must beg leave to contradict you flatly. The wealth and munificence of the British Government are inseparable, the first enables and the last inclines them to attach their servants and friends by gratitude; and for their attachment and services, to afford a full and ample remuneration. The liberality of Government to their Printers at York, is admitted. Independent thereof, the paper has a circulation which produces a fund exceeding whatever the Constellation could, or the Herald will boast. You value yourself highly upon your abilities; the abilities of individuals often depend on something fortuitous; their intentions and conduct wholly upon themselves. Were your abilities greater, I pledge myself to furnish an ample range for their exertion. You shall manfully keep the field, or shamefully abandon it. If the odds lie on the side of abilities, you may eventually enjoy a public as well as private triumph. Of your caution relative to the biography, the manner in which it affects me will appear by my future circumspection; the offended snail will thrust out his horns, the garron prance by force of goading, and SANCHO is prepared to avert a Snail's, a Garron's, or an Editor's anger. By what subtility of perversion, by what diabolical conception could you think of the execrable and impious charge you advance, of comparing myself to my Maker,—this is certainly extorting a meaning by the rack, and breaking it upon the wheel.—It raises in me sensations of horror, and obliges me to view you in the light of a monster. You say "that being challenged, you will defend yourself with decency and truth;" if recrimination is defence, if scurrility and falsehood are decency and truth, your defence has been ably commenced; and will, I dare say, be industriously prosecuted. You propose yourself as the future subject.—Agreed. And if you have a principle fixed or unfixed, I will take care to bring the principle itself to light, and "faithfully hand down its operation. When you prescribe terms, recollect that you were the aggressor; I confine myself to no mean, but shall freely (without departing from truth) use which, and whatever may make for the purpose; I shall think none extraneous or improper, which may contribute to shew you to the world in your true colours, and make a vile character odious.

You are entitled to the credit of not being a party in a brother's cause; the disinterested manner in which you handle that subject, fully establishes the point: However, there is as wide a difference between making converts by the sword, as there is between the iron grasp of force, and the due exertion of Justice; the first of which, you nevertheless insinuate, was used on the occasion.

It is foreign to my purpose, to meddle with the politics of this province: It is unnecessary to declare of what country I am, or to what constitution I am attached; and equally so, to give an opinion in the event of a provincial war: Were I to do so, the public might attach to the affirmations of veracity, the same degree of credit which it now does to the hardy assertions of falsehood.

I leave to yourself the task of demonstration, and of inferring from your negatives and affirmatives.—I will however say, that if these were to form the pillars of character and the standard of good opinion, memory would in a measure be an useless faculty—and you, then pass for what you are NOT.

Messrs. PRINTERS,

Bow, wow, yugh, yugh, wow.

WHEN I answered the question of your Meteorological Subscriber, I must confess that I anticipated a solo; but was not aware, that I should bring down the music of a pack upon myself: However, since they have given tongue so powerfully, I will do them the honor to sound a rallying horn. I take No. I. to be of the blood-hound race, as he neither follows by sight, scent or track: It is difficult to say what his powers in the pursuit are; but he certainly is terrible at the death: Number and case he mangles; construction flies before him; mood and tense vanish; and dismayed orthography trembles at his touch. No. II. seems good at the trail, an accident in his youth which befel his teeth, unfits him for the chace. He is tolerable in overtaking, but cannot keep a hold. Oh! ye Gods of propriety!!! that the fable armed thavers of sheep skins, the flesh flewed straddlers of death's heads, should bray in your faces, and "rear" themselves up as wits in defiance of decency, in contempt of contempt, and maugre reason and nature.

I shall select a few beauties from their doleful satires on sense—that the public may feel for them, if they cannot feel for themselves.

Satire No. I.—a. "Or the etiology, nor the etimology, &c."—Oh! thou midwife to error, shame! shame!!! b. "Modern production might remove conceived antient error," "modern" error conceived, begotten, and brought forth by thy presumption. c. "The person you have attempted to answer." Blunderbuss that thou art; questions, not persons are answered. d. "Has never reased himself up to a peat stack." Heaven forefend, thou stack of insignificance. e. "Nor flood up to the neck, snow on the mountains of Lapland." Thou forked icicle—it is impossible to say whether stupidity or frigidity prevail in thy conceptions. f. "Or fill up the vacuum of his brains with the fight, &c." A vacuum filled by sight—peerless nonsense! unparallelled foliosism!!! g. "You should certainly be obliged with an account, &c. if in his power to recollect the time."—Arise O God of tense, and thunder —. h. "The motives I had in handing, &c. was to remove, &c." Number! number! What hath thou done? i. "Prejudices entertained from the severity."—Oh! Logwood, Copperas beauty!!! j. "Appearing to prefer ridicule rather than information." Sublime, sublime; thy meaning is obvious thou builder in buff.—I will not torture the alphabet further with noting your beauties, my man—but will now give a lift to your potent coadjutor.

Satire No. II.—k. "The public are much obliged for your, &c." Sympathetic blunderbolt, could you not have written one sentence properly? l. "That the weather and the weather glass are, &c." Oh! reckless, brainless, toothless inference. m. "To fortify the vacuum of their brains with a strong solution of Irish whiskey."—Alas my man, you are poor in brains but rich in fortification, the vacuum (if any there is) which should have contained your brains, is doubly fortified—you cannot dread a fracture; a solid mass of the kind is bomb proof. If ever you had brains, they must have contended for a change of situation, and obtained it in a different part of the structure.

Messrs. Printers, wit; borrowing terms in gunnery is of different kinds, viz. round, canister, langrage, grape, double-headed, &c. &c. the volleys discharged in your last week's paper, by Subscribers No. I. and II. (above mentioned) were langrage and double-headed—had their ordnance been cast of common brass, they must inevitably have burfted.—Please to caution them against furcharging; as they are my wards, I should be sorry were the lads hurt.

York, 4th March, 1801.

To whom these presents shall come, Greeting:

KNOW YE, that on the 28th day of February, eighteen hundred and one, M. and N. otherwise called Subscribers, otherwise Meteorologists, otherwise Felt-mongers, otherwise Nincompoops, late of the parish of Stepney or otherwise, now of York, in the county of York, not having the fear of shame before their eyes, but instigated by the Dog Star, tutor-Scribenda, or the Devil, did most violently assault, gnaw, mangle, worry, bait, bar, kill, slay, slaughter and destroy many of our liege and loving subjects. And further, against our peace and dignity have raised divers grievous seditions, innovations, conspiracies, rebellions and warfare in our several provinces of Orthography, Etimology, Prosody and Syntax. And whereas they have diabolically, wickedly, seloniously and infernally spirited up, deluded, corrupted, and otherwise misled, tormented and damnified our heretofore loyal verbs, adverbs, nouns, adjectives, articles, conjunctions, pronouns, prepositions and interjections. And whereas, they have also subverted, inverted, despoiled, deflowered, and otherwise inhumanly abused our good friends and allies, the tenses, moods, cases, genders and numbers, to the great detriment of our peace, laws and good government.

Now know ye, that divers urgent causes us hereunto moving, we have caused a reward of one hundred fleeces to be offered for the bodies of the said M. and N. (alias Subscribers, alias Meteorologists, alias Feltmongers, alias Nincompoops:) And we do hereby strictly enjoin and command, that they the said M. and N. be forthwith apprehended and in durance, close custody, and strict confinement kept, until our Imperial Will and Pleasure be fully known.

Given under our hand at York aforesaid, this seventh day of March, eighteen hundred and one.

GRAMMAR.

By his Highness's Command,

Messrs. PRINTERS,

IT must be flattering, and in the last degree gratifying to every one interested in the improvements and prosperity of this country, to behold the rapid advances daily making in cultivation, buildings, and the opening of roads to the different and distant parts of the province. Any citizen, or inhabitant of this neighbourhood, who was a witness to the beginning of its settlement, has it now in his power to draw a pleasing contrast: the ground that five years ago was an absolute wild, and haunt for beasts of prey, we now see occupied by works and structure of public and private convenience and utility. Nothing can be a greater ornament, nor of more direct and immediate advantage to the country and the people at large, than safe and convenient roads: they promote and encourage travelling; they enable the farmer to transport his commodities with ease and safety to a market; they make the communications with neighbourhoods expeditious and commodious: in fact, it is unnecessary to enlarge upon the advantages, since they must be obvious to every one at first view.

The citizens and inhabitants of this town and part of the country, have the strongest imaginable inducements to open roads to the interior, and in particular to Lake Simcoe, as well from views of local convenience, as the certain and extensive advantages which will arise, from having the rout of the North West traders transferred to this quarter. It certainly depends upon ourselves to make this a depository to the wealth, and common centre of the province: We have nothing to do but improve upon the situation and advantages with which nature has distinguished it, to make it vie with the most favoured sea port. The views of Government, no doubt, coincide with the intentions of the traders, which leave but little for us to do—and when it is considered, that this place will be a depot to the exports and immense imports (the fruits of the North West trade) every one in the least interested, will contribute something to put us in possession of advantages, which we now enjoy but in prospect.

We have seen that the Hon. Chief Justice Elmsley, and several other gentlemen, (whose independent situations precluded every idea of interestedness or profit on their part) have been the first to propose, and with a praiseworthy liberality to contribute to the public spirited undertaking.

The examples of men, actuated solely by pure patriotism, are well worthy imitation, and will, it is hoped, stimulate such as have the stronger motives of self-interest and personal advantage in view, to promote and encourage to the utmost, a work fraught with so many and such general advantages. There is a second subscription circulating for this desirable purpose, and it is presumed, that whoever considers the object in its right point of view will generously throw in their mite to accomplish it.

Messrs. PRINTERS,

Whosoever has viewed with taste the picturesque scenery around the Head of this Lake, will read with sympathy the following

ODE.

NEAR yonder solitary bower,
Lone glooming midst the moony light
I roam at midnight's spectered hour,
And climb the wild majestic height.
Lo! to the mountain let me rev'rent bow,
Where ancient virtue taught its founts to flow.

Pale on a rock's aspiring steep,
Behold a Sachem sits forlorn;
I see the halfrot'd phantom weep,
I hear his reed of sorrow mourn.
The vanith'd grove provokes his deepest sigh,
And fields laid open to the gazing eyes

Permit me, Sachem, here to stray,
And ponder midst thy drear retreat
To wail the solitary way,
Where Wisdom held her hallowed seat.
Here let me roam in spite of folly's smile
A pensive pilgrim o'er each piti'd pile.

Poor ghost, no more the Indian race
Shall here the pipe of peace volume,
No more their council fire shall blaze,
Nor that of feast disperse the gloom,
Lo! shakes obscene, along the prospect steep,
And oxen o'er each worshipp'd circle sleep.

No more along the golden brook
The trophies of the chace shall fall;
Time treats alike the shrub and oak,
Whose power at length shall crush the ball.
Led by the circling hours with magic mein,
Gigantic change now treads the weeping scene.

vered much profitable policy in the titular change of your Gazette; to have perfected the piece, and given full credit to your patrons, you ought also to have told us, that you applied to the chords of their liberality at a time, and on an occasion, when you were sure they were tangible, and when your talent was not buried. Without "grinding" your silence or feelings, I shall barely remind you, that your well-timed application had nearly procured you something more "grinding" than patronage or lustihoog; but this is not the first instance wherein pity has prevented chastisement, and injury escaped punishment through humane interposition. There was a time, Mr. Editor, when the bounty of Government to its Printers would not have been a heinous sin in your eyes, or a subject to have commented upon; that bounty once extended, ceases not, except it ceases to be deserved. When you say the York Gazette is imposed on, and supported by force of "law," I must confess I do not understand you: But when you say it, printers depend on the treasury for money which the country denies them, I must beg leave to contradict you flatly. The wealth and munificence of the British Government are inseparable, the first enables and the last inclines them to attach their servants and friends by gratitude; and for their attachment and services, to afford a full and ample remuneration. The liberality of Government to their Printers at York, is admitted. Independent thereof, the paper has a circulation which produces a fund exceeding whatever the Constellation could, or the Herald will boast. You value yourself highly upon your abilities; the abilities of individuals often depend on something fortuitous; their intentions and conduct wholly upon themselves. Were your abilities greater, I pledge myself to furnish an ample range for their exertion. You shall manfully keep the field, or shamefully abandon it. If the odds lie on the side of abilities, you may eventually enjoy a public as well as private triumph. Of your caution relative to the biography, the manner in which it affects me will appear by my future circumspection; the offended snail will thrust out his horns, the garron prance by force of goading, and SANCHO is prepared to avert a Snail's, a Garron's, or an Editor's anger. By what subtility of perversion, by what diabolical conception could you think of the execrable and impious charge you advance, of comparing myself to my Maker,—this is certainly extorting a meaning by the rack, and breaking it upon the wheel.—It raises in me sensations of horror, and obliges me to view you in the light of a monster. You say "that being challenged, you will defend yourself with decency and truth;" if recrimination is defence, if scurrility and falsehood are decency and truth, your defence has been ably commenced; and will, I dare say, be industriously prosecuted. You propose yourself as the future subject.—Agreed. And if you have a principle fixed or unfixed, I will take care to bring the principle itself to light, and "faithfully hand down its operation. When you prescribe terms, recollect that you were the aggressor; I confine myself to no mean, but shall freely (without departing from truth) use which, and whatever may make for the purpose; I shall think none extraneous or improper, which may contribute to shew you to the world in your true colours, and make a vile character odious.

You are entitled to the credit of not being a party in a brother's cause; the disinterested manner in which you handle that subject, fully establishes the point: However, there is as wide a difference between making converts by the sword, as there is between the iron grasp of force, and the due exertion of Justice; the first of which, you nevertheless insinuate, was used on the occasion.

It is foreign to my purpose, to meddle with the politics of this province: It is unnecessary to declare of what country I am, or to what constitution I am attached; and equally so, to give an opinion in the event of a provincial war: Were I to do so, the public might attach to the affirmations of veracity, the same degree of credit which it now does to the hardy assertions of falsehood.

I leave to yourself the task of demonstration, and of inferring from your negatives and affirmatives.—I will however say, that if these were to form the pillars of character and the standard of good opinion, memory would in a measure be an useless faculty—and you, then pass for what you are NOT.

SANCHO.

No more the brave in strains sublime,
Their feats of hardihood proclaim,
To rescue from the rage of time
Each glorious deed approv'd by fame.
Deep in the dust is laid each bow unstrung,
And mute, for ever flopp'd each warrior's tongue.

Here Wisdom—Virtue's awful voice
Inspired the youth of former days,
With such no more these hills rejoice,
But echo plodding labour's lays,
While melancholy in yon mouldering tower
Sits listening to Ontario's distant roar.

Let others heedless of the hill,
With eye incurious, pass along,
My muse with grief the scene shall fill,
And swell with softest sighs the song.
Ah pleased each vestig'd mansion to explore,
Where unschool'd wisdom dwelt, but dwells no more.

For the ORACLE.

Messrs. PRINTERS,

Please to insert the following pieces, in answer to two which appeared in your last week's paper.

SUBSCRIBER, I take the liberty to tell thee, that it is a pity that thou should'st know half so much of letters, unless thou madest better use of them. Thou ought'st to be ashamed of thyself for thy impertinence—and as thou hast taken the liberty to ridicule, and throw thy poisoned darts, and in some degree personal, I think thou art entitled to an answer in thy own way, to which thou wast not provoked—so I must call thee a howling Son of Sancho, a frothy headed cauliflower; thou ought'st to be ashamed of thyself for thy impudence; —thou fable painted Indian—thou ped-lar—thou in which thou continuest in "contempt of contempt." Thou certainly must be of a worthless disposition, to attack characters who never did, or ever meant thee any harm—thou skunk of scurrility, which appears thy forte, and in which thou appearest very capable,—would it not have been much more to thy credit to have given an answer in a modest way, without a mixture of ridicule? If thou hast had the advantage of a literary education, thou ought'st to turn it into another channel—try to enlighten thy fellow subjects, and quit thy scurrilous nonsense. But thy race is nearly run, thy metamorphoses are discovered, which I hope will be generally known; and as thou hast begun with impertinence, I will not leave thee where thou art. Though I dont profess any great literary talents, perhaps I can convey my meaning, which I will endeavour to give the public.—As it is not a perſon of thy inſignificance that can make me feel ſhame, fear, or anger—thou mayeſt excite pity and contempt. I ſhall anſwer all thy productions (pointed at me) in which I need not tell thee, to do thy worſt—thou haſt given a good ſpecimen. Thou haſt even gone ſo far, as to point thy ridicule, in which thou called "No. II." at a perſon no way concerned—I ſtand ſolous; and thou wilt, probably, find that the young dog "No. II." has got a good ſet of teeth, likely "to keep hold when he overtakes."—but I leave him to fight his own battles—I ſhall fight mine, for which purpoſe I have many weapons in ſtore.

NEW YORK, February 7.

CAPT. COOP, of the ſhip Diana, arrived here yeſterday, in 24 days from Jeremie, informs us, that Toulſaint was on the eve of a war with the Spaniards at St. Domingo. He had put under requiſition 30 veſſels, amongſt which were a number of Americans, for the embarkation of troops.

Capt. Everet, of the ſhip Warren, arrived here ſame day from Amſterdam, touched at Orfordneſs, at the mouth of the Thames, on the 11th ult. but could get no papers, nor did he hear any news. It was the opinion at Amſterdam, that there would be a general peace in the ſpring. This was alſo the opinion of ſeveral commanders of Engliſh ſhips, whom capt. E. ſpoke in the channel.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Philadelphia, to the Editor of the Mercantile Adverſiſer, dated Friday morning, Jan. 30.

"The ſhip Camilla, Weſt, in 170 days from Canton, and the Eclipſe, Jones, 103 days from Calcutta, are juſt arrived. Capt. Jones ſailed from the Lands Head, the 12th October, in company with the Rebecca for Baltimore, and the brig Lydia for New York. On the day of his ſailing he ſpoke the Noneſuch frigate, who informed that the Kent (a valuable Indiaman) was captured on the 7th by the Confidence, a French corvette of twenty 9, 12, and 14 pound carronades, and 250 men.—The captain of the Kent, and 11 of his men were killed in the action; and 44 were wounded. The privateer ſucceeded by boarding. At that time the privateer had captured 7 veſſels from Calcutta, and one American Indiaman bound in, name unknown. Parted with the Noneſuch on the 24th October, in full chaſe of the Confidence, and ſuppoſed ſhe would be captured. Previous to this, on the 24th October, ſpoke the Noneſuch, and was informed that by a veſſel from Puli Penong, which the Noneſuch had ſpoke the day before, intelligence was received that Batavia had capitulated on the 12th Sept. to the Britiſh forces, conſiſting of four frigates, one 50 gun ſhip, and the 12th regiment of foot.

In the debate in the Britiſh houſe of commons on the firſt of December, on the late negociations, Mr. Sheridan, after a lenthy and animated ſpeech, moved.

That an humble addreſs be preſented to his majeſty, humble to aſſure him, that we have taken into our moſt ſerious conſideration the papers relative to the negociation for peace with France; and that the reſult of our reflections on this important ſubject, founded as well on the due examination of the documents now refered to us, as on the experience of the paſt conduct of moſt of your majeſty's allies, is an humble but earneſt deſire that your majeſty will omit no proper opportunity which may ariſe, conſiſtently with the good faith ever preſerved on the part of your majeſty, of entering into a ſeperate negociation with the government of France for a ſpeedy and honorable peice.—And further, we implore your majeſty not to ſanction any new engagements which ſhall preclude ſuch a mode of negociation.

This motion produced a warm debate; and on a deciſion, there were for the motion, 35—againſt it, 153—majority 120."

By the London Star of the laſt of Dec. it appears that there were then in the Britiſh navy 195 ſhips of the line—27 50's—236 frigates—314 ſloops of war—Total 782—of which there are in commiſſion, 131 of the line—21 50's—28 frigates—273 ſloop of war—in all, 633.

Extract of a letter from St. Thomas, dated the 7th January, 1801.

"An advice boat arrived at Baſſatere from Rochfort in 36 days paſſage. She brought the treaty concluded with America, which was immediately proclaimed at Baſſaterre. The planters of Guadaloupe are all recalled to their homes. Mr. Leſcallier, very well known in the Weſt Indies, and on whom great encomiums are beſtowed, is nominated preſect for Guadaloupe. He was commiſſary extraoteur at Grenada, under the old Government.

"Another veſſel in 24 days from Bourdeaux arrived on the 22d December, 20 paſſengers all Guadaloupe planters. The hope of a general peace was founded on the ſtrongeſt probabilities.

"The gentleman who writes from St. Thomas, is De la Salimiere, diſtinguiſhed by his probity; the ſame who laſt year was the firſt to announce to us the favorable change wrought by Buonaparte."

Arrived here yeſterday, the ſloop Nancy, Huyt, from Charleſton in 6 days. On the 19th January, ſpoke ſchooner Naturaliſt, Smith, 14 days out from Port Republican, bound to Norfolk, and three of the hands ſick with the fever. Captain Smith informed captain Huyt, that Gen. Rigaud's party were affaſſinating the negroes to the number of a hundred a day.

By the Nancy we have received Charleſton papers to the 24th of January, inclusive. They mention the arrival there of the ſhip Grevhound, Pratt, in 38 days from Gibraltar, and the barque Neptune, Dryburgh, in 39 days from Liverpool. Captain Pratt informs that he was in Leghorn at the time that the French took poſſeſſion of that place.—There was no conteſt, the French being too numerous for the Auſtrians to contend with; and the utmoſt order and harmony ſucceeded. At firſt, ſome few individuals, who had been oppreſſed and perſecuted by the Tuſcan government, for their attachment to the French cauſe indicated a revengeful diſpoſition, and threatened ſevere relentment; but they were impriſoned, and a proclamation was immediately iſſued by the commandant, ſetting forth that they had come to protect, not to deſtroy. The only injury ſuffered by the mercantile intereſt, on account of the change of matters, in the place, was the payment of a duty of two per cent. impoſed by the chamber of commerce of the city, by way of compromiſe with the French, for not ſearching ſtrictly for enemy's property. On the payment of this duty, and of one per cent. impoſed by the Tuſcan government under the pretext of convoy duty, neutral veſſels were permitted to depart freely, with their cargoes.

In Leghorn, on the 22d of November, the general opinion was, that the armiſtice between the French and Auſtrians, of the expiration of which notice had been given, would be renewed, in conſequence of a general expectation, that the Emperor of Ruſſia had determined to act again in concert with the Auſtrians and Engliſh. But in Gibraltar, late in December, the laſt accounts from England had induced a belief, that the Emperor of Ruſſia would act rather in concert with the French.

Captain Dryburgh left Liverpool on the 4th Dec. and brought no papers.—He mentions that accounts were publiſhed in England, previous to his departure, of the Emperor of Ruſſia (the King of Pruſſia probably) having entered the Electorate of Hanover with an army of 60,000 men.

NASSAU, (N. P.) Dec. 23.

Arrived, the ſloop Admiral Duncan, from Madeira. Alſo an American ſhip bound from Boſton to Havanna, and a ſloop; both prizes to the privateer Swift.

Dec. 26.—Arrived the ſchooner, Frederica, bound from Barcelona, on the Spaniſh Main, to St. Thomas's, with a cargo of hides, and between three and 4000 dollars on board, prize to his Majeſty's ſhip America, of 64 guns.

We learn from the officers in charge of the Frederica, that prior to the capture of the ſchooner, the America had taken and ſent into Halifax, a very valuable brig, mounting 22 guns, with 200,000 dollars and a quantity of ingots of gold on board, bound for America.

December 30.—We have received information, that capt. Graham, of the revenue brig Admiral Duncan, had a ſevere engagement with an American veſſel of ſuperior force. Capt. Graham is wounded, and three or four of his men killed. We hope to have it in our power to give more authentic particulars of this buſineſs in our next.

Scraps from late London Papers.

It is ſtated as certain, that on the 11th ult. (September) the Ruſſian minister at Berlin, Baron De Krudener, tranſmitted to that court, in the name of the Emperor Paul, a declaration couched in very poſitive language. By the declaration, the king of Pruſſia is invited to favor and ſupport the deſtination of two Ruſſian armies, each of them 80,000 men ſtrong. Theſe two armies have for their object to ſet bounds to the Belligerent Power, and to ſtrengthen ſocial order in Europe.—In order to attain this happy object the direct means of negociation in a formidable attitude are firſt to be tried, and on the failure of them, vigorous meaſures are to be employed againſt thoſe who ſhall dare to raiſe any obſtacles.

The Moniteur (French paper) of the 2d October, has the following paragraph:—"While our enemies under value our reſources, and our return to proſperity is doubted by the impatience of ſome minds, Government occupies itſelf with perſeverance, but without parade, in ameliorating the ſtate of our finances. It poſtpones to other times, the vaſt projects and other bold plans which would not be ſeconded by the confidence of the public. It is neither its deſire nor its duty to be indebted for its ſucceſs to any thing but the influence of order; and order is but the ſlow and progreſſive effect of meaſures combined with wiſdom and purſued with unceaſing perſeverance. It was formerly aſked, what were the objects that occupied the attention of Sulli and Colbert? Their enemies calumniated their ſilence and accuſed the weakneſs of their genius. It was only after ſeveral years that the public was enabled to judge of the meaſures which they had taken, and to perceive how much France was indebted to them for its proſperity and happineſs. Such will be the caſe in our own time. It appears a ſingular phenomenon to reflect upon the aſtoniſhing activity of the preſent government in war, and its wiſe and regular conduct with reſpect to the adminiſtration of public affairs. The attentive obſerver muſt have perceived that a more regular and economical ſyſtem has been introduced in almoſt every branch; that there is every where more energy and vigilance; that more than fifty millions of delegations, which belonged to the 7th have been abſorbed in the 8th year; that the intereſt of money which was at five per cent the month, has already fallen two per cent, and tends every day to a more ſatisfactory depreſſion, and that a progreſſive activity is to be ſeen in the ſtate of commerce and manufactures.—But what weight has all this with ſuperficial minds? Nothing is worthy of their attention which is not aſtoniſhing in its reſults. Without that there is no adminiſtration which can merit their praiſes. If amidſt their principles of order and proſperity they think they diſcern ſome ſhades of irregularity, they lay hold of them with avidity, and would alarm us with the return of paſt evils—Thus for inſtance, becauſe the year 8 has not been ſeparated from the year 9, ſome call out that we are in arrear. But they have thought proper to overlook that in ſeparating the expence of the year 8 from that of the year 9, the reſources of the two had likewiſe been ſeparated, and that all the revenue belonging to theſe years will be referred to meet their expenditure. In the begining of Brumaire conſiderable ſums will be iſſued from the public treaſury to diſcharge the pay and expences of the year 8, and preceding years, and theſe payments will continue regularly every month without encroaching the leaſt upon the funds deſtined for the current expences. Thus what in former years was only a fiction will now be realized. There will be no loan or anticipation on the funds of one year for the expences of another, and the paſt will no longer devour the future."

The laſt Cork Advertiſer informs us that the Iriſh mail-coaches may now travel, as uſual, both by night and day, with perfect ſafety, as their eſcort of dragoons is ordered to be augmented to prevent danger! The editor congratulates his readers on this ſymptom of returning tranquility.

A great ſchiſm has diſcovered itſelf among the Jews at Amſterdam, on account of the ſtrickneſs impoſed upon them by the Rabbies, whoſe authority many of them are diſpoſed to throw off.

The houſe of commons affords at preſent a pregnant ſubject for the inveſtigation of the antiquary, and the obſervations of the curious. The lining having been entirely ſtripped off, the fine Gothic columns of St. Stephen's chapel appear to the eye, with the rich and coſtly decorations beſtowed upon this building by Edward the III. It impreſſes upon the mind an aſtoniſhing idea of the riches and magnificence of that period. The ſtone of the columns is moſt highly painted and gilded, and the colous are ſtill in a great ſtate of preſervation. Artiſts have been buſily employed for ſome weeks making drawings and models of the rich and beautiful workmanſhip of that early period.

The Pariſian ladies wear trails to their gowns of an immoderate length. Cover or uncover what they may, they are determined not to ſave the cloth!

The emperor of Ruſſia has publiſhed an Ukaſe, ordering the eſtabliſhment of a colony 10,000 perſons at Siberia, on the confines of China. The colliſts are to conſiſt of diſcharged ſoldiers, and of perſons ſentenced to baniſhment.—The government engages to build houſes for the firſt 2000, and to ſupply them with grain, &c. for 18 months, and each colonift is to be exempted from taxes during ten years. One of the avowed objects of this colony, is to encreale the trading intercourſe between the Ruſſian and Chineſe Empires.

"Another veſſel in 24 days from Bourdeaux arrived on the 22d December, 20 paſſengers all Guadaloupe planters. The hope of a general peace was founded on the ſtrongeſt probabilities.

"The gentleman who writes from St. Thomas, is De la Salimiere, diſtinguiſhed by his probity; the ſame who laſt year was the firſt to announce to us the favorable change wrought by Buonaparte."

Arrived here yeſterday, the ſloop Nancy, Huyt, from Charleſton in 6 days. On the 19th January, ſpoke ſchooner Naturaliſt, Smith, 14 days out from Port Republican, bound to Norfolk, and three of the hands ſick with the fever. Captain Smith informed captain Huyt, that Gen. Rigaud's party were affaſſinating the negroes to the number of a hundred a day.

By the Nancy we have received Charleſton papers to the 24th of January, inclusive. They mention the arrival there of the ſhip Grevhound, Pratt, in 38 days from Gibraltar, and the barque Neptune, Dryburgh, in 39 days from Liverpool. Captain Pratt informs that he was in Leghorn at the time that the French took poſſeſſion of that place.—There was no conteſt, the French being too numerous for the Auſtrians to contend with; and the utmoſt order and harmony ſucceeded. At firſt, ſome few individuals, who had been oppreſſed and perſecuted by the Tuſcan government, for their attachment to the French cauſe indicated a revengeful diſpoſition, and threatened ſevere relentment; but they were impriſoned, and a proclamation was immediately iſſued by the commandant, ſetting forth that they had come to protect, not to deſtroy. The only injury ſuffered by the mercantile intereſt, on account of the change of matters, in the place, was the payment of a duty of two per cent. impoſed by the chamber of commerce of the city, by way of compromiſe with the French, for not ſearching ſtrictly for enemy's property. On the payment of this duty, and of one per cent. impoſed by the Tuſcan government under the pretext of convoy duty, neutral veſſels were permitted to depart freely, with their cargoes.

In Leghorn, on the 22d of November, the general opinion was, that the armiſtice between the French and Auſtrians, of the expiration of which notice had been given, would be renewed, in conſequence of a general expectation, that the Emperor of Ruſſia had determined to act again in concert with the Auſtrians and Engliſh. But in Gibraltar, late in December, the laſt accounts from England had induced a belief, that the Emperor of Ruſſia would act rather in concert with the French.

Captain Dryburgh left Liverpool on the 4th Dec. and brought no papers.—He mentions that accounts were publiſhed in England, previous to his departure, of the Emperor of Ruſſia (the King of Pruſſia probably) having entered the Electorate of Hanover with an army of 60,000 men.

NASSAU, (N. P.) Dec. 23.

Arrived, the ſloop Admiral Duncan, from Madeira. Alſo an American ſhip bound from Boſton to Havanna, and a ſloop; both prizes to the privateer Swift.

Dec. 26.—Arrived the ſchooner, Frederica, bound from Barcelona, on the Spaniſh Main, to St. Thomas's, with a cargo of hides, and between three and 4000 dollars on board, prize to his Majeſty's ſhip America, of 64 guns.

We learn from the officers in charge of the Frederica, that prior to the capture of the ſchooner, the America had taken and ſent into Halifax, a very valuable brig, mounting 22 guns, with 200,000 dollars and a quantity of ingots of gold on board, bound for America.

December 30.—We have received information, that capt. Graham, of the revenue brig Admiral Duncan, had a ſevere engagement with an American veſſel of ſuperior force. Capt. Graham is wounded, and three or four of his men killed. We hope to have it in our power to give more authentic particulars of this buſineſs in our next.

Scraps from late London Papers.

It is ſtated as certain, that on the 11th ult. (September) the Ruſſian minister at Berlin, Baron De Krudener, tranſmitted to that court, in the name of the Emperor Paul, a declaration couched in very poſitive language. By the declaration, the king of Pruſſia is invited to favor and ſupport the deſtination of two Ruſſian armies, each of them 80,000 men ſtrong. Theſe two armies have for their object to ſet bounds to the Belligerent Power, and to ſtrengthen ſocial order in Europe.—In order to attain this happy object the direct means of negociation in a formidable attitude are firſt to be tried, and on the failure of them, vigorous meaſures are to be employed againſt thoſe who ſhall dare to raiſe any obſtacles.

The Moniteur (French paper) of the 2d October, has the following paragraph:—"While our enemies under value our reſources, and our return to proſperity is doubted by the impatience of ſome minds, Government occupies itſelf with perſeverance, but without parade, in ameliorating the ſtate of our finances. It poſtpones to other times, the vaſt projects and other bold plans which would not be ſeconded by the confidence of the public. It is neither its deſire nor its duty to be indebted for its ſucceſs to any thing but the influence of order; and order is but the ſlow and progreſſive effect of meaſures combined with wiſdom and purſued with unceaſing perſeverance. It was formerly aſked, what were the objects that occupied the attention of Sulli and Colbert? Their enemies calumniated their ſilence and accuſed the weakneſs of their genius. It was only after ſeveral years that the public was enabled to judge of the meaſures which they had taken, and to perceive how much France was indebted to them for its proſperity and happineſs. Such will be the caſe in our own time. It appears a ſingular phenomenon to reflect upon the aſtoniſhing activity of the preſent government in war, and its wiſe and regular conduct with reſpect to the adminiſtration of public affairs. The attentive obſerver muſt have perceived that a more regular and economical ſyſtem has been introduced in almoſt every branch; that there is every where more energy and vigilance; that more than fifty millions of delegations, which belonged to the 7th have been abſorbed in the 8th year; that the intereſt of money which was at five per cent the month, has already fallen two per cent, and tends every day to a more ſatisfactory depreſſion, and that a progreſſive activity is to be ſeen in the ſtate of commerce and manufactures.—But what weight has all this with ſuperficial minds? Nothing is worthy of their attention which is not aſtoniſhing in its reſults. Without that there is no adminiſtration which can merit their praiſes. If amidſt their principles of order and proſperity they think they diſcern ſome ſhades of irregularity, they lay hold of them with avidity, and would alarm us with the return of paſt evils—Thus for inſtance, becauſe the year 8 has not been ſeparated from the year 9, ſome call out that we are in arrear. But they have thought proper to overlook that in ſeparating the expence of the year 8 from that of the year 9, the reſources of the two had likewiſe been ſeparated, and that all the revenue belonging to theſe years will be referred to meet their expenditure. In the begining of Brumaire conſiderable ſums will be iſſued from the public treaſury to diſcharge the pay and expences of the year 8, and preceding years, and theſe payments will continue regularly every month without encroaching the leaſt upon the funds deſtined for the current expences. Thus what in former years was only a fiction will now be realized. There will be no loan or anticipation on the funds of one year for the expences of another, and the paſt will no longer devour the future."

The laſt Cork Advertiſer informs us that the Iriſh mail-coaches may now travel, as uſual, both by night and day, with perfect ſafety, as their eſcort of dragoons is ordered to be augmented to prevent danger! The editor congratulates his readers on this ſymptom of returning tranquility.

A great ſchiſm has diſcovered itſelf among the Jews at Amſterdam, on account of the ſtrickneſs impoſed upon them by the Rabbies, whoſe authority many of them are diſpoſed to throw off.

The houſe of commons affords at preſent a pregnant ſubject for the inveſtigation of the antiquary, and the obſervations of the curious. The lining having been entirely ſtripped off, the fine Gothic columns of St. Stephen's chapel appear to the eye, with the rich and coſtly decorations beſtowed upon this building by Edward the III. It impreſſes upon the mind an aſtoniſhing idea of the riches and magnificence of that period. The ſtone of the columns is moſt highly painted and gilded, and the colous are ſtill in a great ſtate of preſervation. Artiſts have been buſily employed for ſome weeks making drawings and models of the rich and beautiful workmanſhip of that early period.

The emperor of Ruſſia has publiſhed an Ukaſe, ordering the eſtabliſhment of a colony 10,000 perſons at Siberia, on the confines of China. The colliſts are to conſiſt of diſcharged ſoldiers, and of perſons ſentenced to baniſhment.—The government engages to build houſes for the firſt 2000, and to ſupply them with grain, &c. for 18 months, and each colonift is to be exempted from taxes during ten years. One of the avowed objects of this colony, is to encreale the trading intercourſe between the Ruſſian and Chineſe Empires.

Yonge Street Road.

Messrs. PRINTERS.

PUBLIC spirit, manifested by contributing liberally to undertakings of a common and general nature, lifts the individual, in civilized society, as much above his fellow citizens, as those are superior to the rude and unconnected wanderers of the forest. Man, in his single capacity, in his separate and solitary sphere of being, scarcely surpasses his fellow animals in any qualities, but craft and cruelty.

It is from a combination of powers—a coalition of the faculties and endeavours of the many, that mankind derive the character of their proud pre-eminence in nature. Public institutions and labours form, agrandize and perpetuate a people—the Roman name, even at this day, commands the admiration of the world.

Some people are apt, Messrs. Printers, to conceal their vices under fair disguises of virtue: the timid man endeavours to pass his fear for prudence; the selfish, his avarice for œconomy; yet none are deceived but themselves.—Will, any one ascribe to virtuous motives, the refusal of a mite towards effecting so desirable a purpose as rendering the beginning of Yonge Street passable? No—little will be expected from mediocrity, but something from all.—True œconomy consists in retrenching from the sixpences of selfish gratification, the fund bestowed upon such an object.

In nothing can man resemble the Divinity more than in leberality.—Liberality is not to be measured by the amount of the donation; but by the proportion between the gift and the means of giving. On this principle, the farmer or tradesman, who gives his day or two days labour, may proudly say, I have done as much as any—I have put myself upon a common level with generous minds—my offering has been proportionate to my circumstances, had these been greater, that would have been more ample.

path him to open and friendly intercourse with a country from which he has every thing to hope and nothing to fear. Such a conduct would, in a few years, perhaps in a few months, remove all obstacles, which have hitherto impeded the progress of commerce between the two countries, and would probably have produced through a long train of years the most beneficial consequences. By the want of confidence on both sides, both are deprived of the means of enjoying the highest degree of prosperity and happiness. Both are obliged to maintain the same, or nearly the same establishments for the protection of their commerce, as they would require, if they were in a state of hostility with each other. Both are obliged to keep up the same number of ships of war, to protect their trade in the Mediterranean, and in the Indian seas, as they would require, if they were at war with each other. Both are obliged to maintain the same military establishments, as they would require, if they were at war with each other. matter of the outside. It is an immovable pillar of column of solid rock, fixed on the pinnacle of a high mountain, and very near the verge of it, from which it rises in a regular stature to the height of four hundred feet.—It is small at its base, but it gradually enlarges towards its summit, and from many of its projecting parts issue streams of the purest water, which fall like rain from so many fountains, and from the top a Sugar-loaf height, grows the whole tree, affording sustenance to the fish, indefinable. The upper part of this enormous rock, which is neither flat nor round, but in a kind of oval inclining towards a point at its highest accessible, there is no possibility of knowing the kind of plants which cannot be, it is observed, and with great propriety, by the Chinese, to be of the first nature; curiosities of their country, and is known by the name of Pantchatraug.

There are three tremendous large serpents, supposed to be of the most venomous kind, on board the French schooner in Magdelene, now lying at Plymouth, lately arrived from Senegal; they make their appearance on the ship's deck, to the great annoyance of the people on board, but they immediately retreat to the hold on perceiving any one taking notice of them. They have hitherto proved heimless (probably from no violence having been attempted on them.) but this is not expected to be the case on clearing the cargo from the vessel, when they will be at a loss for theier. They are in the middle about the bigness of a man's arm, about seven feet long, appear extremely agile, and are supposed to have got on board by the cable, while the ship lay at Senegal. One of them crept over a hammock a few days since, in which one of the crew was lying, but without doing him the least injury.

These has been projected to the French government a plan for the improvement of the port of Antwerp, which will be executed as soon as a general peace shall have secured the liberty of the Scheldt. According to the plan this large and commodious harbon which has been blocked up for two hundred years, will be cleared out, so as to admit 100 tons will then be able to enter it with ease, and an extensive commerce will reflore to Antwerp the splendour which that city enjoyed during the fixteenth century.

The amount of the income of Great-Britain, arising from houses, is estimated at eight millions five hundred thousand pounds annually.

In the year 1664, the whole national flock did not exceed seven hundred millions according to the present value of money; since that time, therefore, there has been an average gain of upwards of four millions per annum, a very considerable part of which must have arisen from foreign commerce, for commerce could not be carried on without gain; even the increased value of the land and houses is, to a great measure, owing to the affluence of capitals acquired in trade.

The amount of laborers in agriculture is estimated at fifteen millions per annum.

The capital employed by Great-Britain upon foreign commerce is estimated at seventy five millions; the profits upon which, included those of all persons immediately depending on foreign trade, may be fairly estimated at fifteen per cent.

The profits of miners, colliers and others employed in getting, are estimated at two millions per annum.

The annual profits arising to merchants, tavern and small craft, are estimated at one million.

The annual profits drawn by Great Britain from trade, conducted by certain, is estimated at eleven millions one hundred and fifty thousand pounds.
