WM. JARVIS, ſec'y.

FOR THE ORACLE.

To WILLY.

BARKLY to inform you that I am an American—and that I glory in myſelf in the name, would, I conceive be a ſufficient anſwer to all that you have ſaid; but ſince you have ſolicited it, for your intire and infinit gratification, as an advocate for the Republicans you are entitled to ſome further conſideration. I muſt at the ſame time remark, that the American name hath been ſo dishonored by ſuch as (like you) have no good or ſo be ſhackled by ſo weak an advocate as yourſelf. Were it a bad one, ſuch a pitiful driveller could afford it no affiſtance. You are poſſeſſed of a little knowledge of Law, as you are of modeſty or good ſenſe.—Know then, thou Nizzy, that Sancho cannot himſelf ſo ſtultify to obey the call of a meddling Jackanapes.—I ſhall humbly the compoſition you are to, and point out the grounds on which you have built your diſcourſe (I deny that it is argument.)—You begin by applying to all emigrants, from the United States, what was directed at moſt, to New undertaking individuals: you are miſtaken when you think me an Europeen—you ſmack the the engine of a party—you arrogate the liberty of ſpeaking the ſenſe of the emigrant Americans—you aſk queſtions which have as much for their object, as to wit. If the ſun ſhone when mens eyes were ſhut.—Forſooth, you attempt to be witty upon the New Year's Ode.

You aſk if any uſing a fictitious ſignature be not an acknowledged want of reſpectability on my part. Poor ignoramus! Were you acquainted with Lewen the hiſtory of your own days, you could not have blunded ſo much ignorance with ſo much impertinence in the queſtion. To the foundation on which your rhapſody is conſtructed, I lay down a ply, your premiſes are falſe: I am an American—was emigrant from the United States, I was conſcious of a patriotic independent principle of love to citizenſhip, I know its importance, its dignity in virtue and abilities.

With reſpect to the perſect population of this country, and the manner in which it was obtained, I ſhall by-and-bye, however, too much ſhall ſay, the well known munificence of the British government encourages many to reſort to it, wholly only to theſe to its bounty or protection, are loyal, ſubmiſſive and hope of advantageous change: People of the diſtinction, I entertain fear nor care to offend—the country can ſpare them, and be influenced by their defection. To the bonds of my countrymen be it known, and with a conſcious pride I ſpeak it, they are the moſt numerous, and the moſt uſeful claſs of ſubjects; need to ſo-gratulate us, in that particular, find which the country acquires.—I have the heartfelt pleaſure of being them, prefer in proportion to their induſtry and merit.

When you ſay that my "pretended reaſon for wordily, &c." is a "glaring profanity,"—I cannot charge myſelf with incivility in ſaying that you are a puppy and a liar. As you ſeem anxious to know my real name, a number of my acquaintances in this town will readily communicate it to you, and if you aſk me, what I think you are not—you may, if it is your will, ſuppoſe that I am not the tool of party, and that there is a perſon to be found who will anſwer to all calls upon

SANCHO.

York, 24th March, 1801.

N. B. I am not diſpoſed to comment upon your performance; tho' will you attempt to exercife on the Ode, is a bungled plagerism from the men who is your ſuperior in abilities.

NEW YORK, Feb. 25.

Office of the Daily Advertiser.

Sunday, 1 o'clock P. M.

By a letter received from the city of Washington, it appears that no decision was yet made as to president.

On Wednesday last, the day appointed to count the electoral votes, it appears, that eleven were in favor for mr. Jefferson, 11 for mr. Burr, 6 for mr. Adams, 64 for mr. Pinckney, and 1 for mr. Jay.

The highest constituent polling a quiet vote, the house of representatives immediately proceeded to designate which should be our future president. They voted according to the constitution, by ballot.

On the first trial New York, New-Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, N. Carolina, Georgia, Kentucky, and Tennessee voted for Jefferson; New-Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, Delaware, and South Carolina, for Burr.—Maryland and Vermont, being divided, had no votes.

A majority of the states having necessary to a choice, the house proceeded again to vote, but the issue was the same as before.

Congress have come to a resolution to suspend all other business, and have a permanent session till this important struggle was concluded.

(C.P. LEVERE from WASHINGTON.)

Received yesterday at the office of the Mercantile Advertiser, from our Philadelphia correspondent.

From a supplement of the Philadelphia Gazette.

WASHINGTON CITY, 11.

Half past 3 o'clock, P. M.

According to the rules of proceedings established by the house, they proceeded to the chamber, where Gen. Nicholas, with outstanding the tellers on the part of the house, and mr. Wells on the part of the senate) the votes were counted, and the result was declared by the vice president as follows—

For Thos. Jefferson,	73
Aaron Burr,	73
John Adams,	64
C. C. Pinckney,	60
John Jay,	1

The tellers declared there was some informality in the votes of Georgia, but believing them to be the true votes reported them as such.

The vice-president then, in pursuance of the duty imposed upon him, declared, that Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr, being equal in the number of votes, it remained for the house of representatives to determine the choice.

The two houses then separated, and the house of representatives returned to their chamber, where lots had been previously prepared for the members of the house. A roll of the members of the house, arranged according to states, was then made, upon which it appeared that every member was present, except general Sumpter, who is unwell, and unable to attend. Mr. Nicholson of Maryland, was also unwell, but attended, and had a bed prepared for him in one of the committee rooms, to which place the ballot-box was carried to him by the tellers appointed on the part of the state. The mode of balloting was this: each state had a ballot-box, in which the members belonging to it having previously appointed a teller, put the votes of the state. The tellers on the part of the United States having then counted the votes, duplicates of the result excepting by him into two general ballot-boxes. The tellers being nominated by each state for the purpose of examining the general ballot-boxes, they were divided into two parts, of whom one examined the general ballot-boxes, and the other examined the other. Upon comparing the result, and finding them to agree, the votes were handed to the speaker, who declared them to the house.

The first ballot was,

Eight states for Jefferson,

Six for Burr, and

Two divided.

Which result continues to be the case although they have already balloted seven times. A motion was made about half an hour since to repeat the ballot in one hour, and was agreed to. The balloting is to commence at the expiration of that time. Some of the members have gone to their lodgings to dine, and others are taking refreshments in the committee rooms.

It is not improbable that the balloting will continue for some days yet to come. I cannot learn, from any conversation, what will be the result; but I am inclined to suppose mr. Jefferson will be elected.

Yours &c.

(Then for our correspondent.)

THREE, o'clock, A. M.

Two ballots have been taken since—the same result.—Ballot to be repeated again at four o'clock.

One communication from the city of Washington are to hand on Thursday morning, half after five o'clock. At that time the balloting had been several times postponed for an hour at a time: when the hour expires, and the members are called to proceed again, it is indications to fix some of them running with anxiety from the committee room with their night caps on. Numbers of them are provided with pillows and blankets, and the council would seem to be who are most in strength of constitution, or who is most able to bear fatigue. Many of the members lie down in their places, determined, like the heroes of old, to fall in them, if not to die at their posts.

At the request of the speaker of the house of representatives, the mail from Washington was detained until four o'clock, Thursday morning, to give to the members an opportunity of communicating to their friends advice of the above proceedings.

The balloting which was to take place at four o'clock, made the last effort of the house to come to a decision. It is most probable the result will be similar to the preceding.

Washington, Feb. 12—2 o'clock P. M.

We waited all yesterday in the most anxious expectation of being able to announce to our anxious countrymen the result of the presidential election. But it remains to this moment undecided; and the happiness of five millions of people awfully suspended on the balance!

The house of representatives have balloted upwards of 30 times, and adjourned till to-morrow, 12 o'clock.

From the National Intelligencer.

Feb. 12 quarter past 2 o'clock, A. M. 23 ballots.—Result still the same.

On the first ballot the individual votes were for Jefferson.	Burr.

New Hampshire,	0	4
Massachusetts,	8	11
Vermont,	1	5
Rhode Island,	0	3
Connecticut,	0	7
New York,	6	4
New Jersey,	5	2
Pennsylvania,	8	4
Delaware,	0	3
Maryland,	5	4
Virginia,	15	5
Kentucky,	2	0
N. Carolina,	9	3
S. Carolina,	0	8
Georgia,	4	0
Tennessee,	1	0
	55	49

Mr. Sumpter sick.

Mr. Jones dead.

The individual votes on the succeeding ballots have occasionally fluctuated, without changing the general result.

Eight ballots were taken previously to 4 o'clock P. M. yesterday, all which gave the same result, when the house adjourned for one hour—when being again returned 27 ballots were taken previously to 7 o'clock on this morning, all of which gave the same result.

The house are still in session.

It follows that as yet there is no president.

We stop the press to announce that at 9, A. M. Feb. 12, the house adjourned at 12 o'clock, without producing any other result.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman at Washington, dated Feb. 12.

"The House of Representatives did not break up until 5 this morning—during which time they gave 27 ballots—precisely similar to their first and all votes for Mr. Jefferson—8 for Mr. Burr—Maryland and Vermont divided. They then adjourned the business until 12 o'clock, when after taking two further ballots it was again adjourned until to-morrow 12 o'clock. Thus rests this all important question. What to-morrow will produce God only knows."

Another letter of the same date contains the following:

"The house, after having balloted 33 times, postponed the balloting until 12 o'clock, in order to take some refreshment. When that hour arrived, they balloted 4 times—each producing the same result. In consequence of this apparent determination of both sides to adhere to their men, they have done away the resolution which required them to remain together, and will meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock, in their usual form and for their current business."

Washington, Feb. 13.

At 12 o'clock yesterday the 28th ballot was taken; the result of which corresponded with the preceding ballots; after which further balloting was postponed till Friday 12 o'clock.

On Thursday morning, the speaker stated that persons were in waiting to deliver messages from the president and senate; and he desired a decision of the house whether they should be received. On the suggestion of a member, it was agreed, without formally putting the question, to receive the messages.

At 12 o'clock on Friday, the 29th ballot was taken—result the same.

It was then determined that the next ballot should be taken to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

Saturday morning, Feb. 16.

Congress met yesterday, agreeable to adjournment. Two ballots were taken without any alteration from those of Friday. Some talk is made of accommodation.

The decision of the house of representatives in choice of a president, will be known in a few days. The intrigues of their friends in congress will choose Mr. Burr for president, notwithstanding he has said himself that he ought not to be president; and this was expressed no doubt because the people of the United States intended Mr. Jefferson should be president, and Mr. Burr vice president. The declaration of Mr. Burr is no less treasonable to himself than it is contemptible to the wishes of his republican constituents.

The anglo-federalists will not vote for Mr. Burr, under the impression that he is more pliable than Mr. Jefferson, but to unite to mortify the public will and destroy its efforts in every possible case. We expect there are some of the representatives in congress who join the monarchial party, but are not disposed to throw bold strokes, and to go with them all lengths.

The republican representatives in congress have no other intention to Mr. Burr being president, but that of thwarting the expectations and intentions of the people. His administration would be Mr. Jefferson's be opposition, and to find conformity with the constitution.

NEW YORK, February 26.

It appears by one of the letters from Washington, that the lobby of the chamber of the house of representatives was cleared in consequence of the threats of some violent person who had been stationed there.—This circumstance, connected with the diabolical illumination "that the people of Philadelphia had seized upon the public arms," indicates a design to have defended persons to intimidate the representatives of the nation. If the representatives of the people are thus to be forced into measures, contrary to their judgments and their conficiences, there is an end to the government—an end to liberty to a country where such violence is allowed there can be no security for the property, no safety for the lives of the citizens. These measures, which must be represented by the honest and the good of both parties, (and of fact is the great body of the American people composed) should no longer be tolerated. It is the duty of the civil officers of the national and of the state governments to prevent the repetition of them.

Latest News from India.

Capt. Joseph Ropes, who arrived at this port on Wednesday night last from India, has politely favored us with the following important intelligence: He visited Madras and Sumatra. He left Madras on the 3d of August, previously to which, the expedition under Admiral Raymer, said to have been designed against Manilla or Batavia, has been countermanded, and the troops and stores had been reloaded from the transports, in consequence of very alarming disturbances in the Mysore Country, where an enterprising officer, formerly in the service of Tippoo Sultan, had collected an army, consisting of Seapoys, and had formed a junction with the Pyndarees, and had actually overrun every part of the Peishwa's dominions to the gates of Poonah. The capital of Mysore is near Seringapatam, and the country was part of the dominions which Hyder Ally joined with the Nabob of Arcot. It is said Tippoo has joined Bamboo, and been defeated, and had fled to Cuttack.

Captain Ropes visited at the Cape of Good Hope, in company with the British packet Apollo, and the report of the packet informed him, that he left Madras on the 12th September, and that the officers in the Mysore Country had had their weapons with the troops, with every, in all of which the English had been successful. But that the officers of the two Tippoo Sultans continued to recruit his forces, and was considered as a very formidable enemy.

The disturbances between the English and the Caffres, at the Cape of Good Hope, still continued. Three hundred English troops were out against the Caffres in the back country, when captain Ropes left the Cape.

Jefferson, President.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.

The house balloted at 10 o'clock, the result of which was the same as before. The ballot was repeated at 11 o'clock, when the Speaker declared to the house that Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia had received ten votes, Aaron Burr, of New York, four, and that the votes of two states had been given in blank, and that consequently Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, had been agreeably to the constitution, elected President of the United States for the term of four years, commencing on the fourth day of March next.—Messages were sent to the President of the U. States and to the Senate, to notify them thereof.

A worthy man of good character, and of a fair estate, proposes a lottery in the Boundary Tongue. The country is one against him: all the unprovided incidents which have not affected the rest of us are levelled at his single head. Every one is willing to take out a ticket. Only one number is to be drawn from the wheel, and the unfortunate holder is to gain the man and not a husband, and to partake with him the woe and misfortunes produced by the lottery!

FROM THE
AN AMERICAN EXPOSE.

SHOULD any one enquire, why the atrocities of the circle of revolutions in France? Is there no remedy for the mischievous theories of visionary projectors, but the fight, horrors and sufferings of whole nations? Unquestionable must be that power. One of the most fatal errors of modern republicanism, is the opinion that men may be so well enlightened and instructed in their rights and duties, that they will do as they ought, and consult their best interests from the mere impulse of their reason and conviction. This opinion is fulfilled by the Legislature, who tell us of perfect to be believed that the human mind is in a rapid state of advance towards perfection, and that in time, this improved mind will supersede the necessity of laws and governments. And to counterbalance this march of mind to its "ne plus ultra" they are filling our book stores and libraries with novels, romances, declamations, plays, and pamphlets, grounded with fanaticism and visionary schemes of reform, enough in all conscience to disturb every person of discernment. Wretched fruit! fatal errors!

In truth, the human mind, instead of being expanded and invigorated by modern improvements in science, has been rather infected by the modern rage for novelty, for translations, and fine words and surfaces. The flippant notions over those of four dollars for a few years, extract a few general principles of grammar, geometry and philosophy, without being able to apply them, run over a summary of history without a map, without system, and without application—read a play, and magazine—make a ballad or verses, and prate about with dogmatic air, swaggering about the great light and information of modern ages! "Now will we grow! We have in a land Athens! Who does not hold it contempt the science of the ancients and our fathers?"

Softly, dear gentlemen! Those were not the paths which Newton, and Hailer trod! How would Aristotle, Cicero, Pliny, and Bacon, smile at a modern man of learning, who has read only the latest writers? a mere skeleton, fed on extracts from extracts, the froth of science!

Yet such are the men who now offer their services to invent new systems of government and correct all the evils of society! And unhappily, their opportunities are no ways wider, than as they sooner learn from experience the source of our present evils. In truth the human mind is not in a state of advance. The modern authors compared with the ancients, for instance Hume, Robertson and Gibbon, with Livy and Tacitus, prove that the mind, in these days, has gained nothing in accuracy, but has lost much in vigor and energy.

NEW YORK, February 21.

IMPORTANT.

LAST evening arrived at the Tontine from on board the British Packet Harlequin, capt. Hervey, (having left the Packet below the Narrows) Mr. Hodgson, Mr. Brush, Mr. Coffins, and the capt. with the mail. From one of these gentlemen, the editors of the New York Gazette have received London papers to the 24th of Dec.—12 days later than by former arrivals. From these papers it appears that all prospects of peace have vanished for the present, hostilities having actually commenced between the Austrians and the French, near Hohenlinden, where the French have a battle and fought, in which they were victorious, having taken 60 pieces of cannon, 200 ammunition waggons, and 10,000 prisoners.—The French estimate their loss at 5000 men, killed, wounded and taken. The particulars of, and remarks on, this victory, will be found under the proper head; together with many other articles, of which we have no time to give a summary.

FRANCE.

BATTLE OF HOHENLINDEN.

LIBERTY. EQUALITY.

Moreau, General in Chief, to the Minister at War.

Head Quarters at Alzey, 15th Prairial.

I have the pleasure of giving you an account, by dear General, of an action most glorious for the army of the Lower Rhine, and of the greatest advantage to the republic.

By my dispositions of yesterday, in writing you an account of the battle of the 12th, I announced the concentrating of the army, and of my plans to commence offensive operations.

Yesterday the corps under Gen. Grenier marched between Hohenlinden and Hartopien, while Gen. Grouchy extended his left to the village of Hohenlinden, and the division Richepanse and Delaage to Kindberg.

Expecting to be attacked by the enemy at Hohenlinden, I gave orders to Generals Richepanse and Delaage to advance by St. Christopher upon Matenpoor, and to fall upon the rear of the corps. This movement was executed with the greatest intrepidity and talent.

The enemy commenced the attack upon Hohenlinden at half past 7 in the morning. At the same moment I judged it expedient that the attack should be commenced by General Richepanse.

I ordered Gen. Grenier to commence at the last time, Gen. Ney rushed impetuously into the defiles, and full way to Metzenpoor, formed a junction with Gen. Richepanse. All those who were in the forests, comprising about a league and a half, were killed, taken or dispersed.

The attack of Gen. Ney was well supported by the division of General Grouch, which fell upon the reformed the enemy's grenadiers, who had attempted to flank upon the right. Those attacks were directed by Gens. Grenfeu and Bonnet. The movements by Gens. Richepanse and Drouen met with the greatest obstacles. Obliged to march by roads surrounded with the enemy, Gen. Richepanse, with his 21 battalions of infantry and regiment of chasseurs, four pieces of cannon from the advanced guard, and without regarding that he had left behind him, marched up to the centre of the enemy, not at all discomposed, with only a few troops with him, and united himself with the head of the division, which was conducted with equal intrepidity by the Aide-Com. Radin.

Gen. Villier was dangerously wounded; Gen. Drouen was prevented from supporting Gen. Richepanse.

During this complete rout of the in the centre, a column advancing from Vorlesburg upon Eberburg, obliged Gen. Decaen, to change his position, from the van to the right to stop their progress. He charged and routed them with the greatest disorder.

The battle appeared completely decided by 9 o'clock, but another corps coming from the Lower Inn attempted to penetrate by Burtzlau Le Hohenlinden, with the intention of making a diversion upon the left. The enemy having a number of troops followed to the valley of the Isser, Lieut. Gen. Grenier left his position. The divisions of Le Grand, Bastoul, and the reserve of cavalry, which were sent to sit on the offensive, were now attacked by a number of troops from Ney's and other divisions on the right were sent to support them.

Gens. Legrand and Bastoul, after having repulsed these attacks, charged with the greatest vigour. The enemy, after a number of efforts, were routed with the loss of a great part of their artillery. Gen. Bastoul being wounded, was replaced by Gen. Bonnet.

The was a general battle, as there was not a corps in the French army which was not engaged, and the time with the greatest.

There was much fatigue during the battle. We have taken 80 pieces of cannon, and nearly 10,000 prisoners, a great number of officers, among whom are three Generals. The pursuit continued till night. Our loss consists in 1,000 men killed, wounded and missing. The loss of the enemy is incalculable. All did their duty: I cannot pay any particular eulogies to one more than to another. All are brave, intrepid, and each deserve praise. The officers of the Etat Major particularly distinguished themselves.

The corps of Gen. Lecourbe, which on the 15th had taken possession of Roschenau, was ordered to cover the Inn, and to defend all the passes of the Tyrol. The Chief of the Etat Major will send you a detailed account of the battle of Hohenlinden, which place is well known for the convention which ended in the three fortresses.

The republic ought to know such of the army who have distinguished themselves. The Chief of the Staff will also inform you of the different detachments of the enemy, to which at present we can pay no attention. Our army is elated with its success, and hopes that it will contribute to accelerate a peace.

(Signed) MOREAU.

ARMY OF ITALY.

PROCLAMATION of Gen. BRUNE.

Head Quarters at Milan, Nov. 17.

"It was in vain that the French shewed themselves generous after victory. There are men who possess influence in the court of Vienna who still wish for war. The cession of fortresses and diplomatic compliance were merely evasive, and the only object was to gain time. We must then again have recourse to arms, and put an end to this long contest, which has defeated the Continental Government has given the signal.—Soldiers of liberty and glory, the fame of glory, the scene of grand actions is opened to you.

"Never did a campaign commence under more happy auspices. Your situation with respect to your country pay, and that which was in arrears is ameliorated, and the number of sick have diminished. But why do I enter into these details? It is of glory that one ought to speak for Frenchmen on the eve of a battle. The enemy's troops only serve for interest. It is the fate of a slavish people; but we are all the children of our country, and glory belongs to us.

"Vive la Republique."

ENGLAND.

LONDON, Dec. 8.

This morning arrived the three Hamburgh mails which were due. The intelligence which they bring is highly important.

We are at length in possession of the protest advanced by the Emperor Paul for the embargo laid upon the British ships in the Russian ports.—It is indeed one of the most singular reasons ever offered by one power for an act of unprovoked aggression on the subjects & property of another. The Court Gazette of Petersburg states, that in consequence of an agreement entered into on the 29th Dec. 1798, the island of Malta, taken from the French, was to be delivered to the Order of St. John of Jerusalem, and that the embargo should be continued until the execution of the convention.—His Imperial Majesty insists upon the surrender of Malta; himself as Grand Master of the Order, and expresses a firm determination to maintain his right to the island in that capacity. It would be no very difficult task to have the grounds of this claim, as the Emperor Paul has not many points in common by elected Grand Master of the Order of Malta, but who could not have been selected, had he even come forward as a candidate for the office, before it was the solemnly and repeatedly acceding to the rules of the Order, that the Grand Master should have been one of the Knights for a considerable number of years, that he should profess the Roman Catholic religion, execute perpetual hostilities against the Turks, and live in a state of celibacy and chastity. To all these necessary requests Paul is totally disqualified from being admitted into the monastic and noble families of the Order of Malta, and the right which he sets up, and prosecutes his resolution to maintain, is a flagrantly wrong, and gross breach of the regulation of the institution whose self elected chief he is, and of whose privileges he professes himself the champion. The motive advanced by his Imperial Majesty should therefore be treated as a mockery, too idle and contemptible to be credited, and the real cause of the seizure of our shipping must be traced to the views of the armed neutrality of the North. Upon this head our private correspondence furnishes much important intelligence; and it is stated with considerable confidence, that an armed confederacy between Russia, Prussia and Denmark was actually signed at Petersburgh before the 15th of last month. It was understood that the King of Prussia would superintend the operations of the confederacy by land, and the proceedings by sea would be entrusted to the disposition of the three other powers. The most active preparations are making in the Russian dock yards to fit out a formidable fleet, destined to cruize in the Baltic, in the spring season.

December 10.

Our readers will find in our publication of this day some additional extracts from our Hamburgh private correspondence, which are not destitute of interest.

Orders have certainly been dispatched to Lord Keith to watch, with the most vigilance, the proceedings of the Russian fleet in the Mediterranean; and we understand that instructions have also been sent to him to aid the Turks in repelling any acts of hostility which may be attempted against the Porte by the Russian squadrons and troops, either in the Mediterranean or the Dardanelles.

The information received from the army under the command of Gen. Augereau, is unquestionable; and we learn that, after driving the Mentz troops from Aschaffenburgh, the French pursued them to Wurtzburgh, of which they took possession, and immediately invested the citadel.

Augereau has determined to penetrate into the interior of Franconia, from which he will be enabled to threaten the frontiers of Bohemia.

In Italy, Gen. Brune is prepared to open the campaign, and his troops have already commenced their movements. The last accounts from that quarter state, that hostilities were to be resumed on the 2nd of last month.

Notwithstanding every appearance of the renewal of hostilities, the public funds have gradually risen to the 5th inst. The Three Consolide was at 51 francs, 40 cents, on the preceding day.

This morning arrived the Hamburgh packet, with the mail from Yarmouth.

The Emperor and his Ministers at the 25th ult. were to be invisible, and it was reported that the Archduke Charles, at the head of his army, should be at the gates of Munich, or very near it, on the 1st inst. Intelligence that the Imperial Majesty had declined joining the army, and had transferred the command to the Archduke Charles, who had arrived at Vienna.

Governors will find in the following extracts from our private correspondence several interesting articles, not hitherto given to the Travellers.

PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE.

"Hamburgh, Dec. 8.

"Most respectable private accounts from Vienna and Petersburgh positively state, that the answer given by Buonaparte to count Cobenzel's proposal relative to the evacuation of Tolleney, and the prolongation of the works of the three fortified fortresses, was "That such demands could not be admitted as points of negociation, before a final definitive arrangement of the bills of pacification should have been settled.

"Zurich, Nov. 16.

"Dispatches, which have been received from Buonaparte's head quarters, give the most flattering accounts of the health of the Emperor Paul. It is even confidently reported that our ambassador will return into Russia under the title of envoy extraordinary, under the title of ambassador.

"The misery at present prevailing from the Value represent the political state of the country as truly affording. The whole of the capital is again in private hands. The president of the Directory is said to have left Paris for Rouen, but his destination were different, and that he was to go to Belgium, which remained for him was to serve a true office."

"Ratisbon, 4 Dec. 5.

"The last post from Petersburgh, which was anxiously expected, is not yet arrived, but by several ships which arrived at Lubeck from the Baltic, we have certain intelligence, that not only all the property of the subjects of Great Britain in Russia, but those put under sequestration, but that seals have even been put on every were-house (supposed to contain British goods and property. The owners are obliged to declare in an inventory the different sorts of their were-houses contained, under pain of confiscation, and being sent to Siberia. They must affix to their property their own, and give up the names and places of residence of the persons of whom they hold any in trust.

"All debts due to British subjects will, it is said, likewise be attached.

"The expected continuance of the war, and the gloomy prospect of affairs in the North, continue to depress more and more the course of exchange upon London, to that a guinea scarce fetches sixteen thalers."

"Considerable failures are expected to take place at Hamburgh and Lubeck, if the bills from England for money due in Russia, should return protested to those places.

"By respectable private letters from Vienna, of the 26th ult. the emperor is said to have changed his resolution of going to the army in Germany, till the arrival of an Austrian courier with dispatches of a decisive nature from Paris.

"All the government papers at Vienna had taken a warlike tone. On the 23d they were in terms of the 26th extolling the Nile of 80 per cent. fall on stocks, and that they were certainly on the eve of the commencement of hostilities. Buonaparte, which was expected to have declared to have declared the emperor and to go to the army."

Wednesday Morn.

"All the advices we obtain from the Russian frontiers, as well as the report of the few travellers that are now out of that empire, plainly shew that a misunderstanding between the courts of Petersburgh and London is pre-determined on by the former. Besides the preparations made in the Russian harbours, two armies, of 80,000 men each, are collected on the frontiers, a third consisting of 40,000 men, and a fourth, with a park of 80 pieces of artillery, was stationed near Cronstadt; the latter had orders to come into pay to hold themselves in readiness to embark, but they have since been put in cantonments.

"All foreigners, especially the English, are narrowly watched, both in their conduct and conversation by spies, tools of the court, who inform, not only by public pieces, but also private letters.

"The prohibition of exporting corn has been renewed by an edict of the 23d ult. with the following amendment:—Every exporter, who transgresses a second time, is to suffer besides the confiscation of the corn, an imposition of 500 rix dollars, or a fortress. His accomplices are to suffer the same punishment. Engrossers, attempting to prevent corn to export it, and pay the value in money, or else their persons and effects are to be seized."

"The epidemic difficulty among the cattle has spread from Prussia to Frankfort, on the Oder, and the frontiers of Saxony."

"Copenhagen, Nov. 29.

"Our frigate the Freya, after being repaired in England, has been directly ordered to the Mediterranean. Her captain, who escaped the English frigates, received as a present a gold chain from the king, which was sent him with a flattering letter from our prince royal."

LONDON.

Dec. 12.—A report prevailed pretty generally last evening, and among the best informed circles, that America had chosen a very hostile disposition towards this country, and was likely to support the claims of the northern powers. This has been expected for some time past—but as it has not been traced to any recent intelligence from that quarter, it is therefore probably a speculation on the aboundancy of jealousies and the French party.

Advices have been received at the admiralty, but not officially, of the capture of two French frigates by the Belleisenne ship of war, and the sailward bound China ships.

UNION.

On the 1st of January, the flags and banners of the United Kingdom are to be hoisted, and displayed on all the navy, jetty's forts and castles within the United Kingdoms and the island of Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, Sark and Man; and also on board all his majesty's ships of war then lying in any of the ports or harbours of the said United Kingdoms, or on the high seas.

No less than 3,000 young men have already left the country for France, which is about one half of the whole that were in it.

Buonaparte was to Paris on the 5th, and the reception of the army was gaily described. The emperor has just left Vienna, in order to repair to the army on the Inn.

The Austrian cavalry has signalized on the borders of Bavaria, by an affair of arms at that place, the particulars of the manner in which the French made the passage of the river are not known, but it is supposed that a considerable part of his troops still continued on the left bank to occupy Passau.

Accounts from Vienna of the 28th ult. state, that the emperor was to set out soon that night on the 29th, on his way to the head quarters of the grand army. General Moreau reached Munich on the 25th Nov. and after Bagging there a few hours proceeded on his journey to the French head quarters. Accounts from Munich, dated the 29th, state, that the archduke Charles had arrived at Schwandorf on the 28th, on his way to the head quarters, where he is to take the chief command of operations with the combined forces.

Some infinite struggles appear to have been made on the part of the Austrians to effect a further prolongation of the armistice; but no effect took place, on the 24th, between the Austrian troops stationed at Hohenlinden, and the advanced posts of several Austrian corps, in which the latter were repulsed. The engagement lasted nearly the whole of the day, and we have seen our private correspondence, that several hundred men were killed on both sides. It was thought that the hostilities would be compelled to recommence Hostilities, as the enemy was preparing to renew the attack to great force. The Hungarian levies have been ordered to march into Germany, and it was reported that hostilities had been recommenced in Italy, on the 25th of last month to Forte.

Letters from Constantinople of the 25th October, state, that the differences between the Porte and Russia, which seemed to be the most insurmountable, were at length adjusted, and that the admiral Uschakow had sailed with his squadron and transports for the Black Sea; but had been forced back by contrary winds. An armistice is said to have been concluded between general Mansourou and the grand Vizier.

Pashwan Oglou, the Turkish rebel, it appears, occupies the whole of Bulgaria and part of Servia, intercepting the communication between Belgrade and Constantinople. He publishes also the upper part of Bulgaria, and pushes his patrolling parties to Adrianople, where the whole, called the Rumelian Janissaries are guilty of greater excesses than ever, since they were informed that the porte had given orders to attack Pashwan Oglou.

December 13.

THE morning we received Paris papers to the 14th inst.

The Moniteur of the 9th contains a report of Marshal Augereau, of the victory obtained on the 2d inst. at Hohenlinden. It appears, however, that another battle had been fought the preceding day, in which it is evident, from the addition of new names in the list of the Austrians who were killed, that the Austrians were successful. The battle was not only confined to the necessity of concentrating his army in order to enable him to make head against the Austrians; but that the latter, after

...ntered the attack on his flank, and the general point of distance, which was estimated to very few miles, in the engagement. The battle of Eylau ... will no doubt produce very important consequences, and will, in all probability, check the ... projects of ambition in the present political system of the cabinet of Vienna.

The Parisians ... were busily employed in ... have visited, on board of which a Russian ambassador, sent by Count Colentcoff from Louisville, were dispatches for the Imperial ambassador here, Count Soltikoff, ... The dispatches were received at a late hour ... night by his excellency, and immediately communicated to ministers. A cabinet council was summoned to meet at one o'clock this day, at lord Grenville's office, to take into consideration the intelligence which they contained.

We are enabled to state, upon the authority of private letters, brought by the Edinburgh mail of yesterday, which we have every reason to credit, that the debt ... been given by his Britannic majesty for the immediate evacuation of Cadiz ... by his troops. It is very ... that a detachment of them had already marched from that port.

The King of Sweden left Stockholm on the 29th of last month for Petersburg. He was accompanied ... by Gen. Tolf, Vice Admiral Cronstedt, and a numerous suite. The object of this visit to the Emperor Paul, is said to ... relate to the measures which are to be pursued by the powers engaged in the armed neutrality.

In addition to the defensive and vigorous acts of aggression enforced by Paul against the trade of this country, we learn, that all debts due to British subjects are to be attached.

The report that all Russian vessels were to be provided with passports, is confirmed by the following letter from Copenhagen:—

"We have received the confirmation of the news, that all vessels sailing from the ports of the Russian Empire are to be furnished with a passport, in which it is declared that the visiting of any Russian ship shall be considered as a declaration of war."

The outward bound Lisbon and Mediterranean convoys were forced back to Falmouth last Wednesday by contrary winds.

This morning arrived a mail from Lisbon, brought to Falmouth by the Prince Adolphus packet, in 13 days.—Private letters brought by it notice the activity which is continued by the Government of Portugal, in providing for the defence of that kingdom against invasion.

We are sorry to find that the Batavian government has been forced, by the clamours of the people, to shut the ports of Holland against the exportation of grain. Several vessels are arrived in the river, which left their moorings in the Texel on Friday se'nnight. The masters bring advice, that all vessels which had passed the outer gate of both the canals, were allowed to proceed, but all vessels loading or loaded, and lying in channels, were stopped; and it was ... that the prohibition would be ... in.

BERLIN, (Prussia) Nov. 22.

The Emperor of Russia has sent an official note to all foreign ministers at Petersburgh, of which the following is the substance:—That on mounting the throne, he found his states involved in a war provoked by a great nation, which had fallen into delusion; that ... considering the conduct to ... measures of precaution, this ... was induced ... to join it; that he did not at that time think it necessary to adopt the system of an armed neutrality on the ... for the protection of commerce, not doubting but that the Secretary of his allies, and their reciprocal interests, would be sufficient to secure the flag of the Northern Powers from insult. LONDON, January 3.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Wednesday, Dec. 31.

ABOUT half past three o'clock his Majesty came down to the House in his usual state and in his usual robes, being preceded by the Lords with the mace, sword, &c. the Lords having taken their seats, and then put a period to the session, by delivering the following most gracious speech from the throne:

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I cannot [illegible] without returning to you my particular acknowledgments for the diligence, fidelity and [illegible] with which you have applied yourselves to the interesting objects which, at the commencement of the session, I most especially recommended to your attention.

"It has been my warmest wish that nothing [illegible] might occasion, or tend to relieve the pressure occasioned by the present dearth of provisions, and to induce a sufficient supply, till the produce of the next harvest can be brought into use.

"The diligence with which your enquiries have been conducted, has afforded you the best means of ascertaining the true circumstances of our present situation; and the extensive measures which you have wisely adopted to counteract for diminishing the consumption of grain, and procuring an increased supply, will, I doubt not, be found productive of the most salutary effects.

"Much, however, will depend on the disposition which will, I am confident, be manifested by all those who have the means of carrying into execution my paternal recommendation and injunction, [illegible] at present, for the adoption of all practicable economy in the use of all those articles which are necessary to the sustenance of the poorer classes of my subjects.

"The time fixed for the commencement of the Union of Great Britain and Ireland, will necessarily remove your proceedings on this important subject; but I am persuaded the consideration of it will be resumed with the same zeal and temper on the first meeting of the parliament of the united kingdom.

"The early period which I have appointed for that meeting, will afford a speedy opportunity of completing whatever you may have necessarily left unfinished, and of considering what measure may tend further to alleviate the pressure on my people, or to prevent the danger of its occurring.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"I thank you for the readiness with which you have granted the supplies necessary under the present circumstances for the public service.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"The protection of the property of my subjects in the seas of Europe, contrary to the most solemn treaties, and the independence of British letters in that country, have excited in me feelings, to which you and all my faithful subjects will, I am sure, participate.

"I have, however, taken such steps on this occasion, independently, I trust, of any combination, the honor and independence of the British empire, and those maritime rights and interests on which both our prosperity and our security must always essentially depend, I entertain no doubt, either of the success of those measures which, in such an event, I shall be enabled to exert, or of the determination of my parliament and my people, to afford me a support proportioned to the importance of the interests and of the rights to maintain.

Then the Lord Chancellor by his Majesty's command, said,

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"It is his Majesty's command, that the proclamation declaring his Majesty's most gracious intention that the members of parliament composing this parliament should be the members of parliament of the united kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland, on the part of Great Britain, and that the first parliament should be assembled on the 22d day of January next, be delivered in full parliament, and now read, which closes the present session.

Defence of Boonaparte's life.

A French paper says the life of the First Consul has been, it seems, again providentially saved. As he was going to the Opera, on the night of 9 o'clock in the evening, escorted as usual, by his picquet of cavalry, when he got into the Rue St. Nicaise, a small cart, with a lame little horse in it, stopped the way—the coachman, tho' driving very fast, was lucky enough not to touch it; a few minutes after, however, a dreadful explosion broke all the windows of the consular carriage, wounded one of the soldier's horses, broke all the windows in the neighbourhood, killed three or men, 8 men and a child; the other of wounded when the papers left Paris, not known to be given; fifteen or sixteen houses were very much damaged by the explosion.

It seems, as the Paris Journals state, the cart contained a kind of infernal machine. One of the cart wheels was thrown over a house, and fell in the yard of the Comte Capbacases Buonaparte, however, not dismayed, went to the Opera, and heard out the whole.

Government it appears, was long apprised of the probability that such an attempt would be made. Several people are taken up on suspicion of being concerned in this plot against the life of the First Consul.

The infernal machine, as the French term it, is a kind of barrel, supposed to be filled with powder, ball, nails, &c. One of the accomplices says, that in each barrel there were six or seven pounds of powder; to the barrel is fixed a brimstone without a lock.

On Buonaparte's return from the opera, he found all the ministers in his apartment, as well the counsellors of state, the generals then in Paris, &c. who came to congratulate him on his happy escape.

London, Jan. 10.—We yesterday received Paris journals to the 5th inclusive. The Moniteur of the 14th and 15th, the number being contradicted, contains official copies of Gen. Delaitre's dispatches, announcing the success of the army of the Rhine, and of the convention by which it was followed. Gen. Delaitre states as indispensable for the conclusion of the armistice, the publication of Gen. Bellegarde detaching from the army in Italy, a body of troops to join those in the Tyrol, and falling on the rear, intercepting the communications with France. They had not heard of the commencement of hostilities in Italy, and it seems to be inferred that Brune was rather tardy.

The conditions of the armistice, however, are to favourable to the enemy, require no other motive, than the advantages they offer. The French having obtained entire possession of the Tyrol, having united their armies of Germany and Italy by a complete line of posts, and being in possession of every strong place behind them, would be enabled to renew the war with almost a certainty of success. Respecting the permanent fortresses which the French have got into their hands, provision has been made that they shall be restored in their present state, if hostilities are not renewed; but if peace does not follow, it seems they will be left in the power of the enemy to destroy them if they think proper. The debouches of Feltrinemarg, Nadesa, and other fortifications of this description are left at the disposal of the French.

It appears by a dispatch from General Brune, dated the 25th of Dec. that the campaign had at last been seriously opened in Italy.—He has not waited to turn the line of the Mincio but attacked it in front.

On the 25th the French made a vigorous attack upon the Austrian positions on the Mincio, and with success. The passage, after a desperate engagement, was carried at Monzambano, and Molino. These places are between the Lake di Garda and Mantua, lying nearer to the former. On the 26th, at 9 in the morning, the head quarters were at Valegio, on the left bank. The army is traced in the official communication to the Legislative body, to blockade Mantua. The account given by Brune of the battle, however, is very short, and not very explicit. It is evident that much more must have been obtained on both sides. A great number of superior officers are stated to have been wounded on the side of the French. They certainly gained their object; and had the war continued, the army of the Rhine would have experienced the benefit of the diversion. Upon Bruno's dispatch it appears that he intended to renew the battle next day.—He could not by that time have received an account of the armistice. Indeed he is mentioned by the Ist (as well as Auxerre by Ponsonne), is left as nearly to negociate a separate peace, and if he advantages are as decisive as he states he will not fail to exact considerable sacrifices from the Austrians in Italy.

The Chief Consul has announced all these favourable to the legislative bodies with the utmost eclat, and the latter have willingly voted, that the four principal armies have deserved well of their country. Peace on the Continent, is considered in certain; indeed the Chief Consul states that Count Colloredo has officially announced on the 21st of December, that he was empowered to treat for a separate peace; and near 200 the conferences were to open. The points of detail will not be difficult to adjust, since the basis of treaty is agreed upon, and empowering the execution that must already have taken place. As we conjectured, the terms of peace will not be more severe than they were formerly offered. The Chief Consul states the principles on which he acts, in the following words:

"The left bank of the Rhine shall be the boundary of the French Republic. She makes no pretensions to the right bank. The interest of Europe does not permit the Emperor to pass the bridge. The independence of the Helvetic and Batavian Republics shall be insured and guaranteed. Our victories add nothing to the pretensions of the French people. Austria ought not to expect from her defeats what she would not have obtained from her victories.

"Such are the invariable intentions of the Government. The welfare of France shall be to restore calm to Germany and Italy; her glory to deliver the Continent from the vampires and nefarious genius of England."

It is deserving of remark, that while the Batavian and Helvetic republics are mentioned as to be recognised, not a word is said of the Cisalpine republic. Has Buonaparte conceived another plan for the settlement of that country, and of Italy at large? It is stated generally, that tranquillity will be restored to Italy. Have Prussia and Russia prevailed upon him to renounce the project of making republicans of the Italians? The circumstance may give rise to many conjectures; at present we are at a loss what opinion to form; but we are disposed to believe, that the ingratitude to Italy is calculated to avoid giving any ground of offence to those powers which the Chief Consul finds it prudent to conciliate, and that nothing final is yet decided, respecting these fine countries, the slave of incessant war, and the prey of alternate conquerors.

In the official message there are to be found several severe insinuations against the influence of this country on the Continent. The Tribunate and Legislative Body likewise re-echo those reproaches. It seems evident therefore, from the temper of the French Government, that Ministers, who have opposed negociation in every shape, who lately rejected absolutely the offer of a separate negociation, must now submit to the ignominy of making that proposal, to which so lately they had refused to listen. That the Emperor will conclude a separate treaty, in a very short time, cannot now be doubted.

The French funds have risen very much. They were on the 2d 48 3-4.

London, Jan. 13. All surmise as to the northern league is now at rest. The question is completely decided, and in consequence the following proclamation has been published:

At the Court at Saint James's, Jan. 12, Present—The King's most excellent Majesty in Council.

Whereas his Majesty has received advice that a large number of vessels belonging to his Majesty's subjects have been and are detained in the ports of Russia, and that the British Indian navigating the same have been and now are detained as prisoners in different parts of Russia; and also, that, during the continuance of these proceedings, a confederacy, of a hostile nature, against the just rights and interest of his Majesty and his dominions, has been entered into with the Courts of St. Petersburgh by the Courts of Denmark and Sweden, respectively—his Majesty, with the advice of his Privy Council, is thereupon pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, that no ships or vessels belonging to any of his Majesty's subjects be permitted to enter and clear out for any of the ports of Russia, Denmark or Sweden, until further order; and his Majesty is further pleased to order, that a general embargo do stop detained of all Russian, Danish and Swedish ships and vessels whatsoever, now within or which hereafter shall come into any of the ports harbours, or roads, within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, together with all persons and effects on board the said ships. And it is also ordered that the utmost care be taken for the preservation of all and every part of the cargoes on board any of the said ships and vessels, so that no damage or embezzlement whatever be sustained.

And the right honorable the lords commissioners of his Majesty's treasury, and the lords commissioners of the admiralty, and the lords warden of the Cinque Ports, are to give the necessary directions herein as to them may respectively appertain.

W. FAWKENER.

On the 28th ult. General Moreau dined with the Archduke Charles at Crems, where Counts Lehrbach, Saurau, and Colloredo were present.

The Dutch Government has prohibited under very severe penalties, the importation of tea from England. This prohibition was at first but temporary; it is now ordered to continue until six months after the conclusion of a general peace.

January 19. Every thing now seems to announce the approach of a bloody naval campaign. The Northern Powers must have made up their minds to hazard all the consequences of a naval warfare before signing the league. The part that Prussia may take is not yet known; but we would not be surprised if, following the same policy that seems to have actuated the Court of Berlin for some years, the Prussian Monarch should endeavour to remain neutral.—If the threats of his neighbours will allow him.

A Paris paper of the 12th November, contains the following article:—"It is seriously said at Manheim, that Poland is likely to be established, and that the three powers interested in this business, having agreed upon the principal question, are only prevented from performing this act of justice themselves, because they are having yet determined what form of government shall be given to it.

London, Jan. 17. This morning received the Dover packet, and Colonel ——, with several gallopers, arrived last night from Vienna, with dispatches for Government. Reports have been circulated that Dubat John has defeated the French, and taken many, some say 4000 prisoners, besides several pieces of cannon.

This morning Government received dispatches from Col. Crauford, containing an account of the action at Hohenlinden on the 3d inst. The messenger arrived in the Dover packet from Calais, which came in without any mail. We are happy to learn that the dispatches give a more favourable account of the action than the French details taught us to expect.

The French may have the advantage upon the whole, but we have no doubt that it will be found, when the Austrian details shall be published, that in some part of the line our ally had the superiority, and took from the enemy a number of cannon, and several thousand prisoners—As Governments will probably consolidate the accounts they have received, we forbear now to give the various reports that have been put in circulation in consequence of the arrival of these dispatches. Sun.

Three o'clock. The messenger whose arrival we have mentioned, brings, we understand, an account of an advantage gained by the Austrians on the 4th inst. in consequence of which they occupied the Iser, and pushed themselves on Munich. Sun.

Half past one o'clock. We have just heard a report, that the messenger whose arrival from Cuxhaven we have announced in a preceding column, brought an account of a subsequent battle on the 5th, in which the victory was on the side of the Austrians, who succeeded in taking Munich. At the late hour at which we heard this rumour, it was impossible for us to ascertain upon what grounds it rests, or whether it is entitled to any credit.—We subjoin however, the messenger has only brought the Austrian account of the battle of the 3d.

[Courier.

Three o'clock. We again stop the press to say, we learn, a letter has been received at the secretary of state's office, dated the 8th, asserting that the French are flying in all directions, in consequence of their defeat on the 4th and 5th. [Ib.

Lucien Buonaparte has certainly been sent to Madrid in disgrace, and his apparent mission is merely to veil his exile.—By private letters from Paris, he is believed in a most corrupt and profligate manner; made an attempt upon his sister, Madam Murat, which produced a duel between him and Gen. Murat; and he also demanded sums of money for his own private pocket from the merchants, for permission to export corn. Though the newspapers dared not to publish these and such facts, they were well circulated in Paris; and Lucien was held in the utmost abhorrence which his luxurious and splendid style of living tended greatly to increase.

Head quarters, Haag, 24 Dec. 1800.

My Lord,

I have the honor to send your lordship the enclosed copy of a report I have this day received from his serene highness the Prince of Conde, containing an account of the attack which the enemy made yesterday on a part of his serene highness's corps, commanded by the duke of Enghien in front of Rastadt.

I have the honor to be, &c.

WILLIAM WICKHAM.

The Rt. hon. lord Grenville, &c. &c. &c.

Report of the Prince of Condé, dated Dec. 24, 1800.

Our advanced posts on the left bank of the Iser were attacked this day; their right had been defeated much earlier, and had been obliged to march towards the Iser, which occasioned extremely difficult to have their posts, from the impossibility of laying down for the French arrived they followed on that quarter.

At all events this country will be very easy for to manœuvre with, and notwithstanding our never abandoning all the qualities of the soldiers will not be more than sufficient to defend their cantonments.

January 20.

On Friday the Magnet frigate arrived at Torbay, with dispatches for Rear Admiral Sir Henry Harvey, commanding the fleet off Brest, stating that the canonier, Revel, mounting fifty two guns, were completely ready for sea. On Thursday the remainder of the line made a movement towards the west, with an intention to put to sea, but one fleet appearing, the enemy put into a bay close to Brest. All accounts from France agree that considerable efforts are making to augment the navy for service, and every exertion in the means of the republic will be used. It does not appear probable, however, that the enemy will yet come out to venture in an engagement. They will keep our squadrons on the alert, and perhaps endeavour to send out detached parties on particular expeditions. As long as the state of the continent is such, the French will discover the mode of attack they propose to employ against this country.

The letters from the outports mention that several ships of war have sailed with orders to take and bring in such Danish and Swedish vessels as they met with. No letters of marque, however, have yet been issued, though a great number of applications have been made. Perhaps ministers may entertain the hope that the embargo which they have laid upon the ships of the Northern Powers may bring them to views of peace—but surely Denmark and Sweden, in entering into the league of armed confederacy, must have been aware that this country had the means of attacking their commerce.

We understand, however, that ministers are meditating the acquisition of great indemnities for the expence of the new war, in the capture of the little possessions of the Danes in the West-Indies. General Maitland, it is said, is to be sent out with a military force to perform this undertaking.

Should hostilities actually take place between us and the three Northern powers, our trade with Hamburgh will be cut off, although the communication with Cuxhaven may remain. If batteries be erected by the Danes along the side of the Elbe, it will be impossible for our vessels to navigate that river.

Government it is said is taking measures for the establishment of four packet boats at Gravesend, two of which are intended to ply between that place and Calais, and two are intended for Holland. They are all to be under a neutral flag.

We have heard it frequently asserted, that America, whether Adams or Jefferson succeeded to the Presidentship, will concur with the other powers of Europe in asserting the principles of Europe agrees to take a more active part than she has done in naval affairs in future wars; with this view all the powers have been called to, and the hands as they arrive at the different ports, are marched to Brest to man the navy.

The part that America may take will be of much importance. It was hoped, that the mission of Mr. Ellsworth, which terminated so favourably for the United States, would have taken place, before the possibility of laying down for the French arrived they followed on that quarter.

At all events this country will be very easy for to manœuvre with, and notwithstanding our never abandoning all the qualities of the soldiers will not be more than sufficient to defend their cantonments.

Though the accession of America to a league now strengthened to be hostile, might be attended with much inconvenience to England, the people of the United States could not be without a thousand mutual inducements might it lead deprive us of a part of that supply of provisions which the circles requires, and has now taken private market for cheap off- ry. Bulletin of the Official Journal of Vienna, Paris, (France) Feb. 9.

Government this evening received very important dispatches from the army of the Rhine. The time at which they arrived, and their ... renders it impossible for us to send off the number of this day to the departments: our these dispatches are of so interesting a nature that we think it our duty to give a short notice of them to such of our subscribers as may reside at Paris, that they may participate in the happy intelligence as early as possible. It is as follows:

"The General of Div. ... Desolle, chief of the staff of the army of the Rhine, in a letter addressed to the Minister at war dated the 25, head quarters at Steyer, announces that gen. Lecourbe had made ... five hundred prisoners, and that General Richepanse had entered Steyer, where the enemy abandoned 17 pieces of cannon, and nearly four thousand prisoners, &c.

"We have every where found immense magazines; the loss of the enemy in ammunition and baggage is prodigious. At Linz we found 10,000 bbls. of wheat and 2,000 sacks of oats. We are marching against Brinck, and everything announces that the Austrians are going to rally themselves on the Traisen and perhaps under the walls of Vienna.

"In a second letter of the 26th ult. dated also from Steyer, General Desolles informs the minister at war, that the Archduke Charles had proposed to general Moreau an Armistice, announcing to him that the emperor was to send [illegible] courier to Count Cobenzel with orders to sign a peace.

"The Character of the Archduke Charles and his well known good faith were fair pledges of the emperor's desire to terminate the war. He must be soon forced to this measure by the deplorable state of his army, which having lost in 20 days 70 leagues of ground, 25,000 killed or wounded, 130 pieces of cannon, and immense magazines, was no longer able to keep our army from conquering all Austria, and dictating laws to the emperor himself, even in his capital.

"The commander in chief, in accepting the armistice, thought, that to stop which the most brilliant victories was contributing to that character of moderation by which the chief consul has made himself known to all Europe.

"The armistice was signed at Steyer, Dec. 25, it contains 12 articles, the principal of which are of such a nature, that they will enable us, even if it should be broken, to recommence the war with great advantages, and certainly with great security.

"The enemy, as a guarantee of the armistice, give up to the French army the forts of Kufstein, Scharnitz and other permanent points of fortification in the Tyrol, the defiles of Fitzlermunz, and Naudorf, and other fortified places in the country of the Tyrol; and in the last place the forts of Wurtzburgh, Francontz, and Braunau in the circle of Bavaria."

purpose of demanding a suspension of arms for 48 hours, for at the same time dispatches, the prince de Lichtenstein, in a courier to Vienna, for the purpose of representing to the Emperor the urgency of putting peace. Mr. Wickham was present, and immediately set out for Vivour the interests of Britain. Prince Charles being made acquainted with his intention, ordered Prince de Lichtenstein to continue, either by bribery or doing something to the postillions, or to the horses, to retard the journey of Mr. Wickham. Prince de Lichtenstein executed his commands completely. The carriage, the parcels of the courier to be cut, and the horses to be let loose as soon as the courier departed. He would have the postillions to be kept out of the way; and by that means retarded Vienna eleven hours before the British agent, who on his arrival found the business decided by Austria. Infty.

The day before yesterday an account was received by the Telegraph that the courier of the Prince was five days journey from Vienna; that the army of Italy has gained a great victory, and pushed the Austrians that an armistice had been concluded; and that Austria was treating for a separate peace from England. The first fact was by the first conveyance order-

AUGSBURG, Dec. 28.

The battle which took place in its neighbourhood, between the Generals [illegible] and Kray, on the Inn, was very bloody. The Austrians were defeated, and obliged to retire with the loss of 20,000 men killed and wounded, and 10,000 prisoners. The loss of the French is said to be very considerable. The Austrians were having received a reinforcement of men, the day before the battle. The retreat of the Austrians was effected in good order. The French wards burned by the former. Several days the head quarters of Moreau were at object of this conspiracy is said to have been to thwart the measures of govern-

LONDON, December 20.

A Paris papers of the 15th inst. is received in town, but contains no important news, and is wholly filled up by the account of the Chancellor's journey to the battle of the 3d inst.—Their dinner is considered as filling us with hopes that the battle of Hohenlinden has not been attended with any very advantageous consequences to the republicans.

The most active preparations are making by the Board of Admiralty to increase our naval establishment. It is said more than 20 sail of the line, principally fourth rates, will immediately put into commission, and get ready for sea by spring. The squadron to be sent to the Baltic will consist of 30 sail of the line, and Lord Nelson, with Sir Sidney Smith, under return is shortly expected, will probably be employed in the fleet, Sir Sidney being perfectly acquainted with the Baltic.

Orders from the admiralty, it is said, have been received at Portsmouth, directing his majesty's squadron and cruizers to stop and bring into port all vessels, whether ships of war or merchantmen belonging to Russia.

A mail arrived yesterday in ten days from Lisbon. General Maitland and several other officers came passengers.—It is said Sir James Pulteney is expected in the next packet. It is rumoured that the troops under his command are soon to return home.

The Dutch government has renewed for six months the law prohibiting the importation of British manufactured goods.

VIENNA, Dec. 31.

The following proclamation was published on the 28th, in the Court Gazette:

"As to the proclamation of the 24th inst. it was announced that negociations were entered into for peace, at the same time that our faithful subjects and citizens were called upon to be ready to make every exertion in defence of their property and effects; it is now hereby notified, that between the Austrians and French troops, an armistice for 30 days, with 15 days notice, making in the whole 45 days, has been concluded.—Notwithstanding the certain hope, a consequence of an approaching conclusion of peace, yet it behoves every prudent Government, till peace is actually concluded, to resort to no measure, the preparation for defence and security on which the welfare of the whole monarchy depends, as well as the property and tranquillity of individuals. With respect to this defence it is therefore ordered that such as are to serve in person, shall appear before the proper officers, and receive their directions under the orders of the General of artillery, the Prince of Wirtemberg. Such as cannot serve in person, intrude to perform of arms, shall deliver up the same as the arsenal, to be employed in the defence of the city, whence they may receive them again at the peace.

"People of the Austrian monarchy, You have ever lived under the happiest and mildest Government; to this all Europe attests. Austria's your fidelity to your religion, your prince and your country; your mortality; your courage and bravery in all the wars you have waged, has been ever your inheritance and an example to others, however the fortune of war may be changeable to every State and every people.—This instability is in the nature of human events; but the virtues of a people, their courage, fidelity, and loyalty to their monarch, the state, and religion, (the greatest good and comfort of man) nothing can so alter and deprefs, that they shall not be exerted, and calmly repose [illegible]

therefore, and trust will atone every thing. (Signed)

MUNICH, Dec. 19.

Private letters from Upper Austria mention, that the Archduke Charles, through the time of his arrival at the seat of war, declared he had no hopes of saving the Austrian monarchy if the Russian auxiliary forces were not taken for completing a peace. He said, he did not expect, that the Imperial army in such a state of disorganization and disencouragement as that in which he found it. It was his opinion that his presence would reanimate the courage of his soldiers; but the hope was not fulfilled. A fallen heart could not continue to manifest itself in all the traits. Cold, fatigue, humiliations, produced by retreats, had exhausted in the hearts of all of them every sentiment of national pride. Hence while the Archduke was willing to make a second attempt; and after an hour's distribution of brandy, he ordered the army to turn about and support the rear guard, which was broadly pressed. But the sense of action [illegible] the soldiers could not all [illegible] the field of battle, which was confined between the two streams of Kamnick and the left bank of the Traun. After some hours of obstinate fighting during which the Austrians lost 7 or 8000 men either in killed, wounded, or prisoners, they were put to the rout; and it was not until the noon that the Archduke was able to rally them on the other side of the Enns. It is said that on that day he received a courier from the Emperor, to advise to a diffusion which he had sent off on the 18th ward, that is not in consequence of misfortunes taken by the Emperor to conclude a peace at any price, that the Archduke dispatched Mr. Mortier de to Gen. Moreau, to demand an armistice for three days.

MR. PRINTER,

Since Vienna became having been abandoned, excepting the unfortunate Bavarian hospitals now in Ratisbon, I send you the following authentic information, which I request you to insert in your paper.

The persons of the British merchants have hitherto remained unmolested; and what really grieves they had in their possession has not been seized; but their accounts are sealed, and all their property is under inquiries. All the British ships and their cargoes are seized by the Russian government. The captains and crews are marched into the interior of the country, to companies of one captain [illegible] two or twelve families. They are distributed in above one hundred different towns, at one hundred to one thousand miles distance from the capital. The Russian government allows for their [illegible] distance sixty five copeks in money (about three half pence) a half measure of rye and one of buck wheat.

My brother and some other British merchants at St. Petersburgh, advanced about forty thousand roubles (a rouble is about half a crown) for their better accommodation, from which he furnishes every captain with two hundred roubles for the use of himself and ten men, and bought for every man a sheep's skin coat, a fur cap, a belt, a pair of gloves, some warm shoes, and two pair of stockings. Kibitkas, or common carts of the country, are provided for most of the captains, and some old men; the rest walk and the peasants furnish horses for the baggage. On the 21st of November, fifty captains and five hundred sailors, were then dispatched from St. Petersburgh, and the remainder were daily setting off on this melancholy journey.

Consul General to Russia.

POSITIONS OF THE ARMIES.

HANAU, December 24.

The French and Austrian armies in Germany and Italy at the end of the last month, were in the following positions:—The French army of the Rhine under the command of Marshal Augereau, is stationed in Bavaria, from the frontiers of the Tyrol, along the Vils, unto the debouches thereof into the Danube—its right wing includes the mountains of Tyrol as far as Feldkirch. Its left wing, under lieut. gen. St. Suzanne, forms a detached corps, in order to maintain the communication with the corps of gen. Augereau, in Franconia. The said left wing is intended to act against the Upper Palatine, and to threaten the frontiers of Bohemia, so as to secure the left flank of the main army. The army of the Grisons commanded by gen. Lecourbe, between that of Italy and that of the Rhine. On the frontiers of the Grisons joins the right wing of the army of the Rhine, and in the Valtoline joins the left wing of the Italian army and threatens Tyrol and its western frontiers. On the south side of this country, is ruled by native and now by peasants under arms, the left wing of the Italian army, Bavarians and French. From thence the centre of the French army stretches down to the Po. The right wing forms again a detached corps, which extends from the right bank of the Po through Romagna and Tuscany, to the frontiers of the Roman territory, in order to be able to defend any attempts of the English or Neapolitans. The mass of troops which forms this immense chain from Munich by Ratisbon, Ratisbon, Munchin, Bregenz through the Valtoline to Brescia, from thence to the Po, and in the frontiers of the Ecclesiastical States, Ancona, according to the French papers, three hundred thousand men. The position of the Imperial army is as follows: The main army in Germany is stationed on the river Inn, under the command of the archduke John. The right wing of this army forms the corps of general Glezuik, on the left bank of the Danube, which communicates with the corps of general Stahlberg in Franconia. With this corps are the greatest part of the troops of the Empire. These troops, which properly ought to defend the frontiers of Bohemia, are to be supported by the Bohemian legion and the riflemen and rangers under the immediate command of the Archduke Charles. The left wing of the Imperial army extends to the Tyrol, and comprehends, besides, the detached corps of general Miller, which is intended to defend the Northern and Western entrances of this natural fortification.—With this corps is connected general Laudon in the Southern Tyrol, who commands a detachment of the right wing of the Imperial army in Italy under the command of gen. Count Bellegarde. This right wing extends to the Tyrol and Lake Garda. The centre stretches from the lake of the Po, and has the fortresses of Peschiera, Mantua and Legnago in front. The left wing which, like the French right wing forms a detached corps, under general Mylius, occupies the city and fortress of Ferara, with its territory, and its outmost post is the fortress of Ancona. The enemy have the left flank of defence and protecting to all the fortress of the pass of Tyrol to the Lake of Garda, and also Tyrol to the Lake of Garda, and also Tyrol to the Lake of Garda, and also of New York, Minister Plenipotentiary from the United States to the French Republic.

CONSTANTINOPLE, November 23.

Since the late turn that affairs have taken in Europe every thing, both negociation and hostilities, have been suspended. The Turks have, on their side, made a kind of reconciliation, and the Grand Vizier has received a Grand Master to be built at Jaffa, in order thereby to gain the straits to an hereditary vizier. It is soon left to French gentlemen and to English interest to arrange affairs in Egypt, which will remain in statu quo as soon as the two nations shall be able to understand each other. In the mean time Passwan Oglou seeks hard against the Ottoman empire; every thing that can be collected is going to march against him, and every pacha contrives to run himself by inspiring fears are entertained for the first interference of Russia, which, under the pretext of coming forward actively to defence of Wallachia, the integrity of which is threatened by Passwan, will probably send a body of troops which may perhaps reduce him to submission, but which may establish itself in that country to prevent new disorders. The politic views of this country is surely that the less Russia has either to fear or to see, would defence not only the present system, but all the system of government, the springs of which are so relaxed, that they are held by the feeblest supports.

ST. JOHN D'ACRE, Oct. 22.

The Vizier is at Jaffa with a few troops, which, till further reinforced are known by intelligence to act effectively against the French.

Mamou has advanced a strong detachment of his army to Salahie, and is vigorously fortifying that key to Egypt on the side of the desert. He has a force to accompany at Catieh, at the desert, and parties of Bedouins there advanced, as far as El Arish.

From this step no conclusion is followed, save that of alarming the Turks, who determined to fortify Jaffa, and to cover the old walls of El Arish.

November 23.

The Grand Vizier is said to have marched from Jaffa with his whole army.

The Turkish ministry seems now more active than ever. Lord Elgin had on the 19th a conference with the Reis Effendi and the Chevalier Tamara, the Russian Ambassador. On the 13th he had again a conference with the Reis Effendi. The Grand Signior is present at frequent councils of state.

VIENNA, December 19.

It appears that the plot discovered lately in Hungary had very extensive communications, and that the object of the conspirators was not only to stop the levies, but to effect a complete revolution. The result of several examinations of the army of insurrection is considered as one of the first effects of their manœuvres. These, after cashiering their officers, got possession of several castles, which they completely plundered. A squadron of the militia of Czeremisch, which was sent against these insurgents, was unable to subdue them. It lost thirteen men, and would have been entirely destroyed, if the peasants of the neighbouring villages had not flocked together to its assistance.—The rebels, out of revenge, set fire to four villages, and then withdrew into the woods.

NEW YORK, March 19.

Captain Bourne, who arrived last evening from Amsterdam, left that place on the 20th ult. He informs us, that it was a current report, and entertained credit, that the articles of a peace between the emperor of Germany and the French republic had been signed; and that Admiral Nelson had taken the command of a fleet which was destined to act in the Baltic.

There is a report in town, that the island of Porto Rico is going to be surprised by an armament from some of our islands.

According to accounts from Constantinople of the 12th of December, a Russian courier had appeared in that capital between 2 and 3 o'clock in the morning, and had communicated to the Porte an ultimatum from Paul; to whom he had dispatched an extraordinary courier with an account of the circumstance.

Several accounts state, that the Russians have provoked the quarrel in order to furnish their sovereign with a pretext to make war on the porte. It is true that the emperor Paul has guaranteed Egypt to the French, as stated in the London papers, this affair, it is not unlikely, was intended for the purpose.—In the present critical situation in which the porte is placed, a war with Russia would produce ruinous consequences to the Ottoman empire. Every thing indicates, that the flames of war, which begin to blaze in the north, will spread to the east. According to the last advices from Constantinople, no accounts had been received of the appearance of Sir Ralph Abercrombie at the place of his destination. Some private letters from the continent, however, state that intelligence had been received of his safe arrival at Rhodes, whence he was soon to sail for Egypt.

March 5. On Thursday the National House of Representatives were occupied in discussing the provisions of a bill providing for a naval peace establishment. The bill, as reported, directed that as soon as the differences with France shall be accommodated, the President shall be authorized to sell all the national ships except twelve frigates, (having previously of their guns, such as were to be retained) all the others sold. The parts printed in Italic were struck out, a similar unqualified discretion vested in the President to sell when he shall think the measure expedient. The second proviso directs that six of the frigates to be retained shall be put in constant service in time of peace, and shall be officered and manned as the President may direct; the residue of the frigates retained to be laid up. The words in Italic were struck out.

The fourth section allows to all captains, majors, lieutenants, and midshipmen in service at the time of the reduction of the navy, half their annual pay for life. This section was entirely struck out.

A new section, empowering the president to retain such part of the marine corps as he shall see fit, was added.

On Friday the house of representatives passed the bill so amended.

A Proclamation.

GEORGE the Third, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth:—

TO ALL WHOM THESE PRESENTS, GREETING:—

WHEREAS, by the Proclamation of bearing date the fourteenth day of March last, we thought fit to and with the advice of our Executive Council to prorogue a certain Provincial Parliament until the twenty-fifth day of this present month of April, at which time, in the town of YORK, you were duly and constitutionally to appear, for the dispatch of business, and to treat, consult, and agree upon such measures as might then and there be judged necessary for the welfare and good government of our Province of Upper-Canada, and the inhabitants thereof; and whereas, by the Royal Proclamation, bearing date at our Court at St. James's, the eighth day of October, in the fortieth year of our reign, and by the Commission and Instructions to our Lieutenant Governor of our said Province, and by the laws and statutes of this Province, it is provided, that a new Parliament shall be called within six months after the demise of the Crown, which has happened by the death of our late Sovereign Lord King George the Third, of blessed memory, and whereas we have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to order and direct writs to be issued for calling a new Provincial Parliament, to be held at the time and place above mentioned, and whereas we have thought fit, by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to publish our Royal intention of calling a new Parliament, and of proroguing the present Parliament, to the end that all our loving subjects, and others concerned, may have notice thereof, and may govern themselves accordingly; impeach them for their misconduct.—Lords Spencer and Grenville defended the conduct of Ministry with their usual ability. The latter observed, as to peace with France, he for one declared that there was universally to be a question now merely of the terms to be adopted; nothing better could now be, than the earliest peace.—The address was carried.

In the house of Commons the address was opposed by Mr. Grey, who in a very long and able speech, moved an amendment for inquiry; on the result of which the support of the house should be predicated.—He entered into an ample review of the conduct of ministry, which he contended had been arrogant and foolish.—Mr. Pitt and Mr. Dundas defended their conduct with spirit;—and they were replied to with much ability by Mr. Tierney and Mr. Sheridan. After a long debate the house divided.—For the address 244.—Against it 63. Almost all the new Irish members voted for the address.

From the London Courier of Feb. 9.

The rumours which have been for some days in circulation, and which have so much agitated the public mind, appear to be well founded.—We have before stated that disagreements had taken place in the Cabinet, upon the subject of Catholic emancipation. Those disagreements have produced a change of administration, and Mr. Pitt, Mr. Dundas, Lord Grenville, Earl Spencer and Mr. Windham, have actually resigned. It was their intentions that no allusion to the delay of the King's speech, some of the Cabinet ministers thought that the subject of Catholic emancipation should be alluded to; others were of a different opinion. It was finally settled that no reference should be made to the subject. For Mr. Pitt and his friends, together with Lord Castlereagh, were fearfounded of opinion that all restraints with respect to religious outlines should be done away, and it was known that many of the persons who supported the Union, supported it under the idea that such a measure would be among the first boons granted by the Imperial Parliament.

The Portland party and Lord Clarke differ totally in opinion with Mr. Pitt and his friends. They thought that the measure proposed would endanger the established church, and it was announced that it would be a violation of his Majesty's coronation oath, which is as follows:

"I promise to the utmost of my power to maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the gospel, and the Protestant Reformed Religion, established by law; and I will preserve unto the Bishops and Clergy of this realm, and to the churches committed to their charge all such rights and privileges as by law do, or shall appertain unto them, or any of them."

How the measure of Catholic Emancipation can be supposed to be a violation of the coronation oath, we are at a loss to guess. In this it may, the opposers of the measure succeeded, and Mr. Pitt and his friends resolved to resign. When they last to their resignations, they accompanied them with an assurance that they would continue to discharge the duties of their respective situations until his Majesty could call to his councils men to whom he had confidence, and who had not the same feelings on this particular question of Catholic Emancipation. The motion that stood for Thursday last was postponed at Mr. Pitt's desire, and upon that day the Addresses of Mr. Pitt's Majesty to the throne.

A message was the day last from the Duke of the Board of Admiralty, and Chancellor of the Exchequer, to the House of Commons, announcing those, that Sidmouth having a new administration was now forming, Mr. Pitt would continue in office till the business of the loan and the budget is settled.

February 10.

Mr. Pitt and administration is differed, but it hath lost its week before.—The distinctions in the cabinet, strange to tell, take out of the Union. It was necessary for the carrying of that measure, that the high church party in Ireland should be admitted to a share of power in this country; and it was equally necessary that certain promises be made the catholics. Mr. Pitt was the advocate for the catholic emancipation. He could not carry the question and finds himself obliged to relinquish office of withdrawing, in favor of some relation. The other changes will wear [illegible] of the late completion.

The emancipation of the Irish catholics has occasioned serious disputes in the cabinet for some time. Marquis Cornwallis and Lord Castlereagh, chief of them, it is to obtain it. His majesty has, however, been advised by a majority of the privy council to refuse it. Mr. Pitt declared the birth of government pledged to the catholics.—He was, however, beaten on the question, and the influence of lord Clare prevailed. On this mr. Pitt told the king he could not undertake to carry on his affairs any longer. Mr. Addington interposed as a mediator and was closeted a long time with his majesty; in the conference it was agreed, that mr. Pitt should continue to conduct the public affairs and the emancipation should not make a part of the speech.

At the opening of the session, mr. Pitt, however, his symptoms of defection, which convinced him that his power was gone. A member of the king's friends were absent, and out of thirty bishops, but eight voted for the address. He then resolved to retire, and tendered his resignation to his majesty; but with an assurance, that he would not desert the station until his majesty could call men to his councils, who had not the same feelings with himself on the emancipation. On Thursday the dissolution of the ministry took place; by the resignation of mr. Pitt, mr. Dundas, earl Spencer, lord Grenville and mr. Windham; but with the declaration to keep the seals and keys until their successors should be appointed.

A LAY OF

THE NEW MINISTRY.

At length the principal departments of the new administration have been finally arranged; and on this day by before our readers a list of the different members of it, which may be depended on. It will be perceived that many of them have already appeared in our paper, but we think it will be interesting to the public to have the whole arrayed together. The arrangements were not completed till Friday, when mr. Addington had again a private audience of his majesty, which lasted three hours.

The right hon. Henry Addington, first lord of the treasury, and chancellor of the exchequer.

Lord Eldon, lord high chancellor.

The earl of Chatham, president of the council.

Duke of Portland, secretary of state for the home department.

Lord Hawkesbury, secretary of state for the foreign department.

Lord Bathurst, secretary of state for the war department.

Lord St. Vincent, first lord of the admiralty.

Earl of Westmoreland, privy seal.

Earl of Liverpool, president of the board of trade.

The right hon. T. Pelham, president of the board of controul.

Charles York, esq. secretary at war.

Lord Glenbervie and the right hon. T. Steele, paymasters.

Nicholas Vansittart, and Charles Bragge, esqrs. secretaries of the treasury.

Mr. Serjeant, a lord of the treasury, in the room of lord Lovelace Gower.

Sir R. P. Arden, chief justice of the common pleas.

Sir Wm. Grant, master of the Rolls.

Mr. Law, attorney gen.

Mr. Perceval, solicitor gen.

The viceroyalty of Ireland, and the mastership of the board of Sidmouth still remain open. Lord Hardwicke has been named for the first of these offices, and the office has been made to Sir Charles Saxton to go as commander in chief, but nothing is yet settled. The viceroyalty may perhaps be put in commission. The report of the duke of York being appointed master general of the ordnance is without foundation.

Lord Loughborough is to retire from public affairs, with a pension of 4000 l. a year.

The three noted lords, admiral Young, Minto, and Gambier, all retire from the board of admiralty, and also lord Temple, sir Philip Stephens and mr. Elliot, jenkin, and to do me. Nepean and mr. Marsden. Sir Thomas Troubridge is the only new lord yet appointed. Lord St. Vincent will take his seat at the board on Wednesday next.

February 19.

A confidential degree of anxiety prevailed yesterday at St. James's on account of the King's unexpected absence from the Levee, where a great number of the nobility and gentry had assembled, to pay their respects to his Majesty. On enquiry, it was told that the King was recommended not to go abroad on account of a severe cold, with which he had been incommoded for several days attended with a slight degree of fever. It is pleasing, however, that public anxiety might have had some share in keeping his Majesty at home, as a Council was holding at the Queen's House, from two to three o'clock, at which were present their Royal Highnesses the Dukes of York and Kent; Earls Clarke, Spencer, Harrington, Lord Loughborough, sir Wm. Grant, and mr. Addington.

The King's absence from the Levee appeared the more particular, as several of the late ministers resigned their offices yesterday. It was intended that Lord Grenville should deliver the seals into the King's hands; and Lord Spencer took his leave of the Board of Admiralty.

Feb. 20.

Mr. Fox proposes to qualify to attend in his place in parliament.

The progress of all the tax bills is stopped.

Most of the leading members of opposition have left their seats at Charlton House; this week a list of members of the new administration was presented to the King, and graciously received. It is understood that the Royal Highness the Prince of Wales has given his assent to what is contained in the Royal Message.

The King is dangerously ill of a fever, accompanied about the 18th with a total delirium of the face of his person is exhibited daily, by the two attending physicians, to gratify the anxiety of the people respecting their sovereign.

There was very numerous meeting on Saturday evening at a private room at Nobleman's, in Gerrard street, which is become since more the headquarters of the opposition, since Mr. Fox returned to town. All the leading men of the party in both Houses of Parliament were present; and from what we hear, there was a regular canvass for places, as if the administration were going to be cancelled and appointed. But this is not the only place where there has been a canvassing the last week. There is scarcely a spot of doubtful politics, where sentiments have not been changed.

Mr. Pitt told the sale of his effects on the second of March.—It was agreed that he should have enquired to delist and there was to the person named in his succession; but that he had absolutely refused, on the ground that the King's unhappy situation imposed a double duty on the Chancellor of the Exchequer to retain his situation, and that he should not retire until his Majesty was in a capacity to receive his former retinue; or until the important Parliament had made suitable legislative provision for any unfortunate exigency which might arise in the public affairs.

The Russian ambassador, Gen. Tamara, has presented to the sublime Porte a note, by command of the Emperor, demanding the British troops in Egypt; and requesting an explanation of their doing so would be looked upon by the Court of Petersburgh as an action of hostility against Russia on the part of the Turks. The above note made a very considerable impression at Constantinople, and a divan was immediately held: the deliberations have not transpired, but it is evident that Turkey, in her present state of debility and decay, will not think it best to risk the displeasure of Russia.

of the Hanover, for this shore in the last season.

The British Envoy and Plenipotentiary, Gen. Abercrombie, has arrived at Rhodes, and expects to embark in a few days for the shore of Syria from England.

Advices from Smyrna, to the 10th ult. state, that the Turkish fleet, consisting of 12 sail of the line, had passed the Dardanelles, and was steering its course towards Egypt. The Capitan Pacha, Seyed Ogiou, has been ordered to proceed with the fleet to Alexandria, and to take on board the Turkish troops there, and land them in Egypt. The whole army was about 20,000 men, and all the artillery, and the military chest, are on board the ships. The new Ogiou has since taken the chief command of the Turkish government, divan and hunmar. The united confederate fleet prevailed at Belgrade.

VIENNA, Feb. 7.

THE English mission has received official dispatches, announcing that general Abercrombie had successfully disembarked on the coast of Egypt the beginning of January, and that the disembarkation of his troops was effected almost without any difficulty at Damietta. It is said that the French had no knowledge of the plan of this expedition, and that they were even ignorant that general Abercrombie had quitted Malta.

FRANCE.

ACTS OF GOVERNMENT—Feb. 8.

Message of the consuls to the legislative body and the tribunate.

THE peace of the continent has been signed at Luneville. It is such as the French people wished. Their full wishes and the boundary of the Rhine. Their enemies did not alter their inclination; these vicissitudes ought not to enlarge their pretensions. After restoring the ancient limits of Gaul, it belongs to them to secure to liberty, nay to which were united to them by the ties of blood, of custom and the ties of interest and interests. The freedom of the Batavian and Ligurian republics is secured. Next to this duty, there was another which justice and generosity prescribed to them. The king of Spain has been faithful to our cause, and has suffered for it. Neither our reverses nor the perfidious insinuations of our enemies have been able to detach him from our interests. He shall receive a full return. A prince of his blood is to be placed on the throne of Tuscany. He will remember that he owes it to the fidelity of Spain, and the friendship of France. His fleets and his ports will be but one against our enemies, and become the asylum of our commerce and our sailors. Austria, and in this conflict the pledge of peace—Austria, henceforth separated from France by extensive regions, will no longer entertain that rivalship, and those retchlessness, which have for so many ages been the torment of these two powers, and rendered them the calamities of Europe. By this treaty every thing is combined in favour of France. She will have no longer to contend with the hostilities and intrigues of accomplices. The government owes a testimony of satisfaction to the minister plenipotentiary who has concluded this negociation so fortunate as it is. There remains no interpretation to be dreaded, no explanation to be demanded, not any of those equivocal dispositions, in which the art of diplomacy deposits the germ of a new war. Why is it that this treaty is a treaty of general pacification? That was the wish of France! that was the constant object of the efforts of its government! but all its efforts have been in vain.—Europe knows all that the British ministry have done to prevent the success of the negociations at Luneville. It were due to appear authorized by the government, declared to them on the 30th October, three, that France was ready to enter into a negotiation with them. His declaration was not words only to a cabinet under the pretext that England could not abandon her allies. Since that period, and after that ally had consented to treat without England, this government seeks for other means of compassing a peace which is necessary to the whole world. It violates a convention only favoured by humanity, and declares war against Sweden. Vexatious proceedings contrary to the dignity and rights of all nations. All the commerce of Spain, and immense colonies, are no longer sufficient to satisfy its ambition.—Its arms against Russia, Denmark and Sweden, under cover of the Baltic, have by treaties mutually guaranteed their sovereignty, their independence and their seas. The powers of the North equally attacked, have a right to rely on the alliance of France. The French government will, with them, arrange an injury common to all nations without at any time forgetting, that it ought to contend only for peace and the happiness of the world. Signed, BUONAPARTE.

H. B. MARET,

PARIS, Feb. 14.

Yesterday evening the news of the conclusion of peace spread through every circle, and was announced at every ball. It is impossible to describe the impression it has made upon the public mind. Every class of description of citizens manifest the same joy and exultation. As soon as this joyful intelligence reached the hotel Longueville, where there was a masked ball, the company came out dancing on the Carrousel, and, with the enthusiasm of patriotic enthusiasm, they learned to adore the bustle of folly.

Peace, the first object of the general's vow the topic of general conversation, and the bosom of the republicans swells with the liveliest emotions of gratitude.

This morning, at five o'clock, the ministers and the counsellors of state proceeded to the Thuilleries, together with several members of the legislative body, and several of the public functionaries, both civil and military.

A letter from London, dated Feb. 26, states, that, owing to the immense influx of grain, the Baltic had ceased, and a considerable fall was daily expected to take place. Petitions for peace were pending in from most parts of the United Kingdom. His Majesty's fever was not dangerous. It also states, that peace upon honourable terms, seemed to be the wish of all parties, and that overtures for that end were daily expected.

ENGLAND.

LONDON January 25.

THE United Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland met yesterday for the first time. The wishes of every true friend to these countries are gratified in seeing the legislators of both consolidated in one assembly. The state of the inhabitants of the British isles were the most contemptible and wretched, when they were distributed in a multitude of petty, independent, unassociating hordes of savages. As cultivation and refinement advanced, they were conjoined into large communities. The Scots were of little consequence as a people, till their five principalities had been united into one kingdom. How wretched and barbarous the state of Anglo Saxon England, till the Union of the dominions of the Heptarchy? The conquest of Wales, and at length its entire political and legislative coalition with England, contributed, in the most eminent manner, to invigorate and consolidate the powers of the English Monarchy. What ineftimable benefits have not already enfued from that union of Scotland with England, which did honor to the reign of Anne—to the councils of Godolphin, Queensbury, Halifax, and Somers—to the spirit of the Revolution Settlement—to the commencement of the eighteenth century?

It was the desire of Swift, one of the most enlightened patriots who ever exerted himself for the public good of Ireland, that the Irish should be received into an Equal Union, political and legislative, with the British. To have happily accomplished this Union, is the glory of the reign of George the Third, of the Administration of Pitt, of a Commonalty and Peerage, whose efforts have arrested the destroying arm, and in part subdued the fatal malignity of the demon of democratical innovation, amid his threats to render Europe and Asia one scene of common carnage and devastation.

There is in the national character of the Irish, much to encourage Britons to rejoice in an Union which makes the two nations entirely one. The Irish are in arms, in arts, in political talents, in commercial enterprize, diligence, and ingenuity, in the praise of public and of private virtue, in the glory of science, in the pride of literary genius, in all the powers of exertion and endurance which can exalt humanity—a people, many of the most illustrious whose deeds and fortunes are recorded in history. Those imperfections which have been remarked in their general character, were the consequences of political, civil, and religious disadvantages which the Union must speedily remove. Irish virtue and talents have been too long loft, in a large proportion, to their country and to the British Empire; while they were lavished for the benefit of France, Germany, Spain, and the Anglo American States. Go to the volumes of the British literature—what names do they present more illustrious than those of a Swift, a Goldsmith, a Sterne, a Steele, a Berkely, and a Leland? What name in modern science, deserves equal praise with that of Kirwan? The Butlers, the Boyles, the Brodericks, the Carews, the Fitzgeralds, the Stuarts, are among those most highly distinguished in civil and political history. The annals of Austria, of Russia, of Spain, of America, will for ever commemorate, in some of their fairest pages, the praise of Irish merit. Such are the people whom Britons now take warmly to their hearts!

January 26.

Yesterday we received Paris journals to the 21st inst. inclusive. They are full of important matter, which, together with other intelligence we have to communicate, will not fail to rouse the national spirit, and recall the true character of Englishmen.

The official paper of the French government announces the signature of the neutral Convention at St. Petersburgh on the 16th of December, by the ministers of Russia, Denmark and Sweden, as principals; and by those of Prussia the next day, as acceding to the treaty.

The Moniteur contains an order of government prohibiting any further captures to be made of Ruſſian veſſels, and enjoining thoſe of the republic to give aid and aſſiſtance to the Ruſſian flag. The ſame paper announces in an official letter from the commander in chief in Italy, that he will ſubſcribe to no armiſtice for that country, which ſhall not be preceded by the ſurrender of Mantua, Peſchiera, Ferrara and Ancona. The Chief Conſul next commands an army of obſervation to be aſſembled at Bourdeaux, under a lieutenant gen. who is to correſpond with the miniſter at war, and with the ambaſſador of the republic at Madrid. A general review of the ſeveral ſquadrons in the ports of Breſt, Toulon, Rochefort, and L'Orient, is ordered by the miniſter of marine to take place upon the 20th of February.

The official paper of the 21ſt inſtant contains alſo a tranſlation of the late order in council for the detention of Swediſh and Daniſh ſhips, which the new ally of Paul I. does not bluſh to call "the greateſt violation of the rights of nations and of ſovereigns, that the madneſs of ambition, avarice and deſpotiſm ever dictated to any government." The Moniteur obſerves upon this order in a note, that it makes no mention of the court of Berlin, "becauſe the electorate of Hanover is too near to Pruſſia."

If there were any difficulty in underſtanding the obſervation of the Moniteur, it would be in our power to remove its obſcurity, by making known what we have for ſome time been informed of, the intentions of the king of Pruſſia to occupy both the electorate of Hanover and the more important city of Hamburgh, our laſt key to the continent of Europe. Under what pretext, with what views, and with what certainty of not being forced to exceed his intentions, his Pruſſian majeſty has taken this reſolution, we cannot at this moment explain. There is certainly candour in the manner in which it has been made known, and there is no doubt of the repugnance with which his majeſty would be driven to the extremes of hoſtility to this country.

Hamburgh, as we have more than once ventured to intimate, might be occupied by the Pruſſians as guardians of the neutrality of the north of Germany, and our connections might be more ſafe and permanent with the continent under the king's auſpices, than it can be conſidered from the good will & weakneſs of the ſenate. But what motive will be aſſigned for taking poſſeſſion of Hanover, it may not altogether become us to predict, altho' under the preſent circumſtances of the continent, it is very unlikely it ſhould remain unmoleſted under the government of its regency.

Such is the information which it is our duty to communicate to the public, and it would be miſplaced and unprofitable to attempt to throw any veil over the importance or unhappineſs of its contents. The French government, proſiting of the unaccountable madneſs and deptavity which diſfigure, diſgrace and diſlocate the continent, will evidently ſucceed in their project of ſhutting us out from the reſt of Europe, unleſs the court of Berlin ſhall faithfully and vigorouſly defend the neutrality of Hamburgh.—The army of obſervation at Bourdeaux, governed by the ambaſſador Lucien Buonaparte at Madrid, forbids us to expect that our connections with Portugal will very long ſurvive. We owe it only at preſent to the policy of Buonaparte, who would not expoſe the Braſils and Goa to the enterprizes of this country. The ſurrender of Ancona extorted by the republic, and the ruin of the houſe of Auſtria, very plainly tells us that we ſhall ſoon be out of from Trieſte and the Adriatic Sea; as the dependence of Naples upon Ruſſia, and the interference of the latter power in its favor, as ſtrongly indicate that we ſhall be cut off from the coaſts of Sicily and Naples.

It will not be ſaid that we have diſſembled in this ſtatement any part of the unhappy circumſtances which threaten us at the preſent moment from a conſpiracy, more unnatural, if it be poſſible, than unwiſe; and more unprecedented even than it is unjuſt. It is not by conceaſing the inconveniences we may ſuffer, or the dangers to which we are expoſed, that we can hope to ſurmount them.—It is by confronting, by examining, by weighing them together with our own means of defence and oppoſition, that we are to triumph over the new and unknown predicament in which we are placed. We have a navy, and a naval adminiſtration, of which we are juſtly proud; and without ingratitude to which, as well as folly, we can never tremble before the confederate ſquadrons of the earth. We know from all hiſtory and experience, that leagues have never triumphed over ſingle powers, if theſe latter have been able to make head againſt their firſt inroads and violence; we know they have never perſevered to the common object, and that even the proſpect of ſucceſs is the ſignal of their diſſolution. We have reaſon to hope the ſpirit, the perſeverance, and the pride of this great nation will riſe in proportion to the malice and ingratitude of thoſe neighbours, whoſe ſtates and independence the Britiſh arms, more than any other human cauſe or means, have hitherto defended.

If the juſteſt league which was ever formed in the hiſtory of man has failed before our eyes, from the ſelfiſhneſs, ambition, or madneſs of the allies, can we fear that the preſent combination, containing in its boſom all the ſeeds of diſſolution—uniting in itſelf the moſt contending objects, the moſt irreconcileable intereſts, the moſt diſſociable characters, wanting every principle, every pretext and colour of juſtice, policy or honor, can long endure? If nothing be wanting on our part—if the occaſion and neceſſity call forth the patriotiſm and energy of the United empire, we may have ſome dangers to encounter, ſome difficulties to ſtruggle through, and ſome ingenuous ſacrifices to make upon the altar of our country; but, under Providence, we may be certain of the victory. If we look at thoſe miſguided and unhappy ſtates who now ſo ignominiouſly crowd the heels of Buonaparte, and point their weapon at their benefactreſs, what encouragement, what motive have they for perſeverance and what promiſe of ſucceſs? Can they ſtrike a blow at England which will not reverberate againſt their own boſoms—can they inflict a wound which muſt not recoil into their own vitals?

It is impoſſible, therefore, to doubt, that the preſent ſtruggle will be more violent than laſting, or that the combination will long ſurvive the firſt loſſes and diſappointments of the allies. If we have nothing to fear from weakneſs and diſſention at home, there will be little to apprehend from the ſtrength & union of the enemy. There can be nothing deſperate in our circumſtances, but from our own needleſs and unpardonable deſpair!

The French funds, as under the preſent circumſtances it might well be expected, continue to riſe.—On the 19th inſt. they left off at 54 frs. 50 cts.

Lord St. Vincent keeps up a very ſevere diſcipline in the channel fleet, both at ſea and on ſhore. No officer is ſuffered to go three miles from his ſhip while on ſhore, nor will the noble commander himſelf treſpaſs beyond theſe limits.

A plan will, it is ſaid, be ſhortly ſubmitted to parliament, requiring the ſeveral diſtricts of the United Kingdom, to levy both for the ſervices of the navy and the means of internal defence, a certain number of men. An addition of 20,000 men will be made to our navy eſtabliſhment. It is confidently reported too, that a proclamation will be iſſued ordering all foreigners, who have not reſided in this country for four years to quit the kingdom.

In purſuance of orders from government, the commander and crew of the Ruſſian veſſel Agathony, ſeized at Liverpool, have been liberated. This liberal act was not neceſſary to ſhew by contraſt the groſs violation of humanity and the rights of nations by the Emperor Paul.

The Archduke Charles has received his commiſſion as Field Marſhal, and Preſident of the Chief Council of War.

The Duke of Kent is to ſucceed the Marquis Cornwallis in Ireland.

LONDON, Feb. 19.

THE negociation between Auſtria and France ſeems to have been managed with great addreſs on the part of the French, who avoided the delays and inconveniencies of a congreſs, and treated with the emperor for himſelf and the empire. By this procedure the French avoid the obnoxious talk of interfering in adjuſting the indemnities to be given to thoſe German princes who have been diſpoſſeſſed of their territories. But whence are the indemnities to be procured?—only by diſpoſſeſſing others by ſeculariſation or otherwiſe?—How then are the latter to be indemnified?

It will be ſeen by the meſſage to the councils, that France makes one cauſe with the northern powers againſt Britain. No one has doubted this for ſome time; but now it is avowed, and the ſame abuſe which has for years been popular in Europe againſt France, will now be equally ſo againſt this country.—Tempora mutantur.

The news of the peace in Paris raiſed the price of Tiers Conſolides to 64 3-4.

It was reported yeſterday in the firſt political circles, that the marquis of Lanſdowne had written a letter to a certain perſonage, informing him, that by a late event he felt himſelf at liberty to impart to his M——, that he had reaſon to know, Buonaparte was diſpoſed to treat for peace, on terms not injurious either to the honor or intereſt of England!

February 28.

This morning Paris papers to the 26 ult. were received in town. The Hamburgh mail due yeſterday ſe'nnight is alſo arrived. The only important intelligence is the recall of mr. Otto, the cauſe of which aſſigned by Buonaparte is the conduct of our government towards the ſilhermen. The account bro't by the Hamburgh mail, of the landing of ſir R. Abercrombie in Egypt, appears to ſtand in need of confirmation.

Admiral Cornwallis, on Thurſday, hoiſted his flag on board the Ville de Paris, at Torbay, as commander in chief of the channel fleet.

Four flags will be employed in the Baltic, viz. Thoſe of ſir Hyde Parker, lord Nelſon, Admiral Totty, and admiral Graham. The fleet will conſiſt of 21 ſail of the line, including the Iris, of 50 guns; of five large frigates, beſides cutters, gun-boats and fire-ſhips.

All the ſhips of the line to be employed in the Baltic, have received orders to take on board two long 24 pounders.

Letters from Acre ſtate, that the moſt active preparations were making for the debarkation and march of the troops under the orders of ſir Ralph Abercrombie.

In conſequence of the ſtrength of the enemy's works at Alexandria, Roſetta, and Damietta, we underſtand that the army was to land at Acre, and in company with the Turks to march across the deſart, for Cairo. Thirty thouſand canteen for the carriage of water, and a proportionate ſupply of proviſions, had been collected.

None of the horſes intended to mount our dragoons had arrived from Conſtantinople; neither was the note of general Tamara, for reſtraining the expedition, known at the camp. The Britiſh commiſſary at Symrna had collected an extraordinary number of bullocks.

In conſequence of the progreſs made by the French towards their eſtabliſhment in Egypt, the armed aſſociation at Bombay has been conſiderably increaſed.

We have the pleaſure to ſtate, that during the firſt four days of the laſt week no leſs than ſeventy-four veſſels have arrived at Liverpool with grain from foreign parts.

On the 15th February, the parties who had made out liſts for the loan, waited upon mr. Pitt, by appointment, at ten o'clock.

After ſome converſation, the loan was taken by two liſts, viz.

Sir Francis Baring,	Meſſrs. Roberts,
J. J. Angerſtein,	Cuttis & Co.
J. Ayton,	B. & A. Goldſmith
J. Bartye,	E. P. Salomons,
R. Sheweil,	Theluſſon Broth
B. Ellis,	G. Ward,
	R. Aiſtable.

The terms of the loan are—1251. Conſols, 50l. 15s. reduced, } for every 100l. ſubſcription.

The amount of the loan is twenty-eight millions.

As ſoon as the terms of the loan were known in the city, conſols experienced the following fluctuations; 56 1-4 57 a 56 a 56 1 8 1-4.

The Omnium began at 3 per cent. premium, but fell to 1 and 1 1-2.

It is ſaid that the new miniſtry mean to attempt a negociation for peace; and that Lord St. Helens will be ſent to Paris.

Poſitive intelligence is ſaid to have been received that the French ſquadron under Gantheaume, is gone to the Mediterranean.

It is ſtated that the quantity of hemp in the public magazines is equal to three years conſumption, and of other naval ſtores to that of eighteen months. Orders have been ſent out to purchaſe hemp in India and America. The cultivation of hemp is to be made an object of attention in the plains of Canada and Novalcotia moſt favorable for riſing it.

Gen. Brune has concluded an armiſtice with Gen. Bellegrade in Italy. It contains 15 articles—The principal of which ſtipulate, that there ſhall be a ſuſpenſion of arms until the 25th of Jan. excluſive of 15 days notice:—That the Auſtrians ſhall ſurrender to the French the cities and caſtles of Peſchiera, Sermione, Verona, Legnano, Ferrara, and Ancona:—That the French line of demarcation ſhall follow the left bank of the Livenza from the ſea to its ſource, over Mount Meuſe, thence deſcends into the valley of Lukang by Aigge, thence up to Lintz, where it meets the line of demarcation in Germany.—The imperial army ſhall take the right bank of the Tagliamento from the ſea to its ſource near Mount Maure, &c. This armiſtice was concluded at Treviſa, the 16th Jan. A Paris article adds, by a convention ſigned at Luneville, the day before yeſterday (Jan. 29) Mantua is alſo ſurrendered to the French.

A Paris paper of the 28 Feb. ſays, peace was ſigned at Luneville, between the Emperor of Germany and the French Republic. The treaty is not to be publiſhed until his Imperial Majeſty's engagements ceaſe with Great Britain, viz. on the laſt day of February.

A letter from Paris, dated Jan. 20, ſays, at 7 o'clock yeſterday morning, a Ruſſian officer arrived here, in 17 days from Peterſburgh, and immediately ſet off to the Miniſter for foreign affairs, who is in the country. He is the bearer of a letter to the Chief Conſul, in the hand writing of the Emperor Paul. Extract of a letter from Paris, Jan. 23.

"It ſeems that the projected attack upon Portugal is laid aſide, and that an arrangement has been entered into. What the nature of it is we are not informed. It is ſaid the French intend detaching Portugal from Great Britain; and force her to refuſe admiſſion into her ports to Britiſh veſſels."

The Paris Journals to the 22d January relate that Pruſſia had ſubſcribed to the Treaty of Northern Neutrality, at Peterſburgh on the 17th Dec. the day after it had been ſigned by Ruſſia, Denmark and Sweden.

The Paris Moniteur does not inſtimate that there was any reſervation made upon the part of Pruſſia in this act, ſo contrary to her profeſſions, to her faith, and to her real intereſt; and which, if correctly ſtated, is meant to ſtrike at the moſt vital part of Britain, by ſuſpending our commerce and communications with the North of Europe.

Another paper ſays, the Pruſſian Miniſter diſſented from the article which imports, that neutral veſſels, which ſhould prefent themſelves before a blockaded port without being apprized in time of the blockade, ſhould have a right to enter it freely. It is further ſtated, that his Pruſſian Majeſty, in addition to Ingerodorff and other diſtricts in Sileſia, is to have the city of Hamburgh.

The baſis of the late convention reſts on the ſame as that of 1780.

A treaty juſt concluded between Ruſſia and Sweden, ſtipulates, that the two powers ſhall concur in retaking Malta.

Conjectures are various reſpecting the deſtination of the ſquadron under Admiral Gantheaum; ſome ſay, from the number of troops on board, it muſt be bound for Ireland—others, that Egypt is its deſtination; and ſtill more, that it is bound to St. Domingo. One of Buonaparte's brothers is on board. From the above we may ſuppoſe, that the maritime preparations at Breſt and other ports have an attack on Ireland in view. [We have no doubt but this new expedition will have as much ſucceſs as the former.—The Iriſh are not ſo fond of Frenchmen or French principles as the Firſt Conſul may think.—He ought to recollect that England and Ireland are now one, and that it is beyond the art of French Regicides to diſunite them.]

It is reported that a very ſplendid embaſſy from the French Republic to the King of Perſia is to take place in the courſe of this year. A brother of the Chief Conſul is ſaid to have the appointment of ambaſſador; but citizen de Sacy, the celebrated Perſian ſcholar, is to prepare the way by ſetting out ſome months before. This embaſſy is to be joined at Peterſburgh by one equally magnificent from the Emperor Paul; and both are to proceed by the uſual route of Aſtracan and the Northern Provinces of Perſia to the reſidence of the King.

A few Paris papers, we underſtand, have reached town, which ſtate that 1200 individuals, beſides the hundred Jacobins ordered for tranſportation, have been arreſted on ſuſpicion of being diſaffected to the Conſular Government.

NEW YORK, March 20.

Extract of a letter from the ſupercargo of the ſchr. Thomas, of Baltimore, dated Kingſton, Jamaica, 11th Feb. 1801.

"I am ſorry to inform you we were again captured by an Engliſh frigate, the third day after leaving Curracoa, and arrived at Port Royal about a week ſince; we got up here with the fleet yeſterday. The captain and officers of the Britiſh frigate did not deign even to examine our papers, and gave no other reaſons for detaining us than that they ſhould capture all American veſſels they might meet with, not bound to or from Britiſh or neutral ports."

BOSTON, March 14.

A gentleman who arrived laſt evening from St. Thomas's, via Vineyard, informs, that a ſquadron of five ſail of Britiſh veſſels was cruiſing off that iſland, expecting orders to capture it.

A letter from Surrinam, dated the 2d Feb. ſays, "About ten days ſince, four French frigates of 44 guns, and a corvettes of 22 guns, had ſafely landed 1800 troops from Europe, at Cayenne; and brought in with them the Engliſh ſloop of war Swallow, of 28 guns, and 17 Engliſh and Portugueſe veſſels, laden with proviſions, cloathing, guns, &c. for the Britiſh forces in the Weſt Indies, beſides a large amount in money. Victor Hughes has accordingly ſent here to know if there were any French priſoners to be exchanged for thoſe taken."

NORFOLK, (Virginia) March 14.

On Tueſday arrived the French frigate La Semillante, of 36 guns, captain Montalan, 47 days from L'Orient. In her came citizen Louis Andre Pichon, ſent by the French government as conſul general and charge d'affairs near the United States. Alſo citizen Oſter, formerly conſul at this place.

The papers we have received by the above frigate, mention that the moſt active preparations are making in the marine department; a general review of all the navy officers was to take place on the 23d of January. The miniſter of marine iſſued orders for officers of all denominations to repair on that day to the ports of Breſt, Toulon, Rochefort, or L'Orient, as might be moſt convenient.

Under the Paris head of January 18, we find the following paragraphs:

Three expeditions are now ready for ſea, in the port of Breſt, viz.

One commanded by Vice Admiral Gauteaume, conſiſting of five ſhips of the line.

A ſecond commanded by Vice Admiral La Touche, compoſed of 5 ſhips of the line.

The third commanded by Vice Admiral Bruix, compoſed of 15 Spaniſh and 15 French ſhips of the line.

The camps of Dijon and Lyons, as well as the fine corps of grenadiers lately at Tours, have begun their march for Breſt, Bourdeaux, and Rochefort.

NEW-YORK, April 1.

From the Mercantile Advertiſer.

London papers to the evening of March the ſecond, inclusive, were received yeſterday, at the office of the Mercantile Advertiſer by the ſhip Eliza, captain Brown, in 24 days from Plymouth. They afford us the opportunity of informing our readers that a Peace between France and the emperor of Germany was concluded at Luneville on the 9th of February, the principal articles of which are, 1. The ceſſion of the Netherlands to France, and the country of Falkenſtein and the Frickthal. 2. Iſtria, Dalmatia, the Venetian iſlands in the Adriatic, and Venice, are confirmed to the emperor.—The Briſgau is given up to the duke of Modena.—3. The Grand duke of Tuſcany is to give up Tuſcany to the infant duke of Parma, and is to receive an indemnity in Germany. 4. The emperor conſents, for the German empire, that France ſhall poſſeſs all the countries on the left bank of the Rhine, which formed part of the German empire. 5. France gives up Buſſeldorf, Ehrenbreitſtein, Philliſpburg, Caſſel, Kehl, and Old Briſſac. 6. The German princes, who have been diſpoſſeſſed of territories on the left bank, are to be indemnified on the right. 7.—Holland, Switzerland, Liguria, and the Ciſalpine, are included in the treaty. 8. England is ſhut out from the ports of the emperor of Germany. The treaty is to be ratified in 30 days from the time of its being ſigned.

The pretender has incurred the diſpleaſure of the emperor Paul, and has been driven from Mittau. Our laſt accounts left him at Memel, in the dominions of Pruſſia from whence he intended returning to Edinburgh, on a penſion of 200,000 roubles, which, notwithſtanding the rupture, Paul continues to allow him.

A Ruſſian army is under orders to march to the Turkiſh frontiers, to await the anſwer of the Ottoman Court to the application which we mentioned yeſterday to have been made by M. de Tamara.

A plan is ſaid to be in agitation between Ruſſia, Auſtria and France, for diſmembering the Turkiſh empire in Europe.

Letters from Conſtantinople, dated the 1ſt of January, ſay that the Sublime Porte has ſequeſtrated the property of the ſtates of Barbary.

The French government has recalled M. Otto from England, on account of the depredations committed by order of the Britiſh miniſtry on the French fiſhing-ſmacks, contrary to the good faith, which had been previouſly pledged, that they ſhould be ſuffered to carry on their occupation unmoleſted.

Our readers will be aſtoniſhed to find that Buonaparte, whoſe buſineſs it has hitherto been to unmake kings, has created one of the ſons of the Spaniſh monarch, king of the ideyant dukedom of Tuſcany, as a reward for the fidelity with which his father has obſerved the treaties of offenſive and defenſive alliance which bind him to the republic.

SERIOUS QUARREL.

Captain Noyes, of the revenue, arrived here on Sunday in four days from Norfolk, informs, that a very ſerious diſpute took place there Sunday week, between part of the crew of the French frigate Semillante, and a number of Britiſh and American ſailors on ſhore, in which between 20 and 30 of the former were killed and wounded. Capt. N. ſaw 2 of the French killed.

BOSTON, March 21.

Since our laſt, the Fox, from England, has brought London papers down to the 5th February.

Peace between France and Germany, has been concluded and ſigned at Luneville. The conditions were not to be divulged until the 18 inſt. But as unqueſtionably they were dictated by France, we conclude their outlines were given by Buonaparte to the French councils; which outlines have been heretofore publiſhed. By this the left bank of the Rhine was to be the northern boundary of the republic;—while the Adige was to be the ſouth-weſtern limits of the empire;—which will receive the Venetian States as a ſmall remuneration for the loſs of Belgium, &c. The independence of the Dutch and Swiſs republics were to be recognized by the emperor:—But we hear nothing of the Ciſalpine republic. It is rumoured, that this beautiful territory is to be reſerved for Buonaparte, when he finds the government of France too thorny for his repoſe.

The Northern Confederacy is the next object of importance. It compriſes Ruſſia, Denmark and Sweden, and its object is ſaid to be hoſtile to the Britiſh dominion of the ſeas. From the debates, however, in the Britiſh Imperial Parliament, an immediate war with thoſe nations does not appear inevitable. Negociations to prevent the ultima ratio regum, were in train: and the Daniſh miniſter, in anſwer to a note of the Britiſh envoy, declares, that the confederacy "has no other object than the renewal of engagements which, in the years 1780 and '81, were contracted by Ruſſia, Pruſſia, Sweden and Denmark, for the ſafety of navigation."—Notwithſtanding theſe pretenſions, both ſides were arming for combat.—The combined powers were ſaid to be equipping for ſea, a fleet of near 50 ſail of the line; and the Engliſh a ſtrong ſquadron for the Baltic, to be commanded by admirals Parker and Nelſon. Should theſe preparation end in war, the ſcene of carnage will be tranſfered to the ocean. Thoſe powers, if joined by France, Spain, and Holland, can bring to the combat one hundred and twenty line of battle ſhips.—To meet theſe Great Britain can produce between ninety and an hundred ſail of very excellent veſſels.

The Britiſh channel fleet was off Breſt at the date of the laſt accounts; where the combined armada ſtill remained.

In a ſpeech lately delivered by Duvournier in the French tribunate on the 20th ult. after deſcribing the victorious progreſs of the Republican armies, we have the following deſcription of the ſtate of the interior.

"In the midſt of thoſe triumphs, a war of a new ſpecies, an inteſtine, an unfair, a deceitful war perplexes and threatens the conquerors of Europe.

"Crimes hitherto unheard of ſtrike us with horror by the cruel ſolemnity of the act, and by the dark machinations of the plot; the highways are infeſted with robbers formed into regiments; the ſafety of every citizen is gone, public faith outraged, and the moſt ſacred aſylum impudently violated, the magiſtrates are proſcribed and marked out for the poignard; the purchaſers of national domains perſecuted and tortured as thieves who conceal their booty; the founders, the columns of the republic publicly pointed at, and publicly devoted to death; a general deluge of paſſions and of vice prevails through the land, all ſocial intercourſe is obſtructed, trade is embarraſſed, property inſecure, the order of ſociety, in ſhort, aſſaulted in its centre by a criminality which is more powerful, more extended, and more active than words can expreſs. Such is the picture fairly drawn of France!"

NEW YORK, April 16.

Yeſterday arrived here the ſhip Briſeis, capt. Dunlevy, in 35 days from Glaſgow—By her we have received Glaſgow papers to the 7th March, containing London news to the 5th.—The following are the only articles worthy of notice:

GLASGOW, March 7.

THE convoy for the Elbe has, at the requeſt of ſeveral ſhip-owners, been detained from ſailing until Sunday forenoon next.

Yeſterday ſeven veſſels arrived at Grangemouth with grain.

During laſt week arrived at Liverpool, 12,315 barrels of flour and 6,489 quarters of wheat.

HOUSE of LORDS, March 4.

The Earl of Suffolk ſaid, he obſerved there was no report from the committee on the high price of proviſions, that conſidering the ſtate of the country, he was extremely ſorry to obſerve the delay in receiving the report, and if any Lord belonging to the committee, was then preſent, he would be glad to be informed of the cauſe of the delay.

The Duke of Athol, (who is a member of the Committee) ſaid, they were proceeding with all the diligence and attention poſſible, but deſerred a report until they could lay a general view of the whole ſubject before the Houſe.

Lord Suffolk ſaid, the price of bread was daily riſing, and with it all other neceſſaries; that he apprehended the that influx of paper currency was the great cause of it. He therefore meant to propose a measure to prevent the payment of any paper, except that of the Bank of England.

The Duke of Athol called the noble Lord to order, and said, it was utterly unprecedented to introduce a measure of that extreme importance without a regular notice.

Earl Fitzwilliam said, his noble friend was perfectly in order, and in fact did no more than intimate, in a liberal manner, a measure he might think it necessary to bring forward, after seeing the report of the committee.

Lord Romney, (who is also a member of the committee) said, they were proceeding with all possible dispatch, but were unwilling to adopt hasty and partial measures. Too much had already been seen of the mischief of adopting a partial and a hasty measure, (eluding we suppose, to the brown bread bill) and therefore he deprecated any pressure of the business.—Adjourned.

HOUSE of COMMONS, March 3.

The bill for granting a bounty upon American grain, imported into Great Britain and Ireland, was committed for to morrow.

LONDON, March 4.

About 11 o'clock on Monday night, his Majesty fell into a deep sleep, which lasted, with very little intermission, till ten o'clock yesterday morning, when he awoke perfectly composed. This providential rest had the best possible effect. His Majesty's pulse was reduced by it to a little more than 80, so that his fever had most materially subsided, and his health was otherwise in a very perceptible degree bettered.

Government, it is said, have received some intimation, by the way of Vienna, that the French are inclined to negociate anew, for the evacuation of Egypt.

Orders are given to detain all Russians, Danes and Swedes, now serving on board any of his Majesty's ships.

Flour in England is 120s. sterling the sack. Partial disturbances have arisen in some parts of the country from the high price of provisions and the wretched situation of the poor.

At the corn Exchange this day, there was not much business done; the supplies of foreign wheat were pretty large, prime samples of English wheat, however, keep up their price at 9l. to 9l. 0s. was actually given on Monday; fine flour continues at 140s.

GLASGOW, March 7.

In the note transmitted by order of his Prussian Majesty to Lord Carysfort, our ambassador at Berlin, his Prussian Majesty does not hesitate to declare his accession to the convention concluded at Petersburgh on the 16th of December, between Russia, Denmark, and Sweden; that he will take a direct share in all the events which interest the cause of the neutral powers, and maintain that connection by such powerful measures as the impulse of circumstances may require, and that it is only by entirely taking off the embargo laid by Britain, on Danish and Swedish vessels, affairs can be brought to their former situation. His Prussian majesty, with distinguished modesty, asserts, that there exist discussions between the Courts of Petersburgh and London, which have by no means any thing to do with the business which Britain has interwoven with it. After such an intimation, scarcely a doubt remains what part the Court of Berlin will take in this momentous question; and, however much to be lamented, not a doubt remains what must be the conduct of our Government: we indeed have no choice: our existence as a naval power, depends upon its decision.—That neutral ships may carry neutral cargoes, is what none will deny; but that free ships make free goods, as the Convention of the Northern Powers maintains, is so repugnant to common sense, that we trust these tramplers upon maritime policy will soon repent of their temerity.

ENGLAND.

LONDON, March 4.

On Saturday last, died, at his house in Sloughland, near Windsor, Dr. Herschell, the celebrated astronomer, and discoverer of the new planet Georgium Sidus.

Capture of the Kent East Indiaman.

It is with great concern we announce the capture of the Kent East Indiaman, in the bay of Bengal, on the 7th Oct. off the Sand Heads, by the Confiance French privateer, of 26 guns and 250 men, after an obstinate engagement of near one hour and 45 minutes, in which capt. Rivington, of the Kent, was unfortunately killed, bravely defended the company's property till the last moment of his existence, when he exclaimed "do not give up the ship."—Mr. Cator, a free merchant, also fell, covered with wounds. All the surviving passengers who were able to be removed, were put on board an Arab, and landed in Calcutta.

We are in great hopes that the Kent has been recaptured, as the Fox and Arrogant, of 32 guns, had sailed out a cruize, the last of October, having received information of the Confiance.

The Kent was in 25 fathom water, and took the Confiance for a pilot sloop The crew of the Confiance were all armed with sabres, and pistols, and had been thrice encouraged with liquor, previously to their boarding the Kent.

The situation of Mrs. and Miss Cator, must have been distressing in the extreme.

General St. John and his family were on board the Kent, and appear to have been particularly unfortunate. All his jewels, plate and baggage had been burnt on board the Queen. The gallant capt. Pilkington, the general's aid-de-camp, was severely wounded in defending the general's family.

The French behaved with a cruelty almost unexampled, giving no quarter, and stabbing even the sick in their hammocks.

Previous to their boarding, the Kent had evidently the advantage; and had the crew been equally armed with offensive weapons, or had more musquetry the Confiance would, in all probability, have paid dearly for the rashness of the attempt. This is the same ship which was beat off formerly by the Arniston.

The above melancholy account came by an overland express from Bengal, dated the 8th October.

PHILADELPHIA, April 25.

By the arrival of the brig Eliza, from Gibraltar, we learn that the George Washington frigate, capt. Bainbridge, upon her arrival at Algiers, from Constantinople, took on board the French Consul at that place, and landed him at Alicant.—He was obliged to quit Algiers in consequence of the Dey having declared war against France, at the instigation of the Ottoman Porte.

Capt. Davis, of the brig James Stuart, of this port, previous to his arrival at Gibraltar, spoke the French fleet from Brest, under the command of Admiral Gantheaume, and was informed they were bound to Naples; it was however generally believed at Gibraltar, that they were going to Toulon, where two ships of the line had been ready for sea for some time, and were to proceed finally to Egypt. A British fleet, under the command of Sir John Borlase Warren, from before Cadiz, consisting of four sail of the line and four frigates, passed the Gut six days after, having previously dispatched a fast sailing frigate to watch their motions.

Extract of a letter from the captain of the brig Enterprize, bound to Amsterdam, to his owner here.

"On the 4th Jan. was boarded by a French privateer brig—took all my cabin stores: I asked them for as much as would last me in—no, they wanted all, and more than I had.

"Was spoken by several British ships of war, and treated politely."

Upwards of 80 Frenchmen, taken by American ships of war on the West India station, were yesterday lodged in jail from on board a vessel from Boston, to be conveyed in a cartel to a port in France or the West Indies.

The Dublin papers declare, that a general plan of improvement begins to manifest itself in Ireland, which must be considered as an immediate and very valuable effect of the Union. The canals, which have afforded so comprehensive an improvement to the inland commerce of this country, have suggested a similar spirit to our sister island; and a plan is already settled for making one from the county of Carlow to Aughrim, in the county of Wicklow. The Earl of Fitzwilliam has engaged liberally to support the plan, and it is hoped his estates will be considerably benefited by it. [Lon. P.

NEW YORK, April 14.

Capt. Lynch, of the ship Niagara, who arrived here yesterday, informs us, that he brought out London papers to the 6th of March; but that they were misdaid. He says the King of England continued extremely ill.—That a number of Danes and Swedes had been brought into Ramsgate—and that it was hourly expected that England would declare war against the Northern Powers. He further informs, that six American vessels sailed in company with him, bound for the Baltic, which had been chartered by British merchants, at the rate of 9l. sterling a ton—and that every American vessel that could be obtained was sought after with avidity.

LONDON, MARCH 4.

The KING's ILLNESS.

It will not be thought uninteresting by the public to be informed of the remedy to which is to be attributed under Providence, the abatement of the fever, and the tranquility of mind which resulted from so long repose. Several opiates having been tried, without the desired effect, Mr. Addington suggested a prescription which had been used by his father, Dr. Addington. A pillow, filled with hops, was placed under the King's head, which acted as a soporific, and produced the most complete success.

The quick and visible progress of amendment, since this favourable circumstance, justifies the most sanguine expectation of his Majesty's speedy recovery.

Among the numerous enquiries made after his Majesty's health, the following card was left:

Gerrard-street, Westminster.

Captain Blake, of the Grenadiers, in the Regiment of Col. Murray, at the battle of Preston-Pans, in the year 1745 left among the dead in the field of action, with no less than eleven wounds—one so capital as to carry away three inches of his skull; preserved fifty-six years to relate the event, and enabled by gracious Providence to make his personal enquiries after his Majesty's health.

By last evening's mail from Boston, information was received of the certainty of the re-election of the Federal republican Governor Strong, of Massachusetts. The majority in his favour will probably exceed five thousand votes.

By an arrival at Boston,

FROM SPAIN.

"Madrid, March 1, 1801. WAR was yesterday declared in the Council of War, against Portugal. Hostilities will shortly commence. The French army are already within the Spanish lines."

A letter from our correspondent at Philadelphia, dated on Saturday last, gives the following particulars:

"I am very sorry to inform you of an unlucky circumstance that took place in the course of last night. During a very slow ride the Constellation frigate at anchor off the Swede's Church, grounded, and filled with water; and it is feared the will not be got off without the greatest damage, if she should be got off at all."

From the Philadelphia True American, April 10.

Yesterday arrived the ship Prosperity, capt. Joughin, from Dublin. The Prosperity left Dublin on the 15th ult. with forty passengers on board. Our boat boarded the ship off Fort Mifflin, and the captain politely furnished us with the latest papers on board; but they are no later than the 4th of March. Their contents are in general uninteresting. They exhibit, however, a mournful picture of the distress and misery which reign in that country, and the dreadful description of the poorer classes, from the scarcity of provisions, and particularly potatoes, an article to them of the first necessity.—The subject of Catholic emancipation has caused considerable ferment in the public mind, and great hopes appear to be entertained that Mr. Pitt and his friends will succeed in carrying this just and prudent measure;—but, in case these hopes are not realized, serious consequences are expected to be the result. Speaking of the distresses of the poor, the Dublin Evening Post, of March 1, says,—

"It is really a melancholy sight to view the numerous objects of distress which crowd the market house on Wednesdays and Fridays in order to obtain relief from the Lord Mayor, to whom that humane chief magistrate distributes the coals deficient in measure, light bread, blown meat, &c. This week his Lordship had it in his power to administer to the wants of many; and particular care is taken that the aged and infirm should have the largest portion."

From Smith's Washington Paper.

We are enabled from official sources, to state that on the 22d Jan. orders were dispatched by the English government to the West Indies, suppressing all the Vice Admiralty courts except two, one at Jamaica, and another in the Windward Islands. It is proposed to establish permanent salaries for these two courts, and to appoint men of learning and abilities to preside in them. Several commanders of armed vessels, whose conduct has been irregular, have been recalled.

We understand that dispatches have been received from our minister at the Court of London to the 11th February, and from our minister at Berlin to the 20th of December. From the dispatches of the former, it appears that progress is making, in an amicable manner, in the pending negociations between the United States and England.

[The following is extracted from a paper called "The Rights of Man," printed in Frederick-town, Maryland, by John Winter, formerly of Philadelphia.]

Fredericktown, March 18.

Time not permitting the printer of this paper to join the respectable company of Young Gentlemen, who dined at Capt. Valentine Brother's Tavern, on Wednesday, the 4th March, he contented himself by drinking (alone) in his office, the following TOASTS.

Toast the First. JOHN ADAMS, late President of the United States: May he carry with him in retirement, a self approving conscience; the sweet reward of every honest man.

Second. THOMAS JEFFERSON, President of the United States; May the wisdom of Solomon (son of David the Prophet) attend him.

Third. AARON BURR, Vice President of the United States; May he stick close to the Friends of good Order.

Fifth. All honest Lawyers.

Sixth. More Justice in our land, and less want of it.

Seventh. Peace and Unanimity among the great body of our Citizens.

Eighth. The Freedom of the Press, not to abuse and vilify, but to advise, and mildly correct, if necessary.

Ninth. My ninety five subscribers, who withdrew their subscription, because I dared o think, not exactly as they tho't; May they remember that "a difference in opinion is not a difference in principle."

Tenth. Bad luck to Poverty; May the Jade be driven from the door of the industrious, and dwell only where idleness exists.

Eleventh. The pretty Girls of Frederick, and the ugly Girls of Frederick; May Merit only make the difference.

Twelfth. MYSELF! May the man who takes my paper and won't pay for it, never have money to buy a paper, nor a friend to lend him one; May he remain as ignorant as that man, down yonder, on Bennet's creek, who never knew there was an Indian war!

LONDON, March 2.

A letter dated Vellore, in the East Indies, Sept. 24, 1800, says—"Colonel Wellesley, who now commands the army in the field, has been a long time in pursuit of a man named Dhoondiah, who was once an officer of high rank in Tippoo's service, and escaped at the capture of Seringapatam. He has lately came up with him, having only 1200 horse. Dhoondiah, whole army consisted of 6000, hearing of our small force determined to give us battle, and actually came three miles from his camp to meet us. The two armies advanced within 100 yards of each other, when we saluted them with a round of grape, which was followed with one or two more. They immediately began to fall back; our men gave a loud shout, charged them and entirely routed the whole of his forces. A dreadful slaughter ensued, and I am sorry to add, amongst the number there were a few 100 women and children massacred. You will be astonished I suspect, to hear of so many women with an army; the reason is, a black man always takes his family with him wherever he goes, and you cannot get a servant to follow you without his father, mother, &c. accompanying him. Dhoondiah himself fought most desperately, he was riding every where, and singling out several people; after performing prodigies of valour which would have done honor to the greatest hero that ever lived, he at last fell covered with wounds. On examining him, there were found to be about 20 cuts, and I believe he had 7 or 8 balls through him. Thus fell a man whose personal courage would have placed him in the first rank of heroes."

The French Tribunate on the 9th of Jan. last, passed a law, placing a sum equal to seventeen millions sterling at the sole and absolute disposal of the first Consul. The law was not passed, however, without some opposition. In the course of the debate on the subject, M. Arnoud, who was in favour of it, spoke as follows:

"You know, Legislators, all the glory and success which the Republic has reaped from the sums heretofore granted. Our brave armies, struggling against a variety of wants and difficulties, were then temporizing with victory, until the good genius of France should bring forth, out of chaos itself, all the conceptions of prudence, of unbroken resolution, of moderation, and of magic valor, all those plans of policy abroad, and of economy at home, which, since the 9th of November, have restored the happy destiny of France, while they have run the knell of humiliation to that foe to peace, England."

The editor of a London paper, remarking on this, says,

"—— The knell of England is not yet rung. She will, doubtless, perish like every thing in this world; but ere she expires she will heap disgrace upon you already dishonored country. England is, we trust, the last nation upon the list of mortality. While France lives, England is safe; for it would be to impeach the wisdom and justice of Heaven to suppose, that France would be suffered to exist without some nation in her neighbourhood, able and willing to chastise her for her sins."

The following paragraph in the speech of Arnoud is likewise animadverted upon by the same editor:

"The rich men of every country, who are always ready to seize the favorable moment to render their funds productive, and to place them where they are in no danger from political tempests, and from the wants of government, perceiving the perfect security which the present government of France offers to all persons and all property, and perceiving also the approaching peace, are hastening to vest their money in our flourishing funds."

Remark of the London Editor—

"The orator must have been in a singular humor, to talk of the "perfect security of all persons and of all property," when every travelling carriage is obliged to take as a defence against robbers, four foot soldiers and two horsemen—where the produce of the land and the person of the cultivator are in a continual state of requisition; where ten thousand spies and informers are kept constantly on foot; where seven thousand and odd conspirators and assassins, are according to the report of the minister of police, watching for an opportunity to destroy the government; and where an hundred persons at a time can be seized and transported beyond the seas, without a trial, without hearing—nay, even without a specific accusation!"

Mr. Pitt's speech on Friday evening, in the House of Commons, has ever since been the chief topic of conversation. Its effect, as we have stated, was most deeply impressive upon the heart of every hearer.—Inadequate as must be the best report of such a speech, it has not been perused by our readers without tears. Mr. Pitt is now pursuing a line of conduct that must raise even his character, high as it before was, in the estimation of the world.

Mr. Sheridan took a line in the house of commons on Friday last very worthy of himself. It is not the first time when the country has been in difficulty, that, forgetting all party animosity, he has looked only to the general safety, and has manifested a feeling which must ever do him honor.

DENMARK.

COPENHAGEN, Feb. 17.

Defensive works on the sea side of this capital are daily carrying on with the utmost avidity.

We have received the unpleasant intelligence that on the 5th inst. an English frigate took several Swedish vessels in the harbor of Oster Risor, in Norway. Pilots to carry them out, were however refused to the English ship.

ELSINEUR, Feb. 17.

The account that an English frigate had taken several Swedish ships in the harbor Oster Risor, in Norway, which was at first doubted, is now certain.

Yesterday a Prussian ship arrived here from Memel, but was warned not to proceed further, but to return to Copenhagen.

EXTRACT

OF A PRIVATE LETTER.

"All communications between the Baltic and England seems now stopped; and from a hint given, that the English resident here should apply for permission to retire into the country, very serious events seem at illue, which we are all anxiously expecting: hitherto, however, we retain uninfected, but instead of ships, troops arrive, and only one solitary vessel, capt. Denke, from Gortenberg to Danzig, with herrings, is passed."

HAMBURGH, Feb. 20.

The note of the count de Haugwitz to lord Carysfort is a sufficient demonstration that if England does not take off the embargo on the Danish and Swedish ships, Prussia will take a very active part in the northern confederacy. In this case, it is believed that the country of Hanover, as well as the city of Hamburgh, will be occupied by Prussian troops.

The intelligence received here, of an English frigate having cut out several Swedish vessels from a port in Norway, causes a great sensation here, as it is considered as a formal rupture between England and Sweden. Denmark on the contrary, endeavors to ward off the blow and has nothing to much at heart as to keep on good terms with England.

Letters from St. Petersburgh mention that the sale of English property put under sequestration has begun.

RATISBON, Feb. 13.

Several public prints report, that general Lecourbe, with 30,000 men, will march against Turkey.

VENICE, Jan. 28.

Tranquility and order have continued to prevail here; and the report of upwards of 100 nobles having been arrested, is without foundation.

J. ELMSLEY.

DEPARTED this life on Thursday last (14th inst.) miss Susannah Beaman, daughter of mr. E. Beaman of this town. She was the hope of a fond parent and admired by all who knew her.

SHE's gone—forever gone! Her tender soul,
Freed from its painful tenement of clay,
Now soars aloft, and scorns all earthly things,
Surmounts each barrier to her heavenly flight;
Shakes off mortality; and speeds her way
Towhere nor pain, nor sickness ere can reach.
Happy deliverance! No longer now
Shall agony with all her torturing train
Inhabit thy dear form. Nature at length
Has yielded to the calls which Nature made,
And every throbbing, flutt'ring pulse of life,
From painful action, finds a sweet cessation.
Then whence these sighs? And why whene'er across
My heaving breast her dear remembrance steals,
Do tears unbidden, from their sources flow?
Do I regret her exit from this world—
A world, were oft misfortunes and diffress
Force its inhabitants to wish for death—
Or mourn that, favour'd more than thousands are,
She bade adieu to a short life of woe,
T' enjoy a lasting heritage above!

WHEREAS evil reports have been lately raised against the subscribers: that he was about to leave this Province, in order to defraud his creditors, he now informs them that he stands ready to turn out any property he has on hand, at the perisal of any judicious men to them for the payment of his honest debts—he likewise requests all those indebted to him to make payment immediately to enable him to do the same, or they may expect trouble from ROBERT YOUNG Jun.

YORK, May 14th 1801.

Also a few Lunenburg potatoes, &c. For further particulars enquire of Mr. Elizabeth Hale, at Gladstown, &c. York, May 9, 1801.

FOR SALE.

TO BE SOLD

THE two story frame HOUSE, on Lot No. 1, fronting Toronto-street, in the town of York, at present in the occupation of a gentleman, merchant, or taverner. It is 46 feet long and 35 feet deep; the lot contains one acre of excellent land, from which there is a most desirable prospect of the bay, lake, and melled fields, which promise a rich profusion of autumnal fruits. These delightful scenes afford to man a pleasing anticipation of enjoying the bounties of nature, cheer him in adversity, and support him under the various misfortunes incident to life. In the spring, when we behold plants & flowers perping out of the ground, reviving and flourishing at the approach of the vernal sun, when we behold the seed, which the laborious husbandman casts into the earth, starting into life, and rising into beauty, from the remainder of that which perished in the preceding autumn, we are filled with the most pleasing sensations of the universal revivescence of nature. Not only plants and flowers, but animals of various kinds revive and spring from the dissolution of their own kind, which had existence the preceding year. The worm first betokes motion to different kinds of frozen reptiles, and produces myriads of insects which have been lifeless through the hoary frosts of winter. The herds now go forth to graze on the verdant plains. The innumerable flocks quit their folds, with their young to feed on the mountain. The matin lark, with all the charming choir, whom kind nature wakes to cheerfulness and love, tune their melodious voices to hail the welcome returning spring.—The busy bee flies over the fields, and inserts her slender tube, to extract the liquid sweets from the melliferous flower. How pleasing! how wonderful, are the scenes presented to view! The spring seems strikingly emblematical of that grand and universal resurrection, which commences at the final consummation. May its beauties rise our affections to those superior regions of bliss, into which the virtues shall enter—where they shall enjoy an unfading spring, and flourish in immortal youth.

Foreign News.

VIENNA, Feb. 2.

We have received the important intelligence, that the court of Petersburg has declared to those of Naples and Lisbon, that if they do not shut their ports against Britain, his majesty the emperor of Russia, will not intercede in their favor with France.

FRANCE.

PARIS, Feb. 26.

THE following are stated to be the political arrangements which will take place in consequence of the treaty at Luneville:—

In Italy, the king of Naples remains in statu quo ante bellum, and in a given time his majesty is to shut up his ports against the British.

The pope becomes once more the bishop of Rome and the centre of Catholicity, with an allowance of two millions annually. His holiness acknowledges the validity of the oath administered to the clergy of the republic.—Priests to marry, and the system of divorce to be acknowledged.

The king of Sardinia unites the pope's dominions to his island.

The infant duke of Parma adds to his duchy those of Placentia, of Modena, of Tuscany, and of Lucca, which is no longer to be a republic.

Liguria is to possess the Tortonese, the territory of Alessandria, of Monferat, and part of the Artesan: the remainder of Piedmont to belong in all sovereignty to France, except Navarre and Verceil, which go to the Cisalpine republic.

The gulph of Spezzia to be united to Tuscany and to be dependent on Parma.

The grand duke of Tuscany has his indemnity in Germany.

Poland to be re-established as she stood previous to the second partition; the archduke Leopold, palatine of Hungary, is to be the king of Poland.

D'Halmont to C. Deville, commissioner general of foreign relations with the Bey of Tunis.

On board the Bon Patriotes brig, Jan. 8th, 1801.

In consequence of the request you have made to C. Noble, to obtain information respecting the army, I shall transmit to you every thing I know on the subject.

The vessels dispatched from France for Alexandria, arrived there before our departure, being twelve in number, laden with balls and muskets and bringing good news.

In regard to the army of Egypt, I can assure you, it is in good order; well clothed, well armed, and well paid; no epidemical disease has prevailed for a year past, the plague last year, occasioned very little ravage; we have lost no more than 150 men by disease. The port of Alexandria was entirely free, none of the enemy's vessels were cruizing before it. The Turks and the English, who had remained there a long time, retired between the 7th and 12th of October, and notwithstanding their cruizers, vessels were continually passing between Alexandria and Rosetta. Alexandria is in a respectable state of defence; workmen were daily employed in the fortifications, and more than 400 pieces of cannon had been mounted.—Aboukir is also well fortified, and better than it ever was before. The fortifications of Cairo were daily encreasing, on all the surrounding mountains, towers from which the soldiers can bring assistance in case of need, and where they are sheltered from any sudden attack, have been built, and each little fort is supplied with water and provisions. Damietta is also secured against any designs of the enemy. In upper Egypt we have been perfectly quiet since the treaty of peace concluded between gen. Kleber and Mourad Bey. The latter faithfully observes the conditions of the treaty; and the best understanding prevails between him and Gen. Dowzelot, who commands in upper Egypt.

When we left Alexandria, the army were expecting that a landing would be attempted by the English. But if such is their design, they must concert their measures with great prudence, for they will find men ready to receive them. Our soldiers are so well accustomed to the climate that they march through the deserts better than the natives. Our cavalry are well mounted, and our artillery is in the best state. Be assured C. Commissioner, that our troops will be highly gratified to see the English near them; if they once land, they flatter themselves that they will not suffer them to re-embark.

We met the Nile corvette, on her way to France, having on board officers charged with dispatches.

Such, C. Commissioner, are the latest news from Egypt. I beg you will receive the assurance of my respect.

(Signed) D'HALMONT.

The Commissioner of the French Republic in England, to C. Talleyrand, Minister of Foreign Affairs.

London, Jan. 30, 1801.

I have just now received the annexed letter from the Commissioners of the Transport Service, and from Mr. Dundas, informing me of a resolution to subject the French fishermen again to all the rigours of war. This violent and unforeseen determination is founded on allegations so vague, that I cannot help earnestly requesting more positive explanations on the subject. In the mean time it is my duty to transmit to you as speedy as possible, intelligence so important, that our poor fishermen may be made acquainted with it, and shelter themselves from the English cruizers, which will not fail to seize them wherever they may find them. I have just written to the Commissioners of the Marine at Dunkirk, Calais, Dieppe, Havre, and Port Malo, to request them to make known to the fishermen the danger with which they are threatened. Though in casting my eyes over the letter of Mr. Dundas of the 21st of Jan. which was transmitted to me only this day, I have reasons to apprehend that this information will arrive too late, and that a great number of unfortunate men may have become victims to a measure, the real motives of which I am not able to guess. Health and respect.

(Signed) OTTO.

TRANSPORT Office, Jan. 29, 1801.

The Lords commissioners of admiralty have just transmitted to us the copy of a letter they received from the right hon. Henry Dundas, one of his majesty's principal Secretaries of State, signifying that on account of the motives there mentioned, it is the pleasure of his Majesty, that the orders for taking or destroying the French fishing boats, and for making their crews prisoners of war, shall be again put in execution, and that all the fishermen set at liberty on their parole shall return. We send you here inclosed a copy of the letter in question, and in consequence of the orders contained in it, we demand thro' your means the immediate return into this country of all the fishermen liberated on their parole, and we inform you that such of them as shall neglect to comply with these orders, will be treated according to all the rigor of the laws of war, in case they should be again made prisoners.

We are, &c.

Mr. Dundas's Letter to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty.

Downing-street, Jan. 21.

My Lords,

Having received various accounts that the French government abuse the favor granted to the Fishermen of that nation, according to the letter I addressed to your Lordships on the 30th of May last, by which I informed you, that the orders given to the cruizers to capture all the fishermen as well as their boats, were revoked, having reason even to believe that these fishermen, as well as their boats, are put in requisition, and sent to Breft to assist in arming and equipping the fleet, and that those who were liberated from the prisons of this country and permitted to return to their country, under the express condition of not serving, are also comprehended in this requisition.—I have orders to signify to your Lordships, that it is his Majesty's pleasure that the orders given in consequence of my letter of the 29th of January, 1798, shall be again carried into execution, in what relates to the fishermen and their boats; and that the Commissioners charged with the transport service, and the care of the French prisoners of war, shall require by the usual mode of communication, that all those set at liberty on their parole shall be obliged to return, and shall signify to the French Government that such of them as neglect to comply with these orders, shall be treated according to all the rigour of the laws of war, in case they be again made prisoners while serving his Majesty's enemies.

I am, &c.

PARIS, March 3.

Letters from Munich state, that at 4 in the evening of the 8th of February, two couriers arrived at Gen. Moreau's head quarters, with the intelligence that peace had been signed. He was sitting at dinner at the time with Baron de Negri, an Austrian officer, whom he immediately clasped in his arms; and after acquainting him with the happy tidings, sent him off with a note to communicate them to M. de Chasteler, at Inspruck.

On the morning of the following day another courier reached Moreau with orders for three divisions of the French army to be in full march for France.

On the 9th ult. passed through Stutgard, M. de Schrant, Imperial Aulic Councellor, on his way to Luneville, to the Count Cobenzel in regulating the compensations and indemnities to be given to the princes deprived of their possessions on the Rhine.

The postscript of the Journal du Commerce, of the 27th of February, states the arrival of Gantheaume's squadron at Toulon, with several prizes, after having been chased by the English fleet.

FRANKFORT, Feb. 18.

More than 2,000,000 of sul-jects must change masters in Germany, in order to indemnify the grand duke of Tuscany, and other princes. It is supposed therefore, that some of the Imperial cities must, for this purpose, share the fate of the Ecclesiastical states. Prussia is believed to disapprove the change proposed in the dominion of Poland.

ITALY, Feb. 10.

Mantua has been finally delivered up to the French. 260 pieces of artillery, 60,000 lb. of gun powder, 1,167 guns and carbinets, 2,210,000 charges of ammunition, with great quantities of bombs and bullets, have been acquired with it. The Imperial garrison departed on the 17th Feb. by Verona and Legnano.—They were allowed to take with them provisions for ten or twelve days. Generals Miollis and Marmet have now the chief command in the Mantuan territory.

A Privy Council sat yesterday some hours, supposed to have had under its consideration the propriety of laying an embargo on all Prussian vessels.

We hope that one of the first acts of Government will be to stop the payment of all foreign bills drawn on our merchants. If the continent will be ungrateful to this country, by beginning an envious war against our maritime and commercial greatness, we ought to retaliate by every means in our power.—We think that to the present temporary suspension of many of the functions of Government, is solely to be attributed that some order of this kind has not already been issued.

The recall of M. Otto appears to have produced the most opposite effect to what was intended by the First Consul of France. Far from embarrassing either the new ministers or the old ones, it has convinced the nation of the perfidy and rancor of the enemy, and of the impossibility of expecting peace from any thing but the bravery of our councils and the vigour of our arms.

We are sorry to hear that a vessel, the Lady Gray, with the cloathing of ten regiments in the Mediterranean on board, has been taken off Lisbon. The loss must naturally occasion considerable inconvenience to the troops.

March 6.

The departure of citizen Otto is delayed solely on account of the King's indisposition; as his Majesty's opinion must be taken before any answer can be given to the note which Mr. Otto has presented to the transport board.

It is very generally mentioned that the Duke of Portugal will not long remain in office.

Letters received yesterday from Plymouth state, that some passengers landed there from the Lydia, an American ship, reported, that she was boarded in the channel by la Bougainville French brig privateer, of 12 guns. The Lydia having some provisions on board, had nearly been detained, as the American captain was told, orders had been issued by the Chief Consul to stop and send into French ports all neutral vessels for England with provisions.

A number of large north country ships have been cut down at the different yards in the river; and are converted into gun vessels for the naval expeditions against Sweden and Denmark.—Many of these vessels will carry eighteen 32 pounders.

The 4th regiment of infantry, have marched from Winchester to Southampton, where transports are expected to take them on board; their destination is not yet known.

The commander of the French squadron which lately escaped from Brest, has officially announced his arrival in the Mediterranean, and having captured the British frigate Succes of 32 guns, the Sprightly cutter of 16, and the Incendiary, fireship, of 14. He mentions an action which the French frigate Bravoure, had with an English frigate (probably the Concord) and says the Bravoure had ten men killed and 24 wounded; among the latter was the captain.

There is an unofficial account in one of the late French papers, of a private treaty between France and Spain, by which the latter engages to cede to the former, Louisiana and its dependencies. It is by no means improbable that some compensation has been promised to France, for the cession of Tuscany to the Duke of Parma.

The French funds continue to fall. Between the 27th ult. and the 2d inst. they fell 3 per cent; on the 2d they were at 55. For this depression no reason is assigned.

BOSTON, (Mass.) April 11.

The population of this town, agreeably to the census lately taken, is as follows:—White males 12,245; white females 12,465; blacks 1,170—Total 24,880. In 1791, the population was a trifle over 18,000.

April 18.

Since our last, the Gaba, captain Hinckley, has arrived from London. The latest paper by her is of the 9th of March.

The British King was rapidly recovering his health.—Mr. Pitt still continued to direct the helm of state; but it was supposed would retire when the King's health was re-established.—Naval preparations were making with spirit throughout the kingdom; and the price of bread was falling.

It has been ascertained that the squadron which escaped from Brest, has arrived at Toulon; having captured the British frigate Succès, of 32 guns; a cutter and a fire-ship.

An article in a London paper of the 6th March, mentions information having been given an American vessel at sea, that the French Government had issued orders for sending into France all neutral vessels bound to England with provisions.

The French prize corvette Berceau, captured by the Boston, is undergoing a thorough repair, in order to be delivered into the clean hands of the French, in the most decent order.

NEW-YORK, April 6.

Extract of a letter received on Saturday by the Fanny, from Greenock, dated Glasgow, 6th March, 1801.

"By this day's mail certain intelligence is at last received, that the king of Prussia has declared that he will take a decided part against this country in common with the northern powers; and that he is to possess himself of Hamburgh and Bremen immediately, unless Britain takes off the embargo on Swedish and Danish vessels detained in this country. The result of the above news I think cannot fail of very seriously affecting all kinds of produce, West India and American. I have had only a few minutes to write you the above intelligence, which I wish may be in time for the Fanny."

Orders have been given by government to suspend for the present, all future progress in erecting the arsenal and military stores in the vicinity of Philadelphia, and the fortifications in Rhode Island.

The two companies of dragoons have been, by direction of government, dismounted. The law which created these companies placed their continuance at the will of the President, who has thot proper to reduce them to the rank of infantry.

Arrangements have been made, in conformity to the act, passed during the last session of Congress, for a naval peace establishment which contemplates the cont[illegible]ce in actual service of 4 frigates of 44 guns, and 2 frigates of 32 guns.

All the other frigates directed by that act to be retained, will be laid up in the docks in the city of Washington.

The place selected for this purpose appears to have been chosen with great wisdom; as it is the seat of government, and will place the vessels, and those who are appointed to take care of them, under the immediate eye of the public functionaries.

April 20.

Captain Fine, of the schooner Sincerity, arrived here on Saturday, informs us, that when he left Porto Rico, the Spaniards were in daily expectation of an attack from the English—that they were putting the town in the best possible state of defence—and that the mi-ships were ordered from the interior of the country to defend the town.

A Spanish frigate, with two millions of dollars on board, has been cast away on the coast of Peru; 50 of the crew were drowned, and the money lost.

FROM THE BOSTON GAZETTE.

Messrs. Russell and Cutler,

Having had access to know the particulars of the DISPATCHES received from our minister at London, which probably will not be communicated to the public, by the president, soon, from political reasons. I embrace the opportunity to give you a sketch of the information, I have learnt; for the authenticity of which I can pledge myself, as the source from which I derived it, is most respectable.

"Mr. King transmitted to Lord Grenville a note, in which he acquainted his majesty's ministers, that he had it in command from the president, of the United-States, to declare that he had viewed with serious concern, the frequent captures of American property on the high seas, by his Britannic Majesty's cruises and armed vessels, which have been confirmed, particularly in the West-Indies, by condemnations entirely unwarrantable and unjust; contrary to the existing Treaty, and the common usage of all civilized nations. After describing the principles on which his Majesty's Justices have acted in the West-Indies, which he collected from documents furnished him and in his possession, he remonstrated in the most severe manner against such violent and unjust proceedings, declaring, that should the government of Great-Britain continue to sanction such unwarrantable depredations on the American commerce, his government could no longer suppose that that amicable and good understanding which has so happily subsisted between the two countries, was the wish of the British Government to preserve—in short, he could not but view those circumstances which have taken place, as a declaration of hostilities against the American Flag—the honor of which he was called upon to maintain.

"He expressed a sincere hope that the British Government would do away by a frank explanation, the unpleasant sentiments and ideas, such disagreeable circumstances had naturally occasioned—he hoped to find in such, professions of amity, with assurances that a stop should be put to such aggravations, the justice of which his Majesty's Ministry must evidently discriminate: in such event the United States would find no impediment towards executing with fidelity her engagements with the Court of St. James.

"Lord Grenville, in a note transmitted to Mr. King, acquainted him, he had lost no time in laying before his Majesty, the note he did him the honor on the 2d of February to address to him, and had it in command to return Mr. King an explicit declaration, that nothing has been more remote from his Majesty's most earnest wish, than to interrupt the good understanding engaged between the two countries—he intimated that the proceedings in the West Indies complained of, have been entirely without authority, and indeed contrary to the careful policy ordered to be preserved in his Majesty's West India colonies. He requested Mr. King to assure his government that a rigid enquiry will be instituted after the aggravations complained of, and that arrangements will be made to prevent such like circumstances occurring in future."

The House of Commons of Great Britain and Ireland, unanimously agreed to a resolution on the 19th of February, for settling 1000l. sterling a year for life, on Sir Sidney Smith, as an acknowledgment and reward for his distinguished services.

A second report from the British and Irish House of Commons, on the high price of provisions was taken into consideration on the 2d of March. It is proposed in this report, that 31,000l. be given in premiums, to encourage the cultivation of potatoes.

THE GOOD MAN.

The man, whose humane disposition is not weakened by any associations of life; whose ease is not violated by fashion, and whose simplicity endears every personal accomplishment: in whom art is always friend to nature, and whose head cannot betray his heart; who speaks truth, in love conceals his tho'ts with innocence, and studies the character of man, to assist virtue; silent, from affection; free, with sympathy; active from benevolence: great in the end proposed, never contemptible in the means: who sees what men want, more than what they are, what will bless them rather than what will please them: friendly to every condition; haughty in no station: open to all duties; ready in all good actions; consistent in every profession. Whose religion lives in his heart, and never deserts his life. This is the man, approved without envy, and whenever known beloved among mankind.

In one of the late engagements in Holland, col. Van Grutton asked one of his lieutenants for a quid of tobacco.—It was in the very heat of contest, and a cannon ball carried off the Lieutenant in the act of presenting it: "I must be obliged to you, then," said the colonel coolly, turning to another officer, "for you see our friend is gone away with his tobacco box."

[THE following curious parody of the much admired song, called "Crazy Jane," will, perhaps, afford amusement to some of our readers. It is extracted from an English print, and lashes, with just satiric thong, the fickle and crazy politics of the emperor of Russia.]

CRAZY PAUL!

WHY, fair Isle, in every sailor
Are such signs of rage express'd?
Can a moon-struck Russian railer,
Draw the fleet of France from Brest!

Do you dread my late embargoes?
Trust me soon my power will fail;
Man your vessels, ship your cargoes,
Fear no harm from Crazy Paul!

Do you mock my fierce defiance?
Act like men—'tis glorious fun!
Search the globe round for alliance;
League with all—adhere to none.

Once for thee I fought contagious,
('Twas a lucid interval,)
But a Gallic pest contagious,
Stole the wits of Crazy Paul!

Malta's Isle your fleet blockaded;
Martin's skill each pass secures;
Silly I, by France perfuaded,
Tho't it mine—but found it yours!

Little Paul no more grand master!
Mad with baby rag I bawl:
Malta fell, but how much faster
Fled the faith of Crazy Paul!

Now for Gallia's cause right hearty,
Fickle as the passing air,
Led about by Buonaparte!
Growling like a dancing bear;

How I shame the sons of Russia!
While intent to work they fall,
Holland, Denmark, Sweden Prussia,
Cry "come help us, Crazy Paul!"

LONDON GAZETTE EXTRAORDINARY.

Wednesday, April 15.

Admiralty Office, April 15.

Capt. Otway, of his majesty's ship the London, arrived in town this morning, with dispatches from vice-admiral Sir Hyde Parker, commander in chief of a squadron of his majesty's ships employed on a particular service, to Evan Nepean, esq. dated on board the London, in Copenhagen roads, the 6th inst. of which the following are copies:

SIR,

You will be pleased to acquaint the lords commissioners of the admiralty, that since my letter of the 23d of March, no opportunity of wind offered for going up the Sound until the 25th, when the wind shifted in most violent squall from the S. W. to the N. W. and N. and blew with such violence, and with so great a seas, as to render it impossible for any ship to have weighed her anchor. The wind and sea were even so violent, as to oblige many ships to let go a second anchor to prevent them driving, notwithstanding they were riding with two cables an end; and by the morning the wind veered again to the south-west.

On the 30th of last month, the wind having come to the northward, we passed into the Sound with the fleet, but not before I had adjusted myself of the hostile intentions of the Danes to oppose our passage, as the papers marked No. 1, 2, 3, and 4, will prove: after this intercourse, there could be no doubt remaining of their determination to resist.

After anchorage about five or six miles from the island of Huin, I reconnoitered, with vice-admiral lord Nelson, and rear admiral Graves, the formidable line of ships, radeaus, pontoons, galleys, fire ships and gun-boats, flanked and supported by extensive batteries on the two islands called the Crowns, the largest of which was mounted with from fifty to seventy-five pieces of cannon; these were again commanded by two ships of 70 guns, and a large frigate in the inner road of Copenhagen, and a sixty-four gun ships, without masts, were moored on the flat on the starboard side of the entrance into the arsenal.

The day after, the wind being S. we again examined their position, and came to the resolution of attacking them from the southard.

Vice-admiral lord Nelson having offered his services for conducting the attack, had, some days before we entered the sound, shifted his flag to the Elephant, and after having examined and buoyed the outer channel of the middle ground, his lordship proceeded with 12 ships of the line, all the frigates, bombs, fireships, and all the small vessels, and that evening anchored off Draco point to make his disposition for the attack, and wait for the wind to the southard.

It was agreed between us, that the remaining ships with me should weigh at the same moment his lordship did, and menace the Crown batteries, and the four ships of the line that lay at the entrance of the arsenal; as also to cover our disabled ships as they came out of action.

I have now the honor to enclose a copy of vice-admiral lord Nelson's report to me of the action on the 2d inst. His lordship has stated so fully the whole of his proceedings on that day, as only to leave me the opportunity to testify my entire acquiescence and testimony of the bravery and intrepidity with which the action was supported throughout the line.

Was it possible for me to add any thing to the well earned renown of lord Nelson, it would be by asserting, that his exertions, great as they may have heretofore been, never were carried to a higher pitch of zeal for his country's service.

I have only to lament that the fort of attack, confined within an intricate and narrow passage, excluded the ships particularly under my command from the opportunity of exhibiting their valor; but I can, with great truth, assert, that the same spirit and zeal animated the whole of the fleet; and I trust that the contest in which we are engaged, will, on some future day, afford them an occasion of shewing that the whole were inspired with the same spirit, had the field been sufficiently extensive to have brought it into action.

It is with the deepeſt concern I mention the loſs of capts. Moſſe and Riou, two very brave and gallant officers, and whoſe loſs, as I am well informed, will be ſenſibly felt by the families they have left behind them; the former a wife and children, and the latter an aged mother.

From the known gallantry of Sir Thomas Thompſon on former occaſions, the naval ſervice will have to regret the loſs of the future exertions of that brave officer, whoſe leg was ſhot off.

For all other particulars I beg leave to refer their lordſhips to capt. Otway, who was with lord Nelſon in the latter part of the action, and able to anſwer any queſtions that may be thought neceſſary to be put to him.

A return of the killed and wounded you will receive herewith.

I have the honor to be, &c.

HYDE PARKER.

P. S. The promotions and appointments that have taken place on this occaſion, will be ſent by the firſt opportunity that offers; but I cannot cloſe this without acquainting their lordſhips, that capt. Moſſe being killed very early in the action, lieut. John Yell and continued it with the greateſt ſpirit and good conduct; I muſt, therefore, in juſtice to his merits, beg leave to recommend him to their lordſhip's favor.

No. I.

London, in the Cattegat, March 27.

From the hoſtile tranſaction of the court of Denmark, ſending away his Britannic majeſty's charge d'affairs, the commander in chief of his majeſty's fleet is anxious to know what is the determination of the Daniſh court, and whether the commanding officer of Cronberg caſtle had received orders to fire upon the Britiſh fleet as they paſs into the ſound, as he muſt deem the firing of the firſt gun a declaration of war on the part of Denmark.

Signed, H. PARKER.

Cronberg, March 28.

In anſwer to the admiral's honored letter, I have to inform him, that no orders are given to fire on the Engliſh fleet. An expreſs is gone to Copenhagen, and ſhould any orders be ſent, I ſhall immediately ſend an officer on board to inform the admiral.

Signed, STRICKER, governor.

Tranſlation, No. III.

Cronberg caſtle, March 28.

In anſwer to your excellency's letter, which I did not receive till the following day at half paſt eight, I have the honor to inform you, that his majeſty the king of Denmark did not ſend away the charge d'affairs, but that upon his own demand he obtained a paſſport.

As a ſoldier I cannot meddle with politics; but I am not at liberty to ſuffer a fleet, whoſe intention is not yet known, to approach the guns of the caſtle which I have the honor to command.

In caſe your excellency ſhould think proper to make any propoſals to his majeſty the King of Denmark, I wiſh to be informed thereof, before the fleet approaches nearer to the caſtle. And explicit anſwer is deſired.

Signed, STRICKER, governor.

On board the London, March 29.

1 o'clock, A. M.

Sir,

In anſwer to your excellency's note juſt now received, the underſigned has only to reply, that finding the intentions of the court of Denmark to be hoſtile to his Britannic majeſty, he regards the anſwer as a declaration of war, and therefore, agreeable to his inſtructions, can no longer refrain from hoſtilities, however reluctant it may be to his feelings:—But at the ſame time will be ready to attend to any propoſals of the court of Denmark for reſtoring the former amity and friendſhip which had for ſo many years ſubſiſted between the two courts.

Signed, H. PARKER.

His excellency the governor, of Cronberg caſtle.

Elephant, off Copenhagen, April 3.

Sir,

In obedience to your directions to report the proceedings of the ſquadron named in the margin,* which you did me the honor to place under my command: I beg leave to inform you, that having, by the aſſiſtance of that able officer, capt. Riou, and the unremitted exertions of capt. Briſbane, and the maſters of the Amazon and Cruizer, in particular, buoyed the channel of the outer deep, and the poſition of the middle ground, the ſquadron paſſed in ſafety, and anchored off Draco the evening of the 1ſt; and that yeſterday morning I made the ſignal for the ſquadron to weigh, and to engage the Daniſh line, conſiſting of ſix ſail of the line, 11 floating batteries, mounting from twenty-ſix 24 pounders, to eighteen 18 pounders, and one bomb ſhip, beſides ſchooner gun-veſſels.

Theſe were ſupported by the Crown Iſlands, mounting eighty-eight cannon, and four ſail of the line, moored in the harbour's mouth, and ſome batteries on the Iſland of Amak.

The bomb-ſhip and ſchooner gun-veſſels made their eſcape, the other 17 ſail are ſunk, burnt, or taken, being the whole of the Daniſh line to the ſouthard of the Crown Iſlands, after a battle of four hours.

From the intricate navigation, the Bellona and Ruſſell unfortunately grounded, but although not in the ſituation aſſigned them, yet ſo placed as to be of great ſervice. The Agamemnon could not weather the ſhoal of the middle, and was obliged to anchor; but not the leaſt blame can be attached to capt. Fancourt; it was an event to which all the ſhips were liable. Theſe accidents prevented the extenſion of our line by the three ſhips before mentioned, who would I am confident, have ſilenced the Crown iſlands, the two outer ſhips in the harbor's mouth, and prevented the heavy loſs in the Defiance and Monarch, and which unhappily threw the gallant and good capt. Riou (to whom I had given the command of the frigates and ſloops named in the margin,† to aſſiſt in the attack of the ſhips at the harbor's mouth) under a heavy fire, the conſequence of which has been the death of capt. Riou, and many brave officers and men in the frigates and ſloops.

The bombs were directed and took their ſtations abreaſt of the Elephant, and threw ſome ſhells into the arſenal.

Capt. Roſe, who volunteered his ſervices to direct the gun brigs, did every thing that was poſſible to get them forward, but the current was too ſtrong for them to be of ſervice during the action; but not the leſs merit is due to capt. Roſe, and, I believe all the officers and crews of the gun-brigs, for their exertions.

The boats of thoſe ſhips of the fleet, who were not ordered on the attack, afforded us every aſſiſtance; and the officers and men who were in them merit my warmeſt approbation.

The Deſiree took her ſtation in raking the ſouthermoſt Daniſh ſhip of the line, and performed the greateſt ſervice.

The action began at 9 minutes paſt ten. The van, led by capt. Mutray, of the Edgar, who ſet a noble example of intrepidity, which was as well followed by every capt. officer and man in the ſquadron.

It is my duty to ſtate to you the high and diſtinguiſhed merit and gallantry of rear-admiral Graves.

To capt. Foley, who permitted me the honor of hoiſting my flag on board the Elephant, I feel under the greateſt obligations; his advice was neceſſary on many important occaſions during the battle.

I beg leave to expreſs how much I feel indebted to every captain, officer and man, for their zeal and diſtinguiſhed bravery on this occaſion. The hon. col. Stewart did me the favor to be on board the Elephant, and himſelf, with every officer and ſoldier under his orders, ſhared with pleaſure the toils and dangers of the day.

The loſs in ſuch a battle has naturally been great. Amongſt many other brave officers and men who were killed, I have with ſorrow to place the name of capt. Moſſe, of the Monach, who has left a wife and ſix children to lament his loſs. Among the wounded is that of capt. ſir Thomas B. Thompſon, of the Bellona.

I have the honor to be, &c.

APRIL 18.

Some accounts arrived yeſterday, brought by his Royal highneſs prince Adolphus, who landed on Thurſday at Yarmouth, that gave moſt favorable account of the progreſs of the negociation carrying on between lord Nelſon and the prince royal of Denmark, which has for its object the reſtoration of a perfect good underſtanding with all our ancient maritime allies of the north.

With our laſt Hamburgh letters we received the following correct copies of the correſpondence which paſſed between lord Nelſon and the prince royal of Denmark, on the 2d inſt. immediately on the latter finding the Daniſh ſhips and batteries within his power.

The papers, copies of which we preſent our readers, are genuine, and excluſively, we believe in our poſſeſſion.

No. I.

Lord Nelſon has directions to ſpare Denmark when no longer reſiſting; but if the firing is continued on the part of Denmark, lord Nelſon muſt be obliged to let on fire all the floating batteries he has taken, without having the power of ſaving the brave Danes who have defended them.

Dated on board his majeſty's ſhip Elephant, Copenhagen roads, April 2d, 1801.

(Signed) NELSON and BRONTE.

Vice-admiral, under the command of admiral ſir Hyde Parker.

No. II.

To the brothers of Engliſhmen, the Danes.

His royal highneſs the prince royal of Denmark has ſent me, general adjutant Lindholm, on board his Britannic majeſty's vice-admiral, the right hon. lord Nelſon to aſk the particular object of ſending the flag of truce.

No. III.

Lord Nelſon's Anſwer.

Lord Nelſon's object in ſending the flag of truce, was humanity: he therefore conſents that hoſtilities ſhall ceaſe and the wounded Danes may be taken on ſhore, and lord Nelſon will take his priſoners out of the veſſels, and burn or carry off his prizes as he ſhall think fit.

Lord Nelſon, with humble duty to his royal highneſs the prince of Denmark, will conſider this the greateſt victory he ever gained, if it may be the cauſe of a happy reconciliation and union between his moſt gracious ſovereign and his majeſty the king of Denmark.

(Signed) NELSON and BRONTE.

March 28.—A private letter from Peru, of the 16th ult. contains the following intereſting paragraph:—"I can this day give you the important intelligence, that of the two parties which now divide the Divan or Turkiſh council of ſtate, viz. the Engliſh and Ruſſian, the latter has gained the aſcendancy. On this account Lord Elgin has ſent his private ſecretary to Rhodes, with inſtructions to Gen. Abercrombie, who will probably abandon the deſcent upon Egypt, if it has not already been effected."

The idea of a negociation being about to take place, has produced a conſiderable riſe in the funds.

The French papers ſtate, that the Engliſh cannot land on any point of Syria before June, without loſing half their number by the plague, and at this time they cannot paſs the deſart without loſing the other half by heat and thirſt.

It is ſaid at Paris, the King of Pruſſia has cloſed the port of Lindau againſt the Engliſh, and that Lord Carysfort has his effects packed ready to leave Berlin on the arrival of a courier from his court.

The plan for reviſing the Batavian conſtitution has been ſubmitted by the Directory to the Legiſlative Body, who were to make their report on the 16th. It is ſuppoſed the change will be advantageous to the Houſe of Orange.

The India Company has moſt laudably ordered the whole of the immenſe quantity of plate found in the Zenana and State Barbars at Seringapatam, and aſcertained to have belonged to the Myſore family and inferior Rajahs, to be reſtored.

The laſt of the Moniteurs contains a curious report from Fouche, miniſter of the police, to the Conſuls, complaining that the revenue of Clermont, conſiſting of 20,000 francs, had been ſeized on its way to Lyons, notwithſtanding the eſcort of nine or ten gendarmes, mounted and well armed.

We have the pleaſure to lay before our readers the following Ukaſe or Proclamation of the Autocrat of all the Ruſſias, on his aſcending the Throne; Copy of the Proclamation of the new Emperor of Ruſſia, on his acceſſion to the Throne.

"WE, by the Grace of God, Alexander the Firſt, Emperor and Autocrator of all the Ruſſias, &c. &c. declare to all our faithful ſubjects,

"It has pleaſed the decrees of the Almighty to ſhorten the life of our beloved parent ſovereign Emperor Paul Petrovitz, who died ſuddenly by an apoplectic ſtroke, at night between the 11th and 12th day of this month. We on receiving the hereditary Imperial Throne of all the Ruſſias, do receive alſo at the ſame time the obligation to govern the people committed unto us by the Almighty, according to the laws and the heart of her who reſts in God, our moſt auguſt Grand-mother ſovereign empreſs Catherine the Great, whoſe memory will be dear for ever to us, and the whole country. Following the ſteps of her wiſe intentions, we hope to arrive at the object of carrying Ruſſia to the ſummit of glory, and to procure an uninterrupted happineſs to all our faithful ſubjects, whom we do hereby invite to feal their fidelity to us by the oath, before the face of all-ſeeing God, whoſe aſſiſtance we implore to grant us power to ſupport the weight now reſting upon us.

"Given at St. Peterſburg, the 12th March, (O. S.) 1801.

"ALEXANDER."

While we feel ſo much elated with our ſucceſſes in the North Europe, it is not unimportant the public ſhould know that in the courſe of yeſterday, two expreſſes arrived from France to Mr. Otto. The events which we have above noticed, cannot fail to have a very conſiderable influence in the negociations which have been for ſome time going forward.

Our funds have, during the week, riſen about two per cent. on the rumour of adjuſtment, and were yeſterday a fraction better than on Friday. Lord St. Helens, it is ſtated, is to be employed on the occaſion.

The Paris papers of the 13th inſtant, contain a copy of the notification of the King of Prussia to the Regency of Hanover, announcing his intention of taking possession of the Electorate of Hanover. The electorate is, no doubt, by this time, in the possession of the Prussian troops, as they had passed the frontiers, under the command of the Duke of Brunswick.

It was yesterday reported that an overland dispatch from India had arrived, with advice that an army of 12,000 men, consisting of Europeans and Sepoys, have arrived at Suez from Bombay, to co-operate with Sir Ralph Abercrombie's army.

March 30. Yesterday we received Paris journals to the 24th inst. The Moniteur of that date is filled with desultory advices from Egypt, brought to France in a small brig from Alexandria. No mention is made of our expedition, or of admiral Gantheaume's squadron, which has certainly sailed direct for Alexandria; and from the safe arrival of two French frigates there, that port does not appear to be closely blockaded.

The new overtures with France have caused an increased activity in the correspondence with the court of Berlin, for which place a King's messenger was sent off yesterday afternoon. It is the most earnest wish of the King's government, that the unhappy misunderstanding which prevails with different foreign courts should be amicably and speedily adjusted.

The law arrangements of the new administration are yet incomplete. Lord Eldon still holds the justiceship of the common Pleas, and Lord Loughborough the seals, altho' his lordship many days since took leave of the Court of Chancery. Sir Wm. Grant is in possession of the rolls, and Sir Pepper Arden is for the moment without an office.

Mr. Dundas has not yet quitted his office, being employed in answering every dispatch, and completing all the business of his department up to the date of his resignation.

March 31. The intended negociation has engaged much public attention.—After all effort of a pacific nature, we are sorry to find, that Buonaparte will not treat without the consent of his allies. In such a case we know that the terms must be very extravagant; but no decision can take place till we learn his ultimatum. Nothing has farther transpired than what we communicated in a former paper; and every pretended fact is the vague and idle speculation of news writers.

April 2. At 1 o'clock this morning, we received a Hamburgh mail. The chief contents, which are very interesting, may be seen in the following:

Brunswick, March 22. We learn that the answer of the British Cabinet to the Prussian declaration has been received, and that in consequence several regiments at Berlin have got orders to hold themselves in readiness to march. The same orders have been sent to the Prussian army of observation in Westphalia. The military rout of the Duke of Brunswick has of course been changed. His highness is to command the Prussian army, and will be at Minden the 28th inst. This army is to occupy part of the electorate of Hanover, particularly the mouths and banks of the Elbe, Weser, and Ems.

Peterburgh, March 6. The trade & correspondence with France being allowed as before the war, a new course of exchange upon Paris has been introduced. By the Court Gazette of the 16th inst, the rouble was 49 fous.

The Russian department of trade has given orders for the sale of all the sequestered British goods by public auction on the exchange.

April 15. The report of the death of the emperor of Russia proves to be well founded; but so many falsehoods have been circulated respecting the fate of his majesty, we at first received it with suspicion. It appears that on the 11th ult. his imperial majesty went to rest as usual, and next morning was found lifeless in his bed, having died, as it is given out, in an apoplectic fit; but, as it is suspected, by violent means, some say poison. He had disgusted or affronted all his nobles and officers, taking them into favor one day, and disgracing them the next. His tyranny had left him no friends; he was universally hated; every individual was afraid of becoming the victim of his caprice. The history and practice of the Russian court pointed out his fate; he himself dreaded it, and seldom slept twice in the same room. The present event was foreseen, and predicted by persons in this country, the best informed on Russian affairs.

His eldest son, Alexander, was immediately proclaimed emperor; and he commenced his reign by issuing the ukase or proclamation, which appears in the third page of this day's paper.

Among other steps, the new emperor Alexander, dispatched a messenger to count Woronzow, in this country, re-appointing him ambassador from Russia. The messenger came over from Himburgh in the Dolphin packet, capt. Hearne, and arrived in London about 8 o'clock on Monday night. His dispatches were delivered to the chaplain of the Russian legation, in Harley street, and an express was immediately sent off to count Woronzow, at Southampton. The messenger brought a letter from M. Vander Pahlen, the Russian secretary of state, to lord Hawkesbury, our minister for foreign affairs, acquainting him with the event, and assuring him it was the wish of the emperor to re-establish the relations of amity between Russia and England. A letter was also brought, written by the emperor Alexander himself, to our King, full of the most conciliatory expressions. Mr. Sharpe, our late consul in Russia, but now in London, is said to have received passports, and to have been intreated to return immediately. The British seamen have been set at liberty by the new emperor, and the sequestration taken off British property, including ships. In consequence of this intelligence, merchants, who a week ago would have sold their property in Russia for 10 per cent. yesterday refused 50. The greatest joy prevailed in the mercantile world. No happier event could have occurred for it than the death of Paul. The funds rose nearly two per cent. and the speedy dissolution of the northern confederacy was regarded as certain.

April 17.

It is generally reported that sir J. B. Warren had fallen in with Gantheaume in the Mediterranean, and taken 7 sail of the line, and a numerous convoy of transports bound for Alexandria. If it further said, that sir R. Abercrombie having defeated one division of Menou's army, the latter had proposed to capitulate for the evacuation of Egypt.

Sir S. Smith commands the van guard of the English army in Egypt.

The prince of Wallachia has obtained some advantage over Pallein Oglou.

A truce of four months has been agreed on between Spain and Portugal.

The French are now marching an army of 45,000 men against Portugal.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 20.

There is not much harmony existing between lord Keith and lord Elgin.—The latter had sent M. Morrier, his secretary, to the camp of the grand vizier, to renew his intrigue of another capitulation, and thereby give lord Elgin all the glory of the evacuation of Egypt, which is believed the English are ready to sign. On his return he was arrested by sir R. Abercrombie, and carried before a council of war, where he was strictly examined respecting his mission. After the council broke up, 24 hours were allowed him to leave the camp, to which he was ordered never to return.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, June 13.

Last Monday was a day of universal rejoicing in this town, occasioned by the arrival of the news of the splendid victory gained by Lord Nelson over the Danes in Copenhagen Roads on the 2d of April last—in the morning the great guns at the garrison were fired; at night there was a general illumination, and bone-fires blazed in almost every quarter.

HUMOUR.

IT is said of Governor Tichenor, that in one of his travels through the state of New Jersey, he called on a credulous old Dutchman, an innkeeper and an old acquaintance. A short time before he arrived at the inn, he alighted from his carriage, took up an oaken leaf, and carefully wrapped it in a piece of paper. After the usual ceremonies, he asked his landlord if he ever tasted of the tree of life? He said he had not. The Governor very sedately took from his pocket the said oaken leaf, and presented it to the Dutchman; who, after viewing it, took a bite of it again and again, expecting from its effects that he should live for ever. The Governor soon after leaving the inn, the landlord ran after him, and anxiously requested, that if ever he should come that way again, he would by no means let his wife taste of that leaf.

Messrs. PRINTERS,

FROM the high price which HEMP has been, and the scarcity of but small quantities being received from the Baltic, it is to be hoped that the Upper Canada Fisheries, from personal as well as from patriotic motives, will pay attention to this subject, and for a good preparation of their ground with this valuable article.

Hemp is a rapid-rooted plant, and therefore does best in a deep and free soil. It is luxuriant, and quick in its growth, and consequently requires a rich & well prepared soil. The soil which has been found best for it, is a rich gravelly loam, or a loose, black mould, which is very deep. It is an error to think that it needs a wet soil; for it bears the drought equal to any plant. It has been found by experience to answer well on a drained swamp. It is not uncommon for one acre to yield half a ton; which at the price it now bears, will bring two hundred dollars. The time for sowing is as early in the spring as the ground can be got into good order, as it is a plant not easily injured by the frost; but the middle of May will not be too late for sowing. It would be doing well if those who are acquainted with the raising of this important article would make it known, that those who are disposed to render their country an essential service, may commence it next spring.

From the Albany Centinel of May 8.

BOSTON, April 15.

The American Navy—Sick!—Sick!

WE learn, that orders have been received by the commander of the Congress frigate, lying in this harbour, to proceed with her to Washington, the first fair wind;—where she is to be laid up in ordinary—in other words, to rot.

The "last words and dying speech" of the American Navy will be pronounced in the course of two years.—The George Washington, of 32 guns; Ganges, 26; Connecticut 26; Maryland 26; Merrimack 24; Portsmouth 24; Patapsco 24; Baltimore 22; Delaware 22; Trumbull 18; Warren 18; Herald 18; Norfolk 18; Richmond 16; Augusta 16; Eagle 14; Experiment 12; Enterprise 12; and Scammel 12; are all to be knocked down by the auctioneer's hammer; and the proceeds —— we hope not divided among navy agents, sub-agents, sub-agents clerks, and brokers.—Seven of the refuse of our infant Hercules, are to be laid up, like Acer-hulls, in a fresh water dock; to furnish food for the Virginia worms,—who, in eighteen months, will prove as destructive to them, as Lord Nelson did to the French fleet in Egypt and the Danish in Copenhagen Roads. The six remaining frigates will have their death warrants signed as soon as the others are handsomely dispatched.—What will the Yankee blue jackets say to these things? Will they not curse the policy which thus lops off the right arm of our country's defence and glory? But they cannot complain of want of warning! We have repeatedly demonstrated to them, that such would be the effect of placing Jacobins in government, and if they ever wish to see our country respectable as a maritime nation, they must again rally round the Federal Ensign; and render it triumphant.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

The Editor of Poulson's Philadelphia Daily Advertiser, having received from a friend, the following receipt for the cure of the Cancer, is induced, from the veracity of the writer, and the importance of such a remedy to many afflicted individuals, to lay it before the public.

A safe and efficacious remedy for the CANCER.

"Take the narrow-leafed Dockroot and boil it in water till it be quite soft; then bathe the part affected in the decoction as hot as can be borne, three or four times a day; the root must then be mashed and applied as a poultice.

"This root has proved an effectual cure in many instances; it was first introduced by an Indian Woman, who came to the house of a person in the country, who was much afflicted with a cancer in her mouth: the Indian perceiving something was the matter, enquired what it was, and; on being informed, said she would cure her. The woman consented to a trial, though with little hope of success, having previously used many things without receiving any benefit. The Indian went out and soon returned with a root, which she boiled and applied as above, and in a short time a cure was effected. The Indian was very careful to conceal what these roots were, and refused giving any information respecting them; but happening one day to lay some of them down, and step out, the woman concealed one of the roots, which she planted, and soon discovered what it was; not long after a person in that neighbourhood being afflicted with the same complaint in her face, she informed her of this remedy, and in two weeks she was cured. So done after a man was cured of a confirmed cancer upon the back of his hand; after suffering much and unable to get any rest, being told of this root, it was procured and prepared for him; he kept his hand in the water as hot as he could bear it for some time; the root was then applied as a poultice, and that night he slept comfortably, and in two weeks his hand was entirely cured.

"Daniel Brown's father having had a cancer in his head, had it cut out and apparently healed; but some of the roots remaining, it again broke out; his doctor then informed him that nothing could be done, except burning it out with hot irons: This being too harsh a remedy to submit to, he was much discouraged. The Dockroot was soon after recommended, and it cured him in a short time.

"In the beginning of the winter of 1798, a hard lump appeared in the middle of my under lip, and in a short time became sore; it continued in that situation till spring, when it increased and became painful; I then shewed it to a person of skill, and soon found he apprehended it to be cancerous; after two or three different applications, the complaint encreased and spread rapidly.

"Lot Trip having heard of my complaint, mentioned this root. I called on him to know the particulars of it—he give me the necessary information—the root was procured, and used in the manner above mentioned—taking a mouthful of the water, in which the root was boiled, and letting it drip over my lip as hot as I could bear it; this I did three or four times a day, and then kept the root to it a day and a night, and in two days the pain entirely left it, and in two weeks it was cured.

"This remedy is simple, safe, and not attended with any thing unpleasant."

From the London Gazette of March 17.

His Majesty in Council was this day pleased to declare the Right Hon. Philip Earl of Hardwicke, Lieutenant General and General Governor of that part of the United Kingdom called Ireland.

Whitehall, March 17. The King has been pleased to constitute and appoint the Right Hon. Henry Addington, John Smyth, Charles Small Pybus, Esquires; George Thynne, Esq; (commonly called Lord George Thynne) and Nathaniel Bond, Esq; to be Commissioners for executing the office of Treasurer of his Majesty's Exchequer:

Also to appoint the Rt. Hon. Charles Yorke, to be his Majesty's Secretary at War.

April 14. His Majesty in Council was this day graciously pleased to deliver the Great Seal to the Right Hon. John Lord Eldon, whereupon the oath of Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain was, by his Majesty's command, administered to his Lordship, and his Lordship took his place at the board accordingly.

LONDON, April 17.

The first effect which has resulted from our victory over the Danish fleet, has been the removal of the sequestration upon British property at Hamburgh. The Danish troops are also quitting the city.

The Danish ships which were destroyed in the action of the 2d, were cut down ships of the line and floating batteries. The remainder of the Danish fleet is in the harbour. When capt. Otway, however, came away, our bomb-vessels were so disposed, as to be able to bombard the fleet and the city with great effect.

It now remains to be seen whether the Danes will risk the renewal of hostilities. Undoubtedly the death of Paul must produce a considerable influence upon their councils and conduct, unless the communication of that event be accompanied with an assurance from the new Emperor, that he will not abandon the Northern confederacy.—Perhaps our opinion upon that subject is different from that of other persons. The release of the British seamen, detained in Russia, proves that his Imperial Majesty disapproves that part of the conduct of his predecessor; but it will be recollected that the cause of that proceeding was not the Northern confederacy, but the refusal of Great Britain to cede Malta.

It was rumoured this morning that an engagement had taken place in the Mediterranean between our squadron and Gantheume's, in which the latter was defeated, with the loss of several of his ships. We have not been able to trace this rumour to any accurate source.

By letters received from Trieft, we learn, that the English have taken Corfu.

On the 5th the Danish troops, under the command of Prince Frederic of Heffe, took poffeffion of Lubec.

Paris papers to the 13th inft. were received at our office this morning. In our curfory view, we find, by a letter from Berlin, March 29, that Field Marshal the Duke of Brunfwick has accepted the command of the army deftined to occupy the electorate of Hanover; and that thefe troops had already paffed the frontiers. The Moniteur ftates, that Prince Adolphus and Lord Caryfort had been actively employed to retard their hoftile operations, but that his Pruffian Majefty had perfifted in his refolution.

The King of Sweden was, during the whole cannonade, a fpectator of the paffage of the Engliih through the Sound.

There is certain advice from Berlin of the 31ft ult. that Lord Caryfort is preparing for his departure.

The regency of Hanover has received a requifition to furnish 30 rafh the difpofitions of the Pruffian government, in which cafe the country fhould be trusted in a friendly manner; if not they muft expect the confequences.

The court of Berlin was about to iffue a manifefto againft the Elector of Hanover, and moft of the regiments have received orders to march.

Hanover, April 8. To-day the firft Pruffian troops entered Hamelin and the vicinity, and took poffeffion of Fort George.

Hanoverian States, April 8. By the convention dated the 3d, the Regency of Hanover have agreed with the Pruffian Counfellor of State, Schulenberg, to make no oppofition to the entrance of the Pruffian troops; his Pruffian Majefty promifing to protect the conftitution of the ftate and the property of individuals.

LONDON, April 18.

The Hanoverian army is to be difmiffed, excepting 6000 men. So far from believing that Pruffia will evacuate Hanover, or change her conduct towards this country, we are perfuaded, fhould the Danes leave Hamburg, Pruffian troops will inftantly occupy that city. This opinion we found on good information.

The future conduct of the new Emperor of Ruffia is, perhaps, as little foreseen as that of the King of Pruffia is underftood. Alexander, it is true, has written very flattering letters to this country; but let us conider the circumftances under which he wrote them. He knew nothing of the hoftile ftcps we have taken againft Denmark, nor even of the arrival of our fleet in the North Sea; he underftood the queftion of fearching neutral fhips was merely the fubject of negociation. He might feel that his father had no authority for his claims to Malta; that he acted unjuftly in feizing our fhips, and he might be willing to make reparation; but the fearching of neutrals is another, a new queftion, which adopting, as he profeffes, the principles of his grandmother, he may not be difpofed to yield. His friendly letters could allude only to the difpute about Malta, not to the cauſe of the preſent quarrel; and we ſet the leſs value upon them, as we underſtand he has written letters as friendly to the King of Pruſſia, and the Crown Prince of Denmark, in which he pledges himſelf to obſerve with faith exiſting treaties.

There is indeed this great advantage, in the change of Paul for Alexander, that the latter is a reaſonable being, with whom we can treat; he is deſirous of peace, and of a good underſtanding with this country. But it does not follow, that he will abandon a favourite part of the policy, not only of his grandmother, but of the Ruſſian Court, to purchaſe our friendſhip. Under the preſent circumſtances it is highly probable that hoſtilities will not be renewed in the Baltic at preſent—that an appeal to the Ruſſian government will be made by Denmark, which will produce negociation; but how the queſtion of ſearch will be determined we are at a loſs to conjecture.

While we draw the ſituation of the North in leſs flattering colours than the public ſee it, we have reaſon to ſpeak more favourably on the ſubject of the treaty carrying on with France. Diſpatches have juſt been ſent off by M. Otto with the anſwer of our government to the Chief Conſul's laſt propoſals—Egypt, Egypt is the great obſtacle, whoſe undecided fate arreſts the progreſs of negociation. Should it be conquered, we fear peace will be diſtant; but ſhould Sir Ralph Abercrombie fail, it may take place more ſuddenly than is generally imagined. The intercourſe between Lord Hawkeſbury and Mr. Otto has not been fruitleſs. With the exception of Egypt the outlines of a preliminary treaty can nearly be ſketched out. The death of Paul may have relieved Buonaparte from his promiſe to obtain Malta for Ruſſia; a circumſtance of no inconſiderable facility to negociation.

There wants but ſucceſs in Egypt to complete the flattering change in affairs which have taken place this week, and every morning falſe reports are circulated on the ſubject, which in the preſent temper of the public mind, are eagerly believed. Yeſterday Egypt was evacuated, Gauthenume defeated and taken, and a fleet of fourteen French tranſports with troops for Egypt captured. For one of theſe rumours was there the ſlighteſt foundation; but they had the effect of raiſing the funds.

Napper Tandy's trial at Lifford is over. Several applications to put off the trial were refuſed by the Court, and arguments in point of law overruled; on which Mr. Tandy's counſel threw up their brief. Mr. Tandy then addreſſed the court in a ſhort but impreſſive ſpeech, avowing every thing ſet forth in the indictment, and ſaid his heart diſdained a falſehood. Judge Chamberlain begged he would weigh well the conſequence of ſuch a declaration: that ſentence of death muſt inſtantly follow. Mr. Tandy anſwered, he was not afraid to meet death in any ſhape; he knew well the awful ſentence of the law; he was ready to receive it with the reſignation of a Chriſtian, and with the firmneſs of a man. The Judge (Chamberlain) then paſſed ſentence of death on him, which is to take place on the 4th of May next.

April 22.

This morning we again received Paris Journals. They come down one day later than thoſe we announced yeſterday. Their contents are moſt intereſting, but we hope will not receive confirmation. The official paper is not among thoſe that have reached us; and until it ſhall arrive, or advices from our own commanders, we ſhall not be able to determine what degree of credit is due to the news given in the non-official journals of the 18th inſtant, which ſtate, that on the 20th of March, the French in Egypt, commanded by Menou in perſon, attacked and defeated General Abercrombie's army, killing 3000 and taking 600 priſoners, and among the latter, Gen. Abercrombie himſelf. One of the accounts is from Malta, the other comes by way of Naples and Milan. Reſpecting the latter it may be obſerved that, if there are no miſtakes in the dates, the news muſt have reached Naples in 7 or 8 days from Egypt; for it would take about 3 days to travel from Naples to Milan.—But on the whole there was ſufficient time for the intelligence by one route or other to reach Paris. We cannot be long without a knowledge of the real ſtate of matters in that quarter.

Theſe papers contain a copy of the ſubmiſſion of the Regency of Hanover to the terms enjoined by our guardian faithful ally the King of Pruſſia.

The following extracts will put our readers in poſſeſſion of every thing worthy of notice in the Paris journals that have reached us:—

Paris, April 17.—Letters received from Malta aſſert, that general Abercrombie, attacked at the ſame time by the garriſon of Alexandria, and by General Menou in perſon, who fell upon the left of the enemy, with more than 20,000 men, and 30 pieces of artillery, has been completely routed. According to theſe letters, 3000 Engliſh remained on the field of battle, and 900 out of the French cavalry, were made priſoners.—General Abercrombie is among the number of the latter.—This battle is ſaid to have taken place on the 20th March.

Head quarters at Milan, April 2.

I take the earlieſt opportunity of communicating to you the news which I have received from General Murat, the Commander in Chief. He announced to me that the peace with the court of Naples was ſigned on the night of the 20th of March. In conſequence of this peace, the advanced guard of the army of obſervation of the South, conſiſting of 12,000 men, has ſet out on its march to occupy the peninſula of Tarentum and Otranto, following the line of Gravina, as far as the mouth of the Bradano, in the ſea. Another diviſion of about 4000 men, will occupy Peſcara, extending its advanced poſts as far as Sangro, without paſſing that limit. The Court of Naples renounces the iſland of Elba, and all its right to Toſcany. All the articles of the armiſtice, which concern the Engliſh and the Turks, will be religiouſly obſerved.

According to intelligence which arrived here from Naples, on the evening of the 30th of March, it appears certain, that the Engliſh have been beaten in Egypt, and obliged to re-embark. Communicate, Citizen, if you pleaſe, this joyful news to the Ciſalpine Government, and accept of my ſentiments of eſteem and friendſhip.

VIENNA, March 28.

An extraordinary courier arrived here this day, ſent from General Moreau to the Archduke Charles; his paſſport ſtated, that he was to uſe the utmoſt ſpeed by the way, being charged with diſpatches of the greateſt importance. We are aſſured that two diviſions of the French army, thoſe of General Grouchi and General Richepauſe, are deſtined to traverſe Hungary, in order to repair to the frontiers of Turkey, and compel the Ottoman Porte to cede Egypt to France.

RIGA, April 1.

Intelligence has been received here from St. Peterſburgh, that not only the exportation of all kinds of merchandiſe is again permitted, but that the embargo on Engliſh veſſels is alſo to be taken off, provided the Engliſh Government liberates thoſe of Denmark and Sweden.

A letter from Copenhagen of the 28th ſtates, that Admiral Nelſon was on the point of ſailing for Revel, when the intelligence of the death of Paul I. arrived. It adds, that doubts were entertained whether he would proceed further.

On the 13th, Lawiſton, aide de camp of Buonaparte, paſſed thro' Hamburgh, accompanied by Lieut. Berthier, of the Conſular guard, on their way to Copenhagen.

It is uncertain in what manner Sir Hyde Parker will act in regard to proceeding up the Baltic, but government has loſt no time in ſending him inſtructions, which were forwarded by Col. Stewart, who left London on Monday night on his return to Copenhagen.

ENGLAND.

LONDON, April 21.

Yeſterday afternoon, after this paper was at preſs, lieutenant colonel Stewart, of the 29th regt. arrived at the admiralty with diſpatches from ſir Hyde Parker; the ſubſtance of which were communicated in the evening to the lord mayor, by a letter from the firſt lord of the admiralty, of which the following is a copy:

"MY LORD,

"I have the honor to acquaint your lordſhip that the hon. lieut. col. Stewart arrived this morning with diſpatches from admiral ſir Hyde Parker, containing the terms of an armiſtice concluded with the Daniſh government on the 9th inſt. by which it is agreed, that no act of hoſtility ſhall be committed by either party on the coaſt of the different iſlands and provinces of Denmark and Jutland, for the ſpace of fourteen weeks, and fourteen days notice to be given before hoſtilities are recommenced. The court of Denmark has agreed to ſuſpend during that period, her co-operation under the treaty of armed neutrality.

"I have the honor to be,
my lord, your lordſhip's humble ſervant,
"ST. VINCENT."

Admiralty, April 29.

THE ARMISTICE.

"The Daniſh government on one part, and admiral ſir Hyde Parker, K.B. commander in chief of his Britannic majeſty's naval force in the road off Copenhagen, on the other, equally induced by ſentiments of humanity to put a ſtop to the effuſion of blood, and preſerve the city of Copenhagen from the calamitous conſequences of a continuation of hoſtilities, have mutually agreed to a ceſſation of arms.

"With this view his majeſty the king of Denmark, his appointed major general Erneſtus Frederic Wolterdorff, chamberlain to his Daniſh majeſty, and colonel of a regiment, and adj. general Hans Lidholm, as commiſſioners, to conclude this armiſtice; and admiral ſir Hyde Parker has appointed on his part, Horatio lord Nelſon, knight of the order of the bath, duke of Bronte in Sicily, grand croſs of the order of Ferdinand and Merit, knight of the Auſtrian order of the creſcent, and vice-admiral of the fleet of his Britannic majeſty; and alſo lieutenant col. Wm. Stewart, commander of a detachment of land troops on board the fleet; which commiſſioners have this day met together, and after changing their full powers, agreed to the following conditions:—

ARTICLE I.

From the moment of the ſigning of this armiſtice, all hoſtilities ſhall ceaſe between the fleet under the command of admiral ſir Hyde Parker and the city of Copenhagen, and all armed ſhips and veſſels belonging to his Daniſh majeſty which ſhall be found in the road or harbor of that city, as alſo between the different iſlands and provinces of Denmark, Jutland included.

ARTICLE II.

The armed ſhips and veſſels of his Daniſh majeſty ſhall remain in their preſent condition, as well with reſpect to the manner in which they are armed, as the military poſition; and the treaty known by the name of the treaty of the armed neutrality, ſhall, ſo far as concerns the active, co-operation of Denmark, remain ſuſpended ſo long as this armiſtice ſhall continue in force.

On the other hand, armed ſhips and veſſels under the command of admiral ſir Hyde Parker, ſhall in no manner whatever diſturb the city of Copenhagen, or the armed ſhips and veſſels of his Daniſh majeſty on the coaſts of the different iſlands and provinces of Denmark, Jutland included; and to prevent every thing which may create diſturbance or ſuſpicion, admiral ſir Hyde Parker ſhall on no account permit any ſhips or veſſels, under his command, to approach within cannon ſhot of the armed ſhips or fortifications of his Daniſh majeſty in the road of Copenhagen.—This limitation ſhall however not extend to any ſhips which muſt neceſſarily paſs and repaſs through the king's deeps.

ARTICLE III.

This armiſtice ſhall ſecure the city of Copenhagen, as alſo the coaſts of Denmark Jutland, and the iſlands, againſt the attack of any other fleet or war, which now or hereafter, during the continuance of this armiſtice, may be ſent by his Britannic majeſty into theſe ſeas.

ARTICLE IV.

The fleet of admiral ſir Hyde Parker ſhall be at liberty to procure from the city of Copenhagen, and along the coaſts of the different iſlands and provinces of Denmark, Jutland included, whatever may be wanted for the health and cure of the crews.

ARTICLE V.

Admiral ſir Hyde Parker ſhall engage to ſend on ſhore all the ſubjects of his Daniſh majeſty which are at preſent on board the Engliſh fleet under his command; and the Daniſh government engages to account both for them and for the wounded which have been ſuffered to come on ſhore after the battle of the 2d, in the unfortunate caſe of the renewal of hoſtilities with Great-Britain.

ARTICLE VI.

The coaſting trade of Denmark, with the different parts of the coaſt included within the extent of this armiſtice, ſhall in no manner be diſturbed by any Britiſh ſhip or veſſel, and admiral or Hyde Parker ſhall iſſue the neceſſary inſtruction to that purpoſe.

ARTICLE VII.

This armiſtice ſhall continue in force during the ſpace of fourteen weeks from the date of its being ſigned by the contracting parties; after the expiration of that time, each of the ſaid parties ſhall be at liberty to declare it terminated, and recommence hoſtilities, giving a previous notice of fourteen days.

The conditions of this armiſtice ſhall on every occaſion, be explained in the moſt liberal and candid manner, in order to remove every ground of future diſpute, and facilitate the means of a reſtoration of friendſhip and good underſtanding between the two kingdoms.

In witneſs of this, we, the underſigned commiſſioners, according to our full powers, have signed and sealed with our arms the present armistice.

Given on board his Britannic majesty's ship the London, in the road to Copenhagen, April 9, 1801.

Hyde Parker,

Admiral and commander in chief of the fleet of his Britannic majesty.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, June 20.

From our last London Accounts it appears

That his imperial majesty has unequivocally declared his readiness to enter into an immediate treaty for peace with England—

That on the 16th of April M. Otto received dispatches from Paris, by extraordinary couriers, being the third he had received in twenty-four hours from the French government—

That Napper Tandy had received pardon from lord Cornwallis—

That a British army of 12,000 men, had arrived at Suez from the East-Indies—

That Holt who at from 88 to 90. the American horse—

That the British house of commons, on the 19th of April, fixed the third reading of the Corn bounty bill for the succeeding Monday—and

That 3 per cent. consuls were up to 61 1 4, in consequence of the late victory, omniums rose to 11 above par.

THE following ORATION was delivered by the master of Harmony Lodge, No. 8. in this town, on resigning the chair, a few evenings since.

Brethren,

AS this is the period which the constitution of our society has limited for my holding the high and most honorable seat, in which brotherly love and masonic affection has placed, and so long continued me; I cannot resign the dignified charge without giving expressions to the warm and tender emotions which this charge has created; first, then brethren accept my grateful and unfeigned thanks for the distinguished honor of voting me into the chair. I have endeavored with earnest solicitude to discharge the duties attached to it, in such a manner as to secure your applause and my own approbation as a mason; if in any instance I have been delinquent, my abilities only are taxable my heart is purely blameless. Accept further, brethren, collectively, my warmest thanks for the order and harmony which has shone conspicuous in the lodge since I have had the honor of presiding in it.—It is only by such praise-worthy and exemplary conduct that we can be enabled to restore masonry to its original dignity, and render it subservient to the design of its institution. It is thus only my brethren, that we can display to the world the native beauties of our order, and avoid being the reproach of the unenlightened, and it is thus only that we can raise ourselves above the common level; let us then my brethren so order our moral conduct and deportment, that we may reflect new lustre on the badge of innocence and bond of friendship, which is more ancient than the "Golden fleece, or Roman eagle," more honorable than the "Guided star, or silken garter."—Let us wear in our hearts that innocence of which we wear the emblems in our bodies, let us in every situation and transition of life remember that we are masons—let the order which the rules of the lodge impose on us be voluntary, and our rule of conduct on all occasions—let this truth be deeply impressed on our minds, that no one can be a good mason in open lodge, who is otherwise out of it—that goodness is the foundation of "free and accepted masonry," and that goodness only can form the superstructure, and lastly, that no one can be a good mason who is not a good man.

I cannot dismiss this subject, brethren, without tenderly suggesting, that it be your future and most serious care to guard against admitting into this society persons, who, from loose principles, unmoral and disorderly conduct, bring masonry into disgrace and affix upon the whole body a stigma as unjust as it is prevalent. You are called to be thus jealous by every inducement, your domestic peace as a body—your characters as men—your reputations as masons and your dignity as members of society; with such impressions, I feel an assurance that you hereafter will scrutinize with watchfull caution the character of every future candidate and admit no man until his principles are fully ascertained.

May the three great lights, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit so enlighten our minds and invigorate our souls that we stray not into the regions of darkness beyond the tropic of redemption. Let us then, my brethren, make the four cardinal virtues the four corners of that immortal mansion which every mason should pride and glory in rearing; as we advance in the noble labor, let us mount on Jacob's ladder whose summit will bring our faith to reality and our hope to widely-spreading immortal love. To us will then be alloted some, of the many mansions, which the Great Architect of our salvation has declared to be in his father's house, where all is regulated by the square of Almighty goodness, and compass of Infinite mercy, where is heard no axe nor hammer's sound, but sounds of Eternal praise from cherubine and seraphim with whom, may that of mason's join until time shall be no more.

AN ADDRESS TO A SHILLING;

Which the author gave to the late Subscription for the support of his country.

[From a volume of English Poems.]

GO forth, my mite! and join the host,
That Loyalty bestows;
Go guard our coast, go rule the deep,
And thunder on our foes.

Be not dismay'd—resign thy fear,
Thou weak and poor thou art;
'Twas honest labour brought thee here,
And freedom bids us part.

Go forth—and when amid the train
Of glitt'ring thousands pierc;
Should some proud guinea look disdain,
Be thus thy speech address'd.

"Though from no golden heap I came,
Nor boast a purse proud owner;
A sterling shilling is my name,
And loyal is the donor.

His debts when paid, he found me on,
And gave me with good will;
Oft with'd me gold, or what is more,
But equal to his zeal."

I see thy little heart pants high,
And pants in every string;
Then on with energy, and cry,
"Britannia and her King."

ENGLAND.

London, April 16.

It is with regret we have seen some Journals expressing themselves not contented with the terms of the armistice concluded on the 9th at Copenhagen, and it has been very erroneously asserted, that ministers themselves are dissatisfied with those terms. To those who at all consider the matter, it must appear evident that the convention effects all the main objects of the expedition.

It detaches for a long space of time, Denmark from the tripple confederacy, puts in our power the passage of the sound, secures to our fleet anchorage and supplies, and consequently enables it to pursue, at pleasure, the other operations which enter into our plans.—If it be besides considered that this convention was wholly the result of our victory of the —, and that on the day on which it was concluded the death of the emperor Paul was still unknown at Copenhagen, there will remain little doubt that this transaction will soon lead to others more decisive, and to such a pacification as we have a right to expect.—May we not entertain the hope that Prussia will accede to it more readily and more sincerely than she has done to the hostile confederacy, and that she will ultimately sacrifice her ambition to her justice? The hopes which we had formed of her repentance in the first moments which followed the death of the emperor Paul, have, we see with regret, not yet been gratified. It remains now to be seen to which of the two powers, Russia or France, Prussia will endeavor to unite herself moſt ſtrictly. We think it more probable that it will be to the former than the latter.

April 19.

The laſt letters from Jerſey mention, that a formidable French force had arrived on the oppoſite coaſt with an intention of attacking both the iſlands of Jerſey and Guernſey.

The chancellor of the exchequer ſtated in the houſe of commons, Fr laſt, that his majeſty had been waited upon with the addreſs of that houſe, praying that he would give directions for monuments to be erected for capt. Moſſe and Riou, who fell gloriouſly in the action of the 2d of April. To which his majeſty had been pleaſed to reply, that he would give directions accordingly.

The liberal and elegant tribute which the chancellor of the exchequer paid to the crown Prince of Denmark, and the generous valour of his people, was not leſs ſenſibly felt by the houſe on Tueſday evening than the pacific hope he afterwards held forth in declaring, "That his majeſty's miniſters were not to be led from moderation by victory."

The correſpondence between England and France ſtill goes on. Diſpatches from Paris, it is ſaid, have been received by government this morning.

An army of 12,000 men, under the pay of Great Britain, conſiſting of Europeans and Sepoys, have arrived at Suez, to reinforce the Engliſh army againſt the army ſent by the firſt conſul to attack our Eaſt India territories.

So late as the 8th inſtant, the truce granted by Lord Nelſon had not been broken; and the moſt ſanguine hopes were entertained that the diſpute with Denmark would be amicably adjuſted.

Sweden, it is ſaid, has ſignified her diſpoſition to negociate; the death of the emperor Paul, it is ſuppoſed, has operated not a little to effect this change in the politics of the court of Stockholm.

The court of Berlin goes into mourning for three weeks for Paul!!!—The reſt of Europe, with the exception of the court of the Thuilleries, will have to rejoice as many months.

The firſt wiſe meaſure of the Emperor Alexander's reign was to permit the exportation of Ruſſian products.

Orders are iſſued at the patent office for creating Sir Hyde Parker and Lord Nelſon, Engliſh Viſcounts, and Rear Admiral Graves a Baronet of Great Britain.

Our court has preſented the Ruſſian officer who brought the intelligence of the Emperor Paul's demiſe, with 500l.

The fortifications of Kehl are entirely demoliſhed, as well as thoſe of Vieux Briſac. The ancient inhabitants of Kehl think of rebuilding their houſes.

The fortifications of the city of Turin are entirely deſtroyed, as well as thoſe of Coni.

By a publication in the French papers it appears that Menou's army amounts to 20,000 men.

The following article is extracted from a Paris paper of the 16th inſt. it is curious, not only on account of the view which it gives of the character of the late Emperor of Ruſſia, but alſo from the place whence we extract it.

"Peterſburgh, 27th March.

"It is impoſſible at preſent, to get any preciſe idea reſpecting the death of Paul I. It is ſaid in the palace, that it was a blood veſſel which carried him off thus ſuddenly. His natural conſtitution, and his mode of life appeared to preſerve him from this ſort of fate; he was of a ſpare habit, lived ſoberly, led a hard life, and took a great deal of exerciſe. On the other hand, he fatigued himſelf with exceſſive labour, entered paſſionately into politics; his ſoul was conſtantly agitated with miſtruſt and fear, and his love of women led him to great exceſſes. Theſe cauſes combined may ſerve to account for his premature death. Time only can clear up the myſtery.

"Whatſoever may have been the cauſe, his death does not appear to have excited any regret. His ſeverity had alienated the minds of all claſſes, a vexatious and annoying police had made an abode in the capital very melancholy. No ten perſons dared to meet in one houſe, from the fear of alarming the ſuſpicions of the Czar; no one was ſure of preſerving his employment, whether civil or military; all fortunes were held by an uncertain tenure; the rupture with England was completely unpopular, becauſe the factories of Engliſh in Ruſſia, their manner of carrying on buſineſs, and the money which they expend are favorable to induſtry and cultivation. At the ſame time a general prejudice in favor of the grand duke Alexander began to prevail among the people, the nobility and the army. Add to this, natural taſte which all people have for change, and you will conceive the univerſal ſatisfaction with which the young prince has aſcended the throne."

The Paris p pers alſo mention the following circumſtances concerning the death of Paul I. At eleven o'clock in the morning preceding his death, being the parad , he appeared all on a ſudden to be ſtruck with ſome idea; he called for pen and ink, and wrote upon his hat a letter to the firſt conſul. He firſt gave orders that it ſhould be inſtantly ſent off by an extraordinary courier. Afterwards upon recollection, he ſaid it would be ſufficient to entruſt it to the courier who was to be ſent on the following day to M. de Kilitchew. At nine o'clock at night he entered his apartment; at ten, a Turkiſh ſervant, who conſtantly attended him, retired; at eleven o'clock the death of Paul was made public. The empreſs mother took the oath to Alexander. At two o'clock in the morning the people took the oath in all the churches. For the laſt three months, Paul was ſubject to an hemorrhoidal flux.

April 17.

It was on Friday determined on by government, that the foreign mail diſpatched that night ſhould ſail from Yarmouth to Cuxhaven under a flag of truce, and that it ſhould not be landed without a poſitive aſſurance from the commandant of the troops occupying Hamburgh, that the letters and diſpatches ſhould be conſidered as ſacred, and ſuffered to paſs without interruption.

From an Engliſh officer in the camp of the Grand Vizier, we have a detailed account of one of the Turkiſh reviews, not very creditable to their diſcipline. About 7000 men were drawn out in a line, the artillery was placed forward in the centre, and the cavalry on the flank, in this poſition they advance labout a quarter of a mile, and were intended to return in like manner, but the act of wheeling diſcompoſed the line ſo much, that it recovered the point from which it ſtarted in very irregular fragments. The Grand Vizier, on the 13th Feb. had with him about 115000 men, but they were much in want of proviſions, particularly of corn.

The arrival of our expedition in the neighbourhood had tended to repreſs the deſertion of the Turks, and inſpired them with a degree of confidence which they had not previouſly entertained.

The Grand Vizier had ſent col. Murray and major Fletcher to arrange with Sir R. Abercrombie the plan of operations, profeſſing his determination to proſecute, with his beſt energies, the ſyſtem which the general ſhould point out.

Accounts from Conſtantinople, of the 27th Feb. ſtate, one of the Janiſſaries belonging to the Spaniſh embaſſy had been maſſacred within two leagues of the city of Oſia, on his way to Syria and Cyprus, with 60000 piaſtres, for the relief of the French priſoners detained in thoſe parts.

JAPAN.—Accounts have been received by ſome native traders from thoſe ſeas, that the Jadanele iſlands of Miſhon had been materially injured by a tempeſt, which prevailed during their harveſt, when the cedar trees were in Many parts torn up, and the crops of millet, rice, and barley, carried away by the floods; to ſuch extent is this loſs, that the Dairo has impoſed the moſt rigid reſtrictions on his ſubjects in their uſe and ſale of grain, apprehending a famine.

The ancient palace of the emperor at Jeddo has been deſtroyed by fire, and ſeveral male and female ſlaves periſhed in the flames. Suſpicions ariſing that this cataſtrophe was occaſioned by incendaries, a number of perſons of the firſt conſequence had been apprehended and put to the torture, to induce confeſſions, but without effect.

The French government, anxious to give a proof of its attachment to the Pope, has reſtored to him the ſtatute of Our Lady of Loretto. His Holineſs received it with gratitude and devotion; and ordered that it ſhould, for the preſent, be placed in the private chapel on Mont Quirinal.

A letter from St. Gall, March 27, ſays Mark Anthony Pellis, alias Conod, of Leman, has brought hither two artiſts, originally from England, who have conſtructed very ingenious machines for ſpinning fine cotton, for making fine muſlin, and other fine works, the manufacture of which employs thouſands of individuals in the cantons of Senthis, Turgau, and Zurich. Theſe machines are equal to thoſe of England, and promiſe great advantage to our country. The enterpriſe is ſupported by ſubſcription.

The net produce of the permanent taxes, &c. of Great Britain, taken for two years, ending reſpectively the 5th Jan. 1800, and 5th Jan. 1801, appears to be, from the returns made as follows: 1800, 1237791794 15s. 0 3-4d —1801, 122,273615 11s. 4 1-2d.

The report of the ſelect committe of the houſe of commons appointed "to examine the journals of the houſe, and records of parliament, for precedents reſpecting the eligibility of perſons in holy orders to ſit in the houſe," has juſt been printed.—

"They find, that in the earlier periods previous to the 8th Henry IV. when the practice of returning citizens and burgeſſes by indentures annexed to the writ, firſt prevailed, the names are generally returned without addition whatever, except in the inſtance of knights, and the general addition to each return of "Citizen and Burgeſſes." Your committee find, however, that in five inſtances during that period, particularly ſpecified under the third head in the following part of this report, the addition of "Clericus" appears to the names therein contained.—That from the 8th Henry IV. the additions are more frequent and particular, containing often the addition, "Sadler, Mercer," and the like; but none that of Clericus, except in the ſingle inſtance of John Robſon, who appears to be the perſon whoſe return was declared void by the houſe in the 18th James I."

"The reſult of the whole they have arranged under the following heads:—

"I. Summons of the Clergy to Parliament—particular inſtances of the mode of exerciſing their funcſtions there—their privileges conſequent to ſuch attendance.

"II. Taxation of the Clergy.

"III. All ſuch inſtances as could furniſh any preſumption, of individuals in holy orders having been returned as members of the houſe of commons.—Under this head, however, your committee think it right to remark, that they have inſerted the caſe of Sir Thomas Haxey, clerk, as having given riſe to differen' opinions among writers upon this ſubject, they find on examination directed by them into the returns, ſtill perfect and extant in the Tower, of the 20th year of Richard the II. that no ſuch name occurs amongſt them—and that, as to the name of Chriſtopher Parkins, returned as Dean of Carliſle, in the 30th and 43d Eliz. it appears from a patent in the chapel of the 36th Eliz. that the ſaid Deanery was granted to him with the following expreſs diſpenſation:—

"And in regard that the Queen had admitted him into her family, and been accuſtomed to employ him in weighty concerns, the diſpenſed with his not being in any ſacred or other order; and alſo granted her diſpenſation to him on account of his being married to a wife then living; and likewiſe diſpenſed with his reſidence on the Deanery."

Government have been particularly urgent with gentlemen poſſeſſing influence in the country to repair thither, in order to repreſs the diſpoſition to tumult which has unhappily prevailed, to militia officers the requiſition has been peremptory.

A provincial paper of Thurſday mentions that the weather was ſo extremely warm on Wedneſday ſe'nnight, that "all the inſide paſſengers of the Coventry coach rode outſide."

The diſtreſs of many parts of the country, in conſequence of the war, and particularly ſince the diſpute with the Northern powers, is very great. In ſome parts of Scotland, the linen manufacture, which uſed to give employment to a great number of induſtrious men, is now at a ſtand. Not only is the price of proviſions enormous, but the poor have not wherewithal to buy food were the price moderate.

General Moreau has cauſed an elegant monument to be erected at his own expence to the memory of General Deſaix. The inhabitants of Straſburgh had made a ſubſcription for the purpoſe, but in conſequence of Moreau taking it on himſelf, they have agreed to form a new promenade, with a column at the extremity of it, in honour of the army of the Rhine. The promenade is to bear the name of Honenlinden.

Government has received advice of 1,000,000 barrels of flour coming from America. One half of the above is on its paſſage, and ſome has already arrived.

Five thouſand three hundred barrels of American flour arrived laſt week in the port of Liverpool, and were immediately bought up by a few perſons.

It has been deemed a ſolecism that the war has produced a ſcarcity of rags, but it is forgot that in happier times people parted with their rags, becauſe they could afford to wear ſomething better.

CORK, April 14.

Yeſterday Sir Henry Browne Hays, was tried for forcibly carrying off Miſs Pike, of Cork, with intent to marry her. The trial was not over before ten o'clock at night, when a moſt reſpectable jury brought in a verdict GUILTY—but recommended him to mercy.

Miſs Pike gave a clear account of the facts, and ſeemed totally unembarraſſed on the occaſion. Sir Henry behaved with extraord ry compoſure, and expreſſed a wi hat, as he had been found guilty by the laws, and a jury of his country the judge would order him for im diate execution. The judge, with feeling and humanity, declined. A point of law was left to be argued by the twelve judges. From the excellence of his character, in other reſpects, his charitable and humane diſpoſition, and the reſpectability of his connections, it is generally thought that he will be pardoned; particularly as no perſonal violence was offered to Miſs Pike, except in forcing her from her friends, to whom ſhe was reſtored immediately after, on her refuſal to marry him. Her friends are of the firſt conſequence in this city, and do not wiſh to puſh the matter further.

LIFFORD, April 7.

THE KING V. TANDY.

At ten o'clock, Mr. juſtice Chamberlaine and Mr. juſtice Fox took their ſeats on the bench, and the priſoner being brought up, was aſked by the clerk of the crown, whether he was ready for his trial?

Mr. Rolleſton then roſe and moved the court that the indictment, and the ſeveral proceedings had thereon, might be read; and obſerved that the council at preſent concerned for Mr. Tandy had had no opportunity of knowing what they were.

Mr. juſtice Chamberlaine ſaid, that as the priſoner had been ſerved with a copy of his indictment, there was no neceſſity, nor had he a right to have it read.

Mr. Rolleſton then moved, that the writ by virtue of which the indictment had been remanded from the court of King's Bench, ſhould be read; it was read accordingly, and it recited "that a writ of certiorari had formerly iſſued to remove the indictment and all matters touching the ſame, from Lifford into the court of King's Bench, and then proceeded to remand the ſaid indictment, and all matters touching the ſame, in order that the juſtices of gaol delivery and of oyer and terminer might proceed thereon, in ſuch manner as they might have done if the ſaid indictment had never been brought into the court of King's Bench. Mr. Rolleſton ſaid, that upon this writ he conceived his client had a right to be put to plead as if no plea had been put in the court of King's Bench, inaſmuch as this writ authoriſed the court in which he then ſtood to proceed only in ſuch manner "as they might have done if the ſaid indictment never had been brought into the court of King's Bench:" the proceedings, therefore, as he contended, were to be taken now, preciſely in the ſame ſituation as they ſtood when they were removed by the writ of certiorari: and at that time it was admitted that the priſoner had not been put to plead. He therefore moved "that the priſoner be now put to plead."

Mr. Scholes, on the ſame ſide ſaid, that the preſent motion was founded on the preſumption that any proceeding had in the court of King's Bench, after the indictment was removed thither, muſt be conſidered by this court as matters of which they had no authority to take cognizance; a point which he hoped to be able clearly to prove. This court, he ſaid, derives its juriſdiction from his Majeſty's Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer and of Gaol Delivery, and is not an emanation from the court of King's Bench, nor any otherwiſe dependent thereon. He obſerved that the writ which had been read was founded upon two ſtatutes paſſed in Ireland (the 11 and 12 Geo. 3. c. 34. and 21 and 22 Geo. 3. c. 51.) Theſe acts ſhewed that by the common law, as it ſtood before they were enacted, this indictment could not have been remanded at all, but the priſoner muſt have been tried in the court of King's Bench. But by thoſe ſtatutes, that court was empowered to remand What? not the plea, if any plea was put in—not the other proceeding which might have been had in the court of King's Bench, but only the priſoner and his indictment; ſuch were the words of the ſtatute: and what proved demonſtratively that the legiſlature did not intend to give the court of King's Bench authority to ſend down any of the proceedings had before them, was the concluding paragraph of the ſtatute, which directed that ſuch indictments ſhould be proceeded on "in ſuch manner as ſhould have been done if the ſaid priſoners, or their indictments, had never been brought into the ſaid court of King's Bench."—Now, if Mr. Tandy had not been brought up by the certiorari, he muſt now have been put to plead. The very word "remand," uſed in the writ and in the ſtatute, further proved the intention of the legiſlature: This was a relative term, and its correlative was the writ of certiorari: nothing could be remanded by the court of King's Bench but what had been previouſly removed into it: and what was that? the indictment, and the indictment alone.—With reſpect to the words uſed in the writ, "all matters touching the ſame," Mr. Scholes contended that theſe words were not found in, nor were they authoriſed by the ſtatutes which created the writ, and were therefore to be conſidered as mere ſurpluſage.

The court after hearing the rt. hon. the attorney general in reply, refuſed the motion.—Their lordſhips were of opinion that the arguments in ſupport of it could only prove that the Court of King's Bench was wrong in ſending down the proceedings had therein; but as that court had sent those proceedings down, and it appeared from thence to their Lordships that the prisoner had pleaded to the indictment, they thought themselves bound to take notice of that plea, and to refuse the motion.

Mr. Rolleston then moved, "that the prisoner be permitted to withdraw his plea put in the court of king's bench, and to plead de novo." He observed, that this was an application to the discretion of the court; but that he would shew, from decided authorities in England as well as in Ireland, that it was a motion uniformly complied with in similar circumstances. He then cited the case of the King v. the Dean of St. Asaph, where the indictment having been removed by certiorari, the prisoner pleaded de novo in the court of King's Bench.—So in the case of the King v. Agalett, and the King v. Ward which cases he said were noticed in a celebrated case in this country, the case of Mr. Keon, who was indicted and convicted some years ago of murder.

Mr. Schoales followed, and in addition to the cases cited by his learned colleague, referred the court to authorities in Carthew, p. 6, the King v. Baker, and the King v. Carpenter, in 4 Viner's Abridgment, in both which cases the prisoners had been allowed to plead de novo. He said there was a circumstance in this case in favour of the application, which he did not find in any of the other cases, and which he hoped would decide the court in the exercise of its discretion; it was this: that at the time the present indictment was found against the prisoner, at the assizes of Lifford, he was a prisoner in the gaol of Kilmainham, and had of course no opportunity of knowing whether the bill of indictment had been found against him in a legal and regular manner, or whether there might not have been some proceedings that were informal, and of which he would have had a right to avail himself if he had been informed of them.

Mr. Justice Chamberlaine said, he should be sorry any information was to be lent abroad that the prisoner had not had every advantage which by law he was entitled to.

Mr. Schoales (after a few minutes conversation with Mr. Tandy, who was placed immediately behind his counsel) desired leave to say, lest from a misunderstanding of the object of his argument any such idea should arise amongst the numerous audience, as that which the court had hinted at, that he had instructions from his client to say, and wished also for himself and for the gentlemen concerned with him to say, that no such insinuation was intended; that on the contrary he had himself opportunity of knowing, and his client was fully sensible, that throughout the whole prosecution he had experienced from the Right Hon. Gentleman who conducted it, every indulgence which his situation admitted, and every attention which politeness or humanity could suggest.

Mr. Attorney General said, that in affording to the prisoner every indulgence which was consistent with his unfortunate situation, he was guided not more by inclination than by duty; a duty which he felt owed to every person whose prosecution he was obliged to conduct, be his station in society high or low, and which he trusted he never had and never would forget. He then argued on the motion, that some ground should have been laid beyond mere allegation, in order to induce the Court to exercise its discretion in the prisoner's favour.

The Court said, that if it appeared to them that any substantial advantage could be derived to the prisoner from their granting this motion, they would comply with it; but none such had been pointed out to them, and therefore they felt themselves bound not to retard the course of justice by complying with it.

The prisoner's counsel then stated that they had affidavits of the want of a material witness, on which they moved to put off the trial to the next assizes. Three affidavits were read, but they not containing matter sufficient to satisfy the Court, this motion was also refused.

The sheriff was then directed to return a jury, and while the pannel was calling over, Mr. Tandy held a short conference with his counsel and with his son, James Tandy, Esq; and another gentleman, a near relation, who attended him at the bar during the whole proceedings.

At this period Mr. Sinclair, one of Mr. Tandy's counsel, addressed the court, and intimated his resolution to withdraw from the professional situation assigned to him. He was proceeding to assign his reasons when the court stopped him, saying, that such explanation was irregular and unnecessary.

Mr. Tandy then expressed a desire to be heard, and silence having been commanded, he spoke nearly as follows, in a manner at once firm and respectful;

"My lords—It is not my intention to give any further trouble to your lordships on this occasion; I am sorry your lordships have already had so much. I am happy in having an opportunity of returning my acknowledgments to the attorney general throughout this proceeding: in the discharge of the duties of his office, he has never forgotten the feelings of a man. My lords, I have read the copy of the indictment with which I was served in the gaol of Kilmainham; I admit that the facts contained in it are true, and I have no doubt can be proved: why then should I put your Lordships and the court to the trouble of going thro' the form of a trial? of course, I desire to plead guilty to the indictment."

Mr. Justice Chamberlaine, after a short pause, addressed Mr. Tandy as follows:

"Prisoner at the bar—It is the duty of the Court to appriſe you of the consequence of the application which you have made: by pleading guilty you must consider that your life is forfeit: you have had able men assigned you as Counsel; confer with them, and weigh this matter well before you determine."

Mr. Tandy immediately replied,—"My lords, I had mentioned my designs to my counsel before I made my application to your lordships; I know they are men of ability and integrity, and I am obliged to them for their exertions. What they could do has been done; but I see it would be impossible for the highest talents on earth to prevent the facts with which I am charged from being proved, and my love of truth will not allow me now to persevere in what I know to be a fallhood. My Lords, I am also fully appriſed of the nature of that awful sentence which must be pronounced against me; but I trust I shall be enabled to meet it with the resignation of a Christian, and with the fortitude of a man!"

The indictment was then read at full length, and the prisoner having pleaded guilty, Mr. Justice Chamberlaine, after a short but affecting and impressive address, pronounced the dreadful sentence of the law.

YORK, Saturday, June 27.

THE DYING MIRA.

 DOES that rose look for gay, to mock my faded form?—I will turn me from its beauties, while it remains the symbol of what I once was—and wait the hour of evening, when it will become the emblem of what I now am.

The venerable oak, which stretches forth its bare limbs, whereon no verdure sprouts, and in whose rugged trunk vegetation has left its powers, sooths my wounded heart. But that tree was long the glory of the plain; a whole age and more conducted it to a slow maturity, and a long course of years has glided over its decay;—while I have scarce attained the hour of vernal bloom, when I feel my approaching end, and a moment beholds me perish.—But wherefore should I complain?—My life has been without offence; and that I die for love cannot be imputed to me by the just Being who gave me such a tender heart and clothed celestial virtue in the form of Horatio.

I love Heaven in him—and am going to an eternal participation of it with him.—His form is mouldering away; But what of that?—Our souls are still united—and my dust will soon mingle with his.—The cypress that rises beside his grave, will soon cast its shadow over mine!

If his shade is suffered to haunt this lonely spot—if his immortal spirit quits its immortal abode to hover over me—he will see the victim of his loss—nor will it disgrace even his celestial nature to feel the glory of the sacrifice.

Ye ever-honored authors of my being—ye tender guardians of my infancy—ye faithful friends of my youth—regret me not; ye will soon see me no more—but I shall be happy.—

It seems as if Horatio's spirit waited impatiently for mine; that his heaven cannot be perfect without me.—Does a disordered fancy deceive me—or is he not on yonder cloud! He seems to chide my delay.—I come Horatio—be not impatient—Nature will soon resign me;—the bands are loosening that tie me to the world; one sigh more—and I am thine for ever!—

Alexandria, March 16.

March 1.

VARIABLE winds from W. to W. N. W. fresh and squally. At two in the afternoon we discovered in the W. a numerous fleet belonging to the enemy. At sun set it collected, & made for the Old Harbor. The generale was beat, and the troops kept themselves in readiness to march to whatever point should be threatened. The seamen were distributed among the different ports. The enemy's fleet was as follows: 15 ships of the line, two deckers; 32 frigates, from 30 to 35 sloops, brigs & bombs, and upwards of 70 transports, mostly of heavy burthen. About ten o'clock at night the enemy steered for the road of Aboukir, and our troops immediately marched towards that place.

March 2.—At day break the fleet of the enemy prepared to anchor to the East of the road of Aboukir. In the morning the anchorage was completed. Not far from this place 12 other ships of war were seen steering from the N. W. and proceeded to join the enemy. The ships of war which formed the blockade of Alexandria united themselves to the fleet. The French frigate la Regenerée entered without interruption into the Old Harbor about nine in the morning—she carried 300 picked men and 30,000 musquets. Soon after midday the brigle L. Malo entered.

In the course of this day the garrison of Alexandria under the orders of General Friant, took a position on the heights to the South of the road of Aboukir. During the rest of the day no new event occurred. The wind continued to blow from the West considerable freſh, though the weather was not tempestuous.

March 3.—The wind blew very hard from the W. N. W. with some variation to the N. N. W. accompanied with showers, the sea rough, and the sky having a stormy aspect.—On the 13th, 14th, and 15th the wind and sky the same. During these four days the enemy made no movements.

March 6.—The weather was moderate the wind shifting from W. to N. W. the sky being somewhat cloudy. The English ships of war disembarked their troops, and put them on board of transports nearest the coast. About 4 in the afternoon three row boats failed to take observations in the Lake Madie; they landed 50 or 60 men, who were immediately put to rout—20 having been killed, and the rest speedily re-embarked.

March 7.—At break of day, the wind blowing freſh, and shifting from W. to S. W. the weather moderate and the sea calm, the enemy were plainly observed manoeuvring to effect a descent. All their transports weighed anchor, each of them being filled with troops.—About half past 5 in the morning, they were in motion towards the coast, between the mouth of the Lake Madie and the fort of Aboukir. Immediately our troops were drawn up in battle array, opposite the place which the enemy menaced. At 7 o'clock the enemy's row boats, forming an extensive line, and to the number of 3 or 400, rowed briskly towards the shore. The debarkation was begun under the cover of a very warm and well directed fire from their gun boats and other vessels, on our troops.—The enemy were assailed by a well supported fire from our field pieces, and a shower of grape shot from 15 or 16 pieces of cannon prepared for that purpose. Their line was, however, so much extended, that our troops were unable to face them on all points. Six or 700 English were landed. Our troops though extremely inferior in number, threw themselves with ardor upon the enemy, and twice charged them at the point of the bayonet. The right of the English was almost immediately routed, but re inforced by a strong column of the left—the French were obliged to give way in their turn. The battle continued with vigour till about 9 o'clock, but perceiving that the enemy was too numerous, and dreading, by exposing the garrison, to endanger the safety of Alexandria, the general fell back upon this place, with his troops in the best order. The troops have taken up a position about a league and a half from the field of battle, their left supported by the sea, and their right by the lake of Madie. The enemy remain in their position upon the height of Aboukir. We lost in this affair, about 300 men, in killed and wounded—while the loss of the enemy is still greater.

On the 9th, 10th, 11th and 12th of March, the armies continued in their respective positions. On the 13th, indeed, a pretty strong reconnoitering party of our army attacked the advanced posts of the enemy, and killed, wounded or took prisoners, from 17 to 20 men, including 2 officers; we lost on our part 5 men in killed and wounded.

March 13.—At day break the alarm guns were fired, the generale beat to arms in the city, and every one repaired to his post; the enemy advanced in good order, forming a close and very extended line. We waited with intrepidity to receive them. At 7 in the morning the action began along the whole line.—The force of the enemy seemed to amount to 12,000 men, the garrison, reinforced by troops from the neighbourhood, might amount to 4000 men, of whom 600 were cavalry. The shock was brisk on both sides; our cavalry twice made a charge; the second time they penetrated to the extent of the enemy's line, and compelled 5 or 600 men to lay down their arms. A strong column of reserve having, however, attacked them with impetuosity, they were obliged to retire and abandon their prisoners.

On the evening of the 13th March, the enemy made a movement on their left, which they considerably reinforced. Soon after a strong column attacked our right, and succeeded in making themselves masters of the bridge of the canal of Alexandria. In short period, however, the republicans re-took it.—Thrice the enemy returned to the charge on this point, and as often were they repulsed, with great loss. At 5 o'clock the enemy re-occupied its former position.

In the morning of the 15th, the enemy filled all their boats, to the number of 400, with men. This force directed itself to the Bay of Aboukir, they landed in good order, and drew up in battle array immediately on their landing. Our division performed prodigies of wonder in order to drive them to re-embark, but they were forced to yield to numbers. The enemy disembarked from 6 to 7000 troops, after a bloody battle, in which they must have lost a number of men; we lost 250. The number of the killed is much less than the wounded; among the latter is the Adjutant General, Mattinet.

The 15th March was spent by the two armies in each others positions.—The enemy in the morning and evening made a variety of movements on their left. The cannon of Aboukir have been heard firing all day. Three frigates have come to cannonade the batteries on the peninsula of Figures.

These several events appear to be of so much importance, that I take upon me, without waiting for the orders of the commander in chief, to dispatch the Ofiris to give you intelligence of them. Health and respect.

(Signed) F. LE ROY.

The Military Chief, to the Maritime Prefect of the 6th Circle, dated Alexandria, 16th March, 1801.

"CITIZEN PREFECT,

"On the 1st inst. at noon the enemy's fleet was perceived off Alexandria, about 100 vessels were at first perceived who in the night proceeded to Aboukir. The whole fleet, consisting of 200 sail, among which were 23 English ships or brigs, and a great number of light vessels, anchored on the morning of the 2d, in the Bay of Aboukir. The English cruizers who had blockaded us, proceeded to join them, and left our port open. The frigate La Regeneree together with La Lodi, took advantage of this position to enter on the Old Port. The Regeneree anchored at ten in the morning, and La Lodi at four in the afternoon of the 2d; the Regeneree left Rochefort on Feb. 14, in concert with the Africaine, from which she was separated by an easterly wind on the second day after her departure. She has arrived safely, but the Africaine has not yet appeared.

"On the morning of the 2d, the General of Division, Friant, commander at Alexandria, marched for Aboukir, with part of the garrison.

"On the 5th in the evening, two of the enemy's frigates and a flag resumed their cruizing. While the enemy's fleet lay at Aboukir, the wind veering to the north, brought on stormy weather, and prevented the enemy's landing before the 8th of March.

"Gen. Friant advanced towards Alexandria, in order to be able to cover that place; the enemy has not advanced beyond the Peninsula. The fort is furnished with a good garrison and will resist all attempts.

"The days following the disembarkation were employed by the enemy in establishing themselves on the peninsula; after which they attempted to approach Alexandria. The advanced posts kept firing for some days, but on the 13th the enemy having endeavoured to make themselves masters of some important posts, General Friant attacked them. The success of the battle was divided during the day, but the English attempting to take the bridge of the Canal of Alexandria, were repulsed, and forced to give up the undertaking. The battle was very warm; the enemy lost a great number of men, and we had only a loss of 300. We learnt from the deserters—1st, That the enemy had 15000 men in their army, of whom part were French Emigrants, part Corficans, part Imperialists, and the remainder English;—2dly, That Admiral Keith commanded by sea, and Gen. Abercrombie by land.

"On the 14th the enemy made no movement. On the 15th in the morning they attempted the fort of Aboukir.

"During the last few days the garrison of Aboukir has been reinforced; which makes our garrisons now amount to between 4 and 5000 men. We are every day in expectation of General Menou, who, it is said, is to arrive tomorrow with the army.

"It is probable that this attack in concert, will succeed in forcing the enemy to re-embark, should they not do so before hand.

"The bulk of the enemy's fleet is at anchor in Aboukir: there are constantly five or six frigates blockading the port, and cruizing between Aboukir and Marabouk.

Hanover, (Germany) April 6. The following is the convention concluded the 3d of this month, between our regency and the Envoys of his Majesty the King of Prussia:—

His Majesty the King of Prussia having caused to be communicated to us, by the Count de Schulembourg, General of Cavalry, Minister of State, of War and of the Cabinet, and his Envoy here, a declaration, written and dated at Berlin, on the 30th of March, 1801, respecting the measures which his said Majesty has resolved to pursue in regard to the German States belonging to his Majesty the King of Great Britain and Ireland, our most Gracious Sovereign, in his quality of Elector of Brunswick and Lunebourg; his Prussian Majesty having besides invited us repeatedly, and in a positive manner, to conform to the present circumstances, to enter without delay into the new engagements which he has proposed, and for that purpose to draw up a convention in the most obligatory form, otherwise his said Majesty would find himself obliged to treat, in a hostile manner, the German States of the King our most Gracious Sovereign; we have, agreeably to circumstances, promised and declared as follows:—

The entrance of the Prussian troops into the German States of his Britannic Majesty shall take place without their experiencing any resistance, in the hopes, however, that the number will be diminished as much as possible, to ease the country and the inhabitants. They shall consequently observe in their full extent all the ordinances and dispositions of his Prussian Majesty, both in regard to the entry of his troops and to the Electoral States. The Hanoverian troops, which have hitherto been employed in the army on the line of demarkation, in the North of Germany shall be disbanded, as well as a proportionate number of the other troops of the electorate. The Regency of this country, the commander in chief, and the different officers of these troops, shall engage not to employ the said troops, nor to suffer them to serve against his said Prussian Majesty, but to make them strictly observe the Royal ordinances, according to the different measures which it may be necessary to pursue. The said troops shall be distributed in the cities of Hanover, Lunebourg, Gifhorn, Welzen, and in the places and garrisons on the right of the Leine, on the left of the Aller, and behind the Luhe, as far as the Elbe. All the other places, without exception, comprehending the fortresses of Homeln, shall be evacuated and delivered up to the Prussian troops. Particular measures shall be taken that all deliveries in kind shall be made by the said country of Hanover, dating from the 1st of May, this year. In regard to whatever concerns the administration of this state, nothing shall be undertaken, nor shall be permitted to be undertaken, prejudicial to the present dispositions and engagements; on the contrary, the statutes and orders of the King, in regard to them, shall be punctually observed.

For these reasons, we here accept, in the most solemn manner, the supreme promise made by his Prussian Majesty, that he will guarantee to the German states of his Britannic Majesty, their ancient constitution, their safety, and their repose; and that all their property and possessions shall be protected by every means possible.

Saint Petersburgh, March 27.

Soon after the decease of our late Monarch, his present Imperial Majesty dispatched couriers to London, Paris, Berlin, the Hague, Naples and Stockholm. The Russian ambassador at Berlin received orders to send immediately other couriers from Berlin for Carlsruhe, Dresden, Erlangen, Vienna, Copenhagen, Bayreuth and Ludwigslust. Count Woronzow, in London, is said to have received credentials, by means of a courier, from the present Emperor. Couriers have also been sent to the respective Governors in the Russian empire, through one of whom, M. de Beglefchell, the Governor of Riga, was ordered immediately to proceed to Petersburgh, where he is appointed Procurator General, a place which he had filled before, in the room of Prince Obelningoff, dismissed. Our young Monarch answers completely the great expectations which had been formed throughout the empire respecting him. His humane heart, convinced of the love and attachment of his people, will not admit of those public marks of servile veneration before shewn to the Emperors: one of his first orders annulled that of his predecessor, by which persons passing any member of the Imperial family, in carriages, were obliged to get out, and to salute them in an abject manner. It is said that the embargo on English vessels is to be taken off. The Court Gazette still continues not to state the course of exchange on Paris.

Frontiers of Russia, March 26.

Orders have already been dispatched from St. Petersburgh, into the interior of Russia, to send back the English sailors. It is said that leave will also speedily be given for the importation of British merchandize. The exportation of Russian goods, agreeably to the regulation of 1797, is again permitted. It is expected that the importation of such articles of commerce, as had hitherto been prohibited, will also be again permitted in a short time. The embargo on English ships in Russian ports still continues, and the office for liquidating debts between Russian and English subjects, at St. Petersburgh, remains in activity; but it is thought that a change will likewise be soon made in regard to these measures.

ENGLAND.

LONDON, April 20.

IT appears by the details transmitted by Le Roy, the maritime prefect at Alexandria, that the expidition appeared off the coast on the first of March & the weather did not permit a landing to take place till the eight. The French general Friant, the commandant of Alexandria, was by this circumstance enabled to assemble the force in his neighborhood, and to dispute, though not prevent the debarkation. The enemy vainly attempted to oppose the landing, which our troops effected in good order, notwithstanding the many obstacles they had to encounter.

After a severe action our troops got possession of the heights of Aboukir.—The French retreated to Alexandria, as they say, in good order. They admit the loss of three hundred killed and wounded, and are no doubt guilty of a very gross exaggeration in stating that we lost two thousand killed and wounded. Between the 8th and 13th nothing very important took place; on the 13th our forces, according to the enemy's account, to the number of twelve thousand, advanced to the attack, which the French received in front of Alexandria. Their own number they rate at four thousand. A very hard fought action took place that day. The French do not admit that our efforts were successful in carrying, or at least in retaining any of the outworks of Alexandria. The battle was very general, and must have been attended with great loss on both sides.

April 22.

Last night we also received Paris Journals to the 17th inst. inclusive; which bring some further intelligence respecting Egypt, but nothing conclusive. On the 15th of March, Sir Ralph Abercrombie attacked the fortresses of Aboukir, with what success is not stated. On the 17th general Menou was expected to be at Alexandria, when a combined attack was to be made on our army. We are impatient to hear the issue. May it be successful!

Under date of Augusburg, the 24th ult. it is stated, that the disagreeable, and but too well-founded intelligence has been received there, that, since the arrival of the courier, orders have been given to the French army of the Rhine not to continue on its return home but to remain where it should be on receiving these orders. The magazines, &c. must remain in statu quo, and nobody is able to solve this mystery.

The death of the emperor Paul, seems to have led our ministerial writers into the constitution of the leading powers of Europe.—They have not been, however, able to find in Buonaparte that thorough neck which indicates apoplexy!

NEW-YORK, June 5.

Yesterday afternoon, the remarkably fast sailing and fortunate ship Argus, captain Maxin, arrived here in 33 days from Bourdeaux; the first ship which has performed her voyage from hence to France and back, since the renewal of our intercourse with that country.

By this arrival, we have received Paris papers to the 26th of April inclusive, 8 days later than our French accounts via London. Upon the whole, these papers furnish us with but little news of importance.

A gentleman who came passenger in the Argus, informs us, that the news respecting Abercrombie, had fallen to the ground, and was disbelieved in France when he left Bourdeaux, which was on the 2d ult. Our belief of the inaccuracy of the late accounts from Egypt, by the Brutus, is strengthened, from the entire silence of the last Paris papers on this subject.

LUBECK, April 8.

It is said, that his Majesty, the new emperor of Russia, has confirmed the dispositions, taken by his illustrious father, with respect to the engagements made by that monarch with the northern powers, to ensure their neutrality; and that he will propose measures to terminate the differences.

HAGUE, April 18.

A letter from Cleves, of the 16th inst. informs that the Prussian army of demarkation, destined for Hanover, have received orders to suspend their march till further orders from Berlin.

FLORENCE.

17th Germinal, (April 5.)

MURAT, commander in chief, of the provisory government of Tuscany.

Citizen Agar is charged to present to you, gentlemen, a copy of the treaty of peace, concluded at Luneville by the ministers plenipotentiary of the French republic, and his majesty the emperor, King of Bohemia and Hungary, stipulating at the same time in his name, and in the name of the Germanic body, I announce to you that the treaty has been ratified.

With respect to the 4th article, the Grand Dutchy of Tuscany and part of the Etat which depends on it, is to be held by the Infant Duke of Parma: inform the Tuscans, by Proclamation, that a prince of the house of Spain, the ally of the French republic, comes among them, accompanied by the blessings of peace.

Now that the fate of this country is decided, all animosity must cease, and the past must be forgotten, that all may be blended in the sentiments that you owe to your country and to the government, which causes its happiness.

I expect from your cares gentlemen, this happy result—employ to obtain it all the influence your personal characters, your services and the authority with which you are invested can give you. You will by this conduct, merit the confidence which I have reposed in you, and you will acquire a title to the good will of your new prince.

I have the honor to salute you;

(Signed) J. MURAT.

SWEDEN.

The news of the death of Paul I. has occasioned an extraordinary sensation here. They pretend to know with certainty, that the emperor Alexander, immediately on his elevation to the throne, ordered the baron de Stedingk before him, and declared to him solemnly, that the friendship and relation with Sweden (particularly what respected the armed neutrality of the north) should fulfill in full faith.

Besides the Russian fleet of 23 sail of the line, which has already left Revel, there are two others, the one at Cronstadt, and the other at Swenkund, ready for sea. The last is composed of frigates and galleys.

DENMARK.

Extract of a letter from Copenhagen of 12th April.

The following are the propositions made by the English admiral, and the answers on which the armistice was founded:

1. Denmark shall withdraw herself from the Coalition of the North, and unite with England. Answer, refused.

2. She shall repair the English vessels. Answer, refused.

3. She shall take care of the wounded English. Refused.

4. There shall be an armistice of four months. Answer, agreed—that it be 14 weeks, on condition of an exchange of prisoners, officers, soldiers and seamen.

5. England shall trade freely in all ports of Denmark, during the Armistice, Answer, refused.

6. Denmark shall take no part in the war against Russia. Answer, agreed—inasmuch as the armed neutrality will permit her.

7. Shall equip no vessels during the Armistice. Answer, agreed to—excepting the ordinary guard-ships and the frigates serving for the instruction of the Cadets.

8. It shall be permitted to the ships of the fleet of Admiral Parker to sail to the north or south. Answer, agreed to.

9. Norway shall be included in the Armistice. Answer, refused—Denmark demands, on the contrary, the right of providing for Norway in the course of the Armistice.

Note—In order to understand the 3d and last articles, it is necessary to know that the dysentery among the English seamen, might have communicated, if their wounds were dressed in the hospitals of Copenhagen; and, on the other hand, that Norway might furnish the enemy's squadron the means of revictualing their vessels.

Under the date of Paris, 16th Floreal (26th April) are the following articles.

"It is said that lord Whitworth is coming here in quality of negociator, and that the First Consul had required that the negociations be carried on in London, but that the English government have prefered treating at Paris.

"They write from Calais that the correspondence between the two governments is in constant activity; and from this circumstance is nourished a hope of peace which we lay hold of with pleasure, and which we cannot lose without regret.

"On the 29th Germinal (19th April) six American vessels entered the port of Bourdeaux, laden with tobacco, coffe, tea, cocoa, potashes, pepper and nankeens, for which wine is to be received in return.

"The negociations between France and Helvetia, which were to take place at Paris, will be continued at Berne.

Admiralty Office, April 25.

Extract of a letter from capt. Dixon, commander of his Majesty's ship Genereaux, to Evan Nepean, esq. dated at Port Mahon, March 16.

"Herewith I have the honor to transmit copies of letters relative to the capture of the French frigate L'Africaine, by capt. Barlow, of his Majesty's ship Phoebe.

"Genereaux, Port Mahon, March 10.

"My Lords,

"I have the satisfaction to enclose a letter from capt. Barlow, of his Majesty's ship Phoebe, for your lordship's information. I have the honor to be, my lord, &c.

Phoebe, at sea, 25 leagues east of Gibraltar, Feb. 20, 1801.

"My Lord;

"I have the honor to inform your lordship that yesterday, about four o'clock in the afternoon, his Majesty's ship under my command being about two leagues to the eastward of Gibraltar, I discovered one of the enemy's ships under Cruiz, steering with a crowd of sail to the eastward; I had the good fortune to bring her to a close action about half past seven the same evening, which continued within pistol shot, with unremitting fury about two hours, the enemy resolutely opposing the animated and skilful exertions of my brave officers and seamen, until his ship was almost a wreck, five feet water in her hold, her guns dismounted, and literally encumbered with dead, the number of which amounted to 200, and of wounded 143.

"She proves to be the French frigate L'Africaine, of 44 guns, viz. 26 eighteen pounders on her main deck, and 18 nine pounders on her quarter deck and forecastle; a very fine ship, about three years old, under the orders of the chief of division, Saunier, whose broad pendant was flying, and who, with many other principal officers, both of the troops and of the marines, was slain in the action, and commanded by capt. Magendie, who is amongst the wounded.

"At the commencement of the action he had 715 men, viz. 400 troops and artificers of various descriptions, under the command of gen. Destaing, and a crew of 315 officers and seamen;—also, six brass field pieces, several thousand stand of arms, ammunition, and implements of agriculture.—She sailed from Rochefort on the 13th inst. in company with a frigate, from whom he parted on the following day in a gale of wind.

"So tremendous and decisive has been the effect of the fire of the Phoebe in the contest, that I must regret the inability of my pen to do justice to the merits of those who directed it. It has been my duty on a former occasion to report to their lordships the meritorious conduct of my first lieutenant, Holland, and the lieuts. Bedford and Heywood; lieutenant Weaver, of the marines; mr. Griffith, the master; the warrant and petty officers, and the whole of the ship's company, are entitled to all the commendation in the power of their commander to bestow.

"My satisfaction in relating comparatively so trifling a loss we have sustained, it more easily imagined than described, as it amounts to only one seaman killed, two officers and ten seamen wounded: our damages are chiefly in mast, yards, sails and rigging, the greatest part of which are rendered entirely unserviceable.

"I enclose a copy of the French commander's report of the number of killed and wounded on board L'Africaine, with the names of the officers; and I have the honor to be, &c.

"ROBERT BARLOW."

"To admiral the Right Hon. Ld. Keith, &c. Mediterranean."

Gibraltar, April 17. Yesterday arrived here from Aboukir, in 28 days, his Majesty's hired armed brig Louisa. When the Louisa left Egypt, the British army was posted within two miles of Alexandria, and the French, supposed to be about 6000 strong, were entrenched on the heights at Pompey's pillar, said to command Alexandria. The British were occupied in disembarking their field train of battering cannon, two thirds of which was already on shore; and the attack upon the French camp was expected soon to begin, when it was supposed there could be little doubt of the event being as glorious to Britain as the preceding actions had proved.—The French had at first mistaken the 42d regiment, in the Highland dress, for Turks, and attacked them with their usual confidence, but were received with a gallantry of spirit which they did not expect, and probably had not been accustomed to. The Highlanders received the French cavalry on their bayonet; and in their turn made a brisk charge, checked and completely worsted that part of the army opposed to them.

It is further reported, that Murat Bey, and his followers, have attacked the French at Cairo, and prevented Menou from joining the force at Alexandria, where all the rest of the French troops in the Delta had been concentrated. Certain accounts had arrived that the Grand Vizier with his army had marched towards the Delta about the 20th of February.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, July 4.

Last Friday, at the final close of the Poll, for a Member to represent the county of Durham, East riding of the county of York, and the county of Simcoe, in the present Parliament of this Province, Angus M'Donell, Esq. was declared duly elected; there appearing for him 112 unquestionable votes, and for J. Small, Esq. 32.—Majority 80.

Copy of a letter from a gentleman in Montreal, to his correspondent at Kingston, dated June 10, 1801.

"Dear Sir,

"Please to send the letters to York as soon as possible; they contain the important news received by an arrival from Jersey, of late at the 6th of May, of complete success in Egypt.—Gen. Menou is a prisoner, and his army has capitulated. Eleven thousand Europeans and natives sailed from Bombay to co-operate with Gen. Abercrombie.—The emperor Alexander disclaims all the pretensions of his predecessor upon Malta.—Sir H. Parker has been recalled, and Lord Nelson appointed in his room."

Another letter, same date.

"I have only time to inform you, that by an arrival, bringing London papers to the 2d of May, gen. Menou and all the French army are prisoners to gen. Abercrombie, after being well beat; three days after which gen. Craig landed from the East Indies with 12,000 men. The business in the North is settled, the Baltic and Elbe are open, and the Emperor of Russia has given up any claim to Malta."

From the Montreal Gazette of June 15.

London, May 1.

Mr. Charles Locke, the British consul at Naples, who left Paris on Friday the 24th of April, has brought the following very important intelligence;—That he was informed by the minister from the court of Berlin, M. Luchesini, that an account had arrived by way of Toulon, of a decisive engagement having taken place in Egypt, between the English and French armies, in which a complete victory has been obtained by the former, and that gen. Menou had been taken prisoner. It is not ascertained on what day the action took place: but it is supposed to have decided the fate of Egypt. This was confirmed by a similar account from other principal persons at Paris.

Friday, two o'clock—Our readers may be assured of the foregoing intelligence.

It is stated in a New York paper of the 5th of June, that the Spanish port of New Orleans has lately been blocked up by a small squadron of British vessels, and that in consequence of this blockade, the price of flour had fallen from 15 to 5 dollars per bbl.

The Bashaw of Tripoli has declared war against the United States, and ordered his cortairs to capture all American vessels they meet with.

On the 3d of April the Swedish grand fleet consisting of 50 sail, put to sea, with a favourable wind, having on board three regiments of infantry besides the crews. They were to have been joined by the Russian fleet from Revel. Should Lord Nelson experience the good fortune of meeting these potwrout at sea, no doubt is entertained but that he would be able to treat with them on honorable terms, as he is furnished with ample powers to negociate.

ENGLAND.

LONDON, APRIL 25.

DISPATCHES were yesterday received by Mr. Otto from the First Consul, which our gentlemen state to contain the demand of Buonaparte on the subject of peace; viz. the cession of Gibraltar and Minorca to Spain, and of Malta to France!!!

April 27.

Some alarming commotions have prevailed in Constantinople, originating with the Gallioungees, or marine troops, who, exasperated at the delay and indecision of the government, in respect to the sailing of the fleet for Egypt, threatened to destroy the city, and depose the acting authorities, unless the Captain Pacha immediately took his departure. They proceeded to some acts of outrage, and fired several shots into the Captain Pacha's house, and killed some of his people in the streets. The Captain Pacha assured them that the re-possession of Egypt was a matter of the most lively interest to the Porte; that to effect it, every exertion should be made, and that he would immediately put to sea with his fleet, for the purpose of co operating in the deliverance of that country.

The Empress Catherine one day asked Prince Alexander, the reigning Emperor of Russia, whom he would with to resemble most, Alexander the Great, Constantine the Great, or the great Frederick?—"Do not speak to me of such men," replied he, "their glory cost too much blood; my model shall be Henry the IVth of France, who, being compelled to lay siege to Paris, sent provisions through subterraneous passages to his revolted subjects."

The importation of grain, &c. during the last week into the port of London, was 13,000 quarters of wheat (103 from Lisbon) 4103 cwt. of flour, 3914 cwt. of rice, 5,000 quarters of oats, 2000 of barley, 900 of rye, 800 of peas, and 600 of beans. At Liverpool, in the week ended on Thursday the importation of flour exceeded ten thousand barrels. At Bristol there was nearly an equal quantity; and Greenock, Glasgow, and Hull, have had liberal supplies. In the metropolis English wheat has fallen during the week about 15s. per quarter, and most of the foreign wheat 20s.; rye, barley, oats, peas, beans, and flour, are each cheaper. At Lynn, the price of wheat, during the week, fell nearly 20s. per quarter, barley 16s. oats 8s. beans 6s. white peas 16s. grey do. 6s. and flour 6s. per sack. At Worcester, within a fortnight, wheat has fallen from 28s. to 22s. 6d. per bushel, being a reduction of 6os. per quarter. At Stamford, the average price has fallen 14s. 8d. per quarter. At Devizes 12s. and in most other parts of the kingdom, the prices are rapidly declining.

The public cannot but have observed, that while some other papers have been amusing themselves, and trifling with their readers, by attending to state some particulars respecting the negociation carrying on between this country and France, we have cautiously abstained from hazarding even any opinion upon it. We have done for because, however confidently some circumstances have been mentioned to us, we know that the cabinet has observed so inviolable and so laudable a secrecy in this business, that we would almost defy any one individual out of it, excepting M. Otto, to say that he had the smallest knowledge of any step that had been taken, or of any language that had been held on either side, throughout the whole progress of it.

Since the moment that it was known that some communication had taken place between our government and M. Otto, we have never been so sanguine as to suppose, that it would speedily tend to a favourable and decisive result. On the one side, we knew that there would be openness and plain dealing; on the other we expected a degree of intriguing and finesse. While our expectations were raised by the well known moderation and sincerity of our own minister, we were also, confidentially assured that the firmness and spirit with which he would be sure to reject any extravagant proposition that might be made on the part of the enemy, added to the suspicion which would at first probably prevail at Paris, that the new government was meant only to be an ephemeral one, which the advocates of France and enemies to peace here have endeavoured to excite and confirm, would create difficulties and impediments, which nothing but time might remove. Enough, we conceive, has already taken place, to undeceive even those who have been inconsiderate or weak enough, on either side of the water, to entertain any such suspicion.—We believe, that whatever confidence or hope the characters of his Majesty's present ministers excited in the public mind in the first instance, has been abundantly confirmed by every part of their subsequent conduct, which has been marked by a diligent attention to public business, and a knowledge of the duties of it, which we readily leave to speak for themselves.

Whatever delay had taken place in opening a direct negociation for peace between the two countries, by sending an ambassador from the one to the other, we are well persuaded that a discerning public will acquit our administration of it. Whenever that happy event may take place, we most anxiously hope that the terms of it may be founded on principles of mutual concession, that may leave no grounds for a probability of any interruption to its continuance. We should prefer a sincere peace to what is called a glorious one. We are ready to confide in the wisdom of the minister as to the measure which he would offer them, and the resolution that he would exhibit in case of their rejection. This we have no reason whatever for thinking likely to be the result: and we hope, that the French government may shew itself too wise on the present occasion to force an intrepid nation to prove, with what unanimity burthens can be borne and difficulties encountered—what powerful exertions can still be made, even after a war of nine years, by a spirited people, under the direction of a minister whose views the whole world knows to be pacific, and who can be driven to a continuance of war only by the extravagant ambition of the enemy.

ARMY IN EGYPT.

Remarks on the State of the French Troops and their positions in Egypt, from a conversation with an officer lately a prisoner in that country.

"The number of French troops at Alexandria consist of 1200 men, under the command of Gens. Lanneuse and Vieli; and at Cairo there are 1500 men commanded by Menou, Rannier, Damas, Fryon, and Belliet; besides which Dequeit, the surgeon general, reported 1400 invalids and sick. At Suez, 800 men under Maxihane; and 100 under Moran, at Cossier. General Destin commands 800 infantry at Rosetta, and there is a corps of 200 cavalry at the same place. At Damietta 1000 foot and 300 horse. On the Rosetta Branch 200 foot; and at Illesby and Ballack, two corps of cavalry, of 200 each. At Aboukir, Belbeg and Cairo, three companies of 100 men, besides 4000 auxiliaries, principally at Cairo. This makes the whole French force, effective and non effective amount to 13,500 men.

"The Bullack cavalry are within four miles of Cairo. The auxiliary troops are principally compoſed of natives of ſome of the iſlands of the Archipelago, commanded by Turks, whom the French are cautious of employing, and place no confidence in.

"They have lately cloathed all their ſailors in uniform, and ſtrengthened their weakeſt regiments with them; and the Jarmet (a kind of flat boats uſed on the Nile) are now managed by Malteſe.

"Cairo is far from formidable. A ditch has lately been cut round it, and ſeveral works have been erected in the neighbourhood. Since the death of Kleber, Menou has thrown up a battery on a very commanding hill; this once poſſeſſed would ſoon enable us to reduce the citadel, the ſtate of which is very ruinous and imperfect. It has lately been ſupplied with ſpirits, water, &c. the water of Joſeph's Well having been very productive of dyſentery. The inhabitants, as well at Cairo as throughout Egypt, deteſt the French, and their minds are in ſuch a ſtate of irritation, from the ſevere treatment they have experienced, that ſhould an opportunity once offer, it would be extremely difficult to reſtrain them from retorting the cruelty exerciſed by their oppreſſors. The French can rely for defence on their own exertions alone, as any aſſiſtance from the natives is at beſt but very dubious. Murad Bey would certainly abandon them the moment the Britiſh army appeared. Kleber, aware of the importance of Suez and Coſſier, took every means in his power to ſtrengthen thoſe poſts, which are undoubtedly of the firſt conſequence.

"A remarkable good bridge of boats has been built by the French acroſs the Nile from Cairo to Gizeeh, where all their artillery is kept.

"Flat bottomed boats are moſt ſerviceable upon the river.

THE TURKISH ARMY.

"The Vizier's army conſiſted, in Sept. 1800, of only 12,000 men, encamped cloſe to Jaffa, at which place great magazines of ſtores of every deſcription were formed, and there is nothing which an Engliſh army could want that would not be immediately ſupplied in abundance by the Turks. The Turkiſh army collects and diſperſes as it pleaſes, being totally void of diſcipline. Previous to any enterprize a Bethuan goes through the camp to call for volunteers! The moſt advanced poſt is at El Ariſch. The French have one at Sallee, within twenty miles. The artillery of the Turks is good, their horſes the fineſt in the world, ſo that we may mount any number of men.

"Gherzar Picha, of Acre, neither wants inclination nor ability to aſſiſt us. He can ſend an army of 25,000 good, well organized troops to co-operate with the Britiſh.

THE BRITISH ARMY

"In Egypt has been very correctly eſtimated—perhaps one of the fineſt appointed bodies that ever left the Engliſh coaſt. The force which ſailed from India towards the end of December is compoſed of 8000 Sepoys, and above 4000 Europeans. They will probably firſt take the French poſt of El Coſſier on that bank of the entrance of the Red Sea next to the Nile, and then paſs up that ſea to Suez. They would now moſt likely, be delayed forty-eight hours at El Coſſier, and Mr. Antes, in his account of Egypt," declares the paſſage of the Red Sea ſafe and eaſy, with plenty of deep water and ſea room during the whole extent."

ROUSSEAU's LAST SECRET.

[From the Hamburgiſchen Correſpondent of May 1800.]

The French citizen Neufchatel [under the title of Conſervateur] has this day publiſhed a little work in two volumes, compoſed of literary and political ſcraps, among which is the following letter from the well known Jean Jacques Rouſſeau, to the Lady Marſhal of Luxembourg.

"How much have I not to communicate ere I leave you! But time preſſes hard upon me. I muſt make my confeſſion ſhort, and entruſt your noble heart with my laſt ſecret. Know then, that for 16 years I had cohabited with a poor girl, whoſe ſervice became neceſſary to my habits of life. I afterwards loved her as a wife, nor is my fondneſs ſo, her at all diminiſhed. Yet, without you, Madame, I muſt leave her in a helpleſs condition, and thus render my latter moments intolerable.—From this connection have ſprung five children, all of whom were ſent to the Foundling Hoſpital, but with ſo little care that it may be difficult to find them again, for I had even neglected to mark the periods of their birth; a conſciouſneſs of this negligence has for ſome years interrupted my tranquility, and I lament it when it is too late, to mine and their mother's great ſorrow. I had merely ſet a particular mark on the linen of the eldeſt, a duplicate of which has been preſerved; that child muſt have been born in the winter of 1746 or 1747, or thereabouts.—This is all I know.

TRIPOLI AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

(CIRCULAR.)

To the Agents and Conſuls of the U. S. of America, reſiding in the different ports of France, Spain, Portugal, Italy, and Barbary States, and Britiſh Garrilons in the Mediterranean, and to others whom it doth or may concern.

GENTLEMEN,

I had the honor to inform you in my circular letters of Nov. 1800, and 3d of Jan. 1801, of the ſtate of our affairs with this regency; I have now to add, that all hopes of accommodation have ſubſided; I therefore requeſt you to detain all merchant veſſels navigating under the flag of the United States in port and by no means to permit any of them to ſail unleſs they are under convoy, as I am convinced the Baſhaw of Tripoli will commence hoſtilities againſt the United States of America, in leſs than 60 days from the date hereof, and I am perſuaded he has made his demands upon the United States, for no other reaſon than to have an unjuſt excuſe for capturing our veſſels and enſlaving our fellow citizens, they being of ſuch a nature that none but the Preſident of the United States by and with the conſent of the Senate, can agree to. And I having offered him the ſum of 30,000 dollars merely to ſtate his demands, and wait until anſwers from the Preſident, which he has refuſed, is ſufficient proof that his intentions are as I have ſtated them, and dictate the neceſſity of taking every precaution in order to prevent our veſſels from falling into their hands.

I requeſt you, gentlemen, to make this letter public, and to tranſmit a copy of it to the department of ſtate.

I am with aſſurances of reſpect, gentlemen, your moſt obedient ſervant,

JAMES LEANDER CATHCART.

Chancery of the U. S. of America, at Tripoli, in Barbary, Feb. 21, 1801.

Mr. Auſulo, will pleaſe to forward copies of the above to Palermo and Naples, without delay of time.

(CONSULAR.)

SIR,

I have this day received letters from Conſul Cathcart, dated at Tripoli, the 19th and 26th of February, informing me that the Baſhaw of Tripoli has rejected every offer of accommodation which Conſul Cathcart has made him on the part of the United States of America, that ſaid Baſhaw has rejected the letters of interference of the Dey of Algiers, and declares the treaty of the U. States to be void—Demands great ſums of money of the United States, and has ſent his corſairs to ſea with orders to capture all American property, and enſlave the citizens of the U. States in conſequence.

This is to inform all citizens of the United States of the impending danger that is to be apprehended. The United States is fnarled at by Algiers, and nearly the ſame by Tunis.

Given from under my hand and ſeal of office, at Algiers, this fifth day of April, 1801.

(Signed)

RICHARD O'BRIEN,

Agent and Conſul General for the United States of America.

William Kirkpatrick, Eſq:

Conſul for the U. States at Malaga.

(A true Copy.)

Malaga, April 22, 1801.

WM. KIRKPATRICK,

Conſul for the U. States of America.

The following paragraph is given verbatim as it ſtands in the London papers of the 24th April: the editor of one of them obſerves, however, that it is nearly the effect of what has been ſaid every ſix months for theſe laſt ſix years!

"A body of 15,000 men are ſaid to be ready to embark on the neighboring coaſt of France for Jerſey. At St. Maloes a great many gun boats are ready. The expedition is commanded by the officer who was employed in the deſcent on Ireland."

From a Paris Paper.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY.

The citizen Feujas, adminiſtrator of the muſeum, has found in the department of L'Ardeche a foſſil flour like that which Frobboni aſſayed in Tuſcany. The miniſter of marine has charged this learned man to make new reſearches; he has diſcovered four leagues from the Rhine, a conſiderable bed of this earth in a place which is very acceſſible; the bricks which were formed of it ſwim on the ſurface of the water, like thoſe of Tuſcany. This diſcovery is precious for the conſtruction of the magazines of veſſels of war, for magazines of ſpiritous liquors, kitchen chimnies, &c. An experiment was made on an old veſſel, in which a vaulted chamber was conſtructed, which was filled with powder; it was then covered over with combuſtible matter, which was ſet on fire; the veſſel burnt to the waters edge, and then ſunk, without the powder's taking fire.

NEW-YORK, June 8.

A gentleman who has converſed with the boat Mr. Sitgreaves, ſince his arrival, informs us, that if the late Miniſters in Great Britain had continued in office three weeks longer, the points of controverſy, in our treaty with that country, would have been ſettled to the ſatisfaction of both parties. That in conſequence of the new order of things there, the negociations had ſince remained in ſtatu quo. And that a new conference will have to be opened between the two countries.

Mr. King, our miniſter at London, was making preparations to return, hourly expecting his recall.

Mr. Gore, and the other American agent, were to return in the enſuing autumn, not having effected the object of their miſſion.

A gentleman in London, writes to his commercial correſpondent in this city, under date of the 27th of April, thus.

"Flour in London is from 64s. to 70s. per barrel." The ſame letter ſays, "The negociations for peace, between France and England, are broken off."

By capt. M'Neil, late of the Portſmouth, who arrived here yeſterday, we are informed, that the U. States ſquadron, conſiſting of the preſident, commodore Dale; Philadelphia, S. Barron; Eſſex, Bainbridge; and Enterprize, Sterret; ſailed from Hampton Roads on Monday the 1ſt inſt.

The French frigate Semilante was ſtill wind bound; and the Boſton frigate was ſtill off the Roads.

The Times of the 27th April, ſays, "Two of the Regicides who attempted the life of the Firſt Conſul by their infernal machine, have been executed.—How many of the murderers of Louis XVI. are ſtill unpuniſhed?"

The following is related as the cauſe of the blockade of Gantheaume's ſquadron—When capt. Dunn, of the Incendiary, was taken by Gantheaume, on going on board, he entered the admiral's cabin with the greateſt apparent alacrity, and delivered his ſword, ſaying that he ſhould not be his priſoner for many hours, as Sir John Warren, of whoſe ſquadron his was the headmoſt ſhip, was cloſe in purſuit with a vaſtly ſuperior force. This intelligence ſo alarmed the French admiral, that notwithſtanding he had paſſed Toulon, he inſtantly tacked and entered the port, where he was ſoon blocked up by Sir John Warren's fleet, which, though reinforced by two ſhips, then amounted to but ſix of the line.

At the Old Bailey, on Thurſday, April 21, John Leonard was found guilty of ſtealing in the dwelling houſe of John Pratt, three £1. Bank of England notes, the property of Philip M'Ginnis.

The proſecutor, a ſailor, went to Mr. Pratt's houſe in Weſtminſter to ſleep, and took part of a bed with the priſoner. In the morning (to uſe his own words) he diſcovered his trowſers had been overhauled, and his ſhot taken out of the locker; on this he accuſed his mate, who fteadfaſtly denied the charge; but he was not to be palavered out of his right, and he grappled him by the collar, when the marauder fetched him a broadſide in the chops, and being a ſtrong built veſſel, and carrying heavy metal, he was obliged to bail the landlord, and call in the aſſiſtance of a marine, quartered in the cabin, who ſoon made the priſoner ſurrender. He was then carried before a commander (the magiſtrate) who ordered him to be ſearched, when the notes of the proſecutor were found concealed on his perſon.

FILIAL LOVE AND PATRIOTISM.

In a few minutes after Captain Otway had arrived at the Admiralty with the glorious intelligence of our late victory, the place was crouded with enquiring viſitors. Among the reſt a young gentleman of the Tranſport Office, about thirteen years of age, was very conſpicuous. His engaging figure, and eager deportment, intereſted all around him, and rivetted their attention. He haſtily aſked capt. Otway after the Monarch: "and my Papa, ſir, how is he? Is he wounded? Is he killed?"—"Who is your Papa, my dear?" ſaid capt. O. ſtruck and affected with the youth's ingenuous ſenſibility. "Captain Moſſe!"—"My dear! the Monarch has been very roughly handled." "Oh, I know your meaning!" exclaimed the mourner, "my dear Papa is dead?"—Capt. Otway was much agitated; and the youth, burſting out into an agony of grief, bewailed the loſs of his parent in few, but pathetic ſentences. At length he raiſed his head, and, with his eyes ſtreaming with tears, ſaultered out, "I am happy, however, that Papa died fighting for us!"

Buonaparte has propoſed to the King of Spain to grant ſome place of reſidence and eſtablihment for the exiled Princes. No particular place is pointed out; but ſome iſland in the Mediterranean is thought of.

The medium of annual deaths at Paris is 21,000 perſons.

The innoculation of the cow-pox, as a preventative of the ſmall-pox, is already adopted almoſt univerſally throughout France.

An Engliſh paper mentions that the new London Bridge which is to be built immediately, is to conſiſt of no more than three arches, the centre of which is to be capacious enough to admit veſſels of 200 tons burthen to ſail under; this bridge is to be of caſt iron, erected on a ſtone baſe; the caſt work is eſtimated at fifty-three thouſand pounds ſterling.

THEORISING EXEMPLIFIED.

A celebrated aſtronomer, a few years ſince, looking at the ſun through a telelcope, diſcovered a mighty animal upon the face of this great luminary.—He immediately communicated the diſcovery to a group of his brother aſtronomers, who where round him. They all looked and all ſaw the animal.—They began at once to calculate from the apparent ſize of the animal, and the known diſtance of the ſun, what muſt be his amazing bulk. They ſoon found that this mighty ſolar inhabitant might reſt his head, as the Jewiſh rabbis ſay Adam did before the fall, upon the north pole of the earth, and, at the ſame time his heels upon the ſouth.—His noſe was equal to four degrees of our latitude. His mouth when open was juſt as big as the Caſpian ſea; and his tongue nearly as long as the North River. His eye was equal to the iſland of Borneo, and Long-Iſland would juſt ſerve him for an eye brow. For what end, theſe wiſe men aſk each other, was this animal made, and upon what muſt he feed? He we did eat up a comet for his dinner, and a moon or two between meals. He is the genius of the ſun, ſays one." I always thought that particular angels or genii were intruſted with the government of the planetary world. Perhaps it is ſaid, ſays another, you know that Milton makes him a very tall gentleman, and you plainly ſee that he has a huge pair of wings, one of them would ſhade a continent. While theſe aſtronomers were thus wandering after the beaſt, a youth of plain common ſenſe, ſtanding by, not having his head turned by theoriſing, thought it prudent before he ſwallowed all thoſe fine things, to examine the teleſcope. When, lo! he diſcovered that this mighty ſolar animal which had given birth to ſuch ingenious ſpeculations, was no other than a fly, ſtuck upon the object glaſs by a drop of moloſſes. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, July 18

Laſt Thurſday at twelve o'clock, his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor came in ſtate to the Upper Houſe of Legiſlature, to Prorogue the two Houſes of Parliament, and being ſeated on the Throne, he commanded, by meſſage through the Gentleman Uſher of the Black Rod, the attendance of the Houſe of Aſſembly in the Legiſlative Council Chamber; and the Houſe of Aſſembly having attended accordingly, his Excellency was pleaſed to make the following SPEECH to both Houſes of Parliament:—

Hon. Gentlemen of the Legiſlative Council,

AND

Gentlemen of the Aſſembly,

THE advanced period of the Seaſon, and the calls of your private Affairs admoniſh me that it is time to releaſe you from your attendance at this Place.

But before I put an end to the Seſſion, I cannot deny myſelf the ſatisfaction of expreſſing the pleaſure with which I view what you have done in it.

Your attention with reſpect to the Revenue of this Province merits my approbation—the ſubject being new, muſt have been accompanied with difficulty. Experience in ſuch matters is our ſureſt guide; and the frequent opportunities which you will have of meeting in your Legiſlative capacity, will enable you, ſhould it be requiſite, to apply that experience to perfect what you have begun.

The other Bills to which I have given the Royal Aſſent, appear to me, to be fully entitled, each, to its ſhare of my approbation.

And here, I cannot forbear expreſſing the ſatisfaction which I feel, from the zeal and liberality which you have diſcovered in promoting the culture of Hemp, a meaſure ſo ſtrongly recommended to us by our Parent State.

During the interval which will elapſe before we meet here again, I hope that you will reflect on the ſolemn truſt with which you are inveſted, and the Duty which your Country calls upon you to perform, in the diſcharge of which, nothing can contribute more, than a ſtudy of that invaluable conſtitution, which it is the ſingular felicity of the two Canadas to poſſeſs, and which it hath pleaſed our Parent State kindly to beſtow.

May thoſe who enjoy this Bleſſing, be ſenſible of its Value; and with Vigilance and Fortitude guard and defend that Government from which, under Providence, they derive both ſecurity and happineſs.

United States

From a Maryland Paper.

THE cenſus of the United States lately taken is daily furniſhing us with new proofs of the rapidity with which they riſe towards an unparalelled greatneſs.

When we look back to the cloſe of the revolutionary war and obſerve what has been effected in leſs than 20 years—when glancing our eyes from the north to the ſouth we view the new beauties and improvements, wealth and enjoyment which have been in that ſhort period added to the old ſettlements and how many new ones have been formed—when we remark that the towns and cities of that day have doubled and trebled their population, buildings, commerce and wealth, and that new ones have ſprung up, like a new world from nothing, we are ſtruck with an agreeable ſurpriſe at the progreſs we have made; and that progreſs would appear almoſt miraculous were it not the ſubject of our conſtant experience.

Our ſurpriſe will perhaps be increaſed, if, reflecting on what we were two centuries ago, we compare ourſelves at this moment with ſome conſiderable nations of Europe. Our population is probably about ſix millions, which is three times that of either Switzerland, Portugal or Holland, and twice that of Sweden. It is according to ſome computations equal to that of Spain, and even the population of England, probably does not exceed eight millions.

Our merchant ſhips have been eſtimated to amount to nearly 100,000 tons 77,000 tons were built the laſt year; our exports for the ſame period were to the value of 71 millions of dollars, and our revenue upwards of 15 millions.

Such is our preſent ſtate; but when we look forward to what this nation will be, when in the viſion of futurity we ſhall behold preſent towns and cities ſtretch, ſtreet on ſtreet, rear high the pile of elegance and grandeur, ſpread the ſails of commerce, and pour forth the glittering ſtores of wealth; when we behold new towns and cities ſpring up on every ſide like the palaces of enchantment; when before our eyes the deep, uncultured wilderneſs is transformed into the rich garden of induſtry and ſkill, and we hear the joyful muſic of civilized life and ſocial happineſs ſounding down the once ſolitary vale, and riſing o'er the mountain's brow, we contemplate a ſcene more pleaſing and ſublime than any the progreſs of nations ever before exhibited.—When we conſider that from the vaſt extent of our territory, comprehending more than a million of ſquare miles, being a fortieth part of the habitable globe, this progreſs will be long continued; that in half a century our population will probably amount to 25 or 30 millions, equal to that of the largeſt ſtates in Europe, and that in a century more, a period which ſome now born will no doubt live to ſee, we will according to this progreſs have 100 millions; that we muſt finally in the natural courſe of events overſpread the Miſſiſippi, help to people the fair regions of the Weſt, and in one ſhape or other command the continent, we are ſtruck with awe at our own future greatneſs and the prodigious velocity with which we are carried towards it.

Africa is now, has long been, and probably will long be loſt in ſable barbariſms, her ſons are the ſlaves of each other and of other quarters of the globe. Aſia is luxurious, deſpotic, and appears rather to retrogade than advance in ſocial excellence. Europe divided into numerous independent ſtates, has been an almoſt conſtant ſcene of war. But with our ſocial inſtitutions, with morals comparatively pure, with arts and ſciences and a divine religion, we have the faireſt proſpects of felicity and greatneſs which a nation ever enjoyed. Yes, the ſcene before us is ſuch as that which enchants the traveller on ſome mountain's height, while hills and groves, and verdant meads and peopled plains, floating with golden harveſts, lie ſtretched below, while ſtill far and wide they ſpread and they their ſilver floods enlarging as they roll, till all his ſight and ſoul is in the boundleſs proſpect loſt.

If this fair proſpect be blaſted and theſe bright ſcenes darkened, it will be the work of our own hands, it will be the accurſed fruit of narrow views, wild theories, or corrupted manners, of ſome ſtrange madneſs or ſome foul degeneracy. But let us make our views as enlarged as our territory, and elevate them high as our future deſtinies. Let us reflect that it is not for ourſelves alone that we act, nor for future generations no more numerous than the preſent; but for generations of accumulated millions, for centuries to come. Let us in ſhort wiſely improve the great and numerous advantages we poſſeſs.—Let us cherith freedom, ſcience and virtue, which a few centuries back was almoſt a blank, riſe above the other quarters of the globe, and ameliorate the condition of the world.

From Naſſau, May 16.

SIR,

Having lately arrived from the Muſkogee nation, and finding the accounts from that country, in circulation here, vague and untrue, I therefore take the liberty of enclofing, for the information of your readers, the copy of a talk, delivered to the heads of the Muſkogee nation, by the Director General, W. A. Bowles, after his return from St. Mary's where he was near falling into a ſnare that was laid for him, by a ſet of treacherous men, inhabitants of that country, who knew the woods, and promiſed to join him, but changed their minds and engaged to betray him to the Spaniards for the ſake of 3000 dollars that were offered them by the Governor of St. Auguſtine: but had the Director-General fortunately fell in with a detachment which was in his rear, but which did not get up in time, they would have paid dearly for their treachery. The detachment not finding the General, returned, juſt as he was ready to ſtart after them, when he deferred the expedition, and delivered the following talk.

Yours, &c.

G. M. REDINGTON.

Dearly beloved Brethren,

You ſee the difficulties I have to encounter in order to open a port, and get ſupplies into this country for all our beloved people. The Spaniards, with intention to make themſelves maſters of part of this iſland and the people in it, have made war, and endeavoured all they could, both by force and lying, and deceiving talks, to divide us, that they may gain their ends.

I have ſeen the talks of the great King of Spain; he orders his governors to draw this nation and its confederates into its intereſt, and ſet us at war with the United States. This is a bad policy, to which we muſt not ſubmit—to make war on one people to pleaſe another. We muſt not make war on the Americans unleſs they attack us; then, and then only, it would be juſtifiable. The United States is a free government, governed by reaſon and juſtice, when underſtood: Therefore they will not attack this country, or make war on us to take by force what they have no right to; it is only the conduct of land ſpeculators that has created diſturbance between us; but when thoſe people and their practices are properly pointed out to the government, they will themſelves put a ſtop to all innovation.—They, I know, were drawn by the Spablards into the plan of uſurping this country, not aware of what they were doing—but I am perſuaded they will now drop it, and proceed no farther.

I requeſt that all our head men will have an eye on the young people, and prevent them from doing miſchief by treſpaſſing on the United States, that they may have no complaint againſt us or any grounds to make war on us; ſo that if a war ſhould happen, it muſt be their own fault and ſelf defence on ours: then we ſhall find friends enough to aſſiſt us.

Several talks have come from the Governor of Penſacola to this country, touching peace; but they do not contain a juſt and equitable talk, as they all contradict one another. Peace will come on by and by: but we muſt not be in a hurry—for the future good or bad ſtate of the country will depend on the peace that may be made: This nation muſt be firm, and hold each other faſt by the hand, ſo that lying talk cannot divide it.

I will get ſupplies into the land at ſome place, in ſpite of all oppoſition; but we muſt not lay ſtill.—The Spaniards draw all their force to where they hear I am; but they do not make war on me only, but on the name of Muſkogee; it is I that hold forth the name of Muſkogee againſt them all, and will not let it go;—I will not throw away the talk you gave me at the laſt meeting of the nation at the Wekywa, when you appointed me Director General of Muſkogee.—Every Red Man that loves his country, his wife, his children and parents, ought to hold faſt each other, and have but one talk among us.—I call on the warriors and young men, whoſe hearts lead them to turn out for the defence of their country, to follow me to Picolata, where I am going to join thoſe already gone.

You ſee that col. Hawkins could not ſay before me that he told you all laſt winter; I formerly told you ſo; I told you he dare not ſee me after the lies he had told, and the miſchief he had tried to make. I told you he would run away as ſoon as I came near him—you now ſee it was true.

I deſire you will give this talk out in the ſquare, and ſend it to Apuithla Mekko, or Tame king, that he may give it to his people, and the Upper towns may hear of it as my talk; alſo let the white people have copies of it.

Your brother,
W. A. BOWLES.
Director-general of Muſkogee.

DEATH OF KING CÆSAR.

A gentleman who arrived here (New-York) yeſterday in the ſchooner Republican, captain Marſh, from New-Providence, has communicated to us the following intereſting particulars.

He informs, that about 5 years ſince, among a number of other ſlaves, one, who ſtiled himſelf King Cæſar,* was brought to that place from Africa, and ſold to a planter. Shortly after the ſale, King Cæſar, ſpurning the idea of ſlavery, took to the woods where from his ſuperior abilites, he became Chief of all the blacks who had, from time to time, ran away from the Plantations.—

There King Cæſar erected fortifications, conſtructed dens, and other hiding places, and places of defence; and for about four years has herded a banditti, and frequently committed depredations on the plantations adjacent to the woods. At length, on the repreſentations of thoſe who had been aggrieved, the Governor of the Bahamas iſſued a proclamation, granting a free pardon to all who leave the woods, and return to their owners; offering, at the ſame time, a reward of one thouſand dollars for King Cæſar, dead or alive. This had the deſired effect: for, on Saturday night the 9th inſt. King Cæſar was way-laid by a negro belonging to Doctor Cockley, of Naſſau, and ſhot dead on his way to one of the plantations, where, no doubt, he was going for the purpoſe of plunder, &c.—The next day the corpſe of King Cæſar was brought into Naſſau, amidſt the joy of ſome, and the regret of others, who eſteemed the man for his uncommon intrepidity and dignified deportment. Scarcely any event, it is ſaid, ever excited more intereſt at new-Providence, than the death of this man. He was about 45 years of age, and a man of genteel addreſs. His death has entirely diſconcerted thoſe over whom he preſided, and it is expected moſt of them will return to their former owners.

Since King Cæſar's death, his camps and dens have been examined; and, what is very extraordinary, large volumes of manuſcripts, in a character which we are unacquainted with, have been found, and brought into Naſſau. Drawings of his encampments, fortifications, &c. were alſo diſcovered in his hut, which has excited the aſtoniſhment of all who ſee them. The gentleman to whom we are indebted for theſe particulars, has indulged us with the loan of a ſheet of the above manuſcript, and if there is any one in the city capable of decyphering it we would thank him to call at the office of this gazette. The characters are very ſimilar to thoſe of the Chineſe.

* It appears that he poſſeſſed the ſovereign power over a nation in Africa, and was captured by a neighbouring prince, in an engagement between them, and afterwards ſold to the captain of a veſſel engaged in the ſlave-trade.

RHODE-ISLAND.

Barrington, April 3.

There is now living in this town Matthew Watſon, eſq. in the 110th year of his age, in a pretty good ſtate of health, and the enjoyment of his faculties, except being blind. He was born in the county of Cotrain, in the province of Ulſter, in the north of Ireland, in March A. D. 1692, from whence he, with his father and mother, four brothers and one ſiſter, migrated and arrived at Boſton A. D. 1712 from whence he removed to, and ſettled in Leiceſter in the county of Worceſter (Maſſ.) where he has one brother living —deacon Oliver Watſon. Mr. Watſon came to this town in 1722, where by his induſtry he acquired a handſome property. He was furniſhed the office of juſtice of the peace in the town, and was formerly a judge of the court of common pleas for the county of Briſtol. He has been a member of the congregated church in this town between 70 and 80 years, without cenſure. He has ten children the youngeſt of whom is 35 years of age, all in a married ſtate except his eldeſt and youngeſt daughters, who are widows.

He was born in the 17th, lived thro' the 18th, and is now progreſſing in the 19th century.

It is Sweet! it is Charming! it is Beautiful!

The words ſweet, charming, and beautiful, are of peculiar uſe in the ſublimely vague dialect of ſentiment, for by having no meaning at all in their application, they may be made to mean any thing.

Narciſſa had juſt returned from her evening ramble, when to be ſure, ſhe had a charming walk, the moon ſhone ſweetly, and it was a beautiful night.

Moll had beat the dog till the had raiſed the whole family with his howlings. When the inquiry was made what the difficulty was? Behold the ſaucy brute had ſpilt a beautiful pail of ſwill.

Goody Trackle, if ſhe could have walked on three now, half as well as ſhe could once on two, would have taken Goody Trout down cellar to have ſhewn her a charming barrel of pork.

It was expected the ſpeckled pullet would lay two eggs a day, becauſe Johnny had built a ſweet hen rooſt.

A connoiſſeur only would have underſtood the following:

Says Ned to Jack, don't you think this Miſs Snap a charming little toad?

Not ſo very agreeable neither, ſays Jack, you miſtake brother, ſays Ned, ſhe dreſſes ſweetly, her form is charming, and ſhe ſings beautifully.

Strangers ſometimes make groſs miſtakes.

Monſieur had been in the country but a little time; but by cloſe application had acquired a good gramatical knowledge of our language.—He had, by his own enquiries, and the aſſiſtance of his inſtructor, found out that the epithet ſweet, had reference to the ſmell or taſte, charming to ſomething vocal, and beautiful to ſome viſible object; that it was therefore proper to ſay a ſweet taſte, or a ſweet ſavor, a charming ſinger, a beautiful proſpect, or a beautiful woman.—With all this information however, he was entirely unacquainted with the more faſhionable application of theſe terms, which alone can apologize for the following blunder.

His landlady, among other ſpeciments of her economy, was one day expatiating on her frugality in having fatted a hog by the ſlops and crumbs of her own laving, and concluded this panegyric by declaring that it was a beautiful hog.—Monſieur told her that he had been in the country but a little, had ſeen but a few of its curioſities, and that it would make him very happy to ſee her beautiful hog. Upon the approach of his benefactreſs to the yard, this paragon of uglineſs, diſſonance, and ſtench, accoſted her with his uſual melody, which however, at this time, hunger had made more ſonorous than ever.—There Monſieur ſays madam, is not that a beautiful hog? Why, madam, ſays he, with a little amazement, I have ſeen hogs look very much like him before; do you call him handſome? But Monſieur, is it not a charming hog? Upon my honor, madam, he does make a grunt exactly like our hogs.—But ſay, Monſieur, ſays madam, is it not a ſweet hog? Sweet! he may taſte very well; but by Gar he does ſmell juſt like our hogs in France.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman from the Creek nation, dated at Charleſton, (S. C.) June 10, 1801, to a correſpondent in Philadelphia.

"On the 6th inſt. I left the public eſtabliſhment in the Creek nation. The Indians are very friendly, have great confidence in the juſtice of the United States, and are, by the wiſe management and good counſel of col. Hawkins, advancing faſt towards civilization.—They are moving out from their towns and making ſeparate ſettlements on creeks, or wherever they find the ſoil beſt for cultivation. Theſe ſettlements they encloſe with ſtrong and high fences: a great number of them are uſing the plough; and as the game is nearly gone, they are generally very attentive to raiſing cattle and hogs. They begin now to make cotton enough for their own uſe, and have upwards of an hundred wheels in motion, and nine or ten looms. If the ſame benevolence and attention ſhould be continued to theſe people, that has been beſtowed on them for a few years paſt, their ſituation in a ſhort time would certainly be changed for the better.

"On my way through the nation at Cowetuhtallauhaſſee, I ſaw a white man from the Simanolies, who informed me that General Bowles was again making head: that one veſſel for him, with military ſtores and preſents, from New Providence had arrived at the Bay of Tamney, near the mouth of Indian river, to the eaſt of St. Marks, and that two more were expected with ſimilar cargoes. And ſince my arrival here I have been informed by a gentleman but a few days from Naſſau, that previous to his leaving that place, one ſhip had ſailed and more were preparing to ſail with ſupplies for Gen. Bowles: ſomething interrupted his mentioning what the ſupplies conſiſted of, but I ſuppoſe them to be ſuch as are mentioned above. If theſe reports be true, and I think they may be believed as one corroborates the other, almoſt all the Simanolies & ſome of the Lower Creeks, bordering on them, and near to the line which divides the territory of the United States from that of Spain, will be induced to flock to him. And then he will have it in his power (having long ſince had the will) to do much damage to the Spaniſh ſettlements in the Floridas. He will alſo renew his attempts againſt Col. Hawkins, which, as all the Creek nation, except thoſe few which I have mentioned on the Simanolies, are friendly to good order, and look up to Col. Hawkins as their director, will it is to be ſuppoſed prove as ineffectual as his laſt.—The property of the frontier citizens on the Altamaha, in the lower parts of the ſtate of Georgia, will I am apprehenſive be very inſecure from his banditties."

From a late Engliſh publication.

There is a caſe related in one of the London magazines of ſmall Pox having ſuperyened after the Cow, or Kine Pox inoculation, and had excited ſays the writer much converſation. Doctor Huggan, undertook to examine into the matter, which turned out to be one of thoſe ſpurious caſes of Kine Pox which has occurred in this country.—The editors of the Magazine very properly contraſted it with the certificate of the moſt eminent phyſicians in London, and then obſerves "that it does not leſſen the importance of the vacine inoculation, ſince it ſtill remains a certain preventative of the Small Pox."

Dr. Huggan obſerves, "that it is too late in the day for practitioners to be amuſing themſelves with publiſhing caſes altogether incluſive of what they ſeem to be deſirous to be inferred from them, or in hopes of being able to controvert the efficacy of the Cow-Pox in preſerving the human conſtitution from the infection of the Small Pox.—Such caſes, indeed may impoſe upon the credulous, may perplex the minds of thoſe who ſtill have their doubts on the ſubject, and may afford a malicious and ſhort lived triumph to the ungenerous part of the profeſſion, and thoſe who think themſelves intereſted in oppoſing the vacine inoculation; but they never can influence the liberal and enlightened mind, that grounds its concluſions upon the ſteady and uniform reſult of extenſive and deciſive experience."

Magna eſt veritas, et prevalebit.

To which the zealous Dr. adds theſe ſtrong words and figures from Dryden,

'Tis evidence ſo full—
If the laſt trumpet ſounded in my ear,
Undaunted I ſhould meet the ſaints half way,
And in the face of heav'n maintain the fact.

Miſcellaneous Obſervations.—In chips, ſtraws, and Leghorns, ſeveral new ſhapes have been introduced, particularly the Bath Slouch, the Queen Elizabeth's, and the Witch's hat. Sarſnets, in a variety of figures, are much uſed in bonnets. Bugles, beads, flowers, feathers, and very deep lace veils, are much worn. Spencer cloaks, in ſilk and muſlin, have been generally adopted.

A late London paper mentions that when the Archduke Charles was on his way from Bohemia, to command the army of Germany, as he approached the ſcene of action he fell in with a number of wounded abandoned by their companions on the road for want of horſes to draw their carriages in the retreat. The prince immediately ordered the horſes to be unyoked from ſeveral pieces of cannon that were likewiſe retreating, ſaying, that theſe brave men were better worth ſaving than a few pieces of cannon.—When Moreau heard of this benevolent action, he ordered their cannon to be reſtored, obſerving "that he would take no cannon that were abandoned from ſuch humane motives."

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, July 18.

CAUTION.

The public ought to be on their guard how they take dollars of the date of 1796 and 1797, as there is a large number of them in circulation, very handſomely plated, ſuppoſed to have been imported this ſpring into the States from Birmingham and Sheffield, and in all probability may come into circulation here: the milling on the pillar ſide is rather faint; and they may eaſily be diſcovered by ſawing on the edge with a knife, and turning it ſtrong up, when the plate will riſe.

SONNET TO THE GOUT.

'Tis ſtrange that thou ſhould'ſt leave the downy bed,
The Turkey carpet, and the ſoft fettee;
Should'ſt leave the board with choiceſt dainties ſpread,
To fix thy odious reſidence with me.

'Tis ſtrange that thou, attached to plenteous eaſe,
Should'ſt leave thoſe dwellings for a roof like mine,
Where plaineſt meals keen appetite appeaſe,
And where thou wilt not find—one drop of wine.

'Tis paſſing ſtrange;—yet ſhould'ſt thou perſevere,
And rack theſe bones with agonizing pangs,
Firm as a rock thy tortures will I bear,
And teach the affluent bow to blunt thy fangs.

Yes—ſhould'ſt thou viſit me, capricious Gout,
Hard fate ſhall be thy lot—I'll ſtarve thee out!

JOHN BENNETT.

York, 28th July, 1801.

We have been politely favored with an Albany Paper of the 9th of July, from which we have extracted the following intereſting intelligence relative to the warfare in Egypt.

London Gazette, May 15.

LORD Hobart received this morning diſpatches from Egypt.

"Camp before Alexandria, Mar. 19, 1801.

" Sir—I have the honor to incloſe the articles of capitulation of the fort of Aboukir, together with a return of the priſoners ſurrendered, and of the ordnance and ſtores found in the fort.

I have the honor to be, &c.

" RALPH ABERCROMBY."

[Here follows the articles of capitulation in the French language, by which the garriſon were allowed the honors of war, to be conducted on board the Britiſh fleet : there was 12 cannon in this fort, and 150 priſoners.]

"Camp four miles from Alexandria, 5th April, 1801.

" Sir,

" I have the honor to acquaint you, that on the 18th of March an affair took place between a patrole of our cavalry and one of the enemy, in the neighbourhood of Alexandria. I have to regret that Col. Archdall, of the 12th light dragoons received a wound in the arm which has ſince been amputated, and that we have loſt ſome valuable officers and men. Incloſed herewith I have the honor to tranſmit to you a liſt of the killed, wounded and taken priſoners on that day.

" I have the honor to be, &c.

[Signed] " J. H. HUTCHINSON."

[Here follows a return of killed, wounded, &c. 1 Quarter Maſter ; 7 rank & file, 23 horſes killed ; 2 officers, 1 ſerjeant, 6 rank and file, 12 horſes wounded ; 3 officers, 1 Quarter Maſter, 12 rank & file, 7 horſes miſſing."]

" Head Quarters, Camp four miles from Alexandria, April 5th, 1801.

" Sir,

" I have the honor to inform you, that after the affair of the 13th of March, the army, took a poſition about four miles from Alexandria, having a ſandy plain in their front, the ſea on their right, and the canal of Alexandria (at preſent dry) and the lake of Aboukir on their left. In this poſition we remained without any material occurrences taking place until the 21ſt of March, when the enemy attacked us with nearly the whole of their force probably amounting to eleven or twelve thouſand men. Of 14 demi-brigades of infantry which the French have in this country, 12 appear to have been engaged, and all their cavalry, with the exception of one regiment.

" The enemy made the following diſpoſition of their army. Gen. Labuſſe was on their left with four demi-brigades of infantry, and a conſiderable body of cavalry, commanded by Gen. Roize ; Genls. Franit and Rampton were in the centre, with five demi-brigades ; Gen. Regnier on the right, with two demi-brigades and two regiments of cavalry ; Gen. d'Eſtan commanded the advanced guard, conſiſting of one demi-brigade, ſome light troops and a detachment of cavalry.

" The action commenced about an hour before day light by a falſe attack on our left, which was under Major-General Gradock's command, where they were ſoon repulſed. The moſt vigorous efforts of the enemy were, however, directed againſt our right, which they had uſed every poſſible exertion to turn. The attack on that point was begun with great impetuoſity by the French infantry, ſuſtained by a ſtrong body of cavalry, who charged in column. They were received by our troops with equal ardour, and the utmoſt ſteadineſs and diſcipline. The conteſt was unuſually obſtinate ; the enemy were twice repulſed, and their cavalry were repeatedly mixed with our infantry. They at length retired, leaving a prodigious number of dead and wounded on the field.

" While this was paſſing on the right, they attempted to penetrate our centre with a column of infantry, who were alſo repulſed, and obliged to retreat with loſs. The French during the whole of the action refuſed their right. They puſhed forward however a corps of light troops, ſupported by a body of infantry and cavalry, to keep our left in check, which certainly was, at that time, the weakeſt part of our line.

" We have taken about 200 priſoners (not wounded) : but it was impoſſible to purſue our victory, on account of our inferiority in cavalry, and becauſe the French had lined the oppoſite hills with cannon under which they retired. We alſo have ſuffered conſiderably ; few more ſevere actions have ever been fought, conſidering the numbers engaged on both ſides. We have ſuſtained an irreparable loſs in the perſon of our never ſufficiently to be lamented Commander in Chief, Sir Ralph Abercromby, who was mortally wounded in the action, and died on the 28th of March. I believe he was wounded early, but he concealed his ſituation from thoſe about him, and continued in the field, giving orders with that coolneſs and perſpicuity, which had ever marked his character until long after the action was over, when he fainted through weakneſs and loſs of blood. Were it permitted for a ſoldier to regret any one who has fallen in the ſervice of his country, I might be excuſed for lamenting him more than any other perſon, but it is ſome conſolation to those who tenderly loved him, that as his life was honorable, so was his death glorious. His memory will be recorded in the annals of his country, will be sacred to every British Soldier, and embalmed in the recollection of a grateful posterity.

"It is impossible for me to do justice to the zeal of the officers and to the soldiers of this army. The reserve against whom the principal attack of the enemy was directed, conducted themselves with unexampled spirit.—They resisted the impetuosity of the French infantry, and repulsed several charges of cavalry. Maj. General Moore was wounded at their head, tho' not dangerously. I regret, however, the temporary absence from the army of this highly valuable and meritorious officer, whose counsel and co operation would be so highly necessary to me at this moment. Brig. Gen. Oaks was wounded nearly at the same time, and the army has been deprived of an excellent officer.—The 28th and 42d regiments acted in the most distinguished and brilliant manner. Col. Paget, an officer of great promise, was wounded at the head of the former regiment; he has since, though not quite recovered, returned to his duty.

"Brigadier General Stuart and the foreign brigade supported the reserve with much promptitude and spirit: indeed it is but justice to the corps to say, that they have, on all occasions, endeavoured to emulate the zeal and spirit exhibited by the British troops, and perfectly succeeded. Maj. Gen. Ludlow deserves much approbation for his conduct when the centre of the army was attacked, under his guidance the guards conducted themselves in the most cool, intrepid, and soldier like manner; they received very effectual support by a movement of the right of Gen. Coote's brigade. Brig. Gen. Hope was wounded in the hand; the army has been deprived of the services of a most active, zealous and judicious officer.

"The loss of the enemy has been great; it is calculated at upwards of three thousand killed, wounded, and taken prisoners. Gen. Roize, who commanded the cavalry, which suffered considerably was killed in the field. Genls. Lanusse & Bodet are since dead of their wounds. I have been informed, that several other general officers, whose names I do not know, have been either killed or wounded.

"I cannot conclude this letter without solemnly assuring you that, in the arduous conteſt in which we are preſent engaged, His Majeſty's troops in Egypt have faithfully diſcharged their duty to their country, and nobly upheld the fame of the Britiſh name and nation.

I have the honor to be, &c,

(Signed) J. HUTCHINSON."

Of the officers wounded were Major-Gen. Moore, Brigadiers-Genl. Hope, Oakes, and Lawſon.

N. B. One ſtand of colours, and two field pieces were taken.

Admiralty Office, May 15th, 1801.

Lieut. Corbett, arrived this morning from Egypt, bringing diſpatches from Lord Keith, to the Secretary of the Admiralty, dated

"Foudroyant, Aboukir Bay, Apr. 1, 1801

"Sir,

"I have very great concern in acquainting you that in a deſperate attack made on our lines by the French army on the morning of the 21ſt ult. my gallant and reſpectable colleague, Genl. Sir Ralph Abercromby, unfortunately received a wound, of which he died on board this ſhip on the 28th. It is unneceſſary to ſay how much this calamity has been regretted by the army and by the fleet. Their Lordſhips will obſerve that the enemy were repulſed with very great loſs. I enclose, for their information, a copy of Sir Sidney Smith's report of that ſuſtained by the detachment of ſeamen ſerving under his orders; and have the pleaſure of adding, that his own wound has not been ſo material as to deprive me of his ſervices.—The marines were not engaged, having been previouſly to the action, appointed to the duty of Aboukir caſtle, and its vicinity.

"I have the honor to be, &c.

"KEITH."

"P. S. The Captain Pacha arrived on the 26th ult. with three ſail of the line and a body of troops; and on the following day a Turkiſh vice Admiral joined."

[Here follows a return of the ſeamen killed and wounded amounting to 25 only.]

Smyrna, of Alexandria, April 7.

We have, in our endeavors to keep off the ſhore, been obliged to carry ſail to ſuch a degree as nearly to tear our ſhip to pieces; and we received further proof of the impoſſibility of forming an effectual blockade of any port even in this fine country. On the night of our return from the Offing, we ſpoke the Pearl frigate bringing us advice of the ſailing of a French ſquadron of 7 ſail of the line, a frigate, 2 ſloops, and a ſtore ſhips, for this place, with 7000 troops and three generals on board. Lord Keith has been buſied in preparing the Stately, for the line, and our force now conſiſts of the Foudroyant of 84 guns, Tygre 80, Ajax, Northumberland, Swiftſure, Kent and Minotaur of 74 Stately of 64, with ſeveral ſmall veſſels.

Downing ſtreet, May 16.

By advices received this morning from Major Holloway, dated the Camp of the Grand Vizier, at Gaza, March 20, 1801, it appears that on the 10th of that month, 1000 Aſiatic cavalry advanced from that place, and on the following day 1000 Arab cavalry. This body is to be under the command of Tahir Paſha, as an advanced guard. On its arrival at El Arriſh, it is to halt a day or two, until Mahomet Pacha arrives with a conſiderable part of the army, probably about 5000 men, when Tahir Paſha is to advance to Catich. It is the Grand Vizier's intention that theſe 2000 cavalry ſhould join the Britiſh army, for the purpoſe of the expulſion of the enemy from Egypt. The firſt party that joined, conſiſted of about 450 good cavalry, well mounted, and ſeveral parties have joined ſince.

Conſtantinople, April 12.

In the attack which Gen. Menou made on the Engliſh, 21ſt March, after a Council of War was held at Alexandria, the greater part of the corps which he brought up from Cairo, conſiſted of Copts, Greeks, and African recruits.

Another and a deciſive battle is expected in Egypt, when Gen. Regnier ſhall come up, who is on his march with a freſh corps of 12,000 French and African troops. Murad Bey likewiſe has promiſed the French aſſiſtance.

Engliſh Editorial remarks.

The account of the operations of the army contained in the London Gazette extraordinary would no doubt be conſidered as highly ſatisfactory, but we are enabled by private letters to add many facts which muſt have a conſiderable effect on the ſucceſs of our expedition. After the action of the 21ſt of March, ſeveral deſerters, among whom were forty cavalry, came in from the French army; they ſtated that the republicans were completely diſpirited at their defeat; that beſides Generals Lanuſſe (on whoſe talents the Moniteur has ſo much calculated) Roize and Bodet, two other Generals, were killed, and three wounded. Among the latter was Gen. Regnier, an officer beloved and eſteemed by the whole army. The entire regiment of grenadiers which bore the name of the firſt Conſul, is ſtated to have been deſtroyed, and the invincible ſtandard of Bonaparte is brought home in the Flora, an evidence of our triumph. The Captain Pacha had joined Lord Keith's fleet with 6 ſhips and 5000 men, and more were ſhortly expected. The Grand Vizier's army had been reinforced with an equal number of men, from Gheziu Pacha's troops, and was moving forward toward Cairo. Nor was the ſtrength of their enemies all that the French had to contend with; their allies were deſerting them in the hour of difficulty. Mourad Bey had already ſent to Upper Egypt to obtain forgiveneſs for having acted in conjunction with the republicans.

The ſituation of our own army is repreſented as favourable as could be wiſhed. Their poſition before Alexandria was ſo ſtrong, that there was no fear entertained of their being attacked. The army was healthy, and in high ſpirits, and ſupplied from the country with every article of which it ſtood in need. This circumſtance alone proved the wiſdom of Gen. Hutchinſon's conduct in cultivating his advantage, and improving his ſituation, inſtead of expoſing his army to any farther loſs by the immediate attack on the ſtrongly fortified poſition into which the defeated army of the enemy had retired. His object was to poſſeſs himſelf of Rhamania, and to cut off all communication with Alexandria, which he had no doubt of effecting. The deſerters ſtated that the French loſt above 3000 men in the battle of the 21ſt, and this agrees with gen. Hutchinſon's diſpatch.

The immediate conſequence of our victory appears to have been that Gen. Hutchinſon was enabled to detach Col. Spencer againſt Roſetta, and another corps of 4000 men againſt Rhamania. The former would open the communication with the Vizier's army. The poſſeſſion of Rhamania would leave the French without communication or ſupplies, except on the ſide of the Deſert, where the Arabs were in determined hoſtility againſt them.

It appears, after deducting every poſſible loſs, that our army muſt ſtill conſiſt of nearly 13,000 men, excluſive of ſeamen, and the Turkiſh reinforcements; while that of the enemy, from the number brought into action on the 21ſt, could not after the battle, exceed from 8 to 9000 men.

The combination of all theſe facts proves our decided ſuperiority. Such has been the reſult of this battle, which ſtrengthens the eſtabliſhment of our troops in Egypt, and makes the ultimate conqueſt of that country almoſt certain, though it may have been delayed for a ſhorter or longer period of time. Every day muſt add to the advantage of our ſituation, and muſt deteriorate that of our enemy.

The Park and Tower guns were yeſterday evening fired, in conſequence of the diſpatches received from Egypt.

The remains of Sir Ralph Abercrombie were brought home in the Flora frigate. It will doubtleſs be gratifying to his friends, that his aſhes ſhould be depoſited under the monument which is likely to be raiſed to his memory.

The ball which ſtruck Sir Ralph Abercromby entered his thigh, and roſe upwards, ſo that it was impoſſible to extract it.

The attack in Egypt on the 21ſt of March, was commenced by the 'Invincible Legion,' a regiment of 1300 picked grenadiers, to whom the Directory preſented a ſtandard, called the Invincible Standard, who made the attack in a ſtate of intoxication; the flints having been taken out of their guns, that they might rely only on the bayonet. It commenced upon the 42d regiment of Highland foot, which was miſtaken for Turkiſh. They penetrated the lines, and being nobly oppoſed, fought equal to any but Britiſh troops, and refuſing to ſurrender, were every man killed and buried within the Engliſh lines: not one ſurvived to tell the dreadful tale.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

London, May 16.

Yeſterday in the Houſe of Commons, Mr. Addington, after a very eloquent eulogium on the bravery and diſcipline of the army in Egypt, moved that an humble addreſs be preſented to his Majeſty, praying that he would be graciouſly pleaſed to give directions for a monument being erected in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul's, London, to the memory of the ever lamented Lieutenant General Sir Ralph Abercromby, Knight of the moſt honorable Order of the Bath, who having by his conſummate ſkill and bravery, effected a landing on the coaſt of Egypt, in the face of a powerful and well prepared enemy, did on the 21ſt of March, 1801, reſiſt an obſtinate and deſperate attack made upon his lines by a choſen and veteran army, when he received a mortal wound, but did not withdraw from the field of battle until the forces under his command had gained a glorious and immortal victory; and to aſſure his Majeſty that this Houſe will make good the expence incurred in erecting the ſame.

Which was agreed to nem. con.

The thanks of the Houſe was afterwards voted to Admiral Lord Keith, Sir Richard Bickerton, and the officers and ſeamen of the fleet ſtationed on the coaſt of Egypt.

HOUSE OF LORDS—May 20.

Lord Hobart preſented a meſſage from the King, ſtating that he had granted the dignity of a Baroneſs to Lady Abercromby, which was to deſcend to the male heirs of Sir Ralph, with a penſion of 2000l. a year, and deſiring their Lordſhips to enable him to ſecure the latter part of the grant.

REINFORCEMENTS TO EGYPT.

London, May 22.

The guards who have been drafted for Egypt, marched this morning for Portſmouth, where they are to embark with the 24th and 26th regiments and ſail immediately, under convoy of the Leda and Active frigates. The two battalions of the 50th regiment, ſtationed at Minorca, ſix regiments of cavalry, including the York Huſſars, and 8 corps of artillery, are alſo under orders for the ſame deſtination.

Six regiments of cavalry, five of infantry, and a corps of artillery, compriſe the reinforcements now under orders for Egypt. The tranſports will be convoyed by a ſquadron of three ſhips of the line, with frigates under the command of Rear Admiral Pole, and as many troops will be put on board the men of war as they can conveniently take. A large quantity of military ſtores &c. is alſo preparing for Egypt.

A draft of three hundred men and ſix officers from the ſecond and third regiments of guards are ordered to proceed from London on Thurſday morning for Portſmouth, to embark for Egypt.

Yeſterday morning a meſſenger arrived at Lord Hawkeſbury's office, with diſpatches from Lord Minto, at Vienna, and Lord Elgin at Conſtantinople, the latter of which are ſaid to relate to the operations in Egypt; but whether they contain any later advices than thoſe of which Government had previouſly become poſſeſſed, we have not yet been able to aſcertain. An overland diſpatch from India is ſaid to have been received at the ſame time; and report ſtates that Admiral Blankett and General Baird have arrived at Suez, with the Indian army deſtined to co-operate with the Britiſh forces in Egypt.

The Citoyen Francois of the 13th inſt. has inſerted a letter, dated Havre, the 6th, which ſtates, that "letters from Toulon announce, that the ſquadron commanded by Admiral Ganthaume, ſailed on the 5th Floreal, (April 25) with 4000 troops for Egypt.

We underſtand that Miniſters, when they firſt heard of Sir Ralph Abercromby's wound, appointed Gen. Floyd to ſucceed him, fearing that Gen. Hutchinſon was too young to be entruſted with the command; but they are now ſo much ſatisfied with his conduct, and the ability diſplayed in his diſpatches, that they have recalled Gen. Floyd and confirmed Gen. Hutchinſon. The latter is known to be a very good officer and he is much beloved by the army.

Juſt before his death, Sir Ralph Abercromby received a diſpatch from India, announcing, as it is reported, the impoſſibility of ſending an army from Bombay. This news is ſaid to have been forwarded to England in the Flora.

Copenhagen, (Denmark) April 8.

The Engliſh Admiral, Sir Hyde Parker, has written a very polite anſwer to the Ruſſian Ambaſſador, M. Liſakewitz, in which he expreſſes his happineſs at hearing the pacific diſpoſitions of his Ruſſian Majeſty, and that he had immediately given orders for all hoſtilities againſt the Ruſſians, Danes and Swedes to ceaſe.

London, May 8.

The return of Admiral Parker to Copenhagen, and the ſuſpenſion of all hoſtilities in the Baltic, leaves us nothing intereſting to look for from that ſide. The Danes according to private letters, were to leave Hamburgh on the 9th inſt. and it was expected that the Pruſſians would evacuate Bremen with equal diſpatch.

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES.

Britiſh Houſe of Commons—May 14.

G. R.—His Majeſty, taking into his moſt ſerious conſideration the imminent danger with which the kingdom of Portugal, the ancient and natural ally of his crown, is threatened by the powers with whom he is at war, as well as the importance of preſerving and maintaining the commercial relations which ſubſiſt between the two kingdoms, and relying on the zeal and affection of his faithful Commons, recommends it to their conſideration to grant him the means of affording ſuch ſupport, by way of ſubſidy, to her Majeſty the Queen of Portugal, as may beſt enable her Majeſty to take ſuch meaſures for the defence of her kingdom as the exigencies of affairs may require.

Lord Hawkeſbury moved, that his Majeſty's meſſage ſhould be referred to the committee of ſupply; and he gave notice, that in the Committee on Monday, he ſhould propoſe to grant to his Majeſty a ſum not exceeding 300,000l. to enable His Majeſty to make ſuch advances to the Queen of Portugal as the exigencies of her affairs might require.

The Emperor Alexander has written a letter to Louis XVIII. confirming the penſion of 200,000 roubles granted him by his predeceſſor; and informing that unhappy Prince that nothing ſhould be wanting on his part, to alleviate his misfortunes, whenever an opportunity ſhould offer.

Bonaparte's invincible ſtandard was yeſterday brought to Lord Hobart's office, in Whitehall (his Lordſhip being Secretary of State for India affairs); they were brought by Mr. Baldwin, the Britiſh Conſul at Egypt. They were very much worn; the Conſular inſignia of the Republic are emblazoned on them.

Paris, May 15.

An American frigate entered the road of Havre on the evening of the 19th Floreal; it had on board the new Ambaſſador of the United States, charged to carry to Paris the ratification of the Treaty of Peace concluded with the French Republic.

Proclamation

BY HIS EXCELLENCY

PETER HUNTER, Eſquire,

Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Lieutenant General Commanding His Majeſty's Forces in Upper and Lower Canada.

WHEREAS His Majeſty's faithful Commons of this Province in Parliament aſſembled, did by virtue of a Reſolution of their Houſe of Aſſembly, pray that certain Sums of Money ſhould be applied in ſuch manner as to me ſhould ſeem meet for the purpoſe of purchaſing and diſtributing Hemp Seed gratis amongſt the Farmers, and alſo for the paying of Premiums and Bounties to the deſerving Cultivators and Exporters of Hemp in this Province. And whereas I thought fit to aſſent to the prayer of the ſaid Commons: NOW KNOW YE that I PETER HUNTER, Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, by virtue of the Authority ſo veſted in me, and the better to effectuate the wiſe and liberal Intentions of the ſaid faithful Commons—And well knowing the Ability, Integrity and diligence of the Honorable JOHN M'GILL, Eſquire, one of the Legiſlative and Executive Councils, and of the Honorable DAVID WILLIAM SMITH, Eſquire, one of the Executive Council and Speaker of the Houſe of Aſſembly of this Province, have nominated and appointed the ſaid John M'Gill and David William Smith Commiſſioners for the purpoſe of purchaſing and diſtributing of Hemp Seed gratis amongſt the Farmers, and alſo for the paying of Premiums and Bounties to the deſerving Cultivators and Exporters of Hemp, according to the true intent and meaning of the ſaid Reſolution, not doubting but that the encouragement thus liberally held forth by His Majeſty's Faithful Commons, will effectually promote a meaſure ſo agreeable to the wiſhes of the Mother Country, and ſo highly conducive to the proſperity of this Province.

GIVEN under my Hand and Seal at Arms at York this twenty ninth day of July in the Forty firſt year of His Majeſty's Reign, and in the year of our Lord one thouſand eight hundred and one.

P. HUNTER, Lt. Govr.

By His Excellency's command,

Foreign Intelligence.

PARIS, May 8.

A JOURNALIST obſerves, that the death of the Emperor Paul bears a ſtrange contraſt with that of the Empreſs his mother. Catharine died when ſhe was on the point of ſigning an alliance with England againſt France, and Paul I. died when on the point of concluding an alliance with France againſt England.

The Britiſh Government has anſwered the Senate of Hamburgh, in a reply to a remonſtrance on the ſubject, that veſſels navigating under the Hamburgh flag ſhall paſs free from moleſtation by his Britannic Majeſty's veſſels of war.

COPENHAGEN, April 21.

Yeſterday we received a declaration from Alexander I. officially communicated by the Ruſſian miniſter, in which His Imperial Majeſty expreſſes a hope that harmony and good underſtanding will ſoon be reſtored between Great Britain and the Northern powers; in which expectation he has charged his Miniſter to notify to the Admiral Parker and Nelſon, that he will hold them reſponſible for all acts of hoſtility againſt land powers. This declaration was immediately ſent to Admiral Parker.

WARSAW, April 6.

A letter from Petersburgh contains the following news of 6th April.

"It is with pleaſure we announce to you, that the office of liquidation, (eſtabliſhed on the ſubject of the ſequeſtered Engliſh property) is on the point of being ſhut, and we expect that the ſequeſtered property will in a few days, be reſtored to the proprietors. The exportation of grain is free."

Another letter of the 7th of April, ſays,

"The office of liquidation has already received orders to ſtop all proceedings, and the reſtoration of all the Britiſh property it is expected will immediately take place. Our commerce with England is again in its former train."

New York.

Extract of a private letter from Liſbon, April 16, 4 P. M.

"M. E'Araujo is at this moment embarking on board a Portugueſe veſſel, in order to proceed to treat directly with France. It is ſaid the frigate is bound to L'Orient.

The Court of Spain has conſiderably ſoftened its tone in conſequence. The Prince Regent has ſent orders to his Generals on the frontiers not to commit any hoſtilities, as he was in hopes of terminating the buſineſs amicably.

Extract of a letter from Hamburgh, dated April 28, 1801.

"To-day we can inform you, that by order of his Pruſſian Majeſty, the Daniſh troops will, in a very few days, leave our territory, the free navigation of the Elbe is already publicly acknowledged. Of courſe we look for a favorable change and lively trade, and preſume that Weſt India produce will ſoon riſe here."

The late arrivals at Charleſton from Europe, afford no later news paper accounts than we have already had at this port. But the verbal news which we publiſhed in yeſterday's Gazette, from Hamburgh, is ſix days later from that quarter than heretofore received. As to the truth of it, we have out doubts; becauſe we find, by a reference to our former accounts, that Admiral Parker's fleet had returned from the Baltic, which event is noticed under the Copenhagen head of the 25th of April. This is moſt certainly, at leaſt, a preſumtive proof, that the matters in diſpute were in a favorable train of ſettlement; and of courſe, that no engagement could have taken place between the combined Ruſſian and Swediſh fleet, and that of the Engliſh. Beſides, this verbal account is deficient as to particulars: it neither mentions the time of the engagement, nor the reſpective number of the ſhips engaged.

There is another circumſtance which goes to ſhew the improbability of this engagement, is this—An article under the Copenhagen head of April 21, ſays, "The Ruſſian Ambaſſador here, Mr. Liſakewitch, yeſterday received a courier from his court, with directions to declare to Admiral Parker, that it was the with of the Emperor to accommodate the differences between Ruſſia and England, and that he would hold Admirals Parker and Nelſon reſponſible for all acts of hoſtility againſt the Northern Powers. A ſwift ſailing cutter was immediately ſent off to Admiral Parker in the Baltic, (which probably induced his return) as the Ruſſian fleet, having lain-

LONDON, May 6.

By the accounts preſented to the Houſe of Commons, reſpecting the public Funded Debt, and the reduction thereof to the 1ſt of Feb. laſt, it appears that the total principal debt, as it then ſtood, amounted to 479,934,488l. 9s 2d. That the total annual charge for the permanent debt of Great Britain is 88,405,948l. 4s. 6d.—for the non-permanent debt, 1,738,638l. 3s. 4d. and the permanent debt of Ireland, 633,432l. 0s. 8d. making a total of 20,778,013l. 8s. 4d. The Commiſſioners appointed for the reduction of the national debt had, between the 1ſt of Auguſt 1786, and the 1ſt of Feb. 1801, purchaſed 52,281,676l. of which 16,182,094l. is redeemed by the new Sinking Fund, and 36,099,562l. by the old. To this is to be added, 16,083,862l. transferred to Commiſſioners by land tax redeemed making the whole reduction of the public debt on the firſt of February laſt, 68,365,468l. The new Sinking Fund now amounts to 2,378,284l. 2s. 4d. The old to 2,411,534 14s. 9d. making 4,989,818l. 18s. 1d.

Lord Keith's prize money on captures in Tueſday's Gazette will amount to about twenty thouſand pounds.

Medals are about to be preſented by the King of Denmark to the ſeveral officers of his vanquiſhed armament in the road of Copenhagen.

When we no longer ago than Monday laſt, ſays the (London) True Britton, took a view of the diſadvantageous circumſtances in which Mr. Addington had taken the helm of the ſtate, we did not flatter ourſelves, we confeſs, that they would have improved with ſuch rapidity as they have done, and that fortune would have ſo immediately juſtified the wiſe principles on which this adminiſtration has begun its career.—There can be no one who muſt not have perceived, almoſt at the firſt glance, the immenſe advantages which we ſhall derive from the acceſſion of the Emperor Alexander to the throne, and from the ſignal victory obtained by our fleet on the 2d inſt. The general ſyſtem of politics which arreſted the victorious progreſs of the campaign of 1799, which produced the diſaſters of that of 1800, which enforced the peace of Luneville, which armed the powers of the north againſt us; which, in ſhort, ſubjugated Europe to the yoke or to the influence of France;—all this monſtrous fabric will diſſolve more rapidly and more eaſily than it was formed. Denmark and Sweden, forced by Paul into meaſures repugnant to their intereſts, will haſten to diſclaim them. Pruſſia, relieved from the preponderance of one of the two powers by which ſhe was preſſed, will recover her liberty, and the will not, we flatter ourſelves, be ſo unjuſt nor ſo imprudent as to perſiſt in that line which ſhe has for ſome months followed, and endeavour to keep the late uſurpation which ſhe has exerciſed. The politics of the Emperor of Germany will alſo become more independent, having nothing to apprehend from Ruſſia, and taking confidence in the intrepidity activity and ſucceſs with which the Archduke Charles is recruiting the army and reviving its ancient ſyſtem, that power will aſſume an attitude more conformable to its rights and to its former ſituation. The Ottoman Porte will breathe again, and will more effectually ſecond our attempts upon Egypt. France in ſhort, by loſing the tool which ſhe has employed to enſlave or to terrify other powers, will loſe conſiderable in fact, and ſtill more in the opinion of her own, and every other people, while all that ſhe loſes we ſhall gain.

Our relative ſituation will thus be greatly changed, and we ſhall be able, either rapidly to bring the Chief Conſul to terms of peace, ſuch as our honor and our intereſt require, or to wait with confidence and ſuperiority the moment when he will liſten to reaſon. Human events are to uncertain, and human policy ſo ſubject to unexpected changes, that we will not venture to aſſert that the proſpect which we have taken will be completely realized, but every intelligent man muſt at leaſt agree, that it is naturally to be expected. We cannot conclude theſe obſervations without remarking, the high opinion which the language of Mr. Addington in the Houſe of Commons, on Thurſday laſt, muſt convey of the rectitude of his character and of his political ability. The expreſſions of moderation and magnanimity which he uttered in the moment of triumph, will be heard throughout all Europe: they will inſpire all the Cabinets of the Continent with confidence in an adminiſtration which ſo happily mingles prudence with ſtrength, will deſtroy all falſe prejudices in the minds of the people, and will leave thoſe powers who may perſiſt in remaining our enemies, without pretence and without excuſe.

Letters from Bourdeaux by the Sarah ment on that official letters were in circulation from the American Conſul at Algiers, ſtating that the Tripolitan cruiſers were out—and that American veſſels in Barcelona were arming for their defence home.

The Britiſh Packet Amelia, arrived here—and the ſhip Venus, at Philadelphia, brought London papers to the 9th of May—they are not ſo late by ſome days as the accounts via Boſton.

Proviſions were declining—American ſuperfine flour was from 50 to 55s. the bbl.

The Britiſh Government are ſaid to have received aſſurances from the King of Pruſſia, that his Majeſty's motives for taking poſſeſſion of Hanover was to prevent its being ſeized by another power (ſuppoſed the Emperor Paul) and that the Pruſſian troops ſhall be withdrawn whenever it can be done with ſafety to that country.

The ſhip Atlantic, captain Corſan, arrived at New Caſtle on Tueſday the 30th ult. with between five and ſix hundred paſſengers from Londonderry, all in good health. The Atlantic ſailed on the 7th of May. The papers by her furniſh nothing in addition to our late ſtock of intelligence.

The Abbe, one of the ableſt mathematicians of Europe, and attatched to the ci-devant Duke d'Angouleme as his Preceptor, has put an end to his life at Konigſburgh, by ſtabbing himſelf thro' the heart, juſt as he was going to ſet out to follow the Count de Liſle to Warſaw. The motive which led him to this act of deſpair is not known. It is not known that he was labouring under any perſonal chagrin, and he had never given any ſigns of mental weakneſs.

BOSTON, July 2.

YESTERDAY arrived here, the brig Peacock, captain Crafts, in 36 days from London; by which we have received London papers to the 21ſt May, ſeventeen days later.

Of the war in Egypt, and its proſpects, theſe papers furniſh numerous details:—And that it will be proſecuted with vigour by the Britiſh, is evident from the powerful reinforcements proceeding thither.

The difference between Great Britain and the Northern Powers, appeared in train of amicable adjuſtment. The Baltic fleet was anchored in Copenhagen harbour; and no reinforcement of it appeared in contemplation. The Danes, nevertheleſs, are fortifying their coaſt with activity.

We do not meet with a ſyllable on the ſubject of the negociation between France and England.

PHILADELPHIA, July 2.

Obſervations on Harveſting Wheat.

An agricultural correſpondent, (who has paid much attention to the ſubject) has favoured us with the following obſervations on harveſting wheat.—What ſtage of ripeneſs is the beſt for cutting wheat, is not aſcertained in America; but enough I have ſeen of cutting early to be convinced that it is commonly ſuffered to ſtand too long.

At the time of reaping we generally have a clear ſky, and a peculiar drying air, which in ſome harveſts ripens wheat very ſuddenly, ſo that the plants from an apparent ſtate of vigor, are killed in a day or two, and receive no further nouriſhment from the root or blade; and even the ſtems become exhauſted of the nouriſhment they had imbibed, ſo that it could not reach the ear of the grain. If with this ſudden heat and drying ſtate of the air, the plants be ſtruck with ruſt, and are ſtill ſuffered to ſtand longer, the grain receiving no more nouriſhment, can never fill; but by cutting it inſtantly and ſetting it theitered to cure gradually, the beſt chance is had for obtaining marketable good wheat.

The reaping corn from ten to fourteen days earlier than my neighbours, (ſays Mr. Parkinſon) is an advantage I have attended to. As corn begins to decay firſt at the root, all the nouriſhment it can receive while ſtanding uncut, after the decay of the root, muſt be derived from the ſtraw. The dews may feed the grain at one time; but when nearly ripe and the root decayed, the ſun and wind have ſo much power as to ripen it too quickly, or ſcorch or dry it, before its natural period of maturity.

Riding on the road about harveſt time, he obſerved a field of wheat that had taken the mildew. The ſtraw was a remarkable deep green, and inſtead of being dead, appeared to have acquired a greater verdure; though after ſuch appearance comes on, it never receives any nouriſhment or grows larger, inſtead whereof the ſtraws become diſtempered, ſpotted and diſcoloured. The ſooner it is then cut, the better. He took 12 ears of the wheat, which, and the ſtraw, were green as graſs, and at the ſame time was mildewed. A great deal of rain had fallen the fore part of the day, but the ears of wheat were pretty dry. He tied them in a bunch, intending to hang them up in his houſe, to dry and ripen. Several weeks afterwards having been forgot, he took them out of his great coat pocket, when the ſtraw was found to be ſtill green. The grain was then rubbed out, and to his aſtoniſhment he never ſaw better. It was fine in colour and well filled; but what remained in the field, from which he took theſe ears, was very ſmall and of little value. This is a ſtrong caſe, which ought to make a ſtrong impreſſion on the minds of the farmers. He adds—from thence, that if the farmers would cut their wheat when it was ſtruck with mildew, and ſet it up in the fields in ſmall ſtacks of about a cart-load each, ſo as neither to heat nor to mould it; it would be better than to let it ſtand, as is the practice, uncut. He had at the ſaid time taken 12 ears from an adjoining riper field, which were likewiſe found in the other pocket of the great coat: Though theſe when gathered, appeared ſo much ſuperior to thoſe that had taken mildew, they did not turn out nearly ſo good as the others.

From the above circumſtances, Mr. Parkinſon was ever afterwards partial to cutting wheat when the ſtraw appeared of a reddiſh caſt, or ſome of it green, with the joints full of ſap, and it ſeldom diſappointed his expectations.—The ſtraw, he adds, is better for chaff, the flour much fairer and heavier, and the fine flour it will grind into bran. But he does not think, if the wheat eſcapes the mildew, it ought to be cut ſo green.

It is probable that the ſtate of the wheat, as it approaches to ripeneſs in the preſent ſeaſon, will admit of various inſtructive experiments to be made by thoſe whom it chiefly concerns; eſpecially, they may learn for their future conduct, how far it will bear to be cut unripe, or green, to advantage. Hitherto, during the month of May, there has been much cool weather, accompanied by frequent rains; ſuch was the May of the great year of ſcab and ruſt. (I think it was about the year 1785.) The crops of wheat were uncommonly promiſing; but both the roll, and then (though not till the farmer expected daily the wheat was about to ripen) the ſcab ſtruck it, by which the crops were reduced in quality as well as in quantity; what was effected by ſcab could never be made to yield good flour, but was more or leſs clammy. During the progreſs of the ruſt and ſcab, I examined the roots of many plants, which appeared injured, it not dead, at the ſame time the ſtalks and blades looked thriving. In this ſtate of things the farmer may take into conſideration at what time to cut down his wheat: for a ſlight degree of ruſt it ſhould not be hurried; but when greatly ruſted in its advanced ſtate of ripening, and when conſiderably ſcabbed, (which never happens but in the moment before it ripens) immediately cut it down, and guard it againſt ſun and wind ſlightly, leſt by ſecuring it too cloſe, it heat and be entirely ſpoiled.

What in wheat is by ſome called ſcab, by others is called empty ears.

To make good CHEESE obſerve the following rules.

1. Let your milk be blood warm, & then put in one handfull of ſalt to the milk of ſeven cows.

2. Then ſtir in one tea cup full of Runnet.

3. Let it ſtand two hours, or more, and then cut the curd into middling ſquares, with a wooden knife, and preſs the curd to the bottom of the tup with a cloth, or ſieve, and take out part of the whey, and when all the curd is at the bottom, take out all the whey, and let the curd drain for one quarter of an hour before you ſalt and break into the vat.

4. If any curd ſwims, after preſſing what you can to the bottom of the tub, it is flip curd, and muſt be taken out, or it will ſour and ruin the cheeſe.

5. When your cheeſe is in the vat, it muſt be turned ſeveral times within the ſpace of forty eight hours.

6. When the cheeſe is preſſed, keep it as warm as you can, that it may ſweat; and let it not be placed with new and damp cheeſe, if you can prevent.

7. Never leave a bowl or dipper in the cheeſe tub while the cheeſe is earning or coming.

8. When the whey is green, the curd is all made or earned.

9. When cheeſe ſwells, or puffs, after it is taken from the preſs, pierce it with a wooden ſkewer in ſeveral places.

10. Sower milk, and that which is too cold injures the cheeſe.

11. Salt petre is apt to four cheeſe & make it ferment.

To make good Runnet, without which there can be no good Cheeſe;

1. As ſoon as the ſkin is cold from the calf, rinſe it in water, and rub it with ſalt; then fill it and cover it with ſalt. If you dry it too near a fire it will be rancid.

2. Put one gallon of ſpring water, boiled, to two ſkins, and add ſalt, until it ſwim an egg: let it ſtand till blood warm, before you put in your ſkins, either whole, or cut into pieces: and within twenty-four hours it will be fit for uſe, and may be bottled up.

3. Too much Runnet makes cheeſe ſtrong, and too little makes it too mild. As before obſerved, a tea cup, or a little more of good Runnet, is enough for the milk of ten cows.

4. Cleanlineſs, in the important buſineſs of making both Cheeſe and Butter, is a capital recommendation; it may be conſidered as a virtue; where it is known, it will be rewarded.

ANECDOTE.

A bricklayer in Flanders, having the misfortune to roll off a houſe he was repairing, pitched exactly on the head of a Spaniard, and killed him on the ſpot, without receiving the leaſt injury himſelf. The relations of the deceaſed, however, proſecuted the unhappy wight with much acrimony, refuſing every other recompence except lex talionis. The fate of the bricklayer, therefore, was ſuſpended by a very ſlender thread, when the judge, exaſperated at the proſecutors obſtinacy, addreſſed the acting one as follows—"Sir, your requeſt ſhall be complied with: aſcend you the top of the houſe, by which your kinſman loſt his life, and from thence fall with all your force upon the culprit, whom I will ſtation below; ſo that the puniſhment may be proportioned to the offence.

BY HIS EXCELLENCY

PETER HUNTER, Eſquire,

Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Lieutenant General Commanding His Majeſty's Forces in Upper and Lower Canada.

WHEREAS His Majeſty's faithful Commons of this Province in Parliament aſſembled, did by virtue of a Reſolution of their Houſe of Aſſembly, pray that certain Sums of Money ſhould be applied in ſuch manner as to me ſhould ſeem meet for the purpoſe of purchaſing and diſtributing Hemp Seed gratis amongſt the Farmers, and alſo for the paying of Premiums and Bounties to the Deſerving Cultivators and Exporters of Hemp in this Province. And whereas I thought fit to aſſent to the prayer of the ſaid Commons—NOW KNOW YE that I PETER HUNTER, Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, by virtue of the Authority ſo veſted in me, and the better to effectuate the wiſe and liberal Intentions of the ſaid faithful Commons—And well knowing the Ability, Integrity and diligence of the Honorable JOHN M'GILL, Eſquire, one of the Legiſlative and Executive Councils, and of the Honorable DAVID WILLIAM SMITH, Eſquire, one of the Executive Council and Speaker of the Houſe of Aſſembly of this Province, have nominated and appointed the ſaid John M'Gill and David William Smith Commiſſioners for the purpoſe of purchaſing and diſtributing of Hemp Seed gratis amongſt the Farmers, and alſo for the paying of Premiums and Bounties to the deſerving Cultivators and Exporters of Hemp, according to the true intent and meaning of the ſaid Reſolution, not doubting but that the encouragement thus liberally held forth by His Majeſty's Faithful Commons, will effectually promote a meaſure ſo agreeable to the wiſhes of the Mother Country, and ſo highly conducive to the proſperity of this Province.

THE following are extracts of private letters received by the laſt mail, dated Hamburgh, April 28 :—

"Accounts from Copenhagen received here by expreſs, to the 25th inſt. fully confirm the return of the Britiſh fleet from its cruize in the Baltic, and ſtate, that one diviſion of it had already ſailed for the Sound,

"As ſoon as Admiral Sir Hyde Parker received the agreeable diſpatches addreſſed to him by the Emperor Alexander I. which were forwarded at the requeſt of the Ruſſian Ambaſſador at Copenhagen, Mons. de Liſakewitſch, by a ſwift ſailing Daniſh cutter, he immediately gave orders for the fleet to return to Kioege Bay, where it ſafely anchored on the 24th, in the afternoon.

"Alexander the firſt, in his diſpatches to the Britiſh Admiral, ſtated, that as it was his wiſh to ſettle amicably the differences between Ruſſia and England, he expected that the Britiſh fleet would not commence any hoſtile operations in the Baltic, till farther operations from England, whither the Emperor had ſent ſuch propoſals as he was previouſly aſſured would be deemed ſatisfactory ; but that if Sir Hyde Parker, regardleſs of the pacific meaſures already adopted by the Emperor, ſhould proceed to commit any act of hoſtility, he muſt conſider himſelf as ſolely reſponſible for the conſequences.

"The Emperor ſent orders at the ſame time to all his harbours to ſuſpend any farther armaments, and to ſtop the ſailing of the veſſels ready for ſea. Similar meaſures have been adopted by the King of Sweden ; and the Northern Convention may be conſidered as completely at an end.

"In the evening of the 24th inſtant an Engliſh Meſſenger arrived with diſpatches at Copenhagen, addreſſed to the Daniſh Government, and to Sir Hyde Parker.

"The official reports of Sir Hyde Parker and Lord Nelſon, reſpecting the glorious victory of the 2d of April, were received here by the mail of the 19th, which arrived yeſterday. They cauſed great joy among the Hamburgh merchants, and the Engliſh reſident here, as they totally refute the exaggerated accounts propagated by the Daniſh newſpapers.

"Captain Dyle, who went with diſpatches from the Britiſh fleet in the Baltic to Berlin, obtained the conſent of the Pruſſian Cabinet that fleet to take in water and proviſions on the coaſts of Pruſſia and Pomerania.

"The Engliſh Conſuls at Roſtock, Memel, Koenigſberg, Dantzic, &c. had received orders from Lord Carytort to inform the Britiſh Commander, if he ſhould viſit their neighbourhood, that it was unneceſſary for him to proceed any farther in the Baltic.

"This city begins already to feel the effects produced by the late victory off Copenhagen, and from this day it will ceaſe to pay the ſum of 8000 banco marks per diem, for the maintenance of the Daniſh troops who ſtill infeſt it.

"The embargo on all ſhips in the river has likewiſe been taken off, and ſuch veſſels as have cargoes of wheat for England will ſail freely, like the reſt.

"The Daniſh ordinance, reſpecting the ſequeſtration of Britiſh property, ſtuck up at the Exchange, has been taken down, by order of the Senate.

"Reſpectable private letters from Berlin of the 26th inſt. confidently ſtate, that a great and moſt unexpected change has juſt taken place in the political ſentiments of the Pruſſian Government. On the arrival of an Engliſh and Ruſſian courier, a grand Council of State was held, at which old Prince Henry of Pruſſia attended by particular deſire. State matters of the utmoſt importance were ſubmitted to its conſideration, and for the firſt time it appeared the Miniſter Count Hangwitz had loſt his influence. Prince Henry, it is reported, adviſed an immediate reconciliation with England, and the evacuation of the Electorate of Hanover. The ſame Prince likewiſe recommended the cloſeſt harmony and union with the new Ruſſian Monarch.

"The reſult of this important deliberation is, by all accounts, highly in favour of Great Britain and the Houſe of Brunſwick.

"On Sunday laſt a Pruſſian courier brought diſpatches to the Pruſſian Miniſter reſident here, with letters from his Pruſſian Majeſty, one to the Senate of Hamburgh, and the other to the

"The Daniſh ordinance, reſpecting the ſequeſtration of Britiſh property, ſtuck up at the Exchange, has been taken down, by order of the Senate.

"Reſpectable private letters from Berlin of the 26th inſt. confidently ſtate, that a great and moſt unexpected change has juſt taken place in the political ſentiments of the Pruſſian Government. On the arrival of an Engliſh and Ruſſian courier, a grand Council of State was held, at which old Prince Henry of Pruſſia attended by particular deſire. State matters of the utmoſt importance were ſubmitted to its conſideration, and for the firſt time it appeared the Miniſter Count Hangwitz had loſt his influence. The ſame Prince likewiſe recommended the cloſeſt harmony and union with the new Ruſſian Monarch.

"The reſult of this important deliberation is, by all accounts, highly in favour of Great Britain and the Houſe of Brunſwick.

"On Sunday laſt a Pruſſian courier brought diſpatches to the Pruſſian Miniſter reſident here, with letters from his Pruſſian Majeſty, one to the Senate of Hamburgh, and the other to the Prince of Heſſe, who commands the Danish troops in this city. The Miniſter waited immediately upon his Highneſs with the letter from his Sovereign, in which the latter declares that he heard with great diſpleaſure of the exactions made by the Daniſh troops, and acquaints his Serene Highneſs that if he does not quit this free city and its environs, as ſpeedily as poſſible, his Pruſſian Majeſty will take ſuch meaſures as ſhall compel him to evacuate it.

"Sir James Craufurd is ſaid to have made a ſimilar requeſt to the Daniſh Field Marſhal ſome days before.

"The Senate of Hamburgh, and the Pruſſian Miniſter, have received copies of the letter to Prince Charles of Heſſe, the contents of which had ſuch an effect upon him, that he refuſed to give audience to any body during the whole of yeſterday.

"His Pruſſian Majeſty, in his communication to the Senate, farther deſires that the Daniſh troops be ſupplied with no more neceſſaries.

May 11. It was yeſterday reported that government has received advices that 6000 infantry, chiefly French have joined Menou by the deſert. Our wounded are moſtly carried on board our fleet. We are ſtill without authentic accounts of the Bombay army having landed at Suez, though reports to that effect are circulated. The Turkiſh fleet, or a part of it, has joined us at Aboukir, but the troops it brings will be of little uſe. Government are ſending reinforcements with all poſſible expedition. Between five and ten thouſand are under orders for the ſervice, partly to replace the garriſons of Gibraltar, Minorca and Malta, which will be drafted for Egypt.

The accounts received by Government on Friday from the Joſeph cutter, which left Minorca on the 7th of April, and is arrived at Plymouth, ſtate that the Mutine ſloop, which arrived at Minorca the day before the Joſeph ſailed, brought intelligence of Sir J. B. Warren, with 7 ſail of the line, having been ſeen on the 4th, between Malta and Sardinia, in chace of Gantheaume's fleet, of 7 ſail of the line, two of which having loſt their fore top maſts, muſt have retarded the progreſs of the other ſhips unleſs they were abandoned. Gantheaume was making the beſt of his way back to Toulon, on finding an Engliſh fleet was ready to oppoſe him, and it is feared he has regained that port, as Sir J. B. Warren is ſaid to have loſt ſight of him in the night.

The Joſeph, which brought diſpatches from Minorca, conveyed there by the Mutine from Egypt, arrived at Gibraltar on the 16th. On the 2d of April in the Bay of Biſcay, ſhe was chaſed by 4 ſail of Spaniſh line of battle ſhips from Breſt, and the next day ſhe fell in with 5 more, from the ſame port; the Joſeph was obliged to crowd all ſail to avoid being captured, but was near enough to diſcover their ſize, & of what nation; they were ſteering a ſouthern courſe, ſuppoſed for Cadiz, or perhaps to join Gantheaume, if poſſible, and proceed to Egypt.

May 14. We yeſterday ſtated, that reports had reached this country of the intention of the French government to incorporate the Batavian Republic with France. A letter from on board Admiral Dickſon's fleet cruizing off Goree, to a naval officer of rank in town, ſtates their having received information that the meaſure was reſolved on by the French government, and an attempt to carry it into execution about the 8th. The following letter gives ſome particulars of this project, but we cannot vouch for the accuracy, as we know not the channel through which the information comes:

Amſterdam, May 4.

On the 29th ult. the long expected Gen. Angereau arrived at the Hague, but without receiving any marks of public diſtinction. On the 1ſt of May he aſſembled the members of the Batavian Government, and announced to them the arret of the Conſuls, bearing date April 11th, declaring that in conſequence of the Reviſion of the Batavian Republic, which was long ſince found neceſſary, they had decreed that the Batavian Republic ſhould from hence forward, loſe all ſeperate diſtinctions, and form a part of the French Republic one and indiviſible. This communication was heard with evident marks of diſguſt, and the meeting broke up abruptly. Symptoms of diſcontent were manifeſted by the lower order of the people through the day, and the Orange cockade was hoiſted in the evening.

May 15.

No farther information has been received of the reported changes in Holland. The ſtory of De Winter's putting the fleet under the protection of this country is univerſally conſidered, as we ſtated yeſterday, to be quite unworthy of credit. It is very generally believed, however, that the intrigue for the incorporating Union has been for ſome time carried on by the French Government. The cabinets of Berlin and the Thuilleries no longer maintain their former good correſpondence; many think that Buonaparte had reaſon to ſuſpect that the intrigues and perhaps the arms of Pruſſia, would have endeavoured to diſpute with France for the leading influence in Holland.

The French are fitting out expeditions at Rochfort and Breſt.

The Spaniſh ſhips which chaſed the George cutter, arrived from the Mediterranean, did not eſcape out of Breſt, as we ſuppoſed, but are thoſe which were one of the objects of Sir James Poulteney's expedition to have deſtroyed in Ferrol. It is believed they are only gone to Cadiz.

May 29. Yeſterday arrived the mail from Hamburgh, which became due on Wedneſday.

The Danes ſtill retained poſſeſſion of that city: but the Prince of Heſſe inliſts no longer upon the payment of 6,500 marks per diem, which he has until now extorted from the Senate. His troops are about to withdraw to the Daniſh territories, but will not quit the neighbourhood of Hamburgh, until the final ſettlement of all matters in diſpute.

It appears by private letters that Denmark demands that the Pruſſian troops ſhall evacuate the territory of Hanover, at the ſame time that the withdraws her own from Hamburgh. The Duchy of Oldenburgh is already evacuated by the Pruſſians. The Court of Berlin is repreſented as highly diſpleaſed at the application made by the city of Hamburgh for the proteſtion of Great Britain. It does not however appear that it interfered itſelf with ſufficient vigor to blame the intervention of other ſtates.

Accounts from Peterſburgh ſtate, that his Imperial Majeſty had publiſhed an Ukaſe reſpecting the Engliſh ſhipping and the ſuperintendance of Engliſh property. A number of our ſeamen had been permitted to go on board their reſpective veſſels, but they were not ſuffered to be at large on their parole.

In the capture of the Daniſh Iſlands in the Weſt Indies our Commanders paid the moſt ſacred regard to the rights of neutrals, particularly to the citizens of the United States of America. In the capitulation of all the Iſlands it was provided, that "the ſubjects of the United States of America, ſhould enjoy the fulleſt ſecurity for their perſons and property, as well as the free exercile of their religion." In the correſpondence with the Governor of St. Bartholomew, was the ſubſequent letter:

As whatever reluctance we might feel in adopting a meaſure ſo extremely diſagreeable to us, it never the leſs would be our duty not only to reſiſt in every inſtance, ſuch unbecoming proceedings, but the means of obliging us to act againſt whoever might be concerned in a tranſaction of ſo improper a nature, in a manner which we would ever wiſh to avoid. At the time of making this communication, we hope not to be underſtood as conceiving any thing now alluded to, at all likely to occur. We feel ſatisfied of the contrary, and we have noticed it merely as a meaſure of precaution to thoſe who might otherwiſe have been unwarily led into a ſtep, without being aware of the conſequences attendant.

An ACT for granting to his Majeſty, his heirs and ſucceſſors, to and for the uſes of this province the like duties on goods and merchandize brought into this province from the United States of America as are now paid on goods and merchandize imported from Great Britain and other places.

[9th July, 1801.]

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN,

I. WE your Majeſty's moſt dutiful and loyal ſubjects the Commons of the province of Upper Canada in Parliament aſſembled for the uſes of this province have freely and voluntarily reſolved to give and grant to your Majeſty, your heirs and ſucceſſors, the ſeveral duties herein after mentioned, and in ſuch manner and form as herein after expreſſed. And therefore moſt humbly beſeech your Majeſty that it may be enacted and be it enacted by the King's moſt excellent Majeſty by and with the advice and conſent of the Legiſlative Council and Aſſembly of the province of Upper Canada conſtituted and aſſembled by virtue of and under the authority of an act paſſed in the Parliament of Great Britain, entitled an act to repeal certain parts of an act paſſed in the fourteenth year of his Majeſty's reign, entitled "an act for making more effectual proviſion for the government of the province of Quebec in North America, and to make further proviſion for the government of the ſaid province" and by the authority of the ſame. those who tenderly loved him, that as his life was honorable, so was his death glorious. His memory will be recorded in the annals of his country, will be sacred to every British Soldier, and emblazoned in the recollection of a grateful posterity.

"It is impossible for me to do justice to the zeal of the officers and to the bravery of this army. The reserve against whom the principal attack of the enemy was directed, conducted themselves with unexampled spirit.—They resisted the impetuosity of the French infantry, and repulsed several charges of cavalry. Maj. General Moore was wounded at their head, tho' not dangerously. I regret, however, the temporary ablence from the army of this highly valuable and meritorious officer, whose counsel and co-operation would be so highly necessary to me at this moment. Brig. Gen. Oaks was wounded nearly at the same time, and the army has been deprived of an excellent officer.—The 28th and 42d regiments acted in the most distinguished and brilliant manner. Col. Paget, an officer of great promise, was wounded at the head of the former regiment; he has since, though not quite recovered, returned to his duty.

"Brigadier General Stuart and the foreign brigade supported the reserve with much promptness and spirit; indeed it is but justice to the corps to say, that they have, on all occasions, endeavoured to emulate the zeal and spirit exhibited by the British troops, and perfectly succeeded. Maj. Gen. Lumlow deserves much approbation for his conduct when the centre of the army was attacked; under his guidance the guards conducted themselves in the most cool, intrepid, and soldier like manner; they received very effectual support by a movement of the right of Gen. Coote's brigade. Brig. Gen. Hope was wounded in the hand; the army has been deprived of the services of a most active, zealous and judicious officer.

"The lois of the enemy has been great; it is calculated at upwards of three thousand killed, wounded, and taken prisoners. Gen. Roize, who commanded the cavalry, which suffered considerably was killed in the field. Genis. Lanusse & Bodet are since dead of their wounds. I have been informed, that several other general officers, whose names I do not know, have been either killed or wounded.

"I cannot conclude this letter without solemnly assuring you that, in the arduous contest in which we are present engaged, His Majesty's troops in Egypt have faithfully discharged their duty to their country, and nobly upheld the fame of the British name and nation.

I have the honor to be, &c,

(Signed) J. HUTCHINSON."

Of the officers wounded were Major-Gen. Moore, Brigadiers-Genl. Hope, Oakes, and Lawson.

Lieut. Corbett, arrived this morning from Egypt, bringing difpatches from Lord Keith, to the Secretary of the Admiralty, dated

"Foudroyant, Aboukir Bay, Apr. 1, 1801

"Sir,

"I have very great concern in acquainting you that in a defperate attack made on our lines by the French army on the morning of the 21ft ult. my gallant and refpectable colleague, Genl. Sir Ralph Abercromby, unfortunately received a wound, of which he died on board this fhip on the 28th. It is unneceffary to fay how much this calamity has been regretted by the army and by the fleet. Their Lordfhips will obferve that the enemy were repulfed with very great lois. I enclofe, for their information, a copy of Sir Sidney Smith's report of that fuftained by the detachment of feamen ferving under his orders; and have the pleafure of adding, that his own wound has not been fo material as to deprive me of his fervices.—The marines were not engaged, having been previoufly to the action, appointed to the duty of Aboukir caftle, and its vicinity.

"I have the honor to be, &c.

"KEITH."

"P. S. The Captain Pacha arrived on the 26th ult. with three fail of the line and a body of troops; and on the following day a Turkifh vice Admiral joined."

Smyrna, off Alexandria, April 7.

We have, in our endeavors to keep off the fhore, been obliged to carry fail to fuch a degree as nearly to tear our fhip to pieces; and we received further proof of the impoffibility of forming an effectual blockade of any port even in this fine country. On the night of our return from the Offing, we fpoke the Pearl frigate bringing us advice of the failing of a French fquadron of 7 fail of the line, a frigate, 2 floops, and 2 ftore fhips, for this place, with 7000 troops and three generals on board. Lord Keith has been bufied in preparing the Stately, for the line, and our force now conftfts of the Foudroyant of 84 guns, Tygre 80, Ajax, Northumberland, Swiftfure, Kent and Minotaur of 74. Stately of 64, with feveral fmall veffels.

Downing ftreet, May 16.

By advices received this morning from Major Holloway, dated the Camp of the Grand Vizier, at Gaza, March 20, 1801, it appears that on the 18th of that month, 1000 Afiatic cavalry advanced from that place, and on the following day 1000 Arab cavalry. This body is to be under the command of Tahir Pafha, as an advanced guard. On its arrival at El-Arifh, it is to halt a day or two, until Mahomet Pacha arrives with a confiderable part of the army, probably about 5000 men, when Tahir Pafha is to advance to Catich. It is the Grand Vizier's intention that thefe 2000 cavalry fhould join the Britifh army, for the purpofe of the expulfion of the enemy from Egypt. The firft party that joined, conftfted of about 450 good cavalry, well mounted, and feveral parties have joined fince.

Conftantinople, April 12.

In the attack which Gen. Menou made on the Englifh, 21ft March, after a Council of War was held at Alexandria, the greater part of the corps which he brought up from Cairo, conftfted of Copts, Greeks, and African recruits.

Another and a decifive battle is expected in Egypt, when Gen. Regnier fhall come up, who is on his march with a frefh corps of 12,000 French and African troops. Murad Bey likewife has promifed the French aftiftance.

English Editorial remarks.

The account of the operations of the army contained in the London Gazette extraordinary would no doubt be conftdered as highly fatisfactory, but we are enabled by private letters to add many facts which muft have a conftderable effect on the fuccefs of our expedition. After the action of the 21ft of March, feveral deferters, among whom were forty cavalry, came in from the French army; they ftated that the republicans were completely difpirited at their defeat; that befides Generals Lanufle (on whofe talents the Moniteur has fo much calculated) Roize and Bodet, two other Generals, were killed, and three wounded. Among the latter was Gen. Regnier, an officer beloved and efteemed by the whole army. The entire regiment of grenadiers which bore the name of the firft Conful, is ftated to have been deftroyed, and the invincible ftandard of Bonaparte is brought home in the Flora, an evidence of our triumph. The Captain Pacha had joined Lord Keith's fleet with 6 fhips and 5000 men, and more were fhortly expected. The Grand Vizier's army had been reinforced with an equal number of men, from Gheza Pacha's troops, and was moving forward toward Cairo. Nor was the ftrength of their enemies all that the French had to contend with; their allies were deferting them in the hour of difficulty. Mourad Bey had already fent to Upper Egypt to obtain forgivenefs for having acted in conjunction with the republicans.

The ftuation of our own army is reprefented as favourable as could be wifhed. Their pofition before Alexandria was fo ftrong, that there was no fear entertained of their being attacked. The army was healthy, and in high fpirits, and fupplied from the country with every article of which it ftood in need. This circumftance alone proved the wifdom of Gen. Hutchinfon's conduct in cultivating his advantage, and improving his ftuation, inftead of expofing his army to any farther lofs by the immediate attack on the ftrongly fortified pofition into which the defeated army of the enemy had retired. His object was to poffefs himfelf of Rhamania, and to cut off all communication with Alexandria, which he had no doubt of effecting. The deferters ftated that the French loft above 3000 men in the battle of the 21ft, and this agrees with gen. Hutchinfon's difpatch.

The immediate confequence of our victory appears to have been that Gen. Hutchinfon was enabled to detach Col. Spencer againft Rofetta, and another corps of 4000 men againft Rhamania. The former would open the communication with the Vizier's army. The poffeffion of Rhamania would leave the French without communication or fupplies, except on the fide of the Defert, where the Arabs were in determined hoftility againft them.

It appears, after deducting every poffible lois, that our army muft ftill conftft of nearly 13,000 men, exclufive of feamen, and the Turkifh reinforcements; while that of the enemy, from the number brought into action on the 21ft, could not after the battle, exceed from 8 to 9000 men.

The combination of all thefe facts proves our decided fuperiority. Such has been the refult of this battle, which ftrengthens the eftablifhment of our troops in Egypt, and makes the ultimate conquett of that country almoft certain, though it may have been delayed for a fhorter or longer period of time. Every day muft add to the advantage of our ftuation, and muft deteriorate that of our enemy.

The Park and Tower guns were yefterday evening fired, in confequence of the difpatches received from Egypt.

The remains of Sir Ralph Abercrombie were brought home in the Flora frigate.

It will doubtlefs be gratifying to his friends, that his afhes fhould be depofited under the monument which is likely to be raifed to his memory.

The ball which ftruck Sir Ralph Abercromby entered his thigh, and rofe upwards, fo that it was impoffible to extract it.

The attack in Egypt on the 21ft of March, was commenced by the "Invincible Legion," a regiment of 1300 picked grenadiers, to whom the Directory prefented a ftandard, called the Invincible Standard, who made the attack in a ftate of intoxication; the flints having been taken out of their guns, that they might rely only on the bayonet. It commenced upon the 42d regiment of Highland foot, which was miftaken for Turkifh. They penetrated the lines, and being nobly oppofed, fought equal to any but Britifh troops, and refufing to furrender, were every man killed and buried within the Engifh lines: not one furvived to tell the dreadful tale.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

London, May 16.

Yefterday in the Houfe of Commons, Mr. Addington, after a very eloquent eulogium on the bravery and difcipline of the army in Egypt, moved that an humble addrefs be prefented to his Majefty, praying that he would be graciouffy pleafed to give directions for a monument being erected in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul's, London, to the memory of the ever lamented Lieutenant General Sir Ralph Abercromby, Knight of the moft honorable Order of the Bath, who having by his coniumate fkill and bravery, effected a landing on the coaft of Egypt, in the face of a powerful and well prepared enemy, did on the 21ft of March, 1801, refift an obftinate and defperate attack made upon his lines by a chofen and veteran army, when he received a mortal wound, but did not withdraw from the field of battle until the forces under his command had gained a glorious and immortal victory; and to aflure his Majefty that this Houfe will make good the expence incurred in erecting the fame.

Which was agreed to nem. con.

The thanks of the Houfe was afterwards voted to Admiral Lord Keith, Sir Richard Bickerton, and the officers and feamen of the fleet ftationed on the coaft of Egypt.

HOUSE OF LORDS—May 20.

Lord Hobart prefented a meffage from the King, ftating that he had granted the dignity of a Baronefs to Lady Abercromby, which was to defcend to the male heirs of Sir Ralph, with a penfion of 1000l. a year, and defiring their Lordfhips to enable him to fecure the latter part of the grant.

REINFORCEMENTS TO EGYPT.

London, May 22.

The guards who have been drafted for Egypt, marched this morning for Portfmouth, where they are to embark with the 24th and 26th regiments and fail immediately, under convoy of the Leda and Active frigates. The two battalions of the 30th regiment, ftationed at Minorca, fix regiments of cavalry, including the York Huffars, and a corps of artillery, are alfo under orders for the fame deftination.

Six regiments of cavalry, five of infantry, and a corps of artillery, comprife the reinforcements now under orders for Egypt. The tranfports will be convoyed by a fquadron of three fhips of the line, with frigates under the command of Rear Admiral Pole, and as many troops will be put on board the men of war as they can conveniently take. A large quantity of military ftores &c. is alfo preparing for Egypt.

A draft of three hundred men and fix officers from the fecond and third regiments of guards are ordered to proceed from London on Thurfday morning for Portfmouth, to embark for Egypt.

Yefterday morning a meffenger arrived at Lord Hawkefbury's office, with difpatches from Lord Minto, at Vienna, and Lord Elgin at Conftantinople, the latter of which are faid to relate to the operations in Egypt; but whether they contain any later advices than thofe of which Government had previoufly become poffeffed, we have not yet been able to afcertain. An overland difpatch from India is faid to have been received at the fame time; and report ftates that Admiral Blanket and General Baird have arrived at Suez, with the Indian army deftined to co-operate with the Britifh forces in Egypt.

The Citoyen Francois of the 13th inft. has inferted a letter, dated Havre, the 6th, which ftates, that "letters from Toulon announce, that the fquadron commanded by Admiral Ganthemaume, failed on the 5th Floreal, (April 25) with 4000 troops for Egypt.

We underftand that Miniflers, when they firft heard of Sir Ralph Abercromby's wound, appointed Gen. Floyd to fucceed him, fearing that Gen. Hutchinfon was too young to be entrufted with the command; but they are now fo much fatisfied with his conduct, and the ability difplayed in his difpatches, that they have recalled Gen. Floyd and confirmed Gen. Hutchinfon. The latter is known to be a very good officer and he is much beloved by the army.

Juft before his death, Sir Ralph Abercromby received a difpatch from India, announcing, as it is reported, the impoffibility of fending an army from Bombay. This news is faid to have been forwarded to England in the Flora.

Copenhagen, (Denmark) April 8.

The Englifh Admiral, Sir Hyde Parker, has written a very polite anfwer to the Ruffian Ambaffador, M. Lafakewite, in which he expreffes his happinefs at hearing the pacific difpofitions of his Ruffian Majefty, and that he had immediately given orders for all hoftilities againft the Ruffians, Danes and Swedes to ceafe.

London, May 8.

The return of Admiral Parker to Copenhagen, and the fufpenfion of all hoftilities in the Baltic, leaves us nothing intereffing to look for from that fide. The Danes according to private letters, were to leave Hamburgh on the 9th inft. and it was expected that the Pruffians would evacuate Bremen with equal difpatch.

MISCELLANEOUS ARTICLES.

Britifh Houfe of Commons—May 14.

G. R.—His Majefty, taking into his moft ferious confideration the imminent danger with which the kingdom of Portugal, the ancient and natural ally of his crown, is threatened by the powers with whom he is at war, as well as the importance of preferving and maintaining the commercial relations which fubfift between the two kingdoms, and relying on the zeal and affection of his faithful Commons, recommends it to their confideration to grant him the means of affording fuch fupport, by way of fubfidy, to her Majefty the Queen of Portugal, as may beft enable her Majefty to take fuch meafures for the defence of her kingdom as the exigencies of affairs may require.

Lord Hawkefbury moved, that his Majefty's meffage fhould be referred to the committee of fupply; and he gave notice, that in the Committee on Monday, he fhould propofe to grant to his Majefty a fum not exceeding 300,000l. to enable His Majefty to make fuch advances to the Queen of Portugal as the exigencies of her affairs might require.

They were very much worn; the Confular infignia of the Republic are emblazoned on them.

Paris, May 15.

An American frigate entered the road of Havre on the evening of the 19th Floreal; it had on board the new Ambaffador of the United States, charged to carry to Paris the ratification of the Treaty of Peace concluded with the French Republic.

PARIS, May 6.

A JOURNALIST obſerves, that the death of the Emperor Paul bears a ſtrange contraſt with that of the Empreſs his mother. Catharine died when ſhe was on the point of ſigning an alliance with England againſt France, and Paul I. died when on the point of concluding an alliance with France againſt England.

The Britiſh Government has anſwered the Senate of Hamburgh, in a reply to a remonſtrance on the ſubject, that veſſels navigating under the Hamburgh flag ſhall paſs free from moleſtation by his Britannic Majeſty's veſſels of war.

COPENHAGEN, April 21.

Yeſterday we received a declaration from Alexander I. officially communicated by the Ruſſian miniſter, in which His Imperial Majeſty expreſſes a hope that harmony and good underſtanding will ſoon be reſtored between Great Britain and the Northern powers; in which expectation he has charged his Miniſter to notify to the Admirals Parker and Nelſon, that he will hold them reſponſible for all acts of hoſtility againſt ſaid powers. This declaration was immediately ſent to Admiral Parker.

A letter from Peterſburgh contains the following news of 6th April.

"It is with pleaſure we announce to you, that the office of liquidation, (eſtabliſhed on the ſubject of the ſequeſtered Engliſh property) is on the point of being inſt, and we expect that the ſequeſtered property will in a few days, be reſtored to the proprietors. The exportation of grain is free."

Another letter of the 7th of April, ſays,

"The office of liquidation has already received orders to ſtop all proceedings, and the reſtoration of all the Britiſh property it is expected will immediately take place. Our commerce with England is again in its former train."

The Court of Spain has conſiderably ſoftened its tone in conſequence. The Prince Regent has ſent orders to his Generals on the frontiers not to commit any hoſtilities, as he was in hopes of terminating the buſineſs amicably.

Extract of a letter from Hamburgh, dated April 28, 1801.

"To-day we can inform you, that by order of his Pruſſian Majeſty, the Daniſh troops will, in a very few days, leave our territory, the free navigation of the Elbe is already publicly acknowledged. Of courſe we look for a favorable change and lively trade, and preſume that Weſt India produce will ſoon riſe here."

The late arrivals at Charleſton from Europe, afford no later news paper accounts than we have already had at this port. But the verbal news which we publiſhed in yeſterday's Gazette, from Hamburgh, is ſix days later from that quarter than heretofore received. As to the truth of it, we have out doubts; becauſe we find, by a reference to our former accounts, that Admiral Parker's fleet had returned from the Baltic, which event is noticed under the Copenhagen head of the 25th of April. This is moſt certainly, at leaſt, a preſumptive proof, that the matters in diſpute were in a favorable train of ſettlement; and of courſe, that no engagement could have taken place between the combined Ruſſian and Swediſh fleet, and that of the Engliſh. Beſides, this verbal account is deficient as to particulars: it neither mentions the time of the engagement, nor the reſpective number of the ſhips engaged.

There is another circumſtance which goes to ſhew the improbability of this engagement, is this—An article under the Copenhagen head of April 21, ſays, "The Ruſſian Ambaſſador here, Mr. Liſakewitch, yeſterday received a courier from his court, with directions to declare to Admiral Parker, that it was the wiſh of the Emperor to accommodate the differences between Ruſſia and England, and that he would hold Admirals Parker and Nelſon reſponſible for all acts of hoſtility againſt the Northern Powers. A ſwift ſailing cutter was immediately ſent off to Admiral Parker in the Baltic, (which probably induced his return) as the Ruſſian fleet, having ſail-ed, might meet with the Englifh. Other inftructions had likewife been fent off to the Ruffian fleet."

LONDON, May 6.

By the accounts preſented to the Houſe of Commons, reſpecting the public Funded Debt, and the reduction thereof to the 1ſt of Feb. laſt, it appears that the total principal debt, as it then ſtood, amounted to 479,934,488l. 9s 2d. That the total annual charge for the permanent debt of Great Britain is 88,405,948l. 4s. 6d.—for the non-permanent debt, 1,738,638l. 3s. 4d. and the permanent debt of Ireland, 633,432l. 0s. 6d. making a total of 20,776,013l. 8s. 4d. The Commiſſioners appointed for the reduction of the national debt had, between the 1ſt of Auguſt 1786, and the 1ſt of Feb. 1801, purchaſed 52,281,661l. of which 16,182,094l. is redeemed by the new Sinking Fund, and 36,099,562l. by the old. To this is to be added, 16,083,862l. transferred to Commiſſioners by land tax redeemed making the whole reduction of the public debt on the firſt of February laſt, 68,365,448l. The new Sinking Fund now amounts to 2,578,284l. 2s. 4d. The old to 2,411,534 14s. 9d. making 4,989,818l. 18s. 1d.

Lord Keith's prize money on captures in Tueſday's Gazette will amount to about twenty thouſand pounds.

Medals are about to be preſented by the King of Denmark to the ſeveral officers of his vanquiſhed armament in the road of Copenhagen.

When we no longer ago than Monday laſt, ſays the (London) True Briton, took a view of the diſadvantageous circumſtances in which Mr. Addington had taken the helm of the ſtate, we did not flatter ourſelves, we confeſs, that they would have improved with ſuch rapidity as they have done, and that fortune would have ſo immediately juſtified the wiſe principles on which this adminiſtration has begun its career.—There can be no one who muſt not have perceived, almoſt at the firſt glance, the immenſe advantages which we ſhall derive from the acceſſion of the Emperor Alexander to the throne, and from the ſignal victory obtained by our fleet on the 2d inſt. The general ſyſtem of politics which arreſted the victorious progreſs of the campaign of 1799, which produced the diſaſters of that of 1800, which enforced the peace of Luneville, which armed the powers of the north againſt us; which, in ſhort, ſubjugated Europe to the yoke or to the influence of France;—all this monſtrous fabric will diſſolve more rapidly and more eaſily than it was formed. Denmark and Sweden, forced by Paul into meaſures repugnant to their intereſts, will haſten to diſclaim them. Pruſſia, relieved from the preponderance of one of the two powers, which ſhe was preſſed, will recover her liberty, and ſhe will not, we flatter ourſelves, be ſo unjuſt nor ſo imprudent as to periſt in that line which ſhe has for ſome months followed, and endeavour to keep the late uſurpation which ſhe has exerciſed. The politics of the Emperor of Germany will alſo become more independent, having nothing to apprehend from Ruſſia, and taking confidence in the incredible activity and ſucceſs with which the Archduke Charles is recruiting the army and reviving its ancient ſyſtem, that power will aſſume an attitude more conformable to its rights and to its former ſituation. The Ottoman Porte will breathe again, and will more effectually ſecond our attempts upon Egypt. France in ſhort, by loſing the tool which ſhe has employed to endanger or to terrify other powers, will loſe conſiderable in fact, and ſtill more in the opinion of her own, and every other people, while all that ſhe loſes we ſhall gain.

Our relative ſituation will thus be greatly changed, and we ſhall be able, either rapidly to bring the Chief Conſul to terms of peace, ſuch as our honor and our intereſt require, or to wait with confidence and ſuperiority the moment when he will liſten to reaſon. Human events are ſo uncertain, and human policy ſo ſubject to unexpected changes, that we will not venture to aſſert that the proſpect which we have taken will be completely realized, but every intelligent man muſt at leaſt agree, that it is naturally to be expected. We cannot conclude theſe obſervations without remarking, the high opinion which the language of Mr. Addington in the Houſe of Commons, on Thurſday laſt, muſt convey of the rectitude of his character and of his political ability. The expreſſions of moderation and magnanimity which he uttered in the moment of triumph, will be heard throughout all Europe: they will inſpire all the Cabinets of the Continent with confidence in an adminiſtration which ſo happily mingles prudence with ſtrength, will deſtroy all falſe prejudices in the minds of the people, and will leave thoſe powers who may perſiſt in remaining our enemies, without pretence and without excuſe.

The Britiſh Government are ſaid to have received aſſurances from the King of Pruſſia, that his Majeſty's motives for taking poſſeſſion of Hanover was to prevent its being ſeized by another power (ſuppoſed the Emperor Paul) and that the Pruſſian troops ſhall be withdrawn whenever it can be done with ſafety to that country.

The ſhip Atlantic, captain Corian, arrived at New Caſtle on Tueſday the 30th ult. with between five and ſix hundred paſſengers from Londonderry, all in good health. The Atlantic ſailed on the 7th of May. The papers by her furniſh nothing in addition to our late ſtock of intelligence.

The Abbe, one of the ableſt mathematicians of Europe, and attatched to the ci-devant Duke d'Angouleme as his Preceptor, has put an end to his life at Konigſburgh, by ſtabbing himſelf thro' the heart, juſt as he was going to ſet out to follow the Count de Liſle to Warſaw. The motive which led him to this act of deſpair is not known. It is not known that he was labouring under any perſonal chagrin, and he had never given any ſigns of mental weakneſs.

BOSTON, July 2.

YESTERDAY arrived here, the brig Peacock, captain Curtis, in 36 days from London; by which we have received London papers to the 21ſt May, ſeventeen days later.

Of the war in Egypt, and its proſpects, theſe papers furniſh numerous details:—And that it will be proſecuted with vigour by the Britiſh, is evident from the powerful reinforcements proceeding thither.

The difference between Great Britain and the Northern Powers, appeared in train of amicable adjuſtment. The Baltic fleet was anchored in Copenhagen harbour; and no reinforcement of it appeared in contemplation. The Danes, nevertheleſs, are fortifying their coaſt with activity.

We do not meet with a ſyllable on the ſubject of the negociation between France and England.

PHILADELPHIA, July 2.

Obſervations on Harveſting Wheat.

An agricultural correſpondent, (who has paid much attention to the ſubject) has favoured us with the following obſervations on harveſting wheat.—What ſtage of ripeneſs is the beſt for cutting wheat, is not aſcertained in America; but enough I have ſeen of cutting early to be convinced that it is commonly ſuffered to ſtand too long.

At the time of reaping we generally have a clear ſky, and a peculiar drying air, which in ſome harveſts ripens wheat very ſuddenly, ſo that the plants from an apparent ſtate of vigor, are killed in a day or two, and receive no further nourithment from the root or blade; and even the ſtems become exhauſted of the nourithment they had imbibed, ſo that it could not reach the ear of the grain. If with this ſudden heat and drying ſtate of the air, the plants be ſtruck with ruſt, and are ſtill ſuffered to ſtand longer, the grain receiving no more nourithment, can never fill; but by cutting it inſtantly and ſetting it sheltered to cure gradually, the beſt chance is had for obtaining marketable good wheat.

The reaping corn from ten to fourteen days earlier than my neighbours, (ſays Mr. Parkinſon) is an advantage I have attended to. As corn begins to decay firſt at the root, all the nourithment it can receive while ſtanding without, after the decay of the root, muſt be derived from the ſtraw. The dews may feed the grain at one time; but when nearly ripe and the root decayed, the ſun and wind have ſo much power as to ripen it too quickly, or ſcorch or dry it, before its natural period of maturity.

Riding on the road about harveſt time, he obſerved a field of wheat that had taken the mildew. The ſtraw was a remarkable deep green, and inſtead of being dead, appeared to have acquired a greater verdure; though after ſuch appearance comes on, it never receives any nourithment or grows larger, inſtead whereof the ſtraws become diſtempered, ſpotted and diſcoloured. The ſooner it is then cut, the better. He took 12 ears of the wheat, which, and the ſtraw, were green as graſs, and at the ſame time was mildewed. A great deal of rain had fallen the fore part of the day, but the ears of wheat were petty dry. He tied them in a bunch, intending to hang them up in his houſe, to dry and ripen. Several weeks afterwards having been forgot, he took them out of his great coat pocket, when the ſtraw was found to be ſtill green. The grain was then rubbed out, and to his aſtoniſhment he never ſaw better. It was fine in colour and well filled; but what remained in the field, from which he took theſe ears, was very ſmall and of little value. This is a ſtrong caſe, which ought to make a ſtrong impreſſion on the minds of the farmers. He adds—from thence, that if the farmers would cut their wheat when it was ſtruck with mildew, and ſet it up in the fields in ſmall ſtacks of about a cart-load each, ſo as neither to heat nor to mould it; it would be better than to let it ſtand, as is the practice, uncut. He had at the ſaid time taken 12 ears from an adjoining riper field, which were likewiſe found in the other pocket of the great coat. Though theſe when gathered, appeared ſo much ſuperior to thoſe that had taken mildew, they did not turn out nearly ſo good as the others.

From the above circumſtances, Mr. Parkinſon was ever afterwards partial to cutting wheat when the ſtraw appeared of a reddiſh caſt, or ſome of it green, with the joints full of ſap, and it ſhortened his expectations.—The ſtraw, he adds, is better for chaff, the flour much fairer and heavier, and the fine flour it will grind into bran. But he does not think, if the wheat eſcapes the mildew, it ought to be cut ſo green.

It is probable that the ſtate of the wheat, as it approaches to ripeneſs in the preſent ſeaſon, will admit of various inſtructive experiments to be made by thoſe whom it chiefly concerns; eſpecially, they may learn for their future conduct, how far it will beat to be cut unripe, or green, to advantage. Hitherto, during the month of May, there has been much cool weather, accompanied by frequent rains; ſuch was the May of the great year of ſcab and ruſt. (I think it was about the year 1785.) The crops of wheat were uncommonly promiſing, but laſt the roll, and then (though not till the farmer expected daily the wheat was about to ripen) the ſcab ſtruck it, by which the crops were reduced in quality as well as in quantity; what was effected by ſcab could never be made to yield good flour, but was more or leſs chaffy. During the progreſs of the ruſt and ſcab, I examined the roots of many plants, which appeared injured, if not dead, at the ſame time the ſtalks and blades looked thriving. In this ſtate of things the farmer may take into conſideration at what time to cut down his wheat: for a ſlight degree of ruſt it ſhould not be hurried; but when greatly ruſted in its advanced ſtate of ripening, and when conſiderably ſcabbed, (which never happens but in the moment before it ripens) immediately cut it down, and guard it againſt ſun and wind ſlightly, leſt by ſecuring it too cloſe, it heat and be entirely ſpoiled.

What in wheat is by ſome called ſcab, by others is called empty ears.

To make good CHEESE obſerve the following rules.

1. Let your milk be blood warm, & then put in one handfull of ſalt to the milk of ſeven cows.

2. Then ſtir in one tea cup full of Runnet.

3. Let it ſtand two hours, or more, and then cut the curd into middling ſquares, with a wooden knife, and preſs the curd to the bottom of the tup with a cloth, or ſieve, and take out part of the whey, and when all the curd is at the bottom, take out all the whey, and let the curd drain for one quarter of an hour before you ſalt and break into the vat.

4. If any curd ſwims, after preſſing what you can to the bottom of the tup, it is ſtrip curd, and muſt be taken out, or it will ſour and ruin the cheeſe.

5. When your cheeſe is in the vat, it muſt be turned ſeveral times within the ſpace of forty eight hours.

6. When the cheeſe is preſſed, keep it as warm as you can, that it may ſweat; and let it not be placed with new and damp cheeſe, if you can prevent.

7. Never leave a bowl or dipper in the cheeſe tub while the cheeſe is earning or coming.

8. When the whey is green, the curd is all made or earned.

9. When cheeſe ſwells, or puffs, after it is taken from the preſs, pierce it with a wooden ſkewer in ſeveral places.

10. Sower milk, and that which is too cold injures the cheeſe.

11. Salt petre is apt to ſour cheeſe & make it ferment.

To make good Runnet, without which there can be no good Cheeſe.

1. As ſoon as the kid is cold from the caul, rinſe it in water, and rub it with ſalt; then fill it and cover it with ſalt. If you dry it too near a fire it will be rancid.

2. Put one gallon of ſpring water, boiled, to two kids, and add ſalt, until it ſwim an egg: let it ſtand till blood warm, before you put in your kids, either whole, or cut into pieces: and within twenty-four hours it will be fit for uſe, and may be bottled up.

3. Too much Runnet makes cheeſe ſtrong, and too little makes it too mild. As before obſerved, a tea cup, or a little more of good Runnet, is enough for the milk of ten cows.

4. Cleanlineſs, in the important buſineſs of making both Cheeſe and Butter, is a capital recommendation; it may be conſidered as a virtue; where it is known, it will be rewarded.

ANECDOTE.

A bricklayer in Flanders, having the misfortune to roll off a houſe he was repairing, pitched exactly on the head of a Spaniard, and killed him on the ſpot, without receiving the leaſt injury himſelf. The relations of the deceaſed, however, proſecuted the unhappy wight with much acrimony, refuſing every other recompence except lex talionis. The fate of the bricklayer, therefore, was ſuſpended by a very ſlender thread, when the judge, exaſperated at the proſecutors obſtinacy, addreſſed the acting one as follows—"Sir, your requeſt ſhall be complied with; ſcend you the top of the houſe, by which your kinſman loſt his life, and from thence fall with all your force upon the culprit, whom I will ſtation below; ſo that the puniſhment may be proportioned to the offence.

LONDON, MAY 4.

NORTH OF EUROPE.

THE following are extracts of private letters received by the laſt mail, dated Hamburgh, April 28 :—

" Accounts from Copenhagen received here by expreſs, to the 25th inſt. fully confirm the return of the Britiſh fleet from its cruize in the Baltic, and ſtate, that one diviſion of it had already ſailed for the Sound,

" As ſoon as Admiral Sir Hyde Parker received the agreeable diſpatches addreſſed to him by the Emperor Alexander I. which were forwarded at the requeſt of the Ruſſian Ambaſſador at Copenhagen, Mons. de Liſakewitſch, by a ſwift ſailing Daniſh cutter, he immediately gave orders for the fleet to return to Kioege Bay, where it ſafely anchored on the 24th, in the afternoon.

" Alexander the firſt, in his diſpatches to the Britiſh Admiral, ſtated, that as it was his wiſh to ſettle amicably the differences between Ruſſia and England, he expected that the Britiſh fleet would not commence any hoſtile operations in the Baltic, till farther operations from England, whither the Emperor had ſent ſuch propoſals as he was previouſly aſſured would be deemed ſatisfactory ; but that if Sir Hyde Parker, regardleſs of the pacific meaſures already adopted by the Emperor, ſhould proceed to commit any act of hoſtility, he muſt conſider himſelf as ſolely reſponſible for the conſequences.

" The Emperor ſent orders at the ſame time to all his harbours to ſuſpend any farther armaments, and to ſtop the ſailing of the veſſels ready for ſea. Similar meaſures have been adopted by the King of Sweden ; and the Northern Convention may be conſidered as completely at an end.

" In the evening of the 24th inſtant an Engliſh Meſſenger arrived with diſpatches at Copenhagen, addreſſed to the Daniſh Government, and to Sir Hyde Parker.

" The official reports of Sir Hyde Parker and Lord Nelſon, reſpecting the glorious victory of the 2d of April, were received here by the mail of the 13th, which arrived yeſterday. They cauſed great joy among the Hamburgh merchants, and the Engliſh reſident here, as they totally refute the exaggerated accounts propagated by the Daniſh newſpapers.

" Captain Dyle, who went with diſpatches from the Britiſh fleet in the Baltic to Berlin, obtained the conſent of the Pruſſian Cabinet that fleet to take in water and proviſions on the coaſts of Pruſſia and Pomerania.

" The Engliſh Conſuls at Roſtock, Memel, Koenigberg, Dantzic, &c. had received orders from Lord Carytort to inform the Britiſh Commander, if he ſhould viſit their neighbourhood, that it was unneceſſary for him to proceed any farther in the Baltic.

" This city begins already to feel the effects produced by the late victory off Copenhagen, and from this day it will ceaſe to pay the ſum of 8000 banco marks per diem, for the maintenance of the Daniſh troops who ſtill infeſt it.

" The embargo on all ſhips in the river has likewiſe been taken off, and ſuch veſſels as have cargoes of wheat for England will ſail freely, like the reſt.

" The Daniſh ordinance, reſpecting the ſequeſtration of Britiſh property, ſtuck up at the Exchange, has been taken down, by order of the Senate.

" Reſpectable private letters from Berlin of the 26th inſt. confidently ſtate, that a great and moſt unexpected change has juſt taken place in the political ſentiments of the Pruſſian Government. On the arrival of an Engliſh and Ruſſian courier, a grand Council of State was held, at which old Prince Henry of Pruſſia attended by particular deſire. State matters of the utmoſt importance were ſubmitted to its conſideration, and for the firſt time it appeared the Miniſter Count Hangwitz had loſt his influence. Prince Henry, it is reported, adviſed an immediate reconciliation with England, and the evacuation of the Electorate of Hanover. The ſame Prince likewiſe recommended the cloſeſt harmony and union with the new Ruſſian Monarch.

" The reſult of this important deliberation is, by all accounts, highly in favour of Great Britain and the Houſe of Brunſwick.

" On Sunday laſt a Pruſſian courier brought diſpatches to the Pruſſian Miniſter reſident here, with letters from his Pruſſian Majeſty, one to the Senate of Hamburgh, and the other to the Prince of Heſſe, who commands the Daniſh troops in this city. The Miniſter waited immediately upon his Highneſs with the letter from his Sovereign, in which the latter declares that he heard with great diſpleaſure of the exactions made by the Daniſh troops, and acquaints his Serene Highneſs that if he does not quit this free city and its environs, as ſpeedily as poſſible, his Pruſſian Majeſty will take ſuch meaſures as ſhall compel him to evacuate it.

" Sir James Craufurd is ſaid to have made a ſimilar requeſt to the Daniſh Field Marſhal ſome days before.

" The Senate of Hamburgh, and the Pruſſian Miniſter, have received copies of the letter to Prince Charles of Heſſe, the contents of which had ſuch an effect upon him, that he refuſed to give audience to any body during the whole of yeſterday.

" His Pruſſian Majeſty, in his communication to the Senate, farther deſires that the Daniſh troops be ſupplied with no more neceſſaries.

May 11. It was yeſterday reported that government has received advices that 6000 infantry, chiefly French have joined Menou by the deſert. Our wounded are moſtly carried on board our fleet. We are ſtill without authentic accounts of the Bombay army having landed at Suez, though reports to that effect are circulated. The Turkiſh fleet, or a part of it, has joined us at Aboukir, but the troops it brings will be of little uſe. Government are ſending reinforcements with all poſſible expedition. Between five and ten thouſand are under orders for the ſervice, partly to replace the garriſons of Gibraltar, Minorca and Malta, which will be drafted for Egypt.

The accounts received by Government on Friday from the Joſeph cutter, which left Minorca on the 7th of April, and is arrived at Plymouth, ſtate that the Mutine ſloop, which arrived at Minorca the day before the Joſeph ſailed, brought intelligence of Sir J. B. Warren, with 7 ſail of the line, having been ſeen on the 4th, between Malta and Sardinia, in chace of Gantheaume's fleet, of 7 ſail of the line, two of which having loſt their fore top maſts, muſt have retarded the progreſs of the other ſhips unleſs they were abandoned. Gantheaume was making the beſt of his way back to Toulon, on finding an Engliſh fleet was ready to oppoſe him, and it is feared he has regained that port, as Sir J. B. Warren is ſaid to have loſt ſight of him in the night.

The Joſeph, which brought diſpatches from Minorca, conveyed there by the Mutine from Egypt, arrived at Gibraltar on the 16th. On the 2d of April in the Bay of Biſcay, ſhe was chaſed by 4 ſail of Spaniſh line of battle ſhips from Breſt, and the next day ſhe fell in with 5 more, from the ſame port; the Joſeph was obliged to crowd all ſail to avoid being captured, but was near enough to diſcover their ſize, & of what nation; they were ſteering a ſouthern courſe, ſuppoſed for Cadiz, or perhaps to join Gantheaume, if poſſible, and proceed to Egypt.

May 14. We yeſterday ſtated, that reports had reached this country of the intention of the French government to incorporate the Batavian Republic with France. A letter from on board Admiral Dickſon's fleet cruizing off Goree, to a naval officer of rank in town, ſtates their having received information that the meaſure was reſolved on by the French government, and an attempt to carry it into execution about the 8th. The following letter gives ſome particulars of this project, but we cannot vouch for the accuracy, as we know not the channel through which the information comes:

Amſterdam, May 4.

On the 29th ult. the long expected Gen. Angereau arrived at the Hague, but without receiving any marks of public diſtinction. On the 1ſt of May he aſſembled the members of the Batavian Government, and announced to them the arret of the Conſuls, bearing date April 11th, declaring that in conſequence of the Reviſion of the Batavian Republic, which was long ſince found neceſſary, they had decreed that the Batavian Republic ſhould from hence forward, loſe all ſeperate diſtinctions, and form a part of the French Republic one and indiviſible. This communication was heard with evident marks of diſguſt, and the meeting broke up abruptly. Symptoms of diſcontent were manifeſted by the lower order of the people through the day, and the Orange cockade was hoiſted in the evening.

May 15.

No farther information has been received of the reported changes in Holland. The ſtory of De Winter's putting the fleet under the protection of this country is univerſally conſidered, as we ſtated yeſterday, to be quite unworthy of credit. It is very generally believed, however, that the intrigue for the incorporating Union has been for ſome time carried on by the French Government. The cabinets of Berlin and the Thuilleries no longer maintain their former good correſpondence; many think that Buonaparte had reaſon to ſuſpect that the intrigues and perhaps the arms of Pruſſia, would have endeavoured to diſpute with France for the leading influence in Holland.

The French are fitting out expeditions at Rochfort and Breſt.

The Spaniſh ſhips which chaſed the George cutter, arrived from the Mediterranean, did not eſcape out of Breſt, as we ſuppoſed, but are thoſe which were one of the objects of Sir James Poulteney's expedition to have deſtroyed in Ferrol. It is believed they are only gone to Cadiz.

May 29. Yeſterday arrived the mail from Hamburgh, which became due on Wednesday.

The Danes ſtill retained poſſeſſion of that city: but the Prince of Heſſe inſiſts no longer upon the payment of 6,500 marks per diem, which he has until now extorted from the Senate. His troops are about to withdraw to the Daniſh territories, but will not quit the neighbourhood of Hamburgh, until the final ſettlement of all matters in diſpute.

It appears by private letters that Denmark demands that the Pruſſian troops ſhall evacuate the territory of Hanover, at the ſame time that the withdraws her own from Hamburgh. The Duchy of Oldenburgh is already evacuated by the Pruſſians. The Court of Berlin is repreſented as highly diſpleaſed at the application made by the city of Hamburgh for the protection of Great Britain. It does not however appear that it interfered itſelf with ſufficient vigor to blame the intervention of other ſtates.

Accounts from Peterſburgh ſtate, that his Imperial Majeſty had publiſhed an Ukaſe reſpecting the Engliſh ſhipping and the ſuperintendance of Engliſh property. A number of our ſeamen had been permitted to go on board their reſpective veſſels, but they were not ſuffered to be at large on their parole.

In the capture of the Daniſh Iſlands in the Weſt Indies our Commanders paid the moſt ſacred regard to the rights of neutrals, particularly to the citizens of the United States of America. In the capitulation of all the Iſlands it was provided, that " the ſubjects of the United States of America, ſhould enjoy the fulleſt ſecurity for their perſons and property, as well as the free exercile of their religion." In the correſpondence with the Governor of St. Bartholomew, was the ſubſequent letter:

" His Majeſty's ſhip Leviathan, March 20, 1801.

" SIR,

" His Majeſty's friendly diſpoſition towards the intereſts of the United States of America, and their inhabitants correſponding ſo perfectly with their own—We in order the more certainly to prevent any cauſe of miſunderſtanding on this occaſion, have taken this opportunity to expreſs our juſt expectation, that the ſubjects of America, at preſent reſiding in the iſland of St. Bartholomew, will not lend themſelves to any colluſive tranſaction, with a view of preventing ſuch property from coming into poſſeſſion of the forces under our command, as of right ought to be forfeited to the crown of Great Britain. As whatever reluctance we might feel in adopting a meaſure ſo extremely diſagreeable to us, it never the leſs would be our duty not only to reſiſt in every inſtance, ſuch unbecoming proceedings, but the means of obliging us to act againſt whoever might be concerned in a tranſaction of ſo improper a nature, in a manner which we would ever wiſh to avoid. At the time of making this communication, we hope not to be underſtood as conceiving any thing now alluded to, at all likely to occur. We feel ſatisfied of the contrary, and we have noticed it merely as a meaſure of precaution to thoſe who might otherwiſe have been unwarily led into a ſtep, without being aware of the conſequences attendant.

We have the honor to be, &c.

LONDON, MAY 25.

THE Queen hired armed cutter, commanded by Lieut. Minster, arrived on Thursday last in the afternoon in the Downs from the coast of Holland, and brings the following intelligence: that being off Flushing, with the view of watching the motions of a Dutch squadron apparently ready for sea, they early yesterday morning discovered a 64 gun ship, one frigate, a brig, and a number of gun vessels under weigh from the above place; but a squadron of his Majesty's ships from this station heaving in sight, the whole fleet ran in and sought up again. In consequence of this information, Admiral Lutwidge has ordered to sea the Adonis, Edgar, and Diligence sloops of war, Locust & Ferreter gun brigs, which sailed from the Downs last night; and this morning they were followed by the Autumn sloop, Mariner and Archer gun brigs, should this force be fortunate enough to fall in with the enemy, although the latter be superior in force, little doubt can be entertained that the issue of a battle would be a renewed proof of the invincibility of the British navy. The Queen spoke a Prussian brig from Flushing, from which they learnt that the 64 gun ship and frigate were bound to the Texel, and the gun vessels to Dunkirk.

May 28.

By yesterday's Hamburgh mail we learn, that Lord Minto had, on the 10th inst. received dispatches from the Earl of Elgin, stating, that our army in Egypt, having made themselves masters of an important height which commanded a part of the city of Alexandria, Gen. Hutchinson entertained considerable hopes of carrying that fortress by storm. We know not how to reconcile this intelligence with the situation of the hostile armies near Alexandria. The only heights which prevented our troops from acting directly against Alexandria were, according to the most recent accounts, those occupied by the French forces under the command of Menou, situated near Pompey's Pillar, to the N. E. of Alexandria. As they were admitted in our official intelligence, to have their main body strongly entrenched upon these heights, it follows that they must have been dislodged from that advantageous position in consequence of an action fought since the 21st March, or that despairing of making an effectual resistance, they have either retired into the interior of the country, or thrown themselves into the fortress of Alexandria.

We understand, that dispatches, received at a late hour last night by Government from Lord Elgin, state the arrival in the Red Sea, of the troops from the East Indies, destined to co-operate with Gen. Hutchinson against the French in Egypt.—They consist of 2200 men from the Cape of Good Hope, 2000 from the Presidency of Bombay, and 300 from Ceylon. The naval force was commanded by Sir H. Popham, and the military by Gen. Baird.

A detachment of our troops had been sent up the country, by Gen. Hutchinson, who had received information of the approach of the Indian army, in order to facilitate the march of these succours, and effect a junction with them.

We learn with great satisfaction, that reinforcements have been dispatched from Malta to Egypt, and there is no doubt that detachments from the garrisons of Gibraltar and Minorca, which are better enabled to spare them, have been also sent to Gen. Hutchinson.

May 29. Alexander I. has sent a courier to Paris with instructions to Count Kalitschew to interest himself in the name of his Sovereign in favor of the Kings of Naples and Sardinia.

The last news from Petersburgh mention, the new Emperor has sent letters in his own hand writing to Count Worronzow, at London, and Baron Krudener, at Berlin, expressing the highest satisfaction at the manner in which they have hitherto conducted the political business of their country in those places.

The Superb, of 74; the Venerable of 74; and Camorian, of 44, were left all well the 18th ult. having seen the East India fleet to a certain latitude. They were cruizing to intercept a convoy from Rio de la Plata, consisting of several other vessels, besides a Spanish man of war, of 70 guns, armed en flute, said to have a valuable cargo and money on account of his Catholic Majesty.

A Portuguese ship called the Macaba has arrived at Bengal with 6 lacs of dollars on board. She sailed from Lisbon on the 1st November.

The intelligence from the three capitals of the North, Petersburgh, Stockholm, and Copenhagen, is as sanguine as the most favorable could wish.

There are strong grounds to believe that the preparations making along the coast of France, are intended for the invasion of Ireland; and we learn that government is in possession of decisive intelligence upon the subject. Dispatches, containing that information were received on the 16th instant by Admiral Cornwallis who immediately resumed his station off Brest, with the channel fleet.

We have the pleasure to announce, that Mr. Parish, late of Hamburgh, has received letters from Hamburgh, officially from the Senate, by the mail which arrived last night, stating the agreeable intelligence, that the Danish garrison which had occupied that town since the 29th of March, were to evacuate the city on the 23d of May, the day after the mail came away.

A Paris paper of the 15th May, says, "Several of the Danish Court embarked on board Admiral Parker's fleet, on the expedition against Russia and Sweden."

LEGHORN, May 1.—Five French ships of the line, five frigates and two transports, with troops have arrived in the harbor. A brother of the first Consul is on board. The squadron under Sir J. B. Warren is shortly expected in this neighbourhood.

From the Boston Centinel.

Bournonville the French Minister at Berlin, has lately presented several very violent memorials to the Prussian Government, charging it with being the secret friend of England, and protesting against opening of the navigation of the rivers in the North of Germany.

The Prussian Cabinet, has returned very spirited answers to those notes.—Bonaparte, it is said, insists upon the shutting up of the Elbe and Weser, and threatens otherwise to seize Hanover, himself, which the King of Prussia will not, however, consent to. An army of 100,000 men is preparing for the field in the Prussian dominions. The French on the other hand, have 50,000 men in readiness on the left bank of the Rhine, exclusively of the large military force collected in Belgium and Holland.

PHILADELPHIA, July 19.

Last evening arrived the ship Perseverance, Capt. Williamson, in 46 days from Bristol.—By him we learn that no further news of any importance was received at the time of his sailing the first of June, of the military operations up the Baltic, or from Egypt, than what has already been given our readers.—We also hear the French garrison of 150 men, taken at Aboukir was arrived at Marseilles.

It is said the Danes would positively evacuate Hamburgh the 23d of May.

TO THE PUBLIC.

BY virtue of the power and authority veſted in us by his Excellency the Lt. Governor's Proclamation, bearing date the 29th day of July, 1801—NOTICE is hereby given, that for the purpoſes therein mentioned, the Province has been divided into five Circles, namely, the Home Circle (comprehending the Home Diſtrict and the projected Diſtrict of Newcaſtle ;) the Eaſtern Circle (the Eaſtern Diſtrict and the Diſtrict of Johnſtown ;) the Midland Circle (the Midland Diſtrict ;) the Niagara Circle (the Diſtricts of Niagara and London ;) the Weſtern Circle (the Weſtern Diſtrict.)

For the firſt ten tons of Hemp raiſed and dreſſed in each of the above Circles, which ſhall be delivered or ſold for exportation after publication hereof, and before the 31ſt of Dec. 1802, a bounty will be given of 5 Dollars, for every 4 cwt. which ſhall be raiſed and dreſſed ; and 3 Dollars in addition for ſo much of the ſame, as ſhall be afterwards exported to Lower Canada ; equal to a compound bounty on the growth and exportation of £10 per ton for 50 tons.

Theſe bounties will be diſcharged in the reſpective Circles by debentures, which will be tranſmitted to certain perſons reſident in each, and which being tranſferable, will be paid to the Bearer in CASH, on being produced at the Office of the Commiſſioners in York.

A certain quantity of Hemp Seed will be diſtributed as ſoon as it can be procured from the proper places—the ſubdiviſion of which may be ſufficient to provide for a ſupply of Seed within the Province for the enſuing year.

A liberal price will be given for the firſt twelve buſhels of good Seed, certified to be the growth of this Province during the preſent year, delivered at the Commiſſioners Office at York, this Fall.

made its appearance, with two white flags, the commander of which defired to fpeak with the Swediſh officer commanding the guards of that part of the coaſt, of whom he requeſted leave to fee and purchaſe proviſions, which being refuſed, he expreſſed his aſtoniſhment, ſaying that England might be conſidered as being at peace with Sweden.—He further ſtated, that that frigate was cruiſing between Bornholm and the Swediſh coaſt in order to meet the Engliſh merchant ſhips that had been under an embargo in the ports of Ruſſia.

PARIS, May 31.

Letters from Conſtantinople ſtate, that the Porte has ſettled with Ruſſia, on the ſubject of the exceſſes lately committed upon the Ruſſians, by propoſing to ſtrangle two of the Turkiſh offenders for every Ruſſian killed. The arrangement has ſince been carried into effect; and the Divan has publiſhed a proclamation, forbidding, under pain of death, the ſlighteſt inſult to be offered to the Ruſſians inhabiting Conſtantinople.

Notwithſtanning the concluſion and ratification of peace, all the military corps in France are placed on their full complement.

June 3.

Kiſſlow, the favorite Vallet-de-Chambre of the late Emperor of Ruſſia, ſtill enjoys, under Alexander, his former emoluments, the rank of Counſellor of State, and apartments at the Hemitage.

The active King of Sweden is going into Finland to have an interview with the young Sovereign of Ruſſia.

A negociation is now on foot at Berlin, between the agent of the Stadtholder and the agent of the Batavian Republic, for a full indemnity to the Stadtholder for his loſſes by the revolution.

A million of florins is about to be levied by the French on the city of Leghorn.

Many ſmall bands of inſurgents, chiefly under the command of Georges, are active againſt the government in the Weſtern Department of France.

JUNE 4.—The Count and Counteſs of Leghorn went yeſterday to the firſt Conſul's, where they dined.

The Firſt Conſul is expected to morrow to aſſiſt at the grand parade.

There arrived at Dijon a few days ago a ſtate priſoner, who is ſaid to be one of the conſpirators againſt the life of the Firſt Conſul in the affair of the infernal machine; he was arreſted at Valence, under the name of Roſtaing; but he is ſaid to be the famous Chandelier. At the period of his arreſt, his beard, which he had ſuffered to grow without doubt for the purpoſe of diſguiſing himſelf better, was three or four inches long; he is pale, dejected, and from Geneva to Dijon did not ſpeak a ſingle word. By the precautions taken, he appears to be a priſoner of the greateſt importance: a Lieut. of Gendarmerie who accompanies him is reſponſible with his life for his ſafe cuſtody, and four gendarmes ſurround the carriage; he has his hands bound, and during the night, ſtill fettered, he has the gendarmes in his room. He is going to Paris, and the road he has taken is a very circuitous one, becauſe a reſcue was apprehended.

JUNE 5.—The Chief Conſul returned to Paris yeſterday for the grand parade; he reviewed the troops: the crowd of ſpectators was immenſe: the Count of Leghorn was expected: he was introduced into the private cabinet of the Conſuls, from whence he could enjoy the fine ſpectacle of the review. The Counteſs of Leghorn was at Madame Buonaparte's. At three o'clock, the Chief Conſul went himſelf to ſee the Count of Leghorn at the hotel occupied by M. d'Azzara, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador. The Prince and Princeſs afterwards dined at the Thuilleries with the Chief Conſul. The day before yeſterday, the Count of Leghorn, accompanied by the miniſter of the interior, and the chevalier d'Azzara, and other perſons, went to the central muſeum of the Arts: he remained there three hours, and examined with much intereſt the different parts of that magnificent eſtabliſhment. After viewing the muſeum, the miniſter conducted him to the library of the national Inſtitute. The Count of Leghorn inſpected ſeveral books, and ſeemed particularly pleaſed with Lacepede's magnificent work on the hiſtory of fiſh.

Gen. Bernadotte announces the execution of two traitors, who had formed the plan of delivering Belle Iſle to the enemies of the Republic.

It appears that the expedition of the Iſle of Elba has not ſucceeded as was hoped: and it is certain that Admiral Gantheaume, after having ſent to Toulon, where they are arrived, all the ſick of his ſquadron, has ſailed from Leghorn to the place of his deſtination.—From Straſburgh we learn, under the date of the 30th ult. that our troops who were to evacuate the Briſgau, have received counter orders: they have even occupied St. Blaiſe and the Foreſt towns. Gen. Watrin has taken the command of the troops.—The Stutgard Gazette pretends that the taking poſſeſſion of the Briſgau has been delayed by the ſame cauſes that keep the affair of the indemnities in ſuſpence. It adds, however, that diſpatches have lately arrived at Vienna from Berlin; that they are calculated to remove a part of the obſtacles; and that citizen Bacher is alſo charged to take the moſt active ſteps to accelerate the concluſion of this great affair.

The Elector of Cologne is dangerouſly ill at Viennar Several Auſtrian officers and engineers are arrived at Braun to extend the fortifications of that place. It is believed, in Germany, that all the right bank of the Inn will be ceded to Auſtria.

The letters from Florence and Leghorn give no ulterior news reſpecting the ſiege of Porto Ferajo.

HAMBURGH, MAY 25.

Count Bernſtoff, the Daniſh Miniſter of State, who goes as Ambaſſador Extraordinary to London, is arrived here on his way to Cuxhaven. The Engliſh fleet under Admiral Nelſon, is at preſent off Warnemunde, two leagues from Ruſtock, in order to take in proviſions. Strangers are flocking thither from all quarters to ſee the fleet. Lord Nelſon went on ſhore and viſited Ruſtock—On Sunday laſt a convoy of 36 ſail arrived here from Hull, to the great joy of the inhabitants of this city—They paſſed the Daniſh ſhips of war in the Elbe, without ſaluting them, as formerly.

PETERSBURGH, May 18.

[illegible] embargo on the Engliſh ſhips, and the [illegible]ſtation on Engliſh property, was taken [illegible]y. The Ruſſian Admiralty has [illegible]ders to get all the Britiſh ſhips in [illegible]ian harbors repaired at the expence [illegible] Ruſſia. The 24 ſhips at Riga, which were given to the heirs of Zuccerlaer, to diſcharge a demand which they made upon the Engliſh Government, have likewiſe been reſtored to their lawful owners. The harmony and friendly relations which formerly ſubſiſted with England, are again reſtored. Lord Nelſon is expected here on a friendly viſit.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 25.

Intelligence has been received from Egypt, that Roſetta is now likewiſe in the hands of the Engliſh, but that the French garriſon at Alexandria ſtill continues to make a valiant defence. The Engliſh had bombarded the latter city, and attempted taking it by ſtorm, but were driven back with conſiderable loſs. The blockade of Alexandria, by ſea and land, ſtill continues. It is ſaid that very few houſes remained without ſome damage from the bombardment; in conſequence of which the French had deſired and obtained a ceſſation of hoſtilities for thirty one days.

JAMES GREEN, Secy.

MARITIME RIGHTS OF GREAT BRITAIN.

THE art of navigation is generally aſcribed to the Phœnitians, and it is the opinion of ſeveral hiſtorians, that this people, the moſt renowned in antiquity, had a commercial intercourſe with our anceſtors, and uſed to fetch tin from Cornwall: ſome even aſſert, that the name of Britain is a compound from two Phœnitian words, ſignifying the land of tin. The Tyrians were a Phœnitian colony, and Carthage ſprung from Tyre. It is worth obſerving, that in the Penulus of Plautus, there is a long ſcene in the Punic language, which bears the greateſt affinity with the common Iriſh dialect. We have no other monument reſpecting the language of Carthage. The concluſion that may be drawn from this circumſtance is obvious: the nautical ſkill of the Carthagenians was ſo great, and their power ſo extenſive, that they were for a long time enabled to diſpute with Rome the empire of the world. Nor was it till the Romans, by their unwearied aſſiduity, had, in the end, baffled them, as it were, on their own element, that this important conteſt was decided. The Romans, however, even when they had gained this point, did not make ſuch improvements in trade as might have been expected. Their knowledge of navigation was ſo confined, that they looked upon the Britiſh Iſles as a new world emerging from the boundleſs ocean, and thought that the pillars of Herculus formed the weſtern boundary of the globe.

The Arabians, notwithſtanding the gloomy temper of their Caliphs, and the depth of ſuperſtition in which they were buried, paid more attention to navigation than the Romans. When the Portugueſe firſt ente[illegible]he Indian ocean by way of the C[illegible] of Good Hope, they found Moors on the coaſt of Mozambique, who traded to the Red Sea in large ſhips. The mariners there had Sea charts, and made uſe of a compaſs of a ſquare figure to direct them in their voyages.—Such is the influence of navigation, and the advantage of commerce, that it enabled the Arabians to diſpel the clouds of their ignorance, ſo as to make a conſiderable progreſs in phyſic, aſtronomy and the mathematics in general, ſome parts of which are ſo evidently borrowed from them, that the very terms uſed in thoſe ſciences betray their origin.

But the commercial exertions of the Arabians were ſoon eclipſed by two Italian Republics, Genoa and Venice, who as they held the keys of the Mediterranean, had an opportunity of fetching the ſpices and other valuable commodities as far as the Red Sea, from whence they were diffuſed all over Europe. The market for the Eaſtern commodities was held at the city of Malacca, and the Genoeſe and Venetians monopolized the trade: the latter in particular, by means of their commercial advantages, flouriſhed a long time, and were able to contend for a ſeries of years againſt all the efforts of the Ottoman Empire; till the uſe of the magnetic needle deprived Venice of her conſequence, by opening the Eaſtern trade to all the nations of Europe.

The Portugueſe are the firſt nation that found a new way to India. Prince Henry the Third, ſon of King John of Portugal, returning from the ſiege of Ceuta, conceived a deſign of improving the navigation of his country; and as he had heard much from certain Moors concerning the ſouthern coaſt of Africa, of which the Europeans had no knowledge, none of them having paſſed beyond Cape Nao, to gain certain intelligence of theſe parts, in the year 1417, he ſent out two veſſels upon a voyage of diſcovery, the ſucceſs of which animated many adventurers, and among others, Vaſques de Gama, and the celebrated Columbus. It is well known that Columbus, before his application to the King of Spain, had ſent his brother Bartholomew to our Henry VII. offering him his plan and ſervices. Henry was reſtrained by his noted avarice from riſking the expences neceſſary for the adventure; but when the event convinced him of his error, he expreſſed a deep concern, and as the famous John Cabotti, a Venetian adventurer, came to England, he did not heſitate to fit him out for a voyage of diſcovery. Cabotti explored the American continent from lat. 56 deg. on the coaſt of Labrador, to that of Florida, in lat. 38 deg. north, and took with him his ſon Sebaſtian, who afterwards became Preſident of the Moſcovy company. Some yeats after many attempts were made to diſcover a paſſage by the north eaſt to India and China: none, however, of theſe ſucceeded; but in the courſe of them was laid the foundation of our valuable commerce to Ruſſia, and the eſtabliſhment of the company trading to thoſe parts.

From that period the maritime exertions of Great Britain have ſo encreaſed in number and in ſpiendor, as to render every other naval power abſolutely inſignificant; and if the King of the Britiſh Iſles pretends to the empire of the ſea, he has the beſt of rights, which is that of conqueſt. There is not on the whole ſurface of the globe a ſpot ſo well calculated for the improvement of navigation, and the firm eſtabliſhment of a maritime power, as this Iſland; and while our excellent Conſtitution continues in its purity, all the hoſtile machinations of fifty navies like that of France will not be able to make any impreſſion on our wooden walls.

We cannot, however, conclude this article without obſerving, that our naval tactics are ſtill ſuſceptible of material improvements, which would not only render our maritime rights invulnerable, but eſtabliſh our excluſive ſuperiority to the end of time.

RESTORATION OF THE PRINCE OF ORANGE.

AUGUSTUS, during his long reign, never evinced ſo much wiſdom as when he enacted a law for limiting the extent of the Roman Empire—De coercendo intra ſuos imperio. If the Firſt Conſul of France does not purſue the ſame line of conduct, he will ſoon become the victim of his ambition. The aggrandizement of the French Republic is a coloſſus too enormous to be ſeen with indifference by the other powers. Not ſatisfied with the conqueſt of Belgium, Piedmont, and her vaſt acquiſitions in Germany, France now wants the addition of Holland; and it is ſaid that General Angereau has repaired to Amſterdam for the purpoſe of ſignifying the intention of incorporating the Dutch with the Conſular Government, and to render them an atom of the one and indiviſible.—We ſincerely hope that the report is well founded, being fully convinced that our enemy could not commit a more material error. Holland will prove a ſecond Helen, and the gigantic projects of the French Republic may at length ſhare the fate of Troy. It is a circumſtance that cannot fail to rouſe the Northern Powers from their political lethargy. The French being in poſſeſſion of Holland, Pruſſia muſt ever be at their mercy, and Ruſſia muſt not preſume to extend her influence beyond her frozen regions. If the Cabinets of Peterſburgh and Berlin weigh their real intereſt in the ſcales of political wiſdom, they will ſee the neceſſity of reſiſting, without delay, the inſidious views of France. Their diſpute with this country is a frivolous topic, totally incoherent to their dignity and welfare. It is a queſtion de lana caprina. The exerciſe of our maritime rights can do no injury to the Northern Confederates; they only ſerve to ſhew the ſuperiority of our naval power, which no nation can conteſt.

A vigorous meaſure, like the alliance of Cambray againſt Venice, is abſolutely neceſſary at this critical juncture, for the ſafety of the European States, and the peace of the world. Let Ruſſia, Pruſſia, and Auſtria, join with Great Britain, and then propoſe articles of a general peace to the Firſt Conſul; it is the only method that can bring France to terms of moderation. Every body knows, that to ſecure the tranquility of Europe a certain balance of power is abſolutely required. Though the dominions of the Emperor of Ruſſia, and of his Pruſſian Majeſty, are at a great diſtance from Italy, yet thoſe Sovereigns have reaſon to be alarmed at the condition of that country, which is within the abſolute graſp of France.—With regard to Holland, it is impoſſible for Great Britain to conſent to any peace while it remains under French influence. We make no ſcruple to declare, that it is incumbent on this country not only to re-inſtate the Prince of Orange, but even to render him an independent Sovereign. As Buonaparte has taken upon himſelf to create the Duke of Parma King of Tuſcany, our Government ought to do the ſame reſpecting the late Stadtholder. The amiable qualities that adorn his Highneſs's moſt benevolent and virtuous character, are certainly calculated to dignify the throne. He may have the title of Rex Batavorum, King of Batavia. It is not difficult to perceive, that the intereſt of Pruſſia and Ruſſia, reſpecting the fate of England, is the ſame as our own.

We may take here an opportunity of obſerving, that the navy of Great Britain cannot excite the jealouſy of the Northern Powers upon any reaſonable ground. It is an advantage which this country owes, in a great meaſure, to her geographical ſituation; and nothing can be more abſurd than to envy what nature has placed in the power of another. The maritime conſequence of this nation has ſo extended commerce, as to embrace every ſpot in the habitable globe, which has ſerved to increaſe the comforts of life, and to advance the knowledge of mankind. If the naval power of this country ſhould be divided among different nations, commerce muſt be conſiderably contracted, and ſociety would fall back to that ſtate of ſupine ignorance that prevailed in former times. Our commercial reſources, inſtead of being a ſubject of jealouſy to the Northern Powers, ought to induce them to court our alliance, which, when we conſider the affirming conduct of France, is abſolutely neceſſary for the ſecurity of their dominions.

GENERAL SIR RALPH ABERCROMBY.

Like Epaminondas, like Wolfe, has died of the wounds received in a hard fought battle, in which he was Commander in Chief, and was victorious.—To his country, the loſs of ſuch a man, at ſuch a time, is ineſtimable. For himſelf, it might have been ſomewhat happier, if the victory had been finally deciſive of the fate of Egypt—more glorious it could ſcarcely in any circumſtances have been. It has crowned one of the moſt honorable military lives which hiſtory ſhall ever commemorate for the emulation of future times.

His deſcent was from an old, though not opulent Scottiſh family, of the county of Stirling. He was born, as we have been informed, about the year 1738. On the 23d of May, 1756, he obtained a Cornetcy in the 2d Dragoon Guards. He roſe, on the 24th of April 1762, to the rank of a Captain in the 3d Regiment of Horſe. Aſcending thro' the intermediate gradations of rank, he was appointed, on the 3d of Nov. 1781, to the Colonelcy of the 103d infantry. On the 28th of September 1787, he was promoted to the rank of Major General. On the 5th of November 1795, he obtained the command of the 7th Regiment of Dragoons.

Having been nearly forty years in the army, having ſerved with honor in two wars, and being eſteemed one of the ableſt, coolеſt, and moſt intrepid officers in the whole Britiſh forces, he was employed on the Continent, under his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York, in the commencement of the preſent war.

In the action on the heights of Cateau, he commanded the advanced guard. At Nimeguen he was wounded. He conducted the march of the Guards from Deventer to Oldemaal, in the retreat of the Britiſh out of Holland, in the winter of 1794-95.

In Auguſt 1795, he was appointed to ſucceed Sir Charles Grey, as Commander in Chief of the Britiſh forces in the Weſt Indies. On the 24th of March, 1796, Grenada was ſuddenly attacked and taken by a detachment of the army under his orders. He afterwards obtained poſſeſſion of the ſettlements of Demarara and Eſſequibo, in South America. St. Lucia was next taken by more difficult exertions, in which the ability of this eminent Commander was ſignally diſplayed. St. Vincent's was, by the middle of June, added to the Britiſh conqueſts. Trinidad, in Feb. 1797, ſhared the ſame fate.

He returned the ſame year to Europe. He was, in reward for ſuch important ſervices, inveſted with the Red Ribbon, appointed to the command of the regiment of Scots Greys, intruſted with the governments of the Iſle of Wight, Fort George, and Fort Auguſtus, and raiſed to the high military rank of Lieutenant General.

He held, for a time, the chief command of the forces in Ireland. In that command, he laboured to maintain the diſcipline of the army, to ſuppreſs the riſing rebellion, and to protect the people from military oppreſſion, with a care worthy alike of the great General and the enlightened and benificent Statеſman. From that ſtation he was called to the chief command of the Forces in Scotland. His conduct in this diſtinguiſhed appointment gave univerſal ſatisfaction.

When the great enterprize againſt Holland was reſolved upon, Sir Ralph Abercromby was called again to command, under his Royal Highneſs the Duke of York.

His country applauded the choice, when he was ſent with an army to diſpoſſeſs the French of Egypt. His experience in Holland and Flanders, and in the climate of the Weſt Indies, peculiarly fitted him for this new command. He accompliſhed ſome of the firſt duties of a General, in carrying his army in health, in ſpirits, and with the requiſite intelligence and ſupplies, to the deſtined ſcene of action. The landing, the firſt diſpoſitions, the attacks, and the courage oppoſed to attack, the ſpirit with which his army appears to have been by confidence in their leader inſpired, demonſtrate that all the beſt qualities of one of the greateſt of commanders were in Sir Ralph Abercromby united—that they were all ſummoned forth into activity in the atchievements amid which he fell.

His private character was modeſt, diſintereſted, upright, unſtained by any negligent or licentious vice. He was a good ſon, brother, father, huſband, and friend, as well as an able and heroic General.

ENGLAND AND RUSSIA.

The following ſtatement of our trade with Ruſſia will ſhew which of the two countries will ſuffer moſt by the interruption of the trade between Great Britain and that empire.

IRON.

We take from Ruſſia and Sweden about 50,000 tons annually; one third is from the latter country.—Our own forges produce about 50,000 tons more: a ſtop being put to the importation will be an encouragement to our forgers, or founderies—which it is known only wanted ſuch a circumſtance to furniſh double the quantity they now do. It is the cheapneſs of Ruſſian iron, that cauſed it to be imported; a few years ago, when the late Empreſs prohibited a number of Engliſh articles, this government was ſtrongly ſolicited to lay high duties on Ruſſian iron, and even by the merchants concerned in the trade, to the eternal honor of the Britiſh merchants: it was alſo repreſented that we ſtood in no need of importation from Ruſſia. Swediſh iron on account of its peculiar quality is indeed very uſeful, but by no means indiſpenſible.

The whole of the iron mine in Siberia belongs to the nobility, thele being ſhut up muſt occaſion great diſſatisfaction among them, and many of them will be utterly ruined.

All the other nations together take from Ruſſia only about one eighth of the quantity exported to Great Britain.

HEMP.

We take from Ruſſia thirty or forty thouſand tons a year. The other nations about one fixth of this quantity.

It is well known that the Italian hemp is the beſt in Europe, though it does not take tar ſo rapidly.

Egypt has always been famous for hemp and flax, and ſupplied, till the French got poſſeſſion of it, Leghorn, Syria, Aſia Minor, Conſtantinople, Smyrna, &c. with large quantities. The Eaſt Indies can ſupply us with any quantity, as well as any other countries; nor is there any reaſon why we ſhould not grow it at home.—It does not impoveriſh land, as ſome have repreſented more than wheat; perhaps not ſo much. In Ruſſia the beſt hemp grows in the ſouthern parts.

The hemp lands in Ruſſia belong almoſt wholly to the nobility.

FLAX.

We take about 17,000 tons, ſometimes much more, annually, from Ruſſia, and it pays no duty in England.—Other nations alſo, a ſmall quantity in proportion.

There certainly exiſts no reaſon why we ſhould import flax from Ruſſia—at leaſt it is certain we can do nothing without it. Egypt produces the fineſt, but in Ireland may grow much greater quantities than at preſent, and we may be ſupplied with it from many countries.

TALLOW.

Formerly we took none from Ruſſia. This is now become an article of great importance to that country; in ſome provinces they kill their oxen merely to boil the meat to get out all the tallow. The higher the Iriſh fell their tallow, the cheaper they can afford to ſell their beef.—Oil of our fiſheries might, in many inſtances, be ſubſtituted for tallow—and oil may be converted into a ſubſtance as hard as tallow.—We take 12 or 15,000 tons, and it is duty free. Other nations take about one third of this quantity.

RAVENS DUCK.

We take 80,000 pieces, worth about 100,000l. ſterl. (at preſent more.) Drillings 13,000 pieces.—Diaper, for 5000l. ſterl. Broad and narrow linnen, for about 5,500l. ſterl. Crath linnen, for 7,500l. ſterl. Flems linnen 80 or 90,000l. ſterl. about 40,000 pieces. Foreign nations a quantity much leſs conſiderable. The prohibition of theſe articles would be very encouraging to our own manufactures, and very diſtreſſing to thoſe of Ruſſia.

DEAL.

We take about 200,000 pieces, tho' 40 years ago we took none from Ruſſia.

OTHER ARTICLES

Are of little importance. The importations into Ruſſia of Britiſh manufactures, which all pay enormous duties in their ports, are becoming by the numerous prohibitions very trifling, ſo that the balance in favour of Ruſſia, and againſt this country, is two millions ſterling.

The balance of trade with Great Britain and Ireland, is two millions ſterl. in favour of Ruſſia.

Obſervations on the raiſing and dreſſing of HEMP.

By EDWARD ANTILL, Eſq.

From the Tranſactions of the American Philoſophical Society.

WHOEVER would raiſe Hemp properly, and to advantage, ſhould ſet aſide two pieces of ground, of ſuch dimenſions each as he ſhall be able to cultivate every year, and ſow the one, while he is manuring and preparing the other for the ſucceeding year's crop; the higher and dryer the ground the better, provided it be well dunged, and made ſtrong and mellow. The ground ſhould not be too ſloping, leſt the good ſoil be waſhed away with hard rains; if it droops towards the ſouth, ſo that may have the full influence of the ſun, it will be an advantage; low, rich, warm, dry grounds will alſo produce good hemp; but wet land, though ever ſo rich, will by no means do. The ground being prepared, and made very mellow, I now come to that part which muſt be particularly and exactly attended to, ſince the ſucceſs of the crop greatly depends upon it. Some time in May, the ground, being moiſt and in a vegitating ſtate, but by no means wet, muſt be well ploughed, the furrows muſt be cloſe and even, and the ſoil muſt lie light and mellow; it muſt then be ſown very even, with two buſhels of ſeed upon one acre. A man with an iron tooth harrow follows the ſower, and harrows in the ſeed, with two har-fes, without any balks; for, the leſs the ground is trampled the better.—If harrowing one way be not ſufficient to cover the ſeed, though it would be beſt if that could be done, it muſt be croſs-harrowed. The ground being moiſt as I ſaid before, but by no means to wet as to clod, which would ruin the crop, the ſeed will all ſtart and come up together, which is a ſure ſign of a good crop, and nothing after that, but too much wet, will hurt it; for, hemp thus come up bids defiance to weeds and graſs of every kind. Its growth is ſo quick, and it ſo effectually ſhades the ground, that nothing below can riſe, or ſhew its head; and it to preſerves all the moiſture below, that the hotter and dryer the weather the faſter it grows. Whereas, if the ſeed be grown when the ground is dry, the ſeed that lies deepeſt, where the moiſture is, will come up firſt, and theſe plants will ſhade and ſtarve thoſe that come after; by which means the firſt comers will be too large, and the laſt will be much too ſmall, ſo that the crop will be greatly damaged every way: ſo much depends upon this one circumſtance, of ſowing the ſeed when the ground is moiſt and fit to receive it. The Crops thus rightly managed, will ſtand as thick as very good wheat, and be from four to ſix feet high, according to the ſtrength of the ground, and the ſtems will not be thicker than a good wheat ſtraw; by this means, the hemp will be finer, it will yield the greater quantity, and it may be plucked from the ground, like flax, which will be a great ſaving. But, if it be ſown thin, that is, one buſhel to an acre, which is the common practice, it grows large; the hemp is harſh and coarſe, & then it muſt be cut with hooks, which occaſions great waſte; for, four or five inches above the ground is left by way of ſtubble, which contains the beſt and heavieſt part of the hemp.

When the hemp has got its growth, and is fit to be plucked, which you will know by the under leaves of the carle or male hemp turning yellow and falling off, the ſooner it is pulled the better. It muſt then be bound up with ſtraw bands, in ſingle band theaves, rather ſmall than large, and each theaf muſt be bound in two places; and the ſooner it is carried to the water, to rot, the better. Water rotted hemp, if it be rightly managed, is every way better than that which is rotted on the ground; there is leſs waſte in it, when it comes to be dreſſed: it looks brighter and fairer to the eye; it is eſteemed to be ſtronger and more durable, and it always fetches a better price; beſides, it is much ſooner done, and it is rotted more even and alike, and with greater certainty & exactneſs. Many people in America are acquainted with the method of rotting hemp in water; but, as many more are not yet acquainted with it, I ſhall, for their information, ſet down the method of doing it. Hemp may be rotted in ſtagnated or ſtanding water, ſuch as ponds, pools, or broad deep ditches; &, in ſuch water, it is generally four or five days and nights in rotting, and ſome times longer, according to the heat or coolneſs of the weather. It may alſo be rotted in running water, as in a brook or river; and, in ſuch water, three or four days and nights are ſufficient according to the weather. To know whether the hemp is rotted enough, in either caſe, take a middling handful out of the middle row, & try with both your hands to ſnap it aſunder; if it break eaſy, it is rotted enough; but if it yet appear pretty ſtrong, it is not, and muſt lie longer, till it break with eaſe; then it muſt be taken out & dried as ſoon as poſſible. In handling the theaves, take hold of the bands, and ſet them upright againſt a fence, if one be near, or lay them down upon the graſs, for the water to drain off; then unbind them carefully, open and ſpread them, that they may dry thoroughly; then bind them up again, & houſe them in a dry tight place. The reaſon of handling the hemp in this careful manner is, that when it is well rotted, whilſt it is wet the lint comes off with the leaſt touch; therefore, if it be handled roughly, or if, while it is wet, is be thrown into a cart, and carried to a diſtance to be unbound and dried, it will be greatly hurt, and the owner will receive great damage; but when it is dry it may be handled with ſafety.

If the hemp be rotted in a brook of running water, the theaves muſt be laid acroſs the ſtream; for, if they be laid down lengthways with the ſtream, the current of the water will waſh away the lint, and ruin the hemp: it muſt be laid down heads and points, two, four, or ſix thick, according to the depth of the water, and the quantity of hemp. If the bottom of the river be ſand, gravel or mud, three good ſtrong ſtakes muſt be driven down at each end, above and below, and three long, ſtrong poles muſt be laid on the hemp, and faſtened well to the ſtakes, in ſuch manner as to force down the hemp under water, where it is to remain till it is rotted enough; though, if a muddy ſtream could be avoided, it would be beſt, becauſe it is apt to foul and ſtain the hemp. If the bottom of the ſtream be rocky or ſtony, ſo that ſtakes cannot be driven down to ſecure the hemp under water, and prevent its floating away, then a rough wall muſt be made at the lower end of the hemp, and along the ſide to keep it in; and ſtrong poles or rails muſt be laid upon the top of the hemp, & pretty heavy ſtones upon them, ſo as to ſink the hemp under water, where it muſt lie till it is rotted enough:

What Hemp is intended for ſeed, ſhould be ſown on a piece of ground, by itſelf, which muſt be made very rich and ſtrong. It muſt be ſown in ridges ſix feet wide; and the ſeed muſt be of the largeſt and beſt ſort, and ſown very thin, at the rate of a peck upon an acre, or rather ſix quarts; for, the thinner it is ſown, the more it branches, and the more ſeed it bears. It ſhould be ſown ſome time about the middle of April, and then the ſeed will not be ripe till ſome time after the other hemp is done with. If you have no convenient place to ſow your ſeed hemp by itſelf, then ſow a border, of ſix feet wide, along the north and weſt ſides of your hemp-field. The reaſon for ſowing your hemp in ſuch ridges or borders is, that when the carle or male hemp is ripe, and has ſhed its farina on the ſimble or female hemp, (by which the ſeed is impregnated) and the leaves of the carle hemp fall off, and the ſtem grows yellow, you may eaſily ſtep in along the ſides, and pull up the carle without hurting the female which now begins to branch out, and looks of a deep green colour, and very flouriſhing; and when the ſeeds begin to ripen, which is known by their falling out of their cockets, you may, all along both ſides, bend down the plants, and ſhake out the ſeed upon a cloth laid on the ground; for, as they ripen they ſcatter upon being ſhaken by a hard wind, or otherwiſe. Then it muſt be watched, and the fowls and yellow-birds kept from it, for they are immoderately fond of the ſeed. As the beſt ripe ſeeds are the fulleſt and beſt, they are worthy of ſome pains to ſave them; and the beſt way to do this is to bend down the plants all along, on each ſide of the border or ridge, as is ſaid above, and ſhake them over a cloth ſpread on the ground to receive the ſeed. If one ſide of the plant be rooted out of the ground, by forcing it down to ſhake out the ſeed, there will be no damage, the ſeed that remains will ripen notwithſtanding; and the plant muſt be thus ſhaken every two or three days, till all the ſeeds are ripe, and thus ſaved. This way is much better than pulling up the plants by the roots, and ſhaking them on a barn-floor; for, by this method, which is the common practice, one third of the ſeed never comes to maturity.

It is well known to every farmer that, in the three bread-colonies at leaſt, the ſpring and ſummer ſeaſons are of late years become very dry; ſo that a crop of flax is become very precarious, ſcarcely one year in ſeven producing a good one. This is a conſtant complaint in the mouth of every huſbandman: now hemp does not require half the rain that flax does; this is a circumſtance that is well worth the notice and attention of every farmer, &c. &c. &c.

I ſhall now endeavour to inſtruct the huſbandman in a few eaſy rules for preparing his hemp, which he has raiſed and managed in the manner before directed.

The beſt preparation of hemp for the manufacture of cloth, is to render it as ſoft and as fine as poſſible, without leſſening its ſtrength; and the eaſieſt and cheapeſt way of doing this is certainly the beſt. This is to be found out by a variety of trials and experiments; but, 'till a better way is diſcovered, with which I ſhould be greatly pleaſed, take the following method, which is the beſt I have yet been able to diſcover.

If you have a large wide kettle, that will take in your hemp at full length, it will be the better; but, if your kettle be ſmall, then you muſt double your hemp, but without twiſting; only the ſmall ends of every hand muſt be twiſted a little, to keep them whole and from entangling. Then, firſt of all, lay ſome ſmooth ſticks at the bottom of the kettle, ſo as to lie acroſs one another, three or four layers, according to the ſize and depth of your kettle; this is to keep the hemp from touching the liquor. Then pour ſome ley of middling ſtrength, half as ſtrong as what you make ſoap of, gently into the kettle, not ſo much as to riſe up to the top of the ſticks, they being kept down to the bottom. Then lay in the hemp, each layer croſſing the other, ſo that the ſteam may riſe up through the whole body of the hemp; which done, cover your kettle as cloſe as you can, and hang it over a very gentle fire, and keep it ſimmering or ſlewing, but not boiling, ſo as to raiſe a good ſteam for ſix or eight hours. Then take it off, and let it ſtand covered 'till it is cool enough to handle. Then take out the hemp, and wring it very carefully, as dry as you well can, and hang it up out of the way of the wind, either in your garret or your barn, ſhutting the doors; there let it remain, turning it now and then, till it is perfectly dry. Then pack it up in ſome cloſe dry place till you want to uſe it; but you will do well to viſit it now and then, leſt any part might be damp and rot. You muſt know that wind and air weaken and rot hemp, flax, and thread very much. Then at your leiſure, twiſt up ſome of the hands, as many as you intend for preſent uſe, as hard as you can, and with a round ſmooth hand-beetle, on a ſmooth ſtone, beat & pound each hand by itſelf all over very well, turning it round from ſide to ſide, 'till every part be very well bruiſed. You muſt then untwiſt it, and hatchel it, firſt through a coarſe, and then through a fine hatchel; and remember, that hatchelling muſt be performed in the ſame manner as a man would comb a fine head of hair; he begins at the end below, and, as that diſentangles, he riſes higher, till at laſt he reaches up to the crown of the head. The firſt tow makes good ropes for the uſe of the plantation; the ſecond tow makes very good coarſe ſheeting; and the hemp itſelf will make excellent linen. The ſame method of ſteaming ſoftens flax very much.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, Aug. 29.

On Friday the 14th came on at Niagara, before the Hon. Judge Alcock, the trial of George Nemiers and Mary London, alias Mary Oſborn, for the murder of the late Mr. Bartholomew London, of Saltfleet, by poiſon.

The trial commenced at half paſt nine in the morning, and took up about 8 hours.

The Attorney General in a pathetic addreſs to the Jury, called their attention to the ſolemn duty before them.—He ſaid, that altho' he proſecuted for the Crown, it ſhould be ſeen that he urged no matter that appeared doubtful; he was as much their advocate as their proſecutor.—The facts being fully proven, the Jury delivered them in guilty—and the Judge, who had throughout the trial judged with mercy, now with mildneſs proceeded to paſs the dreadful ſentence of the law, to be executed on the 17th, which was accordingly executed purſuant to ſentence.

A numerous concourſe of people attended the execution.

Oliver Bartlett on Monday the 17th, was tried for theft, and received ſentence to depart this province for ſeven years.

MELANCHOLY.

IN THE STYLE OF SHENSTONE.

Ah, me! in the bloom of my youth,
Am I left all ſad and forlorn;
My figure is wan and uncouth,
And my beauty has ſet in its dawn.

And I weep as I meaſure my woes,
To be left quite unpitied to die;
For no one will grant me repoſe,
Or attend to my pitiful cry.

And can I no pity obtain,
From thoſe who have riches untold;
Ah! no, Youth is giddy and vain,
And Age is ſuſpicious and cold.

For Age will to caution give ear,
And Youth turn diſguſted aſide;
Ah, me! is the grant of a tear
Thus check'd at the altar of pride?

Then here, on the earth, will I lie,
And bid adieu to ſorrow and ſtrife;
Unpitied I'll breathe my laſt ſigh,
No intereſts chain me to life.

But the blow for which bravery ſues,
Death averts and cruelly flies,
When, like a baſe coward purſues
The victim who fearfully dies.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, Monday, May 28.

THE Chancellor of the Exchequer rofe, in confequence of a notice given on Friday, to move a Vote of Thanks to General Hutchinfon, and the Officers and Soldiers under his command, for their gallant conduct in Egypt. In referring to the Journals of the Houfe, the Right Hon. Gentleman faid he found, that, when the death of General Wolfe was made known, the Houfe had felt it their duty, firft to pay a tribute of gratitude and refpect to the memory of that diftinguifhed officer & then to pafs a Vote of Thanks to the General who fucceeded in command, & to the Officers and Soldiers employed on the occafion. It was his wifh, to imitate in the prefent inftance the conduct of Parliament on that occafion and to pay a like tribute to the memory of a man no lefs diftinguifhed for gallantry than Gen. Wolfe. His merits were known to every one, and defcribed in the letter of his fucceffor, which evinces, that one generous fentiment alike actuates the breaft of Engliflimen. Gen. Hutchinfon will prove a valuable and excellent fucceffor to Sir Ralph Abercromby. It would be unneceffary in him to fay more of that truly meritorious Commander, than having paffed a long life of honor, his death was glorious; and during the courfe of his exiftence the breath of calumny had never dared to taint him. The officers & foldiers all confiding in his fuperior knowledge, refigned their judgments into his hands, happy in being allowed to participate in his efteem; his bravery and fkill ranked him amongft the higheft benefactors to his country. In the moment of victory he received a mortal wound; forgetful of his own fufferings, his only wifh was the profperity of his country—happy in having atchieved the glorious work, he refigned his breath with fatisfaction. Like the Brave Wolfe he lived—like him he died! His Majefty, anxious to fhew a mark of eftcem to that truly virtuous man, has directed, that the ftandard of the enemy fhall adorn the monument intended to be erected to his memory, whofe aim was not to deftroy, but fave. May fuch be the principle that ever fhall direct the Soldier's conduct! On atchievements of the army of Egypt he did not wifh to expatiate; the Journals of the Houfe do not afford an inftance where the heroifm of a Britifh Army fhone more confpicuous, or where the gratitude of the country would be more liberally beftowed. The Right Hon. Gentleman then read an extract of a letter from Egypt, defcribing the landing of the army, and the difficulties they had to encounter, which, fays the writer, muft make Engliflimen proud of their country—the Conquerors of Italy fled before them, and the fuccefs of that day added another brilliant page to the annals of hiftory. No man could feel the exertions of that army more than he did; it added to our domeftic fplendour, and the attainment of thofe exertions might eventually lead to an object, not more defired by any one than by himfelf, an honorable and permanent peace. No fuccefs on our part ought to induce us to demand more, or diafters to compel us to accept lefs. (Hear! hear!)—It was a fource of great fatisfaction that the minds of the people, amidft the diftreffes of the country, were unconquered and unconquerable, the fafety and honor of the country was in an eminent degree owing to the exertions of that great and good man: & to him, and to all thofe employed under him on the coaft of Egypt were their applaufe and gratitude due. He then moved, "That an humble Addrefs be prefented to His Majefty, humbly praying that his Majefty would be graciously pleafed to direct that a monument be erected in the Cathedral church of St. Paul, to the memory of the ever-to-be-lamented Commander in Chief of the Army of Egypt, Sir Ralph Abercromby K. B. who, having furmounted innumerable obftacles, by local fituation and a well-directed attack of the enemy, was mortally wounded, but ftill continued in the field till the army under his command had atchieved the victory, on the 21ft of March, 1801.

Sir James Pulteney rofe to pay his tribute of refpect to the memory of Sir Ralph Abercromby, whofe lofs, thofe who knew him better would not lefs lament than he did. It was enough to fay the army had defeated the enemy; they defeated them under difficulties the moft alarming.

The motion was then put and carried nem. con.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer then moved the Thanks of the Houfe to Generals Hutchinfon, (fecond in command) Coote, Craddock, Ludlow, Moore, Earl of Cavan, Hope, Doyle, Stewart, Oakes, &c. for their fplendid and heroic exertions in refifting the defperate attack of the enemy on the 21ft March. Carried nem. con.—He then moved that this Houfe do highly approve and acknowledge the regularity, difcipline, and valor of the non commiffioned officers and privates on that memorable and brilliant victory, &c. Carried nem. con.—That General Hutchinfon be requefted to communicate the faid refolution.

The Thanks of the Houfe were then voted to Admiral Lord Keith, for his diftinguifhed zeal and ability, and fkill in landing the troops; and alfo to Rear Admiral Sir R. Bickerton, for his co operation in effecting that difembarkation; and that this houfe do highly approve of the conduct of the Seamen and Marines employed on that occafion; and that the Speaker be defired to communicate thefe Refolutions to Lord Keith, by him to be fignified to the captains of the different fhips.—Ordered.

LONDON, JUNE 3.

The 42d regiment has fo gallantly diftinguifhed itfelf in the line, in the memorable contefts in Egypt, that every particular concerning it becomes intereffing. It was originally embodied as a militia in favor of the Houfe of Hanover, and confifted of the fons of the moft refpectable yeomanry in the Highlands of Scotland; and among whom the name of Campbell was particularly celebrated. About fixty years ago this regiment was incorporated into the line, and has ever been honored by the poft of danger and confidence. From the athletic form of its men, they have always been remarkable for the effect with which they ufed the bayonet, an inftance of which occurred in the landing in Egypt, for which fervice they were feletted by the ever-to-be-lamented Abercromby. This regiment is as remarkable for peaceable demeanour, endurance of fatigue and obedience to orders, as for that perfevering intrepidity of which it has recently difplayed fo glorious a proof; and we have no doubt but that its conquefl of the pretended Invincibles will be followed by atchievements equally honorable to their country and themfelves.

From late London Papers.

The net revenue of the Hanoverian dominions amount annually to 500,000l fterling: the land tax alone, from the diftricts of Bremen and Vexden, produces yearly 80,000l.

There was one material paffage of the Duke of Clarence's Speech, on the day of high national eulogy, in Parliament about Parker and Nelfon, that ought to be pointedly recorded. The Duke faid, "that Englifh Soldiers were as great as Englifh Sailors. The bravery of the nation felt no difference whether its defenders wear a red or a blue jacket. All this (faid the Duke) depends entirely upon their leaders. When Britifh military officers (added His Royal Highnefs) are equal in tactics to Britifh naval officers, then military victories will be as common here, and throughout Europe, as naval victories. It depends upon the fkillfulnefs of the officers; for both Naval and Military Britifh Officers are equally brave; and there is no fear of the men."

A few minutes after Captain Otway had arrived at the Admiralty with the glorious intelligence of our late victory, the place was crouded with inquiring vifitors. Among the reft a young gentleman of the Tranfport Office, about thirteen years of age was very confpicuous. His engaging figure, and eager deportment, intereffed all around him, and riveted their attention. He haftily alked Captain Otway after the Monarch:—"and my Father, Sir, how is he? Is he wounded? Is he killed?—" Who is your Father, my dear?" faid Captain Otway, ftruck and affected with the youth's ingenious fenfibility.—"Captain Moffe!"—"My dear! the Monarch has been very roughly handled."—Oh! I know your meaning!" exclaimed the mourner, "my dear Father is dead?" Captain Otway was much agitated; and the youth, burfting out into an agony of grief, bewailed the lofs of his parent in a few, but pathetic fentences. At length he raifed his head, and, with his eyes ftreaming with tears, faultered out—"I am happy, however, that he died fighting for us!"

June 18. A difpatch from Lord Elgin, at Conftantinople, was received yefterday by Government. It brings accounts from before Alexandria as late as the 3d of May, at which time nothing of importance had happened, fubfequent to the events which have been recorded in the Gazette.

June 19. A Paris paper of the 15th inft. contains an article dated from Pau, which ftates, that peace has been concluded between Portugal and Spain, & that Lucien Bonaparte had proceeded to Bajodas to fign the treaty on the part of the Republic. Altho' the Moniteur of the 15th inft. is filent on the fubject it is probable that the ftatement may prove correct.

The laft cartel from France brought difpatches to citizen Otto. The intercourfe between the two governments has lately been more frequent than it was fome time ago; and as foon as the fate of Egypt fhall be known, we may expect to hear fomething of fteps towards a pacification.

The following is copied from a morning paper of this day:

"During the laft fortnight, very few if any private letters were allowed to come from France to England, a circumftance which gave rife to much fpeculation and various. It is fuppofed that the French government ftopped them, in hopes of intercepting fome treafonable correfpondence, or gaining information refpecting certain political defigns. On Monday, however, a great number of letters were received from France, & from them we are enabled to throw a light upon the prefent ftate of affairs.

"The report of the arreft of Maffena was not wholly unfounded. By perfons arrived from France, it was known that his arreft was expected. We can now add, upon good information, that a political intrigue has been for fome time carrying on at Paris, for the purpofe of fupplanting Bonaparte and his government.—The leaders of this intrigue are Reubel and Maffena. We know not whether Carnot is a party to it.—Tongues have been bufy in Paris, though the newfpapers have been filent. As the means of fucceeding in their defigns, the Reubelifts, have reprefented Bonaparte's government as a defpotifm, wholly deftructive of liberty. But after what has paffed in France, the paffion for freedom is as cold as it is in England, which has been ftocked by the example of France. In the caufe of freedom Reubel could form but a weak party; in another caufe he has been more fuccefsful. His friends have reprefented the protracted negociations between England and France as a proof that the chief Conful has no defign of making peace; that he is trifling with the diftreffes of the people, and meditating new wars and conquefts, which, however they may add to his glory, muft prolong and aggravate the fufferings of the French people. Among other plans of ambition, that of the invafion of England has been held out as the moft chimerical and dangerous. The difficulties in the way of the fettlement of the indemnities have alfo aflifted the Reubelifts; and when it appeared that the French troops had croffed the Rhine, a ftrong fentiment of difcontent was manifefted among the public. This period too, was thought to be the favorable one in which Reubel and Maffena would ftrike a blow, and an explofion was actually looked for at Paris. But Bonaparte is too vigilant and penetrating. Fouche, minifter of Police, the Pitt of Paris, who has deferted the Jacobins as the other deferted the Parliamentary reformers, has kept a moft watchful eye over the confpirators, with all of whom he is acquainted, knowing their haunts and proceedings, as well as their wifhes, by the report of his fpies, numerous and well paid. Bonaparte and Fouche know fo completely every ftep of their enemies, that they are under no uneafinefs, and they will not arreft them, if it be poffible to avoid that meafure with fafety, conficious that even the arreft of their enemies would excite an alarm of danger and call in queftion the ftability of government. It was the dread of a political explofion, more than the appearance of a war on the Rhine, that occafioned the late fall in the French funds; it was to counteract the efforts of this faction, to banifh the apprehenfions of a new war, that the review of the ftate of the French republic in refpect to her foreign relations, appeared laft week in the Moniteur, and that the project of invading England was difcountenanced. For the fame reafon was the high panegyric on the Englifh miniflers publifhed in the official Journal. But hollow are the praifes of the firft Conful, and little confidence do we place in his profeffions of peace. He has adopted a kind and complimentary language to lull the fears and to raife the hopes of France; to give the people this great proof of his fincerity—and a great proof it is, that he believed the Britifh minifter fincere."

A letter from on board the Loire frigate, cruifing off Havre, mentions, "that on the evening of the 6th, the enemy fent out of the harbour of Havre the following veffels, viz. ten lugger gun boats, carrying each one gun and 35 men; one large lugger of 16 guns and 45 men; four gun brigs of 12 guns and 50 men each; one fchooner of 10 guns and about 50 men, and thefe fupported by batteries of about 12 guns and the mortars. Thus the force of the enemy confifted of nearly three mortars, 96 pieces of cannon, and 685 men.

"This force Capt. Newman of the Loire, attacked on the evening of the 7th. As the Loire approached, he found the could not get within gun-fhot, from want of water. The Wolverene, carrying 12 guns and 60 men, ftood clofe in with the enemy, and engaged their whole line for nearly half an hour, without having a man hurt, or even a fail or a rope cut.

A letter was received yefterday at the Admiralty from Capt. Newman, of the Loire frigate, with an account of a fecond attack having been made by a fmall fquadron under his command, planned by Capt. Wright of the Wolverene. This fecond attack lafted near an hour, and ended in the French force being obliged to take fhelter in the harbour of Havre.

The fleet of Eaft India fhips which lately arrived from China occupy collectively 9273 tons and upwards.

The Eaft India Company have at this time in their fervice 76 regular fhips; of this number 31 are of 1200 tons and upwards.

June 20. A rapid interchange of difpatches has taken place during the whole of the preceding week between the governments of France and England, and very fanguine hopes have been entertained in confequence, that the bafis of negociation may have acquired fome ftability. We are told, that yefterday M. Otto had a long converfation with Lord Hawkefbury, in the prefence of Mr. Addington, and that the terms fubmitted by the French as preliminary, are extremely favorable; it is even ftated by fome what thefe terms are, namely, that France confents to give up Egypt, and to allow England to retain the port of Alexandria: Piedmont is to be reftored to the King of Sardinia; and that with regard to the colonies, the general principle will be to give back very little to France and her allies in the Eaft Indies, but to reftore with a liberal hand, our conquefts in the Weft—Such are the ftatements afloat: we do not, however, attach much credit to them, it not being very probable that government, at fo early a period of negociation, fhould publifh any report of its progrefs: we therefore confider all further fpeculation on the fubject at prefent as impertinent.—In the courfe of another week, perhaps, fuch events may occur as to give a new feature to the whole bufinefs.

By another flag of truce which arrived yefterday at Dover, we again, laft night, received French papers of one day later than thofe which reached town on Thurfday; as heretofore, they contain but little news.

We yefterday learnt from the beft authority, that the enemy's fleet in Breft, according to the laft advices, confifted of 27 fail of the line ready for fea. The complement of feamen on board the 74's is fixed at only three hundred men, which proves that room is left for double the number of troops, as the French complement on board fhips of this rate is 850 men.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—June 18.

Mr. Vanfittart faid he had a motion to make relative to the Britifh property which had been under fequeftration by the late Emperor of Ruffia, a confiderable quantity of which had thereby become damaged, and the merchants having had recourfe to the underwriters to recover fuch damages, it had been agreed by both parties that the goods fhould be put up to fale; now it was hard that under fuch circumftances these goods should pay the duty required by law upon all auctions; he therefore gave notice that he should move to-morrow, that the house resolve itself into a committee to consider of exempting certain goods lately under sequestration in Russia, from the auction duty bill.

On motion of the chancellor of the Exchequer, the house went into a committee to consider of the salaries to be granted to the judges of his Majesty's prize courts in America and in the West Indies, and of allowance to be afforded to persons who have exercised this office. TO THE EDITOR.

SIR,

IT is really furprizing that a truth fo important to mankind as that of living men being fpecifically lighter than water, is not more generally known than it appears to be in the prefent age; for a general knowledge of it would certainly be attended with the happieft effects in cafes of fhipwreck and of ferry boats upfetting; circumftances which have been frequent; and caufes of the death of thoufands of the human race, of the moft pungent diftrefs of thofe related to the unhappy fufferers from fuch, and to every feeling mind. As it is a pofition which can fo eafily and without expence be put to the teft of experiment, it will be almoft criminal in thofe perfons who are precluded from the poffibility of inveftigating fo important a fubject, not to make the experiment, or to negleft publifhing the refults of their experiments to the world. As mankind generally fuppofe that they are heavier than water, it will require a number of facts to convince them of their miftake; and until there is fufficient evidence for mankind to believe that they are fpecifically lighter than water, it is improbable that thofe who may be fo unfortunate as to be fhipwrecked or thrown into the water by other accidents will avail themfelves of fo favorable a circumftance.

The experiments of Mr. Robifon having been made upon ten different perfons, for the purpofe of difcovering the fpecific gravity of living men, which he found to be about one-fourth lefs than river water, will appear conclufive to many; and from them we may prefume that the fpecific gravity of mankind generally is nearly the fame, or about one-fourth lefs than river water. But as it is poffible we may err in drawing a general conclufion from only a few particular facts, and as a great part of mankind have it in their power to repeat the experiments of Mr. Robifon, let us hope that we fhall not long be in want of fuch a number of facts as that from them we may infer the fpecific gravity of mankind generally without danger of erring; and from which we may learn the greateft differences of that of individuals.—There has been pointed out to me by a friend a paflage contained in Donald Campbell's, "Journal Over Land to India," which defcribes this perilous fituation from having been fhipwrecked, and the method he took to reach the fhore after quitting the wreck, which was purely an experiment.—The refult of the experiment was favorable to him, and ferves to corroborate an important truth, That the difference of the fpecific gravities of living men and water is fuch that they may float upon its furface without any exertion. "Death" fays Mr. Campbell, "feemed inevitable and all that occurred to me now to do, was to accelerate it and get out of its pangs as fpeedily as poffible; for tho' I knew how to fwim, the tremendous furf rendered fwimming ufelefs, & all hope from it would have been ridiculous. I therefore began to fwallow as much water as poffible; yet, ftill rifing by the buoyant principle of the waves to the furface, my former thoughts began to occur; and whether it was that, or natural inftinct, which furvived the temporary impreffions of defpair, I know not; but I endeavoured to fwim, which I had not long d when I again difcovered the log of wood I had loft floating near me, and with fome difficulty caught it. Hardly had it been an inftant in my hands, when I loft it again. I had often heard it faid in Scotland, that if a man will throw himfelf flat on his back in the water, lie quite ftraight and ftiff, and fuffer himfelf to fink till the water gets into his ears, he will continue to float: this occurred to me now, and I determined to try the experiment. So I threw myfelf on my back in the manner I have defcribed, and left myfelf to the difpofal of Providence. Nor was it long before I found the truth of the faying;—for I floated with hardly an effort, and began for the firft time to perceive fomething like hopes of prefervation. Nor was I miftaken; for in a fhort time more, without effort or exertion, and without once turning from off my back, I found myfelf ftrike againft the fandy beach."

From the above paflage it appears that the people of Scotland are acquainted with the fact that living men can float near the furface of water without any exertion. I have tried the experiment feveral times in the North River; and found, agreeable to the faying of the Scotch people, and the refult of Mr. Campbell's experiment, that after having thrown myfelf upon my back, I continued to float without the leaft motion of either hands or feet, the whole of my face being above the furface of the water, and my body inclined beneath it, making an angle of about 45°. Two of my friends have alfo tried the experiment with the fame refult. Indeed one of them faid he fuppofed he could go to fleep in fmooth water having floated with rather more of his face above the furface than myfelf or my other friend.

Should any be induced to try the experiment (for many will have opportunities when bathing) I would advife them not to be hafty in giving the refult of their experiments; for one of my friends concluded, from two or three experiments, he could not float without fome exertion; but by repeating them he is now fatisfied that he can float without moving hands or feet.

New York, July 8th, 1801.

Conſequences reſulting from the Death of the late Emperor of Ruſſia.

THOUGH we are inclined to conſider the ſudden diſſolution of the unfortunate Paul as a viſitation of God, independent of any collateral cauſe, we can not omit obſerving, that the throne is frequently ſurrounded with dingers, which can o ly be averted by the vigilance of friendſhip.

Was not Alexander the real friend of Epheſtion? Princes, with reſpect to the attachment of their favourites, have a peculiar advantage from the extent of their power, intereſt being the beſt ſecurity for the conduct of mankind. It was this conſideration that, about two centuries ago, ſuggeſted to his Holineſs at Rome a moſt refined policy, which never was noticed by any writer. We take here an opportunity of ſetting forth this curious fact, being convinced that if the Papal circumſpection had come to the knowledge of other Sovereigns, they would long ſince have adopted it, as there cannot be deviſed a meaſure more evidently calculated to promote the domeſtic proſperity of a Potentate:—

Whenever a new Pope is elected, the firſt act of his authority is to diſmiſs, without any exception whatſoever, every individual that belonged to his predeceſſor, from the Prime Miniſter to the laſt ſcullion; and it is particularly worth remarking, that the penſions and ſalaries of his own adherents and menial ſervants riſe every year in a certain proportion. His Holineſs, above all, is exceedingly partial to his cooks, and they never fail to take proper care of him. The head cook of Lambertini multiplied his wages at ſuch a rate, that at the end of his Pontificate, which laſted many years, he found himſelf poſſeſſed of a fortune that enabled him to become a Biſhop. The Pope's phyſician and apothecary are not leſs liberally rewarded than the cooks; like them, they receive an annual increaſe in their ſtipend, and have the title and rank of Monſignors, which they loſe with their ſalary the moment their maſter dies.—If the late Emperor Paul had followed the prudential ſyſtem of the Succeſſor of St. Peter, he moſt probably would not have been troubled with the cholic.

It has been ſuppoſed that his death would occaſion a material change in the Cabinet of Peterſburgh; but we cannot entirely concur in that opinion. The public declaration of the young Emperor, that his intention is to adhere to the plans of Catharine, ſhews that he does not mean to abandon the main object relative to this country. It is, however, a fortunate circumſtance, that our naval efforts have already, in a great meaſure, baffled his hoſtile machinations, and there is every reaſon to hope, that the Confederacy will ſoon ſink with Paul into the grave. As Mr. Pitt juſtly obſerved, in his eloquent ſpeech, March 25, on the motion of Mr. Grey, for an Enquiry into the State of the Nation—it is incumbent on Miniſters to bring, if poſſible, our preſent conteſt with Ruſſia to a pacific termination, but on no conceſſion that may ſacrifice our rights, and lower the juſt pretenſions of our naval dignity, eſpecially as we have nothing to apprehend from any reſiſtance that may be attempted by foreign powers. Whenever a nation acquires a decided ſuperiority at ſea, as we have this moment, her naval ſtrength is ever encreaſing, while that of her enemies muſt decline in proportion, by reaſon that their ſhips can never make any formidable junction without being intercepted by her numerous fleets. A nation may have better ſoldiers than another power, an army better diſciplined and more renowned; but the advantage may be loſt. The Pruſſians have been conſidered in our own days as the beſt troops in Europe; now, the French pretend to have eclipſed their fame: the ſame may happen to the Auſtrians and Ruſſians; but when a naval power obtains a ſuperiority among ſurrounding nations, it cannot be loſt without a ſhameful neglect.—From a public aſſertion of Bonaparte while he was in Egypt, it appears that this circumſtance did not eſcape his ſagacity; he acknowledged, in expreſs terms, the unconquerable naval ſuperiority of Great Britain, which always inclined us to think, that his mind is not backward to treat with this country on terms of moderation.

As to the relations of France with Ruſſia, we think them the ſame as in the latter days of Paul. It is well known that the conqueſt of Conſtantinople was a favourite project of the ambitious Catherine, and the new Emperor cannot but conſider the alliance of Bonaparte as abſolutely neceſſary in ſuch a purſuit. If the Firſt Conſul promiſed to ſupport the vain pretenſions of Paul on the iſland of Malta, as there is reaſon to think that he did, his preſent Imperial Majeſty does certainly not differ from his late father on that ſubject. When Paul interfered with the French in behalf of the King of Naples, it was on a deep political principle, his late Imperial Majeſty wiſhing to ſecure by the tie of gratitude the friendſhip and condeſcenſion of a power that boaſts of a ſuperior claim on the iſland in queſtion. Actuated by the ſame motive, the preſent Emperor will not fail to continue the protection of his father to his Sicilian Majeſty. As to the King of Sardinia and the Pope, they are two devoted victims; their fall is immaterial to Ruſſia. We cannot but expreſs ſome concern to ſee the King of Sardinia deprived of the beſt part of his dominions; but with regard to the Pope, we make no ſcruple to repeat with Machival, that his temporal power and prepoſterous authority never did much good to the world, and Italy in particular.

Paragraphs from late London Papers.

Captain Morgan, of the 55th regiment, rode his bay horſe, by Young Morwick, a few days ago, from Leiceſter, through Welford to Northampton, a diſtance of 32 poſt miles, with apparent eaſe, in 98 minutes, for a wager of 100 guineas.

A large fiſh was taken in the bay of Abbotſbury, meaſuring twenty ſeven feet and an half in length, and fifteen feet in girth; his tail, when ſpread, 8 feet; fins, 4 feet; and it is ſuppoſed to weigh 15 tons. It was entangled in the mackarel ſeins, and deſtroyed by the crew of the Greyhound cutter, who fired upon it. Fourteen horſes and a number of men were employed in getting it on ſhore, where a booth has been erected over it, and numbers flock to ſee it. The fiſhermen call it a Bequmaris ſhark, and ſuppoſe that more of the ſame kind are in the bay.

A man of buſineſs of the city of Berne, in Switzerland, had, by his ſucceſſes in trade, acquired a conſiderable real and perſonal eſtate. Virtuouſly ſenſible of the true uſe of riches, and provident for the future welfare of his fellow citizens, he gave his whole eſtate (for he had no relations) to the Senate of Berne, in truſt for the people; that is to ſay, that they ſhould receive the produce of the eſtate, till it ſhould ariſe to the ſum of two thouſand pounds; that then they ſhould lay out theſe two thouſand pounds in building a townhouſe, according to a plan by him left; the lower ſtory whereof to conſiſt of large vaults, or repoſitories for wine; the ſtory above was directed to be formed into a piazza, for ſuch perſons as ſhould come to the market at Berne for diſpoſing of their goods, free from the injuries of the weather; that he willed, that a council chamber ſhould be erected for a committee of the ſenate to meet in from time to time, to adjuſt his accounts, and to direct ſuch things as might be neceſſary for the charity; and above the council chamber as many floors for granaries as could conveniently be raiſed, to depoſit a quantity of corn for the uſe of the people, whenever they ſhould have occaſion for it. And when this building ſhould have been erected, and the expence of it diſcharged, he willed, that the ſenate of Berne ſhould receive the produce of his eſtate, until the ſame ſhould amount to the ſum of two thouſand pounds, and when the price of corn ſhould be under the mean rate of the laſt ten years, one fourth part, they ſhould then lay out one thouſand pounds in corn, and ſtow it in the granaries; and the ſame in wine, when under one fourth of the mean rate of the laſt ten years; and he alſo directed that none of the ſaid corn or wine ſhould be ſold, until the price of corn or wine ſhould exceed at the common market, one fourth of the mean rate for the laſt ten years; and then every citizen of Bern ſhould demand daily (or proportionably weekly) as many pounds weight of wheat, and as many pints of wine, as he has mouths in his family to conſume, and no more; and that for the ſame, he ſhould pay ready money, after the mean rate that it has been at for the laſt ten years paſt, a due proportion being allowed for waſte, and that to be ſettled by the Senate; and that each houſeholder ſhould be ſo ſupplied as long as the price of either corn or wine ſhould continue above the rate of one fourth more than the mean rate; and whatſoever increaſe ſhould be made of the capital, it ſhould be laid out under the ſame reſtrictions, in adding to the ſtock of corn and wine, which (the Teſtator hoped) would, under the bleſſing of Heaven, in a certain time, reduce theſe two neceſſary articles of life to very near a fixed price.

INSTANCE OF UNCOMMON MODERATION.

The Earl of Caernarvon, in the reign of James the I. being at dinner one day at the houſe of his father-in-law, a phyſician, either belonging to, or of the acquaintance of the family, gave this noble earl the lie direct. The company preſent, appeared in the utmoſt aſtoniſhment at the impudence of this ſon of Eſculapius; but the earl very calmly replied, "I will take the lie, but I will never take phyſic of him: he may ſpeak what does not become him; I will not do what is unworthy of me!"

IMPROVEMENT.

A writer in the New England Palladium ſays: "The various improvements which have rapidly taken place in our country, during the laſt twenty-ſix years, are at once an evidence of the ability and patriotiſm of our citizens. A minature picture of this may be ſeen in the Maſſachuſetts Regiſter for the preſent year, which, among other inſtitutions of the uſeful kind in Maſſachuſetts and Maine, gives thirteen of the lucrative claſs, ſuch as Banks, Inſurance Companys, &c. thirty two corporations for bridges; eleven for locks and canals; ſeven to promote manufactures; ſix for the ſafety and convenience of navigation in harbours and rivers; ten for turnpikes; and a great number of aqueducts; three colleges; twenty one academies; two ſocieties for propagating the Goſpel; two for agriculture; eight for charity excluſive of more than fifty maſonic ſocieties; five for acquiring marine knowledge, and diffuſing their charity to decayed ſeamen; and ſeven for the purpoſes of education, humanity, and the arts and ſciences generally (excluſive of grammar Schools required by law in every town.)—Theſe excellent inſtitutions, except thoſe in the ſeveral towns, are incorporated by ſpecial acts, and moſt of them have accumulated property in lands, real eſtates, or the funds, which enable them to purſue the ends for which they aſſociated.—There are alſo many others of the ſame deſcription as thoſe above mentioned, which are not incorporated, ſuch as ſocieties for the purpoſes of piety, charity, education, manufactures, libraries, and various other public ſpirited enterprizes which have not as yet applied for acts of incorporation."

OUR laft accounts from the Turkifh frontiers ftate, that in Bofnia, the Turks are preparing for war, and covering their ftrong places with encampments, while at Conftantinople negociations for peace with France are carrying on under the mediation of a neighbouring friendly power. Several couriers with difpatches from Conftantinople for Belgrade, have been ftopped near Sophia, on account of the commotions occafioned by two Pachas in that neighbourhood, who are at war with one another. Orders have been fent from Conftantinople for reducing the Pacha of Jamina to obedience, but the troops difpatched againft him have not ventured to approach him, his forces being more numerous, and his party very ftrong in that diftrict.

FROM ST. DOMINGO.

From the 'Register of the Central Aflembly of St. Domingo.

This day, 17th Germinal, (6th April) 9th year of the French Republic, one and indivifible, at 8 o'clock in the morning, the citizen Touffaint Louverture, general in chief of the army of St. Domingo, accompanied by his aides decamp, the adjutant-general D'Ebecour, and general of brigade Age, chief of the Etat Major, repaired to the meeting-houfe of Lamadrelle, in Centre-ftreet, in order to inftall in their functions the feveral deputies of the departments of the colony who form the Central Aflembly, according to the proclamation of the general in chief of 26 Pluvoife.

The aflembly is compofed of citizen Bernard Borgelle and Etienne Viart, of the weftern department, Quhen Raimond, and Jean B. Lincour, from the northern department, P. A. Collet, and Gafton Nogeiée, from the fouthern department, Andre Munos and Charles Roxis, of Jamanna department.

On the arrival of the general, the members all rofe and addreffed him nearly in thefe words:

Citizen General—"The iflind of St. Domingo, which your valour, conftancy, and virtue, has united under the empire of the French Republic, that it immediately enjoy a conftitution fuited to its climate, foil, culture, trade, and to the manners of its inhabitants; preferving the enjoyments of folid liberty to the warriors who have conquered and defended it, and to the cultivators who improved it: In a word, freedom and happinefs to all its inhabitants. Such is the important work which the people have confided to us.

"The fundamental bafis which we are about to eftablifh, fhall remove all uneafinefs, fhall draw upon it mutual confidence, and will doubtlefs unite all hearts under the empire of law, and of the executive power of St. Domingo, who have no other with but the happinefs of their countrymen, that they may aflure themfelves of their own felicity.

"The central aflembly would have been intimidated at the talk they have before them, were they not perfuaded of the fentiments their own conficiences dictated to them, that to do well on this occafion, its members need only to conlult paft events to avoid their repetition, and that it is not only the perfection of doing well which we muft feek but to endeavor to come gradually to it without a blow.

"The central aflembly at this moment will proceed to fet down fome immutable and fundamental bafis of a conftitution for St. Domingo, and will prepare the way to compleat it as foon as the colony revives from the revolutionary ftruggle which threatened to annihilate it, had not Providence fent the Hero, whole deeds defeive that pofterity fhould acknowledge that his humanity and juftice defervedly entitle him to the name of faviour and reftorer of St. Domingo, which his fellow-citizens in this place, this day beftow on him."

The general in chief then replied with the legacity and feafibility peculiar to himfelf. Addreffing himfelf to the deputies, he faid—"Magiftrates, inveited with the confidence of the people of this unfortunate colony, you are going to devote all your energies to frame a plan of legiflation according to manners and climate under which we live; to the variety of our culture and our kind of trade; a plan of legiflation which may laftingly fix amongft us happinefs under the auguft empire of liberty. Let the moft perfect tranquillity always prefide at your deliberations; and above all not punifh any of the legiflative acts you may think proper to make before all your works have received the fanction which is irrevocably required by my proclamation.

"Magiftrates, fwear that you will conftantly and without partiality, fulfil the honorable functions which the voice of your fellow citizens have called you to."

Here the deputies rofe, and unanimoully faid, "We fwear it!" After which the general in chief faid, (in faluting the deputies) "Citizens, my heart gives me the aflurance, that I have fulfilled my talk, in holding St. Domingo, by every fcheme I could, from falling into precipices; but it belongs to you to fix its fate by good laws and wife regulations, ripened by leflons of experience, and the local knowledge of the colony."

After which he withdrew—the deputies accompanied him to the door, and returned to their feats.

LONDON, JUNE 19.

Extract of a letter from Hamburgh, dated June 9.

"A private letter from Copenhagen of the 5th inft. received here this afternoon, contains the following obfervations refpecting the Northern Alliance—More than half the duration of the armiftice between Denmark and England having already expired, the topic of general converfation, in all the higher circles here, is the probability of a renewal of hoftilities.—The feizure of our Weft India iflands, without any previous and formal declaration of war, and of the early period when they happened, has excited more indignation than furprife among us, and occafioned the fpecial miffion of our fecretary of ftate, Count Bernftorff, to the Court of Saint James's, where the fuccefs or failure of his negociations (which will be but of fhort duration) will decide the queftion of peace or war. Our court, and thofe of Sweden and Berlin, are ftrmly refolved not to give up the principles upon which the convention of the North is founded, though the convention itfelf may, under the prefent circumftances, be fufpended, or undergo certain abatements and modifications in its tenor. What proves this, is the folemn exchange of the ratifications fubfequent to the battle of Copenhagen; our embaffador extraordinary at Berlin, Rofencrantz, exchanged that of the Danifh cabinet with Count Haugwitz on the 30th ult.—Another circumftance which fhews that there are ferious apprehenfions of a continuance of the war is, that the works in our arfenals, dock-yards, and at the fortifications, are carried on almoft without intermiffion; and laft Wednefday, June 3, the King very unexpectedly, iffued a royal edict or fummons to his fubjects in general, to defend his kingdoms, and rendering all perfons from the age of 21 to 60, who do not belong to the embodied militia and volunteers liable to be called out in cafe of invafion."

DUBLIN, June 13.

The agreeable intelligence has reached us by letters of unqueftionable authority from London, that there is every reafon to hope a permanent and honorable peace will fpeedily take place between Great Britain and France.

The feveral Danifh veffels embargoed in Rings-end Dock, were on Tuefday evening releafed from arreft, and will clear out from the Cuftom houfe to fail with the firft fair wind.

GIBRALTAR, MAY 29.

On Monday laft, 68 prifoners of war belonging to various Englifh privateers, which had been captured and carried into Spanifh ports, arrived in the garrifon. They bring us the following information, the truth of which has fince been confirmed: "On the 7th inftant his Majefty's brig Speedy, commanded by Lord Cochrane, fell in with fome Spanifh veffels, under convoy of his Catholic Majefty's xebeck El Gamo, of 238 men, and 36 guns. The Speedy captured nine fhips of the convoy, and after having fent men on board each of the prizes, there remained only 25 men out of 70, her original complement; fhe carries fourteen four pounders. In this fituation fhe was chafed by the xebeck, until at laft the Speedy found it impoffible to efcape; but her brave commander was refolved fhe fhould not be a cheap conqueft. Accordingly a warm action commenced, which however did not laft long, as the xebeck, after having loft fome of her hands, furrendered to the Speedy, & was taken by her along with the other prizes and prifoners to Mahon harbour."

SALEM, July 30.

By Captain Crowninfhield, in 30 days from Algeziras, and 24 from Madeira, we are informed, that previous to his failing from the former place, he faw a letter from Genoa, dated June 17, to an American Captain at Algeziras, which mentioned that 5 American veffels had been captured by the Tripolitan cruizers, and that two American fhips were at Genoa, arming, determined to fight their way down the ftraights

Capt. C. faw at Algeziras, a Gibraltar paper containing intelligence from Egypt to June 4, which mentioned that the Englifh army ftill continued before Alexandria—that it had ftopped all communications from the country, and had cut off all fupplies of water by the aqueduct.

Capt. C. alfo faw at Algeziras, the Madrid Gazette, of June 10—15, containing the articles of a treaty between the Portugueſe and French and Spaniards, by which hoftilities were immediately to ceafe—the Portugueſe were to pay eight millions of dollars to the French, and two millions to the Spaniards—were to cede part of their territory to the latter—to have their fortreſſes garrifoned by French troops, and were to exclude the Englifh from all their ports. On the 3d of July, a floop arrived at Madeira, in three days from Lifbon, the maſter of which confirmed the foregoing, and added, that the court of Portugal had rejected the terms, fuppoſed in conſequence of an Engliſh fleet appearing off Lifbon, of 14 ſail of the line—the commander of which had ſent in word that he had come, by order of his government, to afford them protection. Hoſtilities immediately recommenced, and the Engliſh were quitting Lifbon as faſt as poſſible.

While Capt. C. was at Algeziras, two Algerine merchant ſhips were brought in by the Spaniſh gun-boats, coming from Gibraltar. The commander of one of them (an American) informed, that he momently expected a declaration of war from the Dey againſt the United States, as he was much exaſperated againſt them. In conſequence of theſe 'ſqually' appearances, a ſtore ſhip from the United States, deſtined for Algiers, ſtopped at Gibraltar, and intended waiting the appearance of the American ſquadron in the Mediterranean. The Captain alſo ſaid, that the Dey of Tunis had very modeſtly made a requeſt of the American Conſul, for 70 twenty-four pounders from his government—he did not poſitively demand them, but would receive them as a particular mark of our favor.

BRITISH WEST-INDIES.

Naſſau, July 24.

On Wedneſday this Iſland was viſited with a tremendous hurricane. Whether we judge by the effects produced, or by the obſervations of our ſenſes, during its period, we are equally led to pronounce it one of the ſevereſt that we have ever witneſſed in thoſe Iſlands.

On a former occaſion we expreſſed a hope, that we ſhould be exempted from gales of wind this ſeaſon—and, we gave as a reaſon for our opinion, the frequency of rains, accompanied with thunder and lightening.

It is worthy of remark, that for theſe ſome weeks there has been little or no rain—and tho' the weather has been very warm and cloſe, there has been an entire abſence of thunder and lightening. Theſe unuſual circumſtances, at this ſeaſon ſhould put us on our guard in future.

The wind, for a day or two previous to the hurricane, hung to the northward of eaſt, and on the morning of its happening, it blew very freſh in ſqualls from E. N. E. and kept backing to the northward, with encreaſing violence. About 12 P. M. cautious people began to be alarmed, and to prepare for what they expected would follow—but, in general, the earlineſs of the ſeaſon quieted the ſuſpicions of the inhabitants, as they knew it was unuſual for hurricanes to happen till about the equinox: doubt, however, was ſoon changed into certainty, and by two o'clock the gale had encreaſed to that degree, which we denominate a hurricane. The veſſels, pretty generally, began to drive from their moorings, notwithſtanding their maſts and yards were ſtruck, and all their anchors down, and every other precaution attended to. The harbour fortunately, was thinner of ſhipping than uſual; yet they drove againſt one another, and came in whole ſtrings to the ſhore. As the tide roſe, the hurricane increaſed in violence, and ſtill kept backing till it came about north. This very fortunately drove all the veſſels on the town ſide of the harbour, and prevented any from driving to ſea. By three o'clock there was ſcarcely a veſſel riding in the harbor. The Guineaman, prize to his Majeſty's ſhip Echo, that lay well up in the harbor, and on the Hogg-iſland ſide of it, parted her anchors, and drove towards the town. In her progreſs ſhe got upon the middle ground, and turned over on her beam ends, ſo that the ſeamen got on her ſide. The negroes, 250 in number, fell to leeward, in between decks, and were in imminent danger; but fortunately the veſſel went over the bank and righted, and at length drove on ſhore againſt Mr. Benjamin Lord's wharf which ſhe in part demoliſhed. The negroes and crew were happily all ſafe landed.

The wind, after three o'clock, began to haul to the eaſt-ward, but without any diminution of its violence: indeed we are rather of opinion that its violence was augmented. Objects at a ſmall diſtance from the ſhore were now inviſible, or indiſtinct, the ſpray riſing from the water in ſuch clouds, as to obſcure every thing that was near it. In faſt, the harbor reſembled three torrents, of different denſities, paſſing with inconceivable velocity. Firſt the water, from the accumulation at the eaſt end of the harbour, by being drove in from the bank, raiſed 6 feet above its common level, acquired an extremely rapid motion down the harbor. The foam & ſpray next, forming almoſt an opaque cloud, ſpun along with the ſwifteſt poſſible degree of viſible motion, and formed a ſtratum, as it were, of 20 or 30 feet deep: and over that the rain paſſed in a rarer medium, in a perfect horizontal direction; and appeared incapable of deſcending from its projectile velocity. By half paſt four the wind got round to the eaſt, and kept veering round with the ſun—a certain ſign that the gale would not continue long. Its violence however, as yet, was unabated. Providentially, before it acquired any ſoothing, the tide had fallen, and the veſſels having all been driven up at high water, none of them were blown off, in which caſe they muſt have gone to ſea, and probably would have been loſt, with thoſe in them.

About an hour before ſunſet the wind had ſhifted round to the ſouth or ſouth by weſt, and ſtill blew with great violence; but the town and harbor was ſo ſheltered by the hills that it was very little felt. By ſun-let it moderated; and by 8 or 9 at night there was nothing remained of it but a freſh gale.

We thank God, before we proceed to recapitulate the damages ſuſtained by the hurricane, that ſo few lives were loſt in the elemental ſtrife, and craft of matter. We have not heard but of two or three that were drowned, and none that loſt their lives on ſhore.

Of all the veſſels in the harbor, three only rode out the ſtorm, viz. the ſloop Primroſe, an American, and a Spaniſh veſſel near the eaſtern fort. Between Evan's hill, and the weſtern water battery, we counted 120 veſſels ſtranded, beſides which there were ſeveral ſunk, and others cruſhed to pieces, and laying under other veſſels that we could take no account of.

The moſt convincing proof of the violence of the wind, and perhaps the beſt criterion we can adduce, is, that the greater part of the veſſels had their maſts blown away—not cut, but blown away by the board. The prize Guineaman loſt all her's, and her bowſprit, by the ſheer force of the wind.

Several veſſels, we underſtand, are bilged; and others, from the extreme difficulty that would attend getting them off, are abandoned. In general, however, we are in hopes the ſtranded veſſels will be got aflloat without much difficulty or damage to their hulls.

On ſhore, in town, and its vicinity, the devaſtations were equally great: many valuable houſes have been blown down, and all the fences and trees in general laid level with the ground.—Nearly one half of Mr. Joſeph Hall's beautiful grove of cocoa nut trees were destroyed, by being broken off near the butt, one of which we measured and found it 7 feet 7 inches in circumference, just above the part where it was broken.

Mr. Ansel Ferguson's house, one of the largest in town, was blown down; and the roof, in falling down, had well nigh demolished Mr. Howe's house adjoining. Other new stone houses suffered considerably, from the mortar being in a moist state:—and a great many wooden houses fell, from the same cause, the stone under pinning not having time to cement.

The sea to the southward of fort Montague made a breach through the sand hills, and has filled the extensive valley to the westward of it many feet deep.

It also rose five feet over the new eastern causeway, and the road, to the foot of Evan's hill, which it has materially injured. The eastern parade and burying place was completely overflowed by the rising of the water in the harbor; and the sea passed in a torrent between the editor's house, in the white ground and the new ground, it then found its way in to the harbor, by passing over the causeway and the road by Captain Gibson's, where it has made a large gully, and would have completely destroyed it, had not the shifting of the wind occasioned the water to fall in the upper part of the harbor.

To attempt to make an accurate estimation of the damages by the inhabitants of Nassau and its vicinity, would be the height of presumption: for there is no person can say, exactly what his own loss amounts to. If we may be permitted, however, to hazard any opinion, it is, that the aggregate loss sustained from the late hurricane is not less than one hundred thousand pounds.

[The following is a summary statement of the vessels on shore:—British, 2 ships, 5 brigs, 9 schooners, 4 sloops.—American, 1 brig, 6 schooners, one sloop—Licensed vessels, 4 schooners, 1 selucca, 1 sloop.—Prizes, 1 Danish ship, 1 Spanish ship, 1 do. brig, 1 do. schooner, 1 Danish do. 3 Spanish do. 1 do. polacre, 1 do. selucca, and a number of small vessels.]

QUEBEC, AUG. 19.

Extract of a letter from Fredericton, N. B. dated August 5, 1801.

"The following information is contained in a London paper of the 17th June. That the northern confederacy was dissolved, and the vessels and property taken on both sides, returned—that the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia, dissatisfied with the Treaty of Luneville, were willing in conjunction with Austria, to act offensively towards France. That the King of Prussia had signified to the Court of Vienna, that he had taken possession of Hanover as a measure of precaution, but the cause now no longer existing, he would withdraw his troops—Portugal has been compelled by France to lay an embargo on all British vessels and property, in consequence of which Lisbon is blockaded by a British Squadron. Lord Keith has taken 20 sail of French vessels with troops bound to Egypt—the Convoy a 74 gun ship made her escape, & Ganthaume was seen off Sardinia returning with his squadron to Toulon.

General Hutchinson had another decisive engagement with Menou, or rather a series of successes, by means of which the French were so reduced that Menou had offered to capitulate—but General Hutchinson would grant him no terms whatever, and insisted on his surrendering at discretion.—Gen. Baird had sailed from Trincomalee for Suez on the 18 February last."

NIAGARA, SEPT. 5.

It is believed almost beyond a doubt that the Harlequin of Detroit, captain May, from Fort Erie to Detroit, was last week lost in a violent gale. The last account of her is by a vessel that passed her, the captain of which in vain advised capt. May to put about. Vessels later from Detroit, Presq'isle, &c. have discovered nothing of her.—The transported fur thief, Oliver Bartlett, was on board of the Harlequin.

ANECDOTE.

Frederick (late King of Prussia) was so remarkably fond of children, that he suffered the sons of the Prince Royal, now on the throne, to enter his appartment whenever they thought proper. One day, while writing in his closet, the eldest of these princes was playing at shuttle cock near him. The shuttlecock happening to fall upon the table at which the King sat, he threw it to the young prince, and continued to write. The shuttle-cock falling a second time, the King again threw it back, looking sternly at the child, who promised that no accident of the kind should happen in future; the shuttlecock, however, fell a third time, and even upon the paper upon which the King was writing. Frederick then took the shuttlecock and put it into his pocket. The little prince humbly asked pardon, and begged the king to return him his shuttlecock. The King refused. The prince redoubled his entreaties, but no attention was paid them: the young prince, at length, tired of begging advanced towards the King, put his two hands in his sides, and said, in a threatening tone, "Will your Majesty give me my shuttlecock? say yes or no." The King immediately burst into a fit of laughter, and taking the shuttlecock from his pocket, returned it to the prince, saying, "You are a brave boy, you will never suffer Silesia to be taken from you."

From a late London Paper.

THE NILE FROM CAIRO TO DAMIETTA,

Extract of a Letter.

On the 15th February I went from Damietta in a canjoi, or boat built for pleafure. A faithful Janiffary, and an Arabian fervant, accompanied me, all well armed; a very neceffary caution on the banks of the Damietta, where attacks are continual.

We left Boulac about one o'clock with a ferene fky, and a heat as temperate as one of the fineft days of our fpring. The inundation had been over about fix weeks, and the waters of the Nile infenfibly decreafed. The current being rather flow, and North wind blowing, the men were obliged to take to their oars. Wheat and barley began to ripen. The Indian millet was a foot high; and a third crop of lucern was fpringing. Cucumbers and water melons fpread their branches over the river banks, and beans were almoft ripe. The foliage of the trees was verdant, but differently tinctured, and the orange and citron were in flower. Such was was the afpect of the country on the 15th February.

WATERS OF THE NILE.

The wates of the Nile, lighter, fofter and more agreeable to the tafte than any I know, greatly promote the health of the inhabitants. All antiquity acknowledges their excellence, and the people drink them with a kind of avidity, without ever being injured by the quantity. Being lightly impregnated with nitre, they are only a gentle aperient to thofe who take them to excefs.

CLIMATE.

An ancient hiftorian fays, that the Egyptians are the moft healthy people on earth, which advantage they owe to the falubrity of the air, and temperature of the climate, which feldom varies. But Mr. Savary obferves, that there is an unhealthy feafon in Egypt. From February till the end of May, the fouth winds blow at intervals, and load the atmofphere with a fubtle duft (which makes breathing difficult), and drive before them pernicious exhalations. Some times the heat becomes infupportable, and the thermometer fuddenly rifes 12 degrees.—The inhabitants call this feafon Rhawin, fifty, becaufe thefe winds are moft felt for fifty days, between Eafter and Whitfuntide. It muft not, however, be fuppofed, that this wind, which in a few hours corrupts meat and animal fubftances, blows fifty days. Egypt would become a defart. It feldom blows three days together, & fometimes is only an impetuous whirlwind, which rapidly paffes, and injures only the traveller overtaken in the defarts. Thefe whirlwinds of fand have buried caravans and armies.

M. Savary maintains, in oppofition to Mr. Paw and other modern authors, that the plague is not a native diforder of Egypt, but is commonly brought from Smyrna and the Turkifh ports. It always ftops in the month of June, or thofe who catch it then are always cured. Excefs of heat and cold feems to be equally deftructive of this dreadful contagion; winter kills it at Conftantinople, and fummer in Egypt—it feldom reaches the polar circle, and never paffes the tropic.

The European ftands aghaft with fear at the calamities it produces in Grand Cairo. This city is computed to contain from eight to nine hundred thouland inhabitants. They are fo crouded that 200 citizens here occupy lefs fpace than 30 at Paris. The ftreets are very narrow, and always full of people, who croud and juftle each other; and the paffenger is fometimes obliged to wait feveral minutes before he can make his way. One perfon with the plague will communicate it to an hundred. The Mahometans die in their boufes, public fquares and ftreets, without one of them endeavouring to fave himfelf. The Europeans who fhut themfelves up, and avoid communication, alone efcape the general difaiter.

All do not die who attacked, but I have been aflured, that the plague fometimes carries off 300,000 people from Grand Cairo.

The Turks ufe no precautions to prevent the plague; they fay it is fate—nor is quarantine performed at one fingle port.

Up to the 19th of June laft, fifty two thoufand three hundred and feventy-nine women have been delivered fince the firft inftitution of the Lying in hofpital in London, in the year 1752, and the humane purpofes of it are now extended to the infant poor two years after birth, and to the diftreffed widows and wives of foldiers and failors in their country's fervice.

It has been computed that, among ten thoufand people, the average deaths will be one a day. If this computation be accurate, a perfon in common health has a daily rifk of dying, which compared to the chances of life, is in the fame proportion as an unit bears to the number nine thoufand nine hundred & ninety-nine. This rifk is feemingly fo fmall, that it commonly gives no alarm, and is fcarcely thought of; whereas, if the fame rifk were placed upon a different ground, fo as to be feen in another light, it would be generally alarming.

Suppofing, for inftance, that to-morrow morning a lottery were to be drawn of this kind. Nine thoufand nine hundred and ninety-nine white balls and one black ball fhould be throwo promifcuoufly into a box, and then ten thoufand people, you and I among the number, fhould each put in a hand and draw out a ball at random, and whoever chanced to draw the black ball fhould inevitably fuffer death within twenty-four hours; I fay, that if we knew that fuch a lottery were to be drawn to-morrow morning, and that we ourfelves muft take our chance in it, as aforementioned, it would doubtlefs produce in us fome ferious apprehenfions, and might probably interrupt our fleep to-night.

LONDON, JULY 7.

THE accounts from Conftantinople inform us, that the grand Vizier's army has engaged the French troops under Gen. Regnier, before Cairo, and obliged them to retire into that city with the lofs of fome pieces of cannon. The communication between Cairo and Alexandria is completely cut off, and the next accounts may be expected to bring the intelligence of the furrender of the capital of Egypt. Alexandria may hold out fome time longer; but, without the means of being fupplied either with men or proviſions, it muft ultimately fall.

The rumor of an action between Sir J. B. Warren and Gantheaume, in which the latter was beaten and loft 7 fhips, is repeated.

The account brought over by the mail, of the overtures made by General Menou for the evacuation of Egypt, is confirmed by private letters.

Letters have been received from Bilboa, dated as late as the 23d of June. By thefe we learn that the following particulars have reached that place of the conditions of peace between Spain and Portugal. Thirty thoufand Spanifh and ten thoufand French troops are to garrifon the fortified towns in Portugal. Some provinces in Portugal are alfo to be ceded to Spain.

Letters from Bruffels affert, that the French Government, in its correfpondence with the Engliſh miniſter, has demanded as the baſis of peace, the reſtoration of Minorca to Spain, as well as of all the Dutch colonies in the two Indies to the Batavian republic; but this baſis has been rejected.

JULY 8.

The accounts by the mails have for fome time paſt informed us of the active preparations carrying on againſt this country on the French and Flemiſh coaſts. The ſame policy that dictates to the military powers the keeping their armies on the full war eſtabliſhment, may have induced France to make theſe demonſtrations upon her coaſt. She may think that they will enable her to negociate with more effect. For our own parts, we certainly do conſider the relative ſituation of this country and France, at the preſent moment, to be ſuch as to juſtify our entertaining ſanguine hopes of a ſpeedy peace. The negociation between the two governments is known to have been carried on with great activity for ſome months paſt. In that time ſurely, many prominent parts muſt have been diſcuſſed, many difficulties muſt have been conceded. The negociation would long ſince have broken off, if the obſtacles to peace had been ſuch as not to be removed.

JULY 10.

Extract of a letter from an officer on board La Salamine, dated Conſtantinople, May 30, ſeven days later than Lord Elgin's diſpatches.

"We ſailed from Mahon on the 24th of March, with diſpatches for Egypt, and two days after we fell in with Sir J. B. Warren's ſquadron, off Sardinia, and joined him. Early next morning we ſaw and gave chace all day to Admiral Gantheaume's ſquadron of ſeven ſail, but loſt them at night. Continuing our courſe for Egypt, we arrived in Aboukir bay on the 22d of April, in company with Sir J. B. Warren. Here, after taking in water, we were ordered to carry diſpatches to Lord Elgin, who is the plaineſt man I ever ſaw—his lady equals him. I dined at his reſidence with the reſt of the Engliſh officers every day. The Turks are very attentive to the Engliſh, and the Grand Signior ſends preſents of mutton, fruit, wine, &c. every day to the ſhips. To-morrow we go to the great Moſque of St. Sophia. I ſend this by Mr. Mortier, Lord Elgin's ſecretary. Our army in Egypt is forming Alexandria. We expect to ſail for Egypt in about a week, and I ſuppoſe from thence to Mahon."

Gantheaume's ſquadron was laſt in the Streights of Meſſina. A more dangerous ſituation we cannot conceive, as it was conſequently between Scylla and Charibdis.

JULY 13.

It ſhould ſeem as if the Emperor and the Chief Conſul of France had made ſome new arrangements, calculated to remove the objections of Pruſſia and Ruſſia, in regard to the treaty of Luneville; and it is rumoured to be the intention of the cabinets of Vienna and Paris to relinquiſh the idea of indemnifying the Grand Duke of Tuſcany in Germany, and to eſtabliſh him in the Roman territories.

Downing-ſtreet, July 21.

A diſpatch, of which the following is a copy, has been this day received at the office of the Right Hon. Lord Hobart, one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State, from Lieut. Gen. the Honorable Sir J. H. Hutchinſon, K. B. commanding his Majeſty's forces in Egypt:

"Head quarters, camp near Alkam, June 1.

"My Lord,

"I have the honor to inform your Lordſhip, that the French abandoned the poſition of Al Aft on the 7th of May, which we occupied the ſame evening, and on the 9th we were advanced to Ramanich, where the enemy were poſted with upwards of three thouſand infantry and eight hundred cavalry. We at firſt imagined that they might have endeavored to have maintained that poſition, but our corps on the eaſtern bank of the Nile having got into their rear, took the fort of Ramanich in reverſe, which probably induced the enemy to retire in the night between the 9th and the 10th, leaving a garriſon in the fort which ſurrendered in the morning, amounting to 140 men, commanded by a chief de brigade: we alſo took the ſame day about fifty cavalry and three officers coming from Alexandria. As the enemy retired towards Cairo, it become neceſſary to follow them, in order to cover the army of the Grand Vizier, and to ſecure a junction with the expected reinforcements from India.

"Nothing happened of any importance until the 14th, when we fell in with a valuable convoy of germs on the Nile. They had come from Cairo down to the canal of Menouff, which joins the Damietta and Roſetta branches of the Nile. From this circumſtance they knew nothing of the retreat of General La Grange from Ramanich. About one hundred and fifty priſoners fell into our hands, and ſeveral heavy guns, ſome of them intended for the defence of Alexandria. The convoy itſelf was very valuable. We found on board all kinds of cloathing, wine, &c. and about five thouſand pounds in money.

"On the 17th, when encamped at Alkam, we were informed by the Arabs that a conſiderable body of French, coming from Alexandria, were advancing toward the Nile, near the ſpot where the b[illegible] of the captain pachs then were. The cavalry were immediately ordered out, under the command of Brigadier General Doyle, ſuppotted by his brigade of infantry. Col. Cavalier, who commanded the French convoy, as ſoon as he diſcovered the boats of the Captain Pacha, ſuſpected that our army muſt be near, and therefore retired into the deſert, where we followed him. The cavalry came up with him after a march of about three hours. A flag of truce was ſent into them by Major Wilſon, of the Hompſech, requiring them to ſurrender, on condition that their private property ſhould be reſpected, and that they ſhould be ſent home to France, by the firſt convenient opportunity.—With theſe terms they complied, and laid down their arms. They amounted in all to about ſix hundred men, infantry, cavalry and artillery, together with a conſiderable portion of the domeſtacy corps, one four pounder, and 550 camels. The priſoners taken are all Frenchmen, and of the beſt troops they had in Egypt.

"On the 17th of May, the enemy retired from the fort of Lifbet, on the Damietta branch, and formed a junction with about two hundred men which they had at Barios; this fort they alſo evacuated, and embarked on board five ſmall veſſels, four of which have been taken and carried into Aboukir bay; the fifth endeavored to eſcape towards Cyprus, but a Turkiſh frigate was left in chace of her, ſo that it is more than probable ſhe has ſhared the ſame fate. The garriſons of the two forts conſiſted of about 700 men, ſo that in all we have taken from the 9th to the 20th amounts to near 1600 men, which makes a conſiderable diminution of the enemy's force in this country.

"The French made a moſt extraordinary rapid march from Ramanich to Cizan, where they arrived on the 13th, and croſſed the river Boulac. On the 15th they marched forward to attack the Grand Vizier's army. His highneſs anticipated their intention, and made a forward movement with a conſiderable body of cavalry on the night between the 15th and 16th. The armies remained for ſome hours in the preſence of each other, when the Ottoman troops attacked at about 8 o'clock in the morning, and after an action of about ſeven hours, the French retired, having loſt between three and four hundred men killed and wounded. They were nearly the ſame people who had retreated from Ramanich, and were about 4000 or 4500 men.

"I congratulate your Lordſhip on the event of this very important action; I have alſo much pleaſure in informing you, that the Mamelukes, under the orders of Otman Bey (ſucceſſor of Murad Bey) have joined us to the amount of about fifteen hundred cavalry, inferior certainly to none in the world. I am ſanguine enough to hope that the moſt ſerious good effects will ariſe from this junction, as they have a moſt intimate knowledge of the country, and the greateſt influence among the inhabitants.

"I incloſe you the capitulation of the fort of Ramanich, and alſo a return of the killed and wounded on the 9th of May, which I rejoice has been ſo very inconſiderable.

"J. H. HUTCHINSON,

The Rt. Hon. Lord Hobart."

The foreign wheat and flour which will be imported into Great Britain, from Sept. 1800 to Sept. 1801, will coſt this country ten millions ſterling, excluſive of bounty.

JULY 21.

A miniſterial paper ſays, that the diſgrace of Talleyrand Perigord is not only ſerious and definitive, but the cauſe of it was his having concealed from Buonaparte ſome parts of Lord Hawkeſbury's correſpondence. It is not probable that Talleyrand would venture to commit ſuch a fraud with ſuch a man as Buonaparte. Beſides, if the miniſter of foreign affairs is diſmiſſed, how happens it that a perſon of his own appointment, one of his own clerks, in his temporary ſucceſſor?

A private letter lately received from Bombay, ſays, a very conſiderable trade is now carried on with the kingdom of Siam. The cotton produced at this place is found to be of an excellent quality. It is very remarkable that the women are the only merchants in buying goods, the men being generally maintained by the induſtry of their wives.

It is confidently reported in the miniſterial circles, that the negociations between this country and France will ſoon be brought to a concluſion. The conferences between Lord Hawkeſbury and M. Otto have been more frequent during the laſt week, than at any other period ſince the opening of communication between the two governments.

In the courſe of the laſt fifteen years, the ſphere of that great republic of Europe, within which the balance of power acts, has been, by the natural courſe of events, conſiderably enlarged. Ruſsia had never before so much influence on the affairs of the south of Europe. The Turks never before found their interest so deeply concerned in the transactions of the western states of Christendom. Even the states of Barbary begin to draw more than ever into the vortex of European politics. Not only Malta but Egypt will be henceforth virtually transported into Europe.

In consequence of the mediation of the Danish charge d'affairs, the grand signior has consented to an exchange of prisoners between France and Turkey, including the respective embassies.

The constitution of the empire has now continued unaltered and unimpaired through a period of nine hundred years, counting from the extinction of the race of Charlemange and the election of Conrad of Franconia. This duration is not to be paralleled in history, and appears at first sight totally incompatible with so complex a form of government: it is at length about to undergo some considerable changes.

NEW-YORK, AUG. 26.

The polacre Diana, arrived here yesterday from Messina, was captured by two British cruizers and carried into Gibraltar, where she was immediately released. When in sight of Sardinia she met with 22 British transports, and one frigate, bound to Egypt with troops.

Extract of a letter from St. Pierres (Martinique) dated Aug. 5, received by a merchant in this city.

There are official accounts in town of the French having landed 400 men in Dominique, from Guadaloupe. They have met with a repulse from the militia, and it is expected they will all be taken prisoners.

September 3.

Gibraltar, July 17.

In our former Chronicle we stated the arrival at Algeziras of the Spanish squadron intended to act in conjunction with the French, and our readers will recollect we then observed, that "their trifling themselves out of port, is generally the prelude to a British victory." And we have now the satisfaction of announcing the accomplishment of this prediction.

It was upon Sunday the 12th of July at noon, that we saw the combined squadron get under sail. The side of this mountain was covered with spectators of this formidable squadron, as it advanced in battle array, through the Bay, towards the streights. A sudden murmur of applause amongst the crowd directed every one's eyes towards the New Mole, where the five English ships under Sir James Saumarez, the Hannes frigate and Calpe Hoop were spreading their sails, and in motion to the encounter of this greatly superior force.

As the night closed upon us, we could just discern the enemy's fleet steering towards the African shore, and the English bearing down upon them, when both fleets disappeared from our view.

The heavy cannonade and explosions were however heard distinctly during the night, and occasioned no small anxiety, till the return of the Admiral with his prize, a Spanish 74 gun ship, bearing a French Commodore's broad pendant.

[We much regret, that the Supplement to the Gibraltar Chronicle of the 17th July, containing the particulars of this combat, we have not been able to obtain. In addition to the above, Capt Wyeth informs us, that he saw on the morning after the battle (the 18th) two Spanish ships blow up, supposed to be two deckers, each having on board 1040 men.]

III. And be it further enacted by the authority aforeſaid, That all ſuch orders, rules, and regulations ſhall be publiſhed by cauſing a copy of them to be affixed in the moſt public place in every Townſhip in the ſaid Diſtrict, and at the doors of the Church and Court Houſe of the ſaid Town of Kingſton, and that ſuch orders, rules and regulations ſhall not be in force until three weeks after ſuch publication.

A BILL to ratify and confirm certain Proviſional Articles of Agreement entered into by the reſpective Commiſſioners of this Province and of Lower Canada, at Quebec, on the ſecond day of February, one thouſand eight hundred and one, relative to Duties and for carrying the ſame into effect, and alſo to continue an Act paſſed in the thirty-ninth year of his Majeſty's reign.

[July 9th, 1801.]

MOST GRACIOUS SOVEREIGN,

WHEREAS articles of Proviſional Agreement were made and entered into at Quebec on the ſecond day of February in the forty firſt year of Your Majeſty's reign by the Commiſſioners nominated and appointed on behalf of the Province of Upper Canada by his Excellency Peter Hunter, Eſquire, Lieutenant Governor of the ſaid Province, by commiſſion bearing date the twenty-third day of July, in the fortieth year of Your Majeſty's reign, in purſuance of and under the authority of an Act paſſed in the thirty-ſixth year of your Majeſty's reign entitled, "an Act to authorize the Lieutenant Governor to nominate and appoint Commiſſioners for the purpoſes therein mentioned," and the Commiſſioners nominated and appointed on behalf of the Province of Lower Canada, by an Act of the Provincial Parliament thereof, paſſed in the fortieth year of Your Majeſty's reign, entitled "an Act for appointing Commiſſioners to treat with Commiſſioners appointed, or to be appointed by the Province of Upper Canada, for the purpoſes therein mentioned," which articles are as follows:

ARTICLE I. The ſaid Commiſſioners having met and communicated to each other their reſpective powers and authorities, and having taken into conſideration, and maturely deliberated upon the objects of their appointment, have unanimouſly agreed, that as an agreement entered into on the twenty-eighth day of January, one thouſand ſeven hundred and ninety-ſeven, and another agreement entered into on the eleventh day of February, one thouſand ſeven hundred and ninety-eight, between the Commiſſioners of Upper and Lower Canada for the purpoſes therein mentioned, will both expire and be at an end on the firſt day of March of this preſent year, which agreement of the twenty-eighth day of January, one thouſand ſeven hundred and ninety-ſeven, it is at preſent expedient to continue.

ARTICLE II. It is therefore agreed by and between the before mentioned Commiſſioners on the part of Lower Canada, and the before mentioned Commiſſioners on the part of Upper Canada, that the before mentioned agreement of the twenty-eighth day of January, one thouſand ſeven hundred and ninety ſeven be, and the ſame is hereby continued, and all and every article and ſtipulation ſhall be, and is hereby declared to be binding and obligatory on the reſpective Legiſlatures of Upper and Lower Canada, as if the ſame had been inſerted verbatim in this agreement.

ARTICLE III. It is alſo agreed between the Commiſſioners aforeſaid, that as the Province of Upper Canada is not entitled to a return of duties on goods paſſing into Upper Canada by the Coteau du Lac, the property of perſons reſiding in Lower Canada, and trading the ſame without the limits of Upper Canada, but as the amount of ſuch return of duties is not at preſent an object of importance, and is in a great meaſure compenſated by the drawbacks which ought to be allowed to Upper Canada upon goods paſſing into that province by the Ottawa River, the property of perſons reſiding in the ſame.

ARTICLE IV. It is therefore further agreed, that for the term of this agreement the Province of Lower Canada and the Province of Upper Canada do reſpectively relinquiſh any claim to the ſaid return of duties and drawbacks.

The London Gazette Extraordinary, June 29.

DOWNING STREET, June 29.

A Diſpatch, of which the following is a copy, has been this day received from the Earl of Elgin, by the Right Hon. Lord Hawkeſbury, his Majeſty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs.

Copy of a letter from Lord Elgin to Lord Hawkeſbury, dated Conſtantinople, May 23, 1801.

MY LORD,

An officer is arrived from the Captain Paſha, with the intelligence that Gen. Hutchinſon had marched from Roſetta on the 8th inſt. with 4000 Britiſh troops, in company with a corps of Turks of equal force, under the command of the Captain Paſha, and on the 9th attacked the French near Rahmanie. The enemy were driven in; and in the courſe of the night they retired towards Cairo, having left a ſmall garriſon in the entrenchments of Rahmanie. On the 10th the fort ſurrendered, and the combined force then proceeded towards Cairo, having concerted their movements with the Grand Vizier, who was at El Hanka, a poſition four leagues diſtant from Cairo, in a North Eaſt direction. Our loſs at Rahmanie is ſtated not to exceed thirty men.

The Turkiſh officer reports that a reinforcement of 3000 Britiſh troops had arrived at Aboukir about the 6th of May. I have the honor, &c.

(Signed) ELGIN.

Rt. Hon. Lord Hawkeſbury, &c.

TUESDAY, June 30—Two o'clock.

Yeſterday morning diſpatches were received at Lord Hawkeſbury's office from Lord Elgin, at Conſtantinople, the contents of which were publiſhed in the evening, in a Gazette Extraordinary, inſerted in our paper of to day. The ſtatement is rather brief, but at the ſame time ſatisfactory in many points, as it completely contradicts all the idle rumours in the French papers, relative to the pretended defeat of our troops in Egypt.

As Rahmanie is little inferior, in point of ſtrength and ſituation, to Alexandria, it was very natural to expect that Menou would defend it to the laſt and of courſe that the conteſt in that point would be extremely bloody. We are happy, however, to learn that our loſs in the attack on that occaſion did not exceed 30 men. The well-known gallantry of our troops, and the rapidity of their movements, inſpire the beſt founded hopes, that the next diſpatches will bring an account of the entire reduction of Egypt. The citadel of Cairo can oppoſe but a feeble reſiſtance to the combined armies.

It cannot be ſuppoſed that Alexandria will hold out long, defended by the remnant of a flying army, worn out with fatigue, diſpirited by defeats, enfeebled by ſickneſs, and cut off from all hopes of ſuccours in men from home and proviſions from Cairo—ſo that it is of little conſequence whether Murad Bey has joined General Hutchinſon or not.

The Gazette ſtates that a reinforcement of 3000 Britiſh troops had arrived at Aboukir about the 6th of May. Lord Keith was at anchor off Alexandria when theſe diſpatches were ſent off.

The following is the Capitulation of the Fort of Rhamanick, May 10, 1801.

The garriſon of the Fort of Rhamanich will ſurrender to the Ottoman and Britiſh forces on the following conditions:

1. The officers ſhall wear their ſwords and retain their effects. They, as well as the ſoldiers, ſhall be priſoners of war. Granted.

2. The garriſon ſhall be ſent back to France, and ſhall not ſerve againſt the King of Britain, nor againſt his allies, until exchanged conformably to the cartel between the two nations. Granted.

3. The wounded are placed under the protection of Britiſh humanity.

LA CROIX, Chief de Brigade.
CAPTAIN PACHA,
J. HELY HUTCHINSON,
Maj. Gen. commanding in chief.
JAMES STEPHENSON,
Captain, Royal Navy.

P. S. A letter has juſt reached me from Lieut. Col. Murray, dated Coſſire, the 14th of May, informing me of his arrival with the firſt diviſion of the Bombay detachment of troops, and that he was in daily expectation of General Baird with the remainder.

The long prevailing weſterly winds have prevented any direct intelligence from Egypt, arriving at the rock—but rumours from all quarters concur in ſtating that Menou, and the French army in Egypt have capitulated to the Engliſh. They alſo ſay, that the other part of Admiral Gantheaume's ſquadron has fallen in with Sir J. B. Warren, and has been roughly handled. A letter from Madrid affirms, that the Conquerors of Portugal are determined upon aſſaulting Gibraltar.

LONDON, July 21.

According to the Hamburgh mail, which has arrived this day, Gantheaume ſailed from Sicily for Egypt in the end of May or beginning of June, intending to land his troops in Syria; and Admiral Warren had arrived at Corfu, and ſailed thence on the 7th of June, in purſuit of the French fleet. It is poſſible, and that is all we can ſay from theſe ſtatements, that the latter if purſued might run into ſome creek on the African ſhore and land the troops; but if Derna be the quarters, there is little likelihood of their ever reaching Egypt.

AUGSBOURG, JULY 17.

Letters from Conſtantinople dated May 27th arrived at Vienna ſtate, that Admiral Warren had taken a French corvette, called the Pearl, ſent by Admiral Gantheaume to Alexandria, with diſpatches, in which he intreated Menou to remain in Alexandria, as he would ſoon receive ſuccour. The diſpatches had been thrown into the ſea, but were picked up by the Engliſh, who by theſe means became acquainted with the plan of the French.

VIENNA, JULY 4.

Yeſterday a courier arrived at Lord Minto's, from Conſtantinople, who purſued his way to London almoſt immediately. He is bearer of the important intelligence that Cairo had ſurrendered on capitulation to the Britiſh and Turks. Alexandria was on the point of following the example of Cairo.

July 11.

Talks of an Engagement between Warren and Gantheaume have been circulated here theſe two days. It is reported they met off ſouthern Calabria, ſome diſtance from Cape Sportivento; and that the French ſtruck to ſuperior force. This news has been brought by a maſter of a veſſel arrived at Terraneuvo, a port of Sicily. He reports, that at the time of his departure from Malta, he ſaw the Engliſh fleet of 13 ſail, arrive there, bringing in the enemy's ſhips, on which the Britiſh flag was flying. He had offered to make oath to the Governor of the truth of the intelligence, and to undergo the moſt rigorous puniſhment ſhould it be found falſe.

GLASGOW, JULY 24.

The letters from the North have bro't us the terms of the Convention between this country and Ruſſia. It conſiſts of ten articles. It re-eſtabliſhes peace and friendſhip between the two powers; provides that the contracting parties ſhall abide by their ordinances, prohibiting all commerce in commodities deemed to be contraband of war; declares that the ſhips of neutrals ſhall ſail without moleſtation to the coaſts & harbours of the belligerents; the effects on board thoſe ſhips, with the exception of goods deemed to be contraband of war, ſhall be free. The right to ſearch is confined to ſhips of war.

Paragraphs in the ſeveral Paris Journals ſay, that accounts have been received from Venice, Naples and Leghorn, ſtating that Gantherume had ſafely landed the troops on board his fleet, to the number of 8000 at Derna, in the kingdom of Barca, to the eaſt of Tripoli, 5 days journey from Alexandria. If there be no more truth in the former part of this ſtatement, than in the concluding words, it is unworthy of any kind of credit. Derna lies about 8 degrees of longitude to the weſt of Alexandria, or upwards of 500 miles in a ſtrait line! and almoſt all the intervening ſpace is quite an impaſſable deſert.

Accounts from Naples and Ancona mention, that a very bloody action had taken place between the Engliſh and Gontheaume, near the Borletts. Subsequent accounts are totally silent on the subject.

An embargo has been laid upon the vessels in Calais harbor, but this has not prevented dispatches, sent there on Friday from being received; others, just then arrived from Paris, were sent to this country by the same vessel.

NEW YORK, August 31.

By the arrival yesterday of the ship Huron, capt. Hill, in 34 days from Greenock, we have received Glasgow papers to the 25th of July, containing London dates to the 22d, 7 days later than our former accounts.—By which we are enabled to state, that accounts from Constantinople mention, that the Captain Pasha had defeated a French corps of cavalry of 300 men, which was going to succour the post at Rhamanich. The army of Gen. Baird is stated to amount to five thousand men, and to have joined the Grand Vizier. The Captain Pasha has seventeen thousand under him, the Grand Vizier thirty five thousand.—Late accounts from Egypt mention, that Cairo had surrendered to the British and Turks, and of the probable capitulation of Alexandria, which, though well supplied with provisions, was in want of water.—Several Notes have been presented to the French government by the Russian minister at Paris, wherein the Emperor requires the restoration of the King of Sardinia, and complete maintenance of the King of Naples in his rights.—A convention has been agreed to between the English and Russians—the Swedes and Danes have been invited to accede to it.—Buonaparte has recovered from his illness.—Lord St. Helens has been created a Baron of the United kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

ALBANY, Sept. 8.

Verbal information, by gentlemen arrived on board the Maryland state, that a general peace was on the taps at Paris, and sanguine expectations were entertained that the grand event or its precursor, a general truce would be proclaimed on the 14th July, the political birth day of France—(the 14th of July has, however, passed without any such event taking place. Say subsequent accounts.)—That the destiny of Portugal is finally sealed; the French have taken her European possessions under their protection, and the British have sent out a squadron to take the Brazils under theirs.—Marseilles is again blockaded by the British.

(Concluded from our last.)

ARTICLE V. And it being ascertained and known, that the States of America have proceeded to levy the duties upon articles passing from Upper Canada into their territories, which by treaty with Great Britain they are authorized to do; The Commissioners of Upper Canada do stipulate expressly that the sixth article of the agreement hereby continued shall be carried into effect with all possible diligence.

ARTICLE VI. And finally, this agreement shall commence on the first day of March now next ensuing, and shall be binding and continue in full force and effect until the first day of March, which will be in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and five and no longer.

May it therefore please Your most excellent Majesty that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of the Province of Upper Canada, constituted and assembled by virtue of, and under the authority of an Act passed in the Parliament of Great Britain, entitled "an Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the fourteenth year of his Majesty's reign, entitled "an Act for making more effectual provision for the Government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further provision for the Government of the said Province," and by the authority of the same, That all and every part of the provisional agreement herein before particularly mentioned, and every clause thereof be ratified, approved, and confirmed, and the said provisional agreement and every clause thereof is ratified, approved, and confirmed accordingly.

II. And whereas an Act was passed in the thirty ninth year of Your Majesty's reign, entitled "an Act to ratify, approve, and confirm the provisional agreement made and entered into by Commissioners on the part of this Province and Commissioners on the part of the Province of Lower Canada," which Act was at an end on the first day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and one.

And whereas it is expedient and necessary to renew and continue the said Act (except so much of the same as relates to the suspending the operation of the sixth article of the therein recited provisional agreement.) Be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all and every clause (excepting as is herein before mentioned) obligation, penalty, fine, matter and thing, in the said Act contained be renewed, continued, and enacted, and the same is hereby renewed, continued, and enacted accordingly, and all and every clause, obligation, penalty, fine, matter and thing therein contained, (except as is herein before mentioned) shall have the same effect, force and validity for, and during the term of this Act, as if the same were herein particularly repeated and set forth.

III. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the Provincial Treasurer shall, and he is hereby authorized and required to receive the monies which now are, or hereafter may become due and payable from the said Province of Lower Canada to this Province, pursuant and by virtue of this Act, and of the articles of provisional agreement herein before ratified and confirmed, in the same manner as he is directed by the above recited Act hereby renewed and continued as aforesaid.

IV. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That this Act shall have force and effect from the first day of March, one thousand eight hundred and one, and shall continue to be in force to the first day of March, one thousand eight hundred and five and no longer.

LONDON, June 27.

Accounts from the Channel fleet, received at Plymouth on Monday afternoon, state, that the combined fleet, consisting of twenty one sail of the line, which were distinctly counted, was at single anchor in the outer road of Brest.

A body of 5000 infantry have either sailed, or are about to sail, on a secret expedition from the Cove of Cork. This does not argue much apprehension on the part of government for the security of Ireland.

The Chouan Chief, Videlot, the friend and confidant of Georges, was apprehended on the 16th inst. in a concealed apartment of Morbihan. His retreat was discovered with the utmost difficulty, tho' so large as to contain 200 men with ease. A casket, filled with important papers, was found in it. Videlot had 24 double louis and nine guineas, which were taken from him, and distributed among the party who seized him. Two ladies of the name of Penvern, to whom the castle belongs, are also taken into custody, on a charge of assisting the internal enemies of the Republic.

The prorogation of Parliament is now certainly fixed to take place, by commission, on Thursday next. The House of Commons is to adjourn on Monday next, in order to give time to the House of Peers to go thro' the penal business.

Many of the French papers endeavour to represent the matter of the German indemnities as of little moment; they cannot, however, conceal the anxiety with which this subject is viewed by all parties. The primary object of Duroc's mission to Petersburgh, is, it is said, to obtain the Emperor's consent to the French plan of indemnification. "The Adriatick," says the Moniteur, "is covered with British vessels. The commandant of their flotillas, having entered Trieste, issued a notification that all the ports in that sea, where there were French troops, were in a state of blockade, and that all ships bound to those ports would be deemed lawful prizes."

The Pope has sent his Secretary to Paris to soothe Buonaparte, but it is tho't this condescension will have little effect.

Saturday, nearly a thousand letters from Minorca and Gibraltar, brot to Plymouth by the Santa Margarita, of 36 guns, were delivered from the post office. A letter from Port Mahon mentions, that the expedition sitting out at Carthagena was supposed to be destined against that island, some correspondence between a French emissary and the governor of Majorca, expressive of a project, having been intercepted. The garison was healthy, and fully competent to the defence of that place.

The French have imposed a contribution of thirty millions of crowns on the estates of the Pope, for the support of the French army.

In Spain, a contribution has been recently levied on the clergy, of five millions of piastres.

A letter from on board L'immortalite, dated off Brest, June 16, states as follows:—

"We have been off this place near six weeks, and for the greater part of the time at anchor, within about six miles from the entrance of the harbor. When we got under way to look in they gave us plenty of shot and shells. We had a bit of a skrimish the other day, singly and alone, with two of their frigates, La Furieuse and Syren, the first of superior force, and the latter very little inferior.—They were close under their batteries, but we cut up their rigging pretty well, notwithstanding; and I make no doubt could we have got them from their shelter, we should have at least taken one, if not both. We have not the least expectation of being relieved, or going into port, till their fleet come out, if we are supplied with beer, water, &c. from Plymouth.

A letter from Vienna of the 4th inst. by the mail, brings pleasing intelligence from Egypt, but we are a little apprehensive that the whole may turn out to be only an exaggerated account of the news brought by the last messenger, and published five days ago—"Yesterday, (says the letter) a courier arrived at Lord Minto's from Constantinople, who pursued his way to London almost immediately. He is the bearer of the important intelligence that Cairo has surrendered, on capitulation to the English and Turks.—Alexandria was on the point of following the example of Cairo. The garrison of that place is well supplied with provisions, but is in want of water, and the Turks were already in possession of the outer harbour; and according to the statements of the above courier, the place was so narrowly blockaded, that it could not possibly hold out long."

A letter from Copenhagen, July 11 says, "Sweden has already, it is said acceded to the convention concluded between Russia and England. Denmark has, as yet, come to no resolution on the subject."

PORTSMOUTH, JUNE 30.

The following ships, bound on a secret expedition, returned from Cowes, with the troops, and last night sailed from Spithead for the place of destination:—Argo of 44 guns, capt. Bowen; Carysfort of 32, Drummond; Majestic of 74, Gould; Alexander of 74, Dixon; Champion of 64, Stuart; Warrior of 74, Tyler, and Cyrus of 18. These ships are furnished with flat bottom and gun boats, and it is generally believed they are to take possession of the Brazils.

ATTACK ON BOULOGNE.

Dover, Thursday, 1 P. M.

You ask me for the particulars of the attack made on the enemy's ships at Boulogne on Tuesday. I perceive your newspapers are very inaccurate. On the following account you may rely, as I was an eye witness.

On Saturday Lord Nelson sailed from Deal, and the same evening took command of the squadron of small ships of war cruising off Boulogne, under the command of Capt. Somerville of the Eugenia. His Lordship ordered all ships to join and several did on Sunday, 'till at last they amounted to 37 sail, including gun boats, brigs, &c. His Lordship brought them all up before Boulogne, and made a signal for them to divide into two different squadrons; one squadron to be to windward.

On Monday Lord Nelson stood close into Boulogne with some of the bomb-vessels, and threw several bombs to try how they would reach the enemy. Finding they reached the shore, he made signal of recall, and they anchored about four miles from the land.

The shore at Boulogne stretches nearly E. & and West. Towards the East a point of land runs out forming a bay. The mouth of the harbor is in the middle of this, and looks out to the north. The enemy's vessels, consisting of six brigs, 2 schooners, and about 20 or 30 gun-boats were arranged in a line along the beach, not half a mile from shore, one half east, but the largest half west of the harbor's mouth, in front of which was the largest brig. On the beach W. of the harbor was a strong battery, which kept up a heavy fire. The battery on the pier head, E. of the harbor, did not fire much, and tried a shell now & then.

On Monday night Ld. Nelson went under cover of the dark, in a 4-oared gig, a long swift boat, and reconnoitered the enemy's position, and found it as above described. He then issued orders to begin the attack at break of day next morning. At 4 o'clock, he himself stationed the bombs, 5 in number, in an oblique line, stretching from the W. end of the enemy's line. They came to anchor, and began throwing bombs about 5 o'clock; the other ships of war being stationed under weigh, in another line, behind the bombs ready to render assistance. His Lordship's own flag was placed in front of the harbor, having our two lines, one of bombs, another of small ships of war, stretching from his right; behind these lines was the Leyden, of 64 guns. His Lordship's intention was to attack the enemy's vessels with bombs only, as they reach much farther than shot, and would prove effectual, while the enemy's shot could not reach us. At six o'clock, however, it being then high water, Ld. Nelson, desirous of convincing the enemy what a heavy fire he could play upon them, and, at the same time, to induce them to discloſe their strongeſt points, it being difficult to discover their batteries, the cliffs being of a brown clay, sent our ships of war very close to the shore in the face of the batteries, where they first fired one broad side, and tacking round, fired the other; then sailing away loaded for another such attack.

This produced a most tremendous fire on both sides, and it was this that first gave the town of Dover notice of the engagement. When the water fell it was necessarily given over; but it had the desired effect of convincing Ld. Nelson that he had guessed the nature of the enemy's strength, and that he had judiciously placed the gun boats. While the ships were firing their broad sides as above mentioned, at 7 in the morning, his Lordship was in his barge, moving about, making observations & minutes, which may be useful in a future attack. He visited the bombs separately, and rowed along the whole line, amidst a shower of shot and shells from the enemy, attended by the King and Queen cutters; and with the cool and intrepid conduct displayed in all the actions of this great man, giving his orders and animating by his example. The French batteries on each side the harbor could only fire straight out, or nearly so, while our bombs were stationed so much to their left that the batteries could not bear upon them. Add to this, that the bombs, being placed to the westward, obliquely from the enemy's line of vessels, every bomb thrown had the advantage of raking the whole line, as it were. For instance, if a bomb were thrown for the farthest French ship, and fell short, it had a great chance of hitting one in the line nearer; or if thrown for the nearest, and going beyond her, it had a chance of hitting another farther off. The French soon discovered the inutility of their batteries, & found that Ld. Nelson had not been so polite as to attack them in the manner they expected. They therefore set a number of men on to throw up works and batteries on the hill in the eastern turn of the bay, which flanks the whole line of coast. This covered the mouth of the harbor tolerably well; but it could not reach our bombs, which were at the extremity of the westward, and the enemy threw but a few shells from it. The disposition and object of our vessels were to force all the French ships to retreat towards the mouth of the harbor, that having them in a cluster, their destruction might effectually be made at night. In this we partly succeeded. The enemy's fire continued very heavy till about one o'clock, when it wholly ceased from the hills and batteries, seeing that it was utterly ineffectual; but our fire of bombs continued with unabated vigor. One vessel threw 200 bombs. At this time three of the enemy's vessels had been sunk and bilged. In the course of the evening 2 others shared the same fate, and five others were rendered useless, but were drawn by ropes on the shore. The fire of the English slackened during the evening. The enemy sometimes fired a shot or threw a shell. Towards dusk the fire was renewed with a little warmth, but without much meaning. It was Ld. Nelson's intention in the dark, to have sent three bombs close upon the enemy, each bomb towed by ten boats; the bombs were to attack the enemy in a way that could not fail of annihilating them, and the boats were to be ready to row the bombs away in case of accident. Ld. Nelson likewise ordered all ships to keep as close as possible, to render them necessary assistance; but the wind shifting, the attack became impracticable without the utmost danger; and our whole fleet was obliged to haul off without making the attempt. Ld. Nelson will, however, soon give the navy another opportunity of distinguishing themselves, as he intends to bring up flat-bottomed boats to the attack, at the time the bombs are throwing shells.—Yesterday our fleet stood off from Boulogne; and the various ships have this day been dispersed, providing themselves with ammunition, &c. Some flat-bottomed boats have sailed from the Downs. Part of our fleet is now near Boulogne, and it is probable, the attack may be renewed this night.—The squadron at Boulogne, is again under command of Capt. Somerville, of the Eugenia.—Ld. Nelson is making the necessary preparations.

Our loss was on board the Sulphur, one engineer wounded, and one seaman lost an arm. Some of the standing rigging was also cut. This was all our loss. A considerable number of Frenchmen went to the bottom in the first three ships that sunk.

As the gun boats raked the shore, little or no damage was done to the town of Boulogne. It was proposed to bombard it; but Lord Nelson said he would not make war on women and children; one or two bombs struck the pier head and split the stones, making them fly. This did some damage, and frightened the inhabitants, as trunks and furniture were seen removing. Most of the inhabitants could be seen on the heights eastward of the town, having left their houses. It is said that a steeple was a little damaged, but not knocked down; neither was the town on fire as was reported in the London paper. There are about 50 tents on the heights west of the town in view; but it is confidently said there is a large encampment behind the hills on the east side. Numbers of troops have been sent into Boulogne since the attack.

Mr. Stowe, of the Custom house, Mr. Fector and others, went out during the action, and sent a line to Lord Nelson with the extraordinary Gazette, of Sir James Saumarez's triumph. His Lordship was delighted, and invited the gentlemen, tho' strangers on board his ship to dinner. They dined as comfortably as if it had been a pleasure party. An excellent dinner was served up and a very splendid dessert. The gentlemen were complimenting Lord Nelson, when he said, "Oh! this is but a shabby affair; but it is necessary to convince the enemy they shall not threaten invasion with impunity, and to do something to quiet the minds of the women and children in London." Here in Dover, the people laugh at the idea of invasion.

NEW YORK, SEPT. 9.

A late London paper states that there are not less than 40,000 French troops generally kept in Holland—These troops it is said, are marched in 5000 at a time, almost destitute of clothes, and when clothed, are marched back and replaced by others in the same destitute state.

A late Paris article states, that a Cisalpine officer, named Tourdo, has been arrested, and brought from the army of Italy, and confined in the Temple, on suspicion of having fomented an intrigue to overturn the government of France and murder the Chief Consul.

A letter has been received in town, from a respectable gentleman in Paris, (brought by the Maryland frigate) which states, "That he had that moment been informed by Mr. Murray, of the actual ratification of the French and American Treaty by the Chief Consul."

A London article of the 27th July, mentions that the Dutch seamen belonging ing to the fleet under Admiral De Winter, had refused to act in concert with the French.

The number of people present in Paris on the celebration of the 14th July, is estimated at not less than fix hundred thousand persons.

The expenditure of the Batavian republic for the present year, amounts to 72,745,913 florins.

The 25th of July last closed the date which the openers of the policies on Buonaparte's life, in London, had assigned to the mortal duration of the Consul.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, Oct. 10.

By late New York papers it appears, that only two cases of the malignant fever with which that city has been so severely afflicted, have occurred during the summer, and those immediately from some parts of the West Indies—Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, &c. are also exempt from any contagious disorder, and from the advanced state of the season may be considered as out of danger.

A letter from Berlin of the 21st July says, that frequent conferences are held between the English, French and Russian ministers, which is considered as a favorable omen of a general peace.

Letters from Holland state, that the English forces on the Batavian coasts are constantly encreasing. Admiral Graves, with a numerous squadron, exclusive of fire ships and bombs, has appeared off the Texel. The Batavians are concerting measures for preventing him from burning the ships in the Texel.—Admiral Dixon's squadron, cruising off Goree, has also been reinforced to 10 ships of the line, 3 frigates, besides other smaller vessels.—The Dutch fleet under Admiral de Winter, consists of three divisions, completely equipped, and ready to sail on the first signal: they form together 8 ships of the line from 74 to 44 guns, 7 frigates and various other vessels. There are likewise near 100 gun-boats, intended for the defence of the coasts and mouth of the rivers: the Admiral keeps on board his ship.

We are extremely sory that time will not permit us this week, to lay before our readers at full length, the account of the gallant victory obtained by Sir J. Saumarez off Cape Trafalgar, over the combined French and Spanish fleet, in which the San Auguftin, a Spanish 74 was captured, and the Real Carlos (the Spanish Admiral's ship) and San Hermenegildo of 112 guns and 2400 men were blown up, and only about 40 men saved.

With great concern we announce the loss of His Majesty's ship Hannibal, Capt. Ferris, who, while in the gallant act of breaking the enemy's line in the battle off Algeziras, was, by the impetuosity of the current, unfortunately driven aground under the Spanish batteries, and exposed to a dreadful fire of heavy artillery; notwithstanding which perilous situation, he gallantly maintained the action for nearly 4 hours, when having 140 men killed and wounded, he was at length compelled to strike his colors.

LONDON, JULY 28.

Copy of a letter from Rear Admiral Sir James Saumerez, to Evan Nepean, Eſq; dated on board his Majeſty's ſhip Caeſar, at Gibraltar, the 6th July, 1801.

SIR,

I Have to requeſt you will be pleaſed to inform my lords commiſſioners of the admiralty, that, conformably to my letter of yeſterday's date, I ſtood thro' the Streights, with his Majeſty's ſquadron under my orders, with the intention of attacking three French line of battle ſhips and a frigate, that I had received information of being at anchor off Algeziras; on opening Cabareta Point, I found the ſhips lay at a conſiderable diſtance from the enemy's batteries, and having a leading wind up to them, afforded every reaſonable hope of ſucceſs in the attack.

I had previouſly directed capt. Hood, in the Venerable, from his experience and knowledge of the anchorage, to lead the ſquadron, which he executed with his accuſtomed gallantry, and altho' it was not intended he ſhould anchor, he found himſelf under the neceſſity ſo to do, from the wind's failing (a circumſtance ſo much to be apprehended in this country) and to which circumſtance I have to regret the want of ſucceſs in this well intended enterpriſe. Capt. Stirling anchored oppoſite to the inner ſhip of the enemy, and brought the Pompee to action in the moſt ſpirited and gallant manner, which was alſo followed by the commanders of every ſhip in the ſquadron.

Captains Darby and Ferris, owing to light winds, were prevented for a conſiderable time from coming into action; at length the Hannibal getting a breeze captain Ferris had the moſt favorable proſpect of being along ſide one of the enemy's ſhips, when the Hannibal unfortunately took the ground, and I am extremely concerned to acquaint their lordſhips, that after having made every poſſible effort with this ſhip and the Audacious, to cover her from the enemy, I was under the neceſſity to make ſail, being at the time only three cables length from one of the enemy's batteries.

My thanks are particularly due to all the captains, officers, and men under my orders; and altho' their endeavours have not been crowned with ſucceſs, I truſt the thouſands of ſpectators from his Majeſty's garriſon, and alſo the ſurrounding coaſt, will do juſtice to their valor and intrepidity, which was not to be checked by the fire from the numerous batteries, however formidable, that ſurround Algeziras.

I feel it incumbent upon me to ſtate to their lordſhips the great merits of captain Brenton, of the Caeſar, whoſe cool judgment, and intrepid conduct, I will venture to pronounce were never ſurpaſſed. I alſo beg leave to recommend to their lordſhips notice, my flag lieut. Mr. Philip Dumareſq. who has ſerved with me from the commencement of this war, and is a moſt deſerving officer. Mr. Lamborne and the other lieuts. are alſo entitled to great praiſe, as well as captain Maxwell of the marines, and the officers of his corps ſerving on board the Caeſar.

The enemy's ſhips conſiſted of two of eighty-four guns, and one of 74, with a large frigate; two of the former are aground, and the whole are rendered totally unſerviceable.

I cannot cloſe this letter without rendering the moſt ample juſtice to the great bravery of capt. Ferris; the loſs in his ſhip muſt have been very conſiderable both officers and men, but I have the ſatisfaction to be informed, that his Majeſty has not loſt ſo valuable an officer.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c.

JAMES SAUMAREZ.

The hon. capt. Dundas, of his Majeſty's polacre the Calpe, made his veſſel as uſeful as poſſible, and kept up a ſpirited fire on one of the enemy's batteries. I have alſo to expreſs my approbation of lieut. Janverin, commander of the gun boats, who having joined me with intelligence, ſerved as volunteer on board the Caeſar.

SIR,

I herewith encloſe the copy of a letter from capt. Ferris of his Majeſty's late ſhip Hannibal, which I requeſt you will pleaſe to lay before their lordſhips; and I have only to expreſs my deep regret that his well meant endeavors to bring his ſhip to cloſe action ſhould have occaſioned ſo ſevere a loſs.

Algeziras, July 7, 1801.

SIR,

I have little more to tell you of the fate of his Majeſty's ſhip Hannibal than yourſelf muſt have obſerved, only, that from the number of batteries and ſhips, gun boats, &c. we had to encounter, our guns ſoon got knocked up; and I found it was impoſſible to do any thing either for the preſervation of the ſhip, or for the good of the ſervice, our boats, ſails, rigging, and ſpringe being all ſhot away; and having ſo many killed and wounded, which will appear by the annexed liſt, I thought it prudent to ſtrike, and thereby preſerve the lives of the brave men that remained.

Had I been ſucceſsful in the view before me, previous to the ſhip's taking the ground, my praiſes of the conduct of my officers and ſhip's company could not have exceeded their merits; but I have, notwithſtanding, the ſatisfaction to ſay, that every order was obſerved and carried into execution with that promptitude and alacrity becoming Britiſh officers and ſeamen. I am &c.

LONDON, Auguſt 7.—To the ſplendid victories which have covered with glory our gallant navy, we have to add another, gained by Sir James Saumarez, over the enemy. The following account of it was publiſhed this morning in an Extraordinary Gazette.

Admiralty Office, Auguſt 7.

LIEUT. PHILIP LUMARESQ. of his Majeſty's ſhip Caeſar, arrived laſt night with diſpatches from Rear Admiral Sir James Saumarez, of which the following are copies:

Caeſar, off Cape Trifalgar, July 13.

SIR,

It has pleaſed the Almighty to crown the exertions of this ſquadron with the moſt deciſive ſucceſs againſt the enemies of their country.

The French line of battle ſhips, diſabled in the action off Algeziras, were, on the 8th, reinforced by a ſquadron of five Spaniſh line of battle ſhips, under the command of Don Juan Joaquin de Moreno, and a French ſhip of 74 guns, wearing a broad pendant, beſides three frigates, and an incredible number of gun boats and other veſſels, and got under ſail yeſterday morning, together with his Majeſty's late ſhip Hannibal, which they had ſucceeded in getting off the ſhoal on which ſhe ſtruck.

I almoſt deſpaired of having a ſufficient force in readineſs to oppoſe to ſuch numbers; but, through the great exertions of capt. Brenton, the officers and men belonging to the Caeſar, the ſhip was in readineſs to warp out of the Mole yeſterday morning, and got under way immediately with all the ſquadron except the Pompee, which ſhip had not time to get in her maſts.

Confiding in the zeal and intrepidity of the officers and men I had the happineſs to ſerve with, I determined if poſſible to obſtruct the paſſage of this very formidable force to Cadiz. Late in the evening I obſerved the enemy's ſhips to have cleared Gabaretta point, and at 8 I bore up with the ſquadron to ſtand after them. His Majeſty's ſhip Superb being ſtationed a head of the Caeſar, I directed capt. Keats to make all the ſail and attack the ſternmoſt ſhip in the enemy's rear, uſing his endeavours to keep in ſhore of them. At 11 the Superb opened her fire cloſe to the enemy's ſhips, and on the Caeſar's coming up and preparing to engage a three-decker that had hauled her wind, ſhe was perceived to have taken fire, and the flames communicating to a ſhip to leeward of her, both were ſeen in a blaze, and preſented a moſt awful ſight. No poſſibility exiſted of offering the leaſt aſſiſtance in ſo diſtreſſing a ſituation—the Caeſar paſſed cloſe by the ſhip engaged with the Superb, but by the cool and determined fire kept upon her, which muſt ever reflect the higheſt credit on that ſhip, the enemy's ſhip was completely ſilenced, and ſoon after hauled down her colours.

The Venerable and Spencer having at this time come up, I bore up after the enemy who were carrying a preſent ſail, ſtanding out of the Streights, and loſt ſight of them during the night. It blew exceſſively hard till day light, and in the morning the only ſhips in company were the Venerable and Thames a head of the Caeſar, and one of the French ſhips at ſome diſtance from them, ſtanding towards the ſhoals of Conil, beſides the Spencer aſtern, coming up.

All the ſhips immediately made ſail with a freſh breeze, but as we approached, the wind ſuddenly failing, the Venerable was alone able to bring her to action, which captain Hood did in the moſt gallant manner, and had nearly ſilenced the French ſhip, when his mainmaſt (which had been before wounded) was unfortunately ſhot away, and it coming nearly calm, the enemy's ſhip was enabled to get off without any poſſibility of following her.

The higheſt praiſe is due to captain Hood, the officers and men of the Venerable, for their ſpirit and gallantry in the action, which entitled them to better ſucceſs. The French ſhip was an 84, with additional guns on the gun wale.

This action was ſo near the ſhore, that the Venerable ſtruck on one of the ſhoals, but was ſoon after got off, and taken in tow by the Thames; but with the loſs of all her maſts.

The enemy's ſhips are now in ſight to the weſtward, ſtanding in for Cadiz.—The Superb and Audacious, with the captured ſhip are alſo in ſight, with the Charlotta, Portugueſe frigate, commanded by capt. Crawford Duncan, who very handſomely turned out with the ſquadron, and has been of the greateſt ſervice to capt. Keats, in ſtaying by the enemy's ſhip captured by the Superb.

I am proceeding with the ſquadron for Roſier Bay, and ſhall proceed the moment the ſhips are refitted to reſume my ſtation.

No praiſes I can beſtow are adequate to the merits of the officers and ſhip's companies of all the ſquadron, particularly for their unremitted exertions in fitting the ſhips at Gibraltar, to which, in a great degree, is to be attributed the ſucceſs of the ſquadron againſt the enemy.

Although the Spencer and Audacious had not the good fortune to partake of the action, I have no doubt of their exertion, had they come up in time to cloſe with the enemy's ſhips.

My thanks are alſo due to capt. Holles, of the Thames, and capt. Dundas, of the Calpe, whoſe aſſiſtance were particularly uſeful to capt. Keats in ſecuring the enemy's ſhip, and enabling the Superb to ſtand after the ſquadron, in caſe of having been enabled to renew the action. I herewith encloſe the names of the enemy's ſhips.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c.

Liſt of the Spaniſh ſquadron that arrived at Cadiz from Ferrol, on the 25th of April, under the command of Don Juaquin de Moreno, (Lieut. Gen.) as Vice Admiral, and proceeded to Algeziras Bay, the 9th of July, 1801.

Real Carlos, of 112 guns, Sin Hermenegildo, do. San Fernando, of 94 guns, Argonaut of 80 guns, San Auguſtin, 74 guns, under French colours, taken by the Superb; Warnon, French lugger, of 12 guns.

The Admiral's ſhip the Real Carlos, and the San Hermenegildo, were the two ſhips that took fire and blew up.

Caeſar, off Cape Trafalgar, July 4, 1801.

SIR,

I herewith encloſe, for their Lordſhips further information, the ſtatement I have received from captain Keats, to whom the greateſt praiſe is due for his gallant conduct on the ſervice alluded to.

Capt. Hood's merits are held in too high eſtimation to receive additional luſtre from any praiſes I can beſtow; but I only do juſtice to my own feelings when I obſerve, that in no inſtance have I known ſuperior bravery to that diſplayed by him on this occaſion.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c.

Superb, off Cape Trafalgar, July 13, 1801.

SIR,

Purſuant to your directions to ſtate the particulars of the Superb's ſervices laſt night, I have the honor to inform you, that in conſequence of our directions to make ſail up to, and engage the ſternmoſt of the enemy's ſhips, at half paſt 11 I found myſelf abreaſt of a Spaniſh three decked ſhip (the Real Carlos, as appears by report of ſome ſurvivors) which having brought in one with two other ſhips nearly line abreaſt, I opened my fire upon them at not more than three cables length; this evidently produced a good effect, as well in this ſhip as the other abreaſt of her, which ſoon began firing on each other, and at times on the Superb.

In about a quarter of an hour, I perceived the ſhip I was engaged with, and which had loſt her foretop-maſt, to be on fire, upon which we inſtantly ceaſed to moleſt her, and I proceeded on to the ſhip next at hand, which proved to be the San Antonia of 74 guns, and 730 men, commanded by the chef de diviſion, Le Rey, under French colors, wearing a broad pendant, and manned nearly equal with French and Spaniſh ſeamen, and which, after ſome action (the chief being wounded) ſtruck her colours.

I learn from the very few ſurvivors of the ſhips that caught fire and blew up (which, in an open boat reached the Superb at the time ſhe was taking poſſeſſion of the San Antonia) that in the confuſion of the action the Hermenegildo (a firſt rate alſo) miſtaking the Real Carlos for an enemy, ran on board her, and ſhared her melancholy fate.

Services of this nature cannot well be expected to be performed without ſome loſs, but tho' we have to lament that lieut. E. Walker, and 14 ſeamen and marines have been wounded, moſt of them ſeverely, ſtill there is reaſon to rejoice that this is the extent of our loſs.

I received able and active aſſiſtance from Mr. Samuel Jackſon, the firſt lieutenant, and it is my duty to reprelent to you, that the officers of all deſcriptions, ſeamen and marines, conducted themſelves with the greateſt ſteadineſs and gallantry.

I have the honor to be, &c.

Aug. 7.—We received this morning the following copy of Lord Nelſon's Addreſs to his ſquadron after the attack upon the flotilla at Boulogne:—

"Medusa, off Boulogne, Aug. 5.

"Lord Nelſon has reaſon to be very much ſatisfied with the Captains of the bombs, for their placing of the veſſels; it was impoſſible they could have been better ſituated, and the artillery officers have ſhewn great ſkill in entirely diſabling ten of the armed veſſels out of 24 oppoſed to them, and many others, Lord Nelſon believes, are much damaged. The Commander-in Chief cannot avoid noticing the great zeal and deſire to attack the enemy in a cloſer and different combat, which manifeſted itſelf among all ranks of perſons, and which Lord Nelſon would gladly have given full ſcope to, had the attempt at this moment been proper; but the officers and others may rely, that an early opportunity ſhall be given them for ſhewing their judgment, zeal and bravery. The hired and revenue cutters kept under ſail, and performed the duty entruſted to them with a great deal of ſkill. (Signed) "NELSON & BRONTE."

We do not underſtand that any detailed diſpatches have yet been received from Lord Nelſon; at leaſt if any have been received, they have not been made public.

The accounts of his Lordſhip's having failed from Boulogne to attack ſome other French port, are incorrect.

Yeſterday afternoon the fleet was again ſtanding off and on Boulogne, and the attack was expected to be renewed laſt night.

Auguſt 8.—Report ſtates, that Buonaparte had been at Boulogne in perſon the day before the bombardment, but had left it in the courſe of the evening.

Letters from Milan ſpeak of an alarming mutiny which took place in the garriſon of Turin on the 9th of July, in conſequence of a diſpute about the payment of arrears due to the troops. Several companies refuſed to march from the place until their arrears were diſcharged. The conſequence of which was, that a violent tumult enſued, ſome lives were loſt, and among the reſt, the commandant of the citadel was killed. General Colli was appointed to the proviſional command, but when theſe accounts were ſent off, it does not appear that tranquility was completely reſtored.

PLYMOUTH, JULY 27.

La Chevrette French corvette, which arrived here yeſterday, was taken on the night of Tueſday the 21ſt inſt. The boats of the ſquadron got along ſide ſoon after 12 o'clock under a heavy fire from the ſhip & the batteries on ſhore. The French crew, together with ſome troops the had on board, were ranged three deep all round the ſhip, armed with long boarding pikes, tomahawks, and a brace of piſtols each; this formidable phalanx, however, did not intimidate the Britiſh officers and ſeamen, who ruſhed on board like an impetuous torrent, carrying every thing before them; the action now became general on deck, and continued for two hours and a half, when the enemy were completely overpowered, and driven below. A midſhipman called down the hatchway to know whether they had ſtruck, and being anſwered in the affirmative, the action ceaſed: previous to which the cables had been cut, the ſails looſed; and a light air of wind blowing off ſhore, the ſhip was brought off in triumph to the Britiſh fleet. There was another corvette at anchor near the Chevrette, of the ſame force, full of ſtores and money, for Gaudaloupe.—The moment the attack commenced upon her conſort, the cut cables and ran into the inner road. Diſpatches ſaid to be of conſequence were found on board the Chevrette, and carried to town by capt. Biſbane. During the action the 80 gun ſhips came out of Breſt to aſſiſt the corvette, and the Engliſh fleet made an attempt to cut them off, but they retreated and got into the harbour again. The fleet are now cruizing cloſe off the port to prevent any veſſel from getting out. The enemy's woun-

All the ſhips immediately made ſail with a freſh breeze, but as we approached, the wind ſuddenly failing, the Venerable was alone able to bring her to action, which captain Hood did in the moſt gallant manner, and had nearly ſilenced the French ſhip, when his mainmaſt (which had been before wounded) was unfortunately ſhot away, and it coming nearly calm, the enemy's ſhip was enabled to get off without any poſſibility of following her.

The higheſt praiſe is due to captain Hood, the officers and men of the Venerable, for their ſpirit and gallantry in the action, which entitled them to better ſucceſs. The French ſhip was an 84, with additional guns on the gun waſte.

This action was ſo near the ſhore, that the Venerable ſtruck on one of the ſhoals, but was ſoon after got off, and taken in tow by the Thames; but with the loſs of all her maſts.

The enemy's ſhips are now in ſight to the weſtward, ſtanding in for Cadiz.—The Superb and Audacious, with the captured ſhip are alſo in ſight, with the Charlotta, Portugueſe frigate, commanded by capt. Crawford Duncan, who very handſomely turned out with the ſquadron, and has been of the greateſt ſervice to capt. Keats, in ſtaying by the enemy's ſhip captured by the Superb.

I am proceeding with the ſquadron for Roſier Bay, and ſhall proceed the moment the ſhips are refitted to reſume my ſtation.

No praiſes I can beſtow are adequate to the merits of the officers and ſhip's companies of all the ſquadron, particularly for their unremitted exertions in fitting the ſhips at Gibraltar, to which, in a great degree, is to be attributed the ſucceſs of the ſquadron againſt the enemy.

Although the Spencer and Audacious had not the good fortune to partake of the action, I have no doubt of their exertion, had they come up in time to cloſe with the enemy's ſhips.

My thanks are alſo due to capt. Holles, of the Thames, and capt. Dundas, of the Calpe, whoſe aſſiſtance were particularly uſeful to capt. Keats in ſecuring the enemy's ſhip, and enabling the Superb to ſtand after the ſquadron, in caſe of having been enabled to renew the action. I herewith encloſe the names of the enemy's ſhips.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c.

Liſt of the Spaniſh ſquadron that arrived at Cadiz from Ferrol, on the 25th of April, under the command of Don Juaquin de Moreno, (Lieut. Gen.) as Vice Admiral, and proceeded to Algeziras Bay, the 9th of July, 1801.

Real Carlos, of 112 guns, Sin Hermenegildo, do. San Fernando, of 94 guns, Argonaut of 80 guns, San Auguſtin, 74 guns, under French colours, taken by the Superb; Warwick, French lugger, of 12 guns.

The Admiral's ſhip the Real Carlos, and the San Hermenegildo, were the two ſhips that took fire and blew up.

SIR,

I herewith encloſe, for their Lordſhips further information, the ſtatement I have received from captain Keats, to whom the greateſt praiſe is due for his gallant conduct on the ſervice alluded to.

Capt. Hood's merits are held in too high eſtimation to receive additional luſtre from any praiſes I can beſtow; but I only do juſtice to my own feelings when I obſerve, that in no inſtance have I known ſuperior bravery to that diſplayed by him on this occaſion.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c.

J. SAUMAREZ.

Superb, off Cape Trafalgar, July 13, 1801.

SIR,

Purſuant to your directions to ſtate the particulars of the Superb's ſervices laſt night, I have the honor to inform you, that in conſequence of our directions to make ſail up to, and engage the ſternmoſt of the enemy's ſhips, at half paſt 11 I found myſelf abreaſt of a Spaniſh three decked ſhip (the Real Carlos, as appears by report of ſome ſurvivors) which having brought in one with two other ſhips nearly line abreaſt, I opened my fire upon them at not more than three cables length; this evidently produced a good effect, as well in this ſhip as the other abreaſt of her, which ſoon began firing on each other, and at times on the Superb.

In about a quarter of an hour, I perceived the ſhip I was engaged with, and which had loſt her foretop-maſt, to be on fire, upon which we inſtantly ceaſed to moleſt her, and I proceeded on to the ſhip next at hand, which proved to be the San Antonia of 74 guns, and 730 men, commanded by the chef de diviſion, Le Rey, under French colors, wearing a broad pendant, and manned nearly equal with French and Spaniſh ſeamen, and which, after ſome action (the chief being wounded) ſtruck her colours.

I learn from the very few ſurvivors of the ſhips that caught fire and blew up (which, in an open boat reached the Superb at the time ſhe was taking poſſeſſion of the San Antonia) that in the confuſion of the action the Hermenegildo (a firſt rate alſo) miſtaking the Real Carlos for an enemy, ran on board her, and ſhared her melancholy fate.

Services of this nature cannot well be expected to be performed without ſome loſs, but tho' we have to lament that lieut. E. Walker, and 14 ſeamen and marines have been wounded, moſt of them ſeverely, ſtill there is reaſon to rejoice that this is the extent of our loſs.

I received able and active aſſiſtance from Mr. Samuel Jackſon, the firſt lieutenant, and it is my duty to reprelent to you, that the officers of all deſcriptions, ſeamen and marines, conducted themſelves with the greateſt ſteadineſs and gallantry.

I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed) R. G. KEATS.

Aug. 7.—We received this morning the following copy of Lord Nelſon's Addreſs to his ſquadron after the attack upon the flotilla at Boulogne:—

"Medusa, off Boulogne, Aug. 5.

"Lord Nelſon has reaſon to be very much ſatisfied with the Captains of the bombs, for their placing of the veſſels; it was impoſſible they could have been better ſituated, and the artillery officers have ſhewn great ſkill in entirely diſabling ten of the armed veſſels out of 24 oppoſed to them, and many others, Lord Nelſon believes, are much damaged. The Commander in Chief cannot avoid noticing the great zeal and deſire to attack the enemy in a cloſer and different combat, which manifeſted itſelf among all ranks of perſons, and which Lord Nelſon would gladly have given full ſcope to, had the attempt at this moment been proper; but the officers and others may reſt aſſured, that an early opportunity ſhall be given them for ſhewing their judgment, zeal and bravery. The hired and revenue cutters kept under ſail, and performed the duty entruſted to them with a great deal of ſkill. (Signed) "NELSON & BRONTE."

We do not underſtand that any detailed diſpatches have yet been received from Lord Nelſon; at leaſt if any have been received, they have not been made public.

The accounts of his Lordſhip's having failed from Boulogne to attack ſome other French port, are incorrect.

Yeſterday afternoon the fleet was again ſtanding off and on Boulogne, and the attack was expected to be renewed laſt night.

Auguſt 8.—Report ſtates, that Buonaparte had been at Boulogne in perſon the day before the bombardment, but had left it in the courſe of the evening.

Letters from Milan ſpeak of an alarming mutiny which took place in the garriſon of Turin on the 9th of July, in conſequence of a diſpute about the payment of arrears due to the troops. Several companies refuſed to march from the place until their arrears were diſcharged. The conſequence of which was, that a violent tumult enſued, ſome lives were loſt, and among the reſt, the commandant of the citadel was killed. General Colli was appointed to the proviſional command, but when theſe accounts were ſent off, it does not appear that tranquility was completely reſtored.

PLYMOUTH, JULY 27.

La Chevrette French corvette, which arrived here yeſterday, was taken on the night of Tueſday the 21ſt inſt. The boats of the ſquadron got along ſide ſoon after 12 o'clock under a heavy fire from the ſhip & the batteries on ſhore. The French crew, together with ſome troops ſhe had on board, were ranged three deep all round the ſhip, armed with long boarding pikes, tomahawks, and a brace of piſtols each; this formidable phalanx, however, did not intimidate the Britiſh officers and ſeamen, who ruſhed on board like an impetuous torrent, carrying every thing before them; the action now became general on deck, and continued for two hours and a half, when the enemy were completely overpowered, and driven below. A midſhipman called down the hatchway to know whether they had ſtruck, and being anſwered in the affirmative, the action ceaſed: previous to which the cables had been cut, the ſails looſed; and a light air of wind blowing off ſhore, the ſhip was brought off in triumph to the Britiſh fleet. There was another corvette at anchor near the Chevrette, of the ſame force, full of ſtores and money, for Gaudaloupe.—The moment the attack commenced upon her conſort, ſhe cut cables and ran into the inner road. Diſpatches ſaid to be of conſequence were found on board the Chevrette, and carried to town by capt. Biſbane. During the action the 80 gun ſhips came out of Breſt to aſſiſt the corvette, and the Engliſh fleet made an attempt to cut them off, but they retreated and got into the harbour again. The fleet are now cruizing cloſe off the port to prevent any veſſel from getting out. The enemy's wounded men were sent into Brest with a flag of truce.—Lieut. Neville, second of the Urania, killed the French captain near the wheel by running him through the body after a the personal conflict, the former is badly wounded, but not so dangerously as was at first represented.

DUBLIN, AUG. 4.

On Thursday evening, his Majesty's ships Ruffel, Belona, Warrior, and Defence, 74 guns each, sailed from Cove on a cruise. Their destination is not known with certainty, though it was generally imagined they were bound for the Straits, to reinforce the squadron under Sir James Saumarez.—The Ganges and Defiance, likewise of 74 guns, which lately sailed, the former as convoy to the East Indiamen, are to go into port, in order to be thoroughly repaired, of which they both stand in need, as they were very roughly handled on the memorable 2d of April, before Copenhagen.

SHEERNESS, Aug. 7.

All the row boats lying in this harbour are getting ready as quick as possible for immediate service.

The arms and accoutrements belonging to the yeomanry and foot volunteers of this place, were inspected yesterday, by Colonel Smith of the Royal Artillery.

MARGATE, Aug. 7.

Admiral Lord Nelson, with that part of his fleet which has come into our roads, lies at single anchor, ready to depart as soon as the vessels shall have taken on board some beer, ammunition, and a few other necessaries, with which the Diligence sloops, which has been appointed to that service, is now supplying them.

Lieutenant Douglas, arrived at the Admiralty this morning, with dispatches from Sir J. Saumarez. Their contents have not transpired.

The whole of Sir James Saumarez's squadron is completely repaired, and either at or ready for sea, including the St. Antoine, (captured ship) whose officers and men were entirely French, though classed by Admiral Moreno as a Spanish ship.

From a New York paper of Sept. 17.

British capture of the Island of Madeira.

Capt. Pierce, from Madeira, informs, that the English squadron, consisting of a frigate, two sloops of war and 7 transports with troops, arrived there on the 24th of July, and on the 30th landed 1500 men, who, with an equal number of Portuguese, were to garrison the principal fortifications on that Island. As this measure was well understood between the English and the Portuguese, no change in the administration of the government was to take place; unless the French were to make an attempt to possess themselves of it; in which case, the English were to take the government of the Island into their own hands.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, Oct. 17.

His Royal Highness the Duke of York has been appointed Commander in Chief of all His Majesty's land forces in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

By a French telegraphic dispatch it appears, that the English frigate Jason ran aground before the harbor of St. Malo, and was lost, the crew it is supposed were saved.

The port of Havre in France is declared by the British Government to be in a state of blockade.

An article from Venice states, that the merchants of that city, in consequence of the friendly relations re-established with France, are no longer to furnish provision or ammunition to the British ships of war cruizing in the Gulph of Venice.—Great military preparations are continued along the French coast, the object of which is unknown; the English, altho' taking measures of defence, are under but little apprehension of invasion. The Brest fleet was in readiness for sea with a number of troops on board.—The French corvette lately cut out of Brest by the British, was, with her consort, destined to re-inforce the garrison of Senecal with troops and supply Guadaloupe with naval stores.

The crops in Ireland were promising and abundant.

The Hon. Thos. Cochrane, one of His Majesty's Council for the Province of Nova Scotia, died at Halifax the 26th August.

Mr. Clark, of Montreal, has gathered 8000 bundles of hemp of his own culture this year; each bundle, it is conjectured will produce one pound of clear hemp.—A sample of this has been sent to York dressed; it is fine, light-coloured and measures eight feet in length.

LONDON, JULY 1.

ADMIRAL LORD NELSON arrived yesterday at the Admiralty. After visiting the hospital at Yarmouth, where he arrived on Monday in the Kite brig, he gave each of the nurses a guinea for the care they had taken of the wounded seamen; his Lordship went to Nelson's hotel and partook of some refreshments. He was there waited on by the naval and military officers, and the principal inhabitants of the place, who were all anxious to pay their respects to the hero; after which his Lordship set out for town in a post chaise and four. The horses and chaise were decorated with ribbons, as were also the postillions, who were in sailor's dresses, the master of the hotel officiating as one of them.

Capt. Porter of the 23d dragoons, and Lieut. Ogden of the 17th dragoons left town on Sunday evening for Egypt. The former gentleman volunteers his services.

At a court of common council held yesterday at Guildhall, Mr. Garrat, of Bridgeward, informed the court that at their next meeting he would move as follows:

"It appearing, from the best information, that the farmers and dealers in corn are still withholding the grain from the regular markets, and the price of course continually on the advance—Resolved, that an humble petition be presented to parliament, humbly praying that a survey of all the grain, from which bread is made, be immediately taken, and the returns made by each proprietor or possessor on oath, throughout Great Britain, specifying the separate quantities of wheat, wheat flour, barley flour, oats and oat meal, rye and rye flour; likewise that the different grains unthreshed be returned to the best of their knowledge and belief of what is supposed they will produce when threshed."

A fleet of 107 sail for the Baltic, sailed from Sheerness on Friday.

We understand there is no truth in the report so generally circulated and believed on wednesday, that M. Otto was about to quit this country, and still less in the causes to which it was attributed.

The correspondence between this country and France thro' that gentleman still continues, and the negociation is still kept up. We know not whether the absence of Talleyrand from Paris had occasioned any delay in the discussions, but if it did his return will remove every thing of this kind. If, according to the trite remark, preparation for war be the best way of obtaining peace, it must be admitted that both sides have for some time past done much to accelerate the business. This state of menacing hostility might be very proper, considering the question of peace and war, if mutual threats and defiance were not too much calculated to banish temper and moderation from the discussion.

Indeed, in the interval of the preparation and the execution of this fearful enterprize, it would be well worthy of the Rulers of both countries to reflect what is likely to be the end of this conflict in which they are about to join. Are the interests of the two nations so irreconcilable that no compromise can be devised? Must the war be now carried on with a rancour and malignity which exceed all ordinary hostility? In this state of things we resemble the nations which, as remarked by Sir Walter Raleigh, exterminated each other in battle because both parties were destitute of weapons of defence.

The scheme of invasion which the French Government has appeared to adopt with so much eagerness, is certainly in its nature the last resort which ought to be urged in disputes between the two nations. It is not like an invasion by land, which operates as a pressure upon an adversary, and in its particular success or disappointment will incline him either to advance or recede in his pretensions. The invasion of this country, if once attempted, must terminate in the utter extermination of the invaders, or the destruction of our independence. There can be no half success in it. It must afford a complete triumph to either one side or the other. The very attempt therefore, must involve so much calamity, that it must be considered as one of the most violent exercises of the rights of war.

Nothing therefore, can justify such an extreme case, but the impossibility of obtaining peace on fair and equitable terms. Unless that Bonaparte can shew that such terms have been refused, he incurs a tremendous responsibility, not only towards the particular country he governs, but mankind in general.

It is not impossible, however, that these preparations may be calculated to withdraw the attention of our government from other objects. While therefore every degree of vigilance is exerted to guard against threatened attack, the necessary attention should be bestowed upon those secondary objects for which we contend. Perhaps the french government has already derived considerable advantage in the plans they meditate for the relief of Egypt from the superior interest this nation must feel in its own immediate defence.

The negociation has now been protracted for a considerable time. Since its commencement, affairs have varied considerably. From being favorable to France, they have inclined to our scale, with occasional mixture of good and bad fortune. It may be asked, therefore, will neither prosperity nor adversity in their respective degrees induce nations or their Rulers to negociate in the spirit of peace, and to consider it as their greatest good?

Aug. 1.

Our private correspondence notices the discontent of the Russian Minister at Paris, in consequence of his ineffectual interference with the French government in favor of his Sardinian Majesty; a circumstance that must materially tend to widen the breach between the Emperor Alexander and the First Consul.

There appears little doubt that the King of Sardinia will finally take up his abode in that Island, to which he is, with the slender remains of his Court to be conveyed by a British man of war.

We have received letters from Deal and Dover, which notice the accounts daily sent to those places by our cruizers and boats, of the continued activity which prevails along the enemy's coast. Lord Nelson has at present under his command in the Downs, a force no less than sixty vessels of all descriptions, which are chiefly frigates, sloops, gun-vessels and bomb-ketches. It is expected that very few days will be suffered to elapse before the commencement of offensive operations against some principal points of the French coast. The prohibition of landing passengers at Dover, is continued with the strictest care, and there are, at this moment, a great number of persons waiting at Calais to come this country.

The peculiar construction of the french gun-vessels enabling them to proceed along the coast in safety, as our cruizers cannot, in consequence of their great draught of water, bring their guns to bear with any decisive effect upon them, it is, we understand, determined by the Admiralty to dispatch a considerable number of small craft, properly equipped and armed, to be stationed off the opposite coast.

The Channel fleet continued off Brest, on the 25th ult. and the combined squadrons still appeared in a state of readiness to put to sea.

The ages of sixteen Portuguese general officers, who lately formed a Council of War, amounted to 1200 years, or on the average 75 each.

It is mentioned in the foreign Gazettes that the Dowager Empress of Russia is about to visit Vienna, and that there is to be another new alliance between the Archduke Palatine and a Princess of Russia.

The court of Copenhagen has acceded to the convention signed at St. Petersburgh on the 17th of June.

According to the last accounts from Copenhagen, Count Lœwendahl, son to the Danish ambassador in Russia, is immediately to proceed to St. Petersburgh, with an official notification of the accession of Denmark to the convention concluded there on the 17th ult. between Lord St. Helens and Count Panin. Sweden having already signified its formal accession, the differences between Great Britain and the Northern Powers are thus most happily brought to a final adjustment.

From the friendly disposition of the King of Ava towards the English, a settlement, it is said, is to be formed on the coast, for the express purpose of building ships, as this country produces vast forests of timber, adapted for shipbuilding.

From a London Paper.

Shortly after the appearance of Damberger's Travels into the Interior of Africa at Wittemburgh in Germany, Professor Paulus, with the learned Meiners at Jena, published, the former in the Jena Gazette, a strong contradiction to the pretended traveller, drawn from the internal evidences of the work—But Martini, the publisher at Leipsic, suspecting he had been imposed upon, went still further, and summoned Damberger before a magistrate; when, on examination, he confessed it was a fabrication.—Translations of this work lately appeared in London, where they have been sold as the genuine travels of this ingenious fabulist.

CALAIS, July 28.

This morning at eight o'clock 2 flotilla, composed of six gun-boats, sailed hence, having troops on board, bound for Bologne, the general rendezvous of such craft.—Some of the enemy's ships were at the same time seen in the offing, but too far distant to be able to notice what was doing near the shore; the flotilla put to sea, coasting it all the way with a favorable gale. The boats had reached the half way of their destination, when weathering Cape Grines, they espied four British frigates lying in wait for them, and quite out of sight of the men on shore, who are appointed to keep the look out. It appears the enemy had taken this position during the night. The flotilla first thought, on seeing such a superiority of numbers, to tack about and steer again for Calais, when six other English frigates have in sight—these had observed the boats leaving the port, and immediately took them in the rear, thus blocking them up entirely; at the same time one of the enemy's cutters fired 15 guns, by way of signal, and the French almost immediately saw about 20 English ships of war, of different rates, from frigates down to cutters, which came to oppose them! Being thus completely blocked up and receiving the enemy's fire in all directions, they fortunately found a sand bank, which they judiciously, (taking sounding as they proceeded) placed between them and the enemy. They there came to an anchor, in presence of the English, who, eager to capture them adopted the same manœuvre. The flotilla then stood in the most perilous of all possible situations, as there were no forts to afford it protection—its determined resolution, however, made a strong impression on the enemy, who appeared undecided as to the mode of attacking it.

In the interim, Gen. Terand, commanding the military division, General Boubers, commanding the garrison, and their respective Staff officers, rode down at the head of some troops, with several pieces of artillery, for the purpose of affording relief to the flotilla: they immediately to that effect erected batteries, in order to prevent the enemy from sinking the boats, from compelling them either to run ashore, or from burning them on the coast.

While this was taking place, & while the spectators were in the utmost state of uneasiness and indignation, the breeze fell and a dead calm ensued; when the flotilla availing itself of the occasion, and by dint of rowing, passed with intrepidity through the English fleet, which did not dare either to pursue or attack it, with its pinnaces and gunboats, set immediately sail and gained Boulogne.

Yesterday a small cutter (frigate-built) sailed from this port for Paris—a present to the Consul!!

PARIS, July 26.

The elections for the members of the Diets of Cantons in Switzerland are almost concluded. The choice has in general fallen upon men whose sentiments are known to be intemperate; and much mischief is apprehended from the shock of contending passions in those assemblies.

The executive council of Helvetia has suspended from the functions the greater part of the members of the administration of Berne, and ordered them to be conducted before the tribunal of the districts, for having subscribed the late celebrated remonstrance.

GIBRALTAR, July 31.

"This morning arrived his Majesty's brig of war Spider, in 43 days from Alexandria.

At the time of the Spider's leaving Alexandria, (the 18th June) that garrison still held out—but Gen. Hutchinson and about 8000 troops in high health and spirits, and abundantly supplied, were within about 12 miles of Cairo, which is probably now in his power, as the General had with him about 30,000 Turks, and a large body of Mamelukes, who had joined the British forces. With this army Gen. Hutchinson was making arrangements for the complete investing of the French force at Cairo, amounting to 9000 men. Only a part of the Bombay army had arrived at Suez, and joined Sir John Hutchinson; the remainder, having been delayed in their navigation up the Red Sea, (where the Forte frigate, used as a victualling transport, was unfortunately cast away) would not be at their destination till July. The four regiments which we mentioned in a former Chronicle to have passed Gibraltar in the line of battle ships, have arrived lately in Egypt.

Gantheaume's squadron, consisting of three line of battle ships, two frigates, and some transports, with a reinforcement of troops for Menou's army, had arrived on the coast of Africa, to the westward of Egypt, but finding it impracticable to put the troops on shore, on account of a high surf, the squadron had returned to the coast of Italy. The British cruizers had captured 4 or 5 of the transports, with troops, doctors and stores. On board one of them was a company of fingers, dancers, and commedians, sent by the First Consul for the recreation of his Egyptian army.

A detachment of the British army under the command of B. Gen. Doyle, had intercepted and taken prisoners, a body of Menou's army, on their march through the desart, from Alexandria to Cairo, consisting of 500 of their very best troops, 140 horses, and 550 camels.

Damietta had been evacuated by its garrison, who (600 in number) embarked at Burlos, with a view of either getting into Alexandria, or reaching France; the whole of these were captured: and, in one week, 1400 French prisoners were taken by the British forces without the loss of one man.

MILAN, July 6.

A Genoese Journal of the 1st instant, says, that according to accounts brought by a ship arrived in the Gulph of Spezzia, a considerable Spanish and French fleet has been seen off the coast of Sardinia; according to advices from Leghorn of the 2d inst. a French ship of the line and two frigates had approached that road; and by accounts from Naples of the 24th of June, a numerous fleet had appeared in sight of that harbour, but their flag could not be distinguished.

BOSTON, Aug. 31.

Captain Watson from Nantz, informs that he learnt from the most undoubted authority, that Portugal had made peace with France and Spain; that in almost every port a large number of troops were embarked on board ships of war, destined for Egypt, the French having determined on sending a number of small squadrons hoping that out of the many, some might reach there. In the port of Nantz 5000 men were embarked. W. also states, that every sea port is blockaded by the British cruizers; that provisions were extremely plenty; the old and young men were returning to their homes from the armies; and the people generally were contented with the present government.

FROM SOUTH AMERICA—LATE.

"Capt. Starbuck, of the Harlequin, informs that the Viceroy of Lima, has ordered the seizure of all vessels having goods on board for trade, above the value of 100 dollars; a sharp look out is kept on the coast. Two vessels have recently been taken and sent to Lima, or Callo; and a ship from N. York, Lescomb, master; she was condemned in toto—she had been trading some time and had 150,000 dollars in specie on board. The other was the Catherine, of Boston, B. Wurth; and had gone for Lima. She was taken on the coast of Chili. The whale ships that go in are politely treated."

LONDON, August 15.

Of the landing of troops by Guntheaume, government, it is said, have not received any confirmation.—The averland dispatch from Bufforah, mentions the capture of seven French transports and a xebec, off Alexandria, with troops on board. Were these troops carried out by Gunthéaume? Or, is it true that he landed them at Derne or Durazzo? This reinforcement, however, even if it has descended in Egypt, will scarcely now be of any decisive benefit to the French, if the account of the surrender of Cairo and 6000 prisoners be true.

FALL OF CAIRO.

The intelligence of the surrender of Cairo is confirmed. Two messengers arrived yesterday with dispatches from Constantinople and Vienna to government and the East India Company. The dispatches to government are from Lord Minto, who continues to congratulate his Majesty's ministers on the fall of Cairo. The dispatches, however, to the East India Company place the intelligence beyond all doubt. They are in substance as follows:—

Extract of a letter from Peter Taafe, Esq. to W. Ramsay, Esq: dated Constantinople, July 19, 1801.

"I had the honor to address you on the 17th inst." by an express courier, in order to inform you of the reduction of the castle and city of Cairo by his Majesty's and the Ottoman armies, after some severe actions wherein the enemy had lost 3000 men in killed and wounded; and that the remainder, consisting of 4000 men had surrendered. I have only learnt since, that the enemy capitulated on honorable terms, and were in march to Rosetta, to be embarked for France, under the escort of British ships of war."

* Not received.

The remarks we made the other day need now only be repeated. The fall of Cairo enables us to concentrate our whole force, and to direct it against Alexandria, the last pallestion which the enemy have upon the Egyptian territory. Pressed by such an army on the land side, and blocked up by sea in want of provisions and of water; it is not probable that Alexandria will long hold out. Perhaps it is not now of much consequence to enquire where Gunthéaume landed his troops, or whether he landed any. If, while he was at anchor on the Egyptian coast he heard of the surrender of Cairo, it is not unlikely that, seeing at how little use such a reinforcement must be after such an event, he returned with the troops to France. If, however, he did actually land them, they will now only serve to swell the number of our prisoners, without being of any use to the enemy.

OF LORD NELSON.

Lord Nelson sailed yesterday morning from Deal in the Medusa frigate, with several gambling, cutters, and bombs. Between 11 and 12 o'clock he was seen from Dover, standing from the French coast, and seemingly for Boulogne Bay, under a press of sail. Each of his Lordship's vessels has flat-bottomed boats on board. It is supposed that another attack will immediately be made upon Boulogne, at least the enemy appear to be apprehensive of one, for accounts from that town state, that on Thursday night the enemy made a movement, and moored 26 gun vessels along shore, east and west of the harbour. A reinforcement of 17000 men is also said to have arrived within these few days from the interior.

Some time after this paper was put to press yesterday we received the Paris papers of the 12th, and communicated in a second edition a short account of their contents.—The intelligence is not important.

An article contained in a London paper some time ago, which supposed, that, under the present circumstances, the residence of M. Otto in this capital might not be secure, is noticed with proper severity in the Moniteur, which pays a merited tribute to the virtues of his Majesty, and attaching to Mr. Addington the epithet of respectable, expresses a belief that he was highly displeased with the article alluded to.

AUG. 16.

It has ever been the policy of Buonaparte to make overtures for peace when he was supposed to be most competent to the prosecution of war; and, as we cannot suppose him to inconsiderate & madly enthusiastic, as at any period to have proposed an invasion of this country, we are led to regard his preparations as designed only to give weight to his negociations, and to embarrass our government, by exciting public clamor and alarm.—Thanks to the gallant and determined valour of our countrymen, the project has proved abortive. Instead of intimidation, energy, firmness, and enterprize are manifest. Where clamor and dissention were looked for, confidence and union prevail. We do not wonder then if the Chief Consul, wearied of expeditions, which only tend to exhibit to Britain the greatness of their resources, and resolved into action the dormant energies of the empire, is anxious to terminate a war in which experience has taught him to look for nothing but defeat.

To the zeal and loyalty of the Volunteer Corps, the country owes more than the honor they do her. Their patriotism has repelled alarm, inspired the loyal with confidence, and confounded the disaffected. We trust they will not relax in their exertions, until, by peace, we are fully assured against their dangers, from which they so powerfully contributed to save us.

We have been taught by experience to respect the authority from which we have received the following articles; whatever opinion we may entertain on the subject of the first, we cannot question the writer's competence to speak with decision to the latter:

"As the negociation proceeds, the prospect of peace becomes brighter; and there is now little reason to doubt, notwithstanding the intrigues of the Jacobins, those enemies of the human race, that the wishes of the lovers of peace will soon be realised."

"M. Otto, with a magnanimity for which he has ever been esteemed, disdains any further proceeding against those miserable scribblers who have attempted to injure his reputation. The time perhaps is not far distant when the authors of those calumnies who have been justly complained of, may see to reproach themselves for their conduct."

Some movements in Brest harbour within these few days, have induced a supposition that the Brest fleet has an intention of putting to sea. A reinforcement has been ordered from Portsmouth to join the Channel fleet off Brest immediately.

LONDON, JULY 17.

A second attack has been made upon the flotilla at Boulogne, and we are sorry to state, that it has not been attended with the desired effect. Late last night the Provi[illegible]d at Dover with dispatches from Lord Nelson.

The attack commenced at about a quarter flood, at 12 o'clock on Saturday night. Our squadron consisting of 70 boats, was divided into four divisions; these divisions were covered by 16 flat-bottomed boats, each of which carried a howitzer or carronade. The enemy appear to have expected a second attack and to have been prepared for it.—They had thrown up fresh works, and had sent a large reinforcement of troops into the town. As soon as our divisions approached sufficiently near the shore, a tremendous fire of grape and round shot was opened upon them from the gun-vessels and shore batteries. The former had between 1 and 200 men on board of each, and were well covered by flanking batteries of mortars. Troops 5 deep lined the shore for 3 miles.

Our brave soldiers advanced to the attack with their usual fearlessness and courage amidst this heavy fire, and boarded the enemy's gun-vessels. Great slaughter ensued; but the decks of several of the enemy's gun-vessels were cleared, and the ships taken possession of, but they could not be got off. The enemy had taken the precaution of chaining their gun-boats to each other head and stern; intermediate chains also fastened them to the shore.—While our gallant countrymen were unavailingly trying to get them loose, they were exposed to a dreadful discharge of grape shot, shells and musquetry. At length they were forced to retire, bringing with them one lugger-rigged vessel. Our readers may form some opinion of the carnage, from the loss which this lugger experienced—of 70 men, 14 only were left alive, and most of these were wounded.

Our loss in killed and [illegible]

[illegible] Lord Keith is in the Mediterranean, with several cutters, returned to the Downs, but whether to reinforce his squadron, or to proceed against some other place, we know not. The remainder of the squadron was left off Boulogne.

After this paper was at press, we learnt that a rumour of a very different nature from the above had got into circulation, namely, that preliminaries of peace having been signed between this country and France, an express had been sent to Lord Nelson, desiring him to return, which he has accordingly done. Stocks were even getting up on this rumour. A short time will determine what we are to give credit to.

The Hamburgh gazette of the 10th instant, says, that the Chief Consul has expunged the name of Guntheaume from the list of Councillors of State, for not having obeyed his express orders to land the troops entrusted to his care, on the coast of Egypt. It is singular, that such a circumstance, if true, should first transpire thro' a Hamburgh journal. It is not, however unworthy of credit on that account.

The French Journalists begin at length to speak of Guntheaume's expedition as being hopeless. The papers contain several rumours respecting him, the most important and most probable of which is, though he got within 60 or 70 miles of Alexandria, he got only one vessel [illegible] sent in, and could not land his troops. The natives on different parts of the coast threatened opposition, and he has failed in his object. We may therefore soon expect to hear of the fall of Alexandria.

If we may trust to the reports of private correspondence from France, this seems also to be the opinion of the Chief Consul himself; for the rumour is, that trusting no longer to the possession of Egypt, as a ground for demanding the restitution of all conquests we have made from the allies of the French Republic, he has within the last ten days, offered a new project of accommodation to the British Minister, more likely to conciliate the two nations.

We pretend not, however, to state this fact upon any other authority than the letters from Paris, upon which the rumour has been freely circulated here for several days.

By private letters from Vienna, we are assured the English Cabinet has prevailed on the House of Austria not to disarm until a general peace be effected, and that our government in return, will insist upon the modification of the treaty of Luneville. The negociation on this subject has been carried on thro' Thugut, and it is upon this business he has had so many interviews with the Emperor.

The Chief Consul is indisposed. We learn from Brussels that the Ex-directors Barras lives there in the most expensive style.

Thirty-two ships are now expected to arrive from Bengal, freighted entirely with rice. The quantity thus engaged amounts to 16,464.

No boat or individual coming from England, is allowed to enter a Dutch port.

Lord Keith is about to return from the Mediterranean; and it is said that Lord Nelson is to have the command in that sea.

The British August packet sailed for Halifax, on the 14th of that month.—Passengers, Mr. Cockran, Chief justice of Halifax, Col. Wetherall, Mr. Belcher, Mr. Inglis, Major Brenton, Patty and Sanderson.

VIENNA, AUG. 7.

Lord Minto received yesterday a courier from Lord Elgin, at Constantinople, and in the afternoon communicated the important intelligence which he had received officially, that the city and fortress of Cairo, with the whole corps of French troops which were there partly in garrison, and partly in an entrenched camp, had surrendered by capitulation to the united Turkish and British forces.—The French troops are made prisoners of war, and are to be conveyed to France. The joy of the inhabitants of Cairo at the signing of the capitulation was indescribable; and had it not been for the English, the populace would have proceeded to barbarous excess against the French prisoners. By the midst of June the Grand Visir, with the assistance of Gen. Hutchinson, and the rest of the combined forces, approached the forts, and threatened them with a general assault. The French judged it unadvisable to attempt to resist the attack of a force so much superior, and therefore laid down their arms rather than expose themselves to the consequences of the forts being carried by storm. The number of prisoners is estimated at about 6000, among which are included Generals, Assemblans, &c. In consequence of this event, the whole of Upper and Lower Egypt is in the power of the English & Turks, and Alexandria is the only place the Level remaining in the possession of the French. Immediately after the evacuation of the Grand Visier into Egypt, that commander, in conjunction with the English proposed to march immediately, with all the force that could be spared, against Alexandria, and it was expected that Gen. Menou would soon follow the example of his comrades at Cairo, and submit to a similar capitulation. The Porte and the public at Constantinople were expressing the utmost joy at this intelligence of the surrender of Cairo; and it is now considered as certain that the French must soon be driven entirely out of Egypt.

HAMBURGH, AUG. 8.

The intelligence of the fall of Cairo has caused the most lively joy to prevail here. As you have probably by this time, received the official account, it is unnecessary for me to enter into any particulars.

The number of troops who surrendered was 5000, and their determination to submit was accelerated by the dreadful ravages which the plague had for some time continued to make. I have this moment learned that the fall of Cairo rendering the situation of the enemy at Alexandria entirely hopeless, Gen. Menou proposed to capitulate, by which his troops were to be conveyed home to France. The proposal was instantly sent to Gen. Hutchinson, whose answer was not received at the departure of the last accounts, but there is no doubt of its having been agreed to. This important intelligence has been received from Constantinople, and as it seems extremely probable, I think I may venture to congratulate you on the entire extinguishment of the enemy in Egypt. The next advices are expected to bring the particulars.

CONSTANTINOPLE, June 20.

A French ship, with dispatches, has been taken by the English, on its way from Alexandria to France. General Menou had sent home on board it six French officers, and a number of private men, partly on account of illness, and partly for other reasons; on its passage, previous to its capture, the crew, for what cause is unknown, rose upon the officers and murdered them all.

The following is a particular account of the loss of the private Lowestoffe and part of the homeward bound English West India fleet, which was received some days since at the Commercial Advertiser—from a Mate on board received at Baltimore.

KINGSTON, (Jam.) Aug. 20.

Late on Tuesday evening arrived at Port Royal, his M. jesty's ship Bonetta, capt. Vansittart. It is with extreme concern we must communicate, that the bearer of an account of the loss of six sail of the last homeward bound fleet, and of the Lowestoffe frigate, which happened on the night of the 10th instant, on the greater and smaller islands of Heneaga. From the most diligent enquiry we have been able to make, we are enabled to state, that the fleet went off the north east end of the island, consisted of 91 sail, and that on the morning of the day on which this melancholy event took place, viz. 12 days after leaving Port Antonio, were pretty well collected; in the evening they were very much scattered, and the commodore considerably ahead: the ships then counted all safe to come up with the convoy and when very close upon her, the noise of the breakers which surrounded these islands were heard, and in a few minutes the Lowestoffe frigate, with the Jalouse, capt. Watt; Penny, captain Melville; Swansea, capt. Warden; Bobby Park, capt. Brown; and Bostock, capt. Kelly, ran ashore, and are totally lost. The money which was on board the Lowestoffe, is saved, but the purser and five men, who were in a boat engaged in that service, unfortunately perished. R. Waterhouse, and George Bogle, Esqrs. who were passengers on board the Lowestoffe, and about 400 seamen belonging to the different vessels arrived in the Bonetta. The Acasta proceeded to England with all the ships that could be collected together, which amounted to 18 sail.

Besides the list given above, there is an account of two vessels which ran ashore on Little Heneaga, one of them unknown, supposed to have gone down, the other confidently reported to be the Milford, captain Robley.

By information received by the Florida Packet, only 60 hours from Cape Francois, we learn that an American vessel arrived there, gave accounts of 11 sail being ashore on the Heneagas, and that when she passed the latter island, one vessel with English colours flying, union down, was at anchor in deep water near to another perfectly aground—she had cut away her masts.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, Oct. 31.

In the negociations for peace between France and England, the First Consul, it is said, insists particularly on the restoration of the Cape or Good Hope, & of the French ships taken at Toulon. These points occasion much difficulty on the part of England.

Accounts from Jamaica state, that a severe shock of an earthquake was felt at Kingston and the neighbouring towns on the 16th of August, which lasted about 20 seconds.

The French forces now in Italy, is said to exceed 120,000 men.

The Danish West India Islands recently captured by the British, were, according to report, to have been restored to them on the 20th Sept. inst.

The Vienna gazette contains an account of the death of the Elector of Cologne, who died in the night, between the 26th and 27th July at Herzendorf, in the 45th year of his age. He has bequeathed his whole personal property, estimated at 18 millions, to the Imperial General the Archduke Ferdinand, a son of the Archduke Ferdinand, formerly governor of Milan.

In the department of the Meuse (France) there were the last year 100,81 births, 7,180 deaths, 1,439 marriages, and 16 divorcements.

Late accounts from every quarter of England, give the most luxuriant description of the general aspect of the country. The crops are the most abundant that have been known for these 10 years, and the harvest is every where in comfortable forwardness.—The Paris journals also estimate the crop in France at one third more than last year, which was abundant.

The prospect of peace brightens, and the appearance of things indicates a speedy termination of the war.

It appears that the Spaniards are renewing hostilities on the American commerce in the Mediterranean, and have made several captures.

From the Quebec Gazette.

His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, has been pleased to consecrate the Revd. Mr. Mountain, ORDINARY to the Lord Bishop of Quebec, for the province of Lower Canada, the degree of Doctor in Divinity.

On Friday the 24th ult. was executed at Three Rivers, pursuant to sentence Charles Francoveau dit Lizotte Houle, aged 18 years, for the murder of Judith Houle. The circumstances were as follow:

On the morning of the 4th of June last, he went to the house of the mother of the deceased. He found her sitting below, and watching his opportunity, he knocked her down, by a blow with his fist on the back, and dragged her to the passage, and there with an axe which he found in the passage, gave her several blows on the head. The deceased came to her mother's assistance, and seeing what the prisoner was about, fled from the house towards a neighbour; the prisoner pursued, overtook, and knocked her down with his fist, & then with the axe gave her four blows on the head, of which the unfortunate died on 6th of June, on which day the died. It appears that she was seven months gone with child by him.

JAMES GREEN, Secretary.

THE LIEUT. GOVERNOR'S OFFICE.

York, 31st August, 1801.

WHEREAS many persons who, from various causes, had omitted to comply with the Order issued from this Office of the fourth day of September last, with respect to the Lots held by them in this Town, obtained further time for rendering obedience thereto; and whereas several persons have since been located in this Town whose Lots are still uncleared. JAMES GREEN, Sec'y.

the enemy being perfectly regardless of their own men, who must have suffered equally with us, it was therefore impossible to remain on board, even to burn them—but allow me to say, who have seen much service this war, that more determined persevering courage I never witnessed, and that nothing but the impossibility of being successful, from the causes I have mentioned, could have prevented me from having to congratulate their lordships—but altho' in value the loss of such gallant and good men, is incalculable, yet in point of numbers it has fallen short of my expectations—I must also beg leave to state, that greater zeal and more ardent desire to distinguish themselves by an attack on the enemy, was never shewn than by all the captains, officers and crews of all the different descriptions of vessels under my command.

The commanders of the Hunter and Greyhound revenue cutters, went in their boats in the most handsome and gallant manner to the attack. Among the many brave men wounded, I have with the deepest regret to place the name of my gallant good friend and able assistant, Capt. Edward T. Parker, also my flag Lieut. Frederick Langford, who has served with me many years; they were both wounded in attempting to board the French commodore. To capt. Gore, of the Medusa, I feel the highest obligations; and when their Lordships look at the loss of the Medusa on this occasion, they will agree with me that the honor of my flag, and the cause of their king and country, could never have been placed in more gallant hands. Captain Bedford, of the Leyden, with capt. Gore, very handsomely volunteered their services to serve under a master and commander; but I did not think it fair to the latter, and I only mention it to mark the zeal of those officers.—From the nature of the attack only a few prisoners were made: a lieutenant, eight seamen, and eight soldiers, we all they brought off. Herewith I send the reports of the several commanders of divisions, and a return of killed and wounded.

I have the honor to be, &c.

Total of the officers, seamen, and marines killed and wounded in the boats of his Majesty's ships and vessels in the attack of the French flotilla moored before Boulogne, on the night of the 15th Aug. 1801.

Aug. 31. Never since the commencement of the negociation was the correspondence more active between the two governments than it is at present. Two packets sailed for Calais on Friday—one arrived at Dover on Friday night, another yesterday. The latter brought us the Paris papers to the 28th inst.

Sept. 2. All the accounts from the places situated on the coasts of the French and Batavian Republics, agree in representing the alarm which has been excited by our operations, and by the vigilance of our cruizers, as very considerable.

Extract of a letter from an officer on board the Argo frigate, to his friend in Glasgow, dated Madeira, July 28, 1801.

"On the 4th of July our secret expedition sailed from Torbay, consisting of the following vessels, Argo of 44 guns, captain Bowden, commodore of the squadron, Carysfort frigate of 28 guns, Falcon sloop of war of 14 guns, with five sail of transports, having on board the 85th regiment, 1100 strong, commanded by Col. Clinton and Col. Gordon, and 50 of the artillery. We arrived at Madeira on the 26th, and sent an officer on shore to the Governor, but did not get a suitable answer. We immediately cleared our ships for action, and brought them close in upon the batteries. Upon this appearance, the Governor sent the British consul on board, requesting an interview with the commanders of the sea and land forces. They went on shore, and after a consultation of three hours, he granted permission to our troops to land, which they did on the 27th, and took possession of several of the forts. On the forts and batteries here there are about 100 pieces of cannon mounted. We will need more troops here. The men of war are to remain on this station till they be relieved by others from home."

NEW YORK, OCT. 10.

The packet Prince of Wales, arrived at Falmouth the 29th of August from Lisbon. Information by her states, that the idea of an invasion by the French appears to be given up. A few days prior to her sailing, great quantities of military stores were shipped on board transports, and it was said, in consequence of the French troops retiring from the frontiers, they were again relanded.

Deal, Sept. 1. Admiral Nelson still continues in the Downs, with his flag flying on board the Amazon frigate.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, Sept. 7.

We are happy to announce the safe arrival in England of the fleet which sailed from Quebec on the 15th June last under convoy of H. M. S. Hind.

An article from a Hamburgh paper of Aug. 11, says, "To-day we have received the ordinary post from Constantinople with letters to 10th July. These mention, that the scarcity of water in Alexandria had already come to such a pitch, that the soldiers received each but one beaker of water a day. Much heavy artillery had been ordered to Cairo. Gen. Hutchinson had received a fresh re-inforcement of 7,000 troops."

A Glasgow paragraph contains the postscript of a letter from a respectable Mercantile House in London to their correspondents in Glasgow, dated August 22, it is as follows:—"The 68 cannon are now firing, we understand on the news of Alexandria being taken, with 10,000 men."

By accounts from Leghorn it appears, that the English have taken a frigate & 6 transports in the Mediterranean after an obstinate resistance.

The government of the United States, in consequence of a declaration of war on the part of the Bey of Tripoly against said States, has sent a flotilla to prevent the injury of their commerce, and to form the agents of the powers at peace with them, that Tripoli is blockaded by said flotilla, and that all vessels attempting to enter that port, will be treated conformably to the laws of nations applicable to such cases.

The island of Zante is said to have been taken possession of by the British, at the request of the inhabitants.

A Treaty of peace has been signed at Paris between the French Republic and the Elector of Bavaria.

It is particularly remarkable that the fever with which the principal cities in the United States have formerly so severely suffered should have again made its appearance at this advanced season of the year; the time at which it usually disappeared.—Such however, appears to be the case in different States, and many persons have already fallen victims to its malignancy.—A similar disorder is said to rage in New Orleans.

The late Montreal and Quebec papers received by us are entirely silent on the subject of the piss reported to have been discovered in Montreal with a view of burning and pillaging that city—we hope it may prove altogether groundless.

Meteorological observations for the months of September and October are unavoidably postponed for want of room.

UPPER CANADA: Home District, } WHEREAS at a General Quarter Sessions of the Peace for the said District, holden at York in the month of April, 1800, it was Eugenie, off Boulogne, Aug. 16, 1801.

My Lord,

IN obedience to your Lordship's direction to state the proceedings of the firſt diviſion of boats which you did me the honor to place under my command, for the purpoſe of attacking the enemy's flotilla in the bay of Boulogne, I beg leave to acquaint you, that after leaving the Medusa laſt night, I found myſelf, on getting on ſhore, carried conſiderably by the rapidity of the tide, to the eaſtward of the above mentioned place; and finding that I was not likely to reach it in the order preſcribed, I gave directions for the boats to caſt each other off. By ſo doing I was enabled to get to the enemy's flotilla a little before the dawn of day, and in the beſt poſſible order attacked, cloſe to the pier head, a brig, which, after a ſharp conteſt, I carried. Previous to ſo doing, her cables were cut; but I was prevented from towing her out by her being ſecured with a chain, and in conſequence of a very heavy fire of muſquetry and grape ſhot that was directed at us from the ſhore, 3 luggers and another brig within half piſtol ſhot, and not ſeeing the leaſt proſpect of being able to get her off I was obligated to abandon her, and puſh out of the bay, as it was then completely day light.

The undaunted and reſolute behaviour of the officers, ſeamen and marines, was unparalleled; and I have to lament the loſs of ſeveral of thoſe brave men, a liſt of whom I encloſe you herewith.

I have the honor to be, &c.

Medusa, off Boulogne, Aug. 16, 1801.

My Lord,

After the complete arrangement which was made, the perfect good underſtanding and the regularity with which the boats you did me the honor to put under my command left the Medusa, I have an anxious feeling to explain to your Lordſhip the failure of our enterpriſe, that, on its outſet promiſed every ſucceſs.

Agreeable to your Lordſhip's directions, I proceeded with the ſecond diviſion of the boats under my command (the half of which were under the direction of Lieut. Williams ſenior of the Medusa) to attack the part of the enemy's flotilla appointed for me, and at half paſt 12 had the good fortune to find myſelf cloſe to them, when I ordered Lieut. Williams with his ſubdiviſion, to puſh on to attack the veſſels to the northward of me, while I, with the others, ran along ſide a large brig off the Mole head, wearing the commodore's pendant. It is at this moment I feel myſelf at a loſs for words to do juſtice to the officers and crew of the Medusa who were in the boat with me, and to Lieut. Langford, the officers and crew of the ſame ſhip who nobly ſeconded us in the barge, until all her crew were killed or wounded; and to the Honorable Mr. Cathcart who commanded the Medusa's cutter, and ſuſtained the attack with the greateſt intrepidity, until the deſparate ſituation I was left in obliged me to call him to the aſſiſtance of the ſufferers in my boat.

The boats were no ſooner along ſide than we attempted to board; but a very ſtrong netting, traced up to her lower yards, baffled all our endeavors, & an inſtantaneous diſcharge of her guns and ſmall arms from about two hundred ſoldiers on her gun wale, knocked myſelf, Mr. Kirby the maſter of the Medusa, and Mr. Gore, a midſhipman, with two thirds of the crew upon our backs into the boat, all either killed or wounded deſperately. The barge and cutter, being on the outſide, ſheered off with the tide, but the flat boat in which I was hung along ſide, and as there was not an officer or man left to govern her, muſt have fallen into the hands of the enemy, had not Mr. Cathcart taken her in tow, and carried her off.

Mr. Williams led his ſubdiviſion up to the enemy with the moſt intrepid gallantry, took one lugger and attacked a brig, while his crew, I am concerned to ſay, ſuffered equally with ourſelves, nearly the whole of his boat's crew were killed or wounded; Lieut. Pelly, who commanded the Medusa's launch, and the Honorable Mr. Maitland, midſhipman, were ſeverely wounded; and Mr. Wm. Briſtow, Maſter's Mate, in the Medusa's cutter, under Lieut. Stewart was killed.

I now feel it my duty to aſſure your Lordſhip, that nothing could ſurpaſs the zeal, courage & readineſs of every deſcription of officer and man under my command; and my words fall ſhort of their merits, tho' we could not accompliſh the object we were ordered to.

I have the honor to be, &c.

Ganet, Aug. 16, 1801.

My Lord,

On the night of the 15th inſtant, the third diviſion of boats, which I had the honor to command, aſſembled on board His Majeſty's ſhip York, agreeable to your Lordſhip's directions, and at 11 P. M. by ſignal from the Medusa, proceeded without loſs of time, to attack the enemy's flotilla off Boulogne, as directed by your Lordſhip; and as I thought it moſt adviſeable to attack the largeſt veſſel firſt, I loſt no time in making the attack; but in conſequence of my leading the diviſion, and the enemy opening a heavy fire from ſeveral batteries, thought it adviſeable to give the enemy as little time as poſſible, cut the tow rope and did not wait for the other boats, ſo that it was ſome little time before the heavy boats could get up; received ſo many ſhots through the boat's bottom, that I ſoon found her in a ſinking ſtate, and as it was not poſſible to ſtop ſo many ſhot holes, was obliged with the men, to take another boat, and have the pleaſure to acquaint your Lordſhip that I received particular ſupport from the boats of His Majeſty's ſhip York, which ſoon came up with the reſt of the diviſion I had the honor to command; but finding no proſpect of ſucceſs, and the number of men killed and wounded in the different boats, and the conſtant fire from the ſhower of grape and ſmall arms, tho't it for the good of his Majeſty's ſervice to withdraw the boats between two and three in the morning, as we could not board her, although every effort was made.

I have the honor to be, &c.

His Majeſty's ſhip [illegible], Sunday, Aug. 16, 1801.

My Lord,

In conſequence of directions received from your Lordſhip, I laſt night, on the ſignal being made on board the Medusa left this ſhip with the boats of the 4th diviſion, formed with two cloſe lines, and immediately joined the other diviſions under the ſtern of the Medusa, from thence proceeded to put your Lordſhip's orders into execution, attacking the weſternmoſt part of the enemy's flotilla, but notwithſtanding every exertion made, owing to the rapidity of the tide, we could not until near day-light, get to the weſtward of any part of the enemy's line; on approaching the eaſtern part of which, in order to aſſiſt the firſt diviſion then engaged, we met them returning. Under theſe circumſtances, and the day breaking apace, I judged it prudent to direct the officers commanding the different boats to return to their reſpective ſhips.

I have the honor to be, &c.

"Vice Admiral Lord Nelſon has the greateſt ſatisfaction in ſending to the Captains, Officers and Men under his command, that were employed in the late attempt on the enemy's flotilla off Boulogne, an extract of a letter which he has received from the Firſt Lord of the Admiralty, not only approving of their zeal and perſevering courage, but beſtowing the higheſt praiſe on them.

"The Vice-Admiral begs to aſſure them, that the enemy will not have long reaſon to boaſt of their ſecurity: for he truſts, ere long, to aſſiſt them in perſon in a way which will completely annihilate the whole of them—Lord Nelſon is convinced, that if it had been poſſible for men to have brought the enemy's flotilla out, the men that were employed to do ſo, would have accompliſhed it. The moment the enemy have the audacity to caſt off the chains which fix their veſſels to the ground, that moment, Lord Nelſon is well perſuaded they will be conducted by his brave followers to a Britiſh port, or ſent to the bottom.

Extract of a letter from Earl St. Vincent, to Lord Viſcount Nelſon, K. B. dated the 17th inſt.

It is not given to us to command ſuccceſs—Your Lordſhip and the gallant Officers and Men under your orders moſt certainly deſerve it: and I cannot ſufficiently expreſs my admiration of the zeal and perſevering courage with which this gallant enterprize was followed up, lamenting moſt ſincerely the loſs ſuſtained in it. The manner in which the enemy's flotilla was made faſt to the ground, and to each other, could not have been forſeen: the higheſt praiſe is due to your Lordſhip, and all under your command, who were actors in the gallant attempt.

"In conſequence of an expreſs from London, received late laſt night, Lord Nelſon with the undermentioned ſquadron, ſailed from the Downs this morning, with a wind not very favorable, and are now out of ſight. The deſtination of this armament is all mere conjecture: the movement was certainly rather unexpected, as his Lordſhip had ordered ſitting and ſleeping rooms to be kept for him at the Three King's hotel, for the reception of ſome friends that he expected to viſit him about the middle of the week.

Dover, Aug 23.

The French poſition at Boulogne is very ſtrong, being covered by [illegible] batteries on ſhore, and the aſſiſtance of 17,000 troops encamped, which together with the danger of approaching the ſhore near enough with large ſhips, renders any attack very difficult. The French have much the ſame ſort of craft all along ſhore to the weſtward, as they have at Boulogne, which are laid, it is reported, as traps to draw our ſhips and men into a greater danger unforeſeen. A ſhip lately got two men wounded and her rigging much cut, in going to cannonade ſome gun boats. The French batteries being on the cliffs have a great advantage of our ſhips, and are ſo marked as not to be perceived until they open their fire. Our cruizers continue to block up Calais and Boulogne.

Aug. 30.

Lord Nelſon has ſhifted his flag to the Amazon frigate, and is expected to ſail to his rendez-vous, under Dungeneſs, to be in readineſs, ſhould the enemy make any move.

A veſſel which is come out of Boulogne, ſtates, that a ſtrong ſpirit of mutiny has manifeſted itſelf among the troops encamped at Boulogne, partly owing to the troops not being regularly paid, and partly owing to their diſlike of embarking in the flotilla.

LONDON, Aug. 25.

It is very extraordinary that we have remained ſo long uninformed of all the proceedings of Gantheaume ſince his ſailing from Toulon. A letter, however was received on Saturday laſt, from an officer on board Lord Keith's fleet, dated of Cape Roſſo, June 12, which ſtates that Gantheaume had appeared on the Coaſt of Egypt on the 6th, and that on the 10th, 5 veſſels were between the Britiſh ſquadron and the ſhore, one corvette got in (no troops in her) the other four were taken, with troops ammunition, &c. The priſoners ſtated that Gantheaume had ſent three ſhips of the line and a frigate to Toulon with ſick men. He had appeared upon the coaſt with four ſhips of the line and a frigate, with ſome ſmaller veſſels and three thouſand troops on board, very ſickly. He intended to land to the weſt of Arabs town, and ordered 10lbs. of bread, and two bottles of water for each man. By a miſtake in his reckoning, however, he anchored at Licolte, 50 leagues to the weſt, and there heard from a Greek, that Lord Keith was off Arabs Town. He examined the coaſt, and found it impracticable. He was now diſcovered by ſome of the frigates; upon which he cut his cables and ſtood to ſea, after which time nothing more was heard of him.

Advices have been received in town of a later date than the diſpatches from Genl. Hutchinſon. They ſtate that the Convention of Cairo had been already begun to be carried into execution, and that the two Engliſh and French armies were returning towards Roſetta, marching in parallel lines. Of Menou's determination in conſequence of the convention of Cairo, their advices make no mention.

MAJOR ANDRE'S TREE.

The renowned Tulip Tree at Greenſburgh or Tarrytown, under which Major Andre was taken, was on Saturday the 31ſt ult. ſtruck with lightening. It was rent almoſt exactly in two, from the top to the bottom. Near the root it was hollow, at which part it took fire, and blazed up for about twelve or fifteen feet through the fiſſure, for a few minutes, when the eaſtern half fell. The remainder extending over the road, ſtood in ſo menacing an attitude, as to render it neceſſary to cut it down. This remarkable tree meaſured twenty-ſix feet in circumference at the baſe, was one hundred and eleven feet in height, and ſix feet in diameter.

It has often awakened the ſympathy of the feeling traveller by recalling the memory of a gallant but unfortunate enemy. As Americans, we could not but rejoice at that event, which, while it blaſted his flattering proſpects, and configned him to an ignominious death, ſtill reſcued our country from deſtruction. Yet diſcriminating in our emotions, and juſt to his individual merits, we mingled with his friends and relations the ſigh of regret to the recollection of his virtues—while our boſoms have ſwelled with indignation, and our lips have imprecated curſes on the traitor whoſe villainy occaſioned his untimely fate.

It is rather a ſingular co-incidence, that the news of Arnold's death arrived at Greenſburgh the ſame day on which the lightening deſtroyed this tree. Its deſtruction has occaſioned general regret through the ſurrounding country, and its fragments have been carefully collected and preſerved by the inhabitants.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, Sept. 14.

We mentioned in our laſt that the iſland of Zante had been taken poſſeſſion of by the Britiſh—the following briefdeſcription of it may not prove unintereſting to the public:

ZANTE is an iſland of the Mediterranean, near the coaſt of the Morea, 17 miles S. E. of the iſland of Cephalonia. It is 24 miles long and 12 broad, and very pleaſant and fertile. Its principal riches conſiſts in currants, with which it abounds: they are cultivated in a large plain, under the ſhelter of mountains on the ſhore, which gives the ſun greater power to bring them to maturity. Here are alſo the fineſt peaches in the world, each of which weighs eight or ten ounces: alſo excellent figs and oil. In ſhort, it would be a perfect paradiſe if wood were not ſo dear, though this iſland was formerly full of forests. The natives ſpeak both Greek and Italian, though there are very few Roman Catholics among them; but they have a biſhop as well as the Greeks. In one part of this iſland is a place which ſhakes when trod upon, like a quagmire; and a ſpring, which throws out a great deal of bitumen, eſpecially at the time of an earthquake. This iſland belonged to the Venetians, who had conſtantly a governor reſiding in the fortreſs. There are about 50 villages, but no other large town than Zante, which is ſeated on the E. ſide of the iſland, and has a good harbor. It contains near 20,000 inha-

The Right Honorable Lord Viſcount Nelſon K. B. Commander in Chief, &c. &c.

His Majeſty's ſhip [illegible], Sunday, Aug. 16, 1801.

My Lord,

In conſequence of directions received from your Lordſhip, I laſt night, on the ſignal being made on board the Medusa left this ſhip with the boats of the 4th diviſion, formed with two cloſe lines, and immediately joined the other diviſions under the ſtern of the Medusa, from thence proceeded to put your Lordſhip's orders into execution, attacking the weſternmoſt part of the enemy's flotilla, but notwithſtanding every exertion made, owing to the rapidity of the tide, we could not until near day-light, get to the weſtward of any part of the enemy's line; on approaching the eaſtern part of which, in order to aſſiſt the firſt diviſion then engaged, we met them returning. Under theſe circumſtances, and the day breaking apace, I judged it prudent to direct the officers commanding the different boats to return to their reſpective ſhips.

I have the honor to be, &c.

ROB. JONES.

P. S. None killed or wounded on board any of the fourth diviſion.

NELSON and BRONTE.

Medusa, Aug. 16, 1801.

Medusa, Downs, Aug. 18.

"Vice Admiral Lord Nelſon has the greateſt ſatisfaction in ſending to the Captains, Officers and Men under his command, that were employed in the late attempt on the enemy's flotilla off Boulogne, an extract of a letter which he has received from the Firſt Lord of the Admiralty, not only approving of their zeal and perſevering courage, but beſtowing the higheſt praiſe on them.

"The Vice-Admiral begs to aſſure them, that the enemy will not have long reaſon to boaſt of their ſecurity: for he truſts, ere long, to aſſiſt them in perſon in a way which will completely annihilate the whole of them—Lord Nelſon is convinced, that if it had been poſſible for men to have brought the enemy's flotilla out, the men that were employed to do ſo, would have accompliſhed it. The moment the enemy have the audacity to caſt off the chains which fix their veſſels to the ground, that moment, Lord Nelſon is well perſuaded they will be conducted by his brave followers to a Britiſh port, or ſent to the bottom.

(Signed) NELSON and BRONTE".

Extract of a letter from Earl St. Vincent, to Lord Viſcount Nelſon, K. B. dated the 17th inſt.

It is not given to us to command ſuccceſs—Your Lordſhip and the gallant Officers and Men under your orders moſt certainly deſerve it: and I cannot ſufficiently expreſs my admiration of the zeal and perſevering courage with which this gallant enterprize was followed up, lamenting moſt ſincerely the loſs ſuſtained in it. The manner in which the enemy's flotilla was made faſt to the ground, and to each other, could not have been forſeen: the higheſt praiſe is due to your Lordſhip, and all under your command, who were actors in the gallant attempt.

DEAL, Aug. 23.

"In conſequence of an expreſs from London, received late laſt night, Lord Nelſon with the undermentioned ſquadron, ſailed from the Downs this morning, with a wind not very favorable, and are now out of ſight. The deſtination of this armament is all mere conjecture: the movement was certainly rather unexpected, as his Lordſhip had ordered ſitting and ſleeping rooms to be kept for him at the Three King's hotel, for the reception of ſome friends that he expected to viſit him about the middle of the week.

Dover, Aug 23.

The French poſition at Boulogne is very ſtrong, being covered by [illegible] batteries on ſhore, and the aſſiſtance of 17,000 troops encamped, which together with the danger of approaching the ſhore near enough with large ſhips, renders any attack very difficult. The French have much the ſame ſort of craft all along ſhore to the weſtward, as they have at Boulogne, which are laid, it is reported, as traps to draw our ſhips and men into a greater danger unforeſeen. A ſhip lately got two men wounded and her rigging much cut, in going to cannonade ſome gun boats. The French batteries being on the cliffs have a great advantage of our ſhips, and are ſo marked as not to be perceived until they open their fire. Our cruizers continue to block up Calais and Boulogne.

Aug. 30.

Lord Nelſon has ſhifted his flag to the Amazon frigate, and is expected to ſail to his rendez-vous, under Dungeneſs, to be in readineſs, ſhould the enemy make any move.

A veſſel which is come out of Boulogne, ſtates, that a ſtrong ſpirit of mutiny has manifeſted itſelf among the troops encamped at Boulogne, partly owing to the troops not being regularly paid, and partly owing to their diſlike of embarking in the flotilla.

LONDON, Aug. 25.

It is very extraordinary that we have remained ſo long uninformed of all the proceedings of Gantheaume ſince his ſailing from Toulon. A letter, however was received on Saturday laſt, from an officer on board Lord Keith's fleet, dated of Cape Roſſo, June 12, which ſtates that Gantheaume had appeared on the Coaſt of Egypt on the 6th, and that on the 10th, 5 veſſels were between the Britiſh ſquadron and the ſhore, one corvette got in (no troops in her) the other four were taken, with troops ammunition, &c. The priſoners ſtated that Gantheaume had ſent three ſhips of the line and a frigate to Toulon with ſick men. He had appeared upon the coaſt with four ſhips of the line and a frigate, with ſome ſmaller veſſels and three thouſand troops on board, very ſickly. He intended to land to the weſt of Arabs town, and ordered 10lbs. of bread, and two bottles of water for each man. By a miſtake in his reckoning, however, he anchored at Licolte, 50 leagues to the weſt, and there heard from a Greek, that Lord Keith was off Arabs Town. He examined the coaſt, and found it impracticable. He was now diſcovered by ſome of the frigates; upon which he cut his cables and ſtood to ſea, after which time nothing more was heard of him.

Advices have been received in town of a later date than the diſpatches from Genl. Hutchinſon. They ſtate that the Convention of Cairo had been already begun to be carried into execution, and that the two Engliſh and French armies were returning towards Roſetta, marching in parallel lines. Of Menou's determination in conſequence of the convention of Cairo, their advices make no mention.

MAJOR ANDRE'S TREE.

The renowned Tulip Tree at Greenſburgh or Tarrytown, under which Major Andre was taken, was on Saturday the 31ſt ult. ſtruck with lightening. It was rent almoſt exactly in two, from the top to the bottom. Near the root it was hollow, at which part it took fire, and blazed up for about twelve or fifteen feet through the fiſſure, for a few minutes, when the eaſtern half fell. The remainder extending over the road, ſtood in ſo menacing an attitude, as to render it neceſſary to cut it down. This remarkable tree meaſured twenty-ſix feet in circumference at the baſe, was one hundred and eleven feet in height, and ſix feet in diameter.

It has often awakened the ſympathy of the feeling traveller by recalling the memory of a gallant but unfortunate enemy. As Americans, we could not but rejoice at that event, which, while it blaſted his flattering proſpects, and configned him to an ignominious death, ſtill reſcued our country from deſtruction. Yet diſcriminating in our emotions, and juſt to his individual merits, we mingled with his friends and relations the ſigh of regret to the recollection of his virtues—while our boſoms have ſwelled with indignation, and our lips have imprecated curſes on the traitor whoſe villainy occaſioned his untimely fate.

It is rather a ſingular co-incidence, that the news of Arnold's death arrived at Greenſburgh the ſame day on which the lightening deſtroyed this tree. Its deſtruction has occaſioned general regret through the ſurrounding country, and its fragments have been carefully collected and preſerved by the inhabitants.

THE ORACLE.

YORK, Saturday, Sept. 14.

We mentioned in our laſt that the iſland of Zante had been taken poſſeſſion of by the Britiſh—the following briefdeſcription of it may not prove unintereſting to the public:

ZANTE is an iſland of the Mediterranean, near the coaſt of the Morea, 17 miles S. E. of the iſland of Cephalonia. It is 24 miles long and 12 broad, and very pleaſant and fertile. Its principal riches conſiſts in currants, with which it abounds: they are cultivated in a large plain, under the ſhelter of mountains on the ſhore, which gives the ſun greater power to bring them to maturity. Here are alſo the fineſt peaches in the world, each of which weighs eight or ten ounces: alſo excellent figs and oil. In ſhort, it would be a perfect paradiſe if wood were not ſo dear, though this iſland was formerly full of forests. The natives ſpeak both Greek and Italian, though there are very few Roman Catholics among them; but they have a biſhop as well as the Greeks. In one part of this iſland is a place which ſhakes when trod upon, like a quagmire; and a ſpring, which throws out a great deal of bitumen, eſpecially at the time of an earthquake. This iſland belonged to the Venetians, who had conſtantly a governor reſiding in the fortreſs. There are about 50 villages, but no other large town than Zante, which is ſeated on the E. ſide of the iſland, and has a good harbor. It contains near 20,000 inhabitants; and the houses are low on account of the frequent earthquakes.

JAMES GREEN, Sec'y.

LONDON, AUG. 22.

Lord Nelson at 6 o'clock on Saturday morning, made the signal for all commanders to come on board of the Medusa, where they received the following orders:—That every vessel in the fleet was to send her large boats well armed with pikes, pole-axes, and cutlasses; every officer and sailor to be dressed in blue jackets and trowsers, with a white belt buckled over the jacket, for the cutlass; each boat carrying a carcase to burn the enemy's vessels, in case we could not succeed in carrying them off after boarding.

Lord Nelson's name seems to have struck terror into the minds of our enemies along the French and Dutch coasts. Whenever they perceive a sail or two in the offing, a general alarm follows, and Lord Nelson is instantly expected. Gen. Angerau has been visiting the whole coasts of Holland, and putting every thing in a state of safety against the British.

Lord Nelson, when he visited the wounded in the Royal Naval Hospital at Deal, was observed to pay particular attention to every individual, inquiring their cases, and consoling them with promises that he would send them good news shortly. Of a seaman whom he recollected, his Lordship asked him how he was? The gallant tar replied, he had lost his arm. To which the Admiral said, "Never mind that, I have lost an arm, and perhaps will shortly lose a leg—they cannot be lost in a better cause than fighting for our country." This had such an effect on the sailors, that several of them exclaimed, they only regretted their wounds, as it prevented them accompanying him in another attack on their enemies, the French.

The Gentlemen of Lloyd's Coffee-House, always forward in rewarding the naval defenders of their country, have commenced a subscription for the relief of those who have fallen, or may fall under the command of Lord Nelson, in frustrating the efforts of the enemy to invade our shores. Such a conduct is most liberal and judicious. We are amazed by the grandeur of the victory of the Nile; but we are still more interested in the protection of our very doors at home.

Sept.

The Hon. Mr. Paget, attended by Mr. Eden, the Messenger, sailed yesterday morning from Dover for Calais. Mr. Paget, as our readers know, is going to replace Lord Minto at Vienna; but it is rumoured that he will remain a short time at Paris.

Mr. Tyrwhitt goes as secretary to Mr. Paget.

Dispatches were on Monday night sent off to Admiral Pole in the Mediterranean, who takes the command of that station, in the room of Lord Keith.

A letter received from Bengal informs us, that the Siamese army consists of a very considerable number of cavalry, & is accompanied by upwards of 400 elephants. An alarming insurrection is said to prevail in Columpi, whither the army is directing its march, together with the southern army, which had been encamped at Porcella. Zemaun Shah has at length formed an alliance, offensive and defensive with the Seiks. He has engaged to give up all the places he reduced in his late incursion into the territories of the Seiks, and to make compensation for the ravages committed by his army at Lahore. The natives of Candahar and Cabul are amongst the hardiest in Asia, and Zemaun Shah has a well appointed army of 100,000 men.

According to private letters received from Bombay, the Mahrattas and the Rajah of Coorar, whose country has been almost depopulated by war, have at length adjusted their differences. The Rajah has engaged to pay two thousand rupees, and the Mahrattas undertake to release 20 bullocks and buffaloes, which they had taken. The Mahrattas had possessed themselves of Mirzapoor, the ancient capital of the country. The Rajah of Corlar is about fifty years of age, and has all the appearance of the Cabban Mountaineer, but he is of a very mild disposition.

Porto-Ferrajo, which has made so gallant a stand against the French, has had no other commander during the siege than Mr. Isaac Grant, late English vice consul at Leghorn, who being driven from thence when the French last entered it, took refuge in Porto-Ferrajo, and at his instigation the inhabitants and a few English (there being no regular garison) have nobly defended themselves against the Republicans, beating them off twice with great slaughter in attempts to storm it. Their gallantry is entitled to our particular admiration, and no doubt will not pass unnoticed.

The choice of a new Elector of Cologne, on which the Chapter are now employed, will not be easy. If it be true that that Prince weighed nearly five hundred weight, it will be a difficult matter to find any one to fill the vacancy.

Monday the Hon. Mr. Paget left town for Vienna. He has the permission of the French Government to traverse through France, in order to avoid the inconvenience of the passage to Hamburgh. The favour was granted at the request of Mr. Otto who was applied to by Mr. Paget to procure it.

Letters from Vienna of the 13th say, Count Philip Cobenzel and Count Saurau were immediately to take leave of the Emperor; the one to proceed as ambassador to Paris, the other in the same capacity to St. Petersburgh.

Champigny, the new French Minister to Vienna, is to reside in the hotel inhabited by the French Ministers under the ancient Monarchy.

Mr. Murray, the American Minister, has returned to the Hague from Paris.

Field Marshal Lascy, the oldest of the Austrian Generals, died a few days ago at Baden.

DEAL, AUG. 18.

Lord Nelson, with that humanity, which has characterized his naval career, has paid frequent visits to the wounded officers at sick quarters here, who so nobly shed their blood under his orders at the attack on the French flotilla off Boulogne. A number of the wounded have died since their being landed, among whom are Messrs. Williams and Gore, two midshipmen belonging to his Majesty's ship Medusa, and they were both this morning interred in one grave. His Lordship followed their bodies to the ground, with eight Captains in the Navy, preceded by a file of Marines, who fired three vollies over the place of their interment. An immense crowd of spectators were present to witness this last tribute of respect to the memory of two gallant young officers, who had they lived, would have been an ornament to that profession in which they so nobly fell.

His Lordship was sensibly affected during the funeral and was seen to shed tears.

It is reported that the fleet are to sail again for Boulogne to-morrow morning.

Captain Parker, one of Lord Nelson's Aids-de-camp, is severely wounded in his thigh; he fell while in the act of boarding a brig, and with heroic gallantry exclaimed to his brother seamen, that it was the fortune of war. Lieut. Pelly, second of the Medusa, was shot in his shoulder, and on finding himself unable to fight any longer, desired one of the sailors to take his hanger, and use it like a Briton. Such is the valor with which our brave tars conducted themselves, under the most trying circumstances.

PLYMOUTH, AUG. 25.

Letters from Dartmouth state the arrival there of a large American ship with East India goods, worth 50,000l. per manifest, from the Mauritius to New York and Havre-de-Grace. She has on board a French supercargo, and ten French passengers; she was detained by the Admiral Mitchell cutter.

FROM THE INDIA GAZETTE.

Calcutta (India) March 2.

A neat imposition to a considerable amount was a few days ago practised upon a dealer in pearls, by an artful swindler, calling himself the Kidmutgar of an officer in Fort William. His master he told the merchant, had sent him in quest of some fine pearls, and if he possessed any of that description, he would attend him with them into the Fort, he might probably find a purchaser. The merchant consenting, put up some of his finest pearls, and followed the pretended servant to the South Barracks; where having arrived, his companion left him at the bottom of the stairs, saying he would give notice of his arrival and introduce him immediately. In a few minutes he returned with information that his master had gone out, leaving instructions with his mistress, for whom the pearls were intended, to select and purchase such as she might approve. Here, however, a difficulty occurred: the Lady's rank was too high to allow a stranger's admission into her presence. The rogue offered to obviate it by himself carrying the pearls for his mistress's examination; but to a proposition of this kind from an entire stranger, the merchant very naturally objected. During the colloquy, another man came up, as if casually, and entering into conversation begged to accommodate matters by remaining as security for the return of the messenger, whom he stated to be an old fellow servant, and to his knowledge a perfect honest man. Unsuspicious of any collusion, and no other mode appearing of disposing of his commodity, the merchant unwarily agreed, and put pearls to the amount of seventeen hundred Rupees into the swindler's hands. He ascended the stair case, and as it might have been foreseen, he has never since made his appearance.

After waiting a considerable time and finding there was no hopes of the man's return, the unfortunate dupe adopted the only remedy in his power by seizing the security, and carrying him to the Police Office.—Upon interrogation before the Magistrate, he denied any concern in the theft, at which he expressed the deepest regret; acknowledged that he had made himself responsible for the value of the pearls, but stated his utter inability to restore to large a property, and trusted that he should not be punished merely for having placed an ill judged confidence. No doubt can of course be entertained of his being an accomplice in the fraud and he is detained in custody until the matter can be further investigated.

March 9.

The pearls stolen from the merchant in Fort William as communicated in our last, have been recovered, and the swindler named Boxon, apprehended.—He had disposed of the pearls to two respectable merchants at Chinsurah, and was himself taken at Sulkya. The magistrates have committed him to take his trial at the ensuing sessions.

A very minute detail has been transmitted to us, by a correspondent on the spot, of the Ceylon Pearl Fishery in all its stages, some of which are truly singular and remarkable. It appears that the fear of sharks is the cause of a great deal of interruption to the Fishery, the divers being extremely timid & superstitious; every one of them, even the most expert, entertain a dread of the sharks, and will not on any account descend until the conjuror has performed his ceremonies. This prejudice is so deeply rooted in their minds, that government is obliged to keep two such conjurors always in pay, to remove the fears of the divers. The manner of enchanting consists in a number of prayers learned by heart, that nobody, probably not even the conjuror himself, understands, which he, standing on the shore, continues muttering and grumbling from sun rise until the boats return. During this period they are obliged to abstain from food and sleep, otherwise their prayers would be of no avail; they are however allowed to drink, which privilege they indulge in a high degree, and are frequently so giddy as to be rendered very unfit for devotion. Some of the conjurors accompany the divers in their boats, which pleases them very much, as they have their protection near at hand.

"Nevertheless I was told (says our correspondent) that in one of the preceding Fisheries, a diver lost his leg by a shark, and when the head conjuror was called to an account for the accident, he replied, that an old witch had just come from the coast, who from envy and malice, had exerted this disaster by a counter conjuration, which made fruitless his skill, and which he was informed of too late; but he afterwards shewed his superiority, by enchanting the sharks so effectually, that though they appeared to most of the divers, they were unable to open their mouths. During my stay, continues he, at Condarchy, no accident of this kind happened. If a shark is seen, the divers immediately make a signal, which, on perceiving, all the boats return immediately. A diver who trod upon a hammer-oyster, and was somewhat wounded, thought he was bit by a shark; consequently made the usual signal, which caused all the boats to return; for which mistake he was afterwards punished. The largest and most perfect pearl taken last season, was about the size of a large pistol bullet.

NEW YORK, OCT. 27.

A letter dated London, Aug. 27, states positively, that Lord St. Helens has been ordered to repair, with speed, to Paris, where he will be received as Ambassador from the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, as negociator there for peace with the Consulate.

MISCELLANEOUS SELECTIONS,

From late London papers.

The celebrated Victor Hughes is said in the French papers to have gained the highest degree of popularity in America. Since his elevation to the rank of Commissary General of Cayenne, he has wholly changed the aspect of the colony by his economical and wise regulations. The Chief Consul has given instructions to the Minister at War to express to him his approbation of his services. We have already heard a good deal of the merits of Barrington as an officer of justice in Botany Bay, and who knows but we may see the day when he will receive the public thanks for his exertions in improving the state of this flourishing colony!

There is now at Tours, a veteran, aged 103, who has been employed in all the wars of Europe, almost from the beginning of the late century. At the siege of Kehl, in 1788, he received no less than seven same wounds, six of which were on the head at the battle of Minden, so honorable to the British name.—At the battle of Fontenoy, he saw three of his brothers perish by his side—and in America his son lost his life. Since the revolution he has likewise distinguished himself; and during his whole military career, he never but once received the slightest punishment, and on that occasion he erred from the excess of his courage.

After the termination of the war in Egypt, the English and Turks are to undertake an expedition for the purpose of curtailing and confining the depredations of the Barbary powers. It has always been a matter of surprise and regret that those powers have been suffered to carry on their predatory warfare so long.

The human heart, in one hour, beats 3600 times; discharges 7200 ounces of blood; and conveys through it the whole mass of blood in the body not less than 25 times. In the space of four and twenty hours the whole blood in the body circulates 600 times through the heart.

The ancients knew how to indurate copper, so as to make it fit for sabres, swords, poignards. Stone cutters instruments, &c. Messrs. Minger, Dire, Hjelm, have just discovered that they effected this by alloying the copper in various proportions with tin. A po gnard of this sort, lately found in Scandinavia, contained fifteen parts of tin to eighty-four of copper.

The wandering Arabs of Barbary are often more attentive than we to the instruction of their children to the knowledge of letters. An empty tent is appropriated in each camp, for the purposes of religious worship, for the entertainment of strangers, and for a place of morning instruction to the children. In that tent all the children assemble every morning and before day-break; and are by an Iman, or other religious person, taught to read the prayers from the Koran, which are put before them in Arabic characters inscribed on boards and also to commit those prayers to memory.

The King of Prussia is about to introduce a very salutary regulation in favour of the Jews in his dominions, by which they will henceforth be received as citizens or burghers, and permitted to learn every handicraft and art. Should the Christian masters refuse to take Jews as apprentices or journeymen, they are to form guilds of their own, and all the Jews will then be ordered to employ them in preference to the Christians.

Citizen Delquinemare, of Paris, has discovered a method of rendering linen impenetrable to air and water; and constructing buckets therewith, to serve instead of those made of leather usually employed in extinguishing fires. He has provided with this kind of fire buckets, the palace of the Consul, and the Theatre of Arts, &c. These have been kept full of water, and one cannot perceive that the floor on which they stand has received thereby the least mark of moisture. To the advantage of being the most durable, these buckets unite that of being the cheapest. Labour, commerce and arts will be much benefited by this important discovery.

N. B. Where the blanks appear no observations were made.

By a letter from Quebec, we learn, that a small brig, commanded by Capt. Darling, the principal part of the cargo of which consisted of forty horses, lately sailed from that port for the West Indies.—The pilot had been but a few minutes discharged, when the vessel overset, and every soul on board (upwards of twenty) perished.

An Irishman not long since, on the Island of Newfoundland, actuated by a fit of jealousy, most shockingly butchered his wife, six children and his father and mother-in-law. The monster was seized by a British officer, while attempting to carry his fury still farther.

PETERSBURGH, Aug. 2.

Extract from the copy of the Convention with the Court of London, signed at Petersburgh the 5th and 17th June, 1801.

In the name of the holy and indivisible Trinity.

THE mutual desire of his Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias, and of His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, being not only come to a fair understanding upon the differences which have lately interrupted the harmony & the relations of friendship which subsisted between the two powers, but also to prevent in future by frank and precise explanations relations respecting the navigation of their respective subjects, the renewal of similar altercation, and the evil consequences which might result therefrom, have agreed upon the points and articles following:

I. There shall be henceforth between his Imperial Majesty of all the Russias and his Britannic Majesty and their subjects, a good and unalterable friendship.

II. His Majesty the Emperor and his Britannic Majesty, declare their resolution to cause to be executed in the most rigorous manner the regulations respecting the commerce of contraband by their subjects with the enemies of either of the high contracting parties.

III. His Imperial Majesty of all the Russias, and His Britannic Majesty, having determined to put under a safeguard the liberty of the commerce and navigation of their subjects, in case either of them should be at war while the other remains neutral, have agreed,

1. That the vessels of the neutral power shall be freely navigated to the ports and on the coasts of the nations at war.

2. That the effects embarked on the neutral vessels shall be free, excepting the contraband of war and the properties of enemies.

3. That to prevent any equivocation or misunderstanding upon what is to be considered contraband of war, his Imperial Majesty of all the Russias and His Britannic Majesty declare, conformable to the 11th article of the treaty of commerce concluded between the two crowns the 10th—21st February 1797, that they acknowledge the following articles to be such, viz. cannons mortars, fire-arms, pistols, bombs, grenades, bullets, balls, fusils, matches, powder, salt-petre, sulphur, cuirasses, pikes, swords, belts, cartridge-boxes, fuddles and bridles, excepting however, such quantity of said articles as may be necessary for the defence of the vessel & of the ship's company.

4. That to determine what characterises a blockaded port, this denomination is given to such only as when, by the disposition of the power who attacks it, with vessels at anchor, or sufficiently near, there is a manifest danger in entering.

5. That the vessels of the neutral power cannot be stopped but upon any just cause and evident facts; that they shall be adjudged without delay, and that the proceedings shall be uniform, prompt and legal.

IV. The two high contracting parties, desirous also to prevent every subject of contention in future by limiting the right of searching merchant vessels under convoy to such cases only as when the belligerent power might experience a real prejudice from the abuse of the neutral flag, have agreed,

1. That the right of searching merchant vessels belonging to the subjects of either of the contracting powers, and sailing under convoy of a ship of war of the same power, will not be exercised but by ships of war of the belligerent party, and shall never extend to privateers, or any other vessels not belonging to the fleet of their Imperial and Royal Majesties, though armed by their subjects for the purposes of war.

2. The owners of all merchant vessels belonging to the subjects of either of the contracting sovereigns, intending to sail under convoy of a ship of war shall be obliged before they receive their sailing orders to produce to the commander of the convoying ship their passports and certificates of sea letters, in the form annexed to the present treaty.

3. That when such ships of war, having merchant vessels under convoy, shall be met with by a ship or ships of war belonging to the other contracting party which shall be in a state of war, to prevent any ill consequences they shall keep out of the reach of cannon-shot, unless the state of the sea or the place of meeting should render the contrary inevitable; and the commander of the ship of the belligerent power, shall send a boat on board the convoying ship, when they shall reciprocally proceed to the examination of the papers and certificates which are to shew on the one part that the neutral ship of war is authorised to take under escort such and such merchant vessels of his nation, loaded with such a cargo, and for such a port; on the other part, that the ship of war of the belligerent party belongs to the Imperial or Royal fleet of their Majesties.

4. This examination being finished, there shall be no occasion for any search if the papers are allowed to be in due form, and if there appear no reasonable ground for suspicion. On the contrary, the commander of the neutral ship of war (on being duly required by the commander of the ship or ships of the belligerent power) shall bring to and detain his convoy during the time necessary for searching the vessels composing it; and he shall have the privilege to nominate and appoint one or more officers to assist in searching the said vessels, which shall be done in his presence to each merchant vessel, conjointly with one or more officers named by the commander of the vessel of the belligerent party.

5. If it should happen that the commander of the ship or ships of the powers at war, having examined the papers found on board, and having interrogated the master and crew of the vessel, should perceive just and sufficient reasons for detaining the merchant vessel, in order to undergo an ulterior examination, he shall notify this intention to the commander of the convoying ship, who shall have the power to order an officer to remain on board of the vessel so detained, and to assist at the investigation of the cause of her detention. The merchant vessel shall be carried immediately to the nearest and most convenient port belonging to the belligerent power, and the ulterior examination shall be proceeded to with all possible diligence.

V. It is agreed in like manner, that if any merchant vessel thus convoyed shall be detained without just and sufficient cause, the commander of the ship or ships of the belligerent power shall be accountable not only to the owners of the ship and cargo, for a full and satisfactory compensation for all losses, charges, damages, and expences, occasioned by such detention; but shall be liable to punishment for all acts of violence or any other fault which he may have committed during the time and in the course of the case may require.

VI. To obviate all the inconveniencies that may arise from the bad faith of those who make use of the flag of a nation to which they do not belong, it is agreed to establish an invariable rule, that any vessel whatever to be considered as the property of the country whose flag it carries, the captain and one half of the crew must be composed of people of that country, and the papers and passports in good and due form. But all vessels which shall not observe these rules and regulations, and who shall contravene the ordinances published to that effect, shall forfeit all right to the protection of the contracting powers.

VII. The principles and the measures adopted by the present act, shall be equally applicable to all maritime wars in which one of the two powers may be engaged, while the other remains neutral. This stipulation shall in consequence be considered as permanent, and shall serve as a constant rule for the contracting powers in matters of commerce and navigation.

VIII. His Majesty the King of Denmark, and his Majesty the King of Sweden, shall immediately be invited by his Imperial Majesty in the name of the two contracting powers, to accede to the present convention, and at the same time to renew and confirm the respective treaties of commerce with his Britannic Majesty; and His said Majesty engages in such case, to deliver up and make restitution to each of the said powers, of all the prizes which have been made on them, as also all the territories and countries of their dominion which have been conquered by the arms of His Britannic Majesty since the rupture, in the same state in which these possessions were found at the time they were taken by the forces of His Britannic Majesty. The orders of His said Majesty for the restitution of the said prizes and conquests shall be dispatched immediately after the exchange of the ratification of the articles by which Sweden and Denmark shall accede to the present treaty.

IX. The present convention shall be ratified by the two contracting parties, and the ratifications exchanged at St. Petersburgh, in the space of two months at farthest, commencing from the date of the signature.

In testimony of which, the respective plenipotentiaries have caused two copies to be made, and affixed to the same the seal of their arms.

Done at St. Petersburgh, the 5—17th June, 1801.

LONDON, Sept. 3.

STATE PAPER.

The following are the terms in which His Majesty the Elector of Hanover, gave his assent to the Treaty of Luneville.

"Cum cæteris votis"—His Majesty the King of Great Britain, as Elector of Brunswick and Lunenburg, admits the extraordinary urgency of the circumstances which accompanied the conclusion of peace, and which rendered it impossible to have the co-operation of the empire under the necessary forms which must have preceded it. But his Imperial Majesty having, in his high sentiments, recognized and gave an express assurance that the mode of negociation which this extraordinary case had compelled him to follow, shall no prejudice the known and admitted rights secured by the constitution of the empire, which the electoral Princes and States of the empire possess, of co-operating in all matters and negociations relating to all matters and negociations of peace; His Royal Majesty, in his quality of Elector of Brunswick and Lunenburg, does not therefore hesitate a moment to vote with his co-estates, that the treaty of peace concluded on the 9th of February at Luneville, with the French Republic by his Imperial Majesty, in his own name, and in that of the Germanic empire, such as it has been communicated to the diet of the empire, by the Imperial decrees of the 7th of February, be approved and ratified on the part of the empire."

Sept. 6. Yesterday upwards of six thousand letters, brought from Egypt by the Spider sloop, were delivered from the post office. Our letters by this conveyance do not contain any intelligence of importance, being dated previous to the fall of Cairo—They reiterate the report communicated by way of Rhodes and Constantinople, that the garrison of Alexandria was severely pressed by want, and that many of the inhabitants had been expelled the city, and conducted in the night across the old port to the neck of land which forms the lake Mareotis. The occasion of this measure is variously stated; some of our letters impute it to a conspiracy amongst the natives to surrender the city to the English; and others with more probability, considering the strength of the garrison, to a desire of the French generals to reduce the consumption of provisions by the removal of all unnecessary hands. Some of these people have been conducted to the British camp, and make the most melancholy representations of the situation of the inhabitants of Alexandria, who are destitute of every thing, and from their supposed disaffection to the French, treated by them with extreme indignity and oppression. They state the republicans to be discontented, and only held to their duty by the expectation of succour. They were informed of Gantheaume being on the coast, and elated by the circumstance. The failure of his enterprize, it was expected in our fleet, would conduce to the surrender of Alexandria.

The French had constructed strong batteries on the bank of the inundation made by the English; and our people had in like manner lined the opposite shore. We have some gunboats on this lake (which in one part is three miles broad) by means of which we could throw shells into Alexandria; but as the so doing would only injure the wretched natives without annoying the French to any essential extent, our commanders have humanely desisted from using these vessels. The ordinary depth of water in this extensive moat is about four feet; but it cannot be reckoned as for a long time to admit the convenient passage of troops:—and we apprehend that the siege, should Menou have sufficient supplies to enable him to hold out, will be prolonged by the impediments which this inundation will present to our operations.

The moat extends from the Lake Mareotis to the sea, in the direction of Aboukir, within about 2 miles of Alexandria, and on the eastern point runs close to Cleopatra's Needle, which is within the French line.

On Friday evening the outward bound Baltic fleet, consisting of about 80 sail, REQUESTS all those who are indebted to him and whose accounts ought to have been paid long ago to make payment in the course of one month from this date, or unpleasant measures will be resorted to—neither unfavors from those whose accounts have been given in will not satisfy his creditors; he therefore hopes that this notice will be productive of something more than promises from those whose accounts remain unpaid.

TO ALL OUR LOVING SUBJECTS,

GREETING :—

WHEREAS, by our Proclamation, bearing date the twenty first day of September last, we thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council to prorogue our Provincial Parliament until the second day of November, at which time in our Town of York you were held and constrained to appear—But we taking into our Royal consideration the ease and convenience of our loving subjects, have thought fit by and with the advice of our Executive Council, to relieve you, and each of you, of your attendance at the time aforesaid, hereby convoking, and by these presents enjoining you, and each of you, that on the eleventh day of December next enluing, you meet us in our Provincial Parliament, in our town of York, there to take into consideration the state and defence of our Province of Upper-Canada, and thereto do as may seem necessary : Herein fail not.

IN TESTIMONY whereof we have caused these our Letters to be made Patent, and the great seal of our said Province to be hereunto affixed :—Witness our trusty and well-beloved PETER HUNTER Esquire our Lieutenant Governor of our said province, and Lieutenant General commanding our Forces in our Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, at York, this twenty-sixth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and one, and in the forty second year of our reign.

WM. JARVIS, Sec'y.

Proclamation

BY HIS EXCELLENCY

PETER HUNTER, Esquire,

Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Lieutenant General Commanding His Majesty's Forces in Upper and Lower Canada.

WHEREAS His Majesty's faithful Commons of this Province in Parliament assembled, did by virtue of a Resolution of their House of Assembly, pray that certain Sums of Money should be applied in such manner as to me should seem meet for the purpose of purchasing and distributing Hemp Seed gratis amongst the Farmers, and also for the paying of Premiums and Bounties to the deserving Cultivators and Exporters of Hemp in this Province. And whereas I thought fit to assent to the prayer of the said Commons :-NOW KNOW YE that I PETER HUNTER, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, by virtue of the Authority to vested in me, and the better to effectuate the wise and liberal intentions of the said faithful Commons—And well knowing the Ability, Integrity and diligence of the Honorable JOHN M'GILL, Esquire, one of the Legislative and Executive Councils, and of the Honorable DAVID WILLIAM SMITH, Esquire, one of the Executive Council and Speaker of the House of Assembly of this Province, have nominated and appointed the said John M'Gill and David William Smith Commissioners for the purpose of purchasing and distributing of Hemp Seed gratis amongst the Farmers, and also for the paying of Premiums and Bounties to the deserving Cultivators and Exporters of Hemp, according to the true intent and meaning of the said Resolution, not doubting but that the encouragement thus liberally held forth by His Majesty's Faithful Commons, will effectually promote a measure so agreeable to the wishes of the Mother Country, and so highly conducive to the prosperity of this Province.

GIVEN under my Hand and Seal at Arms at York this Twenty-ninth day of July in the Forty first year of His Majesty's Reign, and in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and one.

P. HUNTER, LT. GOVT.

By His Excellency's Command,
Wm. JARVIS, Secy.

JAMES GREEN, Secretary.

THE LIEUT. GOVERNOR'S OFFICE.
York, 31st August, 1801.

WHEREAS many persons who, from various causes, had omitted to comply with the Order issued from this Office of the fourth day of September last, with respect to the Lots held by them in this Town, obtained further time for rendering obedience thereto ; and whereas several persons have since been located in this Town whose Lots are still uncleared, NOTICE is hereby given to both descriptions of persons, that if the said Order is not literally complied with on or before the twenty-fifth day of March next, the Lots of the Defaulters will be forfeited and given to other persons.

JAMES GREEN, Sec'y.

The Austrian Monarchy, even in its present state of declension and defeat, remains one of the great powers of Europe, and if its moral powers were equal to its physical resources, would still be an adequate balance for France —Its greatest want is not of people not of soldiers; but of men capable of conducting a great empire. This deficiency prevails in a deplorable degree. It results principally from the nature of the government and the spirit of the reigning religion. The first checks all enterprize, and the second stifles all enquiry. In such a state of things, how should men be formed either for action or for meditation?

ALGIERS—It was stated in the German papers lately received, that an English and Turkish squadron was about to sail from Egypt for Algiers, to enforce the regular payment of the tribute due by the Dey, to the Porte; the report is in toto erroneous, and is supposed to have been propagated by the agents of Bonaparte, with a view to promote a negociation which he has been some time ineffectually endeavouring to conclude with Algiers.

The fact is, that the Dey of Algiers is not tributary to the Porte; but on the contrary, is frequently subsidized by the Seignior for any assistance he may render to him, the amount of this subsidy is regulated by the nature of the service, and is generally paid in tar, cordage, and other articles of naval stores.

The Dey is bound to the Porte by a political league, offensive and defensive; but the obligations are mutual, and do not affect the independence of the former.

It is a fact not generally known, which shews the power of Algiers and the extreme degradation and degeneracy of the Moriands, that with the peace some years since with these freebooters, when Oran was surrendered to them, his Catholic Majesty was compelled by one of the insulting conditions of the treaty, to change the Spanish colours from white to red.

FOUNDER OF CAIRO.

The walls of Cairo were repaired by the great Saladin; but why should they not have been raised, as the natives assert through traditional authority, by the Patriarch Joseph? It is allowed on all hands they were founded by a powerful man named Joseph, whom the tepics will have to be a Mameluke. The city of Thebes is supposed by searchers into Historical Antiquities to have been built in the time of the Pharaohs—strengthened and enlarged by the Ptolemites. The walls of Thebes therefore may have been anterior to the time of the Scriptural Joseph; yet, tho' this city has been abandoned and in a state of ruin for many ages, part of the walls were standing not a hundred years since—Cairo, on the contrary, has been ever in a state of improvement under all its various masters, therefore there is no solid reason to suppose that the Egyptian account of the great man who laid its foundation is erroneous.

After all, may not the Copts designate him whom we call the Patriarch, by the term Mameluke? The Mamelukes were always purchased slaves, brought up in the houses of the great; and from whom their officers of state and the generals of their armies were always chosen. Thus, the Patriarch Joseph and the Mamaluke Joseph may be the same person—the Son of Jacob, and Grandson of Isaac, the Hebrew. [Porcupine.

Price and importation of grain, &c.

The importation of wheat for the week ended on Friday, was limited to 5250 quarters, chiefly from Holland; the smallness of the supply is imputable to the prevalence of westerly winds, which have suspended all communication from the Northern ports of the continent.

The price of wheat in the London market has not experienced any material fluctuation. The necessary vocations of the farmer diverting his attention from the threshing out and sale of his late abundant crops, the market continues in a great degree dependent on the jobbers, and all their arts are exerted to keep it up.

SHEERNESS, Sept. 2.

Arrived the Hart, hired armed brig, Lieut. Harrison, from off Goree, by whom we have the following correct statement of the enemy's force at Helvoet: 8 sail of the line, 2 frigates, 14 gun-vessels schooner rigged, and four lchoots armed as gun boats, they have 10,000 troops on the Voorn island; last week there was an order sent to Rotterdam to supply the fleet with one month's bread. The Craih, gun brig, Lieut. Hamline, has gone out of harbor to the great Nore, and the Zebra bomb, from the little to the great Nore. A large fleet of merchant ships are getting up to the Nore, supposed to be the Lisbon and West India fleets.—Wind at west, blows hard.

PORTSMOUTH, Sept. 7.

Arrived this morning five transports which carried the troops to Madeira, who have lately taken possession of that island.

VIENNA, Aug. 14.

Since Sunday the report is general here, that a courier, from Constantinople, has brought to the English Ambassador the news that the rest of the French army in Egypt, seeing the fate of Cairo, has capitulated.

BERLIN, August 14.

Gen. Beurnonville, Minister of the French Republic, has made to our Court, on the part of his Government, fresh overtures for the cession of the Duchy of Cleves. It is pretended that Prussia will receive as an indemnity the Bishopricks of Munster and Paderborn; that that affair is already terminated, & that there has been sent a Courier to Paris to carry the affirmative answer of our government.

NEW YORK, OCT. 29.

A Jamaica paper of the 12th ult. received at this office by the brig Integrity, has the following article:

"During the last cruize of his Britannic Majesty's ship Boudelais, on the coast of Porto Rico, a Spaniard came on board, begging protection, as he had that morning murdered his officer.—Captain Mauby, with indignation heard his story, and instantly had him tied hand and foot. Capt. M. then proceeded to the Bay of Aquadilla, and sent his first Lieut. on shore to the Governor with the assassin and this laconic epistle:—

"SIR,

"The British colours disdain to protect a Murderer. I send you one, and hope he will meet the fate he merits.

"I am, &c.

"THOMAS MAUBY,

"Captain of his Britannic Majesty's ship Bourdelais."

"The Governor was so pleased with this act of British generosity, that he returned an answer, teeming with admiration of Captain Mauby's conduct, and sent him a large supply of fruit and vegetables." [Mercantile Advertiser.

Letters from Dublin mention, that as the Gold Mines of Wicklow have hitherto proved to little productive, the labourers employed upon them have wisely resolved to suspend that work for a while, till they first dig into those Potatoe Mines, where they will not be disappointed in finding the genuine Irish Diamonds.

SHEERNESS, OCT. 10.

Late news from the Red Sea.

Arrived here on Saturday ship Recovery, Captain Dana, (Mr. Robinson tonnage) in 126 days from Mokha at the mouth of the Red Sea. The Recovery left Moka on the 22d of June, and brings the following intelligence:—That a very large fleet of British transport ships had gone up the Red Sea with troops; it was impossible to ascertain the exact number of men employed; some accounts stated the number at 8000 men—there were several European regiments, and the remainder were the native Sepoys of the East Indies. The expedition was supposed to have employed upwards of 200 sail of large country ships—the grand fleet entered the Red Sea in April, but one division of 20 ships, arrived late in May.—Before the Recovery sailed from Mokha, news had reached there that the army had landed at Coffee and Suez, no little opposition could be made.—The English had also taken possession of an island at the head of the Red Sea and used it as a depoit for their stores. All was hurry and bustle at Moka, where the British had Commissaries to purchase provisions and supplies for the troops.

The frigate La Forte had been lost in the Red Sea, by striking on a reef of rocks near Jodda. Col. Popham, from the Cape of Good Hope had joined the army. The English had very few men of war, and it was said that these intended to sail to cruise off the coast of Brazils.

The ship Ulysses of this port, Capt. Henry Elkins, had arrived at Moka on the 6th of March, 40 days previous to the Recovery, and on the 17th May proceeded to Muskat to complete her lading.

The Recovery has performed the voyage in ten months, and has brought a cargo of Moka coffee and a few drugs, the latter being scarce.

In addition to the intelligence from the Red Sea, the following particulars have been communicated to the Editor of the Salem Gazette:—

"Major General Baird arrived at Mocha from Bombay in May last, with a number of transports, having on board a large detachment of India troops, bound to Suez, to join Col. Murray's detachment, which had preceded him, and was already at that place; and in conjunction with the forces of the Grand Vizier, to form an expedition against the French army of Egypt, which was reported to have collected and fortified themselves at Grand Cairo.

"Admiral Blanket is commander in chief of the naval forces in the Red Sea.

"In May and June several English vessels from different settlements in India, having on board troops and warlike stor s, touched at Mocha on their way to Suez to join the expedition, and as f.s as they received supplies of water, &c. departed, there being no armed vessels to annoy them on their passage.

"Sir Home Popham, in the Romney, with part of a squadron, arrived at Mocha from England, which he left in December last. Touching at the Cape of Good Hope, he took on board the British 64th regiment, and arrived at Mocha in May. After loading his fleet and receiving a supply of water, proceeded towards Suez. The other ships of his squadron, consisting chiefly of transports, were daily arriving, and leaving Mocha for Suez as fast as they could get furnished with supplies of water and refreshments; and when captain Dana sailed (June 22) all the ships had passed which were expected for Suez. But it is not probable that Gen. Baird, with the main body of the forces, got forward in time to co-operate in the reduction of Cairo.

"There were various conjectures as to the number of troops in English pay, but generally supposed to be twelve or fourteen thousand. The naval force consisted mostly of light ships of war, the Red Seas being of dangerous navigation.

"The last year the English took possession of Mehum Island in the Straits of Babelmandel, and made considerable progress in fortifying it, but were obliged to relinquish it and withdraw the garrison for want of fresh water. They have since taken possession of and established a fort on the island of Ge-bel-tor about 60 leagues northwest of Mocha.

"James Pringle, Esq. Envoy from the East India Company to the king of Senna, set out from Mocha in May last with his suite, having in charge presents to a large amount for the king of Senna and his chief officers.

"The English to secure the friendship of the Arabs, have bestowed presents very liberally among the Dolus or Governors on the coasts of the Arabian Gulph and Red Sea. The following is a list of some of the presents made by the East India Company to the king of Senna and some of his chief men, in 1801.

To the King	10,000 Rupees
His Son	2,500
His Vizier	2,000
Dola of Mocha	3,500
Dola of Aden	4,000
Their Chief Secretaries	500
	22,500

Extract of a letter from Tunis, dated June 15, 1801.

"On the 27th ult. entered two corsaires of the government from a cruize, a xebec of 24 twelve pounders, and a gowette of 20 brass nines, which had been boarded and disarmed by a French detachment commanded by Vice Admiral Ganthe-aume. The affair is so novel, so well done, and at the same time so laconic, that it seems worthy of detail. "Who are you?" Hailed the republicans. "Tunisines," was the answer. "Whom do you cruize against?" "Neapolitans." "What! Do you not know that the Neapolitans are our friends? Dare you insult the allies of Frenchmen! Overboard is an infant every offensive weapon, or I send you to the bottom!" The order was promptly obeyed. "Go make the compliments of the first Consul to the Bey your master. Tell him it was not his intention to have regarded your breach of faith in renewing the war. You might have remained tranquil and undisturbed at home; but if we find you abroad in search of mischief we deprive you of the means.

"Tell him to beware of provoking the resentment of the first Consul, it will be terrible to him and to his country." The Admiral wrote to the Bey in the same style. His chagrin and mortification may be better imagined than described. There were two of his best cruizers, but the contempt is more galling than the injury done him. He cannot aspire to revenge himself of the French. He dares no more look for prey from Italy. What shall he do? The Americans are a species of Christians somewhat similar in their religion and government to the French, & must therefore expiate the affront. We are now the only nation on earth against whom Barbary can safely cruize; the Spaniards are included in the list of French allies. For the realons, this example of the French, though it is the only one worthy of imitation with these people that has happened latterly, is extremely prejudicial to our affairs, and its influence is instantaneous. Since it took place the Bey has totally changed his tone of treatment."

KINGSTON, (JAM.) Sept. 17.

On Saturday arrived at Port Royal, his Majesty's ship Tisiphone, having on board the body of the late Vice Admiral, Lord Hugh Seymour, who went to sea in her by the advice of his physicians, on Thursday last for the benefit of his health. His Lordship, we are sorry to state, expired on the morning of Friday, when the frigate with the Sting tender which accompanied her, proceeded to Port Royal. Minute guns were fired by the fort from the time they were apprized of the Admiral's decease until the frigate came to anchor. Yesterday the ships of war at Port Royal displayed their colors half mast, as was also his Lordship's flag, and his body, with the greatest ceremony, being attended by all the boats of the fleet, was conveyed from on board the Tisiphone to his own ship. The procession commenced at half past nine, and the body reached the Santparell at 12, minute guns were fired by the flag ship and fort during the whole time, and the decks, shrouds and poops of the ships of war were manned. His Lordship's body will, we are informed, lay in state until Wednesday, when it will be put on board the Sting tender and conveyed to England. His Lordship was born the 29th of April, 1749, was brother to the Marquis of Hertford, and has always been distinguished for his bravery and intrepidity since he has been in the service of his country. His Lordship on the memorable 1st of June, 1794, took the ship on board of which his flag now flies. His character in private life has ever been unfulfilled, as he has ever shewn himself the tender husband, the affectionate parent, and the discriminating patron of true merit.

Sept. 18.

His Majesty's tender, Sting, failed on Wednesday evening for England, having on board a mail, and the remains of Admiral Lord Seymour. The coffins which contained the body of his Lordship were to be lashed upon the deck, as it is very improbable that it can be conveyed to England.

SCRAPS FROM LONDON PAPERS TO 6th SEPTEMBER.

The intended bridge on the Garonne at Bourdeaux, is to be a flying bridge, such as those used by the Republican armies in the late campaigns; the breadth, depth, and rapidity of the river, would not admit of any other. It will pass from one side to the other in ten minutes in all weathers, and will be capable of conveying four hundred persons at a time secure from every accident. Similar bridges are to be erected in other parts of the Republic.

A deserter lately brought up handcuffed from Exeter, assured his brother soldiers on his arrival, that he came by forced marches to join them.

It is a most humiliating reflection that our physicians have not been able to discover any human disease by which they can improve the brute creation, in return for the cow pox.

The public sees of the new King of Etruria all run in the following form: "Louis, reigning by good fortune," not by the Grace of God, like the old Monarchs.

The Court of Vienna has been obliged to resort to extraordinary means to diminish bank paper, and promote the circulation of money, in consequence of the stoppage of the English subsidies.

A handsome fee to the mob.

A wit observes that the beneficial consequences of the late British successes in Egypt are such, that it will probably turn out that the French began the war with Cairo and ended it with Cair o.

A singular circumstance lately occurred, at Strasburgh. A celebrated shoemaker in that town lately set up for a prophet, and announced that the world in one month would be at an end. What is more wonderful is, that several heads of families and others gave him such full credit, as to leave off labor and dispose of their property to such as chose to accept the castily dross. Many of them put on their best cloaths, and prepared themselves by alternate fasting & prayer, for the coming day!

One has often heard of the punctilio and gravity of Spanish manners; but no instance is more striking of this formality than what is recorded in Memoirs of Bopompiere respecting the death of Philip the Third. We shall give these extraordinary particulars in the words of Marechal himself:—"His flinels (the King's) began on the first Friday in Lent: when he was reading his dispatches, the day being exceeding cold, a strong brazier, or chafing pan was introduced into his apartment, the reflection of which fixed in powerfully upon his face, that the least fire owed down it. The King's disposition was such that he never in his life found fault with any thing, nor ordered it to be altered. The Marquis de Sobar, from whom I learned this, told me, that seeing how much his Majesty was incommoded by the brazier, he told the Duke of Alva, Gentleman of the Chamber, like himself, to have it taken away, as his Majesty's cheek was violently inflamed by it. But they are extremely punctilious in their duty, the Duke of Alva observed, that it belonged to the department of the Duke d'Uzeda, the Grand Chamberlain (a first Butler of the perlon.) Upon this the Marquis de Sobar lent for the Duke d'Uzeda into his chamber, who was unfortunately out of the way; so that before the arrival of the first Butler, the King was in much torment, that the next day he fell into a violent fever, which brought on an erysipelas, which, with some intermissions terminated in the scarlet fever, of which his Majesty died."

Newspapers.—The following account of the various publications in the world, is given in a German paper:—"There is but one paper published in Portugal, and that only appears three times a week; it is conducted by a German, who takes care to exclude only the French news, while he admits those of Madrid, Hamburgh and London. In China there is only one Gazette a week, but it is a folio volume; it contains no foreign news, but merely the history of the events in the country. There is no joking in it about Truth.

telligence, &c. &c. was condemned to lose his head. The Emperor himself sometimes contributes to this paper. In 1708, the prefect Emperor inserted a Funeral Oration, which he composed upon his predecessor. It is a singular circumstance that some accounts once appeared in it, which it was thought improper to make known. The particular number was immediately suppressed, and the people were forbid ever to speak of it in future.

There is a paper published in the Persian language at Delhi, the capital of the Great Mogul. Some curious persons have preserved copies of the paper of the 18th of Feb. 1798, which is five French ells in length. The intelligence contained in it is of the most odd nature, such as that "the men who had the care of the ogen and horses, have taken leave of his Highness the Great Mogul for want of payment, and have sent their cattle to pasture," &c. &c.—The English, who ought to have a Paper so many yards in length, have, however, instituted another in the East Indies.

Mr. Staunton, who has made the constitution of China his particular study, and who is now coming from Canton, observes, that in capital offences the determination rests with the Emperor alone. Though it is very rare indeed that a criminal is sentenced to die. Mr. Staunton had an opportunity of enquiring of several persons, and not one that was questioned on the occasion, and some of them were at least seventy years of age, had ever seen or known of a capital execution: the vigor of the police, and the promptitude of punishment, which immediately follows conviction without the delay of a moment, operates as a check upon those crimes which are but too frequent in other parts.

We find a circumstance of a very singular kind mentioned in the last French papers. M. Dufoy, a man of letters, had been long desperately enamored of a lady, distinguished by her great personal accomplishments as well as her amiable disposition. She returned his flame with equal passion, and the joyful couple were just on the eve of being united in the nuptual tie. At the moment when the consummation of his felicity seemed to be at hand, the philosopher was suddenly seized with uneasiness & anxiety; his peace of mind forsook him, and he was agitated beyond description, by the horrid idea that the marriage would prove only a source of misery to the object of his affection. In this dreadful state, what must he do, what measures must he take to regain his forfeited serenity? To disclose his situation to his lover was impossible with the least regard to delicacy; he resolved, therefore, that he alone should suffer the consequences of his anxiety. He hurried to the banks of the Seine, and after writing a letter explaining the foregoing circumstances, he plunged in to the river and disappeared. In the present age such a romantic deed seems rather the result of insanity than the suggestion of honor refined to a degree beyond the usual condition of humanity. To indulge in any fears, previous to marriage, that it may not be productive of the wished for happiness to the object beloved, is, we believe at least, a very uncommon occurrence: but, to indulge such feelings to a degree which would suggest suicide, is, we are convinced a species of conduct of which there never will be one example in an Art thou not dear unto my heart?

Ah! search that heart and see;
And from my bosom tear the part
That beats not true to thee.

But to that bosom thou art dear,
More dear than words can tell;
And, if a fault be cherish'd there,
'Tis loving thee—too well!

YORK, Thursday, Dec. 10.

We have been politely favored with a Niagara paper of the 4th inftant, containing the interefting, authentic and moft agreeable intelligence brought by an arrival at Boston of the SIGNING OF THE PRELIMINARIES OF PEACE.

We lofe not a moment's time in laying the fame before our Readers, and moft heartily congratulate them on the arrival of an event fo long wifhed for, and fo generally neceffary for our own as well as to the intereft of mankind.

LONDON Oct. 2.

PRELIMINARIES of peace between his Majefty and the French Republic, were figned laft night at Ld. Hawkfbury's Office in Downing-ftreet, by the Right Hon. Lord Hawkefbury, one of his Majefty's principal Secretaries of ftate, on the part of his Majefty, and by Mr. Otto, on the part of the French Republic.

The following communication was alfo made to the Lord Mayor, and at Lloyd's:

Downing-ftreet, Oct. 1, 1801.

My Lord,

I have the fatisfaction of informing your Lordfhip, that the preliminaries of peace between Great Britain and France have been figned this evening by me on the part of his Majefty, & by M. Otto on the part of the French government. I requeft your Lordfhip will have the goodnefs to make this intelligence immediately public in the city.

I have the honor to be, &c.

HAWKESBURY.

The Rt. Hon. the Lord Mayor.

Mr. Hunter, jun. the meffenger, who carried the letter, reached the manfion-houfe about 8 o'clock, but his Lordfhip was at his country feat at Clapham—Mr. Hunter immediately proceeded thither, and remained at his Lordfhip's all night, returning to London with him early yefterday morning. The intelligence, which had not tranfpired in any public circle, on the preceding night, burft round the whole town before nine o'clock in the morning. The Lord Mayor went in perfon to Lloyd's coffee houfe and read the letter, which was afterwards pofted at the bar and at the Stock Exchange. To thefe places crouds flocked, and the greateft joy and agitation prevailed. The very men who a few days before, declared peace could be only an armed truce, that war was lefs dangerous than peace with fuch an enemy, were now feen fhaking hands, fmiling, and congratulating each other on the conclufion of the treaty! The funds, the three per cents, which had been at 59 1-2 the preceding day, rofe to 66; and the contuls, which had been at 8, rofe to 18.

Oct. 3.—We have the pleafure at laft to announce the preliminaries of peace are figned between France and Great Britain! contrary to the general expectation. We have already ftated, that about five or fix weeks ago, the Engliih cabinet, defirous of drawing the negociation to a conclufion, gave in a project as its ultimatum, refolved to make a peace on that bafis, or break off the treaty in the month of September, that it might be ready to lay before the parliament at its meeting, a report of the efforts to put an end to the war. Eager hopes were entertained for the effect of this ftep, and the funds rofe; but Buonaparte met it with coldnefs, made new demands, and occafioned delays, which deftroyed the hopes of thofe who had been the moft fanguine. Miniflers continued to prefs him; the form of a preliminary treaty was fent off early laft week to Paris, with an aflurance that unlefs it was acceded to, the negociation muft clofe. One half of the cabinet miniflers had no expectation of fuccefs: peace was defpaired of; and hence arofe the many reports of the negociation being broke, or on the point of a rupture. The general expectation was, that of peace there was no chance. All the newfpapers of yefterday morning, even thofe pretending to be in the confidence of miniflers, as well as thofe which really are fo, having no hopes of peace, from the language held a few days ago, fpoke of a rupture of the negociation as inevitable.—Even the cabinet miniflers, who ftill entertain fome expectation of fuccefs, agreed, a few weeks ago, that peace, or an attempt at invafion, muft take place before Chriftmas. Under thefe circumftances, when we heard, on Wednefday and Thurfday, peace fpoken of with confidence as being near at hand, we could not believe in fo happy an event. The anfwer of the Firft Conful, received on Wednefday, however, to the aftonifhment of all, clofed with the propofals of our government. A cabinet council was held, and an expreis fent off to his Majefty, whole fanction returned next afternoon. The filver box never ufed fince the peace with America, figned, was fent to the Lord Chancellor, at five o'clock, for the Great Seal—and his fignature, and the conient of all the cabinet miniflers being obtained at feven o'clock, Lord Hawkefbury and Mr. Otto finifhed the preliminaries, in Downing-ftreet.

The conditions of this treaty are not fully known. It is faid that they guarantee the integrity of our allies, Turkey, Portugal and Naples. Of courfe Egypt will be evacuated by both French and Engliih, and Madeira reftored.—France guarantees to thefe three of our allies their dominions; but it feems our allies, the ftadtholder and the King of Sardinia, as well as the French princes are abandoned to their fate! The Pope's territory is to be evacuated; Malta is to be reftored to its ancient Knights: Minorca is to be reftored to Spain; and Porto Ferrajo evacuated. So we gain nothing in the Mediterranean, or in Europe; while France gains all Holland, and Netherlands, a large part of Germany, Switzerland, and two-thirds of Italy! In the Weft Indies, the only conqueft we are to keep is, we are told, Trinidad. The Cape of Good Hope is to be made a free port, and Ceylon is to be ceded to this country.—We fhall offer no opinions upon the conditions, till they are better authenticated.

A copy of the treaty, figned by Lord Hawkefbury, was on Thurfday night difpatched to Paris, where it will arrive this night; and the ratification is expected back on Monday night or Tuefday morning, when it will be ratified by the Britiih Government alfo, & publifhed, we hope in an extraordinary gazette. Miniflers will fee the propriety of making it inftantly officially known. Since the fate of fo many men will be decided by the nature of the conditions, Parliament will be immediately fummoned to meet within fourteen days, for the difpatch of bufinefs, the preliminaries will be laid before it, its fanction obtained, and in the midft of general joy, a loan will be raifed to an unexampled extent, as government is known to be in want of an enormous fum of money. Parliament will then be adjourned to meet after Chriftmas, and receive the definitive treaty. In the mean time we underftand Joseph Bonaparte is expected in London, to have the eclat of negociating and figning the treaty. But it will be rather an inftrument of form, than of real importance, we prefume, as the preliminary treaties between this country & France have ufually been adopted for the definitive.

for the secrecy with which they have conducted the negociation. We can then no such merit, it was their duty to have made the public to understand something of its progress. Merchants and commercial men are so deeply interested in the event, that some information was necessary to enable them to conduct their business with safety. A few indirect communications to the public could have done no injury to the Treaty, or injury of any kind. The silence maintained by Ministers, & the prevailing opinion, that negociations would fail, perhaps ruin several reputable houses, and prove a cruel misfortune to many men. Certain persons have known of the progress of the negociation, and within two days have made fortunes by it.

The feelings of every man yesterday received a shock, influenced strongly by either by hope or fear, or both. The present peace involves the interest of every one more than any event that ever before occurred. The rich man who drew his thousands from the Indies, & the poor man who derives his loaf from his labor, feel with equal awe, this crisis of their fate. But whatever may be the alarms with regard to the future, the earlier the peace is made, the less will be the difficulties with which we have to struggle. We regret that peace was not made two years ago, when the people of England called for it; we regret that the war ever commenced; & it would be easy to shew that we have not only totally failed in the real object of it, but our losses have exceeded our gains. But at the present moment such thoughts are unseasonable. The public joy should not be damped. We hail peace, even late as it comes, and feel a confident hope that the country possesses the means of overcoming all its difficulties under a wise administration of affairs. The patience, the industry, and firmness of the people, are great, and authorize any favourable calculation founded on their conduct. Even ministers, we hope, are convinced of the folly of attempting to conquer France, and may seriously improve the opportunity now afforded them of repairing their errors. We shall not be surprised to see Mr. Pitt exploding "the child and champion of jacobinism," and palliating his acts of tyranny, we would have said yesterday; but we must now keep a wary guard upon our language. France is, perhaps, almost our ally, and the pillory will be the reward of those who dare calumniate Buonaparte. We may with safety admire his exalted genius, tho' we cannot compliment him on the principles or practice of his government. What a change has he effected in the situation of France?

Buonaparte, however, was urged to conclude this treaty by other motives than the conditions offered.—Fictions were forming against him at Paris, taking pence for their ground, and he was obliged to have a large body of troops in that city. Alexandria, too, which he made an article of barter in the negociation, he knew had surrendered, and he wished to obtain something under pretence of giving it up. Mr. Molwitz, formerly Ambassador from the Court of Berlin, arrived yesterday with dispatches from his Lordship, dated Constantinople, Sept. 6, stating that Gen. Hutchinson invested Alexandria the 24th of August, after the flotilla of French gun boats had been destroyed, and some batteries between Marcotis and the shore. Menou, on the 2nd, sent a flag of truce, demanding granted, at the end of which Alexandria will be given up.

On Wednesday the funds rose 2 or 3 per cent on the purchase; and the reports on the Stock exchange were, that preliminaries would be instantly signed. The same occurred on Thursday; but these reports having proved false before, were not generally believed, and those in the secret made the greater advantage of them. They feared, however, that some men in the city knew what was going forward. A number of policies on the peace have also been made at Lloyd's within these few days, and we could name individuals who have made fortunes there, independent of what they must have realized in the funds, so much for the secrecy of the negociation. The public have been deceived and a few individuals have made their fortunes—While we see on the subject of the funds, we must remark this extraordinary fact—Last Monday was a month, a report strongly prevailed, & was much believed, that a plan of a naval armistice was agreed to by M. Otto and Lord Grenville, and that it was gone to Paris for signature. On this report the 3 per cents were sold as high as 69. Yesterday, with the signing of the preliminaries of Peace, published in the London Gazette, in every man's hand, they did not rise at any time higher than 66 1-2 though much business was done, and a great deal of money came to market. To what can we impute this heaviness of stocks? Is it the effect of the increase of the national debt, or the prospect of an enormous loan, and of financial difficulties of the utmost magnitude which must be encountered in adjusting a pacific system? Or do the mercantile men feel apprehension for the commerce which the war has enabled us to monopolize?

Do they see a diminution of the revenues and resources of the government? Do they fear that the channels of our wealth will be diverted to other quarters? Undoubtedly, this is the most awful moment at which this country ever arrived. No peace was ever made under circumstances of so grave and serious a nature. It has been the peculiar character of this war, that it has, by the forced circulation of paper money, inflead of gold, the monopoly of commerce, &c. created a state of things, favorable to its own existence. The nation has been brought to a habit of body by violent stimulants, which may render it dangerous to return to its former sober course. On this subject, undoubtedly, great anxiety must prevail. A nine years war has changed our nature so much that we cannot contemplate the reform, even of our vices, without uneasiness.

Paris papers to the 3d inst. arrived yesterday. The most important facts which they announce, is the ratification by the Pope, of the treaty, concluded after a long negociation, by Cardinal Gonsalvi, his minister at Paris; but as no hint is given of its contents, we are left in uncertainty whether it regulates any temporary interest, or relates solely to the affairs of the Gallican church.—Supposing it however, to be confined entirely to spiritual topics, it is a material event in the history of the French revolution. By this treaty, the authority of Buonaparte in France receives a stronger confirmation than it could have done from any new course of military achievements.

His virtual sovereignty has now passed through the utmost ceremonial of acknowledgement, by the See of Rome, and the Pope appears to have treated him, that he might confer on us the dukedom.

A Hamburgh mail arrived last night, and another this morning. The contents are of course in our columns. Intelligence to the 29th ult. from the ports of Cadiz, Belfast and had arrived at Roberts at the date of the accounts brought by the last mail.—The last brings no intelligence upon the subjects of Egypt, but furnishes us with one very interesting article, the treaty of Peace between Spain and Portugal, from which we learn officially, that the ports of the latter country are to be decidedly shut against all British shipping.

Sept. 12. In the beginning of last month, the Janissaries at Belgrade mutinied, and compelled the Pacha of that place to throw himself into the citadel, with a small number of officers and men who remained faithful to him. The rebels on this occasion declared themselves in favour of Pafwan Oglou. Soon after, however, some of the chiefs of the Janissaries apparently full of confusion at this sudden desertion of their duty, honor and allegiance, sent an act of submission to the threatened Pacha, who received it joyfully, left the citadel, and returned to his former residence in the city. But in the night of the 19th ult. many of the most contents found means to get into Belgrade, in troops of from ten to twenty, and a new insurrection broke out, which again forced the harrassed Pacha to seek refuge in the citadel, where he expected to be attacked; the greater of his followers had also been greatly diminished. The whole city of Belgrade was in terror and consternation, and many merchants and rich Turks fled with their goods valuable effects to Semlin.

The letters from Semlin positively assert, that the rebellious Janissaries had actually been bombarding their Pacha in the citadel, ever since the 19th ult. and when those accounts came away, a fire had broken out in several places. A corps of Pafwan Oglou's troops was then on its march to join the rebels. The Turkish merchants who remained, were no longer to convey away any of their goods, but the Greeks from Semlin, and Austrian subjects, were released, and at liberty to dispose of their property as they pleased.

Sept. 15. The capture of Belgrade, the bulwark of the Turkish empire in Europe, by a corps of Janissaries commanded by officers in the service of Pafwan Oglou, has produced the greatest sensation at Vienna. Pafwan Oglou has it now in his power to threaten the capital of Turkey. It is mentioned as a positive fact, that the Emperor of Germany, by virtue of a secret article in the treaty of Luneville, has promised not to take any measures to stop or hinder the progress of the Pacha of Widden, as long as the latter shall continue to observe the laws of good neighbourhood, and abstain from molesting the Austrian subjects.

LONDON, Oct. 2.

PRELIMINARIES of peace between his Majesty and the French Republic, were signed last night at Ld. Hawkesbury's Office in Downing-street, by the Right Hon. Lord Hawkesbury, one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, on the part of his Majesty, and by Mr. Otto, on the part of the French Republic.

The following communication was also made to the Lord Mayor, and at Lloyd's:

Downing-street, Oct. 1, 1801.

My Lord,

I have the satisfaction of informing your Lordship, that the preliminaries of peace between Great Britain and France have been signed this evening by me on the part of his Majesty, & by M Otto on the part of the French government. I request your Lordship will have the goodness to make this intelligence immediately public in the city.

I have the honor to be, &c.

HAWKESBURY.

The Rt. Hon. the Lord Mayor.

Mr. Hunter, jun. the messenger, who carried the letter, reached the manshon-house about 8 o'clock, but his Lordship was at his country seat at Clapham—Mr. Hunter immediately proceeded thither, and remained at his Lordship's all night, returning to London with him early yesterday morning. The intelligence, which had not transpired in any public circle, on the preceding night, burst round the whole town before nine o'clock in the morning. The Lord Mayor went in person to Lloyd's coffee house and read the letter, which was afterwards pasted at the bar and at the Stock Exchange. To these places crouds flocked, and the greatest joy and agitation prevailed. The very men who a few days before, declared peace could be only an armed truce, that war was less dangerous than peace with such an enemy, were now seen shaking hands, smiling, and congratulating each other on the conclusion of the treaty! The funds, the three per cents, which had been at 59 1-2 the preceding day, rose to 66; and the omnium, which had been at 8, rose to 18.

Oct. 3.—We have the pleasure at last to announce the preliminaries of peace are signed between France and Great Britain! contrary to the general expectation. We have already stated, that about five or six weeks ago, the English cabinet, desirous of drawing the negociation to a conclusion, gave in a project as its ultimatum, resolved to make a peace on that basis, or break off the treaty in the month of September, that it might be ready to lay before the parliament at its meeting, a report of the efforts to put an end to the war.—Eager hopes were entertained for the effects of this step, and the funds rose; but Buonaparte met it with coldness, made new demands, and occasioned delays, which destroyed the hopes of those who had been the most sanguine. Ministers continued to press him; the form of a preliminary treaty was sent off early last week to Paris, with an assurance that unless it was acceded to, the negociation must close. One half of the cabinet, ministers had no expectation of success; peace was despaired of; and hence arose the many reports of the negociation being broke, or on the point of a rupture. The general expectation was, that of peace there was no chance. All the newspapers of yesterday morning, even those pretending to be in the confidence of ministers, as well as those which really are so, having no hopes of peace, from the language held a few days ago, spoke of a rupture of the negociation as inevitable.—Even the cabinet ministers, who still entertain some expectation of success, agreed, a few weeks ago, that peace, or an attempt at invasion, must take place before Christmas. Under these circumstances, when we heard, on Wednesday and Thursday, peace spoken of with confidence as being near at hand, we could not believe in so happy an event. The answer of the First Consul, received on Wednesday, however, to the astonishment of all, closed with the proposals of our government. A cabinet council was held, and an express sent off to his Majesty, whose sanction returned next afternoon. The silver box never used since the peace with America signed, was sent to the Lord Chancellor, at five o'clock, for the Great Seal and his signature, and the consent of all the cabinet ministers being obtained at seven o'clock, Lord Hawkesbury and Mr. Otto finished the preliminaries, in Downing-street.

The conditions of this treaty are not fully known. It is said that they guarantee the integrity of our allies, Turkey, Portugal and Naples. Of course Egypt will be evacuated by both French and English, and Madeira restored—France guarantees to these three of our allies their dominions; but it seems our allies, the stadtholder and the King of Sardania, as well as the French princes are abandoned to their fate! The Pope's territory is to be evacuated; Malta is to be restored to its ancient Knights: Minorca is to be restored to Spain; and Porto Ferrajo evacuated. So we gain nothing in the Mediterranean, or in Europe; while France gains all Holland, and Netherlands, a large part of Germany, Switzerland, and two-thirds of Italy! In the West Indies, the only conquest we are to keep is, we are told, Trinidad. The Cape of Good Hope is to be made a free port, and Ceylon is to be ceded to this country—We shall offer no opinions upon the conditions, till they are better authenticated.

A copy of the treaty, signed by Lord Hawkesbury, was on Thursday night dispatched to Paris, where it will arrive this night; and the ratification is expected back on Monday night or Tuesday morning, when it will be ratified by the British Government also, & published, we hope in an extraordinary gazette. Ministers will see the propriety of making it instantly officially known. Since the fate of so many men will be decided by the nature of the conditions, Parliament will be immediately summoned to meet within fourteen days, for the dispatch of business, the preliminaries will be laid before it, its sanction obtained, and in the midst of general joy, a loan will be raised to an unexampled extent, as government is known to be in want of an enormous sum of money. Parliament will then be adjourned to meet after Christmas, and receive the definitive treaty. In the mean time we understand Joseph Bonaparte is expected in London, to have the eclat of negociating and signing the treaty. But it will be rather an instrument of form, than of real importance, we presume, as the preliminary treaties between this country & France have usually been adopted for the definitive.

Much praise been given to Ministers for the secrecy with which they have conducted the negociation. We give them no such praise, it was their duty to have made the public to understand something of its progress. Merchants and commercial men are so deeply interested in the event,—that some information was necessary to enable them to conduct their business with safety. A few indirect communications to the public could have done no injury to the Treaty, or injury of any kind. The silence maintained by Ministers, & the prevailing opinion, that negociations would fail, perhaps ruin several respectable houses, and prove a cruel misfortune to many men. Certain persons have known of the progress of the negociation, and within two days have made fortunes by it.

The feelings of every man yesterday received a shock, influenced strongly by either by hope or fear, or both. The present peace involves the interest of every one more than any event that ever before occurred. The rich man who draws his thousands from the Indies, & the poor man who derives his loaf from his labor, feel with equal awe, this crisis in their fate. But whatever may be the alarms with regard to the future, the earliest the peace is made, the less will be the difficulties with which we have to struggle. We regret that peace was not made two years ago, when the people of England called for it; we regret that the war ever commenced; & it would be easy to shew that we have not only totally failed in the real object of it, but our losses have exceeded our gains. But at the present moment such thoughts are unseasonable. The public joy should not be damped. We hail peace, even late as it comes, and feel a confident hope that the country possesses the means of overcoming all its difficulties under a wise administration of affairs. The patience, the industry, and firmness of the people, are great, and authorize any favourable calculations founded on their conduct. Even ministers, we hope, are convinced of the folly of attempting to conquer France, and may seriously improve the opportunity now afforded them of repairing their errors. We shall not be surprised to see Mr. Pitt extoling "the child and champion of jacobinism," and palliating his acts of tyranny, we would have laid yesterday; but we must now keep a wary guard upon our language. France is, perhaps, almost our ally, and the pillory will be the reward of those who dare calumniate Buonaparte. We may with safety admire his exalted genius, tho' we cannot compliment him on the principles or practice of his government. What a change has he effected in the situation of France?

Buonaparte, however, was urged to conclude this treaty by other motives than the conditions offered.—Factions were forming against him at Paris, taking peace for their ground, and he was obliged to have a large body of troops in that city. Alexandria, too, which he made an article of barter in the negociation, he knew had surrendered, and he wished to obtain something under pretence of giving it up. Mr. Moltwitz, servant to Lord Elgin, arrived yesterday with dispatches from his Lordship, dated Constantinople, Sept. 6, stating that Gen. Hutchinson invested Alexandria the 17th of August, after the flotilla of French gun boats had been destroyed, and some batteries between Marcotis and the shore. Menou, on the 22d, sent a flag of truce, demanding an armistice of three days, which was granted, at the end of which Alexandria will be given up.

On Wednesday the funds rose 2 or 3 per cent on the purchases; and the reports on the stock exchange were, that preliminaries would be instantly signed. The same occurred on Thursday; but these reports having proved false before, were not generally believed, and those in the secret made the greater advantage of them. They shewed, however, that some men in the alley knew what was going forward. A number of policies on the peace have also been done at Lloyd's within these few days, and we could name individuals who have made fortunes there, independant of what they must have realised in the funds. So much for the secrecy of the negociation. The public have been deceived and a few individuals have made their fortunes.—While we are on the subject of the funds, we must remark this extraordinary fact;—Last Monday was 12 months, a report strongly prevailed, & was much believed, that a plan of a naval armistice was agreed on by M. Otto and Lord Grenville, and that it was gone to Paris for signature. On this report the 3 per cents were sold as high as 67. Yesterday with the signing of the preliminaries of Peace, published in the London Gazette, in every man's hand, they did not rise at any time higher than 66 1-2 though much business was done, and a great deal of money came to market. To what can we impute this heaviness of stocks? Is it the effect of the increase of the national debt, or the prospect of an enormous loan, and of financial difficulties of the utmost magnitude which must be encountered in adjusting a pacific system? Or do the mercantile men feel apprehensions for the commerce which the war has enabled us to monopolize?

Do they see a diminution of the revenues and resources of the government? Do they fear that the channels of our wealth will be diverted to other quarters! Undoubtedly, this is the most awful moment at which this country ever arrived. No peace was ever made under circumstances of so grave and serious a nature. It has been the peculiar character of this war, that it has, by the forced circulation of paper money, instead of gold, the monopoly of commerce, &c. created a state of things, favorable to its own existence. The nation has been brought to a habit of body by violent stimulants, which may render it dangerous to return to its former sober course. On this subject, undoubtedly, great anxiety must prevail. A nine years war has changed our nature so much that we cannot contemplate the reform, even of our vices, without uneasiness.

Paris papers to the 3d inst. arrived yesterday. The most important facts which they announce, is the ratification by the Pope, of the treaty, concluded after a long negociation, by Cardinal Gonsalvi, his minister at Paris; but as no hint is given of its contents, we are left in uncertainty whether it regulates any temporary interest, or relates solely to the affairs of the Gallican church.—Supposing it however, to be confined entirely to spiritual topics, it is a material event in the history of the French revolution. By this treaty, the authority of Buonaparte in France receives a stronger confirmation than it could have done from any new course of military achievements.

His virtual sovereignty has now passed through the ancient ceremonial of acknowledgement, by the See of Rome, and the Pope appears to have been reflored, that he might confer on it that sanction.

A Hamburgh mail arrived last night, and mostly this morning. The contents are of consider'n to our columns. In pursuance to the treaty for the surrender of Cairo, Belliard had arrived at Rosetta at the date of the accounts brought by the last mail.—The last brings no intelligence upon the subject of Egypt, but furnished us with one very interesting article, the treaty of Peace between Spain and Portugal, from which we now learn officially, that the ports of the latter country are to be decidedly shut against all British shipping.

Sept. 12. In the beginning of last month, the Janissaries at Belgrade mutinied, and compelled the Pacha of that place to throw himself into the citadel, with a small number of officers and men who remained faithful to him. The rebels on this occasion declared themselves in favor of Pafwan Oglou. Soon after, however, some of the oldest of the Janissaries apparently full of contrition at this shameful dereliction of their duty, honor and allegiance, sent an ask of submission to the threatened Pacha, who received it joyfully, left the citadel, and returned to his former residence in the city. But in the night of the 14th ult. many of the mal-contents found means to get into Belgrade, in troops of from ten to twenty, and a new insurrection broke out, which again forced the harrassed Pacha to seek refuge in the citadel, where he expected to be attacked; the number of his followers had also been greatly diminished. The whole city of Belgrade was in terror and consternation, and many merchants and rich Turks fled with their goods valuable effects to Semlin.

The letters from Semlin positively assert, that the rebellious Janissaries had actually been bombarding their Pacha in the citadel, ever since the 17th ult, and when those accounts came away, a fire had broken out in several places. A corps of Pafwan Oglou's troops was then on its march to join the rebels. The Turkish merchants who remained, were no longer to convey away any of their goods, but the Greeks from Semlin, and Austrian subjects, were retained, and at liberty to dispose of their property as they pleased.

Sept. 15. The capture of Belgrade, the bulwark of the Turkish empire in Europe, by a corps of Janissaries commanded by others in the service of Pafwan Oglou, has produced the greatest sensation at Vienna. Pafwan Oglou has it now in his power to threaten the capital of Turkey. It is mentioned as a positive fact, that the Emperor of Germany, by virtue of a secret article in the treaty of Luneville, has promised not to take any measures to stop or hinder the progress of the Pacha of Widden, as long as the latter shall continue to observe the laws of good neighbourhood, and abstain from molesting the Austrian subjects.

The Journal des Debats contains the following detail of circumstances respecting the husband and wife who lately went for the express purpose of committing suicide in the Elysian fields at Paris. The particulars are communicated in a letter to the Editor from the chief Surgeon of the hospital, to which the unfortunate survivor was conveyed. It is now about six months since Citizen Champagnac, accompanied by his wife Marie Josepie Fabre, then in the 25th year of her age, came from Brussels to Paris with a sum of money amounting to 500 Louis d'or, being the wreck of an immense fortune. Ill concerted commercial speculations in less than fifteen days deprived him of 200 Louis d'ors; finally, afflicted with the loss, Champagnac sought to repair it in a gaming house where he was seized of the remainder in a very short time. He had the cruelty, he said, even the marriage ring of his wife. On his return to the furnished lodging which he occupied in the rue d'Orleans St. Honore, he approached his wife, bathed in tears, and said to her, "I have lost, my friend, can no longer be our portion! indigence or death; can you have the confidence to share this last with your husband?" At first he hesitated, but at length agreed to the proposal. The evening of the 4th Fructidor (Aug. 22) was fixed upon for the catastrophe, but about half past eight in the evening of the 3d, Champagnac no longer being able, without doubt, to support the miseries of life, prevailed on his young wife to take a walk in the Elysian fields, they entered into the shop of Dubertrit, a cook, where they made a very frugal repast. About 11 o'clock Champagnac, conducted her to the bank of the river, where they were seen locked in each others arms, taking a most tender adieu. The preparations which this interesting woman addressed to her husband to reanimate to courage, were distinctly heard at a distance. All was over; "it is the resolution is taken," said he, "and we cannot survive without infamy. Recollect your promise." He tied a handkerchief over her eyes; "open your mouth," said he; he introduced the end of the pistol into her mouth, and executed his design; a second pistol terminated his own existence.—The inner part of this unfortunate woman's mouth is torn in a most frightful manner; the throat too is in a very deplorable state.—Her recovery, however, is not altogether despaired of. It is worth while to observe that Citizen Campagnac threw himself from the Pont Neuf into the river, immediately after the great loss he sustained, about six months before the final Catastrophe.—London paper.

From the FREE PRESS.

GREAT BRITAIN and France are the primary nations. It is evident that all the reſt play a ſecondary part. The French adopt this opinion, and call France Rome, and Great Britain Carthage. If this ſimilitude was exact, Britain would ſink in the conteſt. But the Britiſh government is more ſtable than that of Carthage, and the Britiſh ſuperiority on the ſea, is more clearly as well as more durably and more effectually eſtabliſhed than that of either Carthage or France. The naval power was rude and imperfect in ancient times, & thoſe who then underſtood it beſt were little the better for that advantage. Dulius, the Roman Conſul, gained a naval victory with mere landſmen. The reaſon is, that the ſhips of war were towed along ſide their antagoniſts, and being grappled firmly together, the combat was maintained, as in fights on land, by a body of ſoldiers on each ſide. This being the ordinary event of a ſea fight, no wonder the Roman ſoldiers, whoſe valor was the ſtradieſt and the beſt trained in the world, prevailed over the mercenaries of Carthage. Every thing is different between England and France. So ſuperior are the Engliſh ſeamen to the French, ſo little now depends on the number of men, & ſo much on naval art, that the crowd of Frenchmen on board their veſſels are rather an incumbrance than an effective force. There is ſeldom a ſea fight in which the French eſcape, although their crews are far more numerous than thoſe of their conquerors. Great Britain, too, enjoys a durable ſuperiority. There muſt be commerce before there will be ſeamen, there muſt be a ſtable government before there will be a general ſpirit of enterprize and induſtry to create commerce. The hands of labor will be weak while its earneſt are expoſed to rapine as in France. It will be an age or two before that nation will get rid of her military tyrants and her revolutionary ſpirit; and till ſhe does, her proſperity will be precarious, and her naval power will be diſplayed like that of Turkey, by foreign awkward landſmen on board ſhips.—Deſpotiſm will waſte men and wealth, and in vain try to imitate the ſpontaneous energies of induſtry and commerce, foſtered by a free and ſtable government. It may be added, that a naval power is exerted with infinitely more effect now than it was in ancient times. Every nation almoſt is now vulnerable in its commerce and in its colonies, the ruin of theſe produces a decay of the revenues and reſources for war.

If then, France affects to be Rome, ſhe will not find in Great Britain a Carthage. Nay, even in the military ſpirit of her people. Britain, with the exerciſe of one briſk campaign, would not be found inferior to her boaſtful antagoniſt. The campaign in Egypt, evinces that Engliſhmen can be good ſoldiers as well as ſeamen. Carthage, on the contrary, was too much torn by faction to maintain good infantry of her own citizens—the hired ſtrangers: but her cavalry, as that was not a deſpiſed ſervice like the infantry, but attended with honor, was excellent, and ſo ſuperior to that of Rome, that the Numidian horſe under Hannibal, won every battle in the open plains.

Carthage was rich, and England is richer: Carthage was free, England is really ſo; and if the government of Great Britain were either a democracy, or a deſpotiſm, ſi, in the firſt caſe, would have been ſhivered to pieces by faction, and in the latter, by France, will in the firſt four years of the war. None but free governments are ſtable, and none that are purely democratic are free.

In points of reſources, it does not appear that Britain experiences any want, nor that France has, except in the violences of force and tyranny, any ſort of ſecurity for a ſupply. It was foretold years ago, that Great Britain was to be ruined, and muſt have peace, if ſhe took ſervitude with it. The oppoſition aſſured the nation of the event. Yet time has totally confuted theſe predictions—wealth goes on augmenting credit is the ſtedier for the ſhocks that have waved its branches, but could not ſhe its roots. The war is chiefly naval, and the ſeamen are now formed, and indeed have grown up in the war, in ſufficient numbers. The expences are not encreaſing.—A long war creates a ſort of commerce for itſelf, and as it were, makes a part of its own means. There could not, therefore, exiſt a doubt that Britain was able to carry on the war. Her land never produced more, and its products never before were worth ſo much. Her induſtry never was greater, and the demand for its fabrics ſo little divided with competitors. Her tons of ſhipping and her trade are greater than at any former period. Her capital is doubled, and it is as ſure to create employment, as employment is to accumulate capital. Theſe are the fountains of her wealth, and they flow with an unexhauſted and progreſſively encreaſing ſtream. France is more nearly ruined by revolution, and Spain by the pride and lazineſs of her people, than Great Britain is by the war. It is an evil for a nation to be obliged to exert all its energies to preſerve itſelf from French fraternity—but it would be an evil a hundred times greater to fall under it.

One would expect that France was of all nations the richeſt in reſources, ſince it could ſpend all, and then attack the new holders of property, and ſpend it as often as the neceſſities of liberty might require. By a formal decree, all property in France has been declared in a ſtate of requiſition. The whole people were alſo enrolled in requiſition and death, or confiſcation of the offender's property enſued on diſobedience. France is now deſtitute of credit, of revenue, of all the ordinary means to extract reſources from her people, and ſhe has uſed and abuſed the extraordinary till they are almoſt as unproductive as they are odious. She looks for means abroad. She looks to Portugal, to Italy to Spain and Holland.—Bonaparte, of courſe, ſees the varniſh of his popularity wearing off, and his hopes fading into diſappointment. Already he fears the effects of that temper of the French, ever patient under tyranny, but ever eager to eſtabliſh a new tyrant. He ſees Egypt nearly wreſted from his domination. His ſplendid promiſes of wealth and glory, in an expedition to ſubvert the Britiſh dominions in India, vaniſh into air.—The powers of the North, whom he deceived beaten into a better underſtanding of the Law of Nations, and embittered againſt their deceiver.

Scraps from the late London papers.

The late ſon of Sir J. B. Warren, who was killed in Egypt, was not only a brave, but an amiable and accompliſhed young man. He had ſeveral times been ſent on ſervice, and whenever he failed on any expedition, he ſent a blank letter to his mother, allowing her to conceive feelings which he could not deſcribe.

It probably contributes to the ill humour of the Firſt Conſul, for the loſs of Egypt, that that army muſt now return to France which expreſſed ſo much reſentment againſt him for deſerting it. It will ſurpriſe no one if ſome of its leaders ſhould find their way to Paris, without a trial, like the turbulent citizens of Guadaloupe. (The Times.

A freſh inſtance of the deſpotiſm exerciſed by the French government has occurred, in a decree iſſued by the conſula for baniſhing from the territories of the Republic in Europe, the individuals ſent home from Gaudaloupe by Rear Admiral La Croille. Without inquiring into the charges preferred againſt them, without any proof of guilt, without any form of trial, theſe perſons are conſigned to the diſcretion of the Miniſter of Marine, who is directed to tranſport them to ſome of the French colonies.

Potatoes, which ſold at the rate of 2s. for 21lb. laſt winter in Ireland, now ſell at the rate of 3d and 4d. Such has been the produce of the earth this preſent ſummer. Corn is in great abundance alſo.

The ſtate of the French Marine puts one in mind of the ridiculous ſtory of the Weſt Indian and his horſe, which would go very well to Jamaica, or Antigua, or any where elſe, by ſea, but by land it would not go at all. The reverſe of this is the predicament of the French veſſels; for they do very well on ground, or chained to their piers, but by water they do not run at all.

The King of Naples has lately in imminent danger of falling into the hands of two Algerine corſairs, who had watched him from behind an iſland to which he was accuſtomed to repair in order to enjoy his favourite diverſion of fiſhing. It was only by a wonderful exertion on the part of his boat's crew, that his Majeſty eſcaped into Palermo.

Benedict XIII. did not think it beneath the Papal dignity to wage war againſt the wigs of the Clergy. On the 20th of December, 1725, he publiſhed a Bull, by which ten days imprisonment was to be inflicted upon any of the Clergy wearing a wig. How are things altered!

A great ſpeculation is at preſent carrying on in the purchaſe of young pigs on account of the prodigious quantity of grain that muſt remain to be diſpoſed of, in conſequence of the great importation of corn, and the abundance of the harveſt. The ſwiniſh multitude have certainly ſuffered conſiderably by the artificial ſcarcity, but now they are likely to profit by the infamy of their enemies, the hoarders.

Every one has a peculiar addreſs.—The addreſs of Young Men conſiſts in deceiving Women; the addreſs of Old Men in being deceived by them. With a Woman, diſſimulation; with a comet, being now complying, now repulſive. With a Man of intrigue it is cunning, and with an ambitious Man policy. The addreſs of a Parafite is ſhewn in accidentally dropping in at the hour of dinner; and the addreſs of moſt Debtors is to conceal their addreſs from their Creditors!

Land in the neighbourhood of Paris is now ſold at ſeven years purchaſe.

Dr. JENNER, who firſt introduced inoculation with the cow pox, is to be rewarded with a penſion for this important diſcovery. The enterpriſing genius, who had propoſed to ſubſtitute the fleſh of aſſes, and the manure of dogs, for the urine of the cow, expects alſo a good reward.

Many of the country Bankers are at length conſidered among their moſt ſanguine ſupporters, as nothing more than dealers in old rags.

The poachers in the neighbourhood of London have been actively employed theſe two laſt days in killing game to ſell to the Cockney ſportſmen, that they may return in triumph with evidence of their being good ſhots.

Robert Hignett, of Alſton, in the county of Cheſter, offers two guineas for the apprehenſion of his wife, Elizabeth, a beautiful young woman, aged 25, who has lately eloped with Larry M'Bride, an Iriſhman, 60 years of age, five feet high, jaw-licked, deeply pitted with the ſmall-pox, dreſſed in a Tailor's jacket, and a pair of old black breeches.

An Engliſh gentleman, in Dublin, has preſented a ſet of bells to a pariſh, for the uſe of one of the ſteeples, and has given an annuity to a famous ringer, on condition that a triple Bob Major ſhall ring every night. The watchmen proteſt againſt the donation, as they argue, that the parties in fulfilling the contract, will keep them awake.

The liberal ſyſtem which has lately diſcovered itſelf in ſeveral parts of the continent, in favour of the Jews, who have been ſo long the objects of the moſt oppreſſive perſecution, either by poſitive enactment, or by the no leſs galling mode of private abuſe, ſeems to have excited the greateſt alarm among a certain claſs in this country; their fears are roufed at the bare idea of a naturalization bill, and they conjure up all the horrors that would accrue to Church and State, if the children of Abraham were permitted to enjoy the full benefits of the Britiſh Conſtitution.—We, for our parts, however, can ſee no reaſon for indulging any ſuch alarming fears. The preſent is not an age of deſolvence, but of reſtraint, and all true friends of Church and State may conſole themſelves with the idea that we are too wiſe to remove the penal ſtatutes of our anceſtors.

It is worthy of remark, that the three greateſt Botaniſts in Europe, obtained at the ſame time the places aſſigned them in the public opinion. M. Vahl is Director of the garden of plants at Copenhagen, M. Wildenow at Berlin, and M. Cavanilles at Madrid. But what moſt attracts the attention of the learned is the new organization of the Royal Garden at Madrid. Every thing there is changed, and nothing ſpared to render it worthy of the nation moſt favoured by nature. They are about to enlarge it, to repair its green-houſes, to bring thither the rareſt plants of America and the Phillipine Iſlands, the Guiaguina, or Jeſuits' bark, palm, ſago, cocoa, and palm trees, which they hope to ſucceed in inuring to the climate by ſucceſſive tranſplantations from the Canary Iſlands to the ſouth of Andaluſia, and thence to the garden of Madrid.—M. Cevallos, Miniſter of State, from whom the natural ſciences have much to expect, gives every encouragement to the progreſs of botanical oeconomy, and his taſte for plants is communicating itſelf rapidly to the Spaniſh youth, who flock in crowds to the leſſons of M. Cavanilles, the only perſon who at preſent profeſſes botany at Madrid.

Among the commercial improvements at Vienna, a great indigo houſe is eſtabliſhed, which has already diminiſhed the importation of that article from England and Holland.

Mr. Pope's celebrated weeping Willow lately cut down, came originally from Spain incloſing a preſent to Lady Suffolk, who came over with King George II. and Queen Caroline, and was a favorite of both, particularly ſo of the King. Mr. Pope was preſent when the covering was taken off the preſent: he obſerved the pieces of ſticks appeared as if there was ſome vegetation, and added, "Perhaps they may produce ſomething we have not in England." Under this idea he planted it in his garden and it has produced the Willow tree that has given birth to ſo many others.

Sporting Anecdote.—Tupor, who was many years game keeper to ſir H. Mildmay, in Hampſhire, actually broke in a ſtaved ſow to find game, back & ſtand, as ſtaunch as any pointer, which he called Slut, and ſhot a conſiderable quantity of game to her. Slut was otherwiſe very lagacious, for one day, by the way of trial, ſhe was deſired to find Tupor in the midſt of a crowd, and the inſtantly made her way between the legs of a number of perſons, until ſhe reached her maſter, after whoſe deceaſe ſhe was ſold by auction for a conſiderable ſum.—Tupor had as fine an eye as his pig had a noſe, for he was an extraordinary ſhot; he would hit a cricket ball with a bullet from a fowling piece, when bowled with the greateſt velocity and at a conſiderable diſtance.

Affair of Honor.

Some days ſince, two hair-dreſſers, of Bath, having quarrelled in a public houſe, retired to King's Maid-fields, to fight it out—the one was a tall, lank man; the other ſhort, thick, and plethoric; after a few rounds, the combatant, whoſe rotundity unfitted him for works of laſting proweſs, juſt found breath ſufficient to whiſper forth, "I'll fight no more." The other, anxiouſly catching the half-formed ſounds, aſked "what does he ſay?"—"Say," cried one of the ſeconds, "why, he ſays he'll fight another hour."—"The Devil he does," rejoined the other, "then I'll fight no longer." Fatty was accordingly declared victor, and carried from the field in triumph.

LONDON, SEPT. 6.

Arrived this afternoon a very fine Spaniſh ſhip packet, called the Neptuna, from Corunna; captured by the Fifgard, of 38 guns, capt. Martin; the is quite new about 400 tons burthen, and fitted with four ſuits of ſtores of every kind, and was bound to the Weſt Indies: ſhe was cut out of Corunna this day fortnight, by the boats of the Fifgard, under the guns of a very ſtrong garriſon, and effected without any loſs on the part of the Engliſh: they alſo cut out at the ſame time, an American ſhip which they conceived was another packet, but ſhe was given up; they alſo captured a gun boat, with one 24 pounder, which they ſunk, being of little value.

Sir G. Warren was ſuddenly taken ill on Sunday night, at Tunbridge Wells, and expired in leſs than an hour. A ſingular circumſtance in his hiſtory was, that after a ſeparation decreed in the Eccleſiaſtical Court between him and his lady, in conſequence of diſagreements merely the reſult of contrariety of tempers, they again came together, and lived with each other until death pronounced a more durable divorce.

POETRY.

SONNET TO AN OLD MAN.

SWEET Mercy! how my very heart has bled,
To ſee thee, poor OLD MAN, and thy grey hairs,
Hoar with the ſnowy blaſt; while no one cares
To clothe thy ſhrivell'd limbs and palſied head!

My Father, throw away this tatter'd veſt,
That mocks thy ſhiv'ring! Take my garment—uſe
A young man's arm! I'll melt theſe frozen dews
That hang from thy white beard, and numb thy breaſt.

My SARAH, too, ſhall tend thee, like a child;
And thou ſhalt talk, in our fire-ſide's receſs,
Of purple pride, and ſcowls on wretchedneſs.
HE did not ſcowl, the Galilean mild,
Who met the LAZAR turn'd from rich men's doors,
And call'd him friend, and wept upon his ſores!

TO prevent disappointment and trouble, the Public is requested to take notice, that some time ago Mr. WILLCOCKS resigned his place of Post Master for York, his reasonable charges for the rent of an office, Stationary, fire, candles, and a servant to attend, being disputed; although by his affidavit and attention, the revenue was productive beyond expectation, as appears by the accounts he rendered, and the money he remitted to the Post Master General at Quebec. Dec. 16, 1801.

WHEREAS Barbara Cameron, wife of Archibald Cameron of the town of York, Upper Canada, has without any just cause or provocation whatever, eloped from his bed and board, behaved in an unbecoming manner, and after absenting herself from the first January 1799 (altho' solicited to return, without effect, which he can prove) has again returned to this town; he is therefore at last under the disagreeable but absolute necessity of thus giving public notice, that the said Barbara Cameron may not be credited or harboured on his account, as he is determined to pay no debts of her contracting.

WM. JARVIS, sec'y.

Proclamation

BY HIS EXCELLENCY

PETER HUNTER, Esquire,

Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Lieutenant General Commanding His Majesty's Forces in Upper and Lower Canada.

WHEREAS His Majesty's faithful Commons of this Province in Parliament assembled, did by virtue of a Resolution of their House of Assembly, pray that certain Sums of Money should be applied in such manner as to me should seem meet for the purpose of purchasing and distributing Hemp Seed gratis amongst the Farmers, and also for the paying of Premiums and Bounties to the deserving Cultivators and Exporters of Hemp in this Province. And whereas I thought fit to assent to the prayer of the said Commons. NOW KNOW YE, that I PETER HUNTER, Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of this Province, by virtue of the Authority so vested in me, and the better to effectuate the wise and liberal intentions of the said faithful Commons—And well knowing the Ability, Integrity and diligence of the Honorable John M'GILL, Esquire, one of the Legislative and Executive Councils, and of the Honorable DAVID WILLIAM SMITH, Esquire, one of the Executive Council and Speaker of the House of Assembly of this Province, have nominated and appointed the said John M'Gill and David William Smith Commissioners for the purpose of purchasing and distributing Hemp Seed gratis amongst the Farmers, and also for the paying of Premiums and Bounties to the deserving Cultivators and Exporters of Hemp, according to the true intent and meaning of the said Resolution, not doubting but that the encouragement thus liberally held forth by His Majesty's Faithful Commons, will effectually promote a measure so agreeable to the wishes of the Mother Country, and so highly conducive to the prosperity of this Province.

GIVEN under my Hand and Seal at Arms at York this Twenty-sixth day of July in the Forty first year of His Majesty's Reign, and in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and one.

P. HUNTER, Lt. Govt.

By His Excellency's Command,
Wm. JARVIS, Secy.

JAMES GREEN, Sec'y.

MIRACULOUS MARITIME PRESERVATION.

An account of certain English people, who, in the year 1569, making a voyage to the East Indies, were cast away, and wrecked upon an uninhabited Island, near the coast of Terra Australis Incognita, and all drowned except one man and four women.—Given by C. Van Sloetten, Captain of a Dutch ship, which was driven in there by foul weather, in the year 1667, who found their posterity (speaking good English) to the amount of twelve thousand souls.

CERTAIN English merchants, encouraged by the great advantages arising from the eastern commodities, in the year 1569, having Queen Elizabeth's royal licence, furnished out for the East Indies four ships, of which —— English was chosen factor; who embarked on the 3d of April, O. S. with his wife and family, consisting of a son of twelve years old, a daughter of fourteen two maid servants, a female negro slave, and George Pine, his book-keeper on board one of the said ships, called the East India Merchant, of 450 tons, being provided with all manner of necessaries and conveniencies, in order to settle a factory there.

By the 14th of May they were in sight of the Canaries; and soon after arrived at the Cape de Verd Islands, where they took in some provisions for the voyage, and steering their course south and a point east, about the 18th of August came to the Island of St. Helena; and having taken in some fresh water, set forward for the Cape of Good Hope, where they, by God's blessing, arrived safe, having hitherto met with no tempestuous or disagreeable sailing weather.

But it pleased God, that when they were almost in sight of St. Laurence, (said to be one of the largest Islands in the world), they were overtaken by a great storm of wind, which separated them from the rest of the ships, and continued with such violence for many days, they lost all hopes of their safety.

The first of October, about break of day, the sea continuing very stormy and tempestuous, they discovered land, which appeared high and rocky; and the nearer they approached to it, their fears encreased, expecting the ship would be suddenly dashed to pieces. The captain, therefore, Mr. English & some others, got into the long boat, in hopes, by that means, to save themselves and presently after, all the sailors cast themselves overboard, and endeavoured to save themselves by swimming; but probably they all perished in the sea.

Mr. Pine, Mr. English's daughter, the two maid servants and negro girl were the only persons remaining on board the ship; and these five persons were miraculously preserved; for after the ship had beat three or four times against the rocks, being now broken & quite foundered in the waters, they had with great difficulty got themselves on the bowsprit, which, being broken off was driven by the waves into a small creek, wherein fell a little river, which being encompassed by the rocks, was sheltered from the winds, so that they had an opportunity, though almost spent, to land themselves.

Mr. Pine, getting together some rotten wood, by the assistance of a tinderbox he had in his pocket, made a fire, by which they dried themselves; and then leaving the females, he went to see if he could find any of the ship's company that possibly might have escaped, but could find none.—At length it drawing towards the evening, he with what he could find from the wreck, returned to his fellow sufferers, who were very much troubled for want of him, he being now all their support in this lost condition.

They were afraid that the wild people of the country, if there were any, might find them out; but could distinguish neither footsteps nor paths; the woods rotted them being full of briers and brambles, they apprehended too, there might be wild beasts to annoy them, tho' they saw no marks of any. But above all, for want of food, they were afraid of being forced to death; but God had otherwise provided for them.

The wreck of the ship furnished them with many necessaries; for getting together some broken pieces of boards & planks, sails and rigging, with the help of poles, they made themselves tents; and having got wood for firing, and three or four ells gowns to cover them, making the negro their centry, they slept soundly all night, having been without sleep for several nights before.

The next day, after being well refreshed with sleep, and the wind ceasing, and the weather being warm, they went down from the rocks on the sands at low water, where they found a great part of the ship's lading either on shore or floating near it.—Mr. Pine, with the help of his companions, dragged most of it on shore; and what was too heavy for them they broke; and in finding the casks and chests, and taking out the goods, they secured all, so that they wanted neither clothes, nor other necessaries for house keeping, but the salt water had spoiled all the victuals except one cask of biscuit, which being lighter, and perhaps better secured than the rest, was undamaged; this served them for bread a while; and a fowl about the bigness of a swan, very heavy and fat, which, by reason of its weight could not fly, served them for present subsistence. The poultry of the ship, by some means getting ashore, bred exceedingly, and were a great help to them. They found also in the flags by a little river, plenty of eggs of fowl much like our ducks, which were very nourishing food, so that they wanted nothing to keep them alive.

Mr. Pine being now less apprehensive of any thing to disturb him, looked out for a convenient place to build a hut to shelter him and his family from the weather; and in about three weeks time, made a room large enough to hold them all, and their goods; and put up hammocks for his family to sleep in.

Having lived in this manner full four months, without seeing or hearing any thing to disturb them, they found the land they were in possession of, to be an island disjoined, and out of sight of any other land, uninhabited by any other but themselves, and that there was no hurtful beast to annoy them. But, on the contrary, the country was very pleasant, being always cloathed in green and full of agreeable fruits, and variety of birds, ever warm, and never colder than in England in September; so that this place (had it the culture that skilful people might bestow on it) would prove a Paradise.

The woods afforded them a sort of nuts as big as large apples, whose kernel being pleasant and dry, they made use of instead of bread, together with the fowl above mentioned, and a kind of water fowl like ducks, and their eggs; and a beast about the size of a goat, and almost like unto a greyhound, which caught forth [illegible] ones at a time, and but take a pair, of which the last issues and woods are very full; and being harmless and tame, they could easily take and kill them; but so, especially their kids, were in great plenty; so that, in short, they wanted nothing of food in abundance.

After being in possession of this country full six months, nature put them in mind of the great command of the Almighty to our first parents, as if they had been conducted thither by the hand of Providence, to people a new world; and in this respect they proved not unfruitful, for, in less than a year from their first arrival in the island, the females proved all to be with child, and coming at different seasons, they were a great help to one another. The women had all their reasons naturally, and their children proved strong and healthy. Their family increasing, they were now well satisfied with their condition, for there was nothing to hurt them.

The warmth of the climate made it agreeable, for them to go about bare-footed, and they reposed themselves on mossy banks, loaded by trees. Mr. Pine made several pleasant arbours for him and his women to sleep in during the heat of the day, and in these they passed their time together, the females not willing to be out of his company.

Mr. Pine's family was increased, after he had lived in this island fifteen years, to forty-seven children; for his first wife brought him thirteen; his second seven; his master's daughter, who seemed to be his greatest favourite, fifteen; and the negro twelve, which were all the produce of the first race of mortals in this island.

Thinking it expedient to provide for another generation, he gave his eldest son a mate; and took care to match the rest as fast as they grew up, and were capable. And left they should incommode one another, he appointed his sons habitations at some distance from him.

After having lived to the sixtieth year of his age, and the forteenth of his being in possession of this island, he summoned his whole people together, children, grand-children, and great-grand children; amounting to five hundred and sixty-five, of all sorts. He took the males of one family, and married them to the females of another, not permitting any to marry their sisters, as they did at first out of necessity.

Having taught some of his children to read, he laid them under an injunction to read the Bible once a month at their general meetings.

Three of his wives being dead, viz. the negro woman, and the other two who had been maid servants to his master, his master's daughter survived them twelve years. They were buried in a place he had set aside on purpose, fixing for his own interment the middle part, so that two of his wives might be on one side of him, and two on the other, with his chief favourites, one on each side, next to him.

Arriving to the eighteenth year of his age, and fortieth of coming to this island, he called his people together a second time, the number of which amounted to one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine, and having informed them of the manner of Europe, and charged them to remember the Christian religion, after the manner of those who spoke the same language, and to admit of no other, if they should come and find them out; and, praying to God to continue the multiplication of them, and send them the true light of the Gospel, he dismissed them.

He called this island the Ile of Pines, and gave the people, delivered from him, the name of the English Pines, distinguishing the tribes of the particular descendants by his wives' names, the Englishes, the Spinkles, the Townes, & the Phills, Philippa being the name of the negro.

Being now very old and his sight decaying, he gave his habitation and furniture that was left to his eldest son, after his decease; made him King and Governor of the rest; and delivered him the history of those transactions, written with his own hand, commanding him to keep it; and if any strangers should come hither by accident, to let them see it, and take a copy of it after if they pleased, that the name of his people might not be lost from off the earth.

It happened in the year 1667. Cornelius Van Sloetten, captain of a Dutch ship, called the Amsterdam, was driven by foul weather to this island, where he found the posterity of Mr. Pine, speaking good English, and amounting, as it was supposed, to ten or twelve thousand persons.

The narrative from which this account is taken was given by Mr. Pine's grand-son to the Dutch captain. Printed in London, being licensed, June 27, 1689.

PERSIAN EMBASSY.

An English Ambassador was sent last year to the Court of Persia, and the following letters are from the pen of one of the gentlemen who accompanied him. They afford some information respecting a country not a little distinguished both in ancient and modern times, which still possesses considerable power & importance in the East, and which soon will excite greater attention should the English revive the trade which was once carried on with it, or the French retain possession of Egypt.

"Shiraz, August 28, 1800.

"In a former letter I mentioned to you the Embassy having left Abu Shir, commonly called Bushire, for this place, we travelled in the most splendid style with respect to our equipment and attendents, and were treated with the utmost attention and respect throughout the whole of our journey. The different governors of the respective provinces throughout which our route lay, came out to receive and welcome our Envoy, conducting him to his tents, under a continual discharge of fire arms, with a grand display of military evolutions. The early part of our journey we moved extremely unpleasant, on account of the excessive heat, until we arrived at Cazeroon; having then pulled or rather ascended, two ranges of ex ceding high mountains, we experienced a very sensible alteration in the climate. We halted at Cazeroon ten days after our fatigue, regaling ourselves with plenty of different ices, great quantities of snow being brought from the surrounding mountains.

"On our leaving Cazeroon, we ascended two very high ridges of mountains before we reached Shiraz, with the sight of which we were at length gratified on the 13th of June. Captain Malcolm the Envoy, made his public entry the following day, and was received with the highest and most flattering distinction. Five noblemen of the higher order, attended by a retinue of upwards of a thousand horses came out to receive him on his arrival, and conducted him to where his tents had been pitched, which was on a lofty terrace, under the walls of the garden called Jehan nma, and within a few hundred yards of the tomb of the celebrated Hafiz, and the tomb of Rochnabad, so famed in his poems, does us the honor of running through our camp; it is at present not a very mighty stream, being no more than two feet but the purenels of its waters justly deserve all the praises they have received. The bower of Moolla is also close at hand, but which has suffered from time, nothing now remaining of that formerly much admired place, but the ruins of an old brick wall.

"Our stay here has altogether been extremely pleasant, particularly the latter part of our time; the first six weeks we were continually entertained with fruiting, feats & wrestling, rope-dancing, and fire works.—Soon after our arrival we quitted our tents, and took up our residence in a palace, situated in the centre of the delightful garden of the Jehan Numa. Since our arrival we have seen the Prince Regent two or three times; he is a very handsome boy about twelve years old. I fuppofe our stay at this place will not now exceed eight or ten days; when we shall begin our journey to Ispahan, from whence you may expect again to hear from me. I profess I cannot help feeling a particular degree of veneration for the place we are now in, and conceive that I am treading classic ground.

"Agreeable to my promise, I transmit you a short account of our journey from Shiraz to this place. We left Shiraz on the 4th inst. and the roads and country through which we passed were excellent, generally level during the large extensive plains, of a rich soil; but the traces of industry or the cultivating hand of the farmer, were evidently wanting, owing probably to the scarcity of water, but still more so from the want of population. On our way from Shiraz we visited the ruins of the once celebrated city of Persepolis, but as we only continued there one day, we had but a very cursory view of it, yet still sufficient to forcibly impress on the mind an idea of its former grandeur. Our reception at Ispahan was truly magnificent; the Beglerbeg's brother, and son, attended by nearly ten thousand troops, marched out the distance of 8 miles to meet us, and if I may be permitted to judge from appearances, there must have been not less than thirty thousand spectators assembled to witness the novelty of such a sight. We have not yet paid a visit to the city, but it appears to be of immense extent, and its whole appearance denotes the capital of a great and extensive empire. One of the palaces of the Sefferan Monarchs is fitted up for our reception, and we shall take possession of it to-morrow or next day; at present we are encamped on the banks of the river Zenderood, to the westward of the city. The Beglerbeg, Hajy Mahomed Hussun Khan, has just paid us a visit, he is a remarkable pleasant old man, said to be extremely rich, and made an elegant and showy appearance in his dress and equipage. We propose to leave this in about ten days, and expect to be at the Imperial Shiraz in about three weeks afterwards at farthest."

POETRY.

From a late English Paper.

VERSES,

Worthy of a place, not only in the corner of every newspaper, but also in a cot use of every human heart—not so much for their poetical elegance, but for the sentiment.

AH! ye, who meet stern winter's frown,
Upheld by Fortune's pow'rful hand;
Who see the chilling snow come down,
With all her comforts at command;

Oh think of them less happy doom,
Whom Poverty's sharp woes shall;
No sparkling fire, no cheerful room,
Revive their cheek, cold, sunk and pale!

Deep howls the wind; the pelting rain
Dups through the shatter'd casement cold;
While the fad mother's arms contain
Her infants, shivering in their hold.

In vain they raise their pitcous cry,
And plead at hungry nature's call;
Their only food a mother's sigh?
Their only warmth the tears that fall?

Stretch'd on this miserable bed,
The wretched father sinks in grief;
Pale sickness rells upon his head,
And only hopes from death relief?

The Parents' tender mournful eyes,
Mingle their faint and humid beams,
Fresh woes from retrospection rise,
Fresh source from mem'ry's fountain streams.

O Heav'! the transport might be thine,
To sooth their sufferings into peace!
To bid the sun of Comfort shine,
And Want's oppressive Empire cease!

To see the glow of health return,
Re-animate their faded cheek!
Life's feeble spark, rekindled, burn,
And give what language cannot speak!

On Fancy's pinion oft I roam,
With Pity, partner of my flight;
Forget, a while, that grief's my own,
And taste a soothing sweet delight.

Forget the many poignant woes,
That weigh this drooping form to earth,
Where restless Sorrow hopes repose,
Scar'd from the ills, which gave it birth.

O! ye, embark'd for Pleasure's shore,
Restrain a while the fluttering sail!
At Pity's call, retard the oar,
Nor let her plaintive pleadings fail!

From a late English Paper.

VERSES,

Worthy of a place, not only in the corner of every newspaper, but also in a corner of every human heart—not to mock for their poetical elegance, but for the sentiment.

AH! ye, who meet stern winter's frown,
Upheld by Fortune's pow'rful hand;
Who see the chilling snow come down,
With all her comforts at command!

Oh think of their less happy doom,
Whom Poverty's sharp woes assail;
No sparkling fire, no cheerful room,
Revive their cheek, cold, sunk and pale!

Deep howls the wind; the pelting rain
Dips through the shatter'd casement cold;
While the sad mother's arms contain
Her infants, shivering in their fold!

In vain they raise their piteous cry,
And plead at hungry nature's call;
Her only food a mother's sigh!
Their only warmth the tears that fall!

Stretch'd on this miserable bed,
The wretched father sinks in grief:
Pale sickness rests upon his head,
And only hopes from death relief!

The Parents' tender mournful eyes,
Mingle their faint and humid beams,
Fresh woes from retrospection rise,
Fresh source from mem'ry's fountain streams.

O Rich! the transport might be thine,
To sooth their sufferings into peace!
To bid the sun of Comfort shine,
And Want's oppressive Empire cease!

To see the glow of health return,
Re-animate their faded cheek!
Life's feeble spark, rekindled, burn,
And give what language cannot speak!

On Fancy's pinion oft I roam,
With Pity, partner of my flight;
Forget, a while, that grief's my own,
And taste a soothing sweet delight.

Forget the many poignant woes,
That weigh this drooping form to earth.
Where restless Sorrow hopes repose,
Scap'd from the ills, which gave it birth.

O! ye, embark'd for Pleasure's shore,
Restrain a while the fluttering sail!
At Pity's call, retard the oar,
Nor let her plaintive pleadings fail!

ANECDOTE of the EMPEROR of GERMANY.

A Mad house in Germany being compleated upon a new plan, the architect requested the Emperor to honor him so far as to look at the internal parts of the structure before the lunatics were admitted; this the Imperial Joseph consented to, and while he was in the house, some one chalked under the inscription, which was, "The Hospital for Lunatics,"—"Josephus abeundo insanos hic penit."

WHEREAS Bathsheba Cameron, wife of Archibald Cameron of the town of York, Upper Canada, has without any just cause or provocation whatever, eloped from his bed and board, behaved in an unbecoming manner, and after absenting herself from the first January 1799 (altho' solicited to return, without effect, which he can prove) has again returned to this town; he is therefore at last under the disagreeable but absolute necessity of thus giving public notice, that the said Bathsheba Cameron may not be credited or harboured on his account, as he is determined to pay no debts of her contracting.

THE Subscriber returns his sincere thanks to his Friends and the Public for the encouragement he has hitherto so amply experienced, and begs leave to inform them, that the above House is now fitted up in convenient manner, and ready for their reception, where transient gentlemen, travellers and others may also be accommodated with genteel Boarding and Lodging.—He is constantly provided with the best liquors, viands, &c. and flatters himself that the conveniencies of the house, together with his attention to their commands, will not fail to render it perfectly agreeable to those gentlemen who may please to favor him with their custom and support.
