The Solicitor General, in order then to oblige his honorable & learned friend, would generally touch on the measures which were proposed as lightly as possible. The system he attacked was a combined one, and the measures to defeat them should also be combined. In the first place, he now begged to call their attention to that measure, which was directed against the liberty of the press, as it had been denominated. But the object of the Government was only to restrain those cheap publications which had proved so fruitfully productive of all the existing mischief. No person either in that house, or in the country, was more firmly attached to the Liberty of the Press than he was. He looked upon the Liberty of the Press, and Trial by Jury, to be the palladium and support of the Constitution. But what was that evil of the press, which the proposed measures were to combat? Those cheap publications, published by low persons, without character or principle, through which that poison was diffused, that would ultimately lead to the overthrow of the laws and Constitution itself. Their object would also be to shew those people who put their faith in such traffickers in sedition, that they could no longer do so safely, or if they did, and acted on such advice, that they should be punished for their crimes. Then what safeguard was required to prevent the country from being inundated with publications of such a character? Why, that such persons should give some security beforehand, that they would make no improper use of the formidable engine with which they were entrusted, and that, not on the statement perhaps of any arbitrary Magistrate, but if convicted of its abuse before a Jury, that then, and not till then, should the securities be forthcoming to answer such demands as justice might call upon them to satisfy. Did that intrude, or in any way encroach upon the freedom of the press? They desired no previous censorship upon it—(hear)—they coveted no limitation of the Trial by Jury.—(Hear.)—No. If Ministers were disposed to propose such measures, he was sure they would be met with nothing less than the execration of the House.—(Hear.)—But when an engine of such force was wielded by such persons as he alluded to, was it improper to ask them for some security if they should be called upon to give it? That would be the only effectual manner of putting a stop to their wicked career, and was, at the same time, the most agreeable to the spirit of the Constitution. As to the political nature and character of those publications, it was thought that by the 36th of the King, when taxes were imposed on newspapers, that the Act was sufficiently comprehensive to have embraced them all within it. That question had since came before the Courts, and the fact turned out to be, that they were able to evade it. Now, all that the measures proposed by ministers contemplated was, to bring all political papers within the meaning of that Act. Could any well founded objections be made to such a measure? He really considered not. Another object of the proposed measure, respecting the Liberty of the Press, would be, to increase the degree of punishment for a second offence—a principle long recognized and acted upon by the law. And on this point he asked, if a party convicted of a blasphemous or seditious libel for the second time, should not be, according to all reason, more severely punished than for the first offence, at the same time that in the second offence he would be braving the Court, and offering every proof of his disposition to sin on? Under such circumstances, he asked, if there should not be a discretionary power vested in the Court before whom the party must be tried, to inflict a punishment not adequate to, but likely to prevent its further repetition? Such a measure would be any thing but hostile to the liberty of the press, more especially as it was only intended to be directed against those publications which all agreed in deprecating. On the measure regarding the training to the use of arms, he should merely say a few words: enough had been already stated on that subject. If persons trained themselves to the use of arms for improper purposes, for purposes tending to endanger the peace of the country, there could be no doubt of its being an overt act of treason, and sufficient proof of that fact before a Jury, would render them liable to be capitally punished. In these cases certainly no new law would be necessary. But although perhaps as legislators, no Gentleman in that House could have any doubt that such training was intended against the peace of the country, yet before a Court of Justice, it might be difficult to give such proofs of that intention, as to make them become amenable to the existing laws. Many difficulties attended the proving of such a fact, and to remedy these defects, it was proposed that no persons should be allowed training to the use of arms, without an especial licence for that purpose. On another proposed measure, it being only technical, he should merely say a word or two—he alluded to the delay in trials for misdemeanor. Some delay in these trials formerly took place; even in civil actions it was the custom of the old law, but that custom has since been somewhat changed. The change now proposed had been so cautiously prepared, as not to compel a party to go to trial, if he had not ample time for his defence. The subject would not be deprived of the great advantages of moving to change his place of trial by certiorari as heretofore, only that it was imposed on him to give notice of such an intention previously to the bills being found against him by a Grand Jury. By doing this, he could effectually secure the removal of the place of trial. Was that any infringement of the subject's right? Then as to the measure for the seizure of arms, he only understood it to be intended as a temporary measure. The magistrates were to be empowered to seize all arms of all descriptions, when they had reason to believe they were intended to be directed against the public peace. But it was provided, that evidence should be given to the Magistrates of the character of the weapons intended to be so used. None of a doubtful description were to be seized without evidence. But in neither case was the decision of the Magistrate to be final. He was to be bound to hear evidence from the party of the obnoxiousness of such weapons as might be seized; and if the Magistrate refused to hear it; he might still appeal to the Court of Quarter Sessions, who would, no doubt, act fairly and impartially towards all parties.

All this, however, was only intended to be a local and temporary measure.—Reverting again to the restrictions on the Press, he should admit that libels of a most atrocious character had not been made the subject of prosecution. But the evils which they now complained of burst like a flood and torrent upon them; and as the laws now stood, they felt it impossible, from the delays attending the interposition of a Grand Jury, to check them or to punish them. But he mainly attributed them to the acquittal of Hone, which was hailed with so much triumph and approval. That individual, who, at the time of his publishing libels of the most blasphemous character, was almost in penury, was subsequently lifted into something like opulence, by the subscriptions of those persons who now asked, why all the libels of the present day were not punished as they deserved? To this acquittal did he ascribe many of the evils attending what he would call the cheap and minor Press. But to whatever cause they might be ascribed, they could not, with truth, be charged upon the negligence of the Law Officers of the Crown. Now, as to the Bill for the prevention of Seditious Meeting—It was said by some Gentlemen on the other side of the House, that the people had a right to meet, in any numbers, to consider of their grievances, and apply for their address——but whatever construction might now be put on the Statute of Charles II, whatever the opinions of the Judges might have been in the case of Lord George Gordon's riot, he assumed the fact that they had a right to meet to consider of their grievances, and to petition for their redress. But admitting that, was it necessary also to admit that they could meet to any number with a concealed object in view? If under the mask of such assemblies, pretended to be for reform, but in fact for Revolution, would any man say it was not the duty of the Legislature to interfere, and if the law were such as to give them such a power, to prevent its further exercise? Not, however, to prevent discussion of grievances, not to prevent the petitioning for their redress, but to prevent the endangering of the public tranquillity. And what was the remedy proposed to effect this desirable object? To restrict the right of meeting, unless sanctioned by the Lords lieutenants of counties, the majority of a grand jury, or a certain number of magistrates. Their concurrence would be necessary to the calling of a public meeting; and if that concurrence could not be obtained, the objects of such meeting could not be of the most pure and unsullied character. But did the government intend to stop here? did they intend to leave the people no power of meeting in case of a refusal from a lord lieutenant, or sheriff, or majority of a grand jury or certain number of justices? No! for they expressly promised a remedy in case of such refusal: they provided that the parties requesting a public meeting might meet and in their respective parishes or districts, not certainly in a tumultuous manner, but in such a manner as best to exercise the right of deliberation. It was not the principle of the proposed measure to say, that the people could only meet in certain districts, that was not intended as more than a precautionary measure, to secure to the subject his right of meeting without the concurrence of the responsible persons he had already named, and he begged it might be so understood throughout the discussion of the question. As it was found necessary to limit the number of persons attending public meetings, the proposers of those measures had either to make new divisions of the county, or adhere to those old and well known divisions which every body knew. So far he had gone through the measures intended to be proposed by His Majesty's government as simply and distinctly as the manner in which he had been called upon enabled him to state them. If the House agreed in the principle of these measures, he thought their details would be more properly discussed in the Committee. And he thought the gentlemen opposite, if agreeing in the necessity of enacting some measures to preserve the public peace, would do much better to lend their aid to the government of the country, by suggestion or advice, than to quarrel with details, which could be be best disposed of when the measures were referred to the committee.—One objection was made to these proposed measures, that they were to be permanent, while the evils they were to remedy were only of a local and temporary nature. But he begged the House seriously to look at the real state of the evils to be combated by these measures. Did they not exist in the metropolis and the counties adjacent to it—did they not extend from York to Glasgow—before not the counties of Warwick, Stafford, and Leicester, already imbued with them? and if remedial measures were only applied to these counties, did they not believe that similar evils would break out in all the other parts of the country? (Hear, hear!) In former times when measures like those now adopted had been pursued, the dangers were more local than at present, but the legislature did not so consider them, and wisely provided for the protection of the whole kingdom.——Another objection was also started in the course of the debates upon the question, namely, that the proposed measures were to be of a wholly permanent character.——But if the evil spirit which was now abroad, although actively existing only within three or four years, were found to have been gradually striking root and increasing for the last thirty or forty years, occasionally put down by the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act—(Hear, hear!)—and other severe though temporary measures; if, said the hon. member, the same foul and malignant spirit be now existing as it was before, it was absolutely necessary to enact some wise and moderate, but permanent measure, which should do away the necessity of resorting to such severe and temporary expedients. (Hear, hear!) The government of the country had every wish to conciliate the well affected and loyal inhabitants of the country, but they could have no hope in conciliating such persons as were to be found amongst the Radicals. The character of the measures pursued had totally forbade it. His Majesty's Ministers were called upon to protect the loyal, and interpose the shield of their protection between them and the schemes of the disaffected and revolutionary Radicals.—(Hear!)—who aimed at nothing less than the total overthrow of the constitution, against which they had unblushingly drawn their swords.—Now, then, was the time to rally round the laws, and crush the efforts of those who would be satisfied with nothing less than their destruction. (Hear!) It was proposed that no person should be allowed to attend public meetings with arms, or banners, or other revolutionary emblems. If it be law that no persons should attend public meetings with arms, it was quite proper that the people should have distinct notice of that law.—Having gone through the general character of the Bill, and feeling a strong conviction that its object was not to prevent public meetings, but to promote freedom of discussion, by removing those obstacles that impeded its progress, he would not trespass longer on their attention. He was so satisfied with the spirit in which it was founded, with the wisdom of those who framed it, with, in fact, its admirable adaptation to the necessity of the case, that he felt sincerely convinced, that when maturely considered by the gentlemen on the other side, it must meet with general concurrence and support. He felt assured, too, that the example set by an hon. gentleman opposite, (Mr. Grenfell) would be followed by those gentlemen who acted with him, and that the peace and happiness, and tranquility of the country, would be the result of their deliberations. (Hear, hear!)

Mr. Smyth (of Cambridge) admitted the existence of considerable danger, and should assent to any moderate measure for its repression. But he considered the remedy proposed ten thousand times worse than the evils which it was intended to remove. He objected particularly to the clause which tended to enact, that if in a quarter of an hour a stranger did not withdraw himself from any meeting, in half an hour that meeting, however salutary and necessary it might be, should be dispersed as illegal, and its chairman & orators would become liable to the penalty of transportation.

The King of Spain has appointed the Marquis de Mata Florida, Minister of "Grace and Justice," in the place of M. de Torres, who has been permitted to resign. The Marquis was formerly counsellor of Finance.

On the 13th of November, Nadin, the high constable, was fired at near his residence in Manchester, the ball passed through his hat; a reward of £360 is offered by the Magistrates for the discovery of the person who fired.

A long examination of Edward Megher has taken place at Manchester which resulted in his acquittal. It appeared that Megher was trumpeter to the troop of horse which made the charge at the late celebrated meeting.—On the 2d of October, a mob assembled

His Majesty.—A gentleman who has been in his presence a short time ago, states that the appearance of our aged Monarch is the most venerable imaginable. His hair and beard are white as the drifted snow, and the latter flows gracefully over a breast which now feels not the pleasures or the pains of life. When the gentleman saw him, he was dressed in a loose satin robe, lined with fur, sitting in an apparently pensive mood, with his elbows on a table and his head resting on his hands seemingly perfectly regardless of all external objects.

Fire at Bordentown.—On Tuesday af ternoon, the splendid mansion of Joseph Bonaparte (late King of Spain, and now styled Count de Survilliers) at Bordentown, N. J. was destroyed by fire. The fire originated in the fourth story, from some defect in a stove. Most of the furniture, and the whole of the valuable paintings, which it is said cost 150,000 dollars, were saved. The owner, who had been on a visit to this city, arrived at his home within an hour after the event had occurred.

A singular fact.—We understand that flour has lately been shipped from this port, and from Philadelphia, to England, and from thence re-shipped in British vessels to the West Indies, at a lower rate of freight than it can be done by the way of Bermuda, or any other island.
The freight from Philadelphia to Liverpool was half a dollar per barrel, and from Liverpool to Jamaica, something under that sum——making the expenses round about one dollar. This is a carrying trade indeed.—N. Y. D. A.

Saltpetre.—This mineral has afforded an undoubted proof this year of its utility in promoting the growth of corn on poor land, and also would greatly aid the corn on rich, equally as much on the sea-board as the gypsum or plaster of Paris would on the high land in the northern states. I planted corn this year on poor land the 1st of June, and soaked it in saltpetre until it swelled; I also planted some in the same field without soaking it. The corn that was soaked was well eared, and the other was eared, but had not a kernel of grain.

Mr. Henderson—As the season is approaching when housekeepers will be required to put up their bacon, I send you for publication, my method, which has for many years succeeded in excluding the bugs.

After your joints are quite cold, set them on end in a cask, as thick as they can stand, then to four gallons of water, add eight pounds of coarse salt, two ounces of saltpetre, and one pint of molasses, or two pounds of brown sugar;
boil them together, take off the scum that rises, and when quite cold, cover the joints, or bacon of any kind, beef or neats tongues, &c. with pickle of the above consistency. Let them remain in the pickle from ten to fifteen days, after which they must be smoked sufficiently, before the warm weather commences.
When dry, set them upon an end, as before, and cover them in ashes. It is not material what kind or quality of ashes are used, provided they be dry: indeed sand would answer as well, were it not for the grit insinuated into the meat.

[The plan heretofore recommended, of washing the bacon in a strong decoc-tion of elder leaves, is thought to be effectual in excluding flies.—Editor.]

WONDERFUL MECHANISM.

Mr. S. Tilly, from London, advertises in a New York paper, that he will exhibit the whole art of fancy glass blowing, spinning and reeling hot glass round a wheel, with the astonishing velocity of a mile in less than two minutes; blowing glass to different degrees of thickness, and forming it into various articles, such as writing pens, smelling bottles, &c. He will blow a small globe, which will form nearly a vacuum, and fall to the floor with apparent great weight. The hydropneumatic fountain will be exhibited, and a small glass man will ascend and descend in a bottle of water; glass will be divided into some hundreds of parts in a second of time.

AUBURN, Dec. 15.

THE GREAT CANAL.

In this age of wonders, perhaps nothing is more calculated to excite the admiration of the intelligent and reflecting part of the people, than that ninety-six miles of canal, principally through a wilderness, should be completed in the short space of two years and five months, from the time of its commencement—yet such appears to be the fact. We have it from authority not to be doubted, that from Utica to near Salina the Canal is not only navigable, but has actually been navigated; the navigation there, however, was then prevented by a small job of work which was not completed. The western part of the middle section has also been completed and navigated.

Information having been given, that the Canal from Seneca river to Salina, would be completed about the 10th inst.
a boat was prepared at Seneca Falls, with a temporary cabin and other con-veniencies, and notice was given that she would leave Montezuma at 9 o'clock
A. M. of the 10th inst. It so happened, however, that on the 9th inst. the weather, which for several days had been very mild and pleasant, changed suddenly, and at the appointed time of starting, it was very cold and unpleasant; and to add to the difficulties to be encountered in this first voyage, the canal was covered with ice from one to two inches in thickness. A number of gentlemen, with Mr.
Holley, one of the commissioners, had,
however, collected, and about half past 11 o'clock the boat with two horses attached to her, left Seneca river, in defiance of the inclemency of the season and ice in the canal. It was found on trial that two horses would propel the boat against the ice at the rate of rather more than two miles an hour.

The party proceeded and arrived at
Mr. King's in Mentz, a distance of about 6 miles, with the two horses, and with from fifty to seventy passengers. At Mr. King's two more horses were added, and the boat proceeded amidst the acclamations of the citizens, and arrived at Jordan, a distance by the Canal of nearly 16 miles from Seneca river, before 7 o'clock in the evening, having passed on the route three locks and stopped one hour at Mr. King's, which leaves about 6 hours for travelling 16 miles. There was two feet water in the Canal, and the boat sixty feet in length and 10 in width.

On the morning of the 11th inst. it was found that the ice had increased so much during the night, that it was deemed unadvisable to proceed further;
the horses were therefore hitched to the boat, and the passengers returned the same way to Montezuma.

Much credit is due to capt. Arnsbury and his associates, for their public spirit in fitting the boat so as to make it comfortable and pleasant for the passengers at this inclement season.

A PASSENGER.

NEW ORLEANS, Nov. 24

We yesterday mentioned the arrival here of four of the men who were concerned in the robbery of Mr. Lynx, in September last; the names are John Hale, William Thompson, Henry Myer, alias Lightbouth, and Charles Slater.
These were all surrendered by John Lafitte to capt. Madison of the U. S. schooner Lynx, with the exception of Myer, alias Lightbouth, who was taken in the bay of Galveztown, by the boats of the Lynx. As these men will be tried in this state, we deem it improper to say any thing in relation to their offence.
But it may be interesting to the public,
and a salutary warning to those deluded men who are disposed to engage in similar practices, to be made acquainted with the hardships and dangers endured by a gang of thieves after they had perpetrated their crime and got fairly off with their plunder. It will prove to this description of persons, that, though they may fly for refuge to the most remote and secluded parts of the country; though they may seek shelter among the savages on the banks of the Sabine, or the banditti of Galveztown, the hand of justice is sure to strike them at last.

It appears that while they were encamped on the banks of the Sabine, they were attacked by a party of riflemen who had pursued them from the vicinity of the plantation which had been the theatre of their depredations and who made prisoners of part of them and retook all their plunder. The remainder of them determined to make their way to Galveztown. But, a few days after they set out, being closely pursued by a boat, which proved to be one belonging to the Lynx, they betook themselves to the prairie, and two days afterwards they lost one of their number, John Brown who fell down and died through fatigue and hunger. On the fifth day three more, viz Lightner, Kelly and Slirth, left them to go to an Indian village on the Sabine, & have not since been heard of.
On the seventh day in swimming over a creek, lost their arms and ammunition; & on the eighth day were compelled to kill Gorse, an Italian, and to subsist on his body. On the twelfth day they arrived opposite Galveztown. In crossing the bay, they were pursued by a boat belonging to the Lynx, and one of them (Myer) was taken. The rest on their arrival at Galveztown, were apprehended by John Lafitte, the acidiant governor, who ordered them to be tried by a court and jury, by whom they were sentenced to death, and their leader,
George Brown, was actually executed.
Lafitte was induced to pardon the rest, as he observes, by the intreaties of the inhabitants of the country.

FROM LOWER-CANADA.

Proceedings of the Committee for the relief of the distressed Emigrants and other Protestant Poor of this City.

From the great number of unemployed and distressed persons resident in this city and its suburbs, who are found to be entirely destitute of the means of providing for themselves and their families, during the winter season, it has been found necessary some measure for their relief. A committee for this purpose has been formed, consisting of the Minister and one gentleman belonging to each of the four Protestant Churches in this city.
Subscriptions have been opened among the members of each church, and a fund from the whole amounting to £77 10s.
per month has been already raised.

The mode of relief intended to be afforded, is to supply soup and bread daily; wood weekly, or as required; also the use of stoves, and the payment of rents according to the necessities of those who are considered objects of charity.

In promoting the object of the Committee, the ladies of the Benevolent Society have come forward with a laudable zeal, kindly undertaking to superintend the making and distribution of the soup and bread at their house in St. Ma-rice street, where boilers have been erected, by the committee, sufficiently large to make 75 gallons of soup.

Such is the plan of relief which has been organized, and which, we are hap-to say, is now in operation.

Since Tuesday last, 75 families, consisting of 291 souls, have received 210 quarts of soup and 105 lbs. bread daily, beside wood, &c.

The Committee have the pleasure to announce a noble act of munificence on the part of the 37th Regiment, now in quarters in this city, the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of which have given each a day's pay, amounting to upwards of £80, in aid of the funds for the relief of the distressed emigrants, &c.

Liberal as are the subscriptions which have been raised, it is feared, from the number of applicants and the destitute circumstances of a number of them, that the funds will not be sufficient to afford the necessary assistance to all. Subscription books therefore are opened at the Reading room of Messrs. Nickles and McDonell, and also that of Mr.
Cunningham, and at the Montreal and Canada Banks, where the contributions of the benevolent will be thankfully received, as also by the following Gentlemen of the Committee, *Rev. Mr. Bethune, Rev. Mr. Jenkins, Rev. Mr. Esson, Rev.
Mr. Luther, Mr. William Lamb*, Treasurer, Mr. T. Porteous, Mr. John Try and Mr. John McKenzie. Donations also of left-off-Clothes and Blankets, or of Vegetables for soup, will be thankfully received.

The Committee, particularly desirous of encouraging industry, earnestly request the public to consider the necessity of furnishing employment as far as practicable to the many persons who otherwise will remain in a state of idleness, for several months—than which nothing can be more injurious to their morals and health.—Applications to the Committee for servants and labourers, will meet with prompt attention.

Montreal, Dec. 17, 1819.

We understand the collection last Sunday in the Scotch Presbyterian Church, for the relief of the Protestant Poor, amounted to about £77. We have also to mention, that Mr. James Carswell is appointed to received any Contributions that may be made for the same purposes by such persons as may have been unavoidably absent on Sunday.—*Mont.

We are informed that the Committee in this City for the relief of the distressed Emigrants, have received from the Highland Society of Upper Canada, through Alexander Fraser, Esq. River Raisin, a donation of one Hundred Dollars. We feel much pleasure in noticing this instance of liberal conduct on the part of this young association in the Upper Province, and hail it as a pledge that it will emulate the patriotic and generous zeal of the Parent Society; and like it become the patron and promoter of every plan of public improvement, and every scheme of enlightened benevolence. One half of the above sum has been placed in the hands of the Revd.—Richard of the Seminary, for the benefit of the Catholic Emigrants.—Ib.

From the Kingston Chronicle.

A quarry of a sort of stone not very dissimilar from marble, was found a few weeks ago, in the neighbourhood of Gan-anoque by a stone cutter lately from England. The stone which is pronounced by Connoisseurs to be Serpentine, is of a green colour, beautifully variegated with spots of white, it is of the finest texture, and is susceptible of an exquisite polish. This may be considered a valuable discovery, for as the quarry is represented to be extensive, the stone will be highly useful in the construction of fireplaces and other works of ornu-ment.

The stone cutter has brought up about a ton of this fine stone, and has already made a mortar, which is a handsome specimen of his own skill, as well as of the beauty of the material.

There can be scarcely a question that the rough and rocky region lying to the northward of this town abounds with hidden riches, which require only the researches of acute and experienced observers to be brought to light, and be made to contribute to the domestic comforts and wealth of the community.

YORK, JANUARY 27, 1820.

His Excellency the Lieut Governor, Lady Sarah Maitland, and family, left this Town for Quebec on Monday last.

We have heard that it is his Excel-cy's intention to return immediately to open the ensuing Session of the Provincial Parliament, on the 21st of next month.

an affairs for that post, and Major commanding the 2d Reg. of Essex Militia.—

ful and zealous servant and subject, and

The object of this little work is pri-cipally to point out the superior advantages held forth by this country to all classes of emigrants, (from whencesoever they may come,) from the poor man to the capitalist; and, to afford that kind of information which is known to be so much wanted in Europe, and, especially in Great Britain: to which the possession and improvement of these Provinces is of the last importance.

As the work will be published in Lon-appointed the undermentioned Gentle-and address of those who may wish for copies, in all parts of the two Provinces, and it is requested that such as may be desirous of subscribing will be kind enough to signify the same, as early as

FOR THE UPPER CANADA GAZETTE.

THE CRUCIFIXION.

I ask'd the Heavens ;—" For what hath God done
This unexampled deed ?" The Heavens exclaim,
" 'Twas man ; and we in horror snatch'd the sun
From such a spectacle of guilt and shame "

I ask'd the sea ;—The Sea in fury boil'd,
And answer'd, with his voice of storms,—" 'Twas man ;
My waves in panic at his crime recoil'd,
Dash'd the abyss, and from the centre fled."

I ask'd the Earth ;—The Earth replied, aghast,
" 'Twas man ; and such strange pangs my bosom rent,
That still I groan and shudder at the past."

To man, gay, smiling thoughtless man, I went,
And ask'd him next ;—he turn'd a scornful eye,
Shook his proud head, and deign'd me no reply.

From the Kingston Chronicle.

At the Annual Meeting of the Kingston Compassionate Society, held this day at Walker's Hotel, the Committee for the last half year presented the following Report of the Committee to the Members of the Compassionate Society, January 3d, 1820.

GENTLEMEN,

In presenting this report of the proceedings of last year, your Committee do not hesitate to congratulate you on the great benefit and utility of your charitable institution. The pages of their journal, which are now exhibited for your inspection and approval, will testify to the truth of this remark. The names there registered, you will perceive amount in number nearly to a hundred ; which, it is to be observed, represent not individual persons, but families consisting for the most part of helpless women and children, or disabled fathers and husbands.

To have relieved effectually so many objects of compassion, would indeed have been the greatest happiness to your committee, as it evidently was the avowed object and the benevolent intention of the Institution. But the very limited means (not exceeding £120) with which they have had to relieve these evils, testify how imperfect that relief must have been. Agues, dysentaries, fevers, and (which is worse than all diseases) the broken hearts of fathers sinking under the disappointed expectation of a plentiful provision in this Country, and agonized by the surrounding cries of their famished children—these, and such like evils, have been both too numerous and too formidable, to yield, in every case, to such remedies as we have had it in our power to afford : still however your committee present you their sincere thanks, for the opportunity, which your liberality has afforded them, of alleviating a portion at least of this misery — The call of distress has ever been attended to, as far as our means would permit. Upwards of fifty sick persons have been restored to health, and nearly twice that number of families have been forwarded some by partial assistance, others at the sole expense of the society, either to York, to their Lands, or to the neighboring Townships, where by their industry, as mechanics or husbandmen, they are now supporting themselves and contributing in no small degree to the increasing prosperity of the Province.

In lamenting however the smallness of their pecuniary means, your committee have to acknowledge an instance of considerate and munificent liberality on the part of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor : whose present of a very large quantity of Rugs has amply provided for the bedding of those, who otherwise would have been unprovided. Our thanks are also due to the military authorities of this place for their permission to us of occupying one of the Block Houses for the use of the Emigrants, into which a stove has been introduced by your Committee, and, by the liberality of the present D'y Cy. Gen. firewood provided sufficient for the exigencies of the rest of the winter. But as sickness has been the general suffering exhibited to the compassion of your committee, they must not forget to acknowledge, in the name and behalf of the sick, their gratitude for the gratuitous medical assistance of Doctor Keating and Mr. Geddes.— The former of whom has in all cases of appeal voluntarily given us the benefit of his great professional experience, and the latter has been assiduously attentive to the daily and often importunate wants of our numerous cases of sickness.

Nor can your committee omit this opportunity of recommending the immediate erection of a public hospital ; for they regret to state that there have been one or more cases of death among their patients, not to mention numerous instances of protracted disease, solely arising in their opinion from the want of such a convenience. There is now on their hands a patient whose infirmities require more warmth and greater comforts than are to be had in a naked Block House ;; and therefore they are under the necessity of sending him down to the hospital at Montreal, in hopes of getting him that needful assistance there which the want of a hospital denies him here.

Finally your Committee feel it incumbent upon them, before they close this Report, to express their extreme regret that an opinion seems to be entertained by some gentlemen of this Town, that neither the number nor the exigencies of the Emigrants demand any extraordinary exertion. To refute this opinion we beg leave to refer such persons to our Journal, to the Block Houses, and to the other abodes of the destitute—and for our part we feel confident that except the present subscription be much increased by the general imitation of the whole Town, the cause of the Emigrants (and with that the cause of humanity) must be either altogether abandoned, or application must be made to the more munificent contributions of the neighboring Societies, in order to make up the deficiency of our inadequate charity.

Which being read the Society resolved that the same be adopted and published.

The Treasurer reported the state of the funds of the Society as follows :—

Total amount of receipts since last annual meeting, including the sum of £13 7 0, being the amount of collection in aid of the Society's funds in St. George's Church yesterday, ...	£140 5 11½
Total amount of expenditure, ...	132 17 8
Remaining in the hands of the Treasurer, ...	£7 7 5½

The Society then proceeded to the election of officers for the ensuing year, when THOMAS MARKLAND, Esquire, was unanimously elected President.

The Rev. G. O. STUART, and ALEX. FISHER, Esqr. } Vice Presidents.
JOHN KIRBY, Esq. Treasurer, and Mr. STANTON, Secretary.
The Rev. Mr. WILSON, Messrs. G. H. MARKLAND, B. WHITNEY, R. WALKER, T. R. CARTWRIGHT J. ATKINSON. } Committee and Visitors.

The Society then Resolved,

1st. That the Rev. Mr. Wilson, Acting Chaplain to the Forces, be requested to solicit subscriptions in the Garrison, in aid of the funds of the Society, and the other Gentlemen of the Committee throughout the Town.

2d. That the Officiating Minister of the Wesleyan Society be requested to preach a Sermon and promote a collection in aid of the funds of the Society.

3d. That the committee be authorised to expend a sum not exceeding £5 in repairing buildings for the reception of distressed objects of charity.

4th. That the thanks of this Society be presented to Mr. Geddes, Hospital Assistant, for his assidious attention to the sick individuals who were referred to him by the Society.

5th. That the Committee be henceforth chosen annually instead of half yearly, and that the Visitors be appointed for two months instead of one as heretofore.

Kingston, 3d January, 1820.

On reading that the Collector had refused the landing of PAINE's bones in England.

Permit it? Prodigious ! I'll not, he replies,
Such relics tho' great, co me under Excise ;
Request fraught with danger ! I scorn such vile arts,
What, serve a good King, and admit Boney-parts ?

ANOTHER.

For the landing, dear Bob, why raise such a Storm.
In such times as these, e'en the bones may Re-form. R.

MR. PAINE'S BONES.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 27.—Mr. Cobbet, who has arrived passenger in the Hercules from New York, has brought with him, deposited in a trunk, the bones of Mr. Thomas Paine, so well known in the American & European worlds. On landing the trunk, Mr. Cobbet exclaimed to the people on the quay, "Here are the bones of the late Thomas Paine." A crowd instantly pressed to see them ; and Cobbet remarked, that " great indeed must the man have been, whose very bones attracted such attention." The custom house officer having examined the coffin plate, inscribed " Thomas Paine, aged 74, died 8th June, 1809." passed the whole, and they have been forwarded to London.

NEW-YORK, Dec. 27.

It may perhaps be proper to copy here what Cobbet said of Paine a few years ago, when he wrote his life. He concluded thus :

" How Tom gets a living now, or what brothel he inhabits, I know not, nor does it much signify. He has done all the mischief he can in the world : and whether his carcase is at last to be suffered to rot on the earth, or to be dried in the air, is of very little consequence. Whenever or wherever he breathes his last, he will excite neither sorrow nor compassion; no friendly hand will close his eyes, not a groan will be uttered, not a tear will be shed. Like Judas, he will be execrated by posterity ; men will learn to express all that is base, malignant, treacherous, unnatural and blasphemous, by the single monosyllable—Paine !

" W. COBBET."

WHEREAS JACOB SNIDER, of the Township of Scarborough, has, on the 29th day of the month of December last, advertised me, his wife, in the Upper Canada Gazette, as having left his bed and board without any just cause for so doing, and likewise forbidding every person trusting or harbouring me on his account : I consider it a justice I owe to my own character, to state to the public, that so far from my having done any such thing, as he has thought proper to state, he himself withdrew from me and his children, on the 26th of December now last past, thereby leaving me and them without the means of support or bedding, at this inclement season of the year. I think it necessary further to state, that his conduct has been, for many years past, marked with the utmost severity and a total want of feeling, either to myself or his children, and that he has not furnished either food or clothing for myself and children since the month of October last, although one of the children is an infant at the breast.

FROM EUROPE.

LONDON, Nov. 20 30.

We learn by a letter from the celebrated Italian traveller, M. Belzoni, that he had recently performed a journey into the deserts of Lybia, to examine there the environs and ruins of the Temple of Jupiter Ammon. This journey lasted 50 days, during which time he saw several temples and other remarkable objects. After having traversed the desart, he arrived at the place where the temple is supposed to have existed. The country was fertile, and he found some villages, but the inhabitants of the country, where perhaps for several centuries, an European had not been seen, were very savage, & would not suffer him to pass, because they imagined that he was looking for treasures in their country. The ruins of the temple he discovered had been employed in the construction of another temple, which is already in part destroyed, and in forming the foundation of the cabins of a village. The most remarkable thing, however, discovered by M. Belzoni in these environs, is a spring of living water, of which Herodotus, makes mention, warm in the morning and evening, cold at noon, and boiling hot at midnight. M Belzoni has brought away some of this water for the purpose of analyzing it.

Curious Dilemma.—The burial grounds of London and its neighborhood are at this time so carefully watched, that the resurrection-men can scarcely procure bodies for the dissecting-room—no less than seven of these useful members of society are now in prison, having been detected in attempts to raise the dead. The Students at the Hospitals are at a stand still—bodies fetch triple the usual price; and one of the principal Lecturers on Anatomy has actually applied to Lord Sidmouth for leave to import them from France, where they are easily procured, and very cheap; the result of this application is not yet known.

Imperial Present—His Royal Highness the Prince Regent has lately received from the Emperor of Russia a very curious four-wheeled carriage, called a Drouchki. It consists of a front and a side seat, contrived in a new but very commodious manner, for two persons. It possesses the moveable axles, which are now very generally adopted throughout the continent.

A coal dealer near London, during the cold season, used to hang a cloth out all night on his wall. When he arose in the morning, he would ask his wife, if the cloth was frozen? and on her answering "Yes," he would exclaim, "God help the poor! we must lay a penny a bushel on our coals to day."

A Spanish physician named Don Serapino Sola, having obtained permission from his government to try experiments in inoculating for the plague on some Spanish deserters, he selected fourteen, who were all inoculated with virus, taken from the plague sore of those persons in whom the disorder had assumed the utmost degree of malignity. They each received twelve pricks of the lancet in those parts of the body where the plague usually appears. Oil of Olives was administered to them internally and externally. In a very short period, a part of those operated upon experienced some slight attacks, and little sores were observable on different parts of the body, in a few days they were all restored to health. It is to be hoped that this kind of inoculation will prove as successful as that for the small pox.

A whale, 60 feet in length and 10 feet in breadth judged to be 50 tons in weight, lately stranded in the river Severn, 25 miles from the mouth of the river.—As soon as it was discovered, a wonderful scene of confusion ensued in endeavors by the populace to secure as much of it as possible.

A temporary dam constructed at Plymouth Deck-yard to protect the workmen who were preparing to put in new gates, lately gave way, when the great pressure of water, estimated at 500 tons, suddenly broke through the dam, and coming in contact with the shores supporting a bridge, on which were 40 or 50 persons passing and re-passing to their duty, it instantly engulphed the whole in the rushing flood. By the great exertions made, but two were drowned, two had their limbs fractured, and five others were injured.

Public Libraries in Germany.—The Royal Library of Munich contains a collection of 400,000 volumes.—That of Gottingen, which is one of the most celebrated in Germany, consists 220,000 volumes, 110,000 academic dissertations, and 5000 manuscripts; the Dresden Library contains 280,000 printed books, 100,000 dissertations, and 4000 manuscripts. The Library of Wolfenbuttel is particularly celebrated for its valuable collection of ancient works; it contains 190,000 printed volumes, 10,000 dissertations, and 4000 manuscripts. Among the 192,000 volumes which compose the Library of Stutgard, there are 12,000 different editions of the Bible. There are seven public libraries in Berlin; the two principal ones are the Royal Library and the Library of the Academy; the former contain 100,000 volumes, and the latter 30,000. It may be calculated that the total number of books contained in the Public Libraries of the German States, amount to upwards of four millions, besides the various memoirs, pamphlets, periodical publications, dissertations, and manuscripts.

During a heavy swell on Yarmouth beach, a boat with a man on board was upset, when a dog instantly leaped into the sea, and after a considerable struggle succeeded in raising the man from under the boat, and held him up until a wave fortunately threw him upon the bottom of the boat. He then swam after the oars and the man's hat, which he brought to shore.

In the Court of Arches, Sir John Nichol lately gave judgement in a cause which involved the question of right of parish clergymen to preside at Vestry meetings. The brig Caledonia, laden with timber, from Miramachi for England, was abandoned at sea water-logged on the 22d October. The vessel had settled so deep in the water that the crew were almost continually breast deep, and their only provisions raw pork and a gill of water per day. They remained thirteen days in this awful situation. On the 14th day, the American ship Portland, Capt. Webster, hove in sight, hoisted out his boats and took the captain and crew from the wreck, supplied them with every thing necessary, and landed them at Plymouth. The whole of them were so reduced when first relieved that they were unable to stand.

Accession of his Majesty—On the 25th ultimo, our venerable and afflicted Sovereign entered the 60th year of his reign; a period longer than any of his Majesty's predecessors in England or Scotland occupied the throne. Henry third reigned in England fifty-six years, and James VI. in Scotland fifty-eight years; but the former was only nine years of age when he succeeded to the monarchy, and the latter was an infant, when, in consequence of the extorted resignation of his mother he became King; while George the III. was of legitimate age, on his accession to the sovereignty of Great Britain and Ireland. Of the Peers of Scotland at his Majesty's accession, only the Duke of Gordon, born 1743, who inherited the title in 1752, is alive. The twenty Judges of the Court of Sessions and Exchequer in Scotland have been exactly three times renewed during this reign; the appointments to the bench being sixty in number, exclusive two promotions of Puisne Judges to the President's Chair. Of the members of the Faculty of Advocates at the accession, four are alive, viz. Robert Craig, of Riccarton, and Robert Berry, both admitted in 1794, and Sir Hay Campbel, and James Ferguson of Pitfour, the present member of Parliament for Aberdeenshire, both admitted in 1757. Of the Society of Writers to the Signet of the accession, only one, Cornelius Elliot of Woolee, is in existence. Of the Peers of England and Ireland at the commencement of this reign, five are alive viz. the Earl, now Marquis Drogheda, the Earl of Carlisle, Earl Fitwilliam, Viscount Netville and Viscount Bulkley, all of whom were under age at the accession, with the exception of the marquis of Drogheda, now in his 90th year and at the head of the Generals of the army.

LONDON, Nov. 26.

We understand a negociation is pending between the Emperor of Morocco and a foreign Power, which has engaged an English gentleman to open a communication on a grand commercial scale with Timbuctoo and Sudan; this gentleman is to proceed through Fas to Tafilit, where he is to have letters of protection and hospitality from the Emperor of Morocco to the Arabian Scheiks of Sarah and Bled el Jereed, and letters of credit to the Company of Fas merchants established at Timbuctoo.

The journey is to be commenced from the Imperial Palace at Tafilit on Heirles. Four of these animals are to be purchased expressly for the journey, and each to carry 40 lbs. weight of rice and other provisions, besides the riders, who are to be Scheiks of Sahara, each of which is to receive on arrival at Timbuctoo one thousand dollars, or an equivalent in gold dust. The [illegible] who has undertaken the journey speaks with confidence of its success, and he calculates to perform it in 15 days actual travelling. He proposes to remain at the Imperial Palace of Tafilit 15 days, to accustom himself to the rough motion of the Heirie.

It is proposed to travel from Tafilit to Tatta in three days, and there sojourn three days; then travel three days to East Tayrass, and sojourn three days; then to Tandeny in three days, and sojourn there three days; then three days to the Well of Arawan, & sojourn there three days; then complete the journey in three days to Timbuctoo.

This journey will be commenced in February next, and will end in March. During the residence of the chief of the expedition at Timbuctoo in the summer and autumn, one of the Scheiks on a Heirie is to be dispatched to Houssa, Wangara and Bydroida, on the coast of the Red Sea; another is to be dispatched southward to Benin and new Calabar; a third will proceed through the heart of Africa to Sudda, on the eastern coast opposite the island of Madagascar, from where he will return to the [illegible] at Timbuctoo; the Scheik who undertakes the last journey has engaged to perform it in three months, to and from Sofala to Timbuctoo, and to collect every information necessary during his progress; the fourth heirie will remain at Timbuctoo, to negociate with the king & others as opportunity may offer; the travellers will receive the necessary instructions how to collect geographical and commercial knowledge, and then return to the chief of the expedition at Timbuctoo, who will accompany them back to Tafilit.

This expedition is connected with a plan to land afterwards 500 men at a spot on Sahara, eligible for a colony, where the commercial communication will be immediately opened with Timbuctoo and Sudan.

The English gentleman speaks with the utmost confidence of success, to which his general knowledge of the natives and language will not a little contribute. We only regret that the undertaking has not originated with the British government, because we think that at this period an accredited agent from our government to [illegible]tent to his purpose would have had more influence with the Emperor of Morocco than one from any other power of Christendom.

We shall be enabled in a short time to announce the names of the travellers, with further particulars of this new mode of travelling; it is calculated the whole expenses of the journey will not exceed four hundred thousand dollars, the subscription for which sum is nearly completed, and the names of the subscribers will shortly be made public.

THE TEA TRADE.

A small investment, usually of silver, broad cloth, Worcester china, and other articles, of less than a million and a half per annum, puts in employ the finest ships in our mercantile marine, at the largest freights—makes the largest return of profits known in trade, for a long series of years, to a great company, and to a host of dealers and retailers—and affords the largest revenue from any article of our consumption, our own growth and manufacture of malt excepted. A large part, and a long continuance of these profits and advantages, have been secured by the steady conduct of the East India Company, defended by their charter from competition in their purchase of Tea from the Chinese. An investment or purchase of less than £1,500,000 has ordinarily sold to the consumers in Great Britain and Ireland, for 2 to 10,000,000—producing for the employment of our shipping, and the profit of the East India Company, the revenues and all the dealers and venders of Tea, the surplus amount of 7 to £20,000,000 per annum. The whole quantity of tea sold for our consumption does not exceed 23,000,000 lbs. a year. If tea be a wholesome, desirable, and useful habit of daily beverage and refection, for all the people, 150,000,000 lbs. would be requisite for their general and constant use, as of bread, beer, meat or water. What quantity of tea have our ingenious imitators of these leaves of China annually supplied to make up, in part, the deficiency of the importations of the East India Company? The annual sales at the India House seem to be very inadequate to the consumption of an article, of which it was said in the House of Commons in the last session, the poor make half their sustenance! If the poor of these realms make use of the tea of China as well as the rich, the consumption, at only 2 lbs. year for each, of only 10,000,000 tea-drinkers, (or half the whole population) would be 70,000,000 lbs. instead of 25,000,000 lbs. the whole quantity furnished us by the East India Company from China.

EARTHQUAKE in the EAST INDIES.

CALCUTTA, July 23, 1819.

The Bombay Gazette, of the 30th June, which came to hand on Saturday, contains a full detail of the circumstances that attended the shock of the earthquake at Ahmedabad. We republish the detail, from the above paper.

Extract of a letter from Amedabad, dated 18th of June, 1819.

On Wednesday the 16th day of June, a few minutes before seven o'clock, P. M. this city was visited with an earthquake of unusual violence and duration for this part of India. It commenced gradually, with a slight trembling of the earth, attended with a rumbling noise: this increased every second, and was succeeded by a strong rushing noise, with a violent undulating motion; so that it was with difficulty we could keep on our legs. At this time all the disagreeable sensation was experienced of being tossed in a ship at sea, in a swell, and the rocking was so great, that every moment we expected the earth to open under our feet. From its commencement to the termination of the shock, it could not have been less than four or five minutes.

The rocking motion affected persons in various ways in different situations: those in doors experienced all the horrors attending the awful suspence in which they felt themselves: the walls of the houses shook, and were rent in various places; the beams and roofs cracked, and appeared to be ready to fall on the inmates, and crush them to atoms in an instant. People in wheeled carriages were thrown out by the shaking of their vehicles; and animals of all kinds, in a stationary position, felt confounded, or became restless. Persons in motion, or on horseback, were, however, unconscious of the schock.

The city is justly celebrated for its beautiful buildings of stone and other materials, and was not less so for the famous shaking minarets, which were admired by every stranger. Alas! the devastation caused by this motion of the earth, is truly lamentable. The proud spires of the great Mosque, the Jama Murjid, erected by Sultan Ahmed, the king of Guzerat, and the founder of the city of Ahmedabad, which have stood nearly four hundred and fifty years, have tumbled to the ground within a few yards of the place where they once reared their heads! The Mosque itself has sustained less injury than could have been expected, and the handsome arch which divided the minarets has escaped unhurt. Another Murjid, of elegant structure, which lies to the left of the road leading to the Shahee Bagh, denominated the Becbee's or Usubeun Koonkee the Murjid, has shared the same fate. A gentleman, while riding out, saw the minarets come down; the tops were thrown at a distance, and immediately afterwards the stones came tumbling down one after another. The only remaining shaking minarets, which are at all worthy of notice, and much inferior to the others have, I hear, been sadly fractured; they are situated in the Goomteepoora, to the east of the city, outside the walls. The mausoleums (Rozas) and places of Mahomedan worship, have suffered considerably both in the city and surrounding country. The walls of the Udalut, an old building erected by the Marhattas, and the palace of the Peshwa's Viceroys in Gouzerat, have been much injured, and the walls rent in many places. The magnificent towers, also, forming the grand entrance into the citadel, have been much shaken, and cracked in several places, especially the one on which the flag-staff has been placed. Many private houses have been reduced to ruins: and 'tis most fortunate, amidst all our disasters, that not a single life has been lost, and but few accidents.

Between the hours of 12 and 1, the same night, was experienced two or three slight shocks, and the following morning (the 17th) another shock. At a quarter before 10, we had one very severe, which shook the houses, and caused the windows and doors to rattle violently.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

DECEMBER 2.

Seditious Meetings Prevention Bill.

The evils complained of were local—the remedy should be the same. But his chief objection was, that the whole of the code of coercion proposed, neither struck at the evil, nor reached its cause. The first cause he conceived to be the distress arising from the stagnation of trade. The second the seditious and blasphemous publications, and the speeches of itinerant demagogues. The third the conviction which prevailed among the people, that they were not duly represented in that House, and the fourth the vexatious system pursued by the present Government in maintaining an enormous peace establishment, and imposing, last Session, three millions of new taxes on an exhausted people. He blamed Government for having returned thanks to the magistrates on an ex-parte statement of the transactions at Manchester; and for not having put, up to the present time, in the mouth of their sovereign, a single expression of regret at the sufferings of the people. He contended that Lord Fitzwilliam, instead of having stood trembling with suspense at the York Meeting (of which he had been a witness,) and courting the interposition of the Radicals, had been received with the utmost enthusiastic affection. And he had no doubt that the appearance of so many Noblemen at that meeting, and the interest which they had taken in the grievances of the people, had produced a conciliatory effect and tended to draw the bonds of society closer. And yet it was for this that Lord Fitzwilliam had been dismissed! He concluded by recommending a system of conciliation, without which the evils which all must deplore and wish to repress would go on increasing from day to day.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE declared that he was one of those who thought it necessary that something should be done, but conceived that it ought not to be either general or permanent. He contended that all the arguments used by the hon. member for the University of Oxford (Mr. Peel) established the fact that the disorders were local, and that the measures adopted to suppress them should bear the same character. It would be the most monstrous injustice, especially considering the precipitation with which the bills were introduced and pressed, to place the whole country under permanent restraints and disabilities, on account of a few counties.—He maintained that if the provisions of the present Bill were made permanent, they would offer the strongest temptations to abuse, and would ultimately corrupt one of the fountains of justice. It would re-if the provisions of the pre-were made permanent, they ntains of justice. It would of a temptation to every lord lieutenant too strong to be resisted, to pack the whole magistracy of his county in such a manner as to suit his political views and prejudices.—(Hear, hear!)—And this temptation was to be holden out, with the example before the house, of the most severe and unjustifiable act of his majesty's Government, the dismissal of lord Fitzwilliam, as a lesson to other lords lieutenant. But even if the measure was to be permanent, why make it general? Would it not create greater danger by alienating the minds of those who were loyal and well disposed, and who feel indignant at being submitted to the same disabilities as the guilty? Nothing was more unwise and unjust than to legislate under the pressure of a temporary alarm. He then described the grounds on which he admitted the existence of great danger, and of the necessity of measures of repression. He should, however, object to going into the committee at present if some limit were not affixed to its duration.

Mr. COKE (of Norfolk) said, that he felt it proper to submit a few observations to the House, in consequence of what had fallen from his honorable and learned friend on the floor, (Mr. Abercrombie) with respect to the probable condition of the Magistracy, should the present measure become a part of the permanent law of the land. He meant as to the question whether, in the event of any Sheriff refusing to call a county meeting, five of those Magistrates, who were generally nominated by the Lord Lieutenant, were likely to do so. (Hear, hear!) Some circumstances had come to his knowledge which he thought it necessary to state, in order to put the house on its guard on this subject.—It happened, he was sorry to say, that there had been of late years several contested elections in Norfolk, and the Lord Lieutenant of that county was known to be decidedly hostile to his principles and connexions. (Hear, hear.) That nobleman, some time ago, was pleased to exclude from the commission of the peace, some gentlemen of most unexceptionable character, who happened to belong to the Whig party in the county. This extraordinary proceeding was represented to him (Mr. C.) and he was solicited to apply to the Nobleman alluded to upon the subject. His answer, however, was that he would refer the case to Lord Eldon, he did accordingly refer, and from that Noble Lord, he met the reception which he expected from a just man and a gentleman. Lord Eldon, indeed, after observing that it was not at the discretion of the Lord Lieutenant to exclude gentlemen from the Commission of the Peace, as that power belonged only to the Lord Chancellor, promised that the names of the gentlemen alluded to should be inserted in the Commission for Norfolk, which was done accordingly. In consequence of this example, a gentleman connected with the Whig party being afterwards asked, whether he wished the Lord Lieutenant to put his name in the Commission? this gentleman replied, "I will not make any application to the Lord Lieutenant upon the subject, Mr. Coke will take care of that." But should it become a material object with Ministers to appoint only persons of particular opinions to the Magistracy under a Lord Chancellor, of different principles and character from Lord Eldon, could it be for a moment doubted, that the apprehensions of his hon. and learned friend on the floor, as to the probable subserviency of that body, would turn out but too well founded. With respect to the language of the Solicitor General, which no doubt was meant as consolatory, that notwithstanding the adoption of this Bill, Lord Lieutenants and Sheriffs truly would still have the power of calling public meetings. Who, he would be glad to know, had ever heard of a Lord Lieutenant calling a public meeting, and who had not heard that the most respectable requisition for public meetings had been frequently refused by Sheriffs? Upon the conduct of any Sheriff who refused such a requisition, he thought it unnecessary to make any comment, but for himself he would say, that were a requisition signed by respectable Gentlemen, presented to him as a Sheriff, he should feel it his duty to comply with such requisition, however he might differ in political opinions from the gentlemen by whom it was subscribed, because it would be contrary to his principles in any case to interfere with the right of private judgment, or to impede the exercise of free discussion. (Hear, hear.) The practice, however, of Ministers has been, to his knowledge, for forty years, of quite an opposite description, and therefore he could not consent to increase the powers of men who acted upon such principles, particularly where he conceived the existence of such powers, not at all necessary.—Looking, indeed, at the papers on the table, and to matters of universal notoriety, he thought the demand of Ministers for those extraordinary powers quite unwarrantable, especially, satisfied as he was, that the meeting at Manchester would have gone off as quietly as that at Hunslet Moor, and as many others of the same description, if it had not been interfered with by the officious agents of authority.

Lord FOLKESTONE expressed his surprise and regret to hear the honorable and learned gentleman on the floor (Mr. Abercrombie) declare his intention to vote for the motion before the house, upon the condition that the bill referred to should be temporary and local, while he heard the Solicitor-General and the right honorable member for Oxford state the resolution of ministers to render it permanent and universal. But it would seem from what the learned gentleman had said, that he did not read the bill before the house. From this bill it appeared that while its advocates professed so much respect and regard for the right of petitioning, the exercise of that right must become impracticable, for a very efficient purpose, from the number of restrictions meant to be imposed upon it. That no material good could be expected by the people from the provision to leave the right of calling public meetings by Lord Lieutenants and Sheriffs undisturbed, had been fully illustrated to the house. But it was said, that the right of calling public meetings was also to vest in Grand Juries. What however, was to be expected from the existence of this right, when it was recollected by whom these Grand Juries were appointed? and he would also ask, whether it was likely that the number of Magistrates mentioned in the bill would be found any where (considering the manner in which that body was usually appointed) to call a meeting on any subject disagreeable to the Minister of the day. Upon the fair, or popular, or impartial exercise of such rights, it would indeed, be absurd to calculate especially from the course which Ministers appeared determined to pursue.—For they had proclaimed to the country, in the dismissal of Lord Fitzwilliam, that the only road to office—that the only tenure of authority, was in unconditional subserviency to Ministerial opinions. So strongly did the learned Solicitor General feel the objections that existed against the proposed bill, that in the course of his whole speech he never mentioned the word parochial. No the more palatable term was district meetings. But how was the right to be exercised? When, where, and in what manner? At the option of the Magistrate. He might refuse altogether; he might alter the time of meeting to an hour most inconvenient to the Requisitionists, and disadvantageous to the object proposed. He may appoint a room for the meeting, where one half of the persons to be assembled could not find accommodation. By the bill it was at the option of one individual to render ineffectual the whole meeting. One of the Noble Lord's (Castlereagh) spies had only to interfere, and he was at liberty to nullify the Resolutions, and object to the assembly, and to subject to transportation for life every man who attended there. So objectional did he feel the principle of the bill to be, that he could not agree with either of his noble or learned friends, in believing that any alteration of the provisions could change its character, as for his part he should oppose it altogether. (Hear, hear.) He had viewed it only as an insulated measure, without any reference to the bill, with which it was in conjunction, and which formed the system of the Noble Lord. Sufficient for the day was the evil thereof. In reference to what fell from the Right Honorable Gentlemen (Mr. Peel,) the necessity for inquiry was made more positive by his speech. —It was with no little astonishment he heard fall from a stateman such as he considered that right honorable gentleman, such an observation, as that it was better that the blood shed at Manchester had been shed, than that the meeting of the 16th of August should have taken place, and should have been allowed quietly to disperse. Strange, indeed, must be the state of things, when such a sentiment was uttered in such a quarter. He did believe, however, that it was a sentiment on which the Magistrates of Manchester acted. He did think he saw from the papers before the house, an internal evidence, which went to prove that it was the object to produce the very result which attended the meeting of the 16th of August.

Mr. Peel, in explanation, said, that the noble lord had certainly quoted his words correctly, but he appealed to the house, to believe, that though he had in words accompanied the observation with no qualification, yet it was far from his feeling to give utterance to any expression that bordered on inhumanity. His meaning was, that if the late Manchester Meeting had not been dispersed, a second would have followed, which would have brought the populace and the soldiery into such a collision as must have been attended with much greater effusion of blood.—(Hear, Hear.)

Lord Folkestone said, that when he quoted the words of the right hon. gentleman, he by no means imputed any improper feeling. But he must be allowed to state, in answer to the explanation, that as to the probability of a more mischievous result at Manchester from future meetings, in other places, second & third meetings of a similar character had taken place, and no blood had been shed.

Mr. Wilmot expressed his conviction, that a conspiracy existed to overturn the government. He would support the bill, as he believed it would uphold, instead of destroy, the liberties of the country. The hon. gentleman quoted a passage from Cobbett, not yet quoted in those publications that appeared against him, which, referring to the name of swinish multitude, the demagogue carries on the figure, and wishes, that "the Galatea" devils would enter them, and drive them into the sea." He would support the bill.

Mr. Phillips said it appeared to him that the conduct of the noble lord (Castlereagh) was wholly inconsistent with his professions. He had urged all parties to unite with the government in its endeavors to put an end to the disturbances in the interior; but the moment an inclination was shown to coincide with Ministers, if they would consent to make the measure in question local and temporary, he had seemed more than ever resolved that it should be general and permanent (hear.) Some honorable gentlemen had talked of plots to burn the town of Manchester; if he had found that he was mistaken in any thing he had advanced on a former night, he would willingly have acknowledged his error; but after all his opportunities of correct investigation, he was most decidedly of opinion that no such attack was ever meditated, and that the whole project originated in the invention of spies and informers (hear.) He frankly allowed that the manufacturing districts were in a state requiring vigilance and attention, and that the most active instigators were not always the most severely distressed. But there was one material consideration of which the House ought not to lose sight, and that was, that the people in the manufacturing districts had been suddenly reduced from high to low wages; and that, in addition to their real sufferings, they had to endure the evil of contrast.

Lord Castlereagh.—After the full discussion this important subject had undergone, and after the frequent occasions on which he had troubled the house, nothing but a strong sense of duty would have induced him again to come forward for the purpose of making a few remarks on what had fallen from the hon. member who had just taken his seat. He should confine his observations strictly to one or two points, and he would not have spoken at all, could he with candor and fairness have suffered the house to separate without stating unreservedly the impression on his mind. As to the principle of the bill, he begged the house to consider the true and narrow issue on which the vote of to-night depended. Every hon. member must give his support to the second reading who did not think the measure totally incapable of being so altered and modified in the committee as to make it suit his particular views; so that every gentleman not disputing the principle, and who thought that something ought to be done in the present state of the country on the question now before the house, would give his vote in favor of the objects ministers had in view. Thus nobody would be pledged as to the details, which could be modified at the house in a future stage might deem expedient (Hear.) The point to which he wished to advert, and which, indeed, had induced him to rise, related to the appeal made to ministers to assent to two propositions—the one for making the bill local, and the other for rendering it temporary. On these terms some hon. gentlemen had expressed a willingness to conciliate, and had invited ministers to join in that conciliation. (To be continued.)

FROM LOWER-CANADA.

From the Montreal Herald.

It appears from an article in the Montreal Gazette, that our Agricultural Society has dwindled away from its former respectability to a comparative state of insignificance, that instead of being conducted upon the broad and liberal principles which render every new undertaking acceptable to the public in a new country and useful for the general interest, it has become the prey of a party, and the object of a faction. The number of members formerly 140 is now diminished to less than one half; and instead of exciting that general interest among all classes which an object of such vital importance to the country ought to produce, and which never fails to ensure a full meeting of all those more immediately connected with such an undertaking, it appears that only 12 members of this society could be mustered to attend at the time when the whole business of the year and the whole affairs of the institution were to be discussed. So much for the present deplorable state of the Agricultural society of Montreal. "Oh what a falling off was there." Let us now search for the cause of this much to be regretted change. In doing so "let us set down nought in malice and nothing extenuate."

A plain unvarnished statement of facts, as far as they have come to our knowledge, shall be given, and the whole left to the decision of a discerning and liberal public. If our efforts in this respect meet with the approbation of those ha[illegible] power to do so, and induce them to step forward to rescue the Society from its present depressed condition, we shall think our labour well bestowed; but if our endeavours prove abortive, we shall have the consolation of giving a public proof that we have been neither actively or passively instrumental to the demolition of one of the most important institutions in our country. At the time this Society was first formed, a number of the gentlemen of the first respectability in the town came forward & joined in it. The whole funds arose from the contributions made by the members; & although their funds were small and their means of doing good very limited, they were well husbanded, and all the benefit that could be expected was done by them. Soon after when the liberal conduct of the Legislature began to be exerted to the promotion of this object, £300 was appropriated for the district of Montreal, and placed at the disposal of the Agricultural Society already formed in this city. Strange as it may appear, this accumulation of their funds was soon followed by suspicions and insinuations against the management of the affairs of the Society. It was rumored that some men had got into the Society who aspired to an undue influence in the committee, that these characters used that influence in an improper way. And an unfortunate vote of the committee, awarding a salary of one hundred a year to the Secretary for his services, induced the belief that the funds were not appropriated as they ought to be. These circumstances whether well or ill founded, had the worst effect on the prosperity of the Society. An overbearing conduct in some of the managers disgusted a part of the practical farmers who belonged to it, and made them withdraw their names. An inauspicious concealment of the transactions of the Society: (for no statement of them had been published; as is the case with other Societies of the kind) cherished the suspicion that all was not correct, and made some of the members who were not practical farmers, or who had not time from other avocations, to attend to the conduct of the managers, feel indifferent to its prosperity as they were kept in ignorance of its proceedings. Such are a few of the leading causes which have brought this institution into its present deplorable condition.

Another circumstance which contributed to depreciate the character of the Society in the opinion of the public; was the gross partiality and unfairness with which some of it leading members treated individuals. But we must reserve the consideration of this part of the subject for another time

YORK, FEBRUARY 3, 1820.

The Parliament of Lower Canada is summoned to meet on the 20th Inst.

A petition has been presented to the New-York Legislature, praying to be allowed to purchase Grand Island, in the River Niagara. The petitioner, who is a Jew of great information and ability, proposes to invite Jews from Europe, and to found a city on the island.

A very dangerous disease some time since made its appearance on the banks of the Mississippi and in the Southern States, principally affecting horses; as the disease appeared to be local, and so distant, we did not pay much attention to the article mentioning it: we however learn that a number of horses in this country have recently been attacked in a similar manner, principally at the head of the lake—and some cases are reported to exist in this town. The disease very soon proves fatal, unless prompt measures are taken to relieve the animal: we have therefore copied the report of a committee of the New York Agricultural Board on the subject.

Board of Agriculture.

N. Y. Tuesday, Jan. 1820.

Mr. Tracy, from the committee appointed to enquire into the best means of preventing or healing the disorder now prevailing among horses, reported as follows:

The committee, appointed to enquire into the nature of the distemper prevalent among horses, beg leave to state, they can make but a very imperfect report; but being impressed with the importance of warning the farmers of its rapid approach, and putting them on their guard against this contagious distemper, that they may make use of every possible expedient to prevent its spreading among their stock; your committee have thought it advisable to report such facts as they have been able to collect, and as further information shall come to their knowledge, to communicate the same to the secretary of the board.

Of the cause of this distemper, we cannot learn as any person has yet offered a conjecture. It is said to have made its appearance some time in the course of last year, in Kentucky, and on the banks of the Mississippi. In the month of August, it had reached the state of Ohio, and has now progressed east to the north river, and is scarcely known east of it. The opinion of many physicians and others, is, that it is the Cynanche maligna, malignant sore throat of the human race, transferred to the brute creation. Something of the same kind of treatment has therefore been generally adopted as far as circumstances would admit. The first stage of the disorder is indicated by an incapacity of eating, hay particularly, and most generally of any other food. The mouth, tongue and lips generally are blistered which blisters soon turn sores, which frequently are great, till the ulcers are mortified deep. The rough skin of the tongue in most instances peels off.

Various remedies have been prescribed with success. The most powerful astringents are recommended to stop the canker, and soothing, healing applications are then used.—A strong decoction of white oak bark with alum, copperas, vinegar and honey or molasses, is used for a wash. Some have used linseed oil in the preparations, and in cases where the tongue has been almost destroyed, charcoal, powdered and given with water, has been tried with apparent success. Probably there are many things nearly equally beneficial, and experience must point out the best specific. This distemper is supposed to have originated among horses, and to be very contagious. Cattle, sheep, hogs, and even poultry, are said to take this distemper by eating food affected by the saliva of the sick horse. Horned cattle, and other animals than horses, have not generally been supposed in great danger, unless by eating food on which the saliva of some sick cattle has fallen.—Hence every one will readily see the propriety of watching over their horses and cattle, and removing every animal in the incipient state of the distemper from the rest of the flock. Bleeding in the first appearance of the disorder may be useful; after the animal has become debilitated, some doubts arise on the propriety of bleeding. The only mode of feeding is to pour down meal and water, or something of that nature; for although thirsty, the horse cannot, in the swollen state of the jaws, swallow even water. Something wrapped round the bits of the horse, say a cloth, containing the ingredients for the wash of the mouth, probably may be better than barely to use the liquor as a wash; a syringe may be used, which will, it is presumed, be found the easiest mode of applying the liquid.

The committee have consulted with Dr. Low, who suggests the propriety of fumigating cattle affected with Cynanche Maligna, with vermilion, thus prepared: Take a broad bar of iron, and pinch it in a cup form, weld on a handle as to a shovel; heat it red hot; and put about an ounce at each time on the hollow surface, covering the animal's head with a blanket at the same time. Let the afflicted cattle be housed.

Resolved, That the report be accepted.

MARRIED.—On Monday last, Major HILLIER, A. D. C. and Private Secretary to His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, to Miss GIVENS, daughter of Lieut. Col. Givens, of the Indian Department.

NOTICE.

A Petition will be presented to the Legislature at the approaching Session, for an Act to authorise and provide for the building of a Gaol and Court House in the Home District, and to amend the Police Law of the Town of York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

From the Providence, (R. I.) Patriot, Dec. 4.

Murder and Piracy.—Captain Dailey, of the schooner Essex, arrived here on Monday last, from the coast of Africa, handed us the subjoined relation in manuscript, for publication. The coast is infested by swarms of pirates, man-stealers and murderers.

Relation of three Sailors, who served on board the Dutch Schooner Drie Vrienden, (Three Friends,) Captain Casper Thol.

On the 8th May last, at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, they anchored in Dexcore roads, where the captain landed two croomen for the Governor accompanied by a letter, to which the captain received an answer. The watch from 12 till 6 o'clock, P. M. was kept by two sailors, the one a Dutchman, and the other an Italian. About half past two o'clock in the morning one of the sailors below was awakened by a noise that was on deck; he got up to go upon deck, but found the hatch shut. He awakened his comrades immediately, who were asleep, and informed them of the noise that was on deck, and that the hatch was shut. The three births of three sailors, being Italians by birth, were only empty, in consequence of which they conjectured some evil design. They got up together, being five in number, of which three were Dutch and two English; the names of the latter was John Gayes, and the other only known under the name of John. After repeated knocks on the hatch, it was at last opened but the three Italians stood in arms before them, threatening to murder any one who made the least resistance. They ordered one of the Englishmen to come upon deck, saying, "We shall not hurt you." He obeyed them, and having got upon deck, was sent aloft to loosen the sails; afterwards, the second English sailor being made to come upon deck by the same promise, was also sent aloft for the same purpose. At the same time the three Dutch sailors wanting to go upon deck, were pushed down again, by which one of them received a wound in the head by a sword, after which the hatch was shut again. After a little time the hatch was opened, and they were one by one made to go upon deck, and were bound and sent directly below.—Afterwards they heard the cable cut and that they put to sea.—In a little time the Dutch sailors were ordered upon deck again to examine the ropes by which they were bound, and two of them were put into the cable tier and the third aft. By this means they saw one Dutch sailor was murdered and lay on the grate. They therefore thought the same in respect to the captain and his son, as they were not heard any where.

After the three Italians had come twice to see if the ropes by which they were bound were yet properly fast, they came again at 12 o'clock, (now 9th of May,) between which time they had been able to loosen a little the one and the other. They were again brought upon deck, and the two Englishmen were ordered by the three Italians to bind them properly again, threatening to run them through if they did not do it as it ought to be. They were again bound in the cable tier by hands and feet to the cable. Having suffered in this situation till dark, and not hearing any more noise upon deck, they thought the ship was deserted; after many trials, they succeeded in unbinding themselves, and wishing to go upon deck, they found the hatch nailed down, which they broke open by force. Coming upon deck, they found that the ship was really deserted, and the long boat gone. The deck was scattered with powder, and a train led to the magazine. A burning match was found by the gangway, which had burnt almost to the powder. Having destroyed the powder and extinguished the match, they resolved to set course for the land, the ship being then aback. Having sailed but a short distance they discovered the boat behind them, and approaching very fast; in consequence, they got a few clothes and fled with all haste in the small boat; in all this haste they saw the captain and his son lying murdered in the cabin not having had time to make a minute inspection, as they required every moment to fly from these murderers. When they were about four English miles from the ship, they saw it blow up in the air; and they arrived this morning (10th May) at Elmina. The boat in which the criminals deserted, is about 20 feet long, and painted black under and above with a green stripe. Names &c. of the three Italians and Englishmen, so far as known to them; Louis, about 23 years of age, 5 feet in height, rather fat, black hair, tawny color, black eyes, large nose; Pedro, about 20 years of age, about 5½ feet in height, very lusty, brown hair, round face, pale countenance, brown eyes, ordinary nose, lost one or two of his upper teeth; Johannes, about 20 years of age, 5½ feet high, rather poor posture, dark oval face, tawney color, brown eyes, long bent nose; John Gayes, about 16 years of age, 4½ feet high, brown hair, healthy countenance, red brown eyes; John, 23 years of age, about 5½ feet in height, broad shouldered, red hair and beard, freckled, light eyes, fair color, and ordinary countenance.

In the publication of the following lines, last week, a material deviation from the copy occurred in consequence of the indistinctness of a part of the manuscript—it is therefore again inserted, as corrected.

FOR THE UPPER CANADA GAZETTE.

THE CRUCIFIXION.

I ask'd the Heavens;—"What foe to God hath done
This unexampled deed?" The Heavens exclaim,
"'Twas man; and we in horror snatch'd the sun.
From such a spectacle of guilt and shame."
I ask'd the sea;—The Sea in fury boil'd,
And answer'd, with his voice of storms,—"'Twas man;
My waves in panic at his crime recoil'd,
Disclos'd the abyss, and from the centre ran."
I ask'd the Earth:—The Earth replied, aghast,
"'Twas man; and such strange pangs my bosom rent,
That still I groan and shudder at the past."
To man, gay, smiling thoughtless man, I went,
And ask'd him next;—he turn'd a scornful eye,
Shook his proud head, and deign'd me no reply.

WHEREAS JACOB SNIDER, of the Township of Scarborough, has, on the 29th day of the month of December last, advertised me, his wife, in the Upper Canada Gazette, as having left his bed and board without any just cause for so doing, and likewise forbidding every person trusting or harbouring me on his account: I consider it a justice I owe to my own character, to state to the public, that so far from my having done any such thing, as he has thought proper to state, he himself withdrew from me and his children, on the 26th of December now last past, thereby leaving me and them without the means of support or bedding, at this inclement season of the year. I think it necessary further to state that his conduct has been, for many years past, marked with the utmost severity and a total want of feeling, either to myself or his children, and that he has not furnished either food or clothing for myself and children since the month of October last, although one of the children is an infant at the breast.

FROM EUROPE.

LONDON, Sept. 23.

Committal of the Maniac for stealing the Bank Keys.

Elizabeth Dunham was on Friday folly committed on a charge of having stolen the Bank Keys. She came into the office in the liveliest manner, and smiled and curtsied to the lord Mayor, and Mr. Rooker, the Bank Solicitor, who was deliberating upon her case. The symptoms of her disorder suffered no abatement from the check put upon her liberty, and she seemed rejoiced at the idea of going before a jury, fully impressed with the expectation that the justice she is to receive at their hands will extend to the delivering up all the property (the 3000 keys) once, as she thought, secured to her possession.

The Lord Mayor called her from the bar, which he said was not a fit place for her, and told her to sit down by him. She tripped over to him with all the airiness of a girl, and putting her hand upon his arm, looked in his face with eyes full of gratitude. She hoped that she should be allowed to be at the Mansion-House; her heart told her she should be happier there than amongst strangers, who knew not her wrongs, and were unable to redress them.

The tone in which she spoke those words; the wild amazement which smote her features, upon being told that the greatest care would be taken of her, in another place; and the convulsive lurch that succeeded to the painful recollection, that she was to leave the justice room, all combined to form an object of the deepest interest and commiseration.

The Lord Mayor assured her that every thing should be done to make her happy; that she should have every thing of which she stood in need, and that all her friends should be permitted to visit her, whenever she felt disposed to receive them.

"I have no friends, " said she with laughter; "none but yourself and those other good gentlemen who speak so kindly to me, and look so tenderly at my misfortunes."

"Well; you shall not be without friends," said the Lord Mayor, "when they can be of service to you."

The poor creature's mind rejects all rational dealing upon ordinary subjects, but is in its full vigour, when a kind offer is made her. She uttered her thanks in a most affecting manner, and offered her services in keeping books, which she said she could do with great ability.

Mr. Rooker said, he trusted that the friends of the poor woman would not mistake the view of the Bank in prosecuting her. It was their object to have her tried, not that she might be punished, but acquitted, and placed under an authorised protection. Without the forms of a prosecution, permanent assistance could not be given to her in her forlorne state, for which an asylum, purely temporary, could by no means be adopted. It was, no doubt, in the Lord Mayor's power to place her in Bedlam, but the rules of that Institution made her dismissal inevitable, at the end of 12 months, unless she was tried. The event of a trial would be of more substantial benefit, for the judges would then have the power to protect her effectually.

Mr. Rooker said he had received many letters from families, stating that they had dismissed very excellent servants in consequence of the loss of keys, which were amongst the cabinet of the poor maniac.

The sexton of the Church of the Parish of Lambeth, to which she belongs, missed, it was stated, some time since, the keys of the church, amongst which were those of several vaults, in which some bodies had recently been laid. The robbery excited apprehensions in those who had the charge, and of the relations of the deceased, and a watch was kept up nightly until death had made its most loathsome ravages.

Poor mad Eliz-beth was taken back to the Compter, where she will remain till the day of trial. She was dressed fantastically, but her clothes were as clean as possible. On leaving the Police room, she seemed to recollect something, and said she hoped to see her children.

Notices of Works in hand, Domestic and Foreign.

Early in November will be published in twelve volumes small octavo the Poetical Works of Walter Scott, esq. now first collected.

The abridgement of Blackstone's Commentaries, into the compress of a single volume, by the late John Gifford, esq. the magistrate, and author of the Life of Pitt, &c. &c. will be ready in a few days.

Mr. James, the author of two works, one on the "Naval," the other on the "Military Occurrences of the late American War," is preparing for the press the Naval History of Great Britain, from the commencement of hostilities in May 1803 to the present time.

Trees are frequently grafted by making a transverse section of the bark stock or a perpendicular slit beneath it; the bud is then pushed down to give it the position which it is to have; this operation is not always successful; it is to employ an inverse method, that is, to make the vertical slit above the transverse section, and to push the bud upwards into its position. This method rarely fails of success, because, as the sap descends by the bark, as has been proved of late years, and does not ascend, the bud, placed above the transverse section, receives abundance, whereas, if below, the sap cannot get to it.

Mr. Clarke, of Edinburgh, has made the model of an engine, invented by Mr. Dickson, Gilmore-place, whereby the power of water, or liquid of any kind, is proved to be far beyond what has hitherto been suspected. A supply of water passing through a tube of an inch diameter, where the situation suits, is sufficient to perform the work of fifty, or even of one hundred, horses. From the small quantity of water required, it is likely to be in considerable request for driving either light or heavy machines.

Russia.—The Lancasterian system of mutual instruction, introduced last year into Russia, is spreading with rapidity, under the high protection of the Emperor, Prince Galitzin, and the Russian nobles. A Normal school on this plan, has been established at Petersburgh, where 250 pupils are maintained at the public charge, this forms a seminary wherein teachers are initiated to diffuse the knowledge requisite through all parts of the empire. In every regiment, by orders of the minister, there is a school for the subaltern officers and soldiers. The different schools at Odessa are competent to receive 10,000 pupils. There are establishments not only at Moscow, Tver, Casan, &c. but schools of this description are in course of active progress even among the Cossacks, and in Siberia.

The emperor of Russia has lately returned to St. Petersburgh from a journey through all Finland, which was undertaken for the sole purpose of a personal observation of the distant provinces of his extended empire. No potentate ever took more pains to improve the moral and social condition of the people, and render them happy and prosperous.

Mr. Hayman's Treatise on the art of Brewing, is the most practical work of the kind which we have seen. It is more full and accurate than Child, and less learned than Richardson.

Lieut. Hall, who favoured us with a valuable account of the Canadas, has added to our obligations by a volume of very intelligent Travels in France during the past year. It is among the best, if not itself the best account, that we have seen: and ought to form part of the travelling equipage of every one disposed to make a French tour in sensible company.

The Emigrants true guide to the British Settements in Upper Caunada; containing the best advice and directions respecting the voyage to Montreal, and mode of travelling and conveyance up the country, with an itinerary of distances, and a description of the falls of Niagara; to which are added, an Account of the settlement called London, on the banks of Lake Erie, with some original letters; by a Lancastrian Farmer, now resident; with prefatory remarks on emigration, proving the superior advantages of the British Canadas to the Cape of Good Hope, is recently published.

The produce of the revenue for the last quarter exhibits, in comparison with the corresponding quarter of last year, a decrease of no less than £1,151,556.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

DECEMBER 2.

Seditious Meetings Prevention Bill.

He could assure the house, that though much had been said in the course of the debate, very little in the spirit of conciliation, and charging ministers with being nothing less than the authors of the existing distresses, (so that he had been induced to express a determination to meet the difficulties of the times without the concurrence of the other side) yet nothing that had passed could have prevented him from accepting the invitation, could he have been satisfied that such an acceptance would be consistent with the public interest and national security. First, as to rendering the measure local, he would remind the house, that as far as the wisdom of Parliament had been collected, it had not been the practice to pursue the same line of policy with regard to Great Britain, as had been adopted towards Ireland, the judgement of the legislature was, therefore, in opposition to the proposal. Referring back to the year 1795, it would be found that the disturbances of that period had grown out of one meeting, and the measures to meet the evil were framed accordingly.

In 1801, tho' popular assemblies in the country had been more prevalent, yet they took their origin in the same way from one source; and in 1817, when a system of meeting was established, it had been founded upon a single pertinatious convention in Spafields. Now, as to the reason of the case, and the question what it was prudent to do in matters of such importance, he must say, that though on a former occasion he had been excessively anxious to congratulate the house on the tranquil state of Ireland, and of the agricultural counties, yet on the other hand, it would be acting on a principle of more confidence than wisdom, if in all cases it were to be said that this visible tranquility was a proof of real quiet, and that the district would not be visited by calamities which raged in other situations. He entreated hon. gentlemen to recollect what was the apparent situation of much of the disturbed districts. When Parliament last separated, the general surface of the country was tranquil; at least there prevailed a visible tranquility. As to the West Riding of Yorkshire, the letter of lord Fitzwilliam was evidence that he did not consider that the public peace was there in any degree menaced. But what was the fact? Lord Fitzwilliam had scarcely reached Lymyngton, to which he had retired, when the meeting took place on Hunslet Moor; and that single occurrence had such an effect upon the whole of the West Riding, that there was not a single town within its limits that had not afterwards witnessed a scene of the same Radical and tumultuary description. (Hear, hear) He put it to the noble lord opposite [lord A. Hamilton] what had been the effect of one or two of those numerous meetings in that part of the kingdom with which he was particularly connected, of those meetings that carried such terror into the minds of the loyal & well disposed. Had such a measure as now was offered to Parliament been in existence, would his Noble Relation have been placed in the difficult situation he had experienced; or would any persons have refused to put their names to the declaration that had been drawn up? Could he not, with his influence and property, have raised armaments for the preservation of the peace of the country, which he afterwards found impossible. (Hear)—Immediately previous to one of the most malignant meetings near Newcastle, at which not less than 700 armed men were present to resist the civil power, Ministers received the most positive assurances from gentlemen of the county, that they could safely answer for the good disposition of the people. The result of that single meeting was, that terror was spread in every quarter, and all efforts to arm the loyal in defence of the Laws and Constitution were abandoned as unavailing; such was the dismay, that those who had previously given in their names for enrolment, could not afterwards be induced to come forward. (Hear, hear!)—Was the House, then, with such facts before it, prepared to try an experiment—to let its measures halt tamely behind the mischief, and not arriving until the greater part had been completed. Admitting that the agricultural districts were at present in complete security, was it to be denied that into many of them manufactories extensively intruded?—Besides, agriculture was not altogether exempt from distress; if it did not now feel it, it might do so at some future period; and distresses in other parts of the kingdom might extend their baneful influence into those at present free from infection. Look, then, what would be the consequence of making the measure local? In the first place, it could not be carried into operation until after a tedious and dangerous process, including communications between magistrates and the Government, with examinations upon oath, and proclamations; and in the interval, how many Radical Meetings might be held & how much alarm spread throughout the surrounding country. He further submitted, that this was precisely the description of evil which the Legislature ought to deal with on the general principle, without leaving it to the local magistrates. The practice of Parliament at former periods confirmed this opinion: the nature of the evil had always guided its judgment, and of course the general tendency of the prevailing corruption was to extend itself into other districts, and that silently and darkly, until it was prepared to work its full effect. In his Lordship's view, therefore facts, reason, and policy, all united to induce the house to pass general, and not a local measure. With regard to the second point, whether the bill ought or ought not to be permanent, he had stated his view, on a former night, that, fairly considered, it ought not to be regarded as an invasion on the rights of the subject. (Hear, from the opposition benches.) No embarrassment was thrown in the way of the exercise of the undoubted right of the people to petition the crown or either house of parliament; and a great portion of the policy of making the measure permanent arose out of the peculiar character of the meetings. It was quite clear that nothing could place the subject in a more disadvantageous position, with respect to the right of petitioning, than not knowing distinctly how he might exercise that right without being exposed to the violation of the law; it was also obvious that nothing could be more important to the best interests of the country than to relieve magistrates from such a difficult situation as those of Manchester had been placed in on the 15th of August. Could any discretion be more delicate for Magistrates, than for them to be called upon to decide what circumstances attending a meeting gave it that character of illegality which justified them as a matter of duty and prudence in dispersing the meeting? (Hear.) His Lordship was prepared to maintain, that the bill did not at all affect the right of petitioning, excepting that it afforded the subject the advantage of a clear and indisputable rule by which he might exercise it. Would the house wish that the state of things which existed in Yorkshire should be extended to other situations? If so, this bill might be rejected; but was it not most lamentable, when Magistrates were obliged to submit to the terror of meetings as had been there held, because they considered it a less evil than using an endeavor to disperse them?—Was it not most lamentable to see Lord Fitzwilliam, a man of such undoubted character and loyalty rejoicing at the close of the Hunslet-moor meeting, that it had been attended with no worse consequences? [Hear, Hear.] A collection of 30,000 persons were there assembled, and the most unqualified treason was the subject of discussion; yet Lord Fitzwilliam wrote to government, stating his great satisfaction that the meeting had dispersed quietly. Such was the state of the country. Was there any object more like to be of advantage to the subject who meant bona fide to exercise his just rights, than to show him he could exercise them without the possibility of being interrupted? The principle of the measure was no more than this—that where a meeting was not thought proper by the constituted authorities, it must be held within certain limits, to afford security against the danger of numbers; and it was rather singular, that in this country, down to a very late period, the only meetings known were those called by the constituted authorities.—A noble lord (Folkstone) had hinted his suspicions, that if it depended on the Magistrates, they might be packed by the government; but he (Lord Castlereagh) put it to the good sense of any man, whether, supposing the Sheriff refused to call a meeting, five gentlemen out of the whole Magistracy of a county could not be found to assemble the people.—An honorable gentleman had objected to the conduct of the Lord Lieutenant of the county of Norfolk, and the manner in which the complaint was made, was certainly somewhat objectionable: if, however, such excusion was made and remedied in the manner specified, did not the fact furnish conclusive evidence that there was an appeal, and that that appeal would not be made in vain? [Hear!] Returning, however, to the disturbances, he begged to ask, whether any honorable gentleman really thought that the mischief had taken little root, or that persons at the head of it were likely to be diverted or converted by such a measure as the noble lord (Folkstone) had hinted at, for two, three, or six months? In his conscience, he (Lord Castlereagh) believed, that if parliament were to do that, it would be far wiser that it should have attempted nothing. [Loud cheer.] The remedy must be applicable to the evil; & as the evil was of a permanent nature, so must be the remedy. Would not the designing and disaffected watch the moment when the restriction should be removed, and renew all the miseries they had now created? By giving permanency to the measure, it was not put out of the power of parliament at any future period to repeal or modify it. He was the more earnest upon this subject, because he could not conscientiously persuade himself, that there was any thing in the bill that was inconsistent with the true liberty of the subject. On the contrary, he believed that it would secure Englishmen in the exercise of a valuable right, in the manner most compatible with their own and their country's interests. He was sure that parliament would be disposed to give the measure that degree of permanency which would enable it to cope with the danger; if temporary, it would not only be fertile in itself, but would hold out to the leaders of treason and rebellion, a motive to manage their dependants and husband their force until when the bill expired it would be too strong to be resisted. His Lordship concluded by adding that he had thought himself bound in candour to offer these remarks, in order to show that Ministers had not altered the view they had originally taken of the question.

Lord Folkstone explained, that when he spoke of a bill for two, three, or six months, he meant it only to last until the enquiry had been concluded; and that he should be disposed, if a case were made out, to intrust Ministers even with a stronger measure.

Mr. Beaumont expressed his unwillingness to intrude upon the house, but he was desirous of correcting an observation made by the Noble Lord. The Noble Lord had stated on the authority of the Mayor of Newcastle, that 700 armed men marched to the meeting from a neighbouring village. The fact, however, was, that no arms whatever were seen on those persons.

Mr. Brougham, he did not mean to trouble the House at any great length; but he felt it impossible to allow some of the observations which had been made by the Noble Lord opposite to remain unnoticed. The Noble Lord had talked very largely of the value of the right of attending public meetings. For his part he (Mr. B.) always felt apprehensive, when any right was praised by a Minister, that it was about to be lost. He always listened with fear to those melodious commendations which were but too frequently the prelude to the abrogation of that on which they were bestowed. On this invaluable right, for instance, the Noble Lord subsequently endeavoured to fix a stigma, in consequence of its having been abused by foolish and wicked persons. He (Mr. B.) by no means wished to under-rate the extent of that abuse. As a firm friend of the right which he praised, not for the purpose of defending it, he deeply lamented the abuse which had taken place. He was not less aware of the folly and wickedness of the speeches and proceedings described by the Noble Lord, than any man.

New Road to Canada.—It gives us peculiar pleasure, to learn, that travelling on the great road from the county of Somerset to Quebec, has commenced, and, that the most sanguine expectations of its benefits, are realizing. Several droves of cattle have already been driven to the market of Quebec, and ten sleighs and 3 ox teams are now on their way. The distance from Anson is 160 miles, and from Hallowell 210 miles.

The beneficial effects of opening this new market for our surplus produce, will be felt by the whole State, but more immediately and principally, by the County of Somerset. This new county, situated upon the head waters of the Kennebec, possesses great agricultural advantages. Of this its citizens are not unmindful, but have devoted themselves with great zeal to the cultivation of the soil. Their Agricultural Society is the first in Maine that has awarded premiums; and it promises to be of great utility. The public spirit and perseverance of its citizens, and the fertility and exuberance of its soil, will at a day not far distant, render Somerset one of the finest interior counties in New England.

Late from Chili.

The Baltimore Patriot by yesterday's Southern mail, contains a letter from a citizen of the United States, in Santiago de Chili, dated, 7th of October, 1819, from which we have made the following extracts.

"The squadron of Chili, under command of Lord Cochrane, sailed from Valparaiso the 11th ult. and after touching at Coquimbo to receive about two hundred troops on board, departed from the coast, destined for Lima, on the 17th; having on board nearly a complete regiment of marines, and infantry, including Engineers. It was manned with mixed crews, but nearly all the officers, and more than half the crew were foreigners, chiefly English and American seamen.

The object of this squadron at Callao, and after to meet that on its way from Spain. In case of success in the first object, perhaps some military movements on a small scale may be attempted with the few troops on board. A grand military expedition upon Lima is meditated; and December or January ensuing, is spoken of as the point of time determined for its embarkation.

Formidable preparations have been made, and are making, for the invasion of Peru, by combined operations and concentred movements, and the money raised at Buenos Ayres for the defence of that city is to be appropriated to that object. It is supposed that an army will march upon Lima through Alto Peru, from Buenos Ayes, while one of six or seven thousand men will go by sea from Chili.

a considerable quantity of Corn, Whis key, Oil, Cheese, Hams, Butter, Lard, &c have been shipped. It is estimated the aggregate of exports amounts to about d400,000. Of the flour which has been shipped, about 13,000 barrels have been manufactured at the three mi'es in this village, and the mill of Messrs. Strong &

During the past season, 48 different several arrivals and departures are about 256. There has been twice, during the season, 12 vessels laying in the harbor at the same time, which gave it a very maritime appearance.

The business on the river, above this place, has increased considerably since last season. Good boats, from 20 to 30 tons burthen, ply between this village and Gardon, carrying up salt and returning with potash, flour, staves, &c. &c.

Extract of a letter from an officer of the 6th regiment, to a Gentleman in this town, dated Council Bluffs, or Camp Missouri, November 12, 1819.

"The three steamboats left Bellefon-taine on the 6th July; the keels preceded us two days—we however overtook them at Franklin. The boat expedition, in which I had the good fortune of being, succeeded, after a great deal of trouble on account of snags, sawyers, planters and sandbars, in reaching Cow Island.
The Jefferson did not get farther than Franklin, and the Johnson as far as fort Osage. After a stay of four or five days at Cow Island we left it in keel boats for the Bluffs, where we arrived on the 2d of October.

"The situation here I am pleased with.
I think there is no danger of starving, the provisions for the winter and spring having arrived; but we feel the want of vegetables—it is almost three months since we have tasted any. We found deer, elk, and turkeys in great abundance, in ascending the river We see few of them here; however two of Capt. Riley's riflemen came in a few days since with forty turkeys—and another with twenty-six.

Two great dinners have been given since we arrived here; one by Col Atkinson, to the officers of the two regiments; the other was given in return by the two regiments—at which we had turkeys, wild geese, brant, grouse, partridges, ducks of every description, fresh beef and venison—but no vegetables:
we have, however, a good soil, and will have a plenty of these next season. Our garrison, which is built of cotton wood logs, progresses, finely, and is large enough to contain the two regiments.

"The colonel and Indian agent have held two councils with the Indians. The Pawnees with whom the first was held are represented as being very strong, and able to bring into the field 2000 warriors and 700 fire arms—they are all mounted on mules, which they steal from the Spaniards They appear friendly, as do also the Mahaws These Indians are not more than 30 miles from us, and are in our camp every day—the Pawnees about 90 miles.

"The regiment is generally healthy."

Extract of a letter from Augustura, 13th November, 1819, to a gentleman in Washington.

"Since writing you last, in October, we have received dispatches from gen-Bolivar, dated Santa Fee, up to the middle of September; at which time, the whole of the provinces of New Grenada were in peaceable possession of the patriots; and gen. Bolivar was ready to return to Venezuela, and is, ere this, on his march to unite his force with the army of Venezuela, and operate against general Morillo, &c. Gen. Arismendi, vice president of Venezuela, left Angustura, on the 5th (Nov.) for Maturin, to unite his efforts to those of Gen. Marino, in necessary dispositionsfor the movement of the army from that to join in the contemplated attack on Caracccas, and will move immediately with 6000 excellent troops, principally English and Irish.
General Paez will take the field with 4000 cavalry, &c. The whole of the royal division under general La Torre have been destroyed by general Soublett.
The post of Santa Fee, on the Apure, has been abandoned by the royal division stationed there. General Bolivar has organized a provisional government in Santa Fee, and left general St. Ander in charge of the government till the members from New Grenada can take their seats in the general congress, and adopt the necessary measures for the permanent establishment of a Governor there, &c.
The prospects were never more favourable in this quarter than at present."

Extract of a letter, dated St. Thomas, December. 11, 1819.

"I have only time to inform you, that a vessel arrived yesterday from a royalist port on the main, and brings the important intelligence of Bovilar being at the head of 15,000 men, well disciplined, & marching rapidly for Caraccas. Morillo has only about 4000 to oppose him—
There can be little doubt but this campaign will put an end to the war in that quarter. In fact, we consider here that the Independance of Venezuela is established. I have much more to say, but the vessel is under way."

ALBANY, Monday Jan. 24.

Mr. Ulshoeffer presented the following report.

The committee to whom was referred the memorial of Mordecai M. Noah, of the city of New-York, relating to the purchase of Grand Island, respectfully report—

That the petitioner applies to the state for a grant of the said island, for the purpose of attempting to have the same settled by emigrants of the Jewish religion—that he not only considers the situation of Grand Island as well adapted for the contemplated purpose, but that obtaining of a title from the state would be very advantageous in inducing the emigration of capitalists as well as others. Your Committee do not doubt but that the recent persecution of the Jews in various parts of Europe, may favor the views of the petitioner, and that the settlement of Grand Island would be a desirable object to this state. It is one of the greatest characteristics of the United States, that they offer an asylum to the unfortunate and persecuted of all religious denominations; but to preserve our equal rights, it is essential, as the petitioner states, that we should offer no preference to any sect. Without reference, therefore to any object of the petitioner, which may be supposed to present a claim for any purpose of religion, but considering that the Legislature has repeatedly decl ed its intention of affording equal protection and encouragement to all who may inhabit within the state, and that it is for the interest of the state to dispose of the said island, there can be no objection, in the opinion of your committee, to the grant thereof to Mr. Noah, and have accordingly prepared a bill providing for the survey and sale of the said island, agreeably to the prayer of the petitioner, which they have directed their chairman to ask leave to bring in.

Leave being granted, Mr. Ulshoeffer brought in the said bill, which was twice read and committed; and is in the words following;—

AN ACT,

Directing the commissioners of the land office to survey and sell Grand Island in the Niagara river, to Mordicai M. Noah.

Be it enacted by the people of the state of New-York, represented in Senate and Assembly, That the commissioners of the land office be and they are hereby authorised and directed to cause Grand Island, in the Niagara river, to be surveyed and valued according to the average and fair value of the lands adjacent and to cause to be granted and issued letters patent to Mordecai M. Noah, conveying & granting to him in fee the said island, he paying the eighth part of the consideration money to the treasury of the state, before granting the said letters patent, and the said Mordecai M. Noah executing his bond and mortgage on the said land to the people of this state for residue of the consideration money, payable in eight equal annual installments.

PLATTSBURG, Dec. 25.

Three of the stage horses belonging to Mr. Bailey, were stolen from the stable of Mr. Green, on the night of the 20th inst. The horses were taken by two soldiers who deserted from the garrison and who were taken up the next day in Burtonville, L. Canada, and, together with the horses, brought back to this place.

It gives us pleasure to state, that the Civil officers of the Province, co-operated in apprehending the thieves. If the magistracy of the respective governments, and all good citizens, would aid in bringing to justice every felon, without reference to the national line, it would be a wholesome check upon those pests of society who are depredating upon the inhabitants and screen themselves from justice, by dodging across the line.

DREADFUL FIRE IN SAVANNAH.

CHARLESTON, Jan. 13.

By this morning's southern mail we have received the following particulars of a most destructive fire in Savannah, which has laid one half of that city in ashes.

Extract of a letter to the Editor Jan. 11.

"Savannah has been visited this morning with a destructive fire. About 400 houses are consumed, and 3,000,000 of dollars may not cover the loss. A space of one third of a mile in length and one seventh in breadth, closely built and in the most active part, with a few exceptions, is desolated. It commenced at the Baptist Church Square, and the wind was N. W. swept to Abercorn-street.

On the east side of Broughton-st. every house is gone, from Jefferson-st. to Mr. Deming's house, which was saved. Mr. Anderson's and the Episcopal Church in St. Julian-st. stopped the flames; both are safe: The State Bank & Planter's Bank in Bryan-st. are preserved. From Washington Hotel Range and Capt. Rice's on Bay-st. to Abercorn, all is lost, except Mr. Dickson's store. Dr. Jones's house was blown up. The Branch Bank and the new Custom House, with stores not occupied, are burnt. The vault of the Bank built in the yard resisted the heat, and kept secure the specie and papers. Many buildings supposed to before-proof, could not withstand the intense heat. The largest store here, or perhaps in the U. States, with most of its contents of dry goods is destroyed. The warehouses and shipping are safe. All the printing offices are burnt. Several explosions of powder took place, The distress is great. Not a barber's or apothecery's shop, a hardware, dry goods, stationary, crockery, or clothing store left. The Phœnix Company of London has insured about $164,000, besides a good deal by the N. York Fire Companies. Many are ruined, particularly the retailers."

Many of the houses were partly cleared of their contents; but the property was generally burnt in the streets. Many hundreds of families are literally naked in the streets; not even clothing was saved. The city is still in flames. We have every reason to believe that its progress will extend no further.

Museum and Gazette Office, Savannah. Tuesday evening, Jan. 11.

It is in a state of utter distraction that we attempt to describe the horrors of the late conflagration. One half of Savannah is in ruins. We know not, and cannot undertake to enumerate the sufferers or the extent of our loss. The fire originated in the stable back of Mrs Pistti's boarding house, and soon reached Baptist square, stopped its progress in that direction. The fire reached the Bay on the corner of Barnard-street, sweeping the house on the west corner, occupied by Col. Broome, and thence extending down the Bay, taking the brick building occupied by us, with our Printing establishment, the large brick auction store of George Schley, U. States Branch Bank, the new brick auction stores on the corner of Bull-street, Pouyat's corner, Lotters Office, Dickson & Co's store, Hunter's brick store, and Jones' wooden buildings on the corner of Hambersham-street, where its progress will probably be arrested. It is supposed 400 houses were burned; many of them were partly cleared of their contents; but the property was generally burned in the streets. It is presumed the loss cannot be much it any less than two million of dollars. Many hundreds of families are literally naked in the streets—not even clothing was saved. Every printing office was burnt down. For ourselves, with the blessing of God, and the assistance of our friends, we saved a considerable portion of our type, and our most valuable press. The Auction stores in the city, shared a similar fate.

The city is still in flames, and when it will be got under no one knows. We have every reason to believe that its progress will extend no further. It commenced this morning between 1 and 2 o'clock.

From the Salem Post, Jan. 20.

Destructive Storm.—On Monday last this section of our country was visited by a snow storm of unusual severity. It was accompanied with a violent and desolating wind, which continued from 9 o'clock, A. M. until almost sunset, and in its progress produced very great damage. In this town, Jackson and Rupert, we have already heard of losses which, we presume cannot be repaired with an expenditure of less than fifty thousand dollars. Many dwelling houses, barns and other buildings were unroofed, & otherwise materially injured; and many others were completely crushed, and their contents scattered before the wind. In one small neighborhood in Rupert, we are told, more than thirty head of cattle were killed by the falling of buildings, and five or six families were deprived of their dwellings.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 20. 1820.

Col. King has been found guilty of the charge preferred against him for issuing the order to shoot deserters in Florida. He was also found guilty of other charges, and has been sentenced by the court martial to be suspended from his pay and command for the period of five years. The sentence has been transmitted by General Jackson to the president. It is not known whether it has been yet confirmed.—Ex. Post.

From the Boston Patriot.

Female Heroism.—At a recent alarm of fire in this town, a young woman from the impulse of the moment, seized a tea-kettle of water from the fire place, ran to the top of the house, and proceeded down the roof to the eaves, laid down upon the gutter, and, reaching over, poured the kettle of water deliberately upon the fire just kindling under the eaves, and effectually checked its progress. She was assisted into the house again by two persons, who had repaired to the roof with buckets of water; her fortitude having in a degree forsaken her, on a view of her perilous situation. Through the exertions of an individual, a premium has been obtained and presented to her for this act of heroism.

MAMMOTH HOG.

Mr. Silas Rowe, of Jamaica, (Long Island,) has raised and fatted a hog, 21 months old, which when killed, on the 14th inst. weighed seven hundred and twenty-two pounds.

FROM LOWER-CANADA.

Counterfeit Notes.—A respectable merchant of this city, having received information that three men named Merrill Magoone, Jacob Redington, and Bellrouse, were in the practice of passing counterfeit notes here, procured a warrant, and accompanied by the constables seized them in a tavern in McGill street, occupied by Redington. There were found concealed between the floor of an upper apartment and the ceiling of a lower, 10 dollar bills purporting to be of the Quebec Bank, to the amount of 3000 dollars. The felons were, of course, committed to prison. Persons in whose possession such notes are or have been, are requested to call at the Police Office, between the hours of 10 and 3, for the purpose of tracing the issue of them to the men above mentioned.—Can. Cou.

From Halifax.—Papers to the 6th inst. are received via Boston. In consequence of the large quantity of specie imported into the province by the Commissariat Department for the purpose of paying the troops in the garrison, it is stated that bills of exchange command a premium of five per cent. and a further rise may be expected.

At the opening of the House of Assembly at Bermuda on the 1st ult. Sir Wm. Lumley, the newly appointed governor, alluding to the circumstance of Bermuda being made a free port, made the following observations:

"The Prince Regent having been pleased to sanction by a recent act, the still greater freedom of trade and intercourse between this colony and the continent of America, for great national purposes, for the benefit of the empire in general, and the important West India trade in particular, by which, together with the increased establishment of the dock yard and naval arsenal, it is likely to become a great naval entrepot, between Great Britain, America and the West Indies; it rests with yourselves & the inhabitants of these islands, to give full effect to these gracious intentions; and to insure their permanence by a liberal and enlightened policy, in affording and continuing, collectively and individually, every facility to all vessels of every nation entering your ports and harbours, by which we cannot hope to render this colony the chief market and emporium of the Western world."

From the New-Brunswick Courier.

The Year 1819, yesterday closed with one of the most tremendous gales of wind, ever experienced in this Harbour, occasionally veering from N. E. to S. W. and continuing with unremitting fury from 4 A. M. to 1 P. M. a period of no less than nine hours. The appearance of the morning was unusually dark and gloomy, and from the violent storm that was then also raging, Partridge Island could not be perceived from the town; guns were about eight o'clock heard in the direction of it, yet such was the gloom that encompassed the atmosphere, the cause could not be discovered. About nine o'clock however, we had a lucid interval, and a brig was distinctly seen on the south east end of it, rolling tremendously, with her masts both standing; signals of distress were at the time flying on the Island, and guns occasionally fired; but so unusually great was the sea, the laudable efforts both of Messers. REED and MABER, Pilots, to get to the vessel, were unavailing, and they were reluctantly, for the preservation of their own lives, obliged to return. Between ten and eleven o'clock the entire shore at the lower part of the town was covered with pieces of the wreck, bags of Pimento, Oranges, &c. &c. and it was soon discovered from the marks on the bags and part of the stern, that the unfortunate vessel was the elegant brig Mary, Captain GEORGE BELL, from Savannah-la-Mar, owned by Messrs. CROOKSHANK & JOHNSTON, of this City.—The public mind was now engrossed in the fate of the Master and Crew, and every attempt during the remainder of the day, almost inconsistent with prudence, was made to obtain intelligence from the Island, but although the violence of the wind in some measure had abated during the afternoon, yet its effects, from the excessively tremendous sea that was running, the most strenuous efforts were rendered unavailing and it was not until this morning at 12 o'clock, we learned that her whole crew, thirteen in number, including the Master, had perished. The Pilot, Mr. S. WALKER, and two of his Boatmen, who had got on board of the brig some time before she struck, were rescued from a watery grave, by having recourse to a most desperate expedient, which, however, the exhausted state of the Master and crew could not induce them to undertake; A buoy was thrown overboard from the vessel, to which a line was attached, and made fast on board of her—this drifted on shore, and being promptly secured by people on the Island, they individually committed themselves to the waves, & were safely landed.

The oldest inhabitant cannot recount a catastrophe, that has occurred since the settlement of the country, taking place so immediately within our sight and embracing circumstances so peculiarly afflicting—The well known worth of Capt. BELL, renders every panegyric to departed merit unavailing—he has left in addition to a tender Wife and one Child, a Sister yesterday with three, now with two Children, one of them a fine lad having perished with him.

In turning our attention from the melancholy scene, we have faintly attempted to depict above, we have to notice the direful effects of this phenomenon, particularly within the harbour. The ships Lady Ridley and Bittern, brigs Mongo Park, Mary Ann, United Kingdom, William, Charles, Hope, had a number of others were all more or less injured. A small sch'r. belonging to Mr. R. LAWRENCE was entirely sunk, and rendered irreparable. The new Barracks, which had recently been erected by Mr. COPP, and almost enclosed, were entirely levelled with the ground; and the roof of a new House, lately built and owned by Mr. E. CAMERON, situate in Sidney Ward, was blown off.—Much damage was also done in other parts of the City, which our limits will not allow us to particularise.

Since writing the above, we also learn that the sch'r. Thomas Hitchie, belonging to Dirby, N S. from St. Vincent, for the port went ashore between Negro Head and the Spitt Rock—The whole of the Crew, except the Master, perished!—Further particulars of this melancholy event has not come to our knowledge.

Fears are entertained for the safety of the brigs Thetis and Ruby, and other vessels which sailed the day previous.

On Tuesday last, about one o'clock, we regret to state, the House of RALPH CLENCH, Esq. in this Town, took fire, from the stove-pipe leading, through the roof; and the flame had gained such an ascendancy before it was discovered, that all exertions to save the building proved fruitless. Bedding and clothing of the family were destroyed.—Niagara Argus.

SIR,

I am Commanded by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor to acquaint you that it is his pleasure the period for performance of settling duties on all grants made by District Land Boards be fixed at eighteen months.

His Excellency is further pleased to order that the quantity of Land to be cleared (independant of the half of the Road) be one and a half chain deep from the Road the whole front of the Lot.

I have the honor to be
Sir,
your most obedient
Humble Servant

Seasoning Glass.—A gentleman has recently discovered that glass may be rendered less brittle, and of course better able to bear sudden changes of temperature, without breaking. His method is to place the glass in a vessel of cold water, and the water is afterwards gradually heated until it boils, and then suffered to cool in the air. Glasses of every description thus prepared will afterwards bear boiling water suddenly poured into them, without injury.

Musical Dog.—A large water-spaniel (says Professor Pictet, in a late number of the Bibliotheque Universelle,) belonging to one of our friends, whose residence is very near our own, appears to be in general quite indifferent to music, both vocal and instrumental; but if you sing or play to him a certain air, (au old romance L'ane de notre moulin, est mort la pauvre bete, &c.) which is a lamentable ditty, in the minor key, the dog begins looking at you very pitifully, then he gapes repeatedly, showing always increasing signs of impatience and uneasiness; lastly he sits upright on his hinder legs, and begins to howl louder, and louder, so that he can no longer hear the voice of the person who sings, or the sound of the instrument. If you stop, he stops also. Trials have been made, beginning the experiment with other airs, and falling, without making any pause, into the romance in question; the dog does not seem to perceive the singing till you come to the air which he cannot endure, and to which he has not been able to accustom himself. He then manifests, without exception or variation, the series of actions which we have just described, and of which many hundred persons have been witnesses; for this fact has been and still is, the object of the curiosity of all those who have heard it spoken of.

FROM THE QUEBEC MERCURY.

Observations on the Saint Maurice iron works, near the town of Three-rivers, in the Province of Lower-Canada. By William Smith, Esq. of Quebec.

Saint Maurice lies about three leagues or nine miles from Three Rivers. The country is flat. The iron works were constructed during the time this Province was under the dominion of France, and they are now held by lease from the crown at the rent £500 sterling per annum; by two merchants of the first respectability of Quebec; namely, Messrs. Monro and Bell.* The situation for carrying on these works is a very advantageous one, having a constant run of water, and the fall such as to require little or no banking or draining. The establishment forms a beautiful village, wholly inhabited by workmen and their families. The number of men and boys employed, exclusive of cutters and colliers, may exceed one hundred. There is a flour-mill and saw-mill on the premises, also a baker and butcher.

There is at present one furnace, two forges, with one hammer each for bar iron, two carpenter's shops, two wheelwright and three blacksmith's shops. The bellows are of the horizontal or common kind. There is a great and increasing demand for the iron, and no doubt the lessees will find it for their interest to enlarge their establishment.

The ore is procured about two leagues from St. Maurice: its general depth from the surface of the earth, from three to ten inches, and is generally found in swampy grounds: the beds are very irregular, at times taking sudden turns under roots of large trees. The direction is from N. N. E. and S. S. W. like the primitive strata of New England.—The inclination perpendicular. The beds have been traced some distance, and promice to afford an abundant supply.

The colour of the mineral is a bluish grey, similar to that of Sweden, and the same species that furishes Europe and America with best iron. In the neighbourhood is found a greyish granular limestone, and clay which serves the furnace for a flux. The height of the furnace is from the hearth to the crown, about twenty five feet. The bar iron is of an excellent quality, very malleable and tough. There is no steel furnace.

TAILORS DEPENDED.

A Tailor, instead of being the ninth part of a man, possesses the qualities of nine men combined in one, as will be seen by the following observations:—

1st.—As an economist, he cut his cost according to his cloth.

2d.—As a gardner, he is careful of his cabbage.

3d.—As a sailor he shears off, whenever it is proper.

4th.—As a play-actor, he often brandishes a bare bodkin.

5th—As a lawyer, he attends to many suits.

6th.—As an executioner, he provides suspenders or gallowses for many persons.

7th.—As a cook he is generally furnished with a warm goose.

8th.—As a Sheriff's officer, he does much at sponging.

9th.—As a rational and scriptural divine, his great aim is to form good habits for the benefit of himself and others.

"No doubt the subject might be greatly extended; but I think enough has been said to do away the opprobium so often cast upon the gentlemen knights of the thimble and needle, and to induce all the fraternity to unite, and contribute a suit of clothes to their friend and humble servant,

RICHARD RAGGED.

Trivector.—A Machine for conveyance without horses; the men work together, the feet of the fore one only being visible; they sit as easy as in any other carriage, and the muscular and bodily action is like that of rowing, but far more easy. When loaded, it weighs 700 weight. It is evident that, in place of the centre man, two passengers might sit, and the vehicle be impelled with sufficient velocity by the exertion of the other two.

This Trivector went from London to Brighton, on Saturday, Sept. 11, worked by three men, in seven hours, where they dined; after which they proceeded thirteen miles farther; making together a distance of sixty-seven miles within the day. It would, however, be possible to run this machine 120 miles in the day or ten miles an hour.

We are sorry that Mr. Birch has not taken out a patent for these most ingenious inventions, and he has preferred relying for his liberality and discrimination of the public.

An accident of a shocking kind happened near Philadelphia on Thursday. A young man, a native of Ireland, who has been employed during the last summer on the canal for the new water works by the Schuylkill, principally to excavate rocks, by means of blasting, had on this day charged a crevice with powder, for the purpose of forcing a large rock from its bed; when he came to enter his needle, as it is termed, (a small iron rod, guarded with brass, at the part which is commonly inserted in the rock, to prevent sparks being easily struck from it) he found that the crevice was too narrow and deep to admit his rod quite to the bottom, & he gave it a blow with his hammer to drive it to its place—a spark was struck off from the iron, which fell among the powder, and he was blown up, it was thought thirty feet. In his fall he was dreadfully mangled and bruised; but he was carried to the hospital, and we are happy to learn that he is doing well, and likely to recover. This may serve as a caution to others engaged in blasting, a species of business in which great caution is needed.—Union.

Paper from Sea Weed.—A patent for 5 years has been granted in Denmark for the invention of a new mode of making paper, namely, of the sea weed. This paper is said to be whiter and stronger than other paper, and at the same time cheaper.

The London Courier asserts, that after all the noise of rotten-boroughs, it appears, that the three champions of opposition in the house of commons, Mr. Brougham, Mr. Tierney, and Sir James Mackintosh, all represent those boroughs,

We are sorry that Mr. Birch has not taken out a patent for these most ingenious inventions, and he has preferred relying for his liberality and discrimination of the public.

An accident of a shocking kind happened near Philadelphia on Thursday. A young man, a native of Ireland, who has been employed during the last summer on the canal for the new water works by the Schuylkill, principally to excavate rocks, by means of blasting, had on this day charged a crevice with powder, for the purpose of forcing a large rock from its bed; when he came to enter his needle, as it is termed, (a small iron rod, guarded with brass, at the part which is commonly inserted in the rock, to prevent sparks being easily struck from it) he found that the crevice was too narrow and deep to admit his rod quite to the bottom, & he gave it a blow with his hammer to drive it to its place—a spark was struck off from the iron, which fell among the powder, and he was blown up, it was thought thirty feet. In his fall he was dreadfully mangled and bruised; but he was carried to the hospital, and we are happy to learn that he is doing well, and likely to recover. This may serve as a caution to others engaged in blasting, a species of business in which great caution is needed.—Union.

Paper from Sea Weed.—A patent for 5 years has been granted in Denmark for the invention of a new mode of making paper, namely, of the sea weed. This paper is said to be whiter and stronger than other paper, and at the same time cheaper.

The London Courier asserts, that after all the noise of rotten-boroughs, it appears, that the three champions of opposition in the house of commons, Mr. Brougham, Mr. Tierney, and Sir James Mackintosh, all represent those boroughs,

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

DECEMBER 2.

Seditious Meetings Prevention Bill.

He even felt that the too frequent exercise of the right in question, produced the evil of rendering the people indifferent respecting the exercise of it on important occasions. Every body knew, after any public meeting at which numbers had attended, and in which great zeal and animation had been exhibited, how difficult it was to assemble another. He totally disapproved of the violent proceedings that had taken place in the last meetings. He disapproved of marching bodies of men in array from place to place; it savoured of every thing but the commencement of deliberation. He also reprobated the assembling of excessive numbers at a public meeting. If the population of the place at which a meeting was held allowed the assembling of 60 or 70,000 persons he lamented it. If they were drawn up in columns, and marched from distant districts, it was highly reprehensible. As to banners and music, in his experience of public meetings, he had never found them other than concomitants, if not promoters of good humour among a multitude. Having admitted thus much, he was by no means called upon to adopt the argument of the noble lord and the right hon. member for the University of Oxford, that, because at one meeting a violent speech has been made, and at another an absurd resolution agreed to, that therefore public meetings should be put down, and the people of England be no longer trusted to assemble. Admitting the absurdity of the resolutions at Hunslet Moor respecting savings banks and the national debt, he absolutely denied the consequence which the Noble Lord drew from that fact. If all places were to be put down where absurd resolutions were adopted, he was afraid the House would go further than perhaps they intended. He was afraid that they must put down places where it was at one time declared, by a great majority, that a pound note was equivalent to twenty shillings, where in three weeks afterwards it was declared by a great majority to be penal to give less than twenty shillings for a pound note, and where it was afterwards resolved by a great majority that a pound note was not worth twenty shillings. If the House meant to suppress all meetings at which absurd resolutions were adopted, they must certainly suppress a meeting where it was one day resolved that two and two made five, and another day that two and two made four, and resolved, he would not say unblushingly, but unwittingly and unreflectingly, by majorities of equal strength. [A laugh.] He was informed, however, that the agents of mischief in the country, (for he was always solicitous to separate them from their dupes,) by no means submitted to the meetings the actual resolutions which were afterwards promulgated as emanating from them. This was a consideration of no small importance. For the hinge on which the measure turned was, that so many thousands of persons passed absurd resolutions. Now, if the resolutions published as their resolutions, were not the resolutions agreed to by them; but those resolutions dressed up, and a sting put into them, the argument of the noble lord fell to the ground.—With respect to training, unless for an innocent purpose, which it was incumbent on the persons so training themselves to show, he held it to be a misdemeanor by the existing law. When coupled with the intention of insurrection, it amounted to the highest crime contemplated by the law. It, however, the law was defective on this subject, in God's name let it be strengthened. But then he entreated the House to consider how little the question of training bore on the right of meeting to consider subjects affecting the interests of Church and State. With respect to alarm, he begged to make a passing observation. He was very far from thinking that there was no ground for alarm. Originating in distress, it had given rise to acts extremely reprehensible. But he entreated the House to pause before they assumed that those acts were so large in amount or extent, even in the disturbed districts, as the garbled, anonymous and imperfect evidence on the table was calculated to make them believe. He knew, that although in private life the man who allayed alarm was hailed as a consoler, it was not so with the man who endeavored to open the eyes of the public to their safety, and who was generally considered not a comforter, but an enemy. He should walk, chearily, therefore, in that path. But he could not forget several instances, in which great public alarm had proved to be wholly unfounded; and he especially referred to the alarm in 1812. The report of the other House of Parliament in 1812, on which the legislative measures then adopted were principally founded, among other statements to shew the altered character of English crime, gave an account of the murder of Mr. Horsfall, accompanied by the circumstance, that having been fired at by two men from behind a wall, he fell from his horse, when he was immediately surrounded by a ferocious multitude, who hailed the event with savage exultation. The statement was made on the authority of A. B, C. D., E. F., and other couples of the alphabet, backed by the declaration of the most respectable Magistrates, men of unimpeachable credit, and who, he was persuaded, believed all, because they thought that they knew all. It had its effects on the house of Lords as it had previously had on his Majesty's Ministers. The committee of the House of Lords were not allowed to examine persons. He did not say that the committee was packed, although that the members of it were nominated by Ministers, but the bag of evidence submitted to them was packed. Let the bag be packed, and let the examination of witnesses be prohibited, and whatever might be the members of a committee the result of their investigation must necessarily be the same. For seven months the alarming fact thus stated in the report of the committee of the House Lords was believed, and every man who doubted it was treated with the utmost contempt. Away went parliament to work on legislative measures. In the fulness of time, however, the truth came out. At the Special Commission in York, seven months after the report, it was made evident that so far from the body of Mr. Horsfall having been surrounded by a ferocious multitude, hailing his murder with ferocious exultation, it was with great difficulty that a single man was found to assist in carrying it to a neighbouring apothecary's! He did not doubt that something like the case existed at present.—Undoubtedly he did not mean to deny all the statements that had been made of the causes for alarm, but he was persuaded that they were grossly exaggerated; and he owned that he felt some solace in not thinking so badly of his countrymen as did some other persons whom he could name. The hon. member for Northumberland had contradicted the statement of the 700 men said to have marched with arms into Newcastle, from a village three miles off. The fact was, the mayor of Newcastle, for whom he (Mr. Brougham,) had a great respect, merely said in his letter, "If my information is correct." &c. A circumstance that convinced him of the inaccuracy of the statement was, that to his knowledge there was not a village within six or seven miles of Newcastle that could turn out 700 men capable of bearing arms. The question for the house to consider was, whether danger existed to such an alarming degree as was stated, and if so, whether the proposed remedy was an effectual one? Now he denied both. The noble lord said, that these measures did not interfere with the constitutional rights of the people. That if there was interference, it was a purifying one. Those rights. Yes; but it would be like a purification by fire, it would cause destruction. The noble lord's plan was that meetings held by the lord lieutenant, or by sheriffs, were not to be interfered with. He hoped the noble lord would give him leave to say from his experience, that under such circumstances it was likely the sheriffs would oppose themselves to the holding of such meetings. [No, no, from the Ministerial Benches.] He said that this was very likely. In the course of two months, there were four such rebukes. In the counties of Essex, Hampshire, and Cornwall. Nay, there were five—the Sheriff of Cheshire had also refused to convene a public meeting. (A Member observed, that the Sheriff of Hampshire did not refuse to convene a meeting.) He begged pardon of the House—the meeting had not been refused, the requisitionists gave it up. But let him look at what took place in that county; let them take notice of the means which had been used on the occasion. It was true that the Gentlemen who signed the requisition gave up holding the meeting, but observe what steps were taken to procure signatures to what was called a Loyal Declaration in that county.—The Declaration was signed by the Secretary at War (Lord Palmerston,) by a Cabinet Minister [the Duke of Wellington] He, in common with the House and the country, admired the illustrious character of that noble personage; he entertained the strongest feelings of gratitude for the services which he had rendered to the country; he expressed his feelings as one of the millions which the Noble Duke had saved from the most cruel and persecuting tyranny of a foreign power—yet he would have wished that the Noble Duke had a little increased the debt of gratitude which the nation owed him by shewing himself a friend to the liberties of his country. He trusted that if the time should arise when this country had to struggle for its liberties, that illustrious character would not forget that the sovereign rights of the people constituted the stability of the Throne; that this was a country which was to be governed by civil and patriotic measures. Such was the nature and feelings of Englishmen, and such he hoped they would ever continue to be. What had been done at Southampton had been done openly and less clumsily done elsewhere. With respect to parish meetings solely, which the Noble Lord contended left the liberties untouched, and which the Solicitor-General contended were to be fenced round, if their applications for general meeting failed, let the House observe, and they would see the conclusion to be drawn from this measure. According to this doctrine, it was urged, that where the population of towns or parishes were small, there was no danger. In the old agricultural towns or parishes the parishioners and inhabitants were few. But though they were totally excluded from the objects of the Bill, upon them it was that its rigour would fall. In such places as York, for instance, there was no danger to be apprehended from meetings under this Bill. It had 31 parishes, and about 9,000 inhabitants. In Exeter there were 24 parishes, with a population of about 10,000 persons. How then were the inhabitants of these towns to meet? They could not assemble in any other way than by meetings of about 300 in each parish.

The Solicitor General observed, that in such cases the whole body could meet.

Mr. Brougham said that they could not, unless the meeting was called by the Mayor or other competent authorities. Was his honorable and learned friend so ignorant of the nature of the Bill. He expected that the Hon. Gentleman would have thrown some light upon this part of the subject, but he now found that he knew more about the Bill than even the legal advisers of Government.

Lord Palmerston trusted that the House would indulge him in a few observations, after the allusion which the Honorable and Learned Gentleman had made to his conduct on a recent occasion. He had yet to learn, that because a man held an official situation, he was thereby disqualified from giving any opinion upon, or taking any part in question of public interest. He had pursued and would pursue, without consulting the Learned Gentleman, or caring whether it met his applause or disapprobation, that line of conduct which appeared to himself to be the most proper. He, and those who had acted with him on the occasion alluded to (in signing the counter requisition in Hampshire,) had acted from a well understood sense of duty, and in doing so, had consulted the best interests of the country; and he was sorry that others had not followed a similar course. Whatever the Learned Gentleman might think or say of the conduct of so illustrious individual, that opinion would not lessen the debt of gratitude which his country owed him; and he would be bold to say, that the respect of that illustrious individual for the Constitution of his country was not less than that of the Learned Gentleman himself. If one person had a right to call on the Sheriff of a county for a meeting, he could see no reason why another had not a right to sign a requisition against it. By the conduct of those who had signed the counter requisition in Hampshire, that county had been saved from the disgrace of those unwarrantable and unconstitutional attacks that had been made on the Manchester Magistrates. (Cheers from the Opposition.)

The House then proceeded to a division, when there appeared

To His Grace the Duke of Hamilton and Brandon.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR GRACE,

I have read with surprise and regret your letter addressed to the "Committee for the Manchester Sufferers"—surprise at the unconstitutional tenor of the insinuations & assertions contained therein, and regret that the noble name of Hamilton and Brandon, should, in this manner, appear to lend support to such a dangerous cause.

Cautiously and carefully as your sentiments are worded, and evidently penned to be explained as suits the temper and events of future times, still it requires but little penetration to find out the individuals you blame—the cause you advocate—and the conduct you defend. The meanest understanding must perceive that the Lord Lieutenant of Lanarkshire ought to have acted a different part.

I willingly leave the motives which dictated such a donation, to the Omniscient Judge. Justice, however, compels me to remark, that genuine humanity and Christian sympathy, are imparted in their gifts. I cannot find the name of your Grace to any subscription list, "for the relief of those maimed and maltreated sufferers," who fell in discharge of their duty in these perilous times.

If the motives which prompted this act are hid beyond our reach, your reasons for the gift are not. These come within the sphere of our comprehension, are cognizable by every Briton, ought to be weighed and examined, and can be judged of by all.

Such meetings as that which took place at Manchester never were the "birth-right" of Englishmen. "Universal Suffrage" never was, and let us hope never will, be a part of our Constitution, and therefore, those who march in threatening attitude and military array, unfurling banners, inscribed with "Liberty or Death," to meetings, the avowed object of which is, by intimidation or open force, to procure such results, can never be said to be engaged in what is legal and right. One hundred thousand individuals, led on by furious and unprincipled men, as the Manchester Meeting was, can have no right to collect from the neighbouring district, nigh and far, and meet in that town for the avowed object of overturning our constitution, our Government, and our Laws, openly declaring that death should be the fate of all those who resisted these projects, or attempted to frustrate their plans. That this was the case at Manchester, the thickest covering attempted to be thrown over the proceedings by wilful falsehood or party spirit, strives in vain to conceal.

The thanks & approbation of your Sovereign, conveyed in a public manner to the Constituted Authorities of Manchester, for their firm and legal conduct, ought to have restrained your pen on this subject and satisfied your mind. But your Grace may resort to the usual subterfuge for party attack, and say, the thanks given and the approbation conveyed, were the thanks and approbation of Ministers and not his own. Be it so. These Ministers are tangible persons, and responsible for their advice. Your Grace, therefore, had the greater reason to refrain from entering upon a subject to condemn upon ex parte evidence, in a cause where you might afterwards be called to sit as a judge.

The Magistrates of Manchester, in discharge of their arduous duty, have delivered over to the tribunals of their country and to its just and impartial laws, those whom they are conscious have offended against them. Enough has transpired to shew, that they have had reasons too sufficient for what they have done. Let the results of those legal investigations, before the only competent tribunals, be waited for before your Grace, even as a legislator, can claim your privilege to interfere. If the accused are acquitted—if, upon their trials it shall appear, from evidence, that the Magistrates have acted wrong, and that they had no sufficient reason for what they have done—then let them be punished—then let the responsible advisers of the Crown be arraigned for sanctioning without good ground, and approving of illegal and oppressive conduct, then let Parliament—then, but not till then, let your Grace, as a Legislator, assert the rights of the subject, and "see justice done to the aggrieved." But then, even then, let your Grace remember, that you must hear before you condemn, and that the loyal and peaceable, the after & thence, have rights to protect, wrongs to satisfy, and grievances to redress, as well as the factious, the turbulent, the factious and the vain.

The course of proceedings you have adopted shews how far you have departed from the principles of justice, our constitution and our laws.

In the manifesto which you have put forth, your Grace has condemned the judgment, questioned the understanding, and arraigned the veracity of your Sovereign. You have assailed and attempted to shake the majesty and the stability of that throne which has hitherto been supported and upheld, and which can only be supported and upheld by the unsullied splendour of humanity, mercy, truth, and justice, and on the stability of which depends your honours, your property, and your life.

There was a time, may it please your Grace, in the history of this country, when Britain had a Minister who dared to advise, and a Sovereign who could listen to his advice, and who, for a less dangerous step by one of his Councillors than the one you have taken, drew his pen through a prouder name. Bitterly will Britain lament—sadly will she deplore the consequences, if she does not again see such a day—such a Sovereign and such a Minister.

Let not your Grace deceive yourself. The county of Lanark will never be guided by such principles as you have advocated, nor suffer its name to be defamed by such proceedings. As the immediate representative of his Majesty, & a strong link in that constitutional chain intended to bind the cottage to the throne, you ought to have recollected your sacred duty, and endeavoured to strengthen, not dissolve, the bonds which, in other places, hold these together.

Surely your Grace cannot imagine that this paltry donation will be accepted as a peace offering from you by the monster Universal Suffrage, or the Demon Radical Reform. Do you believe that it will induce that frantic followers to regard your Grace with an eye of pity or greater favour in the hour of peril, alarm, and destruction? No! your palaces & your domains are too extensive and too enviable to escape the observation of Universal Suffrage, or to elude the Demon employed by Radical Reform.—These are not times for half measures, nor for attempting to court mercy as if afraid of the power of the inveterate and remorseless foe. The individual who does so is the worst enemy of his country. On his head must justly rest all the future evil collecting in a current, which, if not stemmed, will, ere long, must soon overspread this land.

Your Grace states, that you are a "firm friend of Reform." The Radical your Grace advocates may be summoned in a few words, namely, to displace his Majesty's present Ministers, and to place your friends and yourself in their room. This has been the language of your party for the last thirty years. You, each of all of you want as much public misery and misery, as will serve to get yourselves in and your antagonists out. The object gained there is an end to your Reform. But that end accomplished, and it please your Grace, there is also an end to our national prosperity, glory and honour.

If, by your present policy, your Grace thinks to cajole Radical Reformers, & to make their madness the stepping stone of party to power, you are wrong. Universal Suffrage disowns your authority and refuses to abide by your decision, or trust itself in your hands. The nation—yes, with all her erring children, say the nation, dreads and resists the return of your party to power, and she fears the threats of Radicals less, than that the party should be permitted to wield the authority of the State. You have already been tried and found inadequate for the mighty task. You yourselves weighed yourselves in a balance of your own constructing, and you were found wanting.—England and Europe attest your inability and ignorance of their interests. Indignant nations—kindreds, and tongues, from Petersburgh to Gibraltar—and from Grand Cairo to Washington, are ready to attest how unfit your talents combined were to comprehend the interests of the British Empire, to guide her resources, direct her energies, or support her power.

Deeply does every reflecting and feeling mind, deplore the distress which pervades this country. Eagerly does every humane bosom exert itself to afford relief. But while I admit the distress in a full extent, and deplore its consequences I deny that it proceeds from the misconduct or measures of our present rulers. I deny that Annual Parliaments, Universal Suffrage, and Election by ballot, will relieve it. I cannot admit that the subversion of our present Constitution will remedy our grievances or remove our difficulties—quite the contrary. The adoption of any of these delirious plans would aggravate all our sorrows and all our distress, to an extent and a degree enormous, and altogether inconceivable.

Let the blame of our present distresses be laid on the heads of those who have deserved it. The Whigs of Britain have had a weighty share in occasioning our present calamities. To your Grace and your political friends this nation and Europe owe the prolongation and the consequent enormous expense of the bloodiest, most obstinate, and on our part, the justest contest ever recorded in history. Your prognostications of this country's speedy ruin—the tales of her weakness, dissatisfaction and decay, encouraged our mortal enemies to persevere in their desperate plans. We fought and we conquered, but the consequences of the ravages of that remorseless tyranny, which desolated the world, loaded Britain with debt, and deprived her children of many comforts, are not and cannot yet be done away. They remain with us, and will be felt by our children.

In proportion to your exalted rank, your country, may it please your Grace, expects from you a good example, firmness and activity in the hour of peril and alarm. While you held the commission as Lord Lieutenant of this County, your conduct can only be guided by devotion and obedience to the will of your Sovereign—the maintenance of our present constitution, government and Laws, against every assailing foe.

The day, may it please your Grace, is approaching which hasty strides—the hour, I may say, is numbered, whose fearful commotions will make firmer nerves than yours tremble, and fill stronger bulwarks than Hamilton Palace with terror and alarm. You tread on a volcano which is ready to burst and overwhelm you. It is not in Manchester alone that danger exists. No: near and around you the torch of discord is ready & the demon of anarchy dwells. If your Grace does not know this, you ought to know it. If, as Lord Lieutenant of this County, you neglect to attend it, you are not only culpable but criminal. Yet instead of aiding to extinguish the train which must overwhelm in the palace and the cottage," with lamentation, mourning and woe," you threaten all who attempt to do so, with the authority and penalties of the Courts of Law and the vengeance of Parliament—for you inform us, that "in the Courts of Law and Houses of Parliament, it is there the right of the subject must and will be asserted: and Justice done to the aggrieved." That is the peaceable and the loyal are to be punished, and Hunt and his rabble of confusion, dissatisfaction and treason, are to go free.

In this declaration, your Grace intimates as much as that you will be in one of those Courts to carry these views into effect. Can your Grace calculate upon the Duke of Hamilton and Brandon being a Member of a Legislature under the reign of Universal Suffrage? It may be so, but it will be but for a moment. The moment shorn of your hon land.

Your Grace states, that you are a "firm friend of Reform." The Reform your Grace advocates may be summed up in a few words, namely, to displace his Majesty's present Ministers, and to plant your friends and yourself in their room. Remember the Duc d'Olesus; beware of treading in his footsteps. If you embark on this troubled ocean, you will be borne along by the fearful tide—you can never retrace your footsteps nor regain the shore.

Alarming, may it please your Grace, as the danger is, which at present threatens this country, still that is trifling in comparison to the danger which results from the unbelief—the unconcern and apathy with which the former is viewed. It is in vain to disguise that the minds of a great mass of our manufacturing and labouring population are poisoned to a vast extent, & to an alarming degree. Unless strong & efficient remedies are applied, the most dangerous consequences must follow. Can it be otherwise? Innumerable societies are organized. Plans of evil are daily hatched. Constant communications are kept up amongst the advocates for physical force, Universal Suffrage, and the abettors of Revolution. Secret oaths are administered to multitudes, who openly declare that the day of retribution (that is of destruction, proscription and blood) is near at hand. Hunts and Carliles brow-beat our Judges, ridicule and defy our laws. The throne is insulted and threatened. All that are honorable are denounced as fit objects for vengeance. The wealth of the rich is held up as lawful prey. Every thing social is attempted to be undermined. All that is sacred is villified—all that is holy, blasphemed. The oracles of the living God are declared to be forgeries and lies—Our Redeemer is stigmatized as an impostor—our sacred religion a cheat. The usual consequences follow these dreadful ...cimens. The red Cap of liberty is raised—the flag of Death unfurled—the Marsellois Hymn chanted—the Age of Reason proclaimed. What do we want more? —the goddess and her guillotine permanent in London, or perambulating the country, and calling at the lowly cottage or the lofty palace in its way. This completes the hideous picture. The transition is easy, and the consequences sure.

The picture is not overcharged—I wish not to conjure up vain fears, nor depict imaginary calamities, but the mind must be uninformed, and the soul dead to every faculty of reflection, or observation, who does not see the gloomy tempest that is fast gathering over this land. Let your Grace awake from your security and error. Brace your nerves for the event—throw off the trammels of party. See only your country's danger. Avoid the chilling policy that courts the destroyer. Like your ancestors stand forward in defence of the throne and the altar. A terrible responsibility lies on your head. You are the guardian of the public peace in this county. Around you and at your door the plot thickens. It will strike like lightning. The standards of Universal Suffrage and Rebellion are ready to be unfurled. On your head, as their Lord Lieutenant, will the loyal population of Lanarkshire charge the evils that may happen, and the destruction that may ensue should you persevere in that line of conduct you seem to have espoused.

I am, &c.
A BRITISH SUBJECT.

Glasgow, Oct. 22, 1819.

A German Journal, (the Poliez Fama) states, that in 1512 four persons were arrested and executed, in a city in the north of Germany, having been convicted of robbing 631 churches, and committing 70 murders. Unfortunately previous to their arrest, the Judges, deceived by probabilities and perjured witnesses, had condemned and executed, as guilty of the above crimes, 119 persons; viz 3 priests, 18 sacristans, 80 men and 18 women! Assuredly, adds the Journalist, had the institution of the jury existed at that period, the judges would not have had to reproach themselves with these 119 judicial murders.

The immense establishment of Viscount de Solages, proprietor of the coal mines at Carmeaux, was destroyed by fire between the 27th and 28th of Oct. last, and the property consumed is estimated at from 150,000, to 200,000 francs.

On the 8th of Nov. a fire took place at Mr. Severn's, a sugar baker, in Whitechapel, London. About five o'clock, a large brick wall suddenly fell down, and crushed many persons. The pecuniary loss is estimated at £300,000.

A fire broke out on the 13th of Oct. on the mountains, near Xerer de la Frontera, France, traversing the country for the space of five leagues, and destroying all kinds of grain in its terrific course. It is stated that 23 persons have fallen victims to its violence, and that eighty others have been severely burned. Three hundred and sixty-eight horses and mules have been destroyed, and 136 severely injured; 474 cows, sheep and goats have also fallen victims.

Prince Oscar, of Sweden, has been installed chancellor of the University of Upsal.

When the French quitted Moscow, there were only 16,000 inhabitants. In the Winter of 1817 and 1818, the population amounted to 312,000, including 21,000 military.

There are printed in London sixty-three different newspapers; one hundred and twenty in the several counties of England and Wales, exclusive of Middlesex; and twenty-eight in Scotland; making together a total of two hundred and eleven public journals published in England. In Ireland they have about one third of the above number.

A large sparrow hawk was taken last week on the brow of Lansdown in the following novel manner. Some young gentlemen of the Grammar School at Bath, were amusing themselves with flying a paper kite, made in imitation of a large bird, which the hawk was soon observed gradually to approach; and after having made a few circuits round the kite, the bird suddenly elevated itself to a considerable height, and then pounced down upon it. The Kite instantly fell to the ground with the bird upon it when it was perceived that the hawk had entangled its claws in the string, and the Scholars can to capture it, which they effected, but not before their hands were much lacerated. The hawk is now kept in the garden on Sion hill.

Letters from Jamaica, dated Sept. 2, state, that the yellow fever has been severely felt in that Island. The troops in particular have suffered much. A few days previous to the date of the letter, Col. Hill, of the 50th Reg. the oldest person in the corps and who had been forty-seven years in it, fell a sacrifice to his humanity. It is said that it arose from the men refusing to act as nurses to their comrades in the hospital; for all those who had done so had invariably died. After some pause four privates of the grenadiers offered their services, which were of course accepted. Two of them in a short time became victims to the dreadful effects of the pestilence, when the other two instantly withdrew their assistance. This hopeless state of things did not long remain, for Col. Hill exclaimed, "Then, my men, we must change our Coats; since I cannot find a man in my regiment to attend a sick soldier, I must do it myself." Many days did not elapse ere this noble minded officer was himself attacked with the same dreadful malady, which terminated in his death.

FROM THE UNITED STATES.

BRITISH MONOPOLY

A letter has been published in the Journal at Providence from a gentleman in Manchester, England, wherein it is stated, that a meeting was holden at the Crown and Anchor Inn London, on the 28th May last, Sir Robert Peele at its head, with the professed object of raising a fund to assist distressed cotton manufacturers of England, but with the intention of raising a fund and converting measures to destroy the American manufactures in their infancy. The plan is to sink £300,000 sterling, to be raised by subscription, and paid in annual instalments of 20 per cent.—In the mean time government is to advance exchequer bills at 90 days, renewable. The directors are to reside at Manchester, and for the present it is understood that two agents are to be sent out to each of your principal cities, who are to open ware-houses in their own names, and are to be furnished with goods from hence, of such quality and patterns only, are now made in America. These goods are to be sold weekly, a little lower than the American manufacturer can possibly make them. It is expected that this method will bring down the bulk of American manufactured goods to the same level; and with this capital, a business of this kind may be carried on for three years, and by the end of that time the destruction of your manufacturing establishments is inevitable.

Up to the 21st June, only 24 days after the original meeting at the Crown and Anchor, the amount subscribed was £75,000. Of this Sir Robert Peele, P. Marsland and T. Holdsworth subscribed £5000 sterling. There was no name on the list less than £100 sterling.

FROM LOWER-CANADA.

Views of the United States to the North-West.

Early in the present Session of Congress a call upon the Executive was made by the House of Representatives for a statement of the expenditure which had been incurred by the Military expedition up the Missouri.

On the 3d inst. the Committee on Military affairs laid before the House a variety of papers, which had been in consequence obtained from the different departments.

By these papers, extracts of which are inserted below, it appears that the expenditure has been sixty-four thousand two hundred and twenty-six dollars more than the troops would have cost in the stations from which they were removed: the whole force of the Missouri and Mississippi expeditions is given, and the objects in view fully developed.

These appear to be the extension of the influence of the United States over the North-western Indians, and the destruction of the Canada and Hudson Bay Fur Trades.

The contemplated means are the establishment of strong military posts on the head waters of the Mississippi and Missouri, distributing presents to the Indians, encouraging and protecting American trading companies; and, with a view of cutting off the communication in case of war between the Indians and Canada, the erection of a strong fort at Sault Ste. Marie, in a position to command the water communication between Lake Huron and Lake Superior.

No one has a right to complain that others make a legitimate use of any advantages which they possess. The operations of the United States are confined within their own boundaries. We may however be permitted to regret their advantages, and that corresponding exertions are not always made on our side to prevent any injurious consequences which might be obviated.

The United States have been singularly fortunate in aggrandising themselves at the expence of Canada. A few persecuted enthusiasts and convicts were thrown on the comparatively barren shores of the Atlantic, long after the first settlements were made in this country; they have risen to a nation of Ten Millions of souls, two millions and a half of which inhabit the rich and fertile countries on the Lakes, the Ohio, the Missippi & the Missouri, all of which were explored, and long possessed by the Government of Canada. Having secured these countries they are now endeavoring to shut us from all communication beyond Lake Huron.

The British Hudson Bay and North-West Companies are quarrelling about the Fur Trade. The Americans, as is usually the case on such occasions, are going to take it for themselves, and kindly, no doubt, terminate their quarrels, and relieve this province from a branch of trade, forming one of its chief exports, which many of us have long believed to be disadvantageous. The United States perhaps have not yet made the discovery that a legitimate employment of capital which proves advantageous to individuals, may be disadvantageous to the community.

"Summary of the movements which will be made by the troops composing the Missouri and Mississippi expeditions, in the course of the ensuing season, and the manner in which it is proposed to employ them.

It is proposed to move the rifle regiment from the Council Bluffs to the Mandan villages and to erect barracks there properly defended, for five hundred men.

To remove some of the principal obstructions to the navigation of the Missouri river, such as planters, sawyers and rafts; this work may be accomplished by the troops on the Missouri in the course of three winters.

To open a road from Charlton, in the Missouri Territory, to the Council Bluffs, and thence to the Mandan villages.

To open a road from the Council Bluffs to the post at the mouth at St. Peter's, on the Mississippi.

To improve the navigation on the Ouisconsin and Fox rivers, and connect them by a canal, or good road, in order to facilitate the communication between Fort Howard, at Green Bay, and Prairie du Chien, on the Mississippi; those rivers are navigable for batteaux, within one mile of each other."

(EXTRACT)

"Letter from the Secretary of War to the Chairman of the Military Committee.

Department of War,
29th December, 1819.

"Trade and presents, accompanied by talks calculated for the purpose, are among the most powerful means to control the actions of savages; and, so long as they were wielded by a foreign hand, our frontiers must ever be exposed to the calamity of Indian warfare. By the treaty of 1794, Great Britain obtained the right of trade & intercourse with the Indians residing on our territory; which gave her a monopoly of the trade with the various tribes on the Lakes, the Mississippi, & Missouri, & a decided control over all their measures. The effects of this ascendancy over them must be remembered and lamented, so long as the history of the late war shall be perused. The most distressing occurrences, and the greatest disasters of that period may be distinctly traced to it. This right of intercourse and trade with the Indians which has proved to us so pernicious, terminated in the war, and was not renewed by the treaty of Ghent; and, in the year 1816, Congress passed a law, which authorised the President to prohibit foreigners from trading with the Indians residing within our limits, and instructions have been given under the act, to prevent such trade; but it is obvious that the act and instructions to Indian agents can have but little efficacy to remedy the evil. Without a military force, properly distributed, the trade would still be continued, and, even, if it were prevented, that which is more pernicious would still remain—Indian talks at the British posts, accompanied with a profuse distribution of presents.

This intercourse is the great source of danger to our peace; and until it is stopped, our frontier cannot be safe. It is estimated that upwards of three thousand Indians, from our side of the lakes, visited Malden and Drummond's island, the last year; and that, at the latter place alone, presents were distributed to the amount of ninety-five thousand dollars. It is desirable that this intercourse should terminate by the act of the British government; and it is believed that it has been continued by its agents in Canada, rather in consequence of the practice before the late war, under the treaty of 1793, than by the direct sanction and authority of that government. Its attention has, however, been called to it, through the proper department; and, as it is wholly inconsistent with the friendly relations between the two countries, it is hoped that it will not be permitted in future. The occupation of the contemplated posts, will in the mean time, put into our hand the power to correct the evil. The post on the lake will enable the government not only to check effectually all trade with foreigners in that quarter, but also to restrain the Indians from passing our limits. On that side the remedy will be complete. On the Mississippi and the Missouri, the posts at St. Peter's and Mandan village, are well selected for the same purpose. From the Lake of the Woods, westwardly, the 49th parallel of latitude is the boundary established by the late convention between the U. States and the British possessions. The Hudson Bay and the North-West Companies have several posts and trading establishments, which are believed to be much to the south of this line, and consequently, within our territory. When the boundary is ascertained and marked, the policy of the act of the 29th April, 1816, already referred to, may by means of these posts, be effectually enforced; and in that quarter, as well as on the side of the lakes, we shall have the power to exclude foreigners, from trade and intercourse with the Indians residing within our limits. The facility of communication, by the Mississippi and Missouri, with our posts on those rivers, is so much greater than that between Hudson Bay or Montreal, (particularly without passing through our territory,) and the British posts north of ours, that our ascendancy over the Indians of those districts, both as to trade and power, ought, with judicious measures on our part to be complete."

was further stated, that in the distribution of the Legislative grant the sum forty pounds had been appropriated agricultural prizes for the district of lifax, and that the season was now at nd to adjudge these to such members the Provincial Society, as had made requisite exertions. To determine merit of the respective claims that ght be given in, a Committee of five s nominated to act as Inspectors and ges, viz.

Henry Yeoman, Esq.
James Foreman, Esq.
Dr. Wm. B. Almon,
John Albro, Esq.
Robert Hartshorne, Esq.

At this stage of the business Judge Stewart complimented the gentlemen present on the fullness and respectability of the meeting. We were now a strong phalanx all united heart and hand in the prosperity of the country, and we must command success. Last year at this time and in this place he was more fearful of the issue, and expressed a hope that the zeal then manifested might not end in smoke. Now he was certain of the result, and congratulated the country on its great progress. In the performance of his official duty, he had occasion to traverse the Province in all directions; and he could remark a rapid improvement both in the East and West, and in the North and South. The farmer was redoubling his efforts, and the face of the country was changing under his hands—all which could justly be attributed to his Lordship & to that gentleman (pointing to Mr. Young,) who had both taken such a warm and lively interest in the advancement of our agriculture.

The Earl of Dalhousie replied, that in his journeys through the Province he had also remarked a much better spirit very widely diffused. He now considered the agriculture of this Province as secure from all danger, whoever might be Governor; and although he must leave us, he would always exercise a watchful care over our interests. He was happy to inform the meeting, that his successor, Sir James Kempt, would prove equally warm and sincere as himself in the promotion of our Rural affairs; and while this Society existed and was so liberally and respectably supported, he entertained no doubt of our complete success.

Judge Haliburton proposed that the Society, which had been supported by such a liberal subscription & which embraced so great a number, no less than two hundred and sixty, should secure its own stability by an active vigilance over its funds. As the appointments of the day had substituted a new Treasurer in room of the old, he would submit to the consideration of the meeting whether it was not expedient to appoint a Committee of Accounts to examine the intromissions, and to strike the balance previous to its being paid over to the new officer. In conformity to this motion,

The Hon. John Black,
The Hon. H. N. Binney, and
H. H. Cogswell, Esq.

were nominated to investigate the accounts of Wm. Lawson, Esq. the acting Treasurer for the past year.

Judge Haliburton proceeded to observe, that the thanks of the Society were justly due to Mr. Lawson, for his gratuitous services as Acting Treasurer; and these were accordingly conveyed to him from the chair.

Rufus Fairbanks, Esq. begged leave to say, that he had constructed a plough and triangular harrow, which he had brought to the door of the Hall for the inspection of the members, and which he considered as peculiarly fitted for breaking up strong and unsubdued land.

Judge Stewart wished that the thanks of the Society should be given to Mr. Fairbanks, not only for this instance of his attention to our agricultural interests, but for his many past services to their behalf.

Robert Hartshorne, Esq. remarked, that a patent iron plough had attracted much notice in the States; that he held in his hand an advertisement, describing its qualities, and mentioning the place where it could be procured; and he wished, therefore, that one should be imported from New-York, as a pattern for the use of the Province. The Secretary was then ordered to commission this plough, and to pay the same from the funds of the Society.

The meeting then proceeded to take into consideration the propriety of framing Bye-laws for the internal regulation of its officers and members, and elected for this purpose,

S. H. Robie, Esq.
S. G. W. Archibald, Esq. and
Wm. Lawson, Esq.

It was lastly resolved, that the annual subscriptions due by the members, should be paid into the hands of the Treasurer, on or before the 25th instant, and that a notice to that effect should be inserted in the new-papers.

The Island of Cuba—is 700 miles in length, and 120 in breadth. It has a superficial content of 49,000 square miles, which is equal to the size of England and Wales put together. It lies in the mouth of the gulf of Mexico, stretching from east to west. A range of mountains runs through it in the same direction. Although situated within the tropics, the breezes from the sea and height of the mountains give it a healthy climate, and make it a very delightful residence.

SUBTERRANEOUS GARDEN.

A curious account of a subterranean garden formed at the bottom of Percy Main Pitt, Newcastle, by the furnace keeper, was communicated at the last quarterly meeting of the Caledonian horticultural society. The plants are formed in the bottom of the mine, by the light and radiant heat of an open stove, constantly maintained for the sake of ventilation. The same letter communicated an account of an extensive natural hot bed, near Dudley, Staffordshire, which is heated by means of the slow combustion of coal at some depth below the surface—From this natural hot bed, a gardener raises annually, crops of different kinds of culinary vegetables, which are earlier by some weeks than those in surrounding gardens.—*Lon. Provincial Agricultural Society.

A general meeting of the Society took place this day in Mason's Hall according to advertisement, and was graced by a very full and respectable assembly. The number of gentlemen who came forward to countenance the measures and give them their support was a demonstrative proof, that the solicitude and zeal which have lately displayed themselves are still on the increase, and that the metropolis shall not be awanting to further the agricultural advancement of the province. There is unquestionably no spectacle more grateful and pleasing to the benevolent mind, than the contemplation of a body of men, animated and informed by one common impulse, and that impulse allied to the general weal. It dignifies human nature; it recalls the devotedness of the ancients to country, and thus awakens classic recollections; it flings over the grasping and commercial spirit of present times the fascinating veil of philanthropy.—All the kingdoms of modern Europe are distinguished, more or less, by such exalted institutions; and the greater their number, the more powerful and illustrious the nation. The Provincial Agricultural Society, now constituted by charter and endowed by the Legislature, may in a certain sense be considered as the first fruits of that love of country, which will gradually enlighten and purify the public sentiment. It is an association, not of men prone after private emolument; not seeking the gratification of any vulgar pleasure; not united by political faction; not influenced by the fervours of the religious spirit; not in short drawn together by any of the common ties and sympathies which usually bind mankind into clubs and fraternities: but it is a society of all ranks, classes and denominations, in the capital, whose seal is public virtue, and whose bond of union is the prosperity of Nova Scotia. It may be viewed as an object of proud gratulation; since it is supported equally by private bounty and by Legislative munificence; and since its effects for seven years, during which it will direct and superintend the labours of the husbandman, can now be fairly tried, and without doubt, at the conclusion of that period, will be justly estimated.

The business was opened by the Secretary, who stated, that the Agricultural Committee, in fulfilment of the trust reposed in them, had applied to the Legislature for a Charter; that it had now received the great seal of the Province, and was this day presented to them for inspection. As the society now acted as a corporate Body, it was proper that they should appoint their Officers: and particularly that the President should be chosen, to take the chair on the present occasion. He concluded with proposing that the Governor General, the Right Honorable the Earl of Dalhousie, should fill that important station.

His Lordship in reply stated, that he would willingly accept the office; but that he must claim the liberty of transferring it, on his departure for Canada, to his successor.

The Hon. the Chief Justice was then named as Vice President, though in his absence—which was confirmed by the Society.

Mr. Archibald next rose and mentioned, that the gentleman, who had all along conducted the affairs of that Society as Secretary, should be appointed under the charter to the joint office of Secretary and Treasurer. Some conversation took place among the members about the incompatibility of uniting these two offices in one and the same person; and it was argued that the Act of Incorporation discountenanced such a measure. By reference, however, to the Act, it was found that a total silence obtained on this head; and therefore the Society might proceed to the double appointment if thought to be a matter of expediency. The noble President then proposed Mr. Young as the Secretary of the Society for the ensuing year—which being assented to, he further proposed him as the Treasurer of the Society—to which he was unanimously elected.

As the Act of the Legislature, by which the Society was incorporated, had fixed the signing of the Letters Patent as the period in which the twenty Directors formerly chosen should come into power, the following gentlemen were confirmed in that important office:

The Hon. M. Wallace,	Hon. R. J. Uniacke,
R. Haliburton,	Peter M'Nab, Esqr.
James Stewart,	John Pryor, Esqrs.
Sol. Gen. S. B. Robie, Esq.	Jonas Fraser, Esq.

was further stated, that in the distribution of the Legislative grant the sum forty pounds had been appropriated agricultural prizes for the district of lifax, and that the season was now at nd to adjudge these to such members the Provincial Society, as had made requisite exertions. To determine merit of the respective claims that ght be given in, a Committee of five s nominated to act as Inspectors and ges, viz.

Henry Yeoman, Esq.
James Foreman, Esq.
Dr. Wm. B. Almon,
John Albro, Esq.
Robert Hartshorne, Esq.

At this stage of the business Judge Stewart complimented the gentlemen present on the fullness and respectability of the meeting. We were now a strong phalanx all united heart and hand in the prosperity of the country, and we must command success. Last year at this time and in this place he was more fearful of the issue, and expressed a hope that the zeal then manifested might not end in smoke. Now he was certain of the result, and congratulated the country on its great progress. In the performance of his official duty, he had occasion to traverse the Province in all directions; and he could remark a rapid improvement both in the East and West, and in the North and South. The farmer was redoubling his efforts, and the face of the country was changing under his hands—all which could justly be attributed to his Lordship & to that gentleman (pointing to Mr. Young,) who had both taken such a warm and lively interest in the advancement of our agriculture.

The Earl of Dalhousie replied, that in his journeys through the Province he had also remarked a much better spirit very widely diffused. He now considered the agriculture of this Province as secure from all danger, whoever might be Governor; and although he must leave us, he would always exercise a watchful care over our interests. He was happy to inform the meeting, that his successor, Sir James Kempt, would prove equally warm and sincere as himself in the promotion of our Rural affairs; and while this Society existed and was so liberally and respectably supported, he entertained no doubt of our complete success.

Judge Haliburton proposed that the Society, which had been supported by such a liberal subscription & which embraced so great a number, no less than two hundred and sixty, should secure its own stability by an active vigilance over its funds. As the appointments of the day had substituted a new Treasurer in room of the old, he would submit to the consideration of the meeting whether it was not expedient to appoint a Committee of Accounts to examine the intromissions, and to strike the balance previous to its being paid over to the new officer. In conformity to this motion,

The Hon. John Black,
The Hon. H. N. Binney, and
H. H. Cogswell, Esq.

were nominated to investigate the accounts of Wm. Lawson, Esq. the acting Treasurer for the past year.

Judge Haliburton proceeded to observe, that the thanks of the Society were justly due to Mr. Lawson, for his gratuitous services as Acting Treasurer; and these were accordingly conveyed to him from the chair.

Rufus Fairbanks, Esq. begged leave to say, that he had constructed a plough and triangular harrow, which he had brought to the door of the Hall for the inspection of the members, and which he considered as peculiarly fitted for breaking up strong and unsubdued land.

Judge Stewart wished that the thanks of the Society should be given to Mr. Fairbanks, not only for this instance of his attention to our agricultural interests, but for his many past services to their behalf.

Robert Hartshorne, Esq. remarked, that a patent iron plough had attracted much notice in the States; that he held in his hand an advertisement, describing its qualities, and mentioning the place where it could be procured; and he wished, therefore, that one should be imported from New-York, as a pattern for the use of the Province. The Secretary was then ordered to commission this plough, and to pay the same from the funds of the Society.

The meeting then proceeded to take into consideration the propriety of framing Bye-laws for the internal regulation of its officers and members, and elected for this purpose,

S. H. Robie, Esq.
S. G. W. Archibald, Esq. and
Wm. Lawson, Esq.

It was lastly resolved, that the annual subscriptions due by the members, should be paid into the hands of the Treasurer, on or before the 25th instant, and that a notice to that effect should be inserted in the new-papers.

The Island of Cuba—is 700 miles in length, and 120 in breadth. It has a superficial content of 49,000 square miles, which is equal to the size of England and Wales put together. It lies in the mouth of the gulf of Mexico, stretching from east to west. A range of mountains runs through it in the same direction. Although situated within the tropics, the breezes from the sea and height of the mountains give it a healthy climate, and make it a very delightful residence.

SUBTERRANEOUS GARDEN.

A curious account of a subterranean garden formed at the bottom of Percy Main Pitt, Newcastle, by the furnace keeper, was communicated at the last quarterly meeting of the Caledonian horticultural society. The plants are formed in the bottom of the mine, by the light and radiant heat of an open stove, constantly maintained for the sake of ventilation. The same letter communicated an account of an extensive natural hot bed, near Dudley, Staffordshire, which is heated by means of the slow combustion of coal at some depth below the surface—From this natural hot bed, a gardener raises annually, crops of different kinds of culinary vegetables, which are earlier by some weeks than those in surrounding gardens.—*Lon. On the lower end the troops have advanced about 40 miles east of the Pearl rives, and are now about 140 miles from each other. By far the most difficult part of the work is completed, and it is expected they will finish the whole with great ease during the present winter.

From Spain.—The advices from Cadiz are to the 1st of Decepber. The expeditions continued in preparation. One to carry 5000 troops to Morillo, & another to take from 10 to 1 000 troops against Buenos Ayres.—The naval commissioners were chartering vessels to convey them.

LONDON, Dec. 25.

Cobbett has attempted a reconciliation with sir Francis Burdett; but the baronet has repelled the overture with indignation. He has re-taken his residence at Botley, from whence he continues to write for his "Weekly Political Register," which is now one of the two penny publications of the day. On his arrival in London to attend a meeting, he was arrested for an old debt, but found bail. We have received a copy of his Register of Dec. 24, which is entirely filled with articles respecting himself.

MANCHESTER, Dec. 16.

Last night Mr. Nardin, with a number of assistants, and a troop of lancers, arrested Jame . Brooks, Richard Booth, George Hall, and several others of the radical committee, at Union Hall, in the midst of their deliberations. They have all undergone an examination, and been committed for a misdemeanor, for want of bail. All their papers were taken with them.

LONDON, Dec. 23.

The proceedings of the house of commons last night, respecting the financial state of the country, were highly important. Up to last Saturday the revenue received amounted to within £150,000 of the preceding year, which was a very prosperous one; and that since the close of the last quarter, the 10th of October, both the customs and excise have greatly improved. It is also most gratifying to learn from such high authority, that the transfer of capital from this country to France, in consequence of the alarm excited by the radical commotions, is by no means large, nor likely to be permanently invested. Of the £5,000,000 to be paid to the bank by the 5th of April, £1,200,000 has been discharged, and the liquidation of the remainder is provided for. Upon the whole, a most cheering picture was drawn of our internal situation in respect to revenue. The general prosperity, he ably showed from a comparative statement of the consumption of exciseable commodities (the comforts of life,) was not affected by the local distresses, and the prospects of the country were not darkened by any cloud which should excite serious apprehension.—Courier.

We received last night the Paris Journals of Sunday. They contain the address of the chamber of deputies, in reply to the royal speech, (which was presented to the king on Saturday last,) and his majesty's reply, in which he expresses in decided terms, his feelings of satisfaction at the sentiments of confidence and fidelity it conveys to the throne.

It is with much pleasure we lay before our readers the following extract of a private letter from Liverpool received this morning.

"I have before noticed the gratifying action which has taken place in the commercial interests; and every day's rival from the principal ports confirm.

In Liverpool there is as much business doing in the Customs' department ever was known, taking it on a gr al average, with every likelihood of a continuance of it; but such a commercial influx cannot be expected as that which took place last year, when trade made one of the most unnatural efforts ever recollected; and which probably, will never again occur.

"It has been asserted that American vessels frequently leave Liverpool, some of them without a single bale on board of manufactured goods. But this if true, must refer to some of the vessels peculiarly appropriated to the conveyance of passengers; at present, the fact is that the demand for ships is so increased that several British vessels have actually been chartered for the United States. The arrivals within the last few days, are from Canada, the Brazils, the United States and the East Indies; and on the whole, there is every prospect of a revival of trade, and with it, of course, a demand for our manufactures."

The bill for abrogating the right of traverse in cases of misdemeanor, received last night the royal assent. It has already received the general approbation of Parliament and of the country.

The newspaper Stamp Duties Bill was read a first time last night in the House of Lords. The second reading is fixed for Monday.

A very considerable sensation has been produced by the appearance of Mr. Heathfield's pamphlet, proposing to pay off one half the National Debt by an assessment of 15 per cent. on the capital of all property, a measure which would permit the repeal of twenty million of taxes. The pamphlet has been freely circulated, at the author's expence, among members of Parliament and other public persons: and hence it has been supposed to be a scheme of the Government. We believe, however, Ministers have nothing to do with the project.—Yet, every one feels that the proposed measure is so wise, so necessary, and would be so effectual, that the consideration of it excites the most lively interest. It would relieve the poor by lightening the load of taxation; it would deprive seditious demagogues of power; and it would restore general tranquility, by depriving vice and idleness of pretences, while it would enable virtuous industry to obtain ample and consolatory reward.

The last accounts from St. Helena are to the last of October. Bonaparte was in good health, and in safe keeping. His French physician and Catholic priest had arrived there from England, and joined his household. The guard duty performed by the squadron which surrounds the island was extremely harrassing to the crews of the ships, and had occasioned much sickness among them. Provisions were scarce, & consequently dear there. The price of a goose was a guinea, and fowls a dollar and a half a piece. Mr. Stokoe, the medical attendant on Bonaparte, had been tried by a Court Martial, and convicted on ten charges of misconduct, and sentenced to be dismissed the King's service. He had held communications with Bonaparte otherwise than in his professional capacity, & spoke of Bonaparte as "Napoleon," and "the Patient," and not as "General Bonaparte."—He summoned Count Bertrand and General Montholon, as witnesses in his favor, but they refused to obey the summons.

In the house of commons, on the 20th of November, Mr. Grenfell asked, whether any, and what provision, had been made by government for the payment of the five millions, that had been advanced by the bank of England, and which was soon to be paid.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in reply, said, the House might recollect his having stated last session, that arrangements were to be made for the repayment of this sum; but as the bank had on another occasion declined to accommodate the government it was not to be expected that the money could be speedily paid. He was happy, however, now to state, that a considerable sum had been paid to the bank, and that arrangements, with which the directors were perfectly satisfied, had been made for paying the remainder. There was no reason to suppose that any encroachment would be made on the plan adopted by Parliament for the resumption of cash pay ments by the bank.

SIX thousand of the out pensioners have not appeared to enroll themselves; in consequence of which, they will lose their pensions.

Accounts from Brussels, of Nov. 25, state, that a fire broke out on that day, in the apartment of Madame Montholon, which consumed all her effects. She had scarcely time to save herself and her child; the anti-chamber being in a blaze at the time she passed through it.

FROM THE UNITED STATES.

The late Gale.—In noticing the severe gale of the 17th instant, the Albany Argus observes—"The devastation by the tempest has not been confined to the seaboard. The damage sustained in the interior, demolition of buildings, destruction of fruit and forest trees, the loss of cattle, and the prostration of fences, has been incalculably great. On the route from Benningt on to Manchester, in Vermont, we are informed by a traveller, there is scarcely a farm on which some buildings have not been blown down, unroofed or partially damaged. In one case, in Shaftsbury, the family having fled to the cellar for safety, the house blew down, and the chimney fell through into the cellar, breaking all the sleepers except one or two over that part to which the family had retreated. They were afterwards dug out by the neighbors, wholly unhurt. In Rupert many of the fine maple orchards which have excited the admiration of travellers were postrated; and the damage in that town alone is estimated at 50,000 dollars In Pittstown, Hoosick, New-Lebanon, &c. many buildings were blown down or unroofed; and the roads in all direction have been obstructed by drifts of snow."

CALCUTTA, Aug. 26.

We observe various paragraphs, which continue to attest the venomous nature of the snakes at New South Wales and Van Diemen's Land. A pilot at Port Dalrymple having been accidentally bitten by one, became delirious, although every means of cure that humanity could suggest were immediately restored to, and he continued in that state, raving terribly at times, so that little hope was entertained of his recovery. In another instance the issue was more fortunate in consequence of the application of native skill, as we find stated in the following paragraph.

From a person, in whose veracity we place the greatest reliance, we learn that a month ago, a private of the Royal Veteran Company was bit by a snake in a pasturage adjoining Liverpool, where he was quartered. Struck with instant horror, and the certainty of a speedy dissolution, the sufferer fell instantly into a state of hopelessness and almost stupor; his body began to swell in a few minutes, and the first of his comrades who visited him, gave him over as lost. In the barrack there happened at the time to be an old native man, who immediately repaired to his assistance.—From a bark he stripped a few shreds, and combining them into a strong ligature, applied it a little above the affected part, the bite being above the ancle. He applied the ligature with such excessive strictness, that the patient supposed his leg had been taken off. This done, the native proceeded in rubbing the leg downwards with no less violence for some minutes; and then taking away with the knife only as much of the skin as the punctures had occasioned, he applied his lips to the wounded part, and took away by suction a quantity of coagulated matter, then pronounced the cure, desiring the regenerated patient to go to his barrack, and keep himself quiet. It proved the case; for the man now lives; and in gratitude to his black physician gave him all he possessed of, being to the value of about £5 sterling.

"Suez.—Two more travellers in the paths of Belzoni, have made their appearance in Egypt, the one a Mr. Bankes, an English gentleman, and the other a Chevalier Ferdini, who has already visited Mount Sinai, and the Coptic monasteries in the vicinity of Tor The fact of Mr. Belzoni being still alive, must rejoice every lover of scientific research, and the more so when we consider, that he will now have an opportunity of correcting the errors respecting the antiquities of Egypt, into which we have been led by a co-temporary traveller.

"On the arrival of the Jessy, at Suez the money at Cairo was about 150, and he increased to upwards of 200 some days prior to her departure.

"Sir Miles and lady Nightingale have altered their journey through Egypt, and left Alexandria some time in April, for Malta."

"Wahabees.—Though we find that the Wahabee chief Abdallah, and some of his officers were beheaded at Constantinople in December last, and that another victory had also been gained over them, in which the chieftain who succeeded Abdallah was slain, yet we find their measures still vigorous and their courage still unshaken. The daughter of a former chief, has now the supreme command, and as she is a woman of extraordinary talents, she has infused into her followers an enthusiasm, that will again lead them to victory."

"Cairo.—The accounts from this place to the early part of May, mention that the plague had been raging therewith great violence, our travellers from Bombay, were detained some weeks by it but had left it for Alexandria, some days before the Jessy left Suez."

"Kutch.—For several years past this devoted country has been visited both by famine & pestilence, which, added to intestine broils, have very much thinned its population. Twenty years ago, with the exception of the boatmen, and the Bhattias, there was not a native of Kutch to be seen; but now they have commenced agriculturalists, and form a very prominent portion of the inhabitants of Bombay, and we have but little doubt but this last dreadful visitation, will induce many more to emigrate, should not the fostering hand of the British Government not amply afford present aid, but future instruction in pointing out to them, the natural resources of their country, now useless for want of energy in the inhabitants. We allude to its iron and coal mines; some small quantity of the former is occasionally brought to Bombay, and specimens of coal found on the surface, lead us to suppose that this substance might be found of good quality. This is by no means a visionary speculation, for it is a well known fact, that the price of fire wood, and consequently all other kinds of wood have been annually increasing."

"We have been favored with some notices respecting the Chevalier Ferdini mentioned in a former paragraph.

"This traveller departed from Italy in the autumn of 1817, and proceeding to Egypt was the second who entered into the Pyramid of Cephrenes, and accompanied Lord Belmore into Nubia. He has also travelled to Idumea, Philistia, Judea, Samaria, Galilee, Phenicia, Syria, and Mesopotamia. After having performed a very dangerous journey, and visited the ruins of Thebes, Memphis Ascalon, Tyre, Sidon, Antioch, and Jerusalem, he reached Balbec and Palmyra.

"Returning into Egypt he crossed the Red-Sea, and visited Mounts Horeb and Sinai.

"He now meditates proceeding to Babylon, and from thence through Persia into India."

Private accounts from Trincomalee inform us of the following melancholy occurrence. A lieutenant Rushworth, belonging to one of His Majesty's ships lying there, had been on shore shooting, and considering a jackall that he had shot, to be quite dead, was employed in cutting off his tail, when the animal turned round and bit his foot severely through the boot. Disregarding the wound, he joined a shooting party on the following day, but, in the evening, his foot became exceedingly painful; however in the course of a few days more the pain subsided, and the wound was apparently healed. Some time after, Mr. R. was seized with a locked jaw, which proved fatal, and no doubts were entertained of its having been produced by the above wound. This is a striking instance of the dangers which strew the path of life, where none may be suspected to exist, and it may lead the contemplative mind to question the propriety of amusements, which depend on the infliction of cruelty on inferior animals, without aiming at the attainment of some

CALCUTTA, Sept. 1.

By a private letter received from Batavia, by the American ship Glide, we learn the confirmation of the fact which we announced a few days since, on the authority of letters from Penang, namely the expulsion of the Dutch from Palembang, by the Malays, with the loss of 117 men and two officers killed. The Malays had a battery of thirty pieces of cannon, which the Dutch attempted to storm three times, but were repulsed.

PORTLAND, Maine, Jan. 25.

The present January seems to be more in the old style than any for a number of years past. We have now our snow storms and our snow drifts, some too, of a respectable size and which would not suffer much by a comparison with those of 1802—and we are amused by the lively ringing of the sleigh bells, instead of our ears being offended with the hoarse rumbling of loaded waggons upon the frozen and rough ground. The roads are not yet very well broken, for into the country; we do not therefore experience the full benefit which the facility of traveling affords to business. But we soon expect to see the welcome sleighs of Coos, Vermont, and Canada rushing through our streets, loaded with the staples of their soil, and enriching themselves and our merchants by the exchange of commodities; then we shall bear some resemblance to the three or four never to be forgotten years, which preced d the embargo, when he who would work might, and he who did, was amply, and promptly paid; when to be an incumbent upon the town belonged only to him, whom accident and misfortune rendered unable to labor, or to him, who had lost all pride and moral feeling. We hope to see such times return, for that is the only golden age, which encourages industry, the mother of virtuous habits, by giving employment to all classes of society. Work is the best charity you can bestow upon the poor.

CALCUTTA, (E. I.) Sept. 8.

Mocha.—Private letters from this place mention that the whole of the sea-coast of Arabia is now under the control of the Pacha of Egypt; it does not appear however that he has assumed the government of any part of it, but has satisfied himself with making them pay all the expenses of his offensive operations, and levying an annual tribute of coffee.

POREBUNDER, June 17.

We yesterday experienced in this town and port, one of the most awful scenes in nature, that of a violent and destructive shock from an earthquake!

The weather was close and sultry, the thermometer ranging at 86, at sunset; and a scarce perceptible air, was sometimes felt in the southward.

Lieutenant L. and myself were taking an evening's walk on the ramparts of the fort, and had nearly gone all round, when at 40 minutes past 6, we observed to each other, 'how excessive close, and oppressive the atmosphere!' and five minutes afterwards, I heard a distant sound from the westward, not unlike that of a cannonade at sea; a thought had scarcely passed the mind, as to what could have given rise to it, when I felt a violent shock beneath my feet, and instantly exclaimed 'an earthquake!' then looking forward, saw the stone parapet, at two yards distance, violently bending in and out, with a quick wave-like motion, and with a vibration of about a foot: this appalling sight, extended as far as I could see, or about fifty yards in length and the whole height of the parapet; it was attended with a hissing, cracking noise.

Had the parapet been made of whalebone, and shook in anger by any power, less than nature, the agitation could not have been so great as that which we witnessed.

There was nothing appeared more surprising than that solid masonry should have received the pliability of the most elastic of all substances.

I thought it impossible that the works could stand, and expecting their immediate fall, instantly determined on descending as quick as possible, but as the rampart was a perpendicular height of seventeen feet, I was obliged to run back towards the nearest ramp, which was a flight of stone steps at the distance of 75 yards; Lieutenant L. followed. As we passed along, at a quick run, the sensation felt, was similar to that hazardous and disagreeable one, of running along an elevated and elastic plank, the ends alone of which are supported. I every instant expected to fall with the works, or be precipitated from them; but reaching the steps, ran down as fast as I could, each step apparently meeting the descending foot, which I sincerely believe it did, in reality, and the whole flight, was violently agitated. While passing down, I expected to be overwhelmed by the works, which were tottering my right shoulder, and were partly above my head.

Although the rampart and parapet are 40 feet thick, and 22 in height, yet this wall of masonry waved to and fro like a sea.

Fortunately the steps were broad; had they been narrow, as is frequently the case, it [illegible] was their without having been thrown [illegible] side, for as they joined the works, there were not only affected by their own motion, but also by that of the wall to which they were attached.

Arrived at the bottom of the flight of steps, we did not cease running, until we had got a sufficient length from the works to prevent their falling on us. On stopping, we were surprised to find that the works had not fallen, after having been agitated by so extraordinary, violent and sea like motion.

On entering my house, the servant informed me, that while making the bed in the upper apartment, he had been thrown down on the floor; recovering himself, he attempted to escape out of door, but before he could reach it, he was thrown down a second time; he then got up, and ran quickly into the open air.

I believe there are few houses throughout this large city, which have not been more or less injured, some have fallen and blocked up the streets in which they were situated.

The earth opened, and water issued from the cavity over an extensive piece of ground, in a plain, distant 14 miles hence.

The atmosphere to-day has been impregnated with a strong smell of sulphur; and there have been several other shocks between 10 A. M. and 2 P. M. which brought some old houses down, and violently shook the seats of those who were seated within doors, which caused them to run out of their houses; but these inferior alarms are not to be compared with yesterday's awful phenomenon.

It was observed that all animals were much frightened during the great shock; the dogs laid down on their bellies, and would not be moved.

There is nothing in nature more awful, than to see the proudest works of man, in an instant, vanishing, and becoming a heap of shapeless ruins.

June 18.

As doctor A. and myself, yesterday morning, at day break, were riding on the borders of a lake, we were alarmed by a strong smell of sulphur, and an appearance of smoke resting on the still waters; on the opposite side of the lake is a jungle, above and beyond which is a range of sand hills; we thought we saw on these, a fine thick flame, about three feet high, but the distance was too great to allow of our being positive. I am the more inclined to believe that what we saw was flame, as I am since informed, that at a place on the S. E. coast, distance hence 40 miles, the earth opened, and a flame issued from the cavity.

Dr. A. and myself experienced a pain and weakness in the knee joints imme-

As doctor A. and myself, yesterday morning, at day break, were riding on the borders of a lake, we were alarmed by a strong smell of sulphur, and an appearance of smoke resting on the still waters; on the opposite side of the lake is a jungle, above and beyond which is a range of sand hills; we thought we saw on these, a fine thick flame, about three feet high, but the distance was too great to allow of our being positive. I am the more inclined to believe that what we saw was flame, as I am since informed, that at a place on the S. E. coast, distance hence 40 miles, the earth opened, and a flame issued from the cavity.

Dr. A. and myself experienced a pain and weakness in the knee joints immedy after the shocks of the 17th; these essant feelings troubled us all that ning.

and sleep has left us—we allow one to be shut—but the other is on the h.

S. Myself and Dr. A. have just reed from a visit to the sand hills on ch we thought we saw flame, and od the shrubbery which was on them ch scorched, and divested of its vegeion.

RHOOJ, June 23.

The loss in lives has not been correctascertained. Bodies continue to be ng out of the ruins, and almost 1000 ve been already found; seven thouand houses have been overturned, and a w or more in the city left uninjured. Alough the whole of Kutch has suffered etty equally, in regard to loss of uses, the proportion of lives lost in fferent places, bears no affinity; perps Rhooj has lost as many as the whole Kutch put together. In Mondavie 6, and in Luckput 150 are said to have ffered.

As far as I have learnt, the sandy bed every dry river in Kutch, was filled a short space of time with a flood of water: these waters have the colour d taste of the soil from whence they ve ejected.

HALIFAX, Dec. 17.

We are led to hope, that another attempt will shortly be made, to bring forard the long contemplated and highly desirable business of the SHUBENACADIE CANAL. Several persons we are ld, of the first respectability in the mmunity, and who are zealously deous of promoting the interests of the own and Province, have taken the tter into serious consideration.—And y suggested, it into effect. It cannot be viewed as an important subject, all those who look forward to the forelfare and prosperity of the Town, have any consideration for the value their own property in it; which deds greatly upon the spirit and enterse of the wealthy inhabitants. Even most remote parts of the Province more or less, involved in the interest the Capital; and all who send their oduce this way to market, must feel nably its depression, or participate in advantages as a port of extensive comrce and opulence. We are not without hopes, from the very strong representions which have been made to Government on the subject; but, in the erim, it is requisite to put our own [illegible] to the wheel."

QUEBEC, Feb. 4.

On Tuesday morning, about eleven o'clock, a fire communicated from the kitchen of W. F. Scott, Esq. in Freemasons Hall, to the chimney. Mr. Scott was absent at the time. The fire existed no alarm until about twelve o'clock when the roof appeared to be on fire in two or three places. This was occasioned by a pretty strong westerly wind, which blew the sparks to the middle stack of chimnies, by which they were intercepted; when they fell between the interstices of the roof, there being no snow on the roof on the north side of the building. On the alarm being given by the fire-bell, an assemblage of all ranks, ecclesiastical, civil and military, together with several fire-engines, was speedily in active operation; and promptly arrested the menacing ravages of the merciless element, ere it had made any progress beyond the part of the roof where it first made its appearance. Some of the inmates, as four or five families occupied the building, during the tottering uncertainty of the result, sent off a great part of their furniture and other moveables; others packed up with the same view, in case it should be found expedient.

The garret floor of this very extensive building is occupied by the Printing-Office and bindery of Thomas Cary, jr & Co. the whole of which happily escaped uninjured, though in the most imminent danger. The whole neighbourhood indeed was in almost equal peril, as had that vast and elevated building been enveloped in flame, high as the wind was to the time, God knows where the ravages of the remorseless element might have terminated. The measures taken for staying the progress of the flames and preserving the property, were judiciously, orderly and actively conducted. To select objects for praise where it is [illegible] to all, might be invidious. Notwithstanding the severity of the weathers and severe enough it was, all evinced an equal disposition to be useful, and the greatest promptitude in their exertions. The building belongs to Mr. George Pozer, and we believe is uninsured. Insurance is made on part of the Printing property of T. Cary jr. & Co.

As we feel pretty deeply interested in the safety of the premises in question, Mr. Pozer will excuse us if we take the liberty to hold this accident up to him, and all other landlords, as a memento that neither beliers, good ladders, nor any other article necessary to the preservation of buildings and their contents, should be wanting in the hour of need.

We understand that the motives which led to the dissolution of our Parliament, which was to have met on the 29th instant, were considerations of the lateness and consequent necessary brevity of the period of the intended Session; added to the inconvenient season, at which the General Election must have been fixed, had the Parliament been suffered to die a natural death.—(Quebec Mercury.)

His Honor James Monk, Esquire President and Administrator of the Government of Lower Canada, has by a proclamation dated the 9th instant, dissolved the Provincial Parliament, which was to have met on the 29th instant, for the dispatch of business, and has directed the issue of writs for a new election on the 2d instant, returnable on the 11th April.—Kingston Chron.

Lieutenant Governor's Office,
York, 21st. Feb. 1820.

SIR,

It having been represented, that the Settlement Duty required by the Order in Council of the 14th of December last, is in many cases, from the difficulty of the ground and other circumstances, found too burthensome to the Settler, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, is pleased to direct, that the clearing of half the road, and cutting down without clearing a chain in depth from the road along the front of each Lot, shall be considered as part of the five acres per hundred required for the Settlement Duty.

The opening and maintaining Roads for the general benefit of the Settlers, is so important an object with His Majesty's Government that it is contemplated to make it a condition in all future Grants, that the Settlers shall be subject to [illegible] opening, and shall not be suffered to grow up to shade the Road.

I am also directed, to request you will be pleased to cause it to be understood by all persons who shall receive Grants of Fifty Acres, that they are not to expect Leases of the Crown or Clergy Reserves, until they shall actually have brought to cultivation two thirds, that is, Thirty five Acres of their Fifty.

I have the honor to be
Sir,
Your most obedient
Humble Servant

YORK, FEBRUARY 24, 1820.

We not Tuesday copied an article from a Montreal paper received after our previous publication, announcing the arrival in His Excellency the Lieut. Governor and family at Montreal on their way down to Quebec; we were not then aware that His Excellency had actually arrived here the evening before from Quebec, having only occupied forty-eight hours in his journey from Kingston to York.

A remarkably severe storm of thunder and lightning attended with rain and sleet, occurred between 10 and 12 o'clock last night. The flashes of lightning were as vivid and frequent, and the thunder as loud as is usual at any part of the Summer.

Our subscribers, will, we trust, excuse the late publication of the Gazette this week, as it arose from a desire to present them with the addresses of both Houses of Parliament in reply to His Excellency's Speech.

PARLIAMENT OF UPPER CANADA.

At half past two o'clock on Monday the 21st instant, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor opened the present Session of the Provincial Parliament with the following

SPEECH:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

The unmixed independence of our revered Sovereign continues unabated.

We have to be grateful for a continuance of His Royal Highness's paternal consideration, in the selection of the Earl of Dalhousie, to preside over His Majesty's North American Dominions.

Though the usual time of recess has not been completed, circumstances beyond my control, have induced me to call you together, and as the period was so near at hand when a new Parliament must be summoned in compliance with the Law, I returned from the Sister Province to enjoy the only opportunity which remained of expressing personally my satisfaction at the unanimity, diligence and just regard for the honor and security of your government, which have been manifested in the proceedings of the two last Sessions.

I feel the most sincere pleasure in communicating to you, that the timely interposition of the Legislature, the just administration of the Law of the land, and, perhaps more than all the prevailing good sense and good principle of the great majority of the people, have dissipated those appearances of disturbance and discontent which were beginning to defame us abroad, and which, unless happily checked, would have soon been fatal to our increasing prosperity. Assured that there exists no reason at present for desiring more than the ordinary safeguards of the Constitution, I am fully disposed, should you deem such a measure expedient, to acquiesce in a repeal of the act passed in a late Session for preventing seditious meetings, freely confiding in the prompt energy of the Legislature, and the steady loyalty of the great mass of His Majesty's subjects, to meet any future occasion.

The judgment I have been enabled to form of the situation and interests of this Colony, leads me to appreciate highly your provisions for the amendment of the Road Laws, and for the more equal and general Assessment of property. The Acts may admit of improvement & like all other measures tending to introduce a change of system, will be found, no doubt, when they shall be brought into operation, to require alteration in the detail; but the Session in which you introduced, and the spirit in which you conducted, so temperate, so impartial, so liberal an enquiry & investigation, will be remembered with pleasure, and the result, I trust, forever be quenched to your country the principle of an unexpiring and impartial assessment, will form hereafter an honored era in the annals of her Legislation.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

The public accounts with the est mates for the ensuing year, shall be laid before you, and will receive, no doubt, your early attention. With resources more than adequate to the proportion of the expense of the Civil Government which we have assumed, the revenue has been insufficient to meet the accruing charge for Militia Pensions imposed on it by Laws, I fear more extensively benevolent in their provisions than our means could justify. You will find that a large arrear has accrued in this head of Public expenditure, for which, you will doubtless see the necessity of making immediate provision.

Honorable Gentlemen, and Gentlemen,

You will direct your attention to such Laws as are about to expire—among these is the Act for the establishment of Township Schools. While you bear in mind that justice is the first of every other consideration, you will not forget that it is repugnant to the decrees of Providence that civil liberty should long subsist in ground among any people disqualified by ignorance and incautiousness for its enjoyment. Your disposition therefore to provide for this valuable object, will, I am persuaded, always keep pace with your means: on the present scale, and under the present regulations of the Bill, it is neither prudent nor perhaps desirable to proceed, but measures may possibly be adopted to produce the same good at a more moderate expence.

Provision for religious instruction, and the diffusion of education, are becoming daily more important in this Province. The population of Upper Canada is rapidly increasing; new Townships are filling with actual settlers, and the conditions of cultivation and improvement now rigidly insisted upon by His Majesty's Government, are so evidently improving the advantage of the present system, by a lively contrast with the former.

A subject which should have been mentioned before still remains. The extraordinary circumstances that the eliminate expression of this omission I shall trust to your own feelings. I am certain you have deeply sympathised with me in the painful dispensation of Providence, which deprived His Majesty's North American Provinces of that illustrious personage, who beheld with peculiar interest the growing prosperity of Canada, an object to which, governed, as he always was, by a high sense of duty, and influenced by a truly benevolent disposition, he cheerfully devoted all his powerful faculties."

To His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces in Upper and Lower Canada, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

WE His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Council of Upper Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to return our thanks for your Speech at the opening of this Session of the Legislature.

We receive with gratitude, the fresh proof of the Royal Highness the Prince Regent's attention to the interests of these Colonies, by the appointment of the Earl of Dalhousie, to be Governor in Chief of British North America, yet we cannot cease to deplore the occasion for this appointment, in common with all our sister Provinces we lament the great loss, sustained by the Crown and its Subjects, in the premature death of the late Governor in Chief, His Grace the Duke of Richmond. All mourn the death of the lofty energies of his common mind, on the intellectual display of the private virtues; may we add, that the closer reflection of this Province, for the family of the Illustrious deceased, mingled with the public sorrow, on this affecting dispensation, the most lively emotions, of unfeigned sympathy.

We are happy to have met the flattering approbation of your Excellency, in our endeavours under your administration, to discharge the duties, imposed upon us—It is matter of great satisfaction to reciprocate with your Excellency, sentiments that the alarming appearance of discontent, and disturbance, which called for additional guards to the public safety, no longer exist, or require the continuance of the restrictive measure, it was the expedient to adopt, during the last Session of the Legislature. The beneficial effects to be expected from the late amendment of the Road Laws, and from the more equal Assessment of property now established by Law, and the additions to be contemplated, and [illegible] will owe to your Excellency, a tribute of gratitude, for the favourable results of these enactments which it will be our endeavour to perfect by such modifications, as from time to time, they may be found to require. We shall not fail to pay due attention to the expiring Statutes, and we trust a just and prudent revision of the Law for establishment of Common Schools, may preserve the system of Education thus prepared, and encourage a general extension, throughout our population, to endear the minds of the rising generation, as their surest pledge for the rational enjoyment of civil liberty, and religion.

We trust that the early accession of Emigrants, from older countries, which no one feels our new Townships, brings with it settled principles of religion, and good Government, which under the favourable regulations for settlement, adopted by your Excellency, may speedily present a picture of human happiness, not excelled in any part of the world.

To which His Excellency was pleased to make the following reply:

Mr. Speaker, and Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council.

I am much gratified by your loyal and dutiful Address.

To His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland, Knight Commander of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, and Major General Commanding His Majesty's Forces in Upper and Lower Canada, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

WE His Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects the Commons of Upper Canada in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to express to your Excellency our humble & hearty thanks for your gracious Speech from the Throne at the opening of the [illegible] Session.

Loyally attached to the Person and Government of our Sovereign, we sincerely lament the continuance of the indisposition with which His Majesty has so long been afflicted.

It is with feelings of the most poignant sorrow, (which we assure your Excellency, are common to all His Majesty's subjects in this Province) that we sympathise with you in the late most afflicting dispensation of Providence, which, in bereaving your Excellency of so near a relative, has deprived His Majesty's North American Dominions of the Exalted Personage, who during minions of the Exalted Personage, who during the short period he remained in the situation, which he condescended to assume gave so speedy and such flattering proofs that his care extended equally to every part of those Provinces, and who afforded an illustrious example of unremitted devotion to the service and interest of this Country, that will long be remembered and cherished in these Provinces.

In the appointment of the Earl of Dalhousie as his Successor in so important a trust, we acknowledge with gratitude a new evidence of the paternal consideration of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent.

It is a source of much gratification to us, that our endeavours to promote the security of His Majesty's Government in this Province, have obtained your Excellency's approbation, and we feel the utmost satisfaction in the information you have communicated by your Excellency, that more than all, the prevailing good sense and good principle of the great majority of the People, have dissipated those appearances of disturbance and discontent which were beginning to defame us abroad, and which, unless happily checked, might have been fatal to our prosperity.

We receive with feelings of gratitude & pride your Excellency's declaration, that there exists no reason at present for more than the ordinary safeguards of the Constitution, and that you are disposed to acquiesce in the repeal of the Act passed in a late Session for preventing Seditious Meetings, should it be deemed necessary by the confidence so liberally reposed in the loyalty and patriotic energy of the People; and the steady Loyalty of the People, we feel confident will not be disappointed.

We are, with your Excellency, fully sensible that the Road Laws and the Laws for the more equal and general Assessment of Property, may admit of improvement, and shall not fail to give those subjects our most serious attention.

When the public accounts and estimates are laid before us, we shall give them proper attention, and endeavour to make such arrangements as may appear best calculated to improve the Revenue with the least possible pressure on His Majesty's subjects. From the very considerable charge for Militia Pensions, we are inclined to fear that the Act authorising their payment is too liberal in its provisions, we shall at the same time that we are disposed to meet all of the charges already accrued, make a suitable provision for the future. We will direct our attention to such Laws as are about to expire, and give to the revision of the Common School Act that due consideration which its importance demands.

We are aware that [illegible] and licentiousness are at variance with the true principles of civil policy, and national freedom, and in our deliberations on this important subject it shall be our study to keep in view the improvement of the moral and religious habits of the rising generation.

We are sensible of the rapid increase of the population of the Province, and we are grateful to learn that the encouragement regularly afforded by His Majesty's Government have answered the purpose for which they were designed.

To which His Excellency was pleased to reply

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I sincerely thank you for your loyal Address.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Horses Burnt tongue.—A stage proprietor, owning a large number of horses many of which have been afflicted with this complaint, has given us the following recipe which he says, has in no case failed of affording immediate and effectual relief.

Recipe—Take borax, alum and saltpetre, each one ounce, honey two ounces, vinegar one pint; pulverise and mix the ingredients, and simmer them on the fire till the mass is reduced to three gills Swab or syringe the mouth with the mixture, and give the horse or animal gentle exercise.

Preventive—Take tar, assafœtida and tallow: spread them thin on a rag, and wrap and tie the rag round the bridle bits. If in stable, let the horse be bitted two or three hours each day.—Albany Argus.

From the New York Gazette of Jan. 25.

A large quantity of stolen goods, some of which have been missing for upwards of a twelve month, have been recently found in a grocery store in Catharine Lane, in this city. Several cart loads were taken to the police office, most of which have been claimed, and returned to the owners. Amongst these goods were 500 dollars worth of silks, female apparel, linen, stockings, hats, coats, &c. The man, at whose house this discovery was made, is reputed to be worth 20,000 dollars.

An article from Stockholm, referring to two chests of papers, left by GUSTAVUS III. with orders that they should not be opened till fifty years after his death, states, that in consequence of a supposition that the clients might be changed for others, they were looked into, when it was found that the papers of the deceased King consisted of a secret history of his reign. The two chests were again closed and sealed.

MR. COBBETT.

We stated last week that this gentleman embarked a short time since for England, from New York,—but have since learnt we were incorrect in thus announcing his departure. Mr Cobbett engaged and paid for a passage nearly a month ago, and made every preparation for embarking; but just as the vessel was about to sail, the owner of the ship, a Mr. W ——, a Quaker, met Cobbett on board, and thus accosted him: "Friend Cobbett, thou canst not sail in this vessel, nor in any ship of mine." "Why not?" replied Mr. C. with surprise. "Thou hast too much to do with political matters, friend Cobbett, for the cabin of my ship," was the Quaker's answer. "But I have paid for my passage, and have made arrangements to be in England early in Nov. and the disappointment will be great if I am unable to proceed." "Verily, friend Cobbett, that I cannot help; thy purse cannot mend thy politics, and thy money must perish with thee, ere thou depart in my vessel," was the only consolation for the disappointment that Mr. C. could obtain. The fact was, that several Englishmen had taken passage in the same vessel, and on being informed that Cobbett was to be their fellow passenger, they appied en masse to the owner, and informed that they must, and should immediately leave the vessel, if Cobbett was permitted to proceed with them. The result was, that Cobbett very coolly took back his passage money, relanded his baggage, and patiently waited for a passage in some vessel, whose owner was not a Quaker, or whose cabin was not filled with the rosy faced subjects of John Bull.—Phil. paper.

A late meeting of the Gloucestershire Missionary Society, in England, was addressed by the Rev. W. Thorpe, who in the midst of his speech opened an immense clasp knife, which occasioned an extraordinary emotion amongst his auditors. 'Be not alarmed-" said he "it it not a tomahawk-but a pruning hook" —It had been brought over by a relation of his, who had visited the Cape, and been amongst several of the Missionary stations, where he found the most glorious evidences of the force of Christianity, and of the success of zeal and perseverance of the Missionaries. The knife had been shewn to the manufacturers of Sheffield, who all declared that Sheffield never had, and never could produce a superior article, and yet it was the work of converted Hottentots! He next produced a frill, the work of female converts, which had excited the admiration of several ladies to whom it had been shown; Lord Somerset's family had ordered entire dresses of the same manufacture. My relation, said he, "has also spoken much of the sweetness of the voices of the Hottentots, particularly in religious exercises, and has assured me that, compared with them, the music of the best English choirs he ever heard was mere discordance."—After some remarks on Christian benevolence, he said —"I own, where the feast of benevolence is held, I like to be a guest—were it only to pick up the crumbs that fall from the table. As this is a selfishness which I trust may never be suffered to abate! In vulgar arithmetic if you subtract two from seven then five remain; but in the arithmetic of Christian benevolence, if you substract two from seven, thirty five remain—because we are told, that all heavenly rewards are seven fold—and therefore seven time five is thirty five.

Immense Longevity.—Died, in Charleston, 9th instant, MRS. STARR BARRETT, after having fully completed one hundred and twenty years of an active and various life. This venerable lady was born in the year 1699 of the Christian Æra, about a year before the death of Charles 2d, king of Spain—to which country her family had emigrated at an early period of her life. She was born in one of the Barbary States; which, could not be ascertained by the writer, but it is supposed, under the Empire of Morocco—Peter I. was then Czar of Muscovy—a title now enlarged to that of Emperor of all the Russias. Frederick Augustus was King of Poland. Charles XII, was King of Swedeu. Frederick IV. (son to Christian V.) was king of Denmark. William III. King of England. Peter IV King of Portugal and Louis XIV King of France.

Mrs. Barrett possessed a constitution truly Arabian—she was seldom or never sick, and rather withered away like some majestic tree which gradually loses its moisture, but which the tempest has always spared. A variety of circumstances formed her a great traveller, and she had visited, with no unobservant eye, the four quarters of the globe. She spoke English, Spanish, Italian and French, with great fluency; was perfectly acquainted with the mixed Morisco or Frank, as it is spoken by the traders along the southern shores of the Mediterranean; was mistress of the Hebrew, and wrote, spoke, and translated the pure Arabic, with ease and elegance. Her memory was very tenacious of impressions made in early youth—but for the last half century she was apt to forget occurrences from one day to another.—She recollected the public joy in Spain upon the important discovery of the Philippine Islands, by the Spanish navigators—as well as the battle of Almonza, which was fought on the frontiers of the Kingdom of Valencia, when the army of Philip Vth, King of Spain, obtained a complete victory over the Imperialists under the Arch Duke Charles. Both these events occurred in the year 1707, when the subject of this notice was only eight years of age.—She was near the scene of action when Gibraltar was besieged by the Spaniards, in 1727. Mrs Barrett was of an easy and cheerful disposition, even after her blindness, which continued the last thirty years of her life. Latterly, extreme debility had reduced her to second infancy. She ate every thing within the pale of the Hebrew rule (being a Jewess, and strict in her religious duties;) drank and slept well, and was remarkably cleanly, and particular about her person. After dwelling thirty or forty years in London, she came to this country in 1780, then in the 80th year of her age, and lived in this city for the last forty years. Her mortal sickness did not last a fortnight; when having completed a truly patriarchal age, she was gathered to her fathers, leaving behind her half a dozen generations, to the fifth and sixth removal. She died esteemed by all who knew her; & greatly beloved by her family for her amiable qualities and fervent piety. They were accustomed to look upon her with feelings approaching to religious veneration; nor could the reflecting mind regard her person or face, for a moment, without a sentiment that would thrill the heart and make the countenance turn pale. Her great age had beheld the sons and daughters of men, fall before her like the leaves in autumn; and yet that life, extended as it was to the utmost span, must have appeared to its possessor but a troubled dream, from which she was at length awakened by the hand of death.—Charleston Pat.

MR. GRAY.—

Having read in the Courant of 2d Feb. an article under the head of "British Monopoly," which is stated to be the substance of a letter received from Manchester (by whom or where no one can tell) and published in the Journal at Providence, allow me to endeavour to show that the whole statement is grossly false, and fabricated merely to answer the views of some of our neighbouring hot headed patriots, who are endeavouring to exclude by legislative measures the future introduction of British manufactured goods into their boasted Land of Liberty. In order more completely to expose the falsehood of the statement, and prove the ignorant stupidity of its manufacturer, it will be necessary to dissect it, and in the first place as to the stated place of meeting, the Crown and Anchor Inn (Tavern the writer meant) it is well known that both for political and commercial reasons Sir Robert Peel would not have called a meeting there: political, because he is avowedly of that party which never assembles at "the whig head quarters:" commercial, because every one knows there is not a Manchester warehouseman who lives within a mile of that tavern. With great regard to his "professed object" and "zeal in petition," admitting that his intentions did not correspond with his professions; Sir Robert is not that shallow mortal to let the public know it; but his character is to him of more consequence than all the "Iron, Cotton, & Woolen Manufacturers of the United States." Can any one be so absurd as for a moment to suppose that the British Government would advance Exchequer Bills to the amount of £300,000 on bare security of a few private individuals, who professedly could not pay off the loan under five years—no; but this is only another scene which is required to carry on the Farce. As to the sending out Agents to dispose of goods in the States, which are to be professedly the manufacture of that country, it is almost puerile to attempt its refutation. Let the Americans take their money to England & send out what they purchase, but no more sending out by the manufacturers—a burnt child dreads the fire.

More might be said to convince the world of the cheat intended to be put upon it by the article in question, but it must be clearly perceived that the writer thereof is sufficiently unmasked to shew the purity both of his intention and profession.—Mont. Herald.

LONDON, Dec. 27.

Mysterious Affair.—We copy the following mysterious affair from the Leeds Mercury.

During the present week a strong sensation has been occasioned in this town, by the discovery of a human being, who had been incarcerated in chains in the house of his parents for upwards of fifteen years. On Wednesday in the last week, the mother of this unfortunate young man, whose name is Benjamin Surr, applied to the Committee of the Leed's workhouse, stating, that she was in want of relief for her son, who was not of sound mind.

The Committee, on investigating the case, found that the family belonged to another township, Seacroft, we believe, and referred her to the overseers of that place. On the following day, the old woman had a fatal accident, while walking in the street, she came upon a piece of ice, and falling backward fractured her scull so dreadfully, that after languishing till Friday, she expired. One of the neighbours, moved by her situation, went into the house, the door of which was usually locked, and after rendering the last offices to her remains, walked into the cellar to wash her hands.—While in that situation, she heard a moan as from a human voice, and on examination she found that it proceeded from an object so neglected and destitute, that it was difficult to say whether he was of the human or the brute species. This discovery was communicated to the neighbours, and a considerable number of persons assembled round the house, which is situated at the Black Bank, but John Surr, the father of the family, had locked the door and refused to admit any of them.

The overseers and constables were then sent for, and promptly attended the summons, but the old man, probably from an apprehension of the fury of the populace, refusing still to open the door, they were obliged to force their way into the house. On obtaining admission, they proceeded into the cellar, and here they found the unfortunate man squatted under the cellar steps, chained by the leg to the wall and in so loathsome a state that it was evident he had not been washed for years—"Sharp misery had worn him to the bone;" a few sacks and a little straw served him for a bed; his appearance was that of a spectre; and his bones had in several places penetrated through his skin, which was much excoriated. As a first step, the parish officers ordered him to be taken to the work house, and on viewing a comfortable bed which had been prepared for him, he exclaimed, "what! is this for me? God bless you! You will go to Heaven for this!" and other expression of a similar import.—Sometimes he converses freely, but frequently incoherently. There is, moreover, a vacuity in his look which shows want of mind. He appears, however, to be perfectly inoffensive and tractable, and it is evident that he knows and feels the difference between his present and his late situation. When the young man, who seem to be about thirty years of age, was taken to the workhouse, his father was taken to the prison, and underwent a private examination before the magistrates at the court house. The reason, we understand, that was assigned by the old man for keeping his unfortunate son in the situation in which he was found, was, that he was deranged in his intellect, and required restraint. It also appeared, that the prisoner had always maintained a good character; and though it is impossible to justify his conduct towards his son, the nature of his offence was not judged to be cognizable by the law; it was therefore determined that he should be discharged, and as soon as the indignant populace had dispersed, he was set at liberty. Surr's family, which have seen better days, but has fallen into decay, consists of another son and four daughters, who were all residing with him at the time this melancholy discovery was made.

A rara Avis.—A quiet little woman lately died at Chacewater, aged 21, Elizabeth, daughter of Joseph Ralph; her height was only two feet ten inches; she was not at all deformed, but rather well proportioned; she was never known to laugh or cry, or utter any sound whatever, though it was evident she both saw and heard; her weight never exceeded twenty pounds.

Should the number be completed, the winner is to pay twenty pounds, and the present proprietor ten pounds for the good of the company.

For three weeks past we have had a great deal of cold weather. Last night the frost set in with peculiar severity, the thermometer indicating in the vicinity of the town at 8 o'clock this morning 14° The ice on the river is now strong enough to carry a multitude who resort to it for skating and other amusements.

On Saturday last, a party of officers in Paisley were sent to execute a warrant for apprehending a person accused of seditious practices, and for searching his possessions for papers. When they had completed their search and proceeded to the street with their prisoner and papers, they were assailed by a mob, who knocked one of them down, and so severely hurt another with stones, which were unmercifully pelted upon them, that they were obliged to abandon their prisoner, and in the best way they could, effect their escape.—Yesterday, one of the Magistrates, with a party of officers, accompanied by some infantry and cavalry, proceeded to apprehend some of the rioters, when they were mobbed and assailed in the same manner. The same day, another party of officers, along with the Sheriff-Substitute, were grossly insulted in seizing some concealed arms in one of the most public streets of Paisley, and they found it not safe to carry them off, without the protection of the military, and a party was accordingly sent for to escort the officers with the arms so seized. On this duty the soldiers were hooted and insulted, and one of them severely struck by a stone from the mob, in presence of the Sheriff, and all this without any resistation.—Glasgow Courier.

We have been informed that some pikes were seized on Thursday night, at Paisley, in the shop of a smith. We understand that the cutler's name is Henderson, and he is in custody.—Glasgow Courier.

PRESTON, Dec. 18.

Apprehended Meeting.

Much alarm was excited in the minds of many individuals in this district at the beginning of the present week, through a vague kind of anticipation that the Reformers intended to hold simultaneous meetings or risings in the manufacturing parts of the country. In Manchester this feeling was so strong, that the public authorities were induced to fortify the New Bailey Prison, and the barracks near the New Cross were prepared with a defence of brick work. The Magistrates of the Hundred of Blackburn also issued warning notices to the inhabitants, to prepare themselves to protect their persons and property against any attempts which might be made upon them—on the morning of Saturday last, a number of papers, which appeared to be the heading of some old advertisements, were found posted on the walls of this town. They bore in large printed characters, the words "Preston Public Meeting," and on the margin, in writing, "Is fixed for Monday, Dec. 13." In the course of the day our active chief magistrate caused hand-bills to be circulated, requesting all persons to keep their children & domestics within doors, in case the meeting should take place, and to be in readiness to preserve the peace if any violence should be threatened.—The military now stationed in the town were on duty the whole night between Sunday and Monday, but we have the satisfaction to say, that not the slightest indication of disturbance has manifested itself in this neighborhood, nor, as far as we can learn, in any part of the manufacturing districts. A meeting was indeed, regularly announced to be held in Manchester, on Monday, but being discountenanced by Hunt's party, and seeing the formidable preparations of the magistracy, the promoters of it thought proper to abandon their design, and on the morning of the day appointed for the assemblage, issued notices, stating that the meeting was for the present postponed.

From the United States:

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Cincinnatiito his friend in Philadelphia, dated January 16th, 1820.

"'Tis with the deepest and most solitary regret, I find myself under the painful necessity of informing you of a very melancholy circumstance, which took place on Monday the 11th inst. at Lawrenceburgh, (Indiana,) between Messrs. Warner and Jones, on account of a young lady, with whom, it appears, they were very much in love!

"About nine months since, they both resided at Lawrenceburgh, and paid their addresses to a young lady of that place: Jones, one day, about six months back, meeting Warner asked him, if his intentions were sincere, in paying his addresses to Miss———? To which he replied, "they would be, where I wealthy, but, under present circumstances, they were not!" Shortly after which, he desisted entirely from going to see the young lady; and Jones, paid his respects very constanly for several months; but, latterly moved from Lawrenceburgh to Brookville, and entirely forsook her! Warner, finding that Jones no longer paid his respects to the girl, went again himself; and renewed his addresses, & finally agreed to marry her! Last Monday was the day appointed! Warner sent Jones a letter of invitation to the the wedding. Jones complied, made all haste and arrived on Tuesday. They were both seen together on Sunday, and appeared like brothers. But alas! what followed? My hand shakes while I write, and my whole system shivers, when I think of the cruel hypocrisy, which, under the mask of friendship and brotherly love, was concealed.

"On Monday, (the day on which the wedding was to have taken place,) Warner went into his office, with the intention of arranging his papers, followed by Jones, who, after locking the door, presented Warner two papers to sign; one of which was calling him a———d liar, and the other that he should promise not to marry, but give up all claims to his intended bride! Both of which papers he refused to sign. Jones then presented him a pistol (which he had concealed under his clothes) with these words: "defend yourself;" which he also refused, thinking that he only wanted to frighten him and make him sign the papers above alluded to. Whereupon, Jones cocked the fatal instrument of death, and discharged the contents directly into Warner's heart! The report was heard outside, and the door immediately forced open; where, alas! were found poor Warner, weltering in his blood, and Jones, with as unconcerned an air, as though nothing had happened, laughing over the lifeless victim of his jealousy! He was, I am happy to inform you, safely conveyed to prison, there to await his trial for so nefarious an act. He is a Deist!"

ZANESVILLE, (Ohio) Jan. 5.

At the court of common pleas, in Licking county, held last week in Newark, J. M'Lean and James Hughes were indicted for the murder of Rachel Konkapot, an Indian woman of the Stockbridge tribe. It will be recollected that part of this tribe emigrated, some time since, from their late residence in the state of New York, to Indiana. Rachel Konkapot, with some others, having become dissatisfied with their new abode, were returning to N. York, and while travelling last September from Newark to Mount Vernon, were wantonly fired upon. A rifle ball entered Rachel Konkapot's thigh, and broke the bone. She lingered until the 22d Dec. when she died at Mount Vernon. The deceased was married, and her husband in company. She was delivered of a female child a few hours after receiving the wound; the child is alive and in health. Rachel was 26 years old, possessed of a fine person, and an eye that beamed intelligence and spirit, even in the agonies of death. She was a Christian, and had with her a bible and some religious works. Taught by its precepts she prayed that God would forgive, as she had, those who were the cause of her death.

MR. PINKNEY'S SPEECH.

Extract of a letter from Washington. January 22d, 1820.

"I yesterday attended the Senate, and heard Mr. Pinkney speak on the Missouri question. Such a burst of oratory I never before witnessed. The lofty, impressive and elegant arguments he adduced—his unbroken chain of reasoning, his flights of fancy, his metaphors and allusions, were all of that ne plus ultra standard, which we are taught to admire and reverence in the Orators of Ancient Rome at her proudest era.

At the moment of his speaking, the mind was so burried along by the rapid yet collected torrent of reasoning, imagery, pathos, and satire, that it had not a moment's time to pause on the various beauties, by which it was encompassed; nor was it until the scene had closed, and the untired orator reluctantly yielded to the lateness of the hour, that I could rally my spell-bound faculties and enquire into the seperate qualities, which created this fascination over my senses.

It is so far beyond the power of my pen to do justice to the high strain of eloquence and argument which the orator displayed, that I will not yield to the vanity of attempting it. None but the pencil of the most faithful stenographer can paint its original and splendid beauties. All that I will venture to do, is to express the more than admiration which overpowered me in listening, for three hours and a half, to a chain of the most clear, distinct, and logical reasoning, enlivened throughout by metaphorical allusions, and most chaste as well as sublime expressions of our language.

The clearness of his great conceptions was only equalled by that vigorous self possession, which, during the whole time he was speaking, did not leave him a moment at a loss for the most appropriate word which the subject demanded; nor cause the slightest hesitancy in all his discourse, which, if I am allowed the expression, flowed unresistingly and spontaneously, a rolling tide of eloquence.

"Never did I feel more enthusiasm for my country—never did I feel more pride in the name of an American, than while listening to the exhilirating and animating powers of this orator of a New-World.

"I thought of Pitt, Burke, Fox, and Sheridan, of Mirabeau and Maury, of a Patrick Henry, Ames, King, Randolph, Madison, Dexter, and Wirt, and I thought likewise of Demosthenes, of Cicero, and of the proudest days of Rome; but I felt convinced that the eloquence which once electrified Roman Senate, never had surpassed that which sounded in the lofty dome of the American Capitol.

"Mr. Pinkney divided his subject into three parts—the constitutionality of the question—the treaty of Louisiana cession, and thirdly the policy of the proposed restriction, but what he has yet expressed, was limited to the constitutional branch of the subject, reserving to himself until Monday next, the discussions of the other two points.

"If his conclusion shall correspond with the beauty and dignity of his exordium, I shall consider it the most finished piece of senatorial eloquence and intellectual strength ever exhibited, at least in our country; and I accord with an opinion of a venerable member of the Senate, a few minutes after Mr. Pinkney closed his discouse, "I would rather have spoken that speech, than be Emperor of all the Russias?" and deeply shall I regret, if for want of a Senatorial Reporter or Stenographer, it does not appear in print."

EXTRACT OF A LETTER.

From a Member of Congress to a citizen of Boston, dated.

Washington, 24th January, 1820.

"Mr. Senator PINKNEY finished his mammoth Speech to day in favour of Slavery. He had commenced it and spoke about three hours on Friday last. I attended and stood quite near him for an hour and a quarter. The Senate Chamber was full—ladies, beaux, statesmen, legislators, all blended in one undistinguished mass—gaping with wonder at every word. And what prodigious exhibition of profound knowledge and resistless eloquence justified the mighty assemblage? An orator puffed up with vanity, with a disgusting visage and a disagreeable voice. Every sentence an alternate recurrence of vociferation and inaudible whisper. The former part of it your ears assailed most rudely the hoarse crash of thunder, suddenly subsiding at the close into murmurs scarcely articulated. The most common place arguments were paraded with an air of ranting defiance, as if the orator thought them quite new, beautiful and unanswerable. A coarse allusion, for the benefit of the ladies, to the harem of the Grand Signior, an exclamation calling on the name of the Supreme Being in a manner shocking even to the profane, without any real passion to excuse such an appeal. These are some of the outlines, and not the most exceptionable parts of the performance of this favorite of Maryland, so flattered and so spoiled.

"What must foreigners think of our talents or our taste, when they see our newspapers and our "stupid starers" proclaiming such a man as this, the prince and pattern of American orators! I blush for the Senate—I blush for Congress—I blush for the literary character of my country, when I reflect on the blind adulation which has been bestowed on this disgusting speech. Yet, in conversation, all except the slave holders, and even some of them, admit that the delivery of Mr. P. is abominable. This, however, is only said in private conversation, but no person is willing to make such an opinion public in a newspaper, while the parasite of the orator and whose cause he has defended, are forward to show their sycophancy in that way. The paper, which I send you is a fair specimen of various paragraphs which we met every day.

"Do not suppose that I am influenced on this occasion by differing from Mr. P. in opinion. On the same subject and on the same side, Mr. Chittenden, of Ky. spoke the last winter, and I at the time felt and often expressed a high gratification at the elegance and perspicuity of diction, strength of argument, and graceful delivery of his speech. Mr. P. was admitted to have fallen off to day even by his friends. I did not go to hear him, but can hardly conceive

OBSERVATIONS

On the cause of the Carbuncle affecting cattle, horses and sheep, commonly called the tongue distemper.

BY E. C. GENET.

Agriculture, geology and chemistry are at this moment the fashionable studies in the United States: and it is very pleasing to see how much the taste for those sciences has increased the number of their votaries among all classes of society. When the attention of the community is directed towards particular objects, it seldom fails of procuring a variety of remarks, which, if noticed, increase our stock of knowledge. I happened lately to find myself at a place of common resort for farmers from the western district, and setting with them around a comfortable stove, I was extremely entertained with their judicious views on several subjects, and particularly on the origin and progress of the epizootic disease which has lately become so fatal to cattle and horses in this state. I have questioned those worthy citizens closely, and the result of my enquiries is, that the disease has been essentially located to the place where the severe drowth experienced last fall had left to the people no other resource to water their stock, but the dregs of wells or ponds; that the first signs of the disease were visible on the tongues, or in the mouths of the animals affected, and could be compared to the prickle occasioned by the bite of insects; and that it extended from the spots first affected into the throat and the stomach, and was very soon followed by death.

It has been observed in Europe, that corrupt stagnant water was extremely deleterious, & had more than once been suspected of having created epizootical diseases; and I am led to conclude, from the comparison of the facts reported by the most celebrated veterinarians of Europe, that the putrid state of crude water, at certain periods, consumed by cattle and horses, may with propriety be considered as morbific.

But what are we to understand by the putridity of water? Is it due to a chemical or to an animalcular operation? Perhaps it is chargeable to both; but as the carbonic generally abounding in stagnant water does not appear to be very dangerous, I am inclined to think that the latter is the most active and efficient.

I have endeavored to prove, in several essays published in New York and in Albany, on the yellow fever, the agency of the salt water animalcule in the production and fatal termination of that dreadful contagion, and I find in the facts above stated, additional reason to believe, that the animalcule and insects who populate our ponds & wells of fresh water, concentrated by the reduction of the aqueous fluid occasioned by a drowth, feed in the blood and in the organs of the animals, who absorb them in the act of drinking, a support which nature refuses them in their usual element, and a place of deposit for their seed. All the observations made in both hemispheres, on the tongue carbuncle, concur to strengthen the opinion that it has uniformly prevailed during drowths, and that in its first stage it always affects the tongue or the mouth.

Mr. Tenant, professor and attending physician of the veterinary school of Lodeve, in France, describes that complaint as having at first the appearance of a small white blister, similar to the bite of a moscheto, assuming by degrees a red colour, and becoming in its termination black and gangrenous. That able physician recommends the preventive and curative remedies hereunto annexed, and advises above all things, the immediate use of the knife, and the amputation or scarification or burning of the spot affected as soon as it is discovered, the progress of the evil (or, as I explain it, the animalcular propagation) being so rapid, that the diseased animal dies very often in 24 hours, in an absolute state of gangrene.

There is no doubt, in my opinion, but that animalcules, worms and insects, are the great agents of nature to keep the chain of life and death in action, and without the powerful glance of Spallanzani, Bonnet, and Saussure, who have opened a new world to our eyes, our plain organs bear testimony of the existence in ponds, foul wells, and subterraneous repositories of water and filth, of numerous insects armed with the weapons and the poison of death, who, introduced into the system, become the most dangerous intestinal companions, and are more often than is generally conceded by the practitioners of physic, the true causes of many complaints attributed to other principles.

Preventive remedies.

Sequestration from all communication with suspected animals in the stables, and frequent currying, extreme cleanliness; bran and water acidulated with vinegar, for drink, food as usual; fumigation with vinegar in the stables; frequent scrapings of the tongue with vinegar, mixed with common salt and pepper, and a solution of assafœtida, to which, according to circumstances, may be added some sal ammoniac; Jugular bleeding Curative remedies.

In the first stage of the disease, as soon as discovered, extirpation or scarification with the knife or scissors of the spot affected. The tumor extracted, swabbing five or six times a day, with the tincture of myrth or aloes, with half a pound of brandy mixed with camphire and sal amoniac, of each half an ounce; lotions of vinegar mixed with theriaca and some camphorated spirits, are also very proper, and it is indispensable to make the sick creature swallow some in the proportion of half a tumbler twice a day. To which add a drink composed of the root of angelica, pretensis major or large angelica of the meadows, boiled in strong vinegar, reduced to one third by boiling, to which two ounces of venetian theriaca may be added; the whole to be given in two doses, one in the morning, the other in the evening, being careful to cover well the diseased animal, during the operation of that last remedy, acting as a powerful sudorific.

United States Armory.—The Public Journal printed at Springfield, Mass. contains a particular description of the United States works at that town. It appears from the statement, that there are from 240 to 250 men employed at this armory, who manufacture about 45 muskets daily. The armory was established by an act of Congress, in 1794 and 1795. At the end of December, 1819, there had been completed 152,359 new muskets, 1202 carbines, and 46,414 muskets repaired. The expences for erection of buildings, &c is stated at $166,136.—The other expences, exclusive of stock and works on hand are 1,906,440 dollars. Total amount of expenditure from the commencement of the works 2,072,676 dollars.

REPORT OF THE SECRETARY.

Ladies—In conducting the affairs of the Society for the last year, your Board of Managers have found the sphere of their duties and their usefulness greatly enlarged. As the Society has become known, the demand upon its resources and exertions have encreased; and the great influx of Emigrants the last season, many of them in circumstances the most deplorable, has called for unceasing personal assiduity from your Managers, while it almost drained your funds of their small treasures.

But a good Providence has always supplied us in such emergencies; and when we looked with dismay on our inadequate means of meeting the expences of the ensuing month, has sent some generous donor to our relief.

Thus the extended usefulness of the Society, and the honorable testimony borne to its character by the munificence and confidence of the public, have converted their toil into pleasure; and made even those exertions satisfactory which were bestowed on unworthy or ungrateful objects; for with the strictest personal scrutiny and attention, it is impossible but that we, who judge from outward appearance only, and cannot discern the heart, should sometimes be deceived. But your Managers are happy in the assurance, that these instances have been comparatively very few; and that the great majority of those whom your bounty has benefitted, were objects of deserved compassion, and some of them such, as according to all human probability, must have perished through want and disease, but for the oil and wine which your charity provided. For the last year your pensioners have averaged about two hundred and thirty souls per month; many of them remaining on the list from month to month; and some entirely supported the whole twelve.

All these have been cases of real distress; not one in a hundred, objects of casual charity. The widow, the orphan, the destitute parent, whose children were crying to him for bread, which he had not to give; the friendless stranger, a victim to disease, either in his own person or those dependent on him, describes them all. The relief administered has been in the most frugal manner possible. Rice, barley, bread, potatoes, and beef or heads, form the staples of our distribution. These are the cheapest sustenance that can be given. Tea, sugar, oatmeal, eggs and similar comforts are dispensed in sickness;—wine only when ordered by the physician. Bed-clothing and necessary apparel are also distributed as usual, and for the means of procuring these necessaries we are much indebted to private benefactions of such articles.

The current expenditures of the Society have been from 40 to £50 per month. This disbursement includes the support of the school; and the family at the house in the Recollet Suburb, which you last year authorised your managers to retake, and which has usually contained upwards of twenty individuals, chiefly orphan children & sick persons placed there for recovery, (such as could not gain admittance to the Hotel Dieu) and another little asylum, in which five widows and nineteen fatherless children, have been maintained since last September. One of these died last week after a lingering illness leaving six little orphans to the world.—During the last twelve months eight hundred and eighty nine recipients altogether have partaken of your bounty; more than double the number of the year preceeding, forty-seven of these have paid the debt of nature; and the blessing of those who were ready to perish rests on the Female Benevolent society.

The School, that most excellent branch of your charity, because it is subject to no deception, liable to no abuse, and productive not only of present, but future utility, continues to thrive under the judicious care of Miss Laughorn, who has instructed it from its commencement.

It contains at present about eighty children, the elder of whom are made to assist in instructing the younger. From the remoteness of its situation, these are seldom all collected together at this season, and this circumstance has also caused it to diminish since the summer, at which time it consisted of one hundred poor children, and employed two instructresses. Some judicious friends of the Society have recommended, that the plan of this School should be enlarged, and a room in a more centrical part of the town taken for its accommodation: that the poor who are often too engrossed by anxiety about their daily wants, to attend to the permanent good of their children, especially when it causes any additional inconveniences, as the sending them such a distance in unfavourable weather, without suitable food & clothing, often does, may have every inducement to secure to them the great advantages of constant and useful instruction.

At present the interrupted attendance of the pupils which these circumstances sometimes render unavoidable is a bar to their improvement; which notwithstanding has been great and manifest.

All these different channels through which your bounty has flowed, had nearly exhausted your treasury, when the soup establishment was set on foot by the benevolent Gentlemen of the city.

In conducting the Institution, the aid of your managers was requested and given with pleasure. The Soup is prepared to your house Recollet Suburb, under the inspections of Ladies, one or two of whom superintend each day in person, the distribution of the soup and bread to the poor protestants. This, and other judicious plans executed by the committee for the relief of the emigrants, not only reprieve our funds, but are most beneficial to the poor; being far beyond what was in our power to have done. But these supplies are only for the winter, & the poor always we have with us. Nor is the necessity of your aid at present superceded.—The quantity of bread allowed by the committee, is not sufficient to sustain a family without a small additional supply. Most of the families on our list of pensioners have some sick members; & though these obtain medicines and advice gratuitously from the Dispensary, yet they must have nourishment and comforts suited to their conditions; and these are often not only enhanced, but such as can only be administered by the watchful kindness of female sympathy. The late donations from the Subscribers to the Montreal Assembly, and the Gentlemen, Theatrical Amateurs, were therefore most acceptable and honourable to the Society.

It has been both honoured and prospered the past year, as an instrument of much comfort and success to the distressed; and your managers flatter themselves that the conduct of its affairs will so far meet your approbation, as to induce a cheerful acceptance of offices which may be left vacant by the resignation of any of the Board; and which though their duties may be sometimes found arduous, bring to the philanthropic heart their own reward.

H. W. BARRET, Sec'y. F. B. S.

FROM THE MONTREAL GAZETTE.

The following Extract of a letter from a Mother to her Son now in this city, dated Preston near Liverpool, 29th Nov. 1819, will show to what a height infidelity and blasphemy had then arisen.

To a feeling mind, it is truly painful to observe the facility with which Infidelity proceeds, in this and the adjacent towns.—To such an amazing height of audacity and guilt, have some of the men calling themselves reformers, arrived, that they have instituted clubs, or associations, where (in the evenings generally) a number of them repair for the express purpose of "setting at naught" the Blessed Redeemer! Cursing the name of God! and of maltreating that best of Books, the Holy Bible; and in the latter instance, such has been the ferocity of these infatuated men, that they have taken their Bibles to the Rendezvous of their Diabolical Orgies, and after exhibiting them with contempt, and pouring out invectives against the Author, have, (Oh shame to men!) furiously torn them, cast them on the ground & spurned them into the streets!—And not content with condemnation thus insured to themselves, they have also resorted to measures, implicating their innocent progeny;—they have established Schools, on these principles, and placed Teachers therein, who are studiously careful to instil into the minds of their young charge, the degrading sentiment that "there is no God!"

And (to the disgrace of my sex, I name it) there are similar associations of women, whose conduct is equally violent, and whose example, on the rising generation will have a far more destructive tendency.—In these clubs monies are deposited for the several purposes of procuring arms, obtaining a reform (a revolution) or redress of grievances, and for the support of those who may be engaged to revenge the Manchester massacre as they term it.—When these scenes will end God only knows, I wish they may speedily terminate.

Manchester is greatly distressed, Wigan and Liverpool are greatly agitated, as are all neighbouring towns. Parliament is now in session and the ministry seems to be very firm, and appear determined (if necessary) to adopt coercive measures for the suppression of at least civil discord."

The Weather.—The thaw, noticed in our last, continued, with the supervention of thick mist, till Thursday night, when it froze moderately. A very light snow fell yesterday, the atmosphere became clearer, and there are indications of returning cold. The weather, during the last ten days, has certainly been unusually soft, as if the whole force of the winter had been expended in the two preceeding months, and the occasional [illegible]s concentrated in the former space of time. Should this high temperature be the vanguard of spring, it is not without its parallel. In the year 1801 the River St. Lawrence broke up between the 10th and 12th of March—the roads were so free from snow that the caleche was the travelling carriage—and the whole of the spring wheat was, in the District of Montreal, sown in that month.—The same year, about 1,200,000 bushels of grain were exported from Lower Canada. If the former of these events happen this year, we hope it may be followed by the latter.—Can. Cour.

Pt. Ex. Council.

YORK, MARCH 2, 1820.

To the free and Independent Electors of the Town of York.

GENTLEMEN,

A Report is in general circulation that our Parliament, in providing for the more equal Representation of the People, are about to bestow upon you the valuable privilege of sending a Member to the Commons House of Assembly. Should such a measure pass, you will necessarily be soon called to the first exercise of that privilege; and though others, I am told, have even been before me in declaring their intentions, I trust it can hardly be objected to me, that I have lost time in acquainting you with my determination to become a Candidate for the Honor of Representing you in Parliament.

It is usual on such occasions for the Candidate to say something of his principles and intentions, and perhaps also of his ability to be useful—but though young, I am too old in your acquaintance to make this necessary here. I have grown up with the Town of which you are the Inhabitants, and either in private acquaintance, or in the discharge of a public duty, I am known to very many, perhaps to all of you—I hope I possess your confidence and good opinion—I have endeavoured to deserve it.

Occupied in the discharge of an arduous situation, and engaged in a laborious profession, no private motives of interest or advancement prompt me to solicit this additional duty, honorable and important as it is, and conscious that my character & conduct give me a fair claim to this mark of your confidence, disappointment in attaining it would occasion no further mortification than as it would give me fewer opportunities of proving with how much sincerity

I am
Gentlemen,
Your most obedient
Humble servant,
JOHN BEVERLY ROBINSON.

York, Feb. 29th 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Town of York.

GENTLEMEN,

In consequence of a Bill being in progress before the present Session of the Legislature, for extending to the Inhabitants of this flourishing Town, the invaluable privilege of sending to the Commons House of Assembly, a Representative of their own free choice, I am induced, at the request of many respectable friends, to tender you my humble services for that important Trust.

It is not unusual for the Candidate, upon such occasions, to enter into a long descriptive detail of his principles, as well as to make profession of extraordinary services; I trust, however, that I am sufficiently known in the Town of York, to render the former unnecessary: the latter, I consider unbecoming.

I should probably not have ventured to offer myself to your notice, were it not for the circumstance of my being wholly disengaged from any business of a public or private nature, that can possibly influence my conduct, or divert my attention from your interest.

This enables me to assure you, Gentlemen, that should I be honored with your confidence and support, at the Election which will shortly take place, whatever abilities I possess shall, at all times, be faithfully, and with the most perfect integrity, exerted for the welfare and benefit of the Town of York.

I am,
Gentlemen,
Your most obedient
Humble Servant,
ROBERT R. LORING.

York, March 1st, 1820.

REPOSITORY FOR FEMALE WORK.

We have great pleasure in acquainting our readers, that a Repository for Female Work will be opened in this City, under the direction of Mrs. Gilchrist, on Monday next, the 14th inst. at the house of the late Mr. R. McKenzie, St. Antoine Suburb.

As some of our readers may be unacquainted with the nature of this Institution, we beg leave to state for their information, that a Repository is a place where every sort of Needle Work is received and exhibited for sale, on such terms as the person who deposits it, may specify; and the price of every article that is purchased, paid to the owner, with only a small deduction (in the present instance of two pence on every shilling of price) for the benefit of the Lady who has the management of it. At the same place, Female Work of every description is done for all who may apply for that purpose. In this instance, the materials will be received, and orders for the execution of the work attended to by Mrs. GILCHRIST, who will make it her study to employ the most deserving and best qualified persons in executing such orders as she may be entrusted with.

In the selection of proper persons to be employed in doing the work of the institution, and in the general management of the business, she will have the advice and assistance of several of the most respectable Ladies of this city, who are acquainted with similar institutions in the parent country. The names of those persons who deposit work for sale in the hands of Mrs. Gilchrist will not be made known to purchasers, unless they give their express permission to that effect. As the lady under whose management the Montreal Repository is placed, is eminently qualified by her education and accomplishments for the task of superintending it, and as none will be employed in working for the institution, but those whose character and qualifications are ascertained, and found to be satisfactory, it is confidently expected that the work done in the Montreal Repository, will be executed in the best manner and with the greatest despatch, and on terms, at least as moderate as it could be otherwise done.

In every point of view, the Repository is highly deserving of the public patronage. Those institutions, of which the object is to afford employment to the industrious to enable them to supply their wants with their own hands, to turn their labour and skill to the public benefit, & to maintain themselves in virtuous and honorable independence, possess at once all the merit of benevolence, and are free from the evil tendencies of direct charities. Of this nature is the Repository, which is calculated to afford employment and subsistance to dependant and industrious females, who have a pre-eminent claim to our benevolent regard, and of whom there is in every large city, a very considerable number, who often suffer severely from the want of regular employment, and a market for the various productions of their industry and taste. —Many of this most interesting class of persons would find in the Repository a protection against the miseries of want & dependance, and perhaps in many instances, the means of providing for themselves and those who depend on their labour in a comfortable manner.

It is hoped that the Ladies and Gentlemen of Montreal will unite in patronising an institution, as beneficial to the public in its tendency and effects as it is benevolent in its principle. The Ladies have already taken a generous interest in promoting its establishment: they have raised a subscription for the purpose of carrying it into operation, and many of the first rank have kindly promised it their particular countenance and support. Indeed it is impossible to contemplate the benevolent spirit and exertions of the female part of our Society without admiration and delight. All ranks and degrees of them seem to unite with unanimous feeling and zeal in every benevolent design. Most of our benevolent institutions have been suggested and matured by them. Their liberal contributions have raised or promoted the largest charitable funds in the city, and their active and enlightened zeal has administered it in such a way as to render it most effectual for the various and important objects of a charitable nature to which it has been directed. To their other acts of benevolence, they have now added this excellent and useful institution; and we confidently trust that the Gentlemen of Montreal will co-operate with them, in their endeavors to promote an institution which possesses so many advantages to recommend it, and which has been commenced under the auspices of the Ladies, and is calculated for the benefit of a most deserving and interesting class of Females.

By sending whatever work they may require to be done to the Repository, the gentlemen will have the satisfaction of doing good, at the same time that their orders will be executed in a manner which will we hope make it their interest, as well as their inclination to continue the favours to the Institution.

The Repository will be opened on Monday the 14th inst. for the purpose of receiving such articles as may be sent for sale; and also materials and orders for work from such Ladies or Gentlemen, as may wish to favor the Repository with their employment. But it will not be open for inspection until Monday's ensuing, when such as are desirous to purchase any of the articles deposited for sale and all who take an interest in the institution are invited to visit it.—Such females as wish to be employed in working for the Repository are requested to wait on Mrs. Gilchrist at her house in the St. Antoine Suburb, with their testimonials of character and qualifications.

Spontaneous combustion.—At my mills, there was an iron kettle used for holding ashes, it had remained with ashes in from the 5th mo. to the 9th mo. at which time flaxseed oil was by accident spilled into the ashes; in about 24 hours the ashes were found to be on fire, and wishing to have it fully ascertained, whether it was the oil which occasioned the ashes to take fire, I filled a kettle with cold dry ashes, in which I poured a pint of flaxseed oil, and in 24 hours I examined it, and found that as far as the oil had penetrated, the ashes were in a state of combustion, and on applying some shavings and chips of wood, it immediately caused them to blaze.

From an apprehension that many buildings have been consumed by fire from the foregoing cause, I have been induced to give publicity to the fact.

New South Wales.—The progress of the settlements in New South Wales has been so great, that the inhabitants are enabled to make exportations of surplus produce. The population of the territory is 25,050 souls, being an increase, in one year, of nearly 5000 inhabitants.

As a criterion of the luxuries enjoyed by the inhabitants in fruit, one garden, belonging to a gentleman a few miles from Sidney, contains the following extensive variety, and which are generally dispersed over the whole of New South Wales, viz. oranges, citrons, limes, pomegranates, loquatts, guavas, the olive, grapes of every species, pine-apples peaches, nectarines, apricots, apples, pears, plums, figs; English, Cape, and China mulberries; walnuts, Spanish chestnuts, almonds, medlars, raspberries, strawberries, melons, quinces, and the caper, with others of minor value; and such is the abundance of peaches, that the swine of the settlers are fed with them. In Van Dieman's Land the currant and gooseberry are particularly fine.

At an annual examination of the public schools at Parramatta, a black native girl, belonging to the Orphan School founded by Mrs. King, bore away the second prize; thus proving the aborigines are susceptible of sufficient mental improvement to adapt them to the purposes of civilized association.

A writer in the St. Louis Enquirer, (says the Boston Gazette) demonstrates the practicability and advantage of our trading to the East-Indies, by the Columbia and Missouri rivers. Time will work wonders. If our merchants find it to their interest to go this route, they will soon take measures to put it in execution. A respectable house in this town, not long since, received information of the arrival of a valuable ship at Canton through this medium.

ON BREAD STUFFS.

Extract from a correspondent in Kentucky, dated Lexington, 10th Jan. 1820, to a friend in Washington.

"I am not acquainted with ———, or any of the navy board, so would write to them on the subject of making two preparations of Indian corn a part of the sea stores for our ships, particularly on long voyages. I mean hominy & parched meal.

1st. Hominy, when well beaten, of good white flint-corn, and dried in the sun, after it is cleared of bran and corn, it is my opinion, will keep a great length of time. I have it in my family all the year, and find it as good in the fall as spring. Put up in tight barrels there would be no danger of its spoiling, and it would be an excellent article for the sailors to boil with their pork. Parched meal has long been used by the western people, and by the Indians time out of mind, and found very beneficial in long expeditions, the more especially when provisions began to get scarce, as a very small quantity will subsist a man many days. To prepare it, the corn should be first parched, and then ground very fine, and mixed with as much brown sugar as will make it agreeable—the usual mode here is 1 lb. of sugar the 'gallon measure, but many put more. A table spoonful of this mixture in a pint of cold water, is much better than a pint of coffee and chocolate, and would furnish an excellent beverage in stormy weather, when it is difficult to make coffee or chocolate. Should the above meet your approbation, and be found of any use to our navy, it will be highly gratifying to me."

IT having been suggested to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, that a general permission to Locate on the Waste Lands of the Crown, would be more acceptable to the Militia, than setting apart for that purpose a particular Tract in each District, as heretofore intended; NOTICE is hereby given, that the Militia who served during the late War with the United States of America, in the First Flank Companies, in the Provincial Artillery, in the Incorporated Regiment, in the Corps of Artillery Drivers, in the Provincial Dragoons, in the Marine and General Staff of the Militia, will, upon due Certificate of their respective Service from the Adjutant General, receive Tickets of Location from the Surveyor General, for the portion of Land ordered by His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and, on due proof of having performed the Settlement Duty, will receive Patent Grants.

N. B. By express Command of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, the Patents will be gratuitous, but the Settlement Duty in no case dispensed with.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Town of York.

GENTLEMEN,

A Report is in General circulation that our Parliament, in providing for the more equal Represention of the People, are about to bestow upon you the valuable privilege of sending a Member to the Commons House of Assembly. Should such a measure pass, you will necessarily be soon called to the first exercise of that privilege; and though others, I am told, have even been before me in declaring their intentions, I trust it can hardly be objected to me, that I have lost time in acquainting you with my determination to become a Candidate for the Honor of Representing you in Parliament.

It is usual on such occasions for the Candidate to say something of his principles and intentions, and perhaps also of his ability to be useful—but though young, I am too old in your acquaintance to make this necessary here. I have grown up with the Town of which you are the Inhabitants, and either in private acquaintance, or in the discharge of a public duty, I am known to very many, perhaps to all of you—I hope I possess your confidence and good opinion—I have endeavoured to deserve it.

Occupied in the discharge of an arduous situation, and engaged in a laborious profession, no private motives of interest or advancement prompt me to solicit this additional duty, honorable and important as it is, and concious that my character and conduct give me a fair claim to this mark of your confidence, disappointment to attaining it would occasion no further mortification than as it would give me fewer opportunities of proving with how much sincerity

I am

Gentlemen,
Your most obedient
Humble servant,

FROM THE LITERARY GAZETTE.

DRESDEN, Oct. 11, 1819.

Account of the Dessert Service, intended as a Present from the King of Saxony to the Duke of Wellington.

To day the exhibition of the dessert service made in the Royal Porcelain Manufactory, intended as a present to his Grace the Duke of Wellington, was closed; and these extraordinary and beautiful productions of Saxon industry were packed up in four chests of morocco, to be sent away. It was an interesting exhibition, and the Saloon in which these works of art were to be seen, was crowded with visitors. As there are in Dresden nineteen Saloons in the Japanese palace, which contain porcelain to the value of a million, from all quarters of the globe, and offer the technological observer, in the original forms, in Majolica, & even in Stestite vessels from China, the whole history of the invention of porcelain may be considered upon solid grounds.

The service consists of two large ice pails, tastefully made in the form of a vase, with allegorical figures on both sides; on one, the god of war is drawn by rams; on the other, Apollo instructed by the Centaur Chiron, after the well known Herculaneum picture. On the second, Julius Cæsar in his triumphal procession, holding the goddess of victory in his hands; and Augustus, drawn by the genius of victory, appears in all his glory. The strict allegorical representations, painted by eminent artists, are admired for the choice of the subjects, & the beauty of the execution.

The fruit dishes, fruit-baskets, and sugar-boxes of different forms and sizes, amounting to four and twenty pieces, have no paintings, but are richly gilded on a dead blue ground, and ornamented with the most elegant open work. But the most beautiful sight are a hundred and eight dessert plates, ornamented on the borders with an exquisite garland of laurels interwined with ribbands of lemniscus of the Saxon national colours. Sixty-four of these plates represent the most interesting prospects of Spanish cities, mountains, and sea-ports, from Laborde's Voyage Pittoresque, and several other splendid works and coloured drawings, by his Majesty's painter, Mr. Arnold, in Meissen, and six other skilful artists of the Meissen school, executed with the utmost delicacy of colouring. The Moorish monuments of Grenada, the Fernando-Gate at Burgos, (a most delightful night-piece,) and the views of Saragossa, Talavera, and other places which have become conspicuous in history by Wellington's deeds

It may be truly said, that landscape & prospect painting have never before produced any thing equal, as the greatest precision in the minutest details in the execution is admirably combined with tasteful composition and distribution of the colours. Four views of the Duke of Wellington's residence in London, towards Hyde Park and towards the Green Park, and his seat in the country, are very fine; they have been taken from the most accurate drawings. On twenty of the plates are painted the most beautiful views of Saxon castles, and the most striking scenery of the banks of the Upper Elbe, among the picturesques rocks and valies which are called the Saxon Switzerland, painted by Messrs. Nagel, Hottewisch, Lieschke, &c. with the most perfect correctness.

Four and twenty of the plates were particularly admired, which represented bottles and engagements in Spain, where Wellington has gathered laurels, after splendid English works and copper plates, drawn particularly by Arnold, Schenau, Eigly, Nagel, &c.—Groups have been selected from the most celebrated pictures of Wouverman, Bourguignoni, and others in the picture gallery, and adapted to the subject. Four views of the battle of Talavera are among the finest.

Besides the dessert service, a second royal order was executed for his Grace, by the Damask Manufactory, at Great Schonaw, near Zittau, by order of the banker, Mr Vonder Heyling. This was not indeed publicly shown, yet many persons saw it in the banker's house, and admired its tasteful finish; the beautiful selection of the pot ers, and the extraordinary size of a set of table linen, which may be called princely in every respect. It consists of six complete sets of napkins, each for six and twenty persons; to each a table-cloth, twenty ells (a Saxon ell is two feet) in length, and six ells in breadth.

Nothing can be more magnificent of the kind than these great damask table-cloths. On a ground strewed all over, but not overloaded, with stars, the arms of the Duke of Wellington, with a laurel wreath and other insignia, shine with the splendor of silver. On both ends, the insignia of war and peace grouped in a picturesque manner. Besides these, there are no other figures, which indeed do not seem to be at all suited to this kind of manufacture, not designed for hangings; an uncommonly elegant Arabesque border runs all round. The beauty of the effect arises from the brilliant pattern, which is a perfect imitation of relief upon a dead ground.

This kind of shadowing has been brought to astonishing perfection in Great Schonau.

Three very extraordinary improvements in the art of producing and multiplying impressions of engravings, have, during the past month, excited the attention of the scientific public. One of them is an American invention; the other is the contrivance of a Frenchman; and the third is an application of the art of stereotyping, practised by several persons in London. We will endeavour to convey to our readers a succinct view of the principles of each of these inventions, and at an early period we are promised details, which we shall hasten to lay before our readers:—The first of these interesting discoveries has been made by J. Perkins, a scientific mechanist of Philadelphia, who, from his pre-eminent skill, has for some time past been employed by the American Banks, in the fabrication of notes, by means which baffle the feeble combinations of forgery. It is the peculiar merit of Mr. Perkins' notes, that they are capable of exhibiting the highest perfection of the art of engraving; while at the same time every impression, though millions of them are required, is equal to a proof. This apparently impossible condition has been overcome by the masterly combinations of Mr. Perkins. His mode of proceeding is as follows; He first causes the subject to be engraved on a flat plate of soft steel, which, being duly hardened, is then capable of impressing a similar surface of soft steel in a cylindrical form. The cylinder in its turn being hardened, is then capable of impressing thin flat plates of soft steel, or copper-plates; and one cylinder can thus multiply steel or copper-plates, in any desirable number, equal in effect and delicacy to the first engraving. From these, of course, any number of impressions on paper may be taken, all fac similes of one another; and, if steel plates are used, they are all equal to proofs; or, if copper, they may be renewed as often as they begin to wear. The apparatus for transferring the impressions, as well as various apparatus for producing endless lines in beautiful scrolls, and for other purpose, all of American invention, are highly creditable to the genius and manufactures of the United States: but Mr. P. has proved his fertility of contrivance by inventing a machine for copper plate printing, by which he is enabled with thirty six plates and the labour of four men, to produce one hundred and eight impressions in a minute; six thousand in an hour; and sixty thousand in a working day. This machine consists of a wheel of four feet diameter, on the periphery of which he fixes thirty-six plates; and then by supplying an endless reel of patent paper, which is made to descend between the plates on the surface of the wheel, and a suitable apparatus for inking the plates as they pass round, in the manner of Cowper's printing machine & of calico-printing, he is enabled to take good impressions in the above surprising num-ers. Mr. Perkins with his partner, Mr. Fairman, an able engraver on steel, are at present engaged in submitting specimens to the Bank committee, before whom a competition exists between these gentlemen, and Messrs. Applegarth and Cowper, and some other artists and mechanists, the full developement of which will afford curious matter for the history of the arts. The second discovery to which we allude, is that of a French artists who, by employing an elastic plate, on which to take an impression, and then stretching the plate, is enabled to retake another impression from the expanded figure, from which second impression he then prints impressions of an enlarged size, corresponding line for line with an original small engraving. In the way in which the discovery was first announced, the public were led to suppose that a reality existed in the art of enlarging, and that a power was discovered of using great and small impressions from the same plate on the same substance. The time, however, is arrived, when enlarging in mechanics as well as philosophy, must be abandoned, in spite of the force of prejudice with which it has been called learned still cling to their darlings,—attraction, gravitation, affinity, repulsion, &c. &c. The third invention to which we have alluded, is a variation of the art of stereotyping. It is said to be practicable, so commensurate are the qualities of plasticity and cohesion of certain stones, that the same materials which affords a matrix of pages of types, are also sufficiently delicate to produce a fac relief of a copper-plate, from which impressions can be cast and re cast, capable of being worked at a printing press, and of producing fair impressions on paper of the original design. For this improvement the public are indebted to Messrs. Applegarth and Cowper: but it is practised by other persons in considerable perfection, and seem likely to be useful in augmenting the graphic illustration of books without increasing their cost.

The Mails.—Within these few months many new and excellent arrange-ments have been adopted throughout the country for expediting the mails. Liverpool now receives all its letters, with the exception of the York mail, early in the morning, instead of at various hours in the day, and dispatches them many hours later (after Exchange time) than it formerly did; with a dispatch one day later of its foreign letters intended for the continent. A complete and direct moving chain of mail-coaches, proceeds about 1000 miles from Penzance to Truro, by Bristol, Birmingham, Manchester, Carlisle, Edinburgh, and Aberdeen. By a late junction at Manchester, Scotland receives and dispatches letters one day quicker each way; and by a newly established mail-coach from Aberdeen, travelling daily to the Land's-end and Truro, through a country no stage coach ever went, and where in general no post-houses were kept, in most instances the letters reach that extremity of the island several days sooner. The counties of Caithness, Ross, and Sutherland, each subscribed £200 towards any loss the proprietors of thus mail coach might sustain.

LONDON, Dec. 29.

SAFETY FROM FIRE.

We have lately seen with pleasure, an invention of Messrs. J. Glenney & Co. that promises the greatest degree of security against fire, and serves as an alarm in cases of house-breaking. It is extremely simple and ingenious. In case of fire it instantly awakes the party in whose sleeping room it is placed, immediately lights a lamp, makes known the hour of the night, and not only that a fire has commenced, but in what room; and so promptly is the information given that it is presumed a fire can seldom happen or do much damage where this Machine is placed.—THE NATIONAL FIRE OFFICE, under whose patronage the Inventors have prosecuted and ushered their Invention to the public eye, have had the first erected on their own premises, No. 38, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, and permit it to be seen by any one, between the hours of 12 and 2, to promote at once the interest of the Inventor, and the welfare of the public.

Friday, a Privy Council was held at Dublin Castle, when the baronies of Bellynoe, Dunamoe, Lillyan, and Tynquin, in the county of Galway, were under the Act of the 54th of the King, declared in a state of disturbance. An extraordinary establishment of police will accordingly be formed in those baronies.

LONDON, Dec. 22.

Committal to the Tower.—We have received from a confidential, and we believe, an authentic source, private intelligence that it is intended that a motion should be made in the house of lords on Monday, for the committal of Sir Francis Burdett and another individual (who has also been named to us) the former on account of his having taken the chair at the meeting relative to the alledged breach of privilege in the case of Mr. Hobhouse.

Monday, Filewood, the principal turnkey of the king's bench, received intimation to be prepared to give up his apartments over the lobby at an hour's notice. These rooms were formerly occupied, at separate times, by captain Perry, lord Thanet, Mr. Horne Tooke, and Mr. Hunt; and the public may, therefore, be prepared to hear of some state prisoner being shortly sent there.

Dec. 25.

Letters from Scotland received to-day inform us that the trial of George Kinloch, Esq. of Kintoch, which was to have come on Wednesday last, and which, of course, excited an unusual degree of interest, in consequence of the charges of sedition preferred against him, for certain expressions which he used at a late Reform Meeting held at Dundee, did not take place. Mr. Kinloch did not appear, and a sentence of outlawry, was accordingly pronounced against him, at the same time that his sureties were forfeited.

A very extraordinary ear of oats has lately been sent to Mr. Podbutter's Museum in Kendal. It measures sixteen inches in length, and contains nearly four hundred perfect grains

The Irish Herald of December 25th, says, that "Mr. Indelon is now singing at Liverpool, from which he will soon proceed for the United States of America." The same paper contains the following astonishing instance of Longevity:—There is now living at Caerphilly, Glamorganshire, an old woman, named Mary Lewis, and her four daughters, whose united ages amount to 340 years. There are also fifteen grand-children, ten great grand-children, and one great great grand-child; making in all thirty descendants now living and in good health; a circumstance scarcely credible, and very rarely if ever equalled.

The following is become a favorite toast in convivial, loyal parties—"The British Constitution—and may we never be obliged to HUNT for Liberty."

Extract of a letter, Corfu, Nov. 2.

According to accounts which have arrived from Santa Maura, the insurrection which lately broke forth in that Island is far from being quelled. In the actions which took place in the beginning of last month, between the British troops and the peasantry, the former had 6 men killed, and 23 wounded, of the 28th regiment.—Reinforcements having been received from Corfu, martial law was proclaimed, and a strong detachment was sent to the village of Sfakeoires, where the insurrection commenced, for the purpose of making a severe example of the mal-contents.—The inhabitants abandoned their dwellings, and fled to the mountains. The houses of the most active of the insurgents were burnt down, and it is said that trees and vineyards were destroyed. Notwithstanding this, the insurrection seems to have extended throughout the Island, and serious alarms are entertained respecting its results, as the Island contains from 5,900 to 6,000 men capable of bearing arms, exclusive of the women, who take a very active part with them. To counteract the effects produced in the other islands by this insurrection, Sir Thomas Maitland, sent orders to the different local Governments to adopt the most prompt and conciliatory measures for tranquilizing the minds of the people; but from the existing state of ferment here, as well as else where, it is very obvious that these concessions ought to have been made much earlier in order to accomplish that object.

In addition to the above, the Drapeau Blanc, a French Journal, contains an article from Trieste, stating, that on the 4th November last, a large body of the country people rushed from the mountains upon the town of Santa Maura, and that in a severe contest, which took place in the streets, 53 of the English were killed.

The Navigation Bill.—A Bill concerning Navigation, was introduced into the House of Representatives, on the 15th inst. of which the following are the principal provisions:—

The first section provides, that from and after the first day of September next, every port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be closed against the entrance of every vessel, (whether owned by foreigners, or wholly or in part by a citizen or citizens of the United States,) coming from any port or place in his Britannic Majesty's possessions in any of the Bahama Islands, Turks Island, the Islands of Bermuda and Newfoundland, on the continent of North America, or in any of the Islands on the coast thereof, and likewise to every such vessels as shall, in the course of her voyage, have touched at, or cleared out from, any such port or place; and every such vessel, so excluded from the port or ports within the jurisdiction of the United States, as shall enter, or attempt to enter, the same, in violation of this act, shall, with her tackle and furniture, together with the cargo on board such vessels, be forfeited to the United States.

The Second provides, that the owner, consignee, or agent of every vessel, on board of which there shall be, for exportation, any article, of the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, shall, before such vessel be cleared outward at the Custom-House, give bond, in a sum double the value of such articles, with one or more sureties, to the satisfaction of the collector, that the article or articles so taken on board such vessel, for exportation, shall be landed in some port or place, other than those mentioned in the first Section; and, that any such vessel as shall sail, or attempt to sail, from any port or place within the jurisdiction of the United States, without complying with the provisions of this section, shall, with her tackle, apparel, & furniture, together with the article or articles on board the same, be forfeited to the United States.

The Fifth, provides, that nothing in this act shall be so construed, as to prevent the entrance of Packets and vessels bearing despatches, and having on board neither cargo nor merchandize; nor so as to violate the Treaty of Commerce between this country and Great Britain.

The Sixth and last, provides for the repeal of the Navigation Act of April, 1818, from and after the 1st of September next, and also for the recovery of all penalties, that shall then have occurred under that Act.

FROM LOWER-CANADA.

From the Quebec Mercury.

The following Resolve and Address we consider as very creditable to the Quebec Emigrants' Society, and may be gratifying to such of our readers as have not had an opportunity of seeing them. The Address was presented upon at a full meeting of the Society, which took place on the 11th October last. We flatter ourselves that it will have the effect of preventing many unfortunate and inconsiderate people from blindly emigrating to America, without sufficient means, or any determined plan of operations.

Resolved.—That it appears expedient to the Meeting that an Address should be drawn up, to the Public of Great Britain and Ireland, soliciting the contributions of the charitable in aid of the funds of the Society; and, at the same time, stating the actual circumstances of distress which many emigrants have been placed in, and the resources on which they ought to be possessed upon their arrival, to give them a fair chance of ultimate success in establishing themselves in this country.

ADDRESS.

The Members of the Quebec Emigrants' Society, in carrying the above resolution into effect, are anxious to have it understood, in the first place, that it is by no means the principle of their body, nor the object of the present measure, to discourage Emigrants. On the contrary, they profess themselves deeply sensible of the benefits thence resulting to these Colonies—they truly appreciate these benefits; they would rejoice also in contributing to relieve their Mother-Country from the evils of a redundant population; and they would feel that they had much to answer for, were they to become instrumental in checking this valuable influx of inhabitants into the country, the very face of which invites them, or it were, to the experiment, and opens to their industry vast tracts of land unreclaimed from the wilderness, which are capable, under the hand of Art, of yielding the means of sustenance, and the comforts of life, to many millions of human beings.

But the local experience of the last few years has amply shewn that some measures are necessary to place the system of Emigration under proper regulations—to provide against many evils & much misery arising from the ignorance & mismanagement of the persons who emigrate—and to preserve, with the smallest possible deduction, the advantages on either side accruing.

Under the influence of these impressions, the Society proceed to state, in a specific form, tho objects of the present address—the first of which is, to make an appeal to the compassion and generosity of the British and Irish Public, in behalf of their own countrymen, arriving as strangers in this Province.

The number of Emigrants who have arrived at the Port of Quebec, since the opening of the navigation for the present season, amounts to upwards of 12,000, which probably exceeds two thirds of the population of the City itself.—It will readily be believed, that a very considerable proportion of these are utterly destitute upon their arrival—that such rapid and continued accessions to the number of candidates for labour, preclude the possibility of answering the demand for employment—that the scanty and injudicious preparations for the voyage, the crouded and dirty state of the ships, combining with the change of climate, (though the climate of this country is itself healthy) prove the causes of much debility and disease among the Emigrants—that the death of individuals throws whole families upon the pubic—that shipwreck, with all its accompaniments of loss and hardship, occasionally completes the catalogue of ill—and that, especially as the Winter closes in, the Inhabitants of this City have upon their hands an accumulation of misery and distress, for which they are without means to provide any adequate remedy. It has, in fact, been found necessary here, independantly of all the other public and private charity extended to settlers, to open a temporary asylum expressly for destitute strangers; a great part of which is occupied as an hospital, where, at this date, there are between 70 and 80 patients. And had not His Grace the late Governor in Chief, with his wonted benevolence, permitted the use of some empty buildings belonging to Government, and provided the attendance of the Medical Staff, with certain other advantages, it would have been found impossible to afford even the degree of relief which has been given.

The next object of this Address, is to request that steps may be taken to circulate the requisite information among the lower classes at home, and especially in Ireland; in order that it may be generally understood:—

I. Under what circumstances they may be warrantably encouraged to emigrate.

II. Under what circumstances they ought to be deterred from the attempt.

III. What knowledge ought to be possessed, what rules are to be followed, & what plans avoided by those who do emigrate.

The Society therefore beg leave to state their opinion, that persons with families, possessing a sufficient sum to support them for one year after their arrival in this country—or single men, with a provision something less, who are able bodied, and either expert in Agriculture or masters of any of the common mechanical trades—provided they are of steady correct, industrious habits, and of enterprizing characters, may fairly be encouraged to transfer their homes to this country, and to expect a better fortune than is likely to await them by any opening presented in their own. In many cases, it would be highly useful, if the funds of the Society could be made capable of rendering some degree of assistance to persons of this description.

But with respect to persons differently situated, and of a different stamp—persons who abandon their homes in the expectation of relief from charity—because they are not thriving where they are; and who find upon their arrival a destitute condition, and unable to struggle with difficulties which can promise them only a miserable increased misery; and to be witnessed, of those who have suffered hither by false representations, but whose character, upon their very arrival, has lost the means of returning. We have actually, in some instances been obliged to employ their time to send back deluded and helpless families, who had severed themselves from the dependence which they could look for support in this world. From the public papers, the numbers of those who have left the United States are strikingly exhausted means to return. It is important to impress the minds of those there are three articles of which absolutely necessary to the comfort of life itself in this climate, and which inferior provision will answer the purposes of existence in other countries, namely of clothing, fuel, and shelter or lodging; to which it may be added, that there are various sources of employment for the Poor, connected with Agriculture and navigation, which are at present suspended during a Canadian winter.

The cases, however of the above description in this country in a very distressed condition, are not to be supplied by the want of information which the parties act. The vessel sails, which she is bound, as it respects their ulterior prospects, is frequently a matter of considerable moment to be their endeavour to make them, as much as possible, on their arrival, the open portion of the country. And it is a very common thing for that emigrants are brought to a wrong destination is in some parts of the United States, or of the British Provinces—Nova Scotia or New Brunswick—where they have particular inducements to gain which points from their friends, perhaps a matter of much greater importance and expence, than to go direct from Great Britain or Ireland. The woman, with families, come out to join their husbands at the place mentioned, have been left there, and that their object would be entirely frustrated by taking a passage to that which they have reached, by the only means of proceeding further.

It is essential, therefore, that persons emigrating to America should be provided with some degree of general information. And if they have formed what government to place themselves in this quarter of the globe, the Society honestly recommended them to bear from changing master, those who have recently landed in the United States, it is generally known to members of that large numbers have taken advantage in resuming their journey, have made application to the Consul at New York, for assistance and removal into Upper Canada, thereby disproving an opinion, which has a tendency general influence, as to the inducements of Foreign Emigration.

With respect to that fate of families which have been left to—the husband, or the wife, having gone to try the country, and having afterwards for his home, perhaps returning to fetch the family—Society can by no means remedy the evil by experiment, unless the public can be trusted that a considerable sacrifice will not eventually follow. Not only is much time lost in the season which renders it necessary, but not only is the difficulty of ascertaining a removal across the country considerably increased by this time, but constantly happens, that the husband, on their arrival at Quebec, finds it impossible to request that steps may be taken to circumscribe and, at the same time, stating l circumstances of distress which igrants have been placed in, and rces of which they ought to be upon their arrival, to give them nce of ultimate success in es themselves in this country.

to struggle with difficulties, the Society can promise them only disappointment & increased misery; and the case is daily to be witnessed, of those who have been lured hither by false and interested representations, but whose wish and prayer, upon their very arrival, is to obtain the means of returning. The Society have actually, in some instances, been obliged to employ their funds in sending back deluded and helpless beings who had severed themselves from all the dependence which they could count upon for support in this world. It appears also, from the public papers, that considerable numbers of those who have emigrated to the United States are straining their exhausted means to return. It is very important to impress the conviction, that there are three articles of expence absolutely necessary to the preservation of life itself in this climate, of which a much inferior provision will answer the purposes of existence in others; the articles namely of clothing, fuel, and a compact lodging; to which it must be added that there are various sources of employment for the Poor, connected with husbandry and navigation, which are wholly suspended during a Canadian winter.

The cases, however of those who arrive in this country in a forlorn and distressed condition, are infinitely multiplied by the want of information under which the parties act. The season at which the vessel sails, and the port to which she is bound, as its situation respects their ulterior progress, are two points of considerable moment. It ought to be their endeavour to have before them, as much as possible, upon their arrival, the open portion of the year, And it is a very common circumstance, that emigrants are brought here, whose destination is in some part of the United States, or of the British Provinces of Nova Scotia or New Brunswick, where they have particular inducements to go; to gain which points from Quebec, is perhaps a matter of much greater difficulty and expence, than to go direct to them from Great Britain or Ireland. Several women, with families, coming lately to join their husbands at the points abovementioned, have been led to suppose, that their object would be readily attained by taking a passage to Quebec, which they have reached without the means of proceeding farther.

It is essential, therefore, that persons emigrating to America should be furnished with some degree of geographical information. And if they hesitate under what government to place themselves in this quarter of the globe, it may be very honestly recommended to them, to forbear from changing masters. Of those who have recently made their election in the United States, it is a fact personally known to members of the Society, that large numbers have found their advantage in resuming their allegiance, and have made application to the British Consul at New York, for aid to effect a removal into Upper Canada; practically disproving an opinion, which has a pretty general influence, as to the superior inducements of Foreign America.

With respect to that frequent separation of families which has been adverted to—the husband, or the father, coming alone to try the country, and sending afterwards for his house-hold, or perhaps returning to fetch them out, the Society can by no means recommend this experiment, unless the parties are so situated that a considerable present sacrifice will not eventually distress them. Not only is much time lost, perhaps at a season which renders it highly valuable—not only is the difficulty and expence attending a removal across the seas, inevitably increased by this practice; but it constantly happens, that the family upon their arrival at Quebec, are utterly at a loss to trace the person whom they have come to seek: and there are some instances within the knowledge of the Society, where the hope of doing so seems almost gone.

It might be productive of incalculable benefit to the cause of Emigration, if certain Associations were formed in different places at home, composed of intelligent and benevolent individuals, who would open a correspondence with the Society here, and furnish information to the parties upon the spot. The materials for such associations exist abundantly in Great Britain and Ireland; and the Quebec Emigrants' Society entertain a confident hope, that neither the distance at which they act, nor the inferiority of their own pretensions, will cause their appeal to be disregarded, or deprive them of that encouragement and assistance which they anxiously solicit. They trust they are engaged in a good work, and in the prosecution of their endeavours they look to the co-operation of good men, and the blessing of God above.

They ought not to sail later than the month of June.—Nathaniel Atcheson, Esq. Great Winchester Street, London, has been requested to communicate with H. M. Government upon the subject of this Address, and to receive communications from individuals at home.

Melancholy Accident.— On Saturday last, about eight o'clock in the morning, as a number of workmen were employed on a stage erected under the Bridge built (on Bragg's plan) over the Chaudiere, in the Parish of Ste. Marie, Nouvelle Beauce, a considerable portion of the Bridge gave way and came down with a terrible crash, instantly killing one man, named Luke Murphy; another, John Dunn, survived the accident only an hour and a half; two others named Keble Parker and John Slaven, were dangerously bruised, and not expected to live; P. Nichols wounded, but no bones fractured.—The Bridge was on the point of being completed; the workmen were in the act of working out the supporters, to lower the two half arches, in order to unite them; but unfortunately sufficent caution was not observed, in letting down the southern half, the consequence was, it did not meet the opposite half, and 100 feet of the bridge came down upon the unfortunate victims. Only one of the sufferers is married; we have not heard whether he left any children. The river at this part is about 330 feet wide.

We have since learned that of the three unfortunate men who survived, two have died.

IX. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That no person qualified to vote in any Town, as aforesaid, shall be allowed to vote in the County in which such Town is situated, upon the same Freehold which may qualify him to vote for a Member to Represent the said Town.

X. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the number of souls contained in any Town which may hereafter elect a Member, as aforesaid, shall not be considered as a part of the number of souls required to give the County in which such Town shall be situated two Members.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of YORK & SIMCOE.

Gentlemen,

Having been honored with your confidence, and called by your suffrages to the very honorable duty of Representing you in the present Parliament, I must expect that my prospect of attaining to the same distinguished station in the next, will depend altogether on the sense you entertain of the manner in which I have performed the trust you reposed in me.

Placed more immediately under the eye of my Constituents, it is altogether in your power, as it is entirely your province, to estimate the part I have taken.

It is far from me to presume, that with every wish to promote your best interests, I may not in many cases, have erred; but I may at least be permitted to say, what I can declare with sincerity, that I am conscious of nothing which I wish to excuse.

Among the objects which have occupied the attention of the present Parliament, they have wisely provided for the more equal Representation of the People; and, in consequence of the provision they have made, you will have the privilege of electing an additional Member to guard your interests, and consult for the welfare of the Province.

Several of my friends, I observe, animated with a very praise-worthy ambition, have eagerly presented themselves to your choice; my actual occupation in the present Parliament, put it out of my power to address myself so immediately to you on the subject of the next; but I thought I might securely trust to the steadiness and sincerity of that attachment, which I was happy to witness on a former occasion, and which I will not believe so fickle that it could be shaken by an idle and absurd reports which may happen to have found their way to you.

I cannot but consider as highly honorable, a situation, to which the good opinion of my fellow-subjects is the only passport; and I shall be happy to receive a proof of your continued confidence, by being chosen as one of your Representatives in the ensuing Parliament.

I will make no boast to you of my independence—you know the nature of my employment and resources, and that my welfare must depend on yours; at the same time, I trust you think me much above any unworthy attempt to court popularity, by claiming credit for greater purity of intention or honesty of conduct, because I do not happen to be honored with any place of trust or confidence under a Government whose only object is and must be to promote the happiness and prosperity of the People.

I am, Gentlemen,
your most
faithful Servant,
PETER ROBINSON.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The following interesting anecdote of the father of our Republic, we find in Bisset's continuation of Hume; and we do not recollect to have met with it in any other place. It illustrates in a most forcible manner the over ruling hand of Providence, in directing the operations of a man's mind, in moments when he is least of all aware of it. This curious incident, from which it appears that the life of the hero was in imminent danger, took place during some skirmishing a day or two previous to the battle of Brandywine, and is detailed in a letter from Maj. Furguson, who commanded a rifle corps in advance of the Hessians, under Gen Kuyphausen, to his friend in England. The letter in question gives the following account. "We had not lain long when a rebel officer remarkable by a Hussar dress, passed towards our army, within a hundred yards of my right flank, not perceiving us. He was followed by another dressed in dark green and blue, mounted on a bay horse, with a remarkable large high cocked hat. I ordered three good shots to steal near to them and fire at them, but the idea disgusted me; I recalled the order. The hussar in returning made a circuit, but the other passed within a hundred yards of us; upon which I advanced from the woods towards him. Upon my calling, he stopped; but after looking at me proceeded. I again drew his attention, and made signs to him to stop, levelling my piece at him; but he slowly cantered his way. As I was within the distance at which, in the quickest firing, I could have lodged half a dozen balls in or about him before he was out of my reach I had only to determine; but it was not pleasant to fire at the back of an unoffending individual, who was acquainting himself very coolly of his duty, so I let him alone. The day after, I had been telling this story to some wounded officers who lay in the same room with me, when one of our surgeons who had been dressing the wounded rebel officers came in and told us, that they had been informing him, that General Washington was all the morning with the light troops, and only attended by a French officer in a hussar dress, he himself dressed and mounted in every point as above described. I am not sorry that I did not know at the time who it was." Con. Mirror.

We have received accounts from India of a recent date, some of which are of a curious and interesting description. Of the fall of the fortress of Asseerghur, our readers have already been informed; but of the death of the Chief of the Pindarees (consequent upon that event) and of the remarkable circumstances attending it, we had not till this arrival become possessed.—The following article upon this subject we extract from the Calcutta Government Gazette:—

* * * * * It appears that the Ex-Rajah, in his flight from the hills, was accompanied by Cheeto, the Pindaree Chief, and his son Mahommud Punnah, and that the Killedar, in opening his gates to give protection to Appah Sahib, consented to admit him only, telling Cheeto to wait for a few days. The vicinity of the fort offered no asylum for the rejected fugitives, in consequence of the approach of our detachments in pursuit. The father and son separated; and Cheeto alone, on horseback, penetrated a dangerous jungle, in the hopes of effecting his escape. A few days afterwards his horse was discovered grazing near the margin of the forest, and upon him were found a bag of 250 rupees in cash, several seal rings, and some documents containing promises of reward from the Ex rajah for the services which Cheeto might perform in support of his cause against the authority of the British Government. Search was immediately made for the Pindaree, and the footsteps of a tiger having been observed, the track was followed, and some articles of dress met with on the ground, covered with blood. A little further on, the people found what they concluded to be his bones, and soon afterwards the head entire, the features of which were recognized to be those of Cheeto.

"The account of the Pindaree's death by a tiger, when first mentioned, appeared to be impossible; but it is conceived that the circumstances here noticed could hardly have been brought together by human contrivance for the purpose of checking all further inquiries about him. Above all, it is not to be believed that the money, and seals, and the engagements with the Ex-rajah, would have been left upon his horse, if the object had been to circulate a false rumour of his death. The money, especially at such a period, would have been sacrificed. The life of Cheeto, passed as it has been in outrage, plunder, and cruelty, having terminated in the terrible manner above described, what a lesson does it set forth to men of similar habits and rapacity! A short time ago he was at the head of 30,000 horsemen, a triumphant freebooter; —he became a fugitive, and his existence has been closed within the grasp of a tiger!

"Mahommud Punnah, the son, was taken prisoner soon after he left the gates of Asseeghur, and a competent sum has been generously presented to him, to enable him to bury the mangled remains of his father.

Extraordinary Abstinence.

Died, at St. Jacques, on the 20th inst: JOHN PORTIS, a native of France. He had resided in this province about thirty years. In the early part of his life he had been a soldier in the service of His Majesty Louis the 16th; but left his native country before the Revolution, and went to Newfoundland where he lived some years: from thence he went to New England, where he remained nearly two years; and since then has always resided in the above parish, in the County of Leinster. Having no family, he purchased a small farm and, leased it to a person who, in consideration of the usufruct, was to provide for all his necessary wants. About two years previous to his decease, he become very devout; shewing, however, some degree of intellectual derangement, which manifested itself in penance of the most humiliating description. He became, at this time, an almost constant companion of his confessor—would frequently take up his lodging in out houses and even stables—and would sometimes be heard praying in the church, at midnight, in a loud tone, to the surprise and consternation of the villagers. During the six or seven months preceding his death, he resided constantly at his own house, and, for 2 years previous to that event, eat of no other food than bread. Some time about the beginning of last August, he adopted the resolution of eating only a small quantity of bread and butter, twice in each 24 hours; this he continued until the 15th of last December. He then descended to one meal only of dry bread, per day; in which he persevered till the expiration of the month. His last morsel was taken about 11 o'clock in the forenoon of December 31st 1819; after which, he could never be persuaded to taste any nutriment, solid or liquid; thus having endured an abstinence of 50 days, and about 16 hours, for he died at about three o'clock A.M. on the 20th instant!!! During the first 36 days of his fast, he went regularly to a small brook, at which he would drink by the aid of a small piece of shoe leather, (which held about the same quantity as a wine glass) thrice each day, and at each time taking thrice that quantity; after which, he became too weak to continue to make these visits, and would ever after drink only once a day of water brought to him in a pail; but never omitting to make use of his piece of leather for this purpose. When importuned to speak, he would only say "Retire." This is probably the first & only instance of a person living so long without nutriment of any kind; but how ever strange, it can be confirmed by the most indubitable testimony.

Communicated by a gentleman of the village, whose veracity we have no reason to doubt.—Can. Courant.

There has been lately published by Relier Dumas, 'A memoir upon Corsica.' —It contains one chapter which may be read by all.—'The manners of the Corsicans.' It will be read with pleasure by those who are fond of observing the progress of civilization, and who seek in what people are, what they may, and what they will become. If there existed a comparative scale to determine this progress, it would be difficult to assign the proper place to the Corsicans. It is neither civilization in fancy, nor civilization degraded, much less civilization at its highest degrees of perfection—It consist only, properly speaking, of a very numerous union of families who have several interests in common, but who easily divide, and all whose care consists in maintaining a state of reciprocal independence, which is often transformed to a state of hostility—"The Corsican," says Mr. Relier Dumas, "rarely forgets the good he has received, never the evil. Trusting little to the judgement of tribunals, he relies upon himself for the success of his revenge; he considers his honor concerned in it—whether the injury be personal, or concern his relation to the fourth or even the fifth degree, he is equally bound to revenge it—a man dies cattiva morte, that is, assassinated. In some cantons the wife dips her linen in the blood, shows it religiously to her children, till they shall have revenged the death of their father. Their blows must if possible fall upon the assassin; but if he escapes, one of his relations must be sacrificed to their implacable resentment. It is only then that they may cut their beards that they have worn as a mark of affliction; joy returns to the family, and every one resumes his accustomed occupation. Hostilities once commenced between two families, they are kept up till a solemn treaty of peace is brought about—these treaties are made with all possible solemnity, drawn up & signed with all the forms customary in similar cases between nations, but that they may be faithfully observed, it is necessary that there have been as many killed on one side as the other. Every definitive treaty without this, is considered shameful to the side which has the most."

The author mentions, that "a captain named Morelli was assassinated two years since, at Bonifacio. Since this event, the first people of the city are afraid to go out of it. The people of Fill-Morbo, who are fellow citizens of Morelli, have sworn to revenge his death, upon the best inhabitants of Bonifacio. A noble blood is necessary, they say, to pay for that of Morelli."

"An inhabitant from the country was returning from Bastia to his native village —a storm came on, the night closed in, and he was bewildered. By the help of the lightning, he perceived a house, he reached it, knocked at the door—it proved to be the dwelling of his mortal enemy. "Enter" said this man to him, "and share my supper and my bed; tomorrow if the weather permit, you shall continue your journey." The repast was prepared, they slept together, and the next day the traveller returned safely to his home. Some days after, he was assassinated by the same man who had entertained him so hospitably."

At a late fair in England, three watches were stolen. All means to discover the thief were ineffectual. A few days afterwards a stranger having stopped at a public house in the town, in a few minutes an eruption of a blood vessel caused his immediate death. On examining his person, the lost property was found.

THE undersigned, Administrator and Administratrix of the estate of the late George Bond, of the Town of York, Blacksmith, hereby give notice to all persons indebted to the said Estate, forthwith to make payment of their respective accounts; and those to whom said Estate is indebted to present theirs for payment.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

THE General Election of Representatives of the People in the House of Assembly in this Province being near at hand, I take an early opportunity of announcing to you my intention of becoming a Candidate for your suffrages, there being a Bill before Parliament which will encrease your Representation.

I hope my character both public and private, is such as to entitle me to a participation in your confidence; & though I hold a highly honorable and responsible situation under His Majesty's Government, I trust the same Integrity and Exertion I have always manifested when serving my King, will continue to animate and guide my conduct when defending, maintaining, and supporting the Rights and Privileges of my Fellow Subjects, my family, and myself, which must be and are the same.

Should you do me the Honor to elect me one of your Representatives, to serve you in Parliament, I shall, to the utmost of my power, endeavour to deserve a continuation of your favor, should I live to be a Candidate at a future Election.

I have the Honor to be,
with unfeigned sincerity,
your most faithful and
obedient Servant,
HENRY J. BOULTON.
York, March 3d. 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

I acknowledge great pride in having been twice solicited by many of you to offer myself to your choice for the important and honorable service of Representative for these Counties in the House of Assembly. Having declined the first, I cannot withdraw myself from this second invitation, which can alone be founded on the expectation of rigid integrity towards the Constitution of the Country: I therefore now solicit this choice, humbly presuming that my hopes are well founded, and that yours will not be disappointed.

Though twenty years residence here has necessarily honored me with a personal acquaintance with most of you, I cannot dare to think that this supersedes all necessity of declaring to you my sentiments generally on Legislation in this Province. I therefore profess to you an affectionate regard for British liberty and British Constitution; and that your Representative, whoever he may be, should, in the discharge of his duties, never forget that these two objects of his care are, the one to the other, the best and only Bulwark, and that to preserve the latter ever pure, the first must be preserved unwounded. I know, Gentlemen, that your good sense convinces you that it is not the duty of your Representative to oppose, through a spirit of faction, the fair, beneficial, and legitimate objects of the Administration; but you also know that the purest Administration requires a vigilant activity on the part of all its constitutional checks.

It will, Gentlemen, perhaps be said to you, that I hold an appointment under the Crown; true, an honorable one.—I feel thankful to the Administration that gave it, and the Government that has continued it to me; but your choice will necessarily remove the objection, (if it be any in your estimation,) as the Office must, in the event of my Election, be surrendered.

I will at present only add, that whatever be the event, the prosperity of the Province at Large, and of these Counties in particular, will, during my life, always be an object of earnest anxiety to me.

I have the Honor to be,
Gentlemen,
your very obedient Servant,
WM. WARREN BALDWIN.

FROM EUROPE.

ST HELENA.
COURT MARTIAL.

At a Court-martial held on board his Majesty's ship Conqueror, in St. Helena-roads, on the 30th day of August, and continued till the 2d of September, to try Mr. John Stokoe, surgeon of the said ship, for improper conduct with regard to certain particulars relative to his intercourse with the French prisoners detained at the island of St. Helena, and on the following charges:—

For having on or about the 17th of January last, when permitted, or ordered, by Rear-Admiral Plapin, Commander in Chief of his Majesty's ships and vessels at the Cape of Good Hope, and the seas adjacent, &c. to visit Longwood, for the purpose of affording medical assistance to General Bonaparte, then represented as being dangerously ill, communicated with the said General or his attendants, upon subjects not at all connected with medical advice, contrary to standing orders in force for the government of his Majesty's naval officers at St. Helena.

2d. For having, on or about the said day, on receiving communications, both in writing and verbally, from some of the French prisoners at Longwood, taken notice of, and given an answer to, such communications, previous to making the same known to the Commander-in-Chief, contrary to the said standing orders.

3d. For having, in pursuance of such unauthorized communication, signed a paper, purporting to be a bulletin of General Buonoparte's health, and delivered the same to the said General or his attendants, contrary to the said orders, and to his duty as a British naval officer.

4th. For having in such bulletin, stated facts relative to the health of General Bonaparte, which did not fall under his, the said Mr. John Stokoe's, own observation, and which, as he afterwards acknowledged, were dictated or suggested to him by the said General, or his attendants, and for having signed the same as if he had himself witnessed the said facts, which was not the truth, and was inconsistent with his character and duty as a British naval officer.

5th. For having, in the said bulletin, inserted the following paragraph:—"The more alarming symptom is, that which was experienced in the night of the 16th, a recurrence of which may soon prove fatal, particularly if medical assistance is not at hand," intending thereby, contrary to the character and duty of a British officer, to create a false impression, or belief, that Gen. Bonaparte was in imminent or considerable danger, and that no medical assistance was at hand, he, the said Mr. John Stokoe, not having witnessed any such symptom, and knowing that the state of the patient was so little urgent, that he was four hours at Longwood before he was admitted to see him, and further knowing that Dr. Verling was at hand, and ready to attend, if required, in any such emergency.

6th. For having, contrary to his duty, communicated to General Bonaparte, or his attendants, information relative to certain books, letters and papers, said to have been sent from Europe for the said persons, and which had been intercepted by the Governor of St. Helena, and for having conveyed to the said General or his attendants, some information respecting their money concerns, contrary to his duty, which was to afford medical advice only.

7th. For having, contrary to his duty, and to the character of a British naval officer, communicated to the said General Bonaparte or his attendants, an infamous and calumnious imputation cast upon Lieut. General Sir Hudson Lowe, Governor of St. Helena, by Barry O'Meara, late a surgeon in the Royal Navy, implying that Sir H Lowe had practised with the said O'Meara to induce him to put an end to the existence of the said Gen. Bonaparte.

8th. For having disobeyed the positive command of his superior officers, in not returning from Longwood on or about the 21st of January aforesaid, at the hour specially prescribed to him by the Rear Admiral, there being no justifiable cause for his disobeying such command.

9th. For having, knowingly and wilfully, designated General Bonaparte, in the said Bulletin, in a manner different from that in which he is designated in the Act of Parliament for the better custody of his person, & contrary to the practice of his Majesty's Government, of the Lieut. Gen. Governor of the island, and of the said Rear Admiral, and for having done so at the special instance and request of the said General Bonaparte or his attendants, though he, the said Mr. John Stokoe, well knew that the mode of designation was a point in dispute between the said General Bonaparte and Lieut. General Sir H. Lowe and the British Government, and that by acceding to the wish of the said Gen. Bonaparte, he, the said Mr. John Stokoe, was acting in opposition to the wish and practice of his own superior officers, and to the respect which he owed to them under the general printed instructions.

10th. For having, in the whole of his conduct in the aforesaid transactions, evinced a disposition to thwart the intentions and regulations of the said Governor, and of the said Rear-Admiral, and to further the views of the French prisoners, in furnishing them with false or colorable pretences for complaint, contrary to the respect which he owed to his superior officers and to his own duty as an officer in his Majesty's Royal Navy.

The Court having heard the evidence in support of the charges, as well as what the prisoner had to offer in his defence, and having considered the whole with the most minute attention, is of opinion, that his conduct (with respect to certain particulars relative to his intercourse with the French prisoners detained at St. Helena) being improper, is proved; that the 1st charge is proved; that the 2d charge is proved; that the 3d charge is proved; that the 4th charge is proved; that the 5th charge is proved; that the 6th charge is proved; that the 7th charge is proved; that the 8th charge is proved; that on the 9th charge it is proved, he called General Bonaparte "the patient;" that the 10th charge is proved. The Court do therefore adjudge the said Mr. John Stokoe to be dismissed his Majesty's service, but in consideration of his long services, recommend him to the consideration of the Admiralty for half-pay.

Signed by the president. Captain Stanfell, and Captains Wauchope, G. Rennie, Sir W. S. Wiseman, Bart, and J. 41. Plumridge; as also by the Judge Advocate.

Died at Edinburgh, on the 16th of November last, in the 86th year of her age, Betty Cameron a native of Lochaber, who has resided at Edinburg for the last sixty years. This poor woman was one of the small class of people, perhaps more peculiar to Scotland than any other country, who never beg, yet never want, and who, without relatives, fortune or certain income, are provided for as if they had all these. She was not a common pauper, but an humble visitor of friendly houses, and though seldom possessed at one time of more than the morrow required, was proverbially honest, and had a strict regard to truth. She never abused the goodness of the benevolent by waste or intemperance, and was to a severe degree exact in all religious observances. These qualities recommended her to the truly charitable; but she added to these a considerable share of strong instinctive sense, and an abundant store of information and anecdote concerning the principal families in Scotland, as well of the young Chevalier, whom she had seen in her youth. She talked with enthusiasm of the deeds of Highland valor, and preserved to the last all the prejudices of clanship. In her 85th year she danced a reel, and sung, till lately, with great spirit, the pibrochs that were sounded at the "rising."

EDINBURGH, Dec. 18.

The weather for the last ten days has been very severe. On Thursday night the thermometer fell to 15 degrees below the freezing point. In consequence of this severe frost, the river was completely frozen over below the bridge, and many persons were skaiting on it at the end of last week.

New Works.—Miss Burney's new novel, "Country Neighbors," will be published about the 1st of January.

The author of "London, or A Month at Stowes," has announced another work, which promises to be an equally severe satire on the follies and foibles of the north. The author says in his introduction—"I shall shew the vices of Edinburgh, not as a parallel, but as a contrast to those of London, nor shall I omit a portrait or a character, because the original was my friend or acquaintance."

A gun of entire novel construction, was exhibited a day or two ago in the gardens of York house, before the duke of York, the adjutant general to the forces, the quarter master general, earl of Camden, and general sir H. Taylor.

It weighs less than the ordinary musket, is composed of seven barrels, one of common length, and in the same position around it, at the breech, are the six others, of about three inches in height only. The whole being charged and the priming for the whole placed in the magazine hammer, which preserves it quite dry and yields just sufficient and no more to each charge, the simple act of cocking places each of the short barrels successively in complete connexion with the long one, and that of shutting the pan primes it, so that seven discharges may be effected in thirty seconds, and if the long barrel be rifled, produces the effect of a rifle gun, without the labor or deformity of the ball, produced by the ordinary mode of loading. It is perfectly safe and accurate, every part of being so guarded as to prevent the possibility of danger, error or impediment, with great simplicity. The invention, it appears, is equally applicable to great guns, pistols, or the arms used for horse or coach guards; in the hands of game keepers it must be a terrific weapon.

His royal highness minutely examined every part of it, and desired the ingenious inventor to make four or five discharges, by which he put the balls each time in a cluster round the mark.

From the United States.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 27, 1820, Half past two o'clock.

Capt. Ramborger has just landed from the ship Medora, from Cadiz. Extract from his journal:—Jan. 3, news was received at Cadiz, that part of the Spanish Army, consisting of 6000 men, had taken possession of the Caraccas, (the King's Navy Yard) and Isla, after releasing the state prisoners, and putting one of them, a Colonel, at the head of their forces. There was only one killed, a Captain of the Royalists, who opposed them at the Bridge of Isla—he was shot by the Colonel. Cadiz was put in as good a state of defence as possible—the gates all shut—no person allowed to leave the place—all stores shut, and great consternation—the streets patroled by the Militia. At midnight firing heard for more than 30 minutes, outside.

Jan. 4th—This morning, gates shut—the first, commanding the road to Cadiz, has been attacked by 500 men; but they were repulsed with the loss of seven killed. At noon, the gates were opened—but all communication is cut off with the interior. All kinds of provision raised 50 per cent. The Great Continental Mail, with the English letters, was stopped this day, by the National Troops, (as they style themselves) and destroyed. A flag has been sent to them—they say do not interfere with us, and Cadiz shall not be molested—we are only the advance of FIFTY THOUSAND—we are on the march for Madrid and want the Cortes restored—that we will not embark for South America, and want our pay. This afternoon, the men of war bent their sails—the gun boats are all manned, and stationed at Fort Puntal. The national troops, sailors and marines, had that day been paid their arrears, with a promise, if faithful, to be paid every month. The provisions were landed from the transports this day, and stored in Cadiz. Jan. 5th, Seville, Porto Real, Porto Santo, and all the adjacent towns, are in possession of the National Troops. All the vessels are embargoed, and no pilots permitted to leave the city. Last night the State prisoners in the Castle made their escape & joined the National Troops; and this night I made my escape in the good ship Medora, leaving behind the brig Spartan, for Norfolk, 20th Jan; barque Packet of New-York, for Havana; ship Mary, for Philadelphia uncertain.

The following is from a letter to a gentleman in Philadelphia, dated Cadiz, 5th January.

"We are besieged by 6000 men of the army that was destined for Buenos Ayres, who are determined not to embark. They have possession of the arsenal and all the country round, and I am informed they have taken the city of Seville and have proclaimed the Constitution in every place they go.

They permit the boats with provisions and passengers to pass from all the places round, and have proclaimed it death to any soldier that takes any thing from an inhabitant without paying for it. I think if they proceed in this manner, they will be here in 7 or eight days without any bloodshed. The inhabitants seem to be satisfied with their proceeding. There is not 700 men in this garrison, and they are not in confidence with their present government."

From Buenos Ayres.—By the arrival of the brig Margaret, from Buenos Ayres, we learn that Lord Cochrane had made two more unsuccessful attacks on the Spanish fleet at Callao; the first on the 2d, and the last on the 4th of October, as appears by his own account, a translation of which follows. When the last account left him, he was preparing a new mode of attack. It was, however, thought that his lordship's views would not be realized—if the fleet should return to Chili, again unsuccessful, it was feared the government was so much exhausted in means and credit, they would not be able to make another outfit. Lord C. attributes his failure to the bad construction of his rockets.

The Portuguese, it was said, were about evacuating Monte Video, and retiring to the Brazils, in which case General Artigas will again take possession of the place.

The Montaneras under Paul Ramariz, Lopez and Carrera, and the Buenos Ayres army, under the Director, were within a few leagues of each other, and an engagement was daily expected.

All communications between Buenos Ayres and Chili had been cut off by the Montaneras, who had been within a few leagues of the former city, and carried off great numbers of cattle and horses. Great discontent prevailed in several of the provinces and even in the city of Buenos Ayres, and a change in the government would no doubt take place in a short time.—Such was the general opinion when our informant left there.

Every thing remained quiet in Chili, and an expedition of 6000 men was preparing for Peru.

The United States frigate Macedonian had sailed from Valparaise, it was supposed for Lima.

Translated from a Buenos Ayres Gazette of December 15.

Last despatch of Lord Cochrane.

Admiral's ship O'Higgins, Bay of Callao, 6th Oct. 1819.

SIR—On the night of the 3d inst. the enemy unbent the sails of their vessels of war, without doubt with the intention of deceiving us, as they returned to bend them again as soon as it grew dark on the night of the 4th; but our boats being upon the eastern side or shore, alarmed the enemy and they desisted from their purpose, which was probably to escape. Every thing indicated their desire of escaping if the rockets had placed their security in danger, or if they had set fire to the merchant vessels, which were united or made fast to the windward of their line of defence, formed by the Venguanza, Esmeralda, Sebastiana, Resolution, Cleopatra, as also the Castles, threw continually hot shot at us, following the advice of the archbishop of Lima. The new preparations being completed, yesterday evening, I ordered that the brigs of war should conduct the rafts (rockets and mortar) to their position, and that the fire ship commanded by Lt. Morgell, should proceed to her destination; immediately they commenced to discharge the rockets, at which time I directed in line the squadron towards the eastern shore, with a view to prevent the escape of the enemy. The brigs had scarce advanced within gun shot of the enemy's vessels and batteries when they commenced upon me a very brisk fire, which greatly increased on the approach of the fire ship Victoria. Being already within the reach of grape shot from the battery, and near the chain which surrounds the enemies vessels, and the water entering her hold in torrents, Lieutenant Morgell set fire to her, (all her rigging being cut away,) and in ten minutes she blew up, which would have annihilated the naval force of Callao, if there had been more wind, so that the Victoria could have passed the battery with greater velocity

Waiting the explosion of the Victoria, I had retained the Georgiana, but it being nearly calm, I believed it useless to make a new attempt, seeing that the rockets had no better effect this night than the first. The cause of this is already too palpable; some burst in consequence of the tubes or cylinders being badly soldered, and others broke at the tail, having unfortunately been made of a very knotty and brittle wood.

I cannot refrain from manifesting to you my regret at these unfortunate circumstances, aggravated by the calms which continually prevail at Callao. I have determined to operate upon a different plan, which I hope will produce a better effect.

Capts. Spry and Corsbie and Lt. Prunier, of the brigs Galvarino, Araucano, and Pueyredon, have conducted themselves with the greatest bravery. The damages which these vessels received in their spars were of little consideration & are already repaired.

Lt Morgell, and two seamen that accompanied him in the Victoria, deserve for their valour, a reward. The zeal and cooperation of Adm. Blanco are worthy of every praise. The captains, officers, marines, artillery and marine troops have all behaved with the greatest distinction. I have the honour of assuring you that I am with the highest consideration of respect, &c. yours.

COCHRANE.

Col. Don Jose Ignacio Zanteno, Minister of the Marine of the State of Chili.

FURTHER FROM CADIZ.

Extract of a letter dated Cadiz Jan 6.

"It would appear that a strong division of the Grand Army, originally destined against Buenos Ayres, had orders to march for Cadiz, where a detachment to consist of 6000 men were to be sent to succour Morillo. The day before yesterday 2000 men entered the Isla, and at the bridge, the Marine Guards attempted to oppose their entrance. The result was that the commander of the guards and the centinel were shot by the approaching troops. On their entering the town they disarmed the Marine Guards; took the captain general of the marine prisoner, and proceeded for this place; but the ships of war in the bay having learnt what had taken place at Isla, sent about 400 marine soldiers and officers to the "Corta Dura," who on the approach of the Insurgents, fired on them from the fort and killed about 13 on the spot.

The troops then retired to the Isla, and then the commander (a colonel) issued a proclamation styling themselves the advance guard of the "Constitutional army." Other commanders it is said have gone with their respective divisions, which consists of the whole of the army of the expedition, to different departments of the kingdom, and that the plot is of magnitude there is no doubt. I will write you soon and more fully, via Gibraltar.

* A strong fort on the Narrow pass.

Important to Shipping Merchants.—It is stated in the Gazette of this morning, that the underwriters, of this city, have come to a determination, in consequence of the numerous losses on our coast, (one of the best and safest in the world) not to write any vessel commanded by a master, who may hereafter lose or strand a vessel, unless he can prove, beyond a doubt, that such loss was not occasioned by ignorance, imprudence, or want of ability.—N. Y. E. P.

Lamentable and distressing Casualty.—On Monday the 28th ult. three young men, of Bertie, namely, George Anger, Teal and Johnson, being on the American shore, about 2 o'clock, P. M. imprudently set off in a small boat to cross the River nearly opposite Capt. Wm. Powell's. They made good their way about half across the Niagara River, the wind blowing up heavily against the current, which caused so great a swell as to capsize the boat; Johnson and Teal immediately sunk to rise no more, but George Anger stuck to the boat, and held so fast, that notwithstanding it was turned over and over eight times by the violence of the waves, he still lived upwards of an hour, before a boat could be procured to put off to his relief; George Burther, hatter, and William Wintermute, an active young man, went off to rescue Anger, from his deplorable situation, and came so near the boat on which he was, as almost to reach him by hand, when an enormous wave separated the crafts. The distressed Anger then sprung into the waves, abandoning his boat, and had actually gained the other, which had just sprung a leak, and seemed filling with water; at this crisis, Anger saw, as did those who had come to his relief, that all would perish, if he should be taken into their boat, swam back to his wreck, hoping they reach the shore in safety, and return again in time to save him. With difficulty, Burther and Wintermute, reached the shore; but alas! at this time the unfortunate Anger was swallowed up by the devouring element. Too much praise cannot be given to Burther and Wintermute, who did as much as men could do in such circumstances. The cold was severe, and they were much benumbed on their reaching the shore; the boat which overset, drifted with the current against the wind a mile or more, during which time, nearly an hour and a half, Anger supported himself upon the boat. An instance of greater heroism and self command is rarely recorded, than this of the lamented Anger. The sufferers were all single men.—Niagara Argus.

A recent and striking instance of the inconvenience & expence resulting from a delinquency in making payment of a note due by the Bank, and which, according to the present mischievous system, had been indorsed to accommodate the maker, deserves to be made known. The name of the individuals it is unnecessary to mention. There were to the note three indorsers. When due, it was regularly protested for non-payment, and notice given to the indorsers. Hence several actions are forthwith instituted and returned into Court; one against the maker, the others against two of the indorsers who reside in ——. The defendants, unable to discharge the amount, (£300, or thereabout) yet unwilling to resist a demand in itself fair and legal, only desire a delay, and get over the Term without incurring Judgement. Previous to the ensuing Term, a fourth action is instituted against another indorser, who not residing in the District, is in town on business. In the mean time, the parties to the former suits wish to terminate them by a settlement, and call for the amount of the costs incurred, which they found to be £13 6 4 each, in the three first actions still pending and undetermined in Court, and £3 19 8 on the last action, not as yet returned into Court, making a round total of £43 18 8, fairly and legally due to the Attorney prosecuting for the Bank. If in this instance the Bank intended to make an example of delinquents, they have effectually attained their purpose in a most disinterested and legal manner. The Bank neither gains nor can it have intended to gain any thing like lucre by so seasonable an example: but no matter—every substantial purpose that the Bank could have desired, is answered; the amount of the note and interest is paid; the delinquents are punished by the payment of heavy expenses, and these, which may be considered as a legal fine or mulct for the delinquency, go to the Attorney, Prothonotaries and Notaries, and this no doubt also answers their purpose. If the Bank only intended to check that heedlessness with which many give their indorsements as an accommodation, it is well: the Directors are the proper judges of the expedience of such a measure, and it may prove a salutary one. But if the Bank simply wished to recover the amount of the note, without putting the parties to any extraordinary and vexatious expense, it was in their discretion to have singled out for prosecution either the maker or such indorser as in their opinion was solvent and capable of paying the amount, leaving him to take his remedy against whom he might think proper. ster, who may hereafter lose or strand mined in Court, and £9 18 8, on the action, not as yet returned into Court, king a round total of £43 18 8, fairly d legally due to the Attorney prose-ing for the Bank. If in this instance Bank intended to make an example of inquents, they have effectually attain-their purpose in a most disinterested d legal manner. The Bank neither ns nor can it have intended to gain a-thing like lucre by so seasonable an mple; but no matter—every substanpurpose that the Bank could have ired, is answered; the amount of the e and interest is paid; the delinquents punished by the payment of heavy enses, and these, which may be con-red as a legal fine or mulct for the de-quency, go to the Attorney, Protho-aries and Notaries, and this no doubt answers their purpose. If the Bank y intended to check that heedlesss with which many give their indorsents as an accommodation, it is well:

Directors are the proper judges of expediency of such a measure, and ay prove a salutary one. But if the k simply wished to recover the aunt of the note, without putting the ties to any extraordinary and vexa-s expense, it was in their discretion ave singled out for prosecution either maker or such indorser as in their inion was solvent and capable of pay the amount, leaving him to take his edy against whom he might think per. The Directors may probably e erroneously imagined, that all the ties to the note could be sued in ein, leaving it to their Counsel to i d accordingly, under the genera

structions usually given in such cases, to do the needful. This it is said cannot legally be done, and separate actions against the maker and each of the indorsers, were therefore indispensable, pursuant to such instructions, if in fact they were unqualified, as we presume they must have been.

In the course of business, the Bank must lay its account with sometimes being driven to the necessity of prosecuting delinquents; it is, however, evidently to the interest of both parties to avoid litigation and chicane, (and this we believe to be the earnest desire of the Directors of the Bank.) It is therefore worth enquiring what is the best and safest mode of securing the Bank in its discounts, and the shortest, least expensive and most effectual mode of recovering its dues in cases where it may be expedient to prosecute. It will not be denied that it is more eligible to be enabled to proceed, if necessary, against half a dozen delinquents, collectively, by one, than by a half dozen actions. Now Lawyers will tell us that we cannot proceed against the drawers and all the indorsers of a note by one and the same action, their liabilities being distinct and separate To do this the debt or obligation must be joint and several. If therefore, for instance, the Bank, in cases of doubt, instead of taking three indorsers, were to take a joint and promissory note from them, as joint and several makers, or drawers, of the note, it would be in the power of the Bank to proceed against them all collectively by a single action, or against any one or more of them, as the Bank might think it expedient, leaving the original payee and indorser altogether aside as a mere man of straw. The advantages of this mode are obvious: the security to the Bank would be avoided, law suits diminished, and the casualties of which indorsers might avail themselves, such as want of diligence, notice, &c. be put entirely out of the question. This precaution or system of doing business, it may be answered, would embarrass many because friends who willingly would consent to indorse their notes as a collateral security, might absolutely refuse to join as makers. This may indeed be true, but the reply is plain, and it is equally true that the Bank does not lend money with a view of involving itself, and those who deal with it in law suits, but it is its duty to take every proper precaution to secure the recovery of its dues in the shortest and most effectual manner if driven to the Courts to enforce payment; if your own friends have not sufficient confidence in your punctuality and solvency, to couple their names with yours, you cannot reasonably expect that the Bank should risk its money in the hands of one who is distrusted by his own friends Before you come here, it is your duty to satisfy them that they run no risk.

DEATH OF THE KING.

London Gazette, Extra, }
Sunday, Jan. 30, 1820. }

Whitehall, Jan. 29, 1820.

A letter and enclosure, of which the following are copies, have been this morning received from his Royal Highness the Duke of York by the Lord Viscount Sidmouth, one of His late Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State.

Windsor Castle, Jan. 29th, 1820.

My Lord,—It becomes my painful duty to acquaint your Lordship, that it has pleased Almighty God to take unto himself, the King, my beloved Father, and Our most Gracious and Excellent Sovereign. He expired at thirty-five minutes past eight o'clock, P. M.

I inclose the Certificate of all the Physicians in attendance at this melancholy period.

My Lord, ever yours most sincerely, (Signed) FREDERICK.

The Rt. Hon. Viscount Sidmouth, &c.

Windsor Castle, Jan. 29, 1820.

It has pleased the Almighty to release His Majesty from all further suffering. His Majesty expired, without pain, at 35 minutes past eight o'clock this evening.

(Signed) Henry Halford. M. Baillie,
W Heberden. Robt Willis
David Bundas.

For His Royal Highness the Duke of York.

At three o'clock on Sunday morning, the following Letter was received by the Lord Mayor;

"Whitehall, Jan. 30, 1820.

My Lord—It is my painful duty to inform your Lordship of the demise of his late Majesty King Geo. III. This melancholy event took place, without the least apparent suffering, at Windsor Castle, at 31 minutes past 8 yesterday afternoon, to the great grief of his present Majesty, and of the Royal Family. I have to request that your Lordship will give directions for the Tolling of the Great Bell at St. Paul's Cathedral. I have the honor to be, your Lordship's most obedient humble servant,

SIDMOUTH.

To the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, &c.

Thus has terminated the Reign of George the Third, after a duration of fifty-nine years, three months, and nine days—a reign distinguished alike by the public and private virtues of the Monarch, and by the extraordinary vicissitudes in the affairs of the world, in which the British Cabinet has taken so prominent a part.

His Majesty George the Third was born on the 24th of May, 1738, which since the alteration of the style, has become the 4th of June. At his death, therefore, he had reached the advanced age of 81 years 7 months and 26 days—He was proclaimed King on the 25th of October, 1760. On September 8th, 1761, he was married to her late Majesty, and had issue 7 sons and 5 daughters, of whom 6 of the former and 4 of the latter survive him. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales was appointed Regent on the 6th of February, 1811, and from that time he has been virtual Sovereign, acting in the name and on behalf of His Majesty. His Majesty, from the appointment of the Regent, remained in retirement at Windsor Castle, under the guardianship of a council, who met every month, or more frequently as occasion might require, and issued a report of the state of his indisposition.

The Duchess of Gloucester and the Princess Sophia of Gloucester, were at Windsor Castle when the King expired.

At two o'clock on Saturday a Council was held at Carlton House, for the purpose of recognizing the new Sovereign; the members of the Privy Council in town including the Speaker and the Lord Mayor, together with several Aldermen and other persons of rank, were present.

After the death of his late Majesty had been formally announced, the following instrument was prepared and signed;—

"Whereas, it hath pleased the Almighty God to call to his mercy our late Sovereign Lord, King George the Third, of blessed memory, by whose decease the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, is solely and rightfully come to the high and mighty Prince, George, Prince of Wales. We, therefore, the Lords spiritual and temporal of this Realm, being here assisted with those of his late Majesty's Privy Council, with numbers of other principal Gentlemen of quality, with the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Citizens of London, do now hereby, with one voice and consent, of tongue and heart, publish and proclaim that the high and mighty Prince, George, Prince of Wales, is now by the death of the late Sovereign, of happy memory, become our only lawful and rightful liege Lord George the Fourth, by the Grace of God, King of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, and so forth, to whom we do acknowledge all faith and constant obedience, with all hearty and humble affection; beseeching God, by whom Kings and Queens do reign, to bless the Royal Prince, George the Fourth, with long and happy years to reign over us.

"Given at the Court at Carlton House, this 30th day of January, 1820.

"GOD SAVE THE KING."

Then follows the signatures of the Privy Councillors, &c. present.

His Majesty, King George IV. then made a declaration of his tenderest affection for his native country, and his determination to do all in his power to promote the glory and happiness of the Kingdom.

His Majesty seemed deeply affected throughout the whole of these important ceremonies.

At the conclusion of the Council, the Lord Keeper proceeded to the House of Lords to swear in the Peers; and the Lord Steward (Lord Cholmondeley) in like manner, proceeded to the House of Commons, and in the Long Gallery administered the oath, appointed to be taken by the members returned to serve in Parliament before they go into the House of Commons, to such members as were in attendance; which being done, the members repaired to their seats, and made and subscribed the oath of abjuration, usually taken at the commencement of a new Parliament

HOUSE OF LORDS.

At twenty minutes past four on Sunday, the Lord Chancellor arrived at the House of Peers, when having taken his seat on the woolsack, without making any observation, the House was adjourned till next day (Monday) at eleven o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Long before four o'clock, the Long Gallery in the House of Commons was crowded with members in readiness to meet the Lord Steward, who was to have administered the oath appointed to be taken by the members returned to serve in Parliament, before they take their seats in the House; but the Lord Steward not having arrived at four o'clock, the members withdrew, and were to meet again on Monday at twelve.

The Proclaiming of George the Fourth, King of England, would take place, with the usual formality, yesterday (Monday) at St. James's Palace, at Charing Cross, and at Temple Bar.

St. Paul's Bell commenced tolling at 12 o'clock. It was preceded by the toning of all the other Church Bells in London.

The event has excited the strongest sensation throughout the metropolis.

A notice has been received at the House of Commons from the post office, that no franks will be admitted to go free, save those of the Speaker. It is doubtful whether this regulation will be strictly adhered to, as, by a late act, the present Parliament may continue embodied for six months after the demise of the King.

Billinge's Liverpool Advertiser of Jan. 31st, announces the sudden and unexpected death of the Duke of Kent, 4th son of the King. His royal highness has left an only daughther by his marriage with the princess dowager of Lieningen, sister to prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg, and who being the descendant of the eldest branch of the royal family by which there is issue, may probably inherit the throne of England.

Death of the Duke of Kent.

It is with sincere regret we have to state that the alarming malady under which the Duke of Kent has for some days labored, terminated in the death of that illustrious prince on the 23d inst. at Sidmouth, in Devonshire. The melancholy event was notified to the lord mayor on Monday in the following letter from the Home Secretary, and it was immediately posted up at the Mansion House, for the information of the public.

My Lord—It is with very great concern, that I have to acquaint your lordship with the death of his royal highness the Duke of Kent; which melancholy event took place at Sidmouth on the 23d inst. after a few days illness, to the great grief of all the royal family. I have to request your lordship to give the necessary orders for tolling the great Bell at St. Paul's.

(Signed) SIDMOUTH.

The complaint which has thus so suddenly terminated the life of his Royal highness was an inflammation of the lungs with cough, attributed we understand, to a neglected cold, which he caught from sitting in wet boots after a walk in the environs of Sidmouth, with Capt. Conroy. In the Morning of Thursday his royal highness was reported to be in imminent danger; but towards the middle of the day rallied again, in consequence of a little refreshing sleep which he had been enabled to obtain. Towards evening however the alarming symptoms returned again with increasing vehemence and continued so till towards Saturday morning, when a kindly remission of them took place. This, however proved to be only that fatal relief which so commonly occurs before death ensues.

Prince Leopold, Capt. Conroy and Generals Wetherall and Moore, were present to afford consolation and support to the Dutchess at the awful and trying event. The Royal Duke bore his affliction and illness with the greatest composure and resignation.

The Custom House and other public offices, as well as the shops, are all closed in this town. The following notice has been issued by the Mayor—

Town-hall, February 1, 1820.

Upon the present melancholy occasion of the demise of his late Majesty King George the Third, the Mayor begs to suggest to the inhabitants the closing of the shutters of their windows this day, to-morrow, and the day of the funeral.

The Princess of Wales has lived at Marseilles since November, and appears fond of he place. She makes frequent excursions, to the country, and often leaves her carriage to visit on foot remote scites which appear worthy of her attention.

The government of Gibraltar, vacant by the death of the Duke of Kent, is to be given to the Earl of Chatham, who is to perform the duty in person.

The Prince Regent had been confined to his room for a week, but was better on the 29th of January.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Extract of a letter from Washington to the Editor of the American Republican, dated Feb. 2. 1820.

"I used to hear, and read, as the sentiments of slaveholders, that slavery was a curse which they were anxious to remove and control, by every practicable means—that it was an evil brought on them contrary to their wishes—an outrage of humanity, which they abhored and deplored, and were solicitous to remedy as fast as possible—in conformity with the spirit of our Declaration of Independence. I may also add, that I used to believe these generous and plausible professions: and entertained a confidence that every opportunity would be embraced, with alacrity, to put them in practice. I can say, however, that I am something older, and something wiser, than I then was: but my age and my wisdom are making sad inroads upon the good opinion which I once fondly cherished of those who held this specious language.——I have lived to discover that the pretended aversion to slavery is all a sham—that the slaveholders, generally have not the least intention, or desire, to relinquish the luxurious gratifications which grow out of a despotic power over their sable fellow creatures. If it be a curse, as they were wont to term it, it is one to which they clingwith the fondest tenacity. I have lived to hear slavery not only praised as a comfortable condition, but vindicated by quotations from the holy scriptures! And further to show that our republic is in a hopeful way, I have heard our Declaration of Independence burlesqued and ridiculed, as holding absurd doctrines, in the Congress of these United States. Indeed, I begin to thiuk myself, if the House of Representatives should give such a vote as the Senate, that the proceedings of 1776 will present rather a ridiculous and absurd phraseology. A regard for consistency and common sense, will require a revision should be had of that fanciful document, which we are in the habit of reading on the 4th of July."

Long Speeches.—A Washington letter writer remarks, that he has "seen a calculation going to shew, that the speeches of a single member from Tennessee have cost the nation more money than it would require to construct a canal from the Chesapeak to the Delaware."

From the National Intelligencer.

Another new invention.—We understand a patent has lately been taken out by a gentlemad from Massachusetts, for an invention which seems to promise extensive advantages to navigation, if once fairly brought into operation. It consists, principally, in a new method for sub-marine ploughing, to any necessary depth, by the power of a steam boat. When the matter is effectually loosened up and pulverized, it cannot reasonably be doubted but the rapidity of ebb-tides, united with the natural current of the river, will soon carry it off and keep the channel open. The inventor is now in this city, giving a perspicuous view of his plan, which appears uncommonly simple and practicable. The advantages of being able to plough open channels through the shoals which so frequently form in many of our immense rivers, would, alone, be an object of very great advantage to our southern and western states; but, when we consider the invention as extending to opening channels for large ships to enter the harbors and rivers throughout our whole seaboard, the advantages presented to view are incalculable.

The best blacking for boots and shoes.

Take 1 pint of good drying oil, 2 ounces of beeswax, 2 ounces of spirits turpentine, and half an ounce Burgundy pitch, carefully melt them over a slow fire. With this mixture, new boots or shoes are rubbed at some distance from a fire, with a sponge or brush, the operation to be repeated as often as they become dry, and until they are fully saturated. In this manner the leather becomes impervious to wet; and boots and shoes thus prepared, last much longer.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Feb. 8.

Remarkable Spring.—We have hitherto said nothing about an oil spring, which was discovered about 3 years ago, on Duck creek, Morgan county, while boring for salt water. This spring yields an inexhaustible supply of pure oil. It is a tolerable substitute for fish oil; and is considerably used in currying leather. It quite answers the purposes of spermaceti oil for lamps; it is used in various kinds of medicines. We are not informed whether it can be used in paints. But there is no doubt it is a discovery of invaluable importance.—We should like to hear some chemical disquisition of its properties from some gentlemen of its neighborhood. Said oil is sold at the low price of 50 cents per gallon, and for less by the barrel. This spring may have been publicly described; but if so, probably some others may have been as forgetful as ourselves about it, and will be glad to hear of any acquisition to our internal wealth.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of YORK & SIMCOE.

GENTLEMEN,

HAVING been honored with your confidence, and called by your suffrages to the very honorable duty of Representing you in the present Parliament, I must expect that my prospect of attaining to the same distinguished station in the next, will depend altogether on the sense you entertain of the manner in which I have performed the trust you reposed in me.

Placed more immediately under the eye of my Constituents, it is altogether in your power, as it is entirely your province, to estimate the part I have taken.

It is far from me to presume, that with every wish to promote your best interests, I may not in many cases, have erred; but I may at least be permitted to say, what I can declare with sincerity, that I am conscious of nothing which I wish to excuse.

Among the objects which have occupied the attention of the present Parliament, they have wisely provided for the more equal Representation of the People; and, in consequence of the provision they have made, you will have the privilege of electing an additional Member to guard your interests, and consult for the welfare of the Province.

Several of my friends, I observe, animated with a very praise-worthy ambition, have eagerly presented themselves to your choice; my actual occupation in the present Parliament, put it out of my power to address myself so immediately to you on the subject of the next; but I thought I might securely trust to the steadiness and sincerity of that attachment, which I was happy to witness on a former occasion, and which I will not believe so fickle that it could be shaken by an idle and absurd reports which may happen to have found their way to you.

I cannot but consider as highly honorable, a situation, to which the good opinion of my fellow-subjects is the only passport; and I shall be happy to receive a proof of your continued confidence, by being chosen as one of your Representatives in the ensuing Parliament.

I will make no boast to you of my independence—you know the nature of my employment and resources, and that my welfare must depend on yours; at the same time, I trust you think me much above any unworthy attempt to court popularity, by claiming credit for greater purity of intention or honesty of conduct, because I do not happen to be honored with any place of trust or confidenceunder a Government whose only object is and must be to promote the happiness and prosperity of the People.

I am, Gentlemen,
your most
faithful Servant,
PETER ROBINSON.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Town of York.

GENTLEMEN,

A Report is in General circulation that our Parliament, in providing for the more equal Representation of the People, are about to bestow upon you the valuable privilege of sending a Member to the Commons House of Assembly. Should such a measure pass, you will necessarily be soon called to the first exercise of that privilege: and though others, I am told, have even been before me in declaring their intentions, I trust it can hardly be objected to me, that I have lost time in acquainting you with my determination to become a Candidate for the Honor of Representing you in Parliament.

It is usual on such occasions for the Candidate to say something of his principles and intentions, and perhaps also of his ability to be useful—but though young, I am too old in your acquaintance to make this necessary here. I have grown up with the Town of which you are the Inhabitants, and either in private acquaintance, or in the discharge of a public duty, I am known to very many, perhaps to all of you—I hope I possess your confidence and good opinion—I have endeavoured to deserve it.

Occupied in the discharge of an arduous situation, and engaged in a laborious profession, no private m tives of interest or advancemen prompt me to solicit this additional duty, honorable and important as it is, and concious that my character and conduct give me a fair claim to this mark of your confidence, disappointment in attaining it would occasion no further mortification than as it would give me fewer opportunities of proving with how much sincerity

I am
Gentlemen,
Your most obedient
Humble servant,
JOHN BEVERLY ROBINSON.

York, Feb. 29th 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

THE General Election of Representatives of the People in the House of Assembly in this Province being near at hand, I take an early opportunity of announcing to you my intention of becoming a Candidate for your suffrages, there being a Bill before Parliament which will encrease your Representation.

I hope my character both public and private, is such as to entitle me to a participation in your confidence; & though I hold a highly honorable and responsible situation under His Majesty's Government, I trust the same Integrity and Exertion I have always manifested when serving my King, will continue to animate and guide my conduct when defending, maintaining, and supporting the Rights and Privileges of my Fellow Subjects, my family, and myself, which must be and are the same.

Should you do me the Honor to elect me one of your Representatives, to serve you in Parliament, I shall, to the utmost of my power, endeavour to deserve a continuation of your favor, should I live to be a Candidate at a future Election.

I have the Honor to be,
with unfeigned sincerity,
your most faithful and
obedient Servant,
HENRY J. BOULTON.

York, March 3d. 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

I acknowledge great pride in having been twice solicited by many of you to offer myself to your choice for the important and honorable service of Representative for these Counties in the House of Assembly. Having declined the first, I cannot withdraw myself from this second invitation, which can alone be founded on the expectation of rigid integrity towards the Constitution of the Country: I therefore now solicit this choice, humbly presuming that my hopes are well founded, and that yours will not be disappointed.

Though twenty years residence here has neces-arily honored me with a personal acquaintance with most of you, I cannot dare to think that this supersedes all necessity of declaring to you my sentiments generally on Legislation in this Province. I therefore profess to you an affectionate regard for British liberty and British Constitution; and that your Representative, whoever he may be, should, in the discharge of his duties, never forget that these two objects of his care are, the one to the other, the best and only Bulwark, and that to preserve the latter ever pure, the first must be preserved unwounded. I know, Gentlemen, that your good sense convinces you that it is not the duty of your Representative to oppose, through a spirit of faction, the fair, beneficial, and legitimate objects of the Administration; but you also know that the purest Administration requires a vigilant activity on the part of all its constitutional checks.

It will, Gentlemen, perhaps be said to you, that I hold an appointment under the Crown; true, an honorable one.—I feel thankful to the Administration that gave it, and the Government that has continued it to me; but your choice will necessarily remove the objection, (if it be any in your estimation,) as the Office must, in the event of my Election, be surrendered.

I will at present only add, that whatever be the event, the prosperity of the Province at large, and of these Counties in particular, will, during my life, always be an object of earnest anxiety to me.

I have the Honor to be,
Gentlemen,
your very obedient Servant,
WM. WARREN BALDWIN.

IT having been suggested to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, that a general permission to Locate on the Waste Lands of the Crown, would be more acceptable to the Militia, than setting apart for that purpose a particular Tract in each District, as heretofore intended; NOTICE is hereby given, that the Militia who served during the late War with the United States of America, in the First Flank Companies, in the Provincial Artillery, in the Incorporated Regiment, in the Corps of Artillery Drivers, in the Provincial Dragoons, in the Marine and General Staff of the Militia, will, upon due Certificate of their respective Service from the Adjutant General, receive Tickets of Location from the Surveyor General, for the portion of Land ordered by His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and, on due proof of having performed the Settlement Duty, will receive Patent Grants.

N. B. By express Command of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, the Patents will be gratuitous, but the Settlement Duty in no case dispensed with.

Destruction of Magdalen Hall, Oxford, by fire.

OXFORD, Jan. 9.

A desolating fire was discovered to have broken out this morning, about three o'clock, in the northern extremity of Magdalen Hall, in this university. A great proportion of the inhabitants was immediately roused; and in spite of the unseasonable hour of the summons, great numbers promptly came to the spot, and contributed their zealous aid in working four engines, and thereby quenching the flames. About 7 o'clock the fire was got under; but, unhappily not until a considerable pile was consumed to a tinder. Sixteen sets of gentlemen's rooms were completely destroyed, and, as they were all tenanted (although, from its being vacation time, the members of the society were almost all of them absent from the university) the destruction embraced a great deal of furniture, and many valuable collections of books. Owing to the extreme severity of the weather, many of the pumps in the neighborhood were locked up with frost, and there was some difficulty at first in procuring an adequate supply of Water. The accident, it is supposed, arose from the indiscretion of a young man who happened to be resident, and who went to bed without extinguishing his candles. They afterwards communicated with the furniture, of his room, and occasioned the conflagration. He was, however, luckily awakened from his perilous condition, and no lives were lost.

LONDON, Jan. 11.

The following is an extract of a letter dated Manchester, Dec. 30 :—"Extensive sales having been made last Tuesday, goods are expected to rise; many articles indeed have already advanced, on account of the demand for the Spanish market. The Americans, who have not bought for the last twelve months, are also coming in, and it is thought trade will improve greatly in the beginning of next year."

The accounts from the principal seats of the Cotton Manufacture are highly gratifying. At Manchester, Glasgow, and Paisley, a favourable movement has been experienced, and an almost immediate advance of wages is anticipated. Hitherto the purchases have been made for the American and Spanish markets; and the new Russian Tariff which we have before described, is so favourable to the trade of this country, that a large quantity of all kinds of Cotton goods will undoubtedly be put in requisition for the markets of that vast empire, which for some time have been virtually closed against us. It is important to observe, that this last favourable circumstance could have no influence in producing the late improvements above noticed, as the Tariff was only made public on Tuesday. This, we hope, is but the commencement of a liberal commercial system. Its operation at the present moment is most opportune, and the effect will be the subduing of that disaffection which has been already sensibly checked by the recent enactments of the Legislature.

The following paragraph has appeared in various of the public Journals :—We deeply regret to hear, that some of the best informed friends of the officers employed in the expedition sent out to search for a North West passage, have given up all hopes of ever seeing them alive.

In speaking of the Indian trade, the Chronicle observes, "The absurdity of continuing to exclude British merchants from the trade between Canton and the European and American States, arises from the construction put upon the clause of monopoly, allowed to the East India Company in their last charter. We are happy to find that this question is now under the consideration of a committee of merchants; and it is probable will be submitted to the consideration of Ministers, at an early day. At this time the Americans have about 18,000 tons of shipping employed in this trade, and probably not less than 3,000 seamen. In the course of the year 1818, more than 11,000 chests of tea were imported into Canada, not by the East India House, but directly from Canton, in American bottoms!"

The English colonial trade was also to be benefitted by the reduction of certain duties.

The Emperor Alexander had forbidden all English newspapers containing Carlisle's trial for blasphemy to enter his dominions, fearful the morals of his people may be injured.

The Paris papers state, that the Marquis Dessolles, Minister of Foreign Affairs, has signed a Treaty, by which a debt of 7,000,000 francs, claimed in vain by the Dey of Algiers for the last twenty years, refused by all the antecedent Ministers, and evaded lately by the Duke of Richelieu, is now recognized and is stipulated to be paid by monthly instalments, commencing with the 1st March next. Baron Louis, Minister of Finance, engaged to provide the funds necessary for these payments.

The Dey of Tripoli has not permitted a corsair to sail from the ports of Tripoli since 1st of July, 1818. He has invited England to make his peace with all the Christian nations, promising never more to molest any foreign flag.

The Dey of Algiers had rejected the proposals of the English Admiral. The Ambassador of the Dey, who had lately returned from England, informed his master that England could not oppose it seriously to the present system of the Barbary states.

PARIS, Jan. 12.

The river Seine being frozen, many persons from curiosity went on the ice from the Pont Neuf, and the Pont des Arts.

Collections were making in the several Arrondissements in Paris, to procure fuel for the poor to keep them from perishing with cold

At Naples, the weather has remained mild as in the spring, while at Paris it has been severely cold.

At Norway, on the 5th of January, the barometer rose to the height of 29 inches, 16 lines. The sea was eight feet lower on that day than it had been for 20 years. Professor Hansteens made some experiments as to the intensity of the magnetic force, and found the needle in such agitation, that he could obtain no fixed result. Some revolution in nature was portended.

Some movements of a hostile nature being observed among the Radicals at Manchester, a body of Yeomanry Cavalry had been sent there.

The snow in England lay as high on the ground in some places as the doors of the coaches.

The number of accidents in London from persons falling on the ice, breaking their legs, arms, &c. were very numerous.

The severe cold in England had rendered the larks so inanimate that they have been caught by the hand, being unable to fly.

The number of male and female paupers children, as returned to parliament, who were on the books of the several parishes near London, amounted to 13,450. No return had been made from 26 parishes.

At Anheim, the water had risen from 16 to 19 feet in a few days, occasioned by the melting of the snow on the mountains.

It had been so cold in Russia, the past season, that all the public places of amusement had been closed. The thermometer at St. Petersburgh stood at 35 1-2 degrees below Zero.

The cold had been severe in Scotland which afforded a fine time among the Scots for Curling, a favorite game.

The Morning Chronicle contradicts the story of the recall of Sir Thomas Maitland. At Islington, the silver in the barometer on the 14th, was down into the bowl.

The weather has been extremely severe in England. When the Ann Maria sailed, the Thames was frozen over, and the navigation of the Canals was stopped. A post chaise driver was frozen to death. The thermometer on the 11th December, was 19 degrees below zero, and on the 11th of January 16 degrees below. A paper of the 17th of January observes, "The severity of the weather has been so great as to render communication with the shipping at Deptford, Woolwich, and the other parts of the river, impossible. At several places provisions have, with the utmost difficulty, been dragged on board the ships; and at Deptford booths have been put up on the ice, and a sort of fair commenced. At Woolwich, on Wednesday, the ice in several places was nearly five feet in thickness. Above the bridge the effects are equally severe, and off Lambeth there is a piece of ice more than 12 feet in thickness."

A letter from Inverness, dated January 6, says—"The North mail coach has been prevented for some days back from proceeding further than Tain, owing to the deep fall of snow. The road between the Tain and Thurso is, in some places, covered with snow to the depth of from 6 to 15 feet. The mail is carried forward on horseback, with great difficulty, and the hours of arrival are quite uncertain. The snow is also so deep between Aberdeen and Forfarshire, that the South mail coach, which used to reach Inverness about eleven at night, has not arrived, for some days, till seven in the morning."

LONDON, Jan. 30.

The Paris papers of Wednesday arrived yesterday. They contain advices from Madrid to the 16th inst. from which it appears that Cadiz had opened its gates to the insurgents, now denominated the constitutional troops. At their entry into Cadiz the inhabitants gave them a most sumptuous repast; flags bearing the inscription Vive la Constitution, were placed at each corner of the tables. Many regiments, amongst others that of Soria, two squadrons of carabineers, and all the artillery of Pavia, had proclaimed the constitution in their different cantonments. The effective force of the constitutional army is stated at 24,000 men, and their numbers were hourly increasing. Ferdinand, it is said, making a virtue of necessity, had shown a disposition to dismiss the present Ministry, and to re-establish the free and only lawful government of Spain. The French Government had sent a Spanish courier to Madrid with dispatches for its Charge d'Affaires, supposed to relate to the internal state of Spain, and it was reported that two French ships of war had left Rochefort to cruize off Bayonne.

Murders of the most horrid description, with robberies innumerable, had taken place. A cause of considerable importance to the interest of humanity, was tried on Monday in the court of king's bench, before chief Justice Abbott and a special jury, at the suit of S Madraso, the proprietor of a Spanish slave ship, against Capt. Willis of the Clarendon sloop of war, for the cargo of slaves, captured by the latter, and landed at Sierra Leone. The damages were laid at 24,000. Chief Justice Abbott suggested a doubt, whether a foreigner could bring an action in a British court of law in England, to be legal? A verdict of £18,000 was finally given, subject to the opinion of the judges on this point of law; another point of law seems connected with this which we hope will not be over-looked in deciding the question. He who turns a pirate into a court of law, in England, must come with clean hands. If Capt Willis had damaged Madraso in seizing his slaving cargo, was Madraso's cargo obtained without damage to others? Our laws will be found equally powerful, we hope, in protecting black foreigners against damage from white foreigners, as the latter against damage from English commanders.

and they had only broken up about half past eleven. Every attempt to check the progress of the flames was found unavailing, and about three o' clock the roof fell in with a tremendous crash. Fortunately no lives have been lost during that dreadful calamity; but not an article of any description was saved. The performance of the evening had been Pizarro, and it is conjectured that the wadding from the muskets might have caused the disaster, by which many members of society have been cast upon the world without any portion of their property. The theatre was insured in the Sun office for £7000, and the furniture in the Norwich union for £2000. Our last theatre was burnt down by an incendiary in August,

SPANISH HEROISM.

An authentic anecdote, related by captain Korff, who served in Spain, in a regiment of Infantry of the guard of Joseph, the ex-king of Westphalia.

Fatigued and exhausted by forced marches, the regiment to which capt.
Korff belonged, arrived before the monastery of Figueiras, in Spain. The colonel of the regiment, a Frenchman, sent an officer, to demand of the prior the necessary refreshment for the men, as well as for the staff, consisting of about 20 officers. The prior, with some of the monks, came out to meet the general, assured him that the inhabitants of Fi-gueiras would provide for the soldiers, but that he himself would prepare a fruggal meal for the staff. The prior's offer was accepted; captain Korff received from the general some commissions for the regiment, and about an hour afterwards it was announced to the prior, that the dinner was served up in the refectory of the monastery. The general, who was aware that the French in Spain had reason to be on their guard in eating and drinking what was offered by the natives, invited the prior to dine with them; he and two other monks accepted the invitation in such a manner, as to leave no doubt that he felt himself much flattered by it. After the officers had taken their seats the prior said grace, carved, eat of every dish, and with his two brethren, who poured out the wine, drank plentifully with his guests. It was not till towards the end of the repast that capt. Korff returned, having been detained by the commissions of the general longer than he expected. During that interval, he had found an opportunity to take some refreshment, and only participated in the lively conversation of the company, but as well as guests, at the monastery.
The general, in particular, expressed his satisfaction to the prior, whose kind reception had surpassed all expectation.
Suddenly, however, the cheerfulness of the prior was changed into profound seriousness; he rose from his seat, thanked the company for the honor they had done him, and concluded with stating if any of them had affairs to settle in this world? Adding with emphasis,
"This, gentlemen, is the last meal you and I shall take on earth; in an hour we shall all be before the Judgement seat of God!" Cold trembling horror seized the amazed guests; for the prior and his monks had poisoned the wine in which they had pledged the French officers; all the antidotes given by the France physician were in vain; in less than an hour, every man of them had ceased to live."

"We know not whether this story is in reality one of those unquestionable facts with which the history of the Spanish contest abound; but we are assured that its accuracy and truth are credited by many persons of integrity, whose duties led them to be near the scene where it was laid. If true, as we have therefore reason to believe, it is one of the most extraordinary and memorable instances of self-devotion ever recorded.

Letters from the Court of Tripoli.

We congratulate the public on the appearance of this interesting work in a cheap and portable form. These letters are published from the originals, in the possession of the family of the late Richard Tully, Esq. the British consul, whose daughters being born in Tripoli, and speaking the Arabic language from their infancy, were admitted into habits of close intimacy with all the female part of the royal family: it is therefore hardly probable that any future traveller or opportunities for observation, that were possessed by the author of these letters; and it has been justly observed, that,

"like lady Wortley Montague's, they have the merit of bringing every thing immediately before the eye; but they far exceed her's in the importance of their statements, and at the same time, stock of prime Herefordshire cattle took place on monday se'nnight at King's Pion. The astonishing prices given for this much esteemed peculiar breed of cattle, far exceed any precedent, as will be proved by the following statement.—

One cow, and her calf, (a two-year-old bull) £950: four bulls £1071; two bull calves £362; five cows, (average £279.
19s. each,) £1,352. 15s; seven others, (average £121. 16s. each,) £825. 12s. 6d;
two two-year old heifers, £178; two yearling heifers, £130; two heifers calves £56. The whole stock fifty two in number, ten of which were calves, but during that dreadful calamity; but not an article of any description was saved. The performance of the evening had been Pizarro, and it is conjec-
tured that the wadding from the mus-

Chemical Experiment on Mount Vesuvius.

A very singular experiment, or rather result, has lately been announced, as obtained by M. Gimbernath, a learned Spaniard, who is now councellor of the king of Bavaria. Having ascended the summit of Vesuvius, Dec. 4. 1818, he placed on one of the fumarols (clefts or crevices of the crater, whence smoke constantly issues) an apparatus for condensing the vapour. By this means he obtained a somewhat considerable quantity of clear distilled water, which tasted of fat or grease, and smelt strongly of burnt animal substances. The chemical tests to which this liquid was subjected, shewed clearly that it contained neither sulphuric acid, nor any free acid M.
Gimbernath is of opinion that it is saturated with a matter partaking of the nature of animal matter.

INSURRECTION IN PETERSBURG

We copy the following from the letter of a gentleman, to his friend in this city.—Philadelphia Gaz

PETERSBURG, V. Feb. 25.

"At present, the attention of the people here is entirely engrossed by an insurrection of the Blacks. Several attempts have been made to fire our town;
and many persons both white and black have been arrested. An armed guard patrole our streets, and I trust its authority will be sufficient to suppress any thing of an improper nature."

"PETERSBURG, Va. Feb. 29

"The inhabitants of this town are in a state of considerable alarm, as I mentioned in my last. The night before last, the second best tavern in this place, a very large and spacious building, was consumed by this most destructive element, fire, applied, as is confidently supposed, by the hand of an incendiary. And last night another attempt, in spite of the most vigilant exertions, was made but I am happy to add, without succesto set on fire the lower part of the town
If the thing had been discovered only five minutes later (as the wind was high,) no one can tell where it would have stopped. A black woman has been taken into custody, and the strongest circumstantial evidence is at hand against her.

"The inhabitants of our town, as you may suspect, are in no enviable condition; for no one sleeps at night but on fire arms, and without expecting to be roused, either to stop the progress of the devouring element, or to quell insurrection. Indeed, the moment fire is called, an armed force commences galloping up and down the streets, and never halts until all danger is at end—and woe be to the negro who is caught out, or any misdemeanor. It is supposed that the woman now in jail will meet the fate she so justly deserves, and communicate some important information in regard to the insurrection."

KINGTON, (Jam.) Jan. 2.

His Majesty's brig Ontario, 18 guns,
Capt. Gosling, came to anchor at Port-Royal yesterday afternoon, from the Havana, with the Brig Indiana from Bremen, bound to that port, which had been captured and plundered by a pirate, formerly the schooner Velez, a traider between this Island and Cuba.

We have been favored with the following particulars, respecting the above re-capture:

"On the evening of the 17th ult.
while the Ontario, was hauling round Cape Antonio, two brigs and two schooners were observed to be at anchor in shore; they shortly after weighed, the largest of the brigs ran out for the Ontario, while the remainder of the vessels endeavoured to pass round the Colaradoes. On boarding the brig, she proved to be the Indiana, from Bremen to the Havana, and her master reported that the vessels in sight, were a pirate schobner, and two other vessels she had taken, one a Spanish schooner, the crew of which had been murdered; and the other a French brig called the Charles Phillipe, from Marseilles to the Havana, with French property on board—
The schooner had plundered the Indiana of a quantity of dry goods; and after throwing the greater part of the French brig's cargo overboard, had freighted her with the plunder, and maltreated the crew.

"Information was also given, that the pirate was called the Velez, formerly a Jamaica trader, captured some time previous by a schooner, on the Coast of Cuba; and that she had never been into any port since she had been taken.— Capt. Gosling therefore beat up for the Colaradoes, to prevent the vessels getting into the Gulf Stream and escaping.
The pirate finding that he could not escape hauled inside the reefs, and the other schooner upon on the reefs.

"Lieutenants Lloyd and Maxwell, and Mr. Gossling, Midshipman, were then dispatched with the yawl and two gigs, having the Union Jacks flying. On their approach, both the brig and schooner fired upon them, which was not returned until a second volley was discharged. The schooner then took up a position to protect the brig, which was aground, neither of them shewing at the time any colours. On the boats being within pistol shot both vessels opened a heavy fire of grape, langridge, and musquetry, which was promptly returned.
The crew of the brig now began to desert her and making for the shore, chase was immediately made, and on two of them being wounded, they threw in their oars and surrendered to the yawl, under the command of Lieut. Lloyd; they were 16 in number, and their boat was filled with ammunition.

"Lieut. Lloyd then took possession of the French brig, she mounted four guns, and was a prize to the "Velez" privateer.

"The schooner was afterwards compelled to tack and run close in shore, to get out of reach of the Ontario's guns.

"The yawl then pulled to her, and on boarding, found her crew had left her, and her rudder was unshipped and broke in pieces, her cable cut, and she was towing close to the French brig, and anchored. She proved to be the schooner Velez, which mounted one gun on a pivot and two smaller guns.

"Lieut. Lloyd had his right hand shattered and two men under his orders were wounded."

January 5.

By the Martina, (mentioned in our last to have arrived,) we learn that during her stay at Curacoa, the Governor of Cartagena, (Gen. Pardy) had handed there on an open boat from La Guyra, accompanied by his Aide-de-Camp and fourteen of his followers, with about 100,000 dollars in specie. The Governor report—his object to be to proceed to Peru, but he still remained at Curacoa, when the brig sailed.

KINGTON, Jan. 7.

His Majesty's brig Wasp, of 18 guns,
Captain Carter, came to anchor at Port Royal yesterday. She left the Rio Chagres on the 25th ult. and arrived at Carthagena on the 30th, and sailed on the 2d inst.

Accounts had reached Carthagena of Gen. Bolivar having arrived at Pampa luna, from Santa Fee. It is said he took away nearly to the value of five millions of dollars, of both public and private property; sparing nothing that came in his way—robbing aged, old and young.

Previous to the Wasp's leaving the Rio Chagres, accounts had been received, that 500 freebooters, supposed to belong to Aury and M'Gregor's desperadoes, had landed and taken possession
Chapo, a small town 14 leagues, due N.
E. of Panama, and six leagues from the sea. Gen. Hore had, however dispatched 300 regular troops and 500 militia, to encounter the robbers, and check their progress in any further hostile attempt.

The latest intelligence from the South Sea mentions that two vessels with specie had sailed from some ports in the South Sea, and were momently expected at Panama. They had on board a great quantity of money for this Island.

Yesterday the Grand Jury found a true bill for piracy, against Walter Davies Chitty, John Graham, and Samuel H. James.

Jan. 14.

The following sentences were passed yesterday at the Assize Court:

On Pierre Martina, alias Pierre Nicholas, convicted of piracy. His Honor the Chief Justice, in the most impressive manner, informed the prisoner that he had been tried and found guilty on the clearest evidence of the crime of piracy, in having plundered the brig Panter. In the course of the examination, it appeared, that he had quitted an honest occupation, and associated himself with a band of pirates and robbers, and throughout the whole had been foremost in the piratical act, as he had dragged the Captain into the cabin, sword in hand, and put him in fear of his life. It was the duty of the Bench to make known to him that he could expect no mercy on this side of the grave;
the awful sentence of the law was, that he be taken from the bar to the place from whence he came, and from thence to the place of execution, and there be be hanged by the neck until he was dead, and the Lord have mercy on his soul."

FROM LOWER-CANADA.

From the Montreal Herald.

The New-York Advertiser states
thus; "To our surprise and mortification, the Missouri Bill has passed both houses of Congress, Without restriction, and the curse of African Slavery is perpetually fastened upon the United States."
Compare the above passage with an article we publish from Camden, S. C. A Slave is murdered by her Master with the most shocking barbarity—the Master is taken up, but bailed. Is murder a bailable offence in the United States?
Or is it only the Murder of a Slave that is so? A few weeks ago, two slaves were executed for murdering their Master and one of them was burnt. Were those poor men bailed? Blessed Country!—Noble Constitution! that declares "all men free and equal."

YORK, March 30, 1820.

His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland arrived at Quebec on Tuesday the 14th inst.

We learn by last night's post that the Houses of the Imperial Parliament had each voted Addresses of condolence to His Majesty, upon the death of our late venerable and revered sovereign, and of congratulation upon His Majesty's accession: also Addresses of condolence to His Majesty and Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, on the death of the Duke of Kent.

After providing for the immediate exigencies of the public service, it was intimated that a new Parliament would be called without delay. His Majesty had been dangerously ill, from an attack of pleurisy; but we are happy to say, that the last Bates mention an abatement of the inflammation.

The Duke de Berri was mortally wounded at Paris, on the 13th Feb. by an assassin, who was taken, and who confessed that the crime originated in political motives, and had been contemplated for four years.

REPUBLIC OF COLUMBIA.

Translated for the Democratic Press.

Fundamental Laws for the Republic of Columbia.

The sovereign congress of Venezuela, to whose authority the people of New Grenada, lately emancipated by the arms of the republic, have voluntarily submitted, considering,

I. That by uniting the provinces of Venezuela and New Grenada in one republic, they will have the means of attaining the highest degree of power and prosperity.

II. That if they should remain in separate republics, however great the bonds that might unite them, yet farfrom benefitting by so many advantages, it is with difficulty they would consolidate their sovereignty, and cause it to be respected.

III. That these truths clearly perceived by every man of sound understanding, and genuine patriotism, had excited the governments of both republics to agree to their confederation, which the vicissitudes of war have heretofore prevented.—

From these considerations of necessity and reciprocal interest, and in conformity with the report of the select committee, the deputies from New Grenada and Venezuela;

In the name and under the auspices of the Supreme Being, has decreed and does decree the following fundamental law for the Republic of Columbia.

Article I. The republics of Venezuela and New Grenada shall be from the present day, united under the glorious title of the Republic of Columbia.

II. Its territory shall be those comprehended in the former captain generalship of Venezuela, and the viceroyalty of the new kingdom of Grenada, embracing an extent of one hundred and fifteen thousand square leagues, whereof the exact boundaries shall be fixed at a more seasonable opportunity.

III The debts contracted by the two republics separately are acklowledged in solidum, by this law, as a national debt of Columbia---for the discharge of which, the goods and productive of the revenue shall be destined.

IV. The executive power of the republic shall be exercised by a president, and, in his place, by a vice president, both to be appointed pro tempore by the present congress.

The republic of Columbia shall be divided into three great departments Venezuela, Quito, and Cundinamarca, which shall comprehend the provinces of New Grenada, whereof the name shall be henceforward suppressed. The capitals, of these departments shall be cities of Carracas, Quito, and Bogota.

VI. Each department shall have a superior administration, and chief magistrate, to be appointed for the present by this congress, with the title of vice president.

VII. A new city, bearing the name of the liberator, Bolivar, shall be the capital of the republic of Columbia. The plan and site thereof shall be determined by the first general congress, upon the principle of making it suitable for the convenience of the three departments, and proportioned to the grandeur for which this rich country is destined by nature.

VIII. The general congress of Columbia shall assemble on the first day of January, 1821, in the town of Rosario de Circuta, which in every respect is considered the most suitable place. The convocation shall be made by the president of the republic, on the 1st January, 1820. who shall also communicate the plan for the election, to be devised by a select committee, and approved by the present congress.

IX. The constitution of the republic of Columbia, shall be formed by the general congress, to whom shall be presented the project of one already decreed; together with the laws enacted by this congress, to be immediately carried into execution, by way of experiment.

X. The arms and flag for Columbia shall be decreed by the general congress. In the mean time those of Venezuela shall be employed as they are known.

XI. The present congress shall dissolve on the 15th January, 1820, in order that the new elections may take place for the congress general of Columbia.

XII. A commission of six members, with a president, invested with special powers, to be decreed, shall occupy the place of congress during the recess.

XIII. The republic of Columbia shall be solemnly proclaimed to the citizens and the armies, with public feasts and rejoicings; to take place in this capital, on the 25th Dec. inst. commemorating the nativity of the Saviour of Mankind, under whose protection the state has been regenerated by this reunion.

XIV. The anniversary of this political regeneration shall be perpetually celebrated by a national feast, where virtues and talents, as formerly at Olympia, shall be distinguished and compensated.

The present fundamental law for the republic of Columbia, shall be promulgated in the settlements and armies, inserted in the public journals, and deposited in the archives of the cabildos, municipalities, and corporations, whether ecclesiastical or secular.

Given at the palace of the sovereign congress of Venezuela, in the city of St. Thomas of Augostura, on the 17th day of December, A. D. 1819, and in the 9th year of our independence.

Bear Hunt.—A week or two since, two lads living in the town of Hunter, Green county, discovered a large black bear. They pursued him from morning until close of the day, frequently so near as to strike him; the depth of the snow preventing his running from or attacking them, and they being unable, from the nature of their weapons, to materially injure him. On reaching the little falls of the Cauterskill, the bear put himself into the form of a coil, and very deliberately rolled off the precipice, a height of about 100 feet. On the following morning, a company started in pursuit of him, discovered that he received no hurt from his retreat. He was traced to the highest peak of the Catskill mountain (Round Top) and driven into a cave: where he was shot. The quarters weighed 225 lbs. after dressing, and his skin measured 8 feet from the nose to the tail.—Catskill Recorder.

Severity of the winter in the West.

A gentleman recently arrived in this city, from St. Louis, (M. T.) who left there on 20th ult. informs that the Mississippi had been closed with ice for three weeks, and heavy loaded waggons were crossing on it at St. Louis; the snow was about 18 inches on a level, and our informant travelled in a sleigh all the way to Cincinnati, a distance of 360 miles, and had he proceeded directly on, could probably have come to this city by the same mode of conveyance. Some gentlemen who left there a few days previous, came to Philadelphia in a sleigh.—N. Y. E. Post.

The thaw commenced at Cincinnati on the 3d inst. which caused a great rise in the (Ohio) River, and the ice broke up on the 6th—which enabled the numerous steam boats (and water craft) to resume their operations, after having been embargoed for 8 months, by the low state of the water; a circumstance never known before, by the oldest residents of the country.

Tornado in Louisiana.

The Louisiana Herald gives an account of a destructive Tornado, which passed over the town of Alexandria, in the State of Louisiana, on the 8th of Jan. It is said that more than twenty buildings, including the court house, were swept to the ground, The damage to buildings & other property is estimated at 200,000 dollars.

Blackwood's Magazine.—It gives us pleasure to announce, that this morning issued from the press of Clayton and Kingsland, the first number of Blackwood's Magazine, which has obtained such great celebrity in England and Scotland, as opposed to the Edinburgh Review. The great learning, wit and talent, displayed by the writers which furnish the principal subjects, are universally acknowledged, and have commanded a circulation co-extensive with the great work of which it is professedly the rival. The execution and the materials of the American edition are of primary excellence, in no degree inferior to the European.—Ev Post.

Literature encouraged by the Pasha.

The Pasha of Egypt, say the French savans, has become an object of universal notice. His name abounds in our journals and periodical works. He sends agents to Europe to procure artists, manufacturers and skilful workmen.—He is extremely fond of botany. He had heard lately that a rich amateur of Paris possessed a cinnamon tree, and he caused it to be bought at an enormous price, to be transported to his gardens at Alexandria. It is only eight days since he had sent to him from Paris 5 or 600 volumes.

SIDNEY SMITH,
Administrator.

York, 20th March, 1820. 3m12.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of YORK & SIMCOE.

GENTLEMEN,

HAVING been honored with your confidence, and called by your suffrages to the very honorable duty of Representing you in the present Parliament, I must expect that my prospect of attaining to the same distinguished station in the next, will depend altogether on the sense you entertain of the manner in which I have performed the trust you reposed in me.

Placed more immediately under the eye of my Constituents, it is altogether in your power, as it is entirely your province, to estimate the part I have taken.

It is far from me to presume, that with every wish to promote your best interests, I may not in many cases, have erred; but I may at least be permitted to say, what I can declare with sincerity, that am conscious of nothing which I wish to excuse.

Among the objects which have occupied the attention of the present Parliament, they have wisely provided for the more equal Representation of the People; and, in consequence of the provision they have made, you will have the privilege of electing an additional Member to guard your interests, and consult for the welfare of the Province.

Several of my friends, I observe, animated with a very praise-worthy ambition, have eagerly presented themselves to your choice; my actual occupation in the present Parliament, put it out of my power to address myself so immediately to you on the subject of the next; but I thought I might securely trust to the steadiness and sincerity of that attachment, which I was happy to witness on a former occasion, and which I will not believe so fickle that it could be shaken by an idle and absurd reports which may happen to have found their way to you.

I cannot but consider as highly honorable, a situation, to which the good opinion of my fellow-subjects is the only passport; and I shall be happy to receive a proof of your continued confidence, by being chosen as one of your Representatives in the ensuing Parliament.

I will make no boast to you of my independence—you know the nature of my employment and resources, and that my welfare must depend on yours; at the same time, I trust you think me much above any unworthy attempt to court popularity, by claiming credit for greater purity of intention or honesty of conduct, because I do not happen to be honored with any place of trust or confidence under a Government whose only object is and must be to promote the happiness and prosperity of the People.

I am, Gentlemen,
your most
faithful Servant,
PETER ROBINSON.

Newmarket, 9th March, 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

THE General Election of Representatives of the People in the House of Assembly in this Province being near at hand, I take an early opportunity of announcing to you my intention of becoming a Candidate for your suffrages, there being a Bill before Parliament which will encrease your Representation.

I hope my character both public and private, is such as to entitle me to a participation in your confidence; & though I hold a highly honorable and responsible situation under His Majesty's Government, I trust the same Integrity and Exertion I have always manifested when serving my King, will continue to animate and guide my conduct when defending, maintaining, and supporting the Rights and Privileges of my Fellow Subjects, my family, and myself, which must be and are the same.

Should you do me the Honor to elect me one of your Representatives, to serve you in Parliament, I shall, to the utmost of my power, endeavour to deserve a continuation of your favor, should I live to be a Candidate at a future Election.

I have the Honor to be,
with unfeigned sincerity,
your most faithful and
obedient Servant,
HENRY J. BOULTON.

York, March 3d. 8120.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

I acknowledge great pride in having been twice solicited by many of you to offer myself to your choice for the important and honorable service of Representative for these Counties in the House of Assembly. Having declined the first, I cannot withdraw myself from this second invitation, which can alone be founded on the expectation of rigid integrity towards the Constitution of the Country: I therefore now solicit this choice, humbly presuming that my hopes are well founded, and that yours will not be disappointed.

Though twenty years residence here has necessarily honored me with a personal acquaintance with most of you, I cannot dare to think that this supersedes all necessity of declaring to you my sentiments generally on Legislation in this Province. I therefore profess to you an affectionate regard for British liberty and British Constitution; and that your Representative, whoever he may be, should, in the discharge of his duties, never forget that these two objects of his care are, the one to the other, the best and only Bulwark, and that to preserve the latter ever pure, the first must be preserved unwounded. I know, Gentlemen, that your good sense convinces you that it is not the duty of your Representative to oppose, through a spirit of faction, the fair, beneficial, and legitimate objects of the Administration; but you also know that the purest Administration requires a vigilant activity on the part of all its constitutional checks.

It will, Gentlemen, perhaps be said to you, that I hold an appointment under the Crown; true, an honorable one.—I feel thankful to the Administration that gave it, and the Government that has continued it to me; but your choice will necessarily remove the objection, (if it be any in your estimation,) as the Office must, in the event of my Election, be surrendered.

I will at present only add, that whatever be the event, the prosperity of the Province at large, and of these Counties in particular, will, during my life, always be an object of earnest anxiety to me.

I have the Honor to be,
Gentlemen,
your very obedient Servant,
WM. WARREN BALDWIN.

FROM EUROPE.

LONDON, Jan. 10—18.

We have received this morning, a Hamburgh Mail. It contains an account of the opening of the General Assembly of the States, at Hanover, on the 28th ult. by his royal highness the Duke of Cambridge. In the speech which his Royal Highness delivered on the occasion, he congratulated the states upon the new functions which they were called upon to exercise. "The Royal Letters Patent," observed his Royal Highness, "of the 7th of this month have acquainted you with the principles which guided the Prince Regent in forming the constitution of the General Assembly of the States. He had not in view the introduction of a new Constitution, founded merely on theoretical principles, but, on the contrary, proceeded upon the conviction that it was most consistent with the welfare of the kingdom to preserve, as far as possible, the existing institutions which had been already sanctioned by experience, and only to introduce such modifications as the change of circumstances rendered necessary."

His Royal Highness then proceeded to observe that the Prince Regent, desirous to alleviate the public burdens as much as possible, had ordered very considerable reductions in the army, and had extended them as far as his obligations to the Confederation, and the maintenance of internal order would allow.——Some changes would be made in the military organization, which would be communicated to the States. Several subjects connected with the administration of Justice, would also be laid before the States, in this and the following Sessions.

His royal highness having concluded, rose, and returned to the palace in the same state as he came to the Assembly. A great number of spectators attended the ceremony, according to invitation. On the following day his royal Highness invited the Deputies to dinner at his Palace.

In another part of his speech his royal highness observed, "that the States would be rejoiced to hear that no Hanoverian has been denounced as partaking in the intrigues, the extensive ramifications of which have induced the German Confederation to adopt general measures; unite your endeavours with those of the Government to maintain this disposition, that under the blessings of undisturbed tranquility and order, the welfare of the public and individuals may daily increase."

The 5th and 7th vols of the unpublished correspondence of Bonaparte are about to appear. The editor is arrived at that period when Bonaparte appeared on the political horizon, and was engaged in secret with laying the foundation of his future grandeur.—We perpetually see him, in this correspondence, conceding his feelings of confusion under the mask of republican modesty. But of the numerous examples of this truth, which these letters supply we shall extract the last paragraph of the confidential communication which he addressed to the Directors, to announce to them that peace had been concluded with Austria:—

"I have deserved by my services the approbation of the government and the nation. I have received the highest marks of its esteem. Nothing more remains for me but to buy an humble cottage, and to resume the ploughshare of Cincinnatus, and to furnish an example of respect for the magistracy, and of aversion for the military rule, which has destroyed so many republics, and overthrown so many states. Rely upon my devotion, and my desire to do every thing for the liberty of the country.

BONAPARTE."

The new Bank Notes.—The immutable Notes are not likely to come into circulation before the end of February. The reason of this delay is understood to be the abandonment of the two first projects which were attempted, and the extraordinary extent and accuracy of mechanical arrangement necessary to perfect that which has been adopted. The following we believe to be an outline of the plan finally to be determined upon—

A number of squares will appear in the chequer-work upon the note, filled with hair lines in elliptic curves of various deg ees of eccentricity, the squares to be alternately of red and black lines; the perfect mathematic coincidence of the extremities of the lines of different colours on the sides of the squares, will be effected by the arrangement of machinery of singular fidelity. But even with the use of this machinery, a person who has not the key to the proper disposition of its parts would make millions of experiments to no purpose. Other obstacles to imitation will be so presented to the structure of the note; but this is the one principally relied upon. It is plain that any failure in the imitation will be manifest to the observation of the most careless; and the most skilful merchants who have seen the operation, declare the note cannot be imitated. The machine works with three cylinders and the impression is made by small convex cylindrical plates.

LONDON, Jan. 18.

The following article might seem to have been borrowed from one of the romances of the last century, if the facts were not so recent and still to be witnessed:

OSTEND, Jan. 10.

"For some time past we have seen in our port the most intrepid mariner perhaps that ever existed. He is an Englishman, who in a small and frail boat, about 16 feet in length & four in breadth, undertakes a voyage from England to Ostend, where he takes on board a cargo of productions of the country, which he conveys to England in his boat. What is most astonishing is, that neither the high sea, nor the cold, nor the inclemency of the weather, stops this hardy mariner. Let us imagine a man entirely alone in the open sea, guiding a little boat, which hardly rises six inches above the surface of the ocean, exposed to the rain, to the winds, and, above all, to the intense cold which we now have, and we may judge how far the love of gain will go. In his last voyage hither he was three days in the passage, and did not stop the whole time. He has contrived an ingenious method to steer his frail vessel: placed in the front of the boat, with his back turned to the prow, he guides the helm by means of two ropes, which go the whole length of the boat, and there he manages his sails without quitting his place. As the ice might accumulate against the sides of his boat, and thus expose him to sink, he has taken care, before putting out to sea, to grease all the sides of his boat, that the water may not adhere to it; and in this manner he traverses the ocean, without troubling himself about the numerous dangers which he incurs, and which he has hitherto braved with impunity."

From the first account of his royal highness the Duke of Kent's illness, those who were the best acquainted with him felt the most serious apprehensions of the event that has fatally happened; since the habitual abstinence of the illustrious Duke gave him such strength & uninterrupted health, as to make him inattentive to the first access of the cold, which thereby gained such a degree of inflammation, as to baffle all the subsequent remedies. His royal highness, in a long walk on Thursday to Knight with Captain Conroy, in the environs of Sidmouth, had his boots soaked through with wet. On their return to Woolford's Cottage, Captain Conroy, finding himself wet at his feet, advised his royal highness to change his boots and stockings: but this he did not do till he dressed for dinner, being attracted by the smiles of its inmate Princess, with whom he sat for a considerable time in fond parental dalliance. Before night, however, he felt a sensation of cold and hoarseness, when Dr. Wilson prescribed a draught. This his royal highness, in the usual confidence in his strength, and dislike to medicine, did not take, saying that he had no doubt but a night's rest would carry off every morbific symptom; the event proved the contrary. In the morning, the symptoms of fever increased; and though his royal highness lost 120 ounces of blood from the arms, and by cupping, he departed this life, as we have stated, at 10 o'clock on Sunday last. However, his royal highness was sensible of his approaching death, and met it with pious resignation. He graciously said, that he blamed himself for not having followed the benevolent advice of Dr. Wilson, in the first instance, by which the access of the fever might have been checked.—Every attention that skill and affection could supply were rendered to him. Prince Leopold, accompanied by Dr. Stockmar, arrived at Woolford's cottage on Saturday, at 2 o'clock, and never left His Royal Father to the last."

The Duke of Kent was the fourth son of His Majesty, and was born on the 2d of November, 1767. At eighteen years of age he was sent to Germany by his Majesty's command, and resided successively at Lunenburg and Hanover until he had almost completed his 20th year. During this period his whole income consisted of an allowance of £1000 per annum, of which his governor had the sole disposal, except one guinea and a half per week allowed to his royal highness for pocket money. His royal highness then passed two years more at Geneva, without any further increase of income. He was an enthusiast to the profession of a soldier, for which he was destined from early life. With the rank of Colonel, he commanded the 7th fusileers, which formed part of the garrison of Gibraltar under General O'Hara, in 1790 and 1791, some time before the breaking out of the Revolutionary war with France. In that subordinate military station, His Royal Highness soon became remarkable for the diligent discharge of his own duties, and for exacting a similar punctuality from every man and officer under him. His attention to the appearance and discipline of his regiment was altogether exemplary, and unremitting. But in his progress towards this end he encountered much determination, considerable obloquy, and some resistance. Complaints were made, which injured his character at Home; & mutinies were prepared by the troops, which threatened his authority, and more than once endangered his person. From Gibraltar His Royal Highness was removed to Canada in 1791, thence to Halifax, Nova Scotia, and again to Canada, where, as Commander of the Forces, he acquired universal esteem for the justice & integrity of his demeanour. During this service in British America he received orders to sail for the West Indies, and join in the attack on the French Islands, under Sir Charles Grey.

On the expedition the impetuous bravery of His Royal Highness was manifested at St. Lucie, with too little consideration for his own safety, and too much disregard for the enemy's position. The troops were repulsed; but the Duke Kent's high personal courage obtained him the applauses of the soldiers, and a flattering rebuke from the Commander in Chief. The next theatre of His Royal Highness's public life was Gibraltar, the scene of his earliest military service. His Royal Highness was appointed Governor of that important garrison. A mass of abuses here waited his correcting hand. The establishment of wine-houses for the sale of liquors to the troops, had been encouraged from shameful motives in those who had the means of suppressing them, and to an extent not more subversive of the health, discipline, and morals of the garrison, than perilous to the safety of the place itself. The Royal Duke, attentive only to the welfare of the community of which he was the head, and scorning the vicious though vast emoluments which some of his predecessors had derived from the sale of liquors, or that illegal and ruinous traffic, resolved to cleanse the Augean stable and to sweep away the abomination of many years. The virtuous resolution was made; but it recoiled upon its author. It is true that the wine-house licences were withdrawn; that the peaceable inhabitants of Gibraltar could carry on their business, and walk the streets, and repose within their dwellings, at less risk of insult, outrage, or robbery, than before; that drunkenness disappeared among the regiments; that cleanliness and discipline were restored, while military punishments were relieved in frequency, the hospitals emptied of their numerous inmates, and the sexton disappointed of his daily work. But we turn to other consequences. The liquor merchants were forced to discontinue their enormous profits, and instigated the unreflecting soldiery to vengeance for the loss of the pestiferous orgies which devoured their pay, & destroyed their health. Insubordination broke out on all sides; the reforming governor was not supported by the local authorities; and he was assailed on a more near home. The illustrious subject of this memoir, after receiving the grateful and unanimous acknowledgements of the civil population of Gibraltar, was recalled from a post in which his efforts for the public good were neither appreciated nor defended "they ought to have been;" and his official services were since confined to the command of the 1st regiment of foot or Royal Scots, which His Royal Highness bore with the rank of Field-Marshal, and with the military government of that fortress, from which his rigorous discharge of a severe duty had been made the instrument of his expulsion.

His Royal Highness was married on the 29th of May, 1818, at Cobourg (and re-married at Kew Palace on the 11th of July, the same year, to her Serene Highness Victoria Maria Louisa, youngest daughter of the late reigning Duke of Saxe Coburg, widow of his late serene highness the Prince of Leiningen, and sister of Prince Leopold. The only issue of this marriage was a daughter, named Alexandrina Victoria, who was born at Kensington Palace on the 24th of May, 1819.

In several points of his character the Duke of Kent bore a striking resemblance to His Majesty. In his habits he was distinguished for regularity; though in the business of the table, even to a scrupulousness; methodical to a remarkable degree, not only to all his household, but in every thing that bore the form of business. Nature had gifted him with a fine person, a memory of wonderful quickness, and an aptitude that enabled him, on the spur of the moment, to comprehend the bearings of any general question that was submitted to his consideration. He was an excellent public speaker. He did not, indeed, aspire to the character of an orator, but his appeals in behalf of the objects of public benevolence will long be remembered as some of the most impressive addresses that have ever been delivered on such occasions. In his manners he was affable, easy of access, and in his disposition singularly ingenuous; and, considering that he laboured under the disadvantages of a foreign education, he possessed many of the best qualities of the English gentleman. His loss, lamented as it must be, on account of his high rank in the state, will be greatly felt by the numerous charitable institutions which he patronized; and many individuals will have to deplore the loss of an ever ready and liberal friend, notwithstanding the embarrassed state of his own affairs.

LETTER FROM THE ARCTIC LAND EXPEDITION.

[We have been favored with a copy of the following interesting letter, addressed to a lady in his neighborhood by one of the officers on the expedition now travelling in the interior of North America, towards the shores of the Arctic Ocean. Edin. Mag.]

"August 27, 1819—At sea.

"After passing the southern part of Greenland, named Cape Farewell, we met with much ice; but as it did not lie thick little difficulty was experienced in forcing a way through it, nor did it prove so great an impediment as the contrary wind which still continued to thwart us. Near the Greenland coast, the streams or fields of ice consisted of a collection of loose and comparatively flat pieces, more or less densely compacted together, according to the state of the weather; but on approaching the shores of Labrador, we fell in with many icebergs, or large floating fields of ice. The variety of forms assumed by these masses afforded us amusement, but occasionally we saw some of such an enormous size, that every other feeling gave place to astonishment. One of these largest bergs we estimated to be 200 feet high above the water, and above half a mile in length. Its surface was broken by mountains of no mean size, with deep vallies between. Enormous as these dimensions must appear, you will be more surprised when I inform you, that the part of an iceberg which projects above water, amounts only to a ninth part of the whole mass, that being the proportion of ice which floats above salt water. Author's Seat clothed in snow would have formed only one pinnacle to this berg. When these bodies became familiar to us from their frequency, we derived much pleasure from the various shades and gradations of color they exhibited. The more compact parts were generally of a bright verdigrise blue; towards the base a fine sea green prevailed; here and there a tint of red was seen, and the summits alone were snow-white. As the part of the ice which is covered by the sea decays more rapidly than that which is in the air, it often happens that one of these islands becomes topheavy and tumbles over. We never saw one in the act of making this revolution, but most of them bore evident marks of having been turned twice or thrice; the old water lines, intersecting each other in various directions, being still deeply engraved on their surfaces.

"We first beheld the land (Resolution island) during a fog, which soon became so thick, that we could not see the length of the ship. In consequence of this, we got involved with a field of ice; then, to add to our distress, it fell calm; and although we could perceive that we were carried along by a violent current, yet the fog deprived us of ascertaining its direction, and the depth of water was too great to admit of our anchoring. After remaining in this situation for two or three hours, receiving, occasionally, some heavy blows from the ice, an alarm was given, that we were close on the rocks. We all ran upon deck, and beheld a tremendous cliff, frowning directly over the mast heads of the ships. It was perfectly perpendicular, covered in many places by sheets of ice; and its summit was so high, and surrounded to so thick a fog, that it could not be traced from the deck. We had scarcely time to make any useful exertions, for, in a few minutes, the ship felt boardside against the cliff, along the face of which she was violently hurried by the current toward a ridge of broken rocks, which in a short time, would have torn the stoutest vessel to pieces. The heavy swell which prevailed, caused the ship, in her passage, to beat against various rocky ledges, which projected under water. One of the blows she thus sustained, drove the rudder out of its place but it fortunately hung suspended by a tackling which had been employed to secure it on coming amongst the ice. At this instant, when all human exertions seemed perfectly fruitless, the current eddied off shore, the land-breeze sprung up; a boat that was had put overboard succeeded in taking us in tow; one of the last things the shipcarpenter, came the rudder to fall back into its place—By this combination of favorable circumstances, we succeeded in getting round the point we so much dreaded; and, setting all sail, we steered from land. Upon the first alarm of danger, the women and children, of whom we had a large number on board, going to Lord Selkirk's colony, rushed upon the deck, much terrified. The officers, however, succeeded in calming their fears, and prevailed on them to go below out of the way of the sailors; but scarcely had this been effected, when the current carried us against a large iceberg, which had grounded upon a ridge of sunken rocks that lay at some distance from the shore.—The crash of the masts and yards, together with the grinding of the ship's side against the ice, terrified them more than ever—but we speedily got clear of the second danger, without receiving farther damage. Our troubles, however, were not at an end; the ship had received so much damage, whilst on the rocks, that, on examination a great deal of water was found in the hold. All hands were instantly set to the pumps; but to our mortification, we found that the water rushed in faster than we could, with every exertion, discharge it. Affairs now wore a gloomy aspect; the water in the hold increased to upwards of 5 feet, and the men were getting tired of the pumps, when fortunately the weather cleared up a little, and we saw the Eddystone one of the vessels that accompanied us, at no great distance; we bore down and informed them of our situation. Every assistance in their power was promptly supplied; they sent 20 men and 2 carpenters. The services of the latter were invaluable, as our own carpenter had died in the earlier part of the voyage. With this fresh accession of strength, we kept the leak from gaining upon us; and after some time the carpenters succeeded in discovering and patching up the broken parts so as to sensibly to diminish the influx of water. Their operations were however slow, and it was not till the evening of the second day, that we succeeded in getting all the water out of the ship. During the whole of this time, not only the officers and men worked hard, but even many of the women, recovering their spirits, proved eminently useful at the pumps. As the water decreased, the carpenters were enabled the more readily to repair the damage that had been sustained: and they ultimately succeeded so well, that one pump proved sufficient to discharge the water as fast as it leaked in. In this state we have continued ever since.

In these straits the Hudson's bay vessels are generally visited by a tribe of Esquimaux, who frequent the shores during summer, and come off to the ships for the purpose of bartering their whole wealth, which consists in whale and sea-blubber, for iron, which has become an article of the first consequence to them. Accordingly, one day when we were above 20 miles from the shore, these poor creatures ventured off in their skin canoes, pulling with the utmost anxiety to reach the vessels. It sometimes happens, when the ships have a fair wind, that they run past the Esquimaux haunts without stopping; in the present instance, however, we were detained by light contrary winds, which enabled them to overtake us, & when they did so, they expressed so much joy and satisfaction, that it was easy to conceive how great their disappointment must have been when they missed us. In a short time we were surrounded by 30 or 40 canoes, each carrying one man, with no small cargo of new blubber, which, to their great satisfaction, they speedily exchanged for pieces of iron, hoops, knives, saws, hatchets, harpoons, and nails. The wind continuing contrary during the remainder of the day, we stood in towards the land, and gave the women of the tribe an opportunity to come off, which they did in five large canoes, framed like the small ones at sea, but open, and each capable of carrying from 20 to 30 people. The oars were pulled by women, but there was an old man in each boat to direct them. As they brought off a great many children, I suppose we saw the whole tribe amounting to nearly 200 souls.

The features of the Esquimaux are not the most regular in the world; but it was pleasing to see their flat, fat greasy faces. When they had disposed of their articles of trade, we presented the women and children with a few needles beads, and other trinkets, and sent them away highly delighted. Since that time we have been contending against contrary winds; but by perseverance have succeeded in getting within a few days' sail of York factory, at which place I shall conclude and despatch.

"August 31.—York Factory.—We have landed here in safety; find the country more pleasant than we expected, and have been told that the difficulties of travelling in this country have been much exaggerated. J. R."

General Gilley, who, during the 100 days, took the Duke d'Angoulême prisoner, and who on the second restoration of Louis XVIII. was condemned to death, arrived at Paris from America on the 4th of February. He has appealed for a revisal of the sentence against him.

On the 5th of February, Mr. Hobhouse was brought before the court of King's Bench, on a writ of habeas corpus, in order to be discharged from the commitment by the House of Commons. Mr Hobhouse was attended by several gentlemen of the bar. The Chief Justice asked who was to appear as Counsel, when Mr. H. observed that he should argue the case himself; at the same time requesting the return to be read, and the case adjourned to a future day.

The Chief Justice asked what point he (the prisoner) intended to argue.

Mr. Hobhouse—"My Lord, I intend, I can, to show, in the first place, that the House of Commons is not a Court of competent jurisdiction to commit."

The Chief Justice—"This is not a point of objection relating to the terms of the return made to us."

Mr. Hobhouse—"There is an adjudication set forth in the return, and unless the House of Commons can adjudge upon the case in question, that cannot make the warrant sufficient. I shall endeavor to shew that the House of Commons is not a Court of Judicature."

a Court of Judicature."

The Chief Justice.—" Is that your only objection? And if not, be so good as to state what other objection you have to urge."

Mr. Hobhouse.—" My other objection is, that the House of Commons, even assuming it to be a Court of Judicature, has taken under its cognizance what cannot be considered as a contempt, but as an offence at common law, and not in any way cognizable by that House, according to the laws of this country ; for on the face of the proceedings, the House of Commons proceed to adjudge that the publication alluded to, is a libel, which, I contend, they cannot do. They adjudge it to be a seditious libel, tending to inflame the people to acts of violence against the Legislature. The third objection I mean to submit to the return is, that on the return it does not appear that I have had any hearing at all ; and I certainly shall be able to shew, that this is not only against every principle of English law, but is even against the proceedings of the House of Commons itself."

The Chief Justice.—" Is there any other objection you mean to urge ?"

Mr. Hobhouse.—" Yes, my Lord. In the fourth place, I shall endeavor to argue, that, even assuming the House of Commons to be a Court of Judicature, and competent to take under its cognizance what is alleged to be a seditious libel, and assuming it to have authority to condemn an Englishman in his absence, still it could not condemn an original unmitigated imprisonment. That is the point I shall next attempt to contest before your Lordships. The next point will be, to shew that the natural remedy for me, under such circumstances, is to claim my liberation at your Lordships' hands by Habeas Corpus. I shall afterwards attempt to shew your Lordships, that upon the face of this warrant, assuming every other objection to be removed, assuming that nothing informal has taken place in the mode of proceedings in the House of Commons, still there is an informality in the face of the warrant that must, as it appears to me, make it impossible any longer to detain me under it ; and if your Lordships wish me to state what that objection is, I will do it ; but, at the same time, with your Lordships' kindness and permission, I wish to reserve it for argument when I shall be brought up again."

The Chief Justice, after conferring with the other Judges, said, " You must tell us what your remaining objection is."

Mr. Hobhouse.—" The informality on which I complain is, that there is no publication at all stated in the warrant ; the pamphlet alluded to is not called a printed pamphlet, and I am not said to have authorized the printing or publishing of it ; and this, I submit, is a vice in the warrant, which, according to all principles of legal and natural justice, is a fatal objection."

The Chief Justice after conferring a considerable time with the other judges, immediately proceeded to deliver his judgement, as follows : "We have conferr..d together, and I am of opinion, that, sitting in this court, we are not authorized by the law of the land to enter into the discussion of any of the objections taken by the gentleman on the floor to this commitment. It has been settled by many precedents brought from time to time before the different Courts of Westminster Hall, and lately in the most formal manner, by a writ of error from this Court to the House of Lords, that it is competent for the House of Commons to commit for contempt ; that they are judges, and the only judges, as far as this court can know, of what is a contempt of them ; and that there are a great number of cases, where motions for the writ of habeas corpus have been made, in which this and other courts of Westminster Hall have, from time to time, refused to enquire into the authority of the house to commit. And I now state, most distinctly, that we have no authority to entertain these objections with that view. It is suggested, that there is an informality in the form of the warrant, because no publication of the libel is stated to have taken place ; but the warrant states, that the House of Commons has this day adjudged, that a pamphlet entitled so and so is a scandalous libel. Now we can not suppose that they adjudged it to be a scandalous libel, unless they had the pamphlet before them, and under their consideration. The adjudication necessarily imports, that the pamphlet was before them, and that they had considered it. Then it is said, that it does not appear that the party was heard. The warrant recites, 'That whereas John Cam Hobhouse, Esq. having acknowledged himself to be the author of the pamphlet, the House of Commons had therefore ordered so and so.' It is stated in their resolution, and it appears by the Speaker's warrant, that this Gentleman now before us, has acknowledged himself to be the author of the libel ; we cannot, therefore, enter further into the question. In the case brought by Sir Francis Burdett, against the late Speaker of the House of Commons, which was argued, first, in this Court, and afterwards, upon a writ of error, in the Court of Exchequer ; and ultimately, in the House of Lords, a distinction was taken between that case, which was an action of trespass, and the case of the return to a Habeas Corpus. That distinction was taken by Lord Erskine, when the case was under the consideration of the House of Lords. All the cases that have been decided in the different Courts of Westminster Hall, upon this subject, were brought under review ; and throughout the whole decision, it was never doubted that the Courts of Common Law had that authority to interfere with, supersede, or take upon themselves to annul a Resolution of the House of Commons, by discharging, from custody, a person proved to have been committed by the House of Commons, for a contempt.—The cases I have alluded to, were in that case, all acknowledged to be law ; and, in the argument, the House of Lords proceeded on the distinction between the case of a return to Habeas Corpus, and an action of trespass at law. We should, therefore, be doing that which we are not authorized to do, if we were to discharge this gentleman out of custody ; and I now repeat, that if we should accede to this motion, we should do what the law would not allow us to do. The prisoner must be remanded."

Mr. Hobhouse interfered, and said, " May I have permission"——

The Chief Justice.—" No, Sir, we have heard your points."

Mr Hobhouse bowed, evidently mortified at the unexpected course which the proceedings had taken.

Mr. Justice Bayley, Mr. Justice Holroyd, and Mr. Justice Best, in an able & elaborate judgement, severally delivered their opinions in concurrence with the other Judges.

The Chief Justice then ordered the prisoner to be remanded, and an entry to be entered on the return, of the reasons why that course was pursued.

Mr. Hobhouse attempted to address the Court again, but was prevented by the Court. He was then remanded to his former custody ; & in his passage through the Hall, he was loudly cheered by an immense crowd which had assembled.

After he had left the Court, the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Holroyd said, they wished it to be understood, that although a writ of Habeas Corpus had been granted to Mr Hobhouse, in the first instance, on the authority of a dictum of Lord Kenyon, in the King v. Fowler, (T. R. that this must not be considered as a precedent in future, because, after looking carefully through the Habeas Corpus Act, it was clear that the writ of Habeas Corpus could not be granted as a matter of course, and without sufficient grounds before the Court for its interposition.

LONDON, Feb 3

The King.—In consequence of the bulletin which appeared in yesterday's paper respecting the state of the king, his majesty's palace in Pall Mall was thronged from between 9 and 10 o'clock a.m. this morning till dark, and after that the enquiries did not cease, and the anxiety extended to all ranks and denominations during the whole of the day, in great numbers, opposite the palace in Pall Mall, Waterloo Place, &c. to anxious desire to know the state of his majesty. At half past 12, the following favorable bulletin was issued : " The king continues to rest better. The inflammation in his majesty's chest is diminished." We are happy to add, that his majesty passed a favorable night, and continued better throughout the whole of yesterday. At a late hour last night, the following still more favorable and gratifying bulletin was issued : " The king's symptoms have all been more favorable throughout the day. His Majesty has had three hours refreshing sleep this evening."

It is by no means a settled matter in law, that the wife of the king becomes queen of England, or even of the united kingdom, as the public have imagined. Henry the seventh did not consent to the coronation of his wife till two years after his accession. In George the first's time, his wife was never recognized as queen.

The duchess of Kent is pregnant, which was the cause of her performing the journey from Sidmouth so slowly.

Parliament, at the request of the king, has passed an act of grace.

Both houses of Parliament adjourned yesterday to the 17th inst. the day after the appointed time for the funeral of his late majesty.

A spirit of great discontent has manifested itself in London, and some other places in Ireland among the cotton weavers. Great distress has latterly prevailed amongst them, owing to the scarcity of work and the low rate of wages.

The disturbances in Galway, continued. A letter from Mayo, of Jan. 5th says, " We are surrounded by disaffection and disloyalty, imputable to English agents."

The force of the Russian army, last year, made a total of 1,030,000 men, including 47,088 cannon.

Assassination of the Duke De Berri.

LONDON, Feb. 18.

We have received this morning the Paris papers of Tuesday. They are, of course, painfully interesting, for they communicate a variety of other facts connected with the assassination of his Royal Highness the Duke de Berri.—Among the most important of these is the undeniable one, that the atrocious crime was committed from political motives. This alarming truth was distinctly admitted, not only by the members of the two Chambers who met to address his majesty upon the mournful occasion, but it is recognized by the King himself, in the concluding sentence of his answer to the Address, of the Deputies.—" The Chamber cannot doubt," said his Majesty " that feeling as a man, and acting as a King, I shall adopt every necessary measure to preserve the State from dangers of which I am but too forwarned by the crim. of this day." The assassin himself, indeed, according to the letter of a private correspondent, upon being interrogated, avowed that he had exterminated the Duke as the youngest of the Royal Family, knowing that nature would soon relieve him from the necessity of abridging the days of the King."

His Royal Highness the Duke de Berri, on leaving the Opera last night (Feb 13) was stabbed with a Stiletto, just as he was getting into his carriage ; the blood gushed out over his august spouse, who had just taken her seat in the carriage. The Prince, who was deeply wounded in the right side, uttered a piercing shriek, and fell senseless on the ground. The assassin, a man about thirty years of age, and whose mean stature indicates the condition of a pauper, was instantly taken into custody, and conducted to the guard-house of the gendarmerie contiguous to the theatre.

His Royal Highness was immediately conveyed into one of the Committee rooms of the Opera house, whither the Princess aided by the professional gentlemen in administering the first relief. It is asserted that the wound is not mortal.

This modern Ravaillac displayed great composure on being interrogated by a gendarme as to the motive for the appalling deed, he replied, that the crime had been projected four years ago.

Two o'clock A. M. Feb. 14.—His Royal highness continues at the Opera house. The wound has been probed, the blood consequently issued, and the Prince appeared relieved. The Duke de Bourbon arrived at half past one. M. Decazes also interrogated the assassin. The King's Procureur entered upon his examination on the spot. The name of the wretch is Louvel ; he is an undertaking employed in the royal stables ; he had fled as far as the corner of the street, when he was arrested by a private individual. An immense multitude surrounds the Opera, and manifests the most distressing inquietude.

Six o'clock A. M.—The Prince has just been transported to the Louvre. An immense multitude, with consternation in their looks, had assembled round this palace of our Kings, and every moment it is dreaded that the most affectionate and the most dreadful fact will be communicated.

Seven o'clock A M.—His Royal Highness has been insensible during the last hour.

LONDON, Feb. 3

" We regret to find by the Irish papers received this morning, that the disturbances in the county of Galway still continue. We trust, however, the energy of the Vice Regal Government, aided by the zeal and vigor of the local Magistrates, will be sufficient to prevent this unquiet spirit from bursting forth into any serious acts of disaffection. The following extract of a letter, dated Westport, county of Mayo Jan. 31, is written however, in the language of strong apprehension.—

" I am sorry to tell you, that the state of this country is very bad. The county of Mayo itself, is as yet quiet ; but we are surrounded on every side by disaffection and disloyalty. It is said English agents are in the neighborhood, and that it is they who have excited all the disturbance. I don't know if this be true ; but I am afraid bad times are coming."

Ireland, in part, was in a state of revolt. In the county of Galway, 500 riband men had been procuring arms in the neighbourhood of Cloofert. On information of this circumstance being communicated to the Bishop, he defended the church by armed men, entered it, and rang the bells until day-light. 300 regular troops have been sent to the assistance of the Bishop, who were patrolling the roads in the vicinity.

The city of Cork had been in part inundated from the melting of the snow on the mountains, which swelled the streams, until they overran their bounds. Hannon's marsh, Clark's marsh, Hanover street, Nile-street, Cross-street, &c. were inundated, and the poor inhabitants suffered much from loss of furniture, &c. &c.

Interment of the late King.

The Chapel.—Before seven o'clock, all the persons who had procured tickets were admitted into the north aisle, and were accommodated with places on a temporary platform, which allowed an excellent view of the whole range of the cathedral, except the chapel. The Eton Boys were stationed at the back of the soldiers, and saw every thing without incommoding or displacing any other spectators.

At half-past seven a detachment of the First or Grenadier Guards were marched into the middle of the aisle, and took their stand on each side of the railed way, through which the general procession was to pass. At eight o'clock their arms and standards were reversed, and every second man was supplied with a large wax taper, lighted. A whole hour now elapsed, which was not marked by any incident except the sound of the solemn tuning of the minute-guns. At nine o'clock, a mournful flourish of trumpets, but faintly heard in the aisles, announced that the procession had begun to move, and every eye was immediately fixed in anxious expectation towards the spot by which it was to enter. In a few minutes the van entered the aisle, consisting of the Poor Knights, followed by the pages ; and then by slow degrees, the whole body moved forward in the order described in the ceremonial. It is impossible to conceive a more striking, a more deeply impressive spectacle, than that which now presented itself. All that is distinguished in rank or station, judges, generals, bishops, privy councillors, peers, were seen in silent march accompanying to the tomb the corpse of a mighty monarch, so lately the fountain of honours, but now a mere memento of the fragility of all earthly grandeur. In addition to the solemnity induced by this general reflection, every heart seemed to feel personally a particular grief at the loss of a friend and father. The united force of these ideas produced together such deep and reverential sorrow, that we are persuaded that few persons could have witnessed the scene without becoming more reasoning, and serious, if not wiser and better beings : it was made to teach even " heedless rambling impulse how to think."

Among the distinguished persons of opposition who had come to pay their homage to the memory of their venerable Sovereign, were the Duke of Bedford, Earl Grey, the Earl of Lauderdale ; and it was gratifying to see that those who differed in all points of politics, agreed in one thing—that all the respect which individuals have it in their power to bestow, should be paid to him who had so long adorned and beautified the kingly office with mild wisdom and undeviating worth. As the procession slowly moved along, the several Dukes who had been appointed to bear the pall, were observed, consisting of the Dukes of Wellington, Buccleugh, Newcastle, Dorset, Portsmouth, and Athol. The canopy over the coffin was borne by Marquesses, among whom were the Marquesses of Stafford, Buckingham, and Salisbury. Those immediately before the coffin, a most imposing effect was produced by the array of national banners, carried by different noblemen. The Union Banner was carried by Lord Granville, St George's Banner by Lord Howard of Effingham, the Grand Royal Banner by Lord Hill, the Banner of Scotland by Lord Clinton, the Banner of Ireland by Lord Headfort, and the Banners of Hanover and Brunswick by two noblemen, whose persons could not be distinguished. As soon as the coffin appeared round the corner of the aisle, the singers of the different choirs, who were followed by the dean of Windsor, struck up the solemn service of " I know that my Redeemer liveth." This beautiful anthem lasted till the corpse was carried into the chapel and placed on the trestles. Immediately after the coffin followed the Duke of York as chief mourner ; next him went the Duke of Clarence, the Duke of Sussex, the Duke of Gloucester, and Prince Leopold. The fine manly aspect of the latter, imbued as it is with seriousness and suffering, made a great impression on the spectators. As soon as the procession was completed, ranged in the chapel, the dean of Windsor, assisted on this occasion by the archbishop of Canterbury, commenced the service. The Psalms were then chaunted by perhaps the fullest choir ever heard ; it consisted of the principal voices of the Chapel Royal, of St James and St George's Chapel ; Mr Knyvett presided at the Organ. Messrs. Vaughan, W Knyvett, J. B. Sale, and Marshall, sang with a solemn sweetness that dissolved the mind of all sublunary thoughts and filled it with pious musings. After Kent's oath to it " Hear my prayer" the choir performed that sublime piece. " I hear a voice from Heaven." At the conclusion of the service, and previous to the last collect and blessing, the funeral anthem, composed by Handel for Queen Caroline, was sung by the full band. One portion, in which the voices of the boys alone were employed, was a masterpiece of delicious enchanting harmony.

When this anthem was finished, the Dean read the prayer which accompanies the lowering of the body into the grave ; and it is impossible to describe the thrilling awe of every bosom as the throwing of the dust resounded from the royal coffin : this awe was still further heightened to those in the chapel, from whose eyes the coffin had slowly and gradually disappeared, without hands, and as if it had been mysteriously withdrawn by some supernatural power. Sir Isaac Heard then read the titles of his late Majesty, but in a voice less firm than usual ; his tremulousness was however, the effect of grief rather than of age. The service being concluded, Mr Knyvett played a solemn voluntary, and the procession returned nearly in the same order in which it came.

Thus ended the most awful and magnificent ceremony which any British subject now living ever witnessed in this country ; a ceremony, not merely adorned with all those appendages of grandeur which belong as matter of course to all royal funerals, but rendered sublime by the voluntary and heartfelt homage of countless thousands of affectionate subjects, who had thronged to the last obsequies of their King, not from the idle curiosity of seeing a grand exhibition, but to shed a last tear over the grave of a father and friend.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 19.

The Spanish insurrection, according to the most recent and best authorised accounts, still continues to languish. General Freyre, who commands the Royal Troops, has removed from Seville, and taken up his position close to the head quarters of the insurgents, of which, it is said, they are expected to obtain possession in the course of the present month. The leader of the mutinous soldiers has addressed a proclamation to the army and people, in which he complains very justly of the tyranny and ignorance of the royal councils, and the absurdity of sacrificing more armies in useless crusades against the South American colonies ; but unfortunately, he proposes no specific object in his insurrectionary movements, & holds out no prospect of any reform which he proposes to accomplish. This singular procedure, which gives to the whole rebellion the appearance of a mere military mutiny, is said to have disgusted the country, and detached many of his partizans from the revolutionary banners.

Extract from a letter dated Amsterdam, 28th January, 1820, and received by a gentleman in this town.

" The Gazette will probably have given notice of the distress occasioned by the waters in many parts of Brabant and Germany. Brussels has lost some of her finest build ngs, and the handsomest gate to the city is carried away.—Hundreds of families have retired to the third and fourth stories, and starved for want of food. The weather is now mild and the ice appears nearly at an end."

THE SPANISH INSURRECTION.

The accounts from Spain are still contradictory. Madrid accounts to the 25th of January state, that the capital was then tranquil, and that 800 troops were conveyed by water from Seville to Cadiz on the 14th.

Advices from Seville, of the 19th say " Gen. Freyre is still here. Little money, few resources, no confidence. The issue of the contest becomes daily more doubtful. The Insurgents are very numerous ; there are not less than 6000 before Cadiz ; and nearly as many must be taken into account who are scattered about the surrounding country.

" General Freyre is not in a condition to undertake any thing against such a multitude, could he even confide in the troops which he has under his orders, and which do not, as yet, form a mass of more than 4000 men, composed of fragments of corps of all descriptions. There are five squadrons of Cavalry which remain firmly thende of the Royal Carabineers ; but what can Cavalry do in attacking the bridge of Suazo, the only entry into the Isle of Leon ?

MISCELLANEOUS.

A useful Hint to seafaring People.

"From several experiments, it appears that middling sized men, or those between five feet six inches, and five feet nine inches high, weigh about 150 pounds, and are in bulk equal to about 2 3-4 solid feet; and the small sized men, or those between five feet three inches and five feet six inches in height, weigh about 135 pounds, and are in bulk equal to 2 1-4 solid feet; and from those experiments it also appears that most men are specifically lighter than common water, and much more so than sea water. Consequently, could persons who fall into the water, have presence of mind enough to avoid the fright usual on such occasions, many might be preserved from drowning; and a very small piece of wood, such as an oar, would buoy a man above water, while he had spirits to keep his hold.

A gentleman who had been on board a Maltese ship of war, observed hanging to the taffarel, a block of wood almost like a buoy, and so ballanced that one end swam upright carrying a little flag-staff with a small vane: the person who was on duty on the poop had orders to cut the rope by which the buoy hung, upon any cry of a person's falling overboard; and as the block would be in the ship's wake by the time the person fell therein, he was sure of having something at hand to sustain him, till the boat should come to his assistance, and should that take so long time to do, as that the distance from the ship to the man rendered him invisible, yet the boat would have a mark to row towards, shown them by the vane."

UTICA, Feb. 15.

A new, pleasing, and important Discovery.—Lyman Cook, of Whitestown in the county of Oneida, has discovered a mode by which a machine can be made that will gain power and velocity. This machine is partly composed of a wheel, and partly of curious gearing, which is ingeniously contrived and applied. After this wheel is put into motion by a certain strength, any number of wheels may be added; yet that power which at first turned the principal wheel, is sufficient to keep the whole in motion. By doubling the gearing of this machine, the power and velocity will be doubled; yet the power that first moved the original wheel need not to be augmented. This machine may properly be termed an air engine; for the first wheel will forcibly draw much air, and rapidly discharge the same into other wheels, so that it is not only an original, but becomes an auxiliary, wheel. To every wheel which is added, may be given the appellation of a principal and auxiliary engine; for the second engine receives air from the first and from surrounding air; the third receives air from both, and from the universal and boundless atmosphere, and discharges into the fourth and so on. Mr. Cook has selected one of the best machines in the county of Oneida, to whom he has made known the principles of this discovery, and they two have proved beyond a doubt, that by this engine a power may be raised which will surpass any that has ever been produced by machinery. The mechanic who built this engine, being inibly persuaded that it will be substituted for much machinery which is now in use, designs to have the principle and honor to build one on a larger scale.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman of Baltimore, now in Washington, to the Editors of Federal Republican

In the present dearth of news, let me point your attention, and that of your readers, to an invention really new referring you and them to the description of it in the "National Intelligencer" of February 3. It is an improvement in railways, for travelling on, &c.

Among others I went to the capital this morning, and saw the carriage, on a section of a rough way—it was loaded with about a ton of stone, and I moved it up and down the plank with one finger.

The singularity of the principle, is in the ways being less than one foot wide, and yet a carriage three feet wide, cannot upset, and it steers itself. I saw the inventor there, who showed me a drawing and model of the railways, crossing (on one hill, (over a road and stream (water) to another hill, preserving its level in passing the valley or ravine; should it succeed, you may see the late Oliver Evans' prophecy fulfilled, "that a person may start from Washington, breakfast in Baltimore, dine in Philadelphia, and sup in New-York." You know I am no great judge of mechanics, but I certainly have every favorable opinion of this invention, after having seen all the minutiæ, lined plans, plans for carriages to pass each other, for crossing roads, and to keep the railways clear of dirt and snow, should so much of either get on them as to be inconvenient. Its greatest recommendation is its price, the carriages of the carriages will not exceed £1000 per mile, perhaps not so much; and though they have a tendency to decay, and will have to be rebuilt, yet they will be much cheaper than good turnpike roads, as they will require no annual repairs. The inventor is sanguine, he can carry them across the Alleganny mountains. I sincerely hope he may, and before I pas them again; as a person may read, write, or sleep in comfort, while travelling, without being incommoded by mud in winter, or dust in summer, which is "a consummation devoutly to be wished."

MOLASSES and SUGAR from GRAIN

Letters Patent have been granted by the U. States to James Wiseheart, securing to him to him the right of manufacturing Molasses & Sugar from all kinds of grain: It is a fact, that one bushel of good Wheat, rye or corn, will produce from three and a half to four gallons of molasses, or about fifteen pounds of sugar. The yields of the molasses are equally susceptible of variation by the use of good and bad grain, or mismanagement in the process as that of whiskey. Suppose the establishment of two manufacturing concerns, one for that of molasses concern is capable of producing to the manufacturer more than double the profit to that of the whiskey. As the slops or wash from the molasses will make equally as much pork, and of a better quality, as that from the whiskey, and not more than one half of capital that is necessary for erecting a manufactory for whiskey is required for that of the molasses. The process in making molasses is very simple and expeditious, that for making sugar is more complicated, it being necessary to correct and clarify it during the process to reduce it to a state favorable for crystalization. Men of discriminating judgement, who have tasted the sugar and molasses have given an opinion that in quality and flavor it comes nearly on par with the imported, and may even be used as a substitute for it. Bakers who have made use of it, view it superior for sweetening bread, cakes, &c. rendering them more light and spungy than other sweetening.

Emperor of Russia.

A letter from Petersburgh, dated the 28th of October says—"Our journals recount several traits relating to the tour of the Emperor in North Finland. He has frequently in a boat during a storm, traversed the great lakes that abound in that country. He has walked several leagues, a day, through woods and morasses, where there was but one narrow path, and he has assisted with his own hand to construct a wooden bridge over a torrent. The town of Byana, the ancient capital of the Cayanians, a people known in the ninth century, had not been visited by a monarch since the time of Gustavus Adolphus, a Prince whose character bears a strong resemblance to that of the Emperor Alexander."

Shooting Match for one hundred Guineas.

A sporting match took place on Monday week, between Captain Thornhill, one of the best shots in Hampshire, and Strong, the keeper to J. Thorn, Esq. of Melbourne Manor, Oxon, who should bag the greatest number of pheasants, hares and partridges, by 4 o'clock in the afternoon. They began two miles from Watford, the Captain taking his course towards Weycomb, and Strong a course between Barnett and St. Albans. It was a challenge of the Captain's against all England, taken up by Mr. Thorn, producing a man. The keeper bagged nine hares, seven pheasants, and eleven partridges, and captain Thornhill killed sixteen partridges, five pheasants, and six hares, making a tie. The parties had each a pony and a brace of dogs—A renewal of the shooting match between the same parties, took place on Thursday, and the bet was doubled—The spot selected to start from was within four miles of Maidenhead Thicket, on the road to Oxford, and each had his pony, and his adversary's friend as an umpire. Captain Thornhill bent his course towards Harabatch, on the Reading road, and had good pheasant sport, and from thence on to Hurst Manor, a distance of about 20 miles. He had 32 shots, and bagged 11 pheasants, 14 partridges and five hares. Strong directed his course towards Henley Mills, by the late Gen. Conway's park, and from thence he crossed the Thames to the Oxfordshire hills, and closed his day's labour there. He bagged 9 hares, 17 partridges and 5 pheasants, in 28 shots, and lost the match by one only. There were some heavy bets pending, and captain Thornhill has long been considered the best shot in Hampshire.

SIDNEY SMITH,
Administrator.

York, 20th March, 1820. 3w12.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of YORK & SIMCOE.

GENTLEMEN,

HAVING been honored with your confidence, and called by your suffrages to the very honorable duty of Representing you in the present Parliament, I must expect that my prospect of attaining to the same distinguished station in the next, will depend altogether on the sense you entertain of the manner in which I have performed the trust you reposed in me.

Placed more immediately under the eye of my Constituents, it is altogether in your power, as it is entirely your province, to estimate the part I have taken.

It is far from me to presume, that with every wish to promote your best interests, I may not in many cases, have erred; but I may at least be permitted to say, what I can declare with sincerity, that am conscious of nothing which I wish to excuse.

Among the objects which have occupied the attention of the present Parliament, they have wisely provided for the more equal Representation of the People; and, in consequence of the provision they have made, you will have the privilege of electing an additional Member to guard your interests, and consult for the welfare of the Province.

Several of my friends, I observe, animated with a very praise-worthy ambition, have eagerly presented themselves to your choice; my actual occupation in the present Parliament, put it out of my power to address myself so immediately to you on the subject of the next; but I thought I might securely trust to the steadiness and sincerity of that attachment, which I was happy to witness on a former occasion, and which I will not believe so fickle that it could be shaken by an idle and absurd reports which may happen to have found their way to you.

I cannot but consider as highly honorable, a situation, to which the good opinion of my fellow-subjects is the only passport; and I shall be happy to receive a proof of your continued confidence, by being chosen as one of your Representatives in the ensuing Parliament.

I will make no boast to you of my independence—you know the nature of my employment and resources, and that my welfare must depend on yours; at the same time, I trust you think me much above any unworthy attempt to court popularity, by claiming credit for greater purity of intention or honesty of conduct, because I do not happen to be honored with any place of trust or confidence under a Government whose only object is and must be to promote the happiness and prosperity of the People.

I am, Gentlemen,
your most
faithful Servant,
PETER ROBINSON.

Newmarket, 9th March, 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

THE General Election of Representatives of the People in the House of Assembly in this Province being near at hand, I take an early opportunity of announcing to you my intention of becoming a Candidate for your suffrages, there being a Bill before Parliament which will encrease your Representation.

I hope my character both public and private, is such as to entitle me to a participation in your confidence; & though I hold a highly honorable and responsible situation under His Majesty's Government, I trust the same Integrity and Exertion I have always manifested when serving my King, will continue to animate and guide my conduct when defending, maintaining, and supporting the Rights and Privileges of my Fellow Subjects, my family, and myself, which must be and are the same.

Should you do me the Honor to elect me one of your Representatives, to serve you in Parliament, I shall, to the utmost of my power, endeavour to deserve a continuation of your favor, should I live to be a Candidate at a future Election.

I have the Honor to be,
with unfeigned sincerity,
your most faithful and
obedient Servant,
HENRY J. BOULTON.

York, March 3d. 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

I acknowledge great pride in having been twice solicited by many of you to offer myself to your choice for the important and honorable service of Representative for these Counties in the House of Assembly. Having declined the first I cannot withdraw myself from this second invitation, which can alone be founded on the expectation of rigid integrity towards the Constitution of the Country: I therefore now solicit this choice, humbly presuming that my hopes are well founded, and that yours will not be disappointed.

Though twenty years residence here has necessarily honored me with a personal acquaintance with most of you, I cannot dare to think that this supersedes all necessity of declaring to you my sentiments generally on Legislation in this province. I therefore profess to you an all-consuming regard for British liberty and British Constitution; and that your Representative, whoever he may be, should, in the discharge of his duties, never forget that these two objects of his care are the one to the other, the best and only Bulwark, and that to preserve the latter ever pure, the first must be preserved unwounded. I know, Gentlemen, that your good sense convinces you that it is not the duty of your Representative to oppose, through a spirit of faction, the fair, beneficial, and legitimate objects of the Administration; but you also know that the purest Administration requires a vigilant activity on the part of all its constitutional checks.

It will, Gentlemen, perhaps be said to you, that I hold an appointment under the Crown; true, an honorable one,—I feel thankful to the Administration that gave it, and the Government that has continued it to me; but your choice will necessarily remove the objection, (if it be any in your estimation,) as the Office must, in the event of my Election, be surrendered.

I will at present only add, that whatever be the event, the prosperity of the Province at large, and of these Counties in particular, will, during my life, always be an object of earnest anxiety to me.

I have the Honor to be,
Gentlemen,
your very obedient Servant,
WM. WARREN BALDWIN.

LONDON, Feb. 5.

A Steam Coach — An advertisement in Dublin paper of Monday last, announces that on the first day of March a new invented coach, impelled by steam and air pressure, is to leave the Morra Hotel, Sackvill Street, at 20 min. past 7 o'clock in the morning, and deliver passengers and luggage in Belfast, at 2 o'clock; to remain 40 min. at Belfast, and reach Dublin again at 9 o'clock. Its motion is equal to 13 Irish miles an hour. The coaches are mounted on Mr. Bellingham's patent axles. It is added that the Proprietor having an extensive patent, will never take Mails, nor use Horses; therefore no delay from post-offices or toll-gates can occur. Subject to the aforegoing is a certificate, dated Glasgow, 1st January, and signed by two engineers and one millwright, stating, that they had tried Mr. Bellingham's new invented Steam pressure, on the west kirky road, within twenty miles of that town; that it propelled a coach loaned for the purpose, weighing in all four tons, at the rate of twenty-eight miles in one hour, without any inconvenience except the airing of the nave of the wheel. One man steered it with ease, and they consider it the safest and best mode of impelling a carriage, and not so liable to accident as a carriage drawn by horses.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 19.

The general aspect of serious and solemn stillness which this town resumed on Wednesday last, was, we believe, unparalleled on any former occasion. All the shops were closely shut; business of every kind was suspended, and even the window shutters and blinds of private houses were kept closed. The churches and other places of worship were generally crowded, adapted to the melancholy occasion, were every where preached: some of them, as we are informed, of such distinguished merit, that they will probably be published at the desire of their respective congregations. It was remarked that the general appearance of reverence and sedateness in the town, was beyond what has ever been observed on a Sunday or other great religious festival. [* Day of the King's funeral.]

The late King's Coffin... It is composed of Spanish mahogany and covered with rich Genoa velvet of royal blue a few shades deeper in tint than garter blue. The top or cover is divided into three compartments by double rows of silver gilt studs. In the comp rtment at the head, over a rich star of the order of the garter, is placed the royal arms of England, beautifully executed in dead gold. In the centre compartment is the plate with the inscription. This is of silver, richly gilt, and exquisitely burnished. In the lower compartment, at the feet, is the British lion couchant or gardant, supporting a shield with the letters G. R. surrounded with the garter and motto of the same order, also in dead gold. All the angles of the whole of these comp rtments are filled up with highly burnished silver gilt plates, engraved G. R. III, and surmounted by the royal crown. The sides and ends of this superb coffin are also divided with silver gilt studs, in the same manner as the cover, so as to leave three sp ces on each side, and one at each end for the handles. These handles are of silver, richly gilt, of a massive modern pattern, and the most exquisite workmanship; and each handle surrounded by a massive frame work, in the same taste, chiefly in dead gold, but delicately relieved by burnishing.

His late Majesty's mental illness was fatuity, not madness. He had not even lost his memory; his mind was full of ideas, derived from the habits of his past life; but he had no ideas or at least ready and correct ideas, from present circumstances; and therefore he had no judgement for present transactions. The images of past scenes—chiefly those of ceremony, or of some gracious intercourse were continually flitting before his "mind's eye," and they gave him constant occupation and amusement. He imagined himself in his drawing-room, or his audience chamber, or preparing for a ride, and by the succession of one scene to another, or by the intervention of some present want or refreshment, he was prevented from finding that his visions were unreal.—(Morning Post.)

On the 5th January, the inhabitants of Askring and its vicinity were led by curiosity to visit an icicle which had formed itself from a small fall of water, at the turn off on its course to drive a mill wheel; the form being a cone, with an opening about six feet from its base, sufficient to admit the body of any person to the interior which was descended into by means of a ladder, its height 23 feet and base seven; when, after further examination, another apartment was found, formed behind by means of two small pillars of solid ice, with a base of three feet and a half; both were proved, by admission to hold 20 people. In the latter a company of ladies and gentlemen, of not less than eight or ten, regaled themselves with a bottle of wine. The night being mild, several lights were placed in the inside, when the transparent view struck the eye with such splendid grandeur that it is impossible for any tongue to describe. At the same time vocal and instrumental performers were placed in one of the apartments and entertained the company assembled round with several pieces of sacred music to a very late hour."

Extract of a Private Letter.

CADIZ Report, Jan. 24-25.

The Revolutionary Colonel Don Nicolas de Santiago, being the officer of the day, this was passed without any particular occurrence, excepting that the telegraph reported that the infamous and stupid Revolutionists of La Isla, seemingly to the number of 2000 men, crossed over by the Causeway, and having reached the bridge of San Pedro, skirmished with a detachment of cavalry which was compelled to withdraw. Last night, at about 8 o'clock, a party of about thirty soldiers belonging to the regiment of Soria, commanded by Colonel Santiago, and three other officers shot off the streets of the Observatory with muskets and a howitzer, proceeded on through the square of San Antonio and Broad-street, (Calle Ancha) to the theatre, where they wounded the colonel, and took the arms, crying out "Long live the Constitution!" and accompanied by boys and populace, they directed their course towards the land gate, in order to surprise the militia and regular posted there. The latter fired up them for the space of half an hour, by which means some were wounded, and the populace dispersed. The guards were doubled, as well as the patroles, under the Commissaries of police. All the inhabitants remained shut up in their houses, and at nine at night all was tranquil.

The people of Isla labour, by every means in their power, to sow discord and spread dismay in this unhappy town of Cadiz, and the towns which are not surrounded, are endeavouring to succour and liberate us from the malevolent people of La Isla, who begin to undeceive themselves with regard to their wild scheme.

PARIS, Feb. 10.

The communication relative to the Election law has been to day officially announced by the President of the Chamber of Deputies, for Monday, the 14th inst. The Count de St. Aulaire was the bearer of this important intelligence to the President. The difficulty of conciliating the sufrages of the majority of the enactment, in question of such vital importance has occasioned a long delay to which the effervescence which exists in the department may in great part be attributed. The new law is acknowledged by the whole nation to involve the dearest interests of the country; but the conclusions which are drawn from it, are diametrically opposite, one party maintaining that its adoption is indispensable for the security of the dynasty, and the consolidation of the royal authority the other, that if it should not be rejected, the foundation, on which repose, the very pop lar right, becomes unstable and insecure.

It is acknowledged by all sides, that the King's government will succeed in carrying this measure through parliament. The opp sition party calculate the ministerial majority at twenty votes; it is probable it will be yet more considerable. The ministry are reproached with employing every specie of seduction to counterbalance the efforts of their enemies.

On the first of January last, there was in the bank of France, 172 millions of specie. Twelve months previous there was in the same institution only 35 millions.

The remains of the duke of Kent were embalmed, and were to be sent to Windsor.

Not only has the interment of the late King and one of his sons followed within a few days of each other, but by the death of the late Princess Charlotte and her child, it may be said, that within the space of little more than two years, death has extended his ravages through four successive generations, of which two are utterly extinct!!—We do not recollect any parallel instance among the royal families of Europe in modern times.

The duke of Grafton, who was prime minister to his late majesty soon after he came to the throne and who makes so distinguished a figure in the celebrated Letters of Junius, after retiring from office, employed himself in writing "Memoirs of his own Life," which, when completed, his grace carefully sealed up and by an injunction in his will, strictly prohibited his heirs on any account to open the envelop during the reign of the late king; but, after the monarch's decease, to make the memoir known to the world. It is supposed to contain a full developement of all the great political events and private history of the court, at that interesting period; and in all probability will, for the first time, divulge to the public, the real name of Junius, which, it is understood, had been made known to his grace under a pledge of honour not to communicate the secret to any person living, in the life time of king George the third.

The duke of Wellington is said to have lost the whole of his income for one of the twenties table. One of the winners was the duke of Clarence; the other lord Yarmouth.

Phalipa, the suspected Irish barrister, it is said is about to enter into holy orders.

PARIS, Feb 15

The following are additional particulars of the execrable assassination which has filled all France with horror. The Duke had just put his Duchess into her coach, and said "adieu," was returning to his box to see the close of the play, he was struck by the assassin, and immediately exclaimed, "O! Caroline, I am dying!" He was borne, bleeding into the theatre. several surgeons immediately attended; and the blood not flowing from incisions made in the arm and leg, cupping was added, when the Prince, in agony, said, "You make me suffer martyrdom; I know it is useless, I must die." Immediately after the Father of the Duke, Monsieur,) and all the Royal Family repaired to the opera and at four the King arrived.—The Duchess had fallen into a swoon which she continued four hours. He was removed to the Louvre; and at six o'clock, after receiving the sacrament, he expired in the arm of the King in the 42d of his age. Before he expired he expressed a wish to see his infant daughter, who was brought to him in her cradle, when having kissed her, he pronounced these remarkable words. "Poor infant.—I wish that you may be less unfortunate than the rest of my family."

The Prince made his will. A young man having sucked his wound, the Prince opening his eyes, "What are you doing? My wound is perhaps, poisonous." The King never left the Duke's couch. On perceiving the King, he exclaimed, "I see, pardon for the man who has stabbed me. Pardon for me.... It is doubtless some one whom I have unintentionally offended."

"My son," replied the King, "you will, I hope, survive the cruel deed. It will, however consider it. The event is important, and deserves to be maturely considered."

The assassin was pursued by Count Mesnard, aid-de-camp of arms, and was immediately taken, his name is Pierre Joseph Louvel, a journeyman saddler. He is about 30 years of age; was one of those who went and returned with Buonparte from Elba, and has since been employed in the King's hunting establishment. On being examined, the following were his replies:—

Q. What induced you to commit this crime?—

Ans. My opinions, my sentiments.

Q. What are they?—A. I think the Bourbons are tyrants, and the most cruel enemies of France.

In that supposition why did you attack the Duke de Berri, in preference to the rest?—A.—Because he was the youngest Prince of the Royal Family, and seemed to be destined to perpetuate that race hostile to France.

Q. Do you repent your act.—A.—No.

Q. had you any instigator, any accomplice.—A.—None.

Yesterday, (the 14th inst.) an individual, amongst a group on the Carousel, uttered many seditious expressions, and dared to exhibit a ferocious joy, at the deed which has plunged France in mourning. The persons around him, whom sentiments of grief had induced to repair to the vicinity of the Louvre, took him into custody, and escorted him to the Police-office.—Journal de Debats.

The French Minister of Finance has opened his Budget in the Chamber of Deputies—he states that the total amount of supplies required for 1820 was 700,000,000 francs, being, as he contended only an increase over that of last year of 3,900,000 francs which would be provided for by the arrears of rents, re-established to the credit of the Treasury by the retrocession of foreigners.

The London Globe of January 29, says—"We understand that the Lords of the Treasury have given directions to allow mechanics, artificers, &c. to emigrate from Great Britain to any country and in any ship.

The general conversation in the fashionable circles in England, was an approaching matrimonial alliance between a great personage, nearly allied to one of the most illustrious House in Europe, and the daughter of an ancient Scotish Duke.

Prince Leopold has offered his house at Claremont to the Dutchess of Kent, who is to reside there. Her Royal Highness is in a situation to excite the peculiar solicitude of the country.

The London Morning Chronicle of January 29, states that letters had been received from the Princes of Wales, in which she had expressed an intention to quit Marseilles on the 20th of January, & proceed to England.

On the 29th of January, considerable sensation was created in Westminster Hall by the arrival of a post chaise and four with a courier. The court immediately broke up, and the chancellor's carriage was ordered immediately, and on its coming up he drove off instantly.

Advices had been received from the dominions of the emperor of Morocco, which state that the people had been so incensed against the viceroy of Fez, for some arbitrary measures, that they had attacked him openly at the doors of his palace, assassinated him, and afterwards tore his body to pieces. The plague had entirely subsided in Barbary.

On the 15th ult. the revolutionary Gen. D'Arcineaux, gave in England an entertainment to the Deputies from Venezuela, New Grenada and Buenos Ayres, in taking his final leave of England. Among the toasts was "Sir F. Flood, and the Board of Commissioners for the colonizing the General's extensive tract of land in S. America.

The Limerick Avertiser states that funeral passing from the shore to an island in the great Lough, above Killaloe the friends of the deceased, thinking it not sufficiently strong to carry the corpse across, proceeded on, when the ice gave way and the remains of the deceased were plunged into the water, with a number of persons, who perished.

On the 14th of January, fifteen persons were standing on a piece of ice, near Cambridge, when it gave way and every one of them was drowned.

At brighton, the wildest of the feathered tribe have been so pinched by the frost, that they are left the woods, for warmer shelter in the habitations of men—blackbirds, starlings, larks and thrushes have been pursued by boys at mid day and easily taken by the hand.

In 1684, the frosts were the most severe ever known in Europe. A great number of poor in Germany, France, Britain and Ireland froze to death. Wild ducks and other water fowl fell down dead in the streets in England. Hares and rabbits came into towns and took shelter.

The late severe weather had a singular effect on the Eels in the River Arun. Tons of them were picked up swimming on the surface of the water, in a state of blindness.

The following remarks in relation to the confused news from Spain, are copied from the London Times of the 8th February:—

"The captures of "La Caracca, and Le St. Julian" were passed over so slightly, and with so much brevity, in the French paper of Thursday, that we really did not imagine the former name had reference to the celebrated arsenal at Cadiz; the reduction of which would have appeared to us to merit a more particular narrative. We concluded that some ship of the same name had fallen into the hands of the rebels; but the papers and letters of a subsequent date, prove that it was the great "Caracca," or naval Depot itself, of which the Insurgents obtained possession. Its fall is the subject of general surprise; and much censure has fallen upon the garrison. It appears that the excuse alleged for its surrender was a menace on the part of the assailants, that they would destroy the arsenal and all that it contained with red-hot shot, for which they had the furnaces ready. The 64 gun ship, St. Julian, with a frigate and several gun-boats, artillery, ammunition, and all sorts of provisions, were thus acquired by the rebel troops—besides the advantage of strong post, which covered the north flank of their position in the Island of Leon. The regiment of Soria was ordered thither on the 12th, but it had been taken in the night of the 11th.—To what embarrass the rebels may now be encouraged by the possession of artillery, which they wanted before, it is not easy to anticipate. Their force in front of Cadiz is generally estimated at 5,000 or 7,000 men; and those who were detached on various other points, are said to have comprised about an equal number.—In the mean time the language held by the Spanish Government and its friends betrays no want of confidence. Cadiz letters of the 14th, and from Ronda of the 18th, assert that "tranquility reigns within the city, and that the people take no part in the insurrectionary cause. Puts however, not a negative assertion."

Satisfaction.—The Government of Cadiz has placed under General Freyre's orders six regiments of infantry, commanded by General O'Lawler. From Seville he is to take the regiments of "Spain" and of "Corunna," with an "body of militia and cavalry; but as is remarked, the latter description of force will avail him little in an attack on the bridge of Suazo, the only road by which he can make an assault on the position of the Isle de Leon. The resident of America reached Cadiz from Seville, on the 13th. General Freyre, it was calculated, would gain by the junction of General Cruz, 6,000 men which is 4,000 less than the same force you was reckoned at in the accounts immediately preceeding. We are tempted therefore to distrust the allegations set forth on the Royalists side, especially when they swell the gross amount of Freyre's army, including militia, to nearly 20,000 men, and reduced the insurgents, by desertion and otherwise, to about 2,000; yet admit that so late as the 20th of January, he was only "ready to march and attack them." The Insurgent troops are said to insist upon the convocation of the Cortes, and the establishment of the constitution which was abrogated by the Royal decree of 1814.

Letters have reached London direct from Seville, dated the 19th ult. where Freyre is undoubtedly then remained. Great fears prevailed that the Royal troops were infected with the insurrectionary pestilence. It is curious that letters from Cadiz of the 18th, received by an English vessel just arrived at Falmouth, are silent as to the state of the army. A strict inspection of the correspondence by the police is the only use to which we can attribute this natural taciturnity. The master of a vessel commanded on the 16th, which is supposed to corroborate a rumour that O'Donnell, with 2,000 men, had been defeated by the rebels, to which bid many had afterwards deserted. Upon the whole, we have only this assurance, that several thousand Spanish troops have been 2 weeks (within a day or two) in open untiny; and that ere night we yet have heard, the King's Government had not begun to act."

The Evening Star, of Feb. 7, says, "letters were last week received in Marseilles, by a house of the first respectability, stating, that a British merchantman had sailed from Marseilles, for Leghorn, to convey the Queen of England."

The Times, of the 31st of January, as occupied about six columns, with a biography of his late Majesty, from which we extract the following:—"A few days before the death of his Majesty, he became reduced almost to a skeleton. It was not until within two days of his decease, that he quit his bed entirely, though, for several days, he had not risen at his accustomed early hour. On the night of Friday last, the symptoms became very alarming. At 10 o'clock, on Saturday morning, the medical attendants, felt assured, that the last hour of the venerable sufferer, was approaching; and that the day must terminate his mortal career. As the evening advanced, his Majesty became gradually weaker, but apparently without pain, till nature was quite exhausted. At the moment of his dissolution, there were present, the Duke of York, Lord Healy, Lord Winchelsea, all the Physicians, and General Taylor.—In the Palace, were the Duchess of Gloucester, Princesses Augusta and Sophia, and the Duchess of York."

Sir Isaac Heard, the Garter-king-at-Arms, is 90 years of age.

Ancient Custom.—On the day that the present King was to be proclaimed at George the Fourth, a procession was formed fronting the Palace of Carlton-house, and proceeded for the city, when the cavalcade arriving at Temple-bar, they found the gates, according to ancient custom, closed. The City Marshall was sent forward to the gate, intimating having been given to the lord Mayor that there was a loud knocking at the gate, and a demand of admittance from some persons outside. The Marshall went to the gate, and asked, "Who?"

Not only has the interment of the late King and of one of his Sons followed within a few days of each other, but by the death of the late Princess Charlotte and her child it may be said within the space of little more than two years, death has extended his ravages through four successive generations, of which two are utterly extinct!—We do not recollect any parallel instance among the royal families in Europe in modern times.

Spanish Government and its friends be-trays no want of confidence. Cadiz let-ters of the 14th, and from Ronda of the 18th, assert that "tranquility reigns within the city, and that the people take no part in the insurrectionary cause." This, however, is but a negative speci-fsatisfaction.—The Government of Gre-nada has placed under General Freyre's orders six regiments of infantry, com-manded by General O'Lawler. From Seville he is to take the regiments of "Spain" and of "Corunna," with a large body of militia and cavalry; but as is remarked, the latter description of force will avail him little in an attack on the bridge of Suazo, the only route by which he can make an assault on the position of the Isle de Leon. The regi-ment of America reached Cadiz by sea from Seville, on the 13th. General Freyre, it was calculated, would gain by the junction of General Cruz, 6,000 men, which is 4,000 less than the same divis-ion was reckoned at in the accounts im-mediately preceeding. We are taught therefore to distrust the allegations, put forth on the Royalists side, especially when they swell the gross amount of Freyre's army, including militia, to nearly 20,000 men, and reduced the In-surgents, by desertion and otherwise, to about 2,000; yet admit that so late as the 20th of January, he was only ready to march and attack them." The insurgent troops are said to insist upon the convocation of the Cortes, and the establishment of the constitution which was abrogated by the Royal decree of 1814.

Letters have reached London direct from Seville, dated the 19th ult. where Freyre undoubtedly then remained. Great fears prevailed that the Royal troops were infected with the insurrec-tionary pestilence. It is curious that letters from Cadiz of the 18th, received in an English vessel just arrived at Fal-mouth, are sent as to the state of the arrest. A strict inspection of the cor-respondence by the police is the only cause to which we can attribute this un-natural taciturnity. The master reports a cannonade on the 16th, which is sup-posed to corroborate a rumour that O'Donnell, with 2,000 men, had been de-feated by the rebels, to whom his men fled afterwards deserted. Upon the other side, we have only this assurance, that several thousand Spanish troops have been for 3 weeks (within a day or two) in open mutiny; and that, for aught we yet have heard, the King's Go-vernment had not begun to act."

The Evening Star, of Feb. 7. says, "Letters were last week re ived on Marseilles, by a house of the first respectability, stating, that a British merchantman had sailed from Marseil-les, for Leghorn, to convey the Queen of England."

The Times, of the 31st of January, is occupied about six columns, with a biography of his late Majesty, from which we extract the following:—"A few days before the death of his Majes-ty, he became reduced almost to a skeleton. It was not until within two days of his decease, that he kept his bed entirely, though, for several days, he had not risen at his accus-tomed early hour. On the night of Fri-day last, the symptoms became very a-larming. At 10 o'clock, on Saturday morning, the medical attendants, felt as-sured, that the last hour of the venera-ble sufferer, was approaching; and that a few days must terminate his mortal ca-reer. As the evening advanced, his Ma-jesty became gradually weaker, but ap-parently without pain, till nature was entirely exhausted. At the moment of his dissolution, there were present, the Duke of York, Lord Healy, Lord Win-chelsea, all the Physicians, and General Taylor.—In the Palace, were the Duke of Gloucester, Princesses Augusta and Sophia, and the Duchess of Kent."

Sir Isaac Heard, the Garter-king-at-arms, is 90 years of age.

Ancient Custom.—On the day the present King was to be proclaimed George the Fourth, a procession was ordered fronting the Palace of Carlton House, and proceeded for the city, when a cavalcade arriving at Temple Bar they found the gates, according to ancient custom, closed. "The City Marshals were sent forward to the gate, intimating having been given to the Lord Mayor that there was a loud knocking at the gate, and a demand of admittance from the persons outside. The Marshals went to the gate, and asked 'Who is there?' only has the interment of the late King, and one of his Sons followed within a few days of each other, but by the death of the late Princess Charlotte's child it may be said within a space of little more than two years, Death has extended his ravages through three successive generations, of which two are nearly extinct.—We do not recollect any parallel instance amongst the Royal families in Europe in modern times."

to give the admission required, which was to be limited to the Herald King at Arms. The Marshall upon going to the gates, said to the officers, "Open on one side of the gates and admit the Herald King at Arms, and him alone." The Herald then rode in, supported by the guards, and was accompanied by the City Marshall to the Lord Mayor. The Herald King at Arms presented the warrant. The Lord Mayor immediately said, 'admit the whole procession into our city of London."

BOSTON, March 30.

Late and Important from Spain.

The brig Corporal Trim, Davis, arrived at Gloucester, on Monday, from Malaga and Gibraltar, having left the latter place on the 20th Feb.

Capt. Davis states that the revolution in Spain had extended to the Interior Provinces, but that it was thought it had arrived to such a crisis that nothing short of a complete revolution was at hand. The constitutionalists, as they were termed, were in force near Cadiz to the number of 25,000. An engagement had taken place in that vicinity, in which the Royalists were defeated with the loss of 1000 men. Algesiras has already fallen into the possession of the Constitutionalists, and a division of three thousand men were within three leagues of the city of Malaga, and had sent to the royal Governor of that place ordering him to prepare rations for the troops and keep order in the city. There were 700 Royal troops in Malaga, who would join the deliverers of their country as soon as practicable. One general sentiment seemed to pervade all ranks of Spain, to throw off the chains which have so long bound them to the iron car of despotism.

FURTHER.

☞An arrival at New York, from Gibraltar, though not of later date than the above, brings some additional particulars, relating to Spanish affairs, which are interesting.

Gen. O'Donnel, to avoid an attack, left his head-quarters at Algesiras and retired to St. Roque, within three miles of Gibraltar. His troops were deserting him by hundreds. The churches in that part of Spain were thronged with the inhabitants, now assembled to take the oath of allegiance to the New Constitution. Illuminations and other testimonies of approbation were exhibited by the people.

The Constitutional army under Gen. Quiroga amounted to 21,000 men. Of this number, 18,000 were before Cadiz, and were to attack the city on the night of the 22d of February. No doubt if their success was entertained at Gibraltar. There had been no communication from Madrid for some time; and nothing was known as to the situation or plans of Ferdinand.

The Constitutional troops were well clothed, well paid, and well disciplined, and were not under any apprehensions of an attack from the Royalists. They were also well received by the inhabitants, who rendered all the aid in their power.

Since the above was prepared, we learn that the Constitutional army had reached St. Roque, and O'Donnel had retired with his troops, about half the distance from that place to Gibraltar. He was himself in Gibraltar on the 5th of February, and appeared to have lost all his former energy. It was suspected by many, that he was secretly in the views of the Constitutional party. A gentleman who had just arrived at Gibraltar, and who had travelled through a considerable part of Spain, reported, that the people, especially in the cities, were generally in favour of the Revolutionary cause.—There had been very little fighting; but many prisoners, and some high in authority, had fallen into the hands of the Revolutionists.

REPORT, &c.

To the Legislature of the State of New York;

In obedience to the Act, entitled "An Act respecting navigable communications between the Great Western and Northern Lakes & the Atlantic Ocean," passed April 15th, 1817, the Canal Commissioners most respectfully Report—

In reference to the Erie Canal —

THAT the middle section thereof has been so far completed, during the past season, that large boats have actually navigated it, for the distance of seventy-five miles; and nothing has hindered such navigation throughout the residue of the section, for several weeks previously to the meeting of your honorable body, but the setting in of frost. The important fact of the accuracy of the levels, from one end to the other, of this section, has been ascertained, by the most satisfactory and infallible proof — the admission of water. — And when it is remembered that the length of our Rome summit is now extended to near sixty miles, the result, so gratifying on every account, cannot fail to beget strong confidence in the skill, and a just praise for the care, of our engineer.

Having now witnessed the completion of a great number and variety of canal contracts, with constant and anxious attention to the mode of their execution, in every stage of their progress, for the purpose of obtaining all the benefits suggested by experience, we expect, hereafter considerable improvements in the manner of conducting our labors.—For a resolute ambition of success, and the application of vigorous industry, we cannot hope that an equal number of men will ever be more distinguished than those who have hitherto been employed.

We have found that in removing common earth, where the depth does not exceed four or five feet, and the ground is dry, the plough and scraper can be used to greater profit than any other means of excavation with which we are acquainted. And the banks which are constructed with scrapers, from being constantly & uniformly travelled over by the cattle, and men, during the time required to raise and form them, are so thoroughly compacted, as to be not much in danger of injurious settling, after they are once completed. A great proportion of our work has heretofore been performed with these instruments. But as both the western and eastern sections of the canal, will pass through but little wet land, in comparison to that which is traversed by the middle, the use of them hereafter will be much increased.

It was determined by the canal commissioners, when they entered on the construction of the canal, that the inside slope of the banks should be such, that a foot perpendicular rise should give not less than eighteen inches horizontal base. This slope is often adopted in England; and in earth unapt to slip it will answer; but in clay, in tight earth, especially if it contains much water, and wherever sand predominates, a greater slope is expedient.

The inside slope of the banks through the middle section, is generally such as that above indicated. There are however several where it is greater. And it is our intention for the future, except where peculiar circumstances forbid, to increase the slope.—For besides diminishing the danger of having the banks slide into the bottom of the canal, by diminishing their acclivity, it requires but little observation to become convinced, that such diminution lessens the labour of forming the banks. This is true, when the banks are formed by shoveling and wheeling, but it is eminently so when the work is done by ploughing and scraping. A slope, of a foot rise to eighteen inches base, is so steep, that it is difficult to drive cattle or horses up it, with a loaded scraper behind them: and as the excavation approaches the bottom of the canal, the difficulty of this operation greatly increases. Indeed, where scrapers have been used, the excavation from the bottom of the canal, at the edges, has been left unfinished, with the adjoining banks also unfinished and very sloping, so that much labour with spades and shovels, was afterwards necessary to take out the earth from the bottom, and face it in the face of the banks, at the top, in order to their completion: Or, if this labour with spades and shovels was saved, the earth in the bottom of the canal at the edges, was ploughed up, and the scrapers, after arriving at the top, were drawn lengthwise of the canal, to some distance, and then unloaded on the inner brow of the bank.

The last mode of completing the excavation and giving slope to the banks, has been found the most economical; but to both modes the danger of slips is equally incidental, and greater than it is where the banks are formed by wheelbarrows; because, in both the loose earth, which is required to finish the inside face of the bank at the top, is always laid upon a sloping and hard trodden surface, with which it will not speedily form a solid connection.

Horses and cattle can draw loaded scrapers, without much inconvenience, up a bank of which the slope is such as to give a base of two feet to a rise of one foot: and if the face of the bank is left hard, as it will be made by being travelled on in the process of its construction with the scraper, there will remain no doubt of its retaining its shape with very little impression from heavy rain. This is an advantage of great importance, as it respects the expense of repairs and the preservation of the beauty of the canal: and the increased slope, by giving a width of surface at the top of water-line four feet greater than would be afforded by the slope originally adopted, will also add to the facility of motion on the canal.

Wherever the canal line crosses lands abounding in springs, or very wet from any other cause, but so situated as to admit of draining, the spade and wheel barrow are indispensible utensils, in any common depth of digging; and one of our contractors, Mr. Jeremiah Brainard of Rome, has invented a wheel barrow which, without being more expensive than those in common use, is acknowledged by all who have seen it to be greatly superior to them. Its advantages consist in its being lighter, more durable, and much easier to unload.

Experience has convinced us, that after the grubbing and clearing is done, it is most judicious to carry the excavation, wherever it is begun, as soon as may be to the bottom; and as the work advances to complete every part of the canal.

Many jobs on the middle section have been completed, and three fourths, and often larger portions of the digging performed, and the banks nearly raised, but left with the earth sloping inwards from their outer extremity, after which the contractor has transferred his labor to other parts of the job, intending to bring the whole into a similar state, and then to finish his work by taking out the residue of the bottom, giving it the proper width, and dressing off the banks. From this course of management much evil has ensued. The excavation from the bottom, after baking for months in the sun, has always been found much more difficult, the amount of yards has been materially increased from an unnecessary wash from the banks, the labor necessary to complete the banks has been augmented, and after much labor has been bestowed, there is less beauty in the whole work, and it is more liable to injury. These evils will all be obviated, by completing the canal with as little delay as possible after the ground is broken.

In all cases it is essential, that care should be taken to secure a sufficient drain from every part of the excavation, otherwise the most injurious interruptions will be suffered from every shower. No person without experience can be fully aware of the disadvantages of laboring in wet earth. It is much heavier, more tenacious and more sapp-y than dry, and of course harder to load, harder to remove, and harder to unload; and after it is unloaded into a bank, much of it will run down so as to require a second removal. The laborers who work in it destroy more clothes, live more expensively, are more exposed to sickness, and require higher wages, than other laborers; the horses and cattle sooner fail, and there is more wear and tear of every implement. Hardly any expense should be avoided, which is necessary to provide good draining. Some of our contractors have not been duly sensible of this, and have lost more or less in consequence. By opening a drain wherever the excavation is begun, and by completing the canal as the work advances, the benefits of an ample drain will be secured to every par of the line.

But this course of proceeding will also produce other good consequences. The amount of money earned by the contractors, from the time of one payment to another, may be more accurately and easily estimated. The contractor will more readily understand the exact condition of his business, as to profit and loss, and the workmen will be better able to secure themselves against frauds or insolvency, in their employers. With the greatest care to ascertain the quality of the excavation in any given section of the canal, previous to its being let out, it is impossible to provide against the occurrence of unforeseen obstructions in the earth, which must be paid for at an equitable valuation, after they shall be reclaimed and overcome. The practice of completing the canal as above mentioned, would render these valuations more satisfactory to all parties, because the precise nature and extent of such obstructions would be more clearly perceived, and the labor laid out upon them would be more easily distinguished from other labor.

Our efforts have now been continued so long, have embraced so great a variety of operations, and have actually given us an excellent navigation, for so great a distance that we suppose the public mind is fully satisfied of the practicability of the canals.

The original estimate of the middle section, extending from Utica to the Seneca river, in the aggregate amounted to $1,021,851

The real cost of its construction has been 1,115,922

Making an excess of expenditure over the estimate of 104,132

a little more than ten per cent.

This excess has been produced chiefly by the following causes.

1. The width of water in the canal, in all cases of embankment, was originally intended to be only thirty feet at the surface, and the estimate was made accordingly. These embankments have, however, all been made so as to give the common width of forty feet at the surface. This alteration has very much increased the quantity of earth to those embankments which required filling in at the bottom: and as all the large embankments are of this character, it has added considerably to their expense. It was not adopted without mature deliberation and a strong conviction of its being judicious.

YORK, April 13, 1820.

At a General Meeting of the Society for the Relief of Strangers in Distress, held at the Church, this 4th day of April 1820, to receive a Report from the Committee specially appointed to digest a plan for the consideration of the Society, as to the most expedient mode of affording relief and employment to such Emigrants, as may either now, or from time to time be in temporary want of assistance, the following eleven Resolutions as recommended in that Report were unanimously adopted.

Resolved 1st. That as a pecuniary relief, without some return of labor, is but too often productive of idleness, such relief should in future be withheld, except in cases where, from the positive sickness or absence of those of the family capable of manual labor, no means of earning a subsistence remain; provided, the measures proposed for furnishing employment when required should prove attainable.

2d. That the public walk about to be formed near this town, and the projected improvement of the Blue Hill in Yonge Street, appear to offer (as a primary step) most desirable opportunities for giving almost immediate employment to any applicant now in want of work.

3d. That in order to interest the parties concerned in the projection of these or any other contemplated public works to assist the Society in the object they have in view, a Committee of Management consisting of three members be chosen at this meeting to confer with the projectors thereupon.

5th. That as a further inducement to the projectors of such works to aid the measure proposed, as well as to prevent any but the really necessitous from burthening the Society with unnecessary applications for employ, it becomes highly desirable to fix a maximum of wages at a rate rate than what laborers are usually employed at, lest otherwise a great anxiety of the society to assist the really needy should unintentionally operate as an encouragement to the new settlers upon their arrival in the Province, to be dilatory and careless in seeking work from private individuals, or still more injuriously offer a sort of temptation to them to be diverted from their more important ultimate object, namely, that of proceeding to settle upon their new lands.

5th. That therefore, this maximum shall be but Two Shillings per diem, (Province Currency,) for a full day's work from six o'clock in the morning to six o'clock in the evening, with the usual pause of one hour for breakfast, and one for dinner, the former from 8 till 9, the latter from 12 to 1 o'clock.

6th. That this Two shillings per day shall be uniform to all for the entire day's work, but in the event of any so employed either idling their time or absenting themselves from the prescribed hours of work, such defaulters to be checked accordingly for the proportion of time thus lost, at the same rate as the latter bears to the 10 hours of work, viz. 2d½ per hour—extra hours beyond the usual day's work, to be paid for at the rate of 3d. per hour.

7th. That such of the inhabitants as are in the habit of hiring substitutes to perform their statute labor, be hereby earnestly implored to apply to the Committee of Management of the Treasurer of the Society, (when the season arrives for that work to be performed,) for information whether there be any unemployed applicants for labor.

8th. That all farmers or others, in want of hands, be in like manner hereby invited to make known their wants, with the description of the sort of assistance they require, to the said Committee or Treasurer, in order that those strangers now out of employ may have no longer excuses for remaining in idleness.

9th. That all relief whatever be positively withheld by the Society, from any of its Pensioners who refuse to undertake any employ pointed out for them.

10th. That in order to divide the labors of the Society among its different Members and yet to avoid thereby the producing any sudden injudicious change of System which might possibly (through ignorance of former practice) be the consequence of an entire change of the Management at the same period, it is hereby resolved that that change shall be gradually effected by the Most retirement of One Member of its Institution, and the election of a Successor for which express purpose the Society shall have a regular general Meeting in the Church on the first Thursday in every Month at one o'clock, at which Monthly meeting any other resolution may be adopted which may then be deemed expedient.

11th. That in order to prevent false impressions from gaining ground through the Province as to the extent of assistance intended to be afforded to Emigrants by this Society, and by which the new settlers that may arrive in the Country the approaching season might be inconsiderately tempted to take an unnecessary journey to York, it becomes highly expedient that the Resolutions now adopted should be generally circulated; it is therefore resolved that these Resolutions be printed from time to time in such manner as the committee of Management shall see fitting.

[Editors of Newspapers in both Canadas are requested to publish the above Resolutions.]

The Society then further resolved

12th. That Lt. Colonel Wells, the Solicitor General and Doctor Baldwin, be the Committee of Management for the first month; the occasion for their retirement to be decided by lot, in the event of their not otherwise arranging it among themselves.

13th. That the Hon. and Rev. Dr. Strachan, the Attorney General and Dr. Baldwin, be appointed a Special Committee to take into consideration a proposal at this Meeting, containing a proposed general expose of the original object and future views of the Society, and to frame a report thereupon for the further consideration of the Society at its next monthly General Meeting.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE WILD CATTLE OF ENGLAND.

This breed is at present to be met with but in a few gentlemen's parks: particularly at Chillingham castle, Northumberland, a seat of the Earl of Tankerville's, and at the seat of a nobleman in one of the midland counties. At Lord Tankerville's they seem to remain in their original wild state. The following description is given of them by Mr. Bailey:

"The wild breed being untameable, can only be kept within walls or very good fences; consequently very few of them are now to be met with, except in the parks of some gentlemen, who keep them for ornament and a curiosity; those I have seen are at Chillington castle. Their colour is invariably of a creamy white; muzzle black; the whole of the inside of the ear, and about one-third of the outside, from the tips downward, red; horns white, with black tips, very fine and bent upwards; some of the bulls have a thin upright mane, about as inch and an half or two inches long. The weight of the oxen is from thirty-five to forty-five stone, and the cows from twenty-five to thirty-five stone, the four quarters; fourteen pound to the stone. The beef is finely marbled, and of excellent flavour.

"From the nature of their pasture, & the frequent agitation they are put into by curiosity of strangers, it is scarcely to be expected they should get very fat; yet the six year old oxen are generally very good beef, from whence it may be fairly supposed, that in proper situations they would feed well.

"At the first appearance of any person they set off in a full gallop, and, at the distance of about two hundred yards, make a wheel round and come boldly up again, tossing their heads in a menacing manner; on a sudden they make a full stop at the distance of forty or fifty yards, looking wildly at the object of their surprise; but upon the least motion being made, they all again turn round, and fly off with equal speed, but not to the same distance, forming a shorter circle, and again returning with a bolder and more threatening aspect than before; they approach much nearer, probably within thirty-yards, when they again make another stand, and again fly off; this they do several times, shortening their distance, and advancing nearer and nearer, till they come within such a short distance, that people think it most prudent to leave them, not choosing to provoke them further.

"The mode of killing them was perhaps the only modern remains of the grandeur of ancient hunting. On notice being given, that a wild bull would be killed on a certain day, the inhabitants of the neighbourhood came mounted, and armed with guns, &c. sometimes to the amount of an hundred horse, and four or five hundred foot, who stood upon walls or got into trees, while the horsemen rode off the bull from the rest of the herd until he stood at bay, when a marksman dismounted and shot. At some of these huntings twenty or thirty shots have been fired before he was subdued. On such occasions the bleeding victim grew desperately furious, from the smarting of his wounds, and the shouts of savage joy that were echoing from every side. But from the number of accidents that happened, this dangerous mode has been little practised of late years, the park-keeper alone generally shooting them with a rifle gun at one shot.

"When the cows calve, they hide their calves for a week or ten days, in some secluestered situation, and go and suckle them two or three times a day. If any person comes near the calves, they clap their heads close to the ground, and lie like a hare in her form, to hide themselves; this is a proof of their native wildness, and is corroborated by the following circumstance that happened to the writer of this narrative, who found a calf two days old, very lean, and very weak. On stroking its head it got up, pawed two or three times like an old bull, bellowed very loud, stepped back a few steps, and bolted at his legs with all its force; it then began to paw again, bellowed, stepped back, and bolted as before; but, knowing its intention, and stepping aside, it missed him, fell, and was so very weak, that it could not rise, though it made several efforts; but it had done enough the whole herd were alarmed, and coming to its rescue, obliged him to retire; for the dams will allow no person to touch their calves without attacking them with impetuous ferocity.

"When a calf is intended to be castrated, the park keeper marks the place where it is hidden, and when the herd are at a distance, takes an assistant with him on horseback: they tie an handkerchief round the calf's mouth to prevent its bellowing, and then perform the operation in the usual way, with as much expedition as possible. When any one happens to be wounded, or grown weak or feeble through age or sickness, the rest of the herd set upon it and gore it to death.

HIPPESLEY'S NARRATIVE.

We extract from Col. Hippesley's entertaining narrative relative to the South American Patriots, the following picturesque account of the Patriot troops at San Fernando—yet such are the men that have baffled the best disciplined and best equipped troops of Old Spain:

"Sedeno's cavalry were composed of all sorts and sizes, from the man to the boy; from the horse to the mule. Some of the troopers with saddles, very many without; some with bits, leather headstalls and reins; others with rope-lines, with a bight of the rope placed over the tongue of the horse as a bit; some with old pistols hung over the saddle-bow, I cannot call it the pommel, either incased in tiger-skin or ox-hide holster pipes, or hanging by a thong of hide on each side. As for the troops themselves, they were from thirteen to thirty six or forty years old—black, brown, sallow-complexion, according to the cast of their parents. The adults wore large mustachios, and short hair, either woolly or black according to the climate or descent. They had a ferocious, savage look, which the regimentals they appeared in did not tend to humanize or improve. Mounted on miserable, half starved, jaded beasts, whether horse or mule, some without trowsers, small-clothes, or any covering except a bandage of blue cloth or cotton around their loins, the end of which passed between their legs, fastened to the girth round the waist; others with trowsers, but without stockings, boots, or shoes, and a spur generally gracing the heel on one side; and some wearing a kind of sandal made of hide, with the hairy side outward. In their left hand they hold the reins, and in their right a pole, from eight to ten feet in length, with an iron spear, very sharp at the point and sides, and rather flat; in shape like our sergeant's halbert. A blanket of about a yard square, with a hole, or rather slit, cut in the centre, thro' which the wearer thrust his head, falls on each side of his shoulders, thus covering his body, and leaving his bare arms at perfect liberty to manage his horse, or mule, and lance. Sometimes an old musket (the barrel of which has been shortened twelve inches) forms his carabine; and with a large sabre, or hanger, or cut-and-thrust, or, even a small sword, hanging by a leather thong to his side, together with either a felt hat, a tiger skin or hide cape on his head, with a white feather, or even a piece of white rag, stuck into it, these troopers of the legion of Sedeno appear complete, and ready for action."

CIRCULATING LIBRARY.

There are at present above fifteen hundred of these useful Establishments in Great Britain, and upwards of one thousand Permanent or Circulating Book Societies. The whole of these may be expected to possess themselves of the Series of new Novels, emphatically called the Circulating Library; but, as the Work, from its merit, is also likely to find its way into numerous private libraries, there can be no doubt of its prodigious sucess. The value and interest of the Series continued for 10 or 20 years, will have no parallel in literature, the first writers of the age having promised their co-operation.

Food and employment for the poor.

Trusler's practical Husbandry, of which a new Edition (the Fifth) will appear in a few days, will largely shew the superior advantages to the Farmer in turning his ground by the Spade, instead of using the Plough, not only on the known principles of Vegetation, but the result of experience. And also, that by a new management of a Wheat Crop, muchmore of before, but tried by the Author. Wheat can be well afforded at even the low price of five shillings a bushel, rendering the quartern loaf below sixpence.

A lady died lately at St. Juan, Cuba, aged 45 years, the mother of no less than thirty-three children, who were all baptized. The father and twenty three of the children were alive about six weeks since.

Natural Phenomena.—During the last twelve months Nature has exhibited many striking appearances. There have been a dreadful earthquake in the East Indies; another accompanied by a terrific hurricane in the West Indies; a continued and unusually violent eruption of mount Vesuvius; a diminution of 8 feet in depth of the Northern Ocean, perceived on the coast of Norway; a premature spring in Europe; excessive heat of summer; and extraordinary reverse of temperature in many parts of the world during the late winter; the overflow of several rivers in Holland, & the appearance of 3 comets. The German naturalists augur from these some impending convulsion. This, however, we need not apprehend; for about 250 years ago the heat was so intense in Germany that the great river Danube was fordable on foot; the crops were totally destroyed; and the inhabitants were obliged to live under ground; yet the Earth still exists.

From the Pittsburg Gazette, March 9.

A Burning Mountain.—A brilliant spectacle has been for many months past presented to the eyes of those who live nearly opposite to the lower glass works. One of the large coal pits from which this establishment received a portion of its fuel is on fire, and a short time back was vomiting forth flames with all the sublimity of Vesuvius. During the day it is not observable from town, but as soon as night approaches, it bursts upon the sight in all the steady blaze of the gas lights. How long it has been on fire we know not; it is only a few nights since our attention was called to it, but it is probable that it has been burning for many years. We remember to have heard it said the Coal hill was on fire twenty years ago, the probability is that it has never been extinguished; if it never however has been so distinctly seen until since it has communicated to the open coal pit; this now displays walls and a roof of solid fire extending horizontally into the very bowels of the hill. An attempt we are told has been made to arrest the progress of this destructive conflagration by stopping up the mouth of the pit, but the attempt failed, owing we presume to the many fissures which exist in the rocks, through which air can enter. How it will terminate, it is impossible to say, but a most deplorable destruction of the valuable article of coal must have already taken place; how far the loss has extended cannot be ascertained.—Owing to the height and steepness of the hill the pit cannot be approached by any power sufficient to produce any effect, and we fear the only remedy we have to expect is the falling in of large masses of earth, rock, and what the Colliers call horseback. However splendid and sublime the bursting of the flame from the hill of a dark night may be, reminding us of the classic fictions of the Titans, breathing forth vengeance from beneath the mountains which had been heaped on them, it produces the melancholy reflection, that an immense quantity of that article on which Pittsburg depends for her pre-eminence, must be destroyed before the fire can cease from its ravages.

THE press and types from which the Phœnix issued, having come into the possession of J. Carey, the person who gave the debates of the House of Assembly during the last Session, it is his intention to establish a Newspaper in the Town of York, to be entitled "THE OBSERVER."

The avidity with which the public has received the Journals already established in this Province, has encouraged him to offer to its attention "The Observer," which shall be free for political discussion; and it is the Editor's determination not to admit into his columns any thing that may be offensive to private character. In short, he flatters himself, that the Observer will be conducted upon such liberal principles, as will secure to him the patronage of the public.

The proprietor trusts that the subscribers will favor him with a half year's subscription in advance.

A few bushels of Cranberries for sale at Thomas Mosley's Auction Room.
York, 27th March 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of YORK & SIMCOE.

GENTLEMEN,

HAVING been honored with your confidence, and called by your suffrages to the very honorable duty of Representing you in the present Parliament, I must expect that my prospect of attaining to the same distinguished station in the next, will depend altogether on the sense you entertain of the manner in which I have performed the trust you reposed in me.

Placed more immediately under the eye of my Constituents, it is altogether in your power, as it is entirely your province, to estimate the part I have taken.

It is far from me to presume, that with every wish to promote your best interests, I may not in many cases, have erred; but I may at least be permitted to say, what I can declare with sincerity, that I am conscious of nothing which I wish to excuse.

Among the objects which have occupied the attention of the present Parliament, they have wisely provided for the more equal Representation of the People; and, in consequence of the provision they have made, you will have the privilege of electing an additional Member to guard your interests, and consult for the welfare of the Province.

Several of my friends, I observe, animated with a very praise-worthy ambition, have eagerly presented themselves to your choice; my actual occupation in the present Parliament, put it out of my power to address myself so immediately to you on the subject of the next; but I thought I might securely trust to the steadiness and sincerity of that attachment, which I was happy to witness on a former occasion, and which I will not believe so fickle that it could be shaken by an idle and absurd reports which may happen to have found their way to you.

I cannot but consider as highly honorable, a situation, to which the good opinion of my fellow-subjects is the only passport; and I shall be happy to receive a proof of your continued confidence, by being chosen as one of your Representatives at the ensuing Parliament.

I will make no boast to you of my independence—you know the nature of my employment and resources, and I hatmy welfare must depend on yours; at the same time, I trust you think me much above any unworthy attempt to court popularity, by claiming credit for greater purity of intention or honesty of conduct, because I do not happen to be honored with any place of trust or confidencewith a Government whose only object is and must be to promote the happiness and prosperity of the People.

I am, Gentlemen,
your most
faithful Servant,
PETER ROBINSON.

Newmarket, 9th March, 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

THE General Election of Representatives of the People in the House of Assembly in this Province being near at hand, I take an early opportunity of announcing to you my intention of becoming a Candidate for your suffrages, there being a Bill before Parliament which will entitle me to your Representation.

I hope my character both public and private, is such as to entitle me to a participation in your confidence; & though I hold a highly honorable and responsible situation under His Majesty's Government, I trust the same integrity and Exertion I have always manifested when serving my King, will continue to animate and guide my conduct when defending, maintaining, and supporting the Rights and Privileges of my Fellow Subjects, my family, and myself, which must be and are the same.

Should you do me the Honor to elect me one of your Representatives, to serve you in Parliament, I shall, to the utmost of my power, endeavour to deserve a continuation of your favor, should I live to be a Candidate at a future Eleection.

I have the Honor to be,
with unfeigned sincerity,
your most faithful and
obedient Servant,
HENRY J. BOULTON

York, March 3d. 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

I acknowledge great pride in having been twice solicited by many of you to offer myself to your choice for the important andhonorable service of Representative for these Counties in the House of Assembly. Having declined the first, I cannot withdraw myself from this second invitation, which can alone be founded on the expectation of rigid integrity towards the Constitution of the Country: I therefore now solicit this choice, humbly presuming that my hopes are well founded, and that yours will not be disappointed.

Though twenty years residence here has necessarily honored me with a personal acquaintance with most of you, I cannot dare to think that this supersedes all necessity of declaring to you my sentiments generally on Legislation in this Province. I therefore profess to you an affectionate regard for British liberty and British Constitution; and that your Representative, whoever he may be, should, in the discharge of his duties, never forget that these two objects of his care are, the one to the other, the best and only Bulwark, and that to preserve the latter ever pure, the first must be preserved unwounded. I know, Gentlemen, that your good sense convinces you that it is not the duty of your Representative to oppose, through a spirit of faction, the fair, beneficial, and legitimate objects of the Administration; but you also know that the purest Administration requires a vigilant activity on the part of all its constitutional checks.

It will, Gentlemen, perhaps be said to you, that I hold an appointment under the Crown; true, an honorable one.—I feel thankful to the Administration that gave it, and the Government that has continued it to me; but your choice will necessarily remove the objection, (if it be any in your estimation,) as the Office must, in the event of my Election, be surrendered.

I will at present only add, that whatever be the event, the prosperity of the Province at large, and of these Counties in particular, will, during my life, always be an object of earnest anxiety to me.

I have the Honor to be,
Gentlemen,
your very obedient Servant,
WM. WARREN BALDWIN.

LONDON, Jan. 5.

Great Speed.—Two great matches took place on the Ashford road yesterday. The first was a bet made by Mr. A. Alexander, to trot his chesnut mare, and to ride himself 15 miles in an hour, for 100 guineas. Mr. A rides more than twelve stone, and time was backed freely at 6 and 7 to 4. The first mile was done in six seconds under four minutes and six seconds. The mare went on a winning rate, rather quickening upon her speed, and won the match easy, in 50 seconds within the given time.

Coach Establishments.—It is calculated that a person has 1500 opportunities of leaving London in the course of 24 hours, by stage coaches, including the repeated trips of the coaches which ply the short distances. It is understood that about 300 stage coaches pass through Hyde-park Corner daily.—There are about 40 Brighton coaches. There are 84 coaches belonging to Birmingham, of which 40 are daily; to Chester 19, of which 16 are daily; to Manchester 70, of which 54 are daily. In the year 1770, there belonged only 2 stage coaches to Manchester, one to London, the other to Liverpool, and they went only twice a week; there are now 20 coaches passing backward and forward between these two places. There are 60 coaches belonging to Liverpool, of which 56 are daily: to Preston 12; to York 13, of which 13 are daily; to Hull 12; to Newcastle 6; to Glasgow 13; to Edinburgh 39; to Aberdeen 9; to Inverness 3, and to Whitehaven 3.

The Royal Mausoleum at Windsor,

The coffin of His Royal Highness the Duke of Kent is the eighth which has been deposited in this Mausoleum. The first body placed here was that of Princess Amelia; the next the Duchess of Brunswick, his late Majesty's sister; the third and fourth, our late lamented Princess Charlotte and her child; the fifth, the late Queen; the sixth and seventh, the young Princes Octavius and Alfred; and the eighth, the Duke of Kent. His late Majesty will form the ninth inmate of this humbling and equalizing mansion. Our late lamented Sovereign took considerable interest in the construction of this cemetery. It was begun by his Majesty's order to the late Mr. Wyatt, in 1810. An excavation was formed in a dry rock of chalk, of the whole length and width of the building, called Wolsey's Tomb House, originally intended by the ambitious Cardinal as the depository of his remains, within the walls of which it is enclosed to the depth of fifteen from the surface. The dimensions of the tomb are 70 feet in length, 28 in width, and 14 in depth. In digging the foundation, the remains of an embalmed female and child, in a leaden coffin, were discovered in a state of perfect preservation. They were supposed to be those of Eleanor, Edward's Queen, and her infant child, and were after being kept two days open to view, again entombed. The receptacles for bodies in this tomb are formed of Gothic octagon columns supporting a range of four shelves, each of which, in the space between the columns, is formed to contain two bodies, the whole range of each side affording space for 32 coffins. In the centre twelve low tombs are erected for the reception of Sovereigns. The sepulchre is thus calculated to receive eight bodies. The columns are of fine Bath stone, and the shelves are of Yorkshire stone. It is a singular fact, that though his late Majesty was constantly present with Mr. Wyatt, in the progress of the formation of this tomb, it pleased Providence to spare him the grief of seeing the interment of any member of his august family within its walls, though three weeks had scarce elapsed after appearance of the illness which clouded the declining years of his Majesty's life, when the first coffin (that of Princess Amelia) was deposited in the then unfinished vault erected by her beloved Parent. With what rapid and eventful succession that vault has since been occupied, the country will long mourn with unfeigned sympathy. It is well known that the first symptoms of his late Majesty's malady, which perhaps, fortunately for his acute and susceptible feelings, rendered him insensible to the sad mortality that subsequently visited his family, were caused (or at least to such were they attributed) by the presentation of a mourning ring 'suddenly prepared by the Princess Amelia for her Royal Father, and which she placed on his finger as he took leave of her at the close of one of his daily visits, the week (we think) before she died. The king's mind was shaken on the occasion, and it pleased Providence that the first bulletin of the Physicians announcing the nature of his disorder, immediately preceded that of the medical attendants announcing the death of the Princess, his favourite and fondest daughter, from whom he had but a few days before parted in perfect health, and who filled the first compartment in this lonely mansion, which has since in rapid succession, received as many inmates from the late King's Family, as (with the exception of one) years have elapsed since its construction.

A curious fact, although, perhaps, but little known is, that the Countess of Mornington, the mother of his Grace the Duke of Wellington, walked at his late Majesty's Coronation. She was then reckoned amongst the newest of the Irish Nobility, Lord Mornington being only advanced, in 1769, to the Earldom; and she is possibly the only Peeress now remaining, who may appear at the new Coronation, who had been present at the former.

The new reign, it is said, will usher in four new Dukedoms, in the persons of the four following illustrious Noblemen, viz.—Stafford, Buckingham, Hertford, and Hastings.

Toast Drinking.—Instead of "three times three," as heretofore, the fashionable mode of cheering is "four times four," in honour of his majesty George the Fourth.

Died, on the 13th of January, at Cassel, Her Royal Highness the Electress of Hesse, Wilhelmina Caroline of Denmark.

On the 13th of January, the Grand Dutchess of Baden.

Died, on the morning of the 5th inst. at his house in Russell square, the Right Honorable Sir Vicary Gibbs, late Lord Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas.

The Bishop of Cloyne.—We are informed of the death of the Bishop of Cloyne, (Dr. Barnett). His Lordship died at his Palace, county of Cork, at a very advanced age, being the senior Bishop of Ireland, since the death of the late Archbishop of Tuam.

Letters from Hollans, dated 27th of 29th of January, gave many particulars of the scenes of distress from the late inundation in that country. All the villages inside of the dikes in the lower Betuwe were under water. The inhabitants had been obliged to retire to the tops of their houses and even there many were washed away, and those that remained were dying with cold and hunger. Castles, churches and houses were swept off by the water and the Guelderland is one universal ruin. From Pannenden, above Nymegen, near the Prussian territory, to the village of Krimpin, within 6 miles of Rotterdam, the whole country, bordering on and between the rivers Rhine, Yssel, Maese, Whaal and Lek is inundated. Nothing was heard, night or day, but the roar of cannon, alarm bells and cries of distress.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 29.

On occasion of the birth day of his Majesty the Emperor, the following most important ukase has been published, by which all the war taxes imposed in the year 1812 are abolished. This law is to be in force from the 1st January 1820. The benefits which his Majesty incessantly confers upon his subjects do not a little contribute to increase their attachment to him.—

"From the report which has been laid before us by our minister of finance upon the revenue and expenditure of the year 1820, we have recognized with the most lively satisfaction the possibility of gratifying the wish which we have constantly had at heart, of lessening the burden of the taxes, which, to our very great regret, the urgent necessity of providing for the extraordinary calls of the State for a time obliged us to increase. In consequence of the blessings of peace, which Divine Providence has given us, the sources of public revenue flow more abundantly and we have been able to apply annually 60,000,000 to the consolidation of the public credit, to increase the pay of our brave army, and after providing for all the public expences of the next year, we are now able to give our faithful subjects, a new proof of our eagerness to lessen their burdens, and to promote the means by which their welfare may be increased by the prosperity of the various branches of agriculture and industry. We therefore order, that from the first (13th) January of the ensuing year, 1820, the imposts shall cease which were imposed by the decree of the 11th (23d) February, 1812, on the revenue of all real property arising from feudal services (redevances) wood-cutting, rent of land or houses, profits of manufactures, and other establishments; and that from the date above mentioned, the farther levy of them shall cease, and the owners be no longer bound to give a statement of their income as before prescribed. At the same time that we abolish this tax on the real property of all classes without exception, we wish and hope that this relief may contribute to the increase of the general prosperity, and consequently to the advantage of the State.

(Signed) ALEXANDER."

HYDROPHOBIA.

Sig. A. M. Salvatori, of Petersburgh, in a letter to Professor Marrichini, of Rome gives the following remedy for this dreadful malady:—" The inhabitants of Guelici, but when or how I know not, have made the important discovery that near the ligament of the tongue of the man or animal bitten by a rabid animal, and becoming rabid, pustules of a whitish hue make their appearance, which open spontaneously about the thirteenth day after the bite; and at this time, they say, the true symptoms of hydrophobia make their appearance. Their method of cure consists in opening these pustules with a suitable instrument, and making the patient spit out the ichor and fluid which run from, often washing the mouth with salt water. This operation should be performed the 9th day after the bite. The remedy is so effectual, that with these people this hitherto incurable disease has lost its terrors."

PARIS, Feb. 18.

Extract of a letter from Bayonne of Feb. 12. "According to letters from Cadiz of the 1st, received this day, all is tranquil in that city; but it is the tranquility of a man in agony. You will judge whether the insurgents are not in some force when the chief of the National Army has detached a division of 3000 men for Algesiras to accompany from thence to the head quarters several members of the Cortes who had landed there. It is said there have been some skirmishes between the Royal and Insurgent troops, in which the latter have the advantage—The troops have left Vittoria for Gallicia, were some troubles have broke out."

The Count de Cazes is no longer Minister.

PARIS, Feb. 13.

A letter from Barcelona states that a vessel dispatched from Cadiz, arrived off that port on the 29th January bearing dispatches to the capt. General, Castanceros, enjoining him to acknowledge and proclaim the constitutional government. The Capt. General, refused to receive the dispatches, and the vessel immediately made sail. According to the same letter, Malaga would be in the power of the Insurgents.

"The editor of the Drapeau Blanc, (M. Martinville,) has been arrested and his paper suppressed.

"Many young men, wearing in their button holes white ribbon, entered in the evening the Lombard Coffeehouse, (Palais Royal,) where were assembled a number of citizens whom they insulted. M. de Corcelles member of the Chamber of Deputies, who was in the company, was also insulted; but as the conduct of these young men was not at the moment resented, no scuffle ensued. A guard soon arrived and cleared the house. An officer of the peace, decorated with the Legion of Honor, but not in active service, was chalenged by some of these young men, who gave him their names and addresses. Numerous patrols paraded the streets all the evening in the neighborhood of the Palais Royal."

A Paris paper of the 17th of last month, states that the preparations for the funeral of the Duke de Berri, were to commence the next day.

LONDON, Feb. 16.

We presented our Readers, on Monday, with some intelligence from Galway, of a date so recent as the 7th instant. Further accounts have arrived in town, but dated February 3d. In these a very important circumstance (if true) is related; its authenticity we certainly must doubt,—we, however, present it to our Readers as we have received it.

"Galway, Feb. 3.—Various and contradictory are the rumours this day, respecting an engagement which is stated to have taken place between a party of military, and a large body of insurgents, within a mile and a half of Tuam, which, after a hard contested battle, ended in the total discomfiture of the latter. Several are reported to have been killed and wounded. Major Place, of the 77th regiment, stationed in this town who commanded the military, we understand, has received a severe wound in the conflict. Nineteen of these deluded wretches are reported to have been taken prisoners, but have not as yet arrived at our gaol."

By letters received from Pomerania, dated Jan. 20, it appears that the dealers in amber at Stope have received payment of 30,000 dollars, which they had almost given up as lost, for amber, which they sent on their account to some Jewish merchants at Leghorn, where it arrived when that city was occupied by the French troops, and it was to be feared that the amber would be taken from them as Prussian property. The Jewish merchants, however, conveyed it with the utmost precaution to their warehouses, where they kept it till an opportunity offered of sending it to Africa or Asia.

Singular Occurrence.—The following singular fact, which occurred about three weeks ago, will probably become a subject of discussion in the courts in the course of the approaching term. Mr. T——n, a gentleman of fortune, had for some time paid his addresses to Miss S—, the daughter of a respectable merchant in the city. A mutual attachment existed, and a day was fixed for the nuptials to take place, when Mr. T. suddenly withdrew himself and went to the continent. The young lady's health suffered severely for some time. At length, on her getting somewhat better, the commands of her father, aided by the pursuasions of her friend, induced her to consent to marry a gentleman every way eligible, who had long solicited her hand. The day appointed for the nuptials arrived, the parties, attended by their mutual friends, repaired to the church; the ceremony was performed, and they were about to quit the altar, when the appearance of Mr. T——n, in the aisle, had such effect on the bride, that she fainted, and was conveyed home in that state, no one of the party, excepting her father, suspecting the cause. On her recovering her senses, soon after her arrival at home, she broke away from her friends, who surrounded her, seized a knife from the side-board, and vowed vengeance against herself, and those who had been the destroyers of her happiness. She was disarmed, and put to bed; and towards night, becoming more tranquil, she was left at her own request, in the care of her favorite maid. On the following morning, to the surprise of her friends, her chamber was found empty. A letter on her dressing table, addressed to her father, informed him she had quitted the house, accompanied by her maid, to join [illegible] and long possessed her heart, and to whom, before she again saw them, her fate was to be united for life. All search for the fugitives proved unavailing; and in about a fortnight she returned, accompanied by Mr. T——n, to whom, in the interim, she had been married; and throwing herself at her father's feet, asked a parent's blessing. The question for legal discussion will be, who's wife of the two is she?

A melancholy instance of the danger of precipitate interment lately took place in the city of Pau. A man who had been deaf and dumb from his birth, and followed the trade of a farrier, went out to sup with a party of friends.——Having drunk a great quantity of brandy, he became alarmingly ill on his return home; a physician was sent for, who administered some potions, which, however, produced no effect. In a short time all signs of life ceased, the unfortunate man was supposed to be dead, and his funeral took place on the following afternoon. The funeral service was ended in the church, and the body was about to be conveyed to the burial ground, when a noise was heard within the coffin, accompanied by groans. The terrified mourners immediately stopped, the coffin lid was opened, and with horror they beheld the supposed corpse rise up. Medical aid was immediately procured, but it was too late. The cold, and privation of air which the unfortunate man had endured while shut up in the coffin, together with the horrible sensations he experienced on his recovery, all combined to deprive him finally of the life to which he had thus been restored. He survived only a few hours. Literary Gazette.]

NEW-YORK, April 1.

Latest English News.—We stopped the press yesterday to announce the arrival of the ship Crirrie, Capt. Hacey, in 34 days from Liverpool. We had only time to give a short account of the detection of a conspiracy to assassinate the whole of the British Ministers, while convened at a Cabinet dinner. As this account appeared only in a part of yesterday's impression, we now republish it, together with additional details.

Our French dates are to the 21st ult. They state, that the Count de Cazes, on resigning his office as Minister of State, was created a duke and appointed Ambassador to the Court of St. James. The Duke of Richelieu succeeds to the office of Minister of State and President of the Cabinet Council.

The London Courier of the 24th February, states, that "private information had been received by the civil power, that it was in contemplation by a gang of diabolical ruffians to make an attempt on the lives of His Majesty's Ministers, while assembled at the house of Earl Bathurst, in Mansfield street, to a dinner yesterday evening. Rich. Birnie, Esq. with a party of 12 of the Bow-street patrole, proceeded about 8 o'clock, to the place which had been described as the rendezvous of these desperadoes, in Cato street, in the Edgeware road. They were in a loft deliberating. The on approach to this Pandemonium was by a narrow ladder. Ruthven, one of the principal Bow-street officers led the way and was followed by Ellice, Smithers, Surman and others, of the patrole; on the door being opened, about 27 or 28 men were seen within, most of whom were apparently engaged either in charging fire arms, or girding themselves with belts similar to those worn by the military.

There were tables about the room, on which lay a number of cutlasses, bayonets, pistols, sword belts, pistol balls in large quantities, ball cartridges &c. As the officers entered the room, the conspirators started up, when Ruthven, who had been furnished with a warrant from the magistrates, exclaimed—"We are all prisoners. Officers, lay down your arms in a moment."—upon which all became confusion. A man, whom Ruthven described as the notorious ARTHUR THISTLEWOOD, opposed himself to the officers, armed with a cut and thrust sword, of unusual length; Ruthven attempted to secure the door, and Ellis, who had followed him into the room, advanced towards the man, presenting his pistol, exclaimed, "drop your sword, or I'll fire instantly!" the man brandished his sword with increased violence, when Smithers, the other patrole, rushed forward to seize him, and on the instant the ruffian stabbed him to the heart. Smithers fell into the arms of Ellis, and the next instant was a corpse.

Whilst this deed was doing, the lights were extinguished, and a desperate struggle ensued, in which many of the officers were severely wounded. Surman, one of the patroles, received a musket ball on the temple, but fortunately it only glanced along the side of his head, tearing up the scalp in its way. The conspirators kept up an incessant fire, whilst it was evident to the officers that many of them were escaping by some back way. Mr. Birnie exposed himself every where and encouraged the officers to do their duty, whilst the balls were whizzing round his head. At this moment Capt. Fitzclarence, son of the duke of Clarence) arrived at the head of a detachment of the Coldstream Guards. They surrounded the building, and Capt. Fitz-Clarence with serjeant Legge, and three files of grenadiers, mounted the ladder and entered the room, now filled with smoke and only illuminated by the occasional flashes of fire-arms of the conspirators. A ruffian instantly approached the gallant Captain, and presented a pistol to his breast, but as he was in the act of pulling the trigger, Serjeant Legge rushed forward, and whilst attempting to put aside the destructive weapon, received the fire upon his arm. It is impossible to give a minute detail of the desperate conflicts which followed, or the numerous instances of personal daring manifested by the peace-officers & the military, thus brought into sudden contact with a band of assassins in their obscure den, and in utter darkness. Unfortunately, this darkness favored the escape of many of the wretches, and the dreadful skirmish ended in the capture of only nine of them. They were instantly hand-cuffed together, placed in hackney-coaches and brought down to the police office in Bow-street, under a strong military escort; and Mr. Birnie having arrived at the same moment, instantly took his seat upon the Bench, and prepared to enter into the examination of the prisoners.

On the premises were found muskets, carbines, broad swords, pistols, blunderbusses locks and cartouch boxes, ball cartridges, gunpowder, haversacks, and a large bundle of singularly constructed stilettoes, 18 inches long, intended to screw on the top of a staff.

After the examination of the prisoners closed, they were escorted to the House of Correction, Coldbath Fields.

Captain Fitz-Clarence was very much bruised, and one uniform almost torn to pieces in his attempts to seize the conspirators.

FURTHER PARTICULARS

On arriving at the spot the officers attempted quietly to gain admittance, but being opposed, it became necessary to force an entrance. Having got into the room, a volley was fired by the wretches, who had got into the low loft; this was smartly returned by the officers, and the contest continued for some time with the greatest determination on both sides. Happily the officers gained the ascendency; but not until that meritorious officer, Smithers, had lost his life. A number of others seriously injured. The nine that were taken were lodged in the house of Correction, Coldbath-Fields.

This indeed is tremendous annunciation, but (it is not many years since) tremendous than one. The diabolical principle which has been inculcated in revolutionary pamphlets and by incendiary writers, has found wretches wicked enough to act upon it—both here and at Paris. Scarcely had we finished communicating the details of the murder of his royal highness the Duke de Berri——, in the midst of the horror universally felt for it is untimely fate, our attention has been

The diabolical principle which wretches wicked enough to act up-

we finished communicating the s of the murder of his royal highness the Duke de Berri——, in the e of the horror universally felt at timely fate, our attention has been directed to another plot, equally hellish in its purpose, but more ample in its range, and embracing a greater number of distinguished personages.—The intention, as we have already stated, was to have taken away the lives of all his Majesty's Ministers, at a Cabinet dinner at the Earl of Harrowby's, in Grosvenor-square. The time fixed upon was last night, and but for the timely discovery of the plot, it is probable we should have had this day to have recorded such a scene of blood and murder, as is not to be found in the annals of this country, or of any other."

It appears that the plot has been known for some time to His Majesty's Ministers, and that Arthur Thistlewood was at the head of the conspiracy. The Earl of Harrowby's was selected as being nearer the outlet from London than the residence of any other of the Cabinet Ministers, and of course rendering it more easy to escape.

A London Gazette was immediately issued, offering a reward of £1000 for Thistlewood, who stands charged with the crime of high treason, and also with the wilful murder of Richard Smithers.

The horrible plan was, it is said, to have been executed in the following manner: Thistlewood was to have knocked at Lord Harrowby's door, with a letter purporting to be a despatch, or with a red box, as is used in all the public offices, desiring it to be delivered immediately to the cabinet ministers at dinner, without delay. The servants, it is supposed, would immediately proceed with the dispatch, while Thistlewood, with another of the conspirators entered the hall as if to wait—they were immediately to open the street door, others were to come in with hand grenades which were to be thrown into the house, and in the confusion produced by them, all the rest of the conspirators were to rush into the dining room, where the ministers were at dinner, and the work of assassination was to have instantly begun.

About the time the privy-council was assembling at the office of the home secretary of State, word was brought that Thistlewood had been taken. At half past 2, Lavender, Bishop, Ruthven and Edwards, proceeded to No. 8, White st.
Moorfields. They found Thistlewood in bed; Bishop darted forward, threw himself upon him, and thus secured him.
He appeared paralyzed with surprise.
He was instantly conveyed to Bow-st. reet,
from thence to Whitehall, in a hackney coach. A great crowd followed, exclaiming—"The villain hang him." It was that a contrary disposition on the part, would have been fruitless. He was taken to Whitehall by the officers, for the purpose of undergoing an examination.

Brunet, the second leader of the conspirators, had also been taken, and was sent before the Privy Council.

The seat of government for Senegal is about to be removed from St. Louis to Daguana, forty leagues up the river, where a capital is building. A steam brig 28 guns has arrived at St. Louis from L'Orient to protect the navigation of the river against the Moors, who frequently commit depredations on the river craft.
The numerous emigrations from France to Senegal the past season, has induced the government to found a city 20 leagues above Duguana, to be called Dialmacht, where a strong fort is nearly completed, and many dwelling houses commenced—the soil is reputed to be well adapted to the culture of cotton.

The coast swarms with slave vessels under foreign flags, and I am sorry to add, many Americans are indirectly concerned in that inhuman traffic. No late tidings from the expedition into the interior of Africa.

STORM.—On Monday evening last a violent thunder storm passed over this place. There was much lightning and and many heavy peals of thunder which apparently struck at no great distance.
The storm had scarcely abated when we were alarmed by the cry of fire. It proved to be in an unoccupied frame house lately finished, a few rods above
the Steam Saw Mill in South Frankfort, which was entirely consumed. It was doubtless set on fire by the lightning.

The steam boat Columbus, on her passage from New Orleans to Shippingport, ran against a snag which perforated her bow, and the boat and cargo were evidently saved by her having a snag room, which filled with water. For the improvement of the snag room, formed by a water proof partition, across the hold, and near the bow of the boat, the public are indebted to the ingenious Mr.
Ruggles Whiting.—Louisville Adv.

Cheap and expeditious travelling.—We are informed that Mr. Andrew Gags, a young man belonging to Westford, Me.
on Monday last travelled from that town to Danvers, (in an indirect route of 70 miles) in five hours, performing the whole distance upon his skates! He came 10 miles upon the Middlesex canal, the remainder of the distance by the roads and fields; the snow being encrusted with ice.—Salem paper.

State of the weather.—For three days,
we have had a continued storm of hail, rain and sleet. We have never known the trees so heavily loaded with ice. Many limbs have been broken by the weight, and in some instances the whole tree has been destroyed. The same storm it appears has reached Philadelphia; and yesterday morning, the ship Augustus, which was undergoing repairs at one of the ship-yards, was upset by the weight of the ice on her rigging; and in going over she broke her masts, and sunk to the bottom.—N. Y. E. P.

HALIFAX, (N. S.) March 11.

The Provincial Agricultural Society took place in the house of assembly at 2 o'clock on Wednesday last, according to advertisement. The house was thronged to excess; and his Excellency the Governor in Chief took possession of the chair. He then rose and stated, that the purport of the present meeting was to lay before the society the scheme of premiums, which had received the approval of the directors, for next year.—That scheme would be commented upon by Mr. Young—the secretary; but it was in the power of the members to make what alterations they should deem necessary. On this the secretary, in compliance with his Lordship's wish addressed the numerous assembly to the following effect:

My Lord,

Before I proceed to submit the agricultural premiums for next year to the consideration of the society, it may be proper to retrace the various steps of our progress during the last; and mark, whether there be in them any symptoms, which indicate a change to the better.

There are three or four circumstances which, in this review, ought not to be overlooked; because they evince a perceptible advancement, and prove that the efforts of the Central Board have not been unavailing. The first of these, is, that new modes both of culture and management have been introduced into our system of farming. I allude here, my Lord, to the more enlightened ideas which prevail, regarding the necessity of a rotation of crops. Formerly it was customary to exhaust the soil by injudicious cropping, till it refused to repay the toil and labour; and then it was thrown out to the healing and restorative power of nature, till it recovered a little strength, and again was subjected to a similar deterioration. The manner by this means, which was occasionally mixed with the soil, was literally wasted; for it is an established axiom in agriculture, "that each species of grain and pulse feeds upon certain elementary principles in preference to others and on this account an interchange of crops is essentially necessary to bring forth the utmost possible production." The earth soon becomes tired of raising always the same kind of vegetables; and it seems a relief to its exhausted energies to change the plants which are to grow upon it. After the convertible system of tillage and pasturage was introduced into the European kingdoms, population made a sudden start forward; because their territories could then support a greater number both of people and of cattle.

As a proof, my Lord, of these improved ideas, summer-fallow is gaining ground in all parts of this province—in Pictou on the East, as well as in Annapolis on the West—in Cumberland on the North, as well as in Musquodoboit on the South—and what is still more decisive—in all the intermediate range of country. Lime too is universally in request. The whole province, as if by one simultaneous movement, is aroused in search of it—public kilns are erecting, and more of this fossil has been incorporated with our soil during the last year, than in all the former periods of our agricultural history. A better mode also of managing and preparing our manure is getting fast into repute. Our farmers are beginning to discover that the preparation of the dung-hill and the care of its composting constitute the true and solid basis of good husbandry; and accordingly, great exertions in this department of rural industry are making in every district.

The second great circumstance, which I shall bring before the notice of this meeting is, the extended cultivation of oats. This, my Lord, will constitute a new æra in the annals of our agriculture. This grain in a country like Nova Scotia, which is just entering on the career of improvement, will be found an excellent substitute for wheat, until more enlightened courses of management, and a more plentiful application of lime shall have paved the way for the general introduction of the more valuable farinaceous tribes. Our marshes and intervals are, at the present moment, well calculated for the production of bread to our whole population; but our habits have converted them into artificial meadows, on which the traces of the plough are seldom visible. On the uplands we rely for support; and one grand cause of the dependance of this country on foreign supplies in this perversion in our system of management. It is gratifying to me to bring before your Lordship's notice, the very extended cultivation of oats during the last season, and the still greater preparations that are making for the next. The number of mills which have been erected under the auspices of the Board, and have grown up like enchantment, are of themselves proof sufficient of our progress. Not less than twenty two now either in operation, or in a state of completion—whereas last year there were not more than two or three within the limits of Nova Scotia, and these remained in a great measure unemployed.

Were any further evidence, my Lord, awanting on this pleasing subject of gratulation, I should mention one, which, though seemingly of trivial import, I hold to be of a most decided character. Our farmers in all their private circles, and public meetings, are making agricultural subjects the topic of conversation. They are taking a deep interest in the events which are passing before them: their energies are aroused, their attention awakened. I perceive, my Lord, a remarkable degree of illumination in the public mind, from the tone and language of those letters, which are sent me in my official capacity, from all parts of the country. My correspondents can now talk with some portion of science about soil and its distinctive properties; about implements of husbandry and their fitness in preparing the ground—about manures and the process of putrefaction, and in fact, upon all those various subjects, which are connected with their profession. They are rising to the honour and dignity of agriculturists: the face of the country is changing under the plastic hand of their industry; and Ceres will soon beautify the carpet of nature on which they tread.

Our cattle shows of last year, although only two in number, have not been without effect. It was unfortunate, from a different direction given to the funds, that two places of the province were only benefited by these exhibitions; but there, my Lord, a wonderful spirit has been excited, and I doubt not, that at the approaching cattle shows, animals of very superior excellence will be brought forwards. It is by contrast and comparison, that the human mind in every art and science is stimulated to energy; and unless we can call in the aid of emulation to carry on our plans of improvement, the best concerted schemes will end in vain.

I have thus, my Lord, gone over the internal marks of our progress; and I must now dwell a little on those which are External. The constitution of our Central Board, the splendid provision made for it in the grant of last year, are becoming objects of public attraction. In the neighbouring province of New Brunswick an attempt is on foot to rear such an example. On the 12th of last month a meeting was called at Fredericton, and which consisted of several members of Council, and of the House of Assembly, as well as of all the distinguished and respectable characters of the city, for the purpose of taking the preliminary steps towards the formation of a Central Agricultural Society. The speaker of the house of assembly was in the chair; and at that time a committee was named to prepare a set of rules and regulations to be submitted afterwards to a general meeting then appointed on a future day. This is not all. Our agricultural energy is matter of triumphant and of unlimited applause throughout all the Canadas. At Quebec, at Montreal, at Kingston, at Niagara, and along all the lakes and shores of the St. Lawrence, Nova-Scotia is held up as a point, from which the rays of light are emanating to dispel the darkness which hung over agriculture as a science, and from which are expected instructions in it as an art.

Such, my Lord, are some of those symptoms which mark an evident progress; and I am well aware that to the zeal and industry of the Central Board the whole of this is to be attributed. The deep interest which your Excellency has taken in the affairs of the society, your patronage both in public and private; the attention which has been paid by the members of His Majesty's Council, and by the gentlemen who constitute the committee of directors; the fervour and enterprise, which have been diffused through all the counties and districts by the personal influence of the members of assembly; the pecuniary aid given by our own numerous and respectable subscribers, the citizens of Halifax, are among the causes, which have enabled us to achieve so much during the last year, and take a step forward in the attainment of that object for which we are associated. Let us then, My Lord, unite hand in hand, and lay aside all murmuring and jealousy; and the prospects, which are now advancing in our horizon, will usher a day of splendour & gladness.

Mr. Archibald next rose and stated, that it would be proper to lay before this meeting the application of the Legislative grant of £1,500 voted last year by the house of assembly. This would be the more necessary, because some alterations had taken place owing to the progress of events; and the Central Board had accommodated itself to these new circumstances. He then laid before the scheme of appropriation, which had received the sanction of the Directors, and which he would lay on the table for that of the society. It was true, that the whole sums were not yet expended, because the agricultural implements, which were to be given as prizes to the successful candidates were not yet gotten from the hands of the contractor, neither were the silver medals completed; yet it was necessary to fix a sum to meet those demands upon the Central Board. Neither were the live-stock all imported: for the Canadian horses only had arrived, but we expect in the spring a stallion from Britain, a bull, and some other animals. He read then the following account.

Agricultural prizes to be distributed among the different societies now established in Nova Scotia.	500 0 0
Importation of Live-stock . .	400 0 0
Cattle Shows at Horton and Truro	100 0 0
Oatmills	160 0 0
Incidental charges . . .	90 0 0
Salary of Secretary and Treasurer	250 0 0
Total	£1500 0 0

Judge Haliburton next addressed his Lordship, and said; that it was now necessary to call the attention of the meeting to the scheme of prizes which were to be held out next year for the encouragement of our agriculture. Great pains has been taken in the digesting and arranging of this scheme; and as he had been appointed chairman of the committee which prepared it, he wished to make a few remarks illustrative of its general principle. The two grand objects mainly in view, were the extension of tillage and the improvement of live stock: and for this purpose several emendations were introduced on the plan of last season. As he had formerly been the secretary of this society, he had taken a more than warm interest in its affairs; and was extremely anxious that the poorest farmer in the Province, as well as the richest, should be able to contend for the premiums to be held out. The committee had therefore fixed upon an acre and its produce, as the subject of competition among the members of each county and minor society; but in order to draw capital to the plough, the committee had agreed to offer general prizes to such as in the whole Province should raise the greatest quantity of white and green crops, as would afterwards be detailed at length by the secretary.

Their attention had also been strongly turned to the improvement of live stock, and they had concluded that the best way of encouragement was to establish a cattle show for each county, and that to have Your general exhibition-two in the Western and two in the Eastern divisions of the Province, at which should be assembled the animals of superior excellence that had gained the county prizes: and thus would be collected into one view the best of every kind.

He hoped that this plan would meet the approbation of the society; for as the Central Board had no partial interests to consult, but was solicitous to extend its patronage and aid to all without distinction, this plan was now submitted, that the members of His Majesty's Council, and those of the house of assembly, may have an opportunity of studying its principles, and correcting its details.

The Secretary addressed his Lordship, and stated that as the task of stating the premiums had been devolved on him he would beg leave to make one or two preliminary observations. The committee had kept in view two great objects; the encouragement of tillage in order to produce bread corn for the population and the improvement of live-stock. As it was uncertain what sum the Legislature might give in aid to the Central Board the premiums proposed were calculated on the scale of last year's grant, although at the same time it must be distinctly understood that those premiums would be either increased or diminished in amount in proportion as the sum voted this year would exceed or fall short of the last. The secretary then went into a very lengthened detail of all the items which were comprised in the scheme, but as a committee was afterwards appointed to examine its merits and report to the next general meeting which is to take place during the sitting of the present Legislature it is quite unnecessary to enlarge upon it.

Judge Haliburton then moved the two following Resolutions:

1st. Resolved, that the account of the expenditure of £1500 granted the Central Board of Agriculture last year be approved of and confirmed.

2d. Resolved, That whatever sum may be granted this year by the Legislature shall be expended this year according to the plan just described by the secretary.

Upon which a discussion arose and a variety of remarks were made by Mr. Ritchie (of Annapolis) Judge Haliburton, Judge Stewart, Mr. Fairbanks, Mr. Robie and Mr. Lawson. The chief object of the discussion was the item of £250 to the secretary and treasurer introduced into the scheme of last years expenditure. We regret that our limits will not allow us to insert the very able speech of the Attorney General, which embraced much agricultural information and the public are indebted largely to him from the establishment of the Central Board. He also took occasion to express his full conviction that the soil and climate of Nova Scotia were quite adequate to the support of our population and that the general introduction of oatmeal was itself a flattering and decisive proof of our progress.

Halifax, March 11.

With pleasure, we perceive, by an advertisement from the Deputy Commissary General's Office, inserted in this day's Recorder, that for the future supply of the troops in this command, tenders will be received for fine Flour, the produce of any of the British North American provinces.

An interesting pamphlet has been lately published by Walter Bromly, Esq. relative to the Indians of North America; and we recommend it to the perusal of every friend of humanity, as it contains information which must prove gratifying to such persons as feel interested in the welfare of that injured and unfortunate class of our fellow creatures.

March 14, 1820.

In the House of Assembly, on Thursday last the sum of £500 was voted unanimously, towards the erection of a new Acadian School House.—An Honorable Member from King's County was the mover. We have much pleasure in stating, that in addition to the above liberal vote, upwards of £700 have been subscribed by the inhabitants of the Town.

We also feel much pleasure in stating that the sum of £50 has also been granted to the Poor Man's Friend Society, in aid of the very benevolent objects of that Institution, and that His Excellency the Earl of Dalhousie, has very handsomely given to that Society, 100 great coats, 40 pair of blankets, 100 pair of stockings, 12 bedsteads, and 30 bill-hooks for cutting wood.—*Hal. (Canal Report continued.)

It was found that aqueducts, road bridges, farm bridges, and a few other unavoidable causes of contracting the width of the canal were of such frequent occurrence along the line as to make it very desirable, for the sake of presenting no unnecessary obstruction to motion through the water, to preserve the ordinary width in all places where it was practicable.

The plan of several of the more artificial works has been altered, always it is believed for the better, but so as to render them more expensive. Of this class are the following, to wit. The aqueduct over Oneida creek.

This was originally calculated to be made of wood: it is constructed of solid masonry. The aqueduct over the Onondaga creek has been greatly enlarged. It is built entirely of stone.

The aqueduct over Nine-mile creek was originally intended to consist of stone abutments and piers with a wooden trunk. It is constructed exclusively of stone, and has been much enlarged by raising the level of the canal at that place eleven feet.

At the Skeneatles outlet the original estimate embraced a dam, which has since been superseded by the aqueduct of solid stone work, which is also raised eleven feet above the original level. The aqueduct across the Owasco creek has been much enlarged, and a wooden trunk had been displaced for stone arches.

II. Waste-weirs have been constructed in various places, where it was believed no sufficient provision could otherwise be had to discharge the surplus waters with which the canal would be filled by the spring floods; and the aggregate extent of these is about two thousand feet.

III. The most prolific source of unforeseen expense has been found in excavation; and this we find in many pieces, and in all the varieties of hard-pan, quick-sand, breccia, marl, gypsum and limestone.

When the canal line was located by the engineer, he dug or bored into the earth in several places on every mile, to the bottom of the canal, for the purpose of ascertaining the quality of the excavation. Upon information thus gained he represented the character of the earth to be dug through, in his sectional maps. And when the commissioners entered into contracts, such maps, with the representations contained in them, were the basis of the prices stipulated to be paid by them. But they always gave verbal assurances to the contractors, that if in the progress of the work it should turn out, that the excavation was manifestly worse than it was represented to be, then they would pay for extra diminishing arising from that cause, such sum, as the engineer should deem reasonable, over and above the stipulated prices. Under such engagements large sums have been paid.

1st. For hard-pan. On many sections of the canal the earth had become harder, almost in excavation below the surface, and often harder than the earth bored or dug through by the engineer. Such earth has been of several descriptions: in some places, a hard tenacious clay, loosely filled with numerous stones in others, and more frequently, a compact mixture of sand with loam, very hard, and filled with blue gravel. Much of these kinds of earth be been found in such condition, that the most industrious men were unable to excavate more than three yards in twelve hours.

2d. For quick sand. This is a most unmanageable substance, and generally dangerous wherever it occurs. It has subjected us to extraordinary expense in several sections, not merely by the necessity which it always induces, of percussion the excavation two or three times over, but also by compelling us, in a number of places, to make defences against it after bank and plank.

3d. For breccia. Patches of this have been frequently found, but they have not been large except in a few places. The excavation of it is generally more difficult than almost any other of seamy formation, and subjected from fifty cents to two dollars per cubic yard. The largest masses of it have been encountered in places continually wet, by springs and small streams.

4th. For marl. In Madison, Onondaga and Cayuga counties many miles of the canal are carried through beds of marl, which, when in its first or recent state is hard, and in appearance much of a slaty structure, but which after it is taken up and removed into the banks, by exposure to the air, crumbles at first into small pieces, and finally into fine earth; so that no one would imagine, after it has been a short time excavated, that it ever offered any obstruction to the contractor; and yet the excavation of it has cost from thirty to seventy five cents per cubic yard.

5th. For gypsum. Some extra expense has been incurred by the excavation of gypsum, on sections 27, 28, 29, and 68.

6th. For limestone. This has been found in great abundance, on sections 5, 22, 23, 24, 27, 30, 31, 32, 33, 37, and 40; and the expense of removing it has been from thirty seven and a half cents to one dollar per cubic yard.

As another cause of the excess of expenditure over estimate, on the middle section, may be mentioned.

IV. The want of sleighing last winter. We had calculated upon great advantage for the delivery of several kinds of materials, particularly timber, plank, lime, sand and stone, by sleighing. The roads leading to most places where these articles were wanted, are usually bad in the summer season.

THE press and types from which the Phœnix issued, having come into the possession of J. Carey, the person who gave the debates of the House of Assembly during the last Session, it is his intention to establish a Newspaper in the Town of York, to be entitled "THE OBSERVER."

The avidity with which the public has received the Journals already established in this Province, has encouraged him to offer to its attention "The Observer," which shall be free for political discussion, and it is the Editor's determination not to admit into his columns any thing that may be offensive to private character. In short, he flatters himself, that the Observer will be conducted upon such liberal principles, as will secure to him the patronage of the public.

The proprietor trusts that the subscribers will favor him with a half year's subscription in advance.

GENTLEMEN,

HAVING been honored with your confidence, and called by your suffrages to the very honorable duty of Representing you in the present Parliament, I must expect that my prospect of attaining to the same distinguished station in the next, will depend altogether on the sense you entertain of the manner in which I have performed the trust you reposed in me.

Placed more immediately under the eye of my Constituents, it is altogether in your power, as it is entirely your province, to estimate the part I have taken.

It is far from me to presume, that with every wish to promote your best interests, I may not in many cases, have erred; but I may at least be permitted to say, what I can declare with sincerity, that am conscious of nothing which I wish to retract.

Among the objects which have occupied the attention of the present Parliament, they have wisely provided for the more equal Representation of the People; and, in consequence of the provision they have made, you will have the privilege of electing an additional Member to guard your interests, and consult for the welfare of the Province.

Several of my friends, I observe, animated with a very praise-worthy ambition, are eagerly presented themselves to your choice; any actual occupation of the present Parliament, put it out of my power to address myself so immediately to you on the subject of the next; but I thought I might securely trust to the steadiness and sincerity of that attachment, which I was happy to witness on a former occasion, and which I will not believe so fickle that it could be shaken by an idle and absurd reports which may happen to have found their way to you.

I cannot but consider as highly honorable a situation, to which the good opinion of my fellow-subjects is the only passport; and I shall be happy to receive a proof of your continued confidence, by being chosen as one of your Representatives when ensuing Parliament.

I will make no boast to you of my independence—you know the nature of my employment and resources, and that my welfare must depend on yours; at the same time, I trust you think me much above any unworthy attempt to court popularity, by claiming credit for greater purity of intention or honesty of conduct, because I do not happen to be honored with any place of trust or confidence under a Government whose only object is and must be to promote the happiness and prosperity of the People.

I am, Gentlemen,
your most
faithful Servant,
PETER ROBINSON.

Newmarket, 9th March, 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

THE General Election of Representatives of the People in the House of Assembly in this Province being near at hand, I take an early opportunity of announcing to you my intention of becoming a Candidate for your suffrages, there being a Bill before Parliament which will encrease your Representation.

I hope my character both public and private, is such as to entitle me to a participation in your confidence; & though I hold a highly honorable and responsible situation under His Majesty's Government, I trust the same integrity and Exertion I have always manifested when serving my King, will continue to animate and guide my conduct when defending, maintaining, and supporting the Rights and Privileges of my Fellow Subjects, my family, and myself, which must be and are the same.

Should you do me the Honor to elect me one of your Representatives, to serve you in Parliament, I shall, to the utmost of my power, endeavour to deserve a continuation of your favor, should I live to be a Candidate at a future Election.

I have the Honor to be,
with unfeigned sincerity,
your most faithful and
obedient Servant,
HENRY J. BOULTON

York, March 3d. 8120.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

I acknowledge great pride in having been twice solicited by many of you to offer myself to your choice for the important and honorable service of Representative for these Counties in the House of Assembly. Having declined the first, I cannot withdraw myself from this second invitation, which can alone be founded on the expectation of rigid integrity towards the Constitution of the Country; I therefore now solicit this choice, humbly presuming that my supporters are well founded, and that yours will not be disappointed.

Though twenty years residence here has not acutely honored me with a personal acquaintance with most of you, I cannot dare to think that this supersedes all necessity of declaring to you my sentiments generally on Legislation in this Province. I therefore profess to you an affectionate regard for British liberty and British Constitution; and that your Representative, whoever he may be, should, in the discharge of his duties, never forget that these two objects of his care are, the one to the other, the best and only Bulwark, and that to preserve the latter ever pure, the first must be preserved unwounded. I know, Gentlemen, that your good sense convinces you that it is not the duty of your Representative to oppose, through a spirit of faction, the fair, beneficial, and legitimate objects of the Administration; but you also know that the purest Administration requires a vigilant activity on the part of all its constitutional checks.

I will, Gentlemen, perhaps be said to you, that I hold an appointment under the Crown; true, an honorable one.—I feel thankful to the Administration that gave it, and the Government that has continued it to me; but your choice will necessarily remove the objection, (if it be any in your estimation,) as the Office must, in the event of my Election, be surrendered.

I will at present only add, that whatever be the event, the prosperity of the Province at large, and of these Counties in particular, will, during my life, always be an object of earnest anxiety to me.

I have the Honor to be,
Gentlemen,
your very obedient Servant,
WM. WARREN BALDWIN.

Speech of his Majesty's Commissioners in proroguing Parliament.

"My Lords and Gentlemen:

"We are commanded by his Majesty to inform you, that it is a great disappointment to his Majesty, that on this first and solemn occasion he is prevented by indisposition from meeting you in person.

"It would have been a consolation to his Majesty, to give utterance in this place to those feelings with which his Majesty and the nation alike deplore the loss of a Sovereign, the common father of all his people.

"The King commands us to inform you, that in determining to call without delay the new Parliament, his Majesty has been influenced by the consideration of what is most expedient for public business, as well as most conducive to general convenience.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons.

"We are directed by his Majesty to thank you for the provision which you have made for the several branches of the public service, from the commencement of the present year and during the interval which must elapse before a new Parliament can be assembled.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"We are commanded to inform you, that in taking leave of the present Parliament, his Majesty cannot refrain from conveying to you his warmest assurances of the sense which his Majesty entertains of the important services which you have rendered the country.

"Deeply as his Majesty lamented that designs and practices, such as those which you have been recently called upon to repress, should have existed in this free and happy country, he cannot sufficiently commend the prudence and firmness with which you directed your attention to the means of counteracting the nature of those principles by which the peace and happiness of the nation were so seriously menaced, or of the excesses to which they were likely to lead; the flagrant and sanguinary conspiracy which has lately been detected must open the eyes of the most incredulous, and must vindicate to the whole world the justice and expediency of those measures to which you judged it necessary to resort in defence of the Laws and Constitution of the Realm."

LONDON, March 1.

From the rise of the French Funds, it would seem that all apprehensions are removed of a suite of events following the assassination of the Duke of Berri, imagined to be planned by a conspiracy. Another circumstance, and a material one too in accounting for the amendment of the French Stocks, is, that the censure of the press meets with opposition where it was not at first expected.

The Englishman, of the 27th February, gives the following summary of the most important transactions the compliment.

The French Papers of Tuesday and Wednesday arrived yesterday. Count Simeon has been appointed Minister of the Interior, in the room of the Duke Decazes; Baron Mounier, Director General of the Departments Administration of Police, and Count Portalis, Under Secretary of State to the Minister of Justice. On Tuesday the remains of the Duke de Berri were removed from the Louvre to St Denis. The procession reached St Denis at half past two. The coffin was met at the door of the cathedral by the clergy. Marshals de Victumesnil and Moncey, and Generals de Bethizy and Dupont, were the pall bearers. The body was placed on a stage in the middle of the church during the celebration of Mass, and after wards removed to the Chapelle Ardente. More than 100,000 of the inhabitants of Paris attended the procession. All the shops in that city were closed, and a great number of houses were hung with black. Since the assassination of the Royal Highness 51 persons have been arrested in Paris, in consequence of information against them. The Duke Decazes, on Monday last tendered the Hotel of the Ministers, to the great joy of the Ultra-Royalists. The time of his departure for London is not as yet determined. On Tuesday he had a long interview with the King. The author and publisher of an incendiary proclamation against the Royal Family was arrested in Paris on Tuesday. The Legislative Chambers are engaged in examining in the bureaux the laws relating to the liberties, the previous censorship of the press, and arbitrary imprisonment. The Moniteur, is filled with addresses to the King, from different public bodies, from departments, from the members of the Royal Courts, from various military divisions, &c. concluding with an opinion on the assassination of the Duke de Berri. Three papers contain a rumour, that the Duke of Wellington was expected at Paris. One of these, indeed, says that his Grace had arrived. The English residents in Paris are described as having in numerous instances, demanded their passports to return to England, or at least to remove out of France. The embarkation from Cadiz is to the 6th inst. On the 4th, it is said, the Royalist gunboats compelled the revolters to abandon some works which they were erecting at Santebanez, and other points. General Jose O'Donnel was preparing to attack the Constitutional troops at Algesiras.

The weather has, during the present winter, been unusually severe in Italy snow, as already stated, fell at Rome; at Florence it was two feet deep; the Arno was partly frozen; at Parma, the market was without provisions for several days, the peasants being unable to travel there; and Venice was completely blockaded by ice. In Spain, also, an extraordinary degree of cold has been experienced; the Bidassoa was entirely frozen at Irun; the Ebro was covered with ice at Saragossa; and at Medina del Campo, in the kingdom of Leon, the wine froze in the cellars. Much snow fell in Estramadura, where none had been seen for 16 years; and in Murcia, where none had ever been seen by the oldest inhabitants, the snow was two feet deep. At Valencia, it snowed for 20 hours.

PARIS, Feb 12.

We have received further details of the extraordinary cold which prevailed at Marseilles and the neighbourhood. The thermometer fell at Manosque to 16 degrees below Zero. Oaks burst in the forests, enormous walnut-trees were frozen in their roots. It may easily be conceived how much the olive-trees suffered. Hunters and shepherds were found frozen to death; a negro of Marseilles lost this limbs by the frost. But what is remarkable is, that, at Sisteron and its adcinct, the most intense cold was not more than 7 degrees. It is supposed that a current of frigorific air, proceeding from the deities of the Appennines, has occasioned those disasters, wherever it was felt, whilst the cantons that did not lie in its course suffered nothing.

PETERSBURG, Jan. 19.

Yesterday, being the Epiphany (old style,) the grand parade could not take place on account of the intense cold, Reaumur's thermometer was at 24. This extraordinary temperature did not hinder the Emperor and the Grand Duke Nicholas, accompanied by their suit, from being present, bare headed, and dressed mostly in uniform, at the benediction of the standards on the Neva. They remained thus in the open air till the ceremony was concluded. On New Year's Day, there was a public masquerade at Court, for which 21,000 tickets were distributed, of which 20,000 were received at the doors. The supper, at which their Imperial Majesties and the Grand Dukes were present, was served in the theatre of the Hermitage, which was decorated and illuminated in the most magnificent manner. Among the gold and silver ornaments, both ancient and modern, there were some silver vases weighing 680 pounds. Separate tables were placed for the Imperial Family and the Diplomatic Body. Their Majesties remained till one in the morning, and the assembly broke up at 2 o'clock.

For some time past troops of wolves (probably impelled by hunger) show themselves in the lines frequented by this city; one of these animals some evenings ago attacked a shop where provisions were sold, situate in the Truckhoff street, and was taken. The peasants of the Government of Novogorod relate that troops of wolves traverse the villages of that country in the day time, and attack persons whom they meet alone, or in small numbers. In the commune of Romeranpy, near Moscow, an individual had been devoured by these animals, and in another commune three of the inhabitants have had the same fate.

ARREST OF THISTLEWOOD.

The following is a description of Thistlewood's arrest:—The police having received information of Thistlewood's hiding place, immediately dispatched Leyden, Bishop, Ruthven and Salmon, with several inferior officers, to No. 8 White-street, Moorfields, Finsbury-square, a third floor lodging-house, kept by a woman named Harris. Most of the officers dispersed themselves through the upper part of this house, but Bishop remained below, on the ground floor. There were four doors in the passage, opening into four separate apartments, two on the right hand two on the left, and Bishop observed that one of these had a window looking into the back part of the premises, the shutters of which were closed. The door was locked, and it immediately occurred to him that Thistlewood was concealed in this room. He instantly called the landlady of the house, Mrs. Harris, and peremptorily demanded the key. After some little hesitation she produced it, and Bishop directly applying it to the lock, gently opened the door, and, by the light admitted through an aperture in the shutter, he saw the grand conspirator of Thistlewood just raised above the blankets which covered him, upon a wretched bed. He had all his clothes on, except his coat. Bishop instantly advanced, with a pistol in one hand and his staff of office in the other, exclaiming, "Mr Thistlewood, I have a warrant for your apprehension," and then instantly throwing himself upon his prisoner, grasped his wrists. Thistlewood exclaimed, "I will make no resistance;" and also said, "I hope the person wounded last night was Mr. Stafford." It did not appear that he was prepared to offer any resistance, no arms of any kind being found in the apartment; but, in the waistcoat pocket, several ball cartridges, pistol bullets and flints, were found. He was then placed in a hackney coach. Lavender, Bishop, Ruthven, and Salmon, also, took their seats in the coach, and drove to Bow-street.

When Thistlewood was first seized, he trembled exceedingly, and was in great agitation. Afterwards he recovered himself, and talked most audaciously of the horrid event of the preceding night.

On their arrival at Bow-street, Mr. Conant, Colonel Treiawney Beereton, and several other magistrates were on the Bench, in the public justice room; the prisoner was immediately taken into the private office, where Mr. Birnie, Mr. Chambers, and other Gentlemen were assembled. Thistlewood is much altered in his personal appearance of late. He never was a very comely man, but now he looked haggard and care-worn; and though he affected to appear firm & unmoved, yet there was a ghastliness in his countenance, and a restlessness in his eye, which manifested a spirit perturbed in the extreme.—Whilst the officers were relating the circumstances of his arrest to the Magistrates, he stood by the fire, his hands still manacled, and seemed to listen to all they said with the most intense anxiety. He was asked no questions here, nor did he speak at all; but the Magistrate having satisfied himself as to the identity of his person, sent him off instantly to be examined before the Privy Council. He was taken there in the same hackney coach, and in the custody of the same officers who had brought him from White-street; and as the coach drew off from the door of the Office, the crowd, which by this time filled the street, uttered loud cries of execration. Mr. Birnie instantly followed. They arrived at Whitehall before the Council had assembled. Thistlewood was seated in the porter's hall, between Lavender and Bishop, Ruthven and Salmon standing near him, and ten or twelve more officers stationed in different parts of the hall. There was also a sergeant's guard of soldiers in the hall and the lodge adjoining.

As the Members of the Council passed, Thistlewood manifested much curiosity to know their names. "Who is that? Isn't that Lord Castlereagh? That is the Lord Chancellor, I believe, isn't it?" &c. By half past one o'clock, the following Privy Councillors had arrived: the Earls of Harrowby, Liverpool, and Westmoreland, Duke of Wellington, Lords Castlereagh, Sidmouth and Melville, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr Canning, Sir William Scott, Sir Samuel Shepherd, Mr. Wellesley Pole, Mr Bathurst, the Lord Chancellor, and many other members of the Council. Mr. Birnie, and Mr. Baker, of the Marlborough-street Police, were in attendance. Soon after Thistlewood was placed before their Lordships, when the Lord Chancellor addressed him as follows:

"Mr. Thistlewood, you stand charged with the twofold crime of high treason and murder.—Have you any thing to say?"

Thistlewood replied firmly, "I have nothing to say at present."

He was then removed to the porter's hall again; and, in a few minutes, Mr. Baker delivered his commitment to the officers, who instantly conveyed him to the House of Correction, Cold bath fields. In his way there he appeared particularly anxious to know when he should be sent to the Tower, and the officers, taking advantage of the opportunity he had to ask questions, of making inquiries in return, asked him what he had meant to do with the ball-cartridges found in his pocket? To which he tartly replied, "It won't do, Mr. Bishop, I shall answer no questions." He was safely lodged in the prison about half past two o'clock, and, in the mean time, the nine prisoners, examined from Bow-street the night before, were taken before the Council, and, evidence at some length received against them.—At the close of their examination, they were taken back to the House of Correction under a strong escort of Life Guards.

All those whom we saw, were but poorly clad, and, upon the whole, of unprepossessing figure. They were mostly slight made men. Tidd, however, was stout and rather tall; his face square & manly, with prominent cheek-bones, fair eye-brows grey and bushy, the upper part of his head bald. He sat a long seat, but with visible emotion, frequently biting his lips and grinding his teeth. Davidson, the man of color, was short, with a full, or rather early countenance, the expression of which was rendered more revolting by the effect of the bruises which he had received, & which had nearly closed up his right eye: he was observed frequently ruminating on his unhappy situation. Cooper, on the contrary, looked careless and indifferent, & as he passed through the outer room, after his examination, a sort of smile seemed to play upon his features.

Harrison, the black, seemed to be in high spirits, for as his way to and from the Council, he forcibly sung "Scots wha hae wi Wallace bled," and when reproved by the officers for being so noisy, he abruptly replied, "I shall do as I please; and I am ready to die for liberty."

At the time of their examinations, the Magistrates issued several other warrants for the arrest of [illegible] among these was Firth, the landlord of the stable and loft in Cato street. He was also brought to Bow street, and, almost immediately after, sent before the Council, where he said that he had let the premises to a person named Harris, (who had formerly been a serjeant in the army) a few days ago; but he denied all knowledge of the use intended to be made of them.

"Ings, who has been apprehended, is a very ferocious individual, and has acted in concert with Thistlewood, as a sort of lieutenant colonel under him. By dint of perseverance the officers were enabled to find out his lodgings, situate in some court in Grey's-inn-lane, in which were found, besides fire-arms, pikes, daggers, &c. upwards of two hundred weight of combustible matter.

Every thing was tranquil throughout the night; but the officers of the police were actively engaged in endeavouring to ascertain the retreat of those of the conspirators who had escaped, and in bringing in the remainder of the arms, ammunition, and other things found at the rendezvous in Cato street. Among these things were a quantity of hand-grenades, pieces of leather, into which nails had been driven, evidently for the purpose of annoying cavalry to fire-balls, or large masses of pitch & oakum, nearly the size of a man's head; pikes of various descriptions, some of three sides, with a worm of wire at the end, and japanned with black; this was intended to answer a double purpose, as being black, they could be used without being discovered, as if bright steel; and the japan being manufactured rough, in case the wounds given by them were not in a part likely to prove fatal, it would prevent the wounds from being cured, as they would gangrene; and others formed of triangular files, such as are used by smiths; staves fitted to receive those pikes, &c.

The first intimation received by Ministers of the conspiracy against their lives was made on Wednesday morning, to the Secretary of State's office for the home department, by the Earl of Harrowby, the Lord President of the Council, who, it is said, was stopped by a man when he was riding on horseback in St. James's-park, who delivered to him a letter, informing the Noble Earl, in particular terms, that a gang of assassins was formed who were to assassinate his lordship and the rest of his Cabinet Ministers when assembled at his house on the evening of that day, at the Cabinet dinner the Noble Earl was to give. The Earl of Harrowby, though he did not know the man, stopped to listen to his representation, in addition to the contents of the letter, and afterwards consulted his brother Ministers on the subject. The result of their determination, in the first place, was to postpone the dinner, the residence of the Noble Earl being well calculated for an assassin to escape, Grosvenor-square being such a wide open space, that a villain, once out sight of, might be pursued many courses but the one he took.

The first information given at the office was at past seven o'clock, when it was made known that a number of officers, constables, and patrole, would be wanted. The nature of the duty with which they were entrusted was kept a secret till they started, which was between half-past eight o'clock and nine. The place of rendezvous of the assassins was in Cato-street, John-street, in the Edgeware-road, where the neighbours had become alarmed by a number of strange men assembling in a stable, and loft over it, after dark, and socks were hung upon the inside of the windows, to prevent their infamous acts being seen.

In the course of the day inquiries had been made, and the result was, that some desperate act or acts were expected to take place. The Minister's servants were armed with pistols, and two officers or constables appointed to each residence. The Earl of Harrowby and Viscount Castlereagh dined with the Earl of Liverpool, and at nine o'clock they went to the secretary of State's Office for the Home Department, at which time all the Cabinet Ministers assembled to be in readiness to give directions in case of any desperate act of resistance by the depraved and misguided wretches.

In consequence of private information received on Friday, by Lavender and Bishop, that Robert Harrison lately belonging to the 2d regiment of Life Guards, as a private, had been seen to go into the stable in Cato street, on the night of Wednesday last, when the gang had assembled to sally forth on the commission horrible massacre, the officers made diligent enquiries respecting him; at length they had a strong suspicion that he was concealed at his sister's, in Old Gravel Lane; they proceeded there, and made a rush into the house, and found him. He made no resistance.

The officers brought him to the Office, where he underwent an examination before Richard Birnie, Esq. He was identified as one of the desperate gang who were in the loft, and also knocked down at the time he murdered the officers. He was clearly seen, and by son well identified, there being ten candles burning in the loft when officers first entered it. He got no proof of his having been there, save several wounds in his body, which no doubt received in the affray, and as he could not satisfactorily account for them, he was committed for further examination.

Lavender was also despatched in quest of Robert Adams, whom they apprehended in a miserable hovel in Turnmarket, Holborn. He some time ago was a private in the Royal Horse Guards, in which he served five years. He very much resembled Thistlewood in person, but has a cast in his left eye. He is suspected to be one of those who escaped out of the window of the loft, on Wednesday night, in Cato street. He exhibited a most wretched appearance.

Symonds, who was brought from Martin's watch house, was examined with him. He evidenced no sign of recognition at the sight of Adams. From his apprehension, he exhibited a great deal of timidity. Soon after they were sent to the House of Correction, handcuffed together in a hackney-coach, accompanied by Lavender, Bishop, and Nicholls, but the evidence against Symonds and Adams not being in an arranged state to go before the Privy Council, the prisoners were ordered back to Bow street, as the Privy Council proceeded to hear the evidence of Capt. Fitz-Clarence, the two commissioned officers and privates of the guards, who were of the party sent to assist the Police. The examination of the military occupied the attention of the Privy Council till past 8 o'clock when they adjourned. On the return of Adams and Symonds back to Bow street, Adams being placed in a separate apartment, in custody of Monument, Symonds in the footman, underwent a private examination of upwards of three hours by Mr. Birnie and Mr. Hicks. This was, we understand, made some most important disclosures. He stated that the name of the lady, in whose service he continued up to the moment of his arrest, was Strafford. Adams was not examined, and immediately after the close of Symond's examination, they were both committed for the night. Soon after, Lavender and Bishop were furnished with a warrant for the apprehension of John Harrison, and about seven o'clock in the evening they returned with him in their custody. This is the man who hired the premises for the use of the conspirators. He is a tall, powerful man, nearly six feet three inches in height, and had served for ten years in the 2d regiment of Life Guards. He was discharged from the service in August 1814, and has since carried on the trade of a baker in a small way. The officers arrested Tidd at his apartments in Old Gravel-lane. Immediately on his arrival at the office he underwent an examination before Mr. Birnie, assisted by Mr. Stafford, and Mr. Day, of the Home Office. In the course of his examination he admitted having been present at the dreadful affair in Cato street; and also that he had seen Smithers murdered; but he persisted in saying that he did not know by whom the deed was committed. At the close of his examination he was conveyed for the night to Tothill-fields Bridewell.

Among those against whom warrants are issued, there is, we understand, a native of France.

Two other persons implicated in this transaction are now in custody, who lived in [illegible] dirty courts leading out of Baldwin's gardens. Their names are Tidd and Brunt. On Wednesday night between the hours of 8 and 9, three men came to Tidd while in such a state of drunkenness as scarcely to be able to keep his legs, and forced him away, notwithstanding the earnest entreaties & remonstrances of his wife and family. Nothing was said by the men who took him away, as to their object, either to the wife or any one in the house; and during the whole night and the greater part of the next day, they were in total ignorance of the circumstances since disclosed, and were in a state to account for the absence of Tidd. In the morning (Thursday) between 7 and 8 o'clock, two men came to the house [illegible] bags of considerable size, and knocked down on the door, and "they would come in a few minutes for it." The men refused to answer the interrogatories put to them as to they object in leaving the bags, and only repeated, that they would call in a short time and take it away. Very soon afterwards two more men came with a large bundle of sticks, some of them of the thickness of a man's wrist. They were clad in a similar manner, and the men also refused to answer any questions, saying only that they would call again for them in a few minutes. Ten minutes had elapsed before the Police Officers entered the house, and seized the box and the sticks. When the box was opened, it was discovered to contain a great number of pike heads, sharpened ready for use. The sticks were all cut, and carried away by the officers. It now appears that Tidd was taken by the three men whom we have described, to the stable in Cato street, where he was subsequently apprehended, and carried to Bow street, together with several of the

One of the other prisoners taken on Wednesday night is Cooper, a shoema-

...rles Brooks, the patrole, who was ... three times in the stables, gave ... evidence before Mr. Birnie, from ... which it appeared that a ball had entered the arm of his great coat, passed through all his clothes on his shoulder, and bruised his shoulder, but did not wound him. He was asked if he could identify the man that shot him? He replied, he had not the least doubt of the man being Ings, the butcher, who was apprehended in Cato-street, and who was among the nine committed on Thursday night to the House of Correction from the Secretary of State's Office for the Home Department; he saw him distinctly present the pistol and discharge it at him; he had a perfect recollection of his person.

William Westcott, another of the patrole who was at Cato-street, produced his hat; it had three large holes in the crown of it, through which balls had passed. He saved himself from being run through the body with a sword by one of the blood thirsty villains, by his instantly closing in upon him; and a brother officer coming up to his assistance they overpowered the wretch and secured him.

None of the prisoners seemed inclined to communicate much, with the exception of John Monument, the shoemaker, who entered into a long explanation with the gentlemen near him. He said, among other things, "that he had not been in the loft above ten minutes before the police officers arrived—that he came by Thistlewood's desire, of whom he had some knowledge—that when he saw arms, he was sorry he came, and wished to go away—that he had heard nothing upon the subject till after the King's death—that he had seen Thistlewood once or twice at a house which he named (but which we decline pointing out more particularly,) that he was told there were several other meetings of a similar kind; the purpose he did not particularize. He denied that they were bound together by an oath, but it was a general understanding among them, that whoever was guilty of treachery was to be taken off. He had heard something of going to Lord Bathurst's, but he declared he knew not for what."

A very singular circumstance has occurred relative to one of these miscreants, Davidson. On Tuesday morning he received thirty shillings from the Mendicity Society for the purpose of redeeming his tools, he representing himself to be a carpenter, and actually out of employ in consequence of not being able to procure the necessary implements. With this money, however, he went, on Wednesday morning, to a house in the neighborhood of Soho Square and purchased a bunder-buss, which was the one he used at the affray, and which Mr Birnie has now in his possession. Warrants have been issued against seven others of the gang.

Coroner's Inquest on Smithers.

An Inquest was held before Thomas Sterling, Esq on Friday evening, at the Horse and Groom Tavern, on the body of this unfortunate officer, when the following evidence was adduced:

George Thomas—Joseph Ruthven being sworn, said, that on entering the stable place, going in, I observed a man with a cutlass; the door was not fastened: this man guarded the lower passage. Ellis, Smithers, myself, and several others, entered. I found no difficulty in getting in; I was the first that entered. Mr Birnie was not with us at the time, but was near at hand. When we got into the passage, the man there said nothing, and I called out to some of the party to secure him. We went up by a sort of ladder or staircase, so narrow that we went up one by one. When I got up, I observed a table with a number of arms upon it, and Thistlewood on the right hand. I know him well; I have followed him for days together. The arms appeared to be as if handed and sorted about in order to be distributed to the parties. There were about twenty five persons in the place, and Arthur Thistlewood "as one of them. He stood by the side of the table, handing the arms about. There were others in the little room at the time; I should think about four or five. They appeared to be ill armed. Thistlewood, as he retired, had a sword in his hand, which he brandished and waved about; it appeared bright; as Smithers approached, he stabbed him. Smithers fell on me. A pistol was fired at the time, but I can't tell by whom. Smithers was about a pace before me at that time. The wound was inflicted on his right side as he approached the door of the little room, where Thistlewood was—The moment he received the sword, he fell upon me. He cried out, "Oh! Lord!" or "Oh! my God! I am done," or words to that effect. Instantly after a pistol was fired, and the lights were put out. I have been able to recognize four others besides Thistlewood of those who were in the room. They were, Shaw, Strange, Blackburn, and Jas. Wilson. There is another, who stood at the Serjeant. This man first ...ed the pistol at Captain Fitz Clarence ...d then fired at the Serjeant. There ... also two more in this house, who left a stick behind them. They admitted that they were in the room. One of them was taken by Captain Fitzclarence; I had seen him here in this house, as he had left his stick behind. I can't tell by whom the pistol was fired after Smithers fell, but the shot proceeded from the place where the people were; and a voice cried out "kill the; throw them down stairs." I should suppose several had escaped, as only nine were taken; and I calculated there were about 25 in the room. When we first came, the military had not arrived. They did not come until several shots were fired. There was a person shot on the left side, his name is Sirman; another was wounded in the hip. I seized some of the arms. There were found in the room eight hand-granades—one of them very large, appearing like a cannister; also, a quantity of balls & several swords. None but Thistlewood offered any violence before the candles were put out. There were likewise about three dozen of a sort of bayonets, not made like common bayonets, but with screws at the end, as if they were to be fitted to walking sticks; and I found about a dozen of the sticks to which they appeared as if intended to be fitted. There were great numbers of balls, which had no appearance of having been fired; there were two or three muskets found.

James Ellis sworn—I am an officer belonging to Bow-street. On Wednesday night, at half past eight o'clock, I was directed to take certain persons into custody. John Strman, William Gibbs, and myself, were directed to proceed to John street, Edgware road, as quick as possible; and there we should meet Mr. Birnie, who would give us further orders. When we arrived we found Mr. Birnie waiting, and he enquired if we had seen any thing of the military, as he expected them every minute. We said no. In about 20 minutes Mr. Birnie called us out. Some inquiry was made as to the number in the room, but we could not tell. Mr. Birnie said, he understood that Thistlewood was in the room; asked how many there were of us; we told him about a dozen; he then said he had been disappointed as to the military, and then he went into the house, Ruthven went first, and I followed him next. When I came into the passage, I observed a man with a musket, and a sword by his side; the musket was on his shoulder. Ruthven desired some person to take charge of him. At that moment Ruthven mounted the ladder, he went up, and I followed him. Before I got up, I heard a clattering of swords. When I got up, I observed a number of men talking back to the back part of the room, and appearing to be all armed, and there were four men coming into the little room on the right, all armed with swords or cutlasses, when a tall man immediately brandished his sword at me. I held a staff in my left hand, and a pistol in my right. I saw the tall man draw his sword, and make a thrust at Smithers on the breast. Smithers immediately threw his hands up, and exclaimed, "Oh! my God!" I instantly fired at the man who killed him; and missed him. Smithers fell against me, so as to drive me to the top of the stairs; a rush then came, the candles were all put out in an instant, and I fell—the top to the bottom of the stairs. Two or three shots were then fired in the stable below, where I was. I instantly heard the cry of "stop him!" I saw a man running on the opposite side of the street, and I took him. As I laid hold of him, he made a cut at me with his sword, which touched my leg. His name is Davidson. I believe it was the same man who kept the door; I have since seen Thistlewood, and I know him to be the man who stabbed Smithers. I did not know him before.

Mr. Westcott, a patrole was sworn. I was in the stable and saw a man like a butcher, who made a rush at me, and I seized him and knocked him down just as he was about to pull something out from under his coat. His name is Ings. While I was hand cuffing the man, Thistlewood came down and fired at me, and the shot passed through my hat and coat. I was wounded on the head. This happened at the time when I was securing the man whom I had knocked down—(Here the witness produced his hat and coat, with the marks of the ball in them.) It was just before the shot was fired that I knocked Ings down. Just as Ruthven, Smithers, and Ellis went up the ladder, I seized hold of Ings and knocked him down.

Sergeant Legge was sworn. I belong to the battalion of the Coldstream regiment of guards. On Wednesday evening I was called upon about eight o'clock, and received orders to march from Portman street barracks, to John street, Edgware road. I belong to the picket guard, which was ready to be called out on any occasion. Captain Fitzclarence commanded the party. On arriving at John street, we did not know where to go to: Capt Fitzclarence went to see where we were wanted, and he soon came back and desired us to run as hard as we could to Cato street. When we came to the gateway, I saw a man standing with a pistol, which he presented to the officer. I then seized the muzzle end of the pistol with my hand, and there was a scuffle as to which of us should have it, at last the pistol went off; in consequence of which I was wounded in the hand, and my eye lash burnt. When this took place, I kept the pistol and secured the man; his name is Tidd. After that I followed the officer and the party up stairs, and there found a quantity of arms and ammunition. Three men in the room had surrendered at the time. I believe Monument was one of them. I then saw Smithers lying dead; I went back to the barracks for a reinforcement, and when that arrived, we took all the prisoners to Bow street.

The Coroner observed, if they wished for any further evidence, he would adjourn till to-morrow; but the jury all declared the evidence already received was perfectly satisfactory. They then returned a verdict of "wilful murder against Arthur Thistlewood, Tidd, Davidson, Ings, Wilson, Blackburn, Monument, Gilchrist, Cooper, Shaw, and other persons at present unknown."

Among the granades found on the premises in Cato street, were one weighing upwards of 14lbs. It is a large tin cannister, filled with gunpowder and combustibles, and is wrapped round with rope yarns, which bind to its side old snuffers and pieces of old iron. The whole has been afterwards dipped in tar, and covered with an outer coat of brown paper. There is a fuse at one top, and the intention was to throw this into the banquet-room at night. When once exploded, its effects would have been horrible.

Insurrection at the Prison.—This morning at about nine o'clock, the criminals in the Penitentiary, suddenly rose and made a desperate effort to liberate themselves. They directed their operations to the gates of the passage into Sixth-street, and so far succeeded as to force the inner one. The first announcement we had of the tumult, was the rapid discharge of musquetry. We understand that the keepers of the prison and some volunteer citizens, as well as some pers us on the tops of the houses adjoining fired upon the mob immediately and that eight or ten of the prisoners were shot, but only three dead. The alarm spread rapidly, so that when the conspirators had broken the inner gate, a number of citizens had repaired to the outer, with muskets in their hands, and presented nothing but bayonets to the assailants. Up to the time we are writing, the tumult had not ceased. It is said that the conspirators in the four or five hundred. Fourteen volunteer companies have marched to the prison, so at present there is no danger but the tumult had not ceased. It is said that a number of cutgens have been burt by brick bats, and other missiles, that the mob hurled at them with fury. Such indeed, was their desperation, that they made a second attempt to escape into Prune-street, after the volunteer companies were in the prison yard. It seems that the conspiracy has been some time plotting; but one of the prisoners disclosed it to the keepers, and was stabbed on Tuesday, by other prisoners. The insurrection commenced this morning, when the officers were in the act of securing the ring-leaders.

Twelve o'clock at Noon.

All is quiet in the prison—at 11 o'clock, most of the leaders were secured. The marines that were ordered up from the Navy-Yard, have returned, though a strong guard of volunteers still remains.

Lord Wellington.—Reports have been industriously circulated in the English, and copied into the American papers, that Lord Wellington had lost the whole of his immense fortune at play. These reports are now positively contradicted. It is said that so far is this noble person from indulging in play, that he never was known to lose five pounds at any game.

NEW-YORK, April 5.

Gen. Don Francisco Vives, Spanish Ambassador; Col. Don Jose Sanchez Bodio, and Lieuts. Don Antonio Dons, and M. Salmon, arrived in the James Monroe. We think it fortunate on many accounts that the Spanish Minister, so long expected, has arrived before the adjournment of Congress.

Parliament was prorogued by commission, on the 28th, previously to its being dissolved forthwith. The Times says—"We regret his Majesty's ill health, which deprived him of the pleasure of going to dissolve this Parliament; and hope that the same cause will not exist for preventing his meeting and addressing in person that which is about to be assembled."

The Courier dispatched to inform the Queen of the late King's death, returned on the 25th. It is said that her Majesty was to set out from Florence, on her return to England, as soon as she had reposed a few days at her Villa, near Pesaro, having been very much fatigued with her late dangerous voyage from Toulon to Leghorn, in which she encountered very bad weather. The sudden news of the late King's death, was said to have greatly affected her Majesty.

Accounts from Ireland state, that bands of Ribbon men infest the county of Galway, resembling in some respects the Guerillas of Spain. Some of the gangs amount to 1000 and upwards, and commit nightly depredations to an enormous extent.

The late persecutions of the Jews in Germany, which have probably been somewhat exaggerated, it would seem have entirely ceased; and the emperor of Austria is adopting a liberal system of treatment towards them. Rabbins, before their appointment to particular synagogues, are to be examined, as to their proficiency in philosophical sciences and theology—are to be allowed stipends—the Jewish youths are placed upon the same footing with others—and the Jewish Prayer books are ordered to be translated into the vernacular tongue.

Cobbett's Evening Post of the 28th is filled with particulars relative to the late conspiracy. The Whigs charge the whole affair upon the Reformers; the latter, however, although Thistlewood was the ring-leader, are endeavoring to cast the odium upon the Whigs. Mrs. Thistlewood is said to be a delicate and most interesting woman, and it is to be regretted that she is united to such an ignorant revolutionist and assassin.

The London Statesman says, it is seriously affirmed that the conspirators drew lots whether Lord Castlereagh or Mr. Hunt should be the first victim of their murderous resentment; and the chance fell to the former. Hunt has also said that he was among the objects of the conspiracy.

Viscount Castlereagh has recovered damages of Sir Francis Burdett, for injury done plaintiff's house in St. James' Square by a riotous mob at the close of the last Westminster election.

The latest news from Madrid, is to Feb. 12. The revolution, after all, does not look so formidable, nor has it been so successful, as it has been represented.

A Paris paper mentions that a fruit woman, a mistress of Louvel, (the assassin of the Duke of Berri,) has been arrested, and is said to have made some important disclosures. The health of her Royal Highness, the Duchess of Berri, was daily improving.

It is intimated that the plan of assassinating the Ministers at a cabinet dinner, was not a sudden project. It was intended to have been executed about a month before the detection of the final part, when the cabinet were to have dined at the Earl of Westmoreland's, in Grosvenor square, which house was supposed to afford equal facilities with Lord Harrowby's. Some pretence, it is said, was to be devised, by the Monsters, to prevent there being no danger but the tyrant cently made over a rich deep soil, and rough with frequent causeways, it was obvious that they would be almost impassable with heavy loads on wheels. But when the earth is frozen, and covered with a common winter depth of snow such roads afford as good a path as any other. We had therefore been at great pains to make contracts for these articles, early enough in the fall, to enjoy the expected benefit of sleighing, for their delivery; And much labor had been expected in quarrying stone, falling and hewing timber, sawing plank, burning lime, biring teams, to make the most of that benefit. But there was no sleighing till the beginning of March, and when at last the snow fell, it afforded us no advantages. It came in such quantities as very soon to take out the frost beneath it, and at so late a period as to be exposed to rapid melting from the influence of the sun. In the counties of Onondaga and Cayuga, where where most of the materials were required, it lay on the ground for three or four weeks, and was used the most of that time, for sleighing, but to no profit. The teams which had been engaged, could then, very few of them, be had; for nobody is willing, without strong necessity, to be at the trouble and expence of fitting out teams for a few days service of doubtful emolument; and spring snows are seldom durable. Most of the time while the sleighing lasted all the materials were covered with snow, to inconvenient depth—no hard snow path could be formed—and the road was in many places, miry. In truth, but a small portion of the materials were delivered by sleighing; and if the following season had not been uncommonly dry and favourable to wheeling, it is probable that no practicable efforts could yet have effected the delivery of them. That our stone structures might be permanent, we were using large stones in their construction. Accordingly, those which we had delivered a great portion of them weigh from one to three tons a piece, and some of them much more: but the expense of loading heavy stones into waggons or carts, must always be greater than that of loading them into sleds. From the combined effects of these causes, the delivery of our materials has cost us much more than we could reasonably have anticipated.

V. To prepare the foundation of the locks and aqueducts, had been more difficult than was expected.

In order to give the same depth of water over the lock-sills, which is provided for elsewhere, our manner of securing the foundation requires that the excavation shall be sunk two feet below the bottom of the canal; and in digging for these foundations, in several cases, where the earth down to bottom was hard gravel or clay, we have found it below that and within the limits of our excavation, to be quick-sand. In such cases, we have been compelled to fill the bottom with bearing piles. And as these bottoms are about one hundred and thirty feet long, by thirty six broad, this operation has been attended with great labor and expense.

At all the places of our principal aqueducts at the locks, and at some of the large culverts the constructing and maintaining coff r dams, and bailing out the water, in addition to that of the excavation and pile driving, which must necessarily be subject to many contingencies, has exceeded our calculations.

VI. Fencing the canal was not included in the original estimate of the middle section; and yet we found this indispensable to the security of the canal, and have actually completed it on both sides, for nearly the whole distance.

VII. The water proof lime, which has been used, during the past season, for the most of the mason work done on the canal, has contributed to swell our disbursements beyond our original estimates. This material has been discovered in the progress of our exertions; and it will doubtless hereafter be considered as an article of prime necessity, throughout our country, for all hydraulic masonry. Mixed with clean silicious sand and water, and well beaten, it constitutes a mortar, which will soon set and throughly cement any work of stone or brick, in which it is used, under water. But in the first use of it we have been unavoidably subjected to many expenses which henceforth need not be incurred. We failed repeatedly in burning, pulverising and mixing it; but many trials have now shown us the way to succeed in all these operations. And all the masons in our employ, though for some time they were loth to use it, from an opinion which they uniformly entertained of its being of no value, now regard it as a discovery of the greatest importance—it sets much quicker, and becomes stronger in the air, than common lime mortar; and under water, where common mortar will not set at all, it begins to set immediately, and in a few weeks acquires great hardness and tenacity.—It may be quarried with the same labor as common limestone, and is known to occur in the greatest abundance, in Madison, Onondaga, Cayuga, Ontario & Gennesee counties; its colour is a yellowish grey, before it is burnt, & burning inclines it to a buff. It is softer than common limestone, and when burnt about ten per cent lighter. It will not slack, but must be pulverized by pounding or grinding, and when reduced to powder, its bulk is not materially increased. The quantity of sand mixed with it should be about half that of the lime in bulk. From its not swelling by being pulverized—from the expense of of grinding it, and from the greatly diminished quantity of sand which it will bear, it will be at once perceived, that its use will always be attended with greater expense than that of common lime. Still it may be used, at a very small proportion of the cost of any other material now known to answer the same purpose; and as it abounds in the vicinity of the canal, it will probably soon supply a great amount of tonnage for transportation, by the demand which will arise for it from without this state.

VIII. Our efforts have been much retarded, and rendered more expensive, in completing the middle section, by sickness. For about thirty-five miles, the canal line runs at no great distance from the Seneca river, which in that part of its course, except at Jacks rift, is a sluggish stream. The waters of this river flow through a region of the rankest vegetable luxuriance, which in the spring of the year, they overspread to the extent of many thousand acres more than they do in the fall. In common seasons, the autumn brings with it some danger to the health of the people of this region. The excessive and long continued heat of the last season, subjected them to extensive and distressing sickness. Between the middle of July and the first of October, about one thousandmen, employed on the canal from Salina to Seneca river, were disabled from labor by this cause—Most of these men recovered, but the houses in which they were collected, for near three months presented a most discouraging spectacle. And although great exertions were made to supply the place of such laborers as became diseased, by fresh hands, it was impossible to prevent some jobs from being entirely abandoned for several weeks. And where labor was never wholly intermitted, it was much less efficient, and the means of it were essentially lessened. The necessary effect of this was to protract the entire execution of the work, to a much later period than it would other wise have been extended to, and this inevitably increased the expense. Late in the season there were frequent interruptions of labor, by slight fals of rain and snow. And these interruptions were particularly injurious, in reference to much of the extra service done at this period. When the days had become short, and the earth was every where covered with mud, no resolution or ingenuity could make the work advance rapidly, in proportion to the means employed. Every effort was clogged The excavation of difficult places, which had been left incomplete was slow and laborious. And the performance of all those little jobs, that could not be omitted in bestowing the last finish upon the works previous to their actual use, was attended with tenfold difficulty.

It would not be reasonable to expect, that human foresight could exactly adapt the provision of materials, to all the exigencies of works so extensive, various and unusual, as those of which we had the charge, in the first contracts. Some deficiencies of this kind, were experienced, which it was expensive to supply. But the material supplies have all been made, and with the exception of a little lead, with which the iron cramps in some of the stone work, remain to be secured,—the coping of the Owasco creek aqueduct—some labor required upon the feeder from Butternut creek—and two small embankments on the south side of the canal, which have not heretofore been constructed, only because they were not deeds I to be necessary, until after water was admitted into the canal, the whole of the middle section has been completed. The expense of all these operations cannot probably exceed three thousand dollars, and they will not thstruct the navigation, while they are going on.

THE press and types from which the Phœnix issued, having come into the possession of E. Carey, the person who gave the votes of the House of Assembly during the last Session, it is his intention to establish a Newspaper in the Town of York, to be entitled "THE OBSERVER."

The avidity with which the public has received the Journals already established in this Province, has encouraged him to offer to its attention "The Observer," which shall be free for political discussion; and it is the Editor's determination not to admit into his columns any thing that may be offensive to private character. In short, he flatters himself, that the Observer will be conducted upon such liberal principles, as will secure to him the patronage of the public.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of YORK & SIMCOE.

GENTLEMEN,

HAVING been honored with your confidence, and called by your suffrages to the very honorable duty of Representing you in the present Parliament, I must expect that my prospect of attaining to the same distinguished station in the next, will depend altogether on the sense you entertain of the manner in which I have performed the trust you reposed in me.

Placed more immediately under the eye of my Constituents, it is altogether in your power, as it is entirely your province, to estimate the part I have taken.

It is far from me to presume, that with every wish to promote your best interests, I may not in many cases, have erred; but I may at least be permitted to say, what I can declare with sincerity, that am conscious of nothing which I wish to excuse.

Among the objects which have occupied the attention of the present Parliament, they have wisely provided for the more equal Representation of the People; and, in consequence of the provision they have made, you will have the privilege of electing an additional Member to guard your interests, and consult for the welfare of the Province.

Several of my friends, I observe, animated with a very praise-worthy ambition, have eagerly presented themselves to your choice; my actual occupation in the present Parliament, put it out of my power to address myself so immediately to you on the subject of the next; but I thought I might securely trust to the straitness and sincerity of that attachment, which I was happy to witness on a former occasion, and which I will not believe so fickle that it could be shaken by th idl and absurd reports which may happen to have found their way to you.

I cannot but consider as highly honorable, a situation, to which the good opinion of my fellow-subjects is the only passport; and I shall be happy to receive a proof of your continued confidence, by being chosen as one of your Representatives in the ensuing Parliament.

I will make no boast to you of my independence—you know the nature of my employment and resources, and I hatmy welfare must depend on yours; at the same time, I trust you think me much above any unworthy attempt to court popularity, by claiming credit for greater purity of intention or honesty of conduct, because I do not happen to be honored with any place of trust or confidencenuder a Government whose only object is and must be to promote the happiness and prosperity of the People.

I am, Gentlemen,
your most
faithful Servant,
PETER ROBINSON.

Newmarket, 9th March, 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

The General Election of Representatives of the People in the House of Assembly in this Province being near at hand, I take an early opportunity of announcing to you my intention of becoming a Candidate for your suffrages, there being a Bill before Parliament which will encrease your Representation.

I hope my character both public and private, is such as to entitle me to a participation in your confidence; & though I hold a highly honorable and responsible situation under His Majesty's Government, I trust the same Integrity and Exertion I have always manifest ed when serving my King, will continue to animate and guide my conduct when defending, maintaining, and supporting the Rights and Privileges of my Fellow Subjects, my family, and myself, which must be and are the same.

Should you do me the Honor to elect me one of your Representatives, to serve you in Parliament, I shall, to the utmost of my power, endeavour to deserve a continuation of your favor, should I live to be a Candidate at a future Election.

I have the Hegor to be,
with unfeigned sincerity,
your most faithful and
obedient Servant,
HENRY J. BOULTON

York, March 8d. 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

I acknowledge great pride in having been twice solicited by many of you to offer myself to your choice for the important and honorable service of Representative for these Counties in the House of Assembly. Having declined the first, I cannot withdraw myself from this second invitation, which can alone be founded on the expectation of rigid integrity towards the Constitution of the Country: I therefore now solicit this choice, in the hearty presuming that my hopes are well founded, and that yours will not be disappointed.

Though twenty years residence here has necessarily honored me with a personal acquaintance with most of you, I cannot dare to think that this supersedes all necessity of declaring to you my sentiments generally on Legislation in this province. I therefore profess to you an affectionate regard for British liberty and British Constitution; and that your Representative, whoever he may be, should, in the discharge of his duties, never forget that these two objects of his care are, the one to the other, the best and only Bulwark, and that to preserve the latter ever pure, the first must be preserved unwounded. I know, Gentlemen, that your good sense convinces you that it is not the duty of your Representative to oppose, through a spirit of faction, the fair, beneficial, and legitimate objects of the Administration; but you also know that the purest Administration requires a vigilant activity on the part of all its constitutional checks.

It will, Gentlemen, perhaps be said to you, that I hold an appointment under the Crown; true, an honorable one.—I feel thankful to the Administration that gave it, and the Government that has continued it to me; but your choice will necessarily remove the objection, (if it be any in your estimation,) as the Office must, in the event of my Election, be surrendered.

I will at present only add, that whatever be the event, the prosperity of the Province at large, and of these Counties in particular, will, during my life, always be an object of earnest anxiety to me.

I have the Honor to be,
Gentlemen,
your very obedient Servant,
WM. WARREN BALDWIN.

FROM EUROPE.

MUNICH, Jan. 20.

Dr. Vogel has submitted to a careful examination in the laboratory of our academy, the surprising discovery of Mr. Braconot, Nancy, of the effects of concentrated sulphuric acid on wood and linen. He has not only fully confirmed this discovery, but has extended his own experiments, with equal success, to other similar vegetable substances, such as old paper, both printed and written upon, and cut straw. By diluting the sulphuric acid with a due addition of water, sawdust, cut linen, paper, &c. were converted into gum and saccharine matter. It must excite great interest in all reflecting minds to see an indissoluble tasteless substance like the filaments of wood, converted by chemical reaction into two new bodies, and chemistry thus exercise a power, which but lately appeared to belong to nature alone, and in particular to vegetation. This artificial formation of sugar and gum, now discovered, must not be confounded with the extraction of these two substances from bodies in which they already existed. What has now been discovered, is a transformation, a metamorphosis, of which the most ingenious chemist had previously no idea; and it affords a new proof of the boundless extent of chemistry.

H, the son of a banker, having been expelled the university of Heidelburg, was thus escorted out of the city by his friends: twenty well mounted horsemen were followed by a marshal—seated in a carriage drawn by six horses, the student's sword in one hand and the tobacco pipe in the other; then the student in a carriage drawn by eight horses, the seat opposite to him being occupied by two of his friends in full dress, and bare-headed. The train was closed by 15 carriages, each drawn by four horses. The whole proceeded to Weinheim, where a sumptuous dinner was prepared, with the enjoyment of which the scene ended.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 9.

The design of a monument at Waterloo is determined on. The elevation of the pyramid is to be 140 feet, on the top of which is to be a lion holding a ball, representing the world in his claws, as if rendering peace to the world. The whole to be raised by soldiers, who were engaged in that memorable battle.

Old Greece!—On the right and left of the passes of Olympus are seen five picturesque villages, whose inhabitants pay no taxes, but they are bound to guide travellers over the mountains, which they do most faithfully and zealously; and whose sagacious dogs often find persons lost in the snow. This reminds the reader of the manner in which the traveller crosses the Alps.

PARIS, Feb. 20.

By a Royal Ordinance of the 26th inst. Baron Chapelle is appointed Secretary General to the Minister of the Interior Department.

It is reported that an humble address is signing in many of the Arrondissements of Paris, expressive of the horror and regret of the inhabitants at the late melancholy calamity, and petitioning H. R. H. Monsieur to take into consideration the forming matrimonial alliance for the further assuring the perpetuation of the legitimate Dynasty on the throne of France.

The news of the abolition of feudal servitude in the States of the Grand Duke of Schwerin, has caused universal joy at Frankfort, and even in Prussia and Germany, where the accounts have reached.

Letters from Dresden of the 14th of Feb. speak in high terms of the popularity of the Queen of Spain; "she was," add our accounts, "aware of the disturbed state of the country previous to her entering into her matrimonial engagement with the Catholic Majesty, but she hoped that benign and conciliatory measures which her conduct and disposition would always favour and promote, would bring back the misled to their duty and perpetuate the general reign of peace.—Alas! she has hitherto been disappointed in her hopes."

Letters of a recent date from Cadiz give nothing new of any importance; they state that town to be perfectly tranquil; however, strict measures were taken to prevent masking in the last days of the Carnival, the Coffee-Houses were shut up at an early hour, and an order was issued prohibiting more than three persons to appear together after sun-set, even the Serenade was forbidden, the soft Seguidille was interdicted, the Tyranna was no more heard under the window of the Querida, and the sweet Guitar was mute; this may be modern liberty and tranquility in Spain, but this resembles not the olden times.

Count Talleyrand, Ambassador from France to Switzerland, has invited the different Cantons to communicate to him the details and tariffs of the customs and duties collected in them, with explanatory notes. PARIS, Feb. 26.

"The Duchess de Berri came to the Thuilleries on the 23d inst. where apartments have been prepared for her accommodation. Soon after her arrival, her Royal Highness sent, by the hands of the Duchess de Reggio, the sum of one thousand francs to Paubnier, who first stopped the assassin; and, to Desnes, the soldier of the Royal Guard who took him, she caused to be presented a gold watch of considerable value on which is engraved by order of the Princess:—'Charles Ferdinand Duke de Berri.' These individuals have each received a pension from the King, and recompenses have been given to all those belonging to the Opera establishment, who lent their assistance on that melancholy occasion.

"The household of the Duke de Berri have been informed that their honorary appointments, salaries, &c. will be continued during the next year; and further, that if the Princess shall give birth to a male child, they will be retained immediately in his service.

"The heart of the Duke de Berri was deposited in a leaden box, and this was inclosed in another of rose-wood; on which the following inscription was engraven, as also upon the lid of the coffin:—

"This is the body of the high and puissant Prince Charles Ferdinand d'Artois, Duke de Berri, son of France, who died in Paris, Feb. 14, 1820, aged 42 years and 20 days, the victim of an assassination committed on his person the preceding evening."

MAINE, Jan. 6.

During the late inundation of the Rhine, a hare, dislodged by the water, took refuge on a tree. One of the boatmen which were traversing the inundated country, in canoes, to pick up the sufferers, observed the hare, steered for the tree, and without making his boat fast, climbed hastily up to seize the poor animal. The hare perceiving his danger, sprang from the tree into the boat, which was put in motion by the leap of the hare, and floated down the stream, leaving the boatman in his place upon the tree, in the disagreeable necessity of watching the rise of the waters.

Augustus William Schlegel, who was appointed Professor at the new Russian University at Bonn upon the Rhine, has asked his dismission. This is probably in consequence of the strict surveillance under which the University has been placed.

Singular Coincidence.—On a late occasion, at our parish church, two honest tradesmen, of this town, (brothers,) attended upon ceremonial business in the chancel, when one of them observed to the officiating minister, that he somewhat regretted the absence of the Vicar at that time, for himself & his brother had each a little suffering to present, both having had nine children, christened before; on which the worthy minister very pleasantly observed, that it certainly was a little curious, and what rendered it not less so, he himself happened to have the exact number, ten, and also was the youngest of ten; and moreover, that his good lady was of a family of ten.—Sheffield.

A few days since, a sparrow-hawk flew through a strong plate glass window of the library at Hardwick House, near Bury, and is now save without having suffered apparent injury.—Small birds have been frequently found dead under the same window.—Feb. 25.

Turkey.—Accounts from the Turkish frontier, of the 10th of last month, say that the reports are confirmed of the breaking out of serious disturbances in various parts of Asiatic Turkey, especially in the neighborhood of Bagdat. Two Pachas had been forced to fly, and the leaders of the rebels have made themselves masters of several towns. Troops are collecting with all haste to restore order. Well informed persons assert that Persia has some share in these troubles, and that the eldest son of the Shah had formed the plan to seize on Syria & some of the adjacent provinces, and with this view continually excites troubles. The Porte is said to have obtained important information on this subject. It is further reported that the Wechabites have again taken up arms, and have been joined by great numbers of adherents.

Cape of Good Hope.—Advices to the 7th Dec. have been received. The tranquility of the colony being completely restored by the defeat and dispersion of the Caffre hordes, a proclamation was issued by the governor on the 26th November, to rescind the order of the 3d March for calling out the militia of the invaded districts, and for the establishment of martial law. Lord C. Henry Somerset, the Governor at the Cape of Good Hope, was to leave the colony in a few days on leave of absence; the office was to be filled, ad interim, by Major General Sir Ruannif Shaw Dook.

A farmer, near Farnham, on the 20th Feb. bet 20 guineas that he would walk 100 miles in twenty four hours, which he performed and won by 4 minutes.

ANECDOTES RELATING TO HIS LATE MAJESTY.

Lord Mansfield, on making a report to the King of the conviction of Mr. Maloney, a Catholic priest, who was found guilty, in the county of Surrey, of celebrating mass, was induced, by a sense of reason and humanity, to represent to his Majesty the excessive severity of the penalty which the law imposed for the offence. The King, in a tone of the most heartfelt benignity, immediately answered, "God forbid, my Lord, that religious difference in opinion should sanction persecution, or admit of one man within my realms suffering unjustly; issue a pardon immediately for Mr. Maloney, and see that he is set at liberty."

The virtue of humanity was one which his Majesty was always particularly careful to instil into the minds of his children. On one occasion, at breakfast, whilst the King was reading a newspaper, one of the younger branches of the family, looking up in the Queen's face, said "Mamma, I can't think what a prison is!" Upon its being explained, and understanding that the prisoners were often half starved for want, the child replied, "That is cruel, for the prison is bad enough without starving; but I will give all my allowance to buy bread for the poor prisoners!" Due praise was given to this benevolent intention, which was directed to be put in force, together with an addition from their Majesties.

The King, in his walks at Cheltenham, July, 1788, accompanied by the Queen and the Princesses, was constantly attended by crowds of people. His Majesty pleasantly observed to the Queen, "We must walk about for twelve three days to please these good people, and then we may walk about to please ourselves." His manners were unaffected and condescending to every one. He walked about unattended by any pomp, without a single guard, more secure in the hearts of his faithful subjects, than in all the parade attendant on foreign Princes.

To those about his Majesty he declared more than once, at moments when the heart speaks its undisguised sentiments, "that the hours he had passed at Cheltenham, and in other parts of the country, unguarded, and in the midst of his people, had more than repaid him for all the hours of solicitude he had experienced during his reign."

His Majesty would not allow any soldiers to do duty or reside within ten miles of the Royal Spa. The band of Lord Harrington's regiment, only, were permitted to attend his Majesty.

The second morning the King was at Worcester, which was in August, 1788, his Majesty was out at half after five. He went to Colonel Digby's and Colonel Gwynn's lodgings. The maidservant was cleaning the door. The girl threw down her mop, and ran away to the bell. The King stopped her, and desired her to show him where the perfumes slept. The girl obeyed, and his Majesty went himself and called them up. The Colonels leaped out of their beds as if surprised in camp by an enemy, but the King was off, and they were obliged to run over the town to find him.

On visiting the Guildhall, his Majesty was singularly affable and agreeable.

On his return to the Palace, he walked through the streets, as he came, with only one attendant, besides the Lords in waiting. The crowd voluntarily opened an avenue for his Majesty, forming a phalanx on each side, to prevent any rude intruder, if there had been one, from breaking in upon the passage. The scene was affecting: and, when taken in a political point of view, forms an interesting epoch in the history of the country. After so many centuries had passed in repeated struggles for and against liberty, and for the several successors which had taken place to the Throne; after the Crown had been obliged to resort to the unconstitutional expedient of a standing army for its support—to behold the King of the country walking the streets as a private gentlemen, with only two or three attendants, amid the sands and tens of thousands of his subjects, without a single guard or peace officer, happy in the love, and rejoicing in the liberty, of his people, was an event such as the oldest man then living had never seen, and such as the youngest, but a few years before, scarcely ever expected to see.

An attempt was made to move the spirit in the Quakers of Worcester to address his Majesty, but these people kept in their old dull track of life, and were rather concerned that such a thing as a royal visit had happened, to break in upon their quietude. About a dozen of the more curious among them got leave to step into the court yard when his Majesty's coach left the Palace, but they stood unmoved, with their hats on their heads. The King saw that they were Quakers, and, taking off his hat, bowed to them. They, in return moved their hands, and the eldest of them said—Fare thee well, friend George!" The King and Queen laughed heartily at this systematic affection.

But perhaps the most remarkable incident attending this royal visit has still to be related. The only person who, by his Majesty's desire, accompanied him, as conductor through the town, was the great grandson of the Protector, Cromwell. The King appeared to converse with him with great affability and condescension. The singularity of the circumstance attracted general notice.

The King had a strong presentiment of his glowing malady sometime before it happened. Four or five evenings previous to his being taken ill, after a private concert, the Majesty went up to Dr. Ayrton, and, laying his hand on the Doctor's shoulder, with his usual benignity "I fear, sir," said his Majesty, "I shall not long be able to hear music: it seems to affect my head; and it is with some difficulty I bear it." Then turning round, he softly ejaculated—"Alas! the best of us are but frail mortals."

With the King's attachment to agricultural pursuits the public are well acquainted; but it is not, perhaps, so generally known, that his Majesty was the Ralph Robinson from whose pen sometimes very sensible and well-informed letters appeared several years ago, in Mr. Arthur Young's Annals of Agriculture. Mr. Young himself has recorded this fact in a subsequent part of his work.

In the severe winter of 1784-5, his Majesty, regardless of the weather, was taking a solitary walk on foot, when he was met by two boys, the eldest not 8 years of age, who, although ignorant that it was the King, fell upon their knees before him, and wringing their little hands, prayed for relief. "The smallest relief," they cried, "for we are hungry, and have nothing to eat."

More they would have said, but a torrent of tears, which gushed down their innocent cheeks, checked their utterance. The father of his people raised the weeping supplicants, and encouraged them to proceed with their story. They did so, and related that their mother had been dead three days, and still lay unburied; that their father, whom they were also afraid of losing, was stretched by her side upon a bed of straw, in a sick and hopeless condition; and that they had neither money, food nor firing at home. This artless tale was more than sufficient to excite sympathy in the Royal bosom. His Majesty, therefore, ordered the boys to proceed home ward, and followed them until they reached a wretched hovel. There he found the mother dead, apparently through the want of common necessaries, the father ready to perish also, but still encircling with his feeble arm the deceased partner of his woes, as if unwilling to survive her. The sensibility of the Monarch betrayed itself in the tears which started from his eyes; and leaving all the cash he had with him, he hastened back to Windsor, related to the Queen what he had witnessed; sent an immediate supply of provisions, clothes, coals, and every thing necessary for the comfort of the helpless family. Revived by the bounty of his Sovereign, the old man soon recovered; and the King, to finish the good work he had so gloriously begun, educated and provided for the children.—Percy Anecdotes.

Mr. Carbonell, the wine-merchant, who served his Majesty, was a favourite with the King, and used to be admitted to the Royal Hunts. Returning from the chase one day, his Majesty entered affably into conversation with his wine merchant, and rode tete-a-tete with him a considerable way. Lord Walsingham was in attendance, and watching an opportunity, took Mr. Carbonell aside and whispered something to him. "What's that, what's that (imagined the good humoured Monarch,) Walsingham has been saying to you?"—"Please you, Sire, I find I have been guilty of some disrespect; my lord has just informed me that I ought to have taken off my hat whenever I addressed your Majesty; but your Majesty will please to observe that whenever I hunt, my hat is fastened to my wig, and my wig is fastened to my head, and I am riding a very high spirited horse, so that if my hat goes off, we must all go off together!" King laughed heartily at the whimsical apology, and was content to chat with the fat wine merchant without any daugering his falling from his horse.

A new Fishing Bank has been found extending about 150 miles, S. and W. from the Orkney Islands. Dutch and French fishermen already crowd to this great Bank, and boasts from the Shetland Islands are constantly taking to Cod upon it in immense quantities.

Last year, 62,000 barrels of herrings were cured at Yarmouth, of which 40,000 barrels came to Hull, 26,000 barrels to London, 2,000 to Newcastle, 2,000 to Liverpool, and 17,000 were sent up the Mediterranean.

It is known by few, that the reason why hens do not lay eggs in winter is the want of lime to form the shell. If they have access to wheat which contains lime, or to lime itself, and they will lay as well in winter as any other time.

LONDON, March 9.

By a decree of the king of the Netherlands, and subsequent order from the burgomasters of Amsterdam, the celebrated bank of Amsterdam, whose paper is still within a recent period, bore so large a share in the money transactions of foreign countries with Holland, has ceased to exist. The whole of its accounts will be finally closed on or before the 26th of July next.

An article in the Ghent Journal, describes the king of Prussia as being very melancholy, and almost incapable of transacting business. He has ordered the strictest economy in his household.

We learn with regret the death of Joseph Ritchie, Esq. at Mourzuk, Africa, about 400 miles south of Tripoli. He was employed under the auspices of the government, to make discoveries in the interior of Africa, and particularly to penetrate through the great desert of Tombuctoo. Great additions to geographical science were expected from his labors.

We have authority to state, says the Morning Chronicle, that there was no injunction whatever contained in the will of the late duke of Grafton, to any person to publish any of his manuscript papers, either after the death of his majesty, or at any other time.

Paris, March 9.—The Journals of Bordeaux which arrived this day, confirm the news which we gave yesterday and the day before, concerning Spain. They also add more, stating that there is some which assert an Ipanema of reactionaries, and which, for that reason, we abstain from publishing. The following is the most important. We publish it without altering a word.

"The Marquis of Lesan, captain general of Aragon, has gone to Madrid in haste, to give advice of the insurgent in Saragossa, whither the people have offered the name of Ferdinand, which was placed over the public places, instead of that of the Constitution.

"General Castanos, captain general of Catalonia, has also given advice to government, that he could not answer for the fidelity of that province, where he heard many secret meetings among the military of the people.

"The same person met a courier that was going from Santander to Madrid, to carry the news that the Constitution had been proclaimed in the former of these cities.

"There has been some commotion at Valencia, and Nebot has been placed at the head of a corps of 400 men, and has made preparations to join the column of Riego, which was supposed to be near to Grenada.

"The insurgents of the Isla of Leon, have established a provisionary junta, composed of the Marquis of Uregna, of M. Solis, of the directors of ports of the Island, and of two other persons. At Alcal a Goliano, has been appointed principal Secretary.

"General Elio has been disgraced for having advised the King to leave the capital.

"The command of the army of General Freyre, has been offered to Generals Biron and Balleseteros, both have declined.

"The staff officers of General Freyre, have presented themselves before him, and have demanded that the regiment which attacked the three companies which Riego left at Bujalge, be struck from the army list, for having spilt the blood of their comrades.

"The person who gave these details has also informed that the insurrection was becoming general throughout Spain, that the greatest confusion reigned at Madrid, at the moment of his departure; and that many grandees of Spain had presented themselves to the King, praying that he would convoke the Cortes, which they regarded as the sole means of quieting the insurgents.

The letters which we have ourselves received from Madrid, from Irun, and from Bilboa, yesterday's mail, confirm in the most positive manner the progress which the insurrection is making, and the embarrassment of government. That from Madrid is couched in the following terms:

"It is impossible for me to give you an idea of the consternation of the court. At the moment that they expected that the insurrection of the Isla of Leon has been subdued, we heard that it had spread itself as far as Gallicia. At the meeting of the 20th of this month, the people of that province rose in conjunction with the troops.—Captain Venegas was arrested in his palace; a provisionary government was formed and the constitution published. They dug up the remains of Gen Porlier and paid them funeral honors.—His widow was carried about in triumph. At Belmonos and at Ferrol, the constitution has been likewise published. The governor of this last city having made some resistance, was killed.—At Corogne, those who took part in the arrest and condemnation of Gen. Porlier, have likewise been killed. The joy of the people is at its height; the cries viva la constitution, resound through all our streets. Every thing has been effected in the greatest order and without bloodshed. This change must certainly astonish all Europe. Sol diers as well as the people in general, evince the most lively joy; I came this moment from the royal palace, where the repeated visits of the people have induced the king to present himself twice on the balcony.

Gazette Extraordinary of Madrid—Wednesday, 8th March, 1820.

OFFICIAL ARTICLE.

It has pleased the King our Sovereign to ad dress to all his Secretaries of State, the Royal Decree which follows:—

"For some time past, which might arise from the doubts entertained by the Council in execution of my Decree of yesterday, for the immediate convocation of the Cortes, and being the general will of the people, I have decided to swear to the Constitution proclaimed by the general and extraordinary Cortes in the year 1812. Do you hold it as understood, and do you make imme diate publication of this.

Signed by my royal hand. FERDINAND

By Mr. Ponsonby's benevolent Act, the 57th, c. 45, of the late King, every person who, at the demise of the King, shall hold any office, civil or military, under the Crown during pleasure, shall,
without any new or other patent, com mission, warrant, or authority, continue and be entitled to hold and enjoy the same during the pleasure of the King or Queen who shall succeed to the throne.
This relieves civil, military, and naval officers, from the duty and expense of reviving their commissions or patents; and consequently, the Lord Chancellor and Attorney General will not be en titled to the fees, which according to an cient custom, would have fallen to them on the present occasion. Though all officers civil and military, are relieved by this Act from payment of new fees, there are some appointments to which the Act does not extend, as they are not what the Act describes offices.
Tuesday produced the proof. Four barristers who possessed patents of pre cedence, found that they were extinct by the demise of the King; Mr Fou blanque, Mr. Wetherell, Mr. Casherd, and Mr Jervis. Of those Mr Casherd on Tuesday appeared in his stuff gown, and took his seat without the bar. All commissions to Justices of the Peace, we believe, must also be renewed at or before the end of six Months.—Morning paper.

From Genoa, it is stated, on the au thority of letters from Cairo, that the pacha of Egypt had seized upon Pale

Female courage—The Gazette of Augsburgh gives a singular account of presence of mind in the daughter of a gamekeeper, residing in a solitary house at Weilheim. Her father and the rest of the family had gone to church, when there appeared at the door an old man apparently half dead with cold. For ing for his situation, she let him in, and went into the kitchen to prepare him some soup. Through a window which com municated from the room she had left him in with the kitchen, she perceived he had dropped the beard he had on when he entered; that he now appeared a robust man: and that he was pacing the chamber with a pogard in his hand. Finding no mode of escape, she armed herself with a dagger in one hand, and the bottle, and in the other and entering the room where he was, first threw the soup in his face, and af terwards struck him a blow on the neck with the hatchet which deprived him of sense. At this moment a fresh knock at the door occasioned her to look out of the window, when she saw a strange hunter, who demanded admittance, and, on her refusal, threatened to break open the door; she immediately got her father's gun, and, as he was proceeding to put his threat into execution, she shot him through the right shoulder, on which he took to the forest. Half an hour after, a third person came and asked after no old man who must have passed that way.
She said she knew nothing of him; and after useless menaces, if she did not o pen the door, he also proceeded to beat it in, when she shot him dead on the spot.
The excitement of her courage being now at an end, her spirits began to sink, and she fired shots and screamed from the win dow, until some gend'armes came to h r but she would not open the door until the return of her father.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL CHAMBER.

Tuesday, 11th April, 1820.

This day at three o'clock, His Excel lency the Administrator of the Govern ment came down in State to the Legis lative Council, and being seated on the Throne, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was sent down to the House of Assembly to command their attend dance before His Excellency; and the Members being come up, the Honorable Speaker of the Legislative Council sig nified His Excellency's pleasure that they should return to the usual place of their sitting, and there chuse a fit person to be their Speaker, and present him for His Excellency's approbation on Thursday at 3 o'clock.

Thursday, April 13th,

His Ex cellency the Administrator hav ing ag in come down to the Legislative Council, and being seated on the Throne, and the members of the Assembly, with Mr. Papineau their Speaker elect, being in attendance below the Bar, the Honor able the Speaker of the Legislative Coun cil expressed His Excellency's allowance of the choice of the House of Assembly; and then His Excellency was pleased to deliver the following Speech:—

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

Though I felt desirous to avail myself of the counsel and assistance of this Par liament, it was matter of deep concern to me to summon you together at a pe riod of the year which I am sensibleas highly inconvenient for your assemblings;
but I ascertained that the law permitted the adoption of no other course. I re gret also that your session must open, in regard to the situation of public affairs at a peculiar and unhappy conjuncture, your proceedings being in cessarily of less than the usual importance, and subject to interruption by the notice from His Majesty's Government of those impor tant events which have recently involved the Royal House of Brunswick and the people of the United Empire, in comm on affliction; yet by the exercise of such prompt and diligent attention as I doubt not you are prepared to bestow upon the public business, you may, I trust, be enabled to enjoy the satisfaction of contributing in a material degree to the service of your country.

Fearful of transgressing, by any want of due caution, against the integrity of that unrivalled Constitution bestowed up on you by a Sovereign whose paternal eye was upon the interests of every part of his dominions, and who with merely less for ever in the grateful remembrance of these Provinces, I had recourse to the pro per sources of information, for the effect which the advices I have alluded to must unavoidably produce on the several branches of the Legislature, and the re sult has determined me not to offer any business to your consideration except such as may be readily concluded, and is of importance to the actual exigencies of the public service; whatever appears to me of this description, I shall commu nicate to you by message, with the least possible delay.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I shall order the usual statement of the Revenue and of the expenditure for the last year, to be laid before you.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

Having received official communica tions from the Earl Dalhousie, in his ca pacity of Governor General of His Ma jesty's North American Dominions, I think it right to announce to you by this place, the appointment of the Right Hon Nobleman to the eminent office vacat ed by a much lamented death.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

An Inquisition was taken at Wood house, in the District of London, on the 13th inst. before Robert Nichol & James Mitchell, Esquires, two of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace, upon the view of the bodies of two young lads of the name of John Cornelius and John Jewell, the former was found in a state of violent convulsion within an hour after he had eaten the fatal root, and the latter was found dead, by his uncle, a few yards from his father's house. It is supposed that they must have died nearly about the same time—the root when eaten by them was supposed to be ginseng.—John Cornelius died in about two hours after he had been seen eating it.

"Verdict.—That the said John Cor
"nelius and John Jewell, came to their "death by casually eating of a Root
"found by the said John Cornelius,
"growing in the fields of one George "Salmon, supposed to be a species of "Parsnip, and a strong vegetable poi "son."

We are informed by the gentleman who forwarded the above communica tion, that Mr. Salmon observed the boy digging up the root in his field, and for bid his eating it, as he did not know what it was; but the mother of the other boy tasted the root & said it was ginsing, up on which the boys dined on the root in her presence and each ate half of it.
This was about sunset, and soon after dark they were both dead. Our corres pondent has promised to observe the leaves of similar roots when they shoot, and inform us more particularly of the nature of the plant. He also encloses the following extract from M. Bechtein,
"The garden parsnip should never be dug up in the spring; because when the roots at that season are growing upward for producing seed, their juices acquire a poisonous quality; and instances have occurred in which the internal use of them has been productive of fatal effects on the human constitution. The roots of the broad leaved water parsnip are very hurtful to man and cattle, and those of the narrow leaved skirret, are also said to be noxious in their effects, and ought, therefore, to be carefully a voided." We have often heard the gar den Parsnip was unwholesome after it had commenced vegetating in the spring;
but the flavour is so much improved by its remaining in the ground during the winter that we have frequently eaten it and known many others do so without any sensible ill effect, when dug up ear ly in the spring; however we should think it very imprudent to eat them after the leaves began to appear. In cases where vegetable poisons may be taken, and no medical assistance at hand, drink ing plentifully of warm water will pro bably free the stomach of the poison, or at least so dilute its acrimony as to pre vent any fatal result.

The Magistrates in Special Sessions have this day fixed the Assize of Bread, for the ensuing Month, at six pence halfpenny the four pound Loaf, of fine Flour.

(CANAL REPORT CONCLUDED.)

The side cut at Seneca, is nine mile and forty three chains in length, and it was estimated, as is stated in our report of last winter, to cost $6-00. It has been entirely completed with great fidelity & beauty, at an expense of $6044 67; and being added to the middle section, which is near 94 and 1 2 mile long, we have an extent of 96 miles of artificial navigation, commenced and completed since the 4th of July 1817, at an average expense, per mile, including every thing, of $11792.

In a canal of such length, passing through so great a variety of soils, and over such numerous streams, which af ford the possible channels through which several considerable lakes, immoveable springs and a very extensive bad drain, will necessarily discharge their waters, and which are yet, from the extent of uncleared land adjacent to them, sub ject to great obstructions from unaccu mulation of float wood, and of course, wherever these obstructions take place,
to the pressure of a heavy head of water above them, and a current of propor tionate violence below, it will not be prudent to calculate upon entire exemp tion from injurious casualties. A breach has been effected, and is now open, in the north bank of the canal, at Oriskany, which it will take a fortnight in the spring to repair. Other breaches may be ex pected, though we have spared no labour in our power, which we deemed neces sary, to provide against them. And in addition to the security which the whole line derives from the manner in which it is constructed and guarded, we have di vided it into five sections, and assigned to each an experienced and vigilant su perintendant, whose duty it is constantly to watch for its safe keeping and whenever danger threatens it of any kind, to use his utmost means to ward it off.

The canal commissioners during the past season, have limited their disburse ments for all labor in the actual construc tion of the canal, to the middle section.
But they have employed exploring par ties, on both the western and eastern sections. Between the Seneca and Ge nesee river, Canvass White Esq. as en gineer, has been in the charge of a party, which has been engaged for several months in levelling over and surveying different routes for the canal line. These labors he has performed much to our sa tisfaction, and having presented a view of them to a meeting of our board, held in October last at Utica, we thereupon decided in favor of the route originally ex plored between those rivers, in year 1816, and a part of this route having first been definitively located, the acting com missioners, under the authority of a re solution of the board, proceeded to en ter into contracts for the construction of the canal, through about twenty miles thereof. That portion of the line which is let out, extends from the east bank of the Genesee river to the town of Palmy ra, from which, to Seneca river, we hope early in the approaching season, to pass the whole line under contract. The pro per engaging in this work has suffered no abatement; many of the old contractors and other persons of enterprise and res ponsibility, have entered into agreements with us; and very many respectable ap plications are yet ungratified. The terms of these new contracts are at least as fa vorable to the state as any heretofore con tinued; and one of them requires that the whole work shall be completed by the first of September, 1821.—These contracts are dated in December last, and several of them are now in the process of vigorous execution.

From the Genesee river to the Seneca, at the western termination of the middle section, there is a fall of near 190 feet: and as every part of a canal line may be better located in descending than in ascending a country, it was deemed expedient to commence this operation, and the construction of the western section, at the Genesee river. This expediency was rendered more obvious by the consideration, that the place of crossing that stream, and the canal level there, admit of but little variation

At the meeting of the canal commissioners above alluded to, it was resolved, that while about 63 miles of the western section should be put in the course of construction, 26 miles of the eastern section also should be placed under contract. This distance extends from Utica to the foot of the Little Falls of the Mohawk river, embracing the most difficult places on that section, above the Scoharie creek. Eight miles of it will be made in continuation of the Rome level, which before exceeded fifty eight miles in length! and these eight miles have been contracted for at reasonable prices by good men, some of whom are now at work upon them.

Valentine Gill, Esq. has been employed as engineer, with the necessary assistants, to explore the country, in reference to the best establishment of the canal line, from Gannet's mill pond in Palmyra, with which the old level was connected, westerly to the Genesee river, at a point about 12 miles south of Rochester, and thence westerly to Buffalo creek. The easterly part of Mr. Gill's line has been rejected in favor of a more northerly route; but he thinks that a line from Rochester may be run south westerly, so as to intersect with his line west of the Genesee river, and from the point of intersection be carried through the counties of Genesee and Niagara, to a junction with the waters of lake Erie, south of the village of Buffalo. The great objection to a southern route, through the Holland purchase, is the fear of a deficiency of water to supply it, as such a route must necessarily be carried far above the level of lake Erie, Mr. Gill's summit level is about 94 feet above lake Erie; but he is of opinion, that it may be extended more than forty miles, so as to embrace the waters of Westcoy, of Allen's, of Tonnewanta, of Ellicott's, and of Little Buffalo creeks which he thinks, in the driest season, would furnish a copious supply. In a country so new, and of which a great part is still covered by standing timber, the interests of the canal require, that great precaution should be taken in the definitive establishment of the canal line. It will be proper that other examinations should be prosecuted through the country west of the Genesee river, previously to a final decision of the route. The maps and report of Mr. Gill are herewith presented.

In discharge of that part of their duty which relates to the harbor of Buffalo, the canal commissioners employed David Thomas, of Cayuga county, to make the necessary surveys, and report to them the result. This service has been faithfully rendered, and the practicability of the construction of a harbor there, at a moderate expense, seems to be sufficiently established. The report of Mr. Thomas, together with his map and estimates of expense, is herewith presented. Whether such a harbor, when it is constructed, should be paid for out of the canal fund, it appears to us that it would be premature to determine, before the route and termination of the canal is definitively settled in that neighborhood; & we do not consider the surveys which have yet been made, as affording all the information which is desirable in order to such settlement.

At an early day of the last season, it was feared, that the amount of money subject to our order, might not be more than sufficient to complete the middle section of the Erie canal, and that part of the Champlain canal which had been commenced. Hence we determined to confine our expenditure to these parts of the canals, except as to such sums as might be requisite to fit out and pay the necessary exploring parties. Such parties, the legislature bound us to provide, for the examination of Buffalo harbor & the Oswego river. And if the canals were to be continued, it was obviously necessary that a part of their routes should be fixed beyond the limits contracted for, before those limits should be entirely completed. For, otherwise, a whole season would have been lost to those undertaking, in the course of which the public property connected with them would have been wasting, the most experienced and efficient contractors would have sustained great loss, in tools and other preparations made with a view to their continued engagement on the canals, and they must have betaken themselves to other employments. These results, and others equally pernicious, would have been inevitable. The total amount of disbursements for exploring parties last year, is $8,400.

But the unforeseen causes of expense heretofore indicated as unavoidably connected with bringing all our contracts to a close, have greatly exceeded our expectation: and we have been compelled to anticipate $122,500 of the funds of the present year.

Our contracts upon the middle section were all to have been fully performed by the first of October last, and as soon as they were performed, all the monies earned upon them became due. If these sums had not been paid, every contractor would have been ruined; and anxious as we were, from the most pressing considerations; that of safety to the canal, which incomplete, would have been much more exposed to injury from the frosts of the winter and the floods of the spring; that of economy to the contractors, who could not be expected to quit their work when they had nearly accomplished it, and afterwards return to it at great expense, because our disbursements were likely to exceed our estimates; and that of duty to the public, who have a paramount interest in having the canal navigable as soon as possible, in order that it may speedily produce profitable returns, we could not resolute to incur the responsibility of such anticipation. The money was borrowed at six per cent interest, and on the fifth of January last, certificates of stocks were issued by the commissioners of the canal fund, to cover it. The interest of this money, from the time of its being loaned up to the time of issuing the stock, amounts to $1775 03, which sum we solicit your honorable body to authorize the comptroller to place to our credit, as we have paid it for the reasons above stated.

Deduct $122,500 with the interest on loans of the preceding and present years, from $600,000, the amount of the permanent legislative appropriation, and it will be seen that little more than $400,000 will remain applicable to the construction of the canals for the ensuing season. From this sum a further deduction which may be considerable, but of which the amount is yet unascertained, must be made for the purchase of the rights of the western inland lock navigation company, with whose works we shall so interfere at Wood creek, whenever we fill our canal, as to render such purchase expedient.

After these deductions, we think the money remaining subject to our control, will not be adequate to the due prosecution of the canals. We therefore recommend, that so soon as the amount of money to be paid to the western inland navigation company shall be ascertained, according to law, it shall be paid by the commissioners of the canal fund in certificates of stock, to be issued by them for that purpose, and bearing an interest of five per cent. And we further recommend, that there be appropriated to the canals, by law, for the present year, in order to supply the deficiency of funds occasioned by the anticipation aforesaid, and in addition to the amount of stock last above mentioned, the sum of $122,500 over and above the sums now appropriated to them.

As fast as the canals are rendered navigable, they will be liable to injuries of various kinds. The banks may be broken, the fences may be thrown down, the waste gates may be obstructed, and all the works may be defaced, and many of them essentially impaired, both by carelessness and malice. We therefore recommend the passage of a law, imposing suitable penalties for every injury to which they may be exposed.

The experiments that have been attempted at navigation on our canals, have been entirely satisfactory to every witness of them. The novelty of seeing boats drawn by horses, upon waters artificially conducted through cultivated fields, forests, and swamps, over ravines, creeks and morasses, and from one elevation to another by means of ample, beautiful, and substantial locks, has been eminently exhilerating. The precision of the levels, the solidity of the banks, the regularity of the curves, the symmetry of the numerous and massive stone works, the depth of the excavation in some places, the extent of the embankments in others, and the impression produced every where along the line, by the visible effects of immense labor, have uniformly afforded gratification mingled with surprise. The ease with which the canals may be approached, and the facility of transportation on their waters, will recommend them to immediate and extensive use. And every result hitherto ascertained experimentally, in relation to them, fully justifies the favor with which the preceding legislatures have regarded them, and exhibits the most perfect and irresistable claims to the steady and liberal patronage of your honorable body.

In reference to the Champlain Canal

During the last season the works on the Champlain canal have been prosecuted with zeal and activity, by the several contractors to whom they were committed. The locks, the waste weirs, the culverts, and the remaining parts of the excavation and embankment, have been so far completed as to render the canal fit for navigation. On admitting the water in December last, it was ascertained that both, levels are perfectly correct.

Owing to a deficiency of funds, the canal has not been fenced; and this, it is believed, is the most expensive part of the work which remains to be done. A towing path along the margine of Wood creek is to be constructed. There are two places in the vicinity of the village of Fort Ann, where the canal passes on the slope of a clay hill, and where the earth below the canal showed a disposition to slip after the canal was filled with water. Measures were immediately taken to secure those slips, but the work was arrested by the frost before it was completed, and it will be necessary to finish it as early in the spring as practicable. The banks of the canal admit but very little water to escape through them; and it is believed that the solidity and compactness which they will have acquired in another season, will render them impervious to water. The supply of water on the summit level has answered the expectations which had formerly been indulged, and it is believed, that with ordinary seasons, a feeder will not be wanted in many years.—Although the market at the present time is unfavorable for the lumbering business, yet from the best information which can be obtained, it is expected, in case no accident should happen to the canal, that nearly half a million of boards and plank will be passed through it the ensuing season.

In the report of the 13th March, 1817, the construction of the canal, from the lake to the Hudson, was estimated to cost $250,000. This estimate was made on the supposition, that the canal should be "thirty feet wide at the surface, twenty feet at the bottom, and three feet deep; and the locks to be seventy-five feet long, and 10 feet wide in the clear." Since that period, for reasons which are assigned in the report of the 31st January, 1818, the canal commissioners determined to enlarge the dimensions of the canal, so that it should be 40 feet wide at the surface, and 28 at the bottom, and four feet deep, and the locks to be ninety feet long and fourteen feet wide in the clear. This enlargement of the works added about one third to the cost of construction, and the original estimate increased by the same ratio, would be $333,000.

There has been paid already, towards the construction of the works, $232,268, 86, and on account of appraisements which were not included in the original estimates, the sum of $33,876 49. The additional expense of fencing the canal and finishing all the works, will not, it is believed, exceed $25,000, so that this section of the canal will be constructed for $255,000, or $260,000, a diminution from the estimate of more than twenty-eight per cent.

In order to prevent any unjust impression from being made by the preceding statement, as to the comparative economy with which the middle section of the Erie canal has been constructed, it ought here to be observed, that when the original estimate of the expense of opening the Champlain canal was made, there were no such data of minute calculation before the Commissioners, as were furnished on the middle section of the Erie canal. From Utica to the Seneca river, the aggregate expense was made up of a separate valuation of the cost of every mile, that is, there was a distinct estimate for every mile of the grubbing and clearing, of the number of cubic yards of excavation, and of embankment, with the price per yard of each, and of the bridges, culverts, aqueducts and locks, wherever they were deemed necessary. While on the Champlain canal, it was necessarily otherwise from the character of the returns made by the engineer, Col. Garin. These returns did not enable us accurately to calculate the quantity of excavation or embankment, the number of aqueducts, culverts, waste-weirs or bridges.

York, 27th March 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of YORK & SIMCOE.

GENTLEMEN,

HAVING been honored with your confidence, and called by your suffrages to the very honorable duty of Representing you in the present Parliament, I must expect that my prospect of attaining to the same distinguished station in the next, will depend altogether on the sense you entertain of the manner in which I have performed the trust you reposed in me.

Placed more immediately under the eye of my Constituents, it is altogether in your power, as it is entirely your province, to estimate the part I have taken.

It is far from me to presume, that with every wish to promote your best interests, I may not in many cases have erred; but I may at least be permitted to say, what I can declare with sincerity that I am conscious of nothing which I wish to excuse.

Among the objects which have occupied the attention of the present Parliament, they have wisely provided for the more equal Representation of the People; and, in consequence of the provision they have made you will have the privilege of electing an additional Member to guard your interests, and consult for the welfare of the Province.

Several of my friends, I observe, animated with a very praise-worthy ambition, have eagerly presented themselves to your choice; my actual occupation in the present Parliament, put it out of my power to address myself so immediately to you on the subject of the next; but I thought I might securely trust to the steadiness and sincerity of that attachment, which I was happy to witness on a former occasion, and which I will not believe so fickle that it could be shaken by an idle and absurd reports which may happen to have found their way to you.

I cannot but consider as highly honorable, a situation, to which the good opinion of my fellow-subjects is the only passport; and I shall be happy to receive a proof of your continued confidence, by being chosen as one of your Representatives in the ensuing Parliament.

I will make no boast to you of my independence—you know the nature of my employment and resources, and that my welfare must depend on yours; at the same time, I trust you think me much above any unworthy attempt to court popularity, by claiming credit for greater purity of intention or honesty of conduct, because I do not happen to be honored with any place of trust or confidence under a Government whose only object is and must be to promote the happiness and prosperity of the People.

I am, Gentlemen,
your most
faithful Servant,
PETER ROBINSON.

Newmarket, 9th March, 1820.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

THE General Election of Representatives of the People in the House of Assembly in this Province being near at hand, I take an early opportunity of announcing to you my intention of becoming a Candidate for your suffrages, there being a Bill before Parliament which will encrease your Representation.

I hope my character both public and private, is such as to entitle me to a participation in your confidence; & though I hold a highly honorable and responsible situation under His Majesty's Government, I trust the same Integrity and Exertion I have always manifested when serving my King, will continue to animate and guide my conduct when defending, maintaining, and supporting the Rights and Privileges of my Fellow Subjects, my family, and myself, which must be and are the same.

Should you do me the Honor to elect me one of your Representatives, to serve you in Parliament, I shall, to the utmost of my power, endeavour to deserve a continuation of your favor, should I live to be a Candidate at a future Election.

I have the Honor to be,
with unfeigned sincerity,
your most faithful and
obedient Servant,
HENRY J. BOULTON

York, March 3d. 8120.

To the Free and Independent Electors of the Counties of York and Simcoe.

GENTLEMEN,

I acknowledge great pride in having been twice solicited by many of you to offer myself to your choice for the important and honorable service of Representative for these Counties in the House of Assembly. Having declined the first, I cannot withdraw myself from this second invitation, which can alone be founded on the expectation of rigid integrity towards the Constitution of our Country: I therefore now submit my choice, humbly presuming that my hopes are well founded, and that yours will not be disappointed.

Though twenty years residence has necessarily honored me with a personal acquaintance with most of you, I cannot dare to think that this supersedes all necessity of declaring to you my sentiments generally on Legislation in this Province. I therefore profess to you my affectionate regard for British liberty and British Constitution; and that your representative, whoever he may be, should in the discharge of his duties, never forget that these two objects of his care are the one to the other, the best and only Bulwark, and that to preserve the last ever pure, the first must be preserved unwounded. I know, Gentlemen, that your good sense convinces you that it is not the duty of your Representative to oppose, through a spirit of faction, any fair, beneficial, and legitimate object of the Administration; but you also know that the purest Administration requires a vigilant activity on the part of all its constitutional checks.

It will, Gentlemen, perhaps be said to you, that I hold an appointment under the Crown; true, an honorable one—I feel thankful to the Administration that gave it, and the Government that has continued it to me; but your choice will necessarily remove the objection, (if there be any in your estimation,) as the Office must, in the event of my Election, be surrendered.

I will at present only add, that whatever be the event, the prosperity of the Province at large, and of these Counties in particular, will, during my life, always be an object of earnest anxiety to me.

I have the Honor to be,
Gentlemen,
your very obedient Servant,
Wm. WARREN BALDWIN.

FROM EUROPE.

LONDON, April 4.

The Paris Papers of Friday and Saturday last confirm the accounts which appeared in our paper of yesterday, relating to the dreadful occurrences which took place in Cadiz on the 10th of March. A more minute detail of the shocking outrage, will, however, be found in the copy of a private letter from the scene of disorder, which appears in this paper.

Amidst the scenes of bloodshed, cruelty & treachery, presented in this melancholy narrative, it is some consolation to reflect that these crimes rest not upon the character of the Constitutionalist. The troops in the interest of Ferdinand were alone guilty of them, and they appear in every point to have followed the commands of Generals Valdez and Campana, who it is strongly suspected acted under immediate orders from the Court of Madrid. Freyre too is implicated in the charge of deliberate treachery and cruelty, but there seems some reason for at least suspending our opinion on this point until we receive further evidence. Gen. Freyre arrived in Cadiz on the 9th, and he promised the Citizens that he would on the following day proclaim the Constitution of the Cortes. The inhabitants received the communication with shouts of enthusiastic gratitude towards the general, who they honored with the title of regenerator of his country. The ceremony of proclaiming the new form of government was fixed for 10 o'clock on the following day. And at that hour the citizens were assembling in the delighted anticipation of the great event. At this luckless moment, some companies of the regiment of America & of that called the General's guides, advanced from different points, by previous concert, upon the scene appointed for the ceremony, and commenced a murderous fire on the peaceable, unarmed, and confiding citizens. The people, of course, fled in a fright, but 500 killed, and 1200 wounded according to the Madrid accounts, prove with what dreadful precision the inhuman assassins executed their sanguinary instructions. A general pillage of the city followed this act of cool bloody barbarity, and probably it was while the troops where thus engaged, that the inhabitants, recovering from their sudden panic, prepared themselves for their butchers, and being joined by the marine troops, attacked the soldiers, and drove them into their own quarters.

It is said that Valdez and Campana have paid with their lives the forfeit of their treachery. But this circumstance, we regret to say, is not stated in the Paris papers. Freyre retired from Cadiz to Porto Santa Maria, and the inhabitants succeeded in triumphantly proclaiming the Constitution. The total number of slain could not be ascertained, but it must be very considerable. On the 14th tranquility was restored in Cadiz, and the Madrid account adds, that the promoters of the disorders had undergone the just punishment of their guilt.

A Royal Decree constitutes Don John O'Donoju captain General of Andalusia, and commander in Chief of the army in that Province. Admiral Cayetano Valdez is appointed Governor of Cadiz. The most extensive powers are given to O'Donoju, to correct and try all persons who promoted the calamitous events in Cadiz, and the disorders in Andalusia.

The tranquility of Galicia was for a few days disturbed by what the Paris papers call a petite civil war. General Pol, Count De San Romano, put himself at the head of a handful of militia, but his men were quickly dispersed, and himself driven out of the province. This advantage was, however, purchased by the loss of Col. Acevedo, of the national troops. Romano is said to have retired into the Asturias, where he has again found some adherents. To such trifling commotions the publicity of the King's declaration must speedily put an end. Many of the inhabitants of Biscay are dissatisfied with the New Constitution.

From a London paper.

In one of the late king's excursions during the last vestian the neighbourhood of Weymouth, he passed a field where only one woman was at work. His majesty asked her where the rest of her companions were? The woman answered they were gone to see the king.—And "why did not you go with them?" "The fools, replied the woman, that are gone to town will lose a day's work by it, and that is more than I can afford to do. I have five children to work for." "Well then, said his majesty, putting some money into her hands, do you tell your companions who are gone to see the king, that the king came to see you."

LEEDS, April 1.

It has been communicated to us that a number of strangers, emissaries, we believe we may call them, were passing through the country, instigating the people in the Manufacturing Districts to arm; and we feel it to be our duty to put the public, particularly the distressed, upon their guard against their dangerous machinations.

April 2.

For several days the peaceable inhabitants of this town have been kept in a state of great agitation and terror, from the alarming indications in the neighbourhood. We present the following statements to our readers exactly as they have been given to us, only premising that we collected them on the spot from the individuals to whom they refer, and that depositions to the same effect have, we believe, been laid before the magistrates. The Civil authorities have suspected sometime that arms were clandestinely introduced into the neighbourhood; but notwithstanding their vigilance, they were unable to ascertain the fact in a satisfactory manner. On Tuesday last, a parcel from Birmingham, arrived by the Regulator, addressed to "John Payne, Castle gate, Huddersfield," which excited the suspicions of Mr. Whitehead, Deputy Constable; who thought it proper to wait the arrival of the person who should call for it. Towards evening, a notorious Radical, named Gill, enquired for the package. Whitehead, who was in attendance, came forward and desired to know its contents. The answers of Gill were evasive, and very unsatisfactory. It was opened in his presence, and found to contain a sword, two brace of pistols, three bayonets, two bullet-moulds & two gun-locks; an invoice was enclosed, from which it appeared the charge for the sword was 6s. for the pistols, per brace, 16s. the bayonets and gun-locks 14d each, and bullet moulds 4d. A letter was also found, soliciting further commands, and stating that the hurry with which the articles were required, prevented them from being exactly according to order; that those sent were of a superior quality, but in the present instance, were invoiced at a reduced price. Gill was immediately apprehended, and the following day he was examined before the Magistrates; the account he gave of the parcel was, that Payne is a Higler, at present from home, requested him to take charge of it till his return; he was held to bail to answer any charge that may be brought against him at the next Assizes.

"This occurrence naturally excited the apprehensions of the Magistrates, and early on Friday they received information that great numbers of the lower class in the neighborhood were armed with pikes and pistols, and that in the course of that night, an attack was meditated upon the town, when a signal was given, by numerous pikemen in bodies of 200 men, with the promptitude and alacrity which they have manifested on many former occasions, every arrangement was made for the security of the town. A detachment of the 85th foot, under Capt Welling, and 4th Dragoons, under Capt. Sibthorpe, were held in readiness to act at a moment's notice; and late in the evening the Yeomanry were called out and the other precautionary measures adopted. The signal, a sort of fire-balloon, was observed about 2 o'clock on Saturday morning, in the direction of Castle Hill near Almondbury; and several parties of men, in regular order were seen, in different directions, approaching the town. One division came so near as the Marsh turnpike, a short distance from the new church. None of them, however, entered the town, having, it is supposed, received intelligence of the preparations made by the Magistrates.—Two large bodies assembled on Barkis-Land Common, and proceeded on their way, as far as Lindley Moor; but not being joined, as they expected by some other parties, they returned home and dispersed quietly, except firing guns, &c. on their way.

"A circumstance occurred the same evening, which convinced the Magistrates that their apprehensions were not groundless. About eleven o'clock a gentleman, who lives near Cooper Bridge, was returning from that place to Middleton, accompanied by a Game-keeper, and three other persons, whom they had accidentally overtaken. On arriving at the Obelisk (or Dumb Steeple, as it is usually called), near Kirklees, which our readers will recollect, is the place where the Luddites endeavoured previously to their attacking Mr. Cartwright's Mill, they passed an hundred men in a square or circle apparently in close consultation. Two of the party, named Bravely and Smith, turned off into the New Road, & the rest proceeded towards Cooper bridge. They had not, however, gone 100 yards, before they heard their late companions calling for help.

"On returning back, and entering the road, they were surprised to see a number of men, sitting under a hedge or wall, each armed with a pike or spear, and near them was a quantity of the same weapons, about 200, heaped on the ground. The gentleman, who was separated from his companions, took up one of the pikes, and was proceeding to examine it, when one of the men struck him, and he was attacked by several others. At the same moment a number of persons, at least sixty, came over an adjoining wall, armed in the same manner. The gentleman felt alarmed at his situation, and attempted to make off; while doing so, a pistol or musket was discharged after him, the ball of which whizzed close past his head. In the mean time the rest of the party were attacked and beaten. One of them, named Tolson, received several wounds, particularly one on the left side, and is now under the care of a surgeon.

"During the whole of Saturday (the 1st instant) the military and civil power were on the alert. A number of additional special constables were sworn in; and several seizures of pikes and other arms were made in the neighbouring villages, particularly at Almondbury. In a house at the latter place, a quantity of pike staves, great numbers of which had been cut from the neighbouring plantations, were found concealed. They are of very coarse workmanship, the blade about nine inches long, sharp pointed, and having at the broad end a screw, with which they are fastened into a pole about seven feet long.

Parties of horse and foot patrolled the town & neighbourhood during the whole of Saturday night, and two men were apprehended at an early hour on Sunday morning, the 2d inst. A large party was seen assembled on Saturday night, about four miles from Huddersfield, in the neighbourhood of Hartshead, but they had dispersed before the military were apprised of their meeting.

The town and neighbourhood were tranquil during the whole of Sunday, the 2d inst but several apprehensions were excited to take place in the course of last night.

The following persons are in custody, on charges connected with these proceedings:—Joseph and Benjamin Barker, of Mirfield; John Lindley, of Mirfield; George Barker, of Colne-Bridges, and Joshua Hirst, of Deighton.—Leeds Intelligencer.

A Vienna article of March 6, says; It is confidently said, that Austria and Prussia have issued an ultimatum in which they have declared that they have decided (in concert with the ministers of several other Courts,) to establish without delay, an army of observation of 40,000 men, half Austrians, half Prussians, united on the Rhine, from Wessel to Mayence. This army is to be divided amongst the Confederated Powers. It may be considered as the advanced guard of the Army of the Holy Alliance, and perhaps the report of the expected arrival of its Commander in Chief (Duke of Wellington) upon this Continent, is not without foundation.

THE LATE KING.

From Bell's Weekly Messenger. March 6th, 1820.

Respected Friend—I take the liberty (being one of thy constant readers) to correct an error which appeared in thy paper of the 6th ult. relative to the late King's visit to Worcester, in which it is stated that an attempt was made to move the spirit of the Quakers to address his Majesty, but these people kept to their old dull track of life," &c. nearly the whole of this paragraph is a falsity and inclines much to the illiberal invidious cast. It is true that some of our Society were introduced into the palace yard to see the Royal Family leave, but they were such as knew a propriety of behaviour better than what is reported of them. The fallacy of this idle tale can better be demonstrated by referring to the following facts:—The staple trade of Worcester being the glove manufactory, and a great proportion of the principal manufacturers being at that time of the Society of Friends, a conference was held on the propriety of making the King and Queen a present of six pairs of gloves each, and I was requested to prepare them; they were sent to the Bishop's Palace about one hour before the royal visiters left, inclosed with this short address. "May it please the King and Queen to accept a small present of gloves, being a specimen of the staple manufactory of the city of Worcester." Some short time after a clergyman of Gloucester with whom I was intimately acquainted, being at this time on a visit at Cheltenham, sent me an invitation to spend a few days with him at his lodgings. I took my wife and two of my children with me; the next morning I was on the walk leading to the Spa, and although at a considerable distance on the opposite side to the King, I caught his eye, when enquiring of a person near him who I was, obtained my name and residence. This King came immediately across the walk up to me, and accosted me thus—" Mr. Burlingham, I was going to send a letter to you by the Bishop this morning, containing my thanks for the gloves you sent, and an order for some more." A considerable conversation ensued, by the King asking me a number of questions; and just as he was about moving on he said,—"Where are you?" I replied," at Gillicash Pot Lodge;" he said, "I know it, I know it." How the King came at first in possession of my name I could never learn. We had just done breakfast, when the servant came in haste to say the king was coming. In a few seconds he came, attended by his two gentlemen he entered our apartment alone, and in the most condescending manner began a conversation with me respecting his order for gloves, bringing a pair with him of the kind he preferred; afterwards the conversation became general; the clergyman, his wife and my wife were all noticed: my daughter, who happened to be of no age of one of the younger Princesses, he noticed particularly, taking her by the hand.

In the afternoon, about five o'clock, one of the King's servants came to say it was his majesty's pleasure I should attend him at Fawkenburgh Hall immediately, I had been taken by surprise twice before and now completely so; however, I went. My name being announced to the King, he came to me in the hall, and desired I would follow him: he went up stairs, and introduced me into the drawing-room, where the Queen was seated at the upper end, a table before her; the three princesses were also there, and no other person. The Queen, by her condescending affable manner, set me more at ease than I could have conceived; she said, the gloves I had sent her were very nice, but not the sort she wore—she showed me a glove intended as a pattern; the King turned down the top and wrote "the Queen," I have this now by me. He directed the Princesses to do the same with each of theirs. The Queen said, "when you have executed this order you shall hear from me again." she added, "give me your address, write it your own way," and was in the act of handing me some paper, when the King took it, and said, "I will write it;" he wrote, "John Burlingham, Worcester," "There," he says," is that right—is your name spelt right?"—A considerable time was now taken up in conversation, in which the Queen took part; some of the King's questions we of a nature I little expected, and most interesting. I will mention one circumstance which took place soon after I entered the room: the King after surveying me from head to foot, observed, "now you are dressed in character—I have always understood you Friends dress plain from principle;" he added, with some emphasis, "I wish they would keep to their principles. I have observed some use powder, and I have told them of it."—This I knew to be true. The interview lasted about half an hour, I respectfully withdrew, with impressions on my mind that will never be effaced: thus I had three interviews in one day, all of them unexpected. The next time I saw the King, was at Weymouth. I was going early to bathe, and saw the King at some distance; I was at the moment near the corner of the street, in turning up which I avoided meeting him. Soon after breakfast, the King's secretary, R. Brown, with whom I had corresponded on business, came to my lodgings, and smiling said, "you need not hide yourself the king knows you are here—he saw you turn such a corner this morning." He then appointed twelve o'clock, by the King's direction, for me to have an interview. The last time I saw the King was also at Weymouth. I then had a message at Gloucester Lodge, at eight o'clock in the morning, just as I was retiring, the King said, "how long have you and I been acquainted?" when, before I could recollect myself to reply, he said, "its seventeen years." The King had an admirable retentive memory, his remarks in general, from my own experience, were exceeding appropriate, he entertained a respect for our Society, considering them among some of his best subjects, more especially those who were the most consistent to the principles they professed.

We find no additional information from France. The Morning Chronicle, however an opposition paper, states that the situation of France at this moment is truly alarming; and that numerous arrests have taken place at Paris. The Minerve, edited by Evereste du Mouglin, concludes a paragraph as follows: "Let us be on our guard! The censure is preparing its scissors; the geolers are opening their dungeons; let us hasten—but not despair! It is not yet twenty days since in a neighboring country, the inquisition, the Jesuits, despotism, torture, and scaffolds were in permanent force. They are destroyed. Liberty has recovered its empire beyond the Pyrenees; it has gone to sleep in France; but its sacred fire is not extinct. It will be rekindled."

LONDON, March 31.

The celebrated traveller, Mr. Belzoni, has arrived in this metropolis, after an absence of ten years, five of which he has employed in arduous researches after the curious remains of antiquity in Egypt and Nubia. The famous sarcophagus of alabaster, discovered by him in Thebes, is safely deposited in the hands of the British consul in Alexandria, waiting his embarkation for England, along with the obelisk, 22 feet long, taken by Mr. Belzoni from Philæ above the first cataract of the Nile.

Important Chancery Suit.—Previous to the year 1538, Sir Andrew Judd, an Alderman of London, for the purpose of maintaining a free grammar school, at Tonbridge, Kent, purchased lands producing an income of about £20 a year. These lands were situated partly in St. Hallows, St. Mary Axe, and other parishes in London, and partly in the parish of Pancras in Middlesex.—Previous to his decease, he conveyed the lands to the Skinner's Company, and by letters patent of Edward VI. they were constituted governors of the possessions for maintenance of the school.—Afterwards by his will, Sir Andrew added £10 a year more to the charity, and desired that the surplus rents, if any, should be disposed of by the Skinner's Company "according to their will and pleasure." Now it so happened, that since the time they were purchased, the lands have been built upon, and vastly improved in their value, particularly those at St. Pancras, upon which have been recently erected Judd-street, Ton-bridge-place, &c. and the original property valued at £40 per annum, is now worth £26,000 per annum. A momentous question has hence arisen, "did Sir Andrew Judd mean the Skinner's Company to appropriate the surplus to their own use and benefit, or to the benefit of the Tonbridge school?" The Vice Chancellor, on Thursday, gave judgement, that the Skinner's Company held the lands in their corporate capacity, as governors of the school, and upon no other grounds; but he thought this a very proper case for an application to the legislature, on account of the immense amount of the property in question. In the course of the hearing, the Vice Chancellor asked to what uses the Company have applied the surplus revenue of this charity. Mr. Heald answered that they applied it to charitable uses.

Improvements in Apsley House, &c.—His Grace the Duke of Wellington has just finished a magnificent banqueting room at the east side of Apsley House. The interior decorations are not yet completed, but it is supported by ionic columns. The state dining room is now the library. In this apartment is set out for public view the different services of china and other valuables presented to the illustrious hero, by the different crowned heads of Europe. Every piece represents different scenes in which the Duke has been the chief actor, from the earliest of his campaigns in India, down to the closing scenes in the opening of Waterloo bridge.

Resolute conduct of a Woman.—On Monday afternoon, Alice Salter, 19 years of age, servant to Mr. Lanham, baker, of Widcombe, had occasion to go into the house of Sarah Perkins, who keeps a tea-shop next door to Lanham's; on entering the passage, she observed a man robbing the till, and with great presence of mind she darted into the shop, and seized him by the collar.—He struck her on the head repeatedly, but she held him fast, called out for assistance, struggled with him, and forced him into the kitchen, where Sarah Perkins appeared, and Salter, with great coolness, told her to run for a constable, whilst she held the prisoner. During Perkins's absence, the villain swore he would murder Salter, if she did not release him, and slipping a clasp knife from his pocket, he attempted to cut her throat, but during the attempt, she lifted her arm up to her neck, and received the cut on the fleshy part of it. This murderous attempt inspired her with fresh courage, and she forced him into the court-yard, where he was taken with the knife open in his hand by Mr. Lanham and a constable. He took about nine shillings from the till, and a pocket book containing two five pound and three one pound notes, all of which were luckily preserved through the intrepidity of the young woman. The prisoner, Henry Warren, a most notorious offender, underwent examination before Thomas Clutterbuck, Esq. last night, at Widdicombe House, who sent him off this morning, with the witnesses for Taunton, where the assizes for this county are now holding.

The floating chapel in the Thames appears to grow in the affections of the sailors. The novelty of a floating chapel having subsided, the people from the shore do not appear on board as formerly; but the number of sailors, for whom the chapel was intended, increases to replace them. On the last Sunday morning the congregation consisted of between five & six hundred sailors, and between two and three hundred in the afternoon. Such a scene is as admirable as it is novel, and while there continues to be such attendance on the public service of God, there cannot but be good ground to expect important and beneficial consequences to seamen, and to society generally.—New Times, March 31.

Fashions for April.—Carriage Dress.

A round dress, composed of French grey bombasin, and trimmed with black gauze; the skirt is moderately wide; the trimming which is very deep, is formed in a singularly novel and pretty style, the gauze being disposed in rows of full plaits, which are laid on lengthwise in a bias direction, and set very close to each other; each row of plaits is edged with black satin ribbon. The body is made high: the collar stands out a little from the neck; it is peaked in the centre of the back, and slopes down so as just to meet in front. The back is tight to the figure, the waist is long, and a small jacket, which is rather full behind, has a very jaunty effect: the fronts are plain, and the dress fastens before. The long sleeve is of an easy width except towards the bottom, where it is nearly tight to the arm; it is ornamented by three black satin roulenus, and finished at the hand by a full fall of white crape, scolloped at the edge.—The half sleeve, of the same material as the dress, is made very full; the fulness is divided into compartments by narrow roulenus of black satin.

A very full white crape ruff is partially seen under the collar. The head-dress, a bonnet composed of grey velours simule, and lined with white garnet; the edge of the brim is finished by a full black gauze ruche; a bunch of black flowers is placed on one side of the crown. Grey kid gloves, and black kid half-boots.

Evening Dress.—A round dress, composed of white crape, spotted with white satin; it is worn over a white garnet slip; the skirt is moderately full, and is finished at the bottom by a wreath of flowers and leaves composed of black silk; the flowers which are roses, are very small; a double row of leaves, placed thickly together, with the points downwards, is attached to them; there are two rows of this trimming placed at some distance from each other, but not so high as to be unbecoming to the figure. The corsage is composed of black velours simule; the waist is long, and it is a little, but very little, peaked in front; a narrow pointed trimming finishes it at the bottom of the waist, and it fastens behind. The upper part of the body is composed of white crape, let in in easy folds, and confined in the centre of the bosom by a jet clasp. This style of body is peculiarly adapted to the display of the shape. Short full sleeve; the upper compased of velours simule, edged with a narrow white crape trimming, and fastened up in the drapery style. The under sleeve is white crape; it is very full, but is drawn close to the arm at the bottom and is finished by a pointed fall of white crape. The front hair is dressed in light ringlets; the hind hair is disposed in different plaits, which are fastened up in bows at the back part of the head; white flowers, intermixed with pearls fancifully disposed, ornament the hair. The necklace and earrings are also pearl. White kid glove and shoes.

A dreadful calamity took place at Bordeaux on the 3d of this month. The north entrance of the cathedral church of the city is situated between two towers, surmounted by lofty spires. A pyramidal obelisk, about 150 feet high, rose immediately over the gateway. This obelisk had been injured by fire, & was repaired about 10 years since. On the 3d instant, at five o'clock in the evening, at the moment that the church service was commencing, a violent storm arose, accompanied by sudden squalls. The lightning struck the obelisk, and dashed it on the roof of the church, which being incapable of supporting this enormous weight, sunk down as far as to the arch which separates it from the great body of the cathedral. A mass of stones immediately poured in, and killed several of the persons who were assembled in that part of the church. A mass of stones of more than three metres high filled the nave; it was evident that all who were covered with this enormous mass must have lost their lives. The danger was every instant increasing, by fragments of the roof, which the gusts of wind shook, and which were constantly falling in the midst of the laborers. The architects signified the danger of continuing the work, and their fears were but too well founded, for quickly another portion of the roof tumbled in. The works were resumed the next morning at day-break, and the ruins were all removed at twelve o'clock. The number of the killed amounts altogether to 13, & among the wounded is one whose situation leaves no hope of recovery. All the bodies of the dead are dreadfully mutilated; those which could not be recognized have been transported to the Commune.—Paris Paper.

Births, Marriages, & Deaths at Paris.

It appears, by an official return, that the number of births at Paris in 1819, were males, 12,403; females, 11,939; total, 24,342. Deaths, males, 11,054; females, 12,616; total, 22,670. Marriages, 6246. The births include 3621 illegitimate children, of whom 1984 were acknowledged; the rest not acknowledged. The deaths include 1332 children born dead, of which 757 were males, and 595 females. The number of suicides in the course of the year were 376 CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 10.

The intimate commercial connexion which has been established since the 1st January, this year, between the kingdom of Poland and the Russian Empire, is so important, that an outline of the particulars of the newly adopted system must be welcome to our readers. The establishment of the tolls on the frontier of Russia toward Poland is still maintained, but only in respect to goods coming from or going to foreign countries, &c. for salt, tobacco, brandy, and playing cards; in every other respect Poland ceases to be considered as a foreign country.—There is a free and uninterrupted passage across that frontier for, 1. All the raw productions of the two countries which are intended for the use of each other respectively, with the only condition of specifying them at the frontier for statistical purposes. 2. The manufactures and productions of the industry of the two countries, but accompanied with certificates of origin, and those manufactured from the raw materials of the two countries respectively, free of duty; those manufactured from the raw materials furnished by other countries, upon accompanied with certificates of origin, and those manufactured from the raw materials of the two countries, upon conditions hereafter to be determined. The Russian ministry of finance, and the Polish Government, will agree together on the most convenient stations for taking the export duties on Russian productions exported to foreign countries through Poland.

To maintain the superintendence over the importation of foreign manufactures through Poland into Russia, and at the same time increase the trade, and especially the fairs of Warsaw, it is ordered, 1. That to prevent fraud, the Russian Chief Board of Customs is to receive from the Polish Government a complete catalogue (to be successively completed as circumstances require) of all Polish manufactories, with a statement of the place of the proprietor, the quality and quantity of the goods manufactured, adding the stamp and mark of the manufacturer: but that, 2. All goods coming from the Warsaw fairs to Russia, shall have, for three years together, an abatement of ten copecks per rouble on paying the tariff duty to the Russian Custom-house at Warsaw, and of five copecks per rouble on paying at the Russian frontier (to go to Russia) all Polish manufactured toll-house. All Polish manufactured goods (except from those parts which are too remote) shall be imported into Russia, by way of Warsaw only, and have the certificate from the Russian Board of Customs.

All the subjects of the two states are entitled to be admitted into the Guilds or Companies of each other. Travellers from Russia to Poland, and vice versa are subject to no other formalities than from one government of the Russian empire to another.

FRANKFORT, March 22.

A chemist at Dresden has just discovered a composition, by means of which the effect of gunpowder will be doubled. LONDON, April 10.

Intelligence of which the following is the substance has this morning been received from Scotland;

About 7 o'clock, A. M on Wednesday April 5th, one of the Stirlingshire Yeomanry in proceeding to join his troops at Falkirk, was stopped on the high road, within a few miles of Kilsyth, by a party of armed radicals, who refused to let him pass. He turned back, and on his return met an Orderly of the Kilsyth troop of Yeomanry who was on his march in the same direction with despatches. The two Yeomen went to Kilsyth, and reported what had happened.

Lieut. Hodgson, of the 10th Huzzars, and Lieut. Davidson, of the Stirlingshire Yeomanry, immediately marched with a small party of each of those corps in pursuit of the Radicals, and overtook them near Bonnybridge.

The Radicals, on observing this cheered and advanced to a wall, over which they commenced firing on the military.—Several shots were fired by the soldiers in return, and after some time, the cavalry passed through an opening in the wall and attacked the Radicals, who resisted until they were overpowered by the troops. Four were wounded, and one of them was left on the field. Nineteen were taken prisoners and lodged in Stirling Castle. Five muskets two pistols, 18 pikes, and about 100 rounds of ball cartridges were taken.

In this encounter, Lieut. Hodson received a pike wound through the right hand; and a serjeant of the Huzzars was severely wounded by a shot in the side and by a pike. Three horses were also wounded.

Captain Barclay, in his begging expedition through Scotland (for a wager,) has been arrested at Dornoch, and committed to prison as a vagrant, to be kept at hard labour for a week. His explanation with respect to his begging wager was not believed; as the magistrate could not credit that any gentleman would undertake so degrading an expedition

FATAL RIOT AT GRENOCK.

The following is an extract of a letter, dated Glasgow, Sunday, April 9. received by a gentleman of this town:—

"I have just now seen a letter from Mr. Arch. Robertson, a surgeon, in Greenock. He states, that yesterday forenoon it was generally reported that some radicals, prisoners, were to be brought from Paisley in the afternoon. The crowd began to assemble in the streets leading to Bridewell about four o'clock, and about five o'clock the Port Glasgow Volunteers arrived with five prisoners, and with drums and fifes playing. The crowd merely looked on, and the prisoners were safely lodged in Bridewell. When the Volunteers were returning to Port Glasgow, the mob began to insult them, and when off the Exchange, to pelt them with mud and stones. The volunteers fired two shots when at the Rue-end, which only exasperated them the more. The party were then obliged to fire in good earnest, and continued a running fire till they got out of Carsike. Nine persons have been taken to the hospital, of whom four are dead and two mortally wounded, the rest dangerously; five more are dead in the town. There are twenty in all killed and wounded. They tore down the iron railing of two houses, and armed with these in the evening a large party, preceded by a piper, set off to attack Port Glasgow; but when they got to Mr. Graham's house they were told that an express had been sent to Port Glasgow, to put the inhabitants on their guard, and the mob returned. They broke open the doors of the Bridewell, and set at liberty the radical prisoners, but none of the others. This morning all was quiet. The Revd Dr Scott, who left Greenock at three o'clock, says he saw a great many ill looking strangers in the town this morning, about two o'clock, a party of the 13th regiment and some of the Rifle Brigade set off for Greenock, in two steam boats. About twenty or thirty people have been apprehended here, among them are Long the Printer, Turner, the Tobacconist, Gavie, the Printer, and two or three hundred radicals have been taken up or absconded from Carron and Bridgetown, so that these places are well purged."

Our Relations with Spain.—The following Message was on Tuesday last transmitted to both houses of Congress, by the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States.

I communicate to Congress a correspondence which has taken place between the Secretary of State and the Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of His Catholic Majesty, since the message of the 27th March last, respecting the treaty which was concluded between the United States and Spain, on the 22d February, 1819.

After the failure of His Catholic Majesty for so long a time to ratify the treaty, it was expected that this Minister would have brought with him the ratification, or that he would have been authorised to give an order for the delivery of the territory ceded by it, to the United States. It appears, however, that the treaty is still unratified, and that the Minister has no authority to surrender the territory. The object of his mission has been, to make complaints, and to demand explanations, respecting an imputed hostility, on the part of citizens of the United States, against the subjects and dominions of Spain, and an unfriendly policy to their Government, and to obtain new stipulations, against these alleged injuries, as the condition on which the treaty should be ratified.

Unexpected as such complaints and such a demand, were, under existing circumstances, it was thought proper, without compromitting the government as to the course to be pursued, to meet them promptly, and to give the explanations that were desired, on every subject, with the utmost candor. The result has proved, what was sufficiently well known before, that the charge of a systematic hostility, being adopted and pursued by citizens of the United States, against the dominions and subjects of Spain, is utterly destitute of foundation, and that their Government, in all its branches, has maintained, with the utmost rigour, that neutrality, in the civil war between Spain and her colonies, which they were the first to declare. No force has been collected, nor incursions made, from within the United States, against the dominions of Spain; nor have any naval equipments been permitted, in favour of either party, against the other. Their citizens have been warned of the obligations incident to the neutral condition of their country; the public officers have been instructed; and severe examples have been made of some who violated them.

In regard to the stipulation proposed, as the condition of the ratification of the treaty, that the United States shall abandon the rights to recognize the Revolutionary colonies in South America, or to form other relations with them, when in their judgement it may be just and expedient so to do, it is manifestly so repugnant to the honor, and even to the independence, of the United States, that it has been impossible to discuss it. In making this proposal, it is perceived that his Catholic Majesty has entirely misconceived the principles on which this government has acted, in being a party to a negotiation so long protracted, for claims so well founded and reasonable, as he likewise has the sacrifices which the United States have made, comparatively, with Spain, in the treaty to which it is proposed to annex so extraordinary and improper a condition.

Had the Ministers of Spain offered an unqualified pledge that the treaty should be ratified by his sovereign, on being made acquainted with the explanations which had been given by this government, there would have been a strong motive for accepting and submitting it to the Senate for their advice and consent, rather than to resort to other measures for redress, however justifiable and proper. But he gives no such pledge. On the contrary, he declares explicitly that the refusal of this government to relinquish the right of judging and acting for itself here after, according to circumstances, in regard to the Spanish colonies—a right common to all nations—has rendered it impossible for him, under his instructions, to make such engagement. He thinks that his sovereign will be induced, by his communications, to ratify the treaty; but still he leaves him free either to adopt that measure, or to decline it. He admits that the other objections are essentially removed, and will not, in themselves, prevent the ratification, provided the difficulty on the third point is surmounted. The result, therefore, is that the treaty is declared to have no obligation whatever; that its ratification is made to depend, not on the considerations which led to its adoption, and the conditions which it contains, but on a new article, unconnected with it, respecting which a new negociation must be opened, of indefinite duration, and doubtful issue.

Under this view of the subject, the course to be pursued would appear to be direct and obvious, if the affairs of Spain had remained in the state in which they were when this Minister sailed. But it is known that an important change has since taken place in the government of that country, which cannot fail to be sensibly felt in its intercourse with other nations. The Minister of Spain has essentially declared his inability to act, in consequence of that change. With him, however, under his present powers, nothing could be done. The attitude of the United States must now be assumed, on full consideration of what is due to their rights, their interest, and honor, without regard to the powers or incidents of the late mission. We may, at pleasure, occupy the territory, which was intended and provided by the treaty for an indemnity for losses, so long since sustained by our citizens; but still nothing could be settled definitively, with-at a treaty between the two nations. Is this the time to make the pressure? If the United States were governed by views of ambition and aggrandizement, many strong reasons might be given in its favor. But they have no objects of that kind to accomplish; none which are not founded in justice and which can be injured by forbearance. Great hope is entertained that this change will promote the happiness of the Spanish nation. The good order, moderation, and humanity, which have characterized the movement, are the best guarantees of its success. The United States would not be justified in their own estimation, should they take any step to disturb its harmony. When the Spanish government is completely organized on the principles of this change, as it is expected it soon will be, there is just ground to presume that our differences with Spain will be speedily & satisfactorily settled. With these remarks, I submit it to the wisdom of Congress whether it will not still be advisable to postpone any decision on this subject until the next session.

Carthage Bridge.—This extraordinary bridge, which has attracted so much public curiosity and admiration, is destroyed. On Tuesday last the whole of its arch, which for sometime had been giving way, fell. It may be deemed a fortunate circumstance that no person was injured by its fall, as teams, &c. were frequently passing during the day. The loss to the enterprising proprietors is severe—and the public, while they deplore the individual calamity, will long remember with excited feelings of wonder of art. It is but a little more than a year since the bridge was completed since which time it has attracted no little share of public attention—it has been eagerly visited by every passing traveller, and it might soon have vied with the Niagara falls, as a place of fashionable resort for the "wonder-loving world." It is not possible to imagine a scene, while the bridge remained, more enchantingly grand and sublime, and though it has lost one of its greatest attractions, the wild and variegated beauties of nature will still continue to fascinate and to charm. But the bridge is gone! Sic transit gloria mundi.

The tea plant, of the hyson species, is said to be growing in considerable quantities, at a settlement of the Friends on Blue river, in Jackson county, Indiana.—Some seeds were found by one of the society a few years since, in a lot of the purchase at Louisville, were planted and succeeded so well, that some of the families in the neighborhood raise a sufficiency for their own consumption.

YORK, June 1, 1820.

To the Editor of the Upper Canada Gazette.

SIR,

It is not without some degree of reluctance, that I send you this communication for insertion in your paper, for I am sensible that by so doing, I render myself liable to the imputation of egotism. I hope, however, that such of your readers as shall take the trouble of perusing it, will perceive, that it is not without good cause I thus venture to intrude myself upon the public.

Many worthy persons, as I understand from several of my friends, intending me no doubt a special compliment, are graciously pleased to consider me the author of a certain dissertation on Dandyism, which appeared in the Upper Canada Gazette of Thursday last, signed "An Exquisite",—forthis mark of the esteem in which my abilities are held by the public, I feel peculiarly grateful; but am totally at a loss to conceive by what means I have acquired it. Flattering however as it is, in justice to the real author, I cannot conscientiously appropriate to myself, a degree of literary elat to which I am certainly not entitled. To him therefore, whoever he may be, I hereby restore his Olympic honors,—his understanding may possibly be capable of sustaining a weight of glory, which is rather too overwhelming for mine; for much do I fear that the applause and admiration which are the just meed of the talents and erudition displayed in that performance, would render me intolerably vain-glorious, and terminate perhaps in the deprivation of the small share of sense that I possess. My friends therefore, advise me to avoid a gratification likely to be attended with such pernicious consequences.

I cannot, Mr. Editor, on this occasion give up my post in your columns, without expressing my astonishment, that any person having the slightest acquaintance with me, could suppose me to be the author of that production—God knows however stupid I may be, I was never very solicitous to make myself ridiculous, I am unconscious of having done any thing, whereby to acquire the name of fop, macaroni, dilletante, or exquisite, which last term I humbly apprehend, signifies the summit of foppery or the preterition plusquam perfectum of Dandyism. Dandies are a species of beings lying altogether out of the line of my business; and I have never admired or despised, hated or loved them sufficiently, to excite within me the smallest wish to be either their ally or antagonist, still less to expose myself in their defence, by pirating Latin phrases from the ephemeral writers of the Niagara Argus, by writing absurdities that provoke no laughter and humour which excites nothing but melancholy.—To conclude, Sir, I am attached to a profession, in which the reputation of idiotism can be in no wise advantageous to my future prospects; and since I really am not, I do not wish to be thought the author of a performance, which throughout is unrivalled for its display of the most ineffable stupidity.

DANIEL SULLIVAN, Jun.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BURTONVILLE, Feb. 24 1820.

To the Secretary of the Montreal Agricultural Society.

SIR,

Having made some successful experiments in the use of the article of Gypsum, commonly called Plaister of Paris, I take the liberty of communicating to you the result of those experiments, in the full belief that a more general use of it as a manure, where the soil is adapted to it, would greatly contribute to the Agricultural interest in this district.

In the year 1817, soon after the frost was out of the ground, I sowed about 10 cwt. of Gypsum, principally on clover meadow, of a sandy soil, at the rate of a bout one bushel to the acre, much in the same manner as wheat is sown. The ground yielded me from ½ to ¾ more grass than in any former season. Finding the profits arising from this manure to be so great; in the year 1818, I sowed it in about the same proportion on several acres of spring wheat, where the soil was also light and sandy, and found the product to be equally more abundant, as on my clover meadow.

In the year 1819, I made a further & still more effectual experiment on about 20 acres of ground, on which were sown, wheat, rye, pease, oats, clover, corn & potatoes: the soil was light and sandy, and in every part very similar. In sowing the plaster, I left intervening spaces where I did not apply it, and found generally, the plastered ground produced from ½ to ¾ more than where it was not applied.

The ground, on which plaster had been sown the year preceding, produced this year also a crop equally great as the last, without any renewal of the plaster.

I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed) CHARLES AIMES.

Henry Griffin, Esq. Sec'y of the Montreal Agricultural Society.

CALDWELL'S MANOR, Feb. 24, 1820.

To the Secretary of the Montreal Agricultural Society.

SIR,

Having made some experiments during the year past in the use of Gypsum or Plaister of Paris as a manure, and fully believing that when its extraordinary qualities are more perfectly understood, its use will become more extensively adopted, I have the honor of stating to you, for the information of the Agricultural Society, the result of my experiments.—

On a field of 4 acres of peas, soon after they had come up, I sowed about three acres of them with Gypsum, at the rate of one bushel to the acre, leaving one acre of the best land without it. The soil was all the same, of a light loam. The quantity produced by the land thus plastered was nearly double to that produced by the land where it was not applied. On a field of three acres of oats, I sowed the same quantity after they had grown up about six inches, and looked well and unpromising, the effect was immediate, and in a few days they assumed a dark green and rank appearance, & it is my candid opinion that I reaped at least double the quantity which I should have realized without the Gypsum.

On two acres of wheat, I applied plaster, in the following manner: after soaking the wheat in the water, I rolled it in plaster till it became dry and then sowed it, and applied no more plaster to the land, but from this mode of applying it, I could not perceive that I derived any benefit, as the wheat was no better than I should have expected without it.

From these facts, I think that the following inference may justly be drawn:—

1st. Gypsum, when judiciously applied, promises to become one of the most rich and important articles of manure that can engage the attention of the farmer, and is attended with much less labour and expence in procuring and applying it.

2d. The Soil most suitable for Gypsum is a LIGHT, sandy, or loamy soil; although it does succeed in many cases both in the gravelly and clayey soil.

3d. As the effects it produces on vegetation are not so much owing to any enriching qualities in itself, as its property of attracting the nitrous particles from the atmosphere, its application should always be made on the surface of the ground, and not buried underneath. This is exemplified in the case of the pease, all of which were rolled in Plaster.

I enclose to you a Certificate corroborative of the above statement, and

Have the honor to be, &c.

WILLIAM BOWRON.

Extract of a letter from Charles Prescott, Esq President of King's County (Nova Scotia) agricultural Society, to the Secretary of the Society

"Deeming it a matter of importance in a climate like ours, where the winters are long and severe, to increase by every possible means the stock of food for cattle, I was induced to attempt the cultivation of the mangel wurtzel on a small scale, & beg to report upon for the information of our agricultural society the result of my experiment. I could procure only two ounces of seed, which I sowed the 12th of May, in drills at the distance of eighteen inches from each other, and the seed about five inches apart in the drills: the plants appeared not bout ten or twelve days, and grew well, notwithstanding the great drought of the season; the only attention part to them during the summer was to keep them clear of weeds; and frequently to break off their outside leaves, which I found to be excellent for milch cows; on the 28th of October, I had the roots taken up, and weighed. Their weight exclusive of the tops was 600 lbs. some of the largest roots weighed each from 13 to 14 lbs. but there was a great proportion of small ones, which I impute to their being too much crowded. The ground on which they grew measured 260 feet, which makes the produce nearly equal to 45 tons per acre. The soil in its natural state was extremely poor, consisting principally of a coarse loose sand; and all the preparation it had previously to receiving the seed, was three cart loads of black earth from an alder swamp, spread over the surface. From this trifling experiment, I am induced to believe that the mangel wurtzel may be cultivated with great success in this country; and that it would prove one of the most valuable vegetables for feeding neat cattle and swine during winter. I have not yet offered any to sheep, but I have doubt of their preferring it to turnips; as well as the other animals I have mentioned. I intend next year trying it on a much larger scale."

FINE ARTS.—We find in the London Literary Gazette, a notice of a new and splendid national picture, fifteen feet in height and eleven feet in width, representing the battle of Waterloo, at evening, at the most critical moment of that most brilliant of warlike victories. It was painted by order of the Directors of the British Institution, at the price of 500 guineas. The critic says, "the undertaking was an arduous one; and the artist (D. Jones,) has given proofs of judgement and talents equal to the greatness of his subject. The aerial perspective embraces an extent equal to anything we have seen under this quality of excellence; and the eye is carried over a vast space, occupied with every variety of action; while the nearer objects are detailed with a skill and interest which cannot fail of producing the strongest sensations. The hero of the day is rendered finely conspicuous by the smoke of artillery, which throws a breadth of light upon the part where he is stationed. The most distinguished British commanders are grouped, and introduced with much ability; and the several sorts of service are delineated with soldier's as well as with an artists tact. While we look at the many episodes introduced, all connected with the main story, we can almost believe that we are reading anecdotes of the memorable 18th of June. We think we can perceive the brave Caithness Corporal, who when asked if he was afraid, replied, "Afraid! why, I was in a'the battles o' the peninsule!" and having it explained that the question merely related to a fear of losing the day, said, "Na, na, I did na fear that; I was only afraid we sho'd be a' killed before we had time to won it."

SCIENTIFIC SAGACITY.

In the winter of 1790, as a number of boys were skating on a lake in a remote part of Yorkshire, the ice happened to break at a considerable distance from the bank, and one of them unfortunately fell in. No house was near, where repose or the assistance of more aged hands could be procured, and the boys were afraid to venture forward to save their struggling companion, from a natural dread that where the ice had given way, it might give way again, and involve more of them in jeopardy. In this alarming emergency, one of them, of more sagacity than the rest, suggested an expedient, which for its scientific conception, would have done honour to the boyhood of a Watt or an Archimedes. He might probably remember having seen, that while a plank placed perpendicularly on thin ice will burst through, the same plank, if laid horizontally along the ice, will be firmly borne, and offer even a safe footing; and applying with great ingenuity and presence of mind, the obvious principle of this difference to the danger before them, he proposed to his companions that they should lay themselves flat along the ice, in a line one behind another, and each push forward the boy before him, till they reached the hole where their playmate was still plunging, heroically volunteering to be himself the first in the chain. The plan was instantly adopted, & to the great joy of the boys, and their gallant leader, they succeeded in rescuing their companion from a watery grave, at a moment when, overcome by terror and exertion, he was unable to make another effort to save himself. Reader excuse a tear of gratitude. The name of the boy was WILLIAM JESSEN PERCY. [The Narrator.]

From the Connecticut Courant.

ON SEEDS.

THE friends of agriculture are pleased with any circumstance tending to its improvement: Among the most important to that relating to seeds. The difference between the best and poorest kinds of vegitables, whether quantity or quality be considered, would afford the farmer a handsome profit. The frequent interchange of seed and the selection of the best sorts, would soon gladden the face of nature. How many are there who live on land and pretend to be farmers, who have received through a long line of ancestors, and preserve as a precious legacy, the knurled, water-hearted potatoe, and think their labor well rewarded with 40 bushels to the acre; when the new crosses, of the English white, the yam or blue kinds, would produce 300 with equal ease, and of a substance almost as farinaceous as the bearded wheat. The same observation may also be extended to almost all our seed. With a soil adapted to the growth of every useful species of plant, and with the means of forming an immensity of compost & manure, our fields are meagre and often disgraceful to our county. A few individuals are now exerting themselves to produce a better state of things; either by reading, or travelling, or the attention of friends at a distance, they are introducing varieties of seeds, both to benefit the raising of stock, and to add to the number of garden vegetables. The principal hope of success in the introduction and propagation of seeds, must be from gardens: In them the soil is usually better and more sheltered than in open fields; receives more attention from the hoe, and will of course have a more ample chance to shew its full excellence in raising plants. The variety of the beet called MANGEL WURTZEL, which now often produces thirty tons of nutritious food to the acre, was first propagated in a rich soil, and there acquired the habit of large growth, in which, with proper treatment, it is still increasing; the same of the smooth parsnip, the large orange carrot, the drum-head cabbage, and many others which are now considered the best growths. In New-England we have gone on, generally, in the steps of our forefathers: The soils we used were standard and hereditary, and but few in number or variety; and at this time we are destitute of what the Europeans consider their most delicious viands.

The Broccoli is a variety of the cauliflower: The seeds should be sown in May, and will produce fine heads in October. It will continue, if planted in the cellar, to produce luxuriant heads in the winter. In the spring, if the stumps are planted, they will produce early and delicious sprouts.

Holcus bicolor, or niger.—This has been partially cultivated in this vicinity for two years past, and in the judgement of the best farmers may be made to produce 100 bushels to the acre; this is vulgarly called Chocolate Broom, and deserves particular notice as a substitute for chocolate, which it resembles surprisingly in colour and ALL its best qualities; it is likewise when ground a high-ly farinaceous food, superior to buckwheat for domestic purposes, and in promoting the growth of poultry and stock is not inferior to Indian meal.

Millet—Some notice of this has been taken in your Agricultural Almanac: Its luxuriant growth, and nutritive qualities, render it an object well deserving cultivation.

I might proceed to instance varieties of seeds but at present forbear; closing my remarks with one sentence in which I believe the most incredulous will concur.—"Those plants which will produce the greatest quantity of farinaceous food to the acre will afford the most profit to the farmer; as they will enable him to increase the number of his stock, the quantity of manure, and will promote the general improvement of his land."

LONDON, March 13.

French Agriculture.—The Moniteur contains a very long report by Decazes, which is published as having been approved of by the king, on the state of agriculture in France. It appears from this document that the fostering care of the government is steadily, and in most instances, successfully exercised in promoting every branch of cultivation adapted to the French soil and climate. One branch, that of the culture of the beet root, which it is supposed would have languished on the restoration of the sugar colonies, is stated to be gradually but firmly extending itself, and its encouragement is recommended to the government among other considerations, on the special ground on which it was originally introduced, that of rendering France independent of foreign supplies in a period of war. It is affirmed, that those who manufacture into sugar beet root, raised on their own farms, realize a profit of 25 per cent; and on the supposition that a quantity were raised adequate to supply the total consumption of sugar in France, it is said that the refuse of the beet root would of itself suffice to fatten annually 120,000 head of cattle. There are now about 20 beet root sugar refineries in full activity.

INTERESTING TO MARINERS.

At the Thames Police Office, London Capt. Charles M'Glashan, of the ship Margaret, from Tobago, appeared to a summons, under the Act of Parliament passed last session for the more speedy recovery of seaman's wages, to show cause why he should not pay Alexander Campbell, 9l. 19s. 6. the amount of the wages due to him on the voyage from London to Tobago and back again. On the part of the Captain, it was attempted to be shewn, that Campbell had on May 26th, while the ship lay in Tobago, deserted, and therefore forfeited his wages; in answer to which it was proved by six witnesses that the Captain had inflicted four sabre wounds on the body of this seaman, that he continued to beat him with it until the vi lence of the blows broke a piece off the point of the sabre of more than four inches in length: nor content with which, he ordered his mate to flog him, who accordingly gave him seven dozen lashes with a nine thread rat-tail line, folded four times, with a knot at each end; and that with the permission of the Captain he went on shore up to the Island, a distance of 25 miles, to make his complaint to the magistrate, from whom, however, he could neither obtain a hearing nor any redress; that rather than starve on the Island, he surrendered himself to the Captain, to return with him to this country; but who refused to receive him unless he signed a paper, whereby he promised to pay all expences the ship had been at on his account, and admitted that the charges, laid against him and the mate were unfounded and malicious, and acquitting them all of charges, which he refused to do; in consequence of which he offered to work his passage home in the Governor Haskett, which Capt Justus of that ship, accepted.

Mr. Longley, Mr. Kinbell, and Mr. Kinnaird, were all clearly of opinion, that a seaman quitting a vessel for the purpose of making a complaint to a magistrate, whether the complaint was in itself tenable or not, was not a desertion, and that under the peculiar circumstances of this case, taking into consideration the fact of this man's being obliged to sleep on the beach thirty-six nights, and existing day by day on the charity afforded him in the Island, and what he could find which the sea had washed on shore, the magistrates refused even to allow the captain £4. of which Capt Justus had made Campbell present for his services home on board his ship; and sentenced M'Glashan to pay the balance of his wages out and home, amounting to £9 19s. 6d. and also the costs of the application.

Two other charges, by two other seamen, under similar circumstances, against the same Captain, were decided in the same manner.

Mrs. Piozzi.—The celebrated Mrs. Piozzi, whose name, in connection with that of Dr. Johnson, is well known in the literary world gave a Concert, Ball, and Supper at Bath, on Thursday evening, for the celebration of her Eighty-th Birth day. Seven hundred cards of invitation were issued. Mrs. P. on this occasion actually opened the Ball by going down a country dance, with all the grace and neatness of a matron of 45!

Chinese method of mending China.—Take a piece of flint glass, beat it to a fine powder, and grind it well with the white of an egg. It joins China without rivetting, so that no art can break it in the same place. You are to observe, that the composition is to be ground extremely fine on a painter's stone.

A meeting of radicals in the townships of Weelton, Withnall, and Hoghton, about seven miles from Preston, had been broken up. They were surprised by the military in their act of exercising with pikes; 150 of the pikes were seized.

The king of England had taken an airing on horseback over the Downs to the Devil's Dyke, attended only by Sir B. Bloomfield and a single groom.

The British ship of war Vengeur had sailed from Leith Roads for Greenock, off which port she is to lay as a prison ship.

A special commission is to be immediately issued for the trial of those accused of treasonable conspiracies in Scotland.

A letter from Paris mentions that a new mode of posting up incendiary papers had been discovered in France by the detection of a man in the act. He carried a little boy in a box like the magic lantern; and while he leaned against the wall as if to rest himself, the little boy drew back a slider, pasted on the paper, and shut himself up again; the man taking occasion to walk off to another resting place.

Trials for High Treason.

FIRST DAY.

The Attorney General at half past one addressed the Jury. He recalled to their minds the painful duty they had to perform, and called upon them in the most solemn manner to discharge from their minds any impressions they had received before they came into Court. He then explained the Law of High Treason. He concluded his speech at a quarter past three. The prisoners were then brought into Court, and took their stations behind Thistlewood. Adams was examined, which occupied two hours. Another witness was about to be examined, but the Court being exhausted with the proceedings which had taken place, adjourned (about half past seven) to the next day.

SECOND DAY.

To preserve order and decorum, the Court Yard was ordered to be kept closed. The admission can only be obtained through the iron grates usually devoted to the accommodation of the Judges and officers of the Court.

The prisoners yesterday, watched with the most intense solicitude the evidence of Adams. And after it was concluded, Thistlewood turned round and spoke to his companions in a hurried and agitated tone. The whole of th prisoners were then taken back to their wards, where proper refreshments were provided for them. Part of the evidence of Adams was of so horrible a character as to excite a universal shudder throughout the audience. Adams is himself a man of ill-favoured countenance. His eyes are small and piercing, and he squints. When directed to approach the prisoners to identify them, he did so with the strongest marks of fear. Some of the prisoners fixed their eyes upon him with a malignant expression, but they did not evince any surprise at the details which he was giving to the Court. Davidson repeatedly laughed.

All letters sent to Thistlewood are opened by Mr. Brown, the Governor. Two were yesterday sent by post, directed to him, and delivered to him in Court. They were we understood, of a most extraordinary description, and Mr. Brown on reading their contents felt it his duty immediately to enclose them in a sheet of paper and forward them across the Court to Mr. Maule the Solicitor of the Treasury, who laid them before the Attorney General.

At a quarter before nine the Jury came into Court, and at ten minutes after nine the Jury were called over, when the prisoners were conducted in and placed at the bar. Thistlewood came first. His appearance was rather improved. The other prisoners took their stations behind Thistlewood in the back part of the dock.

Thistlewood applied, on his entering the Court, for a seat; and his request was immediately complied with.

Davidson made a similar request stating that he was rendered extremely unwell yesterday, by having had to stand many hours.

The Lord Chief Justice Abbot.—"They may bring one or two more chairs then, and you can relieve each other. The Court by no means wish you should stand there all day."

Other chairs were now placed in the dock.

The trial was then resumed.

Eleanor Walker, Mrs. Rogers, Joseph Hall, Thomas Smart, Henry Gibon, John Hector Morrison, Edward Simpson, James Aldous, Thomas Hiden, the Earl of Harrowby, and his Butler were examined as witnesses.

The following gentlemen were sworn in as Jurors:—Alexander Barclay, foreman, Thos. Goodchild, William Churchill, James Herbert, John Shuster, Samuel Granger, George Dickson, John Edward Shepherd, John Fowler, William Gibbs Roberts, John Dobson, William Dobson.

The pikes, guns, swords, &c. belonging to the Conspirators, were brought to the Old-Bailey in a cart.

EDINBURGH, April 10.

Saturday afternoon, about 8 o'clock, the following 15 prisoners, charged with the crimes of high treason and rebellion against the king, were lodged in the Tolbooth of this city, viz. J. Baird, Thos. M'Culloch, A. Hardie, J. Burr, Wm. Smith, B. Meir, A. Murchy, A. Johnston, A. White, D. Thompson, J. Wright, T. Pink, R. Gray, and J. Clelland. These men were taken prisoners after the action at Bonnybridge, by a small party of the 10th Hussars and Stirlingshire Yeomanry, on Wednesday, and were lodged in Sterling Castle along with three others, who will remain there, being so severely wounded that they could not be removed. The prisoners were put on board a steam boat at Stirling, under charge of a Macer of Justiciary, and a party of veterans. They were landed at Newhaven, where six carriages were waiting for them that conveyed them to the gaol.

LONDON, April 18.

We mentioned yesterday, upon the authority of intelligence from Glasgow, that a troop of Hussars, lord Elchio's Edinburgh troop & 20 of the Glasgow troop, with a piece of flying artillery, had set off at 11 o'clock on Thursday night for Kilmarnock. We now learn that this detachment proceeded to Kilmarnock, Galston and Newmill, apprehended 16 radicals, who were sent off prisoners to Ayr, under the escort of the Edinburgh troop. The inhabitants of the different towns shewed no disposition to resist the military.

It is said the person is in custody who stuck the treasonable placard on the 1st of April at Bar'om.

We are happy to learn tranquility is so completely restored at Hamilton and its neighborhood, that the different corps collected in that quarter have marched for their respective homes. The following is an extract of a letter from Glasgow, dated the 14th inst. It is written by a most respectable magistrate of that city, and contains information which may be relied upon:—

GLASGOW, April 14.

"I have been so much engaged about Radicals and other public matters not to have had time to think hardly of any thing else. I send you a paper which will shew you what is going on here. The plans of those people were most extensively laid for 20 miles round this, and nothing but want of confidence in each other and the terror that seized the better kind of them, when they came to the immediate prospect of butchering their neighbours and friends, prevented serious mischief. Many thousands of them however were out in arms on Wednesday evening the 5th of April, but not more than 4 for 500 ever got to one point; & in every quarter the disappointment as to numbers was so great as to dispirit them entirely; they counted on the people of England rising at the same time, also on 16 pieces of cannon from the Carron-works, in both of which they were disappointed. I can assure you from what I know confidentially of the matter, I look upon the situation of the manufacturing districts to be such as to give serious cause of alarm. Unless some rising occur in Lancashire, I think the storm will be over here at least for a time. Awful examples will soon be made here. How far that may break the spirit remains to be tried.—Our official and confidential accounts from Manchester to day are not so pleasing as we could wish I hope however, that all may continue quiet."

LONDON, April 19.

The Queen.—The report of the speedy arrival of the Queen is still more strongly prevalent, and is now combined with certain rumours of consequent changes in Administration. We are still incredulous as to the intention of her Majesty to revisit this country, and are yet less inclined to give credit to any rumours of Ministerial Changes. It is said that the Queen has appointed Mr. Brougham her Attorney General, and has invested him also with some other authority, which she is understood to have a right to delegate, but which has not been sufficiently explained. In the certainty of her Majesty's actual return, it is understood that some investigations will positively take place, which it was determined to avoid, unless her own act and deed might render them absolutely necessary on grounds of the utmost importance.—Sun.

NEGRO INSURRECTION

Letters from Aux Cayes mention, that President Boyer has completely quelled the insurrection occasioned by the revolt of Gen. Gomez. All his followers had been dislodged from the mountains, and the general himself had disappeared and it was supposed that he had drowned himself. President Boyer, in his proclamation, declares the insurrection at an end.—Although tranquility was restored, it was believed that a new war would soon break out between the rival Chiefs Boyer and Christophe. Boyer has an army of about 25,000 men, regularly officered and disciplined, who are eager to take the field. The finances of this Chief are also in a flourishing state.

From the National Advocate.

By the British packet Camden, which arrived on Saturday night, we have received from our correspondent, Halifax papers to the 22d April. The provincial legislature was closed at St. Johns, on the 29th of March. In his closing address, the governor intimates that in one item of the appropriation bill, the legislature has made "a lavish and improvident grant; and he concludes with a wish (which might with propriety be followed by many of our governors,) "that the period may not be very distant, when the members of the house of assembly of that province will consider it more consistent with the dignity of that honorable branch of the legislature and more agreeable to the practice of the mother country, to render their services without taxing their constituents largely for remuneration."

From the Philadelphia True American.

The following anecdotes of the capture of Washington are selected from Dr Ewell's account of that event. The Dr. is a gentleman of character and respectability, and his statement may be relied upon. It will do us good occasionally to take a peep at the fair side of the enemy's character. We have been feasted long enough with British perfidy and atrocity, dished up in as many savoury and enticing shapes as a calf's head. The surrounding Cockburn and the bloody red coats have had their full share of execration. But the war is now over—never, we pray heaven, to be renewed. Let us then have the magnanimity to be ashamed of our abuse and exaggerations—to meet the enemy with frankness and sincerity—and to perpetuate, by mutual offices of good will and charity, the alliance between us. We may perhaps find that treachery and England are not precisely synonimous—that the marauding Cockburn could display the feelings of a gentleman, and that even George the Fourth is not quite such a monster as a bon vivant.

While upon this subject we cannot avoid deprecating the spirit of hostility which some of our writers endeavour to keep up towards England. We admit that many of the remarks which issue from the English press are injurious and irritating. But one party or the other must begin to conciliate; and if we have come off from the contest as gloriously and triumphantly as many of our countrymen think, it is in the highest degree ungenerous to return the insults of our fallen foe. At all events, the malignity of a few worthless hirelings ought not to be regarded; for the good sense of the English public cannot long be biased by their misrepresentations. We think more nobly of the country of Washington and Hamilton, than to believe it stands in need of the waspish and irritated defences that have been made for it at home.

"In the mean time Gen. Ross came up, to whom I was introduced. He had just come in time to infer from what Admiral Cockburn said, that my house had been robbed. In a tone that will for ever endear him to me as a perfect gentleman, he observed that he was very sorry to hear that my house had been disturbed, and begged I would tell him which it was, and he would order a sentinel to guard it.

"This is my house, sir," said I—With an amiable embarrassment he replied, "Why, sir, this is the house we had pitched on for our head quarters."

I told him "I was glad of it, and regretted that he had not taken it earlier as my property would then have been protected."

He observed, "he could never think of trespassing on the repose of a private family, and would order his baggage out of my house immediately."

I earnestly begged he would still consider it as his head-quarters.

"Well, sir," said he, since you are so good as to insist on our staying at your house, I consent; but I will endeavour to give you as little trouble as possible any apartment under your roof will suffice me."

I asked him to accompany me, and I would show him a room. He assented, and I conducted him to my own bedchamber. He refused for some time to accept of it, and insisted that I should go and bring Mrs. Ewell home; observing that I might depend on it my family should be just as safe as they were the evening before, when the American army was here; "for, (continued he) I am myself a married man, have several sweet children, and venerate the sanctities of the conjugal and domestic relations."

On my observing to Gen. Ross, it was a great pity that the elegant library had been burnt with the capitol—he replied with much concern, "I lament most sincerely, that I was not apprised of the circumstance, for had I known it in time, the books would most certainly have been saved."

Neither do I suppose, General, said I, you would have burnt the President's house, had Mrs. Madison remained at home?

"No, sir," said he, "I make war neither against letters nor ladies; and I have heard so much in praise of Mrs. Madison, that I would rather protect than burn a house that sheltered such an excellent lady."

In praising Com. Barney for his behavior at the Battle of Bladensburg—"A brave officer, sir," said he, "He had but a handful of men with him, and he gave us a severe shock. I am sorry he was wounded; however I immediately gave him a parole, and I hope he will do well. Had half your army," continued he, "been composed of such men as the Commodore commanded, with the advantage you had in choosing your position, we should never have got to your city."

What evidenced more the magnanimity of this officer, he never uttered an expression in my presence against the President or any of the officers of government; but often expressed the deepest regret that war had taken place between two nations so nearly allied, both in consanguinity and interest. I can, moreover, truly say, I never saw the least beam of one cheerful smile on Gen. Ross all the time that he was in Washington. His countenance seemed constantly shrouded in the close shades of a thoughtful mind.

Four distinguished citizens of Alexandria, waited on Admiral Cockburn with terms of capitulation. He replied with characteristic brevity—"Gentlemen, I have nothing to say, till you first tell me, whether Captain Gordon is in sight of Alexandria or not."

They replied he was not.

"Well then, Gentlemen, I am ready to negociate with you; and now, all I have to say is, that we want provisions and must have them—But let me tell you for every article we take, you shall be allowed a fair price."

Scarcely had these gentlemen left the room, when one of the officers entered, and said, that the bank could not be burnt, without injuring private property.

"Well then," said he, sternly, "pull it down."

"Admiral" said I, "you do not wish to burn private property."—"No," said he, "I do not, but this is public property."

"No Sir," continued I, "the United States, have no bank here now—this is altogether property,"

"Are you certain of that?" said he—"Yes Sir, I pledge my honor it is private property." "Well then" said he to the officer, "let it alone."

As soon Barney lay on the battle ground badly wounded and helpless, and his men by his own order retreated from him, he beckoned to an English soldier to come to his assistance. The soldier instantly stepped up and rendered the required service with alacrity.—"You are a noble fellow" said the commodore, "and I am sorry I have not a purse for you: but here's my gold watch, you are welcome to it." "No Sir," replied the English man, "I can assist a brave man without being paid for it."

An American gentleman observed to admiral Cockburn that if Washington had been alive you would not have gotten to this city so easily:" "No Sir" replied the admiral, "if gen. Washington had been president, we should not have thought of coming here."

On the 25th in the afternoon, as the general and admiral were standing on the pavement at my door, a dirty looking woman, stained with blood, came running by, exclaiming that a British sailor had killed her.

Cockburn with every mark of indignation, instantly gave orders for the sailors to be mustered on parade, and that the man whom she designated as the perpetrator of the act, should be shot without delay.

On examining her wounds, it was found they were quite fleshy and slight. The admiral afterwards sent for me and said: "We were determined, Sir, to have the sailor shot, who stabbed that poor woman; but it gives us pleasure to learn that it is your opinion her wounds are not mortal. As she has, however, been wounded, and more than probably by our own men, we think it but just that she should be cured at our own expense. That part of the business we shall be obliged to confide to you, and for your trouble, we beg to you to accept of this trifle," and reached me out a parcel of gold, six doubloons. I excused myself from taking so large a fee. "Large, my good Sir," said he, "we are only mortified to think it is so small; but it is I assure you, all the specie we

FROM LOWER-CANADA.

Substance of a Discourse pronounced by the Revd. Mr. Lesaulnier, on the occasion of His Majesty's Accession.

"The circular letter which had been just read," said the Revd. Gentleman, "called the attention of his hearers to two important events, the death of our most gracious Sovereign George the Third, & the Accession to the throne of His August Son, the Prince of Wales, under the name of George the Fourth.

"The death of His Majesty George the Third could not but excite the most deep affliction. No Prince could be more entitled to the regret of his people, and more particularly to the regret of the people of this province—A thousand eloquent tongues would elsewhere vie with each other in celebrating his private and his public virtues, in publishing the splendour of his reign, in recapitulating the memorable events which had added new lustre to his crown & which of themselves were sufficient to render immortal the fame of many nations. "For us," said he, "let us for the present, satisfy ourselves with considering him as our benefactor; but let me particularly call your attention to the services which he has rendered our holy religion—who could, (continued he) particularize the many obligations conferred by his late Majesty? He had abolished the Penal code so formidable to the Catholics—He had favoured the public exercise of their Religion in the Three Kingdoms—He had founded in Ireland a Catholic College, in which the youth of that country, clinging to the religious priciples of their forefathers might cultivate the sciences, human and divine.

"At a time when a most disastrous Revolution had plunged in ruin one of the finest kingdoms in Europe, and cast down its altars, George the Third received with a munificence worthy of a King its prelates, and its priests—He treated them with distinction, he condescended to look upon them as his children and to speak of them in the endearing term of "Mon Clergé' Francois."

"He every where caused subscriptions to be opened for the relief of the indigent; considerable funds were raised, these funds however, although considerable, were at length exhausted; but his Royal Munificence was inexhaustible.—He obtained from his Parliament a Bill for their support at the public expence; he even gave up one of his Palaces for the accommodation of more than 500 of them; as if virtue in distress, and faith assailed by persecution seemed to have unlimited claims to his protection.

"He did more; moved at the misfortunes of their country, anxious to re-establish order and religion, he sent forth his armies and fleets, who fought with glory that impious power that had threatened the Universe with subversion. But this was only a part of his beneficence,—What had not his late Majesty done for the inhabitants of this Province in particular? From the very beginning of his reign he had never made any distinction between his old and his new subjects. At all times and upon all occasions, he had treated the latter as his children. Not satisfied with having given them their own laws, with having encouraged amongst them every branch of industry and of trade; he had expressly forbidden, that any thing should be done which might disastisfy or alarm with respect to their religion. Of that religion they had the most free exercise to the fullest extent. Their mode of worship was as solemn as if they were the subjects of a kingdom entirely Catholic. His late Majesty had even done more: when the number of their priests had become insufficient to minister to the spiritual wants of an encreasing population, he permitted their Bishop to invite others to assist them in the care of souls. The recollection of so many acts of beneficence could not but excite their sensibility. It could not but cause them to exclaim that they had lost their benefactor, and that in losing him, they had lost the most tender of Fathers.—Let us therefore, (said he,) give full vent to our grief. Nothing could be more just, their tears could not flow in too great abundance, but Providence had not left them without cause for consolation. The Good, the Benevolent GEORGE THE THIRD WAS NO MORE. They had, it was true, lost in him their common parent; but God had given them another in the person of His August son, the Prince of Wales, the heir of his sentiments as he was of his Crown.—An illustrious Scion from the August Stock of the House of Brunswick, which had already, in the persons of two of its Princes afforded protection to the Catholic Church, he will, no doubt maintain their Civil and Religious Rights, he would no doubt protect their Religion, which he knows to be the firmest support of Empires. Of his sentiments in this respect they had an infallible pledge in his conduct; during the sickness of his August Father, when he held the reins of Government as Regent of the United Kingdom, what had he not done for Religion, in that capacity? he had permitted Catholic Soldiers to go in a body to Catholic Churches to assist at the celebration of holy Mysteries, and receive pastoral instruction.

"His wisdom had succeeded in uniting all the Princes of Europe in support of the good cause, which was at the same time the cause of Religion. He caused his Holiness the Pope to be reinstated in all his rights, and caused his possessions to be restored to him. He had admitted to a solemn audience the Ambassador of his Holiness, and permitted him to appear at his Court, with all the insignia of his dignity as a Cardinal and Prince of the Church and a Legate of the Holy See. He had recognized the Bishop of this Diocese as the Catholic Bishop of Quebec, had appointed him a Member of the Legislative Council of these Provinces, and had granted to him a pension which enabled him to provide for the wants of the destitute, and to multiply establishments for the purposes of Education. So many favours already conferred, were certainly a prelude to what the People of this Province had reason to expect from him now that he was elevated to the Supreme Dignity—the people of this Province ought then to bless Providence for having given them in his mercy a Successor worthy of so great a King. They should render the most solemn thanks to the Lord by chaunting the Te Deum in all the affection of their hearts." They should at the same time put up their most fervent prayers to Heaven for the preservation of so good a King. They should beseech God to protect the August House of Brunswick, to give to George the Fourth a long and prosperous reign, and that he might not only thus occupy the throne, but that he might reign in the hearts of his people—they should endeav our to render themselves worthy of his benevolence by the fidelity their loyalty, their insurmountable courage, their readiness to spill their blood & to pour out life itself in the defence of his glory and his crown, to the end that after having served the King in this life as prescribed by their duty, they might receive in the other the recompence awarded by the King of Kings who liveth and reigneth for ever and ever."

QUEBEC, May. 19.

WRECKS.—A strong East wind has prevailed, with little intermission, for several days past. On Wednesday afternoon it was very violent; and we apprehend that more accounts of wrecks will reach us soon; too many have already come to hand.

On Wednesday evening, the Transport Ship Abeona, Capt. Pritchard, drove on the rocks at Wolfe's Cove, and is very much injured.

She waited for a fair wind to sail for England; having on board a number of soldiers of different corps, whose time of service has expired. The brig Minerva capt Morgan, (of which mention was made in our last) was from Liverpool bound to Montreal and had a valuable cargo of liquors and dry goods, consigned to Messrs. Forsyth, Richardson & Co.

The ship Alligator, Capt. Madick, from Waterford, wreck'd near Pislette, had on board 400 tons of salt, 15 casks glassware, 53 boxes fig blue, 10 do. black thread. There were 40 steerage and a few cabin passengers on board—several women and children among the former. After striking she filled so very fast, that the unfortunate crew and passengers had time to save nothing but what was on their backs; they were hurried and crowded into the boats, surrounded with the gloomy appearance of the contending elements, the weather so thick as to conceal the land.

The Alligator was put up at auction yesterday, and adjudged to Messrs. Rogerson, Hunter and Co. for £40. To day intelligence is received, that the salt has melted and the vessel is in a very safe position. £1000 has been refused for the bargain. [The latter part is Genius.]

YORK, June 8, 1820.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE UPPER CANADA GAZETTE.

SIR,

At the time of committing to writing, the few desultory remarks on the attributes and merits of a Dandy, and which were inserted in your paper of the 25th ult. I had not the most distant idea that allusion was so foreign to personality, could have elicited so much fulsome egotism, and insult-able nonsense, from any other than the confused brain and disordered intellect of the person, who in your last week's paper, honored the public with a new competitor for literary renown in the character of "Daniel Sullivan."

This stripling, flattered with the idea of being classed among the "wise men," for his trite animadversions on a Dandy, or prompted by the juvenile eclat attained by that joint and elaborate production which lately found its way into the Niagara Argus, replete with all the technical phraseology of an office, has imprudently exposed himself to public ridicule, by voluntarily displaying the very "small share of sense he possess s."

The signature in your paper, Mr. Editor, of this sage philosopher, this Apollo of the times, has laid him open to personal reply in an equa degree with the fictitious character of "Exquisite." To attempt any criticism whatever upon the loose and unconnected style, or the inconsistency and futility of argument displayed in the ne plus ultra of this son of St. Patrick, would occupy more time than I am inclined at present to bestow upon it, and a greater portion of your columns than you could conveniently allot for its insertion. Is it to be conceived that vanity could work his imagination to a belief that the "Public" should tax him with being the "real author of the "Exquisite!"

Could any person, but himself, for a moment suppose that he "inherited those "ornaments of mind and body in that "superlative degree," possessed the sentiment and merit of "An Exquisite," or even aimed at the envied appellation of a Dandy!!!

Who that has the most superficial acquaintance with the qualities and component parts of this Hibernian plant, or has accidentally encountered his eccentric figure and eccentric mien, could for one moment imagine, that this sprig of Erin had mind adequate to hate or love, admire or despise a Dandy!!"

His philosophic phiz, his fluency of speech, articulated with the true accent,—his legal research, united with the happy facility of committing to memory, and occasionally retailing every homely adage and backneied proverb of the day, have unfortunately tended to dupe the simplicity of several of his friends and many worthy persons" into a belief that Dan could write.!

The close retirement and constrained attendance of this Tyro, at the rendezvous of his daily drudgery, would lead one naturally to suppose that his heart and soul were wrapt up in the study and pursuit of that profession, "to which the imputation of ideotism can in no wise be advantageous;" but when pitiful productions similar to the one already thrust upon the "public," meet the reader's eye, a tissue of inconsistency and egotism from beginning to end, we may naturally infer that the student has forsook his parchment and his pounce for the attainment of a literary name.

True it is, that Dandies are a "species of beings lying altogether out of the line of his business;" strictly adhering to this declaration, let us hope that he will resume his quill, his spectacles, and three legg'd stool, and again return to Bacon, Littleton and Coke, so lately cast aside, to grace the dusty shelves with Tyro's assistant and quotation dictionaries.

I shall conclude therefore, Mr. Editor, with bidding our juvenile author a final farewel, and suffer me earnestly to recommend him to weigh well the counsel of his "friends" before he a second time ventures to intrude upon the public" with the idle incubrations of his addled pericranium, or attempt to vie in competition with AN EXQUISITE.

To Correspondents.—The article signed "a Brother Yeoman," we very much regret is too personal to appear in our columns. There is the same objection to "An Exquisite," but as we informed Mr S. at the time of leaving the communication alluded to, that such an attack would be the certain result of his impudent signature, that gentleman must take the consequence: if he thinks proper to fight a shadow, he shall have room for any remarks he wishes, but we cannot allow any thing further to appear from the other side, in any degree personal.

HALIFAX, MARCH 20th, 1820.

Sir,

I have observed with much pleasure the laudable zeal displayed by many gentlemen and farmers throughout the province, in the introduction of Lime as a manure. The application, however, of this important fossil, with regard to quantity and quality, must not altogether be left to chance, or to the fancy of the agriculturist; for if not guided by the directing hand of science, however zealous he may be to promote improvement, however anxious to meliorate the soil, and to reap advantage; without a proper knowledge of its properties and a thorough acquaintance, when and how it should be applied, his practical experiments will prove abortive, and his fondest hopes be baffled. Instead of reaping the benefit of meritorious exertions, and enjoying the satisfaction of success, he will experience disappointment, and the mortification of failure, which will lead him to false conclusions. Lime is to the soil—like mercury to the animal system—a powerful medicine. But whatever excellent or restorative qualities a medicine may possess, however generally known or beneficial its effects, it nevertheless requires to be administered by a person, who has a knowledge of the nature of the disease, and who is capable of determining, when such remedy, or what preparation of it, may prove efficacious. I shall state an example which may render the idea familiar. Mercury, as we all know, is in general use as a sovereign remedy for many and various diseases; but that by no means implies, that it is to be prescribed on all occasions, or exhibited always in the same state of preparation. Thus nitrate of mercury, or red precipitate, is highly acrid, corrosive and poisonous. It acts powerfully on the animal system, and is used in medicine externally as an escharotic. Another, the muriate or corrosive sublimate, is also acrid, and a most active mercurial preparation. It may however be administered internally in some cases as far as one-sixth of a grain. A third preparation, the mild muriate or calomel, is used internally with the greatest safety, when administered in the proper quantity by a skilful director. So it is with Lime, there are various preparations of it, possessing different properties, found in nature: these are most efficacious and necessary, when properly applied; as they are, on the contrary, destructive and ruinous when indiscriminately used, or employed without judgement. They affect with various effects on the vegetable system, and on the mineral substances contained in the soil. Thus pure quicklime is absolutely caustic and corrosive. The carbonate is comparatively mild; and chalk, marl and calcareous shell-sand and the sulphate or gypsum perfectly harmless. Each of these are most necessary and important agents to the scientific agriculturist in improving, restoring or meliorating the soil; and according as their different preparation are skilfully adopted and applied, as the nature of the soil may require, so will the success or failure of the operation of lime depend.

I shall state the following facts extracted from the highest authorities on the different qualities and effects of lime. They may serve as simple and general rules for the guidance of those, who may think it worth their while to put them into practice:—

"New burnt lime or quick-lime, whether in powder or dissolved in water, is injurious to plants, from its caustic corrosive and penetrating qualities; but these very qualities render its application of the most vital importance on new soils, containing hard roots, fibrous substances, peat, and inert vegetable or animal matters, of which, by its chemical agency, it promotes the decomposition, and thus supplies to the plant or crop the different gases and elements capable of contributing to its nourishment. When its action is favoured by humidity, it reduces the ligneous matter of plants to a black mould. It has a strong attraction to most fibrous matter; with which it combines, forming a compost partly soluble in water. By this operation matter, comparatively inert, is rendered nutritive; and hence on the new cleared lands of this country its application would be of the utmost consequence. On clay or stiff soils quick-lime is of the greatest utility by its mechanical operation. From its penetrating nature it lessens the adhesive qualities, and renders those soils more free and loose, more pervious to air and moisture, and to the roots of plants.

"In sandy soils it communicates a firmness from its tendency to combine with silex, and this corrects too great porosity and looseness. It also imparts, in some degree, to dry soils the power of retaining moisture necessary for the nourishment and vigorous growth of plants. It destroys insects and vermin, and in a small quantity may act as a stimulus to plants, by destroying indolent and superfluous fibres.

"It may decompose the saline and mineral substances which are contained in the soil, such as sulphuric acid it forms gypsum, and leaves the oxide of iron free, which is of advantage to the soil by attracting oxygen.—The oxide being in a small degree soluble in water, it may be absorbed by the roots of plants, as it is found in the ashes of wood after incineration."

That such decompositions & new arrangements do take place in nature may be illustrated by an example, which occurs every day in common life. Gypsum exists in solution in most rivers and spring water; its presence gives the quality of what is usually termed hardness, from the waters being incapable of forming a solution with soap. The sulphuric acid of the gypsum having a strong attraction for the alkali of the soap, leaves the lime and unites with the soap. The oil or fat of the soap being thus left free forms an imperfect evaporating compound with the lime, which compound being insoluble in water, floats about or sticks to the fingers in white particles.

Quicklime should not be applied to soils containing "soluble vegetable manure which it tends to decompose, nor even with animal manures, as it destroys their efficacy by combining and forming compounds with the oils, acids and other elements disengaged during putrefaction, or by giving them new arrangements.

It renders extractive matter insoluble. It neutralizes the "powers of albumen and does prevents both these nutritive substances which are retained in the water of the soil from being absorbed by the roots of plants."

"The earthy matter of the soil consists of several ingredients—but the earths, silex and argil, constitute principally the bases of every soil, the qualities of which vary as either predominates. There is also a portion of lime or calcareous matter, a little magnesia, and frequently oxide of iron. Now if there is a great deficiency of one of the three first-mentioned, the soil will be esteemed bad—to remedy which the proper quantity "must be supplied by art, and by the labour of the industrious husbandman. Suppose it is found that there is a deficiency of calcareous matter, in this case mild lime or chalk and marls should be applied; and their efficacy will be proportioned to the deficiency of calcareous matter.—They do not act on the vegetable system, and they may prevent the too rapid decomposing of substances already dissolved."

From these facts which have been fully established by numerous experiments, inferences may be drawn, and determinations made, highly interesting to the agriculturist; and most particularly to those of this province—where from the greatest part of the land being in general new, or only about to be brought under cultivation, it may receive at once the proper dressing, and be moulded to the finest and richest texture. First impressions are reckoned permanent. By giving common attention to this subject, advantage may be taken of the different qualities, to adapt them to the various and diversified nature of soils, so as to produce the most efficacious effects—Whereas by negligence or contrary practice, the most ruinous consequences will follow, as, I trust, I shall presently show.

From the qualities of pure quicklime, as above stated, we may conclude that it is most useful and absolutely necessary to the preparation of all new cleared lands in this country, where the soil abounds with the remains of so much inert vegetable matter. For this purpose after the ground is broken and ready to receive it, it should be brought with as little delay as possible from the kiln, & spread in sufficient quantity over the land, and afterwards gently harrowed in. If left exposed on the surface, it would again attract carbonic acid from the atmosphere, become mild, and thus by loosening its corrosive power of acting on vegetable matter, would defeat the purpose for which it was intended, viz.—to decompose those substances and to afford the proper food for plants.

The effects of this application may be beneficial for about six years. After that period it ought to be renewed. However, let the farmer recollect that continued, or too often repeated applications on the same soil will overdo the matter, and be attended with as pernicious and deleterious effects, as if an ignorant practitioner of medicine was to prescribe the continuation of an excellent remedy after the recovery of his patient. I speak from experience. Some years ago, when the present admirable system of husbandry was introduced, and almost instantly adopted by all ranks and classes in the north of Scotland, many persons, by way of setting a most praise-worthy example, determined to lay on their grounds a certain quantity of lime every year. This succeeded beyond their utmost expectations for a few years. They afterwards, however, began to find out that their zeal had carried them too far; and that in many instances their lands turned unproductive from the excess of calcareous matter so that they began to doubt the efficacy of lime as a permanent manure.—I have heard some of the old people compare it to whiskey, which exhilarates and gives a flow of spirits for a time, but afterwards leaves the person depressed and exhausted; so they said it was with lime on the soil! But this was a hasty and false conclusion The evil proceeded from their want of knowledge of its properties, and of the nature of the soil which required it. Experience has now taught these, and they are fully sensible of its useful and powerful effects. The advantage of applying it to clay and stiff soils, and, in some cases, to sandy ones, have been above stated. Its power of attracting moisture (in some situations and exposures,) is of the greatest consequence to the farmer; and that of destroying insects is not the least valuable of its properties.

Lime spread on grass, would certainly be injurious for the first year; but it may prove of advantage when a field has laid for a long time in grass, without being broken up. A sufficient quantity of it may be washed in by the rain so as to be absorbed by the roots. It therefore might be of service, if tried on the meadow or marsh lands in this country, but by no means to be too often repeated.

Quicklime from its acting rapidly in decomposing vegetable and animal matter should not be applied to land, either immediately before, or immediately after it has been manured.—It would attract the oils, acids and gases which escape during putrefaction, & by forming in soluble compounds with their elements, it would prevent their being absorbed by the earth or retained in the water, so as to be assimilated and to form nutritive food for young crops. In old ground, which the farmer may judge to stand in need of lime, I think it would be advisable to put the lime on during a summer fallow: but by no means to apply the stable manure until the ground is to be dressed for the reception of the grain. It must appear evident that the old practice of mixing lime up in the dunghill is pernicious to the manure. The only instance where it is admissible, is in a compost of peat moss, common earth, and stable dung, then indeed pure quicklime is most necessary and beneficial by acting upon and decomposing the inert carbonaceous and vegetable matter of the peat.

Should the farmer find by experiment, that there is a deficiency of calcareous matter in the soil, or that it is too stiff and adhesive, the chalks and marls may be applied with the greatest safety. If they are not to be had, let him take common lime-stone, as it comes from the quarry, without its being burned, let it be broken into small chips or pounded, if possible, and then strewed on the land. In the course of time this will be reduced by the action of air and moisture, and will become incorporated with the soil. The effects of it are mild, and from its being combined with carbonic acid its caustic qualities are neutralized.

I should most earnestly recommend to those farmers who are settled near the sea coast, (where there may be an open beach) to examine the land carefully. If it is found principally to consist of calcareous shells, it will prove an inexhaustible treasure when applied in proper quantities to clay and loam soils. Such a bank of calcareous shell sand was discovered some years ago, on the east coast of Scotland, betwixt Fheshead and Frasterburgh, which has proved of infinite advantage to that part of the country, and is now carried at considerable expense far into the interior.

Should you consider that these facts and observations would tend to the further elucidation of a subject, on which you yourself have written so much, they are very much at your disposal. I fear that I have been too prolix, that there are many repetitions, but the nature of the subject did not admit of my being concise and clear at the same time.

Sir, I remain yours sincerely, and REMARKS.

This letter, which treats of Lime, deserves richly to be presented to the public eye; because the writer has been at great pains to gather and condense the chemical doctrines, which illustrate the agency of this fossil, and he seems likewise versant in its practical application. This is by far the most philosophical essay which has been sent me during the whole course of my labours, and I regret, that the author has withheld his name, and thus prevented the public from thanking him for the variety, extent, and fulness of his explanation.

The late discoveries in chemistry have naturally served to dispel those fears, which seem to haunt his imagination, as to the danger of the injudicious use of lime, for there is nothing to be apprehended by the farmer, from any possible state or combination of calcareous earth, provided he guard against a too liberal profusion of it. His application requires skill, but skill of a very simple kind; and by no means akin to that profound knowledge which must guide the physician, in consulting the materia medica, and in giving directions for preparing & compounding his medicines. Quicklime thinks, is injurious to plants from its caustic quality; and this is true, as far as its power of decomposition is concerned; yet the practice of the first agriculturists, and the inferences deducible from a long experience, justify the use of limein that state preferably to any other, on all soils, and in every imaginable situation.—The calcination and the slaking of lime are the easiest, the cheapest, and the most effectual methods of bringing it into a finely divided powder, to the end of incorporating it minutely with the soil, on which much of its efficacy depends; and no serious detriment will result, although it should come in contact with soluble matter arising from the putrefaction of either vegetable or animal manures. Its causticity is very soon neutralized by its wonderful powers of combining with carbonic acid in the soil, or of attracting it from the atmosphere; by either of which means it returns quickly to its mild state. Indeed it is now pretty firmly established, that its decomposing effects, in the first moments of its action, are among the most useful of its properties, even on rich lands. It seizes on all putrescible matter within the sphere of its agency, assists in dissolving it, and thus prepares the feast on which the expected crop is to revel. Nevertheless, I subscribe most cordially to his prescriptions of using quicklime in preference to the carbonate on our newly cleared lands, and during the operation of a summer-fallow.

The value of lime as a manure may be summed up in a few words. It is one of the four primitive earths which enter into the composition of soils; and is necessary for their proper texture. It constitutes also a very important ingredient in the organs of most plants, and is generally found in them in a chemical analysis. In its caustic state, that is, when it is newly burned and slaked, it has the capacity of decomposing vegetable matter, of acting powerfully on all inert substances, and changing them into proper aliment for the crop.

But even after it has gained its carbonic acid, and passed into a mild state, its usefulness is neither destroyed nor materially diminished; for as a carbonate, it performs high and essential functions in the vegetable economy. With safety it may be spread on the surface of grass lands, exposed there to the rains, snows, and frost of winter, and if ploughed down in the spring, will exert a beneficial influence, and visibly promote the productiveness of the soil. The grand object with the farmer should be, to mix it intimately with the mould, and keep it as near the top as possible; for it has a native tendency to sink downwards. The quantity applied to a statute acre in Great Britain has raised from 200 to 400 bushels on stiff clay, while light lands have received from 100 to 250. In Nova-Scotia, from the happy conjuncture of its soil, the latter quantities will in general be sufficient: and it would be dangerous to venture on the greater, till we become somewhat better acquainted with it use. No person can credit the exuberant fertility it imparts, but those who have witnessed its extraordinary powers; and in point of permanency and duration it possess a decisive advantage over the putrescent manures. The verdure of deep green, the freshness it communicates to the wastes, which have been reclaimed by its agency, have been observable at the distance of twenty years: and after once a proper dose has been given, it is fruitless to repeat it but at a long interval.

The same observations may justly be extended to chalk, marl, pounded limestone, shell marl, or sea sand——all of which are combinations of calcareous earth with carbonic acid, blended with the impurities afforded by accidental position, or by the ingredients of the adjoining strata.

On the whole, there is just ground to conclude that, in the use of lime, there exists no quackery, nor even very superior skill.—Every farmer may practice it without hazard, for he has only to avoid an excessive quantity, and he can hardly err from ignorance in the following of a few other plain rules.

CAST IRON CHURCHES.

An artist of eminence, but in a higher branch of the arts, has lately offered some very admirable hints to the members of the society for the superintending the erection of the New Churches, recommending the substitution of Iron for the more expensive ornamental works in stone, particularly in the gothic style, & which style he considers to be the best suited to every building dedicated to devotional purposes. His own words will best explain his recommendation

"What our forefathers were enabled to do, from the cheapness of labor in their day, we have the power of executing at a still more moderate rate, from the improved state of our manufactories. The expensive manual labor which has hitherto been bestowed on stone, may now be executed, at a comparatively trifling charge in iron. There is scarcely an ornament or necessary part but what may be cast at our iron foundaries, even to the highest & rought filligree Gothic; and as nearly all the tracery and ornaments in this style are produced by a repetition of a few simple parts, the plan would be found perfectly practicable. As lightness and elegance are the leading and most desirable characters in this class of buildings, these might, under the direction of able artists, be carried to a higher degree of perfection, than they ever were capable of with so fragile and destructible material as stone. The light groups of Gothic columns, the springs for arches and grained roofs, &c. might be constructed so as to unite the most perfect lightness of character with strength & durability.

"Churches erected with this material would be rendered perfectly secure from fire; and the iron work and ornaments being coated over with an anticorrosive of a stone colour would be rendered indestructible for ages; the work would always remain sharp and perfect, as it would not like stone, be subject to the corrosion of the atmosphere, or the dilapidation so constantly produced by the carelessness of workmen. I would beg leave to suggest, that the tower and spires of these buildings might be constructed in the plainest and most simple manner, leaving all the ornamental part to be cast at the foundary; and it will found, on examination, that the most richly ornamented Gothic towers extant might be imitated with the greatest precision, and at a very moderate rate. By the adoption of such a plan, a stimulus would be given to our ironworks, which would be a means of carrying them to the highest pitch of excellence and utility. As no ornamental work of this kind, from its expensiveness is likely to be undertaken in stone, the workmen in that department would not suffer loss or injury by introduction of it. A considerable saving in timber might also be made by a substitution of iron."—London paper.

The Evening Post of Thursday, mentions a pear tree now in full bloom, standing in the third avenue, at the intersection of Thirteenth street, which was brought from Holland, and planted in the year 1640. The Post adds, "this is probably the oldest fruit tree in America. There are two apple trees standing in the garden of the venerable Wylles family, at Hartford, which were transplanted from England to Connecticut in the year 1743-4. We last fall ate fruit from both of these trees. They bear evident marks of extreme age, and are probably the oldest fruit trees in America."—Com. Adv.

Two old Jews of Frankfort retired from commerce, very avaricious, & both possessed of an equal fortune, mutually bequeathed their properties to the survivor, each thinking that he would thus double his wealth, at a time when neither wanted an increase. One fell ill, and as his avarice persisted in refusing all medical assistance, and was already at death's door. His colleague, sitting at his bed foot, concealing his joy under a feigned grief awaited his last sigh. The dying man recovering his senses, saw upon his countenance a smile of cupidity. The idea that if he died he should lose his wealth revived him, and he exclaimed——"Three physicians, and 20,000 franks if they save me." The doctor arrived, and his vows were accomplished.—The second, in despair at his sudden disappointment fell ill in his turn, and died of vexation. The other, still convalescent, could not support his joy at his sudden increase of wealth, and died also. The fortune, amounting to 300,000 francs a year, would have remained without an owner, if a nephew of the deceased last had not unexpectedly appeared and claimed it.

Messrs. MANNING & TRUMBULL—

I have just received my plaster from the mill. I remarked to the man who brought it, that it was too coarse. He replied that all our farmers preferred it coarse, and assigned this reason—that in grinding it fine, it becomes so heated as to injure it—I delay not a moment in expostulating against a doctrine so unphilosophical, and so injurious to the interests of agriculture. Every farmer knows that grain, as food for animals cannot be made too fine. Upon the same principle, plaster, which is food for vegetables, affords the most nutriment when reduced to the finest powder.—Heat so far from injuring the properties of plaster, is the best agent for bringing them into action. This theory is the result of repeated experiment——Calcined plaster which is produced by a process of intense heat, is found much more invigorating, and more permanently beneficial, than plaster in its simple state.

While on this subject, I will suggest for consideration, whether our farmers, generally spread a sufficient quantity of plaster particularly on their grass-land. Mr. Silas Gates, a well-known farmer in Marlborough, informed me that he directed one of the men to spread, on a certain piece of mowing land, the usual quantity, (if I mistake not, at the rate of one bushel to the acre.) He had gone over about half the ground, at this rate, when other calls prevented his finishing it. Soon after the business of plastering was consigned to another, who, not knowing that any had been spread, went over the ground, giving one half a double portion. The result was nearly a double portion of hay, which continued until the surface was changed by a rotation of crops.

J. C. SHERBROOKE.

WHEREAS, by an Act of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the forty third year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for extending the jurisdiction of the Courts of Justice in the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, "to the trial and punishment of persons "guilty of crimes and offences within "certain parts of North America, adjoining to the said Provinces," it is amongst other things enacted, "That all offences "committed within any of the Indian Territories, or parts of America, not within the limits of either of the said Provinces, "or of any Civil Government of the United States of America, shall be and "be deemed to be offences of the same "nature, and shall be tried in the same "manner, and be subject to the same "punishment, as if the same had been "committed within the said Provinces of "Lower or Upper Canada."

And whereas by the said Act it is also enacted, "That it shall be lawful for the "Governor, or Lieutenant Governor, or "person administering the Government "for the time being, of the Province of "Lower Canada, by Commission under "his Hand and Seal, to authorize "and empower any person or persons, "wheresoever resident or being at the "time, to act as Civil Magistrates and "Justices of the Peace for any of the Indian Territories, or parts of America, "not within the limits of either of the "said Provinces or any Civil Government of the United States of America, "as well as within the limits of either of "the said Provinces, either upon information taken or given within the said "Provinces of Lower or Upper Canada, "or out of the said Provinces in any part "of the Indian Territories or parts of America aforesaid, for the purpose only "of hearing crimes and offences, and "committing any person or persons, guilty of any crime or offence, to safe custody, in order to his or their being conveyed to the said Province of Lower Canada, to be dealt with according to Law;" and "That it shall be lawful for any person or persons whatever, "to apprehend and take before any persons so commissioned as aforesaid, or "to apprehend and convey, or cause "to be safely conveyed with all possible "speed, to the Province of Lower Canada, any person or persons guilty of any "crime or offence, there to be delivered "in safe custody, for the purpose of "being dealt with according to Law."

And whereas by the said Act it is also further enacted, "That every such offender may and shall be prosecuted and "tried in His Majesty's Courts of the "Province of Lower Canada, in which "crimes and offences of the like nature "are usually tried, and where the same "would have been tried if such crime or "offence had been committed within the "limits of the Province where the same "shall be tried under the said Act; That "every offender tried and convicted under the said Act, shall be liable and "subject to such punishment, for such "crime or offence, in the same manner, "in every respect, as if such crime or "offence had been really committed within the jurisdiction of such Court; and "to proceed also in the trial of any person being a subject of His Majesty, who "shall be charged with any offence, notwithstanding such offence shall appear "to have been committed within the limits of any Colony, Settlement or Territory, belonging to any European "State."

And whereas divers breaches of the peace, and acts of force and violence, have lately been committed within the said Indian Territories and parts of America, mentioned and described in the said Act of Parliament, which have arisen from contentious between certain Merchants, carrying on trade and commerce in the said Indian Territories, under the names of the Hudson's Bay Company, and North West Company, respectively, and other persons, their servants, agents, or adherents, of whom some have entered into and seized, and occupied by force, and with strong hand, lands or possessions, therein taking, and by force retaining, divers goods, wares, merchandize, and other property, and obstructing the passage of navigable rivers, and other natural passes of the country; and others have met together in unlawful assemblies, formed divers conspiracies and confederacies, committed murders, riots, routs and affrays, and appeared, gone and ridden in companies, in military array, with armed force, and have rescued themselves and others from lawful arrest and custody.

We do, therefore, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, publish this Proclamation, hereby calling upon the said Merchants, so as aforesaid carrying on trade and commerce in the said Indian Territories, under the names of the Hudson's Bay Company, and the North West Company, respectively, and upon each and every of them, and upon all other persons, their servants, agents or adherents, and each and every of them, to desist from every hostile aggression or attack whatsoever; And in order to prevent the further employment of an unauthorised military force, we do hereby require all persons who have been heretofore engaged in His Majesty's service, as Officers or Soldiers, and as such have enlisted and engaged in the service of the said Hudson's Bay Company, or North West Company, or either of them, or of any of their servants, agents, or adherents, to leave the service in which they may be so engaged, within twenty-four hours after their knowledge of this Proclamation, under penalty of incurring our most severe displeasure, & forfeiting every privilege to which their former employment in His Majesty's service would otherwise have entitled them.

And We do, under similar penalties, hereby require of all and every person and persons whomsoever, whom it doth or shall, or may in any wise concern, the restitution of all Forts, Buildings, or Trading Stations, with the property which they contain, which may have been seized or taken possession of, by either party, to the party who originally established or constructed the same, and were possessed thereof previous to the recent disputes between the aforesaid Companies.

And we do hereby require in like manner, of all and every person and persons whomsoever, whom it doth, or shall, or may in any wise concern, the removal of any blockade or impediment, by which any party, person or persons may have attempted to prevent, or interrupt the free passage of Traders, or others of His Majesty's subjects, or of the natives of the said Indian Territories, with their merchandize, furs, provisions and other effects throughout the Lakes, Rivers, Roads, and everyother usual route or communication heretofore used for the purposes of the Fur trade, in the interior of North America; and full and free permission for all persons to pursue their usual accustomed trade, without hindrance or molestation, hereby declaring, that nothing done in consequence of this Proclamation, shall in any degree be considered to affect the rights which may ultimately be adjudged to belong to either or any party, upon a full consideration of all the circumstances of their several claims.

And whereas, for the purpose of restraining all offences in the said Indian Territories, and bringing to condign punishment the perpetrators of all offences there committed, His Excellency SIR JOHN COAPE SHERBROOKE, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, His Majesty's Captain General and Governor in Chief in and over the Province of Lower and Upper Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and their several dependencies, Lieutenant General and Commander of all His Majesty's Forces in the said Provinces, &c. &c. &c. by and with the advice of His Majesty's Executive Council of and for the said Province of Lower Canada, have nominated, constituted, and authorized the Honourable WILLIAM BACHELER COLTMAN, one of the Members of the said Council, a Lieutenant Colonel in His Majesty's Indian Department, and one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the Western District of the said Province of Upper Canada; and JOHN FLETCHER, Esquire, Barrister at Law, one of the principal Police Magistrates and Chairman of His Majesty's Court of Quarter Session for the District of Quebec, a Major in the said Indian Department, and one of His Majesty's Justices of the Peace for the said Western District of Upper Canada, to act as Civil Magistrates and Justices of the Peace for the said Indian Territories or parts of America aforesaid, as well without as within the said Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, under and by virtue of the said Act, and also His Majesty's Special Commissioners for inquiring into and investigating all offences committed in the said Indian Territories and the circumstances attending the same, with power and authority for such purposes.

And whereas the said William Bacheler Coltman, and John Fletcher, are immediately about to proceed to the said Indian Territories, in execution of the trust so reposed in them:

We do therefore hereby strictly charge and command, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, all Sheriffs, Bailiffs, Constables and other Officers of the Peace, and all others His Majesty's Officers, Servants and Subjects, Civil and Military, generally, in their several and respective stations, to make diligent inquiry and search to discover and apprehend all persons who have been or shall be guilty of any such crimes or offences as aforesaid, or any other crimes or offences whatsoever, within the Indian Territories or parts of America, in the said Act mentioned and described, whether without or within the said Provinces of Lower or Upper Canada, and to cause them to be carried before the said William Bacheler Coltman and John Fletcher, or one of them, or such other Magistrates as may hereafter be appointed for the like purposes, or otherwise be invested with competent jurisdiction in that behalf, to be dealt with according to Law, and by all lawful ways and means whatsoever, to repress and discourage all such crimes and offences, requiring and directing them and each of them as well within the said Indian Territories or parts of America, as elsewhere, to be aiding and assisting to the said William Bacheler Coltman and John Fletcher in the execution of the duties wherewith they are charged as such Magistrates and Special Commissioners as aforesaid, in all their endeavours for the repression and discouragement of all such crimes and offences, wheresoever or by whomsoever perpetrated or committed; for the detection and apprehension of all such persons as have been or hereafter shall be concerned or implicated in the perpetration thereof, and for the maintenance and preservation of the Peace and of the Law.

In faith and testimony whereof, We, by our express command, in the name & on the behalf of His Majesty, have caused the Great Seal of the Province of Lower Canada to be hereunto affixed. Witness our trusty and well beloved SIR JOHN COAPE SHERBROOKE, Knight Grand Cross of the most Honourable Military Order of the Bath, Captain General and Governor in Chief of the said Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, Lieutenant General and Commander of all His Majesty's Forces in the said Provinces, &c. &c. at the Castle of St. Lewis, in the City of Quebec, in the said Province of Lower Canada, this third day of May, in the year of our Lord Christ, one thousand eig ht hundred and seventeen, and in the fifty-seveuth year of His Majesty's Reign.

FROM EUROPE.

REVOLUTIONARY MOVEMENTS IN YORKSHIRE.

[From the West Riding Chronicle, of April 14.]

"From the time of our last publication, the town of Huddersfield had remained tolerably tranquil, until Thursday last, when rumours of another rising on the following morning, excited considerable alarm in the minds of the inhabitants, whose experience had taught them that such rumours were not to be disregarded. The Magistrates, as usual, were on the alert; and every precaution was taken for securing the town against the impending danger. Early in the morning of Wednesday, mounted constables were detached in various directions, and particularly towards Grange-moor, on the Wakefield road, where it was rumoured the insurgents would concentrate their forces previously to a general attack on Huddersfield. Two gentlemen, who were sent towards Thornhill at a very early hour in the morning, passed through a number of armed men, moving in the direction of Grange-moor; and two other gentlemen, who were sent to reconnoitre the latter place, about five o'clock, saw a very strong body, supposed to amount to 800 or 1000, drawn up in close column on the Moor. The glitter of their pikes and other weapons, in the grey dawn of the morning, gave them a very terrific and imposing effect. One of the gentlemen was directed to proceed to this place to communicate with the authorities here, but as soon as he was perceived by the insurgents, a number of them, amongst whom were two or three on horseback, pre-occupied the road, and compelled him to return with his companion. Between five and six o'clock, preparations were made in Huddersfield, for enabling the military to resist the overwhelming bodies which it was conjectured might be assembled on this atrocious enterprise. A barricade of waggons and carts was formed at the end of every street leading to the market place; and all the military in the town were posted within the inner area. Shortly afterwards a party of 10 yeomanry and 16 dragoons marched towards Grange-moor, under the command of Major De Bartie, of the 80th regiment. On their arrival at the moor, about eight o'clock, the deluded wretches who were assembled there, immediately threw away their arms and dispersed in all directions. A pursuit immediately commenced, and twelve of the insurgents (several of them from the neighbourhood of Barnsley) were apprehended. As many of them had been observed to abandon their arms, the Moor was search d, and the following articles found upon it:—A green flag, inscribed, 'He that sends a man to that he die, shall be sure purpose death,' ten pikes, from eight to nine feet long, with head on, three hay forks, three single barrelled guns: twenty one pike-staves, about eight feet long; and twenty seven from four to six feet, all of which bore marks of having heads on, but they had been unscrewed or broken off, eight pike heads of various shapes; a quantity of blank cartridges and loose bullets; several knapsacks, &c. Most of the pike-staves are made of young trees, and many of them have pieces of tin or sheet iron nailed near the head, to preserve them from being cut by sabres. The heads appear to be chiefly of the same manufacture, and some of them are made out of files hammered flat.

"When these arms were collected, the prisoners were escorted to Huddersfield by the party who had captured them, and, after a short examination, were placed in strict confinement, together with four others who were apprehended during the day; some of them for insulting the soldiers, and uttering inflammatory language to the streets.

"We have since learnt with pleasure the apprehension of the ringleader, Carbett, the a serjeant in the 84th foot, which, we hope, will be the prelude to further discoveries. A man named Schofield has been apprehended, with several others, whose names we have not learnt. A number of pikes, guns, and other weapons have been found in the neighbourhood of Grange-moor, and on the road between that place and Barnsley. A white flag was also found near Grange-moor yesterday; it has a black border, is trimmed with black crape and fringe, and bears the following inflammatory motto:—unprincipled —but as they will hardly be suspected of these fulsome, it only remains that they must see through & despise the insidious manœuvres of the Ex-Secretary of Bonaparte's Mother.

"Our yesterday morning's statement of the very wide diffusion of Radicalism among the lower class of labourers in various parts of the county and in certain branches of trade, is fully confirmed by the advices received in the course of the day. The following is the account given by The Glasgow Courier of the state of things in that city.

"That we are, now, at peace in this city, is true, but it is that negative peace we have no confidence in, it being a fact that the Radicals are drilling every night in the field in our immediate vicinity. Were the least relaxation to take place in the present active exertions for the suppression of our disturbances, the consequences might be deprecated, the heart of the radical being so corrupted that nothing but the rod of power, administered with firmness, can bring it to reason."

Similar information is contained in the letters and papers from several other manufacturing places; but the most painful circumstance, is that the treasonable practice of drilling & training is still going on in a great variety of places. On Wednesday night the 5th instant, a considerable body of Radicals with arms were drilling close to the town of Glasgow, behind Castleton place; several shots were afterwards heard there as well as the sound of a bugle. The Carlisle Paper mentions that on Sunday evening bodies of men were observed training in the plantations at Cowfoot-hill, near Newtown: and the following account is given from Preston under the date of Saturday last:—

"We are informed by a correspondent on whom we can place great reliance that a nocturnal meeting or muster of the Radicals living in the Townships of Weelton, Withnall, and Hoghton, about seven or eight miles from this town, took place in the night between Tuesday and Wednesday last, but nothing could be learnt of the nature or object of the assemblage."

After this we hope we shall hear no more of the peaceable and innocent object of the training at White Moss, which cut so distinguished a figure in the evidence on the trial at York.

For the account of alarms spread at Wakefield, Barnsley, and Leeds, we refer to the details in other parts of our paper. They all concur in stating the views of the deluded men to have been directed to a simultaneous rising in various parts of the kingdom at once. They manifestly thought the time had come which Hunt so long ago announced, when they must resort to "physical force;" and they of course must have expected that at such a time he would keep the promise which he made at Spafields, "not to be found skulking in the rear at the hour of danger."

The Disturbances in the North.

WAKEFIELD, April 14.

We have been informed, that Government have for some days been in possession of information that a great and simultaneous movement was to take place on Wednesday last, through all the commercial districts of the north. In consequence of this, and of the particular information which he had personally received, General Sir John Byng determined to strike a decisive blow, and by surrounding a great body who were expected to assemble on Grange Moor, situated nearly midway between Wakefield and Huddersfield, to get as many as possible of them into his possession. With this view he made his arrangements to draw several corps round this place, in different directions; and to be near the scene of action, came himself to Wakefield on Tuesday evening. But this plan was frustrated by a premature movement of the troops stationed at Huddersfield.

The following is an extract we have made from a letter dated Glasgow, April 8: "Since I wrote yesterday, nothing of much consequence has occurred. The Radicals seem a good deal subdued. At Paisley a captain of the new army, and the secretary of the forces are both taken; and here they have got hold of general Washington, and all his papers and correspondence, including a plan for attacking Glasgow on various points, and general instructions.

"The radicals have been throwing away their pikes into the river, and the canal, and the operatives are now returning to their work. Their plans have been more extensive and better arranged than most people believed: but enough has been brought to convince us that we were in very great danger, and enough also, to make an example of those desperate persons who have come into the hands of the magistracy.

P. S. Thirty prisoners have just come in from Bridgeton, and many of them with pikes in their hands."

A formidable riot took place at Greenock, on the night of the 7th. A party of the Port Glasgow volunteers were escorting some prisoners from Paisley to the gaol at Greenock; when they entered the town, they were attacked with stones & pelted severely; they succeeded however in lodging their prisoners safe in gaol, when on returning to port Glasgow, they were attacked by the mob (partly Greenock and partly from the neighborhood,) and they were obliged to fire in their own defence. They effected their retreat. There are already nine of the mob dead, and nine more dangerously wounded.

"In the mean time, after the military had retired, they broke open the gaol and liberated the Radicals who had been lodged there from Paisley. Troops have been sent from this place, and every thing now is again quiet."

The trial of Sir Charles Wolseley and parson Harrison, at the Chester assizes, for sedition, was nearly finished. Williams and Bruce, have been convicted of attempting the life of Bird, the Stockport constable, and sentenced for execution.

"Events in Spain," says the Gazette de France, "assume daily a more serious aspect; princes, brothers to the king, have been obliged to take the title of citizens. Several provinces still refuse to acknowledge the new constitution. The finances are in a deplorable state; the government has supplied itself with a little money by confiscating the wealth of some members of the inquisition; but this resource is precarious, and the penury of the treasury will compel the adoption of general measures, of which it is impossible to foresee the results."

The following is extracted from the Constitutionel:

"A very important diplomatic note from Russia is spoken of, which declares that that power will consider an armed intervention of one state in the internal affairs of another, as an hostility against herself."

All is tranquil in France; and we are induced to believe that the ferment occasioned by the assassination of the Duke de Berri, is gradually subsiding.

The rumours of a threatened revolution in Italy, are renewed.

A war between Russia and the Ottoman Porte, is spoken of. Alexander has a powerful army at his disposal; and the present is considered a favorable moment for him to accomplish the desire of his grand father.

London Courier, of the 10th ult. contains the following particulars of the escape of Captain Henry Davis, a young man of respectable connexions, who a month before, was apprehended and confined on a charge of forging a draft of six thousand pounds upon the banking house of the Messrs. Drummonds. He was late a Captain in the life guards and moved in the highest circle, but was ruined by gambling, having anticipated a fortune of £20,000, left him by his father.

It seems that ever since his apprehension, his servant man was in the habit of going to him twice a day to bring him those necessaries of which he stood in need. Among other things he occasionally carried him a bag of clothes. For the last two or three days, this man who wore a blue frock livery coat, striped vest and gaiters came to the prison with his face wrapped up in a black silk handkerchief, as if he were affected with the tooth-ache.—The circumstance was noticed by Frost, the turnkey, who happened to be himself afflicted with the rheumatic pains at the time, but nothing particular passed On Friday morning the servant came as usual with his bag of clothes, and with his jaw still wrapped in the black silk handkerchief. He went up stairs to his master's room where he remained some time, and at half-past one was supposed to have come down again, and was permitted without the slightest suspicion to depart by Frost. Inquiry followed, and it was discovered that he had escaped & that his servant still remained in the gaol. In fact, it turned out that the servant had brought in his bag a complete suit of livery similar to his own, in which he dressed his master; and then covering his face with a black silk handkerchief and placing the bag, filled with other apparel, on his shoulder, together with his own hat on his head, sent him down stairs. The disguise was so effectual that it answered the desired end. Frost was throwno off his guard, and the prisoner got clear off.

The will of the Duke of Kent, has been proved, and sworn under £30,000; and £1050 has been paid for probate duty. It was made the evening previous to his death. Gen. Wetherall, and Captain Conroy, are executors, and have declined taking out letters of administration, but the creditors have done so.

Sir Charles Blagdon, well known in the scientific word, a native of England, and upwards of 80 years old, died at Paris in a fit, on the 20th of March. It is said he was very rich and died without a will.

THE NEW GOD SAVE THE KING.

By George Colman the younger.

Lord while thy chastening hand,
Wide thro' this loyal land,
Sorrow doth fling!
Each Briton's heart felt fear,
Shed o'er the Fathers bier,
Bids us the Son revere,
God save the King!

Long may war's clangour cease,
Long may the dove of peace
Here spread her wing;
Lull'd thus in sweet repose,
Oh! from domestic foes,
Oh! from black treason's blows,
Heaven guard the King.

While GEORGE'S praise we sound,
Ruby his throne around,
United cling,
Think who upheld his sire!
Who quell'd the Despot's fire!
Raised Britain's glory higher,
'Twas GEORGE OUR KING!

These beautiful stanzas were sung in addition to the sublime national Air of God Save the King, on the reopening of Covent Garden theatre, after His Majesty's lamented death. It is said the number of vocal and instrumental performers were immense. It is also affirmed that the public were admitted gratis, and the last verses were several times encored.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT BY EXPLOSION OF GAS.

A dreadful explosion of gas, by which several persons were seriously injured, and an infant killed, took place a few days since in Fourth-street, Newcastle. The facts of the case, as far as we can collect them, were nearly as follow:—During the greater part of the day the family of Mr. Benjamin Slater, in front of whose house, in that street, one of the main gas-pipes passed, but without having any communication with the house, had been greatly annoyed with the smell of gas, which, it appears, was escaping from the pipe into the house. Information of this circumstance was communicated to the proper person at the gas-works, who promised to remedy the inconvenience the next day, not conceiving any immediate danger. In the evening, however, as Mrs Slater was sitting in the parlour conversing with a friend, she sent her daughter with a candle to the closet, when a most dreadful and violent explosion of gas took place, by which the upper part of this house, and the whole of the back part of the adjoining house were blown out, and destroyed, and the houses otherwise much injured. Mrs. Slater's daughter was scorched most shockingly over all her body; and a young child was forced from Mrs. Slater's arms into the area-place. Mrs. Slater was also hurt; Mrs. Fletcher, her friend, we believe, escaped unhurt. But more serious injury was sustained in the adjoining house, occupied by Mr. John Slater, who was that evening entertaining a party of friends. The part of the house where they were sitting was quite demolished, and they were so crushed among the ruins, that it was impossible before they could be extricated. They were all more or less hurt. Mr. John Slater had both his ankles put out; he also received a fleshy wound, was otherwise much hurt. Mrs. Denham had also both her ankles put out, and her arm broken; and had the further misfortune of having her child a baby of about five weeks old, which she was holding in her arms, unfortunately killed. Mr. Denham also received some injury, as did Mrs. John Slater, and some others, but we do not know the particulars. Our readers may form some idea of the explosion, from the fact of some table and chairs being thrown across the street and a window being blown quite out, and thrown over a wall on the opposite side of the street. Some persons who were passing were also hurt by the falling bricks, &c.

PARIS, April 2.

It is now nearly a fortnight since an attempt was made to assassinate Monsieur, and not a whisper of it has been heard except indeed, the illness of the King, which was brought on by the shock. It seems that his royal highness visited St. Denis with the sacred purpose of devoting an hour to the indulgence of parental sorrow and prayer at the tomb of the Duke de Berri. Thither he was watched by a murderer or murderers; and after entering the cathedral, a ruffian attempted to force his way to the victim by overpowering the female to whom the custody of the church is entrusted. Fortunately her resistance and scream brought a couple of gens-d'armes to her rescue, and the assassin was wounded by a pistol shot and taken prisoner. On his person was found a brace of pistols loaded to their muzzels. It is not clearly stated whether he had accomplice, and among those who are privy to the transaction, the whole is ascribed to insanity in the individual. The effect upon his majesty's health, however, was almost fatal, as it threw the gout flying about him to his stomach, and the spasms were not only severe but of long duration. Happily he is now quite recovered.

"Paris, after dusk, almost resembles a besieged city. At every 40 yards on the Boulevard the passenger encounters a patrol of 5 soldiers, a corporal and 4 privates, two of the latter being French and two Swiss. The same arrangement is observed by all the guards whether mounted; one half foreigners. This betrays the distrust of the government and excites much rancour amongst the dissaffected, who boast that 12,000 Swiss would be of small use were the time come for pressing their views. There is always a guard at the Palace Royale: but at night the grand triangle is literally surrounded with troops. All the public building, and important stations are likewise strongly guarded. In short every thing bears the marks of an approaching convulsion especially should the throne become vacant. The event in Spain has produced an electrical sensation, and our informant adds that the want of a distinguished leader alone prevents matters from coming to a crisis in France."

many from the neighbouring villages.

"A few of the patrol followed them about two hours afterwards on the same road, and one gentleman (who arrived before the other) got so near to them upon Grange-moor, as clearly to observe them in ranks, and armed with pikes: he thinks the number was about three or four hundred, but he was soon compelled to retreat by two men with fire arms! The other gentlemen, on their arrival at Grange-moor, found that the Radicals had dispersed at the sight of the military from Huddersfield, as we have before stated.

"Previously to leaving Barnsley, the radicals roused several of the inhabitants in different parts of the town, and demanded their fire-arms, which were, in general, surrendered. At one house, however, they were refused, and, in revenge, they broke twelve panes in the windows. In their route they called at many houses, demanding fire-arms, which they afterwards substituted for pikes, as several of the latter were found on the road. The Yeomanry were called out early on Wednesday morning, and sent in different directions during the day attended by J. Scott, Esq. of Badsworth, magistrate, to search the houses of individuals in the villages, but no arms were discovered.

"In the evening, three or four persons were taken into custody, and examined by Mr. Scott and Dr. Corbet, and committed for further examination. Yesterday nine others were secured, and the town was in a very perturbed state. There is no doubt but these deluded men were disappointed in not meeting as they expected, a large body of the Radicals from the neighbourhood of Huddersfield, &c. on Grange-Moor.

The under-mentioned persons were committed yesterday on the following charges, viz. W. Holland, W. Holt, G. Burkinshaw, Geo. Bryan, A. Ingham, and J. Hobson, weavers, of Dodsworth, near Barnsley, for riotously assembling, armed with pikes, with many others, and endeavouring, by threats, to induce W. Siddons, and G. Beevers to join them, and for having been with the party who went to Grange-moor: Thomas Wood, labourer, of Dodsworth, and Thomas Woodhead, weaver, for procuring pikes to be manufactured.

Extract of a private letter.

GLASGOW, April 12.

"I hope the spirit of radical rebellion is now broken in this neighbourhood; their attempt at a muster was so contemptable at all points this day week, which was to have been on the great day, that they have been in the dumps ever since; none but the most daring and unprincipled followers turned out; many of the more thinking favoured their cause, but had not the heart to join them. Indeed every man who had his eyes about him, saw that the military were too powerful for them; and it is well it was so; for had the Radicals got possession of this city, as they hoped, we should have had sad business of it.—A great many people here acted in the adjacent villages have been taken up by the civil power since that period, some of whom, it is said, for the sake of their own necks, are divulging what they know."

LONDON, April. 18.

The Quotidienne contains a statement that Decaze had given notice that he would be in Paris on the 15th instant, in order to proceed to London. We can hardly consider this intelligence to be authentic. Decaze, as an experienced intriguer, must know that it is necessary for him to feel his way, before he ventures to come to England. He may arrive here in an official character, which will demand respect to the office, which in a thousand ways contempt and detestation will be shewn to the man. The loyal people of England are at this moment smarting under the deadly effects of revolutionary doctrines; and they know that Decaze, a creature of the Revolution, has done more than any man in Europe, for the last three years, to encourage and patronise those doctrines. The English Ministers, who have just escaped the danger of the assassin, and have called out with pikes in their hands,"

"Events in Spain," says the Gazette de France, "assume daily a more serious aspect; princes, brothers to the king, have been obliged to take the title of citizens. Several provinces still refuse to acknowledge the new constitution. The finances are in a deplorable state; the government has supplied itself with a little money by confiscating the wealth of some members of the inquisition; but this resource is precarious, and the penury of the treasury will compel the adoption of general measures, of which it is impossible to foresee the results."

The following is extracted from the Constitutionel:

"A very important diplomatic note from Russia is spoken of, which declares that that power will consider an armed intervention of one state in the internal affairs of another, as an hostility against herself."

All is tranquil in France; and we are induced to believe that the ferment occasioned by the assassination of the Duke de Berri, is gradually subsiding.

The rumours of a threatened revolution in Italy, are renewed.

A war between Russia and the Ottoman Porte, is spoken of. Alexander has a powerful army at his disposal; and the present is considered a favorable moment for him to accomplish the desire of his grand father.

London Courier, of the 10th ult. contains the following particulars of the escape of Captain Henry Davis, a young man of respectable connexions, who a month before, was apprehended and confined on a charge of forging a draft of six thousand pounds upon the banking house of the Messrs. Drummonds. He was late a Captain in the life guards and moved in the highest circle, but was ruined by gambling, having anticipated a fortune of £20,000, left him by his father.

It seems that ever since his apprehension, his servant man was in the habit of going to him twice a day to bring him those necessaries of which he stood in need. Among other things he occasionally carried him a bag of clothes. For the last two or three days, this man who wore a blue frock livery coat, striped vest and gaiters came to the prison with his face wrapped up in a black silk handkerchief, as if he were affected with the tooth-ache.—The circumstance was noticed by Frost, the turnkey, who happened to be himself afflicted with the rheumatic pains at the time, but nothing particular passed On Friday morning the servant came as usual with his bag of clothes, and with his jaw still wrapped in the black silk handkerchief. He went up stairs to his master's room where he remained some time, and at half-past one was supposed to have come down again, and was permitted without the slightest suspicion to depart by Frost. Inquiry followed, and it was discovered that he had escaped & that his servant still remained in the gaol. In fact, it turned out that the servant had brought in his bag a complete suit of livery similar to his own, in which he dressed his master; and then covering his face with a black silk handkerchief and placing the bag, filled with other apparel, on his shoulder, together with his own hat on his head, sent him down stairs. The disguise was so effectual that it answered the desired end. Frost was throwno off his guard, and the prisoner got clear off.

The will of the Duke of Kent, has been proved, and sworn under £30,000; and £1050 has been paid for probate duty. It was made the evening previous to his death. Gen. Wetherall, and Captain Conroy, are executors, and have declined taking out letters of administration, but the creditors have done so.

Sir Charles Blagdon, well known in the scientific word, a native of England, and upwards of 80 years old, died at Paris in a fit, on the 20th of March. It is said he was very rich and died without a will.

THE NEW GOD SAVE THE KING.

By George Colman the younger.

Lord while thy chastening hand,
Wide thro' this loyal land,
Sorrow doth fling!
Each Briton's heart felt fear,
Shed o'er the Fathers bier,
Bids us the Son revere,
God save the King!

Long may war's clangour cease,
Long may the dove of peace
Here spread her wing;
Lull'd thus in sweet repose,
Oh! from domestic foes,
Oh! from black treason's blows,
Heaven guard the King.

While GEORGE'S praise we sound,
Ruby his throne around,
United cling,
Think who upheld his sire!
Who quell'd the Despot's fire!
Raised Britain's glory higher,
'Twas GEORGE OUR KING!

These beautiful stanzas were sung in addition to the sublime national Air of God Save the King, on the reopening of Covent Garden theatre, after His Majesty's lamented death. It is said the number of vocal and instrumental performers were immense. It is also affirmed that the public were admitted gratis, and the last verses were several times encored.

DREADFUL ACCIDENT BY EXPLOSION OF GAS.

A dreadful explosion of gas, by which several persons were seriously injured, and an infant killed, took place a few days since in Fourth-street, Newcastle. The facts of the case, as far as we can collect them, were nearly as follow:—During the greater part of the day the family of Mr. Benjamin Slater, in front of whose house, in that street, one of the main gas-pipes passed, but without having any communication with the house, had been greatly annoyed with the smell of gas, which, it appears, was escaping from the pipe into the house. Information of this circumstance was communicated to the proper person at the gas-works, who promised to remedy the inconvenience the next day, not conceiving any immediate danger. In the evening, however, as Mrs Slater was sitting in the parlour conversing with a friend, she sent her daughter with a candle to the closet, when a most dreadful and violent explosion of gas took place, by which the upper part of this house, and the whole of the back part of the adjoining house were blown out, and destroyed, and the houses otherwise much injured. Mrs. Slater's daughter was scorched most shockingly over all her body; and a young child was forced from Mrs. Slater's arms into the area-place. Mrs. Slater was also hurt; Mrs. Fletcher, her friend, we believe, escaped unhurt. But more serious injury was sustained in the adjoining house, occupied by Mr. John Slater, who was that evening entertaining a party of friends. The part of the house where they were sitting was quite demolished, and they were so crushed among the ruins, that it was impossible before they could be extricated. They were all more or less hurt. Mr. John Slater had both his ankles put out; he also received a fleshy wound, was otherwise much hurt. Mrs. Denham had also both her ankles put out, and her arm broken; and had the further misfortune of having her child a baby of about five weeks old, which she was holding in her arms, unfortunately killed. Mr. Denham also received some injury, as did Mrs. John Slater, and some others, but we do not know the particulars. Our readers may form some idea of the explosion, from the fact of some table and chairs being thrown across the street and a window being blown quite out, and thrown over a wall on the opposite side of the street. Some persons who were passing were also hurt by the falling bricks, &c.

PARIS, April 2.

It is now nearly a fortnight since an attempt was made to assassinate Monsieur, and not a whisper of it has been heard except indeed, the illness of the King, which was brought on by the shock. It seems that his royal highness visited St. Denis with the sacred purpose of devoting an hour to the indulgence of parental sorrow and prayer at the tomb of the Duke de Berri. Thither he was watched by a murderer or murderers; and after entering the cathedral, a ruffian attempted to force his way to the victim by overpowering the female to whom the custody of the church is entrusted. Fortunately her resistance and scream brought a couple of gens-d'armes to her rescue, and the assassin was wounded by a pistol shot and taken prisoner. On his person was found a brace of pistols loaded to their muzzels. It is not clearly stated whether he had accomplice, and among those who are privy to the transaction, the whole is ascribed to insanity in the individual. The effect upon his majesty's health, however, was almost fatal, as it threw the gout flying about him to his stomach, and the spasms were not only severe but of long duration. Happily he is now quite recovered.

"Paris, after dusk, almost resembles a besieged city. At every 40 yards on the Boulevard the passenger encounters a patrol of 5 soldiers, a corporal and 4 privates, two of the latter being French and two Swiss. The same arrangement is observed by all the guards whether mounted; one half foreigners. This betrays the distrust of the government and excites much rancour amongst the dissaffected, who boast that 12,000 Swiss would be of small use were the time come for pressing their views. There is always a guard at the Palace Royale: but at night the grand triangle is literally surrounded with troops. All the public building, and important stations are likewise strongly guarded. In short every thing bears the marks of an approaching convulsion especially should the throne become vacant. The event in Spain has produced an electrical sensation, and our informant adds that the want of a distinguished leader alone prevents matters from coming to a crisis in France."

RELIEF OF THE POOR.

We rejoice to perceive that the Cor ty for the Destitute and Houseless only fulfilling most completely the temporary purpose for which it was stituted, but afford every prospect of leading to general and more permanent advantages. Of 600 persons, male and female, now housed and fed in this new asylum, not one has been heard to utter a murmur, either as to the behaviour of the superintendants or the quality of the food, or the nature of the accommodation; and when it is considered how much profligacy and disposition to cavil may fairly be believed to exist among a promiscuous multitude thus poured at once out of the streets into one centre, it does, we conceive, reflect the highest credit on the managers of this charity, to have afforded no opportunity for any feelings but those of at least temporary contentment. The arrangements are extremely simple. The warehouse consists of three spacious floors. On the lower floor is, on one side a kitchen, with all other conveniences belonging to that portion of a house; on the other side is an office fitted up, where persons are stationed to inquire into the claims of each applicant, not as he or she arrives, (for the appearance of misery is a sufficient passport for the night,) but on the next day, in order that some may be sent to their respective parishes, and others may be furnished with such employment as the Committee may be able to provide. On this floor, also, there is accommodation for the city officers, who are in attendance all night to maintain peace, should their interference be necessary.

The next, which is the principal floor, is divided into two compartments, both of which are for the male applicants; and the smaller compartment is appropriated solely to those who are sick. The larger one is again separated into two divisions, each of which is boarded to the height of two feet from the ground and the space thus formed on each side of the room, between those boards and the wall, is filled with clean straw. The straw is so abundant as not merely to furnish a bed, but is covering also for those who rest in it, and an interval is allowed of about two or three feet between each individual. On the big er story are the women, the number of whom, however, does not amount to a hove 60, but of these, many have infant and even suckling children. To these so situated, a superior indulgence is given; besides the straw, they have the benefit of thick woollen rugs; there are also nurses to attend them. It is needless to say that there is no communication between the male and female wards. Besides these means of comfortable rest, the Committee supply their lodgers with a substantial meal night and morning, and those who are unable to leave their premises in the day, have a third meal.—The rooms are at once lighted and warmed by gas, and the ventilation, though of all things the most difficult to manage, is more perfect than we have ever felt it in any room with the same number of persons in it. This, however is to be improved by making new windows both at the sides and at the ends. The subscription for the Relief of the Destitute and the Houseless, already amounts to little short of £10,000.

The Committee for the Relief of the Houseless poor, have received from Government considerable supplies of bedding, clothes and other articles, to be applied to the purposes of that excellent charity. The peculiar urgency of this moment, and the rapidity with which plans and modes of relief for the distressed are multiplying in every direction, exhibits the character of British society in a most favourable light. The "The Society for the suppression of Mendicity" has not had its determination to give the utmost possible assistance to the former charity, and to co-operate cordially with its Committee of management; so as to combine the two great objects of temporary aid to the suffering, and eventual restraint to the idle and dissolute. Several parochial associations have been formed with the benevolent view of alleviating the wretchedness of those who, though resident in the parish, have no legal claim upon its public funds. Such are particularly those of St. George, Hanover square, and St. Dunstan-in-the-West. The "Strangers' Friend Society" has been active in assisting the peculiar object of its bounty. The "Widow's Friend and Benevolent Society" also has made an urgent appeal to the public in support of its admirable system of domiciliary visits, by means of which, in the course of the preceding year, 2000 individuals have been relieved. Even amusements have been laudably directed to views of benevolence. The members of the Amateur Concert propose to devote a night to the benefit of the charitable societies; and a correspondent informs us, that in a respectable village near town, the more opulent inhabitants have already appropriated to the relief of their poorer neighbours the profits of a subscription ball, and are meditating to get up a play for the same benevolent purpose.

The Committee for the Relief of Destitute Seamen, have offered the aid of their excellent institution to those objects of the London-wall charity who have been connected with the sea-service. Thus will one of the difficulties with respect to the ultimate disposal of a considerable part of the houseless, be removed; and the benevolence of their fellow-creatures will disperse and transmit to their proper employment those whom distress has brought together to one common receptacle. It is co-operation only, and the benefit of their experience which the Seamen's Committee offers to that for the Destitute: the funds of the former are appropriated by express resolution; those funds are luckily not wanted by the other charity; all that is needed there fore is obtained, and the two committees have met for the purpose of mutual arrangements.

The Lord Mayor has also had a communication with the American Vice Consul, who informs his Lordship that he is not precluded from affording relief to distressed Americans, on account of their having served on board British ships; that he maintains a number of such at present, and has engaged a passage for fifty of them to their native country. Applications of this description will therefore in part be withdrawn. The farmers, too, at present to use an expression of their own, are not able to "get upon the lands;" but as the frost breaks, the call for agricultural hands will be in proportion to the long suspension of rural employments.

Remarkable effect of Lightning.—About twenty years ago, during a violent thunder storm the lightning struck a pane of glass in a house door, so that the mistress of the house, who was in the hall behind the door, was cast several paces backwards, and thrown on the floor. She however received no injury, nor was the pane of glass broken. The electric fluid had, however, left upon it a beautiful painting (if I may so express it,) resembling, on the whole a head, which was formed of numerous smaller heads. From that time, this pane of glass was never wet with dew, and never froze, though the other panes were affected by the weather as usual. Great care was taken of the remarkable pane, till some days since it was broken by carelessness; when it appeared the lightning had split it, in king two panes out of one, and leaving in the middle the traces of the electric fluid. Before it was broken, no one could see that there was a divis n. The parts which are not much broken were collected as carefully as possible.—Lat. Gaz.

The Gazette de France contains the following extract of a private letter, dated Rome, March 20: "Our city begins to be thronged with Foreigners; during the last few days, a great number of English have arrived. Among them is the celebrated Sir H. Davy. On many very as to the success of the efforts pursuing relative to the Herculaneum Manuscripts. It is thought, that he is himself occupied with the publication of a treatise on these papers, on a public ation which will probably decide the opinions of the learned as to what further hopes may be entertained on the subject."

Portable reservoirs of hot water for sale have been contrived and brought into use at Paris. The inventor, M. Valette, has reduced the consumption of fuel to the least possible quantity required to produce a certain effect. He kindles a fire in a stove, surrounded by a great mass of water, and, by dextrous management, raises this mass to 90° of heat in a few minutes, and at trifling expence. This machine being placed on wheels, the proprietor loses no time; his water heating as he travels, is soon in a state of ebullition. He offers to contract on the lowest terms with all persons wanting hot water, whether for scrubbing houses, washing, or personal cleanliness. As personal bathing is much practised at Paris, M. Valette carries with him what he calls a bagnoire, made of varnished leather, supported by slight iron bars. The patent has been extended to England, and promises great utility.

Daring Robbery.—Thursday last, During the procession, a most formidable gang of robbers, armed with bludgeons, &c. about thirty in number, committed the vilest depredations. J. M'Gorl, esq. of Marylebone, after placing some ladies in a carriage to view the procession, left them and was in the act of crossing from Spring-gardens to the opposite side, when a villain snatched his gold watch and append ges, which he ran off with.—Mr Gayor pursued and collared him, when he was surrounded by about thirty others, who commenced a most desperate attack on him with their sticks, and bruised him seriously; he still kept his hold, and offered a reward to any person who would assist him, but the gang was so formidable that every one was afraid. Mr. M. at length swirled another fellow who was most active in attempting to rescue the thief; and while he held him by the collar the villain bit Mr. Mayor's thumb finger nearly through, which "caused him to let go the thief and secure the other. During the affray he had the whole of his pockets turned inside out, his handkerchief and all his property was stolen. Constables arrived and took the prisoner to St. James' watch-house; yesterday he was examined at Marlborough street, he gave his name John Fitzgerald. Mr. Howard, of Carnaby-street, Carnaby-market, was attacked under similar circumstances in Piccadilly, by about thirty in a gang, who beat him with sticks, and turning his pockets inside out, robbed him of his watch and every thing he had in his possession. Several other Robberies of the same description were perpetrated during the procession.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

House of Commons. April 27.

A few minutes before two the speaker took the Chair.

At two the House was summoned to the House of Peers, to hear the Speech from the Throne. The Speaker and the other members present, immediately proceeded to the other House, to hear the Speech delivered by His Majesty from the Throne

THE KING'S SPEECH.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I have taken the earliest occasion of assembling you here, after having recurred to the sense of my people.

"In meeting you personally, for the first time since the death of the beloved father, I am anxious to assure you, that I shall always continue to imitate his great example in increasing attention to the public interests, and in paternal solicitude for the welfare and happiness of all classes of my subjects.

"I have received from Foreign Powers renewed assurances of their friendly disposition, & of their earnest desire to cultivate with me the relations of peace and amity.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"The Estimates for the present year will be laid before you.

"They have been framed upon principles of strict economy; but it is to me matter of the deepest regret, that the state of the country has not allowed me to dispense with those additions to our military force which I announced at the commencement of the last Session of Parliament.

"The first object to which your attention will be directed, is the provision to be made for the support of the Civil Government, and of the honour and dignity of the Crown.

"I leave entirely at your disposal, my interest in the Hereditary Revenues; and I cannot deny myself the gratification of declaring, that so far from desiring any arrangement which might lead to the imposition of new burdens upon my people, or even might diminish, on my account the amount of the Reductions incident to my accession to the Throne. I can have no wish, under circumstances like the present, that any addition whatever should be made to the Settlement adopted by Parliament in the Year 1816

"My Lords, and Gentlemen,

"Deeply as I regret that the machinations and designs of the disaffected should have led, in some parts of the country, to acts of open violence and insurrection, I cannot but express my satisfaction at the prompt manner in which these attempts have been suppressed by the vigilance and activity of the Magistrates, and by the zealous co-operation of all those of my Subjects whose exertions have been called forth to support the authority of the Laws.

"The wisdom and firmness manifested by the late Parliament, and the due execution of the Laws, have greatly contributed to restore confidence throughout the Empire, and to counterbalance those principles of sedition and hostility which had been disseminated with such malignant perseverance, and had poisoned the minds of the ignorant and unwary.

"I rely upon the continued support of Parliament, in my determination to maintain, by all the means entrusted to my hands, the Public Safety and Tranquillity.

"Deploring, as we all must, the distress which still unhappily prevails among many of the labouring classes of the Community, and anxiously looking forward to its removal or mitigation, it is in the means of our common duty, effectually to protect the Loyal, the Peaceable, and the Industrious, against those Practices of Turbulence and Intimidation, by which the period of Relief can only be deferred, and by which the pressure of the Distress has been incalculably aggravated.

"I trust that an awakened sense of the dangers which they have incurred, and of the arts which have been employed to seduce them, will bring back to the right path of order, of those who have been unhappily led astray, and will revive in them that spirit of loyalty, that due submission to the laws, and that attachment to the Constitution, which upwards of a century of the great body of the people, and which, under the blessing of Divine Providence, have secured to the British nation the enjoyment of a larger share of practical freedom, as well as of prosperity and happiness than have fallen to the lot of any nation in the world."

LONDON, April 30.

On Saturday the 29th, Little business was transacted. The House met at 3 o'clock, and adjourned at 4, for the purpose of presenting the address of the House to the King.

The trials for high treason closed on the evening of the 27th of April, and the next morning sentence of death was passed on the prisoners. On Saturday, the Lord High Steward, Sergeant made his report to the King in Council, of the eleven men who had been sentenced the day previous. After two hours deliberation, the following were ordered for execution on the Monday (this day) viz. Arthur Thistlewood, James Ings, Thomas Brunt, Richard Tidd, and William Davidson. The remaining six, who pleaded guilty to their indictments, are respited during the pleasure of the King. The five above named are to be hung, and afterwards beheaded, and their bodies divided into four quarters. One of the papers before us, says—"The prisoners at present exhibit a sort of enthusiastic bravery, and express pride in having an opportunity to lay down their lives in the cause of freedom. They all rejected the kind attention of the Rev. Mr Cotton; they say they want not his assistance, and profess themselves to be confirmed deists."

SENTENCE PASSED ON THE CONSPIRATORS

His Lordship having once more solemnly exhorted the prisoners to repentance, pronounced the sentence of the law in the following words to

"That you, and each of you, be taken from hence to the gaol from whence you first came, and from thence that you be drawn upon a hurdle to the place of execution, and be there hanged by the neck until you be dead; and that afterwards your heads shall be severed from your bodies, and your bodies be divided into four quarters, to be disposed of as his Majesty shall think fit.—And may God of his infinite goodness have mercy upon your souls!"

The cries said aloud, "Amen!" in which he was joined by many in the court, who were deeply affected by his Lordship's impressive address.

Wooden-soled Shoes.

Mr. Curtis, of Arlington, Va. has brought into use, among the labourers of his plantations shoes of the above description. He says that those by whom they are worn, declare them to be much warmer, and more comfortable, than shoes with leather soles. They keep the feet perfectly dry, and are therefore much more conducive to health. Mr. C. says the introduction of this improvement has lessened his expenditures for keeping the laboring part of his family in shoes; at least four-fifths —that in this way every man can be his own shoe-maker, and can make half a dozen pairs in a day. The upper leather of the shoes is sewed together in the usual manner. The soles are made in the usual shape of soles, with the heel about three-fourths of an inch thick, and a groove is cut into the upper parts of the edges, sufficiently wide and deep, to mit on the leather which is done with little tacks drove so closely together as to exclude the entrance of any water.—During the winter it is advisable to fasten little plates of iron round the heel and fore part of the shoe, with nails somewhat projecting, so as to prevent slipping; or the nails may be drove into the wood for that purpose. The harder the wood of which the soles are made the longer they will last. It would doubtless be an improvement to have the upper side of the soles scooped out a little, so as better to suit the shape of the foot.

A shoe some what similar to this has long been in use among the peasantry of France; and there can be no doubt that for those whose labors expose them to the inclemency of the seasons, this is much the healthiest and cheapest sort of shoes.

In the reign of queen Anne, a ship of about three hundred tons, mounting 20 cannon, manned by pirates, appeared off the harbor of Newport, cruising between Block Island and Point Judith, interrupting every vessel that attempted to pass, and treating their crews with great severity. To remove an annoyance so injurious to the comfort and prosperity of the inhabitants of Newport, two resolute young men, John and William Wanton, determined to attempt her capture, and the means they resorted to were as novel as the success was glorious. They no sooner intimated their intention than they were joined by thirty young men, of their acquaintance. A sloop of about sixty tons was engaged for the enterprize. This noble band went on board with only their small arms, and sailed out of the harbour to appearances on a coasting voyage; every person being below, except a sufficient number to navigate the sloop. As they drew near, apparently with an intention to pass the ship, a shot was fired at them. They immediately lowered the peak of their mainsail, and luffed up for the ship; but instead of bringing her along side, they came directly under her stern, when the men jumped on deck, and grappled her to the ship, and with wedges ready for the purpose, fastened her rudder, by driving them between that and the stern post, so as to render the ship absolutely unmanageable. Having so far succeeded in their enterprize, each man took his musket, and being marksmen, every pirate that showed himself on board the ship was instantly shot; after a great variety of unavailing efforts to disengage themselves, and losing a number of their men, they surrendered, and were brot in triumph by this gallant band into the harbor of Newport.—Queen Anne being informed of this heroic achievement presented the two brothers, John and William Wanton, with a large silver bowl and salver, on which was engraved a Latin quotation appropriate to the exploit.

WROUGHT IRON BRIDGES.

An interesting memorial has been presented to the French Chamber of Deputies, by Mr. Poyett, member of the Institute, and Architect to the minister of the Interior. He proposes to substitute wrought Iron Bridges in place of those built of stone, which can be erected at one-fifth of the expense as strong stone bridges, being capable of bearing the weight of 984 tons, 7 cwt. without the necessity of constructing abutments for the last arch. As an additional advantage, the piers of wrought iron bridges may be raised at the distance of 98 to 130 feet apart, by which the navigation of rivers will be preserved.

In the Christian Observer of October, the Society for the suppression of mendicity established in London, March 1818, "is noticed for the great good which has attended its operations, in rescuing many, really deserving objects, from wretchedness and misery; while, at the same time, they have exposed and brought to justice a considerable number of daring Impostors, who infested the streets, living in habits of drunkeness with the sums daily bestowed on them by mistaken humanity.

"The plan of the Institution is to issue printed tickets for distribution to street-beggars, which tickets refer them to the Society-House, where they are immediately supplied with food, and a statement of the case of each is registered. The truth of this statement is ascertained by personal investigation and enquiry, and the case is then disposed of according to circumstances. They have entreated the public to assist their endeavours by purchasing their tickets for distribution, and discontinuing the impolitic practice, of indiscriminate alms-giving. If this object were once attained, the sturdy beggars would be obliged to work, the employment of children in begging would be terminated, and the wretchedness, indolence and vice of a numerous class of our fellow creatures, might, in the course of time, give place to habits of industry and virtue.

"The Society is supported by voluntary contributions, and the sale of tickets, which are sold in parcels of five for one shilling. An annual payment of one guinea, constitutes a manager, and ten guineas a manager for life; and who are entitled to tickets of reference gratuitously."

Deposited in the New-York Bank for Savings, in the name of the President and Vice Presidents therof, Five Hundred Dollars, to be paid over by them to the society, which may be formed in N. York, on principles similar, or similar to the London, Society for suppression of medicity. And should no Society be organized within two years from this date, then the said sum and the interest which will accrue, shall be equally divided between the Orphan Asylum Society, and the society for the relief of poor widows with small children, and paid over to them.

Gen. Wilkinson has been put in nomination for Mayor of the city of New-Orleans; and in order to make him eligible, the Legislature of the state have passed an act, dispensing with the qualification of a year's residence.

Northern Canal.—It is with regret we learn, that lack of water in our canal, is already experienced to an alarming degree. The canal, in its whole length, may be said to be literally lined with rafts of timber, waiting a rise of water, to enable their passage into the Hudson. We understand that it has been determined on by the engineer and commissioner, to make an attempt to supply the deficiency of water from the Hudson river.—Sandy Hill Times.
