h of May has at present higher our praise than the charming nature, which are now deve-and the merry-makings of s youngsters. It is now a religious enjoyment, to which and looks forward with delight, on which never disappoints our hope.
There is an interest, a feeling and a glory about the grand meetings of the Missionary and Bible Societies, which must be witnessed to be understood.—
We have been this year peculiarly favoured; a luminary has appeared among us that has eclipsed all his forerunners. It seems a prognostic of remarkable events in the ~~religious world~~, that the Lord has raised up a man, who is pre-eminently fitted to vindicate his cause, and to promote among all ranks the knowledge of his gospel.

"Dr. Chalmers, one of the professors in the University of Glasgow, was, in early life, an infidel; but, no sooner did it please God to reveal his Son in him, than, like Apostle Paul, he began "to preach that faith which once he destroyed;" and, bringing a great mass of human learning into the field, the armies of the alien are routed before him —he commences a bold attack on the fortresses of infidelity, and their walls crumble into dust before him. He has particularly bent his mind to consider the evidences of christianity, and has very lately published a book, entitled,
"A Review of the Evidences of Christianity, considered in connection with the Modern Astronomy;" which has met with so rapid a sale, that it went through four editions before it was heard of in London, and though only a small octavo volume, the booksellers in London have just agreed to give him four thousand pounds for the copy right.

"This truly great man has been brought to London to preach one of the missionary sermons, and has created a sensation beyond what I ever before witnessed. You know Surrey chapel—on the Wednesday morning, thinking that my privilege as a minister would procure me a seat if I went early, I got to the chapel at 9 o'clock, an hour and a half before the prayers began to be read; but, instead of getting a comfortable place in the first or second row of seats, which on those occasions are appropriated exclusively to ministers, I found the chapel quite full, and thought myself extremely happy to squeeze just within the door of the gallery, where I stood with a column of people pressing me both before and behind for five hours.

"Dr. Chalmers has nothing to recommend him as a preacher but the intrinsic worth of his matter. He is a small, pale man, with a feeble, indistinct voice, and a Scotch accent. His text was 1 Cor. 14, 25, 24, 25; and the cl of drift of his argu ment was to prove, that the conversion of a sinner did not depend on the weight of rational evidence brought before him, but rested altogether upon the agency of the Holy Spirit bringing the man to compare his conscience with the declaration of God's word, whereupon "the secrets of his heart are made manifest, and falling down on his face, he will worship God, and report that God is in you of a truth."

"From the confusion of so crowded an assembly, it was difficult to hear him at first; but after a most luminous introduction, he came to the first grand period of his argument. The congregation were electrified; I never witnessed such emotions before. While he paused to take breath, exclamations of surprise were heard around—"Astonishing! Beyond all that ever was heard before! I never heard a sermon before!
Admirable beyond imagination!" Such were the universal expressions of delight and surprise. If I was to tell you the expressions I made use of, when I came out, you would think them truly extravagant. Remember, that this universal admiration is not the applause of an ignorant multitude; it is the general feeling of as large and well informed an assembly of divines, as perhaps, ever before met together.

"This Sermon was an introduction to a popularity, justly deserved, but of a degree beyond what I have ever before witnessed. All ranks and degrees of men are crowding to hear him. Ministers of State; Members of Parliament; the Lord Mayor; Aldermen of the City, and many Clergymen, fearless of Queen Bess's Laws against nonconformity, crowd to hear Dr. Chalmers.
He preached last Sunday at the Scotch church, London Wall, and at three in the afternoon at the large new church in Swallow-street, formerly Dr. Trotter's; and, although it had not been published, the throng was so great by two o'clock, that they dared not open the doors, but the place was filled chiefly through the Vestry window; and it was thought necessary for Dr. Nicholl and other ministers to harangue the people out at the window, intreating them not to attempt to press in, as there was not room for one person more even to stand in the galleries; and thousands went away without obtaining admission. The carriages thronged the street, as if they had been going to the Theatre.

"When I consider the earnestness of his delivery, and the irrefragable force of his arguments, he reminds me of Apollos, "who mightily convinced the Jews, and that publicly, proving from the Scriptures that Jesus was the Christ."
The minds of men are irresistibly directed to religion: the most prejudiced and worldly minded feel constrained to enquire into the doctrines of the gospel, and, if a peculiar measure of divine power do not speedily follow, it will to me be more extraordinary than these circumstances themselves. The Lord will hasten it in his time.

"I hope Dr. Chalmers's book, as well as his Missionary Sermon, will soon be reprinted and widely circulated in America.

SPANISH AMERICA.

Extract of a letter from a respectable person, dated Guiayana 26 Aug.

Both Guayanas are at last occupied by the arms of the Republic; the capital or the city of Augustura was evacuated on the 18th July, and on 3d August, Old Guayana. Masters of the whole pro-vince, the independents command the river by a very respectable force. It is impossible to enumerate the articles of war and of commerce which have been abandoned by the Spaniards in both ci-ties. The most part of the rich booty has been taken by our squadron, which chased the enemy down the river and took from them 21 sail of vessels, say two ships and all the rest brigs.

The Spanish chief La Torre escaped in a light corvette, amid a deluge of shot. Upwards of 1,000 prisoners fell into the hands of the independents, a-mong whom is the bishop, ecclesiast-ical cabildo, officers of high rank, and a vast number of respectable persons of all classes. It is most interesting to know, that the Spaniards have lost the public opinion which they formerly en-joyed with the inhabitants. The inde-pendents, on the contrary hold it in its full length. Tranquility, order, abun-dance in all kind of things, and safety in all its extent, have succeeded to the noise of war; these precious blessings are the result of the great project of the capture of Guyana, which ensures for ever the liberty of all the other pro-vinces.

In the province of Carraccas the in-dependents are progressing, being al-ready as far as the town of Orituco. General Zarraza, at the head of 2000 men, occupies Cabruta, and extends the movements, of his army as far as El Rastro on this side, and on the other San Sabastian.

Extracts of letters from the 21st to 29th September.

General Zarraza, with 2000 horses, is on the other side of the way to Orituco. Gen Bermudez, with 2000 infantry, 100 dragoons, and 4 field pieces, sets out to-morrow (22d) to incorporate his forces with those of the former, and occupy Calabozo and San Carlos, where they must be joined by Gen. Paez, with 2000 horses. General Monagas is ordered to take possession of Barcelona with his brigade and 300 infantry. The main body of the army, commanded by the general in chief Simon de Bolivar, is preparing to march immediately, the squadron and 2000 warriors will be left to protect this province. By next De-cember the tri-colored flag will be wav-ing triumphantly in Caraccas, and ev-ery single spot occupied by the Royalists shall be liberated by the Liberating Ar-my.

Extract of a letter from Margarita, dat-ed the 18th of October.

With respect to the late political oc-currences in this Island, I will only say, that it is scarcely possible to conceive the bravery, which was for the second time, displayed in repelling the furious invasion of general Morillo. Our situa-tion was really very desperate, as we could not look for any assistance from our brethren on the Main who were themselves surrounded by dangers of e-very description.

Under such circumstances only the inimitable heroism of this people could have undertaken to withstand the colos-sal forces of the enemy—only a people of heroes could have beheld with disdain an infinite number of barriers opposing their design of a brave resistance.

By one of the many contingencies, which frequently occur in war, the commander of St. Juan Bautista was unable to prevent Morillo from landing on the shores of the Barales with 3500 men, of the choicest troops of the line. Notwithstanding some advantages ob-tained by him, we were forced to come to an engagement, which was bold and bloody, and after four hours of a well directed and uninterrupted fire, we had the inexpressible pleasure of seeing the enemy give way in all directions, with the loss of 400 men; our loss did not exceed 7 killed and 27 wounded.

General Morrillo having collected fresh forces, advanced now to Pampa-tar, and though this fort could not check his audacity, for want of military trains, he received considerable damage from different corps of infantry and ca-valry, which had gone out to meet him, and made a terrible havoc among his troops.

On the 31st of July Morrillo attacked with h whole forces, the environs of the capital; the superiority of his troops flattered him with the hope of an easy conquest, but here his disappointment was equal to his disgrace, for the valor and intrepidity of 280 infantry and 200 horses with a piece of artillery situated on a height, compelled him in 9 hours, to fly disgracefully and precipitately, with the loss of 600 men killed and wounded when ours amounted to only 26 of the former and 70 of the latter.

On the 8th of August the whole of the Spanish army invaded the port of Juan de Griego, whose little fort was defended only by a gun and 150 troops, the half of which were unfit for service. A navy of 27 vessels protected the at-tack and facilitated its operations; but here they were met by our modern Spar-tans with so much enthusiasm, that they were thrice beaten off with great slaughter. However, the fort taking fire, and being already involved in flames, our people saw themselves un-der the necessity of breaking through the enemy's line with stones, and in the best manner they could, in which hardy attempt but 60 escaped, some wounded, others laid consumed, and a few unhurt, and the rest having remained on the field.

The enemy have lost noless than 600 men; and their leader, undeceived in his plan of destroying what the Master of the universe has created, embarked precipitately.

Fire at St. Johns.—By the schooner Parker, Capt. Boyd, which arrived this morning in 8 days from Halifax, we learn, that a great fire occurred, in the latter part of November, at St. Johns, Newfoundland, which destroyed about 250 buildings, including stores, dwelling houses, &c. In one of the stores be-longing to Mr. Carchanks) 800 barrels of flour were consumed. The fire ori-ginated in a Cooper's shop. The loss, in buildings and other property, is esti-mated at 200,000 pounds sterling.— Many of the inhabitants lost their all, and are reduced to a state of extreme poverty; and the whole Town, in con-sequence of the destruction of flour and provisions are suffering severe distress.

Immediately after the fire, the civil authority had an embargo on all vessels in port; and chartered them for the purpose of transporting those of the in-habitants who could leave the town, to other places for subsistance. Several of the vessels, filled with passengers, ar-rived at Halifax on the 1st inst; and the Governor, on learning the extent of this calamity, ordered a number of small ves-sels to proceed to St. Johns, without de-lay, with supplies for the remaining in-habitants.

By this arrival, we have Halifax papers to the 29th ult. They were, how-ever, published before the information of the fire at St. Johns had reached Halifax.

It is stated in the Aurora, that the Amelia Island privateers Hornet and Sarah, have been condemned as prizes to the United States brig Surnac, and were to have been sold at St. Mary's on the 25th inst.

Loss of the Boxer.—Our readers have already been informed of the loss of the U. S. Brig Boxer, near the Mouth of the Mississippi. In a letter to the Editor of the Gazette, Capt. Porter states, that she grounded on a muddy bottom, in 14 feet water, and went to pieces in 24 hours. He also says—"She was so entirely dis-crayed, and so completely full of, that though almost a calm, she continued on it was a providential escape, as we must have been a coffin for us all. Some of her timbers, and other parts of her, have been preserved as curiosities."

The Mayor of the city of Washing-ton has issued his Proclamation, authо-rizing the destruction of all dogs which may be found running at large in that city within thirty days next ensuing.

Something Novel.—Yesterday morn-ing, seven young warriors of the Seneca nation of Indians left this village in the stage, under the charge of messrs. A. C. Fox, of this village, and W. Brigham, of Cheutauque, for New-York—from whence we understand, they are to take passage for Liverpool, England. Their object is to exhibit themselves in all the important towns in England, whence they will proceed to Paris, and after-wards probably, complete the grand tour through Europe. The Indians are all fine looking, active young men, and will undoubtedly afford the Europeans a very novel and interesting exhibition. —Buffalo Journal.

POTATOES.

The following singular statements are given as facts: Early potatoes may be produced in great quantities by rest-ing the plants, after taking off the ripe and large ones. A gentleman at Dun-fries has replanted them six different times this season, without any additio-al manure; and instead of falling off in quantity, he gets a large crop of ripe ones. His plants have still on them three distinct crops, and he supposes they may continue to vegetate and ger-minate until they are stopped by the frost. By this means he has a new crop every eight days, and has had so for six weeks past.

Three potatoes, planted in Moscow, the last season, have produced two bushels and a peck, good measure.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE, YORK;
THURSDAY, JAN. 1, 1818.

A Proclamation in this day's Gazette, appoints the fifth day of February for the meeting of the Provincial Par-liament for the actual despatch of public business.

The general state of repose of the European nations, during the past year, presented very few memorable events to mark the period. A most bountiful harvest throughout almost every part of the globe, has, in a particular man-ner, shed its benign influence over Great Britain, where its failure the preceding year, together with the sudden decline of what may be termed war manufac-tures, and the great addition to an al-ready redundant population, by the re-duction of the naval and military force, caused for a time serious alarms, which were aided and increased by the arts of a few designing men; these however were completely subdued by the vigour of the administration, with the power judiciously vested in it by Parliament for that purpose. The moderate price of provisions, and return of commerce to its natural channels with increased energy, promise to Great Britain still greater power and splendour than she ever before possessed. The United States now deservedly experience the folly of that war which they entered into with such sanguine hopes of con-quest and dominion; with a great in-crease of national debt, they find them-selves deprived of many privileges that they before possessed; and had not the war intervened, as, from their neutral relations, they had nearly become the carriers of the commercial world, the British merchants would have found it very difficult to recover their former ascendency in many markets; but now, in consequence of that event, the case is entirely altered, and the commerce of the States is comparatively insignificant. The results have not been less beneficial to these colonies; having brought their resources, and the loyalty and bravery of their inhabitants, into a most con-spicuous and favourable point of view; affording also an opportunity of ascer-taining who were the real friends of the country, and getting rid of the most dangerous characters: the vast sums of money brought into the country, have given a strong impulse to agricultural improvement; and the large force, both naval and military, that returned to England after the peace, have been the means of dispersing a knowledge of the value and advantages of this Pro-vince, amongst every class of our fel-low countrymen; the effects of which were in some degree felt during the last Summer, and there is every rea-son to suppose, will be far greater the ensuing season. The settlers, aided by the benevolent institutions already established, and others in contempla-tion in different parts of these Pro-vinces, as well as one in London, will be directed to those points most advan-tageous to themselves and the country, and in this manner many thousands may procure immediate employment and a comfortable settlement, without being in the smallest degree burthen-some on any part of the community.

Last week the upper scaffolding of a new building in this town giving way, two men who were on it were precipi-tated to the ground; one escaped un-hurt, the other named Newman having a hammer in his hand, fell on it, when it entering deep into his head caused in-stant death.

At the commencement of the 2d Vo-lume of the Gazette, the Editor feels himself bound to return his most grate-ful acknowledgements for the support he has received, and to promise that no efforts shall be spared to merit a con-tinuance of it—which he can more con-fidently do, from the experience he has acquired, and the constant accession of new Subscribers in every part of the Province, enabling him to incur increas-ed expenses towards making it more extensively useful and interesting; and to which end, any suggestions or com-munications will be thankfully received and cheerfully attended to.

The Editor hopes, that the unavoid-able necessity of referring to the condi-tions of the Gazette, will not give of-fence to any but those who have no in-tention of paying, either in advance or at any other time; to others, when he states that the expences of the Office, which are very heavy, must be settled every week, they will immediately ob-serve that an establishment, which at first was extremely discouraging, and the difficulties of which are only just surmounted, could not be carried on with freedom, unless the Subscriptions are punctually paid in advance, parti-cularly as the other receipts of the Of-fice are distant, and in some instan-ces precarious.

A petition will be presented to the present Congress to add another new state to the Union—Missouri. The number will then be twenty one.

KINGSTON, Dec. 26.

Among the arrivals at the Port of Kingston, the reader will notice the schooner Sir Sidney Smith, which is upon the stocks in that Village, at the same ship-yard where the Frontenac Steam Boat was built. This new Steam Boat, we understand, is releasing to navigate the Bay of Quinte, the waters of which are thought to be peculiarly well adapted to Steam navigation. The building of the only two Steam vessels on the 2 American side of Can-ada at the same place as proved that the locality is favorable in a considerable duration for Ship-build-ing. Of which, indeed there can be no doubt. The whole bay of Ernest Town is advantageous-ly situated for a harbor. The wheels and machi-nery from the sunken boat are in a good state, hav-ing been by the island in front. Nothing seems wanted, but a good substantial Wharf in front of the village, to render the port a very safe and commodious one. The charges heretofore erected there, were injured and suffered to go to decay during the late war, and have not yet been re-built. But we trust a village so advan-tageously situated in relation to the lake, and on a capricious and productive country around it, will not long remain destitute of so necessary an accommodation.

ECONOMY IN DEVOTION.

From the Edinburgh Review, No. LVI.

Article: Travels in Caucasus and Georgia. "Prayer is one of the principal duties enjoined by Lamaism; and the Calmucks discharge this duty in the most exemplary manner, and with very little trouble to themselves.

"It is well known that a Romish priest must say his breviary five times a day. Among other stories which are told of Jesuitical sanctity, it is said that the son of St. Ignatius invented a convenient method of complying with the injunctions of the church.—At the canonical hour, the Jesuit repeats the alphabet from A to Z, to which he adds a short collect, in which he begs that the Christ-cross row may be taken as an equivalent for all the prayers which can be made out of the combination and repetition of the letters. The Calmucks have displayed still greater ingenuity.—We Europeans pride ourselves upon the superiority which we have attained, by substituting machinery for human labour. We think we have accomplished miracles, by employing the "strong arm" of a unconquered steam" in twirling the spindle, or in setting the wool-card in motion. The followers of the Grand Lama have done more—they have invented praying-jennies, which do the business in perfection. It is a doctrine amongst them, and it is a convenient to saints and sinners, that one Calmuck, whether free-thinker or devout, has ever ventured to call it in question) that as often as the paper, or other substance upon which a prayer is written is set in motion, this movement of the written prayer is as meritorious as its oral repetition. The Kuruda, or praying machine, is therefore constructed upon this principle:—it consists of two cylinders, or drums, filled within side, with rolls of paper covered with prayers and ejaculations, written in the Tangutan, or sacred language. The drums are hung in a neat frame, and are kept on the whirl with a string and crank; and every turn of the cylinder is precisely equivalent to the repetition of all the prayers contained in it. The turning the Kuruda is an agreeable pastime in the long evenings of winter; but Tartar ingenuity has discovered a method of dispensing even with the slight degree of exertion which this disagreeable substitute requires. We make "swift to obtain" roast our meat—they employ the smoke-jack to say their prayers for them; and the Kuruda work spins over the fire in the midst of the fair, transfers all its devotional merit to the owner. The Moguls are yet more wisely economical of individual responsibility and labour. Amongst these the inhabitants of a district construct a Kuruda at their joint expence, which is placed in a mill house by the side of a running stream; and this subscription Kuruda is made so large, that it holds prayers enough to serve for all the parish: and, consequently, except in seasons of uncommon drought, when the water is too low to turn the mill which grinds prayers for the parishioners, they are completely exonerated from the obligations of wasting their time in the Church or temple. The Kimorin is another Tartish substitute for devotion, of the same nature. It is a flag, upon which the air horse, or Kimorin is painted, together with an appropriate selection from the Calmuck ritual, such were the consecrated engines seen by Dr. Clarke. As long as the Kimorin flutters in the wind, the inhabitants of [illegible] upon which it is hoisted, are [illegible] their way to Heaven by help of the air horse."

MONTREAL, Dec. 24.
ROBBERIES.

Between Saturday evening and Monday morning last, the store of Mr Andrew Porteus, in St. Paul street, near the new market place, was entered by forcing open the iron door next the yard, the lid of the iron chest was broken in the shop where it stood, from which 766 were taken, another iron chest in the same room, which contained no cash, was not touched. Two cases of merchandize were also carried off, valued at about £150; but the exact quantity of Goods missing cannot be well ascertained—Robberies are now so frequent in this city, that they begin to be regarded as only common occurrences. Can no means be devised either to discover or put a stop to these abandoned wretches who apparently dwell among us, and live on the earnings of the industrious?

Yesterday, about mid-day, the apartments of the reverend Mr. Leads, in St. Jacques street, opposite the English church, were forced open, though some of the family were up stairs at the time. The thief carried off a portmanteau or leather trunk, containing, besides several valuable articles, a Bank Check of one hundred pounds. Notice of the theft was immediately given at the Bank to prevent payment.—Montreal Her.

LONDON, Oct. 21.

MANSION-HOUSE.—The Ship Isabella. Yesterday a number of the persons who had taken their passage on board the Isabella, for New-York, appeared at the Justice-room to prefer their charges against Mr. Guyard, who attended upon summons.

The Lord Mayor observed, that it was unnecessary to state the complaints, the nature of them being pretty widely circulated.

Mr. Guyard said, he should account for his conduct, and he hoped to convince every one that he had acted without any dishonorable view in this unfortunate case. He had been acquainted with Mr. Reynolds, the broker, but a short time; and observing with him one day that a great deal of money was gained by the Mary-Ann, with 250 passengers on board, for New-York, there being reason to suppose the profit was £1000, they agreed to enter into account together in a similar speculation. Mr. Reynolds procured the Isabella for the experiment, but there being an error in intimating the power given by the Act of Parliament relative to passengers bound for the United States, and a total ignorance of the manœuvre played by the Mary-Ann, which then lay in the river, under the pretext of sailing for New-York, he (Mr. Guyard) signed the charter-party on terms much too rigid. It was some time after found that the ship could not clear for New-York with more than 55 passengers, a circumstance which gave a very woeful appearance to the speculation. Provisions had been engaged at a low rate, and what was to be done? In order to obtain the privilege of carrying a sufficient number to make the vessel pay the expences that were accumulating, an order was procured on condition of taking over a number of distressed Germans who had been begging in the streets ever since they landed, but it was procured too late: for the delay that had taken place, and the knowledge of the case at Liverpool, had excited an impatience and terror in the passengers that proved fatal.—Nearly a thousand persons applied and went on board to view the accommodations, but were prevented from making engagements by the passengers, who said the ship would never sail, and that the superior parties concerned were thieves and swindlers. This conduct was persevered in, notwithstanding the attention paid to their comforts. Many of the passengers had contracted to find their own provisions, and all the rest had agreed not to require any till the ship sailed from Gravesend; but in consideration of the delay, they were served with provisions to the fullest extent ordered by the Act of Parliament, as the quantity delivered by the steward would prove. The speculation had been entered upon in error, and although it had proved so ruinous to him, having completely exhausted his means, no allowance was made by the passengers or the owner, who had the bargain too much in his favour. The consequences to the passengers gave him much more uneasiness than his own losses on the occasion; and all he could do should be done. The owner he apprehended, would not wish to go the voyage on account of signing separate bonds at New-York for each passenger individually; but arrangements were pending, which he hoped would succeed, and good securities had been offered, which, if they were accepted, would set every thing right.

The Lord Mayor.—I am to understand from this defence, that you have undertaken an extensive speculation without the means to abide the consequence of a failure: that you have taken the money of these poor people, and are unable to return it, or to perform your contract. Can you lie quietly on your pillow?

Mr. Guyard.—I declare most solemnly, my motive was not bad. That may appear from the ruin in which I am now involved, from erroneously attempting to derive an honorable profit from the business. If the newspapers had been silent, our object would no doubt have been completed, and those poor people would no longer have reason to complain.

The Lord Mayor.—What am I to conclude from the multitude of false statements made by you and Mr. Reynolds, the broker, but that a most gross deception has been practised in which you have both participated?

Mr. Reynolds described the trouble he had undergone in procuring permission to receive an additional number of passengers. He had, he said, in fact, done every thing; but for him the baker would not have sent bread, nor the butcher meat; and but for him the state of the ship would be most wretched, instead of being fit to perform her voyage.

The Lord Mayor.—Am I to understand that 'you will not pay these poor people?

Mr. Guyard.—But for the newspapers we should be able to perform our engagements.

The Lord Mayor.—You and I look upon the effect produced by the exposure of these circumstances in a very different light. The exposure of some nefarious transactions which recently occurred has awakened the people to the deceptions that might be practised upon them. The benefit has been the most important, and if the press was always so judiciously employed as it has been upon this occasion, knaves would be kept at a greater distance.

Mr. Guyard said, all would be well, if the owner would consent to take the securities offered, and allow the vessel to proceed.

The Lord Mayor.—The owner will expect his claim to be answered. He cannot land a number of living beings, and sell them for his freight.

The owner was not present, but the Captain said he understood the securities were nothing but some ordinary bills.

Mr. Reynolds said, that if Mr. Guyard could make up the sum of £122, which had not been accounted for in the enumeration of expences, the ship could proceed.

Mr. Guyard here handed an account of the expences incurred, which amounted to a larger sum in his estimate than that received by him from the passengers.

Mr. Watkins, one of the complainants, said, that there certainly appeared a good deal of activity in getting passengers, but Mr. Reynolds showed an inclination not only to take money in payment, but articles of dress, &c.

A female came forward and stated, that she had, for the purpose of making up the sum of £20, for her own and her husband's passage, given, with £18 in notes, a watch, hair of ones, and a good locket. She had not a farthing remaining, and was obliged to sell her clothes to purchase tea and bread.

The Lord Mayor.—I have every reason to suppose that Parliament will take up the subject next session.—What indemnification do you propose?

Mr. Reynolds said, the owner was willing to let the ship go if the declaration of the charter's bill was made up, and security given for the remainder.

The Lord Mayor suggested, that the owner and Captain should take the responsibility upon themselves, upon receiving from Mr. Guyard all that he was able to give, and that they should make arrangements for more passengers than were now on board.

Mr. Guyard said, he would make up through his friends the sum of £122, and do every thing else required. The suggestion of the Lord Mayor, he thought, would be the best, unless were the prejudice that existed against him. Mr. Guyard amongst the passengers would be an effectual obstacle to an increase in the number.

The Lord Mayor said, if the conduct of Mr. Guyard was dictated by nothing but a spirit of adventure, it was highly criminal; for to venture upon such a speculation without capital, might prove consequences as injurious to the passengers, as if they were set upon the ocean for the purpose of being starved.

Two gentlemen of the city were present, who said they would employ solicitors upon the occasion; and all parties quitted the office upon the impression that, if arrangements of a satisfactory description were not immediately made, the law should be resorted to.

The West Somerset Savings Bank began very auspiciously on Saturday last, the sum of Five Hundred Pounds, in small sums, having been deposited on that day, and Monday about £30 more was paid in. Servants, apprentices, small traders, artisans, and children, constituted the great majority of the depositors. A highly respectable gentleman at Chard, will shortly have in his hands nearly one thousand pounds, which are designed to augment the Funds of the Bank; that sum having been contributed by a number of the inferior, but creditable classes of society in this neighbourhood. Towards this amount, the servants of a distinguished family have supplied upwards of £200. A forcible illustration has been presented of the utility of Savings Banks, in the instance of a Friendly Society in the county of Somerset, the period for the continuance of which has just expired. A gentleman upon the fidelity of whose statement we can most implicitly rely, informs us, that by his calculation it appears, that if the Stock of this Benefit Society, now about to be divided, had been deposited in a Savings Bank, instead of lasting now to divide £1500, the amount belonging to its members would have been no less than £2600! We hope, therefore, soon to hear that every Club in the counties of Devon and Somerset, has transferred its funds to the Savings Bank, and this will undoubtedly be the case, except where the individuals composing these societies are more desirous of rendering them the pretexts for periodical prodigalities, than converting them into real sources of advantage to themselves and families.—London Paper.

Miraculous Escape.—A short time since, as Joseph Durhan, a workman at the colliery of Mr. Young, at Washhall, was leaning over the mouth of the pit, to receive a basket of coal, drawing up by the engine, the rope by which he hold suddenly broke, and Durhan was precipitated head foremost into the pit, which is about 40 fathoms deep; Every one was horror-stricken; they naturally concluded he would be dashed to atoms and his son, a lad on the premises, was frantic; but not a bone of him was broken, nor was even his skin lacerated; In his fall, he providentially grasped the descending rope, which took him safely to the bottom: had he caught the ascending rope, he must have met certain death. He was drawn up, and went about his usual occupation, as if nothing had occurred.

Severe Winter.—The French Engineer Cherrier predicts that the approaching winter will be unusually severe. In a letter published in a Paris paper of the 12th of October, he thus remarks.—"Whether we adopt the period of the lunary nodes, of about nineteen years, whether we admit that the memorable winters correspond with one another in different ages, conforming to a period of a hundred and a hundred and one years, they all promise a rigorous winter: in effect, if regard is had to the period of nineteen years, it will correspond with the winter of 1798, and if we go back to the period of 100 years, it will correspond with the winters of 1683 and 1716."

The Perpetual Motion.—The perpetual motion, so long sought for in vain, appears capable of being effected through the means of galvanism. A French Physician has in his cabinet two gaits-acide piles, sixteen inches high, which attract alternately a pretty heavy beam. The continual oscillation of the beam gives motion to a pendulum which has never stopped for the last three years. The physician is now endeavouring to give the movement an isochronism which may render it more useful.

From the United States.

The London Reviewers, (says the Pennsylvania Gazette,) in a growling criticism on the Journal of Lewis and Clark, thus ridicule the uncouth names by which our intrepid travellers designated many of the geographical points in their route.

"Of all people who ever imposed names upon a newly discovered country, the Americans have certainly been the most unlucky in their choice: Witness, Bigmuddy river, and Littlemuddy river, Little Shallow river, Goodman river, Little Goodman creek, Grindstone creek, Cupboard creek, Biscuit creek, Blowing Fly creek, cum multis aliis in the same delightful taste. When this country, yet a wilderness) shall have its civilized inhabitants, its cities, its schools, and its poets, how sweetly will such names sound in American verse?

"Ye plains where sweet Bigmuddy rolls along
And The pot. one day to be famed in song,
Where wayes on Biscuit and no Grindstone glide,
And willows weave upon Goodman's side;
How shall my harder streams in after time
Taste the soft lay and fill the sonorous rhyme!
Blest lands! where every river and stream verse will swell
On nine inches Pork and double Cannon ball;
Solid cork, & cork Lodge, and two thousand mile
If this time & Cupboard, and Red hazard's Isle!
Flour Little Shallow, there! and he thy Stream
Their sweet example, as it will their theme!
Join with Bum and Onion run, and see Corn shall resign the palm to Blowing Fly,
And Tinsmen and Tugs yield to great Big Silly Dry.

Latest from Leghorn.—The brig Free Ocean, Capt. Bartholomew, from Leghorn, has arrived at Philadelphia. She sailed on the 25th September, and left at this port the brig Good-man, Pearce, for Boston, in 14 days; an hermaphrodite brig from New-York, also lunging; and brig Wilmot, Devereaux, 50 days from Philadelphia, in quarantine, discharging. Off Island Gorgeous, saw bark Camel, of Salem, beating into Leghorn roads. October 6th, Cape Castle, W. N. W. eight leagues, fifteen sail in sight, saw a sloop of war, close under the Castle, fire into a French brig and board her; after detaining her two hours, she bore away under a heavy press of canvass, for a large English ship on my weather gage, fired into her, and run under her stern, but did not board; during all this time showing no flag. She then ran under my stern, and made for two brigs (first hauling her wind) standing to the westward, firing into them, and brought them to; night coming on lost sight of them, and several of us stood away for the coast of Barbary; at midnight hauled up for the Spanish coast, fell in with and spoke British ship Caledonia, of and for London, who had been brought to by the sloop of war—she proved an Algerine, plundering all she boarded, and capturing or destroying all Spanish and Italian vessels. Captain ——, of the ship Caledonia, saw the Algerine frigate, at dark, bear away for Algiers, with two brigs in company. October 8, off Trafalgar, after hoisting the American flag, was fired into by a Spanish frigate, who hauled up for Cadiz, several sail in company. The reasons of an European writer for the extraordinary population of China.

"The superstition of the people, which makes them deem it unhappy to die without posterity, produces early and universal marriage.

"For many ages the country has been free from the ravages of war.

"The land, being all of it at the Emperor's, is not divided into large estates among the great lords, but into small portions among the cultivators.

"Almost every thing in China being done by human labour, and there being scarcely any beasts of burthen, and but few reared for the table, a greater proportion (the whole with very little debate) of the produce of the soil goes immediately, in China, to the maintenance of human beings, than in any other country."

But the Chinese, notwithstanding for so many ages they have kept good so great a population, are far from happy. According to the concurrent testimonies of recent travellers, as well French as English, the appearance of the generality of the people they saw, in their journies, by different routes to Pekin, was wretchedly squalid. Only half a century ago, China was represented as the Eden of the world—the seat of primeval simplicity, of pure morals, and of exemplary order, of arts and science, and in short, of human felicity. But since the interior of that country has been in some measure explored by intelligent and honest travellers, the illusion is vanished.

Colonization Society.—The following Address of the New-York Auxiliary Colonization Society, we have necessarily, and reluctantly, declined until to-day. It is drawn up with much ability, and will be perused with more than ordinary interest.—

ADDRESS.

The Managers, appointed by the New-York Auxiliary Colonization Society, have the honor of addressing their fellow citizens, and of submitting, to their candid consideration, the considerations which led to the formation of this institution.

The evil of slavery is now happily universally acknowledged; and even those, in favour of the majesty of the system, need not be urged to this commonly. Every man, in his own case, would consider involuntary servitude as a great misfortune; and every philanthropist will view it as the cause for the sighs of every one of the surrounding sons. All honorable civilians in favour the policy or the necessity which may deprive any member of the community of his natural rights; and the principal nations of Christendom are at last induced to employ their power for putting an end to the unsolicited traffic in human souls and bodies. The tendency of this extraordinary age is to universal emancipation.

The only argument, indeed, in favour of holding the African race in bondage, which can with any plausibility be offered, is this other, wise free and happy country, to the necessity of the case; and the question, to which this plea must can be presented to the light of reason and religion, is that, under existing circumstances, the slaves themselves are happier in their servile state than they could be if set at their liberty. This plea is founded upon the supposition, that those coloured people who are already free are still degraded and wretched, and that anarchy, with concomitant crimes and insupportable misery, would be the certain consequence of a general and sudden emancipation.

There is no mode of truth in this hypothesis, whether urged by the voice of avarice or the voice of humanity, that it would avail nothing under the argument with such rights or premises granted, the violation of human rights. The present is a time rather for action than declamation. Let something be done which will effectually put an end to this crime and calamity of our common country. Allow the freed people of colour, who are now amongst us, the means of becoming respected and happy, and present both to the slaveholder and to the slave himself a similar prospect, for those who shall hereafter become free, and you have destroyed effectually the argument from necessity. I do not claim, by the steady prosecution of which the Africa race may be elevated to national independence, accompanied with the moral and religious improvement of the collective body, and you consider a blessing upon them and upon your country.

This is the object of colonization societies. The object is great, humane and every way unexceptionable, and it is the practicable, exertions are wise and praiseworthy.

To colonize the free people of colour, who are willing to emigrate from the United States to Africa, is the object proposed to itself by this society, formed on the first day of January last at the seat of government, in the city of Washington. It is the same grand object which this society is formed as an auxiliary, intends to promote; and is it not desirable to afford to freemen of the African race the opportunity, if possible, of forming, in the land of their fathers, a colony of civilized and christian people, who may ultimately attain the rank of an independent commonwealth?

Is it possible to place them in a condition for the cultivation of their own talents and for the display of those talents, not only as husbandmen, mechanics and merchants, but as physicians and counsellors, as professors in the schools of literature and science, as divines, and as statesmen of every rank? Is it thus, only, that this hitherto oppressed race, can in fact be raised to the proper standing of men.

It is evident that the condition of the blacks, who are in possession of their personal liberty in our country, is not a condition of equality with their neighbours in point of respectability or enjoyment; and it is considered that it cannot become so, at any supposed future period. Prodigality, whatever be the talents and the wealth of a negro, he is doomed to inferiority of rank in society. He never can enjoy equal and honorable intercourse with the white population in the circles of the honors of either private or public life. The people of colour are in fact a different cast of society, and even where there is no law, no intention to oppress them, they are treated by the sense of society, a force superior to the civil law, from rising to equal honour and power. This dire preclusion, while it perpetually wounds the sensibility of the most respectable and the most aspiring, must always prevent steady and general exertion in the path of improvement. What is hopeless will not be attempted. It is only with the more humble part of the white population that they can ever expect to mingle on an equal footing, and intimate connexions of this degraded stamp are unfriendly of general tendency. Poverty and crime naturally associate with hopeless depression, and are thus by the very constitution of society almost necessarily entailed upon the African in despite of his freedom. The calamity comes as a heavy burden by a natural pression upon the body politic. By swelling the list of criminals and paupers the free negroes greatly increase the annual expences of this city; and were New-York to contribute for the colonization of the people of colour a sum every year, equal to what is expended in bringing the culprits of that race to trial and to punishment and in the maintenance both of the convicts and the innocent poor, we should not despair of sufficient funds to answer the ends of this institution. The trouble and the danger of nourishing the adders and the blacks in the chimney corner of our hearts in the same family, are known to every householder. And the very existence of two such distinct classes of servants, as a slave in the city or the country, is injurious to the interests of the employer and the employed. The existence of this Mosaic race amongst us therefore, is to a great extent a burden, whether based on free, must be acknowledged as an evil both moral and political.

The remedy is only in the removal of them to a climate where a voluntary removal is a desired removal, until the number in our country becomes so small as to produce no sensible effect. But how is this to be effected? It is chiefly to be understood that compulsion is not to be exercised. Were such means possible, they would be inapplicable and unjust. The Colonization Societies disclaim utterly the application of force, for the removal from the country of any unwilling class or woman, under any pretence whatever. There is no alternative, except to put, in the power of the descendants of Africa to emigrate voluntarily with safety to themselves, and under full protection. This is the only practicable remedy.

Another enquiry now presents itself ——— Where should the colony be established? The answer is obvious. In that vast country which is possessed of the same hue of complexion and of similar features, and of similar habits, the land of their Fathers. Let them return voluntarily and peacefully return, with their own hands, and with the improvements of civilization and religion, to that country from which they were originally and improperly forced by cruel hands. There, they may be honorable; there they may be useful; there they may remain in their patrimonial heritage under which their redemption was effected, and be raised to that Ethiopian freedom the blessings with which they were themselves restored—the blessings of rational religion. Thus too, the curse of slavery may be ultimately removed from this christian country; and the Providence of God may be justified through the agency of his children. Then will it be manifest that the Ruler of the world was wise and just in permitting slavery and raising up the sons and daughters of benighted and guilty Africa, and sell them, as lots to a land in which they received instruction, and from which they were, at the appointed time, returned in increased knowledge and liberty, and true religion, the reformation of the numerous tribes which people the benighted of the Great Desert, and the banks of the mighty streams hitherto unexplored, the Niger and the Congo.

Such sentiments, however regards ought to animate the friends of African Colonization. Difficulties, it is true, may occur, and do actually occur to the most sanguine. But what great enterprise has not had its difficulties to surmount? Wisdom and perseverance have before overcome insurmountable obstacles which appeared at first insurmountable. Time may effect favorable changes in the case as well as in any other. Successful experiments of the most obstinate admonish us to go forward.—The Africa Schools, and the seminaries for educating men of colour for the ministry of the Gospel, are experiments, with various knowledge. ——— enterprise, which the friends and the general diffusion of the spirit of freedom are all contributing their influence in favor of ultimate success. The reverse of Europe, and the pledge which the great powers of the civilized world have given us in favour of the Africa race, and the safety of a peaceable christian Colony in that country; and the government of the United States may obtain by negociation a further cession. It does not appear at any rate, that any reasonable objection can be offered against making the experiment. The expences of such a colony must be great. Of this there is no doubt. But the work must be gradual in its progress; and on a scale corresponding with the means. In proportion as the means will accumulate. A great number of the people of colour are able to bear the cost of emigration, and with adequate prospects would be as willing to emigrate as Europeans are to leave their native country for this or other parts of the world.

In the experience of the colony of Sierra Leone objected to the plan proposed?—That settlement is obviously in ill favour. The colony referred to had its enemies; but it is now confessedly in a prosperous state. The causes which impeded its progress are known, and may readily be avoided. A better country, and a better climate, than the site of that colony may now be selected. And better means shall more ample provisions for the safety of the co- lonists, may be secured for the first settlement.

Shall it no said the whole plan of colonizing the people of colour is intended for the aid of the southern slave-holders in our country? that that they may thereby get free the burdensome and more dangerous portion of their slaves, for the purpose of more effectually securing the services of the remaining portion, and so perpe- tuate, with more safety to themselves, the evil of which we complain? What then? Shall we suffer to escape without improvement, an op- portunity of doing great good, for fear that a few men should derive personal advantage from it? Or for a greater humanity, to urge to revolt, and to massacre the slaves of the south, that to afford the sure means of gradual emancipa- tion?

The character of the active Managers of the Colonization Society, is a sufficient pledge to the public of a discreet administration of their power and should they betray their trust, there is a re- medy in the annual election. The wisdom of the Board of Managers, is a pledge that they will not be precipitated upon the aged and the lame, for colonists; and their integrity, is a guarantee, that they will not themselves prac- tise imposition on the public. We may trust, moreover, in the influence of the purely pa- triotic and moral principles of civil liberty, toge- ther with the knowledge of the fact, should this come to be the case, that there exists beyond the atlantic a constantly increasing and flourish- ing community of American people of colour, as an- cient, ultimately, to render slavery impossible in the southern states, while it affords the means of putting an end to it without rapine and with- out anarchy. Many already believe, and in deed it cannot be doubted by all that, the southern slave-holder could, with more ad- vantage to his interest, parcel out his large plan- tations into small tenements for rent to industri- ous negroes, enjoying the fruits of their own, to service, rather than to have them worked, under the lash of the whip, by those who have no motive but fear to influence their labour.

There can, however, be no doubt that mate- rials for a skilful, orderly and industrious colo- ny may be selected from among the people of colo in the several states. Only let them have the means of emigration, and the assurance of subsequent protection and success, and a suffi- cient number will, probably, offer themselves. The cities of the southern and northern states a- bound with active laborers and enterprizing ar- tificers of this race. There are religious and moral characters well instructed among them. They have their own preachers and class leaders, in their respective societies; and they have ample capacity for further improvement and for self go- vernment. A colony of American blacks might be formed, which, for all the purposes of mak- ing a distinct nation, has never perhaps been excelled by any colony which formed a new settlement within the period which history de- scribes.—Why then, not use means for making the experiment?

If an effort is at all to be made, for removing from the midst of us the people of colour, it sure- ly should be used on the coast of Africa, and not in any of the territories in our own country. A repatriation so desirable in every point of view both for their improvement and our comfort, could not be effected without removing them to a very easie district. However distant the district, which would be selected, the rapidly spreading population of the country would soon bring them a- gain in contact with the white settlements; the evil for which we had provided, at great labour and expence, this partial remedy would a- gain recur with increasing violence; and, in the mean time, the experiment would be deprived of all to our republican institutions, and individual safety. Such a Colony, within the United States must be kept in vassalage, or submitted as a distinct and independent member of the Federal Republican family, number of which would be expedient or consistent with sound policy — Such a district, would, it is also to be feared, prove a present benefit to the rest of the colony be established? INDIAN WAR.

The marching of troops to the frontier, and the other hostile preparations that are making- give to the approaching conflict with the Semi- nole Indians all the pomp and parade of war. Within a few days, a number of companies have passed through here, on their way to the place of rendezvous. The detachment from this state, amounting to nearly 1000 men, assembled at Fort Hawkins yesterday, and will resume their march in a few days, on towards friendly Creeks, headed by their distinguished warrior M'Intosh, have espoused our cause, and are hastening with alacrity to the scene of battle—Gen Gaines has with him at Fort Scott, 700 regulars. The whole, when united, will be a formidable force in Indian warfare. On the other hand, the strength of the Seminoles has been also consi- derably increased by reinforcements; all the Red-Sticked Creeks and Cherokees, that they are not few, having gone to their assistance. A bloody conflict may therefore be expected, if the Indians determine to give us battle, in an open and spirited manner; but if they seek refuge in the impenetrable swamps and hammock land- ings with which the country they inhabit a- bounds—or, if the progress of our arms should be checked, by an unwillingness in the com- manding general to enter the Spanish territory, the chastisement the savages merit, and which otherwise awaits them, may probably be averti- ed.

The subjoined intelligence of the commence- ment of hostilities, was received by the Execu- tive on Thursday. The order was issued, and on the Pulaski troop of cavalry, a company of infantry from Wilkinson, and another from Laurens, for the protection of the frontier below Hartford.

Copy of a letter from Major General Gaines to the Governor of Georgia, dated at Fort Scott, near the confluence of the Flint and Chatahoo- chie rivers 21st of Nov. 1817.

Sir—The first brigade of the United States troops arrived at this place on the 18th inst I had previously sent a runner to notify the Fowl Town chief, Eneha-mat-hly, of my arrival, and, to ascertain whether his hostile temper had re- lented regarded him to visit me—he replied that he had already said to the commanding officer here, all he had to say, and that he would not come.

He had warned Major Twiggs not to cross, or cut a path of wood on the han side of Flint ri- ver, alledging the land was his, that he was di- rected by the powers above and below, to pro- tect and defend it, and he should do so. This being the talk referred to and his town having continued to be hostile ever since the late war —having paid no heed to the friendly hints as- sert in the proclamation I was carried on for some time past against the Georgia frontier, I yester- day detached 200 men (supposed to be about the strength of the town) under the command of Major Twiggs with orders to bring to me the chief and warriors, and in the event of resis- tance, to treat them as enemies—The detach- ment arrived at the town early this morning at 8 o'clock, were instantly fired upon but without effect. The fire was briskly returned by the detach- ment, and the Indians put to flight with the loss of four warriors slain—and, as there is rea- son to believe, many more wounded.

Among the articles found in the house of the chief, was a British uniform coat (scarlet) with a pair of gold epaulettes, and a certificate signed by a British captain of marines, "Robert White is the bearer of Col. Nichols," stating that the will and has always been a true and faithful friend to the British."

The reports of friendly Indians concur in es- timating the number of hostile Indians, includ- ing the Red Sticks and Seminoles, at more than 2000 warriors independent of the blacks at and near Suwannee; within 200 miles of this place, amounting to near 400 men, and increasing by the addition of every runaway from Georgia flee to get to them. The friendly Indians in- form me, that the party and blacks have been promised a British force to assist them, from New-Providence. This promise, though made by Nichols and Woodbine, is nevertheless relied on by these deluded wretches, who, I have no doubt, will use for peace, as they find their hopes of British aid to be without founda- tion.

I have called the militia from Fort Hawkins to this place, and have directed Col. Brearly to confer with your excellency upon the subject of an additional battalion for the protection of the frontier from Okmulgee to St. Mary's.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant

ED. P. GAINES, M. G. Comd'ng.

Extract from a letter of a gentleman now in Eu- rope, to his friend in this town, dated

"BERLIN, April 18, 1817.

"Freyburg is situated in the Erzegebirge, (mineral mountains) which separate Saxony from Bohemia, and is the most considerable sil- ver mine now worked in Europe; and is also very important as being the seat of the great mi- neralogical school under the direction of Werner, the head of the so called Wernerian geological system—In this place are 92 mines now worked, which produce principally silver, lead and cobalt. The ore is by no means rich compared with most that is worked in South A- merica; but by economical management it is made productive The richest veins afford e- bout 8 to 6 ounces of silver to 100 lbs. of ore, and the poorest no more than one quarter as much. The average annual product is 400,000, to gain which 600 miners are employed. Werner and his answer to some queries I made about the advantage of working these mines, that while the profits were small, nothing by them, it was surely best to work them, as they employed so many hands, increased the existing specie capi- tal of the kingdom by the amount produced and even if all this was expended, it was still a- mong its own people. The process of amalga- mation is here unique in its kind, being a com- bination of the chemical and mechanical by which a great waste of quicksilver is prevented. It is my intention to give this article that they are enabled to go on. When the consumption of it a quarter so much as in America, the cost would be greater than the proceeds.

The average depth of the mines now open, is from one third to our sixth of an English mile. — In one I went into was about 1600 feet per- pendicular descent, and as they have no means of going down or up, but by a common ladder, I found myself sometimes sufficiently tired. As I was going through the first, I was quite disposed to do all the truth of Virgil—Facilis descensus," but when I came to reverses gravis, I was well enough pleased to ascend again. The mines are perfectly safe, we passed our way through the narrow work, silver lined and arch- ed over with stone, which led from mine to mine for at least two English miles. I must place the sensations which I then felt, among the most sublime I ever experienced, in one place were heard the thundering, terrific noise of the water- which serve to carry up the water; in another the rending and shaving of the rocks as they are blasted by the powder, and others were so deep and distant that we heard nothing but the reverberating of our voices, and foot-steps. Now the glitter of the most brilliant sky was reflected from innumerable crystals which hung over us, and now we penetrated to darkness so deep, that our lamps scarcely afforded light e- nough to let us pass in safety.

I was quite charmed with Werner. I have scarce ever seen a more amiable man. His heart seems made up of charities. He conversed with me a long while upon the subject of our Indians, and was shocked at the idea of ex- terminating them. He thinks they may be civi- lized and christianized —Ib. Gaz.

LATE AND IMPORTANT.

Capture of General Mina—by the arrival at this port this forenoon, of the schooner Cuba, Capt. Clackner, in 12 days from Havana, we are enabled to present our readers the following interesting intelligence, received at that place from Capt Montgomery, just arrived from Vera Cruz Capture of the valiant Mina, by Col. Orrantia. H. E. The viceroy has just received by an extraordinary Courier, the following communi- cation

Most Excellent Sir—Long live the king. The Court of Sitas, under date of the 27th. at 7 o- clock in the evening, writes me as follows ESTEEMED SIR—At last we have obtained the fruit of our labors—Mina has been taken alive and is now entering this place. They also bring the two Englishmen, who have been taken the two other Herreras, a Frenchman and other officers of their infantry. We killed several when we attacked them, which was by surprise All this has been achieved by Senor Orrantia, who left here at 6 o'clock at night with cavalry for el Bandito near la Hachiepanco; which news so interesting, I communicate for the sa- tisfaction of your excellency and of all the good and loving subjects of our sovereign, and I shall consider it very complete, if it gets to hand as expeditiously as I wish.

To H. E. the Viceroy Don Juan,

Buiz de Apodaca.

His Excellency not wishing to delay one mo- ment the communication of such agreeable in- telligence to the faithful vassals of the king our Lord, has commanded the immediate insertion of it in an Extraordinary Gazette, expecting at every moment to receive the particulars of this important event.—(Extraordinary Gazette of the Government of MEXICO, Friday, 31st Octo- ber 1817.)

The rumour of Gen. Gaines being in a criti- cal situation is not credited at Washington. It is not mentioned that a slight skirmish had taken place in which 6 or 8 Indians were killed, and his prospects were favorable.

Duane, in his last Aurora, gives us the follow- ing intelligence —

"By late readers the sufferings of Don Onis must astonishing to every tasteful mind, in the humble standard of his intellect; and the stone which he has constantly cast upon the United States. We have a letter of his before us at the moment we are writing, in which he describes congress as a chamorous mob in a tavern—and the coun- try requiring only a few thousand Spaniards, and British ships to divide the states into three petty republics—but we shall give a translation of the letter at large in a future paper.—Mercan- tile Gazette.

The English Officers—The Aurora states, that on Monday, the District Attorney presented to the Grand Jury, bills against the British Officers imprisoned in Philadelphia; and on Tuesday the Grand Jury pronounced that there appeared no cause for their trial.

The loss of the Steam-Boat Telegraph, on the Mississippi, is confirmed in some of the southern papers. It is stated that she struck upon what is called a snag. In the night, and went down so suddenly, that her whole cargo was lost, and four of the persons on board were drowned.—N. Y. Spec.

A letter from Cork says, that "the fever has considerably decreased among the poor, but in- creased among the rich, among whom it be- come very fatal." The letter gives some in- stances of the latter assertion.—Ib.

At Cork, the Sally, from Quebec

From the New York Spectator.

Latest from England.—By the arrival last evening of the ship Amity, Captain Stanford, in 44 days from Liverpool, we have received, from our London Cor- respondent, London papers to the even- ing of the 25th of October; Lloyd's List to the 24th; and the London New Price Current to the 24th, all in haste. By the same arrivals we have also Liver- pool papers and Mercantile letters to the 25th. Extracts from each will be found under their respective heads

In the Courier of the 25th of October, (a Ministerial print,) we are happy to find the following remark — It is gra- tifying to be able to assure our readers, that every fresh accounts from America affords reason to believe that the desire to be on the most friendly footing with Great Britain, animates more and more the Councils of the American Govern ment. Prejudices are rapidly giving way to wiser views of the true interest and policy of both countries, and we anve every reason to believe that all the discussions and negociations between the two Governments will terminate to the satisfaction of both."

A report was published in several of the London papers, on the 23d of Oc- tober, that a Russian fleet from Revel was expected at Portsmouth, with ten thousand troops on board. The Courier of the same day expresses strong doubts of there being troops on board; but thinks it not at all improbable, that the ships, on their way to Cadiz, may touch at Portsmouth for fresh provisions and water.

Letters from Merchants at Lisbon, were received in London, announcing that a Spanish army had entered Por- tugal, and was approaching the capital. The Courier of the 25th of October, in contradicting the statement contained in these letters, thus remarks "such inventions has been excited in the pub- lic mind by the reports which have ar- rived from Spain and Portugal, with respect to the march of troops on the frontiers of those kingdoms. It is well known, that no study discussions have for a length of time existed between the two courts, occasioned by the ad- vance of the Portuguese forces on the left bank of the river of Plate; but we are sure it will be satisfactory to the public to learn, on information on which they may entirely rely, that both of those Governments have agreed to ac- cept the mediation of the five Powers who are parties to the Grand Alliance, and we may, therefore, look with con- fidence to the speedy and amicable ter- mination of all those differences which were tending to disunite the Crowns of Spain and Portugal. It is with peculiar satisfaction that we feel ourselves en- abled to make this statement, which must certainly remove all uneasiness on the subject."

A letter from the Agents to Lloyd's at Genoa, dated on the 13th of October, and published in the Courier on the 24th, communicates the following im- portant commercial information:—"We enclose you a copy of an Edict of the Emperor of Germany, dated Milan, 2d instant, by which it appears that all fo- reign cotton and woollen manufactures are prohibited in his Dominions. This Decree will seriously injure the trade of this place, as by every vessel which ar- rives from England, a third part of the cargo is for houses in Leghorn, who deal in those articles."

A remarkable instance of the rapid fluctuation in the price of British stocks, occurred on the 23d of October. The London Traveller of that day states this extraordinary fluctuation, and assigns the causes of it as follows:—"A great fall took place this morning in the price of Stocks—Consols opened at 82, fell to 81 1-2, 81, 80 1-2 1-4; 90, for the Account, and 79 3-4 7-8 for money.— At one o'clock, they were at 80 7-8 81. This depression was in consequence of the warlike preparations in this coun- try. It is positively stated that several provision merchants have been applied to, to furnish meat and biscuit, as well as 10,000 tons of shipping for the con- veyance of troops and stores. Ru- mour further adds, that a fleet of men of war and frigates is ordered to be pro- visioned for four months, and to sail immediately for the Mediterranean.— The late frequent meetings of the Ca- binet Council are said to have been for the purpose of taking into conside- ration the refusal of the Spaniards to give up one of the fortresses in that quarter, ceded to England by the late Treaty. The dispute does not appear likely to be amicably arranged. These, and the rumours already noticed, have had the effect of lowering the Funds three per cent. in the course of two days, and from the present feeling of the public, a further depression is ex- pected. When the house opened this morning, scarcely any buyers could be had even at a quarter below the market price. The Commissioners gave 79 7-8 Reduced, and were served by one broker."

The annual session of the States Ge- neral of Holland, was opened on the 20th of October, by a Speech from the King.

Lord Wellington returned to London on the 25th of October, for a few days, on his own private affairs.

Extract of a letter from Walterhamp- ton, Eng. dated Oct. 18, 1817.

"All kinds of manufactured goods are upon the advance, and orders are very good, especially iron; the latter has advanced six pounds per ton, and likely to go on farther, owing to the great demand for that article.

"A large contract has recently been made with France, which will employ all the iron works in this part of the country for eighteen months. It is strongly believed that parliament at their next session will lay a duty on iron."

The hon. Henry Erskine, died at his seat at Ammondel, on the 8th inst. The Right. Hon. John P. Curran, the orator, died at his house at Brompton.

CORK EXCHANGE, Oct. 17.—We have some fresh arrivals with wheat this morning, from East and Kent no rise in price.

Letters from Liverpool state, that the arrivals from the U. S. are expected to be immense, when the wind becomes fair for coming in. The price of A- merican flour, is 53 a 55s per bl; Cana- da do. 46 a 48s,

Letters from Avignon received in Paris, state that the olive vintage had failed, and that a high price for oil was expected.

The Legislature of Ver mont has passed a law imposing a fine of seven dollers, for passing a bill of any bank not payable in specie.

Among the indictments found last week in the grand jury, was one a- gainst a woman as a common scold! She was bound over to the next term to take her trial. The punishment for this offence, under the common law, we understand is three duckings, by the hands of the sheriff. An eminent coun- sellor, however, has offered to clear the prisoner, by satisfying the jury that she is not a common but an uncommon scold. This case, at all events, holds out a serious admonition to Antippes. Albany Argus.

On Thursday last the President no- tified the Senate of his approbation of the resolution for the admission of the state of Mississippi into the union.

On Friday, a bill was brought for- ward in the House of Representatives, for the purpose of establishing a uniform system of bankruptcy in the United States: this bill was read twice and re- ferred to a committee of the whole for Monday.

A Bill is provide for, and grant half pay to the officers and soldiers of the revolutionary war, was also brought forward, read twice, and referred to a committee of the whole for Tuesday.

Repeal of the Internal Taxes.—The House of Representatives of the U. S. have passed the bill, submitted to them by the Committee of Ways and Means, for the repeal of the whole of the Inter- nal Taxes. The votes were, for the repeal 161—against 5.—N. Y. Gaz.

A Resolution has passed the senate of Georgia, appropriating £100,000 for the improvement of the internal naviga- tion of the state—out of which sum £20,000 to be appropriated for clearing the navigation of Savannah river; 20,000 for the Ocmee—£20,000 for the Oc- mugee—£4000 for the Altamaha—and 5000 for the Ogechee.—Id.

A claim for land.—A petition is before Congress from an honest couple in Vir- ginia, praying for a grant of land, on the ground that they have added twenty children to the population of the public. This we believe is a new case, and is considered by some to give as fair a claim as that of the soldier, for the de- struction of his species.—Id

Statistical.—The census of Georgia just taken, makes the population 349, 410; of which 175,951 are whites.

The slave population of the Island of Barbadoes, according to the census of the present year, is 77,272.

Just as our paper was going to press, we were informed of the loss of the Steam Boat Lexington, near Natchez;—four persons drowned; none of her cargo saved. This accident happened during the night when the passengers were in bed, and was caused by the vessel run- ning on a snag. (Kentucky paper.

MESSRS. PRINTERS,

Having seen in the public papers the description of several Pumpkins, Tur- nips, Beets, &c. which were classed a- mong the wonderful—I send you a few Cabbages to cook with them, viz. on a piece of ground in Westbrook, 15 feet wide, and 48 feet long, there grew this season 153 Cabbages

129 of which weighed £1340

24 were not weighed, say at 8lbs. each 192

153 Making in the whole 1732

At the above rate there will grow up- on an acre of ground 8976 Cabbages, which, at 76 cents per dozen, will a- mount to £ 561.00 and weigh nearly forty-five and an half tons.

All the labour in digging the ground, transplanting, hoeing and pulling did not exceed eight hours of one man.

Several of the above Cabbages, weigh- ed 28 pounds a piece;

On the same farm was raised this season, on three quarters of an acre of ground, 615 bushels of Carrots equal to 820 bushels per acre, and weighing 48lbs per bushel, will make nearly eighteen tons!

There was likewise raised on half an acre of ground, over 1 thousand pump- kins, which were fully ripe; the average weight of which, would exceed 16 lbs. each. Many of them weighed from 28 to 30 lbs. each.—The same ground like- wise produced a good crop of Indian Corn and Peas.

THURSDAY, JAN. 8, 1818.

About a quarter past five o'clock in the evening of Wednesday the 31st ultimo, a luminous body was observed in the air, which exploded in front of the Town, with two loud reports and a strong blaze of light. The light and reports were so instantaneous, that although the noise was very gene- rally heard, few persons agree in the description of its appearance and course. Having only heard the noise, we are not able to describe the meteor, if it was one; some supposing that it was a mass of ignited matter thrown from the burning mountain at the head of the Lake. Exactly at the same time of the year in 1795, a shock of an earthquake was felt here, when a large portion of the table rock at the Falls of Niagara was thrown down; at this time, how- ever, as far as we can learn, no tremor of the earth was felt.

From the New-York Advertiser.

The work which has lately appeared in England, under the title of "A Sketch of the Military and Political Power of Russia, in 1817"—which is ascribed to Sir Robert Wilson, is calculated to excite considerable attention among all classes of readers. Sir Robert Wilson has been long known as the author of a work, on the French Campaign in Egypt and more recently as one of the three persons who effected the escape of Lavalette from prison, after he had received a sentence of death. In this former work, he first brought before the world the charges against Bonaparte, of Bayonetting poisoned his sick soldiers at Jaffa, and having ordered, whilst in Egypt, the massacre of several hundred Turkish prisoners. He is author of the Sketch of the power of Russia, his sentiments have apparently experienced a material change with regard to the general character of the former object of his severe reproaches. This book discloses him to be rather the panegyrist, than the assailant, of Bonaparte.

In a rapid review of the military and political affairs of Europe, from the invasion of Russia in 1812, to the second dethronement of the French Emperor, and the restoration of Louis the 18th in 1815, he states many interesting particulars concerning the various powers of Europe, and their schemes of policy. His work, on this point, would have been more valuable, had he given his authorities for many things which he has asserted, but which now stand exclusively on his own credit.

In adverting to the present state and future plans and prospects of Russia, his book becomes still more entertaining. The disposition of the present Emperor of that mighty empire, to improve the political, military, literary, moral, and religious condition of his subjects, is well known and acknowledged. Perhaps no sovereign in the history of Modern Europe, has ever enjoyed so strong a disposition, or so favourable an opportunity, for doing such extensive good to his country, as Alexander. Should he live to the age of seventy, and execute his gigantic plans for the amelioration of Russia, his power must, of of necessity, become immense, and probably irresistable.

The following extract from the book under consideration, will furnish our readers with a sample of the work, and convey to them some important information concerning certain portions of the Russian Empire.

"To what extent Alexander has accomplished all his undertakings, without forgetting the interests he was bound to protect, may be difficult to prove, since there is no direct mode to ascertain the opinion of his subjects by the discussions of a free press; but as far as the prevalence of tranquillity in every province under his sway—as far as ostensible improvements, in all military economy, and general order in all branches of the administration can authorise the presumption, an extraordinary amelioration must have taken place. Bodies of recruits, of wings [illegible] of the used to perish in the journey, now arrive with no more than common casualties; and so far from the spirit of the people being worn down by demands for military service and augmentation of taxes, patriotism has acquired devotional ardour, and the state has not found it necessary to impose any additional burthens upon its inhabitants.

The ground on which the town of Odessa now stands did not contain, in the year 1794 one house or inhabitant: now there are one thousand houses of stone, and above forty thousand residents. Eight hundred ships annually sail from the port; and such quantities of corn are exported, that this part of the world, as in the time of the Greeks and Romans, promises to be the chief granary of the Mediterranean.

Taganrok, near the mouth of the Don, in the sea of Azof, is no less prosperous.

Astrakan, at the mouth of the Volga, by the last treaty with Persia (which gives the exclusive navigation of the Caspian Sea to the Russian flag) has obtained equal advantages.

The Internal Navigation from the White and Baltic to the Caspian and Black Seas have been improved by various great works, and others are in progress.

The city of Petersburgh has been embellished at the expence of five millions of roubles annually; so that three fourths of the houses are now palaces of stone, and the city itself has become the most magnificent in the world, for its buildings, its quays, its canals, and "the pellucid waters" of the Majestic Neva.

The impulse has not been confined to the European provinces; but Siberia, to which such terrible images have been attached, from the supposed intolerable rigour of its climate, and its associating idea of misery and utmost sufferance, is become a fertilized and productive country, inhabited by voluntary settlers—and amongst them many foreigners: and not only the city of Tobolsk, carried by every species of European and Asiatic luxury, is growing into a very considerable capital, distributing civilization around—but Irkoutsks also, at the distance of three thousand seven hundred and seventy four miles from Moscow, and not four hundred from the frontier of China, has become the seat of considerable and flourishing government.

Communications are open in all directions, even to Kamtschadalka and the port of St. Peter and St. Paul, at the distance, by Obotsk, in the Pacific, of eight thousand seven hundred and thirty miles from Moscow.

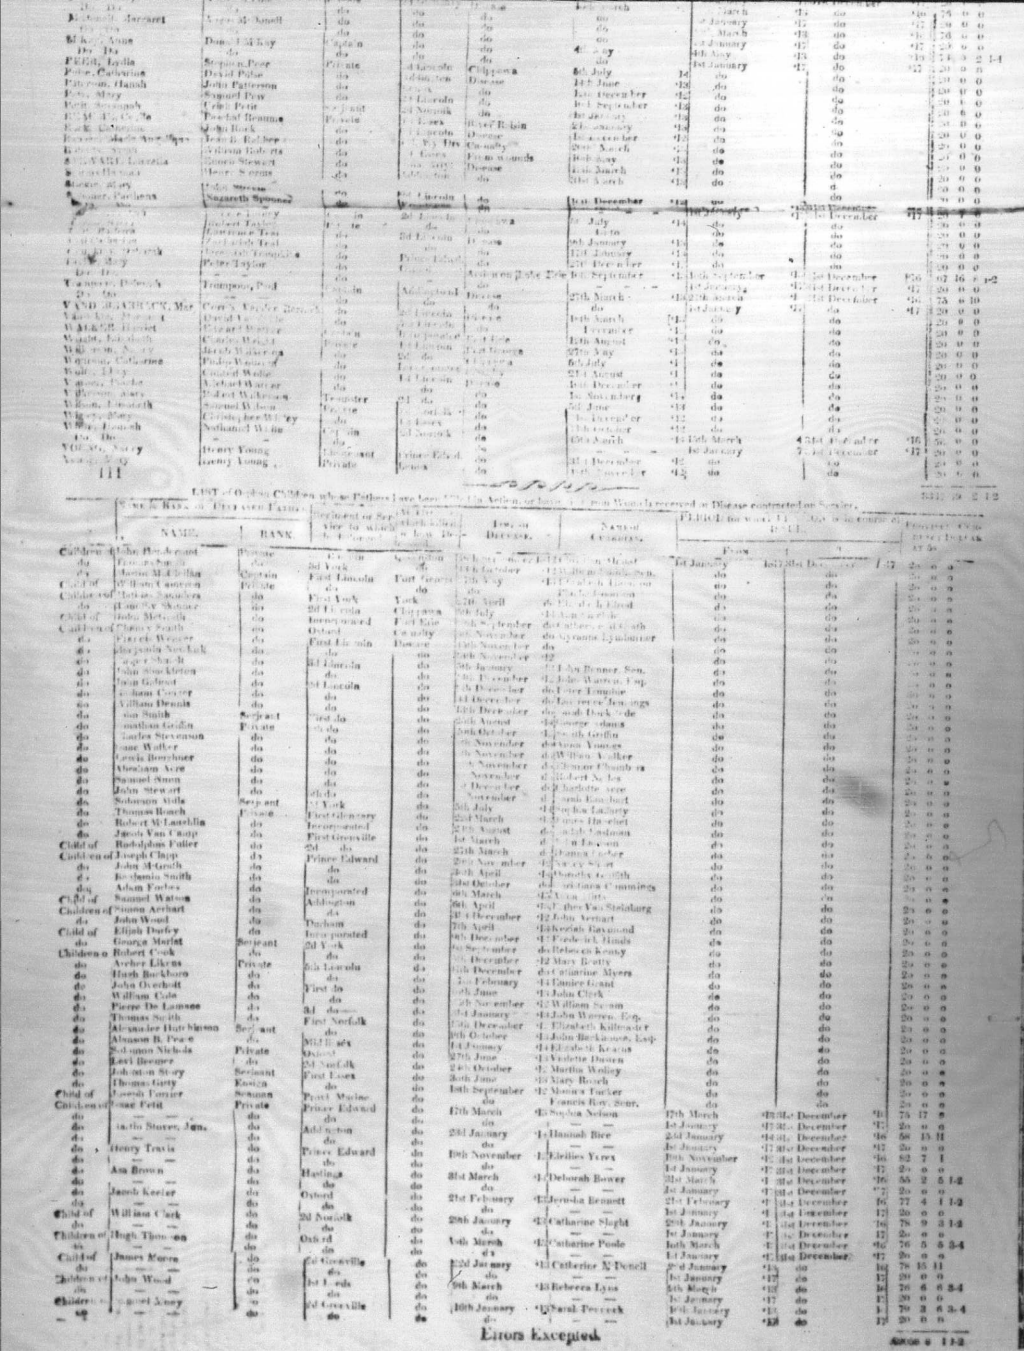
Reports are regularly received from every government, and arrive generally at the precise day, and from most of them at the same hour.

In no country in the world is travelling so cheap, or so secure against robbers; and within the last half dozen years, large inns have been erecting, under the orders of the Emperor, at all the principal European post stations.

Manufactories of all descriptions have been established, and particularly in iron, which is worked with a delicacy that rivals the artists of any country.

Cloth manufactories are receiving great encouragement from the government, and the late events on the continent have added largely to the Manufactories and Mechanic population.

The ports of Cronstadt, of Riga, and Revel, have not only been opened again to the trade with all Europe, but America is becoming a competitor of such importance as to render Russia no longer dependent on the English market; and thus the preference promised the English merchants by Peter the Great, when he addressed William the III in Holland, in the year 1697, and the privileges subsequently granted, have been cancelled, or rather not renewed, on an alledged principle of general justice."



GEORGETOWN, Dec. 19.

Lord Selkirk, a peer of the British realm, was yesterday in the gallery of the House of Representatives. We understand that an honorable member will this day move for his admission on the floor of the House. The member who will bring this motion has had attention of a like nature shewn him by the House of Commons in England, and no [illegible] will be withheld [illegible]

From Lower Canada.

QUEBEC, Dec. 28.

INCORPORATION OF THE CITY.

At a Meeting of the Citizens of Quebec, called by Public Advertisement and holden at the Union Hotel on Friday the 24th October, 1817, for the purpose of taking into consideration the expediency of petitioning the Legislature for an Act to Incorporate the City of Quebec;

THE HON. BLANCHET, Esq. in the Chair;

It was RESOLVED, that a Committee of Nine Citizens, with a power to add six to their number, be appointed to report on the subject of the proposed Incorporation; at a Meeting to be called by the said Committee.

ORDERED, That Messrs. Blanchet, Neilson, Wm. Henderson, F. Quirouet, J. Laugevin, H. Black, F. Simons, Mercier and Lee, do compose the said Committee.

At a subsequent Meeting, convened by Public Advertisement in the name of the said Committee and holden at the same place, on Friday the 12th December inst.

THE HON. BLANCHET, Esq. in the Chair:

The Committee appointed at the Meeting of the 24th October last, reported, That they had met, at different times, and having added to their number, Messrs. R. Christie, Firs. Durette, John Macaider, Charles Jourdain, Thos. White and John Gaudet, they had agreed to the following Report, containing the basis upon which they conceive it would be eligible to petition for an Act of Incorporation, together with the draft of a Petition.

And the said Report and Petition were read, and are as followeth:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE.

The increasing population and prosperity of Quebec, render it expedient to take speedy and effectual measures for an alteration and improvement in the Police Government of the city, by uniting in a Memorial to the Legislature for an Incorporation.

Upon a well organized Police, and upon the diligence and fidelity with which the Functionaries discharge their duty, depend, in a great measure, the welfare, the comfort and the salubrity of a city, and the domestic security of its inhabitants.

To succeed in the accomplishment of a measure of such acknowledged public utility as an Incorporation of this city, it is thought expedient to draw the attention of the public to the existing state of the Police, and by taking a concise view of the subject, endeavour to indicate the means which reason suggests as the best mode of removing the evils complained of.

The Police of this city is at present in the hands of the Magistrates of this district, who are invested with this power in virtue of several clauses contained in various Acts of the Provincial Legislature, since the period of the conquest to the present day. The multiplicity of these assignments necessarily create confusion and incertitude. The Magistrates and the Public are equally liable to surprise, owing to the vague fragments into which their respective duties and obligations are scattered, through our Statute books. There is no positive enactment to which the Public may look for certain information on the subject: nor have they any immediate participation in, or control upon, the Municipal Government of the city; hence the absence of public spirit, without which the exertions of individuals must not only be useless, but even run the risk of incurring the obloquy of the unthinking multitude.

The backwardness and languor of all public improvements in Quebec, the frequent injudicious expenditure of the City Funds, and the extraordinary powers committed to the Magistrates (vide 37th of the King chap. 12.) in the government of the city, are so many motives for the citizens of Quebec to co-operate, with temperance, unanimity and perseverance, in effecting a measure, which ultimately must succeed, because it is not only reasonable and expedient, but because it is absolutely requisite, in order to remove the disadvantages under which the public labour.—THE ESTABLISHMENT OF AN ELECTIVE CORPORATION.

An Elective Corporation springing from the choice of the citizens, with adequate powers, and judiciously balanced and checked in its operations by some correcting power, would be the means of amply developing the resources of the city for public and useful purposes: it would excite a laudable emulation in all classes of society in promoting the public welfare: possessed of extensive means, the Corporation might afford additional employment to the labouring classes in carrying on works of public utility.

The levying and appropriation of the City Assessments, the repairing and paving the streets, the lighting and watching the city, the superintendance of the markets, the safety of the city from accidents by fire, the appointment of constables, the preservation of the public peace, and in a word, every thing relating to the Police, would properly appertain to the Corporation.

In their Constitutional Charter, the Corporation would find at one view, the extent of their own powers clearly and distinctly defined. The public also would, from the same source, ascertain their own rights and obligation, and be able, on all occasions, to form a correct opinion of the legality or illegality of the public measures of the Corporation, which, instead of being shrouded, as at present, in something like diplomatic mystery, would be openly and freely discussed. Every intelligent citizen would boldly give his opinion, and contribute his mite to the stock of public spirit, and all that diffidence and uncertainty which springs from the present order of things would be removed, in a manner as the reciprocal duties of all would be reduced to a single, plain and intelligible Statute, within the scope of every common understanding.

In obtaining the sense of the Public on the measure in agitation, it is to be distinctly understood, that no alteration in the Jurisdiction of the Court of Quarter Sessions is contemplated. That being a Court of Criminal Jurisdiction extending over the whole district, will not in any way be affected by the establishment of a Corporation in the City of Quebec.

Having thus traced the general outlines, your Committee beg leave to lay before the Public the following heads as the basis of the proposed Charter of Incorporation, for which they most respectfully submit to the consideration of their fellow citizens:—

1st. All laws or parts of laws, and every repugnant usage in virtue thereof, relating to the Police of the City of Quebec, to be respected and annulled, on the First Day of January next ensuing to that period when the Act incorporating the city shall have passed and received the Royal Assent.

2d. Every male inhabitant of twenty-one years of age or upwards, who shall have resided within the limits of the City of Quebec, not less than twelve calendar months immediately preceding, and shall have (by him in the next preceding general assessment) been rated and paid on five thousandth part or portion, or more of the total amount of the public assessment or other contributions raised in a direct manner from the Citizens of Quebec, for the public use of the said city, shall be entitled to one vote, and thereby become a FREEMAN OF THE CORPORATION.

3d. The City and Suburbs shall be divided into Twelve Wards, named, and numbered from One to Twelve, commencing at a nearly central situation will present an equal number of inhabitants; and those Twelve Wards again subdivided into Precincts, of five hundred souls each. To ascertain this population, a census shall be taken the first year, and at least once in every succeeding six years.

4th. The Legislative powers of the Corporation shall be entrusted to a Mayor and Twelve Aldermen, with one Deputy from every precinct the limits of the city may be found to contain (elected as by the 6th, 7th and 8th articles); who when assembled in their corporative capacity, shall be styled the Common Council of the City of Quebec; and shall have power to appoint, and regulate the rates, and appropriate the same to enact all bye laws and regulations of Police; and make all other ordinances in any way relating to the affairs of the city, (not contrary to the stipulations of the Act of Incorporation, or the Laws of the Province.)

The Common Council cannot assemble without a summons from the Mayor, who nevertheless is compelled to call a Common Council as often as may be required by any Three Members of that Body.

No salary or other remuneration will be allowed to any Mayor, Aldermen or Deputy.

5th. The Executive and Administrative power of the Corporation shall be exercised by the Mayor and Aldermen; who shall appoint all officers belonging to the Corporation. (the Town Clerk and City Treasurer alone excepted,) shall direct and ascertain that the monies raised by the Common Council are applied according to law; the accounts of which expenditures shall annually be laid before the Common Council, approved or disallowed, and then published.

They are also to hold such Courts of Justice as may be prescribed by the Bye laws of the Corporation to take cognizance of causes arising thereon.

And once in every week shall hold a public Court for the trial of all personal actions within the limits of the city, for sums not exceeding Twelve Pounds.

6th. The First Tuesday in December annually, the Freemen of each Ward shall assemble in their respective Wards, and elect one Deputy to the Common Council for every Precinct therein, according to the last census—provided, that no person be elected or vote for a Deputy, excepting a Freeman and a Proprietor of real property in the city, nor is any person eligible who shall not have been a resident in Quebec for at least five years.

7th. On the Tuesday immediately succeeding that on which the first election of Deputies takes place, the said Deputies shall assemble and choose one Alderman for every Ward, from among the Deputies of each Ward respectively. Of these Aldermen, after the first six years shall have expired, two shall on the second Tuesday of December annually retire; commencing with those that may be elected for Wards Number One and Two, and so on in rotation.

8th. On the Third Tuesday in December annually, the Freemen shall assemble at such place within the city as may be appointed, and there proceed to the election of a Mayor, for the ensuing year, in manner following, viz. The Freemen shall elect any two of the Aldermen then serving, of which two the Court of Aldermen, and common-council Mayor elect, who shall be presented to the people for his approbation on or before the first of January; on which day the Mayor, (newly elected Alderman,) Deputies, City Treasurer, and Town Clerk, shall enter upon their respective offices.

The elections of the Town Clerk or Greffier, and of a City Treasurer, shall take place by the Freemen of the City, at the same time and place as that of the Mayor. And to fill up the vacancies in the number of the Deputies or Aldermen which may from time to time occur in consequence of said elections, or by the resignation, absence or death of any Member of the Common Council, a new election shall take place in the manner herein-before respectively prescribed, in the course of one week at farthest.

Any person properly qualified, and duly elected Mayor, Alderman, or Deputy, refusing or delaying to serve, shall, for the first refusal, forfeit each respectively, viz.—The Mayor £500, an Alderman £250, and a Deputy £125; and in every such case of refusal, a new election shall immediately take place.

9th. The Mayor shall be a Justice of the Peace, and of the Quorum—and all Aldermen shall be Justices of the Peace; and in their respective Wards and shall amply perform all that may legally be done by any two Justices of the Peace elsewhere in the Province.

10th. Any person violating any of the Bye Laws of the Corporation in the presence of any Alderman, or any Member of the Common Council, shall be liable to be brought by such officer or member (together with such witnesses as may be present) before an Alderman; who shall, according to the evidences then produced, such member or officer, and competent witness, decide on the offence in a summary manner—and if such person is found guilty, the fine shall be immediately exacted on pain of imprisonment.

In all other cases arising on the Bye Laws, the form of proceeding shall be by complaint, summons and summary decision; and the fines levied on pain of imprisonment.

11th. The creditor of any person refusing or delaying payment, and being about to leave this province, shall have the privilege of seizing said debtor's effects for any amount not exceeding Twelve Pounds, on oath or affirmation, and made granted upon oath, and signed by the Mayor or an Alderman—and upon judgment, the said effects may be sold for the benefit of said creditor, and the overplus, if any, returned to the Proprietor. Provided, however, that the creditor seizing shall be bound to prove his claim on or before the second week's court day after such seizure, on pain of paying costs and damages adjudged.

12th. No License for keeping a house of public entertainment, or retailing spirituous liquors shall be granted within the limits of the city, to any person who shall not previously have been approved of by a Court of Mayor and Aldermen, (to which all Aldermen shall be duly summoned,) who shall annually regulate the number of such licences to be granted. And in future no retail shop License shall be granted for selling any quantity of spirituous liquors less than one quart.

Lastly. On the passing of the Act of Incorporation, the Corporation of the city of Quebec shall be put in immediate possession of all the monies, lands, real estate or property whatever, belonging to the said city; and shall have authority to borrow in the name and for the use of the city, any sum or sums of money not exceeding in all £.

(Copy of the Petition to the Assembly.)

To the Honourable the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses of the Province of Lower Canada, in Parliament Assembled.

The Humble Petition of the undersigned Citizens of Quebec, REPRESENTS, That the increasing population and prosperity of the city, render it expedient to call the attention of the Legislature to the state of its Police and Internal Government, which the existing Laws of the Province have committed to the superintendance of the Magistrates of the District.

That your Petitioners have found by experience, that many great inconveniences result from the present system of Police in this City, which your Petitioners are of opinion can only be remedied by Legislative supervision.

That your Petitioners are of opinion, that the establishment of an Elective Corporation, upon the principles laid down in the annexed Schedule, which your Petitioners herewith humbly offer, for the consideration of your Honourable House, will be found the most efficient mode of improving the Police and Internal Government of this city.

Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your Honorable House, taking the Report into consideration, will be pleased to pass a Bill for the Incorporation of the City of Quebec, as nearly upon the principles contained in the annexed Schedule, and like such other improvements as your Honorable House, in its wisdom, shall deem expedient.

And your Petitioners will ever pray.

Quebec, Jan. 1818.

RESOLVED, That the said Report is expressive of the sentiments of this Meeting, and be adopted as the basis of an Act of Incorporation for this City.

RESOLVED, That it is expedient to petition the Legislature for an Act of Incorporation for the City of Quebec, on principles corresponding to the above Report.

RESOLVED, That the form of the Petition now laid before the meeting, be adopted and signed by the citizens present, and that future signatures be received at such places as a Committee may appoint.

RESOLVED, That a Committee of General Management be appointed, to receive Signatures to the Petition, and take all other necessary steps to its being submitted as speedily as possible to the three branches of the Legislature.

That the said Committee consist of the following persons, viz.

Messrs. Blanchet, Neilson, R. Christie, Lee, W. Henderson, H. Black and F. Simons.

RESOLVED, That the Proceedings of this Meeting, together with the Report of the late Committee, be published.

F. BLANCHET, Chairman.

MILLEDGEVILLE, Dec. 12.

Late and important Indian News.

The Editor of the Reflector received last night, the following important letter from his attentive and obliging correspondent, (an officer of the Staff,) dated "Fort Hawkins, December 10.

"The firing which was supposed to be an attack upon Colonel Blackshear's troops, was a commanding from Fort Scott, in return of some fires which the Indians made upon the boats which were building in this river. Nothing material resulted. The account which I gave you in my last, relative to the forming parties having set off, is probably incorrect, as it has not been confirmed.

"I expect you have had no express from General Gaines. Middleton arrived on Friday via Hartford—Its contents have transpired here. But this is, General Gaines ascertained that Major Muhlenburg was ascending Apalacha, and dispatched two boats to his assistance, and to collect provisions. Our boats were commanded by Lieut. Scott, with 20 men, was attacked 12 miles below Fort Scott, and the whole massacred except six, who saved themselves, by swimming, four of whom were wounded. From the other boat, and another which had been up the river, nothing had been heard. An express from gen. Jackson to gen. Gaines, who left here on Friday, returned to-night. He took the route by Fort Gaines—left was unable to proceed even that far, the penetrated within two miles of the fort, where he observed fresh Indian signs, and a few miles further came to where two white men had been killed—one of whom was Mr. John Chambers of Fort Gaines.

"The express had heard from them from report by persons whom he met, and was returning to overtake them, and at the time of the murder could not have been more than 5 miles behind. They were killed last Monday—there are but a few miles of the place where they had encamped the night before. The appearance indicated about twenty Indians, and the trail entered the direction of Fort Scott—structures at which place there is merely a negroman's guard of 12 men, and a few of the neighbouring inhabitants who have taken refuge there. So safe, however, we have the inhabitants considered themselves there, that some, it is said, were about returning to make their yearly raising their only great work, and the alarm has come so sudden upon them, that retreat is impossible, or at least dangerous. Fort Gaines is said to be of considerable strength; Fort Scott is a mere stockade, having very partial defences. The expresses that pitched from Fort Gaines to Fort Scott have not been heard of; nor has the one sent from this place since he left Fort Mitchell. From Scott's express says that he was informed by a friendly chief that General Gaines had sent notices to Fort Mitchell, requesting that as few troops as should be made through the nation as possible."

"FORT SCOTT, Dec. 2

"I have just been informed that an express will start for Fort Hawkins in 20 minutes, I therefore send you this hasty note. I arrived here from Fort Hawkins on the 15th November, and arrived here on the 19th at night. On the 23d, Col. Arbuckle crossed Flint river with 250 men, for the purpose of destroying an Indian town, about 20 miles off. We arrived in the town at about 12 o'clock next day—at 2, the place attacked us and after an action of about fifteen minutes, they retreated into a large swamp which nearly surrounded their town. Our loss cannot be ascertained. Ours was killed and one severely, and three slightly wounded—Lieutenant Scott, of the Seventh, had been ordered to the attack with 40 men, which were coming up with supplies. Major Meehle, Jury, who commanded the troops on board the steam-boat, ordered Lieutenant Scott back, and put on board the children and some regimental and several women and children. Yesterday, five of his men came in, all wounded. They state, the Lieutenant Scott was attacked by the Indians just below the forks of the rivers, and the whole party killed or cut off themselves. This is truly lamentable—I expect we shall have some warm work before many days. The whole Indian force is supposed to be 2500.

"P. S.—Since I commenced this letter, the Indians have fired upon some women who were washing on the bank."

The Legislature of Tennessee, besides passing a vote disapproving the introduction of a Branch of the Bank of the United States into that state, have passed an act imposing a penalty of fifty thousand dollars on the establishment of any such branch there.

DIED.—On the evening of the 23d ult. at Cincinnati, Miss Elvira Cooper, step daughter of Wm. Lemon, Esq. of that town. The time and manner of this young lady's decease, were peculiarly awful and affecting. It was to have been her wedding night; she had retired to her room to dress, apparently in perfect health, and in less than fifteen minutes she was discovered to be a corpse by her sister, who entered the room to assist her in dressing. By this time the friends had begun to assemble to witness the nuptial ceremony; but, alas! how changed the scene! She was a woman of delicate frame, and it is supposed her sudden death was occasioned by fainting in a cold room; that her blood chilled and stagnated before any relief could be afforded. It is probable if any person had been in the room with her, she might have been revived.

Unfortunate Occurrence.—A few days since a young man of the name of Josiah Wright, in Rye township, on the bank of the Susquehannah river, drove out his waggon to bring in a load of wood, but his horses started at six loads after, when a brother of his came in, and his mother informed him, that John had been out with the waggon about six hours, and she was very uneasy, as she thought it was about bed time. The young man went out to the barn, and heard a faint voice crying, "mammy, mammy." He said, "John is that you?" and ran to the place from whence the voice came, and found the boy buried into the manure, where he had been laying, from a short time after he left the house, and was so crushed, that he could not suffer his brother to take him out, until he went half a mile for help. The horses were found until next morning, and became perfectly sensible. He said the way he got himself hurt was, he had taken a log and laid the one end on the fore wheel, and then raised the other upon his head, when in the end it broke, and threw him off, and the other end bruised him down, so that he appeared by the crush and lying so long, as if all his inside and body had been broken and bruised, that he had scarcely the appearance of a man.

Execution by Charcoal.—On the night of the 4th inst. a son of Peter Moors, in Tyronetownship, and a man of the name of Snyder, took a pot of kettle, and put some charcoal in it, with fire, to prevent the frost from damaging the plastering of a room that had been lately plastered; the men made themselves bed on the floor to sleep in, which unfortunately was the last, the last step; for in the morning, Moses was dead, and Snyder had only some signs of the left in him, and expired shortly after.

A Correspondent who, feels deeply grieved that so sacred a profanation of the Lord's Day, as is described in the following notice, should be allowed in any city of this civilized and christian country, requests us to give it an insertion in our paper, and thus hold it up to the detestation of the community. It is scarcely necessary to add, that the notice is copied from a paper published in the city of New-Orleans:

New and interesting exhibition.

On sunday the 8th inst. will be represented in the place where The Old Theatre formerly exhibited, near the Circus, an extraordinary fight on Furious Animals. The place where the animals will fight is a rotunda of thirteen in circumference, with a railing 12 feet on height, and a strong cage where the animals will be introduced by the Master and surveyors by him appointed.

1st Fight.—A strong African lyons Bull, attacked and enraged by six of the strongest dogs of the country.

2d Fight.—Six bull-dogs against a Canadian bear.

3d Fight.—A beautiful tiger against a black bear.

4th Fight.—The three dogs against a strong and furious Caledonian Bull.

If the Tiger is not vanquished in his fight with the bear, he will be sent alone against the last bull, and if the latter conquers all his enemies, the battle royal of three animals will be placed on his back, which will produce a very entertaining scene amongst.

In the Circus will be placed two Mandrins, which in a moment will be ready to fight, in order to show their dexterity, which always rise again, whereby the animals will get furious.

The doors will be opened at three and the exhibition begin at four o'clock precisely.

Admittance one dollar for grown persons, and 50 cents for children.

A military band will perform during the Exhibition.

If Mr. Renault is so happy as to assume the spectators by this new spectacle, he will use every exertion in diversity and ragement it, in order to prove to a generous public, whose patronage has been hitherto so kindly bestowed upon him, that none he is to please them.

EXPEDITION TO AFRICA.

The Reverend Mr. Mills and the Rev. Mr. Bacon, were lately appointed, by the Colonization Society, to proceed to Africa, to visit the coast of Africa. After announcing their departure from Philadelphia, in the ship Hunter, Capt. Williams, for London, the Philadelphia Gazette has remarked, that on their arrival in England, will be in contact with gentlemen capable of giving them the best information relative to the West Coast of Africa, and also the best means of promoting their enquiries when there. Letters of introduction will be given to the Governor of Sierra Leone Colony, and as soon as practicable leave England for the Coast of Africa; they will make Sierra Leone Colony their principal station whilst examining the Coast, and from that place, as they think necessary, obtain the most accurate information of the climate, soil, rivers, productions, &c. and visit the Coast above and below the Colony to as many points as circumstances will permit, assembling, as far as they can, the native chiefs, and by different European nations on the Coast. These enquiries being completed and ascertained, the safest and most eligible place for the establishing a Colony, and the most proper regulations will be made, they will return directly to the United States, or by the way of England as circumstances may render expedient."

LATEST FROM AMELIA ISLAND

The Patriot privateer Republicano, which left Amelia on the 1st inst. and put into Savannah River in distress, on the 3d, reports that Commodore Aury was greatly agitated by the information that the government of the United States had determined to take possession of that Island. He at first embargoed the privateers in port, and determined to resist; but soon changed his plan, raised the embargo, and proceeded to the execution of measures for evacuating the place. The privateer also reports that several vessels from different American ports were arriving daily for the purpose of obtaining cargoes of negroes from Baltimore on last Saturday; in all amounting to fourteen. On the same day, a prize schooner with a hundred and five negroes was taken possession of, while about to sail from the Fernandina by the United States' brig Saranac.

PARIS, Dec. 17.

A private letter from Portugal mentions that general O'Donnel, having united a considerable force in Andalusia, in Spain, was to proceed to embark within about the end of the present month. A new order has changed completely the disposition of those forces, and they have been directed towards the frontier of Estremadura, without any known object for such a destination. On the other side the Portuguese have sent troops to Elvas, and to the environs of that strong place. Marshall Beresford, commander in chief of the Portuguese, has sent an aid de camp to Madrid, to demand an explanation of this movement. Conjecture is as usual, very busy in endeavoring to account for these movements.

We have been favored with Gibraltar papers to the 22d of October, which furnish some further particulars of the late Revolution at Algiers. When the janissaries surrounded the palace of the Dey, he called to his assistance the officers of his artillery and navy, but they declined interfering. The Dey then demanded of the janissaries what they wanted; they replied, "an individual from within." Anxious to preserve his life by any sacrifice, he offered to double the pay of the whole corps; but this was rejected, and his person loudly called for. His ferman was forwarded to him, and he had recourse to poison; its operation, however, was not sufficiently quick, and the janissaries entering, seized and bound him, and conducted him to the spot appropriated for public executions, where the Dey's friends then quietly returned to their first assembling.

The public opinion was much in favour of the new Dey Ali Cogia—the ministers of his predecessor have been banished into the interior, and their property confiscated. It is stated the Algerine squadron consisting of a palacre corvette, three brigs, and two schooners sailed on the 28th of Sept supposed with an intention of retaking off Cape Vi Vincente, for vessels under Prussian and Hamburg flags; and there was little doubt of their having the plague on board. The plague continued at Algiers, the daily number of deaths being about 30—sometimes more: it had spread to several villages in the interior. Mercantile Advertiser.)

FROM PERNAMBUCO.

Extract from the journal of an American gentleman, arrived at this port from Pernambuco.

"The late revolution ended, and the subsequent conduct of thousands of those who abetted it, is better than a volume of theoretical reasoning to enable us to judge of their competency to establish their independence. They were at the commencement of it, no doubt, pleased with the idea of liberty, not because they knew the worth of it, but for the same reason that a child is, for a while, pleased with a rattle—because it was a novelty. Their efforts to possess it, were honored therefore, so long as they found them attended with little difficulty and no danger; but when a small squadron, that could not hold a thousand men, appeared before the town, their patriotism evaporated. Indeed the panic was so general, that before a gun was fired, a party of 40 or 50 Portuguese sailors whose vessels had been embargoed in the port from the commencement of the revolution) landed and took possession of the first fort the Patriots took from the Royalists, the day on which the revolution broke out. A few hours after, one Lobo, with some of his officers, landed from the squadron without opposition, and the people received him with every manifestation of joy. The day before this transaction took place in Pernambuco, the government received information, that a body of the Royalists, consisting of about 300, who had marched by land from St. Salvador, together with as many more Indians, who had joined them on their march, were advancing upon the rear of the town, then about 20 miles distant from it. Martins, though not a military man, took command of about 600 men, and advanced to give them battle. He encamped the first night of his march a short distance from the enemy, and at day-light the next morning found that half of his men had deserted. He was soon attacked, a slight skirmish ensued, in which he was wounded; his troops fled in every direction, but principally to the enemy. He made his escape in disguise, but was shortly after betrayed by an old woman in whose house he had sought concealment. The victorious troops marched into the city, and the king's authority was immediately re-established. Paraiba, Rio Grande, and some other small towns to the north and in the interior, followed in quick succession the example of Pernambuco. Of those who had espoused the cause of the revolution more than 90 of 100 were not only loaded in their bonds to welcome the return of the King's authority, but were also called in their dedications of the resident of the—with whom they had united; hence prisoners are daily marched into the city from almost every part of the province, and examinations and executions were daily taking place. Their treatment of the different bodies of these prisoners, is worthy of savages. After the prisoner is put to death (which is done by hanging) his head and hands are cut off, and his body made fast to a horse and dragged through the filth and dirt of the principal streets of the city. This ceremony has followed every execution that has taken place, and is strikingly characteristic of the present state of refinement in that country, or rather it indicates how nearly the people and the rulers are assimilated in their passions and manners, to a state of Barbarism. After sufficiently gratifying themselves with this horrid spectacle, their heads or heads were either erected on poles, or some conspicuous place, where they remain to freshen the souls of fearful ob-

gersoles, or sent to some other town in the province for a like exhibition. Indeed there is scarce a much frequented spot, or public square in the city, but exhibits some part of the mangled bodies of these unfortunate adventurers. Some were sent in irons to St. Salvador and Rio Janeiro, there to be executed; others banished to Africa, and about 500 now remain in the prisons of Pernambuco and Paraiba, who are doomed, no doubt, soon to experience the "tender mercies" of this merciful government.—*N. BOSTON, Dec. 15.

Another fire in St. Johns.—Mr. Topliff has obliged us with the loan of a St. Johns paper of the 21st ult. containing the particulars of another extensive and distressing conflagration, which occurred at that place on the morning of that day. Many large stores, dwelling-houses, and mercantile establishments, which escaped the previous fire, were destroyed by this. It was discovered at about half past 3 o'clock, and raged till half past 9, six hours. "A great part of the western half of the town, (says the St. Johns paper) which was contemplated as a shelter for the distressed at the fire of the 7th inst. is laid in ashes, many families have to lament, and feel the painful distress, of a second time being burnt out of their dwellings, in the space of fourteen days. By what means many of them will find shelter the approaching winter, we are at a loss to conjecture; should they even be fortunate enough to have the means of purchasing necessaries."

CONGRESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Dec. 15.

REPORT, IN PART,

Of the Committee on so much of the President's Message as relates to Roads, Canals and Seminaries of Learning, read and committed to a Committee of the whole House on Friday next.

The Committee, to whom were referred so much of the President's Message as relates to Roads, Canals and Seminaries of learning, respectfully

REPORT, IN PART,

That they have taken into consideration the subject referred to them, and bestowed on it that attention to which, by its importance, it is so eminently entitled. Involving, as it is supposed, a great constitutional question, on the one hand, and intimately connected, on the other, with the improvement, the prosperity, the Union, and the happiness of the United States, it presents the fairest claims to candid and diligent investigation. Nor is it without additional interest from the division of opinion to which it has heretofore given rise between the executive and legislative branches of the government; a difference, which in the indulgence of free opinion, will be still found to exist between the sentiments promulgated in the message of the President, and those which will be advanced by your committee in this report; nor do they conceive, that the expression in the message of the President of an opinion unfavourable to the constitutional powers of the general government, should be permitted to have any influence on the disposition of Congress, to legislate on this interesting subject. For, if the constitutional authority of the two Houses should differ with the executive department, the opinion of the latter, however respectable, must yield to such an expression of their will. On the other hand, if from deference to an opinion promulgated in an executive communication, Congress should refrain from entering upon the consideration of a question involving constitutional doctrine, it might happen that the opinion of the President would prevent the enaction of a law, even though there should be the constitutional majority of two-thirds of both houses in its favour. Thus, by the introduction of such a practice, the Presidential veto would acquire a force unknown to the constitution, and the legislative body would be shorn of its powers from a want of confidence in its strength, or from indisposition to exert it. Whilst your committee are perfectly aware, that nothing like this is contemplated by the executive branch of the government, they presume, the House of Representatives will scrupulously avoid a course, which may be construed into a dereliction of their privileges. They deem it, therefore, not improper to offer some considerations upon the question of the constitutional powers of the general government, to pass laws for the improvement and construction of roads and canals, with the consent of the states.

As it is obvious, however, that these several subjects of legislation do not rest upon the same foundations, and that one of these may be within the sphere of the constitutional powers of Congress, whilst the others may belong exclusively to the states, it is proposed to treat them separately, and the subject of the improvement and construction of public roads which appears to your committee, most clearly to be referable to the powers vested in the general government, will be first taken into consideration.

An accurate attention to the real points of difference on this subject, will greatly contribute to free the controversy from unimportant and irrelevant considerations. To attain this, we have only to compare what is manifestly admitted on the one hand, with what is claimed and contended for on the other.

The laws of antecedent Congresses, approved by successive executive magistrates, and the acts of the executive magistrates themselves, will be resorted to as affording evidence of what may be regarded as conceded to be within the powers of the general government. The commendable jealousy which they have manifested of all encroachments on state power, and their scrupulous adherence to the most rigid principles of construction, affords a sure guarantee, that more has not been admitted than may fairly be assumed to be within the provisions of that instrument.—Taking, then, the acts both of the legislative and executive branches of the government for our guide, we shall find it clearly admitted that there are some cases, at least, in which the general government possesses the constitutional privilege of constructing, and improving roads through the several states.

Thus, by the act of the 20th of March 1806, amended and enlarged by subsequent acts, a road was directed to be laid out and constructed from Cumberland, in the state of Maryland, to the state of Ohio, upon obtaining the consent of the states through which it should pass. The fund provided for this noble undertaking, was to consist of the proceeds of the sales of certain lands, the property of the United States, in the state of Ohio; so that this act furnishes the double admission that "roads may be laid out by Congress through the several states with their consent;" and that the expences of constructing such roads may be constitutionally defrayed out of the funds of the United States. The act was approved by the President in office, in 1806, and other acts confirming, amending, and enlarging it, were passed by subsequent legislatures, in the years 1810, 1811, and 1815, and approved by the President, in office, at those periods; nay, more; the three last acts contained appropriations to the amount of $210,000, payable out of any monies in the Treasury, out reimbursable out of the Ohio fund; a fund which might, or might not, prove adequate, and which, in point of fact, is believed to hitherto have been insufficient.

Similar to this act in some of its provisions, and analagous in principle, are the Acts of April 21st, 1806, and of the 3d of March, 1817, authorizing roads to be opened from Nashville, and Reynoldsburgh, in the state of Tennessee, to different points in the Mississippi Territory. But these acts go still farther than the former, in omitting to require the previous consent of the state of Tennessee, through whose territories a part of the roads was to pass, and in directing the expences of making them, to be defrayed out of the public Treasury of the United States, without providing for its reimbursement, in any manner whatsoever.

But lest the influence to be derived from these admissions, should be deemed to be weakened by the consideration, that the collision of opinion on the constitutional question has arisen, since the passage of those laws, your committee will beg leave to refer to the date of the last act, abovementioned, and to certain transactions of a date, subsequent to the important and well remembered difference of opinion between the executive and legislature, at the last session of Congress. Since that period, they have satisfactory information, that a road has been directed by the executive of the United States, to be improved, at the expence of the general government, and doubtless, for military purposes. This road is laid out from Plattsburgh, or its vicinity, in the state of New-York, to Sackett's Harbor, in the same state.

It is to be presumed, that it is to be constructed at the expence of the general government, and it is understood, that the previous assent of the state, has not been procured.

From this act, therefore, of the executive branch of the government, emanating from that source, at a late date; it would seem fair to infer, that the constitution is admitted to have conferred upon the general government a power in some cases, to make roads and to defray the expence of their construction, out of the funds of the United States. And as the power is not denied in all cases, your committee will attempt to shew that Congress has the power,

1. To lay out, construct and improve post roads through the several states, with the assent of the respective states. And

2. To open, construct, and improve military roads, through the several states, with the assent of the respective states.

3. To cut canals through the several states, with their assent, for promoting and giving security to internal commerce, and for the more safe and economical transportation of military stores, &c. in time of war: leaving in all these cases, the jurisdictional right over the soil in the respective states.

In examining the soundness of these positions, your committee will not find it necessary to resort to what is called a liberal construction of the constitution. They might indeed contend, that as the powers here attributed to the United States, are not in derogation of state rights, (since they can only be exercised by their assent) there is less reason for adhering to extreme rigor of construction. Where the authority claimed by the general government, is oppressive in its character, or dangerous in its tendencies; where it is asserted without deference to state assent, and in derogation of state power; where it is calculated to aggrandize the Union, and to depress its members, these may become reasons for holding the representatives of the nation to the "letter of their authority" But where the power sought to be exercised, is beneficent in its effects, and only felt in the blessing it confers; where it is not proposed to act, except, with the assent of the party which is to be affected; where the measure is more calculated to increase the opulence and the power of the state, than to aggrandize the union at its expense; it might fairly be contended that a less rigorous construction of the constitution, would be justifiable. It is neither unprecedented or improper to construe the same instrument, liberally, where the interests of the contracting parties will be thereby promoted, and to adhere to a greater strictness, where injury may arise to either, by an interpretation too latitudinous.—That the powers in question, are neither dangerous in their tendencies, or calculated to prove injurious to the states, would seem fairly inferable from the recommendation to amend the constitution, and from the importance so justly attached to these objects in all bonds.

But your committee, nevertheless, do not conceive it necessary to call to their aid, the liberal principles of construction, which the occasion might justify. They discover any use of the general phrase in the constitution to provide for the common defence and general welfare, as applicable to the enumeration of powers, or as extending the power of congress beyond the specified powers; and they admit that to support their positions, it must appear, that the powers contended for, are expressly granted, or that they are both "necessary and proper" for carrying into execution some other express power.

That Congress with the assent of the states, respectively, may construct and improve their post roads, under the power "to establish post offices and post roads," seems to be admitted both from the nature of things, and from analagous constructions of the constitution. It has been contended, indeed, that the word establish in this clause of the instrument, comprehends nothing more than a mere designation of post roads. But if this be true, the important powers conferred on the general government, in relation to the post office, might be rendered in a great measure inefficient and impracticable. In some states a power is vested in the inferior tribunals or county courts, to discontinue roads at their discretion; a post road designated by Congress, might thus be discontinued to the great embarrassment of the post office establishment. If the power to establish, confers only the authority to designate, Congress have no right either to keep a ferry over a deep and rapid river, for the transportation of the mails or to compel the owners of a ferry, to perform that service; and yet our laws contain an act, repassed in for more than twenty years, imposing penalties on ferrymen for detaining the mail, and on other persons for retarding or obstructing its passage. It would be difficult to discover how this power of imposing penalties can be supported, either as an original or accessary power, except upon principles of more liberal construction than those now advanced. There are therefore, not a few who believe that under the authority to establish post roads, Congress have express power to lay out, construct, and improve roads for the transportation of the mails.

But, however this may be, the authority which is conferred by the constitution to make all laws which shall be "necessary and proper" for carrying into execution the enumerated powers, is believed to vest in the general government all the means, which are essential to the complete enjoyment of the privilege of "establishing post offices and post roads." Even without this clause of the constitution, the same principle would have applied to its construction; since according to common understanding the grant of a power implies a grant of whatever is necessary to its enjoyment.

Taking these principles for our guide, it may be asked, if under the narrow rules of construction contended for, the right of transporting the mails would not be entirely at the will of the states respectively? On the other hand if the U. S. have the privilege of establishing post roads, and are under the correspondling obligation of transporting the mails, is it not essential to the performance of this duty and to the enjoyment of this power, that they should have the right (with the assent of the respective states) to throw bridges over deep and rapid streams, to remove embarrassing and dangerous obstructions) in the roads which they have the privilege of using, to level mountains which impede the velocity of transportation, and to render passable the morasses which intersect the roads through the various parts of the Union? Can it be supposed, that the convention in conferring the power and imposing the duty of transporting the mails (in its nature a matter of national concern) intended to vest in Congress the mere authority to designate the roads over which it should be carried? Can it be denied, that the right to render a road passable is "necessary" to the enjoyment of the privilege of transporting the mails; or can it be denied that such improvement, with the assent of the states, is proper? And, if "necessary and proper," is it not justified as an incidental power?

It is indeed from the operation of these words "necessary and proper," in the clause of the constitution, which grants necessary powers, that the "assent of the respective states," is conceived to be a pre-requisite to the improvement even of post roads. For however "necessary" such improvement might be, it might be questioned how far an interference with the state jurisdiction over its soil, against its will, might be "proper." Nor is this instance of an imperfect right in the general government without an analogy in the constitution. The power of exercising jurisdiction over forts, magazines, arsenals and dock yards depending upon a previous purchase by the U. S. with the consent of the state.

Admitting, then, that the constitution confers on y a right of way, and that the rights of soil, and jurisdiction remain exclusively with the state respectively, yet there seems no sound objection to the improvement of roads with their assent. For if, by the 10th amendment, this right is reserved to the states, it is within the power of the state to grant it, unless the U. S. are incapable of receiving such a privilege. But by various acts of the government, whose validity has never been questioned, it appears to possess not merely the power of receiving so unimportant a privilege as this, but of acquiring territory at libitum. The acquisition of Louisiana, one of the happest events of our political history, evinces the power of this government to acquire territory by treaty from foreign nations. The cession of the north west territory by Virginia, shews that under the strict principles of the old confederation, which had so few features of nationality, the U. S. were deemed to have the power of acquiring lands even from the states of the confederacy. The Georgia cession, completed about the year 1802, is finally decisive of the practical and undisputed exercise of a power in the general government to receive a cession of territory from any member of the confederacy, under the present constitution. But if the general government have the power to aggrandize itself by the acquisition of territories, can the inferior privilege be denied them of receiving from a state, the right of making or repairing the roads over which they are compelled to transport the mails through the Union?

We notice with pleasure, that large cables, anchors and other apparatus for the steam-boat, now building on Lake Erie, have reached this city, on their way to Buffalo. We are informed it is the intention of the projectors of this novel enterprise, resulting in this city, to put the boat in operation by the 20th of June next. We also learn, that contractors have gone out from Boston, to construct two light houses on Lake Erie; that the oil for them is in the river, and that it is intended to light them at the opening of the navigation in the spring.—*Bh. The Drawing Room regulations under the new administration, seem to have been the subject of a good deal of speculation at Washington. The National Register has given a history of the drawing-room as it has been regulated under the several presidents, since the establishment of the government, with some remarks on the propriety of deviating at the present from the practice under the last administration. The resolution of Mrs. Monroe not to return visits, is said to have excited some sensation among the ladies of the metropolis. The present regulation is in substance this. Mrs. Monroe is at home in the morning to receive the cards of her visitors; and the President to receive strangers and citizens between one and two only, but the heads of department, and members of the government at all hours in the day.—Boston Daily Ad.

The Earl of Selkirk arrived here on Saturday last, from the United States, by way of Queenston. It is said that his Lordship expected to meet here one of the Magistrates who issued the warrant for his arrest, but being disappointed in that expectation, he proceeded on Saturday to Sandwich.

The paragraph handed to us, mentioning the departure of a Gentleman from New-York for France, being apparently only to answer party purposes, and with which, on either side, we wish invariably to avoid interfering, we must decline inserting.

WHITEHALL, NOVEMBER 6.

Her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte Augusta, daughter of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and Consort of his Serene Highness the Prince Leopold of Saxe-Cobourg, was delivered of a still-born male child, at nine o'clock last night, and about half-past twelve, her Royal Highness was seized with great difficulty of breathing and exhaustion, which alarming symptoms increased till half-past two o'clock this morning, when her Royal Highness expired, to the inexpressible grief of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, of her illustrious Consort, the Prince Leopold, and of all the Royal Family.

Dispatches were immediately sent off to the Queen and Princesses at Bath, who will probably return forthwith to town, and to every other member of the Royal Family. The Duke of York, and, we believe, Earl Bathurst, are gone to Clermont, to Prince Leopold; and a Council, we hear, will be held in the course of the day, to give the necessary orders for the funeral of the lamented Princess, and for a general mourning. It will, we have no doubt, be as general a one, as ever took place in this country. The melancholy event produced a depression in the Funds, which was further aggravated by a report in the city, of the Prince Regent having been taken dangerously ill in the country.

A communication of the lingering state of the Princess had been sent off on Tuesday night to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, who has been for some days at Sudborne Hall, the seat of the Marquis of Hartford, in consequence of which his Royal Highness immediately set out for Clermont. He passed through town a little past four this morning, and reached Clermont at twenty minutes past nine, only in time to share in the deep affliction in which the once happy mansion of his departed daughter, was now plunged.

The Duke of York undertook the duty of carrying the melancholy intelligence to the Queen, and other members of the Royal Family, at Bath, and set out for that place at an early hour.

The Princess was in her 22d year. She was born on the 7th of January, 1798, and married 2d May, 1816.

We recollect no occurrence, during a period of many years, that ever produced such general, sincere and deep affliction, throughout the capital of the British empire, as the doubly-lamentable event which it has been now our duty to record.—Every bosom swells with sorrow, and many give vent to their grief in tears.—Throughout the whole of the widely extended dominions over which it was fondly hoped her mild sceptre would one day shed happiness and glory, the sorrow and grief will be most poignant.

A general mourning will of course take place, and the theatres and all other places of public amusement will be shut for the present.

York, January 16, 1818.

In consequence of the above melancholy intelligence, there will not be a Ball on the 19th inst. as was intended.

CONGRESS.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Dec. 15

REPORT, IN PART,

Of the Committee on so much of the President's Message as relates to Roads, Canals and Seminaries of Learning; and also committed to a Committee of the whole House on Friday next.

(Concluded from our last.)

Moreover, it seems to be admitted that the United States have since the Georgia cession, a constitutional right to make and repair roads in the ceded territory. If then by the transfer of the territory, Georgia could give, and the United States receive the right to make roads within it, it is difficult to imagine a substantial objection to the validity of a grant to make a road, without a transfer of the territory.

2. Your committee conceive that the general government has the power of making and opening military roads with the consent of the respective states, with a view to the common defence of the nation.

The power of opening a road during actual hostilities, for the purpose of transporting military stores, and marching troops to points that are menaced, has never yet been called in question.—In truth, without such a power the U. S. must fall a prey to foreign enemies, so that it seems fair to assume that, wherever a military road becomes necessary for the defence of the United States, the power of the [illegible] construct it. [illegible] government can be the only judge; and if the power of judging of this necessity be in them, the constitutional power to act must of course be conceded. In the exercise of this discretion, a very general sentiment at present prevails in favor of preparations during the peace for a state of war. And if the power of judging when it is necessary, be admitted, the constitutional right to do it at any time must be allowed.

It is not proposed to enter upon the delicate inquiry whether this right can be exercised by the general government, without the assent of the respective states, through whose territories a road is contrived, in time of peace, with a view to military operations in any future wars. Leaving this question for discussion whenever the occasion may call it forth, your committee are content in this report to assert the right to exercise this "unnecessary" power with the assent of the states.

Having taken this cursory view of the principles of the constitution, in relation to the construction of roads by the United States, it may not be unimportant to examine what has been the practice under its provisions. The laws of the Union, and the acts of the executive branch of the government, though they cannot be relied on to support acknowledged power, may safely be referred to in aid of our inquiries as to the proper construction of the constitution.

Among the most conspicuous of the monuments afforded by the acts of Congress, is the establishment of the Cumberland road already mentioned. This road has been constructed under the authority of the United States, with their funds, and through the soil of the states, with their consent. It has received the sanction of several successive representative bodies, and of two successive administrations of the United States. In short, it is one which all those were wanting, this act would forbid.

Passing over the road from Nashville to Natchez, and the road from Reynoldsburg to a part of the late territory of Mississippi, directed by an act of the last session of Congress, both of which afford precedents in favor of roads to come in the military roads lately directed by the executive authority to be constructed from Plattsburg or its vicinity, to Sackett's Harbor. This road is not to be constructed with any express assent of the state through which it passes, nor by the authority of Congress, but the President has deemed it necessary as a military road, has ordered it to be made, and accordingly a measure, the advantages of which are said rather to be so palpable, as to have given great satisfaction to the country where the road is made. Hence it appears, that the question results, whether the exercise of this power by the President is not an express admission of the right of the general government to open military roads even in time of profound peace, when they are believed to be necessary; and if the power of judging of this necessity is possessed by the executive, it cannot, it is presumed, be denied to the yet more important organ of the nation's will—the Legislature of the Union.

3d. As to Canals. It will not be necessary to recapitulate the arguments already used on the subject of roads, some of which will be found of equal applicable to canals. It may suffice to add, that the power to make canals and roads, for the promotion and safety of internal commerce between the several states, may fairly be considered as one less incidental to the regulation or internal commerce, than many of the powers exercised under the authority to regulate foreign commerce are necessary to that power. The embarrassments of the nation during war, from the want of good roads and canals both in relation to military and the transportation of munitions and military stores, have been felt so severely and sensibly felt to be forgotten. Vested with the power of making war, the constitution would never have intended the general government should make it under such disadvantages. It therefore any part of that instrument which demands a liberal construction. It is that which confers on the federal government the power of making war and the duty of protecting the Union from foreign hostility. With a view not insufficient to insure the safe conveyance from the seat of war, the munitions of war and military stores and fortifications contemplated by the constitution, the general government has been compelled, from the want of an internal water communication, to encumber the ocean with a great expense in the transportation of the means of defence. From the same cause, the internal trade between the states has been, during war, totally cut off, and embarrassed, and even during peace, the productions of one part of the Union are in many cases rotted on their hands, while distant parts of the Union are suffering for the want of them.

It is true that the wants of the Union cannot confer power under the constitution; but they may justly be touched upon as an illustration of its construction. They must have been already foreseen and must have been supposed to be provided for. If the power to carry on war implies the necessary and proper means of conducting it to a safe and prosperous issue, we would ill construe the use of those means. The roads and canals are the means and the sinews of war are to be indefinitely formed, and in the most advantageous manner, and to the most speedy and unembarrassed use of those powers which are delegated by the constitution. Is it not a delegated trust in the general government? are we not justified in exercising this necessary power? The power of constructing roads and canals at least with the assent of the make roads and canals, either as an original or necessary power; it would seem that no doubt should remain of the right of applying our revenues to those purposes. If indeed the power was denied to the general government of constructing roads and canals themselves, a question might still arise, whether it had not power to appropriate part of the money raised for the construction of roads and canals by the states.

There is perhaps no part of the constitution more undefined than that which relates to the application of the revenues. It is left not to be raised under its authority.—The power is given "to lay and collect taxes to pay the debts and provide for the common defence and general welfare of the United States;" and though it be freely admitted that, as this clause simply contributed to designate the objects for which revenue is to be raised, it cannot be constructed to extend the specified powers of Congress, yet it would be difficult to reconcile either the generality of the expression or the power of administration under it, with the idea that Congress has not a discretionary power over its expenditures limited only by their application "to the common defence and general welfare."

A few of the very great variety of instances, in which the revenues of the United States have been applied to objects not falling within the specified powers of Congress, or those which may be regarded as incidental to them, will best illustrate this remark.

Thus, it can scarcely be conceived, that, if construed with rigour, the constitution has conferred the power to purchase a library, either specifically or as "necessarily" incident to legislation. Still less, perhaps, can the pious services of a chaplain, or the purchase of expensive paintings, for ornamenting the hall of session, or various other expenditures of similar character, be considered as "necessary" incidents to the power of making laws. Yet, to these and to similar objects, have the funds of the United States been freely applied, at every successive session of Congress, without a question as to the constitutionality of the appropriation.

It would be yet more difficult to reduce under the specific or accessory powers of Congress, the liberal donation to the wretched sufferers in Venezuela, or the employment of our revenues in the useful and interesting enterprize to the Pacific

The bounties allowed for the encouragement of fisheries form another expenditure, that does not fall under any of the powers granted by the constitution. Nor could it fairly be considered as inferrable from the powers granted upon the strict principles sometimes contended for. The same objections would apply to actual bounties paid to manufacturers for their encouragement, and to the indirect encouragement given to them, and which operates as a bounty to one class of the community, and as a tax upon the rest. These and a variety of other appropriations can only be justified upon the principle, that the general clause of the constitution, has vested in Congress, a discretionary power to use for the general "welfare," the funds which they are authorized to raise.

Is there any danger that such a power will be abused, while the vigor of representative responsibility, remains unimpaired. It is on this principle that the framers of the constitution mainly relied for the protection of the public purse. It was a safe reliance. It was manifest that there was no other subject on which representative responsibility would be so great. On the other hand, while this principle was calculated to prevent abuses in the appropriations of public money, it left ample room necessary to give an extensive discretion to the legislative body in the disposition of the revenues, since no human foresight could discern, nor human sagacity enumerate, the infinite variety of purposes, to which the public money might advantageously and legitimately be applied. The attempt would have been to Legislate, not to frame a constitution; to foresee and provide specifically for the wants of future generations; not to frame a rule for the direction of a legislative body. Hence proceeds the use of this general phrase in relation to the purposes to which the revenues may be applied; whilst the framers of the instrument, in the clause which concludes the enumeration of powers, prudently avoid the use of so comprehensive an expression, and confine themselves to the grant of such incidental power as might be both "necessary and proper" to the exercise of the specified powers.

Nor is it conceived that this construction of the constitution is calculated to give that unlimited extent to the power of the federal government, which by some seems to have been apprehended. There is a distinction between the power to appropriate money for a purpose; and the power to do the act for which it is appropriated: and if so, the authority to appropriate money "for the general welfare," does not by fair construction extend the specified or incidental powers of government. Thus, in the case under consideration; if the power to make a road or dig a canal is not given, the power of appropriating money cannot confer it, however generally it may be expressed. If there were no other limitation, the rights of the respective states, over their soil and territory, would operate as a restriction.

Whilst this appears to be a safe as well as fair construction of the constitution, it is also that which has been particularly given to it since the origin of the government. Of this the instances already mentioned, furnish some evidence, and it is reprehended that the whole of the legislative principles of construction, asserted both in regard to the enumeration of powers and the appropriation of revenue, the acts of the federal government, including all its branches, will exhibit a continued series of violations of the constitution from the first session after its adoption, to the present day

It would behove us to turn over the statute book and deliberately examine, how, upon these principles, the laws giving bounties to fishermen, encouraging manufactures, establishing trading houses with the Indians, erecting and constructing beacons, piers, and light houses, purchasing fish theories, discussing with paintings the chamber of the Congress, giving charity to distressed foreigners, constructing roads through the different states, and establishing banks, can be reconciled to the provisions of the constitution. If, as has been remarked by high authority, the constitutional question can be questioned by repeated recognitions, under varied circumstances, of the validity" of the exercise of a power by Congress, "in acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the government, accompanied by indications in different modes, of a concurrence of the general will of the nation," the advocates can find little difficulty in supporting the pretension.

From all these considerations, your committee submit it as their opinion, that Congress has the constitutional power to construct roads and canals through the several states with the consent of the states, on such terms as may be agreed on, leaving the jurisdictional rights in the states respectively. To these and other national improvements, which may be found to be within the constitutional powers of the government, they think it advisable that the interest of the government in the bank of the United States should be appropriated. They forbear to give greater length to this report by enlarging on the important advantages to be derived from these national improvements. They feel the fear at this time to offer the details of any upon the subject, presuming it more proper to obtain the sense of the House of Representatives in the first instance on the general proposition. For this purpose they respectfully submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That in order to promote and give security to the internal commerce among the several states; to facilitate the safe and expeditious transportation of the mails, by the improvement of post roads, with the assent of the respective states; to render more easy and less expensive the means and petitions necessary for the common defence, by the construction of military roads, with the like assent of the respective states, and for such other internal improvements as may be within the constitutional powers of the general government. It is expedient that the sum to be paid to the U. States on the 20th section of the act, to incorporate the subscribers to the Bank of the U. States, and the dividends which shall arise from their share in its capital stock, be constituted as a fund for internal improvement.

BOURDIGNON TAKEN.

We learn from Three Rivers, that on Friday the 26th ult. a person of suspicious appearance, arrived at that place. Not being able to proceed further for want of small change, he called at the shop of Rene' Kimber, Esqure, whom he requested to give him silver for an half Joe, Mr. K. having expressed some doubt as to its weight, the gentleman immediately paraded a dozen or fourteen on the counter, desiring Mr. K. to take his choice. Having taken one which he thought weight, he went to his Iron Chest for the purpose of giving the silver, where he was followed by the curious traveller. From the time of his coming in, H. Fraser, Esq was in the shop, who from the repeated robberies at Montreal, as well as the conduct of the individual, immediately suspected him to be a party concerned, which he intimated to Mr. K. as well as to Joseph Badeaux, Esq. also a Justice of the peace, both of whom declined taking any notice of the matter; the first saying, he could not leave his shop, and the other, that he was going to be busy; but that he had better apply to Mr. Coffin, the Police officer, who, by the bye, was absent from town, Mr. F. then immediately gave information to Mr. Ogden, King's Counsel for the District of the suspicion he had formed, and that the man had acknowledged himself to be a Frenchman, whether he would advise his arresting him. Mr. O. urged him strongly to it, taking all responsibility on himself. In consequence Mr. F. immediately repaired to the Tavern, in an obscure part of the Town, where he was lodging; after some conversation, which was interrupted by two of his companions, desiring him to answer no questions, upon which, Mr. F. made them all three prisoners, conducted them to his office, and sent for B. P. Wagner, Esq. J. P. who immediately attended. On examining their baggage, article answering in a very particular manner, those stolen from Messrs. Russel and McKenzie, in Nov. last, were found, together with 44 pieces of French Cambrics, (since identified to be the property of Mr. A. Porteous.) The suspected having repeatedly contradicted themselves, the Magistrate, no longer hesitated to commit them: on the following morning, Marion (one of the prisoners) requested to be re-examined, when he declared that the principal, who the day previous, called himself Maleau, was no other than Laurent Bourdignon."

Much credit is also due to Mr. Anderson, for the trouble he took in the examination, and who joined Mr. Ogden, in forwarding the information by express to Montreal.

POT AND PEARL ASHES.

Last week we expressed some doubts respecting the superiority of the Boston and New-York inspection, to that of Canada in the British markets for home consumption. But our scruples are now completely removed by several personal as well as written communications accompanied by vouchers from Liverpool to the middle of Oct. wherein it appears that Montreal 1st sort Pot sold for 3s lower than the New-York brand.—Montreal 1st sort Pearl, 1s to 3s lower than Boston, and 1s to 2s under New-York. The prices were at public sales for home consumption, and the sole cause of this depreciation of Canada Ashes, is owing to bad inspection, and frequently bad casks, which last are most destructive to Pot-ash in particular; for which none can be blameable but our inspectors, and on whom the public are free to make their comments. The British Legislature, the better to encourage the industry of Canada, and to promote the Carrying Trade, raised the duty on foreign Ashes, from 1s to 11s per cwt. whereas Canada Ashes pay at present only 1s 7d; but from the superiority of inspection, the lowness of freight, and other charges, the American merchant goes into the British market, nearly on equal terms with the merchants of this country! Let us enquire into the merits of this wonder, and endeavour to point out the destructive result to this province. We most readily acquit our inspectors, as they regard their places, of any evil intention towards the trade, which we may justly say, they represent in England on the part of their country. But whether the common loss be sustained by actual design, or by a shameful negligence on the part of others, is but a poor consolation to the sufferer, because where can he look to for redress?

We suppose Canada exports about 24,000 barrels of Ashes annually, at 3 1-2 cwt. each, given 84,000 cwt. The merchant trusts the brand is as good as any in America, and gives a corresponding price, which in the first place the country pockets; but when the commodity reaches an European market, it sells 2s per cwt. lower than could be believed, which bring him in a loss of £21,000 sterling, (besides the ordinary hazards in the speculation) thus blasting the market in which the commodity was originally purchased. If our inspectors be not intent on ruining the character of one of our chief staples, they will surely be more circumspect in future. They will empty every barrel and see the contents carefully rejected, excluding crust and other refuse, observing that the barrel be of well seasoned wood, if not, a new one should be provided at the expence of the owner, which will make him careful in bringing good casks to market for the future. The tare of each barrel should be taken, and the weight branded on its head. If these precautions be taken, there cannot be a doubt of our Ashes resuming their ancient character in every market. During the time that the late Mr. John Lechtet Wiseman, was Inspector, the Montreal brand sold 2s higher than that of New York, and 1s above Boston for Pots; but Boston Pearls always ranked highest. Indeed for six years after Mr. Wiseath, Montreal Pots sold higher than those of New-York; and we see no reason why they should not be made to do so at this time. —Mr. Wiseman often told the writer of this article he was impossible for one inspector to do justice to more than 7,500 barrels in a season. In 1801 when the quantity amounted to nearly 9000, he found himself greatly embarrassed, doubting whether he had done strict justice to the country. This being the case, what hand could two inspectors make of 20,000 in a season during Jefferson's Embargo? Even at this time, when the annual quantity may be stated at 20 to 24,000 barrels, we think a third inspector is much wanted; for £2,000 a year, in our opinion, would be an ample revenue for three inspectors of Pot and Pearl Ashes. Both the subject calls for Legislative interference.—Herald.

On Sunday evening, the 21st inst. as eight men were crossing in a batteau from this Island to Isle Heron, in the Lachine Rapids, they got entangled in the ice, and were carried down the river past the city. With much exertion they effected a landing the next day in the afternoon a good way below Varennes, very much frost-bitten. One of them, in consequence of what he had suffered, a Mr. James Hutton, carpenter, and a native of Stirlingshire in Scotland, died on Monday last, another is despaired of, the rest will recover.

The Committee for enquiring into the distresses of the Settlers lately arrived in this city, having completed their visits to the Applicants, and afforded such temporary relief to those whom they considered fit objects of charity, as the Funds already raised for that purpose permitted, wish now to state to the Public, that trusting to their generosity in enabling them to continue their plan of operations, during the Winter, they have rented and fitted up a house in King-street, Saint Roch, for the reception of a part of them. Those whom they found with large families warm and comfortably lodged, they deemed advisable to continue as Out-Pensioners, allowing them weekly, as per statement, from 5s. to 10s. according to circumstances.

In laying before the Public the subjoined Statement of their expenditure, from the 8th November to 20th December, they must observe, that though they have much pleasure in stating the distress of those unfortunate strangers to be far short of what was at first apprehended, it is, notwithstanding, so great, that if some assistance were not continued to them during the winter, they fear that many would fall victims to the severity of the climate, and want of necessary nourishment.

One of the Settlers, who is under particular circumstances, has been appointed as Overseer to the establishment at St. Roch's; he is furnished with a set of subjoined Rules for their government, framed for the purpose of maintaining order and cleanliness; he has the charge of issuing their provisions daily, consisting of a moderate allowance of Biscuit, Potatoes, Fish, Butter, and every Sunday, fresh meat; and has directions to furnish any one applying, with such a number of Labourers as he may require, at the rate of 2s. per day for each; he also keeps a list of both out and in-door pensioners, with their several occupations, for the inspection of any one in want of servants, farmers, or tradesmen. Independent of his superintendance, one of the Committee will make a daily visit to the establishment, and settle any complaint or difference that may have occurred.

The Committee take this method of returning their thanks to the Gentlemen, Theatrical Amateurs, who have already paid into the hands of their Treasurer, the sum of £40, being the nett proceeds of two performances; and who have kindly promised to have other occasional performances during the winter, for the same benevolent purposes. A subscription paper is now going round, which on its being completed, will be published.

We received this morning the Paris papers of Wednesday last. They announce a conference between the Minister of the Allied Powers and the Duke of Wellington. The following is an extract:—

"PARIS, Oct. 22.

"The Russian, Austrian, Prussian and Netherland Ministers, and the Duke of Richelieu, had this morning, at ten o'clock, a conference for three quarters of an hour with the Duke of Wellington."

We had heard that this interview was about to take place, but we do not presume to say that we know the purpose of the meeting. From some hints, however, which we received in a quarter to which we look with respect and confidence, we are inclined to think that it related to the army of occupation; and, from other hints in the same quarter, we are of opinion that the sentiments of the Allied Courts are favourable towards the continuance of that army in its present situation, and in undiminished force. It is too well known that there are republican emissaries, scattered all over the continent, who are incessantly at work to spread the poison of Jacobinism, and if these miscreants, therefore, were to be freed from the terrors of the army in question, they would doubtless hasten at once to Paris, and then we might expect to see new convulsions in France that would extend their influence over every part of Europe.

Our Government is unceasingly employed with the re-establishment of the royal marine, a measure which is dictated by the necessity of protecting our commerce against the pirates of America, who are every day destroying it. It is understood, that we have purchased five ships of the line and three frigates, which are already on their voyage for our ports, where the Russian crews will be replaced by Spaniards. It is believed that the ship Asia, and a frigate, which are now fitting at Cadiz, will join the above squadron, from which divisions will be formed, destined exclusively to protect our maritime commerce on different points of our colonies. The general opinion is, that no troops will be embarked in these vessels.

The market this morning was rather flat at the commencement. Towards eleven o'clock it revived, and Consols which yesterday left off at 83 1-4 gave [illegible] 83 1-4 3-8 for the account, with buyers at the latter price. The Commissioners were again obliged to purchase Consols this morning from the scarcity of Reduced Stock, and gave 83 1-4 money. They were served promptly by the Jobbers, and obtained £245,000 Stock, which will be their daily amount in future. The reason the Commissioners purchased so much more yesterday was in consequence of their buying £12,000 for the Saving Banks.

Late and Melancholy News from England.

By the arrival of the ship Caroline Ann, Capt. Reeves, in 40 days from Liverpool, the Editor of the Commercial Advertiser have received London papers to the 9th and Liverpool to the 11th of November, announcing the melancholy death of her Royal Highness the PRINCESS CHARLOTTE. This unexpected event, which is the language of the Courier, "blasted a Nation's hope, and involved the whole British Family from its most exalted to its humblest members in the deepest affliction," occurred on the morning of the 6th of November. Among the circulars issued during the illness and on the death of her Royal Highness, we select the following:—

"Clermont, 5th of Nov. 10 o'clock P. M.

"At 9 o'clock this evening, her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte was delivered of a still-born male child. Her Royal Highness is doing extremely well."

"These fond hopes however, were suddenly blighted on Thursday morning, by the afflicting bulletin which follows:

"TO THE RIGHT HONORABLE THE LORD MAYOR.

"White Hall, Nov. 6, six A. M.

"My Lord—It is with the deepest sorrow that I inform your Lordship, that her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte expired this morning at half past 2 o'clock.

"I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed) "SIDMOUTH.

"The tale of grief was ended by the following short but expressive notice:

LONDON GAZETTE

EXTRAORDINARY.

Thursday, November 6, 1817.

WHITEHALL, NOVEMBER 6.

Her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte Augusta, daughter of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and consort of his Serene Highness the Prince Leopold of Saxe-Cobourg, was delivered of a still-born male child, at nine o'clock last night, and about half past twelve her Royal Highness was seized with great difficulty of breathing and exhaustion, which alarming symptoms increased till half past two o'clock this morning, when her Royal Highness expired, to the inexpressible grief of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, of her illustrious consort, the Prince Leopold, and of all the Royal Family.

Dispatches were immediately sent off to the Queen and Princesses at Bath, who will probably return forthwith to town, and to every other member of the Royal Family. The Duke of York, and we believe, Earl Bathurst, are gone to Claremont, to Prince Leopold; and a Council, we hear, will be held in the course of the day, to give the necessary orders for the funeral of the lamented Princess, and for a general mourning.—It will, we have no doubt, be as general a one, as ever took place in this country. The melancholy event produced a depression in the Funds, which was further aggravated by a report in the city, of the Prince Regent having been taken dangerously ill in the country.

A communication of the lingering state of the Princess had been sent off on Tuesday night to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, who has been for some days at Sudborne Hall, the seat of the Marquis of Hartford, in consequence of which his Royal Highness immediately set out for Clermont. He passed through town a little past four this morning, and reached Clermont at twenty minutes past nine, only in time to share in the deep affliction in which the once happy mansion of his departed daughter, was now plunged.

The Duke of York undertook the duty of carrying the melancholy intelligence to the Queen, and other members of the Royal Family, at Bath, and set out for that place at an early hour.

The Princess was in her 22d year. She was born on the 7th of January 1796, and married 2d May, 1816.

We recollect no occurrence, during a period of many years, that ever produced such general, sincere and deep affliction, throughout the capital of the British empire, as the doubly-lamentable event which it has been now our duty to record.—Every bosom swells with sorrow, and many give vent to their grief in tears.—Throughout the whole of the widely extended dominions over which it was fondly hoped her mild sceptre would one day shed happiness and glory, the sorrow and grief will be most poignant.

A general mourning will of course take place, and the theatres and all other places of public amusement will be shut for the present.

From the London Traveller of Nov. 7.

DEATH OF THE PRINCESS CHARLOTTE OF WALES.

We have little of prominent importance, in addition to what has already been published in The Traveller, but as every communication on this melancholy subject is perused with the strongest interest, we present a connected account of the deplorable event, and such particulars as have been received through various channels. If there should be some repetition of what has been given before, our readers will readily excuse it.

On Monday in the night, or about three on Tuesday morning, her Royal Highness was taken ill, and expresses were sent off to the great Officers of State, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London, desiring their immediate attendance. Earl Bathurst, Lord Sidmouth, the Lord Chancellor, Mr Vansittart, together with the Archbishop and Bishop immediately attended. Dr. Baillie and Dr Croft were the medical attendants.

On Wednesday at nine o'clock her Royal Highness was delivered of a male child, but still-born. Throughout the whole of this long and painful illness, her Royal Highness evinced the greatest fortitude, and received the communication of the child being dead-born with much resignation. Prince Leopold exclaimed to the medical attendants, as soon as the intelligence was communicated to him—"Thank God! thank God! the Princess is safe." The child was perfect, and one of the finest infants ever brought into the world. The Princess was composed after her delivery, and though of course much exhausted, every hope was entertained of her doing well. This pleasing intelligence having communicated to the great Officers of State, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London, they left Clermont about 11 o'clock; the medical attendants of course remaining. A little after twelve a change was observed in her Royal Highness—her quiet left her—she became restless and uneasy—and the medical attendants felt alarmed. Expresses were sent off to the Officers of State, stating the change that had taken place. From half past twelve, restlessness and convulsions increased, till nature and life were exhausted, and her Royal Highness expired at half-past two yesterday morning.

As soon as the fatal event was conveyed to his Majesty's Ministers, they hastened to town, where they arrived about half-past five. Lord Sidmouth immediately dispatched a letter to the Lord Mayor.

A copy of the bulletin was affixed at the Mansion House, the melancholy intelligence spreading in all directions, excited unusual grief in all classes upon this most affecting kind.—The great bell of St. Paul's tolled from twelve to one o'clock yesterday.

The gloom which is spread over the public mind by the premature death of the Princess CHARLOTTE, is deeper than any public calamity has produced within the memory of the oldest observer of political occurrences—and indeed it is difficult to conceive an occasion on which grief would be more natural, or indifference more brutal. The people of Great Britain have long looked forward with confidence to the Princess as the successor to the throne, and her many virtues had endeared her to a degree that her reign would be distinguished by constitutional measures and true English feeling. But alas! this expectation has proved delusive! That form which we trusted to have beheld adorned with the robes royalty, is now cold and lifeless—that spirit which gave it animation is fled, and with it the brilliant prospect has vanished! Every circumstance has concurred to render this event deeply affecting. That her offspring survived it, may be considered one sorrow—it might have afforded some consolation for a mother's pangs. No such consolation alleviated the dying agonies of a royal sufferer. They were aggravated by the reflection that they were unavailing. Let us hope that her sorrows here were but a preparation for another and a better world.

If the Princess fell untimely, what must be the sensation of the unhappy Prince whose very existence seemed to depend on that of his beloved partner? Of all the situations in which suffering humanity is, there is not one more distressing than that in which the Prince above is exposed! and when we recollect that Prince Leopold was never absent from the melancholy scene, we may have some faint conception of his grief! The firmness of the Princess must make him the more sensible of her loss—he sustained, and the reflection on what might have been, to which the human mind is ever prone, must augment the bitterness of his sorrow. How severe, how acute he alone to the Prince Regent, himself, must be considered is universally known. Time, at once, all his hopes are withered both as a Father and a Sovereign!

Bowing in confidence upon this fair offspring of his Royal House, and looking to her as the mother of a long and illustrious line of kings to maintain the glories of the British throne, but little attention has been paid to what must be the consequences in the event of the contingency of her premature decease. But now the consideration is forced on our attention, and the prospect is by no means flattering. The next male branches of our present Monarch are all without lawful issue. Supposing, therefore, that "a barren sceptre" passed through their hands, "no child of their's succeeding," the next claimant of the Crown would be the Duke of Clarence, in right of his not having the present Royal Consort, and after him would come the descendants of his present Majesty's Sister, the Duchess of Brunswick, being presumed. Of that branch there are two young, sickly, whom nature has not compelled to seek shelter under the parent stock in England; and as without much violence to probability, we may eventually look to them as absolute a Sovereign's birth-right, it is some consolation to reflect, that their country has been in a considerable degree British. We hope, however, that it will not be our misfortune to look again beyond our own island for a King.

We understand that Prince Leopold is arrived at Carlton House, where a Council is to assemble to-day for the purpose of examining the Physicians.

The following was received from Clermont this morning:

Clermont, Nov. 7, ten o'clock.

Never was grief so sincerely manifested as is for the loss of our amiable Princess, by all ranks and degrees. The preparations for illuminations last night at Esher and the surrounding country were reversed. The houses were closed, and scarcely a lamp to be seen. A post-boy riding through Kingston from Claremont to London expressed, in answering the anxiety of the inquiries announced that a Princess was born, and no lights immediately commenced. The inhabitants, however, on learning the melancholy event, showed their respect yesterday by closing their shops and houses. It is to be a State funeral.

From the London Courier of Nov. 7.

"Of that overwhelming calamity which has "amazed with grief" the whole country—which is both a public and private calamity, and which every one deplores, and feels as a subject, but as a man, we have extracted from contemporary Journals several interesting details in addition to those we communicated yesterday. No event that we remember ever came upon the public mind so unpremeditated—no event could have happened of a more lamentable nature—"an event indeed" as one of our contemporaries has well said—" as calamitous as could well occur in the annals of our hereditary Monarchy. The Heir to the Throne had left only two presumptive Heirs to the Crown in direct succession—the mother and the child." During the whole of yesterday it may truly be said that the capital was one scene of deep and general mourning. Not a face was seen in the streets in which the gloom and sorrow were not conspicuous. Not a house could be entered in which the females were not dissolved in tears, as if they had just lost a daughter, or sister—the young, senior, to good, so sure, and so gifted! The expectancy and hope of the fair State."—Were every one was waiting and listening for the signal that was to proclaim the birth of England's Heir—when all were prepared for congratulation and joy—to have all these expectations so signally disappointed—to have all these feeling destroyed at once—to be called upon to mourn when we were only prepared to rejoice—to have

All things that we ordained festival
Turn from their office to black funeral;
Our instruments, to melancholy bells;
Our wedding cheer, to sad burial feast;
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges;
Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corse,
And all things change them to the contrary!

In the present grief there was every thing to astound and stun the mind by its suddenness. For, from the bedside of Prince Ferguson, the Princess had enjoyed the best possible state of health. She had not indulged in the dissipation of a town life; she had not kept late hours; she had lived in tranquil, elegant retirement, taking daily exercise, sleeping the most regular hours, passing her whole time in the enjoyment of domestic life, of which the Illustrious Couple furnished such a beautiful instance, that no one could contemplate it without the most sensible pleasure. The happiness of the conjugal state appears heightened to the highest degree it is capable of, when we see two persons of accomplished minds, not only united in the same interests and affections, but in their taste of the most refined pursuits and diversions.—[Spectator Ab. 825"]—To us no two persons could this be more applicable, nearly applied than to the Princess Charlotte and Prince Leopold. The public who knew the manner of her Royal Highness's life, and her without anxiety, but without dread, for the event of her pregnancy. No symptom occurred from the first moment of her Royal Highness's being taken in labour, that created any serious alarm in the minds of the medical attendants, till quite at the first audience. It was lingering indeed, and the interval between the different pains was much longer than usual. Towards the evening of Tuesday, finding it to be so lately, the medical gentlemen in attendance thought it advisable to send for Dr. Sims, who accordingly attended with all possible speed—but he was of no reason to depart from the course that was been pursued, and was of opinion with the other gentlemen that the labour would be long protracted. And though the delivery was of a still-born, instead of a living child, yet it was safe, and her Royal Highness was quite tranquil afterwards; here the attendants observed some agitation and some great resignation, submitting herself to the will of God, and seemed inclined to fall into a gentle sleep. She frequently, to use the words of the last bulletin "was now going on," but not only the attendants, but her own husband, the illustrious, and even Prince Leopold and the medical gentlemen did retire to take some rest after the fatigue of long attendance and watching. A distressing moan her royal Highness felt on awaking, some great agitation at o'clock alarmed the nurse, especially as she sometime afterwards complained of being chilly, and took a pain in the chest. The three who were in the next room, were immediately called in. Opiates and the usual medicines, by whom every remedy was applied that art could devise. We believe it is the fact that her Royal Highness was quite sensible to the last minute of her life—but she was with her servants, even about one o'clock; upon ascertaining which, Dr. Baillie, we hear, sent off an express to the Cabinet Ministers, expressing his doubts with respect to the event. The Prince Leopold remained in the room with those attendants, leaning his head frequently to meet his—that hand which was in one short hour to be cold, insensible, and lifeless.

Her Royal Highness, we repeat, remained sensible to the moment of her death. About five minutes before her death, she said to the medical Attendants, "Is there any danger?" Dr. replied, that they requested her Royal Highness to endeavour to compose herself. She breathed a gentle sigh, and expired.

All this, in the enjoyment of health and beauty—at the early age of 22, was snatched a sacrifice to the grave! Such is the frailness of human life! Such the sport of fate and splendour and joy, can avoid feeling the acutest regret at the sudden darkness and horrors of death. She was neither too tall nor too short, about the middle size, inclining rather to the en bon point, but not so much as to injure the symmetry of her form. Her complexion was beautifully fair—towards delicate white, and her hair was finely placed. There was a mingled sweetness and dignity in her look, a full intelligent eye; and when she was engaged in conversation particularly in familiar conversation, much liveliness in the expression of her countenance. The remarkable to her illustrious Father was striking. To these accomplishments of person her Royal Highness added the more valuable qualities of the mind and heart. She was a good scholar, with considerable information, particularly since her marriage. One of her most pleasing occupations was to accompany her illustrious Consort in his study of the English language, in which he was an diligent. But I have read of her writers upon history and jurisprudence. She was of religious habits, and a strict observer of the sabbath, as well as her husband, who never fails readily to her, save the church service, one of the best English Scholars. She was a good, affectionate child; and as a wife, was a model to her sex. She looked up to her husband with the most perfect affection and respect; and he deserved it all. His behaviour over her, as she breathed though the room, was of it was of the gentlest kind—the tenderest mistress.

And all this prospect of continuing happiness—this promise of blessings to the country and to themselves, is delighted for ever! But let us not in our grief forget our duty, nor impiously repine at the visitations of Providence, which for his own wise and benevolent purposes, deals either severe chastisements upon mankind.

The funeral of her Royal Highness and child is to be in the same manner as the funeral of the late Princess Amelia. She departed this life the same month—the 31 Nov. 1810, and was buried at Windsor, the 13th—The Princess Charlotte will also be buried at Windsor.

The shops, which were shut spontaneously in most parts of the town yesterday as soon as the fatal event was known, continue shut to-day; and the general gloom and sorrow remain unimpaired.

The Prince Regent, it is rumoured has written to the Prince Leopold, a letter of the most affecting nature, expressing the deepest sense of the manner in which he had invariably conducted himself to his daughter, a manner which had secured to him the blessings and affection of the father, and the admiration and respect of the nation.

As yet we know not the effect of the intelligence upon the Queen and Princess at Bath. To them, of course, the shock will be great and sudden, particularly as the Prince Leopold is sudden. Indeed, after the Princess was delivered and the best hopes were entertained, he have written letters both to her Majesty and the Prince communicating these hopes to each.

The Prince Regent, as we stated yesterday, received the tidings of the death of his beloved daughter with the greatest grief. His Royal Highness was bleeded in the course of the day, and as this morning more resigned.

The Prince Leopold is in the deepest affliction. His Highness will not quit Claremont till after the funeral, which, it is said, he proposes to attend in person. It will take place at Windsor, and the bodies will be deposited in St. George's vault. The Dean of Windsor has been sent for to give the necessary directions for preparing it. The day is not yet settled.

The orders for the Court and General Mourning will be issued to-morrow, and it will begin on the next day, Sunday.

We repeat that no accounts here yet been received from her Majesty and the Princess previous to her reception of the news of the Princess's death. They received the account of the delivery of her Royal Highness early on the morning of yesterday.

Messenger, with the sad tidings have been sent to all the Royal Family. The Prince of Augusta, who is at Windsor, received them with the most poignant and continued sorrow.

From the Courier of the 8th.

DEATH OF THE PRINCESS CHARLOTTE OF WALES.

On the demise of any Member of the Royal Family it is the duty of the Serjeant Surgeon of the King, to embalm the body. Accordingly, Sir Everard Home had an audience of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, on Thursday morning, and yesterday he went to Claremont, accompanied by Sir David Dundas and Mr. Ilcandt, to perform this melancholy task.

The following is a letter from our Correspondent at Claremont.

"Prince Leopold has had little or no rest since Monday night, when the Princess was first taken ill; in fact his truly distressed state of mind will not admit of his taking rest, having lost all his earthly comfort in the most affectionate and endearing of Consorts. His Serene Highness is, under all the circumstances, as well as can be expected."

"The opening of the Princess's body for embalming is just taken place by Sir Everard Home, Sir David Dundas, Surgeons to the King, and Mr. Neville, of Esher, Surgeon to the Princess Charlotte and Prince Leopold; Mr. Brand, of Arlington-street, the Apothecary to the King, was also present."

"Claremont, Saturday Morning, nine o'clock."

"After the embalming of the body of the Princess Charlotte yesterday afternoon by the King's Serjeant Surgeon, and Mr. Neville, her Royal Highness's Surgeon, the internal parts were deposited in an Urn prepared for the purpose. Yesterday afternoon Sir Richard Croft left here for London, in the greatest affliction.

"Mr. Marsh, of the Lord Chamberlain's Office, has been here to make arrangements for the funeral.—Messrs. Prance and Banting, of Pall-Mall, London, the Cabinet-makers to the Queen, and also to the Princess Charlotte and Prince Leopold, are expected." The Undertakers, such is the conduct on the whole arrangements of the mournful occasion.

"The time of the funeral is not even mentioned."

The Queen was apprized of the melancholy catastrophe on Thursday; and the communication affected her Majesty so much, that, we regret to hear, she has ever since remained confined to her room, seriously indisposed.—The effect upon the Princess and the Duke of Clarence was also most distressing. The Royal Duke received the dreadful communication while partaking of the festivities in honor of her Majesty in that city. He instantly in sorrowful silence rose and left the room; and the Marquis of Camden having, with feelings of anguish that almost deprived him of the power of utterance, made known the lamentable cause of the retirement of the Royal Duke, the company instantly dispersed, overwhelmed in grief.

All the Institutions have suspended their Meetings. We have received the following notice from the Royal Society, among others:

"The Royal Society of London assembled at their apartments on Thursday night; but on account of the death of her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte, adjourned their meeting, without proceeding to business, till the funeral of her Royal Highness shall have taken place. They will, however, meet on the 20th and 27th of this month, for the purpose of giving notice of the approaching Anniversary Election, and of electing Auditors of the Treasurer's Accounts, as prescribed by their Statutes, but for no other business whatever."

Baron Fagel, Ambassador from the King of the Netherlands, has postponed his intended grand entertainment to-morrow, as did the Russian Ambassador on Thursday, on account of this much lamented event.

GENERAL MOURNING.

The Deputy Earl Marshal's Order for a General Mourning for her late Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte Augusta, Daughter of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and Consort of his Serene Highness the Prince Leopold of Saxe Cobourg.

"These are to give public notice, that it is expected, that upon the present most melancholy occasion of the death of her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte Augusta, Daughter of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and Consort of his Serene Highness the Prince Leopold of Saxe Cobourg, all persons do put themselves into decent mourning—the mourning to begin on Sunday next, the 9th inst.

(Signed) "H. H. MOLESWORTH HOWARD,
Nov. 7, 1817. D. K. M."

Lord Chamberlain's Office,
Nov. 7, 1817.

"Orders for the Court going into Mourning on Sunday next, the 9th inst. for her late Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte Augusta, daughter of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and Consort of his Serene Highness the Prince Leopold of Saxe Cobourg, viz.

"The Ladies to wear black bombazines, plain muslin or long lawn, crape hoods, shamoy shoes and gloves, and crape fans.

"Undress—Dark Norwich crape.

"The Gentlemen to wear black cloth without buttons on the sleeves or pockets, plain muslin or long lawn cravats and weepers, shamoy shoes and gloves, crape hatbands, and black swords and buckles.

"Undress—Dark grey frocks."

Never did any event, of a public nature, create so powerful a sensation as was manifested throughout the whole metropolis, in proportion as the melancholy intelligence diffused itself, of her Royal Highness's death. There was an unaffected appearance of sorrow in every countenance, which plainly told the grief of all. From the highest to the lowest, this sympathy prevailed.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 11.

The great bell of St. Peter's Church was tolled on Saturday and yesterday, and "muffled peals" have been rung on the 12 bells of St. Nicholas; this will be continued each day from twelve to one o'clock, until after the funeral of the much lamented Princess Charlotte. All vessels in port, of all nations, had their colours hoisted half mast.

Still Later.—Captain Donlop, of the ship Lavinia, sailed from Deal on the 10th inst. On the morning of the 12th he was his vessel, about to obtain pegan, but could not succeed. He was informed that the funeral of the Princess Charlotte was to take place on the 19th.

Third fire at St. Johns, Nov. 25

About ten o'clock this forenoon, we were again alarmed by the cry of fire, which had nearly proved of as serious import as either of the others which have so recently occurred. It was however, fortunately discovered in sufficient time to prevent those consequences which otherwise might have ensued. On investigation, it appeared to proceed from a room in the lower part of a house situated between Duckworth and Water-streets, opposite the upper premises of Messrs. John Duncomb & Co. A quantity of shavings were in the room, apparently intended to answer the purposes of a bed. Part of the timber & a bedstead in the room were on fire when first discovered: and as some small brands were found among shavings, strong suspicions of design were excited. In consequence of which a woman, who was making her way through one of the windows, was immediately apprehended, and with a man, who appears to be her companion, is now in custody. A close investigation will, no doubt, be instituted, the result of which we shall take an early opportunity of laying before the public.

Unexampled and Accumulated Distress.

The state of the miserable inhabitants of St. Johns, Newfoundland, is a loud call upon all whom the Providence of God has exempted from such suffering, and blessed with abundance, to contribute of that abundance to relieve these poor sufferers. It is true, they are not our countrymen, they are the subjects of a foreign power, yet the spirit of that religion we profess teaches us to relieve even our enemies. But when we behold misery our only enquiry should be, is this real?—can we relieve it? The inclement season of the year prevents these wrecked people from obtaining aid from Europe; our feelings of humanity, therefore, are excited to afford them some relief, let us be prompt.—*N. Y. JUVENILE CRIMINALS.

Mr. Bennett, the chairman of the Police Committee, gave in a long and exceedingly interesting statement of the condition of the different prisons in England and France which he had visited. The reasonings are judicious, the knowledge of the subject extensive, and the facts equally important and curious. We select one of the anecdotes which Mr. Bennet details as a ground for his suggested improvement in the management of boy offenders:—

"Among the children whom I have seen in Prison, a boy by the name of Leary was the most remarkable; he was about 13 years of age, good looking, sharp and intelligent, and possessing a manner which seemed to indicate a character very different from what he really possessed. When I saw him he was under sentence of death for stealing a watch, chain, and seals, from Mr. Princep's chamber in the Temple: he had been five years in the practice of delinquency, progressively from stealing an apple off the stall, to house breaking and highway robbery. He belonged to the Moorfields School, and there he became acquainted with one Ryan, in that school, by whom he was instructed in the various arts and practices of delinquency: his first attempts were at darts, apples, &c.; then baker's baskets; then parcels of bacon on shop-counters, and money in shops; then to breaking shop windows and drawing out valuable articles through the aperture, picking pockets, house-breaking, &c.; and Leary has often gone to school next day with several pounds in his pockets, as the fruits of the produce of the previous day's robberies! He soon became a Captain of a gang, generally since known by Leary's gang, with five boys, and sometimes more, furnished with pistols, having a horse and cart with them; and if they had an opportunity in their rounds they cut off the trunks from gentlemen's carriages, when, after opening them according to their contents, as they would be governed in prosecuting their further objects in that quarter; they would then divide into parties of two, sometimes only one, and, leaving me with the horse and cart, go to various other houses, stating their being on the way to see their families, and begging for some bread and water; by such tales, united with their youth, they obtained relief, and generally ended by robbing the house of premises. In one instance Leary was detected and taken, and committed to Maidstone gaol; but the prosecutor not appearing against him, he was discharged. In these excursions he has stayed out a week and upwards, when his booty has produced him from 50 to £100. He has been concerned in various robberies in London and its vicinity, and has in his party at one time (amounting to 7 or ten) worn so bad money, he either robbed each by other thieves who knew he had no such about him, or he cheated it by genuining it from sooty, or greasy hands, or the faces of both sexes. After committing innumerable depredations, he was detected at Mr. Devonshire's, at Kennington, stealing some plate from that gentleman's dining room, when several other articles were coming against him in that neighbourhood, he was, in compassion to his youth, placed in the Philanthropic; but being now charged with Mr. Princep's robbery, he was taken out thereto, tried, convicted and sentenced to death, but was afterwards respited, and returned to the Philanthropic. He is a tall and well looking, and has robbed to the amount of £3000 during his 5 years career! This surprising boy has since broke out and escaped from the Philanthropic, went to his old practice, was again tried at the Old Bailey, and is transported for life."

NAVAL DEPOT.

Providence, Dec. 20

We learn with pleasure that government have determined to establish a Naval Depot at Fox River, just above Howland's Ferry Bridge, about 12 miles from Newport, and 20 from this town. The situation, we are informed, combines several important advantages. The Navy Yard, having a good depth of water, sufficient for the largest ships that ever floated; it is situated contiguous to large forests of excellent timber, which may be conveyed to the spot at but little expense.

In addition to these, another important advantage which presents itself is the security of the situation; as to the narrowness of the channel, it will be with extreme difficulty that an enemy's force could approach it, even if left unfortified; but if defended by a few pieces of cannon on the banks of the river below, we are assured that it would be impossible for any hostile force to reach it by water; and by this the chance of success would be none the better. Its proximity to the ocean, in which it is distant but a few miles, may also be considered another circumstance in its favour. On the whole, we doubt if our Government could have selected a situation in this part of the country combining more essential advantages as a regular yearly increase of the Navy, which has so eminently fought itself into favor of the nation, is hereafter to be made, we are pleased that this situation has been selected; not only because it will prove advantageous to the state of this trade, but because we think a judicious choice which has been made must advance the interests of our Navy, and in that view materially promote the nation.

EDW. MacMAHON, General Agent for paying Militia Pensions.

From Europe.

LONDON, Nov. 13.

The body of the Princess, when embalmed, was enclosed in a number of wrappers, sufficient with was—as mode of preservation first in use among the Egyptians, and adopted for centuries among ourselves. Those wrappers again are covered with an envelope of rich blue velvet, tied with white satin, and the body of the Royal Infant was enshrined and enclosed in precisely the same manner.

We mentioned yesterday that the feelings of his Serene Highness Prince Leopold has been greatly excited by the ceremony of embalming the body of his Consort, it being totally unexpected, the practice not being in the usages of his native country. Reflection which shews the the human nobility of his love, has hitherto only sharpened those pangs which time may mollify, but can never completely cure. His nights are restless—and if sleep should for one moment overwhelm exhausted nature, it awakens in the next to all the horrors of his affliced state. His Serene Highness still refuses all consolation; he suffers no one to approach him. His Highness passes all his time absorbed in thought and is resolved to see nothing except such objects as recall to his memory his departed Consort.—The most inconsiderable articles, once possessed by the lamented Princess, are endeared to him by fond recollections. Hence her bonnet, and the cloak she wore in her last airing, also excursion with him, are kept constantly before his eyes. They were hung by her hands upon a screen in the sitting parlour, and there they have remained ever since; nor will the Prince ever allow them to be removed, or any person whatever to touch them. Her Royal Highness's watch also remains on the mantle-piece in precisely the same situation in which she herself placed it.

NOVEMBER 15.

The funeral of the lamented Princess and her royal infant, is fixed as already stated, to take place on Tuesday evening next, by torch light. Notice on Tuesday and yesterday an interview with the Secretary of State on the subject. His Lordship, in consequence, has determined that no business whatever, as connected with the Presidency of the city, shall take place. The Mansion-house and Guildhall will be completely closed. The Lord Mayor intends also to issue notices, calling upon his fellow citizen to close their shops and houses, to suspend all business, and to attend Divine worship on the mournful occasion. It is further proposed by his Lordship, that not only the great bell of St Pauls, but that all other church bells throughout the city, should continue to toll at intervals each day, previous to, but more particularly on the day of the funeral.

The bier of the lamented Princess will be enclosed in an urn, which will be placed on her hearse, and like that, will be covered with crimson Genoa velvet, richly ornamented. A small medallion on it will contain a short inscription. The urn has been turned out of solid oak, and will be lined with lead.

The Royal cemetery in which the remains of our beloved Princess will be deposited, was constructed in 1810, by order of his Majesty, at the east end of St George's Chapel, for the hallowed place of himself and the other members of the Royal Family. Henry VII first built this sedibus ofrese stone, for a similar purpose, but that vault afterwards altering his intentions, began a more noble structure at Westminster, and this fabric remained unfinished until Cardinal Wolsey obtained a grant of it from Henry VIII and with a profusion of expence unknown in former ages, designed and began here a most magnificent mausoleum for himself, which when the building obtained the name of "Wolsey's Tomb-House." The corpse of the late amiable Princess Amelia, his Majesty's youngest daughter, was the first to repose in this sacred abode of peace, ages ago did her favourite years and blooming youth, rich and poor shed, as they saw the melancholy array passing along. It did not arrive at Windsor till near one o'clock; yet, late as was the hour, a great multitude were assembled to witness its approach. The body of the Infant, and the Urn, were received by eight Yeomen of the Guard, who immediately proceeded with them to the vault of St. George's Chapel, where they were deposited. The Coffin of her Royal Highness was conveyed to the chamber destined for its short abode, ere it shall be consigned to that tomb which will forever separate her from the world, and all those in it, whose hearts will cherish her memory, and whose virtue piety and honour are held in veneration by mankind.

NOVEMBER 22.

FUNERAL PROCESSION FROM WINDSOR.

The removal of the bodies of the Princess and her Royal Infant from Claremont, being fixed for six o'clock on Tuesday evening, a number of parts of the 10th, or Prince's own regiment of Hussars, also of the 3d Dragoon Guards, and in the Park near the palace to prevent disorder. At the appointed time, a mourning coach and six drew up to the grand entrance of the house; soon after, the coffin containing the infant and Princess, was brought out and placed in the hearse; it then drove off down a by eight horses, and went completely out of sight, to prevent the Prince seeing it when he came out. The coach which was to receive him, being announced to be in readiness, his Serene Highness came out and entered it, attended by the Rev Dr Short as his chief robes. Baron Hardenbroek, Lieutenant Colonel Bouverie, and Lady Mrs Campbell, Mrs. Phillips, Mrs Lewis, &c. went in the other mourning coaches. Every thing was conducted with the greatest regularity and solemnity; nothing was heard but the deep sighs of agonizing grief, as the cortege permitted into the Park. The whole was arranged by Mr Mash of the Lord Chamberlain's office, and Mr Banning, the Undertaker. The procession moved on over the bridge over six o'clock, preceded by upwards of 30 horsemen, abreast, in full mourning. The whole was followed by a party of the 10th Dragoons. Sam Wilton and Hampton Court bridges were mentioned and the carriages were stopped. It was, we understand, finally determined to go over Walton-bridge, in consequence of the Commander in Chief having ordered General Bolton to direct a party to clear over the two roads, and report which was the best; and in consequence of their report being in favour of Walton, that was preferred. Great numbers of horsemen and pedestrians followed; the bells of the different churches in this and other villages through which it passed, tolled in solemn sounds. The roads were thronged with spectators, and every house was closed. At Egham the escort of the 10th regiment was relieved by the Royal Horse Guards, who had left Windsor about six o'clock for that purpose. The procession did not enter Windsor till a little before two o'clock, when a great concourse of people had been waiting some hours. The procession of the Princess were received at the Lower Lodge, by the Yeomen of the Guard, who carried the coffin; a Guard of Honour from the 3d regiment of Foot Guards were stationed outside of the Lodge. Prince Leopold, his attendants and others, in the mourning coaches, also entered the Lodge. The coach containing the body of the infant and the urn drove to the chapel, where it was received by the Dean, and deposited in the vault, without any church service.

Numbers were disappointed at Windsor, who expected the Princess to lie in state; whereas on account of the smallness of the premises, and the want of passages to enter and retire, those only were admitted who had tickets.

The awful rites are terminated, and the tomb has just closed upon two generations from whom we expected a long line of Patriot Princes, continuing to the remotest posterity, the royal diadem in the illustrious House of Brunswick.—But these fond anticipations, those towering hopes are dashed to the earth, and instead of the joyful Anthem "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given," we have had to listen to the funeral dirge, and join in the requiem for the death of two generations of Princes in the short space of a few hours.—" Oh death! where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?" Great indeed has been the victory the grave has gained, and deeply do the universal British family feel the sting of death.

It is proposed in England to erect, by public subscription, a monument to the memory of the deceased Princess. This idea was noticed in the following lines.

Raise not an Urn of sculptur'd art.
That perisheth with years!—
Her Monument's each British heart!
Her Epitaph—their Tears!

Extract of a letter fro. an Austrian Gentlemen in England, to his friend in Philadelphia, dated Nov. 17, 1817.

This nation is literally in tears for the death of the Princess Charlotte. No woman died so universally lamented. With the prospect of reigning being called to the first throne on earth, she lived in retirement, apparently unconscious of her elevated rank. She was affable and precious to all around her. She delighted to do good. Married to a man she loved, she retired from the pomp of courts, and lived in the full enjoyment of domestick happiness. Independently of political considerations, her death is most sincerely to be regretted. Her chaste and virtuous deportment must necessarily have produced a salutary effect on the higher ranks of society. Her example must have had a moral tendency, and would in time no doubt have corrected the vices of the times.

As a Princess, she was dignified, but affable; as a wife, affectionate and exemplary. She was kind to the poor. She was a strict attendant on public worship, and last Sundays, after the hours of service, was present on reading the last English sermon, a few hours before her death, she had every prospect of giving birth to the future sovereign of these realms. The hope was blasted by the death of the infant—her constitution gave way—she resigned herself to God, and expired

On Wednesday the 19th, her remains are to be deposited in the church at Windsor. It will be a day of general mourning. All worldly occupation will be laid aside, and, the whole nation will bow down and worship God. This event is one of the solemn occasion on which they will be assembled, may turn away to repentance, and cause them to reflect that "in the midst of life, they are in death."

From Lower Canada.

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT OF LOWER-CANADA.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

WEDNESDAY, 7th January 1818.

This day at two o'clock, His Excellency the Governor in Chief, came down in state to the Legislative Council Chamber, and being seated on the Throne, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was sent to command the immediate attendance of the Assembly, which being done, His Excellency was pleased to open the Session with the following Speech:

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

When I met you in General Assembly at the opening of the last Session, it was my painful duty to represent to you the distresses which the inhabitants of several parishes of this district were at that time labouring under, from the failure of the harvest. It is therefore with particular satisfaction that I have now the pleasure of stating (from the best information I have been able to procure) that the liberal provision then made by the Legislature, not only for the immediate relief of the sufferers, but also for increasing the husbandmen with Seed Wheat and other Grain, necessary for the ensuing season, aided by the blessing of Divine Providence, been attended with the happiest consequences, and there is every reason to hope that the produce of the late harvest will prove more than sufficient for the consumption of the present year.

The assurance of which I am happy to have thus rendered to a great number of your fellow subjects, will I doubt not, be as gratifying to you as it is satisfactory to me.

Although our gracious Sovereign has, in his communications for which such liberal provision was made during the last session, have been carried on much to my satisfaction, there are still, I am sorry to say, that are still in a very different way in particular parts of the province, and the law which was to remedy them, being announced to be in readiness, his Serene Highness came out and entered it, attended by the Rev Dr Short as his chief robes. Baron Hardenbroek, Lieutenant Colonel Bouverie, and Lady Mrs Campbell, Mrs. Phillips, Mrs Lewis, &c. went in the other mourning coaches. Every thing was conducted with the greatest regularity and solemnity; nothing was heard but the deep sighs of agonizing grief, as the cortege permitted into the Park. The whole was arranged by Mr Mash of the Lord Chamberlain's office, and Mr Banning, the Undertaker. The procession moved on over the bridge over six o'clock, preceded by upwards of 30 horsemen, abreast, in full mourning. The whole was followed by a party of the 10th Dragoons. The procession did not enter Windsor till a little before two o'clock, when a great concourse of people had been waiting some hours. The procession of the Princess were received at the Lower Lodge, by the Yeomen of the Guard, who carried the coffin; a Guard of Honour from the 3d regiment of Foot Guards were stationed outside of the Lodge. Prince Leopold, his attendants and others, in the mourning coaches, also entered the Lodge. The coach containing the body of the infant and the urn drove to the chapel, where it was received by the Dean, and deposited in the vault, without any church service.

Numbers were disappointed at Windsor, who expected the Princess to lie in state; whereas on account of the smallness of the premises, and the want of passages to enter and retire, those only were admitted who had tickets.

The awful rites are terminated, and the tomb has just closed upon two generations from whom we expected a long line of Patriot Princes, continuing to the remotest posterity, the royal diadem in the illustrious House of Brunswick.—But these fond anticipations, those towering hopes are dashed to the earth, and instead of the joyful Anthem "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given," we have had to listen to the funeral dirge, and join in the requiem for the death of two generations of Princes in the short space of a few hours.—" Oh death! where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory?" Great indeed has been the victory the grave has gained, and deeply do the universal British family feel the sting of death.

It is proposed in England to erect, by public subscription, a monument to the memory of the deceased Princess. This idea was noticed in the following lines.

Raise not an Urn of sculptur'd art.
That perisheth with years!—
Her Monument's each British heart!
Her Epitaph—their Tears!

Extract of a letter fro. an Austrian Gentlemen in England, to his friend in Philadelphia, dated Nov. 17, 1817.

This nation is literally in tears for the death of the Princess Charlotte. No woman died so universally lamented. With the prospect of reigning being called to the first throne on earth, she lived in retirement, apparently unconscious of her elevated rank. She was affable and precious to all around her. She delighted to do good. Married to a man she loved, she retired from the pomp of courts, and lived in the full enjoyment of domestick happiness. Independently of political considerations, her death is most sincerely to be regretted. Her chaste and virtuous deportment must necessarily have produced a salutary effect on the higher ranks of society. Her example must have had a moral tendency, and would in time no doubt have corrected the vices of the times.

As a Princess, she was dignified, but affable; as a wife, affectionate and exemplary. She was kind to the poor. She was a strict attendant on public worship, and last Sundays, after the hours of service, was present on reading the last English sermon, a few hours before her death, she had every prospect of giving birth to the future sovereign of these realms. The hope was blasted by the death of the infant—her constitution gave way—she resigned herself to God, and expired

On Wednesday the 19th, her remains are to be deposited in the church at Windsor. It will be a day of general mourning. All worldly occupation will be laid aside, and, the whole nation will bow down and worship God. This event is one of the solemn occasion on which they will be assembled, may turn away to repentance, and cause them to reflect that "in the midst of life, they are in death."

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT OF LOWER-CANADA.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

WEDNESDAY, 7th January 1818.

This day at two o'clock, His Excellency the Governor in Chief, came down in state to the Legislative Council Chamber, and being seated on the Throne, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was sent to command the immediate attendance of the Assembly, which being done, His Excellency was pleased to open the Session with the following Speech:

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

When I met you in General Assembly at the opening of the last Session, it was my painful duty to represent to you the distresses which the inhabitants of several parishes of this district were at that time labouring under, from the failure of the harvest. It is therefore with particular satisfaction that I have now the pleasure of stating (from the best information I have been able to procure) that the liberal provision then made by the Legislature, not only for the immediate relief of the sufferers, but also for increasing the husbandmen with Seed Wheat and other Grain, necessary for the ensuing season, aided by the blessing of Divine Providence, been attended with the happiest consequences, and there is every reason to hope that the produce of the late harvest will prove more than sufficient for the consumption of the present year.

Although our gracious Sovereign has, in his communications for which such liberal provision was made during the last session, have been carried on much to my satisfaction, there are still, I am sorry to say, that are still in a very different way in particular parts of the province, and the law which was to remedy them, being announced to be in readiness, his Serene Highness came out and entered it, attended by the Rev Dr Short as his chief robes. Baron Hardenbroek, Lieutenant Colonel Bouverie, and Lady Mrs Campbell, Mrs. Phillips, Mrs Lewis, &c. went in the other mourning coaches. Every thing was conducted with the greatest regularity and solemnity; nothing was heard but the deep sighs of agonizing grief, as the cortege permitted into the Park. The whole was arranged by Mr Mash of the Lord Chamberlain's office, and Mr Banning, the Undertaker. The procession moved on over the bridge over six o'clock, preceded by upwards of 30 horsemen, abreast, in full mourning. The whole was followed by a party of the 10th Dragoons. Sam Wilton and Hampton Court bridges were mentioned and the carriages were stopped. It was, we understand, finally determined to go over Walton-bridge, in consequence of the Commander in Chief having ordered General Bolton to direct a party to clear over the two roads, and report which was the best; and in consequence of their report being in favour of Walton, that was preferred. Great numbers of horsemen and pedestrians followed; the bells of the different churches in this and other villages through which it passed, tolled in solemn sounds. The roads were thronged with spectators, and every house was closed. At Egham the escort of the 10th regiment was relieved by the Royal Horse Guards, who had left Windsor about six o'clock for that purpose. The procession did not enter Windsor till a little before two o'clock, when a great concourse of people had been waiting some hours. The procession of the Princess were received at the Lower Lodge, by the Yeomen of the Guard, who carried the coffin; a Guard of Honour from the 3d regiment of Foot Guards were stationed outside of the Lodge. LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

JANUARY—1818

Saturday 10—This day the Honorable the Legislative Council went up to the Castle of St. Lewis, and presented the following Address. In answer to his Excellency's Speech at the opening of the present Session.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY
Sir JOHN COAPE SHERBROOKE,
Knight Grand Cross of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath. Captain-General and Governor in Chief, in and over the Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and their several Dependencies, Vice Admiral of the same, Lieutenant-General and Commander in Chief of his Majesty's Forces in the said Provinces of Lower and Upper Canada, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and their several dependencies and in the islands of Newfoundland, Prince Edward, Cape Breton &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

WE, HIS MAJESTY'S dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Legislative Council of Lower Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to return Your Excellency our humble thanks for your SPEECH from the Throne.

We participate most sincerely with Your Excellency in the satisfaction arising from knowledge, that the liberal provision which was made in the last Session for the relief of the distressed in this District, has by the blessing of Divine Providence, been attended with the happiest consequences: and that there is every reason to hope, that the produce of the present harvest will prove more than sufficient for the consumption of the present year.

It is but justice to acknowledge that the services which have thus been rendered to a great number of our fellow subjects, originated in the kind and humane precautions that were taken by your Excellency, from the first moment you became informed of the destitute state in which so large a proportion of the community were involved.

We are aware, that numberless difficulties must have arisen in determining upon the most judicious mode of applying the very liberal funds that have been provided by the Legislature for the purpose of the Internal Communications; And though difficulties and delays unavoidably occurred in many parts of the Province, we trust, that these impediments will be surmounted: and we anticipate with your Excellency, the flattering prospect, that in the course of the approaching season, the whole of the sums which have been approved will be carried into execution.

We are sensible of the advantages that must arise from an improvement in the state of Agriculture in this Province; and should the Emigrations from Europe continue, we shall gladly facilitate, as far as may be in our power, the introduction into the Colony of such experienced Farmers and Labourers as may, by their example, contribute to the advancement of its Agricultural Interests.

The Commander of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent's forces, directing your Excellency to call it on the Provincial Legislature, to vote the sums necessary for the ordinary Annual Expenditure in the Province, will receive from us that dutiful attention which the great and serious importance of the subject they relate to requires.

It is satisfactory to us to learn, that the amount which has been ascertained to be due from this Province to Upper-Canada, for the proportion of Duties upon Goods, &c. which have passed through the Lower Province into Upper has been paid over to the persons authorized on the part of, Upper-Canada to receive it.

The Report of the Commissioners appointed by an Act of the Session, to treat with those of Upper-Canada for the formation of a new provisional agreement between the Provinces, will be laid before you in conformity to the provisions of that Act, previous to its being carried into execution.

In calling you together to deliberate on the measures best adapted to advance the interests of the people whom you represent, I feel assured that those deliberations will be guided by the same principles of loyalty, and the same disposition of mutual confidence and good will, which you evinced in your last Session, and, while on my part I shall be anxious to give my ready assistance to every measure which shall have for its object the good of the Province, I cannot doubt that with such feelings on all sides, the result of this Session will be at once honorable to you and useful to your Country.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY,

JANUARY—1818.

TO HIS EXCELLENCY
Sir JOHN COAPE SHERBROOKE,
&c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

WE, HIS MAJESTY'S most dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Commons of Lower Canada, of Her Royal Highness Princess CHARLOTTE AUGUSTA, daughter of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and Consort of his Serene Highness Prince Leopold of Saxe Coburg, and of her Royal Highness, this House do adjourn from so-ending on the public business, and do adjourn to Wednesday next. And the House adjourned accordingly to Wednesday next.

LONDON, Nov. 8.

The following orders have been issued by command of the Prince Regent:—

"His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, acting in the name and in the behalf of his Majesty, does not require that the officers of the army should wear any other mourning on the present melancholy occasion, than a black crape round their left arm with their uniforms.

"By command of his Royal Highness the Commander in chief.

"HARRY CALVERT,

"Admiralty Office, Nov. 7.

"His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, acting in the name and in behalf of his Majesty, does not require that the officers of the Fleet or Royal Marines should wear any other mourning on the present melancholy occasion, than a black crape round their left arm with their uniforms.

"J. W. CROKER."

THE ARMY.

The following letter was addressed from the House Guards some time since to the Colonels of the army, and we are happy to find so high an authority concurring with the general feeling of the country, and recommending a line of conduct so agreeable to humanity and judgement:—

"The Commander-in-Chief is confident that the Officers of the Army are universally actuated by a spirit of justice, and impressed with sentiments of kindness and regard towards their men, which they on so many occasions have proved themselves to deserve; but his Royal Highness has reason to apprehend, that in many instances sufficient attention has not been paid to the EXPERIENCE OF CAUSES. The timely intervention of the officer—his personal intercourse and acquaintance with his men—which attentions are sure to be repaid by the soldiers' confidence and attachment) and above all his personal example, are the only efficacious means of preventing military offences; and the Commander-in-Chief has no hesitation in declaring, that the maintenance of strict discipline without the severity of punishment, and the support and encouragement of an ardent military spirit in a corps, without licentiousness, are the criterion by which his Royal Highness will be very much guided in forming an opinion of the talents, abilities, and merit of the officers to whom the command of the different regiments and corps of the army are confided.

(Signed) H. CALVERT."

The following regiments have been ordered to be disbanded:—2d battalion 58d, 2d battalion 60th, 5th and 6th West Indi-, 3d Ceylon, and the Garrison Company in the West Indies. The 80th regiment was reduced in establishment 25th August.

The Officers of the Navy have been recalled on by the Lords of the Admiralty to deliver in statements of their respective services from the period of entering, and through their several gradations, on board his Majesty's ships. This measure is supposed to be for the purpose of selecting such as may be wanted at any future period for particular services, in places they may be acquainted with.

A meeting was holden of Thursday last at Carlisle, to take into consideration the propriety of cutting a canal between that city and the West Sea: the Right Hon. the Earl of Lonsdale, was in the chair, and opened the business in a neat speech. Sir Jas. Graham, Bart. of Edmond Castle, and Mr Curwen spoke, and were very sensible of the great advantage the measure would be to Carlisle in particular. A resolution for a further survey was passed. Every person who subscribed five guineas towards it, to be entitled to take shares thereafter.

BAYONNE.—The French papers contain a copy of a treaty between France and Portugal, signed in August last, by which his Most Faithful Majesty agrees to give up to his Most Christian Majesty, French Guiana, as far as the river Oyapor, with all magazines, military stores, &c. according to the inventory mentioned in the capitulation of 1809.

AUGSBURGH, Oct. 17.

The following has been officially published respecting the reported misunderstanding between Russia and the Porte:

"The Ottoman government could have had no opportunity of approving or putting Czerny George to death, because that event took place a few hours after he entered the Ottoman territory. It is not yet known what led to the folly that induced this unfortunate man to take the step that cost him his life. At all events he courted his own death.—Previous to being informed of the catastrophe, and on the first intimation of his rash intention, the Emperor of Russia issued a circular order, by which it was declared, that in case Czerny George should quit his asylum and pass the Russian frontier, the personal protection which had been granted to him, and the Russian dignities which had been conferred upon him, would be considered as revoked. His Imperial Majesty consequently renounced beforehand, all participation in the project of Czerny. When the affair was known at Constantinople, the Russian Ambassador could have no doubt whatever as to the manner in which he was to take it up, and it is certain that neither the Baron de Strogonoff nor the Russian Cabinet took the least step with the Porte respecting it. The statement of the sending a courier from St. Petersburgh with a categorical demand of satisfaction, or the threat of immediate hostilities, is not only, therefore, an unfounded report, but a deliberate falsehood. All the other reports given in the German Journals upon this subject, are equally unfounded. The Corps d'Armee, commanded by General Beningsen, has never had the denomination of an Army of Observation, nor has it recently received any reinforcement."

The article goes on to state, but not with the same quotation remarks, that the intelligence of differences between England and the Porte is unfounded; that the Grand Seignior will not expose himself to a misunderstanding with England for the sake of Ali Pacha, and that there is no reason to apprehend a rupture between the Porte and any European Power whatever; on the contrary, the discussions between Russia and the Porte, respecting their frontiers, are very nearly terminated.

The Moniteur of Friday last contains a detailed account of the number of wolves killed in the 86 departments of France, between the 1st of January, 1816, and the 31st of July, 1817. The total amount is 2,416, but it is curious to observe, that in the department of the Aude, M. Debosse killed, besides 104 wolves, three wild cats and a tiger. It is added, in a note, that tigers are very rare in that department, and that during the last 25 years, when one was killed, it was not known there were any of those animals. Several bears were destroyed in different departments.

PARIS, Nov. 8.

In the Arrondissement of Avalon, (Yonne,) a girl, 17 years of age, was on the 9th ultimo, carried away, near Chatel Censoir, by several wolves. A number of individuals who had assembled in consequence of her cries, made a pursuit, and had the good fortune to make the wolves abandon their prey. The same day, on the same spot, a child, 7 years of age, was likewise carried away, some remains of whose corpse were afterwards found at a short distance. In the course of a fortnight since these events, 12 of these ferocious animals have been killed by the country people, partly by means of poison, and also by partial battues made on the points where the wolves made the greatest ravages.

DEATH OF THE NEW DEY OF ALGIERS

In one of our late London papers, we find an article under the Legislature of Oct. 6. stating that Sir Byam Martin, Commander of the English corvet Myrmidon, who had arrived there from Malton, had brought the following news.

"The English Consul at Algiers has received from the consul of the same Algiers, official news of the death of the Dey on the 18th September. This event resulted from the entrance of a Hamburg prize into the port. The English Consul demanded that it should be restored but the Dey having refused, all the Consuls drew up an energetic protest, threatening to depart. This gave rise to a popular commotion. The Dey retired to the Palace, but was attacked by the people, and strangled.—The new Dey was formerly a shoe-maker. He shows pacific disposition, and has already offered to put the town of Bona into the hands of the English. It is not know whether this offer will be accepted. The town is quiet, and the Consuls are respected."—Com. Adv.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 3—noon.

From Buenos Ayres—It appears by a letter from Buenos Ayres, dated 6th Sept. that the Supreme Director, Puerryedon, had retired from the government "for two months, and had gone to his country seat—being in bad health. Brigadier General Aspurgen, had been appointed in his place. Congress have not dared to re-elect Puerreydon for three years, as he asked—but with standing the motion was made in public session two months past.

The Portuguese hold possession of Montevideo, but make no progress. They have established a house at Buenos Ayres, and are publickly supplying Montevideo with provisions, and all kinds of munitions of war; thus enabling them to hold out against the brave General Artigas; while the British government, to shew their disapprobation of the invasion by the Portuguese, have ordered all their officers, to the Portuguese service, employed in the expedition, to retire.

The Patriotic general, J. M. D. Carrera, is said to be living at present under the protection of General Artigas; the moment not having yet arrived for him to return with safety and advantage to his beloved country, Chili, which has passed from a state of subjection to the royal forces of old Spain, into a state of no less absolute and unqualified subjection to the policy and the bayonets of Buenos Ayres.

From Rio Janeiro.

The schr Maninas, Capt. Young, arrived at this port last evening, in 42 days from Rio Janeiro. The following intelligence has been received by this arrival:—

The United States ship Ontario, Captain Biddle, in 45 days from New-York, had arrived at Rio Janeiro, crew all in good health, and would sail in a few days for the Pacific, to afford protection to our commerce, which was suffering from the depredations of the Lima cruisers.

The British naval force in the South American station is to be considerably augmented. The brig of war Jairus and the Tyne and Bosun sloops of war, had already arrived at Rio Janeiro, the former of which immediately left there for Rio de la Plata, and the two latter were to be sent round Cape Horn. Commodore Bowles, in the Amphion frigate, had proceeded from Buenos Ayres, for Valparaiso, supposed for the purpose of entering into commercial arrangements with the patriot government of Chili, in the capital of which, St. Jago, preparations were making to give him a distinguished reception.

Several Portuguese ships of the line, two Austrian frigates, and one Russian frigate, were also at Rio Janeiro.

The queen of the hereditary prince of Hesse had arrived at Rio. Her presence was regarded by the inhabitants as a most happy event, her morals and amiable character, it was anticipated, would be instrumental in softening the asperities which had marked the disposition and temper of the prince, from which the Brazilians had much to fear; and a reformation in which, would operate to the diffusion of general happiness and tranquility, which has been long and improperly considered had measurably subverted.

Mr. Trimble, in bringing the case of Mr. Meade before Congress, has taken the old course, and instead of dealing out his blows on Spain alone, has heaped them full upon his speech. It appears utterly impossible for some gentlemen to discuss any thing of a political nature, without stopping out of their track for the purpose of lashing Great Britain, as the Speaking of the imprisonment of Mr. Meade our orator takes occasion to say, "that it is the best and wisest policy to husband our resources, our men, and our means, to meet the coming contest [which does seem by this 17th of the only nation that dare to offer us battle] on land or on the water—the only nation that can send us a Hannibal, or whom we shall meet with a Scipio—that nation who has already sacked our capital Rome, and whose proud Carthage we shall soon see humble in the dust, and sweep with the besom of retributive destruction." Now what has this farrago of bombast and swaggering to do with the imprisonment of Mr. Meade? We presume, however, the theme, that it is the intention of the Kentuckians, before long, to march probably by the way of Kamtschatka, Siberia, thro' Petersburgh, Germany, and London, and over the other metropolis "with the besom of retributive desolation."

A Slaveless project is now under serious discussion in the state of Delaware. It is thinks—less than the dissolution of that state, a the emancipation of her present territory to one her adjoining sister states. A writer in the Federal Republican" proposes that the remaining slaves generally agreed to the measure, the proposition; and call on the only state that hesitated more to step between him and his object, and give up a few slaves to the emancipation of the majority, but the measure of carrying it into effect."—*Com. Covent Garden Theatre. (London.)

The only circumstance worthy of remark in an one and tragedy of this season, has been the retirement of Mr. Kemble from the stage. This event took place on the 23d of June, after the performance of Coriolanus, in which he was to act. The interest excited by an occasion so unusual every thing of the kind on similar occasions. The whole of the boxes and places which could be secured had been taken a fortnight before; and in their vicinity to where the last performance of this great actor, members began to collect round the entrance of the pit so early as twelve o'clock. The rush on the opening of the doors was in consequence tremendous, though not productive of any serious accident, and the house was instantly filled. Never did Kemble perform the arduous part of Coriolanus with more energy and grandeur, and his unabated professional powers never called up and to the public regrets for the unmerciful loss of his services. The audience eagerly seized every passage in the play that could be applied to the situation of their favourite, and marked them with enthusiastic applause. Between the acts, an address to Mr. Kemble, written for the occasion, was circulated through the house—a copy of it printed in gold letters upon white satin, encompassed by a border of inchial ornaments embroidered in gold, and encircled by a superb crown of laurel, was handed to the front of the pit to be presented at the conclusion. At the fall of the curtain, hazards were established in different parts of the pit and galleries, intended that the further benefit of this last public wish, "No farewell for ever from Kemble." Owing to a misconception that these were designed to prevent Mr. Kemble from delivering any address, alarmers immediately arose. But the circumstance only afforded an additional proof of public esteem. The idea that a premotion was intended, occasioned some tumult although it soon appeared that the audience had but one wish and opinion. A short but anxious interval ensued. The curtain was again drawn up; a grand street of Rome, which forms a principal scene in the tragedy, was displayed; and Kemble, in the Roman costume, in which he had performed Coriolanus came forward. One of those lofty public edifices which adorned the capital of the ancient world, rose behind him. The impression produced by this union, on such an occasion, was deeply felt. It appeared as if Kemble, the Roman spirit, the Roman grandeur, and Rome itself, were about to disappear from the stage, and leave a chasm which could no more be filled. The ties of sympathy which had so long existed between the house and him, all was great and noble in the drama, and him both as it were into the public, were about to be at once, and it was to be feared, for ever dissolved. Those who had been an object in their minds, felt in his retiring the interests of the past, the present, and the future, crowded into the single moment. Several long and continued thunders of applause rendered it impossible for him to be heard for some time. Although he appeared agitated, and often interrupted by his feelings, he addressed the audience:

"Ladies and Gentlemen! I have acquired before you for the last time." [Here he was interrupted by bursts of "No, No," from all parts of the house.] He then resumed. "I came now to close my long professional career." [He was again obliged to [illegible] tries, "No, no—No retiring—No farewell for ever."] His tumult of applause and the renewed proofs of public esteem affected him to tears, and rendered him still less able of collecting [illegible]. When he proceeded his tones were broken and his countenance agitated. Ladies and Gentlemen, I do not wish to trespass on your time—I feared I should not have sufficient fortitude for this occasion—and I now [illegible] away withdrawn in silence from you [illegible] and a grateful heart. But I suffered myself to be persuaded, that I only found my address, [illegible] words would be received from me in part. [illegible] (Renewed applauses.) The farewell address with which you have ever treated me from the first night of my coming forward to [illegible] but public favour down to this present moment, will be eternally remembered with gratitude. Such tokens as I have been accustomed to have always cheerfully been repaid by your services; whether as an actor in the characters allotted to me, or as a manager. It has ever been my ambition to add to the splendour and [illegible] of the drama, and more especially to assert myself to give effect to the plays of our divine Shakspeare. (Loud applause.) On every occasion, permit me to say, all my efforts, all my studies, all my labours have been pleased to reward them. (Applause.) Ladies and Gentlemen! I cannot take my leave of you, as I most respectfully bid you adieu, and a grateful willing farewell." At these words he fainted with much agitation, and exhibited a repetition of enthusiastic applauses and cries of regret from all parts of the house hastily withdrew from the stage. The copy of the address on which nations and the crown of laurel were then delivered to the celebrated French tragedian, Mr. Talma, to the audience, with a request that he would bring them upon the stage. This was done, and Mr. Talma, the stage manager, was announced to present them to Mr. Kemble. As an additional mark of honour to the valued honoree, the medal on [illegible] was [illegible] and the performances of the night was closed in compliance with their wishes.

Here follows a correct copy of the address printed on the satin scroll, which is from the energetic pen of Mr. WILLIAM CAREY—

TO

JOHN PHILIP KEMBLE, ESQ.

Of the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden.

Sir,—After having so long received from the display of your exalted abilities, the greatest degree of gratification and instruction, which the highest class of histrionic representation can bestow, we think upon the near approach of your intended farewell to the stage with sentiments of deep concern, and if possible, an increase of respect. In justice to the interest of the drama and to our own feelings we feel it a certain purpose the moment of a separation so painful. Fitted by the endowments of nature and by classical requirements, by high associations, and for a considerable number of years, you have for upwards of thirty years dignified the profession of an actor by your private example and public exertions in the British capital. We beheld in your personification the spirit of history and of the mighty mind. In embodying the characters of Shakspeare and our other dramatic writers, you were not contented to revive an outward show of their greatness alone—the splendour of an antique costume—the helmet and armour—the crown and sceptre—all that pertains to the insignia of command are easily assumed. When you appeared the halo and country in which we live were forgotten. Time rolled back a long succession of centuries. The grave gave up its illustrious dead. Cities and nations, long passed away, re-appeared and the elder brothers of mankind, the heroes and statesmen, the sages and monarchs of other years, got in the brightness of their ancient glory, lived and loved, and fought, and bled before us. We beheld in you, not only the varying looks and gestures, their proud march and grandeur of demeanour but the elevation of their mind, and the flame of their passions. We mean not here to enumerate the various characters in which you have shone as the Star of your era: but we may be allowed to say that you excelled in that which your mind created; that whether the grandeur of an exalted mind was united with majesty of person; wherever the noblest organ was required for the noblest expression; wherever nature, holding up the model of character, called for an imitation from the most precious of metals, there she looked to KEMBLE as her gold; there you shone with pre-eminent lustre. In the austere dignity of Cato, the stern patriotism of Brutus, the kingly bearing of Coriolanus, and the vast imagination of Alexander, you transported your auditors in imagination alternately to Greece, Rome or Babylon. Surrounded by the swell pageant and illusion of local scenery, you seemed every where in your native city; every where contemporary with the ancient edifices of the ancient world. In you some of those great characters lived, and we cannot conceive that superhuman beings, they whom you withdrew, can ever lose sight of them for a long time, and so like, short, perhaps for ever. In expressing this sentiment we feel a warm respect for every actor of genius. A mind like yours would be warmed and by any commendation that was not flattering, the most liberal sense of general desert. It an additional merit in you to have obtained distinction in an age of refinement, and from a people, not only polished to appreciate your powers, small light shone in darkness; but you have also visited amidst a circle of generous competitors for fame, whose various abilities are all alive: and in whose well earned applause you proudly join. They looked to the time when your country pays to you, the same sincere of that celebrity which they have already so deservedly acquired, and a very pledge the future honours which await the close of their professional career. We, therefore, in entertainment that you will not at once deprive the public of their gratification, and the stage of your final leave on the night assigned for your last performance. All we ask is, that you will request to perform a few nights each season, as long as your health will permit. We believe you to grant this request, by your own [illegible] which is not more dear to you than it is to us, and we confidently rely upon your readiness for public opinion that you will not contend with the current of a refusal. We have upon this occasion of signatures as inadequate as unnecessary, even if our numbers and rank of Sirs permitted that form. The [illegible] name to the audience, each night of your [illegible] and for united voice which accompanies, are the best attestation of the [illegible] sentiment.

From Lower Canada.

DEBATES IN THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

QUEBEC, Jan. 14 1818.

Mr. Davidson rose in his place and submitted to the House certain Provisional articles of agreement with Upper Canada, relative to duties and drawbacks to be reciprocally allowed to the Province, which are as follows:

1st. That the Legislature of Upper Canada will not impose any duties whatever, on any goods, wares and merchandizes imported into Lower Canada, and passing into Upper Canada during the continuance of this agreement, but will allow and admit the Legislature of Lower Canada to impose and levy such duties, on such goods, wares and merchandizes, as they may judge expedient: other than goods imported from Upper Canada.

2d. That during the continuance of this agreement, the Province of Upper Canada shall be entitled to receive annually, one fifth part of all the duties (exclusive of the expence of collection) which shall be raised, levied and collected in Lower Canada, under and by virtue of an Act of the Parliament of Great Britain, passed in the fourteenth year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act to establish a fund towards further defraying the charges of the Administration of Justice, and support of Civil Government within the Province of Quebec in America." And also one fifth part of all duties (exclusive of the expence of collection,) which the Legislature of Lower Canada have already imposed, or may hereafter impose on goods, wares or merchandizes imported, or to be imported into Lower Canada during the continuance of this agreement, provided nevertheless that this agreement shall not be construed to extend to duties laid upon goods, sold at auction in Lower Canada as aforesaid.

3d. That the operation of this agreement shall be considered to commence on the first day of January last, and shall be in force until the first day of July, which will be in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and nineteen.

Mr. D at the same time gave notice, that it was his intention to move the House on Friday next, on the expediency of presenting an Address to his Excellency the Governor in Chief, praying that his Excellency will be pleased to lay before the House, a copy of the memorial of the Assembly of Upper Canada, to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent. He stated to the House, that the Commissioners appointed for the purpose aforesaid, by an Act of the Legislature in the last Session, had met the Commissioners from Upper Canada at Montreal, with whom they had not, until after several earnest conferences, agreed upon the articles now submitted to the consideration of the House. He, Mr. D. had not been present at the conferences at Montreal, but he had afterwards met the Gentlemen appointed on the part of Upper Canada, at Quebec, and he was sorry to say, that he could not acknowledge to have found in them that favorable disposition to accomodation, which from the liberality of the Legislature of this Province might reasonably have been anticipated. He would nevertheless refrain from any farther comments upon the subject at present, and be content with moving for leave to introduce a Bill to ratify and confirm the same.

And he accordingly moved for leave to introduce the same. The Bill was introduced and read for the first time, and ordered for the second reading on the 24th instant.

Mr. Andrew Stuart presented a petition from John Neilson and divers Electors of the County of Quebec, against the Election and return of James M'Callum, Esquire, for bribery and corruption of the grossest nature.

Mr. Stuart observed that it was not necessary at the present stage of the Petition, to occupy the time of the House in observations on the nature of the offences which it had fallen to his duty to lay before the House. They were of a nature to interest every Member of the Legislature and of the Country at large. To wink at such proceedings would be criminal in the extreme, as their tendency must necessarily be, to render seats in that Honourable House venal, and by that means convert the House of Assembly into something like a Packed Jury instead of an important branch of the Legislature. He would upon a future occasion, enter more largely on the subject than he thought necessary to do at the present moment.

Mr. Viger observed that he would not prejudge the affair in question, as he was entirely ignorant of the occurrences in question, but, if the Facts such as represented on the face of the Petition were true, they amounted to an enormity such as he was confident had never been exhibited in this Province.

Few observations were made in the House on the subject; probably from the surprise created by the nature and enormity of the Facts exhibited on the Petition, as well as from a sense of the propriety of suspending all opinion until after an enquiry on the subject, which on motion of Mr. A. Stuart was fixed for the 6th February next.

Mr. Cuvillier rose in pursuance of notice which he had given on Saturday last, of his intention to accuse the Honorable Member of the County of Bedford (Mr. M'Cord) of bad faith, in having surprised the House in the last Session in passing the Bill for regulating the Police of the Cities of Quebec and Montreal, and the Town of Three Rivers. It must at all times be a most unpleasant duty to accuse, but he felt convinced that it was due to the House and to the Country; to go into an enquiry upon the subject in question, in order that their Constituents might have some explanation of the extraordinary oversight of the House in allowing a Bill of such an important nature to pass into a permanent law. The Honorable Member whom he intended to accuse of surprise, had introduced the Bill and had conducted it through the various stages of its progress in the House, which he must have known never intended it to become a permanent law. He should therefore in candor and in good faith, have apprised the House or the Special Committee to which the Bill had been committed, of his intention of making it a permanent Act, or he ought to have directed the Officer appointed by the House for preparing the Bill, to have as heretofore used, inserted a clause limiting the duration of the Bill, leaving it to the House to retrench that clause if it should be the sense of the House to make it a permanent law. Neither of these precautions had, as he should hereafter prove, been taken by the Hon. Gentleman in question. Mr. Cuvillier in his place then accused "Thomas M'Cord, Esquire, one of the Members "of that House for the County of Bedford, of having wilfully and knowingly acted with bad faith and surprised the House in the introduction "and passing of an Act during the last "Session, intituled, An Act more effectually to provide for the regulation of "the Police of the Cities of Quebec and "Montreal, and the Town of Three Rivers, and for other purposes therein mentioned."

Mr. Cuvillier then moved that the House do resolve itself into a Committee of the whole on Monday the 26th January instant, to enquire by evidence whether Thomas M'Cord, Esquire, one of the Members of this House, hath not knowingly and wilfully used bad faith and surprise with respect to this House, in the manner wherein he introduced and carried through last year a Bill intituled, "An Act more effectually to provide for the regulation of the Police of the Cities of Quebec and Montreal, and the Town of Three Rivers, and for other purposes therein mentioned."

Mr. Cuvillier then moved that the House do resolve itself into a Committee of the whole on Monday the 26th January instant, to enquire by evidence whether Thomas M'Cord, Esquire, one of the Members of this House, hath not knowingly and wilfully used bad faith and surprise with respect to this House, in the manner wherein he introduced and carried through last year a Bill intituled, "An Act more effectually to provide for the regulation of the Police of the Cities of Quebec and Montreal, and the Town of Three Rivers, and for other purposes therein mentioned."

Mr. Viger said he did not think himself justifiable in remaining silent on the present occasion, where a sense of duty urged him to explain the reasons which he thought ought to determine the house to adopt the enquiry proposed. The Honorable Member for Bedford was attacked; he was accused of having wilfully deceived the House, and thereby the whole Legislature, which had acquiesced in rendering an Act perpetual, until that period temporary, and which indeed was not of a nature to be made a perpetual Law, without even shewing the necessity, or apprising the Members composing the House, of so important an alteration in the nature of the Bill. He maintained that an enquiry was absolutely necessary, as well for the justification of the Member accused, as for that of the House in the supposition which he might reasonably entertain, that the omission of the clause limiting the duration of the Act in question might have been, no more than an involuntary and innocent oversight on the part of the Honorable Member, who last year had introduced the Bill.

After having enlarged upon this subject, he dwelt for some time upon the responsibility incurred by Members introducing Bills, who ought to be guided by the strictest principles of honor and good faith, and on all occasions avoid any thing like surprise upon the House. The delicacy of their situation was such, that they were responsible for every error committed through their fault or neglect, and were liable to censure in every instance in which they might fail in these respects. He observed, that without this responsibility of Members towards the House, there must be an end to all business, that it would be impossible to carry on the public affairs, and the result must evidently be the greatest disorder. That the springs of government must without this mutual good faith in Members be broken. The laws calculated to maintain the authority of government and the Liberty of the People, to secure the dominion of justice, and the public happiness, would soon become the scourge of society, as they would be the fruit of intrigue, of levity, of dishonour and corruption.

He said there ought not to be a moment's hesitation on the subject. The Honor of the House, that of the Member accused, and of the accuser, equally imposed upon them the necessity of recurring to an enquiry. That if the charge were well grounded, it would, by falling upon the Delinquent, rescue those from the injurious imputation of having participated in a fault, who were in some shape only the victims of it. While on the other hand, all odious suspicion might be removed if it were made apparent that the omission which had given rise to the accusation, were merely the result of an error which circumstances might in some manner palliate.

Mr. M'Cord rose to say, that after having, he trusted, hitherto maintained an unsullied reputation among his fellow Citizens, it could not but be to him extremely painful to hear himself at this advanced period of life, charged with the guilt which the Honorable Member for the County of Huntingdon (Mr. Cuvillier,) has imputed to him; his conduct in carrying through the Bill had been fair and upright; and his heart—his conscience thoroughly acquitted him of any fraud or deception upon that House, which upon investigating his conduct in that respect, would, he felt confident, honorably acquit him of any such imputation. The accusation he said was false, malicious and unjust.—He anxiously desired an enquiry into the subject, in order that he might prove it so, and resche his character from the odium which a public accusation must necessarily create. As to the Honourable Member who spoke last, though he entertained the highest opinion of his honor, he always had differed with him in his political principles.

Mr. Vondenvelden stood for further information on the nature of the subject, as well as on the mode of proceeding, which the Honorable Member of Huntingdon had just now proposed; he acknowledged himself to be utterly unacquainted with it, and would feel extremely obliged to the Honorable Member for Parliamentary precedent on the subject, which was to him novel, and would be satisfactory to Members to learn from the Honorable Gentleman, what were the facts upon which he relied for the support of his accusation, and whether in the event that these facts were true, it would be constitutional to censure the Honorable Member in question. To accuse an individual of that House of bad faith, was, he apprehended, a charge rather too indefinite for the House to proceed upon, and he conceived it to be premature to accuse a single Member for the passing of a Bill, however dangerous or absurd such Bill might be in principle; the tendency of such a doctrine would be to shift the whole responsibility of the House from itself, upon the shoulders of an individual; it would in fact be charging that Individual with the responsibility of the Legislation of the Province. He (Mr. Vondenvelden) was not disposed to blame the Member alluded to, for the passing of the Police Act, which he regretted to find had, contrary to the general sense of the House been made a perpetual law, but he rather blamed himself in having allowed it to escape his notice while on its progress through the House. The remedy was, however, far from being a difficult matter, it was only to introduce another Bill to limit the duration of the act in question.

Mr. Taschereau was of opinion that the accusation was entirely too vague and indefinite to proceed upon with any prospect of success.—The charge, as far as it related to the passing of the act in question, could not exclusively apply to the Honorable Member in question. The fact, if any, rested with the whole House, in having passed it without opposition or amendment. The bad faith imputed to the Honorable Member, could not be conceived, properly become the subject of an impeachment or expulsion. To deem would be to punish an individual: a mere operation of the mind; in other words, to harrass a Member for his opinion, which whatever it might be, should not in any account be imputed to him as a criminal. No man should be by law implicated, to be considered as culpable of an offence laid to his charge. It was owing to this summary mode of proceeding, by implication, people charged of treason and other abominable crimes, that so many struggles have taken place in England between the people and the rulers, which have ended in establishing the necessity of proving overt acts against those accused of such offences. In fact, if we advert to the horrors of the French Revolution, we shall find that the greater part of the executions which took place under the sanguinary regime of the leaders of that period, were merely for opinion. That those French demagogues, or public accusers, had shewn themselves the most indecent of tyrants, and that he would always oppose the introduction of any such tyrannical system into this Province. Mr. Taschereau made some objections to the form of the motion proposed by Mr. Cuvillier, which the latter, by permission of the House, amended, substituting the words "to enquire by evidence," (as in italics in the motion) instead of "to accuse," as when first presented to the Chair. Mr. Taschereau stated that as it was now proposed to go into evidence on the subject, which might lead to bring out facts, he thought it but fair, for both parties, that the House should adjourn the subject, and let the consequences rest where it ought. Exemption or censure of one or other of the parties, might ensue, as he might reasonably infer, from the respectively charges with which the Gentlemen in question had been accused: such censure however, by no means intended, by any thing he had said, to draw any odious comparisons with respect to the Hon. Member who had moved the measure.

Mr. Vondenvelden observed that the honourable Member accused, had insinuated that he (Mr. V.) had been guided by political motives rather than by principles of justice. He answered that on public measures he had invariably made it a rule to lay aside all considerations of a personal nature. He might indeed occasionally err, but he trusted that his fellow Citizens could not in justice, upbraid him with having ever sacrificed their interests or his duty from prejudice or from passion. That a moment's reflexion would convince the honourable Member who had thrown out the insinuation of the justice of it.—If the Hon. Member were (as he trusted he might) on reflexion of the accusation, he ought rather to feel himself obliged to those who insisted upon an enquiry, which alone could retrieve his character from the opprobrium with which it stood marked on the Journals of the House, and which without some satisfactory explanation must remain as a perpetual blot upon it.—What was to be done? would not the rejection of the motion amount to a denial of justice, would it not be the means of shutting the mouth of the Hon. Member in question who would thereby be precluded from obtaining justice. It would be equally unfair both with respect to the accused and the Country.

Twenty years had nearly elapsed since the law referred to in the motion of the Hon. Member for Huntingdon had been first introduced by the Legislature.—The House of Assembly, where it originated, could not bestow its attention upon all the objects comprehended in the Act, as to regulate and provide for the various details of the Police of Quebec and Montreal. It was requisite to entrust a certain share of local Legislation to the authorities upon the spot. To delegate this power to those acquainted with the local circumstances of those places was the result of necessity, not of choice.—It was an experiment—and the powers of making Rules and Regulations of Police had as a matter of course been confided to the Magistrates of those Cities—but these Magistrates were also charged with the administration of the municipal revenues, as well as with the judicial functions relating to them. The law therefore contained in itself principles diametrically opposed to those of the Constitution. It gave to a body of men liable to be removed from day to day, powers repugnant in themselves, that of legislating, inflicting and paying the delinquencies committed in contravention to their acts of legislation. It was an union of the legislative, executive and judicial powers which according to the principles of the best Governament were absolutely incompatible.

The intention of the members of that House had always (he understood) been to revise the law in question, and to adopt a plan which might correct the vices contained in it. This had been proposed every time the act alluded to had come before the House, and if he remembered right, it had been particularly mentioned last year. This purpose had never been lost sight of, and the act had therefore been always of short duration, with a view to the alteration to which he alluded, and indeed it was solely owing to the multitude of affairs with which the House had been so oppressed during the last Session that it had been found impossible to give due attention to the Act, upon which he was confident there could be but a single opinion. A power of such nature committed to the Magistrates must necessarily carry with it many inconveniences. The abuse must be the more grievous as many of the Rules made in pursuance of the Act might not essentially affect the property of the Citizens; and it is notorious that the acts of authority, committed under it, had heretofore caused such Representations as to have induced the Legislature to retrench the power in making and sanctioning Rules of Police for country Villages.—He did not intend to reproach indiscriminately the Magistrates with having abused their power to the detriment of their fellow Citizens. Those at Montreal though they may have sometimes erred, generally speaking, deserved the applause of their fellow Citizens for the diligence with which they had promoted the improvements of that City especially of late years. To err was human, and they were for want of a long experience to common with many of their fellow Citizens too little acquainted with the true principles and rules of Government.

He asked if it could be imagined that the House of Assembly for a moment could have intended the Act to be perpetual—He mused upon hearing at Montreal that such was the case, but given it no credit until he had seen a printed Copy of the Acts of the last Session. All the Members he had seen at Montreal were of the same opinion, and many of those Gentlemen did not hesitate to tell him with a tone of perfect assurance that the Act was temporary—judge of their surprise to hear it was perpetual; they felt with him (not the first time able House and Members composing it must be exposed to the obliquity of judgment in this instance sacrificed the interests of their fellow Citizens, and that it must in some measure attach to the whole Legislature. The just demands of their Constituents were entitled to an enquiry on the subject in order that those who were in some sort the Victims of the odious suspicion of having favored the passage of this Act might be possessed of the unmerited opprobium. It was at the [illegible] most parts of the Province where this [illegible] might be struggled. Here in Quebec the Bill he have the means of knowing the difficulty under which Members who wish to follow close to the public business have to labour. The prodigious mass of business renders it impossible for every individual Member of the Legislature to obtain information on the various Petitions, motions, Bills &c. which pass in rapid succession. The digested alteration in a phrase or a word may often change the meaning and nature of a Bill, and give a turn to its measure it never intended by their framers. What would become of the public business if the House could not rely upon the fidelity and the zeal of Members introducing, and conducting Bills through that House as well as those of a fiscal and ordinary kind, for the drafting and framing of Bills and the general assistance of the proceedings of the House?

Mr. Viger gave a rapid sketch of the numbers of Bills, Petitions and other important matter before the House in the last Session, which he observed might be some excuse for the omission of the clause limiting the duration of the Act. One of the Honorable Members had expressed doubts as to the authority of the Act now before the House. He maintained it to be perfectly constitutional and founded upon the example of the Imperial Parliament in cases analogous to the present. Members admitted they had been deceived and they were told that the remedy was simple, it was only to introduce a Bill to repeal the act in question without any preliminary enquiry. Could such a measure, at all necessary, be adopted without even the shadow of a pretext to induce the other branches to concur with them? What reason would they offer? the thing would manifestly be absurd and would involve the House in inconsistency.

With respect to the Honorable Member for Bedford, he ought to be considered guiltless of the charge until it were established by proof. It was recommended that Members were disposed to put the most favorable construction on his conduct, but it was proper that the very suspicion of the foul imputations laid to his charge should be removed and he knew of no other mode of doing so than the present. The accusation was now of record. It was odious, and must remain so evidently, stain unless removed by an (enquiry) enquiry.

Members might be persuaded that, ultimately, it would appear by the proposed inquiry that the fact in question had been made perpetual through an error as unintentional on the part of the Hon. Member accused, as on the part of the Committee who prepared the Bill, and of the whole House. The enquiry would afford him the public that the error, from the discussion [illegible] of business before the House and the multiplicity of objects which necessarily engrossed its attention last session, was somewhat excusable. It could also justify those in the introduction of another Act to repeal or alter it to limit the duration of the Act, which, no doubt, upon a proper and a reasonable explanation, would meet with the most favorable reception from the other branches of the Legislature.

The Upper House had, as doubt, observed the alteration in the nature of the bill when [illegible]

LONDON, Dec. 2.

Extract of a letter from Capt. James of the brig Hero, from Zante, and dated Stangate Creek, Nov. 30:—"On the 8th inst. we fell in with a squadron of Algerine cruisers, 3 brigs and 1 schooner, about 40 miles east of Gibraltar; the schooner ran up alongside under American colors, but we soon saw that they were Turks; they hailed us, and ordered us to heave to, and get our boat out and come alongside. I was unwilling to comply with these orders, but being obliged, I got the boat out and went alongside the schooner; I was then ordered to the brig, which I supposed to be the Commodore. I was told to return on board; they then hoisted the red flag. They had three or four prize ships with them, Swedes or Portuguese. They did not board us, but were very impertinent."

December, 7.

Thursday night, the schooner Mary Ann, in 18 days from Fayal, arrived in the Downs.—The master reports, that in the course of the voyage he fell in with the American brig Governor, of 3 guns, from Leghorn, bound to Boston, having on board Lucien Bonaparte and suite.—This may have been one of Jonathan's hoaxes; but it is worthy of notice, that according to the last papers from the United States, there was an expectation of Lucien's speedy arrival in that country.

Accounts from Copenhagen of the 13th ult. bear the failure of two of the first houses in that city. One of them had been established since the year 1766. The failure of one is attributed to some unfortunate West India speculations, and of the other to the embarrassments in Norway.

The court of Wurtemberg went into mourning on the 18th ult. for a month, on account of the death of the Princess Charlotte.

The ships Dawson and Liverpool sailed on Saturday afternoon from Portsmouth, with about 250 commissioned and non-commissioned officers to join the Spanish Patriots in South America. The ships go to St. Thomas.

A letter from Inspruck, dated Nov. 7, says—"A new Bull of the Pope is expected to be shortly published, relative to the deplorable state of the Sees of the new dioceses of the kingdom of Lombardy and Venice. The negociations between the court of Vienna and Rome are nearly terminated; at least it is certain that the principal points are regulated. Prince Kaunitz will not leave Rome till the final agreement is concluded."

A letter from Paris states, that prince Hardenberg, the Prussian Ambassador, has presented an official note complaining of a passage of his Majesty's speech at the opening of the session, and the address of the chamber of deputies in reply to it.—This demand has excited a strong sensation in Paris, from the Emphatic manner in which the Prussian minister complains of the declaration put forth respecting the treaties. But his demand of an explanation.

From Gibraltar we have received letters of the 10th inst. which state that the Algerine pirates would not make their appearance in the bay. They were permitted to anchor within range of the guns of the fortress, and Rear Admiral Milne had been requested, to keep it at a proper distance. The rock was ...ver low—a heavy gale had done much ...of rain having fallen rather earlier ...usual, and had been succeeded by ...course of fine weather. All apprehension of fever had subsided.

The Paris papers inform us that a courier has arrived with a letter from the French consul at Cadiz, announcing, that the plague was no longer in the Algerine and Tunis, and the instructions received from the government by the prefect of the Var, or Seine, the latter was prohibited measures of quarantine in all the ports of that department.

By a letter from the French consul at Cadiz, it appears that the Algerine squadron had been making captures of vessels of different nations. Dutch, Swedish, Russian, and, it is added, even English; while they professed, to be looking after Prussian and Hamburgh property only.

It is said that the British government has signified its intention to give permission to any of the inhabitants of Paris port at St. Helena, to quit that island who may apply for leave so to do.

A private letter from Dublin, received on Saturday, mentions the following melancholy accident: One of the tricks performed by the Indian jugglers, now exhibiting their arts in that city, is the catching of a ball between the teeth fired from a pistol. At a recent exhibition, the pistol, according to custom, was handed to young gentleman, one of the company, for the purpose of firing it. He did so, and also the unfortunate juggler through the head. It is supposed that a pistol actually loaded with powder and ball was by mistake substituted for that prepared in the usual way.

LIVERPOOL, Dec. 6.

The two fleets of French and Algerine have proceeded a-head to meet the Swiss Cantons, recommending them to suppress certain prisoners' wives now seized in Switzerland, as a precautionary measure. We regret not to say, that a recommendation from the French powers as France and Austria to the Swiss government, accompanied by a range d'elite for the election of bishops; which has drawn down on them the necessity of a note to tell to the ground of the law has been thrown out of a window. The French exiles, it appears, have been driven out to Berlin, and some have taken refuge in Swabia, of the only other place in Europe where they could place the sole of their foot. They have these resumed their attacks on the cause of legitimacy, and the allied powers are again in pursuit of them.

MOSCOW, Oct. 25.

The following statement has been laid before his Majesty, respecting the destruction of public and private buildings during the French invasion:

Of public buildings destined for public Worship there were 858 are now restored so as to be fit for use.

Of booths and shops there were 6,824 of stone, and 2,197 of wood—in all 8521. Of these there remained undamaged, 939 of stone, and 379 of wood in all, 1,363.

There have been since rebuilt or repaired 5,102 of stone, and 447, of wood—in all, 5549.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 2.

"All doubts which still subsisted, respecting the retirement of his Royal Highness the Prince of Orange, from his military employment, have now ceased; it is no longer doubtful that the Prince has demanded his discharge, and that, by a decree of his Majesty, of the 15th November, it has been accepted."

LONDON, Nov. 25.

The following anecdote of the late Princess Charlotte was introduced by the Rev. Mr. Jay, in his discourse delivered at Argyle Chapel, Bath, on Wednesday. The preacher vouched to its authenticity, having received it from an undoubted source. About a month since, the princess was walking in the pleasure-grounds at Claremont, when she accosted the gardner, and amusing many other questions asked if he could read—"Yes madam," was the reply, "for she never suffered her domestics to address her in any other manner. "Have you a Bible?"—"No madam"—Then," rejoined the princess "I'll give you one." She immediately went to the house and returned with a Bible, which she presented to the poor fellow, having written his name in it, with these words subjoined, "From his friend Charlotte.

On the morning of the 13th instant, about two o'clock, the elegant mansion of Dormont, in the parish of Dalton, and county of Dumfries, the residence of Englefield Smith, Esq. was discovered to be on fire, and before proper assistance could be procured, the whole of that elegant building, together with the furniture of every description, was consumed. The loss is stated to be immense. The fire originated in the storeroom, but from what cause we have not been able to learn.

LIVERPOOL, Nov. 20.

Descent of the Princess Charlotte.

Carlton House was the place in which princess Charlotte drew her first breath between the hours of nine and ten in the morning of the 7th of January, 1796, when there were present the Duke of Gloucester, the archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord high chancellor, the lord president of his majesty's council, the Duke of Leeds, the lord chamberlain, (earl Cholmondely,) and master of the horse, (earl Jersey,) to the prince of Wales, lord Thurlow, and the ladies of her royal highness' (princess of Wales') own bed-chamber.

At a proper period the bishop of Exeter, a man of eminent piety profound learning and amiable manners and disposition, was appointed to the important office of her private tutor by the particular choice of his majesty, who, by the customary law of England, as well as the feudal, is guardian of all infants, and of course more particularly of his grand-daughter and the heiress presumptive of his crown. On being taken from the parental superintendance, the good and accomplished lady De Clifford was selected as her governess, and this venerable lady, on the advance of her royal pupil to maturity, was superceded by the duchess dowager of Leeds.

January 7th, 1815, when princess Charlotte completed her 19th year, her birth day was observed for the first time at Windsor. Her royal aunts proceeded in the morning to Cranburn Lodge, to compliment their niece upon the return of the day; and an entertainment was given at Frogmore, where the princess had the pleasure to receive the congratulations of the nobility and the Queen. Music was called in to conclude the festivities of the day, nor did the princess fail to experience new tokens of affection in presents from her relatives.

Not many days after this festal scene, her majesty's birth-day was observed in a similar way. Princess Charlotte gave on this occasion full proof of her skill and execution in music, by performing a fine concerto on the grand piano forte, accompanied on the violoncello by general Upton.—Her royal highness was passionately fond of music's delightful art, and musical parties constituted the chief gratification of her life.

Fashionables were still wondering why the princess Charlotte had not been presented at court when May the 19th, 1815, she suddenly made her appearance at the Queen's drawing room. Since it was the only one that had occurred for ten tedious months, it caused some bustle in the town.

Soon after her introduction at court, her royal highness went to the sea-side for the benefit of her health. During her residence on the coast the princess took occasion to display one of those energetic traits which have so distinguished her conduct. Just before her departure from Weymouth, her royal highness being at sea in her yacht, the Leviathan, of 74 guns, sailing near, brought to, and fired a salute to the royal standard flying; and soon after capt. Nixon, who commanded her, rowed on board the yacht, to pay his respects to the princess. She received him on deck, and, after the usual ceremonies, said—"Capt. Nixon, your's seems a very fine ship of war, I should like to go on board her." The bishop, her aged preceptor, standing by, asked whether she thought her illustrious father might not disapprove of her passing in an open boat through a rough sea? The immediate answer to this was—"Queen Elizabeth took great delight in her navy, and was not afraid to go on board a man of war in an open boat; then, why should I? Pray captain Nixon, have the goodness to receive me in your barge, and let me be rowed on board the Leviathan; for I am not only desirous but determined to inspect her."—The necessary preparations were made, and her royal highness passed down into captain Nixon's barge, followed by her two ladies in attendance, with the bishop; and coming alongside the Leviathan, the yards were instantly manned, and a chair of state let down. The princess desired it to be hoisted, saying —I prefer going up in the manner that a seaman does; you capt. Nixon, will kindly follow me, taking care of my clothes; and, when I am on deck, the chair may be let down for the other ladies and the bishop." No sooner said than done; as her royal highness ascended with a facility that astonished the whole delighted crew. The royal suit being upon deck, the ship's officers were severally introduced. Her royal highness expressed great surprise at the space and strength of the ship and remarked—"Well might such noble structures be called the wooden walls of Old England! She now told captain Nixon, that she should not be satisfied with an introduction to his state cabin, as she was very anxious to see every part of his ship between decks and even below; accordingly, he accompanied her royal highness down, when she inspected every birth, cock-pit, powder-magazine, store-hold, &c; and on her return upon deck gave her thanks to captain Nixon and attendant officers in the most gracious terms, assuring them, that they had afforded an exhibition, of more interest to her mind than any she had hitherto beheld. The princess having presented a purse to capt. Nixon, desiring him to present it to the crew, as a token of her respect to them, descended down the ship's side as she rose, under the royal salute, and the more gratifying cheers of the royal and hearty crew of a British man-of-war.

Decision & frankness seem equally to have influenced the actions of the Princess Charlotte of Wales; and therefore, what her ingenuousness would not permit her to feign, she has unfeignedly had the intrepidity to avow. These qualities may account for her resistance to the union first proposed to her; which however apparently fortunate, but meeting the feelings of her heart, she refused to sanction with a reluctant hand—Among her objections to that alliance, there was also one peculiarly strong, originating purely in her dislike of being obliged to reside in a foreign country.

Those who are acquainted with the character of the late princess' censors, and with the mutual progress of their love, hardly required to be reminded of the auspicious turn of both. Whoever knows any thing of Prince Leopold, known in relation to him, nothing but what is honourable and estimable in human life; while the manner in which he conducted his courtship, with respect to his illustrious bride, as soon as he discovered that he had interested her affections, is such an instance of dignity of mind, of true nobility of soul, as renders him worthy of all the confidence that has been reposed in him, and all the distinction to which he has been elevated. Such was his sensibility to religious truth also, when he had received the sacrament the first time, during his residence at Brighton, that he addressed a letter to the Princess Charlotte of Wales, informing her of his communicating, and imparting to her the sentiments he then felt.

Thursday the 2d of May, 1816, the marriage of this illustrious pair was solemnized at Carlton House, where she originally drew breath about twenty years before. Her union with the prince of Saxe Coburg was an event every way auspicious to their mutual happiness. Perhaps there never was a royal match formed in which political considerations had less influence on the parties themselves, and in which the feelings of the heart were more deeply engaged. Hence, from the day on which their marriage was solemnized, they have shunned the glare of pomp and the fascinations of fashionable life, and embowered in the shades of Claremont, sought seclusion from this world, and tranquility and happiness in each other's society. The blessings which virtuous wedded love could impart, were to them the chief solace of life, and the great source of their mutual felicity. The prince of Cobourg has been made a widower by the inscrutable decree of the Great Disposer of all events, who alone holds the issues of life and death in his hand, and in whose eyes princes and peasants are regarded alike.

The princess was bred up in the knowledge of pure political principles, and from all that has transpired of her opinions and conduct, she sincerely adopted the creed which she was taught. The order of succession to the crown is now by her death disturbed, and from the age of the princes in order of succession, and the state of the illustrious family, apprehensions will occur to every loyal mind. It will be the earnest prayer of the nation, that an early alliance of one of the unmarried princes may forthwith be settled.

The succession to the throne of these countries has from the differing character of some portions of our history, been a long an object of the deepest interest to every person; and, probably, not less on that account, than for her very estimable qualities, did the Princess Charlotte centre in herself the solicitude and regard of the whole empire. The future sovereign of these realms, the people watched over her infancy, and marked the progress of her childhood with the fondest care. Her matured age was hailed with joy, and the approach and merits of the royal princes who sought her hand, were noted by every individual with an almost paternal solicitude. Her marriage was, as a public festival, distinguished by a kind of rapturous applause, as sincere as it was general, while her nuptial festivities—alas! the public sorrow is still burning fresh.

NORTH-WEST PASSAGE.

It is said that a vessel is to be fitted out for the purpose of attempting again the north-west passage, the season being considered as peculiarly favourable to such an expedition. Our readers need not to be informed, that large masses of ice than ever were before known have this year been seen floating in the Atlantic, & that from their magnitude and solidity, they reached even the 40th latitude before they were melted in a fluid state. From an examination of the Greenland Captains it has been found that owing to some convulsions of nature, the sea was more open and free from compact ice than in any former voyage they ever made; that several ships actually reached the 84th degree of latitude, in which no ice whatever was found; that, for the first time in 400 years, vessels penetrated to the west coast of Greenland, and that they apprehended no obstacle to their even reaching the Pole, if it had consisted with their duty to their employers to make the attempt.

This curious and important information has, we learn induced the Royal Society to apply to Ministers to renew the attempt of exploring a North-West passage, as well as to give encouragement to whaling vessels to try how far northward they can reach, by dividing the bounty to be given, on the actual discovery, into portions as a reward for every degree beyond 84 that they shall penetrate.

For the same reason, it would probably be advisable for the merchants engaged in the Greenland Whale Fishery not to postpone the sailing of their ships to the usual season, but to expedite them at once, so as to take advantage of the temporary fresh. We are sure the present price of oil ought to encourage them to the attempt, if it be practicable.

BEETHOVEN.—This great composer, whose unpolished and finished productions are so much admired and sought for by musicians, resides at present at Vienna, where Haydn, the greater part of his life, and where Mozart, under the patronage of the Emperor Joseph II. composed some of his best works—Vienna, therefore, has had the honour of residing within its walls the three musicians, the greatest that ever existed; three who have risen at and exalted their art in the highest degree, and who will mark out to future times a true Augustan age of music. Beethoven is about 50 years of age, and enjoys excellent health. He is unfortunately afflicted with deafness, but not to so great a degree as former accounts had led us to suppose. He is able to converse readily with the assistance of an ear-trumpet, and an ingenious writer is contriving an apparatus of the same nature to be worn in the mouth, which will facilitate his musical studies, by conducting him to hear more distinctly the sound of his instrument. He has never been married, is of retired habits of life and is said to be somewhat uncouth in his manners; he is passionately devoted to his art, and is revered by all who know him as a true man of genius. His mind has a strong tincture of independence; though far from rich, he cannot be induced to compose on any other suggestions than those of his own mind. An English gentleman, a great amateur, lately at Vienna, was anxious to obtain some compositions from a great master, and offered him, through the medium of his physician and most intimate friend, carte-blanche as to price for any number of symphonies he chose to write; unfortunately, he ventured to prescribe, as a model for their construction, the first and second of the author, which are in a lighter style than the rest. Beethoven could [illegible] with indignity he brought home to the [illegible] that when he found the condition [illegible] was tacked to it, he said very dryly to the Physician,—"When I am unwell I take your advice; when I compose I take my own," and would not hesitate any further notice on the proposition. Since the Continent has been in a settled state, he has been visited by musicians from that country and every part of Europe, led by veneration for the man, and a desire to profit by his remarks. The boldness, the fertility of his invention, the splendour of his compositions in general, are well known; but we believe that it has not before been observed that his early pieces are scarcely less finished than his latter ones; by a happiness which is quite uncommon, he seems to have appreciated at once the full perfection.—London Times.

As some workmen were forming a small quay a few days ago at Carnarvon, they discovered the remains of an immense wooden bridge, formed of oak, buried several feet in the sand, and extending over the river Seiont. One beam, which was got up, measured upwards of 50 feet in length. This bridge appears to have formed originally a communication between Segontium and Coed-Helen summer-house, in all probability a Roman watch-tower, one end of the bridge being contiguous to the old wall of Hengaer-Cysteint. The entire of this bridge is supposed to have extended upwards of 400 yards.—Ib.

KILKENNY, Nov. 8

An atrocious attempt at robbery and murder was made on Thursday morning the 23d ult. upon the person of a poor woman of the name of Ann Lawler, residing in a cottage upon the demesne of Mr. French, of Ballyhale. The circumstances, as stated to us, are fully these. The attack was made by two men and a woman, who, after beating the old woman with a pitchfork till she appeared almost lifeless, endeavoured to finish the dreadful deed by strangling her with a handkerchief. After this they proceeded to plunder the house of the poor woman's shroud and a few temporary pieces; which having done, and finding the poor creature still alive, (signified by her calling to the Lord for mercy,) these wretches repeated the work of death, dragged the poor woman out of doors, buried her in a dunghill covered it with weeds, and departed. The providence of God miraculously interposed to rescue from the grave this victim of murderous cruelty, and to bring to condignity trust, the perpetrators to ourdiscent. The poor woman having lain for some time buried, recovered strength sufficient to crawl to the door of a neighbour, distant about 200 yards, and to state the whole case particulars, and what is of more importance, the names of those who may with justice term her murderers. The woman's name is Peg Caulfield, an old offender as a shop-lifter and pickpocket, well known in our county and city gaols. They were tried in the Royal Oak, where the clue was lost.—Leinster Journal.

WE entertain the hope, that great benefit will result to this Province from the accession of an industrious and Loyal Population from the United Kingdom, under the continuance of His Majesty's Government.

We are not insensible to the want of suitable accommodation for His Majesty's Representative, the Public Offices, and the Legislative and Judicial Authorities, at this Seat of Government, and will attentively consider the propriety of adopting means to render that accommodation more suitable.

WE will consider carefully the Laws that are expired or about to expire, and afford such as may appear to us to be necessary to the welfare of the Province, ever ready most thankfully to avail ourselves of your hearty concurrence in promoting so desirable an object.

MONTREAL, January 24, 1818.

There is a report abroad that counterfeit Bills on the Montreal Bank are in circulation, and this report is said to have depressed the currency of these notes in the Upper Province and other places. The reasons for fabricating such reports cannot be imagined; and it is perhaps sufficient to say, they are entirely groundless: No bad bills have been offered for discount at the Bank, or been discovered by any one interested in it. We shall not pretend to state that bills on this Bank cannot be counterfeited, but feel warranted in saying, that we have never seen the device on any bills, which would better protect their credit against this fraud.

Petty Swindling.—It has of late become the practice with some knavish Boys to cheat countrymen with brass counters in the shape of quarter Eagles; they go to the strangers and pretend they have just found them done up in papers, marked, &c. and also pretend to be entirely ignorant of their worth.—If the countryman is deceived they will make an offer to sell, and bargain it off for the most it will fetch.—One man bought five at about 10s. each, and has desired us to notice it, which we have done with the hope, that it may tend to put a stop to the evil.

Beware of Mad Dogs.—Two persons have been bitten by two different Mad Dogs in this city, this week.

Six useful and novel speculation.—We have it from good authority, that a gentleman in New York shipped 1500 bbls. of apples to Europe last fall; and that they sold at Liverpool at an average price of three guineas per bbl.

THE STEAM BOATS, &c.

Last week, in the night between Tuesday and Friday, in consequence of an unusual rise of the water, the ice moved, and tore the steam-boats Lord Sherbrook, Malsham & Caledonia from their moorings, and carried them near a distance of thirty acres. They are now on an Island belonging to Mr. Souligny, about an acre beyond the ordinary water-mark. They are supposed to have sustained little injury, and to be out of danger from the ice in the spring; the chief trouble will be to get them launched or hauled into the water. The Car of Commerce & the Swiftsure are lying near each other, and were not taken far from their moorings. The former, it is said, has some of her planks started, but the injury done her is not great. The Swiftsure has been less fortunate; it is believed she is rendered unfit for service. Indeed it was but intended to run her any longer, as she had become crazy; the machinery only was of any value, which we believe was taken out of her in the autumn. We understand that all the river craft, moored among the Boucherville Islands, are dispersed in various directions; some of them are carried a good distance into the fields.

Great damage has been sustained in Grosbeis Island: between twenty and thirty head of cattle, and nearly 500 sheep have been drowned, besides other losses that will be severely felt. The water was five feet deep in the houses and barns. The Carding and Fulling mill, on Mr. Souligny's Island, is a casualty. The above are the outlines of these disasters, given strictly as they were communicated to us by a gentleman of veracity; but there may be some trifling errors, which the most accurate observer might commit.—Herald.

Boston Saving Bank.—We have perused with interest the semi-annual report of the treasurer of this institution. It states that the total number of depositors is 666, and the amount deposited more than fifty thousand dollars; of which only about 3000 have been drawn out. The depositors receive 6 per cent. on their deposits. The monies are loaned at 7, and this one per cent. is more than sufficient to defray the expences of the institution—the surplus goes into an accumulating fund. To show the class of people who are benefited by this institution, it is sufficient to state, that among the depositors are 129 single women, 27 widows, 15 clerks, 203 minors, 22 laborers, 49 domestics, 39 mechanics &c. Many of the persons who have deposited handsome sums, would at this day be in probability, but for this benevolent institution, which has been a stimulus to their industry as well as a conservator of their morals, bear in extreme indigence, and perhaps a charge upon public charity.

TO SCHOOLMASTERS, MECHANICS, &c.

THE Township of Westminster, about 120 miles from York, is fast becoming one of the most populous in Upper Canada, which is not to be wondered at, considering the great richness of the soil, the goodness and abundance of the water, and the salubrity and mildness of the air.—These things so essential to health and longevity, have induced numbers of reflecting men to become actual settlers, and the land in this Township is already nearly taken up. It is now about five years since its commencement, and scarcely a single instance of sickness has been known by its numerous inhabitants. Two School Houses have lately been built, and the resident families are very desirous of giving every encouragement to men of good character as permanent Teachers to their rising generation. To Blacksmiths, Bricklayers, Carpenters, &c. of steady good habits, it presents great inducements.

DEBATES IN THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

QUEBEC, Jan. 25, 1818.

In a committee of the whole House on the Bill granting a Duty of two and a half per cent. ad Merchandize imported into this Province, &c.

Mr. Dunlop, on moving to resolve, that it was expedient to continue the Law now in force to that effect, observed, that until the public accounts were laid before the House, it was difficult to say what was the exact state of the Provincial finances. He could barely say from memory, that the expenditure amounted to about £750,000 and that the revenue might probably exceed £580,000 in round numbers. The surplus of the Provincial Revenue remaining at the disposal of the Legislature had usually been appropriated to such purposes of public utility as were from time to time judged expedient for the improvement of the Province. He thought the present mode of taxation a fair one, and as such he would always be disposed to give it his support.

Mr. Taschereau observed, that he knew of no other mode so easy as the present, nor so efficient to enable the Government and the Legislature to provide for the necessary public expenditure and for the improvement of the Province. The duties in question had indeed been first imposed in time of war—in a season of necessity, and he conceived that the daily wants of the Province at the present period, were such as to render their continuance indispensibly necessary. At a moment when the Mother Country falled upon the Colony to bear the expence of its Civil List, it was, he thought, incumbent upon the Legislature to provide liberal means of defraying the charge which was in every respect fair and just, as the price of the happy constitution we enjoyed from the generosity of the Mother Country, whose expences in defence of the Province must heretofore have been considerable. In assuming the charge to which he alluded, he said it must be agreeable to the Legislature, and to the People of this Province to reflect, that it secured to them the full exercise and enjoyment of their Constitution, from which must result the happiest effects to his Majesty's Subjects in this Province, and the conservation of Canada to the British Empire. The tax proposed was the best that could be devised for this Province. It is neither difficult nor expensive in the collection—it weighs lightly. It has undergone the test of experience—an advantage which no new mode of taxation can afford, and if any slight inconveniences exist, they can be easily removed. He knew of no other mode of raising a supply. To tax agriculture in its present infant state would be highly impolitic; the agriculture of the Province stood rather in need of the fostering assistance of the Legislature. Although it would at first sight appear that the tax in question was a check upon trade, yet when the facilities it afforded the Merchant, were considered, it would be thought otherwise. It would be seen that it was not the Merchant but the consumer who in reality paid the tax. The question whether agriculture or trade should properly be the object of taxation in this Province, had upon a former occasion been amply discussed in that House, as might be seen by adverting to their Address to His Majesty, relative to that subject. Members, he hoped were persuaded of the necessity of taxing the soil, which, however, they must ultimately resort to, in order to provide for the public expenditure.

Mr. Speaker rose to say, that no subject of deliberation can more deeply interest the representatives of a People than that in which the imposition of duties is put in question. The necessity of obtaining the concurrence of the commons in levying and appropriating monies, is the first source of that weight and authority in the direction of public concerns of their country. Few other acts of Legislation have so intimate and so signal an influence upon the prosperity and declension of nations. To establish easy and moderate imposts; to collect them with facility and economy; to distribute them judiciously, is the surest method, within reach of the Legislature, at once to excite and reward industry; to fail in any of these respects, is to convert the imposition of duties into the most pernicious means of retaining mankind in poverty, indolence and servitude. In those respects our situation is happy; we in fact pay fewer imposts than any other civilized people. Upon those articles which may be considered as objects of luxury, such as Teas, Coffee, Sugar, Spirituous Liquors, &c. we pay at most from six to ten per cent. And upon all articles of manufacture, but two and a half per cent. This latter duty was the present subject of consideration. To reduce the proposition to its simple shape, it is merely this: Shall we, in order to pay the necessary public expenditure, as often as we are disposed to purchase any article of Importation, pay for the same one hundred and two pence half penny, instead of one hundred pence; or shall we, in our to some new mode of taxation? The public opinion has been already pronounced upon the subject. It is some years since the misconceived interests of trade brought into contact with the general interest of the agriculturers of the population; occasioning discussions which have ever since fixed the public opinion on this point. The Merchants were for the establishment of direct taxes. These are perhaps some circumstances under which the mode of taxation might be the best, but it certainly was erroneous to prefer such a mode to the present, by which nine tenths of the revenues were collected in a single part of entry; to substitute for the small number of Custom House Officers which we employ, a host of excisemen, to prefer, to the Duties, paid insensibly by the consumer and in a way entirely at his option, a forced Revenue upon every act of sale payable at a fixed period, which necessarily must operate with unequal weight upon the rich proprietor of the lands, and the poor proprietor a grid and fruitless toil. Such an impost must necessarily have retarded the progress of clearing the wood lands, the primary source of the wealth of all new countries where lands are of moderate value, inasmuch as some but moderate value, inasmuch as some but moderate wood lands were to have been liable to it. These immeasurable disadvantages would evidently have injured the advantages of the proposed measure, as the treasury constantly in want, from the great expence of collection of the small revenue, would constantly have craved for new supplies, which, bearing upon the mass of the population, must evidently have reduced the consumption of every article of trade, and thus diminished the trade itself. Such, however, was the unhappy influence of personal interests, that men otherwise well informed, and enlightened, strongly advocated this vicious and ruinous system. The same matters may still produce the same errors—and although such a perverse doctrine will obtain few Proselytes in this Province, it might have some effect in England, where the true interests of this colony had not always been correctly represented, nor well understood. Great Britain owes a great part of her success, her power, and her happiness, to the judicious encouragement which she has studiously extended to her manufactures and her commerce. She is perhaps jealous of every thing which may even remotely affect these great national interests.—Although he was persuaded that the collection of these moderate duties which it is proposed to continue, was the best mode of raising a revenue without either injuring the interests of the mother country or of the colony. Although persuaded that the principal part of the Merchants of the country were too liberal in sentiment not to concur in the truth of this, yet it was to be feared that some individuals either through error, or from motives less excusable, might raise a calumnious clamour on the other side of the Atlantic, and induce a belief, that, Canadians, strangers to the interests of the mother country, and to the principles which consolidate the prosperity of its commerce, have purposely laboured to shackle its colonial trade, by the unjudicious duties imposed on its manufactures, while the internal resources of the Province were adequate to the expences of its Civil Government. With a view upon these considerations, and aware that the duties in question were to expire in March, 1818, unless the laws were renewed, he had felt it his duty, at the close of the last Session, to recommend it to his Excellency the Governor in Chief, who had permitted him to offer his opinion on the subject, and who, with his usual vigilance and attention to every thing that concerned the public interests, received that of several other persons on the subject; he knew also that several Members of that House, with whose zeal for the promotion of the interests of the Province, he (Mr. Speaker) was well acquainted, had, in like manner, suggested that, in the event of the disposition of the Provincial Legislature to renew the Act alluded to, that it might be of advantage that his Majesty's Ministers should know the motives which suggested this mode of taxation. After having maturely weighed the subject, his Excellency the Governor in Chief had requested instructions from Ministers. If any impediments had been interposed, they had been overcome, and he thought it a duty—a duty he performed with satisfaction, of seizing the earliest occasion of communicating to the House the important information, that it should judge expedient to continue the duties in question, his Excellency the Governor in Chief was authorized and disposed to give the Royal Sanction to such Bill as might be submitted to him to that effect. It were proper, not only that the House, but that the Trade in general should be apprized of this circumstance as early as possible, so as to be enabled to regulate their operations with certainty.

This consideration of the connection between the trading and the general interests of the Province, led him to call the early attention of Members to another question too intimately connected with the present to be omitted. It was to consider what duration ought to be given to the Bill proposed, and the views of opinion that it ought to be for some years. If such Acts were annual, the Merchants always uncertain when they would be renewed, might be essentially affected in their concerns, and incapable of deciding what proportion of their capital ought to be reserved for the payment of the duties as well as for the liquidation of their imports. They would then have cause to complain, and their complaints would compel the Legislature to seek some other object of taxation. He, therefore, thought the Act might be extended to four years, leaving it to the next Parliament to continue or abolish it, as in its wisdom it might be found expedient.

Let it not be said that this will go to destroy the representation. He had, at heart, as much as any of his fellow citizens, the wish that their Representatives should acquire all the importance which the constitution—the last, the best, and the most analagous to that of Great Britain, which the English nation, in its liberality, had bestowed upon any of its Colonies, could confer upon them. Let us guard, (he observed,) the precious boon conferred upon the people of Lower Canada, of declaring annually their opinions by their Representatives. And in matter of supplies let us be annual councillors, whose consent must be had for their distribution. He made a distinction between the imposition and appropriation of Duties. This latter operation ought to be annually repeated. On their care in preserving this right, and in using it with wisdom, depended the importance and the respectation of the Representation of the Province.

In observing the increase during the last ten years, of the prosperity of the Province, inquiring into its future destinies and anticipating a long peace abroad, and union at home, a still more rapid developement of the great natural resources we possess, may fairly be looked for in the ensuing ten years. A prudent distribution of the surplus of the public revenue in improving the public routes and communications, by land and water, to facilitate the clearing of lands which advance so rapidly by the emigration from Europe, from whence we derive capital, information, and improvements of industry, and to facilitate the establishment of the new settlements in which the lands, though as yet uncultivated, are extremely fertile, will produce an unparalleled increase in the agriculture of the Province; while the equally progressive improvement of our neighbours will assure us an increase of trade. The lands adjacent to the Great Lakes are destined by nature to second our industry. A fruitful soil, a mild climate, assures the success and the riches of the numerous and industrious Inhabitants which cultivate it. They prosper: so much the better—if they gain, we shall have our share of the profit. The St. Lawrence, the only outlet to their produce, waits and will for ever wait us their wealth. The Markets at Quebec and Montreal, afford them European merchandize on the easiest terms. The American Government, to promote their own manufactures, and to support the expences of the Government, imposes as high as 30, nay 40 per cent. upon all articles of foreign manufacture. This will no doubt be a motive for the Inhabitants of the back Settlements of New York and of the Michigan territory, which must soon become the theatre of an immense population, to bring us their produce, and take from us European merchandize in return. Our Merchants are their factors, our River Craft, nay our Carters feel the benefit of it. Our Warehouses are the Magazines of their wealth, and our cities are enriched by the constant intercourse of those industrious neighbours.

Finally, he thought for these considerations they might with propriety determine upon the prolongation of the Act in question, and by preserving one of the most fruitful sources of the revenue, be enabled by a judicious application of the public means, to render essential service to their constituents.

Mr. Davidson observed, that after what had fallen from the Speaker, he thought any further comment on the subject unnecessary. He merely suggested, that Hon. Members ought to bear in mind, that the House stood pledged for the payment of the Civil List. As the mode of taxation proposed was easy both in its operation and collection, he for one, would be disposed to extend its duration to a longer period than heretofore; say five or six years. That in this Province we are happy enough to know nothing of Excise Laws, except the name. That it the means of resorting wherewith to pay the expences of the Civil Government, now that they were pledged for it, should fail, they might probably be under the necessity of turning to an excise upon the daily necessaries of life. An alternative, which, however, he most gratuitously deprecated, and which he hoped never to witness in the Province.

It was accordingly resolved, as proposed by Mr. Davidson, seam. con.

SATURDAY, 24th January.

On the second reading of the Bill to ratify and confirm the provisional articles of agreement entered into between this Province and Upper-Canada.

Mr. Taschereau observed, that he did not intend to oppose the agreement made by the Commissioners on the part of this Province with those of Upper Canada, persuaded, as he was, that they had reciprocally sought for the interests of their respective provinces. He, however, would be glad to be informed on what principles they had acted. For what reasons did the Commons of Upper-Canada permit this Province to tax their constituents? Why did not the Commons of Upper-Canada take the burden of this tax upon themselves? This Province not only was charged with imposing the tax, but we were also their tax-gatherers. Would it not be better that merchandize imported into this Province, destined for Upper Canada, should be exempt from duty on entry? Would not this be more conformable to constitutional principles, and would it not exempt this province from a charge of which it has no cause to be proud? If, however, a different course should appear if expedient, for the mutual advantage of both provinces, to collect the duties at the point of entry, would it not be expedient, before so adopting the principle of taxing Upper-Canada with a tax, to all duties collected in this province, to grant a drawback to the merchants of Upper-Canada, on exporting their merchandize to Upper-Canada? He proposed these queries in order that some satisfactory explanation might be given on the subject, by such Members as were Commissioners on the part of the Lower Province, who he presumed would satisfy the House on the points he had observed.

(Mem.—A clause had been introduced into the Bill, authorising the Commissioners of Lower Canada, when they met the Commissioners of Upper-Canada, and to propose and offer them a drawback upon all merchandize going into the Upper-Province, which if accepted should take effect after being ratified by Proclamation. The Bill and having got passed the House, this clause remains to be disposed of.)

Mr. Davidson had been present at the conferences held at Montreal with the Commissioners, (as he had, since, in other occasions, stated to the House;) He however saw Members in their places were of the Commission, and he trusted it would as far as lay in their power, answer the queries of the Hon. Member who spoke last. It was worthy of nature, that in the negociation alluded to, (which he conceived to be entirely a negociation relative to taxes, and as such ought to be a matter exclusively belonging to the Commons of the two Provinces) the Members of the Legislative Council of Upper-Canada had been consulted by that Province. The original agreement entered into with the Upper Province had he conceived, in the first instance, been founded in error, and so proved itself in until the present time. It was time to make some alteration in it more conducive to the interests of both provinces.—He thought the fairest and most equitable mode of settling it with the sister province would be to allow the Upper-Canada Merchant a drawback upon his merchandize equivalent to the full amount of all duties paid on the same upon their entry into this province, this was it to the Legislature of Upper Canada to take their own Constituents as they should deem expedient.—This province had quite enough to do in legislating for itself.

Mr. Vigor said that the provinces of Lower and Upper Canada were inhabited by people entirely different, it would not be difficult to justify the right we exercised in imposing duties upon merchandize imported into this Province, on the principles established by the best of public writers. This, however, was not now a subject of necessary discussion. We were as like subjects of the same Empire, Colonies of the same metropolis, children of the same mother country, and formerly constituted one province. If this relative situation and our verdict us insure the mutual enjoyment of our respective resources, natural and geographic. It imposed upon us the reciprocal obligation of being as service like to each other as possible. The separation that had been made, was with a view of promoting more common advantage, and we ought to co-operate with cheerfulness in its accomplishment.—The principles of the agreement, recited in the Bill, considering the relative situations of the Provinces, were, he thought, equally advantageous to both. After mutually explaining the advantages of indirect and territorial importations, he had observed that the ease with which they watched upon the frontiers, and with respect to the economy of their collection, he observed that we enjoyed in this respect advantages common to no other Colony of the Empire, except the Port at Barry. A great multiplicity of Ports in other countries, portended the greatest scope for contraband trade, while they compelled the Governments to maintain most enormous Custom House establishments, to support the trade. The trade lastly burden of these establishments to government, was too well known to require comment. Our position enabled us to avoid these inconveniences. Nothing could be introduced into this province from Europe, but by the Saint Lawrence. The advantage was obvious. Our Duties were all collected at a single point, with an economy and facility known to no where else. By the same, union in the same way the trade and merchandize imported into this province. It was true that we to a certain extent taxed the inhabitants of Upper Canada inasmuch as they had no other trading communication with Europe than through the Saint Lawrence. It must at the same be admitted, that it had not been a matter of choice, but of necessity. We had incontestably the right of taxing ourselves, but it was incumbent on us also to render face to the Sister Province. The point in discussion was, to ascertain, whether in the present instance the Commissioners had adopted the means to obtain this end. According to the principles which he had just set down as the principle on the connection of the two provinces, there was no doubt that Upper Canada had a right to its share of the duties, on our merchandize destined for consumption in them. In that consisted the justice. This had appeared to the Commissioners, as the fairest mode of doing the principle due to Upper Canada, but it was nevertheless true that the Commissioners had on a great many more been guided by considerations purely of extreme abstract and visionary discussions with respect to the number of the population in either province might or might not be. These were however, as now the truth was no longer expedient to discuss. They had created a Bill introduced last year, authorising a Commission such as had been appointed to ascertain the exact proportion of them in that

POETRY.

NEW HAPPY MARRIAGES.

Say, mighty Love, and teach my song,
To whom thy sweetest joys belong,
And whom the happy pairs;
Whose yielding hearts and joining hands,
Find bindings mingled with their bands,
To soften all their cares.

Not the wild herd of nymphs and swains
That thoughtless fly into the chains,
As custom leads the way;
If there be life without design,
Where sind oaks may grow and tatins,
And be as blest as they.

Nor sordid souls of earthly mould,
Who drawn by kindred charms of gold,
To dull embraces move:
So two rich mountains of Peru,
May rush to wealthy marriage too,
And make a world of love.

Not the mad tribe that hell inspires
With wanton flames; those raging fires
That pave bliss destroy:
On Etna's top let furies wed,
And sheets of lightning dress the bed,
To give the burning joy.

Not the dull pairs whose marble forms,
None of the melting passions move,
To mingle hearts and hands:
Legs of green wood that quench the coals,
Are married just like stoic souls,
With ashes for their beads.

Not minds of melancholy strain,
Still silent, or that still complain,
Can the dear bondage bless;
As well may hear'ly concerts spring,
From two old lutes with ne'er a string,
Or moan—besides the bass.

Nor can the soft enchantment hold
Two jarring souls of angry mould,
The rugged and the keen:
Samson's young foxes might as well,
In bands of cheerful wedlock dwell,
With firebrands tied between.

Nor let the cruel fetters bind,
A gentle to a savage mind,
For Love abhors the sight:
Loose the fierce tiger from the deer,
For native rage and native fear,
Rise and forbid delight.

Two kindred souls alone must meet.
'Tis friendship makes the bondage sweet,
And feeds their mutual loves:
Bright Venus on her rolling throne,
Is drawn by gentlest birds alone,
And Cupids yoke the doves

ATROCIOUS REVENGE.

The Examinations at Union-Hall, London, of David Owen, for attempting to Murder John Jones, (his Brother-in-Law,) Margaret Jones, (his Sister,) and Mary Barry, their Servant.

Friday, at one o'clock, Mr. Jones and Mary Barry arrived in a hackney-coach from St. Thomas's Hospital, under the care of a surgeon and two nurses: they were so weak as scarcely to be able to stand. At two the prisoner was brought into the room, and confronted with Jones and the servant; the latter fainted as soon as she saw him, and it was with difficulty that Mr. Jones was roused to sensibility. When he recovered, he exclaimed, "O God! I thought I saw him with a knife in his hand." The Magistrates ordered the prisoner to be taken out of the room, as his presence so much agitated the prosecutor. About two Mrs. Jones arrived in a hackney-coach, also extreamely weak, and the Magistrate proceeded to hear evidence.

Mary Barry, the servant, stated, "On the 26th of September last, a little after one o'clock in the afternoon, I was at home with my master and mistress, and heard a knock at the door; I opened it, and saw the prisoner: without saying a word he forced himself in; my master was in the back room; I called out, 'Mr. Owen is here!' and my master then came out of the back room into the passage, where he met the prisoner. The prisoner immediately took from under his coat a large pointed carving knife, and without speaking made a blow at my master, who held his hand up to defend himself, and prisoner cut and struck him dreadfully on the hand. My mistress then came out, and she and I attempted to save my master, and take away the knife. I got hold of it, and he drew it through my hand, and cut me very much, and then he began cutting and slashing away at random, and cut us all three; he cut me on the arm, stabbed me in the neck, and wounded me in the forehead. I then ran out and called for assistance, and came back again, and found my master lying on the floor in the back room, bleeding very much, and the prisoner lying over him, with a knife under my master's clothes, and apparently sticking in his side; when I returned to the house, a young man returned with me, and he assisted, and we held Owen's arms and got the knife from him. I was then taken by some persons to the hospital.

Mr. Jones deposed to the same effect, and added, that the cut he received across the hand in the passage disabled him from offering much defence; and he soon became insensible; when he recovered he found himself dreadfully cut in the neck, and part of his left ear off. He formerly had a law-suit with prisoner, but had not spoken to him since August 1816.

Mrs. Jones stated, that during the struggle between them all in the passage, she heard prisoner say, "You wretches, I'll kill you all." She received several cuts about the head and face and a stab in the side; saw the prisoner attempt to stab her husband on her coming then became senseless, having bled excessively.

Charles Hopkins, the young man alluded to in Mary Barry's evidence, stated, that he saw Barry run out of Jones' house, covered with blood, and calling for assistance; he went into the house with her, and saw Mr. Jones on the floor bleeding very much, and prisoner lying over him, with the knife apparently in Jones's side, saw him seize Mrs. Jones and pull her down; Mrs. Jones called out to take away the knife from him; the servant and he, by their united efforts, succeeded in getting the knife from him; he gave the knife to Holmes, the constable, and then went to the hospital with Mr. Jones and the servant.

Holmes, the constable, stated, that on hearing the alarm, he immediately went to the spot, and saw Owen standing on the defensive at Jones's house, with a knife in each hand; with great difficulty he secured him, and found in his pocket two other knives and a razor case.

On the prisoner being asked if he had any thing to say, his solicitor advised him to reserve himself for his trial.

The respective parties were bound over to prosecute; and he was committed for trial to Kingston Assizes.

The prisoner is a man of dark complexion, full face, and large black whiskers, about 5 feet 9 inches in height, and very stout: he seemed unmoved at the recital of the horrid deeds of which he had been the perpetrator, and appeared to eye the object of his revenge with a malignity that it is difficult to describe. The fatal instrument was produced by Holmes, rusted with blood; it was a carving knife 14 inches long, and the blade about an inch and a half wide.—The Magistrate said it was a transaction as horrible as ever disgraced a civilized country. The prisoner was sent off to gaol in a coach, amidst the execrations of about 2000 spectators.

We learn that there is every probability of the unfortunate victims of the cruel revenge of Owen ultimately recovering the effects of his sanguinary attack. They are all much better, and free from fever. The public examination of the delinquent, who is himself recovering from the effects of the violence it became necessary to use towards him, will not take place till the end of the week, when it is hoped some of the wounded parties will be sufficiently recovered to attend.

Further particulars and final Examination of Owen.

On Monday, David Owen was fully committed for trial at the next Kingston assizes, upon a charge of attempting to murder Mr. Jones, Mrs. Jones, and Mary Barry, his brother-in-law, his sister, and their servant.

Two knives were produced which were bloody: one was the carving-knife, carried to Mrs. Jones house by Owen, and the other was a table-knife which Mr. Jones identified as his own property; he supposed the prisoner seized it from the dinner table after the carving-knife was taken from him.

Thomas Topper, a worker of the telegraph at West-square, sworn.—He was on the telegraph on the day of the 26th of September, about one o'clock, and heard an outcry of "Murder!" He looked towards Jones's house, and saw Sarah Barry or Mrs. Jones standing at the door, and the blood was running from her face. He ran with all possible speed to the house, and found a mob collected both back and front. Owen had run up stairs on the first floor; the front door was shut, and he could not get admission into the house. He climbed up to the window of the first floor, and saw Owen in the passage, with two knives in his hands, sharpening one against the other. Owen then came towards him in a frightful attitude, and he leaped from the window on the ground to get a ladder, which he reared up to the window, which was open. He called to Owen, and said, "You had better surrender, for we shall have you presently." He replied, "No you will not," and drew one of the knives across his throat. He (the witness) called out, "He is going to cut his throat," but found that he had not made any incision. A sailor ran up the ladder with an iron bar, but retreated from the window of the room when he saw Owen with the knives, brandishing them, and threatening to kill all who came to take him. Some persons got into the back-room and fastened the door, which prevented his entering the room. Shortly after Owen went out of the front-room, upon the head of the staircase, a Mr. Sandbach, a butcher, rushed into the front-room, and prevented him from coming in again by fastening the door. A young man got a pistol, and threatened to shoot Owen if he did not give himself up to them.—He refused, and the young man was going to shoot him, but was prevented by a gentleman present. He, the sailor, and Mr. Sandbach, opened the door, when the prisoner was off his guard, and he seized him by the collar and right arm. The sailor seized him by the other arm, and several others came up on the instant, and endeavoured to assist. Owen struggled very much: the railing of the staircase was broken down, and they fell down stairs; he kept hold of the prisoner, and the knife being taken from him, he was delivered into the custody of Holmes.

Mr. Peter Dixon, Surgeon, of Newington, sworn.—On the afternoon of Friday the 26th of September, he was called upon to attend a wounded woman, whom he since understands to be Mrs. Jones. She was then at her house in Gibraltar-row. He examined the wounds. As far as he could judge, he believed they were inflicted with a knife. He did not consider any of the wounds were dangerous at the time. She is still under his care, and the wounds are all healed up, except the one on the side of her chest.

John Carter, surgeon and dresser to Mr. Chandler, senior, surgeon at St. Thomas's hospital, sworn.—On Friday the 26th of September last, two wounded persons were brought to the hospital: one was Mr. Jones, the other his servant, Mary Barry. He examined and dressed the wounds; they appeared to be incised wounds, and had every appearance of being inflicted by a sharp instrument, and might have been done by a knife like the one produced. (Here the witness was shown the knife the prisoner took with him to Jones's house.)—Both Mr. Jones and Mary Barry are still under his care.

The office was crowded during the examination. The prisoner was silent (as advised by his solicitor) during the whole of the time; he paid no attention during the time the witnesses were giving their evidences, but during the time the clerk was reading various parts of it. At the close he bowed, looked at the witnesses very sternly, and left the room. He was conveyed to Horsemonger-lane gaol in a coach, amidst the hootings of hundreds.

Shocking circumstance.—On Saturday se'nnight, a most shocking circumstance occurred in the village of Westfield, in Somersetshire. A young man, the son of a farmer, whose name we forbear to mention, had professed no ardent affection for the daughter of a neighbour, whose circumstance were too low to gain the sanction of the youth's parents to an union. The poor girl who possessed of a greater share of discretion than her lover, and refused to consent to a private marriage, convinced that it would only be a source of unhappiness ultimately to both. It was in vain that he used every persuasion his passion could devise, she remained resolute, and he came to the horrid determination of putting an end to the existence of the girl and himself. He succeeded but too well. He possessed himself of a double barrelled pistol, and after some fruitless endeavours to make her swerve from her sense of duty, he hastily took from his pocket the pistol and fired, but from what cause is not known, it burst, and dreadfully wounded the girl, as well as shattering his right hand, all fell to pieces. She fell, and as he thought, probably lifeless; he then took from his pocket a knife, which he constantly wore about him, and stabbed himself in many parts of his back and body. The bodies were found very shortly after the horrible catastrophe, but neither was dead. The girl is expected to recover, but no hopes are cherished of his recovery.

An imitation of Leonardo de Vinci's celebrated picture, called La Cena, is now executing in mosaic at Milan for the Emperor of Austria. It will cost 7500 guineas, and when completed is to be forwarded to Vienna. It is thirty feet long and fifteen broad.

A subterraneous cavity in the Cliff at Margate has lately extended itself in a direct line towards Cobb's Brewery, which cost £40,000 to erecting. This terrific chasm is now so alarming that the Parish Officers have erected a railing to prevent persons from approaching it.

A few days since, as some gentlemen belonging to the fishery on the river Arun, above Arundel bridge, were drawing for mullet; with which that river abounds, their net became so loaded with fish, that they were obliged to apply additional strength to get it ashore, when it was found to contain upwards of two tons weight of perch, salmon, trout, pike, and other fish; the principal part of which was generously given to the poor.

The poor's rate collected in the parish of Lewton Linford, in Leicestershire, for one year, the beginning of last century, amounted only to 3*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*—Amongst the items in the account of this sum are, "Paid constables for attending quarterly meeting, 6*d.* Paid Betty Dobson, to enter into a line of business, 1*s.* 7 1-2*d.*" A cottage house now standing was also built the same year, and a pauper, an old woman, allowed 6*d.* per week, towards her support. The poors' rate for the above parish last year exceeded 400*l.*

ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT.—The Missionary Joseph Jones Brown, after destinating the greatest part of a life, extended far beyond the usual period of existence, to researches in which the public were manifestly interested, when suffering under the fortunes of an excruciating disease, and upon the very verge of the grave, was obliged to ask alms of his fellow citizens and countrymen. In the year 1804, this worthy citizen obtained from Lewis I. a license to collect "the charitable benevolence of well-disposed people" for his subsistence. In this Brief his various labours for 46 years, spent in advancing his Annals, and the eight years decided to his Survey of London, his merit, and his age, are mentioned; and power was given to him, or his deputies, to ask charity at the different churches through a considerable number of counties and cities in England, with an exhortation and permission to persons to contribute their mites. This was in the second year of the King. A letter from the King on the same subject is also extant, on the back of which seven shillings and sixpence are set down as the subscription of the parish of St. Mary-Westcastle, with the Churchwarden's name endorsed.

Several papers have lately given an account of an immense fortune lately left to a youth in England, by an entire stranger to him. The following extract of a letter, inserted in the London Times, gives more particulars than any we have seen on the subject.

"I debayed this letter till I could give you some particulars of the most extraordinary of all extraordinary affairs that ever came to my knowledge. The young man who had been spoken of in the news-papers as having had a fortune of £50,000 left him is one whom I know very well as well as his family. They are respectable farmers at Chippenham, near Newmarket, and their farm is part of the Thorpe Estate, of which Mr. is receiver, by appointment of the Court of Chancery. When the tidings were first made public here, it was considered as a joke upon the father of the young man; and after it began, in some very slight degree, to be credited, no one could think it possible that the property bequeathed was so immense as it has since proved. The accounts you have seen in the papers are pretty correct as far as they go, with the exception of this particular. The person who left the property never knew the family, nor the fortunate object of his bounty, any further than seeing him going to and from the Shrewsbury school. But now for the amount. The Duke of Devonshire's income is £300,000 a year, and that of the Duke of Rutland £100,000 by rent-roll: the income left to this youth is more than double that of these two Dukes! Mr. W [the receiver alluded to mentioned, and who is a gentleman of great respectability] was requested on Thursday by the father of the youth to go to Chippenham immediately to meet the family: and he stayed with them till Saturday. I have had much conversation with him since on the matter. It appears, the person who left this property was named Develetant: that he lived recluse, and was little known. In the funds have been found millions, his property not one or two. Mr. W. says, but millions. The estate in Spain is valued at 100,000 a-year: the Scotch estate immense; besides an estate of great value in the West Indies. There is not a wrecklon to [illegible] but what is indebted to him, and that to an immense amount; secured a loan that he has not a share in; or a Noteman's estate in Great Britain involved, but this man has a claim upon. Whatever you may think of this statement, it will soon be found to be true. Mr. W. says, it is a property of most dangerous amount; for it is more than sufficient to overturn the state. I am sorry to add, that within the last few days the favoured youth (who is about 18 years of age) has taken to his bed, and cannot be prevailed upon to get up. It is feared that his good fortune has affected his mind, and great uneasiness and alarm are felt for him. May next you shall hear more."—Bristol Mirror.

Melancholy Occurrence and Sudden Death.

Within these few days, the wife of a poor labouring man named Maurice Reidy, mother of [illegible] children, was sitting with some of her family at breakfast when she was accosted by a stranger of her son having stolen some turnips, which (dreadful to relate) so affected her, that she instantly expired, leaving her distracted husband and seven unfortunate children to deplore her loss. Upon enquiry, it was ascertained that some unknown boy had stolen the turnips and thrown them down an area, and had requested the son of this poor woman to descend for them; but before he had time to return he ran off, leaving the turnips in the possession of them, who was taken up on suspicion of the theft. At the time of the Mother's death, the family were not in possession of one shilling.

Banks of Maryland.—Nile's table contains a list of National Bank, in Maryland, exclusive of the National Banks, the aggregate authorised capital of which amounts to 15,000,000 dollars, and of which there has been paid in 8,206,595 dollars.

The News-Papers in Maryland, according to the same authority, amount to 13; of which 4 are published daily, 1 semiweekly, and the rest weekly—4 are printed on paper of superior size, one on medium, and the rest on saper royal. Ten are republican and eight federal.

MOSCOW, N. Y. Jan. 3.

Mild Winter Weather.—In this vicinity, for a week past, the weather has been remarkably mild and pleasant. We understand that a gentleman farmer has plowed, and sown to rye, since Christmas day, about 30 acres of bloom Mevris data.—Yesterday morning we had a small flurry of snow, which was immediately succeeded by clear mild weather. On the 6th inst. we saw three frost-bitten wild flowers, on one stem! which were picked on the same day, near this village, in the open field!!

From the Philadelphia American Daily Advertiser.

German Emigrants.—We have been favoured with the perusal of a statement of facts relative to the Dutch passenger ship April, Captain De Groot, which arrived below about two weeks ago from the Texel, and is now vending her remaining passengers in the state of Delaware.

The ship sailed from Amsterdam with only 253 passengers, under the command of Capt. Senalt, who had a knowledge of our coast, and under a contract to proceed to the port of Philadelphia; having dropped down the Texel, the provisions were objected to by the Captain, a quarrel ensued between him and the owner, and he was displaced. It was at this time the infamy of the transaction began to develope itself. Three more vessels were lying in the Roads with passengers in a miserable situation, diseased and covered with vermin—these were conveyed on board the April, and all of them obliged to sign a new contract, drawn up by the former Captain Senalt, who now appeared on board as agent or supercargo, leaving it optional with him to proceed to any port in the United States.

From the very crowded state of the ship and badness of the provisions, the pestilence spread so rapidly, that the Dutch government interfered, and they were landed on an island in the Texel, where upwards of 400 died—of 1200 souls embarked, only about 500 reached the shores of the Delaware. The ship is said to be 800 tons burthen. We are happy to find the National Legislature has noticed the subject, and expect something will be done to restrain avarice and cupidity so infamous and disgraceful to humanity.

Deaf and Dumb.—According to an official report presented to the Legislature of Massachusetts, the number of persons in that State, who have the misfortune to be deaf and dumb, amounts to 254. Of this number, 120 are male and 115 females. One hundred and fifteen are under twenty-one years of age; twenty are upwards of fifty years, and eight are upwards of seventy.

York, Nov. 12, 1817.

TO SCHOOLMASTERS, MECHANICS, &c.

THE Township of Westminster, about 120 Miles from York, is fast becoming one of the most populous in Upper Canada, which is not to be wondered at, considering the great richness of the soil, the goodness and abundance of the water, and the salubrity and mildness of the air.—These things so essential to health and longevity, have induced numbers to be flocking men to purchase actual settlers, and the land in this Township is already nearly taken up. It is now about five years since its commencement, and scarcely a single instance of sickness has been known by its numerous inhabitants. Two School Houses have lately been built, and the resident families are very desirous of giving every encouragement to men of good character as permanent Teachers to their rising generation. To Blacksmiths, Bricklayers, Brickmakers, Carpenters, &c. of steady good habits, it presents great inducements. J. WEBSTER.

CHARLES OSBORNE.

IF the above named CHARLES OSBORNE will call at the Office of the Upper-Canada Gazette, he will obtain intelligence respecting a Legacy very much to his advantage.

MARRIED,

On the 10th instant, at Perth on Tay, by the Rev. Mr. Lamonte, Angus Mac Donell, Esquire, Lieutenant of the late Glengary Light Infantry, to Mrs. Tweedie, Daughter of John Watson, Esq. of that village.

DIED,

At Quebec—On the 8th Feb. Mrs. Montgomery, Wife of G. Montgomery, Esq. M. D. Apothecary to the Forces.

On the evening of Saturday, the 7th instant, at his House on Navy Point, Captain Sir ROBERT HALL, Knight Companion of the Most Honorable Military Order of the Bath, Knight Commander of the Royal Sicilian Order of St. Ferdinand and of Merit, Commissioner of His Majesty's Navy in the Canadas, &c. &c. &c.

Eminent alike for Literary attainments and Professional talents, and of a rank that promised his country a long continuance of his meritorious services, was distinguished Officer is prematurely torn from us, after a short but severe illness, in the Thirty-ninth year of his age, leaving behind him a memory, which will be long cherished with the grateful tears of those indebted to his patronage, and the fond regret of his Officers, with his affability universally endeared to him, and with the love and respect of the many friends, who shared his munificent hospitality.—Kingston Gaz.

New Brunswick, Dec. 20.

Agreeable to notice given, a number of respectable citizens met on Saturday last at the Coffee House, for the laudable purpose of taking into consideration the most measures of relieving the necessities of the most destitute of the sufferers of St. John's, Newfoundland. The amount of the Subscriptions were £566 12 5.

December 27.

In our last paper we gave the Message of the President of the United States to Congress, in which the readers will observe, that he announces the decision of the Commissioners under the 4th article of the Treaty of Ghent "to whom" he says, "it was referred to decide to which party the several Islands in the Bay of Passamaquoddy, enumerated under the treaty of one thousand seven hundred and eighty three." In this statement of the President there is a singular omission. For in the 4th Article of the Treaty, the claims of both nations are expressly asserted to the Island of Grand Menan in the Bay of Fundy," as well as to the several Islands in the Bay of Passamaquoddy, which is part of the Bay of Fundy," and both of these claims were therein referred to the Commissioners for their decision. It is also a matter of notoriety, that the Island of Grand Menan was made a primary object of claim on the part of the United States throughout the discussions before the Commissioners; and it is now equally well known that by the decision of the Commissioners executed at New York on the 24th November last, Moose, Dudley, and Frederick Islands, in the Bay of Passamaquoddy, are declared to belong to the United States, and all the other Islands in the Bay of Passamaquoddy, and the Island of Grand Menan in the Bay of Fundy, are declared to belong to Great Britain, in conformity with the true import of the treaty of 1783. It is therefore not a little singular that the President of the United States should have altogether omitted to take notice either of the Island of Grand Menan in the Bay of Fundy, or of his official communication to Congress. Whether this omission is to be accounted for by any regrets in his mind at the relinquishment by this amicable decision of the Commissioners, of all claim on the part of the United States to this most valuable and important Island, which had been so strenuously contended for by Mr. Monroe, as one of the Ministers of the United States in London in the year 1806, in the negociation respecting Boundaries which then took place, we will not pretend to determine; but we think it a matter of real congratulation to His Majesty's subjects in these Provinces, that the British right is now irrevocably established to this Province, which besides its importance as a station for the fisheries and in many other points of view, is undoubtedly the Key to the Navigation of the Bay of Fundy, and on that account alone, a national object of great moment.—New Brunswick Courier.

LONDON, Dec. 7 to 8.

The heart of King James was abundated the throne of England, which was put into an urn, and deposited under an arch in the Scots College, in Paris, was removed at the Revolution. It was safely restored to its original station in the chapel of the Scots College.

Union Hall—Curious Case.—On Saturday Jones Brown was charged before the Magistrate, with a trifling quantity of spirituous liquors into the King's Bench prison, contrary to the Act of Parliament, on Friday night. It appeared in the evidence of Mr. Morris, one of the turnkeys, that the prisoner had but one leg, and wore a wooden leg made of wood, was concealed in such a manner that between the stump of the thigh and the upper part of the wooden leg, a cavity was formed, in which articles of considerable size could be deposited. The liquor in question was put in a bladder, and the bladder was concealed in the cavity; but the contrivance did not escape the keen eye of Mr. Morris, by whom the prisoner was secured and searched. The prisoner said, that he was not aware of the illegality of the attempt; he had a friend confined for debt in the Bench, who was very ill, and that it was for him the Liquor was intended. The prisoner was convicted and adjudged to pay £10, which not being able to pay, he was committed to prison for 14 days.

It will be recollected, that some time since, a proposal was made by the Court of Vienna, to supply England with a large quantity of timber from the forests of Croatia and Dalmatia to the use of the Navy; and that the value of it was to be set off against part of the debt due from Austria to England. Persons were then, or soon afterwards, employed to examine the timber, and decide, whether it would be worth the expense of transportation. If the Austrian Government did not engage to convey it either. It was found to be some of the finest naval timber in the world. A contract has accordingly been made with two merchants of Hull for the conveyance of it to England from Trieste and the Dalmatian ports. The contract is for 300,000 loads of timber, and one of the Contractors is already on his way to superintend the performance of it.

From the London Courier of Nov. 19.

TRIAL BY BATTEL.

In case of an appeal of murder, if a battle is fought, the combatants meet bare-headed and bare-footed, the appellee with his head shaved, the appellor as usual, but both shall be dressed alike. They meet at sun-rise, and fight with first take the oath against amulets and sorcery. If the appellee be so far vanquished that he cannot or will not fight any longer, he shall be adjudged to be hanged immediately; and then, as well as if he be killed in battle, providence is deemed to have determined in favoured of the truth, and his blood shall be attainted. But if he kills the appellant, or can maintain the fight from morning till the stars appear in the evening, he shall be acquitted. So also, if the appellant become recreant, and pronounces the horrible word craven, he shall lose his liberam legem, and become infamous, and the appellee shall recover his damages, and shall be forever quit, not only of the appeal, but of all indictments likewise for the same offence. There are cases where the appellor may compel the appellee to wage battel, and put the appellee from it by battle. These are vehement presumption or sufficient proof that the appeal is true, or where the appellor is under 14, or above 60, years of age, or is a woman, or a priest, or a peer, or, lastly, a citizen of London, because the peaceful citizens of the city are supposed to unfit them for battle. The reason given in the old law books for the statute proceeding by duel, forasmuch as in itself the strongest ground by which the appellee's right may sometimes be defeated. The appeal and trial by battel were allowed in cases where there was an absence of all direct proof as to the person who had committed the crime in question. For instance, a murder was perpetrated; the author was unknown; A. B. being asked if he was the murderer, answered him self, and swore that C. D. had committed it; C. D. denied it; there was a case, but only positive affirmation on one side and positive denial on the other. In a case of this nature, where detection seemed impossible by human means, the superstition of our forefathers stepped in with a remedy; they conceived that if the two men, the appellor and the appellee, were fairly pitted against each other, without human aid, and after the solemn invocation of the divine representedance, then providence itself would interfere, and by the result of the combat furnish a verdict. As they conceived it which should punish the guilty and clear the innocent. This being the motive of the proceeding, it seems clear, that in all cases where other direct proof could be adduced the accused was connected with the crime, or who e, in the absence of direct proof, sufficient ground of suspicion arose from collateral evidence to affect the matter for an indictment, then the person charged was not to have his trial by battel; or in other words, the principle of heaven was not to be unnecessarily invoked, where human sagacity might unravel the knot. Whether the decided to avail, proof positive, was considered as doing away the appeal. But the verdict of a Coroner's Inquest, and the subsequent finding of a Grand Jury, though they do not amount to positive proof, still supply the other requisite in such cases—the existence of "violent suspicion."

The Bashaw or Viceroy of Egypt has reopened the intercourse with India by way of the Red Sea, as formerly, for the purpose of obtaining supplies of India merchandize. The goods at first brought to Suez, and conveyed from thence across the Isthmus to Alexandria. The Bashaw paid his tribute to the Grand Seignior in Mocha coffee. We place no confidence in the extent or duration of a trade carried through such channels with the East—The ancient commerce and importance of the Venetian common wealth, so pretty fair illustration of the superior benefits attending on the route by the Cape, which the Portuguese, the Dutch, the French and English, have used for about three centuries.

In Spain, the common people seem to possess a greater degree of genuine and unsophisticated morality and consideration for others, than is to be met in other nations, as the following genuine and characteristic sentiment will clearly evince.—When a stranger enters a market in Spain, he is certain of procuring much cheaper bargains from the peasantry or venders of goods, than are allowed to natives, and should the latter complain of this preference or indulgence to a foreigner, which indeed very often occurs, although the fact is known to them all, the common answer admitted in old laws, and claimed a right of maintaining their innocence by public combat against their appellants.—*Lon-

LONDON, Dec. 20.

This morning we received three sets of French papers, of Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday last. The Budget was presented by the Count Corvetto on Monday to the Chamber of Deputies, of which the result shows the necessity of a further loan to a large amount, of which the proposed interest will be 16 millions of Francs. There is a diminution of 80 millions of francs in the estimates for 1813 as compared with 1817, and this is held out by the Minister of Finance as a prelude of continued amelioration.

The discussions still continue in the Chamber of Deputies, on the law for restricting the Press. It dragged heavily through Monday and Tuesday, and was then adjourned to the day following.

We have made the following extracts:—

The Budget.—The Ministers being introduced, M. the Count Corvetto presented the Budget, and after a few observations on the difficulties to be encountered, he calculated the amount of ordinary charges for the year, 1818, at fr. 680,973,600
The extraordinary, including the expenses of the Allied Army, 312,268,422
Total 993,244,022
The resources for the year
he calculated at 767,778,600
Leaving an excess of 225,463,422

This result, he observed, was foreseen in the last year, in even a heavier proportion. The diminution of near eight millions for the ensuing year, as compared with the expenditure of 1817, is a prelude of the successive ameliorations which the future years will produce.

Such is the advantage of a government incorporated with the nation, that the former appears as indestructible as the latter, and its future measure by that of the people, presents the idea of unlimited duration.

Our loan for the present year will not exceed sixteen millions of rentes; and and seeing the facilities we enjoy, it will not be necessary to alienate more than twelve millions of rentes of the sixteen to support the service of the year. The budget was then read, and referred to the bureaux, where it will not be discussed, until after the deliberation of the press.

The Pretended Dauphin of France.—
The following are some curious facts respecting the person assuming the name of the Dauphin, who is now in prison at Rouen:—

"He is a young man of about four or five and thirty, handsome deportment, and well informed. He has been now a prisoner two years, during which period has been sent before two Courts for trial as an impostor, and both these courts declared themselves incompetent to take cognizance of this crime. Before one of these courts he was desired by the President to uncover himself—
The Dauphin haughtily replied—"Je puis quand est ce qu'un monarque se de-couvre devant ces sujets." He declares he can prove what he assumes, and demands to be taken to the Tuuilleries, and when there, he will indicate places where, when young, he concealed several trifling, which he will there name and describe most minutely; and says he, when la Reine sa mere etait en prison au Temple, she with a sharp instrument made a curious mark on the back of his neck, (which he shews,) and with the same instrument, she at the same time made a similar one upon that of the Duchess his sister; that when young and playing with his sister, he with a knife accidentally stabbed her in the body, the mark of which remained, and he will, if confronted with her, describe the very spot where it is.

"The Solicitor said to be his father, being called into court, was asked if that was his son? He answered yes.—
The mother being called in and asked the same question, said no, and that she had never been the mother here. The daughter corroborated the mother, and said she had never seen him, and that he was not at all like her brother.

"He is not closely confined at Rouen, and has always plenty of money in his pockets; he sends for every thing of the best, and when brought in makes the jailor taste of it, for fear of being poisoned. Such as go to see him out curiosity, stile him 'Sire' and 'your Majesty.'

"He says, that some years ago, not knowing how to escape out of France, he boldly told Bonaparte who he was;
that he did not want to reign, and only wished for a safe escort out of the country. Bonaparte, adds he, named one of his Ministers, who is now living, and he saw me safe to the frontiers;
this person is living, and he will name him in order that he may identify him for the man he escorted out of France.

"It is strange that during the numerous interrogations he has had, he has never uttered a word to commit himself. People seem to think there is much mystery in it, for if there were not reason to suppose him what he pretends to be, he would long before this have been tried and sent to the Galies.
It is said that he has a strong party in this country.

"It has been well ascertained, that the person poisoned was not the Dauphin. The surgeon who inspected the body of the child given out for the Dauphin, asserted it was not, and for so doing he was found poisoned himself in his bed the next morning.

"Thus young man has travelled a great deal, and has been received at most of the Courts in Europe."

UKASE.

Addressed to the Legislative Synod at Moscow, by Alexander, Emperor of Russia.

Dated from Moscow, Oct. 27, 1817.

"During my late travels through the Provinces, I was obliged, to my no small regret, to listen to speeches pronounced by certain of the Clergy in different parts, which contained unbecoming praises of me—praises which can only be ascribed unto God. And as I am convinced in the depth of my heart of the Christian truth, that every blessing floweth unto us through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ alone, and that every man, be whom he may, without Christ, is full only of evil, in which the hand of God hath so evidently been manifested before the whole world, is to give unto men that glory which belongeth unto God alone.

"I account it my duty, therefore, to forbid all such unbecoming expressions of praise, and recommend to the Holy Synod to give instructions to all the Diocesan Bishops, that they themselves and the Clergy under them, on similar occasions, in future, refrain from all such expressions of praise, so disagreeable to my ears; and that they may render unto the Lord of Hosts alone, Thanksgivings for the blessings bestowed upon us, and pray for the out-pouring of his Grace upon us all; conforming themselves in this matter to the words of Sacred Writ, which requires us to render to the King Eternal, Immortal, Invisible, the only wise God, honor and glory for ever and ever.

"ALEXANDER."

By the arrival last evening of the brig
David Richards, in 21 days from Falmouth, (Jam) we have received a file of the Cornwall Gazette, printed at that place, to the 14th January, from which we copy some late accounts of the operations of the patriot and royal forces on the Spanish Maine. In one sanguinary battle, fought on the 2d December, where the patriot forces consisted of 1500 men, 1200 were slain. The loss on the part of the royalists is said to amount to only 11 killed and 98 wounded. The troops of the latter fought to desperation, and are said to have been equalled only by those of Marengo, Aus-terlitz and Jena.

SALAO, Oct. 27. 1817

Most Excellent Sir.—It is with the greatest pleasure I communicate to your excellency that I have taken prisoner the traitor Mina, together with 25 of his principal partisans, at the post of Benadio, appertaining to the planta tion of Pachiquen, where he was stationed with 200 men. Half of them were killed, as well as the ringleader Moreno, whose head I caused to be brought to this place, where I have just arrived. I will send it to General Don Pasqual Liman as soon as possible; and I now anticipate this information to your excellency, on account of its importance. God preserve your excellency many years.

VALUE OF FLORIDA.

To the Editor of the Jamaica Colonial Journal.

Sir—The reasons dictated the United States to obtain possession of the province of East Florida, which will be the commerce of the Spanish colonies, in time of war, entirely at their mercy, is sufficiently well known; and our Jamaica planters and merchants ought to look to themselves, as they have certainly the most serious cause to alarm at the prospect of East Florida falling into the hands of the United States. In time of war, the latter would thence have a perfect command of the Gulf of Florida.

It would be a measure of sound policy, were the Spanish government to cede the Floridas to G. Britain; and to induce the British Government to desire the acquisition, it is proper to mention, that they would furnish it with a regular supply of naval stores, such as pitch, tar, turpentine, masts, and ship plank;
with live oak, of the greatest magnitude, for ship building, with which the province abounds.—There is another circumstance which ought to have great weight. As the British would thus acquire the exclusive possession of live oak the Americans would be thereby excluded from its use in forming a durable navy, and be obliged to use their own worthless oak, which will not last above six or seven years, at the expiration of which period, they must be at the enormous expence of renewing their whole fleet.

Live-oak is a wood of such extraordinary durability, that after the trees have been exposed to the changes and inclemency of the seasons for upwards of a century, it acquires a stony hardness and will resist the edge of the best tempered steel. The government of the U. S are acquainted with its value; their frigates were built of this wood,
from trees collected in South Carolina and Georgia; they also procured frames for ten or twelve seventy fours, which were deposited in their arsenal, but were wisely destroyed by Sir Alexander Cochrane.—There are now only a few scattered trees in Carolina and Georgia;
perhaps sufficient to build a frigate.

In the peninsula of East Florida, there is one of the best and most secure harbors in America, which will receive from fifty to one hundred sail of the line.

I am induced to hope that these observations will not escape the attention of government, and the Jamaica planters and merchants.

AN OLD OFFICER.

ALBANY, Jan. 27.

LEGISLATURE OF NEW-YORK.

This day at 11 o'clock, a quorum of the two Houses of the Legislature of the state appeared at the capitol, qualified and took their seats.

At 2 o'clock His Excellency assembled and opened the Session with the following Speech:

Gentlemen of the Senate and of the Assembly.

Among the important duties enjoined upon the executive by the constitution, he is required to recommend such subjects to the consideration of the legislature, as shall appear to him to concern the good government, welfare and prosperity of the state. On this occasion
I feel a peculiar gratification in the performance of this duty, from the persuasion that I address myself to a legislature, competent to distinguish, and anxious to promote the true interests of our country.

As agriculture is the source of our subsistence, the basis of our strength, and the foundation of our prosperity, it is pleasing to observe the public attention awakened to its importance, and associations springing up in several counties to cherish its interests. Having received but a small portion of direct encouragement from government, it has been left to its own energies; and supported by a fertile soil, cherished by a benign climate, cultivated by industry, and protected by liberty, it has diffused its bounties over the country, and has relieved the wants of the old world.
Relying hitherto almost exclusively on the fertility of our soil and the extent of our possessions, we have not adopted those improvements which the experience of modern times has indicated.
And it has not been sufficiently understood that agriculture is a science, as well as an art; that it demands the labor of the mind as well as of the hands; and that its successful cultivation is intimately allied with the most profound investigations of philosophy, and the most elaborate exertions of the human mind.

If not the exclusive duty, it is certainly the peculiar province of the state governments to superintend and advance the interests of agriculture. To this end, it is advisable to constitute a board composed of the most experience-ed and best informed agriculturists, and to render it their duty to diffuse agricultural knowledge; to correspond with the county societies; to communicate to them beneficial discoveries and improvements; to introduce meritious seeds, plants, trees and animals, improvements of husbandry and labor saving machines; to explore the minerals of the country, and to publish periodically, the most valuable observations and tractates on husbandry, horticulture and rural economy. The county societies ought to be enabled to distribute adequate premiums; and a professorship of agriculture connected with the board or attached to the university, might also be constituted, embracing the kindred sciences of chemistry and geology, mineralogy, botany, and the other departments of natural education would be taught, developing the principles of the science, illustrating the practice of the art, and restoring the first and best pursuit of man to that intellectual rank which it ought to occupy in the scale of human estimation.

Good markets for agricultural productions are the vital incentive to agricultural industry; and nothing tends more directly to the promotion of these, than the establishment of cheap and easy modes of transportation, and the erection of flourishing villages, towns and cities under the auspices of commerce, trade and manufacturers. As foreign markets are always fluctuating in their prices, and uncertain as to their ex-gencies, we must rely principally on our own internal consumption for the stable and permanent support of agriculture. But this can only be effected by the excitement of other kinds of industry, and the creation of a great manufacturing interest. Every friend of this country must contemplate with regret the prostration of our manufacturies. The excessive importation of foreign fabrics was the signal of ruin to institutions formed by enterprising industry, reared by beneficial skill and identified with the general welfare. The raw materials of iron, woollen and cotton manufactures are abundant, and those for the minor and auxiliary ones can in most cases be procured at home with equal facility. Nothing is wasting to destroy foreign competition but the steady protection of the government and the public spirit of the country.—
High duties and prohibitory provisions applied to foreign productions, afford the most efficient encouragement to our manufactures; and these measures ap-pertain to the legitimate functions of the national government. But much may be done by the state government by liberal accommodations, by judicious exemptions and by the whole weight of its influence, and much more may be accomplished by the public spirit of the community. For I am persuaded that if every citizen who adopts the fabrics of other nations, would seriously consider that he is not only paying taxes for the support of foreign governments, but that he participates in undermining one of the main pillars of our productive industry, he would institute the honorable preference which you have this day revived in favor of American manufacturers.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.

MONDAY, January 26.

Mr. CHRISTIE, left himself [illegible] [illegible] to take, and of, which he had [illegible] given notice, in the House of [illegible] who, from professional engage[illegible] might be much more adequate to the task, than he, would have undertaken the discharge of duty to the public, which they must have felt [illegible] more particularly as he expected to be conversant with the Administration of Justice than from members unacquainted with the law [illegible] subject. He therefore must solicit the [illegible] indulgence of the House, while he [illegible] particulars, he should, to be clear, go into the [illegible] first. He, (Mr. C.) had, however, no offi-[illegible] interest, direct or indirect, in calling in question the state of the Court of Vice Admiralty in this Province. Since a report on the subject, a gentleman who held the Colonial seal appointed [illegible] unknown to him, and as far as he had valued was exonerated. In mentioning this [illegible] he had always thought to be respectable in the highest degree; he considered that that important matter would be attended to him the ensuing session proposed. With respect to the Court of Vice Admiralty in England, he understood it to be particularly limited in the extent of the Civil and Criminal Law—and, was a creature of an anglicanous manufacture—one moment on the deep; the next it relied on the [illegible] [illegible] of land; the next it acted plunder, (instead of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]) The discontents which the Colonial Courts of Vice Admiralty had universally created, were too well known to require comment
—The Court of Vice Admiralty had, for instance, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

question was susceptible of the highest agriculture, and such as to invite the enterprise of the industrious Farmer.—The time, he said, was now elapsed to enquire whether Government, in granting those lands, had pursued a prudent policy. The face of the country was now changing with extraordinary rapidity, and progressing in population, for which welfare it behoved the Legislature to manifest a paternal solicitude, and in promoting, by every possible means within its reach, the establishment of the new settlements, unite their interests with our own, and thus, in the course of a few years, lastend of an impervious forest, we shall be able to oppose to our neighbours, in case of war, the energies of a stout, a hardy, and a loyal population. The most efficacious means of effectuating these all all important purposes, was to afford every facility in settling the woodlands, by opening in all directions short and convenient routes of communication from township to township, and from thence to the principal markets in this province, and thus affording ample scope for industry and commercial enterprise in the new townships. It was indeed true that the Legislature when the means of the province were taken into consideration, had in the last Session made a very generous exertion towards the improvement of the internal communications, but it was also equally true that unless means were devised to maintain and keep in repair the new roads which already were, as well as those which remained to be opened in the course of the ensuing summer, all these new routes of internal communications must in a short time relapse into their pristine, impassable state. The road Act which had been expressly framed and calculated for the old established and well settled parishes of this province, and for which it was certainly well calculated and wisely adapted, had after the ordeal of some years experience, been found inapplicable to the townships where the lands were held by quite a different tenure from those of the old parishes of free and common seccage. There were besides, a number of local causes which rendered the act in question inadequate to the maintenance of the roads through the townships. It therefore became highly expedient to take up the subject, and to devise such means for the maintenance and repair of the highways and roads in the townships as were left unprovided by the road act, and which might be deemed peculiarly suitable for the townships. It was a measure in which he felt much interest, as it was connected with the welfare of an industrious, a thriving, and a growing population. He had conversed with Honorable Members on the subject, who, he was happy to find, felt an equi solicitude with himself for the prosperity of the portion of the country in question, and concurring with him in opinion on the main points to which he should hereafter call the attention of the House, if which he had little cause to anticipate any serious opposition to the measure proposed.

Mr. Gugy's motion accordingly passed unanimously.

The committee on the petition of J. Voyer Esq. and others, praying to be authorized to make and maintain a navigable canal from St. John's to the Basin of Chambly, reported in favor of the prayer of the petitioners; and accordingly leave was given to bring in a Bill to authorise the making and maintaining the said canal; and the same was received and read for the first time, and ordered to be read a second time on Wednesday next.

The committee to enquire whether the expences of bringing to the bar the witness on the contestation of the election of J. M'Callum, Esq. by John Neilson, Esq. and others, reported as their opinion, that they could not take upon themselves to report: that the expence of bringing witnesses to the bar would be more considerable than if they were brought before commissioners.

Resolved, That in consequence of certain unforseen questions of privilege which have engaged the attention of the House, the rule of the House fixing the first twenty-four days for the introduction of Private bills, be enlarged, for this session only, to the first thirty days of the session; and the rule for receiving of Reports of Special Committees upon private Bills, within the first forty days, be enlarged for this session only, to the first forty-six days.

A message was ordered to the Legislative Council for leave to one of their Members to attend a Special Committee of the House.

The petition of the Comitaires of the Seigniory of La Salle, presented on the 16th inst. was referred to a special Committee.

Resolved, that the House will on Wednesday next, consider in a Committee of the whole, the expediency of amending the Act of the 35th of His to the townships in this province.

Mr. Secretary Cochrane was admitted within the bar, and delivered to Mr. Speaker three messages to the following effect: the first relating to the Court Hall and Gaol at New Carlisle, and recommending the consideration of the general state of the district of Gaspé, and the same was referred to a committee of the whole House to sit on Wednesday next; the second relating to the presentment of the Grand Jury of the District of Montreal, on the depredations committed in that city; and it was referred to the committee of the whole House appointed to consider the ways and means to establish a Night Watch in the Cities of Quebec and Montreal, and for lighting the said cities; and the third relating to the general state of the eastern townships, and to the erection of a Gaol and Court House in the said townships; and the same is to be considered in a committee of the whole house on Wednesday next.

Saturday, 31.

A report of the Commissioners for Internal communications for Dorchester and part of Buckinghamshire was laid before the house.

Labrie's bridge bill was read a second time, and referred to a special Committee.

The Bill authorising the prolongation of St. Joseph Street, in Montreal, was read a second time, and referred to a special committee.—Adjourned.

Monday, 2d February.

The Special Committee on the Petition of Charles Tuggen, for the privilege of making a Machine to clean Chimnies, reported, that they were of opinion that there was not sufficient proof that the machine was adapted to the object proposed, as being an invention of public utility.

A Message was received from His Excellency the Governor in Chief, informing the House that His Excellency had received from Earl Bathurst, official intelligence of the death of the Princess Charlotte Augusta. An Address of Thanks was voted to His Excellency, for the Communication he was pleased to make the House; after which, a Committee of five Members was appointed, to prepare the draft of an Address of condolence on the occasion.

The engrossed Bill, to continue the Duties under the 53d Geo. III. Cap. 11, as amended by the 55th Geo. III. Cap. 2, was read for the third time, passed, and sent to the Council.

The House, in Committee, resolved that it was expedient to amend the Act of the 46th Geo. III. Cap. 4 repealing the Ordinance of the 25th Geo. III. concerning unascertainable Fines and also that it was expedient to appoint an additional number of Inspectors of Sales. The House having resumed thereon, on Monday—Adjourned.

Tuesday 3d.

The Committee upon the petition of the Grand Voyer of Quebec, reported as their opinion, that the fees upon Proces Verbaux should be abolished, and that the grand Voyer be compensated by a fixed annual Salary.

The Special Committee on the Bill repealing that part of the Ordinance providing against accidents by Fire, which relates to covering with Shingles, having reported, the Bill and report were referred to a Committee of the whole for Saturday.

A Bill to encourage education in the country parts, was introduced and read; second reading on Tuesday.—Adjourned.

Wednesday 4th.

A Message was received from the Legislative Council, on the expediency of a joint Address of Condolence to be presented to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, by both Houses of the Provincial Parliament, upon the late melancholy event of the death of Her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte Augusta, daughter of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent.

And the House concurred in the said Message.

Another Message was received from the Legislative Council, on the expediency of a joint Address of Condolence to be presented to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, by both Houses of the Provincial Parliament, upon the late melancholy event of the death of Her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte Augusta, daughter of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent.

And the House concurred in the said Message.

Another Message was received from the Legislative Council, on the expediency of both Houses of the Provincial Parliament making a joint Address to His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, upon the expectation that duties may be laid by the Imperial Parliament upon the Lumber of the British North American Provinces imported into Great Britain.

M. Secretary Cochrane delivered a Message from his Excellency the Governor in Chief, recommending to make good certain sums of money expended in the repairs of the Court House at Montreal and at Three Rivers.

According to order, the House went into Committee on the accusation against Thomas M'Cord, Esq. a Member of the House, for having knowingly used bad faith and surprize, with respect to the House, in the manner wherein he introduced and carried through last year the Bill to provide for the regulation of the Police. After some time, Mr. Speaker resumed the Chair, and then it was resolved upon a division of the House, yeas 12, nays 4,) "that the said accusation be expunged from the Journals of the House, as being contrary to principle, and tending to introduce dangerous precedents in this House." And also, "that all the resolutions and orders of the House relative to the said complaints or accusations, be also expunged from the Journals of the House.

Friday 6.

The Committee on the petition of the Curate and Church Wardens of the Fabrique Notre Dame submitted to the House whether it would not be convenient that the ground of the Market remain vacant, and that no building be erected thereon.

The committee on the petition of the Trustees for the demolition of the Upper Town Market Hall, reported as their opinion that the Trustees could not effect the ends of the act, without additional aid.

The House proceeded to take into consideration the motives and reasons of complaint alledged in the petition of John Neilson, Esq. against the election of James M'Callum, Esq. and referred the further consideration to the following sitting.

Saturday 7.

The orders of the day were postponed, and the House adjourned till Tuesday at eleven o'clock.

QUEBEC, February 2.

The November mail arrived on Wednesday last: it has brought, we understand, several Madamaes for Gentlemen in different parts of the Province, calling them up to the Legislative Council including Colonels De Salaberry, and Burns, who have already taken seats; the new members, we are told, will amount to about a dozen. Among them, we are happy to observe Monseigneur the Catholic Bishop of Quebec; the first Catholic Bishop that has been raised to the exercise of the Legislative functions under the British Government since the expulsion of the Stuarts from the Throne of Great Britain.

FLORIDAS, &c.

We have lately observed that shortly after the American troops took possession of Amelia Island, the independent forces under Col. Irvine, evacuated the place, and embarked in a numerous fleet of Privateers, but their destination was not known. So long as the American government held out, that in taking possession of Amelia Island and Galvezton, its only object was the dispersion of two fashionable nests of Pirates, we, in connexion with many others, conceived the intention laudable, and looked for salutary effects on the commerce of the tropical regions in the western hemisphere. But it now appears that some secret arrangements passed in Congress last session empowering the President, if necessary, to take possession of such ports in the Floridas as might be conducive to the interests of the United Sates, without making any previous declaration of the motives for so acting. Thus do the American introduce a new mode of lawmaking, and a new law of nations, which threatens all the European colonial establishments in the new world with revolution and eventual subjugation, if their ambitious pretensions be not curbed by timely force. For more than twelve years past, the Americans have had an eye on the Floridas, and nothing but fear of Great Britain prevented them from taking possession of those provinces, after the purchase of Louisiana from France. The same fear has still a strong influence in the American cabinet, and no wonder it should, if the position of West Florida be connected with the West India Islands be duly weighed. Any enterprising and powerful nation, holding the harbor of Pensacola, and the adjoining territory, may annoy the neighbouring Islands at discretion, & finally render them not worth keeping. The stake Great Britain has in the West Indies is too valuable to be trifled with, and if the United States take possession of the Floridas without her concurrence, (which is probable) troubles of a very unpleasant nature may break out between the two countries, much sooner than could possibly have been foreseen. Pensacola is the most noble and secure harbour any in America. A very narrow entrance, capable of receiving the largest ships in the world, protects a magnificent basin fit to contain the united navies of Europe. The neighboring forests produce the finest live oak in super-abundance, which is known to be the best for ship timber of any in the world; pitch, tar, and turpentine to be had in plenty, and no doubt the soil which is uncommonly fertile, will produce luxuriant crops of fine hemp.

Carr Rock Beacon.—We are much concerned to learn the loss which the shipping of the Friths of Forth and Tay have sustained by the fall of the Carr Rock Beacon—a work in which the Commissioners of the Northern Lighthouses have been engaged for the last five years. This building was visited by one of the ship-masters in the light-house service on the 10th ult. and was found to be in perfect order. But, on the evening of the 14th ult. a very heavy swell of sea came ashore, and, on the 25th, the ground swell still continued with foggy weather, and the rock could not be discerned till the afternoon of that day when the sea was observed to break upon it with much violence, and it was then discovered that a great part of the building had been thrown down.

The Carr Rock forms the extreme point of that dangerous reef of sunken rocks, extending about two miles from the shore at Fifeness, which has been the cause of many shipwrecks, notwithstanding all the improvements adopted on this part of the coast; a circumstance which has rendered the erection of a beacon upon it a work of considerable interest.

The Beacon Rock is 72 feet in height, but its greatest breadth is only 23 feet. At high water of spring tides the foundation of the building is at 16 feet under the level of the sea. The Beacon is circular, measuring 18 feet in diameter at the base—the height of the masonry was 86 feet, and from thence to the ball on the top of the cupola, it measured five feet more, or 41 feet in all. For greater safety, and to avoid any weakness in the walls, the beacon was so constructed, that the entrance door was above the balcony, being placed immediately under the cupola, the access to which was by means of a trap-ladder. The interior of this tower was designed for a Tide machine, to be employed in constantly ringing the large bell, which was to form the cupola of the building. By this contrivance the mariner was to be forewarned of his danger under night, and in foggy weather; where a beacon of the common form would have been comparatively of less use; by this means the building was to be guarded from accidents by the too near approach of vessels.

Upon the whole, there was something undertaking which gave it a particular interest with the curious, while it was calculated to render so much benefit to the mariner, that we cannot help again regretting that it had not succeeded to the utmost, as preparations were just making, for the construction of the machinery, from a model long since made.

RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

A GENTLEMAN of this Country, who for some years past, has been anxiously endeavouring to compleat a set of the OLD ANNUAL REGISTER, first published by Dodsley, which is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable works ever given to the world, and a compleat Library in itself; being still in want of a few Volumes, commissioned a friend to procure them in England last fall: owing to some mistake, the London Bookseller to whom the order was sent, after much needless labour and cost, for the entire work is now rare and very difficult to be procured, got together a whole set, uniformly and very elegantly bound, and sent them out to this country. The consequence is, that the duplicates must either be returned or disposed of, but rather than return them immediately, the present holder wishes to offer them at prime cost to the public, and any Gentleman desirous of forming a Library, will find this an opportunity that very seldom occurs.—The entire set consists of 37 Volumes, which cost in England £37 7s. Sterling. The broken set wanting only 6 or 7 Volumes, which may be readily procured, cost £45. The Purchaser may have his choice. The work is still, & will be annually continued. Apply to the Editor.

TO SCHOOLMASTERS, MECHANICS, &c.

THE Township of Westminster, about 120 miles from York, is fast becoming one of the most populous in Upper Canada, which is not to be wondered at, considering the great richness of the soil, the goodness and abundance of the water, and the salubrity and mildness of the air.—These things so essential to health and longevity, have induced numbers of reflecting men to become actual settlers, and the land in this Township is already nearly taken up. It is now about five years since its commencement, and scarcely a single instance of sickness has been known by its numerous inhabitants. Two School-houses have lately been built, and the resident families are very desirous of giving every encouragement to men of good character as per manent Teachers to their rising generation. To Blacksmiths, Brickmakers, Bricklayers, Carpenters, &c. of steady good habits, it presents great inducements. J. WILKINS.

VALUABLE LANDS
For Sale.

THE following singularly desirable, and truly valuable Lands are now in hand, and immediate possession given, with considerable, or very little or no further labour than real value; and it is but seldom, even in a country so extensive as Canada, where unappropriated Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, in good neighbourhoods, can be secured.

Lot 1. Comprising 70 Acres of the very richest beech, maple, Elm and Oak Land, in the 4th Concession of Home, lying upon South's Creek, with 15 acres cleared and fenced, new log-house, well built and dove-tailed, fruit trees, &c. with a milleseat, between 4 and 5 miles from the flourishing little Town of Toronto, on Lake Ontario, where there is an excellent market either for buying or selling. The land is of the very first quality, and in a good populous neighbourhood, forming altogether a most desirable residence, within a short mile of the great road between York and Kingston.

2d. 200 Acres, being Lot No. 1, in the 5th Concession of Home, alongside the great road between Hope and Hamilton, leading to the new and flourishing settlements of Cavan & Monaghan, on the Rice Lake, in which more than 500 families and persons have actually located, and scarcely five miles from the Town of Toronto, where there is a good market: it is in an old settlement, and the neighbourhood is populous and excellent. There is about 30 acres cleared and fenced, with a fine stream of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

3d. 190 Acres, occupying nearly one entire side of the Gannanoque Lake, in the Township of South Crosby, District of Johnstown, commanding whole of broken fronts, the back parts extending to the road from the Rideau Settlement to Kingston, from which latter place it is scarcely 20 miles distant. The Land is good and well timbered, and the situation singularly beautiful and romantic, with wooded islands at hand.

The above Lands are particularly deserving of notice. The situations were chosen by a competent judge, and they will be sold reasonably: being the proprietor wishing to concentrate his forces in another quarter.

For further particulars, apply to the Honorable JOHN ROBERT CARTWRIGHT, Esq. York; C. FOTHERGILL, Esq. Toronto; WM. HAMILTON, Esq. Kingston or Peterett; or to ADAM ARMOUR, Esq. Montreal.

PUBLISHED BY S. C. STONE.

From Europe.

LONDON, Feb. 15.

We have received Paris papers to the 14th. We stopped the press on Saturday to announce an attempt that had been made on the Duke of Wellington's life in Paris. These papers repeat the information, and also state that a guard of gen Darmes has been stationed at the door of his grace's hotel. The following letter from our own correspondent in that city, will, however be found to communicate a more complete detail of this dark transaction.

"PARIS, Feb. 13

"As there will be many reports concerning the shot fired at the Duke of Wellington last Tuesday night. I will give you the following brief account, on the accuracy of which you may rely. On Tuesday, the Duke gave a grand dinner to all the French cabinet ministers and foreign ambassadors now in Paris. As soon as the cloth was drawn, the duke stood up and prop'd the health of "the king" which all the company drank standing. After they had departed, which they generally do directly after coffee, the duke went out in his carriage, and as he was returning at one o'clock on Tuesday night, or to speak more correctly, Wednesday morning, some person, who had evidently waited for his return, stood within a few yards of the entrance gate and after the carriage had passed him, to take a sweep into the gate, he fired a pistol, the ball from which happily missed his grace; it went over the carriage, and struck the opposite wall.—If the footman had had the presence of mind to give an immediate alarm, the under butler and one of the grooms of his grace could have caught the miscreant, as he passed them by in a great hurry, going towards the Rue de Fauxbourg St. Honore."

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

PARIS, Feb. 12.

On the night of the 10th inst. as his Grace the Duke of Wellington was returning from the Italian Opera, in Paris attended by his Aid-de Camp and a Spanish Officer of high rank, who has long been the companion of our illustrious countryman, and has attended him through all his campaigns, the crowd was so great, that the progress of his Grace's carriage was for some time impeded. During this period a villain was observed pressing forward towards the spot where the Duke's carriage was.—Fortunately, however, for that time, his intention was frustrated, by the activity of his Lordship's coachman, who whipped up his horses, and drove rapidly in the direction of the Place Vendome. It appears, notwithstanding, that the assassin reached the Rue St. Honore, before the carriage of his Grace arrived there, and at the moment it crossed, on the way to the Champs Elysee, fired at the Duke; so sure was his aim, and so deliberate the act, that nothing could have preserved the life of our great Hero, had the window of the carriage been down, which was the case but a moment before: the hand of his Grace's Aid-de-Camp being still on the holder after raising it. Whom a rifle ball struck the strong plate-glass, and shattered it to pieces. The Duke immediately, with the greatest coolness, directed the coachman should be ordered to stop. His Grace alighted, and perceived a figure gliding round the corner of the Rue St. Honore, with an intention, as it would appear, of escaping towards the Barrier de Elysee, his Grace promptly advanced upon him.—The villian instantly started; flung the rifle from his hand; and with the rapidity of lightning darted towards the Thuilleries, by the gardens of which, and over the Pont Neuf, he is supposed to have made his escape. His grace then, with that collected firmness for which he is so remarkable, directed a few gendarmerie, who, alarmed by the report of the rifle, had assembled on the spot, to go in pursuit of him, and, returning to his carriage as if nothing had taken place. His grace is even reported to have been facetious on the circumstance of there being no glass to preserve them from a drizzling rain that was then falling, and which occasioned its being at first drawn up. A considerable sensation arose next morning in consequence. The Parisians were to be seen mustering in strange and grotesque groups at the various Cafe's, and reports the most extravagant were in circulation.

The next morning, his grace was visited by every person of distinction in Paris, and the king and royal family have manifested the strongest feelings on the occasion.

"Every exertion is making to discover the retreat of the assassin, and none are permitted to leave Paris, afternoon-set, nor before sun-rising, or at any time, without undergoing a strict examination by the police, who are stationed at the several barriers for that purpose."

The police, it is said, have already obtained important information. A foreign officer is mentioned, against whom there are violent suspicions; but it will be proper to wait for something more certain on this subject.

All the copies of the third number of the Sentinelle de Pifonnenr, which was on sale for a few days, have been seized. This political pamphlet is written by M. Joseiin de la Salla, the cousin of General Bertrand, who is at St. Helena. The Duke of Wellington is described in it as an insolent protonsul, and the most marked endeavours are made to direct against him the contempt and hatred of the French nation. The author, it is said, will be brought to trial.

It is reported here that Lord Kinnaird wrote to Sir George Murray, from Brussels, engaging this distinguished Officer to urge the Duke not to expose himself, as strange reports were in circulation from this town. The Duke himself was on horseback a part of yesterday, followed by a single servant as usual.

PARIS, Feb. 14.

The Duke of Wellington continued yesterday to receive the visits of the members of the Diplomatic Body, and of the most distinguished persons of the capital. A piquet of gendarmerie had been stationed at his Lordship's hotel.

LONDON, Feb. 17.

On Sunday dispatches were received at the Secretary of State's Office for the Colonial Department, from the Duke of Wellington, giving his own full detailed account of the attempt made to assassinate him. Immediately after Earl Bathurst had made himself acquainted with the contents of the dispatches, he repaired to Carlton-House, and laid them before the Prince-Regent, and remained a considerable time with his Royal Highness. Soon after the return of the Noble Secretary to his office, a Messenger was sent off with dispatches to the Noble Duke at Paris.

The indefatigable Abbe de Pradt has published another work on South America and Brazil.

Extract of a letter from Paris dated Feb. 16.

"The French papers have given a pretty correct account, of the late attempt made on the Duke of Wellington's life. As to the discovery of its author, that continues involved in mystery, notwithstanding the active researches of the police. It appears, however that his Grace has been able to furnish some clue for their researches, which is still acting upon, and which, forwant of sufficient time, has not yet led to any result. The Duke is said to have distinctly seen the individual who fired upon him, and to observe that he wore mustachoes; in consequence of this indication many half pay officers have received orders to quit Paris, and otherwise are put under strict surveillance. It seems that the individual in question was pursued immediately after his attempt, though not by the Duke's servants, whose first attention was directed to his Grace, but by some persons happening to be standing in front of the public house near the hotel. These followed him up to the Rue de la Madeleine, a dark unfrequented street, and observed him to enter a house, No. 11, the doors immediately closed on him. They knocked in vain at these doors. They state that the voice of several women and that of one man were distinctly to be heard. The house itself is said to be of ill fame:—This information was unfortunately not given to the Duke's family, or to the police, until late in the morning, in consequence of which neglect, when a search was made at the house in question nothing was to be found—its usual inhabitants had disappeared.

Office of Committee of Privy Council for Trade, Whitehall, Feb 20, 1818.

Sir—I am directed by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade to acquaint you, for the information of the Committee of the Ship Owners Society on whose behalf you have addressed a Memorial to their Lordships, respecting the Duties on Timber, that upon a full consideration of all the circumstances of the case, and more particularly with reference to the act 22d Geo. 3, chap. 86, (by which Timber from the British North American Colonies is exempted from the duty till the 25th March, 1820, it is not at present the intention of His Majesty's Government to submit to Parliament any alteration of the law, as it now stands, in respect to the importation of Timber, whether from our own Colonies or from foreign States.

I am to add that, under these circumstances, the Lords of the Committee do not think it necessary to give the members of the Ship Owners Society the trouble of attending their Lordships as proposed by your letter of the 20th December last, on this subject.

The following letter was received this morning from Vienna:

VIENNA, Feb. 9.

The conjectures formed by the public some time since, have lately acquired such a degree of moral certainty, that I can no longer refrain from communicating to you, what is emitted to full confidence. No doubt is entertained that our august Sovereign yielding to the reiterated offers and representations of the Germanic Body, has consented to resume the important Crown of Germany. One of our enlightened publicists has proposed the Acte Capitulaire, which, since 2d of this month, has been accepted and ratified in all its points. Though the details circulated at court are not stamped with sufficient authenticity to justify my transcribing them, yet I will add, that it is universally believed the ancient Council of the Empire is to be re-established (Reichsaufrath) at Vienna; that besides the imperial dignity, the Hereditary Prince is to be created King of Germany, and that the functions of Field Marshal of the German Empire have been given with common accord to the Duke of Tuscany, who resigns his post of Captain General of Bohemia. These innovations, or rather this return to our ancient usages inspire the best grounded hopes for the future."

We have received since our last the French Papers of Tuesday and Wednesday. They are peculiarly barren of intelligence. Not a syllable is said of any discoveries having been made, with respect to the attempt upon the Duke of Wellington; and there is probably no truth, therefore, in the account contained in the Brussels Papers, of the Police having already arrested some suspected persons.

Feb. 25.

A morning paper states, that the intended marriage of the Duke of Clarence with the Princess of Denmark, will not take place, and that his Royal Highness will be married to Miss Wykeham. This union we understand, has the sanction of the Prince Regent, and was arranged before his Royal Highness was apprised of the death of his son, Captain Fitzclarence, to whom it was most tenderly attached, and by whose loss he is deeply affected.

Melancholy Occurrence.—A very melancholy occurrence took place on Friday afternoon last, in the workshop of Mr. R. Morris, painter, of Chester.—The greater part of the men employed by Mr. Morris, had assembled, we understand, in one room, for the purpose of celebrating the entrance into a state of apprenticeship of one of the young men. After they had been regaling themselves some time, two of them (of the names of Oldham and Usherwood) engaged in a variety of antics, in the course of which they overturned a bucket of water, and a large can, which was filled with spirit of turpentine, in which they rolled each other. Usherwood, without the slightest intention of injuring his friend and fellow-workman, applied a piece of lighted paper to Usherwood's pantaloons. The effect of this act was awful in the extreme; in an instant the young man was enveloped in a body of fire. His companions immediately resorted to a variety of expedients to extinguish the flame, without effect. His wearing apparel, in a few minutes, with the exception of one garter, and a part of one of his stockings, was burned to ashes. His body was dreadfully scorched and presented a frightful spectacle. He was carried to the infirmary, a short time after the fatal event took place, where he lingered in the most excruciating agony until about six o'clock on Saturday evening, when death relieved him from all his sufferings. An inquest was held on the body on Sunday last. Verdict—Accidental Death.

Feb. 23.

Most Calamitous Fire.—Friday week, the large cotton mill of Mr. T. Atkinson, at Cobsebridge, near Huddersfield, was discovered to be on fire, and the every exertion was used to extinguish the flames, it was burnt to the ground. The manner in which this awful disaster took place, is related as follows, by a boy, ten years of age, who was the instrument of so calamitous an event: He says, that about 5 o'clock, he was sent into the card room (which is on the ground floor) with a lighted candle to fetch some rovings, and in taking them some loose cotton lying near, caught fire. He ran upstairs to inform those at work, and then to the top of the mill, under the idea of greater safety, but finding such intense heat and smoke, he again descended, and when he came to the stairs, under which the fire was, he laid himself down, and rolled to the bottom. The two overlookers succeeded in getting all the children to the top of the stairs, which were only a few yards from the door, and some of them were dragged down; the remainder, it is supposed, were so terrified, that they ran back into the mill, and were instantly suffocated, as a ladder was placed in a window at the opposite end of the mill, to which it was thought they would flee for safety (and near which place 14 were afterwards found), but the smoke and flames issued out with such violence, as precluded all possibility of assistance; nor could any thing be heard of them, although every exertion was made to stimulate them to approach the window. After this, no idea could be formed what point the poor children had fled to; and the floor gave way, and all, in an instant, was one volume of fire. Fifteen bodies were found, and a number of persons are employed in searching for the rest.—Manchester Gaz. Feb. 21.

Additional Particulars.—To attempt to save any property in the mill, seemed an hopeless effort, and the attention of the persons assembled was wholly directed to rescuing the persons within, who were all girls, from the fire that awaited them. With this view, a ladder was placed against a small window at the end of the factory, near the manager's house, and at the greatest distance from the place where the fire had first appeared; but every endeavour to induce the children to approach the ladder proved unavailing. On breaking the window, a dense column of smoke, which soon burst into a flame, issued from the opening; and it is probable, that before this humane effort to rescue the children was made, the suffocating influence of the ignited cotton, had terminated their sufferings.

A heart-rending scene now took place without, such as a parent who has witnessed the destruction of his child without being able to afford him any relief, can only conceive. Renewed efforts, prompted by a glimmering of hope, were made to ascertain the place where the poor children might have fled, and to rescue them from the flames, but in the midst of these exertions the roof and floor fell in, and hope gave way to despair. In less than half an hour, the entire building, all the machinery, and every article of the stock was destroyed. From a combination of unfortunate circumstances, this fire was more like an explosion, or the conflagration of a stubble, than the destruction of a substantial building. Not a vestige of property was saved in the mills; but the counting-house and warehouse, being protected by a strong main wall were preserved.

While every thing combustible was consumed, diligent search was made for the remains of the children, and fifteen of them were found in the course of the days the two others have been doubtless reduced to ashes. By this calamity about 80 persons were thrown out of employment. At the time the fire broke out 26 persons were at work in the mill, of whom 9 escaped and 17 perished.—Leeds Mercury.

The Mauritius and St. Helena.—We learn with pleasure, by the arrival at Portsmouth of the Phaeton from the Mauritius, having on board Governor Farquhar and family, that there had been no recent seizure of slave vessels in the neighbourhood of that colony.—The trade, indeed, has been abolished by the native powers of Madagascar, from before the great source of supply in conformity to a treaty concluded between the King of Oea and the Governor of the Mauritius. The most zealous efforts were employed by the British attached to the settlement, in order to accomplish this object. The Phaeton touched at St. Helena, on her way home, and Bonaparte was reported to be in good health at that period (Jan. 8.) but he had not been accessible to strangers for a considerable time past. The intelligence is of a more recent date than that which communicated the rumor of his illness, which was, therefore, probably unfounded.

Sea Monster.—Letters from Marseilles state, that a sea monster, of enormous dimensions, has been seen on the coast of Calabria. Some fishermen perceiving a hole in the sea, and thinking it was a rocking vessel which was in need of assistance, approached the monster, whose motion caused a phosphoric light, which was what they had mistaken for fire. They soon perceived a thick smoke, heard a hollow bellowing sound, and the agitation of the waves was such, that the boats were obliged to return precipitately to shore. According to this account the monster raised itself to a prodigious height, and then plunged itself into the waves, so that, though the night was very calm, they were covered with the spray.

Completion of the greatest Pedestrian Performance ever recorded.

The 600 miles in ten days was completed on Wednesday night, at eleven o'clock, by Mr. Howard, at Knaresford, who walked over a two mile piece of ground. This match is beyond the compass of the powers of any horse, and nothing like it has ever before been recorded of man. The pedestrian finished his work well on the first six days, and he had done 300 miles, 30 more than his ground. On Sunday, he began to flag, with swollen legs, but he did 56 miles. He was 18 hours in doing 57 miles, on Monday; bathing had, in some measure relieved. On Tuesday he was 19 hours performing 52 miles, and he was not expected to be able to go on the last day, from excessive fatigue. He had 45 miles to win the match; he started at two in the morning, proceeded, at first, under three miles an hour. At 4 P. M. he went to bed, having done 81 miles. He had then 14 miles to go in 8 hours. He rose again at seven, and won the match soon after 11, distressed in a manner not easily described. It was for 200 guineas.

Crew of the Indian.—It is with considerable satisfaction we inform the public, that by letters received in town by a respectable merchantile house, it is stated that eleven persons out of the crew and passengers have arrived in Ireland. They were long days at sea, in an open boat, and when nearly exhausted, were fortunately picked up.—We have not as yet heard the names of the persons saved; but it must afford some consolation, that even so many fellow-creatures have been rescued from a watery grave.

Whatever might have been the intention of the Princess of Wales respecting her return to England, [illegible] to the lamented death of the Princess Charlotte, if is now certain, that her Royal Highness has given over all thoughts of again visiting the British shore.

Hampden's Sword.—Among the interesting objects of curiosity in Carlton-house, in the armoury, which contains a magnificent collection of ancient arms, disposed with much taste, is the identical sword of the celebrated patriot John Hampden, in the highest preservation; the hilt and scabbard are ornamented with small bronze figures in relief, representing the history of David and Goliah, and from the admirable spirit and skill displayed in their execution, they are supposed by the most intelligent connoisseurs to be the work of the celebrated Italian artist, Cellini, who flourished in the time of Hampden.

A slight shock of an earthquake was experienced, a few days since, at Conisby, in Lincolnshire, which lasted some seconds. A noise, like the subterraneous firing of cannon, was heard at the time, and the windows of the houses in the town were much shaken.

HAMPSHIRE.—Every arrangement for a transfer of the country seat and domains of Earl Rivers, at Stratfield-Saye, near Hartford-bridge, to the Duke of Wellington has been lately completed. Two arbitrators have agreed upon the purchase money to be 263,000l. The timber on the estate is valued at 150,000l. Lord Rivers has begun to move out, & will shortly surrender possession. The present mansion is to be pulled down immediately, and the out lines of a new pile is at present in contemplation.

DEATH OF WELLINGTON.—We state with much concern, that the aunt of Duchess of Wellington has been seriously indisposed for many days, arising from a dreadful accident, no less than the breaking one of the tendons Achillis. This lamentable occurrence arose in a singular way. The following are the facts: Her Grace was reading a letter from her illustrious husband, in which he said, "in less than forty hours after the receipt of this I shall be in London." The Duchess had proceeded thus far, when in burst the Duke.—In the hurried anxiety to receive his welcome embrace, she flew to his arms, but unfortunately one of her feet coming in contact with a table or chair, she fell, and met with the accident above related. A series of hysterics followed, and her Grace did not recover till she was carried to bed. The fits arose from extreme dejection, the result of ill health for a long time past.—The report the following day was, that the Duchess was rather better, but still confined to her bed.

Extraordinary Circumstance.—On the 17th of last month, a lady of independent fortune, named Johnson, was residing in Bay-street, Clerkenwell, died. The customary ceremonies of laying out and placing the corpse in a coffin were performed; but in consequence of no visible change having taken place in the appearance of the body, the friends were induced to defer the performance of the last offices for a longer period than usual, and the funeral was postponed from time to time, until a month had actually elapsed, without the slightest alteration or appearance of decay being manifested in the person of the deceased. An opinion became prevalent among many of her friends that she was entranced, and on Wednesday last several medical gentlemen were called in to take a view of the body. One of them applied a lancet to a vein, and to the astonishment of every person present, the blood flowed profusely through the orifice; there was, however, no appearance of returning life, and the professional gentlemen having unequivocally given their opinion that the existence had terminated, she was interred on Thursday last in the burial ground at Clerkenwell. Mrs. Johnson was about sixty years of age.

Melancholy Suicide.—On Friday it was made known that Sir Richard Croft, the celebrated accoucheur, had died suddenly. He had been called in to attend the accouchement of Mrs. Thackeray, the wife of the Revd. Dr. Thackeray. On Thursday morning her situation became so critical, that Sir Richard wished to have further medical advice and assistance. Another gentleman having been called in, it was their joint opinion that the result would prove fatal. This desperate aspect of the case was observed to have thrown Sir Richard into great agitation.

An apartment in the floor above that occupied by Mrs. Thackeray was appointed for the residence of Sir Richard. In this chamber there were two pistols belonging to Dr. Thackeray, hanging within the reach of Dr. Croft. Sir Richard retired to bed about half-past 12 o'clock on Thursday morning; about one o'clock Dr. Thackeray heard a noise, apparently proceeding from the room occupied by Dr. Croft, and sent a female servant to ascertain the cause; she returned, saying she found the Doctor in bed, and conceived him to be asleep. A short time after a similar noise was heard, and the servant was again sent. She rapped at the door, but received no answer. This circumstance created alarm, in consequence of which the door of his apartment was broken open. Here a shocking spectacle presented itself. The body of Sir Richard Croft was lying on the bed shockingly mangled: his arms headed over his breast, and a pistol in each hand. One of the pistols had been loaded with slugs, the other with ball. Both were discharged, and the head of the unfortunate gentleman was literally blown to pieces.

Doctors Latham and Baillie, and Mr. Finch, proved that the deceased had, since the death of the Princess Charlotte, laboured under mental distress.—He had been repeatedly heard to say, that "this lamentable circumstance weighed heavy upon his mind, and he should never get over it."

Mr. Finch said he was well aware that the deceased was labouring under a derangement of intellect for a considerable time past, and he should not have reposed trust in him on any occasion since the lamented catastrophe alluded to.

The Jury, which was summoned at eight o'clock, having heard the whole of the evidence adduced, retired about ten, after the coroner (Mr. Stirling) had summed up the evidence with suitable comments. About eleven o'clock the Jury returned the following verdict—"The deceased destroyed himself while in a fit of temporary derangement."

Mrs. Thackeray, we are happy to state, was safely delivered about eight o'clock on Friday morning by Mr. Herbert, an occasional assistant of Sir Richard Croft. The lady was kept ignorant of the fatal event, and is in a fair way of doing well.

LONDON, March 1.

Paris Papers to the 24th arrived yesterday. On the former day a conference was held at the hotel of the English ambassador, at which the Duke of Wellington, the Ambassadors of Russia, Prussia, Spain, Naples, and several other ministers of foreign powers were present. The object of the meeting is not mentioned. An article from Berlin states positively, that the Prussian court will not conclude the loan that was about to be negotiated for it in London, on the conditions proposed by Messrs. Rothschild and Co. The prospectus published in London, not long since by those gentlemen, is declared to have been altogether without the authority of the Cabinet of Berlin.

The London Globe of February 19, says a Hamburgh Mail to February 14, has just arrived, bringing intelligence of the death of the King of Sweden, Charles the 13th. He died on the 5th of February at Stockholm.

"The death of the King of Sweden is an event of more interest to party feeling than to political power. Bernadotte will succeed to the throne, and Sweden will remain precisely as she was. He indeed may fear to meet an ungracious countenance on all sides.—He may apprehend that the enemies of law, now nicknamed Legitimacy, may scowl upon his greatness, as a Child of the Revolution; but if he has been a Child at least he has not been a Champion of Jacobinism. A soldier of fortune, the French Revolution threw him upon his present eminence, which his superior mind and gracious services to both Danes and Swedes secured to him. He dethroned no Prince by fraud, he trampled down no dynasty by revolutionary ruffian hoofs, he pillaged no country, he insulted no people. The reigning King of Sweden, conscious of unmerited unpopularity, in disgust, abdicated the throne, and was legitimately succeeded by his Uncle, a favourite of the people. To prop this change against the power of Bonaparte, under which almost all the thrones of Europe were then tottering, Bernadotte was called in by the popular party, and appointed next in succession as Crown Prince. He was not indebted to Bonaparte or to France for promotion, but to his humanity and wisdom with which he exercised in the north his authority as a French Viceroy. Revolutionary principles were as well satisfied by this proceeding as the more strict principles of legitimacy. He was a child of the French Revolution, and he was the choice of the people of Sweden not suddenly elevated to the throne, but to ascend it in due succession, after further services should have confirmed the gratitude which the past had created. Thus his accession must be as popular as it is just and irreproachable."—Courier.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 20.

Projected Voyage to the North Pole.—The four ships now fitting out at Deptford, for a voyage to the North Pole, for the discovery of a north-west passage, are actively preparing for their destinations. From the superior nautical knowledge, tried gallantry, and undaunted resolution of the officers so judiciously selected for this dangerous service, the greatest hopes are entertained of its success. It appears from the most informed Greenland Captains, that great quantities of ice have broken away from the north-east coast of Greenland; and one ship made her way last year to 83 1-2 degrees.—It is doubtless if the northern parts of Baffin's Bay have ever been visited—Baffin gives names to several inlets situated there; but in his original manuscript journals and charts, now in possession of the Lords of the Admiralty, no mention or notice is taken of his ever having passed the straits. In fact, all beyond 76 degrees on the Greenland coast is still unknown. It is supposed that the ice breaks away from the pole during the summer, and is driven by winds and currents to the south, till it grounds, and then forms the barrier which Capt. de Phipps mentions in his voyage. That it melts about is certain. The Sun's rays, during the summer solstice, being incessantly on the pole, must naturally create great warmth; indeed, greater than a few degrees to the south, where the atmosphere is rarefied during the night. The conjecture, that the pole is clear from the ice during the summer, is founded on that hypothesis. Sir Joseph Banks has given every assistance in his power to the success of this national undertaking.

The ships for the northern regions are nearly completed. The bed places in the cabins, &c. are so constructed as to be removed, and every requisite for the construction of barracks, &c. to be conveyed in the ships, should it be necessary for the officers and crew to remain on those inhospitable shores. An astronomer also proceeds with them, with proper mathematical instruments, a dipping needle, &c. Provisions for two years consumption, and an unlimited quantity of coals are also embarked.

The health of Prince Leopold is said to be on the rise.

Mortier and Sochet are spoken of as about to be created Peers of France.

LONDON, Feb. 19

The Journal of the last 48 hours contains the following singular narrative:—

"Some days ago a curate in the suburbs of London received a letter to call the latter with a sick person. Having dismissed them, he returned to his own habitation late at night. In passing near a house, he perceived a light and the door open. He entered, and what was his surprise, at seeing a bloody corpse stretched near the entrance. He recognized it to be the body of the master of the house. A little further he observed that of his unfortunate wife, killed in the same manner. At length by the assistance of a light he discovered in the chimney, deep steps, which appeared to be in motion by the effect of convulsive movements. It was the eldest servant suspended by the neck. In the last agonies of death. He hastened to cut the cord, and with much difficulty restored her to the use of her senses. He interrogated the girl respecting the circumstances of this horrid deed; she replied, that some time to give any explanation; at last she told the curate that the principal author of these assassinations was his own nephew: she gave such an account of him that the curate could not suppress over her description, and also described the ruffian that accompanied him. Furnished with this information, the curate pursued his way to his own residence: but resolved to cause his nephew, with the murderers to be arrested. Before he reached home, he applied to the police, and returned to him what he had seen and heard; and requested him to assist him. The mayor having arranged the plan with the curate, the latter returned home. He found his nephew, who appeared watching for his return. "I have had a painful visit," said he to him, "and I want some refreshment, go down into the cellar, and bring me a bottle of wine, that we may partake of it." The nephew hesitated, and endeavoured to persuade his uncle that he would do better to go to bed. But the latter insisting to go himself, the nephew took the lights, accompanied with the curate, and told him he was going to do what he desired. He descended, but scarcely had he entered, when the curate closed the door upon him. The nephew thought at first, that it was only a trick, but soon after the mayor arrived with an escort, and the cellar door was opened. They found there the nephew with fifteen brigands, companions of his crimes—They recognised them to be the individuals that the servant had described. They were disarmed, bound and consigned to the neighbouring prison.

Two more of the Royal Family, it is confidently announced, will be married in the spring. The Duke of Clarence is to marry a Princess of Denmark, and the Princess Elizabeth is to be married to prince Frederick Joseph Louis, of Hesse Homburg, who is now on a visit to England.

The London Gazette of the 24 of Feb. contains a proclamation, offering £300, as a reward to any person who shall bring to conviction any offender or offenders having maliciously set fire to, or been accessory to setting fire to any house in St. John's, Newfoundland; and the further reward of £100, to any person who shall convict any unlawful association for the purpose of burning the said town.

An Act to regulate the Costs in certain Cases in the Court of King's Bench.

[Passed 1st April, 1818.]

Whereas the District Courts, established in the several Districts of this Province, were intended as well to relieve Defendants from the charge of Answering in the Superior Court, as to facilitate the Suitor; and whereas suits of the proper competence of the said District Courts, are frequently brought into the Court of King's Bench, having concurrent jurisdiction, to the great increase of Costs and Charges to the Parties: For remedy whereof, be it therefore Enacted by the King's Most Excellent Majesty, by, with the advice & consent of the Legislative Council and Assembly of the Province of Upper Canada, constituted and assembled by virtue of and under the authority of an Act passed in the Parliament of Great Britain, entitled, "An Act to repeal certain parts of an Act passed in the Fourteenth Year of His Majesty's Reign, entitled, "An Act for making more effectual provision for the government of the Province of Quebec in North America, and to make further provision for the Government of the said Province," and by the authority of the same, that in any Suit hereafter to be brought in the Court of King's Bench, which Suit can be of the proper competence of the District Court, no more Costs shall be taxed against the Defendant than would have been incurred in the District Court, in the same Action, unless the Judge, who tried the Cause of such Suit or Action, shall certify in open Court at the Trial, that it was fit Cause to be so brought from the District Court, and recommended in the Court of King's Bench.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the Defendant's Costs taxed between Client and Attorney on such Suit so certified, or to much thereof as shall not exceed the Costs taxable in the District Court in such case shall be set off, against the Plaintiff's costs, taxed to be recovered from Defendant.

ST. JOHNS, (N. F.) March 3.

Death of Vice Admiral Pickmore.—We have the melancholy task in this week's paper to announce to the public the death of our worthy Governor Vice-Admiral Pickmore. His Excellency, by the King's commission, will be succeeded in his office by Captain John Boker, the senior naval officer upon this station.

March 13.

On Tuesday evening last, the remains of our late Governor were taken from the vault in the church, and conveyed on board His Majesty's Sloop Fly, which ship will, as soon as she can possibly be extricated from the ice; this has been found an arduous task for several hundred men employed every day (when the weather would permit) since the 25th ult.; the ice is from three to five feet thick, and the distance to the channel about one mile; the severity of the frost this season, exceeds that of any winter known to the oldest inhabitants.

BALTIMORE, April 12.

Captain Laddle, of the schooner Tiger, in 23 days from La Guyra, informs that two days before he sailed, a party of the revolted of the Province of Carracas—the Royalists regrouped it a complete rout, relating to have made 500 prisoners, who were all put to the sword; and taken 800 muskets with the principal part of the baggage—and Bolivar's private stores got among the rest. Three hundred Spaniards attached to the Patriotic army, were found the next morning in the mountains. The particulars had just arrived, but published, but Captain Laddle could not obtain a copy, as he could not leave that any officers of distinction were among the prisoners. It was stated that Piar had got a head been effected by Morillo, by abandoning Calabozo, that drew the Patriots into ambush between the mountains. Morillo and Piar wounded in some of the actions preceding the last.

KINGSTON, March 6.

Official accounts received at Carthagena from La Vera Cruz, state that insurgents had been completely routed, their last strong hold, the Fort of St. George, having been captured by the Royalists, and the whole of the garrison made prisoners. In consequence of which, the communication with Mexico was entirely open, and great quantities of bullion had arrived from that city, which was intended to be shipped on board the Frigate on her arrival at La Vera Cruz.

BALTIMORE, March 31.

About three o'clock this morning one of the watchmen discovered that the office of Mr. J. I. Cohen, jun. in Market Street, was on fire. He immediately gave the alarm, and aid being promptly afforded, it was extinguished without causing much injury.

The origin of the fire was evidently in the ceiling, immediately above where a lamp is fixed, which is at a proper height for convenience; but the ceiling being only seven feet high, the heat of the lamp flame bearing nightly, for a length of time, on the same spot, had charred the laths and joist through the plaster; and, although the lamp had been extinguished as usual before nine o'clock last night, it appears that the heat had ignited the charred wood, which was not discovered until the flame had burst forth through the ceiling, as above stated.

The above occurrence, which would have caused serious injury, if the fire had not been providentially so early discovered, it is hoped will operate as a caution to all persons whose lamps are similarly situated. A sheet of tin, placed over the flame at a small distance from the ceiling, would prevent the occurrence of a similar injury.

A Spanish Government brig, captured by the Buenos Ayrian Privateer Union, is fitting out as a privateer in the bay.

Considerable excitement prevailed in New Orleans, in consequence of the treatment experienced by some Spaniards of Spain and Gaspesa peasants who had just arrived in three Dutch Ships, and who had been said to raise money due for passage. We shall give our next some extract from the gazettes on this subject.

MISSOURI SALINES.

Very interesting Account of them.

The Grand Saline is situated about 280 miles south-west of Fort Osage, between the forks of a small branch of the Arkansas, one of which washes its southern extremity; and the other, the principal one, runs nearly parallel with and within a mile of its opposite side. It is a hard level plain, of reddish coloured land, of an irregular or mixed figure—its greatest length is from north-west to south-east, and its circumference full thirty miles. This plain is entirely covered, in dry hot weather, from two to six inches deep, with a crust of clear white salt, of a quality rather superior, I think, to the imported brown salt. In this state the saline bears a striking resemblance to a field of brilliant white snow with a frozen crust on it after rain.

The grand saline is environed with ridges of sand hills; some thinly clothed with verdure and small trees; and others afford on their declivities thickets of dwarf plumb trees, not more than 30 inches high, which yielded us (June 23) a great abundance of ripe plumbs, the largest and finest I ever tasted. I think the salt may be easily waggoned from this place to the Arkansas, where keeled boats may receive it at certain seasons. The road is through an open prairie all the way, and the distance not more than 80 or 90 miles.

The rock saline lies about 75 miles north-west of the grand saline, surrounded by naked mountains of red clay and gypsum. It is a level flat of hard red land of about 500 acres, through which passes a small stream dividing it into two unequal parts, one-fifth or about 100 acres, being on the south-west side, close under a tremendous hill, from the base of which issue several springs of salt water, which gradually cover the plain and by the action of the sun, is, in dry or hot seasons, converted into a solid mass of salt several inches in thickness. There are also within this plain four springs of salt water perfectly saturated, around which are formed hollow cones of rock salt, from 12 to 20 inches in thickness.—When I visited this saline it had just been inundated by excessive rains, and all the salt was swept off, except that around the four springs; I found an immense quantity there, and actually blocked out with my tomahawk a very clear piece full 16 inches thick. From what I saw myself, and what my faithful Indian guides told me on the spot, and had often told me before, I have not the least doubt but there are times when this whole section, next the hills, is covered completely with a solid rock of salt from 4 to 12 inches thick. The other section produces salt exactly like that of the grand saline. The country around the rock saline is very mountainous, and the saline can be approached only on foot, or (with some difficulty) on horse-back.

You have a specimen of the salt which I got at this saline from one of the springs; therefore I need not describe it.

G. SIBLY.

From the National Intelligencer.

The bill "concerning navigation," which passed the Senate with but two dissenting voices, has passed the House of Representatives with an almost equal unanimity; sixteen votes only appearing in the negative. If the bill receive the sanction of the President, therefore, of which there is little doubt, it will become a law, and by a stronger vote, probably, than any of a like character has ever received in Congress. This is the most important act, so far, of the present session; particularly with reference to the commercial convention with Great Britain, which expires in the course of next year by its own limitation. The necessity for the act has been so apparent, as to overcome the reluctance to pass it, which, at the last session, caused its postponement; and the vote it has received, may be regarded as a pledge of rigid adherence by Congress to the policy it discloses.

The Indian War.—The following extract of a letter, dated at Fort Hawkins, the 18th of March, is copied from the Savannah Republican of the 3d inst.

"The Upper Creeks have joined the army at Fort Scott with Two Thousand Warriors, all anxious to take the field against their turbulent neighbours, they are under the command of M'Intosh & Lovett, two of their most distinguished chiefs.

"The army will consist of from four to five thousand men, and if this forces can be brought to action, we shall have no more complaints from that quarter of our country."

Singular Preservation.—Under this head, we find, in the Albany Argus of yesterday, the following extraordinary fact:—"On Friday last, two lads, one a son of Mr. P. Van Loon, and the other a son of Mr. J. Heermance, about eight or ten years old, fell into the river, which was very high and muddy, at the upper end of the steam boat wharf. The latter was extracted from the water without much delay, but the former, although two or three boats put off for his relief, was not discovered for some time, and it was believed that he had gone to the bottom, until the oars in one of the boats went to take up his hat, which was seen floating near the ferry, when behold, the boy was found suspended from it, though in no apparently visible state. The buoyancy of the hat—and of the air in its crown, had kept the body from sinking to the bottom. By the judicious management pursued under the direction of Doctor Shaw, we are happy to add, and which was persevered in for nearly two hours, a resuscitation of life was happily effected."

The Editor is indebted to the friendly attention of a respectable gentleman of this city for the following interesting extracts, which are from a source on which full reliance may be placed.

La Guayra, Feb. 20, 1818.

I write a few lines under the most awful feelings and apprehensions.—Morillo is destroyed, proved a coward or a traitor. The Province is lost!—The Patriots fast advancing on Caracas, and no men to defend it. The greatest scene of distress and confusion imaginable prevails, all order lost, and thousands of people crowding on the shore and wharf to embark with whatever of most value they can take with them. Yesterday the scene of confusion commenced, and continues at this time with increased alarm—the wharf and shore covered with goods of all descriptions, and no possibility of getting them off. An embargo has been on for a week past, and no vessel permitted to sail. At this moment nothing can be done, every one is saving their own lives, and any thing else they can. There are several foreigners here, none of whom will remain, and they all have more or less property that will be lost, as it is the opinion of all that no property found will be respected, and they do not consider even their lives safe.—To add to the dismay, last night a severe shock of an earthquake was felt. The heart sickens with the scene of distress in every shape. A very high sea renders it dangerous for a small boat to pass, and the King's officers have all canoes engaged embarking stores and people.

4 o'clock, p. m.—The distress increases; all alarm and confusion—thousands of men, women and children on the wharf and beach, endeavouring to get off—the sea immensely high, and many boats overset and lost in the surf, and women and children immersed in the waves.

Nothing positive is known where Morillo is, or how near the patriots are; but the cry is in all mouths, "they are coming!" Caracas is nearly deserted, as this place will soon be. No goods, except some of the most valuable, can be embarked, and they much injured. The earthquake last night has had a visible effect on the sea; it is very high. I trust time will be allowed to get off most of the miserable inhabitants, by whom the shore is lined—say with thousands.

Two Americans, one Englishman and myself, (who all have property here,) and find it impossible to embark it, I have concluded on remaining and waiting the issue. The greatest danger is apprehended from the blacks, who, so soon as the town will have been deserted, it is feared, will commence a general and indiscriminate robbery and plunder and perhaps worse.

We shall occupy one house, and raise the American flag as some protection. I have but little hopes of saving any property.

5 o'clock, p. m.—The embarkation continues with increased terror and confusion; 200 to 300 dollars are offered for a boat for one trip with passengers, and the government have just stove and thrown into the sea, a quantity of powder that they were unable to embark. At present there are four of the fleet in the harbor, and a large number of merchant vessels, happily for the people who are crowding their decks.

Half past six o'clock, p. m.—Glorious news for the Spaniards. An express has just arrived, by which we have news of a terrible action having fought, in which Morillo was victorious. The news has converted the scene of distress to joy, and a salute is now firing; all are overjoyed; particulars not yet known; to-morrow we will have them, and I will advise. Suffice it to say, it is such as to completely restore tranquility.

La Guayra, Feb. 26, 1818.

Referring to my several letters herewith, I have to advise that the embargo probably will be raised to-morrow, (which has been on 16 days.) This accounts for all my letters coming by one opportunity.

The sudden and great alarm we have been under has, in some measure subsided, and enables me to advise as far as that we are permitted to know, the result of the late actions.

General Morillo with the principal part of his army, was posted in Calabozo, about forty-five leagues from Caracas.

The patriot chiefs, Bolivar and Pias, formed a junction near St. Fernando, beyond Calabozo, and marched to attack Morillo, who abandoned Calabozo, with a view of falling back on and protecting Caracas. In his retreat he was attacked by the patriots, and in two days and nights, a different actions ensued. Morillo always on the defensive, and falling back. In the last engagement, the Spaniards claim a decisive victory, having destroyed the greater part of their opponents—but no details are yet made known; the loss on both sides no doubt severe. Since the action Morillo has occupied Villade Cura, this side of Calabozo; and the Patriots are said to have occupied the latter. After which no accounts were had from the contending armies for four days, and until the courier announced, as above stated, the decided victory obtained by the royalists.

CHARLESTON, April 8.

Lord Cochrane.—Contrary to what has been frequently reported, and by many believed, that this nobleman had sailed to join the Independents in South America, it will be seen by an article from the the London Courier, of the 3d of Feb. that he was in London at that date.

Junius.—The Edinburgh Review proves beyond a doubt, that Sir Philip Francis, a living nobleman of Great Britain, is the author of the celebrated letters of Junius. The number (37) of the Review containing this proof, is certainly among the most interesting in the series, and the very neat and accurate manner in which it is presented to the public, does honor to the enterprising Editors of it on this side the Atlantic.—*N. FAYETTEVILLE, (Virg.) March 26.

High Waters.—The Cape Fear River commenced rising on Saturday last and continued to rise till the Monday evening following—its perpendicular height was about 35 feet.—There has not been a period within the memory of the oldest inhabitants now living, of such repeated freshets, in any one season, as has occurred during the last.

REPUBLIC OF HAYTI.

President Petion has recently got into a difficulty with the Government of Buenos Ayres for having confiscated certain property, captured on the high seas, and sent into Port-au-Prince, as a neutral port, by Commodore Taylor, of the Buenos Ayres squadron. Thereupon, Mondave has begun to make reprisals, and has sent Petion a letter, informing him that he shall detain all Haytian vessels he may meet with; if satisfaction be made by Petion, they shall be restored: if not, they will be considered good and lawful prizes.

The navy of Petion consists of the frigate General Brown, carrying 30 guns and 300 men; the Wilberforce, of twenty-two guns; the Fire Fly of eighteen guns, and the Conqueror of sixteen guns, all lying in harbour. The government of Petion is well liked by the people; his laws are considered just; he patronizes education, and the country is supplied with schools. Foreign missionaries, also, are received and treated with urbanity.

The court of Christophe is modelled after the late Court of Bonaparte, and is constituted in much the same manner. The laws of the land are very direct and rigid, and executed with great impartiality and promptitude. The commercial code and regulations, though precise, are determined upon, and are strictly observed. The police of the kingdom is uncommonly rigorous and efficient. No subject, not even a noble-man, is permitted to be absent from his dwelling after ten o'clock at night; and if he dare neglect this decree, it is only in the company of a stranger who must be required to observe it. It is considered a high offence for any of the nobility, male or female, to be absent from the palace. Some days ago, a letter was given by his Majesty's orders, and the person so offending is punished by being put into a strong fortress, both with and without military guard. The princes royal are all provided with private tutors, and are said to be docile and ingenious.—Parties however, are said to be forming, headed by the Princes of the blood, and the prospect is that the succession to the throne will produce contention.

From Lower Canada.

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT OF LOWER CANADA.

HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY,

Thursday, 26th March.

Mr. Cuvillier stated, that he rose to move in a measure which had already been found of sufficient moment to engage the most earnest attention of the House, and which, as far as he has been able to judge, had been considered by the public at large, as a matter of the greatest importance, to the upright administration of Justice. He meant the enquiry concerning the Court of Vice Admiralty in this Province, in the course of the enquiry, he had been reproached, by an honorable member, with having instituted the present enquiry, in the absence of the Gentleman who presided in the Court of Vice Admiralty, but he availed himself of the present occasion, to remind Members, that he had given notice in the last session, of his intention to institute the present enquiry, which, he trusted, had been fairly and temperately conducted. He, therefore, could not be accused of having acted with precipitancy, after having given a year's notice, and, he had reason to believe, that the Gentleman in question, must have been apprised of his intention. It was from the same liberal principles by which he then acted, that he was now induced to give a similar notice of his determination upon the result of the enquiry which had taken place before a committee of the whole house. He did not wish to act precipitately, nor to take an advantage of an absentee. He only desired, and he ardently desired, to correct those abuses, which appeared to have been intolerable. The whole of the testimony upon which he intended to rely, was now in print, and Members would have time coolly to reflect upon the subject between this and the ensuing Session. Mr Cuvillier then proposed to resolve, "that the advanced period of the present Session of the Provincial Parliament, does not permit the House to take into consideration the report of the General Committee to which it was referred to enquire into the state of the administration of justice in the Court of Vice Admiralty, and that the consideration of the same be resumed in the ensuing Session."

It was accordingly unanimously resolved as above.

Mr. Cuvillier then gave notice, that in the course of the ensuing Session, he would propose certain Resolutions, which he read in his place, and are in substance.

"1. That the Judge of the Vice Admiralty was also a Judge in the King's Bench.

2. That the union of these offices in the same person was dangerous, incompatible and unconstitutional.

4. That to exact fees for a Judge was derogatory to the dignity of the Crown, illegal and contrary to the spirit of the Constitution of the Province.

5. That much public discontent existed by reason of the exaction of those fees.

6. That the Surrogation of other persons, being Advocates and Attornies, to act as Judges in the absence of the Judge of the Vice Admiralty was wrong and illegal.

7. That an Address be presented to the Governor in Chief, praying him to adopt measures in order that the two important offices of Judge of the King's Bench and Judge in the Vice Admiralty in this Province, be no longer vested in the same person.

8. That a denial of Justice to Mr. John Goudie of Quebec, had been incurred by the Court of Vice Admiralty in this Province.

That the Commons do impeach for the same."

Mr. Cuvillier then gave notice that he will, in the ensuing Session, move to institute an enquiry in the conduct of the Officers of the Customs, as relates to the Charge of Commission on the Duties raised in virtue of Acts of the Provincial Parliament, and also on the Act of the 12th Geo. III. chap. 38.

Mr. Taschereau moved, seconded by Mr. Bellet, that an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor in Chief, representing to his Excellency, that the House having taken into consideration His Excellency's recommendation on the subject of the Expences of the Civil Government of this Province for the year 1818, have voted a sum not exceeding Forty Thousand Two Hundred and Sixty-three Pounds, Eight Shillings and nine pence Currency, towards defraying the Expences of the Civil Government of this Province for the year 1818, exclusive of the sums already appropriated by Law. But that in peculiar circumstances which have prevented the House from receiving at an early moment the estimate of the Civil List Revenue and Public Accounts, and the advanced state of the Session not admitting the passing of a Bill of Appropriation for the purpose, they pray His Excellency will be pleased to order that the sum not exceeding forty thousand two hundred and sixty-three pounds eight shillings and nine pence currency, be taken out of any of the unappropriated monies, which now are, or hereafter may be, in the hands of the Receiver General of this Province, for the purposes aforesaid; and assuring His Excellency, that this House will make good the sums at the next Session of the Provincial Parliament.

After some debate, it was resolved accordingly.

Yeas	16
Nays	2

31st March, 1818.

Mr. Taschereau rose to give notice, that he would early in the ensuing Session, propose an enquiry into the manner in which the Act of the Provincial Parliament of the 26th Geo. III. chap. 10, entitled, "An Act for regulating Persons who hire or engage to perform voyages to the Indian Country or to winter there." is executed, and what were the results of the said Act. As an impartial Representative of the People of Lower Canada, he thought himself bound to institute an enquiry upon a subject which deeply concerned the individuals who were employed in the trade of the Indian Territories under this Act. The result of the enquiry he proposed, would, he apprehended, tend to prove that there was no reciprocity of interests or obligations between the masters and the servants. That the whole advantage lay with the former, while the latter were not only frequently wronged, but were entirely unprotected against the tyranny exercised against them under colour of the Act alluded to. He proposed in fact to investigate the system upon which the trade in the North West Country was carried on certain Fur traders, to the detriment and ruin of the unfortunate people employed in their service, whose demoralizing effects were so strongly felt in this Province.

The Act above mentioned enabled the persons to whom he alluded to monopolize the trade to the Indian territories, to the utter exclusion of all others His Majesty's Canadian Subjects. He believed the result of the proposed enquiry would lead to a conviction of the necessity of the repeal or modification of that Act, and of a strong representation to His Majesty's Ministers on the subject of the trade in question, to induce them to adopt immediate and effectual measures to prevent the evils arising from the state of affairs in the Indian Countries.

RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

A GENTLEMAN of this Country, who for some years past, has been anxiously endeavouring to compleat a set of the OLD ANNUAL REGISTER, first published by Dodsley, which is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable works ever given to the world, and a compleat Library in itself; being still in want of a few Volumes, commissioned a friend to procure them in England last fall: owing to some mistake, the London Bookseller to whom the order was sent, after much needless labour and cost, for the entire work is now rare and very difficult to be procured, got together a whole set, uniformly and very elegantly bound, and sent them out to this country. The consequence is, that the duplicates must either be returned or disposed of, but rather than return them immediately, the present holder wishes to offer them at prime cost to the public, and any Gentlemen desirous of forming a Library, will find this an opportunity that very seldom occurs.—The entire set consists of 57 Volumes, which cost in England £57 7s. Sterling. The broken set wanting only 6 or 7 Volumes, which may be readily procured, cost £45. The Purchaser may have his choice. The work is still, and will be annually continued. Apply to the EDITOR.

VALUABLE LANDS
For Sale.

THE following singularly desirable, and truly valuable Lands may be had, and immediate possession given, with undeniable titles, at rates far below their real value; and it is but seldom, even in a country so extensive as Canada, where uncultivated Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, in good neighbourhoods, can be secured.

Lot 1. Comprising 70 Acres of the very richest Beech, Maple, Elm and Oak Land, in the 4th Concession of Hore, lying upon Smith's Creek, with 15 acres cleared and fenced, new log-house, well built and dove-tailed, fruit trees, &c. with a mill-seat, between 4 and 5 miles from the flourishing little Town of Toronto, on Lake Ontario, where there is an excellent market either for buying or selling. The Land is of the very first quality, and in a good populous neighbourhood, forming altogether a most desirable residence, within a short mile of the great road between York and Kingston.

2d. 200 Acres, being Lot No. 1, in the 5th Concession of Hore, alongside the great road between Hope and Hamilton, leading to the new and flourishing settlements of Cavan & Monaghan, on the Rice Lake, in which more than 500 families and persons have actually located, and scarcely five miles from the Town of Toronto, where there is a good market; it is in an old settlement, and the neighbourhood is populous and excellent. There are about 80 acres cleared and fenced, with a fine stream of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

3d. 190 Acres, occupying nearly one entire side of the Gannanoque Lake, in the Township of South Crosby, District of Johnstown, consisting wholly of broken fronts, the back parts extending to the road from the Rideau Settlement to Kingston, from which latter place it is scarcely 30 miles distant. The Land is good and well timbered, and the situation singularly beautiful and romantic, with wooded islands a front.

The above Lands are particularly deserving of notice. The situations were chosen by a competent judge, and they will be sold remarkably cheap, the proprietor wishing to concentrate his forces in another quarter.

London, March 7.

THE HURRICANE.

On Wednesday night, the 4th inst.

Not only the several sheds of houses, but houses, which had been slightly built in the vicinity of the metropolis, were levelled to the ground particularly in the West End.—Three in St. James Park were blown down; houses were uncovered during the storm, and chimney pots were falling in almost every direction. Considerable damage has been done to the shipping in the river. Upwards of one hundred vessels did not arrive till ten hours beyond their time, and many of the heavy coaches were four hours later than usual. Two of two cwt. each, were blown from the roof of Surgeon's Hall, Lincoln's-inn-fields.—During the prevalence of the storm the wall of the old building on the eastern side of the avenue to the Waterloo-bridge came down with a terrible crash.

At half past ten o'clock, Mr. Kinnard, the magistrate, was sitting in his back parlour, in Holborn, with Mrs. Kinnard and his two daughters, a stock of chimnies fell in upon them — They had just a moment's time, and no more, to apply for assistance. The parlour in which Mr. Kinnard and his family were seated was broken into shivers, as well as the top of the table on which he was leaning. The assistant also, who was sitting in the counting-house, narrowly escaped with his life. We are happy to find that none of the family are seriously injured. What makes the above case very remarkable, is this, that Mr. Kinnard had not instantly quitted his chair when he heard the noise, he must, in all probability, and Mrs. Kinnard and the children, had quitted his, he would have infallibly been killed. So at least it is said.

Between half past ten and eleven o'clock, the following occurrence took place at the house of Lady Hayes, Somerset-street.—The servants had just sat down to supper, when the door bell rang. The footman rose for the purpose of opening it, but had proceeded only a short distance when the house, which was shaken by a loud crash resembling that of the falling of a house. He instantly ran back, but was unable to proceed further than the end of the passage; for where he then had left a comfortable dwelling, was now one mass of ruins. Three of the female servants could not be found. After some time the body of Mary Mannin, the cook, was taken out, the head dashed to atoms, and the hands dreadfully bruised; she was quite dead. The bodies of the house-maid and laundry-maid were also dug out, most dangerously bruised. One had her thigh broken and was burnt about the shoulder; the other was much worse hurt, but had no limb fractured. The kitchen of Lady Hayes was in the yard, at the back of the dwelling house, and in the rear of this again stood Colonnel-buildings. A wall had been raised to the height of about 60 feet, for the purpose of preventing theft, and blocking the communication between Colonnel-buildings and the houses in Somerset-street. In the course of the evening, the wind shifted and blew along Colonnel-buildings, full against the wall, which at length fell in, and by its weight bore down the roof of the kitchen. Part of the lead fell against the wall, but in that situation, that any person under it, although unable to extricate themselves might respire. This was the situation in which the housemaid and laundress were; but having fallen at the fire place, were exposed to the most horrid torture from the heat. The large beam that supported the kitchen and went under the roof, and found broken to pieces, and as the body of the cook was found near this spot, it is supposed that it must have fallen on her and caused her death.

The arrival of the Taunton mail was delayed on Thursday morning beyond the usual time, in consequence of a stoppage it met with on the road, owing to several trees having been blown down by the severe gale of Wednesday night, which choked up the high road; and the carriage was required to clear them away to procure a passage for the coach, which having been effected, it proceeded to town without further impediment.

On the top of Broadway-hill, Worcestershire, when the mail coach arrived there, the wind and snow were so tremendous, that it became impossible for the coachman to force the horses on, the consequence was they turned completely round the coach was blown over. happily no serious injury was sustained either by coachman, guard or passengers; but it was impossible the coach could proceed, and a messenger was despatched for a chaise and four to convey the mail bags on as soon as possible. The coach was left on the road, without any hopes of getting up until the wind subsided, and the passengers retired to the Fish public-house.

LOUGHBOROUGH.—Extract of a letter from Loughborough, dated Thursday, March 5.—— Last night, this town was visited for many hours by the most tremendous wind that has been experienced for a length of time; it was attended too with lightning, and between one and two o'clock, a sensation was felt very similar to that of an earthquake. It would fill a volume to narrate particularly the injury done to the roofs of houses, out-buildings, walls, hay and corn stacks, &c. The new Primitive Methodist meeting house, building in Deadlane, happened only the day before to have had about a third part of its lately covering put on; this, together with the whole of the other part of the roof which was quite ready for tiling, fell down with a frightful crash, and both the gable ends of the building were likewise levelled with the ground; yet the Almighty, I understand, from good authority, are only estimated at 25*l*. Our parish church has escaped any injury, except some of its windows in a trifling degree, being broken. The general Baptist meeting-house is considerably damaged. Hundreds rose out of their beds, in the dead of the night, from fear. I understand that the neighboring villages have not the less been exempt from its fury. Normanton also has suffered a great deal. Trees, out of number, are torn up by the roots, and buildings, stacks, &c. are partially uncovered in the same manner as with us.

WHIRLWIND.—A curious scene of confusion took place, in St. Paul's church-yard, about noon on Saturday. Many persons were at the time quietly passing and repassing about their respective avocations, when as, if by magic, all was in an instant uproar and confusion. Several persons were at once seen prostrate on the pavement, whilst hats, umbrellas, bonnets, books, &c. were whirling about in the air in all directions, intermingled with an immense quantity of flowers of almost every hue and description, supplied from the stock of a poor artificial florist, who a few seconds before was carrying several boxes of them on his head. The coaches in waiting were all moved several yards from their stations, and a poor boy who was blown down absolutely rolled away before the wind for a considerable distance, like a whisp of straw. One umbrella was carried by the wind nearly to the roof of the cathedral, and literally shivered to atoms as it flew.

HAIL STORM.—The neighborhood of St. Austell, Cornwall, was visited by one of the most violent hail storms ever felt in that country, on Friday night. It came from sea, against the wind, being driven by an upper current of air over Black-moor, taking a N. W. direction, and extending two miles in breadth. Many of the hail stones measured two inches and a half in circumference; they lay on the ground to the depth of six inches; but more lodges and in low places, they were three feet in depth.

London, March 9.

The following are said to be the circumstances under which Bernadotte was elected Prince Royal of Sweden, and his family Crown —Accident had thrown into the hands of Bernadotte, as prisoner of war, the son of one of the first families of Sweden, the young Count Wrangel. His kindness and attention to the unfortunate young man gave that event an importance which placed the Crown of Sweden at the disposal of its Senate, the family of the young man exerted themselves in an extraordinary manner to evince their gratitude—a Party arose at that moment peculiarly favored their design. The Nobles were anxious to place the Crown upon a head that would submit to their aristocratical views; and the Fourth Estate, with more reason, endeavoured to place an individual, whose birth should place him upon the same level with itself. Intrigue directed the choice of both to the same object, and the Diet accordingly proclaimed the election of Bernadotte.

The new Queen of Sweden appears to wish to remain incognito; she lives at Paris under the name of the Countess of Gothland.

Among other Swedish nominations submitted to the Board of Longitude, one, countenanced by the board, and recommended to the Lords of the Admiralty for immediate trial, is likely to facilitate the object intended, it is exploring the polar regions. The chief harvest to gain is, that it works horizontally and vertically, assuming the magnetic meridian by its own action.

The Irish packets from Bristol are, in future, to carry with them the re-excoriated Life-Boats.

London, March 19.

An article from Venice states the outline of the Constitution of the Ionian Isles, as ratified by the Prince Regent. There will be a Legislative Assembly, chosen by the Municipal Body, a Senate chosen by the Legislative Assembly, and the Judges are to be appointed by the Senate. The Elections are to be for five years, the Lord Commissioner to have the power of convoking or proroguing the Parliament, but not of dissolving it, except by virtue of an order of the Government here. Each Island is to be governed by one Senator. The dominant religion to be the Greek church.—The language to be Greek.—There is to be a general printing establishment at Corfu, under the immediate direction of the Senate and the Secretary of State of the Legislative General, and no other printing establishment is to be allowed in any of the Islands without the permission of the Senate, and the approbation of the Lord Commissioner.

London, March 25.

Army of occupation.—A letter from Valenciennes, dated March 13, says—"It is at length decided that the army of occupation will soon quit France for its cantonments. The Saxon contingents, which form part of the right wing, will commence their march to return home in May. The Russian and English corps will remain till September.

"At that time, the English troops will go to Calais to embark, and the Russians to Dunkirk. All the Russian horses are to be ceded to France —Such are the reports at Cambray, from a respectable source.

London, March 26.

Late Paris papers state, that the return of the Hanoverian Contingent of the Army of Occupation of France is decided upon. This corroborates a report prevalent in the country, that the British Contingent will return home in Autumn. The Duke of Wellington is expected in England in a few days. In consequence of the important situation of affairs relative to the removal of the allied troops, it is thought something for his grace to do, some over to advise with this government on the matter.

London, March 27.

The recal of some of the French exiles is said to be decided upon: and amongst others, Marshal Soult will not merely be restored to France, but reinvested with his Marshal's baton.

Saturday se'nnight, during a tremendous thunder storm, the tower of Warleggan Church, Cornwall, was struck by lightning, and split nearly from top to bottom. One part fell upon the church, and destroyed the roof and all the pews except one. The damage is estimated at £600.

From the Liverpool Mercury of March 27.

Recent French papers abound with accounts of earthquakes and other natural phenomena which appear to strike terror into the various nations of the Continent with terror —

Letters from the Tyrol announce that the Glacier of Oder, in the vicinity of Chiavenna, has increased this winter, in an extraordinary manner, notwithstanding the general mildness of the season. From the depths of the ice, incessant and tremendous roarings are heard. The Soldenbach stream, which formerly issued from the Glacier, has been dried up ever since Michaelmas, 1817; and great apprehensions are entertained for the neighbouring countries, should the heats of the summer reopen a passage to the waters, which seem to have collected within the bosom of this immense mass of ice. Similar phenomena have been observed in the glacier of the valley of Naudersberg. The storm of the 23d ult. from the effects of which our shores were exempted, spread its ravages over the greatest part of the Continent. At Turin, it was attended with two shocks of an earthquake. Genoa, Savona, Alessandria, and San Remo, were thrown into the greatest consternation by these shocks, by repeated subterraneous noises, and several houses were partly demolished at Alassio—but happily, no lives were lost. At Antibes, in Provence, the whole day (the 23d February) had been very tempestuous. Such was the violence of the storm in the evening, a most tremendous rush of wind took place, and was followed by an instantaneous calm. A dull subterranean noise was heard —the sea suddenly dashed against the rocks—and, in the space of a few minutes, three oscillations of the earth were felt in a direction from the S. E. to the N. W. The wind then rose again, and all the violence of the storm revived. At twelve o'clock a fresh concussion was experienced; and, at a quarter past eleven the next morning, a fourth, which was also preceded by the same deep and solemn rumbling. Before 7 o'clock on the morning of the 25th, a fifth shock was perceived itself. A particular was distinctly observed, north of the rising sun; but the earliness of its appearance prevented its being generally noticed, and adding to the terrors of the people. The sinocks were felt throughout all Provence, where no earthquake had been experienced for eleven years.

It is but the earth is in that state of agitation, and the elements seem to take up the sword which man has laid down. fresh signs and visitations also arose in the sky.

WONDERFUL ESCAPE.

Of the Passengers on board the Countess of Leven Indiaman.

On the 2d inst. the ship sailed from Holyhead, with about 30 passengers, among whom were Sir W. Bennet, Sir T. Cochrane, Capt. P. Colonel Oakes, M. P. Major Rose Rose, M. P. Colonel Pepper, Major Wilson, Mr. Mitchell, M.—and about half past 10, it blew a gale of wind, at half past 1, a hurricane, which continued for about A-bout this time, the passengers were met with gusts of wind, which carried away the sails, descended on the mast, and opened with a dreadful explosion, and a large ball of fire issued from it, took a diagonal direction, and sunk into the sea, within four yards of the quarter, throwing up the water to the height of 40 feet. Five feet of the mast of the ship was split from the deck, some pieces of timber that afterwards recovered. Part of the ball entered the cabin, and struck a dog which lay at the stove. Fortunately the mast did not burn, though charred, held the tiller fast; had he let go, the vessel would have been immediately burned in the sea. The wind suddenly ceased and the captain ordered the sails to be set; and, with incredible exertion, found the vessel obeyed the Compass, but no further as to prevent his making Bathrigan, which he intended, here away for the Bay of Carlingford; and, through pitching in a gale, landed the passengers and mails at Warren Point, at eleven o'clock on Wednesday forenoon. During the gale, some horses which were on board, broke loose, kicked some trunks to pieces, and considerably increased the danger, alarm, and consternation. The mast was slightly damaged by the lightning.

During the late storm, travelling was rendered extremely hazardous, by the overflowing of rivulets and brooks. The Bristol and Birmingham mail, on its approach to Worcester, about 11 o'clock at night, with four inside passengers, had a very narrow escape from being overset, into a piece of water of great depth, at Hardwick bridge, where all must have perished—The leaders, losing their footing, turned short round, on which the guard got down, in the hope of being able to wade through the water—but in the attempt, the horses fell into the ditch, and pulled the poor fellow along with them. In this perilous dilemma, and with no other prospect than the coach being likewise drawn into the same abyss, a young man, collier, who was an inside passenger, intrepidly plunged into the flood—and swimming with one hand, with the other he dragged the guard on shore; after which, he went to the assistance of the horses, cut the traces, with a knife he took from his pocket, and saved the poor animals from drowning as well as the coach from being upset, in this appalling situation!

RYDE, HANTS.—It was one of the severest gales of wind that has been here for the last 37 years, the upper part of the pier and several houses were demolished. The supposed damage is estimated at between four and five thousand pounds. The ship Theresa, of Dunkirk; the lighter Prince Doine, Mattsett; and the sloop Ceres, Rable, went on shore; out of the latter one man is drowned. The pier sustained very great injury—thirty-six arches (out of forty) were carried away; sixteen of them in one body, were driven over upon Haslar-hill Island, and many others in detached parts, have been picked up to the eastward of South Sea Castle. A cottage of General Arabin, with three other houses, were thrown down. A number of trees were completely swept away, by the violence of the waves.

About ten o'clock, the sea rising five feet above its usual height, broke in upon the inhabitants so unexpectedly, that they had scarcely time to make their escape; and in one house, where were a man, his wife and eight children, one wave forced down the door, and the succeeding one swept away the staircase, so that the children were awakened in their beds, and thrown from the upper windows in a dark night, into the sea, amongst a tremendous surf, but happily no lives were lost.

REVENUE.

By an account of the net produce of the total revenue of Great Britain and Ireland, distinguishing that of Great Britain and that of Ireland, in each of the years ending 5th Jan. 1811, 1812, 1813, 1814, 1815, 1816, 1817, and 1818, it appears that the total Revenue for Great Britain and Ireland was, in 1817, £61,675,327. In 1818, £51,629,609 14s. 8 1-4d. The separate revenue of Ireland was, in 1817, £4,314, 600 14s. 2 1-2d. and in 1817, £4,356,130 16s.

By a letter from a gentleman in Egypt, with a perusal of which we have been favoured, we learn that the attempt to remove the Colosal Bust of Memnon from amidst the ruins of Thebes, made in the course of last year, had perfectly succeeded. It had been conveyed to Alexandria, where it was embarked for Malta, for the purpose of being brought to England, to be placed in the British Museum. The bust is described in the letter as consisting of a single piece of granite, of a flesh color from the top of the head to the neck, the rest being grey; the weight is computed at fourteen tons. The writer of the letter made several excavations, and discovered a row of Sphinxes, of black marble, with the bodies of women and lions' heads, beautifully sculptured, and several of them quite perfect; and also a statue of Jupiter, of cream-colored marble. After reaching Alexandria with the bust, he took a second journey to Thebes, and recommencing his excavations, he discovered a beautiful Colossal head of Osiris; one of the arms was also found, which measures eleven feet; after working for twenty days, a temple was opened containing fourteen large chambers, including a spacious hall, in which were found eight colossal statutes thirty feet high, all standing and quite perfect.— Four others were found in the sanctuary, The walls were covered with hieroglyphics. A small statue of Jupiter, found in the great hall, and two lions with ox heads, were brought from thence, for the purpose of being also conveyed to England.

True Politeness!—The French carry their complaisance so far as to say the English are the politest people on earth! and they give as a proof, the following anecdote:—"In one of those cold and misty days, which make an inhabitant of this country, wish himself in the warmest part of Africa, two Frenchmen and an English sailor were the outside passengers of a stage coach, from Dover to London. One of the foreigners and the Englishman had good warm coats on; but the other, who appeared to be suffering from the effects of a severe sea sickness, during his passage from Calais, was without this best friend to outside travellers. His fellow passenger the Frenchman, compassionated his situation; and with many professions of politeness, offered the use of his great coat, observing, that it was so warm and agreeable, that he could not but find it a valuable addition. The poor shivering fellow could not, however, be prevailed on to depriv the other of a piece of clothing, which he spoke so highly, and without which he had plainly intimated that he was so very uncomfortable. The English sailor, who saw that one party refused from politeness, what he would willingly have received, while the other offered what he desired to retain, threw off his great coat, with, 'D—n this lumbering tackle, I am so hot in it I can't breathe—here, Monsieur parleyvous, do you take it.'"

Buenos Ayres, March 4.

"The Portuguese are still in possession of Monte Video. They have there four or five thousand men. Artegas who is in possession of the surrounding country, keeps them cooped up within their lines, (extending about three miles from the city.) Without these they dare not venture, unless in considerable bodies. The Portuguese and Buenos Ayrean governments are on good terms—Artegas is at war with both. The Buenos Ayreans sent lately several hundred men against him—these, it is said, he defeated. He carries on a sort of partizan warfare; his soldiers are little better than savages, generally mounted men, admirable riders, inured to hardship and danger. It is impossible for an army to operate successfully against them. They make an attack or an incursion, and are off in a moment.

"We could not get our frigate higher up the river than Monte Video. We made our passage from there to this place in a small schooner.

"Mr. M. received yesterday a letter from Chili, in which the arrival of the Ontario is mentioned; she went into Valparaiso, notwithstanding her having been forbidden by the blockading squadron. A large Spanish vessel lately arrived there, prize to the Adeline privateer. San Martin is in the neighborhood of Valparaiso.

"Puerreydon is still in power here; and according to all accounts, is not a little despotic. The clergy have great influence—many of them are members of the Congress—there is nothing like toleration or liberty of the press.

"It is rumored that Puerreydon the director will shortly be displaced by the congress, by whom this officer, the chief magistrate is elected.

"The commissioners have not yet been presented. They are, I believe, to wait upon the secretary of state tomorrow. How long we shall remain here, or what course we shall pursue, I know not. I think it probable that our stay here will be limited to a month, or, at the extent, six weeks. I hope to be at home the latter part of June.

"The weather is very warm. The climate, though a fine one, does not come up to what I expected it. We have a profusion of fine fruit, particularly grapes. The heat and dust (the latter is particularly annoying) render walking so disagreeable, that I have not yet been much abroad."

We are verbally informed that another letter gives some account of the rescue of a Portuguese sailor, belonging to the Congress, while on shore at Rio Janeiro. This circumstance with some inadmissible requisitions from the authorities on shore, occasioned a correspondence of considerable spirit on the part of capt. Sinclair; which occasioned the King of Brazil, &c. who admired the spirited deportment of captain Sinclair, to desire his attendance at court, where he met with a flattering reception from the Portuguese monarch, who, in the course of his conversation, observed that he wished to cultivate the good will of the Americans, among whose virtues, he said, that of sincerity (in stockless impudence) was beyond any other nation!

It was signified by the municipal authority that capt. Sinclair must not depart without permission. This however was disregarded; and the frigate passed the fort with lighted matches, prepared to resist any attempt to interrupt her.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

By the arrival of the ship Hebrus, 19 days from Port-au-prince, we learn that president Petion died March 26. We are indebted to Mr. Hooper for L'Abeille Haytienne of April 3, from which we have translated the following high wrought and extravagant panegyric:

"Port-au-prince, April 3.

"Fifteenth year of the independence of Hayti—Alexander Petion, president of Hayti, has finished his course—The 27th of March was the last of his life. Fatless death has cut off our father, our friend, our comforter, one of the firmest supports of our country. No loss was ever so keenly felt. Our hearts torn with grief, will for a long time bleed with the sad shock which has reached them. In vain do—— the pen which twenty times has fallen from our hands; in vain do we attempt to trace the dreadful spectacle of which we have been the witnesses; we can offer but an imperfect picture of it; the truth of this deplorable event, so far surpasses the imagination, that no human effort can completely develope the character of it. If we wrote only for the inhabitants of the capital of this republic, we should think it useless to describe what they, as well as ourselves have seen, because in this melancholy situation, the mind labors in vain to find images sufficiently forcible to express the sensations of the heart, but gratitude inspiring our regrets to all our fellow citizens, and to consecrate forever the memory of our benefactor. It is the attempt to fulfil this painful obligation, that we undertake to trace those lines which will be but the words of sentiment, those of remembrance.

"No, there is no perfect happiness for man on earth, it is but one step from prosperity to the tomb. Neither greatness of soul, nor all the social virtues can secure him from his fate. After having triumphed over the greatest difficulties, in the moment of receiving the rewards of his labors, his watching, & his sacrifices, and as he is enjoying the spectacle of the happiness which he has procured for his fellow-men, the sacred fire which animated him, that celestial essence which survives the destruction of matter, returns to the bosom of the infinite Being who is the principle of it. Petion, the virtuous Petion, has only received here below the reward of his good actions, in terminating a life, alas, too short for us, and it is in the grave that he receives it; it is in this funeral monument that he sees our love, our gratitude; it is in the anguish of our souls, our regrets, our tears, which fill up the measure of it. Beloved father, if from the depths of the tomb, thou still regardest us, enjoy the ineffable pleasure of seeing a whole people offer to thy memory a homage which no mortal has received before thee, and which by its sincerity, its extent and its purity, elevates thee above the sovereigns of the earth, & would render them an object of worship, if divinity was not above humanity. Thy life was that of a sensible beneficent man, directed by justice: all thy meditations were directed to the good and happiness of thy brethren. Virtue was thy idol; friends were gained by thee, by an infinite goodness and singular tenderness. Thou hast done all for thy country, and it was thy wish to do still more for her. Alas, nothing more is wanting, to make thy name immortal, it dies to the temple of glory, time will never efface it, and the people of which thou wert the father will never cease to be proud of having had thee for a chief.

"On the 22d of March he was seized with a fever. The most unremitted cares were lavished upon him; but he refused the remedies which were presented to him, he would not even take any nourishment, notwithstanding the most earnest solicitations of his family and friends, and on the 29th of the same month, at 4 o'clock in the morning, he expired in that calm of the soul which characterizes irreproachable men. The mournful sound of the bells which had not struck the air during the illness of the father of his country, announced at day light that he was taken from our love. The report of cannon at intervals soon confirmed this event, so deplorable & afflicting to every heart. The alarm was general. Citizens and strangers have passed in crowds to the government, Paleness of face, a deep melancholy, a dark silence, were the first signs of the affliction of all hearts. People passed & repassed in the streets without any design or object, the state of every one seemed to be a delirium, an alienation of mind. Tears did not yet flow, the depression of soul was too great for the eyes to be yet moistened with tears: sharp cries alone rent the air, and declared the poignant grief.—In this state of feeling, nature wanted strength, or rather she was beside herself, and the suffering was more severe when returned within the limits of human sensibility. At this moment we became sensible of the whole extent of our loss. Our senses could hardly support, we have no expression to define it. A new trial was reserved for our despairing hearts and our sinking courages. The body of his excellency the president of Hayti, on being opened, presented no suspicion of a violent death. His mortal remains were placed on a funeral bed in the council chamber, with all the pomp suited to the occasion," &c.

The funeral ceremony which took place on the 31st is particularly described, but we have not room to copy it at length. The writer observes, "Never was human being more lamented than the President of Hayti. The annals of nations do not furnish such an example. It is the most exact truth to say, that all the citizens of the republic have exhibited marks of a profound grief in these days of desolation, and that strangers also have mingled their regrets with ours. They as well as we wear the funeral crape—they do not less honor the memory of our illustrious chief—and it was they who were the first to say, "You have lost your Washington!"

On the 30th of March, Pierre Boyer, General of Division, commandant of the guard of the government, was chosen by the Senate, President of Hayti. On the 1st of April the citizens took the oath to the new President, and on the opening of the Senate the President of that body made an address to the President of Hayti, in reply to which he made a Speech. Petion was born April 2, 1770 This paper contains a number of official papers relating to his death, and the installation of his successor, Extract of a letter received at Philadelphia by the brig Gen Jackson, from St. Marts, dated April 11th, 1818.

"Admiral Brion, has just arrived here from the Main, reports the capture of Carracas and Leguira, by the Independents, and an expected attack against Porto Cabello; the total defeat of Morillo and his army, and his death by a pike, through the body; this may be premature.

He comes with proclamations of Bolivar, inviting the expedition of part of three regiments from England, (which are now here, waiting for advice,) to join him under very flattering prospects. I can procure none of those papers, or I should forward them."

CHARLESTON, April 20.

Unseasonable Frost.

The frost last night has, we fear, done irreparable mischief in the country—not only has the fair promise of an abundant fruit harvest been blasted, but the staple article of the country has suffered to a deplorable extent. The Cotton Crops were generally up, and are totally destroyed. We are sorry to learn from respectable sources, that there is such a scarcity of seed that it is not likely more than a half a crop can be planted.

COLUMBIA, (S. C.) April 21.

The weather has for some days past, been uncommonly cold for the time of the year; we had a severe frost in this place yesterday morning, which has destroyed most of the tender herbs in the gardens, and we fear has done much injury to the crops of wheat, corn and cotton, in the surrounding country.

Died, Lately in the Western part of Georgia, Mr. Benjamin Harrison, aged about 44 years, a native of Virginia, but for several years past a resident of Georgia. He was probably the tallest man in the United States, being, by accurate admeasurement, seven feet two and a half inches in height; as to his general weight, it is unknown, but upon the whole he was well proportioned.

Algerine Squadron.—Captain Pendleton, of the schooner Ariadne, in 40 days from Gibraltar, informs us that an Algerine squadron had passed the straits, and that that three Portuguese frigates and one brig had gone in pursuit of them. One Algerine sloop of war & an armed Schooner were blockaded in the port of Gibraltar.

Mutiny.—The following occurrence on board the schr. Penguin, Capt. Taylor of N. York, on the 9th of February, on her passage from Gibraltar to Saint Salvador, are furnished to Mr. Topliff, of Merchant's Hall Coffee House, Boston, by one of the crew, not concerned, arrived at Boston in the brig Spartan—extracted from the log-book of the Penguin.

Sunday, Feb. 9, nothing occurred till 12, P. M. when the watch was called, it being the captain's intention to tack ship at that time. He went on deck for that purpose, and just as he had got abreast the mainmast, to see all clear, and the men at their proper stations, he was struck with a handspike, by John Maxwell, one of the crew: as he seized M. by the collar, he received two Sabre strokes across the head, given by John Roberts and Malcom Patton, two of the crew; the captain then cried out mutiny, and sprung for the companion-way, but he was met there by John Frazier, another of the crew, who gave him another blow with a sabre; at the same time he received two or three blows across the back and shoulders with handspikes. He however jumped through the sky-light into the cabin, and seized the pistols. By this time, the mate and passengers hearing the noise; sprang from their births to assist the captain; but the cabin doors and sky-light being immediately closed by the mutineers, prevented their gaining the deck.—They then demanded our fire arms, which were one pair of pistols and one carbine, with assurances that no person on board could be injured, but were refused; they then wished to speak with one of us on deck, at the same time making solemn promises that he should not be hurt. It was thought advisable to let the mate go, for the purpose of attempting a reconciliation; but he was no sooner on deck, than he was seized by the ruffians, bound and thrown into the forecastle. We were then satisfied that their intention was to weaken our force in the cabin, take it by assault, secure the money, murder all, then run the vessel on shore and make off in the boats. The capt. & 2 passengers, and the steward, one man and a boy who had made their way from the steerage to the cabin during the noise and tumult, were determined to defend themselves to the last. They made several demands for the fire arms during the night, and were as often answered, that we could have no doubt as to their intentions, as they were steering directly for the Bocas Keys, and should die ourselves to the last: they swore they would have them; we therefore kept them in our hands, expecting every moment the attack. Fortunately for us the attempt was not made, as they could have attacked us from three points at once, the companion way, sky light and steerage, and we must inevitably have been taken. At daylight, they again demanded the arms, with a threat that they would not allow us any provisions or water, and that we should be suffocated with heat & thirst; which threat could have been put into execution in a short time, as they had the command of those articles. It was finally concluded to try to come to some terms with the mutineers for the purpose of saving our lives, (as we were then in a suffocating state,) as well as the vessel, and as much of the cargo as possible, $10,000 of which was in specie, and that we were satisfied was the principal aim of these ruffians. We accordingly commenced by representing to them the dreadful consequences of such an horrid outrage, and the probability of their falling in with some of the cruisers of different nations any of which would take them into the first port, and deliver them into the hands of Justice. This appeared to have some influence upon them; they held a long consultation, and at length said, if we would give them our arms, powder and money, they would take the long boat and leave the vessel, which we promptly refused to do. Things remained in this situation till 9 A. M. when they finally agreed to take $700, and the long boat, if we would give them a discharge, dated at St. Salvador 4 days in advance, and concluded with an oath, that should be the only terms they would accept of, on which they would leave the vessel. As they were still standing for the Bocas Keys, and not four degrees from them, and not doubting but it was their intention to run the vessel ashore, it was thought most advisable to give them the $700 to save the rest, (the vessel and our lives) as all must have been lost should that have been the case. Accordingly, at 11 o'clock, they having got the long boat out and told us they were ready to depart, the money was then passed up to them, together with their separate discharges; and as they had got every thing into the boat, and the sail hoisted, the two big guns spiked, the sails aback, and the vessel all in confusion, before the guard left the companion way, it was impossible to prepare ourselves to fire at them, or run them down before they got out of our reach; on coming on deck, we found two of the crew, the cook and an apprentice boy to the Capt. who had refused to join them, although they had been compelled by the mutineers to assist in working the vessel, while in their possession. This circumstance, however, was until then unknown to us; and on further examination, we found they had taken from the vessel rigging, sails, water, beef, fish, molasses, and a number of other articles, 3 cases raisins of the cargo, &c.—The names of those concerned in this mutiny and who left the vessel in this situation, are as follows:—John Maxwell, John Johnson, John Roberts, Magnus Whinship, Malcolm Patton, seamen; Walter Bray, carpenter; John Frazer, cooper.

In addition I have to state that the above mutineers arrived at Pernambuco, were apprehended, and confined, and will no doubt receive the punishment they richly deserve.

Milledgeville Reflector Extra, April 18.

Latest from the Army.—To the politeness of Major Triplett, who arrived in town last night, direct from the army, we are indebted for the following late and important intelligence from Gen. Jackson. On the first day of April, a skirmish took place between a party of men commanded by Major Muhlenburgh and the advance guard of the army commanded by Major Russell, and some Indians, about half a mile in advance of the Mickasukie town. Between seven and ten Indians were killed, and four women taken prisoners. Our loss, one man killed and four or five wounded. About one thousand head of cattle, three thousand bushels of corn, a considerable quantity of Rice and hogs were taken from the enemy. The Mickasukie town and ten or twelve villages were burnt by the Americans. On the day after the skirmish, Gen. Jackson moved towards St. Marks, where the prisoners taken, stated the warriors, between four and five hundred in number, had retreated. The General on his arrival, sent a flag to the commanding officer, demanding the surrender of the Fort, who requested to be allowed until 9 o'clock next morning to return an answer, which the request was granted. At that hour next day, having heard nothing from him, the General despatched an aid to know his determination, who was informed that the fort would not be surrendered. The general then ordered Major Twiggs with two companies of light infantry to take possession of the fort, which he did without opposition. He found the fort strongly fortified, and in it twenty pieces of heavy ordnance. It was manned by about fifty men, principally Spaniards and blacks.

A Scotchman by the name of Arbuthnot, who has been very active in exciting the Indians to hostilities for some time past, Gen. Jackson learnt, on the evening previous to the surrender of St. Marks, was in the fort, and dispatched one of his aids, to demand him of the commanding officer, who delivered him up. He is now in close confinement, awaiting the return of the army to St. Marks, when he will be tried by a court-martial.

Capt. M'Iver, who ascended the St. Marks, with some gun-boats, on the day previous to the skirmish, hoisted a British flag, which had the desired effect of decoying on board four of the enemy; among whom were the prophet Francis and one of the chiefs, who were hanged on the next day in the fort.—The other two warriors were released.

General Jackson has now gone against the Suwannee town, about thirty miles from St. Marks, where it is supposed there are from 4 to 600 warriors assembled.

A party of about sixty Indians have sued for peace, at St. Marks.

NORFOLK, May 6.

Capt. M'Lallin, of the sch. Packet, from Port-au-Prince, states that President Petion died on the 29th of March. It was said by some people there that he had starved himself to death, while others (perhaps with more reason) ascribed his exit to the physicians who attended him. A General Boyer, a mustee, was appointed his successor, and was regularly installed in the Presidential office on the 1st day of April. The inhabitants of Port-au-Prince were rather apprehensive that Christophe, on hearing of the death of Petion, would assemble his forces and make a descent on them; & in expection of such an event, all the provisions in Port-au-Prince were purchased by the government, and every person capable of bearing arms was enrolled for military service. Capt. L. was informed, however, by the sch. he spoke after he sailed from Gonaives, that Christophe had not heard of the death of Petion, at the time the Packet left Port-au-Prince at which period every thing was tranquil; the government was satisfactorily administered, and all apprehensions on the score of Christophe's visiting them had subsided.

Death of Christophe.—A letter from an American gentleman, resident at Port-au-Prince, to his friend in this town, dated 13th April, after speaking of the death of Petion, says, in a postscript—"We have just received authentic information of the death of Christophe."

From the Portland Argus of April 22.

DISTRESSING SHIPWRECK.

In the sloop Experiment (arrived at this port) came passenger William Foster, 2d mate of ship Julia-Ann of Boston, who has called on us, and given a sketch of the shocking disaster and loss of that vessel.

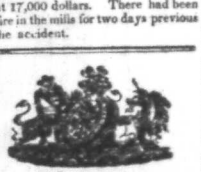
He states that the Julia-Ann, John Birkett master, sailed from London about the 16th February, laden with lead, iron, hardware, block-tin, &c. having on board 64 passengers, principally English families. Having experienced rough weather they lost a quarter boat, and the ship leaked considerably. On or about the 12th of March, a jar of vitriol, among a number that were stowed in the long boat on deck, burst, and in the exertion to prevent the fire, occasioned by its spread, the Captain was severely burnt by the vitriol and confined to his cabin. On the 17th March, between one and two o'clock at night, being S. E. about 3 days sail of Cape Sables, started a butt forward; the ship was in a sinking condition, and all hands were engaged in freeing her—but notwithstanding every effort was made, the water gained upon them; having seven feet water in the hold, the jolly-boat was lowered from the stern, and 8 souls out of 79 escaped—viz: William Foster, Thomas Allen, James Armstrong, John Purvis, John Thompson, William Britton, John Jones, and William Peacock. The ship went down about half past 2 o'clock and every vestige of her with the passengers, all disappeared.

About 15 hours afterwards, being almost exhausted, they were picked up by the schooner Constellation, Captain Thompson, from Baltimore to Annapolis, (N. S.) where they arrived in safety.

Extract of a Letter from London, dated 8th March.

"There are some plans in agitation, which will most materially affect Nova Scotia and New Brunswick,—one is, to make the ports of Halifax and St. Johns Free, so that Americans and other foreigners may have access, and take cargoes either of the produce of the Provinces, or any merchandize legally imported. The measure, if adopted, will, it appears to me, completely ruin the British interests and influence, by destroying the carrying trade of Gypsum, and introducing a system of smuggling, destructive to the importer of British Goods, besides encouraging an intercourse of the most baleful tendency. Perhaps there may be some favourers of this plan amongst you, but I hope (for their own sakes) a great majority will be adverse to it, and that it may never take place. I will not tax you with impudence, but from all I have been able to collect, your conduct respecting the Fisheries looks very much like it. Depend on it there is in this country, what I fear may not be improperly termed an overwhelming American influence, which require all the energy (I hope not more) than you possess to counteract. I do not pretend to be in the secret, but I most sincerely wish some other steps may have been taken besides the letters published in a few of the government newspapers. Should the Americans be suffered to participate in your birthright, the Fisheries, and without a manful struggle on your part, I am persuaded they will, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick will be virtually provinces of the United States of America."

HAVRE DE GRACE, (Md.) April 30.



Great haul of fishes.—On the 26th inst. it is computed that the almost incredible number of nearly two millions of herrings, besides a great number of shad, were taken within the vicinity of this town. We saw two different hauls, each of which, we are informed by those acquainted with the fishing, contained 300,000 fine herrings, and a considerable number of mammoth shad.—But the cold weather has driven the remainder away, and but little is doing at present. We heartily wish them a safe return, which we hope will soon take place, as the sun is beginning to "peep through the clouds and laugh the storm away."

CANANDAIGUA, (N. Y.) April 20.

Our oldest citizens do not recollect such extraordinary weather, at this season of the year, as we have witnessed within the last fortnight. There had been a constant rain for many days, which raised the waters, particularly the Canandaigua lake, higher than has been known for twenty-five years.—On the 12th inst. it cleared away pleasantly, and for several days the spring appeared to be opening favourably.—On Friday last, it again began to rain but soon changed to a snow storm, which continued till yesterday noon.—The snow is about a foot deep. The roads already bad and will become worse.

Snow-storm.—On the 16th and 17th April, the inhabitants of the western district, in this state, witnessed the greatest fall of snow that has fell at one time during the past winter. On the 20th of April the mail-stage went into Geneva on runners, and as late as the 22d, the snow was two feet deep at Moscow and the neighboring towns. So bad was the travelling, that no mails had arrived or departed from Moscow from the day the storm set in to the 24th April.

The large and flourishing flour mills belonging to Messrs. F. Brown & Co. at Rochester, in this state, were totally destroyed by fire on Friday night the 1st of May, together with about 4,500 bushels of wheat. The loss is estimated at 17,000 dollars. There had been no fire in the mills for two days previous to the accident.

PAPINEAU ROAD.

We are happy to observe that measures are about to be taken to improve this important avenue to the city, and we have some hopes they will succeed. If we are rightly informed, nothing has yet been contributed by the public for the improvement of this road, although it deserves as much attention as any other high-way in the vicinity. The road through St. Ann's Suburb is a pattern for road-makers; it is by far the least frequented, consequently it should have been the last on the list of notice, yet we find it as firm and substantial as the Appian-Way, in the worst weather, for nearly a mile beyond the suburb.—We could mention many roads, and even streets, that are shamefully neglected, which need not have been the case, had equal attention been paid to the whole, we hope and trust this neglect will be carefully investigated, and such regulations be made as will for ever banish partialities by individuals to particular quarters, whereby the public might be greatly injured.—Montreal Hazald.

THE WEATHER.

For nearly three weeks past, it has rained almost incessantly, the only pleasant days we had in this period, were the 26th and 27th ult. Vegetation is no further advanced than it was ten days ago. It is said a good deal of wheat was sowed on the 27th April, on the borders of River Chambly; but we learn it remains unharrowed, and perhaps the seed will be lost. The roads over the country are literally impassable.—Ib.

THE STEAM BOATS.

On Wednesday last, an attempt was made to launch the Steam Boat Caledonia, from the Island on which she lies at Boucherville; but we are sorry to state it failed. The Lady Sherbrooke, we learn, is prepared for launching: but from the great rise of the water, it has been deemed expedient to defer the operation for a few days.—Ib.

QUEBEC, May 7, 1818.

The Steam Boat LAUSON began to ply for the season as a Ferry-Boat between Quebec and Point Levi, on Monday morning last. It blew a violent easterly gale during the whole of the forenoon, which she mastered with perfect ease and security. She makes the trip in from 9 to 15 minutes, according to the resistance offered by the wind and tides, and lies half an hour on each side. The rates are upon an average not one half of what has been usually charged for ferrying between the Town and Point Levi, and when the accommodations which are in preparation are completed, at the landings on both sides, we trust that the objects for which this truly useful improvement was undertaken, will be fully gained, both in as far as the public and the proprietors are concerned.

The Steam Boat QUEBEC, will be launched from Mr. Goudie's Yard, on Saturday morning next. She is intended for freight and passengers between Quebec and Montreal. She will be one of the completest vessels of the description on the St. Lawrence, and do honour to the name she bears.

FROM THE QUEBEC MERCURY.

On the deterioration of the climate of Great-Britain.

The last number of "The Journal of Science and the Arts" contains an interesting paper, from the pen of Mr. Brande, on the Deterioration of the climate of this country, a subject on which we all take frequent occasion to complain. Whether we are about to be revisited by those genial gales and warmer suns, which cheered the days of our ancestors, we will not predict, least we be disappointed; but if the accounts be true which have been received from the Northward, we may safely conclude, that some convulsions in nature have detached those masses of ice, the accumulation of ages, which have wrought so unfortunate a change of our climate.

"That for several centuries past (says Mr. Brande) the climate of England has undergone a very material change for the worse, appears demonstrated by the most irresistible historial evidence; nor can there indeed be a doubt, that the springs are now later, and the summers shorter, and that those seasons are colder and more humid than they were in the youthful days of many persons, and those not very aged who are now alive. We learn from our old chroniclies, that the grape has formerly been cultivated in England for the manufacture of wine, but we now know, that even with much care and attention it can scarcely be brought to ripen a scanty crop under the walls exposed to the sun, sheltered from cold wind, and in every respect in the most favorable aspect; and it would be folly to attempt its growth in the method of vineyard, as a standard. Of this real luxury of more genial climes, we have so long been deprived, that we trouble ourselves little about those golden days, when Bacchus smiled upon our hills. But what may be considered as coming more home to the business and bosome of the present generation is, Pomona is about to desert our orchards, and that on ground where the clustering vine once flourished, the apple has of late years scarcely ripened. Indeed we are informed upon good authority, that it is now sixteen years since the orchards have offered a plentiful crop. It is really melancholy to think that, at no very recent period, our posterity may in all probability be in the same situation in regard to cider, that we are now placed in, in respect to wine; when the apple-tree, like the vine, will only afford a penurious supply of sour fruits, and will be cultivated in forcing houses to supply the tables of the rich.

"Lest, however, we should be set down among the screech-owls of mankind, whose race, we are sorry to say, shews no symptoms of extinction, and who make it their business 'to lessen the little comforts, and shorten the short pleasures of our condition, by painful remembrances of the past, or melancholy prognostics of the future:' we shall now beg leave to give a few facts connected with this change of climate, which may perhaps throw a little light on the subject, and tend to exhibit the cause of those effects which we have just deplored.

"It is demonstrable, that in the northern parts of our hemisphere the mean annual temperature is on the decline, and on referring to the accounts of modern travellers, it appears, that in the mountainous parts of Europe, the accumulation of ice and snow is very sensibly increasing. This is perhaps particularly the case, and easily observable in the vicinity of Mount Blanc; and the Glacieres, which, descending from the summits of that and the adjoining peaks, invade the adjacent valley of Chamouney, are making such progress as to threaten, at no very remote period, to render the heart of that district inaccessable to the traveller.—In a recent number of the 'Bibliotheque des Sciences et des Arts,' Professor Pictet informs us, that the Glaciere des Bessons has very lately advanced 30 feet, much to the dismay of the neighboring villagers. But if we resort to more northern climes, we shall find yet more alarming evidence of the great increase of snow and ice, and of this the history of Greenland furnishes, perhaps the most remarkable facts upon record. We know that this country, which was probably first peopled by Europeans from Ireland, received its name from its verdant appearance; and that the original colony continued to prosper, and to carry on an extensive commerce with Norway, until the beginning of the 15th century, since which period all communication with East Greenland has ceased; and what was once known respecting it is almost buried in oblivion. Since that period too, the East Coast of Greenland, which once was perfectly accessible has became blockaded by an immense collection of ice, so that until within these few months no vessel has been able to approach near enough even to see the coast.

[Here follows a statement of facts, furnishing a satisfactory proof of the greater increase of the inland ice of Greenland.]

"From this and other evidence which might be adduced, it is clear that the quantity of ice in the northern regions has undergone a very considerable and even rapid increase, and we are of opinion, that this circumstance is sufficient to account for that deterioration of our climate which we set out with deploring, and which, if the same causes continue to act, is equally threatened to our present more fortunate neighbors upon the continent of Europe.

"It now becomes a question whether there are any hopes of amendment; whether matters may not take a turn the other way; and whether by the gradual breaking up of the ice, the climate of this part of Europe may not regain its former state. In favor of this idea, it seems in the first place highly improbable, from what we know of the beneficent adjustments of nature, that there should be no remedy or compensation provided for so great an evil; and, secondly, it seems that, within the last year, a very notable relaxation of the cold has actually taken place.—East Greenland, as we have before mentioned, has not only been inaccessable, but even invisible, for a long period; but last year it was observed by one of the whalers, that the ice there had suffered a most astonishing decrease; that about two thousand square leagues had disappeared, and that the land was again visible. We learn too from Copenhagen, that intelligence was there received in August last, that the ice, which from time immemorial had interrupted the communication with East Greenland, had vanished. It is further probable, that the process of thawing is going on to yet a greater extent further north, for the ice islands met in the Atlantic are almost entirely conveyed thither by the southern current which constantly runs in Davis' Strait, and they were last year much more numerous than usual; many and large ones, were even seen in 62 deg. south latitude, in the summer and autumn of 1816; and we think it by no means improbable that the extreme chilness of the season may in great measure be referred to these visitors from the north; for the south-west winds could not have been but chilled by passing over these frozen masses. We think there is one other remark worth regarding, though we would not be understood to lay any stress upon its reference to, or connection with, the more propitious state of the weather that we now look for—it is, that at the very time we heard of the thawing of the northern ice, and a consequent probability of the return of these regions to their former state, the westward variation of the Magnetic Needle began to decline, and it is already retrograded some degrees towards due north."

AGRICULTURE.

The following article is taken from Memoirs of the Philadelphia Agricultural Society, and will be found interesting.—Perhaps no fruit tree is more difficult to be reared and preserved than the Peach, and no one better pays for necessary labor and attention.

ON PEACH TREES.

By Joseph Cooper of New-Jersey.

In looking over an Almanack for the year 1805, I observed a piece giving information, that peach trees had been preserved, in the neighborhood of Philadelphia, by removing the earth from the roots, after the first hard frost, in the fall, and returning it again in the spring, and oiling the body three or four feet from the ground, with common lamp oil.

The author likewise observes, that peach trees that stand in hedge rows and thickets, thrive better than others in cleared ground, which had suggested the idea, of defending the body of the tree, by wisps of straw, to prevent the attack of insects.

I take the liberty to make some observations on the piece alluded to.

In the first place, I think the taking the earth from the roots of peach trees in the fall, dangerous, as I tried that method in the fall of 1799; the succeeding winter proved very severe, as to frost, and but little snow; the consequence was, the loss of every tree so treated, and their worms not injured. On examining the trees in the spring, I found worms abundant as usual, and the effect the removing the earth had on them, was, causing them to injure the tree more, by descending the roots, as the cold came on; they returned to the surface as the weather warmed, and in picking them out, I found the bark dead, up to the place above whence the earth had been removed, as if a fire had been made round the tree, and the top as fresh as usual; it however died, with the approach of warm weather. The observation, that peach trees flourish in hedge rows, &c. I know is accurate; they also flourish in most places where the body is shaded; this I attribute to their being preserved from the effects of the sudden transitions, from heat to cold, and from cold to heat, which I apprehend are more destructive to peach and cherry trees, than insects, as I have had hundreds of fine trees to perish in one summer, after an irregular winter, without being in the least injured by worms.

Among many reasons for the opinion that irregular winters are destructive to peach trees, one is, that from good authority, said trees live in Cape May county in this state, to the age of 30 or 40 years; an age, which I attribute to situation, the county being half surrounded by the waters of the Atlantic ocean, and Delaware bay; and in the direction of the winds, that cause the warm spells here in winter, and which have not the same effect there, coming as they do, so immediately off those large waters; a proof of this is, that vegetation is generally two weeks later there than here, though so far to the southward.

From many observations and experiments, I have found that the worm most destructive to peach trees, begins to change to a chrysalis about the first of July, and remains in that state about two weeks, when they come out a wasp, and proceed to couple and lay their eggs near the roots of the trees, or in wounds in any other part; but do little injury, except in or near the roots as, if attended to, the issuing of the gum will shew their seat, and they are easily picked out; but their principal object is the root, the bark being softer there than on the body, and the rapid growth of the trunk near the root, at the time of the wasps depositing their eggs, causes a number of small rents in the bark, which give the worms an easy entrance. I have observed that trees in a declining state, are more favorable, to the increase of peach worms than those of luxuriant growth, as the latter discharge so much gum from the wounds, as to cause the death of the insect, and the former will bring them into the wasp state a month sooner; for which reason I examine the peach trees carefully every spring, and those that are in such a declining state as to render them unprofitable, I hitch a team to, and draw them up by the roots as the most certain mode to destroy all the worms they may contain.

The best method I have yet discovered, to prevent injury from the worms, is to examine the trees carefully in the spring and take out the worms, repeat the operation about the 1st July, and hill up the earth round the trees eight or ten inches; in October, remove the earth, examine as before, then renew the hill, which leave, till the spring examination. By continuing this process annually, I am confident that not more than one of any peach trees has been killed by the worms, for twenty that have died in consequence of irregular winters; and, I have observed the fluctuating state of the weather in the winter, constantly to increase for more than fifty years, I conceive it must proceed from some certain cause, which I apprehend to be the improvement of the country, every cleared field operating, when free of snow, as a reflector of the rays of the sun. That the clearing of the country is at least in part the cause of our variable winters, is rendered in some measure probable by a fact communicated to me, viz. that in the thinly settled parts of the country, peach trees flourish as well as they did formerly in the neighborhood of Philadelphia: therefore it seems advisable to endeavor to find out some method to defend tender fruit trees from the effects of fluctuating winters; I can think of no better method to succeed, than binding straw round the body or trunk of the trees, that part appearing to be the seat of the disease.

To preserve Bees from the Worms or Butter-fly.

In the beginning of May, raise the hives up, and strew some fine salt under the edges, which will drive the worms away.

A writer in a late Morristown paper says that he has tried this experiment for two years with complete success.

Longevity.—The following remarkable instance of longevity is copied from the Observer, published at Fayetteville, North Carolina:—"Died, in Richmond Country, on the 12th of April, Thoune Hathcoke, aged one hundred and two-ty-five years! He left a numerous family of children settled in different parts of the country, two of them live in the state of Georgia, one aged ninety-three and the other eighty-seven, and one son in Richmond county, but little rising sixteen years of age!"

Anecdote.— The papers inform us that Sir Chas. Brisbane is about to embark to re-assume his government of St. Vincent's. When this gallant officer commanded the Arethusa, at the storming of the forts at Curacoa, perceiving his 1st Lieutenant (Griffiths) about to mount the scaling-ladder, sword in hand, at the head of a band of heroes, he put his hand upon the lieutenant's shoulder, gently forced him from the steps, sprung into his place, and exclaiming—Griffiths, I am Captain of the Arethusa—my place is first; if I fall, then you may take my station."

One Jacob Harmers, of Ghistelles, (Holland) had claimed a premium, for the birth of his thirty-fourth child by two marriages. He is now, he says, only 71; and expects to have further claims.

AMSTERDAM, March 13.

The event which has happened on board our squadron in the Mediterranean, has given ground to exaggerated or inaccurate reports in foreign papers. The fact is, that the purser of the William I. ship of the line, had formed the nefarious project, in which he succeeded in engaging some of the crew, to make themselves master of the vessel when it left port Mahon, and to deliver it up to the Algerines, in hope of a great reward.

In the latter part of December it was observed that something was in agitation. On the 1st Jan. Admiral Van Braam, having called together the whole crew, and, in energetic and simple language of a seaman, exhorted them, in impressive terms, to do their duty to their King and country. The authors of the crime were discovered immediately after, and tried by a court-martial. Baker, the purser, was condemned to death, and was hanged on board the Amstel frigate; the others were punished by flogging and keelhauling; those who are the least guilty have been sent thither on board the Irene. The last accounts say that the vessels of the squadron were in the best condition, and ready to quit Port Mahon, where they had wintered, in order to go and show themselves before the Barbary ports.

CAPE VINCENT, commonly called Gravelly Point, in the State of New-York, at the head of the River St. Lawrence, is we understand, established as a Port of Entry. And we are happy to learn, that a subscription for improving the road across Wolfe-Island, is in circulation, on both sides. Such an improvement will be very beneficial to Kingston and other townships in this District. It has long been needed and desired. In certain seasons of the year, this route of travel is highly important and necessary. We are informed, that the money subscribed is to be laid out under the direction of Messrs. Easynton and Kelsey, of Gravelly Point, and Mr. Hitchcock, of the Island. Mr. Le Ray, who has subscribed two hundred dollars for this purpose, has completed his Turnpike from Brownville to the village at Gravelly Point.

RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

A GENTLEMAN of this Country, who for some years past, has been anxiously endeavouring to compleat a set of the OLD ANNUAL REGISTER, first published by Dodsley, which is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable works ever given to the world, and a compleat Library in itself; being still in want of a few Volumes, commissioned a friend to procure them in England last fall: owing to some mistake, the London Bookseller to whom the order was sent, after much needless labour and cost, for the entire work is now rare and very difficult to be procured, got together a whole set, uniformly and very elegantly bound, and sent them out to this country. The consequence is, that the duplicates must either be returned or disposed of, but rather than return them immediately, the present holder wishes to offer them at prime cost to the public, and any Gentleman desirous of forming a Library, will find this an opportunity that very seldom occurs.—The entire set consists of 57 Volumes, which cost in England £57 7s. Sterling. The broken set wanting only 6 or 7 Volumes, which may be readily procured, cost £45. The Purchaser may have his choice. The work is still, and will be annually continued. VALUABLE LANDS
For Sale.

THE following singularly desirable, and truly valuable Lands may be had, and immediate possession given, with undeniable titles, at rates far below their real value; and it is but seldom, even in a country so extensive as Canada, where uncultivated Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, in good neighbourhoods, can be secured.

Lot 1. Comprising 70 Acres of the very richest Beech, Maple, Elm and Oak Land, in the 4th Concession of HOPE, lying upon Smith's Creek, with 15 acres cleared and fenced, new log-house, well built and dove-tailed, fruit trees, &c. with a mill-seat, between 4 and 5 miles from the flourishing little Town of Toronto, on Lake Ontario, where there is an excellent market either for buying or selling. The Land is of the very first quality, and in a good populous neighbourhood, forming altogether a most desirable residence, within a short mile of the great road between York and Kingston.

2d. 200 Acres, being Lot No. 1, in the 5th Concession of HOPE, alongside the great road between Hope and Hamilton, leading to the new and flourishing settlements of Cavan & Monaghan, on the Rice Lake, in which more than 500 families and persons have actually located, and scarcely five miles from the Town of Toronto, where there is a good market; it is in an old settlement, and the neighbourghood is populous and excellent. There are about 30 acres cleared and fenced, with a fine stream of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

3d. 190 Acres, occuppying nearly one entire side of the Gannanoque Lake, in the Township of South Crosby, District of Johnstown, consisting wholly of broken fronts, the back parts extending to the road from the Rideau Settlement to Kingston, from which latter place it is scarcely 30 miles distant. The Land is good and well timbered, and the situation singularly beautiful and romantic, with wooded islands in front.

The above Lands are particularly deserving of notice. The situations were chosen by a competent judge, and they will be sold remarkably cheap, the proprietor wishing to concentrate his forces in another quarter.

LONDON, April 3.

CORN EXCHANGE.

The arrival of several cargoes from abroad has occasioned a dullness in the Wheat trade, and our prices may be considered as a quarter lower than on Monday. Fine Barley fully supports Wednesday's prices, having but little of that description at market and what appeared this morning was readily disposed of. Oats are 1s. a quarter cheaper, in consequence of a large foreign supply. In other articles there is no alteration.

April 4.

The arrangements for the celebration of the nuptials of the Princess Elizabeth, it was yesterday understood, have been so formed as not to interfere in any respect with the sittings of Parliament. The ceremony will take place so early as eight o'clock on Tuesday morning next, at the Queen's Palace; for which time the officers of State, the Ladies of the Bedchamber, and all other persons whose presence is required by Court etiquette, have received summonses to attend. Her royal Highness was born May 22, 1770. The bride and bridegroom will leave the Queen's house soon after the ceremony, for the Prince Regent's cottage in Windsor Park. The Queen will go to Windsor in a few days after the marriage; but will return to hold a drawing room on the 22d inst. at which the Prince and Princess will be presented. The Lady of Gen. Sir H. Campbell is arrived from Windsor, to attend at the marriage.

From the Belfast News Letters.

A Freemason perhaps, will be gratified to learn, that Moorcroft, in his journey to Lake Manasawala, in the midst of the Himalaya mountains, many thousand feet above the level of the sea, met with a native officer, on whose outer garment "were sewed the saw, adze, chissel, rule, and all the insignia of Freemasonry, in iron; the symbols of a fraternity of which he said he was a member."

[The Himalaya or Himmalleh mountains, are a vast chain of mountains, in Asia, extending from Cabul along the N. of Hindostan, through the whole extent from the Ganges to the river Testa. They inclose a tract of country from 200 to 280 miles in breadth. The ridge was known to the ancients by the name of Imaus, and the Indian Caucasus.—The natives now call it Hindoo-koo, as well as Himmaleh, which last is a Sanscrit word, signifying snowy: their summits being covered with snow.

GLASGOW, April 7.

A loan to Prussia of five millions, to be repaid in 56 years, has been finally negociated in London. On an average of rates, £72 money is given for £100 Stock. The revenue of the Quarter ending on the 5th April is said to be considerably longer than the same period last year. The Funds are getting higher, and the 3 per Cent Consols are again above 80.

It continues to be confidently asserted that Mr. Vansittart will experience no difficulty whatever in raising the supplies for the year, upon terms extremely favorable to the public.

Several of the farmers in the neighborhood of Carlisle have obtained 12s. a head profit for year old sheep which, in the month of July, only cost 6s. 6d. each. Fat cattle and sheep have been in brisk demand, and are now considered scarce. Lean cattle are selling readily at high prices, good 7s. per stone. Saddle horses are higher than they have been for the last 20 years; but draught and superior ones are almost unsaleable.

In the House of Commons little else was done on Thursday than presenting petitions of various kinds. Among them were 256 from Bristol, in favor of Parliamentary Reform. Of course these were signed by twenties.

In the neighborhood of Perth, and in Strathearne, the oat-seed is just commencing. In the higher districts, the ground has been covered with snow for the greater part of the month, and spring ploughing is far in arrears. It may be stated as something new in the annals of meteorology, that ground could not be ploughed, for snow, so late as the 28th of March, within a mile of the Carse of Gowrie. An unbroken sheet of snow covered the Grampian Hills throughout the greater part of the month—a circumstance very unfavorable to the Highland shepherd; whose flocks must have been but ill supplied with food at the approach of the lambing season.

Letters from Paris mention that a Bayonne Banker had been in the French capital for some time, endeavoring to negociate a loan, on account of Ferdinand Seventh, of 200 millions of francs, to meet the arrears and exigencies of the State.

The last proceedings of the Chamber of Deputies, related to the imprisonment of Debtors. This law (which was carried by a large majority) is more severe than our own.

According to the French papers, the storms in France have equalled in violence the storms in England.—"The elements are at war," says one of the Paris papers," and it seems for some time, as if a grand physical revolution was in preparation. Luminous meteors, discharging stones, appear on all sides; hurricanes have been felt in all latitudes; water-spouts carry women up into the air; all shores are covered with wreck: at Munich, subterraneous noises are heard; and horses are suddenly visited with cold sweats, as from fear; wells are dug to ascertain the nature of these explosions. At Petersburgh, the barometer fell as low as during the great earthquake at Lisbon.—Shall we speak of Paris? The tempests rage both in the air and in the mind: slates and pamphlets rain down upon us at the same time, and the passengers incur the double editions. Who shall allay such a tempest, and danger of being overwhelmed by chimnies and pronounce the celebrated Quos ego."

Extraordinary Escape.—A Paris Journal gives the following account of an extraordinary escape at Mount St. Bernard, Switzerland:

On the 20th of September, at five in the evening, a cry was heard at the hospital of St. Bernard, which appeared to come from some person on the top of the rocks. The fathers instantly ran to look for him. They saw a man on the summit of the rocky part of the Chouletraz. One of them climbed the rock and found on the top an Englishman, who having been induced by his curiosity to get up it, had been unable to get down. Although night was coming on, the fathers, by the help of rope ladders, and furnished with lanterns, were able to lead this ingenuent stranger from the perilous situation in which he had placed himself, and where he must have perished, but for their help. It was not till late at night, that they could bring him to the hospital. This Englishman has arrived at Geneva, where he is unable to praise sufficiently the intrepidity and charitable activity of the religious men, to whom he owes his life.

Roman villa in Oxfordshire—The Roman Villa discovered near Stonesfield, 11 miles from Oxford, was first pointed out in 1816, by the Rev. Mr Brown, the Vicar of that parish. By the assistance of that gentleman, and of the Duke of Malborough, on whose estate the villa stands, extensive discoveries have been made. The building, enclosed about three acres of land; the pavements, on every side of the quadrangles, is very evident, as are the divisions of forty-seven rooms.—The pavements are tesselated, and in good condition. One of them in a large room is painted. The tesseræ are so exactly laid together, so beautifully varied, and the pattern so correct and elegant, that the best connoisseurs pronounce that three years of labour is not painted with more accuracy or beauty. The pattern is one, which frequently appears on our modern floor-cloths.

The baths are completely excavated, and the hypocausts and flues, by which they warmed the rooms, in the one we have stooped for half a minute, are apparent. The largest room seems to be about 25 feet by 25: one is exactly 20 by 24: a proportion in which the length exceeds the width much less than in modern rooms. Nothing has yet been found to fix the precise date of this villa; the coins and medals are those of Constantine the Great who was Cæsar in 306 and Augustus from 308 to 337. The Duke of Marlborough shews a great regard to those valuable remains of antiquity.—At present, the remains of pillars and the tesselated pavements are covered with mould, to protect them from frosts, which are particularly injurious to the latter by loosening the tessera.—London Star, March 19.

PRINCESS OF PARMA.

It was rumoured in the English prints previous to the meeting of parliament, that the subject of the divorce of the Prince Regent would be brought forward by ministers. Parliament has, however, been in session, according to the latest accounts, for several weeks without even an allusion to any measure of the kind. Recently it has been announced that the princess Marie Louise, intends to visit the British isles, and, like another Sheba, her object is to woo the prince regent; consequently it became necessary to revive the story of the divorce. To ascribe such motives to the princess for passing over to England, is something like an attempt to stain her reputation. Suppose we were to account for it in another and more charitable way; that her object is not only to divert her grief for the loss of Napoleon, but to supplicate his enlargement. It is also more rational and satisfactory to presume so, and which presumption is more honorable to her character and to her fame. If the regent were divorced, with a view to marry again, it would be stretching probabilities too far to suppose that the wife of Bonaparte, and he still living too, would be the object of his choice—the idea is too extravagant to be entertained; and from the recent marriages of some branches of the royal family of England, and others contemplated, we should imagine if a divorce were ever thought of, the subject has been wholly dropped as inexpedient and improper. However, all this is idle speculation, and dont concern the people on this side the water, whatever interest may be attached to it by the British nation.—Natn. Chron.

Fraternal affection.—In the battle of Waterloo, near the close of the dreadful conflict, a sergeant of the Coldstream regiment, earnestly solicit d the officer commanding his company, for permission to retire from the ranks for a few minutes; the latter expressing some surprise at this request, the other said, "Your Honor need not doubt of my immediate return"——Permission being given him, he flew to an adjoining barn, to which the enemy in their retreat had set fire, and from thence bore on his shoulders his wounded brother, who he knew lay helpless in the midst of the flames. Having deposited him safely for the moment under a hedge, he returned to his post in time to share in the victorious pursuit of the routed enemy.—Con. Courant.

A very novel scene was exhibited last March, in Liverpool, (England) which greatly amused several thousands of spectators.—It was the sight of a curricle, to which four cats were harnessed that drew Mr. Usher, the clown of the circus, (in the carriage) 751 paces, in nine minutes and a half, to the great astonishment and gratification of the spectators. After the cats had performed their travel, they were unharnessed and raised up in the air, for the view of the immense crowd, by whom the cats were greeted by loud and repeated huzzas!!

KINGSTON, (Jam.) March 25.

Accounts of the treaty between G. Britain and Spain, on the abolition of the Slave Trade by the latter power, have excited great sensation throughout the island of Cuba. English commissioners, it was stated, were to be appointed at the different post in Africa, to prevent the trade being carried on by smuggling, which were considered to be posts of a very dangerous nature. This treaty, as might have been expected, has given a heavy blow to the interests of the above flourishing colony—Slaves had already risen 25 per cent; and the slaves from the northward of the line, which are esteemed by far the best, are expected to rise even an hundred per cent.

From the very great encouragement recently given by the Spanish government to settlers in Cuba, many had gone there from Europe and America, and purchased lands, but the above treaty had given a complete damp to the hopes they had so exquisitely entertained of realizing wealth in that fertile colony; and those who had not already obtained a lot of laborers, were giving up their lands and returning to their respective countries. It is hard to say whether Ferdinand or the Saints, are most abused by the people in that island, for the completion of a measure so inimical to their interests—of one thing, however, little doubt is entertained, that the trade will be carried on at every risk, and the principal vessels now engaged therein are the American swift sailing schooners.

We here with subjoin a correct list of the Spanish squadron, at the Havana at the date of the last advices. The corvette is rather a heavy ship, originally a French East Indiaman—all the brigs and schooners have been purchased from the Americans, and were formerly their finest privateers. Were they to be judged of by their outward appearance, they are in good order, pretty well manned, extremely well found in every thing, full of fight, frequently exercising their men, and each with a good party of soldiers on board; but their officers appear to be without courage, and their men without confidence: they had been lying there about three weeks, allowing their port to be blockaded by a single Patriot brig—however, it was asserted, that they intended sailing on the 6th inst. to convoy the Cadiz Packet as far as the entrance of the Gulf, taking courage from their numbers; but, notwithstanding, if they fall in with commodore Brown, accompanied by the brig and schooners, who were said to be off the Havana, they will perhaps wish themselves safe back into port.

List of the Spanish naval force at Havana on the 9th inst:—

A ship-corvette, of 22 guns, originally a French East Indiaman.

A brig of 18 guns originally an American privateer.

A small brig of 24 guns.

And a small schooner of 6 guns.

The Pique frigate, Capt. Mackellar, we understand, had taken on board two and a half millions of dollars at Vera Cruz, and had proceeded from thence to Campeachy.

The following extraordinary fact is recorded on a tombstone at Greenhay, in the Island of Jamaica: "Here lieth the body of H. Goodgrig, Esq. who departed this life at Port Royal, December the 22d, 1739, aged 80 years. He was born at Mount Pelo, in France, but left that kingdom for his religion, and came to settle in this Island, where he was swallowed up in the great earthquake in 1692, but by divine Providence was, by another violent shock, thrown up in the sea; which at that time ran mountains high, & miraculously saved himself by swimming until by force of the waves he was driven near the land where he was rescued from a watery grave by the crew of a small vessel, and again safely landed. He lived many years after in great reputation, beloved by all who knew him, and much lamented at his death.—Peace to his memory."

From the Philadelphia Aurora.

GRENADA, (W. Indies,) 5th Feb.

"I arrived yesterday from Augustura, at this place, and had the pleasure to see at anchor here, a beautiful corvette, Esmeralda, of 24 guns, from London, and was on board of her today; she has on board 200 fine officers, completely equipped and uniformed, they are to form some of the corps of cavalry which has been so long expected from England, and have all seen service; the colonel is a veteran of 50, the major about 35—all the rest under 30; the vessel has on board several thousand stand of arms, pistols, sabres, saddles, and every equipment for a large body of cavalry; those officers are to be attached to several new corps, that are to be formed, and will have charge of their organization and discipline.—Three other ships of about 400 tons each, the Britannia, Prince, and Dobson, are at St. Bartholomews, and have on board several other corps of cavalry officers, and two complete companies of flying artillery, with field pieces, and a handsome park besides, with ammunition for twelve month's service; those corps will move for Guiana, as soon as dispatches shall have been received from General Bolivar, but probably the corvette will not wait for this. The commanding officer of the Esmeralda, tells me that there are on board this squadron 1000 men, who are well trained to service; and that when he sailed from the Downs, another squadron with 1000 men were to sail very soon, and several other detachments in succession; that Lord Cochrane was making the necessary arrangements to sail with five vessels, two of which will each mount 50 guns; so that you see the Proclamation of the English Regent, and the heavy punishment of his displeasure does not operate as you supposed it would.

"I will give you now some news from the interior of our own country—Bolivar, sailed from Augustura, on the 20th December last, with 2000 excellent infantry, which were to be joined by the corps of Monegas and Sarraza, at the mouth of the Apt, will follow by the river, and when joined will compose an additional body of three thousand five hundred infantry. The cavalry under Cedeno and under Monegas, making one thousand, being joined with Bolivar's force, will amount to 5000 men to move, he will meet on his route the corps under general Paez, of 3000 cavalry and 800 infantry, without including the force under Zaraza, who are operating near Calaboso, that under general Bermudez, in Cumana, and Barcelona, and those under generals Roxas and Guevara, in Maturin. The division of gen. Donato Perez, composed of 2000 cavalry, have marched into New Grenada, with special instructions—he has carried every thing before him; the province of St. Martin, is now completely organized, under the republican authority, & the adjacent provinces which had only waited for some point of rallying, are in revolution against the royal authorities. Such is the present situation of our military force, to which may be added a naval squadron on the river, well equipped and commanded.

"The royal forces occupying various positions—on the borders of the Apure, 2000 men; they are stationary, holding positions intended to cover St. Fernando.

"According to the official accounts of general Sarraza, the royal troops of Calaboso, consisted of 1200 infantry, and about 600 cavalry; and some other small corps, making in that quarter, between Calaboso and the Apure, about 4000 men; the royal forces under Morales and Torres, are not ascertained.

"The day I sailed, official communications were received from Paez, that the patriot colonel Valenzia had completely cut up a royal division which was on its route to join Morillo, the action took place at Cumaguan; and a great quantity of arms, ammunition, and military stores, had fallen into his hands. General Paez had completely beaten the divisions of Calzada and Adlima; we shall probably be master of St. Fernando, Neutris, and Calaboso, after which little difficulty will be interposed to our complete re-possession of Venezuela, and the expulsion of the enemy. We have received here the American papers, in which the President's speech appears, and the order to expel our brethren from Amelia Island: and what has not a little surprised every one, the arrest of the English officers who were on their way to join general Bolivar—every one is in a state of consternation at policy so different from that which sent succors to Carracas at the moment of its calamities, and which would have nothing but friendship to expect from any part of our countries—can you explain these extraordinary occurrences, or through what adverse influence it is produced."

Letters from South America.

"RIO JANEIRO Jan. 30.

"On the morning of the 27th, at day light, we were off the entrance into the harbor of Rio, the Sugar Loaf distant 20 miles. The wind was so light that though we spread every sail, we could only get within a mile of it before dark, when we came to anchor. The scenery when we came close enough to see it distinctly, was the most picturesque I ever beheld. We had in front of us a rampart of rocks, so high that some vessels in sight, close under it, seemed like little toy boats,"——"An opening in this of a mile wide, is the entrance into the harbor of Rio Janeiro.—To the west of it we behind the Sugar Loaf shaped exactly like a loaf of sugar, and inclining to the west. On the east, four miles further in, was visible the fort of Santa Cruz. Between us and the entrance were scattered a number of little islands on some of which were a few scattered dwarf trees, which are said to be the cocoa-nut trees. The rocks on each side of the entrance into the harbor were picturesque beyond description. The fort of Santa Cruz is on a rock, rising to the height of seven or eight hundred feet shelving down towards the water. There are a number of islands scattered about, apparently fine spots for fortifications. The harbor could, I think, at a small expence, be rendered impregnable. This is a noble harbor. The land marks, at its entrance enable vessels to steer for it when far at sea; the water deep, the few shoals in it being discernable, and so not dangerous. To enter this harbor is so easy, indeed, that pilots are not needed. The officer sent to the fort was not admitted into it, it being contrary to rule.—He was received at the stairs, cut in the rock, and informed that we might enter when we pleased, anchor where we pleased, and have any supplies; but no refreshment was offered him. How different (in the latter respect) from the reception one of our officers would give in a similar case. The Portuguese officers asked but few questions. This being the first American frigate that ever entered Rio, would have excited some curiosity in any but a Portuguese.

"As soon as we anchored we were visited by an officer from the custom house, one from the health office, and an aid to the king; who merely asked our name, country, the port from which we sailed, and the length of our voyage. Soon after came two Lieutenants from two Austrian frigates lying near us—their visit entirely complimentary. They politely made us the offer of any service in their power.—These frigates arrived here last November, with the Austrian Archduchess Leopoldina, who is married to the Prince of Beria, eldest son of the king; this young man not 21—the princess rather older.—This royal couple quarrelled shortly after their marriage. This Prince, it ——, kept a little French milliner, which he turned off on his marriage; but (finding his bride to his taste) took back again directly after the wedding.—This piece of scandal we got from two Americans, who came off to us soon after we anchored. They told us also that the king was to be crowned the 6th of the next month. This is the person who has so long been Prince Regent. He is said to be anxious to return to Portugal, but too timid to re-cross the ocean; he is upwards of 50, has a sore leg, and is so much afraid of thunder and lightning, that upon the smallest rumbling he runs into some dark hole!

"We were visited by a officer from the Portuguese admirs a ship (a 74) which, with two more lies in sight. This officer made similar offers of services. He was followed by Capt. Hickey, from the sloop of war Blossom, which arrived the day before from St. Helena. He mentioned that Napoleon spent the greatest part of his time in the warm bath having his table beside him, and writing, while there. He was quite bloated in consequence of using so exercise.'

"Mountains rise on all sides of the city.—The situation is indeed fine. The population, Mr. T. told me, amounted to at least 130,000. S. however says about 100,000. Of these 50,000 are blacks. These swarm in the streets with scarce as much clothing as decency demands. Several were in chains—(runaways thus punished.) I observed a number harnessed to a loaded cart, which they drew like horses, cheering each other with rude songs, or rather vociferations; I saw a few at work near the garden, with a fellow standing over them with a long whip.

"The place must indeed be populous, as there were many in the streets; and no Portuguese ever walks out or even rides if he can help it; so that there were no doubt a large proportion at home. The women seldom walk in the streets. We saw many of the military, and many priests; and except some of these two classes I never saw so wretched a race—homely featured, and with bad persons—they all looked as if they had been smoked.

"There is nothing like a good boarding-house or a decent tavern, as we live on board. This I regret, for the we thus escape the musquetoes, (very annoying to strangers) we have no chance of learning much about the country or people. As to getting de-communicated in a Portuguese out of the question. You know B.) be intimate, nay, no terms ship with them, for years, and never ask you to see other their country house."

SINGULAR PHENOMENON.

About the 20th of January last, secular employment led some of the family of a Mr Ephraim Wethy, living one mile north of Troopsville, to the north part of his farm, when they discovered near the foot of a gentle ascent that a circumscribed spot of earth, ten feet in diameter, had dropped fifteen feet below the level of the surrounding surface; the sides of which appeared smoother than they could have been left with the spade. The earth being awarded, the turf appeared not to have broken, except at the edges. It was found upon trial that the sides of the circular opening were hard and every part perfectly solid. It further appears from similarity of their bottom, and the surface of the surrounding earth that the occurrence must have been of a recent date. When the writer visited this place, which was a few days since, the bottom of this opening had settled 8 or four feet since its first occurrence—The soil on the surface is composed of nearly an equal mixture of silicious and alluvial earth, with but little or no variation to the bottom, and of a firm texture.

It may be further noted that there is no stream running near this place of a sufficient size to have been produced any effect in washing the earth from beneath.

Distressing Accident.—We are informed says the Connecticut Mirror of this Morning, that a young man by the name of Barrett, of Wethersfield, while engaged at work near the mast-head of a vessel, on Tuesday last, accidentally fell and struck upon one of the Belaying Cleats, (a few feet from the deck,) which passed through the right side of his body between the ribs and came out at the back, by which he was suspended, until he succeeded in extricating himself, when he fell to the deck.—Surgical aid was immediately called, and although the wounds are severe, hopes are entertained of his recovery.

French Colony.—The following letter from H. LALLEMAND, and the remarks which accompany it, are copied from the New Orleans Gazette of the 3d instant:

Reply to the letter from Natchitoches, published in the Louisiana Gazette, of the 31st March.

The French colonists, who have gone to settle on the river Trinity had no other object than the choice of productive lands, where they might procure labourers and cattle at low prices, and from which they might derive a prompt and productive revenue. They look for those advantages which are to be derived from a rich soil, by active, laborious men: they have no other wish than to cultivate them and to enjoy the tranquility necessary to such an establishment. They have no connection with any assemblage that has theretofore taken place in those parts, and will never engage either in privateering or smuggling, nor in any other occupation that might render them a subject of disquiet to any people.

Signed H LALLEMAND.

New Orleans, April 1, 1818.

The above is copied from L'Ami des Lois of Tuesday. It places beyond doubt the fact that the colony of Frenchmen, who contemplated settling on the banks of the Alabama, have for some unknown cause preferred a residence on the frontier of the Spanish dominions adjacent to the State of Louisiana, and that they have actually removed thither. We cannot but believe such respectable authority as General Lallemand, that the objects of the colony are legitimate: Still, however, there are certain points about this affair, upon which, if they do not involve state secrets, we should be happy to receive information:

As the territory, on which these people are about to settle, is in dispute between the U. S. and Spain, which party do they acknowledge?

Do they intend to make the territory their own, and establish a government distinct from and independant of every other?

Have they any connection with the Mexican republic? If any, what is its nature?

Is their government to be a Monarchy or a republic.

If a Monarchy, who is to be their king?

In fine, have they an understanding with the government of the U. S. or with any foreign government?

There are more things in heaven and earth Horatio,

Than are dreamt of in your philosophy.

From the Concord (Mass.) Gazette.

Something new.—We have seen a new modelled rifle gun, which promises to be of some consequence, and is said to be the invention of capt. Artimas Wheeler, of this town. We have not had sufficient opportunity to examine it so minutely as to give a description of it that would do justice; we are inclined to think it a new and important invention, more particularly in case of an action with an enemy. It has one barrel through which the charges pass, that is of common length, also 7 short ones, not much longer than sufficient to contain a charge each; these have a pan attached to them to contain powder for priming, and are kept perfectly tight by a slide that covers them. These barrels are made to move circularly round, near the lock, which is also of new construction; after firing the first charge, the half-cocking moves by a spring one of these short barrels round, and confines it tight in the breech end of the long barrel, through which the charge must pass. The shutting the pan of the lock opens the slide which covers the priming. This gun is but little heavier than the common one, and when once loaded, which requires little more time than to load a common rifle, it can be fired as expeditiously as will be convenient to cock the piece and take sight, until the seven are discharged.

SAVANNAH, April 30.

We learn, that a deputation of Indians from some of the tribes went into St Augustine, on last Monday week, with an interpreter, for the purpose of ascertaining, from the Governor, whether it was his wish, or advisable for them, to take up arms against the white inhabitants, and attack the frontier, or no;—and whether they should oppose the forces under gen. Jackson. The Governor returned for answer, that it was his decided wish that they should not take up arms, or make the least resistance to any of the U. States troops, should they even enter their towns. He requested them to return home, and adhere to his advice, and enjoined on them the necessity of giving up, forthwith, the negroes that are with them, who have either been stolen or runaway from their owners, in Georgia, and elsewhere.—The number of fugitives with the Indians are supposed to be between two and three hundred.—Provisions are scarce and high in Augustine: and the inhabitants of that place are apprehensive of a visit from gen. Jackson.

The discipline of Artiga's cavalry is said to be admirable; the horses, at the word of command, perform many surprising evolutions, in the face of the enemy; in the field of battle they often conceal themselves, on favorable ground, by lying down, without their riders dismounting; and such is there docility, that at the sound of the bugle they spring up in perfect order, and pounce on the enemy, so as to leave no possibility of escape. In consequence of their rapidity of movement, the Portuguese to the amount of 8 or 9,000 men, never dare venture out of the walls of Montevideo, where they suffer for want of supplies, without the possibility of collecting any thing from the vicinity.—

Wash. City Gaz.]

From the Washington City Gazette.

A circumstance of a melancholy nature occurred here on Thursday last—particulars follow:

A young Englishman, employed as coachman to the Spanish Minister, offered at the United States Bank, a thousand dollar note for change; the Teller on examining it, enquired of the bearer if he knew the amount of the note he had handed him, who replied it was one hundred dollars. He was then informed that its value was one thousand dollars, and that such a note had been stolen from a person, who had lodged information of his loss, with its identification, at the Bank, and that it must be retained for its proper owner. The young man frankly confessed that he received it from a colored girl to get it cashed, supposing it to be a one hundred dollar note. He then went home, desired a boy in passing near the stable, to feed the horses, ascended into the boy's loft, and hung himself. It has since appeared that the colored girl purloined the note—that what he said was strictly true, and that he was perfectly innocent of having obtained it improperly—was a very honest servant, but smarting with the charge of theft, and overcome by shame, rashly terminated his existence.

News.—In the present dearth of News, we find by the Boston papers, that our old friend, the Sea Serpent, has made his appearance on Captain Woodward, and the state and seamen of the Schr. Ada-ann, arrived at Hingham, on Sunday last, saw, in the afternoon of Saturday, about 12 leagues east of Cape Ann, a Sea Serpent, apparently upwards of one hundred feet in length. The monster of the deep, raised its head a considerable height above the water. It was near the Ahmant for about five hours.—Captain Woodward says he had a full view of the Serpent. It appeared as large round as a barrel, but no protuberances were noticed.

N. Y. Eve. Post.

We understand that Commodore Macdonough is appointed to the command of the Guerriere, which is on the eve of departure for Petersburgh, to take out Mr. Campbell, as Minister to Russia, in the place of Mr. Pinckney. The latter, having received his nine thousand dollars out-fit, and his nine thousand a year for two years, in the whole twenty-seven thousand dollars, now gives way to Mr. Campbell, who, in his turn, having received a similar reward for similar services, will, we presume, make room for some other good republican in this economical government. This reminds us of Mr. Jefferson's grand plan of reform, one great feature of which was the lessening the expences of foreign ministers.

N. Y. Eve. Post.

Paris papers to the 27th of March, have been received at Boston. They mention, that a violent earthquake was felt in Sicily on the 20th of February, which occasioned much damage. In Catanea a great part of the Cathedral and of the Seminary were shaken down, and many ecclesiastics were crushed under their ruins. In Zaffarana the people were assembled for public worship, when the church fell, and crushed the preacher and fifty persons under its ruins. All the villages on the sides of Mount Etna were ruined; but as the houses were light buildings, few lives were lost.

The papers mention under a Copenhagen date, that a marriage will soon be announced at Court between prince Ferdinand, brother of prince Christian, and the Princess Caroline, eldest daughter of the King of Denmark.

BALTIMORE, May 23.

From Porto Rico.—Capt. Isley, of the brig Eagle, arrived this morning in 17 days from Porto Rico, informs, that previous to his departure, the governor of that Island received despatches from Madrid, which induced a belief that war was about to take place between Spain and some other of the European powers, in consequence of which the inhabitants were heavily taxed for the purpose of placing the Island in a suitable posture of defence.

American Colonization Society.

Letters have been received from Messrs. Mills and Burgess, the agents of the American colonization society. They arrived in London in December, after a very boisterous passage, in which they narrowly escaped shipwreck on the coast of France. They were received in England with the greatest kindness and attention, and every facility given them for prosecuting their researches in Africa, by some of the most distinguished characters in that country. After procuring much valuable information in England, and obtaining letters to the governor of Sierra Leone, and other establishments in Africa, they sailed for that country early in Feb The following are extracts:

Extract of a Letter, dated London, December 28.

"Of the fifty days which have elapsed since our appointment as your agents, ten were spent in the United States, and thirty on the Atlantic; ten in France; and five have passed since our arrival in England. You will see that we are just entering on the active duties of our agency. Though some delays have been inevitable, we have not loitered. Our passage across the Atlantic was very short. The nineteenth evening after we left the capes of the Delaware, soundings were obtained at the entrance of the Irish channel. Our course seemed to be within reach; but a terrible gale, which began on the evening of the 7th December taught us the fallacy of our hopes. Land had not become visible, and the thick clouds had prevented any accurate observation for some days. Both our latitude and longitude were doubtful. When the gale began the captain judged it prudent to put back to sea a few hours. Eighteen hours after, when the violence of the gale had subsided; when the sun and the stars and the soundings continually diminished; when it seemed impossible to retrace our path, with a hope to ride out the tempest, the masts were ordered to be cut away, and the anchors to be cast.

"In a short time sails were torn to shreds, severed by the rocks, and the ship was at the mercy of the winds, without masts, sails or anchors save worthy captain said that he had done all in his power for our safety, but that we were lost; the ship could not survive the tempest. A long reef of rocks soon appeared before us, frightfully dashing the waves into the air. At this spectacle our captain said, we had but a few minutes more in this world; then hastily stepping into the boat astern, attended by his little sons, and a skilful sailor, he with a hatchet, cut the cordage of the boat, and she was driven away. We saw them a moment, and saw them no more. Through the mercy of God, without human foresight, and to our utter astonishment, a current in the sea carried the ship around the point of the rocks. They were supposed to be at the western extreme of the Island of Inisheer. Consulting in the power which gave us this signal deliverance, we proceeded the third day after in entering the harbor of St. Maloes in France. After a detention of four days in quarantine, we arrived in London by the way of Havre and Southampton in 12 days. Both in France and in England we have been uniformly treated with civility and kindness. We have already had interviews with several of the principal gentlemen to whom our letters were addressed. They have received us with much cordiality, and view the objects of the American society with sentiments of enlarged benefit."

Extract of a Letter, dated London, January 17.

"His Royal Highness the Duke of Gloucester, Patron of the African Institution, to whom an official letter was addressed by the American Society for colonizing the free people of colour of the U. S. has seen in the country for several weeks past. Mr. Wilberforce made a communication to His Royal Highness on our behalf, to inquire whether he would prefer having the letter transmitted to him in the country, or wait for a personal interview in town. He appointed an hour this day, when he would be in town, and would see us in person. Mr. Wilberforce attended us to Gloucester House. His Royal Highness entered into a free conversation on the circumstances of our voyage, the population of the U. States, the number and destination of the people of colour, our constitution, jurisdiction, and several other topics. After reading the letter from the President of the society, we put into his hands a printed copy of its constitution, together with a manuscript copy of our commission, with the language, spirit, and sentiments of which, he shewed himself, by his words and countenance, to be much gratified. He intimated his disposition to give in answer a letter to the President of the American Society, and Mr. Wilberforce engaged to be a medium of its safe transmission. He added, that it would give him pleasure to see us on our return from Africa, if we should take England in our route, and that the African Institution would there know better in what manner they could aid the American Society. In the mean time he requested that in our communications to the American Society we would take notice of his having received the letter of the American President, and to make mention of the readiness and cordiality with which he should co-operate with the American Society in the prosecution of their designs, which must contribute to the same results with the efforts of the African Institution. Mr. Wilberforce has further increased our obligations to him this day, by introducing us to the Secretary. His Lordship appeared to have a perfect knowledge of the constitution and designs of the American Society. He cast his eyes over our commission, and answered with promptitude, that he should give us letters of introduction and recommendation to the government of Sierra Leone and other officers, who might be able to afford us patronage and assistance while prosecuting our inquiries on the coast.

"Mr. Wilberforce has exemplified the prudence of a counsellor, the tenderness of a father, and the benevolence of a christian, in his communications to us, and in the arrangements which he has made on our behalf. We cannot express in too strong language our admiration for his excellent character, our gratitude for his kindness, and our sincere prayers to the Preserver of Men, that he would spare his valuable life many years, and succeed his continued exertions to diminish human misery, and diffuse the sacred divine knowledge. In some future letters, we shall improve an opportunity to acknowledge the labors which we have received from other gentlemen, who have shewn themselves ready to every good work, disregarding distinctions of nation, land or colour.

Extract.—London, Jan 28.

"In opposition to opinions now circulated in the U. States, the colony at Sierra Leone was never more flourishing. Its internal government is regularly administered; its power fears no assault from the native tribes, and its influence contributes much to the civilization of the adjacent country. Its resources are devoted for the education, christian instruction, and internal improvement of the colony, which must be attended with the happiest results. Its population exceeds ten thousand.

The steam boat Ontario, which was (in a recent storm,) driven on a ledge of flat rock near Oswego, has been got off, and arrived here this morning. We are happy to learn also, that the damage done her is inconsiderable to what has been currently reported. It is expected she will be ready for further operations in a week, or fortnight at the latherest.—Sackets Harbor Gaz.

THE WEATHER.

From last Saturday morning till Thursday morning, the weather was very favorable for sowing, and no doubt as much labour has been performed as possible. During Thursday it blew a strong gale from the south, attended with rain, which ceased towards night. Yesterday it rained a good deal, and the weather has not the appearance of being settled. In the gardens, vegetation is scarcely indicated, and the fruit and forest trees still present the sombre appearance common at the beginning of April.

ACCIDENT.—The following melancholy occurrences have taken place within a few days past:

At Sainte Marie, Nouvelle Beauce, an inhabitant named Joseph Perrault, had fixed in his barn a charged gun, with a string tied to the trigger, in the nature of a spring gun, with a view no doubt of punishing suspected depredators. His wife had occasion to go to the barn to fodder the cattle, and though apprized of the gun, which she carefully avoided on entering the barn, yet on returning with the hay, she unhappily came into contact with the string, when the gun went off and the contents entered one of her thighs, and occasioned almost instant death.—Mercury.

On Saturday morning, the 2d inst. a groom belonging to the Castle of St. Lewis, was found dead in the stable, occasioned by excessive drinking.

Expedition to the Northern Seas.

We have already mentioned the Officers who will serve in this expedition, and have occasionally stated some particulars concerning it. The following are further details upon the subject :—The Isabella, Capt. Ross's ship, is now fitting out in the dock of Messrs. Dowson, Limehouse : a fine roomy vessel, of 350 to 370 tons. She is there undergoing much much more than a complete repair ; for the shipwrights are increasing the strength of the hull, by adding a new skin to the outside, each of 5 or 6 inches thick, while many beams of large dimensions are placed on the bow and stern. The expense of this extraordinary preparation for a particular service, estimated at nearly £5000, will be paid by Government. The hire of the vessels is at the rate of 10s. per ton per month ; but, as Government take the insurance, which is fixed at 3s. 6d. the price to the owners, upon the return of the vessels, is 6s. 6d. The crew of the Isabella will be about 50 ; the officers and passengers about 20. No expence is spared to provide for the comforts of both classes.—Stanncheons are fixed on board for the erection of a roof over the deck, in the event of their being locked up in the ice. The births or bed places are capable of being removed on shore, and canvas and tarpaulins of large size are provided to be fixed over them. Coals to the amount of 150 tons, and flour for three years will be carried out, with sour kraut, vinegar, and lime juice in abundance. A new kind of log is fixed, the machinery of which runs from the cabin down the side of the rudder, nearly to the keel. The purpose is to shew, by a dial in the cabin, the rate of the vessel's sailing ; but doubts are entertained whether it may not impede the sailing of the ship, and otherwise fail of its purpose, so that no great reliance is placed upon this experiment. The voyage, if unsuccessful, is expected to terminate about Sept. 1819 ; if it be successful, and that the navigators return by the Indian seas, a reward of £20,000 will be distributed amongst the crews. Notwithstanding this, and an allowance of £3 per month, a difficulty is found in obtaining suitable hands for a voyage, and the vessels will complete their crews at the Orkneys, the great rendezvous of seamen for the Greenland service. Spare rudders, anchors, capstans, masts, spars, and boats, are carried by the vessels.

The following is a correct list of the officers appointed to command the ships destined to explore the Northern regions :—

Isabella 382 tons, complement 47 men : John Ross Commander ; William Roberston (b), Lieutenant William Thorn, purser ; Chs. J. Beverly, Assistant Surgeon ; Andrew M. Skeen & James C. Ross Admiralty Midshipmen.

Alexander, 250 tons, complement 33 men : W. Edw. Parry, Lieutenant and Commander ; Henry P. Hopper, Lieutenant ; Wm. H. H. Hooper, purser ; Alx. Fisher, Assistant-Surgeon ; Joseph Nias and Philip Bassou, Admiralty midshipmen.

Dorothea, 369 tons, complement 48 men : David Buchan, Commander ; Arthur Morell, Lieutenant ; J. Jarmitine, purser ; W. C. Borland, Assistant Surgeon ; Charles Palmer and W. J. Daley, Admiralty Midshipmen.

Trent, 230 tons, complement 33 men ; S. Franklin, Lieutenant and Commander ; Frek. Wm. Beechy, Lieutenant ; William Barret, purser ; Alexander Gillellan, Assistant-Surgeon ; Andrew Reed and George Back, Admiralty Midshipmen.

It is ordered, that, in future no Midshipman shall pass his examination for the rank of Lieutenant, until he has completed his six years mituitory service required to make him competent for the rank. There were seven passed at the Naval College, Portsmouth, last month, upon the old order.

The following changes in the naval commands are stated as being about to commence : Portsmouth, Admiral Sir George Campbell, Vice Admiral Sir E. Thornborough ; Sheerness, Admiral Sir J. Gore, Vice Admiral Sir Charles Rowley ; Cork, Admiral Sir J. Bowley, Vice Admiral Sir Benjamin Hollowell ; Malta, Admiral Sir C. Moore, Vice Admiral Sir Charles Penrose.

THE POLAR ICE.

Among the changes and vicissitudes to which the physical constitution of our globe is perpetually subject, one of the most extraordinary, and from which the most interesting and important results may be anticipated, appears to have taken place in the course of the last two or three years, and is still in operation. The convulsion of an earthquake and the eruption of a volcano force themselves into notice by the dismay and devastation with which, in a greater or less degree, they are almost always attended : but the event to which we allude has been so quietly accomplished, that it might have remained unknown, but for an extraordinary change, which a few intelligent navigators remarked in the state of the arctic ice, and the reports of the unusual quantities of this ice observed in the Atlantic. As it is a subject in which the British islands are particularly interested, we shall enter into some detail of the facts and of their probable consequences.

It is generally admitted that, for the last four hundred years, an extensive portion of the eastern coast of Old Greenland has been shut up by an impenetrable barrier of ice, and with it, the diffated Norwegian or Danish colonies, which had been established there for more than an equal length of time preceding that unfortunate catastrophe, and who were thus cut off at once from all communication with the mother country ;—that various attempts have been made from time to time to approach this coast with a view of ascertaining the fate of the unfortunate colonists, but in vain, the ice being every where impervious ; and that, all hopes being at length abandoned, that part of this extensive tract which faces the east took the appropriate name of Lost Greenland.

The event to which we have alluded is the disappearance of the whole, or greater part of this vast barrier of ice. This extraordinary fact, so interesting to science and humanity, appears to rest on no slender foundation. Both its disappearance in a more southern latitude, have been witnessed by various persons worthy of credit.—It has been observed in the summer-months of the year 1817, by ships coming from the West Indies and America, as well as by those going out to Halifax and Newfoundland, that islands of ice, unusual in magnitude and number, occurred in the Atlantic, many of them as far down as the fortieth parallel of latitude. Some of these were detached ice-bergs, from a hundred to a hundred and thirty feet above the water, and several miles in circumference ; others were flat islands of packed ice, presenting so vast an extent of surface, that a ship from Boston is said to have been three days entangled in it, near the tail of the Grand Bank of Newfoundland. The ship of the Unitas Fratrum, proceeding to the mission on Ol i Greenland was, as year, eleven days beset, on the coast of Labrador, with the ice bergs, many of which had huge rocks upon them, gravel, soil, and pieces of wood. The packet from Halifax, passed, in April last, a mountain of ice nearly two hundred feet in height, and at least two miles in circumference.—By accounts from Newfoundland, Halifax, and other northern ports of America, it would appear, that greater quantities of ice were seen in the month of May, June, and July, than have ever been witnessed by the oldest navigators ; and that the whole island of Newfoundland was so completely environed with it, that the vessels employed in the fishery were unable to get out to sea to follow their usual occupations. The source from which these enormous masses proceeded could not long be concealed. It was well known to the Greenland fishermen, that from Staatenhock, the southern promontory of Old Greenland, an uninterrupted barrier of ice stretched north-easterly or parallel nearly to the coast, approaching frequently to the very shores of Iceland ; and that the small island, situated in lat. 71 deg. 11 min. long. 6 deg 30 min. W. called Jan Mayen's island, (a sort of land mark which those engaged in the seal fishery always endeavored to make,) had of late years been completely enveloped in ice ; and that from this point it generally took a more easterly direction, till it became fixed to the shores of Spitzbergen, from 76 to the 80th degree of latitude.

The more central parts of this immense area of ice, which occupy the mid-channel between Greenland and Spitzbergen, separate frequently into large portions, change their position according to the winds and tides ; but the general direction in which they move with the currents is from north-east to south-west, or directly towards that part of Old Greenland where the Danish colonies were supposed to be established, and which are immediately opposite to Iceland. Here it would seem those masses became a kind of fixed nucleus, round which a succession of floating fields of ice attached themselves, till the accumulated barrier, probably by its own weight and magnitude, and the action of the impeded current, at length burst its fetters, and has been carried away to the south-ward. This at least appears to be the most probable conjecture, though another circumstance will hereafter be adverted to, not unworthy of attention, in endeavouring to account for the phenomenon.

It had been conjectured by the philosophers, that the remarkable chilliness of the atmosphere, during the two last summers, and more particularly with western winds, could only be owing to the accumulation, or rather to the approximation of the polar ice to the southward. The reports of the Greenland fishermen, on their return in August 1817, connected with accounts of the ice seen in the Atlantic, corroborated this hypothesis. In that month there appeared in the news papers a paragraph, stating that, "in the course of the season, the commander of a brig from Bremen, after making Jan Mayen's island, in about 71 deg. N. stood to the westward in quest of seals ; that he then sailed nearly due north along this coast without seeing ice, observing the bays and inlets and other appearances of the land, till he came to lat. 81 deg. 30 min., when he found that he could steer to the west, which he did for several days ; that he then lost sight of land, and directed his course to the southward and eastward, and in 70 deg. N. fell in with the first fishing vessel he had seen.' We took some pains to ascertain the truth of this statement, and found it corroborated in almost every particular by five different masters of whalers belonging to Aberdeen, and to London, to whom, at different times, Ol of Ocken (the person alluded to,) master of the Eleanors of Hamburg (not of Bremen,) had given an account of the course which he steered along the eastern coast of Greenland, from Jan Mayen's island to the degree of latitude above mentioned ; and it appears, from the joint testimony of the captain and surgeon of the Princess of Wales of Aberdeen, that "the reckoning in his logbook was worked at the end of every watch, a practice which is also common among British whalers after making the ice ;" and that 'both the master and mate were very intelligent navigators.' Since that time we have received from Hamburgh a copy of Captain Ocken's log, a chart of his route, and a letter addressed by him to Messrs. Elliott and Co. of Hamburgh ; from all which it appears that he coasted Greenland with the land in sight, and among loose ice, but that the most northerly point which he saw was about 80 deg. N. latitude.

But we have the direct testimony of Mr. Scoresby the younger, a very intelligent navigator of the Greenland seas, for the disappearance of an immense quantity of arctic ice. In a letter to Sir Joseph Banks, he says, 'I observed on my last voyage (1817) about two thousand square leagues (10,000 square miles) of the surface of the Greenland seas, included between the parallels 84 deg. and 80 deg. perfectly void of ice all which has disappeared within the last two years.' And he further states, that though on former voyages he had very rarely been able to penetrate the ice, between the latitudes of 76 deg. and 80 deg. so far to the west as the meridian of Greenwich, on his last voyage, he twice reached the longitude of 10 deg. W. ; that, in the parallel of 74 deg. he approached the coast of Old Greenland ; that there was little ice near the land ; and adding, 'that there could be no doubt but he might have reached the shore had he had a justifiable motive for navigating an unknown sea at so late a season of the year.' He also found the sea so clear in returning to the southward, that the actually landed on Jan Mayen's island, which is usually surrounded with a barrier of ice, and brought away specimens of the rocks.

Another fact deserves to be mentioned.—Dr. Olinthus Gregory, who sailed from Shetland to Peterhead in the Neptune of Aberdeen, on her return from the fishery, is said to have reported that Driscole, the master, not only landed on the east coast of Greenland about the latitude of 70 deg. but found and brought away a post bearing an inscription, in Russian characters, that a ship of that nation had been there in the year 1774 ; which post with its inscription was seen on board by Dr. Gregory. It would seem indeed that the northern part of the east coast of Greenland has been approached at various times by different nations—Dutch, Danes and Englis—Hudson in 1607, saw the coast nearly in the same latitude as that where Driscole is supposed to have landed ; and actually sent a boat on shore in 80 deg. 23 min. It is from Hudson's 'Hold with Hope,' in about 70 deg. to Cape Farewell that the ice fixed itself to the land from which it has recently been detached.

That this is the case we can state from the best authority :—intelligence was received at Copenhagen, from Iceland, in September last, of the ice having broken loose from the opposite coast of Greenland, and floated away to the southward, after surrounding the shores, and filling all the bays and creeks of that island ; and this afflicting visitation was repeated in the same year, a circumstance hitherto unknown.

It would be a waste of words to enter into any discussion on the diminution of the temperature, which must necessarily be occasioned by the proximity of vast mountains of islands of ice.—The authentic annals of Iceland describe this island as having once been covered with impervious woods ; and numerous places still bear the name of 'forest,' which produce only a few miserable dwarf birches of five or six feet high, and in which all attempts to rise a tree of any kind have for ages proved unavailing. The most intelligent travellers, who, in our time, have visited this island, bear testimony to the fact of large logs of wood being dug out of bogs, and found between the rocks and in the valleys. It is also said that good culinary vegetables were once produced on it ; but the cabbages were there by Mr Hooker, in the month of August, were so diminutive that a half crown piece would have covered the whole plant. Nothing but a deterioration of climate could have wrought these changes ; and this can only be explained by a vast increase of floating ice. 'which,' says Hooker, 'not only fills all the bays, but covers the sea to that extent from the shore, that the eye cannot trace its boundary from the summit of the highest mountains.' Sometimes it connects the island to the continent with Greenland whose ice white bears come over in such shivering numbers that the inhabitants assemble and wage a national war against them. These masses of ice drive about with such rapidity, and rush against one another with so much violence that the floating wood brought along with them is said sometimes to take fire by the friction. During this conflict, the weather is unsettled and stormy, but when once the ice becomes fixed to the land, the air thickens, and dense fogs, accompanied by a moist and penetrating cold, destroy all vegetation, and the cattle perish.

If such be the facts, and they cannot well be questioned, with regard to these countries, it is equally clear that our own climate, though in a less degree, must have been affected by this vast accumulation of ice on the east coast of Greenland. The distance between the centre of Iceland and Edinburg is not more than twice, and that from Iceland to London, not above three times, the distance between Iceland and the east coast of Greenland. That our climate has been more particularly affected in the course of the last three years by the descent of the ice into the Atlantic, and more especially in the summers of the years 1816 and 1817, is a matter of record ; for on comparing by the meteorological register of the royal society, the four summer months, May, June, July and August, of 1816, 1817 and 1818, with the four corresponding months of the last three years, it will be seen that a very considerable diminution of temperature has taken place in the latter periods.

The invention of the thermometer and the registry of temperature are of too recent a date to enable us to compare the state of the atmosphere, before and after the accumulation of ice on the coast of Greenland ; but there are reasons for believing, that previously to the fifteenth century, England enjoyed a warmer summer climate than since that period. It is sufficiently apparent that, at one time, vineyards were very common in England ; and that wine, in very considerable quantity, was made from them. Tacitus states, that vineyards were planted by the Romans in Britain ; and Holinshed quotes the permission given by Probus, to the natives to cultivate the vine, and make wine for their own use. The testimony of Bede—the old notices of titles on wine, which were common in Kent, Surrey, and other southern countries—the record of suits in the ecclesiastical courts—the inclosed patches of ground called Vineyards—and even village names, which still bear the name of vineyard—the plot of ground called East Smithfield, which was converted into a vineyard, and held by four successive constables of the Tower, in the reigns of Rufus and Stephen, to their great emolument and profit, seem to remove all doubt on this question.—The Isle of Ely was named, in the early times of the Normans, 'Isle de Vignes,' the bishop of which received three or four tons of wine, yearly, for his tithe. So late as the reign of Richard II. a little park at Windsor was appropriated as a vineyard, for the use of the castle ; and William of Malmesbury asserts, that the vale of Gloucester produced in the twelfth century as good wine as many of the provinces of France

To us a prospect far more gloomy than the mere loss of wine had begun to present itself, the increasing chilliness of our summer months. It is too well known that there was not sufficient warmth in the summer of 1816 to ripen the grain ; and it is generally thought, that if the last or twelve days of but weather at the end of June had not occurred, most of the corn must have perished. From these melancholy prospects, however, we feel ourselves considerably relieved. We think it is not unreasonable to presume that our summer climate (now the winter too, as it follows from the western quarter) may become ameliorated ; for though we are aware that the changes of temperature depend on a variety of causes, yet the single effect of an extraordinary cooling and condensing power of so many square miles of ice, rushing directly upon the British islands from the westward, may have equalled all the rest in its diminishing power.

CURIOUS INCIDENT.

The following relation is given by gentlemen who were witnesses of the fact, while going up James River, on Friday last in the Steam Boat Powhatan.

As passing Day's Point they observed an Eagle, which, after hovering about the shore for some time, made a sudden dart into the water, where he remained, out of sight, about two seconds, and then re-appeared bearing in his talons a fish apparently three feet in length.—In a minute or two, however, he plunged again into the water, and again appeared with his prey. This operation he repeated a second time, still holding the fish in his claws ; a third time he descended within, but was seen no more ! The conjecture was that the Eagle had got his talons so deeply inserted in his ashy prize, that he could not extricate them, and his strength was not adequate to bear it away to the shore.

The probability, (says a Correspondent,) that the Eagle mentioned in a late paper, had entangled its talons in the vertebræ of a fish, which proved too heavy to be supported until it could reach the land, and thereby lost his life, is corroborated by the following instance, related by Mr. Scudder, proprietor of the American Museum in this city :—

In 1801 or 2, an Albany sloop, becalmed, was gently drifting on her passage through the Highlands. An Eagle was observed in the river, fluttering its wings in vain efforts to rise. Some hands in the boat rowed off, and, with a line cast round the body of the Eagle, drew it along side and took it away on board, together with a large Bass that weighed 34 pounds, into which it had struck its talons, which became so inserted between the joints of the vertebræ, as to prevent extrication.—The Eagle [of the bald species] was brought alive to this city, and was purchased by Mr. Savage, who at that time kept a museum which Mr. Scudder attended.—*N. RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

A GENTLEMAN of this Country, who for some years past, has been anxiously endeavouring to compleat a set of the OLD ANNUAL REGISTER, first published by Dodsley, which is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable works ever given to the world, and a compleat Library in itself; being still in want of a few Volumes, commissioned a friend to procure them in England last fall: owing to some mistake, the London Bookseller to whom the order was sent, after much needless labour and cost, for the entire work is now rare and very difficult to be procured, got together a whole set, uniformly and very elegantly bound, and sent them out to this country. The consequence is, that the duplicates must either be returned or disposed of, but rather than return them immediately, the present holder wishes to offer them at prime cost to the public, and any Gentleman desirous of forming a Library, will find this an opportunity that very seldom occurs.—The entire set consists of 37 Volumes, which cost in England £37 7s. Sterling. The broken set wanting only 6 or 7 Volumes, which may be readily procured, cost £45. The Purchaser may have his choice. The work is still, and will be annually continued. VALUABLE LANDS
For Sale.

THE following singularly desirable, and truly valuable Lands may be had, and immediate possession given, with undeniable titles, at rates far below their real value; and it is but seldom, even in a country so extensive as Canada, where uncultivated Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, in good neighbourhoods, can be secured.

Lot 1. Comprising 70 Acres of the very richest Beech, Maple, Elm and Oak Land, in the 4th Concession of Horn, lying upon Smith's Creek, with 15 acres cleared and fenced, new log-house, well built and dove-tailed, fruit trees, &c. with a mill-seat, between 4 and 5 miles from the flourishing little Town of Toronto, on Lake Ontario, where there is an excellent market either for buying or selling. The Land is of the very first quality, and in a good populous neighbourhood, forming altogether a most desirable residence, within a short mile of the great road between York and Kingston.

2d. 200 Acres, being Lot No. 1, in the 5th Concession of Horn, alongside the great road between Hope and Hamilton, leading to the new and flourishing settlements of Cavan & Monaghan, on the Rice Lake, in which more than 500 families and persons have actually located, and scarcely five miles from the Town of Toronto, where there is a good market; it is in an old settlement, and the neighbourhood is populous and excellent. There are about 30 acres cleared and fenced, with a fine stream of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

3d. 190 Acres, occupying nearly one entire side of the Gannanoque Lake, in the Township of South Crosby, District of Johnstown, consisting wholly of broken fronts, the back parts extending to the road from the Rideau Settlement to Kingston, from which latter place it is scarcely 30 miles distant. The Land is good and well timbered, and the situation singularly beautiful and romantic, with wooded islands in front.

The above Lands are particularly deserving of notice. The situations were chosen by a competent judge, and they will be sold remarkably cheap, the proprietor wishing to concentrate his forces in another quarter.

LONDON, March 23.

Worcester.—A singular occurrence took place before Mr. Justice Park, who presided on the criminal side at these assizes; Several persons had been tried, when a note was sent up to the Judge, intimating, that a young man was sitting on the jury who was not a freeholder, consequently he was not eligible to be a juror. The learned judge instantly instituted an inquiry, and it shortly afterwards appeared that the young man's name was John Taylor, and that he had answered to the name of William Taylor, he being his father, who was unable to attend, and in consequence sent his son to answer for him in his name.—Mr. Justice Park, at first, thought that the trial of the prisoners was not legal, and therefore he should be under the necessity of trying them over again; but, upon looking into several authorities, he found that there was a precedent for it, and he discharged the juvenile juror, with a severe reprimand; admonishing him never to push himself into a character of so much responsibility, under a misrepresentation.

Lambeth-street—Bullock-hunting. Robbery, &c.

Yesterday George Yardley, John Howells and John Rippon, three notorious characters, being part of an extensive gang, were brought up in the custody of Darlton, Fortune, and Foster, officers belonging to this office, charged under circumstances of the most disgraceful nature, of which the following are the particulars:—

It appeared that some villains, on Wednesday morning last, entered the back part of the premises of Mr. Sheffield, butcher, of High-street, Algate, and stole therefrom three fine bullocks (which had been brought from the country the day previous) for the purpose, as it appeared, of creating a riot and crowd, to enable them to commit depredations about the town. On the evening of the same day, about dusk, from 800 to 1000 persons of the most depraved and infamous characters, assembled in a field near Stepney Fair, and had the bullocks secured with halters round their necks, till an appointed time, when they were let loose and hunted by men up and down through different streets, and the utmost confusion was raised about the town, in consequence of the whole of the gang pursuing them, being armed with sticks, bludgeons, and other weapons, and pelting stones, to the great danger of the passengers; they took their route towards Whitechapel, and several persons on the road were tossed by the animals; a Mrs. Williams, who lives in Lambeth-street, was walking along with her child in her arms, and was tossed by it, and she and her infant were injured in a dreadful manner, and conveyed home. A porter who was proceeding along North-street, Whitechapel, with a chest of drawers on his head, was likewise tossed, his drawers were smashed, and himself gored and injured in a terrible manner, having one of his arms broken; he was taken to a surgeon's and a dangerous condition. Several other persons were tossed and materially injured. The villains drove the poor beasts about the town for a considerable time, till they became in a state of madness, and every person made way for them; they next drove down Hare-street, Spitalfields, one of which, one of the animals, which was more infuriated than the others, rushed into the warehouse of Messrs. Rose or and Jaques, dyers, of that street, being followed into the shop, by a number of villains who commenced their attack; the whole of the windows were smashed, and likewise the panels at the sides of the shop, and great injury was done to other parts, as likewise the property. The persons employed on the premises were dreadfully injured by the animal, and were infamously maltreated by the robbers who followed it. At length the men who worked in the shop succeeded in turning the villains out, and managed to shut and bolt the doors; notwithstanding, the prisoners, and a great body of their companions broke open the place, and acted with the utmost violence with their sticks, &c; and finding all measures to quell the riot, and prevent them from robbing the place ineffectual, the persons in the warehouse who were furnished with fire-arms, threatened to fire on the depredators, if they did not desist from their purpose, and being disregarded, they, after subsequent entreaties, fired upon the mob, and four or five of the villains received the contents of the fire-arms, and were carried off from the place by their vile companions, supposed for surgical assistance. During this time the other two animals were hunted by more of the mob round the adjacent parts; and information having been received of the disgraceful transaction at the above office, Dalton, Fortune, and Foster, were dispatched instantly to quell the riot, and apprehend the delinquents.—On their going to the place, it was in the utmost consternation, but a party of the Worship-street officers succeeded in dispersing the rioters, and Dalton, Fortune, and Foster, at the peril of their lives, rushed and seized the prisoners, who were armed with tremendous bludgeons, and appeared most active in the affair, and brought them in custody to the office. During the time the mob was in Hare-street, several persons had their pockets picked, and some completely off.—An officer of Whitechapel, named Richard Punket, was knocked down on the ground, and beat by some of the villains with their sticks and bludgeons, till they almost murdered him, and he now lies in a deplorable condition at his residence in Whitechapel. The two animals that were drove about the street, during the transaction at the above warehouse, were with some difficulty taken home to Mr. Sheffield's premises; but the other being in too dangerous a state to be let loose, they were necessitated to have it slaughtered in the warehouse, and afterwards conveyed home. The prisoners are all ill looking fellows, well known by the officers. On being searched, no property was found on them, but their sticks appeared to have been much use in the affray. Several witnesses were present to give evidence, which being satisfactory, the prisoners were fully committed to Newgate to take their trial.

THE ROYAL NUPTIALS.

Marriage of the Princess Elizabeth and the Prince of Hesse Homberg.

Tuesday evening the marriage of her royal Highness the Princess Elizabeth (third daughter of their Majesties) with Philip Augustus Frederick, the hereditary prince of Hesse Homberg, took place at the queen's palace. Ever since the introduction of his serene highness to her royal highness about two years ago, a correspondence has been kept up. The amiable and endearing qualities of her royal highness are well known. The solemnization of the nuptials having been finally agreed upon, cards of invitation were issued between two and three weeks since to the foreign ambassadors and ministers, with their ladies; the lord chancelior, and cabinet ministers, with their ladies; the deputy earl marshal of England; the great officers of state, with those of the household of the king and queen, and of the Windsor establishment; the suites of the royal dukes and duchesses; the lord chief justice of the court of king's bench, with other distinguished characters who were to perform and assist at the solemnization of the marriage ceremony. A great profusion of wedding cakes have been preparing for several weeks past by Mr. Barker, the queen's confectioner, which were most liberally distributed to the different royal establishments in the course of yesterday as well as in the evening to the company who were honoured with being invited to be present; and which liberally extended to the attendants and others. It was handsomely enclosed in two white papers, sealed up. The splendid saloon in the queen's palace, which is considered one of the largest and best proportioned rooms in London, was the place determined on for the solemnization of the marriage ceremony. An altar was ordered to be fitted up under the magnificent throne which was erected there as the queen's throne, for the purpose of receiving the addresses upon the marriages of the princess Charlotte and the duchess of Gloucester. The whole was covered with crimson velvet, ornamented with gold lace, from the Chapel Royal, St. James's Palace, and Whitehall Chapel, with the cushions and stools. The gold communion plate was from both chapels; and combined together was one of the most splendid exhibitions that ever was displayed upon any similar occasion; part of it is very ancient, having belonged to king William. There were three remarkably large salvers, or dishes richly ornamented, one of them representing our Lord's Last Supper with his Disciples, with appropriate and emblematical devices in the compartments. There were two immensely large flagons from the Chapel Royal beautifully chased, and a number of ewers. Also several chalices, or cups of solid gold. Each corner had most superbly gilt tripods for six candles.

His serene highness' suite consisted of baron O'Nagitieu, baron de Gerning, baron de Krane, and lord Stewart. The company began to arrive at a quarter before seven o'clock, and had all assembled before eight. The queen took her station in a most splendid chair of state to the left of the altar, prepared for her reception. The different branches of the royal family took their stations accordingly to their rank. The archbishop of Canterbury and the bishop of London appeared at the altar, the latter attending as bishop of the diocese and dean of the chapel royal. Every thing being properly arranged for the ceremony to commence, the lord chamberlain retired and introduced his serene highness the prince of Hesse Homberg, between the dukes of Clarence and Kent; his serene highness was attended to the altar by baron O'Nagitieu, baron de Gerning, and baron Krane. His serene highness was dressed in his general's uniform, and wore several of his orders, grand crosses, &c. having ten in the whole. The lord chamberlain retired again, and introduced her royal Highness the princess Elizabeth, who was conducted to the altar by the duke of Clarence and Kent; the duke of York appeared to give her away, the prince regent not only being absent in consequence of his being quite recovered from the slight attack of the gout, but would, it was understood, not have been present at all events, owing to a similar scene having been fresh in his recollection in the marriage of his beloved daughter, the princess Charlotte. After the ceremony had concluded, the female attendants had the honour to kiss the bride's hand.

As soon as the ceremony had concluded, a signal was given from the palace to serjeant Clegg, who had received orders from the board of ordnance, to announce, by the discharge of forty-one cannon, the joyous event; and they were accordingly discharged upon the occasion.

After the ceremony had concluded, er majesty received the congratulations of all the distinguished characters present.

The bride and bridegroom retired; and having taken off their splendid dresses, his serene highness appeared in a full ball dress, and her royal highness in a white satin pelisse and a nun's veil. They left the palace soon after nine o'clock in her royal highness' landaulet and four, for the prince regent's cottage at Windsor. The duke of York handed his royal sister to her carriage.

Lord Palmerston.—An attempt at assassination upon the person of Lord Palmerston, took place on Wednesday last, by a man named David Davies, a lieutenant, it is stated, in the 62d regt. His Lordship had just alighted from his horse, and was ascending the flight of stairs leading to the War-Office, when the pistol was discharged at him. The ball struck him just above the hip, but fortunately, only grazed the skin, and produced a slight contusion on the back. Mr. Astley Cooper was immediately sent for, and his Lordship was soon enabled to be conveyed to his own house. it appears that Davies waited for some time for Lord Palmerston's return from riding, during which he took his seat on a bench for porters, to the left behind the glass door, opening out from the arch way at the Horse Guards. His Lordship on alighting turned up the stairs to his right and presented his back to the assassin, who immediately fired. Lord Palmerston being an active man, and mounting the stairs with agility, the assassin failed in his aim.—The bullet was found upon the stairs—Davies was immediately taken into custody, and conveyed to Queen-square Police Office. On being seized by the Messenger, he exclaimed with exultation, "I have killed him." During his examination, he appeared perfectly collected, but complained of grievances and referred to Lord Palmerston for an explanation respecting them. He observed that his misfortunes had reduced him to the necessity of either killing Lord Palmerston or himself. He seems about 25 years of age, short in stature, and of mild manners. The Magistrate remanded him for another examination, and he was taken to Tothill-fields, where he was ordered every comfort the place of his confinement could afford, but by no means to be left alone.

The prisoner is reported to have put forward claims for a pension, on account of the loss of a limb in the service. As a foundation for this claim, he had so mutilated himself, as to leave no doubt of his being insane. Lord Palmerston pitied the man, and it is said, was disposed to do something for him if possible. He is a native of Wales, and has a brother in the navy; his father was a military officer. He was himself sent time an officer in the West Middlesex Militia, in which he retained the rank of Lieutenant when he volunteered to join the militia corps which offered its services for the army of Lord Wellington, in the year 1814. In consequence of this volunteering, he was appointed to a Lieutenancy in the 62d regiment, with which he served for some time in Canada. He was lately placed upon half pay, and has not long returned from Canada.

Two measures of extreme importance were on Thursday brought forward in the House of Commons by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The first was the continuance of the Restriction on Cash Payments by the Bank for another year. The reasons for which were declared to be—the bad harvest of 1816, and the specie sent abroad to purchase corn—the emigration and residence of individuals abroad; 90,150 having embarked at Dover from 1814 to the 24th of February last, of whom 12,700 remain abroad, and whose average expenditure is calculated at £2,540,000 a-year—the residence of our army in France, whose private expenditure is also great—and lastly the considerable foreign loans. These, and the consequent disappearance of specie as soon as it was issued, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, distinctly stated, were the circumstances which had determined the measure; the Bank was otherwise fully prepared to make good its payments as originally arranged.—The other measure is intended to provide—that after the 5th day of July, 1820, no private banker in England or Ireland shall issue notes under the value of £5, without sufficient deposit of Government securities, consisting of either, of stock, or of exchequer bills. The plan is with a view to engage men of real property in banking concerns, and to exclude those who have not such property, and who cannot give available security for their issues; and the supposed outline is, that every private banker should transfer in the name of the Commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, an amount of exchequer bills equal in value to the amount of the notes to be issued, or a quantity of stock double the amount of the nominal value. After a deposit of stock and exchequer bills, if a private banker issues notes, they shall be stamped in a way to denote that sufficient security has been deposited, and that they are given on the faith of that security. Five pound notes, or those for any larger sum, are to remain on the present footing—that is, on the security of the bankers who issue them.

Sir John Murray, M. P. for Weymouth, the hero of Tarragona, is to have the 58th regiment, vacant by the death of the Hon. Gen. Norton. Sir James Kempt, succeeds to the 3d West India regiment, vice Sir John Murray.—Gen. Don, from the 95th is to succeed the late Gen. St. John, as Colonel of the 56th regiment, and Sir T. Hislop, is to have the 95th.

Drowned off Portsmouth, on the 21st of February, by the overturning of a boat in a sudden squall of wind, Mr. Edward N. Longmore, aged 18, midshipman, on board His Majesty's ship Rochfort, and second son of the late George Longmore, Esq. Medical staff, Quebec.

Died, at Edinburgh, on the 25th of February, Lieutenant-Colonel G. Robertson, late Canadian Fencibles.

On Tuesday arrived at Portsmouth the Leveret sloop of war, Capt. Tassel, from St. Helena, in eight weeks, having sailed the 27th of January.

Bonaparte continues to persevere in that inert, secluded manner of living which he a long time ago imposed upon himself; and which has been attended by most evident bad effects upon his health.—Sir. O'Meara, his surgeon, it is understood, has warned him that the consequences may prove fatal, and that speedily, unless he should take exercise in the open air.—It is conjectured that this pertinacious adherence to his first formed resolution, is intended to induce the relaxation in the orders which restrict his going abroad beyond certain limits without attendance by an English Officer. Admiral Plampin had taken up his residence on shore, at the Briars. Every article of his is extravagantly dear; as an instance, it is stated that among the domestic expences incurred by Madame Bertrand, for her own family only, is £250 per year for washing linen.

LONDON, March 29.

Arctic Expedition.—Yesterday morning, about two o'clock, Captain Melville, accompanied by major Wardell, and Lieutenants Moore, and Sir J. Yorke, Barts, arrived at Deptford dock-yard where they were received by Commissioner Cunningham, the officers of the ships, the said Captains Ross, and Buchanan, and lieutenant Parry, and shortly after viewed in tow of the Arctic regions. They were received with the usual honours, and proceeded to inspect the equipment of the vessels now fitting out. They went through the various exercises with lanthorns, and displayed his dexterity in throwing the darts, &c.—Viscount Melville and the other gentlemen returned to town in the evening. The vessels are expected to be ready for sea in a fortnight. At the Nore, double wages to the officers and men will be paid, after which they proceed to Scotland. The equipment of these ships no expence has been spared in providing for the comfort and convenience of all on board. The interior and exterior of each vessel have been rendered as strong as the union of iron and wood can effect. The windows in the cabins have been doubled, and at the bottom of each is a thick piece of wood. From the upper gallery, copper pipes can be extended between decks for diffusing warmth through every part, by means of the steam arising from culinary operations. The usual practice of sleeping in hammocks is departed from, and instead of each person has fitted up a small place with sliding doors, containing a bed, so that it may be said each individual has a separate cabin; these places are so constructed that they can be taken out entire, for removal on shore, should either sea sickness render it necessary. The ballast consists entirely of coals, and the Isabella and Dorothea have each nearly 100 chaldrons on board; and the officers assure us that they can steer away. Meats of every description, that can be preserved are on board, as also large supplies of portable soups; together with extensive assortments of woollens, hosiery, and all kinds of warm clothing. The vessels are provided with ice-boats, and fishing gear for catching whales. Captain Ross goes up Davis's Straits as high as 76; when he will endeavour to proceed to the westward, by which ever direction circumstances may point out as most practicable. Captain Buchan goes direct to the Pole; and, if he reaches there, will take such course as events will allow him for steering's straits, which is also the object of Capt. Ross. Some experienced navigators of the Greenland seas are on board, to act as pilots in the ice; as also astronomers and other scientific gentlemen to assist the naval officers. In the event of the ships returning, they are to bring home each a cargo of blubber for the owners, in four tanks, by which a saving to government on the hire of the vessels to nearly £10,000 will be effected. Sir Joseph Banks has daily communications with the Ministers on the subject of the expedition. On Friday he was at the Admiralty nearly two hours.

It is expected that the next, or follow ing mail from Madrid, will bring news the royal Ordonnance, fully specifying the articles of discussion to be admitted into the four ports established in Spain.

The private letters from Paris contradict the report that the Pope had announced the new Concordat, in consideration of the opposition of the Gallican Bishops to the measure. It is said, has declared that he must refuse to consent to any modification of this treaty which may be proposed by the present Government.

A Mail arrived on Friday from Holland. The king of the Netherlands, with a view to reducing the public expenditure, has presented a new regulation with regard to the appointments to vacant offices. From Brussels it is stated that the Government is preparing the Army Estimates for France in the event of hostilities. The Recruiting Act still begin to be carried into effect in France early the next month. The half pay officers, who served in St. Domingo and Egypt, are to be called into active service. All the Russian Ambassadors at Stockholm have either peremptorily, or in writing, congratulated Charles John upon his accession.

Letters from Copenhagen confirm the report that the English Government proposes to purchase from Spain the island of Puerto Rico, for the purpose of making it a free port, on the cession of Trinidad, and the other Danish possessions in the West Indies. Amounting to another report, England has offered four millions of dollars for the Danish settlements in the East Indies.

The Earl of Kent, Henry Fitzalan Howard, deceased, died at a house he had taken for a time residing in consequence of a fall into the river Ganges, and lingered some months in the journey without changing the wet clothes.

A Monument to the memory of Sir Ralph Abercrombie is about to be erected at Edinburgh, by subscription, in honor of the late Lord Melville, in commemorate his friendship's active and able administration of the British navy during the period he held the office of First Lord of the Admiralty.

Those who have access to Count Palmella and the Duke of Fernan Nunez, declare that the differences between Portugal and Spain have, within a few days, in the strongest manner, assumed a character of serious and unfavorable; and this to a degree that those seem to be an impossibility of a peace and tranquillity not require, unless the difficulties between the two Courts are speedily settled. To this matter, as in all of a great and decided interest, much is expected from the personal influence of the Duke of Wellington. It would certainly be a very great misfortune if hostilities should, at this time, take place between Spain and Portugal, either on the banks of the Tagus or on those of the Rio de la Plata. It is observed with pain, that since the arrival of the Spanish squadron at Cadiz, the tone of the Spanish Ministry has become much more peremptory.

We have every reason to believe that the cabinet feels a particular interest in these affairs, and cannot see in the strict correspondence with the other great Powers of Europe, if not able, any actual rupture. On Thursday, Viscount Castlereagh came to town from his seat at North-Cray, Kent, and had a long audience of his Royal Highness the Prince Regent. On the Noble Viscount then went to the office, and gave directions to the Under Secretary of State to make up despatches for Russia and Spain.—On Friday, Mr. Robinson and Mr. Peglar, the bankers of the Spanish Ambassador at Cadiz, the former to Russia, and the latter to Spain.

The following letters have reference to the same matters:

Weil esday's, cross named Coleman and the took, for a cargo of one hundred pipes of rum from the Fountain Inn, Dover, to Red Market place, and back again; a distance of eighteen miles in two hours and three quarters. The horses rested five times on the journey and a half, having fifteen minutes to water, and went at the rate of seven miles, one furlong, and twenty-four poles an hour.

A Distressing Letter.—A few days ago a boy called at the house of Mr. Butler, 5 Paddington-street, and presented a letter, which he said was for Mr. Butler, and required an answer. Mrs. Butler, as her husband was out, took up the letter, thinking it was on business, but the moment she opened it, a detonation took place, and something struck her on the face, which caused a momentary pain. On removing from her it fell. Mrs. Butler took up the letter, which only contained the word "Pop!"

MADRID, March 7.

The departments of War and Marine have been much occupied since the arrival of Cadiz of the Russian squadron, which is now only detained by the want of provisions and supplies of ammunition. The ships forming a part of our land service. The squadron of expedition will, it is understood, consist of eight ships of the line and 10 frigates of the first rank, besides 15 transports and several of the smaller class of transport vessels. Almost all the troops which are to be embarked are assembled on the points of Andalusia nearest the Isle of Leon their number will, it is said, amount to about 15,000 men of all arms.

"Those persons who look to the measures of government, with a view to the consequences which may have a marking influence upon the future, will learn, research that a strong division of troops which was last year posted in the province of Estremadura, near the frontiers of Portugal, remains entire at the moment when a considerable force is about to embark; and from this circumstance alone it will not be difficult to form an what may be the result of the negociations between Spain and Portugal respecting the differences arising from the occupation of Monte Video by the Portuguese, and of which it would be of the most important service to the two kingdoms to terminate as soon as possible. Nothing transpires here upon the subject. It is known, however, that the ministers of the undersigned Powers at Paris have received from their Courts full powers to act definitively upon the negociations between Spain and Portugal respecting the differences arising from the occupation of Monte Video by the Portuguese, and that it is said, that the ratifications of the treaty would be exchanged in the course of a few days. The Duke of Fernan Nunez, Spanish Ambassador, and Count de Palmella, are occupied upon it with the greatest solicitude.

"We still further ourselves that an arrangement between Spain and Portugal will take place, whatever may be the difficulties, for it is impossible to suppose there will be an open rupture between Spain and Portugal under existing circumstances. In the event of an unfortunate rupture, the troops destined for America, to, composed of very fine troops, may, if necessary, receive also a destination for America. A report had been circulated that this armament was to have another destination, but the governors had received information, through its confidential agents, that some place on the coast of Cantabria was to be the point of attack. Owing to this, various steps are in movement towards the coast, among which is the regiment that was stationed in Haro, the regiment of Asturias, and two squadrons of Lusitania, which have marched from Valladolid. The militia of Mendoza, Oviedo, &c. are also in motion, and the inhabitants of the Biscayan provinces have received orders to be armed without any distinction of classes.

This morning a Dutch and Hamburg mail reached the post-office, from the papers brought by which we subjoin the following notice;

From the Main, March 18.—It is said, according to public journals, that after Easter Holidays the Diet, in order to promote the trade of Germany, will lay a duty of 50 per cent upon all manufactured goods imported from England.

CHRISTIANA, March 13.

On the 28th February, His Majesty had a law proposed to the Storthing, prohibiting the sect of the Friends or Quakers, from residing, without special permission from the King, in any place in Norway, except in the Bishopric of Christiania, Drontheim, Bergen, Christiansand, and Bronmen, and the towns in the province of Finmark. At the same time their privileges and liberties, as well as the restrictions and obligations to which they shall be subject, are particularly defined.

The Continent.—The only articles of any interest from the Continent, in the late arrivals, are received thro' private channels. One of these is rather a curious document. It is a copy, of a letter from the Pope to the French Deputy Marcellos, who, it appears, had addressed his Holiness on the subject of the law relating to the Concordat. There has been serious quarrels between the French and Swiss troops at Lyons and Stratsburg. The Swiss regiment, which is in garrison at the latter city, is on the very worst terms with the French regiment of Artillery. They have proceeded to open violence with sabres and bayonets. On the 30th & 31st of March, it was necessary to confine the two regiments to their barracks. Several Swiss and some French artillerymen have been severely wounded. It is believed that the Swiss regiment will be obliged to leave Stratsburg, to avoid more dangerous broils.

PARIS, March 26.

The Chamber of Peers, assembled on Tuesday, when on the discussion of the resolution passed by the Chamber of Deputies, for granting further time to the Emigrants for the payment of their debts, an amendment was moved and carried for prolonging the period till the 1st Jan. 1820, and the resolution was sent back to the Chamber of Deputies for their concurrence in the amendment.

In the Chamber of Deputies on Tuesday, the Baron de Saint Cricq, the reporter of the committee for discussing Projet, was heard at considerable length; after which speeches were also delivered by the Ministers of Finance and M. Morgon de Belloy. The committee then proceeded to deliberate upon the Articles of their Project. A long discussion took place upon the first Article, two amendments having been moved; one by M Duvergier de Hauranne, for reducing the duty on cotton yarne to one half; and the other by M. Laisne de la Villeveque, for repealing the duty on cotton yarn imported into France from parts out of Europe in French ships. The Chamber ultimately decided against both amendments. On Wednesday they got through thirty Articles of the Projet. On that day also the Baron Defougerais reported from the committee on the Projet for the abolition of the slave trade. The committee proposed the full and entire adoption of the Projet with two slight amendments. The discussion on it was appointed to commence after disposing of the Customs Projet, which it was supposed would be on Friday last.

From the Cork Reporter of April 14th.

An extract of a letter from a gentleman at Mascali, near Mount Etna, dated February 22, 1818, says:—"You will no doubt be anxious to hear from me on this distressing occasion. This place and Guarre have not sustained the least injury, but all around us is one scene of distress. We here understood, that Nola and Syracuse have sustained considerable damage in lives and in buildings; as far as Catania, most of the houses are more or less damaged, but no lives lost; the Elephant Hotel is partly destroyed. Aci Catean is one third destroyed, and a number of lives lost. St. Alphonia, lives lost, and a great part of the town destroyed. Nicolosi, Lapidera, Trecastagne and Viagrandis, partially damaged—Pas de Pomo, and all that part, considerable damage in stores and houses; Saffarana, part of the church fell in, and killed every one in it, say about sixty persons and the three Priests attending the service. Saffarana is about four miles from this. From thence to St. Alponis one scene of desolation, and from thence to Piedmont and Radazzo. It is further said that Ducini, Bronte, and all that part, are considerable sufferers.—In fact we know not yet the damage done; but what we know is more extensive than the earthquake that destroyed Messina. The devastation is general, and I fear, is not yet finished.—I look upon this to be the forerunner of an eruption. The first shock was on Friday at half past seven o'clock P. M. most violent; its motion was perpendicular; at midnight a second; about five in the morning a third. This morning, about four, another; and at half past five a second; and at noon a third, but slight. For these two nights here and at Giarre, the population have remained in the streets, with temporary sheds, and casks with the heads out.—Giarre is like an Indian town.

NAPLES, March 12.

The earthquake recently experienced in Sicily, extended itself over the whole Island, and even the town of Palermo felt a slight shock. The villages of Bronte, Castiglione, Rocello, Voldineto and Milazzo, have sufferred considerably. On ac estate belonging to the Duke of Misterbianco, seven columns of water were seen to issue all at once out of the ground; fifteen minutes afterwards they disappeared with equal rapidity. At the same moment a torrent of fire was perceived rolling, in a serpentine direction, on the surface of the ancient volcanic lava, which stretches from Lecati to Bolto-du l'Aqua.—This torrent of fire which appeared to be a new eruption from the sides of the mountain, illuminated, during some minutes, the neighboring country.

Letters from Genoa say, that several earthquakes shook the Appenines, about the same period that Sicily felt the shock of this terrible scourge.

GLASGOW, April, 8.

During the trial of a horse cause, at the Leicester assizes, last week, a Mr. Davenport, a surgeon, was examined as follows, by Mr. Clark, counsel for the plaintiff:

Mr. Clark——Have you been examined as a witness before? I have. You know then the religious obligations of an oath? I do.

Do you consider the oath which you have taken as binding upon you, to speak the whole truth? I do.

Do you believe in the holy scriptures? I believe in sin.

I ask you, sir, do you believe in the scriptures upon which you have just sworn to speak the truth? I do not believe in every part of them.

Do you believe in the Divinity of Christ?——Witness to the learned judge: My Lord, am I oblige to answer that question.?

Mr. Sergeant Vaughan. My Lord, I apprehend the witness is not obliged to answer such interrogatories.

Mr. Baron Garrow. As you have taken the objection, it is my duty to say he is not. I should not, however, have prevented him from giving an answer if he had chosen, because the answer might have vindicated him from the imputation which the question conveyed. But whatever might have been his answer, whether he declared himself to be a believer in every part of the holy scriptures or not, I should in my address to the jury, have said, that his belief in these matters should not impeach his testimony. He might be essentially disposed to tell the truth, whatever were his religious opinions. It, however, Mr. Davenport had the misfortune not to entertain the same opinions as he did, he would advise him in future to be more sparing of his declarations on that subject; as such opinions delivered from a person whom it must be supposed had passed through a regular education, might have a very mischievous effect upon the minds of ignorant persons.

A remarkable discovery of a Murder.

The murderer of Mr. Martin, a receiver of taxes at Bilgny, says a letter from Bar-sur-Aube, was discovered a few days ago in the most singular manner, and arrested. The crime was committed on the 9th February, on the high-road at one o'clock in the afternoon. The shot entered Mr. Martin's heart, and he fell down dead. He was returning from collecting, and had only 150 francs about him, of which he was robbed, as well as of a watch and a ring. The charge of the gun was rammed down with a written paper. This had been carefully taken up, and carried away with the body. The writing was still legible. On this piece of paper there were expressions which are used in glass manufactories, and a date of near 15 years back. Upon this single indication, the judge went to the owner of the glass manufactory at Bilgny, examined his books and succeeded in finding an article relative to the delivery of glass, of which the paper in question was the ball of parcels.—The suspicion immediately fell on the son-in-law of this individual, the latter had been out of the country for ten years.—Order was given to arrest the person suspected. When the officers came to him he was on his knees, praying. In his fright he confessed the deed on the spot, and even showed where the watch and ring were, which were indeed found under the thatch of his house.

The young English Lions whelped at the Menagerie, Exeter Change, so far from partaking of the ferocious spirit of their noble Sire and Dam, are even more docile than the tamest of our English dogs; and it is really curious to see how quiescently they receive the fondling embraces of ladies and children of both sexes. At 9 o'clock, when they are fed, in common with the large collection of other noble animals at this depot, it is astonishing indeed to see the immense number of visitants, and it affords the philosophic mind a rare opportunity of appreciating the correctness of Buffon on natural history.

Recent proceedings at Pernambuco.

On the part of the King's Ministers, sent from Rio de Janeiro, after the surrender of the Patriots:—Extract—

"Prisoners coming in from the country in parties from two to fifty, and the Judges employed in criminating those in their power. On the night of the 5th of last month, at 9 o'clock, orders were issued in the barracks for the troops to be put under arms, and marched in various directions.—They were halted a little before eleven, orders arrived, and that hour a signal gun was fired from one of the forts. In an instant various houses were surrounded; and before eight next morning, upwards of 150 inhabitants were taken and lodged in the forts and prisons. It is said that in several adjacent towns, similar proceedings took place; and that two days before, about 150 inhabitants had been brought in and imprisoned. The arrests continued on Monday and Tuesday, and it is impossible to describe the consternation that prevailed, all looking forward with horror and dismay at the probable result. On Wednesday evening, however, a vessel arrived from Rio de Janeiro, announcing from the Ministry, the King's pardon of all who were taken since the 5th of February, and restoration to their property, by establishing their innocence. Criminals, it was supposed, would be banished for eight years.—N. Y. Gaz.

BUENOS AYRES, March 2, 1818.

"After passing through every variety of climate, I arrived, safe and well, at this place, a few days since. Here we enjoy pure air, and fine fruit. I think the grapes delicious; & we have peaches, pears, nectarines, apples, &c. in the highest perfection.

"One may buy an excellent, beautiful horse, well broken, for five or six dollars; for the very best they do not ask more than fifteen or sixteen; they are uncommonly handsome, and are of the Anda lusien breed.

"The average crop of wheat, here, is about sixty bushels for one sown; the' in very favorable seasons they get more; and in worse, never less than twenty-five or thirty bushels. This information I have from Mr. S——, who has erected a very large windmill (for they have no other kind) in this place, for grinding wheat and corn. The soil is too rich for Potatoes, which are very dear, and are now selling at five dollars per bushel. Fuel is also very high.

The following interesting account of a discovery made in a church yard in Boston, is from the Boston Intelligencer.

Some years since one of the workmen digging to lay a foundation for tombs, found the earth so loose that he could settle his bar into it the whole length with little effort. He reported the fact to the overseer, who directed him to proceed till he found solid earth.—About six feet below the bottom of the cellar he discovered a coffin, enclosed in a coarse linen cloth, apparently covered with pitch or tar, but on examination it was found to be gum. On boiling a piece of the cloth in water, it became perfectly white, and was as firm as if it had been recently woven. Within this coffin was another, protected from the air in a similar manner, and on removing the covering, the furniture was scarcely injured. The body appeared to have been wrapped in a tarred sheet, and in some respects resembled an Egyptian mummy. It was closely covered, with linen which had been immersed in a substance like that of the covering of the coffin. The flesh was perfectly sound, and it had more the appearance of leather than of flesh. Within the coffin and the covering of the body were sprigs of evergreen resembling the broad leafed myrtle. The leaves were lustrous, the stems elastic, and apparently in a state of vegetation. On the top of the coffin was a monumental stone, the inscription on which gave a short history of the tenant of the consecrated mansion. His name was Joseph Thomas, a native of New-England. He died in Bermuda, whence his body was brought to Boston, to sleep with his fathers, who were among the founders of the church. Isaiah Thomas, Esq. of Worcester, whom Brissot calls the Diderot of America, and whom you will recollect as editor of the SPY, in revolutionary times, is a descendant of the family, and one of the proprietors of the church. The remains of Thomas, which had lain undisturbed for upwards of three quarters of a century, were reinterred in the northeast corner of the cemetery, and the grave stone, so long concealed from observation, placed on the wall above tells where he lies.

PASIGRAPHY.

It was our intention to bring before the public one of the most important inventions ever submitted to the judgment of mankind. This will be acknowledged, when we state that we allude to the discovery of a Universal Language—a the means of conveying new ideas by a few certain, simple, d——, and easily formed symbols, intelligible to——whole countries, whatever their language, by the same manner as musical notes express the same thing universally to the natives of Russia, Italy, England, or Hindostan.

The subject having been actively taken up in Germany, and a society instituted to mature a plan of this nature, which has been produced in that country, we have procured, as far as possible, a detailed account of its proceedings that it will afford the public great satisfaction to know that if this invention can bear the test of experiment, it is already complete and perfect, in the enlightened mind of a Briton. We shall hasten to lay such invaluable information on this extraordinary matter before our readers; and in the mean time we cannot enter into it now, but in this notice, a dated record of what we have seen effected, and know to exist—the power of expressing every human idea by a simple process universally intelligible.

We need not dwell on the mighty prospects which such a discovery opens to view; not even Printing is to receive with consequences of wonderful change to the social system.—London Lit. Gaz.

PLAISTER OF PARIS.

(Extract from Mr. Greed's Practical Husbandry.)

This valuable manure, almost unknown and very easy to be obtained, merits the attention of every farmer; there is scarcely a farm in the Province, but it might be applied to with advantage. The practice of nine years on the following soils and crops, may suffice to prove its quality. On a piece of poor yellow loam, I tried three grain crops without success; with the last, which followed a hoe crop, I laid it down with Barley: the return was little more than the seed. The grass seed took very well. In the month of May the following year, I strewed powder of plaister, at the rate of one minot and one peck to the arpent; in July the piece of land being mowed, the quantity of grass was so great, that it was not possible to find room to dry it, on the land where it grew. The produce was five large Ricks of hay, to the arpent, it continued good for five years.—A trial was made with plaister on a piece of white clay laid down with clover and timothy—the grass was very thin. After the plaster was sowed, it improved so much, as to be distinguished from any other part of the field; the sixth year after, the field was broke up in the spring and sowed with pease, the spot where the plaster had been put, produced twice as much as any other part of the field. The haulm was of a deep green colour, nor were they affected with the drought like the others, on the part of the field where no plaster had been put. A trial was made on a strong loam; the crop Indian corn, manured in the hills with old stable dung, lime and plaster; the stable dung surpassed the other two. The Indian corn was finest where it was applied. In the spring of the following year, the field was ploughed and sowed with pease, where the plaster and lime had been the year before, the pease were as strong again as any other part of the field. I tried plaster on cabbages and turnips, but did not perceive any good effect. From the frequent trials on various sorts of this manure, it is evident that it is applicable to both strong and light soils, for top dresses of succulent plants.

The method to reduce it; take an axe and break the stone to the size of a nut; then take a flat stone two feet diameter, and break it into powder with a wooden mallet—it must be reduced very fine; those that have an iron pestle and mortar, can pound it expeditiously that way. Should Plaister meet its deserved attention, it might give employment to people in the Houses of Correction to reduce it to powder, for the use of the farmers, when no other objects of industry present themselves.

In order to give an idea of the measure of a ton of Plaister in stone, it will measure three feet square on one base, and two feet two inches high English measure. This is cited, in order to assist persons that may wish to buy from the vessels going up the river, where weights cannot be had to weigh. That which is taken from the mine is best and is of a silver grey colour; that from off the surface is red and is of less value—A ton will produce fourteen minots of powder when broke; a man can break eighty pounds in one day, in a mortar of six inches diameter in its natural state. Having a great deal to prepare for the spring of 1817, I had it broke about the size of a goose egg, and then put it into the oven of a double stove; it remained about half an hour, after which a man could reduce two hundred and ten pounds in twelve hours with a sledge hammer, pounding on a flat stone. As this is no experiment, time must determine whether the less diminished its quality; it does not lose weight by the process.

The number of arrivals at this port is already between 70 and 80, chiefly in ballast.

In consequence of a vote of settlement for the Duke of Clarence being reduced in the House of Commons from £12,000 proposed by the Ministers, to £6,000, it was said His Royal Highness's intended marriage would not take place.

The 3 per cent consols had lately fallen from 82 to 80, in consequence of some discontent with the financial plan of the Minister.

Grain continued to fall in price throughout England.

Miscellaneous.

Extraordinary Feat.—Wednesday se'nnight, a large concourse of fashionables assembled at Marion, the beautiful seat of the earl of Charlemont, near Dublin, to witness a wonderful feat of activity, performed by baron Oeset, of the 16th Lancers. One hundred stones were placed at a yard apart, and at one extremity there was a basket; he was to ride to each stone, dismount, and pick it up, return to the basket, again dismount, and drop it into it—making him mount and dismount two hundred times. An hour was the time given, but the task was performed, with ease, in forty-five minutes. From the apparent want of training of the rider and his steed, bets were considerably in favor of time—for neither the vigor nor pliability of the one, (afterwards so eminently conspicuous,) nor the fleetness and steadiness of the other, were at first perceptible. But when after a few turns, the baron dismounted for the purpose of scratching his ear with his foot, while the horse stood quietly "awaiting his master's will," any odds were offered on them. The lord lieutenant and his amiable and lovely countess were present, and at the conclusion, her excellency crowned the herculean baron with a chaplet of evergreens. He wore, on the occasion, a beautiful yellow silk jacket, and blue head-dress, tastefully arranged—light net pantaloons, one boot and one spur. An elegant cold collation was prepared by lord and lady Charlemont.—London Paper.

Boston, May 14.

A GREAT SEA SERPENT.

The following is a very interesting account of the Sea Serpent, seen on Saturday last. The respectability of the source of the annexed certificates, places the matter beyond a doubt—and we think Capt. Woodward has had a more minute view of this Serpent, than it was possible for any one to have had of the one seen last summer off Cape Ann.

AFFIDAVIT.

I, Joseph Woodward, master of the schr. Adamant, of Hingham, on my passage from Penobscot, to Hingham, on Saturday last, at 2 o'clock P. M. Agamenticus bearing W. N. W. ten leagues distance, discovered something on the surface of the sea, apparently about the size of a ship's long boat. Supposing it to be a wreck of some vessel, I made towards it; and on approaching it, to my surprise and that of my crew, discovered it to be a monstrous Sea Serpent—as I approached him he threw himself into a coil, and darted himself forward with amazing velocity—the wind being ahead, it became necessary to stand on the other tack, and as we approached him again, he threw himself into a coil as before, and came across our bows at not more than sixty feet distance.

Having a gun charged with a ball and shot, I discharged the contents of it at his head. The ball and shot were distinctly heard to strike him and rebound as though fired against a rock—he, however, shook his head most terribly—he again threw himself into a coil & came towards us with his mouth wide open. In the mean time, I had discharged my gun again and intended to have discharged the contents of it into his mouth; but he came so near us I was fearful of the consequences, and withheld it—he came close under the bows of the schr. and had she not been kept away, must have come on board of us—he sunk down under the vessel, his head a considerable distance on one side the vessel and his tail the other—he played around us about five hours—I and my crew had probably the best opportunity of seeing him that has occurred—I judge him to be at the least twice the length of my schooner, say one hundred and thirty feet—his head was about the size of a ship's long boat, say fourteen feet—his body, below the neck, at least, six feet diameter—his head was large, in proportion to his body—his tail was formed like a squid's—his body was of a dark color, and resembled the joints of a shark's back bone—his fins were about 12 feet from the end of his head, and his whole appearance was most terrific.

His manner of throwing himself into a coil appeared to be done by contracting his body in a number of places in perpendicular directions, and placing his tail so as to throw himself forward with great force—he could contract and throw himself in any direction with apparently the greatest ease and most astonishing celerity.

From the French Papers.

ON THE ENGLISH EXPEDITION TO THE NORTH POLE.

Some English writers have already indulged themselves in illusory conjectures on this enterprise; they describe Greenland as bursting from the icy barrier which surrounds it.—They repeat the traditionary reports of the last century, respecting some whale-ships, said to have reached the Pole, and even to have passed on the other side of it.—They presume to doubt the existence of land to the north of Baffin's Bay, although Baffin was the best informed & most judicious seaman England could boast of; and they even flattered themselves that commerce will be carried on in a direct route from London to Canton, by the Pole, which makes a distance only of 2,600 nautical leagues, whilst that by the Cape of Good Hope is 5,500 leagues.

Two men, however, of great authority, do not participate in these exaggerated anticipations.—Mr. Scoresby, an experienced Greenland Captain, thinks that the Polar Seas are blocked by ice, and proposes a journey to the Pole, by means of sledges drawn by rein-deer. Capt. Burney, who accompanied the immortal Cook, has published a pamphlet, in which he proves clearly, that there exists a large extent of land, to the north of Behring's Strait; he goes too far in supposing, that this land probably unites the two continents of Asia and America; but it is very certain that this arguments are sufficient, to contradict the opinion of the existence of an open sea.

The gratitude which the English Government merits from every friend to science, ought not to prevent us from examining upon what foundation their hopes of success in this enterprize rest. It is even an advantageous justice due to the commanders of the expedition, to point out before-hand the immense obstacles against which they have to contend.

Fixed and floating ices may be considered as the first of these difficulties. Admitting for a moment the non-existence of a polar continent, that Greenland, New-Siberia, that the land to the north of Behring's Strait, and the land seen and coasted by Baffin, are in reality but four islands (as the maps of the 16th century appear to represent them,) yet it is very probable, that the narrow seas which separate them, are constantly chocked with ice. Captain Scoresby observed the ice form itself in the open sea, more than twenty leagues from the coast of Spitzbergen; and masses of ice arise from the bed of the sea. Thus then the principal argument in favor of an open sea is considerably weakened; it will be in vain for them to rely upon the removal of a barrier of ice, shaken by an earthquake, or broken by the strength of the currents. The sea itself freezes, notwithstanding the assertions of Mr. D. Barrington. This truth once proved eternal, variations in the state of the polar sea may be expected.

From the year 1600 to 1630, the most sanguine hopes were entertained of penetrating to the Pole, yet every authenticated effort to this effect, proves all exertion to have been terminated by fixed ice, which arrested the navigator's further pursuit; or, by floating masses of it, which threatening to overwhelm them, compelled them to desist from their courageous enterprize. Captain Wood, who confidently believed the possibility of a passage to the North, was opposed by a continent of ice, which united Nova Zembla, Spitzbergen, and Greenland.—Captain Souter, on the contrary, continued his route to 82 deg. 5m. in a calm open channel: but the ice, on each side, beginning to connect, the dread of being blocked up obliged him to abandon his purpose.—The adventurous Baffin was able once to navigate the sea which bears his name; but it has since been frequently found that this sea was filled with numerous islands, some of which were 100 leagues in circumference and nearly 400 feet high. Perhaps James's Island, noted in several charts, was itself one of these masses of ice. Capt. Water frankly confesses that he mistook those fixed masses of about 500 feet in height for real islands.—Even the floating ice is often covered with large stones, and trees torn up by the roots, which appearance produced the idea of land. It is very uncertain whether the Dutch discovered, to the east of Spitzbergen, a tract of land, or only a mass of ice; in one of their voyages to the North of Nova Zembla, they found a bank of blueish ice, covered with soil, on which birds had built their nests.—Half a century ago, two islands of ice were seen to fix themselves in the Bay of Disco: the Dutch whalerships visited and assigned them a name.—The same circumstance took place about Iceland.

Mr. Scoresby informs us, that the water of the sea of Spitzbergen contains only 2 3-4 oz. of salt, in a gallon of 231 cubical inches; its weight is to pure water as 1,0260, and it freezes in a cold of two degrees by a thermometer centigrade. Thus it is probable, that in the polar nights, that is to say, during our winter the Artic seas are covered with ice. The history of different voyages furnishes us with proofs of this: but let us resume the physical discussion.

The masses of floating ice arising from the water of the sea, and which is distinguished by its porous contexture (owing to the mixture of the volatile quantities of plants) sink 4 5th of their thickness into the salt water, the latter being in a freezing state. The masses formed of fresh water have a great density, and more transparency. Mr. Scoresby made burning glasses with pieces of it, and lighted the pipes of the astonished sailors. These bodies sink 15 16ths of their thickness, below the surface.—It appears certain, that the bays and straits of the polar seas (not generally very deep) are often constructed by these masses, resting at the bottom. The floating ices present obstacles not less redoubtable. The concussions of these masses produce a tremendous noise, which warns the navigator with what facility the Vessel would be dashed to pieces, if he were placed between two of these immense floating islands. It is even ascertained that the wood carried off by the currents, kindle by the violent collision caused by the motion of the ice; and flame and smoke arise amidst the gloom of eternal winter. Pieces of wood have been often found burnt at the extremities. In the winter the intense cold continually occasions these mountains of ice, to split asunder, and at each moment may be heard the explosion of these masses which separate in enormous chasms. In the spring the motions of the ice chiefly consist in the upsetting of those masses, which lose their equilibrium, because some parts dissolve more rapidly than others. In all seasons the broken ice accumulates in the passages of gulfs, and opposes equally the attempts of individuals who expose themselves on foot, and the progress of the vessel whose motion becomes paralysed.

If to all these considerations be added, that the ordinary course of the ices from the Pole depends upon the constant eternal causes, the seasons and the currents, the removal of the obstacles is only local and momentary; and it will be allowed that the Polar Seas will never afford a commercial route.—Immense benefit may result to the fisheries from the discoveries which they hope to effect.

MALTE BRUN.

Extract of a letter to the Editor of the Boston Centinel, dated New-Orleans, April 9, 1818.

"That you may form some little idea of the value of property (for it can hardly be called real estate) in this city, I now give you a small part of the Lavingston flatture, about which you have for years heard so much. The whole flature is now under water, and covered with flat boats loaded with the produce of the upper country, and the land of course cannot be possessed by the purchasers till the water subsides. There try rich individuals pretend to claim a part of what Mr. Lavingston recovered, and have instituted suits, which are now pending, and at the opening of the sale protested against it. Notwithstanding which people bid boldly, and fourteen lots out of two hundred, having 40 feet front 90 feet deep, were sold at the enormous sum of 124,000 dollars.—90,000 dollars were paid for the first, and most of the others brought upwards of 10,500 dollars, at one quarter cash, the other three quarters in equal payments of 6, 12 and 18 month: title to be secured by a sufficient bond of indemnity to the purchaser. It is considered by many that the remainder will sell nearly in the same proportion.

"Mr. Livingston has repeatedly offered it to the City Corporation for 225,000 dollars, which they thought too much. You will perceive that if the residue sell as well, the sale will amount to an enormous sum; and should the whole average 5,000 each, you see one million of dollars produced from what resembles more the Boston south end flats than it does land. Yet such is the rage for speculation. The consequences anticipated by many observing inhabitants on building a new levee are apprehended will be dangerous to the present harbour where the shipping lie. Some are of opinion it will destroy it, while others think the contrary; and many fear the Mississippi will force itself through the right bank of the river, and find a shorter passage to the ocean. I will venture no opinion, not having been here long enough to judge with propriety on this important subject.

"This City is now in the enjoyment of fine health; a very pleasant heat, at 70 a 74o, has been for several days; an immense deal of produce of the western country (in market; and except cotton, every thing sells briskly and at high prices; a great proportion of the vessels in port are taken up, and many more will be wanted, and probably at better freight, 1 1-4d. sterling per lb. being the price for cotton, and 1 1-4 a 1 1-2 cents per lb. for tobacco.

Respectfully yours."

Iron Cables.—In the late tremendous gale, which strewed the coast of England with the fragments of wrecks, and the ruins of cargoes, it is worthy of remark, that every vessel in the port of Falmouth, supplied with an iron cable, rode out the storm in perfect safety, without the least accident occurring, or one of them drifting. The Queen Charlotte, the only ship in the harbor, not supplied with an iron cable, was driven from her anchors, although lying in the smoothest water. The Fox packet hooked her anchor in the iron cable of the Osborn, near the bows of the latter, and both vessels rode out the height of the gale by one cable. The commanders of the packets in ports, united in signing a certificate in favor of this important invention, in which they aver, that they are so well convinced of its great utility and advantage, that they consider it would be the interest of the ship-owners, if every vessel was supplied with them, not only as a great saving of property, but also of lives. Rep. Chron.]

From the New-York Daily Advertiser.

Several of the vessels which have lately arrived at this port from Europe, fell in which large quantities of ice upon their passage particularly near the Banks. Since the subject of the departure of the ice from the coasts of Greenland, and its descent into the Atlantic, have excited so much attention in Europe, and are giving rise to interesting voyages of discovery, as well as important speculations on climate, seasons, and temperature every fact connected with it should be carefully noted down, and preserved. The state of our seasons have been singular for several years past; and never more so than at the present time. We doubt whether the oldest man living in this country, can remember so extraordinary an April and May, as this year. The spring is several weeks behind-hand, compared with what has heretofore been common; and at the present moment, viz. the 19th of May, fires are indispensably necessary for comfort.

We cannot but hope, that our intelligent navigators, on their voyages to and from Europe, will carefully attend to this subject, and collect all the information in their power. In this made alone can the facts be obtained, by the aid of which, scientific men may be able to ascertain, with at least tolerable precision, how far the temperature of our atmosphere may be affected by the vast bodies of ice which float into the neighbourhood of our shores. The subject is interesting, and well worthy all the attention that may be bestowed upon it.

Longevity of the English Pear Tree.

There is now standing in the Garden of Hawks Fearing, Esq. in Hingham, Mass. two of the above mentioned trees, which according to the authentic records, were brought from England by Matthew Hawks, one of his ancestors, in the year 1633. They last year bore four bushels of pears.

RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

A GENTLEMAN of this Country, who for some years past, has been anxiously endeavouring to complete a set of the OLD ANNUAL REGISTER, first published by Dodsley, which is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable works ever given to the world, and a compleat Library in itself; being still in want of a few Volumes, commissioned a friend to procure them in England last fall: owing to some mistake, the London Bookseller to whom the order was sent, after much needless labour and cost, for the entire work is now rare and very difficult to be procured, got together a whole set, uniformly and very elegantly bound, and sent them out to this country. The consequence is, that the duplicates must either be returned or disposed of, but rather than return them immediately, the present holder wishes to offer them at prime cost to the public, and any Gentleman desirous of forming a Library, will find this an opportunity that very seldom occurs.—The entire set consists of 57 Volumes, which cost in England £57 7s. Sterling. The broken set wanting only 6 or 7 Volumes, which may be readily procured, cost £45. The Purchaser may have his choice. The work is still, and will be annually continued. VALUABLE LANDS
For Sale.

THE following singularly desirable, and truly valuable Lands may be had, and immediate possession given, with undeniable titles, at rates far below their real value; and it is but seldom, even in a country so extensive as Canada, where uncultivated Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, in good neighbourhoods, can be secured.

Lot 1. Comprising 70 Acres of the very richest Beech, Maple, Elm and Oak Land, in the 4th Concession of Hope, lying upon Smith's Creek, with 15 acres cleared and fenced, new log house, well built and dove-tailed, fruit trees, &c. with a mill-seat, between 4 and 5 miles from the flourishing little Town of Toronto, on Lake Ontario, where there is an excellent market either for buying or selling. The Land is of the very first quality, and in a good populous neighbourhood, forming altogether a most desirable residence, within a short mile of the great road between York and Kingston.

2d. 200 Acres, being Lot No. 1, in the 5th Concession of Hope, alongside the great road between Hope and Hamilton, leading to the new and flourishing settlements of Carrow & Monaghan, on the Rice Lake, in which more than 500 families and persons have actually located, and scarcely five miles from the Town of Toronto, where there is a good market; it is in an old settlement, and the neighbourhood is populous and excellent. There are about 30 acres cleared and fenced, with a fine stream of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

3d. 190 Acres, occupying nearly one entire side of the Gannanoque Lake, in the Township of South Crosby, District of Johnstown, consisting wholly of broken fronts, the back parts extending to the road from the Rideau Settlement to Kingston, from which latter place it is scarcely 30 miles distant. The Land is good and well timbered, and the situation singularly beautiful and romantic, with wooded islands in front.

The above Lands are particularly deserving of notice. The situations were chosen by a competent judge, and they will be sold remarkably cheap, the proprietor wishing to concentrate his forces in another quarter.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE.

YORK, THURSDAY, JULY 2.

To the Inhabitants of York (U. Canada), who subscribed for the relief of the sufferers by the late fires in St. Johns, Newfoundland.

GENTLEMEN,

AT a Public Meeting of the Inhabitants of this Town, held in pursuance of public advertisement, it was resolved:—" That the cordial thanks of this Meeting are due to the Inhabitants of York, in Upper Canada, for their humane exertions in raising a subscription, for the relief of their distressed fellow subjects in this Town."

We assure you, Gentlemen, that this resolution is not a mere common place acknowledgement of your kindness, but the effusion of genuine gratitude. You have laid us under lasting obligation, and that in a way, which, however grateful it may be to our feelings, is equally honorable to yourselves.—Our sufferings indeed have been great; but it is no trifling mitigation of them that we can reflect that they have been made the occasion of awakening in the minds of our distant friends the kindest sympathies, and of affording them opportunities, which they have not been negligent in embracing, of displaying their benevolent generosity.

Assuring you of our grateful remembrance,

We remain, Gentlemen,

Your obliged humble Servants,

Signed in the name and on behalf of the committee,

JNO. DUNSCOMB, Chairman.

St. Johns, Newfoundland, May 15, 1818.

To the Inhabitants of the District of Newcastle.

GENTLEMEN,

I feel it incumbent on me to take the earliest opportunity, of thus publicly declaring my regret for the sentiments expressed by me at the Township Meeting on the 6th June inst.—sentiments which I could never have entertained, had I possessed the information which I have since acquired; but secluded as we were from general information, we only heard the industriously circulated assertions of one person, which we rashly & inconsiderately adopted. I now feel convinced of the impropriety and evil tendency of Mr. GOURLEY's writings, and that his charges are wholly unfounded.

Confident that at my return to Hamilton, I can fully, and to your entire satisfaction, support my renunciation of the opinions given by me, at the abovementioned meeting

I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,

Your obedient Servant,

ROBERT J. KERR.

York, 30th June, 1818.

N. B.—It is my intention to attend at the general meeting, on the 6th July, there publicly to avow my sentiments.

From Europe.

PARIS, April 19.

A letter from Berlin dated 2d inst. announces that Aix-la-Chapelle is the city in which the allied Monarchs will meet, and that the King of Prussia will repair thither immediately after his return from Moscow, in order to partake of the waters before the arrival of the other Sovereigns.

LONDON, April 20

Several of the Parisian journals have intimated that the delivery of the territories of Montlioon, at Soleure, to prince Jablonowsky, has been refused, but the Gazette de Lausanne of the 14th inst. announces that those precious relics be carried thence the 24th March, accompanied by the prince and M. Vehner, the intimate friend of the deceased. "The Emperor of Russia," continues the journal, "has named the city of Cronsow for the reception of this deposit; and that this monarch himself has made a proposition to the Polish Government for the erection of a monument to the manes of Kosciusco."

LONDON, April 28.

"There is no doubt that the whole plans of the Chancellor of the Exchequer will meet with complete success.

"The Funds are advancing this morning, and from their continuing so much above the price at which the subscribers at the bank have the option of lending, a general opinion is entertained that the whole sum of Twenty-seven Millions will be funded.

"The 4½ per cent to be paid at the Bank today for the instalments of the subscription is fated to be nearly completed."

April 29.

The following Treasury Notification has just been issued, relating to the bargain with the subscribers in the three Stocks:

Treasury Chambers, April 28, 1818.

Lord Liverpool and the Chancellor of the Exchequer have, upon the application of several of the Subscribers for converting 3 per cent Annuities into Annuities at the rate of 3 1-2 per cent, consented to place persons who have subscribed £3000 and less than £50,000 3 per Cent Annuities, upon the same footing as persons who have subscribed 4½ per cent. per sum, in regard to the period for making the transfer of £86 per Cent upon the sum subscribed.

They have also consented to postpone the payment of the Instalment upon the Exchequer Bills which may be subscribed, to be paid at the following periods, viz.—

10 per Cent. on or before the 1st of August, 1818.

10 per Cent. on or before the 3d of September.

20 per Cent. on or before the 16th of October.

10 per Cent. on or before the 27th of November.

10 per Cent. on or before the 11th of December.

10 per Cent. on or before the 15th of January, 1819;

In case money should be paid in lieu of Exchequer Bills, in discharge of any of those Instalments, one per cent on such Money Payment, and 3 per cent. on the 4½ per cent. per diem, from the 1st day of August to the day of payment, must be paid according to the terms of the former notice.

The Paris papers of the 20th inst. which arrived here this morning, are of great importance.—The contain an official announcement of the approaching evacuation of the French territory by the allied army, of the financial means provided for carrying it into effect, and of the speedy meeting of the allied sovereigns, for the purpose of fixing the precise time, and other preparatory circumstances. The sum required for the final liquidation of the claims of Foreign Powers is reduced from sixteen hundred millions of francs (about £66,666,666 sterling,) the amount of the original demand, to three hundred and twenty millions eight hundred thousand francs.

Louis by the Grace of God, King of France and Navare

To all present greeting:

We have ordained and do ordain, that the Projet of the law, the tenor of which follows, shall be presented to the chamber of deputies, by our Ministers Secretaries of State in the departments of foreign affairs and finance, and by the Sieurs Count Pasquier and Baron Mounier, Counsellors of State, whom we charge to explain its motives, and support it in debate:—

Article 1. For the purpose of providing for the full and entire execution of the dispositions of the treaty of the 20th May, 1815, and the Conventions of the treaty of the 20th November, 1815, so far as concerns the payment of the debts contracted by France anterior to that epoch, be your her own actual territory, there shall be created and inscribed upon the grand book of the public debt, with interest from the 22d March, 1818, a perpetual rent of 16,040,000 francs, to meet a capital of 320,800,000 francs.

Art II. There is opened in the Ministry of Finance a credit of twenty-four millions of rentes. In consequence the government is authorised to receive and inscribe on the grand book of the public debt, in concurrence with this sum, rentes which may be employed only to complete the payment of the sums due to the Allied Powers conformably with the 4th Article of the Treaty of the twentieth November, 1815.

Art III. An account shall be given in the Session of what shall have been done in virtue of the above second article.

Given at our Castle of the Thuilleries, the 25th of April, of the year of our Grace, 1818, and the 23d of our Reign.

Advice from Italy mention that the Princess of Wales is in bad health, and that she has sold her estate on the lake of Como.

Two of the vessels belonging to the expedition, which sailed for the North Pole on the 23d of April, were compelled to return on the 25th with the loss of anchors.

A fleet of Spanish Transports, with the officers and troops belonging to the garrison recently sold to the Spanish government, touched at Deal on the 25th of April on their way to the Baltic.

Bell's Messenger of the 27th of April says, it is rumored that the Duke of Clarence has resolved to persevere in his determination, of marriage with the Princess of Saxe Meiningen, notwithstanding the vote of the house of commons, but Serene Highnes shall continue her consent.

The marriage of the Duke of Kent with the Princess Dowager of Leinengen, is announced in the Frankfort Gazette of the 18th. In an authentic shape, as being positively decided upon. It is added, "that Privy Counsellor Baron Von Schoultz is gone to Stutgard, in order to make some arrangements on this subject, as has also the British Ambassador to the court of Wirtemburg."

The Prince and Princess of Hesse Homberg, were to leave England for the Continent, in the Month of May. Prince Leopold was to visit the Continent about the same time.

The committee who were appointed to superintend the erection of a monument to the memory of the late Princess Charlotte, have concluded to construct the proposed temple of the Cenotoph on a scale sufficiently extensive to admit of its being appropriated to the purposes of Divine Worship, and constituted a free church.

The Society for the encouragement of the Arts, are directing their attention to the best means of preventing forgeries of Bank Notes.

A line of Packets were to be immediately established between Little Hampton, in Sussex, and Havre de Grace, by which distance between London and Paris will be considerably shortened.

By an Official statement it appears, that there were burnt in Russia, after the retreat of the French, the bodies of two hundred and forty-three thousand six hundred and twelve men, and one hundred and twenty-three thousand, one hundred and forty two horses.

A London paper of the 28th of April in speaking of the French affairs observes "that the trial of the murderers of M. Fualdes, has kept pace with the Budget, and the two are so incompatibly in our minds, that we do not imagine we shall ever hear of one without remembring the other. This murder is the most atrocious we have any record of. The deliberate extension of the living body of Fualdes upon a table; the holding him with his face downwards, and his throat bare, over pail; the cutting his throat, and receiving the blood in a vessel, that the floor might not be stained; the carrying out the body to throw it into the river, & the emptying of the pail upon an adjoining dunghill, are all so many horrible circumstances to which the annals of no civilized State can produce no parallel, and of which we suppose a murderer worthy of the most degraded of revolutionary France. One circumstance, however, is wanting to complete the horrible enormity of the transaction, namely, that the blood which filled the pail, stained the hands of the murderers, but it should be remembered, that they were clean from the stain of blood, when the Spanish family in Ireland, and their domestics arose to the flames in proportion as the screams of the women and children were heard in the only available parallel; but it does not appear that any women were concerned in this transaction. By what we can understand of the evidence, Madame Manzini, who was in the house on some occasion, was discovered and taken from the room of the murder, when the murder all screaming was about to murder her upon the spot, but was prevented by Jaudon who exacted from her an oath of secrecy. Gentilde to Jaudon, as her deliverer, has given the character of mystery to her evidence, which from side, seeing the motive of her silence, and presuming too far upon it, dares her to the discovery, and illustrates he own importance upon her silence.

The new Stock.

"Rise of the Funds.—The whole amount in the new 3 1-2 per cent. Stock is agreed to be subscribed; and, according to this arrangement, 5 per cent. on the total sum was paid up this day.—Matters being thus circumstanced, and the situation of things having been fully made known, the option for the funding of Exchequer Bills rose from 2 per cent. to 2 1-2 per cent. and the whole amount of Exchequer Bills was funded accordingly. Consols and the other Stocks rose in the natural proportion, and the former sold for the Account at 81, which is a considerable advance. Among the causes that have contributed to this rise, is the advantageous view taken of the Funds by those houses which very lately thought there was a different prospect, and which sold to a large extent. They have now brought back a great portion of the stock they somehow unluckily parted with.—Money is very abundant; and we know one eminent stock dealer, who from the surplus of capital, has as much, this evening, as £100,000 in the hands of his bankers.

The omnium of the subscription to the new Stock of 3 1-2 per cent. has risen to a premium of two per cent.

Mr. Vansittart, in his speech of yesterday, gave very strong assurances of the pacific disposition of the American government. The policy pursuing by them is in itself, the very best pledge of the wise resolve to cultivate peace. They have repealed all internal taxes, and made their revenue altogether dependent on foreign trade.

Frequency of Capital Punishment.

In the Parliamentary debates during the late week, the public attention has been forcibly called to a subject which appeals to the feelings of every one, and upon which every one entertains the common wish of preventing or diminishing. We are speaking of the frequency of capital punishments, and particularly in the cases of forgery. Several recent examples have excited a very general opinion that these laws are pushed too far, and that, however useful and necessary may be the support of the credit of the country, still too much may be paid for a system of commerce purely artificial. A question may arise, would it not be better to change the form of this mode of dealing, than, by maintaining it, incur the cost of so much misery and crime? Is it not a strong argument against an usage, that the form and nature of it afford at once a strong temptation, and a complete facility, to render it the instrument of an atrocious act? Does not such a quality of commercial dealing in any form render it bad in itself?

To the question it must unhappily be answered, that of all frauds and injuries, the most noxious kinds are forgeries; and that the facility of committing crimes has been necessarily adopted by all legislators as a circumstance which calls for a greater severity of punishment to prevent them. The prosperity, and even the existence of commerce depend upon these principles. It follows from the very nature of our commercial and pecuniary system, that all the personal property of the kingdom is so much exposed, and is as easily transferable, as the cattle in our fields; and much of the accommodation of it depends upon the promptitude of deposit, of transfer, of paying, of receiving, and of transporting from one place to another. But forgery is a crime which directly attacks this system of free circulation and safe deposit. If the remissness or insufficiency of the laws should suffer a crime like this to gain such a head, and to grow into such a frequency, as to render the use of paper money, the circulation of bills, and the the trade of bankers, no longer safe and practicable, the necessary consequence would be, that every species of trade and activity would decline, and the intercourse of civil life and commercial dealing become so defective and restricted, as very seriously to attack the general industry of the country. So much of the support of the country depends upon its trade, and the incomes of all classes are so identified with the general commercial system of the kingdom, that it is impossible to foresee the extent of mischief which might arise from disturbing the existing condition. If we consider only (according to the popular custom) the particular mischief arising from any act of forgery, there are doubtless many cases, in which the punishment of a young and first offender may appear very disproportionate to his single offence. But when we consider that the overlooking of one offence, or what is the same thing the insufficient punishment, leads to the commission of many, or indeed the crime in its greatest extent, we immediately recognize the reason of that fundamental maxim of law, that the chief end and object of punishment of a single crime is to prevent the future mischief of the crime, if general; and that the public mischief is not in the particular circumstances, but in the general example.

Under these considerations, we cannot see any possible means, or at least clearly see them, by which the laws against forgery could be much relaxed, either directly in their letter, or effectually by greater mercy in executing them. The pardon of the offender, under any circumstances, would be the pardon of the offence, and not of the circumstances, as the offence would be known to all, and the circumstances to few. Add to this, that as such circumstances would probably be things of a general nature, such as youth, a first offence, previous good character and conduct, every offender would flatter himself that he was within the same qualification, and in committing the crime, would speculate upon the same condition of pardon.

The great extent of our paper system certainly affords an unhappy temptation and facility to the commission of this crime. But as so much of the very necessaries, not to say of the ornaments and embellishments, of civil life, depends upon supporting such a condition of society and public morals, as may justify this public confidence, and enable us to leave our property in this exposed state, so it becomes necessary to maintain this condition of society, and thus to punish those crimes with more severity, which are easiest committed. Half of our criminal code is founded upon the same principle. Hence sheep-stealing, horse-stealing, &c. are capital offences, from the necessities of a country and agricultural life.

But as such punishments are a manifest and great evil and suffering, so they ought not to be carried beyond the point of necessity. And as the extent of our paper system, and particularly of that of the Bank of England, is certainly the chief cause and temptation to this crime, it may possibly become an important question, whether, even constantly with the public good, this dangerous extent might not be diminished; and whether even something ought not to be sacrificed in commercial principles, in order to lessen the frequency of such afflicting punishments?

As the greater part of these forgeries are committed with respect to the smaller notes of the Bank of England, might it not be a measure of humanity to have these notes called in, and a further issue prevented? Suppose, for example, all one and two pound notes were withdrawn from circulation, many who receive these notes from strangers, and give a small portion of change in purchase, would certainly not incur the risk of so receiving a note of five pounds. In all crimes the receiver, whether an innocent or voluntary agent, is the main encourager of the thief, because he is the sole means of converting the booty into money. But in the forgeries of small notes the whole town are receivers. Here, therefore, we think is one means, by which the frequency and facility of the crime might be diminished—that is to say, by diminishing the facility of passing the forged note.

As to any peculiar marks in the notes themselves, or any peculiar system in their materials or fabrication we place no dependence upon them. Such marks must either be secret or public. If secret, they are no protection to the public, whatever they may be to the Directors and to those banks and public bodies to whom they may communicate their tally. And what ingenuity can exceed that of criminals? Whatever is conspicuous will immediately be imitated; and whatever is not so, the public will not know to be necessary to the goodness of the note, and therefore in receiving a note will not require it.

From the United States.

MR. KING'S SPEECH,

In the Senate of the United States, on the Navigation Act.

FRIDAY, April 3, 1818.

Agriculture, manufactures, and foreign commerce, said Mr. King, are the true sources of wealth and power of nations. Agriculture is the chief and well-rewarded occupation of our people—and yields, in addition to what we want for our use, a great surplus for exportation. Manufactures are making a sure and steady progress; and, with the abundance of food, and of raw materials, which the country affords, will, at no distant day, be sufficient, in the principal branches, for our own consumption, and furnish a valuable addition to our exports.

But, without shipping and seamen, the surpluses of Agriculture and of Manufactures, would depreciate on our hands; the cotton, tobacco, bread stuff, provisions and manufactures, would turn out to be of little worth, unless we have ships, and mariners to carry them abroad, and to distribute them in the foreign markets.

[illegible] adopted different theories [illegible] to be derived from navigation; [illegible] have been contented with a passive foreign commerce owning no ships themselves, but depending on foreigners and foreign vessels to bring to them their supplies —while others, and almost every modern nation that borders upon the ocean, have preferred an active foreign trade carried on, as far as consistent with the reciprocal rights of others, by our own ships and seamen.

A dependance upon foreign navigation subjects those who are so dependant, to the [illegible] disadvantages arising from foreign wars, and to the expense and risk of the [illegible] navigation. The most intelligent nations of the world, therefore, having a national interest in the subject, have almost universally approved and adopted; it affords not only a more certain means of prosecuting foreign commerce, but the freight, as well as the profits of trade, are added to the stock of the nation.

The value and importance of national shipping and national seamen, have created among the great maritime powers, and particularly in England, a strong desire to acquire, by restrictions and exclusions, a disproportionate share of the general Commerce of the world.

As all nations have equal rights, and each may claim equal advantages in its intercourse with others, the true theory of inter-national commerce is one of equality, and of reciprocal benefits; this theory gives to enterprize, to skill and to capital, their just and natural advantages; any other scheme is merely artificial; and so far as it aims at advantages over those who adhere to the open system, it aims at profit at the expence of natural justice.

The colonial system being founded in this vicious theory, has, therefore, proved to be the fruitful source of dissatisfaction, [illegible]ity and war. According to this system the colonies were depressed below the rank of their fellow subjects, and the fruits of their industry and their intercourse with foreign countries, placed under different regulations from those of the inhabitants of the mother country; it was the denial to America of the rights enjoyed by Englishmen, that produced the American revolution—and the same cause, greatly aggravated, is working the same effect in South America.

Among the navigators and discoverers of the fifteen and sixteenth centuries, the Dutch became highly distinguished, and, by enterprize, economy and perseverance, made themselves the carriers of other nations, and their country the entrepot of Europe—and it was not until the middle of the fourteenth century, that England passed her navigation act, which had for its object, to curtail the navigation of the Dutch and to extend her own.

According to this act, the whole trade and intercourse between England, Asia, Africa, and America, were confined to the shipping and mariners of England; and the intercourse between England and the rest of Europe was placed under regulations which, in a great measure, confined the same to English ships and seamen.

This act was strenuously opposed by the Dutch, and proved the occasion of the obstinate naval wars that afterwards followed.—England was victorious, persisted in her navigation act, and, in the end, broke down the monopoly in trade which the Dutch possessed.

That in vindication of her equal right to navigate the ocean, England should have resisted the monopoly of the Dutch, and freely expended her blood and treasure to obtain her just share of the general commerce, deserved the approbation of all impartial men. But, having accomplished this object, that she should herself aim at, and in the end establish, the same exclusive system, and on a more extended scale, is neither consistent with her own laudable principles, nor compatible with the rights of others; who, relatively to her monopoly now, are in the like situation towards England, in which England was towards the Dutch, when she asserted and made good her rights against them.

By the English act of navigation, the trade of the colonies restrained to the dominions of the mother country, and none but English ships are allowed to engage in it.

So long as colonies are within such limits as leave to other nations a convenient resort to foreign markets for the exchange of the goods which they have to sell, for those they want to buy, so long this system is tolerable; but if the

RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

A GENTLEMAN of this Country, who for some years past, has been anxiously endeavouring to compleat a set of the OLD ANNUAL REGISTER, first published by Dodsley, which is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable works ever given to the world, and a compleat Library in itself; being still in want of a few Volumes, commissioned a friend to procure them in England last fall: owing to some mistake, the London Bookseller to whom the order was sent, after much needless labour and cost, for the entire work is now rare and very difficult to be procured, got together a whole set, uniformly and very elegantly bound, and sent them out to this country. The consequence is, that the duplicates must either be returned or disposed of, but rather than return them immediately, the present holder wishes to offer them at prime cost to the public, and any Gentleman desirous of forming a Library, will find this an opportunity that very seldom occurs.—The entire set consists of 57 Volumes, which cost in England £57 7s. Sterling. The broken set wanting only 6 of 7 Volumes, which may be readily procured, cost £45. The Purchaser may have his choice. The work is still, and will be annually continued. VALUABLE LANDS
For Sale.

THE following singularly desirable, and truly valuable Lands may be had, and immediate possession given, with undeniable titles, at rates far below their real values; and it is but seldom, even in a country so extensive as Canada, where unoccupied Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, in good neighbourhoods, can be secured.

Lot 1. Comprising 70 Acres of the very richest Beech, Maple, Elm and Oak Land, in the 4th Concession of Hope, lying upon Smith's Creek, with 15 acres cleared and fenced, new log house, well built and dovetailed, fruit trees, &c. with a mill-seat, between 4 and 5 miles from the flourishing little Town of Toronto, on Lake Ontario, where there is an excellent market either for buying or selling. The Land is of the very first quality, and in a good populous neighbourhood, forming altogether a most desirable object, within a short mile of the great road between York and Kingston.

2d. 200 Acres, being Lot No. 1, in the 5th Concession of Hope, alongside the great road between Hope and Hamilton, leading to the new and flourishing settlements of Cavan & Monaghan on the Rice Lake, in which more than 500 families and persons have recently located, and scarcely five acres from the Town of Toronto, which forms a good market; it is in an open situation, and the neighbourhood is populous and excellent. There are about 30 acres cleared and fenced, with a large stock of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

3d. 100 Acres, occupying nearly one entire side of the Gannanoque Lake, in the Township of South Crosby, District of Johnstown, consisting wholly of broken fronts, the back parts extending to the road from the Rideau Settlement to Kingston, from which latter place it is scarcely 30 miles distant. The Land is good and well timbered, and the situation singularly beautiful and romantic, with wooded islands in front.

The above Lands are particularly deserving of notice. The situations were chosen by a competent judge, and they will be sold remarkably cheap, the proprietor wishing to concentrate his forces in another quarter.

From Europe.

LONDON, May 10.

The foreign intelligence of the week is of still less importance than might be anticipated from the materials in operation. There appears no cause to apprehend that any thing will arise to interrupt the present confidence in the settlement of affairs, except a belief that difficulties may be raised respecting taxes. Indeed, the greater portion of the attachment of the foreign Princes to the English constitution appears to arise from their opinion of its peculiar aptitude in enabling the government to raise taxes; and as they all want money alike, they seem willing to sell an apparent liberty for its worth in solid coin.

It is not only in Russia that the agents of the Court of Spain are purchasing vessels for the embarkation of troops to South America; it is stated, that they have already purchased one of our Indiamen, and are in treaty with other ship-owners.

In the French Chambers, the Liquidation Project has been voted with less opposition than might have been anticipated from the importance of the subject, and the number of speakers,—or rather the preachers; for they all speak from written discourses, and recite pamphlets of three to six hours length.

LONDON, May 12.

A Floating Chapel for merchant seamen, was opened (or rather moored) in Bristol harbour on Sunday last, 4th inst. and on the 11th of May, was displayed, to denote the purpose to which the vessel was henceforth to be devoted; and Divine Service was performed on board in the course of the day, before a numerous assemblage of people.

An article under date of Cassel, May 1st, states that the Landgrave of Hesse, had given his consent for the marriage of his youngest daughter with the Duke of Cambridge.—Another letter, same date, states that the intended marriage of the Duke of Clarence with the Princess Adelaide of Saxe Meinlogen, will not take place.

It is stated in a London paper, that an elopement of a most disgraceful nature, had recently taken place. The lady is the wife of a dignitary of the Church, and allied to noble and distinguished families, and has gone off with a youth, a young nobleman, 17 or 18 years of age. It was supposed that the young man was to pay his addresses to one of the daughters.

A letter from Vienna mentions that the Order of Maria Isteada shortly to hold a chapter, to which some important matters relating to the Order will be agitated.

The marriage of the Duke of Cambridge with the youngest daughter of the Landgrave Frederick of Hesse, was to take place on the 7th May.

Another marriage is reported to be in contemplation between the sovereign families of Russia and Prussia; that of the Grand Duke Michael with the Prussian Princess Alexandrine, second daughter of the King. The lady is said to be of the most exquisite beauty.

A letter from Madrid, dated April 28 states, that "a report still prevails of a misunderstanding between the Spanish and Portuguese Courts. A Portuguese packet boat is said to have been captured by a Spanish vessel of war."

LONDON, May 7.

Apprehension and Suicide of an Outlaw.

Some time in January last, a person of the name of George Cowen, a merchant in Great Prescott-street, became a bankrupt, and absconding from his commission, was outlawed. Several of his creditors hearing lately that he was living in great style at Rotterdam, applied to the Lord Mayor for his assistance in apprehending him; and accordingly, Brand, the Marshalman, was sent over to Holland with his warrant for that purpose. The Batavian Government, however, manifested a decided opposition to the measure, and it was only by the greatest exertion of Lord Cloncurty, the British Minister at that Court, that it was at length acceded to. His Lordship was compelled to write home to the English government, and obtained its sanction to the undertaking, pledging a reciprocal conduct, before the minister of justice at Hague was directed to furnish the necessary authority.—This was done on the 13th of last month, at 12 o'clock in the day, and Brand immediately proceeded to Rotterdam, in search of his object, and at five o'clock the same afternoon he meet him walking in the street. On being accosted by the officer, he treated the matter with great contempt, and asserted that they dare not take him; but the Dutch authority being shewn him, he made but little resistance, and was taken into custody. The populace, however, appeared alarmed at the execution of a foreign warrant in their streets, and a body of them collected immediately, who shewed a disposition to oppose the arrest, insomuch that the officer found it necessary to get an immediate and strong reinforcement; and it was only then by a constant exhibition of their pistols, that a rescue was not attempted, and the prisoner was lodged in safety.——The same night he was conveyed by a strong party furnished by the Commissaire of Police, to the prison at the Hague; and the Governor was directed to let him have every comfort consistent with his safe custody, till the packet should sail. On the morning of the following Wednesday, however, the prisoner requested the person appointed to be with him, to procure him a little coffee for his breakfast, and though the man was not away more than five minutes, on his return he found him hanging by his handkerchief to the knob of a small cupboard which was fixed in one corner of the room. He was instantly cut down, but he had accomplished his purpose so effectually that life was totally extinct. On uncovering his neck, it appeared that he had previously made an attempt to strangle himself, his watch riband having been twisted so tightly round his neck, as to be almost buried in the flesh.

The officers also recovered from his lodging a large quantity of valuable property in cash, jewels, Bank notes, watches, &c. which Brand has brought back with him, and it seems a law-suit is likely to take place between the assignees under the commission, and those creditors, who alone were the cause of its recovery, as to who shall have the disposal of it. Since this occurrence has taken place, the commissaire of Police at Rotterdam, has issued an order, enjoining the proprietors of all lodging houses, to make a return every morning of the number, names, and descriptions of their inmates, and this order has been hitherto strictly enforced.

When the last ships left St. Helena, Bonaparte still continued in a sour mood took no exercise, and refused to see any visitors.

In consequence of the misunderstanding between count Montholon and gen. Gourgon, at St. Helena, the latter has returned to Europe in the Camden. It is stated that Bonaparte peremptorily forbade the decision of the quarrel by duel. Mr. Balcom, at whose house Bonaparte resided when he first landed has also returned to England with his family. The ridiculous reports circulated yesterday, that a secret correspondence had been detected at St. Helena, are without the least foundation.

LONDON, April 29.

Lady Lucy Baray's Religious conversations on Friday evenings, are attended by many persons of distinction, amongst whom are the Right Hon. Mr. Vansittart and Mr. Wilberforce.

St Petersburg, March 28.—A large workshop for marine labourers, and which served at the same time as a barrack, has been reduced to ashes. This building called Pimoptikon, was built of wood, and constructed on the ingenious plan of Gen. Benthem. It had in the middle a moveable machine, which carried the spectator from stage to stage, and by means of which he could see all without being seen. Many workmen perished in the fire.

Culture of Potatoes.—Make deep furrows, and place at the bottom of them short straw, or straw chopped on purpose (firs or refuse hay answer the same end), to the depth of about 4 inches then place the potatoe sets on this straw and cover them with earth. The result is, under all circumstances, a considerable increase in the quality and a great improvement in the crop; but in wet soils or seasons, which it is well known usually produce watery, unsubstantial, and ill-flavored potatoes, this method is the only one by which a valuable crop can be insured, for the straw affords a most kindly bed for them and by acting as a kind of drain, prevents them from rotting, and conduces much to their sound and prolific condition. And that in the event of a dry season, no ill effect need be apprehended, is strikingly illustrated by a kind of accidental experiment which was lately communicated to me, as observed by a gentleman of intelligence and veracity. A potatoe had by chance been thrown upon a heap of short dry grass, the mowings of a lawn; it there vegetated and spread through a great portion of the heap, which was nearly in the condition of hay, and has produced throughout potatoes to a very unusual amount, though it only communicated with the earth by some long detached fibres: this seems to prove satisfactorily, that if there be most earth in the vicinity from which nourishment may be extracted, the circumstance of the potatoes themselves being in a very dry bed, is productive of none but the most beneficial consequences.—London Courier.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, APRIL 20,

BUDGET.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, after a few prefatory observations on the importance of bringing on without delay the consideration of his financial plan between the public and individuals, said, that the terms of the bargain had been fully arranged, and nearly completed. Between 7 and 800,000£ were all that remained to be supplied. But the measure being in such a state of forwardness he thought it was not improper in him to call upon the house that day for their approbation of the terms he had offered. The House might expect from him some kind of general statement of the year; in doing which, however, he was sensible he lay under some disadvantages, as compared with what he might have been enabled to state at a later date.—But other occasions must of course occur, when he trusted that gentlemen would have opportunities for observations or corrections of the statements much better than could be practicable at present. Almost all the principal branches of the public service had been already voted; therefore he felt himself able to give a statement of the finances generally with a few exceptions. The House had voted the estimates for the Navy and Army, excepting for the barracks, which stood in the army estimates extraordinary. The ordnance estimates too had been voted, and a considerable progress had been made in the branch of miscellaneous services. The sum intended for the army extraordinaries was 1,400,000£, the total amount for the army being 6,970,000£. The sum voted for the Ordnance, including votes of parts of the Ordnance supplies among the navy supplies, was, this year, 1,245 000£. Last year it was 1,250,000. The Miscellaneous Services of this year were 1,720,000£. not including, however, the sums required for building New Churches, which would be provided for on their own grounds, but including 100, 795£. for increasing small livings. The total supplies for the year were 18,392, 000£; last year the the total supplies were 20, 374, 000£. In addition to this there were £2,000,000 on exchequer bills to be provided for, and £360,000 for the commissioners of the Sinking Fund.—In consequence, the total amount to be provided for was £20,955,-000. There were also several extraordinary services of the year.—The first was a grant voted by the house for the fortifications of the Netherlands, in consequence of the treaty to that effect. But no supply that would burthen the nation was required for this purpose, and there was no occasion to refer it to the Finances of the year, as it would be provided for out of the French contributions. The sum was £795,000. There was, besides, the sum of £400,-000 voted in consequence of the treaty with Spain for the abolition of the slave trade. And the only other sum was a deficiency which would be found by referring to the accounts on the table for the year 1817. After the supplies of the year had been voted, a sum of £300,-000 was voted. It had been usual to give a general Vote of Credit to Government out of the land tax; but last year it was thought better that a vote of supply should be given rather than a power of anticipation; but this vote was given at too late a period for the ways and means, and therefore a deficiency now arose of £259,000. The total extraordinary services were £659,-000.

The complete service of the year required £21,611,000 thus:—

Army,	£8,970,000
Navy,	6,456 800
Ordnance,	1,245 600
Miscellaneous,	1,720,000
Interest on Exchequer Bills,	2,000,-000
Sinking Fund,	560,000
Spanish Treaty,	400,000
Deficiency of Ways and Means last year,	259,686
Total	£21,612,086

Now the Ways and Means by which those supplies would be provided, were those which he was about to detail to them, and to submit for their approbation. The first, was a sum of £3,000,000 to be raised by annual taxes.—This was perfectly the same as in former years, and required no illustration. The second part of the Ways and Means was, the sum of £3,500,000 from the Excise Duties, which were to continue till 1821. By reference to the accounts on the table, the Excise Duties amounted on the 6th of January last, to £3,124,000 but this year he was confident they would amount to £3,500,000.——The third, was £250,000 to be raised by a Lottery.—(Hear hear! from the Opposition)—The fourth part was £250,000 from the sale of Naval Old Stores. This yielded last year £400,000 but it was manifest that every succeeding year since the war, this resource became less valuable. The fifth, was £250,000 of the arrears of Property-Tax; £350,000 of arrears were still to be collected, and the sum stated would, he trusted, be realized for the service of the present year.

The sixth part of the Ways & Means was a sum of £21,448 of profit, arising from the assistance afforded by Parliament to public works last year by the issue of Exchequer Bills. The total sum raised by those Ways and Means was £7,271,448. He calculated on no surplus on the Consolidated Fund, although he felt assured that there would be a surplus; yet, he reserved that for the payment of arrears that might arise in course of the year. Upon these different views, he conceived that he was justified in calculating upon a surplus in the Consolidated Fund. He had, however, for the present, abstained from any charges upon it, in the hope that the scheme of finance which he had now submitted would meet with the approbation of the House, and afford satisfaction to the country. The Right Hon. Gentleman concluded by moving his first Resolution with respect to a new subscription to a 3 1-2 per cent. Fund.

Mr. Brougham would not follow the Right Honourable Gentleman through all the details of his speech, but that he thought he understood, that there was a deficit of about £14,000,000, which was to be supplied by borrowing either at 3 or 3 1-2 per cent. and that the interest, amounting to about £1,500,000 was to be taken from the Sinking Fund; this, after three years of peace, was, notwithstanding the Right Honorable Gentleman's flourishing statement, a dreary prospect.

Mr. Grenfell disapproved of the proposed plan, for the bargain, instead of being as economical one, was, in his opinion, extremely extravagant, improvident for the Public.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said, it was obvious, supposing the Exchequer Bills next year outstanding did not amount to more than 40 millions, the deficiency of two millions of last year would in a great measure, be met by the resources falling in. In respect of the 3 1-2 per cent. Fund, it approached so near to the lowest rate of interest, that it was hardly possible to conceive it would be depreciated. As to the observation made respecting optional engagements, he hardly ever knew one of that nature waved. Suppose a fall of the Funds, and 27 millions was converted into the 3 1-2 per cent. he saw no grounds for alarm: for if the subscribers were in decline, he had plans in contemplation which would remedy any inconvenience which might ensue.

LIVERPOOL, 9th May, 1818.

The great arrivals of grain from the continent of Europe which have taken place during the last two months, and which still continue to come forward very largely, caused a great depression in the prices both of wheat and flour The quality of the foreign wheat has been in general very good, but the highest prices which are now to be obtained are from 12s. a 13s. 6d. per 70 lb. At these quotations there is a pretty fair demand from the interior of the country For flour there is scarcely any enquiry. A small lot of superfine Baltimore flour was sold by auction a few days ago at 48s. 6d. a 49s. 6d. and some further sales have since been effected at 40s. a 50s per barrel. What the future of the market will be, it is impossible to judge, as much will depend on the extent of our supplies, and on the state of the weather; but it seems scarcely probable that prices will go much lower. The import of American flour into this port since the 1st of January last has been about 123,000 barrels, while the sales have been comparatively trifling; and as nearly as we can calculate, the present stock in Liverpool may be estimated at about 111,000 barrels. Five of the weeks which govern the importation of wheat and flour for the next quarter are elapsed, the average of the prices of wheat during that time is 89s. 7d. per quarter; of course the ports will remain open till August next.

LONDON, May 6

Affairs of Fauldes.—The trial of the persons accused of the murder of Fauldes still continues. The sitting of the 23d of April was one of the most interesting since the commencement of the examinations. Bax, who before, had told only a part of the truth, is said on that day to have made a full disclosure. In consequence of these disclosures, other individuals have been inscribed on the list of the prosecution, against whom proceedings will commence. We shall soon be able to mention the results. Bax, said, on entering the house of Bancal on the night of March 19, 1817, he recognized Bastide, Jausion, Besieres, Veynac, Yence d'Istournet, Louis Bastide, Rene, Collard and the wife of Bancal. He saw there Mr. Fauldes, seated on a chair surrounded by these individuals. Jausion had required M Fualdes to sign some bills, which, when he had done, Jausion put in a port-feuille, which he held. As soon as this was done, Bastide desired Fualdes to prepare for death. Fualdes then rose and said with emphasis, "who could have believed that my own relations and friends would be among the number of my assassins!" Bastide then seized Fualdes, to stretch him on the table where he had signed the bills. Fualdes resisted, and requested time to make his peace with heaven. Bastide, "Go and reconcile yourself with the Devil!" At last, said the prisoner, Fualdes was stretched upon the table, and Jausion, who held a knife in his hand, struck the first blow. Fualdes made an effort; the table was overturned; he escaped from the hand of the assassin; he ran towards the door, I was placed there but made no effort to prevent him. Bastide who saw this, gave me a blow; and, by the assistance of several individuals, seized Fualdes, and stretched him again on the table. Bastide then plunged a knife into the throat of Fualdes, who uttered groans and stifled cries The witness in this manner went over the circumstances of the Murder, fully implicating Jausion and Bastide, with some other individuals not yet apprehended.

The celebrated chieftain, Sir Gregor McGregor, whose exploits in South America have been the theme of so much conversation in England, had a narrow escape of a few days ago, by the accidental overturning, near Woolee, of a stage coach, in Cumberland, he was a passenger for Edinburgh. The coach had her coach and her coachman killed, and was so much bruised that he was obliged to be left at Woolee.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 23.

We have received some details here, respecting the revolution which took place in Algiers. The new Dey named by the army, having been taken by the Moors, the natives of the country, was conducted to their chief who had seized on the treasures, the magazines, &c. and had carried off every thing to a fort which commanded the town, and where he also had retired. This chief, although half a savage, had the generosity, not only to grant him his life, but even to give him several millions of piastres, with two slaves, and accompanied himself with banishing him to Marseilles, where the exiled Dey has for some time resided. This Dey has determined to come to Constantinople to propose to the Porte to march against the Moorish Chief, if they would grant him troops and munitions, to join himself with an army now encamped on the mountains in the vicinity of Algiers, and which only awaits his Highness's orders to act. It is not yet known what part the Divan will adopt.

The Dey is clothed in a beautiful lace dress, like that of the officers in the Turkish marine, but he keeps his beard, and, according to the customs of the Algerines. Under the former Dey he held the title of general, commanding a corps in the army.

PARIS, April 22.

Garnerin, Aronaut has made another attempt to ascend in his balloon, but was obliged to descend in consequence of bad weather.

Placards in Paris announce for Thursday, April 30th, the ascension of the famous aronaut, L'Iris, which will take place from the Gardens of the Luxembourg for the benefit of the sufferers by the fire of the Odeon.

This gigantic Balloon which is 72 feet high, 141 feet in circumference and the capacity of which is 47,732 cubic feet, will be inflated by a new mode, more expeditious and less expensive than that usually employed. The experiments conducted by Mr. Lebeau—the ascension by Mr. Hanicher.

CHAMBERSBURG, (Penn.) June 9.

Astonishing Hail Storm.—On Sunday evening last between five and six o'clock, this town was visited with a hail storm, perhaps unparalelled in the annals of history or any thing ever witnessed of the kind, and would appear almost incredible were there not thousands who witnessed the fact.

The clouds apparently gathered from every direction and mixing through each other with as much velocity as leaves in a whirlwind, and concentrated at a point north-east of the town, a wing of which extended over us, from which the hail fell very fast, and of a size much larger than hen-eggs, many of which measured from six to eleven inches in circumference; they were very round and smooth, and little difference in the size generally. Few windows exposed to the storm escaped without injury—many of the houses had from twenty to fifty panes of glass broken.

Where the main body of the cloud passed over, (about one and a half miles from town,) it is asserted by the Rev. Mr. Hoffman, who was exposed to the whole of it, without much injury, that some of them fell apparently as large as his fist, and generally as large as goose eggs. This appears almost incredible, but we have not the smallest doubt of the truth of it. We are also informed by a son of Mr. Geo. Albright's about 50 passed through the roof of their house about half a mile from town, nearly in the same direction.

The ravages wherever this destructive storm passed over must be terrible—the rye, as far as we have heard from is literally cut to pieces; the wheat and fruit must also be very considerably damaged, as the hail cut limbs from the trees much thicker than a man's finger.

This is the second or third storm which has visited this neighbourhood, and never, in the recollection of the oldest inhabitants, has there been so much hail, or of such enormous size, as this season.

WINCHESTER, (Virginia,) June 6.

This town and its vicinity have been visited by one of the most destructive floods known for many years. It commenced raining on Saturday night last, and continued with intervals during the whole Saturday and Sunday night. All the water courses were raised to a height scarcely ever before known. The damage sustained is immense; but it is impossible for us to form any thing like a correct estimation. Mill-dams have been broken; fences swept away, meadows overflowed, and much grain in the low grounds destroyed. From the Georgetown Messenger of June 10.

Hail Storm.—A severe hail storm was experienced on Sunday afternoon, in Montgomery county, between the court house and Clarksburg. We are informed, it approached from the South East, and was accompanied by a confused & rumbling noise. Fortunately it did not drive much, or the mischief must have been very great, as some of the hail measured fourteen inches in circumference, and a large hog was seen to fall dead from receiving one—falling with little more than its own gravity—on his head, and the backs of the cattle were so lacerated as to cause the blood to run down their sides. The largest had the appearance of cakes of ice broken from a large body—generally they were the size of a goose egg, and of a conical form. Some farmers have had the brightest prospects blighted in seeing their towering fields of grain, which promised so abundantly to reward their long labors, laid prostrate to the earth.

Polar Ice in the West-Indies.

A gentleman who recently arrived at Philadelphia, from New Orleans, informs us that on the passage, floating ice was fallen in with in the open ocean, outside of the gulph stream, in the 29th degree of latitude. This is much farther South than we have ever before heard of ice having been observed at sea.

Capt. Tufts, in 13 days from St. Barts, communicates the following:—On the 20th ult. the brig St. Jago, of St. Jago in Cuba, arrived off the harbour of St. Barts, from a slaving voyage, having been taken possession of by the crew, who had murdered the captain, super-cargo, and officers, and carried her into Saba, where she was represented as being one of Admiral Brion's prizes, and protected by her own guns. Having here disposed of her own cargo, the next object of the mutineers was to destroy the vessel; but in this they were frustrated by a Buenos Ayrean officer, who seized it in the name of the government, and offered his services to the governor, to assist in securing the crew; who, however, effected their escape, some to St. Thomas, and others to the mountains.

Admiral Brion, who had, contrary to the orders of the governor of St. Barts, made a rendezvous of the Five Isles, a small place under the Swedish jurisdiction, and about four miles from St. Barts, was lately chased off by a Spanish squadron of 2 ships, 2 brigs and 2 schooners.—Mer. Adv.

From the Maryland Gaz. of June 11.

Unwelcome Visitors.—We have learned with regret that swarms of small yellow bugs, resembling that called the Rose Bug, are making serious ravages among the fruit trees on several farms in the neighbourhood of this city. The small apples and peaches appear to be their favourite fruits. The trees and ground beneath, where the fruit has fallen, are said to be completely covered by them. They have likewise appeared in several fields of small grain, but we have not understood whether they have commenced their ravages upon it.

How far their work of destruction exteods into the country beyond this, we know not.

From Gibraltar.—By the arrival last evening, of the ship Belle, Capt. Leslie, in 36 days from Gibraltar, we learn that Mr. MEAD, late American Consult at Cadiz, who has been long immured in prison in that city, was set at liberty on the 4th of May. His liberation was effected by our Government, through the agency of our Minister at Madrid.

It is said that the Russian vessels, purchased by the Spanish government, were found on examination, in a very defective state and that all but one were condemned as unworthy of repair.

The following singular fact is stated in the Troy Gazette of Tuesday.—"A Cow and her Calf were crossing the ferry at this city a few days since, when the cow jumped overboard—the calf immediately followed, and seized its dam by the ear, and did not leave its hold until both were safely landed, after swimming more than a quarter of a mile.

Schuylkill Bank Notes.—A very extensive scheme of forgery, says the Philadelphia Democratic Press, appears to be in operation as respects the notes of the Schuylkill Bank. It consists in altering the denomination of the Note. I have now before me what was a five dollar note of this Bank, but which note now appears to be a Fifty dollar note. Wherever, in the original note, the word or figure expressing the amount occurred, and in the note lying in my desk it occurs no less than six times, the word or figure is discharged by some chemical process and the figures "50" or the word "fifty," is printed in the place I say printed because it is satisfied that the alterations have been printed on the note from a copper plate engraved for that purpose.

As these forgeries are executed with neatness and accuracy, and as the signatures are genuine, and the whole of the rest of the engraving is from the plate of the bank, I think it my duty to the public, to caution them, and to point out such appearances as may distinguish the genuine from the forged notes.

On the face of the forged note, wherever alterations have been made, the paper appears of a whiter hue than any part of the note. On turning over the note it may be distinctly seen that wherever the alterations have been made, there is a deeper impress than any other part of the note. There is also an oily appearance on the back, where the alterations have been made.

From the Savannah Republican.

"We are sorry to state, that a serious dispute has occurred between Generals Jackson and Scott, which we fear will eventuate in a serious manner. Gen. Jackson intends, as soon as he gets through the present campaign, to repair to New-York for the purpose of calling Scott out. We have learnt the points which created the dispute, but do not at this time, feel ourselves authorised to state them.

"We also understand, that General Jackson has issued orders for the arrest of Capt. Obed Wright; and if apprehended, to be taken to head quarters, at Fort Montgomery, where he will be tried. The general has written a very severe letter to the governor of Georgia, condemning his conduct in the strongest terms, for assuming the power he did, in ordering the force under Wright to act against the Indians, for which he says, the Governor shall be accountable."

Gen. Jackson contemplated reaching Pensacola on or about the 16th which place he intended occupy.

Accounts from Curracos, to the 1st May, received at Georgetown, S. C. represent that Gen. Aury had formed an establishment at Samana, a large bay at the east end of St Domingo, from whence he had recently marched with all the troops under his command, for the ostensible purpose of taking possession of the Spanish Posts. It was calculated that at least one half of the negroes would flock to Aury's standard, and that a general massacre of the royalists would be the consequence. He had connected himself with two merchants at St. Thomas, who vend all the property pillaged by his vessels and carried to St Thomas by way of Samana. This place it seems Aury has made a depot for the plunder of his cruisers. A valuable Dutch schooner had been lately captured by one of his privateers, the crew put on shore on the island of Bonaire, and the vessel taken to Samana. Alb. Gaz.

Extract from the talk of General William M'Intosh, commanding the Creek warriors, on his arrival at Coweta from the late campaign against the hostiles, to major gen. Andrew Jackson, dated

FORT MITCHELL, May 5, 1818.

"My Friend—When I returned to my town, I heard with regret that my uncle [Howard] and family had been murdered, and that their town was destroyed. If an Indian kills a white man, I will have him punished—If a white man kills an Indian, he ought to be punished. I wish you to find out who has done this murder, and let me know what those Indians have done that made the white men kill our people."

Head Quarters Division of the South, May 7th 1818.

Sir—You will send or deliver personally as you may deem most advisable, the enclosed talk to Kinnard, with instruction to explain the substance to the Chehaw warriors.*

You will proceed thence to Hartford in Georgia, and use your endeavors to arrest and deliver over in irons to the military authority at Fort-Hawkins, captain Wright of the Georgia militia, who has been guilty of the outrage against the women and superannuated men of the Chehaw village. Should Wright have left Hartford, you will call upon the Governor of Georgia to aid you in his arrest.

To enable you to execute the above order you are authorized to take in company with you the Tennesseans that went from here lately to fort Scott, and await, if you think it necessary, the arrival of the Georgians now on march under major Porter. You will direct the officer commanding Fort Hawkins to keep captain Wright in close confinement until the will of the president be known.

The accompanying letters for the secretary of war, and governor of Georgia, you will take charge of until you reach a Post-Office.

ANDREW JACKSON,
Maj. Gen. Com'g.
Major John M. Davis, asst. ins. gen'l.

*The substance of this talk was, that the Chehaws should not attempt to take any satisfaction themselves for the outrages committed on them, but their father, the President of the United States, would see them punished, to whom he has reported the circumstance.

Hurricane at the Isle of France.

Our distressed colony has probably suffered more in the late storm than in the fire of the 27th Sep. 1816. The storm which happened on the 28th of February and 1st of March has spared nothing by land or water. All the vessels in port were lost or damaged in some degree, and many lives have been lost. Many houses in the town have been ruined. On the plantations the buildings have suffered as much as the fields. Many planters have lost their all, and the distress is general. It is impossible, while every one is busy to see what is left to him, rather than to tell his losses, to obtain an exact account of the losses the colony has sustained. We beg our friends and the inhabitants in general to give us every aid in a general statement, for which they shall have our thanks. The barometer sunk lower than ever known, and the most of those who observed it, were unable at first to account for the notice it gave in so extraordinary a manner. It appears that the most violent blasts were from the N. E. but with force very unequal as we could see small vessels stand it, while others of the greatest strength were destroyed at a small distance from them. Many persons observed that the rain water was salt, and on the day after the storm the water which flows near the town was found brackish.

On the 28th of February, at 7 in the morning, the Barometer was at 28, at 6 in the evening, at 27, at five next morning at 16, 6. The Thermometer, French, 22. At 6 the wind abated, and from N. E, passed Northerly, and at 7 was N. W. and began to abate—had lessened much at 11, and at 6 in the evening was a pleasant breeze at N. W. the Barometer then at 27, 9.

[A letter from the Isle of France, received at Salem, mentions that the loss by the hurricane, in the shipping alone, was found to exceed $250,000 by actual appraisement.]

Munroe Potatoes.—The last Kennebunk paper contains the following advertisement:—

"For sale, a few bushels Munroe Potatoes, at ten dollars per bushel. They are superior to our common potatoes, as wheat is superior to Barley, or as Mr. Munroe is superior to Mr. Jefferson—As witness my hand, Singular Incident.—On Sunday the 7th inst. Mr. Story, in company with 3 other persons, started from the town of Cairo on a bear hunt. Mr. S. found it necessary to ascend a precipice; in the act of which, to assist his ascent, he clung to a rock, which was so nicely balanced as to turn immediately over, and receive him under it. The five men ran to his assistance, but their utmost efforts to remove the rock, (supposed to weigh about two tons) were unavailing; and he remained beneath it until they literally cut the rock in pieces with their axes, being one hour and a half. When relieved he was apparently dead, many of his ribs broken, and otherwise bruised; but there is now a hope of his recovery.

From the Cape Fear Recorder of June 13.

A gentleman who came passenger in sloop Hudson, from Port-au-Prince, informs us the Island of St. Domingo is surrounded with Carthagenian Privateers, who indiscriminately board and rob vessels of all nations that may fall in their way. An English brig had been recently robbed of goods to the amount of three thousand pounds sterling; and a brig under Swedish colors of half her cargo. President Boyer, had fitted out a brig and schr. which have been in pursuit of them for some time. A corvette sailed three days previous to the Hudson, on the same expedition. American produce was in great demand.

From the New-York Evening Post.

From Gibraltar.—We learn from Mr. King, a passenger in the ship Belle, from Gibraltar, that the King of Spain has issued a royal order restoring Mr. Richard Meade, an American citizen, who has been long confined in Spanish prison to liberty; and that Mr. Meade had returned to his mercantile concerns at Cadiz. This state paper which our informant has read, is in the most humiliating document. It not only restores Mr. Meade to his liberty, but it gives him one of the best characters, and hereby acknowledges the unjust and cruel treatment of the Spanish government towards that gentleman. Our informant understood that this was not until our government gave the Spanish monarch to understand that unless Mr. Meade was instantly set at liberty, letters of marque and reprisal would be granted against the Spanish commerce. This threat had the desired effect.

Another South Boat lost on the Mississippi.

It is stated in a letter from New-Orleans of the 22d of May, that the Steam Boat Pike, struck on a planter about 200 miles above New-Orleans, and immediately sunk. The passengers and crew were saved, some by the Boat, and others by swimming.

SUICIDE.

Yesterday about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, Mr. SAMUEL PARR, hardware Merchant in this city, put an end to his existence by shooting himself—Verdict of the Coroner's inquest held on the body. "Shot himself, being insane."

ACCIDENT.

In the night of the 17th inst. the steam vessel Car of Commerce ran foul of a small vessel, (the sloop Betsy) about 25 tons burthen, lying broadside in the middle of the channel, near Cap Rouge about three leagues from Quebec, laden with about 500 minots of wheat. The Captain and Pilot were in the bow of the Car of Commerce upon the look out, as the channel is rather difficult. They perceived a light on the larboard side, supposed to be a vessel, and took care to avoid it—but the little schooner heavily laden, and being nearly level with the water was not perceived till the Car of Commerce was upon her, she was almost instantly sunk and lost. It is alleged that an aged woman perished but this is not certain, the rest of the crew consisting of three men and four women were saved with much difficulty, and brought up to Batiscan the nearest place where they could be landed.

The generosity of several of the passengers deserves public notice. Henry M'Kenzie, Esq. Dr. Selby, Mr. McLellan, Mr. Platt of Plattsburgh, Lieut. Elborn and Lieut. Bruyers of the Royal Engineers, and some others noted for the relief of the poor sufferers to enable them to return to their homes, to which the master Capt. McDonnell freely contributed his share. It is to be regretted that masters of small vessels negligently anchor in mid channel, at a season of the year when, not only steam Boats, but vessels from Europe sail in the St. Lawrence in the night time. A little to the northward of the channel where the Betsey anchored, is the harbour of Cape Rouge where vessels usually anchor at night time, and where the Betsey would have been out of all danger.—Courant.

The Jury on the Trial of Mr Archibald M'Lellan as an accessary to the Murder of Owen Kennaney in the Indian Countries, returned a verdict on Saturday last of not guilty, and Mr. M'Lellan was accordingly discharged.—Queb. Gaz.

From a late English Paper.

Hayti.—Our readers will observe on the first page of our paper, the advertisement of a letter by the Baron de Vastey, containing observations on the blacks and whites, &c. The author is a black, an inhabitant of the new kingdom of Hayti. It has afforded much amusement, and is highly interesting, as being "perhaps the first work by a negro, on which the energies of the mind have been powerfully excited, and have found a proper scope for action, where sentiments favorable to freedom could be avowed without the immediate terror of the scourge, the axe, or the gibbet, and where in fact, this long oppressed race have not been suffered to say a word in defence." We have been gratified and surprised to find the author, not only well acquainted with the works of Buffon, St. Pierre, and Montesquieu, but also in some degree with those of Homer, Tacitus, Milton, &c. and possessing a degree of learning and classical knowledge, which we could not by any means have expected in a country which Europeans are in the habit of considering as in a very uncivilized state. The baron shows a spirit and eloquence truly admirable, though his language is characteristic of the efforts of a nation bursting from obscurity.

His principal object is, to rebut the arguments of those who assert that the Africans are an inferior degraded race of creatures, and we think our readers will be gratified with a few extracts from his work. To shew that there is no natural inferiority, he deduces examples of the former barbarity of the Europeans themselves.

"Every body knows (says our author) that the Greeks, so celebrated for the polish of their taste, were in a state of the grossest ignorance and barbarity, living like the beasts, upon herbs and acorns, till civilized by colonies from Egypt; while the rest of Europe was yet unknown, and its inhabitants were certainly as barbarous as ignorant, and as brutal as those of Benin, Zanguebar and of Monomotapa can possibly be at the present day.

"At a later period the Gauls, like other Europeans, were still idolators, plunged in the deepest abyss of ignorance, following barbarous and superstitious customs; yet the world was now nearly 1000 years old, and the people of Europe had not been able to acquire a single spark of knowledge; in vain did a narrow border of civilization skirt its southern shores, the light was unable to penetrate the dark forests of Gaul, and the stupidity of the boorish inhabitants. The Ethiopians, Egyptians, Carthaginians, Greeks and Romans filled the world with the fame of their wisdom, their laws, and their government; while the Gauls lay yet buried in pristine ignorance. Immense forests, lofty mountains, the interruption of lakes and rivers, the rigor of cold climates, and the barbarity of the people, impeded the introduction of learning into the north of Europe, while different causes, yet of a similar nature, prevented the civilization of Southern Africa.

"Among the Gauls, the most solemn of all the Druidical ceremonies, was the gathering the mistletoe of the oak. I will now relate some of the principal maxims of the druids on this subject, as preserved by tradition, never having been committed to writing—

"The mistletoe should be gathered with great solemnity, and always if possible on the tenth day of the moon; a golden sickle should be kept for cutting it.

'On extraordinary occasions it is proper to sacrifice a man. Future events may be predicted from the falling of the body, the flowing of the blood, or the opening of the wound.'

'Prisoners of war are either to be sacrificed upon the altars, or inclosed in wicker baskets to be burnt in honor of the gods.'

'All fathers of families are kings in their own houses, possessing power of life and death over their wives, children and slaves.'

"Such were the horrid maxims of the Gallic priests; they offered human sacrifices to Esus and Tectates; they slew and burned their prisoners of war in wicker baskets. Fathers of families possessed the dreadful power of life and death over their wives, their children and their slaves. This degradation into which the Gauls were sunk, is attested by Cæsar, by Tacitus and by Lucan. It was under the reign of Claudius, in the 50th year of Christ, that these horrible customs were first abolished; nor was it till christianity had completely triumphed over Gaulish superstition, that the order of Druids became extinct.

"When a man was to be sacrificed, he was laid upon large stone, where he was either smothered or crushed to death; sometimes they were bled, and the impetuosity of the stream was one of the most important omens. The body was next opened to consult the entrails, and to read in the heart the will of the gods, and the good or evil fortune impending. The sad remains were then either burned, or hung up in the sacred wood near the temple: blood was sprinkled pretty over the people, and partly over the sacred wood; and the ceremony closed with washing the images of the gods, the altars, the beaches, and the walls of the temple within and without.

"Let the ex-colonists, Mazeres and Pallasot de Beauvois, study the history of their ancestors, whence, the foregoing facts have been gleaned, and then will no longer have reason to wonder at the superstitious and barbarous ignorance of the Africans; they will cease to wonder at Jaloo, captain of the king of Benin's guards, sacrificing 3 men at a feast." As then Europe which was once so barbarous, has now attained to so high a state of civilization, our author infers that Africa in its turn will rise to a distinguished rank among the nations of the earth. We behold, (says he,) the day of knowledge progressively extending over the face of the earth, rising upon some and setting to other nations. We see the most powerful empires rising to notice, again sinking in oblision; nations, subdued by nations, and furnishing the most striking examples of the instability of human affairs. According to the Septuagint, Europe was still unknown 1656 years after part of Asia and Africa had been peopled;—nor was it till after the deluge that, from the three children of Noah proceeded the several nations who peopled the earth; Shem and his posterity, Asia; Ham, Africa; and Japhet, Europe; according to the annals and traditions of all nations, Egypt was the country first civilized; and served as the cradle of science and art in their infancy. "This was the primitive focus," says Mons. Le Sage, whence undoubtedly proceeded that original spark, which, kindling in the lapse of ages, has ultimately produced the blaze of light which in the present day illumines Europe.

He then alludes to the progress already made by the blacks of Hayti, in an eloquent appeal;

"Hail, to thee, happy land! land of my choice! Hail to thee, Hayti, my country! sole asylum of liberty, where the black man can lift his head to behold and participate in the bounties dispensed by the universal father of man.

"We appeal to the testimony of strangers who frequent our ports, and visit the interior, to decide whether we are not organized upon the model of the most civilized nations of Europe? Have we not a firm monarchical government, constitutional character, law and regulations. Is not justice impartially administered? Are not our troops numerous and orderly; are they not in point of discipline equal to the first in the world? Have we not built impregnable citadels constituted according to the strictest rules of art, in inaccessible places, where the greatest obstacles were to be surmounted, in completing works worthy of the Romans? Have we not erected palaces and public edifices, which are at once the glory of our country and the admiration of strangers? Have we not manufactures of saltpetre and gun-powder? Is not the mass of our population devoted to agriculture and commerce? Are not our sailors able to cross the vast extent of ocean, and do they not navigate with ease the largest ships along our coasts?

"We write, we print; while yet in infancy our nation can already boast her writers, and her poets, who have defended her cause, and celebrated her glory. These will not indeed be found amongst them the pen of a Voltaire, a Rousseau, or a De Lille; but then we have not, like their nation, been civilized upwards of a thousand years.—Have we not, then, every reason not to despair? We have also essays in the fine arts, and are convinced that proper masters are alone wanting to enable us shortly to produce our Le Poussins, our Lignarus, our Rameaux, and our Gretrys. In a word, experience has demonstrated to the world, by the astonishing progress we have made in learning and in civilization, that the capacity of blacks and whites for the acquiring the arts and sciences is equal. Read the history of men; never was a similar prodigy seen in this world. Let the enemies of the blacks show a single instance of a people situated as we found ourselves, who have achieved greater things, and this is in less than a quarter of a century. Not only have the Haytians acquired, along with their immortal rights, the admiration of the universe and of posterity; but they have acquired still stronger claim to glory, by raising themselves from ignorance and slavery to the height of splendor and prosperity, which they have already attained."

From the London Times.

We insert, for the information of our readers, a copy of the Earl of Moira's new Marquis of Hastings, Court Regulations. We understand that they are read and practiced at Calcutta with great gravity; and we trust that our readers will not peruse them with any unbecoming levity. It has been often said that the Sovereign of this country is attended with too little show and ceremony, and persons who are of that opinion may think the King of England would do well to imitate some of the form and splendour of Lord Moira—to go to the full extent of the example would probably be considered too contentious. What (as Dr. Johnson asks) what that is human, is perfect? Even these regulations, minute as they are, appear occasionally not sufficiently precise; for instance, on the Gentlemen are directed to make a sliding bow, it is not fixed at what distance from the Governor-General they should begin or end to slide; and when it is regulated that refreshments and tea should be handed about, (tea being taken, we presume, medicinally in that warm climate, and not as refreshments,) it appears to us an omission that the quantities which each guest is expected to swallow is not prescribed. The two Aides-de-Camp are directed to do the honours of the table; but it might have been as well to state how many glasses of wine each is to drink before he has the Governor-General's permission to consider himself as fuddled.

But these, and a few other imperfections, (which we shall notice hereafter by way of parenthesis,) are amply compensated by the wonderful accuracy with which the code in general has been drawn up; and we have little doubt that these regulations will soon be translated into all foreign languages, and will compensate in the eyes of civilized Europe, for the failure, about two years ago, of that excellent design of introducing gold-laced boots into the navy—a design, we regret to state, which was defeated by the unaccountable prejudices of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, who, strange to say, could not at all fancy a boatswain in gold-lace boots.

The Earl of Moira's Court Regulations.

1st. PRECEDENCE.

The Precedency in the Household will run thus:—

Principal Secretary.
Private Secretary.
Military Secretary.
First Aide-de-Camp acting as Master of Horse.
Chamberlain.
Aides-de-Camp.
Interpreter of Languages.
Extra Aides-de-Camp.
Physician.
Chaplain.

2d General arrangements of duty of the Aidedes-Camp.

Two Aides-de-Camp to be in constant attendance upon the Governor-General. The first Aide-de-Camp will keep a roster and regulate the tour of duty, which is to be taken week about. The senior aide-de-camp in waiting will take charge of the dinner book, and carry it, by noon down the names of all persons dining with his Excellency the Governor-General, to the following form:—

Sir George Nugent 1.
Lady Nugent 1, &c.

An Index, lettered and paged, standing thereafter each person that has dined at the Government-house during the month, shall be attached to it for immediate reference.

The senior Aide-de-Camp in waiting receives (not mentioned from whom) in writing, the list of those persons who are to dine at the Government-house, and communicates it to Mr. Thompson, the Comptroller of the Household, who has the entire management of the servants, &c. The senior Aide-de-Camp in waiting always shall take the head of the table; the junior at the foot. At official dinners, the Aides-de-Camp to take care to divide the honors of the table.

Petitions.

All petitions or memorials to be transmitted through the regular channel: those of a civil nature through Mr. Thompson, and those of a military nature through Major Doyle. (It is not provided how petitions of a mixed nature are to reach his Excellency.)

The dress of the aides-de-camp to be as follows:—

1st, Private Dinners.—A plain uniform coat, with pantaloons and half-boots.

2d, Public Dinners, Balls, and Drawing rooms,—Full dress coats, shoes, and buckles.

3d, Levees.—Dress coats, pantaloons, and half-boots. The aides-de-camp will receive all orders respecting the stable department from Lord Moira, and will communicate them to Major Stanhope, who has the sole direction of that department.

The first Aide-de-Camp and Chamberlain have the direction of all processions.

Method of opening the Levee.

The procession forms in one of the rooms in the following order:—

The Chamberlain with his wand!
Captain of the Body Guard,
Lieutenant of the Body Guard,
Aides-de-Camp, two and two,
The Governor-General,
Master of the Horse,
Aide-de-Camp in waiting,
The Chaplain
Secretaries, two and two,
The rest of the Suite, two and two.

The procession moves slowly to the presence chamber; the Governor-General takes his place standing near the throne. The usual bow, (it is not specified how low,) and then upon the right and before the throne. The Chamberlain presents those who come for that purpose. The Governor-General, upon the presentation, makes the person presented a bow, which the other returns and passes on, unless his Excellency enters into conversation with him. After the presentations, the Governor-General walks round the circle and converses. (It is not stated on what subjects.)

When the levee is over, the procession, as before, conducts the Governor-General to his private apartments, and at the door, form on either side bowing, as entering, attended only by Aides-de-Camp in waiting.

During the levee, a Captain's Guard of Grenadiers on duty; and a Lieutenant's Guard, or half squadron of Dragoons. The avenues to the presence chamber are lined with the Body Guard, dismounted. The servants all in state liveries, and state trumpets, and kettle-drums; a band of music from his Majesty's 24th infantry attends, with the grenadier guard from that corps.

The Countess of Loudoun and Moira's Drawing-Room.

The drawing groom shall be held at night.

Method of opening the Drawing-Room.

The Governor-General having taken his station as at the levee, the Countess follows in the procession, handed by the Chamberlain, (it should have been stated which hand,) and her train borne by two pages: she takes her place upon the left of the Governor-General, under the throne. The Chamberlain presents those persons who require that ceremony; the person presented makes a sliding bow, or courtesy, and passes on, unless detained by the Countess addressing him or her. The presentations being over, their Excellencies converse, going round the circle.—They then retire to the card-room, where two commerce tables are placed. Lady Loudoun plays at one, his Excellency the Governor-General at the other; the Chamberlain and the Master of the Ceremonies soliciting the persons of the highest rank in the room to form the parties. They play one guinea pools. If their Excellencies are successful, it is the perquisite of the pages; when it is over, they retire to their apartments in the same order they came in; and the suite observe the same conduct as at the close of a levee.

N. B. Refreshments and ices are handed about during its continuation.

State Dinners.

The company assemble in one of the largest apartments near the dining-hall. The Governor-General enters in procession, as at the levee. The Chamberlain regulates the procession before the dinner is announced, formally. The doors are then thrown open to the sound of state-trumpets and kettle drums. The procession then moves slowly into the dining-hall.

The Governor-General takes his place, giving his hat to the Aide-de-Camp in waiting. The Comptroller remains at the door to regulate the entry of the company, according to their precedence. Small slips of paper are attached to the napkins with the persons' names in places as they are to sit.

The Governor-General and Company stand until the Chaplain says grace. The cause is ushered in by a grand flourish of state trumpets and kettle drums.

On the health of the King being drank, the flourish, &c. is repeated. After dinner the Governor-General and suite retire in the same order of procession as they came to the drawing room, drink coffee, after which the company may depart when they think proper.

BALLS.

The balls are regulated by the Countess of Loudoun, and the Chamberlain; chairs are placed near her Excellency for those persons whose rank admits of that honour. The ball is opened by the Chamberlain, with the lady of highest rank, with a minuet; after which, French, Scotch, and country dances are danced. At supper their Excellencies walk out first to take their seats at their table, which is composed of persons of the highest rank present. The persons not dancing to take their seats according to their rank; the dancers according to the rank of their partners (query male or female?) The order of dancing is regulated by the Chamberlain alone, who receives special instructions on that head from her Excellency the Countess of Loudoun and Moira. The private dances will be conducted in the customary manner of such entertainments.

1. State dinners.—Costume the same as at levees.

2. State balls.—The same costume as at drawing-rooms.

3. Private assemblies and dances.—Plain dress.

4. Official dinners.—Costume plain clothes and plain uniform.

5. Private dinners.—The cards for these are usually sent out four or five day previous to the day fixed.

The Governor-General leaves the room before any of his company;

Private Evening.—"Countess of Loudoun and Moira at Home."

Loss of the Solon.—The valuable ship Solon, a regular London trader belonging to this port, was struck with lightning and set on fire, on the evening of the 27th of April. On the following day, at 11 o'clock, and before the flames which were raging in the hold had burst through the deck; the Capt. Crew and Passengers, 38 in number, were most providentially rescued from their perilous situation, by the brig Packet, from Liverpool. The circumstances of the case, are more fully detailed in the following article:—

From the Boston daily Advertiser.

Arrived, the brig Poacher, Malcolm, 65 days from Liverpool, and 34 from Fayal, with crockery and glassware. April 28th, fell in with the ship Solon, Stoddard, from London for N. York, with hemp, dry goods, copper, &c. which had been struck with lightning the evening previous, and set on fire, lat. 40, 15, long. 27, then 20 days out. Took off the passengers, 27 in number, and crew amounting in all to 38, and shortly after the fire burst through the deck, and we saw the mast go over the side. The following account of the disaster, furnished by a passenger, and politely handed us from the Exchange Coffee-House, agrees with the minutes made on the log-book, as recorded by Mr. Topliff, with which we have also been favoured:—"On the 27th of April, at 9 o'clock, P. M. a body of lightning struck the ship, attended by a singular explosion, disordering every thing in its passage down the mainmast. The capt. with many others on the upper deck, were at once knocked down; on the middle deck the same effect was produced—yet in either case no lives were lost.

Immediately columns of smoke rose from the hold through every aperture; and such was the strength of the devouring matter, that it must, at the same inst. have set fire to every part of the cargo which was liable to take fire from it.—In this emergency, the thickness of the smoke became such as to prevent further respiration. All rushed on deck in confusion—the lightning still bursting forth, so that the whole sea appeared like a furnace.

Here was one of the most distressing scenes that ever was witnessed—the most part of the people half naked, and it being inaccessible to return further for clothes and with no more of the necessaries of life than would be required for about two days subsistence. All that now remained to our hopes was to keep the fire under by blocking up every apperture where the smoke issued—and should this be effected, we were fearful a few hours might close the scene.—The boats could not take two thirds of our number, and the tremendous sea also forbid the trial; the hope of falling in with a vessel was precarious, yet the hand of a gracious Providence was over our heads. In this state we continued till next day about eleven o'clock, when the brig Poacher, Capt. Malcolm, appeared in sight, and ultimately saved our lives. The last boat had scarce reached the brig when the Solon's mizzen mast fell by the board, and the main-mast followed in about half an hour after. At this time the flames had burst out in every direction, so that Providence had sent this vessel to our aid in a most critical moment. So great a number of persons being added to those already on board the Poacher, she having before seven passengers, it became necessary to make for the Western Islands for water and provisions. We arrived at Fayal on the 1st of May, where every attention was paid to our wants by Mr. Dabney, the American Consul, and other persons, particularly Messrs. Searle, Parker, Bayley and Corcos."

Three of the Solon's passengers here went on board the ship Norfolk, for London; seven of the passengers and crew on board the schr. Prudence, Leggett, for Halifax, and the remainder have arrived at this port in the Poacher. The persons who have arrived here express the warmest gratitude for the attention of Capt. Malcolm, and of the officers, passengers and crew of the Poacher.

RARE AND VALUABLE BOOKS.

A GENTLEMAN of this Country, who for some years past, has been anxiously endeavouring to compleat a set of the OLD ANNUAL REGISTER, first published by Dodsley, which is, undoubtedly, one of the most valuable works ever given to the world, and a compleat Library in itself; being still in want of a few Volumes, commissioned a friend to procure them in England last fall: owing to some mistake, the London Bookseller to whom the order was sent, after much needless labour and cost, for the entire work is now rare and very difficult to be procured, got together a whole set, uniformly and very elegantly bound, and sent them out to this country. The consequence is, that the duplicates must either be returned or disposed of, but rather than return them immediately, the present holder wishes to offer them at prime cost to the public, and any Gentleman desirous of forming a Library, will find this an opportunity that very seldom occurs.—The entire set consists of 37 Volumes, which cost in England £37 7s. Sterling. The broken set wanting only 6 or 7 Volumes, which may be readily procured, cost £45. The Purchaser may have his choice. The work is still, and will be annually continued. VALUABLE LANDS
For Sale.

THE following singularly desirable, and truly valuable Lands may be had, and immediate possession given, with undeniable titles, at rates far below their real value; and it is but seldom, even in a country so extensive as Canada, where uncultivated Lands may in general be readily obtained, that situations so eligible and advantageous, in good neighbourhoods, can be secured.

There are about 30 acres cleared and fenced, with a fine stream of living water, and the greater part of the Land of superior quality, the rest good Meadow.

LONDON, May 26.

The funds which have been for some time past slightly declining, experienced yesterday a more marked depression, consols being at one time down as low as 76 3-8. The cause of their last decline is attributed to an eminent banker of extensive country connexions, who had previously sold for the account, having yesterday actually delivered the stock bargained for, amounting, it is said, to about £1,000,000 sterling.

Letters from Vienna mention that Fouche is expected to quit Prague, and to establish himself and family at Linitz. Fouche has had some differences with Thibaudeau, and can no longer endure to reside in the same town with him — The latter has established a commercial house at Prague

Last night's Gazette contains an order in council for prohibiting, for six months longer, from the 30th inst. the exportation of gunpowder, arms, or ammunition, to the coast of Africa, the West Indies, or America.

Corn Exchange.—The continued large supplies which we are daily receiving, causes a great stagnation in the trade in general. The wheat and barley trade is particularly dull. In short, unless we little change we quote the prices nominally the same as on Monday—at the close of the market on that day flour declined 3s per sack—best price 70s.

The funds are advancing with great rapidity, Consols for money, which yesterday had been purchased at 78 1-4, are this morning 79, an advance of nearly one per cent. At 12 o'clock, they were for account 79 3-4.

The differences said at the stock exchange are to a very large amount The fluctuations during the last account were consols from 82 1-2 to 77 1-4.

We received this morning the Paris papers of Sunday last An article dated Vienna, the 14th inst. mentions that intelligence had been received there from Pesaro, stating that the princess of Wales was seriously indisposed on board. It was said, had been embarked to England, and two of the most celebrated physicians had been sent for from Milan. Her royal Highness had been affected for some time past with symptoms of fever, which, however, were not considered of an alarming character, but they afterwards became more serious.

The son of the Archduchess Maria Louisa has received the dukedom of Reichstadt in Bohemia, which title, with the appellation of highness, he is hereafter to bear. These domains formerly belonged to the house of Wurtzburg, but came into the possession of Austria in consequence of some family arrangements.

Last evening, about five o'clock, one of the officers belonging to the suite of the duke of Cambridge, arrived at the residence of the duke and duchess of Cumberland, in St. James' palace, with the melancholy intelligence of the death of a sister of the duchess

On Wednesday morning sailed from the port of Charlestown, in Cornwall, the Charlestown, Williams, master, with about 60 persons on board, as passengers for America; amongst them are some whole families including infants at the breast. In the number of those who have thus bid adieu to the land of their nativity, in pursuit of a better location on a foreign shore, is a woman 70 years of age, whose husband emigrated seven months since.

LONDON, May 28.

A most gratifying statement was made last night in the house of commons by the chancellor of the exchequer, that the revenue at the present moment was increasing in the ratio of £100,000 per week The right honorable gentleman also stated what he said on a former occasion, that it was extremely improbable that he should have occasion to raise any money by funding next year, as he had funded to so large an amount during the present one — Such are the facts of our internal circumstances, which present themselves as a curious commentary upon the doleful declamations of the party not eighteen months ago. They seem indeed to be so inapplicable to them that the Morning Chronicle or the students of contradictions, a word about them, in its report of parliamentary proceedings. A weekly increase of revenue to the amount of £100,000 was not worth remembering. Suppose there had been a weekly deficit of only one tenth of that sum. The Chronicle would have been "as melancholy as a hung'd bear," while like the crying philosopher of old, it would have smiled through its tears to think what a delicious subject for declamation it afforded to those with every song of triumph; it was the air sounded sword, which quitted the current of our festive thoughts, and made us trouble in gladness. In spite of all experience, these libelling prophets were listened to, and there were persons who really imagined we had only prepared for ourselves a splendid sepulchre by the magnanimity of all our unparalleled efforts. For the hundredth time, the fact has vexed the ingenious and nefarious views of those the profound and imperial statements? We look around us and ask, where are the symptoms of our destruction? Are they to be found in the increased value of landed property, or in the augmenting resources of our commercial greatness? A dark, tempestuous cloud did indeed, for a while, obscure the horizon, but it has passed away. The folly and guilt only, consisted in believing it would not pass away. Almost at the very moment when we were told nothing could save us, the work of redemption was begun; and we have since proceeded gradually, but steadily, in the path of amelioration. It has been no sudden start or fit of amendment in any particular branch of the national wealth, which might have been delusive, because depending upon the operation of casual circumstances; but a permanently progressive recovery from great oppression, simultaneously manifesting itself through all the channels of our foreign and domestic enterprize. This gradual improvement must go on; and we may now confidently look forwards to the period, when we shall reap the last great reward of our exertions, an industrious population cheerfully and comfortably employed in diffusing wealth over the land.

At Hamburg mail, bringing papers to the 22d inst. arrived this morning. An article from Stockholm gives an account of the coronation of Bernadotte, on the 18th inst. the ceremony of which was conducted with the most splendour and magnificence. The deputies from the Norwegian diet have presented an address to the king, congratulating him upon this event, and expressing their hope of seeing the crown of Norway again placed on the head of a hero.

LONDON, May 29.

We understand that next Tuesday week is the day finally fixed for discussing parliament, supposing nothing to intervene which may render it necessary to alter the arrangement — The business in both houses is expected to be gone through by the latter end of next week so that they may be prorogued on Saturday.

We have received some German papers this morning, their contents are wholly unimportant. An article from Switzerland mentions that the exchange of territory on the Rhine will probably be entered to the congress of sovereigns, as the negociations opened at Frankfort on this subject, have failed of effecting any conclusive arrangements

Letter from the Emperor Alexander to the Duke of Wellington.

A morning paper publishes the following as authentic, from the Emperor of Russia to the Duke of Wellington, on the late attack upon his life.

"My Lord Marshal,—I have been informed that an attempt has threatened your life. Heaven did not allow it to succeed. Your military glory, joined to your elevated views and character, have associated you so closely with the maintenance of the general welfare, that it cannot but suffer from any circumstance that would tend to alienate you from it. This is a testimony which I feel pleasure in bearing towards you, and which is independent of those claims which you have to my personal regard. A coincidence which the generosity of your sentiments will not fail to appreciate, is that by the authority with which you have been invested by the confidence of the allies, you have exercised, and you will continue to exercise, a salutary influence in the country, and in the very spot where malice has directed its impotent efforts against you. Receive, my lord, the renewed assurance of my high esteem

(Signed) "ALEXANDER."

Miss O'Neil is engaged at Both theatre for six nights, and her first appearance will be on the thirteenth of June, in the character of Belvidera.

There was imported into Liverpool last week, of wheat, 5,100 quarters, 12,370 bags, 2,092 barrels—of oats, 3,366 quarters and 44 bags—of barley, 8,667 quarters, 7,082 bags—and of flour, 60 bags last week, and 1,940 half barrels.

This quarter-loss has come down one penny this week, it is now thirteen pence. By the notices in the shop-windows there appears to be a very considerable reduction in the price of oatmeal.

LONDON, May 30.

We are happy to announce that intelligence has been received of a favorable nature from Bombay, communicating the conclusion of a treaty with Holkar, & the successful prosecution of the operations against the Pindarries.

We have received a copy of the treaty concluded between this country & the king of the Netherlands, for the more effectual abolition of the slave trade, which was signed at the Hague on the 4th inst. & has been since duly ratified & exchanged. By the first article of this treaty, the king of the Netherlands engages, within eight months from the present time, or sooner if possible, to prohibit all his subjects, in the most effectual manner, from taking any part whatever in the trade of slaves; & in the event of the measures hereafter to be adopted being found insufficient for that purpose, his majesty further engages to adopt such other ones as may appear best calculated to secure it. The second article provides for the right of mutual search, on the part of both the contracting powers; and the third explains the mode in which that right shall be exercised.

The Paris papers of Tuesday & Wednesday last, have arrived since our last. On the former day, the funeral obsequies of the prince de Conde were performed with all the pomp & solemnity due to his rank, his virtues, & the occasion. An article from Madrid mentions, that there was reason to believe the diplomatic discussions between Spain & the United States will lead to a rupture; but it admits they may lead to the voluntary cession of the Floridas, for a pecuniary indemnity. It was even supposed that a negociation was actually pending to that effect.

Towards the latter end of last month a quarrel arose between some Spanish & Portuguese soldiers, on the frontier of the kingdom of Leon, & some individuals were killed on both sides. This event was at first magnified into a commencement of hostilities between the two governments, but it was merely a private misunderstanding. It appears, however, that violent animosities reciprocally exist on the part of the military of Spain & Portugal, which the political differences between the two countries have tended to aggravate.

THE QUEEN.—We are happy to say, her majesty was so much better yesterday, that the public bulletins respecting the state of the queen's indisposition, were discontinued. Her majesty is now considered to be recovered.

FRENCH EXILES.

The chamber of deputies met on Saturday, May 16, & previous to the reading of the royal proclamation for the closing of the session, M. Reviere, reporter of the committee of petitions made a report on a petition of the exiled count Regnaud de St. Jean D'Angely, which, as contrasted with the proceedings in our own parliament on the alien bill merits notice. Count D'Angely; said the reporter, solicits the intervention of the chambers, in order that the diplomatic agent of France may obtain for French exiles in foreign countries, that protection which the laws of nations, misinterpreted by their perfidious, ought to secure to them.—" If, as I dare hope from your justice, says the petitioner, " you will remit my petition to a committee, the facts which it will be easily able to ascertain, will furnish the detail and the proofs of all the grievances which, till, now, we have supported with courage & resignation. But their duration, the appearance of a prolongation without end, have at last exhausted our physical as well as moral strength; indignation against injustice has succeeded to patience; the pride of a French soul, faithful to a country which misfortune and exile have only made dearer to it than ever, revolts against the absolute subjection in which an inexorable foreign police would hold it, and the humiliation of which seems to reflect on the nation to which it belongs. It is not the termination of my exile I solicit: time will ere long bring round the return of justice, and the cessation of unfounded resentments; the necessity of banishing party divisions, of forgetting the past, and of effecting a general reunion of sentiment, and will be felt by all hearts truly French. But until this happy epoch arrive, the exiles have need of powerful protection against the rigorous treatment which they experience, and which is such as scarcely to be equalled in the annals of history."

After giving an abstract of the remainder of the petition, the reporter added—

Considering that the individuals comprehended in the punishment of exile, inflicted by the ordinance of the 24th of July, 1815, & by the law of the month of January following, are not the less Frenchmen, enjoying the civil rights attached to that quality; and on that account, & as long as they observe the laws of the country in which they may reside, they ought to enjoy the advantages which the laws of nature & of nations assure to every individual, the commission propose the remit of the petition to the Minister for foreign affairs."

M. Saulnier supported the proposition for the remit, conceiving it just that the chamber should shield with its protection, those exiles, who, seeking an asylum abroad, respect the laws of the country which receives them, since, especially, foreign governments can have nothing to gain by accumulating needless rigours upon men who only ask to enjoy the rights of hospitality.

M. Cornet D'Incourt opposed the report, & moved the order of the day, but upon being put to the vote this motion was rejected, & the original motion for the remit to the minister for foreign affairs, was carried by a large majority.

[We believe St. Jean D'Angely was sometimes considered a little deranged while at New-York.]

PARIS, May 27.

" By accounts from Rome, we learn that public safety becomes daily more confirmed in the pontifical states. Nearly all the chiefs of the brigand bands have surrendered themselves: amongst these is the noted Cesaris—The gendarmes will be newly organized.—The army of the line of his holiness is estimated at about 9000 men of all arms.

" Adj. Gen. Girard, knight of the royal order of the legion of honour, also of the orders of Bavaria & Wurtemberg, died suddenly on the 16th inst. at Clermont Ferrand. The king had confided to him the command of the departments of Cantal, the Saute-Loire, & of Puyde Dome. Though still young in years, he had passed successively through all the inferior ranks in that of Adjutant-General."

BRUSSELS, May 22.

" The duke of Wellington returned yesterday from Ghent, and all this morning, at six o'clock, for Waterloo. His Lordship will return this evening."

Mr. Brook Taylor, English minister at our court, has received instructions to make the necessary arrangements for the marriage of the Duke of Kent with dowager princess of Leiningen.

AMERICAN NAVY.

The American papers which we have lately received, continue to speak of the efforts making to increase the strength of the navy of the United States with a view, no doubt, to a more desperate competition with Great Britain, should any unforeseen circumstances unhappily occasion another rupture between the two countries. Such an event is most earnestly to be deprecated; but as, in the various and fluctuating relations of States, it is impossible to say how soon tranquility, apparently the most profound, may be violated, it may be worth while again to call the public attention, while it can be calmly directed towards the subject, to the practice on the part of the Americans of under-rating their vessels: all of which are in fact of much greater strength than the class to which they belong. America is at present the only power that makes any distinction between the rate and actual strength of its ships of war. Neither France, Spain, nor Russia do so, nor, we believe, did they ever do so. The present American seventy-fours can throw a broadside within 20lbs as heavy as that of the Gedeonia, a British ship rating 120 guns & measuring 2617 tons. What the difference is in the frigate class may be seen in the following comparison, from James' "Naval Occurrences of the late war," between the Endymion, the largest and most formidable 44 gun frigate belonging to our Navy, & her late adversary the President, an American frigate of the same rate :—

	Endymion 44)
Broadside Metal in pounds	Long guns	512
	Carronades, 864

	Carronades 508

It is far from improbable, however, that the American Government, shamed by the British Order in Council, directing that all British men of war shall henceforward be rated according to their actual force may be contemplating the means of reducing their rating system, & bringing it a little nearer the standard of truth. The variation between the rate and mounting of the ships of the British Navy, was of gradual progress, attributable to accident rather than to design. If the Americans should pretend that the wide difference which exist between the rate and the mounting of their ships, arose out of adventitious circumstances, in no wise connected with any intention to deceive, or to obtain an undeserved advantage or character, the report of their own Secretary at War, made so far back as in the year 1798, will shew the fallacy of any such assertion; and as this subject may, at some time or other be of much national importance, we subjoin, from the able work that we have already quoted, a passage, in which that report is comprehended :—

" An Act of Congress, dated the 27th of March, 1794, authorized the building of four ships of "44 guns, and two of 36 guns;" and in 1813, the following appeared in a Philadelphia newspaper,

" Extract from a Report of the Secretary at War: April 1, 1798:

" It appears that the first estimate remitted to Congress, was for frigates of the common size and dimensions, rated at 36 and 44 guns; and that the first appropriations for the armament were founded upon this estimate. It also appears that, when their size and dimensions, came to be more maturely deliberated, due reference being had to the ships they might have to contend with, it was deemed proper, so to alter their dimensions, without changing their rates, as to extend their sphere of utility as much as possible.

" It was expected, from this alteration, that they would possess, in an eminent degree, advantage of sailing; that separately, they would be superior to any single European frigate of the usual dimensions; that if assailed by numbers, they would be always able to lead a-head; that they could never be obliged to go into action but on their own terms, except in a calm; & in heavy weather, they would be capable of engaging double deck ships.

" These are the principal advantages contemplated from the change made in their dimensions. Should they be realized they will more than compensate for having materially swelled the body of expenditures."

" Here is an official document, pointing out the 'advantages' of sending forth ships of greater size and force, than their rate implies; evidently, to operate as a cheat or delusion upon the rest of the world.

" There was no 'European frigate of the usual dimensions, but was known to be a third smaller, and a third weaker, than an American frigate 'of 44 guns.' But why to rate of 44 guns? Because the largest 'European frigates' then mounted that number; consequently, a frigate 'of 44 guns' was apparently equal to a frigate 'of 44 guns.' The difference between the rate and mounting was supposed to be a secret; thus above 'Report of the Secretary at War' not being suffered to see the light, till of late years, when some of the 'advantages' of the deception, have become indeed, 'realized.'!

'Happily it was reserved for Britain to pluck the veil of deception from the rating system. Her gallant tars require not the aid of fiction, to give a colour to their claims. The Order in Council expresses that all the vessels in the navy shall in future be distinguished by the number of guns & carronades they actually mount, & not according to the erroneous denominations which had long since grown into use. America, surely, will not now have the face to continue her rating system. In verification of the old proverb, she will find it her interest to be honest; but it will not be forgotten—who set her the example."

Cyrus King, Moore, arrived at Kittery, we learn that on the 15th ult. while that vessel in company with several others were in the Bay of Fundy, Capt. having paid their light money and obtained the privilege of getting bait in said bay, they were captured by H. The crew of the Cyrus King, on the third night after being carried in, got the keepers of their vessel intoxicated went into the custom house store, where they obtained a schooner's jib, and mainsail, which they immediately bent, and by cutting their cables, and warping out of the harbor, got under way, and arrived at Kittery on Saturday last.

The following is a list of vessels captured with the Cyrus King :—Schrs. Polly, Jenkins, owned by capt. Robert Noble, of this place; Roxana Spinney, owned by Mr. J. H. Shortridge, of do.; pink stern schr. Eight Sisters, of Portland, master and owner unknown; and a schr. belonging to Fox islands Coombs master. Extract of a letter from St. Bartholomews, dated May 18, 1815.

" We are all under arms since last night. We have joined Admiral Brion's and Aury's fleet, the Spanish fleet are in sight, we are to quarters, and expect to engage in a couple of hours, and are all very willing to fight. Our fleet is as follows :—Biron has one ship of 24 18 pounders 90 men; two brigs 12 guns each, 9 and 12 pounders, 75 men; three schooners 6-9 pounders, 140 men; one hermaphrodite do 6 9 pounders, 48 men; two schrs. 4 9-pounders 62 men —four brigs 18 18-pounders, 150 men. Total, 87 guns and 685 men.

" The enemy's vessels are as follows. One ship 36 18-pounders 400 men. (formerly the Young Wasp); one do. 24 18 and 12-pounders, 350 men, (formerly the Gen. Scott.) three brigs 58, 9 12 & 18 pounders 430 men; four schrs 4, 6, 9 and 12-pounders, 600 men. Total, 144 guns, and 1830 men.

We are certain we shall take them, for they are a miserable set of wretches. If I should escape with my life, I will leave the service, as Capt. Stafford has joined Biron's fleet; as there will be nothing made, but plenty of hard fighting, such as taking Porto Cabello, La Guira, Porto Rico.

TRENTON, June 6.

Lightning.—We are informed that on the 24th ult. in a thunder storm, fifty sheep out of a flock of 53, and one cow, were killed by lightning, in New-Brunswick township, Burlington county—the property of Samuel Sykes. A dwelling house, at Dower Forge was also struck during the same storm, and considerably damaged by the lightning.

NORFOLK, July 10.

The Congress arrived.—The U. States frigate Congress, Commodore Sinclair, anchored in Hampton Roads on Wednesday afternoon, from Buenos Ayres. Messrs Graham and Rodney, two of the commissioners sent out to the new republic by our government, had left, in the Congress, have returned in her, & with the Commodore, Mr. Breckenridge secretary to the mission, and Mr. Brent purser of the Congress, came up to town in the evening. Mr. Bland, another of the commissioners, who went out in the Congress, remains at Buenos Ayres, in the quality of a public representative from the government of the U. States.

The Congress touched at St. Salvador, on her passage home, for wood and water, and remained there 3 days.— Nothing worthy of remark transpired during her stay. She also touched at the island of Margarita, where she remained two days. The island was still in possession of the Patriots, who had rendered it almost impregnable. Gen. Arismendi, second in command of the Patriot forces had his head-quarters at Margarita. Anxious to hear some further particulars of the defeat or rather total dispersion of the Patriots, as reported in a letter received at Philadelphia from St. Thomas, of June 14th—and knowing that the Congress must bring the latest advices from the Main, we made particular enquiries of several of the gentlemen from the Congress, upon the subject, who informed that so far from having experienced any recent reverses, the affairs of the Patriots were never in a more flourishing condition. They had lately been reinforced by a fine brigade of artillery, composed entirely of British troops, which remained at St. Thomas in New Grenada, in March last for such were the conditions of all classes both of the citizens & military in the emancipation of Venezuela, that they considered it event to be as certain as if it had already been achieved. It will be recollected that the letter above referred to, states, that about a week prior to the 14th of June " the independent

From the facts above stated, I felt authorized to infer, that all the lost manure (that is, all the parts not imbibed by the roots of plants nor remaining in the soil) instead of sinking below the sphere of vegetation, rose into the atmosphere, and that "riddle land," (land on which the effects of manure were not lasting) however highly manured, so soon lost its fertility, not by losing the essence of the manure dug speedily through it, but by its incapacity to retain it against the power of evaporation.

By own practice since, has been confirmed to this conclusion ; diligently ploughing in all manures as soon as spread even so far as to spread in the morning no more than could be ploughed in before the hour of dining ; and while the cattle were eating, spread only so much more as they could plough in by night.

A SEA FIGHT.

THE truly formiable animal the SEA SERPENT, has been reported during the past week as having on the 21st ult. been seen in the act of giving battle to a Whale. Two depositions to this fact have been published in the Hallowell papers, by individuals of respectable character ; the substance of which we will endeavour to state. The Packet Delina, Shubael West Master, sailed from Boston for Hallowell on Sunday morning, June 21, and between 5 and 6 o'clock in the afternoon, about 2 or 3 leagues to the E. N. E. of Cape-Ann, the master and Mr. Samuel Schmid, of Philadelphia saw directly a-head of the vessel, an object 3-58ths of a mile distance which they suppose was the terrible Sea Serpent. Of this Capt. West says he has no doubt, and he was engaged with a whale that was endeavouring to elude the attack. Mr. Schmid says the object was white, standing upright out of the water, which he viewed for 6 or 7 minutes—till he saw its upper end waving about for a short time, when after giving a hard stroke to the water it disappeared—in about 3 or 4 minutes this object rose again ; when he called upon various persons below in the vessel, to come up and view it ; which they did immediately. At this time a whale appeared spouting near it, and the object which stood up, was after a time recognized as being the tail of some animal, and at length was concluded to be that of the noted Sea Serpent. The tail was now seen to strike the water again several times. Both these great objects then went below the surface of the sea—Capt. West is more full in regard to the reason of these repeated blows. "The Serpent (he states) threw up his tail from 25 to 30 feet in a perpendicular direction striking the Whale with tremendous blows rapidly repeated, which were distinctly heard and very loud for two or three minutes," when they disappeared. They rose again abreast of the vessel, but the reflection of the sun rendered the view of them imperfect. They sunk and again appeared on the larboard quarter. The Whale shewed himself first and the serpent following—he raised his tail, they both agree, about 25 or 30 feet, and whilst holding it out of water, he elevated his head 15 or 20 feet, as if taking a view of the surface of the sea. The intermediate body was invisible ; the neck was curved below the head, which was first held horizontally, but afterwards assumed an oblique position, as if looking down into the water. Some additional strokes according to Mr. S. were now made by the tail—and the Whale put himself in motion again—when they both dived below. Some time afterwards both animals appeared again, but at a greater distance, and the serpent made some fresh strokes ; which does not agree with Capt. Smith's account, and is not important in itself. Both depositions agree that the motion of these animals were rapid, and those of the Sea-Serpent were vigorous—the noise and agitation of the water were great, from the violence of his blows. The tail appeared to be flattened cross wise, its edge had an indented appearance ragged and rough? Capt. West thinks it was sharped something like an eel's.—Mr. S. says its end was blunt. The end and neck appeared of a dark color ; and the body below the neck seemed rapidly to enlarge. He had the opportunity soon to observe the mast of a vessel, which appeared much smaller. The separation between the head and the tail seemed so considerable, that it was thought the vessel might sail between them across the body, it is estimated that his length was about 100 feet. The Whale was of the bump back sort, and the master who is well acquainted with whaling, observes that he thinks he was endeavoring to escape, since he spouted but once at a time, on coming on the surface of the sea.

Some of the habits of this animal are different from those of the snake species The elevation of the tail to strike with as a weapon of defence, in contention with large animals, is opposite to the construction of other large serpents.—Perhaps the protuberances of the back and the undulatory shape of the vertebræ of the bone incapacitates him from using this peculiar power. The little Serpent which was submitted to the examination of the Linnean Society last year, conforms to the account here given—as well with regard to the heights to which the head could not might be elevated after it should have obtained its full height, as to the shortness of the tail, which agrees with the specimen obtained at Cape Ann. The notions thus obtained of this animal, particularly his combat with the "whale," establish beyond controversy, that it is a phenomenon in Natural History.—Boston Int.

MONTREAL, July 18.

Launched, from the yard of Hart Logan, Esq. last Saturday morning the NEW SWIFTSURE Steam Vessel, the property of John Molson and Sons.—Her dimensions are as follows, viz :—

Breadth of Beam, 24 feet,
Length of Keel, 124.
Ditto on deck from Stern 140 feet.

This vessel has been examined by many competent judges, and is pronounced to be as solid in materials and workmanship as any other of the kind in the River; and her model is said to be decidedly the finest of any of the steam vessels. She moved into her element without the smallest accident, and does infinite credit to Mr. Johnstone the Architect and Superintendent.

Melancholy occurrence.—On Monday the 6th inst. about 5 o'clock in the morning, the inhabitants of the parish of St. Giles, the settlements of which extend two leagues and a half along the low grounds on the banks of a river of the same name, falling into the Chaudiere, above the falls, perceived that the river was rising with extraordinary rapidity. It soon overflowed its banks, & extended over the low grounds, in a WAVE of considerable heighth, moving faster than a man can walk. The cattle in the fields were either immediately swept away, or retiring to eminences, soon surrounded and overflowed, were drowned. The inhabitants remained or took refuge in their houses, generally built on the highest grounds, in expectation that they would be safe ; but these also were soon surrounded. As the water rose in the houses, sweeping away every thing around them, they ascended into their garrets. One whole Family, the wife of Augustin Boule, & six children, were precipitated in the flood, along with the house, & drowned. Several other houses & barns were carried away, or damaged, but we have not heard of any other lives being lost. Many of the inhabitants have lost all their cattle, & a great portion of the live stock of the whole settlement is drowned. All the hay, being generally along the river, & almost all the grain, is destroyed. Sand & heaps of drifted timber, now cover the fields, on which the unfortunate owner contemplated with pleasure, only the evening before, an abundant reward of his labour, or at least, a fair prospect of future subsistance for himself and family.

The river rose seven feet in twelve minutes, and about eighteen feet above its usual level in a few hours, from a stream of about 50 feet, it became a river of more than a mile in width ; it tore up by the roots elm trees of three feet in diameter, & has made gullies throughout the fields to the depth of six feet. In many places, its course is changed ; the main bed of the river, now runs where the house of one Antoine Couture stood the day before. It was five days before it retired within its banks.

The following are the names of some of the principal sufferers :

Augustin Boule, Augustin Philippe, Germain Montmenil, Philippe Tetreau, Antoine Couture, Etienne Philippe, Amable Delage, Pierre Landreau, — Edward, Antoine Hamel, and Mr. Davison. We have no doubt, however, that authenticated statements will soon be made out.

There had been no rain of any consequence at St. Giles for more than a week before the above disaster. The cause of the sudden overflowing of the river, is supposed to be the heavy thunder showers of the preceding day, among the mountains on the south shore, towards the sources of the St. Giles. People who were working on Craig's Road, six leagues up the waters of St. Giles, and also people who have come in from Broughton, report that the rain fell in torrents in those parts on Sunday afternoon, and during the night. In Broughton the course of a river was changed by its overflowing, the roads gullied, & bridges carried away. It is needless to mention, that along the St. Giles, hardly any roads or bridges remain.—Can. Gazette.

QUEBEC, July 7.—On Saturday was disbanded His Majesty's 99th Regt. A braver and more orderly body of men the service had not to boast of. To say less of this regiment, on mentioning its disband, would be a detraction from the justice due to its deserts. As many of the men purpose settling in the country, we have no doubt of their contributing, by their labours, to its eventual improvement ; and should their services at any time be wanted in its defence, to whom can we look for security with more satisfaction than to Old British Soldiers.

July 14.—Among the late arrivals of troops, our attention has been particularly drawn to the 66th Light Infantry regiment ; it being a remarkably fine body of young healthful looking men.—They have an excellent band of music, and their bugles, with their mellifluous swell, attract many other evening to the main guard, at Upton, a numerous and delighted audience. They take their turns in this duty with the 60th bugles, which though not equal to those of the 66th reg. have, however, their attractions.

Yesterday morning, at sunrise, and for some hours after, the town was covered with a saffron coloured haze, to the great surprize of many, and the affright of some. It is not, however, the first time that we have seen the atmosephere so coloured, particularly in eclipses of the sun. On the disappearance of the haze, the orb of day shone out with his usual splendour ; with which we have for some time past, been blessed in an extraordinary degree, and latterly with alternate fructifying showers, as is evinced by the verdant aspect of the country, vegetation generally being in a very flourishing state. The boats have been uncommonly intense for so early a season as the end of June and beginning of July.

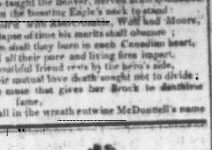
YORK, THURSDAY, AUGUST 6.

The Steam Boat on Monday brought a report, which appears to be authentic, that their Excellencies the Duke of Richmond and Sir Peregrine Maitland, arrived at Quebec on the 28th ult. It is said that Sir Peregrine was expected to make a very short stay at Quebec, a Steam Boat having been engaged to take him to Montreal.



We regret that we were unable to be present at the annual examination of the scholars of the District School, on Thursday last ; but we have been informed that a numerous and very respectable auditory felt highly gratified by the successful efforts of the youths, which reflected the greatest praise on their preceptors as well as themselves.

Several original pieces were recited, from which we select the following as being the most interesting to the feelings of the country ; it was delivered with great propriety by Master ALLAN MCDONNELL :

HOW are the generous chiefs, fair England's pride,
For her they conquered, and for her they died;
Their glories dart a vivifying blaze,
And heroes form to emulate their praise;
Thus dauntless Brock, to share their spotless fame,
In kindred deeds prefers exterior claim.
The elysian orchard's in blood, Britannia's heart,
Its justice owns and sanctions what her hero bore.
And shall not we (spurns on grateful hearts,
Our hero's merits ere the day departs;
Alas our hearts are cold, no tomb we raise,
To tell his glorious deeds to future days.
Lest his, nameless in the vast concave,
With heroes hoard, its triumph I trace.

EPITAPH.

Way calls you hastion forth the patriot's sigh,
And starts the tear from beauty's swelling eye;
Within its breast undaunted Brock is laid,
A tomb according with the mighty dead.
Whose soul devoted to his country's cause
In deeds of glory sought her just applause:
Who taught the brave, nerved alike command,
Upon the towering Eagle's neck to stand Immortal with adversaries, Wolf had Moore.
No name of time his merits shall obscure;
Here shall they burn in each Canadian heart,
And all their pure and living fires impart.
A youthful friend rears by the hero's side,
Their mutual love death sought not to divide;
The muse that gives her Brock to deathless fame,
Shall in the wreath entwine McDonnell's name

Miscellaneous.

BARON F. H. A. DE HUMBOLDT.

Frederick Henry Alexander, baron de Humboldt, the celebrated traveller, was born at Berlin on the 14th of Sept. 1769. He pursued his studies at Gottingen, at Frankfort on the Oder, and lastly, at the Commercial School at Hamburgh, (see Buch's Universal Biography.) In 1790 he undertook his first journey through Europe, accompanied by Forster & Genus. He visited the banks of the Rhine, Holland, & England, and published his Observations on the Basaltes of the Rhine, Brunswick, 1790, 8vo. In 1791, he tudied mineralogy & botany, under Werner, at Freiberg; & in 1793, printed at Berlin, his Specimen Floræ Freibergensis Subterraneæ. In 1792, he became assessor of the Council of mines at Berlin, and afterwards director-general of the mines of the principality of Anspach & Bayreuth, in Franconia. Th re he founded several magnificent establishments, such as the School of Steben, and was likewise one of the first who repeated the five experiments of Galvani. Not satisfied with merely observing the muscular & nervous irritability of animals, he had the courage to make very painful experiments on himself, the results of which he published, with remarks by Baumgartner, in a work written in German, Berlin, 1796, 2 vols. 8vo. The first volume has been translated into French by J. F. N. Jadelot, under the following title: Experiences sur le Galvanisme, et en general sur l'irritation des Fibres Musculaires et Nerveuses, 1799, 8vo. In 1795, M. de Humboldt travelled to Italy & Switzerland, accompanied by M. de Friedleben; and in 1797, he proceeded with his brother to Paris, where he became acquainted with M. Aime Bonpland. At that time he entertained a wish to form a part of the expedition of capt. Baudin; but the renewal of hostilities with Austria prevented him from embarking. M. de Humboldt now turned his thoughts seriously towards executing a plan which he had long since formed, namely, of making a philosophic visit to the east. He anxiously wished to join the expedition which had departed for Egypt, from whence he hoped to penetrate as far as Arabia, and there to the English settlements by crossing the Persian Gulf. He waited two months at Marseilles to obtain his passage on board a Swedish frigate, which was to convey a consul from Sweden to Algiers. At length, supposing that he might easily find means to proceed from Spain to Barbary, he set out for the former country, carrying with him a considerable collection of physical and astronomical instruments. After remaining several months at Madrid, the Spanish government granted him permission to visit their colonies in the new world. He immediately wrote to Paris, to request that M. Bonpland would accompany him, & the two friends embarked at Corunna, on board a Spanish vessel. They arrived at Cumana, in South America, in July 1799. The remainder of the year was spent in visiting the provinces of the Caraibees, and in 1800 M. proceeded to the island of Cuba, where, in the space of three months, M. de Humboldt determined the longitude of the Havannah, and assisted the planters in constructing furnaces for the preparation of sugar. In 1801, several false reports were circulated respecting the voyage of capt. Baudin, which induced M. de Humboldt to form the design of meeting him; but in order to avoid accidents he sent his collections and manuscripts to Europe, and set out himself in the month of March. The unfavorable state of the weather, however, prevented him from pursuing the course he had traced out: and he resolved to visit the superb collection of Mutis, a celebrated American naturalist. In September, 1801, M. de Humboldt set out for Quito, where he arrived in the month of January 1802. There he was at length able to repose after his fatigues, and to enjoy the pleasures of hospitality amidst the most beautiful productions of nature. At Quito M. de Humboldt, accompanied by the son of the Marquess de Selva Alegre, (who, through an ardent passion for science, had never quitted him since his arrival,) determined on an enterprise, the execution of which cost him incredible labour. Finally, he departed, towards the middle of the summer, for the volcano of Tungaragua and the Nevado del Chimborazo. They passed through the ruins of Riobamba, and several other villages, destroyed on the 7th of Feb. 1797, by an earthquake, which in one moment swallowed up more than 40000 individuals, and ultimately, after innumerable difficulties, arrived, on the 23d June, on the eastern side of Chimborazo, and fixed their instruments on the brink of a porphyry rocky which projected over an immense space covered with an impenetrable bed of snow. A breach, about five hundred feet in width, prevented them from advancing further. The density of the air was one half reduced; they experienced the bitterest cold; they breathed with difficulty, and the blood flowed from their eyes, lips, & gums. They were then on the most elevated point that had ever been touched by mortal footsteps. They stood at an elevation of 3485 feet higher than that which Condamine attained in 1745, and were consequently 19,500 feet above the level of the sea. From this position of extreme height they ascertained, by means of a trigonometrical operation, that the summit of Chimborazo, was 2140 feet higher than the point on which they stood. Having concluded these important observations, M. de Humboldt directed his course towards Lima, the capital of Peru. He remained for several months in that city, enchanted with the vivacity and intelligence of its inhabitants. During his residence among the Peruvians, he observed, at the port of Callao, the emersion of the passage of Mercury on the disk of the sun. From Lima he proceeded to New Spain, where he remained for the space of a year; he arrived at Mexico in April, 1803. In the neighbourhood of that city he discovered the trunk of the famous Cheirostemon Platanoides, the only tree of that species that is to be seen in New Spain: it has existed since the remotest ages, and is nine yards in circumference. The labours of M. de Humboldt were now drawing to a close. He made several excursions during the months of January and February 1804; but they were his last, & he hastened to embark for Havanna. An July he set sail for Philadelphia, & after having resided for some time in the U. States, he crossed the Atlantic and arrived in France, after an absence of 6 years, marked by labours the most useful and satisfactory, though filled with fatigue, dangers, and distress, of every kind. During his travels, M. de Humboldt rectified, by the most exact operations, the errors which had been committed in fixing the geographical positions of most of the points of the New World. He has likewise discovered a very ingenious method, preferable to any descriptions, for demonstrating, under a single point of view, the accumulated results of his topographical and mineralogical observations. He has given proofes of the vertical sections of the countries he visited. The herbal which he brought with him from Mexico, consists of the richest in exotic plants that was ever transported to Europe: it contains 6300 different species. Animated by an ardent desire for making discoveries, and endowed with the means of satisfying this noble ambition, M. de Humboldt has extended his researches to every branch of physical & social knowledge. The mass of curious information, which he collected in the New World, surpasses all that has ever resulted from the investigations of any other individual. He has diffused a new light over the history of our species, extended the limits of mathematical geography, and added an infinite number of new objects to the treasures of botany, zoology, and mineralogy. These precious acquisitions, each classed in the order to which they belong, were published in 1805, and several succeeding years, at Paris, Hamburgh, and London. M. Humboldt & Bonpland having shared together all the fatigues and dangers of their journey, agreed that their works should be published under the names of both; the preface of each work explained to whom such & such a portion is specifically due. M. de Humboldt also laboured in connion with M. de Guy-Lussac. They conjointly verified the theory of M. Biot, on the position of the magnetic equator; and ascertained that great chains of mountains, and even burning volcanos, have no sensible influence on the magnetic power; and that this power progressively diminishes in proportion as we depart from the terrestial equator. The narratives of M. de Humboldt's voyages have been published in several different languages; but he has disavowed them by publishing those which we have mentioned in the course of this article. It has been stated in several public journals, that this indefatigable traveller intends visiting the Alps of Thibet, the most elevated point which is said to be 3700 feet higher than Chimborazo. At one of the sittings of the French Academy, 1817, M. de Humboldt produced his chart of the river Oronoako, which presents the phenomenon of the junction of that immense river with the Amazon, by the intermediate waters of the Rio Negro; a confluence which was supposed to exist by d'Anville, but which had hitherto remained a matter of doubt.—

Lithurgus.—This name is given to a new but useful article, made of a peculiar kind of stone, in the form of vessels adapted to cool wine, preserve butter, &c.—They owe their properties to the power of absorption and evaporation possessed by the stone; and are superior, to earthenware articles applicable to the same purposes, being entirely free from that clayey smell which belongs to unglazed pottery.

The wine coolers require only to be steeped for ten minutes in cold water, when they are fit to receive a decanter of wine.—The butter preservers steeped in the same manner are ready to receive a vessel containing the butter, and will keep it cool in the hottest weather, and retain their moisture for a day or two.

Elegant stone pyramids for growing excellent anti-scorbutic salads, require only to be saturated with water. The seed equally distributed in the external grooves, the central hole filled with water, (and the waste daily supplied,) will, in eight or ten days, produce a fine green crop of very superior quality, which may be eaten clean and fresh from the pyramids placed on the table. —When the crop is plucked from any number of grooves, and the loose seeds brushed off, new may be sown and successive crops obtained.

THE YANAR OF DELIKTASH.

In the years 1811 and 1812, the frigate Fredericksteen, Capt. Beaufort, was employed by the British Admiralty in making a survey of the south coast of Asia Minor. Since the return of the ship to England, a set of charts has been drawn from the results of the survey, which are now engraving for the use of the British Navy. Capt. Beaufort has also just published a work compiled from the materials collected by him during the survey, entitled Karamania, or a Brief Description of the South Coast of Asia Minor, and of the Remains of Antiquity with plans, views, &c. The coast seems to have been very little visited by European travellers, and the author of this work had a field of inquiry almost entirely new.—Some remarkable works of art have been discovered by him which were not before known, beyond their own vicinity, to be in existence. He also describes some very remarkable natural appearances on this mountainous Coast.—The following is an extract from the Book :—

"The coast to the northward of this place, Strabo calls Coryeus; The Turkish name for the district is Tchirahy, which means the country of unctuous wood; and the inhabitants assert that the timber of the fir trees is peculiary inflammable.

"We had seen from the ship the preceding night a small but steady light among the hills, on mentioning the circumstance to the inhabitants, we learned that it was a Yanar, or volcanic flame, and they offered to supply us with horses and guides to examine it.

"We rode about two miles, through a fertile plain, partly cultivated; and when winding up a rocky and thickly wooded glen we arrived at the place. In the inner corner of a ruined building the wall is undermined, so as to leave an aperture of about three feet diameter, shaped like the mouth of an oven; from thence the flame issues, giving out an intense heat, yet producing no smoke on the wall; and though from the neck of the opening we detached some small lumps of caked soot, the walls were hardly discoloured. Dry brushwood, and weeds grow close round this little crater; a small stream trickles down the hill hard by, and the ground does not appear to feel the effect of this heat at more than a few feet distance. The hill is composed of the crumbly serpentine already mentioned, with occasionly loose blocks of limestone, and we perceived no volcanic production whatever in the neighborhood.

"At a short distance, lower down the side of the hill, there is another hole, which has apparently been at some time the vent of a similar flame; but our guide asserted, that in the memory of man there had been but the one, and it had never changed its present size or appearance. It was never accompanied, he said, by earthquake or noises; ejected no stones, ashes, nor any noxious vapours, neither has a brilliant perpetual flame, which no quantities of water could quench. The inhabitants he added, frequently cooked their victuals there; and he informed with regret, I suppose, that it was notorious that no rams would not roast meat that had been stolen.

"This phenomenon appears to have existed here for many ages, as unquestionably this is the place to which Pliny alludes in the following passage: "Mount Chimera, near Phaselis, emits an accessing flame, that burns day and night." We did not however perceive that the adjacent mountains of Hephæstia were quite so inflammable as he describes them. The late Col. Rooke, who lived many years among these Islands of the Archipelago, informed me that high upon the western mountains of Samos, he had seen a flame of the same kind, but that it was intermittent.

"Among several ruined buildings about the yanar, we found the remains of a Christian Church, it is low rudely built, the inside had formerly been staccoed, and painted in compartments of red, white, and green, but had afterwards received a coarse coat of plaster, which, having dropped off in many places, discovers several painted inscriptions curiously ornamented but of which we could make out little more than "Theodosius, the servant of God." There are many mutilated inscriptions on detached stones in the neighbourhood; in one we again read the word Olympus; another which is on a broken pedestal, that now forms a part of the wall through which the flame emerges, records the virtues of some person to whom a statue has been erected at the Public expence: but in none of them is there the smallest allusion to the flame."

A hasty passionate fellow was supping with a friend who never contradicted him, not wishing to provoke his wrath. Unable to endure this acquiescence, he at last burst out, "D—n it, deny something, that I may know there are two of us."

Among the various communications respecting the late General Montgomery, (says a correspondent of the Mercantile Advertiser) whose funeral honors engaged and interested so many of our fellow citizens yesterday, it was omitted to be stated, that the general was a native of Ireland, born near Lifford, in the county of Donegal, in the year 1740, of one of the most respectable families in that country. His elder brother, Alexander Montgomery, enjoyed the paternal estate, and was representative in parliament for the county of Donegal for many years. The late general, to whose remains we have paid such high and merited honors, entered early in life in the British service as captain of infantry, & served with distinguished credit during the war which ended in 1763. He then resigned his commission, and devoted all the energies of his mind and person to the service of his adopted country—America,

A good example.—At a meeting of the inhabitants from several townships in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, the following resolution was passed.

Resolved, That we will discourage the use of ardent spirits as an article of drink. We will not procure, use, or give it to others as such in the time of gathering our hay and harvest, at the raising of buildings, or any other public or social occasions.

Miscellaneous.

BARON F. H. A. DE HUMBOLDT.

Frederick Henry Alexander, baron de Humboldt, the celebrated traveller, was born at Berlin on the 14th of Sept. 1769. He pursued his studies at Gottingen, at Frankfort on the Oder, and lastly, at the Commercial School at Hamburgh, (see Buch's Universal Biography.) In 1790 he undertook his first journey through Europe, accompanied by Forster & Genus. He visited the banks of the Rhine, Holland, & England, and published his Observations on the Basaltes of the Rhine, Brunswick, 1790, 8vo. In 1791, he tudied mineralogy & botany, under Werner, at Freiberg; & in 1793, printed at Berlin, his Specimen Floræ Freibergensis Subterraneæ. In 1792, he became assessor of the Council of mines at Berlin, and afterwards director-general of the mines of the principality of Anspach & Bayreuth, in Franconia. Th re he founded several magnificent establishments, such as the School of Steben, and was likewise one of the first who repeated the five experiments of Galvani. Not satisfied with merely observing the muscular & nervous irritability of animals, he had the courage to make very painful experiments on himself, the results of which he published, with remarks by Baumgartner, in a work written in German, Berlin, 1796, 2 vols. 8vo. The first volume has been translated into French by J. F. N. Jadelot, under the following title: Experiences sur le Galvanisme, et en general sur l'irritation des Fibres Musculaires et Nerveuses, 1799, 8vo. In 1795, M. de Humboldt travelled to Italy & Switzerland, accompanied by M. de Friedleben; and in 1797, he proceeded with his brother to Paris, where he became acquainted with M. Aime Bonpland. At that time he entertained a wish to form a part of the expedition of capt. Baudin; but the renewal of hostilities with Austria prevented him from embarking. M. de Humboldt now turned his thoughts seriously towards executing a plan which he had long since formed, namely, of making a philosophic visit to the east. He anxiously wished to join the expedition which had departed for Egypt, from whence he hoped to penetrate as far as Arabia, and there to the English settlements by crossing the Persian Gulf. He waited two months at Marseilles to obtain his passage on board a Swedish frigate, which was to convey a consul from Sweden to Algiers. At length, supposing that he might easily find means to proceed from Spain to Barbary, he set out for the former country, carrying with him a considerable collection of physical and astronomical instruments. After remaining several months at Madrid, the Spanish government granted him permission to visit their colonies in the new world. He immediately wrote to Paris, to request that M. Bonpland would accompany him, & the two friends embarked at Corunna, on board a Spanish vessel. They arrived at Cumana, in South America, in July 1799. The remainder of the year was spent in visiting the provinces of the Caraibees, and in 1800 M. proceeded to the island of Cuba, where, in the space of three months, M. de Humboldt determined the longitude of the Havannah, and assisted the planters in constructing furnaces for the preparation of sugar. In 1801, several false reports were circulated respecting the voyage of capt. Baudin, which induced M. de Humboldt to form the design of meeting him; but in order to avoid accidents he sent his collections and manuscripts to Europe, and set out himself in the month of March. The unfavorable state of the weather, however, prevented him from pursuing the course he had traced out: and he resolved to visit the superb collection of Mutis, a celebrated American naturalist. In September, 1801, M. de Humboldt set out for Quito, where he arrived in the month of January 1802. There he was at length able to repose after his fatigues, and to enjoy the pleasures of hospitality amidst the most beautiful productions of nature. At Quito M. de Humboldt, accompanied by the son of the Marquess de Selva Alegre, (who, through an ardent passion for science, had never quitted him since his arrival,) determined on an enterprise, the execution of which cost him incredible labour. Finally, he departed, towards the middle of the summer, for the volcano of Tungaragua and the Nevado del Chimborazo. They passed through the ruins of Riobamba, and several other villages, destroyed on the 7th of Feb. 1797, by an earthquake, which in one moment swallowed up more than 40000 individuals, and ultimately, after innumerable difficulties, arrived, on the 23d June, on the eastern side of Chimborazo, and fixed their instruments on the brink of a porphyry rocky which projected over an immense space covered with an impenetrable bed of snow. A breach, about five hundred feet in width, prevented them from advancing further. The density of the air was one half reduced; they experienced the bitterest cold; they breathed with difficulty, and the blood flowed from their eyes, lips, & gums. They were then on the most elevated point that had ever been touched by mortal footsteps. They stood at an elevation of 3485 feet higher than that which Condamine attained in 1745, and were consequently 19,500 feet above the level of the sea. From this position of extreme height they ascertained, by means of a trigonometrical operation, that the summit of Chimborazo, was 2140 feet higher than the point on which they stood. Having concluded these important observations, M. de Humboldt directed his course towards Lima, the capital of Peru. He remained for several months in that city, enchanted with the vivacity and intelligence of its inhabitants. During his residence among the Peruvians, he observed, at the port of Callao, the emersion of the passage of Mercury on the disk of the sun. From Lima he proceeded to New Spain, where he remained for the space of a year; he arrived at Mexico in April, 1803. In the neighbourhood of that city he discovered the trunk of the famous Cheirostemon Platanoides, the only tree of that species that is to be seen in New Spain: it has existed since the remotest ages, and is nine yards in circumference. The labours of M. de Humboldt were now drawing to a close. He made several excursions during the months of January and February 1804; but they were his last, & he hastened to embark for Havanna. An July he set sail for Philadelphia, & after having resided for some time in the U. States, he crossed the Atlantic and arrived in France, after an absence of 6 years, marked by labours the most useful and satisfactory, though filled with fatigue, dangers, and distress, of every kind. During his travels, M. de Humboldt rectified, by the most exact operations, the errors which had been committed in fixing the geographical positions of most of the points of the New World. He has likewise discovered a very ingenious method, preferable to any descriptions, for demonstrating, under a single point of view, the accumulated results of his topographical and mineralogical observations. He has given proofes of the vertical sections of the countries he visited. The herbal which he brought with him from Mexico, consists of the richest in exotic plants that was ever transported to Europe: it contains 6300 different species. Animated by an ardent desire for making discoveries, and endowed with the means of satisfying this noble ambition, M. de Humboldt has extended his researches to every branch of physical & social knowledge. The mass of curious information, which he collected in the New World, surpasses all that has ever resulted from the investigations of any other individual. He has diffused a new light over the history of our species, extended the limits of mathematical geography, and added an infinite number of new objects to the treasures of botany, zoology, and mineralogy. These precious acquisitions, each classed in the order to which they belong, were published in 1805, and several succeeding years, at Paris, Hamburgh, and London. M. Humboldt & Bonpland having shared together all the fatigues and dangers of their journey, agreed that their works should be published under the names of both; the preface of each work explained to whom such & such a portion is specifically due. M. de Humboldt also laboured in connion with M. de Guy-Lussac. They conjointly verified the theory of M. Biot, on the position of the magnetic equator; and ascertained that great chains of mountains, and even burning volcanos, have no sensible influence on the magnetic power; and that this power progressively diminishes in proportion as we depart from the terrestial equator. The narratives of M. de Humboldt's voyages have been published in several different languages; but he has disavowed them by publishing those which we have mentioned in the course of this article. It has been stated in several public journals, that this indefatigable traveller intends visiting the Alps of Thibet, the most elevated point which is said to be 3700 feet higher than Chimborazo. At one of the sittings of the French Academy, 1817, M. de Humboldt produced his chart of the river Oronoako, which presents the phenomenon of the junction of that immense river with the Amazon, by the intermediate waters of the Rio Negro; a confluence which was supposed to exist by d'Anville, but which had hitherto remained a matter of doubt.—

Lithurgus.—This name is given to a new but useful article, made of a peculiar kind of stone, in the form of vessels adapted to cool wine, preserve butter, &c.—They owe their properties to the power of absorption and evaporation possessed by the stone; and are superior, to earthenware articles applicable to the same purposes, being entirely free from that clayey smell which belongs to unglazed pottery.

The wine coolers require only to be steeped for ten minutes in cold water, when they are fit to receive a decanter of wine.—The butter preservers steeped in the same manner are ready to receive a vessel containing the butter, and will keep it cool in the hottest weather, and retain their moisture for a day or two.

Elegant stone pyramids for growing excellent anti-scorbutic salads, require only to be saturated with water. The seed equally distributed in the external grooves, the central hole filled with water, (and the waste daily supplied,) will, in eight or ten days, produce a fine green crop of very superior quality, which may be eaten clean and fresh from the pyramids placed on the table. —When the crop is plucked from any number of grooves, and the loose seeds brushed off, new may be sown and successive crops obtained.

THE YANAR OF DELIKTASH.

In the years 1811 and 1812, the frigate Fredericksteen, Capt. Beaufort, was employed by the British Admiralty in making a survey of the south coast of Asia Minor. Since the return of the ship to England, a set of charts has been drawn from the results of the survey, which are now engraving for the use of the British Navy. Capt. Beaufort has also just published a work compiled from the materials collected by him during the survey, entitled Karamania, or a Brief Description of the South Coast of Asia Minor, and of the Remains of Antiquity with plans, views, &c. The coast seems to have been very little visited by European travellers, and the author of this work had a field of inquiry almost entirely new.—Some remarkable works of art have been discovered by him which were not before known, beyond their own vicinity, to be in existence. He also describes some very remarkable natural appearances on this mountainous Coast.—The following is an extract from the Book :—

"The coast to the northward of this place, Strabo calls Coryeus; The Turkish name for the district is Tchirahy, which means the country of unctuous wood; and the inhabitants assert that the timber of the fir trees is peculiary inflammable.

"We had seen from the ship the preceding night a small but steady light among the hills, on mentioning the circumstance to the inhabitants, we learned that it was a Yanar, or volcanic flame, and they offered to supply us with horses and guides to examine it.

"We rode about two miles, through a fertile plain, partly cultivated; and when winding up a rocky and thickly wooded glen we arrived at the place. In the inner corner of a ruined building the wall is undermined, so as to leave an aperture of about three feet diameter, shaped like the mouth of an oven; from thence the flame issues, giving out an intense heat, yet producing no smoke on the wall; and though from the neck of the opening we detached some small lumps of caked soot, the walls were hardly discoloured. Dry brushwood, and weeds grow close round this little crater; a small stream trickles down the hill hard by, and the ground does not appear to feel the effect of this heat at more than a few feet distance. The hill is composed of the crumbly serpentine already mentioned, with occasionly loose blocks of limestone, and we perceived no volcanic production whatever in the neighborhood.

"At a short distance, lower down the side of the hill, there is another hole, which has apparently been at some time the vent of a similar flame; but our guide asserted, that in the memory of man there had been but the one, and it had never changed its present size or appearance. It was never accompanied, he said, by earthquake or noises; ejected no stones, ashes, nor any noxious vapours, neither has a brilliant perpetual flame, which no quantities of water could quench. The inhabitants he added, frequently cooked their victuals there; and he informed with regret, I suppose, that it was notorious that no rams would not roast meat that had been stolen.

"This phenomenon appears to have existed here for many ages, as unquestionably this is the place to which Pliny alludes in the following passage: "Mount Chimera, near Phaselis, emits an accessing flame, that burns day and night." We did not however perceive that the adjacent mountains of Hephæstia were quite so inflammable as he describes them. The late Col. Rooke, who lived many years among these Islands of the Archipelago, informed me that high upon the western mountains of Samos, he had seen a flame of the same kind, but that it was intermittent.

"Among several ruined buildings about the yanar, we found the remains of a Christian Church, it is low rudely built, the inside had formerly been staccoed, and painted in compartments of red, white, and green, but had afterwards received a coarse coat of plaster, which, having dropped off in many places, discovers several painted inscriptions curiously ornamented but of which we could make out little more than "Theodosius, the servant of God." There are many mutilated inscriptions on detached stones in the neighbourhood; in one we again read the word Olympus; another which is on a broken pedestal, that now forms a part of the wall through which the flame emerges, records the virtues of some person to whom a statue has been erected at the Public expence: but in none of them is there the smallest allusion to the flame."

A hasty passionate fellow was supping with a friend who never contradicted him, not wishing to provoke his wrath. Unable to endure this acquiescence, he at last burst out, "D—n it, deny something, that I may know there are two of us."

Among the various communications respecting the late General Montgomery, (says a correspondent of the Mercantile Advertiser) whose funeral honors engaged and interested so many of our fellow citizens yesterday, it was omitted to be stated, that the general was a native of Ireland, born near Lifford, in the county of Donegal, in the year 1740, of one of the most respectable families in that country. His elder brother, Alexander Montgomery, enjoyed the paternal estate, and was representative in parliament for the county of Donegal for many years. The late general, to whose remains we have paid such high and merited honors, entered early in life in the British service as captain of infantry, & served with distinguished credit during the war which ended in 1763. He then resigned his commission, and devoted all the energies of his mind and person to the service of his adopted country—America,

A good example.—At a meeting of the inhabitants from several townships in Delaware county, Pennsylvania, the following resolution was passed.

Resolved, That we will discourage the use of ardent spirits as an article of drink. We will not procure, use, or give it to others as such in the time of gathering our hay and harvest, at the raising of buildings, or any other public or social occasions.

NOTICE

General Quarter Sessions of the Peace, York, 14th March, 1818.

ORDERED, that in future no application will be received for the renewal or granting Licences to keep Taverns in the Town of York, from persons at the time having a Shop Licence, or a Shop kept in the House for which the Tavern Licence is asked. And Ordered, that the above Notice be published in the Upper-Canada Gazette, once a month, till January next.

A material for roofing is used in England which is cheap and durable. It is formed by slipping sheets of course paper (such as button makers use) in boiling tar, and nailing them on boards or laths, exactly in the manner of slates. The whole is afterwards coated over with a mixture of pitch and powdered coal, chalk or brick dust.—Roofs covered in this way are said to have lasted 50 years without repairs.

NEW-BRUNSWICK, July 31.

Our city has been much alarmed a few days past, in consequence of the appearance of mad dogs. We understand that a young man has been bitten by one of these animals, but having applied the scull cap, we hope it will prove as efficacious in this as it has in former cases. A cow expired suddenly a few days since, exhibiting every symptom of the hydrophobia, occasioned it is supposed by the licking of the blood of a dog, killed a few days previous for that disease. The common council of the city have passed an ordinance, imposing a fine upon the owners of such dogs as shall be found running at large for the period of two months.

Ice.—A fishing schooner arrived at Newburyport, on the 14th of July, in lat. 44, long. 50 N. on the western edge of the Banks, saw an island of ice.

FREDONIA, July 21.

Mr. BUFFINGTON of Portland, of whom mention was made the last season as having penetrated to the the uncommon depth of 530 feet into the solid rock on the shore of lake Erie in pursuit of salt water, has this summer, resumed his laborious undertaking and perforated 100 feet further into the rock—the whole, amounts to the astonishing depth of six hundred and thirty feet, or something more than thirty eight rods. This it is believed, is 100 feet lower than the level of the tide waters of the Hudson, at Albany, and about 300 feet lower than the greatest known depth of lake Erie. Mr. B. thus far, we are sorry to say, has been disappointed in obtaining his object; he intends however, to continue boring if he can obtain more assistance. We cannot but hope that so much faith and perseverance in this novel enterprise, may be amply rewarded.—Chau. Gaz.

pam and Mary, has contrived an apparatus for burning tar instead of oil, to light cities, manufactories, &c. with a great diminution of expence. He has ascertained that three pounds of tar burnt in this apparatus, will give as much light as two pounds of oil or tallow burnt in the usual manner, & consequently, calculating on the usual prices of these articles and the entire saving for wicks, which are not required for the burning of tar, it appears that the same quantity of light may be produced in this way at a very reduced cost.

The apparatus consists of a fountain or reservoir to hold four or five pounds of tar to supply the lamp at a uniform height, and a lanthorn with a draught pipe attached to it. The lamp presents at one end a cylindrical cup, in which the tar is ignited, the flame being drawn up through a central hole in the bottom of the lanthorn so as to occupy its axis in passing to the draught pipe. All the air which supplies this is made to meet in the same axis, and thus to excite the combustion.

A lamp of this description will burn for nine hours, & it is found that by it the carbonaceous matter, which usually obscures the flame of resinous substances, is made to contribute to the light.—Four or five barrels of tar used in this way, and they would not cost more than ten or eleven dollars, it is computed would give eight times the light of a common street lamp for one year. Considering the great amount of our lamp tax, the expediency of making a fair experiment of this promising invention cannot be doubted.

LONDON, June 16.

The duke of Clarence has recovered from his illness.

June 17.

The Queen's health improves daily.

Sir Humphrey Davy has repaired to the continent to assist the miners of Flanders and Germany in using his safety lamp, and from thence to go to Naples to apply a chemical process for unrolling the Herculaneum manuscripts.

James Rhodes has been tried, convicted and fined £900 sterling for imitating tea, by preparation of the leaves of sloe, ash, elder, and other trees.

Accounts from Frankfort state, that the differences between the King of Bavaria and the Grand Duke of Baden are amicably settled, through the mediation of the Austrian Court.

Private letters from France and Ireland represent the heat in these countries as excessive. The streets and roads are nearly deserted in the middle of the day, at which time few persons are seen out of the doors who are not compelled by necessary business.

The freedom of election not admitting the presence of the military, they are obliged to evacuate the various county and borough towns, and their immediate vicinity, which constitute their present quarters. The troops thus removed will occupy points at a proper distance, until the election being over they can constitutionally resume their former residences.—Gravesend is thus filled with soldiers from other parts of Kent. Saturday morning a troop of the 13th dragoons left Rochester, and took up their quarters at Hampstead.

"It is believed," says a private letter from Paris, "that the trial of Ardouet & Cauchois will be carried before the Court of Assize in the ensuing month. The last interrogatory of Ardouet threw much light on the odious plot of which the Duke of Wellington was to have been the victim. It appears certain that a late Minister of Bonaparte who has resided for some time in one of the ports of the Adriatic, was privy to this infernal plot, as well as a ci devant great personage who now resides in the United States. There are, it is said, such grave circumstances in the last disclosures of Ardouet, that it would be imprudent to commit them to a private letter. Every thing announces that this plot was as vast as it is possible to imagine; for, in order to accomplish the assassination of one man, conspirators appear to have communicated with each other between the two hemispheres.

"MADRID, May 8, 1818.

The above Decree is of more importance, as it affects individuals, than its reintion to the Governments of Foreign States. We have more than once admonished those of our countrymen who seemed bent on adventures across the Atlantic, that by doing so they put themselves out of the protection of their own Government, and exposed themselves to whatever severities the Spaniards might think fit to exercise upon the persons of their own insurgents.

"His Catholic Majesty having heard the opinion of his Supreme Council of War, on the 27th of February last, relative to foreigners who make common cause with the insurgents of Spanish America, has decreed that every foreigner who shall be taken with arms in his hands, in his Majesty's dominions of America, shall be treated as a rebel, and be subject to the same punishment as natives, having due regard to the different ranks in which they serve."

The Waterloo Society, which annually celebrates the Anniversary of the memorable Battle of the 18th, on the following day, will repair this year on the 21st, instead of the 19th, in solemn procession, to the spot where the independance of the kingdom of the Netherlands was consolidated by the courage of the brave men who combated there for the liberty of Europe.

It has circumstance should induce him to return to France, to settle there, he would be regretted in this country by the poor, on account of his numerous charities, in which his immense fortune allows him to indulge; for he is said to have an income of 500,000 francs per annum, and does not spend any thing considerable in mere ostentation.

AIX LA CHAPELLE, June 18.

A Rhine shopper contains what follows: about the middle of August all that belongs to the new congress will meet at Aix La Chappelle, and the deliberations will begin in the first days of September. To the project of delivering France from the burden of maintaining the army of occupation, are joined some other plans to secure tranquility and peace through all Europe.

The vines in France were reported to be flourishing, and promise abundance.

From the Maine, June 5.

The purpose of the approaching congress of the sovereigns at Aix La Chapelle, seems to be pretty well understood. The Austrian Observer was certainly right in saying, that the Monarchs would meet family to decide the question on the evacuation of France by their troops. —But again this measure many others are connected that respect the further security of peace and order in Europe. For as it is uncertain what may be the consequences of withdrawing the foreign troops from France, considering the irritability of people's minds, and the memories of party spirit, which is far from being quelled; and considering that France is the country from which all revolutionary opinions have issued and spread over Europe, the Cabinets are sensible how necessary it is to keep a watchful eye over that kingdom, that the order of things now restored may not be again troubled, and that the principles of legitimacy which have been confirmed by the Holy Alliance, under the ægis of Alexander, may be supported for the future. The adopting of suitable measures for the attainment of this important end, is therefore, wholly in the sphere of a new European Congress, upon whose decision it will depend, whether, under existing circumstances, it may be advisable wholly to dissolve the army, composed of troops of the great powers, which has been hitherto in France, for the purpose of maintaining tranquility, and securing Europe from new revolutionary storms; or to keep it for some time longer on foot. As for the contingents of the small powers, it seems to be already settled that they are to return home.—Whatever may serve to confirm the present politic abystem of Europe, will also be discussed at this Congress.

Match against Time and the Alien Bill.

The Edinburgh Star contains the following:—

"The most expeditious journey between London and Edinburgh ever known has just been performed. On Monday last, after it was ascertained that Lord Castlereagh meant to introduce a Bill into the House of Commons that night, for the purpose of suspending the clause in the Scots Act of Parliament of 1695, which declares that all foreigners binding a share in the Stock of the Bank shall be held and considered naturalized subjects of Scotland; a gentleman received a number of powers of attorney from foreigners residing in London, with directions to proceed express to Edinburgh to purchase stock. He left London at 5 o'clock in the afternoon, and reached this about 12 on Wednesday, having thus performed the journey in the space of 42 hours! We understand he was fortunate enough to effect transfers of stock in favour of his employers before three o'clock, after which no transfer could be available, as the Bill introduced by Lord Castlereagh being read three times, and passed the Commons on Monday, would also pass the Lords on Tuesday, and receive the Royal Assent on Wednesday. No fewer than 38 transfers of Bank Stock were made in favour of foreigners on Wednesday, and about 100 since the 20th of April last: and but for the discovery of the clause in the Act before the rising of Parliament, there is little doubt that several thousand such transfers would have been made before the meeting of the new Parliament."

Riot at Tunsworth.—Sir Robert Peel having announced the intention of his son, Wm. Peel, Esq. to offer himself co-jointly with sir Robert, at the approaching general election, lord Townsend, one of the present members, arrived in the borough, and the canvass of both parties has proceeded with great briskness. On Monday last both parties gave public dinners to their friends.

The head-quarters of the parties were at the King's arms (sir Robert's Inn,) and the Castle (Lord Townsend's,) which Inns are exactly opposite each other. After dinner, in the course of the evening, the rival candidates paraded the town in procession, with appropriate flags, &c. The procession meeting (as the matter is stated to us,) the bearer of one of the Peel flags waved it sluntingly over the heads of the rival party; the flag was instantly torn to atoms; the procession passed on—but the "thumb had been bitten," as Shakespeare says. Arrived at the Inns, W. Peel, esq. appeared at the window, and, we believe, addressed the freemen below. He had a walking stick in his hand, which the Townsend boys say was shaken, as in menace; (a thing perhaps not very likely, but the thought was enough.) Instantly to it the rival boys went; and scores were in a moment rolling: the pavement was torn up, and the siege began on both of the garrisons; windows, shutters, frames, &c. all disappeared as by the wand of an Harlequin, till scarce a stick or pane was visible. The job was completed of both houses in a few minutes. A cart load of large paving stones were collected from the rooms of each inn, many of which came rolling down the stair cases like thunder. On the part of the Townsend boys, the war was instantly carried to the house of Edmund Peel, esq. across the road which passes the corner of the street at right angles. This residence instantly shared the fate of the inns, and the family were obliged to fly. The damage done must be very considerable: but we have heard of no estimate that can be relied on. The town has been quiet ever since. We are sorry to hear that one man has been so severely hurt, that his life is despaired of; another had his leg broken: and various others are seriously injured.

This morning a lad, a man was swimming in the Clyde at Dominie's Hole, a ferocious water dog leaped in after him and fixed his fore paw on his shoulders, and kept him below the water till it was nearly drowned. Two young men hearing the cry "save him," immediately swim towards him, and forcyed him up until they got to a shallow place, when he was shortly after taken charged. The practice of bringing water dogs to a bathing place is very much to be reprobated.

The countenance of the Duchess of Cambridge, lately married to the king's youngest son, is not only beautiful, but strongly marked with benevolence and intelligence. Her figure is exquisitely formed. The following is a description of the wedding dress of her royal highness the duchess of Cambridge: A very rich silver tissue, with two blond flounces of beautiful Brussels point lace: each flounce headed with rich silver scolloped trimming; the sleeves tastefully looped up with silver tassels, and richly trimmed with Brussels lace to correspond. A silver tissue robe, lined with white satin, trimmed with broad Brussels lace, and bordered with a rich silver scolloped trimming to match the dress, and fastened in the waist with a brilliant diamond clasp; head dress, a brilliant bandeau of diamonds.

ROME, [Italy,] May 16.

On the day of Pentecost, his holiness the Pope, [now 76 years old,] accompanied by a large number of Cardinals, &c. assisted at a mass in the palace Quirinal. After mass his holiness and suite heard a sermon on the holy spirit, pronounced in the latin language, by Vincenco Ferretto, formerly named Musfat, an African black, born at Tunis, and now one of the Propaganda. He professed the Mahomedan religion until he was 15 years old; when he came to Rome, and in 1815 was baptized, and had the sacrament administered to him by Cardinal Litta. At the mass the venerable Cardinal Mattei presided.

LATE FROM ENGLAND.

☞ Mr. Hooper has kindly favoured us with London papers to 16th June.

The united kingdom was in the agitation of a general election. Business was suspended for a time, and the military were not allowed to remain in the vicinity of the polls during the voting, were continually passing from post to pillar. Many members had been returned, and numerous old ones declined being candidates. From all appearances the ministerial majority will not be diminished. Mr. Wooler, the printer of the Black Dwarf, was a candidate for Coventry. The other candidate is a bookseller. One of the candidates for Westminster, is the gallant capt. Maxwell, who silenced the Chinese at Canton.

The chief topic of speculation on the continent was the approaching congress of sovereigns at Aix-la-Chapel.—Formerly when kings met it was for mischief. But the best informed in Europe anticipate nothing from this adjourned meeting but the consolidation of the existing order of things.

Particulars of the late Robbery at Cumberland Bank.

The extensive ——— robbery of the Cumberland Bank in Portland, which has been published since our last paper, we are now happy to state in a fair way to be detected in all its circumstances. This nefarious transaction it will be recollected, took place on Saturday night—and what is very fortunate a gentleman of Portland, whose attention was to bring a sum of money to Boston on Monday, went with the cashier of the Bank on Sunday to receive the amount. At this time it was found the Bank had been robbed. Some blacksmiths were immediately apprehended & examined; one of whom disclosed some circumstance relating to a Mr. David Manly which led to his arrest on Monday. The testimony at this time proving neither strong nor direct, he was ordered to recognize in the sum of 200 dollars, for which he was able to find sureties. Some boys who were afterwards playing under a Fire-Kingdom house, by accident fell over a bag of dollars—Which circumstance they immediately made known. As Manly had been seen on Sunday to go into the building—he was again arrested, and we understand, upon his second examination, a Sailmaker recognized the sailcloth and twine of which the bag was made, to belong to a vessel of Mr. Manly's, commanded by Captain Rolf—Rolf at the development became evidently agitated—he was taken aside, charged with being concerned with the theft—and upon being promised a reward of 10,000 dollars if he could find the money and notes lost, confessed his crime and made a disclosure of the circumstances attending it. Rolf observed that himself, Manly and his relation Dola, were the only persons concerned. The robbery was effected by false keys, which Manly had contrived to get made —Dola was on the watch—and after the notes and money were taken, it was thought proper immediately to bury them for greater security. Rolf took the Directors into the country a few miles to the place where the Bank Notes had been concealed but they were no longer there—He then led them to the shore where his proportion of the specie was buried—which they found by digging. The condition upon which he was to receive his reward not being complied with——and perhaps stung with remorse, mortification and disappointment—Rolf stole aside round a point of land and shot himself with a pistol.

Manly it was supposed between the 1st and 2d examination had taken the notes from their secret deposit—and he is now under durance, with his relation Dola upon the charge of Grand larceny.

This sudden discovery, will restore confidence to the Bank and to the community—the bank has recovered its specie—and its stolen notes can never get into circulation—whilst the public, feel additional security in the fact, that an extensive robbery however well contrived—cannot from the nature of villains be so concealed, that its perpetrators will not be found out to betray themselves. Since writing the above we have received the following—

POSTCRIPT.

The Directors of Cumberland bank, have the satisfaction to announce to the public, that all the Monies, Specie as well as bills of every description stolen from the Bank on the night of the first inst. has this day been recovered.

Extensive and splendid improvements in the City of New-York.

A gentleman of leisure, on whose accuracy the fullest reliance may be placed, informs us, that he has, during the last three weeks, travelled on foot and on horseback, through every street and alley in this city to the southward of Spring-street, and in that range from the east to the north river; by which he has ascertained, exactly, the number of buildings now erecting and finishing, viz.—1969; upwards of 1000 of which are intended for decent dwellings, and many of them splendid houses. To the northward of Spring-street, there are many buildings going up——that the calculation some time since made, that 2000 houses were building in this city, falls short of the reality. Our correspondent calculates, that, including masons, carpenters and laborers, not less than 10 are employed at each building —making, therefore, the whole number upwards of 20,000; the wages of whom, at an average, cannot be less than one dollar and fifty cents a day—and making an expenditure for building, of about 30,000 dollars daily. To this must be added the sum necessary for the purchase of materials. The rapid growth of this city, in population, commerce and wealth, exceeds, no doubt, the calculations of its most sanguine friends.

In addition to the above, our readers will learn with pleasure, that besides the 74, building at our navy yard (and which will be launched next summer) there are on the stocks, ten large vessels, several of them ships of no inferior class. One of them (the Tobacco Plant) is to be launched at one o'clock this day. This ship, we understand, is to be employed between Richmond, in Virginia, and Liverpool, England, and

HALIFAX, July 29.

His Excellency the Earl of Dalhousie embarked on Friday morning on board His Majesty's brig Grasshopper, which soon after sailed for Lunenburg; after landing His Excellency there, the Grasshopper proceeds to Bermuda.

His Excellency Maj. Gen. Smyth, came in the Wye, from New Brunswick.

Of the eight American vessels detected fishing on the coast of Nova Scotia, and sent into this port for adjudication, five were liberated on Friday last: but with the full understanding, that the indulgence would not again be granted to them: a certificate to that effect was endorsed upon their registers, and the skippers requested to make it as public as possible for the information of the people of the United States engaged in the fisheries. The remaining three, discovered fishing in harbors in the eastward of Halifax, are now libelled, and will shortly be brought to trial in the Court of Vice Admiralty, where, we have no doubt, they will be condemned.

The levity that is shewn by Rear Admiral Sir David Milne, to the vessels which he has liberated, must convince the Government of the United States, of the strong desire he feels to preserve the harmony which at present happily subsists between Great Britain and the United States: and we sincerely hope will so operate, as to deter, for the future, American vessels from committing similar trespasses.—At the same time His Majesty's subjects in his North American dominions must be satisfied, that it is the Rear Admiral's determination to guard from every infringement and violation, those rights to the fisheries which exclusively attach to them.

Night-blowing Cereus.——If the painter can give but a faint picture of the violet, or the passion flower, or the cherokeedonian lilly, what would he say, if requested to express with his colors some of the family of the Cacti? particularly the Cactus grandiflorus, or Night-blowing Cereus. This stately flower is found in different parts of South America, and in some of the West-India Islands. It expands a most beautiful corolla of nearly a foot in diameter; it has twenty stamina surrounding one pistillum. The inside of the calix is a splendid yellow, or bright sulphur color; the petals of the purest white; but viewing it in front, so as to look into its deep bell, whence issues its long trembling stamina, baffles all description; for in one shade, it is of an aurora color; viewed in another, it resembles the blaze of burning nitre; and as the eye plays over it, we think we see, at times, a bright reddish purple.

"We may remark generally, that the most splendid flowers are of shortest duration; thus this grand flower expands its beautiful colors, and diffuses a most fragrant odour for a few hours in the night, then closes to expand no more. It commonly opens about 7 or 8 o'clock in the evening, usually in July in its native place; but after it is fully blown it droops and withers; and before sunrise it hangs down in a state of irrecoverable collapse and decay; and the next day this short-lived belle resembles a soaked half grown ear of Indian corn.—The first time the botanist gazed at this transitory beauty in the garden of Fothergill, and saw its sudden change, it was with sensations he never can forget.—He confesses that in the vast assemblage of flowers that adorn the earth, this flaunting beauty caught his eye, and excited strongly his youthful admiration.

But the Botanist, sobered by age, cannot—will not allow the flaunting "Cereus" to rival in his affections the unblushing Rose, "veiled in a cloud of fragrance," whose qualities are often disregarded because common. Queen of flowers, where is the poet that has not celebrated thy beauties? where the painter that has not aimed to imitate thee; and who that has senses does not wish to take to his bosom the fresh blown roses wash'd in dew?"

One of the most influential and refractory of the Seminole Indians, has recently been taken and executed at Fort Gaines. How does this correspond with the semi-official article which we copied into our paper of Saturday, from the National Intelligencer, wherein it is declared "that the Seminoles are an independent people, and have a full right to declare war and make peace?"—Mob. G.

We are indebted to Capt. Low, of the brig Phœnix, for papers to the day of his leaving Liverpool, June 12. The election in Liverpool commenced with much animation on the morning of the 13th, and would continue a week.

There were three candidates for the two seats, Mr. Canning, Gen. Gascoyne, late members, and Lord Sefton; the first a favourite administration candidate, and the last of the opposition. On the close of the first day's poll, the votes stood as follows: Canning 304, Gascoyne 249, Sefton 164. The whole number of votes in 1806, was 2345. The Poll in London, for four members, opened on the 11th, with six members. The following was the state of the poll on the close of the second day; Wood 1047, Curtis 742, Atkins 493—these being three of the late members; and Wilson 852, Waltham 848, Thorp 773. The whole kingdom was engaged in the general election. Several county elections not contested for many years. There however does not appear to be a probability of any great political change, or indeed very many individual changes in the new parliament.

NASSAU, (N. P.) July 15.

The following is a copy of the despatch from Earl Bathurst to his Excellency Governor Cameron, communicated by his Honor the President, to the two branches of the Legislature, immediately after the session was opened.

(COPY.)

Downing-street, 28th Feb. 1818.

"Sir,—I have had the honor of receiving your despatch of the 3d December, and of submitting to his Royal Highness the Prince Regent, the humble petition and address of the House of Assembly of the Bahamas, which it enclosed.

I have received his Royal Highness's commands to instruct you to inform the House of Assembly, that the arrest, and commitment of Mr. Wylly, under all the circumstances of the case, appear to his Royal Highness to have been highly objectionable, and that his Royal Highness entirely approves of the conduct of the General Court upon Mr. Wylly's being brought before them on a writ of Habeas Corpus, duly issued; in order that the question of the legality of his imprisonment might be fully investigated.

It is with pleasure I inform you, that the petition of Mr. Wylly had been warranted by law. You may further assure the Assembly, that his Royal Highness will ever be ready to afford them protection and support in the due exercise of their privileges, but that his Royal Highness considered that it would be inconsistent with the due administration of justice, and of the personal liberty of the inhabitants of the Bahamas, if the Assembly were allowed to possess an uncontrouled right of arresting and committing to prison any of his Majesty's subjects, under the plea of an alledged breach of privilege: that a claim on their part to a power of this nature can only lead to a repetition of those contentions which have unhappily occurred between the Legislative Assembly and the General Court, tending to degrade their respective authorities in public estimation, and to create a serious if not a fatal interruption of all public proceedings.

With respect to that part of the Memorial which relates to the rejection by the Council of certain Bills sent up to them by the Assembly—His Royal Highness considers the Council have, in common with the Assembly, a full and undoubted right to decline how far to adopt such legislative measures brought under their consideration are fit to become Laws of the Colony; and that in whatever light the Assembly may view the grounds upon which the Council act in such cases, their conduct must but feel that any interference with the privileges of the Council in that respect, might lead to consequences not more subversive of the constitution of the Bahamas than of the peculiar privileges of the House of Assembly itself.

I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient, humble servant,

BATHURST.

To Governor CAMERON, &c. &c. &c.

The House of Assembly after several Resolutions expressive of their indignation at the above despatch, having terminated proceedings against William Wylly, esq. for offences alledged to have been committed by him against the last House of Assembly, and also to have given to the several charges. Yesterday was the appointed day; but at 11 o'clock, after the Legislative Council had assembled, and the House had met, his Honor the President came into the House, and desired the Honorable Council to attend, as he had commanded the immediate Attendance of the House, and was pleased to close the Session with the following Speech:—

Gentlemen of the Council, Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

At the commencement of the present session, I had ordered you the copy of a despatch from the Earl Bathurst, one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of state, to His Excellency Governor Cameron, bearing date Downing Street, the 28th February last, stating that his Lordship had received the Governor's dispatch of the 3d December, and had submitted to His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, the humble Address and Petition of the House of Assembly of the Bahamas, which it enclosed; that his Lordship had received his Royal Highness's commands to instruct the governor to inform the House of Assembly, that the arrest and commitment of Mr. Wylly, under all the circumstances of the case, appeared to His Royal Highness to have been highly objectionable; and that his Royal Highness entirely approved of the conduct of the general Court upon Mr. Wylly's being brought before them, on a writ of habeas corpus duly issued; inasmuch as his recognizance to prosecute would be implied, that in the opinion of the Court, the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Wylly had been warranted by Law. And the governor was further directed to assure the Assembly that His Royal Highness would be ever ready to afford them protection and support in the due exercise of their Privileges, but that his Royal Highness considered that it would be inconsistent with the due administration of Justice, and of the personal liberty of the inhabitants of the Bahamas, if the Assembly were allowed to possess an uncontrouled right of arresting and committing to Prison any of his Majesty's Subjects, under the plea of an alleged breach of privilege. That a claim on their part to a power of this nature could only lead to a repetition of those contentions which have unhappily occured between the Legislative Assembly and the General Court tending to degrade their respective authorities in public estimation, and to create a serious, if not a fatal interruption of all public proceedings.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

After the communication of this despatch, it was to be hoped that all former differences would have ceased, and that the House would have proceeded to the discharge of the public business with temperance and moderation—instead of which the House has been occupied only in Resolutions and Acts incorrect in point of facts, unconstitutional in principle, and evincing in terms apparently of studied disrespect, a total disregard to the commands of the Crown, signified upon points distinctly submitted by the House to the Royal Judgment and decision.

The House has also commenced further proceedings against his Majesty's Attorney General, for an alledged offence, for which he was committed by the late House of Assembly, and discharged upon the Dissolution of it. This Act, unsanctioned by any precedent or usage whatever, and going beyond the powers ever exercised even by Parliament itself, appears to me to be an assumption of arbitrary and illegal authority, so pregnant with immediate danger to the rights and liberty of the Subject, that I cannot, consistently with the trust which I owe to my Sovereign, permit the House to proceed any further towards the oppression of an individual, who has been already imprisoned for a justifiable resistance to an illegal warrant; for I must ever maintain that a warrant under which a person is committed in execution, before he is heard in his defence, is according to the principles of the British Constitution, illegal and void, from whatever authority it may emanate.

If it were possible however, for me to be so regardless of my duty, as to permit the House to continue in the uncontrolled exercise of a dangerous and unconstitutional power, the acts, resolutions, proceedings and temper of the House lead directly to renewed and increased contentions between the authority of the Assembly and the Judges of the General Court; I feel it, therefore necessary, in order to preserve the public peace, to protect from violence persons declared by the Judges of the Crown, upon the complaint of the House, to be guilty of an offence whatsoever, and to prevent, if possible, a fatal interruption to all public proceedings, to resort to a power constitutionally vested in me as his Majesty's representative.

Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker, &c.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I, therefore, think fit to prorogue this General Assembly to Tuesday, the twenty-first day of July instant; and it is hereby prorogued accordingly.

(Signed) WM. VESEY MUNNINGS.

Council Chamber, 16th July, 1818.

BALTIMORE Aug 8.

Yesterday evening a number of ladies and gentlemen attended by invitation at the seat of Henry Schroeder, Esq. in this city, and witnessed the opening of the flower of the plant cactus triangularis, or, night blooming cereus. The flower of this curious plant blooms only for a single night in a year; and as the plant is very rare in this country, being a native of the W. Indies, the company assembled were highly gratified by this novel and beautiful exhibition.

The flower began to open between 7 and eight o'clock, was in full bloom about eleven and closed early this morning, and has since faded into irrecoverable decay.

Robbery of Cumberland bank.

PORTLAND, AUG. 4.—On Saturday night last, some daring villains, by means of false keys, entered the Cumberland Bank, and unlocked the vault, and stole therefrom upwards of two hundred thousand dollars, principally in bills of the bank. This robbery is unequalled in baldness and extent by any thing of the kind within our knowledge in this country. As the bills stolen from the Bank, are almost wholly of the denomination of fifty, twenty, and ten dollars, and as the bank have none of the two former denominations, and but few of the latter, legally in circulation, every person who offers such bills to the bank, or demands payment will be required to show how they came possessed of them, as the Bank refuses to redeem such.

We understand that a two masted steam-boat is nearly completed at Philadelphia, which is intended to ply as a regular packet between Philadelphia and Havanna.

From Lower Canada.

We have lately recived a Copy of "The Report of the Loyal and Patriotic Society of Upper Canada, with an Appendix, and a list of subscribers and benefactors. Montreal, printed by William Gray, 1817." It is an octavo vol. of 420 pages, and will form a valuable and interesting document for the history of the late War, and of Upper-Canada. It does honour to the public spirit of the gentlemen who conducted the affairs of the Society, and to the munificence and benev lence, not only of that Province, but of the sister Colonies of Lower-Canada, Nova Scotia, Jamaica, and of the gentlemen connected with the Colonies in the Mediterranean, of whom contributed to the relief of their brethren in Upper-Canada, thereby manifesting, in such an eminent degree, their friendly feelings, which must ever form one of the most efficient bonds of a great and widely extended empire.

The funds, which were placed at the disposal of the Society, according to the annual Cash Accounts, contained in the Report, are as follows:

Which has been expended by the Society, excepting a balance of £447 12s. 1 1-2d. in the Treasurer's hands, for the relief of sufferers by the war, for the reward and encouragement of meritorious public services in individuals.

The expenditure of the Nova-Scotia donation was not entrusted to the Upper-Canada Society.

The Report contains detailed lists of the benefactors of the fund, and also the details of the expenditure, in which the names of the individuals who received even the smallest amount from this Society, are inserted, with remarks illustrative of their characters, losses, and services; thus putting it in the power of every benefactor to the fund, to judge of the application of his money. A more satisfactory account of money placed in trust, we think, has been rarely if ever witnessed.

While we willingly give the tribute of praise which is due to the Upper-Canada Society, we cannot refrain from expressing the mortification which we feel on reflecting on the very different conduct of the Loyal and Patriotic Society established here in imitation of the Upper-Canada Society, as is stated in a letter of the Secretary at Quebec, inserted in the Report. This Society was established in 1813. Large sums of money were subscribed, as is stated in the said letter, "for the relief and encouragement of our own Militia," as well as in aid of Upper-Canada; and to the present day, the subscribers and the public, have not been favored with any account of the expenditure, other than is to be found in the Upper-Canada report.

How to account for such a neglect of public duty, on the part of the gentlemen entrusted with the expenditure of the money, we are utterly at a loss. Their conduct is neither creditable to themselves collectively or individually, or to the community which submits to it. It strikes at the root of every effort in future, on the part of individuals to contribute in aid of public provision to the relief and encouragement of those in the humbler ranks of life, who have been exposed to extraordinary losses and sufferings in the public service. It deprives the subscribers of the satisfaction to which they are entitled, of knowing that their money has been applied according to their intention, and the persons relieved, from that meed of public gratitude, which is ever due to those who have suffered for their country, over and above all pecuniary compensation.

The lapse of time which has occurred since the nomination of the Managing Committee at Quebec, has probably effaced from the minds of the members of the Committee, and the public, their appointment and names. If a satisfactory account is not speedily rendered, we shall endeavour to procure a complete list, and publish it for general information.—Queb. Gaz

A DAY IN VIENNA.

During the sitting of Congress.

From Bright's travels in Lower Hungary.

It was Sunday; the shops were all closed, and in addition to the mass, which is daily and almost hourly celebrated in all the churches, sermons were preached in the German Language. It is a day of more than ordinary festivity among all ranks; the theatres are open in the evening; and I was strongly recommended to visit a place of public amusement called the redoubt, where, in all probability, I should see many of the distinguished persons then collected at the congress.

Not having yet delivered my letters, I accompanied a gentleman of Vienna, with whom I had made an accidental acquaintance. We entered the room about nine o'clock in the evening. It is a magnificent saloon, finely lighted, surrounded by a gallery, and forming a part of the large pile of buildings called the Bourg or Imperial Palace.—Never was an assembly less ceremonious; every one wore his hat; many, till the room became heated, their great coats; and no one pretended to appear in an evening dress, except a few Englishmen, who, from the habits of their country, and some little vanity, generally attempt to distinguish themselves by an attention to outward appearance. Around the whole circumference of the room were four or five rows of benches, occupied, for the most part, by well dressed females, while the other parts presented a moving multitude, many of whom were in masks and dominoe, and were busily engaged in talking and laughing, or dancing to the music of a powerful orchestra. My companion squeezed my arm as we passed a thin figure with sallow shrunken features, of mild expression with a neck stiff, bending a little forwards, and walking badly. —'That is our emperor.' I shook my head and smiled. He was alone, and dressed like the rest. 'Pray allow me to doubt a little, till I have some further proof.'—'Then, do you see that little man, with white hair, pale face, and aquiline nose? He was almost pushed down as he passed the corner; that is the king of Denmark.'—Again I shook my head in disbelief. 'Here the Emperor of Russia approaches.' I looked up and found the information true.

His fine manly form, his round and smiling countenance, and his neat morning dress, were not to be mistaken; they were the same which some months before, I had seen enter the church at Haarlem, to the thundering peals of the grand organ. I soon recognized the tall form, the solemn and grave features of the King of Prussia; and afterwards seeing these two in familiar conversation with the two monarchs whose pretensions I had disputed, was satisfied their claims were just. 'That short, thick old gentleman, is the grand duke of Saxe Weimar. That young man near him the crown prince of Wirtemberg. Here, turn your eyes to that seat.—The large elderly man, with a full face—he looks like an Englishman—he is the King of Bavaria.'—'Pardon,' I exclaimed, stepping quickly aside. 'That was the grand duke of Baden,' said my monitor, 'whose toe you trod upon; he was talking to Prince William of Prussia. Here, fall back a little, to let three gentlemen pass, they seem very anxious to go out. One, two, three, four, five; these are all archdukes of Austria. There seems a little press towards that end of the room. See, three women in masks! have beset the King of Prussia. He seems not a little puzzled what he shall do with them. Now a party of waiters draws the attention of the crowd, and the King is left to dispose of his fair assailants as he thinks fit.

'Do you see that stout, tall man, who looks at the dance?—he is the duke of Saxe Cobourg; and by his side, not so stout as himself, is his brother, Prince Leopold.'—'Who is a young man, next to us, marked with the small pox, who is speaking broken English?' 'It is the crown prince of Bavaria; he is said to be very fond of your nation. And here,' giving me another hearty squeeze with his elbow, 'is an English milord.' He had on his head a remarkably flat cocked hat—two ladies in dominos leaning upon his arm. The hat, unique of its kind, rather excited a smile in my companion.

After a little more pushing, for the room had now become very full, we encountered a fine, dark, military looking man, not in uniform of course, but with mustachios. 'This was Beauharnois, viceroy of Italy.' In this way, for two or three hours, did we continue meeting and pushing amongst hundreds of men, each of whom, had he made his appearance singly, at a fashionable route, in London, would have furnished a paragraph to our newspapers, praise to our shops, tales to our bazaars, distinctive appellations to every article of our dress, and themes it not ideas to our poets.

LIVERPOOL, June 10.

Hydrophobia.—The present week is another, as it increases the danger from it has powerfully drawn the public attention towards the discovery of a preventative or a remedy for this direful malady. But, of all the specifics which have been hitherto discovered, none can be implicitly replied on as a certain preventative of or cure for canine madness. Great praise, we think, is due to one of our contemporaries for the zeal with which he has repeatedly introduced to the notice of the public the discovery, made by a Russian peasant of Simbirsk, of a plant which is reported to be a never failing cure for the bite of a rabid dog. This specific is the bulbous part of the plant called by botanists, Alisma Plantago, or the Great Water Plantain. By a gracious ordination of Providence, the antidote never lies far from the poison; and to add to the value of the discovery, this plant grows in every part of Europe. It vegetates in water marshes, lakes, and stagnant pools, and, we believe, is to be found in such situations in almost every district in England. A specimen of this plant was gathered, a few days ago, in a pit in the lane leading to West Derby. In England the season of flowering is in the month of July, August and September. It may be gathered at any time, but it is best when it is flowered.

An article from St. Petersburg, dated May 8, mentions an instance that occurred in the territory of Cherson, where a mad dog bit four individuals and several animals. The authorities administered, as an antidote, the Alisma Plantago: several of the animals died, but none of the persons who were bitten have exhibited the slightest symptoms of madness. This, we think, is a decisive and satisfactory proof of the efficacy of the plant preventive of the effect of the mania.

There has been published in France, according to the Bibliographie de la France, during the year 1817, four thousand two hundred and thirty-seven works—eleven hundred and seventy nine engravings—and four hundred and seventy pieces of music. The three first weeks of the present year have produced two hundred and eighty publications, sixty-three engraving, and twenty six new tunes.

Canal.—One hundred thousand dollars were subscribed at Louisville, in one day, by the wealthy inhabitants of the west, to effect a canal at the falls of the Ohio.

As strange as it may appear, nevertheless it is a fact, that large quantities of wheat and flour have lately been shipped from New-York to Baltimore for a market. A writer in the Federal Gazette, in speaking of this reversal of trade, says, "Baltimore is now the highest market on the continent for flour. A considerable quantity of wheat is on its way here from New-York. Upwards of 5000 bushels have arrived from the district of Maine, and 4000 bushels are afloat at our wharves from New-York."

The following account is translated from the Vrai Liberal of May 8. It is sufficiently evident upon a very slight observation, that in the common way in which wood is consumed upon our hearths many of its component parts escape in the form of vapour and gasses, and thus are wasted, which might doubtless be applied to useful purposes. We are not informed of the particular mode in which these products are preserved and separated from each other in the invention here referred to, but no ingenious chemist can be much at a loss for means of doing it, to a considerable extent at least.

Application of chemistry to arts.—The city of Brussels, has for a year, contained an establishment which ought to fix the attention of all who are interested in the progress of the useful arts, and one which shows how much the sciences are capable of assisting them. By means of a process, the first discovery of which was the result of the studies of the most able chemists, Messrs. Baugnier and Desprets, the principals of the establishment, have the secret of converting wood into charcoal, and at the same time, by a very simple operation, of extracting pitch, and pyro-ligneic acid—the best for the purpose, is produced by hydrogen gas, which is furnished by the operation, and they have learned by very ingenious means to manage and direct it at pleasure. The charcoal is of perfect purity. The pyro-ligneic acid, independently of the uses to which it is applicable in the arts, gives, when rectified, an excellent vinegar, which both for the table and domestic purposes, surpasses in quality the best wine vinegar, and which by its moderate price, will give a considerable saving to the consumers. The pitch, cheaper also than that which is imported from abroad, can on other accounts be made to enter into competition with it. In fine, the hydrogen gas not only serves to heat the furnaces in which these different products are elaborated, but by its superabundance contributes to illuminate the work shops.

The pyro-ligneic acid is particularly valuable to the dyers. Mixed with iron filings, it gives a black dye very much superior to that in common use: and with the addition of dyer's wood it produces shades as brilliant as they are durable, varying according to the nature and extent of the additions. Those hatters and manufactures of printed calicoes who have tried it, have found that it communicates to the furs and cloths the property of resisting the action of the air for a long time. This property seems to be owing to the peculiar nature of the pyro-ligneic acid, and to an oily substance which it contains, when it has not been rectified, to be converted into vinegar. We do not personally warrant the correctness of these last effects, but the artizans, who practice the different branches of dying, are so much interested in proving them, by new experiments, that we have no doubt of their eagerness to ascertain them with certainty.

Those ignorant pretenders, and discontented people, who are always dissatisfied with the age in which they live, ought now, at least, to render justice to the progress modern chemistry has given to the useful arts. How is it that not one among them should suspect that any of these valuable products can be obtained from a billet of wood, if chemistry had not revealed the secret to them. It is not however to these refractory incurables, who cannot be subjected to the action of the crucible, that we should recommend to visit the establishment of Messrs. Baugnier & Desprets. It is to those laborious men, those useful and brilliant men, who exert themselves continually for the happiness of their country, who give animation to its inhabitants, who occupy themselves without cessation in producing the means of sustaining the national industry under the discouragement which foreigners would impose upon it, who struggle against difficulties, of which they are not even admitted to complain and who, notwithstanding the want of reciprocal advantages, which foreign industry obtains amongst us, seek to increase the general mass of riches by creating new objects of exportation.—These alone can appreciate the benefits of the establishment which we recommend to their notice; and which the government has encouraged by a patent.

FROM THE RALEIGH STAR.

Receipt for making Cider, and preserving it sound for years.

Three months ago, I was at the house of Nicholas Nall, Esq. who lives near Deep river, at the upper extremity of Moore county, where I drank cider of a very superior quality; and as the habitual use of cider is eminently conducive to health, ensures sobriety, imparts the agreeable sensation of strength and vigor, and is a pleasant beverage that can be afforded at a small expense, I took care to be exactly informed of his manner of making, refining and preserving it; in the hope that advantage might accrue by publication of it. Mr. Nall had in his cellar, as well as I now remember, about 5 or 10 hogsheads and 50 or 60 barrels of cider of different ages—the oldest was best, nor did he think any fit to drink until it was at least a year old. That which I drank was three years old. It was excellent. His oldest cider I did not taste, as he intended it as a treat for his executors. He complained that his stock was too small to enable him to drink it of the age he wished; but intended to fill another cellar. I here copy Mr. Nall's recipe, as he gave it to me in writing, in April last.

"All apples fit to be eaten will make good cider. The grand secret is in cleansing it from the filth and dregs as early as possible. Each sort of apples are to be beaten and pressed by themselves. Two kinds of juice, both good, would if mixed, often make bad cider. —Throw out all imperfect, sorry, and sun burnt apples, as well as dust and trash—beat your apples before much mellowed, as they lose their strength, soundness, and spirit if too mellow—Let them stand half a day after being beaten before put into the press; then press them slowly; discontinue it as soon as the juice discharged appears to grow thin and watery. The advantage of a slow pressure is in making the liquor run pure. Let your casks, previously well cleansed, be filled quite full to permit the froth and pummice to discharge itself at the bung. When the fermentation abates, cover the bung closely with something that may be lifted by the fixed air that escapes during the future fermentation—In a week rack off the cider carefully, ceasing the moment you observe it to run muddy. Now stop the cask more firmly. In ten days rack it off a second time, and in fifteen days the third time. In every instance the casks are to be clean and perfectly filled, and when filled for the last time to be bunged close; placed in a deep dry cellar, never to be moved until drawn for use. Late cider need not be racked until March, and then one racking, or at most two, will be sufficient. Be very careful that no water, not even the very little that will adhere after rinsing a cask, is mixed with the cider. The smallest quantity of rain water will render cider unfit to keep. The addition of any quantity of distilled spirits is not only useless but injurious.

Mr. Nall's plan is the result of long experience, and its success justifies me in recommending it to the public. I hope it will be tried.

CALVIN JONES.

Raleigh, July 25, 1818.

N. B. I ought to have mentioned that Mr. Nall told me he had for many years tried various plans of clarifying cider to prevent its souring, by means of milk, isinglass, scalding and scumming, filtering through sand, &c. &c. and found all useful, but is satisfied that frequent racking or drawing is far preferable to any other method he has attempted.

From the Hartford (Con.) Mirror, of Aug. 10.

Alisma Plantago.—As frequent inquiries have been made, whether the alisma plantago is to be found in this part of our country; we answer these inquiries, by informing the public, that some of the above named plant has been gathered and left with us at this office, by Dr. Comstock of this city, and may be seen and examined by all who have any doubts of its being the genuine plant. It perfectly agrees with the following description, copied from an English paper. It is said to be abundant throughout our country. It frequents a wet soil, and is most luxuriant in low standing water flowing about here, in the months of July and August. It will be seen also, that the following description of the alisma plantago, agrees with the one published in our paper of the 6th ult.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY.

Hydrophobia.—At the present season of the year, and with cases of this most dreadful of all maladies around us, it may be useful again to call the attention of our readers to a discovery made by a Russian peasant of Simbrisk, as announced in this paper of the 23d of Feb. last. The specific which is said to be never-failing, is the bulbous part of the plant, called by botanists alisma plantago, or the great water plantain; and to add to the value of the discovery, this simple is to be found in all the countries of Europe. In Germany as well as in Russia, the extraordinary properties of the alisma in the cure of hydrophobia is said to have been established by the physical world, and we hope the physicians of our own country will, without delay ascertain its qualities, and give to it, if found efficacious, the sanction of their authority. The Russian counsellor of state, Lowshein, has lately published a report upon the subject, in which he bears ample testimony to its efficacy, and prescribes the method of administering it. The root which, when divested of the tuft of fibres, resembles an onion, may be reduced to a powder, which powder may be strewed on a slice of bread and butter, and given to the patient to eat.

The plant in question grows in water marshes, lakes, and stagnant pools, and we believe is to be found in such situations in almost every part of England. A specimen of this plant, gathered in a lane leading to West Derby, is now before us, and we find it to answer strictly to the description of the alisma plantago, given in "Curtis's Flora Londinensis," vol. 4, article 28, folio edition.

Root perennial, white, somewhat bulbous, coated, and furnished with a tuft of numerous fibres.

Leaves all springing from the root, standing on long footstalks, ovate, pointed, smooth, ribbed, perfectly entire, upright, slightly waved, the footstalks semi-cylindrical, at bottom sheathing and purplish.

Stelk obtusely three cornered, naked, smooth, from one to three feet in height.

Branches producing the flowers disposed in whirls round the stalk and the lesser branches in a similar manner round them, varying greatly in number, and naked.

Stipula at the base of each whirl, membranous, withered, and sheathing.

Calyx; a perianthium of three leaves, the leaves ovate, a little pointed, concave, marked with lines, spreading, membranous on the edge.*

Corolla, three petals, roundish, purple, gnawed on the edge, flat, spreading, somewhat remote from each other, claws yellow.

Stamina, six filaments, fine and tapering, slightly bending inwards. Anthræ greenish.

Pistillum: germins numerous, to 12 or more placed in a circle. Styles as numerous as the germina, filiform, upright. Stigmata simple. The pistillum magnified.

*The season of flowering in England is in the months of July, August and September; the specimens we have before us, and which may be seen at our office, are of course not at present in flower, but the identity is indisputable. It may be gathered at any time, but it is best when it has flowered. The roots should be well washed and cleaned, and dried in the shade; when dry it is pulverised and administered as above. Two or three doses, it is said, have always been found sufficient to effect a cure, even after the hydrophobia is declared in the patient, whether it be man or animals.

IRUN, July 21.

During the incertitude of the government relative to the hostile indisposition which the United States have unceasingly manifested towards Spain, it appears certain that the fine squadron which is equipping in the port of Cadiz (composed of the ships ceded to us by France, and such of our own as have escaped destruction), will not set sail for S. America. This squadron consists of eight ships of the line, several large frigates, and a proportioned number of corvettes; the crews are complete.—This force is almost wholly armed and equipped, and commanded by the first naval officers of the country.

CASSEL, July 29.

His Royal Highness the elector, has approved of the resolutions of the Synod, held from the 27th of May to the 1st of June this year for the purpose of uniting the Lutheran and the Reformed Churches in the Principality of Hanau, in the Hessian parts of the Principality of Isenberg and in the Grand Duchy of Fulda, and has issued an edict to that effect.

DUSSELDORF, June 28.

In the fire which happened on the 9th of this month at Neuburg, in the circle of Isnburg near Treves, 19 persons lost their lives, and 177 houses, barns, and stables; with all the goods contained in them, were reduced to ashes. The loss is estimated at above 223,000 rixdollars.

On the 27th June last, the first stone of a new Lutheran German Church was laid at Moscow. His Majesty the King and the Prince Royal of Prussia, who were in the city at the time, were present at the ceremony and desired to cooperate. The stones which were laid by these personages were of Siberian marble, their initials were sculptured on them, surmounted with a crown.

BERLIN Aug. 1.

The day before yesterday (July 30) at half past six, his Majesty the King arrived here in good health from his visit to Moscow and St. Petersburgh, and having stopped at the Palace only while the horses were changing, went on directly to Charlottenberg, where all the Princes and Princesses of the Royal Family were assembled in readiness to receive him.

From the French Frontier, Aug. 2.—Towards the latter end of June, above 600 British soldiers have returned to England, and their place has not been supplied by any others, which circumstance confirms the inhabitants of the country in the idea of the approaching departure of the whole army. A report is even current that the fortresses of Cambray, Valenciennes, Maubeuge, Landrecies, Le Quesnoy, Givet, and Rocroi will be given up to the French Government in October.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 3.

They write from Aix-la-Chapelle that the Austrian Ambassador is in treaty with Mr. Schossaer the banker, for his house for the Emperor of Austria. Mr. Stephani demands 16,000 francs for the hire of his house to the Russian Agents it is thought that this house is intended for the bureaux of the Russian Ministers Count Nesselrode and Capo d'Istria as the Emperor of Russia will reside at a chateau just out of the city, his Majesty the King of Prussia will occupy the hotel of Offerman.

The number of strangers at Aix-la-Chapelle increase daily; there Princes, Dukes, Marshals, Ministers, and Counsellors of State; there are also many persons already arrived belonging to the British, Russian, Netherland, Spanish, Austrian, Swedish, Saxon, Danish and Polish Legations.

Lord Castlereagh and the Duke of Richelieu are expected to arrive at Brussels in the beginning of September.

LONDON, Aug. 11.

A few months ago, the body of a young woman was discovered in the water near Barming, in Kent, with marks of violence, which seemed to indicate that she had been murdered.—Nothing, however, transpired which could tend to fix the guilt of any individual, and all further inquiry into the circumstance had ceased, when on Monday a young man at Maidstone, declared himself to be the murderer. He said, that ever since the execution of Hussey, the horrid thought of his own guilt had rendered his life a burden to him; that he could find no rest night or day; and that he had at last come to a resolution to deliver himself up to justice.

A letter from the Rev. V. Solomon, now in Poland, states, that many of the Jews receive the Hebrew New Testament with avidity; that when one is given several form a ring in the street to listen to its contents; one of them reading aloud, and they follow him to his inn, requesting explanations. In one of the Catholic towns of Germany, application was made for 200 copies for the soldiers in the barracks, and others desired them, in order to know what was contained in that forbidden book.

Fouche and his family lodge in the house of his friend, Baron Wimer, on the Parade at Prague. He is going to remove to Lintz, a city of far less beauty and attraction, except that, instead of the Moldau, it lies upon the Banks of the Danube, and is contiguous to the vast estates, for the purchase of which Fouche is now in treaty. He has remained in retirement ever since he left Dresden, but it is whispered that Madame Fouche intends to resume her state when she arrives at Lintz.

Carlsbad is more resorted to this summer than usual; 350 Russian families are there at present, besides Austrians, Hungarians, Bohemians, Saxons, and Prussians. Rents of houses, charges at hotels, and prices of provisions are very dear. The prospect of a fine wine harvest has exceedingly lowered the price of that article, especially in Hungary and about the Rhine. Toplitz is likewise very full of company.—The little bathing place has assumed an importance in consequence of its having been the resting spot of the Emperor of Austria, and the King of Prussia, after the death of General Moreau, and the retreat of the allies from before Dresden. Close to Toeplitz were fought the battles of Kulm, in which the allies were successful, and Vandamme was taken prisoner. This result led to the battle of Leipzig.

On the spot were Moreau was mortally wounded, near the village of Rechnitz, about a mile and a half from Dresden, the Emperor Alexander has erected a simple but solid monument to to his memory. It consists of one large square stone of Saxon granite, on the top of which is a huge helmet of iron resting on a sabre. On one side of the monument is this inscription:—

MOREAU,
Der Held,
Field hier an der scite Alexanders, den 27. Aug.

Moreau, the Hero, fell by the side of Alexander, 27th August, 1813.

It was lately stated that a vessel had been fitted up and moored in the river as a Chapel for seamen to hear Divine Service: last Sunday the congregation on board consisted of from 500 to 600 persons, of whom 300 were seamen, and most of the others were the relatives of seamen. It was a pleasing scene when the ship's-boats were coming from the upper and lower Pool, bringing the crews of the vessels to public worship; and when these boats were made fast all around the vessel, from whence the praises of Almighty God were heard on the river to a great distance. Such is the happy construction, that the whole of the auditors can hear even the smallest sound from the pulpit.

The Floating Chapel of the Port of London Society has continued to be attended by large congregations. Many Masters of merchant ships, their wives and children, usually attend; and since its opening, on the 4th of May last, upwards of 2000 common seamen have heard useful and interesting sermons gratuitously preached to that class of life in particular. The seamen have themselves expressed their warm gratitude for the advantages of this worship, which has greatly endeared to them the port of London itself. Bibles and religious books, have been received from other Societies as auxiliaries to this good work, from which we cannot but augur consequences of high importance to the souls of these men.—The expences of the vessel are estimated at little less than 2000*l.* but the contributions will no doubt reach an amount comparatively small with the object.

FROM A PARIS PAPER.

Horrible Atrocity.—A horrible crime, which presents in its details the most astonishing courage & singular presence of mind, has been lately committed in the vicinity of a little village of the Brie. It altogether forms a drama, the episodes of which are very interesting. If the trial to which it will give rise shall not obtain the melancholy celebrity of the case of Fualdes, it will at least display the character of a woman, whose frightful situation was more critical than that of the mysterious and imprudent heroine of Rhodez.

A pedlar & his wife, a short time since, presented themselves at night fall at the door of a little farm house, a short distance from the high road. They requested of the farmer permission to sleep there, whose wife was still confined to her bed, having lately lain in. A small room was assigned to them, where they passed the night quietly. The next day being Sunday, the farmer and his servants went to mass to a neighboring village. The pedlar also expressed a wish to go there, and there remained in the house only the wife of the farmer, the pedlar's wife, who complained that she was not well, and a child of six years of age.

Scarcely had the people gone out, when the pedlar's wife, armed with a knife, presented herself at the bed of the lying in woman, and demanded her money, threatening to kill her in case of refusal. The latter, sick & weak, did not oppose the slightest resistance, and delivered up the keys of her drawers, at the same time desiring the little boy to conduct the woman who had to look for something in them.—She rose softly from her bed, followed the pedlar's wife, without being heard, & having beckoned the child out of the room, locked the robber in the chamber. She then desired the child to run to the village, to apprise his father, and desire him to bring assistance.

The child did not lose an instant; but by an inconceivable fatality, met on the road the pedlar, who had left the church no doubt to join his wife. Having asked the child where he was going to, the latter answered ingenuously, he was going to seek his father, as an attempt was made to rob them. The pedlar took the child by the hand, and said it would be unnecessary, and that he would himself go & protect his mother.

They returned to the farm where the farmer's wife was shut up; he knocked at the door, but this woman not recognizing the voice of her husband, obstinately refused to open it; and being unable to obtain his end, threatened to cut the child's throat if she did not instantly decide upon it. Ferocious at not being able to prevail upon her, he executed his horrible threat, and killed the child, almost under the eyes of its mother, who heard, without being able to give succour, the cries & last sighs of her son.

After having committed this useless crime, he endeavored to penetrate into the house to save his wife; time pressed, they might each moment return from mass, and he could not succeed in getting admission but by mounting on the roof & descending down the chimney. During all this time he exhausted his rage in menaces & imprecations against the farmer's wife, who almost fainting, saw nothing to deliver her from certain death.—This wretch had already got into the chimney, and was about to enter into the chamber, when the farmer's wife, collecting all her force, drew by sudden inspiration, the palliasse of her bed to the edge of the hearth, & there set it on fire. The smoke in a few minutes enveloped the assassin, who not being able to reascend, very soon fell into the fire half suffocated. The courageous farmer's wife lost not her presence of mind, but struck him several blows with the poker, which put him beyond the chance of recovering his senses.—Finally, exhausted with fatigue & mental agony, she fell senseless on the carpet of her chamber, and remained in this situation till the moment when the farmer & his servants returned from church to be witnesses of this horrible occurrence. The dead body of the child, at the gate of the farmer's house, was the first spectacle that struck the eyes of this unhappy father. They forced open the gates, and after having recalled to life the farmer's wife, they seized the two culprits, who were delivered up to justice. It is believed that the pedlar will survive his wounds, and be able to receive the punishment due to his crimes. They will be immediately brought before the Court of Assize of the department, where this affair is in preparation for trial, which excites the greatest interest through the whole country.

The Kaleidoscope.—It can be no abridgement of the merit of Dr. Brewster in the invention of his Kaleidoscope, when the public are informed that Mr. John Allan, of Penicuik, constructed one eighteen months previous to the announcement of Dr. Brewster, and on a superior plan, in the opinion of all who have seen it. Mr. Allan's produces nine circles, each of which turns upon its own axis, upon the slightest movement of the object looked at, forming the most curious optical machinery, and producing a variety almost infinite. Mr. James Dobbs, of Penicuik, has had one of Mr. Allan's construction twelve months in his possession, which he gave him for the amusement of his children, which is at least nine months prior to any announcement of Dr. B's. But the Kaleidoscope holds but a very trifling place in Mr. Allan's construction of mechanical curiosities, wholly the production of his own ingenuity, amongst which is a machine which he has lately constructed in the form of a horse supported by two wheels, the one following the other longitudinally, and with which, upon a smooth road, he can go with ease at the rate of ten miles an hour.

The machine is impelled & balanced like a man skating, by an alternate movement of the feet upon the ground, forming at once an article of utility and delight.

Abraham Thornton, whose trial on the charge of murdering Mary Ashford excited such deep interest, has since his discharge, been living in the house of his parents at Castlebromwich. He has not yet returned to any employment, but passes his time in a kind of moody inactivity, and almost always entirely alone; whilst his miserable father (a most respectable man, & steward to a gentleman of property in his neighbourhood) is fast sinking into a premature grave, with a consumption brought on by intense anxiety of mind.

Mr. Bullock, of the Museum, with a part of his family, lately sailed in the Cutter Elizabeth, on a voyage of investigation to the unfrequented Isles in the North of Europe. In Sanda, one of the Orkney Isles he visited, the sand has lately been blown away to the depth of 20 feet, and has discovered the remains of buildings of vast antiquity, enclosed by stone walls nearly half a mile in extent; some of the houses are very large, and roofed with stones of prodigious size. There are several circular tumuli, each containing three graves, none of which are more than four feet six inches long. There is not the slightest tradition that I can throw any light on these curious remains, which have yet been very slightly investigated.

OBSTINATE CONFLICT!

The following article, (says a late Liverpool paper) dated Faro, June 12, was received by the last Lisbon mail:—

"An Algerine Corsair, full of men, was lately sunk off Cape St. Vincent, by two Portuguese men of war, after a most desperate and bloody conflict of nine glasses, wherein vast numbers were killed on both sides. The rover maintained the action with great firmness, and such undaunted resolution, that at one time it was doubtful whether she would not have beat them both off, notwithstanding the superior odds against her. The Portuguese behaved manfully, and offered to give quarters, provided they would strike, which generous & humane offer the Pirates did, with horrid imprecations, disdainfully refuse; and so ryvengeful were the infidels to the last, that they fired grape & partridge shot from the deck, and small arms out of the tops into the men of war, as they were going down, which did a deal of mischief amongst the Portuguese. Both the ships were severely shattered—one had several shots between wind and water, which made her very leaky, and her sails & rigging almost cut to pieces—the other had her foremast and bowsprit carried away, with part of her starboard bow, and a large shot went 15 inches in her main mast. It is thought the pirates had expended all their cannon balls, as in the latter part of the engagement they fired from their great guns, marling spikes, ringbolts, rusty nails, bits of iron, and lead cut into square pieces."

Dreadful Superstition.—The Freeman's Journal, a respectable Dublin paper, contains the following account, in a letter from Galway, dated June 18: "On Wednesday evening last, a dreadful murder was perpetrated at the village of Ower, within about seven miles west of this town, by M. Flaherty, husband of the woman who was murdered, aided and assisted by her whole family, consisting of her father, mother, two brothers, &c. being led by the husband to think the deceased was possessed of some evil spirits, and that he had power from the priest to cure her, which had the effect of making her own family look on, and even assist him, while he strangled her, by putting an iron tongs round her neck, and pressing on it till she expired. The father of the deceased has been committed to the county gaol, by R. Martin, Esq. of Ross."

On Tuesday, Wednesday, & Thursday last a great number of soldiers's wives and families, just arrived from France, passed through Ringwood, Hants, to their respective parishes in the counties of Devon & Cornwall; each family travelling with a pass, at per mile, three halfpence each woman and one penny each child. Mr. W. Gorbin, one of the overseers of Ringwood, relieved 200 women & 950 children—the amount of each paid was £52 17s 6d.

Increasing Prosperity of Ireland.—We are much gratified in learning that the demand for all kinds of home produce increases, and in a particular manner for butter, which is more abundant than it has been in any former season. These articles, also continue to realise good prices. We must attribute this in a great measure to the operation of the new regulations in the cooperage and salting of the butter. We have been favoured by the weighmaster of Belfast with the following document, shewing the quantity of butter brought into market for the two last years, up to this period:

From 1st May to 1st August, 1817—5,708 firkins.

From 1st May to to 1st of August 1818—16,213.

Being an increase of no less than 10,505 firkins more than last year. At the same time, we must observe, that butter in the Belfast market is upwards of 30s per cwt. higher than it was last year at this time. We are happy to learn that the increase in the other markets in Ireland keeps pace with this—a striking proof of the flourishing state of the country. Owing however, to the large shipments we understand that the English market has experienced a decline in price. The high prices given for Dutch butter counterbalances the duty on that article, and large quantities are daily expected in London; some has already arrived, and always gets a preference at this season. It will be advisable for all those who have butter for sale to bring it to market immediately, as accounts agree, that the make of butter will be very abundant this year.

Christians in China.—Letters from Pekin, of the 7th of November, 1817, state, that the Christian Missions in China, which are served by Priests of the Order of St. Lazarus, and been for some time before that harrassed by the most violent persecution. In the capital about 400 Christians had been imprisoned, and cruelly tortured; several, unable to bear the persecution, had abandoned the faith.—The richest Christian, however, of the city, and even of the province set a fine example to his brethren. He feared not to give up his property and to leave his family, and surrender himself like a slave to a Mahometan, rather than renounce his religion. The persecution is said to be now entirely at an end, and the authors of it appear to have returned to a milder disposition. This severe trial has only served to strengthen the faith among the true believers. The superior of the Lazarites has been ordered to send out an additional number of Missionaries to those countries, which stand very much in need of them. Although the knowledge of Astronomy and the Mathematics is not necessary to all the Missionaries, yet two of them at least must be fully acquainted with these sciences.

CHILI—NEW VICTORIES!!

Despatch of the general in chief pro. tem. of the army of the Andes, to his Excellency the director.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR,

I have this day forwarded to his excellency the supreme director of this state the following intelligence:

"Most Excellent Sir,

"A new laurel has been added to the crown of our country's arms, in the town of Parral, on the dawn of the 27th of last month. An enemy's detachment of 300 men, commanded by the traitor Manuel Bulnes, had taken possession of that point on the morning of the 21st. The place was utterly destitute of defence. It was sacked and many of its inhabitants were inhumanly put to the sword, as you will find it stated in the subjoined copy, No. 1. The worthy Col. Don Jose Matias Zapiola, who had taken the command of that part of the army stationed in Talca, agreeably to the orders communicated to him, and with a view of scouring the country and of meeting the enemy, ordered a party of grenadiers on horse back to recross the Maule.—This movement was entrusted to the valiant and deserving captain of the same regiment, D. Miguel Caxaravilla, who being reinforced by some militia men of the jurisdiction of Parral, fell unexpectedly upon the said point, and the results of this bold enterprize are the death of Bulnes, several of his officers, 200 men, besides a Col. with some officers and a number of men taken prisoners, as stated in the copy No. 2. The conduct of Captain Caxaravilla deserves the highest commendation, although this is not the first instance in which he has given proofs of his valor and excellent dispositions. I must also recommend to your excellency the well deserving serjeant major of the militia, Don Jacinto Urrutia, who was wounded; the Captain of the same corps, Don Domingo Urrutia, and the Ensign Don Valentine Calver, who with his sword put to death the traitor Bulnes, as well as the officers and subalterns either regulars or militia, who, on proper occasions have always proved that whenever they meet the enemy they never fail to conquer.

"In forwarding the above copy for your information, I beg to observe to your excellency, that the forces of the enemy which have been destroyed on that occasion are but the miserable remains of the army routed in Maypu, consisting of the sick and some persons attached to the rear guard.

"May God keep your excellency many years. BALCARCE.

No. 2.

I have the pleasure to inform you that after having five nights march through unfrequented paths, concealing myself in the woods during the day time, having succeeded in posting myself in the vicinity of the town of Parral, occupied by the enemy with 300 men, I determined to attack him, although my force was composed of only 200 men, grenadiers and militia, principally the latter. I disposed myself to attack him in the rear at day break, having divided my troops into two divisions; the first under my immediate command, and the second under the command of Captain D. Domingo Urrutia, & ensign D. Jose Valentin Galvez, ordering the grenadiers to charge the enemy's quarters, and the militia to occupy the entrance of the streets. As soon as I gave the orders to advance, they rushed forward, treading under the feet of their horses, the sentinels posted at the gates, and took possession of the quarters. The enemy flew instantly to the public parade, and took shelter in the neighboring houses, from which they opened a brisk fire through the windows, doors, and loop holes; but the arms of the gallant troops which I have the honor to command, soon put an end to the contest, and slew 200 of the enemy, among them Col. Bulnes, who fell by the sword of the intrepid ensign Galvez, besides many other officers. Among the prisoners were Col. D. Cipriano Palma, and several other officers of the line and militia.—On our part we had a grenadier wounded, and the intrepid sergeant major of the militia, D. Jacinto Urrutia, severely wounded. At another moment I will give you further details of the munitions and arms that have fallen into our hands. I send you at this time 70 prisoners, officers and soldiers.

God keep you many years, &c.

Official Despatch from the same.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR,

The viceroy of Peru seems at length to be impressed with that liberality of sentiment which ought always to exist among civilized nations in time of war. One of his envoys arrived at the port of Valparaiso for the purpose of adjusting an exchange of prisoners. He has brought with him four of our officers they had in Lima, as a pledge of the sincerity of the proffered negociation, and given assurances that the want of the means of transportation only prevented them the use of the few that remained, as was desired and agreed upon.

Six months ago, Gen Don Jose de San Martin, invited the viceroy to adopt a similar arrangement, but no answer or other explanation upon the subject could be obtained. The battle of Maypo has undoubtedly been the origin of this change.

The subjoined copy which I have the honor to transmit to your excellency, contains the communication I have received by the envoy, whom I have authorised to come to this capital with entire security. I will take care to advise your excellency of all the particulars contained in the despatches he has brought, and other occurrences relative to this negociation.

God keep your excellency many years.

H. Q. Santiago, June 2, 1818.

BALCARSE.

To his excellency the supreme director of the United Provinces of South America.

Official despatch referred to in the preceding one.

MOST EXCELLENT SIR,

Invested with full power from his excellency the viceroy, Capt General of Peru, D. Joaquin de la Pezuela, to effect the change of prisoners of the royal army made be you, agreeably to your offer, and under the guarantee of the flag of the United States, I have arrived at this port in the sloop of war Ontario, whose commander, James Baldie, kindly gave me a passage on board of his vessel, and generously hoisted himself to contribute to the relief of the deserving military whom the fate of war has placed in the power of your excellency. To this effect I wait upon you with the letters of his excellency the viceroy. Being at the same time entrusted with ten thousand dollars for the assistance of the said military, I beg your excellency to have the goodness (if there be no inconvenience) to grant the permit for the landing of the specie, and distribution thereof among the prisoners; and for the more speedy communication of your orders, I beg also from your excellency to grant me leave to stay in this capital in order to adjust the exchange of prisoners with your excellency in person, or with whomsoever you may please to appoint for that purpose. I ought to inform you that from among the officers prisoners in Lima, I have brought along with me, in order to be exchanged, the Lieutenant Colonels D. Jose Quesada, and D. Juan Jose Balderrama, and the Captains D. Pedro Egnino, and D. Francisco Villanueva (already sent on shore).—Those that are remaining would have been sent along by the same vessel, if Capt. Biddle had had room enough for their accommodation, or the prospect of any other vessel that might have taken them under his convoy, the same having been requested from him, as he himself will inform your excellency.

God keep your excellency, &c.—In the port of Valparaiso, on board the sloop of war Ontario, 29th May, 1818.

Felix D'Olhaberriagus & Blanco.

To his excellency D. Jose San Martin, general in chief of the army of the Andes and Chili.

FROM THE DEMOCRATIC PRESS.

Napoleon the younger.—On Tuesday last we re-published from a London paper an account of an attempt made to assassinate the son of Napoleon & Maria Louisa in the palace of his grandfather the Emperor of Austria. We have since learned from an officer, late in the service of the king of the Netherlands, and recently arrived in the United States, that the attempt, above alluded to, was not the first which had been made to put to death Napoleon the younger.

The following particulars of a former attempt are given to us as authentic. It will be recollected that in 1814. M. Maubreuille, was brought to trial at Paris upon a charge of having stolen Diamonds and other precious Stones to a very large amount from the Queen of Westphalia. On his trial he acknowledged to have stolen the Jewels, but averred that he was in the employ of the Duke of Berri, to whom he said he had sent the Jewellery. He further stated that he had been by the Duke engaged to assassinate Napoleon Bonaparte on his way to Elba; which engagement, from some unexpected circumstances & feelings, he did not fulfil. The Duke of Berri thought it beneath the dignity of a prince of the blood of the House of Bourbon to deny the villainous accusations thus brought against him by Maubreuille, and Maubreuille was convicted of having stolen the Jewellery & sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. He was shifted from prison to prison by order of the French government until he was confined in a jail on the Netherland frontier whence he escaped early in the last spring.

Whether still in the same employment or not, certain it is that pretty nearly the same thoughts occupied his mind, & he went to Vienna. When there, he found that young Napoleon was at the Palace of Schoenbrunn near the city. Maubreuille immediately changed his residence for the more immediate vicinity of Schoenbrunn, where he attached himself to the clergyman of the parish, who was one of the tutors of the young prince.—By this clergyman Maubreuille was frequently introduced into the gardens, &c. of the palace, but had never the fortune to ascertain the person of young Napoleon.

The last visit made by the Priest and Maubreuille to the gardens, he saw a smart well dressed boy walking in the shrubbery. He was instantly impressed with the belief that this boy was the son of Bonaparte, and his destined victim. He watched him vigilantly until he saw him nearly enveloped in a clump of young trees; he then sprang toward him, and at the instant drew a dagger; the boy hearing the noise, turned round, and seeing Maubreuille with the dagger in his hand, within a few paces of him, he said at once, "you want young Napoleon, I am one of his playmates; there he is," pointing towards a boy about his own age, who was now as certain of his victim as if his dagger had been already bathed in his heart's blood.——He lost not a moment but crouching & stealing forward until he came within striking distance, when he plunged his dagger into the playful boy, who fell lifeless at his feet.

While this tragedy was performing, Napoleon the younger—for he it was whom we left in the clump of trees, and whose presence of mind had turned aside the dagger of the assassin—precipitately, and by the nearest route, went to the guard and gave the alarm. Precaution was instantly taken, every avenue was guarded, the garden was searched, Maubreuille, the priest and a stranger, were found and arrested. It is said the confessions of Maubreuille & the stranger, containing very important matter were sent by the Court of Vienna to all the principal courts of Europe.

From the Boston Daily Advertiser.

By the ship Courier, Standley, from Calcutta the papers of that city to May 17, have been received. For the perusal of these we are indebted to Mr. Topliff. The papers are all dressed in mourning for the death of the Princess Charlotte of Wales; intelligence of which event was first received there by the way of Persia.

The war with the Peishwa continued. Col. Adams who was pursuing him, made an attack upon him A. 17, near Sweney, after a march of 34 miles, took four guns, 3 elephants, & 200 camels, and caused him a loss of 3 or 400 men.

The town of Mundlah was taken by storm April 26, on which occasion 500 of the enemy were killed. On the 23d a thousand women and unarmed peasantry were permitted to leave the fort. No military occurrences of any consequence are related in these papers.

The papers state that the price of cotton was falling at Mirzapore & Calcutta.

There are accounts from Ceylon to April 4. The disturbances in the interior of that island continued, and there are some details of unimportant affairs between them and the British troops. The spirit of the insurgents is said to be considerably damped. A regiment of troops had just arrived at Colombo from Madras.—The following paragraphs are extracted from the Calcutta papers.

CALCUTTA, May 3.

Within the last fortnight upwards of 20 lacs of rupees have been imported into Calcutta. During the last week the specie brought by the American ships Oscar, Caledonia, Palladium and Orient, amounts to nearly 2 lacs of dollars, besides a sum little short of 18,000 more on the Hongly, from Manilla.

The whole number of deaths of Cholera Morbus, during the week ending yesterday, was 125.

CHILLICOTHE, (Ohio) Aug. 26.

Death of Col. Daniel Boon.

As he lived so he died—with his gun in his hand. We are informed by a gentleman direct from Boon's Settlement on the Missouri, that early in last month Colonel Boon rode to a deer-lick, seated himself within a blind raised to conceal him from the game. That while setting thus concealed with his old rusty rifle in his hand, reached towards the lick, the muzzle resting on a log, his face to the breech of his gun, his rifle cocked, his finger to the trigger, one eye shut, the other looking along the barrel through the sights; in this position, without struggle or motion, and of course without pain he breathed out his last so gently, that when he was found next day by his friends, although stiff and cold, he looked as if alive, with his gun in his hand, just in the act of firing.

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 9.

Green Western Mail and Stages.—We learn from the Western Register, printed at Brownsville, Fayette county, that "the great western mail from Washington city to Wheeling, on the national turnpike, arrived in Brownsville, for the first time, on the 5th of this inst. It will pass three times a week. A regular line of stages is also established, by which the passengers will be enabled to reach either extreme—a distance 270 miles—in five days."

We learn from another source, that a stage has commenced running from Gettysburg in this state, to Hagerstown in Maryland, thro' which latter place the road and stages from Washington city to Wheeling pass.

The stages to the western country have heretofore run on two routes from Philadelphia, through Lancaster, York, Gettysburg, and Chambersburg, to Pittsburg—and from Philadelphia, through Lancaster, Harrisburg, Carlisle, and Chambersburg, to Pittsburg—Travellers now have the choice of a third route, but not touching at Pittsburg.

In conversation lately with a gentleman from the Mississippi, our ideas on the subject of the enormous prices which the lands in Alabama are said to have sold for, have been considerably changed. We always thought it somewhat suspicious that wild land there should bring 30 dollars an acre, when better land that was within 12 or 15 miles of Natchez could be purchased from 10 to 20 dollars, but it came in so imposing a shape that it scarcely could be doubted. However, we are now satisfied that in most of the instances it was a trick played off on the government in something like the following manner. Speculators previous to the sale fixed upon the property they wished; they then employed agents to come forward and bid for it at any price; this was done; in consequence the wildest offers were made—but when payment came to be demanded, the bidders had disappeared, and the property remained in the hands of government. The person who had laid the plan then appeared and agreed to take the land at Congress price! This story came from the most respectable authority.—Pittsburg Gaz.

From Lower Canada.

QUEBEC, Sept. 21.

Quebec Agricultural Society.

At a Committee Meeting held on Tuesday last the 75th inst. George Pozer, Esq. laid before the Society samples of Hemp, grown this season at his new German Settlement at Albert Gallion, Nouvelle Beauce. Specimens of the tall grown Plant measured on an average eight feet in height: one sample of the article rotted and hand stripped, appeared very fair and bright, although the water in which it was steeped was not allowed time sufficient to settle clear; another sample dressed, by the ordinary brake, displayed an equally clean appearance, both exhibiting a staple, (as far as the Committee could judge) equal in strength to the best North of Europe Hemp.

It has long been known, that the Climate of this Province is very favourable to the growth of Hemp, and there are not wanting suitable Tracts of Soil throughout the different districts, for its profitable cultivation.—To the exertions of Mr. Pozer, in this line, the Society looks forward with confidence, to a favorable result, than whom few possess more extensively the means and opportunity of carrying the plan into effect, added to the knowledge and experience that he and his new Settlers possess of the best methods of growing and manufacturing the article for a foreign market. Gratifying must it be to the feelings of the Patriotic Individual, and well deserving the Thanks of his adopted Country, could this article, so highly essential to the welfare of the Mother Country, by his means, be added to the list of Staple articles of Export.

The Committee voted Mr. Pozer, and beg him most cordially to accept the THANKS of the Society for his Communications.

There was likewise exhibited by a Member of the Committee, a handful of Lucern, sowed in May and transplanted in August 1817, one Crown producing 42 stems, the other 27, averaging 36 inches in height, the third cutting this season. This Plant, by the trials hitherto made, appears to be sufficiently hardy to stand the Climate, and promises to be of much importance in summer feeding Live Stock in general, a large proportion of which is, by the old and prevailing practice, starved on bare and scorched Pasture, the stubble of the former year.

Mr. Justice Park observed, that it was for the Counsel to judge; but if they were not given, both he and the Jury must necessarily draw their own conclusions.

Mr. Casberd then reluctantly sent the letters to Mr. Oxenham, and asked if they were the letters shown to Miss Glenn?

The letters were read: they were as follows:—

"My dear James—In answer to your last letter, I writ you to buy the license, and assure you that I was 21 the 28th of last August; remember that I have no independent fortune; can there then be blame in our forming this alliance, when love, not interest, actuates the deed?

"Yours truly, MARIA GLENN."

"September 14, 1817.

"Mr J. Bowditch, Holway Cottage."

The other was a note to Mrs. Mulraine:

"Miss Glenn sends her kindest love to Mrs Mulraine, and informs her it will be perfectly out of her power to see her before half-past twelve to-night, as her aunt and uncle both will be with her if she goes out to walk. She understands that she has something to communicate to her of consequence; if so, she should be obliged to Mrs. Mulraine if she could write and inform her of it by the bearer. Sunday morning."

Mr. Oxenham said, that when these were shewn to Miss Glenn, she admitted the letter to James Bowditch to be her's all but the direction, but totally denied the note to Mrs. Mulraine.

Charles Puddy lived near at the time of the transaction; he saw part of Mrs. Bowditch's family most days. He saw Miss Glenn almost every day; saw her accompanied by Mr. James Bowditch, generally resting his hand upon the mane of the horse. He had seen them more than ten times in that situation; he considered them a little in the sweet-hearting line. He had seen them together in the farm yard, there was a wheat mow there; she asked witness once to assist her in getting up the wheat mow: she had been sitting in the kitchen with witness; she asked witness to hold the ladder; witness went to the top, and held the top of the ladder, and she came up to him. He had seen Bowditch take those liberties which a sweetheart would take; witness told Mr. Bowditch that he thought the young lady had a liking for him, and advised him to try for her; she came to him once, and asked him to catch the horse for her; witness asked her why Mr. James Bowditch would not do it? She said he was sulky, and would not do it; he heard her ask him to go up and fasten the window for her; he did not go immediately, and whether he fastened up or not witness could not tell; they appeared upon terms of familiarity; she came with one of his sisters to see some prints in his house; and she came with him before; they saw a picture of a Gretna-green marriage—overlook her when she went to Taunton from Holway; she appeared very low. He saw them walking together at Taunton, on one occasion when a child was christened; Mrs. Mulraine owned the child. He saw them walking together afterwards.

Samuel Mansfield recollected seeing Miss Glenn at Mrs. Bowditch's, in July 1817. He had seen James Bowditch & Miss Glenn walking many a time arm in arm together, in the farm and about the fields. He saw them in July and August; he had seen them in the summer house many a time; they were very loving indeed. Witness had seen them in a waggon together, and Bowditch kissed her in the waggon. Witness said he had saddled a horse many a night for her to ride out. James Bowditch sometimes ran by her side; he had seen her in the kitchen, sitting on his knee. He recollected when Miss Susan Bowditch was with her, going to Hestercomb; she appered very fond of him.

Cross-examined by Mr. Serjeant Pell. He did not know Miss Glenn before she came to Mr. Bowditch's family.

Miss Glenn was again called in.

Mr. Sergeant Pell.—Now turn round to that Lady.

Witness looked at her impudently.

Mr. Serjeant Pell.—Is that the young Lady that did all that you have described?

Mr. J. Park.—Is that the young Lady who had on his knees?

Witness.—Not in my presence; he saw her sitting on his knee; he saw Miss Glenn do so.

Mr. Serjeant Pell.—Was it that young Lady?

Witness.—No, this is not the young Lady. (At this answer a strong feeling of indignation was manifested.

Mr. J. Park.—Then this is not the young Lady you saw kissed in a waggon.

Witness.—I don't think it is. (The feelings of a crowded Court could scarcely be suppressed.)

Mrs. Warren said she lived opposite Mr. Tuckett's at Taunton, she knew J. B. owditch and Miss Glenn; that is her (pointing to her); witness had seen them together in the beginning of September; it was in the evening. Witness saw Mary Whitby come out and speak to J. Bowditch, and Miss Glenn came afterwards, and she spoke to him; Mary Whitby continued there, and Miss Glenn nodded with her head towards French Wear Field; James Bowditch went on, and Miss Glenn followed, looking through the rails, turned up the steps, spoke to Mary Whitby, and ran after Bowditch as hard as she could on the causeway towards French Wear Field; she overtook him, looked back to her uncle's house, took hold of his arm, and walked on to the fields.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gaselee.—She could not tell the day as she did not think she should ever be called on, although it occurred to her to be highly improper; she did not communicate it to Mr. Tuckett; she did not trouble herself about it. Miss Glenn had a light coloured shawl on, but she did not know what her other dress was, but she knew her face; she had nothing in her hand. She mentioned it to her next door neighbour, Mr. Northern.

Re-examined.—J. Bowditch was a good looking young man.

William Warren, husband of the last witness, lived at Northtown, at Taunton; he had seen one on one side of the hedge, and the other on the other: he had never seen them walking together. J. Bowditch looked like a farmer.

Cross-examined by Mr. Serjeant Pell. He supposed he had a pint of beer during the day; he had been in two houses and he might have drank in both; he might have drank half a pint in each, but he would not swear that he had.—He had drank with one of the witnesses; he was called by the name of Samuel Poole; he supposed his eldest child might be twelve years of age.

Samuel Poole knew Mr. James Bowditch and Miss Glenn, he saw them walk together in the month of September; she ran towards him, they talked a word or two and walked away together arm in arm.

Cross- examined by Mr. Moore.— It was about forty yards from Mr. Tuckett's house; had seen them together twice before walking in the same way between six and seven in the evening; they were not walking arm in arm that evening; he knew Master Warren; he had drank with Mr. Bowditch and Burroughs; he had drank with James Broom; he could not say he had been drinking with any more persons.

Re-examined by Mr. Casberd.—He had seen Warren; and had drank out of the same cup with him.

John Burroughs, a gardener living at Northtown, at Taunton, knew Miss Glenn; he had known her two years, and had known James Bowditch three years. He had seen them together in Northtown, and other places. The nurse maid went in and Miss Glenn came out without bonnet or cap, and they met each other, shook hands, and she took hold of his right arm with her left, and they went towards a place called French Wear Field. Witness kept them in sight for 70 yards. Miss G. had no shawl on, and they went into a lane, and within five minutes came out, changed arms, and walked back towards Mr. Tuckett's house, shook hands, and parted. He had seen them together once before.

Cross-examined.—It was so light that any person might have seen them; a great many people were looking at them that night in Northtown.—Samuel Poole was with witness; a number of people were walking about.

Mary Priest, wife of Aaron Priest, lived at Taunton. Mrs. Mulraine was staying at her house in September last, & during that time Miss Glenn called, & asked if Mr James Bowditch was there; and they called together once, and once she called when he was not there; and she sent witness to Mr. William Bowditch, to see if Mr. James Bowditch was there; she found him, and he came in about five minutes afterwards, and they walked away together; they seemed very fond of each other; she had seen them walk arm in arm near Eaststreet; she remembered the christening of Mrs. Mulraine's child, and Mr. James Bowditch stood god-father, and Miss Glenn god-mother. They all went to church, and witness carried the child; there was feasting at Mrs. Bowditch's, at Holway; witness dined with them, but she did not see any tea. Miss Glenn dined with them in the kitchen; Miss Susan, Betsey, and Sarah B. dined with them, and Mr. J. B.; it was on a Wednesday.

Cross-examined.—The christening took place at St. Mary Magdalen Church, and she was sure it was Miss Glenn who stood god-mother, although she never saw her before she was sure it was the young lady who sat near the place where she stood. Mrs. Mulraine is a first cousin of her husband; Mr. Long was the clerk's name—he was an elderly man.

Mr. Serjeant Pell—I will tell you he is here, and I ask you will you swear that Miss Glenn was there?

Witness—Yes, I will swear she was there; but I did not see Mary Whitby there, but there were two girls there of Mr. Tuckett's.

Jas. Scarlett recollected being at Mr. Bowditch's house when Miss Glenn was there; he saw them walking in the garden together one Sunday morning; he had seen them together in the kitchen many times; he recollected their going to a place called Golton together, about three miles off; they appeared very familiar together.

Cross-examined.—He married one of Mrs. Bowditch's daughters, it was Mary he married; Mrs. Bowditch, witness's wife, J. Bowditch, Sarah Bowditch, and Miss Glenn, went. It was about three miles off.

Joseph Broom, a laborer, was employed to cut Mrs Bowditch's wheat; he knew Miss Glenn, he saw her there when he was reaping; he saw her and Mr. Bowditch, and his sister in the passage. Miss Glenn came to witness and said she was going to get married to Mr. J. Bowditch; and said there he is in the passage, and she went to him again; she came back again, pulled out a ring, and said she was going to be married with it. Witness afterwards saw them go out towards St. Mary Magdalen church, it was about ten o'clock when they went out and they returned about twelve through the field. Witness said, "Miss, is the knot tied?" She said "Yes, thank God, and it cannot be untied," and witness wished her joy. This was some time in August. He afterwards saw them sitting together upon some sheaves of wheat; this was at eight o'clock at night. She came out & insisted upon having Bowditch into the house, and she took him round the neck.

Mr. Serjeant Pell.—You may go to the place from thence you came.

Rev. George Templer, a Clergyman and magistrate, was at Thornford in the month of September; he was there the 1st & 22d; he dined at the house of Mr. Paul; there were present Mr. Paul, Mr. J. Bowditch, as he was told, and two ladies, whom he never saw before; the lady in court (Miss Glenn) was there —there was no sadness in her appearance; but, with respect to gaiety, upon an observation made upon some mat, Miss Glenn smiled, and the ladies afterwards withdrew from the table. Miss Glenn ate a hearty dinner; she eat some roast beef and some apple pudding.—Witness saw her in the evening, between seven and eight o'clock, when they passed through the room in which witness was reading, took their bonnets, and said they were going out walking.

Cross-examined by Serjeant Pell.—The impression upon his mind was, that she ate her dinner in an ordinary way. Witness recollected that he observed to Mr. Paul, that he had made a bad dinner; and he said he had a luncheon of beef steaks; he said he had received a damper, but he did not say, "So has Miss Glenn too;" but he might have said to the young ladies, "So have you, ladies." He would not swear that he never told Dr. Thompson he did not know whether she ate a good dinner or not. Mr. Paul is witness's uncle, and Mrs. Julia Paul was the sister of J. Bowditch.

E. Jones, servant to last witness, remembered going with his master to Mr. Paul's; Miss Glenn & Bowditch were in the kitchen near the fire, and J. Bowditch afterwards came in; Miss Glenn made a hearty dinner. In the evening, witness saw Miss G. sitting on J. Bowditch's knee, playing at dominos, with her arm round his neck. On the following morning, Miss G. & J. Bowditch breakfasted in the kitchen; Mr. & Mrs. Paul were also breakfasting there; witness heard Miss Glenn say the day before, she had learned to make butter, and she hoped she should learn to make cheese soon. She appeared to be in good spirits.

Cross-examined by Mr. Goslee.—He was examined before Mr. Tuckett, but he did not say he was told Miss G. was Mr. Bowditch's sister, and that he took very little notice of her.

Mr. John Weaver was called, but he was objected to on account of having been some time in Court; but Mr. Serjeant Pell waved the objection. On the 20th Sept. last, he went to Taunton upon business; he was at Mr. Oxenham's office, and was not absent from it more than about half an hour, when he went to his banker's; and on his return, he found Mr. Oxenham there; it must have been near twelve o'clock before he finally left the office.

Miss Sarah Bowditch said, she was acquainted with Miss Glenn's hand writing. The letter pronounced she believed to be her hand writing; it was letter A. The letter D. produced, she believed to be also in her hand writing. This letter was only to shew the similitude of the hand writing; it was addressed to Mrs. Snow, of Exeter, and admitted to be Miss Glenn's hand writing. Witness resumed—She was residing at Holway the whole of the time. Miss G. was mostly employed with the children, but used to amuse herself in the evenings in the kitchen. She had observed a great deal of impropriety in her conduct, such as treading on her brother's toes, throwing handkerchiefs at him, &c; she had seen her on his knee, & this kind of conduct continued until she went away.

Cross-examined.—She was surprised to hear that her brother had taken her off from her uncle's house; witness was there when she came to Holway. She came at about half past one in the morning; she did not know what time Mrs. Mulraine came, but she came after Miss G. They did not go to bed until half past ten o'clock, and the house was shut up. Witness heard Miss Glenn's voice, but she did not get up; she put on her gown; she was surprised Miss G. should be there at that time of night; she was in very good spirits; Miss G. used to play on the harp, but she did not play that night; Miss Glenn said she would leave her brother; witness thought her a lady—very loose behaviour—indeed she . . ; but she never said any thing to her mother about her bad behaviour. It was not all that Miss Glenn could do that would corrupt her (witness's) morals.

William Snow said, he lived at Exeter, was called to prove the receipt of the letter, but it was admitted by Mr. Serjeant Pell.

Mary Owen knew Miss Glenn; that is the lady; was at Mrs. Bowditch's house on the 22d of September. Miss Glenn came there between one and two o'clock, and she heard Mrs. Bowditch ask Miss Glenn, why she took so imprudent a step, and in about ten minutes afterwards, Miss Glenn came into her bed-room; and she appeared very cheerful, very lively, and full of spirits. Mrs. Mulraine had taken part of her clothes off to lie down with witness; Mrs. Bowditch had then got up. Miss Glenn asked Mrs. Mulraine if she would go with her; Mrs. Mulraine said she could not, as she was going to her husband the next day; Miss Glenn then said, "If you will not go, I must go by myself." Witness recollected Miss Glenn called out to know if the gig was ready, she had been sitting on witness's bed.

Cross-examined by Mr. Gaselee.—Mrs. Bowditch is by her husband's side her aunt. They did not go to bed until it was drawing towards twelve o'clock. All the family, Miss Sarah Bowditch, witness, and Mrs. Bowditch, went to bed at the same time; the servant had gone before; Mrs. Mulraine had been in the house in the course of the day; she could not tell what brought Mrs Mulraine that night: she was there at tea, and went away about seven o'clock.

Francis Smith was at Mrs. Bowditch's on the night of the 21st Sept. Mr J. Bowditch fetched him, and he went over at ten, and went from thence to town for the horse and gig, which he got and put it under the hay. Witness fell asleep, and Mr. James Bowditch told him he should not go to sleep. Shortly afterwards a young lady came out of the house, and got into the gig, and then J. Bowditch went up into the gig, and the young lady said to William Bowditch, "Come up into the gig, and ride; there is plenty of room;" but he said "No, he would come on upon his pony." They had two bundles, and witness gave them to the young lady in the gig, and there the young lady said, "Let me go along;" and told witness to carry a light on the common, and to open the gates.

Cross-examined by Mr. Moore.—He was in their employment in September; he knew Mr. Tuckett and Mr. Lee, and remembered his speaking to them, and he told them, that James Bowditch told him in the field a few days before, that if Mr. Tuckett asked him, to say that Miss Glenn got into the gig first, and J. Bowditch told him also to say, that Miss Glenn pulled up Mr. J. Bowditch into the gig.

Re-examined.—The absolute fact was, that Miss G. did get into the gig first.

William Cridland was near the church yard at Bradford on the morning of the 22d September, between six and seven o'clock, and on looking up the road, he saw a gig coming up with a gentleman and lady in it, and a gentleman was riding. The lady and gentleman got out, and the lady took a small trunk from under where she sat, and handed it to the gentleman; they asked witness the way to Thornford, & they pursued that course, the lady laying hold of the gentleman's left arm. On the following day he saw the lady at Yeovil Bridge, sitting between two gentlemen, who were in a chaise and four.

Cross-examined.—The lady had on a brown pelisse, and he was sure she was the same; the chaise was going pretty fast, and he never saw her before.

Miss Glenn was again called, and examined by Mr. Serjeant Pell.—She never asked Puddy to assist her up on a wheat mow; she never stood god-mother to Mrs. Mulraine's child; she never came out of her uncle's house, and went to French Wearfields, arm in arm with J. Bowditch; she never left her uncle's gate to walk with Bowditch; she was never in St. Mary Magdalen Church at the christening of any of Mrs. Mulraine's children; she never came out without a bonnet or cap, & white gown, to meet James Bowditch, and to walk with him; she did not know one Broom; never recollected having said she was going to be married to Mr. James Bowditch. At the dinner spoken of by Mr. Templer, she ate very little beef, and saw no pudding; she never threw her arm round James Bowditch; never played blind man's buff with him; never trod upon his toes, or threw handkerchiefs at him; she did not say she would go by herself; she did not get into the gig first. Indeed, the young lady deliberately contradicted every important fact spoken by the witnesses for the defence.

Mr. Long, parish clerk of the parish church of St. Mary Magdalen, at Taunton, said he knew Mrs. Mulraine's child was christened; he believed the Bowditch family stood to her. Miss Glenn was not there; he saw her at Mrs. Bowditch's the same day, or the day after; he went to see if the register wanted any alteration. She was not the person who stood god-mother.

Mary Whitby called up and again examined.—Mrs. Mulraine said, she should say that Miss Glenn was at the christening, and that she stood god-mother to her child.

Mr. Tuckett said, he had closely examined the letters A. and B. and a small note, with the greatest minuteness; and he verily believed them not to be in the hand-writing of Miss Glenn. Witness stated that Mr. Templer said he had helped Miss Glenn to beef, but whether she ate it or not he could not tell, as he did not take much notice of her.

Re-examined.—He was positive that one of the Bowditch's stood god-mother to the child. The Rev. Mr. Hunt Clapp was the clergyman, but he was in a bad state of health at present.

Sarah Northam lived nearly opposite Mr. Tuckett's house; witness was called out by Mrs. Warren, who said "now you may see Miss Glenn and J. Bowditch;" and witness came out and saw a young lady, who was in the road with Bowditch; she went over to the railing and shook hands with the nursery maid with great eagerness; and she returned to Bowditch, took him by the arm, and went over the weir. Witness said if she saw any more of this, she would acquaint Mr. Tuckett of it; but witness's daughter was present, and went to the weir to wash her hands, and to see if it was Miss Glenn; and in the presence of Mrs Warren, her daughter said it was not Miss Glenn.

Sarah Northam, the younger daughter of last witness, knew Miss Glenn. She remembered the time alluded to by her mother; and she was sure Miss G. was not the young lady with J. Bowditch. Witness believed she had seen Miss Glenn walk out with her uncle before.

Here Mr. Serjeant proposed to put two ladies into the box, who superintended Miss Glenn's education; and who would speak to the propriety of her general conduct.

The learned Judge said, he could not receive such evidence. Mr. Serjeant Pell was about to reply, when Mr. Justice Park humanely suggested that the young lady might withdraw.

The Rev. Mr. Cooper, who had attended her through the day, said he was really afraid to go out alone; he requested Mr. Tuckett to accompany them. The sheriff ordered the javelin men to accompany them.

Mr. Serjeant Pell now rose, and was about to reply, when the jury begged him to afford them a few minutes consultation. The court acquiesced, and the jury having consulted a few minutes, the foreman (Mr. Banks) observed, that it would be unnecessary for the learned sergeant to reply, or for his Lordship to sum up, they being satisfied that a conspiracy existed. However, they did not see any thing that implicated Elizabeth Snell, the house maid. She was certainly in some degree concerned in the transaction; but without being so highly culpable.

Mr. Justice Park acquiesced in the opinion of the jury, as regarded Elizabeth Snell; and Mr. Sergeant Pell agreed that she should be acquitted.

The jury then returned a verdict of guilty against all the defendants, except Elizabeth Snell.

Mr. Justice Park observed, that his own opinion perfectly coincided with that of the Jury; but that, had it been otherwise, he should have felt it his duty to go through the whole of the evidence, which he had been obliged to take down at great length, for the purpose of reporting it to the court of King's Bench. He was sorry to have occasion to observe, that the defence set up was so marked with infamy, that it seemed like a continuation of the same conspiracy against the happiness and peace of the young lady, whom he could not but compliment for the firmness which she had displayed on the present occasion. He never saw a witness give better evidence, or one who better sustained a severe cross-examination; or one who listened, with more patient resignation, to the gross and abominable aspersions which the defendants' witnesses were continually throwing out against her character for modesty and virtue.

To Settlers.

THE Inhabitants of Smith's Creek have for some time past regretted the serious inconvenience suffered by the Settlers daily arriving here, on their way to the new Townships on Rice Lake, from the want of Houses for their temporary accommodations: Anxious to remove this evil, and promote as far as possible the comfort of the Settlers, a numerous and respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Hope and Hamilton was convened on the 10th instant, at Mr. James Parker's Tavern, Smith's Creek, for the purpose of taking into consideration the necessity of erecting, by public subscription, Buildings for their temporary accomodation.

James Ward, Esq. being called to the Chair, several Resolutions were entered into, purporting that buildings shall be immediately erected, capable of containing a considerable number of Families.—Thomas Ward, Esq. was then unanimously chosen President; Erasmus Fowke, Treasurer, and Dr. John Hutchison, Secretary.

The following gentlemen were then appointed a committee to carry into effect the laudable object of the meeting, viz:—D. McGregor Rogers, Esquire, Messrs. Robert J. Kerr, Alexander McDonnell, Jeremiah Britton, M. F. Whitehead, Adam Scott and Francis Page.—A subscription was then opened, which met with very liberal support.

Every exertion will be made to have the said buildings ready for occupation early in November.—For possession of the apartments, application must be made to one or more members of the committee.

The River Humber being now navigable to within a mile of the scite of the Village, and no doubt of its being made so the whole way, in a short time, and having the advantage of water for all kinds of Machinery worked by water, renders it a valuable situation for Mechanics and Tradesmen.—It possesses very great facilities for Brewing and Distilling, having a never failing and abundant stream of excellent water, which can be raised to the height of twenty feet with very little expence, capable of grinding grain for either.—It affords also an advantageous situation for a Tanner, and when it is considered that the main road of the Province, as well as along the river, will pass through the centre of the Village, the superior advantages of the scite will be obvious to all who may view it.

He will lease for 7 years his large and convenient Two Story House, Stables and other Out Houses, with thirty acres of Land, being a good situation for a Tavern or Store; or the House, &c. will be sold with one acre of ground. Possession can be given on the first of January next.

To Settlers.

THE Inhabitants of Smith's Creek have for some time past regretted the serious inconvenience suffered by the Settlers daily arriving here, on their way to the new Townships on Rice Lake, from the want of Houses for their temporary accommodations: Anxious to remove this evil, and promote as far as possible the comfort of the Settlers, a numerous and respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Hope and Hamilton was convened on the 10th instant, at Mr. James Parker's Tavern, Smith's Creek, for the purpose of taking into consideration the necessity of erecting, by public subscription, Buildings for their temporary accomodation.

James Ward, Esq. being called to the Chair, several Resolutions were entered into, purporting that buildings shall be immediately erected, capable of containing a considerable number of Families.—Thomas Ward, Esq. was then unanimously chosen President; Erasmus Fowke, Treasurer, and Dr. John Hutchison, Secretary.

The following gentlemen were then appointed a committee to carry into effect the laudable object of the meeting, viz:—D. McGregor Rogers, Esquire, Messrs. Robert J. Kerr, Alexander McDonnell, Jeremiah Britton, M. F. Whitehead, Adam Scott and Francis Page.—A subscription was then opened, which met with very liberal support.

Every exertion will be made to have the said buildings ready for occupation early in November.—For possession of the apartments, application must be made to one or more members of the committee.

LONDON, Aug. 20.

The Wellington testimonial.—The first stone was laid on the 18th of June, 1817, the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo, in the most eligible situation in the Phœnix Park, Dublin. This pile is composed, wholly, of that very durable stone called granite, and will occupy the attention of the artists for another year, viz. till the 18th of June, 1819, on which day it will be presented to public view. Its base is 100 feet square—sloping upwards, it forms itself into a pedestal 50 feet square, with another pedestal in front, on which stands an equestrian figure of the illustrious duke. Then above that rises the shaft of the obelisk, which is 30 feet at the base. The whole rises 210 feet. On each of the four sides will be engraven, in brass letters, the names of the different victories, cast out of the cannon taken in India, Spain, Portugal and France. A subscription of 20,000*l.* (the whole raised from private funds, and every subscriber an Irishman,) was completed in the course of a few weeks. Mr. Robert Smirke furnished the design.

In the trial of the cause "Kirby v. Spooner, Esq." at the last Cambridge assizes, a point of very considerable importance to the public was brought under the notice of the court. Mr. Sweeting, the under sheriff, having been called upon to state practice as to the general charges levied under execution, said "The constant practice has been to levy under all executions the amount of the levy, poundage, officers' fees, and all other expenses incurred in making the levy." Upon which, baron Graham declared, that since the statute passed in the 43d year of his present majesty's reign, sheriffs were confined to levying the sum endorsed upon the writ, and the poundage, only, and that their officers had no right to make any charge whatever.——The legislature had considered 1*s.* in the pound upon the first £100, and 6*d.* in the pound on any greater sum, a full compensation for the levy; and that it rested with the sheriffs to satisfy their officers for their trouble in business of this nature, and not the parties whose goods and chattels were taken in execution.

August 22.

Resuscitation.—The following case of resuscitation was lately communicated to the Royal Humane Society. As a knowledge of the means to be resorted to on such important occasions cannot be too widely disseminated, we have great pleasure in submitting the detail to our readers:

On Monday, 4th May, 1818, James Carney, a boy, aged eleven years, while at play on board a keel or coal lighter, fell into the river Wear—A strong ebb tide forced him under a ship's bottom, where he remained for a short time, but being by the rapidity of the current, hurried for nearly half a mile, must have inevitably perished in the sea, he being but a short distance from the harbour's mouth. Providentially Robert Kirkhouse, being in his boat, saw his hat on the surface of the water, and his arms appearing, he laid hold of, and pulled him into his boat, to all appearance lifeless. The period of time from the falling into the water to that of his arrival at the shop of Mr. Marvell, chymist, &c. was a full half hour at least; but how long he might have been immerged, could not be ascertained.—His whole aspect exhibited a state of complete dissolution; his body stiff and inflexible; his face swollen, and jaw completely locked. He was immediately stripped, put to bed, enveloped in warm blankets, his head reclined on pillows, bladders of hot water applied to his feet, and friction, with flannels, by four persons, to the whole surface of his body, were used, while Mr. M. rubbed the region of the heart, thorax, &c. with vol alkali and camphorated spirits; and on gently pressing it, the air and froth issued from his mouth & nostrils. These methods being persisted in for about twenty minutes longer, his body felt warm, the limbs became somewhat more flexible, yet a full half hour elapsed before any symptoms of vitality appeared, which was evinced by slight convulsive twitchings of the muscles of the face and under lip, accompanied with a fluttering, a palpitation of the heart, and also a gradual disappearance of the lividness of the face. His jaw being so far relaxed, as to admit a spoon bet ween his teeth, Mr. M. attempted to get down some warm diluted white wine, but this not succeeding, he applied his mouth to that of the patient, and at the same time closing his nostrils, made repeated efforts to inflate the lungs, and using gentle pressure on his chest, he then fetched several convulsive sobs. These exertions were continued one hour longer, and when nearly two hours had elapsed, some spoonfuls of diluted white wine were given with advantage. He began to revive, he screamed aloud, & struggled hard, threw about his arms and legs in such a manner that it was found difficult to keep him quiet. The pulse at the wrist was scarcely perceptible till about this period, but it afterwards became stronger. He passed a troublesome night, but towards the morning slept pretty well. Some medicine was prescribed, and the next day he seemed quite recovered. He remains in perfect health.

August 23.

We have remarked with indignation an assertion made in the Morning Chronicle, that our Navy is "in such a wretched condition." To that assertion, we are able to give the most positive and peremptory contradiction: and we state with confidence that all the ships have recently undergone a most minute inspection; that the British Navy was never in such a good condition: that more ships could be sent to sea now in a short time, and in the best order, than at any former period, even in the year 1793, after ten years of pence; and that there are amongst them a greater proportion of first rates that have been known.

We have inserted in this day's paper the latest intelligence from the island of Ceylon. It will be perceived, with regret, from the proclamation of Sir Robert Brownrigg, that though tranquility has been restored in many of the revolved provinces, yet, fresh symptoms of rebellion have manifested themselves in the districts of Heewahette & Doombera, of such a nature, as to make it necessary to proclaim martial law. By this vigorous proceeding we hope the further progress of insurrection will be stopped. Severity is only the more severe by being delayed; and in a semi-barbarous population, like that of Ceylon, it is only when terror has reduced men to subjection, that the opportunity is gained for creating a better principle of obedience.

The cotton spinning, which for a good many months has been comparatively flat, has acquired an uncommon activity, within these few weeks, in Glasgow. About six months stock of yarn formerly on hand, is now bought up, principally by English merchants. The avidity of demand in the Glasgow market is attributed to the general "strike" in Manchester, amongst the cotton spinners. Cotton spinners in Glasgow, who are steady and active, are making from £3 10*s.* to £4 10*s.* a fortnight, but they have to pay a small sum for their piecer's wages.

August 24.

Singular and solemn event.—We are indebted to an officer, late of his majesty's ship Vengeur, for the following awful narrative, which recently occurred on board that ship, and of which he was an eye witness:——A seaman on board his majesty's ship Rivoli appeared to have the greatest possible aversion to the naval service, & was most anxiously looking forward to the ship's being paid off, thinking, like thousands of others, that he could easily provide for himself on shore. His shipmates laughed at his constant railings against his profession, and jokingly used to say, we shall see you on board a man-of-war again one day or other yet; to which he usually replied, that he only hoped if ever he went on board a man-of-war again for the purpose of entering, that God Almighty would instantly strike him dead. The Rivoli was at last paid off at Portsmouth, on her return from the Mediterranean, and it is to be supposed all the schemes vanished which the unfortunate subject of this memoir had formed. Nothing was now left him but again to embrace his old profession, for which purpose he went on board his majesty's ship Vengeur, capt. Alexander, at Portsmouth. Lieutenant Blake, the senior lieutenant of the Vengeur, and also a number of her seamen, formerly served in the Rivoli; the latter of whom were much surprised at seeing their old shipmate come on board as a volunteer. Lieut. Blake glanced over his certificates, and, as is usual, ordered one of the medical officers to examine him, previous to his being placed on the books—when, in the act of turning himself to go below for that purpose, dreadful to relate, he fell down lifeless on the quarter-deck!!

Apprehension of Mr. Harvey.—About the period of the dissolution of parliament, a young man of gentlemanly appearance, and of elegant manners, travelled in the west of England in a carriage and four, under the assumed name of Harvey, and stated every where that he was going to offer himself as a candidate for one of the Cornwall boroughs, carrying the name of the borough as it suited his purpose. In his progress he introduced himself to a number of country bankers, to whom he stated the object he had in view, observing that nothing could be done without plenty of money at borough elections, and producing at the same time letters of credit from bankers in London, with whom they were connected. These letters were forgeries. Many of the bankers, acting with caution, declined crediting this impostor, but with others he was too successful. He is reported to have netted by his fraudulent representations upwards of 20,000*l.* The numerous frauds he has committed being soon afterwards discovered, he was traced to have sailed for France, where pursuit was made after him, but without effect. Application was made by the parties most interested to Lord Castlereagh, he wrote to the British envoys and consuls abroad on the subject. Information was also dispatched to bankers on the continent. These various measures were attended with the desired effect. The culprit was ultimately discovered at Turin, in the disguise of a servant; and, according to information which reached town on Friday, he was on his way to England under a proper escort. Property to the amount of eighteen thousand pounds is said to have been found upon him.

Aug. 28.

Letters from Manchester this morning inform us that in consequence of an increased degree of energy shewn by the master spinners to open their mills for those journeymen who should think fit to return to their work, and to protect the well-disposed, a greater disposition to disturb the peace was shew on Wednesday than on any previous day. A small party of constables was stationed at the principal manufactories. At one of them an active person in the mob was taken into custody, being recognised as charged with some offence previously committed. The mob exerted themselves to rescue the prisoner, and succeeded in making the constables prisoners in the mill.

The lodgings of a Dandy were lately robbed of a pair of stays, a smelling bottle, two pair of artificial eye-brows, and a white surtout, in a pocket of which there were three love-letters, written to himself, in his own hand writing.

We have heard it rumored, but how truly we know not, that a commissioner from the United States is to proceed to Ghent, where he will be met by Mr. Robinson, president of our board of trade for the purpose of negociating a commercial treaty. The professed cause of meeting seems fair enough; the place alone is what fills us with apprehension; for surely there is something ominous in the name of Ghent.

Apples, the most useful of all the different kinds of fruit, are every where plentiful; and in some situations the branches of the trees are so heavy laden, that props are necessary for their support. It is expected that many of the common sorts will not fetch more than 2*s.* a bushel, or about 0 1-2*d.* a pound.

We lament to find, from the papers received this day, that the typhus fever is on the increase in several parts of Ireland. In Dublin there has been an awful increase since March last. Waterford in the south, and Sligo in the west, suffer severely from its malignant spread.

We have received journals from every part of the interior of Ireland, and reports from several counties—it is highly gratifying to remark how perfectly they coincide in the favorable accounts given of the harvest, and the probable result of plenteousness throughout the land. The wheat crops are reported as remarkably fine; already has three-fourths of the wheat in the kingdom fallen under the sickle, and the quality of the grain is generally as fine as the quantity of the produce.

LONDON, Aug. 30.

Another serious depression of the funds has taken place. Consols for money having declined yesterday so low as 78 one eighth, and for the account to 73 three-eighths; while omnium was done at 6 1-4 per cent discount, & the 5 per cent navy annuities at 103 five eighths; but we are unable to state the real ground of the depression, which has thus lowered the stocks within the last few days between 4 and 5 per cent. A number of conjectures (too numerous to notice) have been hazarded on the subject: as far as we are able to form an opinion, we think it is principally to be attributed to the great scarcity of money, occasioned by the near approach of the time (which is on Thursday next) when 10 per cent must be advanced towards the late loan contracted by the chancellor of the exchequer. It is also said that the bank has already begun to prepare for payments in specie, and have considerably reduced their discounts: but we cannot pledge ourselves for the correctness of this story: some confirmation is given to it by the circumstance of money being continued to be borrowed at 5 per cent on good bills.

Lord Cochrane was accompanied from Boulogne, in the British ship the Rose, by his lady and two patriotic Agents, who have been some time in London. There is no doubt he will proceed round Cape Horn. The Spanish naval force on the South West coast is pretty considerable; we believe they have two 74s and several frigates.

We are indebted to a gentleman just arrived from Stade, for the following genuine account of a curious hoax, lately played off upon the loyal inhabitants of that town; On the evening of the 20th ult. a person on horseback arrived at Stade, and repairing to the principal inn, represented himself to be the avant courier of the duke of Cambridge, stating that he was sent forward to prepare for the duke's reception, who would reach the town by midnight: an interpreter being brought to him, he repeated his story with such apparent veracity that no doubt any longer existed of the approach of the royal traveller. In less than an hour, the inn presented a blaze of illumination; the apartments were lighted with wax candles, and the respectable members of the government, with the worthy magistrate, assembled to welcome his royal highness with all due form and honor. In short the whole town exhibited a scene of bustle very unusual for the time of night. After some hours anxious expectation, the unlucky instrument of the hoax, having recovered the use of his faculties, which it then appeared had been rather clouded under the influence of the grape, the whole illusion vanished.

Anti-pirate institution.—The institution established at Paris under this title has just issued the following announcement of the satisfactory termination of their labors;

"PARIS, Aug. 22 1818.

"The latest advices received from the Dey of Algiers, dated the 1st of June, state that the new Dey, not wishing to follow the example of his predecessors, has not only set at liberty the European women and girls, who were carried off by Ali-Hodgia, but that he has even caused a considerable sum of money to be paid to the sufferers, as some sort of indemnification for the outrage which they experienced from the hands of his predecessor. They announce also the disarming of all the Corsairs, and the avowed determination of the Dey, who is very moderate in his conduct, not to allow any to go to sea this year.—The labors of the anti-pirate institution have thus attained their object, and the result deserves to be appreciated the more, that it exceeds any thing that could have been hoped at the time of its establishment. The Bureaux are therefore on the point of ceasing their functions at Paris, and the president of the institution (sir Sidney Smith) being on the eve of his departure from this capital, the creditors of the institution are requested to send in their claims."

EDINBURGH, Aug. 26.

The reports of the progress of the harvest from all parts of the kingdom are particularly flattering; and if the fine weather continues but a little time longer, the duration of the reaping season in England will be much shorter than any recorded in the annals of agriculture. The crops ripen in a manner scarcely ever before remembered; the wheats, especially, are in most instances of the best possible quality.

MADRID, Aug. 5.

The expedition for America, which sailed from Cadiz on the 20th May last, under convoy of the frigate La Marie Isabelle, was obliged to put into Saint Croix, at Teneriffe, to water, their supply being all expended, and to take out some troops which were on board a ship in a leaky state.——They again departed on the 7th June for their destination.

The news of their arrival is daily expected. Our Gazette also states, that the serious illness of the commander of the frigate was the principal cause of their entering the above port.

VIENNA, Aug. 3.

The Duchy of Reichstadt, recently conferred upon the son of the Archduchess Maria Louisa, is situated in a Lordship of that name in Bohemia, twelve miles from Prague, towards the frontiers of Lusatia. A Duchess of Lauenburg transferred this freehold Lordship to her daughter Maria Anne Caroline, wife of Duke Ferdinand of Bavaria. It remained the property of the Electoral House of Bavaria, until it lately passed to the Duke des Deux Ponts, and afterwards to the Prince de Waldeck; it subsequently returned to Tuscany and was erected into a duchy. Its chief town is called by the same name, Reichstadt, and contains about 230 houses. There is, however, a borough-town on the Lordship, whose inhabitants support themselves by the productions of their spinning factories and the cultivation of an almost barren soil.

From the United States.

Commodore Taylor.—On Saturday last, the case of this person was argued, on a point of law, in the district court of the United States, before judge Van Ness. Suits had been instituted against him by the Spanish consul, to recover the value of sundry captures made by Taylor, while commanding the privateer called the Patriota.

Among the captures made was an American brig called the Gazelle, on board of which was a Spanish gentleman named Juan Junedo.—It was stated in some of the affidavits that after the capture, this gentleman was examined respecting the ownership of the property, and denied its being Spanish: That Taylor was at this time sailing in company with a small privateer, the capt. of which was a Frenchman, and the crew mostly blacks from St. Domingo. This captain told Taylor that he would make the damned Spaniard confess the truth, and would hang him up for that purpose, if Taylor would permit it. That having received the permission, he did actually put a rope round his neck and tied it to one of the yards, & then hauled the rope taut, and choked him, until he confessed the property belonged to him; upon which he was let loose, and Taylor took possession of the vessel. On the following day the Spaniard was sent ashore to Santiago, and procured $15,000 for the ransom of this property, which was delivered to Taylor; which sum of money the libellant now sought to recover in this cause.

The judge having in the first instance ordered the defendant to be held to bail, he now applied to be discharged from the arrest. This application was founded on an affidavit of the defendant himself, stating that he was born in Bermuda, a subject to the king of Great Britain, and had served in the British fleet; that in 1810, he became a citizen of Buenos Ayres, and a commander in their naval service; that he was in the United States in 1816, and there contracted for a vessel to be loaded with naval stores, and to be delivered to him out of the jurisdiction of the United States; that the vessel called the Fourth-of-July was accordingly prepared, and at sea he purchased her, changed her name to Patriota, and put her under a Buenos Ayres commission, which had been entrusted to him by the Buenos Ayres government: that the vessel was a public armed vessel, belonging to the government of Buenos Ayres, and not private property: that he was not in any manner concerned with the fitting out of the vessel in Baltimore, nor with equipping any of the crew. He avowed making two of the captures which were charged against him, and said that he had been prosecuted in Baltimore by the Spanish Consul for the same causes of action. He also produced a commission which had been made out in blank, and was filled up with name of the vessel, and the signatures of which were proved by a witness. The defendant also made oath, that since 1810, he had been a citizen of Buenos Ayres, and had not been a citizen of any other state or country whatever.

On the part of the Spanish Consul it was proved, that the brig Fourth-of-July was built, armed, equipped & owned in Baltimore by sundry merchants of that place and com. Taylor; that all the crew were enlisted there and at Norfolk, in December, 1816, and the beginning of January thereafter; that Taylor sailed in the vessel at that time from Baltimore; that within the jurisdiction of the United States he hoisted the Buenos Ayres flag, and changed the name of the brig from the Fourth-of-July to the Patriota; proceeded on his cruise, made the captures of Spanish property complained of, and returned to Baltimore in July, 1816, with the privateer, without having been to Buenos Ayres at all.—That after the return of the vessel, a quantity of specie which they had captured was divided among the owners in Baltimore. It was shewn that the sale which had been made at sea was a mere sham sale; that the real owners were American citizens during the whole time, and that the government of Buenos Ayres had no interest whatever in the vessel. It was also established that the defendant had not been prosecuted by the Spanish consul in Baltimore, and a certified copy of an oath made by Taylor in the custom-house of Baltimore, dated April 10th, 1816, was produced, in which Taylor swears, that he is a citizen of the United States, of Wilming, Delaware, and the sole owner of the schr. Romp, for which vessel he was then taking out a register. A deposition of Ventura Izquierdo was also produced, stating he had been engaged by Taylor, in Baltimore, to go in the vessel, to write the log-book, and do all the other writings of the vessel: that, while in Baltimore, Taylor employed him in forging a commission for the brig, —another commission which Taylor had belonging to another vessel, having been destroyed in attempting so alter it with vitriol so that it might serve for the brig Fourth-of-July: the witness wrote the commission, another person signed it with the name of the Supreme Director of Buenos Ayres, and Taylor sealed it with a copper seal which he had procured to be made in Baltimore: and that during the cruise herein mentioned, the privateer had no other commission than this one which the witness had fabricated.

The point upon which the libellant chiefly relied was that this vessel had been fitted out in the United States; that it was a violation of the neutrality of this country; that all captures made by such vessel were illegal and void, & the parties concerned in it were all trespassers, and as such were liable to be proceeded against in the courts of the United States. That although it is a general principle that where a capture is made as prize, no court but the court of the captor can enquire into its legality, yet that this case is an exception to that rule, the capturing vessel having been equipped and fitted out in this country, and having thereby violated our neutral rights, and rendered our government liable to make compensation to the belligerent whose property was captured by this force. That at all events the defendant ought to be held to bail, to give the libellant an opportunity of appealing to the judgment of the highest tribunals for their ultimate decision, whereas discharging him without bail was the same as taking away the right of appeal.

On the part of the defendant it was insisted, that the captured property not being brought within the jurisdiction of the court, it could not proceed against the person only; that the question of damages was a mere incident to the question of prize or no prize, and that the court not having the principal matter before it, could not determine upon that which only grew out of it.

The court decided:

First—That it had no jurisdiction over prize cases as between Spain & her colonies; or the colonies and any other powers at war, where the vessel making the capture was not fitted out of the United States.

Secondly—That where the vessel making the capture, was alleged to have been fitted out of the United States, but was cruizing on the high seas, under the commission and authority of one of the belligerents, the court would not interfere, unless the captured property was brought within the jurisdiction of the court.

Remark.

The Editor will merely add, that many gentlemen of the bar who heard the above decision, considered it a very extraordinary one, and proclaim it with alarming consequences. And why the court did not commit him for perjury, we are at a loss to conjecture.—N. Y. Ev. Post.

Capt. M'Konochie, of the British navy, has published in England a very interesting commercial pamphlet, in which he strongly recommends to the British government the establishment of two free ports in the Pacific ocean, and one near the Cape of Good Hope. The property of all nations deposited there to be guaranteed, and not to be affected even by war.—Alb. Gaz.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE.

YORK, THURSDAY, NOV. 5.

We have authority to state that the Dy. Post-Master General has given directions to the Post Master at Kingston, to make arrangements for sending the Mail from that place to York twice a week, without delay.

We have obtained and inserted in our paper of this day, an accurate report of the Attorney General's speech in the Court of Oyer and Terminer, on Wednesday the 28th ult. previous to entering a Nolle prosequi on an Indictment for the murder of Alexander M'Lean, charged against F. F. Bouche' and Paul Brown, the prisoners who, on the preceding day had been acquitted of the murder of Governor Semple, at Red River in the Indian Territories.

The Court of Oyer and Terminer was occupied with the different trials arising from the prosecutions of the Earl of Selkirk against the partners and servants of the North West Company, during the whole of last week, and on Tuesday the 31 inst. after finishing the last of these trials, the Court was dissolved. The result has been the acquittal of all the prisoners and persons accused who were present to demand their trials; and the indictments found by the Grand Jury, of which we gave a list last week, are now disposed of as follows:—

AGAINST

F. F. Boucher and Paul Brown, } As principals to the murders of Robert Semple and others at Red River, 19th June, 1816.

Alexander McKenzie, Hugh McGillis, John McDonald, Simon Fraser, John McLeod, John Sevright, Paul Brown,—For Robbery of Michael Heydon. } As Accessaries after the fact.

John Cooper and Hugh Bannerman } For Larceny from the dwelling House.

All Acquitted.

The said Paul Brown, for another alledged Robbery.

The said Paul Brown, for Larceny on a navigable River.

Nolle Prosequi entered by the Attorney General.

Previous to the trial of the gentlemen named as accessaries to the murder of Governor Semple, we are informed that it was proposed by the Court to extend their recognizances until sufficient notice to appear should be given to them, after the conviction of a principal. This however, was refused, and a trial demanded, at the close of which, the Judge who tried these gentlemen declared, that there was not "a scintilla of evidence against any of them." and they were accordingly acquitted.

It may be recollected by our readers that these are the same gentlemen who were arrested by the Earl of Selkirk at Fort William, in August 1816, & subsequently sent as prisoners to Montreal, through this Province, under the accusations of High Treason, Conspiracy and Murder, and in consequence of which the recent trials have taken place.

It was expected that the Earl of Selkirk would have attended the late Court of Oyer and Terminer, at which the trials of his charges against the North West Company took place. It would appear that his Lordship set out from Montreal on the 22d ult. as was supposed on his way to this Province, but a few days afterwards, it was ascertained that he had directed his course to New-York, and was expected to embark for England in a vessel appointed to sail on the 28th ult.

COURT OF OYER AND TERMIER.

Wednesday 28th Oct. 1818.

PRESENT AS BEFORE.

Attorney General.—I beg leave to mention to your Lordships, the situation in which some of the persons charged with offences alledged to have been committed in the Indian Territories, stand at the present moment. The opinion on the question of jurisdiction given by you Lordships, as I understand it, is that by the Statute of the 43d Geo. III. Chapt. 138. your authority is extended to the trial of every offence transmitted under the Great Seal of the Lower Province; but not to the trial of persons for offences committed by them, if not particularly specified in the sealed instrument. I am the more anxious not to misapprehend your Lordships on this point, as altho' such was the construction I had in my own mind given to the Act in question, yet informations accompanying these general instruments (which in addition to particular charges, transmitted the accused for trial generally for all other offences committed by them in the Indian Territory) I had prepared Bills of Indictment against various persons, and presented them to the Grand Jury, who have returned several of them true Bills. Amongst these, is one against Cuthbert Grant, Louis Perrault and the two Prisoners who were acquitted yesterday (upon their trial for the murder of Gov. Semple) for the murder of Mr. Alex. McLean, which offence I consider as specially transmitted under the sealed instrument which charges them with the murder of twenty-one men, of whom Mr. Semple was one. I therefore, to avoid the many disputes or discussions which might arise as to the application of the particular parts of the Evidence to each individual homicide, if the whole were charged in one Indictment, thought it better to select the name mentioned in the Great Seal Instrument, as being one of the Twenty-one, and put the Prisoners on their trial on the specific charge of the murder of Gov. Semple. The charge of murder in these cases, as in others, may be laid in a variety of ways, but I find that it cannot be done in one Indictment a number of persons for the murder of several others, together with the accessaries before and after the Fact, without being liable to create great difficulty and confusion. In bringing forward an Indictment, charging a number of Individuals who were present at this unfortunate rencontre, with the murder of the twenty one persons who lost their lives on the unhappy and melancholy occasion, the difficulty would be to find who killed any particular person, and to apply the evidence relative to a general firing, to individuals. There would be no difficulty in deciding if a principal was convicted, (Cuthbert Grant for instance) of shooting any one person only of the twenty one, although not Mr. Semple or the one named in the Indictment, that the whole of the others present might be tried as aiding and a betting the one so convicted; but under the construction I given to the act by your Lordships, the difficulty would arise from the Great Seal Instrument's not specifying against the particular Invidual against whom the Grand Jury might return a Bill, the offence for which the Great Seal Instrument transmits him for trial; these instruments being worded generally "that the Prisoners may and shall be tried here for all crimes and offences by them heretofore committed within the Indian territories." Thus these instruments not specifying John Rogers or Thomas McCoy, I could not charge them in an Indictment as having been killed; because your Lordships have decided you have no Jurisdiction, unless the particular offence as well as the offender, is included in the Great Seal Instrument. We have therefore not charged the Prisoners with these murders before the Grand Jury, altho' I still consider, if I deemed it advisable, that I have the right to do so. In the Indictment which the Grand Jury have returned as a true Bill against Brown and Boucher, together with others, for the murder of Alexander McLean, it is charged to have been actually perpetrated by a certain person, at present to the Jurors unknown; and Cuthbert Grant, Louis Perrault, Paul Brown and Francois Firmin Boucher, are charged as principals in the first degree, in being present, aiding, helping, abetting, comforting and maintaining the said person unknown, to kill and murder the said Alexander McLean. Considering, however, that this unfortunate man, McLean, was one of the Twenty one killed, at the same time as Mr. Semple, and that after a full and most impartial trial, in which the whole of the evidence was most fully gone into, on both sides, Brown and Boucher have been acquitted by the Country, of the murder of Mr. Semple, I have concluded that the Justice of the case does not demand further proceedings against them, for the part they acted in the melancholy business of the 19th June. In thus deciding, I am not influenced by an opinion that the right of trying them for the murder of any other of these Twenty-one persons, tho' thus acquitted, does not exist, but because I consider they were virtually as much tried for the murder of Alexander McLean, as they were for the murder of Robert Semple, and that as the whole of the Evidence against them, was then produced, it would be unjust, tho' not illegal (for that I contend it would not be even were they tried for each) to again put them on trial. I therefore move for leave to enter a nolle prosequi against Paul Brown and Francois Firmin Boucher, on the Indictment for the murder of Alexander McLean.

It is well known to the public how very much a Court House is wanted in this town. Every exertion has been used by the Magistrates to borrow money for the purpose of aiding towards building one, but until lately without success. In the month of Sept. last, a loan of £2500 currency was negociated, upon condition that the Principal & Interest should be repaid within a given time, for which the Magistrates were to be bound, on the part of the District; in consequence of which, a meeting of all the Magistrates in town was held at the office of the Clerk of the Peace, on the 30th of that month; when it was agreed to petition the Legislature at the then next ensuing Session of Parliament, for an Act to authorize an additional Rate, for a limited time, in order to raise the means for repaying the above Loan, as well as adding whatever further sum was necessary for finishing such a building as was proposed, which would afford the necessary accommodation that is so much required, independant of the ornament that it would be to the Town. The Magistrates did accordingly (after giving due notice in the Gazette, from the time of meeting) petition the Legislature now sitting, to pass a law to authorize that additional Rate for a limited time. But it appears that an opposition is made to this by Counter Petitions, from what motive we have not heard. This has been a District for upwards of Twenty years, without having built a Court House of any kind, and we hope that no unreasonable opposition will prevent our having one for perhaps as many years to come.

Miscellaneous.

(Concluded from our last.)

The earliest instance of fire ordeal in Christendom, occurred in the fourth century. Simplicius, bishop of Autun, had married before his promotion, and his wife, unwilling to quit him after his promotion, continued to live with him. The sanctity of Simplicius suffered by the constancy of his wife's affection, and it was rumoured that the bishop persisted, in opposition to the ecclesiastical canons, to taste the sweets of matrimony; upon which, his wife, in the presence of a great concourse of people, took up a considerable quantity of burning coals, which she held in her clothes, and applied to her breasts, without the least hurt to her person or her garments, as the legend says, and her example being followed by her husband, with the like success, the multitude admired the miracle, and proclaimed the innocence of the loving pair. A similar trick, as Mosheim terms it, was played by St. Brice in the fifth century.

The Empress Maria of Arragon, wife of Otho III had accused a young Italian count of having endeavoured to seduce her, and he was put to death; but his widow, with the head of her husband in her hand, demanded to be admitted to the fiery ordeal in order to prove his innocence, and holding, as long as was thought necessary, a red hot bar of iron, without being burnt, this miracle was admitted as proof, and the empress was condemned to be burnt alive.

If the Monkish historians tell the truth, our queen Emma, mother of Edward the confessor passed unhurt over nine burning ploughshares.

Another form of trial, attended with greater ceremony, was that undergone by Luitprand, a Milanese priest, who, in 1103, offered to prove the truth of an accusation against his bishop, by walking through a blazing pile of wood. He entered, it is said, through volumes of flame, which divided before him, and came out amid the acclamations of the people. It was remarked, however, that his head had received some injury from the fire when throwing holy water and incense into the pile, and that his foot was bruised.—However, this proof was thought insufficient by the pope, who acquitted the archbishop. In truth, says Duclos, who has inserted an able essay on trial by duel and the ecclemeata, in the 5th vol. of the memoirs of the Academie Royal des Inscriptions, if we consider the whole story, diminish the size and brightness of the pile, and increase the injury done to the hand and foot, and regard the sentence of the pope as directed against a fanatic, the wonder of this pretended miracle will cease.

Aldebrandini a Florentine monk, in the 11th century, also walked through the fire, to prove an accusation against his bishop, and hence got the name of Petrus Igneus.

All trials of this kind were condemned by Pope Etienne V. as false and superstitious, and Frederick II. prohibited them as absurd and ridiculous. These facts are now quoted to show, that by a little management, the handling of fire has always been practised, and we need not add, that it was done by natural means, and not by miracle. Indeed, the result of the trial often was contrary to the truth, and those who prescribed it to others had not sufficient confidence in it to entrust their own safety to it. Thetberge, wife of Lothaire, suspected of incest, was allowed to prove her innocence by proxy, and her champion performed successfully the ordeal of fire & water. The queen afterwards confessed her guilt, and the advocates for the ordeal maintained that the miracle was performed in favour of her guilty majesty, because she had confessed herself before the trial, or, because in taking her oath of innocence, she substituted an innocent person for the guilty.

An Englishman, of the name of Richardson, seems to have attracted great notice in Paris, about 1697, by his feats with fire, which obtained for him the title of the incombustible man and the fire eater. He announced in his bills the following performances, which will bear to be compared with those of our Signora:

"1st. He chews the coals, which may be seen burning in his mouth for a long time.

"2d. He melts sulphur——makes it burn in his hand, and then puts it, while in flames, on the point of his tongue, where he finishes by swallowing it.

"3d. He puts a burning coal on his tongue, on which he cooks a piece of meat or an oyster, and allows it to be blown with bellows for half a quarter of an hour.

"4th. He holds a red hot bar of iron in his hands for a long time, without its leaving any mark. He places it on a smoothing iron, and then takes it in his mouth, and with his teeth throws it against the chimney, (near which the experiment was made) with as much force as another person could throw a stone.

"5th. Lastly, he swallows melted glass and pitch, sulphur and wax melted together, and in flames, so that the flame comes out of his mouth, and this mixture makes as much noise in his throat, as if a hot iron were plunged in the water."

He also promised, when the weather became less severe, to walk barefoot on red hot iron plates, and to perform some other feats no less surprising.

There can be no doubt that Mr. Richardson seemed to do all that he promised, for in the journal des Scavens for 1677, there is an attempt, and with considerable success, by M. Dodart, an accademician, to explain every thing upon rational principles.

From the Boston Patriot.

Franklin Fund.—Some inquiry having lately been made in the newspapers, respecting the situation of the Franklin fund, the following facts are communicated for the satisfaction of all persons who feel any interest on the subject.

Dr. Franklin, in his last will, gave £1000 sterling to the inhabitants of the town of Boston, to be let out upon interest at 5 per cent per annum, to such young married artificers, under the age of 25 years, as have served an apprenticeship in the said town, and faithfully fulfilled the duties required in their indentures, so as to obtain a good moral character, from at least two respectable citizens, who are willing to become their sureties, in a bond with the applicants for the repayment of the monies so lent, with interest, for which the trustees are to take a bond to pay the sum loaned in annual instalments, of ten per cent."

It was the doctor's intention to assist young married mechanics, who are just struggling into life, with the burden of a family. His mind was so much engaged in contemplng the advantages which would result from his plan, that he forgot the hazard to which it might be exposed. A loan, to benefit a young man without property, must be made on such terms as will return it, out of the savings of his industry and frugality.—A long credit and easy instalments, are indispensable conditions of such a loan. But the security of a fair moral character and industrious habits, even when supported by the credit of two respectable citizens, is not always a sufficient guarantee of the safety of the loan. The revolutions of 10 years frequently destroy morals, habits, and fortunes; and the calculations of the doctor are often frustrated by the vices, the misfortunes or the death of the debtors. These casualties cannot be provided against, by any caution of the trustees without requiring more security than young mechanics generally are able to give, which would prevent the benevolent purposes of the donor. At times too there is a considerable accumulation of money for which there is no call; nearly one fifth of the fund is now deposited in one of the banks at a low rate of interest.

These causes have greatly retarded the increase of the fund. The last loan was made on the 1st of April last, it appears that the whole number of loans, which had been made up to that date, was 206, the supposed value of the fund was $10902,83, and the whole number of bonds belonging to the fund was 75.

From the Mississipi Republican.

Mexico and Louisiana.—The southern section of the disputed claim, between the United States and Spain, to territory, extending from the gulf to the 32d degree of North latitude, may justly be considered the finest portion of North America, and is certainly of great national importance to both those governments.

From the Sabine to the Guadeloupe river, a distance of at least 700 miles by the meanderings of the coast, we find the land low, and the navigation dangerous for large vessels, with the exception of two inlets.—Matagorda, at the mouth of the Guadeloupe, and Galvezton, at the entrance of the Trinity rivers; yet all other rivers which fall into the gulf within that division, are navigable for craft, to a considerable distance. The river Bravo, the largest river which empties into the gulf between the Rio del Norte, and the Mississippi river, is navigable from five to six hundred miles for barges.

The land generally continues low and marshy, for ten or fifteen miles from the river into the interior, and covered with live oak of an excellent quality for ship building, and at some distance up all those streams, there is good pine timber for masts and spars. A portion of this low land, which is above the level of the salt water, produces excellent rice, cotton, indigo and sugar cane, all of which may be cultivated to very great advantage to the distance of three hundred miles north of the coast.—There is another advantage which no other portion of North America possesses, which is, that the sugar cane and wheat are produced on the same farm with the greatest perfection; our informant observes, that he has seen in the same field or lot, the wheat and the sugar cane growing—the former equal to any he has seen in Virginia or Pensylvania, and the latter infinitely superior in size and in the quantity of saccharine matter to that of the first quality of which he has seen in Louisiana. Together with all the other vegetable productions which are common to those countries, in which the wheat and the apple tree grow to perfection, and produce abundantly; there are also many valuable spices, medicinal plants, and a great abundance of cochineal. How far, therefore, it would be of national importance to possess that country, and amidst the numerous considerations which ought to be taken into view, the propriety of augmenting the quantity of lands proper for the culture of the sugar cane, the cotton, the rice and the indigo, and of securing to our government all ship lumber in the gulf of Mexico, is certainly an object worthy of national consideration.

The country lying between the river Guadaloupe and the Rio del Norte, will never admit of a population except such as are attached to a pastoral life; hence, the Guadaloupe would form a good national boundary, in this section of the country, inasmuch as it passes through the western side, and with the exception of the soil on its western bank, a very limited one for at least 150 miles on that side. Such a national limit would facilitate an intercourse between the citizens, and the execution of the laws of both governments in time of peace, and would give a great superiority to our government in time of war, if at any future period an appeal to arms should be found necessary.

NORFOLK, Oct.

Non-Intercourse.—The law which closes the ports of the United States against vessels coming direct from the British West India Islands, went into operation yesterday. Within the last three weeks this port has been crowded with such vessels, availing themselves of the little time that remained to take away cargoes of our produce. Some of these have sailed and probably, ere this, have made a good offing; others have put to sea, but owing to the northeasterly gale that is now prevailing, must have been compelled to put back, while others, though ready for sea, have not been able to get out owing to head winds.

The orders from the Secretary of the Treasury do not leave it discretionary with the collector to permit the sailing of vessels after the 1st of October, who have loaded and cleared for the British Islands before that day; in consequence of which the most unheard of exertions were made to expedite those vessels which arrived at the eleventh hour. Of the expedition with which they have been unloaded and taken again, an instance was given in our last, and another in to day's paper. Not one has been behind hand—not one craved indulgence beyond the time allotted; all were ready to depart the day before the law was to take effect, when they find themselves unfortunately detained by adverse winds. Since Saturday night last, the wind has been hanging on at N. E. and during the two last days has been blowing a hurricane, consequently no vessel could get to sea from this port or even from Hampton Roads. We do not apprehend, however, that these vessels will be made to experience any further detention after the North-easter has removed its embargo; yet we cannot witness their final departure from our waters but with feelings of regret; since the peace they have been regular traders to our ports, some of them having in that period made seven or eight voyages hither—each time bringing valuable cargoes paying heavy duties, and taking away our lumber, naval stores and flour in return. We have yet to learn whether the inhibition of that trade, which has certainly been highly beneficial to this section of the country, and to the nation at large, will produce an equivalent advantage in the employment of our own shipping. We hope yet we doubt it.

Another instance of quick dispatch.—The British schr. Favorite, from Barbadoes, which arrived at this port on Tuesday morning, entered at the Custom-House at 9 o'clock, and immediately commenced discharging her small cargo of sugar and rum. At 8 o'clock the same night she had a full cargo of flour, bread and staves in, and her hatches battened down. The next morning had her deck load of shingles taken in, her long boat stowed, cleared at 10 o'clock, and at 1 was on her way down the river. The Favorite is a vessel that will stow about 600 barrels under decks.

Of Course.—A tall and masculine woman, who gave her name "Judith Macgrath," was brought in custody before the magistrate at Guildhall, on Thursday, and being placed at the bar the following whimsical conversation took place:

Magistrate—Who complains of this woman? A little fat, smartly dressed man, whose cheeks seamed with dark brown stripes, made it evident he had lately been in a desperate affray, skipped lightly into the witnesses' box, and very tritely replied, "I do, of course."

Magistrate—Why of course, sir; pray, who are you?

Prosecutor—Me, sir, I am Mister Nightingale.

Magistrate—And what are you, Mister Nightingale? What business are you?

Prosecutor——An hair-dresser, of course.

Magistrate——(smiling)——And you charge the prisoner with an assault?

Prosecutor—An assault, of course.

Magistrate—Why do you add, of course; how am I to know all that happened between you?

Prosecutor—(stroking his face)—It's plain enough, I think.

Magistrate—Why true, you bear some marks of violence certainly. Pray, how did it happen?

Prosecutor—With her nails, of course.

Magistrate—I don't care whether it was with her nails or not; I want to know why she assaulted you?

Prosecutor—Oh, a love matter, of course;—what do women assault men for?

Here the magistrate lost all patience, whilst the persons in the office could scarcely suppress their laughter. Mister Nightingale, however, nothing moved, either by the anger of the magistrate, or the tittering of the by-standers, stood with his mouth half open, ready for his next reply. At length, the magistrate said, "Is there no person here who will undertake to tell this gentleman's tale to him?" When another dapper-spark took the place of the prosecutor, and announced himself as "Mister Nightingale's own brother."

Magistrate—Well, sir, and now I hope we shall be able to understand this business. What do you know of this affair?

Witness—Why, sir, I knows her to be a very infamous character.

Magistrate—Let her be what she may, she appears to have had to deal with a pair of wise ones. How do you know her to be an infamous character?

Witness—Why, sir, of course she can't be a very good one, when she lived with my brother these eight years! (Laughter, in which every body joined, except the two Mr. Nightingales.)

Magistrate—(rather angrily)—Pray, sir, can you give a direct answer to one simple question?

Witness—I'll try my best, sir.

Magistrate—Do so. Did this woman, the prisoner, live with your brother as his wife, or——

Witness—(interrupting)—As his concubine, sir, of course.

Magistrate—Well then, gentlemen, as this appears to be a matter of course altogether, I shall of course discharge the prisoner. And she was discharged of course.

From the Connecticut Courant.

The Massachusetts Agricultural Society caused to be imported at their own expence the last spring, in addition to the implements mentioned in the last Journal, the Northumberland double-mould-board plough, considered among the best yet invented in England. Its mould boards are so contrived, that they may be expanded more or less at pleasure of the person who uses it, and according to the nature of the soil and the distances which it is proposed to place the rows of plants. It is chiefly intended for ridge work, where carrots, beets, the mangel wurzel, or root of scarcity or white beet, (for it is known by all these names,) or the ruta baga, or Swedish turnip, are sown. It would also very well answer to pass between cabbages or potatoes, planted or sowed in continuous rows. This instrument is now used by the Hon. Mr. Quincy, and is much approved by him.

The Society have also introduced the couch-grass scarificator, an instrument in great and very popular use in England for clearing lands of couch or twitch grass, and would be also applicable for the purpose of clearing lands of the Canada thistle, nettle, or any other noxious plants whose roots extend into and cover the soil. It is also a very useful harrow. It is easily managed by a single horse, and will do as much work in one day as could be done in three, with the same number of hands employed with instruments heretofore in use. This has been tried, and is in the possession of John Prince, Esq. of Jamaica Plains, Roxbury.

They have also imported a mill for grinding small grain, but it does not, at present appear to promise advantages equal to their expectations. Also, a hand hoe, to be drawn by men, and to weed where it would be dangerous to use a horse. Likewise, a machine for sowing turnip seed, very simple, light, and effectual.

The great object of the society is, to bring into the country, specimens of improved machines, from which it is hoped our ingenious artists will be enabled to derive hints, and to furnish others better adapted to our necessities and soil, and made of cultivation, and at prices suited to the means of our farmers.—Mass. Ag. Repos. and Journal.

COWS.

Is there any room to doubt, that the profits of our dairies may be greatly augmented by a proper attention to the breed of milch cows? There is some prejudice on this point. It is and good keeping makes good cows: yet those who say it, are in their own cow yards, very frequently a single cow, not bigger nor better fed than others, giving double the quantity of milk. It is very careless and stupid to go on rearing the calves of poor cows, in preference to those of good cows; yet this is generally done; because the excellent cows bring fat calves for the market. Their good or bad qualities are, undoubtedly important, as well as their color and size, at least in a considerable degree. Why should we scruple this, any more than the improvement of horses? The bull is to be chosen with no less care than the cow. The best cows for milk may be reared as certainly as horses for racing or draught; in a dairy country, the total neglect of this important care is shameful and unaccountable.—Id.

Rats and Mice will immediately quit barns, granaries, &c. wherever is placed the field plant called dog's tongue, bruised with a hammer.—PA. Union.

To Settlers.

THE Inhabitants of Smith's Creek have for some time past regretted the serious inconvenience suffered by the Settlers daily arriving here, on their way to the new Townships on Rice Lake, from the want of Houses for their temporary accommodations: Anxious to remove this evil, and promote as far as possible the comfort of the Settlers, a numerous and respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Hope and Hamilton was convened on the 10th instant, at Mr. James Parker's Tavern, Smith's Creek, for the purpose of taking into consideration the necessity of erecting, by public subscription, Buildings for their temporary accommodation.

James Ward, Esq. being called to the Chair, several Resolutions were entered into, purporting that buildings shall be immediately erected, capable of containing a considerable number of Families.—Thomas Ward, Esq. was then unanimously chosen President; Erasmus Fowke, Treasurer, and Dr. John Hutchison, Secretary.

The following gentlemen were then appointed a committee to carry into effect the laudable object of the meeting, viz.—D. McGregor Rogers, Esquire, Messrs. Robert J. The River Humber being now navigable to within a mile of the scite of the Village, and no doubt of its being made so the whole way, in a short time, and having the advantage of water for all manner of Machinery worked by water, renders it a valuable situation for Mechanics and Tradesmen.—It possesses very great facilities for Brewing and Distilling, having a never failing and abundant stream of excellent water, which can be raised to the height of twenty feet with very little expence, capable of grinding grain for either.—It affords also an advantageous situation for a Tanner, and when it is considered that the main road of the Province, as well as along the river, will pass through the centre of the Village, the superior advantages of the scite will be obvious to all who may view it.

He will lease for 7 years his large and convenient Two Story House, Stables and other Buildings, with thirty acres of Land, being a good situation for a Tavern or Store: or the House, &c. will be sold with one acre of ground. Possession can be given on the first of January next.

From Europe

LONDON, Sept. 4.

A merry Hibernian was brought before the Magistrates, on Thursday last, at the Town-hall at Brighton, for drunkenness, and was ordered to pay 5s. or be placed in the stocks.—Pat, however, remarked, that he should never forgive himself if he chose either; though he had no fear of the first, not having sixpence in the world, and it was not a proper thing for a man in his circumstances to be dabbling in the Stocks.

Uncertainty of Life.—Some years ago, a woman lived in a village in Glamorganshire; whose husband, with the little fortune he got with her, bought a small farm: he had hardly closed the purchase when death closed his eyes; however, not intimidated with this, the widow married a second husband, who sowed it; he likewise died: and she tried a third, who reaped it, but Death soon snatched him away; she then married a fourth, who threshed it, but he also followed the fate of his predecessors; and she then married a fifth husband, with whom she enjoyed the produce of it. All this happened within less than eighteen months!

On Friday afternoon the Vicarage barn at Patrixbourne, Kent, the property of Edward Taylor, Esq. took fire, occasioned by the placing of some charcoal within it which had been made only the preceding day, and which ignited shortly after it was deposited there, when on its communicating to the weather boarding the whole building was in a blaze, threatening the destruction of the Vicarage house and buildings adjoining. The most prompt exertions were made by the inhabitants of the neighbourhood to stem the progress of the devouring element, which they happily succeeded in doing. The barn contained a few quarters of corn and malt, and a quantity of building materials, which together may be estimated at the value of eight or nine hundred pounds: no part of the property was insured.

Precisely at seven o'clock on Mouday morning, Jack Martin, alias the pugilist, started from the house of Mr. Goldsmith, the sign of the Bull, in East Sheen, to return to the house of Mr. Booth, of the Clayton Arms, Clayton-street, Kennington-cross, being a distance of eight miles and a half, for a wager of forty to twenty guineas, to perform it in an hour; and which he readily accomplished in six minutes within the given time.

The valuable cargo of the Harmony, the first ship that ever arrived at Hull from the East Indies direct, was sold last week at that port, nearly the whole of which was purchased for the mercantile houses of London and Liverpool.

Conduct of the Dutch.—A recent arrival from India has brought us advices to the 16th of April. The Dutch are at their old work in the Indian Archipelago. They have closed all the Eastern ports, obliged all the native vessels to carry Dutch flags and Dutch papers. They are taking possession of all the ports in Borneo, Sumatra, &c. &c. so as to form the same system of arbitrary exclusion they did before the last century, the barbarities of which, particularly those practised at Amboyna, can never be forgotten. It was here that, in 1621, they first tortured and then murdered the English, thereby engrossing the whole trade of the island, and also that of Banda.—The same hostility and determination to destroy all British trade in that quarter, is now open and avowed. They do all in their power to lower and degrade the British name, to arrest British merchants residing at Batavia, and, in short, to harass and oppress them wherever they present themselves.——These are however, only the results of their jealousy of British trade. Humanity has much more to regret in the consequences of their oppression and injustice towards the natives. These, in the Moluccas, and also in some parts of Java, are in a state of insurrection; and as the most effectual mode of tranquilizing their fears and redressing their wrongs, the Dutch are butchering them by thousands. We are no advocates for war, but surely our Government, that disdains not to interest itself in the quarrel between Spain and her South American Colonies, cannot suffer this system of hostility to its own immediate subjects and interests to proceed without an energetic remonstrance. Without some check, some restraint upon this system of encroachment and aggression, the whole of the eastern trade will be lost. The Dutch are gradually monopolizing and raising the price of all articles, the produce of the Archipelago, & are sending ships on their own account to Bengal, to sell copper and tin, from Japan, and Banca, to the ruin of the British mining interest. The impolicy of giving up these places to them requires no further illustration. But this is not all that we have to complain of. In order to debar us from all intercourse with the natives, they keep up a commission three line of battle ships, five frigates, several sloops of war, and innumerable armed vessels; in short, there is every thing but peace in that quarter. The prices of colonial produce at Java, in consequence of these restrictions, are as follow:—Coffee from 18 to $20, pepper 13, sugar 9 to 10, which is three times the price they were when that fine Island was under the wise and paternal government of Sir T. S. Raffles.——We have already stated, that we are no advocates for war; but we are not, therefore, disposed to sacrifice the rights, interests, and honour of the country to a rival nation. We have been lavish to excess in our concessions to the Dutch; but whatever cause the country may have to repent of its bounty, we do not propose to retract a particle of it. Let them have all they have a right to by virtue of their treaty; but do not let them interfere with the independence of the native ports, or restrict our commerce at their pleasure.—British Press.

The following is an extract from a private letter, dated Bencoolen, April 14th, 1818:—

"On the arrival of the intelligence of the melancholy death of the Princess Charlotte, the whole settlement went into mourning, and on the 27th March the Lieutenant Governor summoned a general meeting of the inhabitants, who framed and signed addresses to their Royal Highnesses the Prince Regent & Prince Leopold of Saxe-Coburg, deploring this calamitous event, which have been transmitted to England by Capt. Mitchell, of the East India Company's ship Northumberland.

"The Lieut. Governor also took advantage of the sorrow and feeling of the moment to establish 'The Sumatran Auxiliary Bible Society,' and the Rev. Mr. Winter, our Chaplain, preached an appropriate sermon on the occasion. Nothing can equal the melancholy with which we are overwhelmed in consequence of this sad catastrophe. By none does it appear to have been more deeply felt than by our Lieutenant Governor. His Royal Highness Prince Leopold was particularly kind to him at Claremont, where he was always a welcome visitor during his late visit to England, and eventually to the Continent. The cultivators think themselves well paid at a half penny per lb. for nutmegs. As we had a right to expect, from the liberal and enlightened views of our new Lieutenant Governor I understand he proposes to immediately abolish slavery, and emancipate the natives from the forced deliveries, &c. under which the labored. The gaming & cock-fighting farms, the sources of endless evils, are to be abolished from the 1st of May. The country has suffered much from earthquakes. They commenced on the 18th March, when the most violent shocks were felt; nearly all the public edifices are in ruins; the government houses useless, and every building in the place rent and cracked throughout. These earthquakes have continued at intervals during the last month, but hopes are entertained that they are now over. There has been a South American pirate sweeping these seas for some time, and if the patriot cause succeeds, the Insurgents will be supreme at Manilla."

September 5.

Accounts of various kinds, and many of them contradictory, have been received this morning from Manchester & its vicinity——It does not appear that any fresh acts of violence have been attempted by the refractory spinners, tho' they still continue to assemble in menacing bodies.——According to one letter, a meeting was to be held yesterday of the owners of the principal cotton mills, when certain propositions would be submitted to the workmen.

Mr. Incledon is arrived in Liverpool from America. He has realized it is said, by his Trans-Atlantic expedition upwards of £5,000.

The Queen.—The Queen's disorder, up to a late hour yesterday afternoon, appeared rather to increase than otherwise. She suffered much pain, and was in an almost total incapability of motion. The Princess Augusta and the Duchess of Gloucester are incessantly occupied in the most anxious attentions upon their Royal Parent. The Prince Regent lately spends almost the whole day, and great part of the night at Kew, receives half hourly reports, and frequently sees her Majesty. The Dukes of York and Kent also visit the Palace every day, besides sending their inquiries several times in those parts of the day in which they are not at Kew.

As another proof of the intellectual enterprize excited among the Greeks of the Ionian Isles, and the scientific as well as literary attainments which they have lately made, we feel great pleasure in the notice of a minute and accurate topographical sketch of the Bosphorus, Constantinople, and the environs, both in Europe & Asia, designated by Capt. Nicholas Chiefala, and executed at London, under his own direction. The work, we believe, is not intended for general sale in this country, nor are we aware that it would be of any great use as a common chart of the Straits of Constantinople, till our sailors who visit the Black Sea learn Greek; and besides being a curiosity itself, it cannot fail to be of service to those who wish to gain an accurate knowledge of the seat of the Eastern empire, and would have enlightened the labors even of Gibbon in his description of that celebrated capital. The author is a native of the island of Zante, and is already advantageously known on the Continent, by a treatise on maritime law, and three charts of the Mediterranean, published in Paris in April last. The manner in which these works were received at Vienna & Paris, confer no honor both on the author and the nation to which he belongs. He is now employed on two Greek works which he intends publishing in London; one on the construction of ships, and another on nautical geography; & we have no doubt that, if they are executed with the skill and ingenuity of the topographical sketch to which we have adverted, the author will add the patronage of England, which he most highly prizes, and to which from our connection with his country he seems to have a natural title, to the praises and respect of literary men on the Continent.

It was erroneously reported on Saturday, that Madame Bertrand had arrived in the river from St. Helena. The fact is, that it is Bonaparte's cook and his wife, & two other menials, that arrived. The woman was servant to Sir H. Lowe, and was married at St. Helena. The tutor to Bertrand's children has also come over in the same vessel. They are all going to Germany, and all pretend to be out of humour with Napoleon.

Extraordinary phenomenon.—About a fortnight ago, a common hen, belonging to a person of the name of Freeland M'Conchie, residing in Milnburn, of Kirkcudbright, was observed to labor under some acute pain, which led its owner to suspect that it had been struck with a stone. From motives of humanity, therefore, he was induced to kill the hen; when, upon examining its intestines, a male animal, of the canine species, fully formed, and in life, was discovered in the egg bed, to which it was attached by a naval string of a very strong texture. However, after being removed from the egg-bed, it soon died. This animal is still in the possession of the above person; and has been preserved by Dr. Christie, of the Galloway militia, and Mr. Robert Sharpe, surgeon, Kirkcudbright. It has also been seen & minutely inspected by several of the most respectable individuals in that place and neighborhood, who have been all struck with the appearance of so remarkable and wonderful a phenomenon; although no one has been able to form a probable conjecture as to the cause of an occurrence so extremely anomalous, and contrary to the settled and general laws of nature. But such is the fact, and it will remain a task for the naturalist and physician to unravel so profound a mystery.

Accident.—On Saturday last, as three boys were playing in a field near Bennington, Herts, one of them, 16 years of age, proposed to tie one of the others to a cow's tail, which, with the assistance of his companion, was done; when the boy soon fell a victim to the barbarous whim, for the animal dragged him up and down the field at full speed and before he could be extricated life was extinct.

Extraordinary case of arson.—A woman has been lately convicted in Antwerp, who set fire to her house out of revenge against her husband, who used to go and drink his pint of beer at a neighbouring ale-house; she had often threatened to deprive him of the means of regaling himself, and has now carried her threat into execution. The husband, hearing that his house was on fire, hastened home, and found his wife looking quietly on. A neighbour asking him if he knew the cause of the misfortune; the latter said, "I will tell you some day." His wife explained. "Say rascal, that I did it; you know I have long warned you. I told the person, that I would put a knife to your throat now I have; and you will no more go and drink your pint." What adds to the atrocity of this crime (unless it be an act of insanity), is, that before setting fire to the house she desired her children to go to bed saying, "Go to bed directly, for I am going to burn the house." In fact, one of seventeen, the other of nine years of age, went to bed and she put the third in the cradle. That of nine years of age perished in the flames, that of seventeen escaped with difficulty through the flames and smoke. In a momentary fit of sensibility the cruel mother rushed into the burning house to save the youngest child, and came out holding it in her arms. It was immediately taken from her. She is now as calm as usual, and shews no sign of remorse.

A London paper of August 29th, states, that letters have been received from the northern expedition under Capt. Ross, dated 8th July, in lat. 74.—The two ships were then off a remarkable point of land called by Baffin the Devil's Thumb; but the letters give no other particulars than that all was well, and that they were at the moment of writing, impeded in their progress by the ice. The other expedition under Capt. Buchan, was seen by a whaler on the 8th July, fast to the ice, in a latitude short of 80.

LONDON, Sept. 5.

Animal Remains—Mammoth—Crocodile.—There have been recently discovered in the parish of Motteston, on the south side of the Isle of Wight, the bones of that stupendous animal the Mammoth, or Mastodon. Several of the vertebræ, or joints of the back-bone, measuring thirty-six inches in circumference, they corresponded exactly in form, color and texture with the bones found in plenty on the banks of the Ohio, in North America, in a vale called by the Indians, Big-bone Swamp. Also in the parish of Northwood, on the North side of the Island, the bones of the Crocodile have recently been found by the Rev. Mr. Hughes, of Newport. They seem to have belonged to an animal of that species, whose body did not exceed twelve feet in length.—Their calcareous nature is not altered; but the bones of the Mastodon (found on the north side of the island) contain iron.

Canine Sagacity.—Last week a Lady going over Lansdown, was overtaken by a large dog, which had left two men that were travelling the same road with a horse and cart, and followed by the animal for some distance, the creature endeavouring to make her sensible of something, by looking in her face, and then pointing with his nose behind. Failing in his object, he next placed himself so completely in front of the object of his solicitude, as to prevent her proceeding any further, still looking steadfastly in her face. The lady became rather alarmed; but judging, from the manner of the dog, who did not appear vicious, that there was something about her which engaged his attention, she examined her dress, and found that her lace shawl was gone. The dog, perceiving that he was at length understood, immediately turned back; the lady followed him, and he conducted her to the spot where her shawl lay, some distance back in the road. On her taking it up, and replacing it on her person, the interesting quadruped instantly ran off at full speed after his master, apparently much delighted!—

Capt. Kater has been appointed by the Board of Longitude to measure the length of the seconds pendulum of the Shetland Islands. The expedition originated with his Majesty's ministers, who have in the most liberal manner provided instruments, and every thing that is necessary to promote the object in view. Captain Kater, accompanied by Lieut. Frank of the navy, arrived in Edinburgh on the 27th of June, and set off for Shetland on the 1st of July, in the Nimrod sloop of war, commanded by Capt. Darling. After measuring the length of the pendulum at Unst, Capt. Kater proposes, if the weather is favourable, to go as far as the North Cape in Norway, with the view of determining the length of the pendulum in the latitude of 65 deg. or 66 deg. He then returns to the trigonometrical survey at Cowhithe, near Banff; and having determined the length of the pendulum there, he performs the same experiments at Leith Fort, Clifton, Arbury Hill, and Dunnose. If the weather shall prove favourable, so as to allow Capt. Kater, to make his observations in Norway, we shall have a series of results of the greatest importance in the determination of the true figure of the earth.—Caledonian Mercury.

PARIS, Aug. 29.

Extract of a letter.—The nearer the opening of the Congress approaches, the less do the objects of which it is to treat appear to brighten, and the obstacles to their accomplishment to be removed. The question even of the evacuation of the French territory, it is said, meets with objections.—Russia, & Prussia, which obeys the impulse of Russia, are the only two powers completely decided on withdrawing their troops.—England has, it is reported, made overtures to the king of the Netherlands, to keep the English continent in Belgium, with the understanding that all the charges and expenses of maintaining it will be furnished by England. This proposition has not yet been acceded to; the principal objections to it are, it is said, the temper of the people of the Netherlands, and perhaps, likewise, the disposition of the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh. Prussia appears resolved, in case the evacuation takes place, to leave her troops on the left bank of the Rhine, which will be a great charge on her provinces in that quarter, where there already prevails much discontent. The other objects to be treated of at the Congress are not in a more satisfactory state. There is no approach to reconciliation between Portugal and Spain.—As to the affairs of Germany, they are a labyrinth out of which the Diet do not yet see their way. Up to this time they have not decided a single question of any importance. England appears to entertain the wish of separating the affairs of America from the business of Congress, but I have yet heard nothing positive on the subject. Before the commencement of her negociations at Congress, France appears to have felt the necessity of making a levy of 80,000 to reinforce her army. The Moniteur of to-day contains the royal ordinance on this subject. The affair of General Canuel is still in the same state, which gives additional reason to believe that the trial will not be proceeded in, and the conspiracy will drop to the ground.

ST. PETERSBURGH, Aug. 6.

The rain which prevailed in June, and the heat which succeeded, gave us the fairest prospect of an abundant harvest.

Daniel Wheeler, a Quaker, distinguished by his good character, religious way of thinking, and knowledge of Agriculture, has lately arrived here from England, in consequence of a previous invitation. His principal employment will be to drain the bogs in the neighborhood of the capital, to make them fit for tillage, and to dig the turf, (or peste,) which has not hitherto been turned to any use. The Emperor has not only signified his approbation of the undertaking, and assured the said D. Wheeler of his favor, but he has also assigned him a salary of £300 sterling per annum, and the sum of 25,000 roubles for the first beginning towards the expense of the work, and a detachment of pioneers to dig ditches, &c. His Majesty has confided it to the special care of Mr. Von Kosodowloff, Minister of the Interior, and Prince Gallizin, Minister of the National Institution. It is to be expected that the undertaking will be attended with complete success.

Madame Krudener lives undisturbed on her estates in Livonia, and continues her religious exertions without any impediment.—This is another proof of the universal toleration and liberty of conscience prevailing in Russia.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 18.

In the year 1804, Capt. Hay Laureus, of the Island of Hooge, near Busum, had the good fortune to convey Louis XVIII on board his ship from some port in the Baltic to Riga. The King on his arrival at Riga presented him with a watch, and promised that if he should hear in the sequel that the king had returned to his kingdom, and would then apply to him, he should receive a reward for the service he had performed. The king gave him for this purpose a certificate in his own hand writing, and sealed with his own seal.—Laureus had at that time changed his course on the king's account, and put into Riga, which was not his destination, and as he had suffered very much during the war, he thought he might claim the promised favor of the King of France. The Danish Ambassador at Paris was, therefore, requested to bring the circumstance to the recollection of the King, who has in consequence sent the Capt. Laureus 1,200 francs, and the order of the Lily.

Rear-Admiral Paul Lovenson has presented to the Royal Secret Archives a collection of the Reports of his grandfather, General P. Lovenson, to Frederick IV. These Reports relate to the campaigns in Pomerania in the first twenty years of the eighteenth century, and contain important materials for the history of those times and of that King.

BERLIN, Aug. 22.

According to authentic accounts his Majesty the Emperor Alexander will arrive at Berlin in the middle of next month, and probably stay here five days. Our King sends Lieut. Gen. Holzendorff and Col. Beyern to meet his Majesty on the frontier at Memel.

It is said, that a new division of the whole Russian Empire is intended, viz. into thirteen great divisions. Several governments will be formed into one division, and have a Governor or Viceroy. The provinces of Volhynia & Podolia are to be united with the rest of the kingdom of Poland.—Hamburgh papers, August 25.)

DUBLIN, Aug. 28. } Bank-street Office. }

The Hangman travelling for Business. Wednesday morning, about five o'clock, as Mr. Turkington, belonging to this office, was passing through Westmoreland-street, he observed a crowd in much agitation near Fleet street; he immediately proceeded to the spot, and was informed that a desperate maniac had escaped from a lunatic asylum, had procured arms, had done much mischief to the people returning from Donnybrook Fair, and that no person dared go near to secure him. The officer, however, not intimidated by this information, rushed through the crowd, when a figure, scarcely human in appearance, presented itself—its face repulsid and almost hid by a black beard matted with dirt, and the head nearly covered by a thing resembling a hat, but full of holes, through which a quantity of hair protruded itself, standing erect like "quills upon the fretful porcupine." The dress of this extraordinary creature consisted of a jacket and trowsers that appeared to have been made for a person of bulky size. They now covered a carcase with about as much flesh as a Bedouin Arab could boast: under the jacket was a dagger and a sharp instrument like a knife, while from a belt over part of a waistcoat was suspended a huge cutlass, and on his back was a large bundle. The officer seized this curiosity, and asked what he was doing? The reply was, "travelling on King's business." What did he carry weapons about him for?—"To assist him in his business!" What is the "King's business?" sent him for?—"To assist him in his business!" What is your trade?—"A King's-hangman!" Where do you do business?—"I've hanged chiefly in Ireland for twenty years!—I've hanged in Armah—in Philipstown—in Wexford—in Wicklow—in Waterford, and other places for twenty years!" The officer immediately conveyed him to Bank-street, where Mr. Manning, who was on duty at that early hour, inquired his name; when the prisoner said he was Wm. Woods, "well known for hanging" in Wicklow and Wexford during the last twenty years. Mr. Manning, after securing his arms, opened the bundle which he had carried at his back, and which contained, among other things, the following articles:—long black cloak, with a cap to cover the head, several pieces of cord, for pinioning the hands, various halters new and worn, and some new and old cat-o'-nine tails. This professional gentleman said, the cutlass was for assisting him in defence; the dagger and knife were to help in "executioning those who rebel-robbed" the King; and that he was going to Dundalk in search of business, having heard that the last executioner was dead; and that when he was stopped, he was proceeding with a letter he had written himself to the gaoler. To prove the truth of his story, and to shew that he was no impostor, he gave the letter to the officer. The following is a literal copy of this curious document:—

"Mr. John Woods, Gailer, Dundalk.

"Worthy Sir—I take This timely Oportunity of Calling to See you, As I am Credibly Enformed you wants a Man of my Profession of Business. I now beg leave to inform you concerning the the Engratitude of the County of Kildare; since I first engaged in this Innocent Entertaining Course of Life, I never experienced So much Sorrow as I have since the Downfal of trade; But I should consider that I should never want in a County that I have served those twenty years. If their was Gratitude in them. Now since I find them ungrateful to Me after all my past Labours and Exercion, I shall withdraw My Servitude from them and bestow it on you for the remainder of my life; If it is not your own fault I will work on reasonable Terms, as Business is Bad throughout the Kingdom, I will Nock them off for 10s. per Head and 5d. per dirth for Whipping; And I think we will have a Chace after the Heroes of Wild Goose Lodg.

"I remain your Affectionate Friend
And well wisher,
"WILLIAM WOODS, Executioner."

At ten o'clock on Wednesday he underwent a long and ludicrous examination, before Mark Mograth, Esq. who sent him to Newgate for protection. He was recognised by the officers as being the hangman who disappointed the Sheriff of Wicklow, and caused him to ride post to Dublin some time since, to get the assistance of the hangman of this city, Tom Galvan.

ST. THOMAS, 12th Sept.

"Admiral Brion with his fleet, and Bermudas with his army, have lately taken La Guerra, and with concentrated forces are about to march also, the coast to attack Cumana.

"Bermudas is at Carinco, between Coropano and Cumana, about 5 Spanish leagues distant from the latter place which he will attack as soon as Brion is ready to co-operate from the sea side. This news has been communicated to me by persons on whom some reliance can be placed. At the same time, Morillo is attacked on all sides in the interior, so that at a time when the royalists thought to rest and prepare for the next campaign, they are, notwithstanding the valleys are under water, attacked in their very fortresses. This vigorous and bold conduct on the side of the patriots, is said to be solely owing to their chiefs having come to a good understanding with one another, and seen at last the necessity of a perfect union, to which may be added the considerable supplies in arms and ammunition which they have lately received from England.

An officer in the patriot army writes from Augustura on the 10th of last month, "that Marino, who hitherto had acted independent of Bolivar and others, and had acknowledged Bolivar as chief of the republic, as all the other patriot generals had done before, and that he had joined heartily in the general plan of attack with his 4500 well disciplined troops. Paiz is at Fernandez de Aupura with 2000 men, amongst them 300 English cavalry. Perez is now in the plains of Varinas, with 2000 men. Sorasan with about 2000 men, chiefly cavalry, in the plains of Caracccas, who are every where harassing the Spaniards, notwithstanding the inundations. Prisoners are brought in here daily, and if the present plan is followed up, the royal army will soon be destroyed. Bermudez is to act with Brion on the seacoast, and Bolivar is collecting here & in the plains called "Los Mansiones," an army of about 3000 men, which is organizing under gen. Aumati. A great number of foreign officers are daily arriving from all parts of the world.—— Foreigners are in general treated here very bad by every body, (with the exception of the corps under the brave Paiz,) but particularly so the English, on account of their arrogant pretensions and bad conduct. Col. Wilson, an Englishman, has lately been condemned to imprisonment for life, it having been proved that he attempted to persuade general Paiz to separate from Bolivar; he has been sent to the fort at Guayana."

If all these accounts are true, I have very little doubt, that if the Patriot chiefs remained united, Venezuela will be cleared of the Royalists in the course of the next campaign, unless they should receive strong reinforcements from old Spain, which however, is not likely. I understand there is a proclamation in town made by Bolivar, as chief of the republic, dated 15th Aug. in which he promises victory, &c. and call on all patriots for a cordial co-operation, particularly on the people of Grenada, which he intends to attack. May it please the Almighty soon to stop the horrible bloodshed in these unfortunate provinces.

"A few days ago arrived here, Capt. Brown, of the schr. Eliza, of New York: this schooner was bound from here to Rio de la Hatcha of St. Martha. Near the coast she was overhauled by a royal Spanish privateer, commissioned by the governor of Rio de la Hatcha, who wantonly fired into her after having taken in all sail. While the Captain was in his boat, going from his schr. to the privateer, they were pouring volleys of musketry at him, and on board of the Eliza, one of the Spaniards deliberately took aim at, and shot at Mr. Williams, part owner of the Eliza, through the heart!!! They then plundered the vessel, and carried her into Rio de la Hatcha, where captain Brown made a protest, and got a part of the things stolen from him restored; his schooner was so torn to pieces, that he had to sell her. I understand that captain Brown has made the proper communications to the President of the United States, and I hope such a foul murder will not be suffered to pass, without proper satisfaction being given, and the injury, as far as possible, redressed to this unfortunate man."

"Since writing the foregoing, we have received accounts here from Hayti, stating that Boyer had totally defeated the army under Christophe, between St. Marks and Port au Prince—that "I give you this as well as all other news, as I receive it, always taking care to give you only that which is generally credible here."

"Our correspondent subjoins a note, that since the receipt of the letter he has quoted, they had accounts that Col. Wilson has been shot.

From the New-York Spectator.

The Queen of England had experienced a return of her disease in its most distressing form.—and at the latest date was rapidly sinking. It was not expected that she could survive many days.

Lord CASTLEREAGH and his lady and suite, took their departure on the 2d of September, for Brussels, on their way to Aix-la-Chapelle.—Among his Lordship's suite are the Earl of CLANWILLIAM, Lord CONYNGHAM, and Lord ASSON.

Sir JAMES LUCAS YEO, who commanded the British forces on Lake Ontario during the late war, died lately on board the Frigate Semiramis, on her passage from Havana to England. His disease was an affection of the liver, which he contracted on the coast of Africa.—His corpse was landed at Portsmouth early in September.

It is said that the revenue of England, for the last quarter, exceeded that of the corresponding quarter of the last year, by more than one and a half million sterling.

The town of Manchester continues in a state of disorder and alarm.

The accounts of the harvest generally in the southern parts of Wales, speak favourably of the crops of wheat, both as to quantity, and quality.

The crops of potatoes, especially in Jersey and Guernsey, it is said proved this year unusually abundant, and of excellent quality.

It is also said, that in various parts of England, fruit trees are more productive than has been known for several years. An apple tree is particularly noticed in the neighborhood of Taverton, which requires thirty props to support its loaded branches, and which, it is calculated, will yield at least five hogsheads of cider.

It is stated in one of the London papers "on the highest authority," that it is "the declared purpose of the Emperor Alexander, the moment the Congress commences its sitting at Aix-la-Chapelle, to insist on Bonaparte's being allowed to return to Europe, and either to live in England as a prisoner of war, on his parole; or, should our government refuse its assent to the proposition, at all events to insist upon his removal forthwith from the barren rock upon which he is at present confined."

It is stated with confidence, that the Congress of Sovereigns would commence on the 27th of September. Among the distinguished personages who had arrived at Aix-la-Chapelle, at the latest advices, are His Royal Highness the Prince Chancellor of State, Count Hardenberg, Reventlow, Privy Councellor to the King of Denmark, and his Royal Highness Prince Augustus of Prussia.

An article under the Vienna date of the 20th of Aug. mentions that Prince BLUCHER was beginning torecover, and that there was reason to hope that the use of the waters of Carlsbad would be the means of restoring him to health.

A vessel in the London docks took fire from the carelessness of the boatmen, on the last of August. The flames soon spread to the adjoining warehouses, which, it is said, were soon blown up by the explosion of a bottle of phosphorus.

Singular Circumstance.—A branch of Lilach in full bloom was gathered in a garden in this city this morning. The flowers were as fresh, beautiful and fragrant as those which blossom in the Spring.—N. Y. Spectator.

A fine little boy, son of Mr. Mosly, Auctioneer, was last week thrown from a horse, by which his skull was so dreadfully fractured as to cause his death this morning. He, as other boys of this town are in the habit of doing, when sent to the fields to bring home the cows of their parents or employers, had taken a rope with him to catch one of the horses that were turned out to pasture, and so drive home the cows. It is supposed that the horse he caught, stumbled, as he was found in a state of insensibility near a bad causeway.

"RESOLVED—That it is the opinion of this House, that in order to ascertain the best plans whereon to construct the proposed works and to estimate the probable expence, a skilful Engineer should immediately be employed to make the necessary surveys, and that a joint Address be presented from both Houses to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, praying that he will be pleased to appoint a Civil Engineer for that purpose, to act in conjunction with such persons as may be appointed by the government of Lower Canada for the like duty.

From Bradbury's Travels in America.
Colter's escape from the Black foot Indians.

This man came to St. Louis in May, 1810, in a small canoe, from the head waters of the Missouri, a distance of 3000 miles, which he traversed in 80 days. I saw him on his arrival, and received from himan account of his adventuresatter he had separated from Lewis and Clark's party; one of these, from its singularity, I shall relate. On the arrival of the party at the head waters of the Missouri, Colter, observing the appearance of abundance of beaver being there got permission to remain and hunt for some time, which he did in company with a man of the name of Dixon, who had traversed the vast tract of country from St. Louis to the head waters of the Missouri alone. Soon after he separated from Dixon,and trapped in company with a hunter named Potts; and aware of the hostility of the black feet Indians, one of whom had been killed by Lewis, they set their traps at night, and took them up early in the morning, remaining concealed during the day. They were examining their traps early in the morning, in a creek, about six miles from that branch of the Missouri called Jefferson's Fork; and were ascending in a canoe, when they suddenly heard a great noise, resembling the trampling of animals; but they could not ascertain the fact, as the high perpendicular banks on each side of the river impeded their view. Colter immediately pronounced it to be occasioned by Indians, and advised instant retreat, but was accused of cowardice by Potts, who insisted that the noise was caused by buffaloes, and they proceeded on. In a few minutes afterwards their doubts were removed by a party of Indians making their appearance on both sides of the creek, to the amount of five or six hundred, who beckoned them to come ashore.

As retreat was now impossible, Colter, turned the head of the canoe to the shore, and at the moment of its touching, an Indian seized the rifle belonging to Potts; but Colter, who is a remarkably strong man, immediately retook and handed it to Potts; who remained in the canoe, and on receiving it, pushed off into the river. He had scarcely quitted the shore when an arrow was shot at him, and he cried out "Colter I am wounded" Colter remonstrated with him on the folly of attempting to escape, and urged him to come ashore. Instead of complying, he instantly levelled his rifle at an indian, and shot him dead on the spot. This conduct, situated as he was, may appear to have been an act of madness, but was doubtless the effect of sudden, but sound reasoning; for it taken alive, he must have expected to be tortured to death according to their custom. He was instantly pierced with arrows, so numerous, that, to use the language of Colter, he was made a riddle of. They now seized Colter, stripped him entirely naked, and began to consult on the manner he should be put to death. They were first inclined to set him up as a mark to shoot at, but the chief interfered, and seizing him by the shoulder, asked him if he could run fast? Colter who had been some time amongst the Kee-kat-sa, or Crew Indians, had, in a considerable degree, acquired the Blackfoot language, and was also well acquainted with Indian customs; he knew that he had to run for his life, with the dreadful odds of five or six hundred against him, and those armed Indians; therefore, cunningly replied he was a very bad runner, although he was considered by the hunters remarkably swift. The chief now commanded the party to remain stationary, and led Colter out on the prairie three or four hundred yards, and released him bidding him to save himself if he could. At that instant the horrid war hoop sounded in the ears of poor Colter who urged with the hope of preserving life, ran with a speed at which he was himself surprised. He proceeded towards the Jefferson Fork, having to traverse a plain of 6 miles in breadth, abounding with the prickly pear on which he was treading every instant with his naked feet. He ran nearly half way across the plain before he ventured to look over his shoulder, when he perceived that the Indians were very much scattered, and that he had run to a considerable distance from the main body; but one Indian, who carried a spear, was much before all the rest, and not more than a hundred yards from him.

A faint gleam of hope now cheered the heart of Colter; he derived confidence from the belief that escape was within the bounds of possibility, but the confidence was nearly fatal to him, for he exerted to such a degree, that the blood gushed from his nostrils and soon almost covered the fore part of his body. He now arrived within a mile of the river, when he distinctly heard the appalling sounds of footsteps behind him, and every instant expected to feel the spear of the pursuer. Again he turned his head and saw the savage not 20 yards from him. Determined if possible, to avoid the expected blow, he suddenly stopped, turned round, and spread out his arms. The Indian, surprised by the suddenness of the action, and perhaps at the bloody appearance of Colter, also attempted to stop, but exausted with running, he fell whilst endeavoring to throw his spear, which struck in the ground and broke in his hand. Colter instantly snatched up the pointed part and pinned him to the earth, and then continued his flight. The foremost of the Indians, on arriving at the place, stopped till others came to join them, when they set up a hideous yell. Every moment of this time was improved by Colter, who, although fainting and exhausted, succeeded in gaining the skirting of the cotton wood trees, on the borders of the Fork, through which he ran, and plunged into the river. Fortunately for him, a little below this place there was an island, against the upper point of which a raft of drift timber had lodged; he dived under the raft, and after several efforts, got his head above water amongst the trunks of trees, covered over with smaller wood to the depth of several feet. Scarcely had he secured himself, when the Indians arrived on the river, screeching and yelling, as Colter expressed it, "like so many devils." They were frequently on the raft during the day, and were seen through the chinks by Colter, who was congratulating himself on his escape, when the idea arose that they might set the raft on fire. In horrid suspense, he remained until night, when hearing no more of the Indians, he dived under the raft, and swam silently down the river to a considerable distance, when he landed and travelled all night. Although happy in his having escaped from the Indians, his situation was still dreadful; he was completely naked under a burning sun; the soles of his feet were entirely filled with the thorns of the prickly pear; he was hungry, and had no means of killing game, although he saw abundance around him, and was at least seven days' journey from Lisa's Fort, on the Bighorn branch of the Roche Jaune river. These are circumstances under which almost any man but an American hunter would have despaired. He arrived at the fort in seven days, having subsisted on a root much esteemed by the Indians of the Missouri, now known by naturalists as Psoralea esculenta.

From the Nuremburg Correspondent.

Persia.—It is asserted in England that the Cabinet of St. Petersburgh demands the Aras, or Araxes, as a frontier, and to insist that all the Persian ports in these waters shall be ceded to Russia. This extension of territory would comprehend the whole south-east of Armenia, and bring the frontier line in one place to within about fifty (German) miles of Tibreuz; whereas the Russians have at present no possession in the south of the Kuror Cyrus, but a good route for caravans is already open to them on the north of the Caspian sea to Bochara. The well calculated advances of the Russians excite the continually increasing jealousy of the British Cabinet, and the expectation of Persia, which might easily have a great influence on the relations of the empire with England—Ruhrem Khan Uzberg is encamped, with 16,000 men, on the bank of the Georgan, or Koogan, and as soon as he has completed his negociations about the hostages to be delivered to him by the Turcoman tribe, it is expected he will advance against Khorasan. The loss of the fortress of Aserabad, on the Caspian sea, which was considered in some respects as a palladium of the empire, is very sensibly felt at the Persian court.

The Persian Monarch has just taken measures respecting the politically important island of Bahrein, in the province of Oman, which shew his apprehension of its being occupied by "infidels." This island is one of the finest in the Persian Gulf, near to the Arabian coast, and covered with villages and plantations of dates. The town of Medina which together with the fort contains 900 houses, carries on a great trade with Bassorah and other ports in the gulf. The port of Medina is accessible to ships not carrying 200 tons burden, and with a good wind they can sail in 14 hours from Eueshire to Bahrein. Near the island is a bank where the finest pearls in the world are fished. They are found in small shells fastened to the bottom of the sea by a thin and very long thread, which the divers cut off. The king of Persia has strongly recommended to the Arab Shieks, and the Iman of Muscat not to allow the occupation of the island of Bahrein by the infidels, and promised powerfully to support the measures they may adopt for the purpose. A division of the Persian army has lately really besieged Herat or Herout, the capital of South Khorasan. The Governor of the city, Shah Zado Ferraguden, has applied for aid to his father, Schak Mahmud, upon which the Vizier Tuttih Khan received orders to advance with a corps by way of Candahar to the relief of Herat and he will be joined by another corps under Slack Zadu Koneue.

EXPEDITION TO THE YELLOW STONE.

On Sunday the 30th ult. a battalion of the rifle regiment, 300 strong, embarked at Belle Fontaine to ascend the Missouri River to the mouth of the Yellow Stone. The expedition is commanded by Lieut. col. Talbot Chambers. The captains Martin, Magee and Riley; the lieutenants Sinds, Clarke, Kavenaugh Fields and Francis Smith, go out with their respective companies. It is intended that the expedition shall encamp during the winter above the mouth of the Kansas; and continuing its voyage in the spring, shall reach its point of destination in the course of next summer.

The Yellow Stone enters the Missouri in latitude 48 degrees north; and in longitude 27 degrees west from Washington city. The new post will beat its mouth. The U.S. will then have a military establishment one thousand eight hundred miles west of the Mississippi, and nearly one hundred miles further north than the city of Quebec.—The officers carry with them the seeds and grains which are expected to thrive in that climate, that the peal may have within itself some resource against the failure of contractors. Wheat, rye, barley, oats, are expected to do well there. They attain perfection even at the earl of Selkirk's establishment on lake Assiniboin, three degrees further north. The Mandan corn will find itself in its own climate at the mouth of the Yellow Stone. In fact all the grains, plants and vegetables which flourish at Quebec and Montreal may be expected to be raised there, as the climate, in that interior region of the North American continent is known to be near ten degrees milder than in the same parallel on the Atlantic coast.

Our fellow citizen, Manuel Lisa, so well known for his enterprize, will precede the expedition, to prepare the Indians for its reception. He will quet their apprehensions by shewing the benevolent and humane intentions of the American government; and will silence the British emissaries who shall represent the expedition as an act of war against the Indian nations.

The establishment of this post will be an era in the history of the west. It will go to the source and root of that fatal British influence which has for so many years armed the Indian nations against our western frontiers. It carries the armsand power of the U. S. to the ground which has heretofore been exclusively occupied by the British North West and Hudson's bay companies and which has been the true seat of the British power over the Indian mind.—Now the American arms and the American policy will be displayed upon the same theatre. The North West and Hudson's Bay companies will be shut out from the commerce of the Missouri and Missisppi Indians; the American traders will penetrate in safety the recesses of the rocky mountains in search of its rich furs; a commerce yielding a million per annum will descend the Missouri; and the Indians, finding their wants supplied by American traders, their domestic wars restrained by American policy, will learn to respect the American name.

The name of the Yellow Stone river will hereafter be familiar to the American ear. That a stream of its magnitude should heretofore have been so little known is a proof of the immensity of our country. How little has it been thought that 1800 miles up the Missouri, a river was to be found equal in length and breadth to the Ohio!—Yet such is the character of the Yellow Stone or Roche Jaune as it was called by the French. One of its branches, the Big Horn issues from a lake near the peaks of the rio del Norte on the confines of New-Mexico, and is navigable for many miles. The Yellow Stone itself issues from a lake in the rocky mountains. It was descended by Capt. Clarke on his return from the Pacific Ocean. He found it deep, rapid, and navigable from the place where he struck to its mouth, a distance of 850 miles.—Below the junction of the Big Horn the the width was usually from 500 to 800 yard, and sometimes a mile. Immmerable were the herds of buffalo, and other game that ranged upon it. This abundance of game is a proof of the richness of the country. In fact the traders speak of the face of the country upon the Yellow Stone, the serenity of the climate, the rapidity and clearness of the waters in terms of admiration.

NATURAL HISTORY.

The Magney or Manti tree.—This tree yields to none in point of utility. It grows copiously in New Spain, and affords water, wine, oil, vinegar honey, syrup, thread, needles, &c. The inhabitants plant more or less of them next to every house; it grows as well in the fields, provided it has proper attendance and care. It has broad and thick leaves, with sharp points, which serves for needles, and the points torn off, there follows out of the leaf, a tough kind of hair fit for sewing. The branch is cut off when still young and tender, and a cavity being left in the tree, a liquor comes out like water, fresh and sweet; if boiled it acquires the quality of wine; in length of time, turns to vinegar, and if continued longer boiling and strained, resembles honey; but if only half boiled, it is not unlike a syrup. In short there are 19 several services which this tree, though but small, yields to the inhabitants. The leaves serve for covering their houses, and a fine yarn may be spun out of them for vestments. Out of its roots strong and thick ropes are made, and it is further remarkable, that each plant, though small (being cut off very young) produces at least 30 barrels of liquor, each containing two Spanish arobes.

WONDERFUL!

Extract of a letter dated Woodsville, Ohio July 7th, 1818, to his friend in Bolton, Con.

"In the remainder of this letter, I shall give you an account of a natural curiosity in the state of Ohio; and rest assured I shall give you nothing exaggerated. Three weeks since, Aaron B. Jones, Esq. George Jones, his brother, and myself, mounted our horses, taking with us a companion, and directed our course southwest from this place, through a pathless wilderness for 30 miles, until we arrived on the banks of Duck creek. On the north east branch of said creek, in lat. 38. degree. 89 min. we found an oil spring. This is one of the greatest curiosities in nature, it is in the form of a well. I sat myself down on the brink of it to make observations, which shall be given as nearly as I can describe with my pen. The well is about 7 feet from the edge of the creek. It has been accurately ascertained to be 42 feet deep from the surface of the ground to the bottom, and is 18 feet in diameter at the top. A piece of a large button wood tree has been hollowed out and placed for a curb on the top to prevent people from falling into it. The oil boils continually, like the boiling of a large soap kettle, and runs into the creek in a small stream. It is as fine as any sperm oil from the head of a sperm whale; the quantity which I saw is about 5 barrels a week.—I followed the creek up and down for nearly three miles, and found it completely covered with oil. I found an old ladle lying near, which I dipped into the oil and forced it down into the water, found to be three feet deep. I drew out with the ladle as fine salt water as I ever tasted in the ocean. I then tried the goodness of the oil, and found it to burn clear and bright. A boy, a few weeks since in order to ascertain whether oil would burn on water, touched a fire brand to that on the creek; instantly it was in a tremendous flame, which ascended 200 feet in the air, nearly a mile up and down the stream. I saw limbs of trees, which were nearly 100 feet high, burnt off as smooth as if the blaze of a furnace had struck them.—The smell of the oil very much resembles that of British oil."

A Lactometer or instrument to determine the value of milk.—The value of milk, as an article of lucrative produce on a farm, is determined by the quantity of cream which it is capable of producing; and as this is known to be affected by the age, health and provision upon which the animal is nourished, a simple instrument, by which the relative portion of creams produced by different animals, or by the same animal with different food, is shown, has been constructed by Mr. Jones, a mathematical instrument maker in London.

It consists of any number of glass tubes, of the same internal diameter (about 3-4ths of an inch) and each 11 inches long; these are closed at one end and open and a little flanched at the other precisely like the test tubes used in experimental chemistry, and they are mounted in stands in the same manner; at 10 inches from the bottom of each tube, a mark is made upon the glass, a zero placed against it, and from this point the tube is graduated into tenths of inches and numbered downwards for 3 inches, so that each division is two of the tube. Now if several of these are filled with new milk at the same time, and placed in the same temperature, the cake of cream will form at the top, and its thickness or quantity will be indicated by the divisions; and thus experiments may be made upon the quantities of cream produced by different animals under all circumstances, with great accuracy; and by the continual division, the per centage of cream will be evident upon inspection.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in New-York, to his correspondent in this city, dated 30th Sept. 1818:—"Government is fitting out an expedition to the Rocky Mountains and the North west Coast—It is said to be an expedition of discovery, and is to be conducted by able and scientific men attended by a military force. A steam boat is now building at Pittsburgh for this expedition, and which it is expected will be able to proceed up the Missouri to its source. It is sacer ained that there is a passage through the Rocky Mountains and at the distance of about 5 miles after you pass the mountains, a branch of the Columbia commences, running to the Pacific Ocean.—It is intended to take the steam boat to pieces at the mountains, and rebuild her in this river. The expedition is to traverse the continent by water, and to be absent about two years. It will pass the first winter on this side the Rocky Mountains."

A steam-boat race has taken place in the Chesapeake, between the Sons of Virginia and Richmond. The latter was victorious. It is said they ran about 13 miles in 1 hour and 10 minutes.

To Settlers.

THE Inhabitants of Smith's Creek have for some time past regretted the serious inconvenience suffered by the Settlers daily arriving here, on their way to the new Townships on Rice Lake, from the want of Houses for their temporary accommodations: Anxious to remove this evil, and promote as far as possible the comfort of the Settlers, a numerous and respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Hope and Hamilton was convened on the 10th instant, at Mr. James Parker's Tavern, Smith's Creek, for the purpose of taking into consideration the necessity of erecting, by public subscription, Buildings for their temporary accommodation.

James Ward, Esq. being called to the Chair, several Resolutions were entered into, purporting that buildings shall be immediately erected, capable of containing a considerable number of Families.——Thomas Ward, Esq. was then unanimously chosen President; Erasmus Fowke, Treasurer, and Dr. John Hutchison, Secretary.

The following gentlemen were then appointed a committee to carry into effect the laudable object of the meeting, viz:—D. McGregor Rogers, Esquire, Messrs. Robert J. Kerr, Alexander Mc Donnell, Jeremiah Britton, M. F. Whitehead, Adam Scott and Francis Page.—A subscription was then opened, which met with very liberal support.

Every exertion will be made to have the said buildings ready for occupation early in November.—For possession of the apartments, application must be made to one or more members of the committee.

LONDON, Aug. 22.

Grand Foot Race against Time.—Yesterday evening, at 6 o'clock, Blumsell, the painter, who a short time since beat Rayner, of high pedestrian fame, in such a finished style of excellence, on the Romford road, started from the corner of Percy-street, Tottenham court road, to go beyond the Whetstone turnpike, a distance of nine miles & a quarter, in one hour.——On both sides of the way on Tottenham court road, the crowd was immense, and the windows of every house were also filled to see the pedestrian proceed on his task; in fact, the road up to Highgate Hill, on different parts, was covered with spectators.——It was a truly arduous task, and the ease and style with which Blumsell made his way, astonished every one present. He had had no opportunity for training, as the bet was only made on Saturday last. Notwithstanding the difficulties he had to encounter of being frequently enveloped with clouds of dust, from his being surrounded with gigs, carts, horsemen, &c. he shot up Highgate Hill with all the fleetness of a deer, distancing the finest pads in spite of the exertions of the whip.—After Blumsell had ascended this steep hill, he went two miles over Finchley Common in less than 11 minutes. Unfair means were used to prevent his winning, but in spite of the interruption of a man who twice crossed him, and whom Blumsell collared and ultimately floored, he performed the above extraordinary feat in 1 minute and 12 seconds under the time.—It was, however, brought to a wrangle by the opposite party, who insisted he lost it by 2 minutes and 8 seconds. The general opinion was, that Blumsell won it, and that he is the best runner in England. It was only for the trifling sum of £5 a side, and the painter was to be recompensed for his exertions with a few shillings! His fame stood so high in the sporting world, that not a bet could be procured against him.

Death from Fright.—An inquisition was taken last night before Hugh Lewis, Esq. Coroner, at the Pine Apple, Pimlico, on the body of Mrs. Mary Ann Bandy, of No. 6, Palace-street, Pimlico.

Sarah Garner deposed, that she was servant to the deceased; she had lived with her about nine years. On Tuesday morning, about one o'clock, witness heard a violent knocking at the street door; she got out of bed and opened her chamber window, and saw two watchmen standing at the front door; they called out, "There are thieves in the house," and they wished to come in and search, to discover where they were concealed. Witness was going down stairs to let the watchmen in, and the deceased called to know what was the matter; she informed her what the watchmen had told her, and the deceased went in apparent fright to her chamber.——Witness let the watchmen in, & they searched the premises, but could not find any one, though a gentleman persisted that he had seen a man get over the railings of the area. Witness returned up stairs, and found the deceased fallen on the ground, greatly terrified; she endeavored to pacify her, but her terror was so great, that she became senseless. A surgeon was sent for; she died in three hours after. Witness believed her death was caused by excessive fright, from an idea that the thieves were in the house. Witness believed that the mind of the deceased was more affected by her having been a short time before reading in a paper the account of the murder and execution of Godalming.

Mr. Charles Edward Clark, surgeon, Pimlico, stated, that he was called to attend the deceased about four o'clock on Tuesday morning; he found her lying in the drawing room, in a senseless state; he endeavoured to stimulate her system and restore animation, but failed; she died at five o'clock same morning. The death of the deceased was probably caused by excessive terror.

The Jury then took a view of the body, and observed a blackness round the throat, and on the shoulder.

The surgeon, at their request, went and examined the body, and on his return said that the marks round the throat were caused by the ribband of her cap being tied very tight, and the blackness on her shoulder was from putrefaction.

The Jury consulted for a short time, and agreed to return the following verdict—"The death of the deceased was produced by excessive fright."

Aug. 26.

The United States frigate Guerriere sailed on Tuesday evening from Cowes, with his Excellency the Hon. Geo. W. Campbell, Minister of the Court of Russia. The fine appearance of this immense frigate, whose tonnage is 1597 tons, and length of deck 194 feet, drew on board her, during her short stay at Cowes, a large assemblage of distinguished visitors, all of whom were very courteously received by Capt. Biddlecomb and his officers. On Saturday, the Marquis of Buckingham, Earl Spencer, the Right Hon. Thomas Grenville, Admiral Lock, the Hon. Capt. Charles Paget, and several other professional gentlemen, inspected the ship; and, on the following day, the Earl of Cavan, Capt. Thos. King, (one of the Elder Brethren of the Trinity Board,) and many of the Officers of the Queen Charlotte, and other guardships at Spithead, all of whom seemed much surprised at the very high state of equipment and order discoverable in every part of the frigate. The complement of men on board the Guerriere, on her arrival in Cowes roadstead, was 460, and though much care was had in selecting proper crews for the launch and barge, in communicating with the shore, eleven men contrived to slip off undiscovered, the views and picturesque scenery of the Isle of Wight and Spithead, having been, it is said, very familiar to them.

The North Pole.—It was the Hon. Daines Barrington who, in the year 1773, proposed Capt. Phipps's expedition. Mr. Barrington, in justification of his proposal, collected a variety of documents, which were read at a meeting of the royal society in 1774.—The following is an extract from them, and the sea officer alluded to is the present venerable Major Cartwright:—

"Whilst the ships destined for the North Pole (alluding to Captain Phipps's expedition) were preparing, a most ingenious and able sea officer, Lieut. John Cartwright told me, that twelve years ago he had been informed of a very remarkable voyage made by a Captain Culhun, in a Greenland ship, nearly as far as latitude 84, N. He had proceeded without the least obstruction to 82 1-2, when the sea was not only open to the northward, but they had not seen a speck of ice for the last three degrees, and the weather at the same time was temperate. As they advanced into the high northern latitudes, the mate began to complain that the compass was unsteady, and the captain reluctantly yielded to the mate's protest, and returned to his station at Greenland."

The following was Capt. Dampier's opinion of a north-west passage:—

"I know there have been divers attempts made about a N. W. passage, & all unsuccessful; yet, I am of opinion, that such a passage may be found. All our countrymen that have gone to discover the N. W. passage have endeavored to pass to the westward, beginning their search along Davis's Straits, or Hudson's Bay; but if I was to go on this discovery, I would go first into the South Seas, bend my course thence along California, and that way seek a passage into the West Seas. For, as others have spent the summer in first searching on this more known side nearer home, and so, before they got through, the time of the year obliged them to give over their search, and provide for a long course back again, for fear of being left in the winter; on the contrary, I would search first on the less known coast of the South Sea side, and then, as the year passed away, I should come farther in my knowledge, if I succeeded in my attempt, and should be without that dread and fear which the others must have in passing from the known to the unknown, who, for aught I know, gave over their search just as they were on the point of accomplishing their desires."

We understand that steam-packets are now used in the Mediterranean, and that at Naples a beautiful packet of 240 tons, and 120 feet in length, was launched on the 24th June last, intended to sail from Naples to Palermo. The steam-engine for the above vessel was sent from hence; it has been constructed by Messrs. Hague & Tunlan, after the principles of Messrs. Bolton and Watts, of Birmingham.

In the night of the 7th a fire broke out within the gate of Odan Kapusa, which destroyed near 300 houses and a small mosque. It was the more destructive, as it caught a magazine of a dealer in powder and fire works, which caused a terrible explosion and by which near 100 persons miserably perished, and many were much injured. The house of the Mufti, which is near the spot, would certainly have been destroyed, had not the Sultan in person went to the place, and by encouraging the fire-men, (many of whom lost their lives by their exertions,) three times averted the threatening danger. The fire broke out in the house of a pastry-cook, and though there was no wind, spread with incredible rapidity.

On the 28th of June there was an affecting ceremony in the chapel of the French Embassy. Forty sailors of the French brig the Lizard, which is at anchor at Terapia, who in consequence of the Revolution had lived in infidelity and entire ignorance of Christianity, were confirmed, and partook of the Holy Communion for the first time, for which they had been prepared by the Abbe Forbin Janson.—This worthy priest has brought back, at Smyrna & other places of the Levant, many Christian born Catholics into the bosom of the Church, and by his apostolic zeal, every where spread the blessings of our holy religion.

By order of the Sultan, a Cepidgi Pacha is appointed to receive and attend the newly appointed Austrian Internuncio, Count Lutzow. It is Hadgeh Mustapha Aga, the same who was sent to meet the Persian Ambassador, who lately departed.

Accounts from Bagdad, of 25th May, speak of a new campaign of the Governor of that city against Mardin, the inhabitants of which are the Curdish tribes in the neighborhood, whose power has much increased within a year; they refuse to admit into the city the newly appointed Governor of Mardin, because he is the same who some time ago caused an insurrection in Mardin and the neighbourhood by his violence and extortion, for which reason he was deposed by the last Pacha of Bagdad.

No accounts have yet been received from Cairo to confirm the news of the successes of Ibrahim Pacha against the Wechabites, and the asserted taking of Dreheyk, their capital. The state of the health of this city has become worse within this fortnight; some cases of plague have appeared in the city, in the Greek quarter of Fanar, at Jenikaque, Galata, and even in Pera.—(Frankfort Paper, Aug. 14.)

Strange inducement to commit murder.

About three o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, a respectable looking man, about 45 years of age went into the shop of James Ripley, a barber, residing in Portland-road, and waited until he found the barber alone; he took his handkerchief from his neck, opened his shirt collar, and sat down on the chair as if to be shaved. Whilst the barber stood over him with his razor in his hand ready to begin the operation, the stranger interrupted him, and pulling out a handful of bank-notes, he thus addressed the barber:—"See these notes, there is as much as to make you comfortable for life; to me they are useless; you have a family to provide for, I have no person living to look to, or that cares for me; do not be alarmed at what I am going to propose to you, you run no danger, and will have nothing to account for; I am weary of life, and do not wish to commit suicide, and if my body be buried in the cross road I do not care; take your razor, be not afraid, and whilst I am reading the paper, cut my throat; do not start, give the alarm and say I did it; here, first go and conceal those notes, do not tremble, be resolute; to save you from blame go get me a sheet of paper, pen and ink, as if I wanted to write a letter, and I will write on it, that I came into your shop with the determined purpose of cutting my own throat, this will be found in my pocket, and consequently clear you." The poor barber was panic struck, and could not speak, he ran out to call a constable, and give the alarm; in the mean time his strange visitor departed, and he has not since been heard of.

LONDON, Aug. 29, evening.

A supplement to the London Gazette was published last night, containing further accounts of the military operations in India. They furnish the details of the reduction of several forts including the attack and storming of the fortress of Talnier. On this occasion Major Gordon & Captain M'Gregor were killed, and Lieut. Col. Murray, deputy adjutant general, was desperately wounded, but sanguine hopes were entertained of his recovery. The garrison, consisting of 300 Arabs, were treated as rebels, and put to the sword.

The Anti Pirate Institution, established at Paris, of which Sir Sidney Smith was the President, has been dissolved, the object of the association been accomplished. Previous to their dissolution, they announced, that the new Dey of Algiers has set at liberty the European women and girls who were carried off by Ali-Hodgia, and that he had paid considerable sum to the sufferers.—That the Dey was disarming all the corsairs, with the avowed determination not to allow any to go to sea this year."

FRANKFORT.

The following is an account of the origin and progress of the troubles which have disorganized the beautiful university of Gottingen;

A student having been very much maltreated in a quarrel with a butcher, applied to the vice-rector of the university to obtain justice, who referred him to the police magistrates—but not being able to obtain from them the satisfaction to which he thought himself entitled, the whole of the students became irritated and adopted the resolution of doing themselves justice in their own way. In the evening they assembled en masse, and armed, before the butcher's house, which they forced with dreadful cries, and in the first moment of effervescence committed the greatest excess. The roof was completely knocked off, the windows and furniture broke to atoms—no one dared to oppose this outrage of fiery and headstrong youth.—The magistrates dispatched expresses to Hanover for directions how to act, at the same time requested military aid. A commissary of government repaired in all haste to Gottingen with some troops; and on his arrival he issued orders, that the leaders of those who had committed the outrage on the butcher's house should be delivered up to him.—He also published a proclamation, ordering, that any assemblage of students in the streets or squares amounting to four should be dispersed by military force; and generally, that all persons assembling in a riotous manner should be punished.

Gottingen presented at that moment the appearance of a town besieged; the armed force consisting of hussars and infantry passed the night under arms, the former incessantly patrolling with their naked sabres, and the latter posted at every street with fixed bayonets.

The students refused to give up their leaders, and notwithstanding the proclamation, they formed several assemblages. The Hussars in preparing to disperse them were insulted, which led to individual combats. At length the numerous students, animated by the corporation spirit, regarding the cause as common to the whole, determined on resistance.

They accordingly assembled under arms in order to repel force by force. Recourse was now had to entreaty; the officers remonstrated with the students—summoned them to disperse—but they were deaf to entreaty; and at length it was resolved to resort to force. The Hussars received orders to put them to the sword—they charged, and several of the students were trampled down & others wounded. But they opposed a vigorous resistance, and sold their lives dearly.—Two Hussars were killed on the spot, and several others wounded, and the students would have prevailed but for the arrival of the infantry. The next day the whole of the scholars left the city. Great numbers of them have gone to Frankfort, whence they will proceed to Heidelberg, Tubengen or Wurtzburg, where they will continue their studies. This affair has been very unfortunate to Gottingen.

PHILOSOPHICAL AND LITERARY INTELLIGENCE.

Important Discovery in magnetism.—A very important discovery in regard to magnetism has lately been made at Rome, by professor Morrichini, who has ascertained that needles may be magnetized by being exposed to the violent rays of the prism thrown upon them by means of a condensing lens, equally well as by an artificial magnet or a natural loadstone. The marquis Ridolfi has repeated the same experiment with success, having powerfully magnetized two needles, the one in 30 the other in 45 minutes. One remarkable circumstance attends this mode of magnetizing needles; which is, that if one extremity of the needle be round or blunt, while the other extremity is sharp, when made to vibrate on a pivot, the point turns constantly to the north, and the blunt end towards the south. This fact also in a manner explains a circumstance which has been frequently observed by mariners; that if a compass be long exposed to the solar rays in a hot day, the needle will not traverse well. A needle magnetized by the solar rays, has been sent by the marquis Ridolfi to a friend in London, which is found to traverse remarkably well.

Decomposition of Opium.—A German chemist has succeeded in decomposing Opium. The active principle which he has isolated, he has called morphine. This principle combined with a peculiar acid, which he calls meconic, forms opium. The morpheine is strongly alkaline, and chrystalizes in prisms. It is white, little soluble in water, soluble in alcohol, particularly when heated. It forms simple and Triest salts—decomposes metallic oxyds, &c. Three grains of morpheine given internally, are equal to ten drops of laudanum.—The name of the chemist who has made this discovery, is Serturner.

The Comet of 1811.—Our readers may recollect that the public were much amused at the period of the appearance of this comet, by the various attempts which were made to calculate the length of its tail. A German astronomer of the name of Schroeter, has lately published a memoir upon this subject. It results from his calculations that the tail of that comet was 13,185,200 geographical miles, being a little more than half the distance of the earth from the sun. Professor Schroeter explains the extraordinary extent, by supposing there exists around the sun to a great distance from it, a subtle matter susceptible of becoming luminous by the combined influence of the sun and the comet, and which is not uniformly distributed in those vast regions. The author seems also inclined to adopt the idea, from the appearance of the comets of 1807 and '11, that, independent of an attractive force possessed by comets considered as matter, they are gifted with a repulsive and impulsive force, greatly analogous to our electric force, and which are put into action according to the mass and physical properties of the globes on which they are exerted, sometimes in one, and at other times in quite an opposite direction.

From the National Intelligencer.

On this day four weeks commences the second session of the Fifteenth Congress, which must terminate on the 4th day of March next ensuing, embracing a term of nearly fifteen weeks.

Though no extraordinary occurrences at home or abroad await the decisions of Congress; though peace prevails with all the world, and in all human probability no war is at hand; though our revenue is abundant, and no taxes are to be laid; though the circumstances of the nation are prosperous beyond example, and no grievances are to be redressed; it is impossible to look without interest to the assemblage of the National Representatives on the coming, or indeed on any occasion without deep interest. The powers and energies of the government are in their hands; and though no emergency call them into activity, they are useful even in repose.

We shall not pretend to enumerate the various objects of legislation which will present themselves. The unfinished business of the last session alone would be sufficient to occupy much of the time of that which approaches; and if we add the annual bills of appropriation, &c. which must be passed, there will remain little time for the organization of new projects. Many such, however, will doubtless be presented. Propositions which have been discussed at former sessions, and rejected, will in all likelihood be revived. Among these are the highly important questions respecting internal improvement; respecting an uniform system of bankruptcy; respecting the commutation of soldier's bounty lands; the Military academies; the Invalid Corps, and all the et-tetera of provision for the past, and preparation for the future—amongst which we trust will not be overlooked, or again rejected the proposition for indemnifying, out of our full treasury, those who lost their all during the late war, by the destruction of their property, in consequence of its having been engaged in the service of the U. States.

We have no doubt that, among the new subjects of discussion at the present session, will be, in one shape or other, the merits of the Bank of the U. States. It is not likely that what has occupied so much public attention, will escape the notice of Congress; though it does not appear probable to us that any thing will be found requiring their intervention. Connected with this question, perhaps some discussion may take place on the practicability of adjusting the exchange between different sections of the country, by means of a Government paper. We incline to believe, however, that this subject will not present itself to Congress, as some seem to have supposed it might, in the shape of a direct proposition.

The late laws respecting the collection of the revenue having been in operation long enough to test their utility, and try the advantages and defects of the system, it is not improbable some amendments may be made to them.——There is a very general impression that the laws for preventing the importation of slaves require amendment; and we hope they will receive it if they do.

There is every probability that at the next session, two of the present territories of the United States, Missouri and Alabama, will be authorized to form constitutions of state government, preparatory to their admission into the Union. They are said to have the requisite numbers; and sound policy, recommends that, as soon as possible, they shall be allowed to govern themselves.——The territorial governments are always excrescences on our system.

Of those matters which are connected with the foreign policy of the United States, we cannot without the necessary materials on which to form an opinion, speak with any certainty. Every thing we hear, however, leads us to hope that the state of foreign relations, is generally satisfactory, and, where it is least so, is likely to improve.

To the Message of the President at the opening of the session, however, we must look for information of the utmost interest on this head, and on many others. That document will probably disclose, for example, the nature and aspect of our commercial negotiations with Great Britain; the state of our relations with Spain; the report of our Commissioners lately returned from Buenos Ayres, and the view of the Executive thereon, &c. Much is also to be communicated respecting the progress and termination of the Seminole war; respecting the progress of the Commissioners under the treaty of Ghent; respecting the progress of the exploration of our western territory, and of the establishment of posts on that frontier, and respecting other prudential measures, which have entered largely into the policy of the present administration.

But it is not on extraordinary occasions only that the powers of the government are to be exercised. There are ever wanting subjects which call for legislative interposition, though involving none of the higher attributes of sovereignty—subjects deeply interesting to one section or other of the community, if not to all. Upon the whole, we expect an animated and useful session, characterized rather by efficient action than by prolonged debate.

It is scarcely necessary to add, that the same members partake of the deliberation of Congress at the next session as did at the last; the new elections, which we are daily announcing not taking effect till the fourth day of March next, on which day commences the term of service of the Sixteenth Congress.

The Minister of Holland, Viscount De Quebeck, has arrived at the seat of government.

Statue of Memnon.

A London paper of August 21st, says, "The statue of Memnon, sent from Egypt by Mr. Salte as a present to the British Museum, now lies in the Museum yard, and consists of one solid block of granite, weighing about nine tons. The face is in high preservation, and remarkably expressive. The same ship also brought a present of antiquities from the Bey of Tripoli to the Prince Regent, consisting of columns, cornices, chapters, &c. found at Lobdia. The columns are mostly of one solid piece, one weighing near fifteen tons, and being 22 feet in length. They were selected by Capt. W. H. Smyth, of the royal navy, in which he was assisted by the British Consul at Tripoli."

American Banks.—It is said, that there are no less than 375 Chartered Banks in the United States, and 8 in operation without Charters. Of the 375 chartered Banks, 38 are in Massachusetts; 15 in Rhode Island; 42 in the State of New York; 50 in Pennsylvania; 25 in Maryland; 15 in the District of Columbia; 28 in Ohio; 43 in Kentucky; & 17 in Virginia.—*N. Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Elbing, in Prussia, to his friend in Winchester, Vir. dated 20th July, 1818.

On the 25th inst. we expected the king here on his return from Russia to Berlin, from whence he will proceed to Achen. The military system, which is at present gradually introducing into this country, will show you that Prussia can bring into the field, at a short notice, a well disciplined army. Every man under 32 is subject to these laws, and must bear arms on the following conditions: First, Those who are wealthy enough to equip and maintain themselves for a twelve month, may enter at their 17th or 19th year into the regiments of the line for that period; but those who cannot afford these expenses must join the army at 20, and serve three years: Secondly, From the age of 25 to 32 all persons are subject to the Landwehr (militia.) The duty of these latter troops consist merely in being trained every other Sunday, during the summer, and in the spring and fall to pass through a review in the field which continues about two weeks—the Jews are not exempted, and are making very good soldiers.

Extensive Farming.—The Herald published at Frederick-Town, in Maryland, mentions, that in the course of the present month, a gentleman of that vicinity sold his crop of wheat for the present year, for the sum of nine thousand one hundred and twenty dollars. It is also added, that the same gentleman will make this season from twenty to thirty hogsheads of prime tobacco, which now sells in Baltimore at from 23 to 24 dollars per cwt.—Ib.

A valuable bed of plaister has lately been discovered within a few miles of Cleaveland, Ohio—It is said to be equal in quality to any in the known world.—Fredonia Gaz.

The Gas Lights of London.—An account of the lighting of the London-streets by gas lights, has been published by a M. Schweiger. It appears from this author, that from 19 to 20,000 lamps burn with a brilliant light with carburetted hydrogen gas, in many of the best streets of London, and that the length of the subterraneous tubes which convey the gas, amounts actually to 65 English miles; but a small part of the metropolis is yet lighted by this means.

QUEBEC, 22d OCTOBER, 1818.

The first Cattle-Show Exhibition and Ploughing Match of the Quebec Agricultural Society was held on the Plains of Abraham, according to the Advertisement of the 5th May last, on Tuesday and Wednesday the 21st and 22d instant.

Committee appointed to manage the affairs of the Society met, each day, at the Grand Jury Room in the Court House, and proceeded to the Ground at ten o'clock, where, after inspecting the Cattle and other articles exhibited, witnessing the Ploughing Match and examining the work, they awarded the different Premiums, which were paid on the spot in gold and silver by the Treasurer.

We forbear to publish the names of the persons who gained the Prizes, and the objects for which they were awarded, till we can obtain an official account of them.

The concourse of Spectators and the show of Cattle was greater than could be expected, in a country where Agriculture has been so much neglected, and where every thing new, in the way of improvement, is commonly regarded with indifference, or mistrust; where ignorance or a false and contemptible pride frequently look with disdain, on the useful occupations, to which civilized society is indebted for its existence and support. On this occasion, several of the principal Gentlemen of the City, and many of the greatest Landholders attended the Meeting, and seemed to take a lively interest in the success of its object.

The Show of Horses and Bulls was small, the latter indifferent. That of Mares and Milch Cows was more numerous and of better quality. Few Sheep were on the ground, and those not of the best breeds. The show of Hogs was better. An evident improvement in the breed of these animals, the flesh of which is so much used in this country, is taking place in the vicinity of Quebec, and will soon spread over the country.

Several Gentlemen brought forward some fine samples of Grain, Beans, Peas, Turnips, Potatoes and Garden Stuffs, many of which would have done credit to any country. A remarkable fine sample of Hemp from the German Settlement at La Beauce, was produced, and also a sample of Fall Wheat, from the New Settlement on the Jacques Cartier.

A hand Threshing Machine, Fanners, Drill Ploughs and Harrows, common Harrows, Turnip Barrows, for sowing Turnip and other small seeds in drill, and several other Agricultural implements, were produced, and obtained the approbation of the Committee.

Eleven Ploughs were entered for the Ploughing Match, but, owing probably to the badness of the weather, and an idea of postponement, (a practice never permitted at Agricultural Meetings) only nine started. Each ploughed two ridges, of 12 French feet each, in width, and 300 in length; the depth and width of the furrow at the option of the ploughman, and no limitation as to time, of which a regular account was however kept. There were Ploughs of the most approved make, both in England and Scotland, and in this country. The greatest part of them, however, as well as the Ploughmen, were from the South of Scotland. Six of the Ploughs had only two horses and no driver. There were two with a yoke of oxen, a ploughman and a driver, and one of the old wheeled Ploughs of the country, with two yoke of oxen and a horse, and one driver.

The first prize was adjudged to an Iron Plough of Wilkie's,* of Uddingstone, near Glasgow, drawn by two horses without a driver. The ploughing in general, was but tolerable, but sufficient to convince almost every person in the field, of the great improvement and saving of labour that may be effected in this country, in ploughing, an art upon which so materially depends the saving of the seed, the produce of the crop, and the destruction of weeds.

Upon the whole it is hoped that these meetings will be continued and extended throughout the country. There can be little doubt of their proving a most efficient means of improving its agriculture and resources. They will always be a source of gratification and rational amusement to every lover of his country. As Fairs, for the buying and selling of stock, and produce, by samples, and being generally resorted to, they would afford the best and most natural stimulus to improvement, a ready sale, and the highest price for the best articles.

*This man affords a strong proof of the advantages resulting from the education of agricultural labourers, and the public encouragement of agriculture. He was himself a common ploughman; he ploughed at matches, disliked the ploughs and other agricultural implements commonly in use, and set about making them to his own liking. His instruments came into such repute, that he followed making them as a trade. He is now a man of large property, respected by every body; as he is truly respectable, still working at his business, and only complaining that he cannot supply the demand for his articles. The genius of this humble ploughman, aided by a common education, and called into exertion by a discerning public, has perhaps done more to promote the real welfare of his country, than the proudest and most wealthy man in it.

MONTREAL, Oct. 31.

The money granted last year by the Legislature for the improvement of the Internal Communication, has, we are glad to hear, been generally laid out in a manner that will more than answer the most sanguine expectations of those who first brought forward that patriotic measure; in no quarter however, has the grant been expended to better advantage than the money appropriated to the county of York, for which Fas. Papineau, P. Wilson and J. B. Fassi, Esquires, were Commissioners. These gentlemen have made Eighty Seven miles of excellent road on the Grand River, from Chatham to Hull, which opens the land communication of large and valuable parts of the two provinces with this market—districts of the most valuable country which were hitherto much retarded in their increase of settlement, through the difficulty of procuring the essential necessaries required. Too much praise cannot be bestowed on the two first named commissioners for their attention and judgment in the appropriation of the funds granted them; they have perhaps done more with the money than was ever done before in this country with an equal sum. Mr. Wright or one of his sons, has constantly attended on the upper part of this road, and Mr. Papineau, who had long since declined any interference in public affairs, zealously entered into the spirit of this affair, (to which there is no pay affixed,) and it is said, deprived himself of the comforts of life, living with his workmen in temporary cabins made on the spot, in order that the comparative small fund at their disposal should be appropriated to the best advantage of the public.—In addition to the advantages of communication which this road opens with the extent of country bordering on the Ottawa, a Steam-Boat is now building at Prescott intended next season to ply between La Chine and St. Andrews; another is proposed next year to be built by Mr. P. Wright, for the purpose of running above the Long-Sault on that river, to Hull. Great improvements have been made and are still making in the raft and boat channels of this river, by blasting the rocks and removing other obstructions; and Stores are building at the head and foot of the Long Sault for the convenience of storing and forwarding Goods.

Captain T. W. Mann, of the Royal Staff Corps, has lately returned from the Ottawa river, where he was to take the soundings and level of the Long Sault, in order to report the practicability of establishing locks, and the number necessary.

Agricultural Societies on the model of those so eminently useful in Europe, are now forming in all parts of this immense Continent; at the Cattle and other shows in some places in the U. States, we observe that instead of money it is more general to give as premiums articles of family plate, such for example as a set of spoons, milk pot, &c. we consider this infinitely the better mode, it stimulates the female department as well as the farmer, to attain excellence, and continues a constant memento, in the family, of the reward which may be expected from an attention to the improvement of their stock.

From the Montreal Herald.

We are happy to learn, that a Mill for Dressing Flax and Hemp, has been erected on a Farm belonging to Archibald and Robert Frazer, in the Glengary Settlement, near William-town, Upper Canada. This affords another proof of the increasing prosperity of our country; the aid of machinery being always employed to save the expence of labour, in countries the furthest advanced in improvement. It will also, we trust, encourage the cultivation of those valuable productions, flax and hemp, and lessen the price to the consumer, the most expensive part of their preparation being occasioned by the present tedious method of dressing them.

After a few unpleasant days with some rain and snow, accompanied with two nights frost, for the last week the weather had been uncommonly favourable for the season. And the farmers have had an opportunity of securing the remainder of their crops with great facility. The slight frost put them upon the alert, and by increasing the activity, we understand they have been fortunate enough to get almost all their potatoes up, which proves to be far more abundant than was expected. In this town they can be purchased for one shilling per bushel, and families are laying in their winter stock at that price.—On a Farm in the vicinity of Laprairie, under the management of Mr. J. Pearson, there was raised in one field, measuring 5 1-2 acres, 2000 bushels of potatoes of an excellent quality; we have seen six of them whose united weights amounted to 15 pounds.

TRIAL AT BAR.

On Tuesday last, the 10th instant, being the second Tuesday in Michaelmas Term, was tried at Bar before the three Judges an Ejectment Cause, in which the Hon. William Dickson was Lessor of the Plaintiff, and Daniel Pennfield, Defendant, to determine the right to 20,000 acres of land, forming the township of Dumfries, in the District of Gore. The cause, from the great value of the property in litigation, excited much public interest, and the trial, which occupied the Court from 10 o'clock on Tuesday morning to 4 o'clock the next morning, without intermission, was numerously attended.

The question turned entirely upon the validity of a Deed said to have been executed by one Philip Stedman, the original Grantee of the Crown, in his lifetime, (in the year 1798) to one Charles Whitney, through whom the present Defendant, Daniel Pennfield, claimed. Mr. Dickson on the other hand deriving title through the heir at law of Mr Stedman—who he maintained died seized, and never did convey the property to Charles Whitney or to any one.

The Defendant produced this Deed, and the Plaintiff brought before the Jury a variety of evidence, both direct and circumstantial, which proved to the full conviction of every one that this Deed from Stedman to Whitney had been forged by a sett of swindlers, two years after Stedman's death.

The Court at 4 o'clock on Wednesday morning, adjourned to 12—when the Jury, which was a special one from the District of Gore, brought in a verdict for the Plaintiff—This adverse title therefore, being established to be grounded on a forgery, there is no longer a question who is the proprietor of this immense property; and it may be considered beneficial to the public as well as the individual concerned, that the matter is at length decided.

We were requested by Mr. Pennfield, junr. to state that he felt it his duty to wait on the Attorney General, who conducted the cause for the Plaintiff in the above suit, to thank him for the handsome manner in which he acquitted his father of being concerned in the forgery.

A Meeting of the Inhabitants of the township of Hamilton, in the New-Castle District, took place on Wednesday, the 11th November, at the village of Amherst, agreeable to placards distributed by Mr. Gourlay for that purpose; about fifty very respectable people attended; Mr. Gourlay addressed them at a very great length, which was replied to, by Mr. Fothergill, in a very able and animated speech; Mr. Gourlay's petition was rejected, and the following Resolutions adopted in their stead.

Resolved—That we the Inhabitants of the township of Hamilton, having assembled pursuant to a Public Notice, observe with extreme pain, that Mr. Gourlay's plan and proceedings for addressing the Lt. Governor and House of Assembly, are entirely dissonant with the principle of a Country, enjoying sacred privileges we have to boast of, untarnished by a single grievance.

Resolved—That we totally discountenance any attempt of Mr. Gourlay, to excite indignation against the Lieut. Governor of this Province or our Representatives now in Parliament assembled.

Resolved—That although we claim the undoubted right of Petitioning, we oppose the measure of Petitioning for a dissolution of the House of Assembly, it being dictated through a private, malicious and turbulent spirit, with a view to bring into disrepute our loyal Representatives, and to organize discontent and commotion, among his Majesty's subjects in Upper-Canada.

[Nearly sixty signatures are subscribed to the above Resolutions, which may be seen at this Office.]

Similar Resolutions have been forwarded from the Township of Hope, with a number of signatures, and a note is written at the back, saying that if there had been time before the closing of the Mail, the whole of the inhabitants (with very few exceptions) of the township would have signed.

The Communication signed "CIVIS," came too late for insertion this week, but shall be attended to in our next.—Had it however been written in a plainer and more legible manner, it could probably have appeared in this Gazette. Correspondents can hardly be aware of the great additional trouble they give when their communications are written in a careless slovenly manner, and without proper punctuation, or they would take a little more pains.

THE Managers of the YORK ASSEMBLIES, for the last Season, request a Meeting of the gentlemen of the Town and the officers of the Garrison, on Saturday, the 21st inst. at 12 o'clock, at the WATERLOO HOTEL, to make arrangements for the present Season.

LAND COUNCIL.

STEAM-BOAT.

CERTAIN propositions having been submitted to the undersigned, to join in the construction of a Steam-Boat, intended to navigate between the Upper parts of Lake Ontario and Prescott, being of the burden of 500 tons, and calculated to carry 2000 Barrel bulk, of produce; and the said propositions holding out results of importance to the Commerce of Upper Canada.—NOTICE is hereby given to all persons in the Home District, who may be desirous of supporting such a measure, that a Meeting will be held at FOREST'S Hotel, in the town of York, on Saturday the 26th instant, for the purpose of taking the same into general and further consideration.

Extraordinary Phenomenon.——The following is related in "Colonel Johnson's overland journey from India," just published. It was witnessed by the travellers towards the border of Persia.

"Towards six in the morning, a very cold wind had set in from N. W. occasioning fogs in particular places along the valleys, rising only a few yards above the wet ground, on account of the cold air, which condensed them. On coming to a height which overlooked those vapours, we saw one of them in what appeared a deep chasm or valley before us, into which the road led. Beyond the valley, we observed above the fog the tops of high mountains, crowned with rocky precipices, which seemed at no great distance, and therefore proportionably steep. We were aware that we had a koteul or pass to go over, and had been told that Auxhund was at the top of it, on the other side. As we were still, by our reckoning, ten miles from that place, we dreaded the labour of crossing from the chasm below such a precipitous and extensive chain of mountains. On descending slowly towards the fog, I perceived a dark object in it which resembled a distant village; but as we advanced, it soon changed its aspect, and assumed that of a long avenue of trees, which seemed to open out as we approached. My friend and I were both expressing our surprise at finding an avenue of fine trees on a desert where we did not expect to see a village, and on which we had hitherto proceeded four miles without observing any trees, when in a few minutes we found that the view had been illusory, and that the nearest object, in what had seemed the avenue, had the appearance of camels, with light burdens, on one of which we remarked a man mounted. Afterwards, as they cleared the fog, they proved as we now thought, to be mules laden with bags of Grain, & men and boys walking with them. We passed on through the fog, which was very thick, and for a time lost the high road. The wind soon blew off the vapour, and the sun shone very bright, when to our astonishment this fancied range of mountains was found to be only a bank before us of forty or fifty feet high, over which the road proceeded. We at first concluded that the lofty ridge of mountains we had observed from the eminence was intercepted from view; but no such range existed within twenty miles of us. The bank was crowned with rocky masses, which, seen through the fog, had occasioned these successive illusions. This series of fallacious appearances produced an indescribable effect on the mind, and might, to an oriental fancy, have suggested the idea of magic."

To the Editor of the British Press.

——————Ah, woe is me;
To have seen what I have seen—seeing what I see!

Mr. Editor—Some thirty years have elapsed since I left, for a foreign clime, my native country, then not improperly styled "Old England." I returned, a few months since, and to my unspeakable regret, found every thing changed —new Ministers, new measures, new manners, new maxims. Indeed, so extensive are the innovations, that my country may now be aptly denominated, "New England." When I went abroad, my countrymen were a peacable smoking, porter-drinking, beef-eating, bell-ringing race. They are now wholly metamorphosed. Inoculated with a military mania, their former quiet habits are quite forgotten——and nothing pleases them, in the decoration of their houses and persons, in their phraseology, in their reading, and even in the production of their dramatic entertainments, that has not some reference to "the trade of arms." The fact I shall now proceed to prove.

In walking through the town, I perceive that the solid blocks of wood or stone, which were formerly placed at the corners of streets, have been removed; and, in their room, masses of cast iron, in the shape of cannon, have been substituted.

The railings by which the front of their houses are secured, have assumed the forms of pikes, spears, and halberts.

The ladies, instead of ordinary brooches, representing a flower, or some other emblem of their purity and innocence, wear in their bosoms miniature daggers and sabres. Nay, I have seen some of them sport a small musket and bayonet.

There is not an apprentice about town, who does not sally forth, every evening, in a military great-coat and Wellingtons; and I verily believe, that the steps worn by those non-descripts, the Dandies, are meant as an humble imitation of the armour by which the French cuirassiers were protected.

The newspapers, which ought to correct, I am ashamed to say, countenance and encourage this vicious and unnatural propensity. I frequently see the light column headed with "Fashionable Movements;" and, but a few days since, a paragraph appeared in most of the journals, announcing, "that the marriage of the Duke of Cambridge's establishment had been sent forward to the Continent, under the protection of an advanced guard, composed of his royal highness's most trusty domestics."

In conversation, the same error prevails.—Professional bodies are no longer spoken of as they formerly were.—Physicians are denominated, "the Corps of Sappers and Miners," I suppose in allusion to the facility with which they cut and slash all before them—Lawyers, "the Corps of Reflemen"—Publicans, "the Corps of Sutlers," and so on, ad infinitum. Again, we are constantly reminded of "the Corps Diplomatique" and "the Corps Dramatique," and when the Theatre is about to be opened for the season, we are quaintly informed that "General ——, having received powerful reinforcements, is about to commence the campaign, with great vigour."

Even in the most private and domestic circles the same language is heard; and I have listened with astonishment, when a female friend of mine has declared, not that she would scold her servant for improper conduct, but that she would, in the first instance "blow her up," and then "compel her to make her retreat, without bag & baggage, for in her house she should not pitch her tent another night."

The stage has also become infected.—Those pieces only succeed in which there are half-a-dozen battles—charges of horse and foot—firing of castles—and frequent discharges of musketry. This is the only fire I could perceive in the dramas I have recently witnessed—and, being rather asthmatic, the smoke in which they terminated, affected me infinitely more than the incidents which they comprised.

The composers of music, of course, find it necessary to follow the fashion. They have discarded melody and harmony from their works, and he is considered the cleverest genius, who can produce the greatest noise.—Hence, the trumpet, drum, trombone, serpent, bassoon, and every other species of warlike instrument, are constantly in requisition—while those of greater sweetness, but less power, are almost wholly neglected.

But this is not the worst of the evil. The same spirit pervades the senate, the pulpit, and the bar.——Judge of my astonishment, when I heard the great pacificator of Europe, Lord Castlereagh, in answering the speech of one of his opponents in the House of Commons, declare, "that he would bring the heavy artillery of his argument to bear on the fundamental features of the Hon. Gentleman's speech, to which he doubted not he would speedily make a practicable breach, well fortified as the Hon. Gentleman supposed it to be, and powerfully protected as it certainly was, by the cross-fire of the subsidiary forces that had lately enlisted under the Hon. Gentleman's banners." Very recently, I heard a sermon preached by a most popular clergyman, whose phrases were only worthy of a disciple of the Church Militant: "Heaven," he asserted, "could only be taken by storm, and therefore it was that he sounded the trumpet of faith, in order to inspirit those faint-hearted soldiers, who were too timid to rush boldly into action." With respect to the bar, this language is carried to a still greater extent—and a case of trespass, or assault and battery, is usually opened with as many military terms as are to be found in an Extraordinary Gazette.

To me Mr. Editor, who wish my country well—who am anxious to see the manners of peace, adopted in a period of peace—these circumstances are not a little alarming—We all know that, by constantly conversing about vice, and thus making ourselves familiar with its details, the mind, by degrees, ceases to hold it in that abhorrence which it deserves—and I am much afraid, unless the evil be immediately checked, that this fondness for military parade, and military foppery, which appear alike to influence the Prince and the peasant—the tradesman who has belonged to a volunteer Corps, and the farmer's labourer, who has served in the Local Militia—will tend to estrange the public mind from those pursuits most congenial with our habits, the tranquil pursuits connected with the extension of commerce and manufactures. Trusting that you will do all that lies in your power to introduce a peace establishment amongst every rank of the community,

I remain, yours, obediently,
OLD TIMES.

OF TURKEY.

The war which existed between Russia and Turkey was terminated by the approach of Bonaparte to the Russian dominions, a visit demanding all the resources and energies of that great empire to prevent; and although the French minister at the Porte used every exertion to prevent the conclusion of that war, such was the alarm of the divan at the probable result, that they terminated the difference upon the first proposition of the Russian government. The conquest of Turkey in Europe has been too long a desideratum with the Russians to abandon it altogether. It is a necessary conquest, deeply connected with their commercial prosperity, and will compensate for the deficiency of those resources in the most inhospitable regions of that extensive country. The appetite of the Russians for more genial climes has been whetted by their visits and residence in France; and the Cossacks of the Don and Volga will quit with regret the plains of Burgundy and Champaign—and no service will be performed with so much zeal as in those fine climates of the south, where the wines of Nicosia and Scio, the oil of Gallipoli, and the fruits in the Archipelago, will form an agreeable contrast to the rude fare of Smolensk and Tobolskow.

The army of observation is about to be withdrawn from France, and Russia will have in her own territory a powerful, experienced and well organized force who are not disposed to turn "stern alarms" to "merry meeting," and whose rough habits and iron visages are not exactly calculated to "caper nimbly in a lady's chamber, to the lascivious pleasings of a lute." Russia must continue in arms, and the daring and darling purposes of Catharine, in relation to Turkey, will be consummated by the vigilant and the clever grandson. Accordingly, the Russian cabinet has been feeling its way already, and a note has been addressed by the Russian ambassador at Constantinople, recapitulating former grievances, and claiming jurisdiction over the provinces of Moldavia and Wallachia. This is reviving the dispute on mild grounds.

We are not certain that these two provinces were to be held by Russia, on the termination of the war; but if the Danube was to be the boundary, and we believe it was, Moldavia and Wallachia, of right appertain to the Russians. This, however, will form the basis of new disputes, which, if the Turks have policy, they will not permit to increase, and surrender the provinces forthwith—for if the negociation is spun to any length, it will be so entangled by the Russians as to render war inevitable.

The emperor has been visiting his districts on the Black Sea, and has given orders for additional works of defence; and however strong the reliance may be on his pacific policy—however ardent the hopes of Europe may be in the continuation of peace, he will make it appear that a war with Turkey will not affect the general tranquility, or injure the prospects of the christian powers. England will protest, and that loudly, against such measures; but it will be very questionable whether an alliance can be formed to check such views. Russia has not been unmindful of prospective arrangements. Prussia, a friendship and the ties of interest will combine to keep neutral. Holland is allied by marriage, and the intermediate powers, Denmark and Sweden, are too weak to have their remonstrances regarded, and, in fact, are not deeply interested in the question at issue.

The prime minister of France, the duke de Richelieu, is interested deeply in the success of Russia in that quarter, and Austria and Great Britain will be the only protesting powers; the one is too poor to act, the other is worn out in rendering services to others without producing a corresponding effect. Whatever speculations may be hazarded on the subject, it is very evident that the great military power of Russia cannot long remain idle, and, if employed, it will be against their natural enemy, the Turks. This country would be benefitted by the conquest of Turkey—we shall have the commerce of the Black Sea thrown open to us without limitation or embarrassment, and derive many advantages which we do not at present enjoy in consequence of the anti-commercial spirit and policy of the Turks.

From the Boston Palladium.

More of the Wonderful!—I received the last week the following communication from a gentleman residing in Dorchester, whose judgment was not likely to deceive him, and whose opportunities for observation have been very extensive. His whole family can attest to the fact, and the peculiar circumstances by which it was accompanied. It may gratify your readers to become acquainted with occurrences so singular of an insect so diminutive.

A SUBSCRIBER.

Cambridge, Oct. 16, 1815.
Dorchester, Oct. 24, 1815.

"Observing in the papers an article respecting the remarkable tenacity of the spider's web, I am induced to relate to you a fact which occurred at this place in July last, which may give you some idea of its extraordinary strength.

"Having been informed by one of several carpenters (Mr Jacobs) employed in the Barn, that he had discovered something extremely curious in the Cellar, I followed him to the spot, where I observed a Snake about ten inches long suspended by the head in the air, without any apparent means of support. On closer investigation, however we perceived a single thread to which he was attached, and which we traced to a spider's web on the wall three feet from the ground. The snake was of the species called the House adder, and struggled violently at our approach; when the spider which was not so large as a common fly, regardless of our presence, descended with rapidity from his covert, twined itself round the adder's neck, and mounted again with the same celerity.—The thread by which the adder was hung did not communicate directly with the web, but ascended perpendicularly till it met a second thread, extending from the web to the ground at an angle of about 50 degrees, thus affording a kind of pully by which the spider could elevate his enemy the more easily, and and likewise prevent his touching the wall.—I visited the spot frequently in the course of the day, and almost invariably observed the spider seemed to regulate his prey more secure, and which by evening it had elevated more than one foot from ground.

"The next morning I observed with surprize that the adder was suspended by the tail, and its head almost touching the ground, but during the day there was no alteration of this position, except its being raised several inches higher.

"On the third morning the adder seemed almost exhausted, and was secured head and tail, which were brought in contact. The spider was now busily employed in completing its arrangements, descending every few minutes, and placing additional threads round his prisoner. Toward evening the adder was completely tied in knot. I left him in this situation, but was much disappointed in not finding him the next evening morning.—Not only the four Carpenters, but our whole family, repeatedly witnessed this curious scene."

Daring Robbery of the State Bank.

On the examination of the funds yesterday morning, the Cashier of the Branch Bank in this place found that more than a thousand dollars had been taken during the preceding night, from a drawer he deposited in the vault that evening. The foundation of the vault is of solid brick, and its interior is entirely lined with many iron gratings, which remained perfectly uninjured. It was ascertained also, after a rigid scrutiny, that not a bolt had been forced back in a single door that led to it. The robbery was however evident, and a thousand speculations were offered to account for its feasibility, maugre walls, bars or bolts, when a mouse nest was accidentally discovered behind a chest of specie, entirely composed of hundred dollar notes. The authors of this most unprecedented outrage, fortunately for their lives, had decamped on the first alarm; but the public are earnestly cautioned to be on their guard against them, as they are old offenders, and perfect adepts in their business.

Punctuation.—The contract lately made for lighting the town of Liverpool during the ensuing year, has been thrown void by the misplacing of a comma in the advertisements, thus: "the lamps are at present about 4000, and have in general two spots each, composed of not less than twenty threads of cotton". The contractor would have proceeded to furnish each lamp with the said twenty threads; but this being but half the usual quantity, the commissioners discovered that the difference arose from the comma following, instead of preceding the word each. The parties agreed to annul the contract, and a new one is now ordered.

Among the extraordinaries.—Mr. James Barnes, living near this Village, on the 22d ult. took up a hive of bees, weighing 231 lbs. the weight of the hive 31 lbs. leaving 200 lbs. of the first quality of honey. The bees had been hived about 15 months.—Baltimore paper.

From an English paper.

Workington—Mr. Curwen has now on the Schooner farm two remarkable steers, Simon, two years and seven months old, the 28th May last; at that time his live weight was 127 stone, of 14lb. to the stone. Magog, two years old and 4 months (17th May last) and his live weight was 125 stone, they are of the short horned breed. They were reared on the soiling system; they had a portion of milk at four months old, since which time they have been fed on green food, straw, and steamed chaff (the husk of corn:) they never had cake, corn or hay.

EXTRAORDINARY PRODUCE.

In Mr. Whitehead's garden, at Drummond-ville, one potatoe stock raised from the centre of a carrot bed, produced 76 potatoes, weighing 24 lbs. 10 oz. and the stem weighed 14 1-2 lbs.

Montreal Her.

A squash has been raised in the garden of Mrs. Gearing, at Newburyport, measuring, 6 feet 8 inches, round in length, and 5 feet 6 inches, in circumference, weighing 77 lbs. Seed originally from the Mediterranean.

The editor of the Poughkeepsie Journal has two beets which grew in his garden the present season, one of which measures nineteen inches and three quarters in circumference, and weighs two pounds and three quarters.—The other measures twenty-seven inches and a half and weighs eighteen pounds and a quarter.

Uncommon Yield.—A Mr. Jersey, of the town of Butternuts, we are informed, gathered from one acre of ground this season seven hundred and some odd bushels of potatoes.

From the Schoharie Budget.

CURIOUS FACT.—We think a more conclusive proof of a prolific season could not be offered than the following: an apple tree, belonging to J. Mann, Esq. of this town, bore the present year a large quantity of apples of an extraordinary size, which having become completely ripe, were gathered, and the tree blossomed and bore a second time, An apple of the second growth may be examined at this office.

ANOTHER.—A chicken that was hatched this year, belonging to Mr. Wilhelmus Bouck, of the town of Middleburg in this county, has now a brood of its own.

TROY, Oct. 18.

Some time last week, a [illegible] to the widow Aikin, in Pittstown, in this county, having got her head into a barrel, from which she could not extricate it, made a retrograde movement until she came against the well curb, which she pushed from its place, when she fell into the well, (which is thirty feet deep,) and drowned. This must have been in the course of the night. On missing her the next morning, immediate search was made, and after some time, to the great surprise of the family, she was discovered in the well, with her head above water, whence she was hauled up without being materially injured. She received some trifling bruises, and appeared considerably chilled, from the length of time she must have been in the water. She however soon recovered the use of her limbs, and is doing well.

In the same town, also, one day last week, a little boy, a son of Mr. Snyder, about ten years old, went into the pasture with his sister to catch a horse, when he was furiously attacked by a hawk, and retreated until he got into the corner of a fence, when he kept his assailant at bay with the bridle, until a Mr. Vandercook, who happened to be passing the scene of action, ran to his assistance, when the hawk immediately turned upon him. Mr. Vandercook, however, after making several passes at him with a loaded whip, finally brought him to the ground and killed him, thus rescuing the child from imminent danger. The hawk was one of the largest size.

To Settlers.

THE Inhabitants of Smith's Creek have for some time past regretted the serious inconvenience suffered by the Settlers daily arriving here, on their way to the new Townships on Rice Lake, from the want of Houses for their temporary accommodations: Anxious to remove this evil, and promote as far as possible the comfort of the Settlers, a numerous and respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Hope and Hamilton was convened on the 10th instant, at Mr. James Parker's Tavern, Smith's Creek, for the purpose of taking into consideration the necessity of erecting, by public subscription, Buildings for their temporary accommodation.

James Ward, Esq. being called to the Chair, several Resolutions were entered into, purporting that buildings shall be immediately erected, capable of containing a considerable number of Families.——Thomas Ward, Esq. was then unanimously chosen President; Erasmus Fowke, Treasurer, and Dr. John Hutchison, Secretary.

The following gentlemen were then appointed a committee to carry into effect the laudable object of the meeting, viz:—D. McGregor Rogers, Esquire, Messrs. Robert J. Kerr, Alexander Mc Donnell, Jeremiah Britton, M. F. Whitehead, Adam Scott and Francis Page.—A subscription was then opened, which met with very liberal support.

Every exertion will be made to have the said buildings ready for occupation early in November—For possession of the apartments, application must be made to one or more members of the committee.

PRINTED AND PUBLISHED BY R. C. HORNE.

From Europe.

Extract of a letter from Manchester, dated Sept. 2.

"The assemblage of spinners, weavers, colliers, &c. out of work has this week been more numerous than ever, and this evening wore rather a serious aspect, several lives having (it is said) been lost to day, though we only yet know of one man killed, but a number have been shot with balls fired from Benjamin Gray and Co's factory, in its defence against the mob, who are in consequence highly exasperated; and there is now (11 o'clock, P. M.) work enough for the whole of the military stationed here to keep things in order, so as to prevent more mischief."

We learn from other sources that the weavers had retired, and that tranquility was restored. From the same authority also, we are led to hope that the affair was not quite so serious as our correspondent describes. The agents of sedition were busily at work. Letters from Stockport state, that several of the leaders of the mob were formerly in gaol on the suspicion of treason. One of these, the letter mention, spoke the most direct treason in haranguing the mob, who cheered him at every sentence. The words used are stated in these letters, but we must forbear to mention them; they are of the most incendiary and diabolical description.

"MANCHESTER, Sept. 2.—This town has been in a sad state of confusion to day. In the forenoon, numerous bodies of the refractory cotton spinners, according to their daily custom, assembled about the factory of Messrs. Gray and Co. near Ancoat's street, for the purpose of preventing any one going to work there. Whilst parading round the factory about noon the spinners assert that stones were thrown at them from the interior of the mill. How far this assertion is true, and whether it be not a report made by the spinners to justify their proceedings, I cannot ascertain. They, however, began to demolish the windows of the factory, and broke numbers of them, & endeavoured to force their way into the mill, by breaking open the gates and lower windows. The persons in the inside who were armed, being alarmed for their own safety, as their lives would be in great danger if the assailants succeeded in entering the mill, fired upon them from the windows.—Several of the mob were severely wounded. The number it is not known, but it is generally stated as being about six or seven.—Four have been brought to the infirmary dangerously wounded one of them mortally in the groin; another report says, he died almost immediately.

"The mob was repulsed by this spirited conduct, and Messrs. Gray and Co. had time to send to the magistrates for assistance, who speedily arrived with a party of dragoons and intantry. The number of people then assembled was very great, probably about 10 or 12,000.—the riot act was read, & after the expiration of the hour, the military dispersed the mob, I have not heard of any one being hurt by the soldiers in performing this duty.

"The aspect of affairs in this town and populous neighbourhood daily becomes more gloomy. The principal part of the spinners remain as obstinate as ever. In addition to the spinners, the weavers have now "turned out," and they parade the street in immense bodies of four or five thousand each. About five thousand were assembled in St. George's field, at the time of the attack upon Messrs. Gray and Co's factory but had no connection with that mob. They carried flags with incriptions on them, that they would have 7s. in the pound advance in their wages. The Lancashire weavers generally possess a mind fearless of the consequences of any illegal acts they may be instigated to commit; and if they unite with the spinners, immense mischief may be committed by them.

"Already numbers of petty shopkeepers, who have dealt entirely with the working classes, are almost ruined. Landlords can get no rents, and dare not distrain.

"Eight o'clock, P. M.—I open my letter to say, that Mr. Norris the magistrate, accompanied Mr. Withington, the bouroughreeve, and a number of cavalry, are just gone at full gallop to Messrs. Gray's factory, where it is reported, immense crowds are again assembled, threatening to fire the mill."

LONDON, Sept. 5.

The excavations at Pompeii, continue to produce a considerable number of bronzes, &c. An Apollo has been discovered of the most exquisite workmanship.

The Irish have their Donnybrook fair as we have our Bartholomew: it is, like our own, the resort of all the refuse population of the metropolis. The Grand Duke Michael, from a wish probably to see society under all its forms visited this scene on Thursday se'nnight and was much gratified with the amusements, which the Irish editor is careful to tell us, were as usual "knocks down for love," and cut heads with the never failing accompaniment of picking pockets. The Irish editor thinks these diversions a certain remedy against treasons, stratagem, and spoils. We are sorry to differ from such high authority; but we really think, from his showing, that Donnybrook fair is no better a school for virtue than that abominable nuisance, which is now infesting Smithfield.

A singular instance of the boldness and audacity of Foxes lately occurred at Bermeryside house. As a female servant, about 14 years of age, was searching in a field for turkey eggs, she observed a fox carrying off an old turkey; the girl ran up to him, and with difficulty got the bird from him; but Reynard, unwilling to give up his prize, attacked her again, and absolutely succeeded in taking it from her once or twice; eventually, however, finding himself defeated, but still unwilling to give up the contest entirely, he followed her (she carrying the turkey in her arms) home to within a few yards of the house door, where he thought it the wisest plan to bend his course towards the Gotehengh.—Scotch paper.

THE PAVILION AT BRIGHTON.

The model for the new pile is taken from the Kremlin, at Moscow. There will be about nine domes, each resembling that of St. Paul's Cathedral. The music room is in a state of forwardness; it will be a magnificent apartment. About 180 workmen are now employed on the structure. When finished, the Prince Regent will reside there whilst the new improvements are going on at Carlton House.

STOCKHOLM, Aug. 14.

While the new organization of the land force is completed, augmentation and improvement of the Swedish marine gradually advance.

Since the ship of the line, Charles III. was launched last year, another is building at Carlscrona, to be called King Charles John. Six large gunboats were finished; and in Gothland, Oeland, and at Calmar, 18 new vessels in all have been built for the navy.—We have, to man these vessels, 26,000 able and experienced seamen.

About two months since, a summer's heat such as we have never experienced, was still contending with the passers of snow, till the melting of the latter caused the waters to rise in many places above the highest level usually attained; but the heat has now fallen within 24 hours from 30 to 10 deg. and the gardens have already suffered by night frosts.

FRANKFORT, Aug. 19.

It is well known that for more than half a century, the preservation of the Ottoman empire has depended on the jealousy of the European powers, and that if Austria, France, Prussia, & England did not give it their support, the Turkish power would sink under the first attack of Russia. Since the peace of Paris, a war between Russia & Turkey has often been the subject of report, and the change of the Generals of the Russian fortresses on the Black Sea, have revived this idea, and at least awakened the suspicions of the Porte. From the present situation of things in Europe, there is, however, nothing more improbable than that hostilities should take place. The Emperor Alexander surely will not make an attack without provocation; the giving of which the Porte will doubtless carefully avoid. Nevertheless, the situation of the latter, however, is very critical. Russia is not only in possession of the strongest places on the Turkish frontier, but commands on the Black Sea; and Persia, now the ally of Russia, feels her force equal to that of Turkey. The Wechebates, though beaten, are not annihilated, and are ever ready to issue from the deserts of Arabia. At the same time the Ionian Isles give to England the key of the Archipelago, and of Turkey in Europe, on the west. In this state of things, it is not a little remarkable, that the present Grand Seignor, with his children, who are all in infancy, forms the only remaining branch of the dynasty of the powerful Mahomet II. The fires, which are proofs of the discontent of the Janissaries, are now more frequent than ever in Constantinople. Within the four first months after the deposition of the Aga of the Janissaries, 75 have taken place; so that the Grand Vizier and the dignitaries cannot sleep tranquilly in their palaces. The Grand Seignor, who formerly always proceeded to the place where a fire had broken out, now rarely ventures to leave his palace! and when he does, is always escorted by a strong guard of Spahis.——To these sources of disquietude are to be added the frequent revolts of the Agas and Pachas, the attacks of the Curds, and the spirit of independence which is reviving among the Greeks. Besides all this, the Porte is now menaced with the danger of three Pachaliks becoming three separate and powerful States. These are Janoina in Europe, Egypt in Africa, & Aleppo in Asia.

HANOVER, Aug. 24.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence intends, as the weather is now so very favorable, to make a tour to the Hartz, and will arrive at Goslar about the end of this week.

August 25.

A Proclamation, in the name of the Prince Regent, was published here yesterday, respecting the students at Gottingen. It states, that his Royal Highness by no means intend to abridge the liberty which his subjects have hitherto enjoyed of studying at what University they please; but that, on account of the late events at Gottingen, his royal highness is pleased to order, that none of the nation of Hanover who have studied there in the summer half year, from Easter to Michaelmas this year, shall be allowed to go to another University without express permission; and those who shall transgress this order shall never be admitted to any office, or allowed to practise any profession, in the Hanoverian dominions.

GOTTINGEN, Aug. 13.

Since the late event our city has lost much of its life & bustle.—Nearly all the Hanoverian students are on their return, but the influence that the esprit de corps exercises is so strong among the students, that all the strangers have been compelled to depart, notwithstanding the protection which the government offered to the. The professors have opened their lectures anew, but the halls are almost deserted. The inhabitants, who for a long time before had not lived in a good understanding with the students, were at first rejoiced at their departure; but they begin to feel the sad effects of it, because, for the most part, they only exist on the gains made of the students. At the commencement of the course of lectures the number of the latter amounted to 1,120, of which there does not now remain the one half.

From the Dublin Morning Post.

Miss Kelly.—It is probably in the recollection of our readers, that the contents of a pistol were discharged at this lady, while she was performing on the stage of Drury-Lane Theatre, London, in consequence of her not attending to the addresses of an unfortunate gentleman, deranged in his intellects. We regret to say, that since her visit to this city, she has become the object of another maniac passion. It was our wish to have preserved silence on this subject; but as we observe in some of the other papers, obscure and incorrect statements, we deem it advisable to lay the facts before the public. For some days back several letters had been delivered at Miss Kelly's lodgings, in Westmoreland-street, bearing evident marks of a deranged mind. The writer delivered those letters at the house himself, but not receiving any answer, he became exceedingly importunate, and made several attempts to force his way up stairs; he made similar attempts at the theatre to obtain a personal interview with "the idol of his soul." His epistles were renewed with fresh vigour, but instead of breathing forth "the soft tale of love," he launched into invective, accused the lady (who had never seen him) of the most faithless inconstancy, and at length proceeded to such acts of rudeness at Miss Kelly's lodgings, as to create considerable alarm in her mind, which was very naturally heightened by a recollection of the occurrence at Drury Lane Theatre, which we have above alluded to. Love—"all powerful love" was not to be easily subdued; and indeed it cannot be imagined to what extent "the fickle god" might have carried his votary, but for the interposition of the police. Their interference was found absolutely necessary: for the gentleman had proceeded to acts of violence, in endeavoring to force himself into the presence of Miss Kelly, at her lodgings.—He was secured and conveyed to College-street police office, where Miss Kelly, accompanied by her sisters and several highly respectable friends, the next day (Thursday) attended. She appeared most seriously affected by the circumstance, and wept bitterly while narrating the facts that came to her knowledge. Mr. Magrath, in the correct discharge of his magisterial duties, carefully examined into all the particulars, and treated the prisoner with the kindness of a friend; expostulated with him in the most humane and tender manner; but in vain! The incoherency of his language, and his general demeanor, bespoke the maniac! His name, residence, or friends he would not disclose. Miss Kelly was therefore reluctantly obliged to lodge information against him in order to [illegible] the magistrates in detaining him until his friends could be ascertained. She seemed much affected; but her observation—"Surely it cannot be my beauty that" operates on those people," delivered in her own peculiar style of naivete, cast a gleam of the vis comica over the whole proceedings. The prisoner declared "that he had witnessed Miss Kelly's theatrical performances; she pourtrayed nature and depicted the passions more forcibly to the mind and soul than any other being he ever saw; in requital for which he could not in his conscience, do less than offer his hand in marriage. And in this he obstinately persisted: not all the persuations of the magistrates & gentleman present, could get him to retract. "He felt himself bound to offer her his hand; it was but an act of justice to her great talents; it was honorable and consistent on his part, and it should be so: it was the only object he had in view, and nothing on earth should dissuade him from it." During these ejaculations, he went down on his knees.—The magistrates were almost at a loss how to proceed. The prisoner having got pen, ink & paper, wrote several extraordinary effusions of love and madness, interspersed with Greek quotations, which not a little puzzled "their lordships." The unfortunate gentleman was at length removed to a private apartment, and a peace officer appointed to attend him. Here the wildness of his imagination became unbounded. At one time he fancied himself a cat, and Manning, the peace officer, (than whom there is not a more resolute or proper man) going in at the moment, the prisoner commenced jumping & mewing about the room, in a manner so frightful, that the officer made a precipitate retreat to the door. The prisoner had scarcely a moment of lucid interval. Miss Kelly's performance of Louisa, in the farce of the Deserter, appears to have made a deep impression on his mind. After remaining solitary for some time, he conceived himself to be Henry the Deserter, and addressed the individuals that went into him, as captains of the guard: he said that he was aware that he was to be shot, and implored that Miss Kelly should not go to the king for a pardon for him;—as she would not take his life, it was determined to die; but he would die like a soldier!—After remaining two days in the police office, he was re-cognized by his friends and relatives, who are respectable. He is a gentleman well known in this city, about 50 years of age; he has been in Trinity College, and possesses great literary attainments. He devoted himself particularly to the study of the Greek language, and compiled a selection of Greek extracts now read in college. The unhappy gentleman has been conveyed to an asylum where he will obtain the benefit of medical aid.

Extract from a file of Calcutta papers to the 25th of May, received at the office of the New-York Evening Post.

CALCUTTA, May 16.

Although Cotton appears to maintain its prices, in Calcutta, at Mirzapore, the great Emporium in Hindostan for this immense article of Indian commerce, it had fallen considerably; from which we may infer that the prices in Calcutta, may be expected to fall. This and this alone, we imagine, could lead to the usual annual exports to China, and a great demand from that quarter only, it is supposed in the Upper Province will tend to restore Cotton to its former prices.

From Hindiah we learn that Chetoo, the last hope of the Pindarries, and who surrendered himself some time since at Bapaul, had escaped into Candiesh; having evaded the vigilance of the troops under the command of Sir John Malcolm, but Chetoo's hopes are destroyed; and from him we can have nothing to apprehend; his escape therefore is only fortunate for himself.

Fall of Mundelah.—The accounts which we had previously received of the strength of Mundelah, led us to fear, that more time would be occupied in reducing it, than it appears to have required from the result of operations, which we have now the pleasure of communicating to our readers.

In our last, we described the various positions, taken up by our troops, with the view of assailing the fort; and the disposition of the different corps, under the command of Generals Marshall and Watson, destined for this service. On the morning of the 26th April, the batteries opened at sun rise upon the places, and before five in the afternoon, a breach was reported practicable by the Engineer officers, in one of the bastions of the fort, close to the river. Preparations were immediately made for storming the breach; & the party consisting of fifteen companies, and supported by as many more, and a couple of 6 pounders, moved forward in gallant style——the whole under command of General Watson. On arriving at the breach, our troops experienced little or no resistance, but on entering a smart fire was kept up for a few minutes by the enemy. Our [illegible] the ramparts, soon drove the enemy from bastion to bastion, and in a very short time, we had complete possession of the town.—Several of the enemy were driven out of the place, on the side opposite to where the attack had been made; and cut up by the cavalry, stationed to prevent the garrison's escape. During the night, the enemy who were in the fort evacuated it, and surrendered to a party of our troops, when captain Black of the 8th, entered and took possession of it.

Thus has this place, represented as naturally so strong and formidable, fallen into our hands with little or no loss. We have heard of only one sepoy being killed, and five or six wounded; and have seen the loss of the enemy, estimated at about 300 men, a statement which our correspondent is not disposed to think exaggerated, considering the incessant fire of shells, which was kept up upon the town & fort, during the whole of the 26th ultimo. The troops who have been employed in reducing Mundelah, are now ready to proceed against several other forts of whose speedy surrender, no doubt can be entertained. It is however remarkable, that the examples of Hattrass, Mundelah, and other places, should not have taught the Killidars what sort of an enemy they have to encounter and shewn them how vain it is to think they can withstand our power. It is said that every effort was made to settle matters with the Killidar of Mundelah, previous to the attack. He was offered safety and liberty, provided he would submit and lay down his arms; but he would not accept of these generous terms. He required, it seems, that the arrears of pay due to himself and garrison, should be paid up, and that they should be permitted to evacuate the place in possession of their arms, terms, which of course could not be granted them. At the request of the general, a number of women and children, along with several men, who agreed to lay down their arms, were allowed to leave Mundelah two days before the assault, and have been from that time under the protection of our force.

BOMBAY, March 28.

Since the 4th of the present month, the field force under lieut. col. Frother, has been actively employed above the Ghauts in the reduction of the several strong fortresses in the vicinity of the range; and the manner in which his detachment of the Bombay army has executed this important service, reflects the utmost credit on it.

After reducing Loghur, Isapore, Tcong, Yekuna, Rogh & Murchee, a representation having been made of the importance of not suffering a fort, possessed of such natural advantages as Koarree, to remain in the hands of the enemy, the lieut. col. determined to proceed instantly against it; and without waiting to repair the damages which the rapidity of the movements of the force had occasioned, the order was issued to march, and by the active and zealous exertions of all the departments, the force had advanced on the 11th instant as far as Seroolly, distant from Koarree six miles.

The celerity of the advance, through a thick and almost impervious jungle in which no road had ever before been made, must have not a little astonished the enemy. Throughout the campaign, the Bombay pioneers have distinguished themselves by their indefatigable exertions, but these never were excelled nor more required than in the present instance. They executed their arduous task in a mode which caused the admiration of all, and reflected on their zealous commander, Captain P. Delamotte, that praise which he most deservedly earned. The pioneers, even when the enemy were empting on them, continued their work steadily, and a serjeant only observed he wished the pickaxes and hoes were only muskets for the rascals sake.

For the recognizance and investment of the fort, lieut. Remon of the engineers, and a party commanded by capt. Rose of H. M. 89th regt. were detached from Seroolly at 10 o'clock on the 11th, & they completely succeeded in their objects, after gallantly driving in the enemy who were advantageously posted on a height, protected by a well directed fire from the guns of the fort. The gallant detachment, employed on this duty, composed of the light company of H. M. 89th regt. the grenadiers of the Coryguam regt. and 2d. 6th with a choice detachment from the lieut. colls. battalion, the 1st 9th with knapsacks on the shoulders of the men, and after a march of six miles, on the words "double quick," advanced to the charge up a steep hill to the very walls of the fort; the besieged keeping up a brisk fire of cannon & musquetry. This firing being heard in camp, determined the commanding officer to move on, and he arrived in time to approve of the measure adopted by capt. Rose, and the manner in which this officer had accomplished the investment of the fort. The main body of the force arrived before Koarree on the 12th, and by dint of great labour and exertion, the battering train was brought up on the 13th. On the morning of the 14th, the grand battery opened, consisting of one 18, one 10, & two 8 inch mortars, with a heavy 5 1-2 inch howitzer battery to the right. During the day several fires and explosions took place; and from the silence of the guns of the fort, it was conjectured that the besieged had taken shelter in their casements. About 7 in the evening their magazine blew up, laying the principal gate way in ruins and setting fire to several houses; immediately after the fort surrendered. It was afterwards ascertained that the garrison, on the explosion, insisted on the Killedar's Jamdar Ebow, surrendering, to which the very reluctantly assented, and he has since expressed his indignant regret at the cowardice of his people.

The Killedar and about 700 men were made prisoners; 35 had been killed during the siege, most of them at the explosion. Some treasure, nearly of a lack of rupees, and some grain, became the property of the captors.

The fort of Koaree is situated on the range of ghauts about 20 miles south of the Bhore ghauts. It commands the principal pass leading from the Concan near Jamboolpara, immediately above the Sowee ghaut. Its extreme length bearing north & south, the narrow end pointing north, it is a mile and a half in circumference, extremely well supplied with fine water from a considerable tank nearly the breadth of the fort.
There are only two entrances; the main one on the eastern side; the other, a much more difficult one, being steeper and up the rugged face of the rock, in the western: this is considered the weakest side of the fort. To have carried the fortress by storm would have been an enterprize of extreme difficulty and had the attempt been made during the siege, it must have cost us the lives of many of our brave men, and all those engaged in the first assault would, in all probability, have been overwhelmed by the explosions of eight mines which had been made at the entrance of the principal gateway, five on one side and three on the other; all prepared for the match, which was suspended from the walls to the mines.

The Killedar deserved every credit for his defence, which was judicious & gallant.

On the 15th the thanks of the commanding officer were issued in orders.
On the evening of that day a villager reported that Gunger, a hill fort 4 cos distant, dependent on Koaree, was evacuated; a detachment of the force was sent in consequence, and took possession of it.

Since the 30th December last, the Concan field force has taken sixteen hill forts. The successful exertions of this gallant detachment, which have contributed so essentially towards the accomplishment of the main objects of the present war, cannot fail of being highly gratifying to those under whose auspices it has prospered.

BOMBAY, April, 1.

We understand that a deputation, consisting of four gentlemen, have been sent to Acheen, from the Prince of Wales Island; the object of their mission is to establish a factory at that place:
we are, however, afraid that the distracted state of that kingdom will mili-tate decidedly against their success. For this last thirty-five years, there has been nothing but civil wars—at this present time, a party of his subjects have called in foreign aid, and placed on the throne a young half Arabian, the son of Seyd Housaun of Prince of Wales Island.
From the nature of their warfare, and the peculiar situation of the country, it is more than probable that their feuds will never terminate, without the help of some foreign power.

CEYLON, April 11.

The warfare in the disturbed Kandyan provinces has produced in the last week very few events of sufficient consequence to be laid before the public.
Major M'Donald returned to Badulla on the 27th March, with not less than 400 head of cattle, which, besides great quantities of grain, he had collected in his rapid marches, through the disaffected country: he left the post of De-hawinne Kande strongly garrisoned and well supplied with provisions: the complete failure of the rebels in all their attempts, with their rabble of thousands, to make the slightest impression upon the mere handful of men under major M'Donald's command, must have, convinced the treacherous Kippitioola Des-save of his utter inability to gain any success by fair attacks or open fighting, let the disproportion of numbers be what it may: the enemy seems indeed in Ouvah to be exhausted for the present with the vain effort they lately made: major Coxon continues to preserve the neighbourhood of Allipoot in great tranquility, and he has been lately judiciously availing himself of the good disposition of the people, by employing them at very moderate wages to clear the roads and cut down the jungle on each side: he very properly remarks, that cutting down the jungle is equivalent to disarming the rebels; the provinces of Wellassy & Bintenne are quiet, but the villages are mostly deserted, and there is little appearance of friendly disposition except among the Moormen, who are naturally well inclined to the British government, and have proved eminently useful to the commissariat ever since these unhappy disturbances began.

Wallapany, Hewahetty, Kotmale & Dcombera persevere obstinately in their hostility, which they demonstrate by taking unusual pains to block up the roads and molest all escorts and convoys on their march; very few casualties have occured: the people of Harris-pattoo have been some time in open rebellion, and resisted all the efforts of the Resident to pacify them, although he remained several years for that purpose Camp where he was joined by the 1st Adigar on the 2d April. The Ratamahatme, or chief of Harrispattoo, is brother to the Wellassy Dessave, who is now a close prisoner in Kandy, in consequence of his having been detected by
col. Kelley in carrying on a treasonable correspondence with the rebels of Doombera. This will account for the present inactivity of the Harrispattoo insurgents, and may probably have the effect of inducing them to return to their duty. On the Colombo road all is happily peaceable and quiet. The 1st Adigar returned to the 4 Corles on the 4th, nor can his influence be more usefully employed than in preserving the tranquility of this important line of communication.

A very feeble attempt was made on the evening of the 5th to create an alarm in Kandy, and the probable object was the escape of the 2d Adigar and some other prisoners confined in Eyleylapola's house. About 8 o'clock in the evening a stable attached to that house was discovered to be on fire, and every means to extinguish it was used with promptitude and success: but this device to occupy the attention of the sergeant and men on duty there and throw them off their guard was entirely baffled.
Suspicion of further design was immediately excited, and the very first step taken by the sergeant was to secure the prisoners. A back door which had been nailed up was found open, and through this the plan was in all probability for the prisoners to have escaped, if an opportunity had been offered. To second this scheme, just as the fire was nearly got under and before the commandant, lieut. col. Moffatt, whose viglance is always on the alert, had left the spot, some musquet shots were fired from the hill across the lake, directed both towards the house & castle. This was the signal for a fire being opened almost all round the town; from the hills above the Coodesaly, Gonorroa and Trincomalee guard houses, and on the commandant's houses and barracks of the 73d regt. the garrison was instantly under arms and ready to punish any attempt the Kandyans might be rash enough to make: but there is no reason to believe that they had any intention whatever to do more than to make such a diversion by diverting the attention of the troops to different quarters as might favour the escape of the prisoners: the few random shots were fired at too great a distance to do any kind of mischief, and no enemy was ever seen. The rebels soon ceased their fire and retreated into the neighboring jungles. Captain Drew [illegible] into Kandy immediately after this alarm was over, with only 5 men and met with no molestation.

A further body of the honorable company's troops landed at Colombo from Tutucoreen on the 3d inst. consisting of five companies of the 7th regt. N. I. for whose conveyance to the island the transports John & Regalia were sent from Colombo, under the personal charge of lieut. Pritchard, R. N. agent for transports, whose zealous exertions in every branch of service the vessels under his direction have been required for, since their arrival on these coasts, cannot be too warmly acknowledged:
these five companies moved into the 7 Corles on the 9th, where the greater part of the population being attached to the government, it is expected the appearance of so formidable an addition of troops will effectually serve to put down the rebellion partially manifested in that district. A great part of the 15th regt. native infantry is now on its march towards the capital of the interior, the exertions for supplying the stores of which with provisions in considerable quantities, have for the last month been incessant in the several departments of government.

BOSTON, Nov. 4.—noon.

Last evening, at about 7 o'clock, the Exchange Coffee-House, in this town, took fire and burnt down. The fire first broke out from the north-west corner of the 7th story, and is said to have caught from a lamp suspended from the wall in the Billiard-room, in which two gentlemen had been playing a short time before, but which had been left unattended. The fire soon communicated to the roof, and extended very rapidly to the adjoining parts of the house. No great damage however was apprehended from it for some time.—
The flame which had burst out from the roof was for some time suppressed, so that the bells ceased ringing. In about half an hour it was found that the building could not be saved, and soon after the flame burst from almost every part of the building. There was a slight wind from the south-west, which drove the flames and burning cinders towards the lower part of State-street.
Water was supplied in abundance wherever it could be of service, by means of the engines and buckets, which were served on the exposed roofs and windows with great intrepidity, and the fire was immediately extinguished wherever it caught, except in the immediate vicinity of the walls.

The dome and roof of the Coffee-House fell in about 9 o'clock, and some time after the north wall and part of the south fell, together with the whole of the inner wall which surrounded the area.
Before 12 o'clock, the whole building, together with the building annexed to it on Devonshire-street, including the four story building belonging to Major Prince, was consumed.

The buildings on Congress-street, opposite the front of the Coffee-House, were on fire for an hour or two, and in consequence of the height of the wall opposite and the narrowness of the street, it seemed impossible to save them, yet so constant and abundant was the application of water, that they were little burnt, except a part of the roofs. The buildings on the north side of the Coffee-House, between it and State-street, were somewhat injured by the falling of the wall, and a little by the fire.

The Coffee-House was owned by a company of 400 shares, who hold it by purchase from the original proprietors.
The cost of the building was half a million of dollars. Mr. Barnum, the keeper of the hotel, is a great loser, particularly in furniture and liquors. We are informed that he has put into the house, within the last two years, 16,000 dollars worth of furniture. Other individuals have lost much in the building.

The Palladium, Centinel, Gazette,
Patriot and Chronicle, Intelligencer, Recorder and Daily Advertiser offices, were all greatly exposed, and most of them removed their property. Consequently no paper has been printed in town to day until this late hour. All our types were removed, and presses taken down, but they are restored with trifling loss.

BUFFALO, Oct. 17.

Population of Grand Island.—A very considerable settlement of squatters has been made upon this Island, principally in the course of the last season. There are now, we are informed, more than one hundred families, collected from all quarters; many from Canada and the middle counties of this state, and considerable improvements are making.
The island is situated in the Niagara River, and commences about three miles below Black Rock, and extends to within a mile and a half of the Falls.—It is twelve miles long, and from two to seven miles abroad. The whole of it, before the recent inroads, was clothed with heavy timber of an excellent quality. The soil is said to be strong and rich, well adapted to cultivation. The title to it has not yet been determined by the commissioners, but it is generally admitted to be within the territory of the United States. Our readers will probably recollect, that the Indian title to this and the other Islands in the Niagara was ceded to the State of New York by treaty made at Buffalo, on the 12th of September 1815, between Gov.
Tomkins and others, commissioners on the part of the state, and the Chiefs, &c. of the Seneca nation. The state paid one thousand dollars down, and secured an annuity of five hundred dollars. This Island will probably, at no distant period, become very populous, and highly cultivated.

Usury.—The Legislature of the Alabama territory have passed an Act repealing all laws against Usury. Any written obligation specifying the interest at the rate per Centum as agreed upon, may be recovered in the courts of law and equity in the territory; and where no rate is specified; the obligation will draw interest at the rate of eight per Cent per Annum, from the time it becomes due. We believe ours is the first legislature in the Union which has made all obligations recoverable let the rate of Interest be what it may.

The state of Mississippi, in convention have by their constitution put it out of the power of their legislature to pass any law respecting the rate of Interest.—Alabama paper.

On the death of Plants.

Mr. Brisseau Mirble, the French naturalist, who has published a work on the emigration of plants, has also written an essay on the death of plants, that contains a variety of new matter.
The age of many trees now in foliage, according to this writer is almost incredible. He says there are chesnuts on Mount Etna at least four thousand years old. That many of the yews in Surrey, Eng. were standing in the time of Julius Cæsar, and are at present two yards in diameter. The cedars on Mount Lebanon are three thousand years old.—The age of trees he calculates from the number of concentric layers of libers, which constitute the mass of the wood.

YORK, 17 Nov. 1818.

SIR,

The continued decline of Pot & Pearl Ashes,—the first staple commodity of Canada, induces me to enquire into the subject. Many opinions have been offered to account for the cause of the decline; by some it has been attributed to a relaxed operation of the Inspection Laws; by others to a more scientific process of manufacture latterly adopted in the neighboring country, and to the greater facility of exporting the article from thence throughout the year at lesser rates of freight and insurance. These opinions have already come under the consideration of the Legislature of this Province, in the present sitting of Parliament, in the revision of the Inspection Laws. The positive cause, however, I am inclined to think is to be traced to the exclusion of Colonial Ashes from the Irish Linen Manufactory. The Duty payable on Foreign Ashes, upon importation into Great Britain and Ireland, is - - - 11s. per cwt.
On Colonial - - - 1 7d.

The difference of Duty 9s. 5d. per cwt. plainly demonstrates the liberal system of government exercised by Great Britain towards her colonies. But the same principle of protection, extended to the Linen Manufacture of Ireland, has unintentionably counteracted the benefit it was manifestly the intention to bestow upon this colony. The Irish Linen Manufacturer is allowed a drawback, equal to the amount of the Custom's Duty paid on the consumable article he employs; consequently Foreign Ashes are worth to him 9s 5d per Cwt. more than Colonial of the same quality. From the knowledge of the fact, it will cease to be a matter of surprize how New York Ashes, which were formerly considered an inferior brand to Montreal, should in latter times have been preferred; and at a much higher price, notwithstanding the prohibiting Duty. A celebrated political economist, I mean Dr. Adam Smith, has remarked that neither Drawback nor Bounty should be framed for longevity; certain it is, that this Drawback has lived too long without having afforded any advantages to the revenue of the Mother Country, while it has been very highly injurious to the best interests of Canada.

The quantity of Ashes exported last year from Canada, amounted to 109,071 Cwts. which is less than the quantity consumed in the Irish Linen Manufacture; and which, at 9s 5d per Cwt. the amount of the difference of duty, is equal to £57,060 5 10 Currency. Taking then the quantity exported last year as the average annual quantity, the annual loss sustained by the Colony will be the amount of the difference of Duty. Besides, had the Colonial article held the same commanding position in the Home market, that the Foreign article has held it is but reasonable to conclude that there would have been an increased manufacture: and a better process of manufacture would have been encouraged. But this is not all, Canada, wants increased population: blessed as she is with a healthful climate, a generous soil, and more navigable waters than any other country in the world, she can have no other want. The population of Ireland, notwithstanding the many demands made upon it during the war, has increased beyond the means of subsistence, or more correctly, beyond the means of the laboring class to purchase subsistence; the natural effect has been an extensive emigration; which is likely to continue, and in an increased ratio, the demand for the army & navy having ceased.—These being the relative condition of both countries, the relations between them can neither be too many nor too frequent. And when it is considered that this Province has but a limited participation in the Lumber trade, from material & irresistable impediments in the navigation, it must come home to the understanding of every individual that the manufacture should be by every means encouraged.

ADDRESS.

Before the "Jefferson County Agricultural Society," by J. Le Ray de Chaumont, President—Extracted from a pamphlet containing their proceedings, published by the society.

Gentlemen of the Agricultural Society of Jefferson County, and Fellow Citizens,

I feel encouraged by the indulgence shown me on a former occasion, less solemn it is true, but not less trying, because I was then, for the first time, addressing the public in a language which to me is foreign. I must acknowledge that I am still in much need of your lenity, having composed this address while laboring under a great mental pain. But it is not the flowery ornament of diction which is expected from me. No; I flatter myself, that you will be content with hearing, in plain, farmer-like language, the sentiments of one so much interested in the welfare and success of this association, and who, having travelled a great part of his life with a spirit of agricultural observation, is able with due submission to your enlightened judgments, to point out improvements and suggest experiments which may prove advantageous to our country.

Let us first address our warmest and most humble acknowledgements to the Creator of mankind for the numerous favors he has bestowed upon us this year. Were they not recorded in the Report of your Viewing Committee, which will be read to you, I would with gratitude enumerate them here. How impressive was that sentiment upon me when returning into this country in May last, I was surprised with the advanced state of vegetation. On the 6th of that month I had seen ice in the fields near New-York, and severe frost had at the same time, done great injuries in Pennsylvania and south of that state. Certainly those who judge of our climate only by our degree of latitude, would have thought we were shivering with cold, at a time when we were enjoying the most agreeable weather. The fact is that since the 23d of April last no frost has been experienced till some time last week, when it occasioned no injury; and there are many parts of the country in which there was no appearance of it even at that time. This will astonish some of my hearers, who coming from a country south of the Mohawk, have witnessed there, in the month of August, a frost which nipped the corn and buck-wheat to such a degree as to prevent their arriving to perfect maturity. I mention these facts respecting our climate, as they come in aid to prove how much we are indebted to our relative situation with lake Ontario for the mildness of our winters, comparatively with that of some more southern positions.

We have, it is true, for several years past experienced at different times, a severity of weather which was a great disappointment to us, after having enjoyed so happy a succession of the most fruitful and benignant seasons, for many years from the first settlement of our country. But had we, in those days of vexation, compared our situation with that of others, we would not have found cause to be dissatisfied with our lot. Had we at those seasons, instead of confining our views to our own particular calamity, extended them so as to embrace the whole northern part of the world, we would have seen the same cause producing similar effects throughout the whole, for it is a fact now sufficiently notorious, that in 1816, when we had the most severe season, there was not a month in the year that they did not witness the presence of frost in a part of Virginia not far from Washington; and not only in North America, but even in all Europe. The cause of this was not at that time known, although several unsatisfactory ones were assigned; but at this day, most, if not all, concur in the opinion, that it was owing to immense floating fields of ice, which had been separated from the arctic regions. Some of them are estimated to be 200 feet in height, and many miles in circumference. This wonderful phenomenon was observed in the summer months of the year 1815, '16 & '17 but particularly in 1816. It is supposed that those great masses of ice which occupy the mid channel between Greenland and Spitzbergen, have been enlarged yearly by a succession of icebergs uniting themselves together, till their own accumulated magnitude and weight, with the action of an impeded current, burst their fetters, and bore them away to the southward. Mr. Scoresby, an experienced navigator of the Greenland seas, estimates the surface of the fields of ice so carried away, to be not less than eighteen thousand square miles. Many of them have been observed as far south as the fortieth parallel of latitude, advancing slowly towards their annihilation, an event which we may confidently believe to have taken place, since we have enjoyed as good a season as we had in the former years of our settlement.

The disagreeable changes of climate which have been of late years experienced by the people of England are by them attributed to the descent of ice in the Atlantic; and they also charge to the accumulation of ice on the coast of Greenland, the deteriorations of their climate since the fifteenth century.—They are so elated at the removal of what they consider as the principal cause of this evil, that they think they already hold the genial warmth of the western breeze, and those soft & gentle zephyrs, so beautifully described by their poets. They anticipate the happy moment of reviving those vineyards which were planted with success in Britain by the Romans; and the melting of those ice fields seems for them the renewal of the miracle which converted the water into wine.

We cannot, then, be considered unreasonable in our expectations when we look only for the return of those seasons which a few years ago we enjoyed without intermission.

Let us then rejoice, but at the same time let us improve.

Here, gentlemen, I am under the necessity of requesting every favorable allowance while endeavoring to accomplish, as far as my feeble means permit me, one of the most important objects which agricultural societies have had in view in appointing annual addresses. I am about to suggest ideas of improvement and sketch out plans of experiment which may be put in operation with some reasonable hope of success.

In Europe and in the old cultivated countries, the first science of the farmer is that of re-production. Here it begins by destruction; and it requires no small degree of dexterity and skill to effect this to the best advantage. Hence it is that the North Americans are the most able and successful wood cutters in the world. I would suggest, however, that this destruction of wood is not made with a due regard to the comfort of their families or the wants of their posterity. The baneful effects of this last error have been severely felt in the vicinity of some great cities of the U. States, where, in some winters, fire-wood is as dear as in the great capital of France.

It is of importance not to follow the too general practice of cutting all the trees in the vicinity of your habitation. I would propose that you select near your house the finest groves of trees, giving the preference to that part of the forest which is to the north and west, to protect you and your gardens from the more unfriendly winds, and while the remoter part of this reserve remains in its natural state for future use, the other may be gradually cleared, as the want of wood will require, reserving the sugar maple and beech. There, in the spring you will make your sugar with all convenience and ease. The distance of these trees one from another will permit you to select those you may want, and give the preference to the decayed. Independently of the advantages which in this country the beech tree is known to possess, in France they draw two more from that precious tree. They cut its low branches in the month of August, and stack them like hay. It is an excellent food for sheep, and a good substitute for hay. With the beech nuts they make an oil next in goodness to olive. A great quantity of this oil is made at Compiegne near Paris. A farmer who has a large family of young children, might with their labor alone, in the year when the beech-nuts are abundant, make a considerable quantity of oil for his own use if in the vicinity of an oil mill The grass will in process of time grow beautifully under these lofty trees, which will admit the free circulation of the air; and the advantages of such a disposition of your reserve wood will be manifold, both for man and beast. But here, where the sugar maple is so abundant, and where the seasons in general are so propitious for manufacturing its sap into sugar, the early produce of such a reserve would be more than a sufficient inducement for adopting the salutary measure proposed. An easy access to all the sugar trees will be beneficial to you, and at the same time that you save a great deal of your labor, you will collect from each acre a much larger quantity of sap.

The great benefit which the farmer derives from clearing new land, is often the cause of his neglecting the steps necessary to be taken after reaping the first crop, to prevent the greatest enemy of the farmer from invading the field. It has left in a defenceless state. I mean the pernicious weeds. He may prevent their growth by giving full possession of his virgin soil to the friendly plants, which would amply compensate him for this exclusive right. It is very easy for the cultivator of new land surrounded by woods, as the access to his fields is in the beginning almost confined to what he chooses to admit. The plants which were feeding on the soil previous to the destruction of the trees, indebted to them for their protection from the rays of the sun, are too weak to contend with plants intimately connected with and benefited by his powerful influence. They give up to the new comers, and, as a great agriculturist has observed, the indigenous weeds of this country are few, because the children of the forest, as well of the vegetable as of the animal tribes, fly the haunt of men." If then the improvident cultivator admits the foreign foe, he must be the sufferer, & submit to as much trouble in dispossessing this intruder as he had originally in removing the trees. This may account for the preference given to the clearing of new lands and increasing the profits so as to come one day strong in cash as well as in hands, to reconquer the invaded fields. It is true the temptation is great. The clearing of new land in this country has proved much less expensive and more beneficial than had been contemplated. It has been ascertained, that the clearing of an acre of our land, & sowing with wheat, will cost less than the working manuring and sowing with wheat, an acre in either of those rich counties Bucks or Westchester, which are in the neighborhood, the one of Philadelphia, the other of New York. In this calculation the price of the potash is deducted from the expense of clearing: but then the difference is such that the cultivator, if he is dexterous and fortunate in collecting the ashes, could with that difference pay the whole cost of his land.

Will the crop yield as much? Certainly, and on an average more.

If you want a new specimen of the great produce of those new fields, you will find it among other things this year in one of an hundred acres, belonging to that Cincinnatus we saw this morning with so much dexterity managing the plough. Several of the viewing Committee have given it as their opinion, that those hundred acres would yield between three and four thousand bushels. One of them has declared to me that he was sure it would not be less than four thousand.

This great advantage, instead of rendering the cultivator negligent of his new field, ought to prompt him to be more attentive to it; and it must be acknowledged that there are many by whom this attention has been bestowed, and they are the best farmers.

To those let me introduce the most valuable of all grasses, the Luzerne, which is the best defender of a rich soil against noxious weeds: but you must first deliver it free from them, and in a good state of cultivation; after which you may leave the Luzerne to work for its maintainance, and I may add more properly for your own. It is the first to come to the sustenance of your cattle in the Spring, and the last to abandon them in the Fall. You may safely calculate upon three or four crops during that time. Those who wish to give themselves to the clearing of new lands without abandoning the old, must cherish this plant, which can remain 12 or 15 years in the ground and give you abundant crops without any cultivation whatever. Much more—the Luzerne will, during that time, conquer for you a new soil, and offer you the yearly tribute it will draw from the depth of 3, 4 & 5 feet, and sometimes more. If at any time it is convenient, during the last six or eight years of its duration, to turn the field into grain, you will find the soil at least as productive as when first cleared, and without the help of manure. If you have allowed sufficient time for the stumps to rot, no field can offer more advantages to the farmer for many years to come.

As the Luzerne is a native of more southern countries, I thought proper, before recommending it, to make the trial of it myself. I planted it eight years ago in a place, rather unfavorable to its growth. On the 26th of May last, I brought to one of our committees of agriculture several stalks which averaged fourteen inches. Fifteen days after, the stalk of the same root measured 20 inches. One stalk of the same root, which had not been cut, measured 32 inches.

To those who have not been sparing enough of their fencing wood, I would recommend the planting of young hemlock to make hedges. I met with such, near Philadelphia, on the farm of Judge Peters, one of the most distinguished agriculturalists of the age, whose example alone must have great weight.

It was for some time visulted by many, who, after this country would ever become favorable to the growth of fruit trees. It is true, that, in many places, the first attempts were rather unsuccessful; but as those of a later date have proved more fortunate, I believe that all are convinced this early failure was owing to some temporary cause.—Perhaps it might have been found in the nature of that part of the soil that lay quite at the surface. Generally, to the depth of from six to ten inches, it is a black mould, made by the annual decomposition of the leaves of trees and small vegetables. This mould may be too highly charged with vegetable matter to afford nourishment to fruit trees. At any rate, it has been noticed by many, that though orchards have been planted on such land, and totally failed, yet a new attempt upon the same land, after ploughing several years, & warming it with animal manure, has been completely successful. Let this be as it may, it is now well ascertained that few countries in the world are more congenial to the growth of the apple, the plumb, many species of the cherry, and most of the smaller fruits, such as the strawberry, raspberry, and currant, which are found to grow luxuriantly, producing in the greatest abundance.

It is much to be regretted that so many have neglected this subject, since the result of late experiments must have effectually removed every doubt as to the success of future attempts.—The expense of planting an orchard it trivial, compared with its advantages, considering it merely as a source of profit. But the comfortable luxury it affords is of itself a sufficient inducement; and I might further add if necessary, that a man of spirit would draw encouragement from the circumstance, that a good orchard is the greatest ornament of a farm, and gives the stranger a favorable opinion of the wealth, taste, comfort and economy of the owner; while, on the contrary, the sight of a farm destitute of this useful improvement gives him the idea of barrenness & indolence. Those who have neglected the planting of fruit trees would do well to visit some of the flourishing orchards at a small distance from this village. There they would receive a lively reproof for the past, and great encouragement for amending in future. Some will regret that the owners of those fine orchards have not extended their industry to the cultivation of peach trees. Why would they not grow here, when many years ago, a number of these fruits arrived to their due maturity in one of the most northern positions of this country, at the old ferry upon the St. Lawrence? But I must give place to a judicious observation made by an experienced gardener lately come into this country: We do not let the roots of our fruit trees have a sufficient share off cold in the winter. Sometimes, before the ground is sufficiently frozen to reach the most nutritive roots of our fruit trees, the snow falls, and communicates a genial warmth to the earth, which accompanied with the moisture of the melting snow, starts the vegetation too early. Then comes the late frosts, which finding the trees too far advanced, gives them a check fatal to their production. The remedy offered is to take away in the early part of the winter, the snow which surrounds the more delicate of your fruit trees, the one for instance which produces the peach, so as to let the roots have their share of the cold. Then let the snow be the cover which will foster this protecting cold till a period more desirable for the vegetation of the trees.

The mangle worzel, a species of beet which grows remarkably well in this country, is allowed to be a most valuable food for milch cows, and is equally good for feeding pigs. It will prove, I hope, an advantageous addition to our culture.

I would recommend the yellow beet for the use of the table in preference to all others. It is better tasted and sweeter, and cattle of every kind are extremely fond of it. I have cultivated this plant with great success on my farm in France, where I make from it annually from twenty to twenty five thousand pounds of very good sugar. I am very far, however, from recommending it for that purpose, as the attempt upon a large scale would be ruinous here. The same objection prevails with great force, against cultivating the wine. It requires too much of the labor of man.

The ruta bags, or Swedish turnip, is still more valuable in the estimation of several good agriculturalists. It grows remarkably well in this country.

I have observed, in the wilderness of this country a species of the vine growing luxuriantly and producing in this wild state very abundantly. On mentioning the fact, I was surprised to learn that this particular species is very common; and I was further informed, that a species of grape much larger and better flavored, had been brought a considerable distance from the south, and found to flourish admirably well in this country. Though I am led to believe, from this circumstance, that the grape may be cultivated to advantage, I would not recommend it except as a raisin for the table. For wine, we have a substitute in the currant, which grows here to great perfection, and little expense of cultivation.

The fertility of our new lands, is the principal cause of our inattention to manure. You will agree with me, that it would be better to use none at all than to carry it on the soil in such a state as to introduce and nourish weeds. I would strongly recommend the mixture of lime with stable manure, by which means the seeds and other noxious substances are destroyed, and the quality of the manure improved. Plaster has not yet been sufficiently tried in this country. I have used it with great success in a sandy loam, from which I had this year three crops of clover. If you do not wish to go to the expense of Plaster, you may use lime, which has been employed with equal success, and which may be procured in great abundance in this county.

Among the various subjects to which I would call your attention, I cannot omit bees. In many of the extensive forests of America, these insects are found in a wild state; but in none of them are they found in greater abundance than in ours; a proof that our climate is perfectly congenial to them; and that the flowers of our forest afford them not only suitable but ample supplies of food. Though I am not able from experience to say much respecting them, yet from the circumstance of their being natives of this country, the ease and cheapness of keeping them, their wonderful increase and great industry in amassing such stores in so short a time, together with the various uses to which their honey is applied, afford motives sufficient for me to recommend them to the attention of the practical as well as the philosophical farmer.

The rearing of cattle is of great importance to the practical farmer; as being intimately connected with the prosperity of the country, will require the earliest and most persevering attention of this Society. I feel confident that our farmers, aided by their own good sense and native enterprise, and favored by the climate and soil, will make speedy and ample amends for their former inattention to this subject. A few of our most worthy and public spirited citizens yesterday exhibited specimens of cattle which would do honor to the oldest and most improved parts of our country. On recurring to these I think I may dispense with much that might otherwise have been necessary to say, in order to excite a spirit of general emulation.

Your dairies are susceptible of improvements, especially in the north of this county. You will find great encouragement in making butter and cheese; and your cattle will find in the woods, independently of your meadows a nourishment upon which they fatten very fast in the fall.

The effect of the manufactures upon our agriculture is generally known. The promising and satisfactory specimens we have of the product of this important branch of our industry, evinces that there is in this county a laudable spirit, which the reports of our committees, will, I trust, do ample justice, and render it unnecessary for me to dwell longer on a subject so highly interesting. Never will our fair county women appear more attractive than when adorned in the produce of their own industry; and their example will no doubt have, upon the community at large the most desirable effect.

LONDON, Oct. 26.

Dreadful Explosion.—About half past five o'clock on Thursday afternoon, the inhabitants between the Obelisk, St. George's fields, and the Asylum, were thrown into great consternation by a terrific explosion, occasioned by the ignition of a large quantity of gun-powder and detonating combustibles compounded into fire works, for Vauxhall Gardens.

The explosion happened in a large work shop, situated at the end of Mead place, used by Mr. Mortram, artist in fire works. The first alarm was produced by a most awful shock, which shattered the glass in the houses contiguous. A few seconds after, a boy and three men came out torn and blacked by the explosion in a shocking manner. They were taken instantly to the hospital. A second explosion blew off the roof, and a scene was presented to the spectators terrific beyond description.—Rockets, &c a variety of fire works, continued blazing and hurtling in a most surprising manner. The wood work of the building was in flames, and the dread of being shot or injured by the rockets which darted horizontally, kept the spectators a considerable distance from the burning pile. The report made by the explosion was heard a long way from the spot. The houses in the neighborhood were shaken, and thousands of persons ran with terror in their looks to ascertain the cause of the shock. The flames were unchecked, no person ventured to go near the shed. The fire works, of which there were a large quantity in a chest, kept up a continued discharge. Soon after 6 o'clock the conflagration was extinguished.

The woods have taken fire between Liverpool and Port Mutton, and burnt from Hansports to the western head. Eight buildings, 4 or 5 dwelling houses, all the crops of grain, &c. with an immense quantity of timber, have been burnt.

Means of intellectual improvement in London.— There are 407 places of worship; 4050 seminaries for education, including 237 parish charity schools; 8 societies for the express purpose of promoting morals; 12 societies for promoting the learned, the useful, and the polite arts; 122 asylums and alms-houses, for the helpless and indigent, including the philanthropic society for reclaiming criminal children; 30 hospitals and dispensaries for the sick and lame, and for delivering poor pregnant women; 700 friendly or benefit societies; about 30 institutions for charitable and humane purposes; about 80 institutions for teaching some thousands of poor children the arts of reading, writing, and arithmetic, on the plans introduced by Mr. Joseph Lancaster and the Rev. Dr. Bell; which several establishments, including the poor's rate, are supported at the almost incredible cost of one million per annum.

Cumberland and Westmoreland.

The amount of shares subscribed by the inhabitants of Carlisle alone, for the intended canal from that city to the Solway Frith, amount to nearly £20,000.

The Regent's Dock, Liverpool, on the site of the fort lately destroyed, will be ready for the reception of vessels in the space of eighteen months. The total cost will be one million sterling.

Derbyshire.—A magnificent new road from Cromford to Bakpor, along the banks of the Derwent, was opened on the 1st ult. A line of unequalled beauty is now opened for an extent of thirty five miles, and every hill of any importance is avoided.

A handsome bridge is about to be erected over the Severn, from Tewkesbury to Forthampton.

A society has been established in Bristol for the instruction of the labouring Irish in their native tongue, free from religious distinction.

Wales.—A bridge is about to be built over the Menai. It will, it is said, be 500 feet in the span, and superior to any of the kind in Europe.

A supplement of the Bombay Courier gives a very long and circumstantial account of the tremendous hurricane at Mauritius on the night of February 28, and the 1st of March last, extracted from a literary and philosophical journal, published in the Isle of France. We have not room for all the particulars of this calamity; but the following extracts may serve to show the violence of the tempest, and the dreadful ravages it committed.

During the last 33 years, our colony has experienced many storms, but none have created such distressing reflections as this last, because none has committed such great ravages. The hurricanes of 1761 & 1786, are hot to be compared to this. The state of the harbor, the buildings in the city and the country, and the barometrical observations, made at those times, affords incontestible proof of this. Some facts will suffice to complete the proof.

The theatre is a very large building. Its shape is that of T, of which the head forms a considerable front, since the back part, forming the tail of the T, is 53 feet by 82. If the building had been destroyed by the tempest, its destruction might have been attributed to the manner in which it had been constructed; but, what is scarcely credible, this immense back building, was moved more than 3 feet from its foundation. What a pendulous force must that have been which could move horizontally such a mass! Its blowing down would have been no extraordinary phenomenon; its removal it scarcely conceivable.

An unfinished house at its first story built of large pieces of hewn stone, the second was of small pieces. This second story was blown down, and the entire mass of the first story was moved several inches, on the second layer of stones from the ground. The stones were connected by mortar, and the house was of very large dimensions.

A warehouse, 123 feet by 34, built of hewn stone, with inner walls of separation, was blown down, and 3 blacks were killed and 30 wounded.

Mr. Suffield, post-master, occupied the country house of Miss Mcondon, at Meka. This house, long since built of stone, upon firm foundation, and having only a ground floor, seemed to be the safest asylum that it was possible to wish for under such circumstances. It had resisted without the slightest injury all the Storms which have happened since 1786, the period of its erection. The last storm destroyed it. An interesting family buried under the ruins of this large house; at the very moment they tried to save it, the father and mother seriously hurt, their second son crushed in their sight and killed on the spot; such is the frightful scene, whose recollection will for ever attest the violence of the tempest which caused it.

Upon a battery in the vicinity of the river Grande, two pieces of cannon, of large calibre, mounted on marine gun carriages, were found turned round in a direction the reverse of what they had been left the preceding evening.

It is easy moreover, to form an idea of the injury the plantations of every kind must have sustained, from the effect of the wind upon the strongest trees. It was never before heard of that a gust of wind was able to break down a tamarind tree. The extreme flexibility of the fibres of this tree give it prodigious strength. The young negroes are known to seek its fruits at the end of its slenderest twigs; these sometimes bend & bring them to the ground, in the manner of spring, but they never break. Nevertheless, several tamarind trees were broken off above the ground, in the hurricane of the 1st of March; many were torn up by the roots.

The article from which the preceding extracts are made, has the following philosophical and consolatory conclusion;

In conclusion, let us not forget, that if Barbadoes experienced, in 1780, all the most dreadful effects of such a phenomenon, it has since that period, during early 40 years, been exempt from a similar evil; and, it it the sad condition of our abode at Mauritius, that we must certainly be exposed periodically to the hurricanes of the tropicks, let us reckon from 1786 to 1818, and open our hearts to hope.

AGRICULTURAL.

Extract from an Address delivered before the Essex Agricultural Society, in May last by the Hon. Timothy Pickering.

In order to encourage the procuring and propagating of improved breeds of cattle, sheep, and swine, the Trustees of the State Society of Agriculture have instituted premiums for show of these animals, and given premiums for those deemed the best. I view it as a valuable institution.—But, with great deference I would enquire, whether giving rewards for the biggest and the fattest is the best mode of obtaining the most valuable breeds. Bakewell, that celebrated English breeder of cattle, sheep and swine, exercised his genius to produce such as were excellent in form, of sufficient size which yielded the greatest quantity of meat on the most valuable joints, and would grow and fatten on the smallest quantities of food. These circumstances will, I conceive, merit the attention of the Society, should it hereafter have the means of bestowing premiums of this sort. In the fattening of cattle & sheep there is a point to be attained at which their flesh will be of the best quality, and most valuable to the consumer. To go all beyond this, is waste of time and expence of their keeping?

The quality of cows is highly interesting to the farmer who makes butter and cheese. Some yield little of either, although giving much milk. And Dr Anderson mentions an instance of one cow from whose milk no butter could be made. She was purchased of a farmer who kept a large dairy, by a person who had no other cow, and thus the discovery was made. Thrown into the general mass, her milk had been useless and her keeping a dead loss to the farmer. Hence the doctor judiciously recommends the setting in a separate pan the milk of every cow, to ascertain its quality; that such as give meagre milk may be fattened and sent to the slaughter house.—This experiment will assist the farmer in selecting the cows most proper to be the parents of his future stock. Cows which, in equal times, make fatter calves than others, may be presumed to give richer milk, or greater quantities of a good quality; and the calves of such cows may be raised with a fair prospect of obtaining an improved breed.

I had often seen descriptive marks of a good cow; some appearing rational, others fanciful.—Once asked an observing neighbour, what marks determined his choice. "I look (said he) to the bag —if that be large, and the teats far apart, I am satisfied." I was struck with this answer. A cow's bag consists of four lobes, or dugs.

If these are large, the entire bag will be large and the teats far asunder.—After the famous Oakes cow had obtained the premium at the Cattle Show of 1816, I went purposely to see her.—On approaching near enough, I looked to her bag and teats. These were farther asunder than those of any cow I had ever seen; and her bag, of course, was of an extraordinary size. But her milk also was uncommonly rich. Mr. Oaks told me the veal of her calves had always been unusually fat. Mr Oaks not being a farmer, had not raised any of them. Probably the like disposition to fatten (depending, doubtless, as well on the offspring as on the dams) has thrown into the butcher's hands many fine calves and lambs which ought to have been saved as the surest means of obtaining the most valuable stock. Bakewell's wonderful improvements in live-stock were effected by his always selecting and keeping the best of breeders.

QUEBEC, Nov. 6 1818.

Unfortunate accident.—On Sunday evening last as Capt. Hannay of the Whaler of Liverpool and Capt. Wilson of the Stamper of London, were crossing the Upper Town Market place, they fell into the Cistern which is opening there. The depth is 14 feet and the bottom solid rock. Both of the Gentlemen were much hurt, but had no limbs broke, and we understand they are in a fair way of recovery. It is much to be regretted that more precaution is not taken in this Town, when excavations are made, to avoid the occurrence of similar misfortunes.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE.
YORK, Thursday, Dec. 3.

YORK, 30th Nov. 1818.

At the Annual Meeting of "The Society of Friends to the Stranger in Distress," the greater part of the principal subscribers being assembled, Major Hillier informed the meeting of His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor's regret, that his indisposition would prevent his being present.

The following Report of the Treasurer was then received and adopted.

REPORT.

The Treasurer regrets, that during the past year very few new Members have enrolled their names in the books of the Society. But altho' we cannot yet boast of a great accession in point of numbers, we have to congratulate ourselves on the countenance of two illustrious personages, whose rank enables them to confer honour on any association; and whose patronage gives a sanction to our views and a dignity to our labours, which cannot fail of being soon followed by a great addition of active associates.

His Grace the Duke of Richmond hearing of this Society, and approving most highly of the benevolent principles by which it is directed, with a noble promptitude characteristic of his generous disposition and eagerness to promote every institution really beneficial, ordered a munificent donation to be sent to the Treasurer.

His Excellency Sir Peregrine Maitland has not only consented to take the Society under his special protection, but feels much gratified to find that an establishment so much wanted in the present times, had already commenced its operations. To render its labours more effectual, he has sent the Treasurer his first year's Subscription of twenty pounds.

It will be seen, from inspecting the detailed account, that the labours of the Society have been unremitted; and it is humbly hoped, much good actually effected. Large sums were not required. It was frequently sufficient to supply them that could work till employment could be found. At other times, the first month's rent of a House to shelter them, was received as the most ample mode of administering relief.

Towards the Autumn, much sickness prevailed in the families of Emigrants; especially among the children, which has called for peculiar attention, and been accompanied with much distress, which the Society could not relieve. Some families have lost two or three children, and in a few instances, one of the Parents has fallen a sacrifice to disease.

As the seeds of the disorders which occasioned these deaths, were for the most part laid in the privations experienced by the Emigrants in coming up the river; it may be worthy of the consideration of this Society, to examine whether means can be found to avoid the great delays to which these strangers have been exposed, and to supply them with wholesome provisions during the journey.

To facilitate their arrival at the several places of their destination, would in many instances, be the most effectual mode of affording them relief, as they are not only exposed to severe cold from delay, but to a serious additional expence.

Among the numerous families assisted during the season, a few are chosen for particular notice in order to furnish invincible proofs of the advantages of this association.

Mr. Clumley, a decayed Irish gentleman, arrived in March last to procure land for himself and family. His appearance proved that he had seen better days. His family consisted, he said, of nine sons and five daughters. Four or five of his sons were with him. He had been so unfortunate as to get shipwrecked on his way out; by which he lost the little property he was bringing to the country. Being entirely reduced, it would have been impossible for him to have remained long enough to arrange his business that every exertion was made to get it through, but for the benevolence of this Society. At different times he was assisted, while he remained in town, and money given him to bear his expences down to the Bay of Quinte. His sons labored where they could get employment, that they might not be burdensome; and Mr. Clumley departed, expressing the sincerest thanks for the seasonable aid that he had received.

The Scotts, two brothers and their families came out last year from England. Their trades, Pinnabers and Glaziers, is of little demand in this country; they were helpless, except at their particular business, altho' not, in other respects, deficient of intelligence. They had been assisted before the last annual meeting, but not having courage to go upon their lands, they continued in town. Having little or no employment during the winter, their wives were obliged to exert themselves beyond their strength; and one of them whose health had been delicate, became sick. This disheartened them entirely, and they became anxious to return home. The affection which they had for one another, their mildness and patient endurance of hardship, interested many of the most respectable families in their behalf, so that much private assistance was afforded them during the poor woman's sickness. At length the woman died.—This made the country hateful to them all, for they appeared bound up in each other, and nothing could prevail upon them to remain.

Mrs. Chief Justice Powell had been particularly kind to these two families; and from the interest she took in their welfare, the Treasurer requested her assistance in supplying them with some necessaries previous to their departure for England; Mrs. Powell had the goodness to comply, and a small sum of money was judiciously expended for their benefit under her direction.

George Wilson, an emigrant from England, has had 22 children, of whom eleven are still living; found himself, after obtaining his land, destitute of money to carry him to Smith's Creek, where he had left his family. He requested barely enough to defray his expences on the way; and on receiving six dollars was very grateful, saying, that he would have something to purchase bread for his children on his arrival. On being asked how he could get forward with such a large family: he said, very well, he could turn his hand to any thing, and had already secured employment as a joiner for some months. The cheerfulness of this poor man, his confidence in his exertions thro' the divine blessing as well as his thankfulness, made it extremely agreeable to assist him.

James and Colin Ruthven, from Argyleshire, were on their way with many others to col. Talcot's settlements. They had their aged Parents with them, and six children. From the length of their passage and tediousness of the river navigation, they had spent all their money, and were in debt for their passage across the Lake. They appeared to be pious christians, possessed of great honesty and simplicity of heart. The tenderness which they manifested for their parents, was extremely affecting. Their provisions were all exhausted; the ship was ready to sail, and they ingenuously confessed, that they had been already so burdensome to their fellow passengers, that they were ashamed to ask of them any further aid. T[illegible] some talking all these things into consideration, found himself under the necessity of acting promptly, and of exceeding the ordinary powers vested in him, by giving sixteen dollars to the three families. Their eyes filled in receiving this bounty, and they departed with grateful hearts, blessing this humane institution.

The calls of our own poor with several appeals from other districts, which could not be resisted, have produced demands beyond our present means.—The Treasurer has therefore lent £20 from the funds of this Society to administer assistance to the poor, and to be repaid as soon as circumstances will permit, for which he deems himself responsible, unless relieved by a vote of this Society.

One charge appears on the Treasurer's account which requires some explanation. It will be recollected, that Henry Werther was relieved very liberally from the funds of the Loyal and Patriotic Society, and with a promise of further assistance if required. Werther died at a very advanced age, and his wife was reported to be near her departure. No provision was therefore made for her in particular in exhibiting accounts of this Society. A few days ago her son came down, requesting assistance; saying, that his Mother was still alive, that she was [illegible] hundred and one years old. The Treasurer considered himself bound to give assistance to the extent required, which was sufficiently moderate, as he had a claim on the Patriotic Fund, which has been transferred to this Society.

In virtue of the sentiments expressed at the last General Meeting, and the powers vested in him, the Treasurer has remitted £50 in aid of the Funds of the Compassionate Society, at Kingston.

Some small exertions having been made at Cornwall, the Treasurer has likewise remitted £50 to that place; and notice was given, that another aid would be promptly afforded to Brockville, should an application be formed there for the relief of Strangers in Distress.

The Treasurer has received from the Loyal and Patriotic Society, the sum of £200 in aid of the funds of this Society, which enables him to announce to this Meeting the agreeable intelligence, that the balance in his hands amounts to £392 5 5 1-2. This sum tho' very considerable, will, without rigid economy, be soon expended.

In many cases, the Treasurer acted at the solicitation of Subscribers.—Inditers, from seeing and examining the parties; but he feels it necessary to say, for discovering them in part, and relieving him from some degree of responsibility and trouble, but likewise to make it more satisfactory to the Society and the public at large, that a Committee be chosen to distribute the Benevolence of this Association, of which he is willing to be one. By going to the abodes of wretchedness, entering into the feelings of those to be relieved, soothing them under disappointments and privations, and giving their tickets on the Treasurer according to the necessities of the object to be assisted, and within the limits prescribed by the Constitution, the value of the donation would be greatly enhanced. Indeed the smallest sum, aided by the countenance and personal attention of the members would prove a blessing, both to the Giver and Receiver.

All which, is respectfully submitted by

JOHN STRACHAN.

The Hon. Chief Justice Powell moved, that the Hon. Dr. Strachan, Dr. Macaulay, & William Allan, Esqr. be a Committee to distribute the funds of the Society. Which was adopted.

The Hon. the Chief Justice also moved, that the thanks of this Society be given to the Hon. Dr. Strachan, for his exertions and great attention to further the objects of the Institution. Carried unanimously.

OF UPPER-CANADA.

YORK, Friday 27th Nov. 1818.

At 3 o'clock this day, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor proceeded in State to the Legislative Council Chamber, where the House of Assembly having been summoned to attend, His Excellency gave the Royal Assent to the Bills mentioned below, and closed the Session with the following

SPEECH:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

IT does not appear that any alteration has occurred in the state of His Majesty's indisposition.

I am satisfied that the Public Business has received a due share of your diligent attention.

You have afforded seasonable aid to the Constitution, by your Bill, entitled, "An Act for preventing Certain Meetings within this Province." It is a subject for deep regret that the Constitution should have stood in need of such aid: but let us hope that the good disposition of His Majesty's Subjects will put an early period to this unhappy necessity.

If any portion of the People of this Province be indeed aggrieved, they are well aware that a dutiful Petition, proceeding from themselves, would find easy access to the foot of His Majesty's Throne.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I thank you, in the name of His Majesty, for the supplies you have granted for the service of the current, and of the ensuing year.

In future, I hope to relieve you from the annual demand for the support of the Surveyor General's Department.

You have added to the Character of the Province by the unanimous expression of sentiments which are highly worthy of the enlightened Representatives of a free and generous People. I could not refuse myself the pleasure of assmitting your Resolutions to His Majesty's Government, well convinced that they would prove grateful to the Royal Personage who presides over it, and confident that they will be received with affectionate approbation by every description of your fellow subjects in the Mother Country.

Honorable Gentlemen, and Gentlemen,

There are a few objects of general importance, which, had the Public Mind been tranquil, should have brought before you early in the Session. Of these, I shall mention one, which appears to me to require in a peculiar degree your calm and deliberate consideration: I mean the providing of a remedy for the unequal pressure of the Road Laws. By offering at present this subject to your notice, I hope to benefit by the attention you will be pleased to bestow upon it during the recess."

After which, the Honorable the Speaker of the Legislative Council, announced that the Parliament was Prorogued to the 2d of January next.

Bills which have received the Royal Assent.

The unanimous church of errors has received [illegible] on the subject of the result of the [illegible] war. But the evening [illegible] received with delight at an American paper, containing the President's Message, of which, however, we have only a hasty perusal: the gentleman who possessed it, being on the point of leaving town. The following is a very slight sketch.

The President congratulates the country on the [illegible] which they enjoy from the abandonment of the views of the [illegible] parties, state or sectional, and recommends a [illegible] of peace and unity with other nations.

That the actual [illegible] of their disputes remains [illegible] the [illegible] tion between Great Britain and the States, preventing a commercial intercourse; at the same time, to embrace all the objects formerly in dispute, is necessary. He therefore [illegible] that it was previously agreed, that the existing convention should be continued for not less than eight years.

The relations with [illegible] are stated to be entirely as they were at the close of the last Session.—

As all the documents relating to Gen. Jackson's taking possession of Florida, are to appear before the Congress, further detail is considered unnecessary.

The course, hitherto pursued with respect to the South American Provinces, is recommended to be adhered to.

After satisfying all demands under existing appropriations, including the total extinction of the 6 per cent stock, and the redemption of a moiety of the Louisiana debt; there will be upwards of 2 millions of dollars in the Treasury on the 1st of Jan. next.

The revenue progressively increasing, while the expenditure will probably remain stationary.

The measures of defence, in erecting fortifications, and [illegible] fortifications, and [illegible] to keep them in order.

The Message then adverts to Cessions of Land from the Indians, and Military establishments to keep them in order—the Naval force in the Mediterranean—the addition of the state of Illinois to the Union—and to the peculiar government of the Columbian District.

ADDRESS OF THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY CONCLUDED FROM OUR LAST.

Gentlemen of the Society :

I do not know a more laudable end our society could have in view than that of preventing the use of ardent spirits. I wish I could without tiring the patience of my audience, represent here all their pernicious effects upon the human mind and body. Poverty and ruin, crimes and infamy, diseases and death, would be found the leading features in this woeful detail.

Every reflecting man is sensible of the infinite advantages which would result in favor of humanity and of morality, if some efficient plan were devised for preventing the too general use of spirituous Liquors. To those who believe, that they increase the strength, and fortify the body against fatigue and hardship, I would oppose the opinion of many observing and experienced men, particularly the celebrated General Moreau, who asserts, that from long experience in his army, he has found, that those soldiers who abstained entirely from the use of ardent spirits, and used altogether water, beer, or such simple drinks, were not only more healthy, but much stronger, could endure greater fatigue, were much more moral, more obedient to orders, and in a word, much better soldiers. Rather, spirituous liquors are really so injurious to the health and morals of men, what reason can be alledged for continuing the use of them, and who will be their advocate ?

Gentlemen of the Society :

The incalculable advantages resulting from agricultural societies seem to be daily better understood, and regarded with increasing favor. If there are any who do not view these institutions in their proper light, let them attend to the wonderful advantages produced by them in the most enlightened nations of Europe. Let them contemplate England, since Sir John Sinclair, that great benefactor of his country, by his example and indefatigable exertions, not only prompted the most eminent men of all ranks, but also the government, to give the greatest encouragement to agriculture. In France, also, they will find still more powerful causes of conviction, though that nation has not arrived to the same degree of improvement as its rival. This in fact could not be expected, if we take into consideration the time when the greatest impulsion was given. During a most cruel civil war, when millions of hands were taken from the culture of the earth, and when the finest provinces of France were exposed to cruel devastation, encouraged by private and public exertions, agriculture made an astonishing progress. At no time did cultivation so far extend its progress, nor industry so multiply its products. The foreigner, who after reading the dreadful history of the sufferings of revolutionary France, traverses her extensive plains, her valleys and sloping hills which display the greatest fertility, and exhibit the happy scenes of rural and pastoral life, is tempted to suspect the testimony of his own eyes, and to believe, that he has been seduced by the charms of a pleasant dream.

The difference of climate, government and habits, might, however, present an objection to the above cited examples.

In my first address I attempted to prove, that no country in the world was more to be benefited by institutions for the promotion of agriculture and manufactories than these United States.—Permit me now to refer you to existing facts, which are almost under your eyes. The association of Otsego county, being now only at its second exhibition, is of too recent a date to present improvements equal to Berkshire, which began in 1811. Yet in its rapid success, we may find great encouragement, and sufficient cause for anticipating the greatest benefits, by treading in its steps. But, to carry conviction still further, I will here, gentlemen, give you a word for word a statement of the prosperous situation of Berkshire in October 1817, made by the President of the agricultural society of that county: "Only 6 years ago the agricultural concerns of the county were stationary. Few, if any valuable improvements were attempted. Indifference and unconcern seem to have prevaded society. In 1811, the genius of the county shook off the slumbers of our husbandmen, and the spirit of improvement commenced. Under the auspices of your association a career of usefulness was resumed and diligently prosecuted. The former state of things has given way to a new condition, unfolding on its improvements, in variety and usefulness surpassing the most sanguine expectations. Every department of rural employment demonstrates an intelligent cultivation and effectual good management. In the selection and rearing of domestic animals, more correct information prevails, and greater emulation is awakened. The cost increase, variety and excellence in our crops, satisfy our warmest desires, and leave us nothing to envy in the most favored regions of the west." Only six years, gentlemen, have been sufficient to work these wonders ; and yet I must observe, that they for a long time labored under great disadvantages, before they could obtain the legislative aid they were soliciting.

There is every reason to hope that we shall obtain, in a much more reasonable time, this needful assistance ; and our hopes are consecrated in the excellent speech of that distinguished statesman, whose presence here, while it merits our acknowledgements, confirms us in the opinion that he is guided by the maxims of the great Fabricius of Prussia, that "the first magistrate ought to have a constant attention to agriculture, to promote plenty and encourage industry and commerce."

The Legislature, during their last Session, evinced a very favorable disposition, which cannot but receive additional force on witnessing the sentiments which prevail ; nor can we believe, that a state producing so much talent and appropriating so much money to facilitate the transportation of produce would neglect the most efficient means for creating an abundance of that commodity ; an object which could not be compassed more effectually than by adopting measures for the support of agricultural societies.

We trust the happy period is approaching, when these societies, as also boards of agriculture, will be instituted in every state. In the midst of them I see rising preeminent, the national board of agriculture, as the fountain to which all information will arrive, and from which it will be diffused throughout the Union. May we yet hail the glorious day, when such an institution, like the sun in his splendor, shall diffuse light, animation and fertility wherever its influence shall extend—Then this country will have attained the summit of true happiness by securing her glorious independence for ever.

NEW-YORK, Oct. 23.

In the National Intelligencer of Saturday last, is a long article under the editorial head, on the subject of our late Indian War, written, it would seem, in answer to remarks which have occasionally appeared on that subject in British Newspapers. From the general style, matter, and manner of this publication we are led to conclude, that it is a Cabinet production. It is not our intention at the present time, to go into an examination of the general train of reasoning, or remark, contained in it. We mention it only for the purpose of noticing a single feature of it. Towards the close of it, a passage is quoted from the Message of President Madison to Congress in 1816, subjoined to which is the following remark of the author—

"The essence of our policy towards the Indians, is contained in the above extract and in the following, from the messages of distinguished magistrates"—

He then quotes the following passage from the message of President Monroe, at the opening of the session of Congress the last winter—

"The barrier state can exist only in the vast uncultivated desert. It yields to the more dense and compact form and greater force of civilized population ; and of right ought to yield, for the earth was given to mankind to support the greatest number of which it is capable ; and no tribe or people have a right to withhold from the wants of others more than is necessary for its own support and comfort."

The writer concludes with the following remark—" This policy is bottomed upon principles of Justice and humanity, and is, in all its features, at variance with that interest which influences the proceedings of foreign agents, in instigating these untutored people to make war against the United States."

A more extraordinary sentiment, either in politics or morals, than is contained in the above extract from the Presidential message, we have no recollection of having ever met with. It did not escape our notice at the time it was delivered ; but we did not expect to see it reproduced, at a subsequent period, as containing the essential principles of our policy with regard to the Indians. Where did Mr. Monroe learn the position which he here lays down, that— "the earth was given to mankind to support the greatest number of which it is capable?" If it be true as regards us and the Indians, it is equally true as it regards other tribes and people, of whatever language and complexion. If because we are more numerous and more powerful than the Indians, we have therefore a right to exterminate them, for this is the true doctrine here laid down, any other nation, Great Britain for example, if more crowded at home, and more powerful would have the same right to say to us, "you have more land than you want, we are cribbed at home by too small limits, make way for us if you please, and let us take charge of your superfluous territory." Indeed, what prevents the application of this doctrine to the affairs of individuals,—for it is precisely as humane and just in private life as in public ? Why may not the inhabitants of our cities, who are wedged up in narrow streets, and on lots of 25 feet by 100, say to the immense land holders of our new state, and territories, " the place we inhabit is too strait for us, surrender to us a few thousand of your desert acres, for the earth was given to mankind to support twenty times the number of its present family—the principle we contend for is self-evident upon Justice and humanity."

Indeed if there were any justice or humanity in the principle contained in this policy, it could never be allowed to operate in this country until our own limits shall become so crowded, as to require breathing room in the Indian territory.—Such a state of things can certainly never occur within several centuries to come. We have more territory than we can fill to such an extent, as that it can be said to support all that it is capable of, for five hundred years.

But there is no justice in the principle—on the contrary, it is directly opposed to the plainest principles of right, of justice, and of property. Carried in to effect, it would establish an Agrarian law among nations, tribes, and people—it would lead to wars of the worst character—it would be a constant temptation to strong nations to oppress, plunder, enslave, and destroy, weak ones—it would repeal all the laws of nations and national intercourse, and substitute in their stead unceasing hostilities, and the most sanguinary and ferocious spirit of plunder and devastation.

Interesting news from the Polar Expedition.

At length the official despatches from the ships employed on the Discovery of the North-west Passage have been received, and we understand are most satisfactory.—They are dated July 25, at which time the Isabella and the Alexander were in lat. 75 deg. 30 min N. long. 60 deg. 30 min. W. well over to the American coast, the weather serene and perfectly clear. The variations repeatedly made on board both ships, was 89 deg. and the dip 84 deg. 30 min. which led them to conclude, that they were approaching very nearly to the magnetic pole. It had been perfectly calm : the sea was as smooth as glass for 5 or 4 days, and the current drifted them to the South-eastward, which raised their hopes of an open passage round the point of America, from which quarter it appear to proceed. All the way up the middle of Davis Straits, they skirted an unbroken field of ice on the left, but as they proceeded it became thinner, and apparently rotten, and they were sanguine that the moment the breeze sprung up, the ice to the westward would open to them a passage, & allow them to reach the northern shores of America.—The utmost harmony prevailed among the officers and every part of the ship's company, and all were in perfect health. Such is the substance of the accounts that we have been able to learn. There are abundance of private letters to the friends and relations of those who have embarked in this most important and interesting enterprize. The following is an extract of one :

From his Majesty's ship Isabella, at sea, lat. 75, 25, long. 60, 7, variation 88, 45.—July 25

Dear Dunn,—This is our last opportunity this year, therefore I could not let it pass without writing, although nothing has passed since my last. We are now to the northward of all the ships that are sailing ; we see some a long way astern, the boat with despatches is going immedi- to one of them ; they have followed it way this year, and have been very kind in giving us every assistance when in the ice : I sincerely wish them all safe back ; they have a long way to go through the ice. The coast begins to look more and more miserable : as we get north, it has more the appearance of a chain of ice mountains than land ; the sea is one solid field of ice as far as the eye can reach. When the wind blows from the north, we find narrow passages in it, and through them we pass on : sometimes the whole of our men are on the ice, dragging the ship along the edge of the same. From the great variation, we cannot be a great way from the Magnetic pole ; you will see the variation by our last observation on the head of the letter.

P. S. I cannot yet say any thing about the success of our voyage ; the season I think is favorable. Young H——— and I had a long hunt after a large Bear the other day, but he got away from us. I shall have some long stories to tell you when I see you next.

ACCOUNT OF THE COMMERCE OF PERU.

From a work just published, we present our readers with the subjoined account of the commerce of Peru, a territory which from the number of fine ports along its coast, may, as the author observes, be styled the maritime province of the South American States :—

"The trade flows through three Channels—by the Straits of Magellan from Europe; through the North Pacific from India and Mexico, or Guatimala ; and through the interior with the southern provinces of Chili, and Buenos Ayres. Since the trade was unshackled in 1778, its exports have doubled, and the principal branch of commerce is that carried on round Cape Horn.

"The exports of Peru are chiefly gold, silver, brandies, sugar, pimento, cinchona, vicuna wool, coarse woollens, and other trifling manufactures.

"Its imports are European goods, linens, cottons, woollens, silks, iron, hard ware, superfine cloths, mercery ware, paper, glass, medicines, wines, liquors, books, and furniture ; from Buenos Ayres it receives Paraguay tea, live cattle, and provisions, and from the other internal provinces, cocoa-leaf, indigo, tallow, cacao timber, cordage, pitch, and copper.

"Chili also supplies Lima with grain and fruits in immense quantities, and salted meat, soap, wine and copper, saffron, &c.

"The ports of Peru which are most frequented, are those named Arica, Ilo, Iquique, and Quilca, in the intendency of Arequipa, and Pisco, to the south of Lima, Chancay and Guacho, in Lima ; and Guanchaco, Pacasmayo, and Paita, in Truxillo, on the north.

"With the southern ports, the trade is in wine, brandy, iron, dried fruits, copper, tin, lead, &c. ; with the northern, in wool, cotton, leather, chocolate, rice and salted fish.

"To the Rio de la Plata the exports are maize, sugar, brandy, pimento, indigo and woollens ; these exports are said to amount to $2,000,000 annually, and the imports from that government to $560,000, consisting in mules, sheep, hams, tallow, wool, cotton-leaf, paraguay tea, and tin ; and 20,000 mules driven annually from Tucuman, for the service of the Peruvian mines. A great trade is also carried on with Guayaquil and Guatimala, but with Panamait is almost nothing.

"From the Philippine islands, muslins, tea and other East India goods, are imported, amounting to $270,230 annually, in return for about 1,890,000 exported to Asia, in silver and gold.

"The produce of the mines of Peru, including those of Chili, is about £2,730,000, annually, whilst the value of European goods imported is nearly £2,492,000 in the same period ; and the value of the agricultural produce exported of Peru and Chili, is £956,000.

"In this country the population is much scattered, and composed of castes who have the greatest distrust of each other, the Indians being most numerous, and leading a life of indolence and apathy ; the natural resources of this fine region are unheeded ; and its commerce, far from being restricted by the government, suffers only from the inactivity of its inhabitants."

The French are varying the kaleidoscope in every possible mode. One artist announces the addition of ornament to this jeujou, which he names a Polanoscope, and fills with shade portraits of dear beings ; another sells his the Diorama figurative, and furnishes bouquets, flower baskets, fruits, &c.

A new mode of mending a pen.—Scrape the sides and the upper and under parts, instead of cutting ; the point may sometimes require cutting, but seldom. This mode has been tried with complete success, and may be performed by any one. The cutting mode requires dexterity, to avoid taking away too much at so fine a part as the two points.

Second Crop.—Mr. William Steward, of Bucks county, (Penn.) has, the present season, raised two crops of pease ; the pease were put into the ground last spring and got perfectly ripe, were gathered, threshed and again put into the same ground, and have produced the second crop. The same gentleman has raised two crops of beans in the same manner. The same thing has been done this year in the District of Maine with regard to pease, as mentioned in a late paper.

Good effect of lime.—Mr. Cornelius Maiman, of White Plains, Bucks county, limed eleven acres of land, thirty-five bushels to the acre, planted the same with corn, and raised eighty-two bushels per acre, more than was ever raised on the same land.

The Boston Intelligencer noticing the late cattle show at Brighton, says—" Three years since the bravest fat animal exhibited in Brighton did not exceed 1300 wt. and the present year ten head of fat cattle have been brought forward for premiums, one of which weighed 2700 wt. seven others upwards of 2100 wt. each, and the smallest above 1800 wt. each.—There were seventy different animals exhibited.

Prolific.—On Saturday evening, 3d instant, the wife of Mr. Henry Card, of Deer Island, N. B. was safely delivered of four perfect and well-grown daughters. We are sorry to add, that they survived but a few hours.—Eastport Cent.]

Extraordinary product.—It is mentioned in the Philadelphia American Daily Advertiser, that the proceeds of two pumpkin seeds, planted in May last, were gathered last week, on the ground of the late Dr. Bear, Germantown, when it appeared that the exact weight of the whole was fifteen hundred and twenty eight pounds nine, of which, one vine 42 feet four inches in circumference and weighed 134 lbs.—There were several others nearly as large. We have heard of no increase in any part of the U.S. which has exceeded this, at any time, or in any seasons.—Com. Adv.

French Military Camp.—The Washington City Gazette states, that "about seven leagues up the river Trinity, and in the vicinity of the ground chosen by Gen. Lallemand for his military camp, is a town, containing near 500 houses, occupied by Indians and Spaniards, called Trinity, distant from St. Antonio, in the Province of Mexico, about 120 leagues. The number of Lallemand's followers still keeps increasing, by the addition of fugitive Africanes, who find an asylum in this establishment. Neither provisions, money, or arms, are said to be wanting ; and the Patriot generals, cruising in the Gulph of Mexico, depredate their supplies principally, from the merchants of the West Indies, at this point, between whom and the new settlers the most friendly relations subsist."

From the United States.

FROM THE ALBANY GAZETTE.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.

This day, at twelve o'clock, the President of the United States transmitted to both Houses of Congress, by his Secretary, Mr. J. J. Monroe, the following

MESSAGE:

Fellow Citizens of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives,

The auspicious circumstances under which you will commence the duties of the present session, will lighten the burthen, inseparable from the high trust committed to you. The fruits of the earth have been unusually abundant; commerce has flourished; the revenue has exceeded the most favorable anticipation; and peace and amity are preserved with foreign nations, on conditions just and honorable to our country. For these inestimable blessings, we cannot but be grateful to that Providence which watches over the destinies of nations.

As the term limited for the operation of the commercial convention with Great Britain will expire early in the month of July next, and it was deemed important that there should be no interval, during which, that portion of our commerce which was provided for by that convention, should not be regulated, either by arrangement between the two governments, or by the authority of Congress, the minister of the United States at London was instructed, early in the last summer, to invite the attention of the British government to the subject, with a view to that object. He was instructed to propose, also, that the negociation which it was wished to open, might extend to the general commerce of the two countries, and to every other interest and unsettled difference between them; particularly those relating to impressment, the fisheries, and boundaries, in the hope that an arrangement might be made, on principles of reciprocal advantage, which might comprehend and provide, in a satisfactory manner, for all these high concerns. I have the satisfaction to state, that the proposal was received by the British government in the spirit which promoted it; and that a negociation has been opened at London, embracing all those objects. On full consideration of the great extent and magnitude of the trust, it was thought proper to commit it to not less than two of our distinguished citizens, and, in consequence, the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States, at Paris, have been associated with our envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at London; to both of whom corresponding instructions have been given, and they are now engaged in the discharge of its duties. It is proper to add, that, to prevent any inconvenience resulting from the delay incident to a negociation of so many important subjects, it was agreed, before entering on it, that the existing convention should be continued for a term not less than eight years.

Our relations with Spain remain nearly in the state in which they were at the close of the last session. The convention of 1802, providing for the adjustment of a certain portion of the claims of our citizens for injuries sustained by spoliation, and so long suspended by the Spanish government, has at length been ratified by it; but no arrangement has yet been made for the payment of another portion of the claims, not less extensive or well founded, or for other classes of claims, or for the settlement of boundaries. These subjects have again been brought under consideration, in both countries, but no agreement has been entered into respecting them. In the mean time, events have occurred, which clearly prove the ill effect of the policy, which that government has so long pursued, on the friendly relations of the two countries, which, it is presumed, is at least of as much importance to Spain as to the United States to maintain. A state of things has existed in the Floridas, the tendency of which has been obvious to all who have paid the slightest attention to the progress of affairs in that quarter. Throughout the whole of those provinces to which the Spanish title extends, the government of Spain has hardly been felt. Its authority has been confined, almost exclusively, to the walls of Pensacola and St. Augustine, within which only small garrisons have been maintained. Adventurers from every country, fugitives from justice, and absconding slaves, have found an asylum there. Several tribes of Indians, strong in the number of their warriors, remarkable for their ferocity, and whose settlements extend to our limits, inhabit those provinces. These different hordes of people, connected together, disregarding, on the one side, the authority of Spain, and protected on the other, by an imaginary line which separates Florida from the United States, have violated our laws prohibiting the introduction of slaves, have practised various frauds on our revenue, and committed every kind of outrage on our peaceable citizens, which their proximity to us enabled them to perpetrate. The invasion of Amelia Island last year, by a small band of adventurers, not exceeding one hundred & fifty in number, who seized it from the inconsiderable Spanish force stationed there, and held it several months, during which, a single feeble effort only was made to recover it, which failed, clearly proves how completely extinct the Spanish authority had become, as the conduct of those adventurers, while in possession of the island, as distinctly shows the pernicious purposes for which their combination had been formed.

This country, had in fact, become the theatre of every species of lawless adventure.—With little population of its own, the Spanish authority almost extinct, and the colonial government in a state of revolution, having no pretension to it, and sufficiently employed in their own concerns, it was a great measure derelict, and the object of cupidity to every adventurer. A system of buccaneering was rapidly organized over it, which menaced, in its consequences, the lawful commerce of every nation, and particularly of the United States, while it presented a temptation to every people, on whose seduction its success principally depended. In regard to the United States, the pernicious effect of this unlawful combination was not confined to the ocean; the Indian tribes have constituted the effective force in Florida. With those tribes these adventurers had formed at an early period, a connection, with a view to avail themselves of that force to promote their own projects of accumulation and aggrandizement. It is to the interference of some of these adventurers in misrepresenting the claims and titles of the Indians to land, and in practising on their savage propensities, that the Seminole war is principally to be traced. Men who thus connect themselves with savage communities, and stimulate them to war, which is always attended on their part with acts of barbarity the most shocking, deserve to be viewed in a very different light than the savages. They would certainly have no claim to an immunity from the punishment, which, according to the rules of warfare practised by the savages, might justly be inflicted on the savages themselves.

If the embarrassment of Spain prevented her from making an indemnity to our citizens, for so long a time, from her treasury, for their losses by spoliation, and otherwise, it was always in her power to have provided it, by the cession of this territory. Of this, her government has been repeatedly apprized; & the cession was the more to be anticipated, as Spain must have known that, in ceding it, she would, in effect, cede what had passed into the hands of the U. States, and would likewise relieve herself from the important obligations secured by the treaty of 1795, and all other compromitments respecting it. If the United States, from consideration of these embarrassments, declined pressing their claims in a spirit of hostility, the motive ought, at least, to have been duly appreciated by the government of Spain. It is well known to her government, that other powers have made the United States an indemnity for like losses, sustained by their citizens at the same epoch.

There is nevertheless a limit beyond which this spirit of amity and forbearance, can, in no instance be justified. It it was proper to rely on amicable negociation, for an indemnity for losses, it would not have been so, to have permitted the inability of Spain to fulfil her engagements, and to sustain her authority in the Floridas, to be perverted by foreign adventurers & savages, to purposes so destructive to the lives of our fellow citizens, and the highest interests of the United States. The right of self defence never ceases. It is among the most sacred, and alike necessary to nations & to individuals. And, whether the attack be made by Spain herself, or by those who abuse her power, its obligation is not the less strong. The invaders of Amelia Island had assumed a popular and respected title, under which they might approach and wound us. As their object was distinctly seen, and the duty imposed on the executive by an existing law, was profoundly felt, that mask was not permitted to protect them. It was thought incumbent on the United States, to suppress the establishment, and it was accordingly done. The combination in Florida, for the unlawful purposes stated, the acts perpetrated by that combination, and above all, the incitement of the Indians to massacre our fellow citizens, of every age, and of both sexes, merited a like treatment and received it. In pursuing these savages to an imaginary line, in the woods, it would have been the height of folly to have suffered that line to protect them.—Had that been done, the war could never cease. Even if the territory had been exclusively that of Spain, and her power complete over it, we had a right, by the law of nations, to follow the enemy on it, and to subdue him there. But the territory belonged, in a certain sense, at least, to the savage enemy who inhabited it, the power of Spain had ceased to exist over it, and protection was sought, under her title, by those who had committed on our citizens, hostilities, which she was bound by treaty to have prevented, but had not the power to prevent. To have stopped at that line would have given new encouragement to these savages, & new vigor to the whole combination existing there, in the prosecution of all its pernicious purposes.

In suppressing the establishment at Amelia-Island, no unfriendliness was manifested towards Spain, because the post was taken from a force that had wrested it from her.—The measure, it is true, was not adopted in concert with the Spanish government, or those in authority under it, because, in transactions connected with the war, in which Spain and her colonies are engaged, it was thought proper, in doing justice to the United States to maintain a strict impartiality towards both the belligerent parties, without consulting or acting in concert with either. It gives me pleasure to state, that the governments of Buenos Ayres & Venezuela, whose names were assumed, have explicitly disclaimed all participation in these measures, and even the knowledge of them, until communicated by this government, and have also expressed their satisfaction, that a course of proceeding had been suppressed, which, if justly imputable to them, would dishonor their cause.

In authorising major general Jackson to enter Florida, in pursuit of the Seminoles, care was taken not to encroach on the rights of Spain. I regret to have to add, that, in executing this order, facts were disclosed, respecting the conduct of the officers of Spain, in authority there, in encouraging the war, furnishing munitions of war, and other supplies to carry it on, and in other acts not less marked, which evinced their participation in the hostile purposes of that combination, and justified the confidence, with which it inspired the savages, that by those officers they would be protected. A conduct so incompatible with the friendly relations existing between the two countries, particularly with the positive obligation of the 5th article of the treaty of 1795, by which Spain was bound to restrain, even by force, those savages from acts of hostility against the United States could not fail to excite surprise. The commanding general was convinced he should fail in his object, that he should, in effect, accomplish nothing, if he did not deprive those savages of the resource on which they had calculated, and of the protection on which they had relied, in making the war. As all the documents, relating to this occurrence, will be laid before congress, it is not necessary to enter into further detail respecting it.

Although the reasons which induced major gen. Jackson to take these posts were duly appreciated, there was, nevertheless, no hesitation in deciding on the course which it became the government to pursue. As there was reason to believe that the commanders of these posts had violated their instructions, there was no disposition to impute to their government a conduct so unprovoked & hostile. An order was in consequence issued to the general in command there, to deliver the posts; Pensacola, unconditionally to any person duly authorized to receive it; and St. Marks, which is in the heart of the Indian country, on the arrival of a competent force to defend it against those savages and their associates.

In entering Florida to suppress this combination, no idea was entertained of hostility to Spain, and however justifiable the commanding general was in consequence of the misconduct of the Spanish officers, in entering St. Marks & Pensacola, to terminate it, by proving to the savages & their associates, that they should not be protected even there; yet, the amicable relations existing between the United States and Spain could not be altered by that act alone. By ordering the restitution of the posts, those relations were preserved. To a change of them, the power of the executive is deemed incompetent. It is vested in congress only.

By this measure, so promptly taken, due respect was shewn to the government of Spain.—The misconduct of her officers has not been imputed to her. She was enabled to review with candor her relations with the United States, & her own situation, particularly in respect to the territory in question, with the dangers inseparable from it; and regarding the losses we have sustained, for which indemnity has been so long withheld, and the injuries we have suffered through that territory & her means of redress, she was likewise enabled to take with honor, the course best calculated to do justice to the United States, and to promote her own welfare.

Copies of the instructions to the commanding general; of his correspondence with the secretary of war, explaining his motives, and justifying his conduct with a copy of the proceedings of the courts martial, in the trial of Arbuthnot & Ambristie; and the correspondence between the secretary of state & the minister plenipotentiary of Spain, near this government; and of the minister plenipotentiary of the United States, at Madrid, with the government of Spain, will be laid before Congress.

The civil war, which has so long prevailed between Spain & the provinces, in South America, still continues without any prospect of its speedy termination. The information respecting the condition of those countries, which has been collected by the commissioners recently returned from thence, will be laid before congress, in copies of their reports, with such other information as has been received from other agents of the United States.

It appears from these communications, that the government of Buenos Ayres declared itself independent in July, 1816, having previously exercised the power of an independent government, though in the name of the king of Spain, from the year 1810; that the Banda Oriental, Entre Rios, & Paraguay, with the city of Santa Fee, all of which are also independent, are unconnected with the present government of Buenos Ayres; that Chili has declared itself independent, and is closely connected with Buenos Ayres; that Venezuela has also declared itself independent, and now maintains the conflict with various success, and that the remaining parts of South America, except Monte Video, and such other portions of the Eastern bank of the La Plata as are held by Portugal, are still in the possession of Spain, or in a certain degree under her influence.

By a circular note addressed by the ministers of Spain to the allied powers, with whom they are respectively accredited, it appears that the allies have undertaken to mediate between Spain & the South American provinces, and that the manner and extent of their interposition would be settled by a congress which was to have met at Aix la Chapell in September last. From the general policy and course of proceeding observed by the allied powers, in regard to this contest, it is inferred that they will confine their interposition to the expression of their sentiments; abstaining from the application of force. I state this impression, that force will not be applied with the greater satisfaction, because it is a course more consistent with justice, and likewise authorizes a hope that the calamities of the war will be confined to the parties only, and will be of shorter duration.

From the view taken of this subject, founded on all the information that we have been able to obtain, there is good cause to be satisfied with the course heretofore pursued by the United States in regard to this contest, and to conclude, that it is proper to adhere to it, especially in the present state of affairs.

I have great satisfaction in stating, that our relations with France, Russia, and other powers continue on the most friendly basis.

In our domestic concerns we have ample cause of satisfaction. The receipts into the Treasury, during the three first quarters of the year, have exceeded seventeen millions of dollars

After satisfying all the demands which have been made under existing appropriations, including the final extinction of the old six per cent stock, and redemption of a moiety of the Louisiana debt, it is estimated that there will remain in the Treasury, on the first day of January next, more than two millions of dollars.

It is ascertained that the gross revenue which has accrued from the customs during the same period, amounts to twenty-one millions of dollars, and that the revenue of the whole year may be estimated at not less than twenty-six millions. The sale of the public lands during the year has also greatly exceeded, both in quantity and price, that of any former year; and there is just reason to expect a progressive improvement in that source of revenue.

It is gratifying to know, that although the annual expenditure has been increased, by the act of the last session of Congress, providing for revolutionary pensions, to an amount about equal to the proceeds of the internal duties which were then repealed, the revenue for the ensuing year will be proportionably augmented, and that, whilst the public expenditure will probably remain stationary, each successive year will add to the national resources, by the ordinary increase of our population, and by the gradual developement of our latent sources of national prosperity.

The strict execution of the revenue laws, resulting principally from the salutary provisions of the act of the 20th of April last, amending the several collection laws, has it is presumed, secured to domestic manufactures all the relief that can be derived from the duties, which have been imposed upon foreign merchandize, for their protection.—Under the influence of this relief, several branches of this important national interest have assumed greater activity, and although it is hoped that others will gradually revive, and ultimately triumph over every obstacle, yet the expediency of granting further protection is submitted to your consideration.

The measures of defence, authorized by existing laws, have been pursued with the zeal and activity due to so important an object, with all the despatch practicable in so extensive and great an undertaking. The survey of our maritime & inland frontiers have been continued; and at the points where it was decided to erect fortifications the work has been commenced, and, in some instances, considerable progress has been made.—In compliance with resolutions of the last session, the board of commissioners were directed to examine in a particular manner the ports of the coast therein designated, and to report their opinion of the most suitable sites for two naval depots. This work is in train of execution. The opinion of the board on this subject, with a plan of all works necessary to a general system of defence, so far as it has been formed, will be laid before congress, in a report from the proper department as soon as it can be prepared.

In consistency with the appropriations of the last session, treaties have been formed with the Cherokee tribe of Indians inhabiting the country on the Arkansaw, and with the Great & Little Osages north of the White river; with the tribes in the state of Indiana; with the several tribes within the state of Ohio, and the Michigan territory; and with the Chickasaws; by which very extensive cessions of territory have been made to the United States. Negociations are now depending with the tribes in the Illinois territory, and with the Choctaws, by which it is expected that other extensive cessions will be made. I take great interest in stating that the cessions already made, which are considered so important to the United States, have been obtained on conditions very satisfactory to the Indians.

With a view to the security of our inland frontiers, it has been thought expedient to establish strong posts at the mouth of the Yellow Stone river, and at the Mandan village on the Missouri, and at the mouth of St. Peters, on the Missisippi, at no great distance from our northern boundaries. It can hardly be presumed, while such posts are maintained in the rear of the Indian tribes, that they will venture to attack our peaceable inhabitants. A strong hope is entertained that this measure will likewise be productive of much good to the tribes themselves; especially in promoting the great object of their civilization. Experience has clearly demonstrated, that independent savage communities cannot long exist within the limits of a civilized population. The progress of the latter has, almost invariably, terminated in the extinction of the former, especially of the tribes belonging to our portion of this hemisphere, among whom loftiness of sentiment and gallantry in action have been conspicuous. To civilize them and even to prevent their extinction, it seems to be indispensible that their independence as communities should cease, and that the control of the United States over them should be complete and undisputed. The hunter state will then be more easily abandoned, and recourse will be had to the acquisition and culture of land, and to other pursuits tending to dissolve the ties which connect them together as a savage community, and to give a new character to every individual. I present this subject to the consideration of congress, on the presumption that it may be found expedient and practicable to adopt some benevolent provisions, having these objects in view, relative to the tribes within our settlements.

It has been necessary, during the present year, to maintain a strong naval force in the Mediterranean and in the gulf of Mexico, and to send some public ships along the southern coast, and to the Pacific Ocean. By these means amicable relations with the Barbary powers has been preserved, & our rights respected. The augmentation of our navy is advancing, with a steady progress, towards the limit contemplated by law.

I communicate, with great satisfaction, the accession of another state, Illinois, to our union; because I perceive, from the proof afforded by the additions already made, the regular progress and successful consummation of a policy of which history affords no example, and of which the good effect cannot be too highly estimated. By extending our government, on the principles of our constitution, over the vast territory within our limits, on the lakes and the Mississippi, and its numerous streams, new life and vigor are infused into every part of our system. By increasing the number of the states, the confidence of the state governments in their own security is increased, & their jealousy of the national government proportionably diminished. The impracticability of one consolidated government for this great and growing nation, will be more apparent, and will be universally admitted. Incapable of exercising local authority, except for general purposes, the general government will no longer be dreaded. In those cases of a local nature, and for all the great purposes for which it was instituted, its authority will be cherished. Each government will acquire more force and a greater freedom of action, within its proper sphere. Other inestimable advantages will follow: our produce be augmented to an incalculable amount in articles of the greatest value for domestic use and foreign commerce. Our navigation will in the degree, be increased; and, as the shipping of the Atlantic states will be employed in the transportation of the vast produce of the western country, even those parts of the United States which are the most remote from each other will be further

FROM THE ALBANY GAZETTE.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 17.

This day, at twelve o'clock, the President of the United States transmitted to both Houses of Congress, by his Secretary, Mr. J. J. Monroe, the following

MESSAGE:

Fellow Citizens of the Senate, and of the House of Representatives,

The auspicious circumstances under which you will commence the duties of the present session, will lighten the burthen, inseparable from the high trust committed to you. The fruits of the earth have been unusually abundant; commerce has flourished; the revenue has exceeded the most favorable anticipation; and peace and amity are preserved with foreign nations, on conditions just and honorable to our country. For these inestimable blessings, we cannot but be grateful to that Providence which watches over the destinies of nations.

As the term limited for the operation of the commercial convention with Great Britain will expire early in the month of July next, and it was deemed important that there should be no interval, during which, that portion of our commerce which was provided for by that convention, should not be regulated, either by arrangement between the two governments, or by the authority of Congress, the minister of the United States at London was instructed, early in the last summer, to invite the attention of the British government to the subject, with a view to that object. He was instructed to propose, also, that the negociation which it was wished to open, might extend to the general commerce of the two countries, and to every other interest and unsettled difference between them; particularly those relating to impressment, the fisheries, and boundaries, in the hope that an arrangement might be made, on principles of reciprocal advantage, which might comprehend and provide, in a satisfactory manner, for all these high concerns. I have the satisfaction to state, that the proposal was received by the British government in the spirit which promoted it; and that a negociation has been opened at London, embracing all those objects. On full consideration of the great extent and magnitude of the trust, it was thought proper to commit it to not less than two of our distinguished citizens, and, in consequence, the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States, at Paris, have been associated with our envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary at London; to both of whom corresponding instructions have been given, and they are now engaged in the discharge of its duties. It is proper to add, that, to prevent any inconvenience resulting from the delay incident to a negociation of so many important subjects, it was agreed, before entering on it, that the existing convention should be continued for a term not less than eight years.

Our relations with Spain remain nearly in the state in which they were at the close of the last session. The convention of 1802, providing for the adjustment of a certain portion of the claims of our citizens for injuries sustained by spoliation, and so long suspended by the Spanish government, has at length been ratified by it; but no arrangement has yet been made for the payment of another portion of the claims, not less extensive or well founded, or for other classes of claims, or for the settlement of boundaries. These subjects have again been brought under consideration, in both countries, but no agreement has been entered into respecting them. In the mean time, events have occurred, which clearly prove the ill effect of the policy, which that government has so long pursued, on the friendly relations of the two countries, which, it is presumed, is at least of as much importance to Spain as to the United States to maintain. A state of things has existed in the Floridas, the tendency of which has been obvious to all who have paid the slightest attention to the progress of affairs in that quarter. Throughout the whole of those provinces to which the Spanish title extends, the government of Spain has hardly been felt. Its authority has been confined, almost exclusively, to the walls of Pensacola and St. Augustine, within which only small garrisons have been maintained. Adventurers from every country, fugitives from justice, and absconding slaves, have found an asylum there. Several tribes of Indians, strong in the number of their warriors, remarkable for their ferocity, and whose settlements extend to our limits, inhabit those provinces. These different hordes of people, connected together, disregarding, on the one side, the authority of Spain, and protected on the other, by an imaginary line which separates Florida from the United States, have violated our laws prohibiting the introduction of slaves, have practised various frauds on our revenue, and committed every kind of outrage on our peaceable citizens, which their proximity to us enabled them to perpetrate. The invasion of Amelia Island last year, by a small band of adventurers, not exceeding one hundred & fifty in number, who seized it from the inconsiderable Spanish force stationed there, and held it several months, during which, a single feeble effort only was made to recover it, which failed, clearly proves how completely extinct the Spanish authority had become, as the conduct of those adventurers, while in possession of the island, as distinctly shows the pernicious purposes for which their combination had been formed.

This country, had in fact, become the theatre of every species of lawless adventure.—With little population of its own, the Spanish authority almost extinct, and the colonial government in a state of revolution, having no pretension to it, and sufficiently employed in their own concerns, it was a great measure derelict, and the object of cupidity to every adventurer. A system of buccaneering was rapidly organized over it, which menaced, in its consequences, the lawful commerce of every nation, and particularly of the United States, while it presented a temptation to every people, on whose seduction its success principally depended. In regard to the United States, the pernicious effect of this unlawful combination was not confined to the ocean; the Indian tribes have constituted the effective force in Florida. With those tribes these adventurers had formed at an early period, a connection, with a view to avail themselves of that force to promote their own projects of accumulation and aggrandizement. It is to the interference of some of these adventurers in misrepresenting the claims and titles of the Indians to land, and in practising on their savage propensities, that the Seminole war is principally to be traced. Men who thus connect themselves with savage communities, and stimulate them to war, which is always attended on their part with acts of barbarity the most shocking, deserve to be viewed in a very different light than the savages. They would certainly have no claim to an immunity from the punishment, which, according to the rules of warfare practised by the savages, might justly be inflicted on the savages themselves.

If the embarrassment of Spain prevented her from making an indemnity to our citizens, for so long a time, from her treasury, for their losses by spoliation, and otherwise, it was always in her power to have provided it, by the cession of this territory. Of this, her government has been repeatedly apprized; & the cession was the more to be anticipated, as Spain must have known that, in ceding it, she would, in effect, cede what had passed into the hands of the U. States, and would likewise relieve herself from the important obligations secured by the treaty of 1795, and all other compromitments respecting it. If the United States, from consideration of these embarrassments, declined pressing their claims in a spirit of hostility, the motive ought, at least, to have been duly appreciated by the government of Spain. It is well known to her government, that other powers have made the United States an indemnity for like losses, sustained by their citizens at the same epoch.

There is nevertheless a limit beyond which this spirit of amity and forbearance, can, in no instance be justified. It it was proper to rely on amicable negociation, for an indemnity for losses, it would not have been so, to have permitted the inability of Spain to fulfil her engagements, and to sustain her authority in the Floridas, to be perverted by foreign adventurers & savages, to purposes so destructive to the lives of our fellow citizens, and the highest interests of the United States. The right of self defence never ceases. It is among the most sacred, and alike necessary to nations & to individuals. And, whether the attack be made by Spain herself, or by those who abuse her power, its obligation is not the less strong. The invaders of Amelia Island had assumed a popular and respected title, under which they might approach and wound us. As their object was distinctly seen, and the duty imposed on the executive by an existing law, was profoundly felt, that mask was not permitted to protect them. It was thought incumbent on the United States, to suppress the establishment, and it was accordingly done. The combination in Florida, for the unlawful purposes stated, the acts perpetrated by that combination, and above all, the incitement of the Indians to massacre our fellow citizens, of every age, and of both sexes, merited a like treatment and received it. In pursuing these savages to an imaginary line, in the woods, it would have been the height of folly to have suffered that line to protect them.—Had that been done, the war could never cease. Even if the territory had been exclusively that of Spain, and her power complete over it, we had a right, by the law of nations, to follow the enemy on it, and to subdue him there. But the territory belonged, in a certain sense, at least, to the savage enemy who inhabited it, the power of Spain had ceased to exist over it, and protection was sought, under her title, by those who had committed on our citizens, hostilities, which she was bound by treaty to have prevented, but had not the power to prevent. To have stopped at that line would have given new encouragement to these savages, & new vigor to the whole combination existing there, in the prosecution of all its pernicious purposes.

In suppressing the establishment at Amelia-Island, no unfriendliness was manifested towards Spain, because the post was taken from a force that had wrested it from her.—The measure, it is true, was not adopted in concert with the Spanish government, or those in authority under it, because, in transactions connected with the war, in which Spain and her colonies are engaged, it was thought proper, in doing justice to the United States to maintain a strict impartiality towards both the belligerent parties, without consulting or acting in concert with either. It gives me pleasure to state, that the governments of Buenos Ayres & Venezuela, whose names were assumed, have explicitly disclaimed all participation in these measures, and even the knowledge of them, until communicated by this government, and have also expressed their satisfaction, that a course of proceeding had been suppressed, which, if justly imputable to them, would dishonor their cause.

In authorising major general Jackson to enter Florida, in pursuit of the Seminoles, care was taken not to encroach on the rights of Spain. I regret to have to add, that, in executing this order, facts were disclosed, respecting the conduct of the officers of Spain, in authority there, in encouraging the war, furnishing munitions of war, and other supplies to carry it on, and in other acts not less marked, which evinced their participation in the hostile purposes of that combination, and justified the confidence, with which it inspired the savages, that by those officers they would be protected. A conduct so incompatible with the friendly relations existing between the two countries, particularly with the positive obligation of the 5th article of the treaty of 1795, by which Spain was bound to restrain, even by force, those savages from acts of hostility against the United States could not fail to excite surprise. The commanding general was convinced he should fail in his object, that he should, in effect, accomplish nothing, if he did not deprive those savages of the resource on which they had calculated, and of the protection on which they had relied, in making the war. As all the documents, relating to this occurrence, will be laid before congress, it is not necessary to enter into further detail respecting it.

Although the reasons which induced major gen. Jackson to take these posts were duly appreciated, there was, nevertheless, no hesitation in deciding on the course which it became the government to pursue. As there was reason to believe that the commanders of these posts had violated their instructions, there was no disposition to impute to their government a conduct so unprovoked & hostile. An order was in consequence issued to the general in command there, to deliver the posts; Pensacola, unconditionally to any person duly authorized to receive it; and St. Marks, which is in the heart of the Indian country, on the arrival of a competent force to defend it against those savages and their associates.

In entering Florida to suppress this combination, no idea was entertained of hostility to Spain, and however justifiable the commanding general was in consequence of the misconduct of the Spanish officers, in entering St. Marks & Pensacola, to terminate it, by proving to the savages & their associates, that they should not be protected even there; yet, the amicable relations existing between the United States and Spain could not be altered by that act alone. By ordering the restitution of the posts, those relations were preserved. To a change of them, the power of the executive is deemed incompetent. It is vested in congress only.

By this measure, so promptly taken, due respect was shewn to the government of Spain.—The misconduct of her officers has not been imputed to her. She was enabled to review with candor her relations with the United States, & her own situation, particularly in respect to the territory in question, with the dangers inseparable from it; and regarding the losses we have sustained, for which indemnity has been so long withheld, and the injuries we have suffered through that territory & her means of redress, she was likewise enabled to take with honor, the course best calculated to do justice to the United States, and to promote her own welfare.

Copies of the instructions to the commanding general; of his correspondence with the secretary of war, explaining his motives, and justifying his conduct with a copy of the proceedings of the courts martial, in the trial of Arbuthnot & Ambristie; and the correspondence between the secretary of state & the minister plenipotentiary of Spain, near this government; and of the minister plenipotentiary of the United States, at Madrid, with the government of Spain, will be laid before Congress.

The civil war, which has so long prevailed between Spain & the provinces, in South America, still continues without any prospect of its speedy termination. The information respecting the condition of those countries, which has been collected by the commissioners recently returned from thence, will be laid before congress, in copies of their reports, with such other information as has been received from other agents of the United States.

It appears from these communications, that the government of Buenos Ayres declared itself independent in July, 1816, having previously exercised the power of an independent government, though in the name of the king of Spain, from the year 1810; that the Banda Oriental, Entre Rios, & Paraguay, with the city of Santa Fee, all of which are also independent, are unconnected with the present government of Buenos Ayres; that Chili has declared itself independent, and is closely connected with Buenos Ayres; that Venezuela has also declared itself independent, and now maintains the conflict with various success, and that the remaining parts of South America, except Monte Video, and such other portions of the Eastern bank of the La Plata as are held by Portugal, are still in the possession of Spain, or in a certain degree under her influence.

By a circular note addressed by the ministers of Spain to the allied powers, with whom they are respectively accredited, it appears that the allies have undertaken to mediate between Spain & the South American provinces, and that the manner and extent of their interposition would be settled by a congress which was to have met at Aix la Chapell in September last. From the general policy and course of proceeding observed by the allied powers, in regard to this contest, it is inferred that they will confine their interposition to the expression of their sentiments; abstaining from the application of force. I state this impression, that force will not be applied with the greater satisfaction, because it is a course more consistent with justice, and likewise authorizes a hope that the calamities of the war will be confined to the parties only, and will be of shorter duration.

From the view taken of this subject, founded on all the information that we have been able to obtain, there is good cause to be satisfied with the course heretofore pursued by the United States in regard to this contest, and to conclude, that it is proper to adhere to it, especially in the present state of affairs.

I have great satisfaction in stating, that our relations with France, Russia, and other powers continue on the most friendly basis.

bound together by the strongest ties which mutual interest can create.

The situation of this District, it is thought, requires the attention of Congress. By the Constitution, the power of legislation is exclusively vested in the Congress of the United States. In the exercise of this power, in which the people have no participation, Congress legislate in all cases, directly on the local concerns of the District. As this is a departure, for a special purpose, from the general principles of our system, it may merit consideration, whether an arrangement better adapted to the principles of our government and to the particular interest of the people may not be devised, which will neither infringe the constitution, nor affect the object which the provision in question was intended to secure. The growing population, already considerable, and the increasing business of the District, which it is believed already interferes with the deliberations of Congress on great national concerns, furnish additional motives for recommending this subject to your consideration.

When we view the great blessings with which our country has been favoured, those which we now enjoy, and the means which we possess of handing them down, unimpaired, to our latest posterity, our attention is irresistibly drawn to the source from whence they flow. Let us then unite in offering our most grateful acknowledgments for these blessings to the Divine Author of all good. JAMES MONROE.

Crystallization of Tin.—This new art was we are informed, discovered accidentally about three years ago, by a Monsieur Bagot, who gave it the name of moire metallique or metallic watering. Another Frenchman near Brussels, however, contests the palm of originality; and, in truth, the principle has long been one of the least secrets either in chemistry or metallurgy, though we believe its useful application is entirely new. It depends simply upon the action of acids, whether pure or mixed, and in different degrees of solution, on alloys of tin. The common vitriolic acid, we believe, answers the purpose as fully as any other more expensive acid agent. The process we find described in the public prints as follows.—' Dissolve 4 ounces of muriate of soda in 8 ounces of water, and add 2 ounces of nitric acid—or 8 ounces water, 2 ounces nitric acid, and 8 ounces muriatic acid, and 1 ounce sulphuric acid. Either of these mixtures is to be poured warm upon a sheet of tinned iron, placed upon a vessel of stone ware; it is to be poured on in separate portions, till the sheet is completely watered; it is then to be plunged into water, slightly acidulated and washed.' The operation is completed by drying.

The meanest tin pan in our kitchens, submitted to this easy process, instead of its pallid metallic surface, imitates mother of pearl in its tone of colour, and shoots forth into an infinitude of figures and reflections, equal to enamel, and full of rich variety in design. By subjecting the iron to different degrees of heat, the variety of the forms is increased; some parts are granular, others are like architectural ruins; others grand natural phenomena of wood, and mountain, and forest; others a silvery sunset darting rays along the expanse; others ample leaves and flowers; others cubes, cones, and all that geometry embraces; in fine, there is no shape which the imagination can conceive that accident may not produce in those exquisite sports of the chemical power.

LONDON, Sept. 14.

The London Courier says, that experienced nautical men, who have had an opportunity of inspecting the steam vessel of lord Cochrane, have been struck with its remarkable adaptation for navigating upon such a coast as the windward island of St. Helena; and observes as a naval officer, lord Cochrane never shewed himself deficient in enterprize, and to his natural ardor is now added the excitement of desperate fortunes. His character has been much mistaken, or there are few things that would gratify him more than to become the liberator of Napoleon. If he succeeded, his fate would be linked with that of Bonaparte; if he failed he still might become an insurgent admiral. But it is stated he has gone to Chili; it will not be much out of his way to call at St. Helena. The Courier also mentions the recent union of the Bonapartists in the province of Texas, on the Trinity river, who may probably supply resources long since contemplated.

An English Quaker.—An article from Rouen contains a proud testimony to the disinterested and generous conduct of Messrs. Fox & Son, of Brislington, near Bristol, who having obtained possession of property by the capture of French vessels, in the first American war, refunded it to the French merchants from whom the vessels had been taken. A further sum by way of interest, is placed by them in the hands of the treasurer of the marine invalids at Paris, to be distributed among poor French mariners and their children.

The greatest tranquility prevails in France, and the king has resumed his usual course of ceremonies and masses.

The vintage has commenced every where in France, and an abundant produce was anticipated.

UPPER-CANADA GAZETTE.

YORK, THURSDAY, Dec. 10.

The propriety of establishing an Agricultural Society in the Home District, being lately discussed at a meeting of some gentlemen of this town, and unanimously approved, a meeting of those gentlemen who wish to promote such an undertaking, is requested on Monday next, at 2 o'clock at the Mansion House Hotel.

(COMUNICATION.)

TO THE PEOPLE OF UPPER CANADA

Conscious that the good people of this Province enjoyed the most perfect political and religious liberty; and that in the protection of their persons and property, the laws and their administration were without reproach—many persons beheld with indifference the progress of certain Reformers, convinced that the result of the proposed Congress at York; would be shame and confusion to the leaders of reform, when it should appear that no grievances existed, either in the form or administration of the constitution.

The danger, however, of such a precedent, as a partial representation of the people, without the sanction of law, was obvious, and the Legislature passed an Act which removed all doubt or the illegality of such assemblies.

The lawful representatives of the people having declared the public sentiment to be widely different from what is attributed to it by the movers of reform, the inhabitants of Upper-Canada are called upon to manifest their sense of the revolutions to that effect, promulgated solemnly by their representatives in Parliament, and thus effectually to do away any false impression which may have been made abroad, by the circulation of writings representing the colony to be in such a state as to require a thorough reform, even if it could be atchieved only by a revolution or civil war.

This Province has been little known in Europe, until the return of the army which served in its defence, and which having previously traversed the finest portion of the European continent, were competent to estimate and make known the uncommon advantages we enjoy in climate and soil, in the protection of the laws, in the exemption of taxes, and finally in all that can recommend a new country.

By so favorable an account, the spirit of emigration was raised, and was daily producing an accession of wholesome population, the best wealth of any country.

It is important to obviate any check to this spirit of emigration, from the alarming report of dissnion in the colony, which has found its way into the journals of the United Kingdom.

This can, perhaps, be best done by the declaration of the Freeholders Electors of each county, that the Resolutions adopted unanimously by their representatives in the Provincial Parliament, meet their full approbation and concurrence.

Such a certificate, in the form of an address to His Majesty's Representative, would effectually remove the stigma, which yet, in some degree, rests upon this loyal Province.

CIVIS.

We were requested to insert in the Gazette the following interesting and highly important feat.

MATCH AGAINST TIME.

A gentleman started on Friday morning last in Yonge Street, in front of Assist. Commissary General Crookshank's estate, to do 7 1-2 miles within the hour. He went over 6 miles in 46 minutes, heading time by 2 minutes, and came in staunch both in wind and foot. This is considered an extraordinary feat from the bad and zig-zag course.

From the Niagara Patriot.

MR. SALISBURY,

SIR—The following is an extract of a talk, delivered at Seneca village, near Buffalo, on the 29th & 30th December, 1817, written by the council, and signed by 21 chiefs of the Seneca, Onondaga and Cayuga tribes, in the presence of witnesses chosen to certify its truth. In giving it to the public, you give a just view of the feelings and purposes of our red brothers.

The responsibility of publishing this document and other facts that I may communicate in relation to these Indians, I take on myself; the Indians have not been consulted, and are wholly ignorant of my purpose. I trust a sense of impelious duty moves me to bring before the public, a poor miserable people who have no helper; ready to perish.

Yours, &c.
