Major Bradford delivered to me your Lordſhip's diſpatch of the 21ſt inſt. ſignifying to me his Majeſty's command that I ſhould convey to Lieutenant General Sir E. Coote, the General and other officers and troops employed before Fulhing, and particularly to thoſe of the artillery and engineer departments, his majeſty's moſt gracious approbation of their conduct; which I have obeyed with the moſt entire ſatisfaction.——I had the honor in my laſt diſpatch of acquainting your Lordſhip with my intention of proceeding to this place, and I ſhould have been moſt happy to have been enabled to announce to your Lordſhip the further progreſs of this army. Unfortunately, however, it becomes my duty to ſtate to your Lordſhip that, from the concurrent teſtimony from ſo many quarters, as to leave no doubt of the truth of the information, the enemy appears to have collected ſo formidable a force, as ſo convinced me that the period was arrived, at which my inſtructions would have directed me to withdraw the army under my command, even if engaged in actual operation. I had certainly early underſtood on my arrival at Walcheren, that the enemy were aſſembling in conſiderable force in all points; but I was unwilling to give too much credit to theſe reports, and I was determined to perſevere until I was ſatisfied, upon the fulleſt information that all further attempts would be unavailable.

From all our information it appears that the force of the enemy in this quarter, diſtributed between the environs of Bergen-op-Zoom, Breda, Lillo, and Antwerp, and cantoned on the oppoſite coaſt, is not leſs than 35,000 men, and by ſome ſtatements is eſtimated higher. Though a landing on the Continent, might, I doubt not, have been forced, yet, as the ſiege of Antwerp, the poſſeſſion of which could alone have ſecured to us any of the ulterior objects of the expedition, was by this ſtate of things rendered utterly impracticable, ſuch a meaſure, if ſucceſsful, could have led us to no ſolid advantage; and the retreat of the army, which muſt have been at an early period inevitable, would have been expoſed to much hazard.—The utmoſt force (and that daily decreaſing) that I could have brought into the field, after providing for the occupation of Walcheren and South Beveland, would have amounted to about 23,000 infantry, and 2000 cavalry.—Your Lordſhip muſt at once ſee, even if the enemy's has been leſs numerous, than represented, after the neceſſary detachments to obſerve the garriſons of Bergen-op Zoom and Breda, and ſecuring our communications, how very inadequate a force muſt have remained for operations againſt Lillo, Liefkenhoeck, and ultimately againſt Antwerp, which now, ſo far from being in the ſtate which had been reported, is, from very correct accounts, repreſented to be in a complete ſtate of defence; and the enemy's ſhips had been brought up and placed in ſecurity, under the guns of the citadel.

Under theſe circumſtances, however mortifying to me to ſee the progreſs arreſted of an army, from whoſe good conduct and valour I had every thing to hope, I feel that my duty left me no other courſe than to loſe my operations here; and it will always be a ſatisfaction to me to think, that I have not been induced lightly to commit the ſafety of the army confided to me, or the reputation of his Majeſty's arms. It was an additional ſatisfaction to me to find that the unanimous opinion of the Lieutenant Generals of this army, whom I thought it right to conſult, more out of reſpect to them, than that I thought a doubt could be entertained on the ſubject, concurred entirely in the ſentiments I have ſubmitted to your Lordſhip. I am concerned to ſay that the effect of the climate at this unhealthy period of the year is felt moſt ſeriouſly, and that the number of ſick already is little ſhort of 3000 men. It is my intention to withdraw gradually from the advanced poſitions in this iſland, and ſending into Walcheren ſuch an additional force as may be neceſſary to ſecure that important poſſeſſion, to embark the remainder of the troops, and to hold them in readineſs to await his Majeſty's further commands, which I ſhall moſt anxiouſly expect.

I have the honor to be, &c.

ZITTAU, July 31.

The following is the order of the day by which the Archduke Charles notified to the army his reſignation of the command in chief.

"Very important reaſons have induced me to requeſt his Majeſty to accept my reſignation of the command of the army entruſted to me. I yeſterday received his conſent, and at the ſame time his orders, to transfer the Chief command to the General of Cavalry Prince of Lichtenſtein. While I leave the army I take the moſt lively intereſt in its fate. The perfect conviction I have of its bravery, the confidence I place in it, and the conſtant habit of dedicating my exertions to its ſervice, under this ſeparation, indeſcribably painful, I flatter myſelf that it participates in, and returns this ſentiment.

WARSAW, Auguſt 14.

To day the diviſion of the Ruſſian troops under Gen. Sievers, will leave the town and vicinity of Cracow.—The Ruſſians, it is ſaid will ſoon evacuate all Gallicia, and break up for Turkey. A part of the Poliſh army will have likewiſe the ſame deſtination, and act in conjunction with the Ruſſians.

Hamburgh Correſp. Auguſt 23.

New-York, October 18

Foreign news.—We underſtand that an extra ſheet, publiſhed at Boſton, has been received in town, announcing that a treaty of Peace has been formed between France and Auſtria—

That the Emperor of Auſtria relinquiſhes his Imperial title, and ſurrenders his hereditary dominions—

That he is made King of Hungary and Bohemia—and that Bonaparte aſſumes the title of Archduke of Auſtria.

The hand-bill, it is ſaid, alſo ſtates, that the Britiſh expedition to the Scheldt has returned to England, leaving 15,000 troops to defend the Iſland of Walcheren.

The defeat of Wagram has excited the greateſt irritation and diſorder among the Auſtrian Officers, who blame each other for the misfortunes of that deciſive day. Field Marſhal Hiller has demanded and obtained leave to reſign, and Gen. Beliegarde has obtained the ſame permiſſion, it is ſaid, without requiring it.

The following order of the Day was publiſhed on the day after the battle of Wagram;

GOELLENSDORF, July 7.

In the battle of yeſterday, the troops of the left wing in no reſpect anſwered the expectations which I had a right to cheriſh reſpecting them, nor the hopes I had formed, the importance of that day conſidered, from their ſtrong and advantageous poſition.

The diſaſtrous reſult of that battle, muſt be aſcribed to the conduct of theſe troops; for as the confuſion was general among them, the retreat was made with too great haſte and diſorder. I am alſo, with ſome exceptions, far from being ſatisfied with the infantry. Several regiments marched forward too ſoon, & began to fire without any cauſe. They were beſides ſo crowded together, that they fired upon one another. The officers were not able to rally the larger bodies, which fired in this diſorder, & gr'd. was loſt. The confuſed cry which was heard among the troops, drowned the voice of the commanding officers.

Had the commanders accuſtomed the troops to ſilence, and taught them to attend to nothing but their orders, the ſeparation of the left wing would not have produced ſuch ſhameful conſequences.

In every regiment which ſhall hereafter conduct itſelf in a ſimilar manner, every tenth man ſhall be condemned to die, and the reſt of the men ſhall be diſtributed among the other regiments. The commanding officer ſhall be caſhiered, and the other officer diſmiſſed. Cries of alarm among the troops ſhall be puniſhed with death. The troops muſt only act when orders are given them, or on the ſignal of the drum——In moſt regiments, the drum are placed with the muſic, out of the reach of the fire but the commanding officers ſhall ſee that all the drums return to their poſts, & ſhall take care that the troops under their direction do not fire without orders, or at too great a diſtance.

In the evening of the 5th the regiment of Argentair made ſuch bad diſpoſitions, that in the unprofitable retreat to Neuſidel, the 2d line fired on the firſt & occaſioned great diſorder. The regiment of Heſſo Nemburg did nothing but wander here and there; ſometimes was heard the cry of 'forward,' where there was no enemy! Gen. Rieſe did not conduct himſelf well at Entzerdoff. On the 6th in the evening. I did not find him at the head of his troops, and beſides, he did not follow the orders which were given him reſpecting the attack, He ſhall be diſmiſſed from the ſervice of his Majeſty.

The diſorder which ſtill prevails among the troops, proves that the officers of the ſtaff know not how to apply a remedy. I ſhall, however, ſet an example myſelf. I ſhall, according to circumſtances, diſmiſs or caſhier ſuch officers of the grand ſtaff, whoſe troops are not again brought under proper diſcipline. It is the ſhame of the army that ſo many ſtragglers and plunderers are found on all the roads and in all the villages.

DUBLIN, Aug. 23.

The late Storm.—The following is from a gentleman who was a paſſenger in one of the London coaches, going to Exeter;—About 8 o'clock on Thurſday night, when within two mile of Woodyatt's Inn on Salisbury plain, a tremendous ſtorm of thunder and lighting commenced, and laſted with little intermiſſion, till 3 o'clo. next morning.—It is impoſſible for the pen to deſcribe, or the imagination to paint any thing ſo awfully terrific. The earth and atmoſphere for miles round, ſeemed one continued volume of liquid fire. Deer and cattle were ſcattered in every direction along the road; and every thing ſeemed to portend a total diſſolution of the whole ſyſtem.—There were 14 outſide paſſengers, and 6 inſide, in the coach above alluded to; and juſt before they reached the Inn, the electric fluid ſtruck a young man on the roof of the coach, and killed him on the ſpot. He belonged to the Ocean man of war, and had been to viſit his friends in London; he was 22 years of age. His comrade, who ſat beſide him, was injured in the arm. Three of the coach horſes were alſo ſtruck down, and one was killed on the ſpot. The coaches, waggons, and vehicle, ſtaid at the Inn, being unable to proceed. ———One gentleman, an inſide paſſenger, had a cotton handkerchief burned off his head by the lightning.

New Regulations at Havanna. We have juſt been favored with the peruſal of a letter from one of the firſt merchants in Havanna to a reſpectable houſe in this city, from which we take the following:

"I am ſorry to be under the neceſſity of announcing to you that the ports of this iſland have been this day ſhut againſt all foreign nations, with the excluſion of our allies, in conſequence of an order from the Central Junta, with every appearance of the meaſure's being rigorouſly perſevered in."

Reports from Waſhington concur in ſtating that the Executive are in cloſe and confidential diſcuſſion with Mr. Jackſon: and the impreſſion is generally in favor of theſe diſcuſſions terminating amicably.—A few days will perhaps ſhed light upon this highly intereſting ſubject.

It is ſtated that the Port of Trieſte, and other ports in the poſſeſſion of the French, in the Adriatic, were ſhut againſt neutral veſſels by order of the Emperor Napoleon.

His Excellency General Hulop, Governor of the Iſland of Trinidad, has come to a reſolution not to permit any native of France or of the colonies belonging to France, or to nations in alliance with France, to land on that Iſland, unleſs they bring an order from his Britannic Majeſty's Secretary of State for the colonies to him to recieve them.

N. Y. Spect.

LONDON, Sept. 5.

Private letters of the 1st inſt. from Holland, gave the leading features of the Treaty now negociating between France and Auſtria. Napoleon to his other titles adds, it is ſaid, that of Archduke of Auſtria; and the Emperor Francis is now to be King of Bohemia and Hungary. Moravia it is probable, will be comprized in the latter ſovereignty; but the previous appropriation which Bonaparte had made of the Auſtrian diviſion of Poland, will it is believed be adhered to; and a paſſage will be required for the French troops through the Auſtrian dominions.

Some of the letters ſtate that the treaty is already concluded—nor have we any doubt, that virtually it is, though ſome forms may yet be wanting to its completion.

The following official papers are extracted from the London Gazette of Saturday last.

Downing street, Sept 2.

A dispatch of which the following is a copy, was on the 30th ult. received at the Office of Lord Viscount Castlereagh, one of his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, from Lieut. Gen. Ld. Viscount Wellington, dated Deleytosa, Aug. 8.

Deleytosa, Aug. 8. 1809.

My LORD,

I apprised your Lordship on the 1st inst. of the advance of the French corps towards the Puerto de Banos, and of the probable embarrassments of the operations of the army which its arrival at Plasencia would occasion;—and these embarrassments having since existed to a degree so confiderable as to oblige us to fall back, and take up a defenfive pofiti on on the Tagus, I am induced to trouble you more at length with an account of what has paffed upon this fubject.

When I entered Spain, I had a Communication with Gen. Cuefta, through Sir Robert Wilfon and Col. Rooke, refpecting the occupation of the Puerto de Banos and the Puerto de Perales, the former of which it was at laft settled, fhould be held by a corps to be formed under the Marquis de la Reyna, to conlift of two battalions from Gen. Cuefta's army, and two from Bejar; and that the Puerto de Perales was to be taken care of by the Loque del Parque, by detachments from the garrifon of Cincad Rodrigo.

I doubted of the capacity of the garrifon of Cincad Rodrigo to make the detachment of the latter, but fo little of the effectual occupation of the former, that in writing to Marfhal Beresford on the 17th of July, I defired him to look to the Puerto del Perales, but that I confidered Banos as secure, as appears by the extract of my letter which I enclofe.

On the 30th, information was received at Talavera, that 12,000 rations had been ordered at Fuente Duenos for the 28th, and 24,000 at Los Santos for the same day, for a French corps which it was believed was on its march towards the Puerto de Banos.

Gen Cuefta expreffed fome anxiety refpecting this poft, and fe t me a meffage, to propofe that Sir Robert Wilfon fhould be fent there with his corps.

Sir Robert was on that day at Talavera, but his corps was in the mountains towards Escalona; and as he had already made himfelf very ufeful in that quarter, and had been near Madrid, with which city he had a communication, which I was defirous of keeping up, I propofed that a Spanifh corps fhould be fent to Banos without lofs of time.

I could not prevail with gen. Cuefta, though he certainly admitted the neceffity of a reinforcement, when he propofed that Sir Robert Wilfon fhould be fent to Banos; and he was equally fenfible with myfelf, of the benefit to be derived to the caufe, from fending Sir Robert back to Escalona.

All this time we had no further intelligence of the enemy's advance, than that the rations were ordered; and I had hopes that the enemy might be deterred from advancing, by the intelligence of our fuccefles on the 20th, and that the troops in the Puerto might make fome defence; and that, under these circumftances it was not defirable to divert Sir Robert Wilfon from Escalona.

On the 30th, however, I renewed my application to General Cuefta, to fend there a Spanifh divifion of fufficient ftrength, in a letter to General O Donoghue, of which I enclofe a copy but without effect; and he did not detach General Baffecourt till the morning of the 2d, after we had heard that the enemy had entered Bejar, and it was obvious that the troops in the Puerto would make no defence.

On the 2d, we received accounts that the enemy had entered Placentia in two columns.

The Marquis de la Reyna, whofe two battalions conlifted of only six hundred men, with only twenty rounds of ammunition each man, retired from the Puerto and from Placentia without firing a fhot, and went to the bridge of Almarez, which he declared that he intended to remove. The battalions of Bejar difperfed without making any reliftance.

The general called upon me, on that day, and propofed that half of the army fhould march to the rear to oppofe the enemy, while the other half fhould maintain the poft at Talavera.

My answer was, that if by half the army, he meant half of each army, I could only answer that I was ready to go or to ftay with the whole Britifh army, but that I could not feparate. He then defired me to choofe whether I would go or ftay, and I preferred to go, from thinking that the Britifh troops were moft likely to do the bufinefs effectually, and without conteft; and from being of opinion, that to open the communication through Placentia was more important to them. With this decifion General Cuefta appeared perfectly satisfied.

The movements of the enemy in our front fince the 1ft. had induced me to be of opinion, that defpairing of forceing us to Talavera, they intended to force a paffage by Escalona; and thus open a communication with the French coming from Placentia.

This suspicion was confirmed on the night of the 2d, by letters received from Sir Robert Wilfon, of which I enclose copies: and before I quitted Talavera, on the 3d, I waited on General O'Donnoghue, and converfed with him, upon the whole of our fituation, and pointed out to him the poffibility that in the cafe of the enemy coming through Escalon, gen. Cuefta might find himfelf obliged to quit Talavera before I fhould be able to return to him; and I urged him to collect all the carts that could be got, in order to remove our hofpital.——At his defire I put the purport of this converfation in writing and lent him a letter to be laid before General Cuefta, or which I enclose a copy.

The Britifh army marched on the 3d to Profpea, General Baffecourt's Spanifh corps being at Centinello, where I defired that it might halt the next day, in order that I might be nearer.

About 5 o'clock in the evening I heard that the French had arrived from Placentia, at Navolmodal, whereby they were between us and the bridge of Almaraz.

About an hour afterwards I received from General O'Donnoghue the letters and their enclosures, of which I take copies, announcing to me the intention of General Cuefta to march from Talavera in the evening, and to leave there my hofpital, except fuch men as could be removed by the means he already had, on the ground of his apprehenfions that I was not ftrong enough for the corps coming from Placentia, and that the enemy was moving upon his flank, and had returned to Santa Olalia in his front.

I acknowledge that these reafons did not appear to me fufficient for giving up fo important a poft as Talavera for expofing the combined armies to an attack in front and rear at the fame time, and for abandoning my hofpital; and I wrote the letter of which I enclofe a copy.

This unfortunately reached the General after he had marched, and he arrived at Oropesa fhortly after day light on the morning of the 4 h.

The queftion what was to be done was then to be confidered. The enemy, ftated to be 30,000 ftrong, but at all events conlifting of the corps of Soult and Ney, either united or not very diftant from each other, and fupported by Marfhal Jourdan, and Joseph Bonaparte, to be fufficiently ftrong to attack the Britifh army, ftated to be 22,000 ftrong, were on one fide, in poffeffion of the high road to the paffage of the Tagus at Almaraz, the bridge at which place he knew had been removed, although the boats ftill neceffarily remained in the river.

On the other fide, we had reafon to expect the advance of Victor's corps to Talavera, as soon as General Cuefta's march fhould be known, and leaving 12000 men to watch Venegas, and allowing from 10 to 11,000 killed and wounded in the late action, this corps would have amounted to 25,000. We could extricate ourfelves from this difficult fituation only by great celerity of movement, (to which the troops were unequal, as they had not had their allowance of provifions for feveral days) and by fuccefs in two battles. If unfuccefsful in either, we fhould have been without a retreat; and if Soult and Ney avoiding an action had retired before us, and had awaited the arrival of Victor, we fhould have been expofed to a general action with 55,000 men, equally without a retreat.

We had reafon to expect, that as the Marquis de la Reyna could not remove the boats from the river Almaraz, Soult would have deftroyed them.

Our only retreat was therefore, by the bridge of Arco Bispo; and if we had moved on, the enemy by breaking that bridge while the army fhould be engaged with Soult and Ney, would have deprived us of that only resource.

We could not take a pofition at Oropesa, as it thereby left open the road to the bridge of Arco Bispo from Talavera by Calera: and after confidering the whole fubject maturely, I was of opinion that it was advisable to retire to the bridge of Arco Bispo, and to take up a defenfive pofition upon the Tagus.

I was induced to adopt this laft opinion becaufe the French have now at leaft 50,000 men difpofable to oppofe to the combined army and a corps of 12,000 to watch Venegas; and was likewife of opinion that the fooner the defenfive line fhould be taken up, the more likely were the troops to be able to defend it.

Accordingly I marched on the 4 h, and croffed the Tagus by the bridge of Arco Bispo, have continued my courfe to this place, in which I am well ftuated to defend the paffage of Almaraz and the lower parts of the Tagus. General Cuefta croffed the river on the night of the 5th, and he is ftill at the bridge of the Arco Bispo.

About two thousand of the wounded have been brought away from Talavera:

poſing the combined armies to an attack in front and rear at the ſame time, and for abandoning my hoſpital; and I wrote the letter of which I encloſe a copy.

This unfortunately reached the General after he had marched, and he arrived at Oropeſa ſhortly after day light on the morning of the 4th.

The queſtion what was to be done was then to be conſidered. The enemy, ſtated to be 30,000 ſtrong, but at all events conſiſting of the corps of Soult and Ney, either united or not very diſtant from each other, and ſupported by Marſhal Jourdan, and Joſeph Bonaparte, to be ſufficiently ſtrong to attack the Britiſh army, ſtated to be 22,000 ſtrong, were on one ſide, in poſſeſſion of the high road to the paſſage of the Tagus at Almaraz, the bridge at which place he knew had been removed, although the boats ſtill neceſſarily remained in the river.

On the other ſide, we had reaſon to expect the advance of Victor's corps to Talavera, as ſoon as General Cueſta's march ſhould be known, and leaving 12,000 men to watch Venegas, and allowing from 10 to 11,000 killed and wounded in the late action, this corps would have mounted to 25,000. We could extricate ourſelves from this difficult ſituation only by great celerity of movement, (to which the troops were unequal, as they had not had their allowance of proviſions for ſeveral days) and by ſucceſs in two battles. If unſucceſsful in either, we muſt have been without a retreat; and Soult and Ney avoiding an action had entered before us, and had awaited the arrival of Victor's, we ſhould have been expoſed to a general action with 55,000 men, equally without a retreat.

We had reaſon to expect, that as the Marquis de la Reyna could not remove the boats from the river Almaraz, Soult would have deſtroyed them.

Our only retreat was therefore, by the bridge of Arco Biſpo; and if we had moved on, the enemy by breaking that bridge while the army ſhould be engaged with Soult and Ney, would have deprived us of that only reſource.

We could not take a poſition at Oropeſa, as it thereby left open the road to the bridge of Arco Biſpo from Talavera by Calera: and after conſidering the whole ſubject maturely, I was of opinion that it was adviſable to retire to the bridge of Arco Biſpo, and to take up a defenſive poſition upon the Tagus.

I was induced to adopt this laſt opinion becauſe the French have now at leaſt 50,000 men diſpoſable to oppoſe to the combined army and a corps of 12,000 to watch Venegas; and was likewiſe of opinion that the ſooner the defenſive line ſhould be taken up, the more likely were the troops to be able to defend it.

Accordingly I marched on the 4th, and paſſed the Tagus by the bridge of Arco Biſpo, have continued my courſe to this place, in which I am well ſituated to defend the paſſage of Almaraz and the other parts of the Tagus. General Cueſta croſſed the river on the night of the 3d, and he is ſtill at the bridge of Arco Biſpo.

About two thouſand of the wounded have been brought away from Talavera:

the remaining fifteen hundred are there; and I doubted whether under any circumſtances, it would have been poſſible or conſiſtent with humanity to attempt to remove any more of them.

From the treatment of ſome of the ſoldiers wounded on the 27th and who fell into the hands of the enemy, experienced from them, and from the manner in which I have always treated the wounded who have fallen into my hands, I expect that theſe men will be well treated; and I have only to lament that a new concurrence of events over which, from circumſtances, I had and could have no control, ſhould have placed the army in a ſituation to be obliged to leave any of them behind.

I have the honor to be, &c.
(Signed) ARTHUR WELLESLEY.

BOSTON, Octr. 24.

Very late from Spain.—Yeſterday arrived at this port, the faſt ſailing brig Joſeph, captain Foſter, in 53 days from Malaga, captain F. does not mention the reſignation of Cueſta, nor that any change was contemplated in the Government. We find the Supreme Junta ſtill exerciſing the Executive Power, and that the Marquis of Romana has become a member.

There appears to have been no military movements on the part of the Anglo-Spaniſh army, or the French oppoſed to it, for ſome time. At the previous dates, the former had fallen back a ſhort diſtance, and the French have not advanced, nor the others retraced their ſteps. Sir A. Welleſley was on a viſit at Badajoz, with ſeveral members of the Junta, making arrangements for the better furniſhing of the army with proviſions.

A letter from the Supreme Junta at Seville, dated Sept. 14, to Mr. Gravina at Malaga, received on the 19th Sept. (the day on which captain F. ſailed,) ſays that official advices of the breaking of the Armiſtice by Bonaparte, had been received at that city—that an action had taken place between the French and Auſtrians in conſequence, which terminated in the defeat of the former.

We were favored with Malaga papers of Sept 14, 15, 18, and 19. A few tranſlations haſtily made, follow:—

Liſbon, Sept 2.

Napoleon intends to eſtabliſh a new power between Auſtria and Ruſſia, by re eſtabliſhing the throne of Poland.

Cadiz, Sept 5

The command of the Army of Galacia, is confided to Marſhal Don Gabriel de Mandizabel. Marſhal Count de Noronna is ſecond in command.—Marquis de Romana, has been called to a ſeat in the Supreme Junta—and delivered an excellent addreſs to his army on parting with it.

Badajoz, Sept 2

New and extraordinary efforts are making to have the armies well ſupplied with proviſions.

September 5.

Yeſterday arrived in this city, Sir A. Wellesley, commander in chief of the Britiſh troops——He was received with thoſe tokens which indicate gratitude for his ſervices at Talavera and elſewhere, and hopes of future triumphs.

Manreſa, Aug. 26.

The troops of General Blake and of the Marquis of Lozan, marched hence on the 22d and 23d. Gen. B. intends with 7000 men to attack the beſiegers of Gerona. The diviſion of Arragon and Valencia, have the ſame direction. These corps when united, will amount to 20,000 men.

Vich, Aug. 28.

General Blake, has juſt iſſued a Proclamation to the Catalonians, calling upon them to aſſemble to relieve the brave garriſon and inhabitants of Gerona Auguſt 30.

General Angereau has publiſhed in Perpignan, an account of the reduction Gerona; but ſtill the French fears for St. Cyr's troops appear as great as ever—and inceſſant efforts are made to ſuccour him.

La Mancha, Auguſt 8

Nothing in particular has occurred in our army (that of Venegas)—The head quarters continue in Carolina; and we labour with the greateſt activity in increaſing our force.

The enemy has in Tembleque 300 cavalry, others in Mora, and 400 more in various points.

Malaga, Sept, 19

The diviſion of Ney ſeparated from that of Soult, and marched to Salamancha, where the duke of Parque had before arrived, marching for Eſtremadura; who finding the garriſon ſtrong, purſued Ney, who retreated, ſome lay, towards Valladolid; others lay towards Burgos. The diviſion of Soult is on the higher part of Eſtremadura—its head quarters at Placentia and Galeſtio

The enemy has preſented moſt of his forces on the frontiers of Eſtremadura and La Mancha, uniting thoſe in Orepeſa and Talavera de la Reyna, principally in Toledo, under the orders of Sebaſtiani, Mortier and Victor.

In La Mancha, nothing particularly had occurred up to the 12th of the preſent month, and our troops occupy the poſitions heretofore mentioned.

NEW ORDERS OF COUNCIL

The London Gazette contains an Order of Council dated Auguſt 16 allowing ſhips belonging to the ſubjects, of any State in amity with his Majeſty, to import no any of the Iſlands and Colonies in the Weſt Indies, including the Bahamas and the Bermuda or Somer Iſlands, for twelve months, certain articles, enumerated: in the ſaid order, being the produce or growth of the country to which ſuch veſſels belong; and alſo allowing the exportation, from the ſaid Iſlands, into which the importation of ſlaves, lumber, and proviſions, ſhall be made, of rum, moloſſes, and of any other articles, goods and commodities, except ſugar, indico, cotton wool, coffee and cocoa; provided ſuch ſhips ſhould duly enter, report, and deliver their reſpective cargoes, and reland at ſuch ports only where regular cuſtom houſes ſhould have been eſtabliſhed.

A further order, of the ſame date directs that nothing therein contained ſhould be conſtrued to permit, after the 1ſt of November next, the importation of ſlaves, lumber, live ſtock, and proviſions of any kind, into any of the ſaid colonies, in which there ſhould not be at the time of importation, a tonnage duty of not leſs than five ſhillings per ton on every ſhip bringing the ſame, according to the admeaſurement of ſhip or veſſel; nor to permit, after the 1ſt of July 1810, the importation of fiſh into any of the ſaid Iſlands or territories in which there ſhould not be, at the time of the importation, a duty of not leſs than 15, per quintal on dried or ſalted cod, or ling fiſh cured or ſalted; and a proportionate duty per barrel, on cured or pickled ſhad, alewives, mackarel, or ſalmon, ſo imported; and alſo a tonnage duty to the amount above mentioned, on any ſhip bringing ſuch fiſh

The ſame Gazette alſo contains an order for regulating the new duties impoſed by the Legiſlature of the Iſland of Jamaica, on the veſſels and produce of the United States of America; with a tariff on the articles, according to the current money of Jamaica.

New invention.—A Saw-Mill for the purpoſe of ſawing plane, &c, in a circular form, has juſt commenced its operation in Buckſtown, Md. and is found to anſwer the moſt languine expectations of the inventor. Its principal uſe will be experienced in the manufacture of felloes for wheels, where a great abridgement of manual labor; our mill take place, as the mill will turn out four hundred in the courſe of a day.

Dr. Brickell, of Savannah, in a letter to a phyſician in Raleigh, has detailed a courſe of experiments which fully proves that the virus of the Rattle Snake is an acid; paper colored blue with matter having an alkaline baſe, had a few drops of the virus preſſed upon it from the jaws of the Rattle Snake, and the colour was diſcharged—another piece of paper upon which the ſame experiment had been performed, was dipped in a ſolution of fixed alcaline ſalts, and the colour was reſtored, but changed to a pale red—Hence the Doctor has inferred that alkalies externally applied and internally given are the proper remedies for the bite of this reptile The pieces of paper upon which the foregoing experiments were made, are now in the hands of the Editors.—Saluda Star.

An eminent Phyſician was lately cured at Middletown (Connecticut) of a conſumption, by the uſe of Mercury, after all the uſual remedies had failed of ſucceſs. The diſeaſe was attended with copious excoriation of purulent matter, and regular exacerbations of hectic fever, and the patient was reduced to the laſt extremity Fourteen grains of calomel, given in leſs than half as many days, produced a ſalivation, and he was immediately left without an other diſeaſe than debelity, of which he rapidly recovered by the uſe of porter and a generous diet.—ibid

The poor old Pope has certainly been arreſted in Italy, and has been carried, under a guard, through ſeveral towns, on his way to France; ſome accounts give Avignon, others Paris, as the place of his destination,—The "place de grave" is more probable.—Bost. Cen.

The following, was received on Friday the first Instant, accompanied by a letter from friends at Woodhouse, who requested its insertion.

To His Excellency FRANCIS GORE. Esquire. Lieutenant Governor of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

At a time when we see the Editor of a certain News Paper published at Niagara, presumptiously arrogating to himself the Office of a public Censor, and availing himself of the means afforded by his Press to disseminate the most libellous and pernicious doctrines, when we see him for the gratification of his malignity, endeavoring to sow Distrust in the minds of the well affected, and by the most gross and unfounded Calumnies against Your Excellency's Public and private Character, endeavoring to excite tumult, and to alienate the minds of His Majesty's loyal Subjects from His Person and Government. We His Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Magistrates and principal Inhabitants of the County of Norfolk, deem it our duty most respectfully to lay before Your Excellency, our Sentiments on the occasion; and not only to express our abhorrence and detestation of Conduct so flagitious, but also to assure Your Excellency, of our entire confidence in the wisdom, and rectitude of Your Excellency's Administration and of our perfect conviction that, the Measures of your Government, are intended and calculated to maintain the tranquility, and promote the happiness and Prosperity of the Province.

We think it unnecessary to make sounding professions of our attachment to that inestimable Constitution under which, we have the happiness to live; should Circumstances unhappily render it necessary, we hope by our actions, to convince Your Excellency, that we are not insensible to the blessings we enjoy.

That Your Excellency may be long preserved to rule this Colony, with Honor and Satisfaction to Yourself, with advantage to the Province, and with the entire approbation of our beloved SOVEREIGN, is the fervent Prayer of the Magistrates and principal Inhabitants of the County of Norfolk.

New-York, November 8.

The Munich Court Gazette of Sep. fourteenth, contains the following General Order, published in the Austrian headquarters:—

"My beloved subjects, and even my enemies, know that I did not engage in the present war from motives of ambition nor a desire of conquest. Self preservation and independence, a peace consistent with the honor of my crown, and with the safety and tranquility of my people constituted the exalted and sole aim of my exertions.

"The chance of war disappointed my expectations; the enemy penetrated into the interior of my dominions, and overran them with all the horrors of war; but he learned at the same time, to appreciate the public spirit of my people and the valour of my armies. This experience he dearly bought, and my constant solicitude to promote the prosperity of my dominions, led to a negotiation for peace.

"My Ministers empowered for that purpose, have met those of the French Emperor. My wish is an honorable peace—a peace, the stipulation of which offers a prospect and possibility of duration. The valour of my armies, their unshaken courage, their ardent love of their country, their defire, strongly pronounced, not to lay down their arms till an honorable peace shall have been obtained, could not allow me to agree to conditions which threatened to shake the very foundation of the Monarchy, and disgrace us.

"The high spirit which animates my troops, affords me the best security that, should the enemy yet mistake our sentiments and disposition, we shall certainly obtain the reward of perseverance."

Munich, August 20.

My present sojourn in the Capital enables me to acquaint you with the disasters which befel the Bavarian troops in their late incursions into the Tyrol. The invincible attachment of these mountaineers to their independence, joined to their abhorrence of the French, make them fight with a degree of enthusiastic bravery, in which we are reminded of the extraordinary efforts of the Swiss in support of their independence. You have read in the public papers, that the Duke of Dantzic had entered the Northern Tyrol, with about 30,000 men; whilst another column less numerous, under Gen. Rusca, penetrated from Lienz on the eastern side, & a third from Italy by the way of Trent. As the insurgents were totally abandoned by the Austrians on the 29th of July; as the greatest want of harmony was reported to prevail amongst them; as they were said to be without Artillery, leaders, and provision, and their cowardice already known; as they had not hitherto the courage to support an attack made upon them with the bayonette, or to face our artillery, and never fired but from their lurking places, it was universally supposed they would be soon reduced to unconditional submission; and the Bavarian government sent a military commission with the army, in order to judge the leaders of the insurrection. The first occurrences seemed to justify this opinion. The passes were weakly occupied, and some communes made a voluntary offer of submission, and even delivered up some arms, which were for the most part unfit for service. It was soon however perceived that a very inconside-ver perceived that a very inconside-

Inspruck was in the mean time occupied, and our troops advanced to the right towards Landeck, and in another direction towards the Brennar. From this moment our disasters commenced, though the Brennar was occupied. The troops which seized this important position, marched from thence on the 7th. under the command of the Duke of Dantzic in person, against Sterzing, and were almost all crushed by huge pieces of rocks which were thrown down upon them, whilst the few who escaped the carnage were afterwards cut to pieces by the Tyrolese. The Saxons, amounting to 1600 men, formed the advanced guard. They were ordered to march with the greatest rapidity, and were advancing with uncommon intrepidity, when they discovered that the hills were occupied on every side by the enemy. Apprehensive that their retreat might be cut off, they commenced immediately a retrograde movement, when they were assailed with masses of rocks and trees, which were flung with such tremendous effect, that all, with the exception of 200, were sacrificed in less than fifteen minutes. I have this account from an Officer, who was amongst the few who had the fortune to escape, and they fled with precipation and dismay, and they left their artillery, amounting to 8 pieces, behind them. A second and a more prudent attempt was now made by the Bavarians, but it terminated with still greater carnage: and it was then determined to effect a retreat to Inspruck. During the march, our troops were exposed to inconceivable hardships. The Tyrolese were transformed into men of another stamp; for contrary to their usual mode of fighting, they rushed with irresistable fury upon our troops, under the most dreadful fire of grape shot and musketry, which incessantly played upon them. The column which advanced towards La. was exposed to still greater havoc.

It no sooner entered the narrow pass near Psunds, behind Landeck, than it was assailed by the insurgents. In an instant the road in front and rear of the column, was completely blocked up by trees and rocks, which were precipitated down the sides of the mountains. The carnage was dreadful. Of the regiment Funker, which amounted a little before to two thousand men, only four hundred escaped; and 3 other regiments sustained a proportionate loss, only fifteen hundred were able to save themselves. The Tyrolese fought with incredible fury. They rushed upon the batteries, and flung themselves into the midst of the Cavalry. Nothing could resist their impetuosity.——During the retreat one hundred of these mountaineers fell in with 60 hussars near Schwatz, they charged with such fury, that not a single horseman escaped. This column, in its retreat to Inspruck, lost almost all its artillery and ammunition.——To that point the whole of the army directed their retreat; but even there they found the mountains seized by the insurgents who pursued, and those who affected in the commencement to submit. On the 12th & 13th, two most sanguinary battles were fought. The Bavarians wished to dislodge the Tyrolese from the heights: and though they renewed the attack seven times, they were each time repulsed with the greatest slaughter. The Insurgents afterwards broke, though only armed with hunting pieces, unprovided with bayonettes, into the thickest ranks of our troops; and would, in all probability, have killed or taken our entire army, had they succeeded in destroying the bridge over the Inn Hall. As this project failed, the Bavarians were able, to continue their retreat to Worizel, behind Rattenberg.——There they took up a position for some time; and had afterwards the good fortune to reach Kufstein and Saltzburg. In the battle of the thirteenth, near Inspruck, the Tyrolese lost a thousand, and the French and Bavarians 5000 in killed, besides wounded and prisoners.

The principal leader of the insurgents is a man of the name of Parfeyer.—When summoned by the Duke of Dantzic to deliver up his arms before the tenth of August, he wrote him back an answer, desiring him to send two of his Aids decamp, who should decide—whether the Duke in the year 1795, when he was only Gen. Lefebvre, at the head of such a force as he (Parfeyer) commanded, should have obeyed a similar summons. The insurgents are estimated at 80,000, a number which appears incredible; but several officers who have been present at the late occurrences, have assured me that an army of 60,000 is scarcely sufficient to obtain possession of the country; and that even a force of that magnitude would be incompetent, unless the severest measures were adopted:—such as setting fire to the houses, driving away the cattle, occupying the fises of the mountains, and forcing the inhabitants to surrender, or perish by hunger. Should the war break out again, our own frontiers will probably, be exposed to the greatest devastation; and we may expect to see retaliated upon ourselves a part of the calamities we intend for the Tyrolese."

Tyrol.—In the preceding column will be found a very interesting letter from Munich, detailing the particulars of the recent operations in the Tyrol. It will be seen that the brave Tyrolese, since they have been deserted by the Austrian troops, have lost none of their courage or their loyalty. They have attacked and put to flight three divisions of the French army; and have destroyed some thousands of their enemy. As the letter appears to have been written, by a person connected with the French army, it is not probable, that the successes of the Tyrolese is at all overrated.

Bonaparte, "very ill,"—The following letter, announcing this fact, is copied from the 'Aurora of Yesterday.'

"PARIS, Sept. 22.

"The affairs of our legation are kept with impenetrable secrecy; that something has been in hand, the more than usual intercourse, personal and literal, with M. Hautereive, plainly indicates.—The dispositions in this country are from the head to the foot, good towards the United States; but as no important measure can be determined here, and the Emperor is said to have been very ill near Vienna, we cannot conclude before his return to Paris; and when that may be is not even conjectured."

LONDON, October 6

South America.—Yesterday the ship Intention arrived from Buenos Ayres, with letters to the 8th ult. She has performed two voyages in a diagonal direction, across the Atlantic, with a degree of rapidity hitherto unknown in Western navigation. From the British Channel to Rio Janeiro, she was thirty days on her voyage, gun-wale to on every foot of her progress. From thence she sailed to Buenos Ayres, and from the Rio de la-Plata, on her return to Great Britain. She was only forty seven days. The intelligence she has brought is of great political importance. It was supposed that, the authority of Liniers was completely established, that the feeble power of the Kingdom of Spain in her colonies could not wrench from his grasp the Sceptre. He had taken the title of Conde of Buenos Ayres, his aide de camps were all French, and his views were almost undisguised; but the ancient predilections of the country in favor of the present state have prevailed over all the artifices of the Napoleon family.

On the arrival of the new Governor, Riodobro, appointed by the Spanish Junta, Gen. Liniers withdrew to a distant establishment; and so confident were the commercial speculators of our own nation, that the Dominion of Old Spain would be acknowledged, that British goods were run ashore and placed at the mercy of the colonies, to prevent the deterioration of their value by new prohibition. The effect was, that the manufactures of these Islands immediately rose 20 per cent, from the apprehension that the ports of the Spanish Settlements would for the future be shut against the English, and that whatever might be the disposition to favour the commerce of the British allies, all subsequent intercourse must be maintained through the medium or under the express permission of the mother Country.

We learn by some of our letters, that the principal cause of the differences between Buenos Ayres and Monte Video, was a merchant, of the name of Allega, who had been banished from the former in consequence of his agency in this way and who, since the conciliatory arrangements, has not been permitted to return to the former settlement. In a preceding paper, we mentioned a revolution that had been occasioned by a violent act of oppression of Liniers.—It is now known that the members of the Cabildo, who were then shipped off, have returned, and have been readmitted to the exercise of their functions

To be gloomy, gay, comical, queer and terrifick,
To you, ye fair Votaries, my Bows are first due,
Sweet Patrons of all that's eccentric and new:
Be ye Fair, Brown or Yellow, "blue Spirits or grey,"

Your Dimples or Wrinkles shall live in renown

FROM ENGLAND.

By the ship Phillip, captain Williams, in 36 days from Cowes, arrived this morning, we have received London Papers to the 7th of October, and hasten to give the most important items.

It appears by the latest London paper we have seen, (Courier) that, every exertion is making by the French to recruit their armies.

The Emperor of Austria in adverting to the prolongation of the armistice in his general orders, says, "that his assent to the measure is to be attributed not to feebleness, but to his affection to his subjects, and his anxiety to avert from them the calamities of war;" and again assures his subjects that no peace shall be concluded but an honorable one.

The expectation of renewed hostilities continues. While the French conscripts men, and boys, are called out, and five feet boys induced to volunteer, Austria is using an equal exertion.—A levy en masse throughout the Austrian dominions is expected.

Paris, Sept. 23.

According to a circular from H. M. the Minister Director general of the conscription, the Mayors are authorized to receive enrollments for the granadier sharp shooters, ranger sharp shooters, and conscript grenadiers, and conscript rangers of his Majesty's guard.—The young men who enlist in the granadier sharp shooters, and the conscript granadiers, must be five feet five inches; for the ranger sharp-shooters, or conscript rangers, five feet two inches.

The mayors may admit to enlist—1st, young men from 18 to 39, who have not fallen under the conscription—2d, individuals from 30 to 40, who have already served. Young men from 16 to 18, shall in like manner be permitted to serve, with consent of parents or guardians.

Notwithstanding these provisions, which evince that his Majesty is desirous of facilitating to all his subjects the means of entering into his guards, he has decided that four young men from each department may be directly admitted by voluntary enrollment into his regiment of fusileers. Two of them must be at least five feet five inches, and two of five feet three.

Antwerp, Sept. 21.

Several movements has taken place among the troops. General Klein, commanding the cavalry, goes to Brussels. The grand park moved off in the direction of Mechlon. Several regiments are quartered at Merzon, on the road to Holland. The army of Antwerp will be divided into three bodies. The Dutch troops on the right; left wing under the command of Senator Rampon; centre under Reille, one of the Emperor's aide-de-camps. Our garrison will be composed of 10000 veterans and 1500 of the neutral guard. General Vatteeauz has arrived here.

BONAPARTE'S DEATH.

May, from what follows, be confidently expected.

Guernsey, Octr. 4.

A vessel has arrived here which left Cherbourg on Friday last.

The letters by her inform us, that accounts had reached that place from Paris, which leave no doubt that the Emperor Napoleon was very ill at his palace of Schoenbrunn. His disorder is a brain fever, brought on by excessive fatigue in his personal attentions to every branch of his army. Most certain it is, that two physicians and two surgeons suddenly left Paris last week to attend him. They proceeded on their journey with extraordinary speed.

Baltimore, October 30, 1809.

A vessel is arrived from Cadiz, which left the 29th Sept. No intelligence had then been recieved of peace having been signed between Austria and France; trade was at a stand, colonial produce excessively dear, and the conscription laws are executed with the greatest severity.

A letter from a Colonel in the British army to his friend in Lisbon, dated

BADAJOZ, Sept. 19, 1809.

The head quarters of the British army are in this city. My regiment is encamped about two leagues distant with the 4th division of the army, the 5th division is on our left, at Campo Major—the rest extend towards Madrid. The army will certainly remain in its present position for three weeks, unless unforeseen circumstances influence the Commander of the forces. My opinion is that we shall defend Portugal by advancing again into Spain. If we cannot fight the Fr. in the Peninsula, with Spain and Portugal at our back, we certainly cannot do it with Portugal only, in the present distracted state of that Kingdom.—The British army at this moment is a more efficient flank than it has been at any period on this part of the continent. By remaining a short time here it will be still more so by the junction of many small detachments from almost every town in Portugal. The most experienced officers of the army are of opinion that we are able to beat the collected forces of the French in the peninsula whenever we meet them; that the disparity of numbers may not permit our profiting by the victory it cannot be contested; but that the fate of the whole peninsula depends on the events in Germany, while the French have any army on this side the Pyrenees: but if we succeed in driving them to their own frontier, and rousing the dormant kingdom of Portugal into activity, these countries may still be free and independent for ever, in spite of the emperor of the Fr. the conqueror of the rest of the continent of Europe. Lord Wellington or his noble brother are not men of despondent character—they are not likely to forsake Spain because in one important instance their just expectation was not answered. It is evident there still exists in the Government and in the people of Spain a zeal for independence. Because the British arms proved their superiority and the army of Spain was unhurt at Talavera, is there any cause for despondence, in my humble opinion the lesson is turned to great profit. I now look with as much hopes to see Madrid as I did when I left Lisbon. Many Spanish regiments have been decimated and the cowards shot in view of the British soldiers.

The official dispatches from General Castaños, the commander in chief of the Spanish troops in the mountains of Sanander, to Lieut. Gen. the Marquis de la Romana, the one dated head quarters at Sopena the 24th August, advising, that his troops stationed at Otero de los Llennos, had marched and attacked the enemy at Triollo, San Salvador, Pedrazo Longo, and Point Pomar, and completely routed them.—The second dispatch, dated head-quarters, Caveron, Aug. 25, states, that in the attack at Carmona, his troops behaved with great bravery, and destroyed the greatest part of the enemy on the field, besides three general officers, one lieutenant, and seventeen privates prisoners.—He mentions several other partial affairs at different posts with in his command, in which his men had distinguished themselves with uncommon coolness and bravery, and had in every instance vanquished their enemies.

BOSTON, Nov.

From Spain.—Captain Wheelwright from spain, yesterday favored us with a file of seville official, and Cadiz Gazettes, to the last september.—They do not contain any War news, excepting details of affairs of posts.—The great body of the French, being concentrated in the Castiles in front of Madrid; opportunity was given to the spanish partizan corps, scattered over the Peninsula, to attack the weakened french garrisons, and to destroy their foraging parties: the patriots had recovered santandara. New risings of the patriots were mentioned in the districts between Madrid and Bayonne. The position of the armies had not recently been changed.—The spirit of the Junta, and the people, appeared unabated; and the Junta were attending as much to the correction of ancient abuses, and the repeal of unpopular taxes, as they were to the accumulation of the means to carry on the war. The extracts from the French papers copied into the Gazette of the Junta, are accompanied by very severe notes.

It was reported at Tonningen, that Bonaparte was still at Vienna, struggling under very severe indisposition.

It was believed that hostilities between the Austrians and French armies would recommence soon with great vigour, as both were making the most powerful preparations for a renewal of the war.

It was the general expectation that most, if not all, of the German powers would declare in favour of Austria.

THE MERMAID,

SEEN ON THE COAST OF CAITHNESS.

Letter from Mr. William Munro, schoolmaster of Thurso, To Dr. Torrence, regarding a Mermaid seen by him some years ago.

Thurso, June 9, 1809.

DEAR SIR,

Your queries respecting the Mermaid are before me. From the general scepticism which prevails among the learned and intelligent about the existence of such a phenomenon, had not your character and real desire for investigation been too well known to me, for supposing that you wished to have a fertile imagination indulged by a subject of merriment, I would have been disposed to have concluded, that in this instance you aimed at being ranked among the laughing philosophers at my expence. Sensible, however, that this is not the case, and taking it for granted that you are sincere, I shall endeavor to answer your queries, though there is little probability that any testimony which I give respecting the Mermaid, will operate towards convincing those, who have not hitherto been convinced by the repeated testimonies adduced in support of the existence of such an appearance.

About twelve years ago when I was parochical Schoolmaster at Reay, in the course of my walking on the shore of Sandside Bay, being a fine warm day in Summer, I was induced to extend my walk towards Sandside Head, when my attention was arrested by the appearance of a figure resembling an unclothed human female, sitting upon a rock extending into the sea, and apparently in the action of combing its hair which flowed around it shoulders, and of a light brown colour.—The resemblance the figure bore to its prototype in all its visible parts was so striking, that had not the rock on which it was sitting been dangerous for bathing, I would have been constrained to have regarded it as really an human form, to an eye unaccustomed to the situation it must undoubtedly appeared as such. The head was covered with hair of the abovementioned colour, and shaded on the crown, the forehead round, the face plump, the cheeks ruddy, the eyes blue, the mouth and lips of a natural form, resembling those of a man; the teeth I could not discover, as the mouth was shut; the breasts and abdomen, the arms and fingers of the size of a full grown body of the human species; the fingers, from the action in which the hands were employed, did not appear to be webbed, but as to this I am not positive. It remained on the rock three or four minutes after I observed it, and was exercised during that period in combing its hair; which was long and thick, and of which it appeared proud and then dropped into the sea, which was level with the abdomen, from whence it did not re-appear to me.——I had a distinct view of its features, being at no great distance on an eminence above the rock on which it was sitting, and the sun brightly shining.—Immediately before its getting into its natural element it seemed to have observed me, as the eyes were directed towards the eminence on which I stood. It may be necessary to remark, that previous to the period I beheld this object. I had heard it frequently reported by several persons, and some of them persons whose veracity I never heard disputed, that they had seen such a phenomenon as I have described, though then, like many others, I was not disposed to credit their testimony on this subject. I say of a truth, that it was only by seeing the phenomenon, I was perfectly convinced of its existence.

If the above narrative can in any degree be subservient towards establishing the existence of a phenomenon, hitherto almost incredible to naturalists, or to remove the scepticism of others, who are ready to dispute every thing which they cannot fully comprehend, you are welcome to it, from Dear Sir,

Your most obliged, and most humble servant.

(Signed) WM. MUNRO.

To Dr. Torrence, Thurso.

Some very extraordinary instances of abstinence are recorded in medical treatises, but we do not recollect any, that in all respects can be compared to this——

"Ann Moore, aged Forty eight years now living at Tutbury, in Staffordshire, has swallowed no kind of food whatever either solid or fluid for the last two years and a half. Her appetite began to decline about seven years ago, in consequence of weak digestion, and in March 1807, the passage to her stomach became completely closed, so as not to admit of her swallowing even a single drop of water; from the pit of her stomach downward she is a mere skeleton, notwithstanding which her countenance is perfectly cheerful, and has the appearance of good health. So late as last Saturday she was visited by the writer of this article, and was then in excellent spirits, and felt no pain whatever, except a slight shooting across her forehead; she has been offered a thousand pounds to visit the metropolis, and though poor, she declines leaving her home and friends she never sleeps, but amuses herself by reading all night, and recieving the visits of vast numbers who daily flock to her humble roof——Her memory is amazingly retentive, and she feels no inconvenience but from the approach of persons who have been drinking spirits, which affects her much.——Numerous medical men have gone from London, to behold this wonderful phenomenon, and on examination are fully convinced, from her appearance, that no imposition whatever has been practised.—London Morn. Herald September 8.

Occurrences like the following one so seldom happen that it is communicated for publication.

The Schooner Sarah, Milner, of Kingston in Jamaica, was on her voyage from thence to this port, struck by a Sword fish, about 12 O'clock in the night, being out three days. The sword penetrated through solid timber 13 inches thick, and protruding within the vessel upwards of 7 inches, fixed into a barrel of coffee. He stuck until 7 O'clock the next morning, when he broke away, being severely wounded by strokes from the harpoon. The schooner having been hove down the sword was found and extracted

YORK, DECEMBER 20, 1809

The Editor has to apologize to his Subscribers, for not having published in his last Paper, the Lieutenant Governor's Answer to the Address from the Magistrates and Principal Inhabitants, of the County of Norfolk; the Press having been set, before he received it: he now republishes the Address, with His Excellency's Answer.

AT a time when we see the Editor of a certain News Paper published at Niagara, presumptuously arrogating to himself the Office of a public Censor, and availing himself of the means afforded by his Press to disseminate the most libellous and pernicious doctrines; when we see him for the gratification of his malignity, endeavoring to sow distrust in the minds of the well affected, and by the most gross and unfounded Calumnies against Your Excellency's Public and private Character, endeavoring to excite tumult, and to alienate the minds of His Majesty's Loyal Subjects from His Person and Government. We His Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Magistrates and principal inhabitants of the County of Norfolk, deem it our duty most respectfully to lay before Your Excellency, our Sentiments on the occasion; and not only to express our abhorrence and detestation of conduct so flagitious, but also to assure Your Excellency, of our entire confidence in the wisdom and rectitude of Your Excellency's Administration, and of our perfect conviction that, the measures of Your Government, are intended and calculated to maintain the tranquility, and promote the Happiness and Prosperity of the Province.

We think it unnecessary to make sounding professions of our attachment to that inestimable Constitution under which, we have the happiness to live; should Circumstances unhappily render it necessary, we hope by our actions, to convince Your Excellency that, we are not insensible to the blessings we enjoy.

That Your Excellency may be long preserved to rule this Colony, with Honor and Satisfaction to Yourself, with advantage to the Province, and with the entire approbation of our beloved SOVEREIGN, is the fervent Prayer of the Magistrates and principal Inhabitants of the County of Norfolk.

To the Magistrates and Principal Inhabitants of the County of Norfolk.

YOUR Address is dutiful to the King and respectful to myself.

A right use of the liberty of the Press, is the privilege of a Free People, the abuse of that liberty is inconsistent with the Peace of the individual and the safety of the State; every Friend to decency and order, every well wisher to that happy Constitution under which we live, will as far as in him lies, support the one, and restrain the other.

The Magistrates and Principal Inhabitants of the County of Norfolk, to whom I return my thanks for the sentiments, which they have expressed respecting my Administration of this Government, will at all times find me ready to promote the Peace, Happiness, and Prosperity of the Province.

New York, Nov. 29.

The ship Reaper, captain Griffing, arrived at Philadelphia on Monday last, in 45 days from Tonningen. Captain G. did not hear of the peace between Austria and France being signed, nor of the armistice being broke. It was reported & believed, that Bonaparte was ill, it was said with convulsions. The Danes appeared favorable to the Americans, but they are in dread of Bonaparte, and that fear obliges them to obey his dictates, which were violent against the Americans under the pretence of his believing they are from England; notwithstanding which it was conjectured that most, if not all, the American vessels which had been captured or seized, would be liberated. It was said at Tonningen, that Jerome Bonaparte, with a body of troops was at Hamburgh the beginning of October.

We understand the United States ship of war John Adams, capt. Evans, will shortly sail for a port in the North of Europe.

A letter received this morning by a merchant of this city, from his correspondents at Cadiz, says "An order has been issued by Government, allowing all outward bound cargoes of rice, flour and provisions, to export specie."

On Monday arrived at Baltimore, the French government corvette, Tilsit, captain Desmolands, in 50 days from Bayonne, with dispatches for the French minister. This vessel has brought no papers. An officer informs that 100,000 French troops were passed through Bayonne for Spain, and that some officers belonging to the Emperor's household had arrived there, and Bonaparte was shortly expected. His illness was not known at Bayonne.

Not an additional official particular of the terms of the peace imposed on Austria, known to be humiliating—had transpired, though the naked fact had been officially announced in Holland. The cause of this silence occasioned many conjectures, not worth repeating. The last couriers stated, that no prospect of any negociation with France existed:—The Parliament would not meet until January; and that discussions on Ministerial alterations, had given place to schemes for celebrating the approaching Jubilee, (25th October) when the British King entered the 50th year of his reign. At the last Cabinet Council, were Earl Camden, Mr. Perceval, Earls Bathurst, Liverpool, and Harrowby, and Lord Mulgrave.

From Holland.—Captain William Nichols, late of the brig Sally Ann, of this port, arrived in town last evening from Holland, via Cape Cod, in brig Hannah, Smith, of this port, which went on shore at Cape Cod. Captain N. left Amsterdam 6th October, and relates no news of moment. The edicts against American commerce were still in force, and executed with greater vigor than ever, if possible; no particular news from the grand armies, the opinion prevailed in Amsterdam, that hostilities would be renewed. Captain N. brought papers, but they got destroyed on board the brig, in going on shore.

LONDON, Octr. 11.

An Amazonian of high rank.—The last French papers contain the following article:

Aufburgh, Sept. 17.

The noted Countess of Sternbach, who was brought here in custody from Munich, fought in the ranks of the insurgents against the Bavarians. She is the only daughter of a butcher. The Count Von Sternbach fell in love with her noble countenance, and her robust and handsome figure, and gave her his hand. She regales herself in the morning with a glass of Schnaps in the Tyrolese fashion, and occasionally smokes her pipe of tobacco. She was taken prisoner in an action with the Bavarian troops in Innthal, and is proceeding under an escort for Straßburgh with the Tyrolese Clergyman taken at the same time.

Immediately subsequent to the conclusion of peace between Russia & Sweden, the following official notification was issued:—

To the Govr. of Livonia, &c.

"On the 5th of this month, a treaty of eternal Peace between Russia and Sweden was concluded.

"All the propositions by us made with regard to the said Peace have been accepted, and the incorporation of the Gr. Dutchy of Finland with the Russian Empire has been confirmed. The town of Tornec and the river of the same name form the frontiers of the two States.

"Thus has a war been ended, the various events of which have covered the Russian armies with immortal glory, and the termination whereof has added to the empire a country, inhabited by an industrious people, celebrated on account of its progress in agriculture, its markets, important fortifications, and the fortress of Sweaburgh, which has been enlarged and has secured for ever on that side the frontiers of our native land.

"While we are offering up our thanks to that Divine Being which has vouchsafed to Russia and crown her arms with success, we hasten to acquaint you with this fortunate event, feeling perfectly satisfied, that all our faithful subjects will join us in offering up thanks to the most High, for the happy conclusion of a much wished-for Peace.

"For the rest, after the ratifications shall have been exchanged, the Treaty of peace will be publicly made known by a distinct manifesto. "yours &c.

The existence of whole nations persons may well be questioned; can be no reasonable doubt of t certain individuals, whose stature exceeded that of men in general act height of Og, King of Bathan variously computed; some suppos have been more than 12 English f others think his stature did not exceed feet.—In like manner, the giant Goliah generally computed to have been about 9 feet 9 inches; but bishop Cumberland supposes he might have been full 11 feet. The Emperor Maximinus is said to have been 9 feet; and several other Romans of equal stature are reported to have lived in the reign of Augustus, &c.—Accounts are contained in the philosophical transactions, of human skeletons dug up in England, measuring 8 and 9 feet in length, very probably they were Roman.—Credible relations among the moderns are likewise to be found of men and women fully equal in size to any of the ancients whose existence can be verified; although I think no credit can be attached to the fabulous, & contradictory stories of the Patagonians & other people. [illegible] anil coast a race of [illegible] Turner, [illegible] of whom measure [illegible] Kap. of Turner [illegible] 12 feet. The account of Turner is moreover rendered credible by Monsieur Thevet, who, in his description of America, published at Paris, 1575, tells us he saw and measured the skeleton of a South American, then not many years dead, which was eleven feet five inches in length; his skull was 3 feet 2 inch in circumference, and the leg bone full 3 feet 3 inches long. To these remarkable instances may be added a well proportioned living man, whom Diemerbroeck saw at Utrecht, measuring 8 feet 6 inches, and who is likewise mentioned by Dr. Ray. Also a youth seen by D. Bocamus, who was nearly 9 feet high; and a man almost 10 feet and a woman quite 9 feet. Among our own countrymen may be named Walter Parsons, porter to King James the first, about 7 feet 7 inches in Stature and Edward Mallone (or Malloon) whom Dr. Molyneaux and Dr. Musgrave have described of the same height, A. D. 1683—3. In the 41st and 42d volume of the Philosophical transactions from an os frontis and os bregmatis, the former of which is said to have belonged to a person between 11 and 12 feet high, the other to a giant of 13 feet 4 inches; but no history is given of the other bones of these skeletons. The Orientes pretend to have had men among them even so prodigious as 15 feet high! Perhaps these relations are no better founded than their chronological fables. However, I now shall subjoin a short account of Mr O'Brien, the Irishman who has lately been exhibited in London, and who pretends his printed advertisement, to be nearly seven feet high!

A Race of Pigmies.

On the 20th of April, Dr. Chisholm laid before the Royal Society London, ſome particulars reſpecting a race of Pigmies, ſaid to exiſt as a nation in the centre of the Iſland of Madagaſcar. A. M. Baudin, who had viſited that iſland and ſpent 50 days among them, and who was in the French Weſt Indies, had one of theſe beings preſerved; it was a man about 33 years of age, meaſuring only 32 inches, but perfectly proportionate in all his parts. A child of a year old was alſo preſerved in ſpirits, and meaſured one foot. Theſe people are repreſented as being much faier than the other natives, and of a bright copper colour. they are alſo ſaid to be very ingnious, to be expert with bow and arrows or javelins; and to be hoſpitable, humane and generous. One account ſtates them to bve long hair, and another woolly. They are alſo very numerous. M. Baudi having ſeen above 8000 in one town. The women are ſaid to have little breaſts and ſo much ſo that the children are fed wit' cows milk. Dr. Chisholme who perſonſly inſpected and meaſured theſe preſerved bodies, concludes that a pigmy race ſhould no longer be conſidered as fabulous, and that ſuch has now been diſcovered in Madagaſcar. Some other French voyagers are likewiſe mentioned the exiſtence of theſe ſingular people.—London Paper.

is but a few years ſince the Bona-were inhabitants of the iſland of Corſica, in humble life, probably not tormented with ambition, nor dreaming of crowns, thrones, or empires. What muſt be the emotions of mind, with which Madame Letitia, the mother of this ſtrange race, muſt view the changes which have happened to herſelf, and her children? Inſtead of the peaceable purſuits of the farmer, or the ſhepherd, or whatever employments they were born and nurtured to follow, if her head is not giddy and addled, ſhe muſt feel a good degree of amazement, as ſhe looks round, and ſees one ſon Emperor of France, and King of Italy, and Tyrant of Continental Europe, pulling down from their Thrones one generation of Monarchs, and creating another, with as much eaſe and facility, as the merchant buys and ſells his commodities, and living at an expence, & in a ſtyle of magnificence, which eclipſes the ſplendour of Caliphs and Sultans—Another of her ſons wearing the crown of Holland; a third, that of Weſtphalia; one of her daughters Queen of Naples; and a ſecond princeſs Borgheſe. In ſhort, a large proportion of the wealth and ſervitory, and almoſt the whole of the power and dominion of Europe, is in the hands of her offspring. Surely, the good old lady, when ſhe compares the paſt with the preſent—when ſhe thinks what ſhe was, and what ſhe is—muſt ſtare about, and once in a while ask herſelf—whether this is all a dream or a living reality.

"Thus, firſt of birds, the Turkey-cock ſo bold, Around the dung-hill ranging uncontroul'd,
With all the pride of ſelf-importance big,
Sti[illegible] looks ſtately at each paſſing pig—
And wond[illegible] and green around at diſtance ſtare,
Who the devil marches there."

From the Georgetown Independent.

MR. PATTERSON,

And [illegible] that an American lady, ſometime the wife of the brother of a ci-devant Conſul and now diſtracted Emperor, is elevated to a Dutcheſs, and her offspring made a Prince?—What are not the viciſſitudes of life? The imagination dwells with no pleaſure on the caſualties of greatneſs and obſcurity. Genuinement is uſually recluſe from both—Now, the Emperor, filled with ambition, perſuades a brother to diſentangle the knots of a matrimonial affection—to cut all the ligaments of voluntary ſacred engagement—and now, his whim is to enoble a lady once excluded from conſideration, and to exalt the ſon to a Principedom—And, in the preſence of that Prince[illegible] Touſſard, the guardian, is not permi[illegible]d to keep his head from the frigidity of the[illegible], by any covering; and ſo alſo is the ſituatio[illegible] of the auguſt Ambaſſador of this auguſt n[illegible]tion.

And the Dutcheſs, and [illegible] the Prince, and the Guardian, have gone to [illegible] Philadelphia; and they purpoſe on return[illegible]ing, to ſpend ſome time here in Waſhington—W[illegible] cannot ſuppoſe, the Dutcheſs to exhi[illegible]d the young Prince here as the future mon[illegible]ch of America.—Can there be an expectat[illegible]on that our republican ha[illegible]ndalities ar[illegible]ly their place?—and French morality ſu[illegible] to go to the grave Let the Prince however[illegible] be indulged with a ſight of that little ſtone [illegible]houſe which is now occupied by Mr. Madiſo[illegible], and harbor at leaſt the hope that it may beco[illegible]me the palace of the King of America.

Col. Touſſard aſſert[illegible]d, a few days ſince, that Bomparte was the [illegible]eft of friends to Americans, that he had pro[illegible]fered 100,000 men if we would declare [illegible]ar againſt England. This adoleſcent Prince, [illegible]nd theſe high hopes of the Dutcheſs, Indep[illegible]endent Americans, from Britiſh tyranny a[illegible]nd French injuſtice know well how to demol[illegible]th.

The Editor conceiving that it forms a ſmall part of the duty of perſons in his ſituation, to return at acculſtomed periods, their thanks for the patronage and friendſhip of their ſupporters, he now avails himſelf of the preſent ſeaſon, to expreſs the ſtrong ſenſe he entertains of the perſonal benevolence he has ſo uniformly experienced.

The ſalubrity of this happy Climate, ſo Divinely actuated, enables him with peculiar pleaſure on this Annual-occaſion, to recognize the tame reſpectabl and friendly ſupporters; whole number, th[illegible] nearly elapſed Twelve-month. has [illegible]ther diminiſhed by deaths, nor by patronage withdrawn:—and wi[illegible]hatever acquiſition of individual [illegible]olperity and happineſs the future [illegible]y be accompanied, ſuch acquiſition[illegible] can only keep pace with his ſincere [illegible]ſhes.

However unworthy or inadequate the Editor [illegible] ſtill feels it incumbent on his governing principles, to ſuggeſt to the minds of his every Reader, that Temperance, Forbearance, and active moral duties, ſtrongly prompt the impulſive recollection that, we ſtand individually in the Divine Preſence; and can not ſtand there in vain. Let but the ſenſe of this encompaſſing and all-ſurrounding preſence, invariably animate us; then no baſe unworthy thought could form an inroad to the mind, no unjuſt nor vicious act deform the moral fabric, and no vile or evil emotion invade a heart thus rendered inflexibly virtuous.

The recent commemoration of the [illegible] and the approaching memento of the advancing Century, hold forth a forceful warning to each of us, that in aging we number an additional year, and have travelled one meaſured ſtage towards that dread tribunal where, all muſt be judged. If we retrace the occurrences of the year in which, our agency had led to any part, let their numeration lead to our happineſs, and let, "well done thou good and faithful ſervant" be early claimed.

In every retroſpect of our lives; we muſt find much to condemn but I hope, much more to approve; and I cheriſh the anticipation that, the experienced good and evil may lead to generous reform, and fruitful amendment. Let thoſe of us, who are now bleſſed with perfect health, and the deſired means of its enjoyment, but ponder on the feeble tenure on which, both are held:—at leaſt, we can only conſider ourſelves as temporary proprietors, or as Aſſignees, to further their moral and benencent views. Innumerable inſtances point out the frail uncertainty in the waſting thread of life, and of an unavailing hope in the enjoyment of propert.; "Man walks but little here below, nor wants that little long." A late inſtance amongſt us, muſt abate all miſplaced confidence in the lengthened duration of either riches, or life:—Mr. Roelles, a reſpectable ſtranger, independent in his circumſtances, in the bloom of vigorous health, and prime of life, had not viſibly a moment's warning, nor a moments preſage of his ſudden diſſolution. His [illegible] ſhould operate as a warning voice to the healthful, and inſtruct us to be prepared to meet a like ſummons. The fear and dread of death and its attendant conſequences, ordinarily originates in wickedneſs and depravity, and carries terrors in its apprehenſion; but, the virtuous view it as a welcome and happy tranſition from this tranſitory one to a laſting and a better world.

For the information of people intereſted, the following extract is inſerted :——

"For Staves the demand is very limited. Good white oak barrel are held at 18l. to 20l. Hhd. at 33l to 36l—and Pipe at [illegible], to forty-four pounds per Thouſand."

THE NIGHT OF A BATCHELOR.

"Come gentle Night,
"Thou ſober ſuited matron."
SHAKSPEARE.

When the buſineſs and brawl of the day are over, the pleaſures of the man of taſte and feeling begin. From the buſtle of the world, he retires to the true enjoyments of his nature. The giddy and the gay he leaves to purſuits, which do not originate in ſentiment, or terminate in improvement. He connects himſelf with infinity in his range of thought, and unites with every ſentiment being in the expanſion of feeling. In the juſt exercife of his powers he attains to the dignity and indulges in the prerogatives of his rank.

I love thee, "ſober ſuited night." In thy ſtill hours, and ſheltered by thy ſhades, I catch all the joy of freedom. The impulſes of intellect and humanity, keep me in activity. Which refreſhes. My ſolitary retreat is Adam's paradiſe, and I indulge to rapture

Ye gay and giddy beings, who find no pleaſure but in the crowd, and in the ſports of the crowd, who flee to the world and its bald amuſements to eſcape from yourſelves, liſten to the biography of a ſtranger. Perhaps you may envy his fortune, when he boaſts of pleaſure. Luckily it can be obtained without money or without price. It needs but the will to be acquired, and its acquiſion is attended with too many delights ever to be reſigned.

When the ſhades of night have fallen, and I ſit gazing at my fading embers in momentary relaxation, memory awakes and buſies with a thouſand tales the time he ſteals.——She talks of all the dear delights of paſt days and hurries me to the faireſt ſcenes of early life.—I wander over the play place of my boyiſh years. I con over my taſk without its wonted toils, and play truant without the faithful rod. I run home again with joy, and renew the pleaſures of thoughtleſs innocence. Domeſtic delights, college ſcenes, and all the buſy parts of youth recur. Year after year toils on, and to filial and friendly affection ſucceeds a more genial glow.—I remember the firſt time I handed my fair one a roſe, and enjoy the bluſh that betrayed its glad acceptance. I think on ——no, I feel the faſcination, that the, that now bewitches me, and almoſt forgot, that my ſight is not the full ſwelling of hope. My heart beats quick.—I give a tear to deſpair, and ſtrive to feel, that I once was happy. The viſion of ſome confidential friend here calls up our ſympathy, our emulation and ſocial labors. The concomitant ſcenes riſh upon my mind.—Fancy fills up the ſpace of abſence, and hope places him in the progreſs of happineſs.

But the ſeclusion of night is not sacred to the graceful viſions and dear delusions of feeling. The head muſt improve the advantages of ſolitude, and after the toil of profeſſional inquiry, is to be refreſhed by the pages of philoſophy and taſte. I become the diſciple of genius. Nature is wonderful, but of all her wonders, the moſt engaging is the mind, that devolves her myſteries. While I wonder at the diſcloſure of her craft, her minute, her complicate machinery, I enjoy the delight of her ſucceſsful inveſtigator. Cold is the heart and robbed of half its bliſs, that feels no intereſt in the purſuits of the ſpy and hiſtorian of nature. I catch him in the midſt of his reſearches, I lean over and and languiſh at the tardy and doubtful progreſs of experiment.—I throb with all his anxiety, and indulge in his triumph at the diſcovery of new forms and new relations. I trace his cares, his ſchemes, his perplexities, and his reſult, and venerate the locks, that thought has whitened for age. From philoſophy I wander into the fairy land of fancy. I mark her whole creation, which is modelled on nature without her neceſſities, and regulated from reaſon, yet without her preciſion. I ſee the ſcene ſtarting in the poet's mind—I behold it expand—the actor thicken—the plot grows deep—fate hangs upon a hair, and who dares cut it? Whoes heart has no beat quick? Whoes eye has been dry? Who has not ruſhed to act in the moment of deluſion, when genius has put her ſpell on ſenſe, and annihilated time and place and circumſtance?

The clock ſtrikes twelve. A grateful avocation ſtill remains. In the Bible I ſeek the will of my Father, his counſels and my duties. From his word, which teaches me what I am, and his promiſes, which inform me what I may be, I derive a joy, which the world cannot give, nor take away. I kneel with hope and gratitude before his throne, and with confidence in his mercy commend all my fellow men to his holy keeping. "Our Father, who art in Heaven," what thought more enlivening to the child on earth! Over ſhadow us with thy wings, keep us in the hollow of thy hand.

Such is the nightof a rational recluſe, whom fortune and inclination have made a feceder from ſociety. And who ſhall derive his tranquil pleaſures by comparing them with the orgies of folly and deluſion, or the gay amuſements of a giddy world? If the heart there throb, it is with diſguſt if the eye there languiſh, it is at vanity. Sleep is to them but the freedom of madneſs, and all its dreams, the vagaries of a frantic fancy. Soft is the pillow to my head. The ſlumber, earned by toil, is quiet; and, if a viſion ſteals through my mind, it ſeems a viſit from ſome kind angel to cheer me for a well cloſed day.

BOETIUS.

Affair of Weſt Florida.

It is well known that the part of Weſt Florida, extending eaſtward from the Miſſiſippi to the river Perdido, (being ſituated between thoſe two rivers, and bounded on the north by the Miſiſippi Territory) has been in diſpute between Spain and the United States, in conſequence of, and ever ſince the Louiſiana purchaſe in April, 1803. Spain, however, has perſiſted in refuſing the juſtice of our claims under that Treaty, and the ſubject has been left open for negociation, or at leaſt has never been ſettled by the two governments. Whether the right to the country in queſtion has ever been fairly conveyed from Spain to America, is a queſtion, which as Americans, we ought to anſwer in the affirmative; but others ſcruple not to affirm, that the right is both doubtful and incomplete. Neither the diſtracted ſtate of the Spaniſh monarchy, nor of the colony of Weſt Florida, in caſe the right has not been abſolutely and juſtly conveyed, will juſtify the United States in taking poſſeſſion of that country. Circumſtances, however, ſeem to invite the occupancy of the territory by the United States; and when there is no danger, our Preſident is one of the moſt valiant ſouls alive. It ſeems that the Convention of Weſt Florida on the 26th Sept. 1810, declared that country a Free and Independent State, in conſequence of the unprotected ſituation in which they were left by Spain and the anarchy with which they were threatened among themſelves. This declaration ſigned by JOHN ROJA, Preſident, and ANDREW STEELE, Sec'y. was tranſmitted to Mr. Madiſon. A long memorial of this Revolutionary Convention of W. Florida, ſigned by the Preſident, was tranſmitted to Governor Holmes of the Miſſiſipi Territory, and by him to the Secretary of State. It was accompanied by the declaration of Independence paſſed by the Convention. In the Memorial, the Revolutioniſts of Weſt Florida, pray to be acknowledged and protected by the United States, and to become inhabitants of the Union.—The grounds of their requeſt they ſay are founded on the conſtruction which the U. States have always given to the treaty of 1803; by which conſtruction Weſt Florida has been conſidered as a part of the Louiſiana purchaſe;—that the United States having refuſed to accredit the Spaniſh Junta, cannot recognize the Spaniſh Regency; that Bonaparte cannot complain if Weſt Florida becomes part of the United States, as he has invited the Spaniſh colonies to become independent; and that Great Britain as the ally of Spain, cannot complain, becauſe Weſt Florida is threatened with ſubjugation by the French exiles from Cuba, and other "partizans of Bonaparte, who are the internal enemies of Great Britain." The Revolutioniſts claim a right to all the unlocated lands of the "Commonwealth;" ſtipulate for the pardon of all deſerters reſiding among them; and ſolicit a loan of 100,000 dollars, which they add, "the Secretary of the Treaſury may make immediately without committing the Government, or making it known to foreign miniſters in Waſhington." These acts having been done, it remained with our government, either to recognise the Convention as a new State of the Union, to incorporate it with the Orleans Territory, or to remain inactive until the deciſion of the Spaniſh Cortes ſhould be aſcertained. The government have not heſitated to conſider their right to this country, as paramount and indiſputable; and accordingly, on the 27th of October, a Proclamation, ſigned by the President was deſpatched to Gov. Claiborne of the Orleans Territory, authorizing him to take forcible poſſeſſion of Florida, as a part of his juriſdiction. This Proclamation was accompanied by a letter of inſtructions from the Secretary of State, directing Governor Claiborne to proceed firſt to Waſhington in the Miſſiſipi Territory, there to conſult with Gov. Holmes, and then take poſſeſſion. In caſe of any place, however ſmall, remaining, occupied by a Spaniſh garriſon, he is required not to uſe any force againſt it; but to make a report reſpecting it to the department of State. The Preſident's Proclamation is directed to be printed in the French, Engliſh, and Spaniſh languages, and extenſively circulated through the Territory of Orleans and Florida, and Copies of the ſame, with conciliatory letters tranſmitted to the Governors of the Spaniſh provinces in the neighborhood.—The Secretary of State has ſent a letter, alſo, to Governor Holmes, ſtating the unreaſonable expectations of the convention, the rights of the United States to the territory, and the determination to throw the vacant land of this territory into common ſtock, for the national uſes of all the inhabitants of theſe ſtates. This letter alſo refuſes to acknowledge the convention to have any power to propoſe or form a compact with the United States; but mentions, at the ſame time, that an early and continued attention to their wants and their ſituation will always be afforded by the Federal Legiſlature.

We learn from an authentic ſource, that the Spaniſh Miniſter has deſpatched a cutter to Cadiz, to communicate to the Regency and Cortes governing Spain, information of the meaſure the Executive of the United States has taken with regard to a part of Weſt Florida.

Mr. Pinkney ordered Home.

Among the documents ſubmitted by the Preſident to Congreſs, is the following letter to Mr. Pinckney, ordering his return to the United States, in caſe a miniſter of high rank, &c. is not ſent to this country. Thus the plot daily thickens, and there is every proſpect that it will end in deep tragedy. The Britiſh government have probably more honorable employment, for their "men of rank" than to ſend them to this country to be vilified, and inſulted by our Secretary of State and mobbed by the populace. Had the diſmiſſion of Mr. Jackſon been right and juſt, this ſtep would not have been improper; but as that was outrageouſly wrong, everything growing out of it is wrong.

Mr. Smith to Mr Pinckney.

SIR—From a review of the conduct of the Britiſh Government, in relation to a Plenipotentiary ſucceſſor to Mr. Jackſon, as preſented in your ſeveral communications, including even thoſe brought by the Hornet, at which date and on which inviting occaſion the ſubject does not appear to have been within the attention of government, the Preſident thinks it improper, that the United States ſhould continue to be repreſented in London, by a Miniſter Plenipotentiary. In caſe, therefore, no appointment of a ſucceſſor to Mr. Jackſon, of that grade, ſhould have taken place at the receipt of this letter, you will conſider your functions ſuſpended, and you will accordingly take your leave of abſence, charging a fit perſon with the affairs of the Legation.

MR. PINKNEY TO LORD WELLESLEY

Great Cumberland Place (without date)

My Lord—I have the honor to ſtate to your Lordſhip, in conformity with my verbal explanations in a recent conference, that I am authorized to adjuſt with his Majeſty's government the caſe of the attack on the American forge Chesapeake, in the month of June, 18 7, by the Britiſh ſhip the Leopard.

It will give me ſincere pleaſure to communicate with your Lordſhip on this intereſting ſubject, in ſuch manner as ſhall be thought beſt calculated to lead to a fair and honorable arrangement of it, preparatory to the reſtoration of kindneſs and beneficial intercourſe between the two countries.

I have the honor to be &c.

Lord Wellesley to Mr Pinkney.

The Marquis Wellesley preſents his compliments to Mr. Pinkney, and will be happy to have the honor of ſeeing him, at the Foreign Office, Tuesday next, at 2 P. M. if the hour ſhould ſuit his convenience.

Foreign Office, April 9th 1810.

MR. PINKNEY TO LORD WELLESLEY

Great Cumberland Place 3 th Ap. 1810.

MY LORD.

The French miniſter for foreign affairs has ſtated, in an official note to General Armſtrong, the miniſter plenipotentiary of the United States at Paris, that "the only condition, required for the evocation, by the French government, of the decree of Berlin, will be the previous revocation by the British government, of her blockades of France, or part of France (such as that from the Elbe to Breſt, &c.) of a date antient to the date of the aforeſaid decree."

I had ſuppoſed, that the blockades of France, inſtituted by Great Britain before the date of the Berlin decree, were already withdrawn, virtually though not formally, in conſequence of the reſtrictions which they eſtabliſhed having been provided for and compriſed in certain orders in council, iſſued after the date of that decree; and your Lordſhip's letter to me, of the 26th of laſt month, certainly ſeems to confirm that ſuppoſition. But with regard to the blockade of May 16 8, although it proves it to be effectual with regard to the only other blockade, which falls within the deſcription of the French miniſter's communication, namely, the blockade of Venice, eſtabliſhed in July of the ſame year.

As I am anxious to neglect nothing, which may have a tendency to produce the repeal of the Berlin decree, and of ſuch other decrees and orders as the Government of the United States has, from time to time, complained of, I beg to enquire of your Lordſhip, with a view to the terms of the above mentioned note to general Armſtrong, whether there exiſts any objection, on the part of his Majeſty's government, to a revocation, or to a declaration that they are no longer in force, of the blockades in queſtion, eſpecially that of May, 18 6

I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed) WM. PINKNEY.

The most noble the Marquis Wellesley, &c. &c.

Mr. Pinkney to Lord Wellesley.

Great Cumberland Place, May. 3, 1810.

My Lord,

I have the honor to call your Lordſhip's attention, in purſuance of the inſtructions of my government, to a practice, which has for ſome time paſt prevailed in this country of forging American ſhips' papers, for the purpoſe of giving to Engliſh veſſels the character of American bottoms.

It appears from various ſources of information, that theſe fabrications are carried to a great extent, to bring into ſuſpicion the genuine documents on which the ſafety of American commerce depends, and particularly in London, and that the fraudulent papers are purchaſed as a regular article of traffic, and uſed in numerous inſtances, ſo as to ſubject that commerce to ſerious vexation and loſs.

I am confident, my Lord, that it is only neceſſary to ſuggeſt to his Majeſty's government, the exiſtence of theſe abuſes, ſo injurious to the United States, and ſo pernicious in their general tendency, to induce it to cauſe immediate enquiry to be made, with a view to an efficacious remedy. I have therefore only to add, that I am in poſſeſſion of ſome papers, which throw conſiderable light on this ſubject, and which (with ſuch other information as I have obtained or may obtain) I ſhall be happy to communicate to your Lordſhip when ever your Lordſhip thinks proper.

I have the honor to be, &c

(Signed) WM. PINKNEY.

Lord Wellesley to Mr. Pinkney.

The undersigned, his Majeſty's principal ſecretary of ſtate for foreign affairs, has received his Majeſty's commands, to inform Mr Pinkney, that the King has judged it expedient to ſignify his orders to the lords commiſſioners of the admiralty, to give the neceſſary directions to the officers employed in the blockade of the coaſt and ports of Spain, from Gijon to the French territory, that they permit, notwithſtanding the ſaid blockade, Spaniſh or neutral veſſels, laden with ſea goes, the produce of Spain only, to ſail from any port included in the limits of the ſaid blockade, ſubject, nevertheleſs, (as to the ports to which they trade) to the reſtrictions of his Majeſty's orders in council of the 26th of April, 1809. and of the 7th of January, 1807.

The undersigned requeſts Mr. Pinkney to accept aſſurances of his high conſideration.

(Signed) WELLESLEY.

Foreign Office, May 14 1810.

Mr. Pinkney to Lord Wellesley.

Great Cumberland Place. 23d June. 1810.

MY LORD,

I beg to recal your Lordſhip's attention to the ſubject of the letter which I had the honor to addreſs to you on the 30th of April laſt concerning the Britiſh blockades of France, anterior to the Berlin decree.

My government expects from me a communication on that ſubject; and your Lordſhip will, I am ſure, take pleaſure in enabling me, with as little delay as poſſible, to fulfil that expectation in a ſatisfactory manner.

I feel confident, that, after the declaration of France, which I had the honor to ſtate to your lordſhip in that letter, and to mention in conference before and ſince the day, there will be no difficulty, on the part of his Majeſty's government, in revoking theſe blockades, or declaring that they are no longer in exiſtence.

I have the honor to be, &c. &c.

(Signed) WM. PINKNEY.

Mr. Pinkney to Lord Wellesley.

Great Cumberland Place, 9th July, 1810.

MY LORD.

In purſuance of the converſation which I had the honor to hold with your Lordſhip on the 6th inſtant, I take the liberty to requeſt information, which I am ſure will be readily given, concerning the intention of his Majeſty's government to ſend a miniſter plenipotentiary to the United States, as the ſucceſſor of Mr. Jackſon.

I have no doubt that it is intended to ſend ſuch a ſucceſſor without delay, as one of the means of reſtoring and maintaining the friendly relations of the two countries; but I ſhall, nevertheleſs, be glad to be authoriſed by your lordſhip to make a communication to that effect.

I have the honor to be,

with high conſideration,

SIR,

I think it may be difficult to enter upon the ſubject of your laſt note, (reſpecting the diplomatic rank of our miniſter in America) in any official form.

But I have no difficulty in aſſuring you, that it is my intention immediately to recommend the appointment of an envoy extraordinary and miniſter plenipotentiary, from the King to the United States.

I have the honor to be,

with great reſpect and eſteem,

SIR,

FROM MR. PINKNEY TO LORD WELLESLEY

Great Cumberland Place, Aug. 21. 1810.

MY LORD,

I have had the honor to receive your official note of the 18th inſtant, communicating the reſolution of the Britiſh government to eſtabliſh a cloſe blockade of the canal of Corfu, and ſhall not fail to tranſmit a copy of it with a little delay as poſſible, to the ſecretary of ſtate of the United States.

In the mean time I take the liberty in purſuance of the ſentiments of the President heretofore ſignified to me, to obſerve to your Lordſhip that, as a blockade eſſentially implies a force on the ſpot for the purpoſe, and as the limitation required in the caſe muſt be a warning to neutral trades of the time that a blockade exiſts, the communication which your lordſhip has made to me, derives its title to the acknowledgements of the United States from the ſuppoſition that it was meant as a friendly premonition, which, though ſaving of itſelf no legal reſtraint on neutrals, not introducing any penal conſequences, might uſefully influence the courſe of their mercantile expeditions. In this ſenſe the communication will be received by the President, as a mark of that friendly attention which ought in all caſes to be reciprocally maintained, and in this ſenſe the President will be the more diſpoſed to regard the communication, as a different uſe would contradict the definition of a blockade, and of the requiſite notification thereof, contained in the orders of the Britiſh government to Commodore Hood and the judges of the vice admiralty courts, as communicated to the American government by Mr. Merry, on the 12th of April, 18 4.

I have the honor to be, &c.

(Signed) Wm. PINKNEY.

The most noble the Marquis of Wellesley, &c.

Mr. Pinkney to Lord Wellesley.

15th Sept. 1810.

MY LORD,

In my note of the 1ſt inſtant, I had the honor to inform your Lordſhip, that it had been ſtated ſome in a letter from Gottenburg, that in conſequence of ſome miſconception of the effect of the order for eſtabliſhing a blockade of Helſinore in May laſt, American veſſels had recently been prevented from paſſing the ſound, by the Engliſh naval force in that quarter; and I requeſted, that if this ſtatement was correct, ſuch explanations might be tranſmitted to the Britiſh commander as might at leaſt confine the blockade in queſtion to the port againſt which it had been profeſſedly inſtituted.

As I have not received any anſwer to that note, and conſequently do not know whether any order has been given to remove the interruption which it mentions, I feel it to be neceſſary, to lay before your Lordſhip, the enclofed original proteſt of the maſter of the American ſhip "Alert," which appears to eſtabliſh the exiſtence of that interruption, in a form as exceptionable as it could poſſibly aſſume.

Whatever may be the ground upon which Sir James Saumarez has thought fit to iſſue his orders, to cloſe the paſſage of the Sound to American veſſels, returning in the priſecution of a lawful trade to the United States, or proceeding in a contrary direction, your Lordſhip will, I am perſuaded, think with me, that my government has a fair claim to be made acquainted, either through me or through ſuch other channel, as your Lordſhip may deem more proper, with the intentions of the Britiſh government on the ſubject.

Before I conclude this letter I muſt call your Lordſhip's attention to the particular circumſtances of the caſe, which has mainly produced it, and to the redreſs which thoſe circumſtances ſeem to require.

The "Alert" has been ſeized and ſent to England, by the "Africa," for Salvage. The peril from which ſhe was ſaved, if ſhe was ſaved from any peril, was created from the injuſtice of the capturing veſſel, in turning her from the regular courſe of her homeward voyage.

That the commander of the "Africane," or thoſe under whom he acted, ſhould be reſponſible to the utmoſt, for the loſs occaſioned by that injuſtice, ſeems to be perfectly reaſonable; but it is difficult to imagine, in what way he can expect to derive from it a right to inflame the loſs for his own advantage. I truſt, that this attempt will be repreſſed in a ſuitable manner, and that, in place of ſalvage to be paid by the injured neutral, compenſation will, in ſome mode or other, be awarded to him for the damage he has been made to ſuſtain.

The impreſſment on board the "Alert," of four American ſeamen then by the "Africa," cannot be passed unnoticed. This abuse could not fail to be interesting under any circumstances; but on this occasion, (supposing the enclosed narrative to be true) it is not only characteriled by an utter disregard of the rights of the American government, and by the oppression of its citizens, but is practised under a shew of friendly protection, and aggravated by every practical wrong which could well be associated with it.

I have the honor to be &c.

MR. PINKNEY TO LORD WELLESLEY.
Great Cumberland Place, Sept. 21, 1810.

MY LORD,

On the 30th of April last, I had the honor to address a note to your lordship, in which, upon the inducements which it stated, I took the liberty to inquire, whether there was any objection on the part of his Majesty's government, to a revocation, or to a declaration that they were no longer in force, of the British blockades of France of a date anterior to the Berlin Decree.

In a second note of the 23d of June, I had the honor to recall your lordship's attention to that inquiry, and to add, that my government expected from me a communication upon it. And on the 8th of August, I was again brought to your lordship's recollection, in the same mode. I was moreover mentioned in several conversations, after the delivery of my first note, which had, in fact, been preceded by verbal explanations on my part, as well as by an abortive correspondence in writing, to which some of those explanations were preparatory.

If I had been so fortunate as to obtain for my hitherto unauthorised inquiry, the notice which I had flattered myself it might receive, and to which I certainly thought it was recommended by the plainest considerations of policy and justice, it would not, perhaps, have been necessary for me to trouble your lordship with this letter, the purpose of which is, in very few words, to remind his Majesty's government, in pursuance of my instructions, of the sentiments and expectations of the government of the United States, respecting such British blockades as that which my inquiry principally regarded.

Those sentiments and expectations are so well explained in two letters, from Mr. Secretary Madison, of the 27th October, 1803, to Mr. Thornton, and of the 3d of June, 1806, to Mr. Merry, that very little more is required, in the execution of my instructions on this occasion, than that I should refer your lordship to the copies of those letters which are there with transmitted.

Your lordship will perceive, that the strong and conclusive objections in law and reason, to be found in those papers, (especially in the first, which was occasioned by a communication from the British consul at New-York of a notice from commodore Hood, in July, 1803, that the islands of Martinique, and Guadaloupe, were and for some time had been, blockaded,) apply to several blockades which Great Britain has lately pretended to establish; but in a particular manner to that of May, 1806, (from the Elbe to Brest inclusive); to that, in the spring of 1808, of the whole island of Zealand, and to that in March, 1809, of the isles of Mauritius and Bourbon.

The Government of the United States can discover no just foundation for these and similar attempts to blockade entire coasts, by notifications with which the fact has no correspondence. It views them as unwarrantable prohibitions of intercourse rather than regular blockades; and as resembling in all their essential qualities, the extraordinary decrees and orders, which, for the last four years, have nearly obliterated every trace of the public law of the world, and discouraged, by menaces of hostile interposition, and pursued with seizure and confiscation, the distant and most innocent trade of neutral merchants.

It may now be hoped that those decrees and orders are about to disappear forever; and I think I may presume that, as my government expects, no blockade, like that of May, 1806, will survive them.

Your lordship has informed me, in a recent note, that it is "his Majesty's earnest desire to see the commerce of the world restored to that freedom which is necessary for its prosperity." And I cannot suppose that this freedom is understood to be consistent with vast constructive blockades, which may be so expanded at pleasure as, without the aid of any new device, to oppress and annihilate every trade but that which England thinks fit to tolerate. It is not, I am sure, to such freedom that your lordship can be thought to allude.

I am the more inclined to be confident on this point, because I have now before me a well known official exposition, conceived in terms the most exact, of the British doctrine of blockade, as it stood in 1804, contained in the reply of Mr. Merry, his majesty's minister in America, to the very able remonstrance, abovementioned, from Mr. Madison to Mr. Thornton.

That reply, (of the 12th of April 1804) is formally announced to the government of the United States "by his Majesty's command, signified to Mr. Merry, by the principal Secretary of State for foreign affairs, that "for redressing the grievance, complained of," by the American government, orders had been sent to commodore Hood (and the necessary directions given to the vice admiralty courts in the West Indies and America) not to consider any blockade of the islands of Martinique and Guadaloupe as existing, unless in respect of particular ports which might be actually invested; and then not to capture vessels bound to such ports, unless they should previously have been warned not to enter them.

It is natural to conclude that, that the "grievance," which this frank communication condemns, has been since so often repeated, as almost to make us lose sight of the rule in the multitude of its violations; your lordship could not speak of the restoration of the just freedom of commerce as an event desired by Great Britain without some reference to the neglected doctrine of this paper, and without some idea of reviving it.

With regard to the blockade of May, 1806, I regret that I failed to obtain an admission, apparently warranted by facts, and invited by circumstances, that it is not in force.

Your lordship's answers to my letters of the 15th of February and 7th of March last, appeared to justify the opinion, that this blockade sunk in the orders in council of 1807, which it was perfectly ingenious. I can scarcely be said that since the promulgat on of those orders, there has been even a shew of maintaining it, as any actual blockade, by a flotilla of force adequate or inadequate, distributed with that view along the immense line of coast which it affects to embrace; and, if it has no been constantly so maintained, not even attempted to be maintained, as an actual blockade, but has yielded to subsequent orders in council, neither being, nor professing to be, actual blockades, it may, I imagine, be very fairly asserted, that it exists no longer.

But as this conclusion has not been adopted, but has rather been resisted by your lordship, it is my duty in transmitting the enclosed copy of an act of the Congress of the United States, passed on the 1st of May, 1810, entitled, "An Act concerning the commercial intercourse between the United States and Great Britain and France, and their dependencies, and for other purposes," to state to your lordship, that an amendment of the blockade of May, 1806 is considered by the President, to be as indispensable, in the view of that act, as the revocation of the British orders in council.

I have the honor to be,
With high consideration, my Lord, your Lordship's most obt humble servt.

LORD WELLESLEY TO MR. PINKNEY.

The marquis Wellesley has the honour to acquaint Mr. Pinkney, in answer to that part of his letter of the 15th inst. relating to an alledged misconception of the order in council laying the blockade of Elsinore, that it is the intention of his Majesty's government, that the blockade should be strictly confined to the port of Elsinore, and that it does not affect any vessels professedly bound up the sound, unless it should appear, from their papers, that they are bound to Elsinore.

The marquis Wellesley begs to renew to Mr. Pinkney the assurances of his high consideration.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL CHAMBER.

QUEBEC, DEC. 12 1810.

This day, at two o'clock, His Excellency the Governor in Chief came down in state to the Legislative Council, and being seated on the throne with the usual ceremonies, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was sent down to the Assembly, to command the attendance of that House; and the members being come up, the Honourable the Speaker of the Legislative Council signified His Excellency's pleasure that they should return to the usual place of their sittings, and chuse a fit person to be their Speaker, and present him to His Excellency to morrow at two o'clock.

THURSDAY, Dec. 13.

His Excellency being seated on the throne, and the Assembly with Mr. PANET* their Speaker, elect, being in attendance below the bar, the honorable the Speaker of the Legislative Council expressed His Excellency's allowance of the choice of the House of Assembly, and then His Excellency was pleased to deliver the following gracious

SPEECH:

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

AS I have never doubted the loyalty and zeal of the several Parliaments which I have had occasion to meet, since I assumed the administration of the government of this Province, so do I rely with equal assurance, that I shall not fail to experience those same principles, in that which I am now addressing; and in the confident expectation, that you are animated by the best intentions to promote the interests of his Majesty's Government, and the welfare of his people, I shall look for the happy effects of such a disposition, in the result of your deliberations, and the dispatch of the public business.

Of the state of public affairs in Europe, I have no official notice, on which I can ground any information to be given to you. In these parts it appears however, that no advances have been made towards an accommodation of the differences, that have so long subsisted between his Majesty's government and that of the U. States; such is, indeed, so far from being the case, that I am warranted in stating, that new claims, as relating to their neutral rights, have been brought forward, by the latter, of a nature that seem likely to place that wished for event at a very uncertain period.

I desire to call your attention to the temporary act, for the preservation of his Majesty's government, as by law happily established, in this Province, and to that, for establishing regulations respecting aliens, and certain subjects of his Majesty, who have resided in France. No change has taken place in the state of public affairs, that can warrant a departure from those precautions, and that vigilance, which have hitherto induced all branches of the Legislature to consider these acts as necessary. In saying that they are important to the interests of his Majesty's government, you will not, I am confident, for a moment suppose, that I mean to divide these from the interests of the public; they are inseparable. The preservation of his Majesty's government, is the safety of the province, and its security is the only safeguard to the public tranquility. Under these considerations, therefore, I cannot but recommend them, together with the act, making temporary provision for the regulation of trade, between this province and the United States, to your swift and immediate consideration.

If any other matters should occur, to which I may conceive it necessary to call your attention, I shall communicate them by message.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I shall direct to be laid before you, a statement of the provincial revenue of the crown, and the expenditure for the last 12 months.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,
And Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I entreat you to believe, that I shall have great satisfaction in cultivating that harmony and good understanding, which must be so conducive to the prosperity and happiness of the colony; and that I shall most readily and cheerfully concur in every measure which you may propose, tending to promote those important objects.

The rule of my conduct, is, to discharge my duty to my Sovereign, by a constant attention to the interests of his government, and to the welfare of his subjects, which he has committed to my charge; and these objects I feel to be best promoted by a strict adherence to the laws, and to the principles of the constitution, and by maintaining in their just balance, the rights and privileges of every branch of the legislature.

Foreign Intelligence.

BOSTON, Dec. 18.

Latest from England—Captain Gray, who arrived yesterday, left London on the 1st of November; at which time the Orders of Council had not been repealed, and it was not known what was the intention of the British government on the subject.

The King was confined with a febrile affection, and so much indisposed, that bulletins were daily issued by his three attending physicians. His life was not supposed to be in immediate danger. The Princess Amelia remained very low, her dissolution evidently approaching.

Letters from London of the 26th and 31st of October, mention, that they were anxiously waiting to know what the first of November would bring forth. No decided opinion was formed whether the Orders in Council would be repealed or not. Some, who had for a time thought they might be repealed, now inclined to a contrary opinion. Very little reliance was placed on the repeal of the Berlin and Milan Decrees. The only knowledge or intimation of the repeal seemed to be derived from the Duke of Cadore's letter.

The duties agreeably to the French decree of Aug. 5, will be levied on all colonial produce found in any ports of the North; those of Russia, for the present, only excepted.

We received London papers to the 31st of October—(4 days the latest)—from which the following articles are copied.

London, October 31.

It is again said that Austria has made a treaty with France, and engaged to assist her with thirty thousand men.

An attempt has been made on the life of Gustavus Adolphus, the late King of Sweden.

Bernadotte, the French Crown Prince of Sweden, has arrived in Zealand, and one letter mentions, that he landed at Helsingburg, in Sweden, Oct. 20, under a salute of all the batteries.

The Admiralty have made known to the merchants of Lloyd's Coffee-house, that the increase of the number of French privateers, fitted and fitting from the various ports in the Channel and the North Sea, is beyond precedent; but that every possible attention would be paid to the protection of trade.

A violent gale of wind has been experienced in the Bay of Biscay, and strong fears are entertained for the safety of the vessels and persons engaged in an expedition from Corunna to the Spanish places held by the French on the Bay.

Letters were yesterday received from Bordeaux of the date of the 18th of this month. In these we learn, that 5000 troops, 2000 of them Dutch, had entered that place between the 12th October and the day on which the letter was written.

It is stated in a ministerial paper that the case of Lucien Bonaparte has been submitted to the Lawyers, and the question put, whether, from the circumstances under which he fell into our power, we have a right to constitute him a prisoner of war. The Lawyers have decided in the affirmative, and Government have determined to act accordingly. A ship of war has in consequence been sent out to Malta, to take him on board, and to convey him, his family, and effects to this country.

A paragraph, in the Paris Moniteur, states, that Gen. Drouet, with the troops under his command, which is an entire corps of the French is proceeded to Almeida, to keep open Massena's communications in the rear—in fact to co operate with Massena in any manner he may have occasion for.

It is stated in letters from Holland, that no less than sixteen French Couriers were imprisoned at Bayonne for having refused to proceed to the armies in Spain and Portugal with dispatches. Hardly one messenger out of six, who takes the route of the Western Pyrenees, is known to arrive at his destination.

An Officer of high rank at Malta, is reported to have fallen in love with the eldest daughter of Lucien Bonaparte.

"The following extract of a letter, dated Malta, Aug. 20. was posted at Lloyd's—

"The Supercargo of the Gracia communicates in a letter, dated the 12th, that he is detained at Lilla by contrary winds, but that he is at liberty, and that all the Turkish vessels that were sequestered in the Adriatic have been liberated."

RIGA, Oct. 6.

Count Gottorp, Ex King of Sweden, has arrived here from St. Petersburgh. Previous to his departure he addressed a letter to the king and Diet of Sweden, wherein he upbraids them with their recent choice of a Crown Prince, which he terms ignominious and disgraceful in the highest degree, and consigns the Government to eternal oblivion and contempt, as unworthy the confideration of their lawful monarch.

FALMOUTH, Oct. 26.

The Queen Charlotte packet, which sailed from hence on the 15 inst. with mails for America, met a heavy gale of wind on the 22d in which she was dismatted, and met other serious damages.

Capt. Mudge arrived here this evening from Mount Bay, with the mails, which must be forwarded by another packet.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 18.

Distressing.—Captain Johnson arrived yesterday, reports, that St. Augustine, presented a scene of distress beyond description.—Vessels were received there of thirty-four wrecks being wrecked from the 25th to 29th October—fourteen on the Keys, and twenty on the coast of Florida, principally Americans; the crews were coming in many, in the most deplorable situation, naked and destitute of every means, mangled and much mutilated, from their long march and sufferings on the coast. The great influx of these into St. Augustine, raised the price of provisions to an amazing height; a fowl sold for a dollar, and it would have to foot it to St. Mary's before beef or vegetables could be had.

The King has passed a restless night, but his general state is not increased.

HENRY HALFORD,
W. HEBERDEN,
M. BAILLIE.

The Bulletin of Nov. 1, says, "His Majesty passed a better night and is much the same to-day as yesterday.

On the arrival of the Messenger from Windsor, yesterday, with the above despatch we learn, that a Cabinet Council was instantly held at the Secretary of State's Office and was attended by the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis Wellesley, the Earl of Liverpool, Mr. Perceval, Mr. Ryder, and Mr. Yorke.—On the breaking up of the Council a Messenger was dispatched to the Earl of Winchilsea, the Groom of the Stole. It is reported that his Lordship is to come to town for the purpose of issuing the bulletins at St. James's.

Several vessels were wrecked in the gale off South Wales, one an American vessel of 600 tons—crew saved.

Slave trade.—We mentioned lately that the French were endeavoring to put an effectual stop to the Slave trade, by capturing every vessel they found on the coast of Africa, in that employ. We have a list of the vessels captured to the 1st of October, 1810, gives the names of 2 ships, 6 brigs and 8 schooners, (Spanish & Portuguese) condemned, sold, &c. and of 2 ship, 3 brigs, and 1 schooners detained at Gorée for trial. *Bost. The conditional recall of Mr. PINKNEY from the court of London, now announced, is an event which was to have been expected as a result of the recall of Mr. Jackson from the United States. It is said that the American administration required that a personage of rank and talents should be sent out as Mr. J's successor; and that Lord WELLESLEY had recommended the measure to the French King; but letters from London say politively, that application had been made to several noblemen and others, and that after Mr. P. had explained the circumstances he had received, no man of rank and talents could be found to accept the appointment. Bost.

Russia has proposed to enter into negociations with Turkey, and to give up the Latin provinces in dispute, viz. the possession of Moldavia and Wallachia. This is thought to be owing to the Russian jealousy of France.

Nine o'clock, P. M.

The Kingdom can ill a reftless night, but his Majefty's reft is not increased.

HENRY HALFORD,
WILLIAM KNIGHTON,
M. BAILLIE.

The bulletin of Nov. 1, fays, 'His Majefty paffed a better night and is much the fame to-day as yefterday.'

On the arrival of the Meffenger from Windsor, yefterday, with the above despatch we learn, that a Cabinet Council was inftantly held at the Secretary of State's Office and was attended by the Lord Chancellor, the Marquis Wellesley, the Earl of Liverpool, Mr. Perceval, Mr. Ryder, and Mr. Yorke.—On the breaking up of the Council a Meffenger was dispatched to the Earl of Winchilsea, the Groom of the Stole. It is reported that his Lordship is to come to town for the purpofe of iffuing the Invitations at St. James's.

Several veffels were wrecked in the gales laft week off South Wales, one an American veffel, of 600 tons—crew saved.

Slave trade.—We mentioned lately that the Dutch were endeavouring to put an effectual ftop to the Slave trade by capturing every veffel they found on the coaft of Africa, in that employ. We have a lift of the veffels captured to the 1ft of October, 1811, which gives the names of 2 fhips, 6 brigs and 8 fchooners, (Spanifh & Portuguefe) condemned, loaded, &c. and of 2 fhips, 3 brigs, and 2 fchooners detained at Goree for trial. *Brift. The conditional recall of Mr. PINKNEY from the court of London, now announced, is an event which was to have been expected as a refult of the recall of Mr. JACKSON from the United States. It is faid that the American adminiftration required that a perfonage of rank and talent fhould be fent out as Mr. J's fucceffor; and that Lord WELLESLEY had recommended the meafure to the Prince King; but letters from London fay pofitively, that application had been made to feveral noblemen and others, and that after Mr. P. had explained the circumftance, that had received, no man of rank and talents could be found to accept the appointment.

Ruffia has propofed to renew negotiations with Turkey, and to give up the main points in difpute with Moldavia and Wallachia. This is fuppofed to be owing to the Ruffian defeat of Prince.

The following is an extract of a letter, dated from near St. Stephens, Alabama Territory, to a gentleman in this city, dated Nov. 10, 1810:

"No doubt you will be glad to hear from me—I expect by the time you receive this letter I fhall have left this country—I have lately made a tour through West Florida—the Convention have not yet met—this diftrict to invade mexico—General Thomas, who, I am told, will attack Mobile in 20 or 30 days from this, with 3000 men, besides from the Indisposition of His Majefty, the Houfe of Peers, and the Commons, adjourned to the 13th November laft.

Extract of a letter from a Gentleman in the Miffiffippi Territory, dated, Fort Stoddert, Oct. 23, 1810.

"DEAR SIR—We laft night received information that General Thomas is on his march from Pinkster's Landing (the laft fort in Florida he took poffeffion of) to Mobile. The principal inhabitants have put up their moft valuable effects into the Fort for protection, and it will be defended by the citizens, as well as the militia. The Fort is one of the beft of military work in the world of its dimensions, and, militarily fpeaking, will be one of the hardeft to get poffeffion of. The enemy has no cannon, and of courfe it is uncertain the plan he will purfue—he is brave and defperate, and followed by men capable of any thing men can do. I have no account of a bloody scene on his reaching Mobile, as I am confident he will attempt it by defperate movements. He acts under the authority of the Baton Sarah Convention—their object appears to be to add to this Diftrict, the Diftricts lying between them and Pontchartrain—or in other words, all the Diftricts of Weft Florida, and bring the whole under one General Government. In this latter cafe they can raife at leaft ten thousand militia. Any farther movements I will inform you of."

Died lately in Wales, Mr. W. Evans, poffeffed of nearly a million of dollars, the whole of which he had acquired in the Tea Trade within the laft forty years. Alb. Gaz.

How to keep Butter in Winter.

In the months of this province, the art of making good butter is underftood by very few; especially in the months of November, December, January and February, when the cows are fed on dry food. In fome places, a load of Salt Hay is given to a cow in a day, which is confiderably more than is neceffary; and the butter is as falt as if a quart of melted butter had been poured over it. The moft of the inhabitants, who are ftudious of economy, and to whom the trouble of churning is no object, will find it to their advantage to churn their cream every morning, as it will be much more delicious, and it is then eafily done. When the cream is churned, the butter muft be, at leaft twice, waihed with cold water, and then all the buttermilk will be fufficiently feparated from it. To prevent heat will generally turn the butter rancid. It will require a little more hand churning, than it does in warmer weather; and that is one of the difficulties in making good butter in January, as it is the coldeft month in the year.

A young woman of Dublin, who was a perfect ftranger to fome of the fafhionable ftreets, from an unfortunate affair that happened fome time ago to a Dutch lady, mentioned in London to a friend of her's, who advised her to go and fee her before fhe fpring to the account of her maffer, as being the richeft man of the two. "I was thinking of that (replied the perfon) but then, you know the child will difcover all, when it begins to fpeak Dutch."

A Phyfician had a fkeleton fo fixed that on entering the room a fpring was touched, when, in an inftant, it grafped the perfon entering. An Irifhman, a ftranger, called on the doctor for fome medical aid, and was fhown into the room where the fkeleton was. It ftruck him in a moment—He up with his ftick to defend himfelf; but to his great aftonifhment, he faw the ghaftly figure difengaging itfelf, when he flew from the houfe like lightning. A few days after, meeting the doctor (who might himfelf be called a walking fkeleton) coming out of his own houfe, he exclaimed—"Ah my honey—are you here? do you think I don't know you with your clothes on?" He fnatches the doctor's hat, throttle, and beftowing a few hearty whacks—"take that for the sweat you gave me t'other day!"

A Finifhed Coquette, at a ball, asked a gentleman near her, whilft fhe adjuftted her tucker, whether he could fart a fan, which fhe held in her hand. "No Madam, anfwered he, proceeding to ufe it, but I can fan a fart."

Economy.—The following Anecdote will let the fubject of economy in a very ftriking point of view:

"At the time when the London Bridge was building, or repairing, the gentlemen, who were foliciting fubfcriptions to carry on the work, called at the door of a wealthy gentleman; and juft as they were entering the door, they heard the gentleman fcolding at the female fervant, for throwing into the fire, a match of brimftone, after fhe had ufed it in lighting a candle. The refolutions of the gentlemen ftanding at the door, were as follows—"Well, if this man is fo much a ftate of fuling a match of brimftone, we need moft certainly lofe our labour in fhewing him our propofal. They however, put their fubfcription papers, and he put down a good fum—but to numerous fums of hundred pounds. The gentlemen had been their refolutions when entering at the door and heard him call at his fervant for wafting the match of brimftone. The gentleman replied, "that it was not the value of the match that he begrudged the fervant, but was to make ftill lefs impreffion of feeing any thing, even a candle fo carelefsly ufed, and to teach her economy." I continued the gentleman, "this fervant had been engaged in waiting a candle-match he would be [illegible] ing awe [illegible] but if [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

York, Sept. 21ſt, 1815.

THE PUBLIC are reſpectfully reminded that a ſmall periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Viſitor, Subſcriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is deſigned to expand uſeful information and promote a taſte for reading among all claſſes of the community, by recommending thoſe plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extenſively uſeful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civiliſed world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but ſhe is more deſervedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious Inſtitutions. The moral benefits which have been produced by theſe different eſtabliſhments. And it is hoped that all the Britiſh colonies will imitate the parent country in the eſtabliſhment of SCHOOLS and BIBLE Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the bleſſings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Chriſtian and true Patriot will now exert himſelf as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years paſt in deſtroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houſes might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is ſincerely hoped that all will learn wiſdom by the things which they have ſuffered.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor, Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of Schools and Book Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Canadian and true Patriot will, now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

CARICATURE OF PARIS.

SEPTEMBER 25—"Paris is a place of variety; and Sunday the most various of all its days. The avenue leading from the Place of Carousel was lined with booths, and those lined with baskets of grapes, indecent prints, missals and memoirs with titles as attractive to some kinds of students as repulsive to others.—Further on was a shew of wild beasts; next to this a stage with a mountebank in high frolic, with a monkey in a theatrical dress; a few step onward was a stage of higher pretensions, with a director, who harangued the populace; a wretch in a goat's hair wig, and tarnished coat, who mimicked him, and third and mightiest, a woman, whose merit consisted in letting five men stand at once upon her body, as was fully displayed by a glowing canvass behind. Below the area was filled by a crowd of strange faces—the smooth English soldier, half wandering and half ashamed; the whiskered Prussian; the Cossack bearded to the waist, and buried in his Persian cap; the Calmuck with the yellow skin, sleepy eye and broad cheek bone of the Chinese; the Parisian beggar, with his hair a l'orage, his chapeau bras, and his lower person degenerating into filth indescribable; and from all issuing a clamor of laughing and wild and barbarous sounds, that perhaps never before assembled in a civilized land."

Duel between Blucher and Bonaparte!

Last week, at South Shields, two sons of Neptune differed in political opinions over a can of grog. One of the heroes (who had a wooden leg) maintained that Bonaparte was a greater general than Blucher, which so enraged his opponant, that he dared him to the field of honour to decide the quarrell, where it was agreed that each was to assume the character of his favourite general.—Before the personifier of Blucher marched out, he caused epaulettes to be painted upon the shoulder of his shirt with blood thrust his head into a flour sack in order to resemble the veteran's hoary locks, and blacked his face with burnt cork in imitation of mustachoes. Each armed with a firelock, attended by a number of followers, went to a neighbouring field, where at no great distance, they levelled their pieces at each other and fired. Blucher's wadding struck poor Bonaparte, who, supposing himself shot by a bullet gave a horrid yell, and fell down. Some of the spectators who were in the secret, informed him that the gun was only loaded with blank cartridge, but advised him to pretend he was mortally wounded, & to do him justice, he imitated the dying scene to admiration. The news that Bonaparte was dead soon reached Blucher, who wept bitterly for the supposed horrid murder. His friends at length, relieved him from his anxiety, when all animosity was drowned in hearty draughts of grog.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 13.

The following intelligence from the Merchant's Coffee House book was brought by General Jackson, in 41 days from Leghorn, arrived at this port yesterday.

MURAT.

An expedition under Murat to regain his crown had proved abortive. He embarked at Corsica on the 28th Sept. with about 250 men in a number of barges &c. and after encountering severe weather, they succeeded in landing on the coast of Calabria, about the 6th October, but the people being averse to him, he was met after a few days, and after a hard fought action, was defeated and taken prisoner. It was reported at Leghorn on the 17th that he had been tried by a military tribunal and shot.

From the Norfolk Public Ledger, Dec. 7.

In France there appears to be much agitation; the two Chambers were occupied in the project of a law, to strengthen the executive power, somewhat in the nature of the suspension of the Habeas Corpus. All Bonaparte' adherents were removed from office, and more particularly in the Post Office department.

In Spain the government was becoming more and more popular, and an act of amnesty was recommended and it was believed would be adopted.

The riots among the seamen in England had been suppressed, but not until a considerable naval and military force had been collected—It does not appear that any blood had been shed, the force employed by the government being too great for resistance.

Murat ex-King of Naples, who had been for a long time in Corsica, had escaped from that Island, but was not afterwards heard of The Emperor of Russia, and King of Prussia had left Paris, and were expected at Berlin in the 15th of October. Not a word is said of a war between Russia and the Turks. Savary and L'Allemand, two of the generals who gave themselves up with Bonaparte, had arrived at Malta. A very large house had been framed in England and was going out to St. Helena, for Bonaparte, with most superb furniture, of which a minute description is given in the papers. Napoleon had very little property when he surrendered. It was known in England that Joseph Bonaparte had arrived in the United States. There had been very tempestuous weather on the coast of England about the 20th to the 24th of October. The Mr. M'Kean, an Englishman, who was killed in Paris, was not the celebrated actor of that name, who was performing in London.

London, Oct 25.

New and serious agitations had occured at Paris; that the guards had been attacked; that the Prussian troops, which were on their march to the frontiers, had received order to return to Paris; that the Duke of Richelieu was expected to resign; and that a general change in the French Ministry was in contemplation.

The affairs of Spain, it was also rumored were not in a settled and tranquil state as has recently been represented. One of the papers mentions, that a packet had arrived at a short passage from Corunna, which had been despatched with communications to the British Government. The spirit of insurrection, it was said, was revived, and extended to the Asturias; and that a new tax which had just been imposed would probably increase the prevailing irritation. It is added, that the Spanish government, with the hope of allaying the spirit of rebellion, had assumed a more conciliating tone, and had even suspended the punishment of those friends and adherents of the celebrated PORLIER, who had not already suffered.

Such were the rumors afloat in London They probably however require confirmation

The Austrian Observer, (a new paper published at Vienna) on the 8th of October copied an article from the Paris papers, (which has also been copied into the American papers) stating, that on the 14th of September, her Majesty the Empress Maria Louisa, at the Palace of Schoenbrun, solemnly renounced the title of Empress and her pretentions to the Crown of France, both for herself and her son; and then adds the following remark—"At Vienna we have not the least knowledge of this important diplomatic transaction."

LONDON, Oct. 22.

Matthew Wood, Esq. late pork merchant, is chosen Lord Mayor of London. In returning thanks for the honour, he said he would maintain, as far as lay in his power, not only the rights and privileges of the citizens of London, but of all the world; and where he rejected the choice of his yeast should not be governed by the want of either hospitality or dignity.

In the annals of the Inquisition, published by Don Llorente, it is stated, that in the first twenty-eight years, this tribunal sentenced 150,000 persons to be burned alive; 70,000 to be burned in effigy; 1,405 071 to various penances.

The Caron, captain Patershall, has lately conveyed from Bermuda to Trinidad, fifty North-American Indians, who joined, during the late war, admiral Cochrane's squadron; these men, it appears, selected Trinidad for their future residence, where, in pursuance of the promise originally held out to them, they will receive grants of Land, and be taught the cultivation and manufacture of the sugar cane.

Disturbances had broken out at Dieppe, and another regiment of British cavalry was immediately cantoned in the vicinity of that place.

A Court Marshal has been held on board the Queen Charlotte, for the trial of midshipman Richard Wilkins, of the royal navy, on the charge of desertion. He was an officer of the Jeasseur, which made several captures in the Delaware, and going into Philadelphia on board a cartel, he deserted, and was several times seen in that city. He was condemned to die; but recommended to the royal mercy on account of the imbecile state of his mind occasioned by his recent sickness. A letter was read from General Duane!!! to prove him a prisoner of war, and William Cobbett, alias Peter Portupine, was called as a witness to prove his hand writing.

A letter from Hamburgh says, that Murat has been arrested by the English, and that he will be put under a guard to Hamburgh without delay.

A Paris paper of October 16th, says, that several articles relative to the peace were agreed to. They relate to the mode and payment of the contributions. The duke of Otranto was then at Brussels.

The report of a new dispute between the British and Chinese at Canton is contradicted.

Accounts in England from Canton were to the 11th of March. It is insinuated that the Americans foment the disputes between the English and Chinese.

BOSTON, DEC. 14.

SALEM WIT.

President Madison in his Message displays a laudible desire to improve the roads, and we trust Congress will promptly second him in his disposition to mend his ways. When we recollect what a rough ride and jolting and blistering race he suffered "up the scraggy mountain and down the heathen glen" at the terrific appearance of the British Red coats at Blatensburg, men of generous feelings will readily agree that smooth turn-pikes ought to be constructed in every direction from Washington to facilitate the escape of our public functionaries from the Capitol; and especially, if they manifest a disposition to retreat from power, all the people will exclaim, Clear the Road, Clear the Road!

Salem Gaz.

The Message has a very plausible and pacific appearance, and it is hoped our democratic editors will adopt its tone. In fact their deafening clamour at Dartmoor ceased at the very moment they heard their Emperor Napoleon had fled in dismay from Waterloo. Let him loose again to trouble the world, and his admirers, who are now "lashed in like hounds," would again be full mouthed in howling for another war with England.

Scarborough, Nov. 10th 1815.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor. Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments, and it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of SCHOOLS and BOOK Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and Schoolhouses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is sincerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

To be Sold,

From a Paris Paper.

THE COSSACKS.

We had last year, and have also this year, had some experience of those Cossacks, who filled us with so much fear, and have found them a very good sort of Folks. The irregular Corps of this military exercise, indeed, a police rather severe against those who have not had an opportunity or time to conceal their effects: but in general they are humane, mild and even affectionate. They respect women, and are very fond of children. In fact they are very much praised wherever they have been, and where they have not yet been, their presence is wished for. The following anecdote will prove, that, for a long time, noble and generous sentiments have had a powerful influence over these unexperienced minds, whose virtues have not been destroyed by civilization under the pretence of reforming or softening their vices. A private Cossack who had risen to the rank of commandant of a small detachment was sent to destroy a castle belonging to the enemy. He proceeded his troop, and arrived first; introduced into a great hall. The first object which presents itself to him, is a Portrait, he cries out, where is the man this picture represents? He is not here, but he is the master of this castle The master of this castle! He mounts his horse precipitately and rejoins his troop. My friends he says, we have received orders to destroy this castle, but before this design is executed, you must kill me. Take all that belongs to me for your share of pundor; but the master of this castle has been my benefactor; I was his prisoner when a man in the ranks; he saved my life; he leaded me with kindness and what belongs to him shall not be touched while a spark of life remains within me. The Cossacks did not pretend to be affected by this story, but merely regarding the proposal as just, turned their horses heads. Thus it was that saved the castle of Poniatowski, of that Poniatowski so faithful to Stanislaus Leczynsky, whose friend he was, and honoured by Augustus of Saxony, who become his master. It was he whose traits were apparently as faithfully represented on the canvass, as profoundly graven in the uncultivated but grateful heart, of the Cossack This Poniatowski, who had two sons, was father of Stanislaus Augustus, last King of Poland, and grand father of the present Prince Stanislaus Poniatowski.

Lateſt Intelligence.

CAPTAIN WRIGHT.

LIEGE Oct. 1.—The Gazette of this town contains the following letter.

"I have read in the General Gazette of the Netherlands, an article of the Ghent Journal concerning the unfortunate Captain Wright, the author of which it greatly deceives as to the facts. I was a prisoner in the temple when this political murder was committed, and the following are the correct circumstances.

"On the evening preceding the day before that on which the Captain was murdered, Savary Napoleon's first Aid-de-camp, and surnamed his right hand, came with some Gendarmes to make a rigorous inspection of that terrible prison of which he has the special superintendence even independent of the Ministry. "Retire to your apartment," was the order given to the prisoners on Savary's arrival. Captain Wright's room was searched as well as the rest. The object of the examination was to discover some pretended correspondence with England which however was not found.

"Next day there was a new search, by three agents of the Police; escorted by two Gendarmes: but mostly in Captain Wright's room. This proceeding has doubtless very much irritated that brave officer, for we heard him uttering imprecations against Bonaparte and some agents of his Police. Towards midnight the report of a pistol was heard. —They were believed to be the same persons who arrested Pichegru.

"D'HANEIR, Advocate.

"P. S. I shall receive very soon more particular details respecting these private murders."

HAMBURG, Oct 6.

NEW-YORK, Dec. 19.

The editors of the Mercantile Advertiser, are indebted to the politeness of Capt. Corsan, of the ship Samuel, arrived here on Sunday evening from Bristol, for the London Star of the 27th of October, one day later than before received.

The same paper contains a detailed account of the loss of the British transport ship Arniston, on her passage from Ceylon to London—wrecked on the 30th May, near Lagullar, Of 350 souls on board, only 6 were saved, and they reached the shore in a most wanged and exhausted condition. Lord and Lady Molesworth were among those who perished. 331 bodies drifted ashore and were interred at Cape Town.

NEW-YORK, December 20.

Port of Halifax, Dec. 1

On Sunday night the 10th inst. the brig Lottery, Capt. Desk, was driven on shore in a gale of wind, at Sage Harbour—she was from England bound to St. John, N. B. and was laden with crockery, iron, salt and &c.—Crew, and part of the cargo saved.

PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE.

Extract of a letter from Halifax Dec. 12.

"You will perceive, by the enclosed letter from Jamaica, the great demand and high price of Rum and Sugar, which will, in a great degree, account for the small quantity recently imported into this province. The consequence is that Jamaica sugars are worth 20 dls. Rum 1 dl. and Molasses 90 cts. and must be higher, unless an immediate supply arrives."

JAMAICA PAPERS.

A mercantile friend has favoured us with a regular file of Jamaica papers to the 12th of November. A number of interesting extracts will be found below.

Port of Kingston, (Jam.) Nov 11.

On the 23d ult. in lat. 26, longitude 69, the Brunswick encountered a dreadful gale of wind from the S. E. in which she sustained considerable damage, and was compelled to throw overboard a quantity of her cargo, among which was about 200 barrels of flour and some lumber. The violence of the gale carried away her main mast by the deck, when the ship rolled so much that the sea made a clean breach over her; her starboard bulwark was completely knocked away several of her stantions destroyed, and two fine boats washed overboard; her mizen topmast was likewise carried away, and at one time she had nearly ten feet water in her hold, but by indefatigable exertions, she was freed, and the gale abating in about seven hours, she was enabled to have a jury main-mast fitted up, and proceeded on her voyage.

The British sloop Huntress, from New-York to Tobago, with flour rice and staves, put into Port Royal on Thursday in distress having sprung a leak, and fallen to leeward of her port of destination.

By a passenger, who arrived in the Cub. Packet, from St. Jago de Cuba, we learn that a Spanish ship and a brig, from Cadiz bound to the Havanna with valuable cargoes on board, were captured about 8 days ago to windward of St. Jago, by a Carthagenian privateer schr. Their crews were landed at Cumberland Harbour, and the vessels ordered for a port in St. Domingo.

The Spanish ship Santa Teresa, from Tarragona to Santa Marcha, was also captured about a fortnight ago, off Cape Maize, by a Carthagenian cruizer, and ordered for Carthagena, where we understand she arrived safely. Her cargo was very valuable.

The Junon frigate, of 36 guns, Captain Tait, ten days from Porto Bello. The Junon steered along the coast as far as Carthagena, but had no communication with the shore Off Boca Chica there were 52 sail of Spanish vessels, 11 of which had pendants flying.

Extract of a letter from St. Ann's Bay, Jamaica dtd. this inst.

"A wreck was seen off this harbour a few days since, keel upwards; she appeared to be a vessel of 300 tons and upwards laden with flour, &c. &c.—She has since been towed into this port by the boats of the ships Active and Rebecca. It has not been ascertained what her name is, or where she is from, but rumor reports her to be the sloop Young Cooper, belonging to Mr. Martin of Portsmouth."

Extract of a letter from Antigua, dated Oct. 10, 1815.

"On Friday morning last, there was a heavy thunder storm here, the Naval Victualling Store was set on fire, and entirely consumed with the property contained in it, of the value of 25 000l."

Dec. 6.—Sailed on Saturday afternoon last, for Bermuda, H. M. S. Achar, Rear Admiral Griffith, Capt. Bullen.

A number of English vessels have been seized at Martinique, for having on board American produce.

FROM MALAGA.

The schooner Sine-qua-non, Captain Harrod, arrived this morning, in 36 days from Malaga, Capt. H. informs that it was reported at Malaga that the Algerines had beheaded their Dey, in consequence of the unfavourable treaty made by him with the United States; and that they had recommenced hostilities by capturing an American ship and brig. Capt. H. adds, however, that Mr. Kirkpatrick, the American Consul at Malaga had received advices of the arrival of the Algerine squadron at the Straits, but no confirmation of the report above mentioned.

PARIS, OCT. 10.

The Prussian Ministry has presented to our government the project of a convention explanatory of the articles of the treaty of Peace, relative to the claims of foreigners upon France. The principles laid down in it faciliate, in the most appropriate manner, the liquidation and payment of these claims.

This important work proceeds from the Prussian Minister of State Baron Von Altenstein. Fouche, who was at Brussels, was not to stop there any longer. It is now said he well not go to Dresden as Ambassador, nor will M. Gruner, it is said, go there as Ambassador from Prussia.

FLORENCE, OCT. 16.

The Commandant concluded thus: "I think my duty to inform your excellency, that it results from the examination of the Rais (or Captain) of the vessel taken that the squadron of the corsairs cruizing in our seas, consists of three frigates, three sloops, three brigs, three large zebecks, and six smaller corsairs, two of which we have in our hands. FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

BERLIN, SEPT. 10. The order given by the King to Prince BLUCHER, and which is intended for him alone, was accompanied with the following gracious note in the King's own hand writing:—

"As a memorial of your late victories I wish you to wear the insignia which you will receive with this note, in the place of the Iron cross. I know that no golden ornament can heighten the splendor of your merits, but it is a delightful task for me to announce by suitable external distinctions, how fully I acknowledge them, reserving to myself for more peaceful times, the pleasure of giving you still further marks of my continued gratitude.

BOSTON, Dec. 14.—There have been several arrivals from Europe, since our last, but they furnish nothing of interest. In one of the London dates, it is stated, on the authority of private letters from Paris, that Marshal NEY had effected his escape. The date of this report is not mentioned; but the circumstance is not improbable, as his life was in great danger, though surrounded by many friends.

An English paper mentions a Steam Boat that passed in three hours and 44 minutes from Hull to Gainesborough, more than 50 miles against the wind, and having stopped five times to receive and discharge passengers.

LETTERS, &c. FOR BONAPARTE.

M'Enroe, the person who sent down to Plymouth, the famous Subpœna for Bonaparte, which was magnified into a Writ of Habeas Corpus, has, it seems, recently addressed himself to Government for permission to send some books and newspapers to the prisoner, by the first ship of war proceeding to St. Helena. To this application he received the following answer;—

DOWNING-STREET, Sept. 18.

"Sir—I am directed by Earl Bathurst to acknowledge the receipt of the letter which you addressed to him yesterday, and have to acquaint you in answer that his Majesty's Government have determined that, no property shall be sent to Napoleon Bonaparte or to any of his followers, who are confined with him in the Island of St. Helena, excepting the presents which may be sent by the families of those persons respectively, and which shall pass this, the office of the Secretary of State. And further, that no articles for the use of Napoleon Bonaparte or his said followers, shall be furnished and conveyed to them, excepting what shall be provided by the authority of his Majesty's Government. With regard to newspapers and books, I am to acquaint you that steps have been taken for supplying them to the prisoner in question. I am, &c.

LIEUT. COLONEL MULLINS.

LONDON, Sept. 16.

The decision of the Court Martial held the 11th of July last on Lt. Colonel Mullins was officially published yesterday. He was found guilty on the first charge—Disobedience of orders,—On the 2d charge, partly guilty—"As relates to "his not placing the ladders and facines "in the ditch as ordered; and that "therefore, the service allotted to 44th "regt. was not duly performed; which "materially led to the failure of the at"tack: But the Court do find that the "prisoner did not evince any want of "personal courage, and that he was not "guilty of scandalous and infamous be"haviour before the Enemy on the 8th "of January 1815. The Court do "therefore, honorably acquit him of "such scandalous and infamous beha"viour."—On the 3d charge he was also most fully and honorably acquitted, "But in consequence of the above find"ing, the Court do adjudge and sen"tence that the Prisoner Lieut. Colonel "Mullins, shall be cashiered." The charge and sentence are to be read at the head of every Regiment in his Majesty's service.

THE NEGOCIATIONS.

Procès-verbal of the Conference of Oct. 2.

"After several confidential explanations between the Plenipotentiaries of Austria, Great Britain, Prussia and Russia, on one side, and the Duke of Richelieu, appointed Plenipotentiary of his Majesty the King of France, on the other side, it has been agreed upon to-day that the relations between France and the Allied Powers, armed for the re-establishment and maintainance of the general peace, are definitively regulated upon the following bases—(Here follow the four articles already published.)

"The Plenipotentiaries having definitively adopted these bases, have concerted upon the course to be adopted, in order to arrive in the shortest possible time at a formal arrangement, and have consequently determined—

"1. That a general treaty shall be drawn up upon the basis above laid down, and adding to them such articles as by common consent shall be judged necessary to complete it. The French government will nominate on its part the person who is to unite with those whom the courts have charged with the drawing up of the treaty.

"2. That the commissioners appointed for the military affairs shall proceed, conjointly with the commissioners whom the French government shall appoint for that purpose, to draw up a project of a convention to regulate every thing relative to the military occupation, and to the support of the army employed in this occupation. The same commissioners shall also determine the manner and the periods of the evacuation of all such parts of the French territory, as are not comprehended within the line of the military occupation.

"3. That a special commission appointed for that purpose by the contracting parties, shall draw up, without delay a plan of a convention to regulate the mode, the periods, and the guarantees of the payment of the seven hundred millions of franks to be stipulated by the general treaty.

"4. The Commissioners formed to examine the reclamations of several Powers relatively to the non-execution of certain Articles of the treaty of Paris, shall continue its labours with the understanding, that it is to communicate them as soon as possible to the Plenipotentiaries in the principal negociation.

"5. That as soon as these Commissioners shall have terminated their labours, the Plenipotentiaries shall unite to examine the results of them to determine on the definitive arrangements, and to sign the principal Treaty, as well as the different particular Conventions. This Process Verbal having been read, the Plenipotentiaries have approved it, and signed.

BAYONNE, SEPT. 28.

They write from Salamanca, under date of the 22d, that many troops, chiefly militia were hastily arriving in the environs of that city, in order to advance from thence to the frontiers of Portugal, in the direction of Ciudad Rodrigo. This news serves to give credibility to the reports in circulation, as to the misunderstanding which prevails between the courts of Madrid and London. The English it is said, wished to seize Olivenza. The garrison was strong enough, with the reinforcements it had received, to present an imposing aspect.

MADRID, SEPT. 23.

On the report of General Balesteros, Minister at War, his Majesty has just ordered the erection of a Military School to be established at Toledo.

The Sons of Officers, Magistrates, and other functionaries, who have died without fortune will be admitted into it. To supply the first expenses, one Company, one Lieutenancy and one sub-Lieutenancy in each regiment will be sold at a fixed price: and to secure its future revenues, one canonicate, in every Cathedral of the Kingdom, shall remain vacant, and the produce be received exclusively for this object.

ROME, SEPT. 19.

Great poverty prevails in this city and in all the States of the Holy See. Rome is filled with manuscript notices, in which the Government is treated with little respect; all the vigilance of the police cannot stop their circulation.

The assistance paid by the English to his Holiness is disagreeable to the people. Enlightened people fear lest the Holy See become the dupe of its new policy. The statutes of Pasquin and Marforio are often grotesquely dressed.

His Holiness, by a rescript of the 13th, has offered a premium for the importation of grain into his states. They talk of the Pontifical troops being raised to 18,000 men.

FERRARA, SEPT. 21.

We have now here an Austrian garrison of 4800 men.

Though some vessels had arrived here with grain from the Adriatic, yet the price of bread has risen from 8 to 12 sous the lb. of 28 oz. The passage of troops for the last two years has exhausted Italy, and we are under some alarm for the future.

BASTIA, SEPT. 22.

The greater part of Corsica is in arms; 5,000 men are already organizing officers of all ranks. It is believed, that this state of things has for its object the defence of Corsica against all illicit attack. The people will not seperate their cause from that of France.

ZURICH, SEPT. 26.

By a Convention of the allied powers, relative to the Bonaparte family, Madame Louis Bonaparte was to reside in Switzerland, but under surveillance. We are assured, however, that the Confederation has refused its assent to this arrangement, and does not wish that any one bearing the name of Bonaparte should reside in Switzerland.

BRUSSELS, SEPT. 30.

The cantonments of the Allies continue to be more and more drawn towards Lille; they already occupy several places round the fortress, and the entrance of the Allied troops is spoken of as highly probable. At Valenciennes and Douay, as at Lisle, great alarm prevails. A short time must clear up all these doubts. In the French departments of the Ardennes and the Moselle, the Allies are making very large requisitions. Thus, Sedan is called on to deliver up a very large quantity of cloth.

HANOVER, SEPT. 26.

The definitive cession of the principality of East Friesland to the kingdom of Hanover has now taken place; troops are already ordered from this kingdom to take possession of that country, and the formal act of cession arrived here, as is reported, last week.

Constantinople, Sept. 9.

"Very unpleasant news arrived here yesterday from Cairo by way of Smyrna, that the troops of Mehomed Aly, Pasha of Egypt, dissatisfied at the resolution taken by him to form out of them a regular troop, and made more hold by the march of several corps of them into Upper Egypt, had revolted, and committed at Cairo murder, pillage, and excesses of every kind.

LONDON, Oct. 26.

BRITISH ARMY IN FRANCE.

Saturday last a most splendid review took place in the Plain of St. Denis, of about 35,000 British and Hanoverian infantry, and between 3 and 4000 cavalry, including the Life Guards and Oxford Blues. The Duke of Wellington, attended by a most numerous and brilliant Staff, came on the ground about 11 o'clock, and immediately rode down the line at a hard gallop; the bands of the different regiments struck up as he passed; never did his excellency appear to greater advantage. In a few minutes his orders were given, & the manœuvering commenced; the sides de-camp were seen flying from one division to the other, all was bustle, the carriages and numerous spectators retreated rapidly before the troops; but when the Life Guards made a full charge, the effect was at its height; never could any thing convey a greater idea of their force. No serious accident occurred, one young gentleman had a narrow escape; his horse reared, and fell backwards upon him, but he was not much hurt. Lord Hill, General Sir L. Cole, Colonels Harvey and Congrieve, were amongst the most conspicuous active characters of the day; the troops looked extremely well,

The day was peculiarly fine neither hot nor dusty, and the line of troops, which extended as far as the eye could reach, presented a coup d'oeil, which nothing ever excelled. Field Marshal Prince Wrede, and a number of Bavarian and Prussian Officers were present, and appeared to notice narrowly the great movements ordered by the illustrious Wellington.

LONDON, Oct. 16.

Admiral Linois, the French General Boyer, and the officers and troops that have arrived from Guadaloupe at Portsmouth, are to be sent to Havre de Grace directly, there to await the orders of the Duke of Wellington, agreeably to the article of capitulation. No person will be permitted to land until his Grace' directions for their disposal is received, nor any communication to take place.

We flatter ourselves that in the present state of the shipping interest, and the want of employment for so many thousand British seamen, his Majesty's Government will not allow American vessels to trade to the British West Indies.

Indeed, there cannot, under the new treaty be any objection on the part of the English planters, to employ British ships in the trade to the United States, from the King's sugar colonies, as they are not in future to pay their higher tonnage duties, than American vessels. A little foresight and previous arrangement is only necessary on the part of the planters, to prevent the inconvenience complained of in the letter from antigua, in our paper of Monday.

St. Petersburgh Oct. 11.—On the 5th of Sept. O. S. the great and venerable city of Casan was nearly reduced to ashes. A furious storm rendered all attempts to extinguish the flames fruitless,—Above one thousand houses, and twenty one churches were a prey to the flames.

The rich depot of merchandize is also destroyed, with all the goods it contained almost all the public buildings, the buildings within the fortress, &c. The unfortunate inhabitants have made tents in the plains near the city. This dreadful catastrophe was caused by fire in 22 hours. The storm threw fire brands through several streets.

"HAMBURGH, Oct. 27.

Letters from Paris of the 19th say, that it is settled that the contibution of 700 millions is to be paid in five years at the rate of 140 millions annually; 130, millions more are fixed for the support of the 150,000 troops for the first three years.

"In respect to the claims to which the 4th article of the Process Verbal of the bases of the peace relate, France has propored to pay them after the lapse of the above five years and till that time to pay interest for the amount of 3 pet cent per annum."

FROM THE GAZETTE DE FRANCE.

MADRID, Nov. 5.

They speak of a serious misunderstanding between Spain and England.

PARIS, Nov. 16.

Report says, that it has been resolved in a council of the Allies, that the garrison of Paris shall not consist of the English only, as was at first intended, but that it shall be composed of 4000 Russians, 4 00 Austrians, 4000 Prussians, 4000 English and some auxiliary troops.

Nov. 16.—It appears that the treaty between France and the Allied Powers will be signed on the morning of the 19th. The departure of Lord Castlereagh for England, and of Prince Hardenburgh for Frankfort and Berlin, are announced for the beginning of next week. The bureaux of M. Pivet, are, it is said, to remove at the same time

PARIS, Nov. 17.

The Governor of Valenciennes persists in refusing to let the Prussians enter that city.

A corps of 10,000 Russians is proceeding toward, Paris to form part of the foreign garrison.

BATH, October 20.

Duel.—An affair of honor took place on Monday se'nnight, near Harre de Grace, between Mr. Stewart purser of his Majesty's ship Picque, and Mr. Grant, Surgeon of the Royal Navy. The dispute was of long standing. Mr. Stewart's second not having arrived on the spot, Mr. Grant's second would only permit them to fire once. Mr. Stewart was struck on the abdomen; but the thickness of his watch chain prevented the ball from penetrating; a valuable amethyst, which was set in steal, was split by the ball.

The following has been issued from the Secretary of State Office for the war department in Downing street:

"SIR—I am directed by Lord Bathurst to acquaint you, in reply to your letter of the ——— that his Majesty's government have it under consideration whether it may be advisable to afford next year some degree of encouragement to persons willing to proceed as settlers to the British provinces in North America, and that as soon as this question shall be decided, I will not fail to communicate the advantages which it is proposed to hold out to them; but I think it right now to apprise you, that whatever determination may be ultimately come to upon the question, no grants of limits will henceforth be given in those provinces to nonresidents beyond what the means of parties offering to proceed thither may enable them to cultivate.

Lateſt Intelligence.

CEYLON.

CAUSE OF THE WAR BETWEEN THE KING OF KANDI AND THE ENGLISH.

Our readers will find in the extract of a letter from Ceylon, which we have here inserted, an intereſting account, by an intelligent obſerver on the ſpot of the circumſtances which have led to the late important change in the ſtate of affairs in that Iſland.

Extract of a Letter from Ceylon, dated Columbo, March 5, 1815.

"Since my laſt letter we have taken the field againſt our old enemy the King of Kandi, and have happily brought the war to a ſucceſsful concluſion in one campaign, ſhort and deciſive beyond the moſt ſanguine expectation. You are perhaps, not aware what has long been the embarraſſing ſtate of our relations with that country, which comprises the whole interior of the iſland. In the courſe of our military operations in 1803 our troops had penetrated as far as Kandi the capital, which was taken, and occupied by a detachment under the command of Major Davie, whilſt propoſals for peace were offered to the enemy. During the actual progreſs of the negociation, and in violation of the truce which had been agreed to, the garriſon was attacked by a large force and having ſurrendered on a capitulation which provided for its unmoleſted departure, was immediately diſarmed, and every European barbarouſly murdered, Major Davie and a few officers excepted, whom the policy of the King preſerved alive as hoſtages, but who were expoſed to every ſpecies of ill treatment and cruelty. Elated by the ſucceſs of this treachery, the Kandian troops advanced to our frontier, and continued for ſome time to threaten, and occaſionally to invade, our territory; but the Governor being unwilling, by a renewal of offenſive operations, to expoſe our troops to the effect of the climate, which had proved very fatal, was ſatisfied with repelling their incurſions, and reducing them to a ſtate of blockade within their own boundary. By degrees they appeared to have laid aſide all hopes of prevailing, at leaſt they deſiſted from any active enterpriſe; and a ſyſtem of forbearance was adopted on our part, which in conformity with inſtructions from our government at home, has been ſince ſcrupulouſly perſevered in, with the hope of conciliating the Court of Kandi. This expectation, however, has proved vain, and every effort has been ineffectual to induce the King to enter into any ſort of amicable intercourſe of arrangement with us, or to releaſe the unfortunate officers who had fallen into his hands at Kandi. Of theſe, notwithſtanding the pains taken by the King to conceal every circumſtance reſpecting them, we had been able to aſcertain that the ill fated Major Davie was the only individual who had been able for any time to endure the ſeverities practiſed towards them. Such has been, from the year 1803, our precarious and unſatisfactory poſition with reſpect to our neighbours, affording no aſſurance of ſolid tranquility or ſafe intercourſe. During this period of ſuſpended warfare, the Court of Kandi, conſiſting chiefly of the King's relations and Malabar adherents, has been nouriſhing its jealouſy and enmity, whilſt the people, particularly thoſe of the diſtricts neareſt to our frontier, have gradually grown more impatient under the capricious tyranny of their native Government and have become ſenſible that relief was only to be found under Britiſh protection. This diſpoſition had manifeſted itſelf by the removal to our ſettlements of a great number of families from the interior, and by applications for military aſſiſtance from ſome of the Chiefs whom the conduct of the King had totally alienated. The moderation and forbearance of our Government refuſed to take advantage of theſe overtures; its patience was even proof againſt an aggreſſion marked with circumſtances of the moſt atrocious barbarity and deliberate inſult. In October laſt, ten natives, inhabitants of our province of Columbo, were ſeized, whilſt peaceably carrying on their uſual traffic in the Kandian country and carried to the Capital, where they were all ſhockingly mutilated. Three only ſurvived this torture, who were conducted back to the Britiſh territory with their amputated limbs ſuſpended round their necks. From the boldneſs and audacity with which in this caſe the outrage was aggravated by public inſult, it was clear that the King was ready to recur to acts of hoſtility, and unlikely that he would long abſtain from them. Attention to his movements warned us to be ourſelves prepared: among various indications of a warlike nature in the interior, we diſcovered that he had been lately ſtrengthening his army with Malabars from the coaſt. In November, certain meaſures which the king had attempted in the frontier provinces were reſiſted by the people, & the dread of his vengeance drove them into open revolt. The moſt earneſt appeals were made by the chiefs to our government for ſuccour and protection; but every ſolicitation for military aſſiſtance was ſtill declined. In the beginning of January the King's army entered into the revolted diſtricts, and continued to advance in purſuit of the inſurgents: and on the 9th of that month, a part of his force violated the Britiſh territory, and committed various exceſſes. It was impoſſible for us, to paſſe. The troops were immediately put in motion, and a Proclamation was iſſued promiſing ſecurity and protection to the Kindians, and announcing that our hoſtility, was directed againſt the Court alone, which it ſeems was held in abhorrence by the whole people. I will not enter into a detail of military proceedings, which you will of courſe find in the public reports. The important reſults have been that we have without bloodſhed, ſecured for ourſelves a ſtate of permanent ſecurity, have added a fertile country and a numerous population to the Britiſh poſſeſſions, and have laid the foundation of future happineſs to the whole Cingaleſe people, by giving them our own mild and paternal government, inſtead of the ſanguinary and capricious tyranny of the Malabar dominion."

LATEST FROM FRANCE

Paris dates to the 20th of November and Bourdeaux dates to the 24th.

A letter dated at Bourdeaux on the 23d of November, ſtates that the trial of Ney excites a very lively intereſt throughout the Kingdom; that the royal party, if poſſible, will deſtroy him; but that "ſeven eighths of the French people conſider him the brighteſt character of which they can boaſt." Much allowance, however, ſhould be made for the feelings of the writer.

The plague continues to ſpread its ravages in Dalmatia; five prieſts fell victims, on the ſame day, of their zeal in behalf of the unhappy creatures attacked with that diſorder.

PARIS, NOV. 20.

Marſhal Ney has written to the miniſter of the Allied Powers, to reclaim the ſtrict execution of the convention of Paris, by which an amneſty for all acts poſterior to the 20th March was ſtipulated by the generals of the allied forces. Madame Ney has had an interview on this ſubject with the Duke of Wellington, who obſerved to her, that the convention of the 3d of July had never been ratified by his Majeſty Louis XVIII, and that in conſequence the Allies could not interfere in any meaſures which the King might think proper to adopt in order to inſure the interior tranquility of the ſtate.

The 10th regiment of regular infantry, which continued faithful to the royal cauſe after the invaſion of Bonaparte, returned to this city on Saturday, in order to be incorporated in the royal guard. Detachments from the Pariſian National Guard went out to meet them, and accompanied them to the Palace of the Tuilleries.

In the Chamber of Peers on the 17th, it was unanimouſly reſolved, that Marſhal Ney ſhould be delivered over to the Chamber, and that his trial ſhould begin on Tueſday, the 21ſt inſtant.

LONDON, Oct. 5.

We underſtand that a diſtinguiſhed Britiſh Officer, who had an opportunity of viewing the American ſteam frigate at New York, pronounced it the moſt formidable battery of defence ever invented. They are to be ſtationed at all their different ſea ports); and the officer alluded to has, we hear, ſtrongly recommended their adoption, particularly for the Bay of Gibraltar.

We are informed, that very recently, orders have been tranſmitted to Lord Exmouth, to remain in the Mediterranean with ſuch a force as he ſhall deem neceſſary, until the political events upon that extenſive coaſt have become entirely tranquiliſed; and then to proceed to England, leaving Admiral Penroſe in the command. Admiral Sir Joſias Rowley, with the Impregnable and Malta, is to return to England forthwith.

Oct. 6.—We glean the following from private letters from Paris for the authenticity of which, however, we cannot anſwer. The National Guard and a mob of perſons prevented the bronze horſes from being taken down by a ſmall Pruſſian guard on the 29th. On the 30th, a large body of Auſtrian troops occupied the Place Carouſel, and the work was completed. The pillar in the Place Vendome is reported to be under ſentence of removal.

Oct. 7.—The following letter from a private ſource contains ſtatements which appear to us worthy of public attention. Some of them we know to be well founded.

"PARIS, Oct. 2

Moderate parties, even when they had the majority, ſoon looſe their influence in this country. Extremes are only are popular. The new Miniſtry is not ſo violent as you in England ſuppoſe. VIENNA, Oct. 28.

Merchants letters from Brody of the 24th October state, that Gen. Beningsen had for 14 days his head quarters at Odassa. The rumours of an approaching war between Russia and the Porte still maintained their ground notwithstanding their improbability.

BRUSSELS, Oct. 25.

The numerous new raised Prussian battalions, which from time to time has passed the Meuse, march further and further into France, in order to be equipped. More are expected from Prussia; and, it is supposed, that those troops are going to relieve some other regiments which have orders to return to Prussia.

Several persons who have been guilty of excesses and acts of violence towards the allied soldiers in the French frontier departments, and who are already imprisoned at Lunemburg, are to be conveyed to different fortresses in Germany. Notwithstanding the punishments inflicted from time to time, there is still great reason to complain of the spirit of the inhabitants, who do not seem inclined to take example from others.

We expect this week at Ostend some fresh corps of English infantry, and some division of artillery. These reinforcements are to proceed, the moment they are landed, to join the Duke of Wellington in France. Besides this, we see continually fresh supplies of military stores of every description arrive here, which are immediately forwarded to the frontiers.

HAARLEM COURANT, Oct. 28.

BRUSSELS, Nov. 11.

Orders were received here on the 8th inst. to prepare every thing necessary in this city and neighbourhood for a Prussian army of 70,000 men and 20,000 horses, composing the 5th and 6th corps of the Prussian army, which were to march through here on their return from France. All the necessary measures were taken, when news arrived, that upon the French frontiers, orders had been received for the Prussian army to halt and go into cantonments until further orders.

Detachments of troops of all arms continue to arrive at Ostend, going to join Lord Wellington's army.

LONDON, Nov. 19.

General Wilson leaves town in a few days to assume the Government of the Province of Lower Canada, in the place of Sir Gordon Drummond, who has requested to be recalled.

Sir Thomas Maitland, the present Governor of Malta, it is said, will early in the spring proceed to Canada, as Governor in Chief of the British possessions in America.

MURAT.

The following letter from Naples contains some particulars respecting Murat's trial and execution, not before published.—

Naples, Octr. 20.

Murat landed lately on the coast of Calabria, near Pizzo, with thirty officers, mostly Corsicans; he was immediately seized and confined: on the 13th of October, at five in the evening, he was summoned before a court martial, and at six he was shot, six balls entering his head; he affected a great deal of fortitude, but on approaching the fatal scene, his firmness began to waver, and he said to the officers around, that they ought to wait the decision of the Allied Powers; however, finding all lost his vanity come to his assistance, and asking those round him if he was afraid to die, and refusing to have his eyes covered, gave himself the word fire, which was instantly executed, and he expired without a groan. He was some time with a Confessor, and wrote three letters during his confinement; one to his wife, one to the Emperor of Austria, and one to the King here, beginning 'Dear Cousin' I under stand all these were instantly destroyed'

From the Montreal Herald.

Extract of a letter from Serjeant Ewart, of the Scots Greys, who in the battle of Waterloo, took a French Eagle, to his brother in Ayr, dated Rouen, 16th August, 1815. After describing in rather an interesting manner, the attacks of the 16th and 17th, the Serjeant gives the following detail of the share which he had in the business of the memorable 18th June.

"The enemy began forming their lines of battle about 9 in the morning of the 18th, we did not commence till 10 I think it was about 11 when we were ready to receive them. They began upon our right with the most tremendous firing that ever was heard, and, I can assure you, they got it as hot as they gave it! then it came down to the left, where they were received by our brave Highlanders: no men could ever behave better: our brigade of cavalry covered them. Owing to a column of foreign troops giving way, our brigade was forced to advance to the support of our brave fellows, and which we certainly did in style: we charged through two of their columns, each about 5000; it was in the first charge I took the Eagle from the enemy, he and I had a very hard contest for it: he trust for my groin—I parried it off and cut him through the head: after which I was attacked by one of their lancers, who threw his lance at me, but missed the mark, by my throwing it off with my sword by my right side—then I cut him from the chin upwards, which cut went through his teeth: next, I was attacked by a foot soldier, who after firing at me, charged me with his bayonet—but he very soon lost his combat, for I parried it and cut him down through the head! so that finished the contest for the Eagle. After which I presumed to follow my comrades, Eagle and all, but was stopped by the General, saying to me, "You brave fellow, take that to the rear:—you have done enough until you get quit of it, which I was obliged to do, but with great reluctance. I retired to the height and stood there for upwards of an hour which gave me a general view of the field, but I cannot express the sight I beheld; the bodies of my brave comrades were lying so thick upon the field that it was scarcely possible to pass, and horses innumerable. I took the Eagle into Brussels amidst the acclamations of thousands of the spectators that saw it."

NEW-YORK Jan. 10, 1816.

News from Mexico.

An extraordinary Gazette of Mexico, of the 6th November, gives an official statement of the defeat and capture of the Patriot chieftain, MORELOS, on the 4th of that month. Two pieces of cannon, many muskets and sabres, and all his booty and equipage, fell into the hands of the royalists, together with a considerable number of prisoners.

BALTIMORE, Jan. 7.

By the arrival of the schr. Iris, Capt. Cock, in 22 days from Aux Cayes, we learn, that two Carthagena privateers arrived at Aux Cayes in 5 days from old Carthagena, and brought accounts that Carthagena had been taken by the European Spaniards.

Eight or ten days before the Iris sailed, an expedition from Christophe's Dominions, consisting of 7 sail, appeared and landed 500 men from Cape Tiberon; their object was to form a junction with the disaffected in the mountains, but shortly after landing, the men proposed to their officers to join Petion, and on refusing were all immediately shot, and the men went over to Petion.

THE YORK GAZETTE.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 10, 1816.

On Tuesday last the 6th Inst., being the Day appointed by Proclamation for the meeting of the Provincial Legislature, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, accompanied by the Commanding Officer of the District, and Staff at this Post, and attended by the Principal Officers of Government, proceeded, at 2 o'Clock, to the Legislative Council Chamber, and, with the accustomed Solemnities, was pleased to open the Session with the following Gracious Speech to both Houses.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

After so long an absence, during which the Prosperity of this Province was uppermost in my thoughts, I now embrace the wished for opportunity of uniting with you in my endeavors to promote that salutary object.

It would have been a great satisfaction to me to have been able to communicate any more favorable account of the state of our Revered Sovereign, than that His Bodily [illegible]th continues unimpaired.

I congratulate you, and every Loyal Subject, on the ultimate and complete success of the great struggle in Europe, in which every member of the British Empire is peculiarly interested, as being chiefly attributed to the auspices of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and the National Arms, under the direction of the first Warrior of Modern times.

The Gallent Defence of this Colony, by its own Militia, supported during the early period of the War by a very small portion of His Majesty's Regular Force, has acquired to it, a High Distinction for Loyalty and Bravery.

The obstinate contention with succeeding Armies of Invaders, and their ultimate discomfiture, has not failed to attract the notice of the World, and gives to this Province an Importance in Public opinion which it becomes us to maintain.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I have ordered the Provincial Accounts to be laid before you, not doubting but that you will examine them with your usual attention.

Hon. Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

The return of Peace, and with it, we are to hope, the habits of Industry, which promise Wealth and Happiness to this Colony, Claims from you such Legislative Provisions as may best secure the protection and enjoyment of these blessings.

The Militia Code has undergone many changes, but still requires your serious attention, to give the best possible effect to that Force, should it again be called into action.—Experience shows that the most disposable, and therefore the best form into which it can be moulded, so as to serve with a Regular Force, is that of Independent Companies, upon the principle on which the Flank Companies were formed in the year 1812.

The District Schools instituted by Law, and admirably fitted as a step between Elementary Schools, and a Seminary for the higher Branches of Education, will not, without further aid, produce sufficient advantages to the Youth of this Province.

The dissemination of Letters is of the first importance to every Class; and to aid in so desirable an object, I wish to call your attention to some Provision for an Establishment of Schools in each Township, which shall afford the first Principles to the Children of the Inhabitants, and prepare such of them as may require further Instruction, to receive it in the District Schools; from them it seems desirable that there should be a resort to a Provincial Seminary, for the Youth who may be destined for the Professions, or other distinguished Walks in Life, where they might attain the Higher Branches of Education.—The Royal Bounty has already been bestowed towards that end, in the destination of large tracts of Land; and no attention shall be wanting on my part, to second, and carry into effect, the result of your Deliberations on this important subject.

The Revenue arising from the Duties received at Quebec, the Increase, and Regulation of which, have been yielded to the Legislature of Lower Canada, requires your serious attention, not only that we may reap the full benefit of our Consumption, but that there may be no further Interference with the National Provisions for the Regulation of Trade.

The Growth, Prosperity, and Happiness of this Province, I am confident will receive your best attention, and I assure you of my full support and co-operation.

Yesterday at 12 o'Clock, the Honorable the Legislative Council waited on His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, and presented the following Address, in answer to His Excellency's Speech.

To His Excellency FRANCIS GORE Esquire, Lieut. Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency.

We His Majesty's Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, the Legislative Council of Upper Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our acknowledgements for your Speech at the opening of the present session of the Legislature.

We are happy to embrace this opportunity of congratulating your Excellency on your safe arrival to resume the duties of your exalted situation amongst us, who have during your absence duly appreciated the benevolent sentiments excited in your mind for the welfare and prosperity of this Province—your former Administration is a pledge for the future, and we will cheerfully co-operate with you at all times in promoting objects salutary and beneficial.

We return your Excellency our thanks for your communication respecting the health of our most gracious King—a Monarch whose virtues will ever endear him to his Loyal and Affectionate Subjects.

The happy change that has lately taken place in Europe must give pleasure to every friend of the Human Race; but we His Majesty's Loyal Subjects feel a peculiar satisfaction when we know this glorious Revolution has been chiefly accomplished by the British arms under the auspices of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and under the guidance and direction of the first Warrior of the age.

The approbation which your Excellency has been pleased to bestow on the Militia of this Province during the late arduous Contest, must afford the highest gratification to that body of men, & will stimulate them to a like meritorious conduct should their Services be again required. The Revision of the Militia Code, so as to give the best possible effect to that force when again called into action, is a measure become necessary from the various changes incident to times of commotion and confusion, and will therefore, merit from us, time, and serious attention in the investigation.

The system detailed by your Excellency for the Education of Youth in this Province fully corresponds with our sentiments on this subject; and as the dissemination of Letters is of the first importance to every class in promoting morality and Religion, in ameliorating the condition of mankind, and in benefiting posterity, this subject will claim from us such consideration as will carry into effect the benevolent intentions of your Excellency, and we notice with gratitude that the Royal bounty has already been bestowed in the destination of large tracts of Land to be applied in such manner as will promote, give effect to, and mature a system so essentially calculated to ensure the Wealth and happiness of this Province.—Your Excellency's Personal Zeal in promoting these laudable institutions, and your readiness to carry into effect the result of our deliberations, claim from us, as a public body, our warmest acknowledgements.

We will bestow our particular attention to what your Excellency has been pleased to communicate respecting the Revenue arising from the Duties received at the Port of Quebec, so far as respects this Province, that we may reap the full benefit of our Consumption, and, that there may be no further interference with the National Provisions for the regulation of Trade, hitherto yielded to our Sister Province from principles of mutual accomodation and Geographical position.

February 8th, 1816.

His Excellency was pleased to make the following Reply.

Hon: Gentlemen of the Legislative Council.

I thank you for your Loyal Address, and that Cordiality with which you are pleased to adopt the Subjects suggested for your consideration.

You may rely upon my co-operation in every measure leading to Promote the happiness of His Majesty's Subjects in this Province.

February 9th, 1816.

And at 12 o'Clock on the same Day the Commons House of Assembly also waited on His Excellency, with the following Address of that House.

To His Excellency Francis Gore Esquire, Lieut. Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency.

We His Majesty's most Dutiful and Loyal Subjects the Commons of Upper Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer to your Excellency, our most humble and hearty thanks for your most Gracious Speech, at the opening of the present Session.

Convinced as we are of the deep interest which your Excellency has always felt for the welfare of this Province, and your constant anxiety for its prosperity; Feeling as we do, that under your former mild and upright Administration of the Government the Country flourished, and its Inhabitants were happy; and anticipating from a recollection of the past, the brightest prospects for the future; we hail your return to resume the functions of your high station among us, with peculiar satisfaction, and, at the same time, request your Excellency to receive on the occasion our most cordial congratulations.

The continuance of the lamented Indisposition of our Revered Sovereign is truly affecting to every Loyal breast, but it is some consolation to know that his bodily health continues unimpaired.

The complete success of the great struggle in Europe, and the splendid atchievements of the National arms, directed by the greatest Warrior of modern times, may be justly attributed to the auspices of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, whose able, vigorous, and energetic measures, have elevated our Mother Country to the highest rank among the nations of Europe, and excited the admiration and gratitude of every Loyal Subject; and we feel grateful to Divine Providence for selecting him to be the means of dispensing so much happiness to the World.

We observe with grateful hearts, the notice which Your Excellency has been pleased to take of the exertions of the Militia of this Province, at the commencement of the late war with the United States.—To know that they discharged their duty faithfully to their Country is to us a source of proud satisfaction. The notice of the World, and the importance to public opinion which this Province has thereby acquired, will, we doubt not, stimulate their future exertions.—This high Character it shall be our study to maintain.

When the Public Accounts are laid before us, we shall not fail to pay that attention to their examination which the importance of the subject requires.

With the return of Peace, we anticipate, by the industry and exertion of the People, the future wealth and prosperity of this Colony, and shall endeavour to frame such Legislative Provisions as may best secure and promote these blessings.

The Militia Code shall receive our utmost attention, and we shall not only endeavour to make such improvements therein, as will render it an efficient force for the defence of the Country in future, but shall also provide that comfort and accommodation for the Militia, when again called into actual Service, the want of which was so severely felt during the late contest.

With your Excellency we are convinced that the dissemination of Letters is of the highest importance to every Class of the Community; and while we acknowledge with humble gratitude the munificent donation of His Majesty to this great object, We beg leave to assure your Excellency of our earnest wish to contribute, by every means in our power, to that general diffusion of Education so much to be desired.

The existing Regulations, respecting Revenue with our Sister Province, have, during former Sessions, occupied our attention. We have had occasion to remark upon insufficiency, & we shall not fail to attend to your Excellency's recommendation on that subject.

The Growth, Prosperity, and happiness of this Province, will receive our most serious and undivided attention; and we are cheered and encouraged in this task by your Excellency's assurance of full co-operation and support.

To which His Excellency was pleased to make the following Answer.

Mr. Speaker,
and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I thank you for the Assurances contained, in this Address, of your constant Loyalty, and ready Devotions to the great Interests of your constituents.

The satisfaction you express of my past Administration, is an ample reward for all my anxiety in your Hour of Danger, which I could not share.—It binds me more strongly to pursue a conduct so highly approved.

February 9th, 1816.

On the Day of the opening of the Session an Elegant Dinner was given at the Government House to the Members and Officers of the Two Houses of the Legislature, at which the Earl of Selkirk, and a number of the Civil and Military Officers, and Principal Gentlemen of this place, were also present.

Lateſt Intelligence.

From the Montreal Herald.

BOSTON, JANUARY 18.

LATE ARRIVAL FROM FRANCE.

 Capt. Wentham, of the ship Mary-Ann, has arrived in Salem from Havre-de-Grace, 36 days, and has brought Paris papers to the 5th December;—translation from which are given in the Salem Gazette of yesterday.

☞The trial of Marshal Ney continued before the French House of Peers on the 4th December, and the examination of witnesses, it was expected would occupy the time until the midole of that month.

☞France was perfectly tranquil throughout.

☞Louis 18th had communicated to his Parliament the Treaty of Peace between him and the allied Powers; the particulars of which have been accurately published. He has also communicated the Convention between France and England, in regard to the claims of British subjects for stocks in the French funds, which were confiscated by Bonaparte, and which are said to amount to nearly two hundred millions of livers. Also a treaty between the High Allies, (Austria, Great Britain, Russia and Prussia) in which they stipulate to maintain the treaty with France; to renew and confirm the arrangements made the last year for the safety and tranquility of Europe, saving such modifications as have been made by the new treaty, especially in regard to Napoleon Bonaparte, for the exclusion of whose family from the supreme power in France they pledge the employment of their whole force if necessary. On the 27th Nov the House of Delegates sent a Committee to the King to thank him for the communication of the treaty.

We have been politely favored by a Friend with a complete file of Paris Papers to the 5th December. The trial of Marshal Ney commenced the 4th December, and the "Journal de Paris" of the 5th is nearly occupied with the minutes of the preceding day

TRIAL OF MARSHAL NEY.

HOUSE OF PEERS, Dec. 4, 1815.

The sitting opened at half past ten. Several of the Ministers were present

The Lord Chancellor ordered Marshal Ney to be conducted to the bar, and made the usual interrogatories of identification, &c. The Marshal's voice was firm; but his countenance had undergone some alteration. He was always seated, and had a chair between his two counsels. Four sub-officers of royal Grenadiers were posted behind him.

(Here follow some unimportant preliminary proceedings, and questions of order.)

A list of 44 witnesses were called, 19 of them were summoned by the Prosecutor; 24 at the request of the Marshal, and four by himself.

The Bill of impeachment was read by the Secretary, and attended to by the accused with calmness.

The Lord Chancellor then proceeded to the examination of the accused. To the first question, where were you on the 1st day of the month of March?

The Marshal answered. Monseigneur Le Chancelier, M M. les Pairs..I shall answer truly to all the questions put to me, under the reservation of availing myself of the rights appertaining to me by the 2nd Art. of the capitulation of the 3d July, and the treaty of peace of the 20th Nov. last.

The interrogatory was the same as before the Court Martial, and the answers nearly similar.

M. de Doras, the Prince de Poix, and Count De Segy, confirmed their former testimony: and were cross-examined by M. Berryere, Counsel of the accused.

M. De Rochement, and M. De Faverney were also examined.

Gen. Count De Bourmont was examined. He alluded to his disposition taken at Lille, and said, he had since learned that Marshal Ney had stated that he approved of his proclamation. As this touched his honor, he should be more minute in his explanation, and if it should fall heavy on the accused, he must thank himself for it.

He then related the events of the 14th March when the witness, Baron Capel, and Gen Lecourbe were with the Marshal.

On this occasion, the accused said to Gen. Lecourbe, I was just telling Count de B. that the troops were disposed in such manner as to join the Emperor; that the King ought to have quitted Paris, and to have embarked for England. Now, what have we to do but to join Bonaparte? By no means, cried General Lecourbe. I have no reasons for rallying round the scoundrel: The King has never done me wrong, but he, nothing else. Besides, I am bound to serve the King, and have a sense of honor. "And I too," replied the Marshal, "I have my sense of honor, and it is on this account I wish to embrace the cause of the Emperor. We have all been too much humiliated, and I will no longer behold my wife returning every day with tears in her eyes, at the insults heaped on her. You, Gen. Lecourbe, have reason to complain of the Emperor, but I am sure he will now treat you well."

The witness added, that after conversation, the Marshal produced his Proclamation under his own hand, which he said was to be read to the troops; that the witness and others tried to dissuade him, and repaired to the place where he was to address the troops, and that after he advanced, it was proved by many that he carried the Eagle upon the place of the legion of honor, and the effigy of Bonaparte under his great Ribbon.

[Here Marshal Ney cried out with fire.. During eight months Gen. B. has been collecting the charges which he this day utters. I have no talents as an Orator, but I have that of truth. Gen. Lecourbe is no more, and cannot support my testimony here; but he is in a place where we shall unite; and where, without doubt, (said he raising his hands to heaven) the brave General expects me.

A very lively discussion ensued between the accused and Gen. Bourmont, respecting the disposition of the troops. The witness are sharply cross-examined by Ney and his Counsel.

M. De Vaulchier, the Baron Capelle, the Count de Grivel, and Baron Clonel, were also examined. [Their evidence substantiated the facts respecting the conduct of Ney, when he went to meet Bonaparte, and his movements until he joined him. We have before stated the substance of it, and need not repeat it. The house rose at half past five, and adjourned to ten o'clock the next morning.]

The York Gazette.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 14, 1816.

On Tuesday last the 6th Inst., being the Day appointed by Proclamation for the meeting of the Provincial Legislature, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, accompanied by the Commanding Officer of the District, and Staff at this Post, and attended by the Principal Officers of Government, proceeded, at 2 o'Clock, to the Legislative Council Chamber, and, with the accustomed Formalities, was pleased to open the Session with the following Gracious Speech to both Houses.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

After so long an absence, during which the Prosperity of this Province was uppermost in my thoughts, I now embrace the wished for opportunity of uniting with you in my endeavors to promote that salutary object.

It would have been a great satisfaction to me to have been able to communicate any more favorable account of the state of our Revered Sovereign, than that His Bodily Health continues unimpaired.

I congratulate you, and every Loyal Subject, on the ultimate and complete success of the great struggle in Europe, in which every member of the British Empire is peculiarly interested, as being chiefly attributed to the auspices of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and the National Arms, under the direction of the first Warrior of Modern times.

The Gallent Defence of this Colony, by its own Militia, supported during the early period of the War by a very small portion of His Majesty's Regular Force, has acquired to it, a High Distinction for Loyalty and Bravery.

The obstinate contention with succeeding Armies of Invaders, and their ultimate discomfiture, has not failed to attract the notice of the World, and gives to this Province an Importance in Public opinion which it becomes us to maintain.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I have ordered the Provincial Accounts to be laid before you, not doubting but that you will examine them with your usual attention.

Hon. Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

The return of Peace, and with it, we are to hope, the habits of Industry, which promise Wealth and Happiness to this Colony, Claims from you such Legislative Provisions as may best secure the protection and enjoyment of these blessings.

The Militia Code has undergone many changes, but still requires your serious attention, to give the best possible effect to that Force, should it again be called into action.—Experience shows that the most disposable, and therefore the best form into which it can be moulded, so as to serve with a Regular Force, is that of Independent Companies, upon the principle on which the Flank Companies were formed in the year 1812.

The District Schools instituted by Law, and admirably fitted as a step between Elementary Schools, and a Seminary for the higher Branches of Education, will not, without further aid, produce sufficient advantages to the Youth of this Province.

The dissemination of Letters is of the first importance to every Class; and to aid in so desirable an object, I wish to call your attention to some Provision for an Establishment of Schools in each Township, which shall afford the first Principles to the Children of the Inhabitants, and prepare such of them as may require further Instruction, to receive it in the District Schools; from them it seems desirable that there should be a resort to a Provincial Seminary, for the Youth who may be destined for the Professions, or other distinguished Walks in Life, where they might attain the Higher Branches of Education.—The Royal Bounty has already been bestowed towards that end, in the destination of large tracts of Land; and no attention shall be wanting on my part, to second, and carry into effect, the result of your Deliberations on this important subject.

The Revenue arising from the Duties received at Quebec, the Increase, and Regulation of which, have been yielded to the Legislature of Lower Canada, requires your serious attention, not only that we may reap the full benefit of our Consumption, but that there may be no further Interference with the National Provisions for the Regulation of Trade.

The Growth, Prosperity, and Happiness of this Province, I am confident will receive your best attention, and I assure you of my full support and co-operation.

On Friday at 11 o'Clock, the Honorable the Legislative Council waited on His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, and presented the following Address, in answer to His Excellency's Speech.

To His Excellency FRANCIS GORE Esquire, Lieut. Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency.

We His Majesty's Loyal and Dutiful Subjects, the Legislative Council of Upper Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our acknowledgements for your Speech at the opening of the present session of the Legislature.

We are happy to embrace this opportunity of congratulating your Excellency on your safe arrival to resume the duties of your exalted situation amongst us, who have during your absence duly appreciated the benevolent sentiments excited in your mind for the welfare and prosperity of this Province—your former Administration is a pledge for the future, and we will cheerfully co-operate with you at all times in promoting objects salutary and beneficial.

We return your Excellency our thanks for your communication respecting the health of our most gracious King—a Monarch whose virtues will ever endear him to his Loyal and Affectionate Subjects.

The happy change that has lately taken place in Europe must give pleasure to every friend of the Human Race; but we His Majesty's Loyal Subjects feel a peculiar satisfaction when we know this glorious Revolution has been chiefly accomplished by the British arms under the auspices of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and under the guidance and direction of the first Warrior of the age.

The approbation which your Excellency has been pleased to bestow on the Militia of this Province during the late arduous Contest, must afford the highest gratification to that body of men, & will stimulate them to a like meritorious conduct should their Services be again required. The Revision of the Militia Code, so as to give the best possible effect to that force when again called into action, is a measure become necessary from the various changes incident to times of commotion and confusion, and will therefore, merit from us, time, and serious attention in the investigation.

The system detailed by your Excellency for the Education of Youth in this Province fully corresponds with our sentiments on this subject; and as the dissemination of Letters is of the first importance to every class in promoting morality and Religion, in ameliorating the condition of mankind, and in benefiting posterity, this subject will claim from us such consideration as will carry into effect the benevolent intentions of your Excellency, and we notice with gratitude that the Royal bounty has already been bestowed in the destination of large tracts of Land to be applied in such manner as will promote, give effect to, and mature a system so essentially calculated to ensure the Wealth and happiness of this Province.—Your Excellency's Personal Zeal in promoting these laudable institutions, and your readiness to carry into effect the result of our deliberations, claim from us, as a public body, our warmest acknowledgements.

We will bestow our particular attention to what your Excellency has been pleased to communicate respecting the Revenue arising from the Duties received at the Port of Quebec, so far as it affects this Province, that we may reap the full benefit of our Consumption, and that there may be no further interference with the National Provisions for the regulation of Trade, hitherto yielded to our Sister Province from principles of mutual accomodation and Geographical position.

February 8th, 1816.

His Excellency was pleased to make the following Reply,

Hon. Gentlemen of the Legislative Council.

I thank you for your Loyal Address, and that Cordiality with which you are pleased to adopt the Subjects suggested for your consideration.

You may rely upon my co-operation in every measure leading to Promote the happiness of His Majesty's Subjects in this Province.

February 9th, 1816.

And at 12 o'Clock on the same Day the Commons House of Assembly also waited on His Excellency, with the following Address of that House.

To His Excellency Francis Gore, Esquire, Lieut. Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency.

We His Majesty's most Dutiful and Loyal Subjects the Commons of Upper Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer to your Excellency, our most humble and hearty thanks for your most Gracious Speech, at the opening of the present Session.

Convinced as we are of the deep interest which your Excellency has always felt for the welfare of this Province, and your constant anxiety for its prosperity; Feeling as we do, that under your former mild and upright Administration of the Government the Country flourished, and its Inhabitants were happy; and anticipating from a recollection of the past, the brightest prospects for the future; we hail your return to resume the functions of your high station among us, with particular satisfaction, and, at the same time, request your Excellency to receive on the occasion our most cordial congratulations.

The continuance of the lamented Indisposition of our Revered Sovereign is truly affecting to every Loyal breast, but it is some consolation to know that his bodily health continues unimpaired.

The complete success of the great struggle in Europe, and the splendid atchievements of the National arms, directed by the greatest Warrior of modern times, may be justly attributed to the auspices of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, whose able, vigorous, and energetic measures, have elevated our Mother Country to the highest rank among the nations of Europe, and excited the admiration and gratitude of every Loyal Subject, and we feel grateful to Divine Providence for selecting him to be the means of dispensing so much happiness to the World.

We observe with grateful hearts, the notice which Your Excellency has been pleased to take of the exertions of the Militia of this Province, at the commencement of the late war with the United States.—To know that they discharged their duty faithfully to their Country is to us a source of proud satisfaction. The notice of the World, and the importance in public opinion which this Province has thereby acquired, will, we doubt not, animate their future exertions.—This high Character it shall be our study to maintain.

When the Public Accounts are laid before us, we shall not fail to pay that attention to their examination which the importance of the subject requires.

With the return of Peace, we anticipate, by the industry and exertion of the People, the future wealth and prosperity of this Colony, and shall endeavour to frame such Legislative Provisions as may best secure and promote these blessings.

The Militia Code shall receive our utmost attention, and we shall not only endeavour to make such improvements therein, as will render it an efficient force for the defence of the Country in future, but shall also provide that comfort and accommodation for the Militia, when again called into actual Service, the want of which was so severely felt during the late contest.

With your Excellency we are convinced that the dissemination of Letters is of the highest importance to every Class of the Community; and while we acknowledge with humble gratitude the munificent donation of His Majesty to this great object, We beg leave to assure your Excellency of our earnest wish to contribute, by every means in our power, to that general diffusion of Education so much to be desired.

The existing Regulations, respecting Revenue with our Sister Province, have, during former Sessions, occupied our attention. We have had occasion to remark upon insufficiency, & we shall not fail to attend to your Excellency's recommendation on that subject.

The Growth, Prosperity, and happiness of this Province, will receive our most serious and undivided attention; and we are cheered and encouraged in this task by your Excellency's assurance of full co-operation and support.

To which His Excellency was pleased to make the following Answer.

Mr. Speaker,
and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I thank you for the Assurances contained in this Address, of your constant Loyalty, and ready Devotion to the great Interests of your constituents.

The satisfaction you express of my past Administration, is an ample reward for all my anexiety in your Hour of Danger, which I could not share.—It binds me more strongly to pursue a conduct so highly approved.

PROPHECY ON REFORM.

When a lawer sheds tears while he's striking a docket;
When assessors have sighs while they empty your pocket:
When reviewers feel pangs, like the authors they cut up;
When conscience for sale shall no longer be cut up;
When placemen, unasked, throw up sinecures;
When any quack medicine performs any cures;
When women of eighty confess they'er in years;
When they make such confession without sheding tears;
When poor Curates thrive, while fat Bishops get skinny;
When a note with a shilling is preferred to a guinea;
When there's peace, because tyrants are weary of killing;
When a good thumping loaf's to be had for a shilling;
When, like cattle at market, base voters ar'nt sold;
When tea scandal ceases, and fish-fags don't scold;
When true taste shall suffer no more like a martyr;
When Shakespeare's preferr'd to Tymour the Tartar;
When ale's made again from good malt and hops;
When Corn-Jews are found to rejoice at good crops;
When butchers, dear souls! low'r the price of their crops;
When truth shall no longer be deem'd a libel;
When men follow precepts they preach the Bible;
When symptoms like these shall be seen through the land;
They'd seem to protend—"A Reform is at hand!"

LAW.

The following statement of a whimsical law-suit has been sent to us for publication, with an assurance that it is founded in fact:—

"A lover of quadrupeds some time ago had a beautiful squirrel, which had been sent to him from London. He had not been long in possession of the animal, when it unluckily made its escape, and got to the the top of the houses on the Northbridge. After enjoying its liberty for some time, it was secured by a boy on the bridge, from whom it was purchased for 2s. 6d. The purchaser was so much delighted with the gambols and amusing tricks of his new companion, that he bought an elegant cage for its reception.

All the inquiries of the former owner to discover the runaway were in vain, till lately, that he, by mere accident, discovred his favourite. He demanded it back, urging his title and right of property, but the purchase refused to restore it. The price he paid, indemnification of the price of the cage, and a sum in name of board for the animal, were all rejected. The original owner was thus under the necessity of resorting to legal measures to recover his property. He, therefore, presented an application to the Bailies of the Canongate, praying them to order the Defender to restore the "said squirrel," and failing his doing so, to decern against him for 40s. as the value thereof. The Defender appeared, and was heard in defence. He pleaded, that there was no proof that the animal had formerly belonged to the Pursuer. The Pursuer might have lost his squirrel, but still the ipse dixit of the Pursuer, that the "said squirrel" was his squirrel, was not sufficient; and his bona fide purchase fully justified him in resisting the demand made upon him. The squirrel, however, was identified by persons who had seen it while in the Pursuer's possession; and after hearing the parties at great length, the Bailies ordained the squirrel to be delivered up within 48 hours, with 4s. 6d. of expences of process.—This important case, if it shall find a place in the books of reports, may be denominated "the squirrel case."—(Ed. Cor.)

GRATIFYING TRIBUTE TO BRITISH DISCIPLINE, HONOUR, AND GENEROSITY.

The following is an extract of a letter written by an Aid-de-Camp of General MARMONT, on his return to France with the English army, after the battle of Waterloo:—

"Honour, eternal honour to the British! What an Army! What a Commander it! We have marched in the rear of this army, and upon my honour, from the very frontiers [illegible] fortresses of Senlis (where we found the [illegible]rous traces of another army), I have not seen, either one soldier drunk, or one house destroyed, or an inclosure levelled, nor one peasant who complained (though I interrogated them every where), nor, notwithstanding the rapidity of the march, one horse dead on the road. But the greatest order, as well as discipline, reigned among the soldiers. They treated the vanquished with generosity: they even defended them against those who ravished their victories, and the justice of their cause, by excesses and cruelties which I shall abtain from detailing.

LONDON, Dec. 9.

Extract of a letter written on board the Northumberland.

"ST. HELENA, Oct. 19.

"We arrived here on the 16th, after a very long and very fatiguing passage, and we landed Napoleon on the 18th. He is now in the Country, at the house of a Gentleman, named Balcome until Longwood be made ready for him. Those who have followed him are wearied, and I believe, sincerely repent of having accompanied him. Madame Bertrand, who speaks English very well, told me to day that the Island was absolutely a desert, and the birth place of the demon Ennui. She already insists on returning to Europe, in order to educate her children.

"I dined four times with Bonaparte on board of the Northumberland—he spoke little at table and in general addressed his conversation to the Admiral. He took little exercise, and during the day he walked only for about two hours after dinner. Gen. Bertrand and Las Cases are his greatest favourites; he converses rarely with the others. He played cards every evening and in the afternoon chefs. He went to bed early, and rose very late. He was in general low spirited, and since he has arrived here his spirits are not better.

"The island is very strictly guarded; there are signals between all parts of the island and the vessels, guard boats and brigs are cruzing round it, so that unless he can fly it is impossible he should escape. No person is permitted to be absent from this vessel after sunset, and every vessel is ready to slip her cable at the first signal."

FROM FRANCE.

By the fast sailing Schr. Maria, captain Copeland, which arrived at this port last evening in 30 days from Bordeaux, the editors of the Mercantile Advertiser have received a file of Paris papers to the 15th December, containing London dates to the 10th of the same month; and Bourdeaux papers to the 19th.

The trial of marshal Ney was closed on the 6th and he was shot on the 7th of December. At the close of the trial the marshal observed:—

Gentlemen, I am a Frenchman, and I will die as one. They have not been willing to hear my defenders; I thank them for what they have done for me and what they may still do; but I prefer not being defended at all, to be imperfectly defended; I will do as Moreau did appeal to Europe and posterity.

M. Bellart spoke to prevent further delays.

The Chancellor. Defenders, you may use every argument, except such as the chamber has interdicted. The Marshal. Since the chamber will not hear——(mes moyens) I forbid my advocates to add any thing the chamber will judge me as they think proper.

The final requisition was then read.

The president addressing the accused:

Accused, have you any observations to make on the requisition?

The Marshal. Nothing at all, my lord.

The witness ordered the accused to retire, as well as the witnesses auditory.

At five o'clock, we left the chamber sitting for deliberation.

Messenger Office. 1 o'clock A. M. December 7, 1815.

From 5 o'clock the chamber remained in deliberation upon the Judgment, and at a quarter before twelve they decided by a majority that marshal Ney was guilty of high treason against the state, 131 voices condemned him to death, and 24 voted for banishment. The marshal was not present at the time the verdict was delivered. We had thought he could not have been shot, but it appears that there is a law that can shoot him, as has been proved by an able lawyer present.

The marshal is to be shot to-morrow, (this day.)

Paris, December 3.

The following are the principal details subsequent to the judgment of marshal Ney. We decline offering any comments and merely state facts the marshal on entering his chamber, at the time the court was deliberating on his sentence, he appeared highly animated and supported by the strongest resolution. He embraced his counsel, (M. Berryer) who said to the marshal, "You would have it so"—"Well my dear friend," answered the marshal—"It is finished, we shall see each other in another world"—He then asked to dine, and eat with a great appetite; he noticed a small knife lying on the table, which on finding it attracted attention and caused uneasiness to the persons appointed to guard him; do you think said he, on looking at them, that I fear death, and instantly threw the knife far from him. After dinner the marshal smoked a segar, and then threw himself on the bed, where he slept quietly for two hours.

According to the terms of the process the Chevalier Cauchy read the sentence to the marshal, who asked for the consolation of religion and expressed a desire to be assisted by M. Pierre, a relation of the cardinal of Bernis, and curate of St. Sulpice. The estimable ecclesiastic hastened to attend him, they passed the night together, the marshal still retained the same degree of fortitude and resignation to his fate which had actuated him throughout the whole of the proceedings.

At 9 o'clock yesterday morning, the marshal was informed that all was ready for the execution of his sentence;—he put on a blue coat and a round hat, and entered a hackney coach, brought for him from the place St. Michel; the curate of St. Sulpice occupied the back seat of the coach with him—two officers of the gendarmiere were in front—a

The marshal descended from the coach, advanced at quick pace about eight paces from the wall, and asked the officer at his side if this was the place chosen for his execution; on receiving an answer in the affirmative, the marshal turned and fronted the veterans who were to fire upon him; he took off his hat with his left hand, put his right on his heart, and said to the soldiers—"My comrades fire at me"—at that moment the officer gave the signal with his sword, and the marshal fell upon their fire without moving. The body was placed on a litter and remained exposed to the public view for a quarter of an hour; three balls entered his head. The venerable ecclesiastic who had attended the marshal at his last moments, remained during his execution near the coach, praying with fervour. There were very few people present, on account of its being supposed that the execution would have taken place on the Plain of Grenelle, where a great multitude had assembled.

PROVINCIAL PARLIAMENT OF LOWER CANADA.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL,

FRIDAY, 26th JANUARY 1816.

THIS DAY, at two o'Clock, His Excellency the Administrator in Chief came down in state to the Legislative Council Chamber, and being seated on the Throne, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was sent to command the immediate attendance of the Assembly, which being come up. His Excellency was pleased to open the Session with the following

SPEECH:—

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

His Royal Highness the Prince Regent having been pleased to commit to me the Administration of this Government, I have entered upon the duties which that trust prescribes, with a deeds sense of their importance, and an earnest desire to discharge them for the general advantage of the Province; to which my attachment naturally derives additional strength, from the circumstance of my having been born in its capital.

It would be to me a source of inexpressible comfort, and I am confident, would convey to you sincere satisfaction, if I had it in my power to communicate any favourable account, respecting the indisposition of our venerable Sovereign: I regret however, that I have no such information to impart: yet under this awful dispensation, it is not an inconsiderable consolation to be assured, that His Majesty has no corporeal suffering, and continues in a state of undisturbed tranquility.

The total overthrow, and final exile of the Usurper whose infatiable ambition and remorseless thirst of blood were permitted so long to afflict the world;—the restoration once more, of the Family of Bourbon to the Throne of their Ancestors, the general Peace which has been given back to Europe, by the magnanimous exertions of the Allied Powers; and the high distinction obtained by the British Forces, under the conduct of the illustrious Duke of Wellington, consummated and crowned by the glorious Victory of Waterloo,—while they fill our minds with emulation, and open the prospect of permanent prosperity, will not fail to awaken a profound and grateful sense of the goodness of Divine Providence, so conspicuously manifested in these great events.

In adverting to those matters of internal concern, which have been the object of assembling this Provincial Parliament, I have to direct your early attention to the renewal of the Militia Act, and such others as with it may be about to expire, and as it shall be expedient or expedient to continue.

I must also, in conclusion, recommend many discontented adventurers and mischievous agitators, from the Continent of Europe, having recently thrown themselves into the neighbouring States, strongly recommend the immediate revival of the "Act for establishing regulations respecting Aliens," with such modifications, as those circumstances may render it proper to adopt.

You have had the satisfaction of seeing that the Executive Government has completely redeemed its pledge to the Public, by calling in, and paying in cash, the Army Bills which were in circulation.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I shall order a statement of the Provincial Revenue of the Crown, and of the expenditure, of the last year, to be laid before you.

I have it in command from His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, to assure you, that His Royal Highness views with much pleasure, the additional proof of patriotism and public spirit, afforded by the late vote towards the completion of a proposed Canal from Montreal to La Chine. His Majesty's Government duly appreciating the many important objects with which that work is connected, are greatly interested in its early execution; and I await only further instruction upon the subject, to proceed to carry it into effect.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

I cannot omit to press upon your consideration, the importance of further promoting the internal communications of the Province, and of making effectual provision for the full accomplishment of an object of such obvious and general utility.

You will, I doubt not, justify the firm reliance which I place on your loyal attachment to the Person, and Government of your Sovereign, and your enlightened zeal for the Public Service; nor will you, I trust, disappoint my confident expectation, that this Session of the Provincial Parliament will be distinguished for accordant exertion, and efficient dispatch in conducting the public business.

You may be assured, that, on my part, I shall be most cordially disposed to second your laudable endeavors, by a ready co-operation in every measure which may tend to advance the interests and promote the welfare of this Province.

MONDAY, January 29.

This day, at two o'Clock the Legislative Council went up to the Castle with the following Address:

To His EXCELLENCY SIR GORDON DRUMMOND, Knight Commander of the most Honorable and Military Order of the Bath, Administrator in Chief of the Government in the Province of Upper and Lower Canada, Vice Admiral of the same, Lieutenant General Commanding His Majesty's Forces in the said Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and their Several Dependencies, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency.

We his Majesty's ou the and Loyal Subjects, the Legislative Council of Lower Canada, in Provincial Parliament assembled, beg leave to return to your Excellency our humble thanks for your Speech from the throne.

We are happy on this occasion of publickly expressing our gratitude to His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, for having committed to Your Excellency the Administration of this Government, and we are justly sensible of your earnest desire to discharge the duties of that trust, for the general advantage of the Province. The circumstance noticed by Your Excellency of your having been borne in its capital, cannot but give additional strength to your attachment to it; and our minds are irresistibly impelled to connect therewith the recollection of your having so recently fought and bled in defence of the Provinces over which you now preside.

We learn with deep affection, that it is not in Your Excellency's power to communicate any favorable account respecting the indisposition of our venerable Sovereign; at the same time we acknowledge, with Your Excellency, that, under this awful dispensation, it is no inconsiderable consolation to be assured, that His Majesty has no corporeal suffering, and that he continues in a state of undisturbed tranquility.

The total overthrow, and final exile of the usurper, whose infatiable ambition and remorseless thirst of blood, were permitted so long to afflict the world; the restoration once more of the Family of Bourbon to the throne of their ancestors; the general peace which has been given back to Europe, by the magnanimous exertion of the Allied Powers; and the high distinction obtained by the British forces, under the conduct of the illustrious Duke of Wellington, consummated and crowned by the glorious victory of Waterloo; while they fill our minds with exultation, and open the prospect of permanent prosperity, ought doubtless to awaken in us a profound and grateful sense of the goodness of Divine Providence, so conspicuously manifested in these great events.

Sensible of the benefit which has arisen from the Militia Act, and from sundry other temporary Acts of the Provincial Parliament, we shall not fail to direct our early attention to the renewal of such of them as it may be necessary or expedient to continue.

We acknowledge your Excellency's wisdom and foresight, in reminding us that many discontented adventurers and mischievous agitators, from the Continent of Europe, have recently thrown themselves into the neighbouring states, and in calling our attention to the Act for establishing regulations respecting Aliens, which we have every disposition to renew, with such modifications as circumstances may render it proper to adopt.

We have seen with great satisfaction, that the Executive Government has completely redeemed its pledge to the public, by calling in and paying in cash the Army Bills which were in circulation. A measure which exemplifies, in a most striking manner, the national good faith, and which will, we trust, facilitate similar arrangements hereafter, should the public interests ever require a renewal of them.

We beg leave to assure Your Excellency, that we are sensible of the importance of promoting the internal communications of the Province, and of making effectual provision for the full accomplishment of an object of such obvious and general utility;—and we trust that in all our proceedings, we shall justify the confidence you are pleased to place in our attachment to the person and government of our Sovereign, and our zeal for the public service; and that Your Excellency, will not be disappointed in your confident expectation that this session of the Provincial Parliament will be distinguished by accordant exertion, and efficient dispatch, in conducting the public business.

We receive with respect and gratitude, Your Excellency's assurances of a ready co-operation in every measure which may tend to advance the interests, and promote the welfare, of this Province.

To which His Excellency the Administrator in Chief was pleased to return the following Answer:

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council.

In offering you my warmest thanks for this address, I cannot but add the assurance, that I derive from it a confirmation of that confidence, which I before entertained, in your loyalty and public zeal.

Acting under the impulse of such sentiments as you have now expressed to me, your conduct cannot fail to be honorable to yourselves, and useful to your country.

Your Expressions towards myself, deserve my particular acknowledgements; and the best return I can make for them, is to repeat to you my readiness to second your endeavours for the public advantage.

ORIGINAL ANECDOTE.

An Irishman in a Bookstore in this city, took up a book the title of which he found was the "Olive Branch of Faults on both Sides;" noticing on the inside of the cover next to the title, a list of Errors, which had occurred in printing, he examined the cover on the other side of the book and finding no similar list, he observed. "Faith the title of this book is not true, for the fault here are all on one side."

From a London paper November 14.

Curious Fox Hunt.—On Saturday last the hounds belonging to the Newry Hunt, started a Fox at Tamary. After a short chase, Reynard disappeared having cunningly mounted a turf stack, on the top of which he lay down flat. Finding himself at last perceived by one of the hounds, he left his retreat closely pursued by the pack.—Being again hard pressed he ran up a stone ditch from which he sprang on the roof of an adjoining cabin and mounted up to the chimny top. From that elevated situation he looked all around him, as in carefully reconnoitering the coming enemy—A cunning old hound approached, and having gained the summit of the roof, had already seized the fox in imagination, when lo! Reynard dropped down the chimny. The dog looked wistfully down the dark opening, but dared not pursue the fugitive. Meantime, whilst the hound was eagerly inspecting the smoke orifice of the chimney, Reynard, half enrobed with soot, had fallen into the lap of an old woman, who surrounded by a number of children, was gravely smoaking her pipe, not at all expecting the entrance of this abrupt visitor "Emiadh deuil!" said the affrighted female, as she threw from her the black red quadruped. Reynard grinned, growled, and shewed his fangs; and when the sportsmen, who had secured the door, entered, they found him in possession of the kitchen, the old woman and the children having CURE FOR THE GOUT.

It is believed that those who are troubled with that exalted disorder, the Gout, may find a safe, if not an effectual remedy in the following simple recipe. Having lately recommended it to a friend who was severely afflicted with this painful disorder, the writer has the pleasure to state that after a few applications, he was so far recovered as to attend to his usual avocations; whereas before he tried this remedy, it was so painful as to deprive him of sleep for several nights.

From the London Magazine.

Dr. Stenhouse, of Edinburgh, has adopted a method for the cure of the gout no less important for its simplicity than the almost instantaneous success with which it is attended. The method is no more than holding the affected part over hot or boiling water. Gout he considers as proceeding from obstruction. By the action of steam the fibres are relaxed, or what is the same thing, the pressure of the common atmosphere is diminished and the cure of course follows. To confirm this theory by facts, the doctor relates his practice upon himself in two instances. He was first attacked in the hand; when the fit had acquired its last stage both in pain and swelling, he held his hand over a common tureen full of boiling water. In a few minutes the pain abated, and in 25 minutes entirely subsided; and, had it not been for the swelling, he could have used his hand as well as if nothing had happened. The second attack was in his foot, which he allowed to proceed for 14 hours. He then suspended it over a pail nearly full of boiling water and covered it with flannel. In the course of an hour he was free from pain and walked about the room as usual. The Doctor observes, that in case his stomach or bowels shall be attacked, he will immerse his whole body in a hogshead of steam. He has been in good health and free from gout ever since he tried these experiments though very near seventy. This vapour bath ought to be repeated several times, even after the pain is removed in order to effect a radical cure.

CURE FOR HYDROPHOBIA.

Scullcap Scutellaria Cistricullata.

DESCRIPTION.

This is a perennial Plant, and rises about two feet in height. Leaves are on a square stem, opposite each other, the same as Bonesset, and spear-shaped towards the end; flowers blue or rather of a violet colour.

History.—It grows about the borders of ponds, and on the banks of rivers—and flowers in August.

Medical virtues.—It is a good astringent, and has been found an infallible cure for the bite of a mad dog, either in man or beast. The following secret preparation I procured from a physician in New-Jersey,* who brought me the herb and which I now communicate for the general good of my fellow creatures, that in case of their meeting with such a misfortune, they may know how to apply a remedy that has never failed in one instance when applied according to the following.

Preparation.—Gather the leaves of the plant about the last of July; dry them carefully in the shade, and after being pulverized, sift the powder through a hair sieve, and put in bottles well worked for use. As soon as a person has been bit by a mad dog, he must take a gill, four times a day, every other day of the tea, made by pouring a point of boiling water on a table spoonful of the dry herb or powder. The day it is omitted he must take a tea spoonful of the flour of sulphur in the morning fasting & at bed time, in new milk & apply the pounded green herb to the wound every two hours, continuing the prescription for three weeks.

To cattle or horses, give four times the quantity prescribed for a man.

*Supposed to be the late Dr. Vandeveer.

REMARKS.

The subject of hydrophobia has lately attracted much publick attention, and various remedies have been proposed for that most terrible of human calamities. I re published from the Savannah Advertiser, the foregoing communication on the same subject, because, I venture to say, I hazard nothing in thus endeavoring to inspire the fullest confidence in the virtues of the plant here recommended; not as a remedy; after the disease has made its appearance; but as a sure preventative, if seasonably applied. I would not speak in such positive terms, had I not been an eye witness to its successful application, not in a single instance only, but in several; in no one of which did it fail. A great number of hogs and cows were bitten by the same dog, and a Mr. Lewis, (who then lived in Westchester, but is now dead, and who possessed this secret) being sent for, administered the plant to some of those which were bitten, and to some he did not; invariably the former all recovered, and as invariably the latter all died of hydrophobia. This I saw. But it has been since said to have failed in a single case and a similar one at the eastward; but the particulars are not sufficiently set forth to enable us to judge whether the plant was the real scullcap or not. What I mean to say is to caution against a too hasty condemnation from a single exception. Had a general conclusion been drawn in the same manner from a single failure, the world at this day would have been without the blessing of innoculation, and the still incomparably greater blessing of vaccination.

MR. EDITOR.

The acknowledged independence of your paper, induces me once more to obtrude myself upon your notice.—I could not but smile when I read, in your last Gazette, a communication under the signature of "Candidus."—I challenge this learned, candid and very generous writer to point out one single sentiment in my communication inconsistent with the character of a true and independent Briton.

He accuses me of having "much misrepresented" the object of the Petition presented to the Provincial Legislature by the Proprietors of the Steam-Boat—I did not assert, that "they sent a petition to Parliament, praying for a right to "navigate the waters between Prescott "and Queenston to the utter exclusion "of all other vessels." The idea, which I wished to hold up to the public, was, that they had petitioned for the right of navigating by steam, the waters between Prescott and Queenston to the exclusion of all other steam-boats, whether built by ourselves, or by the Americans.—Now, Mr. Editor, have they not really shown great discernment" in drawing "up such a memorial? But Candidus, wishes to make us believe, that "in this "request, they had reason on their side "for," says he, "if we take into consideration the novelty of the undertaking in this Province, the capital requisite "to carry the project into execution, the "spirit of adventurous enterprize manifested and above all the advantage which the public in general will receive from it "in the event of its success, we must "assuredly admit that they merit some "privileges." Does Candidus really think to impress us with the idea, that the novelty of the undertaking deserves moments consideration from the Legislature? With such tales, "Candidus" may amuse his grandmother, but trust me, Mr. Editor, they will do neither for the public nor myself.

"It is true, that the undertaking is new to this Province, but not to the Lower Province; for we all well know, that steam-boats were introduced there some years since.—Having had occasion to visit that province several times during the war I had an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the general opinion of the people on the propriety of a patent being granted to Mr. Molson, who built the first steam boat there and who certainly was entitled to that privilege, (if such a privilege could be granted, consistent with the liberty of the British subject) both from his well known public spirit, and from the very great advantages, which the government, particularly at that time derived from his steam boat. He, more than once, applied to the Legislature of this Province, for such a privilege, as the proprietors of the steam boat here have petitioned our legislature for, but did not succeed. The public sentiment was against it, and the legislature, however well they may have been affected towards him, durst not grant him what he prayed for.

Here, sir, a number of gentlemen have joined in an adventure with a capital for the purpose of building a steam-boat. 150 feet in length, 30 feet across the beam, and 12 feet in the hold. This Capital is divided into 100 shares, each valued at £100 making the whole amount £10,000 = Timber sufficient to build a 74 gun ship is got out of the woods; the keel is laid, and a great number of men, chiefly, I believe, Americans, under the superintendance of an American are employed in building. Now if several gentlemen and myself had also raised a Capital sufficient for building a steam-boat, and got timber out, and employed men to work at it, would it not be a singular piece of injustice, if after we had been at all this expence, to be obliged to discharge the men, and to desist from building, merely because some of our neighbours, through jealousy, had petitioned Parliament to grant them alone the privilege of navigating the waters to the exclusion of all other steam-boats? I suppose the services of these gentlemen who live at the head of the Lake, and Niagara, and who, during the war sacrificed their all, and liberally shed their blood to defend us, must now be forgotten.

We may rest assured, that few or none of the owners had the public good in view when this memorial was drawn out, for several of them actually did not know what they were petitioning Parliament for.

It would be not only impolitic but highly dangerous to the interests of society, if such a right was granted them: for if other countries, it is never granted to any person, but to the projector of a useful invention, and that under certain limitations. The Legislature of this Province has wisely set its face against all incorporations of the kind, and so far from granting exclusive privileges to, or incorporating an society, has, I believe, incorporated only one body of men; from the incorporation of whom, no danger to the liberty of the subject could be apprehended, and to whom no emolument could possibly arise.

It is not a "flower," but a rank weed, which must be rooted out of the soil that gave it birth. It is a mean, a narrow, and a sordid policy.—a policy which will enrich some, but empoverish many.

I can assure "Candidus," that I do not consider it "a matter of trifling importance, what "restriction are laid by the government of the "United States on the introduction of British "manufactures from their territories." But I consider that tyrannical exertion of authority, which in order to acquire riches without the assistance of commerce, lays a restraint on all branches of industry by subjecting them to corporations, as an evil which should be resisted by every freind of his country. For these societies destroy the very spirit of commerce, which is liberty.

The jealousy of trade between states is only a secret conspiracy to ruin each other, without any particular benefit to any one. Those who govern the people, exert the same skill in guarding against the industry of the nation, as in preserving themselves from the intrigues of the great. One individual alone, who is mean and destitute of every principle, is able to introduce a hundred restraints into the country. New chains are contrived with as much expedition as destructive weapons. Prohibitions in commerce, and extortions in the finance have given rise to smugglers and galley slaves, to customs and monopolies, to pirates and executioners. Centinels and obstacles are placed in every part of the sea and of the land. The traveller enjoys no repose, the merchant no property.*

There seem, however, to be two cases in which it will generally be advantageous to lay some burden upon foreign, for the encouragement of domestic industry.

The first is, when some particular sort of industry is necessary for the defence of the country.—The second case in which it will generally be advantageous to lay some burden upon foreign for the encouragement of domestic industry is, when some tax is imposed at home upon the produce of the latter. In this case, it seems reasonable that an equal tax should be imposed upon the like produce of the former. This would not give the monopoly of the home-market to domestic industry, nor turn towards a particular employment, a greater share of the stock and habit of the country, that what would naturally go to it. It would only hinder any part of what would naturally go to it from being turned away by the tax into a less natural direction, and would leave the competition between foreign and domestic industry, after the tax, as nearly as possible upon the same footing as before it.†

As there are two cases in which it will generally be advantageous to lay some burden upon foreign, for the encouragement of domestic industry; so there are two others in which it may sometimes be a matter of deliberation in the one how far it is proper to continue the free importation of certain goods, is, when some foreign nation restrains by high duties or prohibitions the importation of some of our manufactures into their country. Revenge in this naturally dictates retaliation, and that we should impose the like duties and prohibitions upon the importation of some or all of their manufactures into ours. Nations accordingly seldom fail to retaliate in this manner.

There may be good policy in retaliation of this kind, when there is a probability that they will procure the repeal of the high duties or prohibitions complained of. The recovery of a great foreign market will generally more than compensate the transitory inconvenience of paying dearer for a short time for some sorts of goods. When there is no probability that any such repeal can be procured, it seems a bad method of compensating the injury, done to certain classes of our people, to do another injury ourselves, not only to those classes, but to almost all the other classes of men. When our neighbors prohibit some manufacture of ours, we generally prohibit, not only the same, for that alone would seldom affect them considerably, but some other manufacture of theirs. This may no doubt give encouragement to some particular class of workmen among ourselves, and by excluding some of their rivals, may enable them to raise their price in the home-market. Those workmen, however, who suffered by our neighbour's prohibition, will not be benefited by ours. On the contrary, they and almost all the other classes of our citizens will thereby be obliged to pay dearer than before for certain goods. Every such law, therefore, imposes a real tax upon the whole country, not in favour of that particular class of workmen who were injured by our neighbour's prohibition, but of some other class.

The case in which it may sometimes be a matter of deliberation, how far, or in what manner, it is proper to restore the free importation of foreign goods, after it has been for some time interrupted, is, when particular manufactures, by means of high duties or prohibitions upon all foreign goods, which can come into competition, with them, have been so far extended as to employ a great multitude of hands. Humanity may in this case require that the freedom of trade should be restored only by slow gradations, and with a good deal of reserve and circumspection. Were those high duties and prohibitions taken away all at once, cheaper foreign goods of the same kind might be poured in so fast into the home-market, as to deprive all at once many of our people of their ordinary employment and perhaps of the ready means of subsistance as they formerly had. There might it is true, be some disorder occasioned by it; but it would not be so considerable as is generally imagined †—Thus far, Mr. Editor, I think I have met "Candidus" as fairly as could be expected, in a newspaper, with respect to the policy of trading with the Americans.

Did he ever think of the interests of our farmers before? They will surely sell grain six pence per bushel cheaper to him than to any other person.

In time of peril and distress, I believe, I have served my country as faithfully as perhaps "Candidus" or the proprietors of the steam-boat have. To them I owe nothing, and from them I have as little to expect, or even to fear.

"Candidus" may likely find, that I am not "as plobbed in the skin of the lion," but the Ghost of Cato the Censor, disturbing his midnight dreams with the mournful sound,—Carthago delenda est.

LONDON.

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 10.

We are rejoiced to state the happy and successful termination of the War in India.—Dispatches (brought to Portsmouth by the Sphynx sloop of war from Madras in sixteen weeks) were yesterday received at the India House, announcing this important event, which is the more gratifying from the circumstances of all the great objects of the war having been accomplished. The refractury Rajah of NAPAUL has been compelled to make every concession which was demanded by Lord MOIRA; and by this happy and glorious result, Great Britain is now at peace with all the world.—By the terms of the Treaty, the chain of forts and strong natural positions along the frontier of Napaul, bordering upon, and indeed intermixed with the Company's territory, have been conceded by the Treaty, and a recurrence of the aggressions and predatory warfare which has for years been carried on with impunity by the Napaulese, and which at length provoked hostilities, need not in future be apprehended. This event must prove the more grateful to the public, as the early operations were of a chequered fortune, which with the character of the enemy created apprehensions in regard to the result. It was in these apprehensions, and the doubts of the policy of the course pursued by the Governor-General in undertaking the war, the report of his Lordship's recall originated. The merits of a measure are however best estimated by the result, and therefore any dissatisfaction excited by the Napaulese war must subside in its complete success, while due justice will be rendered to the wisdom and foresight of the venerated Nobleman by whom so important a result to his country has been so speedily and gloriously atchieved.

QUEBEC, 2d Febraary, 1816.

(Signed) GORDON DRUMMOND.
Administrator in Chief.

THE Administrator in Chief has received the commands of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent to make known to the House of Assembly of this Province his pleasure on the subject of certain charges preferred by that House against the Chief Justice of the Province and the Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench for the District of Montreal.

With respect to such of those charges as relate to acts done by a former Governor of the Province which the Assembly assumed to be improper or illegal, imputed by a similar resumption to advice given by the Chief Justice to that Governor, His Royal Highness has deemed that no enquiry could be necessary; in as much as none could be instituted without the admission of the principle, that the Governor of a Province might, at his own discretion, divest himself of all responsibility on points of political Government.

With a view therefore to the general interests of the Province, His Royal Highness was pleased to refer for consideration to the Lords of the Privy Council, such only of the charges brought by the Assembly as related to the Rules of Practice established by the Judges in their respective Courts, those being points upon which if any impropriety had existed, the Judges themselves were solely responsible. By the annexed copy (which copy appeared in the Herald in Nov. last) of His Royal Highness's Order in Council dated the 29th June 1815, the Administrator in Chief conveys to the Assembly the result of this investigation, which has been conducted with that attention and solemnity which the importance of the subject required.

In making this communication to the Assembly it now becomes the duty of the Administrator in Chief, in obedience to the commands of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, to express the regret with which His Royal Highness has viewed their late proceedings against two persons who have so long and so ably filled the highest judicial offices in the Province; a circumstance the more to be deplored as tending to disparage in the eyes of the inconsiderate and ignorant their character and services, and thus to diminish the influence to which from their situation and their uniform propriety of conduct, they are justly entitled.

The above communication embracing such only of the charges preferred against the said Chief Justices as relate to the Rules of Practice, and as are grounded no advice assumed to have been given by the Chief Justice of the Province to the late Sir James Craig, the Administrator in Chief has been further commanded to signify to the Assembly that the other charges appeared to His Majesty's Government to be with, one exception, too inconsiderable to require investigation, and that, that (namely the one against the Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench for the District of Montreal, which states him to have refused Writ of Habeas Corpus,) was in common with all the charges which do not relate to the Rules of Practice, totally unsupported by any evidence whatever.

THE PUBLIC are respectfully reminded that a small periodical work is printed monthly at Quebec, called the Canadian Visitor, Subscriptions for which are received at this office. Two numbers have arrived, and the third is expected daily.

This work is designed to extend useful information and promote a taste for reading among all classes of the community, by recommending those plans and new improvements in Education which have proved extensively useful in Great Britain, and in many other parts of the civilized world.

England is celebrated for her Fleets and Armies, but she is more deservedly celebrated for her Moral, Literary and Religious institutions. The most astonishing effects have been produced by these different establishments. And it is hoped that all the British colonies will imitate the parent country in the establishment of SCHOOLS and BOOK Societies.

Since the horrors of war have been exchanged for the blessings of peace in this country, it is hoped that every Christian and true Patriot will now exert himself as much for the improvement of the country as he has done for its defence.

One half of the money which has been expended by the different nations of the earth for 20 years past in destroying one another, if it had been expended in promoting the arts of peace, the whole world might have been cultivated like a garden and Churches, Chapels and School-houses might have been erected for the accommodation of the whole human family.

It is singerely hoped that all will learn wisdom by the things which they have suffered.

TREATY

Between France and the Allied Powers, concluded at Paris, on the 20th November, 1815

In the name of the Most Holy and Undivided Trinity.

The Allied Powers, having, by their united efforts, and by the success of their arms, preserved France and Europe from the destruction with which they were menaced by the last attempts of Napoleon Bonaparte, and by the Revolutionary system reproduced in France in support of said attempts:

Participating with his Most Christian Majesty in a wish to consolidate, by the inviolable preservation of the royal authority, and the restoration of the constitutional charter to its full vigor, the order of things happily re-established in France, as well as to restore the relations of confidence and reciprocal good will between France and the surrounding nations, which the unhappy effects of the revolution, and the spirit of conquest have so long interrupted.

Persuaded that this last object can only be accomplished by an arrangement adequate to insure just indemnity for the past, and a solid guaranty for the future.

Have taken into consideration, in concert with his Majesty the King of France, the means of realizing this arrangement: and having acknowledged that the indemnity due to the powers can neither be wholly territorial or pecuniary without interfering in some degree with the essential interests of France, and that it would be most expedient to combine the objects proposed, in order to avoid these two inconveniences; their imperial and royal Majesties have adopted this basis for their actual negociations; and being mutually convinced of the necessity of preserving, for a determinate period, in the frontier provinces of France, a certain number of allied troops, they have agreed to combine the different dispositions founded upon this basis, in a definitive treaty.

To this end, and for this purpose, his Majesty the King of France and Navarre of the one part; and his Majesty the Emperor of Austria, King of Hugary and Bohemia, for himself and his allies, of the other part, have named their Plenipotentiaries, to discuss, conclude and sign the said definitive treaty, to-wit:

Art. I. The frontiers of France shall remain as they were in 1790, with the exception of the modification of both parties, which are indicated in the present article.

1. On the frontiers of the north, the line of demarcation shall remain such as the treaty of Paris had fixed it until it reaches opposite to Quicarain; from thence it shall follow the ancient limits of the Belgic provinces, of the former Bishoprick of Liege, and the Duchy of Bouillon, such as it existed in 1790; leaving the enclosed territories of Philippville and Marienbourg, together with the places by that name, and the whole Duchy of Bouillon, without the frontiers of France; from Villers-sur-Oval, on the confines of the Department of Ardennes and the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, as far as Pate, upon the causeway which leads from Thionville to Neves the line shall remain such as it was designated by the treaty of Paris. From Pate it will pass by Launsdorf, Wallerich, Schardoff, Nicdaweilling Peitweila, all which places, with their liberties (franchises) shall remain to France as far as Houte, and from thence shall follow the ancient boundaries of the country of Sarrebruck, leaving Sarre-Louis and the course of the Sarre, with the places situated to the right of the line above designated, and their liberties without the limits of France. From the boundaries of Sarrebruck the line of demarcation shall be the same which now separates from Germany the Departments of the Moselle and the Lower Rhine, as far as Lauter, which shall hereafter be the frontiers until where it empties into the Rhine. The whole of the territory on the left bank of the Lauter, including Landau, shall compose part of Germany; nevertheless the town of Weissembourg, through which that river flows, shall remain entire to France, with a small portion of territory on the left bank, not to exceed one thousand toises, and which shall be more particularly determined by the commissioners who are to run the boundary line.

2. From the mouth of the Lauter, along the departments of the Lower and Upper Rhine, from Doubs and Jura as far as the canton du Vaud, the frontiers shall remain as they were fixed by the treaty of Paris. The bed or course of the Rhine shall form the demarcation between France and the States of Germany; but the right to the islands therein, such as the same shall hereafter be decided upon, on a new survey of the course of the said river, shall remain immutable, whatever changes the course of said river may undergo in the lapse of time. Commissioners shall be appointed on both sides by the high contracting parties within the term of three months, for the purpose of proceeding to the said survey. The one half of the bridge between Strasbourg and Kell shall belong to France, and the other half to the Grand Duchy of Baden.

3. To establish a direct communication between the canton of Geneva and Switzerland, that part of the country of Gex, bounded to the East by Lake Leman, to the south by the territory of the canton of Geneva, to the north by the canton of Vaux, and the west by the course of the Versoix, and by a line which includes the districts of Collex Buzzy and Meyrin, leaving the district of Ferney to France, shall be ceded to the Helvetic confederacy, in order to be re-united to the canton of Geneva. The line of French Custom Houses, shall be placed to the West of Jura, so as to exclude the whole country of Gex without the line.

4. From the frontiers of the canton of Geneva as far as the Mediterranean the line of demarcation shall be that which in 1790 separated France from Savoy and the county of Nice. The relations which the Treaty of Paris of 1814 had re-established between France and the principality of Monaco shall cease for ever: and the same relations shall continue between that principality and his Majesty the King of Sardinia.

5. All the territories and districts included within the limits of the French territory, such as they have been determined by the present article, shall remain united to France.

6. The high contracting parties, within three months after the signing of the present treaty shall appoint commissioners for the purpose of regulating whatever may have relation to the boundaries of countries on either side; and on the completion of their labors, maps shall be drawn, and boundary marks placed, to shew the respective limits.

Art. II. The places and districts which, according to the preceding article, shall no longer compose a part of the French territory, shall remain at the disposition of the allied powers, under the terms fixed by the 9th article of the Military convention annexed to the present treaty; and his Majesty the King of France, for himself, his heirs and successors, perpetually renounces the rights of sovereignty and property which he hath hitherto exercised over the aforesaid places and districts.

Art. III. The fortification of Hunningen having been constantly an object of uneasiness to the town of Basle, the high contracting parties, in order to give to the Helvetic confederation a new proof of their good will and solicitude, have agreed between each other to demolish the fortifications of Hunningen: and the French government, from the same motives, stimulates, that they shall never be re-built, and not replaced by other fortifications at a distance less than three leagues from the town of Basle. The neutrality of Switzerland shall be extended to the territory which is to the north of a line to be drawn from Ugine, including that city, to the south of the lake of Annecy, by Faverge, as far as Locherraine and from thence to the Lake of Brouget and the Rhone, in the same manner that it was extended to the provinces of Chablais and Faucigu, by the 92d article of the final act of the Congress of Vienna.

Art. IV. The pecuniary indemnity to be furnished by France to the Allied Powers is fixed at the sum of seven hundred millions of francs. The mode, terms, and guarantee of the payment of said sum, shall be regulated by a particular convention, which shall have the same force and validity as if it were formerly inserted in the present treaty.

Art. V. The state of disquiet and fermentation to which France, after so many violent shocks, and more especially since the last catastrophe, notwithstanding the paternal intentions of the King, and the advantages offered by the constitutional charter to all classes of her subjects must necessarily be subjected, requiring for the security of the neighboring states, measures of precaution and temporary guarantees, the occupation, for a certain time of the military positions along the frontiers of France, by a corps of the allied troops, has been judged indispensable; under the express reservation that such occupancy shall in no wise tend to prejudice, the sovereignty of his most Christian Majesty, nor the state of possession, such as it is recognized and confirmed by the present treaty. The number of these troops shall not exceed 150,000 men. The commander in chief of this army to be appointed by the allied powers. The corps of the army shall occupy the places of Conde, Valenciennes, Bonchain, Cambray, Le Quesnoy, Maubeurg, Landrecy, Avronet, Rocroy, Give and Charlemont, Mezieres, Sedan, Montmedi, Thionville, Longwy, Bitche, and the tete du pont of Fort Louis, France having to furnish subsistence for the army destined to this service, every thing that has relation thereto will be regulated by a particular convention. This convention, which shall be of the same force and validity as if it were verbally inserted in the present Treaty, will, in like manner, regulate the relations of the army of occupation with the civil and military authorities of the country. The maximum of the duration of such military occupancy, is fixed at five years. It may terminate before that time if at the expiration of three years the Allied Sovereigns, in concert with his Majesty the King of France, after having maturely examined the situation, the reciprocal interests and the progress which the re-establishment of civil order shall have made in France, shall unite in acknowledging that the motives which led them to the adoption of these measures have ceased to exist. But whatever may be the result of their deliberations, all the places and positions occupied by the Allied troops, shall, at the expiration of the term of five years, be evacuated without any further delay, and restored to His Most Christian Majesty, his heirs and successors.

Art. VI. The foreign troops, exclusive of those which shall compose a part of the army of occupation, shall evacuate the French territory, within the period fixed by the 9th Art. of the Military convention annexed to the present treaty.

Art. VII. In all countries where the Sovereignty, is transferred, either by virtue of the present treaty, or of arrangements that are to be made in consequence thereof, the inhabitants, natives as well as strangers, of what condition and nation soever they may be, shall be allowed the space of six years, to be computed from the exchange of the ratifications hereof, to dispose of their property, if they see fit, and remove to such country as they may choose.

Art. VIII. All the dispositions of the treaty of Paris of the 30th of May, 1814 relative to countries ceded to his treaty, shall equally apply to the different territories and districts ceded by this treaty.

Art. IX. The high contracting parties having taken into consideration the different claims arising from the non-execution of the 19th article of the treaty of May 30, 1814, as well as the additional articles to said treaty, signed between Great Britain and France; desiring to render more efficacious the dispositions contained in the said articles, and having for that purpose determined by two separate conventions the measures to be executed by both powers for the complete execution of the aforementioned articles, the two aforementioned conventions, such as annexed to the present treaty, shall have the same force and validity as if the same were herein inserted verbatim.

Art. X. All prisoners made during hostilities, as well as all hostages that have been given or detained, shall be restored with the shortest possible delay, together with all prisoners made anterior to the treaty of the 30th of May, 1814, and which have not yet been restored.

Art. XI. The treaty of Paris of the 30th of May, 1814, and the last act of the Congress of Vienna of the 9th of June, 1815, are confirmed, and shall be maintained in all their parts, which have not been modified by the provisions of the present treaty.

Art. XII. The present Treaty, with the conventions hereunto annexed, shall be ratified in a single act, and the ratifications thereof exchanged within two months, or sooner if possible.

In faith whereof, the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same and hereunto affixed the seal of their arms.

ADDITIONAL ARTICLE.

The high contracting powers, sincerely desirous of carrying into effect the measures which were the subject of their deliberations in the Congress of Vienna, relative to the complete and universal abolition in the traffic of the Negroes of Africa; and having already in their several states interdicted their colonies and subjects from any part whatever therein, engage anew to unite their efforts in order to ensure the final success of the principles which they have proclaimed in the declaration of the 4th February, 1815, and to concert without loss of time, through their ministers at London and Paris, the most efficacious measures to procure the complete and definitive abolition of a commerce as odious as it is highly reprobated by the laws of religion and of nature. The present additional article shall have the same force and validity as if it were inserted verbatim in the present treaty, and shall be comprised in the ratification thereof.

In faith whereof, the respective plenipotentiaries have signed these presents, and have hereunto affixed the seals of their arms.

SPEECH OF THE MINISTER,

On presenting the Definitive Treaty of Peace, to the Chamber of Deputies.

After submitting the Treaty, His Excellency, the Duke Richelieu arose, and pronounced the following

SPEECH.

"Such are the stipulations, to which the ministers of his majesty have conceived they could no longer refuse their signatures—The engagements, which France has now contracted, are the inevitable result of extraordinary circumstances—through the fatality of events—in which she finds herself placed—In a different position, and at another time, we should only have submitted one of these ratifications, the general uniformity of the series of which composes the historical body of the public law of nations, we should have felt it a duty to discuss every article, and asked to have explained our motives—It is no however, thus with the deed we have now to present—it assimilates—it necessarily must assimilate to the situation in which each party finds itself respectively placed—Passing considerations, and interests, resulting from a state of things, unheard of in history—unique in their nature—and which of course, will be so in their consequences.

"After five and twenty years of troubles and disorganizing exertions—which in a course of uninterrupted invasion—of conquests and destructions, incessantly renewed—and which have incessantly compromised the political existence—and menaced the social order of almost every state—the restoration of the legitimate monarchy of France was a prelude to the peace of the world—Our independence—our foreign consideration—our actual resources had undergone no important alteration—The sovereigns of Europe congratulated each other on the happy reconciliation brought about between France and other powers—This conformity of principles—this uniformity of maxims and intentions, became by a fortunate co-operation, the most encouraging pledge, of the tranquility and prosperity of all—The work of public felicity, was daily progressing to its completion, when suddenly an alarming crisis occured to arrest and suspend its consummation—Almost an entire army—detached from its legitimate sovereign, who alone had the right to dispose of it, separated by the perfidy of some commanders, and a fatality without example—from the bosom of the nation, whence it emanated—an army, whose courage had been devoted to impose an usurper on France, and an oppressor on Europe—had provoked the struggle, which has involved us and itself, in those subsequent calamities & disasters—The king as a sovereign and France as a state, have not ceased to compose themselves to this culpable impulse—But by an unexampled combination, whilst the military faction, disregarded the voice of the one, and betrayed the sentiments of the other, both were doomed to alternate efforts of attacks and resistance, as well as to the dazzling successes, and signal reverses which have characterised this short and memorable campaign.

"Such are the events which have, in a manner, withdrawn the destiny of the state from the intentions of its government, it has been obliged to accomodate itself, not only to the pretensions, but also to the alarms, that this fatal rebellion has inspired Europe—and not being able to evade or balance the incontestible superiority—great part temporary, however, it only recognizes the necessary sacrifices to arrive at that period of hope, at which France unanimously aspires, and which will admit of enjoying, in peace and security, her permanent advantages.

"Far be it from us, gentlemen, the indiscreet thought to generate, at the present moment, or to anticipate for the future any germs of an impolitic and dangerous discontent—In this assembly, where are seated the select of the French people—chosen by the free and enlightened suffrages of their fellow citizens, we see congregated, men who by the importance of their situation, and the various ties of their political existence will feel more immediately alive to the public calamities—Who also, by their intelligence, are more able to distinguish the causes, and their remedies—It is through this assembly, I repeat, it is proper France should understand these grievous truths, which could not have been revealed on a more solemn occasion.

"For more than half a century France indulged a desire, legitimate in its principles and object, of seeing the reform of abuses which have been, in succession, introduced in the system of its interior policy—that reform which prudent withes was beginning to obtain from a paternal and wise government, and which in this respect, proceeded the enlightened opinion of the public.—This reform, although facile and easy to the government, was encreased difficult in monarchies of choice, where a desire of advantage is not always tempered by discretion—where rash experiments but too frequently anticipates the gradual and confident measures of experience.—Hence the impediments and unhappy mistrust, which must have produced—and did in reality produce—resistance—destructive retardment—weakness—the ruin of power—oblivion of religion—and dissolution of societies—These have, in France, been the immediate consequences of that presumptuous enterprize—a universal alarm was disseminated abroad, which, as was to have been expected, provoked wars without intermission, and without end.

"France, a mark for all nations, displayed an extraordinary energy—All States had submitted by her efforts—She extended in every direction, her conquering arms—But we are compelled to acknowledge where ever she vanquished, she excited terror—provoked retaliation—and awakened a resentment which time, accompanied with great moderation, and an unvarying prudence could alone allay.

"You were witnesses to the explosion of these angry sentiments—when, on the re-appearance of the man, so fatal to France—believing he had attained indestructable power, by means of the terror, which revolutionary principles, united to the courage of the French armies, had universally inspired—when, in fine, Europe, at this terrible exhibition, conceived itself in danger of subjugation from soldiers who appeared animated with the same prepossessions and their former enthusiasm—a common instinct of preservation, instantaneously concentrated to the same object, all the hatred, and all the interest, of the affrighted nations—All ranks, cabinets forgot their rivalries—all the products of the agriculture and commerce—every description of property, was offered in sacrifice—all ages of each sex—and more than a million of combatants, were precipitated on our frontiers.

"Without doubt, such a preparation of force, was not necessary to subdue a party, which, although conceived abroad, was far from being seconded in France by the national will, and the approbation of public opinion—It is, unhappily, permitted us to assert, to foreign nations, that they were in an error, in relation to the real extent of the force,

tion exploded, the French peo nations, that they were in an error, ation to the real extent of the force, with which they had to contend; and that at the very moment, that the ſtate of the faction exploded, the French people were united in their ſentiments to their legitimate ſovereign—Theſe diſpoſitions were paraliſed by the perverſity of thoſe that betrayed him; and a generous people, from every point of the monarchy, were preparing the overthrow of uſurped power—Not being able to commence their operations before the movements of the allied army; nor yet to act with the ſame promptitude and efficacy, they have conſidered the fall of the tyrant, as the ſole effect of their victory; and France, by this combination of untoward circumſtances, ſees herſelf obliged to anſwer for all the ſacrifices, loſſes, and injuries, they underwent; becauſe merely they were the reſult of an exaggerated alarm—The extreme rigour of this principle, might have, perhaps, been moderated in its application, by the equity and magnanimity of the ſovereigns; but conſiderations exiſt, which may have biaſſed their determination; and which, it is indiſpenſibly neceſſary, to make known—Sovereigns influence the deſtiny of their people, by the exerciſe of power; and the people in their turn, influence the councils of ſovereigns, by the powerful impulſe of public opinion—Whenever this opinion of a nation is fortified by the concurrence of many others, it acquires greater force, and becomes by the nature of events one of the efficacious cauſes of their triumphs—If at any time the inflation of ſucceſs, ſhall add to the remembrance of violent meaſures, animated alarms, long borne and reiterated crys, ſovereigns are then, in a manner borne along involuntarily, to alternatives, repugnant to their individual feelings; and their deciſions, will perhaps, inevitably, partake of thoſe paſſions, which their perſonal generoſity diſclaims.

"I conceive it a duty, gentlemen, to preface, with ſuch obſervations, the communication of two ſubſidiary Conventions which remains to be preſented—The expenſes impoſed on us, are enormous, and the burthen evinced, it ſurely calculated to afflict us—but ſhall I entreat, gentlemen, upon the firſt impreſſion—the unhappy cataſtrophe of which France is now the victim—muſt neceſſarily make upon outraged and irritated Europe—and yet more the facility with which the ſedicious accompliſhed the ſubverſion of their own country—Reflect again, that the times, in which we have the miſery to live, ſo nearly ſucceeds a fatal epoch—where, for 25 years, the proper reſpect to alliances—conditions of peace—fidelity to promiſes—good faith—loyalty—theſe baſes, formerly ſo reverend, of the ſecurity of ſtates—have been ſhook to their foundations—Take notice, that the habitual, and ſo to ſpeak, ſyſtematic violence of all moral political rules, is in a manner inherent in the principle of revolution—a principle, frightful and deſtructive—which unhappily has been recently in France ſo oſtentatiouſly profeſſed—Obſerve, finally, that ſuch often repeated infractions of every thing eſteemed the moſt ſacred among men, has cauſed in turn to be the wretcheſneſs of every people—and that the greateſt of our evils, is notwithſtanding our reſearch, and the reflexion we are thence willing to extract, to be ſtill an object of fear and diſtruſt to thoſe very nations, upon whom, we ourſelves have exerciſed thoſe rights, which fortune has now given them the means of exerciſing upon us, in their turn.

"Compelled to acquieſce in the evils which Providence has ſent us, let us turn our aſpects to that King, Heaven has reſtored to us—We participate in his ſorrows—let us likewiſe imitate his noble and affecting reſignation—Perſonally, he is the common object of the confidence and veneration of Kings and People—this magnanimous conſtancy has acquired for us the friendſhip of five reigns—this friendſhip, if it ſhall be aided on our part, by prudence, moderation, and our fidelity in fulfilling contracted engagements, will conquer for us a ſolid confidence and affection of all nations—We have had enough of ambition—we have obtained enough of that glory acquired by the courage of armies, and the bloody trophies of victory—It remains for us to acquire a better glory—Let us compel the nations, notwithſtanding the injury the uſurper has done them, to regret thoſe they do us—Let us force them to have confidence in us—to know us thoroughly—and frankly to be reconciled to us, forever.

"I am about to commence the reading, gentlemen, of two ſubſidiary Conventions, one of which regulates the diſcharge of the annual ſums, to complete the payment of the ſtipulated indemnity, by the fourth article of the main treaty.—The other determines the mode and form of executing the fifth article, relative to the temporary maintenance of a foreign army on our frontier—After long and perſevering diſcuſſions, in which ſtill more exorbitant demands were made, and reiterated, thoſe, which are now communicated, were preſented us as an ultimatum—the moſt urgent and imperious conſiderations, made it our duty to ſubſcribe.—Theſe demands are undoubtedly the moſt onerous—the moſt hard, and moſt painful part of the ſtipulations, we have had to diſcuſs—But, if, after the example of what you heard from the king, at the opening of your ſeſſion—with that tone of frankneſs and benevolence, which are the moſt prominent features of his noble character—expreſſing the profound grief that penetrated his heart—If, I repeat, it were permitted us to render an account before you, and in the face of Europe, of the ſecret emotions we experienced, I ſhould ſay, we arrived at a period of negociation, the moſt thorny, that could ever have called into exertion, the zeal and devotion of the ſervants of a moſt unhappy king—After exhauſting all the means of diſcuſſion, that reaſon & that forebearing policy could ſuggeſt—which like a good & bad fortune, ought to be the conſtant rule of the conduct of cabinets—ſeeing, on one part, in the diſpoſition of the miniſters of the powers a determination, invariably fixed—ſeeing on the other part that the actual criſis gave activity to the principles of oppreſſion throughout the extent of France—to a principle of oppreſſion impoveriſhment and irritation—with a ſequel of devaſtations, daily augmenting, and acquiring renewed forces, we conceived, that, allowing the indefinite prolongation of ſuch a criſis, would be to put to hazard the very exiſtence of France, if not the fate of thoſe who had impoſed on us ſo great ſacrifices and perhaps the deſtiny of ſocial order in Europe—ſacrificing our repugnance at the apprehenſion of ſo many dangers, in the name of the king, in the name of the Country, we have accepted the conditions now preſented you.

Bonaparte's arrival at St. Helena.

Captain Denman, of the Redpole, arrived at the Admiralty yeſterday morning, with diſpatches from Sir George Cockburn dated the 22d October, the day the left St. Helena. Sir G. Cockburn and his ſquadron arrived off that iſland on the 13th of the ſame month, after a boiſterous paſſage, all ſafe and well. Bonaparte, we underſtand, was to inhabit the houſe on the top of the hill called Long Wood, the uſual reſidence of the Lieut. Governor, which is the moſt pleaſant ſituation on the whole iſland, and what is ſtill better, the moſt central and ſafe, it being utterly impoſſible, with common care, that any perſon can either approach it or depart from it without being ſeen. We have not heard how the General likes his new abode, but he made himſelf exceedingly comfortable while on board ſhip, and no more drowning on the part of Madame Bertrand. In fact they appear to be quiet ſatisfied to having eſcaped with life, which it ſeems they ſo highly prize, and which they will probably conſider as ſtill more dear, when they ſhall hear the fate of Ney and Murat.

YORK GAZETTE, MARCH 6, 1816.

DIED,

At Elizabeth Town, on the 15th ult. much lamented by all who knew him, ROBERT M'LEAN, Eſqr. Deputy-Surveyor, in the 48th year of his age. The following is an extract from the funeral ſermon, delivered at Brockville, occaſioned by his death, by the Rev. Mr. Smart,——Any eulogium that could be delivered by me, would fall far ſhort of the real worth of the character of the deceaſed. I know of no man that is more uſeful in ſociety, in this part of the country, than was Robert M'Lean. Not only ready at all times to promote objects of public utility, but was frequently the firſt to propoſe them. To his pious concern and exertions muſt be ascribed the public benefit of the regular worſhip and ordinances of God, in this place. How well he was calculated, from his enlarged underſtanding to move in a public ſphere of uſefulneſs, you will all bear an honourable teſtimony.—He was indeed the favourite child of genius. His talents were of the highest order; for the God of nature had endued him with a ſoul capable of the moſt vigorous exertions, and the moſt exalted degrees of improvement. In his ſcientific profeſſion he was juſtly conſidered pre-eminent in ſkill. His extraordinary genius, his enlarged and correct knowledge of the mathematics, of the planetary ſyſtem, and of the geography of the globe, enabled him to purſue that method of ſurveying that is conſidered the moſt accurate. To a clear and diſcriminating judgment, he poſſeſſed the rare quality of an intenſe and unwearied application of mind. It was this, that like the philoſopher's ſtone which is ſaid to turn every thing into gold, enabled him to ſurmount every difficulty, and turn every thing into truth and certainty,—for the rare union of genius and application enabled him to demonſtrate what to more than common minds remained in unexplicable difficulty. This extraordinary man had to labour, like many other great and ſelf-taught geniuſes, under peculiar diſadvantages, from the humble ſphere in which he moved, and from the natural diffidence and modeſty of his diſpoſition. For ſome time however, before his death, he was riſing to eminence and public notice. Had he lived a few years more, he would have ſecured an ample and independent fortune, for himſelf and family. But death has tipped by his cold blaſt this rare flower of genius, while the buds were opening to our view! yes, death has called to the dreary manſions of the tomb, one of the brighteſt ornaments of ſcience, and one of the moſt uſeful members of our ſociety! Seldom does death gain ſo ſplendid a triumph as he has atchieved in the death of our lamented freind. Montreal Gazette.

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

"When I met you in Provincial Parliament, it was in the hope that your unanimous efforts would be applied to those objects of Public advantage which I had particularly recommended. The House of Assembly is yet occupied in the discussion of a Subject upon which the decision of His ROYAL HIGHNESS The PRINCE REGENT, in behalf and in the name of His Majesty, had already been communicated; and although I much regret that any consideration could have induced the House to lose sight of the respect due to the decision of His Royal Highness, it is my Duty to announce to you my determination to Prorogue the Present Parliament, and to have recourse to the Sentiments of the People, by an Immediate Dissolution.

FROM THE NEW YORK COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER.

NEW-YORK, JANUARY 30th, 1816.

Highly important documents.—Agreeably to the suggestions in our last, we are now enabled to lay before our readers the "Message from the President of the United States; transmitting, (pursuant to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 24th instant) information respecting a demand made by the Spanish government, for a surrender of a part of the State of Louisiana." The message and the accompanying documents were read in the House, on the 26th inst. and referred to a Committee on Foreign Relations.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

To the House of Representatives of the United States.

In compliance with the resolution of the 24th. I transmit two letters from the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of Spain, to the Secretary of State, with his answer.

JAMES MADISON.

January 28th, 1816

Translation of a letter from the Minister of Spain to the Secretary of State, dated Washington, December 20, 1815.

SIR,—The diplomatic relations between the king my master, and the United States being happily restored, and both governments being disposed, mutually to strengthen the ties of the most pure and perfect freindship, it is my duty to inform the President of whatever may contribute to so desirable an object; and remove the obstacles which may prevent it. On the important points on which this note must turn, I have written to you under other circumstances less favorable than the present. I will now confine myself to a plain and simple explanation of them.

The first of these points is, that the direct and official relations betwern Spain and the United States, having been broken off, since the year 1813, the affairs of both nations, as well as their respective frontiers should now be placed in the same state and situation in which they were at that period, and that in conformity to this principle, the part of West Florida, which the United States took possession of during the glorious insurrection of Spain, and have retained untill this day, should be restored to his catholic majesty.—This just and conciliatory measure, at the same time that it will convince the king my master, of the purity and sincerity of the sentiments of the American government, and of their disposition to arrange and terminate amicably the several points of negociation, will not in the least, impair the right which it may believe it has to the whole, or a part of the territory occupied, since it will remain subject, exactly as it was before its occupation, to a frank and friendly discussion between the two governments.

The second point, is as simple and obvious as the first, and I will treat of it with that confidence with which I ought to be inspired by the indisputable justice of my importunity, the justification of the American government, and the importance of the affair.

It is known to you, and is universally public and notorious that a factious band of insurgents and incendiaries, continue with impunity, in the Province of Louisiana, and especially in New Orleans and Natchetoches the uninterrupted system of raising and arming troops, to light the flame of revolution in the kingdom of New Spain and to rob the pacific inhabitants of the dominions of the king my master. The invasion of the internal provinces, the horrible assassinations committed in San Antonia de Bexar, and the names of the perfidious perpetrators of such unheard of crimes, have acquired the publicity, which greats crimes always will acquire. All Louisiana has witnessed these armaments, the public enlistments (les enganche publicos;) their importation of arms; the junction of the insurgents and their hostile and warlike march from the territory of this republic against the possessions of a friendly and neighbouring power; neither threats, nor the laws, nor the indignation of well disposed citizens, nor even the proclamation of the President of the first of September last, intended to restrain these highway robberies have been sufficient to stop their nefarious plan. On the contrary, they prosecute them with the greatest ardour and rancour, more and more exasperated at seeing the glorious triumphs of the Spanish nation, the adhesion of his subjects to an adored monarch and the approaching re-establishment of the relations between our respective nations. It is known to me, that they are now enlisting in New Orleans, men for other expeditions, both by land and water, to invade against the dominions of his catholic majesty under the directions of ringleaders Jose Myarez de Toledo, and Jose Manuel de Herera, who has just arrived at that city, with the appointment (as he says) of minister to the United States from the self styled Mexican congress, who has delivered to Toledo fifteen hundred commissions in blank, from that body of insurgents, that he may confer them on a like number of officers which he is recruiting in the territory of the Union. I omit mentioning to you other innumerable acts of this kind, which prove the publicity of these armaments, and the impunity with which they continue. I will confine myself to stating to you, that the most common practice of nations, and the authority of the best writers on public law, would give a right to the king my master, to require of this government to deliver up these traitors, as incendiaries, enemies of all social order, and disturbers of the peace of his subjects, but as the object of my sovereign is not to avenge himself of this banditti, but to shield his subjects against their barbarity, I confine myself to asking of you to obtain of the President, orders for the prosecution of the principal persons concerned in this sedition, that is to say, Jose Alvarez de Toledo, Anaya Ortez, the self-styled minister, Manuel de Herera, Doctors Robinson, Humbert, majors Perr and Pretre and their followers, that they may be punished with all the rigour, which the laws prescribe in cases of this kind. That the troops which they have raised, may be disarmed, and dispersed, and that the necessary measures be taken to prevent, in future, these evil spirits from having an opportunity of pursuing their designs, and attempting to compromise the good intelligence which subsists between our respective governments.

The president cannot but have seen with sensibility as well the total want of effect of his proclamation, of the lenient measures which he had adopted against these criminals who boast of recognizing no law, subordination or moral principle as the protection and support which they have received and do receive from the authorities at New Orleans, contrary to his express orders. His Excellency, as he is encharged by this republic with watching over its security, and the observance of its treaties and laws, cannot but consider himself authorized to restrain the projects and hostile measures of a set of adventurers, who make upon war against a freindly power from the territory of this confederation, compromising its tranquility and high character, by availing himself of the means the constitution, the laws, and his prudence offer to him for obliging these persons to abandon their designs, and to manifest to his Catholic Majesty the just indignation with which the United States view the hostile plans, and the sedition of that band of incendiaries. I am certain that it cannot be concealed from the distinguished talents of the President and yourself, that the points on which I treat, is not one under the civil (or municipal) law, in which case my sovereign must have recourse to the ordinary tribunals; but that it is a manifest and flagrant violatio of the most sacred laws, which bind togeth... nations mutually,—perpetrated by the citizens, or residents of the Union, of which the king, my master gives information with positive and notorious proofs to the government under whose jurisdiction it has been executed, that they may give him competent satisfaction, with a knowledge of the act, by causing the delinquents to be banished as guilty of high treason against both governments.

The third and last point is reduced to this; that the President will be pleased to give the necessary orders to the collectors of the customsnot to admit into the ports of the U. S. vessels under the insurrectionary flag of Carthagena, of the Mexican congress, of Buenos Ayres, or of the other places which have revolted against the authority of the king, my master, nor those coming from them. That they should not permit them to land, or to sell in this country, the shameful proceeds of their piracy, or atrocities, and much less to equip themselves in these ports, as they do, for the purpose of going to sea to destroy & to plunder the vessels which they may meet with under the Spanish flag. This tolerance subversive of the most solemn stipulations in the treaties between Spain and the U. States and diametrically opposed to the general principles of public security and good faith, and to the laws of nations, produces the most melancholy effects on the interest and the property of the subjects of his catholic majesty. Certain it is, that neither Carthagena, nor any other place in the Spanish dominions in this hemisphere, which has revolted, can be in communication with any power freindly to Spain, since neither on his part, nor on that of any other government, has their independence been acknowledged; and it is, consequently, an offence against the dignity of the Spanish monarchy, and against the sovereignty of the king, my master, to admit vessels from such places, manned and commanded by ... argents, and armed in the dominions of this confederation, particularly as they are all pirates, who do not respect any flag, are justly considered the disgrace of the sea, and are execrated by all nations.

The three preceding points are of such established equity and justice, that it would be offensive to the delay, under any pretext, to determine on them, in the manner I have proposed, and which I have an express order to request, (solicitar,) in the name of the king, my master. The prompt interposition of the President, that his Majesty may be gratified, would be a new testimony of his friendly dispositions towards Spain, and evident proof that he is determined to put an end to the incalculable extortions & injuries which Spain has suffered, for the space of seven years, from the gang of adventurers who have assailed her from the bosom of this republic; a means of affixing the frank and sincere system of good neighborhood which so much interests both States; and finally a sure preliminary to the removal of all the difficulties which may present themselves in the negociations which ought to terminate all the pending discussions between the two governments, and to fix for ever between them a perpetual and solid friendship.

If, as I flatter myself, the president gives all the attention which is due to affairs of such transcendant importance, and yields to my solicitations, I can assure his excellency and yourself, that there will be nothing which the king, my master, will not be disposed to do, to satisfy this republic, which may be compatible with his dignity and with the interests of his subjects.

I renew to you the assurances of my particular respect, and of my constant desire to please you, and pray God to preserve your life many years.

(Signed) LUIS DE ONIS

Washington, Dec. 30th, 1815.

Hon James Monroe, &c. &c.

Translation which accompanied a Note of 2d January, 1816, from the Chevalier de Onis, to the Secretary of State.

SIR—Since the last note I had the honour to address you, under date of the 30th Dec. I have received positive information that the expedition which the traitor Toledo was preparing at New Orleans, against the dominions of the king, my master, has been suspended until the arrival at that city of two bodies of troops, 1000 men from Kentucky, and 300 from Tennessee, commanded by two American citizens, that were to be united in twenty-four days to the army of the insurgents. I abstain, Sir, from offering to you any observations on a subject of such high importance, and so well established. I am well persuaded that his excellency the president will easily perceive that if the States of Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana, and Georgia, continue as they do, allowing their citizens to commit hostilities against a friendly power, notwithstanding the orders he has issued for dispersing and disarming the gang of desperadoes headed by Toledo, Humbert, Anaya, Bernardo Stuteiter, Ifiri, Doctor Robinson, Majors Eurie and Preire, and their followers, the king, my master, will have reason to suspect that if those meetings are not authorised by the government, they are at least tolerated. All the assurances I may give to my sovereign of the friendly dispositions of his excellency the president, will not suffice, when compared with the evident proofs I had the honour to communicate to you in this and my former note; particularly when his majesty is well convinced of the resources and authority of the federal government, and the promptitude with which their orders are strictly observed in the whole Union. I do not entertain any apprehension of the result of the expedition of these incendiaries. The European wars being terminated, his majesty will be able to direct all his attention, and his powerful armies, to stifle at once the growth of that insurrection; but the philanthropic heart of my sovereign, the humanity by which he is distinguished, and which constitutes the character of the Spanish nation, induce him to wish to re-establish order among the seduced, rather by mildness than by the force of arms, which cannot be effected without the effusion of the blood of his beloved subjects. This object cannot fail to be obtained as soon as the Mexican insurgents, and those of the internal provinces, cease to be furnished by the citizens of this republic, with arms, ammunition and troops.

I shall never have the vain presumption to offer you, or the wise magistrate that is at the head of this administration, any observations on the consequences that might result against the interests of this republic by the independence of Spanish America. My wishes are only directed to equal you in moderation, and to re-establish, on the most firm and permanent basis, the relations between our governments. This sincere desire will, I hope, serve as an apology for me, while I take the liberty to present an hypothesis in this note.

I grant for a moment, that all the Mexican empire erects itself into an independent state, that it adopts the wise constitution of this confederation; establishes a complete system of legislation; and finally, that it enjoys all the blessings of liberty, in the same full extent as this republic. It is beyond question that the climate of Mexico is more temperate than that of the United States; the soil richer and more productive; the productions and fruits more abundant, rich and of a superior quality; and that provisions, labour, wood, houses, clothing, &c. are, in consequence of the mildness and regularity of the climate, much cheaper than in this country. If this event should take place, do you not think, sir, as I do, that so many alluring prospects, and so many evident advantages, will deprive this republic of the successive emigrations from Europe? and, what is more, of a very considerable part of the most useful and industrious inhabitants of the confederation, who would carry with them to Mexico, their flour and saw mills, machines, manufactures, their enterprising genius, in a word, their general instruction and all the means that actually promote and vivify the commerce of these States! I flatter myself that this event will not happen; but I am fully convinced, that the consequences of this hypothesis can be demonstrated almost with a mathematical certainty; and that if the citizens of Kentucky, Tennessee, Louisiana and Georgia, should reflect deeply on this subject, far from giving any aid to these vagabonds, greedy of the acquisition of gold, and regardless of the happiness of their country, they would unite themselves with the authorities of the king, my master, to punish that gang of perfidious traitors, that hide themselves in these states, with the criminal design of devastating their country. I hope, Sir, that you will have the goodness to overlook this digression, to which I have been carried by my warm desire of strengthening the most perfect friendship between the two nations, and to inform his excellency the president, that the orders I send in his catholic majesty's name, directed to the trial and punishment of the ringleaders of these armies, and to the prohibition of exporting arms, of any kind, from this country to the provinces, against my sovereign's authority, are of the greatest importance, and are supported by the existing treaty of friendship, limits, and navigation, between Spain and the United States, especially the 4th article.

I expect, Sir, your answer to these important points, and I have the honour to be, &c. &c. &c.

FROM LATE LONDON PAPERS

HORRIBLE CRUELTY.

Extract from the Flanders Mail arrived last Night.

OUDENARDE, Nov. 16—A dreadful crime was committed on the 14th of this month at Onkerzeele, near Grammont.

A woman of fifty years of age, enjoying a decent fortune, the mother of seven children, has been burnt alive on suspicion of sorcery. A farmer had a daughter 20 years of age, who was seized with a lingering disorder; instead of applying for medical aid, he doubtless applied to soothsayers, and persuaded himself that his daughter was charmed.—The question was to discover the sorceress; his suspicions fell on a female neighbour, whom he enticed into his house, where she had never before set foot. He immediately shut the doors and the windows, and in concert with his wife and his sick daughter, after loading this unfortunate woman with maledictions, and after having used the most urgent importunities to make her confess her pretended crime, and reverse the charm, these barbarous wretches, without regard to her oaths of innocence, and to her tears, bound her hand and foot, struck her several blows with a sabre, which wounded her body and arms, and threatened her with the most horrible death. They immediately lighted a fire, which they renewed thrice, and on which they placed her several times, so that her feet, legs, and thighs, were consumed by a slow fire. This unhappy woman was thus tortured for above three hours, without being able to call for help, because her assassins stopped her mouth. It was not till the murderers saw her dying, and begging for the priest to attend her in her last moments, that they left her to fetch the ecclesiastic, by which means this horrible work was discovered. The criminals are arrested; they express neither fear nor repentance; they believe they have acted by a supernatural inspiration, and remain full of confidence.

During the dreadful execution of this crime, the second daughter and the servant-maid, whom the accused had caused to retire into an adjoining room, fled by going up to the garret and escaping over the roof. The victim was not dead the following day, but her recovery was despaired of.

It is curious to observe how long some of the simplest improvements have remained undiscovered, and the public attention was attracted last Saturday to one which might very reasonably have been looked for as soon as carts and waggons were invented. All the world knows that one horse fastened close to a carriage, will draw a load that ten horses could not move if attached to it at a certain distance, and yet no one ever before thought of placing any portion of the animal power behind a waggon to push it, till Saturday, when one of the water-side heavy coal-waggons, with two of the horses trailed behind, and only two before, drew it up the greater part of the steep towards the Strand, and before it reached the summit a fifth horse was put to, in order to shew how very completely five could do the work of seven. The load was afterwards drawn through the streets with two before and two behind, exciting the admiration of the people, who, from the great simplicity of the invention, were enabled to see in a moment the intention, as well as the obvious utility of the design.

ELBERFELD, Nov. 22.

The French Government has recognized the justice of the claims of the merchants whose colonial goods Bonaparte caused to be sold at Dusseldorf, though they had bought them at a sale which he had made a little before at Frankfort, and though they were still furnished with the stamp of the French customs. The Convention, by which the Government engages to indemnify them, was signed on the night of the 17th: it is to the active interference of England and Prussia in particular, that the merchants are indebted for this act of justice.

DIED—On Saturday, the 18th inst. at Clatterford, Isle of Wight, Major General Robert Young, aged 45 years; he had served his Majesty with honour upwards of 23 years, on the continent, in Egypt, and America, where he had been in a number of brilliant actions, but at length terminated his existence by a fatal accident, a bone having gone down his windpipe when eating, and entering his lungs, brought on a rapid decline. He has left a widow and five children ever to lament so severe a loss.

A new Township in the rear of Darlington, in the district of Newcastle, has been surveyed, and is now open for the location of the U. E. LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL, Monday, 26th February, 1816.

THIS DAY at half past three o'clock His EXCELLENCY the ADMINISTRATOR IN CHIEF, came down in state to the Legislative Council Chamber, and being seated on the Throne, the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod was sent to command the immediate attendance of the Assembly, which being come up, His Excellency was pleased to close the Session with the following SPEECH:

Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

Having indulged the hope when I met you in the Provincial Parliament, that your unanimous exertions would have been diligently applied to those objects of public advantage which I recommended to your particular attention, it has been with extreme concern that I have found those my reasonable expectations disappointed.

The House of Assembly has again entered into the discussion of a subject, on which the decision of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, in the name and on the behalf of his Majesty, has already been communicated to them; and while I deeply regret that the Assembly should have allowed any consideration to overbear the respect which His Royal Highness's decision claimed, I feel it my duty to announce to you my determination to prorogue the present Parliament, and to resort to the sense of the people, by an immediate dissolution.

Proclamation.

LONDON, Dec 11, 1815.

(From Bell's Messenger.)

It appears to be generally understood, that in return for the Emperor Alexander having assented to the independence of the Seven Ionian Islands under the protection of Great Britain, England, and the other Allied Powers, have consented upon their own part that the Emperor Alexander shall not be interrupted in his designs upon Turkey. It is well known, that the dominions of Turkey, in Europe have long been considered in Russia as her own, and that one of the Russian Princes, the Archduke Constantine, was purposely so named by his grand mother, the Empress Catherine with a view to the Greek Throne of Constantinople. We therefore readily concur in this opinion, that the Emperor Alexander and his Cabinet have returned to what is considered as the established policy of his court, and that a very great portion of his moderation and self denial in France, Germany and Italy, is to be imputed to his views upon this other extreme of Europe.

Nothing, indeed, is more extraordinary, than the various faces in which the character of this Emperor Alexander has presented itself to us. We were first taught to believe that he was a merely honest, good natured, & easy Sovereign, totally without ambition, and not overburthened with talents. Napoleon at first opened our eyes. "You totally mistake the character of that Emperor," said he to one of our Commissioners; with the appearance of the most childish candour, he has the deepest finesse of any man with whom I have ever had to deal." We do not quote this observation as in disrespect of the Emperor Alexander, for the finesse, so alledged against him by Napoleon, may be nothing but a justifiable defensive prudence; in short wisdom and firmness, and not falsehood and cunning.

With respect to his designs on Turkey we conceive that there can be but one opinion, and one wish. The ferocity of the Turks will certainly render it a battle of much difficulty and danger; but the fierceness of Barbarians will avail little against the disciplined skill of European armies. One or two battles,—one or two campaigns, will finish the barbarous domain of the Ottomans in Europe.

It is unquestionably the earnest hope of the ancient possessors of those provinces which now form Turkey in Europe, that they may pass from the oppressive dominion of the Grand Signior to the Sovereignty of a power which is already bound to them by a common religion; and which, though itself perhaps, barbarous in comparison with the other nations of Europe, is certainly highly civilized in a comparison with the Turks.

It is truly lamentable, indeed, to see so fine and so large a portion of the earth possessed by this hoggish people,—a people who have no other use, and no other enjoyment in this garden of the world than to trample upon that large abundance which remains after satisfying all their wants.—We should think that every civilized mind in Europe would anxiously desire the liberation of this people; and it is happy for them that the country has become so well known by the recent visits of the most distinguished travellers. Perhaps the time is not far distant, when Greece will again become the resort of arts and letters, and when the former grand tour through France, &c. will be replaced by the more instructive one into the continent and islands of Greece.

It appears to be generally understood, that in return for the Emperor Alexander having assented to the independence of the Seven Ionian Islands under the protection of Great Britain, England, and the other Allied Powers, have consented upon their own part that the Emperor Alexander shall not be interrupted in his designs upon Turkey. It is well known, that the dominions of Turkey, in Europe have long been considered in Russia as her own, and that one of the Russian Princes, the Archduke Constantine, was purposely so named by his grand mother, the Empress Catherine with a view to the Greek Throne of Constantinople. We therefore readily concur in this opinion, that the Emperor Alexander and his Cabinet have returned to what is considered as the established policy of his court, and that a very great portion of his moderation and self denial in France, Germany and Italy, is to be imputed to his views upon this other extreme of Europe.

Nothing, indeed, is more extraordinary, than the various faces in which the character of this Emperor Alexander has presented itself to us. We were first taught to believe that he was a merely honest, good natured, & easy Sovereign, totally without ambition, and not overburthened with talents. Napoleon at first opened our eyes. "You totally mistake the character of that Emperor," said he to one of our Commissioners; with the appearance of the most childish candour, he has the deepest finesse of any man with whom I have ever had to deal." We do not quote this observation as in disrespect of the Emperor Alexander, for the finesse, so alledged against him by Napoleon, may be nothing but a justifiable defensive prudence; in short wisdom and firmness, and not falsehood and cunning.

With respect to his designs on Turkey we conceive that there can be but one opinion, and one wish. The ferocity of the Turks will certainly render it a battle of much difficulty and danger; but the fierceness of Barbarians will avail little against the disciplined skill of European armies. One or two battles,—one or two campaigns, will finish the barbarous domain of the Ottomans in Europe.

It is unquestionably the earnest hope of the ancient possessors of those provinces which now form Turkey in Europe, that they may pass from the oppressive dominion of the Grand Signior to the Sovereignty of a power which is already bound to them by a common religion; and which, though itself perhaps, barbarous in comparison with the other nations of Europe, is certainly highly civilized in a comparison with the Turks.

It is truly lamentable, indeed, to see so fine and so large a portion of the earth possessed by this hoggish people,—a people who have no other use, and no other enjoyment in this garden of the world than to trample upon that large abundance which remains after satisfying all their wants.—We should think that every civilized mind in Europe would anxiously desire the liberation of this people; and it is happy for them that the country has become so well known by the recent visits of the most distinguished travellers. Perhaps the time is not far distant, when Greece will again become the resort of arts and letters, and when the former grand tour through France, &c. will be replaced by the more instructive one into the continent and islands of Greece.

POETRY.

THE SEASONS,

Emblematical of human life.

BY DAN. COPSEY, ESQ.

I have seen the green budding Spring,
The scenes of my hope it illum'd;
I've seen the gay Summer's bright beam,
Oh its stay I fondly presum'd.
I've seen yellow Autumn's rich stores,
I hop'd its delights would abide:
And Winter's chill blasts I have heard,
The spoils of the groves spreading wide.
Since then Spring, the parent of joys,
Is follow'd by Winter's bleak wind;
Ah! why should I foster the hope,
Perpetual pleasures to find.
But, despair not, for Winter's harsh storms
Are the nurse of the hopes of the Spring;
Both the smiles of Summer's bright days,
And autumn's rich treasures they bring.
So the stern Winter's day of our life,
And the tempest that over us rove,
Shall yield to the durable smiles
Of Spring, ever-blooming above.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 10.

Singular Occurrence!—A stage between this and Trenton took fire and was entirely consumed. It was occasioned by a passenger putting a hot brick on the floor of the stage to keep his feet warm, and what is most extraordinary it burnt with such rapidity, that the passengers, six in number, with difficulty made their escape. HAGUE, December 13.

Second Chamber of the States General—sitting of December 12.

A message was read from his Majesty, informing the chamber that his Majesty had concluded a treaty of Marriage between his beloved son, the Prince of Orange and her imperial highness the grand duchess Maria Paulina, sister of the Emperor Alexander, and to which, according to the constitution, the consent of the States is necessary. Referred to a committee to be reported upon to-morrow.

BRUSSELS, Dec. 9.

From Paris to our frontiers the Allied troops are all in motion, the roads are covered with troops, of all arms and an endless train of baggage, &c. and preparations are making at Champtay to receive before the end of the month the head quarters of Lord Wellington; all the English troops beyond the contingent of 25,000 infantry and 5,000 cavalry, which remained in France, are coming to Belgium; the Hanoverian and Hanseatic troops pass through these provinces to return home, meantime the duty is done in the French fortresses, at Lille and Aaras, in the strictest manner.

The troops which lately landed at Ostend, went yesterday on board again, to return to England.

The report is again in circulation, that Lord Wellington's head quarters will come to Brussels in the course of the month of January. Haarlem Courant Dec 12.

During the passage to St Helena, Bonaparte, however depressed in spirit, was not deprived of appetite. He ate voraciously and contrary to all the former habits of his life, took little exercise. He sometimes breakfasted in bed, and about noon had coffee and chocolate with several glasses of Claret afterwards. He wrote some hours every day both at morning and night, I one of those intervals when he was induced to talk upon the recent events, he was asked whether he really mistook Bulow's corps that advanced at the close of the battle of Waterloo, for Grouchy's? He replied in the negative, but that he thought Grouchy's corps could be able to occupy the whole attention of Bulow. The firmness, perseverance and impetuosity of the British troops astonished him. Night coming on, he had no longer the power of making himself visible to his troops and of thus improving the advantages he had gained. Many of his soldiers, he added, cried out Vive le Roi!

Once or thrice during the passage he remarked that after all it was infinitely preferable for him to live under the protection of the English laws than in a country where the will of one man was the sole law. What a reproach and censure did he thus pronounce against himself!

When the Northumberland reached St. Helena, Bonaparte was employed two hours in surveying it through a glass. He was observed to be very restless several times during the survey.

Bonaparte did not send a single letter to Europe by the ship arrived from St. Helena nor would he permit one of his Companions to write. So that nothing can be known from themselves of their situation or their sentiments. Minutes of all Bonaparte's political conversations were carefully taken. It seems he spoke with great freedom of the characters and views of all the Potentates, as well as of their Ministers; and those minutes which are considered truely important, are now in the hands of our Ministers. According to Bonaparte's opinion the confederacy of the Allies was on the point of breaking a the eve of the Battle of Waterloo and if he had gained the ascendant, would have been taken asunder in forty-eight hours.

BOUNDARY COMMISSIONERS.

NEW YORK, Feb 24

THOMAS MORRIS, Esquire, of New York, has been nominated a Commissioner under the 5th article of the Treaty of Ghent, to ascertain, in conjunction with a British Commissioner, the North East corner of the U. States, and to run the line from thence to the head of Connecticut River, and from thence down to the middle of that river to the 45th degree of North latitude until it strikes the river Iroquis or Cataraguy [Ghataugua.] This is said to be the most important of the four Commissions; and the nomination of a second New Yorker on them, gives umbrage to some of the New England members in Washington. This commission is to meet at St. Andrews N. B. in the first instance, they are authorized to survey the lands and make a map of the boundary, which is to be considered as finally and conclusively fixing it.

PORTUGUESE EXPEDITION.

By the schr. John George, 50 days from Lisbon, we learn verbally, that a Portuguese fleet of 1 line of battle ship 2 frigates and many smaller vessels, and transports having on board about 6000 troops, was to sail from Lisbon about the middle of January for South America, it was said to be to operate with the Spaniards in an expedition against Buenos Ayres.—[*N. Extract of a letter from a Friend, dated

CALCUTTA, Sept. 18.

I send you a few calcutta papers by the brig Indies, of Salem, which is now on the point of sailing for the U. States. I have very little information to communicate; what follows is all except what the papers contain.

From the Calcutta Times, Sept 12.

The Nautilus sailed from Batavia Roads on the 29th of June, bearing dispatches for the supreme Government. Previous to her departure, intelligence of the Ratification of Peace by the President of the U. States had been received at Batavia.

On the 30th of June, the American ship of war Peacock, Capt. Warrington, carrying 28 guns, and manned with 150 choice seamen, was cruizing off Arjier, in the Straits of Sunda. In the afternoon of the same day, the Master Attendant at Arjier went on board the American ship, and informed her commander that peace had been satified between Great Britain and the United States. This information he affected not to believe, and detained the Master Attendant as a prisoner of war. Half an hour after this occurrence, the H. C. cruizing Nautilus fell in with the Peacock.—Capt. Warrington hoisted English colours, and Loyce, the commander of the Nautilus, sent a boat with his master and a military officer a passenger, on board the Peacock. The American confined them as prisoners of War, and disregarding the information they gave of peace, ranged along side the Nautilus, and hoisted the colors of the United States.

Lieut. Boyce hailed, and demanded to know whether he was coming as a friend or an enemy! The answer returned was "AN ENEMY." Lieut. Boyce then told him, that peace had been ratified between Great Britain and the United States, and that he had documents on board. Capt. Warrington then said, "If peace has taken place hail down your colours instantly!"—Lieut. Boyce refusing to comply with this insolent demand, the American fired into the Nautilus, which he returned with a broadside. Lieut. Boyce was wounded in the hip by the first fire and shortly after his knee was shattered by a 24 pound shot. Mr. Mayson, the first Lieut. also severely wounded; and no officer remaining to fight the ship, he was compelled to surrender, after a gallant defence in close action which lasted a quarter of an hour.

Our readers have already seen the list of the killed and wounded on board the Nautilus. The American loss was, four men killed and six wounded.

On the following morning Mr. Warrington permitted the Master Attendant, to return to Arjier for the purpose of bringing American papers.—On the production of these, he expressed himself that peace had taken place, restored the Nautilus, and wrote officially to the Master Attendant, that he should desist from further hostilities.

We regret to add that Lieut. Boyce has suffered the amputation of his leg.

The Nautilus being much shattered in the hull has been sent to Samarang for repairs. The wounded men left at Arjier, were in a state of recovery.

To which His Excellency Replied:—

Gentlemen!

I shall transmit your Address to His Majesty's Minister, in order that this expression of your approbation of my past Administration, may be laid at the feet of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent.

Government House,
York, 26th March, 1816.

This day, at four o'Clock, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, proceeded in State from the Government House, accompanied by the Commanding Officer of the District and Staff at this Post, and attended by the Principal Officers of Government, to the Legislative Council Chamber, where, with the accustomed formalities, being seated on the Throne, and the House of Assembly having come up to the Bar, His Excellency was pleased to assent, in His Majesty's Name, to several Bills.

The Honorable the Speaker of the House of Assembly, on presenting the Bill, Granting a Sum of Money to His Majesty, delivered the following Speech at the Bar:—

May it please Your Excellency.

His Majesty's faithful Commons, with the concurrence of the Legislative Council, in behalf of the People of Upper Canada, recommend to your Excellency, to convey from the Majesties of War, fervent offers to their Sovereign, and to the Powerful Nation which afforded them its protection in the hour of their difficulty and danger, their humble, and grateful acknowledgments.

The signal benefits as a Colony of the United Kingdom of Great Britain & Ireland, we have experienced, and continue to enjoy, make us desirous of manifesting to His Majesty, the high sence entertained of His Constant tenderness and Paternal care—and to the Nation which has nurtured us from our Infancy, our Gratitude for the Support we have received.—We therefore by the Bill I now present to your Excellency, give, and Grant, to His Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, in aid of the Civil List of this Province, the Sum of Two Thousand, Five Hundred Pounds, Annually, out of the Revenue thereof—This sum, Your Excellency is entreated to accept, in the Name and behalf of His Majesty, as a small Tribute from humble and Limited means—Impressed with sentiments of unbounded and affectionate Loyalty to our venerable and beloved Sovereign, We, with all humility, Pray Your Excellency to assent to the Bill, in His Majesty's Name.

Upon which the Secretary of the Province said, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor thanks, in his Majesty's Name, his Majesty's Loyal Subjects—accepts their benevolence—and assents to this Bill.

His Excellency was then pleased to Close the Session, with the following gracious Speech:—

Hon. Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

The Public business of the Province having been brought to a close, by your long and laborious application, I now come to relieve you from your present attendance, and at the same time to thank you for the zealous discharge of your Legislative functions, in providing so many valuable Laws, which must be attended with the most salutary effects to this Province.

That particularly which provides for the Diffusemination of Letters in this Infant Colony, must secure to you the Gratitude and Veneration of the rising and future Generations.

The Wisdom of your determination to leave the Regulation of the Commercial Duties, and Drawbacks, to His Majesty's Executive Government of this Province, until the Imperial Parliament decides upon them, cannot be called in question.

Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I thank you for the liberal Provision you have made for the attainment of very interesting objects; for the Remuneration of very valuable Services; and especially for the annual supply, in aid of the Civil List, which, I trust, will be so disposed of as to justify your liberality and Confidence.

Hon. Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly.

Your return to your several Districts at this Season, must be of great Public advantage, by affording your presence at the approaching sessions of the Peace.

I need not recommend to you, to employ the influence of your example, as to confirm the spirit of Loyalty, and love of Country, amongst your Neighbours and Constituents, and satisfy them, that His Majesty's Paternal Government has no object, but their Safety, Honor, and Happiness!

After which the Honorable The Speaker of the Legislative Council signified that it was the pleasure of His Excellency the Lieut. Governor that the present Parliament be Prorogued to the second day of May next ensuing, to be then here holden, which was Prorogued accordingly.

We understand that an Elegant Dinner will be given to day at the Government House, to the Members and Officers of the Legislature, the Officers of Government, the Commanding Officer of the District and Staff, and the Principal Gentlemen of the Town and vicinity.

BEWARE OF A VILLIAIN.

One of the most accomplished villains that disgraces our country broke from the jail in this city on Friday evening last between the hours of five and six, and succeeded in making his escape. This fellow calls himself William Newman and was bound over for trial at the next sitting of the Supreme Court, on the charge of burglary, having robbed the house of Mr. H. Butler, of plate, money &c. He is supposed to be an Englishman, & is undoubtedly a most profound adept in the arts of knavery and deception. He speaks the English and several foreign languages fluently, and can play off the air of a genteel Frenchman with the most imposing gravity. He is of middling stature, slender and active, and appears to possess an astonishing versatility of genius. He is sick or well, grave or gay, silent or loquacious, and can fence box, fight, run, sing, dance, play whistle or talk, as occasion suits. He amused himself while in prison by making and managing a puppet show, which he performed apparently with such [illegible] means as to excite the wonder of the credulous, showing the piece of an old horseshoe, whetted on the wall of his dungeon, as the only instrument of his mechanism, and complaining only of the scarcity of timber to complete the groupe. His machinery was so contrived that his dancers kept time to his music, and his boxers and fighting men obeyed his command—and when tired of his wooden company he enlived his spirits by skipping the figure of a hornpipe. He had the address, by an irresistible flow of good humor and cheerfulness, to make some believe he was quite an innocent & harmless man, and excite sympathy enough in those whose who had the curiosity to see him to obtain several gratifications which prisoners do not usually enjoy. Yet the deepness of his cunning was evinced in accomplishing the means of his escape, which he effected by sawing a hole in his prison door, which is several inches thick, so neatly that the block could be taken out and replaced without shewing any mark of violence. Through this hole he could thrust his arm, and by shoving back the bolts and wrenching off a strong padlock, he found, at the hour of supper, when the person who waited on the prisoners was giving them their food, a free passage to the hall of the county-house, and thence to the street. The saw is supposed to be one used on board the Steam-Boat Fulton for cuting iron, which he stole on his transportation from New York, where he was apprehended) to this place, and so artfully did he conceal it, that, though repeatedly searched before his confinement, and afterwards, at the suggestion of Capt Bunker, to discover this very instrument, he was enabled to retain and use it for his purposes.

FROM THE MONTREAL HERALD

THE IONIAN ISLES.

(From the Essex Register, Salem.)

The last papers from Europe give us the treaty between England and Russia respecting the Ionian Islands, lately subject to Venice, afterwards seized by the French, but since granted to Russia, and afterwards sovereign in their own affairs. By this treaty, such as they were at the beginning of this century, they are declared free, under the protection of Great Britain, and with the approbation of this protecting power, they are to direct the affairs of their own government, form their constitution and exercise the privileges of their administration, giving up their fortifications to the English and the command of their troops, and the direction of their revenue, and of their commerce and flag. We are to judge of this treaty from the character i will take in its new situation, as the treaty leaves every thing for future arrangements. We recollect that Sir G. Wheeler about a century and an half ago, when visiting these islands then under the government of Venice, observed that one of them was well enough called the golden island, because of its pleasant situation and soil, but that now it more truely merited that name from the Venetians, who draw so much gold from it and its neighbors by trade, as supports the ordinary charge of their armadas at sea. The classic reader is more interested in the history, as the great Homer places here the kingdom of one of his heroes, whom he makes the subject of one of his poems, and by which he has given immortal fame to these islands, which have yet reserved themselves for the prosperity of future ages. We cannot refuse the recollection of a passage on the occasion from Gill's Ithaca, a superb work dedicated to his Majesty of Great Britain in 1807, and decorated with elegant views of the island which Homer makes the home of his hero, "the Grecians, from the first ages of his history, had considerable intercourse with Egypt and Phœnicia, countries, which, at a very early period, were distinguished not only by their cultivation and their elegant arts, but by their navigation, commerce and colonial settlements. The enterprising traders of those nations, through channels which were afterwards obstructed by the inroads of Scythians and other barbarian tribes, having obtained the rich commodities of the east, conveyed them first to the islands, and then to the continent of Greece. A commercial intercourse, thus established, introduced a taste for the polite arts among the islands, and along the Asiatic coast; their poetry became more harmonious, while their sources of knowledge were increased; travellers in Egypt and Phœnicia would naturally bring home an account of the civilization and internal disposition of the countries they visited, and the quick comprehensions of the Greek would catch and apply them to the improvement of his own. Among this people, then, a genious like that of Homer, endowed with powers so unequalled, found, in the narrative of his adventurous countrymen, materials the best adapted to charm, to interest & to instruct his hearers. The information he could thus collect, was such as no other situation offered, and the peculiar advantages of a residence in a maritime country, gave him opportunities of more accurate observation in travelling, whence he doubtless drew that fund of invariably just and appropriate epithets, the merit of which no one can fairly appreciate, who has not confulted the Iliad and Odyssey in the places they describe." It is in the possession of these islands the English now find themselves. They can give them a commerce unexampled in the best age of Venetian commerce, and again they can render familiar the scene from which the best poet drew his best description of heroic age.

LONDON, JANUARY 17.

Dispatches from Paris, received yesterday, announce the arrest of three English gentlemen by the French Police, charged with having assisted Lavalette in his escape. Report names Sir Robert Wilson, Captain Hutchinson, and Mr. Bruce, as the three that have been thrown into the Abbey; but another account substitutes a Lieutenant Robert Wilson for the named gentleman, Sir Robert Wilson is well known to all Europe, not only by his literary but military services against Bonaparte, Captain Hutchinson is a very young officer of the guard, a relation of Lord Donoughmore; and Mr Bruce is the eldest son of the Banker, Crawford Bruce, Esq.

Our Minister, Sir Charles Stuart, as soon as he heard of their arrest, demanded their immediate enlargement, when he was told that they had contrived and assisted in the escape of Lavalette, that they had procured a passport for an English officer two or three days before, & that they travelled with General Lavelette all the way in Mons, introduced him under the passport they had obtained to the English military post, procured it there to be countersigned, and passed him on. After which, and having breakfasted with the English officer in command, they returned to Paris. This was, it is said the report made by the French Police to the English Minister, and which he has transmitted to Ministers that he may receive further instructions how to act. What truth there may be in this charge we pretend not to know—but this we know that the British government will not be slow to adopt whatever measures the nature and circumstances of the case may call for.

LIEUT.-GEN. SIR GEO. PREVOST, BARONET.

London, January 15.—On Thursday last the remains of Lieut.-General Sir George Prevost, Bart. were removed from his house in Baker street, and deposited in the family vault at East Barnet, Herts, attended by his near relations, a few of his particular friends, and the officers who composed his personal staff in Canada. The disorder which shortened the days of this distinguished officer was dropsy, occasioned by a debilitated constitution, worn down by the fatigues and anxieties attendant upon the arduous duties of his late command. The first symptoms of the disease made their appearance during the journey which he was obliged to undertake overland, at the most inclement season, from Quebec to St. John's, N. Brunswick, in order to embark for England; to the exertions of which it has since appeared he was wholly unequal; and these symptoms gradually increasing after his arrival in this country, he was induced to remove from his seat to Belmont, in Hampshire, to London early in the last month, for the benefit of the best medical advice; but the rapid progress of his complaint baffling the skill of the physicians, Dr. Baillie, and Sir Gilbert Blane, he fell under at the age of 49 years. Sir George Prevost was the eldest son of Major-Gen. Augustine Prevost, who served under Gen. Wolfe, and was severely wounded on the plains of Abraham, and who afterwards so eminently distinguished himself in the first American war by his defence of Savannah.

The surviving brothers of Sir George Prevost are both in His Majesty's service, the eldest a Post Captain in the R. Navy, and the other a Colonel in the army. Sir George Prevost married in the year 1789, Catherine, daughter of Major General Phipps, who survived him, together with a son, a minor, who succeeds to the title,—& two daughters.

Further reductions to the same amount, will, it is said, speedily follow, with partial diminutions of corps still to be kept up to an effective strength and staff of 6 companies each.

The 92d regiment, (General Hulse's) the 90th, (Lord Lynedoch's) and some others are to be made Light Infantry corps. They will be thus taken out of the line, but will remain on a level with the line in rank, both having reciprocal equality of interchange to the officers, and mutual access to promotion.

These light corps will, it is understood, be made up of picked men, selected for the purpose in the course of the approaching reductions.

As a further distinction to the regiments that have participated in the achievement of the glorious victory of Waterloo, they are to bear the name of that place on their colours.

To His Excellency FRANCIS GORE, Esquire, Lieut. Governor of the Province of Upper Canada.

May it please Your Excellency.

We His Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the Province of Upper Canada, having taken into consideration the meritorious services of the Glengary Regiment of Fencible Light Infantry, which at the commencement of the late war with the United States of America, was raised and recruited in the Provinces of Canada, and being desirous of shewing the high value at which we estimate the services of Lieut. Colonel Battersby, who, from the first period of their formation to the present time, has commanded them with such honor to himself and such advantage to His Majesty's service in general, and to this Province in particular, request that your Excellency will be pleased to issue your Warrant to the Receiver General to pay to such persons as your Excellency may appoint, the sum of an Hundred Guineas for the purchase of a Sword, for Lieut. ARREST OF SIR ROBERT WILSON.

(Copy) Paris, Jan. 19th. 1816.

Sir, I have learned with surprise, that several English Gentlemen, among whom are General Sir Robert Wilson, Mr Crawford Bruce, and Mr. Hutchinson, have been arrested this morning; that their papers have been seized, and that they have been conveyed to prisons of this city, under the direction of the Minister of Police.

As I have repeatedly manifested to your Excellency my determination to extend the protection of my Sovereign to no person whose conduct endangers the safety of this Government, I should have been flattered if, as British Ambassador at the Court of France, I had been honored with a communication from your Excellency, which might have prevented the necessity of an official explanation of the motives for a proceeding of this nature towards individuals whose services and rank in some measure guarantee the loyalty of their conduct.

I have the honor to be, &c.

PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE.

Paris, 18th Jan. 1816.

SUMMARY—I have made it my business to enquire minutely into the state of the evidence hitherto procured against the Gentlemen under arrest particularly the written documents, and I believe you may rely on it, the following papers, independently of those I have already mentioned, have fallen into the hands of the French Police:—

1st. The taylor's bill sent by Hutchinson to Wilson, for the uniform in which Lavalette escaped.

2d. A note of the 5th inst. from Hutchinson to Bruce, asking him, "Whether he has forgotten his poor friends in the little room." and engaging him to come and join them at one o'clock.

3d. A note of the 13th Dec. from Wilson to Hutchinson, in which he says, that if the expedients proposed are tried, success is certain; he also adds, that B——— and H———. (Englishmen of note) are quite furious at he fate of Ney.

4th. Certain notes of Wilson, relative to communications he had made to an English news paper, in favor of Ney.

(What follows in the lengthy narrative, is merely speculative opinion.)—

From the London Morning Chronicle, Jan. 27.

"We have received the following authentic intelligence respecting Sir Robert Wilson. On Tuesday the 16th, he was removed from the Prefecture of Police, to the prison of La force, and upon Thursday the 28th, Lady Wilson was admitted into his presence for the first time since his arrest.—She was accompanied by the Marquis of Buckingham and Mr. Goddard, who has been selected to act as his attorney; but his Counsel Mr. Dupin, has not yet been permitted to see him. He has been treated with this unusual severity, in consequence of his refusal to answer interrogatories, tending directly to criminate himself, or his Companions in misfortune. To all other questions he gave ready answers. The Commissioners appointed to examine him were so much incensed with his refusal to answer their interrogatories, that they threatened to keep him au secret for the rest of his life; but finding they made no impression on him with those menaces, they desisted, and were contented with such repliesas he was willing to give. As a punishment for his contumacy, they have confined him in a small room, not ten feet square, with a damp brick floor, and a single window, part of which is now and then opened for the admission of air, at the pleasure of the Jailor.—The act of accusation has been read to him, but he has been refused a copy of it—and it is to the remonstrances of Sir Charles Stewart, that he owes the indulgence of seeing Lady Wilson.

PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE.

PARIS, January 17th, 1816.

General ——— (we suppose WILSON) was betrayed by his Valet de Place. His friends announce that his mode of defence rests on the infraction of the convention of Paris. "How can an Englishman and especially an English Officer" exclaim they "be said to be uninterested in this affair? Is not the national honor at stake? the faith of treaties most shamefully violated?" If he persists in this mode of justification it is possible he may embarass his opponents without deriving the slightest advantage to himself. The principle, if allowed, will constitute every man a self created legislator.

Capt. Hutchinson was conducted to the Elisee Bourbon at the request of the Duke of Wellington. His grace intimated to him that he had reason to believe that whatever might be the sentence of the court, it would be commuted into banishment from France, but that such an interdiction would be incompatible with the performance of his military duties. It appears the circumstance of Captain Hutchinson belonging to the British army, was entirely unknown to the French Government.

Many arrests have taken place within the last 24 hours at Paris. General Grundler, late Governor of Paris, and reporter of the military commission convoked on Marshal Ney, is said to be of the number, Marshal Serrurier has hitherto eluded the searches of the Police. The brave General Lagarde is not dead, he has had a relapse of his illness.

From the London Courier of Thursday Evening, January 30.

Vice Admiral Pickmore has been appointed Governor of Newfoundland, and Commander in Chief of his Majesty's ships on that station, where he is to reside until the term of his command expires, without returning to England in the winter season, as has been the custom heretofore.

A letter from St. Helena says—"Bonaparte is at present most narrowly watched, and on parole not to go beyond the limits of the little garden, &c. surrounding the cottage he inhabits. He has always about his person an officer, and at least two or three serjeants. Notwithstanding all this, he is never heard to complain, but seems perfectly calm, and resigned to his fate.

All the British troops have now withdrawn from Paris. On Saturday last at 5 in the morning, Col. M'Kinnon, commanding the rear guard, delivered up the heights of Montmatre, to the French troops. This was the last post delivered up.

It was reported at Paris on Saturday, that Sir Robert Wilson, Capt. Hutchison and Mr. Bruce will be let out of prison on bail, previous to their trial.

The indictment against Sir Robert Wilson, capt. Hutchinson, and Mr. Bruce having it is said, been drawn up, the trial will take place shortly before the Court of Assize.

These papers allude again to the differences between Austria and Bavaria which are more serious than we at first supposed. The Austrian Observer even says, that some skirmishes have taken place on the frontiers. The Court of Berlin takes the part of Bavaria.

"The negociations between Bavaria and Austria appear to assume a serious tone, though many persons suppose that an arrangement will soon take place. In the principality of Salizburgh and the Inverthiel, proclamations by the Bavarian government are every where posted up, in which all the reports relative to the cession of these countries to a neighboring power are declared to be without foundation, and the propagators of such reports are threatened with the punishment of imprisonment. These printed notifications, have excited discontent among the Austrians stationed on the Bavarian frontier, and it is even said that some slight skirmishes have occurred, to which the Chiefs, however, soon put a stop. General Vacquant, who is the Austrian negociator with Bavaria, sometimes dispatches two couriers a day.

"We are assured, that the ultimatum of the court of Austria has been delivered by General Vacquant to the court of Bavaria. In the mean time, the general opinion is, that the military occupation of the Saltzburgh and Inverthiel will soon take place, and that the Austrian government has already appointed the functionaries to be employed in those countries, and has ordered them to repair provisionally to the head quarters of the Prince of Colloredo, who commands the Austrian troops on the Bavarian frontiers."

——Austrian Observer.

The persons to whom the Amnesty law applied are quitting France daily. Sieyes has arrived at Brussels.

Paris, Jan. 29.

It is with extreme regret I inform you, that alarming accounts have been received from Lyons, relative to some very serious disturbances which have lately taken place in that town. I am, at present, unable to give you the details of what has passed. All that I can learn at this moment is, that a great number of Bonapartists, Federates and other Jacobins, had assembled in the Place des Terreraux and had paraded the streets of Lyons, threatening to murder all the Royalists.—They were preceded by a disbanded officer of the army of Loire, carrying the bust of the King of Rome, and crying out Vive L'Empereur! Vive le Roi de Rome! The Commandant of Lyons immediately assembled the National Guard, with all the other troops at his disposition, and soon dispersed the insurgents, not however without the loss of blood and several lives. When the last Courier left Lyons order and tranquility had been restored by the active and energetic conduct of the Commandant, supported by the Royalists. Among the ringleaders who have been arrested and are now in prison, were found several persons occupying places under the present government, and who it appears were the principal instigators of this revolt and rebellion.

COLONIAL TRADE.

The Imports of Sugars into the principal ports are nearly 300,000 hhds. annually; and as the island of Jamaica produces nearly a half of the import, and the hhds. weighing from 12 to 18 cwt. the revenues to Government may be estimated on this article near four millions per annum. [By parliamentary reports for a series of years, the amount paid into the Exchequer was considerably above three and a half millions]; the value to the planter, from the late high prices, being nearly twice that amount; it is, however, to be observed, that a considerable proportion of the revenue to government is again returned by the bounty given on the export of the article when manufactured; these estimates are made after giving every latitude to the exports of Sugar in the raw state; the total weight of Sugars imported into London, in 1815, was Muscovadoes, about 2,200,000 cwt; Clayeds 100,000 cwt.

The deliveries of Rum from the warehouses in London for 1815 were for exportation 25,044 puncheons; for home consumption 14,817 puncheons.

COTTON WOOL. The importation of this article into London, for 1815, from America, 76 790 bales, other places, 62 702. Into Glasgow, for same period 14,000 bales.

GRAIN. The imports of Grain into England, for 1815, were as follows:—Wheat 471840, qrs Barley 282805, Mait 427804, Oats 302572, Rye 2259, Beans 106640, Peas 52016, Tares 2236, Linseed 59293, Rapeseed 20830, Brank 2418, Mustard 5965, various sorts 16913, Flour 365939 bbls.

COTTON.—Imported into Liverpool, 1815, New-Orleans 3192, other places in the U. States 125 902.

British Debt, 31st Dec. 819 millions—Revenue 68 millions.

The Expenditure of Government for 1815.

The extensive military and naval establishments during war, the subsidies to Foreign Powers, the interest and the sums applied to the reduction of the National Debt, have of late years amounted to about 100 millions per annum; Annual Revenues about 65 millions, the deficience supplied by Loans. The chief items are the interest of the debt (formerly); the military establishments, which have greatly increased of late years; in 1810 being twenty millions, since advancing a half more; the naval expences have varied very little, averaging of late years 20 millions; Ordinance about five millions.

The forces combined against France, in the all struggle is thus estimated,

Austria	300,000
Russia	225,000
Prussia	236,000
Collective States of Germany	150,000
Great Britain	50,000
Holland	50,000
	1,011,000

For the support of these troops Great Britain provided five millions sterling, towards their support.

Remarks.——Britain has for such a series of years been accustomed to a state of war, that it becomes exceedingly difficult to calculate the effect likely to take place on the return of peace. In commerce we shall have to enter a very wide field of competition; and, though the heavy taxation must be felt by the manufacturer of every description, yet the fabrics are now so superior, that little is at present to be dreaded; the great improvements in machinery overbalancing the difference of wages, &c.

It is very usual, on the close of a campaign, to look to the great addition of the Public Debt, and to draw gloomy presages of the future. We are perfectly willing to allow that the late sudden changes from peace to war, and from war the quick transition to a state of profound peace, must deeply affect by both being overstrained, and the product

HOUSE OF LORDS, FEBRUARY 1.
OPENING OF THE SESSION.

The house met at two, when the royal commissioners, the archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, the duke of Montrose, Lord Harrowby, and Lord Shaftesbury, sent for the House of Commons.—The Speaker having come into the House of Lords, attended by the members of the commons, in the usual manner, he Lord Chancellor read the Prince Regent's speech as follows:—

My Lords and Gentlemen,

We are commanded by His Royal Highness the Prince Regent to express to you his deep regret at the continuance of his Majesty's lamented indisposition.

The Prince Regent directs us to acquaint you, that he has had great satisfaction in calling you together, under circumstances which enable him to announce to you the restoration of Peace throughout Europe.

The splendid and decisive success obtained by His Majesty's arms, and those of his allies, had led, at an early period of the campaign, to the re establishment of the authority of his most Christian Majesty in the capital of his dominions; and it has been since that time his royal highness's most earnest endeavour to promote such arrangements as appeared to him best calculated to provide for the lasting repose and security of Europe.

In the adjustment of these arrangements it was natural to expect that many difficulties would occur; but the Prince Regent trusts it will be found that, by moderation and firmness, they have been effectually surmounted.

To the intimate union that has happily subsisted between the Allied Powers, the nations of the Continent have twice owed their deliverance. His Royal Highness has no doubt that you will be sensible of the great importance of maintaining in its full force that alliance from which so many advantages have already been derived, and which affords the best prospect of the continuance of peace

The Prince Regent has directed copies of the several Treaties and conventions which have been concluded to be laid before you.

The extraordinary situation in which the powers of Europe have been placed, from the circumstances which have attended the French revolution, and more especially in consequence of the events of last year, has induced the Allies to adopt precautionary measures which they consider as indispensable necessary for the general security.

As His Royal Highness has concurred in these measures, from a full conviction of their justice and sound Policy, he relies confidently on your co-operation in such proceedings as may be necessary for carrying them into effect.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons—

The Prince Regent has directed the estimate for the present year to be laid before

His Royal Highness is happy to inform you, that the manufactures, commerce and revenue of the United Kingdom are in a flourishing condition.

The great exertions which you enabled him to make in the course of the last year, afforded the means of bringing the contest in which we were engaged to so glorious and speedy a termination.

The Prince Regent laments the heavy pressure upon the country which such exertions could not fail to produce; and His Royal Highness has commanded us to assure you that you may rely on every disposition on his part to concur in such measures of economy, as may be found consistent with the security of the country, and with that station which we occupy in Europe.

My Lord and Gentlemen,—

The negotiations which the Prince Regent announced to you, at the end of the last session of parliament, as being in progress with a view to a commercial arrangement between this country and the United States of America, have been brought to a satisfactory issue. His Royal Highness has given orders that a copy of the treaty which has been concluded shall be laid before you; and he confidently trusts that the stipulations of it will prove advantageous to the interests of both countries, and cement the good understanding which so happily subsists between them.

The prince regent has commanded us to inform you, that the hostilities in which we have been involved in the Island of Ceylon and on the continent of India, have been attended with decisive success.

Those in Ceylon have terminated in an arrangement highly honorable to the British character, and which cannot fail to augment the security and internal prosperity of that valuable possession.

The operations in India have led to an armistice which gives reason to hope that a peace may have been concluded on terms advantageous to our interests in that part of the world.

At the close of a contest so extensive and momentous as that in which we have been so long engaged in Europe and which has exalted the character and military renown of the British nation beyond all former example, the Prince Regent, cannot but feel, that under providence he is indebted for the success which has attended his exertions, to the wisdom and firmness of parliament, and to the perseverance and public spirit of His Majesty's people.

It will be the Prince Regent's constant endeavour to maintain, by the justice and moderation of his conduct, the high character which this country has acquired amongst the nations of the world; and his Royal Highness has directed us to express his sincere and earnest hope, that the same union amongst ourselves, which has enabled us to surmount so many dangers, and has brought this eventful struggle to so auspicious an issue, may now animate us in peace, and induce us cordially to cooperate in all those measures which may best manifest our gratitude for the Divine protection and most effectually promote the prosperity and happiness of our country.

QUEBEC, 28th March 1816.

Lieut. General Wilson and Suite arrive here on Monday evening last.

His Royal Highness the Prince Regent has been pleased, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, to approve of the flank companies of the 104th Regiment, being permitted to bear on their appointments (in addition to any other badges or devices which may have been heretofore granted to the 104th regiment) the word, "Niagara," in consideration of the gallantry and good conduct evinced by those companies in the action of Lunday's lane, near the Falls of Niagara, on the 25th July 1814, and during the whole of the campaign on the Niagara frontier, in the Year 1814.

ARREST OF SIR ROBERT WILSON

Copy of a Note addreffed to the Engliffh Ambaffador, by the Duc de Richelieu.

PARIS, JAN 13. 1816.

It is with the moft lively feelings of pain and regret, that the undersigned fees himfelf obliged to make known to his Excellency Sir Charles Stewart, that feveral fubjects of His Britannic Majefty appear to have taken an active part in culpable manœuvres directed againft the government of the King.

His Excellency will fee by the letter hereto annexed, which the undersigned has juft received from the Miniffer of Police, that Sir Robert Wilfon, Mr. Bruce and another individual, who is believed to be an Engliffh gentleman, are accufed of having favored the efcape of Lavalette. Their trial is going to commence; but the undersigned in announcing it to Sir Charles Stewart, is forward at the fame time to give him the affurance, that they will enjoy fully all the facilities which our laws afford for their juftification, and that the protecting forms of trial will be religiously obferved towards them.

The undersigned, in making this communication to the Engliffh Ambaffador, as a confequence of the particular regard which this court on every occafion entertains towards the Government of His Britannic Majefty, has the honor to renew, &c.

London, Feb 2.

Copies of no less than seventy treaties and conventions, concluded at Vienna and Paris, have been laid before Parliament Among them is one signed between England Ruffia, Auftria and Pruffia, by which Bonaparte is declared to be their common prisoner; his cuftody to be entrusted to England, and the other powers to have commiffioners to reside at his place of residence, and who, without being responsible for his cuftody, will assure themselves of his presence.

We received this morning a large mass of letters from Paris, dated on Monday evening, We insert an extract from one of them, announcing that the French Government has suspended the circulation of English Journals, in France

The fpeech has made a very favorable impreffion on the funds, which have experienced this morning a rife of one per cent —in private bargains. confols, and omnium for the next payments. Although it was a holiday at the bank, the ftock exchange remained open.

We have read in a Morning Journal an article which has created fome uneafinefs in the public mind, it is as follows:—Certain libellers have ufed the name of an Ambaffador (M. Pozzi de Borgho) from an Allied Sovereign, for the purpofe of circulating a paper which is ftill in manufcript, and which contains a falfe report made to his maffer refpecting the fituation of France. This miniffer, well known for his attachment to the King of France, was filled with indignation at finding that a wretch had compromifed his name and character. He has made a complaint on the fubject, and defired that the offender might be fought after, and given up to the rigour of the laws. This is the whole of the myfterious bufinefs.

LONDON, January 29th.

A defaulter in the collection of the French taxes, lately thought proper to decamp to England with bills on London, which he had purchafed at Paris with the government money, to the amount of 200 ftarling. The bills were of that defcription that he found no difficulty in getting them discounted. Having turned them into money in London, he took fhipping at Falmouth for the United States, and was on his paffage some days before the French Government sought after him in this country.

The Merchants of Vienna have presented a memorial to the Emperor of Auftria, praying, that as Auftria is now poffeffed of a very extenfive sea coast, the introduction of colonial produce by land may be prohibited. This would greatly promote the prosperity of Trieste Frume and Venice.

The Lutheran, Calvinist, and Jewifh Consistories had the honor to present their homage to the King, onthe occafion of the new year "I receive with pleasure, "said his Majesty, "the congratulations of French Israelities. They may reckon upon my kingdom."

The disturbances of Nismes have been happily quelled; and the troops withdrawn from that town, by a royal order, which promises to the Protestants, the utmost liberty of public worfhip, and the protection of the laws.

His Royal Highness Leopold-George Christian Frederick brother of the reigning Duke of SaxeCobourg is betrothed to the Princess Charlotte of wales, the presumptive heiress to the British crown. His Royal Highness is in his 26th year, is an officer in the Auftrian service, and sustains an excellent character He was in England a year or two since and probably at that time engaged the attention of the Princess. She passed out of her teens 17th January last. The Grand Duke Constantine, of Russia, married a sister of the above prince.

A Britifh frigate had arrived in England, with a million and a half of dollars; and specie was so plenty there, that dollars had been sold at 4s. 4d. a piece.

PARIS, February 4.

Three Memoires Juftificatiff have survived the week they were published in. They are those of Vandamme, Lamarque and Soult. It was curious to see what the former, the most notorious Brigand in Europe, could advance in his behalf; not a country wherein he appeared but execrated his memory; and a similar defence, contradictory to truth, and in defiance of ten thousand living witnesses, was the only trait wanting to complete his abominable character. General Lamarque is acknowledged a man of high military and some literary talents; he is not branded with the public scorn, his Memoire, which is his own, is said to breathe his real feelings, and it is very generally believed that a branch of his family has already received assurances which lead them to hope that his Majesty's clemency will be extended to their gallant relative.

The Memoire Juftificatiff of Marshal Soult is attributed to the pen of Mr Manuel, formerly a member of the Chamber des Representants, convoked by Bonaparte. He undertook a difficult subject and his task was at least equal to his abilities, It is fair however, to observe, that if he leaves many points totally untouched, on the whole this composition Is written in a tone of bienseance and dignity which is rately met with in similar discussions.

The Paris papers say, that Mr Hyde de Nenville is appointed the succes or of M Serrurier as Minister to the United States.

PARIS, Jan. 2.

A letter from Moscow says—"Moscow rising from its ashes will be more beautiful than ever, although not so large. The change effected here in so short a time is incredible. An astonishing, and in modern times a novel spectacle is exhibited? an immense plain on which the eye distinguishes a confused and varied mixture of ruins' palaces, as well stone as wood: large and small houses churches, places where lies the remains of burned houses' uncultivated fields, the whole surrounded by bricks and lime kilns; in the midst of all this a swarm of workmen of every description The entire recalls the tower of Babel, but with this difference, that the result will be far different. All the streets of communication are filled with long files of carriages charged with materials. The Kremlin, which was heretofore the most beautiful ornament of the city, is partly re-built, and on a plan more regular. Those of its old walls that continue standing, have been rough cast and white washed. The cannon conquered from the enemy are ranged in piles in the large square facing the senate house. Posts indicate the nations to which they belonged; French, Austrians, Pruffians, Engliffh, Germans, Spaniards, Swedes, and Poles. The pieces are destined to form a monument, of which the programme has been already proposed. They speak of erecting in some place between the Kremlin and the new-market (a building infinitely handsomer than the former,) a church round which these cannon will first be ranged.

Foreign Intelligence.

HAGUE, (Netherlands,) Dec. 14.

After an interval of a month, the States General have just resumed their session. The sitting of the Chamber was opened yesterday at noon. The president, Baron Van Linden Van Hoevelaken announced that he had received the following message, accompanied with a projet of a law.

Noble and Powerful Lords,

At the moment when I made with my august ally, the Emperor of all the Russias, the first arrangement for the marriage of the Prince of Orange, the interests of the state were not less present to my thoughts, than the happiness of my beloved son. This last object, the virtues of the Grand Duchess Anne Paulowna, would not leave in uncertainty and I have the greatest joy in seeing established so intimate relations between my family and a house as distinguished for its eminent qualities as for the extent of its power, and whose prosperity has only served to give a greater splendor to the noble sentiments of love, humanity and moderation.

But the proposed union has appeared equally desireable to me in a political point of view. It will serve to consolidate and to rivet still stronger the bonds of attachment and veneration which have united me for a long time with the Emperor Alexander; it offers a new support to the interest which the commercial part of the nation ought to cultivate in the northern part of Europe; in fine, it guarantees to the whole kingdom the permanent good will of a court which has so powerfully contributed to the work of its foundation.

Such are the considerations which determined me, as well as the Queen, to give a ready assent to the marriage of the Prince of Orange with the Grand Duchess Anne Paulowna. Ont of my first cares has been to communicate it to the representatives of the nation, and if from their known attachment to the interest of the country, they shew the satisfaction which I feel on such an occasion, I may expect with confidence the co-operation which the constitution requires, on the part of the States General, in the marriage of the Princes who may be called to the throne.

It is with this view that I offer the subjoined projet of a law, which I submit to your deliberation, praying God that he will have you, noble and powerful Lords in his holy keeping.

WILLIAM.

Hague, December 11, 1815.

The projet of a law conferming the cousent of his Majesty to the marriage was committed.

New York, March 30.

Two British packets arrived this forenoon from Falmouth, (Eng.) one bringing the January and the other the February mails. Altho' they furnish London dates eight days later than before received, they add very little to our former stock of news from that quarter Lord Wellington and the allied troops remained at Paris, and every thing was apparently tranquilin that neighborhood

LONDON, Feb. 5.

Yesterday, between eleven & twelve o'clock, dispatches were received in Downing-Street, from the Duke of Wellington at Paris. The contents of them were of that nature that a Cabinet Council was immediately summoned to assembled at two o'clock at the Foreign Office; and at half past two there were present the Lord Chancellor, Earls of Liverpool, Harrowby, Westmoreland, Mulgrave, Bathurst, & Buckinghamshire, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Viscounts Castlereagh, Sidmouth and Melville, the Right Honorable C. R. Bathurst and Mr. W. Pole. They continued in deliberation upwards of two hours. Perhaps in the course of this day something further may transpire upon the subject.

It is repeated that a good deal of uneasiness prevails in Prussia The measures now particularly complained of are the ordinance relative to the secret societies, and the suppression of the Mercury of the Rhine, by the immediate order of the King M. Justus Graner has been sent ambassador to Naples, and Niebuhr to Rome. These missions are regarded as a species of exile, in consequence of publications in favour of secret societies. The latter published a pamphlet in answer to Schmalz.

the Free and independant Electors and Riding of the County of York unty of Simcoe.

ENTLEMEN,

the solicitation of my Friends ghbours, I have determined to offer myself, at the ensuing Election, to Represent you in the Provincial Parliament.—Occupied in Commercial and Agricultural pursuits, I am too diffident of my own abilities, and too little accustomed to Public Speaking, to have thought of becoming a Candidate for your suffrages till encouraged by Gentlemen much superior to me in age, ability and experience—They told me that the Local information I possessed and my General Knowledge of the situation of the Inhabitants, through the whole Province, might, if conscientiously employed, render me useful as a Member of the House of Assembly. Animated with this hope, and the day approaching fast when you will be called upon to discharge the most noble and important privilege of Freemen, I solicit your support.

In addresses of this kind it is useful for the Candidate to make a full confession of his Political principles, as a standard by which to try his future conduct, and though such a confession proves afterwards very inconvenient to such Members as act differently from what they have promised, I am willing to be judged by this test. I readily avow my zealous attachment to the British Constitution, and my loyalty to the best of Kings—I am delighted that we belong to that Generous nation which fills the whole Earth with admiration at her heroism and magnanimity, and that we are blessed with the same laws and similar institutions.

In regard to this Colony, I firmly believe that the interest of the people and the Government are the same, and that they cannot be separated without the greatest injury to both.—In the Governor I behold the representative of the King, to whom every mark of deference and respect is justly due, and whose chief recommendation when he returns home, will be, to lay at the foot of the throne, proofs of the progressive prosperity of the Province from his faithful and wise administration.

I belong to no party—I hate parties—see how they distract and disgrace Lower Canada, and similar scenes would have been exhibited here by a kindred faction, had not the present Lieutenant Governor crushed the Hydra in its infancy...This measure, marked with energy and wisdom, deserves the lasting gratitude of the Province, & the recollection of it, associated with the happiness and prosperity we enjoyed under his mild and disinterested Government, accounts for the joy and congratulation that welcomed his return.—I am proud to acknowledge myself one of those who joined in the general exultation.

As a Member of the House of Assembly, I am honoured with your choice, I shall exert myself to establish good Roads throughout the Province—to improve the Navigation of the Lakes and Rivers—to encourage Agriculture and Commerce, and the moral and Religious improvement of the People—and, while eager to promote the general interests of the Colony, I shall not be inattentive to the particular interests of my Constituents, in as far as they are consistent with the Public good.

More I cannot promise, because more I cannot perform, but if a desire to promote the best interests of this important District can ensure success, my exertions will strengthen my faculties and render them worthy of your confidence.

I am Gentlemen, your most Obedient,
Humble Servant,
PETER ROBINSON.

Foreign Intelligence.

The Prince Royal of Bavaria has proceeded to Milan to settle with the emperor the misunderstandings relative to the exchange of territory between Austria and Bavaria. It is asserted that these differences had been greatly exaggerated, and that there was no truth in a rumour that had been spread that the armies of Bianchi and Wrede, had been approaching each other.

There is a serious misunderstanding between the senate and the citizens of Frankfort. One party maintains that the sovereignty of that little republic resides in the senate, and the other that it is in the assembly of the citizens. The latter have refused to accept the constitution proposed by the former, or to appoint deputies to proceed in forming one in conjunction with the senate.—It is apprehended that the controversy will only be settled by reference to the Germanic diet, when it shall be organized.

The right wing of the army of occupation under Wellington was taking its cantonments, on the 1st of February as follows. The Danish and Saxon contingents occupy a line between the fortresses of French Flanders and Artois; the Hanoverians at Conde; the Russians at Manbeuge, Avesnes, Charlemont, Laudrecy, and their cantonments extend in front of this latter place the english at Peronne, Cambray, Bouchin, Gateau, Valenciennes and Quesnoi. By the 10th it was expected they would be completely established in their positions.

Sir Robert Wilson, Bruce and Hutchinson, have not been admitted to bail, as was stated in the english papers. Their application to be released on bail has been refused. The public reading rooms in Paris are closed, & not to be re-opened until a new permission from the prefect of police. Carnot had arrived at Warsaw, on his way to St. Petersburgh. The Princess of Wales has arrived at Athens. On finishing her visit in Greece, she will proceed to Constantinople.

New-York, April 13.

By the fast sailing ship Tea Plant, captain Brown, arrived last evening from Liverpool, whence she sailed on the 24th of February.—The Editors of the Mercantile Advertiser have received the papers of that city to the 22d and London of the 20th, which furnish no political news of moment. We have given some extracts below. Mr. Vansittart had brought into the British Parliament his plan for the military peace establishment. He states that 33,000 seamen would be wanted for the present year, though the general peace establishment would require but 23,000. For the army he proposes to keep up 25,000 for Great Britain, and the same number for Ireland; for Gibraltar and the Mediterranean possessions 11,000; for British America 10,000; for the East and West Indies 23,000—in all 99,000 men. The supplies for the present year are calculated at 29 millions, which the chancellor states will be reduced one third the next year. He recommends the continuance of the property and income taxes for the present. The peace he thought was stable, and would continue, but was opposed to the country's disarming altogether, whilst the continent was still covered with camps and armies, or to leave itself without the possible resurrection of its strength.

Letters from Liverpool mention several important failures in Glasgow.

Major-general Phineas Riall is appointed by the Prince Regent, governor of the Island of Grenada—and Francis Savage, Esq. consul for Virginia.

London, Feb. 15.

ADMIRALTY SESSIONS.

The Sessions commenced on Tuesday at Justice hall, in the Old Bailey, before Sir Wm. Scott, Mr. Justice Heath, &c. John Swain, alias Swinney, a Scotchman, was indicted for high treason, in hostilely and feloniously adhering to the United States of America, and their subjects, the said States being at war with His Majesty, and with the subjects of this realm. It appeared that the defendant had been employed in the Seringapatam, south sea whaler, and being captured by the American frigate Essex, Capt. Porter, he, as well as others of the crew, entered the American service; the Capt. of the Whaler, named Stevens, who was the principal evidence against the prisoner, said, he directly warned them not to turn traitors, and on particularly expressing a hope to the prisoner, that he would not fight against his country, the latter answered, that the Scotch and English had not settled it yet—and he had as good a right to fight for the Americans as for them. The prisoner in his defence, declared that he had not fought against his King and country. He acted as he had done, in order that he might avail himself of the first opportunity to make his escape. He was found guilty, and sentenced to be executed at Execution Dock.

LONDON, FEB. 15.

The Princess Charlotte of Wales.

is now understood that matters are y on train for the nuptials of this il- rious personage. The first personal rview between this illustrious Prin- and her intended consort, took e in the summer of 1814, when the ropolis was filled with the royal and le visitors from the continent. On occasion his highness was the bearer of a letter from the late Duke of Brunswick Oels, to his cousin, the Princess Charlotte. His pleasing manners produced an invitation from the Princess with the most perfect approbation of the ladies of her establishment to repeat his visits, as a tea table companion at Warwickhouse. The instant that Prince Leopald thought he discovered that his company was agreeable to the Princess, he waited upon the Prince Regent, and in the most manly and candid manner, stated the circumstance in which he was placed, as delicately as he could. His Highness then added, that, "proud as he would be of such an illustrious alliance, he came to take the commands of His Royal Highness to quit the country instantly if his prosecution of the affair did not meet with the entire and cordial approbation of His Royal Highness." The answer was what might have been expected from the dictates of a generous and magnanimous breast. The Prince Regent gave his sanction to the continuance of an intercourse which was commenced and carried on upon such honorable principles. One part of the proposed arrangements must at least be particularly pleasing to our national feelings: The Princess Charlotte of Wales has expressly stipulated that she shall never be taken out of the country without her full and free consent.

Yesterday a division took place in Parliament on an amendment condemning the conduct of Ministers, proposed by Lord milton, when the opposition collected all their forces. The result was :—

For the amendment, 77 } 163 majority for Against it, 240 } Ministers.

In the Lords division was :—For Ministers 104—against them 44.

The British embassy to Portugal has been discontinued ever since it has been known that the Court intend to remain in Brazil. Mr. Canning the late Minister is on the return home, it is said, he will come into the administration at the head of the Admiralty.

Predictions of commotions in France continued in daily refutation and fabrication. The allied troops had left Paris & the interior of France nearly a month, and yet the progress of tranquility continued uninterrupted.

The Ex. King Joseph Bonaparte, Marshal Grouchy, and General Lefebre-Desnouettes are in Philadelphia. The Paris papers mention, that a reward of 10.000 francs had been proclaimed for the apprehension of the latter.

The Russian Emperor has ordered 750.000 suits of regimentals, of English manufacture, for the clothing of his troops.

New-York, APRIL 25.

By the arrival last evening of the ship Athens, from Liverpool, we have received London papers to the 29th of February and Liverpool to the 2d of March, both inclusive. Extracts follow.

Twenty six commercial houses at Glasgow, are stated in a Liverpool paper of 1st of March, to have been under the necessity of stopping payment.

LONDON, FEB. 22.

It is not at Liverpool only that failures have taken place to a great amount; letters from Glasgow have brought a list of failures to the extent of upward of a million sterling!

The Marquis of Northampton, walking down Sherp-street, Northampton, Wednesday morning, from the slippery state of the pave of the pavement, fell with great violence, broke two ribs and was otherwise considerably hurt.

FEB. 25.

Glasgow papers which arrived yesterday, give a melancholy account of the trade and manufactures, in that country. No fewer than eighteen respectable houses, chiefly in the linen & cotton trade, have within ten days, stopped payment. Among these, is the house of Messrs. S——& Son, whose extensive manufactories employ not less than 400 persons. Their connections with two or three houses in London, will it is expected, be attended with serious consequences. The amount which the house has failed for, is upwards of half a million sterling.

A Dutch mail came in this morning. It adds another instance to the concurring accounts of the progress of the plague, which are truly alarming.—The new instance is in the Turkish province of Bosnia.

The Paris papers of the 22nd arrived yesterday, and those of the 23d this morning. They are principally interesting on account of the discovery of the last will and testament of the late queen, Marie Antoinette, found among the papers of the Ex-Conventionalist Courtois, one of the chiefs of the regicide faction, who is supposed to have carefully withheld this document from public knowledge, lest it should counteract the revolutionary madness at the moment, or draw down vengeance for the concealment in later and better times. This paper is in the form of a letter from the deceased queen to her sister in law, Madame Elizabeth, recognized by all the members of the royal family, to be written with her own hand. It is also to be attested by the signatures of the executioners, meaning we suppose, the chiefs of the regicide faction. It was written not more than five hours before her execution. It evinces the most heroic spirit, the most perfect generosity, parental affection, patriotism, pure christian faith and forgiveness. The French Chambers of Peers and Deputies appear to have been quite extatized on receiving the certified copies of it, laid before them by the King's ministers for especially for the purpose by his majesty; addresses in answer to the communication have been voted in both assemblies. The document is to be copied fac simile, by the King's orders. The proceedings on this business are the only matters worthy of notice in the papers.

The York Gazette.

WEDNESDAY June 5, 1816.

On Friday afternoon His Excellency the Lieut. Governor and Mrs. Gore, and Suite, embarked on Board the Toronto for the Head of the Lake, from whence they proceed on an Excursion to the West ward, in the course of which We understand it is His Excellency's intention to review the Militia of the London, Western and Niagara Districts.

Yesterday being the anniversary of His Majesty's Birth Day, the same was observed here with the customary rejoicings.

On Sunday last a detachment of the 70th Regt arrived at this Post to relieve the Glengary Light Infantry Fencible Regiment, who on the following day embarked on board H. M. Ship Montreal & Schooner Netley, for Kingston, where they are to be disbanded.

On Tuesday the 28th May, the Hon and Revd. the Rector of York, and the Chairman of the Quarter Sessions, waited on Lt. Col. Battersby and the Officers of this highly meritorious and useful Corps, at the Garrison, with the following address.

To Lieutenant Colonel Battersby and the other Officers of the Glengary Light Infantry Fencible Regiment.

GENTLEMEN,

We the Magistrates and other inhabitants of the Town of York, while we most sincerely regret the intended departure of your Regt. from this place, consider it as a duty which we owe to you as well as to ourselves, to express in the most public manner, the high sense we entertain of your Character and Conduct.

Your bravery as Soldiers, the Province of Upper Canada is proud to acknowledge ;—your politeness as Gentlemen, the Inhabitants of York will ever most gratefully remember.

Nor are we insensible to the good order and regularity, which has so happily prevailed between the Military and Civil Inhabitants of this Town, chiefly to be ascribed to the wise regulations and exact Discipline which has honored and distinguished the Regiment to which you belong.

Your Services indeed are no longer called for in the Field, but you will have the high satisfaction of returning to your Friends adorned with Military honor and applause : and should the services of your King and Country again call for your Military exertions, we should, with a pleasing recollection of the past, look up to you for still further aid and protection. But whatever may be your destination in future Life, the regards and good wishes of the Inhabitants of York will ever attend you.

To which Lt. Col. Battersby Replied.

GENTLEMEN.

It is most gratifying to me and the other officers of the Regiment, to find that in the discharge of our Duty to our King and Country, we have gained the esteem of the Magistrates and Inhabitants of York, and the handsome manner in which they have expressed their approbation of our Conduct has made a lasting impression upon us.

Whatever may be our destination we shall ever retain the most pleasing recollection of the liberality and kindness of the Citizens of York.

On Wednesday the 29th. a Dinner was given by the Gentlemen of York, to Lt. Col. Battersby and the Officers of the Regiment, at JORDAN'S HOTEL, at which the good and venerable the Hon. Chief Justice Scott presided, supported by Mr. Allan an Mr. Grant Powell, as Vice Presidents. The dinner was honored by the presence of His Excellency the Lieut. Governor and Suite.

CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES.

Sitting of March 22.

M. de Corbieres, Reporter of the Committee on the Budget, made a rapid recapitulation of the debates relative to the arrear, and announced that the Committee adhered in its opinion of not alienating the forests.

Count Corvetto, Minister of France, stated that the King had caused a correct account of the different propositions debated in the assembly to be laid before him, and that had upon given orders in consequence of which a new project was now submitted to the Chamber.

The new project being read, a debate arose in some of the articles, in the course of which M Corbieres defended the opinion of the Committee.

This debate was interrupted by the arrival of the Duke of Richelieu with a message from the King.

The Duke, addressing the Chamber said, the King has charged me to communicate an event equally happy for the State and his own family, and from which he experiences a satisfaction in which you will share. The Duke of Berri is immediately to marry the Princess Caroline of the Two Sicilies, like himself a descendant of Louis XVI. and at the same time, of Maria Theresa, who was illustrious among illustrious women, and great among great Kings. The Minister concluded his speech by presenting a Law Project, granting in consequence of this union, a million of Francs annually. The 24th article of the Project directs that the grant shall be reduced during five years to 500,000 francs, at the end of which period it shall be paid in full. (On reading this article the minister was interrupted by loud acclamations against any reduction)

When the reading of the message was completed, the whole Assembly rose spontaneously and cried—Vive le Roi—Vivent les Bourbons.

The Duke of Richelieu next communicated the King's ordinance regulating the forms in which the Births, Deaths and Marriages of the Royal Family are to be kept.

A grand deputation was appointed by lot to present an address to the King this evening.

G. R.

NUMBER 99

Lt. Col. Ogilvy, in the following Letter addressed to Major Genl. Gordon.

Horse Guards, 12th Jan 1816.

SIR

I had the honor of submitting to the Commander in Chief, your letter of the 9th inst. and its inclosures, detailing the circumstances attending the destruction of the Colours of the 2d Batt. of the late 8th or King's Regt. of foot, from which it appears to H. R. H. that Lieut. Col. Ogilvy was the leader of the transaction, that the Commander of the Battalion was himself the promoter of this outrage against discipline and common decency which would scarcely have been pardonable in the youngest Ensign in the army. The Commander in Chief has commanded me to express in the strongest terms, his surprise and concern, that an officer of Lt. Col. Ogilvy's rank, whose services had caused H. R. H. to form a favourable opinion of him, and to entertain expectations of his future distinction, should have proved himself so forgetful of his duty, and so regardless of his own character and that of the Corps under his Command, and H. R. H. considers it as a great aggravation of his offence, his having sanctioned the mockery of placing Centinels over the remnant of the Colours, by which means making a Private Soldier participate in this mock and extraordinary breach of discipline, thereby rendering the act notorious to the whole Battalion. The Commander in Chief is disposed on this occasion, to allow the merits of the Battalion, and from respect to the memory of the late General Ogilvie, and a consideration of his long and faithful service, H. R. H. will spare Lt. Col. Ogilvie, the disgrace and fatal consequence of a trial before a Court Martial; but the Commander in Chief desires that you will direct this Letter to be inserted in all the Order Books, and of the King's Regt. of foot, and that you will take care that its contents are forthwith communicated to Lieut. Col. Ogilvie.

WHEREAS it has been represented to me by the Indians residing on the Grand River within this Province, in a Speech addressed in Public Council to His Majesty's Deputy Superintendant General of Indian Affairs, that many White Persons are settled on the Indian Land in the County of Haldimand, without due Authority or Licence from any Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Person administering the Government of this Province: And Whereas, by Law, all White Persons are forbidden to establish themselves, or reside in any Indian Village or Country within this Province without such Licence, under a Penalty, for the First Offence, of Ten Pounds, and for the Second, and every other subsequent Offence, of Twenty Pounds; I HAVE THEREFORE THOUGHT FIT, by and with the Advice of His Majesty's Executive Council for the Affairs of this Province, to issue this Proclamation, to the Intent that no Person may conceive Ignorance of the Law which subjects his Contravention to such Penalties; and further, to declare that the Law will be henceforth rigidly enforced against all Persons who shall, after the Publication hereof, continue to reside in the Indian Villages and Countries within the Province without due Licence: And whereas it is further represented to me, that, among the White People resident upon the Indian Lands, there are divers to whom it may be expedient to grant Licences to remain, All Persons desirous of obtaining such Licences, are hereby required to report themselves to the Honourable WILLIAM CLAUS, His Majesty's Deputy Superintendant-General of Indian Affairs, together with the Circumstances of Time, Place, and Condition of their respective Residences.

MONDAY June 12, 1816.

Despatches have been received by His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, notifying His Royal Highness the Prince Regent's pleasure that the Seat of this Government should be permanently established at this place.

The following Address from the Magistrates, Militia Officers and Inhabitants of the District of Gore, was presented to His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, at Ancaster, on the 4th instant.

To His Excellency Francis Gore Esquire, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Upper Canada, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency.

We the Magistrates, Militia Officers and Inhabitants of the District of Gore, Happy under the Mild and Peaceful Administration of Your Excellency, before the commencement of the late War with the United States,

Have with pleasure seen your return to resume the Administration of the Government of this Province, and look forward with anxious hope to the return of those Blessings we so amply enjoyed during your Excellency's former residence amongst us.

We congratulate ourselves in again experiencing the tender care your Excellency so fully evinced in the Trust you have imposed on yourself, in viewing every part of the Province, being assured of the deep interest felt by your Excellency for its welfare, and we are grateful for the opportunity of personally expressing to Your Excellency, our acknowledgements for your unceasing efforts in our behalf during your residence in England.

In thus addressing Your Excellency, we upon the experience of the past look forward to a long continuance of enjoying under your mild and benevolent Administration, all the blessings attendant on a just and impartial execution of the Laws of our unalterable Code, Constitution given us by our Mother Country, preserved and kept from Contamination by our Forefathers at such an expence of their Blood—to which and the People of England at the World are so much indebted.

We request to be permitted to offer to Mrs. Gore, our Individual and United Wishes for her happiness, and to adhere her, and Your Excellency, of our respective regards.

Dundas, 4 June, 1816.

To which His Excellency was pleased to make the following Reply.

Gentlemen,

The approbation you so kindly express of my former Administration, affords me much gratification, and I rejoice to say, that my exertions in England for the benefit of this Province, are amply rewarded by the cordial welcome which I have experienced since my return.

The bravery and self devotion manifested on all occasions by the Militia in defence of the Country, and by none more than those of this District, have claimed the thanks of His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, and enhanced your Claims to the protection and regard of His Paternal Government.

I regret that owing to an indisposition of the Law, by the two Commanding Officers of the Militia of this District, I am deprived of the pleasure of meeting them to day, as I had fully intended ; but I promise myself this satisfaction at no very distant period, of which due Notice will be given.

Accept, Gentlemen, my acknowledgements for the good wishes you have been pleased to express.

Ancaster, June 4, 1816.

Foreign Intelligence.

English and French Journals.

The late arrivals from Europe have given us humble files of London and Paris papers to the begining of April. Our readers, we know do not expect they can furnish any events of extra-importance.

In both kingdoms the Legislative bodies were engaged in the discussion of laws and regulation for healing the wounds of war—restoring prosperity—and perpetuating peace. Great retrenchments of expences were demanded in both Countries, and some were in operation. The army and navy had been greatly reduced.

In England, the ministry had found their majority again decisive, after the vote on the income tax had passed; and the public funds had found their usual elevation. Taxes which pressed hard on the farmers had been diminished, & other indulgences had been shewn them.

The illness of the prince Regent (an inveterate gout) had retarded some branches of public business,—the marriage of the Princess CHARLOTTE was to be celebrated the 16th of April; and splendid preparations were making to notice the event. The Prince of Conbourg had been naturalized, and was to be created an English Duke. The reports of changes of the Ministry both in England and France were mere vagaries of paragraphists.

In France the ordinary business of the state advanced, but with congressional dilatoriness. The councils there too had a princely marriage on the tapis, and had voted, with acclamation, an establishment to the Duke of Berri, who is to marry a grand-daughter of the King of Naples—and thus, probably perpetuate the Bourbon dynasty. Having, in the examples of Ney and Labedoyere, shewn that the sword of the law could reach the guilty however elevated, Louis was demonstrating that "mercy was his darling attribute."—Boyer, Debelle and Tryvot, generals who had been condemned to death, had had their sentences commuted for imprisonment;—which would probably be soon succeeded by liberation. The Paris papers give full evidence that settled tranquility was the expectation of the Kingdom.

Austria had reduced her army more than 200,000—Russia and Prussia were pursuing a similar policy; and we again pronounce, that continued peace was the hope and prospect of all Europe.—Boston Cent.

FROM LATE LONDON PAPERS

Population of the United Kingdom.

During the war of 1756. it was disputed, between Brakenridge and Foster, whether the people had increased or diminished, & what was their amount? But without any decision. During the colonial war, Dr. Price reviewed the same question, but what was more successfully opposed; he insisted, that there could not be more than 5,000,000 of inhabitants in England and Wales, his opponents shewed, from very suffi ient and Wales, upwards of 8,447,000 souls. These contrarieties of opinion were at length settled by the Parliamentary enumeration of 1801, which, in opposition to the doctrine of Dr. Price, found in England and Wales 9,340,000 souls; but, did the population continue to increase, during the subsequent war? Yes; as the people had continued to multiply during the wars of 1756 and 1776, so did they multiply during the war of 1803; for the parliamentary enumeration of 1811, found, in England and Wales, 10,150,615. The state of the inhabitants of Scotland, at successive periods, gives the same results; in 1801 the enumeration found 1,618,303 souls in that country; the enumeration of 1811 found 1,805,000. The same observation equally applies to Ireland, the population of Ireland, when the Union was formed, in 1801, was supposed to be 4,000,000; by the late imperfect enumeration in 1814, it appeared that Ireland contained nearly 6,000,000 of people. It is a fact, then, that the people of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland have increased, during the late long wars, to 17,208,918 souls, and continue to increase and multiply.

From the Raleigh Minerva, N. C. May 10

John Randolph—We some time ago learned verbally that a duel was expected between this gentleman, and Mr. Robertson of New Orleans. This was the quarrel. Mr. Randolph took occasion in debate to say that "the interests of Virginia would always be supported by her true sons. She had nothing to ask or expect from any renegadoes"—Mr. Robertson, (who was born in Virginia, but now resides in New Orleans) demanded to know of Mr. Randolph if he intended this remark on him. Mr. Randolph folded his arms, and eyes Mr. Robertson from head to foot with a look of ineffable contempt, but made no reply. Mr. Speaker expressed a hope that suitable explanations would be made. Mr. Randolph took no other notice of this than turning to the speaker the same look that he had directed to Mr. Robertson. The next day Mr. Robertson sent a challenge to Mr. Randolph. So much we heard several days ago, and a rencounter was expected—but we have since learned that the invitation was declined by Mr. Randolph; and that in reply, he denied the right of Mr. Robertson to ask for an explanation of words of a general import used on debate. There were other obvious reasons, Mr. Randolph remarked, why he should not accept the challenge; nor did he feel himself at all times bound to accept an invitation to the field by any man who might be willing to risk his life. He, however, should hold himself always prepared to repel attacks which might be made, presuming on this refusal. The matter ended here.

Origin of Canadian Belts or Sashes.

Lord Berners informs us, in his celebrated translation of the Chronicle of Froisart, that there exists among the French people an ancient Custom, at once religious and gallant, which was at first introduced by the children of Clovis in the early Ages of the Monarchy; when a young Maid was led to the Altar of Hymen, a belt was provided by the Bridegroom which the officiating Priest blessed, and then presented it to the Bride, who taking the Bridegroom by the hand conducted him before the Image of the Holy Virgin, where both knelt, and repeated a prayer, which being ended, the Bride arose, and tied the consecrated Belt round the waist of the Bride-groom. This ornament was more or less costly according to the circumstances of the parties and was called "Le ceinture on Nuptial" The first French settlers introduced the belt in Canada, and instructed the Indians in the art of wearing it, thereby preserving one of the most ancient and gallant customs of their Fore-fathers.

LIBEL.

A suit has been brought in England by Mr. Wedderburne Webster and wife, against the proprietors of St. James' Chronicle, for a libel imputing to Lady W. a criminal intercourse with the Duke of Wellington. The crime was insinuated to have been committed at Brussels about the time of the battle of Waterloo when certainly the Duke was too busy at Mount St. Jean, to attack any fortress at Brussels that required a long siege.—The innocency of the Lady was amply vindicated, and the Jury gave a verdict against the Printers, 2000*l*.

Lady W. is about 24 years of age, remarkable for delicacy of deportment as well as personal accomplishments, and the daughter of the Earl of Mountmorris. The printers made no defence, but expressed contrition for their error.

Had the publication been founded, it would have weakened Mr. Phillip's position in favor of the ladies of Ireland, as Miss Webster is a native of this country.

Capt. Stocke, of the brig Georgiana, arrived here from Rio de la Plata, gives the following information:—That Gen. Rondeau, commander in chief of the Patriot army, was within 30 leagues of Potosi, the capital of Peru, where he had recruited after joining the battle on the 25th Dec. last. He had been reinforced by 2000 men, and a great number of muskets from Buenos Ayres, he was re-organizing his army, and preparing to march against the enemy again, was as in Potosi. It was generally understood that the force assembled in Mendoza, ready to pass the Cordelieras, to re capture Chili, would not march, or attempt it before the Andes were shut again with snow. The members chosen to a Congress had met in the city of Tucuman, but had not commenced their deliberations. Gen Artigas, who commands the East side of the river, called the Banda Oriental, and who has been opposed to Buenos Ayres ever since the surrender of Monte Video, has recommenced hostilities and taken possession of Santa Fe, situated 100 leagues on the river above Buenos Ayres, and it was said he was marching against the capital. He is a plain sensible man, a real Patriot, and it is very probable he will govern the country. A dispute has taken place between the government and the commander of the British frigate Orpheus, stationed in La Plata, which give rise to a warm and inflaming correspondence on the subject of smuggling money and harboring on board the frigate prisoners to the Government. The Capt. embarked with his officers much exasperated, & threatened to sail from the river; but he had not, and it would all end in nothing. Capt. Fabius of the Orpheus, letters were not published.

Separation of Maine.

The votes upon the Question of Separation, are to be taken this day, throughout the District of MAINE. The citizens are to assemble in their respective towns and plantations, and give in their votes for or against the question; the returns of which are to be reported to the Legislature, by the proper officers. Should there appear a majority, to a separation the measure will be fully discussed; but involving as it does, a mass of general and local considerations, no definite step can be expected to be taken on the subject during the short period of a summer session. Conversations have been held in most of the counties, and the inhabitants pretty well informed as to the advantages or disadvantages, which must result from a change of their present situation.

The Richmond Enquirer says, there was frost in the vicinity of that place, on the 8th May; and the Philadelphia Press, announces a similar occurrence in the environs of Philadelphia on the 15th.

quainting the Public, that the Insurgents of Barbadoes have been subdued and tranquility have been taken and executed; that many have been killed during the operations, with the loss of only two or three lives on the part of the inhabitants; and that trials and punishments in the most exemplary style, were still going on against the offenders.

FRENCH POLICY.

From a file of the French Papers, we observe that on the 7th Feb. there were two ordinances for Louis XVIII relative to the premiums of the cod and whale Fisheries.

For three years, all the vessels employed in the cod fishery, near the island of St. Pierre and Miquelon, and on the coast of Newfoundland, called the great Fishery, are allowed a premium of 50 francs per man, from the captain to the cabin boy. Those fishing on the Dogger bank, and the great bank of Newfoundland, have a premium of 15 francs, from the captain to the cabin boy.

There are also various premiums allowed for the French vessels exporting from France or from the fisheries, codfish to the French colonies, into Spain, Portugal, Italy, or the ports in the Levant.

As regards the whale Fisheries, vessels employed in that trade are allowed a premium of 50 francs per ton; and in case the vessels have doubled Cape Horn, or crossed the straights of Magellan, and fished in the Pacific Ocean, having been absent for upwards of 16 months, and less than 26, the merchant or owner is allowed a second premium of 50 francs per ton, on per safe arrival into a port of France.

Merchants engaged in this business, are allowed for three years to make use of foreign vessels, which shall be na-without any expence; and two thirds officers and crew, are allowed to be foreigners.

From England.

The British April Packet, has arrived at New York, from Falmouth (Eng.) bringing London dates to the evening of the 6th April. They contain no political news of importance. Reductions, in every possible way, appear to be going forward in Parliament; and every exertion is making to lighten the burdens which at present bear so heavily on the country. The attention of Parliament is altogether taken up with this subject, and with the consideration of such measures as may tend effectually to relieve the distress of the agricultural interest. The malt and other taxes which particularly affect it, have already been abolished. The valiant corps of Life Guards have now mounted their Waterloo medals. The name of each man is stamped on the exergue; never was military honor more gallantly earned or military merit more deservedly rewarded.

The French Government, we learn, have relinquished all claims to the island of St. Domingo; and intelligence of this act of magnanimity in Louis 18th has been communicated to CHRISTOPHE, by our late fellow citizen PRINCE SAUN-DERS.—Boston paper.

DISCUSSION OF THE FRENCH WORKS OF ART.

[Owing, in some measure, to a mistaken movement of Bonaparte, the conquest of Paris, by the Continental Allies, in March 1814, was effected with but little comparative resistance; but the Second Conquest of that city, was the result of a hard fought battle, in which the whole vast force of the French army, was completely routed and put to flight—it may be said—by the unequalled prowess of British troops alone.—Every public document, therefore, relating to that truly great and glorious achievement, and the events which follow it, must ever afford a proud gratification to the feelings of the British reader.]

NOTE.—Delivered in by Viscount Castlereagh to the Allied Ministers and placed upon their Protocol.—

PARIS, Sept. 11th, 1815

Representations having been laid before the Ministers of the Allied Powers from the Pope, the Grand Duke of Tuscany, the King of the Netherlands, and other Sovereigns, claiming through the intervention of the High Allied Powers, the restoration of the Statues, Pictures, and other works of Art of which their respective States have been successively and systematically stripped by the late revolutionary government of France, contrary to every principle of justice, and to the usages of modern warfare; the same having been referred for the consideration of his court, the undersigned has received the commands of the Prince Regent, to submit, for the consideration of his Allies, the following remarks upon this interesting subject:—

It is now the second time that the Powers of Europe have been compelled, in vindication of their own liberties, and the settlement of the world, to invade France, and twice their armies have possessed themselves of the State in which spoils of the greater part of Europe, are accumulated.

The legitimate Sovereign of France has also been enabled to resume his throne, and to mediate for his people a peace with the Allies, to the marked indulgencies of which neither their conduct to their own Monarch, nor towards other States, had given them just pretensions to aspire.

That the purest sentiments of regard for Louis XVIII, deference for his ancient and illustrious House, and respect for his misfortunes, have guided invariably the Allied Councils, have been proved beyond a question by their having last year, framed the Treaty of Paris expressly on the basis of preserving to France its complete integrity, and still more, after their late disappointment, by the endeavours they are again making, ultimately to combine the substantial integrity of France, with such an adequate system of temporary precaution as may satisfy what they owe to the security of their own subjects.

But it would be the height of weakness as well as of injustice and its effects much more likely to mislead than to bring back the people of France to moral and peaceful habits, if the Allied Sovereigns, to whom the world is anxiously looking up for protection and repose, were to deny that principle of necessity in its just and liberal application to other nations, their Allies, (more especially to the feeble and helpless,) which they are about, for the second time, to concede against a nation whom they have had occasion so long to contend in war.

Upon what principle can France, at a close of such a war, expect to sit down with the same extent of possessions which she held before the Revolution, and desire at the same time to retain the ornamental spoils of all her countries? Is it, that there can exist a doubt of the issue of the contest, or of the Allies to effectuate what justice and policy require? If not, upon what principle deprive France of her late territorial acquisitions, and preserve to her the spoliations appertaining to those territories which all modern conquerors have invariably respected, as inseparable from the country to which they belonged?

The Allied Sovereigns have perhaps something to atone for to Europe, in consequence of the course pursued by them when at Paris during the last year. It is true, they never did so far make themselves parties in the criminality of this mass of plunder, as to sanction it by any stimulation in their Treaties; such a recognition has been on their part uniformly refused; but they certainly did use their influence to repress at that moment, any agitation of their claims, in the hope, that France not less subdued by their generosity than by their arms might be disposed to preserve inviolate a peace which had been studiously framed to serve as a bond of reconciliation, between the nation and King. They had also reason to expect that his Majesty would be advised voluntarily to restore a considerable proportion at least of these spoils to their lawful owners.

But the question is a very different one now and to pursue the same course under circumstances so essentially altered, would be, in the judgment of the Prince Regent, equally unwise towards France, and unjust towards our Allies, who have a direct interest in the question.

His Royal Highness, in stating this opinion feels it necessary to guard against the possibility of misrepresentation.

While he deems it to be the duty of the Allied Sovereigns not only not to obstruct but to facilitate, upon the present occasion, the return of these objects to the places from whence they were torn, it seems not less consistent with their delicacy, not to suffer the position of their armies in France, or the removal of these works from the Louvre, to become the means, either directly or indirectly of bringing within their dominions a single article which did not of right, at the period of their conquest, belong either to their respective family collections, or to the countries over which they now actually reign.

Whatever value the Prince Regent might attach to such requisite specimens of the arts, if otherwise acquired, he has no wish to become possessed of them at the expence of France, or rather of the countries to which they of right belong, more especially by following up a principle in war which he considers as a reproach to the nation by which it has been adopted, and so far from wishing to take advantage of the occasion to purchase from the rightful owners any articles they might, from pecuniary considerations be disposed to part with, His Royal Highness would on the contrary, be disposed rather to afford the means of replacing them in those very temples and galleries, of which they were so long the ornaments.

Were it possible that His Royal Highness's sentiments towards the person and cause of Louis XVIII could be brought into doubt, or that the position of His Most Christian Majesty would be injured in the eyes of his own people, the Prince Regent would not come to this conclusion without the most painful reluctance; but on the contrary His Royal Highness really believes that His Majesty will rise in the love and respect of his own subjects, in proportion as he separates himself from the remembrances of revolutionary warfare. Those ties, which impede a moral reconciliation between France and the countries she has invaded, are not necessary to record the exploits of her armies, which, however unjust, can be traced to which they were achieved, must ever make the arms of the nation respected abroad. But what title of objects remain in Paris, connected, as it were the title deeds of the conquests which have been given up, the restoration of remaining those seem to rest upon a still stronger principle of right, as they belong to France, will never be altogether extinct; nor will the genius of the French people ever completely assimilate itself with the most limited extent assigned to the nation under the Bourbons.

Neither is this opinion given with any disposition on the part of the Prince Regent to humiliate the French nation. His Royal Highness's general policy, the demeanour of his troops in France, his having seized the first moment of Bonaparte's surrender, to restore to France the freedom of her commerce, and, above all, the desire he has recently evinced to preserve intimately to France her territorial integrity, with certain modifications essential to the security of neighbouring States, are the best proofs that a consideration of justice to others, a desire to heal the wounds inflicted by the Revolution, and not any illiberal sentiment towards France, have alone dictated this decision.

The whole question resolves itself into this: Are the Powers of Europe now forming sincerity a permanent settlement with the King? And if so, upon what principles shall it be concluded. Shall it be upon the conservation or the abandonment of revolutionary spoliations?

Can the King feel his own dignity exalted, or his title improved, in being surrounded by monuments of art, which record not less the sufferings of his own illustrious House, than of the other nations of Europe? If the French people be desirous of treading back their steps, can they rationally desire to preserve this source of animosity between them and all other nations; and, if they are not, is it polite to flatter their vanity, and to keep alive the hopes which the contemplation of these trophies are calculated to excite? Can even the army reasonably desire it? The recollection of their campaigns can never perish. They are recorded in the military annals of Europe. They are emblazoned on the public monuments of their own country: why is it necessary to associate their glory in the field with a system of plunder, by the acquisition of which in contravention of the law of modern war, the Chief that led them to battle in fact tarnished the lustre of their arms?

If we are really to return to peace and to ancient maxims, it cannot be wise to preserve just so much of the abuses of the past; nor can the King desire, out of the wreck of the Revolution, of which his family has been one of the chief victims, to perpetuate in his house this odious monopoly of arts. The splendid collection which France possessed previous to the Revolution, augmented by the Borghese collection, which has since been purchased (one of the finest in the world), will afford to the King ample means of ornamenting, in the fair proportion, the capital of his empire, and His Majesty may divest himself of this tainted source of distinction, without prejudice to the due cultivation of the arts in France.

In applying a remedy to this offensive evil, it does not appear that any middle line can be adopted, which does not go to recognize a variety of spoliations, under the cover of treaties, if possible more flagrant in their character than the acts of undisguised rapine, by which these remains were in general brought together.

The principle of property regulated by the claims of the territories from whence these works were taken, is the surest and only guide to justice; and perhaps there is nothing which would more tend to settle the public mind of Europe at this day, than such an homage, on the part of the King of France, to a principle of virtue, conciliation and peace.

N THE FOOD OF HORSES.

(From the Cornwall Gazette)

.—As the season is approaching farmers are obliged to keep their s on the most expensive food, it not be inconsistent with the object ur valuable paper to make some rations upon the food most con- to their constitution.

y, farmer, or farming servant, sh you, from experience, though s not know why, that a horse is se to keep his condition, whilst in ure, upon succulent grasses and ood; yet perhaps, these grasses and this food contain all the ingredients necessary for the nourishment of the animal; for instance, they may contain their proper proportions of mucilage, sugar, gluten, and extract; but these alone are not sufficient, there must be a very considerable quantity of woody fibre, and epidermis, or that silicious covering which oats in particular and several other plants possess.

Most of your readers will own that their horses do better with cut straw and chaff, mixed with their usual portion of oats, than when the corn is given alone; and this is generally supposed to be because it occasions the horses to chew the corn better; but that is not the only reason—the very nature of the straw, through possessing a very small quantity of nutriment, the silicious coat and woody fibre, are highly serviceable to the horse.

There are several of our meadow grasses which contain more nutritive matter than the artificial grasses now in common use, yet I have found by experience that they will not maintain a working horse in such high condition, even with corn, by the difference of one quart of oats a day, as the more woody, hollow, and brittle-stalked plants; and in evidence to this I beg leave to call your attention to Lucern, which though generally acknowledged to be the most nutritious green food known for horses, contains less nutritive matter than any other of the artificial grasses.

I need not tell you that barley is an excellent substitute for oats, if mixed with cut straw, but not good without it.

Neat cattle feed the best upon broad-leaved grasses, such as clover, sainfoin, &c. when just coming into flower and upon hay cut from grass in that state; but it is not so with horses: clover full blown, and vetches and trefoil in, after the flowers are faded have been found to be the most serviceable to them, I should therefore recommend to those whose soil in summer both cattle and horses, to give the plants in the youngest state to the former, and such as are come to maturity for the use of the latter. In the winter when hay is given, let it by all means be composed of the artificial grasses, both as the most economical and best adapted to the purpose. For my own part, I keep many horses during most of the winter without any hay at all, and I find them both able to do their work, and in the highest condition, if fed upon any of the various kinds of straw cut, Swedish turnips, and a very moderate allowance of oats.

As the cheapest and most valuable winter food, I cannot too earnestly recommend the use of the Swedish turnips. Horses are in the autumn liable to disease in the blood, either from a change of food, or other causes, and I have invariably found the Swedish turnips to supercede most effectually the use of medicine whilst it is answering every other purpose; it is a diuretic, and not a laxative; it not only purifies the blood, but carries off those caseous secretions for which diuretic salts are so much in use; and thereby prevents the recurrence of that dangerous complaint, inflamation at the neck of the bladder commonly called the belly ache.—*Cor. LONDON, MARCH 16.

It is gratifying to observe the growing increase of the exports from this country to British North America. In 1814, they amounted in value to 4 070 937 sterling, exclusive of the freight in British ships. The accounts for the last year are not yet made up. We are satisfied that if this trade is properly encouraged, it will afford constant employment, not only to our shipping interest, but also to our manufacturers, who will find in the new countries to the west of the Ohio, Mississippi, &c. an increasing demand for their woollens, linens, &c. The rapid increase of the white population in those countries almost exceeds belief; and the difficulties of supply, across the high lands, from the United States, or up those great rivers from New Orleans, afford us such advantage of supply by the St. Lawrence, that it will be attributable to our own neglect and folly, if we do not reap the benefits which the possession of the Canadas, and the water communication with the great Lakes give us. At a trifling expense, and in a very short period, the communication with the Lakes from Montreal might be so improved, as to enable the traders to avoid all the portages; and in time of war, to relieve them from passing by a long line of the enemy's frontier. We wish to direct the attention of our manufacturers and ship owners to British North America; as we are convinced, from the advantages before alluded to, and the exclusion of the Americans from the fisheries on the coasts of these provinces, the most lasting benefits are to be derived; while the possession of them will add to the naval and military power of the Empire.

The Prince Regent is so perfectly restored to health, as to be able to transact official business with all the Cabinet Ministers, and will have a public levee in the course of a few days.

Captain Sir Edward W. Owen, late Commander in chief on the Lakes in Canada, is appointed to the command of the Royal Sovereign yacht, lately commanded by Captain Adams.

Rear-Admiral Sir Pulteney Malcom is appointed to succeed Sir George Cockburn in the command at St. Helena, the Cape of Good Hope, and the Mauritius. Sir Pulteney arrived at Portsmouth on Thursday morning, and hoisted his flag in the Newcastle, 50, Captain Maynell. He will sail for the command in about ten days—The Russian and French Commissioners will go out in the Newcastle; and the Orontus will take Baron Sturmer, the Austrian Commissioner.

The King of Prussia does not intend to send a Commissioner.

The great expedition against the Algerines was still preparing.

The French Steam Boat Elize is announced to have made a passage from England to Havre in 20 hours, on the 21st March, and went from Havre to Rouen in the same space of time against the current. The Prince of Volhonski, aid-de-camp of the Emperor of Russia and Mr. Gouriff, attached to the Russian embassy, embarked at Rouen to observe her machinery and manœuvres.

Politicians are at a loss to decide what is meant by the arming which continues in Hungary. Letters announce the movement of a large body of troops in the Kingdom.

Fires—The papers are filled with accounts of fires in the highlands and mountains in the New-England states, and the states of New-York and Pennsylvania. Owing to the long drought which prevailed, the woods caught fire like tinder, and much damage has been sustained. In many instances, the inhabitants of neighbouring settlements have been compelled to sally out to save their dwellings from destruction. The smoke and cinders from the fire, together with a thick and hazy atmosphere, for a great part of the time obscured the Sun.—ib.

OFFICIAL ACCOUNTS of the rencontre between the English Brig NAUTILUS, and the American Ship PEACOCK in the Strait of Sunda, 30th June, 1815.

[The Captain of the Peacock, finding he had the superiority, was resolved to shew his mettle, notwithstanding he had received information enough to convince any reasonable man of a Peace having taken place.—His insisting that the English colours should be hauled down, in token of the Peace, surpasses every thing—as he well knew such a disgraceful demand would not be complied with.—The men on either side, who lost their lives and limbs in the action, which ensued, must be scored to the account of Capt. Warrington, who, on this occasion covered himself with infamy, instead of glory, by a wanton attack and an unnecessary effusion of blood.]

[Gazette Remark

To Henry Meriton, Superintendent of the Honourable Company's Marine Bombay

SIR—I avail myself of the earliest opportunity to inform you of the capture of the Honorable Company's cruizer Nautilus, by the American sloop of war Peacock, Capt. Warrington, mounting 22 guns and two hundred and thirty men, on the 30th June, off Anjeir, in the Straits of Sunda, after a gallant and spiritted defence of a quarter of an hour against so superior a force. I regret to report that the Nautilus had seven men killed, and seven severely wounded; amongst the latter, Lieutenant Boyce, the Commander, and Mr. Mayston, First Lieutenant.

As Lieutenant Boyce and Mr. Mayston (from the dangerous state they have been in) have not been able to send any official report to government, the following particulars of the action have been received from the Resident and Commandant at Anjer, in which place the wounded were landed, the morning after the action, when the Nautilus was given up by the American to the Master Mr. Bradley.

The Nautilus sailed from Batavia on the 29th June, with dispatches for Calcutta, and the next day, towards evening, fell in with the Peacock off Anjer. Previous to the departure of the Nautilus, intelligence of the ratification of peace between England and America had been received at Batavia and a copy of the treaty was on board the Nautilus. Lieutenant Boyce suspecting that the Peacock was an American ship, although under English colours, sent his boat on board with the Master, and Cornet White (an officer going as passenger to Bengal.) The commander of the American, disregarding the intelligence they give him of peace having taken place, confined them and the boat's crew below, and ranged up alongside the Nautilus under English colours, when Lieut. Boyce hailed, and demanded to know whether he was coming as a friend or an enemy; the answer was, "as an enemy," and the English colours were shifted for the American; Lieut. Boyce then told him that peace had been concluded between the United States and England, and that he had the proclamation of peace on board. The American answered, "if Peace has taken place haul down your colours instantly," which, on Lieut. Boyce's refusing to do, a gun was fired into the Nautilus, which wounded Lieut. Boyce in the hip; the Nautilus returned a broadside, and the action commenced, and continued about a quarter of an hour, when Lieut. Boyce having received a second wound from a 32lb shot, shattered his knee, the First Lieutenant being severely wounded, and no officer left to fight the vessel, (the master and a boat's crew being prisoners on board the American,) the Nautilus was compelled to surrender. The conduct of the American Commander appears to have been most unwarrantable, as there is no doubt but what he was in possession of the accounts of peace having taken place, before he fell in with the Nautilus, which got from a merchant ship he took at the entrance of the Straits; besides, the Master Attendant at Anjier had boarded him half an hour before he came alongside of the Nautilus, and informed him of the peace, which he equally disregarded, and detained him as a prisoner of war, although the next morning (upon the same information) he allowed the master attendant to go on shore at Anjeir, for the purpose of producing to him American papers, containing the Proclamation of Peace. On seeing the papers, he professed himself satisfied, and wrote an official letter to the Master attendant, saying, "that from the documents produced, he had no doubt but peace had taken place, he felt himself bound to desist from further hostilities, and regretted that the Commander of the Brig Nautilus did not comply with his reasonable request."

The Nautilus was delivered to the master on the 1st July, and anchored at Anjeir, where the wounded were landed with the Surgeon, and the vessel returned to Batavia Roads on the 4th. On her arrival government ordered a Commission from the Bench of Magistrates to proceed on board and take the depositions of the crew respecting the transactions, copies of which I have the honor to enclose.

As Lieutenant Hepburn, commander of the Malabar was the senior officer at Batavia, when the Nautilus returned, I understand he has ordered one of the officers of the Malabar to take temporary charge of her, and she was sent in company with the Malabar to Samarag, for the purpose of getting repaired, being much shattered in her hull.

I am happy to hear that the latest accounts from Anjeir, give great hopes of Lieutenant Boyce's recovery; his leg had been amputated above the knee, and he was as well as could be expected. The first Lieutenant, whose wound at first was thought to be mortal, had been declared out of danger, the rest of the wounded are doing well.

As soon as any official report is received from Lieutenant Boyce, or the First Lieutenant, I shall do myself the honor of forwarding it by the first opportunity.

(Signed) WM. EARWELL, Capt.

H. C. C. Bepares, Batavia Roads, 22d July, 1815.

By Order of the Right Hon. the Governor in Council.

FROM THE NATIONAL INTELLIGENCER.

Extract of a letter from Captain Lewis Warrington, to the Secretary of the Navy, dated U. S. Ship Peacock, Nov. 11, 1815.

As it is probable you will hereafter see or hear some other account of a rencontre which took place between the Peacock and the English East India Company's brig Nautilus, on the 30th June last, in the Straits of Sunda, I take the liberty of making known to you the particulars.

In the afternoon of that day, when abreast of Anjeir, as we closed with this brig, which appeared evidently to be a vessel of war, and completely prepared for action, her commander hailed, and asked if I knew there was a peace? I replied in the negative—directing him at the same time to haul his colours down, if it were the case, in token of it—adding, if he did not, I should fire into him. This being refused, one of the forward guns was fired at her, which was immediately returned by a broadside from the brig; our broadside was then discharged, and his colours were struck, after having six Lascars killed, and seven or eight wounded. As we had not the most distant idea of peace, and this vessel was but a short distance from the fort of Anjeir, I considered his assertion, coupled with his arrangements for action, a finesse on his part to amuse us, till he could place himself under the protection of the fort. A few minutes before coming in contact with the brig, two boats containing the master attendant at Anjeir, and an Officer of the army, came on board, and as we were in momentary expectation of firing, they were with their men passed below. I concluded they had been misled by the British colours, under which we had passed by the Straits. No questions, in consequence, were put to them, and they very improperly omitted mentioning that peace existed. The next day, after receiving such intelligence as they had to communicate on this subject, (no part of which was official) I gave up the vessel, first stopping her shot holes, and putting her rigging in order.

I am aware that I may be blamed for ceasing hostilities without more authentic evidence that Peace had been concluded; but I trust, sir, when our distance from home, with the little chance we had of receiving such evidence, are taken into consideration, I shall not be thought to have decided prematurely.

By the Brig Francis, Captain Roach, of Portland; 44 days from Liverpool, we have received London Papers to the 18th April, Liverpool to the 19th, and a London Price Current of the 16th.

The Docks at Liverpool were thronged with shipping, and business in general was very dull. Cotton was advancing a little in price; Ashes on the decline; and Lumber would not pay freight and duty.

the Ship Briſtol Trader, Capt. Barton, in 40 political events of magnitude, although in the daily receipt of mails, from almoſt every part of continental Europe. A few extracts follow:

The propoſals of Sir Sidney Smith for a cruſade againſt the Barbary States, are repreſented to have made a conſiderable impreſſion upon the Dey of Algiers. Strengthened by the miſſion of an envoy from the Grand Seignior, whoſe nominal Sovereignty is ſtill acknowledged by theſe pirates, it has induced the Dey to liberate 153 Greek and 8 Auſtrian captives.

Some German papers contain an account of a diſturbance having broken out in the eaſtern part of France, in which ſeveral of the Auſtrian troops were wounded. The diſbanded French ſoldiers, aided by the peaſantry, had riſen in the neighbourhood of Be-under the neceſſity of putting them down by force. In conſequence of this diſturbence,

Inſurrection at Barbadoes.—By the Am from St. Vincent, we learn that an inſurrec tion had taken place at Barbadoes, and tha ſuch was the degree of anxiety and alarm occaſioned by the event, that an embargo ha been laid in St. Vincent. About 2000 ne groes loſt their lives in Barbadoes, and two whites who were ringleaders; only three other white perſons loſt their lives.

It appears that the ſlaves, under an im preſſion that their friends in England, ha obtained their freedom, demanded of their maſters payment for their labour which wa of courſe refuſed; theſe deluded people im mediately ſet fire to the eſtates, and ſucceed-ed, as is ſtated, in deſtroying about 80 in the north part of the Iſland. The negroes ſtood the fire of the troops and militia, until the field pieces were brought up, when they fled in every direction.

A Sergeant of the Inniskilling dragoons, who is now quartered in Exeter, received in the battle of Waterloo, 13 ſabre wounds in his body, a musket ball paſſed through his thigh, and both his arms were broken. In this ſtate he lay on the field of battle, amidſt a heap of ſlain, from Sunday to the Tueſday evening following, when the perſons employed to bury the dead, obſerving ſome ſigns of life in him, he was conveyed to the hoſpital, where he happily recovered, and the brave fellow is now in perfect health.

Princeſs Charlotte of England, engroſſes moſt of John Bull's attention and converſation. All accounts agree ſhe is altogether unlike the general female character of the age, and that in her manners and maxims ſhe copies the great but eccentric Elizabeth. The following anecdotes of her are told on prime authority.

Being at Weymouth on a jaunt in her yacht, ſhe came near the Leviathan 74, and reſolved to go on board. The biſhop of Exeter, her tutor, remonſtrated againſt it, but in vain; go ſhe would.
When ſhe came along ſide the ſtare chair was rigged out, but ſhe refuſed to uſe it, and ordering Capt. Nixon to follow and take care of her petticoats, ſhe mounted the ſhip's ſide like a ſailor, leaving the biſhop and her ladies to come up in the chair. She went through every part of the ſhip, cockpit, powder room, &c. and examined every thing.
The tars were delighted with her, and ſhe gave them a purſe of money. She then deſcended as ſhe went up, and again left the chair to the biſhop and the ladies.

Her temper like Elizabeth's is not of the ſweeteſt compoſitions, and the biſhop frequently expoſtulated with her againſt the indulgence of angry paſſion, as degrading to her dignity and ſex. Not long after one of theſe lectures, a page bringing her a pair of ſhoes which did not fit, ſhe chaſed him with the heel of it. The Biſhop again expoſtulated; when ſhe ſmartly replied.—"*Lord Sir,
I did not forget your counſel! for I'm ſure if I had not prayed for forbearance,
I muſt have ſtabbed the fellow.*

ECCENTRICITIES OF COM-MERCE.

Every one has heard of the folly of " ſending coals to New-Caſtle." In modern days we find trade ſo capricious that adventures analogous to the coals of New-Caſtle, are entered into, and not unfrequently prove productive. Cotton has been ſent from New York to Charleston. Molaſſes is imported into the United States from Scotland,—and what may appear even more extraordinary is, that a ſhip is now loading at our wharves for London, and has engaged for freight twenty-four packages or caſes of Britiſh Dry Goods!—Phila. Paper.

We received this morning the Moniteur of Monday laſt. The minor Paris papers of that date are not arrived. The Moniteur contains a Royal Ordnance for diſbanding or expelling all the pupils in the Polytechnic School. They have already been guilty of diſobedience to the orders of their maſters, which ſays the ordnance, "proves that theſe pupils would, if they were introduced into the public ſervice, introduce the want of diſcipline with which they are animated."
They are ordered forthwith to return to their families, and a commiſſion is to be appointed to prepare a new organization of the School.

On the 30th ult to the weſt of this and every ſoul on board periſhed. Among the unfortunate victims were, the widow of the late Engliſh Miniſter, Percival, appears that Mrs. Percival was on her way to France, to paſs the winter with Miscellaneous.

LONDON.

AFRICAN TRADE.

The African Inſtitution have lately publiſhed the ninth Report of the proceedings of that Body. We learn from this Report that ſince the Abolition of the Slave Trade, the imports from the Gold Coaſt have greatly increaſed; and it may be ſtated, upon the undoubted authority of intelligent perſons well acquainted with the facts, that the importations have amounted, during the laſt five or ſix years, to the annual value of 120,000*l.* to 180,000*l.*—The annual import of gold alone is ſtated to be about 30,000 ounces. Thus it appears that the importation from the Gold Coaſt alone (a ſpace of 250 miles) into Great Britain, ſince the abolition of the Slave Trade, has been double the amount of the importation from the whole Slave Coaſt of Africa (an extent of 3,400 miles) prior to that event.—A further example may be taken from the Colony of Sierre Leone, where a Cuſtom Houſe was firſt eſtabliſhed in 1812: from whence accounts have been furniſhed of imports and exports into and from that colony during the two years ending in may 1814. The amount of the imports during that period, on which duties were actually paid, was 103,080*l.* 15*s.* 4*d.* being the alledged prime coſt of the goods, even without the coſt of packages. In order to obtain the invoice price of the goods, one-third, at leaſt, muſt be added to the prime coſt, for neceſſary charges. The amount will then be about 140,000*l.*; or an average 20,000*l.* annually.—The exports from Sierra Leone, during the ſame period have amounted to 91,539*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* being on an averag, 45,000*l.* annually. The remainder of the imports may be accounted for by the bills of exchange drawn upon this country for the expenſes of the civil eſtabliſhments and commiſſariat. Hence it appears, that from the ſingle river of Sierra Leone, the imports into Great Britain were nearly, and the exports to the ſame river fully, equal to the imports and exports (excluſive of the Slave Trade) of the whole extent of the Weſtern Coaſt of Africa prior to the Abolition of that traffic.—The facts here ſtated relative to the extent of our honocent and legitimate commerce with the Weſtern Coaſt af Africa muſt be conſidered as highly intereſting and important both as ſhewing how extremely ſmall that commerce was prior to the abolition of the Slave Trade, and how much it has increaſed during the very few years which have ſince elapſed. This increaſe has certainly been much more conſiderable than there was any good reaſon for expecting, under the actual circumſtances of the caſe.

VOYAGE OF DISCOVERY.

The Congo, accompanied by the Dorothy tranſport, is now in the Downs ready to ſail the firſt fair wind, on a voyage of Diſcovery up the river Zaire, into the heart of Southern Africa. The Congo is about 90 tons, ſchooner rigged, and draws about five feet water; ſhe is fitted up entirely for the accommodation of the officers and men, and for the reception of the Objects of natural hiſtory, which may be collected in her progreſs up the river. The Gentlemen engaged on this intereſting expedition in the ſcientific department, are, Mr. Profeſſor Smith, of Chriſtiana, Botaniſt and Geologiſt; Mr. Todor, Comparative Anatomiſt; Mr. Cranch, Collector of Objects and Natural Hiſtory, and a Gardener to collect Plants and Seeds for His Majeſty's Garden at Kew; beſides Mr. Galway a Gentleman Volunteer. There are alſo two fine Blacks, natives of the kingdom of Congo; one of whom was born about 800 miles up the Zaire.

The Officers are Capt. Tuckey, commanding the expedition; Lieut. Hawkey; Mr. Fitzmorice, Maſter and Surveyor, Mr. M'Kerrow, Aſſiſtant Surgeon; two Maſter's Mates; and a Purſer.

In addition to the Congo, the tranſport takes out two double whale boats, ſo fixed together as to be able to carry 18 or 20 men each; and accommodate them under an awning with three months proviſions, theſe boats are intended to be drawn up to the upper part of any rapids or cataracts, that may occur to obſtruct the paſſage of the Congo. With theſe means there is very little reaſon to doubt, that the ſource of this extraordinary river will not much longer remain a ſecret.

RUSSIAN VOYAGE OF DISCOVERY

Count Nicholas Romanzow, a moſt enlightened and public-ſpirited Ruſſian nobleman, has at his own expence built and equipped a ſhip for a new voyage of diſcovery. This veſſel ſailed from Cronſtadt on the 31ſt July laſt, and has ſince touched at Plymouth on her way out; ſhe is called the Rurick, carries the Ruſſian military flag, and is commanded by Capt. Kotzebue (ſon of the celebrated author of that name) a Lieut. in the Ruſſian Navy, and who has already ſailed round the World in the Nadſehka, Capt. Kruſenſtern, Dr. Eſchholz of the Univerſity of Dorpat; M. Chammiſſo the naturaliſt from Berlin; the Daniſh naturaliſt Wormskild, and the Ruſſian Painter Choris, alſo accompany the expedition. The Rurick, it is ſaid will double Cape Horn in November, and the expedition will employ the whole of 1816 and the beginning of 1817, in viſiting in the South Seas thoſe places which have not been ſufficiently examined. During the ſummer of 1817 they will coaſt along the inner ſhores of America to Behring's Straits, and return by the Straits of Torres, to the Cape of Good Hope; ſo that they will probably return to Cronſtdat in Auguſt 1818. It is left, however, to M. kotzebue to prolong his voyage beyond this period if he thinks it neceſſary for the purpoſe in view. The whole plan of the voyage has been drawn up by Capt. Kruſenſtern.

We give our readers this week what details we have of foreign news. To be ſure they are not of much importance, in the uſual acceptation of the word;—yet they are of great importance, in the opinion of every philanthropiſt, as they ſhow that Europe, ſo lately convulſed and torn by the moſt ſanguinary contests, at length repoſes in the arms of peace. Inſtead of battles—we have now accounts of balls: In place of fighting,—we have ſtatements of feaſts: and in the room of the melancholy murder of millions—we read of magnificent marriages. The Duke of Berri to a Princeſs of Naples:—Prince George Leopold to the Princeſs Charlotte: The king of Netherlands to a Ruſſian Princeſs, &c. &c. That little raſcal Cupid, it ſeems has kicked his father, Mars, out of doors, and aſſumed the reigns of empire himſelf.

Love rules the court, the camp the Grove,
All earth below, and Heaven above,
For love is heaven and Heaven love—At leaſt Walter Scots ſays ſo:

In ſhort the great folks of Europe, having been doing all they could to depopulate Europe, for the laſt 25 years, are now ſeriouſly ſetting about the moſt effectual means to reſtore its numbers—But pleaſant as all this may be to us as men, it cannot be concealed that to us as printers, it is the very Devil. No man cares a fig for the papers. The very ſight of a Gazette, now a days, gives a man a fit of the gapes. In good truth, Bonaparte, with all our abuſe of him, was worth 50 pounds a year in every Printer's pocket.—He was a rare work man at foreign news.

We have been deviſing a plan the week paſt to reſcue him from St. Helena, and ſend him back to Frejus: but as this happy event cannot be immediately expected, we muſt for the preſent content ourſelves with ſuch plain, ſimple fare as peace in the world will afford—ſeaſoned occaſionally with a raſher of domeſtic politics.

If the brothers of the type cant live by theſe means, why, as old friend ſays,—they muſt break up buſineſs and endeavor to get ſome honeſt employment.

London, April 8.

A Brussels Journal comments with ſeverity on the letter which has been propagated and aſcribed to the Duke of Wellington. We never thought this paper worthy of notice, as an authentic document, and only lament that ſuch ill principled and miſchievous fabrications ſhould find their way into the world through the medium of the London preſs.

LONDON, April 13.—This morning the Paris papers of Wednesday were received. The following articles in them deserves most consideration :

On the 11th of April, the Prince Regent gave the Royal assent to the American Commercial Convention bill, the St. Helena trade intercourse bill, and the bill for the more secure detention of Bonaparte.

By an act of Parliament recently passed, it is enacted that 3s. 6d. per ton be paid on all French vessels bringing or carrying passengers or goods between the two countries, to be continued so long as the present high rates are charged on British vessels in France.

Both houses of Parliament adjourned yesterday—the Lords to the 26th, and the Commons to the 24th.

Yesterday, his serene highness Prince Leopold, attended divine service at the parish Church at Brighton, and received the Holy Sacrament. The worthy Vicar of that Parish afterwards dined with Prince Peopold, at the Pavilion.

The Military Club.—The Committee now regularly meet at the house in Albemarle street. General Hamilton superintends all the arrangements. Plans for the new house are in a state of progression ; but as the present residence is taken for two years, it will not be necessary to accelerate the elevation without maturely considering which will be the most eligible mode of accommodating, it is said, 2000 Members. All the principal members of the Naval Club, exceeding 200, have agreed to a junction with the Military one : the others, report states, will join the Albemarle Club. Lord Lynedoch is the Chairman for this season ; but in the next there will be two, viz.—His Royal Highness the Duke of York, and the Duke of Wellington.

THE ROYAL WEDDING.

From the London Gazette, May 3.

The streets in the vicinity of the Royal residence were crowded yesterday with people anxious to obtain a view of the Royal Bride and Bridegroom. The line from Charing Cross to Carlton house, and thence along the Mall in St. James' Park, to the Queen's Palace, was fully occupied, and the business of the day corresponding with the interest of the occasion, to increase the multitude. The open space of the stable yard, in front of Clarence House, the residence of the Prince of Cobourg, was crowded to excess with well dressed people of all claffes.

Prince Leopold very frequently appeared at the balcony, to gratify their curiosity, dreffed in a blue coat and a hat ; he bowed and fmiled at their rejoicings. At ten o'clock, ten beautiful grey horfes, the favourite colour of the Princefs Charlotte, and which had been felected by Sir B. Boomfield for the Prince and Princefs, flopped oppofite to Clarence Houfe, on their way to Oatlands, the refidence of the Duke and Ducheff of York, for the ufe of the Prince and Princefs during their fhort ftay there. His ferene highnefs came out to view them, and appeared highly pleafed with their appearance. At a o'clock his ferene highnefs went in a carriage to Carlton Houfe, and paid a morning vifit to his intended bride. He alfo rode round the exterior of Carlton Houfe to view his new traveling carriage. His ferene highnefs afterwards returned to Clarence Houfe about half paft 3 o'clock, when the crowd became fo great that the footman in letting him out of the carriage, had nearly been puffed under it. A rumber of women and chil.ren were forced into Clarence Houfe againft their will by the extreme preffure. In few minutes after, his ferene highnefs walked across to York Houfe, when the crowd behaved extremely orderly, and at the requeft of a few attendants, formed a clear paffage for him to pafs through ; they however loudly huzzaed him ; and he bowed to the people.

At 4 o'clock the Princess Charlotte of Wales went in a carriage to the Queen's Palace, and had the windows down to gratify the curiofity of the crowd in Pall Mall, which was found to be fo extremely great that the coachman could not, with safety drive through it ; he therefore returned, and went through the Park. Her residence was again thronged with diftinguifhed perfonages. The Prince of Saxe-Cobourg had a select party to dinner, at half past 5 o'clock, at Clarence House.

The Prince Regent had a party to dinner at Carlton House, consisting of the Duke of Clarence, the Lord Chancellor, the Bishop of Exeter, the Right Honourable John M'Mahon, Sir Benjamin Bloomfield, Mr. chancellor Leach, the Rev. Mr. Bloomberg, Sir E Nagle, &c.

A full guard of honour of the grenadier regiment of Foot Guards, preceded by the band of the Cold Stream Regiment of Guards, marched from the parade in St James's Park, into the Courtyard of Carlton House. A party of Life Guards marched into Pall-Mall, with Sir Nathaniel Conant and Mr. Burnie, the Bow-street Magistrates, at the head of about fifty Officers and Constables ; and had it not been for their joint and great exertions, it would have been impossible for the coaches to have drawn up, the street and house adjoining them being literally choaken up with people. The Hall of the Queen's Palace was filled with ladies and gentlemen elegantly dressed, most of them keeping their carriages, so that the Park had a similar appearance to a drawing room, all being anxious to see the lovely Princess and the Royal Family pass, upon this memorable occasion.

About half past seven o'clock, the Princess Sophia of Gloucester, arrived at the Queen's Palace, to join her Majesty and the Princesses to Carlton House. The Princess Charlotte came down the grand staircase in a few minutes, conducted by Princess Augusta on her right, and Colonel Stephenson on her left, and proceeded to the entrance of the Grand Hall, where she was met by the Queen.

The crowd in the Park exceeded all description. The voice of the people cheered Princess Charlotte loudly all the way to Carlton House, but the greatest order and decorum prevailed, although such an immense body of people. They entered Carlton House by the garden gate, where they were received by the Prince Regent ; they arrived exactly at eight o'clock.

The Prince of Saxe-Cobourg left Clarence House a little before half past eight o'clock.

On his coming out to get into his carriage, he was assailed by numbers of females patting him on the back, and calling for blessings on him, &c. this gave a number of men, in the delay thus occasioned, an opportunity to take the traces from the carriage, and draw him without horses ; they were prevailed upon to desist, but they acted so a second time, and the Prince, it supposed would have indulged them in their desire, had accidents not been feared ; and by the exertions of the centinels the traces were put to the cartiage again, and proceeded to Carlton House, amidst the loud hazzas of the populace.

His Highness arrived at Carlton House at half past eight o'clock, when the band struck up GOD SAVE THE KING ; which they did also on the arrival of the Duke and Duchess of York, the Duke of Kent, &c. The attendants were the same as on a full court ; the yeomen of the guard and the royal footmen in their state regimentals, and the pages in their splendid uniforms—Carlton House and the entrances brilliantly illuminated.

At the time appointed for her majesty to leave the closet, her full attendants were conducted across the Grand Hall, and also the full attendants upon the Prince Regent, except those waiting upon the Queen and Prince Regent.

The Princess Charlotte and Prince of Saxe Cobourg remained in the closet.

The whole being assembled, they filed the spacious room, the ceremony being ready to be proceeded on, the Lord Chamberlain returned to the closet and conducted the Prince of Saxe Coburg to the altar ;—his Lordship then went again to conduct the Princess and was accompanied by the Duke of Clarence, who conducted his royal niece on his arm to the altar, where she was received by the Prince Regent. The ceremony was performed in the most solemn and impressive manner by the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the whole was as interesting a scene as ever took place in Carlton House. The Princess Charlotte was given away by her Royal Father the Prince Regent. His Royal Highness appeared in excellent health. He was dressed in regimentals, and wore all his splendid and distinguished orders. The Russian Order of the Fleece was particularly brilliant. His Royal Highness handed the Queen to a state chair to the right of the altar, where her majesty sat during the ceremony. At the conclusion, the Royal Pair retired arm in arm, and received the hearty congratulation of all present.

Miscellaneous.

FROM THE SPECTATOR,

To Miniſters, Magiſtrates, Parents & Guardians of Youth, in this Province; the following lines are reſpectfully addreſſed. And the Printers both in Upper & Lower Canada are requeſted to give them an inſertion in their reſpective papers.

Friends and Brethren,

You are ſolemnly called upon to engage in a ſpiritual warfare.

All good men in every part of the world may with propriety be called upon to lend their aid, and exert all their influence, in the protection of our ſacred privileges, and in building up the kingdom of the Redeemer.

Gloomy and truely diſtreſſing is the preſent proſpect, both in Canada and the United States. God Almighty has come out againſt us in judgment in conſequence of our ſins, and is fighting againſt us. He has ſent the peſtilence and the ſword. He now threatens us with a famine:—His anger is not turned away, but his hand is ſtretched out ſtill,"

Are not the Scriptures fulfilling, which aſſure us, that we ſhall "ſee ſigns in the Sun and in the Moon, and that men's hearts ſhall fail them, through fear of thoſe things which are coming upon the earth."

All theſe evils and every other calamity which we ſuffer, and to which we are expoſed, are the effects and conſequence of our ſins as nations and individuals.

Let us all ariſe as one man, and gird on our ſpiritual armour, and never give over the conteſt until we have conquered all our foes. Jeſus the Captain of our ſalvation, calls upon us immediately to enliſt under his banner and has aſſured us that we ſhall ſucceed, if we purſue his direction. But dropping figures and allegories, we venture in plain language to point out what may and ought to be done.

We may and ought to eſtabliſh a Moral Society for the ſuppreſſion of all vice and immorality.

We may and ought in every Town, Township and ſettlement throughout the inhabited part of the country, eſtabliſh a Sunday School for the purpoſe of teaching the Children the elementary principles of our holy religion.

And, we may and ought to aſſemble every Lord's day for divine worſhip to implore the bleſſings of heaven upon all our exertions to the cauſe of God.

NEW-YORK, JUNE 15.
LATEST FROM EUROPE.

Arrived here this morning the Brig FALCON, Capt. Lewis, of Boſton, in 32 days from Londonderry. She is conſigned to Meſſrs John Celapiaine & Co. and to the politeneſs of this Houſe, we are indebted for the loan of a file of London and Liverpool papers to the 21 May.—ten days later than was before received.

Our lateſt Paris dates are of the 27th of April. The new budget had paſſed both branches of the French legiſlature. General Cambrone, who followed Bonaparte to Elba, and who was taken at the battle of Waterloo, had been tried and acquitted. Sir Robert Wilſon and Meſſrs. Hutchinſon and Bruce, arreſted on the charge of having aided in the flight of Lavalette, had been tried and convicted.

After a long, too long a delay the charges brought by Lord Cochrane againſt Lord Ellenborough were brought before the Houſe. The motion was, that they ſhould be referred to the conſideration of a committee of the whole houſe. After a long debate the whole houſe decided with the exception of Lord Cochrane and Sir F Burdett, that there were no grounds for going into a committee. Mr Ponſonby immediately moved, and Lord Cavendiſh ſeconded the motion, that the charges ſhould be expunged from the Journals of the houſe, which was immediately agreed to.

LONDON, April 30.

We received at a late hour this morning the Paris papers of Saturday laſt. They contain the following articles:—

Firſt Permanent Council of War.

The council aſſembled yeſterday for the trial of General Cambronne, who followed Bonaparte to Elba, and was taken priſoner in the battle of Waterloo.—The priſoner in his defence pleaded the Treaty of Fontainbleau. He was at that place when Napoleon abdicated, and did not conſider himſelf liable to be regarded as a French ſubject.

The proceedings on the trial occupied a conſiderable time, and terminated in the acquittal of the Priſoner of the charges of having betrayed the King unanimouſly; of that of having attacked France in arms by a majority of ſix to one, and of that of having poſſeſſed himſelf of power by violence by a majority of five to two.

The Preſident (Count Edmond de Perigord) accordingly declared the Marſhal de Camp Cambronne acquitted, and ordered him to be ſet at liberty after the delay of 24 hours.

Upon which the Quotidienne obſerves, "While we reſpect the decision of the council, we may be permitted to deplore the fatal effects of the Revolution in public morals, and the misfortune of ſeeing a mother triumph which permits a Sovereign and a country to be choſen according to the caprice of intereſt and opinion.

M. Talleyrand quitted Paris yeſterday morning for Valency.

"It appears that the King will not go in perſon, to prorogue the Chambers, but that a Commiſſion preſided by the Chancellor, will be nominated by His Majesty for that purpose. It is generally supposed that the prorogation will take place towards the 6th or 7th of next month."

The Budget has received the sanction of the Chamber of Peers, by a majority of 131 to 1, and the law of divorce has been adopted by the Chamber of Deputies by a majority of 225 to 11. In a few days both Chambers will be prorogued.

An article from Dresden states that the marriage of the Prince of Coburgh to the Princess Charlotte has produced more intimate relations beteen the Courts of London and Dresden. The King of Saxony signs the marriage contract in his quality of head of all the Princes of the family of Saxony.

French Clergy.—The following are the terms of the resolution respecting ecclesiastical property, which passed the Chamber of Deputies in the sitting of the 25th ult.—

Art. I. The produce arising from extinctions in consequence of death, on the amount of life annuities and ecclesiastical pensions included in the valuation of the public debt for 1816, is specially appropriated to the amelioration of the condition of the Clergy, and the institutions dependant on that body.

II. The unsold clerical property shall be restored in kind according to a valuation of its produce, the amount of which shall be applied in deduction of the sums allotted for the expences of public worship, and the salaries of its Ministers, excepted provisionally, buildings appropriated to public services till others be substituted.

The succeeding articles contain regulations for the carrying the decree into effect.

The British Parliament proceeds in its system of retrenching the national expenditures.

Prince Leopold has been appointed a General in the British Army. His distinctions are, His Serene Highness Leopold George Frederick, Duke of Saxe, Margrave of Messen, Landgrave of Thuringuen, Prince of Coburg of Saalfield.

Mr. Brougham has introduced a Bill into Parliament, for the better securing the Liberty of the Press, by allowing, in trials for alleged libels, the truth to be given in evidence.

It is reported that all crown prisoners will be liberated, in honour of the marriage of Princess Charlotte and the Prince Leopold of Coburg.

We contradicted yesterday the accounts relative to Sierro Leone, received from America. There has been much alarm, but no revolt and no damage done to the town. The turbulent had been awed by the calling out the troops and reading the Riot Act.

The Marquis of Hertford's rental upon his Irish estates, has fallen off no less than 25,000*l.* in the receipts of the preceding year.

The Duke d'Angouleme is gone to visit the works of St. Maur, which have already commenced by the construction of magazines and a bason destined to receive the waters of the Maine.

M. Court d'Einsiedel, our first Minister, has received from the Prince Regent of England, a snuff box, valued at more than 5000 rix dollars.

On Friday next at eight o'clock in the morning, all the posts of the Thuilleries, will be occupied by 600 of the National Guard. Each Legion furnishes 50 men.

Humburgh papers state that near 200 articles, principally manufactures, have been prohibited in Russia.

An Embassy from the Sophi of Persia, has arrived in France.

London, May 13.

Six spots are at present visible on the sun's disc.—One of them is of considerable magnitude, and resembles a cluster of islands, situated very near to each other. Its breadth is at least equal to the diameter of the earth. Another of them is very dark, and surrounded by an umbra, or fainter shade.

War Office, March 4, 1816.

His Royal Highness the Prince Regent has been pleased in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, to appoint His Serene Highness Leopold George Frederick, Prince Saxe, Cobourg of Saalfield, &c. to be a General in the army.

LIVERPOOL, APRIL 18.

The Prince of Coburg is to be created Duke of Kendal, by which creation Her Royal Highness the Princess Charlotte of Wales, Heiress Presumptive to the Throne, will become Duchess of Kendal, a title only known in this country by having been borne by the German Princess of George I.

BOSTON—June 17.

By arrivals at New York, and this port, we have received London papers to the 11th May; but they are as usual unaccompanied with any political intelligence of general interest. The trial of Messers. Wilson and others, for aiding the escape of Lavalette, had terminated, and the infliction of three month's imprisonment, decreed as their punishment.

London, May 9. 1816.

Mr. Brougham brought forward a bill for the better security of the liberty of the Press, by allowing in trials for alledged libels the truth to be given in evidence. This measure is in the true spirit of the admirable Act originating with that eminent Statesman, Mr. Fox, the object of which was to declare that, according to the law of the land, Juries in cases of libel, were judges of the law as well as the fact, and were thus to have the whole question in all its bearings before them. A measure of this nature, in the present state of Europe, when there appears to be a general disposition to fetter and enslave the press, without the freedom of which public liberty cannot exist, is of the very highest importance, and well deserving the serious consideration of every well wisher to the real, constitutional freedom that ought to make this country a splendid exception to the slavish doctrines promulgated from authority on the Continent.

Mr. Brougham's bill also comprehends some important regulations respecting ex officio informations, and the forming of special Juries.

Letters from Brussels state, that the Duke of Wellington intends soon to visit the several corps of the army of occupation, Russian, Austrian, Prusian and Bavarians, which are cantoned in part of Champagne, Lorraine, and Alsace.

Sir Graham Moore is appointed one of the Lords of the Admiralty, in the room of Lord Henry Paulett, who retires through ill health.

PARIS, May 6.

You will observe that the French papers made no mention of a conspiracy or arrests having taken place at Paris; yet it is certain, that not less than 300 persons have been taken into customs within these few days. Government are fearful of agitating the public mind on so tender a subject. It is probable that none of the individuals thus arrested will be brought to trial, either for want of sufficient evidence or for fear of alarming the very existence of a conspiracy, at a time when all is described as peace, union and loyalty; or for fear of committing so delicate a case to the hazardous chance of a trial; for every trial which takes place at present may be considered as a contest between Government and the public, which the Judges decide according to the prevailing influence of either; and public opinion now assumes a menacing tone, which arrests the sentence of the corrupted Judge.

We read with great pleasure in the French papers of the 4th inst. that the reigning Duke of Saxe Cobourg, the brother of Prince Leopold, has issued an ordinance for the establishment of a constitution of States in the Duchy of Cobourg and the other territories subjected to his Government. These States will form a national representation on the basis of antient institutions, according to which some of the members will possess seats in virtue of the fiefs they posses, and others in consequence of elections by the magistrates, burgesses, and freeholders. The Tyrolese are too, about to receive a similar reward, for their long tried fidelity to the House of Austria. The Emperor by an edict of the 21 ult. has restored to them all the privileges and franchises which they hold from their ancestors, and particularly the antient representation of the four orders of prelates, nobles, citizens and yeomanry.

PARIS, April 27.

It was reported yesterday, in the Chamber of Deputies, that as the business of the budget will be finished to morrow, after count Garnier's report in the Peers, the Chamber of Deputies will be adjourned to Tuesday.

We have a copy of Sir Robert Wilson's letter to Earl Grey, which was intercepted by the Police of Paris, and which was produced as testimony against him at his trial. The length of this letter prevents us from publishing it until to-morrow.

From New Orleans—Our advices by this morning's mail, respecting the inundation of that city, are of a gloomy and distressing tenor. The Gazette of the 11th ult says—"All hopes of stopping the crevasse are at an end; it was entirely abandoned yesterday evening, and its dimensions increase. The water, in the back part of the City and the Faxbourg, is rising." Several letters of the same date confirm this melancholy statement. One third of the city is completely inundated.

It is not, perhaps, to be recollected, without surprize, that while so great a variety of periodical publications issues from the English press, and while so large and so respectable a portion of the Community is either resident in the Colonies, or connected with them by various ties, no specific work, especially adapted to those portions of the Empire, has hitherto been undertaken.

Under how many aspects a publication, of the kind suggested, and which it is now proposed to commence, may be found both agreeable and useful to the Colonies, it can scarcely be necessary to point out. The justice of one remark, in the mean time, will be readily admitted;—that no journal of this description, conducted without an express view to local gratification and local objects of utility, can be capable of satisfying those who have local interests and feelings. It is in vain that any work, designed for general circulation, can affect to meet the wishes of a peculiar part of the public; because the minuteness of detail, and preponderance of peculiar topics, which alone can be sufficient for their part, must always be more than is called for by the remainder. For Colonial Readers, therefore, there is required a COLONIAL JOURNAL.

A feature of primary value in this publication will doubtlessly consist in the faithful record preserved by it of public and private occurrences in the Colonies; while a graver, though not a warmer interest, will attach to its pages, as repositories of facts and observations Political, Commercial, Literary and Scientific. The accumulation of facts will progressively form a history; and there are few who do not indulge a liberal curiosity as to the history of the soil with which they are in any wise concerned, and especially of that on which they reside, or on which they were born.—As a vehicle, in every branch of literature and knowledge, for the production and communications of persons of talent and observation in the Colonies and elsewhere, the COLONIAL JOURNAL will assume a character of additional importance.

But it is not to Readers in the Colonies alone, nor to their immediate Connections, that this Journal will recommend itself by considerations either of utility or pleasure.—The countries whose condition, productions, capabilities, and interests it will bring with greater distinctness into view, cannot be indifferent to any British Statesman or Politician, when it is remembered, that to "SHIPS, COLONIES, and COMMERCE," (to adopt the energetic language of our late able and implacable enemy,) Great Britain owes her present wealth and power; that on the preservation and well-doing of her North America Colonies depend the Fur-trade, the Fisheries, and much of our Naval means; and that our West India possessions alone furnish one fourth of our imports, employ twenty-five thousand of our seamen, and consume annually seven millions sterling of our manufactures. Were the Colonies lost to us, let the Financier consider how he could supply the place of the revenue derived from them; the Manufacturer, how he could vend the goods they consume; the Ship-owner, how he could employ the vessels at present engaged in this trade:—let the Fund-holder ascertain how his dividends could be paid to him; and, finally, let the Possessor of Land reflect how unequal he would be to support the expenses of the nation, (his land diminished in value, in proportion to the energetic language of our late able implacable enemy,) Great Britain her present wealth and power;

er North America Colonies depend Fur-trade, the Fisheries, and much ur Naval means; and that our West a possessions alone furnish one th of our imports, employ twenty-thousand of our seamen, and cone annually seven millions sterling of manufactures. Were the Colonies to us, let the Financier consider how could supply the place of the revenue ived from them; the Manufacturer, w he could vend the goods they cone; the Ship-owner, how he could ploy the vessels at present engaged in trade;—let the Fund-holder ascertain w his dividends could be paid to him;
, finally, let the Possessor of Land lect how unequal he would be to sup-rt the expenses of the nation, (his land minished in value, in proportion to the general depression,) without the resources afforded by those most valuable possessions. Every Englishman is thus deeply interested in the prosperity of the Colonies, and has therefore the most serious motives for watching over their history and progress.

Of the Colonies and Dependencies of the British Crown in Europe, Africa, and the Indian Ocean, it needs, in this place, only to be remarked, that while they add to the political interest of the Work contemplated, they multiply also, the number of individuals to whom it may be more peculiarly acceptable; and must increase, for the gratification of the General Reader, the diversity of its contents. This interest, and this variety will, likewise, be further extended by the designed dedication of the Colonial Journal to whatever deserves remark in the existing Colonies of every Nation.
Its plan singly excludes the British Territorial Possessions, under the management of the East India Company.

Nor are the general claims with which, it is presumed, this Work will be found to be invested, confined to objects solely national;
they extend to objects of even more universal attraction. The lovers of nature, of botany, and of natural history at large, will be gratified by articles of these latter classes, which will form one of its constant departments, and which will be illustrated by coloured engravings, executed by artists of the first merit and reputations. The Colonies, it is known, have their seats in regions but newly, and, for the most part, very imperfectly explored; and hence this portion of the work will minister to purposes both of science and taste. The beauties or the peculiarities of local scenery will be presented in the successive numbers of the COLONIAL JOURNAL; animals, plants, &c. (principally such as have not yet been figured by any of the naturalists of Europe,) will be the subjects of the coloured engravings; and further communications, by this means, can be afforded to the diffusion of practical knowledge, the opportunity will not be neglected. Hence, the botany (accompanied by figures,) of such vegetables as contribute to human sustenance in the Colonies, will receive particular attention. The plates of the COLONIAL JOURNAL will also be occasionally devoted to figures of Mechanical Inventions, Maps, &c.

TRIAL OF WILSON, &c.

The Paris papers give the whole details of the trial of Hen. Wilson, Mr. Bruce, Capt.
Hutchinson and others, implicated in the escape of Lavalette. The two first are Englis the other Irish. Wilson aged 38, is a retire General Officer, and is the famous Colonel Wilson, who so forcibly described the Barba rities of Buonaparte in Egypt. Bruce is a Major, aged 29, and Hutchinson, a Lieutenant, aged 26, of Grenadiers, the same age, a Captain of Grenadiers, the latter of the Guards. They were tried with great lenity by the Court; but conducted themselves, on the trial, with a boldness bordering on contempt.
Indeed, the French reporter says, "they seemed to forget they were in a Court of Justice, but were at Astley's amphitheatre."
They answered all questions promptly, and denied nothing. They confessed, what indeed the Court had before known, that on receiving a mysterious application from La valette, for protection and assistance, they determined to give them; and carried him out of France, disguised as a British General, in open day. They asserted that they were induced by humanity alone in the enterprize; —That they had never seen Lavalette until the moment of his escape—and Madame Lavalette being called as a witness by command of the accused, after surveying the British prisoners, declared, that she had never seen them before.—Bruce avowed that he took a great interest in the fate of Ney, & that he effected Lavalette in his escape on horseback Wilson, being asked by the President of the Court, if he was not the author of a celebrated work which spread violent suspicions against the morality of certain agents for Bonaparte in Egypt? Answered, "it is true—I did that which I believed to be true." They were of course convicted; and though it was in the discretion of the Jury to sentence them to any period of imprisonment, from three months to two years, the accused with our heroism, the shortest allowable term.
Previous to the sentence, Wilson and Bruce both addressed the Court in long speeches, explanatory of their conduct. Bruce avowed himself an Englishman who but detested his detestation of that flagitious revolutionary liberty which had defolated Europe. Neither Madame Lavalette, her daughter, aged 14, or her nurse, were implicated. Requette de Kerquidec, the head clerk, and Madame Lavalette's chairmen and valet, were acquitted; but Eberle, the turnkey, was convicted and sentenced to two years imprisonment.
Madame L's. conduct was fully justified.

The following sketch of the trial of Sir Robert Wilson and Messrs. Bruce and Hutchinson, together with Bruce's interesting speech before the French Court, will be read with much interest.

Case of Sir Robert T. Wilson, (aged 38 years, a British Major General not in ac tive service;) Merchant Bruce, gentleman, aged 26? John H. Hutchinson, aged 26, Capt. 1st Regt. Grenadier Guards to the King of England—the two former born in England, the latter in Ireland.

Their trial, for assisting in the escape of Lavalette, (The Post Master Gen.) ended before the Court of Assize, at Paris 24th April.
The trial appears to have been quite interesting. The speeches on the last day of the trial, of M. Dupin, their advocate, Wilson & Bruce are worth perusing. The conduct of the accused, in rescuing Lavalette, partook of chivalry and romance—their sentiments are candid and bold—and being released, as they were, from the original charge of attempting to subvert the Government of France, they open the recesses of their hearts, expose their honest impulses and honestly pleaded guilty to the accusation of aiding a state criminal in his concealment and final escape. Their motives were the force of political opinion and humanity. The freedom of thinking doubtless belonged to them; and however their daring and ingenious conduct and generous devotion may be admired, yet it is doubted by many whether they can be vindicated in their interference to save a man condemned to death by the laws of the state in which they resided. It reflects credit on the French Court of Assizes, in that when they could have sentenced them to any period of imprisonment, they only sentenced them to the shortest period possible.

M. Dupin, after ably vindicating the character, &c. of the accused, and pourtraying the renown of Sir Robert, said:—

'How manners change with the times!
Among the Athenians, a people proverbia for lenity, but whose Areopagus was renowned for its justice, a young man was sentenced to death, because he killed a dove which, when pursued by a hawk, had sought refuge between his legs, because it was inferred tha a person destitute of pity could not be a good citizen. And among us, in the 19th century, shall we see men condemned for having save the life of a fellow creature, who placed his fate in their hands? Has then our nation, once so vaunted for mildness and politeness, divested itself of every feeling of humanity?
—[He went on in this strain a: some length and closed as follows:—Should it even require a small degree of favour to acquit them still, I am confident, you will acquit them in order to verify this expression of one of co most illustrious Chancellors, 'Foreigners are priviledged persons in France when they im plore the justice of the King.'

Sir Robert followed—confessed the facts a to the escape of Lavalette, and vindicated hi principles and conduct in a bold and impres sive manner.

[His speech as well as that of M. Dupin was applauded by the spectators—and the President had to check them.]

After Sir R. W. had concluded, Mr. Hutchinson was called upon, but having nothin further to say—Mr Bruce then spoke as follows:—Gentlemen, I appear before this tribunal accused of having favoured the escape of Lavalette. If it be a crime to have saved the life of a man, I admit that I am guilty.
I will make no boast of what I have done.
An appeal was made to my humanity, and my honour compelled me to answer it.

(Continuation of Wilson's Trial, &c.)

"If the charge were confined to the affair of Lavalette, I should have but a few words to say to you: but I have been accused of having conspired against the political system of Europe, of having excited the people to take up arms against the authority of the King: It is true, that this absurd, ridiculous and totally unfounded charge, which has excited so strong an indignation throughout all Europe, has been rejected by the wisdom of the French Magistrates; but yet the motives upon which it was grounded still subsist. The Attorney General has presumed to say, in the preamble to the act of accusation———, [President—"Accused you speak French very fluently: in speaking of a magistrate, and of so worthy a magistrate, be more guarded in your expressions]

Mr. Bruce resumed. "The Attorney General has said that I was one of those persons who have imbibed anti-social doctrines; that I was an enemy, from principle, to every thing like order and good government, an enemy from principle, to kings, to justice, and humanity, and a friend to the factions of every country. These, it must be allowed, are very heavy charges, but the short explanation which I will give you of my principles will be a sufficient answer to these calumnious accusations.

"I shall not enter into metaphysical abstractions, nor into digressions on politics, but I shall confine myself to an examination of the principles by which I have been always guided.

"I am by birth an Englishman. I am enthusiastically attached to the constitution of my country—that is, the constitution established by the glorious revolution in 1688. Then was formed, that exquisite system of Government which excite such universal admiration, which causes our country to be spontaneously denominated the classic land of liberty, which procured us the eulogium of that philosopher Montesquieu, who belongs not to France alone, but to the whole world, and who lays of us, that the English are the only people in the world who know how to make use of their religion, their laws and their freedom. From the Revolution of 1688, I date the prosperity, grandeur, and liberty of England.

"Because say, that if these principles which I profess, which are those of the constitution of my country, are subversive of all ideas of order and good government, and make me an enemy to kings, to justice and humanity—I confess that I am the most guilty of men, and the Attorney General is right; but if, on the contrary, these principles have made a people the most flourishing in Europe, I am justified in concluding that the accusation is only a revolting calumny. Such are the horrid principles of that Wilson, and that Bruce, of whom the Attorney-General has spoken in such a derogatory manner. I interrogated them from my conscience, and they will accompany me to the grave.

"As to the affair of M. Lavalette, politics had no share in it. I was influenced solely by feelings of humanity; you have seen from my interrogatory that I scarcely knew him. It is true, that the excellence of his character, his amiable disposition, and prepossessing manners, had excited in me a deeper interest than we generally feel for persons of whom we have seen so little. I never visited him, but in the, and it was there where I now appear as an accused person, that I had the honour to see for the first time, that virtuous and interesting woman," to whom I beg leave to offer the homage of my respect and admiration.

(Mrs. L. was present.)

"It has been proved that there was no concert between us and the other accused. I have respected the chains and the bolts of a house of justice. I did not sally forth like Don Quixote, in search of adventures. An unfortunate man demands my protection, places confidence in my character; he puts his life into my hands, and claims my humanity. What would have been said of me had I denounced him to the police? I should then have richly deserved that death with which I have been threatened. What do I say! What would have been thought of me, had I refused to protect him? I should have been looked upon as a coward, as a wretch, without principle, without honour, without courage, without generosity. I should have deserved the reproach of every good man.

"But, gentlemen, there were other considerations which decided me. There was something romantic in the history of M. Lavalette. The miraculous escape from prison, the cruel suspence between life and death in which he remained for such a length of time, the noble devotedness of his wife, the French Alceste, that heroic action which will live in history, struck my imagination, and excited so strong an interest in my heart, that I could not resist its impulse. Besides, as your Lafontaine observes with his usual naïveté—

'Dans ce monde il se faut l'un l'autre secourir
'Il se faut entr'aider; c'est la loi de nature.'

"Gentlemen, I am still young, but I have travelled a good deal. I have seen many countries and examined them with all the attention I was capable of. I have always observed, even among the most barbarous nations, among those which are nearest to the state of nature, that it was held a sacred duty to assist those who had recourse to their protection. It is a duty enjoined by their religion, their laws, and their manners. A Bedouin of the desert, a Druse of Mount Lebanon, would rather sacrifice his life than betray the person who had solicited an asylum of him. Whatever may be the country, whatever may be the crime of the stranger, he sees nothing but the duty of humanity, of hospitality. I, a civilized man, have thought it commendable to imitate the virtuous event of barbarians. And I cannot believe, to celebrate the generosity, the humanity for its chivalrous character, which numbers among its Kings a Henry IV. that model of Princes—and would to God all Kings were like him!—Which counts among its warriors a Bayard, the most perfect of all, without fear and without reproach, whose motto was to succour the unfortunate—I cannot believe, that among such a people, an Englishman can be condemned for having saved a Frenchman.

"Gentlemen I have acknowledged to you, with the candour and sincerity of my character, the whole truth respecting the part which I have had in the escape of M. Lavalette; and persuadening the respect which I entertain for the majesty of the laws—notwithstanding the respect which I own to the tribunal, I cannot be wanting in that respect which I owe to myself in confessing that I am far from repenting of what I have done. Gentlemen I have done; I leave my fate in your hands, and submit nothing but justice."

From English Papers.

A new coinage has been commenced at the mint in England; to include gold and silver. The gold coin to consist of 20 shilling pieces, and the silver to be of one shilling. It is remarkable that coins of these convenient denominations have never been issued before.

Fourteen young women were to be married, at the expense of the city of Paris on the day of the Duke of Berri's marriage, each to receive a portion of 1200 francs. French stocks, May 6th, 5 per cent 50. 1-100. Bank shares 1063.

Intelligence has been received from Major Peddie, who commands the expedition for exploring the interior of Africa, by way of the Nigre, to March 25. He was then at Senegal, where he was to remain until September on account of the rainy season, but would be employed in the mean time in making preparations and collecting information. Another expedition is to proceed by the way of river Congo, and the two are intended to meet in the interior of the continent.

Sir Nathaniel Wm. Wraxall, suffered judgment to go against him by default, on the information against him for the libel against Count Woronzoff, in the Memoirs of my own times, in which it is asserted that the Count admited that the late empress of Russia had connived at the murder of the Princess of Wirtemburgh. After a hearing by counsel relative to the measure of punishment, Mr. Justice Bayley sentenced the author to be imprisoned six months in the King's Bench prison, and to pay a fine of 500*l*.

The Queen received at her court, on the 16th May, the congratulations of the English nobility and gentry, and foreigners of distinction, on the late marriage. The court was one of the most splendid that has been known for many years. The number of visitors was between two and three thousand.

The princess of Wales, (consort of the Prince Regent) was at Tunis at the beginning of May, where she was about to embark for Constantinople.

A very ingenious gentleman of Exeter is about to introduce an improvement in washing, by substituting the action of steam on the foul linen, for the manual labour of rubbing. His method has already been tried, and found to answer so well, that two-thirds of the labour as well as of the expense will be saved by the new process.

LONDON, May 10.

It is with pleasure we announce the termination of the war with the States of Nepaul. A Treaty of Peace, we learn, was signed by the Governor General in Dec. last.

The Prince Royal of Wirtempurgh, has been married to her Imperial highness the Grand Duchess Catharine of Russia.

Government, it is said, have purchased within these few days 60,000 quarters of corn. To this purchase is partly attributed the present rise in the Corn-Market.

May 11.—The British Government expended for the maintenance of French prisoners during the war, the sum of £6,671,174 11s. 11d.

It may be remarked as a curious coincidence, that it was on the 31 of May, on which William of Orange, the father of William III. King of England, was Married to Hepolita Maria, he Daughter of Charles I.

The rapid rise in grain has already occasioned many applications in Home counties, to take farms which have been abandoned by the late occupiers.

QUEBEC, July 9.

Important Caution.

Wednesday at Margate died, after a short illness, Athelston, eldest son of Mr. John Boys, Solicitor, aged eight years. It is but ten weeks since he lost another child, aged only nine years, by a similar complaint, water on the brain; and both of them having always been remarkably healthy children, no cause can be traced for this extraordinary visitation, except that of their having, during the whole of the last summer and autumn, been in the daily habits of amusing and pleasing each other with a swing of considerable height, in Mr. Boys's garden and by twirling themselves to a great degree, to produce giddiness to each other in the usual play of children, so as to encourage that disposition to hydrocephalus, which most children are more or less subject to. Various circumstances and symptoms of their approaching illness have so materially strengthened this supposition, that it has been deemed right to communicate to parents these extraordinary and melancholy circumstances.

Shane's-Castle. We never had a more painful duty to perform, than that which this day falls to our lot; namely to announce to our readers the total destruction, by fire, on the night of Wednesday last, of the princely mansion of earl O'Neil; the ancient, hospitable magnificent Shane's-Castle, which, at this moment, is a heap of ruins. It was discovered as far as we can at present gain information, that a fire had broke out in an upper apartment about 8 o'clock on Wednesday evening, and though, as may well be supposed, every human effort was immediately resorted to, yet, we are sorry to say, so rapid was the progress of the devouring element, that in a few hours this magnificent building was literally a pillar of flame. We understand that the amiable owner of this so lately celebrated Castle, was on the spot during the entire time of the conflagration, and beheld with a manly fortitude, the destruction of that magnificent pile, which, for upwards of five centuries past, had been the residence of his illustrious ancestors.

We cannot presume to calculate the loss sustained by lord O'Neil, upon the present occasion, or pretend to say whether his lordship had insured all, or any of his immense buildings—from our hearts we trust he may. We have been informed (we hope correctly) that the family papers and the plate, which was valuable and magnificent beyond description, have been saved; but we much fear that the library has been destroyed.

We are informed by a spectator that nothing could exceed the awful sublimity (if we may so express ourselves) of the scene, during the period of the conflagration; the horizon, for miles round presented an appearance similar to that witnessed in a summer's morning, before the sun first bursts upon the view, whilst the expansive waters of LoughNeagh, displayed a sheet of living flame, reflecting upon the eye of the beholder, the steady blaze of the burning pile.

The entire hills and rising grounds, for miles round, were covered by spectators, who beheld, in profound and stupified astonishment, the terrific devastation of that princely castle, where, for centuries, had resided some of the most illustrious Kings of Ulster.

The subject is painful beyond description: for we find, that by the ruin of Shane'-Castle, the north of Ireland has lost one of its most celebrated ornaments; and doubtless, a young nobleman, amiable for his virtues, must be plunged into considerable degree of mental suffering, as well as personal inconvenience.

Miscellaneous.

The Boston Gazette of the 25th July contains an account of a plot which has been discovered amongst the Negroes in the neighbourhood of Camden N. Carolina and which appears to have been of a most alarming nature, both from the extent it had obtained & the ferocious intentions of the Conspirators, who meditated the death of every white male, the Massacre was to have taken place on the 4th July, had not their horrid design been unfolded by a slave, one of the number, who informed his Master of it.—This conspiracy though very extensive had been in agitation since Christmas last. Numbers of the conspirators were confined, and the trials of some had taken place.—Six of the Ringleaders were to be executed.

Mr. Redheffer, of Philadelphia, has constructed a Machine said to possess the long sought after power, of Perpetual Motion, which is now in operation in that City.

BRITISH WAR IN INDIA.

The war in the Nepaul territory it appears by Calcutta papers of February last, had again broken out, and that General Ochterlony who succeeded in reducing their refractory States so lately; had again marched into the Goorkah Country.

[The Boston Gazette claims this officer as a native of that City,—which it says, he soon lately quitted, having been sent there for his Education. We conceive it would have been more creditable to this officer, or indeed, to any officer receiving the pay of the British Government or of the Honorable Company, to have sent his Son to a Country which he might have received an education more congenial to the political principles of the Government from whose service he derived emolument. This Remark applies in a greater degree to those Subjects Inhabitants, of Canada who send their Sons to the Seminaries of the United States for Education. The Schools of this Province are allready sufficient for a common education, and on a comparative view, we believe it will be found, that a superior one is more easily obtained and at a cheaper rate in the Mother Country than in the Neighbouring Republic.]

The Ship Sagadahock, in 26 days from Liverpool brings London dates to 9th June, containing little matter of interest from any quarter. The British Parliament adjourned on the 6th,—no business of consequence was transacted.

Foreign Intleligence.

From the London Morning Post, May 28.

The chancellor of the Exchequer bro't forward last night the Budget of the year. The supplies of the year 1816, amount to 15,140,181*l.* The ways and means estimated at 27,305,271*l.* The soap regulations are expected to produce 200,000*l.* the taxes already laid on butter and cheese, 100,000*l.* On the first year of the peace, a year always signalized by a heavy loan, he announced that there would be a reduction to the amount of nearly 3,000,000*l.*

In England the work of retrenchment of expenses proceeded at a steady pace. The consequences were so higly favourable to the public prosperity, that Mr. Ponsonby, the leader of the Opposition, congratulated the kingdom on the flattering prospect. The unexpended surplus of the year was stated to amount to eight millions and an half of pounds sterling. While the Funds of almost every other nation were falling or were stationary, those of England were advancing. [On the 31st May, Three Per Cents were from 64 to 65; and Omnium 22 per cent. advance.] Spanish milled dollars would then command only 4s. 5d. (about 98 cents) sterling, in Bank Notes, ——though those notes were not payable in specie on demand at the bank.—Being receivable, however, in all public payments, they were in high credit; and better than specie. The York Gazette.

WEDNESDAY August 19, 1816

We are happy to hear of the arrival of the Honorable W. D Powell at Liverpool on the 7th June.

The party of Earl Selkirk's people, under Mr. Miles McDowell, was met when within a day's march of the Red River by some Indians, who reported that an affair had taken place between a party of the Bataras, about 40 in number & the Servants of the Hudson Bay Company and people of that Settlement, under a Mr. Semple, who with nearly the whole of his party of 28 persons was cut off.

The Earl Selkirk and party was however advancing to the Red River by way of the Prairie des Chiens.

The Montreal Sun, gives the Prince Regent's Proclamation, offering a reward of £100 for discovering the persons concerned in the Riots which have taken place in the Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge and Huntingdon. In the Isle of Ely, which has been the principal scene of these disorders, several offenders have been apprehended who are to be tried by a special Commission, the disturbance was considered so completely at an end, that the Magistrates had dispensed with further assistance from the military power which it had been necessary to call in.

BOSTON, August 23.

DEFEAT OF BOLIVAR.

THE hopeless situation of General Bolivar, and his motly forces, has been known to our readers many days;—notwithstanding the quantities of froth and falsehood which his "Bulletin-mongers," and circulators have disseminated through the West-India and American papers—to the disgrace of the press.

The letter from Laguira, [in Caracas, dated July 14h, and published last week] gave a just history of his progress and fate, and the particulars have been amply confirmed by information given by captain Bowers, who has arrived in New-York, in seventeen days from Porto-Cavello.

General Bolivar's force, exclusive of marine, has never exceeded 2000 men—made up of a few fugitives from Carthagena; many runaway negroes, with some French, and European, and black and Indian adventurers.—And this a fact, notwithstanding the idle reports to the contrary, that in a late excursion on the Venezuelian coast, Bolivar had not been joined by an hundred Spaniards, Creoles or Chapetones.—The inhabitants of Venezuela, if they wish a change, wish no such a change as such adventurers may bring them. They have had a taste of revolution: In 1806, general Miranda, a man of great talents—a native American, and a scholar of our revolution—attempted to rouse his countrymen to independence; but he found little or no support, and he and his followers were left to their well known fate.—Five years afterwards (in 1811) the inhabitants of Venezuela declared themselves independent; and it will be recollected that the declaration was made on the 5th July, thirty-five years and one day after that of the United States; but they averred, that it was made in consequence of the imprisonment, and abdication of Ferdinand 7th. Miranda was placed at the head of the new Republic. The fatal divisions and jealousies which ensued—the persecutions which those divisions created, and the eventual dissolution of the Congress and the league,—even during the weakness and state of the mother country—are well known. With the return of Ferdinand to Spain we are told by a well-informed American from Caracas, there has been a return of loyalty to Venezuela; and that nothing is wanting on the part of Spain, to ensure not only the loyalty, but the affection of the Venezuelians, but to open, liberal policy; and the correction of abuses, which have arisen from the ignorance, pride and rapacity of the officers sent out to govern the colony. They do not think themselves as yet mature enough for a revolution.

After evacuating Cardpano, which he did on the 25th June, Bolivar, with his troops set sail, in fifteen vessels, and arrived off Choropy the 5th July;—On the same day he landed at Cano, and on the seventh, surprised the two plantations of Leon and Maracay, about 35 miles from the city of Caracas; which there were only picket guards. At these plantations they were attacked by the Spanish troops (militia) from Tolmero and Capua, and put to flight with loss.—General Bolivar then concentrated his forces, and knowing he had not provisions for them on the coast attempted to march a part of them into the interior:—But these were met by the Spanish general Morales (who had been detached by Morillo for the purpose, after the conquest of New-Grenada) on the 10th, & were completely routed by him. Those of the Patriots who escaped to the mountains, were surrounded on the 11th, and were precluded as have, that of all which landed, only about 200 escaped on board the vessels. On the 12th, Bolivar made an excursion on the coast to collect his stragglers; but general Morales had pursued them, and put to the sword all who had not embarked.

Captain Bowers, says, the battle was very severe;—that Bolivar lost all his cannon, equipage and baggage;—that commodore Brion refused to receive many of the fugitives on board, on account of a scarcity of provisions, and that Bolivar, and some of his officers, finding themselves safe on board, ordered the commodore to put to sea.

We suspected when we saw the account of the arrival of Brion's squadron at Curraco, that Bolivar who was then a fugitive on board of it; and that the reports to the contrary were merely a continuation of the scandalous impositions which had been passed upon the public respecting him, and in which the authors of them have found as many easy and open-mouthed accomplices.

CHARLESTON, S. C. August 14.

From Nation. N. P. August 3.—"A Majesty's brig Bermuda, captain Pickersham of 14 guns, with 100 extra men, has sailed to intercept the Carthagenian privateers."

We have an arrival in seven days from Havana, the captain in which saw nothing of the Carthagenia "squadrons," which are reported by the gobe mouches to be blockading that port. Captain Hunter, from Matanzas saw off there, three schooners supposed to be privateers.

We learn from Guadaloupe, that the French Bourbon flag was hoisted there the 25th July; that the French colonial system had been restored, and American vessels permitted to enter.

ST PETERSBURG, June 15.

We are assured our Court has concluded a treaty of Alliance with the United States, one article of which guarantees to us the possession of two ports in the Pacific Ocean.

The Lord's Day Morning

Divinely sweet the cheerful ray
That ushers in immortal light,
And shows the dawn of endless day -
Emerging from eternal night:
Bleft morn, in which Emanuel rose,
And triumph'd o'er his mortal foes.

I love the bluſh of vernal bloom
That glides anew the opening year,
And wipes away the mournful gloom
That Autumn's faded features wear;
But O! what radient ſmiles adorn
The glorious refurrection morn,

The evening mourn'd the Prince of Peace,

Vincent's profeſſional eminence. Capt. Bowen of the Salvette, who is lately returned from India, law and converſed with the exile at St. Helena; and the following may be relied on as a correct report of their converſation:—

Bonaparte's firſt enquiry of Captain Bowen was, as uſual—with whom have you ſerved?

Capt. B.—I have been chiefly patronized by Lord St. Vincent.

Bon.—Ah! he is a brave man, and a very good ſeaman, the greateſt the Engliſh nation ever had. Did he not command off Cadiz, and ſent Lord Nelſon after me to Egypt?

Capt. B.—Yes, he did.

Bon.—Were you with him in the battle off Cape St. Vincent?

Capt. B.—No.

Bon.—When you return, if you ſee Lord St. Vincent, make my compliments to him—the compliments of an old ſoldier to a good old Engliſh ſailor.

INTERESTING DISCOVERY.

The London paper, ſays, "we are happy to announce to the public another intereſting diſcovery which has been lately made in the claſſic regiſter.—The following is an extract of a letter from an intelligent traveller, Mr. Salt to a friend in England:—

"I have omitted to mention, that on my way from Malta we touched at the iſland of Milo, where the inhabitants have lately diſcovered a theatre of white marble, which appears, from the little part which has yet been expoſed to view, to be in very perfect preſervation. The ſeats at preſent open are ſeven in number, beautifully marked out of large maſſes of the hardeſt marble, forming a ſegment of a circle, whoſe diameter, if complete, would be 116 feet. The ſituation of this theatre is one of the fineſt that can be imagined; it ſtands a hundred feet above the level of the ſea, and commands in front a noble proſpect over the harbour to the mountains on the oppoſite ſide, and is backed by lofty hills riſing one behind the other up to the deſerted village of Caſtro.

"Immenſe ruins of ſolid walls ſtand cloſe by, and remains of inſcriptions have been found in the neighborhood, two fragments of which I encloſe; the former is cut on a white marble pedeſtal which has been much injured, and the latter is ſaid to have formed part of a large inſcription which a bigotted Papa obliged the inhabitants to break in pieces: to prevent the Europeans from diſturbing his holy retreat—a cottage which he had built on an adjacent hill where many remains of white marble temples, are ſtill to be traced. The prieſt is luckily dead, or otherwiſe the theatre would have ſtood great danger of ſuffering the ſame diſaſtrous fate. From the ſcite of this theatre I ſhould conceive that it was intended for naval exhibitions in the ports below, as it is conſtructed immediately on the brow of a hill, in its front ſcarcely room for the pro centum. Of this, however, it is not poſſible to judge very correctly till the whole ſhall have been laid open—an operation nei-

A certain poor parſon had a man ſervant, whom he ordered to go to a butcher, named David, for a piece of meat, and then come to church, where he was to preach. The parſon, in his ſermon, bringing authorities from the ſcripture in this manner: Iſaiah ſays thus; Jeremiah ſays thus: happening to turn towards the door, as his ſervant came in, went on, And what ſays David? upon which the ſervant called out. "He ſwears, that if you do not pay your bill you need never ſend to his ſhop again."

Voltaire ſaid of an apothecary, that his employments was to put drugs, of which he knew little, into a body of which he knew leſs.

An authentic anecdote, which we have juſt learned, ſhews the exalted opinion which Bonaparte entertains of Earl St.

Edward Bonaventure, Captain Lancaſter on its return from India, touched there that year, which is related as follows:—The ſhip was brought to anchor at St. Helena, where we found an Engliſhman a priſoner, who had remained fourteen months on the Iſland. Ten men who had been ſent aſhore in the boat, hearing ſome perſon ſinging within, chanced, conſidering that it was a Portuguese, and puſhing open the door, found the taylor incloſing himſelf from the heat. that the ſudden entrance of ſo many people at once, greatly alarmed the poor man, who had not ſeen a living ſoul for fourteen months preceding. At firſt he took them for Portugueſe, but afterwards diſcovering that they were Engliſhmen, and ſeveral of the number his own acquaintances, he was ſo overjoyed with, what between exceſſive fear and ſudden joy he, to our great ſorrow, became diſtracted, and died on our arrival in the Weſt Indies. In St. Helena we found forty goats, which had been dried by him, and for want of other apparel, he had made himſelf two ſuits of goats' ſkins with the hairy ſides outwards.

Dreadful Storm.

Frankfort, June 30.

On the 28th a dreadful hurricane cauſed horrible ravages Vlobel three leagues from the city; the roofs in ſome places were torn from the houſes, ſome buildings entirely deſtroyed, and above 400 fruit trees torn up by the roots. The hail lay two feet high in the ſtreets and fields. It was ſo dark that it was neceſſary to light candles. —— The continued rain in this neighborhood does vaſt damage. The new mown hay is rotting on the ground, and unleſs we ſoon have dry weather the ſtanding corn is likely to ſhare the ſame fate. The vines look well, but cannot bloſſom for want of warmth. All the rivers & ſtreams are ſo ſwelled that many mills cannot work. The oldeſt people do not remember the Maine ſo high for ſo long continuance at this ſeaſon. The conſequences of all is, the increaſing dearneſs of proviſions. The proſpect is not promiſing for the winter.

Aſſaſſination of Mr. Lyell.

THE KING'S MESSENGER, AT MADRID.

The following is an extract of a letter, dated Madrid, 28th ult. from an Engliſh gentleman:—

"It is with extreme regret and pain I have to inform you of the death of our dear friend Mr. Lyell, the Meſſenger, who was moſt inhumanly murdered on Sunday, 21ſt July, between the hours of ten and twelve in the forenoon. He was found dead in a ruinous building called the obſervatory, at the back of the Botanical Garden near the Great Houſe in the fields, called the China Manufactory, which was blown up by the Engliſh army. I believe you and I have been there together. He had five wounds, one in the groin, another about the heart, and was much bruiſed about the head. It appears by the evidence of the ſurgeon that the wounds were inflicted by a bayonet, or by the king of ſwords which is carried in walking ſticks.—What, indeed, aſtoniſhes us as much in this tragical event is, that we have every reaſon to believe he was not robbed. His cloths conſiſted of a plain blue coat, grey worſted pantaloons, ſtriped waiſtcoat, pair of ſtrong Engliſh boots, cotton ſtockings, white neckcloth & pocket-handkerchief, with a ſmall French gold watch, ſnuff-box, ſpectacles and tooth-pick caſe, and penknife, were all found about him. As ſoon as it was known at Madrid he drew [illegible] Vaughan, almoſt all of which [illegible] in his portmanteau, beſides [illegible] and thirty-one pounds Bank [illegible] in caſh. Mr. Lyell was with [illegible] five weeks; during that time [illegible] found him to be a ſteady, quiet [illegible] inoffenſive man.—He lived in the [illegible] and he and myſelf were in the [illegible] walking together every evening [illegible] my knowledge, he had no [illegible] acquaintance. Indeed, if I may [illegible] lowed to ſay ſo, he often told me [illegible] kind I was to him, and how [illegible] ſhould be to ſee me at his houſe [illegible] don; and I am ſure I always [illegible] ced from him the civility and [illegible] more of a father than a mere [illegible] He went out alone moſt every [illegible] after breakfaſt, for about an hour [illegible] half. Now whether he made [illegible] quaintance, (which is not likely [illegible] knowing the language) or what [illegible] had been watched by any body [illegible] at a loſs to know. He never [illegible] to me any ſuch thing. Notwithſtanding [illegible] the vigilence of the Judge, the [illegible] and Mr. Vaughan's agents employed [illegible] this melancholy occaſion, no [illegible] has been diſcovered to lead to the [illegible] tection of this horrible murder [illegible] remains a myſtery, and, as it [illegible] dream. It ſtrikes me it muſt have [illegible] done by ſome ſoldiers, who were [illegible] ed and had not time to rob him [illegible] body Mr. Vaughan was allowed [illegible] a great deal of trouble, to bury [illegible] in the Covent-garded, near one [illegible] in a very decent coffin. All the [illegible] attended it to the grave, Mr. [illegible] Vaughan read the ſervice over it. [illegible] it to ſay, that nothing was wanting [illegible] our part to take the remains of [illegible] unfortunate man to the grave in [illegible] ſame manner. Pray ſay all this [illegible] Mrs. Lyell.

found about him. As soon as he arrived at Madrid he drew £30 of Mr. Vaughan, almost all of which was found in his portmanteau, besides 40 ducats, and thirty-one pound Bank of England notes. Mr. Lyell was with us about five weeks; during that time I always found him to be a steady, quiet and inoffensive man.—He lived in our House, and he and myself were in the habit of walking together every evening, and, to my knowledge, he had no other acquaintance. Indeed, if I may be allowed to say so, he often told me how kind I was to him, and how glad he should be to see me at his house in London; and I am sure I always experienced from him the civility and advice more of a father than a mere companion. He went out alone most every morning after breakfast, for about an hour and a half. Now whether he made any acquaintance, (which is not likely, not knowing the language) or whether he had been watched by any body, we are at a loss to know. He never intimated to me any such thing. Notwithstanding the vigilence of the Judge, the Police, and Mr. Vaughan's agents employed on this melancholy occasion, nothing yet has been discovered to lead to the detection of this horrible murder.—All remains a mystery, and, as it were, a dream. It strikes me it must have been done by some soldiers, who were alarmed and had not time to rob him. The body Mr. Vaughan was allowed, with a great deal of trouble, to be interred in the Covent-garded, near our house, in a very decent coffin. All our family attended it to the grave, and Mr. Vaughan read the service over it; suffice it to say, that nothing was wanting on our part to take the remains of this unfortunate man to the grave in a suitable manner. Pray say all this to poor Mrs. Lyell.

"How the body was found.—Mr. Lyell went out about ten o'clock on the 21st of July, alone, in the morning, but not returning to dinner, I was alarmed, and sent about to inquire after him, but could hear nothing of him. About eleven o'clock at night I thought proper to let Mr. Vaughan know, who desired me to make strict search after him, but all in vain; we could learn nothing from him that night.—On the following morning I went out about six o'clock, and was told, on enquiring, that a man had been killed the day before; and on asking where the body lay, was told, at the Court prison to be owned; I instantly ran there, and on asking the porter if any English prisoner or dead body was taken there, was told there was: I demanded to see it, and in an instant was shown the body of poor Mr. Lyell."

Foreign Intelligence.

In Spain, the government appears to be active in forming new expeditions against the colonies, by which the war may be long protracted. In Mexico, new Grenada, and Carraccas, we are assured that the Royal armies have been generally successful, and if they are supported with fresh troops, these vast countries may yet be subdued. At Buenos Ayres the republican government is said to be so firmly established that the force of the mother country is not dreaded. From Peru and Chili the accounts are contradictory, and not of recent date.

THE ARMY.

The following important Official Circulars are now issuing from the war Offices:

"It appearing that regimental Agents have declined paying to the representatives of the deceased officers, the balance due to the officers at the time of their death, except upon letters of administration taken out within the See of Canterbury, I am to apprise you, that such balances, if remitted to you from abroad, may be paid under the administration taken out in any part of the United Kingdom.

Addressed "to Agents."

CLOTHING.—"There being at present a considerable quantity of Clothing in the public military stores, which it is deemed expedient to apply to the service of the regiments of the line for the year 1817, I therefore have the honor to signify to you His Royal Highness the Prince Regent's pleasure that you do suspend all proceedings for supplying clothing for the ensuing year for the regiment under your command, until further orders.

IMPORTANT IF TRUE.

The Albany Register of the 24th Sept. contains an extract of a letter from a gentleman at Sackett's Harbor, dated the 13th inst. announcing that Col. Hawkins, agent for the United States, under the treaty of Ghent, and Major Robertseaux, topographical engineer, have been at that place, on their way to the westward, exploring our northern boundary; and adding, that these gentlemen say, "the line west of Connecticut river is at present too far south, and that by establishing it on the true 45th degree or parallel of latitude will give the U. States 16 townships of Lower Canada and their excellent fort and island, the Isle aux Noix."

News from St. Domingo.

By the arrival at New-York of the schooner General Jackson, captain Gilder, in twenty nine days from Jacmel, St. Domingo, we learn that hostilities had recommenced between the two rival Chiefs that Island. Christophe had attacked and destroyed a town opposite Port au Prince, and both armies were preparing for a general engagement. It was the prevailing opinion at Jacmel, that the army of Petion would prove victorious.

EPITAPH.

For the Late Right Honorable R. B. Sheridan.

BY W. J. BALDWIN, ESQ.

Here, Erin! thine and Genius' brightest son,
Who still, whate'er he touch, superior shone:
In eloquence, the far most attic day can claim;
In comic scene, o'er Congreve's Shakspeare's page,
And first, as Wit and Poet, of his age;
As Statesman, of the first of that first line.
Where Burk, Fox, Pitt, North Dunning, Wyndham shine;
The Guardian spirit in that troubled hour.
When her own sons shook Britain's sea thron'd pow'r;
To thy right, Erin! always firmly true.
Nor ever 'midst Freedom's foremost few;
O! to his vast, his matchless gifts of mind
Were Application's sober prudence join'd!
But such he was;—such Erin! here is laid;
Such sleeps thy Sheridan in Death's cold shade!

Hymen on Crutches.

Earl Poulett has lately received in marriage the hand of Lady Smith Burgess, at her Ladyship's house on Piccadilly Terrace. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Carr. The Duke of Clarence gave away the bride. The bridegroom is in his 61st year—the bride is about the same age. He received with her 70,000*l.* ready money, but her ladyship's property is much more considerable, as her former husband, the late Sir John Smith Burgess, left her the great bulk of his fortune.

January & May.—An old gentleman of 84, having taken to the alter a young damsel of about 15, the clergyman said to him—"The font is at the other end of the Church." "What do I want with the font? said the old gentleman." "Oh! I beg your pardon," said the clerical wit, "I thought you had brought that child to be christened."

HORRIBLE ASSASSINATION

A most dreadful crime was recently committed in the commune of Biron, canton of Montpazier and arrondisement of Bergerac. On the 30th June in the afternoon, three young girls, two of whom were sisters, one aged 10, and the other 16, went into the forest of Biron to gather strawberries.—Suddenly an individual presented himself who, without uttering a word, commanded them by signs to fall upon their knees and pray to God, which they did in their fright; he then drew a cutlass from under his coat and plunged it into the breast of the youngest of the sisters. The third girl then ran off, but she was pursued by the assassin, who gave her three stabs with the cutlass, and thinking her dead, returned to the two sisters. The younger was then struggling in the agonies of death in the arms of her sister—the monster then stabbed the latter and disappeared. The young girl above mentioned, who was so desperately wounded, succeeded in getting home, and raised the hue and cry. The Police flew to the spot, where the two bodies lay, and from thence to the residence of a deaf and dumb man named Mouteil, a most villainous character—they did not find him, but his father said with a sorrowful air, that he had not seen him since ten o'clock in the morning.—Their suspicions are almost confirmed by the circumstance of the wretch not having been seen at home since.

A Frenchman has arrived at Baltimore, who has, after 13 years reflection, and a of labour, invented a balloon in the shape of a fish, which can traverse the air with velocity in any direction!—Essex Register.

INAUGURAL DISCOURSE.

The admirable discourse delivered before the Historical Society in this city, by the Hon. GOVERNEUR MORRIS, at his inauguration as President of the Society, has just issued from the press. When we heard this excellent discourse delivered, we anticipated the pleasure of presenting it entire to our readers. But as the publishers have secured the copyright of it, we can only extract the following passages:—

"Many important events are on record, and however dark and doubtful the testimony of ancient chronicles, there exists a great number of authenticated facts.—These, when collected, may be called the skeleton of history, But how much must depend on judgment and skill in putting the scattered materials together? And again, the solid bones duly placed and connected, those muscles must be added, which give it symmetry, strength and grace. At last the goodly form, complete in all its fair proportion, when language spreads a finish over the promœthian frame, how must its appearance be affected by the coloring it receives?—The same event, treated by different historians, comes white from one hand, tinged with a rosy blush from another, and from another black.

The experience and reflection of many years have led me to consider the holy writings, not only as most authentic and instructive in themselves, but as the clue to all other history. They tell us what man is, and they alone tell us why he is what he is: a contradictory creature, that, seeing and approving what is good, persues and performs what is evil. All of private and of public life is there displayed. Effect are traced with unerring accuracy, each to its real cause. We see, in the beautiful story of Joseph, how envy, destroyed the peace of families, leads to cruelty and to crime. How a dignified condition is degraded by lust. How the wrath of despised wantonness stimulated a woman to deadly revenge. How the heart burning in a shepherd's family drove a minister of state to the foot of Pharoah's throne. And how for purposes still more important, a shepherd boy was enabled to govern a mighty kingdom.

From the said pure fountain of wisdom, we learn that vice destroys freedom; that arbitrary power is founded on public immorality, and that misconduct in those who rule a republic, necessary consequence of general licentiousness, so disguits and degrades a nation, that dead to generous sentiment, they become willing slaves. We read that, in the latter days of Samuel, the judges "turned aside after lucre, and took bribes, and perverted judgment," A more miserable state of society can hardly be conceived. Then laws to protect the weak against the strong, the innocent against the wicked, become instruments of oppression and torture. Then order is lost, confusion rules, and, to borrow expressions from the favorite bard of nature,

"Wrong becomes right, or rather, right go on before us, and fight our battles."

Here is a profound lesson of political wisdom, given long before Aristotle's Ethics, very long before Machiavel's discourses on the first Decade of Livy, and still longer before Montesquieu's Spirit of Laws. When the last of these authors, in spitely repetition of his predecessors, tells us that virtue is the principle of republics, he offers human testimony. That form of government which God himself had promulgated, those institutions which infinite wisdom had provided, in special relation to the climate, soil and situation of the country, to the genius, temper and character of the people, become intolerable from the prevalance of vice and impiety. It is a trite maxim, that man is governed by hope and fear. The desire of pleasure, wealth and power, the apprehension of poverty, pain and death, prompt generous reward; speedy, severe punishment, are the human means to invigorate duty, stimulate zeal, correct perversity and restrain guilt. But experience teaches, that profligates may gain all the enticements of life, and criminals escape punishment, by the perpetration of new and more atrocious crimes. Something more, then, is required to encourage virtue, suppress vice, preserve public peace, and secure national independence. There must be something more to hope than pleasure, wealth and power.—Something after death. There must be religion. When that ligament is torn society is disjointed and its members perish. The nation is exposed to foreign violence and domestic convulsions. Vicious rulers, chosen by a vicious people, turn back the current of corruption to its source. placed in a situation where they can exercise authority for their own emolument, they betray their trust. They take bribes. They sell statutes and decrees. They sell honor and life. They sell their conscience. They sell their country. By this vile traffic they become odious and contemptible. The people, compelled to gulp the poison they had mingled, feel their vitals twinge and in anguish exclaim, away with these pretended patriots. Begone hypocrites. Begone. Let a single man be invested with executive and judicial authority. Master and owner of the state, he will, for his own sake, protect it against foreign foes, and provide for an impartial administration of justice; that his subjects, secured and enriched, may multiply, and thus increase his wealth and power. In the simple language of holy writ they say, "he will judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles."

"Between whose endless jar justice resides,
"Have lost their names; and so has justice too."

Reduced to this forlorn condition, the more sedate and respectable members of the community, seeing no security for property or for life, seek shelter under the wings of absolute power. "Give elders said, make us a king to judge us like all the nations." Samuel, the aged bosom still warm with patriotic sentiments, endeavored to preserve the old form of equal right. To this end, he assembled the people, and displayed a highly wrought, but faithful picture of evils which would grow out of despotism. In vain. Men sore with present sufferings have not temper to reflect on remote consequence. In the maddening moment, they are deaf even to the voice of a prophet. "The people said we will have a king over us, that we may be like all the nations, that he may judge us, and go out before us and fight our battles." Here is a profound lesson of political wisdom, given long before Aristotle's Ethics, very long before Machiavel's discourses on the first Decade of Livy, and still longer before Montesquieu's Spirit of Laws. In the simple language of holy writ they say, "he will judge us, and go out before us, and fight our battles."

Two centuries have not yet passed since Europe saw a similar effect, a similar cause. The Danes with undue oppressions of their nobility, ferred absolute power on their king general suffrage.

We find in sacred history, an important political lesson; that the fession of sovereign power corrupts best heart.—The second Jewish king was peculiarly favored by the King kings, after leading an exemplary vate life, no sooner ascends a than, a prey to unbridled, desire becomes first vicious, then criminal. as the advocates of infidelity have only supposed, that book, had written by bigoted priests, they have concealed the guilt of their protector. They would have held out, an impressant example, for rations and imitation. They have covered, with bright varnish hideous traits of adultery and assa But truth, telling what he was, lesson awfully instructive. It tells the frailty of our nature, and the of trusting too much power even parent hands.

Another sublime lesson follows succeeding reign. The wisest genious, the completest acquirem science, the maturest strength of are combined in one man; and man wears a crown.—By his wisd accumulates the world's wealth of his narrowest districts. He stupendous monument of pious ficence. It is consecrated to the God. And, then, the royal communities that would almost brace an idiot. In the plenitude many strength, he seeks pleasures elude his grasp; leaving a bosom led by age, the dullness of fatie the loathings of disgust. Happy the wise man's weakness here tells even in that excess. But alas his intellect is so obscured, by the exhausted desire, that he worships and stones in pitiful contempt the comforts of his lust. If this the story were tested by fashionable of evidence, we should perhaps that, as superlative wisdom combined with excessive weakn tale of his debauchery must be lopation, by some toe to his fame act ount to his talents, as to love gratify national pride. Two centuries have not yet paſſed away, ſince Europe ſaw a ſimilar effect, from a ſimilar cauſe. The Danes writhing under oppreſſions of their nobility, conferred abſolute power on their king, by general ſuffrage.

We find in ſacred hiſtory, another important political leſſon; that the poſſeſſion of ſovereign power corrupts the beſt heart.—The ſecond Jewiſh king, a man ſpeculiarly favored by the King of kings, after leading an exemplary private life, no ſooner aſcends a throne, than, a pray to unbridled deſire, he becomes firſt vicious, then criminal. If, as the advocates of infidelity have gratuitouſly ſuppoſed, that book had been written by bigoted prieſts, they would have concealed the guilt of their pious protector. They would have held him out, an impeccant example, for admirations and imitation. They would have covered, with bright varniſh, the hideous traits of adultery and aſſaſſination. But truth, telling what he was, gives a leſſon awfully inſtructive. It teaches the frailty of our nature, and the danger of truſting too much power even to the pureſt hands.

Another ſublime leſſon follows in the ſucceeding reign. The wideſt ſcope of genious, the compleateſt acquirement of ſcience, the maſureſt ſtrength of intellect are combined in one man; and that man wears a crown.—By his wiſdom he accumulates the world's wealth in one of his narrowest diſtricts. He rears a ſtupendous monument of pious magnificence. It is conſecrated to the living God. And, then, the royal architect commits follies that would almoſt diſgrace an ideot. In the proſtration of many ſtrength, he ſeeks pleaſures that elude his graſp; leaving a boſom chilled by age, the dulneſs of ſatiety, and the loathings of diſguſt. Happy had his wiſe man's weakneſs been reſtrained even in that excess. But alas his bright intellect is ſo obſcured, by the apathy of exhauſted deſire, that he worſhips ſticks and ſtones in puiful condeſcenſion to the conſorts of his luſt. If this part of the ſtory were tested by faſhionable rules of evidence, we ſhould perhaps be told that, as ſuperlative wiſdom cannot be combined with exceſſive weakneſs, the tale of his debauchery muſt be an interpolation, by ſome foe to his fame, or the account to his talents, as an invention to gratify national pride. Thus Solomon's character might come, from the philoſophic crucible, all gold and all dreſs. But experience avouches the hiſtoric truth. We have known in Engliſh annals a man whoſe capacious mind embraced all ſcience. With a rare power of inſtruction he not only pointed out the means by which knowledge might be enlarged, but ſeems to have ſeen the remote bound to which it could extend. And yet that wonderful man ſullied his ſoul by taking a bribe. The character a great Engliſh poet gave of Chancellor Bacon is not wholly inapplicable to the Jewiſh king: "The greateſt, wiſeſt, meaneſt of mankind."

The Exchange Coffee-Houſe Books, gives the following information:—

"From St Thomas, Aug. 8. Gen. Bolivar accompanied by three officers, arrived here yeſterday, in diſgrace.

Report ſtates that he had ſtarted and left his army behind, when attacked at Ocumara, by Gen. Morales, and went to Bonair; but on hearing that Sir Gregor McGregor, who had captured Victoria, and had come up with 700 men, defeated Morales, and again got poſſeſſion of Ocumara, he returned, but would not be received by his troops.

Morales is deſperately wounded, and obliged to retreat to Porto-Cabello.—Sublette had an action with ſome royal troops, and been compelled to retreat towards Cumana. There Gen Marino is in force. Biron's fleet ſailed, ſuppoſed for windward, as he is quite diſguſted with the conduct of Bolivar."

"All Europe with regard to buſineſs, is diſtreſſed—this country particularly ſo. War conſumptions have ceaſed, and peace conſumptions have not yet reſumed their wonted courſe. LINES.

To an Officer on his departure with Lord Exmouth on the expedition against Algiers.

Go! gallant Youth, go with the World's applause,
And reap true glory in a Chriſtian cauſe:
Go ſhare new honors with thy brave compeers,
And hurl the Britiſh thunder on Algiers.
When Europe ſcarce has breath'd from all her throes,
Or known the ſweets tranquility beſtows;
When ſcarce Illuſtrious Wellington has hurl'd
From his proud height the Deſpot of the World, Say, ſhall theſe Afric Pirates of the Main Diſturb fair Peace, and break her golden reign;
Shall England's Pennant, ſtreaming in the air,
Crouch at the preſence of a base Corſair?
The ſhade of Nelſon riſes from the grave
To vindicate the rites he died to ſave.
Go! then brave ſouls, on Providence rely,
And guard your Nelſon's dying Legacy.
What tho' a while the Britiſh Lion ſleep,
Go! tell theſe ruthleſs Monſters of the deep,
That rous'd to vengeance by inſulting foes,
He wakes more dreadful from a ſhort repoſe.
Yet oh! may heaven ſome guardian Cherub ſend,
To ſhield from harm my brave and ardent Friend;
And may that Angel, 'mid the cannon's wreck,
Keep a ſtrict watch on Royal Charlotte's deck!
But you, my Friend, whom perils ne'er could daunt, Exclaim, "Ye dangers and ye fears avaunt!
One rallying ſhout for Meſſmates and for me,
Old England, Lads! Exmouth and victory!"

Miscellaneous.

A real Tragedy was exhibited at Sackett's Harbor, a few days ſince, before a large company of ſpectators. Attached to the ſhow bill of a wire dancer, appeared an advertiſement of an Italian Sailor, who promiſed to exhibit wonderful feats, ſuch as the ſpectators had never before ſeen. Curioſity attracted a very full houſe. After the firſt had performed his part of the entertainment, the ſailor entered, called for a blanket and pillow, and laid himſelf down upon the floor. All eyes were turned towards him in anxious expectation, when he drew from his boſom a piſtol, clapped the muzzle to his ear, and blew out his brains! This cloſed the entertainment.

As horrid as this deed appears, the deluded man who became its victim had undoubtedly anticipated as much eclat, as he does, who deliberately goes out to ſhoot his friend, or to be ſhot—in a duel. And if therefore ſhades of difference in the two crimes, the ſelf-murderer is the leaſt criminal.—Alb. Argus

SEA PHRASES.

Some readers fond of amuſement, will be glad to run over the following paragraph from a Barbadoes paper, reſpecting a new corps of Sea Fencibles eſtabliſhed there, in which various Sea Phraſes are ſucceſſively applied:—

"My Lads—The firſt thing you have to do is to anſwer to your names—when you hear the word "attention," you muſt bring both the ſtarboard and larboard heels to bear together, keeping your jib-ſtays taught-bowſed up, and ſquare your ſhoulders by the lifts and braces, clapping both your fiſts againſt your bends, one and all at the ſame moment, till the words "ſtand at eaſe," when the hollow of the ſtarboard foot muſt be ſmartly backed aſtern of the larboard one—you muſt alſo clap an over hand knot upon your fiſt athwart your bread-bag: after coming to attention, at the words, "ſhoulder arms," rouſe Brown Beſs by the middle, and, bowſe her up from the lower tier of the ſtarboard ſide, to the larboard bow, keeping a good look out that ſhe don't make a lee-lurch and capſize, otherwiſe you'll be apt to knock out your meſsmate's top-lights; at the words "ſecure arms," the ſtarboard arm which is now faſt to the ſtarboard bends, muſt go athwart your bread-bag, in order to ceize Brown Beſs by the breech, clapping your larboard fiſt to her mid-ſhips—be ſure to heave her muzzle a-head, ſo that her breech will come right under your larboard wing, ſo as to ſecure her fire-works from ſqualls, no tarpaulings being allowed; after ſhouldering, at the word "preſent arms," you ſlew Beſs half round, and ſeize her with the ſtarboard fiſt, then fetch her up betwixt your two top-lights, ſo that your flying jib boom will be two inches from her midſhips; be ſure to back the hollow of the ſtarboard foot aſtern the heel of the larboard one, during this motion; after bringing Beſs from the larboard bow, the next is, "advance arms," both of the two firſt motions of which, are the ſame as "preſent," but at the third, you heave her alongſide of the ſtarboard bends, ſeizing the guard with the ſtarboard fiſt, ſo as to ſecure her alongſide;—ſo much for one leſſon.

CURE FOR THE BOTS.

Conſidering it to be the duty of every individual to contribute all he conveniently can to increaſe the fund of uſeful knowledge among mankind. I have thought proper to make known a ſure and infallible cure for the bots in horſes. This diſorder proves fatal to more horſes than any other to which that noble and favorite animal is ſubject. Its ſymptoms are, ſtamping with his hind feet, looking round to the ſide, lying down, wallowing, &c. and likewiſe on the inſides of the upper lip, are ſmall white lumps which grow more prominent as the bots progreſs in cutting the maw. To remedy which take one ſpoonful of common table ſalt, one ſpoonful of gun-powder, and two ſpoonful of flour, then ſcrape the upper lip, in the inſide until it is raw and begins to bleed, and then rub as much of the aforementioned flour on it as will ſtick to it, after which keep the horſe in motion for ſome time. The writer has been in the habit of making uſe of this remedy for a great number of horſes, for more than fifteen years, and has never known it to fail; and he is ſo well aſſured of its efficacy, that he has no doubt of its never failing where the maw is not quite cut through.

LATEST FROM ALGIERS.

(via France.)

Yeſterday arrived at this port, the brig Bourdeaux-Packet, 32 days from Havre, by this arrival, we have been politely furniſhed by a friend with Paris Papers to Sept. 14, from which we have been enabled to make the following tranſlations:

OFFICIAL ARTICLE.

Paris, Sept. 13.

The Preſident of the Anti-Barbarian inſtitution, had yeſterday, a private audience of his majeſty; who, before he paſſed into his cabinet, publicly congratulated the preſident upon the accompliſhment of the great object of their wiſhes and labours, by the brilliant ſucceſs of the combined expedition againſt Algiers;—the news of which had been received by his majeſty in a deſpatch from the French Conſul, reſiding in that regency.—The immediate reſult of this great ſucceſs, ſo ably conducted by Lord Exmouth, has been, beſides the deſtruction of the piratical cruizers, the liberation of all the Europeans in ſlavery, and the abolition of the capture of them in future.

The details of the operation of this ſignal act of vengeance againſt the neſt (foyer) of the piratical ſyſtem, we ſhall not delay officially to publiſh. In the mean time the following particulars are authentic.—[Moniteur.

Further Particulars.

News has been received from Algiers, to the 31ſt of Auguſt. The Engliſh fleet came in ſight of that place the 27th, at one o'clock in the afternoon, to the number of 32 ſail, of which ſix were Dutch.

After an unavailing attempt at negociation, Lord Exmouth moored his veſſels of the line within half cannon ſhot from the batteries of the port and road; placing his own ſhip, the Queen Charlotte, at the entrance of the port, and ſo near the wharver, that his yards touched the houſes; and his guns, taking the interior of the port in reverſe, overthrew all the Algerine artillery men, who were entirely uncovered and expoſed.

The Algerines ſuſtained the fire of the Engliſh for upwards of ſix hours, and their fury appeared to increaſe when two Engliſh officers demanded leave to embark, and to attack a obenoise confree (carcaſe) to the principal Algerine frigate which blocked up the entrance of the harbour, and ſet her on fire. This enterpriſe was crowned with complete ſucceſs. The wind from the weſt being ſtrong, the flames were immediately communicated to the whole ſquadron, and Five Frigates, four ſloops of war and thirty Gun-boats, became a prey to the conflagration. The city ſuffered leſs, notwithſtanding the bombs did conſiderable damage.

The Engliſh ſuſtained a very heavy loſs.—It is eſtimated that a thouſand men were loſt on each ſide. One of the Algerines frigates, in flames, was driven by the wind upon Lord Exmouth's ſhip, which compelled him to cut her cables, and retire, for ſome time from the combat.

It is ſaid, she has loſt two hundred of her crew. His Lordſhip was wounded, and a Captain of one of the frigates was killed. The Dey did not ceaſe, during the whole action, to paſs from poſt to poſt, animating his ſoldiers.

On the 28th, the Engliſh ſquadron anchored in the great harbour; but out of cannon ſhot from the town. On the 29th, an Armiſtice was concluded, upon the baſis which Lord Exmouth had previouſly propoſed. The following are the principal conditions:—

1. The Algerine regency conſents to aboliſh the ſlavery of Europeans in Algiers; and, in conſequence, to ſet at liberty immediately, all Europeans in captivity.

SUCCESS OF THE PATRIOTS IN PERU.

We copy the following from Yesterday's Evening Post:— Columbian, October 23.

FROM BUENOS AYRES.

We have been favoured by a mercantile house in this city with the Buenos Ayres official Gazette of the 17th August last. which amongst other articles, contains a minute detail of the several actions that took place in April, between the patriots, commanded by Manuel Padilla and the royalists of Peru, under Tacon by which it appears that the latter had been constantly beaten, and obliged to retreat in disorder, leaving behind a [illegible] number of wounded; among them [illegible] principal officers. General [illegible] the success of the patriots [illegible] that previded [illegible] ut the [illegible] dies a- [illegible] tioned the lady of the commander in chief, general Padilla; and also, Donna Juana Azurdy, who, at the head of thirty privates and two hundred countrymen, had put to flight the enemy in several rencontres; in one of which, she in person wrested from an ensign of a company the colours which had been presented them for their bravery, manifested in the conquest of the cities of La Paz, Peru, Arequipa and Cuzco. The colors were richly embroidered, and on the flag were figures emblematic of their valor. The same Gazette contains the act of the independence, which will be published in our next.

LATE FROM BUENOS AYRES.

The brig Regent, Bartlett, which has arrived at New-York, sailed from Buenos Ayres on the 1st of September. Capt. Bartlett informs us that all was quiet there. The dissentions which existed were amicably settled, and all parties had submitted to the new independent government. The Spanish and Portuguese expeditions had not arrived.

An Apothecary and an Upholsterer.

A gentleman of conſiderable property, with his three handſome daughters, having removed with his family from Biſhopsgate ſtreet to Berners ſtreet, ſent one of his ſervants to an upholſterer in the neighbourhood to come to his houſe the next morning at nine o'clock, intending to give him ſome directions relative to curtains, chair covers, &c. It happened the preceeding night that one of the gentleman's daughters was taken ill, and as ſhe grew worſe every hour, and the family apothecary lived in Finsbury ſquare, a ſervant was at eight o'clock in the morning diſpatched to deſire the attendance of any apothecary he could find. He returned in a ſhort time, and told them he had met one in Rathbone place, who would wait upon them as ſoon as poſſible. The ſervant was diſpatched into the city for a female relation, and had ſcarce left the houſe before a rap at the door announced a viſitor. The two ſiſters both running to the bed room window at the ſame time, and ſeeing a good looking man, to whoſe perſon they were a ſtranger, concluded it was their new apothecary, and ſent down their own maid to let him in, and ſhow him up ſtairs. The girl eagerly ran to the door, and received him with a, "Sir, I am very glad you are come, my lady has waited for you, pleaſe to walk up ſtairs." The upholſterer, for ſuch was the new viſitor, imagined there was ſome extraordinary emergency, and was ushered up one pair of ſtairs, and expected to have been introduced to the drawing-room, but inſtead, was ſhewn up another pair, and uſhered into a bed room, where were two very beautiful females ready to receive him, and a third in bed. The curtains were drawn, and every appearance of privacy. This ſurpriſed him, and his ſurpriſe was further increaſed, by one of them telling him he was glad he was come, deſiring him to ſit down by the bed ſide, beginning with, "You cannot imagine, Sir, what a terrible night my ſiſter has had never, never in her head, violent preſpirations, and every bad ſymptom"—"I am extremely ſorry for it, madam"—"Appears to have every ſymptom of a fever."—"Bad account indeed, madam"—"And in twenty-four hours has only had——"—"Dear me, that's very bad indeed" (ſtammering as if the d—— had been in him,—"Be ſo good, Sir, as look at her tongue; put your arm out of the bed, my dear." Which the young lady complying with, the upholſterer got an opportunity of ſaying in a word, and ſaid, "From all theſe circumſtances, he thought he conceived, he apprehended, that they had better ſent for an apothecary"—"For an apothecary!—for an apothecary!—for an apothecary!" ſcreamed all three together, "why are not you an apothecary!" Down drops the ſick young lady, and covered herſelf with the bed cloaths, and out ran the other two, frightened out of their wits. "Was there ever ſuch a miſtake, ſuch a blunder, pray, Sir, who are you, when came you? who ſent for you?" By this time the whole houſe was in one general confuſion from top to bottom, when the apothecary, rapping at the ſtreet door, and the upholſterer being introduced to the maſter of the houſe, developed the whole myſtery.

LONDON, Sept. 21.

Bullion to the amount of a million a week continues to be imported into this country.

In the late attack on Algiers the Dey thought proper to decapitate some of his officers for want of judgment, on the principle, that a head without brains was of little use.

GIBRALTAR, Sept. 14.

Perhaps on no occasion did the persevering gallantry and cool determination of British sailors shine more conspicuously, than on the day of the 27th of August before Algiers.—Amongst many brilliant traits illustrative of these qualities in our Countrymen, we select the following.

On the Queen Charlotte taking her station at the distance of 45 yards from the Molehead battery, and before a shot was fired from her, a number of Moors, attracted by curiosity, came down to the water's edge in front of her tremendous broadside. Lord Exmouth with a feeling of humanity ever attendant on true courage, before he directed the ship to open her fire, waved his hat to those incautious persons, desiring them to get under the cover of their works.

The Impregnable was dreadfully exposed to the fire of a battery upon the Mill side, and suffered greatly by the explosion of a shell on board of her, which communicated to some loose powder; she is said to have lost between 60 and 70 men by this accident alone, but this unauspicious circumstance only prompted her gallant Admiral (Milne) to send to Lord Exmouth, to assure his Lordship, that, although the Impregnable might sink, she should never surrender.

When the action had continued about three hours, Lord Exmouth, foreseeing the result, telegraphed the word "Infallible" which was received with three cheers, and gave fresh vigour to the efforts of our tars.

Lord Exmouth returned from his glorious expedition on Thursday afternoon; when, after saluting his flag as usual, the garrison further fired three salvos of 83 guns each from the North Detaching and Europa batteries.

Lord Exmouth received a graze in the cheek by a grape shot early in the action, and his coat was literally torn from his body by splinters.

Major Collet of the Royal Engineers, in the hear of the action, went into the harbor and set fire to one of the Algerine frigates; a second was set fire to by a Lieutenant of the Queen Charlotte, and the other ships in succession by the boats of the fleet. On the burning of their cables the whole of the Algerine navy drifted out of the harbor and one of them in flames, had nearly fallen on board the Queen Charlotte; this took place between 9 and 10 o'clock at night.

It is computed that seven hundred pieces of Ordinance were brought into action by the Algerines alone, to the fire of which the British and Dutch squadrons were exposed for more than nine successive hours.

Extract from a Citizen of Baltimore to his friend dated Port-au-Prince, Oct. 15.

"Last Thursday was a great day with the Indigenes, as Petion was installed President for life of this part of the Island. A general salute was fired at the rising of the sun. At nine o'clock, about ten thousand were on parade, well dressed and armed; their cavalry more particularly looked extremely well. The commercial foreigners here having received an invitation to join in the procession, we proceeded from the Consul's house headed by himself, to the senate house, where we were handsomely received by an aid-de-camp of Petion, who assigned us a situation from whence we could see every thing interesting. A few senators were present, the whole body does not number more than nine—a great number of people came to see the installation; but I have never witnessed more order than was preserved throughout the day; not a single instance of tumultuous disposition having been shewn.

"At 12 o'clock, the President made his entry preceded by his principal generals, who, were dressed in very rich and costly habits; he was conducted to a chair opposite to the President of the Senate, who after a short pause rose and addressed the assembly, and as well as I could understand he commenced by entering at full into the revolutions and changes which this unhappy Island had been subject to since the French revolution, and from the first emancipation of the people here until the present period—he descanted at length upon the character and actions of Petion since he has had the direction of their affairs; he exalted his name for his mildness and benevolence, and for the many good deeds he had done; he enumerated the benefits he had conferred upon this people, by changing their character, which had been unfixed, converting it into something like order and refinement—he stated that the people, impressed by his many virtues, had upon mature reflection conferred upon him the supreme authority, creating him President for life, and which authority is only to be restrained by the Senate and the Constitution. Petion's answer was short and pertinent; he acknowledged the honor his country had conferred upon him, and felt grateful for this last testimony of unbounded confidence; then holding up his hand he gave his assertion of honor that he would do every thing for the happiness and benefit of his country and people. When he sat down, there was a general acclamation of the soldiery and people, accompanied by a general discharge of artillery from the forts and his ships in the harbors. We then left the Senate house and proceeded to Church, about half a mile, through a file of soldiers.—Te Deum was sung at the Church; another discharge was fired and we then dispersed. In the evening, there was a general illumination, firing, &c. I have endeavored to give a general idea of the occurrences of the day, as it is not every day, that such events take place, and small as it may appear in the U. States, I assure you it has done honor to the people here."

UNDAUNTED RESOLUTION.

In one of the Calcutta papers received by the Argonaut, we find that the Insurance society of that city have presented capt. Richard Cook with 3000 rupees, for having, in a daring and gallant manner, fixed an iron chain to the cut-water of the ship Sultana, while on fire in the harbor of Calcutta by which means she was hauled out from the shore, and the mischief prevented from proceeding among the outer vessels in the harbour. During the fire the harbor-master (Mr. Clark) of Calcutta, was also particularly distinguished by his spirited exertions; and which led Commodore Hayes to address a letter to the Editor of the Asiatic Mirror, containing the following anecdote of Clark's intrepidity:—"He was gunner of the Duke of Clarence, on a voyage of discovery, under my command, and while we were traversing the Pacific Ocean, off the north coast of New Guinea, the jemadar (a serjeant or sub officer) of the ship's detachment fell overboard to windward from the larboard anchor; the Duke being close hauled on the larboard tack, going at the rate of three knots, with a little air, and smooth water; on learning the accident, I jumped upon deck, and ordered the helm to be put down, which brought the ship round instantly, and the unfortunate person abreast of her gangway. At this time a enormous shark appeared to seize him which he perceived and his cries were dreadful. In this extremity, I called upon Clark my gunner, to take the end of a rope, and leap overboard upon the terrific animal, then in the act of turning to swallow his prey. He magnanimously did so, and the shock it received impelled the monster to a precipitate retreat, the distance of a cable's length, before it recovered and turned to the ship, by which time we had got both the gunner and jemadar on board. The unfortunate native officer, however, expired ten minutes afterwards, apparently unhurt, notwithstanding every requisite medical aid was given him; it being the opinion of the surgeon, that his death was occasioned by the terrific shock he received, on beholding the monster in the act of devouring him; which dreadful fate was only averted by the heroic exertion of Mr. Clark, now harbor master in Calcutta."

Besides the above 2000 more were collected in Bona, Oran, &c. which would embark the moment they arrived.

Money returned by the Dey. To Naples 357,000 dollars. To Sardinia 25,000.

When Lord Exmouth hauled off from bombarding the place (being out of ammunition) the seamen were so fatigued that they were not called upon to repair and set up the rigging till after daybreak on the following morning; from which time, in less than 24 hours, the whole fleet was again in readiness for action, and the ships which had expended their powder received the requisite supply from the vessel carrying the spare ammunition.

The Dey's palace suffered greatly, and there was scarcely a house in the town that did not receive injury. It was generally believed and asserted on shore, that the first broadside from the Queen Charlotte killed not less than 400 men; a great number having collected on the beach opposite to her, and who neglected to get out of the way when a signal was made so to do.

The Consuls, and others who were at Algiers, gave it as their opinion, that another hour's firing would have levelled the city with the ground; and the officers who landed after the action concurred in this opinion, that they thought the upper part, at least, of the houses would in that time be brought down by the fire.

EARTHQUAKES.

On Saturday the 9th instant, about five minutes after mid-day, a slight shock of an earthquake was felt in this city and the neighbourhood; and again, on Saturday last, about twenty minutes after eight o'clock, in the morning, another shock more severe than the former, was experienced, which continued nearly twenty seconds, accompanied with a rumbling noise, and made the stoves, window-sashes, and cupboard furniture rattle violently. There was a profound calm at the time of the last shock, and the atmosphere was somewhat clouded.

Esquimaux.—We do not recollect ever to have seen so vast an assemblage of persons of all ranks at Leith, as were collected there on Thursday, to see the contest between the Esquimaux youth, lately brought to this country from Davis's Straits, and the six-oared whale boat. No part of the pier, the windows and roofs of houses, but were crowded; the decks and rigging of the vessels were the same: the latter at the eminent risk of many lives. The exhibition commenced a little before two o'clock, and lasted till half past three. His dexterity in managing his canoe was admirable, and he evidently shewed his ability to overcome his opponents in point of speed, by the advantages he often gave them and which he as often redeemed. He was very expert in diving, which he did several times, and also in throwing his dart. When at a considerable distance from the beacon, he threw one of his darts and struck the bulb of the beacon with the greatest certainty. He was so fastened into his seat, that he could not fall out, as a drawing, like the mouth of a purse, girds him about the loins, so that in an instant he was seen to dive under the water, head down and keel uppermost again, in the twinkling of an eye, he raised himself erect out of the water, and scudded along as if nothing had happened. A raft of wood impeded his progress down the harbour after starting, when to the astonishment of the spectators, he crossed the raft with his canoe, and again launched into the water. His canoe is a very great curiosity, weighing in all 10 lb. He rows it by one oar or paddle, and he is so very dexterous in managing it, that he outstrips any boat of six oars. The harbour was crowded with boats filled with elegantly dressed females. Previous to the exhibition the publick had an opportunity of inspecting the canoe and the following curiosities at a ware room at the west dock, viz: two sea unicorns' horns, the skulls of a sea horse and bear, the ear of whale, and the preserved skin of a black eagle. The Esquimaux was dressed in the fashion of his country, from the waist downwards, in undressed seal skins; his jacket of the same, only the unpressed side inwards. He is a stout looking, healthy young man, and appears very docile. He understands a few English, and when he overcomes the method of talking common to his country, (a species of whispering) there is no doubt but that he may soon become proficient in our language. We were astonished to hear expressions make use of to him on Thursday, by some of the crew of the ship which brought him here, exactly the same as we have heard in conversations between the natives of the interior of Africa Happily the whole passed off without any serious accident, though several people fell into the harbour, but were got out safely, completely ducked.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 30.—Two ships in the China trade, arrived at Gottenburgh, have brought very interesting accounts relative to Eastern Asia and its commerce. The disputes which reigned between the English factory at Macao, and the viceroy of Canton, are well known. These have been completely adjusted by the skilful conduct of Sir George Staunton; and the Chinese are now more yielding than ever towards the English, because they stand in need of their services to protect their coast against the pirates, who's principal nest the Ladrone Islands, and are become so daring, that they once had it in contemplation to attack Macao itself. Those sea-robbers are in intimate connection with the insurgents in the southern provinces of the Chinese empire; they supply all their wants from the provinces and have there their lurking places and little ports, in fine, they keep up a communication between the southern and northern provinces where a spirit of insurrection has here and there shown itself. The Chinese marine is too weak and helpless to oppose them—they could alone be chastised by English ships of war; but they every year extend their system; they increase the number of their vessels of war, build better ones, and make such considerable progress in navigation, that they threaten in no long time to become masters of those seas. The English who had once monopolized the trade to China, have for some time past found a formidable rival in the North Americans—the latter, with their peculiarly well built ships, make the voyage both out and home much quicker, and can thus afford to sell Chinese produce much cheaper in the European markets. The Americans bring chiefly peltry from the North West Coast of America to China, and exchange it for China produce, so that they are not under the necessity of paying for every thing with specie, brought from Europe or South America.

Since the restored continental and maritime peace of Europe, other nations begin again to visit China; the Dutch, the Swedes, and the Danes have fitted out many Chinamen.

Another new trading power, which for some time has been in communication with China, must not here be overlooked; it is Australasia. The King of Owyhee (where Cook lost his life) a very enterprising man, has brought all the Sandwich Islands under his dominion; the English have introduced their manners and language, and a considerable number of English and American sailors have entered his service with peculiar advantages. He purchased some ships from the Americans, and after their model has built others at Owyhee; he is now actually employed in forming a small navy. With his merchant ships he drives a profitable trade to China, by bringing peltry from Codisk to Iunkao, and receiving Chinese produce in return By means of this intercourse, for which his insular empire is so favourably situated, as well as the frequent visits of English and American ships, a wonderful change has taken place in the Sandwich Isles.

The popularity which Lord Byron's Poem "Fare thee well," has lately acquired, induces us to present our readers with the following.

STANZAS,

Written between Dover and Calais, July 28th, 1792.

BY THE LATE MRS. ROBINSON.

Boundless billow, cease thy motion,
Bear me not so swiftly o'er;
Cease thy roaring, foaming ocean,
I will tempt thy rage no more.

Ah! within my bosom bearing,
Varying passions widely reign;
Love, with pitied resentment meeting,
Throbs by turns, of joy and pain.

Joy, that far from foes I wander,
Where their taunts can reach no more;
Pain, that Woman's heart grows fonder,
When her dream of bliss is o'er.

Love, by fickle fancy banish'd,
Spurn'd by hope, indignant flies;
Yet when Love and Hope are banish'd,
Restless memory never dies.

But I go, where fate shall lead me,
Far across the troubled deep;
Where no stranger's ear shall hear me,
Where no eye shall see me weep.

Proud has been my fatal passion,
Proud my injured heart shall be!
While each thought, each inclination,
Still shall prove me worthy thee!

Not one sigh shall tell my story,
Not one tear my cheek shall stain;
Silent grief shall be my glory,
Grief—that stoops not to complain.

Let thy bosom prone to ranging,
Still by ranging seek a cure;
Mine disdains the thought of changing,
Proudly destined to endure.

Yet, ere far from all I treasure'd,
Ere I bid adieu;
For my days of pain be measur'd,
"Take the song that's still thy due.

Let believe, no servile passions
Seek to charm thy vagrant mind;
Well I know thy inclinations,
Wav'ring as the passing wind.

I have lov'd thee—dearly lov'd thee,
Thro' an age of worldly woe;
How ungrateful I have prov'd thee,
Let my mournful exile shew.

Ten long years of anxious sorrow,
Hour by hour I counted o'er;
Looking forward till to morrow,
Ev'ry day I lov'd thee more!

Pow'r and splendour could not charm me,
I no joy in wealth could see;
Nor could threats or fear alarm me,
Save the fear of losing thee!

When the storm of fortune prest'd thee,
I have wept to see thee weep;
When relentless cares distress'd thee,
I have lull'd those cares to sleep!

When with thee no ills could harm me,
Thou couldst ev'ry pang assuage;
But when absent, nought could charm me
Ev'ry moment seem'd an age.

Fare thee well—ungrateful rover!
We come Gallia's hostile shore,
Now the breezes waft me over,
Now we part—TO MEET NO MORE!

Foot Race.—Friday, the long expected foot race between Beal, the Yorkshire man, and Brierly, of Lancashire, for 200 guineas a side, was run at the race ground Pontefract, when Beal beat his opponent by about 100 yards—he ran the 4 miles in 20 minutes and ten seconds.

The Retort Valiant.

Two Gentlemen of the city of Bath having high words at a coffee-house, one of them was seen the autumn morning taking the warm revenge of thinking "a rascal" upon the street foot of his opponent. The latter afterwards called at his house, and was informed by the servant that his Master was not at home, but asked if he would leave any message for him. "No," replied he "you may tell him I merely called out of compliment, having been informed that he left his name at my door yesterday morning."

During the late glorious action before Algiers, as Lord Exmouth and captain Brisbane, were conversing together, by a spent ball, or some other cause, the latter was struck flat on the ground. Lord Exmouth immediately called the first Lieut. and exclaimed, "Poor Brisbane! he's gone! take the command!" —The Captain raising himself into a fitting posture, coolly said, "Not yet, my Lord," and in a moment after resumed his share in the business of the day.

ALGIERS.

If we tightly understand the situation of Algiers, the houses are built on the sea shore on the side of a mountain, so that these ranges of buildings resemble in form an amphitheatre as they gradually approximate the mountain. The buildings are all white, with flat roofs, and so closely joined together, that the public walks for the benefit of the air may be said to be on the tops of the houses. As the ranges are more elevated as they recede from the sea, those in the rear are not excluded from the benefit of the sea breeze and from the prospect by those which are placed in front. The bay is protected by a mole in a circular form, defended by heavy batteries. At each extremity of this crescent, are strong fortifications to command the entrance into the bay. Here we presume that the Algerine fleet rode at anchor, under the protection of the batteries, awaiting the approach of the squadron commanded by Lord Exmouth. A better mode of defending the city it would be difficult to imagine, an impregnable mole in front of the city defended by strong batteries and a fleet riding at anchor, under cover of the fortifications to secure the avenue while the hostile squadrons were approaching. The result however proves, how superior skill and enterprize may overcome the best founded calculations.

The late battle—The Algerines, it would seem, have been much undervalued as to their skill in gunnery: the late action against them, our readers will be surprised to hear, was the bloodiest which has been fought of late years, in comparison to the numbers employed.

In the action of the 1st June, there were 26 sail of the line (including the Sudacious) in action, with about 17 000 men, of these 281 were killed, and 797 wounded. Total 1,078.

In Lord Bridport's action, 23d June 1795, there were 14 sail, with about 10.000 men; of whom only 31 were killed, and 113 wounded.—Total 144.

In the action off Cape St. Vincent's there were 15 sail of the line, with about 10 000 men; of whom there were killed 73, and wounded 327.—Total 400.

In Lord Duncan's action, 11th Oct. 1797, there were 16 sail of the line (including two 50's) engaged, with about 8.000 men; of whom 191 were killed, and 566 wounded.—Total 757.

In the battle of the Nile, 1st August, 1798, there were 14 sail of the line engaged, with about 8,000 men; of whom 218 were killed, and 677 wounded.—Total 895.

In Lord Nelson's attack on Copenhagen, 2d April, 1801, there were 11 sail of the line and five frigates engaged, with about 7 000 men; of whom 253 were killed, and 644 wounded.—Total 897.

In the battle of Trafalgar, 21st Oct. 1805, there were 27 sail of the line engaged, with about 17,000 men; of whom 412 were killed, and 1.112 wounded. Total 1,524.

In the attack upon Algiers there appears to have been five sail of the line and five frigates engaged, the crews of which may be computed at about 5 000 men; of whom 128 were killed, and 690 wounded. Total 818. If the Dutch frigates were added, they may be taken at about 1,500 men, of whom 13 were killed, and 32 wounded; so that the totals would be, of 6,500 men. 141 killed, and 722 wounded. Total 863.

Our readers will see that the proportion, therefore of the killed, and wounded in this action exceeds the proportion in any of our former victories.

Extract of a Letter from an Officer on board H. M. Ship Queen Charlotte, August 28.

"Our hearts were truly gratified, and our hard work rewarded, last evening on seeing the vessels and boats that were leaving off crowded with slaves all free, such heart-felt shouts of joy and thanksgiving from the poor fellows, as they gave as the Queen Charlotte, were truly gratifying. This morning the money (332.000 dollars) is telling over, being the ransom money paid to this barbarian for the redemption of slaves, which is to be returned directly to the neighbouring Powers.—We brought Mr. Consul Saltha to every degree of humanity, even to ask pardon of the Consul. In short, such a complete thing was never known in so short a period."

Rear Admiral Milne, who so ably supported Lord Exmouth, as second in command, in the Impregnable, which suffered so severely from the fire of the Algerines, is a native of Edinburgh.—On the commencement of war with France, at the Revolution, he was Lieutenant on board the Blanch frigate, which, after a dreadful and severe action, captured the French frigate La Pique, in the West Indies. On the occasion the boats of both ships were so shattered by the shot when La Pique struck, that none of them could float, when Lieutenant Milne leaped overboard, followed by his dog, and swam to the French frigate with the British colours, which he immediately hoisted. Rear Admiral Milne was raised to the rank he now holds at the last General Naval Promotion, and was appointed to the Halifax station, where he was about to proceed, when ordered to second Lord Exmouth, previous to his departure across the Atlantic.

Notice to Discharged Soldiers

IN consequence of the great Inconvenience as well as attempted Imposition arising from Soldiers, daily claiming Grants of Land as the Settlements in Upper and Lower Canada, although they have in many instances been discharged from the service upwards of a year; His Excellency the Governor in Chief and Commander of the Forces is pleased to give this Public Notice to all concerned, That no Discharged Soldier will be received as a Settler who does not come forward on or before the FIRST day of January 1817, and bring with him satisfactory reasons, supported by proofs, why he did not at an earlier period avail himself of the bounty of Government, in claiming his grant of Land in due time, under the existing regulations.

Bible Society.

At a Meeting of the principal Gentry and Inhabitants of the Town of York, held the 3rd Dec 1816 for the purpose of taking into consideration the propriety of establishing a Society for the distribution of the Bible, and Common Prayer Book, throughout this Province,

Upon the Motion of The Hon. Mr. Chief Justice Powell, The Hon. and Rev. Dr. Strachan, Rector of York, was unanimously called to the Chair.

Dr. Strachan having taken the Chair, and having shortly stated the object of the Meeting, read the following Rules, and Regulations, for the establishment, order, and good government, of the Society.

[The remainder of the proceedings, with the Constitution of the Society will be given next week; in the meantime we are happy in being enabled to present our readers with the Address explaining the views and objects of the Association which Dr. Strachan was requested to draw up.]

ADDRESS.

The Bible and Common Prayer Book Society of Upper Canada in soliciting the assistance and countenance of the friends of Christianity begs leave to remind them of the unhappy situation of the Inhabitants of this Province in regard to religious instruction.—The whole regular establishment of a Christian Protestant Clergy amounts only to nine. In many places the great ignorance of the people and their total disregard of all religious observances are rapidly increasing and even those who come to this Country influenced with a reverence for religion, feel their devout impressions gradually wearing away,—Christian duties are neglected where no Christian ordinances are observed, nor can we look for any favourable change, much less the revival of vital Christianity unless vigorous exertions are made by the friends of the Gospel to diffuse its lights and point out its benefits.

The steady performance of the duties which our religion prescribes unites in Christian countries families and neighbourhoods together, for there can be no chain of connection or bond of union deserving of confidence except they rest upon our reverence of doctrines and our practice of precepts which tend to powerfully to produce rectitude of conduct and purity of heart and which by raising the soul above temporal things prepare it for the enjoyment of those that are eternal.

Of the two Pillars of Christianity, a regular Ministry, and a knowledge of the sacred Scriptures, the first may be said to be almost wanting in this country and the second entirely so. To increase the Ministry of the word, requires time and is not immediately in our power; but the dissemination of the Scriptures is within the compass of our exertions and will be productive of the greatest advantages. The means of acquiring a knowledge of the essentials of our holy religion, are common to most men.—A sound intellect, a sincere affection for the truth, a humble and teachable disposition, a mind unfettered by prejudice, a spirit free from irregular and furious passions and a serious endeavour to follow the truth when known,—These qualities are more general than is commonly supposed and render us far more competent for studying the doctrines of Salvation, than the greatest learning without them. By furnishing Bibles to persons endued with such qualities who do not possess them, and have not the benefit of religious instruction, we shall enable them to imitate the noble Bereans in searching the Scriptures and worshipping God in spirit and in truth. The gift of a Bible may be of infinitely more importance than the greatest temporal benefit, it may awaken in the soul a true sense of religion and gradually remove that indifference which at present too generally prevails. Thousands know nothing of the Bible, for the little education they receive has seldom any reference to religion,—many are not Baptised and live as heathens in a Christian land, consequently their minds are exposed at all times without resistance to the worst impressions.

The greater portion of our Inhabitants being in this deplorable situation and totally incapable after receiving the Scriptures of introducing into their families a form of devotion by which they may be edified and improved it may conduce still more to the furtherance of true religion to join the Prayer Book with the Bible as this will supply the serious and devout with a form of worship founded upon the sacred volume and resting upon principles of which Jesus Christ is the corner stone. Not that we would press our excellent liturgy upon those who have attached themselves to a different persuasion; but situated as this country is we may consider the greater number to be of no particular denomination of Christians, it cannot therefore be wrong to give the superstructure with the rock on which it is founded.

How many persons furnished with a Bible and Prayer Book would collect their Children around them on the Sabbath and read the service devoutly over who might have spent that day in idleness and sloth. There is no sacrifice that we can offer to God more acceptable than that of disseminating the religion of his blessed Son.—The establishment of a Society calculated to produce such inestimable benefits both temporal and eternal, seems peculiarly seasonable at the present time just recovering from a war in which we have been singularly favoured by Divine Providence; an offering of gratitude and thanksgiving is required at our hands and what more precious than that of extending to our benighted brethren, the consolations of that blessed religion which we have the happiness to enjoy. The history of Christianity proves that the times of calamity are the harvests of religion.—The blessed reformation was preceded by cruel wars and attended with such convulsions as appeared for a time to threaten the total extinction of Christianity itself; but the clouds dispersed, the sun of righteousness appeared, the infallible Oracles of divine revelation were disseminated, the saving Doctrines of the Gospel taught and a much purer and rational worship introduced than had been in the since the Apostolic age.

In England soon after the glorious revolution of 1688 which rescued the nation from temporal and spiritual bondage, several Societies were established for the support and propagation of our holy Protestant reformed religion, of these the Society for propagating the Gospel in foreign parts and the Society for promoting Christian knowledge have been eminently distinguished. The discreet zeal which has directed the exertions of those two Societies and has led them hand in hand to promote the glorious object of their institution has rendered the benefits which they conferred more extensive and useful. By their endeavours the Christian religion hath been spread on countries which had hitherto been darkened by superstition and ignorance.—Though their labours of love the consolations which it affords have soothed and raised many a soul oppressed with trouble and fainting with despair.—With a dignified silence as to their own merits they have known no bounds to their exertions but those of necessity,—They have promoted the cause of the Gospel in Asia, Africa and America, and the seeds of eternal life have been successfully sown in all those different parts of the Earth.—These excellent institutions still proceed with increased vigour, many new friends have joined, and by the augmentation of their funds, they have been enabled still farther to extend their benefits; by their joint endeavours they not only provide for the circulation of the Scriptures; but they provide likewise a preaching Ministry who go into all the world to preach the Gospel to every creature thus strictly complying with the solemn injunctions of our blessed Saviour, the Author and Finisher of the truth. They furnish Bibles to any amount.—They print the Scriptures in all Languages.—They carry the Gospel into all the nations of the Earth, and they send out labourers into the vineyard to enquire of those who have received the Scriptures, understandest thou what thou readest?

Nor do the present times besides giving liberal support to these meritorious Societies, fail to exhibit marks of the increasing influence of Christianity. Among others the British and Foreign Bible Society stands pre-eminent. It is difficult to conceive any plan more simple in its form, or more powerful in its effects, for diffusing a knowledge of the Gospel. In the dissemination of the Scriptures all classes of Christians are equally concerned. It is founded on the principles of our holy religion, Faith, Hope, and Charity. It is hastening the accomplishment of the Prophecy, for the Earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the Sea. Calculated to harmonize all hearts, it must give pleasure to every friend of the Gospel to view an institution succeeding beyond the most sanguine expectations, the direct tendency of which is to extinguish all party spirit and narrow views, and infuse into all ranks such a charitable zeal for the general interests of Christianity, as cannot fail to produce the happiest effects.

By distributing the Scriptures, a new impulse is given to the cause of Christianity, an attention to them is awakened, even where they have been always accessible; but regarded with indifference. It is making our Saviour himself preach to the people and he can never preach in vain.

While from the continual exertions of these, and many other institutions, such anxiety pervades the whole Christian world for the progress of the Gospel, we ought not to continue any longer indifferent Spectators, but as far as place and circumstances will permit, it is our duty to pursue the same glorious path, using that discretion which may render our exertions the more successful. Accordingly the constitution which we have adopted, without implicitly following those of the Societies whose exertions deserve our praise, seems to combine all their advantages, and to be more suitable for this Province. Those Members who belong to the Church, attached to the elder Societies by the warmest gratitude and filial affection, since to their labours this country owes the first knowledge of the Gospel, will rejoice in distributing the Prayer Book with the Bible because they consider it an invaluable summary of Divine truth, an appropriate and perspicuous selection, of all the portions of Scripture, which set forth the scheme of Salvation; and as the most proper companion for the sacred volume in the divine labour of evangelising the world, since it truely sets forth Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

But as it is the desire of the Society to give liberty both in the DISTRIBUTION and in the choice, our constitution invites those to join, who being more disposed to unite in the simple and meritorious object of the Bible Society, than to contribute for the dissemination of the Prayer Book, wish to confine their Subscriptions to the purchase of Bibles only; and provides that this shall appear on the face of the Treasurer's accounts: for it is not the intention of any part of the Society to press the Liturgy where there appears a reluctance to receive it. Thus the door is open to all denominations of Christians, to all who are anxious to extend the limits of vital religion. Those who think that the distribution of the Bible alone is sufficient to dispel the darkness of ignorance, to warm and rouse from that indifference which infidelity has produced, to lead the throbbing soul to the foot of the cross, and point out the way to everlasting

All room for difference being thus removed, let us pray that the Members of the Society may work as one man; and with full purpofe of heart, fpread abroad that heavenly knowledge, which records the atonement, the fufferings, the death, refurrection and afcenfion of our bleffed Saviour.

Guided by principles fo truly Catholic, we confidently look for the affiftance & co-operation of all our Chriftian brethren throughout the Province, and cordially invite them to join this inftitution, and to form affociations in its aid in their feveral Diftricts.

Are we anxious to protect the poor and the deftitute, from the horrors of famine, the inclemencies of the weather, and fhall we not endeavour to protect from perifhing their immortal fouls? Think when you contribute to this inftitution, that your wealth is exchanged for that Book which may pour confolation into the bleeding heart, and foften the feared confcience, that a foul finking into defpair may be raifed by its inftruction to the kingdom of heaven, and that the prayers of thoufands may rife up in your favour, a fweet memorial before God, who but for your charitable labours of love, might have ftill remained in mental darknefs, and in the fhadow of death.

THE LATE SIR GEORGE PREVOST.

Whitehall, September 3, 1816.

His Royal Highness the Prince Regent, taking into his Royal consideration the diftinguifhed conduct and services of the late Lieutenant-General Sir George Prevoft, Bart. during a long period of conftant active employment in ftuations of great truft both military and civil, in the courfe of which his gallantry, zeal, and able conduct were particularly difplayed at the conquest of the Island of St. Lucie, in 1803, and of the Island of Martinique in 1809; as alfo in fucceffully oppofing, with a fmall garrifon, the attack made in 1805, by a numerous French force, upon the ifland of Dominica, then under his government; and while Governor General and Commander in Chief of the Britifh Provinces in North America, in the defence of Canada againft the repeated invafions perfeveringly attempted by the American forces during the late war; and his Royal Highness being defirous of evincing in an especial manner, the fenfe which his Royal Highness entertains of thefe ſervices, by conferring upon his family a laſting memorial of his Majeſty's royal favour hath been pleaſed, in the name and on the behalf of his Majeſty, to ordain, that the fupporters following may be borne and ufed by Dame Catharine Ann. Prevoſt, widow of the ſaid late Lieutenant-General Sir George Prevoſt, during her widowhood, viz. "On either ſide a grenadier of the 16th (or Bedfordſhire) Regiment of foot, each ſupporting a banner, that on the dexter ſide inſcribed Weſt Indies, and that on the ſiniſter Canada;" and that the ſaid ſupporters, together with the motto, "Servatum Ciceri," may alſo be borne by Sir George Prevoſt, Bart. ſon and heir of the ſaid late Lieutenant General, and by his ſucceſſors in the ſaid dignity of a Baronet; provided the ſame be firſt duly exemplified according to the laws of arms, and recorded in the Herald's office.

And His Royal Highneſs hath been alſo pleaſed to command, that the ſaid conceſſion and especial mark of the royal favour be regiſtered in his Majeſty's College of Arms.—(Gazette.)

CONGREVE'S ROCKETS.

The following deſcription will convey to our readers as much as is known, even to the perſons who are employed to make uſe of this wondrous and deſtructive inſtrument in ſervice. The Rocket is a cylender of hammered iron, differing nothing in ſhape or proportion, from the paper rocket uſed in innocent fireworks, it is alſo furniſhed with a ſtick, as theſe are, and fires in the ſame way. The difference, and the ſecret, whatever it may be, is in the compoſition, which though in appearance like an ordinary gun-powder paſte, is of ſo firm a conſiſtence as to equal the iron that ſurrounds it.—The diameter of the longeſt rocket hitherto uſed in a bombardment, was 8 inches; of the ſmalleſt uſed in the field ſervice, ſomething leſs than three; in all caſes the length of the cylinder is eight times its diameter. The flights of rockets, too, vary between four thouſand and two thouſand five hundred yards, in proportion to their ſize. Thoſe intended for a bombardment are uſually armed with ſhells, containing 200lbs. of powder or a ſtrong iron caſe of combuſtible matter, whoſe violence is inextinguiſhable. For field ſervices they are either armed with ſhells, or the top of the rocket is formed into a little mortar, which may be made to diſcharge, at any period of its flight, from 50 to 200 muſket balls. Three field rockets may be eaſily carried by any infantry ſoldier, and they need no other apparatus for firing them, than ſuch as may be made from ſix muſkets and a halbert, ſhould not a bank or wall preſent a more convenient ſtand. No rocket of more than 300lbs. has yet been uſed, even in bombardment; but ſome time ago, Sir W. Congreve, the inventor, propoſed the uſe of rockets, exceeding a ton in weight; theſe were to carry each ſeveral barrels of gun-powder, in a maſſive caſe of ſteel; wherever they ſtruck, the impetus of their prodigious weight would force them indifferently through earth and maſon work; thus heaving into the very centre of the enemy's fortifications, a mine, whoſe explosion would leave but little trace of the curtain, tower, or baſtion, in which it ſhould alight. We have heard that ſeveral hundreds, on this enormous ſcale, were taken on board Lord Exmouth's fleet and uſed during his late attack upon Algiers.

Lond. paper.

The Dutch Admiral De Capellan's official deſpatch has been publiſhed. The Algerines he ſays, had 50,000 men on their ramparts. "The coolneſs and order," he ſays, "with which the terrible fire of the batteries was replied to, ſtrike to the moſt manly walks of Algiers, with an involuntary admiration of the heroiſm and ſelf-devotion of each individual generally, and the greatneſs of Lord Exmouth in particular, in the glorious manner he conducted the day. The deſtruction of the Algerine fleet, and burning of the whole fleet have been the reſult of it." He mentions, that when the Queen Charlotte was in great danger from a burning wreck, Lord Exmouth refuſed the aſſiſtance offered him of all the boats, and replied—"I have calculated every thing.—Continue your fire." The Impregnable had 268 ſhot in her, 50 below her lower deck ports; of which many were 68 pounders.—She expended 16 1-2 tons powder, 120 tons ſhot, fifty-four 32 pound rockets, and thirty 8 inch ſhells.

Admiral Milne, who diſtinguiſhed himſelf at Algiers, is coming out to take the naval command at Halifax.

After the Treaties had been negociated, and that the Dey had refunded three hundred and eighty two thouſand five hundred dollars, which he had lately received from the Governments of Naples and Sardinia, and had releaſed one thouſand and eighty three Chriſtian ſlaves who were at Algiers, it came to the knowledge of Lord Exmouth, that two Spaniards, the one a merchant and the other the Vice Conſul of that nation, had not been releaſed, but were ſtill held by the Dey in very ſevere cuſtody, on pretence that they were priſoners for debt.

The enquiries which his Lordſhip felt himſelf called upon to make into theſe caſes, ſatisfied him that the confinement of the Vice Conſul was groundleſs and unjuſtifiable, and he therefore thought himſelf authoriſed to demand his releaſe, under the articles of the agreement for the deliverence of all Chriſtian priſoners.

It appeared that the Merchant was confined for an alledged debt, on the ſcore of a contract with the Algerine government; but the circumſtances under which the contract was ſtated to have been forced on the individual, and the great ſeverity of the confinement which he ſuffered, determined his Lordſhip to make an effort in his favor alſo.

This his Lordſhip did, by requeſting his releaſe from the Dey, offering himſelf to guarantee to the Dey the payment of any ſum of money which the merchant ſhould be found to owe to his highneſs.

The Dey having rejected this demand and offer, his Lordſhip ſtill unwilling to have recourſe to extremities, and the renewal of hoſtilities, propoſed that the Spaniards ſhould be releaſed from irons, and the miſerable dungeons in which they were confined; and that they ſhould be placed in the cuſtody of the Spaniſh Conſul, or, at leaſt, that the Conſul ſhould be permitted to afford them ſuch aſſiſtance and accommodations as was ſuitable to their rank in life.

Theſe propoſitions the Dey alſo poſitively refuſed; and Lord Exmouth then ſaid that the private and pecuniary nature of the tranſactions for which theſe perſons were confined muſt be conſidered as a pretence for the continuance of a cruel and oppreſſive ſyſtem of ſlavery, the total and bona fide abolition of which his inſtructions directed him to inſiſt upon.

He therefore acquainted the Dey, that his highneſs having rejected all the fair and equitable conditions propoſed to him on this point, his Lordſhip had determined to inſiſt on the unconditional releaſe of the two Spaniards. He therefore deſired an anſwer, yes or no; and, in the event of the latter, ſtated, that he would immediately recommence hoſtilities, and his Lordſhip made preparations for that purpoſe.

Theſe meaſures had the deſired effect; and the two perſons were releaſed from a long and ſevere captivity, to "that no chriſtian priſoner remained at Algiers at his Lordſhip's departure, which took place on the evening of the 3d inſt. with all the ſhips under his orders.

THE HALF PAY OFFICER.

Mark'd you the man, whom all so often meet,
Of prussive air, wandering through the street,
His carriage easy, and his paces true,
His form erect his visage rud to view;
Whose napless hat, and shabby coat of grey,
Bespeak him, a Soldier on Half-pay?
How sadly chang'd! where is that gay smirk'ng air
That nod that glance which plead'd the giddy fair?
None cares to know him now, his friends are fled Lost at the moment with his garb of red.
The maid that sigh'd, whose charms his heart had Deserts him now, her love was for his comfort.
Perversion strange! affection thus subsist!
Esteem a man but from the way he's dress'd!
No Martial notes of music greet his ear,
No Bugle sound: proclaim the Mess hour near.
The mess-room gay, the soldiers' only home, Where comrades meet whom duty caus'd to roam;
Where pleasure dwells, & plenty's always found
Order presides, and friendship smiles around.
No more alas! this happy scene he knows.
His prospects blighted, careless where he goes,
In some dull room he picks his scanty bone,
Laments his fate and sighs his griefs alone;
Peace, that brightens, and which all nations bless,
To him brings nothing but extreme distress

CORPORAL TRIM

Miscellaneous.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 19.

Extraordinary circumstances.—On Sunday the 2d ult as some young men were nutting in the woods near the Old Upper Lune Bell, on the old road to Maidstone, they observed a female lying under a tree apparently asleep, and passed on without disturbing her. On the succeeding Friday, the young men again went nutting to the same place, when, to their extreme surprise, they saw the female lying in the precise place and attitude in which they had seen her before; one of them went to her, and took her hand; she was alive, but in such a situation as excited the most shuddering sensations of horror and disgust. She was almost in a state of putrefaction; large maggots were feeding on every part of her frame, and, exposed to the attack of flies her nostrils and even her mouth, were infested with them: behind her ears, between her fingers, and between her toes, they were crawling in sickening quantities; and her clothes were literally rotten from long exposure to the carrying and humid atmosphere. With a laudable alacrity, they applied for assistance at the Blue Bell, and with the help of two men, the unfortunate sufferer was placed upon a hurdle, and conveyed to an out house, where such necessaries and comforts as could be procured were immediately prepared for her. Mr. Browne, surgeon, of Rochester was sent for, and through his humane and constant attention, this unfortunate woman has been rescued from the jaws of death, and is now in a fair way of recovery. The account she gives of herself is, that she came from Lewes some time back, with an artillery soldier, to Chatham barracks; but finding that she had left him, and had determined on returning home to Lewes; that being destitute of money, and oppressed by fatigue, she, in a fit of despair, laid herself down to die; that she had lain where she was discovered ever since the Sunday preceding that on which she was first seen, and consequently had been eleven days and nights without any kind of food!

Present to the Duke of Wellington.—Late foreign papers mention, that the king of Portugal had sent a Frigate to England with a very valuable present for the Duke of Wellington. It is said to consist of a very extensive service of plate, and to be packed in fifty five cases. Its manufacture has occupied the first Portuguese Artists for two years; the bullion, of which the service is made, is said to have cost nearly a million of Dollars!

NEW-YORK, Nov. 12.

Glorious prospect in England.—The British brigue Harlequin, Capt. Rose, arrived at this port yesterday, in 28 days from Liverpool. On the 22th of Oct. she lay in the Docks at Liverpool, without a mast standing, and in every respect totally unfit for sea, and the 14th (having, in the mean time been completely rigged and battened) she left the harbor under tow of a Steam-Boat, and sailed for this port. She was selected, on account of her being a fast sailer, and despatched to this place, wire, it is said, important Commercial information. We have neither papers nor letters; but we understand, and we believe correctly, that the following is the amount of her intelligence.—The Genius, who despatched the Harlequin, had ascertained from the most authentic sources, that in consequence of the heavy and long continued rains, the wheat harvest throughout England, would not yield more than half of the customary quantity. Wheat had already risen to sixteen shilling sterling per 70 pounds, and flour to sixty five shilling per barrel. No doubt remained, that all the ports of England would be opened for the importation of foreign bread stuffs, on the 1st of November, instant.

The Hamburgh Correspondent contains the following tragical story, which it alledges to have lately taken place in a country town of Hanover:—A mother of three little children threatened one of them, in the presence of the other, in a joking manner to cut off its nose, for some naughty trick of which it had got a habit. Soon after she was busy down stairs in bathing the youngest child, who was ill, but hastens up stairs on hearing a dreadful cry to the upper part of the house and meets on the stairs the eldest child, who tells her he has executed the threatened punishment upon the other child, who had again been guilty of the same trick. In her anger she pushes the child so, that he falls down the stairs—finds the maimed child swimming in its blood in the agonies of death—rushes down stairs again—finds the other child lifeless at the foot of the stairs—totters into the bathing room—finds the youngest child suffocated in the bath, and hangs herself shortly after in the extremity of despair.

Kingston Gazette.

Emigration to America.—The following extract from a friend in New-York, we recommend to the perusal of those misguided people, whose ideas may still turn upon emigrating to the United States, as it adds another to too many arguments already produced, to prove the fallacy of those prospects which have been so assiduously spread abroad, but to deceive and ruin such as may be incautious enough to fall into the snare:

"New York, 2nd August.—Within the last three months we have had three vessels consigned to us full of passengers from the "land of Potatoes," what they will do here I cannot say, as vessels are arriving out full of them daily.—We expect another every tide. Many of which I shall have to take a short trip to Albany (about twenty miles) to meet and prevent her entering the Port of New York, to save the bonds of 300 dollars upon each passenger. Upwards of 4,000 have applied to the British Consul to be sent home again!"

The under-mentioned quantity of powder and shot was expended on board the Leander in the attack on Algiers:—Powder, 22,800 lbs; round shot, 42 pounders, 1,05; ditto, 18 pounders, 1,68; grape, 121; round, 24-pounders, 24,00; in case, 19; grape, 200; double headed, 36; in case 24; round 18 pounders, 20.

The Impregnable expended 900 barrels of powder; and 7000, or 800 round shot, besides case, canister, and grape shot &c. One 130 shot entered her outwork, passed through the heart of the mainmast, and went out at the opposite side. A 42lb shot lodged in the ship's bread-room, in the boatswain's store-room, with the following words painted on it:

"This was sent by the Day of Algiers on board H. M. S. Impregnable, as one of the advocates for slavery, but without effect, the 27th August, 1816.

By enquiries as to the amount of loss on the part of the Algerines only, 5000 Janizaries and from 6 to 8000 Arabs, Egyptians and Christians. A shell thrown from one of the bomb vessels burst in a house, where the Caimen were assembled, and unhappily killed the whole; and there was scarcely a house in the city but what had a shot or shell in it, or less injury from the bombs.

An interesting event occurred on board the Leander while the treaty with the Dey was signing. Mr. Archeson, a midshipman, belonging to the Impregnable, happening to meet a Frenchman, who had been in captivity for 15 years, asked him if he would like to return to France in the French ship which lay in the offing. He emphatically replied, that he felt a desire to see his country, but would go any where with the brave English, who had so kindly released him.

H. M. Ship Leander, Mother-bank,
September 26, 1816.

I must inform you that this ship anchored at Algiers at the moment the Queen Charlotte did, and both commenced firing together. His Highness the Dey, it would seem was deluded by a false confidence in his means of defence, and ignorant of our naval character. He permitted us to take up our position without molestation, intending, it is since conjectured, to board us from his Mistic, whilst we were furling sails; but, to his utter confusion, means had been prepared to fire them up instead of furling them, for we began our dreadful havoc and destruction, before they could apply the few strokes of the oar which would have brought them alongside our ships. The tremendous broadsides of the Queen Charlotte and Leander pouring upon them, instantly sent them to the deep, leaving scarcely a wreck behind, but the harbour covered with people, flying range from destruction. The Mole was full of spectators on our entrance, where the terrific broadsides of the Queen Charlotte instantly spread desolation, as crowds rushed to the great gate for succour and safety, the Leander's guns, which commanded the principal street, there carried death and destruction. Three times [illegible] batteries on the Mole were cleared, and thrice were they manned again.—The Dey was every where, offering pecuniary rewards to those who would stand against us, eight females were to be given to every man who would endeavour to extinguish the fire. At length a horde of Arabs were driven into the batteries, under the impression of the most devoted of the Janizaries, and the gates closed upon them. I have never seen men so animated as the Leander's crew, the hearty and repeated cheers sent forth on every occasion, when the bodies were tumbling about the enemy, not only animated the men on deck, but those who were most severely wounded re-echoed them.

The brave Capt. Chetham, who excited the admiration of the whole fleet, for the noble position he had taken, and the masterly style in which he brought his ship on, was every where, and most diligently employed. Lord Exmouth sent an officer to me on the close of the action to thank him for his support: "I shall never forget," said his Lordship to the Admiral, while wringing him by the hand, "that the Leander was the first ship to volunteer to second me, and and I shall throughout the navy, I could not have had a more active and able supporter; and your Captain, and all the officers and men, that I shall ever feel grateful to them." Many of the wounded returned to their quarters after being dressed, and many anecdotes could be related of their devotion to their country, all the passage they had been trained to fire as deliberately as if they had been exercising. Nothing but the [illegible] prevented the ship from being destroyed; one shot was but a foot or two, the engine cut to pieces, every rope injured, and the ship a perfect wreck, the men cutting on the decks, when the wind suddenly veered round, and gave the Leander an opportunity of coming to her anchor.

The wounded are doing amazingly well; 75 seriously have been already returned to the service. I believe it is the general opinion, that our worthy Admiral Milne, received a severe contusion on the thigh, by a cannon shot; he suffered much pain, but his being mentioned. It may be worthy of remark, that one of our youngsters, (a midshipman) was so fatigued, that he fell [illegible] for an hour, on the quarter deck, during the [illegible] of the action.

SOLITUDE.

It is not that my lot is low,
That bids this silent tear to flow;
It is not grief that bids me moan,
It is, that I am all alone.

In woods and glens I love to roam,
When the tir'd hedger hies him home;
Or by the wood-land pool to rest,
When pale the star looks on its breast.

Yet when the silent ev'ning sighs,
With hallow'd air and symphonies,
My spirit takes another tone,
And sighs that it is all alone.

The autumn leaf is sear and dead,
It floats upon the water's bed;
I would not be a leaf to die,
Without recording sorrow's sigh!

The woods and winds with sullen wail,
Tell all the same unvaried tale;
I've none to smile when I am free,
And when I sigh, to sigh with me!

Yet in my dreams a form I view,
That thinks on me and loves me too:
I start and when the vision's flown,
I weep that I am all alone,

"To these mild complainings of this sainted bard a reply, characterised by the same tenderness of thought and elegance of expression has been furnished by the pen of Mr. Josiah Condor of London;"—

ON READING THE POEM ON SOLITUDE,

In the 2d Vol of H K White's Remains.

But art thou thus indeed alone?
Quite unbefriended—all unknown?
And hast thou then His name forgot,
Who form'd thy frame and fix'd thy lot?

Is not his voice in evening's gale?
Beams not with him the star so pale?
Is there a leaf can fade and die,
Unnotic'd by his watchful eye?

Each flattering hope, each anxious fear;
Each lonely sigh, each silent tear,
To thine A mighty friend is known:
And say'st thou art "all alone?"

The Racehorse and Greyhound.—Various have been opinions upon the difference of speed between a well-bred grey hound and a blood horse of some celebrity, if opposed to each other for a mile, or a greater or shorter distance. It has been stated by the best and most experienced judges, that upon a flat, a horse of this description would be superior to the greyhound, for either an extended or contracted distance; but that in a hilly country the greyhound would have an evident advantage. Wishes had been frequently indulged by different branches of the sporting world, that some criterion could be adopted by which the superiority in speed could be fairly ascertained; when, after a variety of suggestions and propositions from one quarter to another without success, the following circumstance accidentally took place, affording some rays of information upon what was previously considered a matter of great uncertainty. A match was to have been run over our course for one hundred guineas, but one of the horses having been drawn, a mare started alone, that by running the ground she might insure the wager; when having run about one mile in the four, she was accompanied by a grey-hound bitch, who joined her from the side of the course, and emulatively entering into the competition, continued to race with the mare for the other three miles, keeping nearly head and head, affording an excellent treat to the field by the energetic exertions of each. At passing the distance post five to four was betted in favor of the greyhound; when parallel with the stand it was even betting, and any person might have taken his choice from five to ten; the mare, however, had the advantage by a head at the termination. Doncaster paper.

Mr. Watson Taylor has given, for the Marquis of Cholmondely's seat and estate, Houghton, in Norfolk, the sum of three hundred and fifty thousand pounds. Mr. Watson Taylor has likewise bought Mr. Hope's house in Cavendish-square, for 20,000*l.*

Pedestrianism.

A bet of £1,000 has been offered, that Eaton, of Blackheath notoriety, will walk 100 yards in every quarter of an hour, for 1000 hours in succession. Thus rendering it impossible for him to have any rest, except a few minutes at a time, between the intervals of each 100 yards.

A gentleman in Bath, lately returned from the East Indies, says, that on his passage he touched at St. Helena, where he was introduced to Bonaparte. In the evening Bonaparte's visitors sat down to a rubber of whilt with him; and on asking him for what stakes they should play? "Oh (said Napoleon, jocularly) for crowns, sir, for crowns; you know I have all my life-time played for crowns." Bonaparte lost four points.

SLAVERY

I am astonished (said an intelligent Turk) that the Americans should send a fleet to compel the unfortunate slaves in our possession, when in their own country, they keep thousands and ten of thousands of Africans in bondage,—they had better clean their hands before they lift them towards Heaven.

Steam-Presses.—A French paper contains the following: "In England steam-presses continue to succeed, and several Journals employ them. They are of three sorts: the single press, which throws off from 900 to 1000 copies an hour; the double press, which in the same time throws off to the amount of 1,600 copies; and the perfect press, which makes register of itself, without the use of points mutilating the paper. The working of one of these presses, which dispatches as much work as 24 pressmen and 12 presses (an exaggeration) requires only the labor of a man and a boy, to place and take off the sheets.—Their first mover is the steam-engine, which cost about 120 Louis, but for which the burning of coals is insensible. It would be useless to employ wood in it; and the former of these combustibles can only be replaced by water or horse power. These presses have not yet been introduced into Germany, but some public Journals propose to employ them."

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 4.

A Practical Christian.—The funeral of Mr. Richard Reynolds, whose death was noticed in our publication of the 20th ult. was attended by some thousands of people, and all, especially those among them who had so often been fed by his bounty, were in the deepest sorrow.

He was a member of the society of Quakers. By marriage he got connected as a partner in the large iron-Works of Colebrook Dale. As the profits of these extensive works increased, so did his benevolence. To attempt any thing like accuracy in stating the amount of his benefactions would be vain; none but himself know how much he distributed. "We have witnessed," says the editor of the Bristol Mirror, "more than once 500 guineas to one charity; 1000 to another; here and there the same repeated, under the modest name of a friend," and various other undistinguished signatures; indeed in one year (the year of scarcity) we are assured that he bestowed 20 000*l* in charity; we do not doubt it, for there appeared neither limit nor bound to his benevolence, as he had correspondents in various parts of the united kingdom, who sought for cases of distress in their respective neighborhoods, and recommended them to his assistance. Not content with bestowing such abundant gifts annually, he purchased two estates in Monmouthshire, which he settled on trustees, for the benefit of certain charities in this city; and, we have heard that he bestowed in acts of benevolence in his time, upwards of 200,000*l*. The active benevolence of his pursuits seems to have given that ruddy, healthy, and cheerful appearance to his countenance, which indicated peace within. He lived to a late period of life, enjoying great good health, loved, honored and venerated by all around him: and sunk at last, as his best friends could wish, with scarce a pang or a struggle—relying, in his parting moments, upon the cheering promises of redeeming love."

THE BIBLE.

Sir William Jones' encomium on the Bible is well worth preserving. "I have (says he) regularly and attentively read the Holy Scriptures, and am of opinion, that this volume, independently of its divine origin, contains more true sublimity and beauty, more pure morality, and finer strains of poetry and eloquence, than can be collected from all other books, in whatever age or language they may have been composed."

By this report, it appears, that during the year, ending 31st March last, there had been distributed 126,150 Bibles; 126 776 Testaments—exclusive of about 64 025 circulated at the charge of the Society; from depositories abroad.

GEORGE-TOWN, (Demarara)

We have this day to record atrocious and sanguinary outrages lately committed on a British vessel on the Oronoque. The authenticity of which may be relied on.—About the middle of this year, the schooner Mary, Captain Cox, master, sailed hence for the Oronoque with intent to return to this port; touched at Barbadoes, she sailed from thence on her voyage, and on arriving with cargo of male, and then bound to Demarara. But having been baffled by many winds and a strong adverse current she was forced to put into Trinidad, where the cargo was disposed of, and she proceeded to the Oronoque determined on.

It this same time, the fort in Trinidad was in the hands of the Spaniards, the captain bearing up for Trinidad a second time to gain the channel which leads to Angustura, but was again unsuccessful. In these circumstances, the captain proposed to carry him up the passage in the Tiger, which, though not so commodious as the other, might equally serve the purpose. This was agreed to, and as they were proceeding forward, they were attacked by a Spanish launch, and informed, that if they wished to purchase cattle they could have them at five dollars a head.—Upon this Captain Charles Burnham, ordered the vessel to be brought to, that he might take advantage of them.—But on the following morning they were thrown into the greatest consternation at the approach of a large number of canoes, all armed, which commenced an attack upon them. Mr. Burnham being on deck directed the English colours to be struck, at which a boy was shot dead. Soon after some of the Master, and immediately began to murder people. No resistance was made by the unhappy sufferers, and thus the whole crew, consisting of twenty persons, met their death, (with the exception of six) by the hands of Mr. Burnham was murdered at the beginning of the attack, after having received a severe wound in the shoulder, and when he perceived that all was lost, he threw himself overboard, to escape, if possible, the general massacre, and while in the water was most inhumanly murdered. Mr. Piper, and Captain Brown, passenger, with an Irish gentleman, whose name he recollected, likewise suffered. The survivors were put in irons, and, along with the vessel, carried to Angustura, where they were imprisoned, and the Mary sold for the benefit of the piratical depredators, we understand, were liberated, by command of the new Governor, who thought proper to disregard the remonstrances of the master of the vessel lying there.

The reflections of our readers on the perpetration of this deed of horror, may, perhaps, leave room for conjecture, of the Mary having neglected some of the regulations, or, perhaps, pursuing a system of unwarrantable and unjustifiable trading, as a color to commit the inhuman Spanish barbarities. But we cannot believe them, that nothing of the kind existed, can the shadow of a reason be found for the outrage, but wanton cruelty and plunder.

From the United States

By the schr. True American in 48 hours from Norfolk we have received the Norfolk Herald of Nov. 13 h from which the following is copied.

From a Grenada Paper,

GEORGE-TOWN, (Demarara) Sept. 25

We have this day to record a most barbarous and sanguinary outrage which was lately committed on a British vessel in the Oronoque. The authenticity of the account may be relied on.—About the beginning of this year, the schooner Mary, of Montrea Cox, master, sailed hence for the Oronoque with intent to return to this port. Having touched at Barbadoes, she forthwith proceeded on her voyage, and on arrival took in cargo of mule, and then bore away for Demarara. But having been baffled by contrary winds and a strong adverse current she was forced to put into Trinidad, where the cargo was disposed of, and a second trip to the Oronoque determined on.

In this term she fell to leeward, and the captain bearing up for Trinidad, attempted a second time to gain the channel which leads to Augustura, but was again unsuccessful. In these circumstances, the pilot proposed to carry him up the passage of Red Tiger, which, though not so commodious a the other, might equally serve his design. This was agreed to, and as they were proceeding forward, they were spoken by a Spanish launch, and informed, that if they wished to purchase cattle they might have them at five dollars a head.—The owner Charles Burnham, ordered the schooner to be brought to, that he might take a cargo of them.—But on the following morning, the crew were thrown into the greatest consternation at the approach of a launch and four canoes; all armed, which commenced firing as near into them. Mr. Burnham being on deck directed the English colours to be hoisted, on the act of which a boy was shot dead. They soon came along side of the Mary, boarded her, and immediately began to butcher the people. No resistance was made by the unhappy sufferers, and thus the whole crew, consisting of twenty persons, were put to death, with the exception of an individual. The fate of Mr Burnham was particularly unhappy.—At the beginning of the affection transaction, he received a severe wound from a musket ball, and when he perceived that no mercy was shewn by the relentless Spaniards, he jumped overboard, to escape, if possible, the general massacre, and while in the water, was most inhumanly murdered. Mr. Robert Piper, and captain Brown, passengers, along with an Irish gentleman, whose name cannot be recollected, likewise suffered. The survivors were put in irons, and, along with the vessel, carried to Angustura, where they were imprisoned, and the Mary sold for $300.—The prisoners, we understand, were since liberated, by command of the new governor Fraze said, who thought proper to attend to the remonstrances of the master of an English vessel lying there.

The reflections of our readers on the above deed of horror, may, perhaps, leave an impression, of the Mary having neglected some regulations, or, perhaps, pursuing some contraband trading, as a color to excuse the inhuman Spaniards. But we can assure them, that nothing of the kind existed, nor indeed, can the shadow of a reason be alleged for the outrage, but wanton cruelty and plunder.

Method to extinguish the Fire in a Chimney.

Place a bucket of water on a stool near the fire, and with the hand keep throwing the water gradually on the fire (but so as not to injure it); the steam produced thereby will in a few minutes completely destroy the fire by passing with the current of air up the chimney.

Unparalleled Robbery.—Among the great number of robberies committed lately, we have to record one of the most singular, perhaps, that ever occurred. On Sunday evening last, Mr. Joshua Hancock, baker in William Street, Plymouth Dock, having set his sponge, filled the oven with fuel, and made the necessary preparations for supplying his customers with loaves and cakes on the following morning, retired to bed about 11 o'Clock. About 5 o'Clock on Monday, she arose with his apprentice, and proceeded to the bake-house, in the court adjoining his house; but on unlocking the door, they found several articles, placed the night before in regular order, lying on the floor, and every thing else in inexpricable confusion. Astonished at the sight he stretched further and found his flour sacks removed, the frames of the windows taken out, and evident traces of the presence of thieves; but the wonder did not cease here. For his infinite astonishment, the baking implements had been used, the fuel intended to heat the oven was gone, the oven hot, and all the sponge, consisting of near fourteen quarters of flour, wetted the night before, no longer visible. In fact, the thieves had been afraid enough to enter the premises without creating alarm, heat the oven, sweep it, knead the dough, make it into cakes and loaves, and bake and carry them away, with nearly a sack of flour, perfectly undisturbed! Two laboring men who slept over the bake-house, heard people at work, but considering them to be Mr. Hancock and his apprentice, took no particular notice of the circumstance. Advertisements offering a reward have been published, and several peace officers employed to discover the offenders, but hitherto in vain. Three men were met going over the fields by Plymouth, carrying bags, about 5 o'clock on the same morning, but no suspicions being entertained, they were not followed to their place of retreat.

A Spanish Navy List, for 1815, gives the number of Vessels of war, belonging to that nation, at 118, of this number 4 are of 114 guns; 1 of 86, 1 of 80, 13 from 76 to 70, 5 from 68 to 60; 1 of 52; 8 from 44 to 40; (one of them since destroyed at the Havanna by fire); 15 from 38 to 36; 7 from 24 to 20; 21 brigs from 18 to 10; and 29 schooners from 1 to 18 guns. In addition to the above, several fast sailing American vessels have been purchased at the Havana &c. and taken into the service. Most of the ships are in ordinary.

EDINBURGH, October 18.

The effects of the fine weather which we have enjoyed for these last ten days are visible in many places in this neighborhood where we see much corn already in the stacks. Some farmers, considering the present critical state of the harvest, and uncertainty of the weather, were employed last Sunday in leading from the fields such part of their crops as were fit for securing in their barn yards.

We are glad to be informed, that, by letters from Pomerania, dated 25th ult. the crop had been all secured; that the wheat was a good crop, and higher condition than last year; that rye was a very rich crop, barley tolerable, and peas rather scanty.

[Continuation of the Proceedings of the Bible Society.]

Deeply impressed with a sense of the inestimable benefits resulting to mankind, from the benevolent exertions of the various Institutions, and Societies, established in our Mother Country, for the propagation of the Gospel, and for the extention and general diffusion throughout the world, of a knowledge of the Holy Scriptures, and the purest doctrines of Christianity. And ardently desirous of adopting such means as we consider best adapted to extend these benefits, to the Uninformed Inhabitants, of this portion of His Majesty's Dominions,—We, the Subscribers, have thought fit to resolve, and unanimously do resolve;

1st.—That we do form a Society under the special patronage, and protection, of His Excellency the Lieut. Governor, to be called "The Bible and Common Prayer book Society of Upper Canada." And we do invite all pious and patriotic persons, throughout the Province, to join the same, without any distinction of religious opinions.

2nd.—That every person paying one Guinea per Annum, or ten Guineas at one time shall be Members of the said Society: the first payment to be made at the time of subscribing.

3d.—That the monies arising from such subscriptions, or other donations, shall constitute a Fund to be placed in the hands of a Treasurer for the purpose of purchasing Bibles, Testaments, and Common Prayer Books, to be distributed gratis to such persons in the Province as may appear to the Society to be in want of the same, or to be fit objects of the benevolent intentions of the Society, and without any preference on account of religious tenets, opinions, or modes of worship.

4th.—That a proper person in London, shall be appointed Agent for the Society, whose duty it shall be, to purchase at any of the Depositories, founded on similar principles in London, or wherever else the same may be had on the most advantageous terms, such quantities of Bibles, Testaments and Prayer Books, as this Society may from time to time see fit to order,—and to forward the same to this country —Provided however that no sum exceeding a fourth part of the money appropriated for the purchase of such Books, shall be applied to the purchase of Prayer Books.—And with that view, such Subscribers to this Society as may not be solicitous for the distribution of Prayer Books, may limit their Subscriptions to the Purchase of Bibles and Testaments only, and such limitations shall appear on the Treasurer's Books.

5th.—That for the better enabling the Society to carry into effect the benevolent purposes of its institution, and to ensure to it that patronage, respectibility and union of design and action so essential thereto, His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor (having already been pleased to signify his assent) shall be perpetual Patron of the Society,—His Honor the Chief Justice shall be President,—the Judges of the Court of King's Bench,—The Rector of York.—The Speaker of the Legislative Council and House of Assembly,—The Commandant of the Garrison at York; and His Majesty's Attorney and Solicitor General, shall be Vice Presidents and Directors of the Society.—All the Members of the Executive and Legislative Councils, and of the House of Assembly all regular Protestant Clergy throughout the Province, of what denomination soever.—All members of the Board of Education in the different Districts, and all Magistrates and Field Officers of His Majesty's Forces and of Militia in the Province shall be Directors of the Society:—Provided however that none of the above Characters shall be Vice Presidents or Directors except such as become Subscribers to the Society.

6th.—That the business of the Society shall be governed and conducted by a Committee consisting of five Directors, at the least, together with the Secretary and Treasurer, who shall meet and sit for that purpose in the Town of York, in and for the Home District, and at which meeting of Directors, the President or one of the Vice Presidents shall preside, and without whose presence no business can be transacted, and that the proceeding of all such Committees, as well as of the general meetings by the Secretary of the Society shall be fairly entered and recorded in a Book to be kept by him for that purpose, and shall be signed by the person presiding at any such meeting.—And that all orders for the disposal of money, or for the purchase and importation of Books, shall be signed by the person presiding and countersigned by the Secretary.

7th.—That the present, be considered as the first general meeting of the Society, and that hereafter a general meeting shall be held in the Town of York once in every year or oftener if need be, at such particular time as the Committee of Directors shall appoint, and of which they shall give due publick notice; and that the business of such general meetings shall be to appoint a Treasurer, and to inspect his accounts, and also to appoint a Secretary and to inspect the proceedings of the Committees of Directors, to alter or amend, and give orders respecting the articles of institution, and generally to take into consideration all matters whatsoever which may tend to promote its benevolent views and intentions.

8th.—That the Treasurers to be appointed at this or at any future general meeting, shall at the expence of the society keep Books in which they shall enter regular and correct accounts of monies received for the purposes of the Society, by subscriptions donations, legacies or otherwise—together with a particular account of the appropriation and expenditure thereof, by whose order, and under regular vouchers and dates.

9th.—That the Committees of Directors be entrusted and authorised (through the medium of the President or Senior Vice President present together with the Secretary,) to correspond with the Society's Agent in London, to order such number of Bibles, Testaments and Prayer Books from time to time, as they see fit, conformable to the foregoing resolutions; and to remit from the funds of the Society, sufficient sums of money for the purpose of such Books and payment of all expences incident thereto.—And when, and so often as such Books shall be received at York, the said Committees are also hereby entrusted and authorised to distribute the same from time to time according to their wisdom and discretion, in such manner as shall best answer the views of the Society which are to extend and diffuse Christian knowledge by all possible means in their power.—And for that purpose, the said Committees are hereby particularly instructed and requested to make diligent enquiry, and maintain an active correspondence with such Directors and Members of this Society in all parts of the Province as they find disposed and capable of giving information of such persons in their respective neighbourhoods, as are not furnished with the Sacred Scriptures, or Books of Prayer, or are otherwise fit objects for the Society's bounty.

10th.—That one thousand Copies of these present Resolutions be immediately printed, and distributed throughout the Province,—and that the Hon. and Rev. Doctor Strachan, be requested to transmit one copy thereof to the Societies for the propagation of the Gospel in foreign parts,—one copy to the Society for promoting Christian knowledge,—one copy to the Bible Society; and copies to such other Religious Societies as he may see fit.

11th.—That each Subscriber be at liberty to purchase from the Secretary of the Society any number of Bibles and Prayer Books for the purpose of distribution at Prime Cost.

Doctor Strachan then informed the meeting that he had in command from His Excellency Lieutenant Governor Gore, to signify his intention of Honoring the Society by becoming its perpetual Patron, which mark of His Excellency's condescention was received with unanimous applause.

Doctor Strachan then left the Chair, and the Hon. Mr. Chief Justice Powell having been called thereto, again read the Rules and Regulations which had been submitted to the Meeting by Doctor Strachan, and proposed that they should be adopted which was immediately agreed to.

Doctor Strachan then moved that Henry John Boulton Esquire, be appointed Secretary to the Society for the ensuing year, which being seconded was unanimously agreed to.

The Secretary then moved that William Allan Esquire, be appointed Treasurer to the Society, for the ensuing year, which being seconded was also unanimously agreed to.

Doctor Strachan then moved that William Halton Esq. be appointed, Perpetual Agent to the Society in London, for the purpose of purchasing Books, and generally to further the Interests of the Society, which being seconded was likewise unanimously agreed to.

Doctor Strachan now informed the Meeting that he had in further in command from His Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, to offer a Donation in his name of Twenty Guineas, and in the name of Mrs. Gore of Ten Guineas, after which the Gentlemen and Ladies mentioned in the List of Subscribers to this Society subjoined to this Report, were pleased to subscribe the sums therein mentioned, and to signify their intention of continuing their Names on the Books of the Society as annual Subscribers.

At the close of the Meeting, Doctor Strachan was requested to draw up an address to be published at the head of this Report, explanatory of the views and objects of this Association, and exhorting all persons, who have the welfare of their fellow Christians at heart, to join this Society in its benevolent, and charitable intentions.—The Meeting was then Dissolved.

A short mode of bringing a Ghost to light.

MRS. Water, a widow lady, who with her family, occupied a cottage at Hampstead, during the last fortnight has been much alarmed by unusual noises in various parts of her premises, at the dead hour of the night. At first she was induced to believe these sounds proceeded from thieves, but having missed nothing to confirm her suspicions, this idea was abandoned, and one of a more serious description found place in her breast; namely, that the disturbance arose from some supernatural agency, a belief which was confirmed by both her servant maids, who affirmed most positively that they had seen a figure which had the appearance of a human figure clothed in white, flitting through the garden after night fall. The terror arising from the confluence of these supposed visitations from the other world which were kept a secret from the neighbourhood, at length induced Mrs. Water to apply to her nephew, who at once suspected the cause, and by agreement was secretly admitted on the premises, in company with a friend, without the knowledge of the servants, on Thursday night; when, taking their stations behind some trees in the shrubbery, they patiently waited the midnight hour, being provided with a dark lantern in the event of artificial light being necessary to unravel the mystery. Soon after one o'clock, a figure, enveloped in white entered the garden from a door leading into an adjoining field, and approached directly to the house, and rattled several of the shutters and doors. This turned out to be the signal of his arrival, and in a few seconds a female came from the house and joined the aerial visitant, who without much ceremony, encircled her, not in his shadowy, but sinewy arms. While in this state of bliss, the friends approached with as much silence as possible, but not with sufficient precaution to prevent alarm, and before they could secure the spirit, it had vanished, not into the air, but into an adjoining pig-sty, which happened to be unoccupied, and was filled with dry straw. The female vanished with as much celerity into the house, and shut the door, waiting in a state more easily conceived than imagined the issue of the ensuing interrogation. The friends having succeeded the pig-sty, exhorted the evil spirit to come forth, with every assurance of which they were masters, but in vain, till at length one of them very deliberately set fire to the straw; the light and smoke of which produced the desired effect, and to their infinite surprise and amusement out crept a young gentleman, whose parents resided in the vicinage, and who had adopted this mode of carrying on an intrigue with the house maid. It is needless to say that the shame of his exposure, as well as the danger he had incurred, operated as a sufficient caution to prevent the repetition of similar idle and mischievous expedients, by which, or more execrable than one, the lives of our fellow creatures have been endangered.—London Paper.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 23.

During the last fortnight the plague has spread in a most disastrous manner in this capital, and at Terra and Bujukdera. The affrightened inhabitants precipitately abandon their houses. The Turks themselves begin to feel the attacks of this scourge. Ten persons have died in the suite of the Grand Vizier; The Intendant of the Depot of Slaves, who had temporarily received a young man since attacked by the plague, has fled from the house. After the death of the youngest son of the Austrian internuncio, who fell a victim to this contagion, the whole legation has retired to Belgrade, a place situate a league to the north of Bujukdera.

STUTGARD, Sept 25.

A second Royal Rescript against the corps of writers has been issued, which clearly expresses his Majesty's firm resolution to relieve his subjects, particularly of the lower ranks. In a few days a third rescript is expected, according to which all arbitrary taxing of accounts, of partitions and inheritances, &c. is to be wholly abolished, and fixed salaries appointed. Wirtemburg will then be indebted to the energy and feeling heart of the King, for its deliverance from a burden which has oppressed it for 300 years, and against which many former Princes have contended, with perfect judgment indeed, but yet in vain. In the accomplishment of this solemn pledged word on this subject, the King is very strongly aided by the indefatigable zeal of the Minister, Von Wrangelheim, who already in the last reign, made some proposals to the same effect, but was baffled by a powerful opposition.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 15.

MR. CURRAN—Who we intend, in our fourth page, that the Right Hon. John Philpot Curran, so long the distinguished counsellor of the Irish bar, and late Master of the Rolls in Ireland, now lies at his house at Brompton, dispaired of by his physicians. He had a paralytic stroke on Saturday night or Thursday last, and has been ever since speechless. On Saturday he lost all consciousness of surrounding objects, and appeared to suffer severely from occasional spasms and gurgling in the throat. It was supposed he could not survive the night. Sunday, however, he suffered somewhat less, but still no hopes were entertained. He grasps the hand of any friend at his bed side without any appearance of recognition. In two instances only there appeared some consciousness of the presence of his son. His shirt collar happening to get loose he buttoned it himself, and after having been shaved, he pointed out with his finger a part of his lower lip over which the razor had not passed. This is the third paralytic attack he has had, and all within the present year. Latterly the pulse, in general, extremely despondent, and to his person appeared rapidly wasting away. He is about seventy years of age.

The Secretary of State for the Home Department, from some information alledged to have been received by Government, ordered on Monday a reinforcement of the first regiment of guards to be stationed in the neighborhood of his principal granaries, and instructions in the metropolis. Some of those precautions were adopted before the buildings, which in quarts to four, they were sent to protect, the event of there still Thursday night, when and prevailed.

According to the news received from Hamburgh, under the date of the 1st of October, grain will be plentiful before the new, but will still lower within a fortnight. Wheat is very abundant at Bremen, and considerable quantities were still expected. The prices have fallen at Constantinople.

The council at Amsterdam writes under date of the 4th October, that nearly 600 loads of grain had entered there. There are computed to be 10,000 lasts of wheat, and 50,000 lasts of rye in the stores. The stores are full, and the surplus is sent to Harlaem and other places in Holland.

Werner the celebrated mineralogist, who died at Dresden, the 30th of June last, aged 67 years, gave his will his fine collection of minerals to the Academy of Freyburg. It contains more than 100,000 specimens, and is valued at 150,000 crowns.

Before the close of this year, they will finish an impression of 25,000 bibles and testaments in the Sclavonic, 8,000 in the American, 2,000 in the Finnic, 6,000 in Greek, 10,000 in Moldavian, 5,000 in German, 5,000 Testaments in Latin, and 8,000 Gospels of St. Matthew in Calmuc. They are also translating the Scriptures into the Mogul and Turkish languages.

For two months emigration from Germany to the United States have been much diminished,—which has been caused without doubt, by the intelligence generally circulated of the melancholy fate most of the emigrants have experienced, as well on their passage as after their arrival.

Literary and Philosophical Intelligence, October 1.

ROMAN CEMENT.—A sort of plaster so called, which well withstands our most climate, is made by mixing one bushel of lime slacked with three pounds and a half of green coppers, fifteen gallons of water, and half a bushel of fine gravel sand. The coppers should be dissolved in hot water; it must be stirred with a stick, and kept stirring continually while in use. Care should be taken to mix at once as much as may be requisite for one entire front, as it is very difficult to match the colour again; and it ought to be mixed the same day as it is used.

We are indebted to the taste and public spirit of of Mr. Ackermann, for the first able specimen that has been produced in England of the art of engraving on stone, which has for some time past been practised on the Continent with great success. The subject he has chosen as the vehicle of his specimens, is even more interesting than the art itself—for it combines with its own novelty, the singular curiosity of a rare specimen of the ancient style of painting in the German school. The designs with which Albert Durer enriched the Catholic Prayer Book in 1515, have long formed a precious relic in the Royal Library at Munich; and, considered either as a fine work of design, or as a curiosity, a fac-simile merited a place in the libraries of Europe. It had previously been published at Munich, but had become scarce and dear; and, of that edition the Emperor of Austria has made the addition of a page of the original text, and of a preface by Mr. Bernhart, which he procured for the purpose of enriching the London edition. The latter is evident from these specimens, as well as from others which have been transmitted from Paris, that Lithography will soon acquire distinction among the arts; and indeed no other style could so well have exhibited the spirit and character of these drawings.

Mr. W. Phillips has several Astronomy with a similarly pleasing introduction to that which he published some time since on Geology and Mineralogy.

Whether it may have been the wisdom of that display of national pride which caused the issue of the late embassy to China, it seems likely to afford the literary world considerable gratification in the ensuing winter. Three considerable quarto volumes have been announced, and each of them appears to lay claim to public attention.—

The first is by Dr Clarke Abel, physician and naturalist to the embassy.

The second by George Ellis, Esq. one of the commissioners of the embassy, and will form a quarto volume, with an atlas and engravings.

The third is by Captain Basil Hall, of the Lyra, and will be either chiefly to the nautical days a third rescript is expected, according to which all arbitrary taxing of accounts, of partitions and inheritances, &c. is to be wholly abolished, and fixed salaries appointed. Wirtemburg will then be indebted to the energy and feeling heart of the King, for its deliverance from a burden which has oppressed it for 300 years, and against which many former Princes have contended, with perfect judgment indeed, but yet in vain. The Memoirs of Dr. Benjamin Franklin, written by himself to a late period, and continued to the present time by his grandson, will appear on the first of November. It will form a volume in quarto, and be printed uniformly with the private correspondence.

The Dey of Tripoli having presented to the Regent such remarkable proofs of his esteem and admiration of the site of Carthage the Why? south storeship is on her voyage thither, for the purpose of receiving and bringing them to England. They are represented as truly curious, and illustrative of a powerful opposition.

M. Leveat, a French chemist, has discovered that the seed of the yellow water flag of distillers, known in holland by the name of iris pseudacorus, when dried by heat and roast from the fruitle seed, which enveloppes it, produces a beverage similar to coffee, but much superior in taste and flavour.

M. Dorion has pointed out a very simple mode of clarifying the syrup of the sugar-cane; he merely throws into the boiling juice a certain quantity of the bark of the pyramidal ash in powder. The sugar-planters of Guadeloupe, it is stated, have made him a present of a hundred thousand francs; those of Martinique have given him an equal sum.

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 27

The King has prohibited the importation and exportation of arms and munitions of war, to our West-India Colonies. This will be a blow to the business at St. Thomas.

Madame de St Leon d'Angely has solicited from the King of Prussia permission for her husband to reside at Aix-la-Chapelle. His Majesty has granted it for three months. It is believed that he will permanently reside there, and that he will not be obliged to go to Konigsberg in Prussia.

The general tranquillity, which at present prevails on the Continent of Europe, forms a striking contrast to what for the preceding 25 years we have been accustomed to. Our English newspapers, therefore in the judgment of the bustling politician, are a great part of their usual interest.—But this is not absolutely the case. Agriculture, Arts, Commerce, and Manufactures, have superceded the operations of War, and are the subjects which now engross the public attention; and, amidst a great mass of matter devoted to the detail of local affluences and political and private crime, we shall not unfrequently be able to select many articles not unworthy the attention of our readers.—The following are from our latest papers:—

The Morning Chronicle of October 18th announces the arrival of a King's Messenger from Russia, with despatch of no much importance as to occasion the meeting of a Cabinet Council. In a few hours after the publication of this circumstance, a letter was seen sent by a house of great respectability from Revel dated 24th Sept. of which the following is an extract:—

"Orders have been received to fit out the Russian fleet at this port, consisting of six sail of the line, and some frigates, to be got ready by an immediately."

The "Courier," of the 13th, after having communicated the contents of the letter, which might have produced some alarm, and it been assured to go forth without any explanation or contradiction destroying the most specific, positive and immediate answer, that there has not been received by government any intelligence from Russia which is calculated to produce the slightest uneasiness or alarm, but that, on the contrary so far from the relations between Russia and that Power, all cause of any degree of apprehension, they are on the most friendly and cordial as the warmest friend to the continuance of peace with her and with all the rest of the world could desire.

According to the accounts from Italy the King of the Two Sicilies has issued a decree, forbidding his subjects from entering the Holy See for dispensations, briefs or rescripts, without having previously obtained his Majesty's permission. The Papal bulls also are for the future to be of no effect unless they have the Royal exequatur.

There is no longer any concealment attempted to be made in England respecting assistance being given by British subjects to the South American Independents. On the 5th October notices were pasted up in several of the streets in the city of London, inviting passengers to go on board vessels sailing to sail direct for South America; thus the circuitous route formerly used is now dispensed with, by which means a considerable reduction of expence and a great saving of time will be effected.

The frequent conferences which the Crown Prince of Sweden has had lately with the French Ambassador excite a belief that the Bourbon Courts may be at length disposed to recognize the Crown Prince of Sweden and his male heirs as the hereditaute heirs of the Swedish throne.

On the 27th of September last, as had past 7 in the evening, a fire broke out in the house of Sieur Traymondgeres near the Basse and reduced it to ashes. One of his daughters, between sixteen and seventeen years of age, fell a victim to an excess of modesty. She was asleep when the fire commenced, and refusing to leave her chamber without her clothes, perished in the flames.

FOREIGN NEWS.—The Editor of the New-York Columbian in noticing the speculation of London politics, relative to the policy by which the American Government were influenced in increasing our naval establishment, furnishes us with the following interesting information:—

"To geographical engineers are busily engaged in surveying and making plans of the Lakes. The scientific General Bertrand, late in the French army, is making a tour of observation in the service of the United States. Our Internal improvements are also receiving the most decisive great and important repairs or additions.

"On Lake Champlain, at Rouse's point, a formidable fort is erecting. During the last season the water in that lake was some feet lower than it has been known for forty years. The favorable moment was seized on to lay the foundation of the work. An eminent engineer was employed to construct and superintend the building of the battery, which is intended in the event of another war, will be of great importance, as a means of defence.

"At the post of Lake Ontario, at Sacket's harbour, during the last two years, a most splendid choice of barracks has been erected. They are entirely of stone, and two stories high. Four affording the men lodging rooms, separate from the rooms in which they cook. They are commodious and extensive, and evince a determination on the part of government to render Sacket's Harbour a permanent and strong military post. The parade and other public grounds contiguous to it, are laying out in a manner to blend taste with usefulness. A great proportion of the labour has been performed by the soldiery.

"At the other extreme of Lake Ontario, is Fort Niagara. It will be recollected that this fort is nearly opposite to Fort George, on the British side of Niagara, and that it is built at the mouth of that river, where it enters into Lake Ontario. It is a most commanding spot of land, and consequently overlooks, and consequently is capable of silencing the British batteries on the opposite shore. Early in the late war this fort was surprized and taken by the enemy. While in the possession of the British, it was much improved and strengthened. Among other things in the interior of it, a covered work was built under ground bomb-proof, and capable of containing at least 500 men. The work of the Lake was undermining what is termed the old French mess house, a many stone building, of uncommon solidity, that has stood more than a century, and on the top of which cannon were placed during the late war. For the purpose of protecting this building, and increasing the strength of this already powerful fortress, the foundation of additional works was laid during the summer of 1816, and they have still been progressing whenever the seasons would permit. It is still probable, however, from their nature and extent, it will require one or two years more to complete them; but when completed, Fort Niagara may be considered almost impregnable.

"In May last, Major Gratiot of the engineer corps was ordered to Michillimackinack, for the purpose of laying out, and commencing immediately, new and additional works at that place. From thence, if it is considered he may proceed to the upper military post, having the same object in view.

It is said in the Liverpool Courier of the 16th of October, that it is stated from Madrid, that the king of Spain, in consequence of a loan by the Dutch government of £2,000,000 has agreed to abolish the slave trade in his dominions entirely, if it be correct, at there will then remain only one nation in Europe, viz Portugal, by which that disgraceful and inhuman traffic is carried on, and that one, we have no doubt, will find it necessary in a short time, to follow the general example. When once the prohibition shall become universal, the trade, if attempted, will be in violation of the laws of nations, and of nature, and we presume the maritime powers of Christendom will by convention, agree to use their naval forces to purge the world of the most piratical banditti, that ever existed. When the time comes, then a general amnesty should be granted with slave traders, it will become a matter of a short time, to be carried on to any considerable extent. Treat the persons engaged in it like Pirates, and they will either be cleared off, or be forced to seek some new business.—N. Y. Adv.

Exchequer Bills.—A London paper of the 9th of October, received by the Ann. Captain Crocker, that remarks:—Government have resorted to the expedient of issuing Exchequer Bills bearing an interest of 2d per day, instead of the usual longer official notice was in consequence of this determination, given from the last of England to the Stock Exchange, that bills issued on the 9th October ult. could be paid off, or exchanged for new bills bearing interest at the rate of 2d per day, on the 30th instant. The Bills to be taken in the Exchequer Office by the bearer of this present month. When the notice was known on 'Change, a great sensation of the joy, change, the buoyancy of the day was nearly over as on a former occasion, and a great portion of the principal bankers and jobbers had left the House, so that the evening of the assignment on the Funds could not be read. So far as the Exchequer seemed to admit of the plan, that the new bills, by anticipation, bore a premium of about sixteen shillings.

Extract of a letter from an officer in the 6th Regt. U. S. Infantry to the Editors of the Harvard Magazine, dated Plattsburgh, N. Y., Nov. 11, 1817.

"A very fine about military road has been commenced by this Regiment, intended to reach the Chatauque Four Corners, a distance of forty five miles; and about eight miles have been made by about 250 men, through a very low and wet section of the country, and in the space of about eight weeks. It is believed it will be completed the whole distance at the expence of the United States, and in the result of any war against the Canadas, will greatly facilitate any military operations, and diminish the cost of transportation in the ratio of 75 per cent. Another and more lasting advantage will result from it, by affording to settlers, from the northern part of New England, an easier access to a very good country, ensuring to our N. Lower line frontier, a hardy, brave and enterprising population, a most powerful defence in case of a sudden attack.

A strong and permanent work is erecting at Rouse's Point, the outlet of Champlain, and it is, I believe, contemplated by government, to erect a second at a point on the St. Lawrence. These two would essentially interrupt any naval enterprizes of our anglo-Canadian neighbours in the directions of Ontario and Champlain. The military road, you see, must also be a very necessary appendage to them, independent of other military objects.

Copy of a letter from Major Twiggs to Gen. Gaines, dated

"FORT SCOTT, 1st Nov.

SIR—Since my last communication, nothing of any importance has occurred in this quarter. I have a character in confinement, who was present at the meeting at the Mikasuka town the last of September. The determination of the Indians is to give up no murderers or others to the whites, and as soon as we cross Flint River to attack us. The Chiefs counted the number present at the meeting—there were 2700 warriors."
